TOPICAL INDEX.

Use the index in your latest number. Ignore all previous indexes in volumes and numbers. The latest index cites by volume and page to the latest treatment of any subject.

You do not have to study classification. This index contains the name of every subject you are familiar with and not merely the titles of our articles.

The page citation at the beginning of each article directs to the particular subdivision wanted. There you find its latest treatment and also a volume and page citation to the same points in earlier volumes.

Black figures refer to volumes; light figures to pages.

This index is revised and reprinted every month. Remember to start with the latest index and you cannot go astray or miss anything.

§ 18. Summary Prosecutions and Review Thereof (90). Review (91). On Certiorari (91).

Scope of topic.—This topic includes general criminal procedure from indictment to final judgment.[1] The substantive law of crimes[2] and procedure before indictment[3] are elsewhere treated, and matters of indictment, evidence and procedure peculiar to particular crimes are treated under titles appropriate to such crimes.

§ 1. Limitation of time to institute.[4]—Statutes of limitation are construed liberally in favor of the accused.[5] The time during which a prior indictment was pending is not computed as a part of the statutory period,[6] but commencement of prosecution for one offense will not toll the statute as to another distinct offense, though they be of the same nature.[7] Where the statute is tolled as to persons "fleeing from justice," one who casually removes from the state before the statute has fully run is not protected by it.[8]

§ 2. Jurisdiction.[9]—Felonies are usually triable only in courts of general original jurisdiction,[10] while jurisdiction of misdemeanors is frequently conferred on inferior courts.[11] Municipal and corporation courts are generally restricted in their jurisdiction to offenses committed within the corporate limits of the municipality,[12] and against the by-laws or ordinances thereof,[13] though they are sometimes given jurisdiction concurrent with ordinary justices of the peace,[14] and criminal cases in the city of Milwaukee are cognizable only by the police court of the city, the justices of the peace having no jurisdiction in such matters.[15] A civil action to recover a fine for a violation of an ordinance cannot be prosecuted in the municipal court of Buffalo.[16]

13. A city court in Texas has no jurisdiction to try an alleged violation of a penal law of the state. Ex parte Anderson [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 973; Ex parte Hinson [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 987. The police court in Ohio is without final jurisdiction in misdemeanor cases unless the accused waives trial by jury in writing. Howard v. State, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 285. The president pro tem of a village council, as acting mayor, has no jurisdiction to hear and determine a misdemeanor [Violation of Beal Law, Rev. St. §§ 1536, 854]. State v. Hance, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 541. A police magistrate of New York City has jurisdiction to summarily convict an offender against certain provisions of the city charter and compel him to find sureties for good behavior or stand committed to the city prison for transfer to the workhouse for not longer than six months. People v. Warden of City Prison, 44 Misc. 149, 89 N. Y. S. 830. The mayor and council of Americus, Ga., have jurisdiction to try, convict and punish a person keeping intoxicating liquors for an unlawful purpose contrary to an ordinance of the city. Robinson v. Americus [Ga.] 48 S. E. 924.
14. Sections 190, 191 and 192 of act of October 22, 1902, being a nullity, and said act having repealed certain previous acts creating police courts, and conferring jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the police court of the city of Columbus, after said act, was the same as that of a justice of the peace. Backenstor v. State, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 178. Under the Beal law, the mayor's court has jurisdiction to try the offense of selling intoxicating liquors, though it be the first or second offense. Kappes v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 14, 25 Ohio C. C. 723. A police judge has jurisdiction of petit larceny within the city [Rev. St. 1899, § 5798]. State v. Chappell, 179 Mo. 324, 78 S. W. 585. The Illinois constitution of 1870, art. 6, § 21, repealed the section of a city charter giving the president of the city council exclusive jurisdiction in cases of violation of city ordinances, and concurrent jurisdiction with justices in other cases, by directing the elec-

Offenses on Federal territory[17] or against Federal laws are within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, though there may be a concurrent jurisdiction;[18] but they have no jurisdiction to punish for conspiracy to injure, oppress, threaten and intimidate a citizen in the exercise of his rights of personal liberty and security.[19] The district court of Oklahoma has jurisdiction of crimes committed in the Indian country by persons not Indians.[20]

An offense committed anywhere on the Ohio river is cognizable by the courts of Kentucky.[21]

Equity will enjoin criminal proceedings under a void municipal ordinance where property rights will be destroyed by its enforcement.[22]

Transfer[23] to another court[24] or another division of the same court for prejudice of the judge is provided for in some states,[25] and in Indiana, indictments may be transferred to the county in which the proof shows the offense to have been committed.[26] In certain cases, indictments returned into the district court of Texas are transferred to the county court for trial.[27] Removal to the Federal court may be had where a Federal officer is prosecuted in a state court for an act done under color of his office.[28] The jurisdiction of the district court of North Dakota in bastardy proceedings is complete when the transcript of the proceedings before the justice and the jurisdictional papers filed below are lodged with the clerk.[29]

§ 3. Place of prosecution and change of venue.[30]—Prosecution may be had in the county or state where the offense was consummated,[31] or where it was initi-

25. On the transfer of a cause to another division of the same court because of an application for change of venue on the ground of prejudice of the judge, a transcript is not necessary. State v. Lehman [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1118.

26. Where the constitution authorizes the legislature to modify or abolish the grand jury system, a statute providing that when it appears that the crime was committed in a county other than that in which the indictment was found, it may be amended as to venue and transferred to the county in which the crime was committed, is valid and procedure thereunder confers jurisdiction on the court to which the transfer is made. Welty v. Ward [Ind.] 72 N. E. 596.

31. Nonsupport of children is triable in the county where they reside, regardless of the domicile of the father. State v. Peabody [R. I.] 56 A. 1028. Prosecution for wife desertion must be at the county where the parties resided at the time of the separa-ated, if a complete offense was there committed.[32] Statutes regulate the procedure where the fatal blow is struck in one county and death ensues in another.[33] A crime committed in an unorganized county may be prosecuted in the county having by statute jurisdiction over the territory of such unorganized county,[34] notwithstanding the subsequent organization of the county in which the crime was committed.[35]

Change of venue.[36]—Upon a proper application and showing, a change of venue will be granted,[37] either on the application of the defendant or the state.[38] A change, however, will not be granted unless it affirmatively appears that there is such a prejudice in the community as will be reasonably certain to prevent a fair and impartial trial.[39] Application must be timely made,[40] but the state does not abandon its motion by failure to press it to a hearing at the term at which it was filed.[41] The motion addresses itself to the sound discretion of the trial court,[42] and a counter showing is properly allowed;[43] but where defendant denies the state's showing, the better practice is to put the matter to a test.[44] Where an entire case is before

32. Where a fatal blow is struck in one jurisdiction and death occurs in another, the former has jurisdiction to prosecute. Moran v. Territory [Okl.] 78 P. 111.

33. Where the fatal blow is struck in one county and death ensues in another, defendant is triable in the county where he is first arrested, unless indictment is pending in the other. Ky. St. 1903, § 1147, and Code Cr. Prac. § 24, so providing, is valid. Commonwealth v. Jones [Ky.] 82 S. W. 643. Under a statute providing that where the fatal blow is struck in one county and death occurs in another, the jurisdiction shall be in either county where prosecution is first begun, a nolle prosequi in the county where proceedings are first begun will not confer jurisdiction on the other county [Code 1892, § 1334]. the supreme court on error, it may look into the whole case to determine whether the denial of a change of venue was prejudicial.[45] The record and papers must be certified to the court to which the change is made[46] and timely filed in such court.[47] In California, the court to which the action is transferred acquires jurisdiction on the making of the order, irrespective of the transmission of the records;[48] but in Louisiana, an order for change on defendant's application may on his further application be rescinded on a proper showing if the transfer has not in fact taken place.[49]

§ 4. Indictment and information. A. Necessity of indictment.[50]—At the common law and in the Federal courts, infamous crimes and felonies can be prosecuted only by indictment;[51] but in the absence of treaty so providing, there is no rule which entitles aliens to be prosecuted only by indictment in states where information is the recognized procedure.[52] Several states have dispensed with the necessity of indictments in all cases, and in none are indictments required for misdemeanors,[53] though it is said that no indictable offense can be prosecuted by information in Pennsylvania.[54] Under the common law, a finding of a coroner's jury is the equivalent of the finding of a grand jury, and a person may be presented for murder or manslaughter thereon without the intervention of a grand jury.[55]

(§ 4) B. Finding and filing and formal requisites. Indictments.[56]—The indictment must commence[57] and conclude in the constitutional or statutory form,[58] and be signed by the prosecuting officer.[59] It must be found by the grand jury of

Informations.[63]—An information must generally be preceded by a sufficient preliminary complaint,[64] examination[65] and commitment,[66] and be filed within the statutory period thereafter,[67] though technical exactness is not required in the complaint.[68]

The verdict of a coroner's jury is not a sufficient basis in Idaho for an information by the public prosecutor.[69]

Verification or a supporting affidavit is necessary in Missouri,[70] though failure to verify may be waived,[71] and the lack of it is not fatal if no objection is made on that ground,[72] and an information need not show on its face that it is based on the affidavit of a competent and reputable person.[73]

It should commence and conclude in the proper form,[74] and be signed by the proper prosecuting officer.[75]

(§ 4) C. Requisites and sufficiency of the accusation. General rules.[76]—Indictments and informations must clearly inform the accused of the nature and cause of the accusation against him,[77] though it is a general rule and expressly provided by statute in many states that no information or indictment is insufficient for any imperfection in matter of form which does not prejudice substantial rights,[78] and an indictment is always sufficient which states the offense clearly and distinctly, in ordinary and concise language, without repetition and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.[79] The words of an indictment should be given their ordinary and commonly accepted meaning.[80] One count may refer to matter in a previous count for the purpose of avoiding unnecessary repetition,[81] though the count referred to is defective,[82] and the caption and commencement of an indictment may be looked to for the purpose of showing in what court the indictment was found,[83] but not for the purpose of making more certain any of the essential averments in the charging part.[84]

Certainty.[85]—An indictment or information must be direct and certain as regards the party charged,[86] the offense charged, and the particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a completed offense;[87] and no necessary allegation can be aided by intendment or inference,[88] nor will conclusions of the pleader suffice to eke out defective allegations of necessary facts.[89] Every essential ingredient of the crime must be set forth,[90] with such particularity that the accused may not only know the particular charge against him but may be able to plead the judgment in bar of a second prosecution.[91] The means used to commit the offense should be stated where the degree of the offense depends upon that fact,[92] but where the statute makes the particular kind of act punishable, that only need be stated.[93] Where the crime can be committed only in certain territory, it must be clearly alleged that defendant's acts were committed within the prescribed area.[94] By statute in some states, where a crime may have been committed by different means, the means may be alleged in the alternative.[95]

Bad spelling and ungrammatical construction[96] do not vitiate an indictment,[97] where no prejudice results to accused, but the omission of "then and there" is fatal where by it the necessary averment that the assault was "felonious" is not made.[98]

Intent or knowledge.[99]—Where knowledge is not a statutory element of the offense, it need not be averred,[1] and the specific intent need not be specially averred where the acts charged necessarily involve it.[2] In charging attempts, where the intent is the gist of the offense, it must be directly and certainly charged.[3]

Venue[4] must be alleged,[5] but beyond a mere showing that the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the court, a specific averment of locality is not generally otherwise required,[6] and in Alabama, it need not appear that the crime was committed within the jurisdiction of the court.[7] An indictment averring that the alleged bigamous marriage occurred in some county and city to the grand jurors unknown does not show a want of jurisdiction on its face.[8] Where a crime is committed in an unorganized county, it may be alleged to have been committed in the county in which under the statute the prosecution may be had.[9]

Surplusage[10] is a term applied to those nondescriptive averments in a pleading which may be rejected without impairing its validity.[11] Such averments may be treated as merely useless and of no effect and need not be proved.[12] Thus averments as to shooting inmates of a house burglarized are surplusage in an indictment for burglary and larceny,[13] and where only two prior convictions are necessary to bring defendant into the class of habitual criminals, an indictment is not objectionable because it recites three or more prior convictions.[14]

Time.[15]—Where there is no statute of limitations barring the offense, it is unnecessary to state the day or even the year, but is sufficient to aver generally that the offense was committed before finding the indictment,[16] and it is not necessary to state in any case the day on which the offense was committed, unless the day itself is of the essence of the offense,[17] or unless time is important to bring the offense within the operation of new or amended statutes or the like,[18] and where an impossible date is given, it will be disregarded if the offense be one as to which there is no limitation and as to which the date is not important.[19]

applicable to the offense, there should be a sufficiently definite averment of time to show that the statute has not run,[21] and where an impossible date is alleged for the commission of a crime to which the statute of limitations applies, the indictment must be quashed, since if the date be disregarded it would not appear from the indictment that the statute had not run.[22] Where it appears on the face of the indictment that limitations have run against the offense, facts which avoid the bar of the statute must be pleaded.[23]

Repugnancy[24] consists in two inconsistent allegations in the same count which destroy each other.[25] No contradictory or repugnant matters which can be rejected as surplusage will vitiate,[26] nor is an indictment repugnant that conjunctively unites in a single count all the disjunctive elements recited in the statute defining the offense.[27] Repugnancy between counts is not demurrable.[28]

Designation and characterization of the offense.[29]—In New York, the crime must be designated by name if it has one, otherwise a brief description must be given.[30]

Statutory crimes.[31]—An indictment in the language of the statute or in terms substantially equivalent thereto is sufficient,[32] subject to the qualification, fundamental in the law of criminal procedure, that the accused is thereby apprised with reasonable certainty of the nature of the accusation against him.[33] If the words of themselves do not fully, directly and expressly without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense,[34] or if the statute merely designate the crime by its common-law name,[35] an indictment following the statute will not suffice. An information for a statutory offense need not use the language of the statute if the facts stated set forth all the essential elements of the offense,[36] nor state circumstances of aggravation subjecting accused to greater punishment,[37] but the facts alleged must bring the offense clearly within the statutory terms.[38] An indictment for a statutory offense need not state the time when the statute took effect.[39]

Exceptions and provisos.[40]—Where an exception is so engrafted in the enacting clause of a statute that the offense cannot be described without meeting and negativing the exception, it must be alleged in the indictment that defendant is not within the excepted class;[41] but where the exceptions and provisos appear in distinct or subsequent clauses, negotiation is not necessary.[42] In Oklahoma, it is not necessary to charge that defendant is not an Indian, where conviction is not sought under 23 Stat. 385, § 9.[43]

Setting forth written or printed matter.[44]—The general rule is that unless there is a special reason therefor a written instrument may be described by its legal effect,[45] but a variance between the purport and tenor clauses in forgery is fatal.[46]

Principals and accessories.[47]—At the common law, an accessory must be charged as such.[48] In those states where the distinction between principals and accessories has been abolished, the ancient rule as to the necessity of charging accessories as such no longer prevails, and accessories may be prosecuted as principals.[49]

Designation of accused.[50]—An indictment must identify the accused with certainty,[51] but one equally well known under two or more names may be indicted under either,[52] and the misspelling of a name is immaterial.[53] Defendant's aliases need not be repeated in subsequent parts of the indictment.[54]

Designation of third persons.[55]—It is of no consequence that the name by which a third person is designated in the indictment is incorrect or an assumed one, if it is the name by which he is generally known,[56] and if a person be known by the name alleged, it is sufficient, though he may be better known by another.[57]

Misspelling of names is immaterial where the names are idem sonans.[58] An information charging an assault on "Charles Clark" and the killing of "the said Charley Clark" is good.[59] An indictment for forgery of the name of "H. Wiseman & Co., Bankers," need not allege whether the payer was a firm, partnership or corporation, or set forth the names of its members.[60]

Description of money[61] need not be exact,[62] and an averment of "current money" or "currency" of the United States of America is good and is sustained by proof of any current paper money.[63]

Ownership of property[64] must be correctly laid,[65] though by statute in some states the separate property of a married woman may be alleged to be owned by either her or her husband,[66] and property owned jointly or in common by several may be laid in all or either of them.[67]

(§ 4) D. Issues, proof and variance.[68]—Insanity of defendant to the extent that he is incapable of forming a criminal intent is raised by the plea of not guilty,[69] but where burglary with intent to steal and larceny are both charged, defendant cannot be convicted of both, the conviction of burglary including the larceny.[70]

All necessary averments must be proved as laid,[71] including unnecessarily minute descriptions of necessary facts, but an unnecessary description of an unnecessary fact need not.[72]

Where it appears that the grand jury knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have known, material facts stated to be unknown to them, there is a fatal variance.[73] A charge of sending a forged telegram is proved by evidence of giving it to the telegraph operator to be sent;[74] and where an indictment charges an assault with intent to murder two persons, the fact that the assault was by different acts in the same transaction does not amount to a fatal variance.[75] When two persons are jointly indicted for murder, one as principal in the first degree and the other as principal in the second degree, each may be convicted upon evidence showing that he was either the absolute perpetrator of the crime, or was present aiding and abetting the other in its commission.[76]

It does not necessarily follow that the grand jury knew the means defendant used to murder deceased, though an indictment against an accessory found the day before alleged a certain means, and a motion in arrest on that ground is properly overruled. Sanchez v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 504. An averment that the name of the person who stole, and from whom defendant received stolen goods, is unknown is not variant where there is nothing in the evidence that the prosecuting attorney did know when he filed the information. The venue.[77]—The time is not material further than to avoid the statute of limitations and to prove that the crime was committed prior to the finding of the indictment,[78] and a conviction will not be disturbed because the offense was shown to have been committed on a day prior to that alleged where defendant was not prejudiced,[79] but where the evidence is positive and unequivocal that the crime was committed on the date charged in the indictment, an instruction that the date was not material is unfair to a defendant who has established a complete alibi.[80]

Name or other description of accused or third person.[81]—The allegations and proof must correspond as to the owner of land trespassed upon,[82] or property stolen or embezzled,[83] but where a third person is charged by one of two names by which she is indifferently known, the fact that the other is her true name will not cause a mistrial.[84] Where the state takes issue on defendant's plea of misnomer, the question is not what name he is known by at the time of the trial, but at the time the indictment was found.[85]

(§ 4) E. Defects, defenses and objections.[86]—Formal defects, apparent of record,[87] or on the face of the indictment, must be taken advantage of before plea, or before the jury is sworn,[88] such defects being waived by plea and cured by verdict,[89] though failure to move to quash an information or to arrest the judgment founded thereon does not waive a substantial defect, though apparent on the face of the information.[90] An indictment failing to charge a public offense may be first attacked on appeal,[91] but will not be adjudged insufficient for every defect of substance for which a motion to quash would lie,[92] and objections that the crime charged was merged in a greater one shown in the indictment,[93] or that the indictment is duplex, come too late on appeal.[94] Neither a motion to make more definite and certain[95] nor a motion for new trial is a proper remedy for attacking an indictment,[96] and a motion for a directed verdict on the ground that the offense charged has not been proven raises no question as to the sufficiency of the indictment.[97]

Only clear points of law are considered on motion to quash, demurrer or motion in arrest being the proper manner in which to raise involved questions,[98] and where the indictment is sufficient in form and describes and pleads the offense with technical precision, a motion to quash is properly overruled.[99] A statutory enumeration of grounds has been held exclusive.[1] That the name of the wrong juror is designated as foreman in the body of the indictment,[2] that property is not described with sufficient certainty in an indictment for robbery,[3] or that accused is designated by initials instead of Christian name is not ground for a motion to quash, though there is no averment that his name is unknown to the pleader;[4] but the objection that an indictment has been amended in material matter without consent of the grand jury who found it can be raised only by motion to quash,[5] and a motion to dismiss on the ground that no record entry of the presentment of the indictment appears should be granted, though made after transfer to the county court for trial.[6]

The bill of particulars is no part of the indictment and will not prevent its quashal if insufficient without the bill.[7]

Repugnancy is ground for demurrer or motion to quash,[8] but cannot be taken advantage of after verdict.[9]

Failure to identify the accused may be taken advantage of either by demurrer or plea in abatement;[10] but failure of the indictment to state a time certain or that the crime was committed within the jurisdiction of the court are not demurrable in Alabama,[11] and amendment after finding, to be ground for demurrer, must appear on the face of the indictment.[12]

An indictment alleging that defendant made a false bill or order with intent to defraud sufficiently alleges a scienter to withstand a motion in arrest.[13]

Demurrers should specifically point out the defect complained of,[14] and an objection to an indictment on the ground that the statute under which it is drawn is unconstitutional must point out the particular part of the constitution claimed to have been violated.[15] A general demurrer,[16] motion in arrest,[17] or motion to quash, is properly overruled if the indictment has one good count;[18] and a conviction generally on an indictment in several counts will be sustained if any count is good and supported by the evidence.[19]

Motion to quash and not demurrer[20] is proper to raise the objection that the information is not verified or supported by affidavit,[21] or that it is not preceded by a proper examination.[22] That it appears on the trial that the person making the affidavit supporting the information had no personal knowledge of the facts is not ground for motion to quash.[23]

Technical or formal objections to the sufficiency of an indictment will not be considered in proceedings for removal of a Federal prisoner to the district in which he is triable, but will be left for the determination by the court in which it was found,[24] but if on broad and liberal construction the indictment does not appear to charge an offense, the prisoner should not be held for removal.[25]

That a negro is indicted by a grand jury composed exclusively of white men, negroes having been excluded by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude,[26] that defendant was compelled to go before the grand jury and give evidence against himself,[27] that there were irregularities in the deliberations of the grand jury,[28] and that unauthorized persons were present, are grounds of motion to quash;[29] but neither the attorney general[30] nor an assistant district attorney is unauthorized.[31] Irregularity in summoning grand jurors may be raised by motion to quash,[32] and disqualification of individual jurors is ground in some states,[33] though not in others.[34] Objection by plea in abatement and before arraignment on the ground that some of the grand jurors were disqualified is in due time and taken in the proper way.[35] Defendant does not waive his right to raise the question, on motion in arrest, that the indictment was found by a grand jury illegally drawn, by pleading to the indictment and going to trial;[36] but one who has been arrested on preliminary information and released on bail and who fails to appear on the adjourned day of the term on which the grand jury is impaneled waives objection to the grand jury and cannot thereafter have the indictment set aside for objection to the panel.[37]

A motion to quash is allowable on the ground that essential facts before the grand jury were proved by incompetent evidence,[38] but such motion is addressed to the discretion of the court,[39] and is not available after conviction, since the verdict supplies the necessity of a prima facie case required as basis for the finding of a true bill.[40] Mere presence of incompetent evidence with sufficient legal evidence will not avail to quash,[41] and the general rule is that the court cannot inquire into the sufficiency of the proof or the mode of examining the witnesses.[42] Failure to swear a witness before the grand jury might be ground of a motion to quash, but is not sufficient reason for acquittal after issue joined.[43]

Duplicity cannot be taken advantage of in the Federal courts either by general demurrer or motion in arrest,[44] and the joinder of several offenses in separate counts is left to the discretion of the court, who may compel election or separate trials.[45] In Kentucky, a demurrer to a duplex indictment should be sustained or the prosecution required to elect,[46] though a motion to elect and not dismissal is the proper remedy.[47]

Lack of answer or demurrer to a motion to quash does not make it error to overrule it,[48] and a motion to quash for duplicity may be overruled on striking from the information the language claimed to charge the second offense.[49] A plea in abatement is properly overruled where it appears that the indictment was properly returned in open court, though no entry was made on the minutes at the time.[50] The quashing of an information for an amendable defect in charging the offense does not abate the suit, though the statute under which the prosecution was begun was repealed prior to the quashal.[51] Where the court deems an information insufficient, it may, prior to the entry of final judgment, set the verdict founded thereon aside and allow a new information to be substituted, though a demurrer to the previous one has been overruled.[52]

(§ 4) F. Joinder and separation of counts and election. Joinder of parties.[53]—Several may be jointly indicted for offenses arising wholly out of the same joint act or omission.[54]

Joinder of counts.[55]—The propriety of joining offenses of the same nature in different counts is left to the discretion of the court, which may compel election or separate trials;[56] but where an act may constitute one or more of several distinct crimes, each of such crimes may be charged in a separate count to meet different phases of the proof.[57] A contention that the several counts of an information for exhibiting stock gambling shall be treated as one for the reason that the offense is a continuing one is untenable where the statute makes each exhibition an offense.[58]

Duplicity.[59]—A count that charges two separate and distinct offenses is bad,[60] and where the alternative words in the statute create separate offenses, they cannot both be used in the same count,[61] but a single count may state facts that show that a statutory offense has been committed by all the modes named in the statute,[62] and an indictment is not duplicitous because it sets out the acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy charge.[63] Acts alleged as incidents or parts of the main offense charged do not render the indictment duplex, though in themselves sufficient to amount to a statutory offense,[64] and an information is not double when one of the offenses is insufficiently charged.[65] In Kentucky, the statutory enumeration of offenses that may be joined in one indictment is exclusive,[66] and under the act of congress but three offenses committed within six months may be joined.[67]

Contra: An information which purports to charge a single offense, but in stating the facts and circumstances alleged to constitute such crime unnecessarily alleges matters of aggravation which sufficiently describe one or more other crimes not necessarily included in the one offense intended to be charged, is bad for duplicity. Where the indictment shows on its face that the three violations of the postal laws charged were not committed within six months, the demurrer should be sustained. Bass v. U. S., 20 App. D. C. 232.

Election.[68]—Where two offenses of the same nature are charged, it is discretionary whether the prosecutor shall be required to elect and at what stage of the proceedings;[69] but where each of several acts proved constitutes a distinct offense, the prosecution should be required to elect.[70] A motion to elect for duplicity comes too late after the jury is sworn.[71] Failure to submit a count is tantamount to an election to stand upon the one submitted.[72]

Consolidation.[73]—Indictments cannot be consolidated in the Federal court which together charge three offenses not committed within six months,[74] but nine indictments, each charging three offenses, were tried at once in the first circuit, and separate verdict and judgment rendered on each.[75]

(§ 4) G. Amendments. Indictments.[76]—Indictments, as a rule, cannot be amended in material matter except by the grand jury finding them,[77] and where a change of venue is had, an indictment must in general be amended if at all in the county from which it came.[78] Statutes of jeofails have relaxed the ancient rule as to matters of form,[79] but such statutes as a rule only authorize amendments after and not before the jury has been sworn,[80] and then cannot avail to cure an indictment that fails to charge a public offense.[81] No prejudice results from an unnecessary or immaterial amendment.[82]

Informations.[83]—The insertion of defendant's name in the body of the information during trial is an amendment as to form merely,[84] and a new information filed after demurrer to the original is sustained is not invalidated by writing at the head of it, "Amended information."[85]

(§ 4) H. Conviction of lesser degrees and included offenses.[86]—A verdict for a less crime may be found under an indictment for a greater of the same generic class,[87] the evidence supporting it,[88] and the averments being sufficient to include it,[89] though the two crimes are statutory;[90] the test generally applied being that the evidence required to establish the greater would prove the lesser offense as a necessary element.[91] A verdict of assault cannot be rendered on an indictment for homicide in New York where the deceased died of the wound.[92]

§ 5. Arraignment and plea. Arraignment.[93]—Arraignment and plea are necessary in most states,[94] though in some a formal arraignment is no longer necessary where no prejudice results,[95] and the plea may be waived.[96] On discovery after the jury are selected that defendant has not been arraigned, he may then be arraigned, a plea entered for him on refusal to plead, and the trial proceeded with before the jury already chosen.[97]

General pleas.[98]—The court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, refuse to allow the plea in bar withdrawn,[99] except that the plea of not guilty may be withdrawn at any time before judgment, in order to enter a plea of guilty,[1] and on the entry of such plea, the commonwealth has the right to introduce evidence, the jury being required to fix the penalty.[2] Plea of guilty has the force of a verdict,[3] but amounts merely to an admission of record of the truth of whatever is well charged in the indictment.[4] Permission should be granted to withdraw a plea of guilty induced by error,[5] but a plea of guilty entered on the agreement of the informer to recommend the minimum fine cannot be withdrawn because the judge declines to follow the recommendation.[6] Where an information contained counts for false pretenses and larceny, and on arraignment the court asked defendant his plea to the charge of false pretenses, his answer that he was not guilty as charged in the information was a plea to the whole information and sustains a conviction of larceny.[7] In felony cases, defendant must be present in court in person when a plea of guilty is entered,[8] and a plea of guilty in a misdemeanor case cannot be made by the constable who arrested defendant, and while defendant is incarcerated and absent from the court.[9]

Pleas in abatement and special pleas.[10]—A plea in abatement must be verified[11] and set up facts showing that the irregularities complained of are prejudicial.[12] Where accused is indicted under several aliases, a plea of misnomer must allege that he has never been known by any of them.[13] Disqualification of grand jurors is matter of abatement,[14] but it has been otherwise held as to irregularities in summoning grand jurors.[15] A plea in bar operates as a withdrawal of a special plea that because of a former conviction of manslaughter on an indictment for murder defendant could not again be placed on trial on the indictment.[16] A replication to a plea of misnomer that defendant is as well known by the name charged in the indictment as he is by the one set out in his plea does not raise the issue of misnomer.[17] A motion to dismiss at the conclusion of the state's testimony on the ground that a prior plea in bar was undecided is properly overruled and disposition of the plea then entered on the minutes.[18]

In homicide, the defense of insanity must be specially pleaded.[19]

A plea of former acquittal or conviction,[20] based on a prosecution before a magistrate who had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, is properly stricken as frivolous,[21] and a plea setting up a former prosecution for an assault on one person will not bar a prosecution for assaulting another, though the assaults were committed at the same time.[22] A plea in abatement that because of a prior conviction of manslaughter on the indictment for murder, defendant cannot be again tried on the indictment, is without merit.[23] The plea of former conviction must contain a complete record of the former conviction,[24] and a plea of former acquittal must aver that there was a judgment entered upon the verdict of acquittal in the first case.[25] A plea of former conviction not tendered until after the state closed its case and accused had been examined in his own behalf is properly refused.[26] Where the plea shows on its face that the offenses are not identical, a demurrer is the proper remedy,[27] but the demurrer must specify the objection.[28] Where the evidence of defendant makes out a prima facie case in favor of his plea, and the state offers no contradictory evidence, it is error to overrule the plea.[29]

§ 6. Preparation for, and matters preliminary to, trial.[30]—Defendant is not entitled to a copy of the jury list, unless so provided by statute,[31] but when provided for, failure on request to supply defendant with it is fatal,[32] though immaterial errors in a list furnished will not vitiate.[33] Defendant on trial in one branch of the court is entitled to a list of all jurors drawn for the several branches of the same court.[34] The accused is entitled to a list of witnesses in the Federal courts only in treason and other capital offenses,[35] and that defendant was furnished with an incorrect list is no ground for motion in arrest or to set aside the judgment.[36] Defendant is not entitled to a separate trial on his special plea of limitation,[37] but a special issue on the plea of insanity is frequently provided for.[38] Allowance of bill of particulars is generally discretionary.[39] There is no error in substituting an indictment and then allowing the trial to proceed on the original after it is found, there being no order of substitution, and the original being found pending the substitution.[40] Cases may be allotted in the criminal district court of the parish of Orleans, Louisiana, previous to the finding of the indictment.[41]

Compulsory process to compel attendance of defendant's witnesses guaranteed by the constitution does not guaranty their attendance nor more than ordinary diligence in service of subpoena,[42] and a statute authorizing the subpoenaing of witnesses to appear at a criminal trial in another state cannot be sustained.[43]

§ 7. Postponement of trial.[44]—Continuance or postponement on behalf of the state for cause does not invade defendant's right to a speedy trial.[45]

Postponement should be granted for lack of opportunity for preparation,[46] for absence of counsel,[47] and for inability of accused from illness to attend.[48]

deposition,[59] and that there is some probability of procuring his testimony at the postponed trial.[60] Continuance is sometimes avoided by admitting the facts sought to be shown by the absent witness,[61] or that he will testify as averred in the affidavit for continuance,[62] or allowing the affidavit to be read as his deposition,[63] and where this is done, the state may object to the testimony as incompetent,[64] or the absent witness may be impeached by showing his bad character in the same manner that he might be if present and testifying;[65] but where the affidavit is admitted in lieu of the continuance, the prosecuting attorney should not attack it as false.[66]

An affidavit for continuance is not insufficient because it states that the absent witness will testify that defendant "did not and could not" have committed the offense,[67] but an affidavit on information and belief of what the absent witness will testify must state the sources of information and grounds of belief.[68]

Counter affidavits may be received,[69] but not oral testimony,[70] and extraneous facts ascertained by the judge and recited as reasons for overruling an application for a continuance must be shown by affidavit, and an opportunity given defendant to controvert them.[71] It is not improper for the court to recite in its order denying a continuance for lack of diligence, that defendant at a previous term was informed in open court of his rights and duty in regard to witnesses.[72]

pressly provided by statute in Texas that a severance shall not of itself operate as a continuance.[74] Continuance is not grantable at the request of defendant in rape on the ground that prosecutrix's pregnancy is plainly apparent and that parturition within a short time would be conclusive that he was not responsible for her condition.[75]

§ 8. Dismissal or nolle prosequi before trial.[76]—Dismissal is grantable for want of prosecution in the absence of good cause shown for the delay,[77] and where no order of transfer from the county to the district court appears of record, the case should be dismissed.[78] The count required in South Carolina of carrying concealed weapons in indictments for murder may be nolle prossed without affecting the balance of the indictment.[79] In West Virginia, an order retiring an indictment for a felony from the trial docket is equivalent to a dismissal thereof, and the same may not thereafter on motion of the state be restored to the docket for trial;[80] but in Kentucky, an order filing away an indictment is permissible where defendant has not been apprehended and is not before the court, is not equivalent to a nolle prosequi, and though not providing therefor, does not prevent reinstatement of the indictment on the subsequent arrest of defendant.[81] A dismissal is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same or an included offense,[82] and the order of dismissal need not be set aside before inaugurating the subsequent prosecution.[83]

§ 9. Evidence. Judicial notice[84] is taken of the names of the court's own officers,[85] and of who are the public officers of the state where the law requires such officers to be commissioned by the governor.[86] The state courts take judicial notice of executive orders of the Federal government creating military reservations,[87] that such a reservation is in a particular county,[88] and that title to it was acquired by the United States by purchase, but notice is not taken of the precise metes and bounds of parcel.[89] Judicial notice will be taken of the value of the denominational coins of the United States,[90] and of the population of a city of the state,[91] but notice is not taken of the plan of numbering houses on streets nor the existence or location of buildings on certain lots and blocks.[92] Notice is taken of general statutes, though of local application,[93] but not of municipal ordinances.[94] A court does not in the trial of one case take judicial notice of proceedings had in other cases, even though shown by its own records.[95] Judicial knowledge, however, extends to the record and proceedings of the case on trial.[96]

Presumptions and burden of proof.[97]—Generally speaking, conclusive presumptions and estoppels have no place in a criminal proceeding for the purpose of establishing the body of the crime charged.[98] The jury, however, may find facts by inference from other facts proven in the case,[99] and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is presumed that the laws of another state are similar to the laws of the forum.[1] There is a presumption that a person intends all the natural, probable and usual consequences of his acts,[2] and marriage once shown to exist is presumed to have continued.[3] Presumptions may be retrospective,[4] though where the presumption of continuity runs counter to the presumption of innocence, the latter will prevail.[5] The presumption of coercion of a married woman by her husband may be rebutted.[6]

In every criminal prosecution, the burden is on the government of proving beyond a reasonable doubt, by competent evidence, every essential ingredient of the crime charged.[7] This burden never shifts,[8] and the defendant is entitled to have evidence tending to prove facts showing that he did not commit the crime considered by the jury with all the other evidence, and though they do not establish innocence, they may raise the reasonable doubt which must be removed before conviction can be had.[9] This rule applies to the defense of alibi.[10] The defense of alibi must satisfy the jury that the accused was at a place where it was impossible for him to have committed the crime,[11] but the evidence of alibi is to be considered in the general case with the rest of the testimony, and if a reasonable doubt is raised by the evidence as a whole, the doubt must be given in favor of innocence[12] and good character.[13] The authorities are in conflict as to the burden of proof where insanity or other irresponsibility is relied on as a defense, the rule in England and a majority of the states being that the burden is on defendant of establishing his defense,[14] at least by a preponderance of the evidence,[15] while the supreme court of the United States and the courts of many of the states have adopted the contrary rule, placing the burden on the government of proving defendant's responsibility as an element of the offense, beyond a reasonable doubt.[16] One charged as an accessory after the fact has the burden of proving such relationship to the principal as excuses him under the statute.[17]

Relevancy and competency in general.[18]—The rules of evidence governing the Federal courts are those which were in force in the state at the time of its admission to the Union, unaffected by their subsequent statutory changes.[19] Any fact is relevant which alone or in connection with other facts warrants an inference as to the issue on trial.[20] Hence a wide latitude is allowed as to evidence tending to show malice, motive or intent,[21] its remoteness going rather to its weight than its admissibility.[22] Evidence to support a theory that a person other than defendant was guilty is properly excluded as immaterial where there is nothing in the case to pertinently connect him with it,[23] and generally testimony tending to prove facts from which no inference relative to any issue in the case can be legitimately drawn,[24]

blow by deceased immediately prior to the killing, the burden is not on defendant to establish his mental condition as claimed by a preponderance of the evidence, but it is sufficient for acquittal if the evidence raises a reasonable doubt thereof; for the blow and its consequences are a part of the res gestae. or which depend for their relevance upon other facts not offered or shown, are inadmissible,[25] though evidence of otherwise irrelevant facts may be received to rebut an unfavorable inference arising indirectly from other facts apparent or in evidence.[26] Matters explanatory of other matters shown in evidence are not restricted to res gestae in Texas, but the explanatory matter may have transpired at another time.[27]

On the identity of the person who committed a crime, tracks made in the vicinity may be described and their similarity to accused's shoes shown,[28] and evidence of trailing by bloodhounds is admissible where proper foundation is laid.[29]

Where one party shows a part of a conversation, the other is entitled to show the remainder,[30] but the rule does not require the admission of mere hearsay or self-serving declarations,[31] and irrelevant evidence is not rendered admissible because it is the remainder of a conversation part of which has already gone in without objection.[32]

Where direct proof of a person's insanity has been given, it may be shown that there has been insanity in his family,[33] and where the defense to a charge of murder is insanity caused by a previous physical injury, evidence of defendant's conduct between the injury and the homicide is proper.[34] Evidence that defendant was an habitual drunkard and suffering from delirium tremens at the time is admissible,[35] and his appearance, emotions, and condition of mind immediately after the offense may be shown.[36] Evidence that the family physician of accused had never heard any intimation that he was insane is inadmissible.[37] that he could help it is error, the matter not being relevant. Miller v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 393. That defendant furnished evidence to indict deceased of another crime is inadmissible in homicide. Tonnsell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 938. On a prosecution for murder, evidence of the paternity of all the children of a witness who was a mistress of the accused, not merely of those she had by him, was inadmissible, where it was admitted that some of the children were not his. Ivy v. State [Miss.] 36 So. 265. Exclusion of evidence as to how defendant acted when drunk or that he was drunk the night before the murder is not error. State v. Brown, 181 Mo. 192, 79 S. W. 1111. 37. Watts v. State [Md.] 57 A. 542.

The mental condition of a witness while testifying may be shown by a third person for the purpose of accounting for discrepancies in her testimony at different trials,[38] but the state cannot contradict or impeach its own witness who has given no adverse testimony,[39] and a witness cannot state that he testified to the same facts on the preliminary examination.[40] Defendant cannot show that an eye witness not sworn by the state was unfriendly to him,[41] and that one of defendant's witnesses since a previous trial has been indicted for perjury therein is inadmissible on a second trial.[42] Memorandum showing prosecutor's loss of goods may be admitted to corroborate his testimony.[43] It is error to admit evidence that defendant accused of murder did not testify at the preliminary examination.[44]

Tampering with the state's witnesses by defendant[45] or a person introduced by him may be shown,[46] but tampering by third persons not traced to defendant is inadmissible,[47] and the prosecution's efforts to locate a material witness cannot be shown where there is nothing to connect defendant with his absence.[48] Efforts of defendant to conciliate a witness whose credibility he has attacked by showing hostility to him may be shown.[49] Where no previous contradictory statement is shown, defendant cannot on cross-examination of a state's witness show that she has been intimidated by the officers and others to testify against him.[50]

Flight of accused[51] and evidence of the steps taken by the sheriff to apprehend him as showing the extent of his flight,[52] and that he refused to return without extradition, may be shown.[53] It is proper to show that defendant resisted arrest,[54] attempted to escape,[55] and attempted suicide while in jail charged with the crime.[56] His actions and appearance when a search warrant was read in his presence,[57] and his conduct and circumstances at the time of his arrest, may be shown.[58] Evidence of what was found on searching him or his premises is admissible, though there was no legal authority for the search.[59] That defendant asked to be taken before deceased before she died,[60] refused to flee from the scene of the crime when accused, and promptly surrendered to an officer, cannot be shown,[61] where such acts constitute no part of the res gestae and the state has made no attempt to show flight or resistance of arrest.[62]

Remoteness or uncertainty of evidence, as a rule, affects its weight or credibil-

where unlawful sexual intercourse is under investigation, other acts of the parties may be shown to illustrate their inclination.[72] Evidence fairly admissible upon an issue in the case is not rendered inadmissible because indirectly showing the commission of another offense.[73] Goods found in the house of another also charged with the larceny are not admissible against defendant, no confederacy or conspiracy being shown,[74] and on a trial for poisoning, it cannot be shown that it was current talk in the neighborhood that defendant poisoned others.[75] Where evidence of another crime is admitted to show intent, defendant is entitled to show the record of his acquittal thereof on the theory of res judicata.[76]

Character and reputation.[77]—The character of the accused as reflected by his general reputation in the community in which he resides,[78] with reference to the traits relevant to the offense charged[79] may always be put in issue by him by offering evidence that it is good, whereupon the contrary may be proved in the same manner by the state.[80] The character of third persons,[81] especially of witnesses in the case,[82] may be material. a co-defendant's statements against interest may be admitted where the jury are warned that they are to be taken as evidence against him alone.[96] Evidence of the finding of stolen property where it had been hidden by the thieves, one of them being present, is admissible on the trial of another who was not present.[97]

Declarations by third persons with regard to defendant's guilt are not admissible, whether exculpatory[98] or incriminating,[99] except that failure of defendant to deny the statements of others in his presence is sometimes taken as an admission of their truth; but such evidence should be received with caution.[1] Statements of deceased, neither res gestae nor dying declarations, are not admissible against or in favor of one accused of homicide.[2] Declarations of the prosecuting witness cannot bind the state, but are admissible only as affecting credibility, and then only after witness' attention has been called to them.[3] As a general rule, evidence of prior statements of a witness cannot be introduced to support or corroborate his evidence. The rule, however, has its exceptions, and one of them is that where a witness has been discredited by showing prior statements contradictory of his evidence on the trial, it may be shown that soon after the occurrence he made statements corroborative of his statements at the trial.[4]

Confessions[5] are admissible,[6] though made while defendant is in custody,[7] but only when voluntary,[8] and made understandingly,[9] without threat or inducement.[10] Evidence that stolen goods were found where defendant said they were, together with defendant's statement where they were, is admissible, though the confession was obtained by improper inducements,[11] but what he said about committing the crime is not,[12] and though there be a prior confession improperly induced, a subsequent one, made after the effect of the inducement has passed, may be shown.[13] Where defendant is in custody, he must in some states be warned that whatever he says may be used against him,[14] but the warning need not be exactly contemporaneous with the confession,[15] nor be made by the party receiving it,[16] and attempts to escape after arrest may be shown, though defendant was not warned.[17] The evidence being conflicting as to whether defendant was warned,[18] or the statement was voluntary,[19] the question is primarily for the judge, and finally for the jury;[20] and where after confessions are shown, it appears that they were given under duress, prompt exclusion and instructions to disregard them furnish as complete a remedy as has been provided.[21] A confession must go to the jury entire,[22] except that confessions of other crimes unconnected with the one under investigation, if possible, must be rejected;[23] and if the witness can give the substance of the confession, it is immaterial that he does not recall the entire conversation.[24] An admission of killing, coupled with a justification, is not properly a confession;[25] and offers by a person arrested for forging a check to pay the sum represented or a greater sum to settle the matter are not confessions.[26] Defendant's statements to his co-conspirators in plotting and carrying out the plan, being admissible as res gestae, are not to be rejected as confessions.[27]

Acts and declarations of co-conspirators.[28]—Declarations of co-conspirators made after the conspiracy is formed and in furtherance of it,[29] but not those before,[30] are admissible, though made in the absence of defendant,[31] and the trial is for a crime only incidental to the object of the conspiracy,[32] and the declarant is not named in the indictment.[33] There must, however, be independent evidence of the conspiracy,[34] the acts and declarations of a co-conspirator not being admissible

34. Wallace v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 966. Conspiracy to resist arrest held sufficiently shown to authorize admission of declarations of one defendant against the

for the purpose of proving the conspiracy itself.[35] Slight evidence is sufficient,[36] its sufficiency in the first instance being a question for the trial court;[37] but evidence raising a mere suspicion is not sufficient.[38] A conspiracy may be proved by circumstances,[39] and if the circumstances tend to prove a conspiracy, it is for the jury and not the court to determine whether they are consistent with a reasonable hypothesis of innocence.[40] It is not error to admit evidence of the acts of alleged conspirators before the conspiracy is established,[41] on a promise to subsequently make it competent,[42] but where declarations are admitted over objection, on the promise to show a conspiracy, and none is shown, they should be stricken, though no motion is made,[43] and such evidence should be disregarded if the jury find on conflicting evidence that there was no conspiracy.[44]

Res gestae.[45]—Exclamations or other statements made at the time or so soon thereafter as to result from impulse rather than reflection are admissible, whether made by defendant,[46] the person injured,[47] or third persons,[48] and whether the person exclaiming would be a competent witness or not.[49] Likewise conversation[50] and contemporaneous acts and circumstances of the parties may be shown where they are part and parcel of the transaction under investigation.[51] The acts and is permissible, however, where the nature of the facts on which it is founded makes it impossible to state them,[62] and exception is made with respect to matters presumably not within the experience of ordinary men, but as to which certain learned persons have special knowledge.[63] As to such matters, any person shown to be of sufficient learning and experience[64] may give his opinion, based on facts in evidence, or on his observation of the subject-matter,[65] except that he cannot give an opinion as to the ultimate fact in the case.[66] Nonexpert witnesses having an intimate acquaintance with the person under investigation may give their opinion as to his sanity,[67] or his handwriting,[68] though in most states they must give with their opinion on sanity the facts on which it is based.[69] The jury, being informed as to the witness' opportunities to know all the circumstances and of the reasons upon which he rests his statements as to the ultimate general fact of sanity or insanity, are able to test the accuracy or soundness of the opinion expressed, and thus by using the ordinary means for the ascertainment of the truth reach the ends of substantial justice.[70] Witnesses, whether expert or not, cannot state their opinion as to physical facts of which ordinary men can judge, one as well as another.[71] In some states, only those papers can be used for a comparison of hands which are in the case for some other relevant purpose;[72] but in others, any genuine specimen[73] with enlarged photographs thereof, are admissible for comparison by experts,[74] and writings properly in the case may be compared by the jury, without recourse to expert testimony.[75] Books of science are not admissible to prove such matters,[76] and previous knowledge of defendant is not necessary to an expert.[77] An expert on handwriting not being allowed to give his reasons, it is to be presumed that he would have been able to state his reasons, but not that they would have been convincing.[78]

Documentary evidence,[81] including books of account,[82] public records,[83] and records of judicial proceedings,[84] if accompanied by proper authentication,[85] is admissible under the same rules applied in civil cases. Statutes providing for the use of depositions are frequent.[86] A written statement by a third person that he committed the crime not authenticated as a deposition cannot be received.[87] A letter is not to be rejected as evidence merely because it has no date,[88] and courts consider the competency of evidence and not the method by which it was obtained, and the fact that papers pertinent to the issue were illegally taken from the possession of the party is no ground of objection to them.[89] The statutes of another state may be proved by showing a compilation which by a statute published therein is made presumptive evidence of the statutes of that state.[90] Where a portion of a document is introduced by one party, the other is entitled to the introduction of all the remainder tending in any way to explain or qualify the portion introduced and no more.[91]

Accomplice testimony[92] is competent when sufficiently corroborated to connect defendant with the commission of the crime,[93] and may be introduced without first obtaining consent;[94] but defendant should be allowed to probe an accomplice as to his expectation of favor from the prosecution.[95] One who compounds a felony is not an accessory after the fact so as to disqualify him as a witness.[96]

Demonstrative evidence and experiments.[97]—It is within the discretion of the trial court to admit evidence of experiments to illustrate transactions that have been testified to,[98] but the prosecuting attorney should not perform experiments himself before the jury in the absence of defendant,[99] and the results of experiments not made in the presence of the court nor under its direction need not be admitted.[1] The state's counsel while examining an eye witness may place persons in position before the jury to illustrate the relation of the parties to each other during the difficulty that ended in the homicide,[2] and in seduction, it is not error to permit prosecutrix's child to be brought before the jury and referred to.[3] Instrumentalities claimed to have been used in the commission of the crime are admissible[4] when properly identified,[5] and deceased's clothes are admissible,[6] but not unless they illustrate or make pertinent some phase of the oral testimony.[7] Enlarged photographs of genuine specimens of handwriting are admissible to facilitate comparison by experts.[8] On the issue as to the age of defendant, witnesses may state what it appears to be from observation, but the jury cannot fix his age by merely looking at him.[9]

Evidence at preliminary examination or at former trial[10] is admissible at a subsequent trial, where the witness is beyond the reach of the court,[11] is insane or otherwise unable to testify,[12] is deceased,[13] or his whereabouts unknown,[14] or there is an issue raised as to whether they did not testify differently at such trial,[15] provided the testimony, if written, has been preserved in the manner prescribed by law and is properly authenticated,[16] and defendant's testimony on a former trial may be admitted where he refuses to testify on the subsequent trial.[17] But a mere change in the interest of the witness will not authorize the showing by himself as a witness what his testimony was before,[18] and the fact that prosecutrix in rape is not constant in her accusation will not authorize the introduction of her testimony below.[19] On a separate trial for larceny, a co-defendant's testimony in the examining court cannot be used against defendant,[20] but testimony at a preliminary examination of several is not to be rejected on the separate trial of one of them because part of it is the cross-examination of counsel for a co-defendant.[21] The constitutional right of confrontation is provided by confrontation at the previous hearing.[22]

Quantity required and probative effect.[23]—The proof of guilt must be beyond all reasonable doubt,[24] as to every element of the offense,[25] including the degree thereof,[26] the venue,[27] and that the crime was committed within the period of limitations.[28] A reasonable doubt, however, that will authorize acquittal must be actual and substantial,[29] and must be raised by the evidence in the case and not on the argument of counsel,[30] and it is not required that each fact which may aid the jury in reaching a conclusion of guilt be clearly proved; it is sufficient if on the whole evidence the jury are able to pronounce that guilt is proved to a moral certainty, or beyond a reasonable doubt,[31] and the exclusion of all uncertainty is not necessary,[32] but a probability of innocence is the equivalent of a

An extrajudicial confession must be corroborated by proof aliunde corpus delicti in order to support a conviction,[36] but full proof is not required,[37] and it may be proved by circumstantial evidence.[38] Though a confession must be considered in entirety, the jury need not believe such portions thereof as seem unreasonable.[39]

A conspiracy to commit a crime may be shown by circumstances without direct proof of an agreement,[42] and intent or knowledge may, and generally must, be proved by circumstances.[44] Expert testimony is subject to the same tests and is to be weighed and judged, like any other.[45] Testimony of an eye witness is sufficient proof of marriage.[46] The absence of a motive may be considered, but where the commission of the crime by defendant is clearly proved, the fact that his motive is not shown is immaterial,[47] and that defendant when charged with the crime refused to flee but surrendered himself to the proper authorities cannot be considered as showing his innocence.[48] The prisoner's statement in Georgia not being under oath is not evidence and is therefore insufficient proof of attack by deceased to authorize the admission of uncommunicated threats.[49]

Defendant's good character must be considered,[50] and good character alone may give rise to a reasonable doubt,[51] though in a plain case of guilt, good character cannot avail.[52]

Alibi involves the impossibility of the prisoner's presence at the scene of the offense at the time it was committed,[53] but evidence thereof raising a reasonable doubt of guilt is sufficient to demand an acquittal.[54]

need not of its own motion separate a consolidated trial when separate defenses are made.[60] On proper application in Texas, severance should be granted, and one jointly indicted for encouraging the crime tried first;[61] but a severance which will operate as a continuance must be denied.[62] Misdemeanants may be tried together.[63]

Appointment of counsel.[64]—Parties may engage private counsel to assist in the prosecution in Nebraska[65] and Illinois,[66] though the prosecuting attorney cannot be supplanted by such counsel. In Texas, counsel are required to be appointed for defendant only in capital cases,[67] it being discretionary in other cases.[68]

The witnesses may properly be sworn in a body,[69] and names may be endorsed after filing the information, if the court is satisfied they were not known to the prosecuting attorney at the time of filing.[70] And the statutory requirement that the names of witnesses testifying before the grand jury be endorsed on the indictment does not affect the right of the state to swear witnesses not on its subpoena.[71] After repeal of a state statute requiring indorsement of names, a defendant in a Federal court of that state cannot rely on the rule, though the statute was adopted as a rule of the court prior to its repeal.[72] Witnesses other than those whose names are endorsed may be sworn in the discretion of the court,[73] but in Iowa, if a witness is to be sworn who was not examined by the grand jury, the defendant must be given notice and informed of the substance of his testimony.[74]

The state need not call all the eye witnesses.[75] The court may question a witness,[76] or explain a question,[77] and may properly limit the number of witnesses that shall be subpoenaed for defendant at the government's expense.[78]

The court in its discretion may exclude the witnesses from the court room during the trial,[79] and may except a witness from the operation of the rule,[80] and permitting counsel to talk to the witnesses while together after the rule has been invoked but before it is granted is not error.[81] That certain witnesses were not excluded under the rule is not error where none but they testified on the subject of their testimony.[82]

Defendant must be present[83] in court during the whole of a trial for felony,[84] though not when the minutes of the court are corrected so as to conform to the truth,[85] nor when return of the venires is made by the sheriff and the veniremen are called to see whether all are present,[86] nor is it necessary that he be present at a view,[87] nor when his motion for a new trial is heard.[88] In South Dakota, his presence is required only at such times as the statute prescribes.[89] Private examination of a juror by the court in appellant's absence with appellant's consent and at the request of his counsel is not fatal.[90] It being shown that defendant was present on a certain day, his continued presence on that day will be presumed in the absence of a showing on the record to the contrary.[91] The right to be present at rendition of the verdict is a privilege which may be waived by defendant or his counsel,[92] and a defendant voluntarily absent when the jury returned to the court room for further instructions can take no advantage thereof.[93] Absence when the verdict is returned and the jury discharged is not fatal in misdemeanor cases.[94]

The judge must be present and in such a situation that he can see and hear all that transpires so as to protect the legal rights of the defendant,[95] though his temporary absence will not be ground for reversal where no prejudice is shown to have resulted therefrom.[96] The judge may be a witness.[97]

Remarks of the court intimating his opinion on the facts may be prejudicial,[98] but counsel for defendant may be admonished in presence of the jury to adhere to the rules of evidence.[99]

Applause in the court room is not ground for reversal where rebuked by court.[1]

The jury may be excluded during argument of discretionary motions and questions of law;[2] and that the jury or some of them saw defendants in irons is not prejudicial where they appeared unshackled at all times during the trial.[3] In Idaho, failure of the clerk to read the indictment and state the plea to the jury is fatal.[4]

Postponement for matters arising during the progress of the trial is discretionary,[5] and defendant is not prejudiced by his co-defendant withdrawing his plea of not guilty and pleading guilty after the state has rested, though it is in the jury's presence.[6]

A view is generally allowable within the court's discretion,[7] and testimony may be taken while the judge, jury and defendant are taking a view.[8]

The order of taking proof is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court,[9] and under the statute in Texas, testimony to a fact pertinent or material to the case is introduceable at any time before the close of the argument;[10] but in Kentucky, it is error to allow evidence in chief to be introduced in rebuttal.[11]

The purpose of admitting testimony admissible only on a particular issue should be stated.[12]

(§ 10) B. Arguments and conduct of counsel.[13]—Counsel should not so conduct the people's case as to unfairly prejudice the defendant,[14] but asking questions calling for incompetent answers does not of itself show prejudice,[15] and where objection to an improper question is sustained, it is not error to refuse to reprimand counsel or charge with reference to it.[16] The opening statement of counsel is not prejudicial, though he makes claims not substantiated by the testimony.[17]

Unwarranted speeches and statements that may tend to influence the minds of the jury outside and beyond the facts of the case should not be indulged,[18] but counsel has the right to fully state his views as to what the evidence shows and as to the conclusions fairly to be drawn therefrom,[19] and embellishment by figures of speech[20] and persuasive arguments drawn from independent sources of learning may be used,[21] and physical objects in evidence may be exhibited and commented upon,[22] the matter being one which in every case must be left to the discretion of the trial judge.[23] Unnecessary repetition in argument of low coarse expressions while reprehensible is not reversible,[24] and the same is true of repetitions of matters once ruled out by the court.[25] The court may properly correct a slip of the tongue in counsel's argument.[26] The opening statement of the district attorney is not evidence, and the people are not bound by it.[27] The state may waive its opening argument.[28]

but legitimate argument on the failure of defendant, who has testified, to explain certain facts, is proper.[31]

Argument by defendants' counsel[32] is properly stricken out where unsupported by the evidence,[33] but quotations from memory may be made and brief extracts read, of literary or historical matter, by way of illustrating argument, though nothing amounting to evidence can be first introduced in that way.[34] Defendant's attorney may waive his right to argue after the prosecutor has closed, and if he does so, the prosecutor should not be again allowed to argue on the pretense that he had inadvertently omitted something.[35]

(§ 10) C. Questions of law and fact.[36]—Contrary to the general rule,[37] juries in Louisiana in criminal cases are the judges of both the law and the evidence.[38] They are the judges of the credibility of the witnesses,[39] and defendant's intent, the facts being shown,[40] identification of defendant,[41] and whether positive identification is met by proof of alibi are questions for the jury.[42] Insanity of defendant incapacitating him to form a criminal intent is a question of fact,[43] but the doubt of sanity which will require the judge to submit the question to a jury when defendant is brought up for judgment is a doubt in the mind of the judge.[44]

Questions of law arising on the face of the indictment,[45] whether an act is special legislation,[46] whether or not the person killed was a deputy sheriff,[47] and whether witnesses, expert or nonexpert, are competent to give opinions as to defendant's sanity, are for the court.[48] and generally it is error to fail to charge as to all the necessary elements of the offense,[64] and all offenses included in the indictment,[65] and supported by the evidence.[66] Included offenses should not be presented where the evidence so excludes them that if the principal crime was not committed defendant is not guilty.[67] Where testimony is admissible only on a particular issue, but is persuasive as to other matters, it is error to fail to limit it.[68] Ambiguous[69] and misleading instructions should not be given.[70] The submission of defensive theories finding no support in the evidence is prejudicial.[71] Technical words should be defined.[72] Matters once covered by the charge need not be repeated.[73] Ordinarily, an incorrect request is sufficient to require a correct charge on a subject within the issues not already covered,[74] but an incorrect request need not be given as requested,[75] and where the proper matters in such a request are properly covered by the general charge, or are given after being corrected, there is no error.[76] The court may properly modify instructions requested before giving them,[77] but need not give a special request which requires qualification, limitation or explanation,[78] and where instructions are asked in the aggregate, or propositions are presented as one request, the whole may be refused if there be anything objectionable in any one of them.[79] The court may properly instruct the jury to disregard irrelevant testimony, though no objection to its introduction was made,[80] and the presence of incompetent testimony unobjected to does not require the submission of an instruction that such testimony shall be considered in arriving at a verdict,[81] and caution against considering confessions not admitted in evidence cannot be complained of where the court was actuated by fear that the jury may have heard of them.[82] A charge correct in itself cannot be attacked because it fails to present some other or further proposition,[83] on which a proper request was not presented,[84] and generally instructions more fully developing issues already presented in sufficient general terms if desired must be requested.[85] If defendant desires a form of verdict of acquittal, he must request it.[86] A theory of defense not raised by the evidence and presented solely by the statement of the accused need not be submitted unless an appropriately worded request is presented.[87] The authorities are in conflict as to the propriety of instructing, even on request, that no inference is to be drawn from accused's failure to testify,[88] and the court should be careful in charging as to defendant's failure to explain pertinent facts where he does testify.[89] A request stating the hypothesis on which defendant claims an acquittal must include all the elements necessary to predicate the verdict,[90] and in giving hypothetical instructions, the jury should be cautioned against assuming the existence or nonexistence of the facts stated.[91] The constituent elements of the offense may be grouped and the jury instructed that if all be proved beyond a reasonable doubt conviction should follow.[92] Where, at the close of the general charge, the jury are told that they must take the law from the court, a similar admonition should accompany special instructions subsequently given for defendant,[93] and a statement by the court in submitting instructions to which the accused is entitled, that "they are given because they present his theory of the case," is prejudicial as indicating that the jury are not bound to regard them as the law.[94] It is not improper for the judge to call attention to and correct in his charge a misstatement of the law by counsel in argument.[95] A charge which does not purport to declare any principle of law, but which is merely a statement of fact, can never be ground for a new trial, unless the judge himself certifies that the statement is incorrect.[96] A rule of court that requests be preferred before argument is proper and should be adhered to, but such rule will not justify the court in refusing a proper material instruction not elsewhere given.[97]

Submission of charge.[98]—Oral instructions are prohibited by statute or constitution in many states,[99] though remarks in the course of the trial and not part of the charge need not be written,[1] and in others the court on request is required to put his charge in writing.[2] In such states, the taking down in shorthand of a charge delivered orally is not sufficient.[3] A written charge may be waived.[4] Undue emphasis in stating the law is not reversible,[5] and the jury may be recalled after retirement and an omission in the charge supplied.[6]

Form of instructions in general.[7]—Instructions should not be argumentative in form;[8] no matter should be given undue prominence,[9] as by repetition[10] or otherwise. not cured by another correct one in conflict therewith,[13] and where instructions are irreconcilable upon a material issue, they are erroneous, regardless of which is right.[14] An instruction undertaking to cover all the elements of the offense and omitting one is fatally defective.[15] A charge admonishing against assessing punishment by lot should be prefaced by the clause "If you find defendant guilty;"[16] but the failure of the trial court to repeat in every clause of an instruction that the jury "must find from the evidence" is not reversible error.[17] An instruction designating defendant by the name and aliases used in the indictment to which he has pleaded is not error.[18]

Invading province of jury or charging on facts.[19]—Instructions must not invade the province of the jury,[20] or assume the existence of facts[21] not admitted or undisputed,[22] but admitted or conceded facts may be assumed.[23] In many states the court is forbidden to charge on the weight of the evidence[24] or intimate its opinion on the facts,[25] but by statute in Rhode Island, the trial judge is authorized, though not required to comment on the evidence,[26] and in that state there is no error in the court's disclosing his opinion.[27] It is not error in New Jersey for the court to call attention to the salient features of the evidence corroborative of an accomplice's testimony,[28] nor to state that no mitigating or extenuating circumstances are shown,[29] and where the disputed questions of fact are clearly left to the jury, the judge's comments and expressions of opinion are not assignable for error.[30] In Georgia, an instruction on the weight to be given defendant's statement should follow the statute.[31]

A charge applying the law to facts introduced by defendant cannot be complained of as a charge on the facts,[32] and the narration of the evidence in defendant's own language is not erroneous, though his story seems unreasonable or incredible.[33]

It is error to charge without qualification that positive evidence is stronger than negative,[34] but an instruction to carefully scan the evidence of alibi is proper,[35] and a statement of the grounds of admissibility of dying declarations is not a charge on the weight of the evidence,[36] though the jury should not be instructed that dying declarations are to be given the same weight and force as if the declarant had been a witness in court.[37]

Reference to the crime as "murder" is not error where the only issue is as to the identity of the perpetrator,[38] and there is no error in charging that the law is no respecter of persons and whether one of the parties is white and the other colored should have no weight with the jury.[39]

(§ 10) F. Custody of jury, conduct and deliberations.[70]—The jury should not be allowed to separate while deliberating on their verdict under circumstances such that any harm could possibly come to the defendant from the separation,[71] but in the absence of a showing of prejudice, temporary or slight separation will not reverse,[72] though prejudice will be presumed from separation in California.[73] Under the statute of Washington, allowing separation on consent, the defendant's counsel may consent for him,[74] and where the jury are admonished as to its duties on separation, failure to repeat the admonition on subsequent separations is not error.[75] Where veniremen have not been sworn as jurors, the rule in capital cases forbidding them to separate has no application.[76] Communication with jurymen during the trial is improper,[77] and after retirement, fatal,[78] and all communications between judge and jury must take place in open court in the presence of defendant.[79]

Where the statute does not require that the officer in charge of the jury shall be specially sworn, it is not error that they were not all the time in the custody of the sworn officer.[80]

The jury may carry from the bar papers used in evidence,[81] but exhibits other than papers should not be taken to the jury room in Idaho,[82] and the indictment on which is plainly written the verdict rendered on a former trial should not be given the jury to take out with them.[83]

The jury should not discuss or consider the absence of witnesses and defendant's failure to account for the whereabouts of third persons,[84] nor discuss matters ment where they could not fix it is fatal. Hayner v. People [Ill.] 72 N. E. 792.

outside the evidence in the case,[85] and discussion by jurors of defendant's failure to testify will vitiate their verdict.[86] Conflict in the evidence should be reconciled if possible.[87] A verdict arrived at by lot will be set aside.[88]

Any conduct of the judge amounting to coercion of a verdict is fatal,[89] and a discharge of the jury for failure to agree without a judicial investigation of whether they can agree, and entry thereof on the record operates as an acquittal, though the judge was satisfied in his own mind they could not agree.[90]

(§ 10) G. Verdict.[91]—When polling the jury, it is not necessary to call each by name or require an audible answer.[92] Bad spelling[93] or ungrammatical construction will not vitiate a verdict,[94] and writing by some juror the value of property stolen in the blank verdict submitted with the charge is not prejudicial.[95] An informal verdict, received without objection by defendant or his counsel, though not sufficient basis for judgment, will not be ground for discharge, but only entitles him to a new trial.[96] A general verdict of "guilty as charged" is sufficient as a rule,[97] but where the jury attempt to set out a description of the offense and it is not responsive to the indictment, it is bad;[98] and where defendant pleads not guilty and autrefois acquit, a verdict is necessary on each issue, and judgment entered on a general verdict of guilty will be set aside.[99] Where defendant pleads

Townley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 309. A general conviction is not objectionable where defendants under the evidence could have been convicted as principals either in the first or second degree, the punishment in both cases being the same. Lofton v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 908. Where counsel for the state abandons everything in the indictment except the least heinous offense included in the indictment and the court so instructs, a general verdict of guilty as charged is sufficient and will be regarded as a conviction of the lowest degree. Johnson v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 951.

98. State v. Pollock, 105 Mo. App. 273, 79 S. W. 980. A verdict of guilty of larceny from "a" person is insufficient; it should designate the particular person alleged in the indictment. State v. McGee, 181 Mo. 312, 80 S. W. 899.

Contra: Unnecessary and repugnant words in a verdict may be rejected as surplusage, though added to the correct verdict they define an offense known to the law, but not charged in the indictment. State v. Henry, 98 Me. 561, 57 A. 891.

guilty to the charge of former conviction, and the count charging it is not read to the jury, failure to return a verdict as to that charge is of no harm to defendant.[1] A verdict of conviction on each of two counts charging separate offenses may be found, but the better practice is to find a general verdict for the two cognate offenses.[2] Silence of the verdict as to a particular count operates as an acquittal on that count,[3] and in Georgia a general verdict of guilty is referred to the count charging the highest offense, and a verdict of guilty of a named offense will be construed as a conviction of the highest degree of that offense;[4] but in Texas, where the principal and an included offense are submitted, the verdict must state the offense of which defendant is convicted.[5] Where the essence of the offense charged in each of two counts is the same, an acquittal of one bars conviction on the other;[6] but where both counts are predicated on the same fact, but allege different offenses, an acquittal on one does not require an acquittal on the other.[7] Where a crime is punishable under the indeterminate sentence law, the jury are not required to fix the time of imprisonment,[8] and a finding of defendant's age is not necessary to support a sentence under that law.[9] Jurors cannot impeach their own verdicts, as by stating that they agreed upon persuasion that the punishment would be light.[10]

§ 11. New trial and arrest of judgment. Writ of error coram nobis.[11]—The harmful effect of error is elsewhere treated.[12]

The grounds.[13]—A new trial may be granted upon discovery that a juror was prejudiced[14] or disqualified,[15] for surprise in the testimony of the party's witnesses,[16] for misconduct of counsel for the state[17] or the jury,[18] for insufficiency of the evidence,[19] and for errors occurring at the trial.[20] But not because witness

20. Not for refusal of continuance where it appears by the motion that the testimony of the absent witness was in direct conflict with that of accused. Meadows v. State [Ark.] 78 S. W. 761. Not for variance between indictment and proof as to ownership of burglarized premises. Mass v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 45. Should be granted for error in excluding material evidence offered by defendant. Affidavits of 20 people to prove material fact excluded at trial held sufficient ground, the evidence being neither cumulative nor impeaching, and being of-

in a capital case received a part of the reward offered for the arrest and conviction of the guilty person,[21] nor because of the disqualification of grand jurors returning the indictment ascertainable before arraignment,[22] nor because of defendant's ignorance of the law and of his right to examine certain witnesses, though he was unrepresented by counsel.[23] Error in overruling a motion for change of venue[24] and excessiveness of sentence[25] cannot be raised by this motion. Refusal to grant new trial for incompetence of witness on ground of prior conviction of felony will not be reviewed where no diligence is shown, even on appeal to procure the record.[26] Where there is nothing in the record showing the race of the jurors, the refusal of a new trial on the ground that defendant, a negro, was tried by a jury of white men, is proper.[27] The grant of a new trial to one conspirator does not require that a new trial be granted to any co-conspirator tried and convicted with him.[28]

Newly discovered evidence[29] is one of the well recognized grounds,[30] but applications on this ground are regarded with disfavor,[31] and the applicant must satisfy the court that the proposed evidence is competent and material,[32] credible,[33] not merely cumulative,[34] impeaching or contradictory,[35] such as to probably affect the result,[36] and that he could not by the exercise of proper diligence have procured the evidence for the previous trial.[37] Where it appears that the jury did not have the real case before it but acted on an erroneous assumption as to the facts, which may have been material, a new trial should be granted as of course.[38] Defendant is not entitled to a new trial in order that he may avail himself of the testimony of a witness unaffected by an indictment for perjury under which he has since the trial been acquitted.[39] Laches in applying may defeat the motion.[40]

A motion in arrest of judgment[41] lies only on account of some intrinsic defect apparent on inspection of the record,[42] and the objection must of course be one which is not required to be made at the trial.[43] Judgment will be arrested where defendant was not present when the verdict was received, but a new trial and not absolute discharge is the extent of his relief.[44] Failure of the record to show that a venire facias had been issued for the summoning of the grand jury is not ground of a motion in arrest,[45] and judgment will not be arrested when the part of the verdict that is repugnant to the indictment may be rejected as surplusage.[46]

A motion to set aside a judgment,[47] like a motion in arrest, must be predicated on some defect apparent on the face of the record and differs from it only in the time at which it should be made.[48] In Georgia, the silence of the record as to defendant's presence when the verdict was rendered and sentence pronounced,[49] or its failure to show that defendant was asked whether there was any reason why sentence should not be pronounced upon him, is no ground for setting aside or arresting the judgment, it not being the practice in that state to enter such fact.[50]

A writ of error coram nobis,[51] in the absence of statutory inhibition, may be issued by any court of common law jurisdiction,[52] is applicable as well to criminal as to civil cases,[53] and lies to correct an error of fact in respect to a matter affecting the validity and regularity of the proceedings in the same court in which the judgment was rendered and where the record is, when the error assigned is not for any fault of the court.[54] It may be applied for and issue at any time, though practically obsolete, as the same purpose may be attained by motion.[55] The denial of a motion to set aside the proceedings on the ground that defendant was insane at the time of trial is tantamount to a determination by the court that he was sane, leaves the verdict in force against him, and is erroneous.[56] The authority and jurisdiction of the district court of Nebraska to grant new trials in criminal cases are derived from the statute, and that court cannot, in the exercise of its equity jurisdiction, grant a new trial in such case on the ground of newly discovered evidence, because the time to apply therefor under the statute has expired.[57]

Practice on motion.[58]—Time to move for new trial is generally regulated by statute,[59] and briefs of evidence must be filed within the statutory or allowed time

But there is no right of appeal from a discharge of the rule for a new trial by the lower court. Commonwealth v. Greason, 208 Pa. 126, 57 A. 349. An application for a new trial at a term subsequent to that at which the judgment was rendered cannot be entertained in Nebraska. Hubbard v. State [Neb.] 100 N. W. 153. Where the statute requires that the motion for new trial be made before judgment, and defendant's motion on all statutory grounds is denied and judgment entered on the same day, he is not enor the motion will be dismissed.[60] Motions are addressed in great measure to the discretion of the court,[61] but a motion on general grounds addressed to the discretion of the court need not be approved by him and it is error to dismiss it for lack of such approval.[62] In Kentucky, an appeal may be taken by the commonwealth before final judgment to have the law of the case settled by the court, but the appeal cannot interfere with the action of the trial court in granting a new trial.[63] Defendant should produce other evidence than his own affidavit of the facts on which he relies,[64] but a motion on the ground that the judge was absent from the court room during the argument may properly be presented by affidavit, and the mere unsworn statement of the judge in contradiction will not suffice.[65] An application on the ground of prejudice of a juror must identify the juror.[66] Counter affidavits are properly received and the motion denied where the applicant's showing is overcome,[67] and where a juror was stood aside for cause insufficiently proved, additional evidence of his disqualification may be produced on the hearing of the motion.[68] In passing on the motion, the trial judge has power to correct the minutes to make them speak the truth,[69] and the fact that the indictment was duly returned and filed in the county where it was found may be shown on motion for new trial in the county to which the venue was changed.[70] A juror may be sworn to show that defendant's failure to testify was discussed in the jury room,[71] and testimony of jurors showing misconduct vitiating their verdict will not be excluded merely because the court would discipline such misconduct.[72] Affidavits of jurors as to unlawful conduct in arriving at their verdict have no probative force.[73]

Motions in arrest must be filed before judgment.[74] An unsworn statement in the motion will not overcome the presumption that the trial court followed the law in ordering a special grand jury.[75] Extrinsic evidence cannot be received at a hearing on motion in arrest,[76] but if the record before the court is not a true record, the court may permit its amendment at any time before deciding the question raised by motion.[77] The verdict may be set aside and a new trial ordered on motion in arrest and for discharge,[78] and the allowance of a motion in arrest does not operate as an acquittal, but only places defendant in the position of one against whom no prosecution has been begun.[79]

§ 12. Sentence and judgment.[80]—The court should take evidence as to aggravating or mitigating circumstances before sentencing on a plea of guilty,[81] but a conviction of felony will not be reversed because no evidence of defendant's age was introduced in conformance with the act, confining persons between the ages of 16 and 30 in a reformatory.[82] Where the record fails to show the date of the return of the bill by the grand jury, a sentence in accordance with the law as it was prior to an amendatory act is legal.[83] Sentence of death must substantially follow the statutory language,[84] but immaterial words may be rejected as surplusage.[85] Sentence may be imposed the same day the verdict is rendered if the court does not intend to remain longer in session,[86] but where a felon is convicted at a special term called expressly to try his case, he is entitled to two days' respite before sentence.[87] Sentences imposed by different courts cannot be concurrent,[88] and where the fine imposed is not greater than might be assessed for a single offense, a single judgment and sentence is not objectionable as cumulative, though based on an information charging two offenses.[89] Prior convictions can be considered only on conviction of crime committed subsequent to the prior conviction,[90] and one convicted and sentenced under the habitual criminal act is not after repeal of the act entitled to the parole provided therein.[91] A judge at chambers has no authority to change the judgment.[92] Where defendant in a criminal prosecution removed into the Federal court because the acts complained of were done under color of Federal office is convicted and sentenced in that court in accordance with the state law, either to be executed or imprisoned, he should be delivered to the proper officer of the state for the execution of the sentence, and if a fine is imposed, which is paid, it should be transmitted to the clerk of the court from which the cause was removed.[93] The indeterminate sentence laws of Kansas[94] and Michigan are valid,[95] are prospective in their operation, and under the latter, where no minimum sentence is fixed by the act defining the crime, the court is empowered to fix a minimum not less than six months,[96] but the court need fix no maximum where the statute defining and punishing the crime fixes one.[97] A sentence for the maximum and minimum period of five years is improper,[98] but not absolutely void.[99]

§ 13. Record or minutes and commitment.[1]—The record is conclusive,[2] but may be amended by the court,[3] though only on record evidence;[4] and the action of the trial judge in so amending his minutes as to make them speak the truth is binding and conclusive.[5] Minutes cannot be entered or signed after adjournment in Texas.[6] The record must show every jurisdictional fact,[7] but the presumption of regularity of the proceedings avails to aid a record not showing lack of jurisdiction.[8] A recital that defendant admitted the violation of the statute as charged and that a certain fine was imposed sufficiently shows a plea of guilty.[9] A minute entry showing a judgment of sentence by the court in accordance with the verdict sufficiently implies a judgment of guilt, though the formal adjudication on the verdict is omitted.[10]

U. S. [Okl.] 76 P. 121. Where defendant has a bill of exceptions, he may have rulings on evidence reviewed, though he has made no tion, while customary, is not necessary in Georgia.[33] Matters first brought to the attention of the trial court by motion for new trial are not generally reviewable on appeal,[34] but where a motion in arrest and for a new trial was based on written exceptions to the instructions filed therewith, and was received, considered and denied by the trial court, the exceptions were reviewed by the circuit court of appeals, though the exceptions were not taken at the time the charge was given.[35] Statutes in some states authorize a general review of criminal cases especially where there is judgment of death,[36] irrespective of whether proper objection was made and exception saved on the trial,[37] and exceptions to instructions in a capital case were reviewed in North Carolina where first raised on appeal, the attorney general consenting,[38] and where no objection or exception was taken to the introduction of hearsay evidence and there was barely enough to sustain a conviction, the court granted a new trial in the interests of justice, the attorney general so advising.[39] Hearsay testimony not objected to at the time of its introduction should be stricken on motion.[40]

Waiver of objection.[41]—An objection and exception timely made may be waived,[42] and an exception against invited error is unavailing.[43] The request of instructions embodying an erroneous theory adopted by the court does not estop defendant from urging error in refusing his prior requests based on the correct theory,[44] and the introduction of incompetent evidence over objection is not waived by defendant's afterward attempting to explain it,[45] but where evidence is admitted over objection with the statement that it will be passed upon later, failure to again raise the question waives any error in its admission,[46] and error cannot be predicated on refusal to rule out a paper admitted on consent.[47] That defendant offered a wrong reason for the admission of certain testimony does not render it any the less admissible, nor its rejection any the less erroneous.[48] Where defendant properly objected to the discharge of two jurors after the jury had been impaneled and sworn, he did not waive his objection by failing to object to the jurors sworn in their place or by calling for a new venire.[49]

Sufficiency of objections.[50]—Objections must be specific,[51] the grounds of objection to testimony must be stated,[52] since a general objection to evidence will not avail if it be admissible in part,[53] or for any purpose,[54] and a general objection will not raise specific grounds, such as that the question calls for an opinion as distinguished from a fact,[55] or that physicians offered as experts are not qualified.[56] The objection must be to the question, not to the answer,[57] unless the question does not disclose the incompetency of the response,[58] or the answer is unresponsive. An objection to a question after it is answered comes too late.[59] The remedy for an unresponsive answer to a cross question,[60] and for incompetent evidence admitted without objection, is by motion to strike.[61] Where, on motion to strike out an entire declaration, a part only is stricken and what remains is objectionable because disconnected, the remedy is by motion to restore subject to objection.[62] Where testimony is admissible for only a particular purpose, the remedy is by asking for a specific direction limiting its scope and not by general objection to its admission.[63] If defendant wishes to raise the question of the sufficiency of the evidence, he must move for a directed verdict.[64] Defendant surprised by the testimony of a state's witness and failing to move for a postponement cannot complain on appeal,[65] and the question of surprise is not

58. Where it is not apparent from the question itself that the response thereto will upon any theory of the case be inadmissible, an objection alone to the question is of no avail; but the party must, when the inadmissible evidence is for the first time disclosed by the answer, move to have it stricken out; failing in which, he will be in no position to predicate error upon it. open for review where defendant only objected to the evidence on the ground that the people had closed their case.[68] Objections to the manner of allotting cases in the criminal district court should be made before going to trial.[67] Refusal to discharge the jury for an improper remark by the state's counsel is not error, the remedy being by motion to have it withdrawn.[68] To raise a constitutional question, the objection must point out the particular part of the constitution violated.[69] The remedy to correct misconduct of counsel in argument is by motion to exclude it and exception to the court's refusal, not by exception to the remarks.[70] In Texas, a written request to charge is the proper way to call to the court's attention prejudicial argument by counsel for the state.[71]

Sufficiency of exceptions.[72]—Exception must be specific,[73] and if it covers several rulings, is insufficient if any one was correct.[74] A general exception will not raise special matters.[75] An exception to the exclusion of evidence is not available where its object is not stated to the trial court.[76] Whether the prosecuting attorney heard an exception made to his argument is immaterial.[77]

§ 15. Harmless or prejudicial error. Trivial or immaterial error.[76]—Generally speaking, a conviction will not be reversed for technical errors where substantial justice has been done,[79] or because of error that resulted in no harm or prejudice to defendant,[80] though he has properly saved his objection and exception to the ruling.[81] Prejudice will not be presumed from error in excusing a juror.[82] Errors favorable to defendant[83] or his co-defendant,[84] or which he has

9. Evans v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 374; Green v. Com. [Ky.] 83 S. W. 638. Mur-

viction of an included offense where the evidence would support a verdict of guilty of the principal crime, are harmless.[10] Where the testimony is in sharp conflict and evenly balanced, it cannot be said that the admission of incompetent evidence is harmless,[11] and where the state's case can be sustained only by reference to incompetent evidence admitted over objection, manifest injury has resulted which can only be redressed by reversal.[12] It cannot be presumed that unintelligible evidence was harmless where expressly treated as competent by the court in his charge.[13]

Cure of error.[14]—Reversible error is not committed by denying a continuance for the absence of a witness who afterwards appears and testifies,[15] and any error in overruling a challenge for cause is cured by allowing an additional peremptory challenge after defendant had used his number.[16] Where the state peremptorily challenged all jurors who did not appear, defendant was not harmed by refusal to delay the trial until they could be brought in by attachment.[17] The admission of improper evidence may be cured by afterwards excluding it,[18] or withdrawing it from the jury,[19] or permitting proof of otherwise immaterial facts rendering it innocuous,[20] or sufficiently establishing the same fact by other unobjectionable evidence,[21] by instructions rendering it immaterial,[22] or by verdict showing that it was disregarded.[23] Error in admitting evidence of defendant's sanity as a part of the state's case in chief is cured by admitting defendant's evidence of insanity.[24] The improper exclusion of evidence may be cured by afterwards admitting the same,[25] or other evidence of similar effect,[26] or recalling the witness and offering defendant the privilege of examining him as to the excluded matter.[27] Error in allowing a question to be put may be cured by the answer,[28] or failure to answer,[29] or subsequently bringing out the same fact by a proper question.[30] A verdict on an issue to which the error did not relate renders the error innocuous.[31] Improper remarks,[32] conduct[33] and argument by the prosecuting attorney, may, if not too flagrant, be cured by prompt action of the court and instructions to disregard them.[34] Refusal to correct an erroneous ruling by instruction is prejudicial,[35] and improper evidence may be of such a damaging character as not to be curable by withdrawal or instructions to disregard it.[36] Error in overruling a motion to quash is cured by the withdrawal of all except one count as to which all the evidence applies,[37] but where a demurrer should have been sustained, the action of counsel in stating that he would not ask for a conviction under the invalid count will not relate back to cure the error.[38]

§ 16. Stay of proceedings after conviction.[39]—Regardless of the state practice, the Federal courts do not suspend sentence pending proceedings in error.[40] In order to entitle a convicted misdemeanant to a stay of proceedings pending appeal in Kansas, the record must be filed in the supreme court within 90 days.[41] Arrest of defendant on a capias pro fine after notice of appeal and recognizance is improper though the fine imposed was less than the amount required to give the appellate court jurisdiction.[42]

§ 17. Appeal and review. A. Right of review.[43]—Appeals are allowable only where expressly authorized by statute.[44] The general rule is that an acquittal, however accomplished, is final, and that appeal or error on behalf of the government does not lie,[45] but in some states an appeal or error proceedings on behalf of the state are provided.[46] The supreme court of Minnesota were equally divided on the question whether one convicted of a capital crime waives his right of appeal by accepting commutation to life sentence.[47] The statute 11 Hen. VII, c. 12, providing for the prosecution of suits by poor persons, has reference only to civil cases, and neither this statute nor the similar act of congress[48] gives a person convicted of crime the right to prosecute a writ of error at the expense of the government.[49]

(§ 17) B. The remedy for obtaining review.[50]—Statutory modes of review such as appeal and error must be pursued where provided and applicable and not certiorari,[51] prohibition,[52] or habeas corpus.[53] Criminal cases are reviewed by error and not by appeal in Illinois,[54] but an unauthorized appeal will in the absence of a motion to dismiss be heard as a writ of error, where everything essential to a review on error is present.[55] A judgment of conviction of contempt in violating an injunction is reviewable in the circuit court of appeals by error and not by appeal.[56]

(§ 17) C. Adjudications which may be reviewed.[57]—The judgment must be a finality in the trial court.[58] Intermediate orders are generally not appealable.[59] An order sentencing defendant and fixing the date for execution is not

59. No appeal lies from an order denying a motion to dismiss an indictment for want of prosecution. People v. Martin, 91 N. Y. S. 486. Where a motion in arrest was sustained and a motion for acquittal and discharge overruled and the charge resubmitted to another grand jury, an appeal therefrom is from an interlocutory order. State v. Gallaugher [Iowa] 101 N. W. 193. No appeal lies from the overruling of a motion in arrest or from a verdict. People v. Ruiz [Cal.] 77 P. 907. An order overruling a motion for a new trial in a criminal case is not appealable, defendant having escaped after conviction and his appeal therefrom having never been perfected.[60] No appeal lies in South Carolina from an order setting aside a verdict on motion of the state.[61] Though an order granting a new trial is not ordinarily appealable, where the defendant claims to be entitled on the record to an absolute discharge, the appeal will be heard on its merits.[62] An order denying a motion to set aside a conviction on the ground that defendant was insane at the time of trial is appealable.[63] Further appealability of judgments of courts of review rests in statute.[64] The remedy applicable to criminal cases is proper on conviction of contempt,[65] but an order of the judge of a county court denying discharge on habeas corpus is not a judgment within the statute allowing writs of error in criminal cases.[66]

(§ 17) D. Courts of review and their jurisdiction.[67]—The supreme court of the United States does not consider itself bound on the question of its jurisdiction by a prior case in which jurisdiction was entertained without any suggestion as to the want of it.[68] That court has jurisdiction of a writ of error to the district court of Porto Rico where a right claimed under the constitution, a treaty or statute of the United States is denied,[69] and in any case which if determined in one of the territories could be taken to the supreme court.[70] It cannot review a capital case decided in Oklahoma.[71] The supreme court of Missouri has jurisdiction where a right claimed under the constitution is denied below,[72] or where a political subdivision of the state is a party.[73] The supreme court of appeals of West Virginia cannot entertain a writ of error from the judgment of

A judgment of the United States circuit court convicting one of contempt in an equity suit is reviewable in the circuit court of appeals on writ of error. 72. Where the right was upheld below and reversed in the court of appeals, jurisdiction for a further appeal does not attach. State v. Brockmiller [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 214. Jurisdiction is not conferred on the ground of constitutional construction where it appears that the motion to dismiss the prosecution was based on several grounds and the record does not show on which the decision was based. City of Tarkio v. Loyd, 179 Mo. 600, 78 S. W. 797. Where a constitutional question appears in Missouri on appeal to the court of appeals, the case should be transferred to the supreme court. State v. Brockmiller [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 214.

73. The supreme court of Missouri is not given jurisdiction of an appeal from a conviction of a violation of a city ordinance on the ground that the city is a party to the suit, the city not being a political subdivision of the state within the constitutional provision relating to such jurisdiction. City of Tarkio v. Loyd, 179 Mo. 600, 78 S. W. 797.

the circuit court discharging a defendant from prosecution for violating a city ordinance, though the validity of the ordinance is involved.[74] And the circuit court of Ohio has no jurisdiction to hear a petition in error filed by the state in criminal case to reverse a judgment of the common pleas discharging the accused.[75] The decisions of the court of criminal appeals of Texas are conclusive as to the validity and construction of criminal statutes when called in question in the supreme court of that state.[76] Where the fine is less than $100, there is no appeal in Texas.[77]

(§ 17) E. Procedure to bring up the cause.[78]—Where accused excepts to the overruling of a demurrer and brings error before trial on the merits, the clerk of the court in which the case is pending has no right to demand the payment of accrued costs before sending up the record.[79] In New Mexico, appeals must be applied for at the term at which judgment is rendered,[80] and an appeal taken more than 30 days before the beginning of a term of the supreme court is returnable to that term.[81]

A recognizance on appeal[82] in the statutory form is necessary,[83] and in Texas must state the crime of which defendant was convicted[84] and the amount of punishment inflicted;[85] and a defective bond cannot be amended by filing a new one before expiration of the time to file bond.[86] A bond on appeal from a justice to the county court is not defective for failure to contain the number of the case appealed, the judgment being otherwise sufficiently described.[87]

(§ 17) F. Perpetuation of proceedings in the "record." What must appear, and whether by record proper or bill of exceptions.[88]—What must appear to authorize a review of particular errors is elsewhere treated.[89] The transcript must show that an appeal was taken from the judgment.[90] When the bill of exceptions recites that the court passed an order overruling a motion for new trial, it is not necessary that such order should be specified as a part of the record to be transmitted.[91] In Texas, in misdemeanor cases, the record must contain a recognizance or a certificate that defendant is confined in jail pending appeal.[92] Those matters which belong to the record proper must appear thereby,[93] and such matters need not be and cannot be otherwise shown;[94] but all matters not part of the record proper must appear by bill of exceptions, or its equivalent,[95] and where there is no bill of exceptions, or it is not properly in the record, matters necessary to be presented thereby cannot be reviewed,[96] only the record proper in such case being presented for review.[97] No bill of exceptions is required to raise the error of trying defendant without a plea, notwithstanding the statute providing otherwise.[98] A statement filed by the judge and entered of record relating to an alleged contempt in the presence of the court imparts absolute verity,[99] and recitals in the judgment as to matters necessary to be set out therein will prevail over contradictory statements in the bill of exceptions.[1] In Indiana, the original bill is properly made part of the record,[2] but nothing but the evidence and its incidents can be brought up thereby.[3] Affidavits filed in support of a motion for new trial cannot be taken as evidence of what occurred at the trial.[4] The bill of exceptions cannot be aided by reference to the statement of facts.[5]

Making, settling and approving.[6]—The bill of exceptions or like memorial of the proceedings must be approved by the trial judge, and filed within the statutory or allowed period,[7] and signing must precede filing,[8] and the bill must show such facts.[9] It is no longer the practice to make up the bills of exceptions during progress of the trial.[10] The bill of exceptions must be submitted by the judge to the district attorney before signature,[11] and should be granted or refused outright, and not signed with the qualification that the judge was unable to say whether the matter complained of occurred.[12] Upon settlement, the minutes of the clerk are not conclusive, but the judge may of his own knowledge, or from the reporter's transcript determine the true facts.[13] Affidavits attached to a transcript on appeal cannot be considered where they are not certified as a part of the record in the case.[14] It is counsel's duty to see to the making and settlement of exceptions,[15] but where defendant makes and files his statement in proper time, but no approval is had because of the laches of the judge and district attorney, reversal follows.[16]

15. Appellant is not entitled to a reversal on the ground that he was deprived of his right to have a fair statement of the facts certified where he has failed to take all possible steps, though he relied on the statement of the clerk that the record was closed. Lozano v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 37.

Amendments, additions, and corrections.[17]—The appeal court cannot correct or amend the memorial of the evidence;[18] corrections of the record being necessarily made in the trial court on application seasonably made.[19] In Washington the trial judge has authority to correct his certificate according to the fact at any time before the appeal is heard,[20] and may be compelled by mandate in a proper case to correct it.[21] A motion for certiorari to correct the record and rehear the cause as corrected will be granted in North Carolina after reversal.[22] An amendment of the record made nunc pro tunc showing proper arraignment and plea will control in deciding assignments of error.[23] In some states parties are allowed to present the affidavits of bystanders as to what occurred at the trial where they deem themselves aggrieved by the action of the judge in settling the bill,[24] but in Kentucky the verity of the bill as certified by the judge cannot be so assailed,[25] and the trial court's explanation of a bill of exceptions cannot be attacked by ex parte affidavits.[26]

The statement of facts[27] must be approved,[28] served[29] and filed,[30] within the statutory or allowed period, and a statement not agreed to by counsel nor approved by the court will not be considered though authenticated by the affidavit of three witnesses.[31] A statement not appearing to have been approved cannot be considered,[32] but where defendant takes all the necessary legal steps to have his statement of facts approved and the court refuses to approve it or prepare a correct one, reversal will follow.[33] It should state that it contains all facts admitted, the facts admitted to have been proven, and the evidence of the facts disputed.[34]

Under the Georgia practice, the motion for new trial,[35] unless the recitals of fact contained in a ground of a motion for new trial are approved or certified as true by the trial judge, the errors therein alleged cannot be considered.[36] A

A bill signed by the judge cannot be impeached by affidavit of counsel. Statute provides for affidavits of bystanders. Moree v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 1117. Counsel's affidavit stating that the court qualified the bills of exception without counsel's knowledge at a time when he could not secure the affidavits of bystanders presents nothing for review where it shows no prejudice or what the qualifications were. motion for new trial cannot be amended in the supreme court by adding new assignments of error.[37]

Limitation of review to matters in the record.[38]—Except as to those jurisdictional matters which the record is in most states required to show,[39] every reasonable presumption is in favor of the correctness of the proceedings below, and unless the record shows error this presumption will prevail,[40] and the certified record is conclusive as to matters contained therein.[41] Accordingly, to entitle appellant to review a ruling it must affirmatively appear that such ruling was made,[42] or the proceeding had,[43] of which complaint is made, and such facts as show that it was error,[44] or explain the objection,[45] and the objection and excep-

40. State v. Ronk, 91 Minn. 419, 98 N. W. 334; People v. Allen [Cal.] 77 P. 948. Record held not to show that prosecutrix was not sworn. State v. Smith [Iowa] 100 N. W. 40. This presumption will require the court to assume that counsel adopted a line of argument justifying an instruction that nothing said on the argument should cause the jury to fail to follow the court's instructions. State v. Leuhrsman, 123 Iowa, 476, 99 N. W. 140. Presumed in favor of conviction, that declarations of prosecutrix were introduced after an attempt to impeach her had been made. State v. Parker, 134 N. C. 209, 46 S. E. 511. The record will not be interpreted to show error if it be susceptible of a reasonable interpretation to the contrary. State v. Durein [Kan.] 78 P. 152. On appeal in a contempt case it will be presumed in aid of the conviction that the accused was present, there being no showing to the contrary. Mahoney v. State [Ind.] 72 N. E. 151.

41. That defendant acquiesced in excusing sick juror, swearing another and reproducing testimony. State v. Ronk, 91 Minn. 419, 98 N. W. 334. A statement of the time at which defendant moved to discharge the jury, which appears in the statement of fact contained in the order of the court in the bill of exceptions must be accepted as true. Turner v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. L. R. 2161, 80 S. W. 197. The statement of facts is conclusive as to the date of the commission of the offense and cannot be controlled by the averment of the indictment, though the statement shows the prosecution to be barred by limitations. Lane v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 1034.

42. State v. Eggleston [Or.] 77 P. 738; State v. Henderson [La.] 36 So. 950. A motion for new trial for newly-discovered evidence cannot be considered on appeal where there is no bill of exceptions in reference to the matter, and no order of the trial court overruling the motion, or any exception thereto, appears in the record. Elmore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 520. Where no motion to quash the affidavit on which the arrest was made is set out in the transcript, no question as to the ruling of the court on such motion is presented for review. Ross v. State, 139 Ala. 144, 36 So. 718. Objections to jurors will not be reviewed where the bill does not show whether they sat in the trial and what disposition was made of them. Dodd v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 510.

43. Improper remarks of the prosecuting attorney will not be reviewed unless preserved in the record. State v. Brown, 181 Mo. 192, 79 S. W. 1111. Reading from books or paper by prosecuting attorney not shown by record. Sampson v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 82 S. W. 384. Where testimony at the inquest claimed to have been improperly read at the trial is not set out, and the prosecuting attorney denies reading it and the court instructed that if any such testimony had been read it should be disregarded, the objection is untenable. Scott v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 47. Objection to allowing witness to testify must be supported by bill showing he did testify. Smotherman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 838.

44. State v. Lewis, 112 La. 872, 36 So. 788; State v. Henderson [La.] 36 So. 950. The court will not inspect legislative journals to determine whether the statute under which defendant was convicted was constitutionally enacted, the facts he relies on not being in the bill. Peckham v. People [Colo.] 75 P. 422. An exception on the ground of variance must be accompanied by a facsimile of the indictment where necessary to decide. Kirby v. State, 139 Ala. 87, 36 So. 721. Objectionable publication getting into hands of jurors must be shown or described. State v. Schaben [Kan.] 76 P. 823. Remarks of the judge and the connection in which they were made must be set out. State v. Sanders [S. C.] 47 S. E. 55. Refusal to dismiss for delay in prosecution. State v. Van Waters [Wash.] 78 P. 897. Refusal to continue on the ground that the district attorney had promised to dismiss cannot be considered where it does not appear that the court assented to the dismissal. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 299. Reference, in argument, to failure to make explanations, must be shown by the bill to have referred to defendant. Brown v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 704. Refusal of new trial for insufficiency of the evidence cannot be reviewed in the absence of the evidence. Allen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 1111. No showing that witness inadvertently sworn was examined. Walker v. State, 139 Ala. 56, 35 So. 1011. The bill must show that the action of the court in asking defendant a question was injurious to him. Washington v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 811. Where challenge for cause is overruled, it must appear that the jurors were accepted or peremptorily challenged and that defendant exhausted his challenges. State v. Woods, 112 La. 617, 36 So. 626; Bailey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 1208; Martin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 390; Hierholzer v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 836. A mere statement in the bill of exceptions that defendant moved to quash the venire because of a certain variance between the writ and the copy is not enough to show the variance existed. McClellan v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 239.

Admission of evidence: Evidence complained of must be set out. Whittington v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 948; Andrews v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 188; Laudermilk v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 1107. Materiality, relevancy, reception, and probable injury, must appear. State v. Woods, 112 La. 617, 36 So. 626; State v. Lewis, 112 La. 872, 36 So. 788. Where a paper introduced as a dying declaration is not shown in the bill of exceptions, the ruling on objection to its introduction cannot be reviewed. Pitts v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 101. Defendant who seeks to obtain a review of a ruling admitting a deposition on the ground that the certificate is not in due form, must see that the certificate is in the record. People v. Moran [Cal.] 77 P. 777. Where all the testimony offered as a predicate for the admission of dying declarations is not in the bill, their admissibility cannot be reviewed. Kimberlain v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 1043. A bill of exceptions to cross-examination of defendant's witness cannot be considered where the objections do not show that the cross-examination was not germane. Kennon v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 518. A bill of exceptions complaining of the questions asked of a witness relative to the condition of a dying person presents no question where it is not shown that the person made any dying declaration or that any was introduced in evidence. Washington v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 811. Enough of the surrounding facts and circumstances must be set out to show that the admission of the evidence complained of was error. Patton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 86; Pace v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 531. Bill must show that alleged improper questions were answered. Hays v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 201. Answers to questions complained of must appear. Blain v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 518; Love v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 691. Bill of exceptions to competency of witness must show his testimony. Ham v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 929. Admission of testimony concerning other property found in defendant's possession objected to on the ground that it did not appear to have been stolen will not be reviewed where the bill does not show whether there was testimony showing it to have been stolen. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 941. Bill to admission of evidence complained of as not the best must show that the best evidence was not in fact introduced. Daugherty v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 624. A bill of exceptions to the introduction of a deed on the ground that no notice was given does not show that no notice was in fact given though the bill was approved by the judge. Frazier v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 532. Bill allowing witness to state what was the purpose of an indefinite conversation, held bad as not negativing the idea that the purpose was as stated and apparent to the parties. Haynes v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 16. A statement of the grounds of objection urged is not a certificate by the court that the grounds existed. Andrews v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 188. Bill of exceptions to proof of other offenses must show they were not part of a system. Buck v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 387. Seemingly irrelevant testimony will not be regarded as prejudicial in the absence of any showing as to how it might prejudice. Why people often went to a depot where a homicide occurred. Black v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 302.

Rejected evidence or questions: State v. Thompson [Iowa] 101 N. W. 109; Sutherland v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 915. Sustaining objections to a question is not reviewable where it is not shown what the witness would have answered. Love v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 691; Mullins v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 2044, 79 S. W. 258; Kennon v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 518; Commonwealth v. Bavarian Brewing Co. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 772; Ross v. State, 139 Ala. 144, 36 So. 718; Washington v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 811. The bill should show the materiality of the evidence excluded. Henard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 655. The purpose and object of rejected testimony must be shown. Townsell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 938; Gather v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 717; McVey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 740. Where materiality sufficiently appears from question, answer need not be shown. Parrish v. State, 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012. Rejection of transcript of testimony at former trial cannot be reviewed in absence of the transcript. Commonwealth v. Bavarian Brewing Co. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 772. Rejected confession must be shown. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 299.

Instructions: State v. Thompson [Iowa] 101 N. W. 109. Instructions must appear. Loessin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 715; Johnson v. State [Ark.] 83 S. W. 651. Bill must show facts in order that error from refusal of requested instruction may appear. State v. Matthews [La.] 36 So. 48; State v. Woods, 112 La. 617, 36 So. 626. Answer of court to hypothetical question by juror must be shown to have been applicable to the evidence. People v. Kriesel [Mich.] 98 N. W. 850. Amendments to instructions presumed correct where not shown in record. Mitchell v. State [Ark.] 83 S. W. 1050.

Statement of facts is necessary to authorize review of ruling on motion for continuance (Sanchez v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 504), denial of new trial for newly-discovered evidence (Bailey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 1208), admission of evidence (Id.).

45. An argument by the county attorney that defendant's testimony had been changed since talking with her attorney is not reviewable where her testimony or its character or the manner in which it was changed is not shown. Scott v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 47. A bill of exceptions taken to the admission of evidence is insufficient if it fail to show how the testimony came to be introduced. Elmore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 520. Testimony objected to as brought out by leading questions must be specified. Scoville v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 717.

46. Admission of improper evidence. Wilson v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 924. Bill of exceptions must show motion for new trial and exception to overruling. State v. Block [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1103. Remarks of record contains all the material evidence its sufficiency cannot be considered,[48] and it cannot be assumed, in the absence of the evidence, that the court erred in admitting certain evidence because he instructed the jury to disregard it;[49] but where pleas of not guilty and autrefois acquit are both at issue, and judgment is entered on general verdict of guilty, it cannot be presumed in aid of the judgment, the evidence not being brought up, that none was offered in aid of the plea of autrefois acquit.[50] Questions not raised by the record will not be considered though argued.[51]

Setting out evidence or statement of facts.[52]—A statement of facts or other showing of the evidence is necessary to a review of the sufficiency of the evidence,[53] giving or refusal of instructions,[54] denial of new trial,[55] admission of evidence,[56] refusal of continuance,[57] acceptance of juror,[58] variance,[59] misconduct of jurors.[60] Testimony should be presented in narrative form unless it is material that the court should know how it was given.[61] Written and printed exhibits objected to should be set out, not merely referred to and described by date and general import.[62] The bill of exceptions to the admission of a person's declaration should state as a fact and not merely as a ground of objection that the declarant was an unpardoned convict and hence incompetent to testify.[63]

(§ 17) G. Practice and procedure in reviewing court.[64]—The Federal courts in matters of procedure in error, follow the common law without regard to the practice in the state courts.[65]

Assignments, abstracts, briefs, etc.[66]—In some states, in criminal cases, all questions apparent on the record must be considered, though there are no assignments.[67] Generally, however, errors must be specifically assigned,[68] and a general assignment to several rulings will be overruled if any ruling be correct. eral assignment referring to several instructions will be overruled if any be good.[69] Unless apparent, the assignment must show wherein the error consists,[70] and set out the matters complained of and the rule of law claimed to be violated.[71] In some states, neither brief nor argument is necessary;[72] but the general rule is that in the absence of a brief, the court will only look to the jurisdiction of the court, the sufficiency of the indictment, and the regularity of the judgment;[73] and that exceptions[74] and assignments not referred to in the brief or argument will be treated as abandoned,[75] unless error in the ruling is so glaring or patent that no argument is needed to demonstrate it.[76] The assignment or brief should refer to the portion of the record where the error lies,[77] and point out the exact defect.[78] An additional argument filed for the state will not be stricken where pertinent and called forth by the defense.[79]

Dismissal[80] will be granted for failure to properly bring up the case,[81] or where appellant dies pending the appeal.[82] Dismissed appeals may be reinstated on proper application and showing.[83] Where exceptions are waived after being entered

83. An appeal dismissed for defect in the recognizance will not be reinstated on the affidavit of the defendant that it has been falsified on the records by the clerk and prosecuting attorney, where their affidavits and that of the judge depose otherwise. Saufly v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 709. An appeal dismissed for gross laches in perfecting it will not be heard on a motion for rehearing also subject to the same objection, where no excuse for the delay is suggested, though a defense on the merits is claimed. Brownson v. State [Ark.] 83 S. W. 328.

in the supreme judicial court and a rescript sent to the superior court, it is not too late for that court to entertain a motion for revision of the sentence.[84]

Rehearing.[85]—Rehearings in criminal cases are not granted in North Carolina.[86] A motion for rehearing sent before expiration of the time fixed by rule to a judge of the court for permission to file, but not soon enough for him to forward to the clerk within the prescribed time, is too late.[87]

Interlocutory and provisional proceedings.[88]—A writ of error may be amended in Wisconsin to show that its purpose is to review the order refusing a new trial and not the final judgment as stated therein.[89]

(§ 17) H. Scope of review.[90]—Review is confined to matters made of record[91] and properly assigned and argued[92] and which have been preserved by necessary and proper objection and exception;[93] but some states have relaxed the requirements by requiring a review of apparent error.[94] The review of the refusal of the trial court to discharge defendant or direct a verdict in his favor at the close of the state's evidence, permitted and required by the New Jersey criminal procedure act,[95] brings into question only whether there were then presented facts proper to be submitted to the jury in respect to the charge contained in the indictment.[96] Where there is no bill of exceptions or other memorial of the proceedings required to be shown thereby, nothing is reviewed but the record proper.[97] Review is restricted to the rulings below,[98] and to the theory on which the action below was based;[99] but a correct decision will not be reversed because based on a wrong reason.[1] No neglect of defendant's counsel to introduce available evidence favorable

Boggiano [N. Y.] 72 N. E. 101. Cause of death in trial for murder. Hamby v. State [Ark.] 83 S. W. 322. In Illinois a conviction based on conflicting evidence will not be set aside unless a reasonable and well depends on the credibility of witnesses,[29] even though the evidence be not of the most convincing kind,[30] or preponderates against the verdict,[31] especially where the trial court has approved the verdict.[32] Where the jury impose the penalty, the case must be rare and the abuse flagrant to justify setting it aside on the ground of excessiveness.[33] The admission of evidence subsequently ruled out on its incompetence appearing cannot be deemed prejudicial in a case tried to the court without a jury.[34]

An order of reversal that does not upon its face exclude the possibility that it was based upon an examination of the facts, or made as a matter of discretion, presents no question of law reviewable by the court of appeals of New York.[35] Where the instructions are ambiguous and the verdict can only be accounted for on the theory that the jury were misled as to the law or willfully disregarded it, it cannot be presumed they did the latter.[36]

(§ 17) I. Decision and judgment of the reviewing court.[37]—An equal division of judges makes an affirmance.[38]

Remand for new trial is not necessary if the error is one that requires no retrial of the facts. Thus the judgment may be conformed to the verdict;[39] but generally, where a judgment is reversed for failure of the court to pronounce a legal judgment, the case may be remanded with instructions to render judgment on the verdict.[40] New trial was granted on affirmance in a hard case in North Carolina.[41] In California a new trial need not be directed where the reversal founded doubt arises from all the evidence. McCracken v. People, 209 Ill. 215, 70 N. E. 749. Whether defendant or deceased was the aggressor, whether defendant had good reason to believe deceased intended to kill him and did so believe. State v. Sharp [Mo.] 82 S. W. 134.

29. McNish v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 176. Whether witnesses have been successfully impeached is within province of jury. State v. Sharp [Mo.] 82 S. W. 134. Jury is judge of the weight to be given the testimony of witnesses. State v. Levy [Idaho] 75 P. 227; Rodgers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 1041; Quigg v. People, 211 Ill. 17, 71 N. E. 886.

If there is evidence which, with the inferences which the jury were warranted in reasonably drawing therefrom, supports the judgment rendered on every material point, a reversal is not authorized on the ground that upon certain points such evidence is weak and unsatisfactory. 38. State v. Middleton [S. C.] 48 S. E. 35.

39. In some states judgment will not be reversed for error in the sentence but the court will resentence defendant for the correct length of time as shown by the record. State v. Nunley [Mo.] 83 S. W. 1074; Landermilk v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 1107.

40. State v. Houghton [Or.] 75 P. 822; Smith v. People [Colo.] 75 P. 914; State v. Tyree [Kan.] 77 P. 290; McCormick v. State [Neb.] 99 N. W. 237; State v. Tyree [Kan.] 78 P. 525. For error in the sentence the judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded for a proper sentence. Webster v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 584. One who procures a voidable sentence to be set aside on appeal may thereafter be properly sentenced though he has served part of the voidable sentence. State v. Tyree [Kan.] 77 P. 290.

41. Where the court in affirming the correctness of the proceedings below reverses a prior ruling which it appears may have influenced defendant in making his defense, a new trial will be granted him with permission to establish his defense according to the prior ruling if possible but the later ruling will be adhered to in all subsequent cases. State v. Bell [N. C.] 49 S. E. 163.

extends to the order denying a new trial as well as the judgment.[42] Where there is no evidence to sustain the verdict, and it appears from the record that there is no probability that any could be produced, defendant should be discharged.[43] In New York, where the verdict in a prosecution for homicide is for assault but is not justifiable under the law, deceased having died of the wound, a reversal on appeal does not necessitate defendant's discharge.[44] After affirmance, plaintiff in error cannot procure the setting aside of his conviction by motion on the theory that the record he brought up was incorrect.[45]

(§ 17) J. Proceedings after reversal and remand.[46]—The issuance and filing of the mandate after reversal is not essential to the jurisdiction of the lower court to again try the accused.[47] New trial after reversal is had upon the same indictment in the same court, and the entire proceedings constitute one record.[48]

Questions determined on a prior appeal are the law of the case.[49] Where a conviction of an included offense is reversed, defendant cannot, on motion for new trial, first raise the question that he could not again be tried for the original offense.[50]

§ 18. Summary prosecutions and review thereof.[51]—Prosecutions under municipal ordinances are generally regarded as civil in their nature rather than criminal,[52] and may be founded on any oral or written accusation reasonably informing accused of the nature of the charge.[53] Affidavits and complaints in prosecutions for misdemeanors may be amended.[54] Trial by jury is not necessary,[55] and pleas of guilty may be received.[56] Sentence must conform to the statute.[57] Summary prosecution followed by punishment consisting of hard labor in the public chain gang is not due process of law within the constitution of the United States.[58]

42. Statute requires direction either that new trial be had or defendant discharged [Pen. Code § 1262]. People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, 76 P. 1028.

43. State v. Gordon [Utah] 76 P. 882. Though defendant must be discharged on reversal if it appears no offense has been committed, where reversal is had for defects in the information and defendant appears to be guilty, he must be held for a new trial [Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6532]. State v. Riley [Wash.] 78 P. 1001.

44. People v. Schiavi, 96 App. Div. 479, 89 N. Y. S. 564. The fact that defendant moved for a discharge instead of for a new trial does not prevent the court on appeal from ordering a new trial. People v. Schiavi, 96 App. Div. 479, 89 N. Y. S. 564.

53. Prosecution may be founded on an accusation based on an affidavit. Affidavit held sufficient. Murphy v. State, 119 Ga. 300, 46 S. E. 450. An affidavit upon which an accusation in a city court is founded is not bad for being made before and attested by the clerk of that court. Wright v. Davis [Ga.] 48 S. E. 170. An affidavit upon which is based a prosecution in municipal court is sufficient if it informs accused what acts are complained of and what ordinance has been violated. State v. Thompson, 111 La. 315, 35 So. 582. A proceeding for violating a city ordinance being civil in its character, an information is not necessary. City of Billings v. Brown [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 322.

54. McQueen v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 360.

55. May be waived. Hillier v. State, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 245. The constitutional guaranty of trial of indictments by a jury does not extend to prosecutions for violations of city ordinances. Bray v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 250.

56. A mayor having complete jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor, a plea of guilty entered before him is to be given the same effect as in the courts of higher jurisdiction. Waives jury trial. Hillier v. State, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 245. A plea of guilty in a prosecution begun before a justice of the peace, can properly be put in only when the offense charged is one within his final jurisdiction. McVeigh v. Ripley [Conn.] 58 A. 701.

57. A sentence of a police court that the defendant be imprisoned and pay a fine and stand committed "until the fine and costs of prosecution are paid" is not void because it fails to add the words of the statute, "or secured to be paid or the offender is otherwise discharged by law." Backenstoe v. State, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 178.

58. Jamison v. Wimbish, 130 F. 351.

The record must show all the legal requisites of a legal trial, conviction, and judgment[59] including the offense,[60] the names of the witnesses,[61] the evidence,[62] and judgment.[63]

Review.[64]—In the Indian Territory the filing of the statutory affidavit is a condition precedent to defendant's appeal from a conviction of violation of a city ordinance.[65] In Missouri failure to give a recognizance does not prevent the appeal,[66] and a recognizance filed the same day a motion to dismiss was overruled will be presumed to have been filed first.[67] A motion in the circuit court on appeal to dismiss a complaint for violation of a city ordinance because it charges no offense under the ordinance cannot be disposed of where the ordinance is not before the court,[68] and an unauthenticated paper purporting to be a copy of an ordinance among the papers filed by the police judge is no basis for a constitutional construction of the ordinance.[69] Defendant's unsupported motion will not overcome the presumption of correctness of a justice's return supported by his affidavit, and authorize the court to compel him to amend it.[70] An appeal and trial de novo from a conviction in a city court which had no jurisdiction of the offense does not vest the county court with jurisdiction.[71] On trial before mayor and aldermen on appeal from the mayor it is improper for him to state that there is a variance in the evidence of a witness who testified on both trials.[72] Review is limited by the statute.[73]

On certiorari.[74]—On certiorari to a magistrate on a commitment in the nature of a final judgment, the only question is that of jurisdiction.[75] In Pennsylvania, a special allowance from the court of common pleas must be had for a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace or alderman in a summary conviction for a violation of the Sunday law.[76] No bond is required as a condition precedent to the issuance of the writ in Georgia;[77] and the proceeding will not be dismissed on final hearing for want of bond in New Jersey, where it appears that the judgment must be for the petitioner.[78] The writ may stay execution of the sentence but will not operate to discharge the prisoner. That privilege must be secured as in all other bailable cases.[79] Application for a certiorari to a municipal court need not state that accused has not had a fair trial, etc., as required where the writ runs against a county court.[80] If petitioner makes no move to have a defective return perfected, the petition should be overruled.[81] A certiorari dismissed for failure to serve the officer whose action is sought to be reviewed is not one which cannot be renewed under the statute.[82]

§ 1. Status and disabilities in general.[1]—Rights and duties as between parent and child,[2] powers and proceedings of guardians ad litem,[3] and commitment of infants to penal and reformatory institutions,[4] are elsewhere treated, as is the application to infants of the doctrines of contributory negligence and assumption of risk.[5]

A male person remains a minor until the age of 21 years.[6] In Arkansas the circuit court may remove the disability of minors before they come of age, and give to all their acts the same force and effect as if done by an adult.[7] So also in Alabama, if the minor has no father or mother.[8] A minor is a ward of the court, and entitled to the fullest protection therefrom of all his interests.[9] A minor, if otherwise qualified, may act as appraiser of land to be sold on execution.[10]

§ 2. Custody, protection, support, and earnings.[11]

§ 3. Statutes for the protection of infants.[12]—Infants may be debarred from amusements of immoral tendency[13] or from engaging in dangerous employment.[14]

§ 4. Property and conveyances.[15]—Children who are owners of land cannot be bound by contracts, in relation thereto, made by a step-mother. A natural guardian has no inherent power to bind the infant by contracts relating to realty,[16] or to appeal from orders of the probate court affecting an estate to which the infant is heir.[17] A voluntary deed from an infant to his father is valid between the parties and, though voidable on the ground of infancy, is not void.[18] Under some circumstances an infant may be estopped from setting aside his deed on the ground of infancy.[19] A minor's sale of his property, where his disability has been

The deed was executed when he was at most not more than a month under 21, was wearing a full beard, was a married man and the father of two children, and both he and his mother represented him to be of age. After he came of age he rented the land from the grantor for two successive years, thus confirming the sale. Ingram v. Ison [Ky.] 80 S. W. 787. Willful misrepresentation of age by a minor, by which money is obtained on mortgage from another, who is deceived thereby, is a bar to an avoidance of the mortgage in equity by the borrower, especially where the money is not tendered back. Ostrander v. Quin [Miss.] 36 So. 257. Heirs, who are not informed of their rights, may accept part of the estate after reaching their majority, without being estopped to impeach a void sale of

removed by an order valid on its face, cannot be set aside so as to affect innocent purchasers from his grantee, even though his sale had been induced by fraud.[20] Though an infant owner of real estate may maintain partition, the use, without authority, of the name of an infant owner, in partition proceedings, does not confer jurisdiction over the infant, so as to bind him by the decree rendered; nor is his suit to set aside the partition barred by the statute of limitations, though fraud is an incidental cause of action.[21] In actions for partition, where the legal formalities have not been fulfilled, the partition, in the case of minors, is considered provisional, and may be redemanded for the least lesion.[22] The statute allowing infants one year after becoming of age in which to redeem lands sold for nonpayment of taxes is construed liberally in their favor.[23] In certain cases the vested estates of minors in real property may be sold by order of court of equity.[24]

§ 5. Contracts.[25]—A minor must disaffirm his contract within a reasonable time after coming of age, or be bound thereby.[26] Contracts of infants to sell real estate may be ratified when they come of age, and specific performance then compelled; but so long as they remain infants, specific performance cannot be had against them.[27] All voidable contracts of an infant in reference to personalty may be avoided by the infant at any time during his minority, or on his arrival at full age; nor is he obliged to place the other party in statu quo;[28] but he cannot sue and recover anything thereunder.[29] A nonenforceable contract may be ratified after suit has been commenced thereon.[30] A partial payment made after part of such estate, there being no change of relation to the property on the part of the purchasers on account of any acts of the heirs. Ball v. Clothier, 34 Wash. 299, 75 P. 1099. A minor may sue to recover property inherited from the mother, and illegally sold by the father, and is not estopped by the payment of price to any one for him, not qualified as his tutor, nor by the payment of part of the price to him after reaching his majority, he not being informed of the source whence it comes. George v. Delaney, 111 La. 760, 35 So. 894. Not estopped by doing work in pursuance of a contract by guardian, having done nothing to induce contract. Butler v. Stark, 25 Ky. L. R. 1886, 79 S. Contra: Where an infant seeks to rescind an executed contract, he must first restore all that he has received on that account, if he still has it. Zuck v. Turner Harness & Carriage Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 967. A minor may disaffirm a contract before coming of age and is required to restore "property received remaining in his control after attaining his majority." Code, § 3189. Where he offered in writing to return a team of horses, and the offer was refused and he then sold the team, he was not obliged, when he afterwards came of age to return the team as a prerequisite to disaffirmance. Beickler v. Guenther, 121 Iowa, 419, 96 N. W. 895. An infant cannot repudiate his contract and invoke judicial remedies to restore him to his former position without making or offering restitution. An infant having paid money for the right to take a course of study, received a receipt called a "scholarship." On repudiating the contract he offered to return the "scholarship" and on the trial produced it in court and left it there. This constituted a complete restitution. Jones v. Valentines' School of Telegraphy [Wis.] 99 N. W. 1043.

29. Skinner v. Young [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 464. Upon the disaffirmance of a minor's contract for the purchase of land he is entitled to recover the market value thereof at the time of disaffirmance, less the amount due on the contract, with interest from the time of payment to the time of trial. Beickler v. Guenther, 121 Iowa, 419, 96 N. W. 895.

30. Snyder v. Gericke, 101 Mo. App. 647, 74 S. W. 377.

majority constitutes a ratification of a contract made during minority.[31] Payment to a minor is full satisfaction for services rendered by him, and the parents or guardian cannot recover therefor.[32] The marriage contract of an infant is voidable only at the election of one of the parties.[33] An infant is not liable on an executory contract to furnish him with necessaries. His executed contract is not absolutely void, but only voidable.[34] A minor's contract for other than necessaries, is, if executory, voidable; if executed on both sides he must restore what he received in order to recover what he parted with. If he cannot restore he may rescind and recover what he parted with, unless the other party shows that the contract was fair and free from fraud or over-reaching.[35] A minor making a mortgage on land belonging to him may, if the same be not a purchase-money mortgage, disavow the same.[36] A minor cannot disaffirm his mortgage in part, and affirm a part beneficial to himself.[37] Under a law prohibiting the disaffirmance of a minor's contract, where he has engaged in business as an adult, so as to give other parties reason to believe him capable of contracting, his employment as a farm laborer is not being "engaged in business" so as to preclude him from rescinding a contract for the purchase of land.[38] A minor may sue for recovery of money paid on a contract rescinded by the opposite party.[39]

§ 7. Crimes.[41]—A boy of 13 is presumed incapable of committing crime, and the state must prove him to have the mental capacity of knowing right from wrong in reference to the offense charged.[42] A minor arrived at the age of discretion may be convicted of a violation of the local option laws.[43]

§ 8. Actions by and against.[44]—A minor to whom is refused a transfer from one line of city railway to another is entitled to bring an action, through a guardian ad litem, for the penalty provided by statute.[45] As an infant cannot maintain an action for seduction—that right belonging to him who bears to her the relation of master (ordinarily the parent)—the right of action does not survive her death.[46] Minors are allowed a reasonable time after coming of age to institute suits to defend or enforce their property rights.[47] The prescription of 10 years

R. 515, 76 S. W. 46. A minor heir for good cause shown may be allowed to defend his interest in real property, in actions involving title to same, within two years after his coming of age. Gen. St. 1894, § 5842. Jurisdiction was obtained by publication and the heir was without actual notice of the pendency of the action, before the entry of judgment. Hoyt v. Lightbody [Minn.] 101 N. W. 304. Minors may within a year after attaining their majority institute an action to vacate a judgment of sale of their interest in land, on doing equity in regard to the part of the purchase money received by them [Civ. Code Prac. §§ 391-518]. Taylor v. Webber [Ky.] 83 S. W. 567.

acquirendi causa does not run against infants.[48] Limitations do not run against an infant, save for penalties and forfeitures, until one year after majority.[49] Where a minor's disability ceases during the running of a limitation period, the period allowed him must run concurrently with the limitation period and not successively to it.[50] The doctrine that a person has a reasonable time after reaching majority in which to disaffirm or ratify acts performed during infancy does not give an infant a time other than that specified by limitations.[51] The requirements as to the service of summons on a minor are mandatory and must be strictly followed, or the judgment rendered against him will, as far as his rights are concerned, be void.[52] The court acquires no jurisdiction over a minor defendant by the appointment of a guardian ad litem and the filing of his answer, unless due service of process has been made.[53] No judgment can be rendered against a minor until after a defense by guardian.[54] It is error to render judgment against minors, parties to trespass to try title, without their appearance by guardian;[55] but a default judgment against an infant personally served is voidable only, and where the record is silent as to his nonage, he may not restrain the levy of an execution thereunder, without taking steps to vacate or modify the judgment.[56] While it is error to try a case against a minor, where the guardian has not filed a general denial, the defect is not jurisdictional.[57] The rendering of a judgment against infant defendants, which is void by reason of no defense having been made, is not a ground for appeal, until acted upon by the lower court.[58] A submission to arbitration of an infant's cause by himself, or his next friend, or attorney for him, is absolutely void.[59] Where a suit is brought by a minor, by his next friend, the minor, on arriving at his majority, may at his election, assume the prosecution in his individual capacity.[60] It is the duty of a chancellor to see that infants are not prejudiced by any act or omission of their next friend,[61] and the court is bound to protect the rights of infants notwithstanding the failure of the guardian ad litem to do so.[62] The court will protect infant litigants from oppression or ex-

60. His failure to amend, by striking out the name of the next friend, did not prejudice defendant, plaintiff having recovered a judgment including costs. Bernard v. Pittsburg Coal Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 396.

61. The chancellor may revoke the authority to sue of the next friend, or dismiss suits instituted by him for the ostensible, but not real, interest of the infants. The suits were brought against the protest of the statutory guardian, and apparently for the sole purpose of earning a fee for the next friend. Robinson v. Talbot, 25 Ky. L. R. 1914, 78 S. W. 1108.

62. The court should give infants the benefit of every ground of defense they might have pleaded; and an appellate court should do so even though the infants have not appealed, or assigned, or argued any errors. Parken v. Safford [Fla.] 37 So. 567. The lack of diligence on part of a guardian in producing evidence at a trial will not prevent an infant from obtaining a new trial for newly-discovered evidence. Hagen v. New York, etc., R. Co., 44 Misc. 540, 90 N. Y. S. 125. The court may order reasonable tortion in the matter of costs.[63] Infants have the right to sue by guardian or next friend to recover damages for injuries to the person from the torts of others.[64] In an action by an infant for injury, there can be no recovery for loss of wages.[65] Where an infant has neither natural nor legal guardian, he may recover for loss of time, in suing for damages for personal injury.[66] An infant in an action against his employer cannot recover the cost of things for which his parents are primarily liable, without showing facts rendering himself liable for such cost.[67] Where defendant in partition is an infant and has filed an answer traversing the allegations of the complaint, it is error to direct a compulsory reference over plaintiff's objection.[68] The law permitting a minor to take an appeal from orders of the probate court, within a certain time after arriving at full age, does not prohibit him from taking an appeal by next friend during his minority; nor is an authority from any court necessary to enable a next friend to commence an action on behalf of an infant.[69] But if an infant during his minority sues by guardian, he cannot thereafter institute another suit for the same purpose.[70]

§ 1. Nature of remedy and grounds therefor.[71]—In general, the function of injunction is to compel inaction and of mandamus to compel action.[72]

A special injunction is one granted for the prevention of irreparable injury, when the preventive aid of the court is the ultimate and only relief sought, and the delay in a cause if needed for the protection of a minor's interests, the minor being considered the ward of the court. State v. Sommerville [La.] 36 So. 104.

primary equity involved in the suit.[73] A common injunction is one granted in aid of, or as secondary to, another equity.[74]

An injunction issues against persons and not against property or a business.[75] The right thereto depends upon the facts existing at the time of the rendition of the judgment.[76] The motive of defendant is immaterial.[77] The fact that the chancellor acts as "of grace" does not authorize him to refuse an injunction to which a person has shown himself clearly entitled.[78]

As a general rule injunction will only issue where there is an unquestionable right,[79] and where irreparable injury will result from the acts complained of,[80] for which there is no adequate remedy at law.[81] The remedy at law must be plain and

Richards [Ky.] 83 S. W. 154. To restrain separate actions at law against three insurance companies on policies covering same building where policies are same, facts substantially identical, and same defense is interposed, and where the liability of the companies is concurrent since there can be but one true fixation of the amount of loss. Bill also alleged false bookkeeping. Tisdale v. Insurance Co. [Miss.] 36 So. 568. To prevent taking sufficient ice from complainant's pond to fill icehouse. Oliphant v. Richman [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 241. To restrain enforcement of foreign judgment, where complainant alleged that she had no adequate remedy at law and it did not appear that she had not lost her rights under statute giving her relief, which was not properly pleaded. Weed v. Hunt [V] 56 A. 980. To suppress adjoining house of ill fame. Ingersoll v. Rousseau, 35 Wash. 92, 75 P. 513.

Injunction refused: To prevent proceedings in a probate court to recover a debt, the discharge of which it is alleged was obtained by undue influence. Norwood v. Tyson [Ala.] 36 So. 370. Bill held proper invocation of jurisdiction of equity to compel specific performance of contract and hence judgment dissolving temporary injunction and dismissing bill for want of equity was erroneous. Id. To prevent seizure and sale of personalty for payment of void tax. City of Jacksonville v. Massey Business College [Fla.] 36 So. 432. To prevent county commissioners from proceeding against tax collector for contempt for failure to appear before them with his books and papers. Sayer v. Brown, 119 Ga. 539, 46 S. E. 649. To prevent transfer of notes not due, to which plaintiff alleges he has a good defense, to a bona fide holder, in absence of allegation of insolvency of payee, or to prevent suit on notes past due, where no relief is prayed on ground of avoiding multiplicity of suits. Detwiler v. Bainbridge Grocery Co., 119 Ga. 981, 47 S. E. 553. To prevent construction of railroad by defendant for reason that it will be several feet lower than the one which it desires to construct over practically the same line. Toledo, St. L. & N. O. T. Co. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 208 Ill. 623, 70 N. E. 715. Injunction to restrain city from enforcing ordinance repealing ordinance for purchase of reservoir site held not necessary to prevent proceeds of sale of bonds for that purpose passing into sinking fund, and thus being put beyond reach of vendors in action on contract. Callaway v. Baltimore [Md.] 57 A. 661. To restrain city, which has repudiated contract for lighting streets, from entering into new contract with another. Riker v. Oakland Circuit Judge [Mich.] 101 N. W. 229. To prevent railway company from taking possession of street under alleged void resolution, on ground that plaintiff is entitled to damages which have not been paid. Vanderburgh v. Minneapolis [Minn.] 100 N. W. 668. To prevent breach of contract in regard to feeding and watering cattle. Brown v. Reed [Neb.] 100 N. W. 143. No question of plaintiff's duty to support its elevated railroad open to defendant making excavation in street under contract with city whereby it agreed to protect such structure from injury. Evidence sufficient to vacate temporary injunction, it not being shown that defendant's method of protection was insufficient. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. v. Gallagher, 95 App. Div. 632, 89 N. Y. S. 152. To compel protection of elevated railroad by contractor excavating in street. If plaintiff compelled to protect its own railroad, it will be able to recover damages if it is not bound to so protect it in the first instance. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. v. Gallagher, 44 Misc. 536, 90 N. Y. S. 104. To prevent removal of personalty in absence of allegation that defendant is insolvent. Kistler v. Weaver, 135 N. C. 388, 47 S. E. 478. To restrain defendant from operating gas well under lease from complainant's grantor, where ejectment will lie. Hicks v. American Natural Gas Co., 207 Pa. 570, 57 A. 55. To restrain publication of result of local option election. Robinson v. Wingate [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1067.

83. No legal remedy where exists wholly in discretion of the court. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Greenville, 59 Ohio St. 487, 69 N. E. 976.

84. Fact that defendants might be required to give bond to keep the peace not such a remedy. Underhill v. Murphy, 25 Ky. L. R. 1731, 78 S. W. 482. See post, § 2 J. Fact that criminal law provides adequate punishment immaterial. Chambers v. Haskell, 25 Ky. L. R. 1707, 78 S. W. 478.

quate because requiring a multitude of suits,[85] or because defendant is insolvent,[86] or because the resulting damages will not be susceptible of computation.[87]

An injury may be irreparable because the party cannot be adequately compensated therefor by damages,[88] or because the damages cannot be measured by any certain pecuniary standard,[89] or because defendant is insolvent.[90]

The writ will be refused where greater injury will result to defendant by granting it than will result to complainant by refusing it,[91] or where defendant's injury will be greater than complainant's resulting benefit;[92] but this rule has no application where the act complained of is in itself, as well as in its incidents, tortious.[93] Thus equity will not refuse to protect one in the possession and enjoyment of his property merely because his right is less valuable to him than the power to destroy it may be to another, or the public.[94]

85. Sale of nontransferable excursion tickets by brokers. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Caffrey, 128 F. 770. Equity will enjoin to prevent a multiplicity of suits between two persons only where the whole controversy arises out of the same matter, has been settled at law, and further litigation, which seems purely vexatious, is persisted in. Suit to restrain removal of coal causing subsidence of plaintiff's land cannot be maintained on above ground as each trespass is distinct cause of action. Lloyd v. Catlin Coal Co., 210 Ill. 460, 71 N. E. 335. Laying tracks in street under void enactment of city council, which was enacted over protest of property owners and without a hearing. Holst v. Where injury is not susceptible of complete pecuniary compensation. Christman v. Howe [Ind.] 70 N. E. 809. Destruction of home and impairment of health irreparable injuries. Redd v. Edna Cotton Mills [N. C.] 48 S. E. 761.

89. Lloyd v. Catlin Coal Co., 210 Ill. 460, 71 N. E. 335. Interference with navigation by placing pound nets in navigable stream. Reyburn v. Sawyer, 135 N. C. 328, 47 S. E. 761. Issued to prevent the threatened invasion by a stranger of a tract on which complainant had the exclusive right to bore for oil and gas, for the purpose of extracting gas and oil without complainant's consent, since damages would be difficult of ascertainment. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Tate [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 189.

90. Reyburn v. Sawyer, 135 N. C. 328, 47 S. E. 761. Cutting trees, and working turpentine trees. Kistler v. Weaver, 135 N. C. 388, 47 S. E. 478. Evidence in suit to restrain cutting of timber sufficient to sustain finding that defendant was not insolvent and injury from refusing it would not be irreparable. Not brought under timber cutter's act. Stonecipher v. Wilson, 120 Ga. 465, 47 S. E. 936.

91. Lloyd v. Catlin Coal Co., 210 Ill. 460, 71 N. E. 335; Sullivan v. Jones & L. Steel Co., 208 Pa. 540, 57 A. 1065.

92. Lloyd v. Catlin Coal Co., 210 Ill. 460, 71 N. E. 335. The mining of coal under complainant's land will not be enjoined when it cannot be determined from the evidence whether it will cause a subsidence and injury to complainant and no rule appears by which the court can determine in what manner the work can be done so as to prevent such injury. Id. Construction of passageway above alley will not be enjoined nor removal of those already constructed compelled, though they tend to retain disagreeable odors in alley to plaintiff's annoyance, where irreparable damage to defendant would result. May be compelled to abate nuisance, if it is such. Washington Lodge, I. O. O. F. v. Frelinghuysen [Mich.] 101 N. W. 569.

93. Sullivan v. Jones & L. Steel Co., 208 Pa. 540, 57 A. 1065.

94. Operation of blast furnaces so as to emit ore dust enjoined. Sullivan v. Jones & L. Steel Co., 208 Pa. 540, 57 A. 1065.

Injunction will not issue to allay mere apprehensions of injury,[95] nor to prevent an imaginative or fanciful wrong or injury.[96]

Where defendant is solvent, no injunction can be predicated on acts done before the suit is commenced.[97] In order that mere threats may be the basis of an injunction they must be threats to do a wrong which is within the power of a court of equity to correct.[98] Where an intention to commit the acts complained of is admitted, the writ, if otherwise proper, may issue before their actual commission.[99] Preventive injunctions necessarily operate upon unperformed and unexecuted acts, and prevent threatened but nonexistent injuries.[1] In granting them, the court does not prescribe a rule of civil conduct, or invade the province of the law-making body, but merely enforces rules prescribed by organic or statute law, or that arise naturally and regulate all men.[2]

The right to injunction may be barred by laches.[3]

§ 2. Who and what may be enjoined. A. In general.[4]—The various grounds whereon equity in general may be invoked[5] and the general nature and office of injunctions[6] have already been discussed. Injunction as a statutory remedy pertains to the particular subject-matter or right whereto the statute relates.[7]

(§ 2) B. Actions or proceedings.[8]—The bringing of actions or suits may be restrained to work out any principle of equitable relief like multiplicity,[9] vexation, and groundlessness;[10] but action will not be enjoined at the instance of parties having a perfect defense thereto at law,[11] nor will one legally liable be protected

95. Petition for injunction to prevent sale of nontransferable tickets by brokers held, when aided by appearance of defendants, to make out concrete case and to present live issue as to tickets then held by brokers or thereafter issued. Schubach v. McDonald, 179 Mo. 163, 78 S. W. 1020. Not to restrain publication of result of local option election because action in promulgating void result might impel others to use it to detriment of private interests. Robinson v. Wingate [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1067. Will not be granted on a hearing on demurrer to an answer denying any intention to do the thing complained of. Fritter v. Bohl, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 365. An action to enjoin the construction of a system of sewers will not lie where it is averred in the answer that the contract for the work has been canceled for failure to comply with the Burns Law. Id.

96. Will not restrain location of cemetery next to plaintiff's land unless it is shown to be a nuisance. Elliott v. Ferguson [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 56.

97. Cutting timber. North Lumber Co. v. Gary [Miss.] 36 So. 2. Not to enjoin erection of sewer and water pipes by owner of upper story of building. Christman v. Howe [Ind.] 70 N. E. 809. Will not lie to prevent city from enforcing alleged void resolution vacating certain streets. Vanderburgh v. Minneapolis [Minn.] 100 N. W. 668.

98. Forbes v. Carl [Iowa] 101 N. W. 100. Will not issue at the instance of a lessee not in possession and not yet entitled thereto, to enjoin a purchaser from the lessor from interfering with an attempt to take possession in the future. Purchaser solvent and with notice of lessee's rights. Id.

99. Brauer v. Baltimore Refrigerating & Heating Co. [Md.] 58 A. 21.

1. Contention that there can be no concrete case until acts have been committed unsound. Will issue to prevent sale of nontransferable tickets by brokers, though tickets not yet issued. Schubach v. McDonald, 179 Mo. 163, 78 S. W. 1020.

2. Schubach v. McDonald, 179 Mo. 163, 78 S. W. 1020.

3. To restrain city from using land, claimed by defendant under lease from it, as highway. Lowery v. Pekin, 210 Ill. 575, 71 N. E. 626. Plaintiff not estopped by laches to enjoin use of trade name for cigars. Sartor v. Schaden [Iowa] 101 N. W. 511. Barred. To restrain construction of passageways connecting parts of hotel and to compel removal of those constructed. Washington Lodge No. 54, I. O. O. F. v. Frelinghuysen [Mich.] 101 N. W. 569.

9, 10. Suits which are vexatious, groundless, and not prosecuted in good faith. To recover penalty provided by void statute for failure to send 542 telegrams for 15 cents each. Jordon v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Kan.] 76 P. 396.

11. Action by owners of abutting vacant lots for damages for change of street grade will not be enjoined on ground that there is no liability except in case of lots having building thereon. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. McCulley [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 229. A defendant to a suit must set up all his defenses therein, and cannot file an independent suit in the same court setting up such matters and asking that the action of his adversary be enjoined because of them. Ga. Civ. Code 1895, § 4839. Defenses of subrogation, while he works out a right to be indemnified against such liability,[12] nor where the doing of equity on complainant's part will discontinue the other suit.[13] It is proper to grant injunction in aid of, or ancillary to, actions at law, e. g., to restrain the setting up of a defense at law which is inequitable[14] or to maintain the status quo.[15] None will issue to prevent the bringing of a suit for injunction against complainant.[16] Enforcement of a judgment will not be restrained to permit the set-off of a prospective judgment which will be amply secured.[17] Injunction will issue to prevent the enforcement of a foreign judgment obtained through accident and mistake where it does not appear that there is an adequate remedy at law.[18]

Injunction will not issue when the defendant will thereby be put in conflict with the order of another court,[19] nor will equity interfere with matters over which another court is given exclusive jurisdiction.[20]

Statutes in some states provide that no injunction shall issue to stay the trial of a personal action in a court of law until the party applying therefor shall execute a bond to the plaintiff in such law action.[21]

By statute, federal courts are forbidden to grant a writ of injunction to stay proceedings in state courts, except where authorized by the bankruptcy act.[22] This estoppel and forgery in suit for land. McCall v. Fry [Ga.] 48 S. E. 200.

12. Abutting owners will not be enjoined from suing railroad company for changing street grade, without ordinance authorizing it, because city has contracted to assume liability for damages resulting from change. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. Lewis [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 227; United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. McCulley [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 229.

13. Action to foreclose trust deed when it appears from complainant's own showing that the proceedings would be discontinued if he would pay what he admits to be due, and avers his willingness and ability to pay. Injunction properly dissolved where it appears that plaintiff did not make tender or meet offer, on hearing, to accept part of sum admitted to be due and discontinue foreclosure proceedings. Meetz v. Mohr, 141 Cal. 667, 75 P. 298.

14. Executrix restrained from setting up, as defense to action on claim, a decree of the surrogate barring all claims not duly verified and presented within a specified time and which cannot be collaterally attacked, on complainant showing a waiver of verification of his claim which was presented before such decree. Seymour v. Goodwin [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 93.

15. Making a change of the subject-matter of a litigation pending an appeal, which might render the judgment of the appellate court nugatory when pronounced. Defendant restrained from occupying street with railway tracks pending appeal of complainant, who claimed exclusive rights, where law court could not grant relief because not in session. People's Traction Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 597. Property rights will not be disturbed by a preliminary injunction pending trial of the right. See post, § 4.

16. Presumed that no application will be allowed without sufficient showing of right. Robertson v. Montgomery Baseball Ass'n [Ala.] 37 So. 388.

17. Defendant judgment creditor was insolvent but plaintiff had valid attachment lien on land and a bond with good surety for performance of contract on which complainant's action is based. Montgomery Water Power Co. v. Chapman, 128 F. 197.

18. Where plaintiff's attorney was not notified by clerk of dissolution of previous injunction restraining prosecution of suit, in accordance with his agreement with clerk to do so. Statute giving remedy at law not pleaded. Weed v. Hunt [Vt.] 56 A. 980.

19. A private citizen cannot maintain a bill to restrain the enforcement of a writ of mandamus to compel a state treasurer to pay the salary of a public officer under an act held constitutional, on the ground that the judges issuing the writ had no authority to sit in the matter. Newlin v. Harris [Pa.] 58 A. 925. Mandamus will not lie to compel a board of county commissioners to order the collection of a railroad aid tax which it has been enjoined from enforcing. Even if injunction restraining board of county commissioners from enforcing railroad aid tax and county auditor and treasurer from collecting it are void as to commissioners, being valid as to auditor and treasurer it furnishes defense to mandamus against board to order its collection. State v. Board of Com'rs, 162 Ind. 580, 70 N. E. 373.

20. Will not enjoin qualification of executrix named in will, or restrain her from prosecuting motion made to county court to remove administrator appointed during her insanity, where probate jurisdiction is exclusively vested in such court. Stone v. Simmons [W. Va.] 48 S. E. 841.

21. Injunction by bondholders to restrain removal of machinery from factory by vendor pending determination of rights of bondholders whose bonds were secured by factory, held not to have effect of staying action of replevin by vendor to recover machinery [Mich. Comp. Laws, § 102]. American Foundry & Machinery Co. v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge [Mich.] 101 N. W. 210.

22. U. S. Rev. St. § 720; U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 581. Massie v. Buck [C. C. A.] 128 F. 27. Neither fact that plaintiff, after removal of his suit to federal court, dismissed it without prejudice and instituted new suit act does not prevent them from enjoining proceedings in state courts when such remedy is ancillary to granting relief in a case of which the federal court has jurisdiction,[23] nor does it apply to proceedings not pending, but merely threatened.[24] The federal court has jurisdiction, under such act, to restrain a suit by a claimant against a trustee in bankruptcy for conversion of the proceeds of goods sold by order of the court.[25]

A state court has no jurisdiction to enjoin actions or proceedings in a federal court, or to enjoin parties from commencing or continuing them.[26]

(§ 2) C. Public, official, and municipal acts[27] that are wrongful or unlawful may be restrained, as where police surveillance is made a trespass,[28] or a drainage scheme will collect surface water and irreparably damage land,[29] or part of a public park will be used as a public highway.[30] Injunction may issue to restrain a breach of contract on the part of a city,[31] but it will not be so restrained as to disable the city to serve the public interests and needs.[32]

Acts of boards or officers[33] exercising judicial discretion vested in them will not be controlled.[34] Injunction will also lie to prevent the exercise of duties which are purely ministerial,[35] and it may also restrain public officers and boards from exercising unconstitutional powers,[36] but not excesses of authority adequately in state court on same cause of action, nor that he reduced damages claimed below amount necessary to give federal court jurisdiction, prevents operation of statute. Texas Cotton Products Co. v. Starnes, 128 F. 183. Federal court having taken jurisdiction of creditor's suit against lessee of street railway and appointed receiver cannot enjoin prosecution of suit by stockholders of lessor to enjoin extension of lease on ground of fraud, since suit does not interfere with possession of property by federal court, or its management by receivers, nor affect any issue in creditor's suit. Guaranty Trust Co. v. North Chicago St. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 801.

23. May enjoin defendant from selling or disposing of lands purchased at sheriff's sale in suit to set aside sheriff's deed of which it has jurisdiction. Massie v. Buck [C. C. A.] 128 F. 27. Applies to criminal proceedings instituted by city for violation of ordinance requiring electric line to keep flagmen at crossings. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Catlettsburg, 129 F. 421. The fact that a bill in a state court incidentally prays for relief which might, if granted, interfere with the constructive possession of property by receivers of a federal court will not authorize its prosecution to be enjoined, where the principal relief sought does not trench on the jurisdiction of the latter court. Guaranty Trust Co. v. North Chicago St. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 801.

24. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Catlettsburg, 129 F. 421.

25. Claimant sold goods to bankrupts and after filing petition sought to rescind for fraud. In re Mertens, 131 F. 507.

26. Enjoining litigants is, in effect, enjoining court. Cannot be done though state court has jurisdiction of all the parties to proceeding in federal court. Attempt to enjoin contempt proceedings. Johnstown Min. Co. v. Morse, 44 Misc. 504, 90 N. Y. S. 107.

27. See 2 Curr. L. 408.

28. To restrain police captain from keeping officers permanently in licensed saloon on mere suspicion that gambling is being carried on there. Hale v. Burns, 44 Misc. 1, 89 N. Y. S. 711. From keeping officers in front of and in hotel who interfered with hotel business. Hertz v. McDermott, 45 Misc. 28, 90 N. Y. S. 803.

30. Abutter suing need not show damage. Village of Riverside v. Maclean, 210 Ill. 308, 71 N. E. 408.

31. Injunction issued to restrain city from violating contract allowing complainant to maintain telephone line in streets. Village of London Mills v. White, 208 Ill. 289, 70 N. E. 313.

32. City will not be restrained from repudiating contract for lighting and letting new one. Riker v. Oakland Circuit Judge [Mich.] 101 N. W. 229.

33. See 2 Curr. L. 408.

34. Right of board of public works of Virginia to determine whether, and how, one railroad shall cross another. Southern R. Co. v. Washington, etc., R. Co., 102 Va. 483, 46 S. E. 784; Bennett v. Richards [Ky.] 83 S. W. 154. Will not enjoin the discharge of duties imposed upon the executive branch of the government. Zevely v. Weimer [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 941. Before an injunction can issue to restrain the secretary of the interior or those acting under him from enforcing the right given the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations to compel traders to take out licenses it must appear that he has no authority to exercise discretion in the premises. Id.

35. To require election judges to correct returns by adding votes omitted by mistake or oversight, to require election commissioners to canvas and count votes and certify them to secretary of state, there being no claim of fraud or improper conduct. Bennett v. Richards [Ky.] 83 S. W. 154.

36. Removal of county seat restrained because consent of people had not been obtained by requisite constitutional majority. Lindsay v. Allen [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 171. A state railroad commission will be enjoined from enforcing unauthorized orders interfering with interstate commerce. Rosen-remediable at law, such as invalid contempt proceedings.[37] Threatened acts in alleged excess of authority given by a board may be restrained until the question be legally settled.[38]

Elections and right to office.[39]—As a general rule equity will not interfere in any matter growing out of an election which may be settled by a contest provided for by statute.[40] It may do so, however, where the property or person of a citizen is imperiled under the guise of an unauthorized election.[41] The right to office, or of the nomination to an office, or the acts of public officers in the discharge of their duties, cannot be regulated or controlled by injunction.[42] The writ will not issue to restrain the removal of one from a public office,[43] nor to prevent the incumbent of an office from exercising the functions thereof pending a suit to determine his right thereto.[44] But the officer having the apparent title will be protected by injunction from interference by rival claimants.[45]

Equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin the publication of the result of a local option election, either on the ground of its invalidity, or because of unfairness in conducting it, even where irreparable injury to property in case of such publication is alleged.[46] If it can interfere at all, complainant must await the attempted enforcement of the law.[47]

In a proceeding to obtain for relator the office of member of the city council, other members cannot be enjoined from interfering with his enjoyment of the office, since it will be presumed that, when the courts have decided that he is entitled thereto, they will no longer do so.[48]

baum Grain Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 130 F. 46. May issue on petition of taxpayers to restrain city officers who are about to expend money or incur obligations purporting to bind the city in a manner beyond its power. Mass. Rev. Laws, c. 25, § 100. To restrain mayor from ordering repairs to streets. Draper v. Fall River, 185 Mass. 142, 69 N. E. 1068. Will lie to prevent unauthorized acts by county officers on petition for a change of a county seat. To prevent auditor and commissioners from taking action on petition for removal. Remedy at law by election contest inadequate. Gile v. Stegner [Minn.] 100 N. W. 101.

37. County commissioners will not be enjoined from proceeding against the tax collector for contempt for failure to appear before them with his books and papers, since, if they have no authority to do so, he has ample remedy at law to prevent its collection. Remedies under Ga. Pol. Code, § 419. Sayer v. Brown, 119 Ga. 539, 46 S. E. 649.

39. See 2 Curr. L. 412.

40. Will not enjoin ordinary from proclaiming result of an election under Georgia local option liquor law on ground that notice thereof was not published for the prescribed time. Ogburn v. Elmore [Ga.] 48 S. E. 702.

41. Ogburn v. Elmore [Ga.] 48 S. E. 702.

42. Injunction prohibiting secretary of state from certifying name of one as nominee to office held void for want of jurisdiction. People v. Rose, 211 Ill. 259, 71 N. E. 1125. Equity held to have no jurisdiction to restrain a city clerk from putting on the official ballot the names of persons mentioned in certificates of nomination filed with him. City of Annapolis v. Gadd, 97 Md. 734, 57 A. 941. The eligibility of a person to an office cannot be raised in a suit for an injunction restraining election commissioners from issuing a certificate of election to him, where they have no power to pass upon the question. Smith v. Doyle, 25 Ky. L. R. 958, 76 S. W. 519.

The remedy is quo warranto which see, 2 Curr. L. 1377; and see, also, Officers and Public Employes, 2 Curr. L. 1069.

43. Commissioners will not be restrained from removing keeper of penitentiary under N. Y. Laws 1902, p. 387, c. 127, though such act is invalid. People v. Howe, 177 N. Y. 499, 69 N. E. 1114. Authorities reviewed.

44. Incumbent will not be enjoined from exercising the functions thereof pending quo warranto to try title thereto. State v. Board of Deputy State Sup'rs [Ohio] 71 N. E. 717.

45. Members of boards attempted to be abolished enjoined from interfering with new board appointed to take their place, pending determination of validity of statute under which change was made. State v. Board of Deputy State Sup'rs. [Ohio] 71 N. E. 717.

46. Suit to contest must be brought under statute relating to contests. No injury results from mere publication and remedy too drastic in operation and far-reaching in results. Robinson v. Wingate [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1067; affirmed [Tex.] 83 S. W. 182.

47. Whether injunction will then lie under the Texas statutes (Rev. St. 1895, § 2989) not decided. Robinson v. Wingate [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1067; affirmed [Tex.] 83 S. W. 182.

48. State v. Grace [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 485.

Taxes.[49]—As a general rule, injunction will not issue to prevent the collection of taxes,[50] but it will issue to prevent an assessment for taxation made on unconstitutional principles.[51] In such case no payment or tender of any amount is a necessary prerequisite to suit.[52] It will not lie to restrain the collection of an assessment for a local improvement unless the action of the municipal authorities has been fraudulent or unless the assessment is so excessive as to clearly exceed the benefits to the property.[53]

A suit to restrain the removal of a county seat because the consent of the people has not been obtained by the requisite constitutional majority does not fall under the class of contested election cases.[54]

(§ 2) D. Enforcement of statutes or ordinances[55] may be restrained if they are invalid.[56]

(§ 2) E. Exercise of right of eminent domain[57] without prior compliance with the requirements of law[58] will be prevented; thus if payment be prerequisite, to prevent taking before ascertaining and at least paying the award into court.[59] A statutory procedure for the ascertainment of damages suffered by a landowner who has permitted a right of way over his land to be taken without previous compensation will be enjoined, when the right to compensation is denied, until such right is determined in the injunction proceedings.[60]

(§ 2) F. Acts affecting rights in highways and public or quasi public places.[61]—An injunction will lie at the instance of an abutting property owner to

It may do so to prevent a multiplicity of suits. Ordinance fixing rates to be charged by gas company to consumers. Mills v. Chicago, 127 F. 731. Equity will entertain jurisdiction to restrain, as impairing contract obligations, the enforcement of a municipal ordinance reducing rates of fare on a section only of a consolidated street railway line, in view of the public interests, and of the controversies, confusion, risks, and multiplicity of suits which would necessarily result from resisting its enforcement. City of Cleveland v. Cleveland City R. Co., 194 U. S. 517, 48 Law. Ed. 1102.

58. Taking land for road without compensation. Wenger v. Fisher [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 695. Officers charged with the establishment and maintenance of roads, the surveyor of roads, and the road contractor, are proper parties defendant to a bill for an injunction restraining the laying out of a road through plaintiff's land without first complying with the statutory requirements as to compensation. Id. To restrain a city from condemning streets or alleys across railroad tracks pending a determination of the question whether such condemnation will unnecessarily interfere with their reasonable use, where, in such event, no right of condemnation exists. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Greenville, 69 Ohio St. 487, 69 N. E. 976.

59. Payment must first be made under Wash. Const. art. 1, § 16. Where city attempts to change grade of street so as to permanently damage plaintiff without providing for, or offering to pay, damages. Swope v. Seattle, 35 Wash. 69, 76 P. 517. To prevent building of railroad across plaintiff's right of way, until statutory requirements relating to condemnation are complied with [S. C. prevent an interference with his property rights in the street,[62] or park[63] when such acts constitute a public nuisance, and complainant is specially injured thereby,[64] but not where a servitude contemplated when the highway was taken is newly exercised, e. g., a street railway.[65]

The mere anticipation of future breaches and injuries resulting therefrom is insufficient.[66] It will issue to prevent the laying of street railway tracks in a street under a void ordinance.[67] Where consent of the owners of a majority of the foot frontage on a street in which it is proposed to lay a street railway is necessary to such action, an abutting owner who has not consented thereto may enjoin its construction if such consent has not been obtained.[68] If the requisite number of consents have been obtained, a consenting abutter cannot prevent a change of route, unless such change is alleged and proved to have worked a fraud on him.[69]

Injunction is the proper remedy to prevent interference with and obstruction of the exercise of the statutory right of natural gas companies to lay pipes through cities,[70] or to prevent the tearing up or removing of a track lawfully laid,[71] but not to prevent the repeal of valid ordinances granting permission to occupy the streets.[72]

The owner of land who has dedicated it for cemetery purposes will be restrained from defacing or meddling with graves or monuments therein at the instance of anyone having friends or relatives buried there.[73]

It will also issue to aid a railroad company in keeping its tracks clear of trespassers who, by their constant presence, endanger the lives of the public.[74] Complainant in such case has no adequate remedy at law regardless of whether defendant is adequately able to respond in damages or not.[75]

(§ 2) G. Acts of quasi public and private corporations or associations.[76]—Injunction will issue at the instance of stockholders of a corporation, who are injured thereby, to prevent the others from proceeding illegally and wrongfully.[77] It will not lie unless it affirmatively appears that the plaintiff has exhausted all the remedies provided by the constitution and by-laws of the organization.[78] Unsecured creditors cannot obtain an injunction against a corporation to deprive it of its assets, and to administer and distribute them, solely on the ground of its insolvency.[79]

A state court cannot issue an injunction against a national banking association before final judgment.[80] A foreign corporation may be enjoined only as to acts within the state.[81]

A public service gas company may be restrained from shutting off the city's supply of gas for failure to pay an unreasonable price,[82] or a telephone company from exacting an illegal rate.[83]

(§ 2) H. Breach or enforcement of contract or of trust.[84]—Injunction will not ordinarily lie to compel specific performance of a contract where complainant has an adequate remedy at law by way of an action for damages for its breach.[85] Recently, however, it has been done to prevent the violation of express negative covenants, even though such violation would have occasioned no substantial injury or though there was an adequate remedy at law.[86] It will not be denied merely because the contract is one which cannot be specifically enforced,[87] but it will not issue to prevent breach of a contract against public policy.[88] Where the bill alleges that a breach of the contract will result in injury which cannot be adequately compensated in damages, it is not necessary to allege that defendant is insolvent.[89] One may be enjoined from violating a contract by acts which in any view would exceed his right.[90] In the absence of anything in a contract to the contrary, the injured party has the option to proceed either in law or in equity.[91]

In case of covenants respecting real property, violation will be restrained.[92]

Executors will, at the suit of devisees, be enjoined from conveying property of their testator which they have no authority to dispose of under the will.[93]

Third persons may be enjoined from causing a covenantor to violate his contract by employing him in a similar business,[94] or otherwise unfairly and fraudulently interfering with performance.[95] Injunction also lies against a party, who has contracted to do for complainant exclusively some act calling for the exercise of skill or artistic capacity, from giving his services to anyone else,[96] and the assignee of a trade secret may enjoin employes of the assignor from disclosing or using the same.[97]

(§ 2) I. Interference with property, business, or comfort of private persons.[98]—It is against the policy of the law to restrain industries and such enterprises as tend to develop the country and its resources,[99] nor will the court impair the right of the owner to the use of his property further than may be necessary to protect the rights of the parties.[1]

Injunction may issue to protect intangible as well as tangible property rights, including the right to carry on business and to fulfill contracts made in the course thereof.[2] Thus it will issue to prevent strikers from interfering with plaintiff's business and property and indulging in violence toward, and intimidation of,

94. By employing him as the manager of a similar business, with knowledge that the other party is thereby being injured and obtaining a corresponding advantage to themselves in their business. Fleckenstein Bros. Co. v. Fleckenstein [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 1025. Complainant held entitled to injunction restraining defendant from breach of contract not to engage in fish business, and restraining third person from benefiting in any way by his services and experience in such business. Booth & Co. v. Davis, 127 F. 875, modified Davis v. Booth & Co., 131 F. 31. Is no defense that such third person hired him in ignorance of the contract, and will suffer damage if deprived of his services. Id. Injunction, in so far as it concerns the third person, should be limited to his actions in regard to defendant. Davis v. Booth & Co. [C. C. A.] 131 F. 31, modifying Booth & Co. v. Davis, 127 F. 875.

95. By inducing merchants to sell trading stamps in violation of their contracts with plaintiff, and by selling stamps to other merchants, and by false and fraudulent advertising. his employes.[3] None will issue where the title to personalty is the sole question involved.[4]

Equity will not enjoin threatened trespasses upon the person, even though they infringe upon the constitutional rights of life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness.[5]

Trade names or reputations, though not registered or properly selected as trade marks, may be protected.[6] This will not be done, however, where plaintiff has himself been guilty of unfair competition, or such fraud as disentitles him to relief in equity.[7]

Waste may be prevented by injunction,[8] also the destruction of property in an attempt to enforce a supposed right.[9] By statute in New York, the owner of property sold for taxes may, after notice of the sale, be restrained from despoiling the same.[10]

Nuisance.[11]—Equity has original jurisdiction to restrain a nuisance.[12] An injunction will issue to restrain the maintenance of a private nuisance.[13] The fact that the persons maintaining it did not know that it was offensive to complainant and that, had they known it, they would have endeavored to minimize it as far as possible,[14] or the mere fact that it is profitable to the person maintaining it, is no defense.[15] Where the evidence does not satisfy the court that the facts complained of constitute a nuisance, injunction will not issue until such fact has been passed upon by a jury.[16] But where the facts clearly and certainly establish its existence, the rule is otherwise.[17] The petition in a suit to enjoin a threatened nuisance must allege such facts as show with cogency, clearness, and reasonable certainty that the acts threatened will, if committed, bring into existence a nuisance, and that complainants will suffer irreparable injury thereby.[18] Injunction will also lie to protect one suffering private injury or annoyance from that which is a public nuisance.[19] The fact that a landowner purchases the property after the establishment of such nuisance, which is a continuing one,[20] or that the municipal authorities tolerate its continuance, is immaterial.[21] So is a change therein which does not do away with the injury.[22]

Trespass.[23]—Injunction will not issue to prevent a mere threatened trespass upon real estate,[24] but it will do so where, by reason of the continuous character of the threatened invasion, many actions at law would be necessary, in none of which could compensation for the whole wrong be obtained,[25] or where the threatened trespass will work irreparable injury to the property itself, amounting essentially to a destruction thereof,[26] or where defendant is insolvent.[27] Complainant must show an intention to continue the injurious acts and a reasonable ground to apprehend that defendant can do so.[28] Injunction will not issue to restrain the cutting of timber by one who is solvent and is in possession of the property under a bona fide claim of title, where no other action of any kind is pending to which the relief asked is ancillary.[29] By statute in some states it is not necessary to allege defendant's insolvency where the trespass is continuous, or is the cutting or destruction of timber trees.[30] Such acts have been held not to deprive the court of the discretion to require defendant to give bond to secure plaintiff's damages, or to appoint a receiver, instead of issuing an injunction.[31] By statute in Georgia, injunction to prevent the cutting of timber will only issue to one having perfect title, in the absence of an allegation of insolvency or of irreparable injury.[32] The title required is a duly executed paper one, the exhibition of which will show both the right of possession and the right of property in plaintiff.[33]

In states where it is the duty of the owner of land to fence it, injunction will not issue to prevent one from permitting cattle to wander on the unfenced land of another,[34] but it will issue to prevent his herding or driving them there.[35] The decree will not be extended so as to include land on which defendants have not trespassed or threatened to trespass.[36]

Incorporeal property.—It will lie to prevent the destruction of a well defined underground watercourse, or its diversion from the spring of a lower proprietor,[37] or for the malicious diverting or wasting of percolating waters,[38] or to prevent the unauthorized interference with water and ditch rights.[39] It will also issue to restrain the taking of oysters from a non-navigable stream flowing over plaintiff's land.[40]

Easements and rights of way.[41]—Equity has jurisdiction to prevent, by injunction, the actual or threatened interference with, disturbance, or destruction of easements,[42] or rights of way.[43] A right of way will be protected though plaintiff does not own the land in fee simple,[44] and he need not allege that he has an exclusive right thereto.[45]

Will not lie against enforcement of municipal ordinance regulating liquor traffic the violation of which is a misdemeanor, because it imposes unreasonable, vexatious and oppressive restrictions. Paul v. Washington, 134 N. C. 363, 47 S. E. 793. Violation of statute against book-making and pool selling. Old Dominion Telegraph Co. v. Powers [Ala.] 37 So. 195. Will not enjoin a criminal prosecution to enforce an ordinance requiring a railroad to maintain flagmen at street cross-cutions for both, stand upon the same footing in this regard.[40] It is immaterial that the statute or ordinance for an alleged violation of which prosecution is threatened is absolutely void,[50] that such prosecutions will inflict irreparable damage on the person threatened,[51] or that the municipality and its officers are insolvent so that damages cannot be recovered against them.[52] Nor will equity interfere on the theory of preventing a multiplicity of suits.[53] In such case the threatened party has an adequate remedy at law in his opportunity to establish his innocence in the criminal court before which he is tried, and by an action for damages in case the prosecution is malicious.[54]

But the court is not deprived of jurisdiction to protect property rights by the fact that the interference with them to some extent takes the form of criminal prosecutions,[55] nor by the fact that the acts complained of are accompanied by, or are themselves violations of, the criminal law,[56] and it may prevent the institution of criminal proceedings by a party to a suit already pending before it, to try the same right that is in issue therein.[57]

§ 3. Suits or actions for injunction.[58]—Courts of equity alone have power to issue injunctions.[59] The court operates in personam in granting an injunction and hence its jurisdiction is not affected by the location of the property affected by the acts complained of.[60] Where it obtains jurisdiction because of a prayer for an injunction, it has jurisdiction to decide all questions and grant appropriate relief.[61] The court has no jurisdiction to determine a question of disputed title on a bill to restrain trespass upon land.[62] The complainant must be a person aggrieved in the capacity wherein he sues.[63] Several owners of distinct tenements may join in a suit to restrain a nuisance or other grievance common to them all and affecting each in a similar way,[64] but they may not so join to restrain a distinct and separate injury to each of their properties.[65] Where the injuries are dissimilar complainants must, at some stage of the proceedings, elect on which kind of injury they will rely.[66] Different landowners may be joined in a suit to restrain them from interfering with a right of way, where the same right is asserted against each,[67] and one of several joint owners of an irrigation ditch may maintain a suit to enjoin third persons from interfering therewith.[68] Several subscribers, each having a contract with a telephone company, may join in a bill to restrain it from charging higher rates than those fixed by ordinance,[69] or an individual may maintain the suit.[70] Though all proper parties have not been joined as defendants, the decree is binding on those duly served.[71]

The bill must state facts showing that plaintiff is entitled to the relief sought,[72] and a failure to allege facts showing a right to equitable relief may be taken advantage of at any time, since it goes to the jurisdiction of the court.[73] In Alabama it has been held that a bill insufficient in regard to the allegation that the injury cannot be adequately compensated in damages will, on motion to dismiss, be considered as amended in this regard.[74] The character of the bill must be determined from the allegations upon which relief can be allowed.[75] As a rule a statement of ownership of the property, for an injury to which relief is sought, is sufficient.[76]

There must be a formal prayer for injunction,[77] and the extent of the relief granted will be confined to that prayed for.[78] The insufficiency of the jurat attached to the bill goes only to the temporary injunction and has no effect upon the bill as a whole when it shows sufficient equity to require an answer.[79]

Defenses arising after answer filed and issue joined must be presented by a cross bill in the nature of a plea puis darrein continuance.[80] A defendant against whom writs of ne exeat and injunction have issued, and who has escaped from custody and remains beyond the jurisdiction of the court, cannot, on appeal, question the correctness of the action of the lower court in granting them.[81] Where defendant desires a mutual or reciprocal injunction, he must apply for it in the original suit in which an injunction pendente lite issued against him.[82] Where an injunction is denied, plaintiff may not, after dismissing it, institute another suit on the same grounds and again apply for an injunction for the same purpose.[83]

Complainants may dismiss, or consent to the dismissal of, their bill at any time before decree.[84] This is true when they sue as members of a class and expressly state that the suit is not only for their own benefit but also for that of such others of the class as may come in and share the expense.[85] But this right ends when one of the class, not a party to the original bill, is admitted, by order of court, as a complainant.[86] In Missouri when a petition for an injunction is filed, in which no temporary injunction is asked, the court may, on defendant's voluntary appearance, order the case to be tried at the term when such appearance is made instead of the term to which the process was returnable.[87] The complaint should be dismissed as to persons losing, after the filing of the complaint, the property rights on which the right to injunctive relief depended.[88]

§ 4. Preliminary injunction. A. Issuance.[89]—The object of a preliminary injunction, preventive in its nature, is the preservation of the property or rights involved until it can be finally determined.[90] It is provisional in its nature and does not finally conclude the rights of the parties.[91] A preliminary injunction will not issue to change possession of premises during the trial of an action for specific performance.[92]

The granting of an injunction pendente lite is largely in the discretion of the trial court,[93] and it may be conditioned as he may deem proper.[94] It must appear questions of law or fact to be ultimately determined are grave and difficult, and injury to the moving party will be immediate, certain, and great if it is denied, while the loss of inconvenience to the opposing party will be comparatively small if granted.[99] It should not, however, be granted where the benefit or advantage to claimant will be out of proportion to the injury or disadvantage necessarily resulting to defendant.[1] The fact that no appeal lies from an interlocutory decree denying a preliminary injunction is of no weight where it clearly appears that complainant cannot prevail on final hearing;[2] but it may be of controlling importance where there is room for reasonable doubt as to the ultimate result.[3] It should issue where the action is for the sole purpose of an injunction and a temporary injunction is essential to the preservation of a legal right, if established as alleged in the complaint.[4] It should be denied if it does not appear on the prima facie showing that plaintiff is entitled to any relief, and does appear that the bill will probably be dismissed on final hearing.[5]

By statute in some states a temporary injunction may be granted where it appears by the complaint that plaintiff is entitled to the judgment demanded, which consists in restraining the continuance or commission of some act, the continuance or commission of which during litigation would produce injury to plaintiff.[6]

The complaint must show the facts entitling plaintiffs to a temporary injunction,[7] and must pray for permanent equitable relief.[8] The motion for a preliminary injunction must rest, on the part of complainant, on the bill and accompanying affidavits originally filed.[9] The verified petition and answer serve the office both of pleading and evidence.[10] The office of the affidavits is merely to support the bill or petition,[11] and they cannot amend it or add new grounds of relief.[12] Imperfections in the original affidavits may be corrected.[13] Affidavits and a complaint based upon complainant's understanding or information and belief are insufficient unless the sources and grounds of such understanding and belief are stated.[14] Affidavits in rebuttal are not permissible except under special circumstances and by leave of court.[15] As a general rule a preliminary injunction will not be granted on ex parte affidavits unless in a clear case.[16] This does not, however, apply where its function is merely to preserve the status quo until final decree and where comparatively great injury may result from withholding, and comparatively little can result from granting it.[17] In such case the court will regard with just discrimination the balance of convenience and hardship, and endeavor to do the most good with the least harm.[18]

A decree of a court of concurrent or superior jurisdiction determining the validity of a patent is ordinarily sufficient basis for a preliminary injunction in a suit for its infringement, where such infringement clearly appears.[19] When the infringement is doubtful no preliminary injunction will issue.[20]

The merits of the action cannot be considered except in so far as is necessary to determine whether or not complainant has made a prima facie showing.[21]

not be entertained when complainant has completed testimony for final hearing, leaving defendant to oppose by affidavits only.[22] When defendant's proofs are also complete, application should be on interlocutory hearing, and not by motion, so that each side may have equal opportunity to appeal.[23] An injunction is properly issued against a defendant who does not answer.[24]

A decree will be so framed as to maintain the status quo, as far as possible, until final hearing or judgment.[25] When the rights of a litigant are protected to the extent of excluding all possibility of injury, he has no cause to complain.[26]

The court has a discretion in disposing of an application for a second interlocutory injunction upon proper showing made,[27] but this rule does not apply where the record shows that the first proceeding resulted in the dismissal of the petition upon general demurrer.[28]

In South Carolina the judge may grant a temporary restraining order without notice and before summons is served or lodged for service, for the purpose of having it served with the summons.[29] Procuring a restraining order before the service of summons, which is served with it, is a mere irregularity which is waived by answering to the merits.[30]

(§ 4) B. Bonds.[31]—The injunction is not effective until the statutory bond is given,[32] but the defendant may apply to the appellate court for its dissolution or modification before the bond is executed.[33] If the bond given is shown to be insufficient, a new one may be required as a condition precedent to continuing the injunction to the time of trial.[34] The amount of the bond is generally left to the discretion of the court granting the order,[35] but it must not be oppressive or unreasonable.[36] Where the statute makes the giving of a bond a condition precedent to the granting of an injunction, the court cannot dispense with it.[37]

The fact that the bond is in a larger sum than that required by the order is immaterial where the damages recovered are smaller than the amount fixed by such order.[38]

(§ 4) C. Dissolution, modification, or continuance; reinstatement.[39]—The dissolution of a temporary injunction is largely within the discretion of the trial court.[40] But where the facts are substantially admitted, the question is largely one of law.[41] In South Carolina an order granting a temporary injunction, made after notice and hearing defendant, cannot be thereafter dissolved by the court granting it.[42]

On final judgment on the merits in favor of defendants dissolving the temporary injunction and dismissing the bill, the court has power therein to continue in force the interlocutory injunction granted at the beginning of the case, pending an appeal.[43] The power is discretionary, but should always be exercised when any irremediable injury may result from the effect of the decree as rendered.[44] On appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction, complainant may, as a condition to its continuance, be required to give bond to indemnify defendants from damages arising from the issuance of the writ.[45]

A special injunction should be continued to the hearing if there is probable cause to suppose that plaintiff will be able to maintain his primary equity, and there is reasonable apprehension of irreparable loss unless it remains in force, or if it appears reasonably necessary to maintain his right until the merits of the controversy are settled.[46] A preliminary injunction to restrain trespass on realty which is continued until such time as judgment may be obtained in ejectment should not be dissolved until the final determination of the second suit in ejectment, there being no lack of diligence.[47]

The court may, in its discretion, temporarily suspend the operation of its judgments granting injunctive relief, or stay proceedings on them for such time and on such terms as it may see proper.[48] The granting of a second suspension is not an amendment of the judgment but only a regulation of the manner in which it shall be enforced.[49] Where, as a condition to the suspension, the court directs a payment of damages to complainant, the latter may refuse to accept such sum in full of his damages and thereafter have the same determined by a jury or a commission.[50]

As a general rule the court will dissolve a preliminary injunction upon the filing of a sworn answer fully meeting the allegations of the bill of complaint,[51] but he may, in the exercise of his discretion, refuse to do so.[52] Collateral issues will not be tried in order to justify the act enjoined.[53]

An injunction may be modified upon a proper showing affecting the grounds upon which it was originally issued, or setting up new matter from which it appears that to continue it would result in serious or unnecessary injury.[54]

In Idaho when the adverse party moves to dissolve the temporary injunction upon the papers upon which it was granted, no notice to the party obtaining it is required, and no further showing can be made in opposition thereto.[55]

The dissolution of an injunction which will support an appeal is one effected by an order or decree of the chancellor and not by the act of complainant.[56] A judgment dissolving an injunction, if not appealed from, is conclusive on all parties.[57]

In Nebraska, an order dissolving or modifying a temporary injunction is not final, and is not appealable until after a final judgment in the action.[58] In Louisiana plaintiff is entitled to an appeal from an order dismissing the injunction on bond, if it may be that irreparable loss will result therefrom.[59] The particular facts of each case control as to such question.[60]

Costs.[61]—On dissolution of a temporary injunction, costs will be awarded defendant where complainant is not entitled to enjoin the acts complained of and the injunction is not necessary because defendant has no intention of violating plaintiff's rights.[62] One losing his rights on which his right to injunctive relief depends, after the filing of the complaint, should not be taxed with costs on dismissal of the bill as to him.[63]

(§ 4) D. Damages on dissolution, and liability on bond.[64]—In order to recover damages on the vacation of a temporary injunction, there must be a determination that plaintiffs were not entitled to the injunction,[65] and that defendant was damaged thereby.[66] The dismissal of the action by plaintiff without defendant's consent and against his consent is, in legal effect, a determination that he was not entitled to such injunction.[67] The final outcome of the suit, and not the orders entered upon motions to vacate a temporary injunction granted therein, determines the right to damages.[68] Hence suit cannot be maintained on an injunction bond pending an appeal or petition in error from a judgment dissolving the injunction, even though no supersedeas bond is filed.[69]

An adjudication, on appeal, that defendant is entitled to a reference to ascertain his damages on dissolution of an injunction, necessarily is a determination that he is entitled to damages.[70] The petition for damages must show that the injunction was wrongfully issued.[71]

Damages are recoverable either by an action on the bond or by an allowance in the suit in which the injunction issued.[72] In either case they consist of those actually sustained by defendant by reason of the issuance of the writ,[73] including reasonable counsel fees incurred in procuring its dissolution,[74] or in preparing to move for its dissolution.[75] In the latter case the fact that plaintiff dismissed the action and dissolved the writ before the filing or hearing of the motion is immaterial.[76] Counsel fees incurred in resisting the application for a preliminary injunction[77] and those incurred on the trial of the issue in the action, unless in-

In Kentucky it is held that when the injunction is merely ancillary or in aid of the relief sought, or is relied on to secure the relief when obtained, or to prevent the commission of a wrongful or tortious act that would result in irreparable injury before the termination of the prime cause of action, then a recovery may be had on the bond for reasonable counsel fees when defendant procures the discharge of the injunction (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sullivan, 25 Ky. L. R. 2295, 80 S. W. 515), but when the injunction is the relief sought and in fact would give such relief if sustained, no recovery for counsel fees can be had (Id.). Not where injunction was to prevent interference with railroad's possession of condemned right of way. Id. In such case the only damages recoverable are those resulting from the operation of the injunction itself. Id.

curred solely or principally on account of the injunction, are not recoverable.[78] Costs and expenses stated to have been incurred will be presumed to be reasonable.[79]

Depreciation in the value of stock, the sale of which was enjoined, may be recovered.[80] It is no defense that plaintiff held title thereto in fraud of the creditors of the true owner.[81] One securing an injunction restraining a minor from disposing of his property cannot defend on the ground that no order of court was obtained authorizing him to sell.[82] The fact that defendant violated the temporary injunction does not prevent a recovery of damages for its wrongful issuance,[83] and it is no defense that the assignment of defendant's claim for damages to his attorneys is champertous.[84]

Practice in actions on bonds.[85]—The complaint must allege a failure to pay the damages suffered.[86] The fact that the injunction suit is still pending, if relied on as a defense, must be pleaded, where it is not disclosed by the petition.[87] The admission of such fact at the close of the evidence does not change the rule.[88]

The Kentucky statutes provide that on dissolution of an injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment the damages shall be assessed by the court, and judgment shall be rendered against the party obtaining the injunction for the amount.[89] Such remedy is exclusive and is a condition precedent to an action on the injunction bond.[90]

(§ 4) E. The appealability of preliminary orders, and of the dissolution, vacation, modification, or refusal thereof, is regulated by statute, and has been fully discussed elsewhere.[91]

§ 5. Decree, judgment, or order for injunction.[92]—The formal order of injunction fixes the rights of the parties.[93] It must clearly specify the acts enjoined.[94] Clerical errors therein will be corrected.[95]

All questions decided on the hearing for a preliminary injunction are open for review on final hearing, but the original decision should be adhered to unless it clearly appears that an error was committed, or additional facts were brought out on the trial requiring a modification or reversal of the views then expressed.[96]

Neither a decree for an injunction nor a decree dissolving an injunction is suspended by appeal.[97] In Kentucky the order granting the injunction and not the action of the clerk issuing the writ is reviewable by the appellate court.[98]

§ 6. Violation and punishment.[99]—The willful violation of an injunction by a party to the cause is contempt of court, constituting a specific offense.[1] An injunction is operative from the time the order is made,[2] and is binding on all parties having actual notice thereof, whether served with the writ or not.[3] The spirit as well as the letter of the writ must be observed.[4] Persons confederating or conspiring with defendant in a breach of an injunction are punishable for contempt if they have actual notice thereof.[5] Persons enjoined individually cannot escape liability for a violation of the injunction by changing their relations to each other, as by forming a corporation.[6] Advice of counsel operates in extenuation only.[7] Where the violation is not willful or intentional but is the result of the advice of counsel and the defendant's view of his rights under the decree, the punishment imposed will be nominal.[8]

In order to support contempt proceedings, the proof should be so clear and convincing as to leave no reasonable doubt of guilt.[9] One cannot be punished for contempt for violating an injunction which is void for want of jurisdiction.[10]

An appeal does not lie from an order refusing to punish as for contempt an alleged violation of an injunction.[11] In New Mexico an appeal will not lie from a judgment committing one to jail for contempt for the violation of an injunction.[12] Mandamus to compel the chancellor to punish violations of an injunction will be denied where the bill has been dismissed and the preliminary injunction dissolved.[13]

An injunction held properly extended so as to restrain defendants from bringing any actions against plaintiffs in regard to mining ore vein until final determination of suit in which injunction in regard to same vein was issued to plaintiff, and in which suit all matters in controversy could be determined. Injunction restraining defendant from interfering with working of vein held broad enough to prevent bringing suits to recover ore mined, etc. Id. The Indiana statute relating to contempts of court does not apply to contempt proceedings for violation of an injunction.[14]

Contempt proceedings may not be resorted to to settle and adjudicate the title to property in no way affected by the decree in the injunction proceedings.[15] In New York the mandate of commitment for contempt for violating an injunction must set forth the particular circumstances of the offense.[16]

Matters relating to practice in contempt proceedings are treated elsewhere.[17]

§ 7. Liability for wrongful injunction.[18]

INNS, RESTAURANTS AND LODGING HOUSES.[19]

Who is a guest.—One who registers at a hotel as a guest retains his status as guest though, after a week's stay, he is charged at the regular weekly rate.[20] One who merely allows his baggage to be taken to a hotel, and does not go there himself or procure any accommodation, does not become a guest.[21] In such case the hotelkeeper is only the gratuitous bailee of the baggage, liable for its loss only if guilty of gross negligence.[22]

Under the Kentucky "hospitality act" a person, not a keeper of a tavern or house of private entertainment, cannot recover for accommodations furnished unless a contract was made therefor.[23]

Liability for guest's safety.[24]—An innkeeper is not an insurer of the safety of the persons of his guests; his obligation is limited to the exercise of reasonable care for their safety, comfort and entertainment.[25] He is therefore not liable for negligent, willful or violent acts of servants without the scope of their employment.[26]

Liability for effects.—While the strict rules making hotel and innkeepers in-

NOTE. Guest and boarder: The distinction between a guest and boarder is said to be that the guest comes to remain without any bargain for time, and may go when he pleases, paying only for the actual entertainment which he receives; and the fact that a person has remained at the inn a long time in this way does not make him a boarder rather than a guest. Shoecraft v. Bailey, 25 Iowa, 553. Nor does a special agreement as to the price of board make the traveler a boarder and not a guest. Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. [Mass.] 417. 26. A six year old boy left his parents' room and went to a room where servants, off duty, were amusing themselves, and was injured by the accidental discharge of a pistol aimed at him by a servant. Held, innkeeper not liable. Clancy v. Barker [C. C. A.] 131 F. 161. The supreme court of Nebraska held to the contrary on the same facts, on the ground that the act of the servants, though not done in the course of their employment, constituted a breach of the innkeeper's contract to treat his guests with due consideration, for which the innkeeper was liable in damages. Clancy v. Barker [Neb.] 98 N. W. 440. The circuit court of appeals refuses to follow the state court and remarks (opinion by Sanborn, Circuit Judge) that the case is the only one in the field of American or English jurisprudence which holds an innkeeper liable for willful or negligent acts of servants beyond the scope of their employment.

It is held in California that an assault on a guest by a waiter is without the scope of his employment, and an act for which the hotel keeper is not liable. Rahmel v. Lehndorff, 142 Cal. 681, 76 P. 659.

surers of the effects of guests do not apply to restaurant keepers,[27] yet the latter are liable for damages caused by the negligence of their servants in the conduct of the business for which they are employed.[28] A watch and fob is included within the meaning of the phrase "jewels and ornaments" in the Tennessee innkeepers' liability act.[29]

In an action to recover for baggage lost in a hotel fire, the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence in failing to remove the baggage in time is ordinarily one for the jury.[30] The clerk's statement to the guest that the hotel was fireproof was held admissible on that issue.[31] A guest has the right, in case of fire, to rely to some extent on statements of persons, apparently servants, or employes, in regard to the danger; but he must use his own intelligence and not rely on such statements as those of experts.[32]

Liens.[33]—Where a statute regulating innkeepers' liens provides that nothing therein contained shall preclude any other existing remedy for the enforcement of innkeepers' liens, the common-law lien of an innkeeper is not affected by it.[34] Where the guest has lawful possession of property which he brings to a hotel and treats as his own, the innkeeper has a lien thereon for the accommodation of the guest, though the general ownership is in another, the innkeeper having no notice of such general ownership.[35]

Public regulation; licenses.—Municipalities have such power to license or regulate inns as their charters and the statutes give them.[36] The power to license inns and taverns is said to be administrative rather than judicial, and the right to impose it on courts of New Jersey rests only on long continued usage in that state.[37] A license tax on restaurants and boarding houses apportioned according to the amount of business done, as determined by the method of conducting it, is not invalid for unreasonable discrimination.[38]

In a prosecution for failure to obtain a hotel license, the fact that the proprietor, being ill, directed his clerk to obtain the license, and believed he had done so, though in fact he had not, was no defense.[39] Under provisions of the charter

INQUEST OF DEATH. [41]

Under Idaho statutes, it is the duty of the coroner to hold an inquest when he is informed that the death of the deceased was under such circumstances as to afford reasonable ground to suspect that it was caused by the act of another by criminal means.[42] But failure of the coroner to hold an inquest is no ground for the release of one charged with murder of the deceased,[43] since the coroner is not a magistrate, authorized to hold preliminary examinations; and the inquest is not a sufficient basis for information by the public prosecutor.[44]

A verdict on an inquest of death being an ex parte finding of facts in aid of the public administration of the law has no force as evidence, in a collateral proceeding, of the cause of death,[45] but there is authority for the other view.[46] If admissible the inquest is only prima facie,[47] and since even a conviction for homi-

Note: The Kentucky court follows Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Kaiser, 24 Ky. L. R. 2454, 74 S. W. 203, and explains that cases wherein the inquest was received having been submitted with the proofs of death should not be regarded as authorities for the admission of it other than as a material admission or declaration by the beneficiary who submitted the proofs. Such cases are Insurance Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. [U. S.] 32, 22 Law. Ed. 793, followed by Walther v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 65 Cal. 417; Insurance Co. v. Higginbotham, 95 U. S. 390, 24 Law. Ed. 499. The cases wherein evidence of an impeaching character was adduced from testimony before the inquest (People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452); those wherein the benefit certificate required a coroner's certificate (Knights of Honor v. Fletcher, 78 Miss. 377, 28 So. 872, 29 So. 523), and those wherein no objection was made (Metzradt v. Modern Brotherhood, 112 Iowa, 522, 84 N. W. 498), are also to be rejected as precedents.

It has no judicial character to render it admissible (Cox v. Royal Tribe, 42 Or. 365, 71 P. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 752). Compare In re Sly [Idaho] 76 P. 766. In a note 5 Columbia L. R. 165, it is said: "Whatever the historical character of the coroner's office, it cannot be said that under modern statutes a coroner's inquest is a judicial proceeding to the extent that its verdict should affect any stranger to such proceeding. Cox v. Royal Tribe, 42 Or. 365, 95 Am. St. Rep. 752; Wasey v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 119; Goldschmidt v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 102 N. Y. 486. The purpose of such inquisition is to furnish foundation for criminal prosecution in case death was caused by felony. Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Lewin, 24 Colo. 43, 65 Am. St. Rep. 215. In criminal prosecutions the verdict of the coroner's jury is not admitted in evidence for the reason that in proceedings before the coroner there is neither confrontation nor an opportunity for cross-examination. Whitehurst v. Com., 79 Va. 556; People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466."

46. Note: The opposite view finds support on the ground that such a verdict, being secured by a public officer, under his official oath, in the discharge of his official duty, and filed with the circuit court, is therefore a record of that court. United States Life Ins. Co. v. Vocke, 129 Ill. 557, 6 L. R. A. 65; Grand Lodge v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408, 61 Am. St. Rep. 123. See 5 Columbia L. R. 165.

A purported inquest of Missouri was rejected in Illinois because it did not show essentials of an inquest at common law or under the Illinois statute. National Gross Loge v. Jung, 65 Ill. App. 313. The Illinois court rejects—properly so—the testimony of plaintiff, an administrator, made at the inquest. The reason is that statements as an individual do not bind a representative. Gooding v. United States Life Ins. Co., 46 Ill. App. 307; 5 Ill. Cyc. Dig. 1145.

47. Rumbold v. Supreme Council Royal League, 206 Ill. 513, 69 N. E. 590; Goldschmidt v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 33 Hun [N. Y.] 441, judgment reversed, 102 N. Y. 486; 8 Abb. N. Y. Cyc. Dig. 260, par. 317; Insurance Co. v. Vocke, 129 Ill. 557, 6 L. R. A. 65; Greenleaf, Ev. 556. Such evidence, while cide is only prima facie as against an insurer of deceased,[48] it should on reason yield to slight contrary evidence. It is not evidence of the character or degree of negligence wherefrom death resulted,[49] nor even that there was negligence.[50]

INSANE PERSONS.

§ 1. Existence and Effect of Insanity in General (126).
§ 2. Inquisitions (126).
§ 3. Guardianship and Support (127). Expenses and Accounts (127). Support (128).

§ 5. Property and Debts (128).
§ 6. Contracts and Conveyances (129).
§ 7. Torts (129).
§ 8. Actions by or Against (129).

This topic includes only adjudication of insanity and the rights and disabilities of adjudicated lunatics. Contractual capacity in general,[51] and capacity to commit crime,[52] are elsewhere treated.

§ 1. Existence and effect of insanity in general.[53]—The presumption that where unsoundness of mind is shown it continues until the contrary is shown does not extend to temporary, intermittent unsoundness, caused by intoxication, sickness, or other transitory causes.[54] While an adjudication of a probate court that one is non compos and placing him under guardianship remains in force, he is prima facie without testamentary capacity.[55] A finding that one was desperate when he killed another does not amount to a finding that he was insane;[56] nor is a finding by a jury that a person is "feeble in mind, incapable of managing business affairs, and a typical imbecile," a finding of insanity within the statutory meaning of the term.[57] The fact that a person has been duly committed as insane, and thereafter discharged as cured, is not, in the absence of peculiar conduct, notice to persons dealing with him in good faith, that he is incompetent.[58] The insanity of a client operates to terminate the relation of attorney and client.[59] Where a party becomes insane while indebted to an attorney representing him, the appointment of a guardian does not divest the attorney of any lien he may have acquired, but the attorney has no right per se of representing the guardian.[60]

§ 2. Inquisitions.[61]—In lunacy proceedings, summons must be served on the alleged lunatic as a foundation to any judgment declaring him to be of unsound mind.[62] Where a person is mentally incompetent, it is proper for the court to

Fees of probate judge and commissioner. In the matter of inquests of lunacy, a probate judge is entitled to only such fees as are provided for in Rev. St. § 719. Section 547 is inapplicable. Millard v. Conradi, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 145. appoint a guardian ad litem on the hearing of an application for the appointment of a general guardian.[63] The question of sanity should not be tried on affidavits, but should be sent to a commissioner or a jury.[64] A commissioner on an inquisition may dissent from the finding of a jury on the question of sanity and the court may refuse to confirm the finding.[65] In a trial of an issue as to whether one was and is of sound mind, the evidence must relate to his condition up to the time of the trial.[66] The finding of an inquisition should recite that the incapacity of a person to manage himself and his property is the result of unsoundness of mind.[67] Where physicians appointed by the probate court certify to sanity the probate judge has no authority to proceed and himself determine the question of sanity.[68] Where a lunatic is too imbecile to desire that a defense be made for him to an inquisition, his interests are properly confided to the prosecuting attorney.[69] When upon an application for leave to traverse an inquisition of lunacy, an issue is directed to be tried at law, a motion for a new trial of the issue is to be made before the chancellor, and not in the supreme court.[70] A cause of action to have defendant declared a lunatic does not survive the death of the defendant.[71]

§ 3. Guardianship and support.[72]—The Federal courts have no jurisdiction to exercise the function of parens patriae for the determination of the right to the custody of an insane person.[73] In Texas the county judge may of his own motion, and without application made therefor, appoint a guardian for a person of unsound mind.[74] Under a statute permitting a guardianship where one is likely to bring himself or his family to want, a petition merely stating his incapacity to manage his estate is insufficient, and a decree entered thereon is a nullity, and open to collateral attack.[75] The fact that one is confined in an asylum in another county does not affect his residence, or the jurisdiction of the court of his residence to appoint a guardian for him.[76] An order appointing a guardian for an alleged incompetent will be reversed if purely a consent order.[77] Where a guardian receives funds of his insane ward and mingles them with his own he is properly charged with interest upon the balance left in his hands at the beginning of each year after the first.[78]

Expenses and accounts.[79]—Estates of insane persons and of those legally bound to support them are liable to the county for reasonable expenses for their care in the county asylum, but such estates may not be taxed with the costs of the hearing as to insanity, and the costs of transportation to the hospital.[80]

Support.[81]—An asylum to which a person was committed on a void inquest may recover on a quantum meruit for necessaries furnished him; and he is entitled to credit for services rendered.[82] Necessaries furnished to a lunatic are recoverable against him, and after his death against his estate.[83] Insane residents of the state shall receive board and treatment free at the state insane hospital and there is no provision for reimbursing the county from the property of those who are obliged to support the lunatic.[84] Judgment for necessaries furnished to an alleged lunatic cannot be recovered, where, in an action for same, the lunacy is denied and not proved.[85] The services voluntarily rendered to an incompetent, by a person who knows of a contract made by the guardian with third parties for such care, cannot be recovered for as necessaries where the guardian knew nothing of their being rendered.[86]

§ 4. Commitment to asylums.[87]—The statutory requirements in committing insane persons to an asylum must be followed even though the prescribed delay cause inconvenience or even danger.[88] On habeas corpus by a person committed as insane, the ordinary procedure will be followed unless the court in its discretion, on account of some special cause, see fit to direct a jury trial.[89] An act providing that a person acquitted of murder on the ground of insanity may be committed to an asylum for the dangerous insane, and can only be discharged by act of the general assembly, is unconstitutional; but a person so committed cannot be released on habeas corpus if he is insane at the time of the return of the writ and must be restrained pending the inquiry as to his insanity.[90] Keepers of asylums are not given judicial powers, because they may not hold a patient except on certificates of insanity and an order for admission.[91] The detention of a widow in an insane asylum is not a voluntary abandonment of her homestead, and does not affect her rights therein.[92]

§ 5. Property and debts.[93]—A widow, insane at the time of her husband's death, is not barred of her right to apply for dower, until the statute of limitations has run, dating from the time of the removal of her disability; but the right to take a child's share in the estate is dependent upon her election within the period prescribed after administration granted.[94] A wife acting as conservatrix of her insane husband's estate, and who inventories certain lots as part thereof, is not estopped from claiming, after his death, a resulting trust in her favor as to such lots.[95] A second committee of an insane person may maintain a suit in his own name against the estate of a deceased committee for money chargeable to the first committee as such; and money so received under color of his appointment may be sued for, though the appointment be void.[96]

§ 6. Contracts and conveyances.[97]—The deed of an insane person may be avoided as against a grantee for value without notice of his grantor's insanity.[98] The deed of an insane person is not absolutely void, but voidable at his election, on recovery of his reason, and is of force and effect until the option to declare it void is exercised;[99] but neither the court, nor a person under guardianship by reason of insanity, nor the guardian of the latter, nor all together, can ratify a conveyance of land by the ward made previous to the guardianship, but while he was insane.[1] An assignment of a contract to purchase land, by a person non compos mentis is voidable only.[2] A confirmed insane person may, in a lucid interval, make a valid contract, and if the insanity be intermittent, it must be proved to exist at the time of making the contract in order to avoid the same.[3] But ordinarily the burden of showing that a conveyance by an insane person was made during a lucid interval is upon the person claiming under the instrument.[4] The record in one action where a conveyance was set aside on the ground of mental incapacity is not admissible in an action to set aside a second and subsequent conveyance by the same grantor.[5]

§ 7. Torts.[6]

§ 8. Actions by or against.[7]—The mental condition of an incompetent does not prevent him from commencing in his own name, prior to the appointment of a guardian for him, an action to set aside an agreement conveying his property to another.[8] A committee appointed for an incompetent infant after the latter has commenced an action by guardian ad litem may be properly substituted as plaintiff.[9] Where on foreclosure, personal service is had on an insane person and his guardian, failure to appoint a guardian ad litem for the insane person is a mere irregularity not affecting the judgment.[10] In a suit by a next friend for a lunatic, the objection that there is no allegation of no guardian, or reason for not appearing by guardian, if there be one, must be taken by special demurrer or plea in abatement.[11] The statute of limitations does not run against a committee of a lunatic, who is also his administrator, who has never been discharged from these offices, and who sues the heirs for an accounting.[12] The rule that a person may voluntarily dismiss his appeal has no application where the party is of unsound mind.[13]

14. This article comprehends the general law of insolvency and insolvency procedure and settlements. Matters specifically perment of the federal bankruptcy law did not suspend the jurisdiction of state courts in insolvency cases where no proceedings in bankruptcy have been instituted respecting the matters in controversy.[16]

§ 2. Procedure and parties to adjudicate insolvency.[17]—One is insolvent when the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be sold or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts.[18] When the question of insolvency is in issue in a state court it is proper for it to follow the definition of insolvency as embraced in the federal bankruptcy act.[19]

In Louisiana the test of the jurisdiction of the supreme court in appeals in insolvency cases is the amount of the funds to be distributed in the case.[20]

It is no defense to an action on an insolvent bond, based on the party's failure to appear at the next term of court and take advantage of the insolvency laws, that he thereafter appeared pending such action.[21]

The Washington insolvency law is not unconstitutional as embracing more than one subject not expressed in its title.[22]

§ 3. Property passing to the assignee[23] is generally such as might be subjected to payment of debts.[24]

§ 4. Administration of insolvent estate.[25]—As a general rule only debts absolutely due are provable.[26] The liability of a surety on an administrator's bond does not constitute a debt provable in insolvency until after a breach of the bond.[27]

All creditors will, as far as possible, be placed on an equality.[28] Therefore creditors who have realized on collaterals before a dividend has been declared are entitled to a dividend only on so much of their debt as remains after deducting the proceeds of such collaterals.[29] The fact that their claims have theretofore been proved and allowed for the full amount is immaterial.[30] The statutory rule as to secured claims, generally applied in bankruptcy proceedings, limits a creditor with a secured claim, to the amount of his claim less the value of his security, unless he surrenders the security.[31] In equity a creditor of an insolvent whose estate is in process of administration under judicial supervision, having a secured claim against such insolvent, may prove it to the full amount, and in such case tinent to Bankruptcy (3 Curr. L. 434), and to Assignments for Creditors (3 Curr. L. 326), are not included. Discharge of insolvents from imprisonment for debt (Civil Arrest, 3 Curr. L. 700), and Composition with Creditors (3 Curr. L. 718), are related matters but are also excluded.

he is entitled to share with general creditors upon that basis in every general distribution of trust funds till the dividends, together with the receipts, if any, from the security, are sufficient to fully pay such claim, the residue of the security remaining to belong to the trust fund or to the owner of the equity.[32]

Preferences must be surrendered[33] and may generally be recovered by the receiver in an action brought for that purpose.[34] The fact that receivers of an insolvent corporation know of and report the existence of assets, from which report a creditor obtains his knowledge thereof, shows that the latter is not entitled to a preference on account of diligence.[35]

A receiver collecting from a stockholder of an insolvent corporation more than is necessary to pay its debts and the costs of administration is bound to restore the balance.[36]

§ 5. Rights and liabilities affected by insolvency and discharge of insolvent.[37]—A creditor whose claim antedates the proceedings and who has full notice thereof cannot enforce such claim outside such proceedings.[38]

Insolvency proceedings have no effect, proprio vigore, beyond the state in which they are instituted.[39] But a nonresident creditor voluntarily becoming a party thereto thereby elects to take advantage of, and become bound by, them, and cannot thereafter resort to remedies against the property of the insolvent in other states, to which he might otherwise have had recourse.[40] Statutes generally provide for an order requiring creditors to show cause why a discharge should not be granted, and fixing a day for the hearing thereof.[41] The fixing of the day is jurisdictional.[42] Notice of the order to show cause must generally be given, and the same must be published, and proof of such publication must be made and filed before a valid discharge can be granted.[43]

Proceedings to obtain a discharge are strictly adversary, and creditors whose claims are to be barred must be made parties and jurisdiction of them obtained in the way provided by statute, or their claims will not be affected thereby.[44] In Maine the omission of the name of a creditor from the schedule of creditors, when not willful or fraudulent, does not affect the validity of the discharge duly granted, in a suit brought by the creditor whose name was thus omitted.[45]

In New Jersey the insolvent must make an assignment of all his nonexempt property to the assignee appointed by the court before he can be discharged from custody.[46] An order of discharge from custody will be set aside where the petition presented to the court is not filed with the clerk for more than two months afterwards.[47] A discharge may be collaterally attacked for want of jurisdiction appearing upon the face of the record.[48]

INSPECTION, see latest topical index.

INSPECTION LAWS.[49]

The states have power to enact and enforce inspection laws applicable to interstate commerce.[50] Inspection laws are not invalid because designed to enforce police regulations calculated and suited to prevent frauds and crimes.[51] So long as the fee required to be paid by an inspection law is not so much in excess of the reasonable expense of inspection as to change the nature of the act to a tax law, the amount of the fee presents no judicial question.[52]

A statute regulating the fees of inspectors is not unconstitutional as local or special legislation though it in fact applies only to the inspector in one city, where it in terms applies to all cities which have or may have a certain number of inhabitants[53] or over; but a law in Pennsylvania has been held not to apply to places subsequently attaining that population.[54] The inspectors to whom the Missouri law applies are state, not county, officers.[55] The maximum compensation fixed by the act was $7,000 per annum.[56]

51. As to protect cattle industry of New Mexico [Laws 1901, p. 96, c. 45]. Territory v. Denver, etc., R. Co. [N. M.] 78 P. 74.

Note: This case, following Neilson v. Garza, 2 Woods, 287, Fed. Cas. No. 10,091, extends the doctrine of the earlier cases as to the proper purpose and scope of inspection laws. Thus, Chief Justice Marshall, in Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [U. S.] 1, 203, 6 Law. Ed. 23, defined inspection as follows: "The object of inspection laws is to improve the quality of articles produced by the labor of a country, to fit them for exportation, or, it may be, for domestic use. They act upon the subject before it becomes an article of foreign commerce or of commerce among the states, and prepare it for that purpose." Again it was said in Turner v. Maryland, 107 U. S. 38, 55, 27 Law. Ed. 370: "Recognized elements of inspection laws have always been quality of the article, form, capacity, dimensions, and weight of package, mode of putting up, and marking and branding of various kinds; all these matters being supervised by a public officer having authority to pass or not pass the article as lawful merchandise, as it did or did not answer the prescribed requirements."

52. If the charge proves to be in excess of actual need, it is presumed that the legislature will reduce it. Territory v. Denver, etc., R. Co. [N. M.] 78 P. 74. A fee of ten cents per hide for all animals killed at slaughter houses, held not to change law from one of inspection to one of taxation [Laws 1901, p. 96, c. 45]. Id. This law does not apply to pelts and skins, other than hides; the fee is not therefore unreasonable. Id.

Scope of topic.—This topic is confined to instructions in civil cases. Instructions in criminal prosecutions is elsewhere treated.[57]

§ 1. Object and purpose.—The object and purpose of instructions is to submit questions of fact,[58] and to convey to the jury the correct principles of law as applicable to the evidence introduced,[59] and nothing should be given unless it will promote that end.[60] Questions of law should not be submitted.[61] A court need not comment on the wisdom and beneficence of the statute of limitations after properly instructing the law,[62] but may instruct as to the result of a verdict.[63] The jury must take the whole charge as the law of the case.[64]

§ 2. Province of court and jury.[65]—It is the exclusive province of the jury to determine all issues of fact,[66] the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight to be given their testimony.[67] Therefore, when there is substantial conflict in the evidence relating to material facts[68] or when fair and rational minds may well draw different conclusions from the established facts, the issues should be submitted to the jury,[69] and an instruction which invades this province is erroneous;[70] but where the evidence leaves the material facts and the deductions from them admitted or undisputed[71] or of such a conclusive character that the exercise of sound judicial discretion would permit effect to be given to but one verdict, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury to return it.[72]

In actions tried by the court instructions should be given and refused in the same manner as when trial is before a jury.[73]

The construction of instruments.[74]—It is the province of the court to construe written instruments,[75] and submit such construction to the jury.[76]

§ 3. Duty of instructing; requests for instructions.[77]—If not restricted by the constitution, the legislature may authorize any court to instruct the jury.[78] In some jurisdictions the court is required, of its own motion, to instruct upon the general features of the law applicable to the material issues,[79] and in other jurisdictions courts are not required to instruct except as requested by the parties.[80] The court is not required to give the whole law of the case.[81] If the charge is too general[82] or is not as full as desired[83] in that it omits reference to particular points,[84] theories,[85] issues[86] or defenses,[87] or that such reference is not sufficiently specific,[88] it is incumbent on the litigants to request such particular instruction as they deem proper,[89] and this rule is not changed by a mandatory statute making it the duty of the court to instruct in writing.[90]

Limiting number of instructions.—The court has no authority to arbitrarily fix the number of instructions that shall be presented or passed upon;[91] such unauthorized conduct, however, is not reversible error unless prejudicial.[92]

Requests for instructions.[93]—A party is entitled to have the jury instructed as to the issues and law bearing upon his theory of the case,[94] and where a special request is made for an instruction which fairly reflects either a meritorious cause of action or a ground of defense[95] which has not been covered by other instructions,[96] or where the instruction is made necessary by erroneous procedure,[97] it should either be given or its substance embodied in another instruction.

Form and sufficiency of request.[98]—A request to charge should be complete in itself,[99] strictly correct,[1] and applicable to the case.[2]

Time of making request.[3]—Written propositions should be submitted to the court before argument.[4] Requests not submitted in apt time as required by the rules of the court may be refused.[5]

Disposition of requests.[6]—Requests to charge upon points of law applicable to the case should be given or refused;[7] the words "given" or "refused" should be used.[8] A failure to charge a request amounts to a refusal if such failure is brought to the attention of the court at the conclusion of his charge.[9] The instruction need not be given in the precise language requested;[10] it is sufficient if the substance be given.[11] Furthermore, it is the duty of the court to simplify

94. Suburban R. R. Co. v. Malstrom, 105 Ill. App. 631. Requested charge should have been given where the main charge failed to affirmatively submit. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Renfro [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 21. Each party is entitled to an instruction announcing the law applicable to the evidence introduced in his behalf. Hot Springs St. R. Co. v. Hildreth [Ark.] 82 S. W. 245; North Texas Const. Co. v. Bostick [Tex.] 83 S. W. 12. Submitting defenses pleaded. Bering Mfg. Co. v. Femelat [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 869.

95. Western Mattress Co. v. Ostergaard [Neb.] 101 N. W. 334. A party has a right to demand that the jury be instructed what facts are admitted of record. Barton v. Odessa [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1119. It is reversible error to refuse a request for a proper instruction. Collard v. Beach, 81 App. Div. 582, 81 N. Y. S. 619. Error to refuse an instruction that "it is presumed that public officers do their duty." McKinstry v. Collins [Vt.] 56 A. 985; Braucht v. Graves-May Co. [Minn.] 99 N. W. 417.

City of Columbus v. Anglin [Ga.] 48 S. E. 318; International, etc., R. Co. v. Tisdale [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 347.

97. False argument of counsel. Drumm-Flato Commission Co. v. Gerlach Bank [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 503.

98. See 2 Curr. L. 474.

99. A request which does not state a distinct proposition of law but only groups together a portion of the alleged facts essential to such an issue is ordinarily insufficient. Leaves the jury no opportunity to determine qualifying matters. McQueen v. Kondelin [C. C. A.] 127 F. 76.

1. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Naive [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 124. Request which does not correctly state the law. Harris v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1023. Not error to refuse to charge an unconstitutional statute as the law. Ballentine v. Hammond [S. C.] 46 S. E. 1000. Under Rev. St. 1898, § 2853, providing that requests must be given without change or modification or refused in full, the request must be complete and accurate. Lynch v. Waldwick [Wis.] 101 N. W. 925.

2. Request not applicable properly refused. Mulherin v. Kennedy [Ga.] 48 S. E. 437.

3. See 2 Curr. L. 474.

4. Stauffer v. Volentine, 104 Ill. App. 382.

5. Requests made during the trial. Plunger Elevator Co. v. Day, 184 Mass. 130, 68 N. E. 16. In Illinois superior court (Rule 24), instructions must be presented at the conclusion of the taking of the evidence. Pennsylvania Co. v. Greso, 102 Ill. App. 252.

6. See 2 Curr. L. 475.

7. Where made prior to the commencement of the summing up of counsel. Franklin v. Friehofer Vienna Baking Co. [N. J. Law] 58 A. 82. Where a party requested an instruction and the court replied "Yes, I will not touch that any more than I have," the language should be construed as given and not as refused. Buckley v. Westchester Lighting Co., 93 App. Div. 436, 87 N. Y. S. 763.

8. Marking an instruction "not received" instead of "refused" is not reversible error where the instruction is erroneous. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Hanthorn, 211 Ill. 367, 71 N. E. 1022.

9. Franklin v. Friehofer Vienna Baking Co. [N. J. Law] 58 A. 82.

10. May be modified by the court. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Davis [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 253. The duty of the court is fully discharged if it embraces all the principles of law in its own language. Mountain Copper Co. v. Van Buren [C. C. A.] 133 F. 1. "Failure to observe" changed to failure to "use due care." Rock Island Sash & Door Works v. Pohlman, 210 Ill. 133, 71 N. E. 428; Graham v. Middleby, 185 Mass. 349, 70 N. E. 416.

11. Bond v. Bean, 72 N. H. 444, 57 A. 340; Kasjeta v. Nashua Mfg. Co. [N. H.] 58 A. 874; Elwell v. Roper, 72 N. H. 585, 58 A. 507. Requests for special charges of negative propositions are satisfied by clear and correct statements in the general charge of the material and necessary facts which must be established by the plaintiff in order to rethe charge. The practice of taking all the requests and formulating a general charge properly covering the case is to be commended.[12] The court may modify requests by striking out erroneous propositions,[13] but is not required to do so.[14] Where a provision in a request is erroneous, the entire instruction may be refused.[15] An inadvertent clerical error, however, should be corrected.[16]

Repetition.—A requested instruction substantially covered by the charge already given may be refused,[17] even though it contains correct propositions applica-cover. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Tehan, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 145.

12. Instructions are thereby made more clear and unnecessary repetition avoided. Mountain Copper Co. v. Van Buren [C. C. A.] 133 F. 1.

15. International, etc., R. Co. v. Shuford [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1189. Partly inapplicable (City of Rome v. Sudduth [Ga.] 49 S. E. 300). Objectionable in form and substance (Stern v. Leopold Simons & Co. [Conn.] 58 A. 696), also contained matter that was misleading, inaccurate or argumentative (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Burridge, 211 Ill. 9, 71 N. E. 838). Not supported by the evidence. Dolan v. Meehan [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 99. Court is not required to reduce it to accuracy and give the unobjectionable part. International, etc., R. Co. v. Haddox [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1036; Smythe's Estate v. Evans, 209 Ill. 376, 70 N. E. 906; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Roddy [C. C. A.] 131 F. 712. A request which does not state the law correctly may be refused. Frank v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 91 App. Div. 485, 86 N. Y. S. 1018.

Dybedahl [S. D.] 98 N. W. 164.

Forms: "If you believe the deed was accepted as a credit on the debt" assumes that there was a debt. Metcalfe v. Lowenstein [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 362. That release by president of corporation would be effective held error as assuming his power. Stripling v. Maguire [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 164. That "it was not necessary that such agreement or contract be in writing" assumes that there was a contract. Briseno v. International, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 579. In an action by one injured by alighting from a wagon because of fright from a passing train, an instruction to find for plaintiff if she undertook to alight to save herself "from danger" of being thrown from the wagon assumed that there was danger. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Booth [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 121.

Held not to assume facts: Negligence. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Stinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 986. Machine to be in a defective condition. Fries v. Bettendorf Axle Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 859; Chicago Screw Co. v. Weiss, 203 Ill. 636, 68 N. E. 54. Sidewalk to be defective. Considine v. Dubuque [Iowa] 102 N. W. 102. That a foreman failed to inform a workman as to the proper method of handling machinery. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Stinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 986. Instruction reciting elements of damages held not to assume that physical suffering had been endured by reason of injury. Longan v. Weltmer [Mo.] 79 S. W. 655. A fact which would mislead the jury. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Schomberg [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 237.

Forms: That before jury can find for plaintiff they must find certain specified facts does not assume the truth of such facts. Sheridan v. Forsee [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 494. That "if profane language was used," etc., does not assume that such language was used. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 270. If the circumstances are such that negligence can be inferred "such as running at a high rate of speed" does not assume that a train was running at a high rate of speed. Norwich Ins. Co. v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 78 P. 1025. "If you find that the engineer warned plaintiff by certain signals in time for him to get out of the way, he cannot recover" does not assume that it was defendant's duty to warn him by such signals. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Villareal [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1063. "That plaintiff, if guilty of contributory negligence in using the car as alleged in his petition" did not assume his use of the hand car as alleged. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kelly [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1073. "If the jury believed the train operatives announced the station ing,[28] facts admitted or assumed by each of the parties,[29] or facts that are necessary inferences or deductions from other facts proved,[30] or from the ordinary conduct of men[31] or business,[32] may be assumed.

§ 5. Charging with respect to matters of fact or commenting on weight of evidence.[33]—The force and weight to be given to the testimony of respective witnesses is a question for the jury,[34] and as a general rule trial courts are not permitted to comment on the evidence or express an opinion as to its weight.[35] This prior to the train's reaching it," stated in connection with other facts held not to assume that it was a material issue; it being an admitted fact. Harris v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1023. To find for plaintiff "if you believe he was exercising ordinary care for his own safety" does not assume that the plaintiff was not negligent. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Jones [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 852. Charge to find for defendant if plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in using a hand car "at time, place and under conditions alleged by him in his petition" was not objectionable as assuming facts alleged where in other parts of the charge the jury were carefully instructed as to contributory negligence. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kelly [Tex.] 80 S. W. 79.

26. Court may refuse to direct a verdict where the effect would be to disregard the testimony of one of the parties. Hodges v. Pike [Md.] 59 A. 178. That an employe was a vice principal. Such fact depended on evidence introduced by one party. It was not, however, contradicted. Cole v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1138.

27. Chicago Screw Co. v. Welss, 203 Ill. 536, 68 N. E. 54; Terre Haute Elec. Co. v. Kiely [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 658; Abbitt v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 484; El Paso & N. W. R. Co. v. McComus [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 760. Testimony as to the execution of a will and as to its being wholly in writing of testatrix was undisputed. Henning v. Stevenson [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1135. That one who boarded a car with the intention of paying his fare is a passenger. Dallas Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Payne [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 1085. In action for injuries that use of arm was totally destroyed. Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Sage [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1038.

28. Phelps, Dodge & Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 218.

29. Admitted in the pleadings. Markey v. Louisiana, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 84 S. W. 61 An agreement allowing grain to be mixed and used where testimony shows that owner and agent had made statements consistent therewith. Mayer v. Gersbacher, 207 Ill. 296, 69 N. E. 789. That a plaintiff suffered the injuries complained of in his declaration. North Chicago St. R. R. Co. v. Rodert, 105 Ill. App. 314.

30. Negligence in failing to stop a car where there was uncontradicted evidence that signal to stop was given; that the speed was lessened and then began to get faster. Dallas Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Payne [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 1085. That a person neither an officer nor employe was on the premises by invitation. Cameron v. Roth Tool Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 279. That a servant had been discharged. Johnson v. Crookston Lumber Co. [Minn.] 100 N. W. 225.

31. Where several passengers were standing it was not error to assume that a passenger, injured by being thrown down, was obliged to stand. Halverson v. Seattle Elec. Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 1058.

32. It is proper to base an instruction upon the assumption that a motorman operates his car in response to signals from the conductor. Brock v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 219.

33. See 2 Curr. L. 463. See Blashfield, Instructions to Juries, § 38 et seq.

34. Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Otstot [Ill.] 72 N. E. 387.

35. Charge on the facts is prohibited by Rev. St. 1892, § 1088. Southern Pine Co. v. Powell [Fla.] 37 So. 570; Galloway v. Floyd [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 805; Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 678; King v. Ann Arbor R. Co. Mich.] 100 N. W. 783. Instruction as to weight of certain evidence properly refused. Georgia, etc., R. Co. v. Wisenbacker [Ga.] 48 S. E. 146. Reversible error for the court to comment on the strength or probative force of evidence. Kleutsch v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Neb.] 100 N. W. 139.

Instructions held to violate the rule: Intimation of opinion by the court upon the main issue of fact in the case (Insurance Co. v. Leader [Ga.] 48 S. E. 972) leads the jury to believe that the court is of the opinion that a fire was set in a certain way (Franey v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 104 Ill. App. 499). That a certain fact had been established. Kamp v. Coxe Bros. & Co. [Wis.] 99 N. W. 366. A charge "sane men who are innocent as a rule do not make confession of crime" is erroneous because capable of more than one meaning and invades the province of the jury, being an expression of opinion as to the conduct and actions of men. Knapp v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 184. Where the evidence is sufficient to go to the jury, instruction that it is not strong, clear and convincing. Jones v. Warren, 134 N. C. 390, 46 S. E. 740. That a motorman of a street car should do some particular thing in case of emergency. Memphis St. R. Co. v. Haynes [Tenn.] 81 S. W. 374. Instruction calculated to cause the jury to ignore a material fact. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Villareal [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1063. That if the latch on a coal bucket was not in a safe condition, and on account of such unsafe fastening plaintiff was injured, he should recover. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 787. Frequent repetition of a phrase calling attention to a particular circumstance. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Condra [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 528. Assuming that a certain act constitutes negligence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Harton [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1236. As to what would constitute a delivery of cattle to a carrier. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v.

rule may be violated by incorporating the testimony into the charge,[86] but not by Waggoner Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1050. That there was no evidence tending to prove what motive actuated a section foreman to attempt to remove a push car from a track to prevent its being struck by a passenger train. International & G. N. R. Co. v. McVey [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 991. "The evidence must show" with a reasonable degree of certainty. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Burke [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 774. "That the warranted capacity of a motor was 75 horse power." Capacity of motor was in dispute. Wofford v. Buchel Power & Irrigation Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1078. Directing the jury to consider a portion only of the facts in evidence. Mears v. Gage [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 712. In an action for unlawful death, an instruction that in determining damages, "industry of deccased, capacity, ability, and disposition to continue to earn money and contribute to plaintiff's support." Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Phillips [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 107. "If you believe plaintiff got a cinder in his eye while riding on defendant's car, and that at the time he had his face near to and turned to the open window and that a person of ordinary care possessed of information of the danger he was subjected to from flying cinders would not have remained in such position you will find for defendant." Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Flood [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1106. "I want to tell the jury that another court has passed on the facts in this case and rendered judgment for plaintiff." Underwriters' Fire Ass'n v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1072. Authorizing recovery if a master with knowledge that a servant was inexperienced sent him to work around dangerous machinery, without warning. Bering Mfg. Co. v. Femelat [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 869. To find for plaintiff if they find the facts alleged, unless, as a matter of law, the facts alleged establish his case. Id. That the testimony of two witnesses as to the general reputation for truth and veracity is insufficient to impeach. Schuch v. McGuire [Colo. App.] 77 P. 1090. Stating the amount of damages sustained by loss of employment according to his calculation. Heller v. Donellan, 90 N. Y. S. 352. That a father and son in dealings with each other are upon the same footing as strangers. Merrill v. Merrill, 105 Ill. App. 5. That a purchaser of potatoes would not in the exercise of ordinary care be required to examine the entire mass in a car or look at them in other than an ordinary way in order to determine whether they corresponded to the grade ordered. Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1066. In an action for damages because of delay of a train where there was evidence that it remained at the station some hours and that the conductor refused to give any information as to when it would start or the cause of delay, an instruction that defendant was not liable for punitive damages was properly refused as a charge on the evidence. Miller v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 99. That certain facts are shown by undisputed evidence. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Manns [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 254. That a certain state of facts constitutes negligence. City of Rome v. Sudduth [Ga.] 49 S. E. 300. That "sworn officers of the law" are entitled to better credit than plaintiff. Durst v. Ernst, 91 N. Y. S. 13. Instruction to answer an issue of contributory negligence "No" is bad in form. Harmless where there is an entire absence of negligence. Walker v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 135 N. C. 738, 47 S. E. 675.

Held not to violate the rule: Reciting facts and declaring what would constitute negligence. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Kennemore [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 802. To enumerate act of negligence charged in the petition and instruct to find for plaintiff if they found defendant guilty of any negligence alleged. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Purdy [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 37. That the professional standing and experience of expert witnesses may be considered in weighing their testimony. Cosgrove v. Burton [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 667. Reciting certain evidence is not prejudicial to the party who introduced it. Red River, etc., R. Co. v. Hughes [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1135. Submitting a charge corrected by drawing a pencil through some of the words. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Votaw [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 130. Submitting an issue as to whether car operatives knew that the rapid speed at which car was being propelled was frightening a horse and after this did not exercise ordinary care to stop the car. Denison & S. R. Co. v. Powell [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1054. In an action for injuries an instruction that if plaintiff exercised ordinary care in attending to his injuries, defendant was liable, although if he had pursued some other course the injury would not have resulted so seriously. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Flood [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1106. As to weight of admission held not misleading. Sullivan v. Mauston Milling Co. [Wis.] 101 N. W. 679. That a brakeman can assume that a hand-hold on a caboose is in a safe condition where there is proof that the caboose was old and in a dilapidated condition of which he had notice. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Hoskins [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 369. Under Code § 413, prohibiting a judge from expressing an opinion as to the weight of evidence, he may charge that an oral contract to bequeath certain property in return for personal services must be shown by strong, clear, and convincing proof. Earnhardt v. Clement [N. C.] 49 S. E. 49. "You have the testimony as to that." Pickett v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 466. In an action for the price of goods, an instruction that testimony shows that the goods were sold to the secretary of a firm to which they were delivered was not prejudicial where it was added that whether the secretary was authorized to buy the goods was a question for the jury. That he bought the goods was admitted. Turner v. Lyles [S. C.] 48 S. E. 301. Prefacing a requested instruction not previously given by "I did not cover that, gentlemen, in so many words." Wrightsville & T. R. Co. v. Kelley, 119 Ga. 883, 47 S. E. 366. That a servant's work done in the presence of a foreman is equivalent to an assurance by the master that he may proceed to do the work and is not bound to search for danger. Carson v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 46 S. E. 525. Assuming uncontroverted facts. El Paso, etc., R.

reciting admitted facts[37] or facts as to which there is no reasonable ground for difference of opinion;[38] and when the introduction of evidence to prove the existence of evidentiary facts is necessary, the court may instruct as to the effect of the establishment of such fact.[39] In the federal courts it is not reversible error for the judge to express his own opinion of the facts if the jury are given to understand that they are not bound by such opinion.[40]

Conflicting evidence.—The respective value of positive and negative testimony should be called to the attention of the jury.[41] In Texas it is error to instruct the jury to reconcile as far as possible any conflict in the evidence.[42]

§ 6. Form of instruction.[43]—Instructions assuming to cover the entire case should not omit material elements.[44] They should be so framed as to indicate the burden of proof without expressly referring to presumptions of law.[45] They should be fair and not tend to excite prejudice,[46] and when dealing with conflicting evidence they should use the words "from the evidence" after "if your believe,"[47] and should not conclude "plaintiff is not entitled to recover" under a system in which the jury responds to specific issues.[48] An act made the subject of several counts may be submitted as a single proposition.[49]

Co. v. McComas [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 760. Where the facts are undisputed and there could, in reason, be but one inference drawn from them, the court may charge that they constitute negligence. Hot Springs St. R. Co. v. Hildreth [Ark.] 82 S. W. 245. Advising the jury as to the elements they are to consider in determining the preponderance of evidence and after enumerating those elements directing that from all the evidence they are to determine on which side is the preponderance. Miller v. John, 208 Ill. 173, 70 N. E. 27. That jury in assessing damages should take into account physical and mental pain and consider the permanent or temporary character of the injury. Wells v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 204. A charge on a hypothetical state of facts does not violate the rule. Sentell v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 49 S. E. 215. That plaintiff "must recover in this case by the preponderance of the evidence" states the burden of proof and does not direct a verdict. Gray v. Moore [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 293. Stating the reasons why the plaintiff withdrew an issue. Lownsdale v. Gray's Harbor Boom Co. [Wash.] 78 P. 904.

36. Const. 1895, art. 5, § 26, providing that the judge shall not charge with respect to matters of fact. Ballentine v. Hammond [S. C.] 46 S. E. 1000. Reciting the evidence. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Stinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 986.

37. Where applicant has admitted such facts he cannot complain. Bedenbaugh v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 53; Turner v. Lyles [S. C.] 48 S. E. 301. Constitutional inhibition against commenting on the facts refers only to disputed facts. Lownsdale v. Gray's Harbor Boom Co. [Wash.] 78 P. 904.

38. That a shock to the nervous system might be the result of a blow. Davis v. Collins [S. C.] 48 S. E. 469. Under a constitutional provision that judges are not allowed to state the testimony to the jury, the statement must be of a fact in issue and there must be reasonable ground for supposing that the jury may have been influenced in a manner prejudicial to the rights of a party. Turner v. Lyles [S. C.] 48 S. E. 301.

39. City of Guthrie v. Finch, 13 Okl. 496, 75 P. 288.

40. Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co. v. Munich Assur. Co., 123 F. 820. Where the decided weight of evidence on an issue is in favor of one party. Butler v. Barret, 130 F. 944. "For myself, I do not believe for a minute that they did any such thing, but that is a question of fact for you to determine and not me." Sebeck v. Plattdeutsche Volksfest Verein [C. C. A.] 124 F. 11. The judge may in supplementing his charge express his opinion to the jury on the evidence, if necessary to avert a probable mistrial of a case after several prior new trials. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Hoffman, 123 F. 408.

41. Trainmen testified that whistle was sounded. Those within hearing testified that they did not hear it. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Brock [Kan.] 77 P. 86.

42. Williamson v. Smith & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 51.

43. See 2 Curr. L. 464.

44. Element of actual knowledge in assumed risk. Southern I. R. Co. v. Moore [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 479. Excludes from the consideration of the jury certain defenses pleaded. Drumm-Flato Commission Co. v. Gerlach Bank [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 503.

45. Henning v. Stephenson [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1135. In instructing that a state of facts once shown to exist is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown, the court should inform the jury that this is a presumption of fact only and may be rebutted by circumstantial as well as direct evidence. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Lloyd [Kan.] 75 P. 478.

46. In condemnation proceedings, calling attention to the fact that land was taken against the owner's will. Illinois, etc., R. Co. v. Easterbrook, 211 Ill. 624, 71 N. E. 1116.

47. Mansfield v. Morgan [Ala.] 37 So. 393. An instruction which does not contain the element of a finding "from the evidence" is vicious. Staninger v. Tabor, 103 Ill. App. 330.

48. Earnhardt v. Clement [N. C.] 49 S. E. 49; Satterthwaite v. Goodyear [N. C.] 49 S. E. 205.

Verbal inaccuracies and inelegancies[50] in the charge do not constitute ground for reversal unless the jury was misled.[51]

Instruction should be certain.[52]—Instructions should be clear, concise, and plain so as to be readily understood,[53] especially where the evidence is conflicting,[54]

49. Allegations of negligence in different counts. International, etc., R. Co. v. Villareal [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1063. Instruction that the question of negligence defining it, is one of fact, is proper. Economy Light & Power Co. v. Hiller, 211 Ill. 568, 71 N. E. 1096.

50. See 2 Curr. L. 465.

51. Strebin v. Lavengood [Ind.] 71 N. E. 494.

Held harmless: Use of "its" in designating the preponderance of evidence by which a case must be proved. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Schomberg [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 237. "Properly" instead of "improperly." Bussell v. Ft. Dodge [Iowa] 101 N. W. 1126. Use of disjunctive "or" instead of charging on the conjunctive. Robert Portner Brew. Co. v. Cooper, 120 Ga. 20, 47 S. E. 631. Qualifying the rule that a party must prove his case by a preponderance of evidence by adding that "the degree of preponderance is immaterial." City of Aledo v. Honeyman, 208 Ill. 415, 70 N. E. 338. Charge as to negligence though not happily worded held not ground for a new trial. Atlanta R. & Power Co. v. Johnson [Ga.] 48 S. E. 389. "Testimony" instead of "evidence." Russell v. Brunswick Grocery Co., 120 Ga. 38, 47 S. E. 528. "Adverse" and "hostile" used together. Weller v. Wagner [Mo.] 79 S. W. 941. Term "constructive notice" held not misleading. Definition had been given. Texas Southern R. Co. v. Long [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 114. Use of the word "disease" instead of "malaria" in an action for death caused by maintaining a cesspool. Godwin v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Ga.] 48 S. E. 139. "Immediate and proximate" cause was not error; it being apparent that "immediate" did not mean "speedy" but was used in contradistinction to "remote." Id. "Plaintiff" for "defendant." Bowick v. American Pipe Mfg. Co. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 276. "Plaintiff" instead of "plaintiff's intestate." Blackshear v. Dekle [Ga.] 48 S. E. 311.

Inaccurate: "Reasonably safe condition" should be used instead of "good condition." Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 787. "Slightest neglect or negligence" should be avoided. Magrane v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1158. "If it appears from the evidence" without the qualification "by a preponderance." Richardson v. Dybedahl [S. D.] 98 N. W. 164. To believe the theory of one side or the other "right through" where the jury might have believed plaintiff as to the cause of the accident and disbelieved him as to the extent of his injuries. Butler v. Detroit, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 232. "Competent" instead of "credible" in charging that if a witness was disbelieved as to any material fact his entire testimony might be disregarded except in so far as corroborated by other "competent" evidence. Weston v. Teufel [Ill.] 72 N. E. 908.

Held not inaccurate: "Prudent man" is synonymous with "person of ordinary prudence." San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Kiersey [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1045. "Proper care" does not impose too high a degree where the care a carrier is bound to exercise toward a passenger has been defined. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Flood [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1106. Instruction to find for a "round sum" does not require a verdict for a substantial amount. Hunting & Co. v. Quarterman, 120 Ga. 344, 47 S. E. 928. Objection that the court used "mental capacity" instead of "sufficient strength of mind and memory" held not well founded. Will contest. Barricklow v. Stewart [Ind.] 72 N. E. 128. "Impression" is equivalent to "mistake" in an action for reformation of a deed for mutual mistake. Metcalfe v. Lowenstein [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 362. That it is the duty of a master to "securely fasten" and maintain an appliance in a "safe" condition rendered harmless by a subsequent instruction that absolute security or safety was not required. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Perry [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 343. That common carriers are not "absolutely" insurers of the safety of passengers was cured by an instruction accurately defining the degree of care required. Cronk v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Iowa, 349, 98 N. W. 884. The inadvertent stating of an issuable fact affirmatively is not ground for reversal where the issues have been properly submitted. Pearlstine v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. [S. C.] 49 S. E. 4.

52. See 2 Curr. L. 465.

53. Giving confusing and misleading instruction is error. Vocke v. Chicago, 208 Ill. 192, 70 N. E. 325; Smith v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., 94 App. Div. 125, 87 N. Y. S. 1035. "If you believe the evidence you should find for plaintiff" should not be given where the evidence is conflicting. Southern R. Co. v. Bunnell [Ala.] 36 So. 380. The jury should be made to understand what constitutes performance of a contract when such is one of the issues they are to determine. Manning v. School Dist. No. 6 [Wis.] 102 N. W. 356. An instruction that the jury "shall" consider certain facts and if found "should" render such a verdict is proper. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Johnson [Ind.] 72 N. E. 571. Where remote contributory negligence must be considered in mitigation of damages, the jury should not be instructed that they may consider it. They should be charged that it is their duty to do so. Memphis St. R. Co. v. Haynes [Tenn.] 81 S. W. 374. Instruction stating the duties of the operatives of a street car and a teamster should state the legal consequences of a neglect of such duties. Kimble v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1096. Error to instruct to consider facts attempted to be proved. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wicker [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 614. Instruction that street car must give warning on approaching crossing is not defective for failing to state what warning should be given. Story v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 992. Instruction setting forth a clear statement of the nature of the case and the issues is not objectionable. Paxton v. Woodward [Mont.] 78 P. 215. The jury should not be instructed to or slight or doubtful,[55] or where the case is a very close one upon the facts.[56] consider a fact on a wrong theory. Griffin v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 212. That a porter invited a passenger to alight from a moving train. The train was standing. Id.

Held misleading: Instruction as to delivery of cattle in satisfaction of a mortgage held misleading. Drumm-Flato Commission Co. v. Gerlach Bank [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 503. Instructions on "prescription" and "dedication" given together so as to be confusing. Evans v. Scott [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 874. Instruction as to measure of damages for obstruction of a stream held not misleading. Neely v. Detroit Sugar Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 664. A charge in an action for pollution of a stream that damages to the fish could not be assessed was properly refused. Might lead the jury to assume that the right to fish was not a substantial right. West Muncie Strawboard Co. v. Slack [Ind.] 72 N. E. 879. Frequent repetition of a phrase calling attention to a particular circumstance held to render the charge ambiguous. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Condra [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 528. Instruction as to fraud in a sale of merchandise held too indefinite and uncertain. Roach v. Johnson, 71 Ark. 344, 74 S. W. 299. From which the jury might have inferred an erroneous idea of the law. Espenlaub v. Ellis [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 527. Leaving the jury to consider whatever circumstances they desired to in assessing damages. McKinstry v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1108. "Such damages as they 'feel' he is entitled to." Fries v. American Lead Pencil Co., 141 Cal. 610, 75 P. 164. Which allows a recovery of an amount greater than claimed. Miller v. Armstrong, 123 Iowa, 86, 98 N. W. 561. In personal injury case, erroneous as allowing double damages. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Perry [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 343. Warranting an inference that double damages might be allowed. Red River, etc., R. Co. v. Hughes [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1235. "You will find for plaintiff in such sum as will be fair compensation for injuries to hearing, etc., and if you find such injuries to be permanent you should find for him in such sum as would be just compensation," etc. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Tisdale [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 347. "If defendant killed one or both of plaintiff's ponies you will return a verdict for the value of each of the ponies." Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Anson [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 785. Where testimony was conflicting as to the manner in which a collision occurred, an instruction in an action by one injured that the jury might find for him "either on the view you take of his own testimony or on the view you take of the defendant's testimony" is erroneous. No negligence could be inferred from defendant's testimony. Garoskewsky v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 58 A. 1090.

Extent to which evidence may be considered: The jury should be instructed that evidence admitted to impeach a witness can only be considered in that connection. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Riegler's Adm'r [Ky.] 82 S. W. 382. Where evidence is admitted for a special purpose the jury should be instructed to consider it for such purpose only. Bell v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1073. An instruction should limit the consideration, interest, and relationship of the witnesses to the weighing of their testimony. Goulding v. Phillips [Iowa] 100 N. W. 516; Westfeldt v. Adams, 135 N. C. 591, 47 S. E. 816. A rule of court that provides that it will not be ground for exception that the judge fails to instruct the nature of impeaching testimony unless special request is made does not apply when such testimony is marshalled with the substantive evidence of the case. Id.

Held not misleading: Authorizing a recovery in malicious prosecution for "mental anguish, pain, and injury to feelings," does not authorize a recovery for physical suffering. Dwyer v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 303. To state the law as to the duty of a master to furnish a "safe place" though the breach of duty alleged related only to appliances. Terre Haute Elec. Co. v. Kiely [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 658. Where goods of a different quality than called for by a contract were furnished at the special request of a purchaser, an instruction in an action for the price of such goods that the seller was entitled to recover the reasonable value was not misleading. Could have been understood to refer only to the goods furnished at special request. Nugent v. Armour Packing Co. [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 506. Referring to a motorman held not misleading because not designating the particular motorman intended. Galveston City R. Co. v. Chapman [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 856. That one could recover the value of time spent in removing rubbish cast on his premises because of failure of the city to put in culverts could not be understood otherwise than to include labor involved in doing so. Taylor v. Houston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 260. That if the instrument under which plaintiff claimed was intended as a mortgage the jury should so find was not fatally ambiguous for the reason that it was impossible to say whether a special finding was required or whether they should find for plaintiff or defendant. Culver v. Randle [Or.] 78 P. 394. Cautionary instruction as to how oral declarations and admissions should be received held not to have included evidence of oral contracts though mentioned in the instructions. Thompson v. Purdy [Or.] 77 P. 113. "It is for you to determine whether plaintiff (a boy injured on the highway) used such care as boys of his age and discretion usually exercised" did not mislead the jury to believe that age only and not intelligence should be considered. Beaudin v. Bay City [Mich.] 99 N. W. 285. Where two counts of a petition stated the same cause of action in a different form, failure of an instruction to direct on which count there might be a recovery is not error. Maguire v. St. Louis Transit Co., 103 Mo. App. 459, 78 S. W. 838. Not defective as limiting the consideration of contributory negligence to a particular time. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kelly [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1073. Instruction in an action by an engineer for injury sustained in a wreck that if he failed to exercise ordinary care "at the time of the wrecking of his train" he could not recover, does not limit the defense of contributory negligence.

They should specifically call attention to circumstances to which they are referred.[57] A confusing instruction is not ground for new trial if not prejudicial,[58] and an ambiguous[59] or misleading instruction is cured by one correctly stating the law.[60] Where special questions are submitted, the instructions should be confined to an explanation of them and not extend to the law applicable to the ultimate facts.[61] In Kentucky the court may, at the request of a juror, explain the instructions after the submission of the case.[62]

Argumentative instructions are properly refused.[63]

The instructions should be consistent.[64]—Where one instruction is inconsistent with others given, the erroneous one is not cured by the correct one;[65] but in order to require a reversal, the inconsistent paragraphs must leave the jury in doubt as to the law.[66]

§ 7. Relation of instruction to pleading and evidence.[67]—The instructions must be confined to the issues made by the pleadings.[68] Requests not based on Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Sage [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1038. Where the only part of crops in question was the landlord's share, an instruction that a sale without reservation carried growing crops was not misleading, nor prejudicial to the tenant. Abbott v. Abbott [Kan.] 75 P. 1040. Instruction not to consider evidence stricken need not identify such evidence. Considine v. Dubuque [Iowa] 102 N. W. 102.

54. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Smiesni, 104 Ill. App. 194; Gillespie Home Tp. Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Prather, 105 Ill. App. 123.

56. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Appell, 103 Ill. App. 185.

57. "Conduct improper under the instructions herein" was error. No language to which the words could apply. There were, however, many facts relied on not mentioned in the instructions and it might be inferred that these were excluded from consideration. Weston v. Teufel [Ill.] 72 N. E. 908.

58. Freeze v. White, 120 Ga. 446, 47 S. E. 928.

59. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Hanthorn, 211 Ill. 367, 71 N. E. 1022, citing other Illinois cases.

60. City of Aledo v. Honeyman, 208 Ill. 415, 70 N. E. 338. A misleading charge is ground for reversal. Southern Pine Co. v. Powell [Fla.] 37 So. 570.

61. Lyon v. Grand Rapids [Wis.] 99 N. W. 311.

62. Civ. Code Prac. § 321. City of Covington v. Bostwick [Ky.] 82 S. W. 569.

63. That the jury could look to a fact, if it be a fact. Lynn v. Bean [Ala.] 37 So. 515. See 2 Curr. L. 466.

64. See 2 Curr. L. 466.

65. Impossible to tell upon which the verdict was based. Harte v. Fraser, 104 Ill. App. 201; Phelps, Dodge & Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 218; Flannery v. Campbell [Mont.] 75 P. 1109. Inaccurate special charges in conflict with the general charge leave the jury without any proper guide. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Terhune [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 74.

Held inconsistent: "That uncontradicted evidence shows a certain fact" and "that whether such fact exists is a question for the jury." Eddy v. Bosley [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 565. "It is not the duty of a railroad company to furnish absolutely safe cars, etc., for its employes to work with" and "It is the duty of the company to furnish reasonably safe appliances and use ordinary care to see that they are kept safe." St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Corrigan [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 554. In one clause assumes the existence of a contract and in another that there was not. Williamson v. Smith & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 51. Instructions in irreconcilable conflict. Stern v. Westchester Elec. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 870. As to measure of damages. Lane v. Calby, 95 App. Div. 11, 88 N. Y. S. 465.

Held not inconsistent: In one place tells the jury to find from the evidence whether a certain person was insolvent and in another place charges that the evidence shows without dispute that he is insolvent. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Durham [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 860. That if the floods were unprecedented defendant would not be liable is not inconsistent with "that though they were unprecedented he would be liable if the trestle was defectively constructed and such defect was the cause of the damage. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Kiersey [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1045. Authorizing a recovery "if a third person was defendant's agent or held out by him as such is not in conflict with one directing a verdict for defendant if such person was not his agent. Farmers' Bank of Dearborn v. Fudge [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1112. Instruction as to contributory negligence held not in conflict with one as to duty of defendant to avoid injury after discovery of plaintiff's peril. Hyman v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 1030. Separate instructions presenting separate defenses that obstruction was not dangerous and was not on the highway but on defendant's premises. McClure v. Feldmann [Mo.] 84 S. W. 16.

66. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Durham [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 860. An instruction that defendant was liable for all the results of the malicious prosecution, "no matter what happened" is cured by a subsequent instruction that he is liable only for what damages would naturally arise or be expected to happen as a probable consequence of the wrongful act. Laing v. Mitten, 185 Mass. 233, 70 N. E. 128.

68. See Blashfield Instructions to Juries, such issues are properly refused.[69] The submission of such an issue may be rendered harmless where no evidence was introduced to support it.[70] An issue made by evidence not admissible under the pleadings, but admitted without objection, need not be mentioned in the instructions;[71] such instructions, however, are not erroneous.[72] Instructions having no relevancy to the matters in controversy should not be given.[73] Instructions should be applicable to and limited to the evidence § 84, where it is stated that there is a diversity of opinion as to whether instructions must be strictly within the issues made by the pleadings.

That cattle were roughly handled in transit. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Dolan [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 297. Charge as to burden to prove "each and every item" error when some are admitted. Oliver v. Love [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 335. Instruction as to an issue not tendered is ground for new trial. Hydinger v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 746. Error to permit verdict for defendant on a defense not pleaded. Duff v. Willamette Iron & Steel Works [Or.] 78 P. 668; Underwriters' Fire Ass'n v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1072. Where both parties testified that a contract was entered into but differed as to its terms, the right to recover on a quasi contract should not have been submitted. Williamson v. Smith & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 51. Whether one was negligent in a particular other than that alleged should not be submitted. Fauboin v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 56. Charge restricting question of apparent danger to facts alleged in the petition was not erroneous where no other circumstances from which negligence could be inferred was shown. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Kelly [Tex.] 80 S. W. 79; Heinzle v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 848. Error to instruct that a verdict may be based on a cause not alleged, however meritorious or satisfactorily proved. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Guyton [Fla.] 36 So. 84. On an issue as to whether a contract had been complied with, instruction presuming a requirement of the contract not shown by pleading or evidence. Stafford v. Christian [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 595. Where no affirmative defense is set up, error to charge that defendant must establish his defense by a preponderance of evidence. Strickland v. Capital City Mills [S. C.] 49 S. E. 478. Allowing a recovery on a cause of action not pleaded is erroneous. Heller v. Donellan, 90 N. Y. S. 352. There being nothing in the pleadings to support a recovery of certain interest, it was error to instruct to consider it. Sullivan & Co. v. Owens [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 373. Where a complaint did not charge any negligence in failing to furnish rules and regulations for safety of employes, it was error to charge that it was the master's duty to furnish such rules. Texas Short Line R. Co. v. Patton [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 881. Where it was not alleged that defendant was negligent in not transporting stock on a regular stock train, it was not necessary to instruct that his failure to do so was not negligence. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Lovelady [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1040.

Pleading sufficient: A general plea of contributory negligence is sufficient to warrant its submission generally or in any and all forms in which the issue is made by the evidence. Stewart v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 979. A charge adjusted to a plea is not rendered erroneous because it conflicts with a theory which is not pleaded. Teasley v. Bradley, 120 Ga. 373, 47 S. E. 925.

tain correct statements of law.[77] An instruction having no support in the evidence is not ground for reversal where not prejudicial.[78] It is the province of the court to determine whether there is evidence to render a particular instruction relevant,[79] and in determining this it is not to be considered as upon demurrer to the evidence. The question is, is there evidence to which it is referrable.[80]

§ 8. Stating issues to jury.[81]—It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the issues to be tried.[82] This duty is not fulfilled by referring them to the pleadings,[83] especially where the pleadings are voluminous or involved;[84] but if the pleadings are short and unambiguous it is not error.[85] The use of the words "as charged in the declaration" is approved in Illinois.[86] It is not required that issues should be submitted in any particular form.[87] An instruction which misstates the issues as made by the pleadings[88] or allows the jury to find the existence of elements of a cause of action not stated therein is erroneous.[89] Error in stating the issues made by the pleadings must be excepted to if it is desired to make it ground of appeal.[90]

§ 9. Ignoring material evidence, theories, and defenses.[91]—Instructions so framed as to withdraw from the jury the consideration of material evidence are erroneous.[92] Requests for such instructions may be refused.[93] So, also, it is

82. No definite issue submitted. Allen v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1142. In order that the jury may not be misled, abstract principles of law instructed should be connected with the evidence. Parker v. National Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 811.

83. Chicago City R. Co. v. Mauger, 105 Ill. App. 579; Magrane v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1158. Referring the jury to the pleadings to determine for themselves what the issues are is reversible error. Bering Mfg. Co. v. Femelat [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 869. Held harmless in this case; the issues having been fully stated in other instructions. Lackland v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 101 Mo. App. 420, 74 S. W. 505.

Held not to refer jury to the pleadings: Referring to the petition for the purpose of identifying a thing about which an issue was raised is not a reference to the petition to find what the issues are. Dwyer v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 303. Instruction if the drawer "drew the drafts described in the petition" does not refer the jury to the pleadings for a description of the drafts where such drafts were in evidence. Farmers' Bank v. Fudge [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1112.

Note: Practice of referring jury to the pleadings is condemned in Texas. Bradshaw v. Mayfield, 24 Tex 482; Barkley v. Tarrant County, 53 Tex. 257; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Scott [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 26.—From Bering Mfg. Co. v. Femelat [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 869.

Stoltenberg, 211 Ill. 531, 71 N. E. 1081. Where there are several counts in a declaration charging negligence, the statements intended to be descriptive of the injury should be "in the manner charged in the declaration or in one or more of the counts thereof." Cole v. Central R. Co., 103 Ill. App. 160.

87. Issues held properly submitted. Indian Mountain Jellico Coal Co. v. Asheville Ice & Coal Co., 134 N. C. 574, 47 S. E. 116. Submitting issues separately (piecemeal) condemned but held not reversible error. Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 788. An instruction which simply requires the jury to find whether the evidence establishes the existence of a specific group of facts which, if true, would, in law, establish a plea of contributory negligence and if so to find for defendant, is a proper method of presenting the issue. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Buiger [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 557.

As to the effect of part only of the facts established. Lakeside Mfg. Co. v. Worcester [Mass.] 72 N. E. 81; Blackmore v. Ellis [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 1047. As to a case as shown by an auditor's report, where there was other evidence introduced; being a ruling as to a part of evidence considered separately from the rest. American Tube Works v. Tucker, 185 Mass. 236, 70 N. E. 59. Request confined to certain enumerated facts the effect of which is to withdraw from the jury all other facts. Hodges v. Pike [Md.] 59 A. 178. Based on a theory of the case not supported by the evidence and ignoring evidence qualifying supposed facts. Mayer v. Gersbacher, 207 Ill. 296, 69 N. E. 789. A request to charge the legal effect of a portion of the testimony of a sole witness is properly refused where the same witness on cross-examination contradicts the matters to which the request relates. Hardeman v. Bell, 120 Ga. 342, 47 S. E. 919.

94. Request based on part only of the issues involved is properly refused. Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co. [Me.] 59 A. 285. Instruction on negligence held to ignore issue of willful injury. Maggioli v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 1026. Erroneous as withdrawing a material issue. Durst v. Ernst, 91 N. Y. S. 13; Metcalfe v. Lowenstein [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 362; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Matthews [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 71. Where the court's charge fails to present an issue involved, it is error to refuse a request presenting such issue. Consumers' Cotton Oil Co. v. Wilkins [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 870. As to whether stock was carefully handled by a carrier during transit. This was an act of negligence alleged. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Lovelady [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1040. Where issue of fraud in procuring a release of damages for injuries was eliminated from consideration of the jury. Johnson v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1197. Where one preferred to ride on a coal car rather than in a caboose, the question as to whether he became a passenger as well as the question whether he might become one should have been submitted. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Huff [Tex.] 81 S. W. 525.

95. Where contributory negligence is pleaded, an instruction authorizing a recovery regardless of such defense. Bering Mfg. Co. v. Femelat [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 869. Ignoring necessity of exclusive possession in adverse possession. Chastang v. Chastang [Ala.] 37 So. 799. Request omitting essential qualifications properly refused. Lynch v. Waldwick [Wis.] 101 N. W. 925. Instruction to find for plaintiff if material allegations of her complaint had been proved was erroneous as ignoring a defense of contributory negligence, evidence of which had been introduced. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wicker [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 614. Charge that unauthorized sale is valid if proceeds be accounted for is bad for omitting exception in favor of bona fide holders. Aleshire v. Lee County Sav. Bank, 105 Ill. App. 32. Charging that there is no presumption of law from the relationship of parties to a fraudulent sale is misleading when if considered in connection with other facts proven the circumstance of relationship might have been of controlling influence. Merrill v. Merrill, 105 Ill. App. 5.

96. Instructions which though correct as to one theory on which a recovery is sought but which exclude other theories are properly refused. City of Columbus v. Anglin [Ga.] 48 S. E. 318.

Held not to ignore issue: That in determining whether depositary had in his mill a sufficient quantity of wheat of like grade as that deposited by plaintiff they should take into consideration all the facts and circumstances proven did not obscure material issues presented by other instructions. Mayer v. Gersbacher, 207 Ill. 296, 69 N. E. 789. An instruction upon a given question is not erroneous because it does not conform to an alleged theory of one of the parties when such theory under the evidence is itself erroneous. Chalkley v. Central of Georgia R. Co. [Ga.] 48 S. E. 194. Held not to ignore theory that contract of sale called for actual delivery. Jones-Pope Produce Co. v. Breedlove [Ark.] 83 S. W. 924.

97. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 248. Eliminating issue of delays and rough handling of cattle en route. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Alexander [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1015. Ignoring issue of discovered peril. Central Tex., etc., R. Co. v. Gibson [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 351. Making failure to exercise ordinary care a bar to recovery without the condition that it must have contributed to the injuries. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Cannon [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 778. Which takes from the jury the consideration of every issue except the one presented by it. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Purdy [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 37.

§ 10. Giving undue prominence to evidence, issues, and theories.[99]—If a court undertakes to rehearse the evidence it should cover all the essential facts on both sides;[1] particular facts[2] or portions of the testimony should not be singled out and given undue prominence,[3] even when such facts cannot be considered except in connection with the issue to which they are limited,[4] and such a practice is not authorized by the principle which authorizes the court to advise the jury as to the relative value of certain species of evidence.[5] Singling out particular witnesses,[6] or the witnesses of one party, is improper.[7] Undue prominence may be given by reiterating certain features of the case,[8] and while the practice is con-

6. In a personal injury action, it is improper for the court to intimate that the plaintiff can best describe his injuries. Butler v. Detroit, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 232. Undue prominence to details of defendant's testimony. Crabtree v. Dawson [Ky.] 83 S. W. 557.

Rule not violated: Where his name was mentioned but once in the charge and then on an issue which was answered as a proposition of law under an instruction. Lance v. Butler, 135 N. C. 419, 47 S. E. 488. Instructions relative to the testimony of attorneys held not open to the objections that it singled out and cast discredit upon it. King v. Hanson [N. D.] 99 N. W. 1085.

7. Charging that they may consider the interest which certain witnesses feel in the result of the case growing out of their relation to a party and give it such weight as they think it entitled to. Zapel v. Ennis, 104 Ill. App. 175.

8. Bath v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 993. Repeatedly submit-demned, a restatement, if correct, does not constitute ground for reversal.[9] Not every repetition, however, will amount to giving undue prominence.[10] Special significance should not be given to the evidence of one party by speaking of it in detail while opposing evidence is not mentioned.[11]

§ 11. Definition of terms used.[12]—The meaning of technical terms, which occur in the instructions should be explained,[13] and it is error to refuse an instruction requested for this purpose.[14] In some jurisdictions it is necessary to give such definitions,[15] but the prevailing rule seems to be that a failure to do so will not be ground for reversal unless such an instruction was requested.[16] Terms, the meaning of which are generally understood, need not be defined.[17]

§ 12. Rules of evidence; credibility and conflicts.[18]—The court may instruct that a preponderance of evidence is not necessarily on the side of the greater number of witnesses.[19] A "clear" preponderance of evidence is not required.[20] "Preponderance" should not be qualified by "fair."[21] It is not necessary that the "conscience" of a juror be satisfied.[22] The hypothesis in an instruction should be on the "reasonable satisfaction" rather than if the jury believes that it is probable.[23]

The credibility of a witness is for the jury.[24] It is proper to call attention

ting the issue of contributory negligence. Adams v. Weakley [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 411. Frequent repetition of terms. Cranfill v. Hayden [Tex.] 80 S. W. 609. Where the general charge has fully presented a party's theories, to give special charges presenting the same theories operates to unduly emphasize his side of the case. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Terhune [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 74.

"Ordinary care" as applied to the conduct of either of the parties. Chicago City R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 208 Ill. 267, 70 N. E. 294. Definition of preponderance of evidence approved. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Johnson [Ind.] 72 N. E. 571; St. Louis & O. R. Co. v. Union Trust & Sav. Bank, 209 Ill. 457, 70 N. E. 651; Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28. Defined as that "greater and superior weight of testimony as reasonably satisfies your minds." Ball v. Marquis, 122 Iowa, 665, 98 N. W. 496. Instruction that plaintiff must prove certain facts "to the satisfaction of the jury" did not require too great a degree of proof where the court had charged that he must prove his case by a preponderance of evidence and defined such term. Chaffin v. Fries Mfg. & Power Co., 135 N. C. 95, 47 S. E. 226. Giving a definition of "negligence" which had not been approved held not reversible error. Faubion v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Tex. Civ. "Joint ownership" or to state elements constituting it. Gaston v. Johnson [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 276. "Negligence." Taylor v. Houston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 260. "Preponderance of evidence" and "ordinary care." Georgia, etc., R. Co. v. Young Inv. Co., 119 Ga. 513, 46 S. E. 644. "Respondeat superior," where the rule is correctly stated in another instruction. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. White, 209 Ill. 124, 70 N. E. 588.

17. "Agent." Harper v. Fidler [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 1034.

to facts tending to affect their credibility[28] or the weight of their testimony,[26] and in connection with such a charge to add that "you are not required to believe as jurors what you would not believe as men."[27] This is not violating the rule that the testimony of one witness should not be singled out by special comment.[28] But an instruction that tends to belittle testimony,[29] or that the jury "should" consider certain facts as affecting credibility, is an invasion of the province of the jury.[30]

"Falsus in uno falsus in omnibus" is applicable only where a witness swears to a falsehood willfully and knowingly.[31] It may be given in a case where the only 698; Acolia v. Elizabeth, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Law] 57 A. 257; Ball-Barnhart-Putman Co. v. Lane [Mich.] 97 N. W. 727. It is error for the court to tell the jury that a witness knows what he is talking about. Pardridge v. Cutler, 104 Ill. App. 89.

25. Under a statute declaring that the presumption that a witness speaks the truth may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies, an instruction to judge his credibility by his "appearance" is erroneous. Fries v. American Lead Pencil Co., 141 Cal. 610, 75 P. 164. An instruction that the testimony of a witness who had intentionally sworn to statements inconsistent with his own testimony might be disregarded was erroneous. It should also have been stated that the statements must have been knowingly false and on a material matter. Doyle v. Burns, 123 Iowa, 488, 99 N. W. 195.

26. Instruction held not erroneous as telling the jury how to weigh evidence. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Johnson [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 571. The court may tell the jury they "should" consider the interest of the witnesses, their manner and conduct while testifying. Strebin v. Lavengood [Ind.] 71 N. E. 494. Especially where they are cautioned against drawing an unfair inference because of such interest. Lovely v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 894. Error to refuse such an instruction. Kavanaugh v. Wausau [Wis.] 98 N. W. 550. Where a party has made no admissions, it is proper to refuse an instruction that what he has testified to against his interest is to be taken as true and what he has testified to in his favor is to be given only such weight as the jury believe from all the evidence it is entitled to. Conner v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 145. Where a general instruction on the credibility of witnesses, authorizing the jury to consider their interest in the result of the litigation has been given, an instruction specifically referring to plaintiff stating that admissions against interest are to be taken as true and testimony in his favor given only such weight as the jury believe from all the evidence in the case it is entitled to may be refused. Montgomery v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 79 S. W. 930. Where it has been instructed that it is the duty of the jury to consider the interest of all witnesses in determining their credibility, it is not error to make such reference to the plaintiff specifically. Strasser v. Goldberg [Wis.] 98 N. W. 554. Instruction that expert testimony should be received with "great caution" modified by substituting the words "with other evidence," held proper where the succeeding part of the instruction was cautionary. Buckalem v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 1176. The court may instruct that the testimony of one credible witness may be entitled to more weight than the testimony of many others, if there is reason to believe that the latter testified falsely, and is not corroborated by other witnesses or circumstances proved. Strickler v. Gitchel [Okl.] 78 P. 94. Charge that the jury are under the duty of considering the interest of witnesses is harmless where they are further charged that they are the exclusive judges of the evidence and credibility of the witnesses. West Muncie Strawboard Co. v. Slack [Ind.] 72 N. E. 879.

27. Dodge v. Reynolds [Mich.] 98 N. W. 737.

28. Kavanaugh v. Wausau [Wis.] 98 N. W. 550.

29. Disparaging the testimony of a witness. Norman Printers' Supply Co. v. Ford [Conn.] 59 A. 499. That testimony should receive little regard. Bradley v. Gorham [Conn.] 58 A. 698. To refer to expert testimony as "boughten testimony." People v. Jennings, 132 Mich. 662, 94 N. W. 216. Instruction that a deposition is not to be taken as true; that it is to be considered and given the same weight as other testimony, etc., held erroneous. City of Covington v. Bostwick [Ky.] 82 S. W. 569. That expert testimony is not binding on the jury but that they must give it such weight as they deem it entitled to, held not to belittle such testimony. Morrow v. National Masonic Acc. Ass'n [Iowa] 101 N. W. 468.

30. Word "may" should be used. Southern R. Co. v. State [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 174. Instruction that if the jury believe witness testified under fear of losing his employment or fear of offending, such fact should be considered, is erroneous. Gregory v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 546.

31. Instruction that "jury are judges of credibility of witnesses and of the weight to be given their statements, and if you believe" from all you have seen and heard "at the trial, that a witness has sworn falsely you may disregard his testimony" is too broad. Held not to have misled the jury in this case. Eikenberry v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 360. Where testimony is entirely contradictory an instruction that the jury "may discredit the entire statement of any witness believed to have testified falsely in any material particular" is proper. Walker v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 282.

testimony to which it could apply was either true or knowingly false,[32] and where applicable it is error to refuse it.[33]

§ 13. Admonitory and cautionary instructions.[34]—The giving of cautionary instructions is largely within the discretion of the court,[35] and such instructions must be so framed as not to be misleading.[36] A charge that a verdict must not be based on inference or guess is too broad.[37] It is not error to refuse to caution the jury to ignore matters not included in the pleadings nor involved in the proof.[38] It is proper to instruct not to be influenced by passion or prejudice and that a verdict rendered against the law and evidence would be set aside.[39] In an action against a corporation, an instruction that the case should be considered the same as a case between two private citizens is correct.[40]

§ 14. Necessity of instructing in writing.[41]—In Oklahoma when special instructions are desired, they must be reduced to writing, numbered and signed, and delivered to the court at the conclusion of the evidence.[42] In Illinois instructions cannot be modified otherwise than in writing.[43] It is within the discretion of the court to waive the requirement that requests for instructions must be in writing,[44] and though a statute so requires, a cause will not be reversed because of a failure to do so, unless prejudice resulted.[45]

§ 15. Presentation of instructions.[46]—Noting at the head of each instruction the volume and page of the statute or report supposed to authorize the instruction held harmless where the jury did not have the books in the jury room.[47]

§ 16. Additional instructions after retirement.[48]—The court has a large discretion in the matter of giving additional instructions after the jury has retired,[49] and only in case of abuse, resulting in injury, will an exercise of such discretion be reviewed.[50] It may supplement the original charge whenever no substantial right will be infringed.[51] As a general rule such communications to the jury should be made in open court,[52] but it is held that they may be given in the absence of counsel;[53] it not being the duty of the court to send for counsel.[54] The court may enter the jury room and withdraw an improper instruction.[55]

§ 17. Review.[56]—Objections and exceptions below.[57]—It is presumed on appeal that the jury understood the instructions.[58] No exception lies to the charge as a whole.[59] Where no specific assignment of error is made, the charge will be considered no further than to determine whether it states an abstractly correct principle of law;[60] but error in failing to submit a material issue may be complained of under a general assignment alleging error in the charge given.[61] Objections to instructions will not be considered on appeal unless special exception thereto was taken below,[62] at the time they were given,[63] in the manner prescribed by rules of court.[64] In Federal courts, exceptions must be taken while the jury are at the bar.[65] Exceptions must point out the defects complained of.[66] Errors will not be reviewed on any other ground than that assigned.[67] Where an erroneous instruction is excepted to, a party may avail himself of the error though he requested no special instruction.[68]

The record of appeal must set out the language or a succinct statement of the instructions complained of[69] and the evidence upon which it is based.[70]

refusal to give a correct instruction is deemed harmless where no substantial rights are prejudiced.[87] If an incomplete instruction is supplemented by ample instructions on the point, the error is nonprejudicial.[88] When, however, misleading instructions have not been corrected, and it is impossible to say from the record that justice has been done, there is ground for reversal.[89]

A bad instruction is cured only by its withdrawal,[90] and as a general rule an incorrect instruction is not cured by a correct one subsequently given,[91] especially where a case is close upon the facts,[92] or if the latter instruction does not refer to the former,[93] or it is expressly stated that they are to be considered in connection with each other.[94] The giving of an erroneous instruction is not reversible error if the jury have not been misled.[95]

Matters relating to fraternal mutual benefit associations[96] and marine insurance[97] are treated elsewhere.

§ 1. Insurance laws, regulations and supervision in general.[98]—The insurance business is of such a nature as to be subject to regulation under the police power of the state,[99] and supervisory and visitorial powers are usually conferred on a state officer.[1] The legislature may enact a law relative to one class of insurance so long as it is general in its terms as to that class.[2]

§ 2. Corporations and associations doing an insurance business. A. Corporate existence, character, management, rights and liabilities.[3]—Employers' liability insurance is within a statute authorizing life insurance companies to insure against accidents to persons.[4]

A statute authorizing a life insurance company to change its methods of doing business from the assessment to the legal reserve, flat premium plan does not work a violation of its contracts with certificate holders refusing to make the change, though their assessments are increased because of the lesser number subject to assessment and the death of members, where the right of amendment is expressly reserved in the articles of association.[5]

An article of a mutual fire insurance company authorizing it to make an assessment as often as necessary on premium notes to settle losses and pay expenses does not preclude it from issuing insurance for cash premiums.[6]

The board of directors and the president of a mutual life association are governed by the articles of incorporation and the statutes of the state defining and limiting their respective duties and powers.[7] Fidelity bonds of the president, though running to the association, may be enforced by anyone for whose benefit they were executed.[8] Such association acts as trustee in the collection of funds and their distribution to the beneficiaries entitled to them,[9] and its obligations end with such collection and distribution.[10] It may follow any part thereof which has been wrongfully diverted to another purpose and recover it for the benefit of such beneficiaries,[11] and this right passes to a receiver winding up its affairs.[12] Under the Iowa code, the articles and by-laws of a mutual life association and its notices of assessments must state the objects to which the money to be collected is to be devoted, and no part of the proceeds thereof can be applied to any other purpose, any excess being set aside to be used for like purposes.[13] The act applies only to assessments made, and not to fixed charges for contingent expenses, such as an agent's commission charge on renewals.[14] The president of an association is not, in the absence of knowledge, liable on his bond for the error of its bonded cashier, whose duty it is to receive the moneys and apportion them to their proper funds, in depositing money received from investments to the credit of

12. Sherman v. Harbin [Iowa] 100 N. W. 622. Neither, however, can recover on the bond of an officer misappropriating such funds, more than the actual damages resulting therefrom. Id. New bond executed by president on his re-election held not a renewal of old one but a separate and independent undertaking. Sherman v. Harbin [Iowa] 100 N. W. 629. Provisions of bond held broad enough to cover all delinquencies complained of. Id. Act of president in applying proceeds of assessments to payment of beneficiaries to whom they do not belong is mere breach of duty and not act involving fraud or dishonesty on his part so as to require notice to be given to surety. Id. Neither can recover for funds wrongfully paid to one beneficiary which in fact belonged to another, where the latter has been subsequently paid in full from funds subsequently accruing. Sherman v. Harbin [Iowa] 100 N W. 622. The receiver cannot recover on the bond of president for moneys erroneously withdrawn from the benefit fund for the payment of expenses of litigation and the investigation of claims, except for the benefit of unpaid beneficiaries. Sherman v. Harbin [Iowa] 100 N. W. 622, 629. Amendment of by-laws as to issuance of certificates of membership held not to have changed association's method of doing business. Sherman v. Harbin [Iowa] 100 N. W. 622.

13. Where notices contained names of deceased members and stated amount of assessment for "above deaths," held that fund could only be applied on particular losses specified [Code, § 1788]. Sherman v. Harbin [Iowa] 100 N. W. 622, 629. A "safety clause" in a mutual life association policy providing that, if share equitably due from mortality fund should be insufficient to pay a claim in full, it might draw sufficient from its surplus and reserve to meet the deficiency, or call on the members for a pro rata share thereof, held not to limit indemnity payable under policy to proceeds of assessment or eliminate liability to pay the fixed amount of insurance. Sherman v. Harbin [Iowa] 100 N. W. 622. The president has no right to pay the portion of the proceeds of an assessment belonging to one beneficiary to another, even though the association is liable for the payment of the claim of the latter in full. Id. The officer wrongfully diverting the fund is liable on his official bond to beneficiaries filing their claims after the association becomes insolvent only for such sum as they were entitled to receive from it. President, who, assessments being insufficient to pay policies in full, made payments from proceeds of other assessments. Id.

14. Does not prevent agreement to pay agent commissions on renewals. Schrimplin v. Farmers' Life Ass'n, 123 Iowa, 102, 98 N. W. 613. In any event, such charge is an expense incident to the business and its payment is not a diversion of the fund. Id.

the wrong fund.[15] The directors of a mutual life insurance company who are authorized to distribute the surplus earnings of the company may declare a dividend provisionally, conditioning its distribution upon the payment of the next maturing annual premium.[16] An agreement whereby an assessment life insurance association, on assuming the policies of another association, undertakes to pay the agent of the latter his renewal commissions charged on policies written by him is not ultra vires.[17] In an action by an agent for such commissions, the burden is on defendant to make a showing from which the court can determine the amount due.[18] If it does not do so, it cannot complain if the court adjudges it liable for the largest amount which plaintiff's evidence tends to establish as his due.[19]

A receiver of a trust and life insurance company, appointed in sequestration proceedings, is vested with title to all its property and choses in action, and represents both the creditors and stockholders, and may sue to set aside an illegal transfer of its property previously made.[20] An action for that purpose brought by a judgment creditor, suing on behalf of all creditors and stockholders who may come in and be made parties, must be treated substantially as one brought on behalf of the receiver.[21] The assets of the company constitute a trust fund for the benefit of its creditors.[22] Any assignment thereof depriving them of their lien is a fraud on them and may be set aside.[23]

The receiver of a co-operative fire insurance company cannot maintain an action to recover an alleged preference under the insolvency laws, since the company itself could not do so.[24] The payment by such a company of money borrowed to pay losses is not, as against its members, a fraudulent preference.[25]

An order or decree of a court having jurisdiction levying an assessment upon the policy holders of an insolvent mutual insurance company without personal notice to them is conclusive as to all matters relating to the necessity for making it and the amount thereof,[26] but it is not conclusive upon any one of them as to the question whether his relation to the company is such as to subject him to liability therefor, or as to any other defense personal to himself.[27] Policy holders are not estopped to defend an action for such assessments because they have met with a loss and have been paid the full amount of their policies.[28] Limitations against the right to enforce liability of policy holders begins on insolvency of the corporation and does not stop running until they are served with summons and made parties.[29]

Taxation of the property of domestic or foreign companies within the state is governed by the provisions of the general and special revenue laws and is treated elsewhere.[30]

(§ 2) B. Conditions necessary to engage in insurance business, and certification and withdrawal of right.[31]—In Illinois, the insurance superintendent is authorized to file a bill for an injunction to restrain an insurance company which has abandoned its charter from doing business in that state and for the appointment of a receiver.[32]

Under the New York insurance law, companies must make a deposit with the superintendent of insurance to secure the payment of policies.[33] The distribution of such fund should be made by the superintendent himself, and he cannot be compelled to pay it over to the receiver.[34] The court having acquired jurisdiction may direct its distribution.[35]

§ 3. Foreign insurers and companies.[36]—The power of an insurance company to do business in a state other than that where it was organized is derived from the express or implied will of the legislature thereof.[37] Where there is no positive prohibitive statute, the presumption, under the law of comity, prevails that a state permits a foreign company to do any act authorized by its charter or the law under which it is created, unless it is manifest that such act is obnoxious to the policy of its laws.[38] This rule applies to companies authorized by their

to assessment on its insolvency, and by-laws held not to impose any liability on them beyond amount of cash deposit. Id.

charters to carry on two or more distinct classes of insurance business, though the statutes of the state where it proposes to carry on business do not provide for the organization of such companies.[39]

The legislature of a state may absolutely exclude foreign insurance companies,[40] or it may allow them to do business therein upon such conditions as it may see fit to impose.[41] It also has power to revoke or recall a permission once granted,[42] or to add new conditions after such companies have commenced to do business;[43] but rights acquired cannot be taken away except by express legislative action.[44] Provisions imposing retaliatory taxes or licenses on such companies,[45] and providing for the revocation of the license of a company which shall remove actions brought against it to the Federal courts, without the consent of the plaintiff, have been held to be valid.[46] Retaliatory tax laws become operative immediately upon the existence of the conditions against which they provide,[47] and regardless of whether any agency has been established or attempt to do business has been made in the state against whose companies it is directed.[48]

As a general rule foreign companies are required to file a stipulation appointing the insurance commissioner or some other public officer as their agent upon whom process may be served.[49] Such stipulations are for the benefit of the

after he had abandoned his employment.[69] Where an agent induces an applicant to increase the amount applied for through another agent, the agent procuring the first application is not entitled to commissions on such increase.[70] An agent is, in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, bound by a general custom among insurance companies to allow commissions to the agent procuring a new application rather than to the one procuring the original application which has been postponed or abandoned.[71]

The fundamental duty of an insurance agent is to obey his instructions.[72] If he fraudulently issues a policy at a lower rate than authorized, against the express directions of the company, and continuously and purposely fails to make report thereof, and the latter is thereby compelled to pay a loss which it might otherwise have avoided, such agent is liable both for the premium which he should have exacted and for the full amount of damages suffered by reason thereof.[73] In case the risk is not a prohibited one, the measure of damages is the difference between the premium charged and that which should have been charged, or, in case the premium has not been paid, the full amount which should have been exacted.[74] The fact that, owing to its provisions, the policy could not have been canceled before the loss, even if the company had been informed of its issuance, is no defense.[75] The acceptance of the premium actually exacted does not constitute an election of remedies, or a ratification or estoppel.[76] The petition in such case need not negative contributory negligence.[77]

An agent inducing an applicant by means of false representations to take out insurance in an insolvent company is liable for the damages resulting therefrom.[78] An agent of a foreign company is not ordinarily personally liable for misrepresenting to an applicant that the company has been admitted to do business in the state, thereby inducing him to take out a policy of insurance, where such policy is not thereby rendered invalid.[79] By statute in some states, the agent of any foreign company which has not complied with the laws in relation to such companies is made personally liable on all contracts of insurance made by or through him on its behalf.[80] Such statutes apply only to contracts of insurance on property situated in such state.[81] The liability is on the contract and cannot be enforced after the expiration of the time within which, by its terms, action may be brought thereon.[82]

The business of an agent who represents several companies, and whose customers leave the matter of the selection of the company to him, has a well recognized value, which is the subject of sale.[83] A former agent of a company may solicit its customers and patrons in behalf of any company he may see fit, so long as he does not use for that purpose information gathered exclusively from such company's property, or abridge its enjoyment of existing contracts by inducing improper cancellations.[84]

An agreement by the company to pay its agent a reasonable commission on renewals received upon the insurance negotiated by him is not unreasonable and void as operating to tie up the future accruing funds, and to control the discretion of future boards of directors.[85]

A carrier, in goods in his possession as such, to the full extent of their value, against a loss for which he may possibly become responsible. Under marine policy insuring charterer of vessel against "general average," insurer held liable for loss resulting from a jettison of a part of the cargo, chargeable to the ship, cargo, and freight in general average. Munich Assur. Co. v. Dodwell & Co. [C. C. A.] 128 F. 410. Question whether he has a right to recover under the policy is not to be determined, after the loss, by inquiring whether he is then liable therefor to the owners. Has right to insure against his own negligence and the necessity of inquiring whether loss was caused thereby. Id. Bailee or agent holding property for purposes of repair or sale. Johnston v. Abresch [Wis.] 101 N. W. 395.

related by blood or marriage,[92] or the beneficiary must be dependent on the insured for support,[93] must have a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit or advantage from his continued life,[94] or there must be some contract between them, the fulfillment of which would be prevented by death.[95] The insured has an insurable interest in his own life,[96] and a creditor in that of his debtor.[97]

Evidence that the insured was a person of no property and had no capacity or ability to earn money to pay premiums is admissible to show that the policy was a mere wager.[98] Evidence that the policy was procured pursuant to an agreement with plaintiff having no insurable interest to pay the premiums and take the proceeds and that plaintiff, though suing as administrator, is in fact seeking to recover so as to carry out such agreement, is not objectionable as an attempt to vary the policy by parol.[99]

§ 6. Application.[1]—If ambiguous, the application should be construed most strongly against the insurer.[2]

§ 7. The contract of insurance in general, and general rules for its interpretation.[3]—Insurance on life includes all policies in which the payment of insurance money is contingent on the loss of life.[4]

Essentials and validity; acceptance.—An insurance contract is not within the statute of frauds, and may be oral.[5] Hence an acceptance by the company of the Indiana, by statute, the beneficiary under a life policy must have an insurable interest in the life of the insured, where assessments are paid by any person other than the insured and without his written consent. Acts 1883, p. 204, c. 136, § 6. Sec. 9 makes it felony to procure insurance on life of another without his knowledge or consent. American Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bertram [Ind.] 70 N. E. 258.

5. Mattingly v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. [Ky.] 83 S. W. 577. Specific performance can only be decreed where the contract is complete in all its parts, and nothing remains for construction. Not enforceable where it is made by an agent representing two companies and the one to take the risk is not specified. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Trimble, 25 Ky. L. R. 1497, 78 S. W. 462. Director of mutual insurance company held to have authority to make oral contract insuring a member pending action on his application, and that defendant could not, under the circumstances, escape liability by rejecting application after loss oc-proposal for insurance contained in the application constitutes a valid and enforceable contract, though no policy is issued.[6] This of course does not apply where the contract provides that the insurance shall not take effect until the policy is issued or delivered,[7] or where such is the evident intention of the parties.[8] Nor does a contract to write and deliver a policy render the insurer liable for loss occurring before such delivery in the absence of a contract for temporary insurance.[9] Although in writing, the policy may be subsequently modified by parol, even though it contains a provision to the contrary.[10]

The general rule that to establish a bi-lateral contract, when the parties are at the same place, there must be an offer and an acceptance actually communicated to the offerer, applies to contracts of insurance.[11] Hence the insurer is not liable until it communicates to the insured its acceptance of his application.[12] Delivery of the policy to the insured must ordinarily be shown,[13] in the absence of a provision makcurred. Loomis v. Jefferson County Patrons' Fire Relief Ass'n, 92 App. Div. 601, 87 N. Y. S. 5.

6. Fire insurance: Evidence sufficient to sustain verdict for plaintiff on appeal. Herring v. American Ins. Co., 123 Iowa, 533, 99 N. W. 130. Binding contract may be consummated with mutual fire company without issuance of policy, in absence of agreement or provision in by-laws to the contrary. Evidence held to show contract. Instructions approved. Alliance Co-operative Ins. Co. v. Corbett [Kan.] 77 P. 108.

Life insurance: Insurer liable for loss before issuance and delivery of policy if contract completed by meeting of minds. Summers v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. [Wyo.] 75 P. 937. Contract not finally executed until delivered and accepted, though it may be so far assented to as to give right of action thereon. Stringham v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 44 Or. 447, 75 P. 822.

7. Summers v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. [Wyo.] 75 P. 937. Application and receipt of sum to be applied as first premium held not to constitute preliminary contract for temporary insurance, but to render insurance effective only when application is accepted and policy signed by secretary and issued. Cooksey v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. [Ark.] 83 S. W. 317.

8. Evidence held to show intent that policy should not take effect until policy was issued. Summers v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. [Wyo.] 75 P. 937. Complaint in action to recover premiums on nondelivery of policy held not to be construed as alleging that agents themselves had authority to issue it. Id. Fact that petition demands damages for refusal to issue policy on which first premium has been paid, held not to affect right of plaintiff to recover in that action amount so paid, as money had and received. Id.

9. Consumers' Match Co. v. German Ins. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 440. Where a provisional certificate of insurance is issued for a definite period to be then merged in a permanent policy and the amount paid therefor to be applied on the first year's premium, unless the company shall decide not to accept the risk, in which event such insurance may be terminated at any time prior to its expiration by notice to the insured and a return of the amount paid, and no such notice is given or return made, the insured is entitled to assume that his permanent policy takes effect at the end of such period, and the company is liable on his death shortly thereafter, notwithstanding the fact that no permanent policy has been issued. Keen v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 131 F. 559.

10. Provision as to change of ownership. Mattingly v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. [Ky.] 83 S. W. 577.

11. Busher v. New York Life Ins. Co., 72 N. H. 551, 58 A. 41.

12. No liability where application for life policy was taken by agent and forwarded to company, which issued policy and returned it to agent, who received it after applicant's death and never delivered it. Busher v. New York Life Ins. Co., 72 N. H. 551, 58 A. 41. Application was accompanied by payment on account of first premium, and receipt stipulated that policy should not be in force until first premium was paid in full and policy should be delivered to insured while in good health. Policy was issued and sent to agent, but applicant died before he was notified of this fact and before balance of premium was paid or policy delivered. Held no contract. Kilcullen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 966. The pastor of a church who invites proposals for insurance without authority is the agent of the insurer in receiving and transmitting executed policies which require mere acceptance by church trustees, hence his knowledge of an acceptance is sufficient to complete the contract before its communication to the principal. While trustee was remitting premium, property burned. National Mut. Church Ins. Co. v. Trustees M. E. Church, 105 Ill. App. 143.

13. The burden of proving an unconditional delivery is on plaintiff (Coffin v. New York Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 127 F. 555), and it still rests upon him, notwithstanding the fact that he makes out a prima facie case by showing that it came to him from the custody of the insured, complete in form. Evidence held to show conditional delivery only, it being insufficient to impeach receipt for "inspection" only (Id.). A recital of payment of the first premium is not a substitute for due proof of delivery. Id. Where the application provides that the policy shall not take effect until the policy is issued and the first premium is paid, and the agent holds the policy, after its issuance

ing it effective before delivery.[14] Where it is retained by the agent, at the request or with the acquiescence of the insured until after the fire, when it is delivered to him on demand, it will be regarded as delivered when issued.[15]

Conflict of laws.[16]—The contract is governed by the laws of the state where it is completed,[17] which is generally held to be in the state where the policy is delivered and the premium paid,[18] though there seems to be some conflict of authority in this regard.[19] Matters relating to the performance of the contract are governed by the laws of the place where such performance takes place.[20] Parties may incorporate into the contract the laws of a state other than that in which they reside, provided they are not in conflict with the laws or public policy of the latter state,[21] and may provide that it shall be governed thereby.[22] Such a provision does not require its validity and effect to be determined by such laws, but merely makes them a part of the contract, to be construed and enforced as any other part thereof.[23] Though the policy provides that it shall be construed according to the laws of a foreign state, they will be disregarded where no evidence of them is introduced.[24]

Construction.[25]—A policy of insurance, when plain and unambiguous in its terms, is a contract between the parties, to be enforced only according to its provisions and in the same manner as any other written contract.[26] Its meaning, like by the company, under an agreement with the applicant, whereby it is to be delivered to him on a specified date on payment of half the premium in cash and the execution of the insured's note for the balance, the company is not liable on the death of the insured before the policy is delivered to him and the premium is paid. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Lucas, 25 Ky. L. R. 2052, 79 S. W. 279.

14. Under custom binding company as soon as agent took application, held that where, on cancellation of policy, agent at once wrote plaintiff's name on margin of policy of defendant company, and after fire informed him that he had the policy, and where the defendant delivered the policy and accepted the premium after the fire with full knowledge of the facts, and did not offer to return it until after suit was brought, it was liable. Southern Ins. Co. v. Hannah [Miss.] 37 So. 506. Policy held "issued," within provision in application making contract effective when that was done, when signed and executed at office of company, though not delivered. Stringham v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 44 Or. 447, 75 P. 822.

15. Young v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. [S. C.] 47 S. E. 681. Where agent hands policy to officer of insured, who accepts it and then hands it back with the request that the agent keep it for him for a few days, there is a completed contract. that of all other contracts, is to be determined from the language used by the parties as embodying their intention, in the light of the circumstances under which it was made,[27] which should receive a reasonable construction,[28] and be taken in its plain, ordinary, and popular sense, unless a contrary intention appears.[29] When the language is ambiguous, it is to be understood in the sense in which the insurer had reason to suppose it was understood by the assured,[30] and extrinsic evidence in regard to the relations of the parties, the subject-matter and circumstances surrounding its making is admissible.[31] The position taken by defendant in regard thereto may also be looked to to determine its meaning.[32] All the terms of the contract should be considered together,[33] and if possible should be so construed as to give effect to every clause.[34] Special provisions control general ones,[35] and the written must prevail over the printed parts.[36] The policy will if possible be construed so as to give it effect rather than to make it void.[37]

Contracts of insurance will be strictly construed against the insurer and liberally construed in favor of the insured,[38] particularly when prepared by the insurer,[39] or when they are ambiguous in their terms;[40] but this rule does not go to the extent of disregarding a plain provision of the policy.[41]

Warranty clauses will be construed most favorably toward the insured.[42] Forfeitures are not favored and it is generally held that they will not be enforced unless specifically and definitely provided for in the contract,[43] though it has been held that when the situation is such as will, as a matter of law, carry with it a forfeiture as a penalty, that result will follow whether expressly stipulated for or not.[44] Provisions creating them will be construed strictly against the insurer and liberally in favor of the insured.[45] If susceptible of more than one meaning, that most favorable to the insured should be adopted.[46] The fact that a forfeiture is specifically provided for in other clauses and omitted in the one under consideration will tend to show that it was not intended.[47] Where the language used is equally susceptible of two interpretations, the one giving greater indemnity and sustaining the claim will be adopted.[48] The rights of the parties cannot be affected by subsequent expressions of the agent's opinion in regard to them.[49] An agreement for a policy of insurance contemplates the issuance of a policy containing the ordinary conditions, and when delivered, such conditions are binding on the insured.[50] should be construed as a testamentary instrument in the light of statutes relating to devises and bequests.[51]

The contract will be presumed to have been made with reference to statutes then in force,[52] which become a part thereof.[53] Any provisions in conflict therewith are, of course, void.[54]

The standard fire policy adopted by statute is generally made the exclusive contract between the parties,[55] and notwithstanding the fact that it is dictated by law, it must be construed under the rules applicable to similar contracts voluntarily entered into.[56] The power of the legislature to prescribe a standard form of policy cannot be delegated.[57] Statutes authorizing a state officer to prepare a form of policy do not give him authority to insert provisions therein which are contrary to existing statutes.[58] Statutes creating stipulations in the contract to which the parties have not agreed should be strictly construed.[59] The rights of the parties to a policy issued by a foreign company are not affected by subsequent legislation in the state of its domicile.[60]

Where a policy calling for extended insurance does not designate what mortality tables are to be used in calculating it, it will be presumed that the parties contracted with reference to the tables in use when it was issued,[61] and the company cannot thereafter adopt a table less favorable to the insured.[62]

Provisions and conditions in riders are to be construed as constituting a part of the policy to the same extent and with like effect as if embodied therein.[63] Any doubt as to whether a paper attached to the policy is a part of it will be resolved against the company.[64] Where the policy consists of one sheet of four pages, containing the main contract, conditions, a copy of the application, and endorsements, the entire sheet will be considered to be the policy.[65] By statute in some states, the application cannot be considered as a part of a policy of life insurance which refers to it, or be received in evidence, unless a correct copy thereof is attached to the policy.[66]

The members of a mutual company are presumed to have knowledge of its by-laws and are bound by them.[67] This is particularly true when the by-laws are printed upon the same sheet as the policy and the attention of the assured is called to them by a notice in the body of the contract.[68] Provisions printed on the same sheet as the policy and referred to therein as the by-laws of the company will be regarded as what they purport to be until impeached.[69] A provision unreasonable as a by-law may be good as a contract.[70]

§ 8. Premiums and premium notes, dues and assessments, and payment of same.[71]—A level rate annual renewal premium policy is one on which the regular annual renewal premiums provided for are to be kept down to a level with the first one by the application of the profits earned on the policy to that end.[72]

The giving of notice of premiums is usually held to be an essential prerequisite to a forfeiture for their nonpayment.[73] But this does not generally apply where failure to give notice is preceded by acts which amount to an abandonment and rescission of the contract by both parties.[74] In Louisiana, the company cannot cancel the policy for nonpayment of a premium note without any special demand and notice to the insured.[75]

Under the laws of New York, no life policy may be declared forfeited or lapsed for nonpayment of premiums within one year thereafter unless notice shall be given of the time when the payment is due.[76] The fact that the notice allows ten days of grace within which payment may be made does not invalidate it,[77] nor does the fact that it does not contain the name and address of the agent to whom the premium receipt has been sent relieve the insured from making payment at the home office in accordance with the terms of his policy.[78] The affidavit of any officer, clerk or agent of the company or of any one authorized to mail such notice that it has been duly addressed and mailed is made presumptive evidence that it has been given.[79] This statute has no extraterritorial effect, and does not of itself apply to contracts made by New York companies outside of that state,[80] in the absence of provisions in the policy showing a contrary intention.[81]

Policies generally provide for forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums,[82] but no forfeiture will take place in the absence of an express provision to that effect.[83]

83. Nederland Life Ins. Co. v. Meinert [C. C. A.] 127 F. 651.

A requirement of "actual payment" does not exclude all other methods of payment than those made in cash.[84] Where the company delivers a policy reciting a payment of the premium before such payment is actually made, it will be held to have thereby extended credit to the insured.[85] If it delivers the policy under such circumstances that it goes into effect at once, and accepts, in lieu of cash the promissory note of the insured payable to the company, which is delivered and accepted as payment, a failure to pay the note will not work a forfeiture.[86] But where, as a favor to the insured, credit is extended to him for some portion of a cash premium, a failure to pay the note representing such portion is regarded as a failure to pay the premium, and the policy is forfeited.[87] A provision that the policy shall be void if the premium or any note given therefor shall have been due and unpaid for a specified time before the loss occurs is binding, and the policy is canceled by the mere failure to pay within such time, in the absence of a waiver.[88] Neither a demand for payment or notice of an intention to enforce the forfeiture is necessary.[89] Payments of semi-annual premiums on a policy once in force are conditions subsequent, of which the insurer may or may not avail itself to defeat a recovery.[90] Hence the burden of proving their nonpayment is on the insurer.[91]

As a general rule, an agent may not accept property in lieu of cash for premiums, in the absence of express authority to do so.[92] But where he actually pays the premium in cash to the insurer, it is immaterial whether he has received cash from the insured or not.[93] An agreement by an insurance agent to pay premiums out of his own funds is sufficient consideration for a premium note.[94] The policy cannot be forfeited for nonpayment of such note in the absence of a provision to that effect.[95]

There can be no forfeiture for nonpayment where the insured tenders the amount due within the time limited by the policy, and the same is refused.[96] He need not repeat the tender without notice from the insurer that it will be received,[97] but unpaid premiums, with interest, will be deducted from the amount due on the policy.[98] A tender of a bank check is good where it is refused on some ground other than that it is not lawful money, which is not well taken.[99]

The rights of the parties are fixed by the death of the insured.[1] Hence, where the policy has been issued but not delivered before the death of the applicant, such rights cannot be altered by a payment of the premium after his death.[2]

If the beneficiary agrees to pay the premiums, both he and the insured are bound by the provisions of the policy relating to their payment.[3]

Where, under an assignment of wages by the insured for the purpose of paying the premium, he leaves the instalment due in the hands of his paymaster, his duty in relation thereto is fully performed, and payment will be regarded as made until he is notified to the contrary.[4]

Payment to an agent having actual or apparent authority to receive premiums is, of course, binding on the company.[5]

As in the case of other contracts, one signing a premium note is conclusively presumed to know its contents and terms, and his failure to read it does not alter the rule.[6]

A settlement of the amount due for premiums on an employer's liability policy, based on the number of employes, made with full knowledge of the facts, is an accord and satisfaction, and precludes a recovery of an additional sum for omitted employes.[7]

A trustee in bankruptcy may, for the benefit of the estate, make the payments necessary to mature a tontine life policy payable to the bankrupt or his assigns or legal representatives, and will be required to do so when such course is clearly in the best interest of the creditors.[8] The receiver of an insolvent mutual insurance company is entitled to recover on premium notes given to the company the amount of an assessment levied by him, on proof of the notes, the assessment, and the giving of the notice required by the charter.[9]

9. Notes provided for payment in such proportions and at such times as directors might, agreeably to their charter, require.

The premiums on policies of insurance on the lives of partners, taken out in pursuance of the partnership agreement, are, as between the partners, partnership debts.[10]

By statute in Illinois, insurance companies are prohibited from making or permitting any discrimination between insurants of the same class and equal expectation of life, and both the companies and their agents are made jointly and severally liable to a penalty for so doing.[11] It is no defense to an action for such penalty that a rebate of premium was allowed by the agent without the knowledge of the company and in violation of its instructions.[12]

§ 9. Warranties, conditions and representations.[13]—A substantial compliance with the contract is sufficient.[14]

A warranty is a statement of fact made by the insured, on which the insurer relies, and on the strength of which he enters into the contract.[15] Affirmative warranties consist of a representation in the policy of a fact.[16] Promissory warranties are those that require that something shall be done or not done after the policy takes effect.[17]

In the absence of statutory prohibition, the parties may, as in the case of other contracts, incorporate into the contract of insurance such conditions as they see fit, whether they are material or immaterial.[18] If there is no agreement as to the materiality of a statement, its falsity does not affect the policy unless the misstatement is, as a matter of fact, material to the risk assumed by the insurer.[19] If a representation partly fails, but is true or is complied with, in so far as it is essential to the risk, the policy remains in force.[20]

Where no specific inquiry has been made as to facts material to the risk, and there is no misrepresentation in regard thereto by the insured, and no intentional concealment thereof, their existence will not invalidate the policy.[21] In such case

A material misrepresentation, in reliance on which the policy is issued, avoids the policy, whether made intentionally, or through mistake and in good faith. Evidence held to show that life policy was issued in reliance on untrue statements in regard to health of insured. Bankers' Life Ins. Co. v. Miller [Md.] 59 A. 116. False and fraudulent statements in regard to material matters, though not warranties, will be presumed to be intentional where they relate to matters peculiarly within insured's knowledge, as misrepresentation as to amount paid on contract price of building. Dunham v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 34 Wash. 205, 75 P. 804. Under the California Code, breaches of immaterial provisions do not avoid the policy unless the contract so provides. Civ. Code, § 2611. Policy may declare that violations of specific provisions shall avoid it. Bastian v. British American Assur. Co. [Cal.] 77 P. 63.

21. Fact that gambling was carried on over plaintiff's saloon held not to avoid policy, where he did not know that company regarded it as increasing the risk. Ameri-

it will be presumed that the insurer has obtained all the information desired.[22] But a misrepresentation or concealment in regard to a fact specifically inquired about, though not material, avoids the policy,[23] a question and answer being equal to an agreement that the matter is material.[24] Whether the parties have agreed that a particular statement shall be a material part of the contract is a question of interpretation.[25] The intention of the parties controls,[26] hence the fact that statements are called warranties is not necessarily conclusive if they are not warranties within the fair meaning and spirit of the contract.[27] The absence of a forfeiture clause may be considered in determining whether they are intended as representations or warranties.[28] With respect to matters which the insurer must know are not within the personal knowledge of the applicant,[29] and with respect to those calling for statements of belief or opinion, the letter of the contract will be controlled by its spirit and purposes, and the answers will be held warranties only of the bona fide belief and opinion of the applicant.[30] This does not apply to statements calling for a mere matter of fact within the knowledge of the applicant.[31] In order to avoid the policy for misrepresentations, the insurer must allege that it would not have been issued but for the alleged false statements.[32]

The falsity of a statement which the parties have expressly warranted to be true, or agreed shall constitute a material part of the contract,[33] or the breach of a promissory warranty, ordinarily avoids the policy, whether actually material to the risk or not.[34] Their materiality cannot be inquired into.[35] By statute in some states, no conditions or warranties may be construed as other than mere represen-

Where the application is made a part of the contract and the answers to questions therein are made warranties, a false answer avoids the policy,[38] even though the applicant acted in good faith and believed his answers to be true.[39] Representations in the application are not warranties where they are not made so, and are not made a part of the policy or referred to therein.[40] In such case they need

In Tennessee, no misrepresentation or warranty will be deemed material or will defeat the policy, unless it is made with intent to deceive, or unless the risk of loss is thereby increased [Acts 1895, p. 332, c. 160, § 22 (Shannon's Code, § 3306)]. Continental Fire Ins. Co. v. Whitaker [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 119. Such act is a valid exercise of the police power, and is not class legislation, though applying to nonassessment companies. Id. Under this statute a breach of the iron-safe clause (Id.), and misrepresentations as to incumbrances have been held not to avoid the policy on the ground that they do not increase the risk (Id.).

In Kentucky, all statements or descriptions in the application are deemed representations and not warranties, and do not prevent a recovery unless material or fraudulent. St. 1903, § 639. Agreement of warranty held part of application, and incorporated into contract by reference thereto in policy. Webb v. Bankers' Life Ins. Co. [Colo. App.] 76 P. 738. The company has a right to require, as a condition precedent to entering into the contract, that they be truthfully informed as to how recently the applicant had need of medical advice. Dwyer v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 72 N. H. 572, 58 A. 502. Where the policy provided that answers to questions in the application should be regarded as warranties, and the policy provided that it and the application contained the complete contract, and the policy contained what purported to be a copy of the application, alleged answers not shown therein were immaterial. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Gibbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 398. Where the application, which is made a part of the policy, provides that the policy shall be void in case any statements are untrue or fraudulent, the answers to material questions are warranties. Winn v. Provident Life & Trust Co., 91 N. Y. S. 167.

39. Webb v. Bankers' Life Ins. Co. [Colo. App.] 76 P. 738; Bankers' Life Ins. Co. v. Miller [Md.] 59 A. 116. Evidence held to show untruthfulness of warranty that applicant had never been postponed or declined by any other company. Webb v. Bankers' Life Ins. Co. [Colo. App.] 76 P. 738. Evidence held to show that statement that insured had never been seriously ill was false and fraudulent, where he had been inmate of sanitarium for treatment of alcoholism. Winn v. Provident Life & Trust Co., 91 N. Y. S. 167.

40. As to health of insured. Bankers' Life Ins. Co. v. Miller [Md.] 59 A. 116. When the application is made a part of the policy, representations therein are read into and imported into the contract, but do not thereby lose their character as representations and become warranties. Brignac v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 112 La. 574, 36 So. 595.

not be strictly and technically accurate, but must be essentially and substantially true when they relate to matters material to the risk.[41] They must be construed and interpreted in connection with the language used in the policy.[42] A provision that the policy shall be void if any material fact or circumstance stated in the application has not been fairly represented by the insured refers exclusively to the conditions upon which the contract was entered into and the policy issued, and not to the conditions of the insurance or facts arising subsequent to the issuance of the policy.[43]

Where the policy provides that any misrepresentations shall avoid it, it is immaterial that the misstatements were not contained in the application, but were oral.[44] The fact that misrepresentations were not communicated to the home office is immaterial, where the agent has authority to and did issue the policy himself.[45] By statute in some states every express warranty made at or before the execution of a policy must be contained in the policy itself, or in another instrument signed by the insured, and referred to in the policy, as making a part of it.[46]

In Iowa, the violation of a condition rendering a policy void before loss does not defeat a recovery, if it is made to appear that it did not contribute to the loss.[47] This does not apply to a condition precedent to the taking effect of the contract.[48] In Michigan, no fire policy may be declared void for breach of condition unless the loss occurs during such breach.[49]

An insurance solicitor who takes the application of the insured is the agent of the company, notwithstanding a provision in the policy making him the agent of the insured.[50] Hence the insured is not guilty of misrepresentation as to matters erroneously stated in the application, where he tells the truth to the agent who writes the application,[51] nor as to matters inserted therein by the agent, in regard to which he made no statements, even though he signs such application without

If the facts are known to the agent, a misstatement in the application will not avoid the policy, reading it.[52] This is not the case, however, where the insured knows that his answers have been improperly recorded,[53] unless the agent represents to him that they are sufficient as written.[54]

Where the agent inserts in the policy as warranties facts different from those stated to him by the insured, the latter may have it reformed in equity.[55]

Fire insurance.[56]—Provisions in fire policies requiring the insured to be the sole and unconditional owner of the property are valid, and a breach of warranty to that effect works a forfeiture.[57] The whole policy is avoided where title to a part of such property is not in the insured.[58] A company insuring property located in the Cherokee Nation at a time, when by statute the land of such nation was not subject to individual ownership, is estopped to claim a forfeiture under a clause making the policy void if the property is not owned by the insured in fee.[59] purpose of fixing the value of the structure, and noncompliance therewith does not charge the company with notice that the premises were vacant.[69]

Where the policy provides that it shall be void if the property be or becomes covered by a chattel mortgage, the existence of such an incumbrance on a part of the property avoids the whole of the insurance, even as to the portion of the property not covered thereby.[70] The policy is avoided though the mortgage is thereafter set aside as a fraud upon creditors under the insolvency laws.[71] The foreclosure of a mortgage does not work a forfeiture under a provision that no lien or incumbrance shall fall or be placed on the property.[72]

Provisions requiring the insured to keep certain books[73] and to make certain inventories,[74] which he must keep in an iron safe during other than business hours, and making their production a condition precedent to recovery, are valid.[75] A substantial compliance therewith is generally held to be sufficient, and no forfeiture will result where the information sought to be preserved thereby can be obtained from the other sources.[76] There seems to be some conflict of authority in this regard, however.[77] The burden is on the company to show that the fire occurred at a time when the books were required to be kept in the safe.[78]

Not substantially complied with by the preservation of slips from a cash register. Monger v. Delaware Ins. Co. [Tex.] 79 S. W. 7. Occasional clerical errors or omissions in keeping books will not avoid the policy, but the company must show that the books as kept would not enable it, with reasonable certainty, to arrive at the actual loss sustained. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Fitze [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 370. Provision held not complied with. Everett-Ridley-Ragan Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co. [Ga.] 48 S. E. 918. Books held sufficient. First Nat. Bank v. Policy held to require that inventory next preceding date of policy and one taken afterwards should be kept and produced. Continental Ins. Co. v. Cummings [Tex.] 81 S. W. 705. A provision requiring the keeping of the books and inventory "and also the last preceding inventory, if such has been taken," in a safe, held to mean last inventory taken before issuance of the policy. Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Stenson [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 866. Under rider waiving provision requiring itemized inventory of stock within 60 days, and providing for taking of inventory once a year, failure to take an inventory is not a defense where the loss occurred before the expiration of the year. Howerton v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 105 Mo. App. 575, 80 S. W. 27. Policy requiring inventory to be taken within 12 months of loss does not require the taking of an inventory every 12 months. 75. Vital question is not whether they were kept in safe, but whether failure to keep them there prevented their production. Rundell v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 517. The fact that the cash book of a country store had not been placed in the safe at 10 P. M., and cannot be produced because destroyed by fire occurring at that hour, does not afford a defense under the "iron safe clause," where a lunch counter connected with the store was still in operation at that hour. German Ins. Co. v. Kistner, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 165.

78. First Nat. Bank v. Cleland [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 337.

A policy so written as to place separate valuations upon separate and distinct classes of property will ordinarily be regarded as severable, and a breach of a condition covering one class will not affect the validity of the insurance on the other classes,[79] in the absence of fraud, or increase of risk on the whole of the property, or any unlawful act against public policy.[80] This rule applies even in cases of breach of warranty,[81] and even though the policy provides that any breach of a condition shall render the entire contract void.[82]

Life insurance.[83]—A provision that the policy shall not be binding unless the insured is in sound health upon the date of its delivery applies only to unsoundness of health arising after the application and medical examination.[84] Actual and not apparent good health at such time is essential to liability.[85] The insurer is under no obligation to investigate the state of insured's health when the premium is paid,[86] but it is the duty of the applicant to disclose such changes in his physical condition as occur pending the negotiation which would influence the judgment of the company in passing on the risk.[87] Before any temporary ailment can be called a disease within the meaning of a warranty in the policy, it must be such as to indicate a vice in the constitution, or be so serious as to have some bearing upon general health and the continuance of life, or such as, according to common understanding, would be called a disease.[88]

Accident insurance.[89]—Restrictions in accident policies rendering the insurance nugatory and valueless by attempting to avoid liability for injuries sustained by the insured while performing necessary acts embraced in his classified occupation are inoperative.[90] The incurring of risks and dangers ordinarily incident to such occupation is not a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.[91]

80. Under policy covering building, furniture and fixtures, and stock of merchandise, a breach of the inventory and iron safe clause only prevents recovery of loss on merchandise. Miller v. Delaware Ins. Co. [Okl.] 75 P. 1121, and cases there cited. To make one guilty of voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, he must intentionally have done some act which reasonable and ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous.[92] In such case the general principles of negligence apply, and a recovery cannot be had unless the insured exercised ordinary care.[93] The burden is on defendant to show such exposure.[94]

The term disease in an accident policy does not cover the temporary derangement of the functions of some organ.[95]

A provision for double indemnity in case the insured is killed while riding in or on a public conveyance does not require that he should have been killed while riding inside the car.[96] A provision exempting the company from liability in case the insured is killed while attempting to enter or leave a public conveyance does not preclude a recovery for death caused by being thrown from the platform of such car when not attempting to alight.[97]

Policies frequently exempt the company from liability in case the insured is killed while fighting,[98] or in case death results from injuries intentionally inflicted.[99]

Insurance against embezzlement.—A provision in a bond, guarantying an employer against loss, sustained by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of any of his employes, requiring him to use all diligence in prosecuting any such employe to conviction, and making such action, when requested, a condition precedent to recovery thereunder, only requires him to use due diligence in endeavoring to secure a conviction.[1]

§ 10. The risk or object of indemnity.[2]—The risk covered to a large extent depends upon the terms of the policy.[3]

Employer's liability insurance.[4]—Such policies generally limit liability to cases where injuries result from certain specified occupations.[5] Under a policy indemnifying the insured against a "loss actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue," there can be no recovery until a judgment recovered against the insured by an employe is paid.[6] The fact that the insurer undertakes the defense of an action against the employer by an injured employe does not preclude it from relying on a provision making payment of the judgment a condition precedent to an action on the policy.[7] Under a policy insuring against liability and loss resulting therefrom for a specified term, the insurer is liable where an employe is injured during such term, though plaintiff's liability to the employe is not fixed by judgment until after its expiration.[8] A provision that the insurer shall not be liable for injuries caused by failure of the insured to observe any statute for the safety of his employes is not repugnant to a preceding general statement agreeing to indemnify against common law or statutory liability to servants.[9] To take the liability of an employer for injuries to his employes, under the provisions of a contract with third persons, out of the provisions of the policy, the contract must be such as to make the liability not that of one engaged in the described occupation but a separate and independent liability.[10]

5. Work in and about the construction of a new building to replace an old one held not additions to or repairs to the latter within meaning of employer's liability policy. Andrus v. Carpenter killed while removing scaffold in water tower held to have been engaged in making "ordinary repairs" and to have "been on duty in an occupation described" within the meaning of employer's liability policy, describing plaintiff's business as manufacturing cotton seed oil, including refining and ginning. received while the insured is insane is valid.[12] Total disability means inability to do substantially all the business necessary for one to do in carrying on his ordinary occupation.[13] Murder is an accidental death.[14] So is death resulting from blood poison due to cutting a corn with a knife.[15] Insured's pallor, emaciation, and decline are visible marks on the body within the provisions of a policy covering only injuries leaving such marks.[16]

Fire insurance.[17]—An exception to liability for a fire loss should be clearly expressed.[18] Policies generally exempt the company from liability for losses caused by order of the civil authorities,[19] or by explosives.[20] As a rule no exceptions can be added to those contained in the standard policy prescribed by statute.[21] The terms of the policy determine the liability for losses on additions to buildings insured thereunder.[22]

Mistake.—The company and not the insured is chargeable with the agent's failure to correctly report the risk as contracted for.[23] An agent's authority to issue a policy continues until he has completely executed it by issuing one embodying the terms of the binding contract therefor;[24] hence, where he, by mistake, omits words necessary to make it embody the binding contract for insurance, he may insert them, even after loss has occurred.[25] This rule is not changed by the fact that the policy is left in the agent's custody until after the loss.[26] Errors in the description of the location of the property will not avoid the policy if, after eliminating them, sufficient remains to clearly point out its actual location.[27] Where there is a mistake in reducing the agreement to writing but no mistake in the contract itself, the policy will be reformed after loss.[28] A court of equity will reform and enforce contracts of insurance on the ground of fraud or mistake.[29] Relief will not be granted unless a plain mistake is clearly made out by satisfactory and unquestionable proof.[30] Fraud relied on must be established by the same degree of proof.[31] One seeking to recover for damage to property not covered by the policy on the ground of a mistake in its description must allege and prove that a mistake has been made, and that it was mutual.[32] Mistakes may be reformed in an action on the policy.[33] In a suit to reform the policy and to recover for a loss thereunder, a failure to show facts authorizing a reformation does not prevent a recovery of the amount to which plaintiff shows himself entitled under the policy as written.[34]

Life policies generally exempt the company from liability in case the insured is killed while serving in the army or navy,[35] or in case of suicide.[36] Where the policy is silent in regard to the matter, the insured is liable in case of suicide.[37] Where it provides against liability in case of suicide, the insurer is not liable in the event of intentional self-destruction while sane, but is liable if the insured was insane.[38] There is a conflict of authority as to the effect of a provision exempting the company in case of suicide while sane or insane, some courts holding that it avoids the policy in every case,[39] and others that it does not prevent a recovery where insured does not have sufficient mind to render him conscious that he is taking his own life when he commits the act.[40] A clause forfeiting the policy in case the insured dies by his own hand or act, voluntary or involuntary, sane or insane, covers only acts done with suicidal intent.[41]

§ 11. The beneficiary and the insured.[42]—The beneficiary has a vested interest in the policy, and it cannot be surrendered by the insured without his consent.[43] Where the policy so provides, the insured may change the beneficiaries at will.[44] Substituted beneficiaries must have an insurable interest.[45] A provision giving the insured the right to change the beneficiary with the consent of, and on written notice to, the company, makes its approval of the change a condition prerequisite to its validity.[46]

Where the policy is payable to any one of several persons no one of them has an exclusive right to recover the proceeds, and hence no one of them has an attachable interest in the fund.[47] A provision that the production by the company of the policy and a receipt signed by any person giving satisfactory proof that he is an executor, husband or wife, or relative by blood, or lawful beneficiary of the insured, shall be conclusive evidence that the sum has been paid to the person lawfully entitled to the same, gives the company the right to pay the amount of the policy to any one of such persons.[48]

A husband has no attachable interest in the proceeds of a policy of life insurance payable to his wife, until her debts have been paid and he has reduced her estate to possession.[49]

The construction of the policy as to who are the beneficiaries, as in other contracts, depends upon the language used, to be read when doubt arises, in the light of the circumstances surrounding the parties when the contract was made.[50]

Beneficiary who thereafter joins in exchanging second policy for third cannot, in absence of fraud, claim that first was not lawfully surrendered, though she believed that she was exchanging first one. Leonhard v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 287. Interest can only be divested to the extent provided for in the policy. Allegations insufficient to show different rule in state where contract was made. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Norcross [Ind.] 72 N. E. 132. A surrender of the policy by the insured for his wife, who is the beneficiary, is ineffectual if made without her consent. Id. The fact that the policy, for which the company exacts a fixed rate of premium for a fixed amount of insurance, provides that it shall participate annually in the surplus earnings of the company in accordance with regulations adopted by the board of trustees, does not make it a mere benefit certificate in so far as the rights of the beneficiary are concerned. The mere fact that plaintiff's agent obtained at the company's office blanks for the purpose of making the plaintiff beneficiary, and was instructed to have them filled out, does not estop the company from attacking the validity of the change. Under industrial insurance policy giving company right to make payment to anyone related by blood or marriage to the insured, or to any other person appearing to the insurer to be equitably entitled thereto by reason of his having incurred expense in insured's behalf, and making production of receipt conclusive evidence that payment has been made to person entitled thereto, held that payment in good faith to, and receipt of, person with whom insured had gone through form of marriage after separating from her husband, and who had paid her funeral expenses was a bar to an action by insured's administrator. Bradley v. Prudential Ins. Co. [Mass.] 72 N. E. 989.

50. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Marshall, 178 N. Y. 468, 71 N. E. 8. Under policies payable, one to the insured's wife, "her executors, administrators or assigns," for her sole use if she survived her husband, but if she died first then to "her children, for their use, or

Neither a beneficiary who feloniously takes the life of the insured, nor those claiming under him, can recover on the policy,[51] but the insurer is not thereby relieved from liability.[52]

No resulting trust arises in favor of one paying premiums on a life policy, where the money is merely advanced as a loan.[53] Mere physical custody of the policy does not create either a trust or a lien.[54] Where creditors are made beneficiaries under a life policy, and are required by contract with the insured to pay a part of the proceeds to third persons, they become trustees, and suits against them for settlement of such trust should be brought in equity.[55]

Under a fire policy payable to the owner of a life estate in the property, the remaindermen are entitled only to the excess over the value of such life estate.[56] In order to recover, they must show the value of such excess.[57] Where a creditor secured by a trust deed procures insurance on the trust property for his own benefit, and himself pays the premiums, the trust debtor cannot require him to account for money received therefrom.[58] Any claim of an insolvent corporation to share in the proceeds of a policy on the life of its managing director on the ground that the premiums were paid from its assets is enforceable only by its receiver.[59]

Rights of employe under employer's liability policy.—Under a policy insuring directly against liability, the amount thereof, to the extent of the liability incurred by the employer on account of an accident to an employe, becomes, immediately upon the happening of the accident and the giving of the notice provided for, an asset of the insured, which, in the absence of a provision to the contrary, may be assigned by him or taken for his debts, subject to the making of the required proofs.[60] But under a policy insuring against loss or damage by reason of liability, the amount of insurance does not become available until the insured has paid the loss and proper notice has been given as provided for therein.[61] Under both classes, the contract is one between the insurer and the

to their guardian if under age," and the other to the wife "or to her legal representatives," if she was then living, and if not, "to her children, or their guardian if under age," held that, on the death of the wife before the husband, the policies vested in the children then living, who became substituted beneficiaries under the contract and did not take through their mother. On death of insured, proceeds divided equally between surviving child and issue of deceased child. Id. Under a policy payable to the wife and child of the insured, "or if they are not living, to his executors, administrators, or assigns," where the wife dies before the insured, the surviving child is entitled to the whole amount by force of the contract. Fish v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Mass.] 71 N. E. 786.

51. Legal representatives of insured who murders his wife, the beneficiary, cannot recover proceeds of policy as against her representatives on the ground that right thereto passed to him as survivor. Box v. Lanier [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 1042; Supreme Lodge Knights of Ladies of Honor v. Menkhausen, 209 Ill. 277, 70 N. E. 567. Such rule does not violate provisions of federal constitution against forfeiture [art. 1, § 12] (Box v. Lanier [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 1042), nor those prohibiting bills of attainder [art. 1, §§ 9, 10] (Id.). A refusal to permit the husband to take such proceeds does not escheat them to the state, but they go to the wife's administrator. Id.

61. Policy held to belong to this class, master for the benefit of the latter, and the employe is not regarded as being in privity with them.[62] There is a conflict of authority as to whether equity will compel the company to pay the proceeds of the policy directly to the injured employe.[63] In no event will such suit lie until the employer has complied with all the provisions of the policy which are made conditions precedent to his right to recover thereon.[64]

Rights of mortgagee.—Under a policy made payable to a mortgagee as his interest may appear, the insurer undertakes that the capacity of the property to pay the mortgage debt shall not be diminished, and that, if it is diminished by fire, it will pay over the loss to the mortgagee, irrespective of the fact that the property in its damaged condition may be more than sufficient to pay the mortgage debt.[65] The mortgagee may maintain an action at law on the policy, in his own name alone, when the amount of the mortgage debt exceeds the value of the insurance, and the mortgage covers all the property destroyed.[66] Where a policy which provides that the loss, if any, shall be payable to the mortgagee for the owner's account, is issued to the owner, who pays the premium, suit thereon is properly brought in the name of such owner for the use of the mortgagee.[67] In the absence of a provision in the policy to the contrary, the mortgagee's rights are generally held to be subject to the same defenses as could be set up against the insured,[68] though there seems to be some conflict of authority in this

Iowa Code, § 4087, authorizing judgment creditor to institute equitable proceedings to subject rights and credits belonging to debtor to satisfaction of his judgment, in which persons indebted to debtor may be made defendants, does not apply. Cushman v. Carbondale Fuel Co., 122 Iowa, 656, 98 N. W. 509.

Has no greater rights under condition of forfeiture. Ritchie County Bank v. Firemen's Ins. Co. [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 94. Under a provision that if the policy is made payable to a mortgagee "the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached, or appended hereto," no conditions not contained in a slip attached to the policy making it payable to a mortgagee as his interest may appear are binding on him. Not precluded from recovering to extent of his interest because insured procured additional insurance without company's consent. Senor v. Western Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 181 Mo. 104, 79 S. W. 687. The mere failure to designate him as mortgagee does not change the rule, where he was recognized as such in the application. Id.

regard.[69] A by-law of a mutual company providing that the policy may, at the request of the insured, be indorsed payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, is not obligatory, and a failure to so indorse it does not relieve the insurer from liability.[70]

Under a contract for the sale of land requiring the vendee to insure the buildings thereon, the loss, if any, to be paid to the vendor as his interest may appear, the amount of such policy is payable to the vendor for the purpose of indemnifying and protecting him to the extent of the purchase price unpaid.[71] He cannot be compelled to apply the proceeds to the rebuilding of the destroyed property, in the absence of an agreement to that effect,[72] nor in the absence of proof of what such rebuilding would cost.[73] Nor can the vendee compel the application of the proceeds to that purpose without an offer to rebuild or a showing that such rebuilding can be done so as to protect the vendor's interest.[74]

Insurance by bailee or agent.[75]—A bailee or agent, holding property for the purpose of repair or sale, may, in his own name, insure it against loss or damage by fire for the protection of his special interest and that of the owner.[76] In case of loss, the avails of the policy may be applied in satisfaction of his claim against the property,[77] but he holds any surplus, remaining after such claim is satisfied, in trust for the owner.[78] The amount of loss paid by the insurer is payable to the owners in such proportion as the value of the property of each bears to the whole amount paid, notwithstanding the fact that the proceeds of the policy are less than the value of all the property destroyed, the insured having the right to deduct from the share of each the amount of his lien on the property.[79] He should collect such surplus in his name as trustee of an express trust, and is liable for the resulting damage to any owner whose property he fails to include in the proofs of loss.[80] The insurance need not be upon specific property, nor need the owner be known at the inception of the contract,[81] though it must appear from the policy that he was within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made.[82] It will be presumed that the parties intended that the insurance provided for in the policy shall inure to the benefit of every person assuming the relationship to the assured which is covered thereby, whenever a loss occurs.[83] Such presumption is binding both on the assured and the insurer, and cannot be varied or contradicted unless it can be shown that there was an agreement between them and the owner that the latter's interest was not to be included.[84] The insurer is supposed to have intended that all persons assuming the prescribed relationship were within the protection of the policy, if, when informed of its existence, they assented to and adopted the acts of the insured.[85] The right of such adoption and ratification continues while the contract is in force,[86] and the fact that loss has occurred does not preclude its exercise within a reasonable time thereafter.[87] Such adoption makes the owner, in legal effect, a

§ 12. Policy value in cash or loans before loss.[89]—No policy has a cash surrender value unless it contains a provision to that effect, enforceable by the insured.[90] A policy of a foreign company is not affected by a statute authorizing the recovery of the cash surrender value of forfeited policies.[91]

§ 13. Options and privileges under policy.[92]—Under a policy providing that on default in the payment of premiums the insured shall be entitled to term insurance for the full amount of the policy, or, on application and surrender of the policy within a specified time, to a nonparticipating paid-up policy, it is generally held that a failure to make such application and surrender will be deemed an election to take the term insurance.[93] This rule is not changed by the fact that the beneficiaries are minors.[94] Some courts, however, hold that time is not of the essence of such a contract.[95]

§ 14. Assignments and transfers of benefits or insurance.[96] Life insurance.[97]—The ordinary essentials of a valid assignment must, of course, exist.[98] It may be oral,[99] and an assignment under seal imports a consideration.[1] The insured has at least a contingent interest in a life policy payable to his wife, if she survives him, and if not to his executors, administrators, or assigns, which he may assign.[2]

There is a conflict of authority as to whether the assignee of a life policy must have an insurable interest in the life of the insured.[3] Some courts hold that an assignment for value and in good faith by one having such an interest to one who has not is valid.[4] This rule of course does not apply where the transaction is made with a preconceived intention to avoid the rule against wagering contracts.[5] Others hold that no one can enforce a policy issued on the life of another unless he has an insurable interest therein,[6] and that when the insurable interest ceases, the interest in the policy also ceases except that the beneficiary or assignee has a lien thereon for premiums paid.[7]

An assignment of a policy as collateral security for a debt is valid, and the assignee is entitled to hold the same until the debt is paid.[8] A married woman may assign her interest in a policy on her husband's life to secure his debt.[9] Where the policy is payable to the wife for her sole use, if living, and if not, to her children, her interest is contingent on surviving her husband,[10] and her assignee takes a defeasible title only, which becomes absolute on her husband dying before she does.[11] One who retains a policy on property sold by him as collateral to secure the payment of the purchase price is bound to credit the amount recovered by him in settlement of a loss thereunder on the purchase price, after deducting the cost of collection.[12] Payment of the unearned premium, on cancellation of the policy, to the pledgee of the policy who holds it as security for the repayment of premiums advanced by him, and under an agreement providing that he may collect such unearned premiums and apply the same on his debt, is a complete defense to an action therefor brought by the insured against the insurer.[13] One holding a life policy as collateral may enforce his rights thereunder notwithstanding the fact that the debt which it is given to secure and a judgment recovered thereon are barred by limitations.[14] The fact that the assignee is nominally acting as the insurer's general agent does not vitiate the assignment, in the absence of fraud.[15]

In an action to compel the company to comply with the terms of a life policy by making a loan thereon, where the insured's divorced wife claims the policy under a previous assignment, and the company declares its willingness to make the loan to the true owner, it should be treated as a stakeholder and is entitled to costs and attorney's fees.[16] The insured cannot in such case compel the loan until he pays the lien of the assignee for premiums paid by her, in the absence of her consent.[17]

The title to a life policy payable to the insured's executors, administrators, or assigns passes to his trustee in bankruptcy provided it has a real cash value which can be realized by the latter through a sale or otherwise, even though it has no surrender value.[18]

Fire insurance.—An assignment of a fire policy after an adjusted loss is valid as between the assignor and the assignee.[19] On assignment of the policy with the consent of the insurer to the purchaser of the personalty covered thereby, it becomes a new contract and is unaffected by the acts of the person originally insured.[20] The rights of persons holding policies as collateral are dependent on the terms of their contracts with the insured.[21]

13. Agreement cannot be regarded as tending of fasten on the policy any new or different contract so as to exclude parol proof thereof. Miller v. Home Ins. Co. [N. J. Law] 58 A. 98. Such contract is a dealing by the insured with the unearned premium to become due in case of cancellation before the expiration of the policy. Id.

14. Plaintiffs held to have no title to policy until defendant's debt was paid. Conway v. Caswell [Ga.] 48 S. E. 956. Evidence held to show that defendant was entitled to policy, plaintiff's ancestor having consented to its assignment to his ancestor, and defendant and his predecessor having paid premiums. Id.

Where a life policy is delivered by one having the authority of a general agent without payment of the premium, a subsequent acceptance of the premium by the company with knowledge that the policy had been assigned to its general agent on the day of its delivery gives complete force and effect to the contract on such day of delivery. 19. Assignment of all insured's interest in policy, for valuable consideration, with authority to collect same. Frels v. Little Black Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 522. The fact that no fund is shown to have been in the hands of a mutual company as due on the policy, or then enforceable by action cannot stand in the way of an equitable assignment of its proceeds, if the claim is thereafter definitely established under the facts and circumstances as they existed when such assignment was made. 20. Not subject to forfeiture for breach of inventory clause by assignor, nor because he was not the sole owner at the time policy was issued. Bayless v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co. [Mo. Where policy provided that inventory should be taken within 30 days after the date of the policy, and that insured should keep a set of books, held that the assignee had 30 days after assignment in which to do so. 31. Johnson v. White [Ga.] 48 S. E. 426. One signing an application for a life policy without reading it, though given an opportunity to do so, and subsequently receiving a policy of the kind for which such application calls, cannot defend an action by a bona fide holder of his premium note on the ground that he was induced to sign an application which he did not intend to make by the false representations of the soliciting agent. Verdict properly directed for plaintiff. Id. Retention of the policy for an unreasonable time and failure to repudiate the transaction waive fraud in the procurement of the premium note (National Life & Trust Co. v. Omans [Mich.] 100 N. W. 595), though the policy provides that nonpayment of a premium when due shall terminate the company's liability, where there is also a provision for reinstatement, including the right to a payment of a specified sum at the end of a certain period (Id.).

the commencement of suit thereon, will, in the absence of fraud or imposition, be held to show that he had notice of, understood, agreed to, and is bound by the terms, limitations, and conditions contained therein.[34] The insurer may insert in the policy conditions not mentioned in the application.[35]

Plaintiff, in a suit to set aside a life policy on the ground of the agent's fraudulent representations, will not be estopped to complain of their falsity because he could have informed himself of the truth by means of information at hand, unless he was inexcusably negligent in not doing so.[36] He need not allege that the agent knew that the representations were false,[37] nor is defendant prejudiced by his retention of the binding receipt.[38] It is not necessary for him to offer to pay any part of the premium.[39]

One who executes and delivers a note to an agent in consideration of an agreement that the company will deliver a policy within a stated time may, on the latter's receiving the note and appropriating the proceeds and failing to deliver the policy, treat the contract as rescinded and recover the money advanced as money had and received.[40]

Life insurance.—A life policy cannot be surrendered without the consent of the insured and the beneficiary.[41] Many policies contain provisions making them noncontestable after a certain number of premiums have been paid.[42]

Before a loss, a court of equity has jurisdiction of a suit brought by the insurer for the surrender and cancellation of a policy on the ground that it was procured through fraud, false representations or concealments, since plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law.[43] Having once acquired jurisdiction, it may proceed to a final decree, though a loss occurs pending suit and before final hearing,[44] and though the beneficiary immediately brings suit on the policy.[45] This is particularly true where, on account of the peculiar nature of the contract, the beneficiaries have no adequate remedy at law.[46] After loss the company has an adequate remedy at law by setting up such facts as defenses to an action on the policy, and hence the courts have no jurisdiction, in the absence of special Acceptance of second premium gave them effect as voidable contracts. Austin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 132 F. 555.

43. Since estoppel to deny its validity may arise in favor of third persons advancing money thereon, and because of remoteness of time when it can be established as defense to action on policy. Riggs v. Union Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 129 F. 207; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 F. 971.

circumstances invoking the aid of a court of equity.[47] Such remedy is not rendered inadequate because the action may be brought in a state court, where the company will have a right to remove it, even though such removal may forfeit its license to do business in such state,[48] nor because it has no choice of the time or place of the commencement of such action, and less control of its conduct than the insured.[49]

Before a forfeiture will be declared, the terms of the contract must be strictly complied with.[50]

Incorporated mutual assessment insurance companies have no power of expulsion or forfeiture unless granted by their charter or general municipal law.[51] The mere failure of a member to seek reinstatement after a void expulsion does not operate to ratify the illegal forfeiture of his certificate, where the association has sufficient money in its hands to discharge all assessments coming due before his death, and sustains no injury by his conduct.[52]

Fire insurance.—A policy is canceled when the agent advises the insured to that effect, and that the unearned premium will be remitted to him on receipt of the policy,[53] especially when the amount of such premium is insufficient to keep it alive until the date of the fire.[54] An attempted cancellation without notice to the insured or a return of the premium is invalid.[55] In such case the acceptance by him of the amount of the premiums returned by the agent after the fire is not an election to treat the contract as void,[56] nor can it be regarded as a compromise.[57] Conditions requiring a certain number of days' notice before the policy can be canceled are for the benefit of the insured only.[58] Under

Larsen v. Thuringia American Ins. Co., 208 Ill. 166, 70 N. E. 31. a provision that the policy may be canceled by the company giving five days' notice of such cancellation, and returning the unearned premium, it does not cease to be in force until five days after the act of cancellation and the giving of the notice and the tender of the return premium.[59] Under a policy authorizing cancellation at any time by either party, the insurer cannot have it canceled after loss on account of fraud exercised in obtaining it.[60]

An insurance agent may be the agent of the insured in procuring policies, in so far as his authority to so act is not restricted by statutes making him the agent of the insurer.[61] But the mere fact that one is employed as such agent to procure insurance does not authorize him to represent the insured to receive notice of cancellation of subsisting policies and to substitute other insurance in place thereof.[62] By statute in Wisconsin anyone transmitting an application for, or a policy of, insurance, other than for himself, to or from an insurance company, is made the agent of the company.[63] Under this act agents receiving orders for insurance and placing them through other agents, without any directions being given to the latter by the insured, are agents of the company writing the policies.[64]

Recovery of premiums paid.[65]—As a general rule, the insured may recover premiums which he was induced to pay through fraudulent representations of the agent as to the insurance to be issued therefor.[66] This does not apply where the policy is illegal by statute or because against public policy,[67] unless the party paying them is innocent of any wrong, and is induced to do so by the false and fraudulent misrepresentations of the agents of the insurer.[68] A demand is a necessary prerequisite to an action to recover premiums paid on a void policy where such payments were made because of the false representations of the company as to its validity.[69] The statute of limitations does not begin to run until such demand is made.[70] In the absence of fraud, where the risk has once attached, a recovery of premiums paid cannot be had because of a breach of the conditions of the policy by the insurer.[71] The amount of premium in such case is not apportionable and the remedy is by a suit for specific performance.[72]

Return of premiums.[73]—The return of the premium is not a prerequisite to an assertion of forfeiture for the violation of conditions after the policy becomes effective and operative.[74] There is a conflict of authority as to whether it is necessary where the policy is invalid in its inception.[75] A provision that the unearned premium shall be returned in case the policy becomes void or is canceled on its surrender, does not require a return until such surrender is made.[76]

(§ 16) C. Estoppel or waiver of right to cancel or avoid.[77]—Waiver is the intentional reliquishment of a known right.[78] To create an implied waiver, there must be some act inconsistent with the right waived.[79] An insurer whose conduct is such as to induce the insured to rest on the well founded belief that strict performance of a condition will not be insisted upon cannot in good faith afterwards set it up as a bar to recovery,[80] but will be deemed to have waived compliance therewith.[81] No waiver by acts or conduct can become effective until the party making it is informed of the essential facts on which it is based.[82]

NOTE. "Election," "waiver," "forfeiture," as applied to insurance: In a recent critical article in XVIII. Harv. L. R. 364, Mr. John S. Ewart advances with great force the theory that the doctrine of waiver in its relation to insurance cases is erroneously so called; that the true principle is election; that the conflict and confusion in the doctrine and its applications are explicable by the known principles of an election. The term "waiver" is so well fixed in the law that limitations on its meaning or attempted submergencies of it in other terms are not likely to be accepted. Its intimate relationship to election is recognized in the title Election and Waiver, 3 Curr. L. 1177. In two comparatively recent cases the indicia of an election appears in the statement that "if the company contemplated the forfeiture of the policy because of the nonpayment of the premium it should at once have so declared plainly and unconditionally." United States L. I. Co. v. Lesser, 126 Ala. 568, 28 So. 646; Pollock v. German Ins. Co. [Mich.] 86 N. W. 1017, cited by Mr. Ewart. [Editor.]

80. Facts held not to show waiver of iron safe clause requiring keeping and production of books, and question improperly submitted to jury. Rundell v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 517. Provisions in regard to forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums may be waived by doing some act or pursuing some course of conduct which tends to mislead the insured or to lull him into delay in performing the stipulations in his contract. Evidence that agent had told witnesses that he had given credit for premiums held insufficient to prove custom binding on company so as to constitute waiver of condition that policy should not be binding until payment was made. Brown v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 207 Pa. 609, 56 A. 1125. Any agreement, declaration, or course of action on the part of the insurer which leads the insured honestly to believe that by conforming thereto a forfeiture on his part will not be incurred, followed by due conformity on his part, will estop the company from claiming a forfeiture, though it might do so under the express letter of the contract. Battin v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 874. Acts of adjuster, having knowledge of the facts, in requiring insured to furnish other proofs, extending time for making proofs, and requiring insured, at some trouble and expense, to submit to examination under oath, held waiver of right to forfeiture for failure to keep books of specified kind. German Ins. Co. v. Allen [Kan.] 77 P. 529.

81. Agreement of agent that, on sale of premises, plaintiff might retain policy as collateral to secure payment of purchase price, and that policy would not be forfeited, held waiver of right to forfeit policy for change of ownership. Mattingly v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. [Ky.] 83 S. W. 577.

82. Provision in indemnity policy exempting insurer from liability for injuries caused by failure to observe statutory requirements in regard to operation of mine held not waived. Andrus v.

The burden is on plaintiff to show such knowledge.[83] Where it is sought to charge the company through notice to its agents, it is only required to produce the agent to whom plaintiff claims notice was given, and need not prove a negative by producing them all.[84] Declarations of the agent made after the issuance of the policy that the company desired to change it by inserting the name of the true owner are inadmissible in the absence of a showing that, at the time, the agent was charged with any duty in regard to the policy.[85] Where it is conceded that the policies permitted other insurance, conversations with the agent at the time of issuing it, tending to show a waiver of the clause forbidding it, are immaterial.[86] Evidence of the general reputation in the neighborhood that property was partnership property is admissible to show the agent's knowledge of that fact, but is not of itself sufficient for that purpose.[87] The company is not charged with the duty of inquiring into the title, and the fact that the agent could have learned the truth by inquiry will not avoid the warranty of title.[88] It is proper to show that defendant knew the true state of the title after the policies issued and before the fire.[89]

Conditions inserted for the benefit of the insurer may be waived by it.[90]

A waiver of the production of inventories by the adjuster immediately after the loss is not a waiver of the production of the one made next preceding the date of the policy unless he knows of its destruction. Evidence held not to show knowledge. Continental Fire Ins. Co. v. Cummings [Tex.] 81 S. W. 705. The collection and retention of assessments is not a waiver of a condition against concurrent insurance where the company did not know of its procurement until after the fire, when it immediately denied liability, and has not refused to return them, and has not led insured to do any act or incur any expense, because of its acts in relation to them. Todd Co. v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 442. Fact that soliciting agent who took application assisted insured several years later in procuring additional insurance in other companies held not a waiver of condition prohibiting such insurance. Id. Evidence insufficient to authorize finding that defendant's secretary was informed of and consented to the procurement of additional insurance. Id. A provision avoiding the policy if the building is allowed to remain vacant and unoccupied for more than a certain number of days is not waived because it was vacant when the policy was issued, when the insurer had no knowledge of that fact (Bartlett v. British American Assur. Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 812), or because the insurer made no inquiry in regard to the matter (Id.).

Provision that policy should be void if other insurance procured, "unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon or added thereto," of itself implies that notice to insurer of such additional insurance and negotiations in regard to it are contemplated, so that breach could be waived. Id. Words "$—— Total concurrent in-

Very slight evidence may be sufficient to show waiver.[91] The fact that policies are prepared for general use without reference to particular cases may be considered.[92]

The issuance and delivery of a policy and the acceptance of premiums with knowledge on the part of the insurer of facts making it, by its terms, inoperative at its inception, is a waiver of all conditions therein inconsistent with such facts.[93] Some courts base their refusal to allow the insurer to set up such conditions on the doctrine of estoppel. The principle is the same in either case.[94] In Wisconsin it is held that the doctrine rests on the principle of estoppel in pais, and not on waiver, the latter applying only to acts occurring after the making of the contract, and not those involved in its inception,[95] and that statutory provisions requiring waivers to be in writing do not apply.[96]

Knowledge of an agent at the time of delivering the policy[97] or knowledge on the part of the soliciting agent when he takes the application is generally held surance permitted," contained in a slip attached to the policy, are not a waiver of a provision prohibiting other insurance. Philadelphia Underwriters' Ins. Co. v. Bigelow [Fla.] 37 So. 210. 97. Welch v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia [Wis.] 98 N. W. 227. Agent who solicits the insurance and to whom the policy is sent for delivery. That issuance would increase insurance to more than three-fourths of value of property. Gurnett v. Atlas Mut. Ins. Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 542; Lewis v. Guardian Fire & Life Assur. Co., 93 App. Div. 157, 87 N. Y. S. 525. Knowledge of agent that gasoline was being used on premises held waiver of provision prohibiting its use without written permission. Hartley v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 91 Minn. 382, 98 N. W. 198. Company estopped from claiming a forfeiture because of facts which were fully disclosed to him when the policy was issued, and the premium accepted. Because of existence of mortgages and pending foreclosure proceedings. Nor can forfeiture be allowed on ground that hazard was thereby increased. Vesey v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1074. Evidence held insufficient to show that agent had knowledge when policy was issued that plaintiff was not the sole owner of the property. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cummings [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 716. Agent procuring insurance from other agents having authority to issue policies for defendant held agent of defendant, so that his knowledge of facts avoiding policy was binding on it. Id. Knowledge as to condition of title held waiver of condition requiring unconditional ownership unless mortgage clause is indorsed on policy. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. McCarthy [Kan.] 77 P. 90. Agent who writes and delivers the policy. Vesey v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1074; Nute v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 83. An agent, who has authority to issue policies and collect premiums, has power to waive conditions of the policy which would render it void from the beginning and which are in some meas-

to be the knowledge of the company, and will estop it from relying on provisions ignoring such knowledge,[98] though the agent has never communicated such facts to the company.[99] In most states these rules apply even where the policy provides that all waivers must be indorsed thereon in writing,[1] though there is some conflict or authority in this regard.[2] This is not the case, however, if the inure collateral to the principal agreement to insure the property upon payment of a certain premium. Agent of foreign company held to have authority to waive condition that existing incumbrance by way of chattel mortgage, whose existence is known to him, should avoid the policy. German-American Ins. Co. v. Yeagley [Ind.] 71 N. E. 897. Averments that plaintiff had no notice that incumbrance would avoid policy, and that provisions for forfeiture in such case were in fine print and not known to him until after fire held mere surplusage. Id. If he makes false statements of fact in the policy after having been truthfully and fully informed in regard to the matters covered thereby, the company is estopped to avoid the policy by reason thereof. As to state of title. Nute v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 83. The same rule applies to statements in an indorsement made by him on account of changes in the title. Agent makes false statements. Id. Where an agent is correctly informed as to all facts inquired into affecting the inception of the contract, and takes no written application, and inserts in the policy as warranties facts different from those so stated to him, the company is estopped from defending on the ground of their falsity, in the absence of a showing that the insured knew of the agent's want of authority to waive conditions. Raises equitable estoppel which may be asserted in court of law. Medley v. German Alliance Ins. Co. [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 101. Failure to read the policy for a short time after its delivery does not prevent such a waiver, or the reformation of the policy. Id. By statute in Wisconsin one who delivers the policy and receives the premium, though acting as a broker, is an agent of the company within this rule. Applies where he receives it from company's agents, and pays premiums to them [Rev. St. 1898, § 1977]. Welch v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia [Wis.] 98 N. W. 227.

98. Cannot avoid policy because of chattel mortgage, where agent told insured that it was not necessary to mention it because it was so small. Manchester Assur. Co. v. Dowell, 25 Ky. L. R. 2240, 80 S. W. 207. General agent held to have authority to waive provisions as to sole ownership. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. McCarthy [Kan.] 77 P. 90. Agent held to have waived forfeiture on account of execution of contract to sell premises, by informing owner that no change in the policy was necessary. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Richmond Mica Co., 102 Va. 429, 46 S. E. 463.

99. Vesey v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1074. It will be presumed that he informs the company of any circumstances affecting its liability which come to his knowledge, and if subsequently it receives premiums without objection it will be deemed to have waived any forfeiture incurred by reason thereof. German-American Ins. Co. v. Yeagley [Ind.] 71 N. E. 897. Company will not be heard to say that agent has exceeded his powers and has not made known to it facts communicated to him by the insured. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Richmond Mica Co., 102 Va. 429, 46 S. E. 463.

1. Welch v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia [Wis.] 98 N. W. 227. As to ownership. Virgina Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Richmond Mica Co., 102 Va. 429, 46 S. E. 463. Incumbrances. German-American Ins. Co. v. Yeagley [Ind.] 71 N. E. 897. Company has power to abrogate or change the contract, which involves the power to waive any conditions therein. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Norcross [Ind.] 72 N. E. 132. Cannot restrict or regulate its own right to contract by provisions in the policy, and may waive or alter its terms by parol, through its agents acting within the scope of their authority, in any respect desired. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Eastman [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 255. Invalid in so far as it attempts to relieve the company from the consequences of knowledge or notice possessed by its agents at the time when the policy was issued. Andrus v. Maryland Casualty Co., 91 Minn. 358, 98 N. W. 200. Conditions requiring all waivers to be indorsed on the policy may be waived. By accepting premium and issuing policy with full knowledge of facts, it will be presumed that if anything was omitted which was necessary to the validity of the policy, it was done by mistake, or that condition was waived, or that the company held itself estopped from setting it up. German-American Ins. Co. v Yeagley [Ind.] 71 N. E. 897; Vesey v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1074. Whereby conduct induces insured not to comply. Mattingly v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. [Ky.] 83 S. W. 577. As to vacancy. Queen Ins. Co. v. Straughan [Kan.] 78 P. 447. Fact that agent knew that building was vacant when policy was issued and thereafter at insured's request agreed to indorse permit on policy but failed to do so held waiver of condition against vacancy. Id. Restrictions on the power of the agent to waive any conditions of the policy, or to waive conditions except in a particular manner do not apply to conditions relating to the inception of the contract. Does not prevent waiver, or reformation of contract. Medley v. German Alliance Ins. Co. [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 101. A limitation therein not communicated to the insured before he acts upon such agent's representations or conduct will not relieve the company, unless the insured, after his discovery of the want of authority, has precluded himself from the assertion of his rights by laches. Id.

2. A provision that no alterations or waivers shall be binding on the company unless by the written consent of an officer of the company is valid and binding as to conditions and provisions relating to the formation and continuance of the contract. Term for which policy is to run and age sured has actual notice of the agent's want of authority.[3] Mere constructive notice from the fact that the policy contains the limitation is insufficient.[4] Where no question as to the delivery of the policy is raised by the pleadings, it will be presumed that it was delivered by some one representing the power of the company to waive all conditions precedent,[5] or else that the circumstances were such that, as against the insured and the beneficiary, the company had become estopped to deny its validity.[6]

Prior negotiations are merged in the policy.[7] Hence, the insured cannot show that the agent agreed before the policy was issued that some of its conditions need not be complied with.[8]

There is a conflict of authority as to the power of an agent to waive the forfeitures occurring after the delivery of the policy. Some courts hold that he cannot do so without express authority;[9] others that a provision in the policy that he shall have no such power is binding;[10] and still others that he may do so[11] even when the policy contains a provision to the contrary.[12] limit. Wheeler v. United States Casualty Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 347. Condition provided that if personal property insured was incumbered the policy should be void. Sought to be shown that insured told the agent it was incumbered. Hammel v. Insurance Co., 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 380. That there was a chattel mortgage on the property insured. Id.

3. Testimony of witness to prove limitation of agent's authority in commission appointing him held inadmissible in absence of showing that insured knew of such limitation. Fire Assn. of Philadelphia v. Masterson [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 49. A parol contract to insure a house occupied by negroes is unenforceable where the insured has actual notice that the agent has no authority to make such contracts, as where company had previously refused to take such risks on other houses belonging to plaintiff. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Trimble, 25 Ky. L. R. 1497, 78 S. W. 462; Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Richmond Mica Co., 102 Va. 429, 46 S. E. 463. Must show that insured knew of want of authority. 7. Instruction erroneous. Gillum & Co. v. Fire Ass'n [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 283.

8. As to keeping books, and iron safe clause. Gillum & Co. v. Fire Ass'n [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 283. Knowledge on the part of the soliciting agent that the insured does not intend to procure a safe in which to keep his books, does not constitute a waiver of the promissory condition therein. Rundell v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 517. Statements of agents, relied on to show a waiver, must be made after the issuance and delivery of the policy. Otherwise merged therein. German Ins. Co. v. Allen [Kan.] 77 P. 529.

9. Letter of local agent offering compromise not a waiver of previous forfeiture for procuring additional insurance without permission. Lippman v. Aetna Ins. Co., 120 Ga. 247, 47 S. E. 593. Burden is on plaintiff to show such authority. Id. The fact that the company's agent knew that plaintiff occasionally rode in steeple-chases does not prevent an avoidance of the policy for voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Smith v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. [Mass.] 69 N. E. 1059.

10. Meigs v. London Assur. Co., 126 F. 781. Effective and binding as to all conditions or warranties becoming effective after the completion of the contract. Forfeiture on account of notice of sale under trust deed. Medley v. German Alliance Ins. Co. [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 101. Acts of agent in receiving and collecting premium notes given him by vendee held not waiver of forfeiture for change of ownership. Ritchie County Bank v. Firemen's Ins. Co. [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 94.

11. Agent with power to make contracts and countersign and deliver policies. Miller v. Insurance Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 330.

12. Adjuster. American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Nunn [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 88, rvd. 82 S. W. 497. Company cannot limit its right to contract, and must act through its agents. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Masterson [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 49. Agent of foreign company held to have power to waive, and to have waived, condition requiring inventory to be taken within 30 days, where insured had no notice of limitation of his authority. Id. Provisions in regard to other insurance. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Eastman [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 255. By statute in Iowa any officer, agent, or other representative of an insurance company who solicits insurance or transacts its business generally is made its agent, with authority to transact all business within the scope of his employment, anything to the contrary in the application, policy, by-laws or articles of incorporation of such company to the contrary notwithstanding [Code, § 1750]. Liquid Carbonic Acid Mfg. Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 749. This act inhibits any limitations or restrictions upon the agent's authority as therein specified. Id. Hence, a local agent has authority to waive conditions in policies notwithstanding provisions therein to the contrary. Knowledge of

When a company issues its policy and accepts and retains the premium without requiring an application by the insured, and without making any inquiry as to the condition of the property or the state of the title, and the insured has in fact an insurable interest, it will be conclusively presumed to have insured such interest, and to have waived all conditions in the policy in regard thereto.[13] Under similar circumstances it will be held to have waived conditions against incumbrances.[14] The contract is made before the policy is written, and its mere acceptance cannot be construed as a representation as to the title.[15]

The mere neglect of the insurer to declare its intention of insisting on a forfeiture in a policy does not of itself constitute a waiver thereof.[16] An eighty per cent. average or co-insurance clause contained in the policy does not constitute a waiver of a forfeiture by reason of other insurance obtained without the insurer's permission, beyond the eighty per cent. therein mentioned.[17]

A condition precedent to the attaching of the risk, which must be performed before the policy takes effect with respect to the property to be insured is not waived by exacting additional proofs of loss after knowledge of its breach.[18] Neither the fact that the company received notice and proofs of loss,[19] nor that it required the insured to submit to an examination in regard to the fire,[20] nor the acceptance and retention of the premium,[21] nor that it refused to pay the loss because of a violation of a condition requiring the keeping of certain books,[22] is a waiver of such condition. A provision that the company shall not be deemed to have waived any provision or condition of the policy or any forfeiture thereof by any act or requirement on its part relating to the appraisal, or the examination of the insured on oath, is valid and binding on the insured.[23]

The subsequent acceptance of premiums waives a lapse of the policy for failure to pay them when due.[24] A clause exempting the company from liability until the premium is paid may be waived by the insurer on its authorized agent.[25] A provision that the policy shall not take effect until the first premium is actually paid is ordinarily waived by delivery of the policy on receipt of a premium note.[26] A general agent has authority to waive the immediate payment of the agent of condition of title and of existence of chattel mortgage, and his statement that policy was all right without indorsement is a waiver of indorsement required by its terms. Id.

13. Building on leased premises. Policy required that fact to be expressed therein, and recited sole ownership. Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Mickel [Neb.] 100 N. W. 130.

14. When the company, without a written application, and without any inquiry in regard to incumbrances or any statements or representations being made by the insured with reference thereto, issues a policy covering mortgaged property, and accepts and retains the premium which is paid and the policy accepted by the insured in good faith and without knowledge that the incumbrance in any way affects the contract, or that the company intends to insist on the mortgage clause, it will be held to have accepted the risk with the existing liens and incumbrances thereon, and to that extent to have waived the printed terms of the policy. 25. Evidence held to show waiver of requirement that premium be paid in advance. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Gibbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 398.

26. Lawrence v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. [La.] 36 So. 898. Note held not intended to be regarded as payment of first premium unless paid when due while insured was in good health, hence its acceptance and the issuance of policy after applicant became ill premium on delivery of the policy.[27] The acts or silence of the officers of the corporation after it has constructive notice of his act in delivering it before such payment may constitute a waiver, at least where good faith requires a timely disaffirmance.[28] An agent cannot absolutely waive the payment of a part of the premium, thereby reducing the rate of insurance, without express authority.[29] An agreement between the applicant and the agent that the latter shall hold the policy until a certain date and then deliver it upon payment of half the premium in cash and the giving of the applicant's note for the balance is not a waiver of such a condition.[30] The acceptance by the insurer of a partial payment on account of a premium and the giving of credit for the unpaid balance is a waiver of the condition that a failure to pay the premium at or before the time mentioned in the policy will work a forfeiture thereof.[31] Statements of the agent that he had tried to get the insured to pay the premium, and had kept it up, hoping he would do so are admissible to show waiver of a forfeiture for nonpayment.[32]

Where the agent issuing the policy, having power to waive forfeitures, has knowledge of the fact that it has been forfeited, he is bound to return the unearned premium to the insured, and his failure to do so ordinarily constitutes a waiver of such forfeiture.[33] This rule does not apply where the premium is a lump sum and the policy is only forfeited as to one of the items which it covers, and there is no showing as to what portion thereof was paid for the insurance on such item,[34] nor where the insured leads the agent to believe that he will use such unearned premium in procuring a transfer or new insurance.[35] A retention by the company of unearned premiums after notice before the fire that the policy has become void under its terms may be evidence of waiver.[36]

The retention of premium notes by the company is not inconsistent with an intention to treat the policy as void for their nonpayment,[37] particularly where the policy provides that their possession by the insurer shall be conclusive evidence of their nonpayment, and that the insurance has ceased at the expiration was not a waiver of stipulation that first premium should be paid while insured was in good health. Stringham v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 44 Or. 447, 75 P. 822. of the term for which the premium has been paid.[38] Any attempt to collect such notes, however, is a waiver.[39] Demands for the payment of premium notes after loss do not alone constitute a waiver of the breach of a condition of the policy whereby it is rendered void,[40] but are material as showing the intention of the company.[41]

Waiver of conditions will not be implied from a retention of the policy by the agent until after the fire, at the request or with the acquiescence of the insured.[42]

The mere expression by the local soliciting agent of hope and confidence that the loss will be paid is no evidence of waiver,[43] nor is the fact that he notified the adjuster of the loss, and that the latter came and investigated it.[44]

If notice be given to the company or its agent of the procuring of additional insurance, and no objection is made, the insurer will be estopped from insisting on a forfeiture because its consent was not indorsed thereon, in accordance with the requirements of the policy.[45]

One holding a policy in a mutual fire insurance company may be estopped by his conduct from asserting as a defense to an action against him for premiums that he is not legally a member,[46] and the association may also be estopped in the same manner from setting up the same defense to an action on the policy.[47]

(§ 16) D. Reinstatement.—On reinstatement of the policy, the insured is only bound to exercise good faith in his statement that his condition is not substantially different from what it was when the policy was issued.[48] Where he is not afflicted with any other diseases than those mentioned in the original application, and those have not become so aggravated as to make his condition substantially different from what it then was, he is in good health within the meaning of the contract.[49]

§ 17. Contracts of reinsurance and concurrent insurance.[50]—Double insurance exists where there are two separate insurers liable for the same loss.[51] The fact that one policy covers more property or wider risks than the other is immaterial.[52]

52. Policies on addition to main building

A prohibition against concurrent[53] or additional insurance beyond a certain limit will be enforced.[54] The continuation of existing insurance, either by renewals of existing policies, or the substitution of others therefor, is not procuring other insurance within the meaning of the policy.[55]

The term "total concurrent insurance" means that the total insurance operates at the same time and upon the same property as designated in the policy upon which the suit is brought.[56]

Valued policy laws do not prevent concurrent insurance to a larger amount than the designated value of the property.[57] Overvaluation of the property in taking out a policy providing for other insurance not to exceed a certain percentage of its value avoids the policy.[58] But this rule does not apply where the property is merchandise and hence constantly changing in value, and the amount to be paid is made to depend on the value of the goods at the time of their loss.[59] The eighty per cent average clause in the New York standard policy authorizes, by necessary implication, additional insurance on the property up to eighty per cent of its actual value, though additional insurance is forbidden.[60] Such clause also refers to and includes insurance already existing, provided the aggregate amount thereof does not exceed the eighty per cent limit specified.[61]

A provision that, in case other insurance shall be permitted and it shall be invalid, it shall be deemed an election to cancel the policy and that it shall be void, refers only to insurance procured after the issuance of the policy.[62]

Fire policies frequently contain a provision that the insurer shall not be liable for any greater proportion of the loss than the amount of the policy shall bear to the whole insurance, whether valid or invalid.[63] By statute in Iowa, no held entitled to contribution from policies on main building which were also to cover future additions, all the policies providing for apportionment of the loss. Loss apportioned. Meigs v. London Assur. Co., 126 F. 781.

condition or stipulation fixing the amount of liability or recovery with reference to the pro rata with other insurance is valid except as to valid and collectible insurance, any agreement to the contrary notwithstanding.[64] The fact that a company, which has issued invalid insurance, regards its policy as valid or pays something on the loss to avoid litigation, is immaterial.[65]

Reinsurance.[66]—The right of a mutual insurance company to transfer risks and reinsure is generally recognized, unless prohibited by statute.[67] Statutes in some states restrict transfers and reinsurance and provide the methods by which it may be accomplished.[68]

An application clerk and counterman employed at the home office, having full authority to accept risks and cancel policies, has prima facie authority to sign an agreement waiving a provision in a contract of reinsurance, providing that such company shall not be liable on such risks to exceed the amount retained by the ceding company.[69]

§ 18. The loss, its extent and extent of liability therefor.[70]—A contract of fire insurance is one of indemnity, and the insured is only entitled to be put in the same pecuniary condition that he would have been in had there been no fire.[71] Hence he is only entitled to recover the value of his insurable interest in the property at the time of the fire.[72] His damages are not to be diminished because he has collateral contracts or relations with third persons which relieve him wholly or in part from the loss,[73] but this rule does not operate to enlarge an insurable interest, the value of which fixes the amount to be paid under the policy.[74] The rights of the parties become fixed at the time of the loss and cannot be affected by subsequent agreements between the insured and other companies.[75] It is competent for the company and the insured to fix the measure of damages in case of loss.[76] A company fixing the amount of the risk and accepting a premium based thereon, after having an opportunity to fully examine the property, is estopped in case of a total loss, to question the value as agreed upon.[77]

77. Ritchey v. Home Ins. Co., 104 Mo. App. 146, 78 S. W. 341.

In order that the negligence of the insured resulting in the destruction of the property may defeat a recovery, it must be willful or of such a degree as to amount to fraud.[78] Where the policy requires him to use all reasonable efforts to save the property from threatened destruction, the company is responsible to him for loss sustained in consequence of his compliance therewith.[79] Thus, it will be held liable for loss caused by a removal or preparation for removal, where, at the time the work is begun, it is in such imminent danger of destruction that a reasonably prudent man would take measures to protect it.[80] The insured is only bound to use reasonable means to protect the property.[81]

Valued policies.—Valued policy laws in many states make the insurer liable for the total amount of insurance specified in the contract, in case of a total loss, notwithstanding any provision in the policy to the contrary.[82] In such case, no proof of its value is necessary in an action on the policy.[83] It may be shown, however, that personalty has been reduced by sales, or has depreciated in value.[84] Such laws do not deprive the insurer of the right to defend on the ground that the fire was caused by the criminal conduct of the insured,[85] or that the insurable value was fixed at too high a figure through his fraud.[86] The insurable value under valued policy laws is fixed with reference to the particular policy in which it is written, and not with reference to other insurance which may be permitted.[87] It is for the purpose of fixing the measure of damages, and does not prevent

Missouri: Rev. St. 1899, § 7979, providing that no company shall take a risk on property greater than three-fourths of its value, and, when taken, its value shall not be questioned in any proceeding, applies to both realty and personalty. Howerton v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 105 Mo. App. 575, 80 S. W. 27. Its practical effect is to make a valued policy. Statute enjoins company from taking greater risk, but when value is fixed, and risk taken on given amount, that sum cannot be questioned afterwards though it is in fact more than three-fourths of the actual value. either party from showing that the property was worth more, if such fact becomes material.[88]

Employers' liability insurance.[89]—It is the duty of the employer to make the loss as small as possible so far as he reasonably can, though the insurer does not avail itself of its right under the policy to defend the suit.[90] If he in good faith and with reasonable prudence, compromises the claim, the company is bound to pay the loss actually sustained.[91] Such compromise is not conclusive as to the actual loss, but may be considered in determining it.[92] Where the company defends an action for such injuries to an employe in accordance with the terms of the policy, and a judgment exceeding the full amount of the indemnity is recovered against the insured which he pays, the insurer is liable for the full amount of the policy with the costs of suit and interest from the date of the judgment.[93] The insurer is liable for interest thereon and costs and expenses incurred in defending suits which it should have defended or settled,[94] but it is not liable for costs incurred by the insured in defending its own liability for the injury on a contract with a carrier over whose line it operates,[95] nor for hospital expenses incurred in caring for the injured employe, to an extent increasing the total liability above the amount limited.[96]

§ 19. Notice, claim, and proof of loss.[97]—Provisions requiring notice and claim of loss are conditions precedent and must be complied with before a recovery can be had on the policy, unless they are waived.[98] The same is true in regard to the sworn statement required by the standard policies of some states.[99] Under the valued policy laws of some states, no proofs are necessary where the loss is total.[1] Notice of loss may be given through the mail at the risk of the insured.[2]

Where no time is specified, notice and proofs of loss must be furnished within a reasonable time.[3] Immediate notice means notice within a reasonable time under all the circumstances.[4] The period of sixty days from the date of the loss is a reasonable limitation.[5] The statutes of Indiana prohibit foreign insurance companies doing business in that state from requiring notice of loss to be given forthwith or within a less time than five days.[6]

6. Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 4923. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Sanders, 32 Ind. App. 448, 70 N. E. 167. Under these statutes, provisions of the policy requiring immediate notice and that proofs of loss be furnished forthwith,

Delays caused by the company will be deducted in reckoning the time within which proofs must be furnished.[7]

A requirement that proofs of loss be furnished within a specified time does not work a forfeiture for noncompliance therewith in the absence of a provision to that effect, but at most only affects the maturity of the claim.[8] This is true even where the policy provides that no action may be maintained thereon until after a full compliance with its conditions.[9] They must, however, be made within such time as will enable the insured to bring his suit within the time limited by the policy.[10] In Arkansas it is held that the rule does not apply where the furnishing of proofs within the specified time is made a condition precedent to suit.[11]

A proof of loss may be made by an agent, in the absence of his principal, where he has knowledge of the facts therein stated,[12] or by a receiver in bankruptcy of the insured, specially authorized to do so by the court appointing him, where the insured has absconded.[13] No duty to give notice to the insurer rests upon the beneficiary until his right becomes vested by the death of the insured.[14] In the absence of a provision to the contrary, proofs may be served on the agent who countersigned and issued the policy.[15] Proofs of loss may also serve as notice of loss when sufficiently full to give the required information.[16] The sufficiency of the notice depends upon the provisions of the contract or of the statutes.[17] Proofs of death need not show any greater degree of proof that death was caused by accident than would be necessary to establish a prima facie case in a court of law.[18] Loss of the policy does not excuse compliance with its requirements as to furnishing notice and proofs of loss.[19]

Where the first proofs under an accident policy show injury and disability sufficiently to render the company liable, in rendering additional proofs it is only necessary to show a continuation of such disability during the life of the policy.[20] The fact that the insured makes proof of disability and loss of time to a certain date only does not prevent him, in an action on the policy, from claiming for disability continuing after that time.[21] Where the policy forfeits to the company are void (Id.), and the insured is only required to use reasonable diligence in the premises (Id.).

21. Proofs made under advice of physician that he would probably then be well. Pa-

any sum for which proofs are not made within a stipulated time, the insured cannot recover any greater amount than that claimed in such proofs.[22] A provision requiring a notice containing full particulars of the accident is complied with if such notice contains the best information the insured possesses, or that is available at the time.[23] A defense that no notice of the accident was given within the time limited by the policy, and a defense that no accident happened, are not inconsistent.[24]

Under an employer's liability policy covering any loss resulting from accident caused by plaintiff's teams and requiring immediate notice of any accident to be given to the insurer, the insured is bound to exercise ordinary diligence to acquire knowledge of accidents.[25] The knowledge of an employe who could not give the required notice cannot be imputed to the insured.[26] Failure to give such notice is not excused by the fact that the employer who knew of the accident did not know of the policy, and that the one who knew of the policy did not know of the accident.[27]

A condition in a policy of health insurance forfeiting all benefits thereunder unless the insured gives to the company notice of any sickness within a certain time after its commencement is valid.[28]

Waiver.[29]—Notice and proofs of loss[30] and delay in furnishing them may be waived by the insurer,[31] even when they are required by statute.[32] A waiver once made cannot be abrogated without the consent of the insured.[33]

Evidence sufficient to authorize finding that defendant received proofs of injury within time limit, or if it did not, it waived its right to insist on forfeiture. National Masonic Acc. Ass'n v. McBride, 162 Ind. 379, 70

A distinct denial of liability, made by a company after the loss and within the time prescribed for furnishing proofs, upon other grounds than a failure to furnish them, is a waiver of proofs of loss.[34] The fact that denial of liability and a refusal to furnish blanks is made to one having no authority to receive payment is immaterial.[35] A denial of liability is also a waiver of a provision giving the insured a certain time after notice in which to pay the loss.[36]

The mere fact that the company sends to the insured blank forms for proof of his claim after the expiration of the time within which proofs may be made under the terms of the policy does not constitute a waiver of such limitation, in the absence of knowledge by the company of all the facts.[37]

Where the proofs of death are required to be made on blanks furnished by the insurer, the latter thereby assumes the obligation of furnishing them,[38] and it is its duty to place such blanks in the hands of the beneficiary after proper request.[39] By statute in Missouri, on notice of loss, the company is required to furnish the insured blank forms for making proofs, and a failure to do so constitutes a waiver of proofs.[40] It has a reasonable time in which to do so, but must act reasonably and in good faith.[41]

It is the duty of the insurer to notify the insured of defects in the proof of loss,[42] and their retention for an unreasonable time without objection, constitutes a waiver thereof.[43] A local agent with authority to represent the company in mak-

43. Fact that unverified inventory, which had been accepted by adjuster in lieu of proofs, was not returned to permit verification, at insured's request, until too late to verify and return it within prescribed time, held waiver of defect. German-American Ins. Co. v. Paul [Ind. T.] 83 S. W. 60; Vesey v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1074. Fact that proofs made by telegram not verified as required by statute held waived. Nicholas v. Iowa Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 115. A company which has, through its adjuster, ac-

ing contracts of insurance, collecting premiums and signing policies, may, in the absence of a provision in the policy to the contrary, waive proofs of loss, either in writing, or orally, or by acts constituting an estoppel.[44] A provision requiring such waiver to be in writing is valid.[45] A provision that no alterations or waivers shall bind the company unless by the written consent of an officer of the company is inoperative as to conditions to be performed after loss.[46]

Slight evidence has been held sufficient to show waiver.[47] Evidence that the insurer's superintendent stated that the company would not pay the policy and would not furnish blanks because the premiums had not been paid,[48] declarations of the company's supervisor of death claims relative to the grounds of its refusal to pay,[49] and evidence that the adjuster agreed to settle the loss if the insured would "knock off" a certain sum from his claim,[50] are admissible. So is an answer in a prior suit, in which defendant was nonsuited, pleading a failure of compliance with the arbitration clause.[51]

Examination under oath.—The insurance company has a right, when the policy so provides, to require an examination under oath of the insured, and his failure to appear for that purpose is a good defense to an action on the policy[52] unless waived.[53] Neither his agent[54] nor his trustee in bankruptcy[55] can take his place for this purpose. The privilege given to the company by the policy of examining the body of the insured must be exercised within a reasonable time,[56] and application therefor must be made to some one authorized to grant such privilege.[57]

False swearing.—In dealing with the insurer, the insured must observe the utmost good faith, without which there can be no recovery.[58] The unexplained pres-cepted an inventory of the property furnished by the insured, and waived further proofs, is estopped from denying the sufficiency of proofs theretofore sent it. Minneapolis Fire & Marine Mut. Ins. Co. v. Fultz [Ark.] 80 S. W. 576.

45. Where the policy provides that any waiver of a provision requiring proofs of loss to be made within a stipulated time must rest in a writing to that effect, executed in such a manner as will bind the company, no waiver can be predicated upon acts or conduct of the company resting in parol. Sims v. Union Assur. Soc., 129 F. 804. The fact that he has fled the country to avoid arrest does not excuse him. Pearlstine v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. [S. C.] 49 S. E. 4.

53. Where the insurer made no request for the production of the insured's books and papers and to examine him under oath after the fire in accordance with the provisions of the policy, it could not question his right to sue on the ground that such provision had been violated. 57. Refusal, by one not a relative and not appointed administrator until thereafter, to allow autopsy, held not to avoid policy. Root v. London Guarantee & Acc. Co., 92 App. Div. 578, 86 N. Y. S. 1055.

ence of false invoices in the proofs of loss avoids the policy for fraud, though enough goods, actually covered by it, are destroyed, to have warranted a recovery of the full amount of the insurance.[59] False swearing must be intentional and for the purpose of defrauding the insurer,[60] and must have a prejudicial or harmful result.[61] No part of the claim can be recovered though the false swearing is as to one item only.[62] Where the proofs of loss are made by defendant's agent, who inserts false statements therein after having been fully informed of the facts, the company cannot avoid liability on the ground of false swearing.[63]

§ 20. Adjustment and arbitration.[64]—The value of the property remaining after the fire must be ascertained in the manner provided by the policy.[65] Provisions looking to the ascertainment of the loss cannot be disregarded by the insured, and a sale of the damaged property by him which cuts off these rights avoids the policy.[66] It is no defense to a sale before appraisal that the object of the latter is to determine the value of the property, which is sufficiently shown by the sale itself.[67]

A provision making an appraisal a condition precedent to suit is valid and binding on the insured[68] unless waived.[69] Where no time is fixed within which

The fact that insured in a previous affidavit made to obtain a merchant's license fixed the value of the goods at less than he swore they were worth before and at the trial does not render him guilty of false swearing as a matter of law. Merely goes to his credibility. Burge Bros. v. Greenwich Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 342. British America Assur. Co. v. Darragh [C. C. A.] 128 F. 890. The fact that an adjuster states, at a preliminary examination of the goods, that an appraisal would be useless without a statement of the insured as to the amount of goods totally destroyed, which he declines to give, does not constitute a waiver of such appraisal. Astrich v. German-American Ins. Co., 128 F. 477, afd. 131 F. 13. The fact that an adjuster requested insured to furnish proofs of loss as to fixtures and furniture to a company which had insured merchandise only and that he did so, did not constitute a waiver of a previous forfeiture it may be had, the right thereto must be exercised within a reasonable time under the circumstances.[70] Where the goods are deteriorating it is the duty of the insured to notify the insurer of the necessity for a prompt disposition of them.[71] The motive of the insurer in requiring an appraisal cannot be inquired into, when he has an absolute right to do so.[72] A denial of liability dispenses with the necessity for an appraisal,[73] but such denial must ordinarily occur before answering in a suit on the policy.[74] No arbitration is necessary where the loss under a valued policy is total,[75] or where there is no dispute as to the amount of the loss.[76]

It is generally held that where arbitration is made a condition precedent to recovery in case of disagreement, it is incumbent on plaintiff to secure, or attempt to secure, such arbitration,[77] though there seems to be some conflict of authority in this regard.[78]

The provisions in regard to an appraisal should receive a reasonable construction.[79] A stipulation for an appraisal other than that provided for in the policy depriving the insured of his right of action, is in derogation of common right, and will be strictly construed.[80] Any substantial departure therefrom will make the agreement in which it appears collateral with and independent of the policy, and will avoid the effect of the latter instrument.[81]

There must be a fair and reasonable effort to make the appraisal successful.[82] If the insured or his appraiser, by acting in bad faith, prevents an appraisal, that fact will be a good defense to an action on the policy.[83] If a failure to arbitrate arises from the fault of the insurer, the insured is thereby relieved from compliance with the condition requiring it.[84] Though the arbitrator is not the agent of the party selecting him, yet the latter will be held responsible for any conduct on his part defeating an appraisal.[85] If both parties endeavor to prevent an appraisal, or to render abortive an agreement for one, it will cease to be a con-of the merchandise policies. Id. [C. C. A.] 131 F. 13, afg. 128 F. 477. Evidence sufficient to show waiver of arbitration. Queen Ins. Co. v. Straughan [Kan.] 78 P. 447.

dition precedent to suit.[86] Neither arbitrator should endeavor to secure a prejudiced, incompetent, or dishonest person for umpire, or a person living at a distance, when competent parties can be found nearby.[87] Prior service of an arbitrator in a similar capacity does not render him incompetent or invalidate an award in which he takes part, in the absence of a showing that he was prejudiced.[88]

The proceedings must be conducted openly, and fairly, and in a judicial manner.[89] The insured is entitled to appear before the arbitrators and be heard, and to introduce evidence as to the amount of his loss,[90] and a denial of such right makes the award voidable.[91] An award will also be set aside if the arbitrators refuse to hear or consider material evidence,[92] but such evidence must have been actually offered.[93] The duties of an umpire appointed to determine disagreements between arbitrators are a personal trust, and he has no right to base his conclusions on facts reported to him by another person.[94] Where the appraisal is merely for the purpose of determining the amount of loss, the insured cannot withdraw therefrom.[95] The resignation of the appraiser appointed by the insured after the award is signed and delivered does not affect its validity.[96] One submitting the amount of loss to appraisers cannot thereafter claim that such submission was void because there was no disagreement.[97] Some courts hold that the failure of the appraisers to make an award, when not due to any fault of the insured, does not operate to deprive him of his right of action on the policy.[98] Others that an honest but futile effort to make an award will not dispense with the necessity of an appraisal unless it causes a too protracted and wholly unreasonable delay.[99]

The award of appraisers cannot be impeached or set aside for fraud in a court of law.[1] A court of equity will set it aside for fraud, collusion, corruption, or gross misconduct on the part of the arbitrators, or for some palpable mistake appearing on its face,[2] but not for a mere mistake of judgment.[3] An action may be maintained to set aside the award, and, in the event of accomplishing that result, to recover for the actual loss sustained.[4] All the companies which had insured plaintiff's property and were parties thereto are properly joined as defendants.[5] If the award is set aside, the court will retain jurisdiction, and grant full relief by prorating the loss among the several defendants.[6] The test in determining whether the award is in fact insufficient is whether it results in a substantial loss to plaintiff as compared with the actual value of the property destroyed.[7] Fraud or want of good faith on the part of an appraiser must be pleaded and proved.[8] An arbitrator cannot contradict an award which he has signed.[9]

Where it is agreed that the award shall be in reference to the amount of loss and damage only, the insured should sue on the policy and not on the award.[10]

§ 21. Option to pay loss or restore property.—The company must exercise its option to take the damaged goods at their appraised value within a reasonable time,[11] and a failure to do so is a waiver of the right.[12] It is, however, ordinarily entitled to the full period given it by the policy in which to determine whether it will take and replace any part or all of the damaged property.[13] Any material abridgment of this right avoids the policy,[14] notwithstanding the fact that there are several insurers who are only ratably liable, and may have divergent views.[15]

Several insurers only ratably liable for the loss may severally elect to take advantage of clauses giving them the right to take and replace any part or all of the goods damaged.[16]

§ 22. Payment of loss or benefits and adjustment of interests in proceeds.[17]—The debt evidenced by the policy is extinguished by giving a check in payment therefor,[18] and the insurer is thereby estopped from denying that the payee was the real party in interest when it was executed.[19]

A policy of insurance, after loss, is not a liquidated demand, and, if a defense is made thereto, is a proper subject of compromise.[20] Where the company denies all liability and pays to the insured a sum less than he claims in full settlement of the controversy, and the latter executes a release and surrenders the policy, he cannot maintain an action at law thereon on the ground that such release was obtained by fraud, without a return or tender of the amount received.[21] Where the settlement is pleaded in the answer, the reply must set up such payment or tender.[22] Payment by the company of sick benefits due under an accident policy is no consideration for a release of liability for additional benefits subsequently accruing.[23] Where there is no consideration, it is immaterial whether the release was fraudulently obtained by the insurer, or whether insured knew of its contents, or failed to exercise reasonable diligence in ascertaining its import.[24] Equity has jurisdiction to set aside as fraudulent a settlement of a minor's claim made by his guardian by order of the probate court.[25]

The widow of insured is not entitled to half the proceeds of a policy payable to his estate, where there is no surplus estate after the payment of his debts even including such proceeds.[26] A wife joining her husband in the mortgaging of his realty, conveying away her dower interest therein, may require the proceeds of a life policy payable to his estate to be applied to the payment of the mortgage debts, in order that she may realize her dower interest therein.[27] Under a life policy payable to insured's wife and children, the wife's interest survives to the children on her death before the insured, and his second wife is not entitled to any portion of the proceeds.[28]

Statutes in some states provide that where there are no persons in existence to whom the insurance can be paid by the terms of the policy, it reverts to the estate of the insured.[29]

It is the duty of an insurance company having notice of an assignment of the proceeds of the policy, when summoned as garnishee in an action against the insured, to set it up as a defense, and, if it fails to do so, it cannot be relieved from liability to the assignee to the amount paid into court in such proceedings, to which the assignee was not a party.[30]

In many states the proceeds of life policies are exempted from the payment of decedent's debts[31] except by special contract or agreement.[32] Such contract must be clearly and explicitly shown, a mere intention that the debt is to be paid therefrom being insufficient.[33]

§ 23. Subrogation and other secondary rights of insurer.[34]—An insurance company which has indemnified the owner of property for loss incurred by him is entitled to all the means of indemnity which the latter had against the party primarily liable, to the extent of the payment,[35] and it may therefore bring and control, in the name of the insured, a suit against the wrongdoer who has occasioned the loss.[36] Under the code requiring suits to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, it must sue in its own name.[37] If the liability covers the entire loss, the company's right of action becomes absolute at law.[38] If it covers a part only, the insurer has an equitable interest merely, which it has and holds jointly with the insured, and they together may maintain an action for the entire loss against the wrongdoer.[39] The insurer must recover thereon, if at all, in the right of the insured alone.[40] The company must have actually asserted its right of subrogation by bringing and controlling a suit in the name of the insured against the party causing the loss, before it can be vested with such an interest as a party as will render its admission evidence on the part of defendant.[41]

The Maine statute giving to railroad companies the benefit of any insurance effected by the owner of any property damaged by fire communicated by locomotives applies only to those cases where the liability of the company is, by the act, made that of an insurer, and not to those where the fire is caused by its own negligence.[42] Hence, in the latter case an insurance company which has paid a policy upon the property injured, may maintain an action against the railroad in the name of the owner, to recover from it the amount so paid, not exceeding the difference between the value of the property and any sum already paid by the railroad to the owner.[43]

§ 24. Remedies and procedure. A. Rights of action and defenses and parties.[44]—The court has jurisdiction to determine the rights of a nonresident mortgagee in the proceeds of a policy issued by a foreign corporation authorized to do business in the state, where the plaintiff and his assignor are both residents of the state, though the property insured is located in a foreign country.[45] The office of an insurance agent representing several companies, maintained at his own expense, is the "place of doing business" of such of them as have no other place in such city for the transaction of their business.[46]

Equity will enforce specific performance of a policy in the nature of a contract to insure or grant an annuity.[47] A policy creates a single cause of action though the amount of insurance is apportioned in part to personalty and in part to realty,[48] but it has been held that separate actions may be prosecuted under separate and distinct items.[49]

An action on an account stated may be maintained on a claim under an insurance policy for loss by fire, where the amount due has been agreed upon by the parties.[50]

In an action brought by a receiver in the name of the beneficiary for the benefit of the insured, neither he nor the widow can stand in any better position than the beneficiary.[51]

Process.—By statute in Missouri, process may be served on town mutual insurance companies by serving a certified copy of the petition and summons on the president or secretary or other chief officer in charge of its principal office.[52] Service may also be had in the manner prescribed for service on corporations generally.[53]

Parties.[54]—The party named in the policy as the insured is a necessary party to a suit thereon, even though plaintiff claims that he was named through mistake, and seeks a reformation of the policy in that particular.[55] Insured's widow is not a necessary party to any action on a life policy by his special administrator.[56] The assignee of a mortgagee, to whom the policy is payable as his interest may appear, is a necessary party to a suit thereon, and, if he fails to join as a plaintiff, is properly made a defendant.[57] The persons insured and a mortgagee to whom the policy is made payable as his interest may appear are properly made joint plaintiffs in an action thereon.[58] By statute in many states the person to whom a policy of life insurance is payable may sue thereon in his own name.[59] In such case, the right survives to the administrator of the beneficiary.[60] By statute in Missouri, an action may be maintained on a risk or policy by a member or stockholder of a company organized under the laws of that state, if the loss is not paid within two months after it becomes due.[61]

Limitation of actions.—There is a conflict of authority as to the validity of provisions limiting the time within which actions may be brought on the policy. Some courts hold them to be valid and binding on the insured and the beneficiaries[62] even when such limitation is shorter than that allowed by the general statute of limitations.[63] Others hold that stipulations fixing a shorter limitation than that provided by such statutes are void.[64]

In South Dakota by statute, limitations on the time within which actions may be brought on the policy are void.[64a]

Applies though contained in a form of policy prepared by the state auditor in accordance with the provisions of the insurance laws. Laws 1893, c. 105, p. 174, gives auditor no authority to insert provisions contrary to statute. Id.

The limitation begins to run from the day of the fire.[65] The beneficiary is chargeable with knowledge of the terms of the policy in this regard.[66] Statutory exceptions to the running of limitations do not apply.[67] In the absence of a statute or provision of the contract to the contrary, an injunction restraining the bringing of the action, issued after such limitation has begun to run, will not stop the running of such limitation.[68] Plaintiff cannot contend that he is excused for failure to sue within the time limited because defendant had no agent within the state on whom service of process may be had where he calls a witness for the purpose of proving that he was the company's agent so as to bind it by his statements.[69]

Provisions requiring actions on policies to be brought within a certain time after loss are for the benefit of the insurer, and may be waived.[70] In the absence of an express waiver, some of the elements of an estoppel must exist.[71] Any conduct on the part of the company which is fairly calculated to induce a beneficiary to delay in bringing his action, and causes him to believe that the limitation will not be insisted upon, is sufficient to estop it from setting up such limitation as a defense.[72] It is not the duty of the insurer to inform the beneficiary of such limitation, and hence no waiver or estoppel can be predicated on his failure to do so.[73] Nor can it be predicated on the fact that, upon a demand after such limitation had run, the insurer gave another excuse for refusing payment.[74] Slight evidence is sufficient to show a waiver or estoppel.[75]

In order that a waiver by an agent may be valid, it must be shown that he had express or implied authority to make it.[76] The mere fact that he is authorized to receive proposals for insurance, and to countersign and deliver policies and collect premiums, does not show his authority to adjust losses or to waive proofs of loss or the limitation on the time within which suits must be commenced on the policy.[77] His authority cannot, of course, be proved by his own declarations.[78] The Michigan statute requiring agents of foreign insurance companies to hold certificates of authority does not increase an agent's authority or make the company liable for his representations with reference thereto.[79]

Some courts hold that if the company, by its acts, induces the beneficiary to delay bringing suit on the policy, the time of such delay is not to be counted as a part of the time limited therein for the bringing of the action.[80] Where the insurer requires an appraisement, it will be deemed to have thereby waived its right to enforce a provision that all actions on policies must be brought within a specified time after the loss occurs, until the appraisers have made an award, or the appraisement has been abandoned, unless the delay in the award or the abandonment is due to the conduct of the insured.[81]

A provision that the award of appraisers shall not become due until the expiration of a certain time after it is made is valid, and an action therefor before such time is premature.[82]

Where the words "of Brooklyn, New York," followed the name of the company in the title of the cause, and it was so named in the policy, it sufficiently shows the state in which it was organized, if such an allegation is necessary. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. McAtee [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 947. Designating defendant as "Underwriters' Fire Association at Dallas" instead of "of Dallas," held immaterial. Underwriters' Fire Ass'n v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1072.

Fire Insurance: Petition held to state cause of action on policy declared on. Underwriters' Fire Ass'n v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1072. Petition sufficient after verdict. Farmers' Bank v. Manchester Assur. Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 299.

Life insurance: Petition held, at its worst, to state a good cause of action imperfectly and hence to be sufficient after verdict. Robinson v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 105 Mo. App. 567, 80 S. W. 9.

a rule this may be done generally.[89] The complaint need not negative any of the provisions of the policy not made conditions precedent to the right to institute suit.[90] The three-fourth value clause and provisions in regard to concurrent insurance are matters of defense, and need not be referred to in the petition where the loss is total.[91]

The facts showing a waiver must be pleaded.[92] It cannot be shown under an allegation of performance.[93] It is sufficient if acts constituting an estoppel are pleaded without pleading the conclusion that one is estopped.[94] An averment that after the death of the insured the defendant waived the provision that the policy should only apply to persons between certain ages, and ratified and confirmed the policy as a contract for a specified time, sets forth a new contract with the beneficiary, and must show a consideration therefor.[95] The truth of answers in the application must be alleged where they are made a part of the policy, which provides for a forfeiture if they are not strictly true.

Where the pleading, by incorporating the policy, shows that it applies only in certain cases, it must aver facts bringing the case within its provisions.[96] It is not necessary to attach to the complaint a copy of the application on which the life policy sued on was issued.[97]

In an action on an accident policy, the complaint must allege that the disability resulted immediately from the injury,[98] or that insured came to his death by violent, external and accidental means within the time covered by the policy.[99]

A mixed bill for discovery and relief must state a good case for recovery or defense in order to obtain discovery.[1]

62. Complaint insufficient to show waiver of notice and proofs of loss. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Sanders, 32 Ind. App. 448, 70 N. E. 167.

89. Under Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 634, general allegation of performance is sufficient to cover furnishing of notice and proofs of loss. Farmers' Bank v. Manchester Assur. Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 299. 92. Petition held to sufficiently allege facts constituting waiver of forfeiture for nonpayment of full amount of premium when due. Battin v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 874. An allegation that defendant has, in its dealings with the insured, now deceased, treated the policy as in force held insufficient. Id. Reply held to sufficiently allege authority of agent to waive condition against incumbrances. German-American Ins. Co. v. Yeagley [Ind.] 71 N. E. 897. An amendment to show waiver is properly disallowed where none of the acts alleged therein would constitute a waiver. Everett-Ridley-Ragan Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co. [Ga.] 48 S. E. 918.

93. Where pleaded waiver only of clause in regard to filing proof of loss, and alleged performance of all other conditions, could not prove waiver of limitation of time within which action must be begun. Allen v. Dutchess County Mut. Ins. Co., 95 App. Div. 86, 88 N. Y. S. 530.

94. Estoppel of company to claim, in action for return of premiums, that contract was still in force, where it retained policy when plaintiff returned it. Anderson v. New York Life Ins. Co., 34 Wash. 616, 76 P. 109.

Declaration alleging strain caused by lifting heavy substance which fell against and struck assured, held sufficient. Pervanger v. Union Casualty & Surety Co. [Miss.] 37 So. 461.

1. Discovery of provisions in regard to proofs of loss sought because of loss of policy. Must show that proofs were furnished or waived. Munson v. German-American Fire Ins. Co. [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 160.

In West Virginia the statute provides a short form of declaration on an insurance policy,[2] and if the defense is a failure of the insured to comply with, or his violation of any clause, condition, or warranty, the defendant must file a statement specifying the particular one with respect to which such failure or violation occurred.[3] Such statement must be filed even though the warranty is a condition precedent to recovery.[4] After it is filed, the burden of showing a compliance, if a condition precedent to recovery, is on plaintiff.[5] Such statement is not a plea but only a specification, and is not open to demurrer for want of sufficiency.[6]

Facts showing a forfeiture must be pleaded.[7] An allegation in the answer that no notice of loss was given is admitted by a reply pleading waiver and estoppel or matter to avoid the effect of failure to give it.[8] An affidavit of defense charging false answers and representations in the application and letters must have a copy of such applications and letters attached.[9]

Practice.—Allowing the jury to view the premises,[10] and allowing amendments,[11] are matters largely in the discretion of the trial court. A motion for nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff has not complied with the conditions of the policy, made at the close of plaintiff's evidence, should not be granted since plaintiff may show waiver in reply.[12]

Variance.[13]—The usual rules as to variance apply.[14]

property destroyed.[17] In a suit on an accident policy, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the death of the insured was due to accidental causes.[18] The burden of proving the materiality of false representations is on the insurer.[19] The burden of ultimately proving the truth of representations contained in the application, which is made a part of the policy, is on the plaintiff.[20] They are, however, presumed to be true, in the absence of countervailing proof.[21] Hence, he need not, in the first instance, offer proof to support his allegations that such is the fact, but may do so in rebuttal after defendant has offered evidence tending to show misrepresentations.[22] But such presumption has no probative force in determining an issue of fact as to whether such representations were true.[23]

A company securing the right to open and close by filing an admission that plaintiff was entitled to recover unless defendant established one or more of its affirmative defenses has the burden of proving a breach so alleged.[24] The defendant has also been held to have the burden of showing that the property was idle longer than the period allowed by the policy,[25] the intentional and fraudulent exaggeration of the amount of the loss,[26] and that the insured had cancer at the time he applied for insurance.[27]

The law presumes against suicide.[28] Hence, the burden of proving it is on the insurer defending on that ground.[29] It may be shown by circumstantial as well as direct testimony.[30]

Evidence.—Proofs of death are evidence against the beneficiary of facts therein contained only on the theory that they are admissions by him.[31] Where they are

In action on employer's liability policy by contractor, held that judgment roll in action against city for same injury, of which defendant had notice and which it had opportunity to defend, was conclusive against it of defect causing injury, the injured party's freedom from negligence, and the amount of damages recovered, but that it did not establish whether injury was due to act of plaintiff or of subcontractor. not verified by plaintiff, it is incumbent on the company offering them to prove the circumstances making them admissible against him as an admission.[32] There is no presumption that plaintiff furnished them.[33] There is a conflict of authority as to the admissibility of affidavits of others than the beneficiary constituting a part of the proofs of death.[34] Proofs of death, though not made by plaintiffs, are admissible against them when they are made on behalf of all the beneficiaries, and no other proofs having been made, the right to recover depends on them.[35] A provision in a life policy that the proofs shall be evidence of the facts therein stated in behalf of, but not against, the company, is valid.[36]

Proofs of loss under a fire policy are not evidence for the plaintiff and cannot be read to the jury.[37] They are for the court in order that it may determine, as a preliminary matter, whether there has been a sufficient compliance with a condition precedent to the institution of the action.[38] Before a copy of the proofs can be introduced by the insured, he must give notice to the company to produce the original.[39]

In an action on an accident policy, the verdict of the coroner's jury is not admissible to show the cause of death.[40]

Parol evidence of the contents of an inventory destroyed with the goods is admissible.[41] The insured may testify that he was the owner of the insured building,[42] and as to the nature of the fixtures insured and their value at the time of the fire.[43] Declarations of the assignor of a life policy as to his age, made after the assignment, are not admissible against the assignee in an action on the policy.[44] Expressions of the agent's opinions as to the rights of the parties, made after the policy was issued, are inadmissible.[45] Statements of the insured made after the time for payment of premiums that he intended to keep up the policy are inadmissible for any purpose,[46] and his declarations, made after the policy is delivered, to the effect that he has dropped it, are inadmissible when offered with reference to the invalidity of the policy on account of the first premium not having been paid in full on delivery.[47] In an action on a life policy by an assignee thereof, declarations of the insured made after the assignment, tending to show an intention to commit suicide, are not admissible to prove that fact, when so separated from the act by lapse of time as not to be a part of the res gestae.[48]

The general rules as to the admissibility of evidence apply.[49] Proof that the insured did not sign the application on a particular occasion is insufficient to show that he never signed it.[50] The fact that the verdict is less than the amount claimed and the face of the policy does not establish the fact of fraudulent overvaluation as a matter of law.[51] The evidence as to loss need not be conclusive in character or mathematical in certainty, but only the best obtainable under the circumstances.[52] remain idle during the "winter season" it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the company understood the local meaning of that term.[53]

Where plaintiff introduces the policy on the back of which is a copy of the application purporting to be signed by insured, and in the claim of loss herself states that it was so signed, she is thereby estopped to introduce proof that he never signed it, for the purpose of avoiding the effect of a breach of warranty.[54] Allowing the jury to take with them, to assist them in reviewing and considering the evidence, a statement, prepared by plaintiff's counsel, of the items of loss claimed, the contents of which has been given in argument without objection, is in the discretion of the court.[55]

A custom cannot be shown to contradict the plain terms of the contract.[56] Where fraud in falsely overstating the amount of the loss is alleged as a defense, evidence of plaintiff's financial condition at the time when the merchandise was in his possession is admissible.[57] A postal registry receipt signed "Underwriters' Fire Association," with a name signed underneath, is admissible to show receipt of a letter by such company on proper proof of the authority of the signer, notwithstanding its full corporate name is not signed thereto.[58]

PROXIMATE CAUSE IN ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

[Special Article by Geo. F. Longsdorf.]

The distinction between an accident which is the "sole and proximate cause" of death and a bodily or physical "condition" contributing thereto or a "secondary or predisposing" cause is difficult in its application to the facts rather than in formulation of doctrine. The words themselves express the distinction as well perhaps as it can be defined though definitions of them are numerous. Efficiency[93] and not relation in time or place[94] is the test of causal proximity. A "predisposing cause" would seem to fall within the class of causes which while they do not owe their origin to the accident do owe their efficiency to its impulse.[95] A "secondary cause" may be secondary in origin or its causal efficiency may be secondary and in that sense it would cover predisposing cause. The physical or bodily "condition" of insured is his state or situation as regards the cause. Out of the condition the cause may generate a secondary cause, but the condition is not any of the degrees of cause.[96] In their application to accident insurance the difference between proximate and remote cause may be compared by analogy to the difference between accident and incident,[97] the meaning of "accident" being an important question to be first determined.[98] It is a question for the jury what was the proximate cause.[99] The burden of proof of accidental cause is on the plaintiff but he is aided in making his prima facie case by certain presumptions.[1] In applying stipulations and terms designed to limit the risk to accidental causes, "the tendency of the courts under the settled rules of construction applicable to insurance contracts is to interpret the clause in a manner favorable to the insured, and where the accident can be considered as the proximate cause of death although disease may have been present as a secondary cause,[2] or where death is the reasonable and natural consequence of the injury although disease may have supervened,[3] the policy is not avoided unless the exception plainly includes such case.[4] To do so, "the intervening cause * * * must be a new and independent cause which interrupts the natural sequence of events, turns aside their cause, prevents the natural and probable result of the original accidental injury, and produces a different result that could not reasonably be anticipated. It may not be a mere effect of that injury, produced by it, and dependent upon it for both its existence and its effect.[5] Liability

Travelers' Protective Ass'n, 133 F. 892, it was said of a policy written on one who was killed by assailants against whom arresting officers failed to protect him: "The shots * * * were the direct and proximate cause and the failure of the officers to protect him was only a condition which may or may not have contributed to the result. It may have been easier to kill him because of the condition but it was not the condition which killed him. Thus a man with heart disease might be killed by a blow which would not affect a sound man, but nevertheless it would be the blow and not the heart disease which killed him." In Freeman v. Mercantile Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 156 Mass. 351, 17 L. R. A. 629, liability to recurrence of peritonitis to which insured was susceptible was held not proximate cause where there was an accidental fall which induced peritonitis and resulting death. A fall was the cause and fatty degeneration of the heart rendered it fatal in the case of Modern Woodmen Ass'n v. Shryock, 54 Neb. 250, 74 N. W. 607, 39 L. R. A. 826.

for "secondary" or "predisposing" causes may of course be avoided by stipulation but it must clearly so intend. Thus insurance against injury by accident which is the "sole and direct cause," excepting certain diseases causing death "directly or jointly" with the accidental injury, protects one who died under operation to relieve an excepted disease, hernia, caused directly by accident.[6] He was not, however, protected under similar circumstances by a policy which excluded death from "secondary" causes.[7] There is a class of cases wherein the exception of death "accelerated or promoted" by disease excludes recovery if the disease contributed with an otherwise nonfatal accident to cause death.[8]

Reducing the cases to classes, it appears that as regards proximate and remote causes the following general conclusions may be reached:

Disease which owes its existence to the injury or accident is not a cause.[9]

A disease causing accident which in turn causes death is not always the proximate cause. The accident may be.[10] The cases may perhaps be reconciled by applying the test—did the accident operating after the disease produce a different death where tetanus had set in with aberration of mind caused by the pain during which the insured cut his throat.

Death "resulting * * * either as a cause or effect" did not exempt the insurer where temporary sickness led a passenger to go on the platform of a train to vomit and he fell off. Preferred Acc. Ins. Whether an exclusion of liability for death "resulting wholly or partly, directly or indirectly from disease or bodily infirmity in any form" has a like effect is doubtful. No doubt "result" might be regarded etymologically as broader than "effect," which is the correlative of cause. Whether it is so when used in a policy seems never to have been specially considered. Probably it would be interpreted as synonymous with "effect," at least in all but the Federal courts, and even their later decisions warrant this forecast. See Preferred Acc. Ins. Co. v. Muir [C. C. A.] 126 F. 926. At least they should not be construed to mean what might substantially nullify the insurance. See Fetter v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 174 Mo. 256, 73 S. W. 592.

Melick, 65 F. 178, 27 L. R. A. 629. Similar words ["consequence"] appear in that of Freeman v. Ass'n, 156 Mass. 351, 17 L. R. A. 753; and in that of Preferred Acc. Ins. Co. v. Muir [C. C. A.] 126 F. 926, which added the words "either as a cause or effect."

result that could not reasonably be anticipated?[11] Such an injury is usually excepted by express provision,[12] in applying which the rule of ejusdem generis does not apply to an exception against death from intoxication, sunstroke, vertigo, hernia, "or any disease or bodily infirmity."[13]

A disease fatal or nonfatal, antedating an accident, not necessarily or probably fatal, but so set in motion by the accident that death results, is merely a condition or a predisposing cause. It is not the efficient cause. The accident is a "sole and proximate cause independent of all other causes." The words quoted do not refer to remote or secondary causes.[14] Of the opposite contention it was said "there would be scarcely any limit to their nullifying power.[15]

ASSIGNABILITY OF LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES.

[Special Article by Hascal R. Brill, Jr.]

The common law and statutes.—Being a chose in action an insurance policy was not originally assignable at common law, though the assignee had his remedy in equity.[16] By statute in most states they are now made assignable,[17] and the assignee may generally sue thereon in his own name.[18]

A blow which ruptured a cancerous kidney whence fatal hemorrhages followed is a proximate cause "independent of all other causes." Fetter v. Fidelity & C. Co., 174 Mo. 256, 61 L. R. A. 459. There was in that case evidence that the cancer might have resulted from the blow. Being thrown against a car seat is the cause and not the diseased condition which was thereby hastened. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Hicks, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 74, 56 S. W. 87. In Standard L. & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Sale [C. C. A.] 121 F. 664, 61 L. R. A. 337, a charge was approved which read—"If * * * chronic Bright's disease combined with the injury as an efficient operative to produce death" there could be no recovery under a policy restricted to death from accident as the "proximate and sole cause thereof." The holding is dictum since the judgment was reversed for other errors. According to the other cases, it could on a direct challenge be sustained only by interpreting the words "efficient operative" so as to exclude predisposing and secondary causes. This is the correct rule. See cases defining proximate cause as efficient cause, supra.

It would not seem just to apply a more strict rule against the insured than the criminal law will apply to make one guilty of a felony perpetrated by negligently setting a cause in motion. In Reg. v. Plummer, 1 Car. & K. 600, cited 61 L. R. A. 293, a prosecution for negligent homicide, the neglect was held the cause of death though it operated by accelerating a fatal disease.

Necessity of insurable interest.—One having an insurable interest may become the owner of the policy by assignment.[19]

There is a conflict of authority as to whether a life policy may be assigned to one having no insurable interest in the life of the insured.[20] Some courts hold that if the policy is valid in its inception it may be assigned to anyone, whether he has such an insurable interest or not,[21] provided the transaction is in good faith and assignable under Ga. Civ. Code, § 3077. Steele v. Gatlin, 115 Ga. 929, 42 S. E. 253. Policies of insurance are governed by the rules applicable to ordinary simple contracts. St. John v. American Mut. Life Ins. Co., 13 N. Y. 31, 64 Am. Dec. 629. By statute (Laws 1895, c. 20), policies in the Wisconsin Odd Fellows Mutual Life Insurance Company can only be assigned to persons having an insurable interest in the life of the insured, and no money may be paid to any assignee not having such interest. This act has no retroactive effect, and does not apply to assignments made before its adoption. Strike v. Wisconsin O. F. M. Life Ins. Co., 95 Wis. 583, 70 N. W. 819.

United States Courts: In Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 Law. Ed. 924, the supreme court lays down the rule that a policy is not assignable to one having no insurable interest in the life of the insured, and bases its holding on the ground that the assignment is as objectionable as allowing the assignee to take out the policy in his own name. The facts in that case were that the policy was taken out by the insured and assigned on the next day, in pursuance of a prior agreement, and that the assignee paid the premiums. It has frequently been cited to the proposition that all such assignments are void, but later cases in the supreme and inferior federal courts hold that such transactions are valid unless they are merely colorable and for the purpose of evading the rule against wagering policies, apparently on the theory that the Warnock Case turned on the fact that the transaction there considered was in the nature of a wager. See Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. France, 94 U. S. 561, 24 Law. Ed. 287 (citing Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 Law. Ed. 251); New York Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. Where insured procured policy for $3,000 at suggestion of third party, to whom he assigned it to cover debt of $70, and to whom he gave note for $3,000 without consideration, the assignee paying all the premiums held that the transaction was a mere wager, notwithstanding fact that assignee agreed to pay $1,000 of the proceeds to the insured's wife. Cammack v. Lewis, 82 U. S. 643, 21 Law. Ed. 244. Assignment valid only to extent of debt and premiums paid, and insured's administratrix entitled to recover balance. Id. The essential point is that it be bona fide and not merely a cover for obtaining wagering or merely speculative insurance, and a device to evade the law. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Brown [Ind.] or contemporaneous with the taking out of the policy.[23] The question is one of intention, to be arrived at by a consideration of all the attending facts and circumstances.[24] It has been held that there can be no objection to the assignment where the insured has covenanted to himself pay the premiums,[25] or where all of the premiums have been paid,[26] nor to the assignment of an endowment policy where nearly all of them have been paid.[27] The rule applies equally in the case of benefit certificates, except in so far as the right to change the beneficiary is limited by the laws of the order.[28]

Other courts hold that, unless the assignee has an insurable interest, the transaction is as much a wager on human life and as opposed to public policy as if he had taken out the insurance in the first instance, and hence is invalid,[29]

Indiana: By statute (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 4914h), an assignment of a policy issued by a domestic corporation to one having no insurable interest, except as security for a debt, with remainder over to the beneficiaries or the estate of the insured renders the policy void. This act does not apply to assignments of policies issued by foreign corporations. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Brown [Ind.] 65 N. E. 908.

The case of Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Hazzard, 41 Ind. 116, 13 Am. Rep. 313, holds that policies are not assignable to one who buys them merely as a matter of speculation, without interest in the life of the insured. The court, however, lays down the broad principle that no one should hold a policy on the life of another, where he has no insurable interest therein, whether he acquires it directly or by assignment. The case has frequently been cited as authority for the proposition that all assignments to persons having no insurable interest are void. See Gordon v. Ware Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 132 F. 444. Co., 30 Ind. App. 262, 66 N. E. 922, it is held that one holding a valid policy on the life of another cannot assign it to one having no insurable interest for the purpose of indemnifying him against loss as the surety of the assignor. In the case of Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 159 Ind. 644, 65 N. E. 908, the Indiana supreme court holds that assignments of foreign policies to which the statute above quoted do not apply are void only when the transaction is merely colorable and a scheme to obtain speculative insurance, and that the Hazzard Case and others following it turn on the fact that the transactions considered were, in fact, wagers. The court also holds that there can be no objection raised where the assignor pays the premiums. See, also, Milner v.

notwithstanding the fact that the company assents to the assignment.[30] The same rule applies to benefit certificates.[31] The fact that the insured surrenders his benefit certificate and procures another payable directly to the assignee is immaterial.[32] The fact that the policy is an endowment one is immaterial.[33]

The fact that the assignee has no such interest does not relieve the company from liability under the terms of its contract.[34] It is bound to perform and the law will dispose of the money according to the rights of the parties.[35] If the assignee collects the insurance it is generally held that he will hold the proceeds in trust for the benefit of those entitled by law to receive them,[36] and that the insured's personal representatives may recover the same from him, less the premiums or assessments which he has paid.[37] Some courts hold, however,

The complaint need not negative the fact that the assignment is void as a wagering policy. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 159 Ind. 644, 65 N. E. 908.

Assignment as collateral.—No insurable interest is required to support an assignment by way of collateral.[42] As in the case of other pledges, an assignment absolute in form may be shown to have been made by way of security only,[43] and the assignee must account to the assignor for any balance remaining in his hands after the debt is paid.[44]

In those states where assignments to one having no insurable interest are held void an assignment as collateral, whether absolute or conditional, is void beyond the amount of the debt secured thereby, together with the premiums paid by the assignee and interest thereon.[45]

payable to himself, or his executors or administrators to whom he pleases, and the fact that the legatee has no insurable interest will not defeat his right to recover.[46] The fact that he has previously made a void assignment thereof to the legatee is immaterial.[47]

Provisions in policy affecting assignability.—Provisions prohibiting assignments to persons not having an insurable interest are valid,[48] but they have been held not to apply to assignments as collateral.[49]

There is a conflict of authority as to whether a provision making the policy incontestable after a certain period prevents the insurer from defending on the ground that the assignee had no insurable interest and that the assignment was made in furtherance of a mere wagering contract.[50]

Consent of beneficiary.—In case the policy is payable to a named beneficiary, he must of course assent to the assignment.[51]

Policy as assets of insured.—The right of the insured's trustee in bankruptcy to policies payable to his estate[52] or the similar right of the personal representative to collect policies as assets[53] are not within this discussion.

The effect of the cessation of an insurable interest in the assignee[54] embraces matters also beyond the scope of this article.

INTEREST.

§ 1. Right to Interest and Demands Bearing Interest (241). Compound Interest (244).
§ 2. Rate and Computation (245).
§ 3. Remedies and Procedure to Recover Interest (245).

§ 1. Right to interest and demands bearing interest.[55]—Interest has been defined as the compensation for the use of money or the recompense for withholding it.[56] It is grounded on contract, on a rule of damages, on fraud, delinquency or breach of trust, or on the making of interest out of another's funds.[57]

It may rest in contract express[58] or implied.—An agreement for an increased rate of interest after maturity of a note is not affected by an extension according to the original terms,[59] but where the holder has the option to accelerate maturity

59. A note, drawing interest at six per cent, was to draw ten after maturity. An extension was agreed upon during which rate was six per cent. Held, after expirafor breach of conditions it does not take effect until the option has been exercised,[60] and where the right to interest rests on the performance of certain conditions precedent, such conditions must be strictly and literally performed.[61] An agreement to pay interest on money held at the option of a prospective borrower renders him liable therefor whether he exercises the option or not.[62] A junior lienor lending money to take up a mortgage without intent to cancel it is entitled to interest.[63]

Open accounts do not imply a contract to bear interest,[64] nor will an overdraft carried in an account do so until payment be demanded or it becomes a separate settled debt,[65] but it is in some states allowed on annual balances of an open account.[66] An account stated bears interest from date.[67] Where a statute provides that accounts shall bear interest from due-time, a debtor cannot avoid payment by disputing the account.[68]

A debt, the amount of which is ascertained, bears interest from due-time[69] and not before.[70] In the absence of an agreement, a loan will not bear interest until demand for repayment.[71]

Interest as damages is recoverable for the breach of a contract to pay money when it is rightfully due and owing.[72] Such is the case of over-due commercial paper and matured contracts for payment of money.[73] Whence it is said that demand paper bears interest from date.[74] It should not be allowed on a note more than covered by contemporaneous right of set-off or recoupment.[75] An amount stipulated as liquidated damages bears interest from the time the right of action accrues.[76] It may be allowed for nonpayment of an award of arbitrators.[77]

Moneys received which ought to be refunded,[78] e. g., illegal taxes[79] and moneys had and received for the use of another and retained without his consent[80] bear interest as damages especially when so provided by statute,[81] and so do moneys necessarily paid to another's use.[82] The circumstances may require demand to fix breach,[83] as in case of an improper preference of creditors, when it runs from date of demand and refusal to return.[84] On a quantum meruit for work and labor it runs from demand.[85] And so a secondary liability like the individual liability of a stockholder does not commence to bear interest until action brought or he is charged with notice that he is to be held for a specific corporate obligation,[86] but where payment of a judgment was coerced and thereafter the judgment was reversed, the debtor was entitled to interest from date of reversal.[87] The commencement of an action suffices for a demand,[88] but demand on one not authorized to pay avails nothing.[89]

Unless otherwise provided by statute,[90] so long as a demand rests on a con-

78. A statute providing that taxes illegally assessed and collected should be refunded need not expressly provide for interest. In re O'Berry [N. Y.] 72 N. E. 109. In the absence of evidence of special loss because of negligent delay of goods shipped, the shipper can only recover interest on the amount invested in the goods. Lee & Co. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [N. C.] 48 S. E. 809.

79. NOTE. Interest on taxes illegally collected: The petitioner paid a transfer tax on a vested remainder which she had acquired. The law under which the tax was collected having been held unconstitutional, the petitioner sues to have her money refunded with interest. A statute provided for the refunding of taxes under the situation above stated, but was silent as to interest. Held, the state having provided by statute for the refunding of taxes collected under an unconstitutional law, the right to collect interest follows, even though not expressly so declared. In re O'Berry, 179 N. Y. 285.

The rule is that taxes do not draw interest unless interest is expressly allowed by statute. Cooley, Taxation [3rd Ed.] pp. 20, 1487. At first glance, the principal case in allowing interest would seem to be at variance with this rule. The variance is apparent, however, rather than real; for money collected as a tax, under an unconstitutional statute, is really no tax at all. There was no right to take the money, but since it was taken, it must be regarded as money had and received to the plaintiff's use, and interest can thus be allowed without conflicting with any doctrine of taxation. Another requisite for the recovery of taxes paid is that payment should have been involuntary. Odendahl v. Board, 112 Iowa, 182. This is usually taken to mean that the tax must be paid under some threatened seizure of person or property. Town of Edinburg v. Hackney, 54 Ind. 83. The principal case is liberal in its interpretation of what is an involuntary payment. 6 Columbia L. R. 66.

tingency and the amount is not ascertainable by general recognized standards it will not bear interest.[91] In Wisconsin it is allowed after demand sufficiently specific to inform the debtor of the claims made.[92] Judgment does not, until it is a finality, work a liquidation.[93]

Interest from the date of the injury may be allowed in tort[94] and it is said that jurors have an equitable power to allow it.[95] It will not be allowed as damages for personal injury.[96] In Missouri it is not allowable if no pecuniary benefit could accrue from the wrong.[97]

A conversion or breach of trust of money imposes liability for interest,[98] e. g., a surviving partner who appropriates funds.[99]

Interest ceases with the cessation or tender of the debt or obligation.—Thus interest is not allowable after the ancestor's death on a note evidencing an advancement,[1] nor one more than offset when due.[2] But it was allowed on an overdue special legacy to a trustee who charged himself with interest on funds remaining in his hands.[3]

A tender to stop interest must be kept good.[4]

Compound interest.[5]—To create a contract obligation to pay compound interest, there must be an express agreement,[6] and such agreement will be literally construed.[7] Under a statute providing that the rate of interest fixed in a contract

91. Sureties of a defaulting guardian paid the liability. They received some property from his estate which his heirs claimed was of greater value than the amount paid by them. Held, they could not recover interest on the difference until it had been determined by a court. Bull v. Rich [Minn.] 100 N. W. 213. Interest cannot be allowed on damages for breach of contract from date of breach when the amount is so indefinite that it requires the verdict of a jury to determine it. Dady v. Condit, 209 Ill. 488, 70 N. E. 1088.

92. Claim for services. Lowe v. Ring [Wis.] 101 N. W. 698.

5. Note: Interest may be compounded against trustees for positive misconduct and willful violation or omission of duty (Wheeler v. Bolton, 92 Cal. 159; Powell v. Powell, 10 Ala. 900; Ackerman v. Emotts, 4 Barb. [N. Y.] 628; In re Guardianship of Thurston, 57 Wis. 104), or gross delinquency or such gross negligence as to be evidence of corrupt intention (Smith v. Kennard, 38 Ala. 695; Fall v. Simmons, 6 Ga. 265). Where the omission is due to simple negligence without actual intent to defraud simple interest alone is allowed. Adams v. Lombard, 80 Cal. 426; Bryant v. Craig, 12 Ala. 354; Wilmerding v. McKesson, 103 N. Y. 329.—From note to In re Ricker, 14 Mont. 153, 29 L. R. A. 622.

6. Provision for payment of annual interest does not create an obligation to pay compound interest. Cullen v. Whitham, 33 Wash. 366, 74 P. 581. That two persons in their dealings with a corporation assented to settlements with annual rests and compound interest is insufficient to show that in their dealings with each other they settled on that basis. Gay v. Berkey [Mich.] 100 N. W. 920.

7. An agreement to pay compound interest until a certain date does not extend be-continues after maturity, a stipulation as to semi-annual rests has no application after maturity.[8] An agreement made, before interest becomes due, to compound it, is void,[9] but after it becomes due such an agreement is valid.[10]

§ 2. Rate and computation.[11]—Interest beyond the legal rate is usury.[12] Subject thereto the contract rate is adopted[13] or if there be none, the legal rate,[14] and it may be allowed on nonpayment of a debt bearing less.[15] Interest on a debt is computed up to the time of the first payment and the payment so made is first applied to discharge the interest; the surplus if any, to sink the principal.[16] Where the legal rate was changed pending an obligation of co-sureties to contribute, on judgment for contribution, interest should be charged at the rate provided by the contract until the legal rate was changed and from that time at the legal rate.[17] Where default has been made before due date, interest should be deducted from future installments the face of which have been increased to include interest.[18]

§ 3. Remedies and procedure to recover interest.[19]—Ordinarily, principal and interest must be recovered in the same action, but a party may be precluded from objecting that a demand therefor was not made.[20] A complaint must contain a prayer for interest,[21] but a prayer for general relief is sufficient,[22] and where a contract is set aside for fraud, interest may be allowed on payments made though it was not demanded.[23] None is recoverable beyond what is prayed.[24] An allega-

NOTE: Taking interest in advance at the highest rate allowed by law is not usury (Bank of Burlington v. Durkee, 1 Vt. 403), but this practice is sanctioned by the courts rather from necessity (overwhelming current of decision) than upon principle (Tholen v. Duffy, 7 Kan. 405; Wetmore v. Brien, 3 Head [Tenn.] 733; Fleckner v. Bank of U. S., 8 Wheat. [U. S.] 388, 5 Law. Ed. 631; Marvine v. Hymers, 12 N. Y. 223; Agricultural Bank v. Bissell, 12 Pick. [Mass.] 586; Maine Bank v. Butts, 9 Mass. 49). Statutory authority to discount or loan money includes authority to take such interest in advance. Lyon v. State Bank, 1 Stew. [Ala.] 442. Individuals as well as banks have a right to take interest in advance. Vahlberg v. Keaton, 51 Ark. 534; Parker v. Cousins, 2 Grat. [Va.] 372, 44 Am. Dec. 388; Cole v. Lockhart, 2 Ind. 631; Marvine v. Hymers, 12 N. Y. 223. But in Penn. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Carpenter, 49 Ohio St. 260, express authority given by statute to banks and other corporations was held a strong implication that other persons were not so entitled.—Note to Bank of Newport v. tion that interest is due at a given rate from a given day will be sufficient to authorize a recovery of all interest due on the debt,[25] but if a stated sum is set forth as due at a stated date, no larger sum can be recovered for interest up to the date given.[26] When a verdict is rendered for a certain amount with interest, the court may compute it and include it in the judgment.[27] The reversal of a decree which awarded interest on an arbitrator's award unpaid does not prohibit a reallowance if the reversal was not in respect of the allowance of interest.[28]

§ 1. The Tax on Liquors and Tobacco (246).
§ 2. Oleomargarine Act August 2, 1886 (247).
§ 3. War Revenue Acts, June 13, 1898, and March 2, 1901 (247). Documentary Stamps (247). Recovery Back of Taxes Paid (249).
§ 4. Filled Cheese Act June 6, 1896 (249).

§ 1. The tax on liquors and tobacco[30] has called for many laws to facilitate collection and prevent evasion. Thus failure to stamp and mark a package makes it forfeitable,[31] and the penalty also provided for failure to stamp packages as required by law is not exclusive.[32] The law against false marks on wines and liquors being removed or transported applies only to wholesale dealers and the like,[33] does not require contents of a package to be indicated[34] and does not regard shipping directions as a label.[35] A vehicle not the property of a common carrier, used in transporting liquor illegally brought into the United States, is subject to forfeiture, though the owner had no knowledge of the purpose for which it was to be used.[36] In a forfeiture proceeding it must be shown that the substance was liquor,[37] that the act was unlawful when done,[38] and it must be proved as laid.[39] Proof of the intoxicating properties of a well known spirituous liquor is unnecessary.[40] The fact that the proof of spirits had been reduced so as to show a smaller percentage of alcohol raises no presumption that it had been reduced by the addition of spirits of a different quality.[41] The giving of a ware-

§ 2. Oleomargarine Act August 2, 1886.[43]—The congressional power to levy excises was not exceeded by the enactment of this law,[44] and the motives or purposes of its enactment are not open to judicial inquiry in considering the power of that body to enact such legislation.[45] Due process of law is not denied because natural butter artificially colored is not taxed,[46] or because the effect of the tax may be to suppress the manufacture of this commodity,[47] and any implied constitutional prohibition which may prevent the destruction by congress of fundamental rights cannot be invoked to invalidate this law.[48] Products made in conscious imitation of butter are taxable, and when any substance, although named as a possible ingredient, substantially serves only the purpose of coloring so as to cause the product to "look like butter of any shade of yellow" it is an artificial coloration.[49] Only the factory and manufacturing apparatus are subject to forfeiture for an attempt to evade payment of the tax.[50]

§ 3. War Revenue Acts, June 13, 1898, and March 2, 1901.[51]—The special tax imposed on the gross receipts of a sugar refining company is an excise.[52] Such receipts include moneys derived from subsidiary enterprises incidental to the refining of sugar,[53] but not those from independent business enterprises or investments.[54] The tax on banking capital reaches whatever has become substantially a part of the capital of a corporation regardless of bookkeeping.[55] The tax on telephone messages applies where by contract subscribers pay a fixed sum per term for the privilege of transmitting not to exceed a certain number of messages.[56]

58. Stamp tax on memorandum or contract of sale of certificate of stock. Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 48 Law. Ed. 481.

Note: A stamp tax imposed on bonds required by a state of its officers is in necessary legal effect a tax upon the right of such officers to qualify, and upon the exercise by the commonwealth of its govern-construed in the sense in which they are used in business,[59] and documents are free if without such meaning.[60]

"Registered tonnage" fixing tax on charter parties is not used in a technical sense.[61] All memorandums of distinct transactions between broker and customer are required to be stamped.[62] A notary's certificate of acknowledgment attached to a declaration of homestead is within the provision requiring "certificates of any description required by law not otherwise specified," to be stamped,[63] and since the stamps are required to be furnished by the persons for whose benefit they are used, the tax is not objectionable as imposing a burden on a function of the state government not subject to taxation.[64] The tax cannot be evaded by executing charter parties in a foreign country and using only copies.[65]

The provision rendering instruments inadmissible unless stamped does not apply to state courts,[66] but is binding on the Federal courts,[67] and the repeal of the act did not authorize the subsequent admission in evidence of an unstamped certificate subject to the tax.[68] A telegraph company is not liable for damages resulting from failure to transmit a message to which no stamp was affixed.[69]

Legacies which are vested[70] only are transfers subject to tax. Debts of the estate are to be deducted from the amount of a residuary legacy before assessing the tax.[71] A contingent beneficial interest not absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment is not subject to the tax under Amendment of June 27, 1902.[72] mental functions. The fact that the tax is required before the officers qualify is not important. Manifestly, therefore, the validity of the bond given by the officer to the state is not affected by the omission therefrom of a stamp. State v. Garton, 32 Ind. 1, 2 Am. Rep. 315; Bettman v. Warwick, 108 F. 46. In the last case the bond of a notary public is held to be exempt from the tax imposed by the act of 1898, within the provision of schedule "A," exempting states in the exercise of governmental functions.—Note to Estate of Ramsey v. The tax imposed by the Act of June 13, 1898, on any person having in charge or trust any legacy or distributive shares is payable from the capital.[73]

Recovery back of taxes paid.—An appeal to the commissioner of internal revenue from an adverse decision of the collector is essential to the maintenance of a suit to recover a sum voluntarily expended for revenue stamps,[74] and one who pays more internal revenue taxes than under the law are due cannot go around the collector and commissioner and sue the government any time within six years.[75] Where one appeals to the commissioner of internal revenue for redress, the action is subject to the two-year limitation prescribed by Rev. St. § 3226,[76] and the running of the statute is not suspended during the pendency of an appeal before the commissioner.[77] The allowance of a refund by the commissioner is not an allowance of a mere claim, but is an award[78] actionable as such[79] and conclusive unless impeached for fraud or mistake.[80] If rejected, the collector may be sued;[81] if allowed, but payment is refused by accounting officers, the government may be sued in the court of claims.[82] In suing to recover tax paid, plaintiff's allegation that he was not party to the document must not be pregnant with admission that he was a party's agent.[83] Where tax is paid under duress, an action to recover is an action for damages sounding in tort.[84]

§ 4. Filled Cheese Act June 6, 1896.—The imposition under the act of June 6, 1896, of the same manufacturing tax on filled cheese manufactured for export, as upon other filled cheese, is not a tax on articles exported from any state.[85] No exemption from the tax imposed by this statute was effected by the provision that the laws relative to tobacco stamps are made to apply to stamps provided for in this statute, though exported tobacco is relieved from the manufacturing tax.[86] A suit to recover a tax exacted under this law and paid under protest, in which the construction and constitutionality of the statute and the application of the Federal constitution are involved is not one arising under revenue laws, and the judgment of the circuit court of appeals is not final.[87] protection against conflicting claimants,[90] while if additional relief be sought it is said to make a bill in the nature of interpleader.[91] If the object be to determine between claimants against an indifferent debtor complainant, it is interpleader, whatsoever other relief be sought or however it be called.[92] Interpleader is an equitable proceeding[93] and is largely governed by statutory provisions.[94] The remedy is concurrent with, and not superseded by, statutory remedies authorizing defendants in law actions to bring in or substitute other parties.[95] In order to be entitled thereto, the same debt, fund or thing[96] must be claimed by hostile parties under adverse title[97] derived from a common source,[98] and the complainant must have incurred no independent liability to either of the claimants,[99] and must have no claim or interest in the subject-matter,[1] though this last element is not essential

90. A bill of strict interpleader is one in which the complainant asserts his possession of some fund or something in which he claims no personal interest, but in which other persons, made defendants, set up conflicting claims, and complainant cannot safely determine to which claim he should yield. Bank, 43 Misc. 377, 87 N. Y. S. 480. This last case in so far as it applies to the city court of New York City is overruled in Krugman v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 448, where it is held that under Code Civ. Proc. § 3347, subds. 4, 6, and § 820, such court has authority to make an order of interpleader. But after entry of the order under Code Civ. Proc. § 820, it cannot proceed with the action; but it may grant an interpleader and proceed when the order is granted under Banking Law, § 115 (Laws 1892, p. 1896, c. 689) and when the action is to recover money on deposit. NOTE. Modern tendency to relax above rule: "Originally it was uniformly held by the courts that a bill of interpleader could not be sustained except against defendants between whom there existed a privity. Their claims had to be deduced from the same title, and, if one claimed under a hostile, distinct, and paramount title, they could not be required to interplead for the protection of the plaintiff. 11 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 449. In later years there has been a tendency to relax this rule. Crane v. McDonald, 118 N. Y. 658, 23 N. E. 991. But this tendency is founded largely upon statutory provisions, and it cannot be said to be by any means general. It amounts to a criticism of the rule, rather than a repudiation of it. As to the rule requiring privity, see Haseltine v. Brickey, 16 Grat. [Va.] 116; Shaw v. Coster, 8 Paige [N. Y.] 339, 35 Am. Dec. 690; Conley v. Insurance Co., 67 Ala. 472." See Stephenson v. in bills in the nature of an interpleader,[2] which bills are otherwise governed by the same rules as bills of interpleader.[3] The opposing claims must be such that the complainant cannot decide without hazard to himself,[4] and, in some states, he must satisfactorily show to the court that there is reasonable doubt as to his safety in undertaking to determine for himself to whom the fund belongs.[5] The danger existing, the stakeholder is entitled to the bill, though by reasonable inquiry the right of one claimant would become clear.[6] The claimants must have present rights to the fund or thing,[7] which rights must be on an equality with each other.[8] It is essential that the third party sought to be substituted be in existence and capable of interpleading.[9] The bill cannot be maintained where it appears that, as to either of the defendants, the plaintiff is a wrongdoer,[10] and it must not appear from the face of the bill that other interested parties have not been made defendants.[11] That the claim was derived from a different source by fraud or mistake cannot be set up in the interpleader proceeding.[12] The right may be lost by laches[13] or estoppel.[14]

A statutory interpleader can only be made in accord with terms of the statute,[15] but by consenting to a payment into court and substitution of parties, jurisdiction may be changed from one to another defendant.[16]

tiff, upon leave granted, has the right to correct as against the defendant, cannot be taken advantage of by an interpleader whose rights have been acquired pendente lite,[19] nor can the insufficiency of the allegations in the bill generally be questioned after judgment.[20] No reply being filed to an answer to a bill of interpleader, by any of the parties interpleading, it must be taken to be true.[21] There must be a prayer that the several claimants be compelled to interplead and state their claims that the same may be adjudged,[22] and an affidavit of good faith must be annexed.[23]

The right existing, the court must bring in such party and enjoin his proceeding in an independent action.[24] Each party must recover on the strength of his own title.[25] A verdict which in addition to finding an interpleader entitled to the property fixes the amount of his special interest therein, though erroneous, is generally harmless.[26]

The stakeholder to be discharged from liability must pay into court the amount the claimant is entitled to recover at the time when the order for interpleader was granted.[27] When nothing is paid into court, injunction will not be granted in aid.[28] Defendant on paying the money into court pursuant to an order of interpleader is not entitled to recover costs,[29] but on an interpleader caused by the fault of one of the claimants, the stakeholder should be allowed costs out of the fund, and the claimant who is not in fault is entitled to a decree against the other defendant for the costs taken out of the fund as well as his own.[30]

NOTE. Right to injunction: On the filing of a bill of interpleader, a preliminary injunction will issue to restrain the prosecution of pending suits. It is an incident to the principal order that the defendants interplead. It makes no difference that positive injury to ensue is not made to appear. If the bill is entertained, the injunction follows. Where the bill contains equity, an injunction will not be denied merely because an injunction would not have been necessary had another remedy been chosen. Curtis v. Williams, 35 Ill. App. 518. On motion for an injunction, the complainant's affidavit of noncollusion cannot be contradicted. Curtis v. Williams, 35 Ill. App. 518; Laugston v. Boylston, 2 Ves. Jr. 101; Stevenson v. Anderson, 2 Ves. & B. 407; Manley v. Robinson, 4 Ch. App. 347; Toulmin v. Reid, 14 Beav. 499; Fahie v. Lindsay, 8 Or. 474. The usual order for an injunction upon a bill of this nature is that it issue upon the complainant's paying the money into court. This is a condition precedent, and an order for an injunction not containing it will be vacated. 2 Barbour, Ch. Pr. 123; Bliss v. French, 117 Mich. 538, 76 N. W. 73. If the money should be paid in in time to stay a trial, application should be made to vary the order on special grounds. 2 Barbour, Ch. Pr. 123; Sieveising v. Behrens, 2 Mylne & C. 581. Such injunction stays all proceedings. It may be moved for at once on payment of the money into court, and before the time for answering has expired. 2 Barbour, Ch. Pr. 123; Warington v. Acts 1899, p. 275, No. 183, is not unconstitutional in that it discriminates against druggists doing business in a local option county as compared with those doing business in the counties in which that law is not in force. People v. Shuler [Mich.] 98 N. W. 986. Rev. St. art. 3395, which places restrictions on the resubmission of a vote in which "no license" is carried, and practically none where it is not carried does not violate the 14th amendment of the Federal Constitution. Rippey v. State, 193 U. S. 504, 48 Law. Ed. 767. Sayles' Rev. St. arts. 3384, 3399. Hoover v. Thomas [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 859. See 2 Curr. L. 555, n. 97.

Contra: Act 1902, § 21, No. 90, excepting from the provisions of said act sales of cider and native wines by the barrel by farmers and manufacturers denies the equal protection of the law to other persons. State v. Scampini [Vt.] 59 A. 201. Such act is not thereby rendered totally void, and by permitting all persons to sell cider by the barrel, and wine, not to be drunk on the premises, the remainder of the act may be upheld. Id. There is no warrant for unjust discrimination as between individuals engaged in the same business. State v. New Orleans [La.] 36 So. 999.

make reports is not compelling them to be witnesses against themselves.[46] The law must conform to all constitutional requirements as to its title[47] and manner of amending.[48] Statutes exempting the liquor of certain classes of dealers from the special liquor tax are not unconstitutional.[49] The liquor being an article of interstate commerce[50] it is not subject to state legislation,[51] but its introduction into a state must not be for the purpose of an illegal sale.[52] Requiring it to be shipped under its proper name is not an interference with interstate commerce.[53] Legislative powers must not be vested in the judiciary.[54] By Vermont constitution, fines must be proportionate to the offense,[55] and the same rule is applied under the constitutions of most states.[56] The constitutionality of an act cannot be contested by one whose rights it does not affect.[57]

47. Acts 1898, p. 1273, c. 562, entitled "An act to enable the * * * voters of * * * to determine * * * whether * * * liquors * * * shall be sold in the county" is not unconstitutional as containing more than one subject which shall be described in the title, though it provides for the submission of the question every 4 years, the appointment of a license board and contains a number of sections providing for the regulation or prohibition of the sale of liquors. Price v. Board of Liquor License Com'rs [Md.] 57 A. 215. House Bill No. 162, of the session of 1897, does not violate Const. art. 5, § 23, declaring that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. State v. It applies only to rectifiers, wholesale dealers, and the like (Id.), and marks for a carrier's directions are not marks within the act. Mark "Glass; this side up, with care." Id.

54. Failure of act to define the words "wholesale" and "retail" does not render it void. State v. Dollison, 194 U. S. 445, 48 Law. Ed. 1062. Allowing the court to impose a fine of not less than $200 and imprisonment of not more than 60 nor less than 10 days does not render the act void. Id. Statute held not unconstitutional though it fixed no maximum fine. State v. Constantine [Vt.] 56 A. 1101.

55. A fine of not less than $300 for selling or keeping for sale intoxicating liquors without a license, held not so disproportionate to the offense as to justify the court in questioning the act of the legislature prescribing the same. State v. Constantine [Vt.] 56 A. 1101.

56. Fine not less than $25 or more than $200 or imprisonment not less than 10 or more than 60 days for allowing females to enter saloon not excessive. State v. Nelson [Idaho] 79 P. 79.

57. One selling liquor without a license cannot contest the constitutionality of a law providing for the appointment of license commissioners. State v. Scampini [Vt.] 59 A. 201. One not selling liquor for medicinal or sacramental purposes cannot complain of invalidity of local option law in not excepting from its provisions liquor imported in original packages for such purposes. In re O'Brien, 29 Mont. 530, 75 P. 196. The effect of a prohibition of the giving away of liquors is immaterial in a prosecution against one for selling liquor in violation of the act. Parker v. S.) 508. Under Mills' Ann. St. §§ 2833, 4403, an incorporated town may enact an ordinance prohibiting the sale or giving away of liquors. Litch v. People [Colo. App.] 75 P. 1079.

59. Robinson v. Americus [Ga.] 48 S. E. 924. May make the keeping of such liquor for sale criminal. Reese v. Newman, 120 Ga. 198, 47 S. E. 560. See 2 Curr. L. 555, n. 14-19.

60. Ordinances held reasonable: To prevent obstruction of view of interior of saloon from outside. Paul v. Washington, 134 N. C. 363, 47 S. E. 793. Establishing business hours between 6 A. M. and 8 P. M. Id. Prohibiting use of billiard or pool tables, gaming devices, bowling alleys, etc., in saloon. Id. Prohibiting saloon keeper or his servants from being in the saloon during closed hours. Id. Requiring all liquors to be served and drunk at the counter, and prohibiting the use of tables and lounges. Id. Prohibiting maintenance of any restaurant or committee rooms in connection with barroom, unless divided by solid perpendicular walls. Id. Declaring that saloon keepers, their servants and employes shall not use any side, rear, or trap doors, or elevators or stairways for the purpose of selling or delivering liquor. Id. Ordinance providing for inspection of liquors. Stephens v. Henderson, 120 Ga. 218, 47 S. E. 498. A prohibition against allowing females to enter a place where liquor is sold is unreasonable; but prohibition of entry for immoral purposes is not. State v. Nelson [Idaho] 79 P. 79.

61. Paul v. Washington, 134 N. C. 363, 47 S. E. 793.

62. Penalties must be the same. City of Assaria v. Wells [Kan.] 75 P. 1026. Const. § 168. Ordinance imposing a penalty for illegal sale not less than $60 nor more than $100 is void, Ky. St. § 2557, B, 2, imposing a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100 or imprisonment for 40 days or both. Kehr v. Com. [Ky.] 83 S. W. 633.

An act giving a city power to regulate saloons should be construed as authorizing regulation consistent with the state laws. Loc. Acts 1897, p. 839, No. 448, § 21, does not abrogate Comp. Laws 1897, § 5395, fixing the days on which saloons shall be closed. Moore v. Kelley [Mich.] 98 N. W. 989. City cannot prohibit sales by wine grower unless regularly engaged in the business of selling the same within the city. Stephens v. Henderson, 120 Ga. 218, 47 S. E. 498. Inspection ordinance enacted by mayor and aldermen of Cartersville in 1887 does not contravene Pub. Laws 1877, p. 33. Id.

63. A local option law being adopted in a county, it applies to sales of liquor in an incorporated town in the county, though such town in its articles of incorporation has the right to regulate the sale of liquor within its limits. In re O'Brien, 29 Mont. 530, 75 P. 196. See 2 Curr. L. 555, n. 19.

64. Though delegation was made by permission of the constitution. Parsons v. People [Colo.] 76 P. 666.

65. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3927, giving a city power to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors within 4 miles of its corporate limits. Jourdan v. Evansville [Ind.] 72 N. E. 544.

66. An ordinance should not allow certain people to continue in the business in a certain place, and at the same time prohibit others from subsequently engaging in the business in such place. Town of Mandeville v. Band, 111 La. 806, 35 So. 915.

67. See 2 Curr. L. 557. As to constitutionality of local option laws, see ante, § 1.

68. Under Const. art. 16, § 20, the statute empowering the commissioners' court to order a local option election to be held in a territory which is less than the whole county and includes more than one of the political subdivisions of the county is void. Board v. Buchanan [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 194. The combination of precincts in which prohibition is in force with those in which it does not prevail, the entire territory being less than the whole county, is unconstitutional. Id. Under Const. 1876, art. 16, § 20a, commissioners' court has no authority to combine subdivisions of a county for the purposes of a local option election. Ex parte Mills [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 555; Ex parte Mitchell [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 558; Commissioners' Court v. Beall [Tex.] 81 S. W. 526. Election precincts. Efird v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 529. The above cases do not affect an election held in and for an entire county. Hoover v. Thomas [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 859. Const. art. 16, § 20 authorizes a law authorizing the commissioners' court to alter some existing subdivision for local option purposes, but not to create new subdivisions. Ex parte Heyman [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 349. This is true, though the legislature may create new subdivisions. Id. Hence Laws 1897, p. 235, c. 162, authorizing the combining of two or more political subdivisions of a county is unconstitutional. Id. Const. art. 16, § 20 is violated by an act locality adopting a local option law with the right to again vote on the subject at a subsequent date, the legislature must preserve the autonomy of such locality.[66] Such local option law constitutes the exclusive system for the regulation or manner of liquor selling in the given locality, and suspends during its continuance all inconsistent laws.[70] Local option statutes are criminal laws,[71] and are not impliedly repealed by the passage of a general law.[72] They generally prescribe the date on which they take effect,[73] and in such case take precedence over a general legislative enactment prescribing the time when all laws should go into effect.[74] In Ohio, the right to adopt local prohibition is extended to residence property holders and localities,[75] and denied to manufacturing or mercantile property,[76] the number of petitioners required depending on the street frontage.[77] Names may be added to or withdrawn from the petition at any time before the election is ordered,[78] and a petitioner removing from the district before such order is made, his name cannot be counted.[79] The petition cannot be withdrawn and changed after filing.[80] Substantial compliance with statutes requiring the filing of the petition is sufficient.[81] authorizing the commissioners' court to designate "subdivisions" by combining justices' precincts. Ex parte Wells [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 928. Const. art. 16, § 20 contemplated that local option districts in a county should be contiguous; hence Laws 1897, p. 235, c. 162 makes possible a result not contemplated by the constitution. Ex parte Heyman [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 349. Sp. Laws (28th Leg.) p. 391 held not void because providing for local option in territory added by the act to the City of Dallas. City of Oak Cliff v. State [Tex.] 79 S. W. 1. Local option law (Rev. St. §§ 4364-20a, 4364-20b) applies to hamlets as the same existed in the state prior to the adoption of the Municipal Code, Oct. 22, 1902. Carey v. State, 70 Ohio St. 121, 70 N. E. 955.

69. Under Const. art. 16, § 20, and Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 3393-3395, the Laws of 1897, p. 235, c. 162, which authorizes the combining of several precincts whether wet or dry, necessarily imperils the right to vote periodically in each district on the question of prohibition. Ex parte Heyman [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 349. Action of commissioners' court in so doing is unauthorized. Id.

74. Pub. St. 1901, c. 2, § 38 does not apply to the license law (Laws 1903, p. 81, c. 95). State v. Wenzel, 72 N. H. 396, 56 A. 918.

75. Offices of physicians attached to residences are to be regarded as residence property under Brannock Law. In re Petition for Election, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 245.

76. Petition will be denied for the entire district where certain blocks or squares therein are devoted to business purposes [Brannock Law]. In re Petition for Election, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 245. Both sides of the streets, bounding a local option district should be considered [Brannock Law]. Id. Property enclosed by high board fence (In re Petition, etc., in Toledo, 2 Ohio N. P. [N. S.] 469), or bill boards [Brannock Law] (In re Petition for Election, 2 Ohio N. P. [N. S.] 245), there being no buildings near the street, it is not devoted to business purposes so that the frontage shall be so counted. Under the Brannock Law providing for local option for residence districts, a classification which prevents saloon property from being considered as business property held not unreasonable. City of Columbus v. Jeffrey, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 85.

77. A street that is used for substantially its whole length, together with the abutting property, by a private corporation as a lumber yard, is not a street within the meaning of the law. In re Petition, etc., in Toledo, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 469. The provision of the Brannock Law (97 O. L. 87), whereby forty per cent. of the voters of a residence district may fix the boundaries of the district, is not an invasion of legislative power. Ely v. Willard, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 571.

81. Failure to file the petition with the county clerk within 5 days of its receipt by the town clerk, as required by Laws 1896, p. 57, c. 112, held not to require resubmission, it being filed more than 20 days prior to the taking of the vote. In re Rice, 95 App. Div. 28, 88 N. Y. S. 512.

In Ohio, summons must be served on the mayor of the city.[82] The designation of the time within which the election may be ordered is directory only.[83] The order must recite the finding of the court that the petition was properly signed,[84] must designate the day of the election,[85] the question to be voted on,[86] who may vote,[87] and the time when the law if adopted shall take effect[88] with a reasonable degree of certainty. Generally, only qualified electors can vote,[89] and the court may notify the managers of the election of his ruling that certain persons are disqualified to vote.[90] Persons being illegally permitted[91] or restrained from[92] voting, it must be shown that in the absence of such illegal acts the result would have been different. Irregularities in the form of the ballots may be disregarded unless they tend to confuse or mislead the voter,[93] and a substantial statement of the questions is sufficient.[94] Provisions which affect the time and object of the election are mandatory,[95] though in Ohio this does not seem to be true.[96] The notice may be a substantial copy of the order.[97] No voter being deprived of any opportunity to vote,

82. The requirement of the Brannock Law that service shall be made on the mayor does not supersede the provision of the municipal code which determines who is the mayor at time of service. In re Gorey, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 389. Under the Brannock Law, a summons directed to B. as mayor of the city of S., and left at the office of the mayor, is not good, in the absence of B., against the acting mayor. Id. The Brannock Law having fixed 20 days from the date of election as the time within which a mayor may be summoned to defend on behalf of a resident district, an alias summons issued more than 20 days thereafter is void. 85. An order of the commissioners' court approving a petition asking that the election be held on the 17th of Dec., 1902, and then ordering the election for the 6th of December, 1902, is not objectionable as rendering the election day uncertain. Thurmond v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 316.

86. Submitting the question "whether or not" local option shall be adopted is not objectionable, though the law is "whether" it shall be adopted. Thurmond v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 316.

87. The law stating that only qualified voters can vote, the order need not say that the election is to be held by the "qualified voters" of the county. Thurmond v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 316.

88. Order requiring publication of result for four weeks before the law should go into effect held unobjectionable, though the publication continues for five weeks. Thurmond v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 316.

89. Under Laws 1903, p. 63, c. 75, § 1 and the constitutional amendment of 1902, persons who had not paid their poll taxes on Feb. 1, 1903 could not vote at a local option election held May 30, 1903. Ex parte Wood [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 529.

In re Rice, 95 App. Div. 28, 88 N. Y. S. 512. Submission of questions provided for in Laws 1900, p. 853, c. 367, with the provision "if the majority of the votes cast on the first question submitted are in the negative" omitted from after the fourth question is improper. In re Munson, 95 App. Div. 23, 88 N. Y. S. 609.

95. Failure of town clerk to post notices in four public places as required by Laws 1900, p. 853, c. 367, held to render submission of such questions void. In re Smith, 44 Misc. 384, 89 N. Y. S. 1006. Under Rev. St. 1899, c. 22, art. 3, the order of the county court directing in what newspaper the notice should be published is essential, and after the election, the order cannot be made nunc pro tunc. State v. Baldwin [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 266. Court may direct its order ordering the election to be entered nunc pro tunc after the election, the clerk having erred in entering it of record. State v. Bird [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 284.

96. Mere failure to publish notice of election for full period of ten days, there being no fraud, does not render local option election under the Beal Law (§§ 4364-20a, Rev. St.) void. Fike v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 81.

97. Keller v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 1214.

nonobservance of the time during which polls are to be kept open will not vitiate the election.[98] In contesting the result, facts showing the illegality of the election and that without such illegality the result would have been different must be averred.[99]

The validity of the election cannot be impeached collaterally in a criminal prosecution.[1] A court of equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin an election,[2] or to enjoin the publication of the result on the ground of illegality of the election,[3] and such publication being made after the dissolution of an injunction prohibiting the enforcement of prohibition is not void, the appellate court affirming the decision below.[4]

The fact that the election was held and the result may be shown by evidence other than the record of the corporation clerk.[5] After the election, it will be presumed that the petition was in legal form[6] and that the notice was properly posted,[7] the burden being on the attacking party to show the invalidity thereof.[8]

A local option law providing for the prohibition or regulation of the sale of liquors, the fact that the vote favors the sale of liquors does not operate as an implied repeal of the part relating to prohibition.[9] A vote that the local option law shall become inoperative is equivalent to voting that liquors may be sold.[10] In the absence of notice given and formal application made, one will not be allowed to intervene on an application for resubmission of local option questions.[11]

The local option laws extend to sales on steamers on navigable waters within the local option territory.[12] One buying beer from a nonresident brewing corporation and reselling the same is not a distiller or manufacturer.[13] is vested in the discretion[16] of the county court or a board of commissioners. The exercise of such power is ordinarily held to be a judicial act[17] though the contrary is held in some states,[18] but in no case does the licensing body's judicial powers extend to criminal prosecutions for violations of the law,[19] and the discretion cannot be arbitrarily used[20] nor delegated.[21] In Missouri the jurisdiction of the county court in this regard is exclusive.[22] In the absence of express authority, a municipal corporation has no power to grant licenses.[23] A statute fixing the amount of the license tax does not authorize the issuance of licenses unless otherwise allowed by law.[24] Number of dealers to be licensed may be limited.[25]

The applicant must generally be a permanent resident of the locality wherein he applies for the license,[26] and the application should show that he is a citizen of the United States,[27] and the location of the place where he desires to carry on business.[28] The personal fitness of the applicant and licensee is a matter of legislative concern,[29] one who has been adjudged guilty of violating the liquor laws being generally ineligible for a certain time.[30]

The application must generally be supported by a petition signed by the owners of a majority of the property in the neighborhood, such signature may be made by an authorized agent,[31] a minor, however, is not qualified to sign such a petition,[32] and a signature by his guardian, to be effective, must be as such.[33] Park frontage should be considered,[34] the park commissioners generally having the power to sign for the same.[35] The signature of a part of a number of tenants in common is a valid signature as to such proportion of the frontage as the number of tenants signing bears to the whole number.[36] In other states, the consent of a certain number of "qualified electors,"[37] or "assessed taxpaying citizens"[38] or "freeholders,"[39] or owners of dwelling houses in the vicinity[40] is required. The statute grouping those eligible to sign the petition, the requisite number of the group is sufficient.[41] A law requiring the consent of such persons is not illegal as conferring arbitrary powers on them.[42] One must not have been made a freeholder for the purpose of qualifying him to sign the petition[43] nor must his consent have been obtained for a valuable consideration,[44] for in neither case can his signature be counted. A petitioner may withdraw his name at any time prior to the final action on the application,[45] or at the end of, but not during, the year for which a tax has been paid.[46] A law requiring the consent of nearby property owners, excepting from its provisions places being used for the business when the law was enacted, the right to a liquor tax certificate without consent of such property owners is a property right attaching to such places;[47] which property right cannot be extinguished by a vote of the electors of the town that no liquor should be sold therein for a period of two years.[48] A blank petition is invalid.[49] Matters essential to the validity of the petition cannot be supplied by amendment after the time fixed for its filing is past.[50]

The execution and presentation of a remonstrance is in no sense the exercise of judicial power.[51] All the names thereto may be signed by one person pursuant to a power of attorney.[52] The burden of proof is on a remonstrator to prove that those signing the petition are not qualified to so do.[53] Persons who by redistricting have ceased to be voters in the ward cannot be counted as such voters.[54] In Indiana a remonstrator cannot revoke his signature after the first of the three days providing for the filing of the remonstrance.[55]

The license must issue in pursuance of a decision reached by a majority of the board,[56] and the fact that a member is unavoidably absent from the public hearing does not prevent his participating in such decision.[57] The board may reject the application on their own knowledge of the applicant's unfitness to deal in liquors.[58] The proceedings must affirmatively show on their face all jurisdictional facts,[59] such recitals being generally conclusive[60] except on direct attack.[61] Affirmance by the district court of the grant or refusal of a license is not reviewable on appeal.[62]

Certiorari, not prohibition, is the proper way to prevent issuance of license,[63] though the issuance being illegal it may be enjoined if the bill show some ground of equitable jurisdiction.[64] Certiorari being invoked it is a direct attack on the order of the court.[65] As to whether mandamus will lie to compel the issuance of a license there is a conflict.[66] In Nebraska a motion for a new trial is not essential in order to obtain a review of the judgment of the district court entered on an appeal from the license board.[67]

An act imposing a license tax is a revenue law.[68] Such laws are not unconstitutional for lack of uniformity in taxation,[69] nor do they generally violate the taxation provisions of state constitutions,[70] nor do they deny one the equal protection of the laws.[71] In the absence of statutory provisions, a vote to raise license fees may be had, upon sufficient notice,[72] at the same time a vote to accept a local option law is held.[73] A municipality being given unrestricted power to impose license taxes, the authority conferred is not affected by state law.[74] One selling liquor on a boat coming within the territory of a state is liable to taxation.[75] Repeals are stated in the notes.[76]

Bonds.[77]—The legislature has a right to require a bond in addition to other civil and criminal penalties,[78] but, in the absence of statutory authority, a court has no power to require such a bond.[79] The bond is a contract, the sum stated therein being in the nature of liquidated damages.[80] The principal and surety are jointly and severally liable,[81] their liability continuing during the life of the certificate,[82] and extending to the illegal acts of an agent, though done in violation of his specific instructions, unless committed in pursuance of a deliberate purpose to injure his principal.[83] A brewing company may become liable as surety upon the bond.[84] Defects in the application do not affect the validity of the bond,[85] and the latter need not designate the particular building in which the business is to be carried on.[86] The bond being accidently given in less than the statutory amount it is nevertheless a good statutory bond to that extent.[87] The court excluding the bond for defects in the application, plaintiff is not obliged to prove a breach of the bond, and file a statement of facts on appeal, in order to review the court's ruling.[88]

Payment of license fee or tax.[89]—A license tax being illegally levied and voluntarily paid it can be recovered on the ground of error only under exceptional circumstances.[90] In Wisconsin a village not charged with the legal obligation to support its poor is obliged to pay the license money it receives to the town.[91]

Scope and effect of license.[92]—A license is not a contract,[93] nor a "franchise," an "office," or "letters patent,"[94] but it is a mere personal privilege,[95] which may be canceled at any time.[96] Its protection extends to agents of the licensee,[97] but is limited by the scope of the license and the law under which it is granted.[98] A void license is no protection.[99] A license to manufacture gives no right to sell, where the act requiring license to sell makes no exception.[1]

ing jurisdiction,[5] or the proceedings showing on their face that it has absolutely no jurisdiction,[6] certiorari will not lie. On the return day of an order to show cause why a license should not be revoked, the court has authority to order a reference.[7] The license board generally has no power to declare the license void in its inception.[8] Assignee of a license after surrendering the same for cancellation may intervene in an action to revoke the license.[9] If one suffers his license to be revoked by consent before the expiration of the time for which it was granted, he has, after the expiration of such time, no beneficial interest in litigation to review the order of revocation.[10] In some states the license being revoked, the licensee is not entitled to a rebate,[11] even though the license was wrongfully revoked,[12] but in New York the rule is otherwise, the licensee establishing, as a condition precedent, his compliance with the law.[13] An action is not maintainable against license commissioners as such, or as individuals, to recover back alleged overpayments on fees or forfeitures.[14]

The license is not generally assignable at the will of the licensee.[15]

Sale without license, or without paying tax.[16]—License laws have no extra territorial force.[17] A dealer violating the conditions of his license is, in Florida, guilty of selling without a license.[18] It is no defense to one selling without a license that the city or town did not vote license,[19] nor that there were no commissioners to whom application for it could be made.[20] Each separate sale constitutes an offense.[21] The statute prohibiting a sale without a license, the indictment need not allege that the sale was for gain.[22] One selling liquor without a license cannot contest the legality of the appointment of the license commissioners.[23]

In order to convict it must be proved that the tax was imposed.[24] It is no defense that the liquor was the property of a partnership of which defendant was a member,[25] but the fact that defendant had no knowledge of the intoxicating qualities of the compound sold may be considered in mitigation of punishment.[26]

the proprietor of a hotel[43] who is allowed to serve liquor to guests ordering meals,[44] and, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, the proprietor may assume that a single sandwich constitutes a meal for the person ordering.[45]

Prohibition of sale in certain places.[46]—Statutes commonly provide that the business shall be carried on in one room,[47] which shall not be in a place where a mercantile[48] or restaurant[49] business is carried on, nor located in a residential part of the town,[50] or within a certain distance of a school or church.[51] One acquiring a right of way over public lands for ditch purposes acquires no right to erect a saloon thereon.[52] In some states saloons must front on streets or highways.[53] The granting of a license is not an adjudication that the premises correspond to the statutory requirements.[54]

Prohibition of sale to certain persons.[55]—One is prohibited from selling liquor to an Indian,[56] and lack of knowledge of the latter's nationality is no defense.[57] Sales to minors are generally prohibited; as to whether or not lack of knowledge is a defense depends upon the statutes of the state and the construction thereof,[58] and the way this question is decided largely determines the sufficiency of the indictment[59] and the admission[60] and sufficiency[61] of the evidence. Fike v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 81.

Intoxicating liquor statutes, other than those relating to the transportation of such liquor,[79] are to be liberally construed, to the end that evasions may be prevented.[80]

In states where information prevails, a county attorney is not obliged to institute proceedings upon his own knowledge,[81] but, whenever notified by an officer or other person of any violation of the liquor laws, it is his duty to diligently exercise all the authority conferred upon him by law for the purpose of disclosing, prosecuting, and punishing the offender.[82] In an action of quo warranto for failing to prosecute, the issue of primary importance is that of good faith.[83] This good faith is presumed.[84] That the city authorities are about to prosecute does not excuse him from prosecuting.[85] Two laws being violated one may be indicted under either.[86] Preliminary proceedings before the license commissioners are not a necessary condition precedent to instituting criminal proceedings.[87] In New York the prosecution of an agent involving the forfeiture of the principal's license, it should be by indictment.[88] A statutory enumeration of intoxicating liquors while conclusive as to the liquors mentioned,[89] is not exclusive, the intoxicating qualities of any other liquor being a question of fact[90] to be proved by any competent evidence,[91] and the force and effect of such evidence are for the jury to determine.[92] Mistake of fact as to intoxicating qualities is a defense.[93]

In some states keeping liquor for sale[94] or giving it away[95] is prohibited.

88. Second prosecution under Laws 1896, p. 76, c. 112. People v. Hoenig, 86 N. Y. S. 673.

89. Considering Rev. St. 1883, c. 27, § 33. State v. Piche, 98 Me. 348, 56 A. 1052. The statutory prohibition of the sale of a specific liquor being absolute it is not necessary for the jury to determine whether or not it is intoxicating. Under Rev. St. 1883, c. 17, § 1, the amount of alcohol in malt liquor is immaterial. State v. O'Connell [Me.] 58 A. 59.

90. State v. Piche, 98 Me. 348, 56 A. 1052. A liquor which contains 3 per cent or more of alcohol is not as a matter of law intoxicating, nor is one which contains a less percentage nonintoxicating as a matter of law, but the question is for the jury to determine from all the evidence in the case. Id. Charge that if the liquor will not produce intoxication "if drank in reasonable quantities" etc., held incorrect, a reasonable quantity being left undefined. The expression here used is not equivalent to saying "when drank in such quantities as may practically be drank." Murry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 568.

91. The composition and character of the liquor, the amount of alcohol it contains, and in what quantities it produces intoxication, are all competent evidence tending to determine the character of the liquor as an intoxicant. State v. Piche, 98 Me. 348, 56 A. 1052.

92. State v. Piche, 98 Me. 348, 56 A. 1052. Sufficiency of evidence to show an intoxicant, see 2 Curr. L. 572, n. 47. Where evidence was that "Malt Extract" looked like beer, tasted a little like beer, but did not intoxicate, held insufficient to show intoxicating quality of liquor. Scales v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 380. Evidence that fluid sold by accused was red in color, looked like liquor, burnt like liquor, and had an effect like cheap whiskey or beer is sufficient. Finch v. State, 120 Ga. 174, 47 S. E. 504.

93. Pen. Code 1895, art. 46. Defendant is entitled to an instruction that if he delivered the liquor believing it to be a nonintoxicant, he is not guilty. Patrick v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 947. That one is incidentally in saloon, being hired for a day to wash bottles, and had no authority to sell liquor or receive money therefor, and that he took the bottle in question to the alleged purchaser at the command of a clerk, receiving the money and turning it over to the clerk is admissible. Id. Change of label held admissible as tending to show defendant's knowledge of intoxicating qualities of liquor sold. Murry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 568.

94. Liquor in possession of a boarding house keeper is "kept for sale" where he keeps it to be disbursed under an agreement that boarders who pay the regular price should be entitled to have it with their meals when called for. State v. Wenzel, 72 N. H. 396, 56 A. 918. See 2 Curr. L. 572, n. 47.

95. An ordinance providing that, "All persons are hereby prohibited from selling in-

To constitute an illegal sale, the seller must have been the owner or have the rightful possession of the liquor,[96] and must have received therefor a present, valuable consideration,[97] but it is not necessary to prove the precise person who furnished the money.[98] Tickets may take the place of money,[99] and no sham or device to invade the above principles will be tolerated,[1] but a mere loan to be returned in kind does not constitute a sale.[2] That defendant acted in good faith toxicating * * * liquors * * * and all persons are hereby prohibited from giving away any such intoxicating * * * liquors," prohibits the selling or giving away of such liquor. Litch v. People [Colo. App.] 75 P. 1079.

96. One wrongfully taking possession and giving the liquor to another is not guilty of a sale, gift, or disposition of it. Maxwell v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 266.

97. Held erroneous to refuse charge that if money paid was in payment of a former indebtedness defendant was not guilty. Mills v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 1045. Lack of evidence of a consideration held to render evidence of sale insufficient. Erwin v. Cartersville, 120 Ga. 150, 47 S. E. 512.

Evidence held sufficient to constitute a sale, see 2 Curr. L. 571, n. 47. That defendant received money from another to purchase brandy, which he did, turning the liquor over to another party on receipt of the amount paid, the money so received being paid to the one originally furnishing the money, held to constitute a sale in violation of Loc. Acts 1903, pp. 62, 68. Mitchell v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 407. Evidence that prosecutor said he desired some whiskey and that defendant said he took orders for it, and took money therefor and in about one-half an hour prosecutor found a quart bottle of whiskey lying on his table, held to show a violation of the local option law by defendant. James v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 951. Defendant not ordering liquor sent him C. O. D. but disposing of same is guilty of a sale, in the place where he took the liquor from the carrier and disposed of it. Ashley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 1015. Where one asked another if he could get him some whiskey and he said he would try, and he did get it for him, held sufficient to support a conviction. Rippey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 531. Evidence that one "borrowed" money from another and with it paid C. O. D. charges on whiskey after which he turned the whiskey over to the "lender" held to warrant a conviction. Arnold v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 547. Evidence that beer ordered could not have arrived at time of sale, and that defendant had a United States revenue license, held sufficient to warrant a conviction. Terry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 317. Evidence, and truthfulness of witnesses, in that they recalled certain facts and failed to recollect others, examined and found sufficient to sustain a conviction. State v. Douglas [Kan.] 77 P. 697.

Evidence held material and competent to prove sale: Where defendant claimed the beer sold prosecutor was ordered for him, the time of the arrival of the beer ordered was material. Continuance refused, defendant claiming witness who would testify that he had no beer prior to the arrival of that ordered but failing to show that such witness could testify as to the time of the arrival of the beer. Terry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 317. That the liquor was not brought in by any carrier doing business in the town is competent in order to show that defendant did not order the liquor for another as he testified. Ray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 535.

98. Inability of witnesses to identify such person held not to warrant a verdict of not guilty. State v. Durein [Kan.] 78 P. 152.

99. Incorporated club taking anybody as a member, and selling members coupons with which they could obtain drinks, held a mere fraudulent device to evade the revenue laws of the state. Cohen v. King Knob Club [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 799. See 2 Curr. L. 567, n. 56, 60.

NOTE. Sale in club: The weight of authority is undoubtedly in favor of the rule that the distribution and consumption of liquors in a club by its members is a sale and a violation of prohibition laws. In the following cases the question of bad faith in the organization of the club is eliminated and the distribution of liquors by a bona fide club among its members is a sale within the inhibition of the liquor laws. State v. Neis, 108 N. C. 787; State v. Lockyear, 95 N. C. 633, 59 Am. Rep. 287; State v. Horacek, 41 Kan. 87; State v. Tindall, 40 Mo. App. 271; People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250; State v. Essex Club, 53 N. J. Law, 99; People v. Andrews, 115 N. Y. 427; Martin v. State, 59 Ala. 34; Marmont v. State, 48 Ind. 21; State v. Easton Social, etc., Club, 73 Md. 97. Other cases, however, hold that such distribution is a sale, on the ground that the organization of such club is a mere clumsy device to evade such laws. State v. Mercer, 32 Iowa, 405; Rickart v. People, 79 Ill. 85; State v. Tindall, 40 Mo. App. 271.

The cases which maintain the doctrine that the distribution of intoxicants by a bona fide club among its members is not a sale within the inhibition of liquor-license laws, even though the person receiving the liquor gives money in return for it and that a law prohibiting the sale of liquor does not apply to such a club, are Tennessee Club v. Dwyer, 11 Lea [Tenn.] 452, 47 Am. Rep. 298; Selm v. State, 55 Md. 566, 39 Am. Rep. 419; Commonwealth v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564, 50 Am. Rep. 340; Commonwealth v. Ewig, 145 Mass. 119; Piedmont Club v. Com., 87 Va. 540; Graft v. Evans, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 373.—From note to Barden v. Montana Club [Mont.] 24 Am. St. Rep. 27, 35.

1. Where bottles were placed in a wheel, the wheel being turned, the purchaser was enabled to take a bottle, held transaction a sale. Hays v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 201. It is for the jury to say whether the sale of nonintoxicants, with a simultaneous gift of whiskey, is a mere device to evade the law. Turner v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 906.

2. Ray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 535. See 2 Curr. L. 567, n. 57.

as agent for the purchaser is a good defense,[3] but in the absence of evidence to the contrary, one receiving money in exchange for whiskey will be treated as the seller.[4] One present aiding and abetting the sale is equally guilty,[5] and it is no defense that others who might be equally guilty with defendant were not indicted,[6] or that there was no drunkenness at the place and time of sale.[7] Liquor being shipped to the purchaser, the sale occurs at the time and place of delivery to the carrier.[8] In North Carolina the place of delivery is the place of sale.[9] In considering statutes on this subject, it should be remembered that the legislature has no power

3. Though at purchaser's request he advanced part of the purchase money which was repaid him when he gave the liquor to his principal. Chote v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 377. Defendant receiving money and forwarding it with order to liquor dealer outside of local option territory, the liquor being shipped to the third party, defendant then kept it on ice for him if he desired it, issuing checks for it, held defendant not guilty of a sale. Kirby v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 1007. See 2 Curr. L. 568, n. 80-82.

Evidence held sufficient to overcome defense of agency: Kelly v. Com. [Ky.] 83 S. W. 99; Corzine v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 85. Evidence of money passing to defendant and statement of latter that he sold the whiskey to get rid of it. Burden v. State, 120 Ga. 198, 47 S. E. 562.

6. Prosecution for violating local option law. Evidence of guilt of such persons held inadmissible. Patrick v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 947.

7. Failure of grand jury to find any drunkenness held inadmissible. Patrick v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 947.

8. Shipped C. O. D. That express charges were paid by seller makes no difference. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 98 Me. 464, 57 A. 798. Where principal filed order of agent and sent the liquor to him for delivery to the purchaser. James v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 951. See generally 2 Curr. L. 567, n. 64-70, for cases on this and similar rules.

NOTE. Where is the contract made? The principle established by the great weight of authority is that when a resident of one state gives an order to a dealer doing business in another for a quantity of liquor, not specifically identified or appropriated, and the seller in the ordinary course of business delivers the same to a carrier in the latter state, consigned to the buyer in the former state, the title passes and the executed contract is consummated upon delivery to the carrier. In Sortwell v. Hughes, 1 Curt. C. C. 244, Fed. Cas. No. 13,177; Eager Co. v. Burke, 74 Conn. 634, 51 A. 544; Sachs v. Garner, 111 Iowa, 425, 82 N. W. 1007; Westheimer v. Weisman, 60 Kan. 753, 57 P. 969; Merchant v. Chapman, 4 Allen [Mass.] 362; Kling v. Fries, 33 Mich. 275; Kerwin v. Doran, 29 Mo. App. 397; Lynch v. Scott, 67 N. H. 589, 30 A. 320; Blackman v. Jenks, 55 Barb. [N. Y.] 468; Mack v. Lee, 13 R. I. 293. In the above cases the principle was applied so as to sustain an action for the purchase price, or upon a security given for the purchase price, notwithstanding that the order was given to an agent in, and the liquor was shipped into, a state (generally the forum) by the law of which the sale would have been invalid if made there. And the principle has been applied in the following cases with the result of upholding the action for the purchase price where an order was sent directly by mail from the state in which the sale was prohibited to that in which it was permitted, the liquor having been delivered to the carrier in the latter state. Engs v. Priest, 65 Iowa, 232, 21 N. W. 580; Orcutt v. Nelson, 1 Gray [Mass.] 536; Portsmouth Brew. Co. v. Smith, 155 Mass. 100, 28 N. E. 1130; Webber v. Donnelly, 33 Mich. 469; Wagner v. Breed, 29 Neb. 720, 46 N. W. 286; McConihe v. McMann, 27 Vt. 95; Tuttle v. Holland, 43 Vt. 642; Dame v. Flint, 64 Vt. 533, 24 A. 1061. The principle is also applied with the result of defeating an action by the vendee against the vendor to recover back the amount paid upon the purchase price, the delivery to the carrier having been made in a state where the sale was valid. Wind v. Iler, 93 Iowa, 316, 61 N. W. 1001, 27 L. R. A. 219; Dolan v. Green, 110 Mass. 322; Theo. Hamm Brew. Co. v. Young, 76 Minn. 246, 79 N. W. 111, 396. The doctrine that the sale is not complete until delivery to the carrier rests upon the assumption that the order does not relate to specific liquor which is identified and appropriated by the terms of the order, but merely to a quantity of liquor that is to be furnished from a larger stock. This appears to be assumed in all of the cases above cited, but is especially emphasized in Abberger v. Marrin, 102 Mass. 70, and Dolan v. Green, 110 Mass. 322. The doctrine also rests upon the presumed intention of the parties. Wind v. Iler, 93 Iowa, 316, 61 N. W. 1001, 27 L. R. A. 219, and is therefore subject to be defeated by circumstances rebutting the presumption upon which it rests. Well v. Golden, 141 Mass. 364, 6 N. E. 229; Suit v. Woodhall, 113 Mass. 391; Lewis v. McCabe, 49 Conn. 155, 44 Am. Rep. 217. —From note to Brown v. Wieland [Iowa] 61 L. R. A. 417.

9. Under Laws 1903, p. 472, c. 349, § 2. State v. Patterson, 134 N. C. 612, 47 S. E. 808. Such act is not by reason of its title local in its operation. Id. Nor is it unconstitutional as to shipments within the state. Id. [As to interstate shipments see Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 42 Law. Ed. 1088, and 3 Curr. L. 712, n. 33, where a full discussion on the development of the law on this subject will be found.] Nor does it violate the sixth amendment to the Federal Constitution. Id.

to arbitrarily fix the locus of a sale regardless of the rules of contract law.[10] In some states the carrier must keep a record of all liquor transported.[11] A law regulating the transportation of liquor by express companies does not by implication apply to other carriers.[12] In Iowa a citizen may obtain an injunction against illegal sales and may enforce the same.[13]

In most prohibition states or counties, a druggist[14] when selling the liquor solely for medicinal purposes and not to be drank on the premises[15] is excepted from the provisions of the law; in others he is not allowed to sell a compound which retains the distinctive characteristics and effects of an intoxicant.[16] In some states the issuance of a permit to a druggist is within the sound discretion of the court,[17] and a statute so providing is not thereby rendered unconstitutional.[18] In Iowa before a permit will issue to a druggist, he must have lawfully conducted a pharmacy for six months prior to the hearing.[19] Generally a doctor's prescription is a prerequisite, but a physician licensed to act as a druggist may act in such dual capacities.[20] A doctor is not guilty of a sale by virtue of having given an illegal prescription.[21] In order to convict him for giving an illegal prescription upon which a sale is made, the doctor must have known that the applicant was not actually sick, or he must have failed to make a personal examination of him.[22] The burden is on the state to show the bad faith of the druggist in making the sale,[23] and the purpose for which the liquor was bought may be proved by anything said or done at or during the sale,[24] and that the liquor was used as a beverage may be shown by surrounding circumstances.[25] In a druggist's report, the use of ditto marks is allowable,[26] and the word "medical" is a sufficient statement of the object of the purchase,[27] but in this regard the report does not seem to be binding on the druggist.[28] The statement of the quantity sold must be definite.[29] A blank affidavit containing nothing but the signature of the notary is insufficient.[30] In the absence of a customary signification, abbreviations of necessary words in a prescription are not allowable.[31]

Good faith in believing sale was for sacramental purposes is a defense in some states.[32] A "wine grower" is one who manufactures wine from grapes grown on his own premises.[33] "Corked" and "sealed" when used in reference to bottles are not synonymous.[34] A minor having arrived at years of discretion he may be convicted of having violated the local option law.[35]

The state need not prove the exact date on which the sale took place but only that the action was not barred by limitation.[36] An action on one's bond being of a civil nature, it does not take the place of nor prevent a prosecution by information or indictment for an act made criminal by the law.[37] Whether convicted or acquitted, the accused cannot be again tried for such an offense, committed within the period of limitation governing the case on trial.[38] The term "offense" is the equivalent of "conviction."[39]

Thurman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 937.

42. Indictment charging sale without a license in words of Acts 1902, No. 90, § 68. State v. Scampini [Vt.] 59 A. 201. Indictment charging one with permitting persons, not members of his family, to enter a room where liquor was sold on a Sunday held sufficient to charge the crime created by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7283c. Atkinson v. State [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 560.

43. Considering Code Pub. Loc. Laws, art. 21, §§ 127, 127a, 127b, held an indictment charging a violation of § 127 is sufficient without alleging that the defendant is not a pharmacist or druggist. Parker v. State [Md.] 57 A. 677. Sale of liquor within 5 miles of railroad grading camp, held information need not allege that defendant did not have a license from an incorporated town. Langan v. People [Colo.] 76 P. 1048.

an excepted class, unless such exception is contained in the enacting clause of the statute.[46] It need not name the purchaser;[47] by analogy this ruling is applicable to an indictment for suffering liquor to be drank on the premises,[48] nor the date of the sale,[49] especially if the accused admits an illegal sale on a day within the period of limitation,[50] nor the time the law on which it is based took effect.[51] The indictment should allege that the local option law was in effect in the territory where the act was committed,[52] and in such case need not allege that the sale was illegal.[53] All facts which would affect the degree of punishment should be alleged.[54] The offense charged being a sale within a prohibited distance from one of a certain class of places, the indictment ought to name the particular place, but failure to do so is not fatal.[55] It must allege the manner of the illegal sale, as having been made without a license.[56] A sale to an agent may be alleged as a sale to the principal.[57] Precise technical words or expressions need not be used.[58] An information charging a wholesaler with selling at "retail" charges a sale to a consumer;[59] if it alleges that the purchaser did not have a license, it sufficiently charges that the sale was not at wholesale.[60] "Spirituous" is synonymous with "intoxicating" so far as proof is concerned.[61]

Indictments charging the sale of spirituous, vinous and mixed liquors,[62] with keeping open on Sunday and with selling liquor,[63] or charging a druggist with making a specific illegal sale, and also with keeping a place where liquors are sold,[64] are not double. Allegations which are surplusage will be disregarded.[65] If a Need not allege that defendant was not a pharmacist or an assistant pharmacist. State v. Durein [Kan.] 78 P. 152. Under Rev. St. § 4364c, the affidavit should allege that the saloon was open on Sunday, and was one in which liquor is sold on week days. Bramley v. Euclid, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 508.

Sufficiency of indictment: An objection that the complaint did not charge defendant with not having a license in force for selling, but only with not having one in force for keeping for sale held without merit as the negation of a license clearly covered all the acts complained of. State v. Constantine [Vt.] 56 A. 1101. Though it be inferred from the complaint that defendant had a license in force at some time, which for some reason had lost its force, and left him with the liquor in question on his hands, yet, the complaint alleging that he did the acts complained of when he had no license in force, it cannot be further inferred that he was keeping the liquor for sale when his license again became in force. 64. People v. Shuler [Mich.] 98 N. W. 986.

65. Allegations held surplusage and immaterial: An information containing a suf-proviso is a part of the definition of the offense, it must be stated in the affidavit, but if it be an exception of certain persons, the negative averment is unnecessary.[66] No election is required unless two or more offenses are charged.[67]

The prosecutor is not obliged to furnish a bill of particulars of the testimony on which he will rely to prove the charge.[68]

Judicial notice.[69]—Courts will take judicial notice of the time an act takes effect, though that time depends upon the result of a popular vote,[70] of the sort of goods and chattels saloonkeepers keep on sale,[71] of the population of a city in the state,[72] and of the fact that joint eating houses and drinking saloons afford opportunities for carousals and lawlessness;[73] but not that a compound of intoxicants and nonintoxicants is intoxicating.[74]

Presumptions and burden of proof.[75]—Burden is on the state to prove a sale[76] of intoxicating liquor.[77] The burden is on one selling to an habitual drunkard after notice to prove his good faith,[78] but the contrary is true of a sale by a druggist for an apparently legal purpose.[79] Possession of liquor is not evidence of illegal possession.[80]

Admissibility of evidence.[81]—Evidence of other sales at different times is inadmissible unless part of the res gestae or unless it serves to show a system or criminal intent.[82] The sale of a particular liquor being alleged, evidence of sales of other liquors is inadmissible.[83] Evidence of previous sales and that accused had received consignments about the time of the alleged sale is admissible.[84] What was said and done between the parties at the time of the alleged sale is admissible,[85] but not statements made by the purchaser to a third party, defendant not being present.[86] Declarations of a principal, in order to be admissible against his surety, must ordinarily be a part of the res gestae.[87]

86. Declaration of purchaser as to quality

Evidence of intoxicating qualities of liquor put up by the same manufacturer, in bottles labeled similarly to that sold, is admissible.[88] One who has drunk an alleged medicine may testify as to its intoxicating properties, though he has not qualified as an expert.[89]

Knowledge gained by internal revenue officers officially is privileged.[90] Copies of books or records from the office of the internal revenue collector are admissible,[91] but not statements which a witness swears he saw recorded in the books[92] or his opinion as to the effect of an entry therein.[93] Where defendant alleges that the sale was on a physician's prescription, the prescription is the best evidence of its contents.[94]

The evidence must be admissible under the allegations in the indictment.[95] Evidence of search and finding of liquor on day subsequent to that of alleged sale,[96] and the testimony of one who accompanied defendant to the house where the sale was alleged to have taken place, that defendant had no liquor with him,[97] are admissible. An admission of an illegal sale amounting to a misdemeanor is inadmissible in a subsequent prosecution for the same offense, but after it has been raised to the grade of a felony.[98] Hearsay evidence is inadmissible.[99] Admission of druggist's affidavit and bond not to adulterate liquors is harmless.[1]

Orders of commissioners' court are admissible to prove existence of local option law.[2]

Weight and sufficiency of evidence.[3]—All facts required to be stated in the indictment must be proved.[4] Proof of single illegal sale is sufficient to establish keeping for unlawful purpose,[5] though in Michigan the contrary seems to prevail as the general rule.[6] A witness may be shown to be prejudiced against defend-of whisky defendant sold. Vauter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 186. Evidence of a conversation between prosecutor and a third party which caused them to go to the place where the alleged sale took place. Patrick v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 947.

6. Proof of a single unlawful sale does not justify a conviction under an information charging that defendant kept a drug ant.[7] Excise agents are not to be ranged in the same category of witnesses as persons hired to procure evidence, nor even as detectives.[8] Original minutes of commissioners' court containing all the essential orders are sufficient to prove the existence of the local option law.[9]

Trial.[10]—Accused admitting an illegal sale, it is not error to deny a change of venue.[11] Defendant being accused of violating a local option law, his guilt can only be determined in a criminal proceeding in which the right of trial by jury can be accorded him.[12] Defendant's attorney should be permitted to ask jurors if they have a prejudice against one who from his occupation might be in a position to violate the liquor law.[13] It is error for the prosecuting attorney, during the noon recess, in the absence of defendant and his counsel and in the presence of some of the jury, to pour out the contents of an analyzed bottle of the liquor and light the same.[14] Counsel for the state may allude to defendant's failure to explain where he got the liquor.[15]

Charges must be applicable to the facts of the case,[16] and clerical errors will be disregarded.[17] The court need not define words in common and ordinary use, the definition and meaning of which jurors are presumed to understand as well as the court.[18] One cannot complain of the giving of a requested definition.[19]

Defendant's violation being a question of fact, it is for the jury.[20] Guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[21] In a prosecution for the violation of a local option law, the court may permit the jury to return their verdict while defendant is in jail, and may discharge the jury in the absence of defendant and his counsel.[22] The extent of the fine often depends on whether it is defendant's first offense or not,[23] and the amount being within the discretion of the trial judge and not exceeding the statutory limit, it is not subject to review.[24]

In such case the

§ 7. Summary proceedings. Searches, seizures and forfeitures.[25]—An affidavit for a search warrant is insufficient if based on information and belief and does not state or show the facts required or is not otherwise corroborated.[26] An officer being authorized to seize intoxicating liquors before obtaining a warrant, the latter must be obtained within a reasonable time after seizure, and must be valid, at least upon its face.[27] Statutory provisions largely govern.[28]

§ 8. Abatement of traffic and injunction.[29]—A court of equity may in some cases enjoin the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors as a public nuisance,[30] upon information filed by the proper official,[31] or in New York by a taxpayer, the petition not being based on information and belief.[32] A place being habitually used for illegal sales, it becomes a public nuisance[33] which may be abated or the liquor destroyed in a suit against the owner or keeper.[34] To prove the nuisance, proof of actual sales is unnecessary.[35] It is the keeping of the place where the liquor is sold or kept for sale that constitutes the nuisance.[36] "The place" as here used means the particular place, room, or apartment wherein the liquor was kept for sale or sold in violation of law,[37] and it must be particularly identified.[38] To be the keeper of a nuisance so as to subject the place to condemnation as such, the person must be an occupant under some claim of right, and not a mere transient and naked trespasser therein;[39] and if possession is obtained for a lawful purpose, the place will not be adjudged a nuisance as against the owner, unless, after knowledge or notice of its unlawful use, he permits the occupancy and use to continue.[40]

The finding of intoxicating liquor on the premises occupied by defendant is prima facie evidence of the existence of a nuisance only when the liquor was found by an officer empowered to search for the same under a warrant issued in connection with the temporary injunctional order.[48] A cause of action against one, selling liquors, for keeping a nuisance does not survive.[49] Repeals are stated in the notes.[50]

§ 9. Civil liabilities for injuries resulting from sale. Civil damage laws.[51]—Civil damage acts[52] create a cause of action which was unknown at the common law.[53] They are generally exclusive,[54] and should be strictly construed.[55] By these statutes liquor dealers are generally rendered jointly[56] and severally[57] liable for the consequences of intoxication to which they in any degree contributed, and this is especially true where the sale was illegal,[58] and such liability extends to the sureties upon their bonds,[59] and to all aiding and abetting the particular sale and sharing the profits.[60] The consequences[61] include all cases where one's family

46. A decree enjoining defendant from illegally selling liquor in a certain building, which finds that he was not the owner during the period of such illegal sale, and recites that "since that time the premises have been sold, * * * and possession thereof given," is not absolutely void. Ohlrogg v. District Court of Worth County [Iowa] 99 N. W. 178.

47. A decree restraining the defendant from using its warehouse and depot for the storage and delivery of C. O. D. packages of intoxicating liquor, is not erroneous in failing to make an exception in favor of liquor lawfully transported and stored. Dosh v. United States Exp. Co. [Iowa] 99 N. W. 298.

The cause of action being abated by the death of the defendant, judgment cannot be rendered for the destruction of the property, nor for the closing of the place. Id. Upon the death of said defendant the property used by him in maintaining the nuisance passes to his heirs, subject to the control of the county court. Id.

is deprived of support,[62] the expense of caring for the intoxicated man,[63] and in some states all torts committed while intoxicated,[64] and all expenses incurred in all criminal and civil prosecutions growing out of and justly attributable to the traffic in such liquor.[65]

The burden is on plaintiff to show a sale of intoxicating liquor.[66] This may be done by circumstantial evidence, but the weight thereof is for the jury.[67] The plaintiff is, however, only required to establish his case by a preponderance of evidence.[68] General rules as to examination of a witness apply.[69] That the husband failed to support his family is no defense.[70]

Proof of damages must be reasonably definite.[71] Instruction that jury must be satisfied that death resulted from intoxication must be specially requested.[72] In making up the verdict, the jury may consider the deceased's age, habits of life,

NOTE. Liability under civil damage acts: Under the civil damage acts, giving to any one injured in his person, property, or means of support, a right of action against the person causing the intoxication, an action lies for direct injuries done by the intoxicated person, as well as for damages arising from the intoxication. King v. Haley, 86 Ill. 106, 29 Am. Rep. 14; Thomas v. Dansby, 74 Mich. 398, 41 N. W. 1088. Assault and battery. English v. Beard, 51 Ind. 489; Bodge v. Hughes, 53 N. H. 614; Bacon v. The authorities are not harmonious on the question whether a liquor seller is liable to a wife where he has sold liquor to her husband, causing his intoxication, and he, while intoxicated, commits a crime for which he is convicted and imprisoned. The following cases hold she can recover: Honsire v. Halfman, 156 Ind. 470, 60 N. E. 154; Beers v. Walhizer, 43 Hun [N. Y.] 254. The following that she cannot: Bradford v. Though if a wife purchases liquor for her husband under compulsion, or to keep him at home, she does not thereby defeat her right of action. Ward v. Thompson, 48 Iowa, 588. But see Beem v. Chestnut, 120 Ind. 390, 22 N. E. 303, where it was held that a wife, in her complaint, need not show herself free from contributory negligence, since the sale of the liquor constituted a violation of positive law, and an invasion of her right of personal security, and the doctrine of contributory negligence had no application. —From note to Mastad v. Swedish Brethren [Minn.] 85 Am. St. Rep. 446, 449.

63. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 779, par. 8, providing for a recovery for the taking care of an intoxicated man, does not authorize a recovery for the taking care of an intoxicated person who received an injury at the hands of another intoxicated person, the injury resulting from the independent act of the latter. lative change in the name or number of a judicial district does not affect the title of the judge to his office.[87] An election cannot be held on a date other than that fixed by law.[88] The term is computed according to the meaning of the statute.[89] If it run till qualification of successor, the election of a successor without qualifying does not affect the incumbency.[90] The power to fill vacancies cannot be exercised before the occasion[91] nor after the time[92] specified by statute. other compensation than that provided can be allowed.[5] A fee compensated judge may have fees only in the cases provided.[6]

§ 2. Special, substitute and assistant judges.[7] Appointment and calling is governed by the statutes. The validity of a statute providing for the election of a special judge cannot be raised as an objection to a special judge lawfully presiding.[8] A statute providing for a change of judges on filing an affidavit of prejudice does not conflict with a constitutional provision authorizing judges to sit for each other on invitation.[9] The power to call in a judge does not exist in cases where the statutes provide for transfer of the cause.[10] The right to elect a special judge by consent in civil suits does not apply to criminal proceedings.[11] In Texas a special judge may be chosen for a special term just as for a general term.[12] The clerk alone in Tennessee calls the election, declares the result and administers the oath.[13] The selection of a special judge must be authenticated on the record[14] by the proper officer.[15] The order for it reciting the occasion for calling a special judge, the particulars of the election or appointment, the eligibility and qualifications of the person elected, and his oath should be entered as part of the caption of the proceedings of the term,[16] unless the appointment be for a particular case, when it should follow the style of that case on the minutes.[17] The special judge even if not authorized to do this should see that it is timely done.[18] His authority cannot be presumed in criminal cases.[19]

27. Low v. State [Tenn.] 78 S. W. 110.

28. See 2 Curr. L. 579.

29. In Massachusetts a single justice of the supreme court has power to determine a motion to dismiss a creditor's appeal from a probate decree allowing a guardian's final account. Leyland v. Leyland [Mass.] 71 N. E. 794. Where one judge constitutes a quorum in the trial of certain cases, incidental questions arising in connection with such trial are subject to final decision by him, though under Pub. Laws 1897, c. 451, § 3, he may reserve it for hearing before three justices of the appellate division. Banigan v. Banigan [R. I.] 59 A. 313.

30. A judge who hears neither the evidence nor argument of a cause cannot enter judgment therein. Evidence heard by one judge, argument by another and judgment entered by a third. In re Sullivan [Cal.] 77 P. 153. The attorney of an incompetent cannot consent to the entry of such judgment. Id.

31. Parties aggrieved should be left to their remedy by appeal. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909.

32. The apportionment of referee's fees. Cobb v. Rhea [N. C.] 49 S. E. 161.

33. If a judge is clearly satisfied that an order was granted by his predecessor, without the exercise of judgment, or through mistake or fraud practiced on the court, or manifest indiscretion, or through the fact that adverse parties were not heard, he may set such order aside. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909.

34. Orders referring a case to take and report the testimony. Pratt v. Timmerman [S. C.] 48 S. E. 255.

35. Bailey v. Coe [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1158.

36. In Wisconsin, being equal to circuit judge at chambers, may entertain habeas corpus [Const. art. 7, § 23. Rev. St. 1898, § 2815]. Longstaff v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 900. In Minnesota, having the same power, he may issue writs of attachment. Clements v. Utley, 91 Minn. 352, 98 N. W. 188.

37. Where he declines, erroneously believing that he has not jurisdiction. Hill v. Morgan [Idaho] 76 P. 323.

38. The power of the circuit courts of Kentucky to appoint special commissioners is limited to two cases enumerated by such statute [Ky. St. 1903, §§ 339, 400]. Louisville Public Warehouse Co. v. Miller [Ky.] 81 S. W. 275.

39. A district judge has power to settle a case made while at a place outside his judicial district. City of Enid v. Wigger [Okl.] 77 P. 190. See, also, 2 Curr. L. 579, n. 73-76.

40. See 2 Curr. L. 579.

41. Judges of courts having appellate jurisdiction and power in vacation to hear and determine all necessary writs to carry such jurisdiction into effect have power in vacation to stay proceedings in such inferior court. Reese v. Steele [Ark.] 83 S. W. 335.

terlocutory and provisional orders may usually be made,[42] but not final judgments,[43] or a change of a judgment already entered,[44] or a motion for a new trial dismissed.[45] He cannot make a verbal order for the entry of an appeal.[46] In an equity cause, before filing the decree, the judge has power to grant a new trial.[47] A writ of prohibition does not lie to a judge at chambers,[48] but a justice of the supreme court may issue it in vacation returnable at term.[49] Alternative mandamus may be returnable at chambers,[50] but the writ itself can only be issued after judgment of a court.[51] If a summons is improperly made returnable at chambers, the action should not be dismissed. It should be transferred to the trial docket,[52] unless the complaint can be so amended as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the judge at chambers.[53]

Immunities and exemptions.[54]—Neither the judge of a superior court[55] nor the judge of an inferior court[56] is liable for judicial acts within his jurisdiction.[57] The judge of a superior court is not liable for erroneously deciding a question as to his jurisdiction,[58] but the judicial office is no protection against liability for malicious acts beyond his jurisdiction,[59] nor for erroneous ministerial acts.[60]

42. An order of reference to take testimony may be made at chambers. Pratt v. Timmerman [S. C.] 48 S. E. 255.

43. Under Mills' Ann. Code, § 408, limiting the power at chambers to a hearing of motions and demurrers and making interlocutory orders and rules preparatory to disposition of causes on the merits, a judge cannot in vacation at chambers render a final judgment. People v. Hebel [Colo. App.] 76 P. 550. Hear and pass upon a demurrer. Price v. Grice [Idaho] 79 P. 387; Johnson v. Cravey [Ga.] 48 S. E. 424. An order to show cause why the appointment of a receiver should not be made permanent is beyond the powers of a circuit judge in vacation, he having no power to enter judgment. State v. Dearing [Mo.] 84 S. W. 21.

44. Order directing a convicted defendant to be committed to a jail other than the one designated in the judgment is unauthorized. In re Rex [Kan.] 78 P. 404.

45. Miller v. Thigpen [Ga.] 49 S. E. 286. Order the entry, nunc pro tunc of a judgment or overrule a motion for a new trial, even though there is statutory authority to amend a judgment or decree. Accousi v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 1104.

46. At his private office after the expiration of the term and without the clerk or the clerk's notes being before him. Hays v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. [Md.] 58 A. 439.

47. After adjournment but before decree rendered, a judge at chambers in another county can refer the case to the referee, permit other attorneys to appear on behalf of the parties interested, though the result of the order is in effect to grant a new trial. First Nat. Bank v. Lee [S. C.] 46 S. E. 771.

48. Sand. & H. Dig. § 4892, defining it as one addressed to an inferior court. Reese v. Steele [Ark.] 83 S. W. 335.

49. In Missouri, a justice of the supreme court has power to issue a preliminary rule in prohibition returnable to and triable by the court in term time. Inherent powers of the supreme court and direct provisions of Rev. St. 1899, c. 55 and Const. art. 6, § 3. State v. Dearing [Mo.] 84 S. W. 21.

50. Martin v. Clark, 135 N. C. 178, 47 S. E. 397.

51. Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 4891, defining it as an order of a court of competent and original jurisdiction. Reese v. Steele [Ark.] 83 S. W. 335.

52. Martin v. Clark, 135 N. C. 178, 47 S. E. 397.

53. In North Carolina, where a summons is made returnable at chambers and the complaint states a case which should be heard at term, it may be amended so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the judge at chambers [Code, §§ 623, 256 and § 255, as amended by Laws 1887, p. 518, c. 276]. Ewbank v. Turner, 134 N. C. 77, 46 S. E. 508.

54. See 2 Curr. L. 580.

55. O'Connell v. Mason [C. C. A.] 132 F. 245. Allegation that acts complained of were not judicial acts and were done without authority does not state a cause of action unless particular acts are set out. Id.

56. An ordinary (probate judge) is not personally liable for erroneous judicial acts. State v. Henderson [Ga.] 48 S. E. 334. Justice of the peace. McVeigh v. Ripley [Conn.] 58 A. 701.

57. NOTE. Acts in excess of jurisdiction: The judge of an inferior court, like the judge of a superior court, is protected from acts in excess of jurisdiction if he acted in good faith. Thompson v. Jackson [Iowa] 27 L. R. A. 92; Austin v. Vrooman [N. Y.] 14 L. R. A. 138, otherwise where want of jurisdiction is known to him. Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. [U. S.] 335, 20 Law. Ed. 646. This is in accord with the English rule. Calder v. Halket, 3 Moore, P. C. 75; Houlden v. Smith, 14 Q. B. 841.—From note to Thompson v. Jackson [Iowa] 27 L. R. A. 92.

58. Costs of mandamus, issued to compel him to consider a matter of which he erroneously believed he had not jurisdiction, cannot be taxed against him. Hill v. Morgan [Idaho] 76 P. 765.

59. Appointment of receiver by a police judge. Reed v. Taylor, 25 Ky. L. R. 1793, 78 S. W. 892.

60. The ordinary (probate judge) is liable on his official bond for nonperformance or neglect of duties devolving upon him as clerk. State v. Henderson [Ga.] 48 S. E. 334.

Disability to practice.[61]—Judges of inferior courts may practice in courts other than their own.[62]

§ 4. Disqualification in particular cases.[63]—Interest and kinship are the sole common-law disqualifications.[64] The interest must be such that the result would necessarily affect him to his personal pecuniary loss or gain.[65] Common-law disqualifications give way to necessity,[66] and have no application to the members of a quasi judicial tribunal acting judicially in dealing with administrative affairs.[67] A statute disqualifying for relationship applies only to parties in interest,[68] and has been held inapplicable unless the relationship be sustained to a party to the record.[69] If, however, the relationship exists, it is immaterial whether the litigant is suing in his own right or in a representative capacity.[70] Such disqualification may be waived.[71]

Disqualification because of having been of counsel applies only to actions where the same issues are involved.[72] A judge who is of counsel in an action relative to the same subject-matter is disqualified.[73]

In an action to hold a probate judge on his official bond for damages for taking a guardian's bond executed under an alleged invalid power of attorney, evidence held to show that such power of attorney was valid. Best v. Robinson [Ky.] 82 S. W. 302. Probate judge and sureties on his official bond are liable for his neglect of duty in taking an inadequate guardian's bond. Williams v. Weeks [S. C.] 48 S. E. 619. Where a probate judge takes a worthless guardian's bond, the burden is on him to show the solvency of the sureties at the time it was taken. Id.

62. The judge of a city court, though not allowed to practice in his own court, may practice in the district court. Nichols v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Utah] 78 P. 866.

64. State v. Houser [Wis.] 100 N. W. 964.

65. A judge is not disqualified to determine the validity of a statute providing for a local assessment by reason of being a taxpayer in the locality. City of Oak Cliff v. State [Tex.] 79 S. W. 1068. "Interest" means direct pecuniary interest. State v. Houser [Wis.] 100 N. W. 964. The county judge being incompetent because of interest, to hear and determine election cases, he properly certified them to the circuit court. Johnson v. Brice [Tenn.] 83 S. W. 791.

66. Where there is no other tribunal to try the case in hand. State v. Houser [Wis.] 100 N. W. 964.

67. Political state central committee. State v. Houser [Wis.] 100 N. W. 964.

68. Not where counsel who was a brother-in-law and had the case on a contingent basis but prior to the trial the contingent fee contract was abrogated and counsel waived any lien he might have on the judgment. Knickerbocker v. Worthing [Mich.] 101 N. W. 540. The husbands of two sisters are "brothers-in-law" within the meaning of a statute providing for the recusation of judges. State v. Foster, 112 La. 533, 36 So. 554.

69. Not where the father of the judge was attorney and was to be compensated by a percentage of the recovery. Hundley v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 362.

70. State v. Foster, 112 La. 533, 36 So. 554.

71. Defendant appealed from a conviction on the ground that the justice of the peace before whom he was tried was the employe of the complaining witness. Held, the plea of not guilty waived the objection, based on the alleged disqualification of the trial judge. People v. Kinney [Mich.] 100 N. W. 596.

Note: Assuming, as the court does in the principal case, that the judge could have been challenged on the ground of interest, there is a conflict of authority as to whether the defendant's plea would operate as a waiver or not. Holmes v. Eason, 8 Lea [Tenn.] 754; People v. Connor, 142 N. Y. 130. At common law, the right to object to a judge on the ground of interest was considered a personal privilege, in favor of the party likely to be prejudiced. Such a judgment was therefore merely voidable. Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 3 H. L. Cas. 759; Findley v. Smith, 42 W. Va. 299. But in case the parties do not know of the judge's disqualification, the judgment can be attacked directly by writ of error or appeal. Stearns v. Wright, 51 N. H. 600. Under the statutes regulating the disqualification of judges, the courts of some of the states follow the common-law rule. Floyd Co. v. Cheney, 57 Iowa, 160; Holmes v. Eason, 8 Lea [Tenn.] 754. But the weight of authority is that the judge does not have jurisdiction over the cause and that the judgment is absolutely void. In re White, 37 Cal. 190; Case v. Hoffman, 100 Wis. 314; People v. Connor, 142 N. Y. 130. As the parties to an action cannot confer jurisdiction on a judge by consent, there can be no waiver. Oakley v. Aspinwall, 3 N. Y. 547. Being void, the judgment can be attacked collaterally as well as directly. Hall v. Thayer, 105 Mass. 219, 7 Am. Rep. 513. But it would seem in the absence of an express statutory abrogation, that the common-law rule should govern as in the principal case. The conclusion reached in there, however, is contrary to the view which has heretofore prevailed in Michigan. Horton v. Howard, 79 Mich. 642, 19 Am. St. Rep. 198. See 4 Columbia L. R. 439.—From 4 Columbia L. R. 603.

72. Does not apply to an action to enforce a judgment rendered in a case in which he was counsel. Keeffe v. Third Nat. Bank, 177 N. Y. 305, 69 N. E. 593. A judge is not disqualified to determine an issue whether the maker of a note promised after Bias and prejudice[74] is not ground for disqualification[75] unless so provided by statute.

Procedure, and trial of fact of disqualification.—A judge is not required to withdraw from the hearing of a case upon the mere suggestion that he is disqualified to sit.[76] If sitting alone he must decide the sufficiency of the proofs,[77] but his determination is not a matter of discretion.[78] A motion to recuse for affinity is properly referred by him to a judge ad hoc.[79] But a motion to recuse the judge ad hoc so appointed should be decided by him.[80]

Prejudice cannot be charged against the judge of any court other than the one to whom the application for change of venue is addressed.[81] Disqualification is waived by going to trial after a change of venue has been obtained.[82] The Montana statute providing for disqualification by merely filing an affidavit of prejudice is not in violation of the state constitution.[83] A speedy trial is not denied though two-thirds of the judges of the state may be successively disqualified.[84] Being applicable to civil cases only, it does not authorize a party to disqualify a judge to punish him for contempt.[85] It does not authorize the affidavit to be filed after trial begun.[86] The procedure prescribed must be followed.[87]

§ 5. Removal.[88]—Error in judgment,[89] or an erroneous application of le-

his discharge in bankruptcy to pay it by reason of the fact he was of counsel in proceedings asserting the validity of the note prior to the bankruptcy. Blackwell v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank [Tex.] 79 S. W. 518.

73. A counsel for a wife in divorce proceedings, the grounds of which are assault, etc., cannot preside at the trial of a prosecution for such assault. Barnes v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 1124.

74. See 2 Curr. L. 581.

75. In Ohio it is a matter of doubt whether bias and prejudice on the part of the trial judge is a ground for disqualification in the common pleas court. Rev. St. § 550, considered. Ohio v. Fronizer, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 476. It is a matter of doubt whether bias or prejudice on the part of the trial judge is a ground of disqualification in the common pleas and superior courts. Cantilion v. Cincinnati, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 417. In an affidavit charging bias and prejudice against a judge as a ground of disqualification, bias and prejudice should be averred as a fact. Id. The fact that a judge could testify as to material facts relative to a cause is not ground for disqualification. State v. Pitts, 139 Ala. 152, 36 So. 20. An election warden is not disqualified to try complaints for illegal voting by reason of having approved the list of voters [under Gen. Laws 1896, c. 228, § 16]. Williams v. Champlin [R. I.] 59 A. 75.

76. Allegations of prejudice being based on information and belief and conclusively rebutted by positive affidavits, application for a change of judge was properly denied. Crouch v. Dakota, W. & M. R. R. Co. [S. D.] 101 N. W. 722.

77. State v. De Maio [N. J. Err. & App.] 58 A. 173. Upon the recusation of a judge, the party interposing the challenge must, unless the facts are admitted, lay before the court proof of their truth. Id.

82. Du Quoin Waterworks Co. v. Parks, 207 Ill. 46, 69 N. E. 587.

83. Does not violate a provision enumerating the qualifications of judges. State v. Clancy [Mont.] 77 P. 312. The fact that no provision is made for a judicial determination of the bias or prejudice does not interfere with a constitutional provision granting original jurisdiction in all cases at law or equity. Id. Act Dec. 10, 1903, is not special legislation, being general in its terms, though passed for the purpose of relieving a condition in only three cities. Id. Because not providing for notice to the other party. Since a party is not entitled to have his case tried by a particular judge, he is not deprived of property without due process. State v. gal principles is not ground for removal.[90] It must be shown that his judicial acts were corrupt,[91] or that there was a disregard of legal rules amounting to legal misconduct.[92] A judge may be removed for willfully making a wrong decision[93] or for manifesting favoritism toward one party or his attorney to the prejudice of another,[94] for a reckless exercise of judicial functions, without regard to the rights of litigants,[95] though such favoritism was not the result of bribery,[96] or for removal from the district in which he is elected where a statute provides that he shall be a resident of such district.[97]

municipality,' it has only the effect of an audited claim or demand, giving no new right in respect to the means of payment.[6]

§ 2. Kinds of judgment. A. Judgments on offer, consent, stipulation, or confession.[7]—An offer of judgment may be made in the appellate court;[8] in New York it need not be accompanied by an affidavit;[9] but in all cases must be for the full amount due,[10] and being unaccepted is not an admission of plaintiff's cause of action.[11] Under the New Jersey statute requiring affidavits for judgment on warrant of attorney to state the true consideration of the bond, and that the debt is justly due, such debt need not antedate the delivery of the bond,[12] and being unpaid it is immaterial whether or not it constitutes an accrued right of action.[13] That the time of payment has been extended is immaterial in the absence of a plea to that effect.[14] It is essential, however, that the consideration be stated with substantial truth,[15] and it is immaterial that the affidavit is inartificially drawn and not technically precise.[16] Judgment should be entered for the sum mentioned in the bond and warrant.[17] Authority to confess a judgment without process must be clear and explicit, and must be strictly construed;[18] it generally authorizes the entry of but one judgment,[19] and the power being inadequate the judgment is a nullity.[20] In the absence of evidence to the contrary, an attorney is presumed to have such power.[21] To be of any validity and to warrant a judgment, the waiver of citation and the confession of judgment must be made after the maturity of the obligation declared upon.[22] A judgment by confession must be for a fixed and definite sum, and in confession of a fact that can be read from the record.[23] Its validity is not affected by the fact that a jury trial was not formally waived, nor because findings were not made by the court.[24] An officer of a corporation may confess judgment against it though he be one upon whom valid service could not be had,[26] and though he be personally interested in having the judgment so rendered.[26]

6. State v. Royse [Neb.] 98 N. W. 459. In an action to compel the levying of a tax to satisfy such judgment, the court will ascertain the nature and character of the indebtedness on which it is based, in order to determine the limit of the tax which may be levied for its satisfaction. Id.

22. Being made prior to such maturity, the obligation is not thereby annulled. Kiernan v. Jackson, 111 La. 645, 35 So. 798. Being made subsequent to such date judgment may be entered though the circumstances may give rise to an action of nullity for fraud. Id. Where the state appeals from such judgment, making allegations of matters of fraud which require evidence to be taken, the proper remedy is by an action in nullity and an injunction, not by a suspensive appeal. (§ 2) B. Default[27] and office judgments.[28]—Plaintiff agreeing to a continuance and allowing such agreement and continuance to be entered of record, the office judgment cannot become final until it is entered up as the judgment.[29] Before such entry, the defendant may have the judgment set aside by filing his counter affidavit and pleading to issue.[30]

(§ 2) C. At particular stages of the action.—Judgment may be entered on the pleadings[31] and a demurrer being overruled, a decision should be made directing the entry of an interlocutory judgment.[32]

(§ 2) D. Final[33] and interlocutory judgments.—A judgment to be final must finally ascertain the amount[34] and distribution[35] of the recovery or fund in controversy, and must dispose of the entire subject-matter of the litigation and the rights of the parties therein.[36] A voluntary nonsuit,[37] an order overruling a demurrer,[38] and, in the absence of an accompanying decree of dismissal, an order sustaining a demurrer,[39] are not final judgments, though a default judgment may be.[40]

(§ 2) E. Personam or in rem.—A judgment in rem is an adjudication upon the status of some person or thing,[41] while a judgment in personam is one against the person.[42] Thus judgments in actions to set aside deeds[43] for the judgment was a legatee in the estate. Manley v. Mayer [Kan.] 75 P. 550.

35. Judgments are interlocutory where they order that the fund in court be appropriated after the determination of certain issues between two of the parties and that the cause be continued until such determination (Wilson Hardware Co. v. Duff [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 907), or where the balance of the fund realized by sale is to be held subject to the further order of the court (American Trading & Storage Co. v. Gottstein, 123 Iowa, 267, 98 N. W. 770).

36. Must contain a statement that "it is considered by the court that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ and that the defendants go hence without day," or words of similar import. Wenom v. Fossick [Ill.] 72 N. E. 732. A decree finding that the allegations of a bill are not true, and denying complainant the relief asked, is a final disposition of the bill, though it does not explicitly dismiss it. Kozacek v. Kozacek, 105 Ill. App. 180. A judgment decreeing debts against the estate of a decedent and subjecting its lands to their payment is a final decree. Trail v. Trail [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 431. In an equitable proceeding to enforce stockholders' liability, a decree determining amount of corporation's debts, and creditor's rights to an assessment is final. Bennett v. Thorne [Wash.] 78 P. 936. A judgment entered against defendant after demurrer to reply to a separate defense had been overruled, dismissing the separate defense and providing for the recovery of costs and the issuance of execution is interlocutory. Maeder v. Wexler, 43 Misc. 19, 87 N. Y. S. 402. specific performance of a contract to convey realty[44] are judgments in personam. Probate decrees are generally treated as judgments in rem.[45] Personal service of notice on defendant is essential to a judgment in personam,[46] while a judgment in rem may be based upon constructive service.[47]

§ 3. Requisites. A. In general.[48]—In order to have a valid judgment, the court must have jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter,[49] but an inexcusable departure from established procedure is not jurisdictional unless it seriously interferes with the efficiency of judicial instrumentalities to administer justice.[50] The petition must contain a prayer for relief,[51] though the fact that it does not state a cause of action does not render the judgment void.[52] The judgment must be based on a legal service of valid process,[53] but irregular or defective process only renders the judgment voidable.[54]

A decision substantially and in form like statutory requirements, if any,[55] and, in jury cases, a valid verdict,[56] are prerequisite, but judgment need not await the recording of verdict unless so provided.[57] For mere irregularities in

W. 603. Where defendant was a nonresident. Goodwin v. Claytor [N. C.] 49 S. E. 173. Citation and service of answer are necessary before the court can render judgment on a counterclaim. Field v. O'Connor [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 872. Personal service on one of several joint debtors authorizes judgment against all, under Comp. Laws, § 840. Hirsh v. Fisher [Mich.] 101 N. W. 48. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1347, service on a partner will authorize a judgment against the partnership. State v. Cloudt [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 415. Failure of clerk to affix his seal to the citation as required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1447 (Robinson v. Horton [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1044), or failure of sheriff in returning the citation to show the date of service therein as required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1225 (Id.), is fatal to a default judgment. Judgment rendered on service by publication without the statutory affidavit is void. Osborne v. Schlichenmeier [Kan.] 75 P. 474.

See article Process, 2 Curr. L. 1259.

54. Failure of justice to sign original notice as required by Code, § 4488, does not render the judgment void. Loughren v. Bonniwell & Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 287. Omission of the seal of the court from citation does not render the judgment void. Newman v. Mackey [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 31. But see Robinson v. Horton [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1044.

55. Neither an entry in the clerk's minutes nor an opinion of the court can take the place thereof. Electric Boat Co. v. Howey, 96 App. Div. 410, 89 N. Y. S. 210. Oral decision taken down by stenographer and included in judgment roll without being entitled, dated or signed is not a decision sufficient to support a judgment. Dobbs v. Brinkerhoff, 90 N. Y. S. 480. An unsigned opinion by the trial judge, concluding with the statement that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded, and "judgment is granted accordingly with costs," is not a sufficient compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1022. Kent v. Common Council of Binghamton, 90 App. Div. 553, 86 N. Y. S. 411. See 2 Curr. L. 583, n. 48, 49.

56. Judgment entered on verdict received by clerk is void, though so received under direction of court and without objection to the parties. Morris v. Harburger, 91 N. Y. S. 409.

57. Judgment in condemnation proceedings was entered after verdict assessing the damages was filed but before it was re-these particulars, the judgment is only voidable.[58] The requisite decision not being found in the judgment roll it will be assumed that none was filed.[59] A judgment not being based upon a decision it should be vacated, a decision made and proper judgment entered,[60] but even in the absence of a motion to vacate, the judgment will be reversed on appeal and the case remitted for decision.[61]

Signing[62] and entry[63] are essential, though an unsigned judgment has been held to be valid when entered on the signed minutes of the court.[64] There being a clear intention to sign the judgment, it is immaterial that the signatures appear on the right or left hand side of the page on which it is entered,[65] and being signed by both the judge and attorney for the prevailing party, it is immaterial whether or not it is one requiring the signature of the judge or that of the attorney.[66] Irregularities, in that the clerk failed to mark answers as filed,[67] or failed to enter a decree pro confesso in tax proceedings,[68] do not generally affect the validity of the final judgment entered in the cause.

(§ 3) B. Parties.[69]—There must be parties in court standing as litigants[70] and competent to sue or defend.[71] A necessary party being omitted, the court may withhold its judgment,[72] but being rendered it is voidable only.[73] An erroneous entry of joint judgment against a defendant, not brought into the jurisdiction of the court, renders it erroneous[74] as to all defendants. Jurisdiction having been acquired over a party, a judgment rendered against him after his death is not void, though his heirs and representatives be not cited.[75]

corded. This under Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 875, providing that on the return of the verdict the court shall order it to be recorded, and shall enter judgment thereon. Weiland v. Ashton [S. D.] 100 N. W. 737.

75. Campbell v. Upson [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 358. Failure to so cite the heirs and representatives is generally treated as an irregularity sufficient to justify the setting aside of the judgment. Id.

NOTE. Judgment after death of a party: A judgment rendered against a person dying after the action has begun is not void on that account. New Orleans v. Gaines' Adm'rs, 138 U. S. 595; Mitchell v. Schoonover, 16 Or. 311. It is an irregularity and may be attacked directly, but the judgment is valid until set aside by the court. Stocking v. Hanson, 22 Minn. 542; Giddings v. Steebe, 28 Tex. 732. Black, Judgments [2nd Ed.] § 199. The contrary view, that in the absence of any statutory provision on the subject, a judgment against a dead person,

(§ 3) C. Conformity to process, pleading, proof, verdict or findings.[76]—The judgment must be against the identical party named in the process,[77] and must conform to the pleadings; thus it must not decide matters not in issue,[78] nor grant relief not prayed for or exceeding what was sought;[79] but included and either natural or artificial, is absolutely void, irrespective of whether jurisdiction has been acquired or not, has some support. Life Ass'n v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315. 4 Columbia L. R. 513.

77. Default judgment. Korman v. Grand Lodge of the United States, 44 Misc. 564, 90 N. Y. S. 120. Citation issued for and served upon G. W. S. will not support a default judgment against J. W. S. Shook v. Laufer [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 277. Where a railroad company was served with process in its true corporate name, but omitting the word "company," and a default judgment was taken against it by its true name, held judgment could not be attacked on ground of misnomer. Brassfield v. Quincy O. & K. C. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 1032.

78. Where complaint did not allege that the land could not be sold in parcels, it is error to render a judgment providing that the land should be sold as a whole, and that it was not susceptible of division. Richcreek v. Russell [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 617. Complaint admitting defendant's rights in a highway to a limited extent, and the answer claiming rights by prescription, decree that defendant's rights were extinguished by abandonment, held a fatal variance. Sowles v. Clawson [Utah] 76 P. 1067. A judgment on a written contract cannot be founded on a finding that it was obtained by fraud, where the defendant did not plead that fact, though no objection is taken to evidence in support thereof. New Idea Pattern Co. v. Whelan, 75 Conn. 455, 53 A. 953. Complaint being insufficient as to sureties on bond, a judgment against them is erroneous. Felonicher v. Stingley, 142 Cal. 630, 76 P. 504.

79. Defendant admitted the allegations of the complaint and its prayer cannot have unsought relief. Cauthen v. Cauthen [S. C.] 49 S. E. 321. In replevin, absence of plea requiring return of chattel, a final judgment cannot award possession. Construing Laws 1902, p. 1528, c. 580. Levy v. Hohweisner, 91 N. Y. S. 552. A judgment based entirely upon a cause of action found in a complaint, but on account of which no relief is asked, is more favorable than that demanded in the complaint. Hasbrouck v. New Paltz, H. & P. Traction Co., 90 N. Y. S. 977. Complaint being for false representations and deceit, held error to render judgment as for breach of warranty. Moore v. Giddings [Conn.] 59 A. 36. A judgment decreeing one-half of appellee's recovery to his attorney, held erroneous, the appellee being a minor, the attorney not being a party and the pleading not warranting such a finding. White v. Simonton [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 621. Defendant setting up a counterclaim for the difference between the value of a chattel and the unpaid purchase price, he is not entitled to recover the full value of the chattel. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hill, 102 Mo. App. 544, 79 S. W. 745. Held error to vacate an order of cancellation under an order to show cause why the order should not be "reargued and resettled," so as to show appearance of attorney and the filing of certain affidavits and such other relief as the court shall deem necessary. Schiller v. Weinstein, 91 N. Y. S. 76. A prayer for a conveyance justifies a judgment requiring a sealed deed. Gen. St. 1902, § 4029, defining a conveyance to be a sealed instrument. Jenner v. Brooks [Conn.] 59 A. 508. Where legal and equitable causes of action are stated in one form of complaint, judgment may be rendered for the relief demanded upon any right of action which the facts alleged are sufficient to support. Cole v. Jerman [Conn.] 59 A. 425. Where, in a proceeding to enforce an assessment for an improvement, plaintiff asked for all proper relief, defense was made, and the proof authorized the apportionment made by the court, held, the judgment would not be disturbed as not warranted by the pleading. Specht v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1106.

Under prayer for general relief, equity may grant such as is incidental and proper to the case made. May grant a personal judgment. American Trading & Storage Co. v. Gottstein, 123 Iowa, 267, 98 N. W. 770. This question is immaterial where confessed by demurrer. Id. See Equity, 3 Curr. L. 1235.

Must not exceed amount claimed. Dundon v. Interurban St. R. Co., 87 N. Y. S. 452; Muller v. Barker, 90 N. Y. S. 388; Droege v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 71; Wulfart v. Weinstein, 91 N. Y. S. 359.

Allegations as to execution, transfer, demand and nonpayment of note held sufficient to support a judgment for the amount of the note, interest and attorney's fees. McAnally v. Vickry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 857. Petition praying for judgment in sum of $1,200 for costs and general relief held error to grant judgment for $1,200 and interest. First Nat. Bank v. Cleland [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 337. Where plaintiff alleged that his earning capacity was $5 per day and testified that it was $6 to $10, held, he not amending his petition, that the recovery should have been limited to the amount therein claimed. Impkamp v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 119. Where the amount sued for represents the alleged value of 162 saw logs, on the basis of $4.50 per M. feet of board measure, plaintiff cannot recover for 125 logs on the basis of $6.38 per M, and, failing to amend his petition, he must lose the overplus. W. W. Carre & Co. v. Massie [La.] 37 So. 530.

Interest cannot be recovered as an element of damages sustained unless it is specifically pleaded, or the amount sued for is sufficient to cover the damages allowed as interest and such other sum as may be included in the recovery. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Dawson Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 298. In an action for the wrongful death of a mule, plaintiff having prayed for the value of the mule, $100, and interest from the date of his death, $100 is the limit of recovery. Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. v. McMillan [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 296.

partial relief may be given.[80] The judgment being in excess of the amount claimed, it is merely erroneous[81] and may be modified on review,[82] or the filing of a remittitur is proper,[83] or the grant of the excessive relief being clearly a clerical error, it may be corrected on motion.[84] A judgment being excessive, it will be presumed on collateral attack that the pleadings were amended so as to include the relief granted;[85] but on direct attack the opposite rule prevails.[86] Defendant admitting plaintiff's right to recover, it is immaterial that the ground of the admission is not pleaded as a ground for relief,[87] and facts of which the court will take judicial notice need not be alleged in order to recover thereon.[88] The judgment must also conform to the proof[89] and the verdict,[90] and failing in this regard, one may object thereto, though it is more favorable to him than the findings warrant;[91] but the fact that the verdict in his favor is excessive does not entitle him to so object.[92] Judgment on the merits cannot follow a termination of trial for failure of proof.[93] In Montana, actions being consolidated, a single judgment should be rendered.[94]

Judgment awarding interest from a time prior to that from which interest is prayed is excessive. Carter Brick Co. v. Clement [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 434.

§ 4. Form and interpretation.[95]—As far as practical, the judgment should be in statutory form,[96] and, in the absence of such statutory provisions, the form of an equitable judgment is governed by the established principles of equity jurisprudence.[97] In some states the judgment may be entered in the name of the plaintiff, though he has assigned his interest in the action.[98] It must show against which party it is rendered,[99] and such party must be described so that he can be identified.[1] In the absence of proof that a person has ever received or executed conveyances of land by using the initial letter or letters of his name, the judgment must set forth the first or Christian name of both plaintiff and defendant.[2] It must expressly grant the relief awarded,[3] and hence should not be a mere recital of an account.[4] A memorandum filed by a trial judge, stating the grounds of his decision, is no part of the judgment.[5] A judgment contradictory in its terms is erroneous.[6] The verdict awarding interest, the judge should compute and include it in the judgment.[7] The signature of the judge is essential.[8]

The judgment should be construed[9] with reference to the whole record,[10]

guished from what is known as the "consolidation rule," which was first devised and established by Lord Mansfield. Under that rule, where many cases were pending between the same parties, in which the same issues were involved, one case was tried, and all proceedings in the other cases were stayed until after such trial. It must also be distinguished from the old practice in equity of consolidating equity cases. Under such practice, each case was decided upon its own pleadings and evidence. The consolidation in equity cases under this practice was practically consolidating them for the purpose of trial alone. See Handley v. Sprinkle [Mont.] 77 P. 296.

effect cannot be overcome by evidence of any lower degree.[23] A judgment is not void upon its face unless its invalidity is apparent from an inspection of the judgment roll,[24] and the question of such invalidity is purely one of law.[25] Explanatory parol evidence is sometimes admissible,[26] but it should be consistent with the record.[27] As to the character of the judgment, the record controls over the bill of exceptions.[28]

§ 5. Rendition, entry and docketing; contents of judgment roll.[29]—The prevailing party must see that judgment is entered,[30] the judgment debtor being justified in assuming that an ordinary judgment will be entered.[31] Judgment should be entered for the amount of the verdict plus interest where the judgment debtor delays its rendition.[32] A defendant who has not appeared is not

NOTE. Is interest allowable after verdict and before rendition of judgment? Interest to verdict is always given on an interest-bearing demand, even if the trial is delayed on the court's motion, and there is as good reason for giving interest after verdict, if the court delays judgment. The point has received the attention of the courts and while the decisions are not uniform, the weight of authority is to allow interest in the circumstances stated. Discussions of the question will be found in Griffith v. Railway Co., 44 F. 574, 584, and in Gibson v. Enquirer, 2 Flip. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 5,391. Both of these cases allow interest to the date of judgment. The subject was fully gone into by the court of King's Bench on a case reserved expressly to consider it with a view to altering the prevailing rule. The decision was that interest should be given to the date of judgment. Robinson v. Bland, 2 Burr. 1077. The opinion, which was by Lord Mansfield, says "the practice in the English courts had been to allow interest only until writ brought," namely, to the commencement of the action, a rule which has never prevailed in this country, the uniform practice here being for the jury to add interest to the date of verdict, or, in trials by the court, to the date of entering judgment. In Robinson v. Bland, supra, the rule was deliberately altered because of its inherent injustice and inconsistency with the general doctrine that damages or rights accruing on a cause of action in suit for which a new suit will not lie shall be redressed or satisfied by the judgment in the pending suit. In Johnson v. Railroad, 43 N. H. 410, it was said: "No solid reason, we think, can be given for withholding the interest between the finding of the jury and the rendering of judgment, as it is quite clear, under our law and practice, interest should be allowed at all other times from the commencement of the suit, at least, until judgment and satisfaction of the judgment." See, also, Sproat's Ex'r v. Cutler, Wright, 157; Winthrop v. Curtis, 4 Me. 297. Cases have been decided by the supreme court of the United States, wherein the jurisdiction of that court depended on the validity of the interest added by the trial court to the jury's verdict, as without the added interest the amount of the judgment was for a sum below the minimum jurisdiction of the supreme court. Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 33 Law. Ed. 656; New York El. R. Co. v. Bank, 118 U. S. 608, 30 Law. Ed. 259. In these cases the point was noticed, and the jurisdiction retained. Most of the decisions allowed interest on the verdict because judgment had been postponed by some motion or procedure of the unsuccessful party; but the decision by Lord Mansfield, and some of the other authorities cited, did not rely on such a circumstance, which, indeed, had not occurred. If the party asking interest has not himself caused delay, it seems to be just that he should have interest. Usually his adversary may pay the amount of the verdict if he pleases, and thus prevent interest from running on it. Taking account of the essential entitled to notice of the application for judgment.[33] In computing the time within which a notice for judgment must be returned, the first day is included and the last day excluded.[34] The judgment must generally be rendered in term,[35] though it is held that the court trying the case without a jury may take it under advisement until the next term, judgment being then rendered in open court.[36] In the absence of statutory provisions, it cannot be rendered at chambers.[37] The time within which a default judgment may be entered often depends on the character of the action; as one ex contractu or ex delicto.[38] In some states the appellate court on reversing the judgment of the trial court may enter final judgment,[39] and it directing that the judgment be amended in a designated way, a formal order making the judgment of the appellate court the judgment of the trial court is an indispensable prerequisite to the amendment.[40] A judgment being entered at the same term but subsequent to a less formal order, it supersedes the latter though no reference is made to it.[41] In the absence of a motion for a new trial, judgment may be entered the day after the findings of fact are filed;[42] but in the absence of a memorandum in the judge's docket or other record evidence, it cannot be entered after the adjournment of the term.[43] The prevailing party or his attorney[44] or the judge[45] may have the judgment entered. Nunc pro tunc judgments may be entered to supply matters of evidence and to rectify clerical misprisions, but not to enable the court to correct judicial errors.[46] An order vacating a judgment cannot be considered a nunc pro tunc entry of judgment in the absence of a statement as to what the judgment should have been.[47] Until judgment be pronounced or made known, the clerk cannot enter it, e. g., a decree dismissing a bill after the court has sustained a demurrer there-equity of the matter, it would seem that the adjudications referred to are a sufficient sanction for ruling that interest should be added to the verdict to the date of final judgment. This rule will accord exactly with the ancient practice to render judgment as of an earlier date when the delay in giving the judgment was caused by the court. Mitchell v. Overman, 103 U. S., loc. cit. 64, 26 Law. Ed. 369.—From Oliver v. Love, 104 Mo. App. 73, 78 S. W. 335.

to.[48] Delay in entering judgment is merely an irregularity,[49] and it being the duty of the court to enter it, it will be presumed to have been entered.[50] Appearance of an unauthorized attorney is a sufficient excuse to delay entry.[51] The entry must be complete,[52] but omission from the journal entry of a judgment of the date of its rendition does not render it void.[53] Failure of the clerk to mark the papers composing the judgment roll as filed does not prevent the filing from being effectual.[54] The party offering the papers in evidence must prove that they were properly filed.[55]

Writing judgments on separate sheets and placing them in chronological order in an enclosed box in the form of a book is as effective as though entered in a bound volume.[56] Use of the word "Same" immediately below the name of a judgment debtor on the index constitutes a sufficient index of the judgment next listed against him.[57]

interlocutory,[85] during the term of rendition. After such term, or in some states after the expiration of the time for appeal,[88] it has only such power as rests on the common-law modes of review, or on equitable and statutory grounds.[87] Clerical mistakes,[88] but not omissions,[89] or judicial mistakes,[90] may be corrected nunc pro tunc[91] at a subsequent term, and this power extends to criminal as well as civil cases.[92] The rule is different when applied to probate proceedings the court there having the power to annul the decree at any time prior to the final settlement of the estate.[93]

The taking of an appeal does not lessen the court's power to correct the judgment in a manner not affecting a substantial right,[94] though it terminates the power of the court to vacate the same.[95]

A wholly void judgment may be vacated at any time,[96] and by the court upon its own motion.[97]

A judge pro tempore hearing and determining an action has authority to hear and determine a motion to vacate the decree rendered.[99] A bill of review may be entertained by a court of general equity jurisdiction to vacate and set aside decrees rendered by its predecessor.[1]

The motion being made at the term of rendition, it may be considered at a subsequent term without any order of continuance.[2] Also, a change of venue being granted the court to which the cause is transferred may amend the record after the term of rendition.[3] In all cases in order to amend at a subsequent term notice must be given the adverse party.[4] The motion need not be filed before the notice is served, nor at any specified time preceding the date named in the notice for making the motion,[5] and the record being silent the presumption is that notice was given.[6] Nothing appearing to the contrary it will be presumed that a decree was vacated at term.[7]

Parties applicant.[8]—Creditors,[9] sureties,[10] successors in interest,[11] and generally all persons injured thereby,[12] may petition to have a judgment vacated, modified, or its enforcement enjoined. An injury suffered is, however, an essential element in all cases.[13] A partnership cannot move to vacate a judgment running against the individuals composing the partnership.[14]

A judgment will be corrected or amended on the ground of mistake when clearly shown.[15] The amendment must be based on the records of the court,[16] though explanatory parol evidence is admissible to show actual ruling.[17] The amendment is not allowable if it destroy the conformity between the judgment and the pleading and process.[18]

A judgment will be opened or vacated[19] on the grounds of fraud,[20] surprise,[21]

Woodward v. Carson, 208 Pa. 144, 57 A. 342.

25. Where second copy of summons and complaint was personally served 2 days before default and defendant's family was so sick at the time the answer should have been served that defendant was unable to leave home to consult his attorney, held no error in opening default. Farmers' & Mechanics' Mercantile & Mfg. Co. v. Smith [S. C.] 49 S. E. 226.

26. Petition or service being so defective as not to support a judgment by default.

Matter properly for appeal or error which might have been thereby challenged,[27] waived irregularities,[28] a mere conflict of evidence,[29] inexcusable delay or neglect,[30] or negligence,[31] or unwise procedure[32] on part of one's attorney, are insufficient to warrant the opening or vacating of the judgment. Where, owing to the acquisition of new rights, a decree operates as an injustice on one of the parties, it will frequently be vacated.[33] A consent decree is no more sacred than the ordinary judgment.[34]

The petitioner must show that he had a meritorious defense.[35]

As a condition to opening and vacating a default judgment, the defendant should be required to pay all costs of the action to the date of granting the order.[36]

The opening or vacating of the judgment is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court,[37] and an appellate court will only interfere when a clear abuse of such discretion is shown.[38] Discretion being exercised in setting aside

Equity has jurisdiction to set aside a judgment at law[40] for willful fraud in the very act of procurement,[41] or when through lack of process one has been denied an opportunity to be heard,[42] though mere irregularity or defect in the service of the process is insufficient.[43] The fraud must be clearly shown.[44] As to whether perjury constitutes such fraud there is a conflict.[45] As to whether a bill in equity will lie to set aside a default judgment based on a false return, there is a conflict,[46] and reasoning upon the same. Woodward v. Carson, 208 Pa. 144, 57 A. 342.

NOTE. Will equity set aside a default judgment at law because based on a false return? The answers to this question have been various and the courts are almost equally divided upon the subject. The following courts hold that a court of equity will relieve against a judgment at law upon a showing that a return is false.

Connecticut: Watson v. Watson, 6 Conn. 334, and Jeffery v. Fitch, 46 Conn. 601.

Iowa: Newcomb v. Dewey, 27 Iowa, 381; Ins. Co. v. Waterhouse, 78 Iowa, 674, 43 N. W. 611.

Minnesota: Magin v. Lamb, 43 Minn. 80, 44 N. W. 675, 19 Am. St. Rep. 216.

Mississippi: Quarles v. Hiern, 70 Miss. 891, 14 So. 23. But see Walker v. Gilbert, Freem. Ch. 85, where it was held necessary to also show a meritorious defense.

Oregon: Huntington v. Crouter, 33 Or. 408, 54 P. 208, 72 Am. St. Rep. 726.

Tennessee: Ridgeway v. Bank, 11 Humph. 523; Ingle v. McCurry, 1 Heisk. 26.

Texas: Cooke v. Burnham, 32 Tex. 129; Glass v. Smith, 66 Tex. 548, 2 S. W. 195.

Wisconsin: Pollard v. Wegener, 13 Wis. 569. But in this connection it is proper to note that the case of Johnson v. Coleman, 23 Wis. 452, 99 Am. Dec. 193, proceeded upon the ground that relief in equity can be obtained only for fraud of the plaintiff in the procuring of the judgment. In that case it was alleged and shown that the plaintiff knew that the summons had not been served upon the defendant, yet he took advantage of the false return.

In the following cases it has been held that, in order to obtain relief in equity, it is necessary to show not only that the return was false, but also that the defendant has a meritorious defense to the action.

Alabama: Rice v. Tobias, 89 Ala. 214, 7 So. 765. Though in Stubbs v. Leavitt, 30 Ala. 352, such element was held to be unnecessary.

Arkansas: State v. Hill, 50 Ark. 458, 8 S. W. 401. At first it was held in Arkansas that the relief would be granted upon a simple showing that the return was false. Ryan v. Boyd, 33 Ark. 778. But in State v. Hill, supra, it was held that this was not enough, and that a meritorious defense must also be shown.

California: Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 138, 73 Am. Dec. 639. But in this connection the case of Martin v. Parsons, 49 Cal. 94, should be read, where relief was granted upon the sole ground that the return was false, without showing a meritorious defense.

Colorado: Wilson v. Hawthorne, 14 Colo. 530, 24 P. 548, 20 Am. St. Rep. 290.

Montana: Hauswirth v. Sullivan, 6 Mont. 203, 9 P. 798.

Nebraska: Janes v. Howell, 37 Neb. 320, 55 N. W. 965, 40 Am. St. Rep. 494; Wilson v.

in states where such a bill is held to lie, the courts have refused to grant relief where there is only the oath of one party against the oath and return of the officer.[47] Equity will not exercise this power except to prevent a great injustice,[48] and even then only when the petitioner is without fault[49] or an adequate remedy at law,[50] and alleges[51] and shows[52] that he has a meritorious defense, though it is not neces-

Shipman, 34 Neb. 573, 52 N. W. 576, 33 Am. St. Rep. 660. And see Johnson v. Jones, 2 Neb. 126.

Pennsylvania: Miller v. Gorman, 38 Pa. 309.

From this it appears that in eight states the rule is that equity will grant relief against a judgment at law upon the sole ground that the sheriff's return is false, without any showing of a meritorious defense, while in seven states it is held to be necessary to show a meritorious defense in addition to the falsity of the return. To these must be added Story's Equity Jurisprudence, Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, High on Injunctions, Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) vol. 2, § 495; Black on Judgments (2d Ed.) vol. 1, § 377; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) p. 388.

On the other hand, it is held in the following states that equity will not restrain the enforcement of a judgment, regular on its face, unless it was procured by fraud, and the plaintiff in the action participated in the fraud.

Georgia: Stites v. Knapp, Ga. Dec. pt. 11, p. 36.

Illinois: *Hunter v. Stoneburner, 92 Ill. 75.

Indiana: *Cully v. Shirk, 131 Ind. 76, 30 N. E. 882, 31 Am. St. Rep. 414.

Kansas: *Goddard v. Harbour, 56 Kan. 744, 44 Pac. 1055, 54 Am. St. Rep. 608. In this case the court said: "Counsel for defendants in error cite Bond v. Wilson, 8 Kan. 228, 12 Am. Rep. 466; Starkweather v. Morgan, 15 Kan. 274; Chambers v. Bridge Mfg. Co., 16 Kan. 270; McNeill v. Edie, 24 Kan. 108; and Jones v. Marshall [Kan. App.] 43 P. 840—as supporting the proposition that a sheriff's return may be disputed even in regard to personal service. In the cases heretofore decided by this court the right to controvert the sheriff's return has been expressly limited to matters not coming within his personal knowledge, and the opinions in all cases, including, also, Mastin v. Gray, 19 Kan. 458, 27 Am. Rep. 149, recognize this distinction."

Kentucky: *Taylor v. Lewis, 2 J. J. Marsh 400, 19 Am. Dec. 135; *Thomas v. Ireland, 88 Ky. 581, 11 S. W. 653, 21 Am. St. Rep. 356. This rule has now been changed by statute, see Bramlett v. McVey, 91 Ky. 151, 15 S. W. 49.

Maryland: *Gardiner v. Jenkins, 14 Md. 58.

Missouri: McClanahan v. West, 100 Mo. 309, 13 S. W. 674; Smoot v. Judd, 83 S. W. 481 overruling Smoot v. Judd, 161 Mo. 673, 61 S. W. 854, 84 Am. St. Rep. 738.

New Hampshire: Bolles v. Bowen, 45 N. H. 124.

Virginia: *Preston v. Kindrick, 94 Va. 760, 27 S. E. 588, 64 Am. St. Rep. 777.

West Virginia: *Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167.

In addition to the decisions of these states the decisions of the supreme court of the United States (Walker v. Robbins, 14 How. [U. S.] 584, 14 Law. Ed. 552; Knox Co. v. Harshman, 133 U. S. 152, 33 Law. Ed. 586) and the English cases (see Baker v. Morgan, 2 Dow. 526; also 19 Vin. Abr. 196, 199, 201) must be added.

The sum of the whole matter is this: That in those states that hold that equity will interfere upon a showing that the return is false, or that it is false and that the defendant therein had a meritorious defense, the ruling is based upon the ground that the return of the sheriff is only prima facie evidence, and hence may be attacked by motion before judgment in the original case, or in equity after judgment. Whereas in those states wherein relief in equity is granted only where fraud in the very concoction of the judgment is shown, the English rule that the return of the sheriff is conclusive, except when attacked for fraud or in a direct suit against the sheriff, both before judgment in the original case and after judgment in equity, is followed.—From the opinion of Marshall, J., in Smoot v. Judd [Mo.] 83 S. W. 481.

sary to prove that this defense is not barred by limitations.[53] A judgment will not be set aside for matters which might have been urged on the trial of the action.[54] In order to have the judgment set aside on the ground that petitioner was fraudulently deprived of his right to be heard on appeal, it must appear that there was a genuine controversy in the law action,[55] determined adversely to the petitioner without fault on his part;[56] but the facts set out showing the nature of the rulings complained of it is not necessary to allege error,[57] although it should allege that a new trial has been duly filed and overruled, though failing in this the defect may be supplied by evidence.[58] In the absence of some special equitable grounds,[59] a suit in equity to set aside the judgment will not lie after a motion to vacate it has been overruled,[60] unless such motion to vacate was defeated by fraud,[61] in which case the right is not lost by failure to appeal,[62] though it may be defeated by laches.[63] Failure of proof[64] that petitioner has failed to receive adequate compensation at law,[65] or the neglect or carelessness of one's attorney,[66] are not grounds for setting aside the judgment. The purpose of the Louisiana action for nullity is to furnish relief against fraud which makes no appearance in the record and for which an appeal will afford no remedy.[67]

70. May enjoin the collection of a judgment entered by virtue of a warrant of at-

ment will be enjoined in any case where an action for nullity of the judgment will lie,[71] or where the judgment debtor has an equitable defense which was not available at law,[72] or where the law court failed to obtain jurisdiction over the defendant,[73] and in the latter case the petitioner need not allege merits.[74] In all cases danger of damage must be shown.[75] The suit must be against the owner of the judgment.[76] The defendant having an adequate remedy at law, he will not be given affirmative relief on a cross bill.[77]

Time for application.[78]—The judgment not being void upon its face,[79] all of the above remedies must be promptly pursued,[80] and within the statutory time, if one be fixed,[81] and in construing this time, a motion to set aside is sometimes, though not always, considered a motion for a new trial.[82] Limitations against ac-

80. Opening and vacating: Petitioner being sui juris at time of death of testator and having knowledge thereof, held six years' delay would bar opening probate decree. In re Meyers' Estate [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 259. Where plaintiff knew nothing of suit, though service was made on an adult member of her family, until 11 years after judgment was entered by default, held no laches, and the fact that her husband without her knowledge or consent authorized an appearance to be entered in her behalf makes no difference. Aldrich v. Crump, 128 F. 984. Entering into arrangement for the postponement of execution, held could not four months after entry of decree and after issuance of execution and advertisement for sale first move to vacate the decree for technical insufficiency. Coast Land Co. v. Oregon Pac. Colonization Co., 44 Or. 483, 75 P. 884. See 2 Curr. L. 587, n. 12, 13.

Equitable suits to set aside: Knowledge of suit and delay of two and one-half years after divorce decree, the rights of third parties intervening, held such laches as to bar right. Evans v. Woodsworth [Ill.] 72 N. E. 1082. Allegation that applicant never lived in city to which summons was directed, and had no notice of judgment until over a year after its rendition, held sufficient to show no laches. Parsons v. Weis [Cal.] 77 P. 1007.

81. California: Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, a court cannot vacate a judgment on motion a year after rendition. People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 673, 77 P. 651.

Indiana: A suit to set aside a judgment for lack of jurisdiction is not barred by the six-year statute of limitations, though fraud is an incidental cause of action. Underwood v. Deckard [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 383.

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1894, §§ 5267, 5842 apply to actions to determine adverse claims to realty in which jurisdiction was obtained by publication over parties described as other persons or parties unknown. Hoyt v. Lightbody [Minn.] 101 N. W. 304.

Nebraska: Acts 1901, p. 475, c. 82, amending § 592 of the Code of Civ. Proc. limiting the time for commencing proceedings to vacate or modify judgments, is valid and not in conflict with § 11, art. 3 of the constitution. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sporer [Neb.] 100 N. W. 813.

South Dakota: Ten years delay after a mortgagor's default held to bar relief under Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 112, subd. 5, providing for opening of cause within one year after rendition of judgment on good cause being shown. Keenan v. Daniells [S. D.] 99 N. W. 853.

82. That it is such a motion: Must be filed within two days after the rendition of judgment, or a sufficient excuse must be shown for the delay. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Kelly [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 855.

That it is not: Need not be filed within four days after the rendition of judgment. Harkness v. Jarvis [Mo.] 81 S. W. 446.

tions to annul for fraud generally date from the discovery of the fraud,[83] and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show when the discovery was made.[84] A mere general statement that it was made within the prescribed period is insufficient.[85] An order purporting to vacate the decree, being made after the expiration of such time, is void,[86] the only remedy which the aggrieved party has being a new suit in equity.[87] Amendments may in some cases be made in the appellate court.[88] A default judgment cannot be opened at any subsequent term at which the case is called for trial.[89]

Modes and manner of procedure.[90]—Motion lies to set aside a judgment rendered without jurisdiction,[91] and in some states is the exclusive remedy where mistake, surprise or excusable neglect are the grounds upon which relief is prayed.[92] In Georgia a motion to set aside must be predicated upon some defect apparent upon the face of the record.[93] Where it is sought to vacate a judgment after term on the ground of fraud, the remedy is by petition or action or suit rather than by motion,[94] the suit being either a bill of review or a bill to impeach for fraud;[95] but it will only lie in the case of an emergency which will prevent the questions from being effectively determined on appeal.[96] A bill of review will ordinarily not lie against a consent decree.[97]

A judgment may be attacked for fraud by answer and cross complaint.[98]

The petition or bill[99] should allege the former judgment and wherein it is impeachable;[1] if fraud, it must be directly alleged.[2]

The facts constituting the proposed defense must be distinctly averred.[3] A bill of review must state the error with particularity.[4]

A motion to vacate[5] should be accompanied by an affidavit of merits,[6] except where the judgment is alleged to have been rendered without jurisdiction;[7] good practice also requires a verified answer, though this latter is not indispensable.[8] The statements in the affidavit are admitted unless denied by counter-affidavit.[9] The affidavits must negative contingencies[10] and must allege facts,[11] and their existence must be sworn to if they are within the personal knowledge of the affiant.[12] If they are not within his personal knowledge, the name and residence of the witness by whom he expects to prove them must be stated, and, if practicable, the affidavit of the witness, setting out the very facts he will testify to, must accompany the motion.[13] It must also reasonably appear that proof of such facts will be made upon another trial, and that they reasonably constitute a defense to every theory of the case made by plaintiff's pleadings upon which the judgment could have been rendered.[14] Amendments to the motion are allowed when necessary to further justice.[15] An objection which goes to the merits[16] affords no ground for the refusal of the court to consider and act upon the motion to vacate.[17] A refusal to entertain the motion to vacate being based solely on want of jurisdiction as a matter of law, mandamus may issue;[18] but this right may be lost by laches.[19]

record affording satisfactory evidence of the mistake it may be corrected without extraneous proof.[22] The motion to vacate being based upon the record, all papers not a part thereof are presumed to have been sufficient.[23]

Issues to jury.—On a rule to vacate if there is any matter of substantial doubt, the court should send it to the jury.[24]

Removal of application is proper when not denied on the merits and not involving the same points decided in the former dismissal.[25] The order denying the motion may sometimes contain permission to renew the application.[26]

Extent and effect of relief.[27]—The court may reopen the whole matter,[28] and will generally grant relief co-extensive with the necessities of the situation.[29] The judgment should be opened rather than vacated, though in guardianship proceedings this not reversible error.[30] The judgment being opened without conditions, the plaintiff is put to the proof of his cause of action precisely as if no judgment had been entered.[31] The correction of a clerical mistake does not make a new judgment.[32] A decree being set aside, it is void.[33] The suit to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment, being in effect one for a new trial, a court of equity may finally dispose of the merits of the cause, or it can enjoin the enforcement until defendant consents to a new trial in the law action,[34] but it cannot order such new trial.[35] A void order does not affect the proceedings.[36]

Appeal or review.—Judgments vacating[37] another judgment are generally valid on face. Briseno v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 579. Must affirmatively show defective service. Jones v. Bibb Brick Co., 120 Ga. 321, 48 S. E. 25. 37. Held appealable where it determined all questions which could be tried upon a retrial, although no formal order of the dis-held to be appealable, the contrary rule applying in some cases where the court refuses relief.[38] A party failing to appeal from a decree modifying the judgment, cannot prosecute error from an adverse ruling on a motion to vacate which he has previously made.[39] On appeal from the dismissal of a petition to set aside a judgment, the record of the suit in which the judgment sought to be opened was rendered must be copied in the transcript.[40]

§ 8. Operation and effect in general.[41]—The doctrines of estoppel by judgment and the merger and bar of causes in judgment have been discussed in a former topic.[42] A judgment is a matter of public record and, as to all matters appearing on the face thereof,[43] binds all parties dealing with the property affected thereby.[44]

§ 9. Collateral attack. What is collateral.[45]—A suit to enjoin enforcement,[46] a motion to set aside a default for want of jurisdiction,[47] a motion for a writ of restitution and to quash a writ of assistance,[48] and an attack that the judgment is void either in an action on the judgment[49] or in an action involving the judgment,[50] are all held to be collateral attacks thereon. An attack on a judgment on the ground that it was procured by fraud[51] or an application to have the judgment set aside[52] is a direct attack thereon. In order to be a direct attack, the plaintiff in the first suit must be a party to the subsequent proceeding.[53] That the judge of the court rendering the judgment is disqualified from determining a suit to set it aside renders the latter none the less a direct attack because transferred to another court.[54] Suits in equity to set aside judgments at law while not collateral are always indirect.[55] Attacks not involving the validity of the judgment cannot be called collateral.[56]

Grounds.[57]—The right to collaterally attack a judgment is one of general law, and state and federal decisions are not binding as to each other.[58] It may be made by strangers to the judgment,[59] and in this connection the question of privity is important.[60] One contesting the jurisdiction of the court[61] or submitting thereto[62] cannot collaterally attack the judgment rendered for want of jurisdiction. The judgment may be collaterally attacked for want of jurisdiction[63] affirmatively[64] appearing on the face of the record.[65] Hence, in the absence of a special statutory procedure,[66] all jurisdictional facts as to which the record is silent will be presumed,[67] as will the fact that the proper method for the service of process

A decree against a receiver of another court cannot be collaterally attacked because the record fails to affirmatively show that permission to sue was obtained. Ridge v. Manker [C. C. A.] 132 F. 599. Order of probate court appointing a guardian based on a petition which did not state any statutory ground. Pub. St. 1882, tit. 23, c. 181, § 5 construed. Providence County Sav. Bank v. Hughes [R. I.] 58 A. 254. In order to sustain a collateral attack on a judgment of foreclosure against the heirs of a deceased mortgagor, it must appear from the record that other debts of the estate existed, rendering administration necessary. Floyd v. Watkins [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 612. In such case, the plaintiffs introducing a pleading by the mortgagee alleging probate proceeding and failure of administrator to qualify, held insufficient to rebut presumption of validity of judgment, since the pleading may have been amended to show that there were no debts and hence administration was unnecessary. Id. Evidence dehors the record cannot be looked to. People v. Norris [Cal.] 77 P. 998; Wilkins v. McCorkle [Tenn.] 80 S. W. 834. If the bill or other pleading make a case, and the court in its judgment or decree assume the case to have been established, it is sufficient to defeat the attack. Id. A final judgment rendered after the grant of a motion for a new trial cannot be collaterally attacked for failure of the record to show a compliance with Code, § 3796, requiring defendant who moves for a new trial to give security for costs. English v. Otis [Iowa] 101 N. W. 293. Service by leaving a copy at place of abode held conclusive against affidavit of illegality against default judgment on the ground that there was no personal service. Brown v. Webb [Ga.] 48 S. E. 917. That judgment against unknown heirs did not show on its face that the proper affidavit for citation by publication was made, that it was a proceeding in the district court of any county, in what paper, if any, publication was made, nor that an attorney had been appointed to represent unknown heirs, nor that land certificates were in the possession of a party to the suit, held insufficient to support a collateral attack. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. De Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 736. See 2 Curr. L. 596, n. 71-75.

68. This presumption does not depend upon the way in which the summons was required to be served. McHatton v. Rhodes, 143 Cal. 275, 76 P. 1036. Judgment liens before levy are general and indefinite, vesting no estate,[91] and in some states are given priority in the order in which executions are issued,[92] and hence are inferior to specific liens acquired before that time.[93] In others, as against the judgment debtor, the judgment is a lien on all realty then owned or subsequently acquired from the date of its rendition;[94] but as against a bona fide purchaser for value, it is a lien only from the date on which it is docketed.[95] The lien of a recorded judgment extends only to such property within the county where recorded as is subject to levy and sale under execution.[96] A decree directing a party to pay a specific fund into court for distribution is not a lien upon the real estate of such party unless it is provided by the decree that the claimants recover of the party holding the fund, and that in default of payment execution may issue.[97] In Ohio a judgment creditor failing to issue and levy execution within one year from rendition, his lien is lost as against the lien of a subsequent judgment.[98] Opening a default judgment on condition that it shall stand as security restrains the issuance of execution within the meaning of the Illinois statutes.[99] In Tennessee the judgment debtor paying off a mortgage on his property, the title reinvests in him and immediately passes under the judgment lien, though the judgment be then over a year old.[1] In Alabama the certificate of judgment must state the name of the owner of the judgment.[2] In Oregon, in order to become a lien on realty, the judgment lien docket must state the time when the judgment was docketed.[3]

The judgment lien is superior to rights of third parties subsequently acquired,[4] and takes precedence over the lien of an attorney for services in an un-ment for such improvement. Town of Cicero v. People, 105 Ill. App. 406.

4. Lien on debtor's interest in property conveyed by security deed is superior to rights of subsequent transferee of bond to reconvey. O'Connor v. Georgia R. Bank [Ga.] 48 S. E. 716. Decree that one is the equitable owner of land is binding on purchaser under an execution against the holder of the legal title without regard to whether the decree contained a provision that it should operate as a conveyance as authorized by Code, § 426, or whether it was recorded as directed. Skinner v. Terry, 134 N. C. 305, 46 S. E. 517.

successful attempt to defeat the lien,[5] but is inferior to the rights of prior bona fide purchasers,[6] and prior equitable liens of which the judgment creditor has notice.[7] The general lien of a judgment is inferior to a prior unrecorded deed,[8] but the contrary is true after the judgment has become a specific lien on the property.[9] A judgment obtained against a husband for a community debt is a lien on community property awarded the wife in a subsequent suit for a divorce.[10] Only those dealing with property on which the judgment is a lien are deemed to have constructive notice of the judgment.[11]

The lien is destroyed by the satisfaction or dormancy of the judgment,[12] or by bankruptcy proceedings instituted against the judgment debtor within four months of the acquiring of the lien,[13] but not by a sale by the debtor or his assignee,[14] nor by a foreclosure decree under which there is no sale.[15]

§ 11. Suspension, dormancy and revival.[16]—A court has power in its discretion to temporarily suspend the operation of its judgments,[17] and such suspension is not an amendment of the judgment, but only a regulation of the manner in which it should be enforced.[18]

For the purposes of dormancy, judgments may be resolved into their component parts.[19] Generally the issuance of execution[20] or beginning a creditors' action[21] is sufficient to prevent the judgment from becoming dormant. In some states the judgment debtor's death,[22] or if a corporation, its dissolution,[23] renders the judgment dormant. In Illinois, a judgment debtor dying, execution may issue and a sale be made without reviving the judgment against his heirs.[24]

and it is immaterial whether the dormancy be caused by the death of the judgment debtor or by want of an execution.[26] The judgment can only be revived by a judicial order,[27] but the proceedings to revive may be in a division of the court other than the one by which the judgment was rendered.[28] A proceeding to revive cannot be brought in the name of a deceased judgment creditor,[29] nor at common law in the name of an assignee of the judgment,[30] and in construing statutes on this subject, the proceeding to revive is not an action.[31] The judgment may be revived on motion,[32] and, when necessary in an equity case, may be had on cross petition.[33] A decree ordering the sale of land and application of proceeds to existing judgment revives such judgment.[34] Statutes generally prescribe the time within which the proceeding to revive must be instituted[35] and the method of such procedure.[36] The proper form of the judgment in revivor is to award execution for the amount of the original judgment, with interest from its rendition and costs.[37] A judgment of revivor is an adjudication between the parties and their privies that the judgment was dormant and not barred by limitations at the time the proceeding was instituted, and they will not be allowed to subsequently deny such facts.[38] The right to prosecute revivor proceedings and the right to maintain an action upon a dormant judgment are cumulative remedies.[39]

In order to validate a judgment, the rights must be acquired in the same capacity as the judgment.[40] Judgment taken against husband alone cannot be revived against husband and wife.[41]

25. Manley v. Mayer [Kan.] 75 P. 550. Gives it original force as a lien on the judgment debtor's property. Kinkade v. Gibson, 209 Ill. 246, 70 N. E. 683. In Kansas the revival of a judgment which has not become dormant under Gen. St. 1901, § 4895, is not a condition precedent to an action thereon against a deceased judgment debtor's estate [Gen. St. 1901, §§ 4884, 4885, 4889]. First Nat. Bank v. Hazie [R. I.] 56 A. 1032. It seems that the revivor serves only to preserve the judgment lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor. Id.

§ 12. Assignments.[42]—A judgment may be assigned[43] by an agent under oral authority,[44] and the certificate of judgment need not be transferred in order to transfer the judgment.[45] So far as the judgment debtor is concerned, the assignee is the real party in interest.[46] He takes all of the assignor's title, regardless of whether any consideration passes or not,[47] and the assignor has nothing which he can subsequently assign, unless there be left in him some equitable interest by reason of a trust existing in his favor;[48] hence the assignee need not record his assignment in order to be protected.[49] In an action by an assignee, the complaint alleging the assignment, it is not necessary to allege that the plaintiff was the owner at the time the action was commenced.[50]

§ 13. Payment, discharge and satisfaction; interest.[51]—A judgment is presumed not to have been paid,[52] though lapse of time may create a contrary presumption, which presumption is rebutted by a decree ordering the sale of land and the application of the proceeds to the judgment.[53]

In some states judgments for torts are allowed priority of payment.[54] Judgments against a corporation for injuries to third persons are not to be classed

NOTE. Rule as to presumption of payment: As a general rule, the unexplained lapse of twenty years from the time that a judgment is rendered raises a legal presumption that it has been paid. Campbell v. Carey, 5 Harr. [Del.] 427; Burton v. Cannon, 5 Harr. [Del.] 13; Clark v. Clement, 33 N. H. 563, 66 Am. Dec. 745; Thomas v. Hunnicutt, 54 Ga. 337; Willingham v. Long, 47 Ga. 540; Bird v. Inslee, 23 N. J. Eq. 363; Thayer v. Mowry, 36 Me. 287; Chapman v. Loomis, 36 Conn. 459. The presumption thus arising is, however, always rebuttable. Knight v. McComber, 55 Me. 132; Biddle v. Girard Nat. Bank, 109 Pa. 349; Burt v. Casey, 10 Ga. 178; Scott v. Isaacs, 85 Va. 712; and evidence of payments on the judgment within that time, or admissions that it is due, will rebut the presumption. Burton v. Cannon, 5 Harr. [Del.] 13; Bissell v. Jandon, 16 Ohio St. 498, 91 Am. Dec. 95. Any lapse of time less than twenty years will not generally, per se, raise the presumption of payment. Murphy v. Philadelphia Trust Co., 103 Pa. 380; Daly v. Erricsson, 45 N. Y. 786. It is, however, well settled that a shorter period when aided by circumstances which contribute to strengthen the presumption may furnish sufficient grounds to justify the jury in inferring the fact of payment. Brigg's Appeal, 93 Pa. 485; Moore v. Smith, 81 Pa. 183; West v. Brison, 99 Mo. 684. The presumption is a general one and applies as well between the parties to the judgment as between the plaintiff and subsequent creditors. In the absence of countervailing proof, it is a good defense to a scire facias to revive a judgment. Van Loon v. Smith, 103 Pa. 283.—From note to Alston v. Hawkins, 18 Am. St. Rep. 874, 883.

Finding of payment to assignee held not against the weight of the evidence. Cobb v. Doggett, 142 Cal. 142, 75 P. 785.

54. Code N. C. § 1255, giving judgments for torts priority, does not apply to a judgment against a lessee of a railroad so as to render it a lien on the property superior to a mortgage given by the lessor prior to the lease (Hampton v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 127 F. 662), nor has it priority of payment from earnings of the road while in the hands of a receiver appointed in a foreclosure suit, all rights and interests of the lessee being extinguished by such appointment and the subsequent sale (Id.).

as operating expenses,[55] nor are they entitled to priority of payment over the mortgage debts of the corporation from the earnings of a receivership initiated subsequent to the date of the injuries.[56]

A court will protect one interested in a judgment to be obtained and who has control of same by counsel against any unjust discharge by the plaintiff of record.[57]

The judgment debtor may take advantage of a satisfaction by a guarantor,[58] and a judgment on a note deposited as collateral is satisfied by a satisfaction of the principal judgment.[59] An unperfected bid at the execution sale is not a satisfaction of the judgment.[60] Release of the principal on the obligation on which the judgment is rendered does not release his surety, both being ostensibly principals and the creditor having no notice of the actual relationship existing between them.[61] A judgment debtor furnishing money to a third person to buy up the judgment, and he buying it at less than its face value, the creditor not knowing the facts, it only amounts to a part payment of the judgment.[62] Satisfaction of judgment extinguishes it.[63] One is not entitled to have satisfaction entered until he pays his costs.[64] A court of law is powerless to cause the satisfaction of a judgment to be entered, after the term at which it was rendered, for matters which existed at the time the judgment was rendered, and which might have been pleaded and proven in bar of the action.[65] In Alabama an assignee is subject to the statutory penalty for failure to credit partial payments on the record.[66] Where, after transfer, suit may be continued in the name of the original plaintiff, the assignee may assign the receipt and satisfaction in the name of such plaintiff.[67]

Where payment has been coerced on a judgment which is afterwards reversed, the party paying has an absolute right to restitution,[68] with interest from the time that the reversal occurred,[69] and the assignee of the judgment creditor is in no better position than the latter would have been.[70] This right may be enforced by an independent action,[71] and the judgment debtor is not required to submit to seizure or distress of his property in order to preserve this right.[72] Receiving the money from an attorney ratifies his conduct.[73]

Courts have the power,[74] in their discretion[75] to set off mutual judgments between the parties or their privies. The assignment of a demand before judgment ordinarily prevents the accruing of the right as against the assignor,[76] though the rule has been changed by statutes in some states.[77] One not having assigned his judgment[78] may plead it as a counterclaim,[79] the remedy for denial of such right being in equity.[80]

Judgments bear simple[81] interest[82] from the date of final rendition.[83]

§ 14. Executions, other final process and creditors' suits are treated elsewhere.[84] Besides these remedies the court may grant equitable relief.[85]

§ 15. Actions on judgment; merger.[86]—An action or proceeding on the judgment[87] is the only way of enforcing property rights which have been merged in the judgment.[88] An action at law lies upon a decree in equity from another state for the payment of money.[89] The right to sue on a judgment and have execution[90] and the right of revivor[91] are cumulative. A judgment is not final so as to support an action thereon while subject to review.[92] Statutes limit the time to sue.[93]

JUDICIAL SALES.

§ 1. Occasion For and Nature of Judicial Sales (321).
§ 2. The Order, Writ or Decree (321).
§ 3. Levy, Seizure or the Like (321).
§ 4. Notice and Advertisement of Sale (321).
§ 5. Sale and Conduct of It (321).
§ 6. Confirmation and Setting Aside Sales (321).
§ 7. Completion of Sale; Deeds (323).
§ 8. Title and Rights Under Sales and Under Deed (323).
A. Defects and Collateral Attack (323).
B. As Against Outstanding Claims (324).
C. Rights Under Sale and in Proceeds (324).

§ 1. Occasion for and nature of judicial sales.[95]—The judicial sales here discussed do not embrace those pursuant to foreclosure decrees[96] or execution,[97] or in proceedings to sell a decedent's lands[98] and the like.[99] A sale is improper if not prayed and not necessary.[1]

§ 2. The order, writ or decree.[2]

§ 3. Levy, seizure or the like[3] is essential before sale can take effect.[4]

§ 4. Notice and advertisement of sale[5] in a socialist newspaper otherwise legal is valid.[6]

§ 5. Sale and conduct of it.[7]—The qualified officers of a new county erected after order of sale may execute the order.[8] The court may enjoin any interference by slandering title and the like.[9]

The sale must be fair and on full competition.[10] If all parties in interest join, an agreement to control bidding is valid.[11] A court rule requiring a "good-faith" deposit of the purchaser is reasonable.[12]

No more than statutory fees can be allowed.[13]

§ 6. Confirmation and setting aside sales.[14]—A creditor or the receiver as well as a purchaser may move for confirmation.[15] The better practice is to serve notice that at a time and place certain, decree nisi will be asked.[16] Proof of service should be made with the motion.[17] If a party die after the sale, the action not the judgment should be revived for confirmation.[18] Objections to defeat confirmation should be made to the report[19] or at the hearing of the motion to set aside[20] and not on appeal. The decree should be supported either by a certificate of evidence or by recitals of facts found.[21]

18. Judgment had been executed. Applying Code, § 507, not section 407, subsec. 3. Montz v. Schwabacher [Ky.] 83 S. W. 569.

19, 20. Error in amount. Wigginton v. Nehan, 25 Ky. L. R. 617, 76 S. W. 196.

21. Day v. Davis [Ill.] 72 N. E. 682.

To set aside a sale is discretionary,[22] and a bond may be exacted as a condition of so doing.[23] A mere offer of an increased price does not suffice in Maryland or the District of Columbia.[24] It may be done where a sale was unnecessarily en masse, and where there was a gross inadequacy of price.[25] Inadequacy must be so great that to confirm the sale would be great injustice.[26] The rights of lienors must be considered where the sale is one free of their liens which attach instead to the purchase money.[27]

Application should be prompt.[28] The champertous nature of applicant's employment of his attorney is no defense,[29] nor are remaindermen whose land was sold on proceedings against the particular tenant concluded.[30]

There must be a showing of facts to assail a sale en masse[31] or to contradict a report showing due advertisement[32] or to impeach an appraisal.[33] Applicants for a resale on the ground of inadequacy should show the probability of an increased price.[34]

The motion should be based on facts and not mere conclusions of law.[35] A cross bill against such proceedings to remove a cloud on title created by applicants may be stayed until after decree on the original bill.[36]

The annulment of a sale is conclusive on the parties and their privies.[37]

If a sale is reversed or set aside, there should ordinarily be restitution,[38] but no reconveyance is necessary.[39] There should be an accounting of mesne profits.[40] The buyer is entitled to refund of the price paid with interest and the enhancement of value due to permanent improvements made in good faith,[41] and should be charged the fair rental value.[42] Failure to supersede judgment pending appeal from order of confirmation does not show bad faith.[43] He is not chargeable with costs of the main action paid out of the purchase money.[44]

Costs may be adjusted as in other equitable cases.[45]

Proceedings on resale need not be on notice to a purchaser at first sale who has appeared to contest enforcement of the first sale and to except to the second.[46]

Service of a rule to complete the first purchase[47] and the taking of appeal from the second confirmation[48] also bring him in court for all purposes of sale. A second appraisement on a resale for purchaser's default is not required.[49] It may be proper for the purchaser at a former invalid sale to buy and be credited according to his equity.[50] A refusal to permit a defaulting purchaser to bid at resale is harmless to him unless he intended to bid and was prevented.[51] A defaulting first purchaser cannot redeem from a second sale[52] and has no interest to entitle him to resist confirmation of a resale because of inadequacy of the bid.[53] A motion by a defaulting purchaser to set aside a resale must show an equity in his favor for such relief and diligence in asserting it.[54]

§ 7. Completion of sale; deeds.[55]—In judicial sales, execution and delivery of instruments of conveyance, especially if so ordered, is essential to transmutation of title.[56] If it be not done the sale is void;[57] but the failure to convey formally is harmless where title of all parties was adjudicated in a later suit to which objector was party.[58] The deed should identify and not merely include in its description the land sold.[59] A probate court with incidental equitable powers may order a guardian to execute a deed where a former one was defective.[60]

A first bidder makes no contract with the court[61] on which he can be held for the difference where his bid was ignored and another confirmed.[62] He need not take an unmerchantable title.[63] The burden is on him seeking to be relieved, to prove nonmerchantability.[64] He can be compelled to take a deed as of the day of sale and not later.[65] An order to take title on a certain day means to complete sale on that day.[66]

§ 8. Title and rights under sales and under deed. A. Defects and collateral attack.[67]—A matter merged in judgment[68] or an irregularity will not affect the validity of a judicial sale,[69] and the presumption favors regularity.[70] A prescriptive statute against formal irregularities does not cover those which are also substantial.[71] A sale under a void decree is void,[72] and the purchaser's payment of taxes inures to the owner;[73] but it may be color of title.[74]

(§ 8) B. As against outstanding claims.[75]—The rule of caveat emptor applies to all judicial sales,[76] but a greater estate than defendant has and than is in court cannot be sold.[77] No right can antedate the attaching of the lien.[78] When a sale is made in bankruptcy free of liens, statutory liens for taxes are cut off,[79] and as to those the lien whereof accrued subsequently, the proceeds are not liable.[80]

(§ 8) C. Rights under sale and in proceeds.[81]—A formal purchase may be enforced as a mortgage to the purchaser if it be such in fact[82] or as a trust.[83] If the buyer became such under a fair agreement to reconvey and at a price below value, he may be compelled to perform.[84]

In Kentucky, redemption may be made if the price is less than two-thirds the appraisal.[85] When the terms of redemption are in the statute, they must be fully met.[86]

Liability for proceeds.—The bond required of special commissioners in some cases must be construed if possible so as to serve the objects of the statute.[87]

law or to award the remedies provided by law on a state of facts proven or admitted, referred to the tribunal for decision, and authorized by law to be the subject of investigation or action by that tribunal in favor of or against persons who present themselves or who are brought before the court in some manner sanctioned by law as proper and sufficient.[89] This title deals with the powers of courts to entertain causes of particular kinds brought before them in particular manners on particular grounds, but does not include a discussion of their powers to grant particular kinds of relief or the relief peculiar to certain courts.[90]

Courts of common-law jurisdiction within the meaning of the naturalization act are those which have the power to punish offenses, to enforce rights, or to redress wrongs recognized by the common law, or courts which are governed by the principles, rules and usages of the common law in the determination of some of the causes of which they have jurisdiction, the term being used to distinguish courts which have some common-law jurisdiction from those which have no jurisdiction save in equity, in admiralty, or in matters not involving offenses or rights under the common law.[91]

§ 2. Elements and constituents in general.[92]—Jurisdiction does not depend upon the character of the decision or judgment, for when suit is brought in a court of competent jurisdiction by a competent party by legal process, jurisdiction exists and no subsequent error of law will affect it.[93]

The want of necessary parties does not deprive the court of jurisdiction,[94] and where a court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the form of application to invoke the same is not material.[95]

Primarily, every court has the power, and it is its duty, to decide as to its

89. Ingram v. Fuson [Ky.] 82 S. W. 606. "Jurisdiction" as used in the law is the right to hear and determine a matter and carries with it the idea of exercising judicial or quasi judicial functions. Stein v. Morrison [Idaho] 75 P. 246. Jurisdiction, unqualified, is the sovereign authority to make, decide on, and execute laws; in its popular sense it is authority to apply the law to the acts of men. Wedding v. Meyler, 192 U. S. 573, 48 Law. Ed. 570. Jurisdiction over the subject-matter of an action means the power to determine legal controversies of the same class or sort. Hadley v. Bernero, 103 Mo. App. 549, 78 S. W. 64. Within the broad meaning of the term a court is without jurisdiction of the subject-matter, either where it is without judicial power as to such subject-matter, or where, having such power, it ought not to be exercised, by settled principles at all or in the given case. 93. See 2 Curr. L. 604, n. 14. Where the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, and legal authority to make the order, the party cannot refuse to obey it, however improvidently made. Swedish-American Tel. Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 208 Ill. 562, 70 N. E. 768. Where the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the parties, its judgment is not absolutely void, though error is committed in holding the petition on which judgment is based sufficient on demurrer. Logan County v. Carnahan, 66 Neb. 685, 95 N. W. 812. Where the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter, it has the power to decide whether the petition does or does not state a cause of action, and the mere failure to state a cause of action or the defective statement of a good cause of action in no way affects the jurisdiction of the court. Schubach v. McDonald, 179 Mo. 163, 78 S. W. 1020. Whenever there is such a violation of established practice or principles in regard to the exercise of judicial authority as to seriously interfere with the efficiency of judicial instrumentalities to administer justice, the error is jurisdictional. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99. N. W. 909. The trial of a case against a minor whose guardian has not filed a general denial as required by statute is not a jurisdictional defect. Swartwood v. Sage, 68 Kan. 817, 75 P. 508. Irregularity in transferring a case from one division to another of the same court cannot be fatal to the jurisdiction. Stripling v. Maguire [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 164.

own jurisdiction, including the existence of facts which must exist as a foundation for its jurisdiction,[96] and where a tribunal is clothed with jurisdiction of the class of cases to which the controversy belongs, and its right to adjudicate the controversy depends on certain facts which it must ascertain, and it makes an express finding on them, the parties are precluded from reopening it afterward except on appeal or writ of error.[97] Not because jurisdiction of the subject-matter can be waived or conferred by consent or estoppel, as it cannot,[98] but because it is conferred by law,[99] and the facts on which it may be exercised have been found to exist in the particular controversy.[1] If the decision that they exist is erroneous, the remedy is the same as when other erroneous decisions occur, review by an appellate court to which the cause may be carried and the decision reversed.[2]

Process and service, personal,[3] by publication,[4] or otherwise, are necessary,[5] though process and service may be waived, whence an appearance in person or by

96. The supreme court of Louisiana has jurisdiction to determine questions of fact affecting its own jurisdiction in any case before it. Dannenmann v. Charlton [La.] 36 So. 965. An appellate court may determine matters affecting its jurisdiction which arise pending appeal and are set up by supplemental petition. Boyd v. Agricultural Ins. Co. [Colo. App.] 76 P. 986. Where the finding of jurisdictional facts is based on a conflict of testimony, the lower court will be sustained because it weighs testimony and the appellate courts do not (Hadley v. Bernero, 103 Mo. App. 549, 78 S. W. 64), but if the fact was found against all the testimony, the error in exercising jurisdiction can be corrected by a reversal of the judgment (Id.).

97. If the defect of jurisdiction of a court springs from inexcusable departure from established principles governing the exercise of judicial power, its judgment is erroneous and may and ought to be set aside on appeal. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909.

98. Jurisdiction of the subject-matter can never be conferred by consent. Board of Com'rs v. Denver Union Water Co. [Colo.] 76 P. 1060; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Jones' Adm'r [Ky.] 80 S. W. 484; Midler v. Lese, 91 N. Y. S. 148; Board of Chosen Freeholders v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 303; Hobbs v. German-American Doctors [Okl.] 78 P. 356; Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909. That the parties to a divorce decree assented to the judgment transferring the husband's real estate to his wife as alimony cannot validate it, the court having no jurisdiction to make such a decree. Cizek v. Cizek [Neb.] 99 N. W. 28. Where an affidavit for appeal is insufficient to confer jurisdiction, appellee cannot waive it nor confer it by estoppel. Arkansas & O. R. Co. v. Powell, 104 Mo. App. 362, 80 S. W. 336. Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by estoppel. Aldrich v. Steen [Neb.] 100 N. W. 311; Arkansas & O. R. Co. v. Powell, 104 Mo. App. 362, 80 S. W. 336.

3. Personal service within the state is necessary to a decree in personam (Hildreth v. Thibodeau [Mass.] 71 N. E. 111; Korman v. Grand Lodge of U. S., 44 Misc. 564, 90 N. Y. S. 120; Greenway v. De Young [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 603); but no notice other than the construction service prescribed by law is necessary to a judgment in rem where the res is within the jurisdiction (Korman v. Grand Lodge, 44 Misc. 564, 90 N. Y. S. 120). Jurisdiction of the person in a proceeding in involuntary bankruptcy is acquired by the filing of a petition and due service of a copy of the petition and of a subpoena. In re Brett, 130 F. 981. Service of justices' summons without copy of complaint gives no jurisdiction of defendant. State v. Harrington [Mont.] 78 P. 484. On a motion for a money judgment, notice of the motion must be served and return filed in the clerk's office before the proceeding can be considered instituted. Furst Bros. v. Banks, 101 Va. 208, 43 S. E. 360. Where the wrong corporation is sued and served, the proceedings cannot be amended by substituting another of similar name. Jordan v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 105 Mo. App. 446, 79 S. W. 1155. And see Process, 2 Curr. L. 1259.

4. Publication based on affidavit showing no diligence in attempting personal service confers no jurisdiction over person of defendant. Simensen v. Simensen [N. D.] 100 N. W. 708. Publication or service on defendant outside the state where no affidavit has been filed is void. Osborne v. Schlichenmeier, 68 Kan. 421, 75 P. 474. Publication of tax sale held sufficient. Graves v. Thompson, 35 Wash. 282, 77 P. 384. Service by publication is authorized where defendant resides out of the state [Code Civ. Proc. § 412]. Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 77 P. 1007. Service by publication gives no jurisdiction to render a judgment in personam. Goodwin v. Claytor [N. C.] 49 S. E. 173.

5. Personal service or attachment of property is necessary in admiralty. Walker v. Hughes, 132 F. 885. If an officer serving a garnishee summons makes an error in computing the mileage fees tendered, and the amount is not refused for that reason, the attorney for any purpose other than to object to the jurisdiction of the person waives the point and confers jurisdiction over the person of defendant.[6] Issuance and service of process cannot be waived before commencement of proceedings,[7] but acceptance of service of a petition before it was filed will not invalidate the judgment founded thereon.[8] Pleading to the merits does not waive the objection that the court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter.[9]

Jurisdiction cannot be acquired over plaintiff by a cross action if he is not served with process and does not appear,[10] but where he appears by counsel at the trial, citation to him is unnecessary.[11]

In several states the supreme court is required to give opinions on questions of public law at the request of the governor, legislature and other state officers, but the court in Massachusetts answers such questions only to the extent the opinion is desired as an aid in the performance of judicial duties in regard to a matter then pending.[12]

An appellate court has not only power to determine its own jurisdiction but may also inquire into the jurisdiction of the court from which the appeal is taken,[13] jurisdiction of the court is not thereby ousted. McAnaney v. Quigley, 105 Ill. App. 611. Minor beneficiaries under a will cannot be divested of title without service on their guardian, or the appointment of a guardian ad litem. Ball v. Clothier, 34 Wash. 299, 75 P. 1099.

Application for permission to file answer accompanying motion to vacate default for want of jurisdiction of person amounts to a general appearance. Simensen v. Simensen [N. D.] 100 N. W. 708. A plea of misnomer not challenging the jurisdiction is a general appearance. Richardson & B. Co. v. Utah Stove & Hardware Co. [Utah] 77 P. 1. An appearance for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the subject-matter in any form waives all objections to jurisdiction of the person, whether so intended or not (Perrine v. Knights Templar & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1017, afg. 98 N. W. 841); but an appearance solely for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the person waives nothing (Osborne v. Schlichenmeier, 68 Kan. 421, 75 P. 474; Logan County v. Carnahan, 66 Neb. 685, 95 N. W. 812). An appearance in the supreme court for any purpose other than to object to jurisdiction of the person waives that question as relating either to the supreme court or the court below. Ray v. Trice [Fla.] 37 So. 582. Bond and petition for removal to Federal court are not an appearance or waiver of objection to jurisdiction. Louden Mach. Co. v. American Malleable Iron Co., 127 F. 1008. Defendant waives the objection that the court has no jurisdiction of his person where he appears to make the objection, but after failing to get a ruling thereon answers and goes to trial. Garrett v. Herring Furniture Co. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 254. Defendant does not waive his rights under plea in abatement where after it is overruled he answers, setting up the special matter and also matter in bar. Jordan v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 105 Mo. App. 446, 79 S. W. 1155. The inclusion of a plea to the merits with a plea to the jurisdiction waives the latter where no ruling on the latter is requested or obtained. Harrison v. Murphy [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 724. Where timely objection is made before the justice to jurisdiction of the person and overruled, neither the filing of a motion for security for costs nor an appeal to the circuit court is a waiver of the objection. because if the court in which a case originates has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, none can be obtained by appeal;[14] but where the court of first instance has jurisdiction of the general subject-matter, and a proper proceeding is had to invoke it, no subsequent error of law can be jurisdictional nor affect the right of a court to which an appeal de novo lies to decide the case according to the right of the matter.[15]

§ 3. Legislative power respecting jurisdiction.[16]—Legislatures can neither limit nor enlarge the jurisdiction of constitutional courts unless expressly authorized by the constitution to which both owe their existence,[17] and state legislation can neither directly enlarge nor contract the jurisdiction of the Federal courts;[18] but congress may lawfully empower courts of the states to admit qualified aliens to citizenship, and the courts of the states may exercise such powers without legislative authority or permission from the state which created them.[19] A state constitution directing the election of justices of the peace, repeals statutes that vest other persons with similar judicial powers.[20]

§ 4. Territorial limitations.[21]—The orders of a court have no extraterritorial force or effect,[22] and a justice of the peace in Kansas outside a city in which a city court has been established has no jurisdiction over a corporation having its general office in the city.[23] But in Ohio, jurisdiction may be conferred on the mayor of one village to try offenses committed in another.[24]

The states lying north of, and bounded by, the Ohio river have concurrent jurisdiction with Kentucky to serve process beyond low-water mark.[25]

A change of county lines by the state legislature after the establishment of Federal districts according to them cannot change the Federal district.[26]

Jurisdiction over persons and property by the courts of any state or district is confined to the persons and property within the territorial bounds of the state or district,[28] though jurisdiction over the owner may bring in his personal property having its actual existence elsewhere,[29] and actual presence of personal property may bring in its owner to the extent that the judgment will bind him in so far as the property is concerned.[30] Jurisdiction over one of several co-parties will suffice to confer it on others,[31] but jurisdiction cannot rest solely on the residence of a nominal party,[32] and where the petition states no cause of action against defendants residing within the county, no jurisdiction is acquired by service out of the county, over those who reside out of the county.[33] A British subject can maintain an action for libel against the proprietors of a newspaper in the city of New York,[34] and the county court of Kings county has jurisdiction of an action in a municipal court of the city of New York in the borough of Brooklyn against a nonresident of Kings county, removed by defendant to the county court, where the municipal court had jurisdiction.[35] There is no objection to a stipulation agreeing that trial may be held at another of the two places in the county at which the court is usually held.[36] The court to which a cause was transferred on change of venue has jurisdiction of defendant's person after the term at which judgment was rendered to amend the record to make it speak the truth, notice of the motion having been given.[37]

There is no doubt that courts have jurisdiction of transitory actions between nonresidents arising without their territorial jurisdictions,[38] but such jurisdiction is declined in New York in the absence of special reasons for entertaining it,[39] it not being one of the privileges of a citizen of the United States to bring an action in any state against any person upon whom service can be had, regardless of residence or of the nature of the cause of action, or where it arose.[40] A common-law action cannot be maintained in a circuit court of the United States for a tort committed in a foreign country where the right of recovery given by the foreign country is so dissimilar to that given by the law of the state in which the action is brought as to be incapable of enforcement in such state.[41] Where an intestate was domiciled in Vermont at the time he was killed in New Hampshire, the cause of action for his alleged wrongful death accrued to him in Vermont, not in New Hampshire.[42]

Jurisdiction is not conferred by service within the state on a nonresident corporation garnishee, all the parties being nonresident and none of them present in the state,[43] nor by attachment of the car of a nonresident railroad corporation doing no business within the state, the car being merely sent into the state laden.[44]

Nonresidence of both parties to a local cause of action is a common statutory ground of jurisdiction.[45] A domestic corporation may be sued in the county of its domicile or in that where the cause of action arose,[46] and foreign corporations can be sued in any county where they do business.[47]

Actions concerning real estate are generally triable where the land lies,[48] but if the suit is purely personal, the action is transitory, though real estate is involved.[49]

either of the plaintiff or defendant;[50] but defendant's right to be sued in the district where he resides may be waived.[51]

Courts of equity have power to act in personam upon persons within their jurisdictions by restraining them from doing wrongful or oppressive acts, though the res of the controversy, be it real or personal property, is beyond their jurisdiction.[52]

The residence of one of the parties in the county in which suit is brought is necessary to jurisdiction of divorce proceedings.[53]

The administration of an estate begun in the probate court of the county in which the decedent was resident at the time of his death cannot be removed into the chancery court of another county.[54]

The supreme court of New York will not entertain a summary petition to obtain custody of a minor for the purpose of gain, regardless of his own interests, where the parties are all residents of another state and a decision involves the construction of laws of that state.[55] A suit against a guardian for specific performance of a contract to locate land is properly brought in the county in which he was appointed, though not in the county in which the land lies nor in which the parties reside.[56]

§ 6. Limitations resting in amount or value in controversy.[57]—To give the circuit court of the United States jurisdiction of a case on account of the existence of a Federal question or diversity of citizenship, the matter in dispute must exceed $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs.[58] Similar provisions are to be found in the constitutions and statutes of the states defining the jurisdiction of their several courts.[59] The amount is not controlling if other jurisdictional facts or

Michigan: The chancery court has no jurisdiction of a suit concerning property where the matter in dispute does not exceed one hundred dollars. Suit to foreclose land contract "concerns property." Amount due less than $100. Sands & M. Lumber Co. v. Gay [Mich.] 101 N. W. 53.

Missouri: Justices' courts and circuit courts have concurrent jurisdiction of notes for $50 to $250. If the interest brings the note above $50, the latter courts have jurisdiction. Bay v. Trusdell, 92 Mo. App. 377. The municipal court of New York has no jurisdiction of a suit against a nonresident corporation surety on the bond of a marshal, where the amount involved is over $500. Frieland v. Union Surety & Guaranty Co., 43 Misc. 38, 86 N. Y. S. 937.

North Carolina: The superior court has conditions concur to confer or divest jurisdiction,[60] e. g. judgment on a cross complaint can be rendered for an amount less than the jurisdiction, where demanded in reference to a matter properly within the jurisdiction on another ground,[61] or where the original bill stated a case within the jurisdiction, though it has been voluntarily dismissed.[62] A cross action should be dismissed where it sets up a claim exceeding the jurisdiction of the court,[63] notwithstanding a credit of the amount claimed by plaintiff and admitted by defendant would reduce the claim below the jurisdictional amount;[64] but where the jury allow nothing on the plea in reconvention, the error in assuming jurisdiction of it is harmless.[65] Jurisdiction of ancillary bills is not limited by the amount involved.[66] If equity is involved, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction, whatever the amount.[67] Where the amount is controlling, the amount plaintiff in good faith claims,[68] irrespective of the amount of recovery, and irrespective of amendments,[69] set-offs and counterclaims, furnishes the test of jurisdiction; but the amount demanded is not controlling if other averments show it to be overstated.[70] Where the jurisdiction depends upon a particular sum, suits in which the damages cannot be calculated in money are not within it.[71]

The value of the right affected, not merely the damage to it, is considered by the Federal courts;[72] but a bill to enjoin a tax of less than the jurisdictional no jurisdiction in an action on a note for $275 on which the balance due was less than $200. Harvey, Blair & Co. v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352, 45 S. E. 644. An action against a surety on an attachment bond in the penal sum of $200 is not within the jurisdiction of the superior court. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co., 135 N. C. 73, 47 S. Whether the amount in controversy is within the jurisdiction of the county court is to be determined by the amount put in controversy by the plaintiff. Standefer v. Aultman & T. Machinery Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 552. Suit on bond for $100 with no averment that damage was in less sum involves over $50. Wall v. Mount [Ga.] 49 S. E. 778.

69. A sham amendment increasing the amount claimed by plaintiff will not give the court of appeals jurisdiction. Smith v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 410. Where plaintiff waives part of his demand and the residue is less than the jurisdictional amount of the appellate court, no appeal lies. Edward Thompson Co. v. Fenley, 25 Ky. L. R. 1577, 78 S. 71. The "matter in dispute" as respects a money demand has relation to justiciable demands, and where the right claimed is manifestly purely conjectural and not susceptible of a pecuniary estimate, it has not the value essential to jurisdiction. United States v. Hay, 194 U. S. 373, 48 Law. Ed. 1025.

72. Where a railroad company sues to enjoin interference with its right of way by the several landowners through whose lands it runs, the amount in controversy is the value of the right to be protected and not the value of the land involved. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith [C. C. A.] 128 F. 1. In ejectment, the amount in controversy to sustain Federal jurisdiction is not the value of defendant's claim, but the value of the whole property described in plaintiff's complaint. Butters v. Carney, 127 F. 622.

amount will not lie, though it is a lien on property much greater in value than the amount necessary to give the court jurisdiction.[73] Cases involving the question whether the value of the property or fund involved or the claims asserted thereto control are discussed below.[74]

Interest, when demanded, is reckoned as a part of the amount involved in New York,[75] but in Illinois accumulations of interest since suit was begun are not considered,[76] and generally where the cause was within the jurisdiction of the court at the time it was begun, the fact that by reason of delay the interest and damages have increased the sum recoverable beyond the jurisdictional limit will not oust jurisdiction.[77] If a court has jurisdiction to give a judgment for a certain amount "with legal interest," it may give a judgment for that amount, and any interest due thereon according to the law as it stood when the contract was made.[78]

Whether there is evidence in the case legally sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover for a certain item is a question of fact for the court, sitting as a jury, to pass on although the amount of the item is below the jurisdiction of the court.[79]

Several distinct demands cannot be joined to make up the amount necessary to give the court jurisdiction,[80] neither can a single demand be split up to confer jurisdiction on an inferior court;[81] but in a suit properly brought against several, the total amount claimed tests jurisdiction, though less than the jurisdictional amount is claimed against each.[82] Taxes claimed by the state cannot be added to those claimed by local municipalities for the purpose of obtaining the necessary jurisdictional amount, the state not being suable.[83] The jurisdictional amount must be alleged to be involved either directly or by necessary inference;[84] but the amount of damages alleged, and not the judgment prayed, determines jurisdiction,[85] and an averment of exemplary damages in a case where they may be recovered will be looked to to make up the jurisdictional amount.[86]

73. Purnell v. Page, 128 F. 496.

74. An action of replevin against one who claims a special lien involves only the amount of the lien (Blank v. Powell, 68 Kan. 556, 75 P. 486); but in an action en declaration de simulation pure and simple, the question of jurisdiction is determined by the value of the property which is the subject of the alleged simulated transfer, and not by the amount claimed by the party attacking such transfer (Cusachs v. Dugue [La.] 36 So. 960). Where a case properly in court is settled for a sum greater than the minimum jurisdiction of the court, the court has jurisdiction of the claim of an intervenor claiming part of the sum, though his claim is less than the jurisdictional amount. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Bacon [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 572. The amount of commissions of the administrator is the amount involved in an application to revoke letters of administration, not the amount of assets of the estate, or of petitioner's legacy. State v. Guinotte, 180 Mo. 115, 79 S. W. 166. A judgment denying an injunction to abate a dam as a nuisance is not within the jurisdiction of the supreme court, as it is the value of plaintiff's right and not the cost of defendant's dam that determines the amount involved. Scheurich v. Southwest Mo. Light Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1226. § 7. Limitations resting in character of subject-matter or object of action.[87] —Justices of the peace,[88] county,[89] municipal,[90] and other inferior courts, are generally denied jurisdiction of actions involving title to land, though where the question arises only collaterally, jurisdiction is not ousted.[91] Neither have such courts any equitable jurisdiction.[92] Several cases discussing the jurisdiction of particular courts over certain matters are mentioned in the note.[93] A statute conferring jurisdiction to examine title to lands and decree sale and partition does not empower it to try title between adverse claimants.[94] A bankruptcy court has jurisdiction in the first instance to determine whether an asserted adverse claim to property claimed by the bankrupt's trustee is colorable or actual.[95]

Courts in general have no jurisdiction of questions merely political, and such questions are usually left to the decision of the party or other tribunal appointed for that purpose;[96] but where an act is one expressly enjoined by law upon a public officer, it may be controlled, though the decision of a political question is necessary to the result.[97]

Jurisdiction in matters relating to divorce and alimony is given by the statute, and every power exercised by the court with reference thereto must look for its source in the statute or it does not exist.[98]

90. Action to recover $300 advance payment on a contract to purchase land for failure of conditions is not founded "on a contract for real estate" so as to oust city court's jurisdiction. Fry v. Dunn [Kan.] 78 P. 814.

91. An action to recover money paid for land and to cancel a note and mortgage for part of the price on the ground of fraud inducing the purchase does not involve title. Hollis v. Finks [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 555. The title to real estate may be involved in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, but if brought before a justice of the peace, his judgment would not adjudicate the question of ownership of the freehold. It would be a fact in controversy but not in issue. Weidner v. Lund, 105 Ill. App. 454.

92. Surrogate's courts in New York. In re Bunting's Estate, 90 N. Y. S. 786. Municipal court of New York has no jurisdiction to set aside an assignment of money for fraud. Midler v. Lese, 91 N. Y. S. 148. The county court has jurisdiction to cancel an indebtedness evidenced by note secured by a vendor's lien the amount of which is within its jurisdiction. Hollis v. Finks [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 555. A city court cannot grant affirmative equitable relief. Pound v. Williams, 119 Ga. 904, 47 S. E. 218.

93. The circuit courts have jurisdiction at law in proceedings for the condemnation of crossings by one railroad company over the real estate and line of another. Grafton & B. R. Co. v. Buckhannon & N. R. Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 532.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 159, § 1, the supreme court of Massachusetts has full equity jurisdiction. Gargano v. Pope, 184 Mass. 571, 69 N. E. 343. A state court of general jurisdiction having original cognizance of cases at law and in equity has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a suit to cancel a mortgage on real property within its jurisdiction. Ridge v. Manker [C. C. A.] 132 F. 599. The circuit court in Indiana has no jurisdiction of a prosecution for a violation of a town ordinance, the jurisdiction of the town clerk in such cases being exclusive [Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 4346-4346d]. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Salem, 162 Ind. 428, 70 N. E. 530. The courts of Oregon have jurisdiction of an action for damages against the owner of a vessel for injury to a bridge between high and low tide. Astoria, etc., R. Co. v. Kern. 44 Or. 538, 76 P. 14. The formation of towns and cities or the change of their boundaries is not a "local concern" of which the county court has original exclusive jurisdiction. City of Little Rock v. North Little Rock [Ark.] 79 S. W. 785. The circuit court has jurisdiction to entertain a proceeding under Code, art. 23, § 122, subsec. 7, to wind up an insolvent insurance company. Monumental Mut. 98. Cizek v. Cizek [Neb.] 99 N. W. 28; Aldrich v. Steen [Neb.] 100 N. W. 311.

The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court over assets of bankrupts is necessarily exclusive and supreme, except as to such portions thereof as may have been seized in some suit in a state court more than four months before the adjudication in bankruptcy,[99] though proceedings in bankruptcy do not have the effect to abate a suit in the state court to subject certain property of the bankrupt to a specific lien.[1] The state courts have jurisdiction concurrent with the Federal courts of actions to recover property transferred to a creditor by a bankrupt,[2] and a state court has jurisdiction of an action of trover brought against a trustee in bankruptcy to recover the value of property alleged to have been converted by him as part of the assets of the estate.[3] Statutory rights of action not penal will be enforced in the courts of another state,[4] and in determining whether a statute is penal, the decisions of the state where it exists are not binding.[5]

§ 8. Limitations resting in character or capacity of parties litigant.[6]—Generally speaking, executors and trustees can be sued as such only in the courts of the state appointing them;[7] but an executor who carries away the property of the estate may be followed by the beneficiaries and sued to improve the trust on the property in the state to which he carries it.[8] No state court can issue an attachment, injunction or execution against a national bank before final judgment.[9]

§ 9. Original jurisdiction. A. Exclusive, concurrent and conflicting.[10]—Concurrent jurisdiction on rivers means the jurisdiction of two powers over one and the same place.[11]

In states which have probate courts, their jurisdiction over administration proceedings and other proceedings committed to them is generally exclusive.[12] The district courts of Oklahoma possess common-law jurisdiction and may proceed according to its rules wherever the statutory directions are silent or inadequate,[13] and the constitutional jurisdiction of the circuit courts of Wisconsin is substantially coextensive with that of the English courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Chancery combined.[14]

Cases in which there are two or more courts to which resort may be had for relief are numerous,[15] e. g. between equity and courts of probate,[16] it being a familiar rule that when there exist two tribunals possessing concurrent and complete jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the jurisdiction becomes exclusive in the one before which proceedings are first instituted,[17] and that such court will be permitted to pursue its jurisdiction to the end and will not permit its jurisdiction to be impaired by resort to some other tribunal.[18] The rule, however, does not apply to actions to enforce an independent claim or right, though between the same parties and about the same subject-matter,[19] and after dismissal in one court, resort may be had to another, though the time for appeal has not expired.[20] Scire facias to revive a judgment may be heard in a division of the same court different from the one that rendered the judgment.[21] The statute giving the county court of Kentucky jurisdiction to open private ways by condemnation does not impair the jurisdiction of the circuit court to enjoin obstructions.[22]

It is a settled rule that when both state and Federal courts have jurisdiction of a matter, the tribunal whose jurisdiction first attaches holds it to the exclusion of the other, until its duty is fully performed, and the jurisdiction involved is exhausted.[23] While the rule is not limited to cases where the property has been actually seized under judicial process before a second suit is instituted in another court,[24] it is limited to actions which deal either actually or potentially with specific property or objects, and does not apply to actions strictly in personam.[25]

Where at the time a bill is filed in the Federal court to compel an accounting by an executor, a suit had been begun in the state court to marshal the assets of deceased, the bill must be dismissed. Thiel Detective Service Co. v. McClure, 130 F. 55. That plaintiff had a right because of diversity of citizenship to maintain suit in the Federal court against a corporation does not entitle him to have its assets distributed by that court where prior proceedings for that purpose are pending in a state court, because it will be presumed that his claim if established in the Federal court will be given due faith and credit by the state court. Louisville Trust Co. v. Knott [C. C. A.] 130 F. 820. After an adjudication of bankruptcy, an action of replevin cannot be maintained in the state court as to property in the trustee's hands, though an adverse claimant may bring suit in the state court to try title to the property. Crosby v. Spear, 98 Me. 542, 57 A. 881.

Where a Federal receiver has undertaken to sequestrate all the assets of an insolvent corporation and has taken all the assets into the custody of its receiver, a New Jersey court will not permit the appointment of a receiver under its insolvent corporation act and allow him to bring a suit to enforce stockholders' liability which the Federal receiver has refused to bring. 25. Guaranty Trust Co. v. North Chicago

Neither does it apply to actions brought to enforce an entirely distinct claim or right.[26] A state court and a Federal court sitting in the same state are foreign to each other within the rules governing collateral attack on judgments.[27] The courts of Massachusetts will not entertain a suit against the purchaser of a railroad from receivers appointed by the Federal court for an injury occurring before the sale.[28]

When a court once gets jurisdiction of a case, it retains it and proceeds to pass upon and determine all matters incident thereto,[29] especially if it be a court of equity, as it is well settled that once a court of equity has obtained jurisdiction upon any equitable ground, it will retain it to do complete justice between the parties, though in so doing it will become necessary to establish purely legal rights or grant legal remedies.[30]

A state court cannot enjoin proceedings in a Federal court,[31] and as a general rule no court can set aside, modify, control, or enjoin the decree of another of concurrent jurisdiction, though it may restrain the enforcement of the decree by acting in personam on the parties,[32] and courts of equity may enjoin proceedings at law in proper cases.[33]

(§ 9) B. Ancillary or assistant.[34]—Ancillary bills are ordinarily maintained in the same court where the original bill is filed, with a view to protecting the rights adjudicated by the court in reference to the subject-matter of the litigation, and in aid of the jurisdiction of the court, with a purpose of carrying out its decree, and rendering effectual rights to be secured or already adjudicated.[35] Jurisdic-

Where an action against an insurance company liable if at all only pro rata with several others not removable is removed to the Federal court, a bill to enjoin the actions in the other cases in the

tion of ancillary bills does not depend on diversity of citizenship[36] or the amount involved,[37] but an ancillary bill cannot be maintained against a corporation on the theory that its rights were foreclosed by a decree to which it was not a party and could not have been made a party without ousting the jurisdiction of the original bill.[38] The supreme court of Ohio, though without original jurisdiction to grant injunctions will grant one in aid of its original jurisdiction in quo warranto.[39]

(§ 9) C. Inferior and limited.[40]—Statutes conferring jurisdiction upon inferior courts are strictly construed and will not by construction be aided or extended by inference or implication beyond their express terms.[41] Jurisdiction equal to a circuit court carries equal equity powers.[42] Cases applying the statutes are collected in the note.[43] All facts necessary to give such courts jurisdiction must affirmatively appear of record and no presumptions are indulged in their favor.[44] The probate courts,[45] and those county courts which exist in some states between the magistrate's and justice's courts and the courts of general jurisdiction often possess a civil jurisdiction subject to specified limits, usually excluding trial of title to land.[46] Where the probate courts are given superior jurisdiction state court and to adjudicate the liability of all in the Federal case is ancillary, not original. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 126 F. 998. A bill to enjoin a pending action at law in the same court is not ancillary thereto where a necessary party defendant to the bill is neither a party to the original action nor a citizen of the state where the bill is filed. Brice [Tenn.] 83 S. W. 791. Sections 190, 191, and 192 of act of October 22, 1902, being a nullity, and said act having repealed certain previous acts creating police courts and conferring jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the police court, of the city of Columbus, after said act, was the same as that of a justice of the peace. Backenstoe v. State, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 178. An action to sell realty conveyed in trust by a residuary legatee for the protection of his surety has all the essentials of a civil action. Common pleas has jurisdiction. Tidd v. Bloch, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 216.

45. If the municipal authorities and the telegraph or telephone companies cannot agree, or the municipality delays for an unreasonable time, the probate court has jurisdiction to direct the mode in which such telegraph or telephone line shall be constructed along the streets. Fitzsimmons Tel. Co. v. Cincinnati, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 51. In Oklahoma the probate court has jurisdiction to try suits against railroad companies whose negligence in not fencing their line caused injury to domestic animals. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Deperade, 12 Okl. 367, 71 P. 629. Probate court has no jurisdiction to issue an order of attachment to be levied on real estate. Goodfellow Shoe Co. v. Griffith, 13 Okl. 51, 74 P. 109.

46. In Nebraska a county judge has the same jurisdiction and powers in taking depositions that are conferred by law on a over matters within their cognizance, they exercise equitable powers so far as to make their jurisdiction efficient,[47] but they are generally denied the power to adjudicate the title to property though necessary to the exercise of their probate jurisdiction.[48] In other states, the probate courts possess only such powers as are expressly conferred by statute or constitution,[49] among which equity powers are not enumerated.[50]

(§ 9) D. Original jurisdiction of courts of last resort.[51]—The supreme court of the United States has original jurisdiction of all controversies between states or between a state and a foreign state.[52] Courts of last resort, and some intermediate appellate courts are invested with jurisdiction to issue the several original writs known to the common law,[53] including habeas corpus,[54] quo warranto,[55] mandamus,[56] certiorari,[57] prohibition,[58] and other remedial writs and to hear and determine the same; but in Nebraska it is within the discretion of the supreme court to issue or refuse the writ of mandamus even when a prima facie right is shown,[59] and the writ will not generally be issued except in aid of the court's jurisdiction otherwise acquired.[60] The supreme court of Ohio is without notary public, including full authority to commit a witness for refusing to be sworn or give testimony in a proper case. Olmsted v. Edson [Neb.] 98 N. W. 415. In Florida the county judge has jurisdiction to entertain the complaint and inaugurate the proceedings in a bastardy case and refer the same to the circuit court for trial. Edwards v. Edwards [Fla.] 37 So. 569.

47. The probate court is a judicial tribunal. In re Gassaway [Kan.] 79 P. 113. Where the facts are not in dispute, the county court of the county in which the estate of the husband is settled has jurisdiction to assign dower. Only an issue of fact which the court is unable to try will oust it. Tyson v. Tyson [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1076. The county court in Oregon having the jurisdiction pertaining to probate courts has jurisdiction to hear and determine claims against an estate which have been presented to and rejected by the administrator. In re Morgan's Estate [Or.] 78 P. 1029. The rights of parties arising from a postnuptial contract cannot be decided in probate court. McWhorter v. O'Neal [Ga.] 49 S. E. 592.

48. A probate court cannot try title to real estate. Best v. Gralapp [Neb.] 99 N. W. 837. The probate court has no jurisdiction to try title to property as between the personal representative and a stranger. In re Overton's Estate [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 766; Caron v. Old Reliable Gold Min. Co. [N. M.] 78 P. 63. In proceedings for the settlement of an administratrix's account, the surrogate cannot pass on the issue of title to property arising between third parties and the administratrix individually. In re Finn's Estate, 44 Misc. 622, 90 N. Y. S. 159. The probate court in a proceeding merely to set aside a homestead to the surviving wife has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the question in whom the remainder vests. In re Firth's Estate [Cal.] 78 P. 643. Probate court cannot entertain suit by widow against heirs to recover homestead of which heirs are in possession claiming title. James v. James [Ark.] 80 S. W. 148. Jurisdiction cannot be acquired in a will case over property specially devised under the will, nor can process issue to enforce the judgment or obtain possession of property regardless of the right of the executor to administer the estate. Burgess v. Sullivant, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 327. Where a probate court assumes unlawful jurisdiction its proceedings are void. Real estate not a firm asset conveyed to the survivor. Jones v. De Camp, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 133.

49. Probate courts possess no powers other than those expressly conferred by statute. Davidson v. Wampler, 29 Mont. 61, 74 P. 82. The surrogate in New York can adjudicate rights against the estate of an executor or administrator arising from his administration of the prior estate (In re Hull, 97 App. Div. 258, 89 N. Y. S. 939), but can construe a will only when necessary to the exercise of the powers conferred by statute (In re Burdick's Estate, 90 N. Y. S. 161).

50. The surrogate has no authority to determine whether a transfer by the testator was void as a fraud on creditors. In re Bunting's Estate, 90 N. Y. S. 786.

original jurisdiction to grant injunctions but will grant one in aid of its original jurisdiction in quo warranto.[61] The supreme court of Nebraska has not original jurisdiction to cancel and annul a levy of taxes by a city against insurance companies on the ground that it involves the revenue, that term in the constitution referring only to state revenue.[62] A controversy between two bodies, each claiming to be the regular organization of a political party within the state, and entitled to have its nominees for state offices certified as the nominees of the party sufficiently concerns the prerogatives of the state and affects the liberties of the people to be within the original jurisdiction of the supreme court of Wisconsin.[63] The supreme court of North Carolina has original jurisdiction to hear claims against the state and report to the legislature thereon,[64] but the grant does not include cases involving no question of law and the facts of which the legislature has already passed upon.[65]

The highest courts of the several states, and lesser courts which are of last resort as to inferior jurisdictions, have general supervision and control of proceedings in lower courts; and in the exercise of that supervision have jurisdiction to issue the several original writs known to the common law,[66] among them being prohibition,[67] mandamus,[68] and certiorari,[69] whenever necessary to restrain or compel action by the inferior tribunals within their jurisdictional bounds. The original jurisdiction of the appellate courts either by prohibition,[70] or supervisory control will not be exercised unless an injury is apparent for which an appeal will not furnish an adequate remedy.[71] Where a suit in district court is appealable to the court of appeals, an application for a writ of prohibition with respect to any order or proceeding therein which would be carried up for review by such appeal should be made to the appellate, not to the supreme court.[72]

Not being provided by statute, no appeal lies from an order of the probate court refusing to revoke letters testamentary. Graves v. Bond [Kan.] 78 P. 851. The appellate term in New York has no jurisdiction to entertain a motion for a new trial on exceptions ordered to be heard by it in the first instance before judgment. Dickson v. Manhattan R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 36. In an action for money not requiring a decree granting some mode of equitable relief an appeal cannot be taken from the court of common pleas to the circuit court under Rev. St. § 5226, though the determination of the rights of the parties involves equitable principles. Lange v. Lange, 69 Ohio St. 346, 69 N. E. 611. The court of common pleas has jurisdiction to review an order of the probate court denying the right to administer the estate of a decedent which the statute (Rev. St. § 6005) confers on the next of kin if a suitable person. Schumacher v. McCallip, 69 Ohio St. 500, 69 N. E. 986. In Indiana jurisdiction of vacation appeals is obtained only when all parties against whom the judgment was rendered are made appellants. Newman v. Gates [Ind.] 72 N. E. 638. In Maryland no review is provided in eminent domain proceedings if the judgment be pronounced upon a subject-matter within the limits of derive their jurisdiction over any case from the law and parties cannot confer it by consent,[75] and if the lower court had no jurisdiction the appellate court can have none.[76] A court of general jurisdiction obtains by appeal from an inferior court only such jurisdiction as was possessed by the court of first instance, and though the trial be de novo can inquire into only such questions as were within the jurisdiction below.[77] The law which gives a court jurisdiction to review proceedings in error because a constitutional question is involved does not give it jurisdiction to review other questions occurring in the trial.[78] The right of appeal is generally limited to cases involving a certain amount,[79] or presenting certain questions, such as the constitutionality of a statute or ordinance,[80] or the title to real estate or question of freehold.[81] In Wyoming, important constitutional questions may be certified to the supreme court for decision pending judgment below.[82] In Louisiana the supreme court has authority to review conclusions of fact reached by the court of appeal but only does so in exceptional cases.[83] On appeal from the county court in an action to compel the listing for taxation of omitted property the circuit court of Kentucky has no original jurisdiction to assess or value omitted property.[84]

Jurisdiction as between courts of intermediate and last resort depends on statutory limitations resting in amount or value,[85] franchise,[86] freehold,[87] revenue,[88]

the wrong court may be on motion or suo motu certified to the other court.[95] The existence of such a controversy as will confer jurisdiction on the highest court must appear on the record to have been properly raised and decided below,[96] but where a constitutional question is raised in a case, it remains so as to give the supreme court jurisdiction, though the court pending the appeal decides that particular question in another case.[97] Where plaintiff's claim brings the case within the jurisdiction of the supreme court, to which he appeals, a cross appeal to the court of appeals by defendant is properly certified up to the supreme court though itself within the jurisdiction of the appellate court.[98] In Louisiana an appeal from a judgment rendered on a reconventional demand must be to the court having jurisdiction of the original demand.[99]

Further appeal.—Similar matters, e. g., the amount,[1] or a conflict of opinion, or doubt,[2] or importance,[3] may be ground for jurisdiction of a further appeal. A constitutional question to be ground of further appeal must have been decided adversely to appellant.[4] On application for further appeal in Indiana, the supreme court looks only to the opinion of the appellate court and not to the record.[5]

§ 11. Federal jurisdiction. A. Generally.[6]—The supreme court has jurisdiction of all controversies between states,[7] and that court alone possesses jurisdiction derived immediately from the constitution, and of which the legislative power cannot deprive it, the jurisdiction of the circuit courts depending upon some act of congress.[8] The jurisdiction of the Federal courts is limited in the sense that they have none except that conferred by the constitution and laws of the United States, and a cause is presumed to be without their jurisdiction unless the contrary affirmatively appears,[9] the question of jurisdiction being self assertive in every

The judicial power granted to the Federal courts by the constitution is the power to try the 10 classes of cases specified in section 2 of article 3 thereof (Levin v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 128 F. 826); but they have no jurisdiction to collect taxes for the Creek nation (Buster v. Wright [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 855). The United States courts in the Indian Territory have jurisdiction of an action by a Cherokee Indian and the Cherokee nation to recover lands and improvements from an in-case and arising though litigants are silent.[10] The general rule, however, is that when the jurisdiction of a circuit court of the United States has once attached, it will not be ousted by subsequent change in conditions.[11] Consent of parties can never confer jurisdiction on a Federal court,[12] except in the case of persons sued by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover a fund for the estate.[13] Federal courts only grant the writ of mandamus in aid of an existing jurisdiction.[14] When a foreign state submits itself to our courts, it must be taken to do so on the same terms as other litigants.[15] A Federal court of equity sitting within a state is without authority to compel a corporation of that state to permit another corporation of another state, which has not complied with the state laws authorizing it to do business therein, to make a use of its property which would amount to doing business within the state.[16]

The Federal courts have no jurisdiction of suits against a state,[17] and a state statute providing the procedure in and naming officials who are necessary parties to actions to set aside tax sales, the language of which clearly indicates that suit in the state courts is intended, will not be construed as permitting such actions in the Federal court;[18] but a municipal corporation is not an agency of the state entitled to immunity,[19] and a suit against it, involving contract rights merely, may be entertained.[20] A suit against the attorney general of a state to enjoin a proceeding by him on behalf of the state is a suit against the state;[21] but a state railroad commission may be restrained from putting in force an order which would cause irreparable damage, the ordinary grounds of Federal jurisdiction being present.[22]

illegal the enforcement of an ordinance violative of contract rights, and which refers to no pending suit, is not objectionable,[25] and the statute does not extend to ancillary suits necessary to protect the jurisdiction of the court previously obtained.[26] The fact that a bill filed in the state court incidentally prays for relief which, if granted, might interfere with the constructive possession of property by receivers of a Federal court, does not authorize the latter court to enjoin where the principal relief sought therein does not trench on the prior jurisdiction.[27] Where several suits, some of which are removable and some not, are brought against insurers liable only pro rata, they may be enjoined by bill in the Federal court to have the liability of the several insurers determined and adjusted by that court as a court of equity.[28]

Federal courts have no original jurisdiction in respect to the administration and general settlement of the estates of deceased persons,[29] nor can they determine the right to the custody of an infant not imprisoned,[30] and a creditor establishing the validity of his claim by suit in the Federal court must, to secure payment, ordinarily seek relief by a marshaling of assets in the state court having jurisdiction of the settlement of estates.[31]

While state legislation cannot directly enlarge or contract the jurisdiction of the Federal courts,[32] it can create rights that are justiciable in such courts which, without such legislation, were not cognizable therein,[33] though the procedure for enforcing such rights will be that applicable to similar rights in the Federal courts, and not that provided by the state law;[34] but the rule that a Federal court may enforce a remedy either equitable or legal, given by a state statute, presupposes that the cause is one of which the Federal court has jurisdiction.[35]

The district court has jurisdiction of an action by the United States to recover money fraudulently obtained by defendant in payment of a false claim for a pension.[36]

The court of claims was established to relieve congress of the necessity of adjudicating private claims against the government through its committees. General authority, however, was never granted to pass on collision cases, as they sound in tort, and special legislation is necessary in every such case.[37] If the military occupation of real property began while it was within hostile territory, the court is prohibited from exercising jurisdiction.[38]

The courts of the District of Columbia are courts of the United States and have judicial power as permanent and lasting as others, and possess those subjects of jurisdiction constitutionally given to them.[39]

(§ 11) B. As affected by diversity of citizenship.[40]—The circuit courts of the United States have original jurisdiction of suits of a civil nature at law and in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds $2,000 and an alien is a party,[41] or the controversy is between a citizen of the state where suit is brought and a citizen of another state,[42] and where necessary to give effect to its decrees and judgments, the jurisdiction of the national court may be invoked by supplemental or ancillary bill, irrespective of the citizenship of the parties.[43] A state is not a citizen within the meaning of the constitution or the acts of congress.[44]

It is the court's duty to see that this jurisdiction is not invoked collusively,[45] but whether a suit coming fairly within equity rule 94 was collusively brought cannot be determined on demurrer.[46] That plaintiff removed from one state to another for the purpose of acquiring the right to sue in a Federal court in the state of his late residence will not defeat the jurisdiction, the removal being actual and with the bona fide intention of acquiring citizenship,[47] nor will an assignment of the cause of action with like motive.[48]

Regard is always had to the real rather than the nominal party,[49] and the citizenship of a merely formal party will not control,[50] neither will the court require the joinder of an unnecessary party where the effect would be to oust the jurisdiction;[51] but where it appears that indispensable parties have been omitted, they must be brought in, and if bringing them in deprives the court of jurisdiction, the plaintiff must abide the consequences.[52] The jurisdiction is determined by actual as distinguished from constructive citizenship,[53] and citizenship, not the place of residence, is the test.[54] Jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship having been once obtained is not divested by the appearance of a party as to whom the suit could not have originally been maintained.[55]

Jurisdiction is not conferred where citizens of the state where suit is brought are to be found on both sides of the controversy,[56] and the arraignment of the parties in the bill for the purpose of showing jurisdiction is not controlling on the court, it being the court's duty, for jurisdictional purposes, to ascertain the necessary parties to the suit and align them upon the one side or the other according to their true interests and attitude, irrespective of their designations in the bill.[57] In a suit in equity instituted by a stockholder in his own name, but upon a right of action existing in his corporation, the stockholder's corporation will be aligned with the defendants whenever the officers or persons controlling the corporation are shown to be opposed to the object sought by complainant; but when such opposition does not appear, the stockholder's corporation will be aligned with the complainant in the suit.[58] The only new thing required in a stockholder's bill by equity rule 94 is that its allegations shall be verified by oath.[59]

Suit cannot be maintained in a Federal court by an assignee based on diversity of citizenship, unless the assignor might have maintained it;[60] but the right to maintain suit where the original parties were citizens of different states is not lost by assignment to one who is also a citizen of a different state from defendant, though the effect of the assignment is to change venue of the action.[61] Where the alleged assignor was in legal effect the maker, the assignee may sue, though the assignor and the person actually making the note were citizens of the same state.[62]

For the purpose of suing and being sued in the Federal courts, the members of a local "corporation" are conclusively presumed to be citizens of the state by whose laws it was created and in which alone the corporate body has a legal existence;[63] this doctrine, however, goes to the very verge of judicial power, and will not be so extended as to raise an indisputable presumption that the stockholders are also citizens of any other state which authorizes it to do business within its borders, and authorize suit in the Federal court against it by a citizen of the state which incorporated it;[64] neither will it be presumed in a suit to which the corporation is not a party that its president is a citizen of the state in which it was organized.[65] It is beyond the power of one state to so combine a corporation created by it with one of another state as to make it a citizen of the other state for jurisdictional purposes, and so likewise is it beyond the power of the corporations themselves to accomplish the same result by their manner of conducting their business.[66] In a suit by a stockholder of a public service corporation against the corporation and the city to restrain the enforcement of an invalid ordinance regulating tolls, the fact that the corporation is organized under the laws of the state in which the city is situated does not deprive the court of jurisdiction.[67]

Diversity of citizenship will not of itself confer jurisdiction of habeas corpus proceedings.[68]

(§ 11) C. As affected by existence of a Federal question.[69]—The Federal courts have jurisdiction in cases where the United States are a party,[70] trade-mark cases,[71] suits by Indians to recover lands allotted by any Federal law or treaty,[72] and suits at common law or in equity arising under the constitution or laws of the United States.[73]

A case arises under the constitution or laws of the United States whenever, upon the whole record, there is a controversy involving the construction of either.[74] A case does not necessarily arise under the constitution or laws of the United States every time a writ of error would lie to the judgment of the state court,[75] neither does it so arise unless it really and substantially involves a dispute or controversy as to the effect or construction of the constitution or some law or treaty of the United States, upon the determination of which the result depends, and which appears on the record by plaintiff's own statement of his case in legal and logical form, such as is required in good pleading;[76] and if it does not appear at the outset that the suit is one of which the circuit court at the time its jurisdiction is invoked could properly take cognizance, the suit must be dismissed.[77] An action against a Federal corporation is one arising under the laws of the United States.[78] Where a Federal court obtains jurisdiction of property by appointment of a receiver in dissolution proceedings, it has jurisdiction of a bill by the receiver to foreclose a mortgage on property within the district irrespective of diversity of citizenship.[79] A familiar rule commits to the courts of the state the interpretation of its laws and constitution.[80]

Where the jurisdiction of the circuit court is invoked on the ground of violation of the Fourteenth amendment, it must appear at the outset that the alleged violation was by act of the state,[81] and where it appears on the face of plaintiff's own statement that the act complained of was not only unauthorized but forbidden by the state legislation in question, the circuit court does not acquire jurisdiction,[82] though the plaintiff alleges that by reason of such disobedience of the law he has been denied the equal protection of the laws.[83] A contention by a city that the ordinance complained of could not violate the obligation of a contract because the city was without authority to pass it is untenable.[84]

The contention that under the laws of a state it was essential to the legality of service upon an alleged agent of a corporation that the corporation should have been doing business within the state and the agent residing within the county named as his place of residence in the appointment simply calls for the construction of the constitution and laws of the state or the application of the principles of general law. Where a city claims the right to regulate street car fares under the original franchise ordinance, and the company claims that by subsequent ordinances the original right has been surrendered, and that the obligations of the subsequent ordinances are being impaired by the proposed regulation, there is a Federal question, though it be undisputed that there is no impairment so far as the original ordinance is concerned. City of Cleveland v. Cleveland City R. Co., 194 U. S. 517, 48 Law. Ed. 1102; City of Cleveland v. Cleveland Elec. R. Co., 194 U. S. 538, 48 Law. Ed. 1109.

The power of the Federal courts to intervene by habeas corpus in a case where a disregard of Federal law is charged is beyond doubt;[85] but except in instances of peculiar urgency, or where there is no jurisdiction in the state court to try the prisoner, the court should not discharge the prisoner in advance of his trial in the state court,[86] and even after final determination of the case in the state court should generally leave him to his remedy by writ of error from the supreme court of the United States.[87] The writ will not be granted to determine the right to custody of a child not imprisoned.[88]

The full faith and credit clause of the constitution[89] and the statute based thereon[90] establish a rule of evidence rather than of jurisdiction,[91] and under these provisions a judgment of a state court can only be made effective elsewhere within the United States through the instrumentality of a court having local jurisdiction.[92] Hence where an action is brought in a Federal court on a judgment of a state court, the Federal court will look to the original cause of action to determine whether it is otherwise an action of Federal cognizance.[93] Until equal faith and credit has been refused by a court, there can be no ground for complaining of any violation of the constitution, and no cause of action which will entitle a petitioner to invoke the jurisdiction of a national court for the preservation of a constitutional right.[94]

(§ 11) D. Averments and objections as to jurisdiction.[95]—The facts essential to give a Federal court jurisdiction, either on the ground of diversity of citizenship[96] or of the existence of a Federal question,[97] must be distinctly alleged and not left to argument or mere inference,[98] and jurisdiction cannot be invoked by anticipating a defense.[99] The mere allegation of the existence of a Federal question is not sufficient if it plainly appears that such averment is not real and substantial but is without color of merit,[1] and, whether presented on motion to dismiss or on demurrer, the question depends primarily on the allegations of the bill and not upon the facts as they may subsequently turn out.[2] The whole record may be looked to, however, to cure a defective averment of citizenship, and if the requisite citizenship is anywhere expressly averred in the record, or facts are therein stated which in legal intendment constitute such allegation, that is sufficient.[3] The bill need not state the amount in controversy if it appears to be within the jurisdictional limit from the allegations or otherwise from the record, or from evidence taken on hearing objections to the jurisdiction.[4] A Federal court is without jurisdiction of an action at law where the answer contains a general denial, which under the state practice puts in issue the jurisdictional allegations of the complaint, and there is no proof to sustain such allegations.[5] After demurrer for defective averment of citizenship is sustained, plaintiff is entitled to amend the writ to show diversity according to the fact.[6] The burden of disproving the allegations as to diversity of citizenship[7] or the amount in controversy rests on defendant.[8] The merits cannot be tried on the hearing of a plea to the jurisdiction.[9]

a direct appeal may be taken in a proceeding brought by the interstate commerce commission, under the direction of the attorney general, to obtain orders requiring the testimony of witnesses and the production of books and documents.[18] If a case does not really involve the construction or application of a treaty,[19] or the constitution in the sense in which that phrase is employed in the judiciary act of 1891,[20] or where the constitutional rights set up below are so attenuated and unsubstantial as to be absolutely devoid of merit, there is no jurisdiction;[21] and matters of defense that are not and cannot be resorted to by plaintiff to obtain jurisdiction will not confer it.[22] The question of jurisdiction which may under the statute be certified direct to the supreme court must be one involving the jurisdiction of the circuit court as a Federal court, and not in respect of its general authority as a judicial tribunal.[23] If the record does not affirmatively show jurisdiction in the circuit court, the supreme court on its own motion will so declare, and make such order as will prevent that court from exercising an authority not conferred upon it by statute;[24] and where the contention as to want of jurisdiction below is well founded, the supreme court does not merely dismiss the appeal from a decree dismissing the bill on the merits but reverses the decree below at appellant's costs, with instructions to the circuit court to dismiss the bill for want of jurisdiction.[25] Whether the case should go to the circuit court of appeals or directly to the supreme court is determined from the record, there being no authority for the trial judge making a certificate that the application and construction of the constitution were involved in the action.[26]

exceeds $5,000 and a final judgment in a like case in the supreme court of one of the territories of the United States could be reviewed by the court.[31] Review in such cases is not restricted to those cases in which the constitution or a treaty of the United States or an act of congress is brought in question and the right claimed under it denied.[32] Unless a case decided in the district court of Porto Rico can be reviewed by the supreme court, the judgment is final for no such case can be carried to the circuit court of appeals.[33]

Where the circuit court of appeals is unable by reason of conflicting authority to determine the proper construction of a state constitution, and there is no decision of the highest court of the state in point, the question will be certified to the supreme court.[34]

Where the jurisdiction of the Federal court is invoked on the ground of diverse citizenship alone, the judgment of the circuit court of appeals is final and no appeal lies to the supreme court,[35] notwithstanding the fact that the suit involves defendant's relations with the government as a carrier of the mails.[36] The circuit court of appeals has jurisdiction to review a judgment of a district or circuit court finding a person guilty of contempt for violation of its order and imposing a fine for the contempt.[37] An appeal to the circuit court of appeals does not bring before it the question of jurisdiction of the circuit or district court, that question being reviewable only by the supreme court,[38] but where a case involved constitutional questions and could have been taken direct to the supreme court, but was appealed to the circuit court of appeals, that court in the absence of objection considered the constitutional as well as the other questions in the case.[39]

(§ 12) C. Control over state courts.[40]—The right of the supreme court of the United States to review the decisions of the highest court of a state is circumscribed by the rules established by law and in every case the question of jurisdiction must be answered whether propounded by counsel or not.[41]

When the jurisdiction depends upon a right, privilege, or immunity under the constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, the right on which the party relies must have been called to the attention of the court in some proper way and the decision of the court must have been against the right claimed;[42] or at all events it must appear from the record by clear and necessary intendment that the Federal question was directly involved so that the state court could not have given judgment without deciding it.[43] Where the state court decides the case for reasons independent of the Federal right claimed,[44] or upon a ground broad enough to sustain it without deciding the Federal question raised, the supreme court has no jurisdiction;[45] but where a decision by the state court of the Federal question appears to have been the foundation of the judgment, a writ of error lies,[46] and the supreme court will not decline jurisdiction of a case which would never have been brought but for the passage of unconstitutional laws because the state court put forward an untenable construction of a corporate charter more than the unconstitutional statutes in its judgment.[47] That a Federal question was so raised and decided must affirmatively appear from the record.[48]

Great weight is attached to the decision of the state court regarding questions of taxation or exemption therefrom under the constitution or laws of its own state,[49] and the highest court of a state may administer the common law, and interpret its own statutes and constitution according to its understanding thereof without raising any question of Federal law reviewable in the supreme court.[50]

The supreme court cannot review the conclusions of the highest court of a state upon questions of fact.[55]

§ 13. Acquisition and divestiture.[56]—Jurisdiction, especially of inferior courts, may be lost by delay or interruption of the proceedings;[57] but generally a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction rendered after the time limited by statute is merely erroneous, not void for want of jurisdiction.[58] Where a new district is created out of a part of the territory of an old one, jurisdiction over pending causes remains with the old court or not as the statute provides.[59] The Act of Congress of 1900, reorganizing the judicial system of Alaska, saved to litigants the right to prosecute pending suits to final judgment under either the old or the new law.[60] The mere filing of an application for change of venue does not oust jurisdiction,[61] and a void order attempting to transfer jurisdiction is of no force and the exercise of jurisdiction may be resumed without the issuance or service of new process.[62] A stay of proceedings for failure to pay costs does not deprive the court of jurisdiction,[63] and an order consolidating actions may properly reserve jurisdiction over the question of costs and expenses in the suits superseded.[64] A voluntary settlement before judgment does not oust jurisdiction;[65]

but cases properly dismissed in the municipal court for nonappearance cannot be reinstated except on defendant's express consent or his voluntary appearance without objection after notice.[66] In order to transfer an action brought before a justice of the peace to the circuit court on the ground that the title to real estate is in question, the statutory directions must be strictly observed.[67] The city court of New York does not lose jurisdiction by the entry of an order of interpleader under the banking law where the object of the suit is to recover money on deposit.[68] The Pennsylvania statute of 1901, transferring jurisdiction of railway crossings over highways to the common pleas, nullified pending proceedings in the quarter sessions.[69] Cases involving questions of citizenship of the Choctaw tribe of Indians must be transferred to the citizenship court established by congress to decide such questions.[70]

§ 14. Objections to jurisdiction and presumptions respecting it.[71]—Courts notice their want of jurisdiction of their own motion,[72] and when at any time or in any manner it is in good faith represented to the court by a party or amicus curiae that it has not jurisdiction, it will examine the grounds of its jurisdiction before proceeding further.[73] This is the rule whether counsel raise the question, or presently waive it or expressly assent to the jurisdiction,[74] and the question must be determined though not insisted on.[75] The court cannot decline to consider an objection to the jurisdiction merely because it is characterized by plaintiff as "technical."[76]

A plea to the jurisdiction must set forth the facts from which the lack of jurisdiction appears;[77] but in New Jersey such a plea need not designate a court which has jurisdiction.[78] A defense to an action on a bond that it was extorted in proceedings void for want of jurisdiction is the subject of a plea in bar and not of a plea to the jurisdiction,[79] and where defendant's objections all appear of record, his remedy is by appearance to move for dismissal and not by plea in abatement.[80] An officer's return to a writ cannot be falsified by plea in abatement.[81] The question of jurisdiction may be raised by motion to dismiss the suit,[82] and the question of jurisdiction of the subject-matter may be raised by demurrer or answer.[83] On a demurrer to a plea to the jurisdiction, the declaration is not brought in question.[84] Under the Code, whether a plaintiff plants his cause of action at law or in equity from the aspect of common-law procedure does not, if properly planted, raise a jurisdictional question in the strict sense of the term;

only a question of practice.[85] Where the service papers do not affirmatively show jurisdiction and it is questioned, the burden is on plaintiff to show it.[86] The judgment on demurrer to plea to the jurisdiction, if in favor of plaintiff, is respondeat ouster.[87]

After a court which has general jurisdiction over a certain class of cases proceeds without objection to the hearing and determination of a cause belonging to that class, it is too late on appeal to raise objections to the irregular exercise of jurisdiction.[88] But whether the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter,[89] and questions of jurisdiction arising on the face of the record, may be raised at any time.[90] The trial of an action at a place where the court had no power to sit is jurisdictional and is not waived by failure to raise the question in the trial court.[91] A plea to the jurisdiction as to the person as well as to the subject-matter may be united with a plea to the merits without waiving the question of the jurisdiction.[92] Knowledge of persons not served that the court is about to proceed against them without jurisdiction is not a waiver.[93]

A court of general jurisdiction will be presumed to have acted within its jurisdiction,[94] and in the absence of anything in the record showing the lack of it, will be presumed to have had jurisdiction over parties against whom judgment was rendered.[95] As to courts of special and limited jurisdiction, no presumptions are indulged,[96] but once it appears jurisdiction has attached, the usual presumptions are indulged in favor of its continuance.[97] Presumptions will be indulged in favor of the jurisdiction of probate as well as other superior courts, in matters within probate jurisdiction.[98] Presumptions indulged to sustain a record against collateral attack can only be made to supply the record in matters regarding which it is silent, and cannot be permitted to contradict the record in matters in which it speaks for itself.[99]

§ 1. Necessity or occasion for jury trial. A. Under the constitution.[3]—The common-law right of trial by jury is guaranteed by the Federal constitution and by the constitutions of the several states.[4]

In the absence of specific enlargement or limitation, the guaranteed right is that which existed at common law,[5] or prior to the adoption of the constitution,[6] and includes issues of fact in cases at law.[7] It is not a matter of right in probate proceedings or appeal therefrom,[8] or in suits in equity,[9] or in quo warranto

14. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909. Whether or not a statutory action is to be tried by jury is to be determined, in the absence of a statutory declaration on the point, by reference to whether it is in nature an action at law or in equity. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909; New Harmony Lodge v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 100 Mo. App. 407, 74 S. W. 5.

15. Action for trespass and injunction, answer claiming highway. State v. Hart, 26 Utah, 229, 72 P. 938. A statutory action is not necessarily to be tried by jury. Whether it is or is not is to be determined, in the absence of statutory declarations on the subject, with reference to whether its general characteristics are those of an action at law or one in equity from the aspect of the old remedies. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909. In an action asking for an injunction to abate a nuisance and that damages be awarded, the fact that equitable relief is sought does not bar the right to a jury trial, since at common law, and prior to the adoption of the constitutions of the state and nation, damages caused by the maintenance of a nuisance were triable by jury. Chessman v. Hale [Mont.] 79 P. 254. In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien if it is shown by counterclaim that there is a demand for affirmative relief, either party is entitled to a jury trial on that issue if it is in the nature of an action at law. Robertson v. Moore [Idaho] 77 P. 218. Actions involving title depending upon questions of abandonment or adverse possession are triable to a jury, and a court of equity will rarely assume the burden of determining them, even though equitable remedies are necessary. Tudor Boiler Mfg. Co. v. Greenwald Co., 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 37. Where the plaintiff alleges damages spe-take cognizance of a right, and has power to proceed to a judgment which affords a plain, adequate and complete remedy, without the aid of a court of equity, the plaintiff must proceed at law, because defendant has a constitutional right to a trial by jury.[16] But when the court orders two causes one an equity cause the other a law cause to be consolidated, and there is no objection, the court properly trics the issues of law and fact together.[17] That issues of fact in an equity case were tricd by a jury as in a case at law is not prejudicial where the right result was reached, as it is unimportant that the court had the assistance of a jury.[18]

There is no constitutional right in Maine to a jury trial to assess damages for property taken by eminent domain.[19] There is, however, in Illinois.[20] But where such proceedings are taken and no objection to the denial of trial by jury is made, the right is waived.[21] Statutes providing that insurance companies shall be estopped to deny that property was of the value for which it was insured are not violative of the right.[22] Statutes providing for special findings at the request of the parties[23] authorizing direction of verdict where there is no conflict in the evidence, and that introduced demands a particular verdict,[24] and providing for a new trial for insufficiency of evidence or excessive damages do not interfere, such power having always been exercised by common-law courts irrespective of statute.[25] A statute providing that if special interrogatories are requested by a party he must submit them to his adversary before argument does not violate the ancient mode of trial by jury.[26] Where a jury trial is a matter of constitutional right, it is a sufficient compliance with this guaranty that the statute provides a jury trial on appeal;[27] and a person who owns property sufficient to secure costs is not deprived of the right of a trial by jury, because required to give security.[28] A statute providing for a change of venue in criminal cases by the state, on application of its attorney,[29] and that a crime committed in two counties may be prosecuted in either, is not unconstitutional as violating the right of trial by a jury of the vicinage,[30] nor is the right violated by drawing a jury from an adjoining county when the court deem it impossible to get an impartial jury from the county where the case is to be tried.[31] When one party properly demands a jury within the required time and later waives the right, the other party still has a right to demand a jury by tendering the jury fees.[32]

Cases of contempt of court were never triable by jury.[33]

Character of jury guaranteed.[34]—Unless otherwise provided by constitutional enactment, the jury guaranteed means a jury of twelve,[35] whose verdict must be unanimous.[36] Unanimity, however, has been dispensed with in some states.[37] And in Kansas in a prosecution for a misdemeanor, defendant, with consent of the prosecuting attorney and the court, may waive trial by a full jury and consent to be tried by a jury of eleven persons.[38]

Mandamus to compel a jury trial.[39]

(§ 1) B. In cases not covered by constitution.[40]—In many states, provision is made for the submission of issues of fact in equity cases to a jury. In such cases it is generally a matter of discretion whether a jury shall be called,[41] and when called their verdict is merely advisory, the court being free to accept or reject it.[42] The statutes of several states provide that all actions to recover money or specific personalty shall be tried by a jury unless the same is waived or the issues referred.[43] In Michigan disputed questions of fact on appeal from decisions of the probate court must, if either party so asks, be tried by a jury,[44] and in Illinois a defaulted defendant is entitled on asking it to have his damages assessed by a jury; the statute being imperative and not open to construction.[45] The right to a jury trial on issues raised before an auditor in the distribution of a fund is based entirely on the statute.[46] Where the statutory right is based on the existence of certain facts, they must appear from the record to entitle to it;[47] but where claims are set up that entitle to a jury trial it is error for the court to pass upon the facts, even in equity cases, unless jury is waived.[48]

The criterion by which the right to a jury trial is determined is the character of the action,—that is the relief sought,—not the distinction between legal and equitable properties. This does not mean that the right depends on the prayer for relief, but that it depends on whether the contents of the pleadings call for a legal judgment, or for one in the nature of a decree in chancery, whether the issues to be tried are legal or equitable. 48. Code W. Va. 1873, c. 148, § 25. Lips-

(§ 1) C. Loss or waiver of right.[49]—The right may be waived, in civil cases,[50] and a statute providing that unless a jury is demanded in accordance with its provisions it shall be deemed waived does not impair the right;[51] but defendant in a criminal case cannot consent to a trial by the court,[52] and where persons sui juris are, without any action on their part, secure in the right of a jury trial, an act that makes the right of one under 14 years of age depend upon his demand for it, violates the constitutional guaranty.[53] Persons accused of petty offenses may, however, waive jury trial,[54] and one who waives trial by jury and consents to be tried by the judge will not be heard after trial and conviction to say that the method of selecting a jury is unconstitutional, nor that he has been deprived of his liberty "without due process of law."[55] When a party has been granted a jury trial upon his own request, he cannot complain that damages were assessed by this jury, instead of by the jury provided for in condemnation proceedings.[56] Although jury has been waived by failure to comply with the statute, the court may, in its discretion, grant a jury trial.[57]

What constitutes waiver. In general.[58]—Any unequivocal acts or conduct which show a willingness or intention to forego the right, and are so treated by the trial court without objection, will amount to a waiver. Thus, consent to a reference,[59] failure or delay in moving to have a cause transferred to the law docket,[60] admitting or stipulating the facts,[61] and a plea of guilty,[62] have been held to waive the right to a jury trial. In some states the statutes prescribe the manner in which waiver may be shown.[63] An express waiver is necessary in the Federal court, but a stipulation clearly contemplating a finding of the facts by the court is sufficient.[64]

Waiver by nonassertion of right.[65]—Failure to seasonably demand a jury may work a waiver of the right.[66] So may a voluntary submission of issues of fact to the court,[67] or failure to appear.[68]

Effect of failure to pay cost of jury.[69]—In the absence of a statute so providing, refusal by a party to pay in advance the cost of a venire does not constitute a waiver,[70] but a statute providing for a reasonable jury fee is valid, and a party failing to advance it as the statute provides will be held to have waived his right.[71]

in making the verdict where no challenge was interposed,[80] or his examination on voir dire did not extend to the matter in question,[81] and in such case on appeal it will be presumed that the proceedings were regular, and that the jurors were good and lawful men.[82] A juror may be excused on account of illness.[83]

§ 3. Disqualification pertaining to the particular cause. Constitutional right to unbiased and unprejudiced jurors.[84]—The constitution of the United States and of the several states guarantees right to trial by an impartial jury;[85] but a verdict will not be set aside on the ground of bias of a juror, in the absence of a positive showing,[86] and objections on that ground are waived if the juror is not examined with regard to them before trial, notwithstanding the fact of incompetency was not known until after trial.[87]

Conscientious scruples against capital punishment[88] are ground for challenge in some states where that punishment is inflicted.[89]

Prejudice against class of litigants or actions.[90]—A party should be permitted to ask jurors if they have any prejudice against the class of litigants to which he belongs;[91] but the existence of a special desire on the part of a juror to have a particular law enforced does not disqualify him to sit as a juror, where a person is to be tried for violation of that law,[92] and a juror not otherwise disqualified will not be, in a perjury case, because he had some feeling in the related case.[93] Prejudice against insanity as a defense, does not disqualify jurors, if they testify that they will follow the instructions of the court as to the law,[94] nor if the prejudice does not extend to cases where proof of real insanity is made.[95] The testimony of a juror on examination that it would take less testimony to prove malice in the killing of a woman than if the person killed were a man is not ground for a challenge for cause where the accused is being tried for the murder of a woman.[96]

Knowledge of issues involved.[97]—A juror who has intimate knowledge of the material issues involved may be properly excluded;[98] but a juror is not disqualified because he sat upon a panel that convicted another defendant of a like but different crime upon the same prosecutrix;[99] though where several defendants are charged with an offense arising out of the same conspiracy and the same evidence is relied upon to sustain a conviction of each, jurors who sat in the trial of one previously indicted are subject to challenge for cause.[1] Where a jury found against the defendant in a special issue, it is not disqualified thereby to hear the main issue if the trial is one continuous proceeding.[2] After the trial of an accused for murder it is not sufficient ground for reversal to show that a juror had given some thought or made some individual investigation affecting the provable guilt or innocence of the accused.[3]

Opinion on issues involved.[4]—A juror must not have formed an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant[5] that will affect his verdict,[6] and generally an unqualified opinion is ground for challenge for cause,[7] if upon a material issue.[8] The courts, however, distinguish between an opinion which it will require evidence to remove and a mere impression;[9] the trend of recent decisions being to limit rather than extend the rule disqualifying jurors for opinion.[10] And in several states, by express provision of the code, a qualified opinion based on rumor and newspaper accounts that can be removed by evidence[11] or that can be laid

7. State v. John [Iowa] 100 N. W. 193; State v. Roberts [Nev.] 77 P. 598. Refusal to challenge for expressed prejudice is ground for reversal. When a juror testifies that he has a prejudice against the defendant and that it demands a stronger defense in case of this defendant than that of another, refusal to challenge is a ground for reversal. Billmeyer v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 536.

8. A juror is not disqualified in a homicide case by the statement that he had formed an opinion which it would take evidence to remove, where the only issue to be tried is the insanity of the defendant. Keffer v. State [Wyo.] 73 P. 556. The legal disqualifications of a juror must be tested by something more certain than the bare possibility that he may be prejudiced by his belief of an immaterial fact. A juror was challenged in a perjury trial upon the ground of bias because he had previously sat as juror in the case of another member of the city council, who had been convicted of accepting a bribe in pursuance of the same conspiracy. People v. Albers [Mich.] 100 N. W. 908.

9. The juror testified on his voir dire that he had formed an opinion which it would take evidence to remove, but that he believed that he could disregard this opinion and try the case according to the law and the evidence. Held that he should have been excused on challenge for cause. State v. Riley [Wash.] 78 P. 1001.

10. McCue v. Com. [Va.] 49 S. E. 623. Juror having read newspaper accounts but not having formed any opinion is a competent juror. State v. Lewis, 181 Mo. 235, 79 S. W. 671; Taylor v. State [Ark.] 82 S. W. 495. It is not error to deny a challenge to a juror for bias where the juror's opinion was based on mere hearsay testimony, and he considered himself competent to act as juror. State v. Armstrong, 43 Or. 207, 73 P. 1022. Especially when the defendant's peremptories were not exhausted. State v. Hayes [S. C.] 48 S. E. 251; People v. Nunley, 142 Cal. 441, 76 P. 45. In California although the witness testified on voir dire that it would require evidence to prove the accused innocent of the charge of murder, it was held not good ground for challenge for cause, the juror having later testified that he would not favor conviction of the defendant unless his guilt be established. People v. Ochoa, 142 Cal. 268, 75 P. 847. When a juror's opinion or impressions are founded upon rumor or newspaper reports which he feels conscious he can dismiss and try the prisoner on the evidence, it is no error to overrule a challenge for cause. Capital case. Lindsay v. Ohio, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 409. For the court to decline to ask a juror if it would require evidence to remove his opinion is not error. State v. Hayes [S. C.] 48 S. E. 251.

11. Pen. Code, § 1076. People v. Sowell [Cal.] 78 P. 717. Code Miss. 1892, § 2355, provides in substance that a juror shall not be disqualified by reason of the fact that he has an opinion or impression as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, if it shall appear to the court that he is not biased and will be governed by the evidence. Impressions gained from newspapers that can be removed by testimony do not disqualify. Gam-

aside, does not disqualify.[12] Erroneous opinions as to the law governing the case do not disqualify a juror,[13] and the fact that a juror has certain notions as to his duty in fixing punishment does not affect his competency to sit.[14]

Interest.[15]—Where defendant is indemnified by an accident insurance company it is not error to permit a juror upon his voir dire to be asked if he is a stockholder or in any way interested in such company.[16]

Relationship or acquaintance.[17]—There are certain degrees of consanguinity and affinity within which bias will be presumed, from the fact of such relationship,[18] and very intimate friendship may be ground for challenge for cause;[19] but courts will not usually indulge in arbitrary or technical rules which may have the effect of excluding competent men from the jury.[20] An objection on the ground of relationship is waived if known and not taken before verdict.[21]

Proof of disqualification.[22]—Grounds of disqualification must clearly appear,[23] and where the evidence conflicts the findings of the trier are conclusive.[24] When the veracity of a juror is attacked upon the ground that he swore falsely upon his voir dire, it is not error for the judge to consider affidavits sustaining his character.[25] The fact that a juror asks questions of a witness tending to show which way he leaned is not ground for discharging the jury.[26]

§ 4. Discretion of court to excuse juror.[27]—The judgment of the trial court must govern very largely in the matter of the selection of a jury,[28] and a court of review will not interfere unless there is a clear violation of law or abuse of discretion.[29] The action of the court in excusing a talesman will not be reviewed when it does not appear that the juror drawn in his place was biased or acted corruptly.[30] The court may excuse a juror upon his own motion,[31] and he may in his discretion excuse a juror after he has been sworn if he believes him to be disqualified.[32]

§ 5. The jury list and drawing the panel.[33]—Failure to conform to the statutory requirements in selecting the names for the jury list or drawing the panel is ground for challenge to the array,[34] though generally the provisions of the statutes are held to be directory merely,[35] and statutes prescribing who shall constitute the panel are not to be construed to deprive the judges of discretion to excuse jurors or invalidate the panel if some of its members are lost through death, sickness, or other sufficient cause.[36] The conclusion of county commissioners in making up a list of properly qualified jurors is not open to question or review in the absence of evidence of bad faith.[37] Statutes creating jury commissions to select names from which jurors shall be drawn are upheld.[38] The participation of a commissioner before receiving his commission is not fatal,[39] and the participation of the sheriff is a ministerial function which may be performed by a deputy.[40] The records of the jury commissioners are not open for public inspection and a general request by the attorney for one accused of crime to be allowed to examine the list of names is properly denied.[41] The including of one or more unqualified persons in the list is not fatal, the defendant having the right to examine all jurors drawn as to their qualifications.[42] In the criminal prosecution of a negro, the fact that no negroes were drawn on the panel is not sufficient to show discrimination,[43] and where there is strong testimony tending to show that there are no negroes in the county qualified to sit as jurors objections founded on race discrimination in the selection of juries are without merit.[44] Drawings need not be secret, and are not invalidated because of the presence of persons having no duty in regard thereto.[45] Certiorari does not lie under Sec. 1068 of Cal. Held to be sufficient if a proper list is handed to them by the clerk. State v. Faulkner, 175 Mo. 546, 75 S. W. 116. The fact that one person was drawn and ordered to be summoned and another summoned presumably by mistake is not ground for quashing a special venire. Gregory v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 259. 50. Where the statute provides that the clerk of court shall make out a venire facias and deliver the same to the sheriff of Wayne county, commanding him or his deputies to summon the persons therein named to appear as jurors, judge of the Recorder's court has no authority to direct the venire facias to be given to the chief of police. Scott v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 366. Mills' Ann. St. § 869, providing that when any party shall make and file with the clerk of the proper court affidavit of prejudice against the sheriff of the county the clerk shall direct the original or other process to the coroner, is mandatory and does not give the court discretionary power to grant or refuse the motion to have the coroner summon a jury. 56. A party cannot complain that the court has excused jurors from the regular venire before his case was actually called. Thomas v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 161. It is not error for the court while the jury is being formed, to bring into court at the instance of the defendant a special jury trying another case, on which were three of the veniremen, who were tendered to the defendant, but were disqualified or challenged. The court explaining that if either of the jurors had been taken he would have discharged the special jury and placed the jurors in the box to try the defendant. Reyna v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 25. The names of additional jurors drawn by the commission upon order of the judge are a part of the panel and their names should be placed in the jury box. State v. Bordelon [La.] 37 So. 603.

is not prejudiced because some drawn in excess of the regular number are excused.[57] The names of all the jurors in the regular panel need not be in the box when drawing is commenced,[58] and a party may not complain because not allowed the entire panel from which to select a jury, where some of the jurors are serving in another case.[59] In Illinois jurors drawn for the various branches of a criminal court are drawn for but one court and may serve in any branch;[60] but in California it is reversible error to call in and empanel in one department jurors drawn for another.[61] The fact that a juror was erroneously discharged is not ground for reversal, if no prejudice is shown.[62] The jury in quo warranto proceedings in Georgia may be selected in the manner usual to other civil cases.[63] It is not necessary to a legal conviction of a felony that the order empaneling the jury recite that they are good and lawful men.[64]

§ 8. Arraying and challenging. A. Challenge to the array.[65]—A challenge to the array is a proper objection to the mode of summoning jurors,[66] but not to the qualifications of individual jurors,[67] nor to irregularities in preparing the jury list.[68] After the jury has been sworn, challenge to the array comes too late.[69]

(§ 8) B. Challenge for cause. Right to a list of jurors.[70]—There are statutes in some states providing that parties shall be served with a list of jurors a certain length of time before trial.[71]

The challenge.[72]—The right to challenge a juror for cause may be waived,[73] as by failure to object or challenge the juror before verdict,[74] or failure to extend the examination on his voir dire to the matter in question;[75] and there is no ground for reversal in the absence of a positive showing that the disqualification of the juror was not known to the defendant nor his counsel at the time the jury was empaneled,[76] but discovery of disqualifications is ground for a new trial, when the juror fails to disclose material facts in answer to questions sufficient to elicit the same.[77] A challenge for cause must be supported by sufficient grounds.[78]

57. Two panels were properly drawn. Two jurors in excess of the number required were excused. Chelsey v. State [Ga.] 49 S. E. 258.

58. When the case was called for trial some of the jurors on the regular panel had been drawn to serve on a jury in another department of the court, the names of the jurors remaining in the box being insufficient to complete the jury. Held that it was proper for the judge to order the names of the jurors, excused from the jury previously drawn, to be restored to the box and drawn to complete the second jury. State v. Houghton [Or.] 75 P. 887.

Overruling a challenge for cause is harmless where the party challenging had not exercised all his peremptories when the panel was complete.[79]

(§ 8) C. Peremptory challenges and standing jurors aside. Peremptory challenges.[80]—The object of peremptory challenges is to insure a fair trial, not to permit the accused to choose his own jury.[81]

Number allowed.[82]—The statutes of the several states and the United States provide what number of peremptory challenges are allowable in their several courts, the number varying in different cases.[83] In civil cases, persons jointly interested constitute one party and generally are allowed only one party's peremptory challenges.[84] The like is true of persons jointly indicted for misdemeanor.[85] The rule, however, is different in felony,[86] and where several separate indictments are tried together, the accused is entitled to the full number of peremptory challenges for each indictment; but a greater or less number of counts contained in the same indictment does not affect the right to challenge.[87]

Time for challenge.[88]—Generally, peremptory challenges will be entertained any time before jury is accepted and sworn,[89] but must be interposed before it is sworn.[90]

Where a juror informs the court that he has conscientious scruples about capital punishment there is no error in allowing the state to peremptorily challenge him after he has been accepted and taken on the jury.[91]

Jurors out of court room.[92]

Order of challenges.[93]—The order of challenging is frequently regulated by statute,[94] but state statutes providing the order in which jurors shall be challenged are not binding upon Federal courts sitting in that state.[95]

(§ 8) D. Examination of jurors and trial of challenges. Challenge should precede the examination. The scope of the examination.[96]—The trial court exercises a broad discretion in the matter of ascertaining the fitness of persons for jury service,[97] though the counsel for each party must confine their examination within reasonable limits by pertinent questions subject to the court's reasonable control.[98]

98. A party should to enable him to exercise his peremptories be permitted to ask if any business relations exist between the juror and the opposite party to the action. But its refusal is not reversible error in the absence of a showing of prejudice. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Weber [Ky.] 82 S. W. 986.

A juror cannot upon his voir dire be questioned about his verdict in a prior case,[99] nor as to his conception of a reasonable doubt,[1] nor as to whether he would believe a certain witness on oath.[2] They may be asked if they are stockholders in a company which indemnifies defendant.[3] Prosecutor may waive his right to examine jurors on their general qualifications,[4] and the question cannot be raised after verdict found.[5] A juror is not guilty of misconduct by making an answer claimed to be untrue, where he did not intend to lie, but the question of counsel was leading.[6] It is not error for the court to receive affidavits of the character of a juror who had sworn falsely on his voir dire, and whose credit and veracity was attacked.[7]

Further examination after jurors are passed discretionary with court.[8]—The court may permit a juror to be examined again and challenged for cause after he has been passed, where the court and parties have been misled by his answers and it is found that he is disqualified,[9] but permission to re-examine is not of right.[10] Where a jury has found against the defendant in a special issue, defendant is not entitled to re-examine the jury as to its qualifications to sit and try the remaining issues.[11]

Tribunal for trial of challenges.[12]—When the disqualification of a grand juror is raised by plea in abatement, a jury may be called to determine upon the truth of the alleged disqualifications.[13]

Review on appeal of findings of trial court.[14]—The statutes in some states provide that the decisions of the trial court upon challenge to the panel and for cause upon motion to set aside an indictment or upon motion for new trial shall not be subject to review,[15] and generally the appeal court will not review lower court's holding in refusing a challenge where the persons challenged did not serve on the jury,[16] or an exception has not been taken,[17] or the parties do not allege that their cause was prejudiced by the ruling.[18]

When improperly overruling challenge is ground for setting aside verdict.[19]—Refusal to sustain a challenge is not ground for reversal where a jury is secured before defendant exhausts his peremptories.[20]

§ 9. Talesmen and additional jurors. Authority to procure additional jurors.[21]—There are, in most states, statutes providing for obtaining jurors where those on the regular panel are insufficient.[22] In Iowa where names in addition to the regular panel are drawn from the petit jury box for a particular case, they become, as to that case, a part of the regular panel, and talesmen are not authorized until they are exhausted.[23] In Louisiana although jurors are ordered by the court to be drawn from the parish at large and not from the bystanders, they are nevertheless talesmen,[24] and their names are not to be placed in the box with the regular panel.[25]

Method of selecting talesmen.[26]—Where the statute authorizes it, there is no abuse of discretion in refusing a second drawn jury and ordering the sheriff to summon talesmen though the trial is for the murder of another sheriff.[27] The fact that officers who selected talesmen were not sworn, will not be considered on review, where no exception has been saved.[28] In Indiana the manner of filling vacancies occurring in the regular panel of a petit jury is within the discretion of the court.[29]

§ 10. Special and struck juries and juries of less than twelve.[30]—Where the statutes provide for special juries, the demand therefor must be seasonably made,[31] and in West Virginia the motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the court.[32] In several states the statutes provide for special venires in capital cases,[33] but the right to a special venire is waived by consent to have the jury drawn from the regular panel.[34]

§ 11. Swearing.[35]—Where one or more jurors have, by mistake, been sworn with the others, if before proceeding farther with the case they are discharged and others who have been agreed upon are sworn in their places, there is a good jury.[36] It is not necessary that the oath prescribed for jurors in civil cases should have been administered to a jury empaneled to try criminal cases,[37] nor is it necessary that the form of oath be entered on record.[38] It is sufficient if the record shows that the jury was duly sworn.[39]

§ 1. The office.[1]—A justice is commonly a civil magistrate, but has duties imposed upon him in connection with the administration of the criminal law.[2] It is within the power of the legislature to abolish his office[3] unless its existence is constitutional.[4] When a justice's district is abolished, his office necessarily ceases to exist;[5] but a county court made up of justices is not abolished by extinguishing the office of a part of the justices composing it.[6] In some states he is required to be commissioned by the governor.[7] The legislature can provide for the appointment of no more justices than is allowed by the constitution.[8] A state constitution directing the election of justices of the peace repeals statutes that vest other persons with similar judicial powers.[9] In a justice's court an attorney is one of fact and not of law.[10] In Connecticut his court is a court of record.[11]

§ 2. Compensation, duties and liabilities.[12]—Though compensated by salary for entertaining a certain class of cases, he is entitled to the fees provided by law when he hears a cause not exclusively within his jurisdiction.[13] Changing the method of ascertaining his compensation from fees to salary is not a violation of a constitutional provision prohibiting an increase after election, it not being shown that compensation was thereby increased;[14] but providing that he shall receive not to exceed a certain amount in fees violates a provision that compensation of public officers shall be regulated in proportion to their duties.[15] In Oregon he is entitled to fees for services performed by him as a committing magistrate,[16] and an action at law may be maintained to recover them.[17]

In disposing of any cause properly before him, he acts as a judicial officer[18] and is not personally liable for erroneous judicial acts,[19] and if in exercising a jurisdiction which does not belong to him, he issues an illegal order, it is not to be treated as so absolutely void as to afford him no protection for what may be done under it;[20] but where he acts wholly without jurisdiction, he is a trespasser.[21]

Jurisdiction may be gained by process against persons[35] or property,[36] or by appearance.[37] Once gained, it continues until legal disposition of the case.[38] Any postponement or continuance outside the terms of statutory authority divests it.[39] He loses jurisdiction by absence on the trial day,[40] unless the parties appear and stipulate for a continuance,[41] but not by nonappearance of the parties,[42] and where jurisdiction of the person is lost by defective proceedings or irregularities, it may be restored by appearance or waiver.[43] Jurisdiction lost because of unlawful adjournment is not restored by a party's subsequent participation in the trial.[44]

tional amount, the justice of the peace is ousted.[55] A single cause of action cannot be split so as to make the amount within the jurisdiction,[56] but where items of a claim have been incurred under different contracts and the aggregate exceeds the statutory amount, an action may be maintained on each item separately.[57] In the absence of statute, jurisdiction cannot be ousted by filing a counterclaim for an amount beyond his jurisdiction.[58] The statutory limit as to amount in justice courts does not apply to forcible detainer actions, nor can a cross demand of any kind be set up therein.[59]

Title to realty[60] is involved in action for damages for breach of a personal covenant, where such breach consists of an eviction by one having a paramount title,[61] but not in replevin for a deed.[62] An action to recover the purchase price paid, after the contract is at an end, is not an action founded "on a contract for real estate."[63] Where allegations of title[64] can be put in issue only in a specified way, the failure to do so leaves them admitted and the jurisdiction unaffected.[65]

Objections to the jurisdiction[66] are waived by pleading and submitting to a trial on the merits of the case.[67] A special appeal on the ground of want of jurisdiction is waived by pleading to the merits and going to trial in the circuit court.[68] An objection that an action was commenced in the wrong county may raise not only a question of law but one of fact, and entitle defendant to a judgment of nonsuit, though he does not defend on the merits.[69] Where jurisdiction is asserted by one party and denied by the other, the evidence should be heard.[70] The facts involved may be decided by the justice on plea to his jurisdiction by reason of nonresidence.[71]

Improper entries of an otherwise valid attachment have no effect on jurisdiction. First Nat. Bank v. Hesser [Okl.] 77 P. 36.

NOTE. Dockets: The strictness required in keeping the docket of a superior court need not be observed. Failure of the justice to sign his name does not render the judgment void (Fulton v. State, 103 Wis. 238, 74 Am. St. Rep. 854), nor does the fact that he signs with his initials (Gunn v. Tackett, 67 Ga. 725). A statute requiring the entry of a judgment on the docket is merely directory. Hickey v. Hinsdale, 8 Mich. 267, 77 Am. Dec. 450. Hence failure to enter does not render the judgment void. Fish v. Emerson, 44 N. Y. 376. If the docket contains the names of the parties and the amount of the judgment, it is sufficient. Stokes v. Coonis, 4 N. J. Law, 159; Elliott v. Jordan, 7 Baxt. [Tenn.] 376; Wahrenberger v. Horan, 18 Tex. 57. A statute requiring the judgment to be entered forthwith

Change of venue[75] must be taken to the place prescribed by law.[76] On refusing to pay costs of transcript made prerequisite for change of venue, the original justice should proceed to trial.[77] In such case oral notice to attorney that the trial will proceed suffices.[78]

Transfer of causes.—In New York a justice has no power to transfer an action from himself to another justice unless his term of office is about to expire,[79] and in no event can he transfer a cause without notice to the defendant.[80] Notice of date of trial of a transferred cause should be served on the parties, not on their attorneys.[81] In Nebraska the sickness or necessary absence which authorizes the calling in of another justice is such as occurs at the time appointed for trial.[82] After a transfer, parties are not charged with notice of what the justice does in the case.[83]

Contempt.[84]—In Massachusetts a justice cannot commit for contempt a witness who refuses to answer an interrogatory put to him.[85]

Attachment and garnishment[86] have in their general features been treated of in other topics.[87] Public notice of the goods and chattels attached must be posted as required by law.[88] An affidavit of attachment cannot be amended so as to state a cause of action different from that stated in the original affidavit.[89] Where an attachment is properly issued and property taken thereunder, the lien is not lost by failure of the justice to make proper docket entries of the issuance of such order of attachment.[90] A fi. fa. issued on a judgment is sufficient evidence of the judgment against the principal debtor.[91] A judgment rendered against a garnishee before judgment rendered the principal defendant is void.[92]

Process and appearance.[93]—Process must be served as required by law,[94] and if the manner of serving is mandatory, it must be strictly pursued.[95] New notice is necessary after continuance beyond the statute.[96] Ministerial duties relative requires only substantial compliance, and an entry within two or three days is sufficient. Hall v. Tuttle, 6 Hill [N. Y.] 38, 40 Am. Dec. 382; Conwell v. Kuykendall, 29 Kan. 707. From note to Western Sav. Co. v. Currey [Or.] 87 Am. St. Rep. 672.

to process may be delegated.[97] A facsimile signature is a sufficient subscription.[98] In Michigan, service of process on one joint debtor is sufficient to give jurisdiction of all.[99] There must be a legal return of service.[1] The return may be amended after the action has begun,[2] but not after judgment without notice to the parties.[3] Under a statute providing that where an action is brought upon a contract against two or more persons, one of whom shall not be found in the county where suit was brought, the justice may at any time within four days from the return day of a writ by which the action was commenced issue one or more alias writs of summons, the return day of the writ should be counted as one of the four,[4] and it is not necessary in order that the alias writs should issue that the officer's return should state that he had used due diligence to obtain personal service and that being unable to find defendant, he left a copy of the summons at his last place of abode.[5]

An appearance[5a] in the sense of being present is sufficient.[6] Where joint debtors are sued on the theory of the existence of a partnership between them, a special appearance by one to have the proceeding against him dismissed on the ground that he is not a partner is not equivalent to a plea in abatement.[7] Lack of service is cured by general appearance.[8] A statute providing for nonsuit in case a party fail to appear within a specified time does not apply to cases of adjournment.[9] In New York a plaintiff cannot be nonsuited for nonappearance at return day if he has filed a verified complaint to which there is no verified answer.[10]

A dismissal[10a] of a counterclaim does not dismiss the cause of action under a statute providing that the dismissal of a cause of action does not dismiss a counterclaim already filed.[11]

Pleadings and issues.[12]—Pleadings not provided for by statute cannot be interposed.[13] Particularity in pleading is not required.[14] The cause of action must, however, be set forth with some degree of certainty.[15] An informal or defective statement will be held sufficient after judgment.[16] No prayer for relief not specifically asked for will be read into a pleading,[17] but in the absence of a reply, a general denial to a counterclaim will be presumed.[18] A defendant is not required to file a written pleading;[19] without it he is entitled to show all facts tending to negative the plaintiff's right to recover,[20] and on appeal, a general denial is not a departure from the issues presented,[21] but if an answer is filed it will limit the issues as under the ordinary rules of pleading.[22] A plea of guilty can properly be put in only when the offense charged is one within his final jurisdiction.[23] Suit on an unverified account may be met by an unverified plea.[24] In Georgia, to admit disproof of a sworn open account sued on, the answer must be verified.[25] A statute providing that in certain actions against a corporation the plaintiff may take judgment by default unless the defendant serves with his pleading a copy of the order of the judge directing that the issues be tried does not apply to an action before a justice.[26] Under a statute providing that where title comes in question the defendant shall give bond, pay a fee for certifying the cause, etc., the justice does not lose jurisdiction unless the bond is approved and amount sufficient to pay the costs deposited.[27]

Evidence.[28]—Where suit on an unverified account has been personally served and the same is met by no defense, silence is to be treated as an admission of the correctness of the account.[29] A verified account attached to the summons performs the office of evidence.[30]

Trial by jury[30a] as a matter of right or propriety is fully treated in another place.[31] Under the Georgia practice of appealing to a jury, an appeal from a judgment against a municipal corporation must be entered in the name of the corporation.[32] A plea cannot be filed on an appeal to the jury when it appears that no defense was made at or before the first term of the case.[33] Omission of the juror's name from the list is ground for challenge in Georgia,[34] but advantage cannot be taken of it after verdict, even if the party was ignorant of the omission.[35]

Verdict and judgment.[36]—A general verdict rendered in a case where the evidence fails to support one of the causes of action alleged is bad.[37] Ordinarily, the judgment must be entered within the time provided by statute.[38] The period does not commence to run until after final submission of the cause.[39] The entry being a purely ministerial act,[40] failure to do so does not render the judgment void,[41] especially when by consent of the parties the case is taken under advisement for a time,[42] unless the statute makes entry part of rendition. This requirement may be waived by the parties.[43] A statute under which an attorney may enter judgment on a verdict does not deprive the justice of power to do so.[44] Judgment entered without notice before return day is erroneous, though it was not permissible to set a day so late.[45] Where there is a duty to enter judgment, mandamus will lie to compel him to do so.[46] A judgment founded on a complaint not stating a cause of action is a nullity.[47] A judgment cannot be rendered for plaintiff for the sum demanded and in favor of the defendant for costs.[48] Questions as to the description or misjoinder of the parties[49] and the fact of personal service are concluded by the judgment.[50] A judgment is not rendered subject to collateral attack by reason of a nonprejudicial defect in the original notice,[51] nor by the fact that it was prematurely entered.[52] The statutory requirements necessary to revive a judgment must be complied with in order to give the justice jurisdiction.[53] Suit to set aside a judgment must be brought within the prescribed period.[54]

52. Judgment rendered on a transferred cause without notice to the parties of date of trial as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 3974. Cullen v. Callison [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 290. Judgment within ten days (Rev. St. 1899, § 3862) is not void, but erroneous. Fry v. Armstrong [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1001.

53. Filing of an affidavit stating that the judgment sought to be revived has not been paid [Rev. St. 1896, § 4023]. Bick v. Tanzey, 181 Mo. 515, 80 S. W. 902.

54. Barred after four years. During all this period defendant had knowledge of the judgment. Warren v. Foust [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 323.

In Mississippi judgment may be enrolled in any county in the state.[55]

A default judgment[55a] must be based on the relief demanded by the pleadings.[56] If not, the defect may be shown in a suit to restrain its enforcement.[57] A judgment entered for nonappearance is not a judgment by default where the defendant has filed an answer putting in issue the material allegations of the complaint.[58]

Judgment by confession.—Where defendant, in obedience to process, appears and orally admits his liability, the judgment entered is a judgment by confession.[59] In Missouri, confession of judgment need not be in writing if defendant appear.[60]

Execution[61] must be issued within the time limited by statute after judgment entered,[62] and be executed as provided by law.[63] An execution may be issued from the district court, though the amount is not within such court's jurisdiction.[64] Under the Tennessee law a levy from a justice is not a lien on land as to third persons after ten days, unless the execution and papers are filed and docketed in the circuit court.[65] In Georgia, in order to arrest the running of the dormancy statute, entries on the execution must be recorded on the execution docket of the superior court of the county of the defendant's residence.[66]
