In every case of an ultra vires engagement, entered into bona fide, a corporation must account for any benefit derived therefrom. Richmond Guano Co. v. Farmers' Cotton Seed Oil Mill & Ginnery Co. [C. C. A.] 126 F. 712. Where a corporation accepts the benefit of a contract executed on its behalf by its president, it is liable thereon, regardless of the question of the president's original authority to execute it. Hunt v. Northwestern Mortg. Trust Co., 16 S. D. 241, 92 N. W. 23, citing Dedrick v. Mortgage Co., 12 S. D. 59. Where a private corporation gives its notes for a legal and valid consideration and appropriates the proceeds, it is estopped from asserting its want of power to execute the same. Peoria Star Co. v. Cutright, 115 Ill. App. 492, citing Bissell v. M. S. R. Co., 22 N. Y. 258; Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 413; National Home Bldg. Ass'n v. Bank, 181 Ill. 35. Even if a corporation does in fact borrow money without any express or implied power to do so, it must repay the money borrowed. Peoria Star Co. v. Cutright, 115 Ill. App. 492, citing Humphrey v. Patrons' Mer. Ass'n, 50 Iowa, 607; Larwell v. Hanover Ass'n, 40 Ohio St. 274; Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 413; Dorst v. Gale, 83 Ill. 136. The use of the money borrowed for an ultra vires purpose, though known to the lender, is no defense. Peoria Star Co. v. Cutright, 115 Ill. App. 492, citing Wright v. Hughes, 119 Ind. 324. Where defendant corporation received the proceeds of a fraudulent sale of its own stock it could not defend a suit for damages resulting therefrom on the ground of ultra vires. Krisch v. Interstate Fisheries Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 855. A solvent corporation that has accepted a transfer of its own stocks, under an agreement to pay the former owners an annuity, and has held the same and received the dividends thereon, for a number of years, cannot avoid the contract as ultra vires. Burnes v. Burnes, 132 F. 485. The plea of ultra vires will not avail a corporation with respect to an act for

But where any part of the contract remains executory, its invalidity may be effectively asserted, notwithstanding its partial performance;[90] and courts will not only refuse to compel execution of such contracts, but will interfere upon proper application to restrain performance of them.[91]

Stockholders who authorize ultra vires acts cannot afterward avoid the same in equity,[92] and third parties may also be estopped to set up the defense of ultra vires, by their dealings with the corporation and recognition of its right to act.[93] To enable stockholders to set aside ultra vires acts which the corporation itself may not take advantage of, they must show that the conduct of the officers or directors works a substantial injury.[94] Stockholders cannot defeat the sale of the corporations's franchise by asserting the want of legislative or charter authority of the purchasing corporation to buy the same.[95]

The plea of ultra vires[96] is not looked upon with favor.[97] Where the petition

92. Where no rights of the state or creditors intervene. Perkins v. Trinity Realty Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 167. Nor can the assignees of such stockholders avoid them, when consummated previous to the assignment or when their consummation is necessary to the protection of the interests of other persons. But such assignees may avoid ultra vires accommodation—indorsements for liabilities of the payor corporation arising since the assignment and after repudiation of such indorsements by the assignees. McCampbell v. Fountain Head R. Co. [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 1070.

The maker of a note cannot defend an action brought thereon by a corporation, or its privy, on the ground that the corporation had no power to take the note. Russell v. Cassidy, 108 Mo. App. 577, 84 S. W. 171. Defendant estopped, by failure to object to a list of subscribers to stock, to raise the question afterward that one of the subscriptions was made by a corporation and it did not appear that such corporation had power to purchase and hold corporate stock. Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman Poulsen & Co. [Or.] 80 P. 424. A judgment creditor of the president of a corporation cannot, by purchase on execution sale, defeat the corporation's title to property held by the president in trust, on the ground that the corporation was not authorized by its charter to hold such property. Scott v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank [Tex.] 75 S. W. 7. One who subscribes to the building of a railroad in consideration of its line running to a certain point without the state, is estopped to deny his obligation after the road has been built, on the ground that the contract was ultra vires, such a contract being within the general scope of the powers conferred on the railroad company. Doherty v. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899. Persons dealing with a corporation are chargeable with notice of the purpose of its creation and its powers. Harris v. Vienna Ice Cream Co., 91 N. Y. S. 317. does not disclose the incapacity of a corporation to make the contract sued on, the defense of ultra vires cannot be made under a general denial, but must be specially pleaded.[98] Where a corporation in its answer sets up the plea of ultra vires, facts not inconsistent with the petition may be pleaded in the reply, in the nature of an estoppel, or to show that, under the circumstances, the corporation might enter into the contract in question.[99]

§ 9. Torts, penalties and crimes.[1]—A corporation is liable for the negligence of its officers or agents, who may be jointly sued with it;[2] but only when they are acting under the authority of the corporation,[3] and within the scope of their authority.[4] A corporation may be liable for an assault,[5] for maintaining a nuisance,[6] for neglect of a quasi public duty,[7] and, in some cases for acts connected with, or growing out of, an attempted ultra vires contract.[8] A corporation may be punished criminally for peddling through the medium of an unlicensed agent.[9]

§ 10. Actions by and against corporations.[10]—Corporations are ordinarily empowered to sue and be sued as natural persons.[11] Several matters of proced-

2. Southern R. Co. v. Sittasen [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 898. Corporations, whether membership or stock corporations, are liable for the exercise of reasonable care in the selection of competent and skillful agents, employes and contractors. Ellsworth v. Franklin County Agricultural Soc., 99 App. Div. 119, 91 N. Y. S. 1040. An action for damages for personal injuries, by reason of the negligence of defendant, may be maintained against the receiver of a corporation. Where a judgment is rendered in a state court against a receiver appointed by a Federal court, it is proper to certify the judgment to the latter court, to be disposed of as that court may see fit (Reardon v. White [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 365), but, in the absence of statutory provisions, stockholders of a dissolved corporation are not individually liable for damages resulting from an act of negligence committed by the corporation before dissolution. Damages to plaintiff's steamboat by running against a stake supporting defendant's gas pipe in the river. Mudson v. Limestone Natural Gas Co., 132 F. 410.

3. Haggerty v. Potter, 111 Ill. App. 433. The treasurer of a charitable society, who, under its by-laws, had charge of its securities, etc., was not authorized to procure the transfer of railway stocks, registered in the corporation's name, and to sell them. Jennie Clarkson Home for Children v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 571. A corporation cannot be held liable for death by wrongful act, without proof that the corporation committed, or participated in, the wrongful act, as distinguished from the wrongful act of its servant. Birmingham S. R. Co. v. Gunn [Ala.] 37 So. 329.

4. For trespass on plaintiff's land. Bright v. Bell, 113 La. 810, 37 So. 764. A corporation held not liable in damages for slander uttered by its agent after he had left plaintiff's presence and gone to another locality where he was not engaged in the performance of any duty under the terms of his employment. International Text-Book Co. v. Heartt [C. C. A.] 136 F. 129. The mere fact that two corporations have the same officers does not make one liable for acts done by its officers in the performance of their duties to the other corporation, though they act upon information derived as officers of the first corporation. Holder v. Cannon Mfg. Co, 138 N. C. 308, 50 S. E. 681.

5. Before a corporation can be held for an assault, it must be shown that it owed some duty to the assaulted person and that the person committing it was acting under its authority. Haggerty v. Potter, 111 Ill. App. 433.

6. The fact that a corporation is quasi-public, and has erected a structure by virtue of the right of eminent domain, does not prevent an adjacent landowner's maintaining a second or third action against it for what, in case of a private person, would be a continuing nuisance. Hartman v. Pittsburg Inclined Plane Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 360.

7. The Associated Press held to have committed a tort by refusing to furnish a news service to plaintiff except upon terms greatly in excess of those ordinarily imposed by the association. News Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 114 Ill. App. 241. A court of equity, in Pennsylvania, cannot assess damages under the act of June 2, 1887 (P. L. 1887, p. 310), against a water company for failure to supply water to a private party during a breakdown. That act is for the protection of public interests and to insure performance of a public duty; it was not intended to abrogate the jurisdiction of the law courts to settle questions of damages between water companies and private individuals. Steck v. Bridgeport Water Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 188; Brace v. Pennsylvania Water Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 249.

titled to the same recognition in other states, unless it was formed for purposes illegal, or was doing acts prohibited under the laws of such other states. MacGinniss v. Amalgamated Copper Co., 45 Misc. 106, 91 N. Y. S. 591. A requested instruction that the defendant corporation was entitled to the same treatment in court as a private individual would be under the same circumstances, held correct, in itself, but properly refused because accompanied by improper and misleading language. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Burridge, 211 Ill. 9, 71 N. E. 838. A corporation can sue in its own name, without designating its president or any other officer in its petition. (New Orleans Terminal Co. v. Teller, 113 La. 733, 37 So. 624), and until its charter has been forfeited by proper proceedings, the corporation is the only proper party to defend an action brought against it. Its directors have no right as trustees to intervene. Rippstein v. Haynes Medina Valley R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 314.

12. A private corporation having its principal office in a certain county cannot be sued in another county for a trespass committed therein, when it has no agent, agency or place of business in the latter county. Civ. Code 1895, § 1900. Tuggle v. Enterprise Lumber Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 433. The venue of a cause of action on a certificate of a fraternal benefit association is the county of the member's residence at the time of his death. Hildebrand v. United Artisans [Or.] 79 P. 347.

13. Service of process on the "last vice-president" of an insolvent corporation, the president being a nonresident, under Rev. St. 1899, § 995. Youree v. Home Town Mut. Ins. Co., 180 Mo. 153, 79 S. W. 175. Return of service of summons by delivery of copy to the secretary at the company's business office in the county, he being in charge thereof and the president not being found in the county, held to give the circuit court jurisdiction. Under Rev. St. §§ 994-997. Taussig v. St. Louis & K. R. Co., 186 Mo. 269, 85 S. W. 378. Sheriff's return of service of process on a corporation held good, under clause e, § 2, Act of July 9, 1901, P. L. 614. Ben Franklin Coal Co. v. Penna. Water Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 628. The service of summons upon an agent of a corporation whom its general counsel stated was authorized to accept service, cannot be questioned by the corporation. Taylor Provision Co. v. Adams Exp. Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 10.

Held insufficient: Service by leaving a copy of the writ with the secretary and treasurer of the corporation in another county, where it had no business office, the president not being found in the county. Rev. St. § 995. Eminence Land & Min. Co. v. Current River Land & Cattle Co., 187 Mo. 420, 86 S. W. 145. Service of process on a resident attorney, who had been retained simply as such by a foreign corporation which had never transacted business in the state, notwithstanding Acts 1887, p. 387, c. 226, § 3 (Shannon's Code, § 4546) provides that process may be served on any agent of a foreign corporation within the county where suit is brought whatever his character may be. Thach v. Continental Traveler's Mut. Acc. Ass'n [Tenn.] 87 S. W. 255. Under a statute providing for the service of summons on the president or other chief officer, service on a person who had been appointed a receiver, but whose appointment had been held invalid. Rev. St. 1899, § 995. Youree v. Home Town Mut. Ins. Co., 180 Mo. 153, 79 S. W. 175. Service must be where the identical officer or agent prescribed in the statute. If the sheriff's return does not name the agent or officer whom service was made, it is not conclusive of his relation to the company. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Kelly [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 855. The secretary of a local assembly of a fraternal benefit association, whose duty it is to report deaths, receipts of money and membership, is a "clerk or agent" for the service of process in a county where none of the officers reside or keep an office. 1 B. & C. Comp. § 55. But the officer's return must show the reason for service on a local agent. Hildebrand v. United Artesans [Or.] 79 P. 347. In the absence of any showing as to his duties and to what extent he acted for the corporation, a member of its advisory committee is not an "agent," within the meaning of the statutory provisions for service of process upon corporations. Fahrig v. Milwaukee & Chicago Breweries, 113 Ill. App. 525. The service of summons against a corporation, on a stockholder who has been a director and trustee, after the corporation has ceased to do business, has no binding force on the other stockholders. Stanton v. Gilpin [Wash.] 80 P. 290. Valid service of process cannot ordinarily be made on an officer of a foreign corporation, who is temporarily within the state, although the foreign corporation may own lands and bring suits, within the state, to protect them from trespasses. Service on the president, while passing through on a train could not be made under N. M. Comp. Laws, 1897, § 450. Territory of New Mexico v. Baker, 196 U. S. 432, 49 Law Ed. 540. The secretary of a nonresident corporation, who was temporarily in the state, not having transacted "business for the corporation," did not come within the provisions of the statute which renders it possible to serve process on such persons. Southern Sawmill Co. v. American Hard Wood Lumber Co. [La.] 38 So. 977. But service of process on a general officer of a foreign corporation, who came into the state voluntarily to adjust differences between plaintiff and the corporation, relating to the subject-matter of the suit, was sufficient to confer jurisdiction of the corporation. Brush Creek Coal & Min. Co. v. Morgan-Gardner Elec. Co., 136 F. 505. It is not necessary that a summons against a corporation state facts showing that defendant is a corporation. Fisher v. Traders' Mut. Life Ins. Co., 136 N. C. 217, 48 S. E. 667.

14. The words "a corporation," appearing after plaintiff's name in the title of a case, are merely descriptive and do not constitute an allegation of incorporation. Boyce v. Augusta Camp, No. 7,429, M. W. A., 14 Okl. 642, 78 P. 322. A petition which does not show whether plaintiff is a partnership or corporation may be amended, after demurrer, so as to state that it is a corporation. Lucile Min. Co. v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1121. The use of the name "The Georgia Co-Operative Fire Association," in a petition, together with allegations relative to the transaction of business, imported a corporation. It was not necessary, even, as against a special demurrer, to allege the corporate existence of the plaintiff. Georgia Co-op. Fire Ass'n v. Borchardt & Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 429. Under a statute prohibiting any corporation from setting up a want of legal organization as a defense to any action, the petition need not allege facts showing compliance with the statute in organization, but a simple allegation that defendant is a corporation is sufficient. Ky. St. 1903, § 566. A corporation cannot defend against an action by the state to recover its organization tax, on the ground that under Ky. St. 1903, § 4225, its organization was incomplete on account of nonpayment of the tax, and hence it was not liable. Commonwealth v. Licking Valley Bldg. Ass'n No. 3, 26 Ky. L. R. 730, 82 S. W. 435. Where the petition alleged that defendant was a corporation organized under the laws of Illinois, and, upon denial of organization under the laws of Illinois, an amended petition was filed, identical with the original but alleging organization under the laws of Iowa, held, that the contention that two separate corporations were described was not well taken. The place of incorporation was immaterial to the cause of action stated. Sands v. Marquardt [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 1011. A corporation by appearing in an action admits its corporate existence. Herald Shoe Co. v. Oklahoma Pub. Co. [Okl.] 79 P. 111.

Verification of pleadings: When a corporation is a party to a suit, the verification of a pleading in its behalf may be made by a "managing or local agent thereof," as well as by an officer. Under Code, § 258, amended by Laws 1901, p. 854, c. 610. Godwin v. Carolina Tel. & T. Co., 136 N. C. 258, 48 S. E. 636. An affidavit of defense may be made by an agent of a corporation in its behalf and at its request, stating that he is the only party that has knowledge of the facts set forth in the plaintiff's statement, or the answers filed. Citizens' Natural Gas Co. v. Waynesburg Natural Gas Co., 210 Pa. 137, 59 A. 822.

Variance: A trifling variance in designating a corporation in a pleading is immaterial. "Underwriters' Fire Association at Dallas" held to be a harmless variance from "Underwriters' Fire Association of Dallas." Underwriters' Fire Ass'n v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1072. A variance as to the word "the" in the corporate name of defendant steamship company held insufficient to justify a reversal of the judgment for plaintiff. Carlson v. White Star S. S. Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 838. Where a railroad company was sued in its true corporate name, but the word "company" was omitted therefrom, the misnomer was an imperfection that could be cured by amendment in the appellate court, under Rev. St. 1899, § 672 (Brassfield v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 1032); but where plaintiff sued defendant corporation as a partnership, the objection was fatal. (Welton v. Genesee Lumber Co. [La.] 38 So. 580).

15. In a suit against a corporation to remove the price of materials alleged to have been furnished on the order of certain of its directors, the corporation is entitled to defend by showing that such directors acted for themselves or other parties, and not as directors of the corporation sought to be held. Reisig v. Grand Theatre Co., 91 N. Y. S. 14. An action cannot be maintained against a corporation not for profit, upon a certificate of indebtedness issued to be paid out of a certain surplus, to be applied to such payment by annual drawings. The certificates were issued to raise a fund for building purposes, upon the distinct understanding that they were to be so paid. Schwerfeger v. Columbia Gesang Verein, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 515. Where the name of a party in a complaint is stated in such words as to imply a corporation, such party will be presumed to be a corporation, until the fact is put in issue by a denial. Ohio Oil Co. v. Detamore [Ind.] 73 N. E. 906, citing Smythe v. Scott, 124 Ind. 183; Adams Exp. Co. v. Harris, 120 Ind. 73, 16 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 L. R. A. 214; Indianapolis Sun v. Hoerell, 53 Ind. 527; Harris v. Muskingum Mfg. Co., 4 Blackf. 267, 29 Am. Dec. 372.

16. Where one corporation sold its property and assets to another and transferred to the latter its stock, books and records, which remained in the possession and control of the purchasing corporation thereafter, entries in such books relating to the transaction were held admissible against the latter corporation without further authentication. Dancel v. Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co., 137 F. 157. Where a corporation sues to terminate a voting trust of stock which it owns in another corporation, such trust being composed of parties having little personal interest in either corporation, slight evidence of bad faith will be sufficient to justify a finding of fraud in the execution of the trust agreement so as to authorize a temporary injunction. Such an action held not violative of Laws 1892, p. 1958, c. 690, § 56, requiring the intervention of the attorney general in certain proceedings against corporations. Knickerbocker Inv. Co. v. Voorhees, 100 App. Div. 414, 91 N. Y. S. 816. An application for the appointment of a referee to take the depositions of officers of a corporation, to be used on a motion, will be denied where it appears from the counter-affidavits that they have no knowledge of the facts sought to be established. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Calvet-Rogniat, 46 Misc. 16, 93 N. Y. S. 238.

17. The rule that no personal judgment can be rendered against a nonresident, who has neither been served with summons within the state nor made an appearance, applies as well to corporations as to individuals. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 413. Under the statute of Wisconsin, allowing § 11. Legislative control over corporations.[18]—The legislative control over corporations of its own creation in the matter of publicity is complete,[19] and reasonable control of charter powers exercised pursuant to reserved powers,[20] or in the exercise of the police powers of the state,[21] is upheld. An action to wind up the corporation's affairs may be prosecuted to judgment more than three years after the termination of the life of the corporation. Id. In Arkansas, the property of plaintiff, acquired and held for the sole purpose of maintaining thereon a library, held not subject to sale under execution for tort, the corporation being a charitable trust, holding only a naked legal title, the beneficial interest being in the public. Sand. & H. Dig. § 3049, 3052-3055. Woman's Christian National Library Ass'n v. Fordyce [Ark.] 86 S. W. 417.

18. See 3 C. L. 893. See, also, Foreign Corporations, 3 C. L. 1455.

19. The public policy in regard to corporation affairs is absolute publicity of all corporate business. The object of the requirement of the receipt and record, by the county clerk, of semi-annual reports from the officers of corporations, showing their financial condition and who are shareholders, and the register of transfers of stock, is for the purposes of taxation and to show who has the control and management of corporations and who are liable in case of insolvency. Scott v. Houpt [Ark.] 83 S. W. 1057. Under the Indiana statute a manufacturing corporation has 20 days time within which to make and publish a statement of its assets and liabilities as of January 1. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5071. Stafford v. St. John [Ind.] 73 N. E. 596. It is competent for the legislature to make provisions for the publicity of the business and condition of investment and similar corporations and to classify them for such purpose. State v. Northwestern Trust Co. [Neb.] 101 N. W. 14. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 573, repealing charter powers and privileges inconsistent therewith, and Act March 19, 1894 (§§ 725-743, Ky. St. 1903), providing for the incorporation of real estate title insurance companies, a company incorporated under special act before the adoption of the present constitution, is restricted to the exercise of powers specified in the latter act. Hager v. Kentucky Title Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 183. A corporation doing a poultry and game business in England, Canada and Germany, having an agency in England and dealing with firms in Canada and Germany, held to be a corporation doing business without the United States, and entitled to additional time to make its reports. Hoboken Beef Co. v. Hand, 93 N. Y. S. 834. A manufacturing corporation held not to be "doing business without the United States," so as to be entitled to a longer time for filing its annual report under Laws 1890, p. 1066, c. 564, § 30, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 3, c. 2, and Laws 1897, p. 313, c. 384. West v. Grosvenor, 102 App. Div. 266, 92 N. Y. S. 429.

20. The right of legislative control over the articles of incorporation, by-laws, rules and regulations of domestic corporations being reserved. Iowa Code, § 1619. Marshalltown Light, Power & R. Co. v. Marshalltown [Iowa] 103 N. W. 1005. A statute regulating the pavement by street railway companies within and outside of the rails of their tracks, does not impair the obligation of a contract, although applied to a corporation granted a franchise, before its enactment, purporting to exempt it from liability for street paving. Iowa Code, § 834. Marshalltown Light, Power & R. Co. v. Marshalltown [Iowa] 103 N. W. 1005. In New York the constitutional reservation of the right to amend or repeal charters applies to general laws and special acts only, while the statutory reservation has application to the charters of all corporations granted by the legislature, unless the statute creating it or authorizing its creation, expressly or impliedly provides otherwise. Const. § 1, art. 8; 1 Rev. St. p. 600, § 8. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 94 N. Y. S. 65. In the absence of language reserving the power to annul and repeal, or of language clearly inconsistent and in conflict with such reservation of power, general provisions of law, reserving such right, must be deemed a part of every statute creating a corporation or providing for their creation. The act for the incorporation of stock life insurance companies does not reserve the right of amendment or repeal (Laws 1853, p. 887, c. 463), but makes all such companies subject to the general corporation laws. Held, that their charters were amendable under 1 Rev. St. p. 600, § 8. Id.

21. The state, in the exercise of its police power, may restrict the power of corporations to contract within certain prescribed limits, so as not to infringe upon the rights of individuals or the general well being of the state. Const. 1890, § 198, requires the enactment of laws to prevent trusts, etc.; and Code 1892, § 4437, defines combinations between corporations. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles [Miss.] 37 So. 939. A combination of corporations, organized by a series of contracts between each individual corporation and a constituent corporation having a merely nominal capital, to create a monopoly and prevent competition, held to be illegal, both at common law and under Sess. Acts 1889, p. 96, as originally enacted and as repealed and re-enacted by Sess. Acts 1891, p. 186. Finck v. Schneider Granite Co., 187 Mo. 244, 86 S. W. 213. The Kansas statute providing that any person, company or corporation violating any of the provisions of the "anti-trust law" shall be denied the right and prohibited from doing any business within the state, contemplates the prohibition only of continuing business in the state, in violation of the act. Section 5, c. 265, p. 482, Laws 1897. State v. Jack, 69 Kan. 387, 76 P. 911.

tion makes a contract of employment, subject to any change of method in doing business occasioned by a change in the state laws, an act of the legislature necessitating the abolishment of the "expense fund," from which the compensation was paid, terminates such contract.[22]

§ 12. How corporations may be dissolved; forfeiture of charter; effect of dissolution; winding up under statutory provisions.[23]—A corporation is dissolved and ceases to exist when its charter expires,[24] unless there is some statutory provision to the contrary;[25] and it is then not even a de facto corporation.[26] But corporate existence is not affected by the pendency of a creditor's suit, or the appointment of a receiver, or a decree for the sale of its assets;[27] neither will failure to elect officers,[28] nor to transact business,[29] dissolve a corporation.

Dissolution by consent of stockholders or directors.[30]—The act of dissolution, like the act of association, is not a corporate act but an act of the members of the corporation.[31]

Forfeiture of charter in proceedings by the state.[32]—Forfeiture will be decreed only for serious or intentional violations of the law,[33] involving public rights,[34]

22. Code, § 1619, makes corporations for pecuniary profit subject to such legislative control as is deemed necessary for the public good. Wood v. Iowa Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 126 Iowa, 464, 102 N. W. 410.

23. See 3 C. L. 893.

24. Clark v. American Cannel Coal Co. [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 727, citing Brookville & G. Turnpike Co. v. McCarty, 8 Ind. 392, 393, 65 Am. Dec. 768; Ft. Wayne, etc., v. Deam, 10 Ind. 563-565; Morgan v. Lawrenceburgh Ins. Co., 3 Ind. 506; Guaga Iron Co. v. Dawson, 4 Blackf. 262; Clark & M. Corp. § 82c, c. 247.

25. Under the direct provisions of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3429, the existence of a corporation in Indiana is continued three years after the expiration of its charter, for the prosecution and defense of suits. Clark v. American Cannel Coal Co. [Ind.] 73 N. E. 1083. And in Michigan, corporations whose charters have been annulled, by forfeiture or otherwise, do not at once cease to exist, but continue or three years for the prosecution or defense of suits by or against them, under Comp. Laws, § 8, c. 230, p. 2627. Held, that the receiver of such a corporation, under order of the Michigan court where the receivership proceedings were had, could sue out a writ of error in the Illinois supreme court in the name of the corporation. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 213 Ill. 561, 73 N. E. 430. Proceedings on petition of the bank commissioner, under the statutes of New Hampshire, to wind up a banking corporation, do not at once dissolve the corporation, so as to preclude a judgment against it by a Federal court. Pub. St. N. H. 1901, c. 162. Cheshire Provident Inst. v. Anglo-American Land Mortg. & Ag. Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 968.

Such proceedings do not prevent the corporation from acting as such, nor from incurring indebtedness (Atlas R. Supply Co. v. Lake & River R. Co., 134 F. 503), nor from using its corporate name (Youree v. Home Town Mut. Ins. Co., 180 Mo. 153, 79 S. W. 175).

28. Youree v. Home Town Mut. Ins. Co., 180 Mo. 153, 79 S. W. 175.

29. Its term of existence is fixed by law, and the state alone can question its existence meantime. This rule also applies to de facto corporations. San Diego Gas Co. v. Frame, 137 Cal. 441, 70 P. 25.

30. See 3 C. L. 894.

31. Pottsvile Bank v. Minersville Water Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 119. Held competent for the stockholders of a loan association, for the purpose of winding up its business, to estimate the value of the shares and to ascertain the amount to be paid by each borrowing member, after deducting the value of his stock. Star Loan Ass'n v. Moore, 4 Pen. [Del.] 308, 55 A. 946. When the members of a corporation commit to their officers the matter of effecting a dissolution, the officers are rather trustees of the members than corporate functionaries. Pottsville Bank v. Minersville Water Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 119.

32. See 3 C. L. 894.

33. If a corporation is found guilty of an act, which is expressly declared to be a cause of forfeiture of its franchise, a court has no discretion to refuse such a judgment; neither mistake on the part of the corporation, nor its subsequent good behavior will disable the state from demanding such judgment. State v. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 390. In an action by the state to forfeit a charter for the issue of fictitious stock, where the question of value is in doubt and, in the nature of things, a sale of the plant and a liquidation of the corporation is necessary to ascertain the residuary interest of the stockholders, the state should be nonsuited. State v. New Orleans Water Supply Co. [La.] 36 So. 117. Compliance with the requirements of its act of incorporation, by a corporation, will be presumed, in the absence of evidence of failure to comply. Applied in case of a railroad company's alleged failure to construct its road within the time prescribed in its charter. Chesapeake Beach R. Co. v. Washington, etc., R. Co., 23 App. D. C. 587.

and then only at suit of the state, in direct proceedings for that purpose.[35] The state may, by acquiescence or recognition, be estopped from questioning the validity of an act of incorporation.[36]

Custody and sale of property.[37]—When a business corporation dissolves and loses legal capacity to preserve its estate, equity will, if necessary, lay hold of its assets to compel a final liquidation of its affairs and a distribution of the capital among stockholders as in partnership associations.[38]

Statutory proceedings[39] for dissolution are provided in most states.[40]

§ 13. Succession of corporations; reorganization; consolidation.[41]—Consolidations and mergers, not creative of monopolies,[42] and reorganizations safeguard-

In a proceeding by the state to revoke the charter of a corporation, great effect could be given the fact that the tendency of the business was to deceive investors into making an investment which must necessarily disappoint them. Vokes v. Eaton [Ky.] 85 S. W. 174. The making of an ultra vires lease of its plant by a corporation is not a ground of forfeiture of its franchise, years after the avoidance of the lease and the resumption by the corporation of its duties. State v. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 390. Nor does the failure to pay the franchise tax imposed authorize the secretary of state to declare a charter forfeited. Art. 5243i, Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897. Rippstein v. Haynes Medina Valley R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 314.

34. In Louisiana insolvency of a corporation, evidenced by a return of no property found on execution, is ground for the forfeiture of its charter. Rev. St. § 688. Jones Co. v. Hoffman [La.] 38 So. 763. Courts have discretionary power as to declaring a forfeiture of a charter of a corporation for an act or omission which is not expressly made a ground of forfeiture by the charter, and will exercise such discretionary powers in favor of the corporation, where the violation of the charter appears doubtful and no public interest requires a forfeiture. State v. United States Endowment & Trust Co., 140 Ala. 610, 37 So. 442. A charter will not be declared forfeited for trifling omissions, where they do not appear to have been willful, or prejudicial to any one, and a judgment of ouster would cause loss to the stockholders. As failure to keep books at the place required by the charter for the maintenance of its principal office, for a limited time after organization; or the failure of its president to make the first annual report to the auditor of state. Id.

35. Such acts as may work a forfeiture of corporate rights, after the corporation has been brought into legal existence, can be taken advantage of only by the government in direct proceedings to forfeit the charter. Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Loveland, 132 F. 41. In Alabama, anyone who will give the required security for costs may institute quo warranto proceedings to annul the charter of a corporation. Code 1896, §§ 3417, 3418. State v. United States Endowment & Trust Co., 140 Ala. 610, 37 So. 442. On an indictment of a railroad company for a nuisance in maintaining an alleged illegal crossing over a highway, the question of forfeiture of its charter for nonuser of a part of its line cannot be raised. Commonwealth v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 235. An order of reference of a rejected claim against a banking corporation, in proceedings for dissolution, made without notice to the attorney general will be reversed. Laws 1883, p. 559, c. 378, § 8. Eustace v. New York Bldg. Loan Banking Co., 98 App. Div. 97, 90 N. Y. S. 784.

36. As where it has, with knowledge of the facts, encouraged the expenditure of large sums of money by the company, and the giving of credit by third persons, upon the faith of its grant, and by neglecting to assert its supposed right to repudiate the act of incorporation. Commonwealth v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 235.

40. The insurance commissioner of Maryland has power to institute suits to liquidate the affairs of insolvent or fraudulently conducted insurance companies. Code, art. 23, § 122, subsec. 7, as re-enacted by Acts 1902, p. 453, c. 338. This act is constitutional. Monumental Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson [Md.] 59 A. 125. The vesting of title to the assets of a corporation in a trustee or assignee, in proceedings under a state statute to wind it up, does not deprive a foreign creditor of the right to obtain judgment against the corporation in a Federal court. Cheshire Provident Inst. v. Anglo-American Land Mortg. & Ag. Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 968.

41. See 3 C. L. 897.

42. Where a holding corporation was organized to control the patents and business of all the wire glass manufacturing companies, including defendant, it was held to be a "combination" within the terms of plaintiff's contract transferring to defendant the right to use his patent. Brownsville Glass Co. v. Appert Glass Co., 136 F. 240. The mere user of corporate powers which might have been lawfully acquired, without a bona fide attempt to acquire them by forming a consolidation, does not create a consolidated corporation de facto; nor does an attempt to organize without user have that effect. Whaley v. Bankers' Union of the World [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 431, 88 S. W. 259. The effect of consolidation is the extinguishment of the old and the creation of a new corporate life. Jones v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co., 135 F.

ing the rights of lien holders, and others interested,[43] when authorized by law and conducted in accordance therewith, are sustained.[44] Transfer of corporate liabilities to a succeeding corporation depends upon whether the identity of the original corporation survives.[45]

153; New Albany Waterworks v. Louisville Banking Co. [C. C. A.] 122 F. 776.

43. A reorganization committee appointed by the bondholders, pending foreclosure proceedings, upon whom almost unlimited powers were conferred, was bound to act in good faith so as to protect the interests of all the bondholders. A bondholder who was deprived of his right to withdraw his bonds, in accordance with the understanding among the bondholders, by the committee's failure to prepare its plan of reorganization before foreclosure, had a right of action against the committee for damages. Industrial & General Trust v. Tod, 180 N. Y. 215, 73 N. E. 70. Reorganization pending proceedings in insolvency to settle the affairs of a corporation, by the organization of a corporation and transfer of stock therein to creditors in exchange for their claims against the old corporation. McEwen v. Harriman Land Co. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 797. Transfer of indebtedness by creditors of an insolvent corporation for stock in a reorganized corporation held not to be a payment of the indebtedness, but a vesting in the new corporation of all the rights of such creditors as against the old one and its assets. Id.

44. The right of corporations to consolidate can exist only by virtue of positive legislative grant; such power cannot be implied. Jones v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co., 135 F. 153. The corporate existence of a nominally consolidated corporation, formed in the absence of legislative authority, may be collaterally attacked, its acts and contracts are void, and it cannot be held liable for the debts of one of the corporations attempting to consolidate. Whaley v. Bankers' Union of the World [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 431, 88 S. W. 259. A consolidation of corporations made pursuant to an invalid statute is inoperative and void. The act of 1872, for the change of name and consolidation of corporations, not having been submitted to the people, was therefore void as to banking corporations, under Const. art. 11, § 5. Boor v. Tolman, 113 Ill. App. 322. Corporations cannot consolidate, unless the power to do so is expressly conferred upon both corporations. Priv. Laws 1901, p. 463, c. 168, authorized defendant corporation to consolidate with any railroad or transportation company in the United States, and authorized any such company incorporated in North Carolina to consolidate with defendant. Held to authorize the consolidation of defendant with the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad company. Spencer v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 137 N. C. 107, 49 S. E. 96. Even where the right to amend a private charter has not been reserved, the legislature may pass an act authorizing the corporation to consolidate with another, for that is but an enabling act and imposes no duty or obligation on the corporation. Id. Statutes authorizing the consolidation of corporations of the same nature apply to a corporation which was itself created by a prior consolidation. In Missouri Rev. St. 1899, § 1334. Jones v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co., 135 F. 153. In Alabama Code 1896, §§ 1202-1204. The rights of the parties in a suit against the original corporation for damages, pending at the time of a second consolidation, held not to be affected thereby. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Enslen [Ala.] 39 So. 74. In conferring the power of consolidation upon a railroad corporation, the legislature cannot require a dissenting stockholder to surrender his stock and accept stock in the consolidated corporation in lieu thereof, but it may invoke the power of eminent domain and provide for the condemnation of such stock for a public use, by making compensation therefor. Priv. Laws 1901, p. 463, c. 168, is such an exercise of the power of eminent domain. A stockholder who waited more than two years before asking the court to declare the consolidation void was held guilty of laches and to be sufficiently protected by the offer of defendant to pay for the value of her stock. Spencer v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 137 N. C. 107, 49 S. E. 96. Corporations created by different states can consolidate only under concurrent legislation in each state, in which case there exists a separate and distinct corporation in each state, the laws of each state having no extra-territorial effect. Where two such corporations attempted to consolidate without any statutory authority for such consolidation, the attempt was a nullity, and not even a de facto corporation was created by user. Whaley v. Bankers' Union of the World [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 431, 88 S. W. 259.

45. In the absence of a special agreement, or provision in the decree of sale, or statutory obligation, a separate and distinct corporation, which succeeds another by a valid purchase and sale of property and franchises, is not liable for the general debts and contracts of the selling corporation. Defendant held not liable on a contract with its predecessor, whose railroad, franchises, and property it had purchased on judicial sale. Hukle v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Kan.] 80 P. 603. A corporation cannot be held liable for services rendered to another corporation, it never having received or accepted the benefit of such services, merely because the books of the other corporation, containing a credit to plaintiff, came into its possession. Girbekian v. Cairo Cigarette Co., 94 N. Y. S. 345. A contract to furnish water to a town, made by the promoters of a corporation afterward organized for that purpose, held to be continuing and binding on a new corporation, to which the waterworks were transferred. Town of Boonton v. Boonton Water Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 390. A surety company, which is in all respects the successor of another, is liable on a bond executed by its predecessor. Manny v. National Surety Co., 103 Mo. App. 716, 78 S. W. 69. A corporation succeeding to the business and all the as-

§ 14. Stock and membership.—The scope of this section is limited to the relation of the corporation and its members inter se, rights of creditors being treated in a later section.[46]

(§ 14) A. Membership in corporations in general.[47]—Stockholders are members of the corporation,[48] and are the equitable owners of its property,[49] their rights being defined by the charter and the law.[50] A membership corporation cannot expel a member without notice of charges preferred and an opportunity to defend.[51] A church corporation issues no stock and is wholly without power or authority to levy assessments upon or enforce contributions from its members.[52]

(§ 14) B. Capital stock and shares of stock.[53]—The "capital stock" is the money or property paid in,[54] as distinguished from the shares of stock, and con-

sets of a former company and being practically identical in membership, is responsible for damages resulting from the negligence of the former corporation. McWilliams v. New York, 134 F. 1015. The members or some of the members of an insolvent or dormant corporation may organize a new corporation for the promotion of the same purposes as the old one, without becoming chargeable with its debts or obligations; but there must be no fraud accomplished, nor any taking over, absorbing or converting of the property or assets of the old corporation, to the prejudice of creditors. Allen v. North Des Moines M. E. Church [Iowa] 102 N. W. 808. The legal identity of the new corporation with the old will depend upon the intention of the incorporators. Id. Contract of sale and transfer of stock to a new corporation, organized to take over the stock of its predecessor and other corporations engaged in the same business, construed. Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Hoagland, 180 N. Y. 35, 72 N. E. 634. In case of a consolidation of corporations, the new company succeeds to the rights, duties, obligations and liabilities of each of the precedent companies, whether arising ex contractu or ex delicto. A consolidated corporation, under the provisions of Gen. St. 1901, § 5870, is held to assume all obligations and demands, arising out of tort as well as contract. Kansas City-Leavenworth R. Co. v. Langley [Kan.] 78 P. 858. One controlling the stock of a street railroad company purchased a large amount of its stock at fifty or sixty cents on the dollar, giving the other stockholders stock of another corporation after conveyance thereto of the property and franchises of the first company. Held, that the second corporation was responsible for the liabilities of the first. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Lee [Ky.] 84 S. W. 332. Banking Law, § 37, as amended by ch. 382, p. 233, Laws of 1895. Plaintiff bank, in which was merged another bank to which defendant was liable on a guaranty, acquired the right to enforce the guaranty. Bank of Long Island v. Young, 101 App. Div. 88, 91 N. Y. S. 849. Under a statute providing for the consolidation of corporations and expressly reserving the rights of creditors unaffected, an action pending is not affected by the consolidation and no substitution of parties is necessary. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1334. Wells v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co., 108 Mo. App. 607, 84 S. W. 204.

A county which purchases railway stock does not hold it in its governmental capacity, but in the same way and subject to the same rights and obligations as private individuals and corporations. It is bound by the action of a majority of the stockholders, at a meeting where it was represented by a representative of its own choosing, in a sale of the corporate franchise and assets, and cannot repudiate such action. 50. Stockholder's rights are dependent upon the powers of the corporation derived from the state as set forth in its charter or certificate of incorporation, the by-laws adopted in conformity therewith and the statutes regulating such corporation. Stein v. Marks, 44 Misc. 140, 89 N. Y. S. 921. By accepting stock, he assents to the terms and conditions found in the articles (Dempster Mfg. Co. v. Downs, 126 Iowa, 80, 101 N. W. 735), becomes bound by the laws and rules of government which it is authorized to make (Stein v. Marks, 44 Misc. 140, 89 N. Y. S. 921), and creates, between himself and all other stockholders of the corporation, and between himself and the corporation, a contractual relation, which is affected and controlled, in some degree, by every proper act of the corporation, whether done by its board of directors, its officers, or its mere employes. He is bound by its past acts and has consented to be bound by its future acts (Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Deepwater R. Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 890).

51. Stein v. Marks, 44 Misc. 140, 89 N. Y. S. 921. And where a member is illegally expelled, the remedy by an action at law, against individual members, is inadequate, justifying equitable relief. The expulsion may be declared void and such an administration of affairs compelled, as will prevent a diversion of assets to purposes other than those of the original incorporation. Id.

54. Capital, in the strict sense, signifies those resources whose dedication to the stitutes, according to the holding of some courts, a trust fund for the benefit of the creditors.[55]

A share of stock is the interest or right the owner has in the corporation.[56] The shares are personal estate and a species of incorporeal property,[57] whose location is in the the state where the corporation is created,[58] and whose value is represented by the assets of a company.[59] uses of the corporation is made the foundation for the issuance of certificates of capital stock. Smith v. Dana, 77 Conn. 543, 60 A. 117, citing State v. Norwich & W. R. Co., 30 Conn. 290; Bailey v. Clark, 21 Wall. [U. S.] 284, 22 Law. Ed. 651; Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429; Iron R. Co. v. Lawrence Furnace Co., 49 Ohio St. 102; Reid v. Eatonton Mfg. Co., 40 Ga. 103, 2 Am. Rep. 563; Commonwealth v. Charlottesville, etc., Co., 90 Va. 790, 44 Am. St. Rep. 950. Sometimes the term is used to designate that portion of the assets, regardless of their source, which are utilized for the conduct of the corporate business and for the purpose of deriving therefrom gains and profits. Iowa St. Sav. Bank v. Burlington, 98 Iowa, 739; People v. Feitner, 67 N. Y. Supp. 893; Hemmenway v. Hemmenway, 181 Mass. 406. And frequently the term is employed in a still wider sense, as descriptive of all the assets, gross or net, of a corporation, whatever their source, investment, or employment. Security Co. v. Hartford, 61 Conn. 89; Batterson's Appeal, 72 Conn. 374; People v. Coleman, 126 N. Y. 433, 12 L. R. A. 762; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 443; State v. Lewis, 118 Wis. 432. The capital stock of a corporation is one of its assets (Calef v. Wyandotte Realty Co. [Kan.] 78 P. 816), and is the basis of its credit. It is a substitute for the individual liability of those who own its stock (Macbeth v. Banfield [Or.] 78 P. 693).

This is commonly called the "American doctrine," and is somewhat criticised in this case. Macbeth v. Banfield [Or.] 78 P. 693. The distribution of the capital stock among stockholders, without making adequate provision for the payment of debts, or the issue of fictitious paid-up stock, is a fraud upon creditors contracting with the corporation in reliance upon its capital remaining intact, or in reliance upon the professed capital having been paid up in full. Id. The creditors of a corporation have a lien upon its capital stock in equity. If diverted, they may follow it so far as it can be traced, and subject it to the payment of their claims, except as against bona fide holders for a valuable consideration and without notice. Easton Nat. Bank v. American Brick & Tile Co. [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 54. The receiver of an insolvent bank can recover from stockholders dividends paid to them out of the capital stock of the bank. Corn v. Skillern [Ark.] 87 S. W. 142. In Michigan, if the capital stock of a corporation is withdrawn and refunded to the stockholders before the payment of all debts, the stockholders are liable to creditors to the amount so refunded, who can follow the assets of a corporation paid to stockholders as dividends, regardless of the good faith of the stockholders or of the corporation. Comp. Laws, § 7057. Under this section, one who subscribes to stock, acts as director, participates in the management of affairs, and receives the dividend, is deemed a stockholder, although he used the money of his sister, acting for her and paying over the dividend to her. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Eddy [Mich.] 101 N. W. 578.

56. In its surplus profits and, upon dissolution, in all assets remaining after the payment of debts. Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 392; Sweetsir v. Chandler, 98 Me. 145, 56 A. 584. The mere fact that a corporation has no capital stock does not necessarily deprive the members of their proportionate rights in the corporate property. Dade Coal Co. v. Penitentiary Co. No. 2, 119 Ga. 824, 47 S. E. 338.

57. Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 392. In an incorporated canal or ditch company, Under § 2611, Rev. St. 1887. Watson v. Molden [Idaho] 79 P. 503. Under the statutes of Washington, the assessment of bank stock to the bank for taxation, whereby the shareholder was prevented from deducting his indebtedness from the gross amount of his credits, to determine the net amount of his assessment, was void. Pierce's Code, §§ 8613, 8614, 8615, 8593; Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 1677, 1678, 1679, 1657. Jefferson County v. First Nat. Bank [Wash.] 80 P. 449.

58. But for purposes of taxation and some similar purposes, stock follows the domicile of its owner. Fahrig v. Milwaukee & Chicago Breweries, 113 Ill. App. 525. Capital stock in a domestic corporation can be attached, under the law of New Jersey, although the stock certificate is in possession of the debtor in another state. Cord v. Newlin [N. J. Law] 59 A. 22. The situs of the stock of a corporation is in the state in which the corporation was organized. Andrews v. Guayaquil & Q. R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 568.

59. Hubbard v. International Mercantile Ag. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 24. On an issue as to the value of corporate stock, the opinion of the treasurer as to its fair market value may be taken. Aldrich v. Bay State Const. Co., 186 Mass. 489, 72 N. E. 53. The failure of a corporation to pay a tax due the state on an increase of stock can be taken advantage of only by the state and does not affect the validity of its stock. First Nat. Bank v. Wyoming Valley Ice Co., 136 F. 466. The value of preferred stock is not affected by the issue, large or small, of common stock, since the latter ranks below the preferred stock. Julia v. Critchfield, 137 F. 969.

Scrip, in corporation parlance, is the certificate or evidence of the right to obtain shares in a corporation.[60] A certificate of stock is not the stock itself, but is the evidence of its existence [61] and such ownership as is stipulated in the articles,[62] and of the holder's rights as a stockholder to the extent therein specified.[63] A certificate of stock is not essential to the existence of the property represented by it.[64]

At common law a corporation has no lien upon the shares of its stockholders for debts due from them to the company, and the courts refuse to enforce them against stock, unless created by statute, charter, or by-law of the company.[65] Such lien may be incorporated in the articles of incorporation, as well as in special charters,[66] or in the by-laws,[67] and when so incorporated is good betwen the company and the stockholders, but it is not good against those who, at public or private sales, purchase without notice of its existence, nor against bona fide creditors who, without notice, advance money on the shares and thereby acquire the position of quasi purchasers. But the judgment creditor does not occupy so favorable a position and his lien is inferior to that created by the by-laws.[68]

In the absence of statutory provisions, shares of stock are not subject to execution or attachment.[69]

63. Trover will lie for the conversion of stock, as well as for the conversion of the certificate which evidences it. Herrick v. Humphrey Hardware Co., [Neb.] 103 N. W. 685. Where certificates of stock were in possession of decedent at his death, under the evidence in the case the stock was held to belong to decedent's estate. In re Eslen's Estate, 211 Pa. 215, 60 A. 733. Certificate enables holder to obtain a transfer on the books. An actual delivery of certificates or acceptance of them is not necessary to the passing of title to stock. Osgood v. Skinner, 211 Ill. 229, 71 N. E. 869. The statute declaring that corporations organized to supply water may, in their by-laws, provide that water shall be supplied only to owners of stock, that such stock shall be appurtenant to certain lands when described in the certificate issued therefor and that such shares shall be transferred only with the lands, had no invalidating effect upon shares of a corporation not organized in compliance with that statute, where they had become appurtenant to land before the statute was enacted. 69. Code of 1899, § 9, c. 106, includes shares of stock in the terms "personal property, choses in action, and other securities," and they are almost universally held by courts to be property of that nature, and subject to attachment. Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 392. When made subject to attachment a substantial compliance with the statute is all that is required in making the attachment levy. Scott v. Houpt [Ark.] 83 S. W. 1057.

71. In Mississippi a note cannot be received in payment for a subscription to capital stock. Code 1892, § 850. Where a note was given for stock and the stock was held for security, no title passed and the purchaser was not entitled to possession until the note was paid. Alford v. Laurel Imp. Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 548. Contract of employment and sale of stock by application of dividends, with a provision for the forfeiture of all right to the stock, if the employe should enter into a competing business, sustained. Knapp v. Jarvis Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1008. Advances made eised,[72] property as well as money may be received.[73] Subscriptions can be enforced only on compliance with the terms,[74] and may be avoided for fraud or false by plaintiff to defendant held not to have been loans, but payments for his stock in the company. Hollins v. American Union Elec. Co., 66 N. J. Eq. 457, 60 A. 359. Where a contract for the purchase of stock provides for payment of instalments of the purchase price at fixed periods after the call of the directors, held that such instalments became due automatically and the statute of limitations ran against each instalment as it so became due. Williams v. Matthews, 103 Va. 180, 48 S. E. 861. Subscriptions for stock, under agreement that after payment of twenty per cent, subscribers should not be liable for any balance of subscriptions, except on such shares as should stand in their names on the books at the time of subsequent assessments. Bean v. American Alkali Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 57. Required subscriptions for stock in a telephone company must be paid in before the probate court can grant a decree vxing mode of use of the streets. City of Cincinnati v. Queen City Telephone Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 349, 15 Ohio Dec. N. P. 43.

72. A secret understanding for a subscription for a smaller number of shares cannot be set up as a defense against an action to recover the subscription price of the number of shares subscribed for, in a certificate for a charter signed and sworn to by an incorporator. Under Act April 29, 1874 (P. L. 73), incorporating a corporation of the second class. Greater Pittsburg Real Estate Co. v. Riley, 210 Pa. 283, 59 A. 1068; Macbeth v. Banfield [Or.] 78 P. 693. Where full-paid stock is issued for property received, there must be actual fraud in the transaction to enable creditors of the corporation to call the stockholders to account. A gross and obvious overvaluation of property would be strong evidence of fraud. But if the nature of the property and the overvaluation are such that there may possibly have been an honest error of judgment in the valuation, there, to avoid the transaction, actual fraud must be shown. Macbeth v. Banfield [Or.] 78 P. 693. In such case, where actual fraud entered into the transaction, the remedy of the corporation is to rescind the agreement, tender the property back to the stockholder and ask that he be compelled to return the stock, or its market value, to the corporation. Orton v. Edson Reduction Mach. Co., 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 540.

73. The directors of a corporation, in the absence of constitutional or statutory inhibition, may receive property in payment for stock, wherever they are authorized to purchase for the benefit of the corporation and to subserve the purposes of its organization. Macbeth v. Banfield [Or.] 78 P. 693. It is competent for all the stockholders, unanimously and in good faith, to agree that shares of the corporation shall be issued to themselves in exchange for property conveyed by them to the corporation, to acquire which in part the corporation was formed. Garretson v. Pacific Crude Oil Co., 146 Cal. 184, 79 P. 838. The statute of Colorado authorizing the purchase of mines by a mining corporation and the issue of stock, in payment, to the value thereof, and providing that such stock shall be deemed full-paid, does not conflict with the constitutional prohibition of the sale of stocks, except for labor done, services performed, or money or property actually received. 1 Mills' Ann. St. §§ 490, 582; Const. art. 15, § 9 (1 Mills' Ann. St. p. 358). Speer v. Bordeleau [Colo. App.] 79 P. 332. The laws of Maryland, which authorize a corporation to take, in payment for its stock, such property as it is proper for the company to own for the advancement of its business, authorize the acceptance of the stock of another corporation in payment, where the organic act of the corporation authorizes it to purchase and hold the stock of other corporations. Code Md. 1888, art. 23, §§ 69, 70, amendatory of the general incorporation act of 1868. Southern Trust & Deposit Co. v. Yeatman [C. C. A.] 134 F. 810. A corporation having issued its stock as fully paid, in exchange for property transferred at an agreed valuation, cannot thereafter, without the consent of the stockholder, treat his stock as only partially paid and assess him for the difference between the market value of said property and the par value of the stock issued in exchange for it. Orton v. Edson Reduction Mach. Co., 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 540.

74. A subscription payable partly in cash and partly in the stock of another corporation cannot be accepted as a cash subscription, the cash credited and the balance sued for as an unpaid subscription. Southern Trust & Deposit Co. v. Yeatman [C. C. A.] 134 F. 810. A subscriber to the stock of a corporation to be organized for a particular purpose cannot be held as a subscriber to the stock of a corporation materially different. The subscription was to the stock of a corporation to "deal" in automobiles, while the corporation formed was to "manuacture" and sell automobiles and other vehicles. Woods Motor Vehicle Co. v. Brady, 181 N. Y. 145, 73 N. E. 674. Substantial compliance with the terms of a conditional subscription to stock is sufficient to entitle the company to collect such subscription. Doherty v. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899. Where a stock subscription was conditional upon the sale of a certain amount of stock, the duty of determining the true amount of stock subscription was imposed on the original incorporators, and their decision, before applying for a charter, was final, in the absence of fraud, in an action on a subscription. Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co. v. Kuenzel, 108 Mo. App. 105, 82 S. W. 1099. A railroad company, through a trust company, contracted for the purchase of stock of a ferry company, at a certain price, on condition that a majority of the stock could be secured. Held that the transaction was not rendered fraudulent by the act of the trust company in paying a higher price to other parties, without divulging that fact to the first parties. Newman v. Mercantile Trust Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 6. A subscription for stock made representations of fact.[75] A purchaser may, upon demand, obtain a certificate of shares, but, unless demanded, it need not be issued.[76]

Calls and assessments[77] may be made as provided in the contract and as authorized by law.[78]

The purchase of stock by a minor may be disaffirmed the same as other contracts.[79]

dependent upon a lease of a telephone, which lease contract was unenforceable for want of mutuality, was held invalid. Cooperative Tel. Co. v. Katus [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 187, 103 N. W. 814. A condition attached to a subscription for corporate stock can be waived by the subscriber. But such waiver must be made with full knowledge of the rights he intends to waive and it must clearly appear that he knew his rights and intended to waive them. Wright v. Agelasto [Va.] 51 S. E. 191.

75. Either as against the corporation itself or as against its assignee for the benefit of creditors, where there was no failure to exercise due care to discover the fraud. Kentucky Mut. Ins. Co.'s Assignee v. Schaefer [Ky.] 85 S. W. 1098. False statements by officers of a corporation that none of it had been sold for less than par, will warrant a rescission. Hubbard v. International Mercantile Ag. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 24. A sale of corporate stock, induced by fraudulent representations of the purchaser, is not void, but only voidable at the election of the seller. Hooker v. Midland Steel Co., 215 Ill. 444, 74 N. E. 445. Representations made by an officer of a corporation to induce the purchase of stock held insufficient to sustain the charge of fraud. German Nat. Bank's Receiver v. Nagel, 26 Ky. L. R. 748, 82 S. W. 433. False statement to plaintiff, as to the financial condition of a corporation, by its general manager, held not to warrant a rescission of the contract of sale of stock by defendant, a stockholder, and director, to plaintiff. Garrett Co. v. Appleton, 101 App. Div. 507, 92 N. Y. S. 136; Smith v. Bank of Lewisport [Ky.] 85 S. W. 219. A member of a building and loan association is presumed to know the by-laws and he cannot be heard to say that he was deceived by its agent in the purchase of stock, when the agent's representations, taken in connection with the by-laws, etc., are no more than mere expressions of opinions. Guaranty Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Simko [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 273.

76. So held under the laws of West Virginia. Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 392. A provision in a contract for the sale of stock that a certificate therefor shall not be issued for five years is binding. Williams v. Ashurst Oil, Land & Development Co., 144 Cal. 619, 78 P. 28.

77. See 3 C. L. 902, n. 59 et seq.

78. The making of a call is but a step in the collection of stock subscriptions, and in making it the board of directors is not the representative of the stockholder, but of the corporation. West v. Topeka Sav. Bank, 66 Kan. 524, 72 P. 252. To assess stock is to assess the stockholder's proportionate right in the corporation itself, his right to have the corporate purposes carried out, his right to profits and to a proportionate division of the assets upon dissolution. Sweetsir v. Chandler, 98 Me. 145, 56 A. 584. An agent for the owners of stock of a corporation, having no interest himself therein, who caused the transfer of the same on the books to an employe of the company, who had no interest in the stock, the actual ownership not being changed, did not render himself liable for an assessment when no fraud or deception was practiced. American Alkali Co. v. Kurtz [C. C. A.] 138 F. 392. Under the Code of Iowa, the holder of corporation stock as collateral security is not liable for assessments thereon. Code, § 1626. A bank that paid assessments on stock, held as collateral security for a loan is not entitled to have the amount so paid made a superior lien on the stock. Iowa Nat. Bank v. Cooper [Iowa] 101 N. W. 459. Under the terms of the subscription contract, defendant held not liable for assessments on stock placed by him, as agent of an indisclosed principal, in the name of a dummy. American Alkali Co. v. Kurtz, 134 F. 663. An assessment to be held and treated as an "assessment loan" until met and paid by all the stockholders and then to become absolute. Steck v. Bridgeport Water Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 188.

79. Seeley v. Seeley-Howe-Le Van Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 961.

80. An agreement for the distribution of stock in a corporation to be formed interpreted and sustained. Hunter Smokeless Powder Co. v. Hunter, 100 App. Div. 191, 91 N. Y. S. 620. The substantial value of the patronage enjoyed by a corporation, due to its reputation for excellence in its business, or its "good will," recognized as a factor in determining the value of shares, in a stockholders' agreement for the purchase of the shares of a withdrawing, or a deceased member, by the other stockholders, at a price to be fixed by arbitration. In re Lindsay's Estate, 210 Pa. 224, 59 A. 1074. An agreement among stockholders that the stock held by them should be sold only by mutual consent; that on such sale the stock should be drawn equally from the shares held by them, and that, on a sale by either party, the others should have a prior right to purchase, did not create a partnership. Whittingham v. Darrin, 45 Misc. 478, 92 N. Y. S. 752.

81. A sale of the majority of the stock of a corporation, upon the condition that the vendors should retain the offices of president, secretary, and treasurer for five

Under the Civil Code of California an agreement, by the vendor of stock, not to engage in the line of business conducted by the corporation, is void.[82]

(§ 14) D. Miscellaneous rights of stockholders.[83]—Though a stockholder has vested rights as such, yet those rights are subject to the will of the majority of the stockholders, expressed in a lawful manner and for the general welfare of the corporation.[84] A stockholder has no primary or preemptive right to subscribe at par for increased stock, as against an outsider, when the same stock can be sold to other parties at a great advance on its par value.[85] Where a stockholding corporation was formed by the stockholders in two competing interstate railway companies, and afterward declared void, the stockholders can not reclaim specific shares of stock delivered by them to the unlawful organization, but must content themselves with a ratable distribution of the corporate assets resolved upon by the stockholding corporation.[86]

Injunction will not lie to interfere with the proceedings of a corporation acting regularly under valid by-laws.[87]

The right to dividends.[88]—In the absence of statutory provisions,[89] directors have a rightful discretionary power to determine at all times, within reasonable limits, the destiny of profits and of accumulated profits represented by surplus.[90] years at a specified salary, is not void as contrary to public policy. Kantzler v. Benzinger, 214 Ill. 589, 73 N. E. 874.

82. Civ. Code, §§ 1673, 1674. Contracts by which one is restrained from exercising a lawful profession or business are void, unless made by one who sells the good-will of a business. Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 P. 879.

83. See 3 C. L. 903.

84. The issue of preferred stock, by consent of two-thirds of the stockholders, under an amendment of the law, although when the objecting stockholder purchased his stock the law required unanimous consent, was valid. Hinckley v. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co., 45 Misc. 176, 91 N. Y. S. 893. A purchaser of stock in a business corporation takes it subject to the reserved power of the legislature to amend the statute under which it is organized. A purchaser of stock, while corporations were prohibited from issuing preferred stock except by unanimous consent of its stockholders cannot complain of the issue of such stock by consent of two-thirds of the stockholders under a subsequent amendment of the law. Laws 1901, p. 969, c. 354. Id.

85. Where an increase of stock was regularly and in good faith voted by the officers, directors, and a majority of the stockholders, to be sold to a certain person at 4 and one-half times its par value, held that a dissenting stockholder could not recover damages for the refusal of the corporation to sell shares to him at par, proportionate to the number of shares already held by him. Stokes v. Continental Trust Co., 99 App. Div. 377, 91 N. Y. S. 239.

86. Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U. S. 244, 49 Law. Ed. 739. Such distribution of stocks to its stockholders was an equitable arrangement and should not be enjoined. Northern Securities Co. v. Harriman [C. C. A.] 134 F. 331.

89. Stevens v. United States Steel Corp. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 905. In New Jersey, unless otherwise provided in the certificate of incorporation or in a by-law adopted by a majority of the stockholders, the directors of a corporation are required by statute (Corporation Law, § 47 [Laws 1896, p. 293] as amended by Laws 1901, p. 246), Stevens v. United States Steel Corp. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 905. To declare annually a dividend of its accumulated profits above a certain reserve.

90. Smith v. Dana, 77 Conn. 543, 60 A. 117, citing Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 Law. Ed. 525; Knopp v. Jarvis Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1008. Profits may be distributed as earned. They may be, in whole or in part, retained and utilized for the corporate advantage. They may be used for a time and later distributed, or they may be permanently used in the business. Smith v. Dana, 77 Conn. 543, 60 A. 117. Directors are not required to declare dividends on common, as well as preferred stock, even though there are profits enough, when it is not for the interest of the corporation to do so, although such profits may otherwise be absorbed in future dividends on preferred stock. Stevens v. United States Steel Corp. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 905. A resolution of the directors of a bank to pay the taxes on the bank stock, held to be a declaration of a tax dividend, payable equally to all the stockholders. Redhead v. Iowa Nat. Bank [Iowa] 103 N. W. 796.

The power of the directors to declare dividends is not absolute and a court of equity will intervene on behalf of a stockholder who may complain, in case of abuse. Stevens v. United States Steel Corp. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 905, citing Laurel Springs Land Co. v. Fougeray, 50 N. J. Eq. 756, 759, 760; Fougeray v. Cord, 50 N. J. Eq. 185, 197; Griffing v. Griffing Iron Co., 61 N. J. Eq. 269,

The stockholder has no title to the surplus earnings of the company, until his share is segregated by the board of directors,[91] but when a dividend has been declared, a debt at once becomes due from the corporation to each stockholder, recoverable by each in a separate action at law.[92] As a general rule, as between life tenants of corporate stock held in trust and remaindermen, a cash dividend is regarded as income and a stock dividend as capital.[93]

Right to inspect the books and papers of the corporation.[94]—A stockholder has a right to inspect the books of the corporation,[95] enforceable by mandamus,[96] which should not be granted for speculative purposes, but only to protect the in-

271; 2 Cook, Corp. [4th Ed.] § 545; Knopp v. Jarvis Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1008. A stockholder, however, cannot compel the declaration of a dividend, by suit in equity, where it does not appear that he has made application therefor to the directors, or that such application would not be considered (Maeder v. Buffalo Bill's Wild West Co., 132 F. 280), and his right to invoke the aid of equity may be waived by acquiescence. Where a corporation adopted a by-law unanimously, giving the board of directors power to declare or withhold dividends, and the board, under such by-law, for a series of years used the profits for expanding the business, there was a waiver by the stockholders to invoke the aid of equity to compel the declaration of a dividend, especially in the absence of any showing that the expansion policy adopted by the directors was unreasonable. Raynolds v. Diamond Mills Paper Co. [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 941. After a reduction of stock, assented to by plaintiff, held that she was entitled to dividends on the amount of stock held, but not on the amount of the reduction, for the time prior to the reduction, during which no dividends had been paid. Roberts v. Roberts-Wicks Co., 102 App. Div. 118, 92 N. Y. S. 387.

91. The law upon this subject is well and clearly stated in Wheeler v. Northwestern Sleigh Co., 39 F. 347. Knapp v. Jarvis Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1008. Until a dividend is declared, the entire assets of a corporation including accumulated profits, belong to the corporation, and the corporation owes no debt in respect thereto to the stockholders as individuals. 2 Cook, Corp. § 534. Stevens v. United States Steel Corp. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 905

92. Stevens v. United States Steel Corp. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 905. But such indebtedness does not pass with the assignment of the stock. Redhead v. Iowa Nat. Bank [Iowa] 103 N. W. 796. A division of profits without the formality of declaring a dividend is the equivalent of declaring a dividend. Hartley v. Pioneer Ironworks, 181 N. Y. 73, 73 N. E. 576. Dividends payable at the pleasure of the corporation are payable within a reasonable time, and, some having been paid, all are payable. Billingham v. Gleason Mfg. Co., 101 App. Div. 476, 91 N. Y. S. 1046. Dividends, until paid, are held in trust for the stockholders and a demand is essential as a condition precedent to bringing suit, unless the corporation has refused to pay the dividend. Redhead v. Iowa Nat. Bank [Iowa] 103 N. W. 796.

93. The fact that undistributed profits or surplus have been invested in permanent work, improvements or extensions, does not render a cash dividend paid out of the proceeds of the sale of such improvements capital, instead of income. Smith v. Dana, 77 Conn. 543, 60 A. 117. The withdrawal of a corporation from certain incidental branches of business and the conversion of its investments therein into cash, which was distributed as a dividend, its capital remaining unchanged, is not a partial liquidation, so as to render such dividend capital rather than income, as between life tenants and remaindermen. 95. Neubert v. Armstrong Water Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 123; Oliver v. Oliver, 118 Ga. 362, 45 S. E. 232. The right of inspection of the general business books of a corporation by a stockholder is a common-law right. People v. Keeseville, etc., R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 555. Stockholders have an absolute right to an inspection of the stockbook of the corporation, regardless of their motives in seeking such inspection, under § 29, Stock Corporation Law (Laws 1890, p. 1071, c. 564, as amended by Laws 1900, p. 218, c. 128, and Laws 1901, p. 965, c. 354). An important meeting having been called, relator had a right to inspect the stockbook to learn who were stockholders and entitled to vote. Id. A member of an incorporation political club has a right to inspect the list of members, when desired to promote the objects for which the club was organized. McClintock v. Young Republicans of Philadelphia, 210 Pa. 115, 59 A. 691. Where the shareholder himself was competent to conduct the examination, the court declined to order it done by a certified public accountant. Garcin v. Trenton Rubber Mfg. Co. [N. J. Law] 60 A. 1098

96. Maeder v. Buffalo Bill's Wild West Co., 132 F. 280; Garcin v. Trenton Rubber Mfg. Co. [N. J. Law] 60 A 1098; People v. Keeseville, etc., R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 555; McClintock v. Young Republicans of Philadelpria, 210 Pa. 115, 59 A. 691; Neubert v. Armstrong Water Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 123. A director, being responsible to the stockholders for the faithful execution of his trust and alleging that the president and the other director were wasting the corporate assets, is entitled to a peremptory mandamus to enforce an examination of the books. The length of time allowed for the examination will be fixed by the court, subject to extension, if necessary, on application. People v. Columbia Paper Bag Co., 92 N. Y. S. 1084.

terests of the stockholder.[97] He cannot maintain a suit in equity to require the corporation to bring its books into the state, merely that he may have access to them.[98] The granting and the refusal of the right of inspection rests in the sound discretion of the court; and will not be ordered, unless the application therefor is made in good faith, and not for the purpose of injuring or annoying the corporation, and to learn something which the stockholder has a right to know for his protection.[99] The state in which a corporation is organized has alone authority to compel inspection of the books by a stockholder.[1] On an application to a Federal court for a mandamus, by a shareholder in a national bank, to compel the inspection by him of the list of shareholders, it must appear that the matter in dispute exceeds the value of $2,000, to confer jurisdiction.[2]

Remedies for injuries to stockholders or to the corporation.[3]—Courts of equity are prompt to redress the injuries of minority stockholders against the wrongdoing of majorities.[4] They are bound to seek relief through the corporation at a meeting of its shareholders or by application to those in charge of affairs;[5] but if relief cannot be had by either of these means, then they themselves can come into equity seeking it.[6] An action brought by a stockholder for relief from fraudulent transactions of its directors or officers is really an action by the corporation to redress a corporate wrong.[7] Where the officers and directors of one corporation are domi-

98. Section 44 of the general corporation act of New Jersey (P. L. 1896, p. 292), providing for a summary order by the court of chancery for the production of books, applies only where the books are required for some judicial purpose. Maeder v. Buffalo Bill's Wild West Co., 132 F. 280.

4. McCampbell v. Fountain Head R. Co. [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 1070. It is too late for interference by injunction, after directors, having power to sell, have consummated a sale of corporate stock. Huet v. Piedmont Springs Lumber Co., 138 N. C. 443, 50 S. E. 846. Under the Code of Washington, barring an action for fraud in three years, a stockholders' action for relief against a fraudulent reorganization scheme, involving the sacrifice of mortgaged property on foreclosure, was held barred where the plaintiff had knowledge of the transaction. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4800. Griffith v. Seattle Consol. St. R. Co., 36 Wash. 627, 79 P. 314.

5. But where the acts of one controlling a majority of the stock constituted a wrong toward the corporation, it was not necessary for a stockholder to apply at a stockholders' meeting for action to redress the wrongs, before commencing action for the appointment of a receiver. Virginia Passenger & Power Co. v. Fisher [Va.] 51 S. E. 198.

7. In order to obtain equitable relief in such cases, the corporation must do equity. Mosher v. Sinnott [Colo. App.] 79 P. 742. Where the entire capital stock was transferred to the directors, in purchase of patent rights at a price below par, in violation of law, an action to compel the directors to transfer the stock, at the instance of a minority stockholder who purchased a portion retransferred to be sold to raise a working capital, could not be maintained without offering to rescind the sale and reconvey the patent rights. Insurance Press v. Montauk Fire Detecting Wire Co., 103 App. Div. 472, 93 N. Y. S. 134. Where a corporation brought suit against an officer to compel him to convey to the corporation property purchased in his name with its funds, and he, having secured a controlling interest in the corporation, took steps to dismiss the suit, it was necessary for an intervening stockholder, seeking to prevent the dismissal of the suit, to show that the dismissal would result in loss or detriment to the corporation, or that some fraud was being perpetrated upon its rights. Intervener's complaint dismissed for insufficient showing of cause. Ainsworth v. Evans [Ariz.] 80 P. 344. Where stock has been issued in good faith and by unanimous consent of the stockholders, in payment for leases transferred to the corporation, the remedy of a subsequent stockholder, who has been misled by false representations of some of the stockholders, is personal to himself, and not in the name and for the benefit of the corporation. Garretson v. Pacific Crude Oil Co., 146 Cal. 184, 79 P. 838.

Stockholders suing for corporation.[9]—Stockholders may bring suit to enforce the rights of the corporation,[10] but the action must be predicated upon a demand

8. Montgomery Traction Co. v. Harmon, 140 Ala. 505, 37 So. 371. Where directors common to two corporations enter into a contract between the two for the purpose of defrauding one of them for the benefit of the other, stockholders of the one sought to be defrauded have a common-law right of action to have the contract declared void. Jacobs v. Mexican Sugar Refining Co., 93 N. Y. S. 776. A contract between two corporations made by the directors, several of whom are common to both, and ratified by a majority of the stockholders of each corporation, will not be set aside at the suit of minority stockholders, in the absence of any showing of fraud. Continental Ins. Co. v. New York & H. R. Co., 103 App. Div. 282, 93 N. Y. S. 27. Minority stockholder held entitled to recover in equity, for the benefit of the corporation, a majority of its stocks, fraudulently obtained by financing contracts and transactions carried through the votes of dummy directors of both contracting corporations. O'Connor v. Virginia Passenger & Power Co., 92 N. Y. S. 525. A complaint setting forth that several distinct corporations, owning a majority of the stock of another company, have conspired to deprive plaintiff of his stock in the latter, and denied him an accounting, while proposing to conduct the business so as to deprive him of all benefits therefrom, states a cause of action for equitable relief. Anderson v. W. J. Dyer & Bro. [Minn.] 101 N. W. 1061.

10. Ownership of stock is an essential requirement to maintain a bill on behalf of the corporate interests. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Quinby [C. C. A.] 137 F. 882. A minority stockholder who files a bill against the officers of a corporation for official misconduct in wrongfully appropriating its assets must show their failure to perform their duty, thus causing a breach of trust. Von Arnin v. American Tubeworks [Mass.] 74 N. E. 680. Complaint held not to show a cause of action on which plaintiff, a stockholder, could sue in his individual capacity. O'Connor v. Virginia Passenger & Power Co., 45 Misc. 228, 92 N. Y. S. 161.

Grounds of action, where contracts with a corporation have been fraudulently rescinded by the board of directors. Donald v. Manufacturers' Export Co. [Ala.] 38 So. 841. A breach of official duty on the part of directors is a fraud in law and entitles stockholders to relief, though fraud in fact is not shown. Coombs v. Barker [Mont.] 79 P. 1. Where the directors, in abuse of their trust, have paid unreasonable salaries to themselves as officers. Donald v. Manufacturers' Export Co. [Ala.] 38 So. 841. Use of corporate assets for alleged ultra vires business, affecting the interests of all the stockholders. Subject to the limitations of Equity Rule 94; although primarily the cause of action is in the corporation. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Quinby [C. C. A.] 137 F. 882. To prevent the destruction of a valuable asset by the fraudulent attempt to cancel a lease. Being an action in behalf of stockholders and not in behalf of the corporation, it is not such an action as is prohibited by § 1780 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Jacobs v. Mexican Sugar Refining Co., 45 Misc. 180, 91 N. Y. S. 902. To enjoin violation of the corporate franchise. New Albany Waterworks v. Louisville Banking Co. [C. C. A.] 122 F. 776, citing Dodge v. The complaint, in such an action, must allege the cause of action and the refusal of the corporation to sue; and the corporation must be made a defendant. Kavanaugh v. Com. Trust Co., 181 N. Y. 121, 73 N. E. 562. Against the directors, who, by fraudulent management and conduct of affairs, depreciate, intentionally and wrongfully, the value of the stockholders' interest therein, and in effect deprive them of their property. Glover v. Manila Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [S. D.] 104 N. W. 261. A member of a benevolent society has an interest in its funds, and is entitled to the portection of the by-laws, and may maintain a bill to enjoin a violation thereof. Flaherty v. Portland Longshorsemen's Benev. Soc., 99 Me. 253, 59 A. 58. To set aside a decree of foreclosure, obtained by collusion between the corporation's president and the mortgagee. Whitney v. Hazzard [S. D.] 101 N. W. 346. In case of the unauthorized levy of an assessment, without the observance of the necessary formalities, and the threatened sale of stock as delinquent. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill Co. [Mont.] 79 P. 248. For the fraudulent diversion and misappropriation of funds, although the corporation is necessarily made defendant in such action, yet the action is in realty in behalf of the corporation. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill Co. [Mont.] 76 P. 194. To set aside an election of directors, who are personally ineligible. Under P. L. 1896, p. 291, § 42. In re Jersey City Paper Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 565. An election of directors will not be set aside on appication of a small minority of apparently defeated candidates, for mere irregularities, when no stockholder has been deprived of his vote or any substantial right, and there is no allegation of injury resulting to anyone from the irregularities protested against. Bartlett v. Fourton [La.] 38 So. 882. Where the directors of a creditor corporation were not only elected by the votes of the stockholders of a debtor corporation, but were also employes or officers of the latter, disqualifying them from properly acting for their company in the prosecution of a claim against the other. Louisville Bridge Co. v. Dodd [Ky.] 85 S. W. 683.

and refusal,[11] or unreasonable neglect [12] on the part of the proper officers to act, unless the circumstances are such that any application to them would be an idle ceremony.[13] In such actions the relief sought is for the benefit of all like interests,[14] and the money recovered goes to the corporation and not to the individual complainants.[15]

The corporation must be made a defendant in an action by stockholders for misappropriation or fraudulent diversion of its funds by its officers or directors;[16] also in a stockholders' suit for an accounting for moneys alleged to have been received and disbursed by defendant as president of a corporation, since any judgment against defendant must be rendered in favor of the corporation, and judgment cannot be rendered in favor of one not party to the action;[17] and in such an action against the corporation and some of its officers and stockholders, certain stockholders who took part in the alleged wrongful acts are proper parties defendant, although no specific relief is asked against them.[18]

Complaining stockholders must show that they have been diligent in seeking redress;[19] but they are not guilty of such laches as to lose their right of action,

American Tubeworks [Mass.] 74 N. E. 680; Bowne v. Smith, 45 Misc. 575, 90 N. Y. S. 204. It is only under exceptional circumstances that a stockholder can maintain such an action; he must have exhausted all the means within his reach to obtain redress within the corporation. Virginia Passenger & Power Co. v. Fisher [Va.] 51 S. E. 198. Even where the officers' acts are ultra vires or otherwise illegal, a complaining stockholder must first seek his remedy with the corporation. Virginia Passenger & Power Co. v. Fisher [Va.] 51 S. E. 198, citing Dunphy v. Traveller Newspaper Association, 146 Mass. 495. A complaint by a stockholder on behalf of a corporation is demurrable, when it does not allege a request by plaintiff of the corporation to sue and the refusal of such request. O'Connor v. Demand on the officials of a corporation to bring suit for fraud of officers and directors is not a condition precedent to an action by the minority stockholders. It would be idle to require plaintiffs to demand that the officers bring suit against themselves. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill Co. [Mont.] 76 P. 194. Where the stockholder relies upon the fact that a demand upon the board of directors would have been in vain if made, he must set forth the facts upon which his conclusion is based. Montgomery Traction Co. v. Harmon, 140 Ala. 505, 37 So. 371. A demand and refusal were unnecessary in the following cases: Where a majority of the directors were themselves guilty of misconduct and fraud. Bowne v. Smith, 44 Misc. 575, 90 N. Y. S. 204. Or were the partisans of the wrongdoer. Montgomery Traction Co. v. Harmon, 140 Ala. 505, 37 So. 371. Where the corporation management was under the control of the guilty parties. Kern v. Arbeiter Unterstuelzungs Verein [Mich.] 102 N. W. 746; Von Arnim v. American Tubeworks [Mass.] 74 N. E. 680. Where, had such request been made it would have been refused, or, if granted, the litigation would necessarily be subject to the control of the parties opposed to its success. Montgomery Traction Co. v. Harmon, 140 Ala. 505, 37 So. 371; Barry v. Moeller [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 97. In an action by a stockholder to compel a fraudulent trustee to account, and for the appointment of a receiver. Chanler Mortgage Co. v. Loring, 113 Ill. App. 423. Where the directors, who own a majority of the stock, issued to them without payment, are mismanaging affairs and diverting its funds and income to themseves. It is manifest that a demand under such circumstances would be unavailing. Columbia Nat. Sand Dredging Co. v. Washed Bar Sand Dredging Co., 136 F. 710. It is unnecessary for the complaining stockholders to allege any demand made upon the receiver of a corporation, in an action brought to call officers to account for misconduct in managing the affairs of a corporation, where he is one of the parties charged with misconduct. where they begin it as soon as they obtain the evidence of the fraudulent transaction.[20] Stockholders may in many cases be estopped from complaining, by express assent or tacit consent, to a corporate act,[21] even though it may be an ultra vires transaction;[22] but minority stockholders, who neither took part in, nor sanctioned the proceedings, are not bound thereby.[23]

Costs and allowances.[24]—After minority stockholders, suing in behalf of the corporation, have established the corporation's cause of action and the inability or unwillingness of the directors to sue, they are entitled to charge the necessary expenses and counsel fees to the corporation.[25]

Receivers and injunctions.[26]—At the suit of a stockholder to compel a fraudulent trustee to account, a court of equity, if necessary to the preservation of property for the benefit of the parties entitled thereto, will appoint a receiver;[27] and where the majority stockholders, as directors, are clearly violating the charter rights of the minority by diverting all the profits to themselves, either directly or indirectly, a court of equity will appoint a receiver although the corporation is solvent.[28] But where, in a suit against a corporation and its directors, it was shown that the business was not confined to the execution of contracts which had been fraudulently rescinded by the directors, nor that the directors had any adverse interest in the other business, nor that there was any mismanagement of the corporation in relation thereto, equity could not appoint a receiver.[29]

Contribution between stockholders.[30]—The right of a stockholder to compel contribution from his fellow stockholders is not conditioned on the insolvency of the corporation.[31] In an action by a stockholder to compel contribution for the payment of a corporate debt, the corporation is not a necessary party.[32]

Ann. St. 1896, p. 1295, c. 38, par. 253. Osgood v. Skinner, 211 Ill. 229, 71 N. E. 869. An agreement to pay at least $50 per share for four hundred shares of stock of a corporation, at the expiration of five years from date, is not a gambling contract within the meaning of the criminal code of Illinois, although the vendor reserves the option to retain his proportion of said four hundred shares. And in the absence of an entry of transfer of stock on the books, as provided by statute, the transferee must show, as against execution creditors of the transferor, that he has done all in his power to comply with the statute. Held, that plaintiff had not done all in his power to effect a transfer on the books. Isbell v. Graybill, 19 Colo. App. 508, 76 P. 550. Ownership simply of a certificate of stock does not constitute the owner a stockholder. There must be a transfer of the stock to him on the books. Boone v. Van Gorder [Ind.] 74 N. E. 4. A by-law providing that stock should be transferred only on the books, passed in pursuance of a statute declaring stocks personal property, and providing for their transfer in the manner prescribed by by-law, does not prevent the acquisition of title by assignment without transfer on the books. Rev. St. 1899, § 965. Crenshaw v. Columbian Min. Co., 110 Mo. App. 355, 86 S. W. 260. Where shares of stock were transferred in payment of a wager and no action was brought to recover the same, within the time limited by Rev. St. 1899, § 3432, the transferee, notwithstanding the illegality of the transaction, could maintain an action to compel a transfer on the books. Id. Under a statute providing that no transfer of stock shall be valid as against a creditor, until a certificate thereof shall have been deposited with the county clerk, a creditor will prevail over unregistered transfers, even when he has actual knowledge thereof. Sending a certificate of transfer of stock to the circuit clerk for record, in a county where the officers of circuit and county clerk are separate, is ineffectual to protect the transferee under this act. Scott v. Houpt [Ark.] 83 S. W. 1057.

42. The transferee by assignment and delivery to secure a valid debt has power to make transfer upon the books of the cor-of stock, being intended for the protection and convenience of the corporation and shareholders,[43] and to give the company notice of who its stockholders are.[44] Ordinarily the officers of the company, in conducting the elections or distributing dividends, will not look behind the books to ascertain who are the real owners of the stock.[45] In the absence of equities between the corporation and the stockholder, the purchaser is entitled to registration and transfer.[46] When corporate stock is so far subject to the control of the corporation that its formal transfer cannot be perfected without the action of the corporation, garnishment process may be effectually served upon the corporation at its domicile.[47]

Courts should not order the issuance of a duplicate certificate, while the original is outstanding, without requiring an indemnity bond, unless it is reasonably certain that the original will not reappear in the hands of a bona fide holder.[48]

Pledge or mortgage of shares.[49]—The pledgee of stock takes only a special property in it, the general property remaining in the pledgor;[50] and the pledgee cannot foreclose and cut off the owner's rights by a mere notice to pay within a certain time.[51] The requirement of a record of transfers of stock with the county clerk does not apply to transfers by way of pledge,[52] and when a pledgee gives notice of the pledge, the corporation must respect his rights, though the transfer poration. U. S. 3689. White River Sav. Bank v. Capital Sav. Bank & Trust Co. [Vt.] 59 A. 197. A party to whom a certificate of stock is delivered for a valuable consideration acquires, as between himself and the other party, a mere equitable right to have the legal right transferred to her on the books, subject to any paramount rights of the corporation and third parties. Boone v. Van Gorder [Ind.] 74 N. E. 4. The equitable owner of a stock certificate is not entitled to enjoin a levy and sale of the stock on execution by attaching creditors of the registered owner. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 735, the purchaser acquires only the title of the registered owner, subject to any valid title of an equitable owner, of which the purchaser has notice at the time of the sale. Id. An unregistered transfer of stock, for which no certificate has been issued, made for a valuable consideration and without fraud, vests a title superior to the claims of a subsequent attaching creditor of the transferror. Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 392. Where the purchaser of stock, under order of court, presented it for transfer, but was met with a refusal and a denial of his rights as a stockholder, he was entitled to attend a stockholders' meeting, although his stock was not transferred on the books, as provided by law. Comp. Laws § 7052. Noller v. Wright [Mich.] 101 N. W. 553.

44. Herrick v. Humphrey Hardware Co. [Neb.] 103 N. W. 685. Any one having actual notice of the transaction stands in no better relation to it than one would, had it been completed of record. White River Sav. Bank v. Capital Sav. Bank & Trust Co. [Vt.] 59 A. 197.

45. Herrick v. Humphrey Hardware Co. [Neb.] 103 N. W. 685. The "stock and transfer book," required by law to be kept, is the criterion for determining the amount of stock held by any person, and for which he is entitled to cast a vote. Civ. Code, §§ 378, 312. But, in the absence of evidence from the stock and transfer book, the testimony of a stockholder as to the number of shares held by him will prevail over the unsupported recital of the secretary in his minutes of the meeting. Middleton v. Arastraville Min. Co., 146 Cal. 219, 79 P. 889.

46. The requirement by by-law of the payment of all indebtedness to the corporation, as a condition precedent to transfer of stock, does not authorize the refusal of the registration of a transfer reported before the owner became so indebted. White River Sav. Bank v. Capital Sav. Bank & Trust Co. [Vt.] 59 A. 197. Without the production and surrender of the original certificates, or a showing of their loss or destruction, the secretary is justified in refusing to make an entry of transfer of stock. Under Mill's Ann. St. § 508. A mere order from the holder of the stock, reciting a sale of the same, is not sufficient. Isbell v. Graybill, 19 Colo. App. 508, 76 P. 550. Where the by-laws or a statute requires the transfer of stock to be made on the books the corporation wrongfully refuses to make the transfer, such refusal is a conversion of the stock. Herrick v. was not registered on its books.[53] In an action to foreclose a lien on stock, the corporation must be made a party.[54]

§ 15. Management of corporations. A. Control of corporation by the stockholders or members. Power of the majority.[55]—The stockholders do not own the corporate property; the corporation owns it, but, in a broad sense, the stockholders own the corporation,[56] and they are, therefore, the equitable owners of the corporate property,[57] or the actual and beneficial owners,[58] being, in a sense, partners, and holding a joint interest in the property of the company.[59]

Corporations are governed by the republican principle that the whole are bound by the acts of the majority.[60] The minority stockholders have no right, vested or otherwise, which is infringed by the action of the majority in amending the corporate by-laws in the manner provided therefor.[61]

(§ 15) B. Dealings between a corporation and its stockholders,[62]—A mere stockholder, unlike a director, is under no duty to serve his corporation, and he may deal with it or with its debts or property as any stranger.[63] Stockholders or directors may lawfully loan money to the corporation, and they may be lawfully preferred, by the transfer of enough of the corporate property to secure or pay them.[64]

A corporation, as an artificial entity, owes no fiduciary obligations to its shareholders, except to protect their legal title to shares owned by them by giving proper attention to transfers and reissues of shares.[65] And a corporation is not precluded from recovering for a fraud on it, because the party committing the fraud is a stockholder.[66] If a stockholder gives his note to the corporation in payment of his stock, it is a debt due the corporation, which, until paid, is an asset.[67] It is not within the duty or power of a corporation to prevent a shareholder from selling his stock for any price he can obtain, and any rights of action accruing to the purchaser from representations made in so doing in no manner redound to the corporation.[68]

(§ 15) C. By-laws.[69]—By-laws are simply the rules of corporate government.[70] They are not in the nature of legislative enactments, so far as third parties are concerned, and are not usually intended for strangers, who do not subject themselves to their influence;[71] but they become upon adoption, written into the charter, and all persons who deal with the corporation are bound to take notice of the powers and duties of its officers as set forth therein,[72] and one who becomes a member of an association becomes chargeable with knowledge of the provisions of its charter and by-laws, and is bound by them.[73] While by-laws aid in the orderly transaction of corporate business, they also serve sometimes to protect the corporation itself, or minority members against ill-advised or illegal acts of the majority.[74]

By-laws may be adopted without the use of the corporate seal and without any entry in writing, as their existence may be established by custom or acquiescence in a course of conduct by those authorized to enact them and those dealing with it; if informally adopted, they may be subsequently ratified;[75] and they may be modified, limited or abrogated by the corporation.[76] They may be modified by unanimous consent of the stockholders to a regular course of action inconsistent therewith.[77]

A corporation has no power to adopt by-laws inconsistent with the laws of the state[78] or with its charter,[79] and the by-laws, rules and regulations of a member-

Subd. 3, § 1, c. 164, How. Ann. St. By-laws cannot be adopted impairing the obligation of contracts or depriving members of rights without due process of law. Kern v. The statutory provision that the incorporators shall state the number of the directors who shall manage the affairs of the company "for the first year" has reference to the first only, and does not limit the right of the stockholders thereafter to change the number by a by-law changing the number of directors from seven to three, of a company organized in Indiana, whose statutes require not less than three nor more than eleven ship corporation must be reasonable and adapted to the purposes of the corporation.[80]

When the power to make by-laws is vested in the stockholders or members and they have adopted them, they cannot be waived by the directors or other officers,[81] nor can a by-law be overridden or abrogated by a simple resolution, in favor of some object which is forbidden by the by-law.[82] But the stockholders may permit the directors or other officers to act in disregard of a by-law;[83] or they may ratify action taken in disregard of a by-law, and in such case there is a waiver of the by-law by the stockholders.[84]

Courts will not interfere with the internal government of either voluntary associations or membership corporations, where the action complained of has been fairly taken, in conformity with the reasonable by-laws and regulations of the association.[85] But no disciplinary action will be valid, unless taken as prescribed by their by-laws and the statutes governing their procedure.[86]

(§ 15) D. Corporate meetings and elections. Notice.[87]—Where due notice of a meeting was given the stockholders of a corporation, an individual stockholder is bound by the action of the majority, although he was not represented at the meeting.[88] If no form of notice of special meeting is prescribed, any form or manner of written notice, sufficient to inform the directors of the call and the exact time and place of the meeting is sufficient;[89] and, unless required by statute or by-law, such notice need not state the object or purpose of the meeting.[90]

The action of stockholders, where necessary, must be had at a stockholders' meeting, otherwise it is the act and expression of the individuals only;[91] but a meeting of the members of a membership corporation, not called or held as required by its by-laws, is not a meeting of the corporation, and a suspension of a member at such meeting is invalid.[92] The minutes of a stockholders' meeting, written on a sheet of paper, signed by the secretary and bearing the initials of the president of the corporation, are competent evidence, where it does not appear that they were ever transcribed in a record book.[93] But minutes of a stockholders' meeting, on separate sheets of paper, pinned to the leaves of a record book, are not sufficient evidence of the proceedings.[94]

Elections.[95]—Where there is no requirement as to a quorum, the stockholders present at a meeting regularly called and held can transact business, and, although less than a majority, may hold a valid election of directors.[96]

(§ 15) E. The right to vote.[97]—In the election of directors, unless the charter otherwise provides, the share of stock is the voting unit.[98] Primarily the voting power of corporate stock is the personal privilege of the stockholder, not separable from ownership of the stock, except as sanctioned by legislation.[99] The charter of a business corporation may regulate the voting capacity of its stockholders;[1] and the right to vote may be qualified by statute.[2] Stockholders do not hold a fiduciary relation to each other,[3] but each stockholder represents himself and his own interests only,[4] and their right to vote is in no way affected by their having difference or adverse interests. But under a statute prohibiting a member of a corporate board from voting on a question in which he is personally interested otherwise than as a stockholder, the acts of three of the five members of such a board, in which one was personally interested, are void.[5] In New Jersey, the stock of a corporation belonging to the corporation cannot be voted on,[6] and a person owning stock can sue to prevent such illegal voting of stock.[7] A minority stockholder, in case of doubt as to the right to vote the majority stock, is entitled to an injunction to restrain illegal voting of such stock or the holding of an election until the right to vote the majority stock is settled.[8] stockholder who was elected director for one year and until his successor was elected, but who never accepted the office and was not re-elected, although he was present at a meeting many years afterward, was never in fact a director.[11]

(§ 15) G. Salary or other compensation of officers.[12]—Officers of a corporation are not, as of right, entitled to salaries,[13] nor, however valuable their services may be, can they appropriate corporate funds for such services, unless authorized by the corporation;[14] but where the treasurer of a corporation, at the expiration of his term of office, informed the directors that he could not again serve for the same compensation, and he was re-elected without any determination as to his salary, he could recover what his services were worth.[15]

Neither the president nor vice-president are prima facie entitled to collect for expenses in attending stockholders meetings or in visiting the directors,[16] nor can the president of a corporation charge the company with the amount he paid on a note, indorsed by him in the name of the corporation without authority.[17] But where the officers of a corporation manufacturing spokes and hubs were, for a long time and with the knowledge of everyone interested, in the habit of using culls for fuel, it would be regarded as additional compensation to the salaries received by the officers.[18] Where there is an express contract of employment before the services are rendered, an officer is entitled to compensation,[19] as in case of an officer employed to solicit business, outside of his duties as officer,[20] or of an officer who is an attorney and who renders professional services at the request of the board of directors.[21]

When a corporation sells out its entire business, it is not liable for the president's salary as general manager, in the absence of any showing that it agreed to continue its business during his term or to retain him as manager for that time. Busell Trimmer Co. v. Coburn [Mass.] 74 N. E. 334. But a corporation which discharges its manager before the expiration of the time for which he was employed, without grounds of complaint, of the most serious character, will be liable to such manager for his full salary. Under Civ. Code, art. 2749. Berlin v. Cusachs [La.] 38 So. 539. In Virginia, under Code 1887, § 1119, no president or director of a corporation can receive any compensation unless allowed by the stockholders. Triplett v. Fauver, 103 Va. 123, 48 S. E. 875. A contract to pay a director or officer of a corporation will not be implied as against the corporation; a manager held over after his term and, on notification that his position as manager had terminated, declined to be discharged. Held, that there was no implied contract to hire him for another year. Alston Mfg. Co. v. Squaw, 105 Ill. App. 238. A president cannot sue upon an implied contract to force a claim for services as an officer, when he is a stockholder or director; he must show an express contract for compensation as a basis for such a claim. Mere interviews with individual directors on the subject of compensation, and calling attention to his claim of compensation at a directors' meeting, without any action being taken, do not lay a sufficient foundation for an action for such compensation. Lowe v. Ring, 123 Wis. 370, 101 N. W. 698. Where the largest stockholder in a corporation performed services for it and wrote many letters, disclaiming any intention of charging therefor, he could not afterward recover compensation for such services, though beneficial to the corporation. 20. A trustee, employed by the president, who had authority to employ assistance, was credited with commissions by the responsible officers of the corporation. Held, that the corporation was estopped from repudiating its liability to pay for the services. Hooke v. Financier Co., 99 App. Div. 186, 90 N. Y. S. 1012.

21. Taussig v. St. Louis & K. R. Co., 183 Mo. 269, 85 S. W. 378.

The board of directors has not the inherent power to vote a salary to any director. The power to do so must emanate from the stockholders, from statute or from by-laws legally adopted;[22] nor can the directors, even under a by-law, vote a salary to one of their number, when the vote of such director is necessary to make up a quorum.[23]

(§ 15) H. How directors must act; directors' meetings, records and stock books.[24]—The board of directors occupies a dual relation in reference to the stockholder.[25] In the management of corporate affairs the board of directors must act together as a board; they cannot act separately,[26] or by the assent of the majority given singly, when not assembled as a board.[27] The acts of the first board of directors named in the articles of incorporation are as valid as those of the directors subsequently elected from among the stockholders.[28]

Evidence.[29]—The minutes of a meeting of a board of directors of a corporation are not conclusive evidence of the terms of the contract with its bookkeeper, as to employment, when he had no knowledge thereof.[30]

Penalties for refusal of inspection of stock book.[31]—Under the stock corporation law of New York the penalty imposed on the corporation and officer or agent for a refusal to allow the stock book to be inspected by a stockholder, is not cumulative, and a stockholder can recover only a single penalty in each case.[32]

(§ 15) I. Powers of the directors or trustees.[33]—The existence of directors is an essential part of the artificial creature known as a trading corporation.[34] The

22. A resolution passed by four directors giving three of their own number salaries and back pay, by virtue of by-laws previously passed by five directors, including the four first mentioned, held void under Civ. Code, §§ 2970-2976. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill. Co. [Mont.] 76 P. 194; Id. [Mont.] 79 P. 248. In a suit by a receiver for an accounting by the directors, they are properly allowed credit for salaries due under an agreement with the corporation, and the fact that the salaries voted to them were excessive will not preclude their receiving such compensation as their services were reasonably worth. Miller v. Doyle, 211 Pa. 59, 60 A. 496. A director of a corporation, who rendered services in winding up its affairs, after its charter had expired, was properly allowed compensation equal to the salary he had received as an officer, while the corporation was a going concern. 25. It is both agent and adversary. It represents and it antagonizes. It protects and it assails. West v. Topeka Sav. Bank, 66 Kan. 524, 72 P. 252. In the conduct of the corporate enterprise, in choosing methods, in fixing policies and administering affairs, the board must be held to act on behalf of the stockholder and to represent him; but in a suit in the name of the corporation against a stockholder to compel payment of his subscription, the corporation and the stockholder are antagonists, and the board represents the corporation. 26. A provision in a certificate of incorporation that any resolution in writing, signed by all the members of the board of directors, should constitute action by the board, the same as if passed at a duly called meeting of the board, held not to be authorized by the General Corporation Act (Laws 1898, p. 408, c. 172), § 8, subd. 7. Audenried v. East Coast Mill. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 577. The acknowledgment of the justness of a claim against a corporation by three directors and an agreement that it should be paid, without any showing that they constituted a majority, or that they acted otherwise than in their individual capacity, does not fix an obligation upon the corporation. Farrell v. Gold Flint Min. Co. [Mont.] 80 P. 1027.

27. Cann v. Rector, etc., of Church of Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. An agreement made by one or two of the trustees of a corporation is not binding on the corporation, in the absence of authority conferred to make such agreement, or ratification subsequently. And the burden is on the plaintiff to show such authority or ratification. Wagner v. St. Peter's Hospital [Mont.] 79 P. 1054.

33. See 3 C. L. 915.

34. O'Conner v. International Silver Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 321. Under the General Corporation Act of New Jersey, the board affairs of a corporation are within the exclusive control of its directors,[35] who are chosen by and represent the stockholders, and derive their power wholly from them,[36] though they need not themselves be stockholders unless so required by by-law or charter.[37] They are not vested with the title to the property of the corporation, but are its agents, upon whom the duties of care and management devolve,[38] and a majority of the board of directors has power to bind the corporation in the tranasction of its ordinary business.[39] But a statute declaring that the corporate powers shall be exercised by a board of trustees does not exclusively lodge the powers of the corporation in such a board, so as to prevent ratification by the stockholders of a contract made on behalf of the corporation.[40] It is the duty of the directors to obtain money to pay current expenses, either by borrowing or by levying assessments upon the stockholders.[41] Courts have no power to review the findings of the board of directors of a corporation if within its charter rights.[42]

(15) J. Powers of other officers and agents than the directors or trustees.[43]—While a corporation is an entity which can hold property and be sued, yet it can act and speak only through its officers[44] who are trustees for the benefit of its stockholders, to whom has been committed the direction of the corporate affairs.[45] The act of the officers or agents of a corporation, unless shown to pertain of directors is the governing body, whose aid, as a means of corporate action, cannot be dispensed with by the stockholders by waiver or otherwise. Audenried v. East Coast Mill. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 577.

All corporate contracts, as well original ones as modifications of them, are to be made by the directors. Mosher v. Sinnott [Colo. App.] 79 P. 742. Under their general powers, the directors of a corporation have authority to incur the expense of notifying the stockholders of a proposed scheme of consolidation or exchange of stock for that of another corporation, and the manner of giving such notice rests in their discretion. A contract made by them for the publication of notices to the stockholders in such a case is binding on the corporation. Rascovor v. American Linseed Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 341. It is within the power of the board of directors to employ a secretary and pay him a salary; also to incur the expense of an office and necessary help therein. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill Co. [Mont.] 79 P. 248. Directors have power to sell full-paid treasury stock for what they deem it worth, even though that be below par. Mosher v. Sinnott [Colo. App.] 79 P. 742. Custom and usage, and the necessities of the social order, demand that the executive officers of a corporation should be regarded as entitled to bind the organization in all matters which such organization are accustomed to transact through such officers. Russell v. Washington Sav. Bank, 23 App. D. C. 398. In an action between two corporations it is not sufficient to allege transactions between the officers of the corporations, without naming them, as the

to their official duty or to be within the scope of their employment, is not binding upon the corporation,[46] but, while acting within the ordinary scope of their duties, in the absence of specific limitations brought to the knowledge of those who deal with them, or of which such persons are bound to take notice, they can bind the corporation to third parties.[47] Persons dealing with a corporation or with persons assuming to represent it, are chargeable with notice of the purpose of its creation and its powers[48] and of the powers and duties of its officers as defined in its by-laws.[49]

An agent is one who does business for the corporation upon its authority and for its account.[50] The appointment of an agent of a corporation is not required to be by resolution or formal vote of the directors or trustees, nor is it necessary that the power conferred upon him shall be so delegated. He may be appointed informally without vote or resolution, and clothed with authority in the same manner,[51] and the stockholders of a corporation, by permitting a person to act for the corporation in collecting debts, settling liabilities, and distributing proceeds, confer upon such, by acquiescence, the powers of a liquidating trustee.[52]

The president.[53]—The president, as such, has no power to contract for the corporation,[54] to execute a negotiable note which will bind the corporation,[55] to consent to the appointment of a receiver and to waive legal notices and delays,[56] to make a gift of the corporate property,[57] to sell machinery, which is a part of the manufacturing plant of the corporation;[58] and, unless his powers are enlarged by the charter or by-laws, his duties are confined to presiding and voting as a director.[59] His power is limited to that given by the by-laws,[60] or by express authority.[61] His authority may, in some cases, be presumed,[62] or implied from the course of dealing.[63]

A location of a railroad can be made only by act of the corporation through its board of directors, but acts done by agents, under the board's orders, are evidence of intent on the part of the board of directors to claim and hold such location. The vice-president.[64]—When the president cannot act, on account of absence, the vice-president can act in his stead,[65] and can bind the corporation in the transaction of business [66] and in the employment of counsel in pending, or prospective litigation.[67]

The secretary.—The secretary of a mining company, who is not a member of the board of directors, has no implied authority to bind the company beyond his authority as secretary.[68] Sureties on the bond of the secretary of a corporation assume their obligation with reference to the articles of association and by-laws, and cannot question the nature of the duties of their principal.[69]

The treasurer.[70]—The treasurer of a corporation, as such, has no powers of general management.[71] Ordinarily he is simply the custodian of the corporate funds and the disbursing officer.[72] Under a statute making every unqualified indorser a warrantor of the validity of a note and of the capacity of all prior parties to contract, the indorser of a note executed by the treasurer of a corporation cannot defend on the ground of the treasurer's lack of authority to execute the note.[73]

62. The public, in dealing with the president of a corporation, may, in the absence of notice to the contrary, presume that he has the same authority to do such acts as are customarily done by him, or by the presidents of similar corporations. But pastors of churches or presidents of church trustees have no implied power to control the building of church edifices or dictate their cost. Such duty must be performed by the governing body itself. Cann v. Rector, Wardens, etc., of Church of the Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. The general rule is that a corporation acts through its president and an act pertaining to the business of the corporation, not clearly foreign to the general power of the president, done through him, will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to have been authorized by the corporate body. Cozzens & B. Typesetting Co. v. Western Ranch & Irr. Co., 112 Ill. App. 309. The president being the principal executive officer of a corporation and charged with the management and operations of the company, his acts in purchasing supplies, employing men, etc., are clearly within the scope and extent of his authority. 63. Berlin v. Cusacks [La.] 38 So. 539. While the board of directors is the governing body of all private corporations, yet the president and other officers are those who are usually brought into contact with third parties in the conduct of business. Russell v. Washington Sav. Bank, 23 App. D. C. 398. In the absence of by-laws, it will not be assumed that the president has authority to surrender a lease of lands and accept another omitting the privilege of purchase at the close of the term. Lester Agricultural Chemical Works v. Selby [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 247. The signature of the president of a corporation, in behalf of the corporation, to a petition for repaving, was held valid, where it had been customary for him to surrender the lease and accept a new edge of the board of directors. Eddy v. Omaha [Neb.] 103 N. W. 692. The president of a corporation may employ an attorney for the company to conduct its litigation and bind the corporation for his reasonable compensation. 65. Held that the vice-president of defendant corporation was authorized, under the circumstances, to call a special meeting. Bell v. Standard Quicksilver Co. [Cal.] 81 P. 17. In the absence of any allegations of fraud, it will be presumed that the cause of the vice-president's assumption of the office of president was the absence of the latter. Held that it was not error for the court to refuse to compel the president to answer questions with reference to the corporation's ability to have obtained his presence to call the special meeting which was called by the vice-president and challenged as irregular. Business managers, salesmen, etc.[74]—The president and general manager of a corporation has certain implied powers generally recognized by the courts.[75] A manager of a corporation cannot engage employes for a long future period without express authority,[76] but where the officer making the contract is the general manager and makes it in the ordinary course of business, it will be presumed he is acting within the scope of his powers,[77] and a stranger dealing with him in good faith, on the faith of his apparent powers and without notice of facts showing that his act was unauthorized, may hold the corporation liable.[78]

Evidence of authority.[79]—Agency for a corporation may be proved as for a natural person.[80] The presumption that a contract, bearing the signature of the president and secretary, as well as the corporate seal, is an obligation of the corporation may be overcome by the introduction of its charter and by-laws in evidence, to show want of authority on the part of its officers, and by parol evidence showing that the contract had never been acted on or ratified.[81] The fact that a contract was made by an agent for the benefit of a corporation may be shown by parol, though the contract has no such suggestion on its face.[82]

(§ 15) K. Apparent authority of officers and agents and estoppel of the corporation and of others. Implied permission to act.[83]—Authority conferred by a corporation may be implied as in other cases.[84] Where an officer or agent is entrusted with the general management of the business or a particular part of the business, he has apparent or implied authority to manage the same in the usual way and for such purpose to bind the corporation by his acts and contracts on its behalf.[85] An officer has no implied authority to act for his personal benefit.[86]

Acceptance of benefits.[87]—Having accepted the money on a contract for the sale of stock, a corporation cannot, while retaining the same, be heard to deny the authority of its officers to make the contract,[88] or to defend against an action thereon, on the ground that the provisions of its charter prescribing the form of the contract were not complied with, by the officer acting for the corporation in the execution of the contract.[89]

Acquiescence in similar acts.[90]—The authority of an officer of a corporation to do a particular act may be inferred from proof of his habitual doing of such acts, with the acquiescence of the directors.[91] Corporations may confer larger powers than usual upon their officers or agents, by habitually permitting them to exercise them and thus holding them out to the public as possessing them,[92] and the authority of the subordinate agents of a corporation often depends upon the course of dealing which the company or its directors have sanctioned.[93]

(§ 15) L. Ratification of unauthorized acts.[94]—A corporation, like a natural person, may ratify, affirm, and validate any contract made or act done in its behalf, which it is capable of making or doing in the first instance,[95] and ratifica-edge of his lack of authority, for the supply of water at rates below those usually charged. Held to be within the apparent authority of the superintendent and binding on the company. Milledgeville Water Co. v. Edwards, 121 Ga. 555, 49 S. E. 621. The making of a contract, in behalf of a corporation chartered for the purpose of manufacturing lumber, for the hauling of logs to be sawn into lumber, is within the apparent scope of the authority of its superintendent or other managing official; and so is his notice to the plaintiffs that the company would no longer live up to the agreement, and they had a right to treat the declaration as a breach of the contract. Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Hobbs [Ga.] 49 S. E. 783. The secretary and treasurer of a hotel corporation, who signed a lease of the premises, was charged with putting the lessee in possession, superintended repairs, collected rent and negotiated for a surrender of the lease, had authority to effect such surrender. Commercial Hotel Co. v. Brill, 123 Wis. 638, 101 N. W. 1101. By conferring upon an officer the title "General manager," a railroad corporation holds him out to the world as authorized to make a contract to repair a sleeping car used on its line. Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Pullman Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 1008. The use of the funds of a corporation by its treasurer to pay the notes of a third person is not beyond the apparent scope of his authority, so as to warrant the recovery of the money, where it was received in good faith and without notice of want of authority. Manhattan Web Co. v. Aquidneck Nat. Bank, 133 F. 76. Evidence held insufficient to establish either the appointment of the treasurer of the company as its agent or his authority to purchase goods on its credit. Albro Min. & Mill Co. v. Chinn [Colo. App.] 77 P. 1097.

86. There is no presumption of authority by a treasurer of a corporation to use its funds to pay his own notes, arising from the mere fact that the funds are so used. Manhattan Web Co. v. Aquidneck Nat. Bank, 133 F. 76.

tion by the board of directors, express or implied, gives to the officers of a corporation all the authority, for an act in its behalf, that could have been given by previous express authorization.[96] Acceptance of benefits by the corporation will operate as a ratification,[97] but ratification of an unauthorized act on behalf of the corporation must be with full knowledge of the act and intention to adopt it.[98]

Ratification may be presumed from the silence of the directors or their failure to act.[99]

If the officers or trustees do any unauthorized act, or incur indebtedness, the stockholders may subsequently ratify the acts and validate the original unauthorized transaction.[1] Even if the majority of the stockholders consent to ratify an illegal use of its funds, their assent will not bind a protesting minority, or prevent them from obtaining appropriate equitable relief.[2]

(§ 15) M. Notice to or knowledge of officers or agents as notice to or knowledge of corporation.[3]—Notice to an officer or agent of a corporation in the course of his employment and with respect to a matter within his apparent authority is notice to the corporation;[4] but a corporation, taking an assignment of a mortgage,

16. Stickel v. Atwood, 25 R. I. 456, 56 A. 687. A stockholder, who has been induced poration cannot be held liable as for false representations for mere expression of opinion.[17] In some cases directors or officers of a corporation may make themselves liable in an attempt to fix upon the corporation a liability with which it cannot, under the law, be charged.[18] The true test as to the liability of a director is whether the transaction is such that the body of stockholders could not have sanctioned it.[19] In case of fraudulent transactions of directors, in misappropriating and diverting the corporate funds by the payment of unauthorized salaries, an officer who was in no way connected with the proceedings, although paid a salary thereunder, is not liable in a minority stockholders' action, but the officials who caused the money to be paid to him must account therefor.[20] Where the good will of a defunct corporation was wrongfully appropriated by one of its directors, who was administering its affairs, the appropriaton may be treated as a sale voidable at the option of those interested in the assets of the corportion. And where such appropriation was for the benefit of a new corporation, the latter may be compelled to account for the profits realized from the appropriation.[21] A corporation is not organized for an unlawful business, so as to make its officers liable for money invested in its bonds, merely because the business is bottomed on a scheme that will not finance out.[22]

The president of a corporation who participates in the sale of bonds, which falsely represent that they are secured by all the property of the corporation is personally liable for deceit, though ignorant of the particular sale in question.[23]

Where the business of a corporation itself involves a violation of law, all who participate in it are liable.[24]

Statutory liabilities.—The fact that the directors honestly believed in the competency of the president and so committed the entire management of the bank to him, did not relieve them from their statutory liability for neglect of duty.[25] to subscribe for stock, to his financial injury, by the false and fraudulent representations of the directors may have relief against them. The law will compel them to make good whatever he may have lost by his investment; but if he asks to have them compelled to take his place as a stockholder, to assume his holding and return, not his actual damages, but his entire investment, then he must show that he was not merely the incidental victim, but the intentional victim of their fraud. Lyon v. James, 97 App. Div. 385, 90 N. Y. S. 28.

17. In selling bonds, the coupons of which were payable in numercial order, as money accumulated, the statement of the officers that the scheme would finance out, held to be but a mere expression of opinion. Vokes v. Eaton [Ky.] 85 S. W. 174.

23. Such a recital in a bond imports that the bonds are secured by some special lien. Stickel v. Atwood, 25 R. I. 456, 56 A. 687. Transactions of claimant with the president of the bank, from which the latter received no benefit, held to give claimant no claim against the bank, but that his remedy was against the president. People v. Mercantile Co-op. Bank, 93 N. Y. S. 521. But the implication of scienter arising from official connection with a company, and knowledge of its affairs, applies only to existent facts, and does not, as matter of law, reach and cover the question of good faith in the expression of opinion as to the worth of the company's securities. The president of a corporation therefore cannot be held liable in an action for deceit in the sale of corporate bonds, for expressions of mere matters of opinion as to their value. Kimber v. Young [C. C. A.] 137 F. 744.

24. The vice-president of a corporation, in general charge of its business in the state, may be convicted of peddling without a license, because of the corporation's servants having peddled its goods without license. Acts 1902-03-04, p. 484, c. 27 (Va. Code 1904, p. 2223). But the manager of a store cannot be held liable for such unlawful peddling done before he became manager. Crall v. Com. [Va.] 49 S. E. 638.

25. Kirby's Dig. § 863, makes directors who neglect their statutory duties liable for all debts of the corporation contracted during such neglect. Fletcher v. Eagle [Ark.] 86 S. W. 810.

The statute requiring annual reports by corporations and making directors personally liable for corporate debts, in case of failure to file a report, is penal in its nature and must be construed favorably to the directors.[26] They are not liable for debts contracted after the filing thereof.[27] And a director who resigns before the expiration of the time limited for filing the annual report cannot be subjected to the statutory liability.[28] This act being an imposition of a penalty did not create a vested right in the party entitled to recover.[29] In Indiana the mere failure of a manufacturing corporation to make its annual report does not render its officers liable for damages, unless creditors were deceived and misled thereby.[30] And where directors of a corporation sold their stock in good faith several months before a creditor's debt was created, they were not liable to him in damags for the failure of the corporation to file an annual report of its assets and liabilities.[31]

In Vermont the liability of a director who assents to the creation of indebtedness beyond the statutory limit is not an asset of the corporation to be collected and marshaled among creditors, but the assenting creditors are personally liable jointly and severally directly to creditors whose debts are beyond the limit.[32]

(§ 15) Q. Liability of officers for mismanagement.[33]—Unless the mismanagement is so gross as to amount to fraud, the president of a corporation is not personally liable for losses sustained through his mismanagement.[34] An officer of a corporation who unlawfully disposes of the moneys of the corporation is personally liable therefor.[35] An action against an officer of a corporation for a misappropriation of corporate funds, can be maintained only by the corporation, or by a stockholder in its behalf,[36] if the association refuses to bring the suit.[37]

Where the directors of a corporation vote themselves increases in salaries, while using the profits to expand the business, to the entire exclusion of dividends, a court of equity can compel the restoration of excessive amounts and adjust the salaries on a reasonable basis.[38] In a common-law action against directors of an insolvent corporation for damages for payment of dividends with knowledge of the impairment of the corporation's capital, it is necessary to show fraud and bad faith;[39] for, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, the officers of a corporation are presumed not to have impaired its capital in declaring a dividend.[40]

Statutory actions against directors.—The right of action given by the New York Code, against directors or officers of a corporation to compel an accounting for money or property acquired or transferred, in violation of their duties, is not restricted to domestic corporations only,[41] and does not authorize an action against the corporation itself.[42] A claim against a director of a defunct corporation, in the administration of its affairs under the statutes of Wisconsin,[43] for wrongfully converting the good will of the corporation, is not for a tort, but for an injury to personal estate, or for an accounting, and survives the death of the director.[44] In Michigan only judgment creditors can invoke the aid of the circuit court to compel officers and directors of corporations to account for official misconduct, remove them from office, or to set aside or restrain unlawful alienations of property;[45] and the statute, authorizing a corporation creditor to charge its directors or superintending officers on account of any liability created by law, applies only to corporations having banking powers and not to corporations generally.[46]

(§ 15) R. Dealings between a corporation and the directors or other officers and personal interest in transactions.[47]—Directors are charged with the utmost good faith in their dealings with the corporation.[48] They stand in equity in a fiduciary capacity as to the corporation and stockholders,[49] being the trustees, while the stockholders are the cestuis que trustent.[50] Neither directors or officers can profit by virtue of their official position,[51] and they are forbidden to take part in

Neither the executive officers nor the directors of a corporation have a right to convert its assets, give them away or make any self-serving disposition of them against the interest of the company. But where there are no stockholders but the directors and officers, the latter may make a valid gift of the assets, by unanimous consent, unless the rights of creditors are impaired. Jorndt v. Reuter Hub & Spoke Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 29. A corporation cannot sell, mortgage, or lease property only for the individual benefit of an officer or stockholder. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Jones [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1017. The president of a corporation cannot acquire title for himself to the property of another corporation, at trustee's sale, when the sale was a scheme, entered into by both corporations, to clear the title of the corporation of which he was president. any transaction concerning the trust, in which they have an interest adverse to that of their beneficiary.[52] If they receive any profits from the company's property or business, they hold the same as trustees for the benefit of the corporation and its stockholders,[53] and they will be compelled in equity to account for profits illegally made by them out of their dealings with the corporation.[54]

But officers and directors are not absolutely precluded from dealing directly with the corporation,[55] and when the contract is made with a director, he stands, as to the contract, in the relation of a stranger to the corporation.[56] Contracts whereby directors become creditors of their corporations will be subjected to the closest scrutiny and will be enforced only when fair and equitable,[57] and the burden

The presumption that directors of a corporation will do their duty is overcome by the presence of causes sufficient to influence them to do otherwise. Montgomery Traction Co. v. Harmon, 140 Ala. 505, 37 So. 371. The directors of a corporation have no authority to bind the company to any contract made with themselves personally. Smith v. Pacific Vinegar & Pickle Works, 145 Cal. 352, 78 P. 550. An officer of a corporation is not qualified to act for his company in any transaction wherein the corporation is dealing with the officer. The president cannot purchase notes payable to the corporation, and, as president, indorse them to himself individually. Id. A president, cashier, or managing agent, having authority to sign the name of a corporation to negotiable instruments, cannot execute or indorse a note to himself, or certify a check for his own benefit. A by-law conferring such authority and making the president general manager does not empower him to purchase notes payable to the corporation and indorse them to himself. Id. Where bonds of a corporation intended to be secured by mortgage were withheld from sale by the secretary by resolution of the board of directors, to secure certain obligations of the company to the directors, such a pledge was void without the consent of all the stockholders. Scott v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank [Tex.] 75 S. W. 7. A resolution passed at a stockholders' meeting, for the benefit of a stockholder who as trustee, owner, and proxy voted a majority of the stock, issuing to him certain treasury stock in consideration of services rendered, could not be sustained. United Gold & Platinum Mines Co. v. Smith, 44 Misc. 567, 90 N. Y. S. 199. But where a proposition to borrow money from certain directors was carried by votes enough without theirs, the fact that such directors were present and voting did not invalidate the transaction. Schnittger v. Old Home Consol. Min. Co. 144 Cal. 603, 78 P. 9. Nor does the fact that the directors loaning the money did not disclose their interest in the loan to the other directors and that the party in whose name the loan was made was a mere figurehead, unless it appears that they thereby gained an undue advantage over the corporation. is on the directors to show that transactions had by them with the corporation, from which they profit, are fair and bona fide.[58] Contracts awarded by the directors to themselves,[59] which are unfair and in which the directors secure any undue or unjust advantage,[60] or transactions had by a director with reference to the property of the company, while they may not be void per se,[61] are voidable at the option of the corporation, or its creditors or stockholders.

Purchase of corporate property.[62]—A director's purchase of property from a corporation is voidable at the option of the corporation, even though the director paid fully as much as, or more than, the property is worth,[63] and directors of a corporation who participate in sales of the company's property to themselves may be required, at the suit of the stockholders, to account to the corporation therefor.[64] In the absence of fraud, property of a corporation may be sold on execution to directors thereof, under a judgment obtained by them on claims against it, brought by them with own with their own funds.[65]

Purchase of corporate obligations.[66]—After a corporation has ceased to do business, a stockholder and trustee thereof may purchase its outstanding obligations and enforce them for his own benefit,[67] but the president of a corporation cannot buy in debts against it, at a heavy discount and then assert them at full value.[68]

§ 16. Rights and remedies of creditors of corporations. A. The relation of creditors.[69]—To a great extent the rights and remedies of creditors are not affected by the corporate charter of the debtor. For matters not so affected consult other titles, particularly those dealing with remedies[70] and insolvency proceedings.[71]

A note or other obligation given by a corporation to an officer is not necessarily void on that account; but a third person taking such a note knowing that the payee is an officer of the corporation maker is put upon his inquiry, and, if it is subject to any legal infirmity, he cannot avoid the effect of it, by claiming to be a bona fide holder without notice. But a redemption by directors of corporate property from sale on execution, made under a judgment rendered in favor of one of them only two days before the redemption, which was obtained by default based upon the acceptance of service of the summons by another of their number, was held not to have been open, fair and equitable. Where a director, at the instance of the president, renders an agreement to share the profits, bought judgments against the corporation and caused its lands to be sold on execution, which land he purchased, on a redemption of the land permitted because of the relationship of the parties to the corporation, the stockholder should not be required to contribute any of the money to be used by the corporation in redeeming. The claims of domestic attaching creditors are preferred to those of foreign creditors, and will be upheld against indirect, as well as direct, attacks.[72] Creditors in a winding up suit may enforce liabilities, the legal title to which is in the receiver of the insolvent corporation.[73] The creditor of a church corporation is not the creditor of the members of the church, and has no right of action against them as such.[74]

The assets of an insolvent corporation are sometimes regarded as a trust fund for the benefit of creditors,[75] and no transfer or subterfuge will be countenanced, which prevents an equal distribution of such fund among creditors of the corporation.[76] In Michigan the doctrine that, when a corporation becomes insolvent and unable to carry on its business, each creditor is entitled to his pro rata share of its assets, that the creditors, under such circumstances, has an equitable lien on the assets [77] is not recognized, but has been deliberately repudiated; [78] and a creditor who has neither a judgment nor a lien upon the property of a corporation cannot complain of the distribution of that property, although the corporation is insolvent.[79]

(§ 16) B. Rights and remedies of creditors against the corporation.[80]—A general creditor cannot file a bill in equity to enforce a claim against a going corporation, unless he has first obtained a lien on the property, or it is otherwise provided by statute.[81]

Voluntary preferences,[82] when illegal, may be impeached or repudiated by the receiver and, when so ordered by the court, he may sue to recover its diverted assets, even though the corporation itself might not have been allowed to do so.[83]

Priorities between claims.[84]—Courts of equity usually seek to put all the creditors of an insolvent corporation upon the same footing as to the payment of their claims, and in general allow no preferences; [85] yet justice often requires pref-

Where a supposed debtor of an insolvent joint stock company, which afterward incorporated and then passed into the hands of a receiver, paid to the corporation's cashier, on account of the joint stock company, a certain sum, but it afterward appeared, in an action against him by the receiver, that the corporation owed him, held that the judgment had not a preferential character over other corporate debts. Lacy v. Clinton Loan Ass'n, 132 N. C. 131, 43 S. E. 586. Where a corporation assumed the debts of a firm as a part consideration for the conveyance to it of firm property, the corporate debts, in case of insolvency, were not entitled to preference in payment over those of the firm. And a part of such consideration being the assumption of debts of two individual partners secured by trust deed on the land conveyed and also on land owned by one of the partners, held, that the corporation was bound to release the individual land from the burden of the debt. Cogan v. Conover Mfg. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 408. A mortgagee who released her mortgage on the property of a corporation in consideration of certain bonds of the company to be issued her, but who took stock instead and held it two years without objection, on the insolvency of the company was held estopped from claiming priority over those who had extended credit to the corporation on the strength of her not being a bondholder. Lembeck v. Jarvis Terminal Cold Storage Co. [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 955. Where a temporary receiver, under the New Jersey corporation act, presented a petition, and notified creditors, for leave to issue receiver's certificates to obtain funds to complete certain contracts and no one objected, the equitable assignee of money to be earned by the corporation on a contract, having failed to notify the receiver of a claim for preference, was estopped from doing so afterward. Gibson v. Standard Automatic Gas Engine Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 799. In a proceeding to establish notes as a claim against the assets of an insolvent corporation, evidence held insufficient to show that they were given for a loan to a stockholder to purchase stock in another corporation for his own benefit, instead of for the corporation and that the claimant bank had knowledge of the fact. Cook v. Anderson Food Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 449.

Assets for creditors.[90]—Every corporation impliedly agrees with every person becoming its creditor that it will observe the laws of its existence enacted to secure the certain payment of its debts, and will honestly apply its assets to that end.[91] Creditors of an insolvent corporation, who became such pending a creditors' suit, are entitled to intervene in the proceedings in the Federal court and to participate in the assets remaining after payment of the claims of creditors existing at the time the creditors' bill was filed.[92]

Winding up proceedings, assignments, receivership.[93]—Any creditor or stockholder of an insolvent corporation may institute proceedings in chancery to wind it up.[94] A winding up action, commenced in simple form, may be broadened by amended and supplemental complaints, subject to the ordinary rules, so far as necessary to bring the entire subject-matter before the court for settlement.[95] Creditors in a winding up suit may enforce liabilities, the legal title to which is in the receiver of the insolvent corporation.[96]

A general assignee becomes the trustee for the benefit of the creditors of the corporation. His powers are superior to those of the stockholders or the corporation itself.[97]

In the absence of a permissive statute, courts of equity have no power to dissolve a going business corporation, and, to that end, appoint a receiver for the sequestration of the corporate property.[98] Proceedings for the appointment of a receiver in a court of equity are usually ancillary in nature, and the appointment is granted only as an incident to the relief sought in the petition.[99] Where a court of equity can grant sufficient relief to a complaining minority stockholder for mismanagement of corporate affairs, a receiver will not be appointed.[1] A receiver

A bond executed by one corporation to another, upon the purchase of the property and assets of the latter, covenanting to pay all debts and to perform all contracts of the selling corporation, creates a direct and primary liability of the purchaser in equity, on a contract assigned as part of the assets. 98. Mills' Ann. St. § 497, in conferring upon a court of equity authority to decree the dissoution of a corporation at the suit of an individual and authorizing the taking charge of its property by a receiver for the purpose of closing up its affairs, merely gives a remedy in the nature of a creditors' bill. Nor does section 163 of the Code of Procedure confer the powers mentioned in the text. People v. District Court of Denver [Colo.] 80 P. 908. Statutes providing for creditors' suits for administering the affairs of an insolvent corporation for the benefit of creditors are merely confirmatory of previously existing law. Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 121 Wis. 127, 99 N. W. 909. The Delaware statute for the appointment of a receiver, on the application of stockholders or creditors of an insolvent corporation, creates a purely equitable right and remedy, which may be enforced in a circuit court of the United States by unsecured creditors who have not reduced their claims to judgment, as well as by stockholders or judgment creditors. may be appointed without notice, though generally such a thing should not be done.[2] It is no objection to the appointment of a particular person as receiver of a corporation that he is a stockholder and has an interest opposed to that of creditors.[3]

The law does not contemplate, on an application to appoint a receiver, two distinct judgments—the necessity for such appointment and the appointment—but the two orders must be read together as constituting one judgment.[4]

A solvent corporation will not be placed in the hands of a receiver to enable a stockholder, who has deposited his stock as collateral for a debt, to have an account of its assets.[5] A corporation, like an individual, is said to be insolvent when it is not able to pay its debts.[6] The mere refusal by a corporaton to pay its debts is not ground for the appointment of a receiver therefor, even with its consent;[7] but a receiver may well be appointed for a corporation, when the further conduct of its business would only make its condition more disastrous.[8] In case of an insolvent

The fact that a board of directors of a corporation exceeded its powers in leasing its property and franchises does not warrant the appointment of a receiver, where no other violation of duty or mismanagement is shown. Insolvency, under the New Jersey corporation act, denotes a general inability to meet pecuniary liabilities as they mature, by means of either available assets or an honest use of credit. P. L. 1896, pp. 277, 298, § 64. Empire State Trust Co. v. Trustees of Fisher & Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 60 A. 940, citing National Bank of Metropolis v. Sprague, 21 N. J. Eq. 530, 538; Skirm v. Eastern Rubber Mfg. Co., 55 N. J. Eq. 179, 184. 8. Vokes v. Eaton [Ky.] 85 S. W. 174. Under a Kansas statute, now repealed, it was necessary that a corporation should be insolvent before a receiver could be appointed. Section 1302, Gen. St. 1901, under this section a judgment creditor of an insolvent corporation, after the return of an execution unsatisfied, was entitled to the appointment of a receiver, by application in the original action. Consolidated Barb Wire Co. v. Stevenson [Kan.] 79 P. 1085. Proceedings in Louisiana, under paragraph 8, section 1, Act No. 159, page 313, Acts 1898, for the appointment of receivers over corporations, contemplate proof of the financial inability of the corporation to meet its obligations, and of the necessity of the appointment of a receiver, by declaration of the board of directors, embodied in a resolution. Saxon v. Southwestern Brick & Tile Mfg. Co., 113 La. 637, 37 So. 540. The resolution of the board of directors referred to in the act of 1898 is made at least prima facie evidence of the necessity. Oil City Ironworks v. Pelican Oil & Pipe Line Co. [La.] 38 So. 987. The statute of Louisiana (Act 159, p. 312 of 1898) does not require that the party asking for the appointment of a receiver be a "judgment" creditor of the corporation.

corporation, the courts of the state where it was organized are the proper tribunals to ascertain the deficiency of its assets, to determine the amounts due creditors and pass upon the rights and liabilities of its stockholders.[9] In the absence of any proceedings in the Federal courts, under the bankruptcy law,[10] proceedings may be had for the appointment of a receiver to take, hold and distribute the assets of an insolvent corporation under the insolvency statutes of a state.[11]

The principle object of a receivership is to afford prompt and efficient relief, and creditors of creditors are not permitted to intervene, to the hindrance and delay of such relief.[12] But where a creditor has assigned his interest in any dividends coming to him, or liens have been created upon his interest, those who succeed to his rights are generally allowed to appear as claimants and establish their claims to his share of the funds.[13] The very purpose of the appointment of a receiver is to bring into play rights hostile to the continued existence of the corporation,[14] although the mere fact that corporation has gone into the hands of a receiver does not affect its corporate existence.[15] But the appointment of a receiver operates as a suspension of its corporate functions and of all authority over its property and effects.[16] The title and right of possession of all its property, both real and personal, passes to the receiver, as the officer of the court appointing him, for the use and benefit of the creditors of the insolvent.[17] The effect of appointing a receiver being to take the property of a corporation out of the control of its officers, the courts should proceed with extreme caution and the statute authorizing such action should be strictly construed.[18]

The action of an inferior court in the appointment of a receiver for an insolvent corporation will not be interfered with, unless there is shown to be some overwhelming objection, point of propriety, or some fatal objection upon principle in the person named.[19] Any irregularity in the filing of the bond of a receiver in supplementary proceedings cannot be taken advantage of collaterally.[20]

Id. In the absence of statutory authority, unsecured creditors at law, who have not reduced their claims to judgment, cannot solely on the ground of insolvency maintain a bill to deprive a corporation of the possession of its assets and secure their administration and distribution. Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co., 123 F. 506. Under the statute authorizing the appointment of a receiver for an insolvent corporation, or one in imminent danger of insolvency, the applicant must show that he has an actual interest in the property, or a lien thereon, or that it constitutes a fund out of which he is entitled to the satisfaction of his claim. Where fraud and mismanagement by the officers of a corporation is charged, it is only where the ordinary remedies are inadequate; or where the assets of the corporation are liable to be squandered or dissipated, or the business of the corporation injured or destroyed, or for the purpose of winding up its affairs, that a court will be justified in taking from the owners the management and direction of the corporate affairs and assuming such management and direction itself through the hands of its

Where a corporation administering funds derived from various sources is placed in the hands of a receiver, who administers the whole, it appearing that the receivership was as necessary for the conservation of one fund as the other, the expense should be borne by the whole in proportion to the benefits received.[21]

A receiver is the officer of the court and it is his duty to yield prompt and unquestioned obedience to all its lawful decrees.[22] He is a mere custodian, without title and without any power but that conferred upon him by the order appointing him.[23] He represents the state as well as the creditors and stockholders.[24]

A receiver has the right to do what the corporation might have done in collecting unpaid subscriptions and debts due the corporation and in paying taxes.[25] When a receiver is appointed and he finds contracts of the insolvent corporation, he has an election to carry out or not to carry out such contracts.[26] Ordinarily the receiver is the proper party to bring suit against offending officials, but when the receiver is one of the officials charged with the wrongdoing, an equitable proceeding may be maintained by the stockholders, the receiver and the corporation both being made parties.[27] A bill by a receiver against directors for negligence causing loss to the stockholders may be barred by laches.[28]

Calef v. Wyandotte Realty Co. [Kan.] 78 P. 816. Where a corporation purchased property on a conditional sale, which was retaken by the vendor upon default in payment by the vendee, and sold to another party, the receiver of the corporation could not recover the property, as the corporation was no longer entitled to its possession after forfeiture. The fact that the sale was made to the brother of the president of the corporation did not show fraud; and even if the transaction was fraudulent, the receiver could not recover without tendering the price paid by the president's brother. Kidder v. Wittler-Corbin Machinery Co. [Wash.] 80 P. 301. of the claims of all parties to the proceedings except such claims as may be declared in the decree not to be prejudiced.[29]

A receiver collusively appointed to carry out the fraudulent designs of adversaries of the creditors may be regarded as the agent of such adversaries and made defendant in the main action or other action by the creditors.[30] The court may permit a receiver, charged with wasting or misappropriating a trust fund for creditors, to be made a defendant in a creditor's suit and his liabilty as a wrongful holder of trust funds determined and enforced.[31] A purchase of stock by a receiver at his own sale, through a third party, is irregular and voidable at the option of the original owners, and perhaps as to creditors, but it is not void or subject to collateral attack.[32]

(§ 16) C. Rights of corporate mortgagees and bondholders.[33]—A creditor who seeks the aid of a corporation mortgage must establish the corporation's authority to make it.[34] In Texas, an action for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of property embraced in a mortgage, pending foreclosure and enforcement of payment of the debt secured thereby, may be brought in the county whence any part of the mortgaged property is situated.[35] A corporation mortgage will not be construed to cover after-acquired property, unless the intent to do so is expressed.[36] The holder of bonds of a corporation, taken as collateral security for a pre-existing debt, is a bona fide holder for value.[37] Holders of bonds secured by a pledge of stock are entitled to have such stock continued in existence for their security, unless they consent that some other security may be substituted.[38] Where the income from certain water works companies paid to its fiscal agents was sufficient to pay interest and coupons on prior mortgage debts, but the agents misapplied such income by paying a subsequent lien, they could not afterward hold such coupons or interest instalments as outstanding debts under the mortgage lien, to the prejudice of bondholders.[39] The failure of a corporation to pay a tax due the state on an increase of stock can be taken advantage of only by the state and does not affect the value of its bonds.[40] Although an instrument is so executed as to become the bond of the corporation, it is not necessarily a sealed instrument as to the stockholders who indorsed it before delivery, to give credit thereto.[41] Coupon bonds issued by a water

(§ 16) D. Officers and stockholders as creditors; preferences.[45]—A corporation in a failing condition may prefer, in payment or security, the valid debt of any of its creditors, although a director, if done in good faith.[46] In the division of the profits of a corporation shareholders can participate only in proportion to the amount of stock they hold; so far as the money loaned by them to the corporation is concerned, they stand in the attitude of creditors and not of shareholders.[47]

(§ 16) E. Liability of stockholders on account of unpaid subscriptions, and remedies.[48]—The liability of shareholders to pay for the stock subscribed for by them is a common law, not a statutory, liability.[49] While a corporation is solvent, a stock subscription is due in accordance with its terms, and is payable when, and as called for, by the corporation; but when the corporation becomes insolvent, the contract between it and the subscriber is terminated, and his debt to it then is only for such part of his subscription as is required to pay the corporate debt, not to it in its own right, but in the right of its credtors.[50] It is not necessary for a stockholder to sign a subscription for stock, where the certificate is accepted, to render him liable to creditors for the full amount of unpaid subscriptions;[51] and his liability is not affected by the fact that the stock was to be paid for by the surrender of stock.[52]

The right to hold a stockholder for an unpaid subscription in the interest of creditors rests upon the doctrine that the capital stock is a trust fund for the payment of the obligations of the corporations;[53] and neither the corporation nor the subscriber, nor both together can defeat the creditor's rights;[54] nor can the corporation remit the stockholder's debt to the creditor's injury.[55] A creditor of a corporation cannot compel the members thereof to pay what may be due him by the corporation. He can demand payment of the corporation only, and he can seize no other effects than such as belong to the corporation.[56] Transactions between a corporation and a stockholder, in the sale of stock for property conveyed, cannot be attached by a judgment creditor unless the corporation is made a party.[57] If stockholders do not pay their subscriptions to stock, their obligation is to the corporation, and the corporation only can enforce it.[58] It is the duty of the governing authorities of a corporation to require payment of stock subscriptions, and, on failure so to do, they may be required by the courts, at the suit of interested parties, to perform their duty.[59] But a creditor, who knew that stock issued as fully paid was not in fact fully paid and yet extended credit to the corporation, cannot require payment of the unpaid subscription, in case of the corporation's insolvency.[60] When a bill in equity is filed by the creditors of an insolvent corporation to subject the unpaid subscriptions to the payment of the corporate debts, it is necessary that all the delinquent subscribers be made parties defendant, unless some good reason for the contrary appears in the bill, such as death, insolvency or inability to reach a party with the process of the court.[61] The real owner of stock, which stands in the name of a dummy and has never been entered on the books in the name of the owner is nevertheless liable to be charged both for unpaid assessments and with the statutory liability for debts.[62]

In an action by stockholders against the corporation for a receiver and winding up, the court may order the receiver to determine the amount due from plaintiffs for unpaid subscriptions and render judgment against them therefore.[63] Where no effort has been made by a receiver to dispose of valuable assets of the insolvent corporation or to ascertain the real owners of stock held in the name of dummies, so as to include them in the assessment, his application for permission to make an assessment to pay debts is premature.[64] In actions to enforce payment of unpaid subscriptions,, the stockholders are entitled to a jury trial of the issues raised by their denial of the ownership of, or subscription to, stock.[65] The payment of a judgment obtained by a creditor on the personal liability of a stockholder under the statute cannot be considered as payment on unpaid corporate stock.[66]

Purchasers of stock, apparently full-paid, in open market, are not liable for unpaid instalments thereon, under the statutes imposing such liability;[67] nor are holders of stock issued by a mining company for the purchase of mines, and taken as full-paid, under the Colorado statutes, where the transaction was bona fide,[68] and a bona fide transferee of stock, the certificate of which recites that it is full-paid, is not liable to make good the contract of the original subscriber, if such transferee did not know, actually or constructively, that the stock had not been fully paid for.[69] Where full-paid stock is issued for property received, there must be actual fraud in the transaction to enable creditors of the corporation to call the stockholders to account.[70]

Fictitiously paid up stock.[71]—A transferee of shares of stock, with knowledge that they had been fraudulently issued as fully paid-up, becomes liable for the unpaid subscription.[72]

Limitations.[73]—The statute of limitations does not begin to run against an action to enforce a stockholder's liability on unpaid stock, until levy of an assessment;[74] but an order of a bankrupt court to the trustee to bring suit for unpaid subscriptions is sufficiently in the nature of a call or assessment to perfect the cause of the action.[75] In Kansas the statute of limitations begins to run from the time when a private corporation becomes insolvent and suspends active business, leaving debts unpaid.[76]

is to be determined by the statute creating it,[79] and in force at the time his debt was incurred.[80] The liability is collateral to the principal obligation, which still rests upon the corporation.[81] It forms no part of the assets of the corporation, but constitutes a fund for the exclusive benefit and protection of all creditors.[82] Creditors are not required to await the collection of worthless or doubtful claims among the assets; shareholders must pay promptly and take upon themselves the onus and risk as to all such claims, looking to the assignee for whatever may be realized on assets.[83] A general law making stockholders of safe deposit, guaranty, loan and fidelity companies liable to depositors and creditors for double the amount of his stock, is applicable to a company incorporated by special charter.[84] Dissolution of a corporation does not extinguish the liability of the stockholders.[85]

79. Abbott v. Goodall [Me.] 60 A. 1030. Where a corporation created by special act was sought to be consolidated with another, the special liability of a stockholder of the original corporation cannot be enforced in an action against the attempted consolidated corporation, when the attempted consolidation is void. Boor v. Tolman, 113 Ill. App. 322. In Kansas, the constitutional and statutory liability of stockholders (in other than railway, charitable and religious corporations. Const. art. 12, § 2; Gen. St. 1868, c. 23, §§ 40, 44, 32), though statutory in its origin, is contractual in nature; it is several, and to the creditors individually and not to the corporation; and covers all contractual obligations of the corporation, whether it includes liabilities for torts, either before or after judgment is undetermined. Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & Ag. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721, citing Whitman v. Oxford Nat. Bank, 176 U. S. 559, 44 Law. Ed. 587; Howell v. Manglesdorf, 33 Kan. 194; Abbey v. Dry Goods Co., 44 Kan. 418; Pierce v. Security Co., 60 Kan. 164; Woodworth v. Bowles, 61 Kan. 569. Held to include indebtedness arising out of an accommodation indorsement by a corporation. First Nat. Bank of Pittsburg v. Darlington, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 438. In Kansas, where for more than one year the usual and ordinary business which constitutes the active life of the corporation is suspended and the business done is only such as looks to a cessation of its affairs, dissolution is conclusively presumed for the purpose of enabling the creditor to enforce the stockholder's liability. Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & Ag. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721. Under the statute of Maryland, making each stockholder liable for double the amount of his stock (Acts Md. 1892, p. 153, c. 109, § 851), the liability is absolute and direct to creditors and may be enforced by a creditor against a particular stockholder, and the stockholder being, as between them, a principal debtor, the creditor is not required first to exhaust his remedy against the corporation. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Myers, 133 F. 764. And the liability to creditors of a banking association, under the Maryland statutes, though statutory, is contractual in nature, each stockholder agreeing thereto; it is not an asset, but a debt directly by the stockholder to creditors who become such while the stockholder holds its stock. Myers v. Knickerbocker Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 111.

In re Ziegler, 98 App. Div. 117, 90 N. Y. S. 681. Creditors of a corporation who have proved their claims in insolvency proceedings against a second corporation that received all the assets of the first corporation and assumed its liabilities, and have received dividends on such claims, are not estopped from enforcing the statutory liability of the stockholders of the first corporation for the balance due them. Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & Ag. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721. The right to sue directors personally for corporate debts passes as an incident to the debt to an assignee thereof, during the lifetime of the creditor, or to a receiver appointed for the creditor. 85. Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & Ag. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721.

The special liability of a stockholder accrues when the cause of action arises against the corporation, and not when the judgment is rendered against it.[86]

The right of action, which the constitution and laws of Kansas give to a creditor against a stockholder, where a corporation suspends business for more than a year, without paying its debts, arises in that state and not in the state of the stockholder's residence.[87] A stockholder's liability in an Ohio corporation cannot be enforced outside of the jurisdiction of that state, on the theory that the constitutional provisions of that state are self-executing, the courts of that state having regarded the liability as statutory.[88]

As between creditors and stockholders, each stockholder is severally liable to all the creditors; but, as between themselves, each stockholder is to pay in proportion to his stock.[89]

Persons liable as stockholders.[90]—The statutory individual liability attached to corporate stock, as security for the payment of corporate debts, is that of the person who holds legal title to the stock as owner. This may be said to be part of the common law of corporations.[91] One who loans money to a corporation, but takes stock absolute upon its face, is liable as a stockholder;[92] but the beneficiary of the earnings of stock, where the bequest to him did not segregate such stock from the general estate of the deceased, is not liable as a stockholder;[93] nor is holding stock as collateral security.[94] And a person who agrees with another to subscribe for shares in a company, but fails to do so, while he may be liable for breach of

Hunt v. Hauser Malting Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1032. Under the statutes of Maine the pledgee for value, of a certificate of stock as security merely is not subject to the liabilities of a stockholder, unless he appears on the books as the absolute owner. Held, under the evidence, that claimant was not the absolute owner and not individually liable as a stockholder for corporate debts. In re Noyes Bros., 136 F. 977. In an action to enforce a stockholder's liability, the evidence was held sufficient to warrant a finding of defendant's ownership of the stock and his consequent liability. Hunt v. Reardon, 93 Minn. 375, 101 N. W. 606. Where a corporation organized under a special charter subsequently changed its name and came under the general (Act of June 16, 1887) a stockholder in such corporation was relieved of his special liability, inasmuch as the provisions of the later act were substituted for the special charter. Boor v. Tolman, 113 Ill. App. 322. The intention of the legislature of Ohio, as expressed in Rev. St. § 3258 and amended by Act April 29, 1902, was to restrict the liability of a stockholder to debts incurred while the stock was held by him and which were enforceable when due. Scofield v. Excelsior Oil Co., 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 169. contract, does not become a stockholder and liable as such.[95] A transfer of stock not made in the ordinary course of business, nor at a time when the corporate business is being prosecuted and the corporate life maintained in the usual manner, will not relieve the stockholder from liability to creditors of the corporation;[96] nor can a stockholder avoid his liability on account of stock sold prior to the creation of the debt, if the stock was not transferred on the books as required by the rules.[97] A non-resident stockholder, who was not a party to, and did not appear in, any of the proceedings resulting in the appointment of a receiver and the levy of an assessment, cannot be held liable for such assessment, under the laws imposing and enforcing stockholders' liability.[98]

Before the books of a corporation can be put in evidence against a person charged with liability as one of its members his membership must be admitted or established by evidence aliunde.[99]

Ascertainment of corporate liability and exhaustion of remedy against it.[1]—In Rhode Island an action to enforce a stockholder's liability can be maintained only by a judgment creditor of the corporation.[2] But in North Dakota, a creditor whose claim has not been reduced to judgment may maintain an action against an insolvent corporation on behalf of himself and other creditors to enforce stockholders' liabilities.[3] And in Kansas the remedy against the stockholder is available to the creditor immediately upon the dissolution, without first recovering a judgment against the corporation.[4] In an action by a creditor of an insolvent corporation against stockholders, it is not necessary to show a judgment against the corporation and an execution returned unsatisfied, where it was alleged that a judgment of dissolution had been rendered, restraining creditors from prosecuting actions against the corporation.[5] A judgment against the corporation is binding upon the stockholders as an adjudication of the liability of the corporation.[6]

Limitations.[7]—Where the law creating the liability of stockholders for the debts of the corporation does not fix the time when the cause of action accrues, it accrues immediately upon the insolvency or like default of the corporation;[8] but the liability is conditional and statutes of limitaton do not begin to run on it until an assessment has been made,[9] and must be enforced within six years.[10] But in

Kansas the period of limitation for commencing proceedings to enforce a stockholder's liability is three years.[11] The personal liability of shareholders in a national bank, for the contracts, debts and engagements of the bank,[12] cannot be regarded as a contract liability, for the purpose of making applicable a limitation of an action on a contract not in writing and not arising out of any written instrument.[13]

Parties.[14]—In an action brought solely to enforce the liability of stockholders in an insolvent corporation, the receiver of the latter is not a necessary party.[15]

Defenses.[16]—Under the laws of Kansas the fact that a debt of a corporation has not become due, when the corporation is dissolved, does not prevent a creditor from pursuing a stockholder.[17] In such a proceeding the stockholder cannot interpose as a set-off a claim against the corporation, which does not constitute a legal defense against the plaintiff and can be made available only in a court of equity.[18] Under the Kansas statute defining the liability of stockholders, a proceeding by motion for execution against a stockholder, after recovery of judgment against the corporation and return of execution nulla bona, is a civil action within the meaning of the statute of limitations.[19]

Procedure.[20]—When a corporation ceases to do business, leaving debts unpaid, a suit in equity may be brought against it and the stockholders jointly;[21] and only a suit in equity by one or more creditors, in behalf of all, against the corporation and all the stockholders, is the proper proceedure in Colorado,[22] North Dakota,[23] and Maryland.[24] The receiver of a corporation can maintain a bill of discovery against stockholders, who bought shares of stock for parties unknown to the receiver, to discover the real owners of such stock, preliminary to a suit against them for an assessment to pay debts.[25]

(§ 16) G. Rights and remedies of creditors against directors and other officers.[26]—The statute of New Jersey, making directors jointly and severally liable to creditors to the full amount of stock withdrawn or in any way paid out to stockholders, is to a degree penal as respects the officer to whom it applies, and is governed by some of the principles applicable to strictly penal statutes.[27]

RIGHT OF STOCKHOLDERS TO INSPECT BOOKS AND PAPERS.*

[SPECIAL ARTICLE.]

The right in general.—It is a well-established general rule of the common law, sometimes expressly declared with some modification or change by statute or by the constitution, or by provisions in charters, articles of association, or by-laws, that every stockholder of a private corporation has a right, by reason of his interest therein, to inspect and examine its books and papers,[28] if he asserts the same at a proper and reasonable time.[29] "There can be no question that the ownership of stock confers the authority to see that the property is well managed. The exercise of this authority involves primarily the right to examine the books." [30] The right is the right of reasonable examination. It does not authorize such an appropriation of the records as will work serious detriment to the corporation, and on the other hand, mere inconvenience to the corporation is no ground for denying it.[31] A stockholder also has the right to make abstracts, memoranda, and copies.

*Adapted from Clark and Marshall on Corporations; with all cases since the publication of that work except those contained in the foregoing article (see ante, p. 795).

"The right to make copies, and to make abstracts and memoranda, of documents, books and papers, by a stockholder in an incorporated company, is as full and complete as the right of inspection thereof." [32]

Interest and motive.—The right is confined to stockholders [33] of record [34] and their personal representatives,[35] and to stockholders who are such at the time.[36] Some of the courts have held that stockholders have a right to inspect the books and papers of the corporation without first showing any mismanagement, where they wish to make the examination in good faith for the purpose of seeing whether its affairs are properly managed. "Such a right," said the New Jersey court, "is necessary to their protection. To say that they have the right, but that it can be enforced only when they have ascertained, in some way without the books, that their affairs have been mismanaged, or that their interests are in danger, is practically to deny it in the majority of cases. Oftentimes frauds are discoverable only by examination of the books by an expert accountant." [37] This, however, is not the doctrine at common law, as established by the decisions, and laid down in the text books. By the weight of authority, in the absence of a statute making the right of examination absolute, there must be something more than bare suspicion of mismanagement or fraud. There must be at least specific and reasonable grounds for suspicion. The right of a stockholder to examine the books and papers of the corporation is not unlimited, as is the right of a partner to examine the books and papers of the partnership. He can insist upon and enforce the right when he has a good and specific reason for making the examination, and where his purpose is a proper one, but not otherwise. He cannot do so from mere curiosity, or for merely speculative purposes, or for reasons not connected with his right as a stockholder, or vexatiously, but, at common law at least, he can do so only when he asserts the right "in good faith, and for a specific, honest purpose, and where there is a particular matter in dispute involving and affecting seriously his rights as a stockholder." "There is no express rule that to warrant an application to inspect corporation documents there must actually have been a suit

A stockholder cannot make use of his relation as such to inspect the books of the corporation, where his purpose is merely to obtain information for use as a debtor of the corporation,[39] or for mere curiosity,[40] or for the purpose of injuring the corporation,[41] especially if he is acting in the interest of a rival corporation in which he is also a stockholder or otherwise interested.[42] A stockholder, however, cannot be denied the right to inspect the books and papers of the corporation on the ground of hostility to the management or officers, where he has a good reason for making the examination,[43] and the burden is not on the stockholder to disclose a lawful purpose or negative an improper one.[44]

Demand and refusal.—That the stockholder demands inspection of more than he is entitled to see does not authorize a general refusal.[45] The right is a present one when applied for at a reasonable time and an indefinite delay is equivalent to refusal.[46] Statement that the books could be inspected at the office of the president a short distance away is not a refusal,[47] and even if an offer to allow examination at the home of an officer is insufficient, if the stockholder agrees to call there and does not, he cannot claim that examination was refused.[48] instituted; but it is necessary that there should be some particular matter in dispute, between members, or between the corporation and individuals in it; there must be some controversy, some specific purpose in respect of which the examination becomes necessary." Rex v. Merchant Tailors' Co., 2 Barn. & Adol. 115.

On petition for a writ of mandamus by the holders of four shares of a large corporation, to allow them to inspect the stock ledger of the company, it was held that, to show a right to the writ, they must show some controversy pending, or some question at issue, as to which the contents of the book were of consequence, and that it was not enough to show an expectation of benefit from knowing the contents. Express provisions in the charter, general law, articles of association, or by-laws.—In some jurisdictions, the right of stockholders to inspect and examine the books and papers of the corporation is not left to be determined by the common law, but is regulated by statute or by the constitution, and sometimes the right is given in express terms by the charter or articles of association of a corporation, or regulated by its by-laws. And when the right is so given or regulated, it is sometimes more absolute than it is at common law, according to the cases previously referred to, such statutes being ordinarily designed to enlarge the common-law right.[49] An act conferring a limited right of inspection incident to corporate elections does not by its re-enactment in a general corporation act extend an unqualified right of inspection to stockholders.[50] Under a general statute, as a statute providing that the stockholders of all private corporations shall "have the right of access to, inspection and examination of the books, records and papers of the corporation, at reasonable and proper times," it is to be implied that the inspection and examination shall not be from mere idle curiosity, or for speculative purposes, or for purposes hostile to the interests of the corporation, and by the express provisions of the statute the right must be asserted at "reasonable and proper times;" but these are the only limitations upon the right. It is not necessary to show any particular reason or occasion for making the inspection and examination.[51] In an Alabama case, involving a construction of a statute in the language above quoted, it was said: "The statute was enacted in view of the restrictions and limitations placed by the common law upon the exercise of the right; and the purpose is to protect small and minority stockholders against the power of the majority, and against the mismanagement and faithlessness of agents and officers, by furnishing mode and opportunity to ascertain, establish and maintain their rights, and to intelligently perform their corporate duties. * * * The only express limitation is that the right shall be exercised at reasonable and proper times; the implied limitation is that it shall not be exercised from idle curiosity, or for improper or unlawful purposes. In all other respects, the statutory right is absolute. The shareholder is not required to show any reason or occasion rendering an examination opportune and proper, or a definite or legitimate purpose. The custodian of the books and papers cannot question or inquire into his motive and purposes. If he has reason to believe that they are improper or illegitimate, and refuses the inspection on this ground, he assumes the burden to prove them such. If it be said, this construction of the statute places it in the power of a single shareholder to greatly injure and impede the business, the answer is, the legislature regarded his interests in the successful promotion of the objects of the corporation a sufficient protection against unnecessary or injurious interference. The statute is founded on the principle, that the shareholders have a right to be fully informed as to the condition of the

50. A statute under the title "An act to prevent fraudulent elections in incorporated companies and to facilitate proceedings against them" remains subject to the limitation imposed by the title, though reenacted in a revision under the title "An act concerning corporations" and though general in language, does not entitle the stockholder to an absolute right to mandamus or confer on him a greater than his common-law right. corporation, the manner in which its affairs are conducted, and how the capital, to which they have contributed, is employed and managed." [52] The right being of common-law origin, additional remedies may be given as to existing corporations.[53] A statute giving a stockholder the right to inspect and examine books and papers of the corporation gives him the right to make abstracts, memoranda, or copies thereof.[54] Where a statute or by-law gives stockholders a right to examine books and papers of a corporation to a specified extent or at specified times only, they can only claim under the statute or by-law, such rights as it expressly confers[55] A statute, however, giving stockholders an absolute right to inspect certain books or papers, or to inspect them at a particular time, but containing no negative words, does not deprive a stockholder of his common-law right to inspect other books or papers, or to inspect them at other reasonable times.[56] And, of course, by-laws of a corporation to which a stockholder does not consent cannot deprive him of his common-law right.

A general statute giving stockholders in "all private corporations" the right to inspect and examine the books and papers of the corporation applies to national banks to the same extent as other corporations, at least in the absence of conflicting legislation by congress.[57]

Examination by attorney or agent.—When a stockholder has sufficient reason for making an examination of the books or papers of the corporation, he need not necessarily do so in person, but may do so through his attorney, or an expert accountant, or other agent.[58]

Remedies of stockholders on denial of right. Mandamus.—If the officers of a corporation wrongfully deny a stockholder the right to inspect its books or papers, he may enforce his right by writ of mandamus, unless this remedy is ex-

It has been held that a by-law of a corporation, providing that the treasurer shall keep full books of account of the business of the corporation, "which books shall at all times be open to the inspection of any of the stockholders," does not apply to the stock ledger. Lyon v. American Screw Co., 16 R. I. 472.

The power conferred by the general corporation act of New Jersey (P. L. 1896, p. 292, § 44) to summarily order books of a corporation to be brought within the state "on proper cause shown," can be exercised only when the judicial authority whose action is invoked can exercise control over the books after compliance with the order. Fuller v. Alex. Hollander & Co., 61 N. J. Eq. 548, 47 A. 646.

Where a statute requires a corporation to keep books showing certain matters for inspection of stockholders, a stockholder cannot be deprived of the right to inspect them because they are kept in a particular way, or because they contain, besides the information to which he is entitled, other information, which he has no right to demand. cluded by statute.[59] The writ may issue against the corporation, or against both the corporation and the officer having the custody of the books or papers.[60] Or it may issue against the officer alone, without making the corporation a party.[61] If a statute gives a stockholder a particular remedy within the corporation, he must resort to that remedy before he can resort to mandamus.[62] A writ of mandamus may issue to enforce the right of a non-resident stockholder to inspect and take copies of documents of a foreign corporation, if they are in the custody of an agent within the state.[63] And the court may compel a domestic corporation to bring its books and papers into the state for an inspection, where they are kept in another state.[64]

In Ohio, and it may be in other states, the statutes are such that mandamus will not lie as at common law. In Ohio, where the statute declares that the writ of mandamus, "must not be issued in a case where there is a plain and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law," it has been held that mandamus will not lie to compel a corporation or its officers to allow an inspection of its books and papers, as there is an adequate remedy by injunction,[65] and since by examination of the officers under a subpoena the value of corporate stock may be determined for the purpose of estimating a transfer tax, mandamus will not lie to compel an exhibition of the corporate books to the executors.[66]

In equity.—Stockholders may have generally enforced their right to inspect the books and papers of the corporation by mandamus, and there are very few reported cases in which it has been sought to enforce the right in equity by injunction. It has been held, however, in some jurisdictions, that a suit for an injunction will lie,[67] and that a bill of discovery will not.[68] Of course, a court of equity has jurisdiction to enforce the right of inspection, if the circumstances are such that mandamus will not afford an adequate remedy, or if there are other grounds of equitable jurisdiction.[69]

Recovery of damages.—If an officer of a corporation, having the custody of its books and papers, wrongfully refuses to allow a stockholder to inspect the same, he is guilty of a wrong against the stockholder, and is liable in an action for damages[70] proximately resulting.[71] The corporation itself will undoubtedly be liable in damages for denial of a stockholder's right to inspect books and papers, if it can be regarded as in default in the matter, as where the inspection is refused by or by order of the board of directors or the majority stockholders as a body. It has been held, however, that a stockholder cannot hold his co-stockholders or the corporation liable in damages on account of the refusal by a subordinate officer of an informal request to be allowed to inspect books or papers of the corporation, although he would have ascertained that the affairs of the corporation were being improperly managed, and might have taken steps to avoid loss. Upon such a refusal, he should apply for a writ of mandamus, or else apply to the directors, so as to put the company in default. "If mandamus had issued immediately after the refusal," said the Louisiana court in such a case, "the action would have been maintained against the company only. It would have had the right to repudiate the refusal and permit the inspection. The act of the secretary is not absolutely binding upon the company in matter of inspection of the books. He cannot stand in judgment, nor can he as agent of the stockholders occasion damages by refusing the books, for which the company will be liable to one stockholder to the loss of the others, who are not parties and have not given the least sanction to the refusal. * * * An error of an officer in a subordinate position in refusing to permit books to be examined is not per se such an error as will expose the company to the payment of damages."[72]

While a court of equity may, in its discretion, order the officers of a corporation to allow a stockholder to inspect its books at any stage of the proceedings, it will not do so upon the mere filing of the bill, or after service and before answer, "except under the most pressing necessity," since the defendants may deny that the complainant is a shareholder, or may set up that the charter or by-laws modify his right to such inspection. Ranger v. Champion Cotton-Press Co., 51 F. 61. In New Jersey it is held that, where a stockholder wishes a discovery of the financial condition of the company, his remedy is not by a bill in equity for a discovery, but by mandamus to enforce the right to inspect its books, aided, if necessary, by a petition under the statute to compel the corporation to bring the books into the state for such purpose. posed upon the corporation, or upon the officer denying him the right, to be recovered in an action by the stockholder or by the state. And the penalty may be recovered without showing any actual pecuniary damage. All that is necessary is to show a wrongful denial of the right.[73] When the corpo ation or an officer has wrongfully denied to a stockholder the right to examine its books, his right to sue for the statutory penalty is fixed, and is not affected by the fact that he was allowed to make the examination upon a subsequent application.[74] The officer in charge of the records as well as the corporation is liable to penalty.[75] Where a statute imposes upon the custodian of the books and papers of a corporation the duty to allow stockholders to inspect the same, the duty is an incident of his office, and he cannot be relieved therefrom by a by-law of the corporation, or by any resolution or orders of the directors, so long as he continues in office, and has the legal custody of the books and papers.[76] But an officer is not liable to the penalty if the books and papers have been taken from his custody by the directors, so that it is not within his power to allow an inspection, provided, at least, he has not participated in putting them beyond his control for the very purpose of shirking his duty, and defeating a stockholder's right of inspection,[77] and provided he states the reason why he cannot allow an inspection,[78] If the books and papers come back into his custody after he has refused a request to be allowed to inspect them, it is his duty to notify the stockholder, and give him an opportunity to inspect them.[79] Reasonable or unavoidable delay in allowing an inspection, as because the books are locked up in a safe, and the only officer who knows the combination is absent, does not subject the corporation or its officers to a penalty,—but such an excuse cannot be made in bad faith, and for the purpose of defeating the stockholder's right.[80] A corporation does not incur three penalties for three refusals to permit inspection of the books, where the party seeking to recover desired to use the books for one occasion but repeated his request for two or three consecutive days, and made the demand three times, twice of the secretary and once of the president.[81]

CORPSES AND BURIAL.[1]

There is a quasi-property right in a dead body, subject to the necessity for proper disposition to prevent its becoming a nuisance and injurious to public health, which the courts will protect.[2] Thus a relative of a deceased, in whom exists

73. Kelsey v. Pfaudler Process Fermentation Co., 51 Hun [N. Y.] 636.

Under the New York stock corporation law (section 29) providing that every such corporation shall keep at its office a stock book containing the names of all stockholders, etc., which shall be open daily for inspection by its stockholders, and that for negligence or refusal to allow such inspection the corporation shall forfeit to the people fifty dollars for every day of such neglect or refusal, and that every officer or agent of the corporation who shall willfully neglect or refuse to exhibit such books shall be liable to the same penalty, the penalty is not incurred, either by the corporation or by its officers or agents, in the absence of such neglect or refusal. Where a stockholder, therefore, on three occasions, called at the general office of a corporation, and was informed by its agent that the stock books were at the office of the company's president, a short distance away, and that he could inspect them by calling there, and on one occasion he went there and took copies from the books, it was held that neither the company nor the agent was liable under the statute. the right to preserve and bury the body,[3] may maintain an action for the unlawful mutilation of the body,[4] and recover damages for the mental suffering and sense of outrage directly resulting therefrom.[5] Negligence of a common carrier which receives a corpse for transportation, resulting in damage to the coffin and shroud, and mutilation of the body, is actionable.[6] Where mutilation of a body is intimately connected with and incidental to the act causing death, such mutilation cannot be regarded as a separate cause of action for which damages may be recovered independently of the wrongful death.[7] A consent to a post mortem examination is an implied permission to conduct such examination in the usual, approved manner, and to remove organs for microscopic examination when necessary to ascertain the cause of death, unless permission to do so is expressly withheld.[8] A direction that parts should not be taken away does not prohibit removal of organs for examination, if they are afterwards replaced for burial with the body.[9]

The right of sepulture cannot now be denied on the ground that deceased was a murderer and suicide.[10] The right to direct and control burial is ordinarily in persons related to deceased, when for any reason the surviving spouse does not exercise such right.[11] A surviving husband is liable for the expenses of the last sickness and burial of his wife, and the cost of a tombstone erected by him.[12]

part of or incident to the judgment by way of compensation to the successful party and against the other.[14] Costs are purely of statutory creation,[15] and being so, the statutes allowing them are to be strictly construed;[16] but not strained by denying compensation which the laws evidently intended.[17] Rules of court inconsistent with statute are void.[18]

§ 2. Power to award costs.[19]—The power to award compensation for judicial services to be paid from county funds excludes power to tax the same as costs.[20] A discretionary power to allow costs on a motion includes motions for new trial,[21] and though not customary, such an award will be upheld unless abusive of discretion.[22] Costs being incident to the judgment, the power to award them resides in the court which has control of the judgment[23] and while it is open.[24] Compensation to a receiver as costs of appeal must be allowed in the court below,[25] and so also costs cannot be founded on a void order or proceeding.[26]

§ 3. Prepayment or security and suits in forma pauperis.[27]—Prepayment[28] of fees is a right pertaining to the officer, and the adverse party cannot complain of its waiver.[29] In some jurisdictions a poor person may have a record for appeal[30] or other proceeding where one is required,[31] either without prepayment or by supplying affidavit of its contents.

wholly derived from statute, are now generally so enumerated.[34] Some of the grounds are nonresidence,[35] the character of the action, or irresponsibility of the plaintiff.[36] Receivers are often absolved either absolutely or under certain circumstances,[37] unless they are nonresidents.[38] In New York security for costs cannot be required of an intervenor.[39] The ground must exist when the security is asked.[40] Where the costs are already secured by the terms of a bond necessary in the case, no additional bond is proper.[41] The defendant may by his conduct excuse the failure to give costs,[42] and he must move promptly to require it.[43] The authority of a court to exact security may be taken as conceded against one who sues in such a court a cause of action which without such authority it could not entertain.[44] In Michigan a certificate of deposit may be by order of court taken as "sufficient security" [45] and the clerk may not refuse such security.[46] An application for security must state all that constitutes the ground relied on.[47] Dismissal will be ordered only in favor of such parties as have not answered,[48] and does not constitute a decision on the merits.[49] Under the general power over judgments during term, a dismissal for want of security may be set aside [50] and it should be done where plaintiff has seasonably attempted to comply.[51]

In forma pauperis.[52]—Actual inability to pay costs is essential.[53] Whether a personal representative may so sue depends on the terms of the statute.[54] So, unless required, he need not show the poverty of those who will benefit if he is successful.[55] The right to appeal in forma pauperis depends wholly on statute.[56] The moving papers on application in New York to sue in forma pauperis must show that plaintiff has a good cause of action,[57] and must show an agreement of his attorney to serve without compensation.[58] The Federal statute allows application in forma pauperis either on beginning a suit or afterwards on motion for security.[59] In addition to the court rule requirements, all statutory requirements must be met;[60] hence in the Federal courts such applicant must not omit to show that he is a citizen of the United States, that he is unable to give security for costs and that he believes himself entitled to the redress he seeks. A sheriff cannot administer the oath in forma pauperis unless a statute so provides.[61] In Texas it must appear by an entry on the minutes that the application for leave to appeal without bond was to the court in session;[62] but not that it was made in open court,[63] and there need not be minute entry that sufficient proof was adduced.[64] A rule for security pending which defendant be not required to plead merely suspends a rule to plead, which becomes operative when the other rule is satisfied.[65] It is usually provided that dismissal shall follow if the showing of poverty be false or the cause of action is frivolous or malicious.[66] In a suit to expunge an order allowing appeal without cost bond, not actually made by the court, the ability of appellant to pay costs is not in issue.[67]

§ 4. Parties entitled to or liable for costs in general.[68]—Costs are not ordinarily assessed personally against one sued in an official capacity unless he has been in some respect delinquent.[69] When a state prosecution is removed because brought against one for an act done under color of his Federal office, the United States marshal may if he obtain special authority from the department of justice pay defendant's witnesses, but the state ought save in rare instances to pay her own.[70] The attorney is not liable for court fees.[71] An intervener who has dismissed is beyond the jurisdiction of the court to award costs on final judgment.[72] The state is not chargeable with costs in the absence of a statute consenting thereto.[73] The prosecuting witness is so far a party that costs may be taxed against him if the prosecution is malicious;[74] but there must be a hearing and a

to avoid costs, being to make a tender or offer of judgment.[88] A suit on a contract and for a quantum meruit for extra work is a suit on two claims within the Iowa Code as to apportioning costs in case of partial success.[89] Where some of the objections to an executor's account were sustained, costs should not be taxed against the objector.[90] Where plaintiff fails to recover, he is not entitled to costs because his failure was not due to lack of merits.[91] On a voluntary dismissal costs go against plaintiff unless the record shows an admission of the justice of his claim.[92] Where action and cross action both fail, each party should pay his own costs.[93] Where both parties appeal and each succeeds in part, neither should be allowed costs.[94] Where a judgment in ejectment is reversed with costs to abide the event, it is not the party prevailing on the retrial following the reversal but the party prevailing on a subsequent statutory new trial who is entitled to such costs.[95] Where on trial of an appeal by defendant from justice court, plaintiff recovered a less amount, neither party is "successful" and the costs are in the discretion of the court.[96] Where questions are reported to the full court, he prevails who recovers the general judgment and not whose contention on those questions is sustained.[97] The party in whose favor the judgment is in money actions has costs, even though some issues were decided adversely.[98] Disclaimer, if in full,[99] entitles defendant to subsequent costs.[1]

(§ 5) B. Waiver of right and effect of tender or offer of judgment.[2]—A statute providing that if a defendant does not use a claim as a set off he cannot recover costs in a subsequent suit thereon, applies only to claims which may be set off; hence not to an unliquidated claim.[3] Denial of costs to the successful

N. E. 512. Under statutes allowing costs to the successful party and providing that when a counterclaim is interposed the party for whom judgment is entered shall have costs, plaintiff is entitled to costs if he receives anything, though defendant succeeds in part on his counterclaim. party for failure to perfect and enter judgment will not be made if some subsequent determination of the court is necessary before judgment,[4] nor where he has once perfected judgment which was later amended on retaxation by adding other cost items.[5] Payment as a condition to relief in the suit may be waived or the time extended.[6] It is quite generally provided by statute that if defendant shall make a timely [7] and unconditional offer [8] of a certain sum or judgment therefor, with accrued costs,[9, 10] he is entitled to costs unless plaintiff recover a more favorable judgment.[11] The Missouri statute providing for the deposit of "the amount of the debt or damage" defendant admits to be due applies to suits for unliquidated damages,[12] and no notice of the deposit of the sum admitted to be due is required.[13]

§ 6. Right dependent on minimum amount of demand or recovery.[14]—In California where plaintiff recovers less than $300 in Superior court, he is not entitled to costs.[15]

§ 7. Right affected by nature of action or proceeding or character of tribunal.[16] A. In general.[17]—Proceedings under the bastardy act are so closely related to the ordinary civil action that costs are taxable therein under the statute relating to actions.[18] A proceeding by an occupying claimant to be reimbursed for his improvements is a "civil action" in which he is entitled to costs, though the judgment for such reimbursement is not absolute, but merely establishes a condition precedent to the recovery of possession.[19] To relieve a husband from costs in a divorce suit, it must appear not only that the wife was in fault but that she had property ample to pay the costs.[20] Costs in admiralty are wholly in discretion and are regulated as in equity.[21] Under statutes putting witness fees in criminal cases on the county when conviction results, the supervisors have no discretion to disallow such claims.[22] In cases of seizure of goods for violation of the customs laws, the proceeding is at common law, and the losing party is liable for court costs.[23]

(§ 7) B. In equity and equitable code actions.[24]—In equity it rests in the sound discretion of the court,[25] except as the power is affected by statute[26] to allow,[27] deny,[28] or apportion costs;[29] but the legal rule of awarding them to the successful party is ordinarily followed.[30] In Georgia the jury may recommend but cannot decide the taxation of costs in equity.[31] The defeated claimant must pay costs of interpleader.[32] Costs out of the fund may be awarded to the interpleading plaintiff and that defendant who is in the wrong should be taxed to reimburse the fund as well as for costs between them.[33]

(§ 7) C. In inferior courts.[34]—Garnishees entitled to costs in "courts of record" cannot have them in attachment proceedings by justices of the peace, aldermen or magistrates.[35] A probate order is "contested" within a statute making costs discretionary where it was appealed from the probate court and again appealed, which appeal was then voluntarily dismissed.[36] The discretion as to allowance of costs given to the county court on reversal of a justice for errors not going to the merits will not be disturbed except for abuse.[37] The filing of a written notice of appearance or a verified pleading is an absolute prerequisite to the right of a defendant to recover costs in municipal court.[38]

(§ 7) D. In interlocutory or special proceedings.[39]—The allowance of costs in special proceedings[40] on motions[41] or other interlocutory proceedings,[42] and the imposition of costs as a condition of relief therein, rests in discretion.[43] The discretion is not arbitrary but according to legal principles.[44]

(§ 7) E. On appeal or error.[45]—On affirmance or reversal costs are ordinarily allowed to the prevailing party;[46] but where appellant did not oppose the order below,[47] or apply below for correction of an error of inadvertence,[48] or failed to abstract the record,[49] or if he needlessly appealed,[50] or where the amount he was prejudiced is less than the amount necessary to give appellate jurisdiction,[51] or where he showed no interest,[52] he will not be allowed costs, though a reversal is ordered. In like manner, where a reargument was made necessary by failure to procure a substitution respondent was charged, even though there was affirmance in both hearings,[53] and waiver of appeal costs by respondent has been imposed as a condition of affirmance where appellant's recovery below was slightly inadequate.[54] On dismissal, respondent is ordinarily entitled to costs.[55] On substantial modification,[56] the appellant is usually deemed the prevailing party, but the allowance or apportionment of costs rests in discretion.[57] A party fails to bring an appeal to hearing within a statute depriving him of costs in such event where the appeal is dismissed for failure to file return unless he comply with a condition, and he fails to do so.[58] Appellant is entitled to tax his costs on appeal before the new trial is had.[59] Plaintiff should be taxed with the costs of an appeal by him where a reversal on such appeal resulted of course from a general reversal on defendant's appeal.[60]

§ 8. Amount and items; after trial.[61]—Where the right to costs is in discretion,[62] the items allowable are likewise discretionary.[63] Where not discretionary, the items taxable is governed by statute,[64] and some statutes make a judgment on the merits prerequisite to taxation of full costs.[65] Among the items usually allowed are jury fees,[66] fees and mileage of witnesses[67] actually called,[68] fees of referees,[69] expenses of reference,[70] and costs of depositions.[71] Allowance of an at-

Fees of witnesses called to meet allegations of complaint were taxed against complainant, though theory of trial eliminated such issues. Merriam v. Johnson, 93 Minn. 316, 101 N. W. 308.

69. Referee's fees are in discretion. Cannot be reviewed by co-ordinate judge.

torney's fee is permitted by some statutes,[72] but such costs must be specially allowed.[73] A statute making each party liable for his own costs to "officers and witnesses" and fixing the liability for costs on the final outcome of the proceeding, does not exclude all costs which are not to officers and witnesses.[74] The Massachusetts law is valid which empowers the court to reduce costs where two or more cases are tried together.[75] Under it the aggregate of costs in all the cases is to be considered [76] but not reduced below the maximum recoverable in any one.[77] For being sued in the wrong county only such costs will be allowed as will compensate for the increased expense of defending.[78] Where defendant prevails on a plea of matter occurring after suit, he is only entitled to costs accruing after answer.[79] Costs will not be limited to those posterior to a new count if it merely pleaded a different right of recovery on the same wrong.[80] In condemnation proceedings if plaintiff succeeds on trial of issues raised by answer, he is entitled to trial costs, but not to costs of hearing before the commissioners unless he made an offer.[81]

Interlocutory proceedings.—Costs of motion may be taxed on allowing an amendment and full costs allowed to the amending party on the outcome of the judgment in his favor.[82] Where, after a reversal, a party is certain to lose on the record as it stands, all accrued costs should be imposed on allowing an amendment of pleadings.[83] Not more than $10 can be allowed in municipal court on permitting amendment.[84] On overruling demurrer, costs of the demurrer only, and not of the action, should be allowed.[85]

based on the amount claimed or recovered,[88] is authorized by some statutes to be made in the discretion of the trial court [89] to the prevailing party.[90] Where the cost judgment was left blank as to amount because costs as to some parties had not been taxed, an extra allowance to such parties may be made and inserted therein.[91]

On appeal or error.[92] The prevailing party is ordinarily entitled to tax cost of briefs,[93] and in some states "costs of argument," [94] and of printing the record,[95] but charges for unnecessary portions thereof will be disallowed.[96] Costs of an additional abstract may be taxed against a successful appellant if his abstract was materially deficient in doing justice to appellee,[97] but an unnecessary one will be at appellee's cost.[98] Costs of a "case," "abstract," or bill of exceptions are generally regarded as trial costs,[99] but are in Iowa regarded as appeal costs.[1] Where appellant orders a partial transcript, appellee may have the remainder copied and on

A paper termed "argument" but brief and substantially only the "points and authorities" may be regarded as the latter and printing disbursements allowed under the South Carolina Code. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Winnsboro [S. C.] 51 S. E. 528.

94. Civ. Code 1902, § 3098 allows award of argument costs ($25) on appeal from order of a justice of the supreme court as well as in ordinary appeals. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Winnsboro [S. C.] 51 S. E. 528. "Costs for argument" cannot be taxed if the case is submitted on briefs in another case without argument. Nichols v. Smith [S. D.] 102 N. W. 606.

95. Where the court orders that the transcript shall be prepared at the equal cost of both parties, the prevailing party is entitled to tax the share paid by him. Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, 78 P. 957. Printing costs are a part of costs on appeal. Court Rule 38. Darling v. Murphy [N. J. Law] 59 A. 225.

96. Where a decision is affirmed as to one appellee and reversed as to the other, appellant can tax for only so much of the transcript as would have been necessary to the part of the case as to which there was reversal. NOTE. How costs are awarded in Equity: "Costs are to be awarded as a part of the decree, or they cannot be recovered, although they may be, and generally are, taxed after the decree." Coburn v. Schroeder, 8 F. 521. The amount of costs payable in a suit, whether given out of a fund, or payable by a party, is ascertained by taxation, which, if conducted by the strict rule of the court, is termed a taxation "as between party and party," which are the ordinary costs allowed by the court; but there is in some cases a more liberal allowance, called costs "as between solicitor and client," which are the costs allowed to parties filling those characters. 2 Barbour, Ch. Pr. 336; Adams, Eq. 391. In suits of a litigious class, the taxation is always "as between party and party," but in those of a protective or administrative kind, its adoption, though general, is subject to exceptions. The suits in which an exception is made are those for performance of trusts and administration of assets, in which the trustee or personal representative has always his costs as between solicitor and client, and, if payments have been made by him not coming strictly under the name of costs, he may obtain them also by a direction for "charges and expenses, not strictly costs in the cause." Adams, Eq. 391; 2 Smith Ch. Pr. 628. For costs as between solicitor and client, see 2 Barbour, Ch. Pr. 337, 338; 2 Smith, Ch. Pr. 636; 2 Daniell, Ch. Pl. & Pr. [4th Ed.] 1434; Edenborough v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 2 Russ. 93; Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Swanst. 201; Norway v. Norway, 2 Mylne & K. 278; Turner v. Turner, cited in 2 Russ. & M. 687; Tootal v. Spicer, 4 Sim. 510; Larkins v. Paxton, 2 Mylne & K. 320; Brodie v. Bolton, 3 Mylne & K. 168; Barker v. Wardle, 2 Mylne & K. 818; Attorney General v. Haberdashers' Co., 4 Brown, Ch. 178; Currie v. Pye, 17 Ves. 462; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 1 Ves. Jr. 464. When the court has once adopted the principle of taxation, as between solicitor and client, in favor of a particular individual, or of a particular class, it will in its future proceedings, whenever it becomes necessary to direct a further taxation of costs, direct them to be taxed on the footing of the former taxation. But it is to be observed that it is only where the former direction for taxation has been made at a hearing of the cause that the court will consider itself bound by it at the subsequent hearing, and that it will not do so when the former direction as to costs was made upon petition and by consent. 2 Barbour, Ch. Pr. 338." From Fletcher Eq. Pl. & Pr. § 745.

9. That costs were taxed without notice is not ground for reversing the judgment. Jennings v. Frazier [Or.] 80 P. 1011. On dismissing an involuntary petition, the alleged bankrupt must file his bill of costs with the clerk and give notice to petitioners. In re Haeselker-Kohlhoff Carbon Co., 135 F. 867.
10. Applied in consolidated action. Cobb v. Rhea, 137 N. C. 295, 49 S. E. 161.
11. To authorize allowance of costs for referee who died should be taxed on the incoming of his successor's report.[12] The fixing and apportionment of referee's fees is in North Carolina regarded as a final judgment;[13] but a motion to fix them is not an action distinct from the cause.[14] Approval by the corporation attorney of cost bill of one acquitted of misdemeanor is required only on acquittal in police court, not on acquittal on appeal therefrom.[15] A judgment entry with the words "Costs taxed at $——" satisfies a requirement that the amount recovered or to be paid shall be set out in figures; the amount of costs being fixed by law, the subsequent filling of the blank space is sufficient.[16] Where a judgment is affirmed as amended and appeal costs are directed to be taxed against the prevailing party, the taxation should not be made in the judgment as made.[17] Adjudging costs to one defendant does not determine as between plaintiff and other defendants.[18]

The remedy to review a taxation by the clerk is by motion to retax.[19] One who moves to retax has the burden of showing error in the taxation.[20] Only the papers before the clerk on taxation can be used on a motion to retax.[21] On such motion the court may approve nunc pro tunc a charge taxed without approval.[22] Retaxation may be had pending an appeal from the judgment,[23] and inadvertence of the court in omitting an item of costs can be corrected after remand on affirmance.[24] Fees allowed on garnishment may be challenged by plaintiff in the main action after verdict and judgment in his favor.[25] A taxation will not be modified to charge a dilatory party on the tardy application of the losing party.[26]

Appeal or error ordinarily will not lie from a cost judgment alone.[27] The discretion of a chancellor will not be reviewed unless abused,[28] and it is presumed correct unless the evidence is certified in the record.[29] The record will not be searched on a general bill of exceptions to review a finding that unnecessary witnesses were called to the same fact.[30] Where the objection is that no costs should have been allowed, the question saves itself for review without a motion for retaxation.[31] Where the award follows judgment as an incident, an objection at trial is not essential to raise the right to costs when appealed.[32] A motion addressed to the taxation of two separate kinds of costs is separable[33] and as to the part respecting those costs which pertain to appeal and as to which there is a transcendence of jurisdiction, certiorari lies.[34] If an amendment of the record on which taxation is based is allowed after appeal from the taxation, the proper practice is to decide the appeal by reference back for a new taxation.[35]

§ 10. Enforcement and payment.[36]—Costs, being part of the judgment,[37] are enforceable by the regular process of execution, and the ordinary rules as to levy and sale[38] are applicable.[39] An execution should specifically command the making of appellate costs and not treat them as incident to the judgment.[40] Judgment for costs against plaintiff cannot be enforced by body execution unless a judgment for him could have been so enforced.[41] A statute authorizing the issuance of fee bills will not be extended to fees not enumerated in the statute.[42] An interlocutory judgment for costs is not collectible until final judgment.[43] If in partition no sale is necessary; the costs are a bare lien on the land to be enforced by bill; a sale for the satisfaction of costs only is invalid.[44] When final costs are taxed in partition, the case is closed and subsequent proceedings to charge one purpart do not affect interim purchasers.[45] The party may satisfy a cost judgment, as costs belong to him, not to his attorney.[46] Where a deed is set aside for incompetency of the grantor, costs before the decree should not be charged against the land.[47] Execution for costs should not go against an estate but be charged against it to be paid in due course.[48] Costs rightly taxed against an estate are an "expense of administration" and not a "claim,"[49] and they take priority accordingly.[50] A cost fi. fa. may be enjoined if defendant's liability rests on conflicting evidence and a hearing is necessary to determine it.[51] Limitations on costs runs as in a simple money demand or as on implied contract, not as on judgment.[52] Payment is often coerced by making it a condition on the right to proceed further.[53] Rendering judgment against a party for failure to comply with a court rule requiring the payment of certain costs before the examination of the witnesses is unconstitutional as depriving one of property without due process of law.[54]

Matters relating to public corporations generally,[57] to public securities,[58] contracts,[59] facilities,[60] and officers,[61] are given separate treatment. Taxation is also the subject of a separate article.[62]

§ 1. Creation and organization.[63]—Counties are territorial divisions of the state, organized for the convenience of the people, and as such are treated as governmental agencies of the state for the purpose of local government.[64] Within constitutional limits,[65] the legislature has full power to change county boundaries.[66] In making such changes the obligations of the people within the territory affected must not be interfered with.[67] Statutes making boundary changes usually apporcost judgment in favor of another defendant. Tanzsheim v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 534. Vexatious suits will be prevented by staying a new or successive suits until costs in former ones are paid. Davenport, Rock Island & N. W. R. Co. v. De Yaeger, 112 Ill. App. 537.

54. Court rule required one-half official reporter's per diem to be so paid. Meacham v. Bear Valley Irr. Co., 145 Cal. 606, 79 P. 281. Such judgment is also in conflict with Code Civ. Proc. § 274, as amended, providing that such fees shall be paid by the prevailing party and taxed as costs against the one against whom judgment is rendered. Id.

64. Folsom v. Greenwood County [C. C. A.] 137 F. 449.

65. Mich. Const. art. 10, § 2, providing that no county shall ever be reduced by the organization of new counties to less than 16 townships, except on the decision of a majority of the electors residing in the county to be affected, applies to the taking of territory from one established county and adding it to another established county Board of Sup'rs of Bay County v. Edmunds [Mich.] 102 N. W. 998. North Dakota Const. § 168, relating to changes in the boundaries of organized counties, does not apply to unorganized counties, and propositions to change their boundaries need not be submitted to the electors of such unorganized counties. State v. Stark County [N. D.] 103 N. W. 913. Laws 1903, p. 78, c. 69, providing for the addition of two unorganized counties and certain unorganized territory to Stark county, is in conflict with § 168 of the constitution, because it provides for a majority vote in the entire territory affected and does not provide that a majority of the voters of Stark county must consent. Id. The statute is also void as special legislation in conflict with § 167 of the constitution. Id. The statute being void, proceedings thereunder are void, even though a majority of voters in Stark county actually voted for the change. Id. Act of Feb. 28, 1905, attempting to abolish Kootenai county and set up two new counties in its stead, and providing for the new county governments, held void, because the legislature has no power to abolish a county under the constitution. McDonald v. Doust [Idaho] 81 P. 60.

66. Folsom v. Greenwood Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 449.

67 Folsom v. Greenwood Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 449. Where a township is organized for the purpose of issuing bonds in aid of a railway, and the auditor and treasurer of the county in which the township is located are required to levy and collect taxes for the payment of the bonds, and thereafter the township is made a part of another county, the duty of levying and collecting such taxes devolves upon the officers of the latter county. tion the property and liabilities between the resulting divisions; but where an act changing boundary lines fails to apportion the indebtedness between the counties concerned, the legislature may provide for such apportionment by a subsequent act.[68] The division of property between two counties where a portion of one is annexed to the other depends chiefly upon the provisions of the statute making such change of boundaries.[69] The fixing of boundaries is a legislative function; but in case of a dispute as to the interpretation of a statute fixing boundary lines, the courts have jurisdiction of the controversy.[70] But where the legislature has prescribed a mode of proceeding for the fixing of uncertain lines, that mode must be followed and exhausted before recourse can be had to the courts.[71] The boundaries of two parishes being involved, the suit may be brought in either parish.[72] The incorporation of new boroughs is provided for by general statute in Pennsylvania, and while the court which is given jurisdiction of the proceeding has a large discretion therein,[73] jurisdictional facts must appear if such proceedings are to be upheld.[74] Where a borough in which the county seat is located is divided into two boroughs, the new borough in which the county buildings are situated may be given a new name.[75] The shifting of the channel of a river which is the dividing line between two counties does not change the boundary of the counties.[76]

The method of procuring the removal of a county seat is statutory, and the validity of such proceedings is dependent upon compliance with the terms of the statute.[77]

68. Desha County v. State [Ark.] 84 S. W. 625. Laws 1881, p. 102, and Laws 1899, p. 174, provide for the ascertainment and adjustment of the indebtedness of Chicat and Desha counties and the manner in which a settlement may be enforced, and are within the power of the legislature, the Act of 1879 changing boundaries not having adjusted finances. Id. Before the Act of 1899, Chicot county had no right of action against Desha county, since before the act the latter county was not capable of being sued. Id.

73. Exercise of discretion by court of quarter sessions incorporating new borough not disturbed by appellate court, no abuse appearing. La Porte Borough, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 333. A mistake in the filing of a petition for the incorporation of a new borough, which has misled or injured no one, may be corrected by the court of quarter sessions. Id.

74. Under Act 1871 (P. L. 283), signing of application of new incorporation of new borough within three months immediately preceding its presentation to the court is a jurisdictional fact which must be made to appear, either affirmatively in the petition, or in the course of the proceedings. La Porte Borough, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 333. A petition for the incorporation of a new borough need not be concurred in by the grand jury of the county, since the portion of Acts 1889 (P. L. 393) which requires such concurrence, was repealed by Act 1895 (P. L. 389). Id.

75. La Porte borough divided, naming new borough containing county seat South La Porte held proper. La Porte Borough, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 333.

76. Witt v. Willis [Ky.] 85 S. W. 223.

77. After several petitions for election on removal of county seat were circulated, the captions of all but one were removed and the signatures pasted together under a single caption. Held, in absence of any showing that a signature was not genuine, such petition was sufficient under Sand. & H. Dig. § 945. Williamson v. Russey [Ark.] 84 S. W. 229. The collector's list of paid poll taxes is the basis by which is to be determined whether the required one-third of the electors have signed a petition for an election to decide upon a county seat removal. Acts 1901, p. 76. Id. Publication of notice of intention to circulate a petition for removal of a county seat need be made in but one legal newspaper in the county. Foss v. Roseau County Com'rs [Minn.] 101 N. W. 71. It is not a jurisdictional prerequisite that affidavits attached to a petition for removal of a county seat should state that the parties executing the affidavits are signers of the petition. Gen. St. 1894, § 647. Id. Where, in an election for removal of a county seat under St. 1893, c. 23, it appears from the face of the returns that no one town received a majority of the votes cast and the county board orders a second election, such order in effect directs the county seat to remain unchanged, and the legality of the election may therefor be contested if the proper

§ 2. Officers; personal rights and liabilities.[78]—The appointment of county officers is provided for by constitutions[79] or statutes.[80] The legislature cannot abolish an office established by the constitution,[81] nor appoint officers by special laws.[82] It may prescribe the duties of county officers so far as such duties are not prescribed by the constitution,[83] and may provide for other county officers unless prohibited by the constitution.[84] Compensation of officers is entirely statutory.[85] County supervisors are not entitled to compensation in excess of that provided by statute, notwithstanding the reasonable value of their services or the custom showing is made. Robertson v. Grant County Com'rs [Okl.] 79 P. 97. Allegations of petition held insufficient. Id. Signers of a petition for the calling of an election for the removal of the county seat may withdraw their names from the petition at any time before the county court has taken final action on the petition. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 553, c. 34, requiring names of two-fifths of voters of county on petition to give court jurisdiction. Kinsloe v. Pogue, 213 Ill. 302, 72 N. E. 906. Under Acts 1900-1901, p. 754, providing the method of procuring new county buildings upon removal of the county seat, the contribution of the county must be made out of the revenue of the county for one year without increasing the tax rate for that year. Hand v. Stapleton, 140 Ala. 555, 37 So. 362.

78. See 3 C. L. 961.

79. A county commissioner is a county officer within the meaning of Const. art. II., § 6, authorizing the filling of vacancies in counties by the county commissioners; hence Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 327, providing for filling of vacancies in county board by other officers, is unconstitutional. State v. Fulton [Wash.] 79 P. 779. Road supervisors appointed by county commissioners and removable at will are not county officers, but employes, and are not within the terms of Const. art. 11, § 5, requiring general and uniform election laws to be passed for election of county officers. State v. Newland [Wash.] 79 P. 983.

80. Under Laws 1901, c. 2, § 1, providing for filling of vacancies in county offices caused by death, resignation "or otherwise" by appointment by the governor, vacancies other than those caused by death or resignation are to be so filled. Territory v. Gutierrez [N. M.] 78 P. 139.

81. Acts 1876, p. 322, consolidating offices of county treasurer and clerk of the superior court, making such clerk ex officio treasurer and fixing his fees, is unconstitutional because it abolishes the office of treasurer fixed by constitution. Morris v. Glover, 121 Ga. 751, 49 S. E. 786.

82. Under 24 Stat. 170, prohibiting territorial legislatures from passing local and special laws regulating township and county affairs, is law appointing certain persons as commissioners of a certain county established by a previous law is special and invalid. Territory v. Gutierrez [N. M.] 78 P. 139. An assessor appointed by the commissioners by such special law, according to its terms is not legally entitled to the office. Territory v. Albright [N. M.] 78 P. 204.

83. Missouri River Power Co. v. Steele [Mont.] 80 P. 1093.

84. Creation of county board of assessors and giving it power to fix valuation on realty in first instance held valid. Missouri River Power Co. v. Steele [Mont.] 80 P. 1093.

85. Kirby's Dig. § 7009 does not entitle county clerk to per diem compensation for attendance on board of equalization while in court pursuant to provisions of §§ 6998, 6999. Hempstead County v. Goodlett [Ark.] 84 S. W. 787. Kirby's Dig. § 3493 does not entitle the county clerk to a fee of 10 cents each for filing justice of the peace reports. Id. Ky. St. 1903, § 1845 fixes compensation of members of fiscal court and they cannot allow themselves any other compensation. Boyd County v. Arthur, 26 Ky. L. R. 906, 82 S. W. 613. In Rev. St. § 2813, providing for the per diem of county commissioners, the word "such" before the word "county" should read "each" so as to make the law general, and hence constitutional. The word "such" held to have crept in by error. State v. Carlisle, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 637. Section 897 makes no provision for mileage for county commissioners when traveling either within or without their own county. The provision for "necessary traveling expenses when traveling outside of the county on official business" is a provision for official as distinguished from personal expenses—for the cost of going and coming, but not for board and personal expenses. Id. County treasurer's commissions, in Mississippi, are to be estimated on basis of political year, beginning and ending in January and not on basis of fiscal year. Adams v. Coker [Miss.] 37 So. 744. Schools in special districts are not under the official supervision of county superintendents and are not to be taken into account in computing their salary, under Rev. Codes 1899, § 652. Dickey County v. Hicks [N. D.] 103 N. W. 423; Dickey County v. Denning [N. D.] 103 N. W. 422. In California a district attorney is not entitled to extra compensation for services of a stenographer but such stenographer must be paid out of his salary. The cost of such services is not a "personal expense." County supervisors cannot therefore allow a claim for a salary of such a stenographer. Humiston v. Shaffer, 145 Cal. 195, 78 P. 651. Under Comp. St. 1901, c. 28, § 42, the treasurer and clerks and assistants in counties over 25,000 and less than 60,000 population can in no case receive more than the amount of fees actually earned in the office. Mauer v. Gage County [Neb.] 100 N. W. 1026. Laws 1898, p. 36, making county treasurer in counties of a certain class also supervisor of assessments, does not create a new office but adds new duties of their predecessors.[86] Equity has jurisdiction to compel restoration of moneys illegally drawn by supervisors in excess of their salaries as allowed by law.[87] In such a suit by taxpayers defendant supervisors may plead limitations.[88] Overpayments made and received in good faith and applied to discharge claims against the county cannot be recovered from the officer receiving them.[89] In Tennessee the revenue agent may sue for the recovery of money illegally paid a county officer.[90]

For breaches of official duty[91] or for negligence resulting in loss to the county,[92] officers are liable on their bonds; and willful neglect or breach of duty may render them liable to penalties prescribed by statute.[93] A deputy county auditor duly appointed by the auditor at a previous term who continues to perform duties as such deputy during the subsequent term is a de facto officer.[94] But whether he was a de facto officer or not, the auditor, with whose permission and under whose supervision he performed such duties, would be liable on his bond for illegal acts of the deputy resulting in loss to the county.[95] Negligence of the treasurer in paying cash or checks on forged orders presented by the deputy auditor to an old one; hence the salary of the county treasury is also compensation for his duties as supervisor of assessments. Parker v. Richland County, 214 Ill. 165, 73 N. E. 451. County auditor was justified in resisting payment of an excessive advertising bill and should be allowed his expenses in so doing. Kloeb v. Mercer County Com'rs, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 565.

86. Va. Code 1904, § 848, fixes compensation. Johnson v. Black, 103 Va. 477, 49 S. E. 633.

87. Bill by taxpayers held not multifarious, though against supervisors and predecessors, the defense being the same in every case. Johnson v. Black, 103 Va. 477, 49 S. E. 633. Equity jurisdiction not ousted by Va. Code 1904, § 836, providing for appeal from decision of board by commonwealth attorney when required by six freeholders. Id.

88. In suit against supervisors and their predecessors, only those could be held who had accepted money within 3 years before suit. Johnson v. Black, 103 Va. 477, 49 S. E. 633.

89. Where a county auditor in good faith but without legal authority paid a county superintendent of schools, besides the amount of his own salary, the salaries of his clerks, and the superintendent paid the clerks amounts in excess of those received from the county which they accepted in discharge of their claims, the county being thus relieved, the county could not recover from the superintendent the overpayment to him. Dickey County v. Hicks [N. D.] 103 N. W. 423.

90. Under Acts 1901, c. 174, a revenue agent may bring suit against a county judge to recover moneys illegally paid him. State v. Kelly, 111 Tenn. 583, 82 S. W. 311.

91. Under Burn's Ann. St. 1901, §§ 6521, 6530, fees collected by a county auditor belong to the county and failure to pay them over is a breach of his official bond. Workman v. State [Ind.] 73 N. E. 917. Common-law action may be brought against sureties on county treasurer's bond when he has turned his books over to his successor and a shortage appears, though county auditors have not fully adjusted his accounts. Lancaster County v. Landis, 209 Pa. 514, 58 A. 1068.

92. County trustee and surety liable for loss of funds deposited in unsafe bank, when though not intentionally dishonest in the matter he could have known of the bank's condition by the exercise of ordinary prudence and caution. State v. Ridley [Tenn.] 85 S. W. 891. Where a county treasurer recognizes an order on the treasury issued from the county auditor's office on a blank in every way regular on its face and issues a check on a county depositary payable to the person designated as payee, and gives the check to the pretended representative of the payee, in good faith and without negligence, neither the treasurer nor his sureties are liable for the forgery of the order or the indorsement thereon. Board of Com'rs of Ramsey County v. Elmund [Minn.] 102 N. W. 719.

93. Failure of a commissioner to require an account to be itemized and verified under Code, § 754 renders him liable to the penalty prescribed by Code, § 711, for neglect of duty. Turner v. McKee, 137 N. C. 251, 49 S. E. 330. County treasurer not liable for penalty imposed by Rev. Code 1892, § 902, for failure to report to supervisors, where such failure was not willful but was due to request of supervisors. Adams v. Caker [Miss.] 37 So. 744. A county commissioner who through ignorance and not through willfulness or with a corrupt motive disregards a statute regulating the exercise of his official duties, is not guillty of criminal misconduct in office, within meaning of Rev. St. § 6915, prescribing a fine and forfeiture of office as punishment for misconduct in office. State v. Bair, 71 Ohio St. 410, 73 N. E. 514.

94. Board of Com'rs of Ramsey County v. Sullivan [Minn.] 102 N. W. 723.

95. Deputy forged orders and indorsements thereon and obtained money by presenting them to the treasurer as the representative of the payees named therein. Board of Com'rs of Ramsey County v. Sullivan [Minn.] 102 N. W. 723.

would not relieve the auditor from liability for his concurrent negligence.[96] Approval and adoption of a report of a county trustee on funds received by him is not a settlement with and a release from liability of his predecessor.[97] Commissions earned by county trustee after failure of bank resulting in loss of county funds are properly applied in reduction of the trustee's liability.[98]

§ 3. Public powers, duties, and liabilities.[99]—Counties possess no powers and can incur no obligations not authorized by statute.[1] They cannot hold property for profit or take title to it for the purpose of revenue,[2] hence a judgment against a county is not a lien on land bought in by the county for taxes.[3] Counties are not bound by acts of officers or agents not authorized by law,[4] nor can they be estopped by such acts.[5] Counties which issue bonds for railway stock and are represented on the directorate of the road do not hold the stock in their governmental capacity, but as ordinary stockholders.[6] They are bound by acts of their representatives on the board of directors.[7] Mandamus lies to compel performance of ministerial duties of county officers which are clearly fixed by law.[8] The liability of a county for expenses incurred in caring for insane persons,[9] persons suffering from contagious diseases,[10] or others entitled to public aid,[11] is regulated by

4. A county auditor has only such power as is conferred by statute, and acts in excess of such power do not bind the county. Assignment of certificate to forfeited lands without authority of state auditor of no effect. Patton v. Cass County [N. D.] 102 N. W. 174. County supervisors recommended a certain assessment of railroads by towns and agreed by resolution to bear expense of litigation resulting from such assessment. Held such resolution and agreement was ultra vires and not binding on county. People v. St. Lawrence County Sup'rs, 91 App. Div. 327, 91 N. Y. S. 948. County board has no power to create an office by employing an attorney for a year with salary payable quarterly; where an attorney is so employed the board may discharge him before the end of the year. Vincent v. Nassau County, 45 Misc. 247, 92 N. Y. S. 32.

5. County not estopped to assert invalidity of resolution of supervisors providing for payment of expenses incurred by towns in certain litigation, resolution being ultra vires. People v. St. Lawrence County Sup'rs, 101 App. Div. 327, 91 N. Y. S. 948.

6. Hinds County v. Natchez, J. & C. R. Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 189.

7. County board of action of directors at meetings at which its representative was present and could not question validity of stock in hands of one to whom it was sold by directors. Hinds County v. Natchez, J. & C. R. Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 189.

8. Mandamus lies to compel a county treasurer to deposit in a bank its pro rata share of the moneys of the county as provided by Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10,870. State v. Cronin [Neb.] 101 N. W. 325.

9. Under Laws 1896, p. 471, c. 545, § 65, and Code Cr. Proc. § 662, when a person pleads insanity to a charge of crime committed in another county and is committed to an insane asylum, there is no general liability on the county of his residence for the expense of keeping him in the state asylum. Jefferson County v. Oswego County, 102 App. Div. 232, 92 N. Y. S. 709. By-laws 1896, p. 508, c. 545, § 101, as amend by Laws 1899, p. 461, c. 260, the expense of caring for a lunatic transferred from a state hospital to that at Matteamar rests upon the county wherein the charge against him arose. Id. Under Code, § 2297, making estates of persons cared for by the county liable for the reasonable expense incurred, the estate of an insane person cannot be charged with the expense of the hearing on his sanity and transportation to the hospital. Westlake's Estate v. Scott County [Iowa] 101 N. W. 88.

10. Under Gen. St. 1894, § 7059, a county is not liable for expenses necessarily incurred by a village, town or city in caring for a person suffering from a contagious disease, if such person is solvent. Board of Com'rs of Marshall County v. Roseau County Com'rs [Minn.] 101 N. W. 164. A claim for services as quarantine watch is a proper claim for allowance by the county under How. Ann. St. § 1647. Bishop v. Ottawa County Sup'rs [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 91, 103 N. W. 585.

11. County board has power to contract with physician to render, by the year, medical services to such persons as the county must supply with such aid. Cochran v. County of Vermillion, 113 Ill. App. 140. Primary duty to aid sick persons, who, though not paupers, are not able to help themselves, is on the county and not on a city. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 107, § 24. City of Spring Valley v. Bureau County, 115 Ill. App. 545. Value of medical services rendered a pauper may be recovered from county under common counts, when it appears that the county requested rendition of such services. County of De Witt v. Spaulding, 111 Ill. App. 364.

statute. Reasonable rules regarding the rendition of aid to persons with the care of whom the county is chargeable may be made;[12] but a county board cannot discriminate between classes of persons who come within the terms of the statute imposing the duty on the county.[13] Liability for witness's fees[14] and sheriff's costs[15] in criminal proceedings, and for the services of physicians at coroners' inquests[16] is also statutory.

The amount of indebtedness which may be incurred by a county is usually limited by the constitution, and this limit cannot of course be exceeded.[17] Obligations to be discharged by special assessments and not by general taxation are not usually considered in determining whether the constitutional limit has been exceeded.[18] A limitation upon a county's power to levy taxes is not necessarily a limitation upon its power to incur indebtedness.[19] Money collected and placed to the credit of a general county fund for a given year cannot be used to discharge debts of a previous year until those of the year for which the money was collected have been paid.[20] The laying of a special levy for bridge purposes by a county court does not limit its expenditures for such purposes to the amount raised by such special levy, if their are other available funds.[21]

The legislature has power to authorize an issue of bonds by a county to discharge an indebtedness incurred for necessary expenses,[22] and may even compel a county to make provision for the payment of such debts.[23]

12. City of Spring Valley v. Bureau County, 115 Ill. App. 545.

13. Rule that aid should be withheld from persons who engage in riots or lawlessness, or go out on strikes, or refuse or neglect to work when work is available, held invalid. City of Spring Valley v. Bureau County, 115 Ill. App. 545.

14. See, also, Witnesses, 4 C. L. 1943. Code, § 4661 provides that if a defendant in a criminal case be found not guilty, witness fees shall be paid by the county on certificate of the clerk. Held, supervisors have no power to disallow claims so presented. Climie v. Appanoose County [Iowa] 101 N. W. 98. Under Code, § 5492, witnesses for the defense, subpoenaed on order of the court, may be allowed mileage for the distance traveled outside as well as inside the state, being summoned from a point outside the state. Id. Where a nolle prosequi was entered on an indictment for homicide as to murder in the first degree, the trial was for murder in the second degree; hence, under Code, § 739, the county was liable only for half the witness fees, though witness came from without the county (Code, § 3756). Coward v. Jackson County Com'rs, 137 N. C. 299, 49 S. E. 207. But witness was entitled to full repayment of amount paid clerk for proving his ticket. Id.

15. A county is not liable to its sheriff for his costs, allowed by Pen. Code 1895, § 1107, for conducting prisoners before a judge or court to or from jail, but these costs must be collected by the sheriff from the prisoners after conviction. Hall County v. Gilmer [Ga.] 51 S. E. 307.

16. Physician may recover for services at coroner's inquest held according to the forms of law under Code, § 529. Finarty v. Marion County [Iowa] 103 N. W. 772.

17. Const. 1870, art. 9, § 12, limiting indebtedness of counties to 50 per cent. of value of taxable property, is only limitation of indebtedness by counties in Illinois. Coles County v. Goehring, 209 Ill. 142, 70 N. E. 610. Laws 1899, p. 174, providing for levy to pay indebtedness of detached portion of county, held unconstitutional in so far as constitutional limit is authorized to be exceeded. Desha County v. State [Ark.] 84 S. W. 625. Where a county is already in debt beyond the constitutional limit, a law providing for an annual special tax for a number of years to pay for a proposed court house is invalid, even though it provides that the county as such shall not be liable except for the application of the special taxes so raised. Brix v. Clatsop County [Or.] 80 P. 650. Laws 1868, p. 312, providing for assessments to meet payments of interest on railroad bonds, limiting rate to five mills, did not provide any particular rate, and hence was not invalid as authorizing a rate above the constitutional limit. Desha County v. State [Ark.] 84 S. W. 625.

18. Drainage bonds which show on their face that they are to be paid by taxes on the lands in the drainage district do not constitute an obligation of the county. Sisson v. Buena Vista County Sup'rs [Iowa] 104 N. W. 454. Ditch bonds, payable by assessment on lands benefited, are not to be considered in determining the county's debt limit. Johnson v. Norman County Com'rs [Minn.] 101 N. W. 180.

19. Const. 1870, art. 9, § 8, providing that county levies shall not exceed 75 cents per $100 of valuation, does not limit indebtedness. Coles County v. Goehring, 209 Ill. 142, 70 N. E. 610.

22. Chatham County Com'rs v. Stafford, 138 N. C. 453, 50 S. E. 862.

23. Laws 1903, c. 289, authorizing fund-

County boards of commissioners or supervisors, or county courts, are the general representatives of counties, and have only such jurisdiction as is expressly conferred by statute or necessarily implied to enable them to carry out powers expressly granted.[24] Powers granted must be exercised in the manner prescribed by law.[25] Such boards have the general management and control of the county property and business,[26] and where in such matters they are vested with discretionary power, their decisions will not be reviewed by the court in the absence of any abuse of power.[27] County boards have the right to compromise or settle claims,[28] and ing of indebtedness and refunding of certain bonds, held mandatory and within power of legislature. Jones v. Madison County Com'rs, 137 N. C. 579, 50 S. E. 291, rvg. 135 N. C. 218, 47 S. E. 753.

24. Kemp v. Adams [Ind.] Sup. 73 N. E. 590. Under Rev. St. 1887, § 1759, subds. 2, 3, county commissioners have power to establish, abolish, and change justices' precincts in incorporated cities. Johnston v. Savidge [Idaho] 81 P. 616. The exercise of such power is not prohibited by Sess. Laws 1891, p. 60. Id. County commissioners have no power to offer a reward for the apprehension of offenders against the criminal laws of the state. Felker v. Elk County Com'rs [Kan.] 78 P. 167. County commissioners have power to repair a bridge situated within municipal limits but on ground which does not belong to the city. Sherman v. Carlisle, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 627. The power of county commissioners with reference to the elimination of dangerous railway crossings over highways is limited to existing crossings, and cannot be exercised with reference to a proposed crossing over a railway which has not yet been constructed. Grinnell v. Portage County Com'rs, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 180. Neither does the power to change or alter the course of a highway, and to vacate a portion thereof for the purpose of doing away with a crossing at grade, permit the commissioners to also change the course and vacate a portion of an adjacent highway intersected by the railway by a crossing not at grade. Id. Under Kentucky statutes, fiscal courts cannot make magistrates road supervisors in their respective districts. Boyd County v. Arthur, 26 Ky. L. R. 906, 82 S. W. 613. Fiscal court has no authority to buy plats to aid assessor in making assessments. Construing Ky. St. 1903, §§ 1840, 1882, 1883, 4241. Jefferson County v. Young [Ky.] 86 S. W. 985. Where, in a contest over the selection of an official newspaper, one contestant failed to file the required statement regarding circulation, the board had no authority to adjourn to a subsequent date to allow the contestant time to file such statement. Sturges v. Vail [Iowa] 104 N. W. 366. Code 1899, c. 39, § 29, requiring an estimate to the mode and spread upon the records of the county court before making the annual levy, does not prevent the diversion of funds from the purposes mentioned in the estimate to other proper purposes. Taylor v. Broxton County Ct. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 720. Collection of a fund levied by a county court will not be enjoined merely because it recites that the money is to be raised to pay indebtedness on account of a certain class of work and for the prosecution of other work of the same kind, though there are at the time unpaid orders for that class of work in existence. Id.

25. There are three statutory methods of raising revenue for and the construction of county buildings in Oklahoma. Giles v. Dennison [Okl.] 78 P. 174. In Indiana a county council cannot make an appropriation of money except by ordinance duly passed as required by statute. Attempted appropriation by mere motion and order pursuant thereto held invalid. State v. Newton County Com'rs [Ind.] 74 N. E. 1091. Lease of land by supervisors at a meeting held in a chancery clerk's office in a separate building and not in the court house, held void. Sexton v. Coahoma County Sup'rs [Miss.] 38 So. 636.

26. Kerby v. Clay County Com'rs [Kan.] 81 P. 503; Nelson v. Harrison County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 197.

27. Sale of extra bridge material by supervisors held free from fraud or abuse of power. Nelson v. Harrison County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 197. County commissioners have a large discretion in passing upon the necessity of erecting new county buildings and in deciding upon the location of such buildings. Discretion not abused in decision to erect new court house and in manner of securing bids. Anderson v. Newton [Ga.] 51 S. E. 508. Whether funds for a court house are to be raised by a tax for the current year or by affording the people an opportunity to vote for a bond issue rests with the county commissioners. Their decision cannot be reviewed by the superior court judge, who has no power to order an election or delay action until the voters have expressed themselves on the issue of bonds. Id. County board must determine necessity for repairs to court house, and whether finances of county will justify them, under Rev. St. c. 34, § 26, making it the county's duty to provide a suitable court house, when, etc. Coles County v. Goehring, 209 Ill. 142, 70 N. E. 610. Appropriation of funds by county fiscal court of county of Magoffin held a proper exercise of court's discretion, under Ky. St. 1903, c. 52, § 1840. Magoffin County v. Owens, 26 Ky. L. R. 715, 82 S. W. 417.

28. Compromise of claims involving tax certificates held valid. Multnomah County v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. [Or.] 80 P. 409. The fact that the county court is authorized to release debts or damages arising out of contract and due the county (B. & C. Comp. § 912, subd. 10), does not preclude the settlement of controversies arising in other ways. Id. The board of county commissioners has power to sell and assign a judgment for personal property taxes under the general revenue law to determine whether actions shall be brought in the name of the county.[29] In West Virginia the county court is the legal representative of the various magisterial districts of the county, which can only sue and be sued in its name, as they have no legal existence for the purposes of suit.[30] But in a suit by the county court, the declaration should show whether the suit is for an injury or loss suffered by the county or district and in what such loss or injury consists.[31]

Torts.[32]—Neither a county nor its officers are liable to persons injured by defects in county highways, bridges or other structures which the county is by law required to maintain,[33] unless such liability is imposed by statute.[34] of 1890, and may accept less than the amount due if the transaction is free from fraud or other illegality. Hagler v. Kelly [N. D.] 103 N. W. 629.

29. County commissioners have right to determine whether actions shall be brought in the name of the county to recover moneys paid out without authority; county attorney may not institute and carry on such litigation without consent and concurrence of the board. Kerby v. Clay County Com'rs [Kan.] 81 P. 503.

30. State v. Sistersville, M. M. Turnpike Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 454.

31. Suit on penal bond against turnpike company for failure to carry out contract. State v. Sistersville, M. M. Turnpike Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 454.

32. See 3 C. L. 966.

33. Neither county, fiscal court, nor other county officer liable for injury resulting from defective elevator in court house. Simons v. Gregory [Ky.] 85 S. W. 751. In the absence of statute, county not liable for injury due to slipping on sidewalk in front of county court house. Bucher v. Northumberland Co., 209 Pa. 618, 59 A. 69.

34. Under Rev. St. §§ 845, 6134, an action may be maintained against county commissioners in their official capacity by the administrator of one whose death was caused by defective county bridge. Rahe v. Cuyahoya County Com'rs, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 97. The fact that a county supervisor and the foreman of the county bridge crew had inspected a repaired bridge and thought it reasonably safe for ordinary travel is no defense to an action against the county for damages for collapse of the bridge. Schlensig v. Monona County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 514.

35. See 3 C. L. 966.

36. A contract made with an ordinary in behalf of the county of which he is an official is not binding upon the county, unless it is in writing and entered on his minutes. Pol. Code 1895, § 343. Holliday v. Jackson County, 121 Ga. 310, 48 S. E. 947. Records of action of county board in making contract with experts to examine county books held a sufficient compliance with Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7853, and contract held complete. Board of Com'rs of Howard County v. Garrigus [Ind.] 73 N. E. 82. Contract for employment of attorney, not evidenced by any record, is void. Morrow v. Pike County [Mo.] 88 S. W. 99. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 6759, 6760, county contracts must be in writing subscribed by the parties or their authorized agents; must be executed in duplicate, and one copy filed with the clerk. Hence a contract must appear of record. Id. But a record identifying the subject-matter and general outlines of the contract is sufficient. Record of contract to employ attorney held sufficient. Id. Under Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. 1897, art. 797, authorizing county commissioners' court to appoint an agent to contract on behalf of the county for the erection and repair of county buildings, the authority to such agent must be express, and must be given by commissioners acting as a body. Jackson-Foxworth Lumber Co. v. Hutchinson County [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 565, 88 S. W. 412. Hence failure of individual commissioners to object to his acts could not amount to ratification or implied authority. Id. Authority actually given may be shown by parol, no record of the appointment being required. Id. Purchasing of blank books, blanks and stationery for county officers is to be made by a committee consisting of the county treasurer, auditor and chairman of the county board, pursuant to Rev. Codes 1895, § 1906, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 69, c. 59, and need not be made under competitive bids under § 1925, Rev. Codes. Knight v. Cass County Com'rs [N. D.] 103 N. W. 940.

Preliminary steps: Advertisements for bids for court house held substantial compliance with Pol. Code 1895, § 345, and sufficient to notify prospective bidders and the public of the extent and character of the work and the terms and time of payment. Anderson v. Newton [Ga.] 51 S. E. 508. Act 1870 (P. L. 834), relating to contracts for erection of buildings, etc., held complied with by commissioners in advertising for bids for court house, since the act requires publication of advertisement during four weeks when specifications were on file before bids were opened, and does not require first publication to be 28 days before opening of bids. Commonwealth v. Brown, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 269. Advertisement for sealed bids on county building held to have been published four weeks before contract was awarded as required by P. L. 834 (1870). Id., 210 Pa. 29, 59 A. 479. County must advertise for bids on bridges as required by statute, Rev. St. § 796. State v. Snyder, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 261.

37. Unless a contract with a county is made or sanctioned by commissioners' court, it is binding neither on the county nor on the other party. Presido County v. Clarke [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 475. In and for the purposes [38] expressly provided by law. A contract obligating the county beyond the constitutional limit is invalid.[39] There must have been a valid appropriation before a contract calling for expenditures can be legally made in some states.[40] A county cannot be estopped from asserting the invalidity of a contract made without authority,[41] nor can such a contract be ratified [42] by county officers [43] or by taxpayers.[44] A contract cannot be validated by a subsequent statute authorizing similar contracts but not expressly applicable to the one in question.[45]

County supervisors are ordinarily prohibited from becoming parties directly or indirectly to contracts to furnish supplies, materials or labor to the county,[46] and contracts participated in by supervisors contrary to law are to that extent fraudulent and void.[47] Warrants issued pursuant to such contracts will not be

Kentucky the fiscal affairs of the county are by law under control of the fiscal court, and the county judge has no authority to make contracts unless specifically authorized by statute. Scoville v. Baugh [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1146. Orders of county judge employing attorney to assist sheriff in collecting taxes and directing sheriff to pay a fee to attorney were void. Id.

38. Under North Dakota statutes a county board cannot make a contract with a person to collect a judgment owned by the county. Fox v. Jones [N. D.] 102 N. W. 161. County has no authority to contract to pay cost of publication of notice to nonresident taxpayers.. Baldwin v. Travis County [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 480. County contract is void under Rev. St. 1899, § 6759, unless consideration is wholly to be performed subsequent to making of contract. Morrow v. Pike County [Mo.] 88 S. W. 99. A resolution of a county board to allow six per cent. per annum to fiscal agents of the county as compensation for cashing warrants held beyond power of board, being in effect an allowance of interest for which there is no express statutory authority. State v. Stewart [Fla.] 38 So. 600. Contract by county to pay experts one-half the money collected by means of mistakes discovered by them in the county's books is within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7853, prescribing the procedure in making contracts wherein payment is to be by a commission or percentage. Board of Com'rs of Howard County v. Garrigus [Ind.] 74 N. E. 249.

39. Contract by county for court house repairs held not invalid, the limitation upon its indebtedness not being shown to have been exceeded. Coles County v. Goehring, 209 Ill. 142, 70 N. E. 610. A contract for construction of a court house providing for an annual rental for 10 years at the end of which the court house is to become the property of the county does not create a present indebtedness equal to the aggregate of the rental to be paid. Giles v. Dennison [Okl.] 78 P. 174. Where a county board has contracted for a court house at a price exceeding the debt limit, and intends to issue warrants on the annual income, such procedure may be enjoined as an evasion of the debt limit. Johnson v. Board of Com'rs of Norman County [Minn.] 101 N. W. 180. Evidence held not to sustain finding that there was no intention to issue such warrants. Id.

40. A taxpayer may enjoin a county board from entering into a contract for a court house for which no valid appropriation has been made, since such contract, if executed, would result in an illegal tax. State v. Newton County Com'rs [Ind.] 74 N. E. 1091. The fact that a fund thought by county board applicable to payment of contract was misappropriated or paid out for other purposes does not affect question of power of board to make the contract. Coles County v. Goehring, 209 Ill. 142, 70 N. E. 610. Kirby's Dig. §§ 1009-1025 empowers county court to authorize construction of new court house and approval of contract therefore, though levying court has made no appropriation previously. Bowman v. Frith [Ark.] 84 S. W. 709.

41. Baldwin v. Travis County [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 480. County cannot be estopped from denying validity of order based on void contract. Phillips v. Butler County [Mo.] 86 S. W. 231.

42. Contract to publish notice to nonresident taxpayers made by county attorney without authority cannot be ratified. Baldwin v. Travis County [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 480.

43. Where an attorney is appointed to assist in defense of a suit against the county by a void order, such employment could not be ratified by the fact that services were rendered with knowledge of the county officers. Phillips v. Butler County [Mo.] 86 S. W. 231.

44. Hence right of taxpayer to bring suit to restrain execution of such contract cannot be barred by laches. Fox v. Jones [N. D.] 102 N. W. 161.

45. Where order appointing an attorney to defend a suit against the county was void, a subsequent statute authorizing the employment of an attorney in such cases did not validate the prior order, it not being expressly applicable to prior orders. Phillips v. Butler County [Mo.] 86 S. W. 231.

46. Acts 27th Gen. Assem. c. 13, § 1. Nelson v. Harrison County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 197. Contracts for supplies made with firms in which county commissioners or purchasing agents are interested are unlawful, even though not denounced by statute. Lainhart v. Burr [Fla.] 38 So. 711.

47. Contract for repair of unimportant road at high price, most of the work being done by a county supervisor, held fraudulent. Nelson v. Harrison County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 197. Contract for filling ditch in highway held void because really per-enforced,[48] and the officers concerned may be compelled to make proper restitution.[49]

The validity of a contract and warrant cannot be determined in a suit between the county and the county treasurer to which the person with whom the contract was made and to whom the warrant was issued is not a party.[50] Taxpayers may maintain a suit to enjoin a county board from accepting a public work which has not been constructed in accordance with the contract when it appears that the board is acting in collusion with the contractors,[51] and a demand upon the board for an action against the contractors is not in such case a prerequisite.[52]

Bonds.[53]—County bonds must be properly registered and certified.[54] A proposition to vote bonds in aid of a railway, otherwise valid, is not void by reason of a provision authorizing the county to receive capital stock of the company.[55] Where a proposition to vote railroad bonds provides for the future issue of such bonds, the assessed valuation of the county last preceding the actual issue of the bonds should be taken as the basis for determining whether the amount voted is allowed by law.[56] A county may be estopped to repudiate bonds, which are not absolutely void.[57]

Presentation, allowance, enforcement and payment of claims.[58]—Claims must be presented in the manner and form [59] and within the time [60] prescribed by law. In Michigan one who has performed services for a local health board may himself present a claim to the county.[61] Some statutes provide that a claim must be formed by a supervisor who used another person as a cover for the fraud. Id. Contract for bridge material far in excess of county's needs, put through by a supervisor just before retiring from office, the price being exorbitant and large profits being realized by bridge company, held fraudulent and collusive. Id.

55. Colburn v. McDonald [Neb.] 100 N. W. 961.

56. Bonds voted in 1871 but dated and actually issued in 1873. Held, assessed valuation as returned in 1872 governed as to validity of bonds. Colburn v. McDonald [Neb.] 100 N. W. 961.

57. A county will not be allowed to repudiate its bonds after a compromise of a suit thereon whereby a reduction in interest was obtained and after 30 years' interest and a part of the principal was paid, unless the bonds are absolutely void. Colburn v. McDonald [Neb.] 100 N. W. 961.

58. See 3 C. L. 968.

59. Code, § 754, that no account shall be audited by county board unless itemized and verified, is mandatory. Turner v. McKee, 137 N. C. 251, 49 S. E. 330. Claims against the county for fees of officers in actions before a justice, commissioner or county judge, must be certified to and allowed by the county board in the manner prescribed by Rev. St. 1898, § 680, and in no other way. Birdsall v. Kewaunee County [Wis.] 103 N. W. 1. Where local health board had an itemized account of expenses incurred in caring for a diseased person, and certified thereto, How. Ann. St. § 1647, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 6, No. 7, requiring itemized and separate accounts for each person to be rendered to the county board, was sufficiently complied with. Bishop v. Ottawa County Sup'rs [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 91, 103 N. W. 585.

60. Under St. 1897, § 40, county boards cannot allow claims unless presented within a year after the last item therein accrued. Held, mandamus will not lie to compel auditor to draw warrant for claim allowed by the board, though not presented within a year. Perrin v. Honeycutt, 144 Cal. 87, 77 P. 776. Salary of county judge need not be entered as claim on claim docket 30 days before meeting of county court to make an appropriation therefor valid. State v. Kelly, 111 Tenn. 583, 82 S. W. 311.

61. Under How. Ann. St. § 1647, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 6, No. 7, providing for the allowance of claims for services rendered in the care of a person suffering from a contagious disease, a claim may be presented to the county by the individual who has rendered services; it is not necessary for a town or village to first pay the claim and then present it to the county. Bishop v. Ottawa County Sup'rs [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 91, 103 N. W. 585.

presented before an action can be maintained thereon.[62] In allowing claims for services rendered under statutes fixing the compensation therefor, county boards are in a merely ministerial capacity.[63] On failure or refusal to allow such claims, claimant may maintain an action at law against the county to recover the amount claimed.[64] On the other hand if a board allows greater compensation than that fixed by law, its action is void and the county may maintain an action to recover the excess, notwithstanding such settlement.[65] But in auditing and allowing claims not expressly provided for by statute, county boards are vested with a wide discretion, with the exercise of which courts will rarely interfere.[66] Claimants are entitled to a hearing in such cases, the decision of the board being final.[67] Where items of a claim have once been audited and rejected, mandamus will not lie to compel the board to audit such items when presented again.[68]

Recovery may be had against the county under the common counts where the work done for it has been accepted,[69] and the county board had authority to contract for it,[70] and such recovery is not precluded by the fact that orders issued in payment are void.[71] The county is in such case estopped to deny liability, having received the benefits of the work done.[72] But unless claim for service is founded upon a statute or on a contract entered into with the proper officer acting within the scope of his authority,[73] the mere beneficial nature of the service is not suffi-

62. Code, § 3528, providing that "no action shall be brought against any county on an unliquidated demand until the same shall be presented to such board [of supervisors], and payment demanded and refused or neglected," applies to claims for torts. Little v. Pottawattamie County [Iowa] 101 N. W. 752. Where claim for injuries due to defective bridge was filed August 24th and supervisors met September 7th, and rejected claim September 9th, a suit commenced September 1st was premature. Id.

Under Mill's Ann. St. § 801, providing for presentation of claims before suit thereon, a county treasurer must present a claim for a difference in salary as allowed by a former statute and a later law alleged by him to be unconstitutional. Gregg v. Lake County Com'rs, 32 Colo. 357, 76 P. 376. Attorney employed by county supervisors cannot maintain an action for disbursements, the amount of which is not fixed by law, until the amount has been presented to the board for allowance. Vincent v. Nassau County, 45 Misc. 247, 92 N. Y. S. 32.

Contra: Under Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4637-4645, notice need not be given the fiscal court of presentation to and allowance by the circuit court of claim of court stenographer. Polsgrove v. Walker, 26 Ky. L. R. 938, 82 S. W. 979.

63. In passing upon the accounts of county officers, county boards act in a ministerial capacity. Mauer v. Gage County [Neb.] 100 N. W. 1026. When an officer has performed services for which the law allows certain fees, the county court must audit and allow a claim for such fees. Wallowa County v. Oakes [Or.] 78 P. 892.

64. Wallowa County v. Oakes [Or.] 78 P. 892.

65. Excess allowed county treasurer recovered. Mauer v. Gage County [Neb.] 100 N. W. 1026.

66. County boards in passing on the validity of claims act largely from personal knowledge and experience and must be given wide latitude. People v. Orleans County Sup'rs, 98 App. Div. 390, 90 N. Y. S. 318. Where it appears that a claimant acted in bad faith and that there was a general scheme to defraud the county, it is proper for the board to reject an entire claim without special investigation of each item. Claims for fees rejected entirely where a fraudulent scheme appeared. Id.

67. Under Pub. Acts, p. 6, n. 7, giving supervisors power to examine and allow or reject claims against the county, their decision is final; hence no claim should be rejected without giving the claimant an opportunity to be heard. City of Monroe v. Monroe County Sup'rs [Mich.] 100 N. W. 896. Persons presenting claims for services as quarantine guards are entitled to a hearing before the county board under How. Ann. St. § 1647, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 6, n. 7. Bishop v. Ottawa County Sup'rs [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 97, 103 N. W. 585. Error to reject a claim for services as "special policeman" in "smallpox cases" on the ground that it showed on its face it was for services rendered for policing a city. City of Monroe v. Monroe County Sup'rs [Mich.] 100 N. W. 896.

73. Clerk of circuit court is not agent of county board authorized to contract for cient to support the claim.[74] A county is not liable for interest on claims against it in the absence of an express agreement therefor.[75] A taxpayer may compel restoration of money paid on illegal bills allowed by a board.[76]

Warrants; issuance and enforcement.[77]—County warrants must be properly countersigned,[78] must sufficiently designate the funds on which they are drawn,[79] and can be issued only by and to the officers vested by law with such authority.[80] They can only be drawn and issued against and in anticipation of the collection of taxes already levied and must so show upon their face.[81] The record of settlements made by a sheriff which does not disclose the dates of orders paid by him is not sufficient evidence to show that certain unpaid orders were issued at a time when there were no funds available for their payment.[82] Failure to register a warrant drawn by the ordinary of a county may subordinate payment of it to others duly registered, but does not render it void.[83] The law presumes that all officers connected with the drawing of a warrant have performed their duties, and a petition for mandamus to compel payment by the treasurer need not allege such performance.[84] An order drawn by the ordinary is evidence of an adjudication by the ordinary that the amount stated is due, and the treasurer cannot go behind the order except for fraud or mistake in the amount.[85] A resolution of the supervisors directing the treasurer not to pay a warrant does not legally restrain him from making such payment, though served upon him, the validity of the transaction and warrant not having been judicially determined.[86] In Missouri, county warrants presented and not paid because of lack of funds bear interest at six per cent. after such presentment,[87] by one who is legally entitled to present the warrant.[88] Where the statute provides a form of assignment of warrant, this form

76. A taxpayer may maintain an action against a county board and sheriff to compel restoration of money paid the sheriff on illegal bills audited by the board, although collusion by the board is not alleged. Laws 1892, c. 301, applied. Hicks v. Eggleston, 93 N. Y. S. 909.

NOTE. When county warrants are issued: After a claim against a county had been allowed, the auditor drew a warrant payable to the claimant in payment thereof and himself acquired the money from the treasury by a forged indorsement. Held, the warrant had not been issued to satisfy a statute requiring that the auditor should "issue" a warrant and not having been "issued" his successor might be compelled to do it by mandamus. American Bridge Co. v. Wheeler, 35 Wash. 40, 76 P. 534 (3 C. L. 969, n. 56). This case suggests the novel question as to when a warrant is issued. There is authority for the idea that a warrant is issued when it has actually been delivered or put into circulation, irrespective of whether the person to whom it comes be the one entitled to enforce it. State v. Pierce, 52 Kan. 521. The principal case is for the proposition that it must come into the hands of an authorized person before it is "issued." Nevertheless the original county auditor had been convicted of embezzlement of the funds on the theory of agency for the person to whom it was drawn. State v. Raby, 31 Wash. 111. Principle and justice seem to be subserved in holding the transaction no issuance until the warrant has come into authorized hands."—4 Columbia L. R. 603.

78. Warrants not countersigned by county treasurer as required by 1 Starr & C. Ann. St. (2d ed.) p. 1136, c. 35. Coles County v. Goehring, 209 Ill. 142, 70 N. E. 610.

81. Warrants or orders held void because not showing on their face that there was money in the treasury or in course of collection for their payment, under Rev. St. c. 146a, § 2. Coles County v. Goehring, 209 Ill. 142, 70 N. E. 610.

must be followed.[89] The burden is upon an assignee to show that the statute has been complied with.[90] One suing on an order must show that he is a bona fide holder and that it has not been paid.[91] Suit on a warrant may be barred by limitations.[92] When orders for the payment of money issued by a county court are attacked on the ground of illegality, the burden of proof is on plaintiff.[93]

Appeals from orders of county boards.—Where a board acts within its jurisdiction, its action can only be reviewed by appeal.[94] When such an appeal will lie,[95] who may or should prosecute it,[96] the necessity and sufficiency of a bond,[97] and procedure in general [98] in the case of such review, are matters regulated entirely by statute.

89. Rev. St. 1899, § 6799, prescribes form and provides that blank indorsement is insufficient. Isenhour v. Barton County [Mo.] 88 S. W. 759.

90. Assignee by blank indorsement has no legal title. Isenhour v. Barton County [Mo.] 88 S. W. 759.

91. Evidence insufficient to show county orders had not been paid or that plaintiff was a bona fide holder in suit thereon. Board of Sup'rs of Issaquena County v. Anderson [Miss] 38 So. 47.

92. Where county warrants have been presented for payment, refused for want of funds, registered, numbered and indorsed as required by law, and thereafter the treasurer publishes a call for such warrants, a plea of the call and the statute of limitations is a good defense to an action on the warrants more than six years after publication of the call. Board of Com'rs of Seward County v. Shepherd [Kan.] 80 P. 36.

94. Quo warranto proceeding improper to determine whether board could create justice's precincts in cities. Johnston v. Savidge [Idaho] 81 P. 616. The remedy for review of the action of county commissioners is by appeal from the order or act complained of under Rev. St. 1887, § 1776, amended Sess. Laws 1899, p. 248. School Dist. No. 25, Shoshone County, v. Rice [Idaho] 81 P. 155.

95. Value in controversy exclusive of interest and costs being more than $25, an appeal may be taken to circuit court from orders of fiscal court, under Ky. St. 1903, § 978. Jefferson County v. Young [Ky.] 86 S. W. 985.

96. County attorney may prosecute appeal from order of fiscal court when directed by county court. Jefferson County v. Young [Ky.] 86 S. W. 985. When so directed by county court, county attorney must prosecute appeals from orders of fiscal court. Ky. St. 1903, § 127. Boyd County v. Arthur, 26 Ky. L. R. 906, 82 S. W. 613.

97. In Idaho, an appeal from an order of the county board, not taken to protect the interests of the people and the county, is ineffectual if the undertaking required by statute is not filed. Davis v. Elmore County [Idaho] 75 P. 910. An appeal from an order of a county board is perfected by serving on the clerk the notice required by Rev. St. 1887, § 1777, as amended by Sess. Laws 1899, p. 248; a bond is not necessary if not ordered by the district judge. Great Northern R. Co. v. Kootenai County [Idaho] 78 P. 1078. An appeal bond under Gen. St. 1901, §§ 1640, 1641, providing for appeals from county board decisions, must be approved by the clerk and filed with him; approval by and filing with the clerk of the district court will not answer. Board of Com'rs of Trego County v. Cross [Kan.] 79 P. 1084. On an appeal from an order of a county board disallowing a claim, the appeal bond was approved by the clerk of the county who was ex officio clerk of the district court as clerk of such court instead of as county clerk as required by law. Held, mere irregularity insufficient to defeat a meritorious appeal. Hitchcock County v. Brown [Neb.] 102 N. W. 456. Code, § 441, gives a publisher on appeal from an order of the county board selecting the official newspaper to the district court as in ordinary actions. Held, the appeal bond is to be approved by the county auditor. Sturges v. Vail [Iowa] 104 N. W. 366. Where a hearing on the selection of an official newspaper was on January 15th and the appellant's bond was filed in the district court February 6th, it will be presumed that such bond was approved within twenty days from the order as required by law. 98. Under Ky. St. 1903, §§ 724-731, regulating appeals from fiscal to circuit courts, no bill of exceptions is necessary, cases being triable anew. Jefferson County v. Young [Ky.] 86 S. W. 985. Proper to take one appeal from two orders of the fiscal court made the same day and as a part of one plan, one appropriating money to be spent under direction of magistrates, and the other allowing per diem compensation to magistrates for supervising work on county roads. Boyd County v. Arthur, 26 Ky. L. R. 906, 82 S. W. 613. Rev. St. 1887, § 1778, as amended by Sess. Laws 1899, p. 249, requiring clerk to transmit papers on appeal from county board to district court within five days, is not jurisdictional, and failure of the clerk to comply does not deprive an appellant of the benefits of his appeal. Humbird Lumber Co. v. Kootenai County [Idaho] 79 P. 396. In Nebraska appeals from the decisions of a county board should be entered, tried and determined in the district court, the same as appeals from justices of the peace. Loup County v. Wirsig [Neb.] 103 N. W. 56.

COURTS.

The jurisdiction of courts [1] and the effect of decisions as precedents [2] are elsewhere treated.

§ 1. Creation, change, and alteration.[3]—A court is a judicial tribunal [4] composed of one or more persons,[5] whose duty is primarily to adjudicate controversies,[6] though the duty to advise co-ordinate branches of the government has been imposed upon them in some states.[7] Unless prohibited by the constitution, courts,[8] espe-

2. See Stare Decisis, 4 C. L. 1512.
3. See 3 C. L. 970.
4. State v. Pope [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 633. A city council vested with judicial powers is not a court within the Tennessee constitution, providing that all courts shall be open, and that every man having an injury done him shall have remedy by due course of law, and therefore its judgment is not conclusive of the rights of the parties. Staples v. Brown, 113 Tenn. 639, 85 S. W. 254. The action of the council of a municipality in granting to street railway company a franchise in a street which crosses a steam railroad at grade is not the subject of judicial review, where it does not appear that in so doing council exceeded its power, or that its action was induced by fraud. Nor would a review be authorized by a showing to the effect that a safer crossing could be made on another street. C., C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Urbana B. & N. R. Co., 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 583, 26 Ohio C. C. 180. Witnesses to a will in testifying to facts observed by them and in giving their opinion as to mental capacity based on such facts do not exercise judicial power. A statute of wills limiting evidence of capacity in the first instance to that of the attesting witnesses is not therefor violative of a constitutional provision vesting judicial powers in specified courts. O'Brien v. Bonfield, 213 Ill. 428, 72 N. E. 1090. The probate court in Kansas by constitutional provision in that state is a judicial tribunal. In re Gassaway [Kan.] 79 P. 113.
5. Where a court consists of several judges, proceedings had before the several judges of such court are in the same court and jurisdiction, notwithstanding they are had in different court rooms and by different judges. Richcreek v. Russell [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 617. Under the act creating the circuit court of appeals, such court is legally constituted where made up by three district judges of the circuit, regularly designated by particular assignments to attend as members for the term. Peters v. Hanger [C. C. A.] 136 F. 181. Where a majority of the judges of a court decline to sit because of personal interest in the result, the powers of the court devolve on the remaining judge or judges. Commonwealth v. Mathues, 210 Pa. 372, 59 A. 961. The legislature may confer upon a single justice of the supreme court the power to hear and determine proceedings in certiorari, and authorize the entry of his order therein as the judgment of the full court. Brown v. Street Lighting Dist. No. 1, 69 N. J. Law. 485, 55 A. 1080. Mere absence of the justice from the court room or building in which a trial was had, or from the town, or from any portion less than the entire district, is insufficient to enable an assistant justice, in Rhode Island, to perform the duties of the justice. Opie v. Clancy [R. I.] 60 A. 635. Act providing for additional judge sustained. State v. Dabbs, 182 Mo. 359, 81 S. W. 1148.
6. Advice given to a guardian by a district judge while out of court and never entered in writing as an order cannot be regarded as justifying action of the guardian. In re Kimble [Iowa] 103 N. W. 1009. By establishing the court of claims, congress created a tribunal to determine the right of anyone to receive money due by the government. Officers of the treasury cannot arbitrarily select between contending claimants. People's Trust Co.'s Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 359.
7. Private rights, the title to an office, or the construction of an existing statute, will not be determined in an ex parte proceeding in answer to a question from the legislative or executive departments. But where actual litigants are before one of these departments, the proceeding is not ex parte. In re Senate Resolution No. 10 [Colo.] 79 P. 1009. Under the Massachusetts constitution requiring the supreme court to give opinions on legal questions propounded by the governor, it is the duty of the court to do so only so far as an opinion is desired as an aid in the performance of official duties in regard to a matter then pending. In re Bounties to Veterans [Mass.] 72 N. E. 95. Courts will not prescribe rules for the government of state institutions unless those in force are unreasonable or subversive of the purposes for which the institution was established. Doren v. Fleming, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 81.
8. Statutes establishing or abolishing separate courts relate to the administration of justice, and are not either local or cially those of inferior jurisdiction,[9] may be created or abolished [10] by the legislature at will,[11] and legislative power over the districts of constitutional courts is subject to constitutional restraint.[12] Power to provide for the necessary incidents of a court is implied from the power to establish it.[13] Where several counties comprise a judicial circuit, the circuit court of each county is a separate and distinct entity.[14] The legal existence of a court cannot be questioned or tried out in a certiorari proceeding.[15]

§ 2. Officers and instrumentalities of courts.[16]—Judges and other attaches of courts are not public officers for all purposes.[17] An erroneous, as distinguished from a corrupt, decision is not ground for removal.[18] In North Carolina an appointee to fill a vacancy occurring during the time in the office of clerk of the superior court holds only until the next general election, and not for the unexpired term.[19] The salaries of county judges in Kentucky are fixed annually by the fiscal court.[20]

§ 3. Places, terms, and sessions of courts.[21]—Courts must be held at the place or places provided by law.[22]

special in their operation. Waterman v. Hawkins [Ark.] 86 S. W. 844.

9. Drain commissioners' courts in Indiana have limited powers, and only such jurisdiction as is expressly conferred by statute or necessarily implied to enable them to carry out the powers expressly granted. Kemp v. Adams [Ind.] 73 N. E. 590.

10. In California the power conferred upon framers of municipal charters to legislate concerning police courts as to the constitution, regulation, government and jurisdiction of such courts, and with reference to the clerks and attaches thereof is expressed under a constitutional provision of that state. Const. art. 11, § 8 1-2. Prior to the adoption of this amendment that power could only be exercised by the legislature. Elder v. McDougald, 145 Cal. 740, 79 P. 429. In Georgia the general assembly has no power to create a city court and provide for a direct writ of error therefrom to the supreme court in any municipality other than an incorporated city. White v. State, 121 Ga. 592, 49 S. E. 715. A recital in an act establishing a city court that the court is established in a named city when such municipality is in fact not a city is not binding upon the courts. Id. 12. Legislative act creating a judicial district sustained as constitutional. Carter Brick Co. v. Clement [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 434. 17. Judges are not public officers within the provisions of the Pennsylvania constitution (Art. 3, § 13), that no law shall extend the term of a public officer, or change his salary, after his election or appointment. Commonwealth v. Mathues, 210 Pa. 372, 59 A. 961. But assistant district attorneys appointed by a United States district judge are officers of the United States courts for their respective districts. Not subject to punishment for contempt by state court for failure to return records on demand. In re Leaken, 137 F. 680. Stenographers are held to be mere attaches of the court, and not "public officers." Elder v. McDougald, 145 Cal. 740, 79 P. 429; Robertson v. Ellis County [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1097.

18. Under the New York constitution, art. 6, § 217, vesting in the appellate division authority to remove judges of inferior courts, a judicial officer may not be removed merely for making an erroneous decision, but he may be removed for wilfully making a wrong decision, for reckless exercise of judicial functions without regard to the rights of litigants, or for manifesting friendship or favoritism toward one party or his attorney to the prejudice of the other. In re Bolte, 97 App. Div. 551, 90 N. Y. S. 499.

21. See 3 C. L. 971.

22. The purpose of a requirement that courts shall be held at the place provided by law is to give due stability and dignity to the administration of justice, and to protect the interests of litigants. State v. Richards [Iowa] 102 N. W. 439. Where a court was convened in the regular court room and an adjournment taken to another room on another floor of the same building to accommodate a defendant in a weak physical condition, the room being sufficiently large to accommodate the court, its

The terms of court are usually fixed by statute, or under statutory direction,[23] though this is sometimes provided for in the constitution of a state.[24] Two terms of court cannot be held simultaneously,[25] but where the legislature has made provision for calling in a judge from another circuit, there may be a session of the court in two or more counties of the same circuit at one and the same time.[26] Courts of officers, the jury, attorneys, and a number of the general public, the holding of court in such room was not error. Id.

23. See 3 C. L. 971, n. 84. Under a provision in an act establishing a city court that one of its terms shall continue "until" the third Saturday in December excludes that day. Johnson v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 421. South Dakota Laws 1890, p. 174, fixing the regular terms of circuit courts, did not, by implication, repeal Comp. Laws 1887, § 426, authorizing circuit judges to appoint and hold special terms of court. In re Nelson [S. D.] 102 N. W. 885. Under a statute providing for special terms when the public good requires it, a special term may be convened when there are undisposed of matters concerning the whole county, though there are at the same time local matters before the court. Wilmans v. Bordwell [Ark.] 84 S. W. 474. Conviction at a special term sustained. White v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 85 S. W. 753; Jett v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 85 S. W. 1179.

24. Act No. 31, Michigan Pub. Acts 1903, providing for the drawing of a fresh panel of jurors once in each calendar month, does not offend the constitutional provision in that state relative to terms of court. Fornia v. Frazer [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 259, 104 N. W. 147.

25. October and May terms. Smith v. Kirg of Arizona Min. & Mill. Co. [Ariz.] 80 P. 357.

26. State v. Pope [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 633.

NOTE. Simultaneous "courts," "terms" or "sessions" in same district or county: The statutes and constitutions are usually construed as admitting of two or more courts sitting at the same time in the same district in different counties thereof (Harris v. Gest, 4 Ohio St. 469; Batten v. State, 80 Ind. 394; State v. Knight, 19 Iowa, 94, overruing earlier Iowa decisions, infra), provided there are several judges (Carroll v. Com., 84 Pa. 107; Cahill v. People, 106 Ill. 621), or there are competent judges who may legally be called in from other districts (Sippey v. State, 35 Neb. 368, 53 N. W. 208; Munzesheimer v. Fairbanks, 82 Tex. 351, and cases cited, 4 C. L. 282, n. 12).

It may even be allowable to hold in one county more than the usual number of "courts," i. e., terms or sessions. Carroll v. Com., 84 Pa. 107; Cahill v. People, 106 Ill. 621; Wadhams v. Hotchkiss, 80 Ill. 437. Thus in Courtney v. State, 5 Ind. App. 356, 32 N. E. 335, the regular judge having been displaced by a substitute for a particular case convened the regular term in a different room whilst the case in question was being tried, and his action was upheld.

Special terms concurrent with regular terms held elsewhere in the district are generally valid. Munzesheimer v. Fairbanks, 82 Tex. 351, 18 S. W. 697; Lewin v. Dille, 17 Mo. 64; People v. Shea, 147 N. Y. 78; National Bank of Greensboro v. Gilmer, 116 N. C. 684. But a judge cannot set a special term to be held by himself at a time when he will necessarily be engaged in another term. Bedell v. Powell, 3 Code Rep. [N. Y.] 61.

The adjournment of a term to a time within another regular term has been upheld in Indiana (Snurr v. State, 105 Ind. 125, 4 N. E. 445; Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Power, 119 Ind. 269, 21 N. E. 751), and denied in Kansas (Ex parte Millington, 24 Kan. 214). The extension of a term on the other hand cannot be beyond the first of the ensuing term (Blake v. Harlan, 75 Ala. 205; Cheek v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 56 Tenn. [9 Heisk.] 489. In this case consent was curative of the error); but may run into a term for another county (State v. Leahy, 1 Wis. 258; Tippy v. State, 35 Neb. 368; State v. Knight, 19 Iowa, 94; King v. Sears, 91 Ga. 577. Contra, Cooper v. American Central Ins. Co., 3 Colo. 318; Gregg v. Cooke, 7 Tenn. 82). Statutes contradictory in that they authorize two terms at the same time have been construed as enabling the judge to elect in which place he would sit. Brock v. Gale, 14 Fla. 523, 14 Am. Rep. 356; Carland v. Custer Co. Com'rs, 5 Mont. 579, 6 P. 24. But in Arkansas a similar statute was held void. Ex parte Jones, 49 Ark. 110, 4 S. W. 639. Terms are not simultaneous if the later one is held during a time when the former one might have been but was not held, the business thereof having been completed earlier. Swails v. Coverdill, 21 Ind. 271, and see Mendum v. Com., 6 Rand [Va.] 704, where the judge had time within the same day to go from one court to the other.

In Colorado a statute (Mills' Ann. St. §§ 1038, 1039) authorizes the calling of a judge from another district to hold court in a different room when the accumulation of judicial business demands it. It was urged in Bigcraft v. People, 30 Colo. 298, 70 P. 417, that by so doing the power of increasing the number of judges for a particular judicial district was delegated to a judge, also that this statute transcended the constitutional provision (article 6, § 12) that the judges of the district courts "may hold court for each other," in that the constitution authorized substitution but not assistance. Both contentions were overruled, the court characterizing the latter one as a "narrow" construction. See 1 C. L. 825, n. 20.

In Iowa it was held that a judge might continue a term into the time set by law for holding another term in the same district. State v. Knight, 19 Iowa, 94, overruling Davis v. Fish, 1 G. Greene [Iowa] 408, 48 Am. Dec. 387; Grable v. State, 2 G. Greene [Iowa] 559. This accords with the principle stated in the text.

The Kansas courts have held that a special judge cannot sit in one county of a judicial district whilst the regular judge sits record have inherent power to adjourn from time to time.[27] The setting apart of certain terms for the trial of particular kinds of cases is discretionary unless the statute otherwise provides.[28]

§ 4. Conduct and regulation of business.[29]—Subject to statutory restrictions,[30] courts may make reasonable rules governing the procedure before them,[31] and when made, they bind both courts and suitors,[32] and have the force of statutes.[33] The practice and procedure in the city [34] and county courts of Georgia are similar to those in the superior court of that state.[35] Rules of a trial court will not be regarded an appeal unless they are before the court in the particular record involved.[36] The transfer of a case from one department of a court to another is controlled by the rules adopted for the regulation of procedure in the several dein another (In re Millington, 24 Kan. 214); and they base this on the reasoning that the law establishing regular terms in the several counties is a command not only to hold a term at the prescribed place and time but also to hold none elsewhere. The court in State v. Pope, supra, calls attention to the fact that In re Millington was based wholly on the authority of Grable v. State, 2 G. Greene [Iowa] 559, and that case was overruled by State v. Knight, 19 Iowa, 94. The Kansas precedent is therefore greatly weakened.

The proposition stated in the text was substantially laid down in construing the Texas statute in Munzesheimer v. Fairbanks, 82 Tex. 351, 18 S. W. 697. A later line of decisions in that state holds that when a special term is to be held in a county of a judicial district and no regular judge is available from any of the adjoining districts, a special judge may be chosen to hold such special term. See 4 C. L. 282, n. 12, citing cases.

West Virginia also follows the general rule that two terms may concur in time, and in First Nat. Bank v. Parsons, 45 W. Va. 688, 32 S. E. 271, the court says: "Common sense, convenience, dispatch of the public business range themselves on the side of one [the affirmative] construction; mere idle technicality and inconvenience on the other."

27. See 3 C. L. 972, n. 90. The United States district judge in the Indian Territory in case of sickness or for other sufficient reason has under his general authority for fixing the terms of court in his particular district full authority to cause the marshal of his district to open and adjourn any regular term until such reasonable time as to the judge shall seem proper. Gardner v. United States [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 704. Municipal courts in Wisconsin are courts of record and do not lose jurisdiction by failure of the docket to state the place to which an adjournment is taken. Tourville v. Seavey Co. [Wis.] 102 N. W. 352; Snyder v. Malone [Wis.] 102 N. W. 354. A county court does not lose jurisdiction in an action not within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace because at the hour to which such action had been continued the county judge was not present in his office and did not appear for more than one hour thereafter. Bussing v. Taggart [Neb.] 103 N. W. 430. Under the Georgia Code 1895, § 4344, an order of adjournment of a regular term passed by a judge in vacation which fails to show on its face a sufficient cause for adjournment is void. Martin v. Scott, 118 Ga. 149, 44 S. E. 974. Death of prominent member of bar shortly before convening a term of court is not such cause as will authorize the judge in vacation to adjourn the term of the court. Frank & Co. v. Horkan [Ga.] 49 S. E. 800. State [Fla.] 38 So. 514.

partments.[37] Cases relating to effect of failure to comply with particular rules are cited in the note.[38]

Every court has inherent power over its own records,[39] and may amend them so as to make them conform to the truth.[40] To justify an amendment nunc pro tunc there must be something to amend by. Where there is no record or memorandum of any kind to show that a former order existed, a court is without jurisdiction to enter a judgment or order nunc pro tunc as of a prior term.[41] The records of a court of record are not open to attack by oral testimony.[42] But where the record impeaches itself, that is, where it shows on its face that the court had no jurisdiction to make it, or that there was no court in session when the record was made, and it could not be made by the judge in vacation, it should be treated as a nullity.[43] Oral proceedings in a municipal court case are not scrutinized as keenly as proceedings in a court of record.[44] Cases illustrative of matters of practice, both in the Federal [45] and state courts, are gathered in the notes.[46]

37. Finlen v. Heinze [Mont.] 80 P. 918. In the absence of any rules, business having been distributed among various departments by an order of court concurred in by all the judges, such order should be held binding until revoked or modified by the same authority. State v. Donlan [Mont.] 80 P. 244. Where the district court of a given county is divided into three departments and by rule the criminal business is intrusted to one of such departments the supreme court will not issue its writ of supervisory control to compel the hearing of a grand jury indictment by the criminal department of the court. State v. Second Judicial District Court [Mont.] 76 P. 1005. Where, as in Rhode Island, the discretion to set aside a judgment and reinstate a case has been exercised by the division in which the judgment was rendered, such discretion is not subject to review in the other division. 40. The purpose of the minutes is to preserve the judgments and proceedings of the court, and if a judgment has been actually rendered, it is not only the right, but the duty of the judge, during the term and without notice to any one, to see that the minutes represent the proceedings of the court just as they transpired. After the term has adjourned he has authority, after notice to parties interested, to make such order as may be necessary to make the record conform to the truth. Merritt v. State [Ga.] 50 S. E. 925. Amendment by a probate court. Smith v. Whaley [R. I.] 61 A. 173. District courts in Oklahoma have the power, while a case is pending and before final judgment, to correct and amend the record or any order or proceeding had in such case, to conform to the facts by a nunc pro tunc order, and is not confined to any one class of evidence, but may proceed upon satisfactory evidence. Clark v. Bank of Hennessey, 14 Okl. 572, 79 P. 217. Where a certificate of counsel provided by rule of court to the effect that a petition for appointment of viewers is sufficient in form and contents is omitted, the court may permit amendment to record in that respect nunc pro tunc. Dickinson Tp. Road, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 34.

41. Entering decree of naturalization in 1897 as of 1863 entirely upon parol testimony. Gagnon's Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 10. An amendment of a record nunc pro tunc must be based upon some official or quasi-official note or memorandum or memorial paper remaining in the files of the case or upon the records of the court. 44. Cossel v. Altschul, 91 N. Y. S. 1.

45. See 3 C. L. 973, n. 7. Revised St. § 918, authorizing the circuit courts to make rules and orders regulating their practice, should be construed in connection with section 914 (the conformity statute) requiring the practice and proceedings in circuit courts to conform as nearly as may be to the practice in the courts of record of the state, any rule of the court to the contrary notwithstanding. Importers' & Traders' Nat. Bank v. Lyons, 134 F. 510. But the conformity statute does not apply to equity causes, in which the Federal courts are governed by the rules of equity pleading, regardless of local practice (United Cigarette Mach. Co. v. Wright, 132 F. 195), nor does it require Federal judges to conform to state regulations in the submission of cases and the control of the deliberations of juries, such proceedings being governed by the common law. (Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Friedman Co. [C. C. A.] 133 F. 713), neither does it require the Federal court in the district of Connecticut, in an action against a town, to deviate from its long established practice in manner of making service of process (Elson v. Waterford, 135 F. 247), and the

COVENANT, ACTION OF.

At common law an action of covenant could not be maintained unless there existed a privity of contract between the parties.[47] Privity of estate alone would not sustain it.[48] But this rule is changed by a statute which authorizes suit by a party beneficially interested.[49] The action will not lie on the personal covenant of an ancestor in which the heirs are not named and there is no privity of estate between the parties,[50] and equitable considerations are not available in a court of common law as a foundation for the action.[51] The general issue is not a proper plea in the action.[52]

COVENANTS FOR TITLE.

Scope of title.—This topic is designed to treat only the usual covenants contained in deeds of conveyance. Covenants in a lease,[53] restrictive covenants and agreements relative to the use of land,[54] and warranties in the sale of personal property,[55] are elsewhere treated.

act applies only to matters of practice and procedure, and does not appertain to jurisdiction or the mode of obtaining jurisdiction of the person in actions brought in Federal courts (Wells v. Clark, 136 F. 462). Service of monition in admiralty may be made under the provisions of a state statute regulating mode of service in actions at law or suits in equity. Insurance Co. of North America v. Frederick Leyland & Co., 139 F. 67. On the trial of a cause in a circuit court without a jury as provided in Rev. St. §§ 649, 700, the procedure is governed by such statutes; and the court may at its option make either general or special findings. It cannot be required to rule on specific propositions of law presented by the parties in accordance with a state practice. Streeter v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago [C. C. A.] 133 F. 124. Act Cong. March 9, 1892, c. 14, 27 Stat. 7, providing that in addition to the mode of taking depositions in the Federal courts depositions may be taken in the mode prescribed by the laws of the state in which the courts are held merely relates to the manner of taking depositions, and neither enlarges nor restricts the grounds for taking them prescribed by Rev. St. §§ 863, 866. Magone v. Colorado Smelting & Min. Co., 135 F. 846. Practice as to transfer of cases in district court of appeal in California sustained. People v. Davis [Cal.] 81 P. 718.

46. Motions are always addressed to the discretion of the court, and it is therefore entirely within the province of the court to determine in what manner it will satisfy itself of the facts which appeal to its discretion. Importers' & Traders' Nat. Bank v. Lyons, 134 F. 510. It is within the power of the court to listen to the representations and to hear the evidence of those appearing in a cause as amici curiae, claiming that such cause is a collusive proceeding. Sampson v. Commissioners of Highways, 115 Ill. App. 443. Limiting time allowed to counsel for argument of case. Jones v. State [Ga.] 51 S. E. 312. Under Tennessee Code (Shannon, § 6336) the supreme court may in aid of its final process conduct an examination of a garnishee. Wyler, Ackerland & Co. v. Blevins [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 829. A trial judge has authority after the expiration of his term of office, and during the term of court at which trial was had, to make and file conclusions of fact and law. Storrie v. § 1. Making of covenants; persons and estate benefited or bound.[56]—There is no implied warranty of title in a sale of real estate.[57] In some states, by statute, the use in deeds of conveyance of certain forms of expression imports the usual covenants.[58] Covenants are to be reasonably construed.[59] A general warranty of title includes in itself covenants of right to sell and covers defects in the title, though known to the purchaser at the time of taking the deed.[60] A warranty does not include an incumbrance which has been assumed by the grantee in a preceding clause.[61] The statutory warranty attached to the words "grants, bargains and sells" imports a covenant only against incumbrances suffered by the grantor.[62] The covenant of peaceable possession runs with the land,[63] and secures freedom from molestation by the covenantor.[64] Covenants which run with the land are obligatory on the assigns of the covenantor.[65] The covenant of warranty in a void deed does not estop the grantor from asserting title,[66] and a remote grantee is not estopped to sue for breach of covenant because the deed to the covenantor who was a mere conduit of title was void.[67] The holder of the mere legal title who conveys to the beneficial owner is not liable on the covenant against incumbrances.[68]

58. Under Conveyance Act, § 11 (1 Starr. & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 924, c. 30), the use of "warrant" in a deed is to be construed as meaning all the usual covenants. King v. King, 215 Ill. 100, 74 N. E. 89. Under Code 1892, §§ 2479, 2480, declaring that the word "warrant" shall constitute a covenant that the grantor will forever warrant and defend the title, it constitutes a warranty of possession as well. Allen v. Caffee [Miss.] 38 So. 186. Under Sayle's Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 633, in a conveyance of a fee, there is an implied covenant against incumbrances. Bullitt v. Coryell [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 482. Under Ball. Ann. Codes & St., § 4520, a bargain and sale deed, reciting "bargain, sell and convey" is construed to contain a covenant that the grantor had the fee. Blood v. Sielert [Wash.] 80 P. 799. Under Kirby's Dig., § 731, the words "grant, bargain and sell" in a deed amount to a covenant that the grantor is seised of a fee, free from incumbrances suffered by him. Seldon v. Dudley E. Jones Co. [Ark.] 85 S. W. 778.

59. An exception of taxes in the covenant against incumbrances is not abrogated by a subsequent recital "against lawful claims of all persons whatsoever, taxes." Newburn v. Lucas [Iowa] 101 N. W. 730.

64. Under Real Property Law (Laws 1901, p. 594, c. 547), § 218, a covenant for quiet enjoyment should be construed as fully written out and as constituting a prospective agreement against molestation by the grantor. Cassada v. Stabel, 98 App. Div. 600, 90 N. Y. S. 533.

65. A covenant need not contain the words "assign or assigns" in order to make it obligatory of the heirs or administrator of the covenantor. Broadwell v. Banks, 134 F. 470. A devisee of land, subject to a perpetual lease is assignee in respect to a covenant to pay rent, and under the Ohio Code Civ. Proc. may sue the lessee for breach of such covenant. Id.

Note: If a covenant capable of running with the land relates to a thing in esse, the assigns of the covenantor are bound, though he has not named his heirs and assigns and has not covenanted on their part (Winfield v. Henning, 21 N. J. Eq. 188; Hartung v. Witti, 59 Wis. 285, 18 N. W. 175; Dinman v. Prince, 40 Barb. [N. Y.] 213; Kellog v. Robinson, 6 Vt. 276, 27 Am. Dec. 550); but a covenant which relates to a thing not in esse, but to be done upon the land, and therefore running with it, does not bind heirs and assigns unless they are named therein (Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 72 Tex. 122, 9 S. W. 865; Hansen v. Meyer, 81 Ill. 321, 25 Am. Rep. 282; Lynn v. Mount Savage, etc., R. Co., 34 Md. 603; Conover v. Smith, 17 N. J. Eq. 51), and a covenant in which the assignee is not specifically named, though it is for a thing not in esse at the time, will bind him if it affects the nature, quality or value of the thing demised, independently of collateral circumstances, or if it affects the mode of enjoying it. Mayor, etc., v. Pattison, 10 East. 130.—From note to Gusyler v. De Graaf [N. Y.] 82 Am. St. Rep. 667.

67. Void because executed by a married woman in payment of her husband's debts. Allen v. Taylor, 121 Ga. 841, 49 S. E. 799.

68. An incumbrance assumed by the beneficial owner in the transaction by which he acquired the beneficial ownership. Deaver v. Deaver [N. C.] 49 S. E. 113. In an action for breach of such covenant, the statute of frauds does not preclude the investigation of the parol trust by which the legal title was held. Id.

§ 2. Performance or breach.[69] Against incumbrances.[70]—An incumbrance is any interest which may subsist in a third person to the diminution of the value of the land but consistent with the passing of the fee,[71] e. g., an outstanding lease for a term of years,[72] an outstanding dower interest,[73] whether inchoate or consummate,[74] or taxes for which the covenantor is liable;[75] but not those for which he is not liable.[76] The covenant to keep down incumbrances or pay taxes is broken by nonperformance, though the convenantee be not called on to pay.[77] Eviction is not essential to the maintenance of an action for breach of covenant against incumbrances if the land is wild.[78]

The covenants of seizin and right to convey are broken, if at all, when made,[79] and eviction or interference with possession is not necessary;[80] but such breach is a technical one only and the covenantor cannot be compelled to respond in damages until positive injury is suffered by virtue of a paramount title.[81]

The covenant of warranty [82] is not broken unless there is an eviction by virtue of a paramount title,[83] and though the covenant is not one against incumbrances, an incumbrance which eventuates in an eviction works a breach of it.[84]

The covenant for quiet enjoyment [85] is broken by an eviction,[86] but not by a trespass.[87] Literal and actual dispossession is not necessary to constitute an eviction,[88] but the mere assertion of a claim of dower in wild lands is insufficient.[89] Eviction is not essential where the paramount title is in the state.[90] The covenant

Due taxes. Bullitt v. Coryell [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 482. In Wisconsin taxes for 1893 assessed, levied and warranted to the collector, become an incumbrance prior to February 14, 1894. Patterson v. Cappon [Wis.] 102 N. W. 1083.

76. A tax lien suffered by a mortgagee, not required by the terms of the mortgage to pay taxes, is not a breach of his covenant against incumbrances. Hood v. Clark [Ala.] 37 So. 550.

77. It is not one of indemnity and suit will lie at once. Broadwell v. Banks, 134 F. 470. If a covenantor fails to pay current taxes on the date they are due as obligated by his warranty, the covenantee may immediately on default pay the same and recover from him. Swinney v. 84. Cain v. Fisher [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 752. A sale of land for nonpayment of taxes charged against it prior to the execution of the deed is a breach of the covenant of warranty. Id. 88. Where, after the showing of a paramount title, the covenantee purchases the same, it amounts to a breach of the covenant without an eviction by judgment at law. Morrow v. Baird [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 1079. A judgment establishing a paramount title is equivalent to an eviction. A satisfaction of such judgment perfects a cause of action on the covenant of warranty. McCrillis v. Thomas [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 673.

for quiet enjoyment precludes entry by the grantor,[91] and a breach of it by him is a defense against an action to foreclose the purchase-money mortgage,[92] and entitles the grantee to recover on his counterclaim the amount paid by him under the contract.[93] Danger of eviction justifies suspension of payment of the purchase price only until the seller has furnished bond,[94] and payment cannot be suspended because of a danger of eviction of which he was informed at the time of purchase.[95]

§ 3. Enforcement of covenants.[96]—An action for breach of covenant of title accrues at the time of eviction.[97] An action for breach of the covenant of seisin or right to convey is not one for the recovery of real property or an estate or interest therein or for injury thereto.[98] The question of title may be involved where breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment consists of an eviction under a paramount title.[99]

The covenants in a purchase-money mortgage deed will not estop the mortgagor, where the deed and mortgage are parts of the same transaction, from suing on the covenants in the deed.[1] And since the covenants of seisin in the two instruments are distinct, a breach of the one in the mortgage is not available by way of rebutter in an action for breach of the one in the deed.[2] A claim for money paid to satisfy an incumbrance may be set off in an action for the purchase price.[3] A covenantee who has not sustained loss because of breach of covenant against incumbrances can recover only nominal damages,[4] and his assignee acquires no greater rights,[5] and even if the covenant runs with the land, a remote grantee from whose deed an incumbrance is excepted cannot recover from the covenantor;[6] but an intermediate grantor who is held liable on his covenant of warranty by his vendee may recover reimbursement from his grantor on the similar covenant in his deed,[7] providing he has satisfied the claim of his grantee.[8]

91. The taking of possession by the grantor because of failure to pay interest on deferred payments is a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment. Cassada v. Stabel, 98 App. Div. 600, 90 N. Y. S. 533.

A grantee in a warranty deed who retains a portion of the purchase price as security against a lien claimed in a pending suit and who purchases the land under execution of judgment rendered therein may in an action for the balance of the purchase price counterclaim for the damages for breach of covenant, though the judgment enforcing the lien is reversed. 7. Morrow v. Baird [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 1079.

8. Complaint held to sufficiently allege that he had paid such claim. Morrow v. Baird [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 1079.

A complaint for breach of covenant of warranty need not allege eviction,[9] and one for breach of covenant of seisin need not aver eviction or special damage.[10] That an absolute deed outstanding is a mortgage,[11] or that an outstanding interest had been cut off by discharge in bankruptcy,[12] must be specially pleaded.

The amount of damage sustained must be proved.[13] An assignee of a cause of action must prove the assignment if denied.[14]

A covenant cannot be contradicted by parol evidence,[15] and notice in the covenantee at the time of execution of the deed of an outstanding paramount title,[16] or incumbrance[17] is not a defense. Failure of a grantee to prevent a sale by payment of taxes or redemption from delinquency neither bars his action on the covenant of warranty nor mitigates damages.[18]

Damages for breach.[19]—The measure of damages for breach of a covenant of warranty is the difference in value between the property as it was covenanted to be and its actual condition.[20] If title fails as to a portion of the land, the value of such portion is the measure.[21] A covenantor who has notice of the action in which his covenantee is evicted by virtue of a paramount title is liable for attorney's fees and costs therein[22] if properly pleaded;[23] but not for the expense of defending an unsuccessful attack in an improper proceeding.[24] In Texas, attorney's fees expended in defense of title cannot be recovered.[25] If no consideration was paid for the land, there can be no recovery;[26] but money paid out in defense of title may be

CREDITORS' SUIT.

§ 1. Nature and grounds of remedy.[32]—The purpose of a creditors' suit is to reach legal or equitable assets of a debtor not reachable by ordinary legal remedies.[33] A creditors' bill cannot ordinarily be maintained until a judgment at law has been obtained and execution thereon has issued and been returned unsatisfied.[34] But where the circumstances are such that it is impossible for the creditor to take these preliminary steps, equity will grant relief without them.[35] If it appears that exe-

29. A covenantor is liable for penalties and costs accruing on unpaid taxes which constitute a breach of his covenant against incumbrances. Carswell & Co. v. Habberzettle [Tex.] 86 S. W. 738; Id. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 911.

NOTE. Creditors' suits against corporations: Independently of any statutory provision, a creditor of a corporation may maintain a creditors' bill in equity against it and other necessary or proper parties to obtain satisfaction of his debt, when he has exhausted his legal remedies, or when the circumstances are such that he has no legal remedy. The principles governing such a suit are the same, of course, as where suit is brought against a natural person. In accordance with those principles, when a creditor of a corporation has recovered a judgment against it, and an execution has been returned unsatisfied, or, under some circumstances, before the recovery of judgment, or without the issue and return of an execution, he may maintain a creditors' bill to reach equitable assets of the corporation, and have them applied to the satisfaction of his claim.

Such a bill may be maintained by a creditor, for example, to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, transfer or mortgage by the corporation, and to subject the property to the payment of its debts, or to hold the grantees or transferees liable for the value of the property; or to enforce claims in favor of the corporation against the directors or other officers for diversion of assets, mismanagement, or negligence; or to reach or hold stockholders liable for assets withdrawn by them, or distributed among them, in fraud of the rights of creditors; or to enforce a liability of stockholders for a balance due on their stock; or, under some statutes, to enforce the statutory liability of stockholders to creditors. After a corporation has been dissolved, creditors may maintain a bill in equity to subject its assets to the payment of their claims.

In many states, as in New York, special remedies are provided by statute for creditors of corporations unable to collect their demands by ordinary legal remedies.—See Clark & Marshall, Priv. Corp., § 775.

33. The essential purpose of a creditors' bill, as maintainable under the Georgia statute, is to administer, through the extraordinary powers of a court of equity, the assets of an insolvent debtor. Brannan v. Baxter & Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 45.

34. Suit to set aside one transfer and enjoin another, by holder of note, who had taken no legal steps to enforce or secure payment of note, held not maintainable. Matarese v. Caldarone [R. I.] 58 A. 976.

35. As where personal service of summons could not be made, debtor being in a foreign country, and service by publication would not enable plaintiffs to get a money judgment, there being no attachable property in the state. Bateman v. Hunt, 94 N. Y. S. 861.

NOTE. Nonresidence, insolvency or death of debtor as excuse for failure to exhaust cution has been returned unsatisfied, the complaint need not allege that the judgment debtor is insolvent.[36] A general creditor cannot maintain a bill in equity to enforce a claim against a going concern unless he has first obtained a lien upon the property, except where otherwise provided by statute.[37] But a creditor who has filed a transcript of his judgment in the county where realty is situated, thus acquiring a lien, need not exhaust legal remedies before proceeding in equity.[38] Under modern uniform procedure statutes, creditors may in one suit proceed for judgment on their debts and to set aside fraudulent conveyances made by their common debtor.[39] But the existence of an adequate remedy at law will bar equitable relief.[40] After a trustee in bankruptcy has been appointed, only such trustee can sue to set aside a fraudulent transfer by the bankrupt,[41] and a creditor's bill by a creditor after the debtor has been adjudicated a bankrupt does not give such creditor a lien on the property sought to be reached.[42]

General creditors' suits.[43]—Whether suit be instituted by a plaintiff in his own name only or for himself and other creditors, the suit becomes, after a reference is made to convene creditors, a general creditors' suit;[44] and in Georgia, by virtue of statute, a creditors' suit is one for all the creditors ab initio, regardless of the number of plaintiffs.[45] After issuance of summons, which begins the suit,[46] a single legal remedies: By weight of authority, where it is impossible to secure personal judgment against a debtor, by reason of nonresidence, or of the fact that he has absconded, there being no adequate remedy provided by statute whereby his property can be reached, a creditors' bill will lie in the first instance, if the debtor have property reachable thereby. Pope v. Solomons, 36 Ga. 541; Corn Exch. Bank v. Applegate, 91 Iowa, 411; Earle v. Circuit Judge, 92 Mich. 285; Overmire v. Haworth, 48 Minn. 372, 31 Am. St. Rep. 660; Pendleton v. Perkins, 49 Mo. 565; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Paine, 13 R. I. 592. In Illinois, property of the nonresident in the state must be attached and a lien thereon thus created. Ladd v. Judson, 174 Ill. 344, 66 Am. St. Rep. 268; Dewey v. Eckert, 62 Ill. 218. In Alabama, a creditor's bill cannot be maintained on the ground that the debtor resides in another state. Smith v. Moore, 35 Ala. 76.

The insolvency of a judgment debtor, by the preponderance of authority, renders issuance of execution and a return thereof unnecessary as a condition precedent to the filing of a creditors' bill. The Halladay Case, 27 F. 830; Thurmond v. Reese, 3 Ga. 449, 46 Am. Dec. 440; O'Brien v. Stambach, 101 Iowa, 40, 63 Am. St. Rep. 368; Bomberger v. Turner, 13 Ohio St. 263, 82 Am. Dec. 438; Whitehouse v. Point Defiance, etc., R. Co., 9 Wash. 558; Case v. Beauregard, 101 U. S. 688, 25 Law. Ed. 1004. The contrary is held in New York. Beardsley Scythe Co. v. Foster, 36 N. Y. 561; Adsit v. Butler, 87 N. Y. 585; McElwain v. Willis, 9 Wend. [N. Y.] 548. As to whether or not insolvency renders reduction of the claim to judgment necessary as a preliminary, the authorities are in conflict. That such reduction to judgment is necessary: Austin v. Bruner, 169 Ill. 178; Clark v. Raymond, 84 Iowa, 251; Adee v. Bigler, 81 N. Y. 349; Ginn v. Brown, 14 R. I. 524; McKeldin v. Gouldy, 91 Tenn. 677. That insolvency renders obtaining of judgment unnecessary: Austin v. Nichols, 23 S. C. 393; Alabama Iron, etc., Co. v. McKeever, 112 Ala. 134; Albany, etc., Iron Co. v. Ga. Agri, Works, 76 Ga. 169; Earle v. Grove, 92 Mich. 285.

It is held by a majority of courts that the death of the debtor enables the creditor to proceed in equity without exhausting legal remedies. Kennedy v. Creswell, 101 U. S. 641, 25 Law. Ed. 1075; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. McGee, 108 Ala. 304; Barber v. Peary, 31 Ark. 392; Bay v. Cook, 31 Ill. 336; Grosvenor v. Austin, 6 Ohio, 108, 25 Am. Dec. 743. For contrary doctrine, see Lichtenberg v. Herdtfelder, 67 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 196; Adsit v. Butler, 87 N. Y. 585; Estes v. Wilcox, 67 N. Y. 264.—For discussion of creditors' bills in general, see note to Ladd v. Judson [174 Ill. 344] in 66 Am. St. Rep. 271.

plaintiff cannot dismiss except as to himself.[47] If he dismisses at rules, other creditors may have the case reinstated at the next term, though the summons has not been issued or the bill filed.[48] Failure of a judgment creditor to present and prove his lien in a creditors' suit against certain lands of the debtor does not bar him from participating in a second suit in which other lands are subjected to the satisfaction of debts.[49]

Intervention.—Owing to the peculiar nature of a creditors' suit, a petition to intervene may be filed without a previous order of the court, and when filed becomes a part of the pleadings and the record.[50] Where the allegations of the bill do not entitle plaintiffs to the extraordinary relief sought, other creditors cannot intervene and obtain judgment against the common debtor.[51] One who has parted with all his interest in the litigation cannot intervene.[52] A creditors' suit in a Federal court for the administration of assets of an insolvent corporation is constructive notice of lis pendens as to all property of the corporation in the district and division,[53] and one who becomes a creditor, taking a mortgage on corporation property, pending such suit, though he may intervene in the suit, his legal remedy in the state court having been enjoined, may share only in such assets as remain after claims existing at the time of filing the bill have been paid.[54] Where a receiver of a corporation has been appointed in a creditors' suit, one creditor cannot maintain a bill in intervention to subject the claim of another creditor to the satisfaction of a contract debt owing by such creditor to the intervener.[55]

Limitations.—In Virginia a suit may be brought in equity to enforce a judgment lien so long as the right to issue execution or bring scire facias or action thereon exists.[56] The limitation statute governing actions for the recovery of land does not apply to suits to enforce judgment liens.[57] A suit based on a fraudulent assignment must, in Nebraska, be brought within four years of the discovery of the fraud, or such facts and circumstances as would indicate fraud if investigated.[58]

The decree.—The court may award a personal judgment in lieu of setting aside a transfer where the facts establish such personal liability.[59] In a suit to set aside transfers of personalty, it is not necessary to set aside all transfers found to be fraudulent, where only one creditor is seeking relief; the setting aside of one transaction to satisfy his claim is proper.[60] Where, in a suit to set aside a transfer, no accounting is necessary, a money judgment is proper.[61]

cution, which with such aid the debtor himself may reach.[64] Thus property to which the debtor has the equitable and beneficial title may be reached.[65] A wife's inchoate right of dower cannot be reached.[66] Since, under a policy of indemnity insuring an employer against loss or damage by reason of liability for injuries to servants, the amount of the insurance does not become available until the employer has given proper notice of an injury and paid the loss, the injured employe who has obtained a judgment against his employer cannot, before such notice and payment by the employer, subject such amount to payment of his judgment in a suit against the insurer.[67] Statutes providing for suits in equity to reach property of a debtor do not apply to property which can be attached at law.[68]

§ 3. Pleading and procedure.[69]—An assignment of a chose in action is not presumed fraudulent as to a subsequent creditor, and a pleading must set out circumstances from which fraud may be reasonably inferred.[70] Where a creditors' bill brought by a surety of a debtor who had paid the debt alleges facts entitling plaintiff to be subrogated, under the prayer for general relief, to the rights of the judgment creditor, the bill is not demurrable because not asking for this relief specifically.[71] In a suit between heirs for partition, a cross-bill seeking sale of another parcel of land to satisfy debts of the owner raises issues not germane to the original bill and cannot be maintained.[72] An answer setting up the fact that supplementary proceedings had been instituted, and setting out the report, order and decree in such proceedings, but which fails to show a sale or satisfaction of the debt with the proceeds, may be stricken.[73] In a suit by a judgment creditor against a debtor and a lien creditor of the debtor to subject incumbered property to the payment of a judgment held by the plaintiff, the debtor is a necessary party.[74] A prayer for relief against the lien creditor, he being a nonresident, incidental to the main purpose of the suit, does not make a separable controversy between plaintiff and such lien creditor, so as to make the proceeding removable from the state to the Federal court.[75]

§ 1. Elements of crime.[78]—A crime is any violation of law which the state assumes to punish in its sovereign capacity through judicial proceedings;[79] a public, as distinguished from a mere private wrong.[80] Uniformity is not necessary to the criminal laws enforceable in the various courts established by the authority of the United States.[81]

Sources of the criminal law.[82]—The common law of crimes has been pretty generally abolished in this country.[83] That a penal statute in force for over 40 years has not been applied in a particular manner does not preclude its proper enforcement.[84] Municipalities may be authorized to punish petty offenses.[85] The statute forbidding peonage in any state or territory of the United States was authorized by the 13th amendment.[86] Estoppels are to a limited extent applied in criminal cases.[87]

79. See Clark & M. Crimes, § 1. The word "crime" as used in the Federal and Kentucky constitutions includes all offenses in violation of the penal laws. Stone v. Paducah [Ky.] 86 S. W. 531. To constitute an offense under the statutes of Iowa, it is necessary that the act be one which falls within the definition of either a felony or a misdemeanor. Code, §§ 5093, 5094. State v. Dailey [Iowa] 103 N. W. 1008.

80. Clark & M. Crimes, § 2. A state cannot under the guise of a statute creating a criminal offense imprison one who has failed to pay a debt. (Lamar v. Prosser, 121 Ga. 153, 48 S. E. 977), but if a fraud is perpetuated, the state may denounce such fraud as a crime and imprison the offender (Id.). No criminal action can he predicated upon a violation of a stock law which provides a civil remedy against all violators. Acts 1903, p. 1342, c. 499. Murphy v. State [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 711.

83. There are no common-law offenses against the United States (Tyner v. United States, 23 App. D. C. 324), but all crimes and criminal procedure known to the common law are still in force in the District of Columbia except as otherwise provided by statute (Hill v. United States, 22 App. D. C. 395).

85. Whatever the legislature may punish as a misdemeanor, it may authorize a municipal corporation to punish as a misdemeanor. Denninger v. Recorder's Court of Pomona, 145 Cal. 629, 79 P. 360. Where an act is an offense both against the state and against the municipal government, the latter may be constitutionally authorized to punish it, although it be also an offense against the state (Bowles v. District of Columbia, 22 App. D. C. 321), and the state constitution declares that the legislature shall pass laws for the suppression of the vice [Act No. 136, p. 224 of 1898] (Town of Ruston v. Perkins [La.] 38 So. 583). Authority to enact ordinances punishing cruelty to animals may be conferred on municipal corporations in general terms (Porter v. Vinzant [Fla.] 38 So. 607), but in the absence of express legislative authority, a municipal court has no power to impose a fine for violation of an ordinance and enforce its collection by labor upon the public streets (Williams v. Sewell, 121 Ga. 579, 49 S. E. 732).

87. NOTE. Shall the doctrine of estoppel in pais apply in criminal law? In a recent case in Montana the defendant objected that the indictment under which he was arraigned had not been found by a grand jury legally constituted, since by the misfeasance of the defendant as county commissioner, the jury roll from which the grand jury had been drawn was wholly irregular. The court held that the defendant was estopped to deny the validity of the list and so set up his own wrongdoing as a defense. State v. Second Judicial Dist. Court [Mont.] 78 P. 769. The doctrine of estoppel in pais is equitable in its origin, though for a long time it has been as fully available in law as in equity. Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Exch. 653. An estoppel is defined as an agency of the law by which evidence to controvert the truth of certain admissions is excluded. Biglow, Estoppel, lix. It is therefore a branch of the law of evidence, and there would appear to be no inherent difficulty in its application to the criminal law. Estoppel in pais is to be distinguished at the outset from that estoppel most familiar to the criminal law, and which arises from the nature of an act committed, as where the act is of such a nature that the defendant is estopped to deny the intent to commit it. In such cases the presumption of an intent is so strong as to become in law conclusive. Such estoppel is therefore only that which denies the right to rebut a conclusive presumption. In some jurisdictions, however, an estoppel is allowed to be found in two classes of cases where no conclusive presumptions arise from the acts themselves. One is where, on an indictment for embezzlement of the property of his principal, the agent is estopped to Criminal intent.[88]—The necessity of criminal intent is ordinarily maintained in statutory as well as common-law offenses;[89] but the legislature may dispense with it,[90] and inasmuch as every sane person is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts,[91] when an act forbidden by law is intentionally done, the intent to do the act is the criminal intent which imparts to it the character of an offense.[92] deny the agency he assumed and under color of which he received the property. Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 109. The second, where one is estopped to deny the validity of a signature which he did not at once repudiate, when the signer of his name is on trial for the forgery. Reg. v. Smith, 3 Fost. & F. 504. The admissions, however, forming the ground for estoppel in pais, are only available to the party to whom they were made and who must be a party to the action. It is the fact of an otherwise possible prejudice to the other party which makes the admissions conclusive as to their truth. In both the classes of cases above the state was a party to the action, but in neither had the representations been made to it. An attempt has been made to justify the first class on the broad ground that one should not be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong (2 Bishop Crim. Law § 364), but the difficulty seems to be insuperable that, save for this technicality, the crime charged had not been committed; and the justification attempted is contrary to the principle, that, in criminal actions, the right of the state is to be strictly confined; and, to the tendency of the law to enlarge, in criminal actions, the rights of the defendant. In the principal case, however, there would seem to have existed no objection to an application of the doctrine. The representations of the defendant had been made directly to the state, and the state had acted on them to its disadvantage, to allow the defendant to deny the truth of his representations would have prejudiced the interest of a party to the action, and as against him therefore their truth should have been conclusive.—5 Columbia L. R. 318. There are several other cases holding that one who collects money for another on an assumption of being an officer, agent or employe of that other, cannot, on being prosecuted for its embezzlement, deny his agency. These cases do not all use the expression "estopped to deny his agency," but they are all clearly referable to the principle. See State v. Spaulding, 24 Kan. 1 (leading case); People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 235 (same); Ex parte Record, 11 Nev. 287; People v. Carter, 122 Mich. 668 (embezzlement from corporation de facto); People v. Sanders [Mich.] 102 N. W. 959 (deputy county treasurer de facto cannot on prosecution for embezzlement raise question of treasurer's authority to appoint a deputy); Bartley v. State, 53 Neb. 310 (conflicts with); Moore v. State, 53 Neb. 831; People v. Hawkins, 106 Mich. 477 (agent of foreign corporation not authorized to do business in state); State v. Pohlmeyer, 59 Ohio 491, citing cases; State v. Findley, 101 Mo. 223 (officer de facto cannot object that he was not an officer de jure); Fortenberry v. State, 56 Miss. 286 (same); People v. Cobler, 108 Cal. 538 (same); People v. Royce, 106 Cal. 187 (one who receives a draft and cashes it is estopped to deny that it was a valid draft); People v. Galagher, 100 Cal. 471 (if an agent obtains the money of his principal in the capacity of agent in a manner not authorized, it is received "in the course of his employment.") There are English cases supporting the theory of estoppel. Reg. v. Orman, 36 Eng. Law & Eq. 611; Rex v. Barrett, 6 Car. & P. 124; Rex v. Rees, 6 Car. & P. 606; Rex v. Beacall, 1 Car. & P. 454, 457. Closely allied is the case of the larceny or embezzlement of property kept and used in violation of law. Com. v. Cooper, 130 Mass. 285; Com. v. Smith, 129 Mass. 104, and the cases holding that perjury may be committed before a de facto judge. 1 Bishop, § 464 (6). State v. Williams, 61 Kan. 739; Izer v. State, 77 Md. 110; Greene v. People, 182 Ill. 278. There is a case that holds that where a bailee sells the property to a stranger, it is not larceny for him to steal it from the purchaser for the purpose of restoring it to the owner. Gooch v. State, 60 Ark. 5. In State v. Knowles [Mo. Sup.] 83 S. W. 1083, a prosecution for embezzlement, it was said that an officer of a benevolent society is estopped to question regulations under which he has received the money of the society. On principle it would seem that where an act depends for its criminality on the existence of a property right, that right may be established or proved in any manner recognized by the law applicable to civil cases, by an estoppel in pais as well as in any other manner.

"Willful" has been held to imply an evil intent without justifiable excuse. People v. Jewell [Mich.] 101 N. W. 835.

92. State v. Lentz, 184 Mo. 223, 83 S. W. 970. Malice is an inference of fact and not of law (Andrews v. People [Colo.] 79 P. 1031), which may be drawn from the character of the assault, the want or use of a deadly weapon, and the presence or absence of excusing or palliating facts or circumstances (Brown v. State [Ala.] 38 So. 268). The buying or receiving of property, knowing it to have been stolen, necessarily implies a felonious intent. State v. Levich [Iowa] 104 N. W. 334. Statutes may provide that the means or instrument by which a homicide is committed shall be consid-

Attempts.[93]—To constitute an attempt there must be something more than mere intention or preparation,[94] but where the proofs conclusively showed the completion of a statutory offense, an instruction that the defendant could be found guilty of an attempt is not prejudicial.[95] It was an offense at common law to incite or solicit another to commit a misdemeanor;[96] but the solicitation of a bribe is not an attempt to accept or receive a bribe within the Kansas statutes.[97]

Felonies and misdemeanors.[98]—The measure of punishment and consequences growing out of the conviction and sentence must be looked to in determining the grade of a crime.[99] A felony is an offense for the conviction of which one is liable to be punished with death or imprisonment in the penitentiary,[1] while misdemeanors include only those crimes punishable by a fine or imprisonment in the county jail or both.[2] To solicit the commission of a felony was a misdemeanor at common law.[3] At common law one attainted of felony was liable to civil suits.[4]

§ 2. Defenses.[5]—An overpowering necessity may be a defense to a prosecution for a crime,[6] and acts apparently necessary for the defense of one's self, property, or another are justifiable.[7] A mistake of law, though based on an unconstitutional statute, is no defense.[8] Consent of the person injured is immaterial,[9] except as to those crimes which involve a want of consent,[10] and neither condonation by the person injured,[11] nor repentance by the accused,[12] is of defensive effect; nor is it a defense that the person defrauded might by diligence have prevented the commission of the offense.[13] It is no defense to a crime involving acts in official capacity that defendant's authority in respect to such acts was improperly delegated to him by the officer charged by law with their performance.[14]

§ 3. Capacity to commit crime.[15]—The weight of authority makes knowledge of right and wrong as to the particular act the test of responsibility,[16] and rejects the theory of "irresistible impulse;"[17] but statutes may prescribe the circumstances under which mental weakness will excuse.[18] The presumptions favor sanity.[19]

Drunkenness is no defense except where a specific intent must be proved, and the drunkenness is sufficient to overcome the accused's capacity to form an intent.[20]

pleaded, and the jury has been impaneled and sworn, he is in jeopardy.[36] If the prosecution has proceeded so far as to place the accused in peril of conviction or punishment, there is jeopardy.[37] Jeopardy does not arise where a prosecution is dismissed without trial on defendant's own motion,[38] or the previous conviction is set aside on motion for new trial or in arrest of judgment on motion of the accused,[39] or a mistrial results from moral or physical necessity,[40] or a collusive conviction is procured at defendant's instance;[41] or one guily of a felony is convicted of a misdemeanor;[42] but the discharge of a jury for an erroneously declared mistrial,[43] or for inability to agree, not in accordance with the statute, is a good basis for the plea.[44] One again convicted before the expiration of his "good time" earned in prison is not placed in double jeopardy by being required to serve the balance of his first sentence in addition to the second.[45] Identity of offenses is necessary to sustain the plea,[46] and it is not enough that both arose out of the same occurrence and state of facts.[47] An action for violating an ordinance on fire limits is quasi Indictment charging defendant with having sold, as a merchant, intoxicating liquors in less quantities than five gallons, and in a second count with having violated the dramshop act, acquittal on the second count does not operate as an acquittal on the first. State v. Wills, 106 Mo. App. 196, 80 S. W. 311. A conviction under the Kentucky statute for retailing oil from a wagon without a license is a bar to another prosecution for retailing from it during the same license year. St. 1903, § 4224. Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co. [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1090. Where the offense as alleged is barred by prescription and the accused is therefore discharged, he cannot thereafter for the purpose of a plea of autre fois convict, identify the offense as being the same as that charged by information subsequently filed, to have been committed at a later date not so barred. State v. Foley [La.] 38 So. 402. The general rule is that an acquittal or conviction of a crime is no bar to a subsequent indictment for the same offense or the same species of offense, where the latter is alleged to have been committed at a different date from that previously tried, unless the offense is continuous. Id. A plea of former conviction is proper where the accusation upon which conviction was had was general in its terms and filed subsequent to the accusation upon which the defendant was last arraigned. McCoy v. State, 121 Ga. 359, 49 S. E. 294.

47. Huffman v. State, 84 Miss. 479, 36 So. 395. An acquittal on a charge of larceny is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses based criminal and a plea of former acquittal is to be determined by the rule applicable to criminal cases and not by the doctrine of res judicata of civil cases.[48] An acquittal in a criminal prosecution is no bar to a subsequent civil action to recover a penalty for the alleged violation of the ordinance.[49] The immunity from second jeopardy is personal and may be waived.[50] Ordinarily former jeopardy must be pleaded before plea to the merits,[51] whereupon accused has the burden of proof,[52] but if on the second trial the record discloses all the facts, they need not be pleaded anew or proved aliunde.[53]

§ 6. Punishment of crime.[54]—The provisions of the statute prescribing the penalty are exclusive,[55] but if a specific punishment is not provided for a misdemeanor, it is uniformly understood to be that annexed to common-law misdemeanor, viz: fine and imprisonment.[56] Upon the reversal of judgment the accused may by statute be subjected to a resentence.[57] Where one has been sentenced to hard labor for the county, an unreasonable detention thereafter in the county jail or elsewhere by the sheriff entitles the prisoner to his discharge on habeas corpus.[58] The constitutionality of several statutes authorizing punishment is considered in the note.[59]

Extent of punishment.[60]—The accused has a right to be sentenced under the law in existence at the time of his criminal act.[61] Excessive punishments cannot be on the same facts. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1898, 1927. State v. Anderson, 186 Mo. 25, 84 S. W. 946. Young [N. C.] 50 S. E. 213). A statute requiring persons committed for default of surety to keep the peace, to labor to defray the reasonable cost of their board, is a violation of the Federal and Kentucky constitutions prohibiting involuntary servitude except as a punishment for crime. Stone v. Paducah [Ky.] 86 S. W. 531. The North Carolina statute providing for the commitment to the hospital for the insane, of any person acquitted of murder on the ground of insanity, to there remain until released by the general assembly, is unconstitutional (In re Boyett, 136 N. C. 415, 48 S. E. 789); but the Washington statute providing for the commitment of such a person until the further order of the court is valid, and such a sentence is not void for uncertainty [Ball. The privilege of earning a commutation of sentence under a statute allowing for "good time" is a substantial right of which a convict cannot be deprived (People v. Deyo [N. Y.] 74 N. inflicted,[62] but no sentence is legally excessive which is not greater than the maximum fixed by law,[63] though the reviewing court considers it unnecessarily severe.[64] That a sentence is excessive is not a proper ground of a motion for new trial.[65] In some states the court is empowered to modify excessive sentences.[66] Cases involving indeterminate sentences,[67] and the right to commutation for good behavior,[68] are collected in the note. Attainder and corruption of blood are abolished by state and Federal constitutions.[69]

Place of imprisonment.[70]—A change in the place of confinement, except in the case of persons sentenced to death,[71] may render a statute ex post facto. A sentence to a prison other than that designated by the statute is void.[72]

550, 90 N. Y. Tyree [Kan.] 78 P. 525). A statute allowing commutation for good behavior of those confined on definite sentence does not apply to a convict sentenced to serve not less than one year nor more than one year and nine months for an offense committed prior to the passage of the statute. Laws 1903, p. 315, c. 137. People v. Johnson, 44 Misc. 550, 90 N. Y. S. 134. A sentence to imprisonment for a minimum and maximum of five years, imposed after the taking effect of an indeterminate sentence law, for a crime committed before that time, is valid and does not deprive the prisoner of his rights to parole or good time allowances. 66. Rev. Codes 1899, § 8350. State v. Wisnewski [N. D.] 102 N. W. 883. A sentence of five years for the larceny of property valued at $40 is excessive and unjust. Junod v. State [Neb.] 102 N. W. 462.

67. The New York indeterminate sentence law providing for a minimum term "which shall not be less than one year" has been sustained. Laws 1902, p. 832, c. 282. People v. Deyo [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 430. The Michigan indeterminate sentence law is constitutional. Pub. Acts 1903, p. 168. In re Campbell [Mich.] 101 N. W. 826. The court thereunder is not required to fix the maximum sentence where the statute fixes the maximum term of imprisonment for the crime at a certain number of years. Id. Where commutation for good behavior is allowed on indeterminate sentences, the minimum term must not be greater than the maximum term less full commutation for that period. People v. Dayo, 103 App. Div. 126, 93 N. Y. S. 80.

68. An escaped convict will not be allowed time on his sentence while illegally at large upon unlawful escape. Ex parte Moebus, 137 F. 154. That a period of confinement is shortened for good behavior is a circumstance arising not from natural right but from the grace of the people, and the benefits thereof are subject to such limitations as the law which creates the benefits may impose. Ex parte Russell, 92 N. Y. S. 68. Statutes may take this privilege from persons confined on indeterminate sentences. Laws 1903, c. 137, p. 315. People v. Johnson, 44 Misc. 550, 90 N. Y. S. 134. By a law passed after the offense was committed. Id.; State v. Tyree [Kan.] 78 P. 525; In re Marion [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 55, 103 N. W. 512. One who has not earned his "good time" cannot complain that it may be withheld from him in the future. People v. Deyo [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 430.

69. A resolution of a state senate expelling a member thereof is not a bill of attainder. French v. State Senate [Cal.] 80 P. 1031.

70. See 3 C. L. 986.

71. Substitution, on conviction of murder, of close confinement after judgment and Second offenses.[73]—An increase of punishment,[74] or a forfeiture of previous commutation for good behavior,[75] on a second or subsequent conviction, is valid. In order that the sentence may be that provided for a second offense, the prior conviction must be alleged.[76]

§ 7. Rights in property the subject of crime.[77]—Statutes may require that on conviction for larceny the property stolen shall be returned to the owner.[78]

CURTESY.

Curtesy attaches to any estate of inheritance of which the wife is seised during coverture.[79] Curtesy becomes initiate on birth of issue capable of inheriting.[80] At common law seisin must have been actual;[81] but the common law attributes have awaiting execution in the penitentiary, in lieu of confinement in the county jail, is not ex post facto as applied to a person convicted before the passage of the statute on such substitution. N. D. Act March 9, 1903. Rooney v. State of North Dakota, 196 U. S. 319, 49 Law. Ed. 494. However material the place of confinement may be in case of some crimes not involving life, the place of execution, when the punishment is death, within the limits of the state, is immaterial. Id.

72. In Pennsylvania, where the penalty is simple imprisonment for whatever period, the place of confinement is the county jail (Commonwealth v. Fetterman, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 569); but when the penalty is imprisonment at labor by separate or solitary confinement, and the sentence is for one year or more, the place is either the penitentiary or a suitable county prison. (Id.). When the sentence is for less than a year, the place is a suitable county prison, or in the absence of such prison, simple imprisonment in the county jail is to be substituted. Id. Imprisonment in the penitentiary for eleven months is more than equivalent in severity to confinement in the county jail for ten years. Id. A prisoner will be released on habeas corpus where the record does not show that she was convicted of an offense enumerated in the statute under which she was convicted and sentenced to a particular institution. Certain persons guilty of certain offenses could be committed to a particular institution. The record did not show whether the prisoner was convicted for being a prostitute or for disorderly conduct. People v. Keeper of New York State Reformatory, 176 N. Y. 465, 68 N. E. 884. By statute in Rhode Island, one convicted of illegally selling liquor in one county may be imprisoned in the jail of another county. Gen. Laws 1896, § 39, c. 285. Dawley v. Wilcox, 25 R. I. 297, 55 A. 753. One convicted of lascivious cohabitation in Michigan may be sentenced to the branch prison but not to the state prison at Jackson. Ex parte Allen [Mich.] 103 N. W. 209.

73. See 3 C. L. 987.

74. The California statute providing additional punishment upon conviction for a second offense is not a violation of the state or Federal constitutions. Pen. Code, § 666. People v. Coleman, 145 Cal. 609, 79 P. 283. In Michigan where defendant had been twice convicted and was sentenced a third time to imprisonment for twenty years for larceny, it will be presumed that he was given the maximum punishment of five years for the larceny and that the remainder of the sentence was properly imposed under the statute. Comp. Laws 1897, § 11,786. In re Butler [Mich.] 101 N. W. 630.

75. A statute providing that upon second conviction within the committed period of a former sentence, that commutation will be forfeited and added to the second sentence is valid. Ex parte Russell, 92 N. Y. S. 68.

76. The indictment must show that defendant had previously been convicted of an offense of like character to that for which he is on trial. Pen. Code 1895, art. 1014. Kinney v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 84 S. W. 590. An affidavit charging three separate violations of the liquor law will be treated as an entirety in that it charges a first offense. Dalrymple v. State of Ohio, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 185.

79. Estate held as tenant in common. City of Clinton v. Franklin, 26 Ky. L. R. 1053, 83 S. W. 142. In Pennsylvania, curtesy attaches to any estate in fee whether legal or equitable. Morton's Estate, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 246.

It is not a fraud on the husband for the wife to take title to lands in her daughter's name, though done to prevent any "dower" rights from attaching in his favor. Brennaman v. Schell, 212 Ill. 356, 72 N. E. 412.

80. Winestine v. Ziglatzke-Marks Co. [Conn.] 59 A. 496. By operation of law the husband becomes seised of a freehold estate, and the interest of the wife is merely a reversionary one. Id.

81. Where an estate descends to a daughter, a married woman, who dies in the life-been abrogated by statute in most states, and birth of issue and actual seisin is rendered unnecessary.[82] Where married women are given absolute right to manage their separate property, the prospective right to curtesy does not entitle the husband to possession during coverture,[83] and where the right, though vested, cannot be asserted during the life of the wife, a purchase with her funds and title taken in the name of a third person for the purpose of defeating curtesy is not fraudulent as to him.[84] Curtesy may be released by accepting the provisions of a wife's will,[85] or by deed from husband to wife to her sole and separate use,[86] or by a deed of trust of her seperate property joined in by both for her sole and separate use;[87] but not by contract between husband and wife,[88] and the fact that such a contract is entered into does not estop the husband from asserting his right.[89] "Heirs" and "descendents" used in the creation of a separate estate will not bar curtesy except as to children.[90] The estate is merged where the tenant acquires the fee[91] The possession of a tenant by curtesy of property of which his wife was tenant in common is not adverse to her co-tenant.[92]

CUSTOMS AND USAGES.

§ 1. Definition and elements.[93]—A usage is general if generally recognized and observed by those engaged in the kind of transactions to which it applies within the region where it is claimed to exist,[94] and it is not essential that it be observed in every individual transacton.[95]

§ 2. Application to contracts and other dealings.[96]—Written or oral contracts, especially those relating to trade or mercantile agreements, are presumed to have been made with reference to the known and established customs and usages prevailing in respect to such agreements.[97] Hence proof of such a custom or usage is admissible time of her mother to whom dower in the premises is subsequently assigned, the husband of the daughter is not entitled to curtesy in the part assigned as dower, even after the termination of the dower estate. Howells v. McGraw, 97 App. Div. 460, 90 N. Y. S. 1.

82. Under Code 1860, art. 45, §§ 1, 2, giving the husband a life estate in her property, real and personal, if she died intestate, he takes curtesy in a remainder which is subject to an existing life estate. Snyder v. Jones, 99 Md. 693, 59 A. 118. Under the laws of descent in New York if a married woman dies intestate without issue, leaving a mother and brother but no father, her realty goes to her parent for life remainder to her brother subject to the curtesy of her husband. 93. See 3 C. L. 988.

94. Evidence sufficient to show general usage of hardware dealers to carry small quantity of dynamite in stock, where custom was shown to exist in seven counties, but not in the whole state. Traders' Ins. Co. v. Dobbins [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 383.

95. Traders' Ins. Co. v. Dobbins [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 383.

96. See 3 C. L. 988.

97. Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 168. Well settled custom or usage as to meaning of word "noon" at place where contract of insurance was entered into governs in determining when policy expired, which by its

to explain what is ambiguous or uncertain in the contract,[98] to annex such incidents, not excluded by the words used, as the parties may be presumed to have tacitly adopted,[99] or to supply terms as to which the contract is silent.[1] By where the terms of a contract are full, clear and unambiguous, they cannot be varied or contradicted by proof of custom.[2] Evidence of general usage or custom has little, if any, terms expired at noon on a certain day. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee Gaulbert Co. [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1115. Insurance companies are bound to inform themselves of the usages of the particular business insured, and are presumed to know such usages. Thus, insurance policy construed in connection with established custom of retail hardware dealers to carry small amount of dynamite in stock, held to give insured right to carry it in stock. Traders' Ins. Co. v. Dobbins [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 383. Answer held to contain good averment that contracts were made with reference to recognized general custom, and not to allege a separate oral contract. Sillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 168.

NOTE. Custom and usage as affecting contracts of agency: The general rule stated in the text is well illustrated in the case of agency contracts, as the following, from Clark & Skyles on Agency, § 69, will show: "Proof of the custom and usage in a particular business cannot be sufficient, without anything more, to show that the relation of principal and agent exists, but such proof may be material, when the fact of agency is otherwise proved, or admitted, to show what the contract of agency was, and to show the extent of the agent's authority. When the rights, duties, and liabilities as between an acknowledged agent and his principal are in question, or when the authority of an acknowledged agent to do a particular act or make a particular contract is in question, an established custom or usage in the particular business or place may be proved and taken into consideration, either for the purpose of construing the contract of agency as between the parties; or for the purpose of determining the extent of the agent's authority; for, unless expressly excluded, such a custom or usage enters into a contract of agency, as it does into other contracts, and also enters into the authority of the agent as respects persons dealing with him. Of course, as between the parties themselves, and as against persons with notice, the principal may, by his instructions to the agent, exclude customs and usages, however well established. But such secret instructions cannot be set up as against persons dealing with the agent without notice of them, for they have a right to assume, in the absence of notice to the contrary, that the agent's authority is in accordance with established customs and usages." See, also, §§ 194, 195, 196, 209c, 218, 772 of vol. I. of Clark & S. Agency.

98. Custom may be resorted to to make definite what is uncertain, clear up what is doubtful, or annex incidents. Moore v. U. S., 25 S. Ct. 202. Custom admissible to explain what is doubtful. Boruszweski v. Middlesex Mut. Assur. Co., 186 Mass. 589, 72 N. E. 250. Uniform trade custom may explain ambiguous or indeterminate terms of contract. John O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson [Wis.] 101 N. W. 1050. Evidence of custom in tobacco trade to accept checks in payment for large lots admissible, not to vary, but to interpret, contract. Hughes v. Knott [N. C.] 50 S. E. 586. Evidence of custom or usage of trade in delivering lumber held admissible in action on breach of contract for sale of lumber. Oriental Lumber Co. v. Blades Lumber Co. [Va.] 50 S. E. 270. Parol evidence admissible to show meaning of word "noon," used in insurance policy, was, by well known custom of place where contract was made, 12 o'clock midday standard time and not 12 o'clock sun time. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee Gaulbert Co. [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1115. Proof of custom in respect to agreements for sale and delivery of distillery slop for feeding purposes held admissible to show what parties intended by "feeding lots." Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 168. The existence of a general custom and knowledge thereof by both parties may be proved, when the terms of a contract are in issue, as tending to show the existence and terms of the agreement alleged. Pawnbrokers' custom of selling articles after six months held admissible. Stern v. Leopold Simons & Co. [Conn.] 58 A. 696.

99. Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 168; Moore v. U. S., 25 S. Ct. 202. A custom, known to both parties may add terms or tacitly implied incidents to those expressed. John O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson [Wis.] 101 N. W. 1050.

1. Evidence of custom to furnish independent stock train, on demand, when more than 10 cars were to be hauled, admissible when contract for transportation was silent as to manner and time of performance. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Kempton [C. C. A.] 138 F. 992. Contract for sale of cotton being silent as to mode of payment, evidence of a general custom among cotton dealers in regard to payment for cotton in large lots was admissible. Blalock & Co. v. Clark & Bros. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 88.

2. Moore v. U. S., 25 S. Ct. 202. Custom inadmissible to vary or contradict express terms of contract. Torpey v. Murray, 93 Minn. 482, 101 N. W. 609. Proof of a special custom, inconsistent with the express terms of a contract, cannot be made. Wiggin v. Federal Stock & Grain Co. [Conn.] 59 A. 607. Custom irrelevant when it tends to vary express terms of contract. Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. v. Mitchell, 113 Ill. App. 429. Requested instruction as to custom in coal trade held properly modified by excluding general custom if a special contract was found to exist. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Mitchell, 211 Ill. 379, 71 N. E. 1026. Evidence of custom, local or general inadmissible to contradict terms of contract to ship by express. Cappel v. Weir, 90 N. Y. S. 394. Custom as to notice of fire and waiver of proof of loss inadmissible where bearing in establishing a different contract which, if made, through mistake was never reduced to writing.[3]

A custom, to be controlling, so as to affect the rights and liabilities of persons arising from their dealings with each other, must be certain and uniform,[4] reasonable, as applied to the facts in issue,[5] and either known to the party sought to be charged thereby,[6] or so general and notorious that knowledge and adoption of it may be presumed.[7] The custom proved or sought to be proved must be applicable to the particular transaction involved.[8] policy called for specific written statement under oath. Boruszweski v. Middlesex Mut. Assur. Co., 186 Mass. 587, 72 N. E. 250. Proof of custom of insurance company of attaching copy of application and by-laws to policy cannot be made to prove that this was done in a particular instance. Custer v. Fidelity Mut. Aid Ass'n [Pa.] 60 A. 776. Where letters gave plain instructions to return empty beer kegs, and purchaser agreed to do so, evidence of a custom to return kegs was inadmissible. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Grimmon [Nev.] 81 P. 43. Custom in San Francisco requiring consignees to designate berths for the discharge of cargoes cannot prevail over terms of contract for shipment to Honolulu, requiring discharge "on the wharf" and "on the wharf as customary," the custom at Honolulu being to discharge cargoes on the wharves. Moore v. U. S., 25 S. Ct. 202. Proof of custom held not to contradict terms of contract. Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 168. Where a regulation on a telegraph blank, made a part of the contract, did not expressly provide for prepayment of charges for delivering outside free delivery limits, the parties could contract with reference to a custom whereby messages were delivered outside such limits without prepayment without thereby contravening the terms of their contract. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bowman [Ala.] 37 So. 493.

3. Finding that nothing was left out of contract by mistake held sustained by evidence. John O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson [Wis.] 101 N. W. 1050.

4. Evidence insufficient to show custom of this character regarding liability of counsel for fees of court. Russell's Ex'x v. Ferguson [Vt.] 60 A. 802. A custom on the part of a street railway company of permitting persons to ride on the bumper of cars cannot be proven by occasional instances. Columbus R. Co. v. Muns, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 236.

5. Custom of allowing brokers 5 per cent. on sales held unreasonable in a case where the broker performed practically no services. Penland v. Ingle [N. C.] 50 S. E. 850. A custom allowing brokers 5 per cent. commission irrespective of the amount, value, or character of services rendered, is unreasonable and void. Id.

6. Russell's Ex'x v. Ferguson [Vt.] 60 A. 802. A custom of a bank to pay proceeds of drafts drawn to the cashier to persons depositing them is not binding on a drawer of a draft who did not know of such custom. Kuder v. Greene [Ark.] 82 S. W. 836. Local custom of brokers of charging $10 per car on goods shipped them for sale is not binding on a nonresident shipper unless he knew of such custom and consented to it. Bacon Fruit Co. v. Blessing [Ga.] 50 S. E. 139. A party who has no knowledge of a customary meaning attached to "cash sale" of land in a particular locality is not bound by such meaning. Rake v. Townsend [Iowa] 102 N. W. 499. A particular custom as to collecting drafts in order to bind a customer sending a draft for collection must have been actually known to him when he sent it. Bank of Commerce v. Miller, 105 Ill. App. 224. The fact that it was customary for brokers at place of sale to negotiate sales in their own name, not disclosing the principal, and to assume personal liability for the completion of such sales, is insufficient to prove authority to sell in the broker's name, if it is not shown that the principal knew of the custom and contracted with reference to it. Robbins v. Maher [N. D.] 103 N. W. 755. That hotel corporation officers never knew of a single instance where a traveling salesman owned his samples, although their acquaintance was extensive is sufficient evidence that they knew of a general custom to the contrary; hence they were estopped to deny knowledge of such custom, so that their seizure of samples without inquiry as to ownership was not excusable. Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Co. v. Hotel Stevens Co. [Wash.] 80 P. 563.

7. Evidence insufficient to show notorious custom whereby attorneys in city courts become personally liable for court fees. Russell' Ex'x v. Ferguson [Vt.] 60 A. 802. Custom relied on as part of contract of employment must be shown as so certain, continuous, uniform, well-known, and of such long standing that the parties can be said to have contracted with reference thereto. American Ins. Co. v. France, 111 Ill. App. 310. Particular usages and customs of trade or business must be known by the party to be affected or so notorious and well established that his knowledge will be conclusively presumed. John O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson [Wis.] 101 N. W. 1050. Custom must be shown to be uniform, long established, generally acquiesced in, and so well known as to induce belief that parties contracted with reference to it. Strange v. Carrington, Patton & Co., 116 Ill. App. 410.

8. Stock commission custom held not applicable to shipment in issue. In re Taft [C. C. A.] 133 F. 511. Contract required agent to find purchaser of land, but not to sell it; evidence of customary services to be performed by agent to close contract therefore inadmissible. Tarpey v. Murray, 93 Minn. 482, 101 N. W. 609.

CUSTOMS AND USAGES — Con't.

Proof of local customs is frequently admitted in actions based on negligence, as on the issue of contributory negligence in personal injury actions.[9] Proof of an individual custom is incompetent.[10] No custom, general or special, will excuse the want of reasonable diligence in protecting business customers from loss.[11]

A custom cannot vary the terms of, or operate to abrogate or repeal, a general statute;[12] nor will evidence of a local custom, contrary to established principles of law, be received.[13]

9. Local custom of railroad company requiring shippers to repair cars before they would be accepted for shipment is admissible to show that one injured while making repairs was not a trespasser or licensee. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pettit, 111 Ill. App. 172. Where fact that railroad crossing gates were frequently left down unnecessarily became material on issue of contributory negligence in personal injury action, proof of such custom was competent, but only as to such instances as to which plaintiff had knowledge. Chicago & Eastern Ill. R. Co. v. Keegan, 112 Ill. App. 338.

10. In personal injury action, house mover could not testify to his own method of taking care of electric wires. Nagle v. Hake [Wis.] 101 N. W. 409.

11. The presenting of checks through the clearing house the day after receiving them, instead of having them certified on the same day, was claimed to be a usage, but held not to be reasonable diligence. Bank of Commerce v. Miller, 105 Ill. App. 224.

NOTE. Proof of custom on issue of negligence: A negligent act will not be excused on the ground that it is customary. Proof of custom, however, is evidence, but not conclusive, as to whether the act is negligent. Anderson v. Fielding, 92 Minn. 42, 99 N. W. 358; Craner v. Christian, 36 Minn. 413, 31 N. W. 457, 1 Am. St. Rep. 675; O'Mally v. Railway Co., 43 Minn. 289, 45 N. W. 440; Lamson v. Truesdale, 60 Minn. 410, 62 N. W. 546. What persons customarily do under certain circumstances is usually a test of ordinary care, but to this rule there is the familiar exception that where the doing of an act is so obviously dangerous as to constitute negligence as a matter of law, then it must be deemed inconsistent with ordinary care, regardless of custom. Douglas v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 100 Wis. 405, 69 Am. St. Rep. 930. Proof of what is usually done under the same circumstances is admissible. Stewart v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 979. Custom of running train at high rate of speed at certain place admissible to show negligence. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Anson [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 785. General custom of well regulated and prudently managed railroads as to time and manner of inspecting boilers held admissible. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435. Proof of common and general use of a particular appliance is admissible on the issue of its reasonable safety, in an action by a servant against a master. Anderson v. Fielding, 92 Minn. 42, 99 N. W. 357. See, also, as to admissibility of proof of custom, Comstock v. Georgetown Tp. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 788; Consumers' Cotton Oil Co. v. Jonte [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 847; Fitch v. Mason City & C. L. Traction Co., 124 Iowa, 665, 100 N. W. 618.

12. Custom whereby purchaser of entire herd of cattle and brand becomes the owner of an undelivered remnant of herd cannot prevail against Civ. Code, § 4491, whereby sale of personalty is made fraudulent if delivery is not made. Ettien v. Drum [Mont.] 80 P. 369. Usage is without weight in the matter of allowance of fees to public officers. Millard v. Conradi, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 145.

13. Local custom in Kansas relating to distribution of water of running streams for irrigation cannot prevail against common-law principles, such custom not having been recognized by statute or judicial decisions. Clark v. Allaman [Kan.] 80 P. 571. Custom cannot prevail against or overcome a settled rule of law. Entwhistle v. Henke, 113 Ill. App. 572. The term "net receipts" as used in Laws 1869, p. 228, as amended by Laws 1879, p. 179 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1889, p. 801), providing for taxation of foreign insurance companies, cannot be explained by the testimony of insurance experts in Chicago, the meaning of the phase being a question of law, and being applicable throughout the state of Illinois. National Fire Ins. Co. v. Hanberg, 215 Ill. 378, 74 N. E. 377.

Note: A custom should not be in conflict with the rules and principles of law. Turnbull v. Osborne, 12 Abb. Pr. [N. S., N. Y.] 203; East Birmingham Land Co. v. Dennis, 85 Ala. 565, 7 Am. St. Rep. 73, 2 L. R. A. 836. A mere custom or usage is without force, in opposition to a positive law. Coleman v. M'Murdo, 5 Rand. [Va.] 51; Randall v. Smith, 64 Me. 105, 18 Am. Rep. 200; Cranwell v. The Fanny Fosdick, 15 La. Ann. 436, 77 Am. Dec. 190; Winder v. Blake, 49 N. C. 332; Thompson v. Ashton, 14 Johns. [N. Y.] 316; Greene v. Tyler, 39 Pa. 361; Delaplane v. Crenshaw, 15 Grat. [Va.] 457; Piscataqua Exch. Bank v. Carter, 20 N. H. 246, 51 Am. Dec. 217; Joyes v. Shadburn, 11 Ky. L. R. 892; Baltimore First Nat. Bank v. Taliaferro, 72 Md. 164. No one can escape the punishment of the law by proving a custom contrary to law. Minaghan v. State, 77 Wis. 643. § 3. Pleading and proof.[14]—Proof of a custom must be clear, cogent and convincing as to the antiquity, duration and universality of the usage in the locality where it is claimed to exist.[15] If the evidence is uncertain and contradictory, the custom is not established, and the court should so instruct the jury.[16] Knowledge of a witness as to a general custom must be shown before he may testify in regard to such custom.[17] As to the necessity of pleading a custom, where relied on, there is a conflict.[18]

CUSTOMS LAWS.

§ 1. Interpretation and operation of customs laws in general.[19]—The treaty providing for a reduction of twenty per cent. of the duties on Cuban products became effective ten days after the exchange of ratifications.[20] The existence of the insurrection in the Philippines after the treaty with Spain was ratified did not justify the exaction of duties on imports from the United States into Manila after such ratification.[21] The president's order during the war, directing payment of duties as a military contribution on occupation of the country by the forces of the United States, had no application after the conclusion of the war.[22] The tariff act of 1897 applies to goods imported on the day it became effective,[23] and to merchandise previously imported for which no entry for consumption has been made.[24] Merchandise is being admitted for tariff purposes until the duties are finally liquidated.[25]

§ 2. Dutiable articles and classification of the same.[26]—Wherever, in the history of customs laws, it is found that a certain expression has received, in effect, a statutory construction, or a long and uniform use by congress or the departments, that construction is controlling, unless some other is necessary.[27] This rule of construction is superior to all others.[28] Every provision of a customs act classifying merchandise is presumed to have relation to some existing course of business.[29] The statutory provision, commonly known as the similitude clause, requiring unenumer-

ated articles to be classified with the enumerated article which they most resemble, does not require identity, but only substantial similitude in any one of the particulars mentioned—material, quality, texture or use.[30] Articles are not dutiable under general terms when a duty is imposed in specific language.[31] But though an article may be literally included by name in a certain paragraph, it may sometimes be more properly referred to another paragraph designating a class, on account of its relations to such class.[32] The titles of paragraphs of the customs laws are not intended to be perfectly accurate, but only to furnish general information of the articles enumerated.[33] The customs act provision that where two or more rates of duty are applicable to an article, the article shall pay the highest of such rates, does not apply where one paragraph lays an ad valorem duty and the other a specific duty.[34] Where merchandise in cases is dutiable under two different paragraphs, the value of the cases should be distributed between the two kinds of merchandise in determining ad valorem duties.[35] Where an article has been advanced through one or more processes into a completed commercial article, known and recognized in trade by a specific and distinctive name other than the name of the material, and is put into a completed shape for a particular use, it is deemed a manufacture.[36] In assessing duties on goods as to which countervailing duties are authorized, the collector should adopt such a basis of assessment as will compel the importer to pay as additional duty the net amount of the bounty paid by the exporting country.[37] In case of a commodity like sugar, which decreases while being imported, the additional duty should be based on the invoice weight, subject to deduction due to any cause warranting an allowance.[38] Countervailing duties on crude articles or their products should be based on the duty imposed by the country where the crude article is produced.[39] Rules as to the measurement of rugs,[40] and the ascertainment of the component material of chief value in woven fabrics,[41] are given in the notes. Other cases in which the classification of particular imports is decided or discussed are grouped in the footnotes.[42] for can be recovered,[46] and the district court has jurisdiction of an action for that purpose.[47] The phrase "entitled to debenture" in the statute refers to merchandise, the importer or owner of which is entitled to a certificate in due form, showing the amount of duties paid and that it has been duly entered for export back to a foreign country.[48] Until the duties have been paid and the merchandise entered for exportation, it is not entitled to debenture,[49] and the owner is not entitled to change the packages in which it is contained, on application to the collector.[50] A complaint against a surveyor of customs for damages for refusal to permit a change of packages, which alleges that merchandise is "entitled to debenture" without facts showing them to be so entitled, pleads a mere conclusion of law.[51] The government and not the importer should bear the expense of storing merchandise pending inspection and analysis by the department of agriculture, under the pure food law.[52] What vessels are required to report to customs officers must be determined by reference to the statute.[53]

Entry.[54]—An entry for consumption cannot be made in a given port until the goods are within the limits of that port when the duty is tendered to the collector.[55] A special act of congress is necessary to permit such an entry at any other port than the port of ultimate destination.[56] A custom house broker cannot deny his sworn declaration that he is the consignee of goods,[57] and under the statute declaring that for the purposes of the customs laws imported merchandise is deemed the property of the consignee,[58] he is liable as though he were the real owner, after making such a declaration.[59]

Liquidation.[60]—The secretary of the treasury has power to reliquidate an entry at the exchange value of the coins of the exporting country, where that value differs by more than ten per cent. from the metal value, as last proclaimed by him.[61] For the purpose of estimating the value of foreign merchandise exported to the United States, according to the currency of the country of exportation, as proclaimed each quarter by the secretary of the treasury, the consular certification of the invoice is conclusive proof of the date of exportation in determining which quarterly proclamation applies.[62] Local taxes of the country of exportation, remitted on exportation, not shown to be uniformly imposed throughout the country, nor uniform in amount where levied, cannot be considered by appraisers in determining market value.[63] Where a protest is sustained by the board of appraisers, it is the collector's duty to reliquidate the entry in accordance with the board's decision.[64]

Enforcement of duties.—Duties are not merely a charge on the goods, but are a personal debt or obligation of the importer;[65] hence the government is not limited to summary proceedings, in collection of duties, but may maintain an action of debt, when by accident, mistake, or fraud, no duties or short duties have been paid.[66] In an action by the govenment to recover unpaid duties, the importer may defend on the ground of illegality of the assessment, notwithstanding the statutory provision that the collector's decision shall be final and conclusive unless the duties are paid under protest.[67]

Refund for salvage.—Under the statute providing for the abatement or refund of duties paid or accruing on imported merchandise damaged or destroyed accidentally while in the custody of customs officers, the secretary of the treasury has no arbitrary power in regard to such refund, but should award it when the required facts are shown.[68] Where imported goods have been saved from accidental destruction, and the government has been saved duties which would otherwise have been refunded, the salvors are entitled to a salvage award against the government,[69] on the basis of the amount saved the government.[70]

Protests and appeals. Procedure.[71]—The statute requires protests to state the reasons for objections to decisions of the collector distinctly and specifically.[72] Reference to the wrong paragraph of the statute is fatal.[73] A protest citing the provision under which it is claimed the article is dutiable, because of resemblance to an enumerated article, need not refer in addition to the similitude clause of the statute.[74] If the protest fails to meet the statutory requirements, the action of the collector will be affirmed.[75] Omissions or mistakes in the protest, which may have misled the collector, will not be corrected on the review of his decision.[76] Where an importer mixes two kinds of goods so that it is impracticable or impossible to separate them, a protest covering the entire importation must be overruled, though some of the goods might be subject to the classification claimed in the protest.[77] An importer may file a protest against the action of a collector in failing to follow the decision of the board of appraisers in making a reliquidation.[78] Where a tentative liquidation is made pending a possible change of rates, and the final liquidation is made a year later, the importer may legally file a protest within ten days after such second liquidation,[79] and the fact that a protest was filed after the first is immaterial, whether or not the importer regarded the first liquidation as final.[80]

A decision of a collector based on no other evidence than the articles themselves may be reversed by the board of appraisers or the courts without further evidence.[81] On such review, the appraisers or courts may avail themselves of facts of which judicial notice may properly be taken.[82] Findings of fact by the board of appraisers are not as a rule reviewable by the court.[83] But the rule is otherwise where it appears that the appraisers signing the opinion did not in fact hear the testimony,[84] since a reappraisement by general appraisers, made without inspection of the merchandise or samples by themselves or any witnesses heard by them, is void.[85] The board of appraisers has jurisdiction to review the action of a collector of customs in assessing duty on the cost of repairs to vessels.[86]

A collector[87] who has followed directions of the department in making up a package of money for transmission to the treasurer, and has taken a receipt from the express company, is not liable for a loss occurring before the package reaches the treasurer.[88]

§ 4. Violations of customs laws and consequences thereof.[89]—A proceeding in rem lies under the statute for forfeiture of fraudulently imported goods,[90] but not under the statute providing for forfeiture of money arising from the sale of goods fraudulently imported.[91] Failure to enter imported goods renders the goods liable to forfeiture, whether or not they would be dutiable if entered, and whether or not the government is defrauded of any sum,[92] and whether or not there was any intent to defraud.[93] Proof of a knowing violation or evasion of a customs law is sufficient.[94] Rules and regulations of the treasury department may be continued in force under a new tariff law by simply adopting and continuing to enforce them.[95] Hence, in a proceeding to forfeit goods, it is no defense that regulations have not been promulgated.[96] An acquittal on a charge of importing goods with intent to defraud the United States of duty is a bar to a proceeding in rem,[97] but the fact that an indictment had been brought and a nolle entered does not bar a proceeding in rem.[98] A false declaration of ownership on entry of an importation is not ground for forfeiture unless the statement of ownership was willfully and knowingly false.[99]

DAMAGES.

§ 1. Kinds of damages and their characteristics.[1] Damnum absque injuria.—Damages are recoverable only where there has been an infraction of a legal right.[2]

Special damages[3] are such as result naturally but not necessarily from the wrong complained of,[4] and as to which there can be no recovery without special averment.[5] Special circumstances will justify their recovery when specifically sued for if they approximately flow from the breach and are such as might reasonably be within the contemplation of the parties.[6]

Nominal damages[7] are allowed for a wrong not shown to have resulted in pe-

1. See 3 C. L. 997.

2. Damages are only recoverable where it appears that defendant owed plaintiff some duty which he has violated or disregarded. Gage v. Springer, 112 Ill. App. 103. Where a man places great quantities of earth on his own land in grading it, without proper precautions to prevent its being carried down onto an adjoining proprietor, and it is so carried down to the injury of the adjoiner, he is liable. American Security & Trust Co. v. Lyon, 21 App. D. C. 122; Neumeister v. Goddard [Wis.] 103 N. W. 241. The manufacture of coke by a corporation on its own land from coal produced by it on land in the vicinity is not the natural and necessary use of its own property for the development of its own resources. Recovery may be had in such case for depreciation of nelghboring property from smoke, noxious gases, ashes, soot, etc. Campbell v. Bessemer Coke Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 374. Where damage is the direct, immediate and unavoidable result of the execution of a plan of municipal improvement for which plaintiff has already been compensated in condemnation proceedings, there can be no recovery of damages. Beach v. Scranton, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 430. No damages for taking water from a well can be recovered unless the plaintiff at the time of the taking had some interest in the water taken. Rollins v. Blackden, 99 Me. 21, 58 A. 69.

cuniary injury to plaintiff,[8] or where, since the action was instituted, the damages claimed have been duly released.[9] Recovery is sometimes limited to nominal damages where the special damages are insufficiently pleaded.[10]

Liquidated damages[11] are those the amount of which has been determined by anticipatory agreement between the parties.[12] When reasonable in amount and not disproportionate to the injury provided against the injured party will not be allowed to recover more than the sum fixed,[13] and will be regarded as having been injured to the extent of the sum stipulated,[14] especially where the damages are incapable of computation.[15] These principles have been applied to the amount stip-

Death of person not shown to have left kin who are damaged by his loss. Chicago Bridge & Iron Co. v. La Mantia, 112 Ill. App. 43. Where goods belonging to a wife are without manual seizure wrongfully sold on execution against her husband, and the purchaser pays the price, taking a bill of sale from the constable, and no agreement is made between the purchaser and her or her husband for their disposition, the fact that her possession is not disturbed does not disentitle her to substantial damages. Mansfield v. Bell, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 447. It is error to nonsuit merely for insufficient proof of substantial damages. Phillips v. Crosby, 70 N. J. Law, 785, 59 A. 142. Nominal damages only are allowed for a mere unlawful entry on land. Eldridge v. Gorman, 77 Conn. 699, 60 A. 643. Damages from exposure of hack used to transport small-pox patients held nominal in view of plaintiff's assent to the exposure. Nichols v. New Britain, 77 Conn. 695, 60 A. 655. Direction of verdict for nominal damages in false imprisonment case held error. Tidey v. Erie R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 60 A. 954. ulated for delay in completing a building,[16] for failure to furnish certain goods[17] and machinery,[18] for failure to complete exchange of property,[19] for delay in delivering chattels contracted for,[20] for failure to operate a street railroad as agreed,[21] a bond to secure the erection of buildings on demised premises,[22] a bond,[23] and a certified check deposited at the time of securing a franchise.[24] The stipulated amount must bear some reasonable relation to the injury,[25] especially where the amount of damage can be computed,[26] and if the sum stipulated increases as the contract draws near completion and the damages decrease, it will not be allowed.[27] Damages stipulated for delay in performance do not measure the recovery in case of a complete abandonment.[28] Courts incline to construe bonds as penal in character.[29] The fact that the sum to be paid is called liquidated damages in the contract will not always control, but the courts will look to the nature and purposes of the agreement.[30] The question whether the stipulated sum is for liquidated damages or a a penalty is for the court.[31] Statutory penalties are recoverable in amount, irrespective of the actual damages sustained.[32]

Exemplary damages.[33]—Certain sums in addition to the actual damages recoverable for a wrong, termed "exemplary," "punitive," "vindictive" damages, or "smart money" are allowed in cases of private tort or injury willfully or maliciously committed,[34] such as assault and battery,[35] libel or slander,[36] willful breach actual damages are recoverable.[47] Whether exemplary damages are recoverable is for the court,[48] but their amount is for the jury.

Statutory, double and treble damages,[49] are provided for certain injuries of a nature resembling those in which punitive damages are awarded.[50]

§ 2. General principles for ascertaining.[51]—The cardinal rule of damages is fair compensation;[52] general rules, however, cannot be formulated to govern all cases,[53] and whenever the rule ordinarily applied to similar cases fails to accomplish the cardinal result, it must yield to exception or modification.[54] Where damages may be estimated in a variety of ways, that method will be adopted which is most definite and certain.[55]

Rule of strictness as between contracts and torts.[56]—In actions for breach of contract the primary and immediate results are alone looked to,[57] but the damages recoverable for torts take wider range and all damages naturally and proximately though not necessarily resulting from the injury are recoverable.[58]

Limitation to natural and proximate consequences.[59]—In all cases only such damages as naturally and proximately result from the injury complained of are recoverable,[60] and those which result chiefly from some other or intervening cause,[61] or

61. A child frightened by defendant's railroad train so she ran in front of the train of another company cannot recover. Illinois Central R. Co. v. Haecker, 110 Ill. App. 102. One injured by a defective sidewalk cannot recover for a subsequent injury caused by the slipping of the crutch the first injury compelled him to use. Vander Velde v. Leroy [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 183, 103 N. W. 812. A passenger injured in a railroad collision and subject to attacks of dizziness thereafter cannot recover for a broken wrist resulting from a fall occasioned by such an attack while she was standing in a sink to examine a leak in a water pipe. Snow v. New York, etc., R. Co., 185 Mass. 321, 70 N. E. 205. For breach of contract to store trucks in a stable, value of goods stolen therefrom while unguarded cannot be recovered. Peyser v. Lund, 89 App. Div. 195, 85 N. Y. S. 881. In a suit for injuries to cattle by flowing land, plaintiff cannot recover for loss occasioned by being obliged to sell his cattle because he had no hay to feed them after the flowing, and no money to buy it with. Berg v. Humptulips Boom & River Imp. Co. [Wash.] 80 P. 528. Where an accident in June causes a miscarriage the following day, a subsequent miscarriage in November is not too remote. Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 788. But its effect should be limited rather to showing the extent of the original injury than as a specific ground of recovery. Id. [Tex.] 86 S. W. 322. Railroad company building dump which sets water back on plaintiff's land is liable for consequent depreciation in its value, but not for fright and sickness of his family caused thereby. Denison, etc., R. Co. v. Barry [Tex.] 83 S. W. 5. Where an injured person suffers without negligence a second injury much greater than it would have been but for the prior injury, the tort feasor responsible for the original injury is responsible also for the increase of the second. Conner v. Nevada [Mo.] 86 S. W. 256. Discomforts suffered by reason of exposure to inclement weather are not proximately caused by failure to deliver a telegram. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Where a telegram bears no reference to plaintiff's wife and baby, he cannot recover for their discomfort or his own mental anguish caused thereby at not being met by a conveyance as directed in telegram. Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 198. Where nondelivery of a telegram results in failure to ship whiskey ordered thereby, plaintiff cannot recover for remote consequences of refusal of his laborers to work without whiskey. Newsome v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 N. C. 513, 50 S. E. 279. Vexation caused sender of telegram by failure to protect his check is not recoverable for nondelivery of a telegram. Capers v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 537. Other telegraph cases. Hilley v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Miss.] 37 So. 556. A shipper of fruit trees lost by the carrier's negligence may recover the expense of renotifying consignees and delivering goods to take their place, the carrier being informed of the result of delay at the time of accepting the shipment. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Needham [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 22. Where a carrier merely contracts to furnish transportation without being notified what the trip is for, the measure of damages for negligent delay is merely compensation for loss of time and for expenses incurred during the delay. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Head [Ky.] 84 S. W. 751. A reconvention where pasturage was not as represented is not too remote in claiming for money, time and labor expended in feeding the pastured cattle. Scovill v. Melton [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 463. Anxiety of a husband caused by the nondelivery of a ticket to his wife on which she was to return home may be recovered for. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Cul-

gence may be the proximate cause of an injury not reasonably to be anticipated,[63] and one guilty of deceit is liable for damages resulting, though causes operated which he did not foresee.[64] In an action for personal injuries plaintiff may recover in most states for an aggravation of a disease already existing.[65]

Speculative and prospective damages.[66]—Remote or speculative damages based solely on conjecture are not recoverable,[67] but future damages which are imminent and reasonably certain to occur may be taken into account.[68]

Loss of profits,[69] not too uncertain and speculative, may be recovered for,[70]

Stultz, 124 Iowa, 734, 100 N. W. 851. Plaintiff's damages held too speculative for nondelivery of a telegram affecting the settlement of a claim for which their compensation as attorneys depended on their success. Sweet v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Mich.] 102 N. W. 850. Testimony as to plaintiff's average weekly wages is not objectionable as speculative and remote. Tanzer v. New York City R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 334. Damages for personal injury cannot extend to the loss of ability to bear children. Lennox v. Interurban St. R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 230, Contra. Normile v. Wheeling Traction Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 1030. Depreciation in market value of thoroughbred cows by being gotten with calf by common stock bulls is not too remote. Baldwin v. Richardson [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 746. The loss of trade and custom by reason of not being able to fill orders is too remote to recover for breach of contract to deliver labels. Vuccino & Co. v. Brown, 92 N. Y. S. 319.

68. It is not essential that all the injurious effects which arise from breach of a contract should have been manifested before suit, but both the actual effects down to the time of trial, and those which may ensue, if imminent and reasonably certain, may be considered in fixing damages. Hancock v. White Hall Tobacco Warehouse Co., 102 Va. 239, 46 S. E. 288.

Profits recoverable in a personal injury case include only those earned by plaintiff's unaided labor. Jonas v. Interurban St. R. Co., 45 Misc. 579, 90 N. Y. S. 1070; Tanzer v. New York City R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 334. Loss of profits of running a mill are not speculative. Anderson v. Hilton & Dodge Lumber Co., 121 Ga. 688, 49 S. E. 725. For failure to manufacture and deliver patented motors, the purchaser may recover profits on sales which would have been consummated had they been delivered, including cash offers as well as binding contracts for future delivery which could not be filled. Sun Mfg. Co. v. Egbert [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 667. As a basis for the recovery of damages for nondelivery of a telegram, plaintiff may show that the addressee would have filled the order it contained if he had received it. Elam v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 115. For breach of a contract to give plaintiff the exclusive sale of certain products, his business being established, he can recover the profit he would have made but those merely possible,[71] or probable from accretion of the business,[72] and incapable of proof with any degree of certainty,[73] are not recoverable. Profits which would have resulted from the operation of a ship destroyed are not an element of damages for its destruction.[74] Where profits are recoverable the profits for a reasonable period preceding the injury may be taken as a basis of estimate,[75] and plaintiff is not obliged to prove with absolute certainty what they would have been, but only with such reasonable certainty as will satisfy a jury of the reasonableness of his demand and estimate.[76]

Difficulty of proof of amount as bar.[77]—Mere difficulty of proof of amount is never a bar to recovery either in contract[78] or tort,[79] it being sufficient to approximate the amount of damages by the best evidence obtainable.[80] The failure of the government to return plans submitted to it and rejected does not entitle the person submitting them to damages unless damages are proved.[81] Where the evidence to establish damages is general and unsatisfactory, there can be no recovery.[82]

on the goods sold in the exclusive territory by defendant. Corbin v. Taussig, 137 F. 151. Where defendant purchased certain machines under an agreement that the seller would furnish work for them and take his pay out of the profits, the measure of the damages for failure to furnish the work which may be set off in an action to recover the price of the machines is the profit which defendant might have made on the work plus the expense of maintaining the plant during the time it was idle. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Christian, 211 Pa. 534, 60 A. 1087. For breach by the seller of a machine of a contract to keep repairs therefor at a certain nearby place, the buyer may recover profits he would have made on work for which he had orders, but could not thereafter do because of the delay. Janney Mfg. Co. v. Banta, 26 Ky. L. R. 1089, 83 S. W. 130. For breach of a contract to give plaintiff the exclusive sale of its products in certain territory, plaintiff can recover no more than the profit he would have made on the goods defendant sold, had he sold them himself at the price at which defendant sold them. La Favorite Rubber Mfg. Co. v. H. Channon Co., 113 Ill. App. 491.

quential damages flowing from an injury must be shown[84] in cases both of contract[85] and tort,[86] and the rule extends to such an outlay of money as is reasonable under the circumstances.[87] Money reasonably expended for this purpose should be included as an element of recovery,[88] and where a reasonable outlay would have prevented the injury, the necessary amount may furnish the measure of damages.[89] There can be no recovery for damages preventable by reasonable effort on plaintiff's part,[90] and he can charge defendant only with such damages as he could not, with reasonable expense and exertion, prevent.[91]

84. Only reasonable diligence to avoid or reduce loss need be shown. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. McMahon & Montgomery Co., 110 Ill. App. 510; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Willard, 111 Ill. App. 225. Aggravation of plaintiff's injuries by unskillfulness of attending surgeons will not relieve defendant unless there was negligence in employing them. Seeton v. Dunbarton [N. H.] 59 A. 944; Chicago City R. Co. v. Saxby, 213 Ill. 274, 72 N. E. 755. A passenger can recover nothing for any aggravation of his injuries and disabilities occasioned by his own neglect of proper care after the accident. Injured by derailment of street car. Statement of physician that injury would be aggravated by riding on locomotive not harmful to defendant. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 163 Ind. 360, 71 N. E. 201. Evidence of the best method of handling potatoes after they commenced to rot was admissible on the question of ordinary care. Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1066. A passenger put off at the wrong station and invited by a respectable family living there to remain over night cannot recover for injuries received by immediately walking to her destination on a stormy night. Cain v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 84 S. W. 583. Loss of profits from nondelivery of telegram relative to machinery in mill. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Scott [Ky.] 87 S. W. 289.

Mitigation and aggravation of damages.[92]—All circumstances for which the defendant is responsible or of which he had knowledge effective to increase plaintiff's injuries, from the wrong complained of, and in case exemplary or punitive damages are recoverable, that illustrate defendant's susceptibility to punishment and the necessity therefor,[93] may be considered, in aggravation or enhancement of the damages, and on the other hand, circumstances that tend to palliate or excuse the wrong,[94] as well as subsequent acts and events tending to lessen the effect of the injury,[95] and that show that the damages were in fact less than would flow from a similar injury under other circumstances,[96] may be shown to mitigate or lessen the verdict. In Tennessee remote contributory negligence is effective to mitigate the damages recoverable for a negligent injury.[97] Evidence that defendant carries employers' liability insurance is inadmissible.[98] A trespasser cannot relieve himself from damages by showing that some advantage may have accrued to plaintiff therefrom.[99] In an action on a contract, where punitive damages are not recoverable, evidence that after suit brought defendant had plaintiff arrested on a baseless charge is improper.[1]

§ 3. Recovery as affected by status of plaintiff or limited interest in property affected.[2]—Recovery is allowed only to the extent of plaintiff's proprietorship of the cause of action.[3] Applications of this rule to actions by minors,[4] married women,[5] avoided ejection does not deprive him of the right to recover for the mortification of a public expulsion. Breen v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 443, 83 S. W. 998.

3. A joint owner of personalty injured can recover only to the extent of his interest (Waggoner v. Snody [Tex.] 85 S. W. 1134), but a bailee is entitled to recover to the whole extent of the injury (Id.). An owner can recover damages caused by fire in woodland, though he has given a license to another to cut and remove the timber. He can recover for damages to wood cut but not removed within the time of the license. Clarke v. New York, etc., R. Co., 26 R. I. 59, 58 A. 245. Plaintiff suing for the destruction of grass on leased land can recover only for the grass he would be entitled to during the life of his lease. Baldwin v. Richardson [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 746.

4. In a personal injury suit plaintiff cannot recover for the value of the services of his mother as nurse, in the absence of a special contract between them or proof of his emancipation. Bowe v. Bowe, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 233, 26 Ohio C. C. 409. In a suit for damages for personal injuries resulting from an employer's negligence, a charge which submits to the jury the consideration of the question of the length of time plaintiff had been earning wages, where it appears that plaintiff had not been emancipated, and that, therefore, his time belonged to his parents, is improper. Id. Where it appears that an unemancipated infant will recover from his injuries long before majority, he cannot recover for impairment of earning power or physician's or nurse's charges. Porter v.

parents,[6] and husbands,[7] are discussed in the notes. In Michigan, where a person injured by a wrongful act survives for an appreciable time, his cause of action for the injury passes to his personal representative, who can recover such damages as the injured person could have recovered had he survived to prosecute the action.[8]

§ 4. Measure of damages for breach of contract. A. Miscellaneous contracts.[9] —Recovery may be had for such damage as may be fairly and reasonably considered to arise naturally from the breach itself, and as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time the contract was made as the probable result of a breach of it.[10] The presumption of damage arising from breach

Delaware, etc., R. Co., 134 F. 155. Error in allowing mother to testify in child's action that she had spent $7 for medicines held unprejudicial under rule of de minimis. Norfolk Ry. & Light Co. v. Spratley, 103 Va. 379, 49 S. E. 502. A minor suing for a personal injury may recover the amount of necessary bills for physicians' services, they being necessaries for which he is liable. Berg v. United States Leather Co. [Wis.] 104 N. W. 60. A minor cannot recover for diminished earning capacity during minority. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Grisom [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 671. Where a sole surviving parent appears as next friend for a minor and assists him to recover lost and future earnings on the theory of emancipation, such acts constitute an abandonment of the right to such earnings. Zongker v. People's Union Mercantile Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 486.

5. A wife may recover the value of her services lost by a personal injury where she has a separate business. Boarding house. Moran v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 302. Damages resulting from a personal injury to the wife are community property; the husband is a necessary party and the judgment is properly rendered in favor of both. Paine v. San Bernardino Valley Traction Co., 143 Cal. 654, 77 P. 659. A wife may recover for being prevented from performing and transacting her necessary affairs and business as a result of a personal injury. Normile v. Wheeling Traction Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 1030. A married woman running a boarding house with the assistance of her husband who is a cripple may recover for diminished ability to labor. Perrigo v. St. Louis, 185 Mo. 274, 84 S. W. 30. Where the married women's acts make them liable for medical attendance to themselves, they may recover such expense as a part of the damages for personal injuries. Ashby v. Elsberry & N. H. Gravel Road Co. [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 957.

6. The father of an infant may recover for injury to her clothing, the loss of her services, and for medical attention made necessary by plaintiff's acts. Shoemaker v. Jackson [Iowa] 104 N. W. 503. A parent cannot recover for his own mental anguish in an action for injuries to a minor child. Rube v. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co., 140 Ala. 276, 37 So. 285. Code 1896, § 26, providing that in an action for wrongful death of a minor child the parent may recover such damages as the jury may assess, has no application where death did not result. Id. A mother's right to recover for loss of a minor son's services is not impaired by the fact that the loss occurred pending a contract between him and the one who caused the loss to which she was a stranger. Scannell v. St. Louis Transit Co., 103 Mo. App. 504, 77 S. W. 1021. Where plaintiff suing for an injury to his son shows the son's age, that he lived at home, and the nature and character of his injury, he is entitled to go to the jury on the amount of damage he has suffered. Son 10 years old. Brunke v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 84.

7. For injuries to his wife a husband may recover the money equivalent of the loss of services, assistance, companionship, and society that he is deprived of. His damages are not limited to the expense of hiring a domestic to attend to her household duties. Hutcheis v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 779. The possible future earnings of a wife have no bearing on the amount of damages recoverable by her husband for injuries to her, the right to which he has assigned to her. Id. A husband cannot recover for injuries to the wearing apparel of his wife in a suit for damages for injury to apartments by gas explosion. Gilligan v. Consolidated Gas Co., 94 N. Y. S. 273. The married women's acts do not deprive the husband of his right to recover for personal injuries to the wife, including necessary expenses and loss of consortium. Code 1896, § 2521. Birmingham Southern R. Co. v. Lintner [Ala.] 38 So. 363. A husband is not entitled to recover for future loss of services of his wife. Id.

10. Kellogg v. Malick [Wis.] 103 N. W. 1116; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Thomas [Kan.] 78 P. 861; Sanitary District of Chicago v. McMahon & Montgomery Co., 110 Ill. App. 510; Union Foundry Works v. Columbia Iron & Steel Co., 112 Ill. App. 183; McKenzie v. Mitchell [Ga.] 51 S. E. 34; Mudge v. Adams [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 722. Failure to carry mail as agreed. Brown v. Cowles [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1020. Failure to furnish lumber for mill erected in pursuance of contract. Anderson v. Hilton & Dodge Lumber Co., 121 Ga. 688, 49 S. E. 725. Plaintiff is entitled to more than nominal damages for wrongful dishonor of his check by a bank, though the dishonor arose from an error in bookkeeping and plaintiff is a corporation. Metropolitan Supply Co. v. Garden City Banking & Trust Co., 114 Ill. App. 318. Damages resulting from the loss of services of defendant's wife as a result of injuries of a contract does not go to the extent of measuring the loss,[11] but in the absence of proof it is regarded as nominal, and if a further sum is demanded, proof must be given showing that the party claiming it has suffered loss.[12] An express contract should itself furnish the basis of estimating damages for its breach.[13] Recovery may be had for mental anguish caused by breach of contract.[14] Where a party to a con-sustained by reason of a defective wagon cannot be recouped in an action for the price of the wagon. Rode v. Arney, 115 Ill. App. 629. Where the prosecution or defense of suits is rendered necessary, naturally and proximately, by a breach of contract or any wrongful act, the costs of that litigation, reasonably and judiciously conducted, incurred or paid, including reasonable counsel fees, are recoverable as part of the damages. Houser's Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 508. Where there is a breach of warranty of soundness of cattle, the loss sustained by the buyers of other cattle because of disease communicated to them by those bought may be recovered. Mitchell v. Pinckney [Iowa] 104 N. W. 286. Loss occasioned by the delivery of potatoes which soon rotted and ruined other potatoes is an element within this rule. Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1066. Where bridges are built of less weight than the contract calls for, it is not error for the court to add 15% for contractor's profits to the value of material necessary to bring them up to weight. Modern Steel Structural Co. v. Van Buren County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 536. For the breach of a contract that involved the changing of the nature of the machinery in plaintiff's mill, he may recover the expenses reasonably incurred in making the change. Alderton v. Williams [Mich.] 102 N. W. 753. Special circumstances coming to the knowledge of the party after execution of the contract will not create an exception to the rule. Kellogg v. Malick [Wis.] 103 N. W. 1116. Notice of the object of the contract will not change the rule unless it forms the basis of the agreement. Coppola v. Kraushaar, 102 App. Div. 306, 92 N. Y. S. 436. Counsel fees incurred in resisting an application for a preliminary injunction are not recoverable in an action on the bond. Quinn v. Silka [Colo. App.] 76 P. 555. In an action on an injunction bond in a suit where the injunction is only ancillary or in aid of another proceeding, the damages are only such as flow from the injunction itself and do not include attorney's fees in procuring its dissolution. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sullivan, 25 Ky. L. R. 46, 80 S. W. 791. Where an injunction restrained the owner from leasing, transferring or bringing action to recover premises, his expenses in repairing waste done or permitted during the life of the injunction, the rental value of the property, and reasonable attorney's fees are recoverable in an action on the bond. McLennon v. Fenner [S. D.] 104 N. W. 218. Undisclosed principal in liquor bond held liable to surety only for expenses of trial at nisi prius, and not for expenses and costs of appeal. City Trust. Safe Deposit & Surety Co. v. American Brewing Co., 88 App. Div. 383, 84 N. Y. S. 771. Actress suing for nondelivery of trunk cannot recover for loss of engagements occasioned by nonpossession of trunk. Brown v. Weir, 95 App. Div. 78, 88 N. Y. S. 479. An action may be maintained by one partner against another for damages for defendant's failure to comply with an agreement made before the formation of the partnership, relating to the terms on which it was to be formed. Owen v. Meroney, 136 N. C. 475, 48 S. E. 821. The measure of damages for breach of a contract is the value of the rights of which one has been deprived whether more or less than stipulated for therein. Sale of electric cars, etc. Hopedale Elec. Co. v. Electric Storage Battery Co., 96 App. Div. 344, 89 N. Y. S. 325. For breach of a contract not to sue or permit suit on a certain contract, plaintiff can recover only actual damages. Commercial Inv. Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 36 Wash. 287, 78 P. 910. In action on a bond for failure to contest a claim of exemptions, expenses in attending court several terms, loss of time, hotel bills and attorney's fees are proper elements. Kirby v. Forbes [Ala.] 37 So. 411. Damages which are the natural and probable result of a breach of the contract and which may be reasonably anticipated therefrom, but which are so speculative and contingent that their amount is not susceptible of proof with any reasonable degree of certainty, may not be recovered. Measure of damages for breach of contract between lessee of opera house and manager. Markowitz v. Greenwall Theatrical Circuit Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 74, 317. For breach of warranty of a refrigerator, in consequence of which meat placed therein spoiled, the buyer may recover the value of the spoiled meat. Evidence of value of meat held insufficient. Dean Co. v. Standifer [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 230. For breach of a contract by an amusement company, whereby it was to assign plaintiff ground to operate certain concessions, plaintiff may recover moneys paid on the price of the concessions, and reasonable expenses incurred in preparing for the execution of the contract. Claudius v. West End Heights Amusement Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 354.

11. Hopedale Elec. Co. v. Electric Storage Battery Co., 96 App. Div. 344, 89 N. Y. S. 325.

12. No substantial damage shown. Hopedale Elec. Co. v. Electric Storage Battery Co., 96 App. Div. 344, 89 N. Y. S. 325.

13. Amount of royalties lost by defendant's failure to use construction required by its contract with plaintiff. Standard Fireproofing Co. v. St. Louis Expanded Metal Fireproofing Co., 177 Mo. 559, 76 S. W. 1008.

14. Contract of sale of coffin and burial robe. Dunn & Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 576.

tract obstructs or forbids its performance by the opposite party to a degree that is equivalent to a refusal of performance, the party interfered with may recover as if for full performance on his part.[15]

Interest as an element.[16]—Interest is recoverable on unliquidated damages if they are ascertainable for computation.[17] In actions against carriers, the interest allowed is allowed as damages and not as interest.[18]

Newspaper and advertising contracts.[19]—For breach by a hotel keeper of a contract to display plaintiff's advertising scheme, the damages are the amounts plaintiff would have received from advertisers for such advertising.[20]

Insurance contracts.[21]—For breach of a contract of insurance of title collateral to a mortgage, the mortgagee can recover only the actual value of the land and not the amount of the mortgage.[22] The measure of damages for failure to use a patented construction,[23] to give plaintiff the exclusive use of a machine,[24] and to renew an agreement for the sale of patented articles,[25] is discussed in the notes.

(§ 4) B. Contracts for sale or purchase of land.[26]—The damages for breach of a land contract are ordinarily the difference between the contract and market price,[27] interest, rental value and payments being considered in special cases.[28] For

22. Whiteman v. Merion Title & Trust Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 320.

23. For breach of a contract to use a patented construction, defendant agreeing to use no other, the damages are the royalties plaintiff would have received had his construction been used. Standard Fireproofing Co. v. St. Louis Expanded Metal Fireproofing Co., 177 Mo. 559, 76 S. W. 1008.

24. For breach of a contract for the exclusive use of a patented machine, the measure of damages is the additional profit made by the users by use of the machine. New York Bank Note Co. v. Hamilton Bank Note Engraving & Printing Co., 180 N. Y. 280, 73 N. E. 48.

25. For breach of a contract to renew an agreement for the sale of patented articles, the plaintiff may recover the value to him of such renewal. Herman v. William B. Pierce Co., 93 N. Y. S. 413.

26. See 3 C. L. 1007.

27. Where suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land is brought by the administrator of the vendor and the purchaser has known for years that the coal underlying the land was granted to others before his purchase was made and there is no attempt to show that there was any coal thereunder or what it was worth, he is not entitled to any deduction of purchase price on account of the previous grant. Schoonover v. Ralston, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 375.

For failure to convey land the damages are the excess of its market value at the time of the breach over the contract price. Nolde v. Gray [Neb.] 102 N. W. 759; Vallentyne v. Immigration Land Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1028.

Where the purchaser breaches a contract for the sale of land and it and the title both remain with the vendor, his damages are the difference between the contract price and market value less any payment made on the purchase price. Prichard v. Mulhall [Iowa] 103 N. W. 774; Kuntz v. Schnugg, 99 App. Div. 191, 90 N. Y. S. 933. Interest is recoverable. Harmon v. Thompson [Ky.] 84 S. W. 569.

28. Where a decree for specific performance of a contract for the exchange of property provides for equalization of the rents, interest, taxes, etc., there is no ground for a judgment for damages for failure to perform. Ragette v. Zimmer, 98 App. Div. 619, 90 N. Y. S. 221. On rescission by the vendor for default by the purchaser, the purchaser is chargeable with the fair rental value of the land during the period of his possesdefault of purchaser at sheriff's sale, it is the difference between the bid and the price realized at a resale on equal terms.[29]

(§ 4) C. Breach of covenant as to title.[30]—For breach of covenant of title, recovery may extend to the value of the property lost,[31] or the amount paid to discharge the lien,[32] and interest,[33] costs and expenses in defending it.[34]

(§ 4) D. Contracts to give lease and liabilities as between lessor and lessee.[35]—For failure of a lessor to give possession of demised premises, the damages are the market value of the leasehold interest,[36] or the difference between the agreed rental and the rental value;[37] and the damages for breach of a covenant respecting the condition of the leased premises is the difference between the value of the use of the premises in the condition as contracted to be, and the rental value in their actual condition.[38] For an unauthorized eviction, the tenant can recover the value of the unexpired term less the rent reserved.[39] The damages for a breach by the lessee of a covenant to repair are ordinarily the cost of making the repairs,[40] though the lessee may recover for a similar breach the rental value of the premises for the purpose for which rented.[41]

(§ 4) E. Contracts for sale or purchase of chattels.[42]—For breach of a contract of sale of chattels, the damages ordinarily are the difference between the contract price and the market value,[43] and for breach of a warrant of quality, recovery sion and damages for the breach, and is to be credited with all his payments and improvements. Lytle v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 402.

29. Pepper v. Deakyne [Pa.] 61 A. 805.

30. See 3 C. L. 1008.

31. Where warranty of title in a deed was broken as to part of the land, the measure of damages in the absence of fraud was such a proportion of the price as the part to which title failed bore to the entire tract, with interest. Dubay v. Kelly [Mich.] 100 N. W. 677.

32. In an action on a covenant against incumbrances, the breach being a recovery of dower by the widow of a former owner, a verdict for the amount of the judgment recovered by the widow, including costs, is not excessive. McCrillis v. Thomas [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 673. For breach of the covenant against incumbrances, the vendor may recover not only the tax but the penalty he was obliged to pay. Carswell & Co. v. Haberzettle [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 911.

33. The measure of damages for a breach of covenant is the amount necessarily paid in discharging the lien with interest from the date of payment. Lampkin v. Garwood [Ga.] 50 S. E. 171.

34. Attorney's fees in defense of the title are not recoverable for breach of warranty. Cates v. Field [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 52. Where the grantee in a warranty deed is compelled to defend his title, he is entitled to recover the sum of money paid out in such defense, though the circumstances are such that in an action for breach of covenant he is entitled only to nominal damages. Rook v. Rook, 111 Ill. App. 398. Where plaintiff purchased a building at a public sale by the government under warranty, he may recover attorneys' fees necessarily incurred in defending his title. Houser's Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 508.

35. See 3 C. L. 1008.

36. Not how much a person might imagine he could make from enjoyment of the term. Birch v. Wood, 111 Ill. App. 336. Where the damages claimed are continuing and cannot be ascertained at commencement of the action, only such as have accrued can be recovered. Refusal of lessor to allow lessee to take possession. Albey v. Weingart [N. J. Law] 58 A. 87. For breach by the lessor of a contract to lease land, the recovery may include the value of crops that would probably have been raised. King v. Griffin [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 844.

37. Andrews v. Minter [Ark.] 88 S. W. 822.

38. Kellogg v. Malick [Wis.] 103 N. W. 1116. If the contract be made for a particular use by the lessee, the rental value for that use will be the standard by which the damages will be awarded. Kellogg v. Malick [Wis.] 103 N. W. 1116. The fact that special circumstances came to the knowledge of the lessor after the execution of the lease will not take the case out of the general rule. Id. For breach of a covenant to furnish on the leased farm pasture for 100 head of cows, depreciation of cows, expense of feeding them, loss of profits on butter and milk are too remote. Id.

39. Campbell v. Howerton [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 370; Goldstein v. Asen, 91 N. Y. S. 783. Humiliation and wounded feelings cannot be recovered for. Harris v. Cleghorn, 121 Ga. 314, 48 S. E. 959.

40. Lehmaier v. Jones, 100 App. Div. 495, 91 N. Y. S. 687.

41. For breach of covenant to repair premises rented for a boarding house, the tenant may recover the rental value of rooms of which he was deprived the use during the breach. Daly v. Piza, 45 Misc. 608, 90 N. Y. S. 1071.

42. See 3 C. L. 1008.

Peck-Williamson Heating, etc., Co., 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 629; Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 168. For failure to deliver coal under a contract, stipulatiog that each month's dealings shall be regarded as a separate contract, the measure of the buyer's damage is the excess over the contract price which he was compelled to pay on the last day of each month in the open market for coal to complete the contract. Haff v. Pilling, 134 F. 294. A surety on the contract of a materialman is liable, in case of default, for the difference between the contract price and the price paid for the material in the open market. Bateman Bros. v. Mapel, 145 Cal. 241, 78 P. 734. For failure of a materialman to furnish material to build a house, the owner can recover only the difference between the contract price and the market value, not the loss of rentals from the delay in completing the building. Woolf v. Schaefer, 93 N. Y. S. 184.

Refusal to receive goods: Blair v. Ford China Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 374; Brazell v. Cohn [Mont.] 81 P. 339; Levis v. Royal Packing & Drying Co. [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1086; Mayberry v. Lilly Mill Co., 112 Tenn. 564, 85 S. W. 401. For breach of a contract to take all the timber from certain land at a certain price, the damages are the excess of the contract price over the market value of the timber left on the land. Stillwell v. Paepcke-Leicht Lumber Co. [Ark.] 84 S. W. 483. Where a contract of sale, executed or executory is broken by the buyer, the general damages, if unliquidated, are the excess of the contract price over the market value (Hardwick v. American Can Co. [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 797); but if liquidated by a fair resale on proper notice, the excess of the contract price over the amount realized by the resale, plus interest and expenses, is the measure and is conclusive on both parties (Id.). Seller cannot sue for general damages and by resale after commencement of suit recover damages on basis of resale. Id. Where the property has been inspected and accepted, or delivered on cars as per contract, the damages are the contract price. Field v. Schuster, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 82. For refusal to purchase stock as per agreement, the defendant is liable, not for the excess of contract price over market value, but for the contract price. Osgood v. Skinner, 111 Ill. App. 606. On rescission of a contract for the purchase of a stallion on the ground of breach of warranty, plaintiff cannot recover as damages expenses incident to keeping and returning him any greater sum than that claimed in his petition. Berkey v. Lefebure, 125 Iowa, 76, 99 N. W. 710. A statute prescribing a rule of damages on failure to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is not vested in the vendee, is not applicable as a rule of damages where the property has been delivered to the vendee. N. D. Rev. Codes 1899, § 4988. In such case the vendor may waive the provision as to title and elect to sue for the purchase price. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Mahon [N. D.] 101 N. W. 903.

Special damages are recoverable only where the seller had notice of the purpose for which the goods were bought. Union Foundry Works v. Columbia Iron & Steel Co., 112 Ill. App. 183. If seller knew buyer had contracted to sell goods, he may recover on the basis of the selling price, though the seller did not know the price, unless it was exorbitant. Woldert Grocery Co. v. Veltman [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 224.

Prospective profits cannot be recovered in an action for breach of contract to make delivery, where there is no evidence tending to show that plaintiff bought the property to fill a particular contract already made by him and that defendants knew of the existence of such a contract or of the intended use of such property. Walker v. Johnson, 116 Ill. App. 145. Profits are recoverable when the article purchased cannot be had in the market when and where it should have been delivered. Armeny v. Madson & Buck Co., 111 Ill. App. 621. Loss of profits on contracts entered into on the strength of a contract to sell goods is too remote to be recoverable on breach of the contract of sale. Alabama Chemical Co. v. Geiss [Ala.] 39 So. 255; Iowa Brick Mfg. Co. v. Herrick, 126 Iowa, 721, 102 N. W. 787.

44. Parker v. Fenwick, 138 N. C. 209, 50 S. E. 627. In an action for breach of contract to manufacture a safe and proper piston rod for an engine, an instruction that the proper measure of damages was the difference between the value of the rod before and after breaking is properly refused, since if the rod was defective in fact it was no more valuable before than after the defect was discovered. Rollins Engine Co. v. Eastern Forge Co. [N. H.] 59 A. 382. For breach of express warranty of a horse not returned to the seller, the measure of damages is the difference between the actual value of the horse and what his value would have been had he been sound. Collins v. Tigner [Del. Super.] 60 A. 978. Where defendants attempt to recoup on the ground that the articles furnished by plaintiff were not suitable for the purpose for which they were bought, they cannot recover the cost of tools bought for use upon the goods furnished, in the absence of proof that they could not be used for other purposes. Frederick Mfg. Co. v. Devlin [C. C. A.] 127 F. 71. Where inferior goods are delivered, the measure is the difference between the value of those actually delivered and those called for by the contract. Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard, 123 Wis. 1, 100 N. W. 1066.

45. If the purchase price is greater than the market value of the perfect article, then the purchase price is the basis. Narr v. Nor-the machine purchased conform to the contract of purchase, he may recover that sum and damages for its failure to work properly.[46] Where a purchaser refuses without legal justification to accept an article manufactured on his order, the vendor may retain it for his use and collect the contract price,[47] or if the breach occurs before the article is manufactured, he may recover the profit he would have made on it.[48]

(§ 4) F. Liability of bailees, carriers, and telegraph companies.[49]—For the loss of goods by a carrier, the shipper may recover their value,[50] and for injury[51] and delay,[52] the depreciation in value at destination,[53] less unpaid freight.[54] In case no de-man [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 122; Young v. Van Natta [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 123.

46. Masterson v. Heitmann & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 227.

47. Finkead v. Lynch, 132 F. 692.

48. Worrell v. Kinnear Mfg. Co. [Va.] 49 S. E. 988. For breach of a contract to purchase dimension granite, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the cost of performance of the contract. United Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Broadnax [C. C. A.] 136 F. 351.

49. See 3 C. L. 1010.

50. American Exp. Co. v. Jennings [Miss.] 38 So. 374. For loss of goods by the carrier, the damages are their value at destination and interest on that value from the time they should have arrived, less the unpaid costs of transportation. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Stock [Va.] 51 S. E. 161. Where live stock dies during transportation from the negligence of the carrier, the damages are the market value of the stock had it arrived at destination alive and uninjured. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Snyder [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1041.

51. For damage to stock the shipper may recover the difference between the market value of the stock as it actually arrived and what its value would have been had it arrived in an undamaged condition. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Allen [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 168; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Dolan [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 302. It is immaterial that the stock were intended not for market but for feeding. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Kyser & Sutherland [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 389. The measure of damages for injury to fruit due to improper handling is the difference between its market value in the condition in which it arrived and what it would have been had it arrived in proper condition. When it arrived during the night, the market value on the next day should be used to fix damages. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 334. For injury to an automobile in shipping, the damages are the depreciation in its value by the injury. Paterson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 621. Where horses are shipped under a declared value, the liability for injury to them is that proportion of the damage that the declared value bears to their actual value. That the horses on sale brought the full declared value and more does not entirely relieve the carrier of liability for injuries to them. United States Exp. Co. v. Joyce [Ind.] 72 N. E. 865. Where the shipper receives the whole contract price less a certain sum deducted for injuries in transit, that amount with interest is the measure of damages. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Waddell Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 647, 88 S. W. 390.

52. For unreasonable delay in transporting cattle, the shipper may recover the consequent diminution of market value. Evidence held proper. McCrary v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 82; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Dolan [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 393. Where stock was contracted for and the sale missed through the delay, the damages are the difference between the contract price and the market value on arrival. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Stewart [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 631. Evidence of damage and the amount thereof held properly received. Red River, etc., R. Co. v. Eastin [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 660, 88 S. W. 530. The statutory special damages of five per cent per month on the value of a delayed shipment for the period of delay is not recoverable where the shipment was converted by the carrier and never delivered at all. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. C. A. Rines & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1092.

When the carrier has no notice that delay in delivering goods will result in any special damages, recovery can only extend to the depreciation in market value caused by the delay. Lee v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 136 N. C. 533, 48 S. E. 809; Wesner & W. Mfg. Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 789. Baggage. Wall v. Atlantic Coast Line R. R. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 95. Traveling salesman shipping sample trunks. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Harris, 121 Ga. 707, 49 S. E. 703. A carrier losing a shipment of ice is not liable for loss of fish for the packing of which plaintiff expected to use the ice. Lewark v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 882. Carrier losing piston rod sent to be repaired is not liable for idleness of mill. American Express Co. v. Jennings [Miss.] 38 So. 374. Where an express company refused to deliver an actress her wardrobe trunk unless she paid an excessive charge, she could not recover as damages what she would have received from engagements during the wrongful detention. Brown v. Weir, 95 App. Div. 78, 88 N. Y. S. 479.

53. The market value of goods at destination and not where the damage occurred is the proper test. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Dishman [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 319. Evidence of value at some other place as point of shipment is incompetent unless there is no market value at destination. Evidence as to value held sufficient. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 479. In the absence of express consideration therefor, a provision in a contract of shipment fixing the market price at point of shipment in-preciation is shown, recovery for delay extends only to interest on the value of the shipment during the delay.[55] For misdelivery of cattle by carrier, expenses of feeding paid to the person to whom they were delivered may be recovered,[56] but not expenses of a trip by consignee to have the mistake rectified.[57] Limitation of damages in bill of lading held to contemplate only damage for injury and not damage resulting from misdelivery.[58]

For wrongful ejection of a passenger, recovery may include actual reasonable expenses, and other actual compensatory damages,[59] as well as punitive damages,[60] and mortification and humiliation from public expulsion.[61] A warranted ejection gives rise to damages if wrongfully accomplished.[62] For being carried against his will to a place not called for by his ticket, a passenger may recover any damages suffered.[63] For nondelivery and erroneous delivery of business telegrams, recovery may extend to the natural and proximate consequences.[64] Mental anguish may be recovered for failure to deliver social telegrams in some states,[65] and if the breach of stead of point of delivery as the measure of damages is void. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall. [Ark.] 86 S. W. 802. Where goods are carried to a place other than their destination, the value at such place is not the test. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Tracy [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 833. For misdelivery of cattle by carrier, decreased weight and decreased market value by the day may be recovered. Southern R. Co. v. Webb [Ala.] 39 So. 262.

54. Where suit is brought for delay and injuries to goods by a carrier, and the damages claimed are the difference in value as they should have arrived and did arrive, the amount of freight paid on the shipment is admissible. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Jarrell [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 632.

55. Lee v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 136 N. C. 533, 48 S. E. 809.

56, 57, 58. Southern R. Co. v. Webb [Ala.] 39 So. 262.

59. A passenger is not entitled to actual damages for delay of a train unless he shows some pecuniary or personal injury. Miller v. Southern R. Co., 69 Ala. 116, 48 S. E. 99. When a passenger's ticket was taken from him but he suffered no loss on account of delay thereby caused, he was entitled to recover only the price of the ticket. Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 88 N. Y. S. 377.

60. Though no unnecessary force is used. Richardson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 261; Southern Light & Traction Co. v. Compton [Miss.] 38 So. 629. So if assault accompanies ejection. Ickenroth v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 597, 77 S. W. 162.

61. Notwithstanding plaintiff might have avoided it by paying fare. Breen v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 443, 83 S. W. 998. One voluntarily leaving a train on finding that it did not stop at his station cannot recover damages for humiliation. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Knight [Ark.] 88 S. W. 1035. Insulting language by a conductor warrants recovery for injured feelings. When he refuses to return change and calls a passenger a dead beat and swindler and attracts attention of other passengers to her, her recovery is not limited to the change retained. Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 178 N. Y. 347, 70 N. E. 837.

62. Insulting language and unnecessary rudeness are. Boling v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 35.

63. Latour v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 265; Memphis St. R. Co. v. Shaw, 110 Tenn. 467, 75 S. W. 713. Punitive damages cannot be given where a passenger was carried by his station when there was evidence that a stop was made and other passengers alighted. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 82 Miss. 656, 35 So. 168.

64. Where two telegraphic bids for goods are sent on the same day, but through the negligence of the telegraph company the higher one is not delivered until the next day and after the market price has fallen below both bids, the measure of damages is not the difference between the highest bid and the market value, but the difference between the two bids. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Love-Banks Co. [Ark.] 83 S. W. 949. Where a telegram is changed in transmission so that plaintiff's offer of goods is made at a lower price than he intended and the offer is accepted and filled before discovery of the mistake, he can recover of the telegraph company the difference lost. Fisher v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1179.

65. Willis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 69 S. C. 531, 48 S. E. 538; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Porterfield [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 850; Green v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 165; Id. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 171. Mere "disappointment and regret" is not mental anguish for which damages may be recovered, and the mental anguish arising from the loss of a relative is no part of the mental anguish recoverable for on failure to deliver a telegram announcing it. Hancock v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 N. C. 497, 49 S. E. 952. Damages may extend only to results naturally to be anticipated. Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 S. C. 539, 50 S. E. 198; Capers v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 537. Where plaintiff was not prevented by non-delivery of a telegram from attending the funeral of a relative, she cannot recover for mental anguish endured before she obtained a postponement of the funeral. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reed [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 296. Daughter may recover for grief at not being able to see father's remains. Thomas duty was willful, punitive damages may be awarded;[66] but recovery cannot extend beyond the natural and proximate results of the breach, either in business or personal matters.[67]

v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 760.

NOTE. Damages for mental anguish: "The following is the present status of the doctrine in the different states, as far as we have been able to ascertain: Its history in the state of Texas, where it was first specifically announced, may be briefly stated as follows: The first case in that court is the celebrated one of So Relle v. Telegraph Co., 55 Tex. 308, 40 Am. Rep. 805. There it was held that there could be a recovery in such cases. The next cases were Railway Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 542, 46 Am. Rep. 269, and Id., 59 Tex. 563, 46 Am. Rep. 278. These cases were construed by the profession as in some respects modifying the doctrine in the first case. The question again arose in Stuart v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 66 Tex. 580, 18 S. W. 351, 59 Am. Rep. 623, and the rule announced in So Relle's Case was followed. That case was very thoroughly considered, and the decision then made has settled the law in that state upon the main question. Its reports show some 50 cases since in which the doctrine has been followed without question.

In Tennessee the doctrine was first announced in Wadsworth v. Telegraph Co., 86 Tenn. 695, 8 S. W. 574, 6 Am. St. Rep. 864, and has been reaffirmed in Telegraph Co. v. Mellon, 96 Tenn. 72, 33 S. W. 725, and Gray v. Telegraph Co., 108 Tenn. 39, 64 S. W. 1063, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706, 56 L. R. A. 301.

In Alabama the doctrine was expressly recognized in Telegraph Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 7 So. 419, 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, but seems to have been somewhat modified in the more recent case of Telegraph Co. v. Crumpton, 138 Ala. 632, 36 So. 517, which appears to be the latest decision upon the subject.

In Kentucky the leading case in which such damages are allowed is Chapman v. Telegraph Co., 90 Ky. 265, 13 S. W. 880. The doctrine is affirmed in the later cases of Telegraph Co. v. Van Cleave, 107 Ky. 464, 54 S. W. 827, 92 Am. St. Rep. 366, and Telegraph Co. v. Fisher, 107 Ky. 513, 54 S. W. 830.

In Iowa damages for mental anguish unaccompanied by physical pain are allowed. The leading case is Mentzer v. Telegraph Co., 93 Iowa, 752, 62 N. W. 1, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 28 L. R. A. 72, a carefully considered case, which has been widely cited. This case stood as the only expression of that court upon the subject until the recent case of Cowan v. Telegraph Co., 98 N. W. 281, 64 L. R. A. 545.

In Louisiana such damages are allowed. The leading and most recent case is Graham v. Telegraph Co., 34 So. 91.

In South Carolina they are also allowed. At first the doctrine was denied in Lewis v. Telegraph Co., 57 S. C. 325, 35 S. E. 556. This case was followed by an act of the legislature (23 St. at Large, 748; Civ. Code 1902, vol. 1, § 2223) permitting damages in such cases. This statute was held to be constitutional in Simmons v. Telegraph Co., 63 S. C. 429, 41 S. E. 521, 57 L. R. A. 607, which has subsequently been uniformly followed.

In Nevada the doctrine has been recently adopted in the case of Barnes v. Telegraph Co., 76 P. 931, 65 L. R. A. 666, in an able and learned opinion by Fitzgerald, J.

In Washington there does not appear to be any decision upon a telegraph case, but the principle is fully recognized in Davis v. Tacoma R. & Power Co., 35 Wash. 203, 77 P. 209, in which telegraph cases are cited with approval.

The doctrine is denied in the following states, as is shown by the most recent cases:

Florida: Telegraph Co. v. Saunders, 32 Fla. 434, 14 So. 148, 21 L. R. A. 810, apparently the only case upon the subject in that state.

Georgia: Chapman v. Telegraph Co., 88 Ga. 763, 15 S. E. 901, 30 Am. St. Rep. 183, 17 L. R. A. 420; Giddens v. Telegraph Co., 111 Ga. 824, 35 S. E. 638.

Illinois: Telegraph Co. v. Haltom, 71 Ill. App. 63. The question does not appear to have come before the supreme court of that state.

Kansas: West v. Telegraph Co., 39 Kan. 93, 17 P. 807, 7 Am. St. Rep. 530, appears to be the latest telegraph case in that state involving the question; but that case has been reaffirmed in Railway Company v. Dalton, 65 Kan. 661, 70 P. 645.

Minnesota: Francis v. Telegraph Co., 58 Minn. 252, 59 N. W. 1078, 49 Am. St. Rep. 507, 25 L. R. A. 406, which is the only case in that state.

Mississippi: Telegraph Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748, 9 So. 823, 24 Am. St. Rep. 300, 13 L. R. A. 859. This case has apparently been doubted in one or two subsequent cases which, however, are not directly in point.

Ohio: Morton v. Telegraph Co., 53 Ohio St. 431, 41 N. E. 689, 53 Am. St. Rep. 648, 32 L. R. A. 735, seems to be the only case in that state involving the question.

West Virginia: Davis v. Telegraph Co., 46 W. Va. 48, 32 S. E. 1026.

Wisconsin: Summerfield v. Telegraph Co., 87 Wis. 1, 57 N. W. 973, 41 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Virginia: Connelly v. Telegraph Co., 100 Va. 51, 40 S. E. 618, 93 Am. St. Rep. 919, 56 L. R. A. 663. In this state a statute was passed upon the subject, which apparently failed of its purpose.

In the following states there have been no decisions in telegraph cases upon the question, so far as we have been able to ascertain: Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont and Wyoming." —Per Douglas, J., in Green v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 165.

(§ 4) G. Contracts for services.[68]—For failure to perform services, the measure is generally the expense over the contract price made necessary by the breach;[69] and for incomplete performance,[70] the measure is generally the expense over the contract price made necessary by the default, while for delay in performance, recovery may extend to damages reasonably within contemplation of the parties.[71] Nonperformance of certain special services may involve damages not within the general rules.[72] Where the contractor fails of entire performance, he can recover only the reasonable value of that which he has performed less the hirer's damages for nonperformance.[73] For failure to accept services as agreed, the damages are the difference between the contract price and what it would cost plaintiff to perform,[74] or in case

[S. C.] 50 S. E. 279; Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 S. C. 539, 50 S. E. 198; Capers v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S C.] 50 S. E. 537; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Siddall [Tex.] 86 S. W. 343. Expense of railroad trip home to see about health of family made necessary by failure to forward telegrams is not recoverable. Hilley v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Miss.] 37 So. 556.

68. See 3 C. L. 1012.

69. Brown v. Cowles [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1020; Degnon-McLean Const. Co. v. City Trust, Safe Deposit & Surety Co., 99 App. Div. 195, 90 N. Y. S. 1029. For failure to put up cornice the hirer cannot recover the cost of putting it up, but only what it would cost him over the contract price. New York Metal Ceiling Co. v. City Homes Imp. Co., 88 N. Y. S. 233. The difference between the price to be paid by the owner to a contractor and that to be paid by him to a subcontractor, upon a contract wholly executory, is not an available measure of damages in an action on such executory contract. Levenson v. Bollowa, 85 N. Y. S. 386.

70. Where plaintiff has substantially performed and the contract provided for payment before beginning work, defendant's damages for defects in performance are the detriment suffered by him. Carpenter v. Ibbetson [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1114.

71. For delay in the completion of bridges to be used on extensions of plaintiff's railway system, which extensions could have been but were not completed at the appointed time because of the noncompletion of the bridges, plaintiff can recover interest on the amount expended in building the extensions from the time stipulated or the time thereafter when expenditures were made until the time of completion. American Bridge Co. v. Camden Interstate R. Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 323. For delay in obtaining right of way over which plaintiff agreed to construct a canal, plaintiff can recover the market rental value of equipment during the time it was necessarily idle. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. McMahon & Montgomery Co., 110 Ill. App. 510.

72. The measure for failure to erect a building is the excess of its reasonable value if erected over the contract price. Owner may recover the damages, though he does not erect it. Simons v. Wittmann [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 791. For failure of a water company to supply a consumer, he can recover the fair value of the labor employed in procuring water from another source. Whitehouse v. Staten Island Water Supply Co., 101 App. Div. 112, 91 N. Y. S. 544. For breach of a contract to supply funds to construct a pipe line, plaintiffs may recover all expenses incurred subsequent to the execution of the contract and before breach, but not those incurred after. Smith v. Curran & Hussey, 138 F. 150. Where a contractor through his own negligence brings the work he has undertaken to perform into such a condition that he is unable to complete it, and thereupon abandons it, he is liable for the loss resulting to the contracting party, including the amount reasonably expended in minimizing the loss. Hammond Oil & Development Co. v. Feitel [La.] 38 So. 941. For failure of an agent to purchase chattels at a foreclosure sale unless more than a certain sum is bid, the measure of damages is the difference between the fair cash market value and the amount for which they sold. Dazey v. Roleau, 111 Ill. App. 367. Where a dyer does his work so badly that the material is rendered valueless to the owner, he cannot recover the full value unless he also shows that it is absolutely valueless. Emmerich v. Chegnay, 92 N. Y. S. 336.

73. Woodford v. Kelley [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1069.

74. Withers v. New York, 92 App. Div. 147, 86 N. Y. S. 1105; Wood v. Wack, 31 Ind. App. 252, 67 N. E. 562. That from plaintiff's situation the cost to him would be unusually small is immaterial. Campbell v. Howerton [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 370. Where plaintiff has partly performed, he can recover the value of the services rendered and the profit on the balance. Anderson v. Hilker [Wash.] 80 P. 848; Chase v. Smith, 35 Wash. 631, 77 P. 1069. When a party who has entered upon the performance of a contract and incurred expense therein is prevented from completing it by the other party, without fault of his own, his damage consists of the amount of such expenses and the profits he would have made. May recover expenses on quantum meruit, where timber contract abrogated by dissolution of corporation with which it was made. Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & Lumber Co., 55 W. Va. 604, 48 S. E. 442. Where a contractor, by reason of the termination of a partly executed contract, is entitled to compensation for services and outlay, part of which have been expended in permanent improvements, such services and expenditures are not apportioned between the executed and executory portions of the con-of personal services the excess of the contract price over what plaintiff was able to earn elsewhere during the period.[75] For breach of a contract to employ plaintiff to collect certain claims, plaintiff can recover the agreed compensation without proof of services performed or of their reasonable value.[76]

(§ 4) H. Promise of marriage.[77]

§ 5. Measure and elements of damages for torts. A. Miscellaneous torts.[78]—Under allegation and proof of a willful tort, actual as well as punitive damages are recoverable, and actual damages may be recovered on proper proof, though there is no proof of willfulness.[79] Interest is recoverable in a proper case.[80] No recovery can be had for mere mental suffering unaccompanied by any physical injury,[81] or other actual damage;[82] but fright may be considered an element of damage when accompanied by a severe physical shock.[83]

Injuries to animals.[84]—For injury to horses, the damages are their reasonable hire during incapacity to work, permanent depreciation in value, and cost of treatment, not exceeding in all their reasonable value before injury.[85]

tract. Id. The fact that by means of such improvements the contractor also does work for others is immaterial. Id. Where defendant agreed to pay a contractor a certain amount for painting his house and also to retain from the contract price the price of materials furnished by plaintiff and the contractor defaulted, plaintiff was entitled to complete the job, and on defendant's refusal was entitled to recover the amount due for materials not exceeding the balance due the contractor, less the reasonable cost of completion. 80. Interest is not recoverable on damages in actions ex delicto where no pecuniary benefit can accrue by reason of the injury. Gerst v. St. Louis, 185 Mo. 191, 84 S. W. 34. In estimating the damages for injury to an oil well by negligent shooting, the jury may properly take into consideration the facts that the well was run as one of a system of small wells and also that the ordinary and usual result of shooting was to improve them. Donnan v. Pennsylvania Torpedo Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 324. In an action of tort for unliquidated damages, the question of awarding interest is in the discretion of the jury (Nichols v. Coleman, 96 App. Div. 353, 89 N. Y. S. 234; Feller v. McKillip [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 641), unless by stipulation it is left to the court (Nichols v. Coleman, 96 App. Div. 353, 89 N. Y. S. 234). Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2869, providing that on a trial for damages the jury may award interest, such an allowance is discretionary with them and an instruction to allow interest is erroneous. Feller v. McKillip [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 641.

81. Cole v. Gray [Kan.] 79 P. 654; Newton v. New York, etc., R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 825; Pullman Co. v. Kelly [Miss.] 38 So. 317. No recovery can be had for fright alone unaccompanied by any physical injury. Night terrors to child caused by burning of sister in his sight. Fleming v. Lobel [N. J. Law] 59 A. 28. May be included in assault and battery. Happy v. Prichard [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 655.

82. The sense of outrage and mental suffering resulting directly from the willful mutilation by defendant of the body of plaintiff's deceased parent are proper independent elements of compensatory damages. Koerber v. Patek [Wis.] 102 N. W. 40, reviewing many cases involving injury to feelings. Mental anguish may be recovered for in some states when caused by nondelivery of a telegram. Willis v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 538; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Porterfield [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 850; Thomas v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 760; Hancock v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 N. C. 497, 49 S. E. 952. Plaintiff driven from train at point of pistol by intoxicated passengers and compelled to walk home held not precluded from recovery on ground that his damages consisted of mental anguish only. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Henderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1065.

84. See 3 C. L. 1013.

85. Instruction held erroneous for failure to limit recovery to value before injury. Georgia R. & Elec. Co. v. Wallace & Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 478. For injury to animals from which they partly recovered, the measure is the difference in value, the expense of effecting the cure, and the loss of use. Southern R. Co. v. Gilmer [Ala.] 39 So. 265.

86, 87. See 3 C. L. 1014.

False imprisonment.[87]—Substantial damages are recoverable for false imprisonment.[88]

Malicious prosecution.[89]—For wrongful attachment, both actual and exemplary damages are recoverable,[90] and where property was seized under a writ of replevin wrongfully and maliciously sued out for the purpose of extorting money, damages for injuries to the feelings of the owner are recoverable;[91] but plaintiff cannot recover for the expense of storing the goods after they were returned to him by virtue of the judgment in the replevin suit.[92] Attorney's fees and the expense of attending court in the suit maliciously brought are recoverable.[93]

Infringements of patents and trade-marks and unfair competition.[94]

Interference with water rights.[95]

Expulsion from association.[96]

Fraud and deceit.—The true measure of damages suffered by one who has been fraudulently induced to purchase or exchange property in some jurisdictions is the difference in actual value between what he gives and what he receives;[97] in others it is the difference in value between the property received and what it would have been had it been as represented.[98] The measure of damages for fraud and deceit is unaffected by the relation of principal and agent between the parties.[99]

(§ 5) B. Loss of, or injuries to, property.[1]—For permanent injury to land, the measure of damages is the difference between the fair cash market value immediately before and immediately after the injury,[2] or the expense of remedying the injury,[3]

Mississippi & Rum River Boom Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 879. Poisoning waters of stream. Watson v. Colusa-Parrot Mining & Smelting Co. [Mont.] 79 P. 14. Change of grade. Whitehead v. Manor Borough, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 314. Operation of foundry and iron works. Farver v. American Car & Foundry Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 579. Negligent fire burning over meadow and timber lot. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Fenstermaker, 163 Ind. 534, 72 N. E. 561. Pollution of stream, killing fish, etc. West Muncie Strawboard Co. v. Slack [Ind.] 72 N. E. 879. Deposit of barren earth on land causing permanent injury. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Quillen, 34 Ind. App. 330, 72 N. E. 661. Where the operation of a railroad results in a direct physical injury to neighboring property, a right of action exists and the damage therefor may include all other elements of injury, such as noise naturally arising from the operation of the road. Davenport, etc., R. Co. v. Sinnet, 111 Ill. App. 75; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Trustees of Schools, 112 Ill. App. 488, rvd. 212 Ill. 406, 72 N. E. 39; Kuhn v. Illinois Central R. Co., 111 Ill. App. 323. Does not include danger that adults or children may be killed while upon tracks. Davenport, etc., R. Co. v. Sinnet, 111 Ill. App. 75. In an action for injury to real property arising from the construction of a railroad, special damages are allowable on account of any special value of the property for a particular purpose. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Trustees of Schools, 112 Ill. App. 488. In an action for injuries to land by flooding, the fact that it has never been platted for building lots does not render evidence of its probable use for that purpose as a criterion of damages inadmissible. McGroarty v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 570. For deprivation of lateral support the damages are limited to the injury to the land without regard to the buildings thereon. Jones v. Greenfield, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 315; Ruppert v. West Side Belt R. Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 613. Where the wrong is the cutting of timber specially valuable to the land as shade trees, the damages are the diminution in the value of the land. Eldridge v. Gorman, 77 Conn. 699, 60 A. 643. Increase in value of land since the injuries from other causes should not be included. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Dennis [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 860. Permanent depreciation of a building may be recovered for where an excavation is made by and for nonpermanent injuries resulting in the loss of crops or use of land, the damages are the value of the crops,[4] or of the use[5] respectively.[6] Where the building of a railroad embankment changes the course of a stream and overflows plaintiff's land and compels him to build new roads and bridges, the cost of such improvements may be recovered.[7] For negligent destruction of a vessel, the damages are the value of the vessel at the time it was destroyed, with interest to the time of the trial. Prospective profits on its earnings cannot be considered.[8] For injuries to personal property, the measure of damages is the difference in value before or at the time of injury and after.[9]

(§ 5) C. Maintaining nuisance.[10]—For a continuing nuisance as distinguished from a permanent injury, the measure of damages is the depreciation in rental value;[11] but if the injury be permanent the damages are the depreciation in the value of the property.[12] Where a nuisance is temporary in character, recovery cannot be an adjoining owner so close as to injure it. Gerst v. St. Louis, 185 Mo. 191, 84 S. W. 34.

3. Davelaar v. Milwaukee [Wis.] 101 N. W. 361. If defendant desires an instruction presenting this theory, he must request it. Osborne v. Mississippi & Rum River Boom Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 879. Damages may be limited to the cost of remedying the injury unless that would be more than the value of the land, in which case the value of the land becomes the measure of damages. Welliver v. Pennsylvania Canal Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 79; Herron v. Jones & Laughlin Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 226. The cost of restoring land to its former condition is the measure of damages when such cost is less than the diminution in value, if such cost would exceed the diminution, then the latter is the correct measure. Enid & A. R. Co. v. Wiley, 14 Okl. 310, 78 P. 96; City of Covington v. Berry [Ky.] 87 S. W. 317. For injuring a gas well by negligent shooting, the damages are either the cost of repair, the value of the well, or the expense of drilling a new one, whichever would be the least expensive. Donnan v. Pennsylvania Torpedo Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 324. Where defendant claims that a body of water it has obstructed is not navigable or a public highway, plaintiff's damages are not limited to the cost of removing the obstruction and the increased expense of his business made necessary by the delay for such time as was necessary for the removal, but he may recover for all the cost made necessary by the delay during the whole period of actual obstruction. Creech v. Humptulips, etc., Co., 37 Wash. 172, 79 P. 633.

4. Rule for estimating value of crop, annual and perennial. Candler v. Washoe Lake Reservoir & G. C. Ditch Co. [Nev.] 80 P. 751. The measure of damages in the case of destruction of growing crops is their value at the time of such destruction; the value being estimated upon what was reasonably probable as to their maturity and their value at that time. City of Chicago v. Dickman, 105 Ill. App. 209. For overflowing willow land with salt water, the crop being perennial, defendant is liable only for the crop destroyed, not for four successive crops. Black v. Highland Solar Salt Co., 98 App. Div. 409, 90 N. Y. S. 338.

5. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 110 Ill. App. 626; Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. Alderman, 113 Ill. App. 23. The diminution in rental value. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Quillen, 34 Ind. App. 330, 72 N. E. 661. For injury to property by the overflowing of a sewer, the damages are the depreciation in rental value. Ahrens v. Rochester, 97 App. Div. 480, 90 N. Y. S. 744. The value of plaintiff's property and the expense of moving, not the amount paid for other premises, would control. Herron v. Jones & Laughlin Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 226. Depreciation of flow of water to mill. Pickens v. Coal River Boom & Timber Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 872.

6. Partial obstruction of stream causing overflow at flood time does not authorize recovery on basis of permanent injury. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1052.

7. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Gurley [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 842.

9. Injury to cattle by fire. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Willard, 111 Ill. App. 225. For damage to goods by overflow of a sewer, the recovery may extend to the lessening of value of the goods. City of Houston v. Reichardt [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 74.

10. See 3 C. L. 1016.

11. Muncie Pulp Co. v. Martin [Ind.] 72 N. E. 882; Pickens v. Coal River Boom & Timber Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 873; Gerow v. Liberty, 94 N. Y. S. 949; Ahrens v. Rochester, 97 App. Div. 480, 90 N. Y. S. 744; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Quillen [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 661. The collection and discharge of water on the land is temporary. Is abatable, and its continuance will not be presumed. Id. Plaintiff cannot recover permanent or fee damages for a continuance of the nuisance. Van Veghten v. Hudson River Power Transmission Co., 92 N. Y. S. 956. The damages to the lessee of a hotel for the maintenance of a nuisance in the vicinity are measured by the injury to its usable value. The diminution of rental value is only one element of damages. Pritchard v. Edison Elec. Illuminating Co., 179 N. Y. 364, 72 N. E. 243; afd. 92 App. Div. 178, 87 N. Y. S. 225. See 3 C. L. 1016, n. 15-17.

had for injuries sustained after suit begun,[13] and where a life tenant sues for injury resulting from the maintenance of a continuing nuisance, the damages, notwithstanding defendant's election to have the tort treated as a permanent one, cannot include the permanent injury to the property, but can only be assessed to the time of the trial.[14]

(§ 5) D. Trespass on lands.[15]—For cutting timber, in the absence of special injury to the land, the measure of damages is the value of the trees for timber or fuel.[16] For wrongfully and without consent using plaintiff's roof to string telephone wires on, he can recover the reasonable rental value of the roof for that purpose.[17]

(§ 5) E. Conversion.[18]—The measure of damages in an action of trover is the market value of the property at the time and place of the conversion, with interest to the day of trial.[19] For conversion of household goods the damages are not restricted to the price which could be obtained by a sale in market, but the owner

Stock. Hagar v. Norton [Mass.] 73 N. E. 1073. Where a chattel in possession of a mortgagee is wrongfully taken in attachment by a creditor of the mortgagor, the mortgagee may recover the value of the chattel at the time of the taking. Aldrich v. Higgins, 77 Conn. 370, 59 A. 498. For an invalid attempt at foreclosure of a chattel morgage on live stock amounting to a conversion, defendant is liable for its value at the time of seizure unreduced by expenses of keeping between seizure and sale, or the value of stock dying in the interim. Kellogg v. Malick [Wis.] 103 N. W. 1116. A defendant selling securities belonging to his wife is liable for the currency price in the state where sold at the time of sale. Gittings v. Winter [Md.] 60 A. 630. Where a broker who has purchased and is holding stocks at the option of a buyer makes an unauthorized sale of them, he is liable for the excess, if any, over the price realized of the lowest sum for which the client could have purchased the stocks after notice of the sale had he given an order to that effect with reasonable promptness, or for which he did repurchase acting with reasonable promptness after notice. In case of fluctuations in the market price between the day of the conversion and the latest day to which it would have been reasonable to defer a repurchase, the damages would be the excess over the price obtained of the highest price attained during such interval. Wiggin v. Federal Stock & Grain Co., 77 Conn. 507, 59 A. 607. The measure of damages for the conversion of a life insurance policy when there is no evidence to the contrary is the face value of the policy with interest from date of conversion. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Allen, 212 Ill. 134, 72 N. E. 200. In Montana the damages are presumed to be the value of the property at the time of conversion with interest, or the highest value between time of conversion and date of verdict without interest. Civ. Code Mont. § 4333. Thornton-Thomas Mercantile Co. v. Bretherton [Mont.] 80 P. 10. For conversion of property by a carrier at destination, the damages are the value of the property there less the unpaid freight charges. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. C. H. Rines & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1092. Conversion of corn. Hanaway v. Wiseman [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 681, 88 S. W. 437. If a landlord has gathered a crop, measure of damages for conversion by him is value of crop less cost of fertilizer and the cost of taking care of the same. Parker v. Brown, 136 N. C. 280, 48 S. E. 657. If conversion of timber is not willful, the general rule applies. If the trespass was intentional, the value at the time the suit is brought determines the amount of damages. Trustees of Dartmouth College v. International Paper Co., 132 F. 92. Defendant under a grant from plaintiff necessarily in removing coal removes iron pyrites. Measure of damage is value of property at mouth of pit less the cost of the digging of the iron pyrites and of separating it from merchantable coal. Smoot v. Consolidated Coal Co., 114 Ill. App. 512.

should recover their actual value to him not including sentimental or fanciful value.[20] For the conversion of railroad bonds which have no market value, the measure is their proportionate part of the intrinsic value of the property on which they were a first lien.[21] The measure of a mortgagee's damages for the conversion of the mortgaged property by a stranger is the amount of his debt if that is less than the value of the property.[22]

(§ 5) F. Wrongful taking or detention of property.[23]—For wrongful seizure of property on execution,[24] or wrongful attachment, defendant may recover all accruing damages,[25] including the value of property unreturned.[26] For detention of property, interest on its value and damages for depreciation are ordinarily the measure, but where the use of the property is valuable, the value of the use with deterioration may be the measure.[27]

(§ 5) G. Libel or slander.[28]—Punitive as well as compensatory damages,[29] including mental suffering,[30] are recoverable for malicious libel or slander.

(§ 5) H. Personal Injuries.[31]—For an assault one may recover for injuries to his person, his medical bill, his loss of time, and mental suffering, and, if the as-

24. One unlawfully conducting a saloon without a license cannot recover for the wrongful levy of an execution thereon the wages paid his bartender and porter, but may recover the value of beer spoiled during the time the place was withheld from him and also the use of his house in which the business was conducted. Young v. Stevenson [Ark.] 86 S. W. 1000.

25. Perishable goods lost. W. F. Vandiver & Co. v. Waller [Ala.] 39 So. 136. Where an attachment is wrongfully sued out, time spent by defendant in employing and advising with counsel for the defense of the suit, time and money spent in procuring a delivery bond, and the value of the necessary use of defendant's team in making trips to consult counsel are proper elements of damage. Tullis v. McClary [Iowa] 104 N. W. 505.

26. For wrongful seizure of property on execution, a mortgagee may recover the value of the property up to the amount of his debt with interest. Gallick v. Bordeaux [Mont.] 78 P. 583. For wrongful attachment of a stock of goods, the damages are their actual value at the time and place of seizure. Rule where stock includes old and shelf worn goods (State v. Parsons [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1019), and the expense of dissolving the attachment, but not the expense of trying the main case thereafter (Id.).

27. If use would wear it out, as a machine, and it was not used, the deterioration naturally arising from use during the period of detention should be deducted. Ocala Foundry & Mach. Works v. Lester [Fla.] 38 So. 51; Muller v. Ocala Foundry & Mach. Works [Fla.] 38 So. 64. For the wrongful and premature foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, plaintiff may recover the value of the use of the property during the time it was out of his possession. Tanton v. Boomgaarden, 111 Ill. App. 37. In replevin for a heifer, defendant on recovering damages is entitled to the value of her use during the period of detention under the writ, without deduction for her increase in value during that time. McGrath v. Wilder [Vt.] 60 A. 801. Where defendant in replevin succeeds and has judgment for return of the property, he is also entitled to his damages which include the decrease in the value of the goods during their detention, and interest on their value. Cox v. Burdett, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 346. Where there is a judgment for return in replevin and some of the goods are not returned and others are returned in a damaged condition, defendant's damages are the value of the goods not returned and the deterioration of those returned with interest. Franks v. Matson, 211 Ill. 338, 71 N. E. 1011. Where butter and eggs are wrongfully levied on, the damages are the difference between their value when seized and when returned to the owner. Barber v. Dewes, 101 App. Div. 432, 91 N. Y. S. 1059. The measure in replevin for a cow that plaintiff intended to use in his business is her usable value. Smith v. Stevens [Colo.] 81 P. 35.

The recovery extends to reasonable value of physician's services unless the charge made is less than the reasonable value, in which case it cannot exceed the charge made. Nelson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 781. An injured person may recover the reasonable value of nursing given him by a widowed daughter who lived with him, though there was no express contract between them that she should be compensated. Kaiser v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 708, 84 S. W. 199. Recovery by minor, see ante, § 3.

36. Northern Commercial Co. v. Nestor [C. C. A.] 138 F. 383. Loss of earning power may be considered where plaintiff shows she has been employed as a nurse at certain wages, that she gave up that occupation to keep house for her son, and that since her injury it has become necessary to employ another person at stated wages to take her place as housekeeper. Olin v. Bradford, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 7. Damages for an injury due to the fault of another cannot be reduced by the amount of sick benefits paid to the one injured; nor where sick benefits are waived in order to receive full wages; but the equivalent of such wages cannot be again awarded by the jury, as a special item of compensatory damages. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Fagin, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 30, 15 Ohio N. P. 605. Loss of earning power cannot be ignored because plaintiff's employer continues to pay him his wages as a gratuity. Quigley v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 210 Pa. 162, 59 A. 958. Plaintiff may testify as to his occupation, his compensation, and that he could not follow his occupation because of the accident. McCarthy v. Philadelphia & R. Co. [Pa.] 60 A. 778. Plaintiff may not recover loss of profits from his business where the earnings do not proceed entirely from his labor, but involved the use of his store, a truck, capital and the labor of hired men. Jonas v. Interurban St. R. Co., 45 Misc. 579, 90 N. Y. S. 1070; Tanzer v. New York City R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 334. Plaintiff cannot recover for loss of time where he has suffered no pecuniary loss from it. Shanahan v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 783. Evidence held sufficient to justify verdict for lost time. Texas & P. R. Co. v. McDowell [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 415.

37. City of Chicago v. Davies, 110 Ill. App. 427; Peterson v. Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., 131 F. 156; Northern Commercial Co. v. Nestor [C. C. A.] 138 F. 383; Jones v. New York, etc., R. Co., 99 App. Div. 1, 90 N. Y. S. 422; Waechter v. St. Louis & M. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 147; Fuchs v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 458. One suffering from injuries to the person may recover for mental distress and anguish resulting from the same cause. Maynard v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 78 P. 983. There is no fixed rule for the measure of damages for mental anguish, apart from physical suffering, and much must be left to the jury under proper instructions. Powell v. Nevada, etc., R. Co. [Nev.] 78 P. 978. Mortification and distress of mind from contemplation of the crippled condition is too remote. Southern Pac. Co. v. Hetzer [C. C. A.] 135 F. 272; Maynard v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 78 P. 983. See 3 C. L. 1019, n. 59. May include mental anguish, the sense of loss and burden. the inconvenience and the embarrassment. Rice v. Council Bluffs, 124 Iowa, 639, 100 N. W. 506. Mental pain may be inferred from physical suffering. Galveston City R. Co. v. Chapman [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 856.

ing power,[38] permanent impairment of mental and physical powers,[39] and future pain and suffering,[40] which the evidence shows are reasonably certain to result from the injury;[41] but possible or even probable future effects are too remote and speculative to form any basis of legal injury.[42]

§ 6. Inadequate and excessive damages.[43]—Verdicts showing willful disregard of the testimony will not be permitted to stand, whether excessive[44] or inade-

38. Northern Commercial Co. v. Nestor [C. C. A.] 138 F. 383; Jones v. New York, etc., R. Co., 99 App. Div. 1, 90 N. Y. S. 422; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Teeters [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1014. The age of the person, his situation in life, his condition of health and habits of industry, and profits derived from the management of a business resulting from the personal attention and labor of the owner, as distinguished from profits arising from invested capital, may, in proper cases, be considered in determining earning power. Simpson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 210 Pa. 101, 59 A. 693. Where there is a complete destruction of earning power, the pecuniary loss is theoretically estimated by the capital which, at a fair rate of interest, will produce a yearly sum equal to the average wages likely to be earned during plaintiff's expectancy of life, less such a sum as at compound interest for the same period will equal and offset such sum. Peterson v. Roessler & Hasslacher Co., 131 F. 156; Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason [Ga.] 51 S. E. 569. The earnings of plaintiff for several years past may be shown as to his earning capacity, though at the time of the injury he had not been employed for two months. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Dougherty, 209 Ill. 241, 70 N. E. 586. Such earnings for remote years not admissible. Chicago & J. Elec. R. Co. v. Spence, 213 Ill. 220, 72 N. E. 796. There must be evidence showing with reasonable certainty that the permanent injury was in fact sustained. Goken v. Dallugge [Neb.] 103 N. W. 287. Instruction held not bad as allowing recovery without proof. McCarthy v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 317, 83 S. W. 298. Plaintiff is not limited to recovery on basis of occupation he was pursuing at time of injury. Dallas Consol. Elec. R. Co. v. Hardy [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1053.

39. Pumorlo v. Merrill [Wis.] 103 N. W. 464. Loss of memory and impairment of mental power are proper elements. Nichols v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Utah] 78 P. 866.

40. City of Chicago v. Davies, 110 Ill. App. 427; West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Dougherty, 110 Ill. App. 204; Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co. v. Ullrich, 213 Ill. 170, 72 N. E. 815; Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 481. Instruction held proper as authorizing recovery for future suffering and not permanent injury. Achey v. Marion [Iowa] 101 N. W. 435. Where injuries are such that they are necessarily certain to continue to cause pain and suffering, the fact that they are not shown to be permanent does not preclude consideration of future pain and anguish. Haxton v. Kansas City [Mo.] 88 S. W. 714. The issue of probable future suffering is presented where plaintiff has lost one leg nearly to the knee, the great toe of the other foot and sustained a deep scalp wound, though at the time of the trial the wounds are entirely healed. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Nesbit [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 656, 88 S. W. 891. Physical disfigurement is not an element. Cullen v. Higgins, 216 Ill. 78, 74 N. E. 698.

41. City of Chicago v. Davies, 110 Ill. App. 427; Shaw v. Seattle [Wash.] 81 P. 1057; Norfolk R. & Light Co. v. Spratley, 103 Va. 379, 49 S. E. 502; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 110 Ill. App. 304; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Lester [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 401; Pentoney v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. 681, 84 S. W. 140; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Batchler [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 902; Newport L. & A. Turnpike Co. v. Pirmann, 26 Ky. L. R. 933, 82 S. W. 976. Recovery must be limited to reasonably certain results; and not extend to speculative, contingent or probable effects. Waddell v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 765. Instruction enumerating elements recoverable for held to state them properly. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Dougherty, 110 Ill. App. 204; Olson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 102 N. W. 449; City of Chicago v. Davies, 110 Ill. App. 427. Evidence of likelihood of climacteric of woman 40 years old occurring before recovery held sufficient to go to jury. Keefe v. Norfolk Suburban St. R. Co., 185 Mass. 247, 70 N. E. 46. Instruction held not bad as ignoring boundary of reasonable certainty. Central Texas & N. W. R. Co. v. Gibson [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 862. Use of word "likely" and "probably" in instructions held not bad. Holden v. Missouri R. Co., 108 Mo. App. 665, 84 S. W. 133; Pentoney v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 681, 84 S. W. 140.

42. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 110 Ill. App. 304. Experts cannot state what "might" result. Briggs v. New York, etc., R. Co., 177 N. Y. 59, 69 N. E. 223. Evidence as to possible future conditions as the result of an accident is inadmissible as too remote and speculative. Damages due to hernia caused by an accident must be based upon actual condition, and not upon the possibility of the hernia becoming strangulated and causing death. City of Chicago v. Lamb, 105 Ill. App. 204. $6,000 to child 10 years old based on testimony of specialist that as puberty approached he would develop insanity or epilepsy held obviously speculative. Fleming v. Lobel [N. J. Law] 59 A. 28. Evidence must show such a degree of probability of their occurring as amounts to reasonable certainty. MacGregor v. Rhode Island Co. [R. I.] 60 A. 761. Inability to bear children cannot be recovered for. Lennox v. Interurban St. R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 230. Instruction held erroneous as not properly limiting. Walker v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 106 Mo. App. 321, 80 S. W. 282.

quate;[45] but the court will not interfere unless the amount is so out of proportion to the injury as to indicate passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, and cannot be accounted for in any other manner.[46] Unless grossly excessive, an excessive verdict may be cured by a remittitur.[47] Where plaintiff submits to the verdict, defend-

Finlay Brewing Co. v. People, 111 Ill. App. 200; Shaw v. Seattle [Wash.] 81 P. 1057. Trifling excess will not cause reversal. Roesch v. Young, 111 Ill. App. 34. Whether a verdict should be set aside because of excessiveness of damages is a question of fact. Meloon v. Read [N. H.] 59 A. 946. In the Federal appellate courts, where no error of law appears, the verdict is conclusive on the amount of damages. Southern Pac. Co. v. Maloney [C. C. A.] 136 F. 171. An assessment in a personal injury case approved by the trial court and affirmed by the appellate court is conclusive on the supreme court in Illinois. Hansell-Elcock Foundry Co. v. Clark, 214 Ill. 399, 73 N. E. 787. No reversal for excessiveness in South Carolina. Duke v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 675.

45. See 3 C. L. 1020, n. 75. Fischer v. St. Louis [Mo.] 88 S. W. 82; Lovenhart v. Lindell R. Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 757. That the court would have awarded a larger sum is not sufficient to set the verdict aside. Hellyer v. Trenton City Bridge Co., 133 F. 843. Under a statute providing against awarding new trials for inadequacy of damages in personal injury cases, a verdict for nominal damages should not be set aside, though the court thinks it inadequate. Neb. Ann. Code 1901, § 315. Langdon v. Clarke [Neb.] 103 N. W. 62. Where there is a verdict for $1.00 in an action by a father for the death of a son of 17, a new trial is rightly granted on the ground of the inadequacy of the damages. Rawitzer v. St. Paul City R. Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 499.

46. Jones v. New York, etc., R. Co., 99 App. Div. 1, 90 N. Y. S. 422; Norfolk R. & Light Co. v. Spratley, 103 Va. 379, 49 S. E. 502; Normile v. Wheeling Tract Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 1030; Deland v. Cameron [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 597; Waechter v. St. Louis & M. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 147; United States Brewing Co v. Stoltenberg, 113 Ill. App. 435; Kozlowski v. Chicago, 113 Ill. App. 513; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Batchler [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 902. Must shock the sense of right or justice. Village of Wilmette v. Brachle, 110 Ill. App. 356; Quigley v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 210 Pa. 162, 59 A. 958. That the amount is larger than the appellate court would have awarded is not sufficient to set it aside. N. K. Fairbank Co. v. Bahre, 112 Ill. App. 290. A verdict is not excessive merely because its amount invested at five per cent would produce a larger annual income than plaintiff was able to earn prior to his injury. Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Otstot, 113 Ill. App. 37. Merely that the verdict is for the highest amount assessable under the evidence does not make it excessive. Jennings v. Ingram, 111 Ill. App. 261. That remittitur from $5,000 to $3,000 was ordered below is not conclusive of passion and prejudice. American Contracting Co. v. Sammon, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 121, 27 Ohio C. C. 337. Neither is $5,000 reduced to $2,500. Wright v. Fleischmann, 99 App. Div. 547, 91 N. Y. S. 116. Damages for personal injuries based on conflicting expert testimony as to seriousness and permanence cannot be interfered with. Zelley v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 9. Where the verdict on plaintiff's claim of loss of profits from defendant's failure to carry out a contract is within the range of the testimony it cannot be considered excessive. Norton v. Shields, 132 F. 873. In personal injury cases the amount of damages is peculiarly within the province of the jury. Rice v. Council Bluffs, 124 Iowa, 639, 100 N. W. 506. If the verdict is fairly within the credible testimony and within the amount demanded, it is not excessive merely because it exceeds plaintiff's own estimate. Einolf v. Thompson [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1026. Judge not required to grant a new trial, though he would have returned a smaller verdict; the verdict was of $1,016.66 for removing a fence when the actual injury was not over $2.50. Beaudrot v. Southern R. Co., 69 S. C. 160, 48 S. E. 106. Where exemplary damages are recoverable, the case must be clear to set aside for excessiveness. Stevens v. Friedman [W. Va.] 51 S. E. 132. For conspiracy to injure one in his business as a merchant, $2,300.00 against a corporation and $300.00 against one individual and nothing against another was not the result of passion or prejudice. Standard Oil Co. v. Doyle, 26 Ky. L. R. 544, 82 S. W. 271. The amount of damages for personal injuries is for the jury, subject to review by the trial judge, and the verdict will not be set aside on appeal unless induced by passion and prejudice. Gorham v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 574.

47. City of Chicago v. Hawgood & Avery Transit Co., 110 Ill. App. 34; Chicago City R. Co. v. Hyndshaw, 116 Ill. App. 367; Shaw v. Seattle [Wash.] 81 P. 1057; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Chicago Portrait Co. [Ga.] 49 S. E. 727; McDonald v. Rhode Island Co., 26 R. I. 467, 59 A. 391; Lynch v. M. T. Stevens & Sons Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 478; McCall v. Wilkes, 121 Ga. 722, 49 S. E. 722; Haas v. New Orleans R. Co., 112 La. 747, 36 So. 670; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Adams [Ark.] 86 S. W. 287. Not in Arizona. Southern Pac. Co. v. Fitchett [Ariz.] 80 P. 359. Where the damages awarded evinces passion or prejudice, the court on appeal may require a remittitur as a condition of affirming. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Roberts [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 314, citing many cases. Remittitur of allowance as to which proof was insufficient. Cudahy Packing Co. v. Broadbent [Kan.] 79 P. 126; Gerst v. St. Louis [Mo.] 84 S. W. 34; Howard v. Terminal R. Ass'n, 110 Mo. App. 574, 85 S. W. 608; Polacci v. Interurban St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 341; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Haynes [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 934. Remittiturs are allowable in Illinois in actions ex delicto, both at the trial and appellate courts, and the action of the appellate court is conclusive on the supreme ant cannot be heard to insist that it should be set aside for inadequacy.[48] Under a conflict of evidence as to the extent of personal injuries, an allowance of damages fairly within the limits of plaintiff's evidence is conclusive on appeal,[49] and under the constitution of Utah the amount of damages recoverable is a question of fact.[50] Holdings on the excessiveness and inadequacy of recovery are collected and classified in the footnote.[51] court. Chicago City R. Co. v. Gemmill, 209 Ill. 638, 71 N. E. 43. An error in the admission of evidence that could merely have affected the amount of the verdict may be cured by remittitur. Chicago City R. Co. v. Miller, 111 Ill. App. 446. Where the damages assessed are excessive, but not in a degree to necessarily imply the influence of passion or prejudice in their finding, the court in the exercise of a sound discretion may make the remittitur of the excess the condition for refusing to grant a new trial. American Contracting Co. v. Sammon, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 121, 27 Ohio C. C. 337. Verdict reduced the amount allowed by the jury as costs. Toal v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 58 A. 172. Defendant should not be allowed on a counterclaim a smaller sum than plaintiff concedes to be due him. Farry v. Shea [N. J. Law] 59 A. 21. Remittitur of award to married woman for expenses ordered. Achey v. Marion, 126 Iowa, 47, 101 N. W. 435. A court has power to order a remittitur as a condition of overruling a motion for a new trial. Adcock v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 77 P. 78; Bailey v. Cascade Timber Co., 35 Wash. 295, 77 P. 377. And on appeal such order will be presumed to have been based on insufficiency of evidence and not on a conviction that the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice. Adcock v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 77 P. 78. Attorney's fees not recoverable under the law. Pritchard v. McCrary [Ga.] 50 S. E. 366. Where the evidence is too indefinite to form a basis for it, a remittitur cannot cure. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Frank [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 383. Error in allowing exemplary damages is not curable by remittitur. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Lauth, 216 Ill. 176, 74 N. E. 738.

49. Hitt v. Kansas City [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 669; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Goswick [Tex.] 85 S. W. 785.

50. Whether damages are excessive is a question exclusively for the trial court and jury. Nichols v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 28 Utah, 319, 78 P. 866.

51. Recoveries held not excessive. Breach of contract: $800 for death of dog during shipment. Oldham v. United States Exp. Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 549. $75,000 for failure to deliver 1000 shares of 6% preferred stock in asphalt mining company. Julia v. Critchfield, 137 F. 969. $300 for breach of warranty as to foal getting power of jack bought for $400. Wingate v. Johnson [Iowa] 101 N. W. 751. $10,529.46 for breach of contract for term of three years, the profits of the preceding two years being $10,000. Herman v. William B. Pierce Co., 93 N. Y. S. 413. 10% statutory damages and $200 attorney's fee for unreasonable contest of life insurance policy. Williams v. St. Louis Life Ins. Co. [Mo.] 87 S. W. 499.

Torts in general: $1,200 for injury to mill and dwelling by pollution of stream. Dudley v. New Britain, 77 Conn. 322, 59 A. 89. $2,000 to family for permanent paralysis of husband and father induced by intoxication contributed to by defendant. Felsch v. Babb [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1011. $200 for horse killed by railroad where plaintiff's verified claim for $100 is explained by saying he thought he might get that much without suit. Borneman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [S. D.] 104 N. W. 208. $3,000.00 for being bitten by a dog; blood poison having set in and the injured person having been confined to his bed for seven weeks. Grissom v. Hofius [Wash.] 80 P. 1002. $250 for willful obstruction of highway two hours at night entailing exposure and suffering. Tutwiler Coal, Coke & Iron Co. v. Nail [Ala.] 37 So. 634. $2,500 exemplary damages for insulting refusal to permit entry into train. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Mattingly [Miss.] 37 So. 708. $1,000 to passenger driven from train at point of pistol by other intoxicated passengers. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Henderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1065. $25 compensatory, $500 punitive damages for refusing to accept transfer on street car and detaining passenger. Mueller v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 325, 83 S. W. 270. $1,500 for malpractice resulting in loss of use of ankle. Miller v. Minturn [Ark.] 83 S. W. 918. $17 for killing horse and destroying harness, shown to be worth from $5 to $40. Roberts v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 601. $500 for overflow of cotton land. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Harbison [Tex Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 452.

Wrongful ejection of passenger: $900 for woman and two children being ejected from sleeping car, riding on platform of train and being frightened by drunken passengers. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor [Ky.] 85 S. W. 168.

Assault: $1,000 for assault, entailing disgrace, humiliation, and loss of three teeth. O'Donnel v. St. Louis Transit Co., 107 Mo. App. 34, 80 S. W. 315. $7,000 to stenographer for vicious assault entailing loss of eye and other injuries. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Grant [Ark.] 88 S. W. 580.

Nondelivery of telegram: $500 to grandmother for nondelivery of telegram announcing death of granddaughter. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Porterfield [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 850.

Libel and slander: $2,000 where no proof of special damage was made. Dowie v. Priddle, 116 Ill. App. 184. $7,000 to district judge. Lauder v. Jones [N. D.] 101 N. W. 907. $300 actual, $500 punitive damages for charge of theft. Carpenter v. Hamilton, 185 Mo. 603, 84 S. W. 863.

§ 7. Pleading, evidence and procedure. A. Pleading.[52]—All damages that necessarily flow from the injury complained of may be recovered without special Personal injuries: $2,000 for injury to head, wound in thigh, aneurism of hip, and ear torn off. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 110 Ill. App. 154. $8,500 for injury resulting in paralysis of left side of housewife. Village of Wilmette v. Brachle, 110 Ill. App. 356. $3,000 to woman for injuries causing confinement to bed for nine months and resulting in bad hernia and incapacity to work. City of Chicago v. Harris, 113 Ill. App. 633. $1,750 to coal miner earning $2.00 per day for permanent and serious injury incapacitating him for following occupation. Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Robizas, 111 Ill. App. 49. $1,500 for lacerated wound on leg, permanent impairment and likelihood of permanent injury to sciatic nerve. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pulliam, 111 Ill. App. 305. $7,500 to woman for permanent injuries resulting in paralysis of right side. City of Chicago v. Bush, 111 Ill. App. 638. $14,000 to man of 53 earning $1,500 per year for severe permanent injuries incapacitating him from all participation in affairs of life. Chicago & Joliet Elec. R. Co. v. Spence, 115 Ill. App. 465. $4,000 to laboring man of fifty-six permanently injured. Cleveland & Southwestern Traction Co. v. Ward, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 385. $9,250 to man of thirty-five earning $2.65 per day for mashed ankle and arm and disordered kidneys. Lorain Steel Co. v. Hayes, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 353, 27 Ohio C. C. 407. $5,000 for serious permanent injuries. Vail v. Middlesex & S. Traction Co. [N. J. Law] 60 A. 42. $9,000 to steel worker for fall of five stories, causing several fractures resulting in loss of sight of one eye and permanent deformity of both wrists and one leg. Welk v. ficient in the absence of exception,[55] and under an averment of a particular injury, all natural effects of that injury may be shown.[56] Thus if an injury from its de-[Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 574. $1.00 for broken ankle held so inadequate as to require reversal. Fischer v. St. Louis [Mo.] 88 S. W. 82. $1 for being struck on head by street car controller held so inadequate as to justify setting aside. Loevenhart v. Lindell R. Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 757.

52. See 3 C. L. 1022.

53. City of South Omaha v. Sutliffe [Neb.] 101 N. W. 997. In an action on the case against a bank for wrongful refusal to pay a check, it is competent for plaintiff to show conversations by him with representatives of business houses with which he had been doing business and from which he sought to obtain credit after dishonor of the check, though the declaration did not aver special damages. Metropolitan Supply Co. v. Garden City Banking & Trust Co., 114 Ill. App. 318. Evidence under the true rule as to the measure of damages for breach of contract is admissible, though not set up in the petition. Ford v. Fargason, 120 Ga. 606, 48 S. E. 180.

54. Wells, Fargo & Co. Express v. Boyle [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 164. Cudahy Packing Co. v. Broadbent [Kan.] 79 P. 126, holding otherwise, is of doubtful authority. Damages not the natural and usual consequences of a detention of personal property must be specially pleaded. Train engine in use by logging camp. Ocala Foundry & Mach. Works v. Lester [Fla.] 38 So. 51. Pleading held sufficient. Muller v. Ocala Foundry & Mach. Works [Fla.] 38 So. 64. Damages to land as a building spot caused by cutting timber thereon valuable as shade trees, held not recoverable because not specially pleaded. Eldridge v. Gorman, 77 Conn. 699, 60 A. 643. Averments of cross petition as to guaranties good for the purpose of letting in proof as to special damages sustained. Cleveland, etc., Co. v. Consumers' Carbon Co., 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 258, 25 Ohio C. C. 307. In an action for delay in furnishing cars in which to ship cattle, there can be no recovery for horse hire made necessary in holding the cattle during the delay where such item was not pleaded. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Arnett [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 547, 88 S. W. 448. Where a distinct disease has developed from the injury which may, but does not always, result from like injuries, it must be pleaded. Allegation of shock to nervous system will not admit proof of resulting locomotor ataxia unless that always results. Wilkins v. Nassau Newspaper Delivery Exp. Co., 98 App. Div. 130, 30 N. Y. S. 678. Miscarriage must be specially pleaded. Town of Florence v. Snook [Colo. App.] 78 P. 994. Loss of earnings must be specially pleaded and proved. Zongker v. People's Union Mercantile Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 486. Expenses incurred in nursing, doctors' bills, etc., must be specially pleaded. Complaint held not sufficient to admit value of wife's services as nurse. Stowe v. La Conner Trading & Transportation Co. [Wash.] 80 P. 856. A functional trouble which does not manifest itself in a woman until 70 days after injury by a blow in the face, and is caused by the nervous shock produced by the blow, must be specially pleaded. Thompson v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 465. Mental suffering and time lost from injuries not of such character that such damages necessarily flow. Lodwick Lumber Co. v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 358. In action of contract for exchange of freight, held error to dismiss petition whether special damage was pleaded or not, since plaintiff was in any event entitled to nominal damages for the breach. Graham v. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. [Ga.] 49 S. E. 75.

55. Averments as to injury and its permanence and impairment of earning power held obnoxious to special exception as being too general. Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. Hardy [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1053. An allegation that plaintiff "was seriously and permanently bruised and injured" is broad enough to admit proof of any bodily injury which resulted. Impairment of hearing and sight. Graham v. Joseph H. Bauland Co., 97 App. Div. 141, 89 N. Y. S. 595. An averment that plaintiff suffered serious bodily injury and pain and will continue to suffer pain and permanent bodily injury is sufficient as against a general demurrer. Casey v. American Bridge Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 623. An allegation of "injuries to the head" is broad enough to admit evidence that the injury received caused pressure on and injury to the brain. Fleming v. Tuttle, 98 App. Div. 222, 90 N. Y. S. 661. Proof of uterine trouble is admissible under an averment that plaintiff became "sick, sore and disabled," notwithstanding subsequent specific allegations. Lofink v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 94 N. Y. S. 150. Contra. Farnham v. Interurban St. R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 364. Heart trouble and neuralgia may be shown under averment of "serious and lasting internal injury." Rice v. Wallowa County [Or.] 81 P. 358. Averment of internal injury unobjected to is sufficient to admit proof of injury to kidneys. Fuchs v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 458. A general averment of bodily injury is sufficient to admit proof of particular injuries, the objection being first made at the trial. Wilbur v. Southwest Mo. Elec. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 671. An allegation of "bodily injuries" is sustained by proof of injury to hands and wrists. City of Eureka v. Neville [Kan.] 79 P. 162. Where a petition alleges serious and permanent injury to the head, hips, limbs and ankles, it should also state the nature and character of the injuries or state why they cannot be stated. Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. Ison [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 408.

56. Description of injuries in complaint held sufficient to admit evidence of their seriousness and painful effect. Currelli v. Jackson [Conn.] 58 A. 762; Hillyer v. Winsted [Conn.] 59 A. 40; Quigley v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 210 Pa. 162, 59 A. 958. Where a fracture is pleaded, a necessary rebreaking and resetting may be shown (a doubtful case). Cudahy Packing Co. v. Broadbent [Kan.] 79 P. 126. Under a declaration alleging injury to an arm, the effect of such injury on the use of the hand may be shown, scription appears to be necessarily permanent, permanency need not be specifically alleged,[57] though it is otherwise if permanency is not the inevitable result.[58] Where particular injuries are described, there can be no recovery for others not described.[59] Evidence of injuries not pleaded is admissible for purposes other than to enhance damages.[60] Recovery cannot be had for a mere aggravation of a previously received injury without an allegation of such aggravation.[61] Punitive damages need not be claimed eo nomine.[62] The damages can never exceed the sum claimed in the pleadings,[63] and special averments will not authorize recovery of damages not the natural and proximate result of the injury sued for.[64] Personal injury[65] and other cases,[66] involving the sufficiency of allegations to support recovery of special damages, are coland under averment of injury to the head and face, inability to use the mouth and affectation of speech and ability to eat may be shown. Comstock v. Georgetown Tp. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 788. Under a declaration alleging physical injuries, recovery may be had for rheumatism ascribable to the accident, but not for mere aggravation of rheumatism not alluded to in the complaint. Id. Averment of injury to head and back causing great pain and mental anguish and permanent injury to back authorizes proof of fainting and dizzy spells. Hollingworth v. Ft. Dodge, 126 Iowa, 627, 101 N. W. 455. Where injury to lungs is alleged, plaintiff may show consequent susceptibility to lung disease. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Rea [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 428. Impairment of memory resulting naturally may be shown under allegation of being injured and disabled physically, mentally, internally, and permanently. Nichols v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Utah] 78 P. 866. Under a general averment of disqualification to labor, plaintiff may show his occupation and loss of time and earnings. Wilbur v. Southwest Mo. Elec. R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 689, 85 S. W. 671.

57. See 3 C. L. 1025, n. 98. Fuchs v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 458. If the injury be alleged, recovery may be had for the whole extent thereof, though not averred in the declaration. Barnett & Record Co. v. Schlapka, 110 Ill. App. 672.

58. Wallace v. New York City R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 766. Where the description of injuries does not show that they are necessarily permanent, permanency must be alleged. MacGregor v. Rhode Island Co. [R. I.] 60 A. 761.

59. Fracture of femur and shortening of limb held not included. Southern Pac. Co. v. Martin [Tex.] 83 S. W. 675. Pleading injury to thigh and nervous system will not admit proof of gastritis. Brown v. Manhattan R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 190. Under an allegation of a physical injury, damages resulting from fright or nervous shock cannot be recovered. Adcock v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 77 P. 78. Averment of injury to head, spine and nerves is insufficient to warrant admission of evidence of injuries to eyes and sight. Wells, Fargo & Co. Express v. Boyle [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 164. Though a general charge of injuries without specifying details is good, if particular injuries resulting from the principal one are specified, all that are designed to be proved should be stated. Cancer of foot resulting from injury specified held not provable. Arnold v. Maryville [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 107. Injury to an eye is not provable under allegation of nervous affection. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hammerlund [Kan.] 79 P. 152.

60. Where the issue is as to whether plaintiff had sustained any injury at all and experts base their opinions in part on the condition of his eyes, he may show that he suffered pain in them, though no injury to them is alleged. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Callihan [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 929. Where plaintiff did not claim damages for injuries to his nervous system, evidence that he had been nervous since the injury was not objectionable as relating to an element of damages not claimed. Adcock v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 77 P. 78.

63. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Frank [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 383; Ocala Foundry & Mach. Works v. Lester [Fla.] 38 So. 51. Recovery for loss of time should be limited to the amount claimed in the petition. If the evidence shows more, there should be an amendment of the petition. Impkamp v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 655, 84 S. W. 119.

64. W. F. Vandever & Co. v. Waller [Ala.] 39 So. 136.

65. Averments of injury held sufficiently specific. Union Traction Co. v. Siceloff [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 266; El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Vizard [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 443, 88 S. W. 457. Internal injuries to woman. Alexander v. McGaffey [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 462. Plaintiff cannot recover medical expenses where there is no averment that they are reasonable. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 787. Defendant held not entitled to have petition made more definite as to portions of body mangled. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Gready [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1061.

66. Where damages for diminution of rental and market value of lands by pollution of a stream are claimed, there may be a recovery for temporary loss of the use of the land. Muncie Pulp Co. v. Martin [Ind.] 72 N. E. 882. A petition alleging that water damaged a large amount of merchandise is sufficient to authorize recovery for the property destroyed. Monarch Mfg. Co. v. Omaha, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 493. Declaration held sufficient to recover stipulated damages but not actual damages. Calbeck v. Ford [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 82, 103 N. W.

lected in the note. Payment or obligation to pay for medical services should be averred according to the fact.[67] Defendant cannot complain of allegations of facts in aggravation of damages.[68] Where no evidence is introduced as to an alleged item of damage, recovery thereon is waived.[69] In an action by a husband for injuries to the wife, it is not necessary to allege or prove the value of her services.[70] Plaintiff in an action for injuries is not obliged to prove all the elements of damage alleged, to entitle him to recover, nor do the other items necessarily fall with failure to prove the largest alleged item.[71] Matters of defense involving the measure of damages need not be specially pleaded.[72] Averment that goods could not be bought in vicinity to replace those agreed to be delivered is insufficient to change measure of damages.[73]

(§ 7) B. Evidence as to damages. In general.[74]—Plaintiff must show that the injuries complained of are the result of the wrongful act complained of.[75] Damages cannot be assessed where there is no proof of their amount,[76] the burden of establishing which is on plaintiff,[77] and evidence of expenses or the cost to plaintiff

516. Complaint for injunction against disclosure of plaintiff's patentable ideas held insufficient to found recovery of damages. Griffith v. Dodgson, 93 N. Y. S. 155. Complaint for obstruction of navigable stream held sufficient to found recovery for loss of time of logging engine, time of men and the necessity of discharging employes and rehiring at advanced wages. Creech v. Humptulips Boom & River Imp. Co. [Wash.] 79 P. 633. Where a shipper sues for the price for which goods had been sold rather than for their market value, no description of them is necessary. It being alleged that the carrier had full notice of their price, that is the measure of plaintiff's damages. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Needham [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 22. Where plaintiff claims damages against a carrier for delay in transporting him by reason of failure to consummate a contract he lost by not arriving in time, he should name the parties with whom he was about contracting. Townsend v. Texas & N. O. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 88 S. W. 302.

67. An allegation of expenditure of money for medical attention will not support recovery on proof of incurred expenses not paid. Stanley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 112; Nelson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 781. Evidence that plaintiff has obligated himself for medical attendance, unobjected to, will authorize recovery under an averment that he has paid it, since if objection had been made the pleading might have been amended. Spengler v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 329, 83 S. W. 312.

68. Gadsden v. Catawba Water Power Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 121.

71. Williams v Houston Elec. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1160.

72. Where plaintiff's physical condition before the injury becomes material, evidence that he was drawing a Federal pension for disability is admissible without being pleaded. Hawkins v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 52. A contract limiting a common carrier's liability may be introduced in defense under the general issue and need not be specially pleaded. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Ross, 105 Ill. App. 54. In an action for overflowing land, the damages alleged being diminution of rental value, defendant may show that the loss was attributable to other causes under a plea of the general issue. San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Gurley [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 842.

73. Alabama Chemical Co. v. Geiss [Ala.] 39 So. 255.

74. See 3 C. L. 1027.

75. Not error to strike out testimony as to injuries to horse not shown to have been result of accident sued for. Fisher v. New York City R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 341.

76. The damages for injury to a vessel should not include demurrage in the absence of proof of her market value or proof that she had no market value. City of Chicago v. Hawgood & A. Transit Co., 110 Ill. App. 34. Where the measure of damages is the difference between the price to have been paid for an article and that at which it was resold proof must be made both of such purchase price and of such price of resale. Armeny v. Madson & Buck Co., 111 Ill. App. 621. Recovery of wages cannot be supported where there is no evidence of their amount. People v. Woodbury, 102 App. Div. 462, 92 N. Y. S. 442. No recovery for physician's services without proof of their value. Nelson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 781. Where three animals were killed and three injured, evidence merely of the value of all of them is insufficient to found recovery. Carman v. Montana Cent. R. Co. [Mont.] 79 P. 690.

77. Where a sheriff fails to execute or return final process, there is a presumption that he has been damaged the amount of the execution, and the burden is upon him to mitigate the damages (Beck & G. Hardware Co. v. Knight, 121 Ga. 287, 48 S. E. 930); but where he fails to execute an attachment or other mesne process, the presumption is the other way and plaintiff must allege and prove actual damages to found recovery (Id.).

is not sufficient in the absence of evidence of reasonableness.[78] The burden of proving that the damages sustained might have been prevented rests upon the party causing them.[79] Testimony as to value is peculiarly within the province of experts.[80] Generally, testimony as to the amount of damages sustained by plaintiff in a lump sum is inadmissible,[81] but all facts material to show the extent of plaintiff's damage,[82] or the value of the matter in dispute, may be shown.[83] Defendant's wealth may be shown in libel as basis for exemplary damages.[84]

78. Plaintiff suing for injury to his wagon cannot testify to the amount of repairs without showing their necessity and reasonable value. Reid v. New York City R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 533. What plaintiff was offered for his dog two years before is not evidence of its value. Southern R. Co. v. Parnell [Ala.] 37 So. 925. The price paid by defendant for land is admissible on the question of value if not too remote in point of time. Guyandotte Valley R. Co. v. Buskirk [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 521. Proof of what was paid for goods is not always proof of their value. Peyser v. Lund, 89 App. Div. 195, 85 N. Y. S. 881. Evidence of the amount expended in seeking to be cured of the effects of a personal injury is not competent unless accompanied by proof of what services were actually rendered and that such amount is reasonable, customary and usual. Chicago City R. Co. v. Miller, 111 Ill. App. 446; Polacci v. Interurban St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 341; Cudahy Packing Co. v. Broadbent [Kan.] 79 P. 126; Goodson v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 10; Klingaman v. Fish & Hunter Co. [S. D.] 102 N. W. 601; Polacci v. Interurban St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 341. Mere cost is insufficient without more to found recovery for lost baggage. Brooke v. Cunard S. S. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 369; Walsh v. New York City R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 552. In the absence of better evidence, proof of the cost of articles of furniture and the amount they have been used is sufficient in an action for their destruction. Behm v. Damm, 91 N. Y. S. 735. Evidence that plaintiff was compelled to employ another man to take his place at certain wages is evidence as to plaintiff's loss of time and its value. Galveston City R. Co. v. Chapman [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 856. Evidence that plaintiff employed a man at a certain wage to attend to his business while incapacitated by a personal injury is incompetent, it not being shown that such help was necessary or what its reasonable value was. Costello v. New York City R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 23. In an action of trover, a wrongdoer cannot lessen his liability by invoking an agreed valuation made for the purpose of obtaining reduced freight rates. Georgia, So. & F. R. Co. v. Johnson, King & Co., 121 Ga. 231, 48 S. E. 807. The amount paid for property by defendant does not control unless it is shown to be the fair reasonable value. Error to instruct jury that plaintiff is entitled to recover reasonable value of ice if it exceeds amount paid by defendant. Doll v. Hennessy Mercantile Co. [Mont.] 81 P. 625. When no market value exists, opinion of witnesses as to value of property is properly admitted. Market value at time of conversion. Vroom v. Sage, 100 App. Div. 285, 91 N. Y. S. 456. Where identity of goods has been lost and value can be proved in no other way, the price agreed upon by the parties is evidence of the value. Goodman v. Baumann, 43 Misc. 83, 86 N. Y. S. 287. Amount that a witness paid for shelving is some evidence of its value. Perlberger v. Grell, 77 App. Div. 128, 78 N. Y. S. 1038. Evidence of what property sold for when it has no market value is relevant. Humphreys v. Minnesota Clay Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 338.

79. Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 168.

80. Evidence of the value of property must be the individual opinion of witnesses, not a quotation from memoranda. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Seitz, 105 Ill. App. 89. The opinions of experts as to the value of lands flooded and the extent of injury may be taken. McGroarty v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 570. The owner of buildings destroyed may testify to the value of the land before and after their destruction though not an expert. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lucas [C. C. A.] 136 F. 374.

81. Berg & Humptulips Boom & River Imp. Co. [Wash.] 80 P. 528. The owner of a stock of goods burned with its inventory by a negligent fire may testify to their value in a lump sum, though he cannot itemize them. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lucas [C. C. A.] 136 F. 374. Plaintiff cannot state without facts that after the accident sued for his horse could not be used as before, nor can a witness not an expert state that before the accident the horse was worth $200 and after it he would not give $50 for it. Reid v. New York City R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 533. Testimony of plaintiff, a farmer, that he went through his field and estimated the damage done by defendant's hogs to his crop of matured corn, giving the amount, is competent and sufficient to sustain a verdict. Auckland v. Lawrence [Colo. App.] 78 P. 1035.

82. In an action under the dramshop act for death of a husband and father, his habits and the effect thereof are proper subjects of inquiry as bearing on the loss his family sustained. Kelley v. Malhoit, 115 Ill. App. 23. In an action for negligent fire, evidence of the value of timber burned if "put to its best use" is proper as showing an element of damage, the distinction between wood as cordwood and that suitable for better purposes. Spink v. New York, etc., R. Co., 26 R. I. 115, 58 A. 499. In an action for burning trees, evidence that trees which subsequently became useless could soon after the fire have been sold is admissible. Id. Plaintiff to prove special damages from libel may show what the income from his business had been up to the time of the libel and how it had fallen off immediately thereafter. Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co., 124

Evidence in action for personal injuries.[85]—In an action in Texas for injuries sustained in Kansas, a Kansas statute limiting recovery in case of wrongful death is inadmissible.[86] The testimony of physicians as to the extent and character of plaintiff's injuries,[87] and facts having a like tendency, are material.[88] Where damages for medical bills are recoverable, plaintiff's request that witness telephone for a doctor is admissible.[89] Exclamations indicating present pain may be shown;[90] but statements made by plaintiff subsequent to his injury descriptive thereof as distinguished from mere exclamations indicating present pain cannot be shown.[91] Recent[92] but not remote[93] earnings of plaintiff, and the value of such labor as he can

Iowa, 707, 100 N. W. 867. In an action for converting logs, plaintiff may show how many he put into the water, how many were accounted for, the percentage to be deducted for sunken logs, and the loss in towing and otherwise, in order to show approximately the number converted. Seymour v. Bruske [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 145, 103 N. W. 613. In an action for damages for failure to receive a telegram, plaintiff may not testify to his own fears, apprehensions and conclusions from his failure to receive it. Willis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 69 S. C. 531, 48 S. E. 538.

83. Where the property in question has no market value, proof may be made of such facts as tend to show value or which aid the jury in estimating it. The cost of manufacturing a new article and transporting it to market may be inquired into. Farson v. Gilbert, 114 Ill. App. 17. The amount of insurance carried on buildings and contents is immaterial on their value in an action for their negligent burning. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lucas [C. C. A.] 136 F. 374. The rental value of property three years prior to the injury complained of is not too remote. Peabody v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 649. What one earns in his ordinary occupation is evidence of the value of his time. Fullis v. McClary [Iowa] 104 N. W. 505. Where a train engine is detained, the rental value of a railroad locomotive is not material on the value of the use of the engine detained. Ocala Foundry & Mach. Works v. Lester [Fla.] 38 So. 51. Where a horse killed had no market value, evidence that he had been trained to be used in roping contests and had a peculiar value on that account is admissible, though a law against roping contests has been passed subsequent to his use for that purpose. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Cooper [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 570, 88 S. W. 301. The value of the services of a trained nurse is no criterion of the value of the services of plaintiff's daughter as nurse who was untrained. Her services are measured by those of an ordinary person doing like work. MacDonald v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 374, 83 S. W. 1001.

86. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Kellerman [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 401.

87. Physicians may testify to probable future effect of injuries. Norfolk R. & Light Co. v. Spratley [Va.] 49 S. E. 502. Plaintiff's attending physicians, who are familiar with his condition and the nature of his injury may testify as to how long it will affect him. Klingaman v. Fish & Hunter Co. [S. D.] 102 N. W. 601. Evidence of a physician who attended injured plaintiff that when he saw plaintiff blood poisoning had set in, without showing any connection between the injury and such blood poisoning, was irrelevant. Costello v. New York City R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 23. Where a surgical operation is necessary as a result of personal injuries, plaintiff may show that it is a difficult and dangerous operation which few surgeons will perform. Normile v. Wheeling Traction Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 1030. Expert opinion evidence based on subsequent diagnosis held admissible as to permanency of injury by fracture of skull. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Harton [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 589, 88 S. W. 857. See, also, Evidence, 3 C. L. 1334, for a full treatment of the subject of expert evidence.

88. In an action for injuries received in street car collision resulting in fainting fits and nervous troubles, evidence that plaintiff was subject to fainting fits before the accident was competent. Mullin v. Boston El. R. Co., 185 Mass. 522, 70 N. E. 1021. Not error to allow question as to whether plaintiff's physician had gotten any of her family history in regard to nervous disorders. Id.

Va.] 51 S. E. 132. Wife may state that husband appeared to suffer from headache. Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason [Ga.] 51 S. E. 569. In an action for the conscious suffering of plaintiff's intestate between injury and death, evidence tending to prove such suffering is admissible. Dickinson v. Boston [Mass.] 75 N. E. 68.

91. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Gardner [Ga.] 49 S. E. 818; Klingaman v. Fish & Hunter Co. [S. D.] 102 N. W. 601; Howe v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 103 N. W. 185. A dream of plaintiff that his hand would have to be amputated is not admissible to show pain. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith [Ky.] 84 S. W. 755.

92. Though plaintiff is no longer employed at the work. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Dougherty, 209 Ill. 241, 70 N. E. 586. A physician suing may testify as to the amount of his earnings the previous year. Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 648. Plaintiff who was conducting a blacksmith shop in which others were employed may show that the value of his work there perform,[94] are admissible on the question of his earning power. The family of a plaintiff suing for a personal injury,[95] and his pecuniary condition[96] and habits, are immaterial.[97]

Expectancy life tables[98] are properly admitted in actions for death,[99] and in actions for personal injury, where the injuries are permanent,[1] as persuasive, though not conclusive,[2] evidence of the continuance of life.[3] They are not necessary as a basis for recovery based on expectancy.[4] Mortality tables are not admissible to show how long plaintiff will be inconvenienced by a change in street grade.[5]

Physical examination.[6]—The court has no power to compel a party to submit to a physical examination by physicians. Failure to submit on request is simply a matter for the consideration of the jury;[7] but where plaintiff exhibits his injured member and his experts point out the injury thereto, defendant is entitled to have it also exhibited so that its experts may show there is no injury.[8] A dramatic exhibition of plaintiff's injuries may be ground for reversal.[9]

Sufficiency of evidence[10] is discussed in cases cited below.[11]

11. In an action of debt on a replevin bond, the statement contained in the affidavit for replevin as to the value of the property sought to be replevied is prima facie evidence of such value. Farson v. Gilbert, 114 Ill. App. 17. Evidence that prior to an accident a wagon was worth $200, that it would cost $200 to repair it, is sufficient basis for a verdict of $125. Reisenberg v. New York City R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 4. Evidence held not sufficient to base special recovery for cutting timber useful for shade trees. Ferguson v. Buckell, 101 App. Div. 213, 91 N. Y. S. 724. Evidence of market value of certain peas held sufficient. Kiley v. Lee Canning Co., 93 N. Y. S. 986.

Personal injuries: Mental anguish held sufficiently shown to authorize allowance of damages therefor. Baier v. Selke, 112 Ill. App. 568. Evidence that a mangled hand will cause future pain and suffering is not necessary to justify recovery therefor. Kirkham v. Wheeler-Osgood Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 869. Evidence in action for personal injury to woman 40 years old held sufficient to go to jury on likelihood of her climacteric occurring before her recovery so as to be an element of damages. Keefe v. Norfolk Suburban St. R. Co., 185 Mass. 247, 70 N. E. 46. Held insufficient to show that injuries were imaginary or hysterical, Patterson v. New Orleans & C. R. Light & Power Co., 110 La. 797, 34 So. 782. Where one injured in a collision testified that her head was affected and her brain confused, evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in considering whether her brain was affected. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Shuford [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1189. Evidence that a boy of 14 suffers severe pain in head, that before injury he was a "bright boy," that he is now "dull," is sufficient to justify instruction on future injury to mind. El Paso Elec. R. Co. v. Kendall [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 61. Evidence held sufficient to justify instruction on injury to nervous system. Howard v. Terminal R. Ass'n [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 608. Evidence of injury to arm and leg held sufficient to go to jury. Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035.

Loss of earnings: Loss of earning power of woman housekeeper held sufficiently shown to warrant recovery. Olin v. Bradford, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 7. Testimony as to plaintiff's earnings per day prior to his injury held insufficient to found recovery. Impkamp v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 655, 84 S. W. 119. Evidence held sufficient to found recovery for lost earnings. Zongker v. People's Union Mercantile Co., 110 Mo. App. 382, 86 S. W. 486. Plaintiff alleging injury to eye held not entitled to recover for alleged diminished earning capacity. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 943.

Permanency: Proof of the existence of an injury not necessarily permanent does not authorize submission of the question of permanent injuries. McNeill v. Interurban St. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 767. Evidence held insufficient to show any permanent injury. Robinson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 1010; Wilbur v. Southwest Mo. Elec. Co., 110 Mo. App. 689, 85 S. W. 671. Evidence held sufficient to raise issue of permanency of injury by broken collar bone. Ballard v. Kansas City [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 479.

Causal connection between injury and accident: Evidence held sufficient to go to jury on whether plaintiff's injuries resulted from the accident complained of or were due to antecedent rupture. Young v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 767. Evidence held to show that injuries to a woman (miscarriage) resulted from a jolting of a railroad train, and fright occasioned thereby. Stewart v. Arkansas Southern R. Co., 112 La. 764, 36 So. 676. Evidence held insufficient that impairment of hearing of man over 80 years was caused by accident. Lamm v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 584. Evidence held insufficient to show that varicose veins resulted from injury sued for. McGinness v. Third Ave. R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 787. Evidence held sufficient to support finding that accident caused curvature of spine. Harvey v. Fargo, 99 App. Div. 599, 91 N. Y. S. 84. Evidence held sufficient that injuries caused appendicitis. Sullivan v. Boston El. R. Co., 185 Mass. 602, 71 N. E. 90. Evidence held sufficient to support recovery on theory that plaintiff's varicocele was of traumatic origin. Bial v. Interurban St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 434.

12. See 3 C. L. 1031.

13. Failure to instruct as to the measure of damages is not error where no request was made. Central R. Co. v. Ankiewicz, 213 Ill. 631, 73 N. E. 382. Instructions must inform the jury as to the elements to be considered and limit them thereto. McKinstry v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 12, 82 S. W. 1108; Ballard v. Kansas City, 110 Mo. App. 397, 86 S. W. 479. Where the evidence shows that plaintiff's injuries might have been caused by something else than the accident complained of, that feature of the evidence should be commented on. Clark v. Union Traction Co. [Pa.] 60 A. 302. Instruction held not objectionable as permitting recovery for loss of earnings during plaintiff's minority. City of South Omaha v. Sutliffe [Neb.] 101 N. W. 997. Error to instruct to use own discretion in assessing amount. Elements of damage open to consideration should be enumerated and methods and criteria for their estimation pointed out. Jenkins v. Kirtley [Kan.] 79 P. 671. Where the damages are unliquidated, failure to give a measure is reversible error. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Buchanan [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1073.

14. Instructions authorizing recovery according to a different standard of damages than that pleaded and proved are erroneous. Thornton-Thomas Mercantile Co. v. Bretherton [Mont.] 80 P. 10. Refusal to caution the jury not to go beyond the amount claimed and proved in awarding expenses for medical services is not error. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Menk [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 578, 88 S. W. 290. Inclusion of expenses for medicines in recovery is error where there is neither pleading nor proof of them. Northern Texas Traction Co. v. Jamison [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 305. Failure to limit recovery for medical expenses to amount alleged in petition is not error where there is no evidence of any other amount. South Covington, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Ky.] 86 S. W. 970.

15. It is error to instruct that the jury are to give such damages as in their "judgment" would fairly compensate. Their judgment must be limited by the evidence. Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis v. Shepherd, 112 Ill. App. 458; Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co. v. Krempel, 116 Ill. App. 253; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Thrasher [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 829. Instruction that plaintiff "can recover all damages suffered by him by reason of the default of the other party" held misleading in not limiting recovery to actual damages. La Favorite Rubber Mf'g Co. v. H. Channon Co., 113 Ill. App. 491. Instruction authorizing consideration of "all the facts and circumstances in evidence" approved. Chicago City R. Co. v. Gemmill, 209 Ill. 638, 71 N. E. 43. An instruction to assess damages in such amount as the jury may believe, from the preponderance of evidence, was sustained, is proper. Illinois Terminal R. Co. v. Thompson, 210 Ill. 226, 71 N. E. 328. Instruction to jury to take plaintiff's present physical condition into account held error where the evidence left it in doubt whether his condition was the result of the injury. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Miller, 212 Ill. 49, 72 N. E. 25. An instruction on the effect of provocative words to mitigate damages for assault and battery is error where there is no evidence of provocation. Langdon v. Clarke [Neb.] 103 N. W. 62. An instruction authorizing punitive damages in a tort case where the evidence does not justify it is prejudicial. Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason [Ga.] 51 S. E. 569. Where the only evidence was that medical expenses were "five or six hundred dollars" and were reasonable, the instructions should confine the recovery to such as were reasonable. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Perry [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 343. Instruction authorizing recovery for medical attendance in absence of evidence that plaintiff had paid or obligated himself for any is erroneous. Kimble v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 108 Mo. App. 78, 82 S. W. 1096. Instruction allowing future medical expenses held not improper under the evidence. Parker v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 465, 83 S. W. 1016. Hypothesis of severe abrasions should not be submitted in the absence of evidence of them, though charged in the petition. St. Louis v. Kansas City [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 630. Instruction following language of petition which alleged injuries not proven held not bad as authorizing recovery for injuries pleaded but not proved. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Hay [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 954.

16. Where the evidence is conclusive that plaintiff has not recovered from his injuries, an instruction on future pain and suffering is proper. Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co. v. Ullrich, 213 Ill. 170, 72 N. E. 815. Held proper in the particular case to omit from a general instruction on the measure of damages any reference to the social standing of the mother of an infant owing for personal injury. City of South Omaha v. Sutliffe [Neb.] 101 N. W. 997. Instruction using term "destruction" of nervous system held not erroneous where nerve force was impaired. Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 481. Where personal injuries are such that permanence may be inferred, it is not error to charge on the subject. Macon R. & Light Co. v. Streyer [Ga.] 51 S. E. 342. Instruction held not bad as assuming that plaintiff will experience future pain and suffering. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Nesbitt [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 656, 88 S. W. 891.

17. A charge that the measure is such an amount as is dictated by the enlightened consciences of impartial jurors is erroneous. Macon R. & Light Co. v. Vining, 120 Ga. 511, 48 S. E. 232. Instruction held not bad as allowing speculative and uncertain damages for personal injury. City of South Omaha v. Sutliffe [Neb.] 101 N. W. 997. Permission to assess what they think just and right after full consideration of all the evidence is error. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Smart, 116 Ill. App. 523. Instruction as to future pain and suffering held not bad as allowing speculative recovery. Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co. v. Ullrich, 213 Ill. 170, 72 N. E. 815. An instruction merely giving the jury a form of verdict cannot be objected to as giving them unlimited power in respect to assessment of damages. Central R. Co. v. Ankiewicz, 213 Ill. 631, 73 N. E. 382. Instruction held not bad as allowing speculation on value of injury to feelings. Howe v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 103 N. W. 185. Charges using words "probably" and "likely" in stating basis of recovery of future damages held not erroneous. Pentoney v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 681, 84 S. W. 140; Holden v. Missouri R. Co., 108 Mo. App. 665, 84 S. W. 133.

18. An instruction that the amount of damages to be assessed must be "such as is dictated by the consciences of enlightened jurors" was error where pain, loss of time and diminished capacity to earn were elements. Macon R. & Light Co. v. Vining, 120 Ga. 511, 48 S. E. 232. Instructions where plaintiff suffered miscarriage held not objectionable as a "roving commission" to assess damages. West v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Mo.] 86 S. W. 140.

19. Instructions that allow the assessment of damages from mere caprice are erroneous. Simons v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 129.

20. Instruction in personal injury case held bad as allowing double damages for loss of future earning power. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Nesbitt [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 656, 88 S. W. 891. Instruction in action for injuries to minor son held bad as authorizing double recovery for lost time. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Anglin [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 785. Instructions should not be so framed as to authorize recovery of particular elements of damage included in sence of special requests.[21] Instructions should be considered as a whole.[22] Erroneous instructions are frequently cured by verdict.[23] A party cannot complain of an instruction on the subject of nominal damages when he himself requested a similar charge.[24] Holdings on various instructions complained of are collected below.[25]

(§ 7) D. Trial.[26]—Where it has been previously determined that defendant is liable, the question cannot be again raised at the hearing before an assessor appointed to assess damages, or by a request for a ruling by the court on a motion for a new trial.[27] In an action for breach of contract of sale where the evidence as to the market value of the goods was oral and conflicting, it is error to withdraw from the jury the question of the amount of damages.[28] In Iowa the apportionment of the damages among the owners of sheep-killing dogs is for the jury.[29] The time of admitting testimony on the question of damages is within the discretion of the court.[30] An extra allowance cannot be made in a negligence case of a very common type.[31]

DEATH AND SURVIVORSHIP.

The presumption of death arises on a person's absence from home continuously for seven years unheard of;[2] but it may be rebutted.[3] It is proper to charge that all the circumstances of the absence shall be considered.[4] The necessity of inquiry and search is sufficiently presented by a charge that impliedly draws in from the declaration such elements.[5] The refusal to charge that the absentee must have intended to return, if error,[6] was harmless where the only evidence was that he did.[7] The NOTE. Presumption of Death After Seven Years as Foundation for Declarations Against Interest: Held, that an absconding solicitor, although he may have remained absent to avoid the ordeal of public bankruptcy, is presumed to be dead when he has not been heard of for seven years, and his entries of collections are admissible in evidence as declarations against interest. Wills v. Palmer, 53 W. R. 169 (Eng. Ch. D.). By the common law, in the absence of proof of death, life is presumed to continue. From ancient statutes relating to bigamy and life estates has been adopted the counter-presumption of death after seven years' absence without intelligence. Burr v. Sim, 4 Whart. [Pa.] 150, 170, 33 Am. Dec. 50. But the rule is practically uniform that such presumption arises only when no news has been received by persons likely to hear from the absentee; and is rebutted by circumstances fairly explaining his silence consistently with life. Bowden v. Henderson, 2 Sm. & G. 360. In the light of these authorities this decision seems ill-considered, but cases are infrequent which apply the presumption merely to render evidence admissible, and that situation may require a less exacting rule than where property interests are directly involved. Manby v. Curtis, 1 Price, 225, 229. The court thus circumvents the prevailing doctrine that declarations against interest are admissible only after the declarant's death. Stephen v. Gwenap, 1 Moo. & R. 120; see contra Shearman v. Atkins, 4 Pick. [Mass.] 283, 293. It would seem more logical to apply the presumption of death uniformly, and either reject the evidence entirely, or, on analogy with similar cases, extend the doctrine admitting such declarations to include those of absentees. North Bank v. Abbot, 13 Pick. [Mass.] 465, 471.—From 18 Harv. L. R. 471.

5. Policemen's Benev. Ass'n v. Ryce, 213 Ill. 9, 72 N. E. 764.

6, 7. A specific intent might weaken or strengthen the presumption, but would not presumption is against suicide as a cause of death,[8] but the accompanying circumstances may overcome it.[9] A statutory presumption of the death of residents who do not return to the state has no application to the case of one who was never a resident.[10] Death may be inferred from one's disappearance at the time and place of a disaster whither he was bound,[11] or where he must have been.[12] It is said that a grant of administration is very weak evidence of decedent's death.[13] To be probative of one's death a death certificate and burial record should be referred to him by such clear evidence of identity as to overcome the contrary presumptions.[14] Such a certificate is inadmissible if unsigned and undated.[15] If there is no specific finding when the death occurred, it will be regarded as having been on the date of the decree.[16]

The presumption that a young man who absconded and whose occupation was dangerous was living after two years is not strong enough to clear all doubt from a title depending on his surviving.[17]

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT.

The scope of this topic is limited to the nature and elements of the liability, including damages for causing another's death. Note: The claim has been made that letters of administration are prima facie evidence of death and it was so held in Tisdale v. Connecticut Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co., 26 Iowa, 170, 96 Am. Dec. 136; Id., 28 Iowa, 12; but that such evidence is very weak and may be rebutted by slight evidence. On the same state of facts with the same plaintiff the United States supreme court held in Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S. 238, 23 Law. Ed. 314, that the granting of letters of administration afforded no legal evidence of death. The latter holding seems to be the correct one, for if otherwise, it would open up an avenue of fraud in connection with life insurance policies that would be startling in its possible consequences. It would be easy to procure a policy for a large sum. In a year or two the person insured could disappear. Then letters of administration can be procured and the case is made. Similar unfortunate consequences will result in holding that granting letters of administration is conclusive evidence of widowhood. It might defeat the rights of heirs and the lawful widow and would be an easy way to forestall a prosecution for bigamy. Counsel for plaintiff in Phillips v. Heraty [Mich.] 100 N. W. 186, relies on James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 347, as sustaining his position; the facts were similar to the principal case but the point decided was that the letters of administration were conclusive evidence of plaintiff's right to appear as plaintiff. But in the principal case counsel contended that said letters were conclusive also as to the fact of plaintiff being the lawful widow of the deceased at the time of his death and hence entitled to pecuniary compensation under the statute. § 1. Nature and elements of liability and release or bar thereof.[19]—A cause of action for wrongful death does not exist at common law.[20] It is of statutory creation and arises only within the strict terms of the statute.[21] Statutes relative to the cause of action are to be construed in connection with each other.[22] In Massachusetts if death was caused by a defendant's servant the negligence must have been gross.[23] The injuries negligently inflicted need not be the sole cause of death.[24] The cause of action does not accrue until death.[25] In North Carolina a cause of action for injuries abates at the death of the injured party and merges in the cause of action for death.[26] Under Lord Campbell's Act the right of action survives to the administrator of the party in whose favor it accrues.[27]

A release by an injured party does not deprive those dependent on him of their right of action if death results.[28]

§ 2. Who may bring action.[29]—The action must be brought by the person designated by the statute, and cannot be brought by another, though he be sole beneficiary.[30] Thus if the right of action is given to the administrator, he alone may sue,[31] and the beneficiaries have no right to be parties or to compromise or control the action;[32] but where the action is given to the personal representative for the benefit of the widow and next of kin and he conspires with the one responsible for the death to prevent suit, the widow and next of kin may maintain the action, making the administrator a party.[33] If the right of action be given to several in the alternative, the parties named should not be joined.[34] If the personal representative is given the right of action, a foreign personal representative may sue under the statute of the state where the death occurred, in the state of his appointment if he has such right in that state, and the legal machinery of that state is adequate to the enforcement of the rights given.[35] A personal representative may maintain an action for the wrongful death of a servant caused by the master's negligence.[36] In Illinois the action may be maintained by a foreign administrator.[37]

33. McLemore v. Sebree Coal & Min. Co. [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1062.

34. Under a statute giving a right of action to the husband, widow, children or parents, where a husband is killed leaving a widow and children, the action must be brought by the widow alone, the damages recovered to be shared by the children. Un-

§ 3. Beneficiaries of the right of action.[38]—The action can be maintained only for the benefit of the persons named in the statute,[39] and there can be no recovery for the benefit of persons not dependent on deceased and who have no expectancy of benefit in his continuance of life;[40] but it is not necessary that the beneficiary have a legal claim on the services of the deceased,[41] and that a beneficiary is married,[42] or is supported after the death by other members of the family, does not preclude a recovery.[43] Under Lord Campbell's Act a mother cannot recover for the death of her illegitimate child.[44] "Next of kin" includes a husband,[45] but "heirs" does not.[46] Under a statute giving an action for the benefit of the widow, if any, or the next of kin, if the deceased leaves a widow, no cause of action exists for the benefit of the next of kin.[47] Nonresident alien next of kin may recover under a statute giving a right of action to the next of kin,[48] and an alien widow residing in another state is entitled to the benefits of the statute for the death of her husband, a resident alien.[49] Under the Indiana statute recovery may be had for the benefit of a nonresident alien if he would be entitled to a similar recovery under the laws of his own country.[50] When the recovery is for the benefit of the estate of the decedent, a local administrator may recover for the death of an alien, though decedent's sole relative is a nonresident alien.[51]

Contributory negligence of the beneficiary of the right of action will defeat a recovery for the death of a child non sui juris.[52]

§ 4. Damages.[53]—The damages recoverable are strictly compensatory and limited to the pecuniary loss sustained,[54] or the relief contemplated by the statute.[55] Punitive elements, loss of society, wounded feelings and sufferings of the deceased cannot be considered.[56] Some courts lay down a mathematical rule by which to ascertain the measure of damages;[57] but others hold that this is a question of fact and is not to be ascertained by means of any particular mathematical calculation.[58]

A minor can recover for the death of a parent the reasonable value of such nurture, care, and education as he would have received,[59] unless the action is given for the benefit of the estate of the decedent.[60] For the death of a child the parent may recover the value of the child's services during minority,[61] less the cost of his support.[62] In Illinois, however, it is held that the measure in such case is the pecuniary benefit which would have been derived at any period of his life.[63] The fact that a child is absent from home without his parent's consent does not necessarily preclude a recovery.[64]

The remarriage of a widow pending the action is not to be considered in fixing the damages;[65] and damages recoverable by a husband for the death of his wife are not mitigated by the fact that he remarries;[66] and that a parent receives aid from

87. The remedy is in action for death. Gallagher v. River Furnace & Dock Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 661.

88. Where the right of action is for the benefit of the widow, if any, or the next of kin if there is none and the widow dies pending an action. Diller v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 271.

89. An action for the benefit of a father who is sole beneficiary at the time action is commenced does not abate if he dies pending the action but may be prosecuted for the benefit of whoever may be entitled to participate in the recovery. Morris v. Spartanburg R. Gas & Elec. Co. [S. C.] 49 S. E. 854.

The action must be brought within the time limited by the statute.[90] The venue of the action is the place contemplated by the statute.[91]

Irregularity in granting letters of administration may be attacked in an action by the administrator for the death of his intestate.[92] An administrator is a merely nominal party to a suit for wrongful death, and a general denial does not traverse his representative capacity,[93] but a misnomer of the deceased is a defect which may be raised by general demurrer.[94] A misnomer of the decedent in an action by an administrator is fatal to the right to maintain the action.[95]

An action may be maintained against county commissioners in their official capacity for wrongful death due to failure to keep a county bridge in repair.[96]

Rights under a statute of one state may be enforced in another[97] unless the statute is penal[98] or contrary to the public policy of the state in which enforcement is sought.[99] The character of the statute will be determined by the court in which the action is brought.[1] The courts of one state will not refuse to entertain an action under the statute of another because of the dissimilarity of the provision relative to damages in the statutes of the respective states.[2] The extent of the remedy in an action in one state under the statute of another is governed by the limitations of the foreign statute.[3]

The pleadings are governed by the law of the forum.[4] Where the action is given for the benefit of certain persons, an action by one as representative will be construed as one for the benefit of the persons named.[5] Two causes of action accruing

91. Under a statute providing that the action shall be prosecuted by the personal representative and that the action may be brought in the county where the plaintiff resides, the venue is the county of the residence of the personal representative, not the decedent. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Stith's Adm'x [Ky.] 85 S. W. 1173.

93. Coney Island Co. v. Mitsch, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 81. Objection to an administrator bringing suit for wrongful death of the intestate must be taken by demurrer as for want of legal capacity to sue or by special denial. Id.

94. Where an administratrix of the estate of one person sues for the death of another her right to maintain the action may be raised by general demurrer. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Pierce [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 604.

95. One suing as administratrix of the estate of Ferdinand N. A. cannot maintain an action for the death of Fernando W. A. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Pierce [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 604.

96. Rahe v. Board of Com'rs of Cuyahoga County, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 97.

97. Whitlow v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Tenn] 84 S W. 618.

98. Whitlow v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Tenn.] 84 S. W. 618. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2864, is penal, and an action under it cannot be maintained in Illinois. Raisor v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 215 Ill. 47, 74 N. E. 69. Code Ala. 1896, § 27 (Code 1886, § 2589) is not penal. Whitlow v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Tenn.] 84 S. W. 618.

99. Right of action given to the personal representative by Code Ala. 1896, § 27, is not repugnant to the public policy of Tennessee. Whitlow v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Tenn.] 84 S. W. 618. The Illinois statute provides that there must be pecuniary injury; the Missouri statute does not so require. Held there can be no recovery in Illinois under the Missouri statute without proof of damage. Raisor v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 215 Ill. 47, 74 N. E. 69.

3. Dennis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 49 S. E. 869. The provisions of Code N. C. § 1498, that the action must be brought within one year applies to an action under the statute brought in South Carolina. Id.

4. In a suit in a Federal court in Vermont for a death in Connecticut based on the statute of that state which requires the complaint to allege notice to defendant of the claim, but the statute of Vermont does not require such allegation, no such allegation is necessary. Brown v. New York, etc., R. Co., 136 F. 700. A complaint setting forth in the caption, plaintiff's name, followed by "administratrix of" decedent, and in some of the counts alleging that plaintiff "as administratrix" sues, and in others "the plaintiff as aforesaid claims," shows that plaintiff sued as administratrix. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Matthews [Ala.] 39 So. 207. An additional count, when read in connection with the others, held to show that plaintiff sued in her capacity as administratrix. Id.

5. Under a statute which provides that the recovery shall be for the benefit of the widow and children, where a widow sues as administratrix for the benefit of the children, it will be construed as an action for the benefit of the widow and children. Balti-

to a personal representative in different capacities cannot be joined[6] nor can a count at common law and one under a statute.[7] It must be alleged that the deceased left next of kin.[8] The complaint need not show that the plaintiff had a pecuniary interest in the life of the deceased.[9] A complaint by a parent for the death of a child need not allege that the child lived at home.[10] If death was caused through the negligence of a servant of the defendant, it must be alleged that the act causing death was in the line of his duty.[11] An allegation at the close of a complaint for the benefit of the widow that decedent's estate was damaged in a certain sum does not change the action from one under the statute to one for the benefit of his estate.[12] The usual rules as to amendments apply.[13]

The ordinary rules of negligence are applicable in matters not specially prescribed.[14] The death of the person for whose death the action is brought must be shown.[15] The facts essential to recovery need not be proven by direct evidence of persons who saw the occurrence.[16] Proof of date of death need not be confined to the date alleged in the petition.[17] When death is caused by the act of a servant, the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the act was in the scope of the servant's employment.[18] Where the action is for the death of a young child, the plaintiff must show no contributory negligence on his part or on the part of those who had him in charge.[19]

The instructions as to the measure of damages should be certain[20] and not misleading,[21] and the jury should not be instructed to consider elements not supported by evidence,[22] nor required to itemize the elements of damage.[23]

6. A count under the statute and a count at common law for injuries to the intestate cannot be joined in the same action. Brennan v. Standard Oil Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 472.

7. The husband's action for funeral expenses paid on the wrongful death of his wife cannot be joined with an action on behalf of the minor children for the death of their mother (Johnson v. Seattle Elec. Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 705), and where so joined and the children decline to amend so as to state their cause of action separately, judgment is properly entered for the defendant (Id.).

DECEIT.

Scope of topic.—This topic embraces fraud as a ground of action for damages, whether the action be in common-law form for deceit or an equivalent action under the Code. Fraud as a ground for relief other than damages is elsewhere treated.[31]

§ 1. Nature and elements.[32]—The essential elements of an action for deceit are representation, falsity, scienter, deception, and damage.[33]

29. NOTE. When debt is proper remedy: Debt in the debet, which is the only form of the action of debt now in use, and which is the one ordinarily understood when the action of debt is mentioned, is not in any case sustainable, unless the demand be for a sum certain or for a pecuniary demand which can readily be reduced to a certainty; that is, a liquidated demand. 1 Chit. Pl. 127; 1 Abbott Michigan Prac., § 166. In Michigan the importance of this action is somewhat diminished in the present condition of the practice on account of the statute (2 How. St. § 778; Comp. Laws 1897, § 10417), which authorizes the bringing of an action of assumpsit in all cases arising upon contracts under seal or upon judgments, as well as upon contracts not under seal. The action however still lies as at common law (Goodrich v. Leland, 18 Mich. 110; Stewart v. Sprague, 71 Mich. 50; McDonald v. Butler, 3 Mich. 558), and for reasons connected with the statute of limitations it must in some cases be employed in preference to the action of assumpsit [2 How St. subd. 1, §§ 8714, 8719] (Christy v. Farlin, 49 Mich. 319; Goodrich v. Leland, 18 Mich. 118). Assumpsit on instruments sealed or otherwise must be brought within six years. But an action of debt may be brought on an instrument under seal, or upon the judgment or decree of a court of record of the United States or of this state or of any other of the United States at any time within ten years. Sigler v. Platt, 16 Mich. 206; Goodrich v. Leland, 18 Mich. 110. Assumpsit also may be brought upon any such judgment or decree at any time within ten years. Snyder v. Hitchcock, 94 Mich. 313.—From 1 Abbott Michigan Prac., §§ 166, 167.

33. Miller v. John, 111 Ill. App. 56.

There must be some representation,[34] but it may be read from recitals in the written evidence of the transaction.[35]

The representation must be of a fact,[36] material and existing,[37] and not mere matter of opinion[38] or of law.[39] Ordinarily a statement as to value is a mere expression of opinion,[40] but may amount to a representation of fact under certain circumstances.[41] A representation of a matter of intention may amount to one of fact.[42] A false representation may be read from a promise.[43]

The representation must be false.[44] The maker must know it to be false[45] or

A statement of the milage of a road is not false because each mile of double track is counted as two miles, according to custom. Donnelly v. Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Co. [Md.] 61 A. 301. A statement made on the advice of attorneys that a certain charter was perpetual and had so been held by a state court is not shown to be false by the fact that the Supreme Court subsequently held the consolidation of the corporation holding the charter to be void without holding that the franchise was not perpetual. Id.

45. See 3 C. L. 1047, n. 5 et seq. The fact that a statement not susceptible of personal knowledge is untrue is insufficient. Spead v. Tomlinson [N. H.] 59 A. 376; Eckman v. Webb, 116 Ill. App. 467. Knowledge of the falsity or what is equivalent thereto must be alleged and proved. Kimber v. Young [C. C. A.] 137 F. 744.

NOTE. Necessity of scienter: The ceiling in an apartment house leased by the defendant to the plaintiff became unsafe. The defendant asserted as of his own knowledge that the ceiling was safe, honestly believ-make it with such reckless indifference as is equivalent to knowledge;[46] therefore, proof of a breach of warranty does not establish fraud.[47] A representation believed to be true though induced by ignorance or negligence will not sustain the action,[48] but it is held that representing as a fact that which the maker does not know to be true is actionable though made through an honest mistake.[49] Knowledge of facts may be proved by circumstantial evidence.[50]

The falsity must be willful[51] and have been made with intent to deceive,[52] but where known to be false, an intent to deceive will be presumed.[53]

ing his assertion. Later, the ceiling fell and injured plaintiff's wife. Held, there could be no recovery in an action of deceit, a scienter not having been alleged. Kushes v. Ginsburg, 32 N. Y. L. J. 1183, cited 5 Columbia L. R. 250. Belief in the truth of a statement is not a defense when it is made as of the defendant's knowledge. Hadsack v. Osmer, 153 N. Y. 604; Cabot v. Christie, 42 Vt. 121, 1 Am. Rep. 313; Litchfield v. Hutchinson, 117 Mass. 195. The court in the principal case seems to have been misled by the case of Kountze v. Kennedy, 147 N. Y. 124, 49 Am. St. Rep. 651, 29 L. R. A. 360, in which the expression was one of belief, not of knowledge. In such cases belief in the truth of the assertion is usually a defense. Hawley v. Smith, 46 N. J. Law, 380, 50 Am. Rep. 432, 5 Colum. L. R. 251.

In England it is settled that deceit will not lie for a false representation if made in the honest belief that it is true even though belief may not have been founded on such grounds as would produce belief in the mind of a prudent and competent man (Pollock, Torts [Webb's Ed.] 362, 363; Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337; Taylor v. Ashton, 11 Mees. & W. 401; Le Lievre v. Gould [1893] 1 Q. B. 491), and some of the courts of this country have adopted the same doctrine (Cowley v. Smith, 46 N. J. Law 380, 5 Am. Rep. 432; Townsend v. Felthousen, 156 N. Y. 618; Kountze v. Kennedy, 147 N. Y. 124, 49 Am. St. Rep. 651, 29 L. R. A. 360; Griswold v. Gebbie, 126 Pa. 353, 12 Am. St. Rep. 878; Boddy v. Henry, 113 Iowa, 462; Allison v. Jack, 76 Iowa, 205; Pieratt v. Young, 20 Ky. L. R. 1815, 49 S. W. 964). Others, however, consider the moral wrong sufficient to support the action, and belief in the truth of the statement is not considered a defense. Chatham Furnace Co. v. Moffatt, 147 Mass. 403, 9 Am. St. Rep. 727; Munroe v. Pritchett, 16 Ala. 785, 50 Am. Dec. 203; Foster v. Kennedy's Adm'r, 38 Ala. 359, 81 Am. Dec. 56; Cabot v. Christie, 42 Vt. 121, 1 Am. Rep. 313; Braley v. Held material: That certain bonds sold were preferred over certain others. Kimber v. Young [C. C. A.] 137 F. 744. False representations by a vendor as to the price he paid for the goods, if made with intent to deceive, are actionable. Mason v. Thornton & Co. [Ark.] 84 S. W. 1048. False representations to a married woman that her husband would receive a part of the purchase price of land, made to induce her to release her dower right, is actionable though she did not expect to receive any of the money herself. Garry v. Garry, 187 Mass. 62, 72 N. E. 335. A representation that a parcel of would not have been entered into[55] or contributing as an inducement to the transaction.[56]

The representations must be relied[57] and acted upon,[58] and must actually deceive the person who seeks to recover therefor.[59] That one makes an affidavit does not preclude him from maintaining an action against the person whose false representations he relied upon in making it.[60]

They must be such as he is entitled to rely upon,[61] and such as to mislead a reasonably prudent man,[62] unless the parties occupy fiduciary relations toward each other.[63] Therefore, plaintiff must have been ignorant of their falsity.[64] One may rely on representations as to quantity of land after view[65] but not those as to quality,[66] and a refusal by a vendor to warrant the quantity is not inconsistent with his liability for false representations as to it.[67] The rule of caveat emptor does not apply where the buyer has no knowledge nor means at hand of obtaining it,[68] and state-land contains "about 17,000 acres" is materially false when it contains only 15,000 acres. Boddy v. Henry, 126 Iowa, 31, 101 N. W. 447.

Not material: Representations that certain bonds were legal obligations held not to be material. Kimber v. Young [C. C. A.] 137 F. 744. Fraudulent representations as to ownership of adjacent land by a lessor are not actionable if the lessee is not disturbed in the possession of the parcel he leased. Robinson v. ments of fact peculiarly within the knowledge of the maker may be relied on without investigation when means are not easily ascertainable.[69]

The representations need not be made personally by the maker to the person relying on them,[70] and if made for the purpose of, and do induce a transaction it is immaterial that the maker was not a party to the transaction.[71] It would seem to be deceit when one connives at the sale of impure food and then causes the arrest of the purchaser when he resells it.[72]

It is essential that damage result[73] as a direct consequence of the deceit,[74] but the pecuniary loss need not be sustained immediately.[75]

§ 2. Actions and procedure.[76]—A principal is liable for the misrepresentations of his agent.[77] Officers of a corporation who obtain a loan by means of false representations as to the financial condition of the corporation are personally liable though the evidence of the transaction is made in the name of the corporation.[78] The action sounds in tort and cannot be predicated on a matter ex contractu.[79] The action must be brought within the time limited by statute.[80]

That a person might have accomplished what he did without deceiving any one is no defense.[81] That a purchaser of land does not elect to rescind the sale does not preclude his recovery for deceit inducing it,[82] but he can maintain the action only when his evidence makes a clear case.[83] The action may be maintained by an interested though silent party to the transaction.[84]

84. A party on whose behalf a conveyance is made may recover for fraud relative to it though the property stood in the name of and was conveyed by another. McDonald v. Smith [Mich.] 102 N. W. 668.

Pleading.[85]—An action for deceit and breach of warranty[86] and a count charging fraud and one charging conspiracy to commit fraud may be joined,[87] and under a statute providing that assumpsit will lie where case for deceit might be brought, a count for deceit may be joined with the common counts.[88]

All of the essential elements of the tort must be alleged[89] and the facts relied upon set forth specifically[90] with definiteness and certainty.[91] The scienter must be alleged,[92] but excuse for failure to investigate need not be.[93] If the complaint is not specific, a bill of particulars may be demanded,[94] if the fraud as alleged has been denied.[95]

Matters of defense must be specially pleaded,[96] and objections going to the right to maintain the action must be raised by special demurrer.[97]

Evidence.[98]—The burden is on the party alleging deceit to prove it clearly and satisfactorily[99] as alleged,[1] but every allegation of false representation need not be proved,[2] and where a complaint alleges a conspiracy to defraud, it is immaterial that the proof does not show conspiracy.[3] One asserting deceit through an agent has the burden of proving the agency.[4] If set up as a defense in an action for the price of goods, the vendor has the burden to prove a ratification and waiver of it.[5]

Evidence as to questions not in issue is inadmissible,[6] but specific acts relevant to the issue are admissible though not pleaded.[7]

Instructions.[8]—An instruction in which the element of belief is implied is not objectionable because not making special reference to it,[9] and a charge that a representation must be intended and calculated to deceive sufficiently charges that it must be material.[10]

The measure of damages for deceit in a contract of sale is the difference between the value of what the buyer parts with and the value of what he receives.[11] For deceit relative to an incumbrance on land, the measure is the amount of the incumbrance,[12] and if title to a portion of land purchased is misrepresented, it is the value of such portion.[13] One induced to purchase bonds cannot recover the difference between what he paid for them and what he sold them for long before they were due.[14]

DEDICATION.

§ 1. What is dedication.[15]—Dedication is an appropriation of land to some public use, made by the owner and accepted for such use by or on behalf of the public.[16]

§ 2. The right to dedicate.[17]—The dedicator must have some estate in the premises dedicated.[18] A railroad has power to dedicate.[19]

§ 3. The purposes of dedication.[20]—Lands are dedicated for the purpose of establishing public use in and control over the premises dedicated[21] for the purposes only for which they are dedicated.[22]

§ 4. Mode of dedication.[23] In general.[24]—Dedication is either statutory[25] or common law.[26] To constitute a common-law dedication, an intention to dedicate and

Where one is induced to exchange land for corporate stock and ratifies the transaction after the deceit is discovered, he may recover the difference in value between what was received or parted with, as the case may be, and what would have been received or parted with had the representations been true. Beare v. Wright [N. D.] 103 N. W. 632.

12. Hahl v. Brooks, 213 Ill. 134, 72 N. E. 727.

15. See 3 C. L. 1050.

16. See Cyc. Law Dict. "Dedication."

17. See 3 C. L. 1050.

18. A verbal agreement by a person to dedicate as a street, land of which he is not the owner is void. Schneider v. Sulzer, 212 Ill. 87, 72 N. E. 19. Dedicators of a city did not own tide lands beyond the meander line. Sheridan v. Empire City, 45 Or. 296, 77 P. 393.

19. An intention to dedicate, however, will not be inferred from the use of land by the public, necessary to or consistent with the public use for which the company holds the property claimed to have been dedicated. Loomis v. Connecticut R. & Lighting Co. [Conn.] 61 A. 539.

20. See 3 C. L. 1050.

21. Dedication is necessary to establish in the public a right of control over the premises of another. Pitcairn v. Chester, 135 F. 587.

22. The laying of telephone conduits in the street is not one of the purposes of the original dedication and imposes an additional servitude. Burns v. Telephone Co., 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 257.

NOTE. Purposes of dedication: A dedication may be made subject to reservations or restrictions upon the use of the land by the public. Thus a highway may be dedicated to be used only during certain seasons (Hughes v. Bingham, 135 N. Y. 347) or subject to the right of the dedicator or other to use the land for certain purposes or at certain times (City of Noblesville v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 130 Ind. 1; City of Dubuque v. Benson, 23 Iowa, 248; Ayres v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 52 N. J. Law 405); and a highway may be dedicated not for general highway purposes, but for the use of pedestrians or a certain class of vehicles (Trustees of Methodist Episcopal Church v. Hoboken, 33 N. J. Law 405). See Tiffany, Real Prop., p. 973.

23. See 3 C. L. 1050.

Note: See Tiffany, Real Prop., p. 971.

24. See 3 C. L. 1050.

25. In Iowa, by statute, the acknowledgment and recording of a plat is equivalent to a dedication in fee of the streets indicated thereon. Code 1873, § 561. Backman v. Oskaloosa [Iowa] 104 N. W. 347.

26. The doing of an act by an owner which clearly shows an intention to dedicate, and the doing of an act by the public which shows an intention to accept, as iman acceptance by the public must be clearly established.[27] No specific length of possession by the public or particular form of ceremony, however, is necessary.[28] A dedication may be implied from acts of the fee owner,[29] or may result from a ratification of acts done by one who had no authority to dedicate,[30] or from long continued user by the public,[31] especially if acquiesced in by the owner,[32] although where user is adverse and has continued for a period necessary to give title by adverse possession, prescription would seem the more accurate term.[33] A dedication will not be implied where a municipality lays out streets over the land of a private owner.[34] A reservation in a deed of a strip "appropriated for a public highway" amounts to an offer to dedicate,[35] and such act may result in dedication, though it is proving and using the premises as a street, constitutes a common law dedication. McGrath v. Nevada [Mo.] 86 S. W. 236.

27. Town of Bethel v. Pruett, 215 Ill. 162, 74 N. E. 111; McKenzie v. Haines, 123 Wis. 557, 102 N. W. 33. There must be an intention to dedicate and an acceptance. Wilson v. Lakeview Land Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 303. It being a voluntary donation, there are no presumptions in its favor. Id. The grading of a strip reserved by owners who made a plat, and the putting up of street sign posts at the corners, held insufficient to show a common-law dedication. Mitchell v. Denver [Colo.] 78 P. 686.

28. It is only necessary that the owner should definitely give the land by written declaration or by acts. Town of Bethel v. Pruett, 215 Ill. 162, 74 N. E. 111. Evidence held to show dedication. Calhoun v. Faraldo [La.] 38 So. 551.

29. Where a division superintendent of a railroad constructed a street crossing and the town was built up with reference thereto and was used by the public for four years, there was held to be a dedication, though the superintendent had no power to dedicate. His conduct having been acquiesced in by the managing agents. Larson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [S. D.] 103 N. W. 35. An intent to dedicate and an acceptance may be implied where a way has been used for a considerable period with the consent of the owner, and it is beneficial to and has been treated by the public as a highway, and material injury would ensue if it was closed. McClaskey v. McDaniel [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1023. Where an owner opens a strip of land as an approach to his place of business and tells the street commissioner that the space is open to the public and always would be and that the city ought to macadamize it, this constitutes a dedication. Loomis v. Connecticut R. & Lighting Co. [Conn.] 61 A. 539. Opening of a passageway by an owner as a convenient means of access to his store for himself and customers does not amount to a dedication, though the passway may be used by the public generally. Id.

30. A ratification of a dedication made by a vendee by one holding a vendor's lien on the premises is as effective as if originally made by such lienor. City of Ft. Worth v. Cetti [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 826. The payment of taxes assessed according to a plat does not constitute a ratification of it with reference to streets noted thereon as dedicated. Sheridan v. Empire City, 45 Or. 296, 77 P. 393.

31. User by the public, in order to constitute dedication, must exclude the owner's private rights. Wilson v. Lakeview Land Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 303. A dedication may be conclusively presumed from long continued public use and municipal control over contiguous streets, and all of the street in question except a small portion in controversy. City of Houston v. Finnigan [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 470. Where a strip of land has been recognized as a street; was so designated on the plat of the town and timber thereon had been cut and used for school purposes, a finding of dedication was justified, though a portion of the strip was inclosed. Heard v. Connor [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 605. Evidence that city authorities laid sidewalks on each side of a strip claimed to have been dedicated by common-law dedication, established a grade and otherwise improved it is admissible on the question of dedication. Raymond v. Wichita [Kan.] 79 P. 323.

32. User by the public and acquiescence therein by the owner may constitute both dedication and acceptance. Raymond v. Wichita [Kan.] 79 P. 323. Evidence of adverse user to the knowledge of the owner is admissible on the question of dedication. Id.

33. To establish a highway by prescription there must be user by the public under a claim of right, adverse to the occupancy of the owner, of a defined track, for a period necessary to bar an action to recover the land. Bleck v. Keller [Neb.] 103 N. W. 674. Long user by a city gives a highway by prescription. City of Ft. Worth v. Cetti [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 826. To acquire a highway by user it must have continued under a claim of right for a period necessary to acquire title by adverse possession. Southern Ind. R. Co. v. Norman [Ind.] 74 N. E. 896. An unexplained user for 20 years will be presumed to have been under a claim of right. Id. The occasional driving by the public over a way is not a sufficient use to acquire an easement by prescription. Aikens' Adm'x v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 929.

not expressly stated that the reservation is for the benefit of the public.[36] A mere offer to dedicate may be withdrawn at any time prior to acceptance.[37]

An intention[38] to dedicate is essential,[39] but it may be inferred from acts of the owners.[40] Hence a dedication may result, though there is a secret intent not to dedicate.[41] Long continued user by the public may indicate an intent to dedicate, but it is by no means conclusive.[42] An alleged dedicator may testify that he never intended to dedicate,[43] and that he never gave any express consent to the public use of the premises,[44] but he may be contradicted by his conduct, acts and declarations.[45]

Acceptance[46] within a reasonable time after the dedication[47] by or on behalf of the public is essential,[48] but may result from user by the public,[49] or be made in any

Acts of the owner who had dedicated streets and alleys, in selling the land and permitting the same to be used and cultivated without reference to such streets for 30 years before the dedication was accepted constitute a revocation. City of Venice v. Madison County Ferry Co. [Ill.] 75 N. E. 105.

Unless an intent to dedicate appears, the public can acquire no right by user unless it extends for the period necessary to acquire title by adverse possession. Coward v. Llewellyn, 209 Pa. 582, 58 A. 1066. The laying out of a highway on a section line by residents along such line, the user of such road by the public and its improvement by township officers is not a dedication of the strip marked out, used and improved, where it departs from the true section line. Shanline v. Wiltsie [Kan.] 78 P. 436. Where plattors reserve a strip without intention to dedicate it, the fact that subsequent owners treat it as dedicated, which acts are not known or acquiesced in by the original owners, does not constitute a dedication. Mitchell v. Denver [Colo.] 78 P. 686. A space in an outlying town addition for a street was marked on the plat "closed," and the owner asserted his ownership over it whenever occasion required. It was never improved and was used by the public only as outlying property connected with the town. Held, there was no dedication. Pitcairn v. Chester, 135 F. 587. Where one co-owner gave the city a right to discharge sewage into a sinkhole on the premises, but he and the other co-owners refused to execute a deed giving the city a right to do so, there was held to be no dedication but a mere revocable license. Sherman Line Co. v. Glens Falls, 101 App. Div. 269, 91 N. Y. S. 994.

Acceptance not shown: Proof of very little work done on a highway and not altogether clear that it was done by the proper authorities does not show an acceptance. Town of Bethel v. Pruett, 215 Ill. 162, 74 N. E. 111. A finding that a street closed at one end had been used by the public by passing through a gate, that the owner had at times used the strip for a garden and as an approach to her premises and had dug a well thereon held insufficient to show acceptance. The building of a pest house on a public square shown by a plat is not an acceptance where done by consent of the proprietor of the platted tract and not because of the dedication. City of Venice v. Madison County Ferry Co. [Ill.] 75 N. E. 105. A survey of streets and alleys shown on a plat, made 50 years after the execution of the plat, and long after the dedication was revoked, is not an acceptance. Id.

Taking sand and dirt from streets and alleys shown on a plat for the purpose of manuer provided by statute,[50] and need not be made until the convenience of the public demands it,[51] providing it is prior to revocation of the offer to dedicate.[52] Land dedicated for a street is presumed to have been accepted in its entirety.[53] Acceptance may be made by the municipality for whose benefit the land is dedicated.[54] An acceptance by the public authorities is not necessary to entitle one who has purchased a lot with reference to a dedicated street to have it kept open.[55]

A sale of lots with reference to a plat[56] ordinarily constitutes a dedication of the streets and alleys therein described,[57] unless otherwise provided by statute. By statute in Minnesota it is necessary that such plat be approved by the village council.[58] This rule applies to parks and other public places designated,[59] and especially as to lots sold which abut on the plot designated.[60] A formal written dedication need not accompany the map.[61] Where a plat is ambiguous as to the amount of land dedicated, it will be construed as a whole and most strongly against the dedicator,[62] and the fact that a park noted on the plat is not mentioned in the dedicatory state-building up other streets is not an acceptance of such streets where such sand was paid for by the village or taken with the consent of the proprietor of the platted territory. City of Venice v. Madison County Ferry Co. [Ill.] 75 N. E. 105. The inclusion within the limits of a municipality of territory covered by a plat is not an acceptance of the streets and alleys shown thereon. Id. Plats and maps.[65]—Recording a plat as provided by statute constitutes a dedication of plots designated as reserved for public use.[66]

Evidence of dedication and questions of law and fact.[67]—Dedication, if denied, is a question of fact,[68] and one asserting it has the burden of proving it.[69] Prima facie evidence that the land is subject to taxation is prima facie evidence that it has not been dedicated.[70]

§ 5. Effect of dedication.[71]—Dedication divests the original owner of any private ownership rights in the premises.[72] After acceptance the property becomes subject to the exclusive control of the public,[73] and its improper use cannot be enjoined by a citizen and taxpayer, as such,[74] and the owner cannot by any act of his deprive the public of the use of it.[75] A dedication becomes irrevocable after third persons have acquired rights which would be impaired by revocation.[76] Dedicated premises may be abandoned,[77] and where abandonment works a forfeiture, a subsequent user without the consent of the owner does not work a revival of the rights granted.[78] As a general rule the power to change[79] or vacate dedicated premises rests in the municipality[80] or legislature;[81] but in Illinois, by statute, a plat in which designated on a plat as a park, construed. Id.

As to a grant of a right of way for access to a dock on condition of reverter on failure to maintain or abandonment of the dock, evidence that boys occasionally fished from the dock does not show a user within the contemplation of the parties. no lots have been sold may be vacated by the owner,[82] and where lots have been sold the power to vacate rests in all the owners of the platted premises.[83] Streets may not be vacated to the special injury of one who has purchased with reference thereto.[84]

88. Hayden v. Collins [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1120.

89. Note: Whether an instrument specifically providing that it is not to take effect until the grantor's death is a deed or a testamentary disposition is a question upon which there is an irreconcilable conflict of authority. Thus in Lauck v. Logan, 45 W. Va. 251, 31 S. E. 986, the deed contained these words: "This deed shall take and be in full force and effect immediately after the said William Logan shall depart this life, and not sooner." It was held a good deed, reserving a life estate in the grantor. So in Wilson v. Carrico, 140 Ind. 533, 40 N. E. 50, 49 Am. St. Rep. 213, the words of the deed were: "To be of no effect until after death of grantor, and then to be in full force." The instrument was held valid as a deed. The same ruling was made in Shackelton v. Sebree, 86 Ill. 616, where the words were: "This deed is not to take effect until after my decease—not to be recorded until after my decease." So in Wyman v. Brown, 50 Me. 139, where the words were: "Not to take effect during my lifetime, and to take effect and be in force after my death." So in West v. Wright, 115 Ga. 277, 41 S. E. 602, where the words were: "This deed is to take effect at my death." So in Abney v. Moore, 106 Ala. 131, 18 So. 60, where the words were: "This conveyance is not to take effect until after my death, and after my death the title to the foregoing lands is to vest immediately in my said children." So in Bunch v. Nicks, 50 Ark. 367, 7 S. W. 563, where the words were: "And the deed shall go into full force and effect at my death." See, also, Latimer v. Latimer, 174 Ill. 418, 51 N. E. 548; Abbott v. Holway, 72 Me. 298; Owen v. Williams, 114 Ind. 179, 15 N. E. 678; Wynn v. Wynn, 112 Ga. 214, 37 S. E. 378; Brice v. Sheffield, 118 Ga. 128, 44 S. E. 843. In these states the rule followed rests on the ground that as the instrument contains words of present grant, covenant of warranty, and the like, and is authenticated or acknowledged as a deed, some force must be given all the parts of the instrument, and such a construction must be given to it as will make the instrument effective, rather than one that would deny it any operation; and therefore the words that the instrument is not to take effect until the death of the grantor must be construed as a clumsy way of expressing that the deed is not to take effect in possession or in the enjoyment of the property until the grantor's death. On the other hand, in Pinkham v. Pinkham, 55 Neb. 729, 76 N. W. 411, the deed contained these words: "This deed is to take effect and be in full force from and after my death," and it was held that no present interest passed by the grant. The same ruling was made in Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. 126, where the words were: "This conveyance is was to convey a present interest, though possession be postponed until after his death, it is a deed.[90]

A conveyance may be read into a contract to convey,[91] or a decree of court,[92] or an agreement as to their interests, between heirs;[93] but a release by the beneficiary in a trust deed is not a deed.[94] By statute in Iowa the acknowledgment and recording of a plat is equivalent to a deed in fee of a street indicated thereon.[95]

A deed absolute on its face may be a mortgage[96] if it is intended as such at the time of its inception,[97] and there is a subsisting debt after execution,[98] but a mortgage will not be read into a conditional sale,[99] or absolute sale,[1] and contract to reconvey.[2] That an absolute deed was intended as a mortgage may be established by parol evidence.[3] The burden is on one asserting it to prove it[4] by evidence in no way to take effect until after the decease of the grantor." So In Armstrong v. Armstrong, 4 Baxt. [Tenn.] 357, where the words were: "This conveyance to have effect from and after my death." So in Leaver v. Gauss, 62 Iowa, 314, 17 N. W. 522, where the words were: "To commence after the death of both the said grantors." Also the following: "It is hereby understood and agreed between the grantors and the grantee that the grantee shall have no interest in the said premises as long as the said grantors, or either of them, shall live, and that after the death of both the said grantors, the grantee shall have and hold the premises by fee simple title." So in Murphy v. Gabbert, 166 Mo. 596, 66 S. W. 536, 89 Am. St. Rep. 733, where the words were: "The intention of this instrument of writing is such that if Mrs. Ann Ellison relinquishes her entire right at her death, then this deed is to immediately come into effect, but not until then." To same effect, see Coulter v. Shelmadine, 204 Pa. 120, 53 A. 638; Horn v. Broyles [Tenn. Ch. App.] 62 S. W. 297; Griffin v. McIntosh, 176 Mo. 392, 75 S. W. 677; Hazleton v. Reed, 46 Kan. 73, 26 P. 450, 26 Am. St. Rep. 86; Bigley v. Souvey, 45 Mich. 370, 8 N. W. 98; Carlton v. Cameron, 54 Tex. 72, 38 Am. Rep. 620. See Hunt v. Hunt, 26 Ky. L. R. 973, 82 S. W. 998.

90. A deed of trust from husband to wife, containing apt words of conveyance but reserving a right to revoke, is a deed. Cribbs v. Walker [Ark.] 85 S. W. 244. The fact that the time of enjoyment is postponed is insufficient to show that the instrument is testamentary in character. Webb v. Webb [Iowa] 104 N. W. 438.

91. An agreement by a purchaser of a concession from the state of Coahuila before the land was selected to sell his concession amounts to an act of sale and not an executory contract to sell, since he had power to alienate his concession at once. Surghenor v. Ranger [C. C. A.] 133 F. 453.

92. A decree in specific performance adjudging one to be the equitable owner is not a conveyance within Acts 1885, p. 233, c. 147, providing that no conveyance shall be valid as against creditors or bona fide purchasers until after registration. Skinner v. Terry, 134 N. C. 305, 46 S. E. 517.

93. An agreement between the heirs of an intestate providing that the widow was entitled to one-third of the income of the premises, and that the heirs stand seised of certain individual interests operates as a conveyance between the parties. Howells v. McGraw, 97 App. Div. 460, 90 N. Y. S. 1.

2. An agreement for an immediate resale to the grantor does not constitute an absolute deed a mortgage. Hays v. Emerson [Ark.] 87 S. W. 1027. An absolute conveyance and an agreement to reconvey upon condition held not to constitute an equitable mortgage. Bailey v. St. Louis Union Trust Co. [Mo.] 87 S. W. 1003.

3. Welborn v. Dixon [S. C.] 49 S. E. 232; Miller v. Miller [Md.] 61 A. 210. Though the debt is due to a third person and not to the grantee. Clark v. Seagraves, 186 Mass. 430, 71 N. E. 813. Civ. Code, § 2922, providing the requisites of a mortgage does not preclude satisfactory as to credibility, unequivocal as to terms and meaning, clear and convincing.[5] As to whether the fact must be established beyond a reasonable doubt there is a conflict of authority.[6]

Requisites.[7]—The grantor must have some estate in the premises,[8] but a deed by an entryman who has the equitable title passes it to his grantee in whom the legal title vests by way of relation when the patent issues.[9] It must contain apt words of conveyance,[10] a definite description of the premises conveyed,[11] or a description the declaring of an absolute deed to be a mortgage. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Cerf [Cal.] 81 P. 1077.

4. Hays v. Emerson [Ark.] 87 S. W. 1027; Rankin v. Rankin [Ill.] 74 N. E. 763.

5. Gerhardt v. Tucker, 187 Mo. 46, 85 S. W. 552; Holmes v. Warren, 145 Cal. 457, 78 P. 954; Way v. Mayhugh [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 724; Rankin v. Rankin, 111 Ill. App. 403.

Evidence sufficient to show a deed was intended as a mortgage. McGill v. Thorne [S. C.] 48 S. E. 994; Faulkner v. Cody, 45 Misc. 64, 91 N. Y. S. 633; Huntington v. Kneeland, 93 N. Y. S. 845; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Jacobson, 105 Ill. App. 283; Falkner v. Powell [Neb.] 100 N. W. 937.

Evidence insufficient to show a deed to be a mortgage. Northwestern Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Lough [N. D.] 102 N. W. 160. To impress a trust upon the land conveyed. Sheldon v. Carr [Mich.] 103 N. W. 181; Steele v. Steele, 112 Ill. App. 409.

Question whether a deed was given as security held one of fact. Tappen v. Eshelman [Ind.] 73 N. E. 688.

Evidence held admissible: Declarations made by the grantor at the time of and subsequent to the execution of the instrument. Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, 78 P. 957. A receipt given by the grantor to the grantee stating that it was received in final payment of the purchase price as per the deed in question. Holmes v. Warren, 145 Cal. 457, 78 P. 954. A contract whereby the grantor agreed to sell to the grantee on a certain date at a certain price. Id.

6. In Missouri this quantum of evidence is required (Gerhardt v. Tucker, 187 Mo. 46, 85 S. W. 552); but in Minnesota it is not (Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Jones [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1017).

7. See 3 C. L. 1057.

8. Conkey v. Rex, 212 Ill. 444, 72 N. E. 370; Wade v. Brown [Ark.] 87 S. W. 639; Gayle v. Rigg [Ky.] 85 S. W. 1172. The interest in land that a child will inherit in case his parent dies intestate is not subject to conveyance (Furnish's Adm'r v. Lilly [Ky.] 84 S. W. 734); but a contingent remainder may be conveyed (Cheek v. Walker, 138 N. C. 446, 50 S. E. 863). A contingent interest may be created by a valid deed of trust. Carroll v. Smith, 99 Md. 653, 59 A. 131. A recitation of an intention to convey whatever title the grantor acquired at a certain tax sale is no evidence of the title acquired at such sale. McKee v. Ellis [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 880. Where the owner had conveyed the fee and by a subsequent deed reciting that it was given to correct the prior one, sought to convey to the original grantee and another, the latter got nothing. McConnell v. Pierce, 210 Ill. 627, 71 N. E. 622. A deed by one having no interest in the land and no authority to execute a deed conveys nothing. Bullin v. Hancock, 138 N. C. 198, 50 S. E. 621. Where two deeds were executed the same date, one from the grantor to the grantee and one back, it could be reasonably inferred from the evidence that either was executed first. Chadbourne v. Hartz, 93 Minn. 233, 101 N. W. 68. Title is conveyed by a deed executed after the vesting of an indeterminate estate as against the lien of an execution levied prior to the vesting. Swerer v. Trustees of the Ohio Wesleyan University, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 333.

9. Entryman who has paid his money and obtained the registrar's certificate of purchase. Smith v. Beloit, 122 Wis. 396, 100 N. W. 877.

10. A deed after conveying a life estate recited that after the death of the life tenant it was the "purpose" of the grantor that the land "shall become the property of R." conveys nothing to R. McGarrigle v. Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum of San Francisco, 145 Cal. 694, 79 P. 447. A written agreement that a child should have the income of certain land after the deduction of running expenses, taxes, etc., if the father did not need the same, is not a deed. Brettman v. Fischer [Ill.] 74 N. E. 777. A fee cannot be reduced to a life estate by a separate instrument concurrently executed unless the latter contain appropriate operative words of conveyance of the remainder or reversion. Lee v. Scott, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 369.

11. The description must be sufficient to identify the property. Holley's Ex'r v. Curry [W. Va.] 51 S. E. 135. If the description is so indefinite as to afford no means of identifying any land, the deed is inoperative. Pitts v. Whitehead, 121 Ga. 704, 49 S. E. 693.

DESCRIPTION HELD INSUFFICIENT. By metes and bounds: Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Evans [Ark.] 88 S. W. 992. A conveyance of "coal banks reserved by the grantor in a prior deed made by him to a certain other person" is a certain description. Jones v. American Ass'n [Ky.] 86 S. W. 1111. A reference to the land by lot number, describing it. Lieberman v. Clark [Tenn.] 85 S. W. 258. "My entire undivided one-tenth interest in about 265 acres of land of R., deceased, of H. County, Kentucky." Fields v. Fish & Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 659, 82 S. W. 376. A description in a conveyance of an undivided interest in certain lands as "belonging to the separate estate of P." does not qualify the conveyance nor prevent its taking effect from delivery. Garner v. Boyle, 97 Tex. 460, 79 S. W. 1066. Description of a lot "90 by 450" on a certain street is sufficient where the grantor owns only one lot of those dimensions on that street. Burton v. Mullenary [Cal.] 81 P.

capable of being made certain,[12] be signed[13] by one competent to execute a deed,[14] or with authority to convey,[15] and must run to a grantee capable of taking.[16] In order to cut off a wife's dower right, a deed by a married man must be joined in by his wife.[17] Statutory requirements must be complied with.[18] Unless otherwise provided by statute, the deed must have been executed at a time when the grantor was seised of the premises,[19] and in some states attested, if a grant of a freehold

544. Description of a deed of a right of way as "land lying within fifty feet of the main track of the railroad." Abercrombie v. Simmons [Kan.] 81 P. 208. Description of land conveyed for a public road held not void for indefiniteness. Mitchell v. Einstein, 94 N. Y. S. 210. "One-fourth interest" in a definitely described lot is not so vague and indefinite as to be void, but is an accurate description of a fractional interest in the land. Phillips v. Collinsville Granite Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 666. Deed of water right held not void for uncertainty as to the amount of water to be diverted. Everett Water Co. v. Powers, 37 Wash. 143, 79 P. 617. Grant of right of way for a pipe line not specifying the exact boundaries held not void for uncertainty as to location. Id.

Description held void for indefiniteness. Kennedy v. Maness, 138 N. C. 35, 50 S. E. 450. If the description in a tax deed is insufficient to identify the property, no title passes. Levy v. Gause, 112 La. 789, 36 So. 684.

12. A description is certain which can be made certain. Welborn v. Dixon [S. C.] 49 S. E. 232. A description is not insufficient when one of the corners called can be established by a simple mathematical calculation. Wall v. Club Land & Cattle Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 534. It is not essential, however, that it be such as without the aid of extrinsic evidence the property may be ascertained. Description held sufficient. Halley's Ex'r v. Curry [W. Va.] 51 S. E. 135. The description must be such that the property can be located by the aid of extrinsic evidence which does not add to or enlarge the description. Archer v. Beihl [C. C. A.] 136 F. 113. A deed of all of one's interest in certain land as heir of a certain person may be explained by showing what his interest was. Phillips v. Collinsville Granite Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 666.

13. A recital in a deed that it is executed as a duplicate of a former one is an admission of the execution of the former one. City of Hickory v. Southern R. Co., 137 N. C. 189, 49 S. E. 202. Evidence held to show that a deed executed by mark was executed by the grantee, though the name accompanying the mark was spelled differently from hers. Timber v. Desparois [S. D.] 101 N. W. 879. The acknowledgment of a signature is a sufficient signing. Godsey v. Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 657, 82 S. W. 386; Loyd v. Oates [Ala.] 38 So. 1022. Evidence held to show that a deed was executed. Brooks v. Hunt, 26 Ky. L. R. 608, 82 S. W. 296. Deed held not invalid because not joined in by certain trustees. Koch v. Robinson, 26 Ky. L. R. 969, 83 S. W. 111. Where a deed is lost, execution may be proved by a series of concomitant acts which would not tend to any other purpose than the execution of the deed. Garrett v. Spradling [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 293.

14. A deed by an infant is voidable not void. Hiles v. Hiles, 26 Ky. L. R. 824, 82 S. W. 580. It is presumed that female grantors in ancient deeds were unmarried. Dunn v. Stowers [Va.] 51 S. E. 366. Under Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 592, c. 547), § 207, deeds can be executed only by the grantor. Thistle v. Jones, 45 Misc. 215, 92 N. Y. S. 113.

15. An administrator grantor must have power from the court. Hall v. Davis [Ga.] 50 S. E. 106. A power of attorney authorizing the donee to sell the donor's lands does not authorize a sale in consideration of the donee's debts or a joint debt of the donee and donor. Hunter v. Eastham [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 336. Where an administrator advertised to sell at public outcry certain land "except the minerals therein," but in the deed no reference was made to the exception, it will be presumed that he did not intend to exceed his authority and pass title to the minerals. Phillips v. Collinsville Granite Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 666. Evidence held insufficient to show that a deed was executed by an agent without authority. Brown v. Orange County [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 138, 88 S. W. 247. A deed by the cashier of a state bank from the bank to himself as an individual is void in the absence of proof of his authority to execute it. Northwestern Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Lough [N. D.] 102 N. W. 160. An act of sale signed by one partner for himself and the others, construed to have passed the interest of both, since at the time it was executed a verbal sale of land was valid where it was executed. Surghenor v. Ranger, 133 F. 453.

16. A corporation may not deed property for the benefit of an officer or stockholder. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Jones [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1017.

17. A conveyance signed by a married man alone does not pass his wife's dower right. Furnish's Adm'r v. Lilly [Ky.] 84 S. W. 734. A deed executed in 1862, reciting that the grantor is a bachelor, is presumptive evidence that he was single when he executed a deed in 1858. Gibson v. Brown, 214 Ill. 330, 73 N. E. 578.

18. Signing, sealing and delivery in the presence of two subscribing witnesses of the grantor. Parken v. Safford [Fla.] 37 So. 567. In Illinois a deed is valid though the Federal statute requiring revenue stamps to be placed thereon and canceled is not complied with. Thompson v. Calhoun [Ill.] 74 N. E. 775.

estate and not acknowledged.[20] If its genuineness is questioned, it must be established.[21] A deed to become operative in the future is valid.[22]

Delivery[23] by authority of the grantor[24] with the intention of passing title[25] and

20. A grant of a right to lay pipes over land so long as the grantee occupies certain lands is a grant of a freehold interest. Clark v. Strong, 93 N. Y. S. 514.

21. Other signatures made by the grantor in the deed cannot be compared with the signature to the deed for the purpose of disproving its genuineness. Campbell v. Bates [Ala.] 39 So. 144. Where execution is denied, it must be proven by a preponderance of evidence. Parken v. Safford [Fla.] 37 So. 567. The transcribing of instruments not entitled to record on the records does not make such records sufficient evidence of the execution of the instruments. Schultz v. Tonty Lumber Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 353. An instrument appearing on the records in the handwriting of a clerk who was grantor therein is evidence of execution, though the instrument was not entitled to record. Whitaker v. Thayer [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 364.

22. At grantor's death. Lewis v. Tisdale [Ark.] 88 S. W. 579.

23. See 3 C. L. 1058, n. 76 et seq. Schnurer v. Birheck Sav. & Loan Co., 91 N. Y. S. 742; Parken v. Safford [Fla.] 37 So. 567; Erler v. Erler, 124 Iowa, 726, 100 N. W. 856; Powers v. Rude, 14 Okl. 381, 79 P. 89. Delivery is complete when the grantor parts with control over the instrument with intention that title shall pass. Biggins v. Lambert, 115 Ill. App. 576.

Evidence held to show delivery: Lewis v. Tisdale [Ark.] 88 S. W. 579; Doan v. Hostetler, 215 Ill. 635, 74 N. E. 767. Instruction as to what constitutes delivery, approved. Lancaster v. Lee [S. C.] 51 S. E. 139.

Held a sufficient delivery: A manual delivery of a deed of gift to the grantee who takes it and hands it to her brother to be kept for her and he puts it away without recording it constitutes a valid delivery. Fischer v. Union Trust Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 852. Where a husband in delivering a deed of trust to his wife acted on the advice of counsel as to delivery and handed her the deed, but it was agreed that he should keep possession of it until his death, delivery was shown. Cribbs v. Walker [Ark.] 85 S. W. 244. Where one shortly before death executed a deed and placed it in an envelope with her will with directions to deliver it to the grantee at her death if not recalled. Prior to her death, she recalled the envelope but without opening it directed that it be delivered after her death. Held, a good delivery. Wilcox v. First M. E. Church and Soc. of Henderson, 93 N. Y. S. 423. A delivery to a third person to be delivered to the grantee after the grantor's death is a good delivery, though the grantor retains control of the premises (Kirkwood v. Smith, 212 Ill. 395, 72 N. E. 427), and the grantor cannot change his purpose and revoke the conveyance (Tompkins v. Thompson, 93 N. Y. S. 1070). No title passes until final delivery. Id. But the title is then deemed to relate back to the time of delivery to the third person. Id. Where a deed is delivered after a certain proportion of the price has been paid, the delivery relates back to the date of the contract of sale. Krakow v. Wille [Wis.] 103 N. W. 1121.

Delivery to the husband of the grantee is a delivery to the grantee (Newman v. Newman [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 635), and a delivery to one of several grantees to hold for all, with the knowledge of the others, is a delivery to all (Webb v. Webb [Iowa] 104 N. W. 438), and a delivery to a third person with directions to deliver to the grantee is a good delivery (Peters v. Berkemeier, 184 Mo. 393, 83 S. W. 747).

No delivery where the grantor delivers a voluntary deed to a third person without instructions to deliver it to the grantee and after the death of the grantor the grantee procures possession and has it recorded. Peters v. Berkemeier, 184 Mo. 393, 83 S. W. 747. A deed executed by several grantors was delivered to a common agent on the understanding that it was not to be delivered to the grantee until executed by another grantor. Held, a delivery by the agent to the grantee without such signature was no delivery. Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. McKenna [Mich.] 102 N. W. 281. Where an agent for both parties receives the deed to be delivered on payment of the purchase price, and places the deed on record after being notified that the sale has been rescinded, there is no delivery. Mason v. Strickland [Neb.] 103 N. W. 458.

NOTE. Presumptions as to Delivery of Deeds: It goes without saying that the intent is the vital thing in connection with the matter of delivery. But the presence in the mind of the grantor of an intent to deliver is ineffectual unless he has evidenced that intent by some act or acts that the law recognizes as sufficient to indicate that he has parted with the legal control of the instrument. It follows, then, that in every case involving the question of delivery, the facts assume a controlling importance, and that, in a way, each case must stand by itself, and be decided by the application of a few general principles to its particular facts. But there are certain facts and circumstances which, though not in themselves controlling upon the question of delivery, give rise to presumptions of importance in connection with that question. For example, where a duly executed deed is in the hands of the grantee named therein, a strong presumption arises that the deed has been delivered, and this presumption will be overcome only by clear and convincing evidence. Inman v. Swearingen, 198 Ill. 437, 440, 64 N. E. 1112. (See, also, Butrick v. Tilton, 141 Mass. 93, 6 N. E. 563; Hathaway v. Cass, 84 Minn. 192, 87 N. W. 610; McGee v. Allison, 94 Iowa, 527, 531, 63 N. W. 322.) And in the absence of proof of an understanding that a deed is to be delivered at a particular time or some other evidence as to the intention of the parties as to the time of the delivery, a presumption arises of a delivery on the day of its date. Atlantic City v. New Auditorium Pier Co., 63 N. J. Eq. 644, 667.

in such manner as to terminate the grantor's control over the instrument is essential.[26] Actual manual delivery is not essential.[27] Such a delivery, however, raises

So if a deed is recorded by a grantor, a presumption of delivery is raised. Luckhart v. Luckhart, 120 Iowa, 248, 94 N. W. 461; see, also, Hilderhrand v. Willig, 64 N. J. Eq. 249, 255. But this is a presumption of fact simply that may be overcome by other evidence showing as a matter of fact that there was no delivery. Thus, where the evidence tended strongly to show that no consideration was paid, that the grantor placed the deed on record himself, the grantee having no knowledge of its execution or recording at the time, and never having had possession of the deed, it was held that the presumption of delivery arising from the recording was overcome. Smith v. Smith, 116 Wis. 570. No presumption of delivery arises from the acknowledgment of a deed. Tarlton v. Griggs 131 N. C. 216, 223, 224.

A valid delivery of a deed may be made through the instrumentality of a third person. The courts very generally hold that if a grantor has placed his deed in the hands of a third person with directions to him to deliver to the grantee named therein upon his (the grantor's) death, intending thereby to release all legal control over the instrument and to make the act and directions a delivery, he has thus made a valid and effective delivery. The following are some of the most recent cases that so hold: Bogan v. Swearingen, 199 Ill. 451, 65 N. E. 426; Oliver v. Wilhite, 201 Ill. 552, 66 N. E. 837; Marshall v. Hartzfelt, 98 Mo. App. 178, 71 S. W. 1061; Diefendorf v. Diefendorf, 132 N. Y. 100, 30 N. E. 375; Brown v. Westerfield, 47 Neb. 399, 66 N. W. 439, 53 Am. St. Rep. 532, and note; Ruiz v. Dow, 113 Cal. 490, 45 P. 867; Stout v. Rayl, 146 Ind. 379, 45 N. E. 515; Dettmer v. Behrens, 106 Iowa 585, 76 N. W. 853, 68 Am. St. Rep. 326; Meech v. Wilder, 130 Mich. 29, 89 N. W. 556; Martin v. Flaharty, 13 Mont. 96, 32 P. 287, 40 Am. St. Rep. 415, 19 L. R. A. 242. But if the right to recall the deed is retained by the grantor who has placed it in the hands of a third person with directions to deliver it to the grantee, the delivery is not good. See Johnson v. Johnson, 24 R. I. 571; Tarlton v. Griggs, 131 N. C. 216. And in a very recent case the supreme court of Michigan, following the supreme court of Iowa and of Ohio, while recognizing the doctrine that if a deed is delivered by the grantor to the grantee the presumption arises that it is for the grantee's use, holds that if the deed is given to an intermediary for the grantee, no such presumption will arise. Thomas v. Sullivan [Mich.] 101 N. W. 528. "The rule is well settled," says the court, "that if a deed is delivered by the grantor to the grantee, the presumption arises that it is for his use, but if it is handed to a stranger, there is no such presumption, for the delivering to the stranger may have been by mistake or for safe-keeping simply, or for some other purpose wholly independent of an intent to transfer the estate." Where the delivery is made through the instrumentality of a third person, then there is no presumption to which the grantee can appeal, but the facts and circumstances attending the transaction must be shown, and if the delivery is to be sustained, they must be such as to indicate a release of legal control over the instrument by the grantor and an intention on his part that the deed should be delivered by the custodian to the grantee and that the passing of title should be consummated thereby.—3 Mich. L. R. 224.

24. Delivery by the executor of a grantor and recording by the grantee is no delivery in the absence of authority in the executor to deliver. Berkemeier v. Peters [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 598. Evidence insufficient to show a waiver of a provision that the deed was not to be delivered until the grantor's death. Griffin v. Miller [Mo.] 87 S. W. 455. The death of a grantor in a deed delivered to a third person to be delivered to the grantee after the grantor's death does not revoke the authority of such third person to deliver. Thompson v. Calhoun [Ill.] 74 N. E. 775.

25. A valid delivery is not shown where it appears that the grantor intended the delivery to relate to the date of his death. Schlicher v. Keeler [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 434. Where one to whom a deed was delivered, to be delivered to the grantee on the performance of a condition, did not understand that it was delivered to him beyond the grantor's power of control, but he surrendered the deed to the grantee, there was no delivery. Hayden v. Collins [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1120. A manual delivery without intention to surrender control over the instrument is insufficient. Gatt v. Shive [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 303. There must be something more than a physical change of possession; there must be an intent to part with title. Commins v. Perry, 44 Misc. 458, 90 N. Y. S. 92. Merely handing the deed to the grantee does not constitute delivery. Johnson v. Cameron, 136 N. C. 243, 48 S. E. 640. If it is apparent that a physical delivery was not intended to pass title, there is no delivery. Holbrook v. Truesdell, 100 App. Div. 9, 90 N. Y. S. 911. A delivery to a third person for the grantee raises no presumption that it is for the benefit of the grantee. Thomas v. Sullivan [Mich.] 101 N. W. 528. It must appear that the grantor intended to part with his title. Id.

26. Peters v. Berkemeier, 184 Mo. 393, 83 S. W. 747. A delivery subject to the grantor's control, revocation or alteration is no delivery, though given into the possession of one of the grantees who was the grantor's man of business, the other grantees not having knowledge of the deed until after the death of the grantor. Joslin v. Goddard, 187 Mass. 165, 72 N. E. 948.

NOTE. Delivery to a Third Person—Requisites: A, the owner of a tract of land, made eleven deeds thereof to his children, in one of which appellant, X, was grantee of a specific part. The consideration for this was shown to be appellant's care of A during his old age, together with certain book accounts due appellant's husband, from which it was agreed there should be no more trouble. The eleven deeds of which that in suit was one, were given to B, a stranger, with written instructions from A "at his

a presumption of legal delivery.[28] A delivery may result from an estoppel[29] or from the ratification of a wrongful taking.[30] A presumption of delivery arises from possession of the instrument by the grantee,[31] and one of nondelivery arises from the grantor's retention of possession of the premises[32] or from the finding of the instrument among the grantor's effects after his death,[33] unless he has reserved an interest in the premises.[34] A presumption of delivery also arises from the fact of recordation;[35] but whether the deposit for record of a deed delivered to a father in which his son is grantee amounts to delivery is a question of intention.[36] A deed is presumed to have been delivered the day of its date.[37] Parol evidence is admissible to show delivery[38] or to show that a physical delivery was not made death to deliver them to each one of the heirs." Subsequently at A's request, B returned the deeds, together with the paper accompanying them, and after their destruction a deed of the eighty acres was made to appellee, C, of all of which C had prior notice. After A's death, appellant, X, sued to quiet title. Held, that appellant was entitled to judgment. Emmons v. Harding, 162 Ind. 154, 70 N. E. 142.

The court considered the appellant as a grantee not without equity, the consideration for the deed to her being in the nature of a family settlement. The subsequent acceptance by X referred back, by relation, to the date of the deed's delivery to B, giving appellant a prior title. The decision is in accord with the weight of authority. Assuming that there had been a delivery of the deed, its destruction by the grantor could not divest the grantee (appellant) of title. Spangler v. Dukes, 39 Ohio St. 642; Albright v. Albright, 70 Wis. 528, 537, 36 N. W. 254; Hyne v. Osborn, 62 Mich. 235, 28 N. W. 821. And it is clear that a delivery is sufficient, based upon grantor's declaration in the presence of a witness that he delivers the deed as his, yet keeps it in his possession. Garnons v. Knight, 5 Barn. & C. 671; Clavering v. Clavering, 2 Vern. 473. And a delivery of a deed to a stranger to be redelivered to the grantee upon the grantor's death is generally sustained as a sufficient delivery. Owen v. Williams, 114 Ind. 179; Goodpaster v. Leathers, 123 Ind. 121; Stout v. Rayl, 146 Ind. 379; Ranken v. Donovan, 46 App. Div. 225, 61 N. Y. S. 542, affirmed 166 N. Y. 626, 60 N. E. 1119.—3 Mich. L. R. 74.

27. A legal delivery may result though the deed remain in possession of the grantor. Chastek v. Souba, 93 Minn. 418, 101 N. W. 618.

28. Manual delivery to and acceptance by the grantee in the presence of the grantor, nothing being said or done at the time to qualify the act, raises an inference of legal delivery. Wilbur v. Grover [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 99, 103 N. W. 583. This inference is not affected by the mere bodily illness of the grantor at the time. Id.

29. Where a wife executes a voluntary deed to her husband but does not deliver it, and he steals it and conveys to another who makes improvements, the wife having notice thereof, she is estopped to deny delivery. Baillarge v. Clark, 145 Cal. 589, 79 P. 268. Evidence held insufficient to show that an alleged grantor was estopped to deny delivery. Gatt v. Shive [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 308. In case the grantor is negligent relative to an unauthorized delivery out of escrow to the prejudice of bona fide purchasers. Houston Land & Trust Co. v. Hubbard [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 474.

30. Even though a valid delivery has not been made, the grantor may thereafter ratify the wrongful taking of the deed by the grantee after he has acquired complete knowledge of the transaction. Whitney v. Dewey [Idaho] 80 P. 1117.

31. Wilbur v. Grover [Mich.] 10 Det. Leg. N. 99, 103 N. W. 583. A presumption of delivery on the day of its date. Leonard v. Fleming [N. D.] 102 N. W. 308. When the presumption of delivery from possession by the grantee of a deed is rebutted by positive testimony that there was no delivery until after the grantor's death, there is no conflict such as to require a submission to the jury. Schaefer v. Anchor Mut. Fire Ins. Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 857.

32. That the grantor remains in possession, and insures the property in his own name is not conclusive against delivery. Webb v. Webb [Iowa] 104 N. W. 438.

33. This presumption is rebuttable. Cribbs v. Walker [Ark.] 85 S. W. 244.

34. Cribbs v. Walker [Ark.] 85 S. W. 244.

35. Evidence held to show that a deed duly attested, acknowledged and filed for record was delivered. Chancellor v. Teel [Ala.] 37 So. 665. The burden is on one claiming against it to show otherwise by a clear preponderance of evidence. Drees v. Drees [Iowa] 104 N. W. 479. Prima facie evidence. Clark v. Harper, 215 Ill. 24, 74 N. E. 61. A deed properly acknowledged and recorded. McCrum v. McCrum [Iowa] 103 N. W. 771. Deeds duly signed, acknowledged and recorded. Webb v. Webb [Iowa] 104 N. W. 438. Recordation by the grantor is not necessarily a delivery, but a circumstance which may be looked to on that question. Johnson v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1023.

36. Where a father took title in the name of his son for the purpose of defeating seizure under condemnation proceedings, and at no time intended to give the property to his son, it does not constitute delivery. Erler v. Erler, 124 Iowa, 726, 100 N. W. 856.

37. McBrayer v. Walker [Ga.] 50 S. E. 95; Tabor St., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 167. Notwithstanding it was not acknowledged until later. Ewers v. Smith, 98 App. Div. 289, 90 N. Y. S. 575.

38. Since the deed does not show eviwith intent to pass title;[39] but not to show a secret intention that a delivery should be ineffectual,[40] or to show that a deed delivered to the grantee was subject to conditions.[41] Evidence of the circumstances surrounding the transaction is admissible when the question of delivery is doubtful.[42] Much more is presumed in favor of the delivery of a deed creating a settlement than in ordinary cases of deeds of bargain and sale,[43] because of the presumed confidential relation of the parties.[44] The delivery in escrow is elsewhere treated.[45]

Acceptance[46] by a competent grantee is essential,[47] but where a deed is unconditional and beneficial to the grantee, acceptance is presumed.[48] Parol evidence is admissible to show that a deed was never accepted.[49]

A consideration[50] is imported by the seal.[51] A valuable consideration[52] is not essential to the validity of the instrument,[53] and inadequacy of consideration will dence of it on its face. Whitney v. Dewey [Idaho] 80 P. 1117.

39. Where both grantor and grantee so understood the nature of the delivery. Holbrook v. Truesdell, 100 App. Div. 9, 90 N. Y. S. 911.

40. Where a deed is manually delivered in such manner as to raise an inference of legal delivery, a secret intention that the deed should be ineffectual cannot be shown to vary its effect. Wilbur v. Grover [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 99, 103 N. W. 583. An unconditional delivery of a deed of a married woman purporting to convey land to her husband cannot be contradicted by testimony of the husband that he intended to assert title only in the event that he survived his wife. Id.

42. Merki v. Merki, 113 Ill. App. 518.

43. Baker v. Hall, 214 Ill. 364, 73 N. E. 351, and cases cited therein; Thompson v. Calhoun, 216 Ill. 161, 74 N. E. 775. A delivery by a father of a deed running to his son, to a third person, to have recorded after the father's death is in the nature of a voluntary settlement. Id. Where parents executed a deed for a nominal consideration to their child and it was recorded, held that, though the child was not fully capable of accepting the deed and it was provided that the parents should have the right to possession for life, there was a valid delivery. Baker v. Hall, 214 Ill. 364, 73 N. E. 351. Presumption of delivery of a voluntary deed where soon after its execution the grantee took possession is not rebutted by the fact that the deed was found in the grantor's private box after her death. Henry v. Henry, 215 Ill. 205, 74 N. E. 126. A deed to an infant grantee is presumptively delivered, when delivered to his father and by him recorded. Coleman v. Coleman [Ill.] 74 N. E. 701. And this presumption is not overcome by the fact that the father procured the deed to be made to the infant in order to keep the land from his second wife. Id. Nor by the fact that he retains possession of the deed. Id. The execution by infant grantees of a deed to their father does not rebut the presumption of delivery of a deed to them delivered to their father and by him recorded. Id. The execution and recording of a deed from mother to daughter authorizes a presumption of delivery and acceptance. Morrison v. Fletcher [Ky.] 84 S. W. 548.

44. Henry v. Henry, 215 Ill. 205, 74 N. E. 126. Where the delivery of such a deed is questioned, the burden of proof is on the person claiming adversely to the donee. Baker v. Hall, 214 Ill. 364, 73 N. E. 351.

46. See 3 C. L. 1060. Holbrook v. Truesdell, 100 App. Div. 9, 90 N. Y. S. 911. Commins v. Perry, 44 Misc. 458, 90 N. Y. S. 92; Parken v. Safford [Fla.] 37 So. 567; Santee v. Day, 111 Ill. App. 495. A grantee is not bound by a mortgage assumption clause in a deed he never accepted (Merriman v. Schmitt, 211 Ill. 263, 71 N. E. 986), but a deed accepted and recorded with knowledge of its contents is binding on the grantee, though execution took place through his agent (Gage v. Cameron, 212 Ill. 146, 72 N. E. 204).

Recordation is not conclusive evidence of acceptance. Merriman v. Schmitt, 211 Ill. 263, 71 N. E. 986. Delivery and acceptance are presumed from the recording by the grantor of a deed beneficial to the grantee. Peters v. Berkemeier, 184 Mo. 393, 83 S. W. 747. Where a deed was made to an infant grantee his refusal after attaining majority to convey to his father amounts to an acceptance. Coleman v. Coleman [Ill.] 74 N. E. 701. The placing of a deed in a sealed envelope and handing it to the grantee and telling him to keep it until called for is no delivery when the grantee did not know the contents of the envelope. Sutton v. Gibson [Ky.] 84 S. W. 335.

47. Delivery of a deed does not immediately pass title unless the grantee is in a position to legally accept the deed at the time it came into his manual possession. Goodhue v. Goodhue, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 225.

48. Coleman v. Coleman [Ill.] 74 N. E. 701. The validity of a deed from father to son, delivered to a third person to be delivered to the son after the father's death, is not affected by the fact that the son was unaware of the deed until the father's death. Thompson v. Calhoun [Ill.] 74 N. E. 775.

not invalidate it in the absence of fraud.[54] A consideration of love and affection is good as between the parties,[55] but fraudulent per se as to creditors of the grantor.[56] A deed based on an illegal consideration will not sustain ejectment,[57] and will not be set aside in equity.[58] A grantor in a voluntary deed cannot be compelled to assume obligations relative to the premises conveyed.[59] The enforcement of a contract which is the consideration of a deed cannot be had in ejectment.[60] A recited consideration is prima facie the consideration passed,[61] and an assumption of liens against the premises is presumed to be part of the consideration.[62] Parol evidence is admissible to show the real consideration,[63] but not to contradict the acknowledgment of a consideration paid in order to affect the validity of a deed.[64]

Validity of assent.[65]—A deed may be invalid because of fraud or undue influence of one party upon the other,[66] or of mutual mistake or accident,[67] or incapacity of the parties,[68] which prevents any real assent.

the grantor had sought to recover title conveyed by a deed, based on love and affection, because of breach of conditions, is based on a valuable consideration. Burgson v. Jacobson [Wis.] 102 N. W. 563.

53. A deed in nature an executed gift will not be set aside unless fraudulently obtained. Fowler v. Fowler, 135 F. 405. That a deed from mother to son was unwise and improvident on her part is no ground for avoiding it. Powers v. Powers [Or.] 80 P. 1058. A voluntary deed from son to father is valid as between them. Hiles v. Hiles, 26 Ky. L. R. 824, 82 S. W. 580.

54. Inadequacy of consideration is not of itself ground for avoiding a deed. Powers v. Powers [Or.] 80 P. 1058. A considerable disparity between the consideration and the value of land conveyed will not avoid the deed in the absence of fraud. Rixey v. Rixey, 103 Va. 414, 49 S. E. 586. 63. Where the expressed consideration is one dollar and the payment of certain debts due from the grantor. Medical College Laboratory v. New York University, 178 N. Y. 153, 70 N. E. 467; Deaver v. Deaver, 137 N. C. 240, 49 S. E. 113. To show the true consideration when the presumption that the payment of assumed liens was part of the consideration has not been overthrown. Gage v. Cameron, 212 Ill. 146, 72 N. E. 204. A recital of the acreage does not exclude proof of the true acreage for the purpose of ascertaining the consideration if it is not manifest that such recital was intended to control metes and bounds. See v. Mallonee, 107 Mo. App. 721, 82 S. W. 557. The statement of the consideration in the form of a recital and not as an element of the contract itself may be contradicted by parol. Id. Recitals as to consideration are not conclusive. Rook v. Rook, 111 Ill. App. 398. In an action for breach of covenant of warranty, it is competent to show that land as to which the covenant was broken was included in the deed by mistake, and that no consideration was paid for it. Id. The recital of love and affection does not preclude the showing of a valuable consideration. Miles v. Waggoner, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 432. 66. See Fraud and Undue Influence, 3 C. L. 1520. A conveyance of a remainder in consideration of support of the grantor during life will not be set aside because children of the grantee of tender age failed to support the grantee after their parent's death; does not show fraud in the inception. Stebbins v. Petty, 209 Ill. 291, 70 N. E. 673.

67. See Mistake and Accident, 4 C. L. 674. One asserting that a provision suspending delivery until the grantor's death was inserted by mistake has the burden of proving it. Griffin v. Miller [Mo.] 87 S. W. 455.

68. See Incompetency, 3 C. L. 1696. Mental capacity sufficient to execute a deed is such a degree that the person understands the effect of the instrument as a conveyance. It is not necessary that he understand the legal effect of the words used. Moorhead v. Scovel [Pa.] 60 A. 13. In the absence of fraud or undue influence, mere mental weakness from sickness and old age is not ground for avoiding a deed. Id. A deed executed

§ 2. Recordation[69] is not essential as between the parties.[70]

§ 3. Interpretation and effect. General rules.[71]—The deed should be construed as a whole[72] for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the grantor[73] as expressed by the terms employed.[74] Where executed contemporaneously with other instruments, they will be construed together.[75] The practical construction by the parties is to be considered.[76] The date of a deed is presumed to be the date of its execution.[77] If terms used are ambiguous, resort may be had to parol evidence of the surrounding circumstances.[78] A void provision may be looked to to ascertain the nature of the estate intended to be granted.[79] The first part of a deed controls the last.[80] The instrument will be given effect if possible,[81] and if necessary to that end will be construed as a deed,[82] and so as to vest the estate

Goin [C. C. A.] 137 F. 822. A deed should be construed so that no part shall be rejected. Hads v. Tiernan, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 14. Deed construed to convey an estate to a wife during her life or widowhood, remainder in fee to her children. Stiles v. Cummings [Ga.] 50 S. E. 484. Deed construed and held to pass a life estate to the grantee, remainder to his children born and unborn. Hall v. Wright [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1129. An estate in trust for A and her children during the life or widowhood of A and then to the children living at her death creates a joint life estate in A and her children during her life, remainder in fee to her surviving children. Lnquire v. Lee, 121 Ga. 624, 49 S. E. 834.

73. The intent of the grantor is the guiding star. Hubbird v. Goin [C. C. A.] 137 F. 822. The intention of the parties as it appears from the whole instrument controls inconsistent technical rules of construction. Hall v. Wright [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1129. Whether provisions in a deed are covenants or conditions is to be ascertained by finding the intention of the parties from a construction of the entire instrument regardless of the technical meaning of terms employed. Minard v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 139 F. 60. "Accepted" construed "excepted" where that is the apparent sense in which the word was used. Dougan v. Greenwich, 77 Conn. 444, 59 A. 505.

If doubt exists as to the intention of the grantor, the situation of the parties, the subject-matter at the time of contracting, and the attendant circumstances leading up to the execution of the instrument, are to be considered. Walsh v. Abbott, 145 Cal. 285, 78 P. 715. The intention is to be ascertained by a consideration of all the provisions of the deed as well as the situation of the parties. Shepherd Co. v. Shibles [Me.] 61 A. 700. Where a deed recites that it is given to replace one lost, parol evidence of the situation and previous dealings of the parties is not objectionable as varying the terms of the deed. Scapien v. Blanchard, 187 Mass. 73, 72 N. E. 346.

granted at the earliest possible moment.[83] All doubts are to be resolved in favor of the grantee.[84] The maxim "ejusdem generis" does not apply unless the word "other" is used.[85] General words are not restrained by restrictive ones if they do not clearly indicate the intention and designate the grant.[86] Terms will not be given effect to create an estate the grantor did not show it was his intention to create.[87] The habendum may be used to explain the intention of the granting clause expressed in general terms,[88] or qualify the estate apparently granted,[89] but cannot be used to contradict or cut down the estate granted,[90] and if in conflict must yield.[91] A conveyance to one legally incapable of holding realty naming a person to act as agent for the grantee in and about said land creates the person, named as agent, a trustee for the grantee.[92] A quitclaim deed conveys title free from any equitable right of which the grantee has no notice.[93]

Covenants[94] of special warranty are limited to the estate conveyed.[95] A covenant will not be read into a mere representation.[96] A grantee cannot be held liable on an exception to a covenant for a mere personal liability of the grantor.[97] The covenants cannot be contradicted by parol.[98]

Alterations and interlineations[99] are presumed to have been made prior to execution.[1] Immaterial interlineations will not be considered.[2]

tee will not operate to diminish the estate conveyed to him,[4] nor affect the conveyance to the person named as one to him as an individual.[5] As a general rule, children designated by name or otherwise definitely described as individuals take as individuals and not as a class,[6] and the fact that real estate can be conveyed in trust so as to let in after-born children does not alter the general rule of construction where there is no such provision,[7] but if it appears that though named the persons were in the mind of the grantor as a class, the intention will prevail.[8] In order that "heirs" may be construed "children," it must clearly and positively appear that it was so used,[9] but if the intention to so use it is apparent it will be given that construction.[10] Extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show that the term was used in that sense.[11] Persons manifestly not intended to be grantees acquire no interest.[12] "Heirs at law" construed to mean those in being at the death of the ancestor and not those surviving at the date of the distribution of a trust estate, postponed because of certain beneficiaries.[13] A deed to "the estate of E., deceased, his heirs and assigns," is a deed to E's estate,[14] and is not void for want of a grantee.[15] A deed to a husband and wife conveys the property to them as a community.[16] A deed intended as a joint gift to husband and wife invests each with an undivided half.[17] A deed from husband to wife makes the land her separate property whether or not the deed so specifically declares.[18] A deed from husband to wife for life, remainder to her children, inures to the benefit of children by a subsequent marriage.[19] Conveyances under an assumed name are valid,[20] and the mere fact that a purchaser uses the name of another person as grantee does not work a forfeiture of his title

nor create an estate in the person named,[21] and the fact that he uses such name in conveying the property does not constitute forgery.[22] Where father and son have the same name, a deed not designating which is intended is presumed to run to the father.[23] The construction of an ambiguous name is for the court.[24]

Description of property conveyed.[25]—Lines of a survey named in a deed stand as the boundaries despite irregularities and inequalities produced.[26] The construction placed on the description by the parties is the one to be given effect.[27] In construing a doubtful description the position of the contracting parties and the circumstances under which they acted will be considered,[28] but acts of the parties cannot be received in aid of construction of an ambiguous or indefinite deed.[29] Where there are two inconsistent descriptions, the grantee may select the one most favorable to him.[30] A description of a definite quantity of land in the corner of a tract will ordinarily be held to mean a parcel containing that quantity according to square measure,[31] but not where other parts of the description show that a particular tract or lot rather than a certain quantity or acreage was intended.[32] Where land is conveyed with reference to a plat, the plat, its notes and lines, are controlling as to description.[33] But such reference does not preclude evidence of where the lines actually fell on the ground.[34] The boundaries of lots conveyed by reference to a plat are as a general rule limited to those designated by the plat;[35] but the general rule will yield to the clearly shown intention of the parties at variance therewith,[36] and the intent which is most certain will prevail over one which is indefinite or left to speculation or conjecture.[37] Parol evidence is admissible to fit the description to the premises[38] or to explain a latent ambiguity in the description,[39]

but not to vary or explain the terms.[40] Uncertainty in the description of an exception does not affect the validity of the deed.[41]

Quantum of estate conveyed.[42]—A deed is presumed to pass the greatest estate consistent with the terms employed,[43] and, unless a contrary intention appears,[44] all of the estate of the grantor is presumed to pass,[45] and a recital that the grantor has a certain interest does not limit the conveyance to such interest if he has a greater one;[46] but a subsequently acquired interest does not pass[47] if the deed purports to convey only the interest the grantor then has.[48] A repugnant clause will not limit the estate granted.[49] At common law the word "heirs" is necessary to the creation of an estate in fee.[50] A confirmatory deed passes no estate not included in the original.[51] If a vested remainder be limited on a particular estate with a condition that if the remainderman dies without heirs his estate to vest in a third person, such remainderman takes a defeasible fee conditioned on his dying without heirs during the continuance of the particular estate.[52] A grantor in an executory conveyance retains the legal title.[53] A conveyance for a certain purpose does not carry the right to use the premises for any other purpose,[54] but does pass a right of use consistent with the use granted,[55] and a conveyance of a certain interest does not pass any other estate[56] but is presumed to carry everything essential to the enjoyment of the thing granted.[57] A grant of standing timber to be removed within a specified time creates a license.[58] The grant of a right of way ordinarily passes only an easement.[59] A quitclaim deed passes such interest as the grantor has,[60] together with a subsequently acquired interest included in the estate he purported to convey.[61] A conveyance bounded by a road takes the fee to the center thereof,[62] but if by one line of the road, the grantor retains the fee.[63] The grantee, however, acquires a right to have the street remain open[64] but not an easement in an unopened portion of the street upon which adjoining land of the

Where a grant of a right of way excepts a certain kind of timber from what might be used in the construction of the railroad such timber cut on the right of way cannot be used. Duncan v. American Standard Asphalt Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 1067, 83 S. W. 124.

57. A grant of a right of way. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe R. Co. v. Jones, 110 Ill. App. 626. A conveyance of mineral rights with authority to use timber authorizes the cutting of timber to build a platform for a crusher and a millhouse. Duncan v. American Standard Asphalt Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 1067, 83 S. W. 124.

58. An instrument conveying all the timber and logs suitable to be manufactured into cross ties, the right to remove such timber to expire in 12 months, conveys only a license. Johnson v. Truitt [Ga.] 50 S. E. 135. Where an instrument conveying standing timber and a license to remove it also provided for a reverter of such timber as was not removed within the period prescribed, "timber" does not mean that cut. 60. A grantee in a quitclaim deed from a life tenant who also has a quitclaim from a part of the remaindermen acquires an estate for life and the interest of the remaindermen. Blair v. Johnson, 215 Ill. 552, 74 N. E. 747. Quitclaim deed covering all the interest of an heir in the real estate of his ancestor carries such additional interest as the grantor may have by reason of advancements to other heirs. Dow v. Dow, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 125.

61. If a grantor in a quitclaim deed subsequently acquires an instrument which evidences the title he purported to convey, it inures to the benefit of his grantee. Ford v. Axelson [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1039. Where quitclaim deeds are given for the sole purpose of effecting a partition, an exception is made to the general rule as to after-acquired title in real estate, and such deeds will be treated as containing an implied covenant that the grantor owns the premises conveyed. 64. A grantee who purchases with reference to a plat acquires the right to have a street remain open, which is not divested by the vacation of the street by the municipal grantor abuts.[65] A deed will pass all the estate which the granting clause purports to convey and not merely what the grantor meant to convey,[66] also including all appurtenant rights,[67] fixtures,[68] and unmatured crops,[69] but not a mere chose in action due the grantor.[70] Under the rule in Shelley's case, a deed to one for life, remainder to his heirs, creates a fee in the first taker,[71] otherwise, however, where the rule has been abolished.[72] In order to warrant the application of this rule, the word "heirs" must be used.[73] It is generally provided by statute that deeds creating estates tail pass a fee to the first taker.[74] An assumption of liens creates a charge on the land.[75] Parol evidence is admissible to identify the subject-matter of an assumption clause.[76] Parol evidence is admissible to show a holding in trust under a deed in fee simple.[77]

A reservation[78] is limited to some part of the estate which would otherwise pass,[79] and an exception is a part excepted from the general terms of that which is granted.[80] The terms are often used interchangeably,[81] and the mere fact that what is excepted is mentioned as reserved will not defeat its operation as an exception.[82] A reservation contained in the habendum is as enforceable as if set out in the granting clause.[83] Both are construed strictly[84] and most strongly against the authorities. Wickham v. Twaddell, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 188. It is an appurtenant distinct from the public right of passage. Id.

grantor,[85] but if valid include, as an incident, whatever is necessary to enable the grantor to enjoy it.[86] In construing a reservation, the surrounding circumstances will be considered.[87] Parol evidence is admissible to identify the thing excepted or reserved.[88] In order to render exceptions a dedication to public use, it is not necessary that they should be expressly excepted for such purpose.[89]

Conditions and restrictions.[90]—Conditions subsequent[91] are not favored and must be created by express terms,[92] and if it is doubtful whether terms used ima two-story building over an alleyway cannot be extended to include a right to construct a third story on the building. Gilbert v. White, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 187. An intention to reserve a right of way out of land conveyed cannot establish a way inconsistent with the deed by a reservation over land which has no existence in fact. Attempted reservation of a way over land occupied by a building. O'Neil v. Potter [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 337, 104 N. W. 396. A reservation of all mines and minerals and the right to dig and carry the same away does not reserve a right of open quarrying and blasting. Brady v. Smith, 181 N. Y. 178, 73 N. E. 963.

85. Stadfer v. Missouri River Power Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 305. An exception in the covenant against incumbrances cannot be construed as a reservation from the grant. Wendall v. Fisher, 187 Mass. 81, 72 N. E. 322. On the face of a deed of all the property of a corporation held that the grantor had no beneficial interest in a reservation. Pinchback v. Bessemer Min. & Mfg. Co., 137 N. C. 171, 49 S. E. 106.

86. Where a well is excepted. Elsea v. Adkins [Ind.] 74 N. E. 242. An exception of all of the granite on the land reserves not only that which is exposed at the time the deed is made but all that mineral, regardless of the right to disturb the surface to obtain it, and when from washing away or other causes it becomes exposed, the owner has a right to remove it. Phillips v. Collinsville Granite Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 666. But only exposed granite can be recovered at the time action is brought. Id.

87. A reservation of "coal banks" made at a time when the country was sparsely settled and no mercantile development of coal mines, reserves veins of coal in the ground and not merely banks which had been opened. Jones v. American Ass'n [Ky.] 86 S. W. 1111.

88. "The well on or near the east end of the lot" held not void. Elsea v. Adkins [Ind.] 74 N. E. 242.

89. The question of dedication being one of fact is to be determined not only from the deeds but from the acts of the parties. Dougan v. Greenwich, 77 Conn. 444, 59 A. 505. An exception for a landing place and highway indicates that the landing place was for public use. Id.

NOTE: Where the performance of the condition constitutes the consideration for the grant or devise, the condition will ordinarily be held to be precedent. Markham v. Hufford, 123 Mich. 505, 82 N. W. 222, 81 Am. St. Rep. 222, 48 L. R. A. 580. Hence, a devise to A on condition that his mother releases the testator's estate from a specified liability (Howard v. Wheatley, 15 Lea [Tenn.] 607, or to B on condition that he assist the testator in certain pending litigation (Cannon v. Apperson, 14 Lea [Tenn.] 553), or a bequest to C to be paid him in two years providing he be a reformed man (Markham v. Hufford, 123 Mich. 505, 82 N. W. 222, 81 Am. St. Rep. 222, 48 L. R. A. 580.), is upon condition precedent. In some instances, as in the conveyance of property expressed to be on condition of the payment of the balance of the purchase price, the instrument may be considered as in the nature of a mortgage or as an attempt to reserve and give notice of a vendor's lien, and hence as operating as a conveyance from the moment of execution. Sheppard v. Thomas, 26 Ark. 617; Creswell v. Lawson, 7 Gill & J. & J. [Md.] 227. A like result follows where the condition is for the doing of certain acts after the instrument becomes operative, as where a testator makes a devise conditional on the support of certain persons after his death. Woods v. Woods, 44 N. C. (Busb.) 290; Whithead v. Thompson, 79 N. C. 450; Misenheimer v. Sifford, 94 N. C. 592.—From note to Brennan v. Brennan [Mass.] 102 Am. St. Rep. 368.

91. A provision in a deed granting land to a corporation, reserving to the grantor the right to reacquire the land if the corporation became insolvent, gives the grantor such right if the insolvency occurs. Smith v. Ellis [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 856. A provision that the grantee shall erect and maintain a fence around the granted premises (Randall v. Wentworth [Me.] 60 A. 871), or a provision that if the grantee fails to support the grantor the deed shall be void, creates a condition subsequent (Helms v. Helms, 137 N. C. 206, 49 S. E. 110); but a grantee's covenant to pay taxes (Burgson v. Jacobson [Wis.] 102 N. W. 563), or an agreement by the grantee of a right of way to furnish the grantor an annual pass does not (Hasbrouck v. New Paltz, H. & P. Traction Co., 98 App. Div. 563, 90 N. Y. S. 977). An oral agreement by the grantee to pay off a mortgage does not entitle the grantor to cancellation on the grantee's failure to pay. Thurmond v. Thurmond [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 878. Failure of grantees in a voluntary conveyance, to pay one-half the cost of erecting a building on the premises as they agreed to do, does not invalidate the deed. Clark v. Hindman [Or.] 79 P. 56.

92. Burgson v. Jacobson [Wis.] 102 N. W. 563. The words "to be used as a church location" held merely declaratory and not to create a condition subsequent. Downen v. Rayburn, 214 Ill. 342, 73 N. E. 864.

port a covenant or condition they will be construed as creating a covenant.[93] Where a clause of reverter is found, undertakings of the grantee will be construed as conditions,[94] otherwise as covenants.[95] A condition against alienation without the grantor's consent and for the payment to the grantor of a monthly stipend during his life[96] or against the sale of intoxicants on the premises[97] is valid. The obligation in a deed on condition may be assignable.[98] Conditions are deemed broken only when the terms are substantially violated.[99] An entry by the grantor on breach of a condition subsequent is necessary in order to defeat the estate of the grantee.[1] Only the grantor or those in privity of blood with him can enter for breach of condition subsequent,[2] unless the estate limited is an easement.[3] A right to enforce forfeiture may be waived,[4] but after a reverter because of a breach, title cannot be revived by subsequent compliance with the conditions.[5]

Restrictions[6] are strictly construed[7] and all presumptions resolved in favor of a free use of the property.[8]

Extinguishment of rights.[9]—Title is not divested by the return[10] or loss or failure to record a deed,[11] nor will the surrender or destruction of it operate to reinvest title in the grantor.[12]

98. The obligation in a conveyance in consideration of future support may be assignable where such construction is placed on it by the parties and it does not involve personal services. Hurley v. McCallister [S. D.] 103 N. W. 644.

99. The person for whose benefit it is created has the burden of proving a violation. Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. Van Loben Sels, 145 Cal. 181, 78 P. 638. Even if the words in a deed "for the use of a school and no other use" constitute a condition subsequent, forfeiture is not worked by mere nonuser of the premises for two and one-half years. Buck v. Macon [Miss.] 37 So. 460. The making of a free road out of an easement acquired for a toll road does not constitute a relinquishment of rights in the easement. Mitchell v. Bourbon County, 25 Ky. L. R. 512, 76 S. W. 16. A grantee has no right to declare a forfeiture of a leasehold for breach of conditions occurring prior to the conveyance to him. McConnell v. Pierce, 210 Ill. 627, 71 N. E. 622. Evidence held to show a breach of condition to maintain the grantor. Caudill v. Lemaster, 26 Ky. L. R. 1010, 82 S. W. 1009. Where a father conveys to his son in consideration of future support and leaves the premises after a quarrel provoked by himself, he is entitled to recover only reasonable expenditures made and reasonable provision for the future. Woolcott v. Woolcott [Mich.] 101 N. W. 218. Evidence that boys occasionally fished from a dock is not a compliance with a condition within the contemplation of the parties that a dock should be maintained for the use of the town. Ellis v. Pelham, 94 N. Y. S. 103.

4. Where a voluntary conveyance bound the grantee to pay off incumbrances and pay an annuity to the grantor, an acceptance of the annuity by the grantor after he was entitled to enforce forfeiture for breach of the other condition, amounts to a waiver of rights arising therefrom. Fallon, 101 App. Div. 187, 91 N. Y. S. 497. A restriction against the erection of more than one building on a lot to cost not less than $2,500 does not limit the kind of building that may be erected. Peck v. Hartshorn [Mass.] 75 N. E. 133.

8. The words "as above described" held to refer to the description only and not to a clause "to be used as a church location" and, therefore, did not limit the use. Downen v. Rayburn, 214 Ill. 342, 73 N. E. 364.

DEFAULTS.[13]

§ 1. Elements and indicia of defaults.[14]—Strictly speaking, a default only lies where the defendant has failed to enter an appearance in the case;[15] but the phrase is now often used, generally as a result of statutory enactments, as including failure to plead[16] or failure to appear at the trial.[17] There must be valid process, served[18] and returned[19] in a legal manner; but the return being irregular or incorrect, it may, in certain cases, be amended[20] or contradicted.[21] The process must designate the defendant in such manner that he may have notice that the action is against him;[22] but the service being personal, the weight of American authority is to the effect that a defendant sued in the wrong name is bound by a default judgment;[23] but a defect in this regard may be waived.[24] It is essential that plaintiff's pleadings be filed in time[25] and authorize a right of recovery.[26] No answer

15. Defendant having appeared and filed an answer, a default cannot be entered, though he fails to appear and take part in the trial. State v. Justice Court of Tp. No. 1 [Mont.] 78 P. 498.

NOTE. What constitutes a default: Except where the nomenclature of the common law has been altered by statute, a default, strictly speaking, can only be rendered where the defendant has failed to enter an appearance in the action. 6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 59. Defendant having entered a general appearance but failed to plead, the technical form of the judgment is by nihil dicit and not by default. 6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 59. As said by one court: "There is a plain difference in meaning between default and absence, default signifying that there has not been an appearance at any stage of the action by the party in default, while absence means that the party was not present at a particular time, naming it." Covart v. Haskins, 39 Kan. 574. "There is, however, no material distinction between a judgment by nihil dicit and a judgment by default in their effect, operation and the principles applicable thereto. * * * While the rendition of a judgment by default is technically error after the appearance of the defendant, it will not suffice to authorize a reversal of the judgment." 6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 60.

21. In Illinois, while an officer's return cannot be contradicted so as to defeat jurisdiction, yet it may be done to excuse a default. Cooke v. Haungs, 113 Ill. App. 501.

22. Naming plaintiff by a name other than his own, and which was not a customary designation of him, a default judgment rendered thereon is a nullity. Durst v. Ernst, 45 Misc. 627, 91 N. Y. S. 13.

24. Where word "company" was omitted from corporate name in process but default judgment was entered against it in its true name, whereupon it sued out a writ of error in the name under which the process was served, it could not attach the judgment on the theory of a misnomer. Brassfield v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 1032. By permitting default to stand and judgment to be entered, an entire lack of identity between the name of the plaintiff as contained in the process, default and judgment, and as contained in the declaration, will be cured. Edwards v. Warner, 111 Ill. App. 32.

25. Where petition was not filed within the time limited by the court, a default for failure to answer is improperly granted. Carver v. Seevers, 126 Iowa, 669, 102 N. W. 518.

26. Must allege a right of recovery. Chicago v. M. Elec. R. Co. v. Krempel, 116 Ill. App. 253. Pennsylvania procedure act of May 25, 1887 (P. L. 271), authorizing a default for failure to file an affidavit of defense, does not authorize a default where . plain-being filed, a default may be entered,[27] but the full time to plead,[28] including extensions,[29] must have expired. When necessary,[30] failure to file a pleading after appearance may authorize what is sometimes termed a default,[31] but a defect in this regard may be waived by going to trial.[32] In Illinois so long as defendant's answer is on file, he cannot be deemed in default.[33]

§ 2. Procedure on default; taking judgment.[34]—Before a case can be considered in default the appearance docket must be called, and the entry "in default" made.[35] Where on the day such entry was made the judge defaced it by passing his pen through the entry, it, in the absence of proof to the contrary, will be treated as the correction of an inadvertence, and not as an "in default" judgment.[36] Under the statutes of some states it is unnecessary for plaintiff to make out his case by proof;[37] but in equity he is not entitled to judgment for default of answer, unless he establish his right to the relief sought to the satisfaction of the chancellor.[38] Under the present Virginia statutes no rule to plead is required in ejectment before a default judgment can be entered.[39] The relief granted by the judgment must not exceed that demanded in the complaint,[40] and in some states must not include relief not specified in or clearly contemplated by the notice contained in the summons.[41] The judgment is not rendered void by failure to file a paper not a part of the judgtiff's statement of claim is insufficient on its face. United States v. Bell [C. C. A.] 135 F. 336.

27. Under Code, §§ 385, 386, in an action under Laws 1893, p. 37, c. 6, to determine conflicting claims to real estate, failure of defendant to answer at the return term entitles plaintiff to a final judgment by default in accordance with the facts stated in the complaint, without injury or proof of such facts. Junge v. McKnight, 137 N. C. 285, 49 S. E. 474, rvg. 47 S. E. 452.

28. Garnishee having until first day of second term to answer, a default should not be entered before such date. Averback v. Spivey [Ga.] 49 S. E. 748.

29. Where answer was served before order vacating extension was signed and entered, held, no default should be taken. De Pallandt v. Flynn, 93 N. Y. S. 678.

30. Where, after the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint, there is no reason for entering a default other than that defendant did not file an answer as provided by the statute of 1872, such an order is unnecessary and improper. Hourigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 358, 59 A. 487.

31. Under court rule 8 (71 N. H. 676), held that, where defendant failed to file a plea up to the day of trial, more than 90 days after the entry of the action, its failure to plead specially did not amount to a plea of the general issue, at least until the trial had actually begun, and hence defendant's attorney having withdrawn on the court's denial of a continuance, a default was properly entered. Hutchinson v. Manchester St. R. Co. [N. H.] 60 A. 1011. An interpleader voluntarily appearing and accepting service of a copy of the supplemental complaint, but failing to plead thereto within six days, and failing to obtain an extension of time to plead, a default may be entered against him. Greenblatt v. Mendelsohn, 92 N. Y. S. 963. Under Mansf. Dig. § 5043, the answer failing to set up a set-off or counterclaim, judgment cannot be entered against plaintiff on refusal to plead further. Madden v. Anderson [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 904. [This is not strictly a "default"; see note, ante, this section. Ed.]

Thrasher v. Moran [Cal.] 81 P. 32. A complaint praying for a divorce and that defendant be awarded custody of the children and for such other and further relief as may seem just and equitable does not authorize an award of the custody of the children to plaintiff, and payments by defendant for support of plaintiff and the children. Mitchell v. Mitchell [Nev.] 79 P. 50.

ment roll.[42] In most states the contents of the judgment roll is declared by statute.[43] The amount of damages being certain, the plaintiff is entitled to a final judgment,[44] and in such case a judgment by default and inquiry being entered, the mistake may be corrected by the court at the next term.[45]

In Virginia an office judgment on default does not become final until there is either a judgment of the court at the following term confirming it, or until the term, or possibly the 15th day thereof, has passed without an order setting it aside;[46] but an office judgment in ejectment cannot become final without intervention of the court or jury.[47] There being no statement of damages in ejectment, the court may at any term following the entry of the office judgment render final judgment without setting the cause for inquiry.[48] In West Virginia an office judgment in an action on contract, where there is no order for inquiry of damages, becomes final on the last day of the next term of a circuit court after the entry of such office judgment.[49]

§ 3. Opening defaults. Grounds.[50]—The court has the inherent power,[51] in the exercise of a judicial discretion,[52] to set aside a default and allow a defense, and this power exists though a transcript be filed in a higher court for the purpose of creating a lien,[53] and though an appellate court has remanded the case with permission to plaintiff to move for judgment.[54] Statutes conferring the power must

49. Code 1899, c. 125, § 46. Bradley v. Long [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 746. The fact that defendant at such term appears and suggests the nonresidence of the plaintiff and takes a rule against him for security for costs, but does not demur, plead or otherwise make defense to the action, does not prevent such judgment from becoming final. NOTE. Scope of section: The opening of judgments for fraud, accident, mistake, etc., should be consulted. See Judgments, 4 C. L. 287. The fact that a judgment was taken on default may be of persuasive force in applying these equitable grounds after judgment has become final, so that the default cannot as such be opened. In some states the distinction between relief from a default and relief from the judgment is almost or wholly lost because of the nature of the procedure and the similarity of the grounds on which both reliefs must rest; because of this some cases in which the "judgment," as distinguished from the "default," has been opened have been retained in this article as being valuable for illustrative purposes. The note at the beginning of this article on what, strictly speaking, constitutes a default, should be consulted.

56. Walsh v. Boyle [Minn.] 103 N. W. 506. See 3 C. L. 1071, n. 58.

57. Foster v. Weber, 110 Ill. App. 5; Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Muller, 110 Ill. App. 190. There being want of diligence, the fact that there is a good defense on the merits is insufficient. Considine v. Lee, 105 Ill. App. 246. Where cross complaint and answer were forwarded to local counsel by registered mail, and attorney sending same failed to receive return receipt, but took no action, held not to show sufficient diligence to justify setting aside default. Carr v. First Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 947.

58. Cooke v. Haungs, 113 Ill. App. 501. Where petition was not filed in time limited by the court. Carver v. Seevers, 126 Iowa, 669, 102 N. W. 518.

59. Tschohl v. Machinery Mut. Ins. Ass'n, 126 Iowa, 211, 101 N. W. 740; Foster v. Weber, 110 Ill. App. 5; Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Muller, 110 Ill. App. 190. A denial based on want of information of plaintiff's ownership of note sued on, unaccompanied by any claim that she was not the owner, held insufficient. Tullis v. McClary [Iowa] 104 N. W. 505. Affidavit of attorney stating that from his investigations he believed that the accident for which the plaintiff sought to recover was not caused by the negligence of defendant, held sufficient without setting forth the facts on which the attorney's belief rested. Klepfer v. Keokuk, 126 Iowa, 592, 102 N. W. 515.

60. Where defendant answered but failed to appear at the trial, a "meritorious defense" is not one that was available under the answer. Peterson v. Crosier [Utah] 81 P. 860. Where defendant had a good defense available under the answer filed, the fact that he had an additional defense which was known to him at the time he filed the answer, is insufficient to authorize a setting aside of the default. Id.

61. That petitioner's principal attorney was in ill health and that he relied on agreement of opposing counsel to notify him when cause was set for trial, held insufficient to authorize opening of default, it not being alleged that the expected notice was not in fact given. Tschohl v. Machinery Mut. Ins. Ass'n, 126 Iowa, 211, 101 N. W. 740.

62. Where, on adjournment, court stated that case would be held open the next morning until defendant's counsel could fill an engagement in another court, a default judgment entered while defendant's counsel was so absent will be set aside. Rabinowitz v. Haimowitz, 91 N. Y. S. 11. Where plaintiff was given until the 7th of April to plead and defendants on examination on April 6th found no petition on file, held, default would be set aside. Carver v. Seevers, 126 Iowa, 669, 102 N. W. 518. Defendant in ejectment receiving a copy of the declaration, he cannot have a default judgment, based upon an amended declaration, set aside on the ground that the description of the property in the original declaration was defective. King v. Davis, 137 F. 198.

63. A legatee, though cited, failing to appear at the accounting of an executor because she did not then know of her interest as heir, may have her default opened. In re St. John, 93 N. Y. S. 840. The failure of defendant's counsel to know that a special appearance to move to quash the service of summons did not extend the time for answering, is not ground for setting aside the default. Mantle v. Casey [Mont.] 78 P. 591.

64. See 3 C. L. 1072, n. 65.

65. Default opened where failure to appear was due to an oversight due to the papers in the case being misplaced. Klepfer v. Keokuk, 126 Iowa, 592, 102 N. W. 515. Default opened where defendant in attempting to serve answer by mail, failed to serve properly and in time. Cannady v. Martin [S. C.] 51 S. E. 549. That summons was served by leaving a copy at a place other than defendant's residence, and the latter had no actual notice of the action until after judgment was rendered, and had a meritorious defense, constitutes a case of excusable neglect. Knowlton v. Smith, 163 Ind. 294, 71 N. E. 895. Where answer was served one day after expiration of statutory time, and the application for leave to answer showed a defense on the merits, reasonable excuse, an attachment of sufficient of defendant's land to protect plaintiff, and no delay in trial, the defendant should be permitted to interpose his defense. Walsh v. Boyle [Minn.] 103 N. W. 506, citing 1 C. L. § 4, p. 915; 3 C. L. § 3, p. 1071.

Business interests: The fact that defendant would have lost his position as an employe of a corporation if he had attended the trial is not ground for vacating judgment and setting aside default. Peterson v. Crosier [Utah] 81 P. 860.

66. Where defendants had been in default for more than 14 months, and were twice notified that the motion for default would be called for hearing and were actually represented at such hearing, held, the default would not be vacated, the only excuse offered being that one of the defendants understood imperfectly the English language, and had difficulty in explaining his defense to his counsel. Moody v. Reichow [Wash.] 80 P. 461. Where petitioner failed to employ an attorney until two years after de-own part. A motion for leave to open a default, so far as grounded on accident, mistake or misfortune, presents a question of fact for the decision of the trial court.[68] Negligence of an attorney is the negligence of his client,[69] and defendant is not entitled to rely on the clerk of court or any one else to inform him when the case was coming on for determination.[70]

Procedure.[71]—A motion to open a default is interlocutory in its nature[72] and can never result in a decision of the issues involved in the controversy.[73] Statutory requirements must be complied with.[74] In New York the affidavit on which an order to show cause why a default should not be opened is granted need not state the time appointed for holding the next trial term.[75] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of affidavits are shown in the notes.[76] An answer filed after default has been entered will be stricken from the files,[77] the proper practice being to move to set aside the default, tendering the answer with the motion;[78] but one is not in default for failing to file an answer while the motion is under consideration by the judge.[79] It is sufficient if filed immediately upon the grant of the order of vacation.[80] An order opening a default ordering that an answer filed with the motion papers on a previous date stand as duly served on said date, operates, in the absence of a showing of prejudice or exception to the order, to make the service of the answer effective, as of the date on which it was made.[81] As a condition of opening a default and vacating a fault judgment was entered, held, judgment would not be opened. McClure v. Clark [Minn.] 101 N. W. 951. Where, after postponement on account of illness of counsel, defendant abandoned his case, held a default would not be set aside in the absence of any excuse. Brown v. Huber, 92 N. Y. S. 940. Where both defendant and his attorney knew date of trial, but intentionally abandoned defense, held, default would not be opened. Peterson v. Crosier [Utah] 81 P. 860. Plaintiff is not entitled as a matter of right to have a default opened, where, after the case has been twice passed on the plea that counsel who was to try the case had other engagements, further adjournment was asked on the ground that the guardian ad litem was to try the case and had a conflicting engagement, which request was refused. Cohen v. Meryash, 93 N. Y. S. 529.

67. The mere fact that a defendant not personally served with summons knows of the action and takes no steps to prevent proceedings therein does not constitute laches, barring his right to have a default judgment set aside. O'Connell v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. S. 643. In New York personal service is essential, see ante, § 1.

Dig. §§ 4957, 3909, 3911, 3914, a default judgment being rendered against an infant, personally served, without the appointment of a guardian ad litem, the record being silent as to his nonage, the infant is not entitled to restrain the levy of an execution without taking steps to vacate and modify the judgment. 76. An affidavit on motion to set aside a default that defendant employed an attorney, without stating when, is insufficient. Foster v. Weber, 110 Ill. App. 5. Where the only witnesses to an accident other than plaintiff are nonresidents and absent from the state, and their affidavits are not obtainable, defendant, on moving to open a default judgment, may, by its agent, make affidavit of facts narrated to the agent by the absent witnesses. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Kelley [Tex.] 87 S. W. 660, rvg. 83 S. W. 855. Where an affidavit to have the default vacated under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. §§ 4880, 5091, failed to allege that defendant had no actual knowledge of the action in time to defend, and a counter affidavit alleged correspondence between defendant and his attorneys concerning the case at least 13 days before the entry of default, held, default would not be vacated. judgment, defendant should be required to pay all costs of the action up to the date of granting the order, including a trial fee,[82] and an order opening a default without condition will be considered as made on the theory that the party was entitled to it as a matter of right.[83]

Appeal.[84]—A default judgment is ordinarily not appealable,[85] unless it has been attacked in such manner as to relieve defendant from the imputation of consent.[86] Appeal lies from an order refusing to vacate such judgment,[87] but not from a refusal to vacate a mere order of default.[88] Appellate court will not interfere with ruling of trial court unless an abuse of discretion be clearly shown.[89] In the absence of proof all things will be presumed in favor of the trial court's action.[90] Where an answer in support of a motion to set aside a default is in fact filed before the action of the court upon the motion, it will be presumed that the court in granting the motion examined the answer and found it sufficient.[91]

§ 4. Operation and effect of default and proof of damages.[92]—A default only admits the facts stated in the declaration to be true; it does not admit that the facts, in law, entitle the plaintiff to recover.[93] The right to an inquest for damages[94] and the procedure thereon[95] are governed by the statutes of the various states. The object of a writ of inquiry is primarily to aid the court in the assessment of damages.[96] The writ is issued by the court, and it appoints the sheriff as its represent-

Rhode Island: Defendant having defaulted after answer made, he is not entitled to have the damages assessed by the judge of the common-pleas division in chambers under Gen. ative or alter ego to execute its mandate and to preside if the judge does not act himself; the execution of the writ may, however, be had in court before a jury drawn from the regular panel, and with the judge presiding instead of the sheriff.[97] Defendant having entered an appearance, he is entitled to notice of an application for assessment of damages.[98] Upon an inquest for damages the jury should be instructed solely with respect to the assessment of plaintiff's damages.[99] In Rhode Island the excessiveness of damages in a default case cannot be reviewed by the appellate division.[100]

DEPOSITIONS.[1]

§ 1. Occasion or necessity; right to take.[2]—The right to take testimony by deposition is purely of statutory origin,[3] and the Federal conformity act[4] merely adopts the state procedure and does not enlarge the grounds for taking depositions provided by the Federal statutes.[5] It is ordinarily allowed where a document[6] or the testimony of a witness beyond the jurisdiction, or who is about to leave the jurisdiction,[7] or under some statutes, a witness who resides at a great distance from the place of trial or is aged and infirm,[8] is necessary.[9] While examination of the adverse party before suit by way of discovery is allowed in some states,[10] depositions proper can be taken only after suit.[11] Contrary to the general rule, they are allowed in some states before issue[12] and after the trial is begun.[13]

Where applicant has been guilty of laches, the court may deny leave to take depositions,[14] or may refuse to delay the trial until they are returned.[15] Whether depositions may be taken in probate,[16] or for use on motions,[17] or in special proceedings,[18] depends on the terms of the statute.

§ 2. Procedure to obtain deposition.[19]—Except where the practice of taking depositions on notice prevails,[20] and in some cases under such a practice,[21] there must be an authorizing order[22] or a commission, which in some states is issued by the clerk without an order of court.[23] Such commission or order must be applied for on notice[24] by affidavit[25] of the party[26] complying with the statutory requirements,[27] which Contra: In an equity suit a deposition cannot be taken until the cause is at issue between the parties. Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Bullock, 134 F. 241.

13. The court has power under the New York Code to issue a commission at any time before the final decision of the case. Especially where case is tried before a referee and the only objection is a delay of trial for a few weeks. Mercantile Nat. Bank v. Sire, 100 App. Div. 459, 91 N. Y. S. 418.

Contra: Under a statute providing that depositions be "returned before the hearing of the cause and before final decree," there is no authority for taking depositions after the cause has been actually submitted for decision. Fulmer Coal Co. v. Morgantown & K. R. Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 606.

14. Whitney v. Rudd, 100 App. Div. 492, 91 N. Y. S. 429. Action at issue for more than two years, then continued from Feb. term to June 16, 1904, and afterwards it was stipulated that case be tried on first Monday, October 7, 1904. Motion to have deposition taken, returnable Sept. 7th, was denied. Valentine v. Rose, 45 Misc. 342, 90 N. Y. S. 389.

15. There is no error in refusing to delay trial when applicant for taking of deposition has had sufficient time in which to examine his witness, but neglected to do so before trial. Testimony taken on May 22, a year and a half after joining of issues. A retaking permitted on 19th of June. Trial began on 7th of July, but depositions not yet retaken. Held no error to refuse to delay trial to again take deposition. Louisville Rock Co. v. Cain, 26 Ky. L. R. 849, 82 S. W. 619. But if a party knows of the infirmity of his witness before trial, the taking of depositions should not be allowed after the trial has commenced. Hebron v. Work, 101 App. Div. 463, 34 Civ. Proc. R. 134, 92 N. Y. S. 149.

16. In Missouri depositions may be taken in a proceeding in probate court, such a proceeding being a suit pending within the meaning of the statute. See § 2877, Rev. St. Mo. 1899. Ex parte Gfeller, 178 Mo. 635, 77 S. W. 552.

17. A court may refuse to grant order for a deposition to be used at a hearing for a new trial when the motion must be decided before the expiration of the term, and the length of time is therefore insufficient for the requisite notice. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 943.

18. A statute providing for the use of depositions in a civil action or other civil proceeding is held to authorize depositions in disbarment proceedings against an attorney. State v. Mosher [Iowa] 103 N. W. 105; State v. McRae [Fla.] 38 So. 605.

21. Where a statute provides that "no party shall be required to take depositions on notice during a term of court in which the action is pending unless such court in furtherance of justice shall so order," the order of the court is the only notice required. Sec. 4688 of Iowa Code. State v. Mosher [Iowa] 103 N. W. 105.

22. Must be order in writing. Hebron v. Work, 101 App. Div. 463, 34 Civ. Proc. R. 134, 92 N. Y. S. 149.

23. It is generally the duty of the clerk to issue commission when applicant has complied with the statutes without any order from the court to do so. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Harkey [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 51, 88 S. W. 506. In Florida, a clerk of the circuit court can be compelled by mandamus to issue a commission if the law leading up to the issuance has been complied with, unless it appears that the issuance would be of no avail. The issuance by the clerk is merely a ministerial act. State v. McRae [Fla.] 38 So. 605.

24. Pergoli v. Lyman, 92 N. Y. S. 788, Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1903, p. 938, provides for a notice of ten days (together with a copy of the interrogation) of "an intention of suing out a commission." Carrara Paint Agency Co. v. Carrara Paint Co., 137 F. 319.

25. Hebron v. Work, 101 App. Div. 463, 34 Civ. Proc. R. 134, 92 N. Y. S. 149.

26. Under the New York Code of Civil Procedure the affidavit made for the purpose of taking depositions must be made by the party not his attorney, and statements in the affidavit made on information and belief are not sufficient. A statement that witnesses are not residents of the state does not usually involve a statement of the witness' evidence,[28] and averment of facts showing that the deposition is necessary,[29] that the proposed evidence is relevant and material,[30] and within the knowledge of the proposed witness,[31] and that applicant intends to use the testimony so obtained on the trial.[32] In some states, where a deposition is taken on interrogatories, the proposed interrogatories, which must be properly addressed to the witness,[33] are served with the application for commission,[34] and at the hearing on such application the interrogatories are settled. In other jurisdictions the practice is to serve interrogatories with the notice of hearing.[35] On a showing of distinct necessity, oral examination by a commissioner[36] or the privilege of oral cross-examination[37] may be allowed.

The party applying for the deposition may be required to deposit a sufficient sum to cover the expenses and allowance to the opposing attorney in attending the examination by open commission.[38] Unless the number of depositions appears unreasonable and unnecessary, it will not be limited in advance.[39]

§ 3. Taking the testimony or evidence adduced. Officers authorized to take.[40] —Under most statutes a notary public is authorized to take depositions,[41] but at common law he had no such authority.[42] When a commission is issued to two commissioners to take the depositions severally, either one may act without the other.[43]

Notice of hearing and attendance of witness.[44]—Notice of hearing as prescribed by statute[45] with a copy of the interrogatories, if any,[46] must be given, and the notice

31. When it appears from counter affidavits that the officers of the corporation whose depositions are sought are ignorant of the facts attempted to be proved, an application for their deposition will be denied. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Calvet-Rogniat, 46 Misc. 16, 93 N. Y. S. 238. If it appears under Code Civ. Proc. § 872, subd. 7, that the officer had no personal knowledge of what was done and had no connection with the corporation, he cannot be examined. In re Thompson, 95 App. Div. 542, 89 N. Y. S. 4; Calvet-Rogniat v. Mercantile Trust Co., 46 Misc. 20, 93 N. Y. S. 241.

32. In order to obtain an order for the examination of a witness before trial, the moving papers must show that it is intended to use the evidence upon the trial. Whitney v. Rudd, 100 App. Div. 492, 91 N. Y. S. 429. The application need not expressly state that deposition will be read on the trial. Jacobs v. Mexican Sugar Refining Co., 45 Misc. 56, 90 N. Y. S. 824. The statement that the examination "is desired for the purpose of using the testimony upon the said trial" was held to satisfy the statute. McCormick v. Coddington, 98 App. Div. 13, 90 N. Y. S. 218.

34. Under Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1903, § 938. Carrara Paint Agency Co. v. Carrara Paint Co., 137 F. 319. Interrogatories were presumed to have been filed before the date fixed in the notice for issuing the commission. Haish v. Dreyfus, 111 Ill. App. 44.

35. See § 3, post.

36. A special examiner will not be appointed to examine experts orally outside of the district merely because it is advantageous to do so. Magone v. Colorado Smelting & Min. Co., 135 F. 846.

37. An order for a commission permitting oral cross-examination should not be granted except on a showing of special circumstances. Woodward v. Skinner, 92 N. Y. S. 259.

38. But a party may choose to examine by written interrogatories annexed to commission. Gowans v. Jobbins, 91 N. Y. S. 842.

41. Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Bullock, 134 F. 241.

42. Statute of Ind., Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 8039, grants to notary this power. The fact that a notary of a foreign state is not authorized by laws of his own state will not disqualify him to take depositions to be used in Indiana. Midland Steel Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 290.

43. If a commission is joint and the adverse party appears, cross-examines, and does not object to the absence of one of them, the deposition will not be surpressed on that account. New v. Young [Ala.] 39 So. 201.

44. See 3 C. L. 1076.

45. Honor Co. v. Stevedores' & Longshoresmen's Benev. Ass'n [La.] 38 So. 271. In Michigan, a notice of four days is sufficient when a party can arrive at the place of tak-is bad if it misstate the time[47] or place[48] of hearing, but there is no necessity of giving notice of the nature of the evidence that is to be taken.[49] Failure to give notice cannot be availed of by one who voluntarily appears,[50] or by a co-party not affected.[51] Subpoena[52] and subpoena duces tecum[53] are usually allowed to compel attendance and production of documents.

Proceedings at hearing.[54]—The applicant is under no obligation to examine the witness, and without examination by him the opposing counsel has no right to proceed to cross-examination.[55] If the deposition is taken on interrogatories, oral examination cannot be had.[56] If it is oral, the parties propound such questions as they choose and it is generally provided that questions and answers be taken down by a disinterested person.[57] Witnesses must answer all questions which are material and do not come in conflict with their constitutional privileges,[58] but not impertinent and illegal questions,[59] or those calling for disclosure of trade secrets.[60] A notary public has the authority to require a witness to answer all legal questions properly asked.[61]

§ 4. Returning and filing.[62]—It is usually required that the officer taking the deposition return it properly sealed and indorsed,[63] by mail or other authorized conveyance,[64] within a specified time,[65] and the deposition must be received, opened, and filed by the clerk without passing into the hands of private persons.[66]

63. A deposition returned without a sealing or indorsement and appearing to be nothing more than an ordinary letter cannot be admitted as evidence. Hagins v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 683.

64. Under the Ky. Civil Code, it is required that "the officer taking the depositions shall deliver them to the clerk of the court in which the action is pending or send them by mail or private conveyance. If sent by private conveyance, the person by whom

§ 5. Suppression and objections before trial.[67]—An objection or motion to suppress before trial as ordinarily allowed by statute is the remedy for defects of procedure in taking the deposition, and is usually required to be made within a limited time after the filing of the deposition,[68] objections not going to the admissibility of the testimony itself being deemed waived unless so made;[69] the purpose of the statutes being to allow whenever possible a recommitment[70] or retaking of the deposition.[71] In a few states a deposition will be suppressed for inadmissibility of contents,[72] objection to its admission at the trial[73] being the usual remedy in such case. A deposition will be suppressed if taken at a time[74] or place[75] other than that stated in the notice, or without notice to a party;[76] and defects in the address of the interrogatories,[77] failure to sign and certify the deposition,[78] failure to properly seal and address it,[79] and improper interference with a deposition by a party's attorney while it is in course sent must make oath that they were not opened by him or anyone else during transit." Ky. Code, § 583. Depositions were transmitted by Adams Exp. Co. Affidavits were made by officer taking deposition that it was delivered to a certain agent of the express company, and by this agent and all others through whom it passed that envelope had not been opened and also by the clerk that he received the sealed package. Held to satisfy the above section. Standard Oil Co. v. Doyle, 36 Ky. L. R. 544, 82 S. W. 271.

65. The Iowa Code provides that a deposition must be returned to the clerk of the proper court within thirty days. Section 4705. Iowa Code. But when it appeared that a deposition had not been filed at time of trial, court ordered it filed, the opposing counsel having examined it a year previous and was not prejudiced by failure to return the same. Court can do this under § 4708. Ferguson v. Lederer, Strauss & Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 794.

66. Where plaintiff's attorney asked clerk of court to send to the former the depositions and where the attorney, upon their receipt, discovered that they were not properly signed and sealed and sent them to the postmaster for correction, it was held that depositions must be suppressed. White v. Southern R. Co., [Ga.] 51 S. E. 411.

67. See 3 C. L. 1078.

68. Section 10139 of Mich. Compiled Laws of 1897 provides that objections to notice, manner of taking deposition, or its certification or return, shall be waived unless they are made "in writing within three days after knowledge or return thereof." McCall Co. v. Jacobson [Mich.] 102 N. W. 969. Ga. Civil Code 1895, § 5314, provides that "all exceptions to the execution and return of commission must be made in writing and notice thereof given to opposite party." White v. Southern R. Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 411. Under a statute which provides that objections to depositions shall be determined at the first term of court after their filing, a motion made to suppress them cannot be entertained after the making of an announcement of ready for trial. Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2289. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Harkey [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 51, 88 S. W. 506.

69. When statute provides for the filing of objections, those otherwise made are properly excluded. Iowa Code, § 4712. Ostenson v. Severson, 126 Iowa, 197, 101 N. W. 789. When the only variance from the strict terms of a stipulation is the taking of a deposition by a justice of the peace instead of a notary public and the deposition is on file for six days, an objection after the beginning of the trial is too late. Seamster v. State [Ark.] 86 S. W. 434.

70. When a commissioner fails to make a sufficient return as to facts which he is sent to ascertain, the recommitment of the cause to a commissioner is within the court's discretion and a party who does not object to such order or to the return when made cannot do so later. Commissioner was sent abroad to take testimony as to decedent's next of kin and failed to make a return concerning relatives of the mother of the decedent. A recommitment for this purpose held proper under the circumstances. In re Flanagan's Estate, 207 Pa. 490, 56 A. 1062.

71. But objection to deposition taken should be made before trial if possible, in order to allow sufficient time to take the deposition properly. Abbott v. Marion Min. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 110.

72. When portions of a deposition are admissible it is not error to refuse to suppress it. Griggs v. Carson [Kan.] 81 P. 471. It is not reversible error to suppress a deposition whose contents have no bearing on the issues of the case. Gilman v. Ferguson, 116 Ill. App. 347.

77. If interrogatories are not addressed to the party who signs the deposition there is error in refusing to suppress the testimony thus taken. Edwards v. Edwards [Ala.] 39 So. 82.

78. Certificate did not show that deposition had been read to witness. Parties lived in same place and had eighteen days in which to correct it before trial. Louisville Rock Co. v. Cain, 26 Ky. L. R. 849, 82 S. W. 619.

of transmission,[80] have been held ground for suppression. Trivial defects, working no prejudice[81] or affecting only a co-party,[82] or those which have been waived,[83] are not ground for suppression.

§ 6. Use as evidence.[84]—The deposition being a substitute for the production of the witness, it cannot be used if his attendance can be procured,[85] though such exclusion has been held discretionary[86] and is waived by failure to make timely objection.[87] In some states it must be made to appear that the grounds for taking the deposition exist at the time of trial,[88] while in others their continuance is presumed.[89] In Michigan the court may, in its discretion, to prevent abuses, order the retaking of testimony or the production of the witness.[90] The competency of the witness is determined as of the time of offering the deposition.[91]

A deposition is not evidence until read in evidence.[92] Either party to the action may, in South Carolina, call for the reading of the deposition,[93] but isolated portions of a deposition cannot be introduced,[94] nor will answers to cross-examination be admitted if direct examination is excluded,[95] and one may object to the reading of his own cross-examination on the ground that the questions are incompetent and irrele-

81. If adverse party is not prejudiced by failure to apply for an order or give a longer notice than twenty-four hours, the order granting deposition should not be vacated if the testimony is material to the party applying. In re Tweedie Trading Co., 94 N. Y. S. 167. A failure to state in the certificate that witnesses were sworn is not a sufficient error to exclude the deposition when that fact is stated in the caption. Manders' Committee v. Eastern State Hospital [Ky.] 84 S. W. 761. That a dedimus was issued at a later date than that mentioned in the notice is not a sufficient ground for the suppression of a deposition. Haish v. Dreyfus, 111 Ill. App. 44. In some states, statutes provide "that unimportant deviations shall not be sufficient to exclude the deposition when no prejudice to opposite party results." Iowa Code, § 4708. Ferguson v. Lederer, Strauss & Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 794. The irregularity of permitting an order for examination of a witness when proceedings are stayed because of a failure to pay costs on a previous motion is cured by the payment of costs before return day. Jacobs v. Mexican Sugar Refining Co., 45 Misc. 56, 90 N. Y. S. 824.

82. Failure to give notice to co-party. Standard Oil Co. v. Doyle [Ky.] 82 S. W. 271; In re Shawmut Min. Co., 94 App. Div. 156, 87 N. Y. S. 1059.

83. By the appearance of the attorney and the cross-examination of the witness at the hearing, a party does not waive the right to suppress the deposition on the ground that it was not written by a disinterested person. Real Estate Trust Co. v. Union Trust Co. [Md.] 61 A. 228; Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gray [Ind.] 72 N. E. 869.

84. See 3 C. L. 1078.

85. If the witness is in court ready and willing to take the witness stand, the deposition is properly excluded. Handy & Co. v. Smith, 77 Conn. 165, 58 A. 694.

86. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Masterson [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 49.

87. Not made until other witnesses had testified, plaintiff rested and a motion for nonsuit made by defendant, the court will not under § 52 of the act of March 23, 1900, exclude it. Flannery v. Central Brew. Co., 70 N. J. Law, 715, 59 A. 157.

88. In New York it is error to allow a deposition to be read without showing that the witness was unable to attend the trial. Code Civ. Proc. § 882. Meres v. Emmons, 92 N. Y. S. 1099. Consenting to the admission of a type-written copy of the testimony of the witness who was unable to attend did not waive proof of infirmity at the time of trial. Carter v. Wakeman, 45 Or. 427, 78 P. 362.

89. It cannot be presumed when there is no objection that the cause for taking the deposition does not exist at the time of the trial when the deposition states that the age of the witness is eighty and that he is unable to travel. Taylor v. Taylor's Estate [Mich.] 101 N. W. 832. Under the laws of Michigan, a deposition of a witness shown by an affidavit of an attorney to be living in another state may be admitted although the reason for issuing the deposition was not shown to exist at the time of the trial. 91. Deposition of party as to transaction with adversary who died after taking of deposition. Rogers v. Tompkins [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 379.

92. Under a statute where either the wife or husband may testify, the taking of the wife's deposition when it is not read at the trial will not prevent the husband from testifying. Floore v. Green, 26 Ky. L. R. 1073, 83 S. W. 133.

95. If direct examination is read, then cross examination should also be read. Bentley v. Bentley's Estate [Neb.] 101 N. W. 976, vant.[96] In Michigan, a plaintiff may by a rule of the circuit court of that state read his cross-examination of defendant's witnesses whose testimony was taken by depositions.[97] Depositions may be again used at a retrial of the case[98] if the cause for the original taking thereof continues,[99] and the parties remain the same;[1] but a deposition whose admissibility at the first trial depended on a stipulation cannot be used again without a renewal of the stipulation.[2] The fact that a case is consolidated with another after a deposition has been taken for use in the original case will not render its admission improper.[3]

Objections[4] going to the procedure are usually required to be made before trial, and those objections which might have been made on the taking of the deposition are usually deemed waived if not so made.[5] Objections not included in either of these classes are properly made on the trial,[6] and must be then made to save them for review.[7] Depositions as evidence are the equivalent of the testimony of the witness in open court,[8] and are subject to the same considerations respecting credibility.[9]

96. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 911, provides that either party may read a deposition taken and returned. Cudlip v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co., 180 N. Y. 85, 72 N. E. 925.

97. Circuit Court Rule 41a. The depositions should not be read on the theory that the answers and questions were those of cross-examination but the fact that they were so read is not sufficient reason for reversal unless results prejudicial to objecting party are shown to have occurred. McDonald v. Smith [Mich.] 102 N. W. 668.

98. At common law, depositions taken in a former trial de bene esse can be used in a case between the same parties if the witness is proved to be dead, unable to attend court by reason of sickness, out of the court's jurisdiction or otherwise not amenable to its process. U. S. Rev. St. p. 666, § 861, does not change above rule of evidence. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron [C. C. A.] 137 F. 48. A deposition was offered against six of the heirs only, one of whom was a party to the action in which deposition was taken. Held that this testimony was properly excluded. Roberts v. Powell [Pa.] 60 A. 258. The adverse party may introduce at the second trial a deposition de bene esse used at a former trial. This can be done although the witness is present at the trial. Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning [S. C.] 49 S. E. 325.

99. When a witness lives within the distance of the court house in which depositions are not allowed except for other reasons than length of distance from place of trial, a deposition used in a former case cannot be read unless some reason is shown making it admissible at the subsequent trial. Smith v. Park's Adm'r [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1167. The testimony of a witness at a former trial cannot be introduced without proof of attempts to procure attendance of witness or of the impracticability of taking depositions de bene esse or otherwise as provided by Rev. St. §§ 863-867. Diamond Coal & Coke Co. v. Allen [C. C. A.] 137 F. 705.

1. Depositions taken in a former case are not admissible in evidence in a subsequent trial if the parties to the action are not the same. Such a deposition is but hearsay. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Vawter [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 47, 88 S. W. 407. Although plaintiffs adopt the allegations of a petition filed in their names without their authority, depositions taken before they became parties cannot be used at the trial. Rogers v. Tompkins [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 379. Depositions taken ten years previously in a case in which the parties were not identical. Morris v. Parry, 110 Mo. App. 675, 85 S. W. 620.

2. Armeny v. Madson & Buck Co., 111 Ill. App. 621.

3. Kothman v. Faseler [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 390.

4. See § 5, ante.

5. The fact that a deposition is taken in a narrative form is not a ground for objection after the trial of the case has commenced. Defendant was present at the taking of the deposition, cross-examined the witness but did not at that time object to its form. Patterson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 621. Testimony to which no objection was advanced at the time of taking the deposition on the ground that it was too remote or any motion to strike out subsequently made is properly admitted at the trial over a general objection made by the adverse party. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coutourie [C. C. A.] 135 F. 465. A party proceeding to cross-examination after objecting to questions at the time of taking the deposition does not waive the objection to incompetency at the time of the trial. Bentley v. Bentley's Estate [Neb.] 101 N. W. 976. When a party has opportunity to cross-examine a witness and is not surprised by his answer to the general question, whether "the witness could state anything else pertinent to the issues between the parties," appended to the conclusion of the commission, there is no ground for objection. Witness answered the general question by making a statement relative to the sanity of his father. Kelly v. Moore, 22 App. D. C. 9.

6. When questions in a deposition are leading, the trial court may properly exclude them and the answers. State v. Taylor [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 247. Answers to other questions than those attached to the deposition may be excluded at the trial. Sparks v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 740. A question objected to as hearsay and appearing by an admission in a subsequent part of the deposition as hearsay should, when read in

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Scope of topic.—This topic deals only with the rules governing the disposition of the property of those dying intestate. The construction and effect of wills,[10] and the administration and management of estates of decedents, are treated elsewhere.[11]

§ 1. Law governing descent.[12]—Where the owner of property dies without making any disposition of it, it descends as provided by the statute of descent.[13] The law in force at decedent's death controls the distribution of his personalty.[14]

The descent of realty is governed by the law of its situs,[15] and the succession to movables by the law of the actual domicile of the owner at the time of his death.[16]

§ 2. Persons entitled to share or inherit.[17]—The legal presumption is that every decedent has heirs, but this presumption may be rebutted either by lapse of time accompanied by the nonappearance of heirs, or by proof of the fact.[18] One becomes an heir only on the death of the ancestor,[19] and his capacity to take by descent must be determined as of that time.[20] court, be excluded. Norman Printer's Supply Co. v. Ford, 77 Conn. 461, 59 A. 499.

7. Objections that depositions were not signed, when not made in the lower court and none of them filed but made for the first time on appeal, will be of no avail to the appellant. Dearlove v. Hayward, 113 Ill. App. 326. An objection may be made on appeal when section 250 of art. 93 of the Maryland Code, which provides that depositions shall be taken in writing and recorded when used in plenary proceedings, has not been followed. When no evidence appears on record on an appeal from such a case, the decision of lower court cannot be sustained. Stonesifer v. Shriver [Md.] 59 A. 139.

8. Under a provision of Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, court may so instruct. Olcese v. Mobile Fruit & Trading Co., 211 Ill. 539, 71 N. E. 1084.

9. If the statements of a witness in different depositions conflict, the statement against his interest is not conclusive against him. It is for the jury to determine which one they believe to be true. One statement is that plaintiff was thrown off the car by a sudden jerk and the other that the train was moving at a certain rate at the time. Bond v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 131, 84 S. W. 124. Statements in a deposition made against the interest of the party taking it is not conclusive against him. When the adverse party introduces it, the deposition is made his own. Von Tobel v. Stetson & Post Mill Co., 32 Wash. 683, 73 P. 788.

18. Mere allegation of petition that left no heirs or kindred of any kind or degree and that property descended to her husband held insufficient to require purchaser under mortgage foreclosure sale to take title where there was no proof thereof, defendant having defaulted, and no proceedings against unknown heirs. Montz v. Schwabacher, 26 Ky. L. R. 1214, 83 S. W. 569. Such allegation is not a conclusion of law, nor is it necessary to state specifically that left neither paternal nor maternal kindred. Id.

19. The mere fact that a child will inherit the realty of his father in the event of the latter's death intestate does not in-

Heirship, except that based upon consanguinity, can be created only by a constitutional law.[21]

The common law did not authorize the adoption of heirs,[22] but this rule has been generally changed by statute.[23] Adopted parents do not inherit from the adopted child.[24]

In many states an illegitimate child whose parents have subsequently intermarried inherits in the same manner as though legitimate.[25] In Indiana if the father, during his lifetime, acknowledges such child as his own, he inherits as though legitimate, provided there are no legitimate children or descendants of legitimate children.[26]

The heirs of an Indian, who has selected lands for allotment and whose right to their allotment to him has attached, succeed to his interests.[27]

At common law an alien cannot transmit land by hereditary descent, and no vest the child with an interest therein which can be made the subject of sale or conveyance by him during the life of the father. Where husband and wife owned land jointly, deed by children after husband's death purporting to convey their "expectancy" in the half of the land to which the wife held title held void. Furnish's Adm'r v. Lilly [Ky.] 84 S. W. 734. Since there can be no heir of the living, one who adopts a minor as his child and heir has the same unlimited power of disposition of his property that a natural father has. Burnes v. Burnes [C. C. A.] 137 F. 781.

20. Conditions then existing determine who is entitled to take. Only those who at that time come within the description of those entitled by law to inherit. Theobald v. Smith, 92 N. Y. S. 1019. One adopted under law expressly providing that adopted children shall not inherit (Laws 1873, c. 830, p. 1243) may inherit where parent died after adoption of amendment allowing such children to inherit (Laws 1887, c. 703, p. 909). Id.

21. Mere agreement to adopt and to take necessary steps to that end, which was never executed, held not to take place of adoption so as to entitle complainant to inherit. Bowins v. English [Mich.] 101 N. W. 204. An agreement to treat a child as a person would treat his own child confers upon the child no rights whatever to the property of the person making it. Hanly v. Hanly, 93 N. Y. S. 864.

22. Evidence insufficient to show adoption of natural child under the Spanish law or under a special act of the legislature authorizing it. Conrad v. Herring [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 427.

23. In Missouri an adopted child has the rights of a natural child, and no greater or less rights. Burnes v. Burnes, 132 F. 485. The father, natural or adopting, may disinherit the child, allow him to take a full share, or give him his entire estate, subject to the rights of the wife, to the exclusion of his natural children. May limit amount which he shall take by adoption paper. Id. An adopted child cannot inherit from one person's estate in the dual capacity of adopted child and blood relation. Id. He can inherit from both his natural and his adopting father. Id.

New York: See Theobald v. Smith, 92 N. Y. S. 1019.

Texas: Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, arts. 1, 2, providing for the adoption of legal heirs, places them in the same position as and gives them only the rights of natural children. Logan v. Lennix [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 364. Hence such an adopted child may be disinherited by his adopting father, in the absence of a valid agreement to the contrary. Id. Instrument of adoption reciting that it was executed in consideration of love and affection for the child and of the relinquishment of his possession and control by the parents, and that the child should be entitled to all the privileges of a legal heir, does not give him any greater rights than those fixed by statute, and hence does not prevent execution of will disinheriting him. 25. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 39, § 3, providing that an illegitimate child whose parents have intermarried and whose father has acknowledged him or her as his child, shall be considered legitimate, held, that such child inherits the same as though born in lawful wedlock, the statute being a rule of descent. Hall v. Gabbert, 213 Ill. 208, 72 N. E. 806.

26. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901. § 2630a. Testimony of the mother cannot be received to establish such acknowledgment. Townsend v. Meneley [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 274. It is immaterial that the acknowledgment was made prior to the date when the statute took effect. Id. Evidence held to show recognition. Id. See, also, Bastards, 5 C. L. 412.

one can take by inheritance when he must deduce his title through an alien.[28] This rule has been changed or abrogated by various treaties with foreign nations,[29] and by statute in many of the states.[30] Treaty provisions control state statutes in this regard.[31]

By statute in some states no person may inherit from one whose life he feloniously takes or causes to be taken.[32]

In some states afterborn[33] or pretermitted children are entitled to the shares they would have taken had the parent died intestate.[34]

As a general rule one may make a voluntary conveyance of all or any of his

29. Under art. 2 of the treaty of May 4, 1845, ratified Aug. 12, 1846, with Saxony (9 St. 830, 831), aliens protected thereby are given the same right to inherit realty as citizens, with the qualification that they must sell the land within two years, which term may be reasonably prolonged according to circumstances. Ehrlich v. Weber [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 188. Under art. 3 of the same treaty, such aliens inherit personalty in the same manner as realty. Id. Such provisions are not changed by the subsequent treaty with Germany. 17 St. 921, 923. Id. State may give aliens greater rights than treaty does. Thus Shannon's Code, §§ 3659, 3660, gives them equal rights with citizens. Id.

30. Kansas: Gen. St. 1899, p. 268, § 1194, providing that heirs of aliens may take their lands by devise or descent, and may hold the same for period of three years and no longer, was repealed in 1901, without any saving clause in the repealing act. Held, in action to recover realty of deceased brought by sisters and nephews of deceased less than three years after his death, in which the state intervened, claiming title by escheat on the ground that decedent's parents died aliens before the time of his death, that the rights of the parties were to be determined as of the date when the action was commenced, and that as the state had at that time no interest in the lands under facts alleged in the answer, a demurrer thereto was properly sustained. State v. Ellis [Kan.] 79 P. 1066.

In New York a citizen of a foreign nation, which, by its laws, confers similar privileges on citizens of that state, may transmit by inheritance and descent his interest in lands to his heirs. Under Laws 1845, p. 95, c. 115, § 4, as amended by Laws 1875, c. 38, p. 32, requiring aliens to declare their intention of becoming citizens in order to hold as against the state property acquired by inheritance from alien residents or from citizens who have purchased lands within the state, title to realty acquired by a nonresident alien, who had not declared his intention of becoming a citizen, from a resident, escheats to the state, there being no statute authorizing the transmission of title from a nonresident alien who had himself acquired it by descent and not by purchase. McCormack v. Coddington, 95 N. Y. S. 46. A female alien is not required to declare her intention of becoming a citizen under such act. Id. Grantee of citizen who acquires title through nonresident alien takes good title under Laws 1877, p. 117, c. 111, § 1. Id.

Tennessee: Shannon's Code, §§ 3659, 3660, places aliens in all respects, as to the succession of property, in the same situation as citizens. Ehrlich v. Weber [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 188. If one dies leaving a child, or one is born after his death, and he leaves a will made when he had no child, which does not provide for or mention any that may be born, the will, except in so far as it provides for the payment of debts, is to be construed as if the devises and bequests had been limited to take effect in the event that the child should die under the age of twenty-one and without issue. § 3. Inheritable and distributable property.[37]—Upon the death of the ancestor intestate, the descent is cast by operation of law on his heirs,[38] and his personalty passes in accordance with the statute of distribution.[39] The legal rights of the heirs or distributees to the property cannot be defeated except by a valid devise thereof to some other person,[40] and they take whatever is undisposed of by will, whether the ancestor so intended or not.[41]

The title to lands or any interest therein vests in the heirs immediately on the death of the ancestor,[42] subject to all liens and charges existing against it,[43] and subject to the payment of the ancestor's debts.[44] Vested remainders, though the land never comes into the remainderman's possession,[45] the legal title remaining in the

45. Where one having a vested remainder died before the happening of the contingency vendor of realty, when a lien to secure the purchase money is reserved in his deed,[46] and the interest of the grantor under a trust deed, descend to the heir.[47] By statute in Indiana where a conveyance is made solely in consideration of love and affection and the grantee dies intestate without leaving a widow or children, the land reverts to the grantor.[48] In the absence of a statutory or testamentary provision to the contrary, rents of realty accruing after the death of the owner go to the heirs,[49] and those which accrued during his lifetime go to his personal representatives as assets of the estate.[50] All contingent and executory interests, where the person to take is certain, descend to his heirs or pass to his personal representatives, according to whether the property is real or personal.[51]

Personal property,[52] including choses in action, goes to the executor or administrator and not to the heirs or beneficiaries under the will.[53] At common law an estate for years in lands is personal property and on the death of the tenant goes to his representatives;[54] but this rule has been changed by statute in some states.[55]

§ 4. Course of descent and distribution.[56]—The realty of one dying unmarried and without issue goes in equal shares to his brothers and sisters.[57] That of a widow goes to her children in equal shares.[58] In Texas, realty descends in equal shares to

57. Of the whole and half blood, born before or after his death. Shannon's Code, § 4163, subsec. 2. Ehrlich v. Weber [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 188.

58. Plaintiffs purchased land with their own money and had it conveyed to their mother under an agreement that she should convey it to them by deed or will whenever they might desire. Held that on her death intestate leaving four children, plaintiffs and two others, plaintiffs took the legal title in fee to half the property and the equitable title to the rest, so that it could not, in an action on an insurance policy, be said as a matter of law that the property belonged the children, subject to the widow's one-third life estate therein.[59] In New York in case the intestate leaves no descendants his realty goes to his mother for life, with remainder to his brothers and sisters in equal shares.[60] In Texas the homestead of one who leaves no wife goes to his children, free from liability for his debts.[61]

In many states ancestral realty can go only to those of the blood of the ancestor from whom the intestate acquired it, provided there are any such.[62] On death, without issue, of a daughter, who has inherited land from her father, leaving a husband and brothers and sisters, the husband inherits half the property and the brothers and sisters the other half.[63] An ancestral estate derived from decedent's mother does not ascend to the father.[64] If the estate is a new acquisition, derived from a stranger to the blood, and decedent leaves no issue, his father takes a life estate, with remainder to the next of kin.[65]

Undisposed-of personalty passes to the surviving husband or wife and the surviving children in equal shares.[66] If intestate leaves neither a husband or wife nor any children, it goes to his father, or to his mother if his father is dead.[67] If he leaves no father or mother, it goes in equal shares to his brothers and sisters.[68]

In New York, in the distribution of personalty, representation is admitted among collaterals in the same manner as is allowed in reference to realty.[69] Thus, where the intestate leaves only nephews and grandnephews, they take his personalty by right of representation.[70] So too, where he leaves only first cousins and representatives of deceased cousins, the second cousins take a distributive share by representation.[71] In such case the question of the scources from which the property came to the decedent is immaterial.[72]

In New Jersey in the distribution of personalty among collaterals, representation is limited to the descendants of the stock represented by the surviving next of kin.[73] The stock entitled to representation are the descendants of the first ancestor in the ascending line common to the intestate and all the surviving next of kin; the next of kin of equal degree taking per capita, and the descendants of deceased members of the class as representing their stock.[74] If some first cousins are living, being the only next of kin, they constitute the stock entitled to representation, and, there being no great-uncles or great-aunts living, first cousins and the representatives of deceased persons of that class take to the exclusion of the descendants of the deceased great-uncles or great-aunts.[75]

§ 5. Quantity of estate or share acquired.[76]—The shares of the heirs or next of kin may be increased or decreased by transfers of property made between them and the ancestor during the latter's lifetime, depending upon whether such transactions are gifts[77] or advancements.[78]

§ 6. Husband or wife as heir.[79]—Property held by the entireties goes to the survivor.[80]

Community property descends one-half to the surviving spouse and the other half to the children.[81] In Kentucky the half interest of the husband in property owned by his wife and himself jointly goes to his children, subject to his wife's right of dower therein.[82]

In New Jersey the widow takes a third of the personalty.[83]

In some states the widow of an intestate who leaves no child or children or descendants thereof takes half his realty and all his personalty.[84] In other states this applies only in case the property is not ancestral.[85] In still others, under such circumstances, she is his sole heir, and may, upon payment of his debts, take possession of his estate without administration.[86] In New York the widow is entitled to the whole of the personal estate of a decedent who leaves no descendant, parent, brother, sister, nephew, or niece.[87] In Kentucky the husband is the sole heir of his wife only in case she does not leave surviving her any kindred in either the paternal or maternal line, however remote.[88]

The widow is generally given the homestead for life for the benefit of herself and her minor children, if there are any.[89] Where a husband makes a homestead entry during his wife's life, but she dies prior to the making of final proof and the issuance of a patent, the children take the title which their mother would have had as a member of the community on the subsequent acquisition of the legal title by the father.[90] The right of the survivor of a community to occupy the community homestead is a personal one, and not an estate in the land which can be assigned or conveyed so as to vest the right to such use and occupancy in the assignee.[91] A provision that the homestead shall descend free from all judgments and claims against the deceased owners abrogates the right to a vendor's lien thereon.[92]

In some states the widow is entitled to occupy the dwelling house of her husband for a specified time after his death, or until dower is assigned to her.[93]

In some states the widow may, under specified circumstances, elect to take a child's part of the estate in fee in lieu of dower.[94] In Missouri, if the husband leaves no descendants, she may, at her election, take one-half of the land of which her husband died seised.[95] The right of election is a personal one and not a property right which will survive to her representatives or heirs.[96] The surviving spouse may also generally elect to take his or her statutory share of the estate in lieu of taking under the will.[97] A husband electing to take under the statute instead of under his wife's will, there being no children or lawful issue of any deceased child, takes only an equal undivided one-third of all lands other than the homestead of which she died seised, though, had there been no will, he would have taken the whole estate.[98]

The distributive share of the widow in her husband's estate goes to her as a matter of right and of contract and not by inheritance.[99]

The husband surviving to the wife's choses in action takes no title until he reduces them to possession by suit.[100]

A plural wife cannot inherit any interest in lands acquired by her husband either before or after marriage.[101]

In Iowa the widow cannot, by contract with him, release her interest in her husband's property.[102]

In construing a statute providing for the descent of property received by the surviving spouse from his or her husband or wife who died intestate, the rights of the parties are to be determined by the legal title and their legal status.[103]

DETINUE.

To sustain an action of detinue, plaintiff must allege and prove title to the property,[1] but having possession at the time of the alleged wrongful taking, title is presumptively in him,[2] and defendant has the burden of disproving plaintiff's title.[3] If defendant denies plaintiff's title, he may set up title in a third person.[4]

DIRECTING VERDICT AND DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

Insufficiency of evidence, while the most frequent ground for directed verdict or demurrer to evidence, is frequently raised in other ways. Accordingly reference must be had to topics dealing with the specific subject-matter for a full treatment of sufficiency of evidence on particular questions.[5]

§ 1. Directing verdict.[6] Grounds and occasions.[7]—It is the duty of the court to direct a verdict where there is no evidence to support the cause of action;[8] or where the evidence on material points[9] is undisputed,[10] so that the only issue is one of law,[11] or is such that all reasonable men[12] or ordinary minds could draw but one conclusion therefrom,[13] or of such a conclusive character as would compel the court in the exercise of sound legal discretion to set aside a verdict returned in opposition thereto,[14] or where as a matter of law there can be no recovery had upon any view that can properly be taken of the facts which the evidence tends to establish;[15] but if there is any substantial evidence bearing upon the issue to which the jury might in the proper exercise of its function give credit, the court cannot

28. Dinan v. Supreme Council of Catholic Mut. Ben. Ass'n [Pa.] 60 A. 10. The mere fact that a new trial is ordered because the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict does not entitle the party in whose favor the order is given to a directed verdict on the second trial if the evidence therein

flicting evidence will not justify a directed verdict,[29] but where the evidence for one party is a mere scintilla and that for the other is so overwhelming that no real controversy is raised,[30] or the evidence in support of a given fact is overwhelmingly persuasive, it is not to be maintained that any evidence to the contrary, however inconsequential and improbable, should carry the case to the jury.[31] But in some jurisdictions it has been held that a verdict can be directed only where there is no evidence to sustain the cause of action or defense,[32] or there is no evidence which if believed by the jury might have supported a different verdict,[33] or where as a matter of law the testimony is undisputed, even by indirection,[34] or where, after a consideration of all the evidence most favorable to a party, together with all the reasonable and legitimate inferences which a jury might have drawn therefrom, it can be said that the evidence is clearly insufficient to establish one or more facts essential to that party's cause.[35] A party introducing sufficient evidence to support a verdict is entitled to go to the jury;[36] this applies to a plaintiff who makes out a prima facie case, though defendant's evidence apparently overcomes such prima facie case;[37] but there may be exceptional cases where the evidence introduced by the defendant is of such conclusive and unimpeachable nature as to justify binding instructions in his favor, though plaintiff's evidence standing alone would justify the inferences necessary to support his claim.[38]

Plaintiff is entitled to a directed verdict where he makes out a prima facie case,[39] or proves his case as laid,[40] or where the evidence tending to establish his cause of action is undisputed and ample,[41] making a case that has no matter of fact left open,[42] defendant introducing no evidence,[43] or where defendant's evidence and all reasonable inferences therefrom show no defense.[44] Where a prima facie case is made out by plaintiff,[45] or the evidence fairly[46] tends to show plaintiff's right to recover,[47] or to support his cause of action,[48] or is such that with the inferences that the jury may justifiably draw therefrom, is sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff, it is proper to refuse to direct a verdict for defendant.[49] Verdict should not be directed in favor of a plaintiff who fails to make out a prima facie case,[50] or when the evidence is such as to afford reasonable inference of the existence of any facts unfavorable to a right of recovery by the party asking it,[51] and a directed verdict for plaintiff on one count is improper where a complete defense thereon was shown by the evidence on another count reciting the same cause of action.[52] Where there is evidence to support a counterclaim,[53] or one of defendant's pleas, it is improper to direct a verdict adverse thereto.[54] When issue is joined on an immaterial plea and its averments are proved, the defendant is entitled to the general charge.[55] Though plaintiff's evidence offered no basis for recovery of any certain amount, a verdict should be directed for the indebtedness admitted in defendant's answer.[56] A defendant setting up a cross action in his answer is not entitled to have the facts confessed in the supplemental petition, denying such cross action, treated as evidence in his favor as a basis for directed verdict.[57] Oral evidence in support of an affirmative defense, even if not contradicted, will not authorize a trial court to direct peremptorily a verdict for defendant.[58] It is only when the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusions that the question of negligence is ever considered as one of law for the court.[59] A motion for a directed verdict based upon a part only of the issues involved should be refused.[60] A verdict may be directed upon certain of the counts of a declaration,[61] but the court is not required to direct upon a count against which a demurrer has been sustained.[62] The rule that where there is nothing for a jury to determine except the amount of principal and interest due on a note, the verdict may be directed, does not obtain in Missouri,[63] and it is an invasion of the province of the jury for the court to direct them that they must accept as true and act upon the evidence of witnesses, though such evidence be all one way.[64] In Illinois, a verdict may be directed for defendant, after he has pleaded to the declaration, where each count is so defective that it could not after verdict support a judgment.[65] Where a question is res adjudicata, the court should direct a verdict and not refuse to proceed with the trial.[66] Where the court of last resort has held that plaintiff's petition states a cause of action and his evidence makes a case for the jury, it is not error on a second trial on the same pleadings and evidence to refuse to direct a verdict for defendant.[67] Judgment should not be rendered for defendant on the merits at the close of the opening statement for plaintiff, when such statement, though deficient as to facts necessary to warrant a recovery for plaintiff, does not disclose a complete defense or affirmatively show there was no cause of action.[68] Verdict should not be directed because of defects in an affidavit where such defects have been waived.[69] A directed verdict is of course improper where jurisdiction is lacking; the proceeding should be dismissed.[70] After answer filed joining issue on the facts, a verdict cannot be directed for defendant because of insufficiency of the petition unless so defective that no judgment could properly be entered on a verdict for plaintiff.[71] To direct a verdict for defendant because of plaintiff's failure to produce papers not shown to be relevant to the issue is error.[72]

The motion; its effect.[73]—A motion to direct a verdict admits for the purpose of the motion the truth of the testimony which supports the opponent's case,[74] together with all inferences which may be drawn therefrom,[75] and the untruth of his own allegations which have been denied by the opposing party;[76] the court is bound to assume the facts as testified to by the adverse party,[77] giving his evidence a most favorable construction.[78] A motion for verdict being overruled, the court cannot instruct for the adverse party upon the ground that the motion admitted the truth of the evidence adduced.[79] Where both parties move for a directed verdict, and neither requests a submission to the jury, those facts become undisputed[80] which could operate to deflect or control the question of law,[81] and the trial court may draw all the inferences therefrom that a jury might have drawn.[82] Such a motion constitutes an election that the trial judge decide any questions of fact in the case;[83] and the verdict directed is in effect that of the jury;[84] this rule does not obtain where the party whose request is denied asks to go to the jury upon questions of facts which he specifies.[85] After the court has announced its decision, a party cannot demand submission to the jury;[86] but a request to go to the jury, before a verdict is directed or recorded, is seasonably made.[87] Direction of verdict must be applied for by the party seeking it.[88] In Illinois a request for a directed verdict must be in writing,[89] and it is essential that a motion to instruct be made at the close of all the evidence, in order to preserve for review the question of the sufficiency of the evidence, as a matter of law, to sustain the verdict.[90]

Effect of ruling; appeal; waiver.[91]—Upon the direction of a verdict for plaintiff, the defendant is entitled to have his counterclaim deducted as pleaded or to be allowed to prove his claim, and if established to have it deducted from any amount found due.[92] A motion for a directed verdict presents a question of law only,[93] and is therefore reviewable[94] if an exception be taken,[95] a motion for a new trial not being necessary;[96] but under the Georgia statutes it is not error in any case for the trial judge to refuse to direct a verdict.[97] While the usual and better practice is that a formal verdict in writing be returned by the jury, the absence thereof is not fatal to the validity of the proceedings.[98] The sufficiency of the declaration cannot be raised by request for peremptory charge by a defendant who failed to demur and met the issue in respect to which the pleading failed.[99] The propriety of directing a verdict must be determined in view of the entire evidence,[1] and the facts will be regarded as having been so decided as to sustain the disposition made by the trial judge;[2] he should only determine whether or not there is evidence legally tending to prove the fact affirmed,[3] and is not authorized nor required to weigh the evidence or to determine where the preponderance of evidence lies.[4] On appeal from verdict directed for defendant at close of plaintiff's evidence, the question is whether the court would set aside a verdict for plaintiff on the evidence.[5] When both parties move for a directed verdict, the only questions on review are whether there was any proper evidence to sustain the court's findings and whether the law was correctly applied thereto.[6] In reviewing the propriety of a directed verdict, the appellant is entitled to the benefit of all disputed questions of fact.[7] Where evidence has been actually received and then erroneously stricken out, the court should consider such evidence as should have been allowed to go to the jury in passing upon the correctness of a directed verdict.[8] One may so waive a jury that he cannot complain whether the judge directs a verdict or makes findings and a decision,[9] and it is a general rule that the introduction of evidence by a party after the overruling of his motion for a directed verdict waives any error in such refusal,[10] if the motion is not renewed;[11] but where the strict application of this rule would work injustice, it may be disregarded by an appellate court;[12] waiver does not result from one's subsequently requested instructions which in effect conceded that there was evidence tending to establish the opposite side of the case on the issues presented,[13] and a party may assist the court in the proper submission of the cause without estopping himself from afterward objecting to a verdict against him as unsupported by the evidence.[14] An exception to a refusal of a motion for directed verdict is not waived by the subsequent reopening of the case and the receiving of testimony not material to the determination of the motion for verdict.[15] One cannot complain of a refusal to direct a verdict where by his subsequent instructions the jury was given the determination as issues of fact of all the issues made by the pleadings.[16] An affirmative charge for one party on certain counts of his complaint eliminates from consideration on his appeal all questions arising on the pleadings and on the trial on those counts.[17] Where the appellate court believes that defendant failed to introduce proof of his cross action because of erroneously directed verdict in his favor, the cause will be simply reversed and remanded.[18]

§ 2. Demurrers to evidence.[19]—A motion to exclude all of plaintiff's evidence should be treated as a demurrer to the evidence,[20] and hence is properly overruled where there is substantial evidence tending to establish the allegations of the petition,[21] and to support plaintiff's theory of the case.[22] A demurrer to the evidence of defendant should be overruled where it would sustain even a partial defense to the cause of action.[23]

Effect.[24]—The object of a demurrer to the evidence is to refer to the court the law arising from an admitted fact,[25] and not to bring before the court an investigation of the facts in dispute,[26] for joining issue on a demurrer to the evidence withdraws a case from the jury.[27] A demurrer to the evidence allows full credit to the evidence of the demurree,[28] and admits all the facts directly proved by or that a jury might fairly infer from the evidence,[29] and also that if there be evidence to support it, the finding of the jury would be against him.[30] Inferences most favorable to the demurree will be made in cases in which there is a grave doubt which of two or more inferences shall be deduced.[31]

Waiver.[32]—After an adverse ruling upon a demurrer to an item of evidence, one does not waive his rights by asking instructions which conformed with the view of the court,[33] but a demurrer to a complaint having been waived, the sufficiency of the complaint cannot again be called in question by the objection to the introduction of any testimony.[34]

Effect of ruling.[35]—Sustaining a demurrer to the evidence at law or in equity means that there is some evidence to be weighed, but that as a matter of law, when weighed by the trier of fact, it is not satisfactory.[36]

DISCONTINUANCE, DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT.

38. One who voluntarily intervenes, without being substituted as defendant or notified to defend the action may voluntarily dismiss his petition of intervention, and withdrawing it is equivalent to a dismissal. Guinn v. Iowa & St. L. R. Co., 125 Iowa, 301, 101 N. W. 94. Where suit is brought against defendants who are only jointly liable, the plaintiff cannot dismiss as to one and proceed against the other except as provided by statute (Charles Lippincott & Co. v. Behre affirmative relief has been demanded by defendant or an intervener.[40] Allowance, however, is discretionary,[41] and is generally regulated by statute.[42] A suit by relators, in the name of the state and the attorney general, may be dismissed on the petition of the attorney general without the consent of the relators.[43] A "dismissal without prejudice" is a practice not proper at law.[44]

If affirmative relief is demanded[45] against plaintiff, he may not dismiss the entire cause,[46] and the taking of nonsuit by plaintiff does not prevent a defendant from obtaining judgment upon his cross complaint.[47]

When right to voluntary nonsuit is lost.[48]—After the case has been finally submitted,[49] or the court announces its decision, the plaintiff cannot dismiss his action to prevent a judgment;[50] but a case is so in the control of the trial judge pending the term that a motion of discontinuance as to one defendant, made at the hearing of a motion for new trial, is timely, though verdict and judgment have been entered,[51] and in Illinois one may on appeal from justice to circuit court abandon his proceeding

[Ga.] 50 S. E. 467), but where the defendants are sued jointly but the proofs or pleadings show there is no joint liability, the plaintiff may dismiss as to those who are not proper parties to the action (Id.). Proper to allow voluntary nonsuit where co-plaintiff was improperly joined. Pritchard v. Mitchell [N. C.] 51 S. E. 783.

39. A plaintiff has the right to dismiss his action at any time [Code Civ. Proc. § 581] (Alpers v. Bliss, 145 Cal. 565, 79 P. 171), before trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 1004] (State v. District Court of Eighth Judicial Dist. [Mont.] 79 P. 546), or if the case be tried by the judge, at any time before his decision is announced (Smith v. King of Arizona Min. & Mill. Co. [Ariz.] 80 P. 357), or filed (Paltzer v. Johnston, 114 Ill. App. 493), though reduced to writing (Halstead v. Sigler [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 257). Dismissal may be at any time before the jury retire. Shannon's Code, §§ 4689-4691. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Sansom, 113 Tenn. 683, 84 S. W. 615; Halstead v. Sigler [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 257; Lay v. Collins [Ark.] 86 S. W. 281; Smith v. Bliss, 145 Cal. 565, 79 P. 171. An action may be dismissed notwithstanding the filing of a cross complaint, where at the time of dismissal the cross complaint had been stricken from the files, within the authority of the court. Id. It is a general rule of equity practice that where no cross bill has been filed, complainant has the right at any time before final decree to dismiss his bill upon payment of costs (Wilcoxon v. Wilcoxon, 111 Ill. App. 90), but in Florida, after a cause has been set for final hearing, the complainant has no absolute right to a dismissal without prejudice, that resting in the discretion of the court (Lykes v. Beauchamp [Fla.] 38 So. 603).

41. The rule that a chancellor may at his discretion refuse to allow complainant to dismiss when such action is likely to work a hardship to defendant is not followed in Illinois except as to accountings. Wilcoxon v. Wilcoxon, 111 Ill. App. 90. Refusal to allow withdrawal of juror for surprise on exclusion of important documents for failure to prove foreign law held abuse of discretion. Pirrung v. Supreme Council of Catholic Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 93 N. Y. S. 575.

42. Under the New York statute providing that where a party has an attorney in an action, he cannot appear to act in person where the attorney may appear or act, a stipulation of discontinuance signed by the party can be effectual only by an application to the court on notice to the attorney or when the party would have a right to the discontinuance regardless of stipulation. Exchange Bank [Ga.] 50 S. E. 357. It is a general rule that a demand for affirmative relief against a plaintiff, when properly pleaded, will protect the rights of defendant as against a voluntary dismissal by plaintiff. Lay v. 49. Argument on a demurrer to the evidence is such a final submission to the court as deprives a plaintiff of his right to voluntary dismissal in Tennessee. Shannon's Code, §§ 4689-4691. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Sansom, 113 Tenn. 683, 84 S. W. 615.

50. Grim v. Griffith, 34 Ind. App. 559, 73 N. E. 197. In Illinois a chancellor, after directing the preparation of a decree dismissing a cross bill for want of equity, may allow the cross complainant to dismiss without prejudice. Paltzer v. Johnston, 213 Ill. 338, 72 N. E. 702.

for an account and prove any indebtedness of defendant to him.[52] In Montana a plaintiff cannot dismiss after a motion for judgment on the pleadings on plaintiff's failure to reply to an answer alleging new matter has been signed and submitted.[53]

Discontinuance by operation of law.[54]—If a plaintiff demurs or replies over to a proper plea answering a part only of the plaintiff's cause of action, without "signing judgment," an hiatus and consequent discontinuance take place.[55]

Effect of discontinuance.[56]—Voluntary dismissal by an attorney acting beyond his authority does not necessarily bind his client, who may, within a reasonable time, have the cause reinstated according to the sound discretion of the court,[57] and a discontinuance obtained by fraud may be set aside on motion and proper showing.[58] Dismissal as to one of two joint tort feasors as an improper or unnecessary party does not discharge plaintiff's claim against the other defendant, if he is otherwise liable,[59] but under the Alabama statute the striking out of a party defendant who has been served with process can only be done after a misjoinder is shown,[60] and a discontinuance as to one defendant in such a case without a showing of misjoinder amounts to a discontinuance of the action unless waived by the defendant.[61] An agreement by the parties to an action, waiving a jury and consenting to an assessment of damages on one count, constitutes an abandonment as to the other count.[62] Every dismissal of a bill in equity upon final hearing is not necessarily an adjudication upon the merits,[63] but if the cause is at issue and on final hearing, a dismissal even on complainant's motion is deemed to be upon the merits,[64] unless the order shows it to have been upon other grounds, or without prejudice.[65] The withdrawal of one who voluntarily intervened and afterward dismissed his petition of intervention terminates the jurisdiction of the court, and no costs can be taxed against him,[66] but one discontinuing his action of garnishment before the filing of the answer may in Texas be taxed with the costs of preparing such answer if the discontinuance is made with actual knowledge that the answer is ready for filing.[67]

Retraxit.[68]

§ 2. Involuntary dismissal or nonsuit.[69]—Nonsuit is a name given to a judgment against a plaintiff when he is unable to prove his case or refuses or neglects to proceed to trial after the case has been put at issue.[70] In Georgia, a justice of the peace having on the trial before him rendered a judgment for the plaintiff, has not the power, on the trial before a jury, to grant a nonsuit.[71]

Grounds in general.[72]—A motion for nonsuit is in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence,[73] and cannot be based on the ground that the complaint fails to state a cause of action.[74] Dismissal may be granted in a proper case for failure to comply with an order for security for costs,[75] or where plaintiff's opening statement shows

75. Failure to file security for costs is no ground for dismissal as against defend-no ground for relief.[76] By statute in Montana an action may be dismissed by the court when after verdict or final submission the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand and have the same entered for six months.[77]

Want of jurisdiction.[78]—Proceedings will be dismissed where there is an entire want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter,[79] but a suit improperly brought in equity should not, on that account, be dismissed, but should be transferred to the law court.[80] When a preliminary injunction is dissolved before final hearing, a motion to dismiss the bill should be allowed where there is no cross bill on file and the answer asks no affirmative relief.[81]

Defect in pleadings; parties.[82]—A motion to dismiss is the equivalent of a general demurrer and may be made at the trial term if the petition is fatally defective,[83] but it cannot reach mere defects in pleadings, such as may be cured by appropriate amendment.[84] A petition which sets forth in substance a good cause of action is not subject to such a motion,[85] but dismissal is proper where the cause of action relied on at the close of the evidence is not set forth in the complaint,[86] though in Washington a complaint which shows a cause of action in any form will not be dismissed, even if failing to state facts to warrant the equitable relief prayed.[87] A motion to dismiss, in the nature of a special demurrer, must be filed at the appearance term.[88] A court of general jurisdiction has power on its own motion to dismiss an action as frivolous where the pleadings present no cause of action recognized by the law;[89] but is not authorized to dismiss a case because the complaint is lengthy and cannot be understood without an adjournment to read it.[90] The court may refuse to dismiss for failure to serve defendant with a copy of an amended petition when the court's order in regard thereto was fully complied with.[91] Where there is no denial of substantial rights, an order granting leave to discontinue an action prematurely brought will be affirmed.[92] A motion to dismiss for want of a demand before suit brought was properly overruled where not made until after the filing of a general demurrer to the petition.[93] In actions where a substitution of plaintiffs is not allow-ants who had answered. Randolph v. Cottage Hospital of Des Moines [Iowa] 103 N. W. 157. Failure to pay the costs of a former suit brought upon the same cause of action is not ground for dismissing one subsequently brought. Davenport, etc., R. Co. v. De Yaeger, 112 Ill. App. 537. The Texas statute providing for dismissal for failure to give security for costs is not mandatory so that the court must of its own motion dismiss if security be not furnished. Gilmer v. Beauchamp [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 907.

76. Shows affirmatively that there is no cause of action (Brooks v. McCabe [Wash.] 80 P. 1004; Miner v. Hopkinton [N. H.] 60 A. 433), or that there is a complete defense thereto (Brooks v. McCabe [Wash.] 80 P. 1004), or insufficient facts being stated, it is expressly admitted that these are the only facts plaintiff expects or intends to prove (Id.). A court is not authorized to take the case from the jury, or render judgment, upon the opening statement for plaintiff, unless some fact is clearly stated, or some admission clearly made which cannot be cured by evidence and hence necessarily and absolutely precludes recovery. Brashear v. Rabenstein [Kan.] 80 P. 950. Where a complaint states a good cause of action, a motion to dismiss on the opening of counsel will not be granted unless it appear that the averments of the complaint were limited to particular matter upon which no recovery could be had. ed, a nonsuit is proper if there is no proof of damage to the original plaintiffs.[94] Want of necessary parties must be pleaded in abatement to be a good ground for dismissal.[95] A defendant whose interests are not injuriously affected thereby cannot complain of the dismissal as to a co-defendant who has died since the institution of the suit.[96]

Failure of prosecution.[97]—Abandonment,[98] laches,[99] failure to prosecute,[1] and to comply with conditional orders,[2] are recognized grounds for dismissal.

Nonsuit for failure of proof.[3]—A nonsuit is proper where the evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain the cause of action,[4] or the plaintiff has discontinued as to the only one of several defendants against whom he in fact had a cause of action,[5] or when a plaintiff suing for a money recovery fails to show the value of the property involved,[6] or the damages sustained.[7] When plaintiff makes out a prima facie case,[8] or the evi-

Act 107, p. 155, of 1898. Lockhart v. Lockhart, 113 La. 872, 37 So. 860.

99. To dismiss a case for laches is an abuse of discretion where defendant had no defense on the merits and never asked for a trial. Merced Bank v. Price, 145 Cal. 436, 78 P. 949. The dismissal of a case as barred by the statute of limitations, without prejudice to parties petitioning for its revival, is not an abuse of the chancellor's discretion in Mississippi. Farmer v. Allen [Miss.] 38 So. 38.

1. It is a general rule that an action must be dismissed upon the failure of plaintiff to appear upon the return or adjourned day (Consumers' Park Brewing Co. v. Greenberger, 94 N. Y. S. 38; Elfenbein v. Rosenthal, 94 N. Y. S. 40; Clement v. Breaux [La.] 38 So. 900), and judgment rendered as in case of nonsuit (Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Patting, 112 Ill. App. 4). It is the duty of a plaintiff to be present when his case is called, and in the absence of his attorney to ask for postponement. Harrison v. Oak Cliff Land Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 821. Under the New York practice, until the justice has indorsed the dismissal upon the summons, the cause may be heard if the plaintiff appears. Elfenbein v. Rosenthal, 94 N. Y. S. 40. Inexcusable delay and gross negligence in the prosecution of a cause are good grounds for dismissal. Peddecord v. Vennigerholz, 212 Ill. 612, 72 N. E. 819. Facts held to show such a failure to prosecute as justified a dismissal. Harrison v. Oak Cliff Land Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 821. An appellate court having no jurisdiction of the appellee has no authority to dismiss the suit for want of prosecution. Hecht v. Franklin, 113 Ill. App. 467. Twenty years delay in prosecuting suit and resumption of prosecution only when certain speculative interests obtained control held ground for dismissal. Hoffmeister v. Renton Co-op. Coal Co. Failure to amend within the time granted after the sustaining of a formal demurrer. Haskins v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 51. Neglect to amend for 30 days after the sustaining of a demurrer. Saddlemire v. Stockton Sav. & Loan Soc., 144 Cal. 650, 79 P. 381. Failure of an appellant to print his abstract and brief while a motion to dismiss is pending does not show a failure to prosecute with reasonable diligence. Cooke v. McQuarters [S. D.] 103 N. W. 385. It is error to dismiss a bill merely because complainant failed to pay the master's fees taxed upon a reference regarding a preliminary injunction. Symms v. Chicago, 115 Ill. App. 169.

dence is conflicting,[9] it is for the jury,[10] though the court might deem it its duty to set aside a verdict for plaintiff as against the weight of evidence.[11] Judgment of nonsuit cannot be based on extrinsic facts, such as judgment in another case not in the record.[12] Incompetent evidence admitted without objection cannot be disregarded on a motion for nonsuit, but must be left to the jury.[13] In a joint action against several defendants, some of whom successfully pleaded the statute of limitations, a judgment dismissing the action as to all will not be disturbed.[14]

Motion for nonsuit; effect.[15]—Under a statute requiring a judge, on the trial of a question of fact before the court, to state in writing his conclusions of law and of fact separately, a motion for nonsuit at the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony and a judgment dismissing the complaint is not proper practice.[16] A motion to dismiss on the ground that there was no evidence to establish damages under the rule of law applicable to the facts is not sufficient to raise the question that there was no sufficient proof on which prospective profits could be estimated.[17] The motion should be timely made,[18] and by failing to move for a nonsuit one concedes that there is a question for the court or jury to decide as between the parties.[19] As to whether a motion for

E. 573), so with a dismissal before plaintiff has rested, having presented evidence as to all essential facts but one (Tiger v. Interurban St. R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 395). In proceedings to determine a disputed boundary, held, that plaintiff having testified that he was in possession of "land on plat blue, 1-2-3-4 to 1," it would be presumed, in the absence of any map, that he referred to the land described in the complaint, and hence that it was error to grant a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff had not shown ownership. 9. Lewis v. Erie R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 765. That the testimony of plaintiff's witness is conflicting does not justify a nonsuit, there being some evidence to support the cause of action sued upon. Hopper v. Smith, 70 N. J. 403, 57 A. 389.

10. In Kentucky a scintilla of evidence supporting plaintiff's claims requires a submission to the jury. McFarland's Adm'r v. Harbison & Walker Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 746, 82 S. W. 430. It has been held that an order of nonsuit is proper only when plaintiff's evidence, giving it the most favorable inference reasonably possible in his favor, does not tend to establish his cause of action (Hupfer v. National Distilling Co., 119 Wis. 417, 96 N. W. 809; Daniel v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 136 N. C. 517, 48 S. E. 816), and whether trial be with or without a jury, the court cannot dismiss an action without verdict or findings of fact, because of failure to establish a cause of action, unless the evidence is such as to require a verdict or finding as a matter of law, against the plaintiff (Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Jones [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1017; Ness v. March [Minn.] 104 N. W. 242). A motion for nonsuit should be denied unless the evidence wholly fails to establish a right of recovery. Small v. Harrington [Idaho] 79 P. 461. By statute in Colorado an action may be dismissed on motion of defendant for a nonsuit when the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury. Mills' Ann. Code, § 166. Messenger v. Woge [Colo. App.] 78 P. 314. Though plaintiff's evidence establish his own noncompliance with certain conditions, a nonsuit is improper, for he might show a waiver by defendant. Pearlstine v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 70 S. C. 75, 49 S. E. 4. In an action for damages from negligence and willful misconduct, it is proper to refuse a nonsuit on the whole case, if there is evidence of negligence, though none of willfulness. Machen v. Western Union Telegraph Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 697. Upon disputed facts there should be a judgment on the merits and a nonsuit is improper. Globe Lithographing Co. v. Bimberg, 92 N. Y. S. 768.

18. A motion to dismiss a suit after filing of a praecipe, but before service of summons or a general appearance on the part of defendant, is premature (Collier v. Gray, 105 Ill. App. 485); but a motion to dismiss a case on appeal, after the dismissal of the appeal, is too late (Blair v. Coakley, 136 N. C. 405, 48 S. E. 804). In the absence of a statute limiting the time, it is within the sound discretion of the court to entertain a motion to dismiss a complaint in intervention, though made several months after leave to file and at a subsequent term of court. Ainsworth v. Evans [Ariz.] 80 P. 344. Where the judgment on a motion to dismiss was an interlocutory order, the court is not thereby precluded from entertaining a like motion at a subsequent term. Hilton v. Consumers' Can. Co., 103 Va. 255, 48 S. E. 899.

19. McDowell v. Syracuse Land & Steamboat Co., 44 Misc. 627, 90 N. Y. S. 148.

nonsuit is waived by the moving party putting in evidence after the overruling of such motion, the courts are divided in opinion.[20] An exception to an order overruling a motion to dismiss on the ground of failure of proof, taken at the close of plaintiff's evidence, is waived by failure to renew the motion at the close of the case, or to request the court to direct a verdict, or to except to the charge.[21] A motion for nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence,[22] and every legitimate inference of fact which may be drawn from it;[23] but raises a question of law as to its sufficiency,[24] and a motion for nonsuit upon the opening statement and admission of plaintiff concedes the truth of all plaintiff's averments.[25]

Effect of dismissal or nonsuit.[26]—The dismissal of an action at law does not bar another suit for the same cause of action,[27] unless rendered on the merits;[28] but an order that an action be dismissed is an order for final judgment,[29] and is reviewable.[30] A defendant cannot complain that plaintiff did not formally dismiss as to a co-defendant where there is an abandonment of the suit as to such co-defendant by leave of the court.[31] One in whose behalf an action was not commenced has no standing in court to object to an order of dismissal.[32] Motions for reinstatement are addressed

20. Cain v. Gold Mountain Min. Co., 27 Mont. 529, 71 P. 1004. Defendant assumes the risk of supplying the deficiency in plaintiff's testimony, thereby curing any error in overruling the motion for nonsuit. Id. Prayers to take a case from the jury at the close of plaintiff's evidence are not reviewable on appeal where the defendant proceeded with his testimony after an adverse ruling. Keyser v. Warfield [Md.] 59 A. 189. An exception for refusal to nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence is waived by the introduction of evidence by defendant without renewing the motion at the close of all the evidence. Earnhardt v. Clement, 137 N. C. 91, 49 S. E. 49; Blalock v. Clark, 137 N. C. 140, 49 S. E. 88; McDowell v. Syracuse Land & Steamboat Co., 44 Misc. 627, 90 N. Y. S. 148.

E. 519; Cox v. Hawke, 93 N. Y. S. 1117), and when so considered, if there is a scintilla of evidence tending to prove his contentions, the case should go to the jury (Craft v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 136 N. C. 49, 48 S. E. 519).

24. Brophy v. Idaho Produce & Provision Co. [Mont.] 78 P. 493. While the rule of law is the same, the practical restrictions upon the court are even greater in the face of a motion for nonsuit than they are upon a motion to direct a verdict. Hupfer v. National Distilling Co., 119 Wis. 417, 96 N. W. 809.

27. Durham v. Stubbings, 111 Ill. App. 10. Dismissal for failure to file security for costs and rendition of judgment against such party for costs is not a judgment on the merits nor a final adjudication on plaintiff's right to maintain an action. Randolph v. Cottage Hospital of Des Moines [Iowa] 103 N. W. 157. Dismissal for failure to furnish additional security for costs is a nonsuit under the Missouri statute permitting a nonsuited party to commence a new action within a year. Rev. St. 1899, § 4285. Wetmore v. Crouch [Mo.] 87 S. W. 954. By statute in Arkansas one who suffers a nonsuit on an insurance policy may begin a new action within a year, notwithstanding a provision in the policy to the contrary. Kirby's Dig. § 4381. In New York a final judgment of dismissal either before or after trial may prevent a new action on the same cause of action if it expressly appears by the judgment roll that it is rendered on the merits. Code Civ. Proc. § 1209. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Campbell Stores, 101 App. Div. 400, 92 N. Y. S. 208. In New York a dismissal after all the evidence is received is equivalent to a nonsuit. Id. Where a decision is in effect a nonsult only for failure of proof, a judgment of dismissal on the merits is unauthorized. Weeks v. Van Ness, 93 N. Y. S. 337; Hedeberg v. Manhattan R. Co., 91 N. Y. to the sound discretion of the trial judge;[33] on a motion for dismissal, a direction to return a "verdict of nonsuit" is erroneous in form only.[34]

Practice on appeal.[35]—Refusal to dismiss,[36] or nonsuit,[37] or to set aside a dismissal,[38] being discretionary, is not ordinarily reviewable;[39] but orders granting such motions, since they have effect to determine the action, are generally reviewable either separately, or on appeal from final judgment,[40] proper exceptions having been saved, and the question properly presented in the reviewing court.[41] In Montana an order sustaining a motion to dismiss an appeal from a justice is not appealable to the supreme court.[42] On review of an order of dismissal or nonsuit, plaintiff is entitled to the view most favorable to his statement and evidence.[43] On review of a dismissal for the nonappearance of plaintiff, the only questions to be considered are the

A wise discretion should be exercised in allowing the reinstatement of a case dismissed for want of prosecution, where it appears that plaintiff's absence was due to an unavoidable casualty. 41. A judgment dismissing a complaint on the merits, which is supported by credible evidence on one ground, cannot be attacked as erroneous on some other ground. Laws 1902, p. 1561, c. 580. Mashkowitz v. O'Connell, 91 N. Y. S. 115. Under some circumstances the propriety of a dismissal may be reviewed, though the printed case contains no certificate that it embraces all the evidence and no exception to the dismissal or request to go to the jury. Plaintiff immediately moved for a new trial on the minutes, and excepted to a denial thereof and entered a formal order of denial from which he appeals as well as from the judgment. Boehringer v. Hirsch, 86 N. Y. S. 726. Where a motion for nonsuit was decided after conclusion of the trial, and was evidenced by a formal entry at a time when there was no opportunity to take an exception, the appellate court will review the judgment as though there had been formal exception. regularity of the appeal and whether plaintiff was in default.[44] Where a motion to dismiss a complaint was based on several grounds, and the order of dismissal does not disclose the ground on which it was made, it will be sustained if any ground of the motion was good.[45]

DISCOVERY AND INSPECTION.

This article does not deal with the taking of depositions for use as evidence at the trial,[1] nor with examinations of parties during the trial,[2] nor during proceedings supplementary to execution,[3] nor with the power of a court to compel a contumacious witness to answer.[4]

§ 1. Discovery in equity.[5]—Equity permits a suit for discovery and relief,[6] and this practice exists in the Federal courts.[7] A bill cannot be maintained for the sole purpose of a discovery,[8] nor to fish for information,[9] except to ascertain the proper persons to make defendants in a proposed suit at law.[10] A bill by simple contract creditors for the discovery of assets need not allege that the alleged concealed assets are not exempt.[11]

§ 2. Production and inspection of books and papers or survey of property.

78 P. 1072). A judgment of dismissal at the close of plaintiff's case requires the court on appeal to find the most favorable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Edwards v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 43 Misc. 354, 87 N. Y. S. 507. On appeal from a dismissal on the complaint and plaintiff's opening the facts alleged in the complaint and opening together with every inference that can be fairly drawn from them must be assumed to be true. Oakeshott v. Smith, 93 N. Y. S. 659. On defendant's appeal from an order setting aside a nonsuit, plaintiff is entitled to the most favorable inferences deducible from the evidence, and every disputed fact must be treated as established in his favor. 7. McMullen Lumber Co. v. Strother [C. C. A.] 136 F. 295. State statutes authorizing the examination de bene esse of the defendant, and the compulsory production of books and papers in his possession or under his control, are aids to the methods of procedure in the Federal courts in actions at law, but are not entire substitutes for bills of discovery and relief in equity in Federal practice. Id.

NOTE. Distinction between bill of discovery and bill for discovery and relief: There is a distinction between a bill filed for discovery merely and a bill filed for discovery and relief. The former is auxiliary to a trial at law or in equity. The latter, although a bill of discovery, withdraws the case from the legal forum, and brings it for a decision before a court of equity. Bell v. Pomeroy, McLean, 57, Fed. Cas. No. 1263.—Fletcher Eq. Pl. & Pr. § 805. See this work for a full discussion of the law and procedure relative to both bills, including forms.

9. Where a creditor objecting to a bankrupt's discharge files an amended specification, alleging on oath, as positive facts, different acts of the bankrupt, any one of which, if true, would prevent his discharge, such creditor is not entitled to a discovery of certain books belonging to a partnership existing between a witness and the bankrupt's son to prove such acts prior to the giving of evidence by the creditor himself. Nature of remedy and right thereto.[12]—The Federal courts have authority in actions at law to require the production of the books and writings of the adverse party, so that the cause may be prepared for trial.[13] The production of books and papers will not be ordered unless their production is indispensably necessary,[14] or is provided for by contract between the parties;[15] hence, in the absence of any fiduciary relations between the parties, such production will not be ordered where the books and papers can be obtained by subpoena duces tecum.[16] A corporation ought not to be required to produce its books upon the examination of one of its officers before trial, to enable him to refresh his memory therefrom while on the stand, unless he requires their assistance in order to testify concerning the matters in regard to which he is to be examined.[17] Where the rights of plaintiff will be preserved by authorizing an inspection of the books and papers at the place of business of defendant in ordinary course during business hours, the order should so provide.[18]

Proceedings.[19]—The notice to defendant must specifically designate the books and papers desired to be examined,[20] and the order must authorize such examination.[21] In New York an order to produce documents for inspection must be made on petition,[22] and a justice in one district has no authority to grant ex parte an application for the exhibition of books and papers in an action in another district.[23] Statutory requirements must be complied with.[24] Laches may defeat an application for the modification of the order.[25] An order granting or refusing an order for inspection is not appealable.[26]

case,[28] the test being the pertinency of the particular interrogatory to the issue in hand.[29] A party may be examined not only in regard to the facts necessary to establish an affirmative cause of action, but as to all matters material to the issues.[30] One cannot be examined for the purpose of enabling a plaintiff to frame a complaint in an action not yet commenced,[31] nor to enable him to examine into the defense it is proposed to make.[32] An examination will not lie to ascertain what is a matter of public record.[33] Interrogatories directed to corporations will be allowed to stand where to treat them otherwise would be to encourage technical pitfalls.[34] In a suit for an accounting, the fact that a trial of the issues prior to the interlocutory judgment will result in disclosing to the court all the facts necessary for a final judgment is no ground for refusing to allow an examination of defendant before trial.[35] Where interrogatories are submitted to a corporation, it is the latter's duty to select an agent familiar with the facts to answer the questions.[36] Interrogatories must be answered without evasion,[37] and an answer not being explicit, the remedy is by motion for a more explicit answer.[38] The giving of evasive answers to ex parte interrogatories is not ground for taking the interrogatories as confessed, there being no deliberate refusal to answer.[39] In most states statutes prescribe matters that cannot be inquired into.[40] In Massachusetts defendant refusing to answer, plaintiff is entitled to the oath of the party interrogated that the matters inquired

39. So held where notary insisted upon immediate answers and the party interrogated explained that he desired time to consult his attorney, who was then otherwise busily engaged. Baldwin v. Richardson [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 746. Code, § 3610, authorizing the entry of judgment for failure to answer interrogatories sworn to by the interrogator to be within the personal knowledge of the opposite party, does not authorize the summary entry of judgment because of an indefinite or unsatisfactory answer to interrogatories so sworn to; especially in the case of a county as a party, which could only answer by its officers and agents, who might not be able to respond from personal knowledge. The examination of a defendant, taken before trial, is not to be taken as part of his answer for the purpose of passing on a demurrer.[47]

§ 4. Physical examination to prepare for trial.[48]—There is a conflict as to whether a trial court can compel a plaintiff to submit to a physical examination by physicians appointed by the court.[49] In New York the subject is regulated by statute.[50]

NOTE. Compulsory physical examination in personal injury cases (Supplementing the note on the same subject in 1 C. L. p. 936): The first reported case in which the power of the court to compel such examination is asserted is Walsh v. Sayre, 52 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 334, decided by the New York superior court in 1868. This was an action for damages for malpractice, and upon the analogy to cases of mayhem, divorce on the ground of impotency and cases of controversies between a widow, claiming to be pregnant by the decedent, and other heirs of the estate, wherein such examinations had been ordered, it was held that a court of law could compel the plaintiff to submit to a physical examination. A leading case on the subject is Schroeder v. R. Co., 47 Iowa, 375, decided in 1877. Mention is not made of the New York case cited above, the opinion stating that there were no precedents at the time of rendition. The court held that the trial court had the power to compel the plaintiff to submit to such an examination. These cases were followed in the cases of Turnpike Co. v. Baily, 37 Ohio St. 104; Railroad Co. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 466, 44 Am. Rep. 659; White v. Railroad Co., 61 Wis. 536, 21 N. W. 524, 50 Am. Rep. 154; Railroad Co. v. Childress, 82 Ga. 719, 9 S. E. 602, 14 Am. St. Rep. 189, 3 L. R. A. 808 (In this case Georgia Code, § 206 is referred to, but the power is asserted upon the authority of the cases herein considered above); Sibley v. Smith, 46 Ark. 275, 55 Am. Rep. 584; Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 54 N. W. 757, 35 Am. St. Rep. 561, 19 L. R. A. 641; Belt E. L. Co. v. Allen, 102 Ky. 551, 44 S. W. 89, 80 Am. St. Rep. 374; Lane v. Railroad Co., 21 Wash. 119, 57 P. 367, 75 Am. St. Rep. 821, 46 L. R. A. 153; Brown v. Railroad Co., 12 N. D. 61, 95 N. W. 153, 102 Am. St. Rep. 564; Hatfield v. R. Co., 33 Minn. 130, 22 N. W. 176, 53 Am. Rep. 14 (dicta); the same rule has been acquiesced in by the lower courts of Pennsylvania (see former note, 1 C. L. 936) and the case of Bryant v. Stilwell, 24 Pa. 317, is cited in Sibley v. Smith, 46 Ark. 275, 55 Am. Rep. 584, as holding the same view. The first case to deny the right was Loyd v. Railroad Co., 53 Mo. 509, decided in 1873; the same view was upheld by other courts in the following cases: Parker v. Enslow, 102 Ill. 272, 40 Am. Rep. 588; Kern v. Bridwell, 119 Ind. 226, 21 N. E. 664, 12 Am. St. Rep. 409. In 1891 the question came before the supreme court of the United States in Railroad Co. v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 250, 35 Law. Ed. 734, and it was there held by a divided court—seven to two—that the power does not reside in the Federal trial courts. As shown in a former note, 1 C. L. 396, this decision was influenced by a Federal statute. These cases have been followed in City of Kingfisher v. Altizer, 13 Okl. 121, 74 P. 107; Austin & N. W. Railway Co. v. Cluck [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 569; Stack v. Railroad Co., 177 Mass. 155, 58 N. E. 686, 83 Am. St. Rep. 269, 52 L. R. A. 328; and May v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Mont.] 81 P. 328.

The foregoing review shows the decisions of courts upon the first presentation of this question to them. The case of Walsh v. Sayre was followed in Shaw v. Van Rensselaer, 60 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 143; but in 1891 the question came before the court of appeals of New York in McQuigan v. Railway Co., 129 N. Y. 50, 29 N. E. 235, 26 Am. St. Rep. 507, 14 L. R. A. 466, and Walsh v. Sayre, 52 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 334, and Shaw v. Van Rensselaer, 60 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 143 were overruled. The McQuigan Case was followed in Cole v. Fall Brook Coal Co., 159 N. Y. 59, 53 N. E. 670, decided in 1899. The legislature of New York, however, circumvented the effect of these last decisions by enacting a statute directly conferring upon trial courts the power to make and enforce such an order. In Shepard v. Railway Co., 85 Mo. 629, 55 Am. Rep. 390, decided in 1885, a view contrary to that expressed in Lloyd's Case is intimated by the supreme court of Missouri, and in Sidekum v. Railway Co., 93 Mo. 400, 4 S. W. 701, 3 Am. St. Rep. 549, a decision was rendered which had the effect of directly reversing the Lloyd Case; and the Sidekum Case was followed in Owens v. Ry. Co., 95 Mo. 169, 8 S. W. 350, 6 Am. St. Rep. 39. The Schroeder Case was followed by the supreme court of Iowa in Hall v. Manson, 99 Iowa, 698, 68 N. W. 922, 34 L. R. A. 207; and Railway Co. v. Thul was approved and followed in Ottawa v. Gilliland, 63 Kan. 165, 65 P. 252, 88 Am. St. Rep. 232, and again in Railway Co. v. Palmore, 68 Kan. 545, 75 P. 509, 64 L. R. A. 90. White v. Milwaukee R. Co. was followed by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in O'Brien v. La Crosse, 99 Wis. 421, 75 N. W. 81, 40 L. R. A. 831. Sibley v. Smith, above, was followed in Railway Co. v. Dobbins, 60 Ark. 481, 30 S. W. 887, 31 S. W. 147. The supreme court of Indiana has been most uncertain in its treatment of the question. Kern v. Bridwell, above, was decided in May 1889; but in November of the same year, in Hess v. Lowrey, 122 Ind. 225, 23 N. E. 156, 17 Am. St. Rep. 355, 7 L. R. A. 90, a contrary doctrine is announced. In 1891, in Railroad Co. v. Newmeyer, 129 Ind. 401, 28 N. E. 860, the announcement in Hess v. Lowrey is pronounced dictum, and the authority is again distinctly denied. But the Newmeyer Case is distinctly reversed in South Bend v. Turner, 156 Ind. 418, 60 N. E. 271, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200, 54 L. R. A. 396, and, so far as we are aware, the last decision from that court asserts the power. Belt E. L. Co. v. Allen is affirmed in Distilling Co. v. Riggs, 104 Ky. 1, 45 S. W. 99, and in Railroad Co. v. Simpson, 111 Ky. 754, 64 S. W. 733. In Wanek v. Winona, 78 Minn. 98, 80 N. W. 851, 79 Am. St. Rep. 354, 46 L. R. A. 448, decided in 1899, the dictum in the Hatfield Case is declared to be the law in Minnesota. Parker v. Enslow is followed in Railway Co. v. Rice, 144 Ill. 227, 33 N. E. 951, and in Railway Co. v. Story, 104 Ill. App. 132. In Railway Co. v. Underwood, 64 Tex. 463, and Railway Co. v. Johnson, 72 Tex. 95, 10 S. W. 325, the court, without deciding, intimated that the trial courts in Texas had the power to compel such examination; but in Railway Co. v. Cluck [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 569, decided in 1903, the question is squarely met and decided, and the authority denied. This last case is affirmed and the doctrine reannounced upon appeal to the supreme court of Texas, in Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Cluck, [Tex.] 77 S. W. 403, 64 L. R. A. 494. The question has been before the supreme court of Nebraska, but not decided, in Railroad Co. v. Finlayson, 16 Neb. 578, 20 N. W. 860, 49 Am. Rep. 724, in Stuart v. Havens, 17 Neb. 211, 22 N. W. 419; Ellsworth v. Fairbury, 41 Neb. 881, 60 N. W. 336, and Chadron v. Glover, 43 Neb. 732, 62 N. W. 62. The syllabus to the decision in Mills v. Railway Co. [Del.] 40 A. 1114, announces that the superior court of Delaware denies the power, but there is nothing in the body of the opinion with reference to the question. The case of Carrico v. Railroad Co., 39 W. Va. 86, 19 S. E. 571, 24 L. R. A. 50, is frequently cited in these opinions, but the question is not decided by the West Virginia court at all. The Federal and territorial courts have followed the decision in the Botsford Case, in Railway Co. v. Griffin [C. C. A.] 80 F. 278, and in the Oklahoma case cited.

If the last announcements of these several courts may be taken to indicate the law in their respective states, a review of the decisions discloses that the power of trial courts to compel such examination is asserted in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Iowa, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Washington and Wisconsin, and denied in the Federal and territorial courts and in Illinois, Massachusetts, and Texas, and was denied in New York until specifically granted by direct legislative enactment.

The bare assertion that trial courts possess this power, in the absence of any legislation, and without common-law precedents, has led to the greatest possible confusion among the decisions of the very courts asserting it. (1) What is the source of the power? (2) To what extent may it be carried? (3) May the defendant demand the order as a matter of right? And (4) how will the court enforce obedience to its order? Singularly enough, the first of these questions appears to have received little or no consideration.

(1) In Railroad Co. v. Childress, 82 Ga. 719, 9 S. E. 602, 14 Am. St. Rep. 189, 3 L. R. A. 808, the section of the Georgia Code above is quoted; but further reference is not made to this provision of the law and it can hardly be presumed that the decision proceeds upon the assumption that the source of the power is the statute quoted. That section adds nothing to the powers already possessed by courts of general jurisdiction, for it is merely declaratory of the common law. In some of the opinions it is said that the power is one inherent in the trial courts. In Graves v. Battle Creek, decided in 1893,

DISORDERLY CONDUCT.[51]

Disorderly conduct as defined by the statutes of various states includes not only the common-law offense of breach of the peace,[52] but a number of specifically prohibited disorderly acts, such as drunkenness in public places,[53] shooting on a public street,[54] or use of language calculated to provoke a breach of the peace.[55] It is sometimes required that some person be in fact disturbed.[56]

it is said, "It is true that the rule is one of modern growth." Most of the courts content themselves with the bare assertion of the power, without any discussion of its origin.

(2) If the plaintiff may be compelled to submit to a physical examination, is the authority to order it an absolute or only a qualified one? May the plaintiff be compelled to submit to the administration to him of anaesthetics or drugs by which he loses consciousness altogether, or, if the injury is an internal one, may he be compelled to submit to the use of such surgical instruments as the physicians appointed to make the examination may see fit to use? May he be compelled to exhibit his injury to the jury in open court, and, if the plaintiff be a woman, is there any protection whatever against violence to her feelings? By some of these courts it has been held that anaesthetics and drugs should not be used (Schroeder v. Railway Co., 47 Iowa, 375; Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496, 65 N. W. 616), and that plaintiff should not be compelled to submit to the use of surgical instruments (O'Brien v. La Crosse, 99 Wis. 421, 75 N. W. 81, 40 L. R. A. 831; but in Railway Co. v. Palmore, 68 Kan. 545, 75 P. 509, 64 L. R. A. 90, it was held that the plaintiff could be compelled to submit to the examination, and to an injection of a drug into his injured eye to dilate the pupil; and in Hall v. Manson, 99 Iowa, 698, 68 N. W. 922, 34 L. R. A. 207, it was held that the plaintiff, a woman, could be compelled to remove her shoe and stocking, that an examination might be had and measurements taken of her injured ankle in the presence of the jury. In Railway Co. v. Hill, 8 So. 90, 24 Am. St. Rep. 764, 9 L. R. A. 442, above, the Supreme Court of Alabama said: "When it becomes a question of possible violence to the refined and delicate feelings of the plaintiff on the one hand, and possible injustice on the other, the law cannot hesitate. Justice must be done." This is quoted with approval in Lane v. Railway Co., 21 Wash. 119, 57 P. 367, 75 Am. St. Rep. 821, 46 L. R. A. 153. However, in Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 54 N. W. 757, 35 Am. St. Rep. 561, 19 L. R. A. 641, it is said: "The decisions are not uniform upon this question, but the very great weight of authority is in favor of the exercise of such power by the court under proper restrictions, the rule recognizing, however, that a wide discretion is vested in the trial court, which justifies a refusal to require the examination * * * where the sense of delicacy of the plaintiff may be offended by the exhibition." To the same effect is the decision in Ottawa v. Gilliland, 63 Kan. 165, 65 P. 252, 88 Am. St. Rep. 232.

(3) In Sibley v. Smith and in Railway Co. v. Thul it is held that the defendant may demand the order as a matter of right, but that in granting it the court may exercise its discretion. We are unable to understand this contradiction of terms, and observe that in most of the cases it is held that the application is one addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, subject to review for manifest abuse only.

(4) In the Schroeder Case, and in Sibley v. Smith it is said that refusal of the plaintiff to comply with the order would constitute contempt of court, and subject the plaintiff to the punishment of a recusant witness; while in Turnpike v. Baily, Lane v. Railroad Co., Wanek v. Winona, Brown v. Railroad Co., and in the dissenting opinion in the Botsford Case, it is said that it is not a question of contempt; that the court cannot compel the plaintiff to comply with the order which it has made, but, if he refuses, the court may dismiss his action or refuse to permit him to testify.

From the assertion of the power arising from the apparent necessities of extraordinary cases, as disclosed by the decision in the Schroeder Case, we observe the almost limitless extent to which the power has been carried; and, not content with applying the rule to civil actions for personal injuries, it has been extended to apply to the prosecuting witness in a criminal case (King v. State, 100 Ala. 85, 14 So. 878), and for the same reasons advanced for the exercise of the power in civil actions by the courts asserting its existence, the doctrine has been applied to a criminal case, and the defendant compelled to bare to the view of the jury part of the unexposed portions of his body upon which were certain tatoo marks, in order to enable the state to complete the case against him, with the result that the defendant was convicted of a capital offense. State v. Ah Chuey, 14 Nev. 79, 33 Am. Rep. 530.—From opinion of Holloway, J., in May v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Mont.] 81 P. 328.

Proc. § 873, an order for the physical examination of plaintiff before trial must contain provision for his oral examination, although the scope of such examination may be confined by the court to questions touching the nature and extent of his injuries. Indictment in the language of the statute is sufficient,[57] and slight variances from the statute may be disregarded.[58] An indictment is not double because it alleges several disorderly acts.[59] An averment of drunkenness at a certain building near a public road does not allege drunkenness in a public place,[60] nor can evidence of drunkenness at a place other than the building specified be received.[61] The New Jersey statute excludes disorderly conduct by a drunken person, and the complaint must show that defendant was not at the time of the offense under the influence of liquor.[62] Where defendant testified that he never used profanity, he may be contradicted as to occasions other than that on trial.[63]

DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Includes only the criminal offense of keeping or frequenting a bawdy house,[64] the keeping of gaming houses[65] and the remedies against bawdy houses as nuisances[66] being elsewhere treated.

Any house kept for resort[67] for purposes injurious to the public morals or safety is a disorderly house,[68] and keepers[69] and frequenters[70] of such houses as well as persons leasing property for such purpose[71] or allowing it to be so used[72] are liable. A count for frequenting a bawdy house may be joined with one for keeping such a house.[73]

DIVORCE.

Scope of article.—Suits for annulment[78] and for support or separate maintenance,[79] are elsewhere treated, as is the subject of alimony.[80]

§ 1. Jurisdiction and domicile of parties.[81]—Jurisdiction of the subject-matter[82] and parties[83] in divorce proceedings is statutory. Jurisdiction of the parties may be obtained by appearance by attorney,[84] but a decree granted upon a forged entry of appearance is a nullity and binds no one.[85] Where defendant appears and moves to set such judgment aside, but subsequently consents to dismiss the motion, such dismissal does not validate the decree of divorce nor affect the marriage relation.[86] The principle of estoppel cannot be invoked to confer jurisdiction on a foreign tribunal.[87] Where one court has acquired jurisdiction of a divorce action by the filing of a bill in good faith, and the issuance of process thereon, another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction in the same state has no power to take jurisdiction of an action by the defendant in the suit already commenced.[88] In such case prohibition is the proper remedy to settle the conflict in jurisdiction.[89]

Domicile of complainant.[90]—Bona fide residence of complainant in the state for the period required by law[91] is a jurisdictional prerequisite,[92] and must be established by the complainant by the quantum of proof prescribed by the statute.[93] If

82. Under Pub. Laws 1899, c. 649, § 3, a single justice of the supreme court assigned to the appellate division is a quorum to try petitions for divorce; hence such single justice has final jurisdiction as to incidental questions arising on a trial, as the competency of testimony by a physician. 91. A wife began an action for separate support but later added a paragraph asking for divorce, and to the amended complaint the husband appeared. Plaintiff had been a resident for the required period when the amended complaint was filed. Held, complaint for divorce not premature. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 6977, 6978. Roshniakorski v. Roshniakorski [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 485.

92. Complainant, husband, held not to have shown himself a bona fide resident of the district as required by D. C. Code, § 971. Downs v. Downs, 23 App. D. C. 381.

93. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1043 requires plaintiff in divorce to prove bona fide residence by at least two witnesses who are there is a serious doubt as to the good faith of petitioner's residence in the state, jurisdiction should not be exercised.[94] In some states, if the offense relied on was committed in the state, the complainant need not show residence for a certain period.[95] Every person is presumed to retain the domicile of his nativity until another is acquired.[96] To constitute a change of domicile there must be a concurrence of actual change of residence with an intention to abandon the old and acquire a new domicile.[97] An intention to return to the domicile of nativity, after a change of residence, is ineffective when it is conditional upon inclination or the happening of future events.[98] In the absence of contrary proof, the law presumes that a husband and wife are living together and that the wife's domicile is that of the husband.[99] To overcome this presumption proof of willful desertion by the husband is necessary.[1] Where there is a valid decree of separation from bed and board, the presumption that the wife's domicile follows that of the husband does not obtain.[2]

Service of process on nonresident defendant.[3]—Personal service outside the state is authorized by some statutes.[4] Whether service is personal[5] or constructive,[6] statutory requirements must be strictly complied with. Divorce and separation from bed and board being distinct and separate, a statute authorizing substituted service in actions for separation cannot be extended to suits for divorce.[7] The court of the domicile of marriage may, at the suit of the wife, render a decree of divorce resident freeholders and householders. Two witnesses held properly qualified under statute. Roshniakorski v. Roshniakorski [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 485.

94. Petitioner had position in New York, and spent her Sundays and holidays there with her mother, but spent nights in New Jersey for two years prior to bringing suit for divorce on ground of desertion. Held, bona fide residence not shown. Mason v. Mason [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 337.

95. While parties were living in Delaware, husband committed adultery in Maryland. Wife acquired legal residence in Maryland, living on a farm which she bought. Held, she could bring a bill for divorce in the county where she lived, without having resided in the state for two years. Adams v. Adams [Md.] 61 A. 628.

One who owned a farm in Vermont, lived there five years, was a town official one year, which required a year's residence, was domiciled in Vermont, though he worked in New York. Hammond v. Hammond, 103 App. Div. 437, 93 N. Y. S. 1.

98. Civil service employe lived in Washington, D. C., with family 22 years, and only returned to Tennessee three times to vote. Held, not a resident of Tennessee, so as to maintain suit for divorce there, even though he intended to return there to live in case he lost his position. Sparks v. Sparks [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 173.

1. In suit by wife attacking a Texas decree of divorce on the ground of want of jurisdiction, the wife must prove that she acquired a separate domicile by proving that her husband willfully deserted her; otherwise her domicile will be held to have been that of her husband. Kendrick v. Kendrick [Mass.] 75 N. E. 151. Evidence held insufficient to prove desertion by husband and acquisition of separate domicile by wife. Id.

4. Personal service of complaint and summons in divorce outside the state is sufficiently authorized by Gen. St. 1894, §§ 4796, 4797. Sodini v. Sodini [Minn.] 102 N. W. 861.

5. A return showing proper personal service is not insufficient by reason of reciting that the name by which defendant is described is not his true name but an alias. Sodini v. Sodini [Minn.] 102 N. W. 861. If the language of the return of service of summons and complaint in a default divorce judgment fairly admits of an interpretation which will make the return legal and sufficient, it should be so construed on collateral attack. Id. Affidavit of complainant's solicitor only showing inquiry of complainant does not show such "diligent inquiry" as to defendant for purposes of identification, before delivery of citation to the sheriff as is required by Chancery Rules 53 and 59. Challender v. Challender, 65 N. J. Eq. 9, 59 A. 643.

6. Order of court for service of summons by publication held sufficient compliance with Wisconsin statute. McHenry v. Bracken, 93 Minn. 510, 101 N. W. 960. Proof that summons was published for "six successive weeks" in a weekly newspaper sufficiently shows publication "once a week" for six successive weeks as required by Wisconsin statute. Id.

against the nonresident husband on statutory constructive service, but is without jurisdiction to render a decree for alimony or costs against the husband.[8]

§ 2. Causes for divorce.[9]—Grounds of divorce are statutory, and a complainant must allege and prove each element of the statutory cause relied on in order to obtain relief.

Desertion[10] or abandonment[11] is a cause of divorce only when willful[12] and obstinate, and continued for the statutory period.[13] A husband is not entitled to a divorce on the ground of a desertion by the wife unless he has made reasonable[14] efforts to induce her to return, when the original separation was not intended as a desertion,[15] or when the wife has indicated repentance and a desire for a reconciliation.[16] If the husband refuses to meet the wife's advances,[17] or if his offers to resume matrimonial relations are not made in good faith,[18] the wife cannot be held a willful deserter. Separate living by mutual consent cannot become willful desertion except

8. Husband not being served with process and not appearing. Baker v. Jewell [La.] 38 So. 532.

9. See 3 C. L. 1128.

10. See 3 C. L. 1129.

11. Evidence held to justify decree of divorce to wife on ground of abandonment by husband. Clemans v. Western [Wash.] 81 P. 824. Evidence held to support finding that defendant's abandonment of plaintiff was not justified. Long v. Long [Wash.] 80 P. 432. Where husband had been put out of the house for drunkenness and failure to support wife, and subsequently wrote his wife, and she promised to see him, regarding his return, held no abandonment. Wheeler v. Wheeler [Md.] 61 A. 216.

12. Willful and malicious desertion by husband not established by evidence. Carey v. Carey, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 223. Violence and threats of a husband, made when he was not living with his wife and was not able to provide her a home, do not make a separation, originally voluntary, a willful one. Corson v. Corson [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 157. Letter from wife to husband saying "I never intend to live with you again" is proof of a willful desertion. Edwards v. Edwards [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 531. Where a husband leaves his wife, avowedly to obtain work, and thereafter fails to assist in her support owing to his weakness of will and dissipated habits, he becomes a willful deserter, even though he continues to write affectionate letters promising to reform. Coe v. Coe [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 1059. Under such circumstances the wife, who is without fault, is not bound to seek the deserter and ask a reunion. Id. Husband openly and notoriously lived with and supported another woman and failed to communicate with or support his wife and children, for more than the statutory period of desertion. Held, finding of willful, continued and obstinate desertion by husband proper. Carroll v. Carroll [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 383. The fact that a wife is maintaining a divorce action against her husband will not prevent her absence from him from amounting to desertion unless it affirmatively appears that her action was brought in good faith. Kusel v. Kusel [Cal.] 81 P. 297.

13. Desertion must be for statutory period. Edwards v. Edwards [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 581. Desertion for two years not clearly proved. Trimmer v. Trimmer, 215 Ill. 121, 74 N. E. 96.

14. Evidence held not to show such diligence as circumstances required to induce wife to return where separation was not intended as desertion. Briggs v. Briggs [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 878.

15. Briggs v. Briggs [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 878.

16. Where wife left after a quarrel, but in a letter held out a hope of reconciliation, it was husband's duty to seek such reconciliation. Edwards v. Edwards [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 531. Where wife left against husband's will and express command, but subsequent letters indicated repentance, and husband did not reply thereto, he was not entitled to divorce, since though desertion was willful, he made no effort to obtain resumption of marital relation. Meier v. Meier [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 234.

17. Husband not entitled to divorce for desertion where wife left him because of dissatisfaction with surroundings, but after birth of child showed desire to return and that he should provide support, and he gave her no opportunity to return, though able to support her and the child. Brand v. Brand [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 570. When a husband refuses to invite his wife, who has left him, to return, and does not try to induce her to resume her duties, but rebuffs her attempts at reconciliation, he is presumed to have consented to the separation, and cannot obtain a divorce on the ground of desertion. McElhaney v. McElhaney, 125 Iowa, 333, 101 N. W. 93.

18. Where ground alleged was desertion, held, facts were such that the case should have gone to jury to establish whether defendant's expressed desire to return and resume relations was bona fide. Gordon v. Gordon, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 261. Husband executed bond and mortgage for payment of alimony and maintenance to wife, and thereafter invited her to return in order to induce her to consent to cancellation of the mortgage. Held, her refusal to return in such case was not a willful desertion. Spille v. Spille [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 742. Where husband's unfounded suspicions and charges made life with him unbearable by wife, the fact that he wished her to return was no defense to an action for divorce where it appeared that his conduct would by a withdrawal of the consent and a demand for marital duty.[19] Such a demand on the husband, and a refusal by him, do not make him a deserter unless he is able to support the wife.[20] To establish a constructive desertion, petitioner's separation must have been necessary, and defendant must have had the intention to cause such separation.[21] It is only such misconduct by the husband as will entitle the wife to a divorce that justifies desertion by the wife.[22] The fact that one spouse does not object to the other's procuring a divorce is not alone evidence of willful desertion.[23] The fact that a wife lived alone after a separation is evidence of the continuance of the separation but not that the original separation was desertion.[24] The domicile of the husband is that of the wife only when the husband provides a domicile where the wife has a right to stay.[25] Hence, where the husband fails to provide a domicile and leaves the wife for an indefinite period, she is entitled to a decree of separation from bed and board on the ground of abandonment.[26] A husband cannot secure a divorce in New Jersey for a desertion occurring in New York unless the desertion is shown to have continued two years after the husband's residence in New Jersey began.[27]

Cruel and inhuman treatment[28] is usually a ground of divorce, but the mere fact that the parties can no longer live together is not.[29] Personal violence is not required to constitute cruel and inhuman treatment.[30]

Adultery, where sufficiently shown by the evidence,[31] is a cause for divorce in most states. Commission of the act need not be proved by eyewitnesses, if the disposition and opportunity to commit it are sufficiently shown.[32] remain the same. Thompson v. Thompson [Ky.] 85 S. W. 730.

19. Evidence insufficient to corroborate husband as to desertion by wife, where they were actors playing in different parts of the country and separate living began with mutual consent. Currier v. Currier [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 4.

20. Where parties married without means or expectation of establishing a home, went to a hotel for a few days and then separated to their former homes, and only met at the hotel a few times thereafter, the husband's subsequent refusal to support the wife was not evidence of willful desertion, in the absence of a showing as to his ability to support her. Carson v. Carson [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 157.

21. No divorce on ground of constructive desertion by husband where wife left him on account of his habitual drunkenness and because he could not support her properly, evidence not showing intention by defendant to cause such separation. Foote v. Foote [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 90.

Evidence insufficient to show cruel and inhuman treatment by husband. McMakin v. McMakin [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1140. Evidence insufficient to prove cruelty and other charges in action by husband. Loomer v. Loomer [Neb.] 102 N. W. 759. Decree for permanent separation advised where husband had conceived hatred for wife, had abandoned her, and had been guilty of cruel treatment. Costell v. Costell [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 49. In suit for legal separation from bed and board for cruelty, under D. C. Code, § 966, held that that statute is enforceable, though the time and extent of drunkenness, cruelty and desertion, named as causes for separation, are not definitely stated. Maschaur v. Maschaur, 23 App. D. C. 87.

30. Habitual ill treatment held ground for divorce. Pierce v. Pierce [Miss.] 38 So. 46. Pederasty is extreme cruelty within the meaning of the divorce statute. Crutcher v. Crutcher [Miss.] 38 So. 337.

31. Evidence insufficient to prove adultery by wife. Farrow v. Farrow [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 1103. In suit by wife for separation, evidence held insufficient to sustain recriminatory charge of adultery by the wife. Costell v. Costell [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 49. Evidence held to show adultery by wife. Feinberg v. Feinberg [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 880. Evidence sufficient to prove adultery by wife. Shoemaker v. Shoemaker, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 183.

32. Feinberg v. Feinberg [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 880.

Drunkenness,[33] when shown to be habitual,[34] is a sufficient cause in some states,[35] but not in others.[36]

Imprisonment.[37]—A sentence of imprisonment is a ground of divorce in some jurisdictions.[38]

Insanity[39] subsequent to the marriage is not a ground of divorce. Thus, under the Kentucky statute, making separate living without any cohabitation for five years a cause of divorce, a divorce will not be granted if the living apart was caused by the permanent lunacy of one of the spouses.[40] But if the parties lived apart for five years before the afflicted spouse became insane, the other will be granted a divorce.[41]

Fraud is a ground of divorce in some states,[42] but usually this is a ground for annulment.[43]

§ 3. Defenses and excuses; facts constituting a bar.[44] Collusion.[45]—If it appears that a defense has been suppressed by collusion,[46] or that the acts charged were committed by procurement or with connivance of the other spouse,[47] a divorce will be denied.

Condonation[48] is the conditional forgiveness of a matrimonial offense constituting a cause of divorce.[49] There must be reconciliation and remission of the offense

34. Evidence sufficient to show only occasional instances of drunkenness and not habitual drunkenness. Acker v. Acker, 22 App. D. C. 353.

35. Habitual drunkenness must have existed during three years immediately preceding bill for divorce, or for separation, followed within a reasonable time by suit for divorce. Acker v. Acker, 22 App. D. C. 353.

36. Drunkenness and consequent inability to support the wife is not a cause for divorce. Wheeler v. Wheeler [Md.] 61 A. 216. Habitual drunkenness is not a cause for absolute divorce in New Jersey, even when the effect is to justify the wife in separating herself from her husband, and to render the husband incapable of supporting the wife. Foote v. Foote [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 90.

37. See 3 C. L. 1130.

38. Under V. S. 2674, making a sentence of three years or more to prison ground of divorce, the length of the sentence by the court controls regardless of the shortening of the actual term of confinement by good behavior of the prisoner. Sargood v. Sargood [Vt.] 61 A. 472. The Pennsylvania statute making conviction of a felony and sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding two years a ground of divorce refers only to conviction of a single felony followed by a single term, and not to conviction for several offenses the sentences for which combined exceed two years. Under Act May 8, 1854 (P. L. 644), amended by Act June 1, 1891 (P. L. 142), conviction of larceny and receiving stolen goods and sentence of one year and six months for each is not ground for divorce by wife. Kauffman v. Kauffman, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 437.

39. Insanity is not a ground of divorce under Civ. Code, c. 37. The court did not decide whether insanity at the time of the marriage was ground for annulment in equity, since the evidence was found insufficient to establish the existence of insanity at that time. Smith v. Smith [Ala.] 37 So. 638.

46. Petition dismissed where wife brought suit after negotiations with husband resulting in agreement to pay her a lump sum if she obtained a decree on the ground of desertion; and where it appeared that part of their agreement was suppressed, so as not to disclose a defense. Griffiths v. Griffiths [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 1090.

47. Where adultery by wife was committed by procurement or with connivance of the husband within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1758, husband was denied divorce, and wife granted separation. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 45 Misc. 260, 92 N. Y. S. 165. by the injured party.[50] Voluntary resumption of marital relations constitutes a condonation,[51] provided the forgiving party had full knowledge of the other's misconduct.[52] Subsequent misconduct of the forgiven spouse makes the condonation ineffective as a defense.[53] To cure a desertion under the California statute the party deserting must not only return and offer in good faith to fulfill the marital obligation, but must also solicit condonation,[54] and such action must be taken by the deserting party before the expiration of the statutory period of desertion.[55] Condonation should be pleaded;[56] but even if not pleaded, where evidence of it is admitted without objection, and the defense established, a divorce will be denied,[57] since the defendant would in such case have the right to amend so as to raise the issue.[58]

Recrimination.[59]—A plaintiff who has himself broken the marriage contract cannot be relieved from its obligations because the other spouse may also have broken it,[60] since divorce is a remedy for the innocent and injured.[61] Hence an action for divorce on any one of the statutory grounds may be defeated by proof of existence of another statutory ground,[62] without regard to the nature or gravity of the several causes.[63] Sufficient recriminatory charges being alleged in the answer, the plaintiff will be denied relief, though defendant does not pray for a divorce.[64]

that may be allowed, and the grantee is served with summons, such grantee cannot be heard on the question of divorce, but his defense is limited to the question of alimony and the validity of his conveyance.[67]

Pleading.[68]—The petition must show jurisdictional facts, such as residence of petitioner in the state for the required period.[69] A petition for divorce on the ground of constructive desertion must set out facts showing the necessity of petitioner's separation from defendant.[70] A petition alleging abusive language by defendant, reflecting on plaintiff's character, need not allege that the language was used in the presence of a third party.[71] Where a cross complaint is stricken and defendant, instead of answering, brings an independent action for divorce, the plea of another action pending is not available in the latter suit.[72] The general rules regarding the filing of a supplemental complaint[73] or cross bill,[74] and the raising of objections to pleadings,[75] control. The New York statute authorizing a defense by way of counterclaim in actions for divorce or separation does not authorize a counterclaim on facts warranting annulment of the marriage.[76] But if the facts alleged are sufficient to constitute a counterclaim, the allegations will not be stricken, though the pleading is not denominated a counterclaim.[77]

Framing and trial of issues.—Even though a defendant has failed to move to have a complaint made more definite or certain regarding charges made, he is entitled to have the issues framed with such a degree of definiteness as will avoid surprise on trial and enable him to prepare his defense.[78] Whether adultery charged was committed with the consent, connivance, or procurement of the plaintiff, are issues to be tried by the court, if necessary, after the rendition of a verdict on the issue of adultery.[79]

Evidence and proof.[80]—Full proof of a sufficient cause for divorce is required,[81] and a careful examination of all the evidence not only by trial but also by appellate courts.[82] A divorce will not be granted on the uncorroborated evidence of the party seeking it.[83] A divorce should not be granted upon a confession of misconduct unless all suspicion of collusion has been removed.[84] A husband in a suit by him for divorce may testify to admissions by the wife as to her condition at the time of the marriage and her concealment of it,[85] but such testimony should be cautiously received and carefully weighed.[86] While the testimony of a co-respondent is to be regarded with caution it cannot be entirely disregarded merely because he is an accomplice.[87] Misconduct not alleged cannot be proved.[88] A default must be proved by competent evidence.[89]

Reference.[90]—The opinion of a master in a divorce proceeding is merely advisory.[91]

Interlocutory and final decrees.—The right to a divorce is subject to the legislative will and exists only by legislative grant.[92] Hence, the legislature may prescribe the terms and conditions on which a divorce may be granted and has power to regulate procedure within reasonable limits.[93] Thus, in California, a final decree can be entered only upon expiration of a year from entry of an interlocutory decree, and after an appeal therefrom, if taken, has been finally disposed of.[94] Under this statute, a decree purporting to grant an immediate divorce when no interlocutory decree has been entered is void.[95] But, though void in so far as it grants an immediate divorce, such a decree may constitute a valid interlocutory judgment declaring a party entitled to a divorce,[96] and an order vacating such judgment as an entirety is ineffective to destroy it as such preliminary decree.[97] The year which must elapse before a final decree can be entered is a year from actual entry of the interlocutory judgment, not from a theoretical nunc pro tunc order.[98] If an interlocutory decree has been in fact entered,[99] and the required year has elapsed, mandamus lies to compel entry of final judgment.[1]

In New York, final judgment can be had only upon expiration of three months after the filing of the interlocutory decree that a party is entitled to a divorce. The entry of the interlocutory decree does not dissolve the marriage.[2] When the interlocutory decree so directs,[3] the clerk may enter final judgment as of course, upon expiration of the three months, unless the judge meantime directs otherwise.[4] Where application is made for entry of final judgment, either by special direction of the judge, or by the clerk under directions contained in the interlocutory judgment, proof of necessary facts must be made to the judge.[5]

Under the Louisiana statute authorizing application for a divorce at the expiration of one year from the time a judgment of separation from bed and board has become final, the year begins to run from the finality of the judgment of the appellate court, in case there is an appeal.[6]

Decree, vacation, and modification.[7]—The decree must be supported by sufficient findings of facts.[8] A final decree dismissing a bill for divorce may include an allowance of attorney's fees to the successful defendant.[9] A prayer for general relief does not warrant a default decree giving relief inconsistent with the theory and allegations of the complaint.[10] Under a statute authorizing a divorce from bed and board in cases where absolute divorce is prayed for, if the facts authorize such decree, the court will not grant such decree of its own motion.[11] A refusal to revoke a final decree of divorce being discretionary, will be reversed by the appellate court only for an abuse of discretion.[12] A default judgment for divorce is protected against collateral attack by the same conclusive presumptions of validity and the same favorable intendments which surround any other judgments.[13] A mere informality does not render a decree subject to collateral attack.[14] A judgment obtained by fraud[15] will be set aside provided a good defense to the action existed,[16] and the suit to set the decree aside is not barred by laches.[17] A divorce decree will not be set aside when the party in whose favor it was granted is dead, the rights of minors have intervened, and the complainant seeking review has been guilty of laches.[18]

New trial.[19]—A somewhat liberal rule prevails in regard to granting new trials in divorce actions, since public policy demands that there should be a full hearing in such cases.[20]

Review.[21]—Condonation of the offense on which the decree of divorce was based will not justify granting of leave to file a bill of review.[22] The disposition of a divorce case being a matter of public concern, an appellate court will examine considerations supporting a judgment of dismissal even though no argument is submitted for defendant.[23] Acceptance of money under a decree for maintenance does not prevent a defendant in a subsequent suit for divorce from attacking the decree on motion for a new trial.[24] In Kentucky no appeal lies to the court of appeals from a judgment granting a divorce.[25] custody of a child is res judicata in a subsequent action for divorce and custody of children, as to all facts known and existing at the time of the hearing.[31]

Custody being awarded to one, the right of visitation is usually given the other, or the decree may be subsequently modified to make such provision,[32] but residence at a particular place to facilitate such visitation will not be required.[33] Complaint that a decree does not make such provision cannot be raised on application for modification of the decree as to the allowance of alimony.[34]

Custody of the children being awarded the wife, provision for their support is usually made by setting aside a portion of the father's property for the purpose,[35] or by requiring him to make periodical payments for that purpose.[36] In some states if the decree does not contain a provision for the maintenance of the children, such a provision will not be added subsequently.[37] Failure of a decree to provide for maintenance of children, custody of whom was awarded the wife, does not relieve the husband from his liability therefor, and such liability may be enforced against his estate after his death.[38] But a decree will not be modified so as to provide for reimbursement by the father where the mother voluntarily took and maintained the children for a number of years.[39] In a suit for divorce, alimony, and custody of minor children, custody of the children and alimony for their support may be awarded, even though a divorce has been denied.[40]

disposition and division of the property rests largely in the discretion of the trial judge,[43] guided by the respective merits of the parties and the condition in which they will be left by the divorce,[44] and the facts relating to the acquisition of the property.[45] An allowance of one-third to the wife is ordinarily considered liberal, in the absence of special circumstances.[46] It is proper for a divorce decree to make such provision with reference to the use of the homestead as will protect the rights of the mother and minor children.[47] Where a community homestead has been set aside to a divorced wife, who has been given custody of minor children, it is not subject to sale on execution against the divorced husband.[48]

A division of community property out of court will be set aside and a redivision made if the division was obtained by fraud and duress.[49]

§ 7. Effect of divorce.[50]—A divorce severs an estate held by the entirety and makes the former husband and wife tenants in common.[51] In Massachusetts the person against whom a divorce is granted may not marry again within two years after entry of the final decree, and a marriage by such person within that time is invalid.[52] The New York statute forbidding the guilty party in a divorce action from marrying another during the life of the innocent party cannot affect the validity of a marriage in another state.[53] An Indian whose wife has obtained a divorce from him cannot thereafter recover from her in equity land originally allotted to him by virtue of his status as a married man, such land having been subsequently allotted to her as a single woman.[54]

NOTE. Extraterritorial effect of divorce decrees: Where the courts of a state are not resorted to in good faith by a complainant, as where he or she has acquired a temporary domicile therein merely for the purpose of procuring a divorce, any judgment rendered by them against a nonresident defendant not served with process within the state, and who has not appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, is not entitled to respect in other states. Bell v. Bell, 181 U. S. 175, 45 Law. Ed. 804; Streitwolf v. Streitwolf, 181 U. S. 181, 45 Law. Ed. 807; Sewall v. Sewall, 122 Mass. 162, 23 Am. Rep. 299, Hoffman v. Hoffman, 46 N. Y. 30, 7 Am. Rep. 299; Watkins v. Watkins, 125 Ind. 163, 21 Am. St. Rep. 217.

On the other hand, a bona fide resident of a state may there prosecute a suit for divorce against a nonresident spouse, and obtain a decree which will dissolve the marriage tie, though the defendant does not appear in the proceeding, and the service of process is constructive, or is made outside of the state. Dunham v. Dunham, 162 Ill. 589, 35 L. R. A. 70; Smith v. Smith, 43 La. Ann. 1140; Franklin v. Franklin, 154 Mass. 515, 26 Am. St. Rep. 266, 13 L. R. A. 843; Loker v. Gerald, 157 Mass. 42, 34 Am. St. Rep. 252, 16 L. R. A. 497; Jones v. Jones, 67 Miss. 195, 19 Am. St. Rep. 299. This view does not meet with the concurrence of all the courts. Some of them deny the power of the courts of any state or country to call before them any married person not a resident thereof for the purpose of answering a bill for di-impeached for want of jurisdiction appearing upon the face of the record.[56] But such a judgment imports absolute verity, and want of jurisdiction must be made to appear affirmatively to justify a court in declaring it invalid.[57] Fraud having been practiced on the foreign court, its decree will be set aside,[58] if the suit for that purpose is not barred by laches.[59] It is the rule in New York that if one spouse abandons the matrimonial domicile in that state and becomes domiciled in another and obtains a decree of divorce in an action in which defendant was not served with process in that state and did not personally appear, such decree has no extraterritorial force.[60] One who seeks to take advantage of this rule in an attack on a foreign decree must show that he was a bona fide resident of New York at the time the foreign court took jurisdiction.[61] But where the spouse against whom the suit is brought had previously abandoned the matrimonial domicile, and the abandoned spouse acquires a bona fide residence and legal domicile in another state, a decree obtained in the latter state is entitled to recognition in New York,[62] since courts of the state of the matrimonial domicile have jurisdiction of the status, and may acquire jurisdiction of the defendant by constructive service.[63]

vorce, though brought by a resident of the state in which it is pending, and declare that a judgment rendered therein, unless based upon a voluntary appearance of the defendant is void as against him (People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Jones v. Jones, 108 N. Y. 415, 2 Am. St. Rep. 447; Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 27 Am. St. Rep. 517, 14 L. R. A 220; Harris v. Harris, 115 N. C. 587, 44 Am. St. Rep. 471; Green v. Green, L. R. Prob. Div. 89); especially if the cause of divorce is not recognized by the laws of the state in which he lives or in which the marriage was contracted (McCreery v. Davis, 44 S. C. 195, 51 Am. St. Rep. 794, 28 L. R. A. 655). For a full discussion of the position of the New York courts on the question, see Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408, 24 Am. St. Rep. 462; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274.

But the question has been settled by a decision of the Federal supreme court (Atherton v. Atherton, 181 U. S. 155, 45 Law. Ed. 796. See also 83 Am. St. Rep. 616) in which it was in effect held that where jurisdiction rests solely on the domicile of the complainant, and the defendant, being a nonresident, is brought into court by publication and the service of notice outside the jurisdiction, the decree rendered is conclusive against such nonresident in the courts of other states, including that of which he or she was a resident when the suit was instituted and the publication made and notice served. See, also, Felt v. Felt, 59 N. J. Eq. 606, 45 A. 105, 49 A. 1071, 83 Am. St. Rep. 612.

58. After an unsuccessful attempt to secure a divorce in Illinois, a husband went to Nebraska, and though he knew his wife's address in Chicago, concealed it, representing that her residence was unknown. Held, fraud was practiced on Nebraska court, and Illinois court could set Nebraska decree of divorce aside. Field v. Field, 215 Ill. 496, 74 N. E. 443.

59. In 1875 an unsuccessful attempt was made to obtain a divorce in Illinois. In 1878, a divorce was secretly and fraudulently obtained in Nebraska, but wife had no notice of it until 1894, when husband died. Held, attack on decree for purpose of getting widow's allowance was not barred by laches. Field v. Field, 215 Ill. 496, 74 N. E. 443.

61. Plaintiff held not to have sustained burden on him in attacking a New Jersey decree in action by him for divorce in New York. Percival v. Percival, 94 N. Y. S. 909.

62. Wife abandoned husband in New York, and husband went to California to live and there obtained a divorce after service as required by law. Held, such decree is good defense to action for support in New York, after husband had returned there to live. North v. North, 93 N. Y. S. 512.

63. Legal domicile of husband was in Vermont. Wife left and took up residence in New York, not intending to return. Held, matrimonial domicile was in Vermont and decree of Vermont court after service on wife by publication was entitled to recognition by New York courts. Hammond v. Hammond, 103 App. Div. 437, 93 N. Y. S. 1.

DOCKETS, CALENDARS AND TRIAL LISTS.[64]

Right to go on calendar.[65]—A cause cannot be placed on the calendar until issue is joined,[66] and this rule cannot be evaded by stipulation between the parties.[67] An unauthorized demurrer does not prevent the placing of the cause on the trial calendar.[68] The right may be lost by laches.[69]

Note of issue and notice of trial.[70]—Plaintiff appealing from an order overruling demurrers to an answer without a stay of proceedings, the defendant can file a note of issue and serve notice of trial pending the appeal;[71] but the issue and date being changed by the due service of replies pursuant to leave of court, the right of the defendant to retain the case on the calendar, or to move for trial pursuant to his original notice, is terminated,[72] and the issues can only be brought to trial upon the service of a new notice and the filing of a new note of issue.[73]

Placing cause on calendar.[74]—A reasonable time should be allowed to prepare for trial, and the cause placed upon the calendar for the following term of court.[75] Distance of the subject-matter of the trial from the place of trial, when urged as a reason for granting time to prepare for trial, is an element to be considered but is never alone conclusive.[76]

Posting of trial list.—The trial court may suspend a rule requiring the posting of the trial list within a designated time if such suspension results in no material injury to the party complaining.[77]

Passing or advancing cause.[78]—The advancement of causes is discretionary with the court.[79] A statute providing that when a cause is advanced the court must des-

67. A stipulation entered into as a condition of an extension of time to answer that the issue should be as of the date the summons and complaint were served, held not to authorize placing the cause on the trial calendar before it was at issue. Muglia v. Erie R. Co., 97 App. Div. 532, 90 N. Y. S. 216.

68. Demurrer in an suit to foreclose held not authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 493, and hence it raised no issue of law and did not prevent the placing of the case on the trial calendar. Armstrong v. Loveland, 99 App. Div. 28, 90 N. Y. S. 711.

An application by one co-tenant against another for partition of land by sale may be tried at the term to which the application is made, if the party defendant has time, in the judgment of the court, to prepare and file his objections; otherwise it should be tried at the next term thereafter. ignate a day during that term, on which day the cause shall be heard, is unconstitutional.[80] In New York suits against a corporation being founded on a note or other evidence of debt for the absolute payment of money,[81] and suits against administrators,[82] are entitled to a preference. In said state, in the absence of special facts calling for the exercise of the court's judicial discretion, a preference should only be allowed over nonpreferred cases noticed for the same term.[83]

Transfer, correction or striking off.[84]—The transfer of a case from one department to another of a district court is controlled by the rules adopted by such departments,[85] and in the absence of a showing of prejudice, one cannot complain of irregularity in such transfer.[86] A suit being improperly brought in equity, it should not be dismissed but should be transferred to the law docket.[87] and vice versa.[88] Either party may make application to have the case transferred,[89] but neither making application, the court may try the case,[90] or, on its own motion, have it transferred.[91] Where the grounds of a motion to transfer are not established on the face of the pleadings, proof must be taken and presented to the court upon the question.[92] The right to have the transfer made is lost by laches,[93] or failure to make the motion.[94] One failing to except to the transfer but acquiescing therein cannot complain thereof for first time on appeal.[95] The remedy for refusal of a court to transfer a cause from the law to the equity docket is by appeal, and not by mandamus.[96] One seeking the transfer of a cause from the law to the equity docket cannot complain of the exercise of jurisdiction by the chancellor.[97] Defects in the form of a paper furnished for the guidance of the clerk furnish no ground for striking from the calender a cause correctly entered thereon.[98] A cause being retired from the docket, judgment cannot be entered upon it.[99]

81. Code Civ. Proc. § 791, subd. 8, giving a preference to an action "against a corporation founded on a note or other evidence of debt for the absolute payment of money," applies to both domestic and foreign corporations. Martin's Bank v. Amazonas Co., 98 App. Div. 146, 90 N. Y. S. 734.

82. Where defendant's attorney had a copy of the pleadings, which copy was handed up to the court on the motion, held, there was unquestionable proof before the court that an administratrix was the sole party defendant, and plaintiff was entitled to the preference given by Code Civ. Proc. § 791, subd. 5. Jackson v. Jackson, 44 Misc. 44, 89 N. Y. S. 715. The statutory preference given in an action against an administratrix by Code Civ. Proc. § 791, subd. 5 will not be denied because the action is for an amount within the jurisdiction of the municipal court. Id. The rule of the trial term that such preference shall not be granted without some additional reason does not apply to the special term calendar. Id.

Short-cause calendars.[1]—A motion to place a cause upon the short-cause calendar being denied by one justice, it cannot be renewed before another without leave of court.[2] An objection to the affidavit or notice should be called to the attention of the court before the cause is reached for trial.[3] The affidavit and notice pursuant to which a case has been placed on the short-cause calendar are not parts of the common-law record, and to be subject to appellate review must be preserved by bill of exceptions.[4] In the absence of proof to the contrary, a court is presumed to have complied with its own rules respecting the calling of the short-cause calendar.[5]

Reinstatement and restoration.[6]—The redocketing of the case is largely discretionary with the court.[7] Before a case can be reinstated upon the docket by either party, notice should have been served upon the opposite party of the intention to have an order made to that effect.[8] A cause being dismissed for failure of plaintiff to appear, it cannot be redocketed in the absence of the express consent of defendant or of his voluntary appearance,[9] hence it may be redocketed where the attorneys of the parties have stipulated for an adjournment of the cause to a day subsequent to the date of dismissal.[10] Where the issue between the plaintiff in an attachment suit and the garnishee therein has been determined, an appeal taken from such determination and a reversal had thereof, the same should, upon a redocketing, be entitled according to the names of the respective parties to the attachment proceeding.[11]

DOMICILE.

Definition and elements.[12]—A man's residence is his home or habitation fixed at any place without a present intention of removing therefrom.[13] In law every person has a domicile.[14] It may be different from his place of abode;[15] thus temporary absence does not work a change of domicile if the intention to return is fixed, absolute and unconditional.[16] It is not disturbed by absence on naval service.[17] A

Where, several years after reversal of a judgment in condemnation proceedings, a notice by the appellant was filed that it would on a certain day of the term move to file the mandate of the court of appeals and redocket the case, but no motion was in fact made to redocket, and the mandate was not filed, the case stood as if no notice had been made. NOTE. Definition and distinctions: There is no doubt a marked distinction between the terms "residence" and "domicile;" residence having a more limited and local application than domicile. But although the distinction undoubtedly exists, the courts, in construing constitutional provisions and statutory enactments, have quite generally, in America, held the statutory residence to mean domicile and the words to be convertible terms. Jacobs, Domicile, § 75; People v. Connell, 28 Ill. App. 285. Under attachment statutes, however, residence is construed to mean actual rather than legal residence. Burt v. Allen, 48 W. Va. 154, 86 Am. St. Rep. 29, 50 L. R. A. 284; Long v. Ryan, 30 Grat. [Va.] 718; Stickney v. Chapman, 115 Ga. 759. Domicile has been defined "In a strictly legal sense" to be that place "where one has his true fixed permanent house and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning." domicile having once been acquired, it continues until a new one is acquired animo et facto.[18] To bring about a change of domicile, it is necessary that a bona fide[19] intention to so do exists,[20] coupled with an actual abandonment of the old, and location in the new, place of residence,[21] and it is essential that these two acts concur.[22] The motive or purpose of a change of domicile or residence is not material.[23] A man's domicile is determined by his actual residence coupled with his intention to remain, irrespective of the residence of his family;[24] that his residence is in a hotel does not affect the question.[25] So long as the marital relations exist,[26] the domicile of the husband is presumed to be the domicile of the wife;[27] but the wife may for certain

NOTE. Elements and change of domicile: A domicile once acquired is retained until it is changed. Desmare v. U. S., 93 U. S. 605, 23 Law. Ed. 959; Viles v. Waltham, 157 Mass. 542, 34 Am. St. Rep. 311. Every independent person can acquire a domicile of choice by the combination of residence (factum), and intention of permanent or indefinite residence (animus manendi), but not otherwise. Dicey, Conflict of Laws, p. 104; Udny v. Udny, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 441; Bell v. Kennedy, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 307. And any restraint upon such person's choice would be an abridgment of his rights. Tanner v. King, 11 La. 175, 179. Domicile is largely a question of intention, but that alone will not control. Talmadge, Admr, v. Talmadge, 66 Ala. 199; Matzenbaugh v. People, 194 Ill. 108, 88 Am. St. Rep. 134; Hascall v. Hafford, 107 Tenn. 355, 89 Am. St. Rep. 952. Declarations of intention are primarily valuable as expressions of intention, but they are not controlling and are subject to being overcome by other and more reliable indications of the true intention. They often serve to turn the scale when they are not inconsistent with acts; but it is otherwise if they are contradicted by the acts and general conduct of the person making them. Plant v. Harrison, 74 N. Y. Supp. 411; Long v. Ryan, 30 Grat. [Va.] 718; Jacobs, Domicile, § 455. The requisite fact is the transfer of the person himself from the old place of abode to the new; and this factum must be commensurate with the intention. Therefore it is that a new domicile cannot be acquired in itinere, except in cases of reverter. It is now the settled rule, both in this country and in England, that to constitute a new domicile both residence in the new locality and intention to remove there are indispensable. Guier v. O'Daniel, 1 Binn. [Pa.] 349, note; Price v. Price, 156 Pa. 617; Plant v. Harrison, 74 N. Y. Supp. 411; In re Moir's Estate, 207 Ill. 180, 99 Am. St. Rep. 205; Marks v. Where one owned houses in two cities and lived in each part of the year, his declared intention to become a resident of one of the cities while actually residing there held to render such place his domicile. Id. Where defendant, an unmarried man, resided in one place and his mother and sister in another, held, he was domiciled in the former, though he intended that his domicile should be in the latter. Redfearn v. Hines [Ga.] 51 S. E. 407. Where defendant intended to take up his abode in another city, the mere placing of his wife in the home of her father in such city, and defendant's occasional visits to her is insufficient to establish his residence in such city. Sheehan v. Scott, 145 Cal. 684, 79 P. 350.

Note: Opposed to the rule laid down in the last case is Bangs v. Brewster, 111 Mass. 382, wherein it was held that a man, by sending his wife to Orleans with intent to make it his home, thereby changed his domicile; that the fact of removal and intent concurred, and that although he was not personally present he established his home there from the time of his wife's arrival. But the weight of authority is against this case. Cf. Casey's Case, 1 Ashm. [Pa.] 126; Penfield v. Chesapeake R. Co., 29 F. 494; Hart v. Horn, 4 Kan. 232.—3 Mich. L. R. 483.

purposes acquire a separate domicile.[28] As a general rule the domicile of a child follows that of the father,[29] but this rule does not hold when the parents are judicially separated, and the custody of the child has been awarded to the mother; but in such case the child's domicile is determined by the mother's so long as he remains with her and in her care.[30] Upon the death of the father the domicile of the child follows that of the mother,[31] unless she is dead, in which case the domicile of the father continues to be the child's domicile until legally changed,[32] and it has been held that the first part of the above rule is not altered by the appointment of a guardian.[33] The general rule is that an infant is incapable of changing its own domicile,[34] but in some states this rule has been changed by statute.[35]

Evidence and establishment.[36]—One may become estopped to deny that his domicile is in a certain place.[37]

DOWER.[38]

§ 1. Nature of right; persons entitled; election.[39]—The right to dower is only an inchoate one during the life of the husband,[40] but on his death it becomes consummate, and a vested right without any act on the part of the dowress.[41] The inchoate right is not an interest or title subject to conveyance,[42] nor a chose in action or estate in lands which can be reached by creditor's bill.[43] Nor is dower consummate but unassigned an estate in lands.[44] The right to take a statutory share in lieu of dower depends on an election,[45] as does the right, in Massachusetts, to take dower in lieu of the provision made for her by the will of her husband.[46] The right

45. In Georgia the right of a widow to take a child's share in lieu of dower depends upon an election which must be made within one year from the date of administration on her husband's estate. Le Grange Mills v. Kener, 121 Ga. 429, 49 S. E. 300.

46. Under Pub. St. 1882, c. 127, § 18, a widow for whom no provision is made by the will of her husband must file her claim for dower within six months, or it is barred (Shelton v. Sears [Mass.] 73 N. E. 666), and to dower may be accelerated by contract between husband and wife[47] or by a judicial sale of his lands.[48] A plural wife acquires no dower rights.[49] The right of dower in Indians in allotted lands is governed by the Federal statutes.[50] Under the National Bankruptcy Law the right of a widow of a deceased bankrupt to dower is dependent entirely upon local law.[51]

§ 2. In what dower may be had.[52]—As a general rule dower may be had in all lands of which the husband was seised of an estate of inheritance during coverture in which the dowress has not relinquished her right,[53] but in some states the husband must have had seisin thereof at the date of his death.[54] The seisin in the husband must have been actual.[55] Hence, dower cannot be had upon dower.[56] She is entitled to dower in an equitable estate where the husband is entitled to immediate seisin,[57] but not in property held by him in trust,[58] nor in property taken from him under foreclosure of a purchase-money mortgage,[59] except as to the residue after the mortgage is satisfied,[60] nor as against a mortgagee in a mortgage executed by the husband prior to marriage.[61] Statutes providing for dower in equitable estates have Eastwood v. Crane, 125 Iowa, 707, 101 N. W. 481. A widow who does not elect to take under the will is entitled to dower in all the lands of which her husband died seised, and where there is a direction that certain lands be sold and the proceeds distributed to certain persons, such persons do not acquire title by electing to take the land, and the widow's right to her share of the proceeds from the land cannot be defeated by such election. 60. Where real estate is sold by the personal representative of a decedent, to pay the debts of decedent, which real estate is incumbered by a purchase-money mortgage given by the decedent in his lifetime, and by a purchase-money mortgage assumed by the decedent as a part of the purchase price of the land, and such land is sold for a sum more than the amount of both of said mortgages, the widow is entitled to have her dower interest in said land computed from and based on the entire proceeds of the sale, payable out of the residue of the proceeds, after satisfying said mortgages. Hickey v. Conine, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 321; Id., 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 209.

61. A widow not entitled to dower as against a mortgagee in a mortgage given no retroactive operation.[62] Where entitled to dower in lands sold, she is entitled to dower in the proceeds of the sale.[63]

§ 3. Extinguishment, release, or bar, and revival of dower.[64]—Dower may be relinquished by deed[65] or by an antenuptial[66] or postnuptial agreement,[67] providing it is fair and reasonable,[68] legal,[69] and in writing,[70] but it need not be acknowledged as is required of her deeds of release.[71] Dower cannot be barred by laches in attempting to assert an inchoate right,[72] nor by marital misconduct alone though it constitutes ground for divorce,[73] nor by the concealment of their marriage by her husband,[74] nor is she estopped by having unsuccessfully asserted title as equitable owner.[75] Her acts during coverture to operate as a bar must in effect amount to one of the modes pointed out by common law or statute.[76] There may be an extinguishment by a merger in a greater estate.[77]

A voluntary conveyance by a prospective bridegroom on the eve of his marriage is not fraudulent as to his prospective bride's inchoate right if he retains sufficient property so that her right will not be prejudiced.[78]

§ 4. Liens and charges on dower.[80]

§ 5. Assignment of dower and money awards.[81]—An agreement between heirs giving the widow a certain proportion of the rents and profits for life and that the property should not be sold without her consent constitutes an assignment of dower.[82] A dowress is entitled only to an allotment of a life estate,[83] but may be allotted a share of the rents and profits where the property is indivisible in specie.[84] A dowress subject to mortgage may require moneys payable to her husband's estate to be applied in exoneration of her dower.[85] The allotment must include property specially designated by statute,[86] and be made in the method prescribed by law.[87] No formal order of court is necessary where it is admeasured by commissioners appointed for that purpose and the dowress has been in possession with the acquiescence of all persons concerned.[88] The description of land assigned must be sufficiently certain to locate the premises.[89] A dower claim superior to the claim of general creditors is subrogated to the rights of a lien creditor who refuses to file his claim against an insolvent estate, and sells the property under foreclosure of his lien.[90] A statute providing that if a homestead exceeds a one-third interest in the estate no dower shall be assigned does not apply where a widow elects to take a child's share in lieu of dower.[91]

§ 6. Remedies and procedure.[92]—In Nebraska the district court has jurisdiction of proceedings to assign dower,[93] and the county court may assign it if there be no contest.[94] A claimant for dower in lands conveyed by the husband during his life must make out a clear case,[95] and if it appears that she is in possession of lands worth more than her claim, it will be dismissed to avoid circuity.[96] Limitations do not run against the right until the husband's death,[97] and not then if the dowress is under legal disability.[98] In New York there is a special statute of limitations relative to actions to recover dower.[99]

DURESS.

To be duress the act must be physical violence, threats of violence or harm, or imprisonment or threats of imprisonment,[2] made to a person or a member of his family,[3] and the constraint which destroys the power of withholding assent must be one which is imminent and without immediate means of prevention and be such as to influence a person of ordinary firmness.[4] Duress of imprisonment must be actual or threatened, unlawful imprisonment,[5] but an imprisonment may be originally lawful and become unlawful.[6] Duress of property which will avoid a contract is its restraint under circumstances of peculiar hardship.[7] There seems to be a tendency on the part of the courts to extend this doctrine.[8] There is also a modified form of duress recognized by the courts which renders void a contract illegally exacted.[9] A . . .

Another circumstance was that the husband was old and enfeebled and was very anxious to procure the dismissal of the guardian. Foote v. De Poy, 126 Iowa, 366, 102 N. W. 112. A threat by officers of a musician's union that unless a member paid an illegal fine, he would be expelled and deprived of means of earning a living mere threat of litigation does not constitute duress,[10] and money paid a creditor for forbearance of a lawful act is not paid under duress.[11] The doctrine of legal duress applies only to contracts which the law does not require.[12] Duress which will avoid a contract must have been instrumental in procuring its execution.[13] That one in executing a contract was guilty of compounding a felony will not preclude him from seeking to set it aside for duress.[14] The right of a mortgagor to cancellation of a mortgage for duress passes to a purchaser of the land.[15] One may be estopped from asserting duress as a defense.[16] A contract set aside for duress absolves both parties from liability under it, and one who has partly performed its conditions before notice that steps would be taken to rescind is entitled to be placed in statu quo.[17]

In pleading duress, the facts constituting it must be alleged.[18]

EASEMENTS.

§ 1. Nature and creation.[19]—An easement is a right in the owner of one parcel of land to the use of the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with the general property of the owner.[20] An easement is distinguished from a license in that it is an interest in land.[21] An easement is a species of incorporeal hereditament[22] lying in grant,[23] and can be acquired only by grant[24] or condemnation,[25] or is duress. Fuerst v. Musical Mut. Protective Union, 95 N. Y. S. 155.

10. A threat of litigation to induce a family settlement is not such duress as will avoid the settlement. Burnes v. Burnes, 132 F. 485.

11. To postpone a sale under a decree of court. Foster v. Central Nat. Bank, 93 N. Y. S. 603.

12. A bond executed by an executor as a condition precedent to exercising the functions of his office is not void because in excess of statutory requirements. Yost v. Ramey, 103 Va. 117, 48 S. E. 862.

13. That a redelivery of a deed of which the grantor had recovered possession was induced by duress, does not invalidate it. McCrum v. McCrum [Iowa] 103 N. W. 771.

14, 15. Gray v. Freeman [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1105.

16. Where, in a suit to foreclose, a mortgagor did not contradict plaintiff's evidence that he took an assignment of the mortgage at the mortgagor's solicitation, the mortgagor could not assert that the mortgage was procured by duress. Langley v. Andrews [Ala.] 38 So. 238.

17. Ice v. Ice, 26 Ky. L. R. 1065, 83 S. W. 135.

18. A general charge of duress in a bill in equity is insufficient. McPeck's Heirs v. Graham's Heirs [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 125.

19. See 3 C. L. 1148.

20. See 3 C. L. 1148. Tiffany, Real Property, § 304. A right to a private way acquired by adverse use is a vested right and not a mere license. Power v. Dean [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 1100.

21. An oral agreement between adjoining owners that one will build a stairway to be used in common in consideration of a right to erect a porch on vacant land of the other, held to give only a license to use such stairway. Howes v. Barmon [Idaho] 81 P. 48. Instrument in the form of a deed conveying right of way for a pipe line and right to divert water held to create an easement and not a mere license. Everett Water Co. v. Powers, 37 Wash. 143, 79 P. 617.

22. The surrender of a way of necessity is within the registry laws. Dahlberg v. Haeberle [N. J. Law] 59 A. 92. The grant of an easement in fee is entitled to record. Sweetland v. Grants Pass New Water, Light & Power Co. [Or.] 79 P. 337.

23. A release by abutting owners to a city of so much of the lands as is necessary to make a road "for the sole and only use of a public road forever" conveys an easement only. Mitchell v. Einstein, 42 Misc. 358, 86 N. Y. S. 759.

24. Evidence held insufficient to show that a grant had ever been made. Anthony v. Kennard Bldg. Co. [Mo.] 87 S. W. 921. An easement of light and air is an interest in land and lies only in grant or estoppel. Hutchins v. Munn, 22 App. D. C. 88. An owner conveyed a portion of a lot without reserving a right of way over it; he subsequently conveyed the remainder with a by prescription which presupposes a grant.[26] A parol contract for an easement is within the statute of frauds,[27] yet part performance may in equity take a parol grant from the operation of the statute.[28] Such contracts are presumed to have been made with knowledge of the statute of frauds and have been intended to create a license only.[29] Easements resting in local custom are not generally recognized in this country.[30] It is only over public highways that an abutter's easement of view, light and air are recognized.[31] Easements may be either appurtenant[32] or in gross. An easement may be appurtenant, though the servient and dominant tenement be separated by other lands.[33]

A grant[34] of an easement will be construed in the light of surrounding circumstances,[35] and no presumption that it is in gross will be entertained if it can be fairly inferred that it was intended as an appurtenant.[36] No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a grant.[37] The owner of real estate can establish in that portion which he sells and in that portion which he retains such servitudes as he deems proper;[38] but one who has no estate cannot grant an easement,[39] nor enlarge an existing one.[40] right of way over the part first conveyed. Held, the grantee acquired no way. Morin v. Lefebvre [N. H.] 61 A. 675.

25. Under P. L. 226, incorporating the Union Canal Company, land acquired by condemnation under section 13 of the act is not acquired in fee, but only as an estate determinable upon the abandonment of the land for use as a canal. Sholl v. Stump, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 48.

26. See post, Creation by prescription. In legal contemplation an easement lies only in grant, but a grant is presumed from long continued adverse user. Anthony v. Kennard Bldg. Co. [Mo.] 87 S. W. 921.

27. Belser v. Moore [Ark.] 84 S. W. 219. An easement is an estate, and a grant of one is within the statute of frauds. Howes v. Barmon [Idaho] 81 P. 48.

28. Part performance held insufficient. Hutchins v. Munn, 22 App. D. C. 88.

29. Howes v. Barmon [Idaho] 81 P. 48.

30. In Connecticut personal rights of way or other easements resting in local custom are not recognized. Graham v. Walker [Conn.] 61 A. 98.

31. A right of way belonging to a railroad company is private property as to an adjoining owner. Osburn v. Chicago, 105 Ill. App. 217.

32. Held to be appurtenant: A reservation in a conveyance of one-half of a house, of a right to use a stair and hallway in the part conveyed. Teachout v. Capitol Lodge, I. O. O. F. [Iowa] 104 N. W. 440. A reservation of a way to cross a certain strip to other lands of the grantor construed as an exception of an existing way which became an easement appurtenant to such lands. Dee v. King [Vt.] 59 A. 839. A sale of lots with reference to a plat carries as appurtenant the right to the use of an easement in streets and alleys necessary to the enjoyment of such lots. Edwards v. Moundsville Land Co. [W. Va.] 48 S. E. 754. The landowner may be compelled to open such streets and alleys, though the dedication thereof has not been accepted. Id.

33. Graham v. Walker [Conn.] 61 A. 98.

34. See 3 C. L. 1149.

35. A conveyance of a right and privilege to use a stairway is the conveyance of an easement, though the deed contains words appropriate to pass the fee, and general warranty. Bale v. Todd [Ga.] 50 S. E. 990. A deed of an easement for a pipe line to a grantee, his heirs and assigns forever, will be construed as unlimited as to time. Everett Water Co. v. Powers, 37 Wash. 143, 79 P. 617.

36. Grant of a right to construct an abutment for a dam and keep it in repair, held to be appurtenant in view of the fact that at the time it was made the grantee was constructing on the opposite side of the river a plant to be operated by water power. Sweetland v. Grants Pass New Water, Light & Power Co. [Or.] 79 P. 337. A reservation of an easement in premises conveyed need not be to the "grantor, his heirs and assigns" in order to create an easement appurtenant. Teachout v. Capitol Lodge, I. O. O. F. [Iowa] 104 N. W. 440.

37. A grant with appropriate words of conveyance for an annual consideration of a right of way when the railroad is located, becomes irrevocable at execution. Alderman & Sons' Co. v. Wilson [S. C.] 50 S. E. 643. Where a landowner for a consideration allows a strip to be used as a road without restriction as to time, it constitutes a grant of an easement. Power v. Dean [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 1100. A right of way voucher signed by the fee owner and reciting a consideration received from a telephone company for the right to string and maintain wires over certain premises, is sufficient to secure the easement it purports to grant. Barber v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 993. A reservation in a plat of streets for private use of the owners and their assigns vests in them an easement in such streets. Restetsky v. Delmar Ave. & C. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 665.

38. Bernos v. Canepa [La.] 38 So. 438. An owner of two adjacent lots who erects a building on one may add to the security of

A way of necessity[41] is implied from the grant of a parcel surrounded by other lands of the grantor,[42] or where bounded on three sides by lands of other owners;[43] but an easement will not be implied merely because it is a matter of convenience.[44]

Creation by prescription.[45]—Adverse user under a claim of right with the knowledge of the fee owner gives an easement by prescription.[46] The user[47] must have been hostile,[48] continuous[49] and under a claim of right[50] over a uniform route,[51] and a mortgage given on the lot and building an easement for light and air over the other so long as mortgagees of the latter are not prejudiced. Wood v. Grayson, 22 App. D. C. 432.

29. Ditch rights cannot be granted by the United States over land withrawn from the public domain. Campbell v. Flannery [Mont.] 79 P. 702.

40. Where public lands burdened with ditch rights under Act Cong. July 26, 1866, such burdens cannot be added to under the act after the land has been withdrawn from the public domain. Campbell v. Flannery [Mont.] 79 P. 702.

41. See 3 C. L. 1150. The grant of a right of way across a meadow for the purpose of constructing a street railway carries an implied right of way to reach the strip. Quigley v. Montgomery & C. Elec. R. Co., 208 Pa. 238, 57 A. 512.

42. An execution sale of a portion of a tract carries a way of necessity over the remaining portion. Damron v. Damron [Ky.] 84 S. W. 747.

43. A sale of land surrounded on three sides by the land of other individuals carries by presumption a way to the public highway over remaining land of the grantor. Brown v. Kemp [Or.] 81 P. 236.

44. Where the owner of a saloon is also part owner of a hotel which was constructed with doors leading from the rotunda to the saloon, there is no implied easement that such doors shall remain open. Belser v. Moore [Ark.] 84 S. W. 219. A way of necessity is not acquired by a purchaser whose land is not surrounded by other lands of his grantor and he has means of ingress and egress over a public highway, though the way claimed would be of great convenience and advantage. Wills v. Reid [Miss.] 38 So. 793.

45. See 3 C. L. 1150. The doctrine of prescriptive easements is discussed fully in Tiffany, Real Property, p. 1020.

46. Town of Bethel v. Pruett, 215 Ill. 162, 74 N. E. 111; Wasmund v. Harm, 36 Wash. 170, 78 P. 777. User of an easement without asking permission and without objection is adverse. Godino v. Kane, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 596.

Easement by prescription: Uninterrupted use of an alley for 22 years. Godino v. Kane, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 596. 10 years adverse use of either a public or private way. Power v. Dean [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 1100. User of a passway for 15 years. McKinney v. Thompson [Ky.] 86 S. W. 543. Adverse use of a way for 20 years. Van De Vanter v. Flaherty, 37 Wash. 218, 79 P. 794. The maintenance of a dam and bridge in a particular manner for 50 years. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Dennison, 116 Ill. App. 1. The maintenance of a ditch across the land of another for from 30 to 35 years. Board of Regents of State Agricultural College v. Hutchinson [Or.] 78 P. 1028. An uninterrupted use for 15 years raises a presumption that such use is adverse. Warth v. Baldwin [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1148. After use of an easement for 25 years, the use is presumed to have been adverse and not permissive. Wathen v. Howard [Ky.] 84 S. W. 303. The burden is on the fee owner to show that an uninterrupted use of an easement was by virtue of permission or contract. Godino v. Kane, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 596. One claiming that use of a passway for 15 years was not adverse has the burden of proving that it was permissive. Chenault v. Gravitt [Ky.] 85 S. W. 184.

Evidence insufficient to show a way by prescription. Brown v. Peck, 125 Iowa, 624, 101 N. W. 443. Evidence held to show that premises were never in public use and were not subject to public servitude. Calhoun v. Faraldo [La.] 38 So. 551; Anthony v. Kennard Bldg. Co. [Mo.] 87 S. W. 921. Under Code, § 3004, providing that use of an easement is not admissible as evidence of an adverse claim, an easement by prescription must be established by evidence of adverse claim as of right for the statutory period with express notice to the fee owner. Brown v. Peck, 125 Iowa, 624, 101 N. W. 443.

Evidence sufficient to show adverse user for the statutory period. Franz v. Mendonca [Cal.] 80 P. 1078. Where a drain had been constructed to carry water from a lake to a mill pond but was abandoned, the successors of the person who constructed it acquired no prescriptive right to reconstruct and use it for drainage purposes. Flynn v. Service [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 113, 103 N. W. 541.

47. A prescriptive right to flood land is not acquired by maintaining a dam and certain head of water for the prescriptive period. Such right depends on the reach and elevation of the back water during such period. Carrington v. Brooks, 121 Ga. 250, 48 S. E. 970.

48. Prescriptive rights in a neighborhood road are not acquired by the public by user for a considerable period where no hostile rights therein are asserted, and it is never under supervision of the public authorities. Wills v. Reid [Miss.] 38 So. 793. An abutting proprietor cannot claim a prescriptive easement in a neighborhood road where he has asserted no hostile claim and changed the route from time to time, though he has made repairs for his own convenience but has given no notice of his claim. Id.

49. That way is permissively used by adjoining owners as a pasture does not break the continuity. Power v. Dean [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 1100. The purchase of one of two tracts over which a way is being used does not toll the prescriptive period as to the tract not purchased. Bullock v. Phelps [R. I.] 61 A. 589.

50. To create a presumption of grant the not permissive;[52] but in Georgia a private way may originate in permission and yet ripen by prescription,[53] and users of it may acquire an inchoate right before they acquire a prescriptive one.[54] A prescriptive right cannot be obtained unless during the period an action could have been maintained by the servient party.[55] At common law, to acquire an easement by adverse user, the use must have continued from a time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary;[56] but it is now the prevailing rule that the prescriptive period corresponds with the local period for quieting title to lands.[57] A light and air easement cannot be acquired by prescription in this country,[58] nor can police regulations be prescribed against.[59] After the public has acquired a prescriptive easement, a private way over such land cannot be acquired by adverse user.[60]

Creation by estoppel.[61]—An easement may be created by estoppel,[62] as where lots are sold which abut on a road of which the grantor owns the fee,[63] or with reference to a plat.[64] An easement so created is not one of necessity,[65] and extends, circumstances attending user must make it appear that it was established for the use of the claimant, or that use was accompanied by a claim of right. Warth v. Baldwin [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1148.

51. Wasmund v. Harm, 36 Wash. 170, 78 P. 777. Those who use a private way must repair it, and they cannot take advantage of their default in turning out to avoid obstructions. Kirkland v. Pitman [Ga.] 50 S. E. 117. The existence of wide places in a way will not defeat rights acquired by prescription. Id. A prescriptive right cannot be acquired to pass over land generally, but only on a definite, certain and precise line. Town of Bethel v. Pruett, 215 Ill. 162, 74 N. E. 111.

52. Wasmund v. Harm, 36 Wash. 170, 78 P. 777. Permissive use will not ripen into an easement by prescription. Slattery v. McCaw, 44 Misc. 426, 90 N. Y. S. 52. No prescriptive way is acquired where users used gates at each end erected and maintained by the fee-owner of the land crossed. Warth v. Baldwin [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1148. A permissive license will not ripen into an easement. Belser v. Moore [Ark.] 84 S. W. 219. Use under a parol gift is not permissive. Franz v. Mendonca [Cal.] 80 P. 1078. Evidence as to the acquisition of an easement in a passageway by prescription, held for the jury. Seitz v. People's Sav. Bank [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 96, 103 N. W. 545.

57. Adverse use from the middle of the year of 1887 to the end of 1902 is sufficient. Wasmund v. Harm, 36 Wash. 170, 78 P. 777. That one alleges an easement by prescription by 20 years adverse use does not estop him from claiming that adverse use for any lesser period would establish the right. Id. An easement by prescription is established by proof of adverse user for a period necessary to give title to land. Anthony v. Kennard Bldg. Co. [Mo.] 87 S. W. 921.

61. See 3 C. L. 1151.

62. The grantor of an easement to locate a dam abutment on certain land is estopped to question the right to maintain it at a different location where he allowed the grantee to change the original location and maintain it on a different one for six years. Sweetland v. Grants Pass New Water, Light & Power Co. [Or.] 79 P. 337. A fee owner who consents in writing to give a railroad right of way over his land, and the company with his knowledge constructs a roadbed and operates the line for several years, the owner is estopped to question the right to continue such use. Robertson Mortg. Co. v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co., 37 Wash. 137, 79 P. 610. The owner of land subject to an easement for the operation of a wooden tramway who stands by and permits the construction of a steam railroad thereon, is estopped to maintain ejectment to recover the land. Warren & O. V. R. Co. v. Garrison [Ark.] 85 S. W. 81. Where one adjoining owner consented to his neighbor's building a house over a disputed strip, whether he was thereafter estopped to maintain ejectment was a question for the jury. Daley v. Wingert, 210 Pa. 169, 59 A. 982.

63. Mott v. Eno, 97 App. Div. 580, 90 N. Y. S. 608. A conveyance of a lot bounded by the middle line of a street, instead of the outer line, carries an easement in the street. New England Structural Co. v. Everett Distilling Co. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 85.

64. Where land is platted and lots sold with reference to streets noted on the plat as 60 feet wide but opened only 50 feet wide, the grantee does not acquire an easement in the additional 10 feet in front of adjoining land of the grantor. Fitzell v. Philadelphia, 211 Pa. 1, 60 A. 323. Where one sells lots with reference to a plat which notes a street as 60 feet wide but which has been opened only 50 feet wide, there is no implied grant of a public easement in an additional 10 feet in front of lots not sold. Id. Where dedicators reserve on not only to the part of the street on which the lot abuts, but so far as the grantor had power to create such right.[66] Representations by one without authority to make them will not create an easement by estoppel.[67]

The condemnation of private lands for private ways[68] is unconstitutional,[69] and a private way of necessity can be established only by the legal proceeding prescribed.[70] In Georgia a private way of necessity may be acquired by compulsory sale and purchase in a manner prescribed by law.[71]

Natural easements[72] of drainage,[73] of lateral[74] and subjacent support,[75] exist in favor of adjacent and surface owners.

Negative easements[76] may be created by restrictive covenants as to the use of land.[77]

§ 2. Location, maintenance and extent of right.[78]—The width[79] or acreage of land subject to the easement is to be determined from the terms of the grant,[80] and circumstances under which it was made.[81] The owner of a prescriptive easement not definitely defined is entitled to a way bounded by the line of reasonable enjoyment,[82] limited by the character and extent of use during the prescriptive

80. A grant of a right to construct a dam and to overflow lands as a result of such construction is sufficiently broad in its terms to build the dam to any height deemed proper. Sweetland v. Grants Pass New Water, Light & Power Co. [Or.] 79 P. 337. Covenant for easement of light and air construed. Jackson v. Eli, 23 App. D. C. 122. An easement to flood lands to whatever height a dam might be raised held to be a release of damages for injuries to all the lands flooded. Stadler v. Missouri River Power Co., 133 F. 314.

81. Where one in use of a way purchases from the fee owner a tract of land and is granted the way as an appurtenant to his land, a right to use such way passes as an appurtenant to the land originally owned as well as to that purchased. Bullock v. Phelps [R. I.] 61 A. 589. A deed of a railroad right of way is presumed to carry such rights as the company could have acquired under its power of eminent domain. Harman v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 689.

period.[83] The grant of an easement to string and maintain telephone wires is in its nature continuous and includes the right to string as many wires as is necessary.[84] In Louisiana the servitudes of view and drip when established merely by the destination du pere de famille do not include the prohibition of building on the adjoining property.[85]

Extent of use.[86]—A way appurtenant to land attaches to every part of it, though it may go into the possession of different persons;[87] but an easement for the benefit of a particular tenement cannot be used for the benefit of others owned by the owner of the easement,[88] unless an enlarged right is acquired,[89] nor can the owner of the dominant tenement use an easement in such manner as to render it a nuisance or unnecessarily damage the servient tenement.[90] A right of ingress and egress does not entitle the owner to the use of facilities constructed by the owner of the servient estate for his own convenience,[91] even though they could be used without inconvenience to him.[92] An easement for the operation of a wooden tramway does not authorize use for a steam railway.[93] A right to maintain a two story building does not give a right to construct a third story.[94] A right to maintain a ditch does not justify an entry for the purpose of enlarging the capacity of the ditch.[95] The use by the public of a private way is presumed to be permissive.[96] An agreement between the dominant and servient owners relative to the use of the easement is binding on them.[97]

§ 3. Transfer and assignment.[98]—Easements appurtenant pass with the conveyance of the dominant tenement[99] without special mention,[1] and a purchaser of the servient estate with notice of the servitude takes subject to it.[2] An easement in gross where the grant is to the grantee, his successors and assigns, is capable of assignment and is therefore in perpetuity, though not technically in fee.[3]

§ 4. Extinguishment and revival.[4]—An easement may be lost by adverse possession,[5] but cannot be discharged by legislative action,[6] nor destroyed without compensation.[7] An easement acquired by deed is not extinguished by nonuser,[8] and one in a private way is not lost by mere neglect to repair.[9] An easement of way is not lost by a temporary change in it with the consent of the user; he having used it as changed during such period.[10] Where the owner of a way consents to the closing of it in consideration of a grant of a substitute way, the right to the use of the new way at once attaches,[11] and the new way cannot be closed without restoring the old one, though the grant of the new was oral.[12] An unlawful or excessive use of an easement does not work a forfeiture of it,[13] but where the authorized and unauthorized use are so intermingled that they cannot be designated, all use may be enjoined until circumstances have so changed as to permit the valid use without affording opportunity for the unlawful one.[14]

The discharge of an easement of way must be recorded as against a bona fide purchaser of the dominant tenement.[15]

Abandonment.[16]—An easement may be lost by abandonment and nonuser.[17] Abandonment is a question of intention,[18] and mere nonuser without intent to abandon does not constitute abandonment,[19] nor does a mere intention to abandon without an actual yielding up of possession or cessation of user.[20] That tenants of the dominant estate do not make actual use of an easement appurtenant does not indicate an abandonment by the owner.[21] Abandonment of an old dilapidated flume is not an abandonment of the right to divert water conveyed through it.[22] necessity does not affect the jurisdiction of the district court to enjoin the obstruction of an existing way.[24]

Form of remedy.[25]—One asserting a right to an easement must seek his remedy at law.[26] The appropriate remedy for the disturbance of an easement is an action on the case,[27] or an equitable proceeding to enjoin interference.[28]

Parties.[29]—Lands cannot be adjudged subject to an easement in an action to which the fee owner is not a party,[30] but a tenant for years may enjoin a trespass on an easement appurtenant,[31] and the owner of an easement may enjoin a trespass relative to it, though his rights are not materially impaired.[32] By statute in California, the owner or occupant of a dominant tenement may maintain an action to enforce an easement appurtenant.[33]

Pleading and evidence.[34]—A complaint for obstructing an easement need not describe the premises as definitely as would be required in a proceeding to establish a new way.[35] A complaint for the obstruction of a highway which has been in existence for 30 years need not allege how it came into existence as such,[36] nor how user began.[37]

Where an easement is claimed by adverse use, the question of necessity is immaterial.[38]

A decree must definitely locate an easement adjudged to exist.[39]

Damages.[40]—The obstruction of an easement appurtenant entitles the owner to damages on the theory of permanent depreciation in the value of his land.[41] The measure of damages for obstructing an easement of way is the diminution in the value of the premises during the time of the obstruction,[42] and where the violation of rights is flagrant, exemplary damages may be recovered.[43]

EJECTMENT (AND WRIT OF ENTRY).

§ 1. Cause of action and nature of remedy.[44]—Disseisin is the basis of the action which is possessory and lies only when the defendant is in possession,[45] and where corporeal rights are involved,[46] but persons unlawfully using an easement may be ousted where such relief is incidental.[47] It will lie to recover a mineral interest in lands,[48] but not to enforce the performance of a contract which is the consider-of property, the passway to which is obstructed, is admissible on the question of damages. Id.

45. As a general rule it cannot be maintained for land of which the plaintiff is in possession. Zerres v. Vanina, 134 F. 610. P. L. 256 and 612 require that a defendant not residing in the county in which the land is situate be ruled to appear and plead and that such rule be published. Such statute must be complied with in order to raise a presumption that he is in possession. Kreamer v. Voneida, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 347. The plaintiff in one ejectment suit must be in possession before the defendant can be required to bring a second action for the same premises. Bloomer v. Meade, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 292.

46. The erection of a bridge abutment under a license does not convert such license into a corporeal right which can be made the basis of ejectment under a statute authorizing this action "to recover land." Nicolai v. Baltimore [Md.] 60 A. 627.

NOTE. Action by railroad company for right of way: Plaintiff brought ejectment against defendant to recover possession of land condemned for right of way, depot and terminal facilities. Defendant claimed the land by right of possession under a tax deed regular on its face, the erection of lasting improvements, and nonuser of the lots by plaintiff for railway purposes. There had never in fact been any delinquency in the payment of taxes by the plaintiff. Held, ejectment could be maintained. Kansas & C. P. R. Co. v. Burns [Kan.] 79 P. 238.

The decision seems to be based on defendant's unavailing defense rather than upon the strength of plaintiff's own title, and a minority dissent is placed on this ground, as it is fundamental that the plaintiff in ejectment must recover, if at all, on the strength of his own title. Had the plaintiff such a title? In the absence of explicit statutory provisions, the decisions are not harmonious. The railway company's interest is frequently broadly stated to be a mere easement. 14 Cyc. 1162; Missouri, K. & N. W. R. Co. v. Schmuck, 69 Kan. 272, 76 P. 836; Taylor v. Railroad Co., 38 N. J. Law, 28; Railway & Nav. Co. v. Real Estate Co., 10 Or. 444; Shields v. Railroad Co., 129 N. C. 1; Lyon v. McDonald, 78 Tex. 71; Jones, Easements, § 211; Lewis, Em. Dom. 278. But ejectment does not lie for an easement. Fritsche v. Fritsche, 77 Wis. 270; Northern Transp. Co. v. Smith, 15 Barb. [N. Y.] 355. After holding such an interest to be a "mere easement," many courts further declare it will revert to the original owner if the purpose for which it was taken is abandoned. Noll v. D. B. & M. R. Co., 32 La. 66; Kellogg v. Malin, 50 Mo. 496; Railway Co. v. Telford, 89 Tenn. 293; Chouteau v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 122 Mo. 375. But this is evidently an improper use of terms. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 596. That more than an easement is obtained and that ejectment will lie, see Currie v. New York Transit Co., 66 N. J. Eq. 313, 58 A. 308; Aden v. District No. 3, 97 Ill. App. 347; Railway Co. v. Holton, 32 Vt. 43; Chaplin v. Commissioner, 126 Ill. 264 (Overruling earlier decisions); T. & C. R. Co. v. Alabama R. Co., 75 Ala. 516; Gurney v. Elevator Co., 63 Minn. 70; Railway Co. v. Peet, 152 Pa. 488. In some states a fee is given by statute where the circumstances require such an estate. State v. Griftner, 61 Ohio St. 201; Sou. Pac. R. Co. v. Burr, 86 Cal. 279; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Lannon, 46 F. 224.—3 Mich. L. R. 484.

Note: Ejectment will not lie to recover a mere easement (Racine v. Crotsenberg, 61 Wis. 481, 21 N. W. 520, 50 Am. Rep. 149), but will lie to recover the interest a railroad company has in a right of way (New York, S. & W. R. Co. v. Trimmer, 53 N. J. Law, 1, 20 A. 761; Southern P. Co. v. Burr, 86 Cal. 279, 24 P. 1032; McLucas v. St. Joseph & G. I. R. Co. [Neb.] 93 N. W. 928), or for the interest a municipality has in public streets (San Francisco v. Grote, 120 Cal. 59, 52 P. 127, 65 Am. St. Rep. 155, 41 L. R. A. 335), In California a street railway company with a franchise to operate its cars on the street cannot maintain ejectment against a railroad company using part of a street as a right of way. Fresno St. R. Co. v. Southern P. Co., 135 Cal. 202, 67 P. 773. The action will lie to oust a railway company that has appropriated a highway. South Amboy v. New York & L. B. R. Co., 66 N. J. Law, 623, 50 A. 368; Bork v. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co., 70 N. J. Law, 268, 57 A. 412, 64 L. R. A. 836.—See note to Webster Lumber Co. v. Keystone L. & M. Co. [W. Va.] 66 L. R. A. 40.

ation of a deed of conveyance,[49] nor to enforce the payment of a lien existing on land at the time it is conveyed,[50] nor against a public corporation occupying a street within the limits of the public right.[51] Federal statutes require notice by the plaintiff to the defendant to vacate where the action is brought against an intruder on Indian lands.[52]

Title in plaintiff.[53]—The plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title,[54] and not on the weakness of the title of his adversary,[55] except where he can show that the title under which defendant claims has an intermediate common source with his own,[56] or that while in quiet and undisturbed possession, the defendant, a mere trespasser, entered and ousted him.[57] An equitable title will not sustain the action,[58] except as against a trespasser.[59] The purchaser of an equity of redemption may maintain it against the mortgagor,[60] but not against the mortgagee.[61]

The possessory action known in Louisiana may be maintained by a lessee against his lessor.[62]

Prior possession[63] is sufficient as against a trespasser or one claiming only under a later possession;[64] but where one seeks to recover on the prior possession of his predecessor in title, he must show the prior possession of his predecessor and a deed from him or from one claiming under him executed while the grantor was in actual possession.[65]

one in equity by setting up an equitable defense where no affirmative relief is asked,[67] but by the filing of amendments praying equitable relief, it may become so.[68] It is analogous to an action to quiet title in that the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, but differs from it in that it is legal,[69] and from forcible entry and unlawful detainer in that title is involved.[70] In an action to recover land purchased at foreclosure sale, an irregularity occurring at such sale cannot be inquired into.[71] The Georgia statutory action for the recovery of real property is a mixed action; partly ex delicto but mainly possessory.[72] It is in no sense an action ex contractu and cannot be joined with such an action.[73]

§ 2. Defenses.[74]—Title in the defendant[75] or that he is in possession under a contract to purchase,[76] or by virtue of homestead rights,[77] is a good defense. A ground of defense repudiated by the plea and evidence cannot be asserted.[78] There is a conflict of authority as to whether an equitable title is a good defense.[79]

A judgment in ejectment is not a bar to another action between the same parties for the same land,[80] unless such judgment is more than a mere ejectment judgment and accords the defendant full equitable relief.[81] It is not barred by bringing an inappropriate remedy for use and occupation under a license,[82] nor by the dismissal of a bill to set aside a judgment recovered against a tenant where such bill did not ask the determination of the landlord's title.[83] A judgment against a tenant is not, so far as title to the land is concerned, conclusive against the landlord who is not made a party,[84] and especially where the judgment is by default and neither tenant nor landlord appeared.[85] The action may be barred by limitations.[86]

§ 3. Parties.[87]—One co-tenant may maintain the action alone as against one who is not a co-tenant.[88] It may be maintained by an administrator alone,[89] or by the heirs of an owner,[90] but not by a temporary administrator,[91] and if joined as a party plaintiff, his name may be stricken.[92] A tenant who disclaims and surrenders possession is properly retained as a party to determine his liability for rent while in possession.[93] The wife of the holder of the record title properly made a party and charged with a personal liability for withholding the premises is required to answer.[94]

§ 4. Process and pleading.[95] Process.—In New Jersey, in ejectment against a corporation, the declaration may be annexed to the summons and served therewith.[96] This rule applies where it is necessary to obtain the judge's order directing the manner of service.[97]

The complaint[98] must contain a description of the property sufficient to identify it,[99] allege title and a right to possession,[1] and clearly state that defendant is in possession,[2] an allegation of possession being one of fact.[3] By statute in Arkansas, muniments of title may be attached to the complaint as exhibits.[4]

NOTE. Impairment of contract obligation: Ejectment by L. claiming under a quitclaim deed from P. B., defendant below, showed title through a sheriff's certificate issued upon foreclosure sale to her as mortgagee and purchaser. B. had been in possession since breach of condition by the mortgagor to pay taxes. The statute existing when the mortgage was executed did not limit the period within which the sheriff's deed was to be made. Subsequently a statute limiting such time to five years after the period of redemption had expired was passed. B. neglected to comply with the provision, and secured no deed within the prescribed time. Held, ejectment would not lie. Bradley v. Lightcap, 195 U. S. 1, 49 Law. Ed. 65.

The decision is based upon the impairment of the contract obligation wrought by the latter enactment, which the court (per Chief Justice Fuller) refuses to read into the terms of the mortgage previously made. This cause was twice before the Illinois supreme court (188 Ill. 510, 201 Ill. 511): judgment for defendant B. being first reversed, and the case remanded, and on a second appeal, judgment for plaintiff L. affirmed. The United States circuit court for the Northern District of Illinois refused to take jurisdiction of a bill to quiet title, maintaining that no Federal question was involved, the statute in question neither forfeiting B.'s title to the mortgagor, nor interfering with her title acquired by possession. This decree was affirmed on appeal. The question of impairment of contract obligations has arisen, in this connection, in numerous ways. Without impairing such obligations, it is held, the remedy afforded by law may be changed. Sturges v. Croninshield, 4 Wheaton 122. But a law creating or extending the period of redemption in favor of the mortgagor and his judgment creditors passed subsequently to the execution of the mortgage is void. Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. 118; Cargill v. Powers, 1 Mich. 369. And a law extending the period of redemption from tax sale passed after the sale, but before the redemption period is expired, is void. Robinson v. Howe, 13 Wis. 380. But as to a stranger purchasing at foreclosure sale, a change in the law subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, does not work an impairment of the contract. Hooker v. Burr, 194 U. S. 415, 48 Law. Ed. 1046. See 36 American L. Rev. 70, as to the protection afforded contracts by the Federal Constitution.—From 3 Mich. L. R. 157.

2. An allegation that at the commencement of the action plaintiff was the owner

An answer[5] must be definite in its traverse of plaintiff's title,[6] and set forth particularly the nature of the title claimed by the defendant.[7] One alleging title by adverse possession must allege that the statutory period expired prior to the commencement of the action;[8] and where title is claimed under a short-period statute, it must show that the terms of that statute have been complied with.[9] Pleading in avoidance of the title alleged is an admission of it.[10] An answer setting up a special right to possession must allege in what manner such right exists.[11] A general denial to a complaint specifically setting forth the title claimed raises no issue.[12] Under the plea of a general issue to a writ of entry, only the question of title is in issue.[13]

Amendments are allowable in ejectment as well as in other actions.[14]

§ 5. Evidence.[15]—The burden is on the plaintiff to establish his title[16] or right and in possession of the entire premises and that for about one year prior thereto defendant "had been and now is" unlawfully in possession of a described portion, is demurrable. Meacham v. Bear Valley Irr. Co., 145 Cal. 606, 79 P. 281.

of supporting his possession by a title superior to one of naked possession,[26] and neither can assail the title of the common source.[27] A conveyance by one in possession is prima facie evidence of title,[28] but a conveyance by one not in possession nor connected with the legal title is not.[29] The evidence admissible[30] is confined to the title pleaded.[31] Evidence of any defense legal or equitable may be given under a general denial.[32] Possession cannot be established by family repute,[33] and an administrator's application for leave to sell land is not evidence of title or possession in his intestate.[34] A deed, the description in which is so uncertain as to afford no means of identification of the premises, is no evidence of title[35] unless explained by parol,[36] and will not sustain a recovery.[37] An intermediate deed between the conveyance from the commonwealth and plaintiff's title is not admissible without evidence of a line of paper title from the grantee of the commonwealth to the grantor in the deed offered in evidence.[38] Such a deed is admissible, however, on a claim of title by adverse possession, or where it is connected with the grant of the commonwealth by recitals.[39] Where plaintiff relies on a deed coming from his own possession, defendant may rely on an indorsement thereon showing it to be void without proof of execution.[40]

§ 6. Trial and judgment.[41]—The United States courts in the Indian Territory have jurisdiction of an action by a Cherokee Indian or the Cherokee Nation to recover land from an intruder.[42]

In North Carolina the defendant is required to file a bond for costs and damages,[43] and in Arkansas, in an action to recover land held under tax title, the plaintiff must make affidavit of a tender of the amount paid if the sale is void for irregularities of officers.[44]

If a complaint states a cause of action in ejectment,[45] it will be tried as such, though erroneously styled.[46] A different cause of action and source of title cannot be introduced into the case after issue joined.[47]

Instructions must meet the usual requirements[48] and should not deny a party the benefit of the presumptions arising from prior possession.[49]

In determining what judgment shall be entered on a special verdict, only the pleadings and postea can be looked to; evidence cannot be considered.[50] The holder of the legal title is bound by a judgment against the tenant where he is notified of the action and conducted the defense;[51] but under a statute providing that a judgment shall be conclusive as to title and right to possession as to the party against whom it is rendered and those claiming under him after commencement of the action, a judgment against a tenant who removes prior to execution is not binding on the landlord or a subsequent tenant.[52] A Virginia office judgment in ejectment cannot become final without the intervention of a court or jury,[53] but may be made final without inquiry at a subsequent term where no claim for damages is filed.[54] A judgment must be enforced within a year and a day after rendition both at common law and by the statute of Virginia.[55] It will not be reversed on plaintiff's appeal for error in allowing all instead of only one defendant to recover for im-

45. A complaint against a tenant at will alleging that he refused to surrender the premises after notice to quit, and demanding restitution of the premises and triple damages and costs states a cause of action in ejectment. Hayden v. Collins [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1120.

46. Evidence of title is admissible under a complaint stating a cause of action in ejectment, though the action is erroneously styled one in forcible entry. Hayden v. Collins [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1120.

47. Where plaintiff bases his right of recovery solely on the location of a mining claim and the sole issue raised was whether he had forfeited his rights, he cannot after the case is before the jury rely on adverse possession. White River Min. & Nav. Co. v. Langston [Ark.] 88 S. W. 971.

48. Not make the case depend on a single issue if there are others to be considered. Campbell v. Bates [Ala.] 39 So. 144. Not specifically call attention to a particular item of evidence. Id.

49. Where both parties claim by adverse possession, an instruction denying one the presumed rights arising from prior possession of which the other had notice is erroneous. Dorlan v. Westervitch, 140 Ala. 283, 37 So. 382. And if neither show a muniment of title better than the other, an instruction placing one party in the attitude of a trespasser is erroneous. Id.

50. In an action by borough authorities to recover a portion of a street, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment where the pleadings and postea show that the locus in quo was part of a street and application was made by both parties to enter judgment on a special verdict. Borough of Seabright v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 60 A. 64.

52. They cannot be considered as claiming through or under the tenant against whom judgment was rendered. King v. Davis, 137 F. 198.

53, 54. King v. Davis, 137 F. 198.

55. A judgment not enforced by writ of possession within a year and a day after entry thereof will not support a writ of provements;[56] but where judgment by default is irregularly taken and plaintiff put into possession under a writ, the court in striking the judgment should award restitution if the property has not been sold.[57]

A writ of possession[58] is not exhausted by one dispossession.[59] One in possession who was not a party to the action cannot be disturbed by virtue of it;[60] but the holder of an independent title, not a party to the action, who acquires the defendant's title pendente lite, may be ousted, though his independent title has not been litigated.[61]

Costs.—In Wisconsin a disclaimer by a defendant holder of the record title does not entitle him to a judgment for costs,[62] but a disclaimer by one charged with a personal liability for withholding the premises constitutes a complete defense.[63]

§ 7. New trial.[64]

§ 8. Mesne profits and damages.[65]—In many states it is provided by statute that damages for detention of the premises may be recovered[66] if properly pleaded.[67] A prayer for mesne profits and damages may be set up by amendment to the original complaint.[68]

§ 9. Allowance for improvements and expenditures.[69]—As a general rule, only improvements made in good faith and without notice of adverse claims to the premises can be recovered for.[70] Hence one who makes improvements with actual or constructive notice of superior rights of another cannot recover for them,[71] though through mistake of law he regards his title as superior.[72] Statutes allowing entry subsequently issued. King v. Davis, 137 F. 198.

56. Where one defendant is entitled to recover for improvements but others are not, a judgment erroneous in that it allows a recovery for all is not ground for reversal on plaintiff's exception. Boucher v. Tremhley [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 184, 103 N. W. 819.

63. Not having a record title, Laws 1901, c. 152, p. 186 does not apply. Stephenson v. Doolittle, 123 Wis. 36, 100 N. W. 1041.

Moragne [Ala.] 39 So. 161.

70. A purchaser with notice of his grantor's violation of a condition subsequent in his deed is not entitled to recover for improvements. Van Tassell v. Wakefield, 214 Ill. 205, 73 N. E. 340. In order to claim for improvements under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10,995, defendants must have occupied under color of title and have been in possession six years. Boucher v. Trembley [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 184, 103 N. W. 819. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10,995, where a husband and wife occupied premises as a homestead but he died before the expiration of six years and his widow continued the occupancy and made improvements, held, she was entitled to recover for improvements. a defendant to recover for improvements are not retroactive as to occupancy.[73] The statutes of some states give the plaintiff an election to pay the value of the improvements or sell the land to the defendant.[74] A defendant desiring reimbursement for improvements must make his claim by proper averments in his answer;[75] but the striking of an answer as frivolous does not preclude a recovery.[76] Where there is a prayer for damages for detention, a tender of money for improvements need not be brought into court.[77] In some states a claim for improvements must be made by petition after judgment,[78] and that a claim is not set up in the action does not preclude the defendant from thereafter while still in possession maintaining a suit in equity therefor.[79]

ELECTIONS.[80]

§ 1. Legal authorization, time, place and notice.[81]—Authority always comes from the constitution and statutes under it prescribing occasions which befall either periodically or are created at irregular times by petition of electors, legislative submission or the like.[82] A petition must be signed by such electors in such number as the law fixes.[83] It may, if the statute shows no contrary policy, be withdrawn and refiled.[84] Where a certain local policy is submitted, a petition which is legally insufficient does not have precedence over a legal petition, covering overlapping

73. To give them such effect would invalidate them as affecting vested rights. Investment Co. v. Hambach, 37 Wash. 629, 80 P. 190.

74. Under the Kansas occupying claimants' law if the defendants are entitled to the value of improvements and the plaintiff elects to sell to them and they refuse a deed, the value of the land specially found in the action should be adjudged a first lien. Bruner v. Hunt [Kan.] 81 P. 194.

75. Evidence of improvements is not admissible unless claim therefor is made in the answer. Carraway v. Moore [Ark.] 86 S. W. 993.

76. Does not preclude the defendant from making proof of equitable claims for tax certificates, fees, recording, etc. Stephenson v. Doolittle, 123 Wis. 36, 100 N. W. 1041.

77. Price v. Cherokee Nation [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 893.

78. Cannot be set up at the trial of the action. Wood v. Tinsley [N. C.] 51 S. E. 59.

79. Patillo v. Martin, 107 Mo. App. 653, 83 S. W. 1010. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 3075, 3076, nothing but the value of improvements can be adjudicated, therefore an action for a portion of the purchase price paid is not brought under such statute. Id.

80. Scope of topic. The law of elections is not regarded as including that of offices and officers or their remedial rights (see Officers and Public Employes, 4 C. L. 854; Mandamus, 4 C. L. 506; Quo Warranto, 4 C. L. 1177) nor does it include appointive votes whereby public bodies like "boards" or "councils" chose officers (see Officers and Public Employes, 4 C. L. 854). Many questions pertinent to elections, whereby voters act on matters of law or local policy submitted to them are not susceptible of any generalization. Therefore in addition to this topic the topics Animals (stock law elections) 5 C. L. 113; Constitutional Law (adoption and amendment) 5 C. L. 620; Intoxicating Liquors (local option elections) 4 C. L. 252; Municipal Bonds, 4 C. L. 706; Municipal Corporations, 4 C. L. 720; Public Works and Improvements, 4 C. L. 1124; Schools and Education, 4 C. L. 1401, should be consulted as to elections specially relating to such matters.

81. See 3 C. L. 1165.

82. See 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2d Ed.] 562.

83. A petition for referendum in a municipal election under the Wisconsin statute requires the signature of 20 per cent. of the very names appearing on the last poll list. State v. Russell [Wis.] 102 N. W. 1052.

84. A petition for an election under the Brannock Law may be withdrawn, and the boundaries of the proposed district changed, and the petition refiled; and it is immaterial if in refiling the old sheets are used, without having the signers rewrite their territory, which is properly filed before the insufficient petition is made sufficient.[85] Matters of local policy referred to voters must be described with certainty in the petition,[86] and the order calling the election must conform.[87]

Time.[88]—A fixed and authoritative time for holding an election is indispensable to a full and effectual exercise of the right to vote;[89] but a substantial observance is sufficient, and a slight variance will not invalidate,[90] except where the time is mandatory.[91]

Place.[92]—It is also imperative that the place of holding an election shall be fixed. An election held at any other than the designated place is void;[93] but where result could not have been affected, an election held on the precinct boundary but outside was sustained.[94]

Precincts[95] may be created or changed by statute or under statutory authority as public convenience may require,[96] and their boundaries may become fixed by long public recognition.[97]

Notice[98] of some kind is essential to the validity of an election.[99] But the time and place of holding general elections is usually fixed by public laws of which all are bound to take notice.[1] Provisions, therefore, for giving notice, are to be names, provided only that the signers assent to the change in the boundaries, and constitute forty per cent. of the electors of the district so changed. City of Columbus v. Glackin, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 356.

89. The provision of the Nebraska constitution (Section 13, art. 18), that "the general election of this state shall be held on Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November of each year," is not of itself an imperative command that general elections shall be held annually. State v. Galusha [Neb.] 104 N. W. 197.

90. See 3 C. L. 1166, n. 22. Under a statute that a local option election shall not be held within two years of a former election, that the result of the former election was published within the two years does not invalidate a subsequent election. Ex parte Smith [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 718, 88 S. W. 245.

91. The provision of the Brannock Law that an election shall be held not less than twenty or more than thirty days after the filing of the petition is mandatory, and compliance therewith is essential to the validity of the election. City of Columbus v. Cole, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 353.

92. See 3 C. L. 1166.

93. See 3 C. L. 1166, n. 27. But though the polling place is in a room not opening on a public thoroughfare, it having been established by the proper authorities, and been the authorized and usual voting place for years, its location does not render the election void. Choisser v. York, 211 Ill. 56, 71 N. E. 940.

94. The designation, in an order for an election and the proclamation giving notice thereof under the Brannock Law, of a voting place on the opposite side of a street forming one of the boundaries of the proposed district and fifteen feet beyond the center of the street where the boundary line runs, is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the will of the voters as expressed by a decided majority, in the absence of any showing of fraud, or that any electors were misled thereby or deprived of an opportunity to vote, or that the result would have been different had the voting place and booth been properly located within the district. In re Petition of John F. Ammer, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 329.

95. See 3 C. L. 1166, n. 27.

96. In New Hampshire it is within the general power of the legislature to divide towns into voting precincts, and have elections of all officers by precinct meetings instead of town meetings. In re Opinion of the Justices [N. H.] 60 A. 847. A statutory provision that precincts should not be changed within 90 days preceding an election has no reference to a special election upon question of creating a school district. Rader v. Board of Education of Beaver Dist. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 240.

97. Where for many years certain lines have been recognized by election judges as the true lines of a township, votes cast in reliance thereon will not be excluded, though cast in wrong township. Lovewell v. Bowen [Ark.] 88 S. W. 570.

98. See 3 C. L. 1166.

99. Where notice of vacancy in an office and of an election to fill the vacancy is required by law, it will be presumed that such notice was given, and the burden rests upon one who assails the validity of the election to show the want of notice. Rodwell v. Rowland, 137 N. C. 617, 50 S. E. 319.

1. Where a statute authorized the submission, at an annual election of borough officers, of the question of the issuance of bonds, failure of the notice of submission of this question to state place of election was not fatal. Fletcher v. Collingswood [N. J. Law] 59 A. 90.

regarded as merely directory.[2] The manner of notice prescribed in an act specially relating to one kind of elections respecting the public policy of a region is not abrogated by a law relating to general elections.[3] An irregularity in the publication of a proclamation by the mayor will not be considered, where it appears that notice to voters of the pendency of the election was so general that more votes were cast that at the last preceding election,[4] and a misnomer of the office by virtue of which the election was called has been disregarded.[5]

§ 2. Eligibility and registration of electors.[6]—These are matters of state concern to be fixed by their organic law or legislation within limitations of the Federal or state constitution.[7] The right to vote is usually limited to citizens[8] or freemen[9] who have attained their majority,[10] who are sane in mind,[11] and sometimes depends upon the payment of taxes.[12]

Residence.[13]—One of the more common requirements is that the person offering to vote shall for a given period have been a resident[14] of the district within which the election is held. It is competent for a state to require a stated residence and a prior registration of intent to become a voter.[15] Persons in the public service,[16] students in attendance at a college or university,[17] neither gain nor lose a residence.[18]

Registration.[19]—As a means of determining who possess the qualifications of voters, and of regulating the exercise of the right,[20] statutes have been passed in nearly all the states requiring the names of those entitled to vote to be previously recorded by officers designated for that purpose,[21] though as to some elections[22]

11. 21. Yates v. Collins, 26 Ky. L. R. 930, 82 S. W. 973.

22. While the charter of the city of Thomasville declares that no person who is not duly registered shall be allowed to vote in any election, there is no provision for or localities it is not made necessary. A registration taken without legal warrant has no force in determining who or how many are qualified.[23] Registration laws must be just, reasonable, uniform and impartial,[24] not impairing constitutional rights of suffrage,[25] and statutory requirements as to time, place and manner of registration must be substantially complied with.[26] The name of a voter properly qualified may not at a subsequent meeting of the registration board be arbitrarily stricken from the lists.[27]

§ 3. Nominations by convention or petition.[28] Conventions and nominations.[29]—Conventions can only make such nominations as are specified in the call,[30] but the convention may delegate to a committee such authority as it itself possesses.[31]

Petitions.[32]—A provision that the elector shall "subscribe" excludes a signing by another.[33] An elector may sign but one petition in Rhode Island.[34] Where, as in Rhode Island, the petition is to be examined to determine which of the signers are qualified as shown by the voting list, no initials or abbreviations can be recognized except what are shown by the voting list.[35]

Certificates and declination and vacancies.[36]—The certificate must comply substantially with the statute,[37] naming the candidates and the offices,[38] and be filed at the proper time.[39] Under the Nebraska statute, a candidate declining a nomination must do so at least 12 days before the election.[40] A failure to properly certify nominations may result in a vacancy which a committee may fill.[41]

§ 4. Official ballot.[44]—The official ballot must be in substantial compliance with the form prescribed by statute.[45] A form which provides for a means of voting a "party" ticket has been held not offensive to the guaranty of freedom of elections.[46] Questions submitted must not be so couched as to render the vote ambiguous.[47] Statutes designed to protect the secrecy of the ballot usually forbid the use of other than white paper for the ballots.[48] A party emblem may be legally displayed, though not all the names of candidates who adopted it appear beneath.[49] Statutes which probibit the printing of a candidate's name in more than one column are constitutional.[50]

Use of party name.[51]—A substantial number of persons having an organization with the distinct views and policies is a political party,[52] and entitled to the benefit and exclusive use of a party name.[53] In Montana only one ticket may appear on a ballot under a particular party designation.[54]

§ 5. Primary elections.[55]—The legislatures of many states have brought nominating elections, called "primary elections," by which the nominees of a party or delegates to its nominating conventions are chosen, under the surveillance and protection of the law.[56] Proceedings under such statutes must conform substantially to the law as to time[57] and notice.[58] The provision of the Michigan primary statute, which requires that before the name of any candidate shall be placed on the ballot at a primary election such candidate shall on oath declare his purpose to become such, is unconstitutional.[59]

44. See 3 C. L. 1170.

45. See 3 C. L. 1170, n. 70. Under the general rule that a mere irregularity in form, which does not mislead the electors, will not invalidate an election, the court holds that the form of ballot used in this case, although not the form laid down in the statute, is not a sufficient reason for invalidating the election, and especially in view of the fact that the contestors by participating in the election sanctioned the form of ballot used. In re South Charleston Election Contest, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 373.

46. Provisions that there shall be printed at the left of ballots a list of the names of all the political parties, with squares at the right of each party named, and instructions as to method of voting party ticket, are not unconstitutional as interfering with freedom of elections. Oughton v. Black [Pa.] 61 A. 346.

47. Ballot in the alternative, "for or against the proposition of construction or purchase of waterworks," held to have rendered election nugatory. Marcellus v. Garfield [N. J. Law] 58 A. 1099.

48. Where paper of prescribed quality had become exhausted and a paper somewhat lighter in weight and color was used, no fraud appearing, election sustained. People v. Voorhis, 45 Misc. 104, 91 N. Y. S. 595.

49. The mere fact that a printed ballot contains at the head thereof the emblem legally adopted by a political party, but does not contain all of the names of the candidates adopting it, does not render the ballot void. Esquibel v. Chaves [N. M.] 78 P. 505.

If a political party casts the requisite number of votes in a general state election, it is entitled by virtue of that fact to have its nominees for local and district offices placed upon the ballot, even if it did not cast the requisite percentage of votes in the particular county or district for which the nomination was made. Gaylord v. Curry, 145 Cal. 154, 78 P. 548.

57. Nominees of a primary convention held entitled to have names printed on ballot, though petition was filed but 27 instead of 30 days before date of election. Ellis v. Wheatly [Cal.] 81 P. 1105.

58. A petition which alleges a call by the party central committee for primaries to elect delegates to city convention, but which fails to allege notice given of the primary election, is defective. State v. McCaffery [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1104.

59. Dapper v. Smith [Mich.] 101 N. W. 60.

Note: Article XVIII, § 1, of the State Constitution provides the oath which shall be required for qualification to an office, and further provides that no other oath shall be required. Where the constitution states the qualifications of an officeholder, the state legislatures can neither add to nor other-

Control by party committees.[60]—Primary elections are usually under the control of the party governing committee,[61] subject, however, to provisions of law governing their mode of action.[62]

Ballots for primaries. Review and contest of primary.[63]—In case of contest or dispute over a party nomination, the governing authorities of that party are usually given exclusive jurisdiction to determine it,[64] in which event their action is final.[65] A member of a party committee who is a brother of a contestee in a contest of a nomination for office pending before the committee is disqualified to sit in the proceeding.[66] The grounds of contest should be filed before such committee and notice given the contestee.[67] Where the time within which a contest must be begun is fixed by statute, the resolution of a committee fixing a different time is void.[68]

§ 6. Officers of election.[69]—If the tribunal required by law to appoint election commissioners fails to appoint such commissioners, the qualified voters present on election day may elect them in the manner prescribed[70] by statutes in nearly all the states. Where it is provided that officers shall be appointed from lists submitted as "provided by law," but the provision is one for convenience only, the appointment may be made, though no list is submitted and no law provides for one.[71] One cannot officiate at his own election,[72] but that one of the judges of an election for the incorporation of a school district was at the time a candidate for the office of trustee of the district did not render the incorporation election void.[73]

The duties of members of a canvassing board being ministerial, they are liable for the salary of a county officer who is kept out of office by the wrongful refusal of the board to recognize the certificate of precinct officers.[74]

An assignee of an election inspector's claim for compensation cannot maintain an action for conversion of certain cards bearing the inspector's signature, and which cards had been filed in the office of the board of elections.[75]

§ 7. Polling the vote.[76]—The state may make such reasonable regulations for the holding of elections and the voting thereat as shall protect and preserve the right of the elector to exercise the franchise;[77] but the votes of innocent electors wise change them. Thomas v. Owens, 4 Md. 189, 223; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. [Ky.] 648, 661. If the above provision (Loc. Acts 1903, p. 142, No. 326), of the Kent County Primary Laws were valid then the franchise rights of the voters would be limited, for they would be unable to vote for any person who would not declare his candidacy. No man who was not seeking an office could be elected to it. In the case of Attorney General v. Common Council, 58 Mich. 213, 55 Am. Rep. 675, the doctrine is announced that the election franchise is the same in all parts of the state and cannot be essentially changed in any locality by legislation to regulate its exercise.—From 3 Mich. L. R. 237.

77. A statute closing polls in cities of 300,000 inhabitants or over at four o'clock P. M. at November elections held to be a

are not to be rendered invalid by mere irregularities on the part of election officials;[78] though where it is plain that the irregularities have changed or rendered doubtful the result,[79] or where mandatory provisions have been dispensed with, the election is vitiated.[80] Provisions of law in regard to the preparation and distribution of ballots by designated officers are mandatory, and must be strictly construed.[81] An election is void in which one precinct of the county is deprived of an opportunity to vote by not having ballots furnished it,[82] nor can there be a subsequent election in such precinct to supply the deficiency.[83] The voter must appear and prepare his ballot in person,[84] and until a voter either qualifies by showing his right to vote or offers to do so by making affidavit, he is not a rejected voter.[85] Where, on an application to strike a name from registered list, there is any dispute as to facts, the judges should not interfere but permit voter to swear in his vote at his peril.[86]

Voting by machine.—Constitutional provisions declaring that all votes shall be by ballot do not render invalid statutory enactments providing for the use of voting machines.[87]

Curative legislation will not validate a corrupt and fraudulent election.[88]

§ 8. Irregularity and ambiguity in ballot.[89]—While the intent of the voter is material in determining the validity and effect of a ballot,[90] and he should not be disfranchised or deprived of his right to vote through mere inadvertence, mistake, or ignorance, if an honest intention can be ascertained from his ballot,[91] yet

Election for subscribing stock in railroad enterprise. Red River Furnace Co. v. Tennessee Cent. R. Co. [Tenn.] 87 S. W. 1016. Failure to use the register of voters will not avoid the election, it not appearing that any illegal votes were cast in consequence thereof. Choisser v. York, 211 Ill. 56, 71 N. E. 940. Minor irregularities by members of an election board, voters, and bystanders at a polling place, unaccompanied by fraud or conduct affecting the integrity of the ballot, will not operate to quash the election. Bingham v. Broadwell [Neb.] 103 N. W. 323. The fact that one vote was cast after the time fixed by law for the closing of the polls is no ground for excluding the entire vote of a precinct, but when, even if the vote of the precinct were counted as cast, the result of the election would not be changed, mandamus will not issue to require the superintendents to reconsolidate the vote of the county so as to include the votes of the precinct. Gilliam v. Green [Ga.] 50 S. E. 137.

Maloney v. Collier, 112 Tenn. 78, 83 S. W. 667.

80. To avoid the result of an election because of irregularities in conducting it, it must be shown that some mandatory statute was violated, or that the election was conducted in such illegal manner that the true sentiment of the electors was not expressed by it, or that it is impossible to know whether it was expressed. O'Laughlin v. Kirkwood, 107 Mo. App. 302, 81 S. W. 512. Use of rubber stamp in placing initials of an election official on ballot is mandatory. Choisser v. York, 211 Ill. 56, 71 N. E. 940.

Anderson, 145 Cal. 320, 78 P. 626. It is competent for judges of election, upon being informed that a qualified voter, who is unable to leave his carriage, has been driven up to the curbstone, to go out to the carriage and receive his ballot and deposit it in the ballot box; and were such not the case the irregularity is one which should be charged to the election officers rather than to the voter, and is not of a character which would interfere with a free expression of the people's choice. 91. Choisser v. York, 211 Ill. 56, 71 N. E. 940. Irregular and defective or unauthoriz-such intent, to become effectual, must be expressed comformably to the imperative requirements of law.[92] The penalty of losing his ballot will not, in the absence of a statute so declaring, be imposed upon a voter because of informalities in his ballot due to a violation of law by others and for which he is in no sense responsible.[93]

The marks.[94]—Where the voter indicates his choice by writing the name upon, or by pasting a printed sticker containing the name upon the official ballot, a cross mark after the name so written or pasted is not necessary to entitle it to be counted.[95] Ballots marked with a cross in the square under the party name at the head of a party column, and a cross extending over the whole column, of such party, thereby crossing out other candidates named in that column are void,[96] and in California ballots containing a stamp or cross in the blank opposite "no nomination" are thereby rendered illegal,[97] although there may be a large number of such ballots.[98]

The writing in of names.[99]—Official ballots upon which the elector has placed printed stickers or written in name in the manner provided by statute are not rendered unofficial by that fact, and must be received and counted.[1]

§ 9. Distinguishing marks on ballot.[2]—An illegal mark upon a ballot, or a legal mark illegally placed, which may serve as a distinguishing mark, will invalidate the ballot, and necessitate its exclusion from the count.[3] The intent of a voter in making a distinguishing mark on his ballot cannot be shown other than by what appears upon the face of the ballot.[4]

§ 10. Count, canvass and return,[5] custody of ballots and recount.[6]—The casting of a ballot which is not properly marked is not the casting of a vote, and in determining the number of votes cast, only those should be counted upon which the expression of a choice is indicated.[7] The record of a popular election is made up and finally completed at the polls.[8] The duty of determining in the first instance the choice of the electors is usually imposed upon the board or officers whose duty it is to count the ballots,[9] and the election of the person chosen should be certified pursuant to the result.[10] A provision that after the votes are counted

ed markings of a ballot, apparently the result of innocent awkwardness, inattention, or ignorance, and apparently not intended or made use of for the purpose of subsequent identification, will not justify the rejection of such ballots, if the intent of the voter can be ascertained therefrom. Return.[12]—The certificate of a canvassing board carries a presumption of the proper discharge of duties,[13] and is prima facie evidence of the right of the holder to the office.[14] Official returns are quasi records and stand until overcome by affirmative evidence against their integrity.[15] Failure of election officers to sign and return a certificate on the stub book as required by statute was held not sufficient to throw out vote of the precinct.[16]

Recount of ballots.[17]—On a recount the regular custodian or in case of his refusal an appointee of the canvassing board should receive and keep in custody the ballots and ballot boxes during recesses.[18] If one who has been declared elected is present at a recount to guard his interests, he is not estopped thereby from setting up the illegality of the recount.[19] Where the correctness of a canvass was not assailed, a private citizen was not entitled to mandamus to compel a second count on ground that original count was not made by the officers authorized by law.[20]

§ 11. Judicial control and supervision.[21]—In respect to party contentions peculiar to the province of party tribunals, the courts have no power.[22] Ordinarily the courts cannot review or correct the decision of the governing or central committee,[23] but the courts may require the committee to act or it may restrain them from acting when they have no jurisdiction.[24] Primary contests are usually settled before party committees or tribunals.[25] How the vote shall be canvassed or how certain ballots shall be counted will not be controlled by the courts.[26] Courts will

Mason v. Byrley [Ky.] 84 S. W. 767. Under section 10 of the Illinois Australian ballot act of 1891 (Laws 1891, p. 110), requiring the secretary of state to refer objections to certificates of nomination to the county judges of the counties comprising the district in which the nominations are made, and providing that the decision of such judges shall be final, the supreme court cannot, in a proceeding by mandamus, review the action of the county judges, nor can it ignore that action and take original cognizance of the matter, although the decision of the county judges is contrary to law. People v. Rose, 211 Ill. 249, 71 N. E. 1123.

25. See ante, § 5. The court of common pleas in Ohio is without jurisdiction to restrain the deputy state supervisors of the county from considering certificates of nomination issued to rival candidates of the same party and the controversy arising thereon. 26. People v. Hanes, 44 Misc. 475, 90 N. Y. S. 61. But see In re Blake [Conn.] 60 A. 265 [Advance sheets only]. The duty of an election board to canvass the votes cast at an election is a political duty prescribed by expedite the decision of questions involving the holding of an impending election.[27]

Mandamus[28] will not issue in anticipation of an omission of duty, or to compel the performance of a discretionary one,[29] nor unless the relator shows a clear legal right to the relief sought;[30] but where a duty respecting the holding of an election is clearly obligatory, mandamus will lie.[31] It has been held that mandatory injunction is the proper remedy to require election judges to correct their returns by adding votes omitted by mistake or oversight, the duties of such officers being ministerial,[32] and where a board of canvassers has dissolved before properly performing its func-statute and cannot be enjoined by the courts, State v. Carlson [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1004. Common council acting as a canvassing board held not to have power to determine that one receiving a majority of votes for alderman is ineligible because not a taxpayer. People v. Burns, 94 N. Y. S. 196.

NOTE. Mandamus against Canvassing Boards: In Ex parte Mackey, 15 S. C. 322, the court quoted with approval from McCrary on Elections, 106, 107, where it is said: "That the doctrine that canvassing boards and return judges are ministerial officers, possessing no discretionary or judicial powers, is settled in nearly or quite all the states. * * * There are statutes in some of the states which expressly confer upon a board of canvassing officers the power to revise the returns of an election, to take proof, and in their discretion to reject such votes as they deem illegal. Such a statute exists in Texas, and in Alabama, and in Louisiana and Florida." See, also, People v. County Com'rs, 6 Colo. 202, as to such officers having no judicial power.

In State v. Deane, 23 Fla. 121, 1 So. 698, 11 Am. St. Rep. 343, it was held that where such officers were called upon to exercise their discretion in determining whether a ballot was "scratched," and they decided that it was, mandamus would not lie to control that discretion.

If the canvassing board improperly performed its duty, mandamus lies; but not if it did so properly, according to the returns before it, in which case a contest should be brought. Steele v. Meade, 98 Ky. 614, 33 S. W. 944. If a contest be allowed for errors during elections, that remedy must be pursued (State v. Stewart, 26 Ohio St. 216), and if an appeal lies, mandamus does not; but the power of congress to judge of the election returns of its members does not constitute another remedy within the meaning of the rule, and in such a case mandamus is the proper remedy (Ex parte Mackey, 15 S. C. 322).

It is the duty of the election officers to canvass all the votes cast, and mandamus will issue to compel its performance. State v. Stearns, 11 Neb. 104, 7 N. W. 743; State v. Barber, 4 Wyo. 56, 32 P. 14. So the legislative canvass of votes by the speaker is ministerial, and the writ will issue to enforce it. State v. Elder, 31 Neb. 169, 47 N. W. 710, 10 L. R. A. 796.

The writ is the proper remedy, according to several decisions, to compel the board to reconvene and recanvass the vote, and it makes no difference that they had adjourned. Belknap v. Canvasser of Ionia County, 94 Mich. 516, 54 N. W. 376; State v. Peacock, 15 Neb. 442, 19 N. W. 685; State v. Hill, 20 Neb. 119, 29 N. W. 258; People v. Schiellein, 95 N. Y. 124. Speaking in this connection, the court in State v. McFadden, 46 Neb. 668, 65 N. W. 800, said: "The law imposes upon the canvassers the duty of canvassing the returns exactly as filed with the county clerk by the election boards, and, until the canvassers have so compiled the vote, their task is uncompleted. They have no right to adjourn without, until they have finished their work. It has been repeatedly decided that after they have made one canvass, declared the result, and adjourned, they may be compelled by mandamus to reassemble and make a correct canvass of all the returns, where it appears that upon the first canvass they neglected or refused to fully perform their duty."

There is, however, another view, which holds that when a canvassing board has concluded its labors and finally adjourned, it is functus officio, and the court cannot by mandamus compel it to reconvene and recount the votes. Rosenthal v. State Canvassers, 50 Kan. 129, 32 P. 129, 19 L. R. A. 157.

Mandamus will not lie to compel a recanvass of votes where there is a mode of contesting election provided by statute. State v. Hamil, 97 Ala. 107, 11 So. 892; Houston v. Steele, 98 Ky. 596, 28 S. W. 662.

The writ will issue to compel election officers to make further returns and to correct errors, where the returns are defective (People v. City of Syracuse, 88 Hun [N. Y.] 203, 34 N. Y. S. 661), and to convene and declare the result of an election (Morgan v. County Court, 53 W. Va. 372, 44 S. E. 182).—From note State v. Gardner [Wash.] 98 Am. St. Rep. 888.

tions, its members may, by mandamus, be compelled to reconvene and recanvass the votes in accordance with the direction of a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.[33] A mandamus to compel common council to grant a certificate of election should be directed to persons who were members of the council at the time of the election and not to their successors.[34] An original action does not lie to require the board of registry to strike from the registry the name of a person alleged to be disqualified to vote.[35]

Injunction.[36]—The jurisdiction of courts of chancery is confined to questions arising relative to property or civil rights, and the mere right to office, or the nomination to an office, cannot be regulated or controlled by writ of injunction.[37]

§ 12. Judicial proceedings to contest or review.[38] Rights and remedies.[39]—Certiorari may lie to review the action of a board passing in the first instance on election questions or contests.[40] Under the system which obtains in some states whereby the supreme court is required to give its opinion on important questions when requested by a co-ordinate branch of the government, the supreme court may give an opinion on request of the senate as to whether, on a contest over the office of governor, the general assembly may adopt a report to the effect that it is impossible to separate legal from illegal votes, and that no person was elected governor, and declare a vacancy in that office.[41]

Jurisdiction.[42]—Courts of original jurisdiction may hear issues arising out of a contest,[43] and the original jurisdiction of courts of latter resort may in proper cases be invoked.[44] Statutory proceedings to contest must conform closely to the statute in respect to time[45] and notice,[46] else jurisdiction may not attach.[47] Orders made by judges for elections which are merely ministerial and not judgments of the court,[48] may be reviewed by an associate judge, notwithstanding a rule against the review of the judgments of associate judges.[49]

Pleadings and issues.[50]—A suit to contest an election is a civil suit brought to recover and enforce a civil right, and the rules of pleading in civil actions are applicable thereto except where otherwise provided by statute.[51] The contestant must exhibit a sufficient petition,[52] properly verified,[53] as particular as can practicably and reasonably be made,[54] showing that the election was valid and that he received a majority of the votes cast by the qualified electors,[55] that he is one who has a right to institute the contest,[56] and since a candidate who has received a certificate of election has a prima facie title thereto, a contestant should show on the face of his pleading a clear right to the office.[57] Where anything occurs after the commencement of a contest and after the time of pleadings which is a relevant and necessary fact in aid of the original grounds, it may be asserted as an amendment of the petition.[58] Amendments corrective of defective allegations must be timely.[59] On appeal under the Nebraska law from the decision of a county court in a contested election case, it is not necessary to file new pleadings in the district court.[60]

Dismissal.[61]

Preservation and production of ballots.[62]—The ballots are the best evidence of the result of an election, if they have been properly preserved, and have not been exposed to the reach of unauthorized persons.[63] Whether ballots have been sufficiently taken care of so as to preclude any reasonable suspicion that they are not in their original condition is a question largely in the discretion of the trial court.[64]

Evidence.[65]—Certificates of the result of an election made by the commissioners at the precincts are prima facie evidence of the result of the election. The ballots, if identified as the same cast, are primary and higher evidence; but, in order to continue the ballots as controlling evidence, it must appear that they have been pre-

In re South Charleston Election Contest, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 373. A contestant is not required to allege the facts as to each separate ballot unless the particular facts will apply to a specific ballot only. If there are a number of ballots to which the same allegations will apply, the pleader may adopt them. Robertson v. Grant County Com'rs, 14 Okl. 407, 79 P. 97. The allegation in a petition for an election contest that "many legal votes" cast for petitioner were unlawfully thrown out, destroyed or miscounted without stating the number, is too indefinite. Choisser v. York, 211 Ill. 56, 71 N. E. 940. When all the ballots cast at all the precincts in an election held in the county have been kept in proper custody, and the packages of ballots voted at one of the precincts nevertheless bear evidence of having been tampered with, that fact does not vitiate the ballots cast at the other precincts. served in the manner and by the officers prescribed by the statute, and while in such custody they have not been changed or tampered with.[66] Testimony of election commissioners that a majority of votes cast were in the negative is incompetent, in the absence of a showing that the original returns had been destroyed or could not be procured.[67] The rejection and destruction of ballots by the judges of election is not final or conclusive, but the contents thus rejected and destroyed may be shown by parol.[68] Under statutes requiring evidence in election contests to be taken by deposition, oral testimony may not be taken.[69] Where one has been declared elected by the board of canvassers and holds office under such determination, the presumption arises that he received the number of votes stated in the certificate;[70] but no presumption arises from statutory authority to use voting machines that such machines and the registers of the votes which they disclose remain unchanged between the close of an election and a subsequent contest.[71] Questions relative to the propriety of counting or rejecting particular ballots are discussed in the note.[72] Where an election turned upon the vote of an insane person, and there is no way of determining which way the one thus afflicted voted, a court will deduct one vote from the proposition receiving the greatest number of votes, and the result being thus made a tie, the court will declare that there was no majority either way and no election under the statute.[73]

Decision and review thereof.[74]—When authority to hear an election contest is conferred upon a judicial officer, and there is no provision of law for a review of his decision, it is final.[75] A certificate submitting to the supreme court for decision a question as to the rejection of a ballot at the state election, to be communicated to the secretary of state, is not such a reservation as is contemplated by the statute authorizing reservation of questions of law.[76] Findings as to the number of illegal votes and for whom they were cast being made on conflicting evidence heard in open court will not be disturbed unless manifestly wrong.[77] Where an appealing contestee in an election contest did not bring up any of the ballots, the counting or

The political parties to which persons casting illegal votes belonged being shown, and there being no other evidence as to how they voted, the ballots are properly deducted on the theory that the persons voted their party ticket. Id. Where it appeared that 109 ballots were in box and but 107 persons had voted, and where 2 ballots were found folded together, it was duty of the board under the statute to throw out 3 ballots so as to make number of ballots conform to number of persons voting. In re Village of Webster, 102 App. Div. 202, 92 N. Y. S. 658. rejection of which was complained of by him, the supreme court could not reverse the judgment on any point arising out of the rulings on particular ballots.[78]

Security for appeal; costs.[79]—An appeal bond in an election contest conditioned that appellant will perform the judgment if affirmed does not make the surety responsible for anything more than the surrender of the office if the judgment is affirmed.[80] When the supreme court on appeal reverses the judgment of the circuit court in an election contest, and orders the petition filed to be dismissed, the appellant is entitled to costs in that court.[81]

§ 13. Offenses against election laws.[82]—The authority conferred by New Jersey election law of 1898 upon county boards of election to appoint district boards of registry and election is valid to the extent that persons so appointed become de facto members, indictable for misdemeanors.[83] An officer at a primary election indicted for fraudulently counting and returning ballots will not be heard to set up as a defense his own neglect to cause ballots to be numbered as required by the rules of the party.[84] Where defendant was indicted for willfully and knowingly refusing to perform his duty as an election officer, he was not entitled to a writ of prohibition to restrain prosecution of such indictment, on the ground that he had appeared before the grand jury and testified concerning such offense as a state's witness.[85]

The indictment[86] is sufficient in the language of the statute,[87] and need not state the name of a person incidentally referred to by it, unless the name is one of the matters that must be proved at the trial or that are required in order to inform the accused of the nature and cause of the accusation.[88]

ELECTION AND WAIVER.

Only a general treatment of the doctrines of election and waiver is here attempted. For application of the principles involved to particular facts, reference must be had to the topic dealing with the subject-matter concerned. Election between counts[1] and the waiver of objections in judicial proceedings[2] are specifically treated elsewhere, as are the doctrines of estoppel[3] and laches.[4]

§ 1. Election in general. Definition.[5]—An election is a choice between two or more available, inconsistent rights or remedies.[6] The doctrine of election rests upon the principle that one who has knowledge of the facts or means of knowing them may not assume two contradictory positions so inconsistent that the assertion of one necessarily repudiates the other.[7]

§ 2. Occasions for elections. A. Of remedies.[8]—Where more than one remedy is open to a party, he may select that which will give him the relief he seeks;[9] but if such remedies are coexistent[10] and inconsistent,[11] he cannot pursue both; in such case an election may be required. Thus one cannot at the same time stand upon a contract and recover for its breach, or irrespective of its terms as upon a quantum meruit;[12] or repudiate a contract and recover according to its terms.[13] A principal cannot treat a contract with a third person as subsisting, with knowledge of the fraud inducing it, and yet recover from the agent, who participated in the fraud, for the loss suffered.[14] The doctrine of election has no application where available remedies are consistent,[15] or where a party having a rightful remedy erroneously adopts one which is not in fact available to him.[16] A purchaser may

This right of election is in the owner and cannot be exercised by the wrongdoer. Id. A person who is induced by fraud to sell personal property may disaffirm the sale and retake the goods, or affirm the sale and sue for the agreed price, when due. Fisher v. Brown, 111 Ill. App. 486. One who has been induced to enter into a contract by fraudulent misrepresentations may elect either to stand upon the contract and recover damages for the fraud, or to rescind the contract, and upon returning what he has received, recover that with which he parted, or its value. Parker, 44 Misc. 582, 90 N. Y. S. 98; May v. Disconto Gesellschaft, 113 Ill. App. 415. A commission merchant who receives and sells mortgaged cattle without the mortgagee's knowledge or consent, in violation of the terms of the mortgage, and who remits proceeds, less his commission, to the consignor, without notice of the mortgage, does not derive such benefit from the contract as to authorize the mortgagee to waive the tort and sue in assumpsit. One cannot maintain an action at law for damages for breach of a contract and at the same time sue in equity for specific performance of the contract. Pyle v. Crebs, 112 Ill. App. 480.

14. Doctrine of election has no application where a life insurance company is induced by fraud in which its agent participates to issue a policy so as to permit the company after knowledge of the fraud to continue the policy in force and then recover from the agent for the loss suffered. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Hord, 25 Ky. L. R. 1531, 78 S. W. 207.

15. No election between consistent and concurrent remedies. Redhead Bros. v. Wyoming Cattle Inv. Co., 126 Iowa, 410, 102 N. W. 144. A claim to recover the full contract price as for a completed sale is not inconsistent with a claim for damages for refusal to accept the property. Id. Though in an action of replevin, plaintiff elects to take a money judgment for the value of the property, he may recover also for the wrongful detention of the property, where the conversion is treated as taking place at the time of trial. accept and retain goods and yet rely upon a breach of warranty in diminution of the price.[17] A creditor holding collateral security is not put to an election of remedies but may prosecute simultaneously whatever actions at law or in equity are warranted by the principal and collateral contracts.[18] A creditor who collects a portion of his claim from a third person, who after the debt is contracted agrees with the debtor to pay it, does not waive his claim against the debtor, since there is in this no election between inconsistent claims or remedies.[19]

(§ 2) B. Of rights and estates.[20]—The doctrine of election, as applied to instruments of donation, rests upon the equitable principle that one who accepts a benefit under the instrument must accept the whole, conforming to its provisions and renouncing all rights inconsistent with it.[21] Thus a grantee of certain land to whom the grantor afterwards devises the land conveyed, and other property, for

21. Chaplin v. Leapley [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 546. A will devised a life estate to testator's daughter, the remainder, share and share alike, to her heirs. Before her death, she and her children entered into a settlement dividing the property, and thereafter one of the children died, and his heirs continued to use the land as his heirs. Held, such conduct was not inconsistent with an intention to claim under the will of the testator, upon death of their grandmother. Parrott v. Barrett [S. C.] 49 S. E. 563. One who contracted to bequeath certain stock absolutely, bequeathed it in trust. The beneficiary accepted dividends paid by the trustee. Held, she had not elected to take under the will, since she accepted only what she was entitled to; hence she could maintain a suit for specific performance of the contract. Earnhardt v. Clement, 137 N. C. 91, 49 S. E. 49.

NOTE. Election by beneficiary under will: Commenting on Tripp v. Nobles, 136 N. C. 99, 48 S. E. 675 (3 C. L. 1179, n. 97), a writer in the Michigan Law Review says: "A distinction is to be noted between those cases where the election is against being bound by the provisions of the will, and those in favor of it. The modern view in the former case is that the principle of compensation, rather than that of forfeiture, applies; that is, that just compensation be made to the disappointed donees, and the surplus, if any, remaining, be given to the donee exercising the right of election, rather than that the entire gift to him be forfeited. 2 Underhill on Wills, § 729; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2nd Ed.] p. 115; Carper v. Crowl, 149 Ill. 465. On the other hand, it appears that there is no authority for applying the principle of compensation to cases where the election is in favor of the will. The donee so electing relinquishes every inconsistent right and assumes the burdens attached to the devise. In re Lord Chesham, L. R. 31 Ch. Div. 466; Eaton, Equity, 182. Hence, if the principal case be admitted to involve an election, there would seem to be no escape from the conclusion reached in the majority opinion. Election, however, is defined to be a choice which a party is compelled to make between the acceptance of a benefit under an instrument, and the retention of some property, already his own, which is attempted to be disposed of by the same instrument (Bispham's Equity [5th Ed.] p. 295); and since nothing was given by the will which would not have been the widow's without one, there seems to be force in the contention of the dissenting opinion that this is not a proper case to involve an election. It would seem just to require that the benefit conferred should be a substantial one in order to put the donee to an election. Tyler v. Wheeler, 160 Mass. 206.—3 Mich. L. R. 336.

A writer in the Columbia Law Review comments on the same case as follows: "Whether a devisee, by probating a will and qualifying as executor is estopped to claim adversely to it is in conflict. Gardner, Wills, p. 602 and cases cited. However, as it is a question of implied intention, the fact that the executrix in the principal case set forth the land as part of her husband's estate, and did not mention it in her own will, would seem to be strong evidence of her election. The dissenting opinion proceeded on the ground that she had received no alternative benefit under the will, since she was already entitled to more than $100 as her year's support. Godman v. Converse, 38 Neb. 657. The better view is that the doctrine of election is based on the equitable notion of compensation. Underhill, Law of Wills, § 729; Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. 468; Young v. Young, 51 N. J. Eq. 491. A donee who elects to take under a will does not forfeit all his own property life, must elect to take under the deed or will.[22] A party taking the benefit of a provision in his favor under a will cannot assert the invalidity of the instrument.[23] A widow is put to an election between benefits conferred on her by her husband's will, and her statutory rights in his property;[24] but a widow who acquires no beneficial interest under a will is not required to make such election in order to prevent her being bound by the provisions of the will.[25] The right to dower may, however, be lost, if a claim therefor is not filed as required by the statute, even though a will makes no provision for the widow.[26] A widow who is called upon to make an election is entitled to be judicially informed as to her legal rights.[27] An election must be made in the statutory manner.[28] The right of election is personal to the widow and does not pass to her representatives or heirs,[29] but where the widow fails to take any action, the right to a legacy survives to her personal representative, the widow being presumed to have consented to the will.[30] False representations regarding the validity of a will, by virtue of which a widow elected to take against it, are not ground for setting the election aside, unless a will contest was begun or threatened.[31]

A widow who has received money for joining in a deed by her husband cannot retain the same and at the same time recover a distributive share of the property conveyed.[32] A widow cannot have both dower and homestead rights in lands of her deceased husband.[33] In some states a widow may elect between a child's part and her dower rights,[34] but such election can only be made in the manner[35] and within the time[36] prescribed by law.

which the testator has attempted to give to another, but must compensate the disappointed donee. Brown v. Brown, 42 Minn. 270; Underhill, Law of Wills, § 729. In the principal case the widow was entitled to claim adversely to the will and yet receive $100 as her year's support. Compher v. Compher, 25 Pa. 31; Stone v. Vandermark, 146 Ill. 312. Unless, after the lapse of time, the rights of third parties had intervened, the dissenting opinion seems preferable."—5 Columbia L. R. 67.

27. When a widow is called upon to elect whether she will take under or against the will, and property specifically devised must be taken to pay debts, she is entitled to be judicially informed whether, if she elects to take against the will, she will be compelled to contribute to the devisee whose property is taken for the debts. Rev. St. § 5963. Allen v. Tressenrider [Ohio] 73 N. E. 1015.

28. Under Real Property Law, § 181, bringing suit to revoke probate of a will, is not a rejection of the will. Flynn v. McDermott, 43 Misc. 513, 89 N. Y. S. 506. Deputy clerk of probate court is without authority to receive the election of a widow, under Rev. St. § 8964. Election so made may be canceled. Mellinger v. Mellinger, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 435.

34. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2944, a widow who has a child or children living by her deceased husband may elect to take a child's part of his land in fee in lieu of dower. Castleman v. Castleman, 184 Mo. 432, 83 S. W. 757.

35. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2945, an election by a widow to take a child's part in lieu of dower must be by declaration in writing,

Where a will directs land to be sold and the proceeds distributed, the beneficiaries may elect to take the property in its original form and thus effect an equitable reconversion.[37] To constitute a valid election in such case all beneficiaries must concur and must be bound.[38] The election may be by deed, or by answer, or partly by deed and partly by answer.[39]

§ 3. Waiver in general; definition.[40]—A waiver is usually defined as an intentional relinquishment of a known right,[41] and must be supported either by a consideration or by an estoppel.[42] Statutory provisions for the benefit of private or personal rights, and not affecting public rights or policy, may, in general, be waived,[43] and this is especially true as to statutory provisions regarding formal procedure.[44] But an express waiver contrary to public policy is void.[45] Waiver must be pleaded.[46]

§ 4. Acts and indicia of election and waiver.[47]—An election is usually evinced by the doing of some decisive act of an unambiguous nature showing a choice.[48] Such act or acts must have been done with full knowledge of legal rights and the acknowledged before an officer authorized to take acknowledgment of deeds, and filed in the office of the recorder of the county where letters testamentary were granted, within 15 months after the grant of the same. Castleman v. Castleman, 184 Mo. 432, 83 S. W. 757. Under this statute, the filing of the declaration by the widow herself or her authorized agent, in her lifetime, is an essential part of the election. Id.

36. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 4689 (3) the right of a widow to take a child's share in her husband's estate depends upon her election so to do within one year after administration is granted, and the law makes no exception in favor of a widow who is insane or under other disability. 48. Smeesters v. Schroeder, 123 Wis. 116, 101 N. W. 363. That there may be an election, three things are necessary: (1) there must be in fact two or more concurrent remedies between which the party has the right to elect; (2) these remedies must be inconsistent; and (3) the party must by bringing his action or by some other decisive act, with knowledge of the facts, indicate his choice. Zimmerman v. Robinson & Co. [Iowa] 102 N. W. 814. Demanding performance of a contract shows an election to exercise an option granted by the contract. Foster v. Leininger, 33 Ind. App. 669, 72 N. E. 164. Where party to horse trade attempted to institute replevin suit, demanded return of his horse, tendered back the one he received and refused to exercise any act of ownership over it, he was held to have elected to rescind the contract. Smeesters v. Schroeder, 123 Wis. 116, 101 N. W. 363. Though a mechanic or artisan retains possession of the chattel, he is not thereby precluded from filing a bill in equity to enforce his lien; and by filing such bill within three months, he shows an election to proceed under Rev. St. 1892, § 1744, rather than under § 1745. Ocala Foundry & Machine Works v. Lester [Fla.] 38 So. 56. One who brings an action of attachment against a party accused of fraud in obtaining goods, affirms the sale to him and waives the tort. Ermling v. Gibson Canning Co., 105 Ill. App. 196. The levy of a writ of attachment upon property transferred to defraud creditors is deemed an election by the creditor to treat the conveyance as void. Salemonson v. Thompson [N. D.] 101 N. W. 320. Son who had deeded land to father, after father's death sued to recover as heir; held, that he could not thereafter maintain a suit to cancel his deed for undue influence and want of consideration. Ferns v. Chapman, 211 Ill. 597, 71 N. E. 1106. Where plaintiff obtains a reference by virtue of a formal statement that the action is on contract, he has made a binding election to so proceed. Price v. Parker, 44 Misc. 582, 90 N. Y. S. 98. A statement in an affidavit to support a motion for change of venue that the action was in tort, which had no effect on the decision of the motion, is not a binding election to proceed in tort. Id. The rendering of an account to an agent for rent due or the charging of the account against the agent does not amount to an election by the landlord to hold the agent rather than the principal. Smart v. Masters & Wardens, facts.[49] Failure to make an election within a reasonable time is a waiver of the right where the other party will be prejudiced.[50] In the case of an express contract giving an option to purchase property, notice of an election to rescind according to the terms of the contract must be given.[51]

Acts done with knowledge of the legal rights intended to be waived,[52] and clearly evincing an intention to abandon such rights,[53] or inconsistent with an intention to insist upon them,[54] constitute a waiver. Failure to assert rights within etc., Lodge No. 2, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 15. The appropriation, otherwise than by attachment or execution, of furniture or other property found on demised premises, does not amount to an election by the landlord to hold the agent rather than the principal for the balance of unpaid rent. Id. Where mother deeded certain land to daughter, reserving a life estate, and later devised all her property to the daughter, and the daughter, upon her mother's death, entered into possession of the land conveyed, but showed no intention to treat it differently from other property devised, and paid no attention to the deed, held, she had elected to take under the will and not under the deed. Morrison v. Fletcher [Ky.] 84 S. W. 548. A notice served on one who contracted to furnish brick of a certain quality, that those delivered were not of the required quality, and that brick would be purchased elsewhere and the difference in price charged to the contractor, is not an election of the measure of damages and does not prevent the defendant, when sued for the price, to set up the ordinary measure of damages—loss of profits. Iowa Brick Mfg. Co. v. Herrick, 126 Iowa, 721, 102 N. W. 787.

49. To be binding an election must be made with knowledge of legal rights or at least after a reasonable opportunity to learn such rights. Woman induced by fraud to buy house and lot held not to have elected to stand by contract, because at time she demanded possession of tenant, she did not know her legal rights. Annis v. Ferguson [Ky.] 84 S. W. 553. In order that acts of a widow shall be regarded as an election to take under a will, such acts must be plain and unequivocal, indicating an intention to so take, and must be made with full knowledge of the facts and of her rights. White's Estate, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 552.

52. A waiver is not binding unless made distinctly and with full knowledge of the rights intended to be waived. Garrett v. Simpson, 115 Ill. App. 62. The fact that a widow joins with heirs in an agreement to settle an estate without administration in the common belief that the personalty would be sufficient to pay debts does not establish a waiver of the widow's portion in the real estate where it appears that the personalty was insufficient to pay debts. Bennett v. Morris, 111 Ill. App. 150.

53. An agreement to arbitrate a fire loss is a waiver of want of due proofs of loss. Perry v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 137 N. C. 402, 49 S. E. 889. Whether insurance company had waived more complete proofs of loss held for jury. Southern Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 88. Time limit within which plaintiff was to bring parties together and effect a sale held waived and plaintiff held entitled to his commission. Mitchell v. Duke, 134 F. 999. A property owner who has taken advantage of the Indiana statute and agreed to waive irregularities in assessments for street improvements in consideration of the privilege of paying an assessment in instalments cannot, in an action on bonds issued to a contractor, set up a defective description in the report of the engineer on which the assessment is based. Dunkirk Land Co. v. Zehner [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1099. Where there is a recovery on a counterclaim by a defendant, and after a reversal of plaintiff's judgment, defendant again pleads the counterclaim, he is not entitled to have judgment on the verdict in his favor in the first action. Sidway v. Missouri Land & Live Stock Co., 187 Mo. 649, 86 S. W. 150.

54. Waiver of defaults or contract provisions: Provisions of contracts for construction of building held unenforceable, having been disregarded and waived by acts of the parties. Kilby Mfg. Co. v. Hinchman-Renton Fire Proofing [C. C. A.] 132 F. 957. One who accepts seven instalments after a default as to one cannot thereafter declare a forfeiture for the first default, his acts having been inconsistent with an intention to rescind. Kuhn v. Skelley, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 185. Letters by an insurance company holding out reasonable inference that claims will be adjusted constitute a waiver of provisions of policy requiring suit to be brought thereon within a certain time. Peters v. Empire Life Ins. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 296. Strict performance of a contract for leasing a farm with option to purchase within two years, upon certain conditions, held to have been waived by parties entering into negotiations; hence owner could not arbitrarily and without notice end the negotiations and refuse to convey. Henion v. Bacon, 100 App. Div. 99, 91 N. Y. S. 399. Father conveyed property to son and son agreed to support father, to pay off incumbrances, and to pay father an annuity. Father served notice of a demand for reconveyance, but thereafter accepted payments of the annuity. Held, default consisting in nonpayment of incumbrances was waived. Hurley v. McCallister [S. D.] 103 N. W. 644. Written provisions of contract for construction of building providing that orders for extra material must be in writing waived when oral order was made by one and performed by the other. Kilby Mfg. v. Hinchman-Renton Fire Proofing [C. C. A.] 132 F. 957.

Waiver of grounds of non-liability: When a party places his refusal to perform a contract upon certain grounds, he thereby waives other grounds and cannot assert them in litigation. Gibson v. Brown, 214 Ill. 330, 73 N. E. 578. Where a carrier's refusal to deliver goods was upon the sole ground that an additional charge was not paid, it could not upon suit for conversion set up that the bill of lading was not presented by the proper person. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Seitz, 214 Ill. 350, 73 N. E. 585. Fruit refused on ground that it was frozen; buyer could not in action set up that refusal was on ground that shipment was in excess of order. United Fruit Co. v. Bisese, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 170. Where liability for insurance was denied on the ground of nonpayment of assessments, the company cannot, after suit brought, deny liability on the ground that the policy was canceled by the board of directors as authorized by an article of association. Farmers' Milling Co. v. Mill Owners' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 207.

Waiver of irregularities of procedure: Predecessor in title by paying one-third of an assessment estopped those claiming under him from denying validity of assessment. Gilfeather v. Grout, 101 App. Div. 150, 91 N. Y. S. 533. Executor who induced a claimant to delay filing claims for more than a year cannot set up failure to file the claims in time as a ground of forfeiture of interest thereon. Hamilton's Ex'r v. Wright [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1093.

Held not to constitute waiver: Execution of leases of property involved by a constructive mortgagor does not indicate intention to abandon rights as such mortgagor. Conkey v. Rex, 111 Ill. App. 121. A provision in a life insurance policy releasing the insurer from liability upon failure to pay premiums when due cannot be considered waived by the company unless some authorized officer has done some act which may reasonably have led the insured to believe the condition would not be insisted upon. Sydnor v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 521. Acceptance of the second premium, after it was due, when insured was in good health, is not a waiver of the condition as to payment of future premiums regardless of the health of the insured at the time of such future defaults. Id. Where complaint contains two counts, one for money lent and one on a bond given to secure payment, an election to stand upon the first count is not a waiver of the right to use the bond as evidence if it becomes necessary or proper to use it. Aetna Indemnity Co. v. Ladd [C. C. A.] 135 F. 636. Receipt of rents and profits from land of which a co-tenant was in possession, having purchased at a mortgage sale, held not a waiver of the right to take a sheriff's deed at the end of the redemption period, there being no agreement to apply rents and profits on the sheriff's certificate. Ryason v. Dunten [Ind.] 73 N. E. 74.

55. Salt bags were ordered subject to cancellation of order unless a certain machine was furnished. The bags were received and retained five months without notice of cancellation of order. Where a beneficiary acquiesces in the wrongful application of a trust fund, he releases the administrator or trustee and his bondsmen from liability to him therefor. Estate of Koehnken, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 359. Purchasers of lumber to be delivered in carload lots as sawed, received and paid for all shipments except the last without objection. Held, they were estopped to claim damages on account of the manner in which the lumber was handled and piled. Skidmore v. Scobee [Ky.] 85 S. W. 1088.

56. See, also, Saving Questions for Review, 4 C. L. 1368. Where a case is heard upon the merits, an objection to the remedy pursued not being properly raised and not insisted on, such objection is waived. Foster v. Phinizy, 121 Ga. 673, 49 S. E. 865. Persons who fail to object to finding of commissioners in partition at the time cannot object thereto on appeal. Miller v. Lanning, 211 Ill. 620, 71 N. E. 1115. A party who appears and files a brief to oppose a motion cannot complain that the rules as to notice of motion were not followed. Bruce v. Myers, 34 Ind. App. 664, 73 N. E. 710. Lack of verification of a claim presented against an estate held to have been waived by failure to make any objection thereto, in the course of negotiations and correspondence concerning the claim. Seymour v. Goodwin [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 93. An administratrix who voluntarily enters to defend a suit begun against the decedent cannot thereafter complain of the regularity of the proceeding or of the form of the judgment as "against the defendant." Cole v. Jerman, 77 Conn. 374, 59 A. 425. One who acted as attorney and business agent of an executrix in the administration of an estate held to have had authority to waive, by failure to object thereto, lack of verification of a claim. Seymour v. Goodwin [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 93. An admission in an answer is waived where plaintiff does not request judgment on the pleadings or object to the introduction of evidence on the issue, but treats the issue as one properly raised. Caldwell v. Drummond [Iowa] 102 N. W. 842.

57. An infant co-tenant, during whose minority another co-tenant purchased a sheriff's deed to the property, may, on reaching his majority, waive the right to sue for his share of the claim against the land. Ryason v. Dunten [Ind.] 73 N. E. 74.

available inconsistent remedies has been made, with knowledge of the facts, the right to the other is forever gone;[59] but if several existing remedies are not inconsistent, nothing short of full satisfaction of plaintiff's claim waives any of such remedies.[60] All may be pursued concurrently, even to judgment, but satisfaction in one reaching the whole claim is a satisfaction in all.[61] Where only one remedy exists, but plaintiff asserts one which he does not in fact possess, the proper remedy is not waived.[62] One who adopts a remedy without full knowledge of the facts, may resort to a different remedy upon learning all the facts;[63] but one who has deliberately chosen his remedy will not be heard to say he was ignorant of the law, when he attempts to set his election aside.[64] One who has elected to treat a contract as continuing in force, and has waived a breach by the other party, is not entitled to a second election to rescind.[65] A creditor who elects to bring an action in trover as for a fraudulent conversion does not deprive his debt of its provable character under the bankruptcy act.[66]

59. An election once made is final. Dickson v. New York Biscuit Co., 211 Ill. 468, 71 N. E. 1058. When more than one remedy to deal with a single subject of action exists and they are inconsistent with each other, after the choice of one the others to all intents and purposes no longer exist. Rowell v. Smith, 123 Wis. 510, 102 N. W. 1. An election of one of two inconsistent remedies is final and bars pursuit of the other, in the absence of ignorance of material facts or mistake. Smeesters v. Schroeder, 123 Wis. 116, 101 N. W. 363. An election of one remedy with full knowledge of the facts is binding unless the party can show that he never had a right to the remedy he attempted to pursue. Fisher v. Brown, 111 Ill. App. 486. A party who has recovered a portion of goods sold by replevin cannot thereafter maintain assumpsit to recover price of goods not recovered in replevin suit. Id. Election to proceed in assumpsit precludes subsequent proceeding in tort. Price v. Parker, 44 Misc. 582, 90 N. Y. S. 98. One shipping goods to bankrupt claiming that transaction was a sale cannot after the buyer's bankruptcy claim that it was a bailment. In re Martin-Vernon Music Co., 132 F. 983. A party who recovers in replevin and gets a return of the property from one party cannot bring trespass for the wrongful taking against such party and another. Palmer v. People, 111 Ill. App. 381. Servant who recovered for three days of service before same was due under contract treated contract as rescinded and hence could not recover under its terms. James v. Parsons Rich & Co. [Kan.] 78 P. 438. A policy holder who after a change of plan by the insurance company elects in writing to cancel his policy, and demands his payments, is bound to pursue that remedy and cannot thereafter maintain a bill to compel the company to continue business under its original plan. Iversen v. Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co., 137 F. 268. A suit against an ex-agent of an insurance company for failure to keep property insured, and recovery of judgment against him, is an election to treat the agent as personally liable, and a second suit cannot be brought against an insurance company formerly represented by the agent as an undisclosed principal. Rounsaville v. North Carolina Home Fire Ins. Co., 138 N. C. 191, 50 S. E. 619. Under Comp. Laws 1897, c. 308, providing that if a plaintiff obtains restitution of premises he may sue on the bond given by defendant on appeal to the circuit court (§ 25) or may recover treble damages for unlawful detainer, and other damages suffered in an action of trespass (§ 24), an election to sue on the bond under § 25 bars a subsequent action under § 24 to recover treble or other damages. He then demanded repayment, notifying society that he desired insurance canceled. Held, he could not rescind. Supreme Council A. L. H. v. Lippincott [C. C. A] 134 F. 824.

66. Construing Bankr. Act, §§ 17, 63a.

An election to take under a will waives and bars statutory rights.[67] Such election by a widow is binding on her representatives.[68] One electing to take against a will is entitled only to the statutory allowance.[69] Renunciation of provisions in a will frees from the operation of the will only such property as is affected by the provisions renounced.[70] An election by a widow to take her homestead rights in lands of her deceased husband bars her dower rights therein.[71] The waiver of a homestead exemption in a mortgage is in favor of the mortgage creditor alone, and does not inure to the benefit of others.[72] Where a remainderman after the sale of the corpus of a life estate approves the sale, the approval applies only to the sale of the life estate and not to a sale of the remainder.[73] Legacies to be distributed after the death of the testator's widow are accelerated in possession by the widow's election not to take under the will.[74] The abatement of unequal legacies resulting from a widow's election not to take under the will must be proportionate.[75]

§ 6. Pleading.[76]

ELECTRICITY.

This topic deals with the law relative to the rights and duties which persons furnishing or using electricity have or owe to third persons not in their employ,[77] except in so far as such rights and duties are peculiar to a specific application of electricity, as its use in propelling street cars,[78] or in transmitting messages between parties.[79] The general principles as to what constitutes negligence,[80] and the rules for measuring damages,[81] are treated elsewhere.

Electric franchise and right to use streets.[82]—The regulation and control of electric light companies in respect to their use of streets and the erection and construction of appliances is within the police power generally delegated by the state to its political subdivisions.[83] An ordinance must be definite.[84] An electric com-

St. 1896 [2d Ed.] p. 694, c. 24, par. 63, the city of Chicago may enact an ordinance requiring electric wires on its streets to be insulated and overhead wires to be protected by guard wires. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Rose, 214 Ill. 545, 73 N. E. 780. A corporation organized under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, art. 23, class 11, § 24, and Acts 1892, p. 662, c. 469, having obtained the city's consent, may conduct the electric lighting business in Baltimore. Brown v. Maryland Tel. & T. Co. [Md.] 61 A. 338. Cities of the fourth class have power to grant franchises to erect and maintain electric light and power plants therein. State v. Taylor, 36 Wash. 607, 79 P. 286. Mayor of such city cannot refuse to sign an ordinance granting such a franchise on the ground that a prior franchise has been granted, the latter not being pany by unqualifiedly accepting an ordinance and availing itself of the benefits thereof is estopped to repudiate conditions imposed thereby.[85] The constructions placed upon different ordinances are shown in the notes.[86] Manufacturing, generating, selling, distributing and supplying electricity for power for manufacturing or mechanical purposes is not a public use for which private property may be taken against the will of the owner,[87] though the rule seems to be otherwise if the purpose is to supply the public, or such part of the public as wishes it, with electric lights.[88] A corporation being invested with the power of eminent domain for the purpose of establishing its plant, the word "plant" includes its pole and wire lines.[89] An electric light company cannot extend its conduits through private walks solely by reason of its employment by lessees of private places of amusement abutting on the walk, though the public have used the walk for access to the places of amusement.[90] In most states overhead wires may be cut when necessary for the removal of buildings.[91]

Contracts.[92]—The general contract rules as to mutuality,[93] consideration, etc., govern. Payments being made after tests, they may constitute an acceptance.[94] It being impossible to apply the method of measurement provided by the contract, the method best adapted to show the actual power used should be used.[95] Failure on the part of a consumer to pay a monthly instalment when due is not a breach of contract on his part where the seller is at the time owing him more than the amount of such instalment.[96]

Degree of care.[97]—While one furnishing electricity is not an insurer,[98] yet as to persons not in his employ he is obliged to use the utmost human care, vigilance and foresight, reasonably consistent with the practical operation of his plant, to provide against all reasonably probable contingencies,[99] the care required in any particular case being proportional to the danger.[1] This includes the use of such safeguards as are best known and most extensively used,[2] the best mechanical contrivances and inventions in practical use,[3] perfect insulation at all places where persons may reasonably be expected to go for work, pleasure or business,[4] the consideration of climatic conditions, such as storms,[5] and the maintenance of such a system of inspection as will insure reasonable promptness in the detection of de-

Stevens v. United Gas & Elec. Co. [N. H.] 60 A. 848. If an instruction that defendant was obliged to use all possible means to insure the safety of people lawfully near to and likely to be exposed to the wires, was too broad, there was no reversible error, the court having instructed that defendant was bound to take at least reasonable precautions to protect persons near the wires, and to so guard the wires as to make the place safe. What constitutes ordinary care: Instruction that ordinary care is that "degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person, with deceased's knowledge or means of knowledge of electrical affairs, and situated as deceased was, before and at the time of the accident, would exercise for his own safety," held not erroneous. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Rose, 114 Ill. App. 181. Where the court had instructed that ordinary care is that care exercised by the majority under similar circumstances, an instruction that defendant in breaking and uncoiling an uncharged wire, was presumed to know that it was an electric wire, and that a higher degree of care was necessary, is not objectionable as requiring the exercise of more than ordinary care. Nagle v. Hake, 123 Wis. 256, 101 N. W. 409.

Facts held to constitute negligence: Where transformer was burned out and a current of 2,000 volts was sent into a wire designed to carry 104 volts, evidence held to show negligence on the part of defendant. McCabe v. Narragansett Elec. Lighting Co., 26 R. I. 427, 59 A. 112. A telephone company permitting its wire to become broken and lie across a highly charged electric light wire is guilty of want of ordinary care. Central Union Tel. Co. v. Sokola, 34 Ind. App. 429, 73 N. E. 143. Failure of street railway company to put up a guard wire so as to prevent its wire from coming in contact with electric light wires held to constitute actionable negligence. Mahan v. Newton & B. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 59. Where a house mover allowed a live wire to hang down after it was cut, held guilty of actionable negligence. Nagle v. Hake, 123 Wis. 256, 101 N. W. 409. Allowing broken wire to so remain for over five months held sufficient to charge company with notice. Central Union Tel. Co. v. Sokola, 34 Ind. App. 429, 73 N. E. 143. 4. While the duty of an electric company to maintain perfect insulation does not extend to its entire system, it extends to wires strung 25 feet above ground in a street where telephone employes are likely to come in contact therewith while attending to their duties. Rowe v. Taylorville Elec. Co., 213 Ill. 318, 72 N. E. 711, afg. 114 Ill. App. 535.

5. Construction must be sufficient to withstand storms of ordinary or normal severity (Smith v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 71), but not storms of unusual severity, which could not have been reasonably foreseen and its consequences guarded against (Heidt v. Southern Tel. & T. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 361). Evidence held sufficient to justify a verdict in favor of defendant. Id.

fects.[6] The duty to maintain the wires in a safe condition extends to one rightfully on private property over which the wires extend.[7] An electric company cannot evade these duties by employing some one else to fulfill them,[8] and if it employs an independent contractor, it must make a reasonable inspection to see that the work is skillfully and carefully done.[9] One furnishing electricity for interior lighting has the right to assume that the interior wiring is properly done,[10] and, in the absence of negligence on its part, is not liable for injuries resulting from defects in such wiring.[11] The installer of such interior system need not anticipate and prepare for the access of dangerous or deadly currents of electricity through the wires.[12] The contract between the parties providing that plaintiff should keep all inside wires and apparatus in proper condition, the defendant is under no duty to inspect such wires and apparatus, though under the contract he has the right to so do.[13] An electric railway using a live rail is bound to use ordinary care and prudence to prevent persons from coming in contact therewith;[14] such railway being an elevated one, it is not negligence for the company to fail to place signs on the structure warning the public of the danger from such rail.[15] The violation of an ordinance is prima facie evidence of negligence.[16] The prevalence of a general strike suspending the operation of street cars and the lawlessness attending such situations does not excuse or justify a fallen wire.[17] To be liable, defendant must have owed

11. Where death was caused by transmitting an excessive voltage into the lighting system of a building, the defendant is not responsible for any accident occurring from defects in the interior wiring, if it was not done by defendant and it had no control over it, unless it was negligent in the outside wiring, or in its connection with the inside wiring. Reynolds v. Narragansett Elec. Lighting Co., 26 R. I. 457, 59 A. 393. Where injury resulted from the admission of an excessive current into a lighting system, a requested instruction that it would not be negligence for defendant to omit the grounding of the secondary wires, if it was not permitted to do so, was properly refused, as being too broad. Id. Where inside wiring was not the property of defendant, a defect in the insulation thereof held not to render defendant liable. Bube v. Weatherly Borough, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 88. Where the insulation on an interior electric light wire is sufficient to prevent accident when a current of the required voltage is flowing over the wire, it is error to charge that a verdict should be returned in favor of the electric company, should the jury find that had the wire been perfectly insulated the accident would not have occurred. Where a passenger on a street railway car was ejected therefrom and started to walk back to a station, held, he was entitled to reasonable protection from hidden and unknown dangers arising from the fact that one of the rails forming the track was charged with electricity. Anderson v. Seattle-Tacoma Interurban R. Co., 36 Wash. 387, 78 P. 1013. A company erecting and maintaining an elevated railroad structure upon which a live rail is used is obliged to only use and exercise ordinary care and prudence to so erect and maintain the same as to preclude children of tender years from getting thereon. McAllister v. Jung, 112 Ill. App. 138. Is not guilty of want of ordinary care in failing to construct means to prevent persons from climbing upon such structure at a point where there was no temptation so to climb thereon, notwithstanding such company did, at and near stations, construct means to prevent persons climbing upon such structure. Id. Held not guilty of negligence. Id.

16. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Rose, 214 Ill. 545, 73 N. E. 780, afg. 114 Ill. App. 181. Plaintiff extended his electric light system without securing the permission required by a city ordinance, which act contributed to his injury; held to constitute evidence of negligence on his part. Brunelle v. Lowell Elec. Light Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 676.

17. Instead it aggravates it, and lends force to the charge of negligence in permit-plaintiff a duty, and this duty must have been violated.[18] Plaintiff must establish his case by the same degree of proof as in cases where the cause of injury is more certain and easily explained,[19] and the negligence of defendant must have been the proximate and efficient cause of the injury.[20] A wire being allowed to remain broken, the company is not relieved from liability by the fact that a storm, not unprecedented in violence, caused the wire to come in contact with an electric light wire, causing the injury complained of.[21] In order to recover the injured party must have been free from contributory negligence,[22] and must not have assumed the risk;[23] a child is held to only such care and prudence as are usual ting electricity to be conducted through the wire at such a period. Cleary v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 433, 83 S. W. 1029.

18. Mahan v. Newton & B. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 59. A fireman who assists to hoist a ladder with metalic corners against an electric light wire cannot, in the absence of invitation or permission of the owner, complain that the wires were not properly insulated, and that he was injured because of such lack of insulation. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Elec. Light Co. v. Anderson [Neb.] 102 N. W. 89. Electric light company held not liable to a trespasser on a train for an injury due to the fact that the poles of the company were within 9¾ inches of the ladder on the cars. Powell v. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Elec. Light Co. [Neb.] 104 N. W. 162. The defense that plaintiff, a boy eight years old, was a trespasser, because while on a street he reached through a fence, and so came in contact with a charged wire of defendant telephone company, which had been broken for three days, to its knowledge, and was hanging down through a tree, is not available. Lynchburg Tel. Co. v. Booken, 103 Va. 594, 50 S. E. 148. Where the wires of two companies were close together and it was the custom of one of the companies to blow its whistle before turning on the current to warn its employes, it is not liable for an injury received by the employe of the other company through its failure to blow the whistle, there being no agreement between the companies as to signals or any knowledge on the part of the one that the men of the other relied thereon. Rowe v. Taylorville Elec. Co., 213 Ill. 318, 72 N. E. 711.

19. Bube v. Weatherly Borough, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 88.

20. Heidt v. Southern Tel. & T. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 361. Negligence in setting guy pole held proximate cause of injury. Smith v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 71. Where through defendant's negligence the wire broke and fell, the fact that some other person negligently wrapped the ends of the broken wire around the pole, and thereby facilitated the forming of a short circuit on the pole on which plaintiff was working, held not to relieve defendant from liability. Id. Testimony of a witness that two women were struck in the face by the wire, but not injured, and that the child grasped it at a point where it was not insulated, and that he thought he, the witness, took hold of it at a place where it was insulated without being hurt, is insufficient to show that a lack of insulation, and not the falling of the wire, was the proximate cause of the injury. Norfolk R. & Light Co. v. Spratley, 103 Va. 379, 49 S. E. 502.

Facts held to constitute contributory negligence and vice versa: Failure to use safety strap held not to constitute contributory negligence. Rowe v. Taylorville Elec. Co., 114 Ill. App. 535, afd. 213 Ill. 318, 72 N. E. 711. Held not necessarily contributory negligence for lineman to fail to wear rubber gloves or a safety belt and to stand upon a grounded steel cable instead of upon a wooden cross-arm. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Rose, 114 Ill. App. 181. Where contact with wire was caused by the plaintiff's foot slipping, held, he was not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to test the wire or in failing to wear rubber gloves. Smith v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 71. Where one took hold of an electric light wire, into which 104 volts were ordinarily sent, and received a current of 2,000 volts due to the transformer being burned out, held not guilty of contributory negligence. McCabe v. Narragansett Elec. Lighting Co., 26 R. I. 427, 59 A. 112. The fact that deceased, an electrician, saw another attempt to turn out the lights and draw back on account of the shock received, which, however, was not serious, did not render him guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, in endeavoring to turn out the lights. Predmore v. Consumers' Light & Power Co., 99 App. Div. 551, 91 N. Y. S. 118. A violation by a lineman of a rule of the electric light company employing him that linemen are to treat every wire as a live wire is not conclusive evidence of negligence, but only a circumstance to be considered with others. Mahan v. Newton & B. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 59. In an action for death due to trolley wire coming in contact with electric light wire, evidence held to show no contributory neglect. Id. The question of what kind of a cord was connected with the electric light in the house, held immaterial on the question of contributory negligence where no kind of a cord could have prevented the accident. Company negligently allowed dangerous current to enter. Memphis Consol. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Letson [C. C. A.] 135 F. 969. Whether deceased had knowledge that wire was charged held a fact to be considered by the jury in determining the question of contributory negligence. Central Union Tel. Co. v. Sokola, 34 Ind. App. 429, 73 N. E. 143.

23. Where plaintiff in falling from a stag-among children of his age and capacity.[24] Direct affirmative evidence that plaintiff was exercising due care is not necessary;[25] it may be inferred from all the circumstances attending the accident, and from the lack of evidence indicating carelessness on his part.[26] An electric lighting company cannot be charged with negligence in maintaining a pole for its wires not upon or overhanging the right of way of a railroad, yet so near such right of way as to endanger the employes of the railroad company while engaged in the performance of their duties, it being shown that the pole was in place for two years prior to the time of the injury complained of.[27] An employer is liable for the negligence of his servants.[28]

Actions.[29]

Pleading.[30]—Though the plaintiff may not be able to allege the particular negligent act or omission causing the injury, the ultimate facts relied on should be stated in as direct and specific a manner as the circumstances of the case permit.[31] The petition alleging a sufficient cause of action at common law independent of a city ordinance pleaded, it is sufficient to support the action as developed by the evidence regardless of the ordinance.[32]

Evidence and presumptious.[33]—If the circumstances are such that the accident could not have happened if the required care had been exercised by the company, the doctrine res ipsa loquitur applies;[34] thus the maxim has been held to apply where a live wire falls into the street,[35] and this presumption is not overcome by testimony of defendant's employes that the wire was properly constructed and put up,[36] and that it was in good condition when inspected on the morning of the day of the accident.[37] Also the breaking of an electrical apparatus under the control of defendant,[38] and the sending of an excessive current into a building for lighting purposes,[39] constitute a prima facie case of negligence. The injury resulting from the breaking of a transformer, the presumption of negligence is not met by proof that it was made by a reputable manufacturer without a showing as to who had purchased it, when it was purchased, how long it had been in service, its condition at installation and when it was inspected.[40] Injury being due to imperfect insulation, it is conclusively presumed that the owner was negligent.[41] In the absence of evi-ing came in contact with a live wire, evidence held sufficient to warrant a finding that plaintiff had not assumed the risk. Stevens v. United Gas & Elec. Co. [N. H.] 60 A. 848.

dence it is presumed that a wire is fastened to an insulator in the usual manner.[42] Evidence relating to the condition of the wires shortly after the accident,[43] and to the condition of a pole at a time subsequent to the accident, it being shown to be the same as at the date of the accident,[44] is admissible, as is evidence that guard wires were in common use in similar cases.[45] Expert testimony is admissible,[46] and negligent construction being alleged, it is competent to put to an electrical expert a hypothetical question embodying the facts of the case and asking him if it constituted good construction.[47] Evidence that defendant's wires were defective at other times and places is inadmissible.[48] Unverified certificates showing that the work complained of was in compliance with the regulations of the various city departments and of the board of fire underwriters are inadmissible.[49] In order to admit evidence of a custom, it must be shown to be a general one,[50] and the witness must be shown to have knowledge thereof.[51] The relevancy and admissibility of particular questions[52] and cases dealing with the sufficiency of evidence[53] are shown in the notes. The general rules as to the extent to which cross-examination may be carried apply.[54] There must be no variance between the pleading and proof.[55]

50. Question in such case as to witness' custom of handling such wires held objectionable as calling for the witness' individual custom. Nagle v. Hake, 123 Wis. 256, 101 N. W. 409.

51. Question asked defendant, a house mover, as to the custom of handling live wires cut in order to allow the house to pass held inadmissible, it not being shown that the witness had any knowledge of such custom. Nagle v. Hake, 123 Wis. 256, 101 N. W. 409.

52. Where it appeared that plaintiff's father and mother knew that wire was hanging where it was, held not error to sustain an objection to a question asking the mother if she made no objection to the wire being so left. Nagle v. Hake, 123 Wis. 256, 101 N. W. 409. Where plaintiff's parents knew that wire was left hanging on house, evidence that no one had told them that wire was dangerous held admissible on question of negligence. Id.

53. A claim for injury by an electric shock cannot be sustained by a mere hypothetical claim that such shock was only rendered possible by a current negligently permitted at some other point in the circuit by defendant; it not appearing that any usual precautions to prevent such grounding had been omitted, or that defendant had, or, under the circumstances, ought to have had, knowledge of it. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Elec. Light Co. v. Anderson [Neb.] 102 N. W 89. Held, that there was neither allegation nor proof that defendant, after knowledge of the dangerous position of the deceased, negligently omitted to turn off its electric current. Id.

54. A witness being called to testify that the wire was covered with "waterproof insulation," he may be asked on cross-examination as to whether additional insulation would not be safer, and whether, under the circumstances of the case, it was not customary to use guard wires. Nagle v. Hake, 123 Wis. 256, 101 N. W. 409. See Examination of Witnesses, 3 C. L. 1383.

55. There is no variance between a declaration alleging that a part of one of defendant's wires became detached, was charged from the wires of an electric railway and came in contact with plaintiff who was on the street, and evidence that plaintiff, while on the street, was injured by reaching through a fence and coming in contact with the wire hanging down on the inside of the fence. Lynchburg Tel. Co. v. Booker, 103 Va. 594, 50 S. E. 148.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

This topic includes not only the offense of embezzlement proper but equivalent statutory offenses denominated larceny, larceny by bailee, larceny after trust, etc.

§ 1. Nature and elements of offense.[61]—One who having received as bailee,[62] trustee,[63] agent or servant, officer of a corporation or association,[64] or as a public officer,[65] any money or property,[66] converts the same to his own use[67] with fraudulent intent[68] entertained at the time of conversion,[69] is guilty of embezzlement. The ofcoma Interurban R. Co., 36 Wash. 387, 78 P. 1013. Whether the method used to guard the wires was negligent or not is a question for the jury. Heidt v. Southern Tel. & T. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 361. Evidence held to require submission to jury of questions whether fire was communicated by defendant's wires, and whether defendant was guilty of negligence in wiring the building. German-American Ins. Co. v. New York Gas & Elec. Light, Heat & Power Co., 103 App. Div. 310, 93 N. Y. S. 46. Where street railway wire was knocked down by derrick and remained down for a couple of hours, held question of negligence for the jury. Sorrell v. Titusville Elec. Trac. Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 425. Where electric light company removed fixtures from building but left service wires in the building, held a question for the jury whether under the circumstances failure to cut off the current from such wires constituted negligence. United States Elec. Lighting Co. v. Sullivan, 22 App. D. C. 115.

59. Stevens v. United Gas & Elec. Co. [N. H.] 60 A. 848; Linton v. Weymouth Light & Power Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 321; Cleary v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 433, 83 S. W. 1029. So held in an action against an electric railway company for injuries to one coming in contact with an electrically charged rail while walking on the track after he had been wrongfully ejected from a car. Anderson v. Seattle-Tacoma Interurban R. Co., 36 Wash. 387, 78 P. 1013. Held a question for the jury whether plaintiff lost his balance and fell on the wire, or whether he came in contact with it while he had entire control of his person. Stevens v. United Gas & Elec. Co. [N. H.] 60 A. 848. Where another person had been killed by coming in contact with wire held question of decedent's contributory negligence in passing same was for the jury. United States Elec. Lighting Co. v. Sullivan, 22 App. D. C. 115. Whether the child uses required care in a particular case is a question for the jury. Citizens Elec. R., etc., Co. v. Bell, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 321.

60. Where defendant had leased its plant, by an unrecorded lease, prior to the accident, but had sent bills and received payment therefor subsequent to such time, held question of defendant's liability was for the jury. Crowe v. Nanticoke Light Co., 209 Pa. 580, 58 A. 1071.

63. Placing of money in bank subject to defendant's order for certain purposes does not complete a trust, but the drawing out of such money by him does. De Leon v. Territory [Ariz.] 80 P. 348.

64. Officer of benevolent organization. State v. Knowles, 185 Mo. 141, 83 S. W. 1083; State v. Wise, 186 Mo. 42, 84 S. W. 954.

65. If defendant was a de facto deputy, it is immaterial that there was no authority for his appointment. People v. Sanders [Mich.] 102 N. W. 959. Where a county officer on suit against him by the county for certain fees admits that he holds them subject to judicial determination, he is guilty of embezzlement if he fails to pay them over to the proper officer after judgment requiring him to do so. Commonwealth v. Shoener, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 526. Nor can he urge in defense of a prosecution the questions determined in such suit. Id. Words "any person" in statute enumerating various officials held to make it apply to private persons. Territory v. Hale [N. M.] 81 P. 583.

66. A horse cart is a subject of larceny and accordingly subject of embezzlement. State v. Seeney [Del.] 59 A. 48; State v. Bogardus, 36 Wash. 297, 78 P. 942.

67. Deposit of money received for the principal to his account to cover a previous defalcation accompanied by a suppression of all account of its receipt constitutes an embezzlement. Crime of embezzlement is not complete until the agent or servant who has lawfully received different sums at different times finally refuses or is unable to account for the aggregate amount. Young v. State, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 53. Where there has been an actual conversion, no demand is necessary. State v. Knowles, 185 Mo. 141, 83 S. W. 1083. Demand not necessary unless made so by statute. State v. Blackley, 138 N. C. 620, 50 S. E. 310. Evidence of demand held dispensed with in any event by declaration of defendant. Id.

68. State v. Seeney [Del.] 59 A. 48; Ehrhart v. Rork, 114 Ill. App. 509; State v. Dunn, 138 N. C. 672, 50 S. E. 772. That a corporation president was responsible for a course of business which while not designed to produce defalcation did so operate without his complicity does not render him liable. State v. Carmean, 126 Iowa, 291, 102 N. W. 97. If defendant used the money openly, in fense being completed, no subsequent restoration[70] or agreement to restore[71] will avoid the criminality of the act. The distinction between embezzlement and larceny where the taking is fraudulent, consists in whether the intent to convert was formed after or before possession was obtained.[72] Criminal intent may be presumed from intentional and unlawful conversion.[73] At common law one who held as part owner was not guilty of embezzlement on converting the whole to his own use,[74] but statutes in most states have changed this rule in whole or in part.[75]

§ 2. Prosecution and punishment.—Indictment[76] in the language of the statute is usually sufficient.[77] There must be averment of receipt of the money or property[78] in a fiduciary capacity,[79] subsequent conversion with fraudulent intent to defendant's own use,[80] and ownership of the money or property in the alleged principal at the time of the receipt and of the conversion.[81] Where sums were received for the principal from various persons at different times and embezzled, embezzlement of the aggregate may be charged.[82] The venue is properly laid where defendant's pos-good faith, under mistake of right, he is not guilty. Eatman v. State [Fla.] 37 So. 576.

69. A depositary who uses the fund with the consent of the owner is not guilty of embezzlement in fraudulently failing to repay it on demand. State v. Dunn, 138 N. C. 672, 50 S. E. 772.

70. State v. Lentz, 184 Mo. 223, 83 S. W. 970.

71. A subsequent arrangement for refundment does not avoid criminality. State v. Merkel [Mo.] 87 S. W. 1186; State v. Dunn, 138 N. C. 672, 50 N. E. 772.

72. Flohr v. Territory, 14 Okl. 477, 78 P. 565. Borrowing property in good faith and converting it pursuant to subsequently formed intent is not larceny. Abrams v. State, 121 Ga. 170, 48 S. E. 965. If the fraudulent intent existed at the time possession was obtained, the offense is larceny, though an indictment under Pen. Code, art. 877, for conversion by bailee might also lie. Lewis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 87 S. W. 831.

73. State v. Lentz, 184 Mo. 223, 83 S. W. 970; State v. Merkel [Mo.] 87 S. W. 1186. From retention of money collected for employer without accounting. Zuckerman v. People, 213 Ill. 114, 72 N. E. 741. A knowledge by a corporation officer that the company's course of business would result in money being misapplied is not sufficient; there must be an intent that such result should follow in the particular case on which the prosecution is based. State v. Carmean, 126 Iowa, 291, 102 N. W. 97.

74. One of the crew of a fishing vessel selected by the captain to make sales of fish and turn the proceeds over to the captain for division between the owner and crew is an agent, not a part owner. Commonwealth v. McDonald [Mass.] 73 N. E. 852. Thus a partner cannot embezzle partnership funds. But if the partnership contract is in any way executory, one prospective partner may be guilty of embezzling funds received pursuant thereto. Ray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 86 S. W. 761.

75. Rev. St. 1899, § 1918, relating to embezzlement by officers of benevolent societies, was designed to obviate the common-law rule by which a part owner is not guilty of embezzlement, and the statute covers unincorporated as well as incorporated societies. State v. Knowles, 185 Mo. 141, 83 S. W. 1083; State v. Wise, 186 Mo. 42, 84 S. W. 954.

76. See 3 C. L. 1186.

77. An indictment stating a fiduciary capacity, receipt of money on behalf of the principal and fraudulent conversion thereof is sufficient. State v. Bogardus, 36 Wash. 297, 78 P. 942.

78. A stated sum in money a better description of which is unknown is sufficient. Territory v. Hale [N .M.] 81 P. 583.

79. The particular purpose for which the money was entrusted to defendant need not be alleged. De Leon v. Territory [Ariz.] 80 P. 348. A charge that defendant was "entrusted" with money is sufficient under a statute relating to persons "entrusted with the care" of money. State v. Meeker [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 381. An indictment alleging fiduciary capacity and receipt of money on a certain day and conversion on a later day is defective for failing to allege that the fiduciary capacity continued to such day. Thomas v. Territory [Ariz.] 80 P. 320.

80. An indictment charging that defendant converted property to the use of himself and of the owner is bad. State v. Twining [N. J. Law] 58 A. 1098.

81. An averment of receipt and conversion of a certain sum "of the money of" the principal sufficiently alleges ownership. Eatman v. State [Fla.] 37 So. 576. Where a local lodge collects at stated intervals a sum from its members to be sent to the grand lodge, and it is embezzled by an officer of the local lodge to whom it is entrusted for transmission, the property is properly laid in the local lodge. State v. Knowles, 185 Mo. 141, 83 S. W. 1083. An averment of receipt of the money of the principal followed by an averment that defendant did "then and there" convert it, sufficiently alleges the property at the time of the conversion. Eatman v. State [Fla.] 37 So. 576.

82. State v. Wise, 186 Mo. 42, 84 S. W. 954; State v. Meeker [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 381.

session became adverse.[83] An indictment under the Missouri statute, relating to embezzlement by officers of a benevolent organization, is sufficient if it alleges that the society was such an organization and need not state whether it was incorporated.[84] An averment that defendant at a time and place stated then and there received certain money and then and there embezzled the same is sufficient as to time and place.[85] A Massachusetts statute defines larceny as including embezzlement, and provides for a single form of indictment; under it embezzlement may be prosecuted by an indictment in common law form for larceny.[86]

Variance between indictment and proof is not fatal unless material.[87]

Admissibility of particular items of evidence is shown in the footnote.[88] On the issue of intent, other embezzlements are admissible,[89] but not other similar transactions which do not distinctly manifest criminal intent,[90] nor can forgery of other receipts be shown to negative a defense of repayment.[91] Defendant may testify directly to his honest intent,[92] and where he claims that he retained money under claim of right on account of indebtedness of the employer to him, he may show the existence of such an indebtedness.[93] The rules and by-laws of an association may be shown by a pamphlet copy verified by members, and proof that the members including defendant acted under them,[94] or by officers of the grand lodge.[95]

Sufficiency of evidence[96] in particular cases is noted below.[97] Proof of a general

87. There is no variance between an averment of receipt and conversion of money and proof that the money was deposited in bank and afterward drawn out and misappropriated. Territory v. Hale [N. M.] 81 P. 583. An averment that defendant converted cattle while he had them under a bailment to take them to pasture is not sustained by proof that he sold them after they had been put in the pasture. Czernecki v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 85 S. W. 796. Under Revised Statutes 1899, § 1821, proof of the embezzlement of the sum charged or any part thereof within 3 years before the time stated is good. State v. Wissing, 187 Mo. 96, 85 S. W. 557.

88. Book entries by clerks made without defendant's knowledge are inadmissible on trial of corporation officer. State v. Carmean, 126 Iowa, 291, 102 N. W. 97. The check by which defendant drew the money from the bank is admissible. De Leon v. Territory [Ariz.] 80 P. 348. A statute permitting proof of embezzlement at any time within six months "after" the date alleged in the indictment does not exclude evidence of receipt of the money by defendant before such date. Eatman v. State [Fla.] 37 So. 576. On prosecution for embezzling the proceeds of a check, the history of the check may be known, where it is claimed the proceeds were accounted for. People v. Peck [Mich.] 103 N. W. 178. State v. Carmean, 126 Iowa, 291, 102 N. W. 97.

91. On an issue whether a receipt to defendant for the money alleged to be embezzled was a forgery, proof that other receipts held by defendant in transactions between the same parties were forged is error. People v. Peck, [Mich.] 103 N. W. 178.

97. Evidence of embezzlement of money deposited to defendant's order for certain purposes held sufficient. De Leon v. Territory [Ariz.] 80 P. 348. Evidence of sale of property by borrower held too vague to support a conviction. Marshall v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 1044. Defendant being authorized to purchase cattle with prosecutor's money paid a third person more for cattle than the latter had just given for them. Held, that the evidence was insufficient that the third person was a mere go-between or that defendant received any part of the additional price. Ray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 86 S. W. 761. Evidence of embezzlement by collector held sufficient. Zuckerman v. People, 213 Ill. 114, 72 N. E. 741; State v. Merkel [Mo.] 87 S. W. 1186. Evidence of larceny after trust by contractor of money delivered to him to pay claims held sufficient as against defense that claims were against defendant and that the money was paid to him on account. Smith v. State, 121 Ga. 618, 49 S. E. 677. Servant riding the master's horse on an errand was found at a place other than that to which he was sent endeavoring to sell the horse. Held sufficient to show a con-deficiency in defendant's account without showing when or in what amounts the items thereof were received is sufficient.[98]

Instructions[99] should be confined to the case made by the evidence,[100] and present all elements of the offense,[101] and all defenses of which there is evidence.[102]

The verdict must find the value of the property as in larceny.[103]

A sentence on conviction of a county officer that he pay to the county the amount embezzled is erroneous.[104]

EMBLEMENTS AND NATURAL PRODUCTS.[1]

Crops form a part of the real estate to which they are attached.[2] Hence a cropper has no interest in them,[3] but a tenant has.[4] Standing timber is real estate,[5] but a sale of it converts it into personalty,[6] and it is held that annual crops, (fractus industriales) are personal property.[7] Crops, whether matured[8] or unmatured,[9] pass with a conveyance of the land, and where the grantee is deprived of them, he may recover their value at the time of conveyance.[10]

A trespasser who sows a crop on land in the possession of another[11] or a tenant who plants a crop on mortgaged premises under lease from the mortgagor at a time when the equity of redemption must expire before the crop will mature[12] is not entitled to harvest it. A life tenant is entitled only to interest on the proceeds of minerals taken from the land; the principal goes to the remainderman.[13]

EMBRACERY.[14]

To sustain a conviction of improperly influencing "any juror," it must appear that the juror had been impanelled in a pending case,[15] and even under a statute forbidding the influencing of one "summoned as a juror," it must be shown that there was a cause pending for service in which the juror had been summoned.[16] Something must be done which reasonably tends to exert an improper influence on the juror.[17] An indictment for corrupting a juror must contain the name of the juror.[18]

EMINENT DOMAIN.

§ 1. The power of the state and delegations of it. A. Definition and nature of power.[19]—The right of eminent domain is the right to take private property for a public use.[20] It is an inherent,[21] inalienable[22] attribute of sovereignty, derived from the ancient "jus publicum,"[23] and hence existed independent of and before constitutions.[24] Strictly speaking, the power is a right and not a defense.[25] In the United States the exercise of the power is limited by consitutional provisions; these provisions, while not uniform in all their details, generally provide that private property can only be taken[26] and used[27] for a public use,[28] and then only upon the payment of just compensation;[29] unless such compensation is waived;[30] but such a waiver is binding only by way of estoppel,[31] hence may be withdrawn at any time before it is acted on.[32] An obligation to pay is implied from the taking and use by the public.[33] One whose property is taken by condemnation proceedings is not deprived thereof without due process of law,[34] nor is a statute authorizing the majority stockholders of consolidating railroads to condemn the stock of dissenting stockholders unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a contract,[35] nor as granting exclusive Greenwood [S. C.] 51 S. E. 532. Laws 1854-55, p. 264, c. 228, §§ 27, 29, does not give to the railroad any land not belonging to the state, but contemplates that land in excess of 100 feet on either side of the road belonging to the state, and all land belonging to private owners and not freely given, should be paid for in full. City of Hickory v. Southern R. Co., 137 N. C. 189, 49 S. E. 202. The heirs of one who, in surrendering a right of way through his land, reserved the right to erect gates across the same, cannot be deprived of such right by proceedings under Ky. St. 1903, § 4297, but are entitled to be compensated for their loss under § 4292. Allen v. Hopson, 26 Ky. L. R. 1148, 83 S. W. 575.

privileges.[36] The right to appropriate private property to public uses lies dormant in the state until legislative action is had, pointing out the occasions, the modes, conditions and agencies, for its appropriation,[37] and such power must be exercised in the manner, by the tribunal, and with the limitations provided by law.[38] The property owner may always raise the question as to whether the purpose is public in its nature.[39]

(§ 1) B. Who may exercise the right; delegation of power.[40]—The power of the state may be exercised through the agency of a private corporation formed for private gain so long as its purpose is public.[41] An enabling act need not be limited to that portion of the state wherein the use contemplated will be a public one,[42] but, like all other statutes, it must comply with constitutional requirements as to title, etc.[43] When the enabling act fails to provide for the payment of compensation, the general law of the state is by implication a part of the act and may be looked to to supply its deficiencies.[44] An objection that a statute is unconstitutional for failing to provide compensation to abutting owners can only be made by such owners.[45] The statute should also designate who is liable for the compensation;[46] but it is not necessary to designate a tribunal for the proceedings; the regular courts may hear them.[47] A statute authorizing a city to condemn certain land for a public purpose is not unconstitutional because it provides that the cost of the land shall not exceed a specific sum.[48] The corporation asserting the power must come within the provisions of the enabling act,[49] and must comply with all the requirements

49. It is only such a railroad corporation as is chartered under Acts 1875, p. 238, c. 142, § 6 (Shannon's Code, §§ 2414-2425) as is authorized to exercise the power of eminent of the statutes as to organization,[50] though it has been held that a de facto corporation may maintain condemnation proceedings.[51] A domesticated foreign corporation is generally authorized to exercise the power.[52] The patent of incorporation is proof of petitioner's incorporation,[53] and, an affidavit of good faith being a prerequisite to incorporation, the patent of incorporation being produced the question of good faith is not in issue, though the statute requires good faith to be alleged in the petition.[54] In determining whether statutes confer the right to exercise the power of eminent domain, the rules of strict construction are to be applied,[55] and there can be no implication in favor of the right of eminent domain unless it arises from a necessity so absolute that without it the grant itself will be defeated.[56] Under such rules it has been held that a telephone company comes within the term "telegraph company."[57]

Extent of power granted.—The extent of the power granted is largely a question of statutory construction, both as to property which may be taken[58] and as to the purposes of the delegation,[59] limited always to what is necessary.[60] The power being undoubtedly conferred, the statute will be liberally and reasonably construed so as to make its purpose effective.[61] In construing a grant of power to an electric power company, the word "plant" includes its pole and wire lines.[62] A corporation may exercise the power only to carry out its corporate objects; and its charter is controlling as to what they are.[63]

Rights of transferees, agents or receivers of delegates.—The lessee of a corporation does not take the power of eminent domain possessed by such corporation,[64] but the corporate identity of the lessor company being maintained, its statutory powers continue, although the exercise of them inure to the benefit of the lessee.[65] The lessee should condemn in the name of the lessor,[66] and a railroad company may authorize an individual to condemn lands in the name of the railroad whenever necessary in constructing its proposed right of way.[67] A receiver not being vested with title to the corporation's property, his appointment does not divest the corporation of its power of eminent domain so far as the exercise thereof does not interfere with the control of the receiver, or transgress any order of the court appointing him.[68]

Exhaustion of the power does not result from a single exercise.[69]

§ 2. Purposes and uses of a public character.[70]—As has been shown, the purpose or use for which the property is taken must be public.[71] The term "public use" is a flexible one, depending somewhat upon the nature and wants of the community at the time, and hence has necessarily been of constant growth.[72] While public benefit is one of the essential characteristics of a public use,[73] still the weight of authority seems to be against the doctrine that a public use may rest solely upon public benefit, a public interest or great public utility.[74] There must be a public exigency.[75] It is not essential that the entire community or people of the state or any political subdivision thereof should be benefited or share in the use or enjoyment of

Where a city ordinance granting a steam railroad a right of way on city streets is permissive only and it is shown that the interests not only of the railroad company but of the general public will be subserved by not having the railroad tracks laid in the streets, held, the ordinance did not deprive the railroad company of the right to the improvement.[76] The use may be local or limited. It may be confined to a particular district and still be public,[77] but in such case the use must be directly beneficial to a considerable number of the inhabitants of such section and the property to be taken must be controlled by law, for the advantage of the particular portion of the community to be benefited.[78] The use must inure to the benefit of the parties concerned, considered as members of the community or of the state, and not solely as individuals.[79] It is necessary that every one, if he has occasion, shall have the right to share in the use,[80] and this must not be a mere theoretical right.[81] A use which may be monopolized or absorbed by the few, and from which the general public may and must ultimately be excluded is in no sense public.[82] It is not material that each user will not be affected in precisely the same manner or in the same degree.[83] Controlling effect cannot be given the fact that the construction of a particular improvement will result incidentally in benefit to private rights and interests.[84] The question of the necessity, propriety or expediency of exercising the power is purely a legislative question.[85] While a legislative declaration that a use is a public one is entitled to great weight,[86] the question as to what is a public use is purely a judicial question,[87] and a private use cannot be converted into a public one by statute,[88] or, in some states, by constitutional provisions.[89] The legislature has power to delegate the authority to decide upon the necessity or expediency for the taking without submitting the matter to a court or jury,[90] and, hence, the power being absolute, the courts have no jurisdiction to review the exercise of such discretion.[91] In most states, however, the courts are given revisory powers and will interfere to prevent an abuse of discretion.[92] A corporation seeking to expropriate

92. While a corporation, to whom the power of eminent domain has been delegat-

property assumes the burden of proving the necessity in the particular case.[93] Such issue is one of fact,[94] and the fact that other property had been temporarily used does not estop petitioners.[95] Whether a corporation will serve a public purpose depends not alone on its articles of incorporation but also on evidence showing the actual business proposed to be conducted.[96] When a grant of the right embraces several purposes, some of them constitutional and others not, with the discretion in the grantee to exercise the right when and where it chooses, within the confines of a large territory, the grantee must use that discretion in good faith, and the taking must actually be for the constitutional purpose,[97] and the actual purpose is open to judicial inquiry.[98]

Particular purposes and uses.[99]—The construction of drainage[1] and irrigation[2] ditches and mining tunnels[3] have been held public purposes. So, also, the improvement of a railroad,[4] the building of a union passenger depot,[5] and a terminal or transfer railroad,[6] are public uses. A park is a public use,[7] though not located in,

NOTE. Private highways: It is very often difficult to determine what is a private use, and the decisions of the courts, passing upon the constitutionality of statutes similar to this, are by no means uniform. To obviate this difficulty some states have provided by their constitutions that private property may be condemned for that purpose. For example, Colorado, art. 2, § 14; Missouri, art. 2, § 20; Washington, art. 1, § 16; Wyoming, art. 1, § 32. The following states hold that a taking for a private highway is for a private use. Illinois (40 Ill. 175); Indiana, (123 Ind. 372, 8 L. R. A. 58); Missouri (73 Mo. 651); Nebraska (38 Neb. 767, 41 Am. St. Rep. 771, 22 L. R. A. 496); New York (6 Hill 47, 40 Am. Dec. 387); Oregon (4 Or. 318, 18 Am. Rep. 287); Tennessee (2 Swan, 540); Wisconsin (24 Wis. 89, 1 Am. Rep. 161); West Virginia (21 W. Va. 534). The following states uphold the constitutionality of such statutes on the ground that the opening of private roads is beneficial to the public: Alabama (83 Ala. 204, overruling 34 Ala. 311); Arkansas (15 Ark. 43); California (64 Cal. 110); Connecticut (15 Conn. 83); Delaware (4 Harr. 580); Idaho (2 Idaho, 1118, 16 L. R. A. 81); Kentucky (4 Metc. 337); Maine (73 Me. 56); Massachusetts (108 Mass. 202); New Hampshire (36 N. H. 404); New Jersey (29 N. J. Law, 226); North Carolina (107 N. Note: This case is another example of the difficulty of formulating a test for a public use. 4 Columbia L. R. 133. It is not justified in the idea that the people may to some extent be entitled to use the property (Gaylord v. Sanitary Dist. 203 Ill. 576), or that its use would directly benefit the public (Olmstead v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532, 89 Am. Dec. 221). As has been pointed out, "Every lawful business in a sense confers a public benefit." Ryerson v. Brown, 35 Mich. 333, 24 Am. Rep. 564. The case is one differing from those where the power of eminent domain is invoked in behalf of public service companies, and is one that illustrates a desire to further the economic interests of a section in the development of natural resources such as water power, mines, oil wells, etc. Mining Co. v. Parker, 59 Ga. 417.—From 5 Columbia L. R. 162. A late case akin to this subject is Brown v. Gerald [Me.] 61 A. 785, preceding note, where the object, a water power to generate electricity for sale to manufacturers, was held not public. The reasoning by which some courts uphold the taking of land for a private road is of the same kind as that in the principal case cited. See a note elsewhere in this section.

tablished business,[16] and the interest of a grantee or lessee of tide lands.[17] Railroads are not highways within a provision in the charter of a telegraph company giving it the right to occupy streets and highways.[18] A conflicting public use to be superior must antedate the beginning of the condemnation proceedings.[19]

Property exempt by law.[20]—In Pennsylvania a railroad company cannot condemn a dwelling house for an original right of way,[21] though it may condemn such property for the purpose of widening its right of way, such widening being rendered necessary by increase in traffic.[22] The Louisiana statute prohibiting the taking of residence property unless there is no other feasible way applies to expropriations for railroad and canal, but not for street purposes.[23] In Washington a corporation formed for the purpose of procuring water for domestic purposes has no authority to condemn state school lands.[24]

Property in actual and necessary use for a public purpose.[25]—While property condemned for a particular public use or purpose cannot, unless the fee has been taken, be devoted to a public use or purpose different from that for which the property was originally taken,[26] still it may be used for purposes incidental to the original use.[27] Property devoted to a public use may when necessary be taken for a more public use.[28] The right to exercise the power to take property already subjected to a public use must rest on express legislative grant,[29] or it must arise by necessary implication, either from the powers and privileges granted, or it must appear

Where a railroad company had, by purchase, acquired for terminal facilities all the property of a city block, except two lots on one of which was a dwelling house, and before any train had been run on the road the directors adopted a resolution to condemn the dwelling house to widen the terminal site, there was no such increase of business as authorized the condemnation of the dwelling house, under the acts of 1849 (P. Public service corporation is not bound to permit its property to be subjected to use by a rival corporation, unless by express statutory enactment or by due process of law thereunder. L. 226), gives water companies the power to condemn property held that the rights granted, when applied to the conditions and circumstances covered by it, cannot be beneficially exercised without the taking of such property.[30] It follows that a general grant, although it contains no express words of exception, does not give the power to condemn property devoted to a public use.[31] A city having authority to lay off, condemn and establish streets may condemn a right of way over the tracks of a railroad.[32] The question whether the property is in actual and necessary use for a public purpose is one of fact.[33] The public use of the property being abandoned, the property is open to appropriation to other public uses.[34] Structural properties created or acquired through the exercise of municipal functions in connection with a franchise or easement granted by the state will not be taken for a distinct and different public use, without compensation.[35] Speaking generally, the authorities sustaining the doctrine of a dedication to a second public use without compensation have reference to the rights of the original landowner, who has once been paid full compensation for the land taken.[36]

Town of Poulan v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 657. affects a considerable number of people in the same way.[55] It follows from this that damages cannot be recovered for an injury occasioned by the obstruction of a public and common right, even though the injury and inconvenience to the plaintiff be greater in degree than to other members of the public.[56] The general public means the people of the whole neighborhood.[57] Under a constitutional provision providing that private property shall not be "damaged" for a public use without compensation, the damages must be such as physically affect the property,[58] and a recovery cannot be had for injuries consequentially resulting from the devotion of neighboring property to a public use.[59] Compensation must be made for the use by the government of a patented article.[60]

NOTE: Is the vacating of a street a taking? It has been held that the vacating of a street is neither a taking nor a damaging of private property in such a sense as to authorize the adjacent landowner or others who have been accustomed to use the street to claim compensation for the deprivation of this right; that any loss resulting from the exercise of the power to vacate a street is damnum absque injuria. Paul v. Carver, 24 Pa. 207, 64 Am. Dec. 649; Levee Dist. No. 9 v. Farmer, 101 Cal. 178, 35 P. 569, 23 L. R. A. 388; Coster v. Albany, 43 N. Y. 399; Gray v. Land Co., 26 Iowa, 387. But there is also authority for the proposition that when the vacating of the street occasions to the adjacent owner or others who had been accustomed to use the street such peculiar loss as is not of the same character as that inflicted upon the general public, equity will interfere in behalf of such owner to restrain the attempted abandonment of the street, and such person has a right of action against a municipal corporation exercising a power to vacate delegated to it by the state. Heller v. Railroad Co., 28 Kan. 625; Horton v. Williams, 99 Mich. 423, 58 N. W. 369; Brady v. Skinkle, 40 Iowa, 576. It has also been said that, if the vacating of the street has the effect to entirely destroy or seriously impair the right of ingress and egress of a person owning property approached from the street, the loss thus sustained is not one suffered in common with the general public, and that such a person is entitled to compensation. Chicago v. Building Ass'n, 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Mills, Em. Dom. [2d Ed.] § 318; Chicago v. Burcky, 158 Ill. 103, 42 N. E. 179, 49 Am. St. Rep. 142, 29 L. R. A. 568. On the other hand, it has been held that the destruction of one means of access when another is left unimpaired will not give a right of action against a city which had proceeded to vacate a street in the manner authorized by law. Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. [Mass.] 254; Fearing v. Irwin, 55 N. Y. 486; Kings Co. Fire Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 101 N. Y. 411, 5 N. E. 353. Other courts hold that the owners of property abutting upon a street have such a property in the use of the street that the same cannot be destroyed by vacating the street without compensation being made for the loss thus sustained. Van Witsen v. Gutman, 79 Md. 405, 29 A. 608, 24 L. R. A. 403; Webster v. Lowell, 142 Mass. 326, 8 N. E. 54; Haynes v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 38; Heinrich v. St. Louis, 125 Mo. 424, 28 S. W. 626, 46 Am. St. Rep. 490; Bannon v. Roh-

Establishment or change of street grade.[72]—In the absence of negligence,[73] a municipality changing a street grade is not liable for injuries resulting to abutting property.[74] In some states, however, this rule has been changed by constitutional or statutory provisions.[75] Though a railroad is obliged by its charter to maintain safe passages for the public over or under its tracks, it is liable for injuries to property resulting from a change in the grade of a highway made by it for its own convenience.[76]

Railroads or other ways or structures on city streets.[77]—The construction of an ordinary passenger and freight railroad upon the streets of a city constitutes an additional servitude, and abutting property owners are entitled to compensation for the damages resulting to their property.[78] The reverse is ordinarily true of an ordinary street passenger railway.[79] Except where the fee of the street is in the city,[80]

Morris v. Montgomery Traction Co. [Ala.] 38 So. 834. A double-track street railway was constructed in the construction of an elevated railway is an injury to abutting property for which the property owner,[81] and in some states a mortgagee,[82] is entitled to compensation, which compensation should include damages for depreciation of value owing to the obstruction of ingress or egress,[83] and also, the owner having a vested right in the easements of light and air, for the interference therewith.[84] A steam surface railway acquiring a right of way in fee is not liable for damages caused by the construction of a viaduct to connect its trains with an elevated railroad, to a subsequent grantee of its grantor.[85] A property owner is entitled to compensation for the obstruction of means of access caused by the construction of a retaining wall,[86] or a railroad embankment.[87] Where property is damaged beyond a mere incidental inconvenience which unavoidably follows the exercise of charter powers by the construction of tunnels and the operation of railroad trains through them, property owners affected thereby are entitled to recover damages without proof of negligence on the part of the railroad.[88] Every approach to a railroad crossing forms a part of the crossing.[89]

Use of rural highways for purposes other than general public travel.[90]—The weight of authority seems to be that the placing of telephone poles and wires[91] upon a rural highway does not constitute an additional servitude, and the same has been held of an electric railway.[92] Where, in the improvement of its road, a railroad company occupies a public highway and supplies another, a common-law action may be maintained by a party injured thereby, whose lands have not been taken in chang-

the northerly half of a road 33 feet in width, pursuant to a city ordinance. ing the site of the original highway, and whose injuries are peculiar to himself and different in kind and degree from those sustained by the general public.[93]

Additional servitudes on railways.—The acquisition of a crossing by one railroad over another involves a taking of private property.[94] The fact that a railroad track is changed from narrow to standard gauge and that heavier trains are run over the same does not entitle the landowner to damages.[95]

§ 5. Conditions precedent to the exercise of the power; location of route.[96]—Condemnation proceedings are purely statutory, and every condition prerequisite to an exercise of the right must be strictly pursued.[97] In delegating the power the legislature has the authority to render the right to exercise it conditional; thus it may require that before proceedings can be commenced to condemn land for a highway[98] or a railroad,[99] a map of the proposed road shall be made and filed and, in some cases, approved. A location under such a requirement amounts to an appropriation of the place selected as against all persons except the owner of the land and a person who may have perfected a prior location thereon;[1] and, as to the landowner, it gives a right to acquire his title, by purchase or the further exercise of the power of eminent domain, paramount to that of a person claiming under a subsequent location.[2] As to whether or not an offer to purchase is a necessary condition precedent to condemnation is purely a statutory question.[3] In Louisiana the

§ 6. Measure and sufficiency of compensation.[5]—As a general rule the proper measure of damages as to property actually taken is the fair cash market value of such property at the time of taking.[6] As to property not taken, the injury being permanent, it is the difference between such value immediately before and after the injury.[7] This includes the cost of such improvements as are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the land not taken,[8] but the sum awarded for the land taken and not taken must not exceed the difference between the actual value of the entire tract immediately before and after taking.[9] The injury being temporary, the owner's measure of damages is the diminution in the value of the use of the premises for the purpose for which it was being used during the period of injury.[10] The property being used for business purposes, the court should consider the actual loss of trade and profits caused by the interruption and the reasonably necessary additional labor and expense required to prevent further loss, and which could not have been avoided by the use of reasonable care and foresight.[11] If the premises were used as a place of residence, or for the purpose of renting, the measure of damages would probably be fairly measured by the market rental value, or the diminution in such rental value, during the period of interruption.[12] The damages must be confined to the property directly involved in the proceeding,[13] and as a general rule where part of a tract is taken, they must be confined to such tract and cannot include separate and segregated tracts unless all are used together and the owner has, as a matter of right, means of communication between them.[14] The time of the actual opening of a street is the time the law fixes for estimating the damages.[15] The market value is the price for which the property could be sold in the market by a person desirous of selling to a person wishing to buy, both freely exercising prudence and intelligent judgment as to its value, and unaffected by compulsion of any kind.[16] Such value is to be determined by the same considerations that enter into a sale between private parties, namely, the availability of the land for all valuable uses to which it is adapted, having regard to the existing business or wants of the community, or such as may be reasonably expected in the immediate future.[17] Rental value is to be considered,[18] but it may be shown that the lease was taken as a speculation on the allowance to be made in the condemnation proceedings.[19] In proceedings to condemn a right of way over oil-bearing lands, it is permissible to show a progressive decrease in the productiveness of the field within which the land in question is situated.[20] Where part of a leased tract is taken, the lessee is entitled to the difference between the value of the annual use of the premises before the taking and what it was worth afterward.[21]

The value of intangible property of a public service system cannot be determined by capitalizing its actual income,[22] but should be determined by capitalizing an income based on reasonable rates.[23] In applying the rule that the basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates is the fair value of the property used for the service of the public, franchise values are not to be disregarded,[24] the element of going concern value is not to be considered only as involved in structure value,[25] and property value in this connection is not merely structure value.[26] Profits which, in the aggregate, exceed a fair return on the owner's property and franchises, involve unreasonable rates, and furnish no criterion of either franchise values or going concern value. What would be a fair return must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case.[27] When the rates which furnish a basis for estimating value are earned in part by property taken and in part by property not taken, the appraisers must discriminate and, so far as value may depend upon rates, they should charge the property taken for only its fair proportion of the earnings.[28] In determining structure value on a certain day, the market prices of materials and labor on that day or during a period long enough before that time for construction are the standards, rather than former prices,[29] and interest upon the money invested in the plant during construction and before completion should be allowed as a part of the cost of construction;[30] hence while actual cost bears upon the present value of the structure, it is not the only criterion. If, by the rise in prices, the present value of the structure is greater than the cost, the owner is entitled to the benefit of it; if less than the cost the owner must lose it.[31] The fact that the structure is in use and the further fact that it may lawfully be used where it is may enhance its value.[32] Where, in widening a street, a building is partly demolished, the jury should either consider the remainder of the building worthless and allow its value, or consider what could be done with the remainder of the building and the cost of doing it in accordance with the ordinances of the city.[33] Land being condemned for general railroad purposes, it is the duty of the jury to estimate the damages with reference to the right of the company to devote the entire tract[34] to any of the uses to which it may lawfully apply it,[35] and with reference to any motive power that the company may use under its charter.[36] In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a street being widened, it will be presumed that the grade will not be changed.[37] In proceedings to recover damages for the taking of a water power, the measure of damages is not, as a matter of law, the cost that might result from the substitution of steam power for the water power.[38] In such a case in making an estimate of the cost of production of power as a foundation for an assessment of damages, the best test is the cost under the most favorable conditions,[39] and the average daily yield, including times of the highest water and of the lowest, does not fairly represent the usual available power.[40] In the absence of consent by the parties, these rules cannot be changed by legislative enactment.[41] The United States in the exercise of the right of eminent domain is under its own limitation and injunction in respect to questions relating to just compensation for property taken in its own right.[42] In any case the amount to be awarded is a question of fact for the jury,[43] upon consideration of all the evidence in the case, including the knowledge of the property which they have acquired by their view of it.[44] Their award should not be based on mere caprice,[45] nor influenced by passion or prejudice.[46] The person damaged is entitled to interest on the value of the property taken from the time that title vests in the taker;[47] but care should be taken in awarding such interest that interest is not given on interest.[48]

off against the damages to land not taken.[53] So doing does not violate a constitutional provision requiring just compensation,[54] even though it results in an award of no damages.[55] Benefits made possible by the improvement cannot be considered if the cost of making them must be borne by the property owner.[56] In some states the benefits allowed are only such as inure to or directly affect the land adjacent to the land taken;[57] in others any benefit to a single tract of land used by the owner for a common purpose is allowed.[58] The determination of benefits from a street improvement is to be based on the increase in the market value of the property, and is not limited by the benefit conferred for the particular use to which the property is then put.[59] Where damages are assessed according to frontage, benefits may be assessed in the same way.[60] Benefits accruing from the construction of a railroad may be set off against damages for consequential inconvenience or injury resulting from the prudent construction and operation of the railroad.[61]

Particular elements of damage.[62]—In general all damages reducing the salability of the property should be considered.[63] Thus that rights of drain and access are taken,[64] and the fact that surface water will be thrown back on the premises,[65] are proper elements of damage. should be made for the riparian rights.[66] The fact that the property is situated in a religious settlement does not enhance its value.[67] Damages accruing from the improper construction of a railroad[68] or other public improvement[69] cannot be considered; but all damages occasioned by the proper use of the improvement[70] or operation of the railroad,[71] including the fact that the company is not obliged to fence its right of way,[72] should be considered. In proceedings to condemn a highway across a railroad's right of way, the railroad is entitled to compensation for necessary structural changes and for any direct expense incurred;[73] but it is not entitled to compensation for the observance of public regulations,[74] nor for the fact that it may be compelled to construct an overhead crossing.[75] A mere personal right or privilege in the taker cannot be considered in diminution of damages.[76] The fact that nearby landowners maintain works beneficial to the use to which plaintiff is putting the land cannot be considered.[77] The property being sold pending the proceedings, it will be presumed that the grantor sustained a loss in diminution of the purchase price.[78] Neither remote, speculative or fanciful damages,[79] nor those common to the general public,[80] can be considered.

od of procedure being stated in the enabling act, general rules apply.[97] In extending to a foreign corporation the privileges granted by its charter, modes of procedure and periods of limitation found in the charter will not be read into the enabling act unless its terms clearly import such an intent.[98] It is essential that the defendant be entitled to a judicial hearing.[99] A suit does not lie to condemn property in the hands of a Federal receiver without leave of court,[1] and leave to sue may be made dependent upon suit being brought in the Federal court.[2] The right to combine or consolidate proceedings[3] or to effect a severance or splitting thereof,[4] or hear counterclaims,[5] is all statutory. The fact that a railroad is improperly occupying a public highway is immaterial in condemnation proceedings directed against the land of private proprietors.[6] A special procedure for highways, streets and railways and other special uses respectively is usually prescribed.[7] In Texas the commissioners in certain counties must proceed under the railroad law to condemn for roads.[8] In some mode indicated by statute, the decision that the contemplated taking is a necessity must be made. This is sometimes by order of court or board,[9]

Discontinuance or abandonment.[12]—In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, the condemning party may abandon the proceedings at any time before the rights of the parties have become vested,[13] leaving the landowner without grievance which will authorize an appeal from the assessment,[14] and such an abandonment will be presumed from continued inaction after the report of the viewers.[15] Upon damages being fixed by the judgment, it is the petitioner's duty to determine within a reasonable time whether it will pay the damages and enter upon the land, or abandon the proceeding;[16] and, if it takes the latter course, its purpose should be promptly and unequivocally made a matter of record by the vacation of the judgment and the dismissal of the petition.[17] The proceedings should be prosecuted with diligence,[18] and if plaintiff wrongfully delays the trial of the cause and omits to make its election to take the land or abandon the proceeding within a reasonable time after the amount of the judgment has been fixed, and then elects to discontinue, it is liable to the owner of the land for damages occasioned by such wrongful acts.[19] If the acts be not both wrongful and injurious, there is no liability, but where they are both wrongful and injurious, the landowner is entitled to recover.[20] The measure of damages to which the landowner is entitled is the difference between the value of the land at the time he could have sold it, but for the pendency of the suit, and its value at the time the suit was dismissed.[21] The owner of the land at the time of the delay may recover damages for the wrongful delay of the petitioner in bringing the case to trial.[22] Though approval by the municipal assembly of petitions by the city for condemnation is required before proceeding to assessment, disapproval by it does not of itself dismiss the petition, though it might possibly be ground for dismissal.[23] There is a conflict as to whether the property owner is entitled to recover all costs and expenses, including attorney's fees, upon the abandonment of the proceedings.[24] It is, however, competent for the legislature to impose such a burden in delegating the right of eminent domain.[25]

Parties.[26]—It is not necessary to the jurisdiction of the court that all persons interested in the property be made parties, but damages may be assessed to the persons made parties, and they cannot complain of the failure to bring in other interested parties.[27] A lessee of the land to be condemned is a necessary party.[28] The liability of a city for "damaging" property for a public use is not tortwise, and the statutes authorizing joinder of him against whom a city might recover over do not apply.[29] Where between the impaneling of the jury to assess damages and the rendition of their verdict, the owner conveys the land in several parcels and the grantees do not intervene, they cannot object to an assessment of damages and benefits to the tract as a whole.[30] from reading the same, and a comparison thereof with monuments or other landmarks upon the ground, and therein referred to, tell the location of the land which it is proposed to take.[42] A defective description may generally be amended,[43] and the proceeding will not be set aside for this reason until the party applying for the condemnation has had an opportunity to apply for leave to amend.[44] Where the petition is required to state "the property sought to be condemned," property not to be taken but which might be injured by the appropriation of other property need not be stated.[45] The petitioner is required at its peril to ascertain and name in the petition the true owner of the land sought to be condemned and taken, and the person so named as owner in the petition is not required to prove title.[46] The petition is sufficient if it conform to statutory requirements.[47] An allegation, in substance in the language of the statute, that all preliminary steps required by law have been taken, is sufficient.[48] As a general rule an ambiguous recital not required by statute will not be construed so as to contradict necessary averments.[49] In Wisconsin a petition by a railroad must state the terminal and length of the road.[50] A declaration which states a good cause of action is not subject to a general demurrer because it claims an incorrect measure of damages.[51] Amendments in an appellate court cannot cure the omission of necessary jurisdictional allegations.[52] A landowner, who has united in a petition for the establishment of a public road, expressly waiving compensation for damages arising therefrom, may withdraw such waiver by filing a claim for compensation before the establishment of the road.[53]

In some states a claim for damages must be filed by the property owner.[54] A

App.] 81 P. 972. Under § 2 of the eminent domain act of 1900 (P. L. p. 80), it is not necessary, in a petition for the condemnation of tunnel rights, to allege that the proposed tunnel will be so built or kept in such condition as to make the surface of the ground above the same firm and safe for buildings and other erections thereon, or that it will be at such depth beneath the land as not to interfere with the use thereof. cross-petitioner who pays for an award for damages accruing to land which is not "taken" must allege in the petition that he is the owner of the property alleged to be "damaged."[55] If the original petitioner desires to contest the allegation, he must, by appropriate pleadings, raise that issue.[56] Where papers are handed to clerk with statement that the attorney would remit the fee, which the clerk did not then demand of the messenger, and the clerk delayed filing the papers, the filing will be held to relate back to the date when the papers were given to the clerk.[57]

§ 11. Process, notice, citation, publication.[58]—As a general rule, unless waived,[59] notice to the landowner is essential.[60] This is especially true of the notice of the proceedings to assess damages, for while the state has the power to provide for the designation of property to be taken for its own use, through its own agencies, without notice to the owners,[61] the latter have a constitutional right to be heard on the question of the assessment of compensation.[62] Notice being jurisdictional, the fact that it was given or waived must appear on the face of the proceedings.[63] When given under legislative authority, notice by publication is sufficient.[64] A three days notice of a meeting is a notice given three days before the meeting is to be held.[65] If the legislative grant of power specifically describes the property, the notice need not contain a description of it.[66] The notice to some of the landowners along a proposed railway being insufficient, the proceedings may in Wisconsin be dismissed as to them and continued as to those sufficiently notified.[67] A corporation's charter authorizing it to condemn land under a statute not requiring notice to landowners, a subsequent amendment of such statute requiring notice does not violate the charter contract.[68]

§ 12. Hearing and determination of right to condemn.[69]—The issue of ownership, if any, is preliminary to the submission of the question of damages to the jury, and is to be litigated and determined before the jury is impaneled to assess the amount to be paid the owner.[70] In Mississippi the circuit court has no jurisdiction to fix the time and place of meeting of the eminent domain court.[71] The trial court allowing the corporation counsel to assume control of the trial calendar, the city is estopped to claim that the property owner should have applied to the court to have the cause placed on the trial calendar.[72] Distance of the subject-matter from the place of trial, while an element in allowing time to prepare for trial, is not conclusive.[73] The questions of the existence or nonexistence of a corporation seeking to condemn property and its power or want of power to do so are questions of law.[74] The court being required to take judicial notice of the private acts of the state, a defense that petitioner under its charter has power to do all it proposes to do by means as advantageous to the public as it would have should it take defendant's property presents a mere question of law.[75] The court having jurisdiction, the fact that it hears without determining or determines without hearing is merely error.[76] Where the only fact necessary to be established is conceded, the entry of an order for condemnation without a hearing is harmless.[77]

§ 13. Commissioners or other tribunal to assess damages; trial by jury.[78]—Where the legislature provides for a commission to determine the compensation, it is evidently its intention to provide a speedy method of procedure, and a construction which admits of divided and protracted litigation is not to be favored;[79] hence the appointment and action of the commission is not to be kept in abeyance while the question of the plaintiff's title to certain property of the kinds enumerated is tried out in court.[80] A commission being clothed with the power and duty to determine the value of the property taken, it has authority to decide what property is taken.[81] In some states commissioners chosen by the property owner are given a preference.[82] In Illinois the report of commissioners appointed under a petition for the organization of a drainage district is not conclusive.[83] In many states the parties have a constitutional right to a jury trial,[84] but this right may be waived, in some states, by failure to demand such a trial,[85] and the law in force at the time the proceedings are instituted is to be resorted to in determining whether or not there is a waiver.[86] Changes by the court in the report of appraisers, on hearing exceptions thereto, do not infringe the constitutional right to have damages assessed by a jury of freeholders.[87] It is quite generally provided that the members of the commission[88] or jury[89] must be freeholders, and the record must so recite. "Householders" is not synonymous with "freeholders."[90] On appeal from the commissioners and trial de novo, the report of the commissioners is of no force or effect,[91] and an instruction that the commissioner's award has been paid should tell the jury what to do in case their award is less or more than that of the commissioners.[92] Michigan statutes contemplate that one jury shall determine in one proceeding the questions relating to condemnation by a railroad company of lands of different persons in a locality.[93] In Mississippi, the clerk of the circuit court should summon the jurors.[94] As a general rule a challenge to the array being sustained, the judge should issue a new venire.[95] On appeal, appellant's counsel, in examining jurors on their voir dire, may state the amount of the award below for the purpose of identifying the case,[96] and in such a case it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to permit counsel to ask the jurors if such finding would have any weight with them.[97] In California several parcels of land lying in the same county being sought for the same purpose, the owners must all join in their peremptory challenges.[98] It is error for counsel, witnesses and jurors to mingle freely together, dine together, and for meals, cigars and drinks to be furnished by petitioner's representatives.[99] The fact that the commissioners were not sworn is no defense to the payment, no appeal having been taken by the landowner.[1]

§ 14. The trial, or inquest, and hearings on the question of damages.[3]—The weight of authority seems to be that the burden is on the owner to prove the amount of his damages,[4] and in states so holding, he is entitled to open and close.[5] The jury is the judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and may determine as to the value of the testimony given by such witnesses respectively,[6] and in Louisiana it may take into consideration the information of its members outside of the testimony of the case, and also their own opinions, but in so doing they must not disregard the testimony of witnesses.[7]

Admissibility of evidence.[8]—The price brought on the sale of neighboring land similarly situated,[9] within a reasonable time prior to the condemnation proceedings,[10] may be shown.[11] Evidence to show the value of the land by its location and surroundings is admissible;[12] but evidence as to the value of the same property in a different location is inadmissible.[13] The price paid for the land by the defendant is admissible on the question of value, provided the purchase was not remote from the appropriation in point of time,[14] also the owner is bound by declarations as to value or offers to sell at a specified price, made at or about the time of the taking;[15] but offers made in the course of negotiations for the compromise of a claim for damages

24. Where, on the day condemnation proceedings were started, the owner of the land platted the property, showing the railroad track, and the lots could only be bought and sold with the expectancy that they would be along the track, held, plat was admissible, it having been recorded. Hartshorn v. Illinois Valley R. Co. [Ill.] 75 N. E. 122. Where it was claimed that the establishment of the proposed railroad would destroy the owner's right to a switch connection with another railroad, evidence that the establishment of the road would not interfere with the construction of a switch similar to one that had previously been in operation, held admissible. Id. In an action for the destruction of the means of ingress to and egress from land by the construction of a railroad track, evidence as to the owner's putting in crossings held admissible. 25. Lewis, Eminent Domain [2nd Ed.] § 449. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Roberts, 187 Mo. 309, 86 S. W. 91. It is error to permit the reading of such report to the jury. Id. Such error is not cured by an instruction that the jury should not consider such report and that the award had been paid and if damages in excess thereof were awarded the amount of the commissioners' award should be deducted therefrom. Id.

26. In an action for damages caused by grading street, it being admitted that the street had only been opened for a few blocks between two termini, held proper to exclude evidence as to what would have been the difference in value of plaintiff's property if the street had been opened up all the way between such termini. Board of Councilmen v. Edelin, 26 Ky. L. R. 601, 82 S. W. 279.

27. In an action against a city for lowering the grade of a street, hearsay statements made by defendant's contractor, when he commenced to grade the street and slope plaintiff's premises, in regard to plaintiff's being entitled to damages, is inadmissible as res gestae. Swope v. Seattle, 36 Wash. 113, 78 P. 607.

28. In an action against a railroad company for damages to plaintiff's property, caused by the excavation of streets to form a crossing with defendant's track, evidence that the track when completed would be about a foot above the existing level, held properly excluded, there being no claim that any change in the character of the excavation was contemplated. Middleton v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 364. In condemning a crossing across the tracks of a street railway, evidence as to the cost of grading is inadmissible, proceedings for condemnation and for grading being entirely distinct under the city charter. In re Topping Ave., 187 Mo. 146, 86 S. W. 190. Where grade of street was changed, evidence of the reasons which induced the municipal authorities to make the change is immaterial. Garvey v. Revere [Mass.] 73 N. E. 664.

29. Verdict held so low as to show

Witnesses and examination thereof.[30]—The question of the competency of a witness is a preliminary question, and the trial court should see that the witness discloses his competency by a proper examination before he is permitted to testify generally.[31] In an action against a city for lowering the grade of a street, the refusal to permit the respective parties to examine more than three real estate experts as to the value of plaintiff's premises is not an abuse of discretion.[32] To render a witness competent to testify to the damages sustained in a particular case, he should have such knowledge as will enable him to estimate the market value of the entire tract of land both before and after the taking,[33] and if he has a knowledge of the requisite facts to enable him to give the total amount of the difference, his inability to give the elements of damage does not render him incompetent.[34] Hence the witness should disclose some knowledge of the location of the land, its area, quality, and productiveness, the extent and condition of the improvements, the manner of the taking, and of the value of other lands in the neighborhood at or about the time of the appropriation.[35] The extent of his knowledge in regard to these facts affects the weight of his testimony and not his competency;[36] and any person familiar with values may qualify.[37] The same general rules apply where property other than realty is being condemned.[38] The general rules as to the cross-examination of witnesses apply.[39] The right to 35. Hope v. Philadelphia & W. R. Co., 211 Pa. 401, 60 A. 996. In proceedings to recover damages for the taking of a water power where a witness was called to testify generally as to the damages, and he based his opinion wholly on the value of his own plant, and that he arrived at that value from an offer made him for it, he was held not qualified to testify. Lakeside Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 186 Mass. 552, 72 N. E. 81. Held not error to refuse to permit one who had never lived in the vicinity of the property, or bought or sold property there, though he was engaged in the real estate business in a neighboring city, to testify as an expert, though a part of the property, a mill, was excepted from the taking and the witness had had experience as a builder, and operator of mills. He also testified that, in his opinion, the park commissioners might restrict the use of the water, which it was held by the court, as a matter of law, they could not do. Klaus v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 74 N. E. 330.

37. A witness need not be a real estate expert to qualify him to testify to the market value of property injured by the construction of a railroad through it, but all persons familiar with the property who have formed an opinion are competent to testify to its value. Hope v. Philadelphia & W. R. Co., 211 Pa. 401, 60 A. 996. Residents of the vicinity who have knowledge of the property, its uses and the general selling price in the neighborhood, are competent witnesses as to value. Reed v. Pittsburg, etc., R. 38. In proceedings to recover damages for the taking of water power, a mechanical engineer testified but as he did not appear to have any knowledge of values in that neighborhood, held proper to exclude a question asking him to state from his knowledge what was the value of power there per horse power, though it is proper to permit him to give the cost of producing it. Lakeside Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 186 Mass. 552, 72 N. E. 81. In proceedings to recover damages for the taking of a water power, held discretionary with the judge whether he would or would not permit experts in hydraulic engineering to give an opinion as to the value of the waters, and as to the damage caused by the taking of the same. 39. See Examination of Witnesses, 3 C. L. 1383. Witness testifying as to the value of land, counsel should be permitted, on cross-examination, to ask him the value of the land after the proposed improvement is made. Heath v. Sheetz [Ind.] 74 N. E. 505. The property owner testifying as to the value of his land, the taker should be permitted to prove by him on cross-examination how much he paid for the land and how much he received for parcels thereof which he had sold. Indianapolis & C. Traction Co. v. Shepard [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 904. Under Laws 1897, pp. 346-349, c. 378, §§ 979-981, 983, 984, relative to proceedings to open streets and the duties of commissioners of estimate, an objector to the preliminary abstract is entitled to produce evidence to sustain his objection, but is not, as a matter of right, entitled to further cross-examine witnesses who had testified on behalf of the city at the original hearing, and whom the objector had then cross-examined. In re Cromwell Ave., 95 App. Div. 514, 88 N. Y. S. 947.

have an expert's testimony stricken out and allow him to retestify is largely discretionary with the judge.[40]

Instructions.[41]—The instructions must be construed as a whole.[42] An instruction should not assume the disputed existence of injury.[43] Instructions upon a part[44] or upon the weight[45] of the evidence are erroneous. It is improper to call the jury's attention to the fact that the land is being taken against the will of the owners.[46] An instruction is not prejudicial because not applicable to all the defendants.[47]

§ 15. View of appropriated premises.[48]—Where no formal request was made to have the judge accompany the jury on a view, an absent co-owner of certain of the property, who was represented by his co-owner, will be held to have acquiesced in the action of the court.[49]

§ 16. Verdict, report or award; judgment thereon and lien or enforcement of judgment.[50]—The viewers' report in Pennsylvania must affirmatively show that legal notice was given.[51] The amounts awarded for the value of the land taken and for the damages to the remainder should be stated separately, though a joint judg-

40. In proceedings to recover damages for the taking of a water power, a witness testified as to what it would cost to produce steam power and that under the most favorable conditions it would be somewhat less than a previous estimate based on existing conditions; held discretionary with the judge to strike out such testimony and give the witness an opportunity to present another estimate. Lakeside Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 186 Mass. 552, 72 N. E. 81.

41. See 3 C. L. 1204.

42. Instruction that jury must confine damages to the market value of the land held not erroneous in view of another instruction that measure of damages was "fair cash market value" and the proof was restricted to the fair cash market value. Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co. v. Diver, 213 Ill. 26, 72 N. E. 758. An instruction that in estimating the compensation for land actually taken no deductions could be made because of any benefits which would accrue to land not taken held not erroneous, other instructions clearly showing that benefits to land not taken were properly to be considered on the question of damages to land not taken. Id. Where, in an action for damages for the obstruction of ingress and egress, the court in three instructions told the jury that they could give damages only for the obstruction of ingress and egress, an instruction that the damages should be the difference in the value of the property before and after the obstruction held not erroneous. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Smiley [Ky.] 84 S. W. 523. An erroneous instruction that the jury should award compensation for all injury to lands not taken which they might believe from the evidence, or from their own observation, would actually affect its value for use or its market value, is not cured by other instructions limiting the recovery to the difference in value of the land before and after the construction of the road. Illinois, etc., R. Co. v. Easterbrook, 211 Ill. 624, 71 N. E. 1116.

43. Where injury to land not taken is denied, an instruction that the jury should allow full compensation for such injuries to land not taken as they might believe defendant was entitled to, held objectionable as assuming that there was damage to the land not taken. Illinois, etc., R. Co. v. Easterbrook, 211 Ill. 624, 71 N. E. 1116. But both litigants proceeding to charge the jury on the theory that such fact has been proved, neither can complain of the instruction. Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co. v. Diver, 213 Ill. 26, 72 N. E. 758.

44. In proceedings to recover damages for the taking of water power, a requested instruction that it was competent for the jury "to ascertain what amount of money invested at a reasonable rate of interest would produce an annual income amounting to the annual cost of replacing the amount of water power taken away by substituting steam or other power for the water power so taken," held properly refused as being a request to instruct upon a part of the evidence, and to say that there are possible views of the evidence which would warrant a jury in coming to a certain result. Lakeside Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 186 Mass. 552, 72 N. E. 81.

45. Instruction as to weight to be given testimony of engineer testifying in proceedings to condemn a right of way for a ditch across a railroad right of way, held erroneous. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Polecat Drainage Dist., 213 Ill. 83, 72 N. E. 684. Where nearly all the witnesses were farmers, an instruction authorizing the jury to consider whether witnesses engaged in farming in the neighborhod of the land in dispute have a better opportunity of estimating the injury to plaintiff's farm than men engaged in other occupations was erroneous as on the weight of the evidence. Simons v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 129.

ment for both may be rendered.[52] The judgment should simply adjudicate that the amount found due and assessed is a just compensation to be paid for the property taken.[53] A personal judgment against the taker should not be entered.[54] The owner being represented by an agent, it is immaterial whether the damages awarded for such land are allowed to the agent or owner.[55]

Sufficiency.[56]—The report should be certain and unambiguous.[57] An appellate court in passing upon this question may look into the entire record, and, if from other portions of the record any uncertainty as to amount in the verdict is rendered certain and specific, the judgment should be sustained.[58]

Effect or conclusiveness.[59]—The verdict is subject to review by the trial judge, and if he believes that it does not do justice to the parties, he should set it aside.[60] The judgment is not subject to collateral attack for irregularities in the proceedings.[61] A void decree may be set aside after the expiration of the term of court at which it was made.[62] In the District of Columbia when the property owner excepts to an order confirming the verdict of a jury of seven, the verdict is rendered void.[63]

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, after the lapse of a long period of time, facts will be presumed rendering the proceeding valid.[64] By dismissing his appeal and accepting compensation, one may become estopped to claim that the proceedings were irregular or void.[65]

Enforcement of judgment.—A statute requiring the payment of awards within a certain period stays the enforcement of the lien of a judgment upon an award for such period.[66]

§ 17. Costs and expenses.[67]—The right to costs is purely statutory.[68] The word "costs" as used in statutes on this subject includes the fees and mileage of jurors.[69] A statute making jury fees a part of the costs is constitutional.[70] As a general rule, one whose property is taken against his will in condemnation proceedings is entitled to recover his court costs if he prevails in the action,[71] otherwise not.[72] In some states by failing to tender the true value of the property before bringing suit, the taker incurs a liability for costs.[73] In New York, in condemnation proceedings under the rapid transit act, costs are not allowable to a property owner.[74]

§ 18. Review of condemnation proceedings.[75] Right to review.[76]—A statute conferring the right of review whenever an "appeal" would formerly have been given uses appeal in the broad sense of review,[77] and this is the sense in which the word is often used in eminent domain.[78] The court will not review questions which have become moot by abandonment of the proceedings.[79] Payment of amount assessed and taking possession of premises does not estop petitioner from prosecuting an appeal from the award of damages.[80] A claimant by receiving that part of the award which it is conceded he is entitled to does not forfeit his right to appeal from a judgment awarding the balance to another claimant.[81]

Saving questions for review.[82]—Errors not fundamental cannot be first raised on appeal.[83] Thus that the award is erroneous will not be considered in the absence of exceptions,[84] and the party prosecuting the proceeding must abide by his assumption that it was necessary.[85] Error in that petitioner's representatives treated the jury to drinks and cigars is seasonably taken advantage of by objection to confirmation.[86] The sufficiency of particular objections[87] and exceptions[88] is shown in the notes.

Mode of review.[89]—In proceedings under eminent domain acts, there is no right to a writ of error unless expressly given by statute.[90] The validity of an order allowing an appeal from the award must be tried on certiorari or other direct proceedings.[91] In New York the act of the board of estimate and apportionment in directing the taking of land is not reviewable by certiorari,[92] though the contrary is true where the board of assessors holds that there has not been a former recovery by the claimant for the same damages.[93] One opposing the issuance of a writ of certiorari cannot assert the entire invalidity of the proceeding assailed, he having procured it.[94]

Parties appellant and respondent.[95]—The legal successor of an incorporate taker may prosecute the appeal[96] on showing that it is such.[97] That one of joint defendants may appeal who was allowed no damages, though the other recovered.[98]

Decisions reviewable.[99]—The determination of preliminary questions[1] and an order of partial confirmation[2] are reviewable by statute in some states. The necessity for a motion for a new trial in order to secure an appeal is largely statutory.[3]

Jurisdiction of appeal.—All proceedings which are appellate must rest on a jurisdiction perfected below.[4] For the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on appeal, condemnation proceedings in which it is sought to take real estate involve the title to land.[5]

Taking and perfecting an appeal.[6]—The appeal must be taken within the statutory time, and in Ohio, on an appeal from the determination of the probate judge on the preliminary questions, the time within which the bill of exceptions must be filed should be computed from the day on which the questions are determined, no motion for a new trial being filed, or, if such a motion is filed, from the day it is overruled,[7] and the time within which a petition in error must be filed is to be computed from the date of the final judgment either dismissing the petition or confirming the verdict of the jury.[8] In Iowa jurisdiction of an appeal from an award of a sheriff's jury is conferred by service of notice on the adverse party and the sheriff; and the filing of the transcript and payment of docket fees is not necessary to this end.[9] The affidavit of a landowner must show his interest in the proceeding.[10] In Indiana the filing of exceptions will be treated as an appeal from the award.[11]

In order to have a joint appeal, the award must be joint.[12] The interests of a landowner and his tenant are not joint.[13]

Defective or tardy proceedings; dismissals; amendments.—Where the transcript is necessary only for the purpose of furnishing the data for the docketing of the case, pending the proceedings consolidated with another company, which succeeds to all petitioner's rights, titles and estates in and to the subject of the litigation, the consolidated concern is entitled, on averring such facts, to prosecute an appeal from the award of damages in its own name. 2. Under Laws 1901, pp. 416-418, c. 466, §§ 986, 988, 989, the appellate division of the supreme court has jurisdiction to review an order of partial confirmation made by the special term, and appeal lies to the court of appeals from the order of the appellate division finally determining the same. 3. Ohio: A motion for a new trial is not necessary to the review of the determination of the preliminary questions by the probate judge. Pittsburg, C. & T. R. Co. v. Tod [Ohio] 74 N. E. 172. Although it may not be necessary to file a motion for a new trial at the time of the hearing of the preliminary questions, yet if the errors are included in the causes set forth in Rev. St. 1892, § 5305, the aggrieved party may include the same in a motion for a new trial, to be filed within 10 days after the verdict is rendered in the appropriation proceeding as provided in Rev. St. 1892, § 6432. Dayton & U. R. Co. v. Dayton & M. Traction Co. [Ohio] 74 N. E. 195.

13. Simons v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 129. Where separate appeals were taken by a landowner and his tenant, held not error for the court to refuse to consolidate them on the taker's re-or to show the trial court what is in issue, appellant's failure to file the same until the case is reached for trial is not a fatal defect,[14] nor is the failure of appellant to pay the docket fee ground for dismissal.[15] Such defects cannot be raised by answer.[16] In New York the notice of a motion to quash a writ of certiorari to review the act of the board of estimate and apportionment in directing the taking of land may be signed by the corporation as such.[17]

Record.[18]—Interlocutory motions become a part of the record only by being preserved in the bill of exceptions.[19] In some states an appeal bond and partial transcript being filed within the statutory time, it is proper for the court to allow appellant to perfect his appeal after the expiration of such time.[20]

Hearing and scope of review.[21]—Review proper is confined to the questions raised below,[22] and properly saved.[23] Errors not complained of may be disregarded.[24] Questions raised over the introduction of evidence cannot ordinarily be considered on appeal,[25] though evidence clearly improper may cause a reversal of confirmation, should it appear that it caused a substantial error on the part of the jury.[26] The award being fully sustained by the evidence, it will not be disturbed because of the incompetency of one witness.[27] The report of the commissioners is presumptively correct.[28] It may be set aside for an insufficient award,[29] or for errors occurring in the examination of witnesses;[30] but it will not be disturbed as excessive, where it is less than half what it might have been under the evidence.[31] The appellate court will not review findings of fact further than to see that the finding is supported by the evidence,[32] and an award on conflicting evidence,[33] especially where the premises fusal to agree to the rendition of separate verdicts and findings in each case. Id.

Under Code, §§ 3660, 4559, the district court has discretion to refuse to grant a motion to dismiss and affirm an appeal from an award for appellant's failure to promptly file transcript and pay the docket fee, on a proper showing of an excuse, which discretion will not be interfered with on appeal. Id. Where notice of appeal had been served on the adverse party and the sheriff, and the case was properly put on the docket, the appeal will not be dismissed or judgment affirmed for appellant's failure to file a transcript before trial or to pay the docket fee. Id. A motion to dismiss the appeal will be denied where appellee failed to make the motion until three days after the first day of the second term after the appeal was taken, and appellant paid the docket fee and filed a transcript before the motions were ruled on. were viewed,[34] will not be disturbed unless it clearly appears that, by proceeding on an erroneous principle, injustice has been done.[35]

Decision and determination.[36]—The condemnor entering into possession pending the proceedings, the appellate court, on ascertaining that the action cannot be maintained, will order restitution to the landowner of the possession of the premises, and remand the case, with leave to owner to sue out a writ of possession, and a direction to dismiss the action with costs, after the effectuation of such restitution.[37] The taker only appealing from one award, the appellate court on dismissing the appeal and affirming the judgment should not direct the entry of judgment against the petitioner and the surety upon its appeal bond, in favor of the other defendants.[38] Where the appellant has only given an appeal bond, the appellate court on entering a judgment of affirmance should only enter judgment for the costs of the appeal.[39] The report being ambiguous, it may be remanded for explanation;[40] and the words "consequential damages" are ambiguous within this rule. The proceedings being regular except that the jurors were not freeholders, the cause will be remanded.[41] In New York there being an irregularity or error of law, the report should be set aside and not remanded to the commissioners for correction.[42] In Ohio if the court of common pleas reverses the judgment of the probate court for error in the determination of either of the preliminary questions, it should retain the case and hear and determine such questions de novo; and it is clearly error for it to determine them upon the evidence in the record of the hearing before the probate judge, unless the parties see proper so to submit them.[43] If the taker appeals it is not necessary under the Iowa code for the landowner to appeal in order that he may procure larger damages.[44] Upon remanding the proceedings it is proper for the appellate court to tax the costs of that court only, and allow the lower court to tax the costs therein after a final disposition of the proceedings.[45]

EMINENT DOMAIN—Con't.

§ 19. Remedy of owner by action or suit. A. Actions for tort, damages or trespass; recovery of property.[46]—A possessory action does not ordinarily lie where the owner has acquiesced in the construction of a railroad or other works over his land;[47] but may lie where the effect of the judgment is so limited as to allow the making of compensation before being executed.[48] The possessory action not being allowed, the owner's remedy is limited to an action for damages,[49] and this right of action belongs to him personally and does not run with the land.[50] The right of action for damages for the appropriation of land by a railroad accrues when the railroad is located.[51] The act of location of a railroad is the selection and adoption of a line by the board of directors of the company.[52] Only a person showing an interest in the abutting property has a right to sue for damages thereto, by reason of unwarranted servitudes imposed upon the way contiguous thereto.[53] Where the property is in the hands of a tenant, the reversioner may recover his damages.[54] All damages present and prospective must be sued for in one action and additional damages cannot be made the subject of a subsequent suit.[55] The fact that the property might have been condemned is no excuse for an unlawful taking,[56] and the payment of a judgment in an action for trespass is not a payment for appropriation so as to bar subsequent actions for the continuance of the nuisance.[57] That the taker defaults does not deprive him of his right to have his damages assessed according to the rule applicable to condemnation proceedings rather than according to trespass.[58]

Prohibition is not the proper remedy for relief from an ordinance attempting to take private property for a public use without compensation.[59]

Pleading.[60]—A complaint in an action for the obstruction of a public highway which became such more than 30 years before the alleged obstruction need not allege how the highway came into existence as such,[61] and the same is true in an action for the obstruction of a private way, the complaint alleging that for more than 30 years plaintiff has been in the continuous and uninterrupted enjoyment of the way.[62]

Appeal.[63]—In determining the question of appellate jurisdiction, an action for damages for delay in bringing a condemnation proceeding to trial and for delay in

NOTE. Right to maintain possessory action: There is no doubt about the proposition that private property being taken for a public use without the knowledge, consent or acquiescence of the owner, the latter may maintain an action for the recovery thereof. Green v. Tacoma, 51 F. 622; Jacksonville, etc., R. Co. v. Adams, 27 Fla. 443, 9 So. 2; Graham v, Columbus & I. C. R. Co., 27 Ind. 260, 89 Am. Dec. 498. The courts are divided upon the proposition as to whether or not an owner of land who stands by and without protest sees a public improvement constructed thereon is estopped to thereafter maintain an action in ejectment or a suit in equity. The following cases hold that he is: Trenton Banking Co. v. McKelway, 8 N. J. Eq. (4 Halst.) 84; Kakeldy v. Columbia & P. S. R. Co., 37 Wash. 675, 80 P. 206, citing Roberts v, Northern Pac. R. Co., 158 U. S. 1, 39 Law. Ed. 873; McAulay v. Western Vermont R. Co., 33 Vt. 311, 78 Am. Dec. 627; Provolt v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 57 Mo. 256; Dodd v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 108 Mo. 581, 18 S. W. 1117. Other cases hold that the proceeding will lie but that the judgment will be stayed to allow the taker to proceed under the statute to condemn the land and ascertain and pay the damages. (Injunction) New York v. Pine, 185 U. S. 93, 46 Law. Ed. 820. (Ejectment) Pittsburg, V. & C. R. Co. v. Oliver, 131 Pa. 408, 19 A. 47, 17 Am. St. Rep. 814, 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. 226. The damages will be assessed as of the date of entry. Pittsburg, V. & C. R. Co. v. Oliver, supra. Such damages constitute a personal claim in favor of the owner at the time the injury occurred, and they do not run with the land. Kakeldy v. Columbia & P. S. R. Co., 37 Wash. 675, 80 P. 205; Roberts v. N. P. R. Co., 158 U. S. 1, 39 Law. Ed. 873; McFadden v. Johnson, 72 Pa. 335, 13 Am. Rep. 681; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Englehart. 57 Neb. 444, 77 N. dismissing it after judgment is one involving the taking of private property for a public use.[64]

(§ 19) B. Suits in equity; injunction[65]—While, as before stated, equity has no jurisdiction of condemnation proceedings,[66] it has jurisdiction to prevent the construction of a work of internal improvement, where it would work such injury to private property, not actually taken, as virtually destroys its value, until compensation for the injury is paid or secured to be paid,[67] and in such case an issue out of chancery will be directed to ascertain the amount of compensation.[68] In the absence of a statutory remedy, equity may restrain a corporation from taking property for a private use,[69] or under invalid condemnation proceedings.[70] An injunction will not issue where there is an adequate remedy at law,[71] nor will the condemnation proceedings be enjoined pending the settlement of a controversy respecting the title to the property.[72] In the absence of damage, an injunction pendente lite will not be continued.[73] In a suit to enjoin condemnation proceedings, the fact that the party whose land it is proposed to take is not given personal notice of the bill authorizing such condemnation is immaterial.[74] An injunction suit against trespass is no impediment or bar to subsequent expropriation proceedings or to the exercise of rights of property acquired thereunder.[75]

Parties.[76]—A county which has condemned property is the real party in interest in a suit to enjoin a contractor under it from entering upon and making use of the property in the construction of a public work, and is entitled to defend such suit.[77]

Pleadings.[78]—It appearing that plaintiff is entitled to damages if the allegations in the petition are true, the court, after the dissolution of the preliminary injunction, may permit the amendment of the petition so as to pay for damages.[79]

Decree, judgment or order.[80]—The court having jurisdiction of the suit, it will do complete justice by awarding an issue of damages.[81]

§ 20. Payment and distribution of sum awarded; title or interest requiring compensation.[82]—An award made for lands is personal property.[83] Receipt of the compensation allowed estops the landowner to claim the land appropriated,[84] and he cannot without the consent of the taker return the money and avoid the estoppel.[85] The taker is discharged from liability upon making compensation, in good faith and pursuant to a judgment of the court, to the person in possession, and who is the apparent sole owner of the land.[86] In Ohio payment of costs and damages arising from the establishment of a county road should be made to the county treasurer.[87] Statutory requirements must be followed.[88] The landowner, retaining possession, is not entitled to interest on the award from the date of the service of the summons to verdict, less rents and other benefits of possession received by him during that period.[89] An incumbrancer is entitled to interest on his debt pending an appeal.[90]

Sufficiency of payment.[91]—The owner is entitled to payment in money and cannot be compelled to accept any other kind of property in lieu thereof.[92]

Distribution.[93]—The rights of various parties to compensation is fixed at the date of the taking,[94] though in some states as to subsequent purchasers the proceedings operate as lis pendens.[95] The courts are not agreed as to the distribution of the award when mortgaged premises are taken. Some hold that the mortgagee is entitled to the fund;[96] others that the mortgagor has the right thereto.[97] The matter is now largely regulated by statute. A mortgagee is an "owner" within the meaning of statutes on this subject,[98] and a third mortgagee is a "mortgagee," as that word is here used.[99] In those states where it is held that the award belongs to the mortgagor, the mortgagee can in equity follow the land taken, and subject the fund to a lien for the payment of the mortgage debt due him.[1] Where part of a tract of mortgaged land is taken, nothing remains subject to the mortgage except the land not taken, and that only can be sold on a foreclosure of the mortgage;[2] and the right of the mortgagee to reach the compensation fund is an equitable right distinct from his rights

97. Where mortgaged property is taken, the compensation, in the absence of any statute on the matter, is at law the property of the mortgagor. Bates v. Boston El. R. Co., 187 Mass. 328, 72 N. E. 1017.

98. A mortgagee is within the protection of a provision requiring commissioners to ascertain the damages for which any occupant or owner of "any right or interest claimed under the mortgage on the remaining land.[3] A mortgagee being entitled to the money may establish his claim by a bill in equity[4] and to such a suit the mortgagor is a necessary party.[5] Where mortgaged property is damaged, the payment of the mortgage should be apportioned between the land and the compensation fund.[6] Equity has jurisdiction to adjust the equitable rights existing between the various mortgages where the mortgage debts are secured by liens on other funds.[7] A sum paid the owner and mortgagor in consideration of his withdrawing his opposition to the condemnation proceedings is no part of the award.[8] The award being paid into court, it stands in the place of the land condemned, and the lien or incumbrances on the land are transferred to the fund thus held in the order of priority that they were held on the land before it was taken.[9] In New York an award made for realty takes the place of the land and remains subject to judgment liens to which the land was subject,[10] and hence is payable to a receiver appointed in supplementary proceedings on a judgment against the owner of the land.[11] Where a part of a lot subject to an irredeemable ground rent under a lease renewable forever is condemned, the fact that the portion not taken is sufficient security for the rent charge does not deprive the owner of the ground rent of the right to compensation,[12] and the rent may be apportioned when necessary to do full justice to all the parties.[13] A lessor becoming the owner of improvements is entitled to a fund awarded for damages thereto.[14] The eminent domain court has jurisdiction to determine the amount of attorney's fees to be allowed an executrix who is a party to the proceeding.[15]

Lien and enforcement.[16]—A claim for damages caused by the location of railroad tracks in a street is a lien upon the corpus of the railroad, superior either to a prior or subsequent mortgage, and cannot be defeated by a sale of the road, unless the lienholder is made a party to the foreclosure proceeding.[17]

by the terms of the enabling act.[21] As a general rule, under a general power of condemnation, corporations are authorized to take only such rights as are necessary.[22] What amount of land is necessary is a question for the jury.[23] The property or interest acquired may also be limited by the instrument of taking[24] or by the terms of the award.[25] The mortgage lien of one not a party to the proceedings is not affected thereby.[26] Former trespasses are not merged in the expropriation proceedings.[27] The judgment in the proceedings and not the petition determines the amount that can be taken;[28] but the rights and interests of parties date from the time of the filing of the petition and subsequent dedications are subject to it.[29] The record of the condemnation proceedings as to what the assessment was intended to cover cannot be altered or varied by parol.[30]

NOTE. New Jersey rule: The principle stated in the text is not wholly abrogated by the judgment in the case of Currie v. New York Transit Co., 66 N. J. Eq. 313, 58 A. 308, but was merely limited so far as to give effect to the will of the legislature clearly expressed in the statute delegating the power. If the statute be ambiguous, it should still be construed in accordance with that principle. McEwan v. Pennsylvania, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Law] 60 A. 1130.

§ 22. Transfer of possession and passing of title.[31]—In most states, except where the land is taken by the state,[32] the payment or tender of the award[33] or the giving of security for such payment[34] is made a condition precedent to the taking of possession by the taker, unless the use is temporary and of uncertain duration and the extent and character of the injuries which may result are consequently uncertain.[35] In some states the rule is limited to property actually taken.[36] This requirement may be waived by the owner,[37] but such waiver does not deprive him of his right to compensation.[38] In construing statutes on this subject a county is a "municipal corporation,"[39] and the condemnation of land for a county road is a condemnation by the state.[40] A requirement for adequate security will be satisfied if the security which it is proposed to give makes it reasonably certain that compensation will in due time be made.[41] The property owner refusing the award, it is usually provided by statute that upon the payment into court of a certain sum, usually the amount of the award and costs, possession may be awarded the petitioner,[42] even though an appeal be pending;[43] but such statutory provisions must be strictly complied with.[44] If the proceeding is removed from a state to a Federal court and a writ of error is prosecuted, any supersedeas should be modified so that the petitioner shall have the same rights which he would have had if the proceedings had remained in the state court.[45] A decree of condemnation vesting title to the land on payment of the award, it is im-

39. Within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 16, providing that no right of way shall be appropriated for the use of any corporation other than municipal, until full compensation shall have been made irrespective of bene-material that a quitclaim deed also given is void.[46] A railroad company is not entitled to compensation for improvements made by it on property upon which it has entered, pending the condemnation proceedings, upon reversal of the final judgment in its favor, subsequently obtained in the action and adjudicating against its right to condemn the land.[47] The court failing to award writs of possession at the term at which the decree was entered, it can issue such writs at a subsequent term,[48] and the lower court having lost the power by lapse of time, the appellate court will issue such writs, or remand the cause to the court below for that purpose.[49]

§ 23. Relinquishment or abandonment of rights acquired.[50]—Except where the appropriator has a fee, property taken for a public use reverts to the owner on abandonment.[51] The fee to land being taken, a statute providing that abandonment shall revest title in the person from whom the land was taken is unconstitutional as depriving one of a vested right.[52] An abandonment of land cannot be established by proof merely of a failure for the time to use it, or of a temporary use of it not inconsistent with an intention to use it for the purpose for which it was taken, or another public purpose.[53] An averment of an actual abandonment of any intent to use the land for any public purpose is a sufficiently well pleaded abandonment.[54]

EQUITY.

This topic treats of the general rules of equity and of the procedure in equity in those states where the adoption of a code has not changed equitable forms and procedure, and also of such matters of procedure as remain under the codes. The jurisdiction of equity over particular subject-matters is retained, but the law relative to such subjects [1] and to purely equitable remedies [2] and the equitable jurisdiction of particular courts [3] are treated elsewhere. The question of the legal or equitable character of a controversy sometimes arises in determining the right to a jury,[4] or in determining upon what calendar the cause shall be placed for trial,[5] and in many other matters of procedure especially under the codes.[6] The saving of questions for review [7] and appellate procedure [8] are treated elsewhere.

§ 1. Nature of, and general principles controlling, equity.[9]—Equity supplements and aids the law, but does not invade its domain, and never works for the destruction of a legal right nor in opposition thereto.[10]

§ 2. Equity jurisdiction and occasions for relief. A. In general.[11]—Jurisdiction of the subject-matter cannot be conferred by consent,[12] but one voluntarily seeking the aid of equity cannot question its jurisdiction.[13] Jurisdiction is to be determined from the allegations of the bill.[14] Service out of the state by copy of the bill and notice gives the court jurisdiction so far as property within the state is sought to be effected.[15]

A law action may be converted into an equitable one by amending the complaint so as to ask for equitable relief,[16] or by interpleading proceedings.[17] In states and courts retaining the distinction between equity and law courts, an equitable defense cannot be interposed in an action brought on the law side of the court;[18] but this is not the rule where the mixed system of jurisprudence prevails.[19] A bill showing want of equity, the defect may be cured by the filing of a cross bill.[20]

The court may, on its own motion, dismiss for want of jurisdiction,[21] or the defendant may raise the question by answer[22] or plea,[23] and in the latter case the merits cannot be gone into further than is necessary to determine the question of jurisdiction.[24] Where courts of equity have concurrent jurisdiction with law courts, it is in the sound discretion of the chancellor whether he will assume jurisdiction in a particular case.[25] Courts of equity, having once acquired jurisdiction, never lose it because jurisdiction of the same matter is given to courts of law, unless the statute conferring such jurisdiction uses restrictive or prohibitory words.[26]

Effect of code or statutory provisions.[27] In those states where the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity has been abolished, the distinction between

One having a cause transferred from the law to the equity docket cannot complain of the exercise of jurisdiction by the chancery court. Deidrich v. Simmons [Ark.] 87 S. W. 649. Where defendant acquiesced in transfer of cause to equity docket held could not object on appeal. Kessner v. Phillips [Mo.] 88 S. W. 66.

14. Where the bill contained a general prayer, held jurisdiction was not to be determined therefrom but from the allegations in the bill. Chandler Mortg. Co. v. Loring, 113 Ill. App. 423. Where a complaint for the pollution of the water of a stream alleges the destruction of timber, diminution in value of realty, sets forth the interference with the use and enjoyment of the premises, and alleges damages specifically, it does not state a case of equitable cognizance, though it states that defendant intends to and will continue to pollute the stream and asks for equitable relief. 15. Fahrig v. Milwaukee & Chicago Breweries, 113 Ill. App. 525. Where notice is so served upon an English corporation organized solely for the purpose of holding the legal title to the stock of an American corporation, equity may, where the legal situs of the stock in the American corporation is within the jurisdiction of the court, enter a decree against such American corporation and its officers, requiring it and them to issue to the stockholders of such English corporation certificates of stock representing their several rights and interests in such domestic corporation. 17. Couch v. State [N. D.] 103 N. W. 942. An action to recover a reward is not changed to one of equitable cognizance by the fact that other claimants have been permitted to intervene under Rev. Codes 1899, § 5239, and assert their claims to the same reward. The rule is otherwise when a defendant against whom there are other claimants for the same debt interpleads such claimants, and secures his own discharge, and pays the money into court, pursuant to Rev. Codes 1899, § 5240. Id.

26. Johnson v. Block, 103 Va. 477, 49 S. E. 633. Equity is not without jurisdiction to entertain a suit by a number of taxpayers against a county board of supervisors and a number of their predecessors to compel them to restore to the county moneys paid them in excess of their salaries, on the ground that there is an adequate remedy at law under Code 1904, p. 398, § 836. The New Jersey legislature has no power to force a jury trial upon the court of chancery, or to compel the court of chancery to submit those controversies of which it has original jurisdiction to the determination of legal and equitable principles is still retained,[28] and the question whether an action is legal or equitable raises only a question of practice,[29] and equitable defenses and counterclaims may be interposed in an action at law.[30] In some states the use of such a defense is not permitted for the purpose of obtaining affirmative relief.[31]

(§ 2) B. Maxims and principles controlling the application of equitable relief. General maxims.[32]—He who comes into equity must come with clean hands;[33] but this maxim requires only that the plaintiff be not guilty of reprehensible conduct with respect to the subject-matter of his suit.[34] It has been applied to the right to interpose a defense.[35]

Equity aids the vigilant and not those who sleep upon their rights,[36] and this applies not only to the operation of statutes, but to the action of suitors in the conduct of their causes.[37]

He who seeks the aid of equity must do equity.[38] This maxim only applies a jury in a court of law. Van Houten v. Van Houten [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 555.

28. Thompson v. Hardy [S. D.] 102 N. W. 299.

29. Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 121 Wis. 127, 99 N. W. 909.

30. Crosby v. Scott-Graff Lumber Co., 93 Minn. 475, 101 N. W. 610. In such cases the legal issues are triable by a jury, the equitable ones by the court, and the order of the trial is a matter of discretion with the court, to be determined by the exigencies. Id. Where equity is administered through the medium of legal forms, any defense to an action on a specialty, which would be good in a court of equity, may be shown. Atherholt v. Hughes, 209 Pa. 156, 58 A. 269.

31. The answer setting up an equitable defense but asking no affirmative relief, the case is at law. So held in an action of ejectment where the land involved, which plaintiff claimed under an execution sale, was the corpus of a spendthrift trust in which the judgment debtor had been the beneficiary. Kessner v. Phillips [Mo.] 88 S. W. 66.

32. See 3 C. L. 1212.

33. Where purchaser made false representations, held, contract of sale would not be specifically enforced. Miller v. Fulmer, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 106. Where one has, contrary to the statute, tapped telegraph wires, he cannot come into equity and obtain relief with respect to telegraph service previously furnished by means of such wires. Sullivan v. Chicago Board of Trade, 111 Ill. App. 492. One who has been guilty of unfair competition or has made false statements on the label on his goods is not entitled to have the use of his trade-mark by another restrained. Sartor v. Schaden, 125 Iowa, 696, 101 N. W. 511. Where plaintiff ejected defendant from the latter's position in line at a public sale, held, he could not bring the action to establish his prior right, defendant having procured the filing of his application prior to plaintiff. Cobb v. Gooch [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 682, 88 S. W. 401. Equity will not entertain a suit by either party to an illegal agreement against the other, where the contract is one against public policy, whether executed or executory. So held where agent refused to account to principal, both being engaged in loaning money at usurious rates. Woodson v. Hopkins [Miss.] 37 So. 1000. Where a business man conveyed land worth $2,500 to another person, who sustained no fiduciary relation to the vendor, without consideration, and merely to avoid the payment of a possible liability, held, equity would not decree a reconveyance. Massi v. Lavine [Mich.] 102 N. W. 665. Equity will only grant a new trial in a law action where complainant is without fault. Zweibel v. Caldwell [Neb.] 102 N. W. 84. See New Trial and Arrest of Judgment, 4 C. L. 810.

34. Employing Printers' Club v. Doctor Blosser Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 353; Block Light Co. v. Tappehorn, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 553; Knapp v. Jarvis Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1008. The fact that there was fraud or illegality in the organization of a corporation cannot be set up to defeat its right to maintain a suit for the enforcement of a contract made by it, and of which the defendant receives and retains the benefit. Id. A former member of an illegal combination, whose connection with it was severed before the filing of the suit, will not be denied the protection of a court of equity against an illegal act of such combination because of his previous connection therewith. Employing Printers' Club v. Doctor Blosser Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 353. In suit to enforce its orders the Interstate Commerce Commission represents the public, and its right to relief is not affected by the fact that the complainants before it may themselves have participated in unlawful practices. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 F. 829.

35. Equity will not enforce a defense of fraud to set aside a written instrument when the party making such defense is shown to be the principal party in perpetrating the fraud, and where the proof is doubtful as to the other party having knowledge of the fraud. Price v. Winnebago Nat. Bank, 14 Okl. 268, 79 P. 105.

36. See post, § 3. Laches and acquiescence.

37. Lyle v. Sarvey [Va.] 51 S. E. 228.

Depositions: Under Va. Code 1904, § 3362, providing that a deposition may be read if returned before the hearing in the cause, a receiver who negligently failed to settle his accounts held not entitled to have his deposition read for the purpose of extenuating his conduct and to reduce his liability as ascertained by the commissioners' report. Lyle v. Sarvey [Va.] 51 S. E. 228. See Depositions, 5 C. L. 988.

38. Where community property has been sold at a judicial sale to pay the purchase where the relief sought by the plaintiff and the right demanded by the defendant belong to or grow out of the same transaction,[39] and it is essential that the equity which the plaintiff is required to perform be pointed out.[40] From the maxim it follows that a court of equity may condition its grant of relief to those who seek its aid by requiring that they shall do equity to their opponents, although the latter have been barred by limitation or by laches from successfully seeking that equity by an independent suit.[41]

Equity looks to the intent of the parties rather than to the form of their transactions.[42]

Where equities are equal in other respects the first in order of time shall prevail.[43]

Where equities are equal the law must prevail.[44]

An injury which the written law renders a nonactionable wrong, or not a wrong at all, is not within the maxim that equity will not suffer a wrong without a remedy.[45]

Equity acts in personam and not in rem, hence a court of equity having acquired jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, it has jurisdiction to enter any decree which may concern or affect lands situated in a foreign state to the same extent and as fully as though these were situated within the state of the forum.[46] This maxim has been limited in some states by statutes requiring the suit to be brought in the county where the land is situated.[47]

In equity there is a group of principles which, while not included in the maxims, may, because of their long usage, be said to have the force of maxims;

price, the heirs of the wife should not be permitted to recover without first offering to make restitution to the purchaser or his assigns. Luria v. Cote Blanche Co. [La.] 38 So. 279. Maker of a deed of trust cannot enjoin a sale thereunder on the ground that the property sought to be sold was not covered thereby, he having disposed of the property mortgaged, unless he offers to make good the amount disposed of by him. Sullivan v. Bailey, 21 App. D. C. 100. The partner of a judgment debtor holding money belonging to the execution creditors must pay interest thereon. Weber v. Zacharias, 105 Ill. App. 640. A contract made without fraud or mistake may not be modified by a court of equity, to give either party a better bargain, while he retains all the benefits of the original trade. Rule applied to a family settlement. Burnes v. Burnes [C. C. A.] 137 F. 781. Held error to dismiss for want of equity a bill to cancel a bond and mortgage given to a foreign building and loan association doing business in the state without having complied with Code 1896, § 1316. Hanchey v. Southern Home Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 140 Ala. 245, 37 So. 272. In a suit by a city to enjoin a judgment on warrants, one of the warrants being confessedly valid and the payee in another being entitled fo a warrant, the failure of the city to tender the just amounts due or the warrant to which defendant was confessedly entitled, violates the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity. City of Ft. Pierre v. Hall [S. D.] 104 N. W. 470.

Maxim applied to an agreement whereby certain daughters agreed to pay their father one-half of the cost of erecting a house on certain land, in consideration of his agreement to convey the premises to them. Clark v. Hindman [Or.] 79 P. 56. Deed absolute on its face declared a mortgage. Hursey v. Hursey [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 367. See Deeds of Conveyance, 5 C. L. 964; Mortgages, 4 C. L. 677.

43. Maxim applied in a contest between rival claimants under equitable titles to real estate. Johnson v. Hayward [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1058.

44. Equity will not enforce against an innocent purchaser, who has paid the purchase money and taken legal title to land, without notice, a prior executory contract for the purchase of the land. Martin v. Thomas [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 118.

45. Pietsch v. Milbrath, 123 Wis. 647, 102 N. W. 342; Rowell v. Smith, 123 Wis. 510, 102 N. W. 1.

47. Illinois: Where nothing but the title to land is concerned, and the court is called upon to act upon the person of the defendant only, a court of chancery may administer relief in any county where the defendant is found; but when the court is called upon to act directly upon the property, it is essential to its power that the property to be effected be within the territorial jurisdiction of the court. Munger v. Crowe, 115 Ill. App. 189. A bill to restrain a county from tearing down a public building in order that it may erect a new one in its stead can only be maintained in the county in which such real estate is located. Id.

thus equity will never do a vain or useless thing;[48] it will not aid a party in taking advantage of his own wrong;[49] and, akin to this, where one of two innocent parties must lose, the loss should fall upon the one whose action or conduct has induced or made possible the loss.[50] When the parties are not in pari delicto, the one that is comparatively the more innocent of the two may obtain relief by doing full equity to those parties, if any, who have sustained injury by his partial wrong.[51] A harsh and unconscionable contract of employment will not be enforced by a court of equity.[52] That a creditor has been persistent and determined in his efforts to collect his debt and has resorted to unnecessarily expensive and vexatious means to that end affords no just ground for denying him equitable relief in the enforcement of his debt.[53]

Existence of an adequate remedy at law.[54]—Except where changed by constitutions or statutes,[55] equity has no jurisdiction where there is an adequate remedy at law.[56] To deprive equity of jurisdiction, the legal remedy must be as practical and as efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as any that equity can afford;[57] but it is not the mission of a court of equity to simplify or make easier the enforcement of a legal right,[58] and to be complete and adequate the remedy must not leave open for future litigation matters really and substantially involved.[59] The circumstances of each case must determine the application of the rule.[60] As-

48. Where cause was properly adjudicated it will not grant a bill of revivor. Prouty v. Moss, 111 Ill. App. 536.

50. Pennypacker v. Latimer [Idaho] 81 P. 55. If the negligence of one influences and induces an act whereby an innocent man is injured, the culpable party must sustain the loss. Humphrey Hardware Co. v. Herrick [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1016. Where one of two innocent parties must lose, the one whose misplaced confidence in an agent or attorney has been the cause of the loss shall not throw it on the other. Louchheim v. Somerset Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 325.

51. Sanford v. Reed [Ky.] 85 S. W. 213. Where one conveys land to get it out of the way in case recovery be had on a bond on which she was surety, yet, the grantees having taken advantage of her weakness to induce her to make the conveyance without consideration by frightening her as to her liability on the bond and promising to recover, held, the deed would be canceled at her suit. Accounting [See 3 C. L. 1213]: Where partnership accounts have been settled and a balance determined, the fact that one or two items of account were omitted does not give equity jurisdiction. Jackson v. Powell, 110 Mo. App. 249, 84 S. W. 1132.

Boundary disputes: A mere confusion of boundaries of land is not sufficient to give a court of equity jurisdiction. McCreery Land & Investment Co. v. Myers [S. C.] 49 S. E. 848; Deidrich v. Simmons [Ark.] 87 S. W. 649. Equity held to have jurisdiction where tract had been held by one party and his predecessors in interest for over 13 years, during which time valuable improvements had been made and their rights acquiesced in by the other party and his predecessors in interest. Id.

Damages [See 3 C. L. 1213]: The inadequacy of the legal remedy because of defendants' inability to respond in damages is not presented in such manner as to sustain the jurisdiction of a court of equity, where of two defendants, only one is alleged to be financially responsible. Williams v. Mathewson [N. H.] 60 A. 687. An action for damages for breach of contract is not equitable. Akins v. Hicks [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 75.

Easements: Equity has no jurisdiction where a person claims title to an easement by adverse user, the owner of the land denying the title and alleging that the use was merely permissive. Godino v. Kane, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 596.

Estates of decedents [See 3 C. L. 1213]: Where complainant has no lien on the personal property of a decedent, he cannot maintain a suit in equity against the distributees of such estate to subject it or lands purchased therewith to the payment of a bond on which deceased was liable. Acton v. Shultz [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 876.

Highways (See Riparian Lands, infra).

Insurance [See 3 C. L. 1213]: Equity has no jurisdiction of a bill by an insurance company to cancel an insurance policy for fraud. Des Moines Life Ins. Co. v. Seifert, 112 Ill. App. 277.

Liens: If a decree erroneously awards a lien priority, the mortgagee has a speedy and adequate remedy by appeal or error, and equity will not intervene. Nebraska Loan & Trust Co. v. Crook [Neb.] 103 N. W. 57.

Mortgages: A bill to compel the satisfaction of a mortgage, and to restrain proceedings thereon will be dismissed, if the pleadings and proofs leave the question of payment in substantial doubt. To sustain such a bill the evidence of payment must be clear and precise; if it is not, the parties will be left to their remedy at law. Dinner v. Van Dyke, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 433.

Remedies against corporations, officers, or stockholders [See 3 C. L. 1214]: Where there was a breach of an agreement to deliver certain corporate stock, held, plaintiff's remedy was at law and not a bill for specific performance, though defendant owned 92 per cent. of the stock of such corporation, which stock was not listed or purchasable in open market. Butler v. Wright, 103 App. Div. 463, 93 N. Y. S. 113. A court of chancery has no jurisdiction to try title to a corporate office upon a bill filed purely or that purpose, the proper remedy being by quo warranto. Blinn v. Riggs, 110 Ill. App. 37.

Right to property or possession [See 3 C. L. 1214]: Equity has no jurisdiction of a suit of claimants to land, though it is alleged that the debt secured by a deed of trust has been paid, though no formal release can be proven. Peck v. Haley, 21 App. D. C. 224. Has no jurisdiction of a petition which merely seeks to recover possession of demised premises after a declaration of forfeiture by the lessor. Gunning v. Sorg, 113 Ill. App. 332. Chattel mortgagees have an adequate remedy at law by replevin to recover possession of the mortgaged property when the same is attached under Kirby's Dig. § 5011. Johnson v. Gillenwater [Ark.] 87 S. W. 439. Has no jurisdiction to enforce a forfeiture and recover possession of real estate on the strength of an alleged legal title thereto. Land v. May [Ark.] 84 S. W. 489. Equity has no jurisdiction of a suit to recover property in the possession and control of one who refuses to permit the owner to remove it. Yellow Pine Export Co. v. Sutherland-Innes Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 922. A bill alleging that the defendant is in various ways wrongfully interfering with cattle legally under the control of the complainant and that defendant claims title to some of such cattle, held not to state a case for equity cognizance. Williams v. Peeples [Fla.] 37 So. 572. A tenant who has been dispossessed by his landlord, under a claim by the latter that the lease has been violated and that he has a right to retake the possession, is not entitled to the aid of a court of equity. Williams v. Mathewson [N. H.] 60 A. 687.

Riparian lands: Whether a grant by the riparian commissioners under the riparian acts (Gen. St. p. 2791, par. 26) operates to terminate the existence of a highway over the lands included in the grant below the line of the original highwater mark is a question of law. Attorney General v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 348. Whether a grant of tide lands by the riparian owners was ultra vires held a legal question. Id. The question as to the existence of a highway on the shore of navigable water prior to a grant of the locus in quo by the riparian owners held a legal one. Id.

Cases in which the legal remedy is held to be inadequate: [Only general illustrations have been retained, the application of the doctrine to specific equitable remedies being treated in the topics dealing with such remedies. See Injunction, 4 C. L. 96; Specific Performance, 4 C. L. 1494; Trusts, 4 C. L. 1727, etc.].

Contracts [See 3 C. L. 1213, 1214, 1215]: That vendor of personal property may sue at law to recover the whole purchase price does not prevent suit in equity to enforce the contract of sale. Law v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 327. In the absence of special reason rendering the remedy at law inadequate a suit in equity cannot be maintained to rescind a verbal contract for the exchange of personal property. Wilson v. Maxon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 123. The vendee of property assuming a mortgage thereon, the vendor may bring a suit in equity to compel him to pay it. Gage v. Cameron, 212 Ill. 146, 72 N. E. 204. See Contracts, 5 C. L. 664.

Estates of decedents [See 3 C. L. 1213]: A court of equity can entertain jurisdiction of a suit against a legal representative and the sureties on his bond in the first instance, where there is no remedy at law, or where the remedy at law is for any reason inadequate. Bailey v. McAlpin [Ga.] 50 S. E. 388.

Fiduciary relations [See, also, 3 C. L.

senting to reference does not admit inadequacy of legal remedy.[61] The court of equity may decide whether the legal remedy is adequate or inadequate.[62] The court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the objection that there is an adequate remedy at law must be taken at the earliest opportunity and before the defendants enter upon full defense;[63] in other words, it should be made within a reasonable time after the bill is filed[64] and before the filing of an answer.[65] The objection may be raised by demurrer[66] or by answer,[67] as by a denial of plaintiff's allegation that he has no adequate remedy at law.[68] Although the objection is not made by demurrer, plea or answer, or suggested by counsel, it is the duty of the court, where it clearly exists, to recognize it of its own motion and to give it effect,[69] and the defect appearing upon the face of the bill, and no ground for equitable intervention being shown, an appellate court may notice the defect, although it has been ignored in the pleadings, assignments of error and argument, and may remand the cause with directions to dismiss the bill.[70]

1214]: There is a remedy in equity to compel restitution of money taken in violation of the duty owed by a fiduciary. Rule applied as between corporation and a promoter thereof. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow [Mass.] 74 N. E. 653.

Highways: Where there are several distinct parties necessary to the litigation, whose rights and duties are not clearly defined, a bill to regulate the crossing of a highway over a railroad will not be dismissed on the ground of an adequate remedy at law by petition under Act June 7, 1901 (P. L. 531). Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bogert, 209 Pa. 589, 59 A. 100.

Landlord and tenant: A bill by a landlord to cancel a mining lease as a cloud on his title, to establish his right of possession in the premises, and to enjoin the lessee from mining ore on the leased premises, because of its breach of the lease in operating the mine in an unworkmanlike manner, so as to cause the surface of the ground to cave, etc., held maintainable. Big Six Development Co. v. Mitchell [C. C. A.] 138 F. 279.

Matters relating to corporations [See 3 C. L. 1215]: In a bill to have certain unauthorized acts by corporate officers set aside and a receiver appointed, the fact that a violation of a contract with one of the complainants is alleged is insufficient to show that complainants have an adequate remedy at law. Stone v. Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co. [Mich.] 102 N. W. 752.

Public lands: Equity held to have jurisdiction of a suit by the United States under 24 Stat. 556 and 29 Stat. 42, to recover the price of land erroneously patented under a railroad grant. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. United States [C. C. A.] 133 F. 651.

Quieting title [See Quieting Title, 4 C. L. 1167]. The enlarged remedy given by Rev. St. Utah, 1898, §§ 2915, 3511, may be enforced in a Federal court of equity sitting in that state when the complainant is in possession, and the defendant is out of possession, or when both parties are out of possession. United States Min. Co. v. Lawson [C. C. A.] 134 F. 769. A bill to quiet title will lie where the owner of a mining claim is in possession of its surface claiming title to the entire claim, though the bill further alleges that defendant has, through underground workings, wrongfully entered upon and removed ore bodies beneath the surface of the claim, and threatens to extend his workings therein. Id.

Rights between lessees: Chancery has jurisdiction to decide between conflicting claims to rent or royalty oil under conflicting oil leases to the same lessee, both as to that already produced and that to be produced in future by the lessee under the leases, which royalty oil is by the leases to be delivered to the credit of the lessors. Peterson v. Hall [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 603, overruling Zinn v. Zinn, 54 W. Va. 483, 46 S. E. 202.

Taxes: Sand. & H. Dig. § 3778, authorizing an injunction against all unauthorized taxes or assessments by counties, cities, etc., gives a substantive right enforceable on the equity side of a Federal court. Humes v. Little Rock, 138 F. 929.

70. Williams v. Peeples [Fla.] 37 So. 572.

Doing complete justice.[71]—A court of equity having jurisdiction of a case for any cause may, to avoid circuity of action, proceed to try all the questions in it, whether legal or equitable;[72] but where the sole ground of equity jurisdiction is that a remedy merely ancillary to the legal remedy may be afforded—for example, to hold matters in statu quo until the lawsuit can be ended—then a chancellor may with propriety give the aid of his court to that exent, and leave the parties otherwise untrammeled in their lawsuits.[73]

Multiplicity of suits.[74]—Equity will take jurisdiction to prevent a multiplicity of suits.[75]

There being an independent ground of equitable jurisdiction, the court may settle the boundary and title to the land involved. Le Comte v. Carson [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 238. Court having jurisdiction to enjoin interference with plaintiff's use of water rights, it may decide all questions involved and grant appropriate relief, such as the quieting of title. Bessemer Irr. Ditch Co. v. Woolley, 32 Colo. 437, 76 P. 1053. Jurisdiction having once attached it may be retained for all purposes, including partition which is as yet premature. Steinman v. Steinman, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 600. In cancelling deed may quiet title. Cribbs v. Walker [Ark.] 85 S. W. 244. Where a bill is maintainable to enjoin the lessee of a mine from committing waste and destroying the property as a mine, the court may cancel the lease as a cloud on title, quiet the title, and determine the right of possession. Big Six Development Co. v. Mitchell [C. C. A.] 138 F. 279. Equity may determine the title to a corporate office by way of affording incidental relief, it having jurisdiction upon other grounds. Blinn v. Riggs, 110 Ill. App. 37. In partition proceedings, it appearing that the relations of plaintiff and defendant are not harmonious, that defendant is in possession of a part of the land, and that plaintiff's bid for the whole land is accepted, the court will fix a time within which the defendant's share shall be paid to him by the plaintiff, leaving the plaintiff to his legal remedy to secure possession. Plaintiff conveyed certain land to secure a debt under a contract with the grantee to reconvey on payment thereof, the grantee thereafter sold the land; held, that on tender of debt and refusal to reconvey, the grantor may sue in equity for the proceeds, but cannot recover punitive damages. Welborn v. Dixon [S. C.] 49 S. E. 232. A suit for the enforcement and administration of a trust is one peculiarly of equitable cognizance, and may be maintained by a contract creditor whose demand has not been reduced to judgment. George v. Wallace [C. C. A.] 135 F. 286. A court of equity may, at the instance of a stockholder of a corporation, entertain a proceeding against it and its officers and compel it to account for a fraudulent conversion of its funds, and such court may, if necessary for the preservation of the res, appoint a receiver. of all persons under disability,[83] the appointment of receivers,[84] the cancellation [85] and restoration [86] of instruments, and the reformation of the written evidence of an agreement so as to make it correspond to the understanding of the parties,[87] are subjects of equitable jurisdiction. As to fraud [88] and mistake,[89] the jurisdiction of equity and law is concurrent. Hence equity will grant relief from fraud,[90] and if the fraud consists in fraudulent representations as to collateral facts, or as to the nature or value of the consideration of the instrument, equity must be resorted to to reform or set aside the instrument.[91] It also has jurisdiction to prevent the consummation of a fraud.[92] In order that equity may grant relief, the mistake must have been mutual or brought on by the conduct of the other party.[93] A mistake of law may, in some circumstances, be remedied.[94] In some states by statutes

If a written instrument fails to express the intention which the parties had in making the contract which it purports to contain, equity will grant relief, affirmative or defensive, although the failure may have resulted from a mistake as to the legal meaning and operation of the language employed in the writing. Zieschang v. Helmke [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 436. Equity will grant relief from a mistake of fact resulting from a misconception of the law. Ahlers v. Estherville [Iowa] 104 N. W. 453. Will not allow the recovery of a tax voluntarily paid under a mistake of law. Id.

NOTE. Mistake of law as ground for relief in equity: The maxim that ignorance of the law does not excuse prevails in a court of equity, as it does in a court of law. Hardigree v. Mitchum, 51 Ala. 151, 154; State v. Paup, 13 Ark. 129, 56 Am. Dec. 303; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 50, 23 Law. Ed. 203. Professor Pomeroy in § 849 of the second edition of his work on Equity Jurisprudence attempts to make a distinction whereby one may be charged with a knowledge of the law and yet not chargeable with a knowledge of his legal rights. This rule has been applied and approved in a few cases. See Renard v. Clink, 91 Mich. 1, 30 Am. St. Rep. 458; Toland v. Corey, 6 Utah, 392, but the great weight of the authorities is that ignorance or mistake of law alone does not, as a rule, excuse, and that it is no ground for either defensive or affirmative relief in equity, and such ignorance or mistake includes misconception of the law, erroneous deductions, and misapprehension of legal rights. Emerson v. Navarro, 31 Tex. 334, 98 Am. Dec. 534; Pierson v. Armstrong, 1 Iowa, 282, 63 Am. Dec. 440; Iverson v. Wilburn, 65 Ga. 103; Fisher v. May, 2 Bibb [Ky.] 448, 5 Am. Dec. 626; Smith v. Insurance Co., 98 U. S. 85, 25 Law. Ed. 52; Weed v. Weed, 94 N. Y. 243; Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. [N. Y.] 355, 19 Am. Dec. 508; Ruffner v. McConnell, 17 Ill. 212, 63 Am. Dec. 362; Lawrence v. Beaubien, 2 Bail. [S. C.] 623, 23 Am. Dec. 155, and note; Allen v. Elder, 76 Ga. 674, 2 Am. St. Rep. 63, and note; Lane v. Holmes, 55 Minn. 379, 43 Am. St. Rep. 508; Moe v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 2 N. D. 287; Ohlander v. Dexter, 97 Ala. 476; Conyne v. Jones, 51 Ill. App. 17. Equity will not relieve against a pure mistake of law, if there is no fraud, imposition, misrepresentation, undue influence, imbecility of mind, misplaced confidence, or other special circumstances of a similar character, inferable from the transaction. And there is no distinction, in this respect, between mistake and ignorance of law. Gwynn v. Hamilton, 29 Ala. 233; Champlin v. Laytin, 18 Wend. [N. Y.] 407, 31 Am. Dec. 382; Thurmond v. Clark, 47 Ga. 500; State v. Reigart, 1 Gill [Md.] 1, 39 Am. Dec. 628; Boggs v. Fowler, 16 Cal. 559, 76 Am. Dec. 561; Kenyon v. Wetty, 20 Cal. 637, 81 Am. Dec. 137; Hawralty v. Warren, 18 N. J. Eq. 124, 90 Am. Dec. 613. As every person is bound to know the law, both civil and criminal, it has been held that no one can complain of the misrepresentations of another respecting it. Platt v. Scott, 6 Blackf. [Ind.] 389, 39 Am. Dec. 436; Burkhauser v. Schmitt, 45 Wis. 316, 30 Am. Rep. 740.

Firmly settled as is the foregoing general rule, that ignorance or mistake of the law does not excuse, it is equally well settled that there are particular instances in which equity will grant defensive or affirmative relief from mistakes of law, pure and simple as well as from those accompanied by other inequitable incidents. These instances are exceptions to the general rule, or rather cases in which the maxim is not rigidly enforced; but it is difficult to draw any sharply defined lines by which all these instances may be accurately determined. It is said that the maxim, "ignorantia legis neminem excusat," is not universally applicable, but only when damages have been inflicted or crimes committed. Brock v. Weiss, 44 N. J. Law, 241. It has been held that any departure from the maxim, under any circumstances, should be distinctly marked and so guarded as to leave the general rule unimpaired. Yet some courts, in trying to uphold the maxim, have in cases of peculiar hardship, distinguished between ignorance of the existence of a law and of its legal effect. State v. Paup, 13 Ark. 129, 56 Am. Dec. 303. The rule that equity will not grant relief where the mistake is one of law is, at best, a harsh one, and applies only where the mistake is simply one of law, and the party had full knowledge of all the material facts and circumstances. A mistake of law, therefore, which is caused by fraud, imposition or misrepresentation, etc., may be relieved against in equity. Kyle v. Fehley, 81 Wis. 67, 29 Am. St. Rep. 866; Rankin v. Mortimere, 7 Watts [Pa.] 372; Haviland v. Willets, 141 N. Y. 35, 50; Jordan v. Stevens, 51 Me. 78, 81 Am. Dec. 556; Benson v. Markoe, 37 Minn. 30, 5 Am. St. Rep. 816; Hardigree v. Mitchum, 51 Ala. 151; Moreland v. Atchison, 19 Tex. 303; Haden v. Ware, 15 Ala. 149; State v. Paup, 13 Ark. 129, 56 Am. Dec. 303; Trigg v. Read, 5 Humph. [Tenn.] 529, 42 Am. Dec. 447; Lane v. Holmes, 55 Minn. 379, 43 Am. St. Rep. 508; Dill v. Shahan, 25 Ala. 694, 60 Am. Dec. 540. The power to relieve against a mistake in equity must, however, be exercised with caution. To justify it the evidence must be clear, unequivocal, and decisive as to the mistake. It must arise from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence, and be unmixed with negligence. Iverson v. Wilburn, 65 Ga. 103. Equity will not, as a rule, relieve from an act done under a mistake of law and advice of counsel, unless there is some additional ground for equitable relief. McDaniels v. Bank of Rutland, 29 Vt. 230, 70 Am. Dec. 406. For a mistake of law, pure and simple, there is generally no remedy, but relief may be afforded in equity if the surrounding circumstances are of such a nature that the adverse party is seeking to avail himself of the opportunities afforded by the mistake, and is attempting to enforce an unconscionable advantage without consideration, provided the other party is not blamable. Lane v. Holmes, 55 Minn. 379, 43 Am. St. Rep. 508, and note; Benson v. Markoe, 37 Minn. 30, 5 Am. St. Rep. 816. The four principal excepchancery is divested of its jurisdiction to quiet title.[95] It is the duty of a court of equity to see that the interests of infants are protected in suits before it whether the claim or defense be properly pleaded or not; and for this purpose the chancellor should look to the record in all its parts, and of its own motion give to the infants the benefit of all objections and exceptions appearing thereon, as if specifically interposed;[96] but equity will not lend its affirmative aid to enable infants to take advantage of the mistakes and misfortunes of their adversaries.[97] Equity will not entertain a suit to give a construction or declare the rights of parties upon a state of facts which has not yet arisen, nor upon a matter which is future, contingent or uncertain.[98] It has no jurisdiction to construe a will unless a trust is involved.[99] Equity will not enforce a penalty,[1] and will relieve from forfeitures;[2] it will not permit its jurisdiction to be used as a mere cover for a collateral attack.[3] It will not ascertain and decree compensation for damages to property,[4] though it may enjoin the infliction of such damages until compensation is paid, and in such case an issue out of chancery will be directed to ascertain the amount of compensation.[5] Equity will not review the exercise of a discretionary power vested in an official,[6] nor will it invade the functions confided by law to other departments of the government,[7] though equitable jurisdiction over executive officers is, in some states, conferred by statute.[8] It has jurisdiction to determine whether certain territory has been properly annexed.[9] Equity will not interfere in the internal management tions to the rule that no relief can be obtained against a mistake of law may be summed up as follows: (1). Where there is a marked disparity in the position and intelligence of the two parties, with the result that on the one side undue influence is exercised, while on the other, undue confidence is reposed; (2) Where one, through mistake as to his legal rights, acknowledges himself under an obligation which the law will not impose; (3) Where it is perfectly evident that the only consideration of a contract was a mistake as to the legal rights and obligations of the parties; (4) Where there is a mistake of law on both sides, owing to which the objects of the parties cannot be attained. Note to Renard v. Clink [Mich.] 30 Am. St. Rep. 461.

As said above, ignorance of law, pure and simple, is sometimes relieved against in equity. In other words, mistakes of law may, in some cases, afford good cause for relief in equity. Wilson v. Ott, 173 Pa. 253, 51 Am. St. Rep. 767; Lowndes v. Chisholm, 2 McCord Eq. [S. C.] 455, 16 Am. Dec. 667; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. [U. S.] 174, 5 Law. Ed. 589; Evants v. Strode, 11 Ohio, 480, 35 Am. Dec. 744; McNaughten v. Partridge, 11 Ohio, 223, 38 Am. Dec. 731. The relief granted, however, seems to be based upon the hardship of peculiar cases, and the facilities for proving them rather than upon any well-defined and established principle of equity jurisprudence.—From note to Alabama, etc., R. 7. Will not determine in advance of the final action of the land department the respective rights of grantees from the Northern Pacific Ry. of land claimed to be within the indemnity limits of the land grant of July 2, 1864, and settlers and purchasers from the United States or their grantees, whether holding patents or not, who claim the protection of the act of July 1, 1898. of a foreign corporation where no question of public policy is involved and the corporation has no property in the state of the forum.[10] Where rent is to be determined by designated appraisers and one of the latter dies before the determination is made, equity has jurisdiction to make the determination.[11] A court of equity may intervene and grant relief by way of permitting the record of a common-law court to be impeached,[12] may set aside a judgment rendered upon perjured testimony,[13] and a fraudulent judicial sale.[14] Property rights within the protection of a court of equity may arise under corporate charters.[15] In Illinois, equity will enforce a contract at the suit of one having a beneficial interest in it.[16] Equity has no jurisdiction in matters merely criminal or immoral, and will not interfere merely to prevent violations of law;[17] but it may enjoin the violation of state laws where the acts complained of are injurious to the public, and it is immaterial that such acts are punishable under the criminal statutes, or that there is an adequate remedy at law, or that the complainant has suffered no injury.[18] Where property rights will be destroyed, unlawful interference by criminal proceedings under a void law or ordinance may be reached and controlled.[19] Equity has no jurisdiction in condemnation proceedings.[20]

§ 3. Laches and acquiescence.[21]—Laches will bar equitable relief.[22] Laches is inexcusable delay in enforcing a right[23] by reason of which the condition or relation of the property or persons has become so changed as to render the enforcement of plaintiff's claim inequitable.[24] Thus it will be seen that while lapse of time is one of the chief elements, yet there are others of equal importance, such as change in the value of the property,[25] complainant's knowledge or ignorance,[26] or the spectors may bring a suit to recover school taxes raised upon territory annexed to the city, and to determine the legal effect of the annexation, so far as concerns the public schools in such territory. Phelps v. Board of School Inspectors of Peoria [Ill.] 73 N. E. 412.

possession of the means of knowledge[27] of the facts, defendant's own diligence,[28] and the death of witnesses and parties.[29] As a general rule, delay short of the period fixed by analogous statutes of limitation will not constitute a bar,[30] but if such delay render the enforcement of the right inequitable, equity will not entertain the suit,[31] even though the statutes of limitation are made applicable, in general terms, to suits in equity, but not to the particular defense.[32] Laches is an equitable doctrine, resting on the ground of public policy,[33] and depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case.[34] In other words, the question is ad-

29. It is a material circumstance that the claim is not made until after the death of those who could have explained the transaction. Ripple v. Kuehne [Md.] 60 A. 464. Eight years' delay, together with the intervening death of the party charged with the fraud, and the attorney who conducted the transaction, is such laches as to bar relief from the fraudulent transaction. Id. Stale demands, withheld from prosecution until after the death of the alleged debtor and all the parties interested in and cognizant of the transaction, are regarded with disfavor, and, where no hindrance was in the way, must be established with more than reasonable certainty. Kuhn v. Bercher [La.] 38 So. 468. A bill by one claiming an interest in a mining claim held barred by laches where there was twenty-eight years' delay after the consummation of the alleged fraud, and where defendants or their predecessors at that time expressly repudiated the claims of plaintiff, and many of the parties whose acts are complained of are dead. Deeds: Thirty years' delay in enforcing an agreement, by grantee of a deed, to build a bridge, held to bar right, though such agreement was part consideration for the deed. Bright v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 87 S. W. 780. Where complainant delayed for seven years in suing to set aside a conveyance for alleged duress, and during such time received four annual payments of the price, held barred by laches. Horn v. Beatty [Miss.] 37 So. 833.

Depositions: Defendant in a dower action having known for ten years, and before the death of the deponent, of the latter's wife's claim, and of the suit in which such testimony was taken, held not entitled to maintain a bill to establish and perpetuate the testimony contained in the deposition. Morris v. Parry, 110 Mo. App. 675, 85 S. W. 620. [Such a bill would not lie in any event because it is for the perpetuation of the testimony of a dead witness. Id.]

Estates of decedents: A suit by non-residents to set aside conveyances by an executor, the grounds of attachment consisting of errors apparent on the record, held barred by a delay of 18 years after the admission of the will, six and a half years from the entry of the orders on which the orders of sale were in part based and between 4 and 5 years' delay after the rendition of the order of sale. Williamson v. Beardsley [C. C. A.] 137 F. 467.

Fraud: Long acquiescence in binding effect of a written instrument will defeat a claim that the execution thereof was obtained by fraud. McConnell v. Pierce, 116 Ill. App. 103.

Gifts: Twenty years' delay in enforcing gift, during eight of which the donor, was in exclusive possession of the property, and suit not being commenced until after donor's death, held to bar right. Holsberry v. Harris, 56 W. Va. 320, 49 S. E. 404.

Highways: Where an individual to whom a city had granted lands for use as a roadway ceased to use the same for several years and then declared to the mayor of the city that he was done with it, and when the city took possession he brought suit and abandoned it, and 16 years thereafter he brought suit to enjoin the city's using the same, held case was affected by laches. Lowery v. Pekin, 210 Ill. 575, 71 N. E. 626.

Mandamus: Where the secretary of state refused to register and validate certain bonds, and a remedy by mandamus was recognized by the state statute for reviewing such action, which remedy was barred in four years, a suit after the lapse of twenty years is barred by laches. Frank v. Butler County [C. C. A.] 139 F. 119.

Mortgages; foreclosure: Delay of 10 years by a mortgagor and heirs in instituting suit to set aside a foreclosure for fraud held to constitute laches. Tetrault v. Fournier, 187 Mass. 58, 72 N. E. 351. Where a mother and son held land as co-tenants and the mother purchased it at a mortgage sale, and the son, after reaching his majority, asserted no right against his mother, held, he would not be allowed to assert his claim against a remote grantee who had parted with value. Ryason v. Dunten [Ind.] 73 N. E. 74.

Motions: Two years and a half delay held to bar right to have cause transferred from equity to jury docket. Chenault v. Eastern Kentucky Timber & Lumber Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 1078, 83 S. W. 552.

Mutual benefit insurance company: Where mutual benefit insurance company passed a by-law which amounted to a renunciation of its contracts and entitled a member to rescind his contract, failure to so do for 3 years and 7 months held to bar right, a large number of members having died in the meantime. Supreme Council A. L. H. v. McAlarney [C. C. A.] 135 F. 72.

Public lands: Two months' delay on the part of settler on state lands after his application to purchase was returned to him by the surveyor general with notice of other claims, held to bar rights. Smith v. Roberts [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1026.

Real property: Delay of eight years held to bar right to enforce right to mining interest, complainant having contributed nothing to the development of the mine and the consequent discovery of a rich ore deposit. Patterson v. Hewitt, 195 U. S. 309, 49 Law. Ed. 214.

Conduct not amounting to laches: [Only general illustrations have been kept. What constitutes laches in regard to specific equitable rights and remedies is treated in the specific topics relating to such rights and remedies. See Injunction, 4 C. L. 96; Specific Performance, 4 C. L. 1494; Trusts, 4 C. L. 1727, etc. Laches in opening and vacating a judgment is treated in Judgments, 4 C. L. 287]. The defense of laches applies only when a party has delayed so long, after his right attaches, in asserting his claim that he is presumed to have abandoned his rights. Dickinson v. Griggsville Nat. Bank, 111 Ill. App. 183.

Copyrights: A year and a half delay after knowledge of infringement of copyright held not to bar suit. Werner Co. v. Encyclopoedia Britannica Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 831.

Deeds: A suit seeking to have a deed declared a mortgage, brought within 10 years after the execution of the deed, is not barred by laches. Gerson v. Davis [Ala.] 39 So. 198.

Estates of decedents: Where a legatee to whom testator's interest in the firm had been bequeathed was appointed administrator with the will annexed a few months after obtaining his majority, and immediately sued the surviving partner for an accounting, held not guilty of laches. Stehn v. Hayssen [Wis.] 102 N. W. 1074. Administrator held not guilty of laches in failing to collect debt which had never been established. Reager's Adm'r v. Chappelear [Va.] 51 S. E. 170. In Illinois, in the absence of circumstances excusing a greater delay, a petition for the sale of the realty of a decedent for the payment of his debts must be made within seven years. Graham v. Brock, 212 Ill. 579, 72 N. E. 825.

Guardianship: Where a ward, whose signature to a paper consenting to her guardian's discharge was fraudulently obtained, repeatedly sought to have a statement of her account within a reasonable time, which he refused and thereafter, and within three years after the guardian's discharge, she filed a bill to set the same aside and for an accounting, she was not barred from maintaining the same. Willis v. Rice [Ala.] 37 So. 507.

Liens: Where no prejudice was shown and defendant's lien on stock previously pledged to complainant did not attach until within less than 3 years and seven months after defendant received notice of the pledge, held, complainant was not barred by laches from enforcing the pledge. White River Sav. Bank v. Capital Sav. Bank & Trust Co. [Vt.] 59 A. 197. Facts held insufficient to show that plaintiff had been guilty of such laches as to deprive him of his right to be subrogated to a superior lien. Anthes v. Schroeder [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1072.

Mortgages; foreclosure: A plaintiff in a foreclosure suit being as diligent as the law will permit in endeavoring to subject the mortgaged property to the payment of the debt and procure a deficiency judgment, cannot be said to be guilty of laches. Phelps v. Wolff [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1062. Where, after a decree for the sale of mortgaged premises, unless the mortgagor paid within a certain time, the mortgagor remained in undisturbed possession for more than 12 years, held not guilty of laches in failing to have proceedings dismissed. Eakle v. Hagan [Md.] 60 A. 615. Corporate stockholders, residing in a distant state, held not guilty of laches defeating the right to maintain an action to have a mortgage foreclosure decree set aside, such decree having been brought about by the fraud of the mortgagee and the president of the corporation, such stockholders having had no notice of the decree for three years, when they made a motion to set it aside, which motion was defeated by fraud, of which they had no evidence to disprove until two years later, when the present action was commenced. Whitney v. Hazzard [S. D.] 101 N. W. 346.

Public officials: The fact that a suit by taxpayers, to recover moneys paid members of board of supervisors in excess of their salaries, embraced money paid during a period of 11 years, held not to render it barred by laches, though the books of the board had been open to the public. Johnson v. Black, 103 Va. 477, 49 S. E. 633.

Real property: A grantee commencing suit to quiet title as against a cloud prior to his deed, within five months after he received his deed, is not guilty of laches. Bland v. Windsor, 187 Mo. 108, 86 S. W. 162. Four years' delay held not to bar suit to establish title, defendant not having been misled or injured, and having made but few improvements, the value of which were far dressed to the sound discretion of the chancellor,[35] and unless that discretion is abused, it will not be interfered with.[36] The question of relationship is entitled to great weight.[37] Laches can have no effect upon a void transaction.[38] The true owner of land having the legal title may bring suit at any time.[39] Laches is not ordinarily imputable to the holders of estates in remainders.[40] A married woman, as to her separate estate or right, is subject to laches.[41] The equitable rules relating to the effect of laches and acquiescence are enforced against the state when it is a suitor for equitable relief as well as against private suitors.[42]

While it has been held that it is necessary to plead laches, in order to invoke it as a defense,[43] yet the better doctrine seems to be that the defense of laches is not one which it is necessary to take advantage of by pleadings; and, if the case at the hearing is liable to such objections, the court may, and usually will, remain passive and refuse relief.[44] The defense of laches may be made by plea or answer or demurrer, if the facts appear on the face of the bill.[45] The defense of laches cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.[46] exceeded by the rents he had received. Black v. Baskins [Ark.] 87 S. W. 647. Widow failing to pay taxes because advised that sale was invalid, held not guilty of laches. Webb v. King, 21 App. D. C. 141.

Unfair competition: Where defendant did not know of use of trade-mark by another until 1899 and such use did not come into competition with him until 1902, a suit in February, 1903, to restrain such use is not barred by laches. Sartor v. Schaden, 125 Iowa, 696, 101 N. W. 511.

36. Evans v. Woodsworth, 213 Ill. 404, 72 N. E. 1082.

37. One who conveyed land to her brother on his oral agreement to devise it to her, held barred by laches from enforcing such agreement ten years after death of the brother and after the death of his devisee, even though complainant was poor, relied on her brother's promise and herself promised him to make it right in the end. Lozier v. Hill [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 234. The doctrine of laches will not be applied to dealings of an old mother with her son, who was her confidential business manager and with whom she resided, except in a pronounced case; and hence such defense is not available against her heirs suing timely after her demise. Stevenson v. Smith [Mo.] 88 S. W. 86. Where plaintiffs loaned money to their brother without security and subsequently forgave him one half the debt, and accepted securities for the other half, under an agreement that if paid they should constitute full satisfaction, the brother died shortly thereafter and plaintiffs took no step until the death of the brother's wife, held not guilty of laches. Davis' Adm'x v. Davis [Va.] 51 S. E. 216.

38. The question of laches is immaterial in a suit by a taxpayer to set aside an ultra vires and void contract made by the county commissioner. Fox v. Jones [N. D.] 102 N. W. 161. A direct attack on a void judgment is not barred by laches. Bailey v. Hood [Wash.] 80 P. 559. A delay of three years by a pledgor held not to bar a suit to set aside a void sale by the pledgee. Perkins v. Applegate [Ky.] 85 S. W. 723.

39. Doris v. Story [Ga.] 50 S. E. 348.

40. Henderson v. Kibbie, 211 Ill. 556, 71 N. E. 1091. Five years' delay in bringing suit to have judicial sale of remainder set aside held not to constitute laches, there having been no change of possession. Id.

42. Attorney General v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 348. While the delay of the state in filing an information to test the validity of a grant of tide land, until all the officers who executed it are dead, will not be sufficient of itself to deprive the state of equitable relief, it is sufficient to prevent it from insisting on the application of a rule of evidence relating to the burden of proof as the basis for deciding that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it must be conclusively presumed that the grant was in fact induced by false representations. 44. Stevenson v. Smith [Mo.] 88 S. W. 86. In the Federal courts it is not necessary, in order to let in the defense of laches, that a foundation should be laid by any averment in the answer Moore v. Nickey [C. C. A.] 133 F. 289.

45. May be taken advantage of by demurrer. Holsberry v. Harris, 56 W. Va. 320, 49 S. E. 404; Tetrault v. Fournier, 187 Mass. 58, 72 N. E. 351; Holzer v. Thomas [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 154; Kleinclaus v. Dutard [Cal.] 81 P. 516. Laches being apparent on the face of the bill, it need not be set up by answer. Evans v. Woodsworth, 213 Ill. 404, 72 N. E. 1082. While as a general rule the defense of laches must be made by plea or answer, yet such rule does not apply when the bill already states the causes of and excuses for delay. Wieczorek v. Adamski, 114 Ill. App. 161.

Note: See Exchange National Bank v. Darrow, 177 Ill. 362, where the supreme court seems to have gone a step further and to have held that the question of laches may be raised by demurrer, even where the excuses for the delay are not stated in the bill.—From Wieczorek v. Adamski, 114 Ill. App. 161.

Excusable delay.[47]—Lack of knowledge, the circumstances not demanding inquiry, excuses delay.[48] Each case depends upon its own facts and circumstances.[49] It is incumbent on plaintiff to specifically[50] allege facts showing an excuse.[51] General allegations of an excuse are insufficient to put the burden on defendant.[52]

Application of analogous statutes of limitation.[53]—In cases of concurrent jurisdiction courts of equity will hold themselves bound by the statute of limitation that would govern an action at law upon the same demand,[54] and where the subject-matter of the demand is one ordinarily cognizable at law, but, by reason of special conditions, the remedy for its enforcement in the particular case is obtainable solely in equity, the bar of limitation will be applied, either in obedience to the statute or by analogy.[55] In the application of the doctrine of laches, courts of equity are not bound by, but usually act or refuse to act in analogy to the statutes relating to actions of law of like character.[56] If unusual conditions or extraordinary circumstances make it inequitable to permit the prosecution of a suit after a briefer, or to forbid its maintenance after a longer period than that fixed by the analogous statute, the chancellor will not follow the statute, but will determine the case in accordance with the equities which arise from its own conditions or circumstances,[57]

A delay of 19 years in filing a petition for the sale of realty, subject to dower, of a decedent, for the payment of his debts, is not excused by merely showing that the land was practically worthless for many years and had recently increased in value. Graham v. Brock, 212 Ill. 579, 72 N. E. 825. In the absence of fraud, fiduciary relations or lack of knowledge the fact that the heirs of a record owner of land had became widely scattered is not sufficient to excuse a delay of 16 years in bringing suit to establish title to land, the value of which had increased enormously during an adverse possession of 70 years. Peck v. Haley, 21 App. D. C. 224. Allegations that plaintiffs have been delayed in instituting suit by the negligence and misconduct of attorneys employed by them, held too general to constitute a sufficient excuse for ten years' delay. even though the statues of limitation are made applicable in general terms, to suits in equity, but not to the particular defense.[58] These rules apply as regards a Federal court of equity and a state statute of limitations.[59] When the suit is brought within the time limited by the analogous statute, the burden is upon the defendant to show, either from the face of the bill or by his answer, that unusual conditions or extraordinary circumstances exist which require the application of the doctrine of laches;[60] and when such suit is brought after the statutory time has elapsed, the burden is on the complainant to show by suitable allegations in his bill that it would be inequitable to apply it to this case.[61]

§ 4. Practice and procedure in general.[62]—The court will, to a large extent, disregard technical errors.[63] A court of equity should not intervene in an action in a law court involving an equitable right, and by injunction transfer the cause to itself on the ground that it alone can recognize and enforce such right.[64] The legal nature of the action is not ground for dismissal, but the cause should be transferred, and failure to make a motion to this effect waives the defect.[65]

§ 5. Parties.[66]—All parties who are legally or equitably interested in the subject-matter of the suit are necessary parties to a chancery proceeding;[67] but the interest must be a present, substantial one as distinguished from a mere expectancy or future contingent interest.[68] It is sufficient if all such parties are before the court either as complainants or defendants.[69] To the rule which, in general, prohibits the joinder of parties having no interest in the suit, there is an exception, which in a suit attacking a transaction as fraudulent renders permissible the joinder as defendant of a party to the fraud.[70] Several parties being injured by the same act, they may join in bringing suit.[71] The court cannot properly adjudicate the matters involved when it appears that necessary parties to the proceeding are not actually or constructively before the court.[72]

Bringing in new parties, intervention.[73]—New, necessary parties, complainant or defendant, may be added at any time before the final decree is entered.[74] Defendant having consented to the making of other persons defendants, he cannot, after the conclusion of the taking of evidence before a master, object that they cannot be held jointly.[75] One having an interest in the subject-matter of the suit may by intervention become a party.[76] Intervention may be allowed at any time while the cause is under the control of the court.[77]

§ 6. Pleading.[78] A. General rules.[79]—A pleading will be construed most strongly against the pleader,[80] hence where there are contradictory or inconsistent allegations in a bill, its equity will be tested by the weaker, rather than by the stronger allegations.[81] But all pleadings must be construed reasonably, and not with such strictness as to refuse to adopt the natural construction of the pleading because a particular fact might have been more distinctly alleged, although its existence is fairly, naturally and reasonably to be presumed from the averments made in the pleading.[82] It is not good pleading to encumber the record with allegations of more matter, and especially mere matter of evidence, than is necessary to raise the question that may be actually involved for decision.[83] A party is entitled to a definite statement in the pleading of the nature of the charge intended to be made against him, but not of the particulars or circumstances of time and place, unless they are material parts of the cause of action or defense.[84] A pleader need make no formal averment of a conclusion if he distinctly avers facts from which it must follow.[85] Facts constituting fraud must be specifically stated.[86] An irrelevant allegation is one which has no substantial relation to the controversy between the parties to the suit.[87] Scandal consists of any unnecessary allegation bearing cruelly on the moral character of an individual, or stating anything contrary to good manners or anything unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear.[88] Scandalous matter cannot be stricken out if relevant to the issue.[89] Where no answer is filed to a bill and no denial made of any of its averments, the facts as stated, so far as they are well pleaded, must be assumed to be correct.[90]

(§ 6) B. Original bill, petition or complaint.[91]—The facts constituting the cause of action must be distinctly alleged, so that the defendant may know what he has to meet, and so that he may, if he choose, put them in issue.[92] This rule must receive a reasonable interpretation, and must be enforced so as to further, and not obstruct, the administration of justice.[93] The bill should state not only the ultimate facts but also such collateral facts as are necessary in order that the court may understand the extent and manner of relief to be granted.[94] The extent to which facts must be set out depends upon the nature of the principal facts to be established. When a general term used has a double meaning, and, standing alone, may either import a mere fact or a conclusion of law, it must be accompanied by a statement of such additional facts as to constitute ground for the legal conclusion which plaintiff undertakes to establish; else the rule that pleadings must be certain to a common intent is violated.[95] The pleader is not confined with the same degree of strictness to alleging material facts only as in an action at law.[96] Thus allegations of inducement are permissible,[97] and unless the moving party is prejudiced thereby, they should not be stricken out.[98] Complainant must clearly and definitely allege every material fact,[99] and the facts set forth must constitute a cause of action.[1] When it is fairly doubtful whether the complaint states more than one cause of action, and plaintiff intends to state but one, a motion to separately state and number should not be granted, but the defendants should be left to their remedy by demurrer.[2] In the Federal courts an allegation of the residence of the parties is not necessary to impart jurisdiction,[3] nor is an allegation of citizenship jurisdictional, except in cases in which the jurisdiction depends on diverse citizenship.[4] An omission to comply with the provision of Federal Equity Rule 20, requiring the place of abode of the parties to be stated, is properly corrected by motion.[5]

Complainant being absent from the state, the bill may generally be verified by agent or attorney.[6] An attorney swearing positively that the statements contained in the bill are true, it will be presumed in the absence of anything to the contrary that the attorney had knowledge of the facts to which he deposed.[7]

Adams v. Griffin [Miss.] 37 So. 457.

Where the complaint refers to "other persons," and there is no averment that their names are not known, defendant is entitled to have the names of such persons definitely stated, where they are necessary parties to the action.[10]

Multifariousness.[11]—Multifariousness is the improper joining in one bill of distinct and independent matters.[12] Although there may be several causes of action, if they grow out of the same transaction, and all the defendants are interested in the same rights, and the relief against each is of the same general character, the bill may be sustained.[13] The vice of multifariousness is the union of causes of action which, or of parties whose claims, it is either impractical or inconvenient to hear and adjudicate in a single suit.[14] Where it is as practical and convenient for court and parties to deal with the claims and parties joined by a petition in one suit as in many, there is no multifariousness.[15] Hence the union of two or more causes of action for the same demand or relief does not render the bill or petition which presents them multifarious.[16] The question of when a bill is multifarious is largely one of judicial discretion and depends upon the circumstances of each case.[17] The fact that all the defendants are not affected to the same extent or in the same way will not deprive the court of jurisdiction.[18] A bill is not multifarious because it prays impossible or improper relief.[19] The joinder of cases of action at law and in equity is not permissible,[20] though some courts hold that such joinder does not render the bill multifarious inasmuch as the allegations respecting the legal demand may be treated as surplusage.[21] The mere recital of the facts of another transaction does not render the bill multifarious, no relief being asked in reference thereto.[22] Multifariousness can be taken advantage of by demurrer, plea or answer;[23] and where it is manifest upon the face of the bill that two causes of action are presented, the defense can be interposed by general, as well as by special, demurrer.[24]

A bill by a joint vendee, who was fraudulently induced to pay the entire purchase price on the representation that such sum was but one-half the price; to establish a trust in the land or its proceeds, is not multifarious, though containing a prayer that the complainant be invested with title, or that an intermediary be held to account to him for the purchase money received by her, or that the defendants be held to account to him for the amount of which he was defrauded. Johnston v. Little [Ala.] 37 So. 592. A bill by a beneficiary under a foreign will against the executrix, seeking an accounting and also alleging that the same defendant was executrix and trustee under a will of a resident of the state, in which complainant was interested, and seeking an accounting thereof, held not multifarious. Holzer v. Thomas [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 154. In an action for damages for injury to dwelling houses caused by a stone quarry, and to enjoin the further maintenance of the same, allegations alleging facts which showed that the existence of the quarry endangered the lives of plaintiff, his family and tenants, held not to render the complaint demurrable for improperly uniting causes of action for injuries to the person and for injuries to property. Rooney v. Gray, 145 Cal. 753, 79 P. 523. A petition by the transferee of a debt secured by a deed, making persons, who are asserting title against him and colluding for the purpose of delaying and hindering him in the pursuit of the remedies which equity will afford him to obtain satisfaction of his debt, parties held not multifarious. Clark v. Havard [Ga.] 50 S. E. 108. A bill is not multifarious which seeks to have an accounting on contracts with one of the defendants, where another defendant is joined under allegations that the two have fraudulently sought to cover them up by investing them in lands, taking the legal title thereto in themselves, and the bill seeks to fasten a trust thereon for the use of the complainant. General prayer held sufficient if the allegations were. Martin v. Sexton, 112 Ill. App. 199.

26. Where a bill by a corporation alleged a fraudulent sale of certain real estate to it by defendant and another, who were its promoters and directors, a prayer for rescission and damages held not inconsistent. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow [Mass.] 74 N. E. 653.

(§ 6) C. Amended and supplemental bills, complaints, or petition.[27]—Amendments may be allowed at almost any stage of the proceedings, the right resting largely in the discretion of the court,[28] and the exercise of such discretion will not be reversed on appeal unless clearly abusive.[29] Except where changed by statute,[30] the amendment must be germane [31] and must not set up a new cause of action.[32] An amendment is permissible which does not change the cause of action, but merely sets forth a new assignment or breach springing from the original cause.[33] A petition may be amended so as to conform to the proofs.[34] In Massachusetts a fact, occurring after the filing of the bill, which makes good the plaintiff's cause of action, may be pleaded by amendment.[35] Ordinarily, amendments to a sworn bill should be verified; [36] but the rule is not rigid and unbending, unverified amendments being allowed.[37] Under Federal Equity Rule 28, entitling plaintiff to amend the bill, as a matter of course, before answer, plea or demurrer filed, the amendment need not be supported by affidavit.[38] An offered amendment being ineffectual to remedy the defect, its disallowance is not ground for reversal.[39] On an appeal in equity, the cause being tried de novo, an amended petition may be filed in conformity with the facts proven in the record; [40] but an amendment presenting a radically different case than that presented to the trial court cannot be permitted.[41]

28. Small v. Harrington [Idaho] 79 P. 461; Kinney v. Craig, 103 Va. 158, 48 S. E. 864. Where a bill showed that a conveyance was fraudulent in law and a demurrer was sustained because it was not shown that the conveyance was made for the purpose of hindering, delaying and defrauding creditors, an amendment setting forth such facts held properly allowed. Id. Where complainant, after filing an original bill, an amended bill, an amendment to an amended bill and a second amended bill, fails to state a case, further amendment is not as of course, but in reversing the case the bill will be ordered dismissed without prejudice. 30. Illinois: Under Chancery Act, § 37, the court has discretion to permit a complainant to amend his bill, even to the extent of filing an amended bill based upon new grounds, repugnant to and inconsistent with the grounds for relief relied upon in the original bill. Patterson v. Johnson, 114 Ill. App. 329.

31. In an action to set aside a sale by a trustee, an amendment that the trustee conveyed land which he stated, at the sale, was reserved, held germane. Dingman v. Beal, 213 Ill. 238, 72 N. E. 729.

32. Kinney v. Craig, 103 Va. 158, 48 S. E. 864. Where a bill showed that a conveyance was fraudulent in law and a demurrer was sustained because it was not shown that the conveyance was made for the purpose of hindering, delaying and defrauding creditors, an amendment setting forth such facts held not objectionable. Id. In a suit to set aside a deed for fraud, held proper to amend so as to allege that deed was executed by mutual mistake. Castleman v. Castleman, 184 Mo. 432, 83 S. W. 757. Where bill for an injunction restraining the removing of a building on the ground that it violated a certain section of an ordinance which the answer denied, the bill may be amended so as to set up other sections of the ordinance which the removal would violate. 36. Patterson v. Johnson, 114 Ill. App. 329. Where an injunction issues upon a bill and it becomes necessary to amend the same, the injunction will not be continued in force unless the chancellor can see from a sworn amendment that it should be allowed without prejudice to the injunction. Id.

37. Patterson v. Johnson, 114 Ill. App. 329; Id., 214 Ill. 481, 73 N. E. 761. An inconsequential amendment to a sworn bill does not require that the bill be resworn. Change of Christian name of one of the parties. Davis v. Miller Signal Co., 105 Ill. App. 657.

38. Chase Elec. Const. Co. v. Columbia Const. Co., 136 F. 699.

39. Where, after demurrers going to the merits have been sustained, plaintiff files an amendment containing a more specific prayer for relief, but which does not avoid the substantial grounds on which the demurrer was sustained, the amendment being filed without a motion for leave, agreement of parties, or offer to pay costs, its disallowance is not ground for reversal. Patterson v. Farmington St. R. Co., 76 Conn. 628, 57 A. 853.

40. Raley v. Raymond Bros. Clarke Co. [Neb.] 103 N. W. 57.

41. Levandowski v. Althouse [Mich.] 99 N. W. 786.

A supplemental bill must be germane to the original and amended bills.[42] Where no new facts have arisen since the filing of the bill, except that the defendant afterwards continued to do what the bill alleged he was doing and about to do, a supplemental bill is unnecessary.[43]

(§ 6) D. Cross bill or petition.[44]—Except in a few cases, an action for an accounting being one,[45] a defendant seeking affirmative relief in a suit in chancery must do so by cross bill.[46] The cross bill must state the grounds relied on for affirmative relief with the same strictness required of plaintiff in the original bill;[47] it is auxiliary to the original suit, and a dependency upon it, and should not introduce any new or distinct matter not embraced in the original bill,[48] nor should it introduce new controversies between the co-defendants to the original bill, the decision of which is in no way necessary to the complete determination of the controversy between the complainant and the defendants over the subject-matter of the original bill.[49] A cross bill in an answer is unknown in the practice of Federal courts,[50] and a charge in an answer which is denominated a "cross bill" may be accepted as a statement of defendant's case, notwithstanding the misnomer.[51] A cross bill simply seeking affirmative relief may be retained and the relief granted,

42. Supplemental bill held not germane to the original and amended bills where the object of the former was to remove obstacles in the way of the enforcement of judgments in personam, and that of the latter to enforce a tax lien by a proceeding in rem. Langlois v. People, 212 Ill. 75, 72 N. E. 28.

43. Martin v. Sexton, 112 Ill. App. 199.

44. See 3 C. L. 1226.

45. In an action for an accounting the right of the defendant to affirmative relief is as broad and ample as that of the complainant, although no cross bill has been interposed. Wilcoxon v. Wilcoxon, 111 Ill. App. 90.

NOTE. Necessity for a cross bill in order to obtain affirmative relief: As a general rule a cross bill is essential in order that defendant may obtain affirmative relief. McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 404; Tallman v. Wallack, 54 N. J. Eq. 655, 33 A. 1059; Fletcher Eq. Pl. & Pr. § 891 and cases cited. "There are some well-recognized exceptions to this rule, where a defendant may have a decree in his favor without a cross bill, as on a bill for specific performance, where the defendant sets up in the answer and proves an agreement different from the one sought to be enforced; on a bill for accounting, if a balance is found due the defendant; and on a bill for partition, where the defendant claims the same relief as is sought by the original bill." Freeland v. South Penn Oil Co., 189 Pa. 54, 41 A. 1000; McClaskey v. Barr, 48 F. 130; Story, Eq. Pl. § 394; Coxe v. Smith, 4 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 271. A cross bill is not necessary to enable the defendant to avail himself of a set-off in a foreclosure suit. McClaskey v. Barr, 48 Fed. 130; Jennings v. Webster, 8 Paige [N. Y.] 503. The defendant must proceed by cross bill if, in addition to a denial of the decree for partition, and the admission of the bill, he seeks further and affirmative relief on his part, by a decree for the transfer to him of the legal title to the whole premises, or if a discovery is necessary to establish his equitable defense. German v. Machin, 6 Paige [N. Y.] 288; McClaskey v. Barr, 48 F. 130. It is held in McClaskey v. Barr, 48 F. 130, that when, in a partition suit in the Federal court, title to an interest in the rents is established by persons not in possession, and the defendants wish to claim compensation for improvements, such claim must be set up by cross bill. See, for consideration of this question, Griffith v. Security Home Building & Loan Ass'n, 100 Tenn. 410, 45 S. W. 670, citing many authorities.—From Fletcher Eq. Pl. & Pr. p. 951, § 888, n. 5.

In a divorce suit, held, defendant could only have a deed canceled by filing a cross bill. Zumbiel v. Zumbiel, 26 Ky. L. R. 1193, 83 S. W. 598. Where, in a suit to set aside a conveyance from a husband to his wife as in fraud of creditors, defendants did not plead a set-off against complainant's claim by a cross bill, evidence to prove such set-off was properly excluded. Noble v. Gilliam, 136 Ala. 618, 33 So. 861.

47. Bessmer Irr. Ditch Co. v. Woolley, 32 Colo. 437, 76 P. 1053.

48. Gilmore v. Bort, 134 F. 658. In a suit to compel the restoration of trust property to the trust, the defendant, on allegation that he has by purchase become the sole cestui que trust, is entitled to file a cross bill to enable him to present the question of his right to control the trustee. Riley v. Fithian [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 302.

49. Gilmore v. Bort, 134 F. 658. In a suit against a corporation and its treasurer to cancel a bond, given defendants, on the ground of fraud, a cross bill by the defendant treasurer against complainant and his co-defendant, alleging the validity of the bond and asking a recovery thereon, and also alleging that if it was void that he be released from liability on his own bond, held improper. Id. Where original bill was for the partition of certain realty belonging to the estate of a decedent, a cross bill for the sale of realty belonging to the estate of another for the payment of the latter's debts is unsustainable. Deuter v. Deuter, 214 Ill. 113, 73 N. E. 453.

50, 51. Hoge v. Eaton, 135 F. 411.

though the original bill be dismissed.[52] A cross bill must be promptly filed.[53] Where the issues raised by the cross bill depend upon the issues under the original bill, the hearing of the former should be stayed until the latter have been decided.[54] The failure of a cross complaint to require an answer is a waiver thereof.[55] A reply will generally prevent a decree pro confesso on the cross bill.[56]

(§ 6) E. Demurrer. Grounds.[57]—Except in the "code states" a demurrer does not lie to a plea or answer.[58] As to whether the questions of laches or adequate remedy at law can be raised by demurrer, there is a conflict.[59] In equity the statute of limitations may be availed of on demurrer to a bill where the bar appears on its face, unless equitable excuse is alleged in the bill to avoid the bar.[60] A general demurrer will be overruled if the bill contains any ground of equitable relief.[61] When some allegations in a bill show a case entitling a complainant to some relief, but are contradicted by other allegations in the same bill, and it is impossible for the court to determine the true nature of the case sought to be made by the bill, a demurrer thereto should be sustained.[62] A demurrer will not be sustained because the allegations do not entitle complainant to all the relief demanded in the prayer.[63] Where the bill alleges a state of facts entitling plaintiff to relief under the general prayer, the failure to ask specifically for such relief is not ground for dismissing the bill on demurrer.[64]

Form.[65]—The demurrer must point out specifically what sentences or paragraphs of the bill are demurred to.[66] A demurrant may present, ore tenus, an additional ground of demurrer.[67]

Effect of, and procedure on, demurrer.[68]—A general demurrer goes to the merits of the case.[69] The complaint being insufficient, a demurrer to the answer will be overruled.[70] In passing upon a demurrer to a bill, every presumption is against the bill.[71] A demurrer to a nonexisting part of a bill should be treated

53. Application in a divorce suit, to file a cross bill alleging adultery on the part of plaintiff, being made more than six months after issue joined, and no excuse for the delay offered, will be denied. Costell v. Costell [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 49.

54. Where, in a suit to set aside a judicial sale of a remainder, defendant filed a cross bill praying that a mortgage executed on the land by the remainderman be removed as a cloud on defendant's title, the proceedings under the cross bill should be stayed until the issues under the original bill have been determined. 55. Cribbs v. Walker [Ark.] 85 S. W. 244.

56. Where a cross bill is blended with matter pleaded as an affirmative defense, a reply denying the new matter is sufficient to deprive defendant of the right to a judgment pro confesso on the cross bill, though the code requires a separate answer to a cross bill and a reply to new matter, where the answer contains new matter and a cross bill. as a demurrer to the whole bill.[72] A demurrer admits all material statements of facts which are well pleaded;[73] but it does not admit inferences or conclusions of law.[74] Where a bill combines prayers for proper and improper relief, and a demurrer to the part of the bill seeking improper relief is sustained, the bill will be retained for the administration of the relief properly sought.[75] A demurrer waives the fact that an amendment is not verified,[76] and also any error in a previous ruling on a motion to dismiss.[77] A general demurrer waives want of demand before the suit is brought.[78] By answering after a general demurrer is overruled, the right to assign error in overruling the demurrer is waived.[79] The proper order on sustaining a demurrer is "Demurrer sustained with leave to amend," and on failure to amend, "Bill dismissed;"[80] but an order omitting the words "Demurrer sustained," and dismissing the bill absolutely, will not be reversed where the bill was properly dismissed for want of jurisdiction.[81]

(§ 6) F. Plea.[82]—Unlike a demurrer, one of the main objects of a plea is to bring upon the record such new matter as has not been shown or relied on by the plaintiff, as will preclude him from the relief sought in the bill;[83] hence, whatever shows that there is no right which can be made the foundation of a suit or decree therein for the plaintiff may constitute the subject of a plea.[84] A plea must present some single definite point on the maintenance of which the bill will be disposed of.[85] It must not be uncertain or evasive,[86] and must not tender an issue on an immaterial allegation in the bill.[87] In some states a plea must be supported by an affidavit that it is not interposed for delay.[88] Under Federal Equity Rule 31, a joint plea should ordinarily be verified by all of the defendants in whose behalf it is filed.[89] Setting pleas down for hearing upon their sufficiency is an admission of the facts, but not the conclusions averred in them;[90] likewise the defendant admits to be true the facts alleged in the bill which are not denied by the plea,[91] and setting a plea down for argument is a waiver of objections for want of proper verification.[92] When a replication has been filed to a plea, it is incumbent upon the defendant to prove the
