ings against the bankrupt[10] upon a provable claim[11] in state courts, and the possession of the trustee cannot be disturbed by any form of adverse legal proceedings without the concurrent sanction of the court of bankruptcy.[12] The bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction in a summary proceeding to enjoin a suit in a state court, the plaintiff in such action asserting an adverse claim, and the court having acquired jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter and taken possession of the property.[13] Upon an application to vacate an order staying proceedings in a state court, the burden of proof is on the petitioner.[14] The referee has power to enjoin an interference with the trustee's possession.[15] A state court having acquired jurisdiction of an action to enforce a lien, is not divested of jurisdiction by the defendant being adjudged a bankrupt pending the action, or by failure of the trustee to intervene.[16] The bankruptcy court will not enjoin a creditor who holds a written waiver of exemptions from prosecuting an attachment suit in a state court against exempt property,[17] and the validity of the waiver is immaterial so far as the bankruptcy court is concerned, the question being one for the state court to determine.[18] It lies in the discretion of a state court whether or not it will vacate a judgment rendered while the bankruptcy proceedings were pending, but before they were brought to the court's notice.[19] A claimant being adjudged a bankrupt and a trustee appointed, the fact that the cause of action has been transferred to the trustee is a matter of defense.[20] The bankruptcy court will not order the trustee to pay over money when in so doing it must pass upon the correctness of the decision of a state court in the matter.[21]

made in summary proceedings in all matters concerning money or property which may have come into his possession by virtue of his office;[24] but the court of bankruptcy cannot summarily require him to pay a judgment for costs rendered against him in another jurisdiction, there being no funds of the estate in his hands.[25] The purpose of the appraisement prescribed by the bankruptcy act is to secure for the benefit and protection of all parties concerned a designation and estimate of the property which passes into the hands of the trustee, and for which in the first instance he is accountable.[26] The particularity with which the appraisement is to be made depends upon circumstances. It should be general, rather than special, only such particularity being indulged in as will be sufficient to reasonably identify the property in character and quantity, and give a fair idea of its value.[27] When necessary to preserve the estate the trustee may employ an attorney.[28]

Sale by trustee.[29]—The court making the adjudication has the exclusive right to order the sale of the bankrupt's property, whether within or without the district, on proper notice to the parties in interest.[30] It may appoint an official auctioneer to sell the property of bankrupts';[31] or it may order a sale of either real or personal property at private sale.[32] A purchaser being found, the sale of a speculative claim may be ordered.[33] It is the general practice after a case has been referred to a referee to present the petition for an order of sale to him and for him to grant or deny the order.[34] A bankrupt is not entitled to object to a private sale of his interest in an estate before appraisement for the first time before the judge, but should raise such objections on an application to the referee for a modification of the original judgment.[35] Where several months were allowed to elapse without making a deposit for the payment of preferred debts, the pendency of a petition for a composition is no defense to a petition for the sale of the bankrupt's assets.[36] To authorize an order for the sale of a bankrupt's property free of liens, the record should show affirmatively that every creditor whose lien will be discharged has received notice of the application therefor.[37] Such a sale will not generally be ordered if prejudicial to the lienors.[38] In the absence of such an order all the trustee is authorized to sell is the right of the bankrupt to the property,[39] the extent of which he cannot guaranty, nor the court pronounce upon prior to the sale.[40] The trustee selling property under an agreement that a lien thereon should be transferred to the fund, the fund is subject to such lien.[41]

§ 14. Claims against the estate and proof and allowance. A. Claims provable.[42]—The provability of a claim depends upon its status at the time the petition is filed.[43] A debt [44] founded upon an open account or upon a contract express or implied is provable,[45] though plaintiff elects to bring an action thereon for fraud.[46] The liability of the bankrupt as a maker [47] or indorser [48] of commercial paper is provable, though such liability does not become due or absolute until after the filing of the petition. A demand for damages for breach of marriage promise and seduction is provable, though the damages are unliquidated.[49] Equitable claims may be provable,[50] though an equitable, unliquidated demand is not.[51] A claim for money loaned for gambling purposes is provable in so far as the purpose has not been executed,[52] or if the loan was obtained by the fraud of the bankrupt.[53] If the bankrupt, at the time of bankruptcy, by disenabling himself from performing the contract in question, and by repudiating his obligation, can give the proving creditor the right to maintain at once a suit in which damages can be assessed at law or in equity, then the creditor can prove in bankruptcy on the ground that bankruptcy is the equivalent of disenablement and repudiation.[54] Contingent liabilities are not provable.[55] Neither a money decree for alimony,[56] a claim for alimony, not reduced to judgment,[57] nor a claim for arrears in alimony and allowance for the support of minor children, due under a decree in an action for divorce,[58] are provable. A claim for unliquidated damages arising ex delicto is not provable.[59]

Scope. The question whether a particular contract, debt, or other liability exists

the provisions of the act and the forms prescribed thereunder,[61] and on presentation of claims the only pleadings authorized are the claim duly verified and such objections as the trustee or any creditor may interpose to the allowance thereof.[62] A claim is not proved until it has been filed,[63] and neither the court nor a referee has any discretionary power to permit the filing of proofs of claim after the expiration of a year from the adjudication, either nunc pro tunc or otherwise,[64] nor is their power in that respect enlarged by the fact that the proofs were delivered to the trustee within said year.[65] A creditor whose claim is secured by the individual undertaking of a third person failing to prove his claim, the third party is entitled to be subrogated to the creditor's rights, or in case the latter fails to prove the claim, to prove it in the creditor's name.[66] Failure to attach a written instrument which forms the basis of the claim to the proof of claim does not raise a presumption as to its nonexistence,[67] and in the absence of objection it will be presumed on appeal that such instrument was presented on trial and not attached, or that its presence was waived.[68] A usurious claim being disallowed, the creditor may amend and prove a claim for money fraudulently obtained by the bankrupt.[69] Attorneys for a trustee may make out and present formal proof of a claim of a creditor, no prejudice being shown.[70] A committee of creditors holding assigned claims as trustee of an express trust for the benefit of the assignors is only entitled to prove all of the claims so held as a single claim.[71] The burden is upon the claimant to prove the validity of his claim,[72] but the claim being presented in proper form and duly verified, it makes out a prima facie case in his favor,[73] and the burden of proof thereupon shifts to the objectors,[74] and can only be disproved by evidence, the probative force of which is equal to or greater than that offered by the claimant,[75]

(§ 14) C. Contest of claims.[76]—Creditors who desire to contest the allowance of a claim, which, as parties in interest, they may do,[77] must file objections in their own behalf.[78] Though no particular form is prescribed for objections, they should generally be in writing,[79] though the referee may in his discretion permit an oral objection,[80] and they should be sufficiently specific to indicate to the claimant their nature and character.[81] A creditor has no standing to contest a claim on an appeal taken from the decision of the district court by the trustee unless he joins therein.[82] A creditor who moves to expunge an allowance in favor of another creditor stands in the shoes of the bankrupt, and has no higher rights is a question of proof of contract. See Contracts, 3 C. L. 805. See, also, Negotiable Instruments, 4 C. L. 787, and other specific topics.

than he.[83] Upon the hearing of a contested claim, the referee should of his own motion consider the credibility of the witnesses and of their testimony; and he is not obliged to allow the claim, even if the testimony in its support is uncontradicted.[84] The validity of the petitioner's claim being put in issue and determined in the proceedings for adjudication, the matter is res judicata so long as the adjudication stands unrevoked.[85] The time within which a review of an order allowing a claim must be asked is not specified either by the bankruptcy act or by the general orders, and hence reasonable promptness must be used.[86] That a claim was indorsed "Disallowed as a preferred claim," without evidence taken or order made, does not bar a subsequent suit to establish or enforce the lien.[87] Defendant not denying his indebtedness, a new trial will not be granted, though the claims are not established with the same technical exactness as is required where the indebtedness is directly in issue.[88]

(§ 14) D. Surrender of preferences and the effect thereof.[89]—In order to prove his claim a preferred creditor must surrender his preference,[90] but such surrender need not be voluntary.[91]

(§ 14) E. Secured creditors.[92]—Under the bankruptcy law a creditor to be "secured" must either hold security against the property of the bankrupt or be secured by the individual obligation of another who holds such security.[93] The creditor holding such security cannot fix the value thereof by purchasing it at a sale held by himself after the filing of the petition and without notice to third persons;[94] but the court has power to direct that such security be sold at either a private or public sale after such notice as will guaranty to some extent that a fair valuation will be arrived at.[95] It appearing that insurance policies on the life of a member of a bankrupt firm were pledged by the firm, it will not be assumed that the firm had no interest in the policies.[96] Under the present bankruptcy law a creditor, unless guilty of fraud,[97] or unless he has secured a preference, may change his proof in form from an unsecured to a secured debt.[98] Such amendment may be permitted after the expiration of the year in which claims may be proved, and the prior receipt of dividends does not preclude the court from permitting such amendment.[99]

other,[3] the debt against the bankrupt being provable,[4] even though the claim of the creditor was acquired after the bankrupt's insolvency, it being acquired before the creditor became liable to the bankrupt.[5] Credits which constitute voidable preferences cannot be set off against debts accruing prior to the time the preference was taken.[6] Provable, though unmatured claims, may properly be set off against a claim held by the trustee,[7] and this right extends to an assignee of the claim who also assumes the assignor's indebtedness to the insolvent.[8] A depositor in a bankrupt bank may set off the amount of his deposit against a note on which he is indebted to the bank.[9]

(§ 14) G. Priorities.[10]—In order to take advantage of priorities allowed by state laws, such laws must be complied with.[11] Wages due workmen, clerks or servants, which have been earned within three months before the date of the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, not to exceed three hundred dollars to each claimant, are by the terms of the act given priority.[12] One advancing money or property for the purpose of paying laborers before the claims of the latter are proved is not entitled to be subrogated to their right of priority.[13] Expenditures for the sole benefit of general creditors in carrying out contracts of the bankrupt which were thought to be profitable are not "costs of administration" so as to be payable as preferred claims.[14] In such case lien creditors not consenting to the expenditures nor to the continuance of the business, their claims are payable from the fund derived from the contracts prior to the claim of the trustee for additional expenditures.[15] As to whether a creditor is entitled to a preference because his claim is based upon the bankrupt's misappropriation of a trust fund depends upon an equitable rule of preference as to which the Federal decisions and not those of the state where the contract was made govern,[16] and neither such creditor[17] nor the holder of a lien on specific property[18] is entitled to recover of the trustee unless he proves that such property came into the hands of the trustee. preserving the assets of the estate and which reduce the value of the security.[20] The president of a corporation obtaining goods on false statements as to assets must account for the excess in such statements or be deferred until the other creditors are paid.[21] The present bankruptcy law expressly provides that the net proceeds of the partnership property shall be appropriated to the payment of partnership debts, and the net proceeds of the individual estate of each partner to the payment of his individual debts, and that only the surplus of each estate shall be added to the other.[22]

(§ 14) H. Expenses of the proceedings.[23]—A receiver is entitled to reasonable fees for his services,[24] but he is not entitled to an allowance for his particular services in conducting the bankrupt's business in addition to the compensation he receives for his services in general.[25] The word "disbursements," as used in section 48, as amended, should be construed, with reference to receivers, to include the value of property taken possession of by the receiver and delivered to others in specie.[26] Attorneys will be allowed reasonable compensation for services rendered which were beneficial to the estate,[27] the allowance of such fee lying in the discretion of the judge.[28] Though the trustee is a lawyer, he is under no obligation to perform legal services for the estate,[29] but if he does so he is not entitled to additional compensation therefor.[30] The statutory fees being sufficient to compensate a referee for his services, he is not entitled to extra compnsation for extra services rendered as special master in connection with a composition.[31] Clerks are only entitled to the actual expenses incurred in sending notices of the bankrupt's petition for a discharge to creditors,[32] and these expenses must be itemized by the clerk and charged as an expense.[33] All commissions are payable from the estate,[34] and hence the court cannot order them paid out of the proceeds of property subject to a valid lien.[35] Secured creditors making use of the bankruptcy court and officers to realize on their security may be required to contribute their proportion to the costs of the proceedings and for the preservation of the property during their

(§ 14) I. Expenses of receivers and assignees appointed prior to bankruptcy proceedings.[38]—A state receiver appointed prior to the bankruptcy proceedings is not entitled to priority on account of his services rendered prior to the bankruptcy proceedings, or of expenses or advances made to the estate which did not contribute to the funds in the hands of the trustee.[39] Secured creditors, though they use the bankruptcy court to realize on their security, cannot be required to pay any part of the expenses of a prior receivership in a state court.[40]

§ 15. Distribution of assets; dividends.[41]—The assets must be distributed according to the provisions of the bankruptcy act,[42] and controversies collateral thereto will not be decided.[43] Exceptions to a proposed scheme of distribution must be filed before the final decree of confirmation is entered, and unless specially allowed cannot be considered thereafter.[44] A dividend being paid upon the full amount of a secured claim, it will be presumed that the security was found to be valueless,[45] and the creditor's right to such security is not thereby impaired.[46]

§ 16. Exemptions.[47]—The bankrupt's right to an exemption is governed by the state laws.[48] In most states the homestead exemption is limited to a certain sum and if the property claimed exceeds this sum, the bankrupt may have his exemption set aside from the proceeds of a sale of the property,[49] or he may retain the property upon payment of the excess.[50] An exemption being nonassignable, an attempted assignment operates as an abandonment.[51] A waiver in favor of one creditor does not inure to the benefit of all.[52] The bankruptcy proceedings will be stayed so as to enable a creditor to test his right to the bankrupt's exemption in the state courts.[53] Act 1898, § 70*a*, refering to insurance policies, in no way qualifies § 6 of the same act.[54] The trustee in bankruptcy acquires no title to exempt property duly claimed.[55] While in order to be entitled to his exemptions the bankrupt must comply with the state laws, still such exemptions can be made available only in the manner prescribed by the bankruptcy act;[56] hence his claim of exemptions must be filed within the specified time,[57] and being so filed his right is not defeated by a prior sale.[58] The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine what property is exempt,[59] but its jurisdiction ends there and the court has no authority to administer such property.[60] While a notice in general language, either in a voluntary or involuntary petition, of an intention to claim one's exemptions, may be amended if done in time,[61] yet, where the notice in either case is so general as not to indicate to the trustee what specific articles the bankrupt claims as his exemptions, and the bankrupt files no schedule and makes no request upon the trustee to set aside specific articles of exemption until after the sale, he will be regarded as having waived his right of exemption;[62] but a notice that the bankrupt claims his exemptions out of certain property is sufficient,[63] it being the trustee's duty to set them apart and report the items and estimated value thereof to the court.[64] Where all the assets of the bankrupt's estate are claimed as exempt, the claim may be determined by the referee prior to the appointment of a trustee,[65] Both the bankrupt and his assignee of exemptions claiming an interest in a fund derived from the sale of certain assets, they are entitled to contest the allowance of a claim against it.[66] The question whether a bankrupt is entitled to a discharge cannot be tried on the hearing of his claim to exemptions.[67] not of the estate in bankruptcy.[74] That the referee is entitled to commissions on sums paid to creditors as dividends does not disqualify him as an interested party.[75] A witness cannot be compelled to leave the state where he resides in order to attend a hearing before a referee.[76] The subpoena not being sealed, the defect is waived by the witness appearing for examination without objection.[77] An order for the examination of a witness is not void because executed by the clerk and not by order of the court.[78] The case being referred generally to the referee, he has all the powers of the court relative to the examination of witnesses,[79] and his order in this regard is treated as that of the court.[80] He may order the examination of a witness on an oral application,[81] and may permit him to be represented by counsel.[82] General order No. 23, relating to the orders of a referee, has no application to a mere ruling by the referee that a witness be sworn.[83] Neither the provision of the bankruptcy act that testimony given by the bankrupt shall not be offered against him in any criminal proceeding,[84] nor the filing of a voluntary petition,[85] deprives a bankrupt of the right to claim his constitutional privilege of refusing to answer a question, where the answer might tend to incriminate him. The bankrupt claiming his constitutional privilege as a reason for not producing his books of account, he must bring such books before the court or referee for the determination of the question whether his plea is well founded in fact, and that the books may be used for such necessary and proper purpose as are not inconsistent with the protection of his rights.[86] That the bankrupt in refusing to testify acts under the advice of counsel palliates the offense but does not excuse it,[87] nor does a subsequent offer to testify purge the contempt, but acts rather as an admission that the defendant could have answered the questions without danger to himself.[88] A rule requiring a bankrupt to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for refusing to answer sundry questions put to him by the referee is sufficient though it does not set out such questions, if it refers to the transcript where they fully appear.[89] In a case where a referee believes a witness to be in contempt for any reason it is his duty to set forth the contempt upon his record, certifying the facts to the district judge, who will then deal with the question as if the contempt had orginally arisen in his court.[90] The general rules as to discovery apply.[91] The referee, in taking testimony, is required to have it taken down, preferably in narrative form, and an objection being raised, to require the question, the objection and reason thereof to be clearly but briefly noted; then enter his ruling thereon, and then, though he rule the question to be improper, allow it to be answered.[92] Under general order No. 27 the referee is required to certify any order[93] made by him, upon the application of any party or witness,[94] but a referee has no jurisdiction of his own motion to certify a question not raised by the parties to a bankruptcy proceedings, which the referee foresees may arise and on which he desires to be advised.[95] Failure of the referee to summarize the evidence does not necessarily invalidate the appeal.[96] A referee's findings of fact will not be reversed upon appeal unless they are flagrantly against the weight of the evidence.[97] The court of bankruptcy giving the bankrupt a stated time to comply with an order of the referee, it is impliedly an affirmance of such order,[98] and the fact that the court in so affirming the order struck therefrom a provision for the commitment of the bankrupt in case of his default is not an adjudication that he should be so punished, but leaves that matter to be brought up anew by motion in case the bankrupt fails to obey the order within the time allowed.[99]

broadly speaking, include all questions between the bankrupt and his creditors as such, commencing with the petition for adjudication, ending with the discharge, and including matters of administration generally.[8] "Controversies at law and in equity arising in the course of bankruptcy proceedings," broadly speaking, involve questions between the trustee, representing the bankrupt and his creditors, on the one side, and adverse claimants on the other, concerning property in the posssession of the trustee or the claimants, to be litigated in appropriate plenary suits, and not affecting directly the administrative orders and judgments but only the question of the extent of the estate.[9] The decisions under the prior bankruptcy law with respect to a proceeding in bankruptcy and an independent suit are applicable.[10] An appeal lies to the circuit court of appeals from a judgment allowing or rejecting a claim or debt of $500 or over.[11] This restriction has reference to the amount of the allowance or rejection and therefore to the amount which will be put in controversy by the appeal.[12] The revisory power granted by § 24*b* of the bankruptcy act does not include any orders or decrees which are appealable, the provisions for appeal for petition of review being mutually exclusive.[13] An order directing the removal and consolidation of the proceedings with a cause pending in another jurisdiction is reviewable only by appeal from the order.[14] An erroneous decision against an asserted right of exemption, and a consequently erroneous holding that the property forms assets of the estate in bankruptcy, while subject to correction in the mode appropriate for the correction of errors,[15] does not create a question of jurisdiction proper to be passed upon by the United States Supreme Court by a direct appeal under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1891.[16] The assertion of a right of set-off presents a claim of Federal right which will sustain an appeal from a decision of a Circuit Court of Appeals, rejecting the claim, to the Supreme Court of the United States.[17] The decision of a state court as to whether a conveyance by a bankrupt was made with intent to defraud creditors does not present a Federal question which can be considered by the Federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a state court.[18] Mandamus does not lie to review discretionary matters.[19]

18. Thompson v. Fairbanks, 25 S. Ct. 306.

19. Validity of order appointing a re-

Where the bankruptcy court makes but a single order or judgment, claimants having separate interests may prosecute a joint appeal.[20] It is essential that the record should contain findings of fact or show that stated propositions of law were determinative of the case,[21] but the opinion of the court, while not taking the place of such findings, may, when made a matter of record, be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining what propositions of law governed the court in the decision of the case, or for the general purpose of determining whether the case went off on facts or law.[22] A bill of exceptions has no function and accomplishes no purpose in proceedings in bankruptcy.[23] In the absence of a rule of court on the subject, a petition of review need only be filed within a reasonable time.[24] Upon a petition of review, questions of law only can be considered and passed upon,[25] and hence the record should present simply, clearly, and unequivocally the issues of law to the like effect as bills of exceptions, proceedings without a jury, and proceedings in the Supreme Court on admiralty appeals,[26] and the Circuit Court of Appeals will ordinarily consider only such matters of law as are shown by the record, by findings of fact or their equivalent, to have been distinctly presented to the court below.[27] In the absence of prejudice or a violation of the rules of court, the fact that the petition to revise was not allowed by any judge of the appellate or trial court,[28] that no bond has been given,[29] that the transcript of the record filed is not certified by the clerk of the lower court,[30] and does not contain the pleadings upon which the issues were tried, nor show who are the proper parties to the appellate proceeding,[31] nor contain the evidence upon which the findings of the referee were based,[32] does not constitute ground for dismissal, nor is the fact that the petition was filed more than three months after the entry of judgment below,[33] or that no supersedeas has been granted,[34] ground for such action. A petition to revise in a matter of law the proceedings of the district court does not bring prior proceedings before the referee up for review.[35] An appeal makes the entire record available to the appellant and imposes the duty upon him and upon the clerk of the lower court to place the material parts of it in the transcript.[36] The Federal statutes as to what the transcript shall contain on appeal "in causes in equity" apply to bankruptcy proceedings.[37] The parties being unable to agree as to the contents of the record, the appellant should file a præcipe with the clerk, pointing out specifically what records, in his judgment, are necessary to be certified on appeal; if the appellee considers these insufficient he can suggest a diminution of the record and ask for a writ of certiorari.[38] The bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction to designate what records shall be certified.[39] On an appeal by the trustee from a judgment allowing claims for expenses and costs of administration, no valid judgment can be rendered unless the claimants be given an opportunity to be heard.[40] On appeal from the disallowance of a claim the appellant is entitled to present any question concerning the security or rank of the debt, as an incident thereof.[41] A finding of trial court on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed unless clearly erroneous.[42]

§ 22. Discharge of bankrupt; its effect and how availed of. A. Procedure to obtain discharge and vacation thereof.[44]—Both the trustee, so long as the estate is unsettled,[45] and one who has a suit pending against a bankrupt for the discovery of a debt, which suit is contested, are parties in interest, though the latter's claim has not been proved in bankruptcy.[46] The bankrupt's petition for a discharge must be filed[47] within one year after the adjudication, unless it be made to appear to the judge that the bankrupt was unavoidably prevented from filing it within such time, in which case it may be filed within, but not after, the expiration of the next six months,[48] and failing to apply for his discharge within such time, the matter becomes res judicata, and he cannot by any subsequent proceedings secure a discharge from the debts provable in the former proceedings.[49] The referee is not obliged to notify either the bankrupt or his attorney of the date the petition for discharge must be filed.[50] The bankrupt being insane, the petition for his discharge should be made by his guardian.[51] An objecting creditor has no right to enter an appearance after the return day, and should not be allowed to do so, except for good cause shown in excuse of the delay.[52] A bankrupt's petition for a discharge filed in due time cannot be dismissed because of delay in bringing the matter to a hearing after specifications of objection have been filed;[53] the remedy of the creditor is to move the court to set down the matter for hearing.[54] The bankrupt must attend the hearing of objections to his application for a discharge,[55] and though entitled to file papers in resistance of the specifications of objections, he is not bound to do so.[56] The application for a discharge being referred to a special master, to hear the facts and report his conclusions, and the specifications of objection are not sufficiently specific, the master should report back to the court that none of the objections filed require the taking of testimony.[57] The question of fraud in conveyances made prior to July 1, 1898, cannot be determined in a hearing on application for the bankrupt's discharge.[58]

The specifications of objection [59] should show how the objecting party is interested.[60] The specifications being indefinite, the bankrupt is entitled to have them made so explicit and definite that he may have notice of the exact charge made and which he is to meet.[61] When based upon the ground of having committed an offense punishable by imprisonment, they should state the offense so committed with substantially the same particularity and exactness as would be required in an indictment for such an offense.[62] They must allege that the act was knowingly and fraudulently done.[63] In a specification of objection, alleging that the bankrupt has obtained property on credit for any purpose upon a materially false statement in writing made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit, not only must the false representations be set out, but the name or names of the person, or persons so alleged to have been defrauded must be given.[64] Specifications of objection on the ground that the bankrupt concealed property must allege such fact.[65] If defective in form they may be cured by amendments not changing the substantial nature of the objections.[66] There must be no variance between the specification and the proof.[67] An objection not set forth in the specifications filed cannot be considered.[68]

Evidence and burden of proof.[69]—The objecting creditor [70] must prove the commission of the offense alleged by a fair preponderance of evidence.[71]

(§ 22) B. Grounds for refusal.[72]—The grounds set forth in the bankruptcy act are exclusive,[73] hence insanity of the bankrupt, preventing his examination by creditors, is not a bar.[74] The bankrupt's transactions showing that his financial difficulties were the result of suspicious and fradulent dealings disentitle him to a discharge.[75] A bankrupt cannot procure a discharge either in voluntary or involuntary proceedings where, within six years, he has been granted a discharge in voluntary proceedings.[76] Such provision is not retroactive, but applies to cases begun after the amendment took effect.[77] The amendment applies to voluntary as well as involuntary proceedings, and hence a bankrupt having been discharged in voluntary proceedings within six years cannot receive a second discharge in involuntary proceedings.[78] That a proceeding under the act of 1867 is pending at the time the bankrupt applies for a discharge in new proceedings instituted under the act of NOTE. Interpretation of Statute: As the other clauses in § 14 apply to present proceedings, both voluntary and involuntary, the fact that the fifth clause begins with the words "In voluntary proceedings" would naturally indicate an intention that those words also should be construed to apply to present rather than to former proceedings. The court's decision seems douptful on principle. The recent tendency in America has been to give debtors a discharge whenever their creditors force them into bankruptcy. 18 U. S. Stat. at L.

1898, is no bar to a discharge from a debt proved in the former proceedings but kept alive by judgment.[79]

Commission of an offense.[80]—A bankrupt who has made a false oath or account in, or relation to, any proceeding in bankruptcy will be denied a discharge.[81]

Destruction of or failure to keep books of account.[82]—Prior to the amendment of 1903, failure to keep books must have been with fraudulent intent to conceal the bankrupt's true financial condition and in contemplation of bankruptcy.[83] Proof of such fraudulent intent must be clear,[84] though an intent to conceal one's financial condition may be presumed where an experienced business man fails to keep any books whatever.[85]

Obtaining property upon false statements.[86]—Since the amendment of 1903, the fact that the bankrupt obtained property on credit by means of false statements is ground for denying him a discharge,[87] and he may properly be called upon to explain the discrepancy between the extent of his property as given in these statements and as realized by his trustee, and his right to a discharge may be made to depend upon whether or not he has satisfactorily done so;[88] but such statements being made by him shortly before bankruptcy, they may be considered on the question as to whether he made a false oath to his schedules or fraudulently concealed property from his trustee.[89]

Concealment or transfer of property.[90]—One transferring his property within four months of the filing of the petition with intent to hinder, delay or defraud any of his creditors is not entitled to a discharge.[91] In order to bar the discharge

p. 3, 390, p. 180. If the creditor gets the benefit of an equal distribution of the assets, it seems just that the debtor should be freed from the handicap of debt, particularly when he took no part in instituting the present proceeding. The construction contended for would apparently fulfill the object of the amendment in preventing frequent voluntary proceedings quite as well as that adopted by the court. It would therefore seem that an interpretation contrary to the tendency of American legislation and to obvious justice to the debtor should not have been adopted unless warranted by less ambiguous language than that used.—XVIII Harv. In re Breitling [C. C. A.] 133 F. 146. Unsupported testimony of bankrupt that attorney told him property was exempt, held the property must have been such as would have passed to the trustee,[92] and it must have been concealed at the time the petition was filed.[93]

(§ 22) C. Liabilities released, and use of discharge.[94]—Only such claims as are provable [95] and have been duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance with the name of the creditor, if known to the bankrupt,[96] are released unless such creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy.[97] The fact that the creditor's address is incorrectly given is not ground for excepting the debt from the discharge, even though as a result thereof the creditor has no knowledge of the proceeding, it not being shown that the mistake was due to any fault of the bankrupt.[98] The words "notice" and "actual knowledge" as used in the act of 1898, § 17, subd. 3, are convertible terms.[99] The actual knowledge of the proceedings here contemplated is a knowledge in time so that the creditor may have an equal opportunity with other creditors.[1] A judgment for costs in a criminal prosecution is satisfied by the discharge of the judgment debtor in bankruptcy.[2] An assignment of future earnings cannot be enforced against the debtor after his discharge, as to wages thereafter earned by him.[3] A judgment of a state court is rendered in "an action for fraud" so as to be exempt under act 1898, § 17, subd. 2, from a discharge in bankruptcy, where such judgment was based on actual, as distinguished from constructive, fraud of the bankrupt.[4] The discharge does not affect liens valid as against the trustee.[5] Prior to the amendment of 1903, only such debts as were created by the fraud of the bankrupt while he was acting in a fiduciary capacity were excepted from the operation of a discharge;[6] but since the amendment the bankrupt's[7] liability for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations,[8] or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another,[9] is not released. The liability of a co-debtor with, or guarantor or surety for, the bankrupt, is not altered by the latter's discharge.[10] This section refers to co-debtors, guarantors or sureties for the bankrupt on the same or original debt, the debt on which the release is given by the discharge.[11] The terms "officer" and "fiduciary capacity," as used in § 17, subd. 4, extends to all cases mentioned and are not confined to "defalcation."[12] The words "fiduciary capacity" are to be interpreted in a restricted sense, and include only technical trusts and not such as arise by implication of law.[13] A full discharge of individual liability of one partner on a firm debt may be had in bankruptcy proceedings concerning that one partner only.[14] That a firm creditor proved his claim against two of the partners in bankruptcy does not affect the liability of the other members.[15] The debt, being released, is absolutely canceled,[16] and no further proceedings to enforce it are permissible.[17] If the debt was evidenced by a judgment, the bankrupt is entitled to have the judgment canceled,[18] and the bankrupt has the absolute legal right, after obtaining his discharge, if he proceeds with reasonable diligence to have execution upon the same perpetually stayed.[19] This right to have the judgment canceled is not personal with the bankrupt but extends to the owner of the bond upon which the judgment is an apparent lien.[20] Neither a state court, municipal body, nor municipal ordinance, can inflict any penalty or punishment, directly or indirectly, upon the bankrupt for failing to pay the debts in full, from which the national bankruptcy law says he will be discharged,[21] and a court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction to enjoin a prosecution to inflict any such penalty or punishment.[22]

In order to revive a debt discharged by the discharge, the promise must be clear, distinct, and unequivocal.[23] A promise to pay "as soon as possible" is not a conditional promise and as such insufficient to support an action on the original demand.[24] While an oral promise, if definite and unambiguous, is sufficient to revive a debt under the bankruptcy law,[25] still a written promise being required by the law of the state where the action is brought to enforce the claim, such local law governs.[26] The discharge does not of itself affect the question of title to the bankrupt's property.[27]

Whether or not a particular debt has been released by the discharge is left to be determined by the court in which the action is brought to enforce the debt.[28] A plea of discharge failing to allege that the demand was scheduled or that plaintiff had knowledge of such proceedings is insufficient.[29] The discharge being pleaded as a defense, there is a conflict as to who has the burden of proving whether it is or is not applicable.[30] The bankrupt using his discharge as the basis of a suit or motion, he must prove that the discharge affects the defendant's claim.[31] Where, pending a suit, defendant is discharged in bankruptcy, he may plead his discharge after answer filed, which plea is in the nature of a plea pius darrien continuance.[32] The bankrupt setting up his discharge as a defense to an action brought against him, his only remedy from an adverse judgment is by appeal.[33] The discharge cannot be collaterally attacked for any cause which would have prevented the granting of the discharge, or would have been sufficient ground for its annullment.[34] The holder of an unscheduled claim by showing that he had neither notice nor actual knowledge of the bankruptcy proceedings does not collaterally attack the judgment.[35]

§ 23. Amendment, reopening, grounds and effect.[36]—Either the discharge or the petition for it may be amended after the term at which the discharge was granted, when necessary to correctly set out the character of the debts scheduled and provable and upon which the discharge operated.[37] Under § 15 a discharge may be revoked upon the due application of "parties in interest," and in order to entitle creditors to come within the meaning of the phrase "parties in interest" the petition must show that they had provable debts which were affected by the discharge.[38] One having notice of the bankruptcy proceedings and failing to present his claim cannot have the discharge set aside to prove such claim.[39] A petition to reopen will be denied where there are no substantial assets remaining unadministered.[40] A petition for the vacation of a bankrupt's discharge not alleging the time when the alleged transaction took place it will be presumed to have occurred before the petition in bankruptcy was filed.[41] A petition alleging fraud, it must allege facts tending to prove the fraud.[42] A petition for the vacation of a bankrupt's discharge being defective, it may be amended.[43]

BASTARDS.

§ 1. Legal elements and evidences of illegitimacy.[1]—Children born out of wedlock are illegitimate.[2] A child of a married woman, begotten by one who is not the husband of the mother, is a bastard.[3] A child born after marriage and during wedlock, and within the usual period of gestation after the husband has had opportunity to have begotten it, is conclusively presumed to be legitimate.[4] Where the evidence shows beyond dispute that a child was conceived and born during marriage, and was not disavowed by the husband during his lifetime in the mode prescribed by law, the status of legitimacy is fixed and can be questioned by no one in any form of proceeding.[5]

§ 2. Rights and duties of and in respect to bastards.[6]—The right of a bastard to inherit real property is governed by the law of the situs.[7] In the absence of a

7. Hall v. Gabbert, 213 Ill. 208, 72 N. E. 806.

NOTE. Conflict of laws as to legitimacy: It is the general rule that legitimacy, so far as it depends on the validity of the marriage, is to be referred to the law of the place where the marriage was celebrated. See In re Hall, 61 App. Div. 266, 70 N. Y. S. 400; Van Voorhis v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 18, 40 Am. Rep. 505.

When a child is born out of lawful wedlock and its legitimacy depends upon a law which presupposes the invalidity or nonexistence of a marriage before his birth, there is a conflict of authority whether the question of legitimacy for the purpose of determining the distribution of personal property or the descent of realty shall or shall not be referred to the lex domicilii decedentis or the lex rei sitae, as such, to the exclusion of all other laws. Thus it has been held that a child born out of wedlock cannot inherit real property unless legitimate according to the lex rei sitae, whatever his status elsewhere. Singer v. Singer, 45 Ala. 410; Williams v. Kimball, 35 Fla. 49, 16 So. 783, 48 Am. St. Rep. 238, 26 L. R. A. 764; Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Mo. 251; Smith v. Derr, 34 Pa. 126, 75 Am. Dec. 641. So it has been held, conversely, that if he is legitimate by the lex rei sitae, he may inherit, though illegitimate elsewhere. Sneed v. Ewing, 5 J. J. Marsh. [Ky.] 460, 22 Am. Dec. 41.

In the distribution of personalty, the legitimacy of a claimant is to be determined by the law of the domicile of the deceased. Thus, a child born out of wedlock cannot share in the personalty unless legitimate under the law of the domicile of the deceased. Singer v. Singer, 45 Ala. 410; Sneed v. Ewing, 5 J. J. Marsh. [Ky.] 460, 22 Am. Dec. 41; Jackson v. Jackson, 82 Md. 17, 33 A. 317, 34 L. R. A. 773. And conversely, if legitimate by the law of the deceased's domicile, he may take, though illegitimate elsewhere. Leonard v. Broswell, 99 Ky. 528, 36 S. W. 684, 36 L. R. A. 707.

As opposed to the doctrine announced and statute a child born out of wedlock cannot inherit from its father.[8] The conditions under which such a child, acknowledged by the father, may inherit from him, are fixed by statute.[9] Acknowledgment prior to the adoption of a statute giving an acknowledged child the right to inherit, under certain conditions, entitles the child so acknowledged to the benefit of the statute.[10] A mother cannot inherit from her bastard child,[11] and cannot recover, as sole beneficiary, for his unlawful death, under the provisions of Lord Campbell's act.[12] In New York a mother who has renounced her illegitimate child by surrendering it to a foundling hospital cannot regain custody of the child by legal process after it has been indentured by the hospital authorities, nor can the indenture be canceled at her instance.[13] Hence an application by her for an extract from the hospital record should be denied, since no useful purpose would be served by granting it.[14] A deed by a father to his bastard child is valid.[15]

§ 3. Procedure to ascertain paternity and compel support.[16] Nature of proceeding.—A bastardy proceeding is neither a civil nor criminal action, strictly speaking, but is a statutory proceeding designed, primarily, to secure to the injured female compensation for her wrong.[17] Hence the Minnesota statute authorizing county commissioners to compromise the claim of a county against the putative father does not authorize them to settle and release the mother's interest without her consent,[18] and a settlement of the public claim does not oust the district adhered to in the foregoing cases, the better reasoning and weight of authority establish the proposition that the status of a person, as legitimate or illegitimate, fixed by the proper law (see next paragraph), is to be accepted in other jurisdictions for the purpose of descent of real property and the distribution of personal property. In re Goodman, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 266, 50 L. J. Ch. (N. S.) 425, 44 L. T. (N. S.) 527. This doctrine has been applied in the United States by recognizing the legitimacy, for the purpose of inheriting real property, of persons born out of wedlock, who, according to the proper law, had been legitimated by the intermarriage of their parents, notwithstanding that such intermarriage would not have that effect according to the lex rei sitae. Dayton v. Adkisson, 45 N. J. Eq. 603, 17 A. 964, 14 Am. St. Rep. 763, 4 L. R. A. 488; Miller v. Miller, 91 N. Y. 315, 43 Am. Rep. 669; Bates v. Virolet, 33 App. Div. 436, 53 N. Y. S. 893; De Wolf v. Middleton, 18 R. I. 814, 26 A. 44, 31 A. 271, 31 L. R. A. 146. See thorough examination of subject in Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 321. Conversely it has been held that subsequent intermarriage of the parents did not make a child legitimate in Mississippi so that it could inherit realty and share in personalty, though such marriage would have that effect by the law of Mississippi (lex rei sitae and lex domicilii decedentis), when it did not have that effect in South Carolina, where the parties were domiciled at the time of the birth of the child and at the time of such subsequent marriage. Smith v. Kelly, 23 Miss. 167, 55 Am. Dec. 87. See, also, Caballero's Succession, 24 La. Ann. 573. Of course the statute of another state or country which does not purport to affect the status of the child as legitimate or illegitimate, but merely prescribes the rights of illegitimate children, will not prevail over the lex rei sitae or the lex domicilii decedentis. See Pettit's Succession, 49 La. Ann. 625, 21 So. 717, 62 Am. St. Rep. 659.

Conceding that the lex domicilii decedentis and lex rei sitae may be eliminated, as is held in the foregoing cases, the question arises what is the proper law by which to determine the status of a person born out of wedlock? This question cannot be here discussed. A thorough discussion and numerous authorities will be found in the note to Irving v. Ford, 183 Mass. 448, 97 Am. St. Rep. 447, 65 L. R. A. 177, 182, from which the above is taken.

court of jurisdiction to award judgment against the father for the support and maintenance of the child.[19] It is held in Michigan that the proceeding, though strictly neither civil nor criminal, is so far of a criminal nature that the defendant is not privileged from arrest while in the state for the sole purpose of furnishing special bail in a suit begun by capias.[20] On the other hand it is not a criminal proceeding within the meaning of the statute prohibiting in effect the employment of private counsel by the complainant.[21] In New York the proceeding is said to be a quasi-criminal one, and where defendant is granted a new trial on appeal, he is entitled to the costs of the appeal as a matter of right as soon as the appeal is determined, whether or not the new trial has been had.[22] In Kansas a bastardy proceeding is held to be an action of such a character that costs may properly be taxed against an unsuccessful defendant.[23] A bastardy proceeding is held in Illinois to be a civil proceeding, though criminal in form, and a jury trial may be waived by defendant.[24]

Jurisdiction.—What courts have jurisdiction, original [25] and appellate [26] in bastardy proceedings, and the manner in which jurisdiction is acquired,[27] are determined by the constitutions and statutes of the various states.

Abatement.—Bastardy proceedings begun against the father are not abated by his fraudulent marriage with the mother, not consummated by cohabitation, but followed by immediate abandonment.[28]

Trial procedure; pleading; indictment.—An issue is properly made up when plaintiff files an affidavit and declaration alleging that defendant is father of the child, and defendant files an affidavit denying this allegation.[29] Formal reading of the complaint and entering of a plea of not guilty on the record may be waived by the defendant.[30] In a proceeding under the Kansas statute to charge the putative father with support of the child, a defense based on a claim that a valid settlement had been made with the complaining witness prior to the commencement of the proceeding cannot be considered where it has not been pleaded.[31] An in-

31. No pleading having been filed by dedictment for bastardy which follows the language of the statute and states the offense so plainly that the jury can understand it and with such particularity as to enable the accused to make his defense is sufficient.[32]

Judgment and bond.[33]—Under the Wisconsin statute one convicted of bastardy may be charged with the support of the child not only from the time of his conviction, but from the time of the child's birth.[34] Allowing the defendant twenty days in which to furnish a bond conditioned for performance of the judgment is a proper exercise of the court's discretion.[35] In Illinois a consent decree providing for payments for costs and maintenance of the child may be proper, though the statutory provisions as to the time and amount of payments are not literally followed.[36] The application for an increase of the amount allowed, provided for in New York, must conform to the statute.[37]

Evidence; presumptions; sufficiency of proof.[38]—In some jurisdictions, the child is admissible in evidence in proof of paternity to show a resemblance between it and defendant.[39] In others, it is held that a child under two years of age should not be exhibited to the jury for that purpose.[40] Mere presence of the child in the court room, in sight of the jury, does not, however, call for a reversal of the judgment, where the child was not exhibited to the jury, and no comparison was made between it and the defendant.[41] Testimony of a witness that the bastard child resembles accused is inadmissible.[42] Usually the relatrix is a competent witness and, while her testimony is sufficient without corroboration,[43] her declarations, during travail, are competent in corroboration of her testimony.[44] Where relatrix is a married woman she may testify to the non-access of her husband.[45] Defendant may prove intercourse with others upon or near the date of conception,[46] and the relatrix may be compelled to testify as to such fact and may be impeached by contradictory statements made by her upon that subject.[47] Evidence of promises of the accused at the time of the alleged intercourse, and of his nonperformance of such promises, is irrelevant.[48] Proof of birth of a child on a certain day warrants the inference that the child was born alive.[49] Where a person arrested on a charge of bastardy marries the mother, it will not be presumed that the marriage was entered into merely to avoid the consequences of a prosecution, but it will rather be assumed that if the alleged father doubted his paternity of the child he would have resisted the proceeding.[50] Evidence of a trial of the accused on an indictment for seduction of the mother and a verdict therein finding him guilty of fornication is inadmissible, the verdict fixing no particular time when the offense was committed.[51] Entries on the warrant, made by the magistrate presiding at the preliminary hearing, requiring accused to give a bastardy bond, and in default thereof, recognizing him to the superior court, are admissible as original evidence on the subsequent trial on an indictment founded on such proceedings.[52]

Paternity of the defendant must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt in some jurisdictions;[53] a preponderance of evidence is sufficient in others.[54] The state is not bound to prove intercourse on any particular day or days,[55] but the jury must be satisfied that the defendant had intercourse with the mother during a time in which, in the ordinary course of nature, the child could be begotten.[56] It is not necessary for the jury to find that the mother was constant in her declarations that the defendant was the father of her child or that she made such declaration during her travail.[57]

Contracts and bonds for support.[58]—Contracts and undertakings of the father made in contemplation of a marriage with the mother, and for the purpose of having bastardy proceedings dismissed, are valid and enforceable.[59] The moral obligation of a father to support his illegitimate children is a sufficient consideration for his bond to do so.[60] The beneficial right in a bond given in bastardy proceedings is the separate property of the mother in regard to which she is authorized by statute to sue, although married.[61] Furthermore, her husband would in such suit be adverse to her, so that her marriage would not render her incompetent to sue.[62] Where such bond runs to the county judge as trustee of an express trust, he is the proper person to sue thereon as plaintiff without joining the beneficiary.[63] Where the bond provides for the determination of the amount to be paid, and the manner of its payment by the county judge, in the event that the parties cannot agree such determination is a condition precedent to the maintenance of any action on the bond.[64] mate children whose parents have intermarried shall be considered as legitimate do not merely fix the status of such a child but are rules of descent by which he inherits the same as though legitimate.[66] But statutes providing that a bastard child shall inherit from the father when recognized by him in writing as his child are merely statutes of descent and do not affect the status of a bastard.[67] Hence a child so recognized cannot take under a will giving property to his father and his "lawful issue," these words being construed to include only legitimate children.[68] Statutes providing for legitimation by recognition of the child by the father, and subsequent marriage of the parents, do not apply where the father was the husband of another woman when the child was begotten.[69] Under a statute which does not define what shall constitute an acknowledgment, the burden is upon the child seeking partition of her father's real estate, to prove an acknowledgment that was clear and unambiguous, and such as would exclude all but one interpretation.[70] General or notorious recognition of the child is a sufficient acknowledgment in Iowa.[71] Under the Nebraska statute marriage of the parents of an illegitimate child does not legitimize the child unless other children are born after the marriage, and unless the father adopts the bastard child into his family, or acknowledges him in writing signed in the presence of competent witnesses.[72] The Missouri statute providing that the issues of all marriages decreed null in law, or dissolved by divorce shall be legitimate, does not make legitimate children of a white man and negro woman who lived together without any marriage of any kind.[73] Whether a natural child has been adopted as legal heir may be a question of fact.[74] A deed describing the grantee as the grantor's adopted daughter cannot be regarded as an adoption under a special act of the legislature authorizing the adoption.[75]

New York a scheme wherein the player stands to win only is not gambling.[81] A bet is a mutual agreement and tender of a gift of something valuable, which is to belong to one of the contending parties, according to the result of the trial of chance or skill or both combined.[82] Playing poker with a three cent limit is none the less gaming because of the small amount of money involved,[83] and the throwing of dice for money is within the Texas statute on betting.[84] Playing pool under an agreement whereby the losing player pays for the use of the table is within a statute forbidding betting at a pool table.[85] A lottery is a scheme for the distribution of valuable prizes by chance.[86] Buying on margins options for future delivery is not necessarily a gambling contract,[87] but such a purchase where delivery is not intended is illegal,[88] irrespective of statute, being contrary to public policy.[89] The general test is the intention not to actually deliver the goods contracted,[90] and in some states the purchase on margin for future delivery of commodities not needed in the ordinary course of the purchaser's business is prima facie evidence that the transaction is a wagering contract.[91] Each act of betting at a gaming table makes the keeper thereof guilty of a separate offense under the statutes of most of the states.[92] One making wagers by telegraph with persons in another state may be guilty of gambling though such other persons are not violating their local laws in accepting the wagers.[93]

Validity of regulations.[94]—Legislation prohibiting gambling or acts which may facilitate it will not be interfered with by the court unless such legislation be a clear, unmistakable infringement of rights.[95] The suppression of gambling is concededly within the police powers of a state,[96] and the regulation thereof may be delegated to the municipalities.[97] The state has unquestioned power to make the bucket shop business indictable,[98] and a statute prohibiting dealing in margins is not unconstitutional as violating the fourteenth amendment,[99] nor are such transactions matters of interstate commerce.[1] A statute which incidentally operates to prevent interstate wagers by telegraph is not, therefore, unconstitutional.[2]

Cards and other table games.[3]—By statute the playing of a game with cards, not at a private residence occupied by a family,[4] or the playing of a game with cards at a private residence commonly resorted to for the purpose of gaming, may be unlawful.[5] The characteristics of a gaming table are first, it is a game, second, it has a keeper, dealer, or exhibitor, third, it must be exhibited for the purpose of obtaining bettors.[6] The game of faro is a banking game.[7] One who participates in a game, and is dealer and manager thereof, may be convicted of exhibiting a gaming table,[8] but one who furnishes a table and participates in a game of craps thereon, without becoming banker, is not guilty of keeping and exhibiting a gaming table or bank.[9] The setting up of a poker table is not within a statute forbidding the setting up or keeping of any gambling device commonly called, A. Racing and race tracks.[13]—To maintain a telegraph and telephone office for collection of news as to horse races is not illegal in New York,[14] though by statute the receiving and recording of money bet on a horse race is prohibited.[15] Equity may restrain by injunction the maintenance of a pool room.[16]

Slot machines.[17]—In Maine a slot machine whereon the player is guaranteed in trade the equivalent of his deposit, but stands to win more, is a gaming device,[18] though the rule is otherwise in New York.[19] The illegal use of a slot machine is a nuisance and may be enjoined.[20]

Gaming at public place.[21]

Keeping a gaming place.[22]—Before any sort of gambling was prohibited or even considered to be against public policy, the keeping of a common gaming house was punishable at common law as a nuisance, because it tended to draw together disorderly persons.[23] To be indictable as a nuisance at common law, a place must be a "common" gaming house.[24] Keeping a gaming house may be punished under a statute forbidding the willful and wrongful commission of any act which grossly disturbs the public peace or which openly outrages public decency and is injurious to the public morals.[25] A turf exchange on the principal thoroughfare of a city where people daily congregate to bet upon horse races is a gaming house punishable as a nuisance at common law, whether the betting is a crime or not.[26] A resort where wagers upon horse races are made by telegraph has been held to be a gambling place,[27] and the maintenance of a pool room may be enjoined by a court of equity.[28] By statute in some states it is illegal to knowingly rent a place or room to be used for gaming purposes,[29] and one may be convicted therefor if the circumstances were such as to give a man of ordinary intelligence and caution good reason to expect that it would be put to the illegal use.[30]

(§ 1.) B. Indictment or information and trial procedure.[31]—In a prosecution for gaming, the state may rely on an offense committed any time within the limitation period,[32] but must prove an exact date within that period,[33] and there can be no conviction for keeping a gaming place on evidence relating only to a time subsequent to the issuing of the warrant.[34]

A conviction for dealing in margins contrary to statute may be had in the county where the orders were given and the money paid.[35] Under the New Jersey statute it is not necessary that both parties to the betting transaction be within that state.[36]

Indictments must allege all the statutory elements of the offense,[37] but an indictment for permitting games of chance in one's dwelling house, which informs the accused of the nature and cause of the accusation and so identifies the offense as to insure the accused against a subsequent prosecution therefore is sufficient.[38] In some states it is not necessary for the indictment to allege with whom the defendant played.[39] A count charging the keeping of a gaming house and aiding and assisting therein is not double.[40]

Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to authorize a conviction for gaming.[41] Under an indictment charging conjuncturily that defendant played and bet at a game played with cards, dice, and balls, there may be a valid conviction upon proof that the game was played with either cards, dice, or balls.[42] The admissibility of certain matters in evidence is noted below.[43]

Ebel, 98 App. Div. 270, 90 N. Y. S. 628.

§ 3. Recovery back of money lost.[45]—By statute, money lost at gambling [46] or in pursuance of a gaming contract [47] may be recovered by civil action against the winner [48] or the stakeholder.[49] In some states this right of recovery is given to the wife, children,[50] heirs, executors, administrators, and creditors of the looser if sued upon within a given time,[51] or by statute the state may sue for money lost at gambling, the wife being the beneficiary of any judgment recovered.[52] The law does not generally lend its aid to relieve any one of several parties who knowingly and intentionally embark in a gambling venture,[53] and when an illegal contract has been fully executed and the money arising therefrom deposited to the credit of one or more of the respective parties, such depository cannot, when sued therefor, successfully plead the illegality of the transaction,[54] but in so far as a gambling scheme has not been executed, the party advancing the money may sue therefor or establish his claim in bankruptcy.[55] Money lost in betting on horse races cannot be recovered.[56] At common law, to render a contract void as a wagering contract, it must appear that both parties understood and agreed, expressly or impliedly, the things which constituted it, as matter of law, a wagering contract.[57] To successfully defend on checks given in stock and cotton speculations, one must fairly prove that the transaction was a mere dealing difference.[58] The Nebraska statute on recovery applies to such kinds or descriptions of gambling only as are mentioned therein.[59] That a transaction grew from gambling contracts does not prevent the recovery of money paid by mistake.[60] A principal may recover funds misappropriated by its agent in the purchase on margin of produce whose actual delivery was not contemplated.[61] Pleadings in such actions are liberally construed.[62]

BONDS.

Scope of title.—Questions relating to negotiable bonds and the like,[75] to indemnity,[76] and to suretyship, are treated elsewhere.[77] Matters relating to bonds in particular actions and proceedings,[78] and to the bonds of particular officers, will be found in the appropriate titles.[79]

§ 1. The instrument; essentials and validity.[80]—A bond is the acknowledgment under seal of a debt therein particularly specified.[81] In every good bond there must be an obligor and an obligee, and a sum in which the former is bound.[82] The insertion of the amount at or before the time of signing is essential unless it is afterwards filled in by one duly authorized,[83] or unless the signers themselves afterwards duly ratify the insertion.[84] No surety is necessary.[85]

A statutory bond must conform substantially to the conditions prescribed by the statute,[86] but will be construed so as to carry into effect the intention of the parties if fairly ascertainable from the terms of the obligation.[87] Mere irregularities[88] or inaccuracies in its recitals do not affect its validity.[89] The insertion of an illegal or unauthorized provision does not affect the validity of the remaining portions, unless the conditions are so interwoven as not to be severable, or unless the statute expressly or by necessary implication so provides.[90] A surety on a city contractor's bond is not relieved from liability because its conditions are more comprehensive than are required by the ordinance under which it was given.[91]

An instrument void as a statutory bond may nevertheless be valid as a common-law obligation,[92] and will generally be so regarded where it has served the purpose for which it was given and enabled the obligors to secure the resulting advantage.[93] It must, however, be one which will stand as such without the aid of the statute by which it has been repudiated.[94] A bond which may or may not be

Bond of county treasurer, under Act April 15, 1834, § 33, which does not specify to whom such bonds shall run, is sufficient where it is given to the county commissioners by name and describes them as commissioners of a certain county. Lehigh Co. v. Gossler, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 406.

83. Authority must be under seal. Rollins v. Ebbs [N. C.] 49 S. E. 341. Rule applies to guardian's bond required by Code, § 1574, which must be in double the amount of the ward's personalty to be ascertained by the clerk. Id.

84. Held that there was nothing to show ratification. Rollins v. Ebbs [N. C.] 49 S. E. 341.

85. Instrument held to be bond. Walter Pratt & Co. v. S. J. Langston Mercantile Co. [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 134.

86. State v. Harper [Tex.] 86 S. W. 920, rvg. 85 S. W. 294. The right of action arising from the breach of a liquor dealer's bond is purely statutory and is penal in character, and no recovery can be had unless the party suing brings himself strictly within the terms of the act. Hillman v. Mayher [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 818. A liquor dealer's bond having but one surety is not a valid statutory bond, and furnishes no basis for the recovery of the statutory penalties prescribed for the breach of the conditions of such bond against either the principal or the surety. Batts' Civ. St. art. 5060g. requires two or more sureties. Id.

87. A liquor dealer's bond reciting that two persons desire to engage in the business in which both are named as principals, and which is signed by both, is valid, though conditioned only that one of them shall perform the things required of them by statute. State v. Harper [Tex.] 86 S. W. 920; rvg. 85 S. W. 294. See, also, State v. Harper [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 878.

88. Fact that name of additional party appeared in body of appeal bond as acknowledging himself bound as security, though he did not sign it, is mere irregularity, which may be cured by amendment. McDermid v. Judge [Ga.] 49 S. E. 800.

89. The validity of the bond required to be filed with a petition for a private road (Pol. Code, § 2692), is not affected by inaccurate recitals as to the petition, provided the identity of such petition remains sufficiently clear. Mariposa County v. Knowles [Cal.] 79 P. 525.

90. Executor's bond not rendered invalid as statutory bond to extent of remaining provisions because contained waiver of right to discharge any liability except in legal tender currency as provided by Acts 1884, pp. 24, 25, c. 22, instead of waiver of right to discharge liability with coupons of state bonds as required by Code, § 177. Yost v. Ramey [Va.] 48 S. E. 862. Surety authorizing attorney in fact to execute for him "the bond required by the court" not relieved from liability thereby. Id. The fact that an executor is required by the court to execute the statutory bond for the faithful performaance of his duties does not render it void because it contains a provision in excess of the statutory requirements on the theory that it is executed under legal duress. Id.

91. Given voluntarily for lawful purpose. Bowditch v. Gourley, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 342.

92. Wall v. Mount, 121 Ga. 831, 49 S. E. 778.

93. Bond given to prevent sale under levy, in which claimant bound himself to return property in event it was found subject on trial of claim case, and which actually had effect of preventing sale, held valid common-law obligation, though invalid as statutory bond because made payable to the plaintiff in fi. fa. instead of to levying officer. Wall v. Mount, 121 Ga. 831, 49 S. E. 778. Obligors having secured advantage of having it treated as valid cannot secure additional advantage of having it treated as invalid. Id. Benefit secured sufficient consideration to support cause of action, irrespective of fact that instrument was under seal. Id.

94. Liquor dealer's bond cannot be upheld as common-law obligation, since there is no common-law action for the penalties sought to be recovered. Hillman v. Mayher [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 818.

required by the court in the exercise of his discretion is a common-law and not a statutory bond.[95] A bond given pursuant to an unconstitutional statute cannot be upheld as a valid common-law obligation.[96] An action to recover penalties purely statutory cannot be maintained on a bond good only as a common-law obligation.[97]

Consideration.—As in the case of other contracts a bond must be supported by a consideration.[98]

Execution.[99]—The omission of the date does not render the bond invalid.[1]

The fact that the name of a party appearing in the body of the bond as security is not signed to the instrument does not render it invalid as to the principal and the other security who have properly signed it,[2] nor does the fact that the corporate name of the principal is abbreviated in the body of the instrument, where it is capable of identification.[3] A bond purporting to be given by a corporation but signed only by an individual is defective.[4] Where the signatures of the sureties are forgeries the bond is void,[5] and it is not validated by the fact that the sureties were approved by the proper officer.[6]

Statutory bonds must be approved in the prescribed manner.[7]

Delivery.[8]—The conditional delivery of a bond under seal cannot be made to a party thereto without waiving the benefit of the condition, unless the condition appears on the face of the instrument.[9] Where a bond is delivered to the obligee showing on its face that one of the persons named as sureties in the body of the bond has not signed, such fact is sufficient to place the obligee upon inquiry, so as to permit the surety to set up the defense that his liability was conditioned on the signature of his co-surety.[10]

98. See 3 C. L. 509. A bond executed by defendant to secure payment to him of salary as clerk of board of education pending contest for that office, and conditioned to save city harmless in case defendant was defeated, held supported by consideration. McLaughlin v. Board of Education of Covington, 26 Ky. L. R. 1126, 83 S. W. 568. Bond and contract, the performance of which it was given to secure, held to have been executed as nearly contemporaneously as possible, the parties being in different states, and the mere fact that the former was dated two days later than the latter did not render the bond without consideration. Stauber v. Ellett [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 156, 103 N. W. 606. 4. Replevin bond. W. W. Kimball Co. v. Tasca [R. I.] 59 A. 919.

5. Bond to dissolve mechanics' liens signed by sureties impersonating others, who gave false answers as to their property. Breed v. Gardner, 187 Mass. 300, 72 N. E. 983.

6. By fact that sureties on bond to dissolve mechanics' liens were approved by master in chancery. Only approves qualification and fitness of sureties, and does not pass on question of genuineness of signatures. Breed v. Gardner, 187 Mass. 300, 72 N. E. 983.

7. The indorsement on the bond of a school book publisher (Ky. St. 1903, § 4424) of the word "approved" followed by the signatures of the ex officio members of the state board of education is sufficient approval. Approval by board by entry on record book not necessary. American Book Co. v. Wells, 26 Ky. L. R. 1159, 83 S. W. 622.

8. See 3 C. L. 510.

9. Delivery of bond guarantying that obligee would realize certain sum from sale of certain property held waiver of condition that it should not apply in case sale was made under deed of trust. Bieber v. Gans, 24 App. D. C. 517.

10. City of Butte v. Cook, 29 Mont. 88, 74 P. 67.

§ 2. Rights of parties and transferees.[11]—The assignee of a replevin bond takes it subject to every defense which the maker had against the assignor.[12]

§ 3. The terms and conditions in general; interpretation and legal effect.[13]—Bonds are to be construed in accordance with the recognized rules for the interpretation of contracts.[14] The intention of the parties, to be ascertained from the words employed, the connection in which they are used, and the subject-matter in reference to which they are contracting, must control.[15] The language must receive a reasonable construction.[16] The entire instrument will be considered, and, if possible, a construction adopted which will render the whole contract operative,[17] and the courts cannot interpolate terms and conditions as to which the minds of the parties have not met.[18]

A bond of indemnity not stipulating how long it shall remain in force, but covenanting for the payment of an annual premium in advance to the obligor so long as it does so remain, leaves the obligee at liberty to terminate the contract in so far as the rights of third parties are not involved, by declining to make payment.[19] Recovery on a bond under seal, complete and unambiguous on its face, and containing an unconditional promise to pay the sum sued for on the happening of a certain event, which has admittedly occurred, cannot be defeated by showing a collateral oral agreement that it was to be conditional only.[20] A bond providing for the payment of interest and damages binds the obligor to the payment of interest as an element of damage, if not the payment of interest as such.[21] The construction of particular bonds will be found in the note.[22]

14. See, also, Contracts, 3 C. L. 805. City of Oakland v. Snow, 145 Cal. 419, 78 P. 1060. The designation of the principal as "auditor and ex officio assessor" instead of "auditor and assessor," held a trivial and harmless misdescription not affecting the validity of the obligation. Id. Office of assessor held not distinct from that of auditor, since duties of both required to be performed by same person, and hence one bond conditioned on the faithful performance of his duties as auditor and ex officio assessor applied to duties of both offices. Id.

15. Westfall v. Albert, 212 Ill. 68, 72 N. E. 4.

16. Provision in building contractor's bond that owner shall notify surety of any act of principal which may involve a loss for which surety would be liable does not require him to give notice of fact that contractor has become indebted for labor, but only of the institution of proceedings to enforce the lien. Ovington v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 36 Wash. 473, 78 P. 1021.

21. Bostrom v. Gibson, 111 Ill. App. 457.

22. Liquor dealers bond conditioned that he shall not permit any minor to enter and remain in his plaace of business is not breached by his permitting a minor to enter for a few moments on a matter of business. Douthit v. State [Tex.] 83 S. W. 795.

Bond of a vice consul conditioned that the principal should faithfully perform his duties, and should account for, pay over, and deliver up all moneys which should come into his hands, held not to require surety to respond for statutory penalty incurred by principal for charging excessive fees, where whole amount collected, including excess, was accounted for. United States v. Ballantine [C. C. A.] 138 F. 312.

Bond of school book publisher conditioned that it will sell books to patrons of common schools in counties adopting them at prices not greater than it sold them to patrons of schools in other states is broken, though it does not sell directly to pupils of any state, where it sells to dealers in Kentucky at 80 per cent. of list price and binds them to sell at list price, and agrees to furnish same books to boards of education in Ohio under statute requiring them to be furnished to such boards at 75 per cent. of list price, and requiring boards to sell them to pupils at a price not to exceed 10 per cent. in addition to that paid the publisher. American Book Co. v. Wells, 26 Ky. L. R. 1159, 83 S. W. 622. Bond executed by defendant to secure payment to him of salary as clerk of board of education pending contest for that office, and conditioned to save board harmless by reason of payment to him of "any salary now due him as clerk," held to cover amount of salary then due, and board having paid such amount to defendant, was entitled to recover it in action on bond on his defeat in contest. McLaughlin v. Board of Education of City of Covington, 26 Ky. L. R.

The statute in pursuance of which a bond is given is to be regarded as a part of it,[23] and the bond must, if possible, be so construed as to the scope of its obligation, as to cover the objects of the statute in requiring it.[24] So, too, where a bond is conditioned for compliance with certain covenants of a specified lease, such covenants are as much a part of the condition of the bond as if set fourth at large therein.[25]

1126, 83 S. W. 568. Defendant having had knowledge of all the facts, board was not estopped to recover on bond on ground that it had kept defendant in office, recognizing him as clerk, and that he had performed all duties as such clerk. Id. Provision in bond given to secure payment of notes that "said notes may be from time to time renewed during the said year," held to have been for purpose of enabling the obligee to take renewals without affecting the liability of the surety. Haney School Furniture Co. v. Medary [Wis.] 101 N. W. 929. Is a presumption that sum named in bond given by one selling out business to secure performance of contract not to engage in the business in the same town within a specified time is for a penalty and not for stipulated damages, and contrary must be made to appear. Dissosway v. Edwards [N. C.] 49 S. E. 957. Instruction erroneous in informing jury that sole question was whether bond was entered into when sale was made. Id. In bonds for immediate collection of judgment, full restitution includes interest on the amount of the judgment. Haunts v. Lanman Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 405.

Bond of county treasnry conditioned to "faithfully perform the duties of his office" is breached by failure to pay over to a city the proportion of proceeds from liquor licenses to which it is entitled. Lehigh Co. v. Gossler, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 406. Questions relating to settlement of county treasurer's accounts respecting the proportion of liquor license taxes payable to cities must be determined by courts, and hence cannot set up an adjudication by the auditors against a claim by a city for its proportion. Id. General bond of telephone company held to cover damages to land of abutting owner by reason of additional servitude imposed by erection of poles on highway, and court in continuing injunction against it will limit it so as to prohibit their erection on plaintiff's private propperty only, though supervisors have not consented to use of roads. Pfoutz v. Pennsylvania Tel. Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 105. Bond given by private bank to treasurer of creamery association for faithful performance of its duties as custodian of association's funds was to continue for one year. Within year agreement was indorsed thereon to the effect that bond should stand good until a successor to bank should be elected and qualified, which was signed by principal and sureties. Deposits were made for over nine years, when bank failed. Held, that bond continued indefinitely in force until successor was appointed and sureties were liable for amount due at time of failure. Nelson & Albin Creamery & Cheese Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 93 Minn. 449, 101 N. W. 968.

Building contractor's bonds: Bond by which obligors agree to erect buildings, or in default thereof, to pay a certain sum, while not technically an alternative contract, partakes of the nature of one. McCullough v. Moore, 111 Ill. App. 545. Held not too vague to be enforceable where no buildings were erected, though general in its terms and leaving much to the discretion of the obligors. Id. Bond executed by highway improvement contractors conditioned that they would promptly pay all debts incurred by them in the prosecution of the work, including labor and materials, held not to render them or their sureties liable for debts for labor and supplies incurred by subcontractor. Miller v. State [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 260. Where a surety binds itself unconditionally for the faithful performance of alterations within the limits of a certain sum, it is bound, even though the regulations of the contract providing that changes shall only be made on the written order of the architect are not followed. Bagwell v. American Surety Co., 102 Mo. App. 707, 77 S. W. 327. Under U. S. Comp. St. 1901, which provides that a surety upon a bond given by a building contractor to the government shall assume an obligation that the contractor pay all persons supplying labor and materials, a surety is not liable for the contract price of a lighter and crew furnished to transport materials. United States v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 86 App. Div. 475, 83 N. Y. S. 752. Bond given by contractor to city conditioned to pay "any and all persons, any and all sums of money which may be due for labor and materials furnished and supplied or performed in and about the said work," embraces in the class of persons entitled to sue thereon one furnishing material to a subcontractor. Bowditch v. Gourley, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 342. In action on contractor's bond to recover amount of mechanics' liens enforced against property, evidence that a change involving additional cost to the contractor was made, held inadmissible where contract provided that changes might be made. Ovington v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 36 Wash. 473, 78 P. 1021.

23. State v. Wotring [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 365.

24. Bond of commissioner appointed to sell lands, conditioned that he shall "faithfull discharge his duties as such commissioner, and account for and pay over, as required by law, all money which may come to his hands by virtue of said office," covers money received by him in payment of notes given for part of purchase price. State v. Wotring [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 365.

25. McCullough v. Moore, 111 Ill. App. 545.

As between a bond and a collateral security, the bond is the principal debt in law, and must govern the rights of the parties between themselves.[26] It also governs as to the claims of volunteers, and they are affected by it without notice.[27]

Bonds given by assurance companies are in the nature of insurance contracts to be construed as contracts for compensation and the companies become identified with their principal and are bound by his acts.[28]

The question whether the sum named in the bond is to be regarded as liquidated damages or as a penalty is fully treated elsewhere.[29]

Conditions precedent to a right of recovery must be performed,[30] unless waived.[31]

§ 4. Remedies and procedure.[32]—All official bonds, whoever may be named as obligee, are given for the use of parties having a legal interest in their enforcement.[33] Where a bond in bastardy proceedings runs to the county judge as trustee of an express trust, he is the proper person to sue thereon without joining with him the beneficiary.[34] If the language of a contractor's bond and the proved circumstances of the case make plain the the intention of the parties to secure not only the owner of the building but the laborers and materialmen as well, then the latter may avail themselves of the security thus provided, though they are not specially named in the bond and no consideration passes directly from them to the surety.[35]

26. Godshalk's Estate, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 410. Grantor in deed charged part of purchase money on land, the interest to be paid to grantor and his wife and the survivor during their lives, and upon death of survivor, fund was to go to legal heirs of grantor or to those legally entitled to same. Grantee executed bond conditioned for payment of fund, after death of grantor and his wife, to parties entitled to receive same by will. Held, bond governed and gift was but a provisional one to heirs, subject to implied power to vest title in others by will; and beneficiaries under will entitled to take to exclusion of heirs. Id.

27. Deed above referred to was recorded, but bond was not. Held immaterial that heirs had no notice of the bond. Godshalk's Estate, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 410.

28. Deviation from the contract by the contractor and subcontractor upon whose bond defendant company was surety. Held not discharged from liability to principal contractor. Cannot invoke doctrine of strictissimi juris. Pacific Bridge Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 33 Wash. 47, 73 P. 772.

29. See Damages, 3 C. L. 997.

30. Where bond in bastardy proceedings provides that amount to be paid prosecutrix, if same cannot be agreed upon by the parties, shall be determined by the county judge and shall be paid in the manner designated by him, no action can be maintained thereon until such determination. Meyer v. Meyer [Wis.] 102 N. W. 52.

31. The obligee may show a waiver of stipulated conditions precedent in lieu of performance unless such waiver has the effect of making a new contract or obligation. Guilford Granite Co. v. Harrison Granite Co., 23 App. D. C. 1. Statement of plaintiff's attorney that bond given by defendant in a capias, conditioned upon his presenting his petition for the benefit of the insolvent laws, and his surrender to jail in case he failed to obtain his discharge, had in his opinion already been forfeited and that there was no use in defendant's going to jail, held not to amount to an agreement to release defendant from obligation to surrender himself. Irwin v. Hudson, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 72. Petition held not to allege facts constituting waiver of performance of terms of bond. Bieber v. Gans, 24 App. D. C. 517.

33. Lehigh Co. v. Gossler, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 406. A county treasurer's bond running to the county commissioners is given to secure performance of a public trust, and may be enforced without any authorization by the obligee in the manner provided in Act June 14, 1836, for enforcing bonds given to the commonwealth. Id. To the extent that money in the hands of a county treasurer is payable to a city, such city has a legal interest in the enforcement of the bond. Id. Six years' statute of limitations does not apply, since bond was under seal. Id. County court may sue on bond given by turnpike company to state, to secure construction of road, for any injury suffered by the district through which road runs, by reason of a breach thereof. State v. Sistersville, M. & M. Turnpike Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 454. Though the bond of the clerk of the United States circuit court is given to the United States as sole obligee, it is available to any private suitor to indemnify him for any loss he has sustained by reason of the failure of the clerk to discharge any of the duties of his office. 35. Where runs to owner and all per-

A bond binding the principal and each of the sureties in a specified sum is joint and several.[36] So also is one in which the obligors "bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, administrators, and each and every one of them."[37] By statute in many states joint bonds are made joint and several.[38] The surety on a joint and several bond may be sued alone.[39]

A condition of a contractor's bond that suit must be brought thereon within six months after breach of the contract is satisfied by suit within six months after the owner knew of a breach by failure to pay for labor and materials.[40]

In Texas the state may have successive recoveries on a liquor dealer's bond, either by suits in its own behalf or by parties aggrieved, until it is exhausted.[41]

Pleading and evidence.[42]—The breach of the bond by the principal must be pleaded in an action against the sureties.[43] The mere allegation that judgment has been recovered against him is insufficient.[44] The performance of conditions precedent must be alleged.[45]

In a suit on a penal bond, in which the county and district are both interested, the declaration should show whether it is for an injury or loss suffered by the county or the district,[46] and in what the injury consists.[47]

A defense that the bond sued on was extorted in proceedings which were void for want of jurisdiction is the subject of a plea in bar and not of a plea to the jurisdiction.[48] sons who may be injured by any breach of its conditions, subcontractors may sue thereon for breach of condition to "well and truly pay all claims for labor and material furnished for the work," whereby they were injured. Getchell & Martin Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Peterson, 124 Iowa, 599, 100 N. W. 550. Subcontractor cannot be deprived of his rights by any act of the owner. Id. Laborers and materialmen may sue on a contractor's bond, conditioned on payment for labor and materials for a public building, as a contract made for their benefit. Buffalo Forge Co. v. Cullen & Stock Mfg. Co., 105 Mo. App. 484, 79 S. W. 1024. The fact that the bond contains a clause authorizing its assignment to laborers and materialmen, and stipulating that in such case it shall inure to the benefit of all of them, does not prevent a materialman from suing on it as a contract for his benefit, where he is the only creditor of the contractor. Id.

37. When joint obligors bind each executor, the obligors are by implication severaly bound, since liability of executor arises from that of his testator, and both are necessarily bound to the same extent and in like manner. Lehigh Co. v. Gossler, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 406.

38. Sureties may be proceeded against without first bringing action against the principals. Rev. St. 1899, § 889. Bond executed by a contractor and builder, with surety, to save owner harmless from liens. Manny v. Nationl Surety Co., 103 Mo. App. 716, 78 S. W. 69.

43. United States v. Meade [Ariz.] 80 P. 326. Allegation that at certain time within the life of the bond of a United States marshal there was a certain sum in his hands, being the balance which had come into his hands by reason of advances and payments" made to him as marshal, and that he afterwards refused to pay it over, held insufficient to show breach because not showing that such balance was improperly retained. Id.

44. Official bond of United States marshal. Recovery not the breach but only evidence thereof. United States v. Meade [Ariz.] 80 P. 326.

45. In an action on a bond, a contention that the complaint does not state a cause of action because the performance of conditions precedent is not alleged is untenable, where the bond and contract are pleaded according to their legal effect and no conditions precedent appear therein. Leghorn v. Mydell [Wash.] 80 P. 833.

46. Otherwise bad on demurrer. Bond given by turnpike company to secure construction of road. State v. Sistersville, M. M. Turnpike Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 454.

47. State v. Sistersville, M. & M. Turnpike Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 454.

48. Bond given to secure release of vessel seized by sheriff in proceedings under act for collection of demands against ships, etc. Birch v. King [N. J. Law] 59 A. 11.

If the conditions of the bond are merely to indemnify the obligee, a plea of non damnificatus is good;[49] but if the bond is an affirmative covenant to do a specific thing and not one of indemnity against damages, liability must be adjudged, though no loss results from nonperformance and the plea is bad.[50]

Recovery cannot be had on a bond as a common-law obligation in an action which is distinctly a suit thereon as a statutory bond, with allegations appropriate thereto,[51] but in such case plaintiff may be allowed to amend so as to set up facts entitling him to recover thereon as a valid common-law obligation.[52]

The ordinary rules of pleading[53] and evidence apply.[54]

A declaration alleging performance of conditions precedent is not supported by proof of facts constituting a waiver thereof.[55]

Judgment and damages.[56]—The judgment in an action on a bond given to secure the performance of a contract should be for the penalty of the bond and the amount of damages assessed, and should provide that the judgment shall stand as security for further breaches.[57] In an action on the official bond of a probate judge, it is proper to enter judgment for the penalty of the bond, with a direction to the master to advertise for claims and report them to the court.[58]

In a suit for a liquidated sum of money, due under the express terms of a bond under seal, it is proper, on sustaining a demurrer to a plea to the declaration, to refuse to permit the damages suffered by plaintiff to be assessed by a jury, and to enter up judgment for the amount claimed.[59]

In case a replevin bond does not comply with the statutory requirements and hence is not good as a statutory bond, the court is not authorized to enter summary judgment against the sureties, but the remedy thereon is by separate action.[60]

The debt for which the surety can be held liable is limited by the penalty named in the bond, but interest may be collected thereon from the time when it became the surety's duty to pay it, though the aggregate of principal and interest exceeds the penal sum.[61]

49. Westfall v. Albert, 212 Ill. 68, 72 N. E. 4. Bond conditioned that lessee would remove improvements before expiration of lease, given in pursuance of an order of a court of chancery "to execute a penal bond," held not such an obligation as to preclude defendants from raising question whether or not it was intended merely as a contract of indemnity. Demurrer to pleas of non damnificatus properly overruled. Id.

50. Westfall v. Albert, 212 Ill. 68, 72 N. E. 4. The controlling question in such case is whether the sum named is to be regarded as a penalty or as liquidated damages. Id.

BOUNDARIES.

§ 1. Rules for locating or identifying.[63]—As a general rule, a line marked part of the way will be continued in the same direction for the full distance.[64] A line may be determined by reversing the calls from a located monument to the point of beginning.[65] The actual location of a boundary may be presumed,[66] and it may be a question of fact[67] even in a statutory proceeding.[68] If the name of a natural object called for is applicable to several objects it is a question of fact as to which was intended.[69] A boundary may be determined by circumstances surrounding the delivery of possession of land conveyed if the deed contains no definite description.[70] A call of the land of a third person as a boundary extends to the true line and is not a conventional one agreed upon by parol by the parties at the time the deed was executed.[71] A call for the width of a way controls for the entire length of the way.[72]

Monuments, courses and distances, and quantity.[73] Calls for the determina-

a building contract runs to the owner and all persons who may be injured by its breach, the only limit on the surety's liability is the penalty named in the bond. Not limited to contract price. Getchell & Martin Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Peterson, 124 Iowa, 599, 100 N. W. 550.

66. Where a dwelling house is situated in the midst of a comparatively large tract, the nearest fence or hedge may ordinarily be presumed to be the boundary unless the contrary appears. Okie v. Person, 23 App. D. C. 170.

67. Evidence held for the jury as to the location of the boundary line of certain lots. Gunkel v. Seiberth [Ky.] 85 S. W. 733. Conflicting evidence as to the location of a division line held to raise a question for the jury. Daley v. Wingert, 210 Pa. 160, 59 A. 982. Actual location of a boundary held a question for the jury. Where testimony as to the location of a line is conflicting, and attempts to locate the line by measuring from monuments outside the property result differently when different monuments are selected. Richardson v. Morris, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 192.

Where the calls are ambiguous in that they may be satisfied by either of two lines, the question as to the true line is one of fact. Cole v. Mueller [Mo.] 86 S. W. 193. A call for a corner as the point where the boundary line of a lane intersects a highway precludes the idea of a boundary joining on a curve. Rafferty v. Anderson, 94 N. Y. S. 927.

68. In a proceeding under Acts 1893, p. 44, c. 22, to have a disputed boundary settled, the question as to location was held to be one of fact. Smith v. Johnson [N. C.] 49 S. E. 62.

tion of boundary lines which are inconsistent are to be given prevailing effect in the following order: Natural objects;[74] artifical marks;[75] courses and distances.[76] Courses and distances control quantity,[77] but a call for quantity may be considered where the calls for boundaries are ambiguous in that they can be satisfied by either of two lines,[78] or where it is evident that there is a mistake in the calls.[79]

Conflicts between plats, maps and monuments.[80]—A recorded plat of a survey is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the lines therein laid down and is not overcome by the absence of blazed lines or traces after many years.[81] Where lands are conveyed by reference to a plat, the notes and lines of the plat control the boundaries [82] irrespective of the field notes,[83] but such reference does not preclude the showing of where the line actually fell on the ground.[84] Where a boundary is to be located between adjoining lands, that method of constructing the line should be adopted which will present an arrangement of several surveys as nearly identical with that shown by the original map as possible, instead of an observance of courses and distances which would result in the destruction of the original configuration of the surveys.[85] If it does not appear that a boundary was established by any particular survey, resort may be had to the field notes of all the surveys of the land.[86] The general intent of a plan to exhibit a symmetrical plat prevails over a particular intent with reference to a certain line.[87] Maps are but slight evidence of the configuration of a beach line many years earlier where it is shown that changes are constantly taking place.[88] Calls in a patent may be corrected by resort to the surveyor's plat.[89]

87. Where a tract is platted into lots and blocks, the general intent of the recorded plan to exhibit a symmetrical town plat with the dimensions of the lots and streets as there laid down prevails against a particular intent to place the terminus of a street at a point indicated on the plan. Nissley v. Moeslein, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 119. Government surveys.[90]—The beginning corner of a survey is of no greater dignity than other calls.[91] Original corners as established by government surveyors, if they can be found, or the places where they were established, if they can be definitely determined, are conclusive whether they were located correctly or not.[92] An original survey upon the faith of which property rights have been based and acquired control surveys subsequently made which affect such rights.[93] Where some of the calls in the field notes of a surveyor must be treated as mistakes those which will produce the fewest possible conflicts should be selected.[94] Where there is ambiguity in the field notes as applied to the land upon which the survey was made, extrinsic evidence is admissible to locate the survey,[95] but the boundaries as shown by calls in a patent cannot be overthrown by parol evidence of the surveyor's statement before making the survey as to a monument he would take for a beginning corner.[96]

Highways, streets or ways as boundaries.[97]—A boundary on a way includes the fee to the center thereof unless the terms of the grant indicate the limitation of its intent to the exterior line of the way.[98]

§ 2. Riparian or littoral boundaries.[99]—It is presumed that the owner of the bank of a stream owns to the thread thereof,[1] and the fact that he conveys all the land on one side of the stream or up to the meander line is insufficient to rebut this presumption.[2] A call to an unnavigable stream[3] or other body of water[4] extends to the thread thereof, but one to a navigable stream ordinarily extends

This presumption does not prevail, however when the sovereign or public authorities are vested with the fee of the highway (Paige v. Schenectady R. Co., 77 N. Y. S. 889), and it is rebutted by the production of a deed from which the owner derives his title, granting the land to the side of the road only. Smith v. Slocumb, 77 Mass. [11 Gray] 280; Jackson v. only to low-water mark [5] unless the grantor owns the fee of the bed of the stream.[6] Grants of government lands bounded on streams and other waters, without any reservation, are to be construed as to their effect according to the law of the state where the lands lie.[7] The sudden changing of the course of a boundary stream does not change the boundary.[8]

NOTE. Adjustments and settlements: Where the boundary between coterminous owners is in dispute and they agree upon a line and take possession accordingly, the agreement binds them, though not in writing. The effect of the agreement is not to pass title, but to define the line to which the deed of the respective parties extend. It is not within the statute of frauds for it does not operate to convey land, but merely as a contract with respect to what has already been conveyed. Sherman v. King, 71 Ark. 248, 72 S. W. 571; Dierssen v. Nelson, 138 Cal. 394, 71 P. 456. Lindsey v. Springer, 4 Har. [Del.] 547; Watrous v. Morrison, 33 Fla. 261, 14 So. 805, 39 Am. St. Rep. 139; Farr v. Woolfolk, 118 Ga. 277, 45 S. Smith, 79 Tex. 310, 23 Am. St. Rep. 340. But if the location of the true boundary is known and adjoiners attempt to convey land from one to the other, changing the location of the boundary, the statute of frauds applies. Miller v. years is established by acquiescence [18] unless such recognition was under an erroneous belief that the boundary was the true one.[19]

Occupancy under a claim of ownership up to a certain line for the period necessary to give title by limitations establishes a boundary by adverse possession,[20] but if there is a dispute as to the true line before the period has elapsed, the line is not fixed.[21]

§ 5. Establishment by arbitration, action or statutory mode.[22]—Equity has no jurisdiction of a suit where mere confusion of boundaries exist,[23] but will pass upon the question as incidental to other relief.[24] The method provided by the Federal land department for restoring lost meander lines has been adopted by some states.[25] The boundaries as established by a survey applied for as provided by law is binding on one who joined in the application and was present when his land was surveyed though no formal notice of the survey was served upon him [26] unless he appeals from the report of the surveyor within the statutory period after it is filed.[27] Processioners have no authority to run a boundary line between adjoining owners where no boundary had been previously located.[28]

All evidence tending to show the location of the line is admissible.[29] Where not the boundary. Clark v. Hindman [Or.] 79 P. 56. An unrecorded sealed agreement executed by a grantor to his grantee purporting to fix the boundaries of a way mentioned in a previously executed deed is binding on subsequent holders under the grantee with notice. Wendall v. Fisher, 187 Mass. 81, 72 N. E. 322. The calls in a lease with an option to purchase erroneously made because of a mistake of the lessor are binding on him (Naughton v. Elliott [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 869), and cannot be varied by parol evidence (Id.). adjoiners claim from a common source it is not necessary for one who is plaintiff in an action to determine the division line to show that he derived title from the state.[30]

BOUNTIES.

Bounties on enlistment in the army or navy [31] and bounties paid for capture or destruction of hostile ships [32] are elsewhere treated.

The Nebraska act to promote the growth of beet sugar and chicory is invalid as embracing two subjects,[33] and no obligation rests on the state to pay bounties on sugar whose culture was induced by the act.[34] The Massachusetts act providing for the payment of bounties to certain civil war veterans is unconstitutional.[35]

Coyote bounties.[36]—The California act of 1891 provided for the presentation of coyote bounty claims to the board of supervisors who issued a certificate,[37] and on the approval thereof by the board of examiners [38] the controller was authorized to draw a warrant for the claim provided a proper appropriation had been made.[39] Such act was held not to violate the constitutional limitation of indebtedness.[40] Many claims remaining unpaid because no appropriation was made, the legislature provided that suit might be brought against the state thereon,[41] and such statute is held not to be special legislation,[42] nor does the enlargement thereby of the period of limitations [43] violate the constitutional prohibition against the making of gifts by the legislature.[44] Perfected claims for coyote bounties are assignable [45] by parol,[46] and evidence of such parol assignment does not contradict a contemporaneous power of attorney to receive payment on the certificates,[47] and in a suit on such claims, approval of the certificate by the board of examiners need not be alleged.[48] The certificate of the board of supervisors is prima facie evidence of the validity of claims for coyote bounties in a suit against the state therefor.[49] The act of 1891 is now repealed, but such repeal did not destroy the evidentiary

It appropriates public money for private purposes, and such conclusion is not avoided by the fact that the bounty is made payable for moneys allowed the state by the Federal government as reimbursement for war expenses, for such moneys having been previously applied to payment of the state debt, the bounty act took from the state treasury money which could only be replaced by taxation. 40. Where a statute allowing bounties makes no appropriation therefor, claims for such bounties are not debts within the constitutional limitation of indebtedness. Bickerdike v. State, 144 Cal. 698, 78 P. 277. A bounty act is not void as increasing the state indebtedness above the constitutional limit because the bounties to be earned might exceed such limit, but only the excess is avoided. Id. Claims previously paid by state officers without a prior appropriation are not to be considered in determining whether bounty claims exceed the constitutional limitation of indebtedness. Id.

effect of certificates previously issued thereunder.[50] Under the Idaho statute only ears need be presented unless the commissioners require more.[51]

Presenting false claims.[52]—The statute relating to the making of false affidavits in support of claims does not supersede the statute relating to the presentation of false claims.[53] It is not essential to the offense of presenting a false claim for coyote bounty that the same should have been allowed or paid,[54] nor is it a defense that the spurious coyote scalps presented were easy of detection.[55]

BREACH OF MARRIAGE PROMISE.[56]

The promise and breach thereof.[57]—The agreement to marry must be mutual.[58] A contract to marry a woman already married to another, made less than five years after the disappearance of her husband, is immoral and unenforceable, even though the marriage was not to take place until five years after her husband's disappearance, or until a divorce was obtained.[59] Whether the breach has been condoned, and defendant released from his promise, is a question determinable by reference to the facts of each case.[60] A petition which alleges the ability of the parties to contract marriage, the mutual promises to marry and their terms, and the defendant's breach, sufficiently states a cause of action for breach of promise of marriage.[61]

Damages.[62]—Damages may be recovered in full compensation for pain, mortification, and wounded feelings of the plaintiff, the amount being for the jury.[63] Seduction of the plaintiff by defendant after the promise to marry and pending the engagement may be alleged and proved in aggravation of damages,[64] and the allegation of seduction does not affect the character of the demand as one for breach

NOTE. What amounts to a breach of the promise: A positive refusal to perform the contract, even if made before the time fixed for its performance, constitutes such a breach as will authorize an immediate action therefor. A. 385; Burtis v. Thompson, 42 N. Y. 246, 1 Am. Rep. 516. But a postponement by one without the consent of the other does not amount to a breach, if based upon good and sufficient reason. Walters v. After a postponement, the law construes the obligation as one to be performed within a reasonable time if no specific time has been agreed upon. Clement v. Skinner, 72 Vt. 159, 47 A. 788. Clark v. Corey, 24 R. I. 137, 52 A. 811. Failure to appear at the appointed time to fulfill the contract, without good excuse or reason, constitutes a breach. Walters v. Schultz, 1 Misc. 196, 21 N. Y. S. 768; Lahey v. Knott, 8 Or. 198; Graham v. Martin, 64 Ind. 568; Lohner v. Caldwell, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 444, 39 S. W. 591; Waneck v. Kratky [Neb.] 96 N. W. 651, 66 L. R. A. 798, 3 C. of contract.[65] A demand for damages for breach of promise of marriage and seduction is provable in bankruptcy though the damages are unliquidated.[66] But a plea of discharge in bankruptcy, in such an action, is insufficient if it fails to allege that the demand was scheduled or that plaintiff had knowledge of the proceedings.[67]

Evidence; instructions.—Evidence of the social and financial condition of the plaintiff and defendant is admissible as affecting the question of damages.[68] Evidence of an offer to marry plaintiff after she had instituted the action is inadmissible.[69] Neither party to an action for breach of promise of marriage is a competent witness.[70] A charge to the effect that plaintiff may recover in proof of the contract of marriage and its breach by defendant is erroneous because excluding the defense of a justifiable refusal to carry out the promise.[71]

BREACH OF THE PEACE, see latest topical index.

BRIBERY.[72]

Nature and elements of offense.[73]—Neither at common law,[74] nor under the generally accepted modern definition of bribery,[75] is that offense confined to the giving and receiving of rewards by judicial officers, or other persons concerned in the administration of justice; but it may be committed by any officer,[76] including legislative officers[77] or any person with official duties in any way connected with the administration of the government.[78] The test is whether the matter is one that may be brought before the officer in his official capacity,[79] and if the bribe is given

78. Though a school director in corruptly accepting money for his vote or influence in the appointment of teachers may not be technically guilty of bribery, yet for such an act he may be indicted at common law. Commonwealth v. Brown, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 470.

79. See 3 C. L. 527, n. 76. The fact that a common council had no authority to make the contract in question did not prevent the payment of money to councilmen to influence their action in favor of the contract from constituting a violation of the statute defining bribery of a legislative officer. Comp. Laws, § 11,312. People v. Mol [Mich.] 100 N. W. 913; People v. Ellen [Mich.] 100 N. W. 1008. The question of whether the act of voting on the passage of an ordinance, by an alderman, is an act relating to his official capacity, cannot be tested by the validity or invalidity of the privilege sought to be granted, but depends upon the question of whether or not the ordinance was one dealing with a subject over which the common council had jurisdiction, and upon which the members had a right to vote, as the use and control of the public streets. Murphy v. State [Wis.] 102 N. W. 1087. It is no defense to a charge of bribery of an alderman that the proposed ordinance, on which his vote and action were corruptly influenced, would have been invalid if passed. Id. Nor can arbitration proceedings, irregularly instituted, be relied upon to show that an official had no power to act, so that he could not be guilty of receiving a bribe to influence his official action. As where the city ordinances authorized arbitration to persons aggrieved by the refusal of the building inspector, when vested with discretionary power, to grant a building permit, provided an application and received by the accused with the understanding that it should influence him in his official action, it is immaterial whether he was or was not, or could or could not be so influenced.[80] Where the statute predicates criminality on the receipt of something of value, a mere promise or illegal undertaking is not sufficient to support a conviction.[81]

The offense of bribery embraces any attempt to bribe,[82] but the actual tender of a bribe is not necessary to perfect the offense of offering a bribe; any expression of an ability to produce a bribe is all that is necessary.[83]

Solicitation of a bribe is an offense in most states.[84] The power of expulsion of a member of the legislature for bribery is not affected by the constitutional provisions, disqualifying from holding any public office or trust any member convicted of bribery.[85]

Indictment.[86]—Immaterial variances as in other cases are diregarded.[86a] Several indictments are discussed as to form in the cases cited in the note.[87]

Evidence.[88]—Conversations subsequent to the abandonment of the conspiracy to bribe may be shown where their purpose was to prevent exposure.[89] Cases discussing the sufficiency of the evidence are cited below.[90]

Where the statute makes a crime to agree to receive, as well as to receive, anything of value, proof of receiving a mere promise to give or do something in the future will not support a charge of receiving property or anything of value. Trial and instructions.[91]—Where several defendants are charged with bribery, growing out of the same transactions and the same evidence is relied upon to convict all of them, juror who have sat in the trial of part of the defendants are subject to challenge for cause in other cases.[92] In a prosecution for attempt to bribe, a charge defining a bribe in the terms of the statute is proper,[93] and a charge that the exact language, in which the offer was made, need not be proven, is harmless, even if erroneous, when the exact language is proved.[94] A charge in a prosecution for bribery was not objectionable as omitting the element of "corrupt intent," in defining the offense, when the court employed the term "corruptly" in stating the charge preferred in the indictment and defining the offense.[95] Nor does the statement that, if the check "was so (corruptly) given and received, it is immaterial whether or not it did or could, in fact, influence him in his official action," eliminate from the instructions the element of corrupt intent.[96]

BRIDGES.

§ 1. Regulation and control.[97]—The state has full power to control and regulate all bridges as parts of the public highways,[98] and a municipality has no control over a bridge which is located on land belonging to the state and was built with county funds though it is located within the municipal limits.[99] A statute of Indiana cannot give a right to use a bridge over the Ohio river, beyond low-water mark, which constitutes the boundary line of Indiana.[1]

§ 2. Establishment and location by public agencies.[2]—Under the New York act for the reconstruction of an approach to the Brooklyn bridge, it was not a condition precedent to the exercise of the right of eminent domain to make an effort first to purchase the necessary land.[3] The fact that the municipality was authorized by the legislature to construct a bridge does not relieve it from liability for a trespass committed in the administration of it.[4]

§ 3. Contracts and construction.—Public officers have only such authority to make contracts for the building and repair of bridges as is specially conferred by law;[5] and authority conferred to rebuild or repair a bridge when damaged or rendered unsafe by the elements contemplates only damage by some extraordinary means and not by ordinary wear and tear.[6] Failure to complete a bridge within the time limited in the contract, caused by the service of an injunction upon both the city and the contractor, does not put him in default.[7] Neither unauthorized or collusive acts by a supervising engineer or a member of the board of supervisors, nor payments for the construction of a bridge, made without knowledge of the default of the contractors, nor the use of the bridge by the public, will estop a county, when sued for a balance due on a bridge contract, from setting up a counterclaim for damages for breach of contract by the substitution of inferior materials.[8] Nor will the fact that payment was voluntarily made on an unauthorized bridge contract constitute a defense to an action to recover moneys unlawfully drawn from the county treasury.[9] In Pennsylvania, upon the disapproval of a county bridge by the inspectors and their report of the amount to be deducted from the contract price, the court of quarter sessions cannot enter judgment against the contractors, after hearing evidence, but must approve, modify, or disapprove the report.[10]

§ 4. Public liability for costs and maintenance.[11]—The inherent power resides in the state to compel the maintenance and repair of bridges as parts of the legally located highways,[12] and their construction, support, and maintenance is a burden or duty,[13] which the legislature may impose on the municipal subdivisions of the state in such proportion as it may see fit.[14] The proceedings to enforce such liability, however, must pursue the statute strictly,[15] and such special statutory provisions must be construed in connection with the general laws on the same subject.[16] The New York and Brooklyn bridge, constructed under authority of the legislature, being a public highway, the obligations and liability of the city of New York with respect to its care, are to be determined with regard to its duties as to streets, modified by the fact that the bridge is not on the surface of the earth.[17]

§ 5. Establishment, construction, and maintenance by private enterprise[18] is more fully treated elsewhere.[19] The right to repair or alter, or to improve a bridge, for the safety of the public, is incident to the power to build it,[20] and a railroad company that has built a bridge across a navigable river, in compliance with an empowering act of Congress, has a vested right to maintain it, so long as used for railroad purposes.[21] Although a railroad company owes certain services to the public, it cannot, therefore, be compelled to allow a connecting railroad company to use its bridge, except by due process of law,[22] and a railroad company which has built, controls, and is required to maintain a bridge carrying a highway over its tracks, has a standing in equity, under the statute of Pennsylvania, to object to the construction of street car tracks over the bridge, although the municipality has consented.[23] Legislative authority given to a corporation to lease is canal and appurtenances does not absolve it from the duty to maintain good and sufficient bridges over its canal, imposed by its charter.[24] The statute of Pennsylvania, providing for the taxation of bridge companies on their stock does not authorize the taxing of bridges as real estate.[25]

§ 6. Injuries from defective bridges.[26]—A municipality is liable for damages caused by its bridge-tender negligently running the end of a swing bridge against a vessel;[27] but, under the bridge act of New Jersey, an action for damages to a vessel passing through a draw, while the authorities were actually engaged in repairing the same, will not lie against the municipality.[28]

Municipalities having control of highways and bridges are generally required to keep them reasonably safe for ordinary travel;[29] the duty, however, is purely statutory in most states,[30] and in no event is the municipality held as an insurer;[31] nor is a county liable where the cause of the injury was the act of God, or the elements, in causing the bridge to collapse.[32] There can be no recovery where the officials having the care of the bridge had no notice of its defective condition and had used due diligence in its care and maintenance.[33] The wrongful neglect to repair a bridge must be continuing when the injury results, to support an action for

An instruction that the defendant city was bound to use all reasonable care to keep its streets and bridges in a safe condition, and that, for failure to do so, was liable to one injured thereby, was approved as imposing no greater duty on the city than required by law. Benson v. Spokane [Wash.] 80 P. 1106. In an action for personal injuries received from the breaking of a bridge while driving an engine over it, this instruction was approved: "'Reasonable repair' and 'reasonably safe' mean what the terms imply—in other words, that the timbers of the bridge are reasonably sound and strong and in good condition to carry safely a load as heavy as bridges constructed in like manner, of equally as large timebrs, ought to carry when reasonably sound and in a reasonable state of repair." Comstock v. Georgetown Tp. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 788. In an action for damages from the collapse of a bridge, which had been repaired by the supervisors after notice of its unsafe condition, the fact that a supervisor and the foreman of the bridge crew had inspected the bridge after the repairs and thought it reasonably safe is no defense. Schlensig v. Monona County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 514.

30. In the absence of statutory provisions imposing liability, neither is a city liable for personal injuries caused by a defective bridge, which it has negligently failed to repair, nor are the members of the city council liable for damages for the improper exercise of their discretionary powers in failing to make such repairs. Gray v. Batesville [Ark.] 86 S. W. 295. Nor can a county be held liable for injuries caused by a defective bridge, which was built prior to the passage of an act making the county primarily liable in such cases. 32. The defense was that plaintiff drove on the bridge and remained there during a terrible and unusual storm for the purpose of shelter and that the storm caused the bridge to collapse. Verdict for defendant sustained. Culbertson v. Abbeville County [S. C.] 50 S. E. 33.

33. Notice to the commissioner of highways of the defective condition of a bridge is notice to the town; and it is not necessary that the notice should have been received by the commissioner in office at the time of the accident. It is the commissioner that receives the notice and not the individual. Kelly v. Verona, 97 App. Div. 488, 90 N. Y. S. 89. Under a statute rendering a county liable for damages resulting from a defective county bridge, where the chairman of the board of county commissioners has five days' notice of the defect, such notice must be actual personal notice, as distinguished from constructive or implied notice. No proof was offered to show that the chairman had personal knowledge of the rottenness of the sill which caused the bridge to fall. Parr v. Shawnee County Com'rs [Kan.] 78 P. 449. A general knowledge of the plan of the bridge as originally constructed, faulty in some respects, but which has stood and been in use for nine years, cannot be regarded as notice of some particular defect, as a rotten sill. Id. Evidence that the chairman of the county commissioners overheard a conversation, as to the bridge in question and others being in a defective condition, is not sufficient to show such notice. Scruggs v. Leavenworth County Com'rs [Kan.] 80 P. 595.

damages.[34] Assuming the care of a bridge and exercising acts of ownership and control over it are sufficient to render a city liable for its defective condition,[35] and a city which permits the use, and a street railway company which makes use of a bridge which is dangerous and unsafe for the use to which it is put, are both negligent.[36]

The officers charged with the care of bridges are not liable unless willfully or grossly negligent.[37]

A private corporation that is required to keep a bridge in good repair is liable for damages resulting from it failure to do so,[38] and this is so, whether the defect be latent or patent, unless the injured party was in default, or unless the defect arose from inevitable accident, tempest or lightning, or the wrongful act of some third person, unknown to the corporation.[39] A street railway company which uses a city bridge for its tracks thereby adopts such bridge as one of its appliances, and is liable for damages resulting from its defective condition, if it knowingly or negligently uses the same.[40]

Defective construction.[41]—While, under local laws, a county may not be liable for an accident due to a defect in a bridge caused by lack of repairs, of which it had no notice, it is nevertheless liable where the accident is due to defects in the original structure.[42]

Proximate cause of injury.[43]—In determining what is proximate cause, the true rule is that the injury must be the natural and probably consequence of the negligence, such a consequence as, under the circumstances of the case, might or ought to have been foreseen by the wongdoer as likely to follow from his act.[44]

37. Gray v. Batesville [Ark.] 86 S. W. 295. The Kentucky statute, providing that a special commissioner appointed to let out and superintend the construction of any bridge shall be liable for any defect and requiring him to give bonds, is intended only for the protection of the county, and does not make him personally liable to a person injured by reason of a defective bridge. Hardwick v. Franklin [Ky.] 85 S. W. 709.

39. But an instruction that the company is liable, whether it had notice of the defect or not, is too broad, even under the Pennsylvania rule, where it makes no exception as to the cause of the defect; as where plaintiff was throw from his bicycle and injured, as he claimed, on account of defects in the carriageway of the bridge. Benson v. Spokane [Wash.] 80 P. 1106. Where plaintiff, before driving an engine upon a bridge, was warned by the highway commissioner to use planks and did so, but the engine ran off of them and broke the bridge down, injuring plaintiff, the accident was but a casualty and defendant was not liable. Comstock v. Georgetown Tp. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 788. The fact that plaintiff's house was twenty feet distant from the base of a vertical line, dropped from the edge of the New York and Brooklyn bridge, did not

Contributory negligence.[45]—Technically speaking the doctrine of assumption of risk is not applicable to an action for damages caused by the collapse of a bridge while plaintiff was driving a traction engine over it;[46] but one who knows, or has reason to believe, that a bridge will collapse under the load he is about to drive over it, and nevertheless voluntarily and knowingly takes the risk, cannot recover for injuries received from the breaking down of the bridge.[47] One approaching a bridge is not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, in stepping on the bridge where the planking is defective, while looking to one side observing a workman cutting down a tree.[48] A party who is injured by being driven off the edge of a bridge, while riding as the guest of another, is not chargeable with the negligence of the driver.[49]

Remedies.[50]—An action may be maintained against the county commissioners by an administrator of one whose death resulted from their negligence to keep a county bridge in repair.[51] A party bringing suit for damages resulting from a defective bridge is not restricted to the sum stated in the claim presented to the city, as required by law, but may recover his actual damages, though exceeding his claim presented.[52]

Pleading and evidence.[53]—It must be alleged and proven that the county, or its officers, had knowledge of the unsafe condition of the bridge, or might with reasonable diligence have known it, and that they neglected to repair it within a reasonable time;[54] but a general charge of negligence is sufficient to withstand a demurrer.[55] In an action for injuries resulting from the breaking of a bridge, witnesses cannot testify that the bridge was reasonably safe, that being a question for the jury.[56] The neglect of the highway commissioner may be shown to establish the neglect of the town;[57] and defendant's lack of care of the bridge and knowledge of its defective condition may be shown by evidence of the unsound condition of the planking when the bridge was redecked just before the accident.[58]

61. Russell v. Westmoreland Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 425. Where there are conflicting statements and inconsistencies in the evidence as to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, the question must be left to the jury. Smith v. Jackson Tp., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 234. Whether one approaching a bridge was guilty of negligence in stepping on it, where the planking was defective, while looking to one side observing a workman cutting down a tree, held a question for the jury. Brewster v. Elizabeth City [N. C.] 49 S. E. 885. Whether plaintiff, who, being near-sighted and wearing glasses, attempted to cross a bridge on a bicycle in the dark and rode off the approach into the stream, was guilty of negligence, was held a question for the jury. Spring v. Williamstown, 186 Mass. 479, 71 N. E. 949.

62. Where an elderly woman was injured by her horse becoming frightened and backing her buggy off of the end of a bridge, where there was no guard rail, the questions of negligence, contributory negligence and proximate cause of the injury were properly left to the jury. Russell v. Westmoreland Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 425. Whether the act of plaintiff in stepping on a bridge where the planking was defective, while looking to one side at a workman cutting down a tree, was the proximate cause of his injury, was, under the evidence, a question for the jury. Brewster v. Elizabeth City [N. C.] 49 S. E. 885.

Undisclosed intention of purchaser to settle on difference in price does not make it a gambling contract as to the broker. Hocomb v. Kempner, 214 Ill. 458, 73 N. E. 740.

69. Contract for commissions on sales made by the landowner himself held without consideration. Wright v. Fulling, 93 N. Y. S. 228. Agreement by broker to divide commissions with a third person lest cumstances surrounding the parties at the time it was made.[71] If ambiguous the construction adopted by the parties will be followed.[72] A material alteration in a written contract between a broker and his principal made by one without the consent of the other renders the whole contract void.[73]

Necessity of contract being in writing.[74]—In the absence of statute the contract between the broker and his principal need not be in writing. In some jurisdictions the statutes require that the broker's authority to sell land must be in writing,[75] and in such case he cannot recover commissions if the statute has not been complied with,[76] though a contrary rule prevails in the second judicial department in New York.[77] The New York statute does not apply to an agreement with the purchaser for commissions,[78] nor to an employment to sell a contract for the purchase of land.[79] A written authority from one of several owners in common is sufficient.[80] A writing signed by the owner and addressed to the broker, expressly or impliedly acknowledging authority to act as agent for the purposes of the sale, is a sufficient compliance.[81]

Termination of the relation.[82]—Violation by a broker of the terms of his employment is a justification for the termination of his agency.[83] A principal cannot terminate the broker's agency in the midst of negotiations and refuse to consummate a sale negotiated by the broker so as to deprive him of his compensation.[84] In the absence of a revocation of his agency or a time limit to his employment, the broker is entitled to a reasonable time within which to find a purchaser,[85] and the expiration of such time merely authorizes a termination of the agency and does not deprive the broker of his commission if he finds a purchaser before such termination.[86]

Scope of broker's authority.[87]—A real estate broker is a special agent and the latter procure revocation of the agency is without consideration. Fox v. Seabury [Pa.] 60 A. 508.

The statute of frauds providing that no sale of land made by an agent shall be valid unless his authority is in writing, does not preclude an agent who was not authorized in writing, from recovering commission under an oral contract, when he has found a purchaser ready, willing and able to purchase on the terms which he was authorized to sell it for. Gwinnup v. Sibert, 106 Mo. App. 709, 80 S. W. 589. Where the owner with full knowledge of the terms on which the same has been sold by his broker ratifies the sale in writing, it is immaterial whether the agent's authority was in writing. Butman v. Butman, 213 Ill. 104, 72 N. E. 821.

75. Under Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 6629a, a contract with a broker in writing agreeing to pay him for finding a purchaser of real estate, but not specifying the amount which he is to receive, is insufficient, since the amount of compensation can be shown only by parol, and the statute requires such contracts to be in writing. can only act within the scope of his limited authority.[88] He has no authority, unless specially authorized, to execute a contract of sale in his principal's name,[89] or to receive money to be applied on the purchase price.[90] Such powers as are usually exercised hy brokers under like circumstances of employment will, however, be implied.[91] The principal may ratify the unauthorized acts of one purporting to act for him so as to be bound thereby.[92] A local custom [93] or the rules and usages of a stock exchange may [94] be deemed a part of the contract if it appears that the parties knew thereof and contracted with reference to it.[95]

§ 2. Mutual rights, duties and liabilities.[96]—The relation between a broker and his principal is a fiduciary one,[97] calling for the exercise of the utmost good faith on the part of the broker.[98] The principal can recover any damages which are proximately the result of the broker's bad faith [99] or want of ordinary care and

John Schroeder Lumber Co. v. Stearns [Wis.] 100 N. W. 836. Generally speaking, possession of a policy by an insurance broker confers upon him implied authority to procure its cancellation, but if the insurance company has notice of the termination of the agent's authority, the implication arising from his possession of the policy is overcome. Fowler Cycle Works v. Western Ins. Co., 111 Ill. App. 631.

92. Where a seller, on a report by a broker of a sale which he purports to have made in behalf of the seller, retains the report setting forth the terms of the sale for an unreasonable time, he will be deemed to have ratified the sale even though the broker was not authorized to sell at the terms reported. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 213 Ill. 561, 73 N. E. 430.

93. A custom which gives a broker 5 per cent. of the purchase price of land for assisting in its sale, irrespective of the amount, value or character of the services rendered, is unreasonable and void and the broker can only recover the reasonable value of his services. Penland v. Ingle [N. C.] 50 S. E. 850. See, also, title Customs and Usages, 3 C. L. 988.

94. Persons dealing with members of the New York Stock Exchange are presumed to have contemplated that their transactions would be conducted in accordance with the reasonable rules and usages of the exchange. Ling v. Malcom [Conn.] 59 A. 698. A broker who sells stocks for another on the New York stock exchange is bound by the rules and customs of the exchange, and when he guaranties the signature of a corporation to an assignment, he is as between the transfer agent who transferred on a forged assignment and himself primarily liable to the person whose stocks are converted. Jennie Clarkson Home for Children v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 571.

95. A custom is no part of the contract between a broker and his principal unless it appears that they contracted with reference to it. Chambers v. Herring [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. 97. An action for an accounting will lie, wherein the burden of proof is on the broker to show that his trust duties have been performed and the manner of their performance, nor does the fact that intermediate accounts had been rendered deprive the customer of his right to a full and complete account. Haight v. Haight & Freese Co., 92 N. Y. S. 934.

98. Roome v. Robinson, 99 App. Div. 143, 90 N. Y. S. 1055. A broker authorized to sell land at a specified minimum sum is not entitled to commission where he sells for such minimum sum when he might have procured more. Lichtenstein v. Case, 99 App. Div. 570, 91 N. Y. S. 57; Harrison v. Lakeman [Mo.] 88 S. W. 53. Where a broker who has been employed to purchase land for another wrongfully taken title in his own name for the purpose of requiring his principal to pay an advance on the price paid by him, equity will decree him to hold it as trustee ex maleficio and decree a conveyance to the principal on payment to the broker of the price paid by the latter, nor is the broker in such case entitled to any compensation for his services. Harrison v. Craven [Mo.] 87 S. W. 962. A broker who procures another to take an option on certain property, under an agreement by the owner to pay him a commission in case the option is accepted, is not deprived of his right to commission by reason of the fact that he subsequently procures a purchaser for the holder of the option at a price in excess of that which the owner has contracted to accept. Davis v. Weber, 92 N. Y. S. 823.

99. Damages held too remote: Where a broker who has been employed to purchase certain land for his principal wrongfully taken title in his own name and refuses to convey to his principal except for a price in excess of what he paid, the principal cannot recover as damages the in-skill in transacting the principal's business.[1] A broker authorized by his principal to purchase or sell stock is bound to actually sell or purchase the same.[2] If the transaction is not bona fide, the principal can recover margins paid to the broker.[3] The principal can recover damages occasioned by an unauthorized sale of his stocks by the broker,[4] or by the latter's failure to sell when directed.[5] In the former case it is not necessary that the customer should have actually repurchased the stocks wrongfully sold.[6] His measure of damages is the difference between the price for which the wrongful sale was made and what he would have to pay for a repurchase after notice, acting with reasonable promptness.[7] Such damages must be specially pleaded.[8] Where a customer directs a broker to sell certain stock at the market price, the broker is justified in selling at the best price obtainable, though the price had declined subsequent to the order to sell and before it could be executed.[9] The broker before selling stocks purchased on margins where the market price is declining, must give the customer reasonable notice of his intention to sell unless the purchaser keeps the margin good.[10] One of two persons havcrease in the cost of erecting a building over what he would have had to pay had the agent taken conveyance in the name of the principal, where it does not appear that at the time the broker took title the principal had any contract for the construction of the building, since such damages are too remote. Harrison v. Craven [Mo.] 87 S. W. 962.

1. Brokers who obtain insurance for others are bound to exercise reasonable care and skill in making inquiries and obtaining information concerning the responsibility of the insurer with whom they place the risk, and are liable for any loss occasioned by want of such care. 3. Holman v. Goslin, 93 N. Y. S. 126. Under St. Mass. 1890, c. 437, as amended St. 1901, c. 459, a customer of a broker can recover margins and securities deposited for margins unless the transactions were bona fide and the stocks ordered sold or purchased actually sold or purchased. In such an action it is competent for a witness to testify that such was the uniform practice of the broker firm. Allwright v. Skillings [Mass.] 74 N. E. 944. Where a broker does not obey his customer's orders in making actual sales and purchases, but reports to him fictitious transactions, the client may recover from the broker any money or securities deposited as margins or any payments made in settlement of such transactions. Hoogewerff v. Flack [Md.] 61 A. 184.

4. Evidence held to show that defendant's (brokers) wrongfully sold plaintiff's stock in violation of an agreement to give him a designated time within which to make his margins good. Blaine v. Thomas, 92 N. Y. S. 1036.

5. Zell v. Corkran [Del. Super.] 60 A. 699. The terms of pool agreements are not matters of common knowledge so that knowledge thereof can be imputed to purchasers of shares held in a pool so to justify the broker's refusal to sell the same on order of the purchaser. Ridgely v. Taylor, 94 N. Y. S. 1089.

6. To enable a customer to recover damages from his broker for the unauthorized sale of stocks, it is not necessary that the former should have actually repurchased them or have ordered them repurchased. The question is when in the exercise of reasonable diligence and judgment, ought he to have ordered a repurchase if he desired to obtain benefit of a possible future advance in price. In determining when the customer had the first reasonable opportunity to replace the stocks wrongfully sold, his financial inability to do so is not to be taken into consideration, although when he has sufficient means he is entitled to a reasonable time to convert his securities into money with which to repurchase. Ling v. Malcomb [Conn.] 59 A. 698.

7. Where a broker sells a customer's stocks without authority, the measure of damages recoverable by the latter is the excess, if any, over the price realized on the wrongful sale, for which the customer could have repurchased the stocks, after notice of the wrongful sale, had he given an order to that effect, with reasonable promptness, or for which, as the case may be, he did repurchase the same, acting with reasonable promptness, after such notice. In case of the fluctuations of the market price between the day of the conversion and the latest day to which it would have been reasonable to defer a repurchase or the date of a repurchase, if a repurchase be made prior to said last mentioned day, the measure is the excess, if any, over the price obtained where wrongfully sold and the highest market price attained during such intermediate period. Wiggin v. Federal Stock & Grain Co. [Conn.] 59 A. 607; Ling v. Malcomb [Conn.] 59 A. 698.

10. In a suit by a customer against a broker for selling stocks because of the customer's failure to deposit margins on stock purchased on a margin, on a declining a joint account with stockbrokers cannot maintain an action against the broker for an accounting without joining such other person as a party.[11] In a suit by the owner of land against a broker whom he had authorized to sell the land to recover forfeit money deposited by a prospective purchaser with the broker and forfeited by the prospective purchaser because of his failure to consummate the purchase, the purchaser is not a necessary party.[12]

§ 3. Rights and liabilities as to third persons.[13]—The acceptance by the principal of an order for goods taken by a broker constitutes a contract beween the broker's principal and the purchaser.[14] Where a broker representing both parties enters no memorandum of the sale in his book, or such book is not produced, the bought and sold notes together, if they agree, establish the contract between the parties, but if they differ materially, they fail to establish a contract, but a material variance may be explained by a usage of trade.[15] Where a broker deposits money received by him from the sale of another's goods consigned to him, in a bank to the credit of his own account, the bank, if it has notice that such funds in fact belong to the consignor, cannot apply them in payment of a debt owing to it by the broker.[16] In some states the statutes require the payment of a license tax by brokers.[17] A broker who executes orders for another broker is not an agent of a customer of the latter.[18]

§ 4. Compensation and lien.[19] Necessity of contract.[20]—A broker is entitled to compensation only when there is an agreement therefor, either express or implied, and the burden is on him to show such agreement,[21] and by statutes in some states such employment must be in writing.[22] By accepting the services of a broker in effecting a sale, the principal may be bound by an implied contract to pay their reasonable value.[23] Substantial performance of his contract by the broker is a condition precedent to his right to recover compensation.[24] Thus where the ing market, evidence held to show that the defendant gave plaintiff reasonable notice of its intention to sell unless margins were deposited. Foster v. Murphy & Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 47.

Bought and sold notes have been defined to be written memoranda of a sale of goods delivered to the parties thereto by the broker employed to negotiate the sale. Generally, the memorandum delivered to the buyer is the bought note and that delivered to the seller is the sold note, but some authorities hold that the sold note is delivered to the buyer and the bought note to the seller. Evidence held to show that real estate broker found a purchaser at a price satisfactory to the seller and hence entitled to commission. Storer v. Markley [Ind.] 73 N. E. 1081. An agreement to pay a broker a commission on all lands time within which he is authorized to effect a sale is limited, he is not entitled to commission for finding a purchaser after the expiration of such time,[25] or for finding a purchaser willing to purchase on terms other than those offered by the principal,[26] unless such different terms are accepted by the principal.[27] If his right to compensation depends on the happening of certain contingencies, he must show that such contingencies have eventuated.[28] As a general rule, in the absence of a special agreement, a broker who has been employed to find a purchaser of land is entitled to his commission when he has produced a purchaser who is ready, willing and able to purchase on the terms authorized by the owner,[29] or satisfactory to him.[30] Where no price is fixed by the seller, but the broker under his employment produces a purchaser with whom the seller deals and agrees upon a price, the broker is entitled to his commission.[31]

Broker must be efficient producing cause of sale.[32]—A broker is entitled to his commission, if he was the procuring cause in bringing about the sale,[33] even sold by defendant to customers sent by the broker, held to mean such persons as the defendant should sell on information received from the broker. Wineteer v. Jones, 113 Ill. App. 129. Where a contract with a broker provided that "commission or brokerage will be paid only to the one who actually makes and finally completes the sale and has the contract signed," the broker cannot recover where he does not show that a contract was actually signed and a sale consummated. Reichard v. Wallach, 91 N. Y. S. 347. A contract constituting plaintiff agent for the sale of defendants' goods within a certain territory, but not giving him the exclusive agency in such territory, construed and evidence held insufficient to show a right in plaintiff to commissions on sales made by defendant in such territory to which plaintiff's services in no way contributed. It is not sufficient that he furnishes a purchaser who is willing to purchase at a less price, though the owner accepts such lower price. Ball v. Dolan [S. D.] 101 N. W. 719. An agent to whom the owner of land has agreed to pay a commission for making a sale of land "for cash" is not entitled to a commission for making a sale on credit, which the owner declines to accept. though the owner at the time he entered into the contract of sale did not know that the broker was the producing cause of the sale.[34] After negotiations initiated by a broker have practically culminated in a sale, the principal cannot by terminating the agency of the broker deprive him of his commission.[35] If after the broker has abandoned his efforts to sell to a purchaser found by him the owner, or another broker, successfully negotiates a sale to such person, the first broker is not entitled to a commission,[36] unless fraud or bad faith on the part of the principal is shown.[37] Otherwise if the owner sells to one produced by the broker before the latter has discontinued negotiations.[38] A broker who is merely authorized to find a purchaser for another's land is not entitled to a commission for finding a purchaser where he did not notify his principal of the fact until after the principal had sold to another.[39]

Customer produced must be ready, willing and able to purchase.[40]—Under a general contract of employment, a broker who produces a purchaser who is ready, willing and able to purchase on the terms on which the broker was authorized to sell is entitled to his commission, though the owner refuse to consummate the sale [41] or cannot do so because of a defect in his title.[42] The foregoing rule may

Where the broker is not acquainted with the purchaser and did not introduce the latter to the seller, the effectiveness of the broker's instrumentality in bringing about the sale must affirmatively appear if he is to recover commissions. Halterman v. Leining, 90 N. Y. S. 397. Contract of agency construed and an agent held entitled to commission for a sale made in his "territory," though deal was closed by another agent of the seller, it appearing the negotiations were initiated by him. McGeehan v. Gaar, Scott & Co. [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1072. The agent is entitled to his commission if he is the procuring cause of the negotiations which resulted in the sale, even though the agent does nothing more than bring the parties together for the purpose of negotiating, and they are thereafter concluded by the principal person. Broker not entitled to commission where sale made through another broker, though the purchaser sold to one who had been introduced to the grantor by the plaintiff. Hollyday v. Southern Farm Agency [Md.] 59 A. 646. Where a broker has been allowed a reasonable time within which to procure a purchaser, and has failed so to do and the principal in good faith has terminated the agency and subsequently a sale is consummated, the fact that the purchaser is one whom the broker introduced and that the sale was in some degree aided by his previous efforts, does not entitle him to commissions. Donovan v. Weed [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 563. A person who puts property in the hands of an agent to sell does not bind himself perpetually against employing another agent to sell at a less price. Where a broker has sought to induce a purchaser to purchase but could not secure an offer of an amount for which he is authorized to sell, the fact that after his negotiations are broken off, another broker induces the owner to sell to the purchaser produced by the first broker for an amount which was offered through the first broker, does not entitle the latter to commissions. Where the owner of a homestead agrees to pay a broker a commission for selling it and the broker procures a purchaser who is ready, willing and able to purchase on the terms the broker was authorized to sell for, the

be modified in a given case by the specific agreement of the parties.[43] The question of the financial ability of the proposed purchaser to carry out the contract negotiated by the broker arises only where the broker's principal rejects the purchaser, notwithstanding his readiness to enter into a contract of sale with the principal.[44] If the principal accepts the proposed purchaser produced by the broker and enters into a valid and enforceable contract with him, the broker is entitled to his commission, though the sale is not consummated through the fault of the purchaser,[45] or because of his financial inability to perform.[46] In Iowa, though the parties have entered into a valid contract, the broker must show that the financial condition of the purchaser is such that the contract is enforceable against him.[47] A contract of purchase signed by a proposed purchaser and tendered to the vendor for execution by him is prima facie evidence of the purchaser's readiness and willingness broker is entitled to his commission, though the owner's wife refuses to join in the conveyance and for such reason the deal is not closed. Surry v. Whitmore [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1131.

43. Where a broker produces purchasers able, ready and willing to purchase on the terms agreed on, he is entitled to his commission, irrespective of whether the sale is consummated or not, provided his contract did not provide that a commission should be paid only in case a sale was consummated. Norman v. Hopper [Wash.] 80 P. 551. Where the owner agrees to pay a broker "for procuring a customer for her for the property" at a specified price, the complaint in an action by the broker need not allege that the customer was ready, able and willing to purchase, since the contrat was to furnish a customer and not to affect a sale. Lunsford v. Bailey [Ala.] 38 So. 362.

44. Russell v. Hurd, 113 Ill. App. 63. A broker who procures a purchaser for his client's land and with whom the client enters into a valid contract of sale is entitled to his commission, but if the seller rejects the proposed purchaser and the agent claims commission, then he is required to show before he can recover that the proposed purchaser was able and ready to perform his part of the contract. Id. To earn his commission for services rendered in finding a purchaser, when no sale is actually consummated, the agent must either procure a valid obligation to buy and tender it to the vendor, or bring the proposed vendor and purchaser together, so that a contract may be entered into if the owner so elects. If the owner does not accept the purchaser produced, the broker must show that the purchaser was ready, willing and able to purchase on the terms on which broker is authorized to sell. Flynn v. Jordal, 124 Iowa, 457, 100 N. W. 326. If the broker produces a purchaser ready and willing to purchase, and the principal refuses to enter into a contract, the broker must show that the customer is able, as well as ready and willing, not because he undertakes by his contract of employment to guarantee the financial ability of the purchaser, but because he must prove that the failure to make a contract was the fault of the principal and not his own. Alt v. Doscher, 102 App. Div. 344, 92 N. Y. S. 439.

45. Alt v. Doscher, 102 App. Div. 344, 92 N. Y. S. 439; Cody v. Dempsey, 86 App. Div. 335, 13 Ann. Cas. 322, 83 N. Y. S. 899; Bingham v. Davidson [Ala.] 37 So. 738.

46. A broker under a general contract of employment for the sale of real property, who obtains a purchaser satisfactory to his principal, with whom the principal makes an enforceable contract of sale, without being induced so to do by any representations of the broker as to the ability of the proposed purchaser to perform his contract and without any bad faith on the part of the broker, can recover his commissions though without any fault of the principal, the vendee fails to perform solely because of his financial inability to pay for the land purchased at the time of entering into the contract. Alt v. Doscher, 102 App. Div. 344, 92 N. Y. S. 439.

47. Contract must be enforceable: In the absence of a special agreement a broker who has been employed to find a purchaser of real estate in order to be entitled to his commission must show that he found a purchaser who was ready, able and willing to purchase. If the purchaser has entered into a valid contract, the broker to recover must show that the purchaser is in such financial condition that the contract can be enforced against him. McGinn v. Garber, 125 Iowa, 533, 101 N. W. 279. If the owner of land and a proposed purchaser enter into an enforceable contract of purchase and sale, the broker is entitled to his commission, though the sale is never consummated. Flynn v. Jordal, 124 Iowa, 457, 100 N. W. 326.

Exchange of property: The undertaking of a broker to effect an exchange of property is not fully performed, so as to entitle him to his commission, by producing a customer with whom an executory contract was made, but never carried out, unless it is further made to appear that the failure to complete the deal was chargeable to the fault or neglect of the principal. The principal cannot arbitrarily refuse to perform and avoid paying the broker his commission. The contract effected must not only be a valid contract but one the enforcement of which will give him the property, money or other advantage he contracted for. If the purchaser cannot to buy, but not of his ability to do so.[48] Where a broker produces a purchaser, the principal's absolute refusal to treat with him dispenses with the necessity of a tender on the part of the purchaser so as to give the broker a right to his commissions.[49]

Broker must act in good faith towards principal.[50]—To entitle him to compensation, the broker must act in good faith towards his principal,[51] at least as to matters within the scope of his employment.[52] He cannot represent both parties to the transaction without their mutual consent, and if he attempts to do so he forfeits all right to compensation or commission from either.[53] If, however, the principal knew of the broker's agency for another at the time he entered into the contract of employment with the broker, and the principal's interest was in no wise jeopardized thereby, the broker can recover his commissions.[54] A broker who gives a part of the commission he is to receive for making a sale of property to the purchaser does not thereby become the agent of both parties so as to preclude the recovery of his commission from the seller.[55] Where the owner of land employed a broker to sell it and agreed to give the broker all over a stipulated sum for which he might sell the land, the broker on securing a customer who was willing, ready and able to give the owner his price in cash and make a mortgage to the broker for a certain sum, is entitled to a performance by the owner, and on his refusal to convey can recover as damages the profits he would have made on the sale.[56] A broker entitled to compensation only in case a sale is consummated is not entitled to earnest money forfeited by a

A broker to recover commissions for making a sale of real estate must prove an employment by defendant, the rendition of services at their request and that in connection with such employment he acted in good faith toward his principal. Roome v. Robinson, 99 App. Div. 143, 90 N. Y. S. 1055. See supra, § 2. A broker who has undertaken to sell property for the owner thereof is guilty of no misconduct in entering into an agreement with defendant whereby he agrees to pay defendant ½ of his commission if the latter will procure a buyer, nor is he precluded from recovering his share of commission from defendant because of any fraud of defendant in making the sale of which he did not know and did not participate in. Madler v. Pozorski [Wis.] 102 N. W. 892.

52. A broker employed to procure a purchaser, or exchange of property, owned by his principal earns his commission when he has procured and introduced a person who is able, willing and ready to purchase or exchange, and the fact that after introducing such purchaser he made false representations to his principal concerning the property the latter was to take in exchange, does not effect his right to compensation. Nichols v. Whitacre [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 594.

53. Green v. Southern States Lumber Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 670. A real estate broker who is employed by the owner of land to sell it on commission cannot recover his commission for introducing a purchaser, where it appears that he had been employed by the purchaser to purchase the land for him from the owner, and he did not disclose such fact to the owner and the latter did not consent thereto and the broker is guilty of bad faith toward the seller pending the negotiations for the sale. Bunn v. Keach, 214 Ill. 259, 73 N. E. 419. Evidence held not to show such a dual agency as precluded a broker from recovering a commission for performing a contract with defendant. Burr v. Beacon Trust Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 300.

54. Mitchell v. Duke, 134 F. 999. Where a broker, with knowledge of his customers also acts as correspondent of another broker, who buys and sells stocks, etc., on orders of the former, under an arrangement with the latter by which the commissions are divided between them, he is not precluded from recovering commissions on the ground of an undisclosed dual agency, though the transactions are as between him and the custodian and as between him and the other broker conducted in his own name. Where principal requires a certain price for land, and agrees to "protect his agent in his commission," which is to be what he can obtain over that price, it is a breach of contract to sell directly to the prospective buyer obtained by the agent, at the net price. Baker v. Murphy, 105 Ill. App. 151.

prospective purchaser procured by him.[57] A broker may by his conduct estop himself from claiming his commission.[58]

Procuring loan.—A broker who has been employed to procure a loan for another is entitled to his commission when he has found a person ready to loan the specified amount on the property, secured by a trust deed or mortgage constituting a first lien on the property.[59] But not if the proposed lender refuses to consummate the loan because of a false description of the premises in the application, of which the broker had knowledge.[60] If the loan is not consummated, he must show it was through no fault of the person whom he had procured to make it.[61]

Necessity of broker's contract being in writing.[62]—The necessity of the contract between the broker and his principal being in writing, as bearing on his right to recover commissions, is discussed elsewhere in this title.[63]

Actions to recover commissions. Parties.—Where a broker agrees with another that if the latter will find a purchaser for the broker's customer's property, he will divide the commission with him, the broker is entitled to recover the full amount of the commission from his customer on effecting a sale through the intervention of the other broker, since such an arrangement is not an assignment of a part of his claim.[64]

Pleading.[65]—A real estate broker's commission, that has been fully earned under an express contract, may be recovered under the common counts and the contract itself admitted in proof of the particulars of the general right so set up.[66] Where a broker sues to recover commissions under an express contract, he cannot recover on a quantum meruit, though the proof might otherwise warrant a recovery on the latter theory.[67] Facts and not conclusions of law should be pleaded.[68]

Evidence and burden of proof [69]—In an action by a broker to recover commissions, the burden is on the broker to show that the purchaser introduced by Evidence held not to show estoppel to claim compensation. Theobald v. Hopkins, 93 Minn. 253, 101 N. W. 170. Where a broker in reporting the sale of stocks to a customer erroneously and by a clerical mistake reported the sale at a price in excess of the price actually received, the broker in an action by the customer for a balance due pursuant to a sale is not estopped to show that he did not receive the price named in the report. 59. Brillow v. Oziemkowski, 112 Ill. App. 165.

60. A broker is not entitled to commissions for placing a mortgage loan on property where it appears that he as well as the defendant knew that the application which was accepted by a person procured by the broker incorrectly described the land as containing a greater area than it in fact did and the refusal to place the loan was based on such fact, since he is equally responsible with defendant for the rejection of the loan. Shropshire v. Frankel, 91 N. Y. S. 79.

61. A broker who has been employed to procure a mortgage loan on real estate is not entitled to commission where he procured a person to make a loan on the property, provided the title be found ultimately satisfactory, but no loan was consummated and it did not appear that the title was defective. 68. An allegation in an action by a broker to recover commissions that "because of the default of the defendant said premises were not conveyed," does not state the necessary facts to show to the court that the defendant did omit to do anything that she was under obligation to do, so as to entitle plaintiff to a commission where by his contract he was to be entitled to commission only in case a transfer was made. him was able as well as ready and willing to purchase on the prescribed terms.[70] Where a contract between the owner of land and a broker provided that the former would pay the latter a certain sum where a sale was consummated, a contract between the owner and a third person is admissible to show that the sale was consummated.[71] In an action to recover the reasonable value of his services where there was no specific contract as to what his compensation should be, evidence of what was usually paid by others for similar services is admissible.[72] A contract other than that sued on is inadmissible.[73] Cases discussing the sufficiency of the evidence in such actions are referred to in the subjoined notes.[74]

Questions for jury.—Various cases discussing what questions are proper for determination by a jury are referred to in the notes.[75]

Defenses.—An abandonment by the broker as well a termination of his employment by the principal before performance by the broker is matter of defense to an action by the broker for commission, and need not be negatived by broker as a condition precedent to his right of recovery.[76]

In an action by a broker to recover commissions pursuant to an alleged oral contract for the sale to a certain person, a prior written contract between the parties wherein defendant agreed to pay plaintiff or making sales to other persons is not admissible. Evidence held insufficient to show that plaintiffs were the producing cause of a sale so as to entitle them to commission. Dickinson v. Hahn [S. D.] 104 N. W. 247. Evidence held not to show that a broker procured a purchaser, so as to entitle him to commissions. Quinn v. Burton [Mass.] 74 N. E. 942. Evidence held insufficient to justify a verdict that plaintiff in an action to recover commissions, induced the owner to sell to the defendant so as to authorize a recovery in accordance with an agreement to pay if he induced a sale to defendant. Hawes v. Corporation Liquidation Co., 93 N. Y. S. 8. Evidence held sufficient to authorize the submission to a jury of the question of whether or not plaintiff had been employed by defendants to procure a purchaser of a patent right. Parr v. Abbott, 93 N. Y. S. 120. Evidence held to require submission to jury of question of whether broker had complied with his contract so as to be entitled to compensation. Gouge v. Hoyt [Iowa] 101 N. W. 463.

75. On conflicting evidence as to the terms of an oral contract of employment of a broker, the question of what such contract was is for the jury. Schultz v. Eberle [Wis.] 102 N. W. 1055. In an action to recover commission, the question of what the contract between the broker and his principal was and whether there has been a performance by the broker, where the evidence is conflicting, is for the jury. Carter v. Moss [Pa.] 60 A. 310. When the meaning of a contract is obscure and depends on facts aliunde, in connection with the written language, the determination of that meaning may be properly left to the jury. Meaning of clause in contract that broker should be entitled to commission "if title is taken" where plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show it referred to acquisition of title by defendant and not to taking of title by purchaser should have been submitted to jury. Thiel v. Schonzeit, 93 N. Y. S. 383. The question of whether plaintiff has produced a purchaser ready, able and willing to purchase on the terms offered by defendant should be submitted to the jury when the evidence is conflicting. Cox v. Hawke, 93 N. Y. S. 1117. The question of whether the defendant employed the plaintiff, in an action to recover commissions, is one for the jury. Cohn v. James McCreery Realty Co., 102 App. Div. 611, 92 N. Y. S. 143.

76. Moore v. Boehm, 91 N. Y. S. 125.

Matters common to all contracts,[1] or peculiar to contracts for public works,[2] are treated elsewhere.

§ 1. The contract, sufficiency and interpretation.[3]—The usual rules as to the requisites and validity of the contract apply.[4] As in the case of other contracts, illegality, in order to prevent recovery, must infect the contract on which suit is brought.[5]

A bond by which the obligors agree to erect a block of buildings is not strictly an alternative contract, but partakes of that nature.[6]

Interpretation.—As in the case of all other contracts, the intention of the parties, to be gathered from the whole instrument, must control.[7] The usual rules of construction apply.[8] Particular applications thereof will be found in the note.[9]

2. See Public Contracts, 4 C. L. 1089.
3. See 3 C. L. 550.
4. Evidence held to justify submission to jury of question whether defendant had finally agreed to drawing of plans for building to cost in excess of his original limitation. Instructions approved. Hight v. Klingensmith [Ark.] 87 S. W. 138. Conversation between owner and contractor held not to constitute contract to complete work by a certain time. Bolter v. Kozlowski, 211 Ill. 79, 71 N. E. 858. Evidence insufficient to show any employment of plaintiff to prepare plans. Minuth v. Barnwell, 94 N. Y. S. 649. Where blds were invited for work complete, for work with railroad omitted, and for work with fireproofing omitted, and plaintiff submitted proposition to do work for a specified price, with a deduction if the railroad was omitted, and another deduction if the fireproofing was omitted, and the government accepted the proposition with the deduction on account of the railroad, taking no notice of the other proposed deduction, held that what was submitted with reference to fireproofing was ineffectual, and no contract was ever made in reference to it. Conners v. United States, 130 F. 609. Where plaintiffs based claim for amount withheld because of omission of fireproofing on theory that there was specific contract with reference to the amount which could be deducted on that account, held that complaint would be dismissed, but without prejudice to another suit. Contracts by agents: In action by architects to recover for services in drawing plans evidence held not to show any authority in rector to bind vestry by contracting with architects. Rector, etc., Church of Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. Agreement requiring plans to be drawn to the satisfaction of the vestrymen held to restrict authority of rector to bind church. Id. Though the contract was made by defendant as agent for another, a subsequent statement by him to the contractors that he himself was the owner and that he used another's name because he was in bankruptcy, and that he would pay for the work, constitutes an independent oral contract for the performance of the work for defendant according to the terms of the original contract, and having performed, the contractor can recover on it. Mogulewsky v. Rohrig, 93 N. Y. S. 590.

5. The fact that the tenant who furnished labor and materials for repairs uses the building for an unlawful purpose does not deprive him of the right to compensation therefor. Use is collateral to contract for repairs and independent of it. Doyle v. Franks [Kan.] 81 P. 211. Schreiber v. Worm [Ind.] 72 N. E. 852. Repugnant words may be rejected in favor of a construction which makes effectual the evident purpose of the entire instrument. Morrill & W. Const. Co. v. Boston, 186 Mass. 217, 71 N. E. 550. Where clauses are repugnant, the one which essentially requires something to be done to effect the general purpose of the contract itself is entitled to greater consideration than the other, which tends to defeat full performance. Building contract held to require contractor to do the plastering. Id. 9. Owner held to have right to deduct from contract price the amount of a lien filed against premises. Wagner v. St. Peter's Hospital [Mont.] 79 P. 1054. Under a contract whereby plaintiff was to furnish labor in repairing defendant's house and was to be reimbursed and given a certain per cent. in addition, held that defendant was not liable for railroad fares of men living out of town, or for their board, or for increased wages arbitrarily paid to one of them over the amount for which he was hired. Westendorf v. Dininny, 92 N. Y. S. 858. Contract for installing water system in defendant's house and installing a hydraulic ram for the purpose, held to require building of dam to furnish water, such being the construction put upon it by the parties. Carolina Plumbing & Heating Co. v. Hall, 136 N. C. 530, 48 S. E. 810. Contract to deliver lime under which materialman "agrees to begin the delivery of said materials upon five days' notice, and thereupon to deliver the same as rapidly as the work upon said buildings shall require without further notice," requires him to ascertain how much will be required each day, and then to deliver it, and he is not excused from performance because he does not receive formal notice in each instance of the amount required. Merchants' Trust Co. v. Potter, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 510. Provision in contract for clearing railroad right-of-way, cutting cord wood, two feet long, not to "exceed one thousand cords, ricked along roadbed, as required by chief engineer, $1.50," held not to require contractor to cut one thousand cords, but to give him option to cut not to exceed that amount. Eastham v. Western Const. Co., 36 Wash. 7, 77 P. 1051. Where contract for ties to be used in construction of railroad did not refer to any map or plat or designate any route which was to be followed, held that it was open to the construction company to make any reasonable selection of routes between the two termini, and the selection of one instead of another did not constitute such a change in the contract as to release the materialman's surety. American Surety Co. v. Choctaw Const. Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 487. Provision that granite was to be obtained from the quarries of G. & S. and G., "it being the intention of the writer to use both quarries," held to mean that granite could be taken from either "and" being construed to mean "or," and plaintiff's inability to obtain any from the G. quarry was not a breach of the contract, it appearing that sufficient could have been obtained from the other. United Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Broadnax [C. C. A.] 136 F. 351. A contract specifying that the "best quality of imported Portland cement" shall be used is not satisfied by the use of any sound imported Portland cement satisfying the requirements as to tensile strength, fitness and weight. Drainage Com. v. National Contracting Co., 136 F. 780. Where plaintiff's proposal to furnish "all the dimension granite required in the construction of" certain bridge approaches, to be in accordance with the specifications and acceptable to the engineer, was accepted, he was entitled to furnish as much as it would take to complete the contract as approved by the bridge commission, and not only so much as defendant might choose to call for. United Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Broadaux [C. C. A.] 136 F. 351. A contract to complete a certain grading contract partly performed by the assignor, the assignee to have "all compensation therefor hereafter accruing," held not to entitle assignee to ten per cent. of the amount earned at the time of assignment, which had been retained by the other party to the contract in accordance with its terms. Ercanbrack v. Faris [Idaho] 79 P. 817. Contract to furnish and erect all iron work according to plans and specifications prepared by the suppervising architect held not to require the contractor to do brick work and put in concrete called for by such plans. Hayes v. Wagner, 113 Ill. App. 299. In an action for materials furnished and services rendered in designing a statue, where plaintiff testified that he was employed by defendants to prepare models for them and looked to them for payment, and defendants that he merely undertook to submit a model to a committee, his employment by the committee depending upon the acceptance of the model and an agreement on the price, held that an instruction that there was no evidence entitling plaintiff to recover was properly refused. Hodges v. Pike [Md.] 59 A. 178. Instruction confining jury to single question whether plaintiff was to submit his models to the committee held properly refused, since defendants might be liable to pay for the models whether plaintiff secured the commission or not. Id. Where contract to draw plans for building provided "the architect's commission on which at 5 per cent. is not to exceed $350," immediately following which was a provision that equity in certain land to be conveyed to him was given as security for further payment of $250 which sum was to be in full for said plans, held that the last provision controlled the implied provision for compensation by commission. Perkins v. Hanks [Mass.] 74 N. E. 314. Contract further provided that payment was to be made within two years, and that, on its being made, defendant was to reconvey the land deeded to him as security, unless in the meantime he had sold it, as he was authorized to do, in which event the sale should release the defendant. Held that plaintiff, not having sold the land or been paid within two years, was entitled to recover $250. Id. A provision requiring the contractors to cover and protect the work against injury held not to require subcontractors to put in new pipes in different location to replace others which had been damaged after acceptance by reason of the default of other contractors. Cresswell v. Robertson [Mich.] 102 N. W. 963. Provision that a builder shall do all the plumbing work and furnish all the labor and materials at a specified maximum cost, means that he is entitled to that sum provided he does the work and does not lack mutuality because there is no absolute agreement to pay it. No necessity for reforming it. Flitcroft v. Allenhurst Club [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 82. Evidence held to show that parties considered ceilings on eighth floor,

The contract, plans, and specifications are to be read together.[10] The intention governs as to whether work done by the same person under separate proposals shall be regarded as done under a single contract.[11] Conditions precedent to the taking effect of the contract which are specified therein will be presumed to be which had been put up as sample, completed when estimate for ceilings for whole buildings was signed, and that plaintiff was not required by the contract to place a cornice on that floor. New York Metal Ceiling Co. v. City Homes Imp. Co., 88 N. Y. S. 233. In a contract to furnish steel work the phrase "all detail drawings," which were to be furnished by the owner, held not to mean shop drawings and punching sheets, but that contract was complied with by plans furnished. New York Architectural Terra Cotta Co. v. Williams, 102 App. Div. 1, 92 N. Y. S. 808. Contract to perform all the provision of a contract requiring one D. to furnish and place about 100,000 cubic yards of riprapping for a railroad, with a further provision that defendants might be required to furnish not to exceed 300,000 cubic yards if the amount required was increased by the railroad held only to require defendants to furnish the amount required by the railroad under the contract with D. and not to entitle D. to call on them for the balance of the 300,000 cubic yards for use on other contracts. Shanklin v. Brown, 92 N. Y. S. 860. In a contract for the construction of an arch over a driveway, the word "ends" will be construed to mean the faces of the arch as seen by one approaching along the driveway from either direction, or that part of the arch on either side of the driveway which comes nearest to the ground, as the evidence tends to show which was the meaning the parties had in mind when the contract was drawn, and the prices provided for therein for the work may properly be considered in determining in which sense the word was used in the contract. City of Cleveland v. Griffin, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 473. The phrase "acceptable to the engineer" in a contract to furnish granite for the construction of a bridge held unambiguous and hence not open to explanation by parol. United Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Broadway [C. C. A.] 136 F. 351.

Contracts for drilling wells: Contract for drilling well, to be paid for by the foot, held to require only payment of one-third of the price of the completed 100 feet, and not one-third of the whole contract price on completion of the first 100 feet. Ferguson Lumber Co. v. Little Rock Well & Pump Co. [Ark.] 84 S. W. 794. Contract for boring oil-well held to entitle plaintiff to compensation at the specified rate per foot for every foot sunk by him in good faith and with honest intention to carry out contract, notwithstanding work was finally abandoned with defendants consent because of breaking of drill. Cook v. Columbian Oil, Asphalt & Refining Co., 144 Cal. 670, 78 P. 287. Held that it was defendant's duty to furnish and deliver pipe before it could place plaintiff in default for failure to case oil well. Id. Contract for boring artesian well held to mean that contractor's obligation would be complied with whenever well would furnish continuous supply of 25 gallons per minute without regard to its depth. Moore v. Pritchett, 121 Ga. 439, 49 S. E. 292. Provision that company should set pump held not necessarily to imply that it was to transport pump to place where it was to be set up. Harris v. Louisiana Mach. & Wellworks Co., 112 La. 196, 36 So. 320. Contract held not to require plaintiff to insure a permanent supply of water, but it was complied with if there was a sufficient quantity, according to the prescribed test, when the work was completed. Nulton v. Croskey [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 644. Held duty of plaintiff to case well, and instruction erroneous for failure to so inform the jury. Id. Contract held to guaranty that oil well would flow oil out of the opening above the ground. Cox & Co. v. Markham, Jr. & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 375, 87 S. W. 1163.

Contracts for excavating: Where proposals provided that all excavations were to extend at least four feet below the surface and to bed rock, and stated that levels of rock were shown approximately on the plans, but that the bidder must satisfy himself of their accuracy, held that contractor assumed the risk of the depth of excavation and could not recover extra compensation because such levels were inaccurate and it was necessary to go to a greater depth than four feet, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances entitling him to equitable relief. Conners v. United States, 130 F. 609. Contract held to give plaintiff right to charge for sloping in excess of 300 yards. Was not bound to procure defendant's consent to removal of excess, provided it was reasonably necessary to a complete and proper performance of the work, but he would have had no right to insist on its removal against defendant's protest. Dugan v. Kelly [Ark.] 86 S. W. 831. Also had right to remove sloping running back from and behind retaining wall, if necessary. Id. Contractors for sewer held bound to keep trenches free from water at their own expense, so that failure of city to allow extra compensation was not justification for abandonment of the contract. City of Winona v. Jackson, 92 Minn. 453, 100 N. W. 368.

10. Contract for erection of house and stable held an entirety, where contract price included work as a whole, and payments were to be made on account of the whole work as it progressed. First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 46 Misc. 30, 93 N. Y. S. 231.

11. Separate proposals by subcontractor, which were accepted, held to constitute entire contract, particularly as between him and the owner. First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 46 Misc. 30, 93 N. Y. S. 231.

conclusive, and parol evidence is inadmissible to prove others.[12] A recital that persons are joint contractors does not necessarily control their relations.[13]

Fraud, misrepresentations, and mistake are fully treated elsewhere.[14]

§ 2. Performance of contract.[15]—A building contract, like any other, is to be fairly performed according to its terms, and any substantial change, unless authorized, is made at the risk of the contractor.[16] He has no right to substitute his own judgment for the stipulations of the contract, nor can he recover on the basis of full performance where he has willfully and intentionally used inferior and less expensive material.[17] Nor can recovery be had for partial performance where the contract is an entire one.[18] A literal compliance with the terms of the contract is not necessary,[19] but it is sufficient if there has been an honest and faithful performance in all its material and substantial particulars, and no willful departure or omission in essential points.[20] No recovery can, however, be had on the

12. United Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Broadway [C. C. A.] 136 F. 351.

13. A contract executed by a builder and a lumber company on the one part, which recites that they are joint contractors for the building of a house, and that the company, in consideration of the profit which it expects to make on the lumber which it is to furnish for the work, guaranties the completion of the contract, but which does not obligate the other parties to purchase lumber from it, is merely a contract of guaranty. Held invalid because ultra vires. In re Smith Lumber Co., 132 F. 620.

16. Schultze v. Goodstein, 180 N. Y. 248, 73 N. E. 21. Plaintiffs held entitled to agreed compensation for drilling oil well notwithstanding fact that water was not kept out, where contract did not require them to keep it out, and they fully complied with the provisions as to casing and pumping it. Vail v. Freeman, 144 Cal. 356, 77 P. 974. Evidence held insufficient to support contention that plaintiff did not fully perform contract to furnish steel work. New York Architectural Terra Cotta Co. v. Williams, 102 App. Div. 1, 92 N. Y. S. 808. Evidence in action for contract price for drilling well held sufficient to support verdict for plaintiff. Council v. Teal [Ga.] 49 S. E. 806. In action on bond for breach of contract held error to instruct that there was no evidence to sustain a recovery though evidence tended to show that cost of completion would not exceed amount due on the contract, but there was also evidence that the material used did not comply with the requirements, that adjoining property was damaged, and that the work was not completed on time. Leppert v. Flaggs [Md.] 60 A. 450. Under contract for drilling well, held that where work was stopped, not on account of any act of defendant, but because casing had become fast so that work could not proceed, and flowing water had not been obtained, plaintiffs were entitled to no pay. Caruthers v. Cook [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 690. Defendant was under no obligation to permit plaintiffs to dig a new well in a different place, there being no such provision in the contract. Id. Instruction that defendant admitted liability for one well held not such as to have misled jury into believing that he admitted liability as to other. Comer v. Thornton [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 19. Exhibition by contractor to owner of vouchers and receipts for all labor and material, showing them all fully paid for, held sufficient compliance with requirement that he should satisfy owner that there were no outstanding claims which could be made the basis of a lien. Lavanway v. Cannon [Wash.] 79 P. 1117. Evidence in action for failure to furnish railroad ties held sufficient to require the submission to the jury of the question whether plaintiff violated the stipulation of the contract requiring it to transport other ties. American Surety Co. v. Choctaw Const. Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 487.

17. Schultze v. Goodstein, 180 N. Y. 248, 73 N. E. 21. Expert evidence that certain pipes used in plumbing work were preferable to those required by the terms of the contract held properly excluded. Id.

18. Must be substantial performance. Contract to drill oil well through fourth sand for a certain sum per foot held an entire one, and contractor not entitled to recover where tools are lost in hole before the well is through the fourth sand and present an impenetrable barrier to further operations. Caughey v. Parker, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 289. Evidence held not to show acceptance of well as a performance of the contract. Id. Evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff failed to substantially perform, in that the plastering was deficient, imperfect and defective, to defendant's damage. Uldrickson v. Samdahl, 92 Minn. 297, 100 N. W. 5. Whether a contract is divisible depends upon the intention of the contracting parties to be ascertained from the contract itself. Contract to do all necessary excavating for a building at a certain rate per cubic yard of earth, and a certain rate per yard of rock held entire and not divisible. Toher v. Schaefer, 91 N. Y. S. 3.

20. Evans v. Howell, 211 Ill. 85, 71 N. E. 854. Mere technical and important omissions will not defeat a recovery of the contract price. Id. Dugue v. Levy [La.] 37 So. 995. Evidence held to show substantial completion within required time, and theory of substantial performance until full compensation for deviations has been made.[21]

The contract must be performed in a good and workmanlike manner,[22] the question whether this has been done being for the jury.[23] If certain results are guaranteed, no recovery can be had unless they are obtained.[24]

Full performance of the contract may be waived by participation in acts done in disregard of its terms.[25]

The contractor is not responsible for breaches caused by the acts of the owner,[26]

that defects were remedied within reasonable time. Coen v. Birchard, 124 Iowa, 394, 100 N. W. 486. A contract to bore a well is not substantially performed if the diameter contracted for is not adhered to. Instructions erroneous. Connor v. Trapp [Iowa] 104 N. W. 333. Question whether contract for furnishing window screens was substantially performed held for jury, notwithstanding defect in one screen. Burrowes Co. v. Crittenden [Miss.] 37 So. 504. Held that there was some evidence on which to base a finding of substantial performance so as to render it conclusive on appeal. Isetts v. Bliwise [N. J. Law] 60 A. 200. Evidence held to show that there was not sufficient performance of an alleged contract to furnish working plans for the construction of a court house to entitle plaintiffs to recover thereon. Kinney v. Manitowoc County [C. C. A.] 135 F. 491.

21. Evans v. Howell, 211 Ill. 85, 71 N. E. 854; Isetts v. Bliwise [N. J. Law] 60 A. 200; Schultze v. Goodstein, 180 N. Y. 248, 73 N. E. 21. Contractors who failed to construct a free gravel road in accordance with the terms of their contract cannot complain of the action of the court in giving them the option of completing parts of the work according to contract or having part of the price deducted. Board of Com'rs of Laporte County v. Wolff [Ind.] 72 N. E. 860.

22. A good and workmanlike job is one done as a skilled workman should do it. Provision in contract to install heating plant that all work should be done "in a good and workmanlike manner," held to require plaintiff not only to do a good job of pipe fitting, but to put in the apparatus in such manner that it would operate with reasonable success for the purpose intended, and, if necessary, to lower the boiler for that purpose, it was his duty to do so without extra charge. Ideal Heating Co. v. Kramer [Iowa] 102 N. W. 840. In an action for architect's services, evidence insufficient to sustain judgment for defendant, there being a conflict as to whether the plans furnished were workable. Repelye v. Lynch, 92 N. Y. S. 371. Fact that defendant submitted plans to building department and that they were disapproved not controlling, there being a question whether objections thereto were based upon plaintiff's errors and omissions, or could not have been easily obviated. Id.

23. Instructions held not to have taken question from jury. Shultz v. Seibel, 209 Pa. 27, 57 A. 1120.

24. Evidence held conclusive that well did not supply good, clear, pure water according to contract. Connor v. Trapp [Iowa] 104 N. W. 333. Held no excuse for failure of contractor, agreeing to change high temperature heating system to low temperature one, to comply with guaranty to heat the rooms, and effect a saving of fuel, that a flue in the building was too small, and that the building was difficult to heat by reason of its construction, particularly where he had installed the original plant. White v. Von Waffenstein, 94 N. Y. S. 257. One who guaranties that an oil well drilled by him shall be a flowing one cannot recover the contract price where it is not, though the well drilled can be profitably operated by the use of a pump. No evidence to sustain finding of substantial compliance. Cox & Co. v. Markham, Jr. & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 375, 87 S. W. 1163.

25. Defendant held to have waived right to complain that drilling of well was not stopped at his request when water was reached by deferring to opinion of plaintiff's superintendent, permitting him to continue boring, and furnishing additional casing. Council v. Teal [Ga.] 49 S. E. 806. Evidence that water was subsequently obtained at such depth in an adjoining well inadmissible under such circumstances, particularly when plaintiff did not offer to show that it came from same stream. Id. Provision in regard to joint supervision of construction of party wall held waived. Evans v. Howell, 211 Ill. 85, 71 N. E. 854. Where agreement for construction of party wall provided for use of hydraulic mortar, one of the parties cannot avoid paying his proportion of the cost because lime mortar was specified in the contract for its construction and used, where he had notice of the fact in ample time to remedy the mistake. Id.

26. Where failure of defendants to keep full insurance on building during its construction was due to the objection of the contractors, who were chargeable with the expense, and their representations that they had secured sufficient insurance, the contractors are estopped to maintain an action against defendants to recover their loss by fire on the ground of non-performance of the contract. Fransen v. Regents of Education of S. D. [C. C. A.] 133 F. 24. Civ. Code, S. D., § 1287, providing that written contract cannot be altered except by another written contract or an executed oral agreement, does not change the rule. Estoppel expressly recognized by Id., § 1173. Id. Architect employed by state board to superintend construction of building, and local secretary of board represent the board in such a sense that an estoppel in its favor may be created by statements made to them. and the owner is liable to the contractor for damages resulting from his improper interference with the work.[27]

Architects undertaking to superintend the construction of a building are bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence in supervising the work,[28] and are liable to the owner for damages resulting from their failure to do so.[29]

The owner is entitled to offset against the contract price reasonable damages sustained by him for necessary work and materials required to complete defective work,[30] or any damages resulting from the contractor's negligence.[31] So, too, contractors who participate in the engineer's breach of duty and bad faith are liable for the loss and expense reasonably incurred in completing the work in accordance with the contract.[32]

A contractor using cheaper materials than those called for by the contract is liable for the improper profit which he thereby makes.[33]

In the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, one undertaking a contract not involving personal trust or confidence is not bound to himself perform any of the work, or to give his personal attention thereto.[34]

A provision that the owner may reject plans contracted for unless they are satisfactory to him requires him to act in good faith, and he cannot escape liability by rejecting them arbitrarily.[35] A provision that the work shall be done to the satisfaction of the tenement house department means that it must satisfy that department when completed.[36]

Impossibility of performance.[37]—If a party contracts to perform a thing which is possible at the time when the contract is made, he is not excused from

27. The United States is liable for any improper interference with a contractor, the same as an individual would be. Houston Co.'s Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 724. 30. Defects in work done by subcontractors. Beckwith & Quackenbush's Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 295. Evidence in action to enforce mechanic's lien for balance due on contract held to sustain finding that owner was damaged by use of poor material and workmanship in excess of amount unpaid. Fletcher v. Sandusky, 26 Ky. L. R. 1232, 83 S. W. 644. Where subcontractor failed to replace foundations for division walls of reservoir blasted out with concrete, held that he was liable to contractor for actual cost of doing so, but not at price which contractor was to receive for other concrete work. Hely v. Fred Hoertz & Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 644, 82 S. W. 402. Jury may allow deductions. Shultz v. Seibel, 209 Pa. 27, 57 A. 1120.

31. An admitted liability by a contractor for injury to a steam heating system caused while at work in a public building in which the system is located is a valid set-off against a balance due him on account of the work. McClure v. Lorain County Com'rs, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 445.

32. Guild v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 137 F. 369.

33. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co., 136 F. 780. Contractor is estopped to say, when sued for the return of his resulting improper profit, that the material furnished was as good as the other. Portland cement used in public drainage work. Id. It is no defense that the contractor lost money (Id.), nor that the contract was executed (Id.).

34. Contract to bore well does not involve personal trust and may carry it out through workmen over whom he places a superintendent. Council v. Teal [Ga.] 49 S. E. 806.

35. Must be some substantial fault in the work itself rendering it unsatisfactory. Cann v. Rector, etc., Church of Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. Where plans were to be prepared under the direction of and to the satisfaction of the vestrymen, held that they had a right to reject them in good faith on the ground that they called for too expensive a building, where architects failed to ask any information as to the desired cost. Id. Could not reject them on ground that building prices were unreasonable, and that it would be expedient to postpone building. Id. Evidence held not to show bad faith, and hence presumption was that rejection was in good faith. Id.

36. Contract to put up fire escapes. A production of their certificate entitled plaintiff to recover, though escapes were not in accordance with the law when the contract was made, which had been changed pending the work. McManus v. Annett, 91 N. Y. S. 808.

37. See 3 C. L. 552.

performance because it is thereafter rendered impossible by act of God.[38] There can, however, be no recovery where performance is impossible within limits legally permissible to the parties.[39] In a verbal contract where there is no guaranty that a particular result will be accomplished, and from the nature of things such accomplishment may be impossible, the law implies a condition that both parties shall become excused from their obligations when it becomes reasonably certain that a continuance would be useless.[40]

A contractor who, through his own negligence, brings the work which he contracts to perform into such a condition that he is unable to complete it and abandons it, is liable for the loss thereby inflicted upon the owner, including the amount reasonably expended in the effort to minimize such loss.[41] So, too, the contractor is excused where further performance is rendered impossible by the acts of the owner.[42]

Destruction of subject-matter.[43]—There is an implied contract on the part of the owner of a building on which repair work is to be done that it will continue to exist until such work is completed.[44] Hence, if it is destroyed before that time, both parties are excused from further performance,[45] and the contractor is entitled to recover for the amount of contract work done which, at the time of the destruction, had become so far identified with the structure that, but for such destruction, it would have inured to the owner as contemplated by the contract.[46]

§ 3. Modification of contract, and changes in plans and specifications.[47]—A written contract may be modified by a subsequent parol agreement of the parties,[48] but unless specially authorized to do so, the architect or engineer in charge of the work has no authority to make such modifications.[49] Changes directed by the supervising architect, acting as the owner's agent, are binding on the latter.[50]

38. Not relieved from completion of bridge within specified time because of freshet. Phoenix Bridge Co.'s Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 492.

39. Where a contract for putting in wells and a system of waterworks contemplated a source of supply which the town had no legal authority to use, refusal to perform did not subject the town to damages, performance being impossible within legal limits. Smith v. Town of Stoughton, 185 Mass. 329, 70 N. E. 195.

40. Contract to drill well held subject to implied condition that performance should be excused in case its actual completion became impossible. Poland v. Thomaston Face & Ornamental Brick Co. [Me.] 60 A. 795. Evidence insufficient to show that plaintiff guarantied a certain quantity of water and was to have no pay unless it was obtained. Id.

46. Young v. City of Chicopee, 186 Mass. 518, 72 N. E. 63. Plaintiff agreed to repair bridge for defendant under contract that his compensation should be at a certain rate per thousand feet of lumber used and that no work should be begun until material for at least half the repairs should be upon the job. He distributed lumber along bridge and had used part of it when bridge and all the lumber was burned. Held that he could recover for the lumber which had been used but not for that which had not been. Id. Contractor may recover pay at the contract price for the proportion of the work already done. Halsey v. Waukesha Springs Sanitarium [Wis.] 104 N. W. 94.

48. Changes as to manner of payment held to have been made for valuable consideration. Guthrie v. Carpenter, 162 Ind. 417, 70 N. E. 486. A provision in a contract with an architect that no charges for extra compensation shall be made unless previously agreed upon in writing does not prevent parties from modifying contract or making a further contract by parol. Ritchie v. State [Wash.] 81 P. 79. In determining whether this was done, jury may take into consideration the terms and provisions of the written contract between the parties. Id.

49. Is not the general agent of the owner and has no power to change the plans of the work, or the terms of the contract. Particularly when changes result to detriment of contractor. Fontano v.

Under a provision that no alteration shall be made except upon a written order of the engineer, who shall also compute its value, the production of such order is a condition precedent to recovery for alterations, in the absence of proof of a waiver or proof that plaintiff was fraudulently lured into proceeding without it.[51] Such provisions are for the benefit of the owner, and may be waived by him.[52]

In case of a substitution by agreement of materials of lesser value for those specified in the contract, the owner is entitled to a deduction of the actual difference of value in the absence of anything to the contrary in the contract.[53] In a country where marble is common, no allowance will be made for its use in the absence of a showing that its cost was in excess of the best quality of the stone specified in the contract.[54]

§ 4. Extra work.[55]—The contractor is ordinarily entitled to recover the reasonable value of extra work or material in excess of that required by the contract, and ordered or accepted by the owner or by his authorized agent.[56]

Extra compensation cannot be recovered for work required by the contract[57] or incidental thereto,[58] or for extra work made necessary by the acts of the contractor.[59]

Robbins, 22 App. D. C. 253. A provision that he will furnish materials under the direction and to the satisfaction of the architects and in accordance with the plans, does not authorize such changes. Id. Where contract provides that marble work is to commence when walls are up and roof on, architects held to have no power to require him to commence work sooner. Id. Engineer held to have no authority to make parol modifications of written contract by making allowances for loss or damage resulting from doing work for which the price was specifically fixed. 52. A provision that alterations should be made on the written order of the architects, and the value of the work added or omitted computed by them and added to or deducted from the contract price. Waived by making changes by agreement without reference to architects. Hohn v. Shideler [Ind.] 72 N. E. 575.

56. Subcontractor excavating for reservoir held only bound to excavate to required depth, and not to remove loose rock and level bottom of excavation (Hely v. Hoertz & Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 644, 82 S. W. 402), nor to construct or leave foundations for columns to support cover (Id.). Where a subcontractor rejected materials, but the principal contractor thereafter used them, they were outside the contract with the materialman, and the latter has a claim for unliquidated damages for their use. Wilson v. Dietrich [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 251. Where the officer in charge of bridge construction advises or orders the contractor to put in a temporary "lift-span" to meet the exigency of the unexpected opening of navigation, his action is not obligatory on the contractor, who if he performs, cannot recover the extra expense to which he has been put. Officer had no authority. Phoenix Bridge Co.'s Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 492. Claimant allowed for certain extra work done by order of the officer in charge over his protest. Items in regard to which he made no protest disallowed. McFerran's Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 441.

57. Under contract to excavate for dam which required materials to be deposited in the manner and at the places designated by engineer, subcontractor held not entitled to extra compensation for depositing material on embankment in accordance with engineer's directions. Kearney v. Coleman, 94 N. Y. S. 206. Evidence held insufficient to entitle plaintiff to compensation for any extra work above contract price for excavating. Id. Held to be duty of subcontractor undertaking to excavate for reservoir to prevent caving of walls before completion of his work, and hence he was not entitled to extra compensation for removing earth which slid into excavation from the walls. Hely v. Hoertz & Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 644, 82 S. W. 402. Where the contract provides that the total cost of the work shall not exceed a specified sum, including cost of all changes and alterations required by the architect, no recovery can be had for extra work rendered necessary by such changes, where it does not appear that the architects had authority to make changes affecting the price, and the fact that the extra work imposed was unreasonable or unfair is not pleaded. Richard v. Clark, 43 Misc. 622, 88 N. Y. S. 242.

58. Although the specifications do not provide for it. As for pumping done in connection with excavation. Sentilhon v. New York, 92 N. Y. S. 897.

59. No allowance made for cost of tinting walls where it was made necessary by

Provisions that no claim shall be made for extra work unless the same shall have been furnished on the written order of the architect or other person in charge of the work,[60] and approved by the owner or his agent,[61] or unless the sum to be paid therefor shall first have been determined in a specified manner,[62] are valid and binding and will be enforced. They are ordinarily held not to apply to new work specifically contracted for, and not done under or in pursuance of the original contract.[63] In some states they are regarded as applying only to work concededly not within the contract, and not to changes and alternations intended to be covered by it.[64]

Such provisions may be waived,[65] but will not be deemed to have been in the absence of clear and satisfactory evidence showing such to have been the intention of the parties, or showing an estoppel in pais.[66]

§ 5. Delay in performance.[67]—The contractor is not liable for delays caused by the acts or omissions of the owner,[68] or where the latter consents to an extension discoloration of plaster owing to improper manner in which it was put on. McFerran's Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 441.

60. Contractor held not entitled to recover for work not ordered by town board, though done under direction of engineer. People v. Snedeker, 94 N. Y. S. 319. Extra work as used in contract held to include all work necessitated by change of plans. Id.

61. Under provision that claims must be "authorized in writing by the supervising architect under the approval of the secretary of the treasury," there can be no recovery for extra work not approved by the secretary, though ordered by the government superintendent, with the knowledge of the supervising architect, and of benefit to defendants. Hyde's Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 649.

62. And indorsed on contract. Davis v. La Crosse Hospital Ass'n, 121 Wis. 579, 99 N. W. 351.

63. Provision that no allowance shall be made unless notice is served on the owner and his consent in writing obtained. Shultz v. Seibel, 209 Pa. 27, 57 A. 1120. Question whether work was new work and whether defendant agreed to have it done held for the jury. Id. Evidence held to clearly establish extent of time employed in extra work, and hence, if book of original entries in regard thereto was incompetent, its admission was harmless. Id. A provision that allowance shall be made only for such extra work as shall have been furnished under the written order of the chief of construction does not apply to work done under a new and different contract containing no such provision. Where plaintiff contracted to do exterior work only, does not apply to interior work thereafter done by direction of defendant or its duly authorized agent. Stubbings Co. v. World's Columbian Exposition Co., 110 Ill. App. 210.

64. Not necessary to allege demand and refusal of certificate. Langley v. Rouss, 94 N. Y. S. 108. The question whether the alleged extra work was within the terms of the contract is for the jury. Where contract is ambiguous. Id.

65. Davis v. La Crosse Hospital Ass'n, 121 Wis. 579, 99 N. W. 351. Provision requiring written order of engineer held for benefit of owner, and could not be waived by engineer. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Jolly Bros. & Co. [Ohio] 72 N. E. 888. A provision that compensation for extra work and materials shall be estimated at the rates prescribed in the contract for similar materials. Where plaintiff furnished items on defendant's oral request without such estimate, he was entitled to recover their reasonable value only. Kilby Mfg. Co. v. Hinchman-Renton Fire Proofing Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 957. Requirement of written order waived by ratification of verbal order of architect. Cronin v. Still [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1074. Where plaintiff orally furnished certain items at defendants oral request, a part of which the latter admitted were extras, and some of which it paid. Kilby Mfg. Co. v. Hinchman-Renton Fire Proofing Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 957. Where the work is performed on an oral order of a duly authorized subordinate and accepted by the owner. Acceptance equivalent to ratification of act of agent giving it. Stubbings Co. v. World's Columbian Exposition Co., 110 Ill. App. 210.

66. Performance of small amount of extra work without regard to provision held not a waiver. Davis v. La Crosse Hospital Ass'n, 121 Wis. 579, 99 N. W. 351.

67. See 3 C. L. 554.

68. Held not entitled to make deductions provided for in contract where architect admitted that delay was chargeable to owner. Curry v. Olmstead [R. I.] 59 A. 392. Allegation that work was delayed at plaintiff's request held to state good defense. Guthrie v. Carpenter, 162 Ind. 417, 70 N. E. 486. In action for breach of contract to do plastering, in which plaintiff alleged that he was prevented from performing by defendant, and defendant counterclaimed for damages for failure of plaintiff to do the work when ordered and without delay in accordance with his contract, and for damages resulting from his having to have others do the work, held that requested charge that plaintiff, to recover, must have performed the work so as not to delay the completion of the house was properly refused as a variance. Schergen v. Baerveldt Const. Co., 108 Mo.

of time.[69] So, too, he is excused where he is enjoined from proceeding with the work.[70]

Delay is not excused because of a failure of the railroad company to deliver material ordered, where the owner is not responsible therefor,[71] nor because there are not a sufficient number of days within the time fixed on which the temperature is sufficiently high to permit the work to be done under the terms of the contract,[72] nor does a provision authorizing an extension in case of a strike occurring through no fault of the contractor entitle him to an extension because of a strike for which he is himself to blame.[73] Where the duty to complete a building at a certain time is subject to several enumerated contingencies, a delay cannot be held to constitute a breach in the absence of a showing that none of such contingencies occurred.[74] So long as the contractor continues to endeavor to fulfill the contract and complete the building in good faith, the owner is under no obligation to take charge of it and complete it himself for the purpose of lessening the amount of damages he may claim for delay.[75] Whether the delay was excusable is a question of fact.[76]

Permitting a performance after the time fixed by the contract has expired is a waiver of the right to plead the delay as a defense in an action for the agreed price,[77] but is not a waiver of the right to counterclaim for any actual damage suffered by reason of such delay.[78]

A provision that no extra time shall be allowed on account of delays unless written notice thereof shall be given when they occur is valid and will be enforced,[79]

App. 262, 83 S. W. 281. Requested charge in general terms presenting the carelessness of plaintiff to the jury for consideration, and requiring it to find whether the prompt completion of the house was endangered held properly refused as foreign to the issues. Id. Charge that defendant had a right to expect from plaintiff a prompt and strict performance of his duty properly refused. Id. Instructions constituting mere delay, whether justified or inexcusable, and irrespective of its occasion, a ground of recovery by defendant, held properly refused as emphasizing matters not in evidence, and seeking to exclude elements properly to be considered in computing plaintiff's damages. Id.

69. Evidence held to show extension. Coen v. Birchard, 124 Iowa, 394, 100 N. W. 48. Plaintiff held to have consented to extension of time obtained by defendant by continuing work with knowledge thereof. United States v. Guerber, 124 F. 823.

70. Injunction against both city and contractor. Webb Granite & Const. Co. v. Worcester [Mass.] 73 N. E. 639. Contractor does not lose any rights against the city by failure to seek a modification of the injunction permitting him to proceed. Id.

72. A provision that no paving was to be done on any day when the temperature was below 35 degrees, and the fact that there were not 60 days when the temperature was above 35 degrees between the time of commencing the work and that specified for its completion. 75. Leghorn v. Nydell [Wash.] 80 P. 833.

76. Whether the contractor was guilty of inexcusable delay after dissolution of the injunction, whether delay was caused by the city, or whether the delay had made the expense of continuing the work too great and burdensome to require the parties to proceed under the contract, were questions of fact in an action to recover on the contract. Webb Granite & Construction Co. v. Worcester [Mass.] 73 N. E. 639.

77. Allowing contractor to put in elevator after agreed date. Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Varick Realty Co., 43 Misc. 645, 88 N. Y. S. 412.

78. Allowing contractor to put in elevator after agreed date does not waive right to counterclaim for damages resulting from tenant's refusal, pursuant to terms of lease, to pay rent until elevator was installed where plaintiff had knowledge of lease. Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Varick Realty Co., 43 Misc. 645, 88 N. Y. S. 412.

79. Unless written notice shall be given to the architect at the time when they occur, and that he shall then pass upon them and may make an allowance of additional time. Where contract provided for stipulated damages in case of delay if architect certified that work could have been completed on time, architect had no right, in certifying as to when it could have been completed to consider any delay for which no notice was given or allowance made. Davis v. La Crosse Hospital Ass'n, 121 Wis. 579, 99 N. W. 351. Subcontractor held not entitled to extension on account of strike where he failed to give required notice and make application in the absence of fraud or wrong equivalent thereto, or mutual mistake in the execution, or a clear showing of waiver.[80]

The contractor is entitled to recover the increased cost of the work caused by delay on the part of the owners.[81] There seems to be a conflict of authority as to whether a provision authorizing an extension of time precludes a recovery by the contractor of damages for delay.[82] The question of liquidated damages is treated elsewhere.[83]

§ 6. Termination or concellation of contract.[84]—The contract may, of course, be terminated by mutual consent.[85] An agreement that an existing contract between the parties is abrogated and that all their rights thereunder shall cease includes all rights of action growing out of such contract and operates as a release.[86]

By statute in Louisiana the owner may cancel the contract at pleasure,[87] but in such case he must pay the contractor for all expenses incurred and all labor done, and, in addition thereto, all damages resulting to the contractor, such as his loss of profits.[88]

A provision authorizing the owner to terminate the contract at pleasure precludes a recovery of damages by the contractor for a refusal to allow him to perform.[89]

One who makes an excusable mistake in the amount of his bid may maintain a suit in equity for its rescission and the recovery of a deposit made by him as a guaranty that he would enter into the contract if his bid was accepted.[90] therefor. Miller v. Norcross, 92 App. Div. 352, 87 N. Y. S. 56. Failure to give required notice held forfeiture of right to extension. Curry v. Olmstead [R. I.] 59 A. 392. The city engineer had no authority to suspend work until the weather was favorable, without specifying the number of days; nor could he grant a "reasonable time" in which to complete the work, when the weather became favorable, where the contract provided that no allowance would be made for additional time unless the contractor should be restrained from working by a written order of the city engineer, and then only for the number of days stated in the order. Where delayed by failure of owner to have building ready, may recover the increased cost of the work caused by an increase in wages. Stubbings Co. v. World's Columbian Exposition Co., 110 Ill. App. 210. In such case the contractor need not abandon the work, but may complete it and then sue for damages. Id.

82. A provision authorizing the chief of construction to extend the time for completing the work in case delays are caused by other contractors, and making his decision final and binding as to all controversies under the contract, does not give him authority to pass upon the question of the resulting damages to the contractor, or preclude the latter from recovering therefor. Stubbings Co. v. World's Columbian Exposition Co., 110 Ill. App. 210. Provision for an extension for delay due to the fault of the architects or owners precludes a recovery of damages by the contractor for such a delay. Richard v. Clark, 43 Misc. 622, 88 N. Y. S. 242.

85. Contract whereby plaintiff agreed to do certain brick work for defendant for 5 per cent. of the cost of the labor held rescinded by later contract, which was the result of mutual dissatisfaction with the original one, whereby it was agreed that defendant was to let the contract to the lowest responsible bidder. Plaintiff not entitled to return to original contract where defendant rejected all bids and completed the work himself, he not being the lowest bidder. Hughes v. Brennan Construction Co., 24 App. D. C. 90. Under a provision that the contract may be terminated by written notice on certification by the architect that the work has been abandoned, a written certificate from the architects is not necessary. § 7. Completion by owner or third person.[91]—Building contracts generally provide for completion of the work by the owner in the event of its abandonment by the contractor,[92] or by the contractor in the event of abandonment by a subcontractor.[93] In such case he is entitled to deduct from the contract price the reasonable costs and expense necessarily incurred by him in so doing.[94] The price agreed to be paid for the completion of the work is not the reasonable cost thereof, where the agreement requires the satisfaction of all liens filed under the former contract.[95] The value of materials delivered but not used, and extra work done by the original contractor should also be deducted.[96] A provision in the contractor's bond giving the surety the right, in case of default, to assume the contract and sublet or complete the same, provided it is done in accordance with the contract, is valid, and the surety may elect to complete the contract, stand on the terms of the bond, or voluntarily pay any damages resulting from the principal's default.[97] In case it elects to complete the work, it assumes all defects of the principal's work, together with inferior materials used, and is entitled to the benefits of the contract from the time of default, together with any sum which may then be due the principal.[98]

§ 8. Architect's and other certificates of performance, and arbitration of disputes.[99]—Where the contract provides that payments shall be made only on the written certificate of the engineer or architect that the work has been performed, its production is a condition precedent to the right of recovery.[1] Such a provision will, however, be deemed and construed to embody the condition that the Complaint alleging facts and that contractor promptly notified board having charge of the work of the mistake, and that contract was let to next highest bidder held to state cause of action. Id.

92. Where defendant agreed to retain from the contract price for painting her house an amount sufficient to pay plaintiff for materials sold to the contractor and used in the work, and to pay it to plaintiff when the work was completed, plaintiff was entitled to complete the work on the contractor failing, though his own fault, to do so. Bates v. Birmingham Paint & Glass Co. [Ala.] 38 So. 845. Defendant, having refused plaintiff's offer to do so is liable to it for the amount due it for materials, not exceeding the balance due the contractor, less the sum reasonably necessary to complete the work. Id. Where contractor who undertook to build levee was granted indefinite extension of time by chief engineer, and latter subsequently placed additional forces on work, not on account of contractor's negligence but because of unforseen contingency, the contract giving him no such right, and the contractor was induced to continue work by express statement that he would be paid for all work he might perform, held that levee board could not charge him more than the reasonable value of the work performed by the engineer, and not the entire cost of such work, if unreasonable. Board of Levee Com'rs for Yazoo & Mississippi Delta v. Short [Miss.] 38 So. 330. May adopt any methods and means reasonably necessary, and need not follow plans and specifications. City of Winona v. Jackson, 92 Minn. 453, 100 N. W. 368. Damages held sufficiently proven. Id.

93. Where, on default of the subcontractor, the contractor construes the contract as authorizing him to complete the work and deduct the cost of the work from the contract price, notifies the subcontractor of his intention to do so, and does so with the subcontractor's acquiescense, he cannot deny the right of the latter to the difference between the contract price and the cost of completion. Not on theory that, since contract was an entire one, there can be no recovery for a partial performance. Asbestos Mfg. Co. v. Burns, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 84. No notice or hearing need be given before making a decision,[14] nor is any particular form of certificate necessary,[15] though a certificate that the contractor

11. Gross mistakes imply bad faith only when, all the circumstances duly considered, they cannot be reconciled with good faith, and then they necessarily imply it. Guild v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 137 F. 369; Electric Fireproofing Co.'s Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 307. Instructions as to mistakes held proper, and requests as to inspection, etc., properly refused. Guild v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 137 F. 369. Evidence held to show mistakes so gross as to imply bad faith in supervision and acceptance of work under contract for construction of sewer. Id. There being a conflict in the evidence, defendant's request for directed verdict held properly refused. Id. Report can only be set aside for fraud, or for such gross mistakes as imply bad faith or a failure to exercise an honest judgment. United States v. Venable Const. Co., 124 F. 267. Certificate in pursuance thereof is binding upon the parties in the absence of fraud, or of such palpable mistake as prevents the architect from the exercise of his judgment on the matter submitted to him. White v. Abbott [Mass.] 74 N. E. 305. Award cannot be set aside for mere error of judgment as to the law or facts, in the absence of fraud or misconduct, or a palpable mistake of fact appearing on the face thereof. Heidlinger v. Onward Const. Co., 44 Misc. 555, 90 N. Y. S. 115. Notwithstanding a provision that the decision of the engineer in charge as to quantity and quality shall be final, his measurements stopping at the perimiter of the brickwork of a tunnel are not final where it is necessary that the rock excavation be slightly larger, and the contractor is entitled to be paid for the amount of rock necessarily excavated. Beckwith & Quackenbush's Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 295. Nor is his certificate of measurement of brickwork conclusive, where he arbitrarily assumes its thickness instead of measuring it. To be paid for by the foot. Id. The provision in a contract that the parties thereto shall be bound by the final estimate of the engineer does not, in Ohio, deprive a court of justice of jurisdiction in a suit involving the proper construction of the contract, or the correctness of the engineer's estimate thereunder. City of Cleveland v. Griffin, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 473.

12. White v. Abbott [Mass.] 74 N. E. 305. Claim of the contractor for services in making the arrangements and superintending the carrying on of the work after abandonment by the subcontractor held within architect's jurisdiction. Id. Provision that increased or decreased compensation resulting from changes in plans to the interest of the government should be determined by board of naval officers held not to refer to changes arising out of unseen necessities involving a mutual mistake of fact. Changes because lumber was not fit for fireproofing. Conners v. United States, 130 F. 609.

13. Heidlinger v. Onward Const. Co., 44 Misc. 555, 90 N. Y. S. 115.

14. Norcross v. Wyman, 187 Mass. 25, 72 N. E. 347. A provision that the architects shall have the sole interpretation of their drawings and specifications and that their decision shall be final and binding on both the owner and the contractor authorizes them to adopt such legal principles as they honestly believe to be applicable, and to act on such evidence as they choose to receive. Id. Need not take testimony of witnesses in determining whether the contract has been completed. Fact that owner had not completed examination of bulding held no excuse for delay in furnishing certificate. Heidlinger v. Onward Const. Co., 44 Misc. 555, 90 N. Y. S. 115.

15. Under a contract requiring an estimate to be given by the architects for 85 per cent. of work and material in place, and providing that payments shall be made on written certificates of the architects. Certificates stating that contractors are entitled to a payment according to the contract in a certain sum held sufficient. Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Peterson, 124 Iowa, 599, 100 N. W. 550. Mere "O. K." indorsements on bills held sufficient. Id. The architect's determination of the amount to be added to or deducted from the contract price on account of changes may be made separately and embodied in a written certificate as to the amount, or it may be embodied in the certificate as to the balance due the contractor. Heidlinger v. Onward Const. Co., 44 Misc. 555, 90 N. Y. S. 115. The same is true of a certificate as to the amount of damages suffered by either party from the delay of the other. Id. Contract by city for construction of sewers provided that city might, if it became dissatisfied therewith, proceed to complete the work, and the expense of so doing should be allowed to it by the contractors in accordance with the decision of the city engineer, which should be final. Contingency arose, and the city did some work and then relet contract for completion. Held that report of engineer showing amount of work done and materials furnished by persons to whom contract was relet, and showing on its face that it referred only to relations between city and them, was not a decision within the meaning of the contract, since it did not refer to work done by city. City of San Antonio v. Marshall & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 315. Certificate of engineer is entitled to final payment should specify the amount due him.[16] The fact that part of the certificate is void does not invalidate the rest, where it is several, and is not so connected with the rest as to affect the justice of the case.[17]

The owner cannot revoke the authority granted by the contract unless authorized to revoke the contract as a whole.[18] A provision making payment for materials conditional on their approval by the architect is not waived by a further provision that payment may be made in advance of delivery.[19]

A provision for arbitration in case either party is dissatisfied with the decision of the architect as to any matter left to him cannot be relied on to defeat a recovery, where no demand for arbitration is made until the trial of the action.[20]

§ 9. Acceptance.[21]—The acceptance of the work by the owner may be a waiver of defects in performance,[22] provided it is such an acceptance as is contemplated by the contract,[23] and he has knowledge of all the facts and circumstances.[24]

The owner does not, by paying the contract price and going into possession, lose his right to recover damages for defective construction.[25] Part payment is not a waiver of delay in performance, where the owner retains enough of the consideration to cover the amount of liquidated damages claimed by it for such delay,[26] nor is the fact that the owner used the building before it was accepted a waiver of damages for delay already accrued.[27] that he had accepted certain specified clearing work held, conclusive though it did not state in the language of the contract, that the work had been fully performed according to the provisions of the contract. Eastham v. Western Const. Co., 36 Wash. 7, 77 P. 1051.

21. See 3 C. L. 557.

22. Held waiver. Burke v. Coyne [Mass.] 74 N. E. 942. Where window frames as constructed by a subcontractor have been approved by the owner and made a part of the building without objection either on the part of the owner or the architect, the owner cannot defend on the ground that they were not constructed according to plans which the subcontractor has never seen. Toan v. Russell, 111 Ill. App. 629. Plaintiff held entitled to recover for architect's services in preparing plans and specifications, where defendants admitted that they employed him to make an estimate, and that plaintiff furnished the plans which they kept until the commencement of the action without protest and never prior to that time contested his employment, and the only reason that the plans were not used was that defendants decided not to build for lack of funds. Adamo v. Blohm, 97 App. Div. 629, 89 N. Y. S. 644. Evidence insufficient to show that plaintiff copied defendants' plans. Id. Where the original plans were filed with the building department, the fact that no detailed specifications or plans showing changes afterwards made were filed does not defeat the contractor's right to recover the contract price, where the completed work is approved by the department, and the owner enjoys the benefits of the work and material furnished. Nothing to show that builder agreed to file them, and architect assumed duty of filing originals. Zwerdling v. Congregation Adas Le Israel, 92 N. Y. S. 360.

23. Acceptance of government work without final inspection held not such acceptance as contemplated by the contract, and hence did not relieve contractors from liability for defective work by subcontractors. Beckwith & Quackenbush's Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 295.

24. Evidence held to justify submission to jury of question whether defendant had accepted certain plans knowing that they called for a building to cost in excess of his original limitation. Hight v. Klingensmith [Ark.] 87 S. W. 138. Retention of plans by rector and fact that picture of proposed building was framed by vestrymen and hung in vestry, held not an acceptance of plans, in absence of showing that they knew what the cost of such a building would be. Cann v. Rector, etc., Church of Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994.

26. 27. Lawrence County v. Stewart Bros. [Ark.] 81 S. W. 1059.

§ 10. Payment.[28]—Where an architect is to receive a percentage on the actual cost of the building, payments to be made from time to time as the work progresses with final payment at a stipulated time after the completion of the plans and specifications, he is not entitled to a lien until after the completion of the work, though the time fixed for final payment has elapsed.[29]

Where the contract provides for a payment when the work reaches a certain stage, and that the remainder of the contract price shall not be paid until the work is completed, there is, after the first payment and before the completion of the work, nothing due the contractor which can be reached by garnishment.[30]

The owner cannot take advantage of a provision that the last payment shall not be due until a permanent loan has been placed upon the building where he is solely at fault for not having obtained it.[31]

The usual rules as to compromise and settlement apply.[32] The acceptance of the contract price without protest does not preclude the recovery of compensation for extra work, where the items thereof were not the subject of discussion or contention in the settlement of the amount due.[33]

§ 11. Subcontracts.[34]—The owner cannot recover from a subcontractor for injuries resulting from his failure to perform his contract in accordance with the specifications, there being no privity of contract between them.[35]

A subcontractor who is prevented from completing his contract because of a default on the part of the principal contractor and the action of the owner in untaking the completion of the work, may recover against the owner on a quantum meruit, where he has substantially performed his contract.[36] Equities existing between the subcontractor and the principal contractor cannot, in such case, be availed of by the owner.[37]

The contractor and not the owner is responsible for defective work done by a subcontractor,[38] and a contractor paying subcontractors before the final acceptance of the work provided for by the contract does so at his own risk.[39]

Subcontracts generally provide that the work must be done in accordance with the terms of the principal contract.[40] A judgment in favor of a subcontractor in a suit by him against the principal contractor is not res adjudicata of the question whether the work was done in accordance with the principal contract, in a suit by the contractor against the owner.[41]

35. Where plaintiff contracted with a company to install sprinkler system, and it contracted with defendant to build support therefor, held that plaintiff could not recover damages resulting from collapse of support owing to absence of tie member required by contract, particularly since subsequent intervening independent acts of others saved defendants' omission from being the proximate cause. 40. "General stipulations" in construction contract held to constitute a portion of the "specifications" and hence to come within a provision of a subcontract that the specifications of the principal contract should be a part thereof and govern the same. McGregor v. Ware Const. Co. [Mo.] 87 S. W. 981.

Orders drawn by the contractor upon the owner in favor of a subcontractor, and payable out of particular funds due on the contract constitute equitable assignments of such funds.[42] One taking such an unaccepted order takes his chances on there being a balance due to the contractor, and cannot assert a personal claim against the owner superior to those holding mechanics' liens against the property.[43]

A contractor who accepts an order of a subcontractor in favor of a materialman is not liable to the latter, where the only amount remaining unpaid was, by the terms of the order, to be paid out of the amount due on the last payment, and no last payment ever became due the subcontractors on account of their abandonment of the work and its complétion by the principal contractors.[44]

A promise by the contractor, on acceptance of a subcontractor's order, to pay to a third person a certain sum due the subcontractor "when said money is due him" is conditional on the completion of the contract by the subcontractor.[45]

§ 12. Bonds.[46]—A statute requiring building contracts to be secured by bonds which shall inure to the benefit of materialmen is unconstitutional as being an unreasonable restriction on the power to contract.[47]

A bond conditioned on the faithful performance of the contract renders the sureties liable for a failure of the contractor to perform any duties or obligations thereby imposed on him.[48] Where the contractor undertakes to furnish all labor and material, the owner may treat the filing of a mechanic's lien as a breach of a bond given to secure the faithful performance of the contract,[49] or he may waive

If assignments not valid as against subsequent general assignee of contractor until filed (Laws 1885, p. 587, c. 342, § 5, as amended by Laws 1896, p. 981, c. 915), the prayee at least acquires inchoate rights, and the general assignee takes title subpect to the payee's right to file them and perfect his right to the fund. Armstrong v. Chisolm, 99 App. Div. 465, 91 N. Y. S. 299. Equitable assignment of so much of the contract price due and unpaid as is in the hands of the contractor, as against subsequent attachments. Lutter v. Grosse, 26 Ky. L. R. 585, 82 S. W. 278. The acceptance, by the subcontractor from the contractor, of an order on the owner for the amount of his claim, and the service on the owner of a notice of his holding it, works an equitable assignment of so much of the amount to become due the contractor as is represented thereby. Wheelock v. Hull, 124 Iowa, 752, 100 N. W. 863. Evidence held to show agreement by defendant owner and builder to pay materialman for material furnished contractor which materialman should furnish on order of contractor and charge to defendant. Order by contractor in favor of materialman held intended to limit amount for which owner should be liable, and latter was liable for value of material furnished, though it did not equal amount of order, and though contractor did not fully complete his contract. The sureties on the contractor's bond to indemnify the owner from all personal loss resulting from a breach of the contract are responsible for damages to an adjoining building resulting from the performance of the contract, where the contract provided that the contractor would be personally responsible to adjoining owners for such damages. Leppert v. Flaggs [Md.] 60 A. 450. A stipulation in the contract that the last instalment due thereunder shall be paid when the building is surrendered free of all liens requires an indemnitor giving an undertaking that the principal shall faithfully comply with the terms of his contract to see that the building is free of liens when surrendered. McKinnon v. Higgins [Or.] 81 P. 581.

such apparent breach and insist that the covenant is broken only when the lien is made a fixed and determined charge against his property by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.[50]

The extent of the surety's liability is governed by the terms of the bond and not those of the contract.[51]

In the absence of a provision in the bond to the contrary,[52] no notice to the surety of the contractor's failure to perform is necessary.[53]

Anything done or omitted by the owner to prejudice the position of the surety will discharge him either pro tanto or altogether.[54] The surety cannot, however, treat it as breach of contract, and hence of the bond. Friend v. Ralston, 35 Wash. 422, 77 P. 794; Trinity Parish v. Aetna Indemnity Co. [Wash.] 79 P. 1097.

50. Provision in bond requiring suit to be brought within six months of breach complied with where brought within six months after lien was put into judgment. Beebe v. Redward, 35 Wash. 615, 77 P. 1052; Ovington v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 36 Wash. 473, 78 P. 1021.

51. Where a contractor's bond contains no provision for liquidated damages for delay in completing the work, called for by the contract for the work, such damages cannot be recovered from the surety. City of Winona v. Jackson, 92 Minn. 453, 100 N. W. 368. Under bond conditioned that contractors would promptly pay all debts incurred by them in the prosecution of the work, including labor, materials, etc., neither they nor their sureties were liable for debts incurred for labor and supplies by a subcontractor. Miller v. State [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 260.

52. Where bond requires notice, owner cannot hold surety for liquidated damages fixed by contract for delay unless he gives it. American Bonding Co. v. Regents of University of Idaho [Idaho] 81 P. 604. A provision in the bond requiring the owner to notify the surety of any act of the principal which might involve a loss for which the surety would be liable does not require him to give notice of the fact that the contractor has become indebted for labor, but only of proceedings to enforce a lien for the debt. Ovington v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 36 Wash. 43, 78 P. 1021.

Surety released: By the waiver by the owner of a stipulation requiring him to reserve a portion of the contract price, until after the completion of the work, without the surety's consent. Lawhon v. Toors [Ark.] 84 S. W. 636. Payment of first instalment before all the materials were delivered, contrary to terms of contract, releases sureties entirely, and not merely to extent of payment. Civ. Code, §§ 2819, 2840. Glenn County v. Jones [Cal.] 80 P. 695. By changes allowing payment to be made directly to the contractor instead of first paying claims for labor and material, when made upon sufficient consideration. Guthrie v. Carpenter, 162 Ind. 417, 70 N. E. 486. By violation of provision requiring final payment to be made on completion of the work and when receipts for all labor and material have been furnished. Are not liable for sums which the owner was required to pay for materials to outside parties, where he overpaid contractor before work was completed. Tinsley v. Kemery [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 993. Fact that amounts were not specified in provision for payment of instalments as work progressed held immaterial. Id.

Surety not released: Because legal title is not in party spoken of in contract and bond as owner. Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Peterson, 124 Iowa, 599, 100 N. W. 550. Building contract held not to require written audit or certificate of architects as to claims, and hence surety not released by fact that owner was allowed damages for delay without it, and the amount applicable to subcontractor's claims was thereby reduced. Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. National Surety Co., 124 Iowa, 617, 100 N. W. 556. Also held that paper in evidence was intended as such certificate and was sufficient. Id. Because of attempt to heat additional room from plant, where plan was failure, and change had no effect on amount of heat supplied to building as originally constructed. Board of Education of St. Louis v. National Surety Co., 183 Mo. 166, 82 S. W. 70. Particularly where arbiter excluded room from consideration in determining whether contract had been complied with. Id. Held that there was no such unreasonable delay in determining sufficiency of heating plant as to discharge surety. Id. Because two additional furnaces were put in. Id. By failure of owner to insure in manner provided by contract, where no loss occurred. Hohn v. Shideler [Ind.] 72 N. E. 575; Schreiber v. Worm [Ind.] 72 N. E. 852. By unimportant and trivial alterations made by agreement between parties without reference to architect in accordance with terms of contract, where contract contemplated alterations and changes. Hohn v. Shideler [Ind.] 72 N. E. 575. By alterations in contract before it or the bond was signed. Schreiber v. Worm [Ind.] 72 N. E. 852. By small alterations, where contract contemplates them. Id. Because of changes which contract gave right to make. Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. National Surety Co., 124 Iowa, 617, 100 N. W. 556. Ovington v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 36 Wash. 473, 78 P. 1021. Because of deviations from the contract by the contractor gratuitously and for the purpose of doing better work. Contractor put in a brick wall and certain additional supports not called for by the contract and made no complain of any breach of the contract which the owner waives unless it results to his prejudice,[55] and this is particularly true in the case of compensated guaranty companies.[56] A contention that the surety is not liable until the owner has paid the full contract price, predicated on the fact that he has retained the amount of damages due him for delay in completion of the work, is untenable since he is not required to leave his own claim unpaid and apply the money for the benefit of the surety.[57]

It is no defense for the principal in an action on the bond that he was paid in installments other than those provided for in the contract, particularly where the payments were made at the contractor's own request and he accepted them, and where he was overpaid.[58]

The liability of a surety, released by a breach of the contract on the part of the owner, cannot be revived by a subsequent waiver of such breach by the contractor.[59]

The fact that, after a breach of the contract, the owner pays to the indemnitor the amounts due the contractor thereunder, in accordance with its terms, does not constitute a forfeiture of his right to the indemnity on the subsequent filing of liens against the property,[60] but the indemnity company, by accepting such payments and permitting the liens to be filed, waives its right to insist that the action to recover the damage sustained was not instituted within the time limited by the undertaking.[61]

Though a surety on a bond stipulating to protect the owner from liens, by reason of the contract and the work and material furnished under it, cannot himself acquire a lien for materials furnished the contractor, yet he may acquire from the contractor for that purpose an equitable assignment of such sums as are or may become due him under the contract.[62] It is not essential to the validity of the as-claim for extra work. Snoqualmi Realty Co. v. Moynihan, 179 Mo. 629, 78 S. W. 1014. Because of irregularities of payments and approval of bills by surety's agent. Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Peterson, 124 Iowa, 599, 100 N. W. 550. Estopped by conduct to object to payments. Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. National Surety Co., 124 Iowa, 617, 100 N. W. 556. By payments made not in accordance with contract but with surety's consent. Schrieber v. Worm [Ind.] 72 N. E. 852. By loan or advancement under contract without certificate of architect, where the money was used in the construction of the building, and was deducted from last certificate, since surety was benefited rather than injured thereby. Leghorn v. Mydell [Wash.] 80 P. 833. Because of failure to retain 15 per cent. of contract price until completion of building, where it was applied to payment of the cost of constructing the building which was in excess of the amount for which the contractor agreed to build it. First Presbyterian Church v. Housel, 115 Ill. App. 230. Because claims have been assigned to owner. Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Peterson, 124 Iowa, 599, 100 N. W. 550.

55. Must show that failure to complete building on time resulted to his prejudice. Beebe v. Redward, 35 Wash. 615, 77 P. 1052. Surety cannot complain of advances made to principal outside of contract to enable latter to complete contract, where creditor makes no claim on account of them, and they have in no manner affected surety's rights. Bateman Bros. v. Mapel, 145 Cal. 241, 78 P. 734. Must show that he has sustained some damage by violation of contract (Schreiber v. Worm [Ind.] 72 N. E. 852), and then is only entitled to be discharged pro tanto (Id.).

56. Failure to notify surety of noncompletion of building on time held at most a waiver of claim for damages in that regard, but not a waiver of the entire contract. Trinity Parish v. Aetna Indemnity Co. [Wash.] 79 P. 1097. Notice of unpaid claims for materials subsequently discovered held sufficient to bind surety. Id. A compensated guaranty company cannot escape liability by reason of deviations from the exact terms of the contract, where such provisions were waived, and no damage is shown to have resulted to the surety by reason thereof. Not because of failure of owner to pay contractor's in full where they received full credit for balance due, which inured to benefit of surety. Friend v. Ralston, 35 Wash. 422, 77 P. 794.

signment that notice thereof be given to the owner, or that he consent thereto.[63]

The surety, in an action by the owner to recover on the contractor's bond, is estopped by a judgment obtained in good faith by the owner against the contractors for breach of the contract.[64]

§ 13. Remedies and procedure.[65]—A contractor signing the contract in his own name as an individual may properly sue thereon in his own name, though he may have been in partnership with a third person who performed the work under a private understanding between them that he was to share in the profits.[66] A stipulation as to speed in a ship-building contract is a collateral warranty and may be sued on after delivery and acceptance since it cannot be determined by inspection on delivery.[67] A subcontractor may prosecute a petition for a mechanic's lien simultaneously with a suit at common law to recover the same debt in which a part of the contract price still in the hands of the owner is attached.[68] An action cannot, of course, be maintained on the contract until after the time fixed for payment.[69]

Form of action.[70]—Performance upon the part of the contractor is a condition precedent to his right of payment, in the absence of anything in the contract to the contrary.[71] In case he is prevented from performing by the act of the owner or in case of any other breach of contract by the owner, he may either sue on a quantum meruit for the value of the services actually performed,[72] or he may recover damages for the breach.[73] Where substantial compliance is not found, the general rule that an express contract excludes an implied one covering the same

69. Where screens were to be paid for in six months after they were fitted, if satisfactory, and one screen was defective, action brought within six months after defect was remedied was premature, if defect was such that contract was not substantially performed; otherwise action brought more than six months after screens were originally furnished was not premature. 71. Toher v. Schaefer, 91 N. Y. S. 3. Must be either substantial or complete performance. Where contract price was $110, and $30 was claimed for extras, and $20 had been paid on account, judgment for $50 was erroneous, since plaintiff was entitled to full amount claimed if he had substantially performed, and to nothing at all if he had not. Krombach v. Teilelbaum. 90 N. Y. S. 367.

72. Toher v. Schaefer, 91 N. Y. S. 3. Contract with architect for plans. Cann v. Rector, etc., of Church of Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. Action held one on quantum meruit rather than on contract. Id. A petition in an action by architects asking both the value of work done in making plans and also for the pay they would have received for superintendence had the building been erected cannot be construed as stating a cause of action on a quantum meruit. Id.; Poland v. Thomaston Face & Ornamental Brick Co. [Me.] 60 A. 795. Held proper for jury to find that defendant's conduct and statements at the time of the request for a payment on account was a denial of the right of plaintiff to any remuneration for drilling a well unless water was obtained and amounted to a repudiation of the contract. Including the amount which he has been induced to expend on the faith of the contract and anticipated profits, if any, subject to the right of the opposite subject-matter applies.[74] Failure to fully perform is a bar to an action on the contract itself, unless such failure is waived.[75] But an unintentional failure to fully perform by reason of unimportant variations is no bar to a recovery under a count on an account annexed for the value of the labor and materials furnished in an amount not exceeding the contract price, and less any deductions necessary to complete the work.[76] A party may not, in one suit growing out of a single transaction, sue for damages for the alleged breach of contract and also for the value of services rendered regardless of the contract.[77]

A recovery may be had on the common counts for the value of labor and material furnished even though plaintiff has failed to perform the contract, where defendant accepted the work and it was of benefit to him.[78] The value of the use must, however, be shown[79]

If the contract is not performed according to its terms, and the owner refuses to accept the work, and the services are of such character and the materials furnished under such circumstances that the same can be rejected and the owner avoid receiving any benefit therefrom, the contractor cannot recover.[80] But where the services from their very nature must be regarded as accepted and the benefits thereof appropriated by the owner from day to day as the work progresses, he, though not liable upon the special contract, will be liable for the fair price and value of the benefits resulting from the partial performance, over and above the amount of damages sustained by the breach.[81]

Where the contract has been performed or terminated, and nothing remains to be done but to pay money, recovery may be had under the common counts,[82] and party to show that such expenditures were extravagant or unnecessary. Government contractor held entitled to recover certain expenses. Houston Co.'s Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 724.

79. Evidence insufficient to show that defendant accepted plans prepared by plaintiff, or used them, or that they were of any value to him. Minuth v. Barnwell, 94 N. Y. S. 649. In case plans for vessels submitted to the secretary of the navy are not adopted, the right to recover for their use depends upon whether they contain novel designs. If not, defendants were free to use them. Lundborg's Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 23. Where one submitting plans requests their return in case they are rejected, the officers of the department have no right to retain them, but the claimant cannot recover for such retention unless he proves damages. Id. Where the promise of the secretary of the navy to pay for plans depends on their adoption, their adoption or use must be shown in order to recover. Id. Where plaintiffs were not entitled to recover on a contract to furnish working plans and specifications for the construction of a court house, both on account of its invalidity and their failure to perform, they were not entitled to recover the value of the use of those furnished, which were only used to enable the county board to abandon the project, in the absence of proof of the value of such use. Kinney v. Manitowoc County [C. C. A.] 135 F. 491. The contract price was no evidence of the fair value of such use. Id.

80. Dame v. Woods [N. H.] 60 A. 744. Where plaintiff agrees to furnish all materials for, and install, a heating plant, for defendant for a sum to be paid on the completion of the work, and the building is destroyed before completion thereof, there being no insurance thereon, he cannot recover for the labor and materials already furnished on the theory of a quasi contract to pay for the benefits on the ground of a necessary acceptance from day to day, in the absence of a showing that the materials could not have been removed for a reasonable sum. Annexed to realty and destroyed without fault of either party, before defendant had made any use of them, and before he had had an opportunity to accept or reject them. Id.

the agreement may be read in evidence for the purpose of showing its terms and to measure the damages.[83]

An action conditio indebiti will lie to recover the improper profits made by a contractor by the substitution of a cheaper material than the one specified.[84]

Pleading.—The ordinary rules of pleading apply.[85] Recovery can only be had on the cause of action alleged.[86] Though not necessary to do so, it is not improper to make the plans a part of the complaint.[87] There is a conflict of authority as to the necessity of pleading waiver and estoppel.[88] In an action to recover a balance of the contract price for the erection of a building, no plea is necessary to present the defense of failure of performance.[89]

Evidence.[90]—The ordinary rules of evidence apply.[90a] On the issue as to the terms of an oral contract with an architect for the drawing of certain plans, its original terms, by the consent of the parties, or by the unjustifiable act of the defendant, and nothing remains to be done but to pay money, indebitatus assumpsit will lie, though the debt accrued under a special contract. Declaration held to sufficiently allege breach of contract to furnish materials in such manner as not to delay the material progress of the work, and to reimburse contractor for loss caused by failure to do so. Pinkerton Const. Co. v. Schweyer [N. J. Law] 58 A. 112. In an action for price of plans in which defendant counterclaimed for damages due to fact that plaintiff erroneously specified that property was certain distance from street and thereby necessitated making of new plans, held that plaintiff was entitled to bill of particulars stating in what papers mistake was made, etc. Price v. 86. Where plaintiff refused to accept offer of compromise but sued for full amount claimed by him to be due under contract, without alleging any right to recover former amount, he could not, on failing to establish his claim, recover the sum offered by way of compromise. McGregor v. Ware Const. Co. [Mo.] 87 S. W. 981. Recovery cannot be had for damages due to changes in plans ater completion of the work, necessitating its being done over, under a complaint seeking recovery of damages incident to delay in furnishing plans only. In action on contract to install heating plant, where defendant claimed work was improperly done, evidence that mechanic who did most of the work got drunk and was confined in the calaboose held irrelevant. Matthews v. Farrell, 140 Ala. 298, 37 So. 325. Though contract for installing heating plant did not require boiler and mains to be covered with asbestos, where defendant introduced an expert who testified that loss of heat by radiation would thereby have been prevented, held proper for plaintiff to ask him if it was customary to do so when contract did not require it. Id. Defendant could not be questioned in regard to his construction of the contract. Id. Defendant's opinion as to work inadmissible, it appearing from his own testimony that he was incompetent to make the apparatus a proper instrumentality to serve the purpose for which it was intended. Id. Where contractor had agreed to keep plumbing in repair for a year, questions as to what the expense of doing so would or should be held properly disallowed where they failed to describe what was needed. Schultze v. Goodstein, 180 N. Y. 248, 73 N. E. 21. In action on contract to drill wells, questions as to whether defendant had been able to use wells or any water there-

the declarations of defendant's wife in his presence and at the time the terms were being considered, coupled with his acquiescence in her wishes then expressed, are admissible.[91] Where the contractor agrees to protect and save the plaintiff harmless from all claims of any sort or description arising by reason of work done or omitted to be done under the contract, and to defend at his own expense all suits brought against the plaintiff on such claims the records of suits so brought in which recoveries were had against plaintiff, which he paid, are conclusive evidence against the contractor's surety provided they disclose with sufficient certainty that they were founded on the negligence or other improper conduct of the contractor.[92]

One suing for labor and material has the burden of proving that both were furnished in pursuance of a contract requiring defendant to pay for them.[93]

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

§ 1. Statutory regulation.[94]—The business of building and loan associations is very generally regulated by statute, and compliance with such statutes is necessary to entitle an association to the privileges granted.[95] This rule applies equally to foreign and domestic corporations.[96] The law of the place of performance of the contract governs and is the law with which the association, seeking to enforce its contract, must comply.[97] In some states contracts of a foreign association which from, and as to the value of wells to him held improper as calling for conclusions. Dubois v. Williamson, 93 App. Div. 361, 87 N. Y. S. 645. On an issue of plaintiff's failure to properly perform a contract to install a water system operated by a hydraulic ram, evidence of defects in the construction of a dam, which he built for the purpose of furnishing the water, was admissible. Carolina Plumbing & Heating Co. v. Hall, 136 N. C. 530, 48 S. E. 810. Admission of evidence to show condition of dam held harmless where nothing to show that its defective condition caused failure of water supply. Id. So too was evidence of a physician that the presence of odors, dampness, and mosquitoes in the house caused the sickness of persons living with defendant. Not on issue of damages, but as substantive evidence of defects in the system. Id. In action on contract for drilling well, permitting witness to illustrate to jury the character and appearance of the well by means of a paper cylinder held not erroneous. Comer v. Thornton [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 19. Question asking defendant's president whether phrase was inserted in contract at his suggestion properly excluded. United Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Broadnax [C. C. has not complied with the statute regulating foreign corporations are void.[98] In others, noncompliance with such statutes does not render the contract void, the statutory penalty imposed being deemed exclusive of other penalties.[99] The Missouri statute regulating building and loan associations, requiring them to make a deposit with the state treasurer to secure the holders of contracts, and to procure licenses from a supervisor, who is given ministerial powers, is held valid.[1] The act is not a regulation of interstate commerce, and is within the police powers of the state.[2] It does not confer legislative nor judicial powers upon the supervisor,[3] is not retrospective in operation,[4] and is not class legislation.[5] A building and loan association is liable to the organization tax imposed upon corporations by statute in Kentucky.[6]

The applicability of usury statutes to building and loan contracts is treated in a subsequent section.[7]

§ 2. Membership and stock.[8]—The membership usually consists of a borrowing and nonborrowing class, but all members, so far as stock and payments thereon are concerned, stand on an equal footing.[9]

Charters and by-laws.[10]—The articles of association and by-laws are a part of the contract with a member,[11] and stockholders are charged with notice thereof.[12] The fact that a certificate recites that the contract is subject to the articles, by-laws, terms, and conditions expressed on the back thereof, and that the articles and by-laws do not appear there, does not change this rule.[13]

Maturity of stock.[14]—In the absence of any special agreement, stock matures only when the dues paid and earnings apportioned to it amount to the face value.[15] There is a conflict of authority as to the legal effect of an agreement that stock shall mature after a specified number of payments or in a certain time, some courts holding such an agreement enforceable[16] and others that the association has no power to make such a contract,[17] and that it is therefore void.[18] But such an agreement does not render the entire contract void; payments must be made until the stock regularly matures.[19] Some courts hold that when a contract providing for the maturity of stock at the end of a fixed period is not prohibited by law when made,[20] and is fully performed, the association is estopped to set up that it is ultra vires and contrary to law.[21]

A mortgage executed by reason of false representations by an authorized agent that a certain number of payments would mature the stock is unenforceable.[22] But the fact that such representations were made is not a defense to a foreclosure action, when the by-laws, made a part of the contract, provide that stock should mature when the loan-fund portion of instalments, with accumulated profits, should bring the value of the stock to par.[23] Future profits not being determinable in advance, the representation is in such case merely an expression of opinion.[24] Such representations being true according to provisions of the contract, are not fraudulent because such provisions are subsequently held invalid by the court unless their invalidity was known to those who made the representations, and unknown to the borrower.[25]

Where the officers of an association erroneously declare stock of a certain series matured, such action does not release holders of that stock from further liability;[26] holders of such stock are liable for the amount necessary to fully mature the stock, with interest, but are not entitled to profits after the stock was declared mature, nor liable for burdens accruing thereafter.[27] A suit to cancel entry of satisfaction and enforce liability for a balance due is not barred by laches where demand for restitution is made on discovery of the mistake, and suit is brought within one year thereafter.[28]

§ 3. Loans and mortgages. A. In general.[29]—Unauthorized representations of an agent, through whom a loan is made, not brought to the notice of and acted on by the association, are not binding upon it.[30] A corporation borrower, which has received and used the borrowed money, cannot defeat enforcement on the ground that its contract is ultra vires, it having no power to hold stock in another corporation.[31] Where an association by a by-law designates an officer or committee to whom payments are to be made, and such designation is known to those making payments, payments to others than those designated are not payments to the association, unless actually received by it.[32] But such by-law may be waived by acquiescence for a number of years in a course of dealing under which payments are made to another.[33] A mortgage given a foreign association having been transferred to a domestic concern, and the borrower's stock in the former canceled and an equal amount issued by the latter, the contract will be treated, in foreclosure, as though originally made between the mortgagor and the domestic association.[34] Where a borrower gives a bond conditioned upon the payment of the principal of a loan, and premiums, fines and charges, and a mortgage to better secure payment of the principal, with interest, the mortgage secures payment only of the principal and interest.[35] When a member is in default must be determined from the terms of the contract.[36]

(§ 3.) B. Usury. Conflict of laws.[37]—The law of the place of performance governs as to usury.[38] Where by-laws provide that payments shall be made at the home office, and that the contract shall be regarded as made at the home office, the state wherein the home office is located is deemed the place of performance.[39]

Exemption from usury laws.[40]—Statutes authorizing building and loan associations to assess and collect from borrowing members dues, fines, interest and premiums on loans, and such other assessments as may be provided for by the constitution and by-laws, and that such payments shall not be considered usury, though in excess of the legal rate of interest, are constitutional.[41] Such laws are uniform in operation,[42] and do not confer special privileges, or discriminate in favor of a certain class of corporations.[43] Statutes of this character exist in many states.[44]

NOTE. Usury—Conflict of laws: As to what law shall govern in determining whether a building and loan contract is usurious, the authorities are in conflict. Some apply the law of the domicile of the association to the solution of the question on the ground that that is the place of payment and performance, and the law with reference to which the parties must be presumed to have contracted. See Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Ass'n, 181 U. S. 227, 45 Law. Ed. 834, 21 S. Ct. 597; Building & L. Ass'n v. Logan [C. C. A.] 66 F. 827; Pacific States Sav., L. & Bldg. Co. v. The following are among the cases which have applied the local law to loans by a foreign association secured by mortgages on realty within the state, notwithstanding that the contract was by its terms payable in the state where the association was domiciled, and in some instances expressly stipulated that it was made with reference to the law of that state, and notwithstanding that by the local law the contract was usurious, whereas by the law of the domicile it was perfectly valid: Falls v. 44. Building and loan contracts nonusurious in Georgia. Collins v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co., 121 Ga. 513, 49 S. E. 594.

To entitle an association to the benefit of such laws, it must comply with the conditions imposed, otherwise its contracts will be regarded as ordinary loans and therefore usurious.[45] All payments of dues, premiums and fines are in such case to be applied on the loan,[46] and only the actual amount loaned with legal interest, can be recovered.[47] The validity of the contract and the bona fide character of the corporation as a building and loan association being put in issue, the association must show that it is in fact a building and loan association, and that its contracts are authorized by its charter.[48] The mere introduction of a certificate of incorporation in a foreign state, unaccompanied by a general statute showing its powers, is insufficient to carry the burden on such issue.[49]

Many statutes require competitive bidding on premiums for the privilege of priority of loan,[50] but the validity or invalidity of a statute exempting building and loan contracts from usury laws is not affected by the presence or absence of such a requirement.[51] Failure to comply with such a provision,[52] as by arbitrarily fixing [53] a minimum rate,[54] renders the loan usurious. A written bid may be sufficient.[55]

In the absence of fraud, duress or mistake, a loan, conforming to the charter of an association and the laws under which it was organized, will not be held usurious by virtue of the contract for stock, where the note given for the loan is lawful on its face.[56] It is immaterial that stock was taken for the sole purpose of obtaining a loan, providing it is not a mere device to cover usury.[57] The subscription for stock and the loan are to be considered as separate transactions.[58] Unless the stock is a mere device to cover usury, payments thereon should be applied thereto according to the contract;[59] and one who becomes a subscriber and borrower and makes payments according to the terms of his contract cannot thereafter attack the validity of the stock and claim that instalments on the stock were payments on the loan.[60] If a loan be free from usury and the stock valid as to the shareholder, they cannot be considered otherwise when attacked by one who is a mere vendee of the property previously mortgaged to secure the loan.[61] In West Virginia it is held that when the time of the maturity of the stock is indefinite and uncertain, thereby rendering the amount of premiums to be paid uncertain and requiring payments to be made for an indefinite period, the contract is usurious.[62] But where the premium bid is fixed by the charter and by-laws and the bond and deed of trust, in monthly payments for a stated and definite number of years, or until maturity of the pledged shares, should they mature before expiration of the time stated, the amount of premium is sufficiently definite and certain.[63] If a contract is usurious in its inception, it cannot be purged of usury by subsequent by-laws reducing the amount of payments.[64]

In some states contracts calling for interest, premiums and dues are held usurious as to payments in excess of the stipulated interest, and such payments in excess are credited to the reduction of the principal.[65] But one who would bring himself within this doctrine and secure the benefit of payments of dues and premiums must show that he had contracted with a building and loan association having a plan or scheme different from that sanctioned by the statute,[66] and facts indicating that there was no corrupt intent between him and the other parties to receive and pay usurious interest.[67]

(§ 3.) C. Accounting with borrower while solvent.[68]—A borrowing member, upon settlement with the association while solvent, is chargeable only with his loan and legal interest, and all payments, whether as dues, premiums or interest, are regarded as payments on the debt.[69] But it has been held that payments of dues on stock is not ipso facto an application of money so paid to the mortgage debt; and that to have that effect there must be an act of appropriation by one or other of the parties.[70] Where a borrower acquiesces in the application of payments for a number of years, with knowledge of the terms of his contract, the court will not enforce another application on the mere ground that the borrower, at the time of making the contract, may have understood that such other application was to be made.[71] Where a mortgage provides that the actual surrender value of the stock should, on foreclosure, be applied on the debt, it cannot be urged as a defense, on foreclosure, that such value was less than it should have been, owing to mismanagement.[72] Under the Iowa statute, if a judgment is had against a borrower, the amount of recovery cannot exceed the actual amount of the principal, with interest at a rate not to exceed twelve per cent.[73] The method of computation under this statute [74] is to be applied to contracts made prior to its enactment.[75]

(§ 3) D. Accounting after insolvency.[76]—Where foreclosure proceedings are commenced by an association, practically insolvent at the time, and continued by the receiver of the association, the accounting will be treated as one after insolvency.[77] Insolvency of the association works a rescission of the contract,[78] and the sums borrowed become immediately due and payable, regardless of the terms of payment fixed by the contract.[79] The borrower is chargeable with the amount of his loan, with interest, and payments actually made, referable to the loan, are credited thereon.[80] Thus bonuses,[81] and interest and premium [82] payments, are usually credited in toto on the debt. But in the Federal courts it is held that no credit should be allowed on the debt for earned nonusurious premiums, nor for nonusurious premiums paid in monthly instalments prior to insolvency of the association.[83] Dues paid on the stock,[84] and fines paid for default in stock payments [85] cannot be treated as payments on the debt, but credit therefor can be given only upon final distribution of the net assets among all stockholders.[86] The same rule applies to dues upon stock pledged to secure premiums as to dues for stock pledged to secure the advancement.[87] Where an association consolidates with another, forming a new one, and a member of the old association takes stock from and gives a new note to the new association, dues paid the old association, while solvent, are to be credited on the debt, after insolvency of the new association.[88] If the assignee in insolvency has instituted foreclosure proceedings, the borrowing member should be remitted to the court administering the insolvent estate for his pro rata share of dividends on his stock;[89] the court before which foreclosure proceedings are pending will ascertain the value of the stock and apply it on payments only in case the right to participate in dividends has been barred by action of the court administering the estate.[90] In New York it is held that the rights and liabilities of borrowing members and the association should not be determined until the net assets of the association have been determined.[91] Hence payments by the member should not be credited to him, but become part of the assets of the association, a proportionate share of which will be awarded the member on final distribution.[92] But if liquidation has so far proceeded that the receiver knows that stockholders are to receive a dividend, and the approximate amount thereof, he should, as a matter of grace, credit the amount to the defendants in foreclosure, keeping within a safe margin.[93]

Fines for default in payment of dues and interest cannot be collected on foreclosure of the mortgage, unless the parties have so expressly agreed.[94] Attorney's fees, chargeable on default, cannot be enforced when the borrower has kept up all his payments to the time of insolvency.[95] A prior mortgage having been assumed by the association which paid interest thereon, but not the principal, such principal is to be deducted from the amount due from the member.[96] The difference between the interest on the assumed mortgage and the interest paid by the member on the entire loan is a part of the profits of the association, a share of which the member can obtain only on final distribution of assets.[97] Interest paid on such assumed mortgage by the receiver is to be charged to the member.[98]

A borrowing member who has voluntarily paid the receiver a sum in excess of his actual indebtedness may recover the excess but must bear the costs of the proceeding.[99] A suit for rescission of a stock contract on the ground of misrepresentations may be maintained against the receiver after insolvency if brought with due diligence and if the assets are sufficient to pay all creditors.[1]

A certificate of stock providing that the holder is entitled to interest on the amount paid, and may surrender the certificate on giving due notice, is in effect a promise to pay the amount indicated, with interest.[2] The holder of such certificate is entitled, after insolvecy of the association and payment of the general creditors, to treat it as a promise to pay, and to hold a mortgage assigned to her by the association as collateral,[3] even though she had also entered a sworn claim on the certificate in insolvency proceedings.[4]

able by the receiver,[5] and a correlative right arises in each mortgagor to redeem his lands from the mortgage thereon.[6] This rule applies where a borrowing member has given a deed, accompanied by a defeasance stipulating for a reconveyance, upon performance of the borrower's agreements and the maturity of his stock, according to the scheme of the association.[7] In such case the receiver may enforce the association's rights immediately, upon insolvency, and the borrower may have a reconveyance upon payment of such amount as may be determined by the contract and the existing equities to be due.[8] Where such conveyance is made subject to a prior mortgage, which is assumed by the association, redemption will not be permitted unless the liability of the fund in the receiver's hands is wholly discharged either by payment of the prior mortgage or by a complete release from the holder thereof.[9] Premiums actually paid by the borrower are to be credited to him, in determining the amount to be paid for redemption.[10]

If the articles of association do not provide how funds shall be distributed in case of insolvency, no particular class of stockholders is entitled to a preference in such distribution of assets.[11] The withdrawal value of instalment stock at the time the action was commenced is the basis upon which a proportionate distribution of assets should be made.[12]

§ 4. Termination and insolvency. Voluntary liquidation.[13] Insolvency.[14]—Insolvency of a building and loan association is not inability to pay outside debts, but inability to carry out the purposes for which it was organized, and to satisfy the demands of its own members.[15]

Receiverships.[16]—A stockholder cannot in a single suit seek cancellation of a loan contract for fraud and usury, on the ground that the association is not authorized to do business in the state, and also seek, on behalf of himself and others, to have a receiver of the association appointed.[17]

§ 5. Rights of withdrawing shareholders.[18]—The by-laws constituting a part of a member's contract, the right of withdrawal must be exercised in accordance therewith.[19] Thus, by-laws providing that applications for withdrawal must be considered and paid in the order of presentation,[20] and that payments on withdrawals in any one month shall not exceed a certain proportion of the monthly income,[21] are binding on members. A nonborrowing stockholder who has given notice of withdrawal cannot maintain an action for the amount paid by him, when there are no funds legally applicable to his claim.[22] A defaulting stockholder has not the same right of withdrawal as a paid up stockholder, but is only entitled to the actual amount paid in for dues, less charges against him, including fines.[23] Fines are collectable, though not entered on the books.[24] If the association is in fact insolvent at the time notice of withdrawal is given, the withdrawing member

25, 26. Ft. Smith Bldg. Ass'n v. Cohn [Ark.] 87 S. W. 1172.

NOTE. Withdrawal after insolvency: The writer of the opinion in the case above cited (Ft. Smith Bldg. Ass'n v. Cohn) says: "We are aware that there is conflict in the authorities upon this subject, but 'the true rule,' says Mr. Endlich in his excellent work on Building Associations, 'is undoubtedly that laid down by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania as follows: 'When a building association has failed to fulfill the object of its creation, and has become hopelessly insolvent, after expenses incident to the administration of its assets are deducted, the general creditors, if any, should be first paid in full, and the residue of the fund should be distributed pro rata among those whose claims are based upon stock of the association, whether they have withdrawn and hold orders for the withdrawal value thereof or not. Both classes are equally meritorious, and in marshalling the assets neither is entitled to priority over the other. The claims of each are alike based upon their relation to the association as members thereof.' End. on Building Ass'ns, §§ 514, 515; Appeal of Christian, 102 Pa. 184; Chapman v. Young, 66 Ill. App. 131; Walker v. Terry, 138 Ala. 428, 35 So. 466; Hohenshell v. Sav. & L. Ass'n, 140 Mo. 566, 41 S. W. 948; Rabbitt v. Wilcoxen, 103 Iowa, 35, 72 N. W. 306, 64 Am. St. Rep. 152, 38 L. R. A. 183; Heinbokel v. Nat. Sav. & L. Ass'n, 58 Minn. 340, 59 N. W. 1050, 49 Am. St. Rep. 519, 25 L. R. A. 215. But see Thornton and Blacklege, B. & L. Ass'n, § 329, where English cases are cited holding contrary doctrine." See, also, note in 3 C. L. 571.

31. Town council of village may regulate. Patterson v. Johnson, 214 Ill. 481, 73 N. E. 761. The erection of a wooden building in a place where it would expose adjacent property to fire, increase the insurance rate and depreciate rental value. Id.

32. Requirement that school sinks be replaced by water closets. Tenement House Dept. of New York v. Moeschen, 179 N. Y. 325, 72 N. E. 231.

33, 34. Tenement House Dept. of New York v. Moeschen, 179 N. Y. 325, 72 N. E. 231.

35. That a building permit was issued to the husband of the applicant instead of to her cannot be complained of by one who has sustained no injury. Hutchings v. Munn, 22 App. D. C. 88. One not injured by a violation of building regulations cannot complain. Id.

36. The moving of a building along a highway is a use of the highway within Pub. St. 1882, c. 109, § 17, providing for the cutting, removal or disconnection of electric wires. This statute authorizes the cutting of electric light wires. Id. A. M. Richards Bldg. Moving Co. v. Boston Electric Light Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 350.

37. "Block" used in an ordinance prohibiting the erection of certain buildings be definite.[39] Noncompliance therewith is prima facie evidence of negligence,[40] but in order to be made the basis of a recovery, it must have been the proximate cause of an injury [41] sustained by a person entitled to complain of such dereliction of duty.[42] Where the duties of a building inspector and board of public works is quasi-judicial, mandamus will not issue to review their judgment,[43] and in no event should it issue prior to action taken [44] or unless authorized by law.[45] A city cannot be held liable for failure of its board of aldermen to adopt a proper building code,[46] nor for default of duty of a building superintendent who is not its agent or representative,[47] nor is the superintendent liable in the absence of negligence.[48]

§ 2. Private regulations.[49] Restrictive covenants.[50]—The owner of an estate may bind it by restrictive covenant as against all except prior lienors.[51] A mutual covenant by adjacent owners creates a servitude on the land of each,[52] and a restriction for the benefit of certain property is appurenant to it and passes with a conveyance of it,[53] unless the general scheme of improvement has been abandoned.[54] therein, held to mean the side fronting on a certain street and not the square surrounded by four streets. Patterson v. Johnson, 214 Ill. 481, 73 N. E. 761.

38. A stable in which stall room is leased to persons who care for their own horses is not one "for taking horses and carriages for hire" within a statute prohibiting the erection of such a stable within 200 feet of a church. Congregation Beth Israel v. O'Connell, 187 Mass. 236, 72 N. E. 1011. The provision of the tenement house act that all stairways shall be provided with proper banisters and railings does not require the placing of a barrier across the entrance of tenement house cellarways. Construing Laws 1901, p. 889, c. 334; Tenement House Act, § 36. Rothlein v. Stajer, 88 N. Y. S. 921. Rev. St. 1899, § 9036, relative to fire escapes in hotel buildings, was repealed by Acts 1901, p. 219. Yall v. Gillham [Mo.] 86 S. W. 125. Building line restriction (Acts 1904, p. 1077, c. 616, § 1) is void as arbitrary classification. Storck v. Baltimore [Md.] 61 A. 330.

39. Acts 1904, p. 1077, c. 616, § 1, attempting to regulate the limits within which it shall be unlawful to construct steps for houses from the grade of the sidewalk, is void. Storck v. Baltimore [Md.] 61 A. 330.

40. Failure to comply with Building Code, § 102, p. 65, City of New York, requiring buildings exceeding 100 feet in height to be provided with stand pipes, is prima facie evidence of negligence in an action by one entitled to have the statute complied with. Acton v. Reed, 93 N. Y. S. 911.

41. That a stairway was not provided with railings and banisters as required by the Tenement House Act (Laws 1901, pp. 899, 900, c. 344, §§ 36, 41). Kuhnen v. White, 102 App. Div. 36, 92 N. Y. S. 104. Failure to provide a building with stand pipes as required by New York City Building Code, § 102, p. 65. Acton v. Reed, 93 N. Y. S. 911.

42. A statute relative to hoistways and elevators enacted exclusively for the benefit of employes cannot be made the basis of an action by a member of a fire department, Gen. St. p. 2345, § 5 imposes duties only for the protection of employes. Kelly v. Henry Muhs Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 23.

43. Hester v. Thomson, 35 Wash. 119, 76 P. 734. Under an ordinance providing that no building permit should be issued until objections had been adjusted, a determination not to issue a permit constitutes an adjustment. Id.

44. The office of a mandamus is not to compel action by the building department in advance of the preparation and adoption of plans, but only to compel action when plans have been arbitrarily or unreasonably condemned. Hartman v. Collins, 94 N. Y. S. 63.

45. Mandamus should not issue to compel the building inspector to approve plans not satisfactory to him under the Building Code, § 108, though without prejudice to his right to point out specifically lawful requirements and require them to be complied with. Hartman v. Collins, 94 N. Y. S. 63.

48. Complaint against superintendent of buildings held not to allege facts constituting negligence on his part. McGuinness v. Allison Realty Co., 46 Misc. 8, 93 N. Y. S. 267.

49, 50. See 3 C. L. 574.

51. A mortgagor can, as against all except the mortgagee, make a valid contract with adjoining owners that intoxicating liquors shall never be manufactured on their premises. Scudder v. Watt, 98 App. Div. 228, 90 N. Y. S. 605. An agreement by several that liquors should never be manufactured or sold on their premises provided that if any one should refuse to agree to its provisions it should be void, held, that the fact that the premises of one were mortgaged did not constitute a refusal on his part to execute it. Id.

52. An agreement by several property owners that intoxicating liquors shall never be manufactured or sold on their premises imposes on the premises of each a servitude and an incumbrance enforceable by any one of them. Scudder v. Watt, 98 App. Div. 228, 90 N. Y. S. 605.

53. Hemsley v. Marlborough House Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 455. Restrictive covenants in deed from one who has laid out his hand according to a general scheme of improvement may be enforced by one

A restriction cannot be enforced by one not in privity.[54a] Restrictive covenants are to be reasonably interpreted [55] and strictly construed,[56] and nothing is to be regarded as a violation that is not in disregard of express terms according to their meaning at the time the covenant was made.[57] They are enforceable against grantees who take with notice,[58] but not against those without notice.[59] Perpetual restrictions are not favored,[60] and whether one will be enforced is a question that cannot be raised on a petition under a statute to determine the grantee against another. Morrow v. Hasselman [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 369. Covenants against the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor run with the land, and are binding upon subsequent grantees, whether inserted in their deeds or not; and the fact that the original grantor owned only one-fourth interest in the land and was a tenant in common with his grantee is immaterial. Mooter v. Whitman, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 141.

54. A restrictive covenant which is a reiteration of one between adjacent owners is abrogated when the original ceases to operate. Halstead v. Atterbury, 94 N. Y. S. 1023. A deed by a corporation, which had laid out land relative to a general scheme of improvement, of all its remaining land, which contains blank spaces left for the distances left for the building line in the several streets, does not affect the restrictions on land conveyed by the former. Morrow v. Hasselman [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 369. A deviation in a building line as to one block because of the prior location thereon of a house does not amount to a change in the general plan. Id.

54a. A restriction for the benefit of adjacent lots cannot be enforced as between grantees of a person who became the owner of several of such lots, subdivided and conveyed without restriction. Lewis v. Ely, 100 App. Div. 252, 92 N. Y. S. 705. See Tiffany, Real Prop. § 34 et seq.

Note: This decision is based on the ground that by conveyance of parts of the original tract in severalty the covenant was discharged as to such parts. The result thus achieved seems inconsistent with the theory by which the doctrine of covenants running with the land is sustained. It would probably not be contended that mere subdivision or rearrangement of boundaries could alter the quality or quantum of the estate.

55. In a covenant restricting the erection of a "tenement, apartment or community house," "apartment or community house" is not used as synonomous with "tenement." McClure v. Leaycraft, 97 App. Div. 518, 90 N. Y. S. 233. Restriction construed to mean that no building should be erected within limits prescribed without the consent of the grantor or her heirs. Hemsley v. Marlborough House Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 455.

56. See 3 C. L. 575, n. 8.

Held not violated: A building line restriction is not violated by the extension beyond it of an awning, the roof of which was composed of transluctent glass. Olcott v. Sheppard, Knapp & Co., 96 App. Div. 281, 89 N. Y. S. 201. A restriction against coal yards, slaughter houses or tenement houses is not one against the erection of a modern apartment house. Kitching v. Brown, 180 N. Y. 414, 73 N. E. 241. See, also, 3 C. L. 575, n. 10. A covenant fixing a building line except as to corners does not apply to corner lots when a new avenue is extended to intersect the street. Halstead v. Atterbury, 94 N. Y. S. 1023. An agreement that no house should be built except in the center of a certain lot held to mean the center of the lot at the time the building was erected, a part of the lot having in the meantime been taken for a street. Frost v. Havliand [Conn.] 61 A. 543.

Held violated: A bay window built up from a foundation is a house within a building restriction covenant. Righter v. Winters [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 770. A restriction against the erection of a tenement house or any house except a private dwelling is violated by the erection of a building, the interior of which is divided into three floors each finished to accommodate a separate family (Levy v. Schreyer, 177 N. Y. 293, 69 N. E. 598), and one that a lot shall not be occupied except for one dwelling house is violated by a building designed for two families; one on each floor and having separate entrances (Harris v. Roraback [Mich.] 100 N. W. 391), and, also, the projection of bay windows on the upper stories of a building beyond a building line (Righter v. Winers [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 770).

57. The meaning of "tenement house" at the time the covenant was made (it having at that time no well defined legal meaning) may be explained by witnesses familiar with the then conditions. As to whether it embraced an apartment house. Kitching v. Brown, 180 N. Y. 414, 73 N. E. 241.

58. A purchaser who has notice of a restrictive covenant is charged with notice of the purpose for which it was made. Hemsley v. Marlborough House Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 455. A recital in a deed that it is subject to the restriction in another deed is notice to the grantee of the restriction. Morrow v. Hasselman [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 369.

59. Mutual covenants restricting the use of land will be enforced against purchasers from such covenantors only when such allenees take with notice. Atlantic City v. New Auditorium Pier Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 59 A. 158. A contract between several that intoxicating liquor shall never be manufactured or sold on their premises is a bar to specific performance of a contract of sale of the property of one to a vendee without notice of such contract. Scudder v. Watt, 98 App. Div. 228, 90 N. Y. S. 605.

60. A restriction relative to a building line and material to be used is limited to the duration of life of the first building nature of the covenant.[61] The doctrine of equitable restriction is for the benefit of other land owned by the grantor and originally forming, with the land conveyed, one parcel.[62] There is a conflict of authority as to whether land subsequently added by accretion is bound;[63] but one who has participated in a general scheme of improvement will not be permitted to violate it.[64]

The jurisdiction of equity to enforce restrictive covenants is discretionary,[65] but they will be enforced according to their terms,[66] regardless of special damage shown,[67] unless conditions of the property have so changed[68] or other circumstances render enforcement inequitable.[69] A restriction against the erection of a tenement house is not affected by a subsequent change in the character of the neighborhood.[70] That immaterial violations have been excused does not preclude enforcement against offensive violations,[71] but one who has violated such a covenant is estopped to complain of a similar violation by his neighbor.[72]

The law of another state relative to equitable restrictions is presumed to be the same as the common law of the forum.[73] erected and is not a restriction in perpetuity. Welch v. Austin, 187 Mass. 256, 72 N. E. 972. Permanent restrictions being contrary to the policy of the law, equity in enforcing compliance will limit the decree by the duration of the conditions which form the basis of the equity calling for such enforcement. Robinson v. Edgell [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 1027.

61. Whether a perpetual restriction will be enforced in view of changed circumstances. Welch v. Austin, 187 Mass. 256, 72 N. E. 972.

62. He cannot as riparian owner impose an easement on the land of the state in front of his own. Evans v. New Auditorium Pier Co. [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 191. A restriction against building within fifty feet of the front of a lot conveyed is ineffective after the grantor's death where he was the owner in common of adjoining land. Hazen v. Matthews, 184 Mass. 388, 68 N. E. 838. A restriction relative to a building line, front elevation and material to be used is to be taken as inserted for the benefit of adjoining land of the grantor enforceable as equitable restrictions and not mere personal covenants. Welch v. Austin, 187 Mass. 256, 72 N. E. 972.

63. In New York: Restrictive covenants relative to land bounded by a shore line, applies to land added by accretion. Levy v. Halcyon Casino Hotel Co., 45 Misc. 289, 92 N. Y. S. 231.

In New Jersey a restriction against the erection of a building within 27 feet of a street does not apply to lands subsequently added by accretion to that conveyed. Evans v. New Auditorium Pier Co. [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 191.

64. Where several join in a deed of an easement to the public with a covenant that no buildings should be erected on the ocean side of the way, one cannot build on the ocean side on land subsequently acquired from the state. Evans v. New Auditorium Pier Co. [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 191.

65. Is governed by the principles applicable to the enforcement of specific performance. Robinson v. Edgell [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 1027. A covenant against the sale of intoxicating liquor or its manufacture on the land sold may be enforced by injunction, unless the plaintiff has been deprived of his right by his own conduct or laches. Mooter v. Whitman, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 141.

66. Righter v. Winters [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 770. Where one adjoiner gives notice to another that his building, in course of construction, would violate a covenant, but the building was completed after suit for injunction was brought, he is entitled to a mandatory injunction. Morrow v. Hasselman [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 369.

67. One entitled to enforce a restrictive covenant need not prove special damage. Id.

68. If the purpose of the restriction will be defeated, it will not be enforced. Robinson v. Edgell [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 1027.

69. Equity will not require the removal of a building which violates where the violation was accidental, the injury inflicted small, and the loss resulting from removal large. Hemsley v. Marlborough House Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 455. The violation of a covenant relative to a building line which has been violated without objection by other builders will not be enjoined, but where one owner objects he will be left to his remedy at law. Righter v. Winters [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 770.

70. McClure v. Leaycraft, 97 App. Div. 518, 90 N. Y. S. 233.

71. Levy v. Halcyon Casino Hotel Co., 45 Misc. 289, 92 N. Y. S. 231. Slight projections on the second story held immaterial deviations from a building line. Morrow v. Hasselman [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 369. An immaterial violation of a restriction which does not show an intention to abandon the general scheme of improvement is no defense to the enforcement of the covenant Id. The violation of a building line restriction on one street is no defense to its enforcement on another. Id.

72. Olcott v. Sheppard, Knapp & Co., 96 App. Div. 281, 89 N. Y. S. 201. Estoppel arises against one seeking to enforce a covenant against the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquor on the land conveyed, where he has encouraged a breach of the covenant. Mooter v. Whitman, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 141.

§ 3. Liability for unsafe condition of premises.[74]—A municipal corporation is not liable for injuries caused by defects in buildings used for a public or governmental purpose,[75] but a private owner [76] or one in control of premises must exercise ordinary care [77] to keep them reasonably safe [78] for persons who enter thereon by invitation [79] or as a tenant [80] or by other lawful license; [81] but he owes no duty to trespassers [82] or bare licensees,[83] except to refrain from doing them affirmative injury; but circumstances may require him to keep the premises reasonably safe for persons who are neither licensees nor trespassers.[84] For injuries caused a third person because of negligence in caring for leased premises, the tenant and not the School building. Clark v. Nicholasville [Ky.] 87 S. W. 300.

76. The maintenance of weak, warped and rotten eavetroughs 20 feet above a sidewalk and projecting over it is a public nuisance. Keeler v. Lederer Realty Corp. [R. I.] 59 A. 855. The owner of a leased building is liable to a pedestrian where because of the weak condition of an eavetrough above a sidewalk accumulated ice and snow fell upon him. Id. A resolution by a city board of health declaring a certain building to be a nuisance is not admissible in an action to recover damages for maintaining a nuisance. Holbrook v. Griffs [Iowa] 103 N. W. 479. Evidence that one was hurt by slipping on ice on the premises of another does not show negligence on the part of the owner. Vassin v. Butler, 94 N. Y. S. 14.

77. Evidence of previous accidents is admissible to show notice to the owner of the dangerous condition of his premises. Withers v. Brooklyn Real Estate Exch., 94 N. Y. S. 328. Evidence held for the jury as to whether the owner of an apartment house had exercised proper care in maintaining the porch railings in a reasonably safe condition. Widing v. Pennsylvania Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 239.

78. An abutting owner has no right to elevate his sidewalk above the natural grade so as to conform to a paper grade established by the borough. Where such walk constitutes a public nuisance it may be enjoined by the borough. Kittanning Borough v. Thompson [Pa.] 60 A. 584. Open and unlighted stairway on premises used as a public resort. Robinson v. Howard, 108 Mo. App. 368, 83 S. W. 1031. Where one in the exclusive control of an upper story allowed water pipes to break and injure those below, the question of his negligence was one for the jury. Levinson v. Myers, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 481. Evidence insufficient to show negligence of contractors where a plumber was injured during the erection of a building. Hartman v. Clark, 93 N. Y. S. 314.

79. Seeker of employment. McDonough v. James Reilly Repair & Supply Co., 90 N. Y. S. 358. A sign of the office door of the superintendent of a building to "see the engineer" is an invitation to an intending tenant to go to the engine room in the basement. Withers v. Brooklyn Real Estate Exch., 94 N. Y. S. 328. As to whether a junk dealer was on premises by invitation of the owner held a question for the jury. Foley v. Y. M. C. A., 90 N. Y. S. 406. An owner of a building who by invitation leads a person to the basement must exercise reasonable care to have the premises safe. Withers v. Brooklyn Real Estate Exch., 94 N. Y. S. 328.

80. See Landlord and Tenant, 4 C. L. 389.

A tenant who has notice of defects in the premises which the landlord has promised to repair cannot recover from him damages for personal injuries. Hedekin v. Gillespie, 33 Ind. App. 650, 72 N. E. 143. Premises are taken by a tenant subject to his own risk so far as their condition or subsequent repairs are concerned. Phelan v. Fitzpatrick [Mass.] 74 N. E. 326. A tenant in an apartment house walking down an unlighted common stairway knowing that the carpeting is defective is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence. Lee v. Ingraham, 94 N. Y. S. 284.

81. One entering for the purpose of delivering goods to a subtenant of a portion of the premises enters lawfully. Wright v. Perry [Mass.] 74 N. E. 328. An electric company to whose cars United States mail boxes are attached is bound to provide for the carrier who collects the mail at the barns, safe access to the cars. Young v. People's Gas & Elec. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 788. In visiting a public building in course of construction, a licensee does not assume a hidden risk known only to the contractor. Negligence of contractor's employes. De Haven v. Hennesey Bros. & Evans Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 472.

82. The owner of a building containing machinery in operation performs his duty toward trespassers of tender years when he warns them of danger and puts them out of the building, and is not liable if they return without his knowledge and are injured. North Texas Const. Co. v. Bostick [Tex.] 83 S. W. 12.

83. A licensee cannot recover for injuries caused by existing defects. Flaherty v. Nieman, 125 Iowa, 546, 101 N. W. 280. Boys injured by falling walls while in the ruins of a burned building. Haack v. Brooklyn Lyceum Ass'n, 44 Misc. 273, 89 N. Y. S. 888.

landlord is liable,[85] unless the landlord has covenanted to repair;[86] but for injuries caused by continuance of premises in such bad condition as to constitute a public nuisance, both lessor and lessee are liable.[87]

§ 4. Liability for negligent operation of elevators.[88]—In some states the owner of a passenger elevator owes a duty to persons invited to ride therein analogous to a common carrier and must exercise the highest degree of care consistent with practical conditions,[89] and is liable for the slightest negligence,[90] and even where this analogy does not prevail, he is required to exercise a high degree of diligence.[91] The person who has control of an elevator is liable because of negligence relative to the elevator shaft,[92] and not one who uses it but is under no duty to repair or guard it.[93] As between master and servant the duty to inspect an elevator cannot be delegated.[94] There is no liability for an injury which is the result of an accident [95] or of the contributory negligence of the injured person.[96] At common law the owner of a store building owed no duty to a trespasser to maintain guards about an elevator shaft,[97] nor is such a duty imposed by a statute requiring shafts to be guarded.[98] To warrant a recovery for noncompliance with a law relative to elevators, such noncompliance must have been the proximate cause of the injury.[99] The question of what constitutes negligence may be one of law,[1] but ordinarily is one of fact.[2]

85. Failure to properly close a cellar door. Duffin v. Dawson [Pa.] 61 A. 76. Unless the landlord has covenanted to repair or the defect existed when the premises were let. Hirschfield v. Alsberg, 93 N. Y. S. 617.

86. A landlord is not liable to a tenant unless he agrees to repair and is negligent in doing so. Galvin v. Beals, 187 Mass. 250, 72 N. E. 969. A landlord who covenants to make repairs is liable if by his negligence persons lawfully on the premises are injured because of his failure to do so. Barron v. Lledloff [Minn.] 104 N. W. 289.

87. Keeler v. Lederer Realty Corp. [R. I.] 59 A. 855. Where a building is leased to several tenants and the tenants are each given the right to use the elevator in common with the others, one inviting a person on the premises is liable with the landlord for injuries sustained because of the dangerous condition of the elevator. BURGLARY.

§ 1. What constitutes.[6]—Burglary, at the common law, is the breaking and entering of the mansion house of another in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony therein.[7] Statutes have very generally added to the common-law definition.[8]

Breaking and entry.[9]—The breaking is an essential element of the offense.[10] The slightest force, however, such as the opening of a closed door,[11] the tearing away of a curtain to a transom,[12] or raising a window, that has been left partially open, sufficiently to effect an entrance,[13] is a sufficient breaking, if done with felonious intent.[14] An entry likewise is necessary but it need not be of the whole body,[15] though it must be without the consent of the owner.[16] The mere presence and assistance of a detective, in the burglary, if he did not instigate it and it was committed as to every ingredient of the offense by the accused, is not available as a defense.[17]

Intent.[18]—The felonious intent in entering is an essential ingredient of burglary,[19] and it must be shown;[20] but where a breaking has been committed, the law inclines to impute the intent to commit theft, if an intent is to be inferred.[21]

2. Evidence insufficient to show negligence in the operation of an elevator. Lyon v. Aronson, 140 Cal. 365, 73 P. 1063. Sufficiency of inspection held a question for the jury. Starer v. The degree.[22]—The statutes of some states divide burglary into degrees as shown below.[23]

Accomplices.[24]

Nature and situation of building.[25]—Under the term "dwelling house" is included the other buildings that are occupied or used in connection therewith, as a chicken house on the premises,[26] a smoke house,[27] an outhouse,[28] or a shed.[29] And within the legal signification, the word "building" includes the cellar or basement as completely as it does the garret.[30] The felonious entrance of a private room in a hotel or boarding house,[31] or a "camphouse,"[32] is as much a burglary as the entrance of any other dwelling. The statutes of Texas make a distinction between a "house" and a "dwelling house;"[33] and the statutes of Ohio, between "inhabited" and "uninhabited" dwelling houses.[34]

§ 2. Indictment and proof thereunder.[35]—The indictment must sufficiently set forth the offense charged.[36] But it is not necessary, in an indictment for the burglary of a house other than a dwelling house, to allege that such house was not a dwelling house.[37] The ownership of the premises may be laid in the occupant, whose possession is rightful as against the burglar.[38] Special ownership of the premises or of the property stolen,[40] is sufficient to support an information for burglary. The misspelling of defendant's name, following the word "said," after it has once been correctly set forth, will not vitiate an indictment.[41]

Sufficiency of proof; variance.[42]—If the fact of the burglary is proved beyond all doubt, evidence connecting defendant therewith, beyond a reasonable doubt, is sufficient.[43] The intent charged in the indictment,[44] but not the actual commission of the intended felony,[45] must be proved; and where commission in the nighttime constitutes an essential element of the offense, affirmative proof thereof must be adduced;[46] and it must be proved, like any other fact, beyond a reasonable doubt.[47] It is unnecessary to prove the value of the property stolen,[48] unless a particular value is necessary to constitute a felony.[49] Proof that the occupant of the premises is a renter is not a variance from an allegation of ownership and occupancy;[50] nor evidence of the taking of a lodger's watch from his room, from an allegation of an intent to steal personal property belonging to the owner of the house.[51] A charge of breaking and entering a building is sustained by proof of breaking and entering the cellar.[52] And where the ownership of the property was laid in one "Neilson" and the proof showed the name to be "Nelson," the variance was held immaterial.[53] But proof that the house burglarized was a private dwelling house is a variance from an indictment for burglary of a house.[54]

§ 3. Evidence. Sufficiency.[55]—Where a larceny has been committed by an unlawful breaking and entering, the unexplained possession of stolen property is sufficient to sustain a conviction of burglary.[56] But the falsity of defendant's explanation of his possession of the property recently stolen, is not alone sufficient to warrant a conviction of burglary, where the state otherwise fails to make out a case.[57] And the receipt of property burglariously stolen by others is not sufficient to make one a principal in the crime of burglary.[58] Cases illustrating the sufficiency of evidence are grouped in the notes.[59]

Admissibility.[60]—Statements made by defendant to police officers relative to his possession of stolen property, before he had been charged with any offense, and without any threats or inducements, are admissible as admissions.[61] Another breaking may be so connected with the one for which the defendant is being tried as to be admissible for the purpose of showing a corrupt combination and defendant's participation therein.[62] The condition of a safe on the morning after the burglary is a material circumstance to show the intent with which the store was entered.[63]

§ 4. Instructions and verdict.[64]—Several instructions which have been discussed by the courts are mentioned in the note.[65] A person cannot be convicted of both larceny and burglary, under an indictment charging both, but the conviction of burglary embraces the charge of larceny.[66] Where the indictment charges that the breaking and entering was with intent to commit larceny, particularly setting it out, there may be a conviction of larceny from the house.[67]

BY-LAWS—AMENDMENT AS AFFECTING EXISTING MEMBERSHIP CONTRACTS.*

[SPECIAL ARTICLE BY WALTER A. SHUMAKER.]

It being well settled that the by-laws form part of the contract of membership,[1] though not incorporated by reference in the membership certificate,[2] unless of course they are expressly excluded by the terms of the certificate,[3] the question how far the contract may be impaired by subsequent change of the by-laws is of frequent occurrence and great importance, and the decisions are in hopeless conflict.

Necessity of reserving power to amend.—A few states maintain the doctrine that the power to alter the by-laws and thereby affect the contract rights of members exists irrespective of any reservation;[4] but the weight of authority is that a member's contract rights are affected only by by-laws existing at the date of his certificate, unless the power of amendment is expressly reserved.[5]

Effect of reservation of power to amend in general.—Where the power of amendment is reserved in the by-laws, it is usually held that the member is charged with notice of this as well as of other by-laws, and it is as much a part of the contract.[6] "Time and experience will develop a necessity for changes in the by-laws, and if the consent was not required there would be a class of members bound by the changed laws and a class exempt from their operation."[7] "It may sometimes happen that the interests of a few individuals may be impaired, but it is the right and indeed the duty of the society to protect the interests of the many rather than of the few."[8]

In view, however, of the cases of individual injustice, most courts have endeavored to restrict as far as possible the power of amendment. A few decisions, for example, read into the reservation a limitation to changes not affecting the essential character of the contract.[9] But except as to extreme cases, the difficulty of judicially determining the importance of particular amendments is obvious.[10] Akin to this is a limitation declared by a number of decisions that the reservation contemplates only such changes as are consistent with the member's contract and nothing that tends to unpair its obligation[11] or affect the contract rights of the member as distinguished from his membership rights.[12] One of the most logical distinctions along this line is that drawn by the Pennsylvania court, viz., that so far as the contract consists of the by-laws, it may be amended if a power so to do is reserved, but that which is specially agreed outside the by-laws cannot be impaired.[13]

Another line of decisions limits the power of amendment to changes not impairing vested rights,[14] as where a member was ill at the time sick benefits were reduced,[15] or before a by-law excluding from benefits diseases induced by certain causes.[16] Other courts hold that "the right of a sick member to future benefits is not a right to receive, so long as such disability continues, the future benefits provided by the by-law existing at the time the disability begins, but simply a right to receive them subject to such changes as may be made by the society."[17] In no cases is it doubted that after a present right to a certain benefit has accrued such right is vested beyond the power of recall.[18]

Amendments must be lawful and reasonable.—Whether or not a power of amendment is reserved, amendments are subject to the limitations governing original by-laws, that they shall not be contrary to law or in conflict with the charter,[19] and shall be reasonable in their character.[20]

Application of rules to particular amendments.—Though there is conflict on almost every specification, the weight of authority seems to be that as to existing contracts for membership there is no power to reduce benefits[21] or restrict the member to certain funds for their payment.[22] The right to increase dues is involved in more doubt, though the better opinion seems to sustain such power.[23] As to the making of new conditions of forfeiture, the weight of authority seems to sustain the validity of such changes, though the conflict of decisions is irreconcilable.[24] Rulings on other amendments of less frequent occurrence are summarized in the footnote.[25]

CANALS.

Land acquired by a canal company by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, for canal purposes, is not acquired in fee simple, but as an estate determinable upon the abandonment of the land for use as a canal.[68] A canal compay, required by its charter to erect good and sufficient bridges across its canal and to keep them in repair, cannot relieve itself of that duty by leasing its canal and appurtenant property and franchises.[69] A canal company is not an insurer against percolations and seepage of water through the ground through and on which it is constructed; such percolations and seepage must be shown to be due to gross negligence to render the company liable.[70] The landowner is under the duty of using reasonable care, skill and diligence to prevent injury through such seepage, but is not required to expend sums greater than that recoverable for the injuries caused.[71] In New York landowners may recover damages from the state for injuries to crops from overflows of the state canals, caused by negligence of employes.[72] The Washington statute providing for the excavation of public waterways by private contract, and for liens on tide lands for the compensation, is constitutional.[73] Since the state owned the tide lands affected at the time the act was passed, it could make any contract relative thereto which it chose, and purchasers from the state thereafter took with notice of the contract. Hence no question of due process or want of notice of the liens on the land could arise.[74] The statute in question did not give the credit of the state in aid of a private enterprise, nor did it create a debt for which the state is liable, so as to require submission of the act to the people at a general election;[75] nor is private property made liable, by the act, for a public debt.[76]

tutes mistake, accident, fraud, duress, or undue influence, for which relief may be had in a court of equity, is elsewhere treated.[77] The law relating to conveyances in fraud of creditors is also given separate treatment.[78]

§ 1. Nature of remedy.[79]—Cancellation is a purely equitable remedy.[80] Revocatory actions can be sustained in Louisiana only under the provisions of the code relating to such actions.[81]

Adequacy of remedy at law.[82]—Equity will not take jurisdiction of a suit for cancellation, if complainant has an adequate remedy at law.[83] The legal remedy must be as complete, adequate and efficacious as that given by equity.[84] Where complainant has a defense to the enforcement of the obligation which is plain and palpable, and within his command at any time, equity will not decree cancellation.[85] So if an instrument is void on its face, equity has no jurisdiction to cancel.[86] But if evidence outside the deed is required to prove it void, equity has jurisdiction.[87] In the latter case it is immaterial whether the instrument was void ab initio or became void after its execution by reason of a condition subsequent.[88] A void instrument will be cancelled if it constitutes a cloud on title.[89] A prior action at law may bar the suit in equity;[90] but if it appears that a pending legal action cannot be maintained, the property concerned having gone into the hands of a receiver, equity may grant relief.[91]

Relief obtainable, and conditions precedent thereto.[92]—Having acquired jurisdiction of a suit for cancellation or rescission, the court will retain it in order to settle all the equities of the parties relating to the transaction in suit.[93] Where a bill asks for a reconveyance after an accounting, the rights of all parties can be protected, and proper reimbursements ordered.[94] Plaintiff is not entitled to have

83. Legal remedy held adequate: Equity will not ordinarily take jurisdiction of a suit to cancel a policy of insurance after the death of the insured, since the remedy at law is in such case usually adequate. Des Moines Life Ins. Co. v. Seifert, 112 Ill. App. 277. Equity will not take jurisdiction of a bill by an heir to compel reassignment of a mortgage by the decedent on the ground of fraud, when relief may be had by application to the orphans' court. Giekeson v. Thompson, 210 Pa. 355, 59 A. 1114.

Legal remedy held inadequate: Where a promissory note has been obtained by fraud, equity has jurisdiction of a suit for cancellation, the remedy at law not being plain, adequate, and complete. Manning v. Berdan, 135 F. 159. A deed may be set aside for breach of the contract to support the grantor, the remedy at law being in such case inadequate and involving a multiplicity of suits. 91. Where a lessee executes a trust deed of his interest, contrary to the terms of his lease, and the beneficiary commences foreclosure of the trust deed and has the property placed in the hands of a receiver, the lessor may intervene in the foreclosure suit and seek cancellation of the deed though he has already commenced a forceable entry and detainer action. Gunning v. Sorg, 214 Ill. 616, 73 N. E. 870.

93. Equities of parties relating to land adjusted where cancellation of conveyance was decreed. Gatje v. Armstrong, 145 Cal. 370, 78 P. 872.

94. Reconveyance for failure to support grantor being ordered, grantees may be ala sale of the property in case of his failure to comply with the decree.[95] Where a conveyance of a one-third undivided interest in land is set aside, plaintiff is entitled to recover the value of one-third the whole parcel.[96] If reformation will protect the rights of the parties, and there are grounds for such remedy, an agreement, partly executed, should be reformed, and not canceled.[97] One party having shown a right to rescind, the other cannot have specific performance.[98]

To obtain the relief desired, plaintiff must do equity and will be required to restore to the defendant property with which he has parted,[99] unless defendant has been otherwise repaid, as by use of the property obtained under the contract.[1] A grantor seeking to have his deed canceled for fraud need not tender to a subsequent grantee, who had notice of the fraud, the price paid by him.[2] Where grantor seeks cancellation of a deed on the ground that his agent inserted the grantee's name in the deed without authority, restoration to the grantee of money paid by him cannot be required, when such money never came into the hands of the grantor.[3] Plaintiff cannot be required to restore to defendant money paid to one who was in fact acting for defendant, though he represented to plaintiff that he was also acting for her.[4] On cancellation of conveyance, defendant is entitled to credit only for the amount actually paid, and not for the face value of notes given in payment.[5] While a bill for rescission may be sustained, though no rescission or offer to rescind has previously been made or attempted,[6] yet if complainant has by his action, subsequent to notice of the alleged misrepresentations, elected not to rescind on that ground, equity will not grant relief.[7] One who has been induced to enter into a contract by false and fraudulent representations, upon which he has relied, has the right to bring an action to establish the fraud and to be released from its provisions, whether or not there be a threatened or attempted enforcement of it.[8]

Where several years after execution of deed, grantor moved on land, claiming it, and grantee brought ejectment, when grantor claimed a mortgage was intended and an absolute deed was executed by duress, relief would be granted the grantor only on condition that he pay the debt. Bryan v. Hobbs [Ark.] 83 S. W. 341. On cancellation of a deed, and a judgment directing a reconveyance, it is proper to require plaintiff to repay to defendant sums paid on the contract, less damages sustained by plaintiff through defendant's failure to perform. Troxler v. New Era Bldg. Co. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 58.

1. Plaintiff will not be required to restore money received when defendant has received a greater amount in proceeds from the land. Gatje v. Armstrong, 145 Cal. 370, 78 P. 872. Where deed of realty and personalty, based on consideration of support of grantors and a payment of money to their daughter, was set aside after a number of years, the payment to the daughter could not be made the basis of an equitable claim against the grantors, the grantees having had personalty, awarded to them, and having enjoyed use of the land meantime. Krause v. Krause [Wis.] 104 N. W. 76.

2. Grantee erased word "trustee" after name, and then transferred reversion after, giving two mortgages. Held, erasure being visible, no tender of reversion price necessary. Flitcraft v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & Trust Co. [Pa.] 60 A. 557.

3. Mitchell v. Squire [Iowa] 103 N. W. 783.

4. Willey v. Clements [Cal.] 79 P. 850.

5. Eighmy v. Brock [Iowa] 102 N. W. 444.

6. Du Bois v. Nugent [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 339. An offer of restitution is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of a bill for cancellation of a conveyance procured by fraud, and such offer need not be made in the bill. Rule both in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. Thorpe v. Packard [N. H.] 60 A. 432.

7. Evidence held to show election not to rescind exchange of lands on account of certain alleged false representations. Du Bois v. Nugent [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 339.

be brought within a reasonable time.[10] Where a deed or other conveyance has been procured by undue influence, if it be not ratified by the party making it after the undue influence has ceased to operate, it may be set aside after his death at the suit of those who succeed to his rights.[11] A cause of action for cancellation of a deed which had been returned to the grantor, and secretly obtained by the grantee and recorded, does not arise until the grantee so obtained possession of and recorded the deed.[12] The five-year limitation statute in California is applicable to a suit by a widow to cancel a deed procured from her husband through fraud and undue influence.[13]

Venue.—A suit to cancel a deed is one affecting title to realty, and in Missouri must be brought in the county where the land is situated, though summons may be served on defendant anywhere in the state.[14]

§ 2. Cause of action and grounds for relief.[15]—Relief will be granted where it appears that the instrument or contract sought to be canceled was procured by fraud,[16] duress,[17] or undue influence;[18] or that the grantor or party executing the

10. On ground of duress. Bryan v. Hobbs [Ark.] 83 S. W. 341. Suit to cancel deed for undue influence ten years after making it, nine years after discovery of grantee's claim, and two years after his death, barred by laches. Ferns v. Chapman, 211 Ill. 597, 71 N. E. 1106. Delay of seven years and receipt of four annual instalments on price held to bar suit for cancellation of deed on ground of duress. Horn v. Beatty [Miss.] 37 So. 833. Relief from assignment of stock procured by fraud denied where eight years had elapsed, the party charged with fraud and the attorney in charge of transaction having meantime died. Ripple v. Kuehne [Md.] 60 A. 464.

16. False representation in prospectus by corporation promoters as to value of property to be transferred to corporation held ground for cancellation of note given for stock. Manning v. Berdan, 135 F. 159. A deed from heirs to the administrator will be set aside when based on misrepresentations on faith of which the price was reduced, unless the administrator pays the full value. Cornish v. Johns [Ark.] 85 S. W. 764. Where promoters of corporation bought realty and sold it to the corporation, of which they became directors, at an advanced price, concealing facts, corporation could rescind real estate transfer for fraud. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelt. Co. v. Bigelow [Mass.] 74 N. E. 653. A bill seeking annulment of deed, and reconveyance, because part consideration was worthless stock which grantor was induced to take through fraud, held to state cause of action. Wagner v. Fehr [Pa.] 60 A. 1043. False representation that grantee intended to build on transferred property ground for cancellation. Troxler v. New Era Bldg. Co. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 58.

Equity has jurisdiction of suit to rescind contract for stock on ground of fraudulent misrepresentations, and to compel restitution of money paid. Hubbard v. International Mercantile Agency [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 24. Where woman was induced by false representations as to value of certain building and loan stock to exchange what she held for a different kind, she being ignorant and having no opportunity to seek other advice, a decree restoring her to her former position was warranted. Tucker v. Osbourn [Md.] 61 A. 321. Deed declared void for fraud in erasing word "trustee" after grantee's name. Flitcraft v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & T. Co. [Pa.] 60 A. 557. Deeds cancelled and cash returned where evidence showed sale of shooting gallery void for fraud. Parker v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 856. Where one of two joint purchasers obtained a deed of other property from the other, which was in fact without consideration, owing to false representations, such facts constituted cause of action for cancellation. Paddock v. Bray [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 383, 88 S. W. 419. Evidence held to show deed procured by fraud and undue influence. Gatje v. Armstrong, 145 Cal. 370, 78 P. 872. Evidence held not to show fraud or duress in execution of deed of mineral land. Horn v. Beatty [Miss.] 37 So. 833. Pleading held not to set out facts showing fraud or undue influence warranting cancellation of deed. Anderson v. Anderson [Wis.] 100 N. W. 829.

17. Evidence held to show mortgage executed to secure son's debt, induced by threats to prosecute son, constituting duress. Gray v. Freeman [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1105.

18. Evidence held to warrant finding that deeds were procured by undue influence and never delivered, and decree of cancellation upheld. Douglass v. Longcor [Mich.] 100 N. W. 1004. Bill held to state cause of action for equitable relief on ground of undue influence, but not on ground of inadequacy of consideration, where husband induced wife to execute trust deed. Sims v. Sims, 101 Mo. App. 407, 74 S. W. 449. Evidence held to sustain finding of fraud and undue influence in suit to set aside deed. Winn v. Itzel [Wis.] 103 N. W. 220. Evidence insufficient to prove assignment of stock was for insufficient contract was incompetent.[19] It is no defense to a suit for cancellation for fraud that the person defrauded intended to defraud another.[20] If the false representations alleged are proved to have been made and to be false, it is immaterial whether or not their falsity was known to defendant.[21] A ratification of an exchange of property with knowledge of a false representation as to quantity but without knowledge of other material misrepresentations does not estop the party so ratifying from seeking to rescind the contract.[22] On discovery of the other misrepresentations, both the ratification and the original contract may be rescinded.[23] A bill which sets up fraud in several transactions between the parties and seeks the vacation of such transactions is not demurrable by reason of the fact that rescission of the final transaction between them is not asked for.[24] Fraud practiced by a wife on her husband is ground for cancellation of a deed from him to her induced thereby.[25] Where a conveyance is executed by a husband for an inadequate consideration, in fraud of his wife's rights in the homestead, at a time when he was non compos as to duties owed by him to her, equity has jurisdiction to enjoin ejectment by the purchaser, and to cancel the deed.[26] Equity will not set aside a transfer voluntarily and freely made as a part of a fraudulent[27] or illegal[28] transaction; but where the parties do not stand on equal terms, one being superior to and influencing the act of the other by reason of greater knowledge and experience, the fact that the transferor acted voluntarily is no defense to a suit to set the transfer aside.[29]

In case of mistake, either mutual or unilateral, equity will reform the contract, so as to make it express the real intention of the parties,[30] or rescind it if the minds of the parties have not in fact met upon the same terms.[31] A mistake consideration or brought about by undue influence. Ripple v. Kuehne [Md.] 60 A. 464. A conveyance by one mentally competent, and under no undue influence, but made because of a fear of litigation, such fear being in fact groundless, will not be set aside. Newman v. Newman [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 635.

19. Finding that deed was void for want of mental capacity of grantor held supported by evidence. Parker v. Ballard [Ga.] 51 S. E. 465. Allegations of mental incompetency of grantor by reason of insanity held to state cause of action for cancellation. Logan v. Vanarsdall [Ky.] 86 S. W. 981. 21. Such knowledge must be proved in action at law for deceit, but such proof is unnecessary in equitable action for rescission. Du Bois v. Nugent [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 339. Where minor heirs relied on knowledge and experience of kinsman, and his attorney, who represented that they would be liable for debts, really barred by limitations, and gave a deed of their interests at a reduced price on account of such debts, the heirs were entitled to a rescission, unless the amount of such debts was paid them, even though the misrepresentations were unintentional, and in regard to law. McAllen v. Hodge [Minn.] 102 N. W. 707. In absence of fraud, transfer of realty as part of agreement of separation of husband and wife, will not be canceled. Anderson v. Anderson [Wis.] 100 N. W. 829.

29. Ingersoll v. Weed, 93 N. Y. S. 291. Where grantees induced execution of deed without consideration, frightening grantor as to liability on bond, and promising to reconvey when the bond was settled, grantor could have deed canceled. Sanford v. Reed [Ky.] 85 S. W. 213.

of one party relative to the substance of the contract, such mistake being induced by false representations of the other party, or if not so induced, being participated in and made effective by the other, is ground for rescission.[32]

Contracts and conveyances made [33] or delivered [34] without authority may be set aside. A bill may be maintained for the cancellation of a void instrument, if it clouds the title of the real owner of property.[35] Where a deed deposited in escrow is delivered to the grantee without authority from the grantor, and the deed is recorded, equity will remove the resulting cloud on grantor's title by annulling the deed.[36] Willful and surreptitious breaches of immaterial parts of a contract constitute ground for rescission.[37] A breach of an agreement by a grantee to support the grantor is ground for cancellation of the deed.[38] Failure of the grantees to pay a debt of the grantor, which they verbally assumed, the debt being secured by deed of trust on the land, is not ground for cancellation of their deed.[39] A voluntary deed cannot be set aside on the ground of inadequacy of consideration;[40] but a total failure of consideration is ground for cancellation of notes.[41] An executed gift will not be revoked by equity unless wrongfully obtained.[42]

§ 3. Procedure. Pleading.[43]—A bill for annulment of a stock contract for fraud need not allege that complainant has suffered pecuniary loss.[44] General averments of fraud in a petition seeking the setting aside of a deed and other relief are sufficient against an objection to the introduction of evidence under the petition.[45] A petition to set aside a deed for fraud may be amended by setting up a mutual mistake of fact.[46] Where a bill alleged a fraudulent sale of real estate to complainant, a prayer for rescission and damages is not inconsistent.[47] A bill by

34. Cancellation of deed may be decreed where it is delivered by a third person to the grantee named, contrary to the grantor's intention. Spacy v. Ritter, 214 Ill. 266, 73 N. E. 447. Deed, without consideration, delivered by third person to grantee without authority and recorded by grantee, may be canceled at suit of grantor's heirs. Peters v. Berkemeier, 184 Mo. 393, 83 S. W. 747. Equity has jurisdiction of a suit to cancel a deed on the ground that it had been fraudulently taken from the grantor's safe and recorded, no delivery having been intended by the grantor. Cribbs v. Walker [Ark.] 85 S. W. 244. Petition held not to negative purposed delivery of deed to wife, and not to state cause of action for cancellation for nondelivery. Newman v. Newman [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 635.

35. Though a contract relating to land was no longer effective owing to lapse of time, yet as it constituted, on the record, an apparent cloud, suit to cancel it was held proper. Sawyer v. Cook [Mass.] 74 N. E. 356.

36. Bales v. Roberts [Mo.] 87 S. W. 914.

37. Bales v. Roberts [Mo.] 87 S. W. 914. A deed granting petroleum may be canceled for failure to perform its covenants where the deed provides for annulment in such case. Carney v. Barnes [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 423.

38. Evidence sufficient to support finding that grantee failed to maintain grantor as he agreed, and that deed should be canceled according to its terms. Caudill v. Lemaster, 26 Ky. L. R. 1010, 82 S. W. 1009. Where one under the stress of infirmity or age deeds property to another in return for an assurance of support, the transaction is treated as creating a trust, and not a mere contract, and on failure of the grantees to perform, equity will grant a reconveyance. Grant v. Bell [R. I.] 58 A. 951.

40. Newman v. Newman [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 635. That a deed of trust containing no power of revocation was without consideration and voluntary is not ground for its rescission at the instance of the grantor. Dayton v. Stewart, 99 Md. 643, 59 A. 281.

41. Complaint held to state cause of action for cancellation where machine for which notes were given failed to work, was returned and accepted by the seller, who refused to return the notes. E. T. Kenney Co. v. Ruff [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 622.

a wife whose husband has conveyed the homestead in fraud of her rights to enjoin ejectment by the purchasers, and to cancel the deed, is not multifarious.[48] A bill seeking the reassignment of a mortgage on the ground of fraud must properly allege knowledge of the fraud by the assignee.[49] Where a wife's amended complaint in divorce sets up facts showing a deed by her husband void, and makes his grantee defendant, the validity of such deed can be determined only on a cross petition by grantee against the wife, answer thereto, and proof on the issue thus made.[50]

Parties.[51]—All persons interested in the subject-matter and who will be affected by the decree are necessary parties.[52] Cancellation of a contract to convey land will not be decreed where one to whom plaintiffs have pledged the contract to secure a loan has not been made a party and has not consented to cancellation.[53] A suit by a corporation to rescind a real estate transfer on the ground of fraud practiced by directors who sold to the corporation, may be maintained without joining the representatives of a nonresident who held legal title and had a half interest in the contract of sale.[54] In revocatory actions in Louisiana parties to the acts attacked must be made parties to the suit.[55]

The widow of the grantor of realty is the real party in interest entitled to sue for the cancellation of a deed procured from the grantor through fraud and undue influence of the grantees.[56] A grantee of mortgaged land may sue for cancellation of the mortgage on the ground that it was executed by the mortgagor under duress.[57] If plaintiffs have only the equitable title to the land in question, they may maintain an action to cancel a deed thereto, though not in possession.[58]

Evidence and proof.[59]—Relief, if granted, must be upon proof of the grounds alleged.[60] Such proof must be clear, strong and convincing; a mere preponderance is not enough.[61] Ordinarily plaintiff has the burden of proof.[62] But if a fiduciary relation exists between parties to a conveyance, the burden is upon the grantee to show that the transaction was free from fraud and undue influence.[63] In a suit

CARRIERS.

PART I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions.[1]—A common carrier is one whose business it is to carry persons or chattels for all who may choose to employ and remunerate to son free from undue influence. Id. Stepfather held not to have overcome presumption of fraud and inadequate consideration in taking a deed from stepdaughter, 18 years of age, while she was a member of his family. Eighmy v. Brock [Iowa] 102 N. W. 444. Evidence in suit to cancel deed from son to father held sufficient to rebut presumption of improper influence by father. Ferns v. Chapman, 211 Ill. 597, 71 N. E. 1106.

64. Gray v. Freeman [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1105.

him.[2] The term includes, besides the owners of shipping,[3] railroads,[4] street railroads, express, and the like, the owners of elevators,[5] telephones,[6] telegraphs,[7] sleeping cars [8] and ferries,[9] but not irrigation works,[10] draymen [11] or livery stable keepers.[12]

§ 2. Public control and regulation. A. In general.[13]—The Federal government under the commerce clause of the constitution is empowered to regulate commerce between the states, and this it has assumed to do by the interstate commerce act to the extent of preventing unlawful discrimination in charges and service by interstate carriers.[14] Rates are prescribed for government service by roads receiving aid from the government.[15] Except as limited by the commerce clause of the Federal constitution and those clauses designed for the security of persons and property, the several states and their municipal subdivisions have under their

3. Whether a towing company held itself out as a common carrier held a question for the jury. Bassett v. Aberdeen Coal & Min. Co. [Ky.] 88 S. W. 318.

4. A railroad company is not a common carrier of sleeping cars and employes performing duties therein. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hamler, 215 Ill. 525, 74 N. E. 705. A contract by which a railroad operates, in its capacity as common carrier, a switch over private property, may be abrogated at will by the said road and the owner of the property, and the switch may be sold to the latter regardless of the motives actuating the parties. Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co. v. Oman, 134 F. 441.

5. A merchant operating an elevator in his store to transport his customers is a carrier of passengers. Morgan v. Saks [Ala.] 38 So. 848.

6. Gwynn v. Citizens' Tel. Co., 69 S. C. 69 S. C. 434, 48 S. E. 460; State v. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 390.

7. State v. Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 390.

8. Mississippi Const. § 195. Pullman Co. v. Kelly [Miss.] 38 So. 317.

9. A city operating a ferry in part for profit may be considered a common carrier and held to the ordinary liabilities of one. Townsend v. Boston, 187 Mass. 283, 72 N. E. 991.

NOTE. Ferrymen as common carriers, see exhaustive note, 68 L. R. A. 153.

10. One who leases land and an accompanying water right from an irrigation company cannot claim damages beyond the limitation in his contract for failure to supply water on the others that the company is a common carrier, since it was under no duty apart from the contract to supply to him. Moore-Cortes Canal Co. v. Gyle [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 350.

11. Jaminet v. American Storage & Moving Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 128.

12. Livery stable keepers who let horses and carriages for hire either with or without drivers are not common carriers of passengers. Stanley v. Steele [Conn.] 60 A. 640. A livery stable keeper furnishing a conveyance and driver for a special trip is a private carrier for hire and held only to ordinary care. Not liable for negligence of driver. McGregor v. Gill [Tenn.] 86 S. W. 318.

13. See 3 C. L. 592. As to whether interurban car lines are railroads within the general railroad law, see note 67 L. R. A. 637.

14. Where the power of the court is invoked to compel obedience to an order of the interstate commerce commission, the court must enforce it as a whole or not at all, having no power to modify. Interstate Commerce Com. v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 134 F. 942. An order of the interstate commerce commission commanding a restoration of a commodity to the classification it bore previous to a recent change by a classification committee of the railroads is in effect an attempt to regulate rates and beyond the powers of the commission. Id. Mandamus to enforce the orders of the interstate commerce commission is authorized only in special cases. United States v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 197 U. S. 536, 49 Law. Ed. 870. An agreement between competing roads for a through rate conditioned on a reservation to the initial carrier of the power to route the shipments is an unlawful pool, and it is immaterial that the purpose in making it was to thwart a rebate system practiced by the connecting carriers. Interstate Commerce Com. v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 F. 829. The word "freights" as used in the interstate commerce act means as well the commodities carried as the compensation for such carriage. Id. A contract for the division of earnings between competing roads is prohibited by the interstate commerce act whether any division is in fact made or not. 24 Stat. 380, § 5. Id. Where a complaint for violation of the interstate commerce act makes a general allegation that the rule complained of is violative of the act, which the answer generally denies, the issue raised extends to every possible violation of the act, and in passing upon the issue the court is not confined to the grounds or reasons assigned by the commission for its conclusion. Id. In a suit to enforce its orders, the interstate commerce commission represents the public, and its right to relief is not affected by the fact that the complainants before it have themselves participated in unlawful practices. Id.

15. The Federal statutes requiring land-grant railroads to carry government freight at reduced rates do not apply to a road which received no land grant but runs its trains over a land-grant road for a short distance. United States v. Astoria & C. R. R. Co., 131 F. 1006.

police powers the right to control and regulate common carriers both as to the manner of conducting their business and the rates to be charged for their services.[16] Thus, street surface railroads in New York are required under penalty to give transfers on payment of a single fare to any line under the same management,[17] and similar control by terms of franchise is common.[18] A contract between a railroad and a sleeping car company for sleeping car service is neither a violation of the anti-trust law, nor a monopoly, nor does it tend to affect transportation or charges therefor.[19]

(§ 2) B. Duty to undertake and provide carriage.[20]—A common carrier is required to furnish reasonable facilities for transporting and to transport all persons and property legally offered for transportation,[21] and statutes declaring and

16. Though an express company is not organized as a corporation, it is subject to legislative control as a common carrier. United States Exp. Co. v. State [Ind.] 73 N. E. 101. Express companies may be compelled to deliver packages to the consignees at their residences or places of business. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3312a does not clash with 14th amendment, nor interfere with interstate commerce. United States Exp. Co. v. State [Ind.] 73 N. E. 101. Statute is not complied with by delivery at the company's office to consignee in person. Id. The summons in New York in an action for the penalty for failure to sell tickets as required by statute must contain reference to the statute. Burdick v. Erie R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 122. The corporate commission of North Carolina cannot in consideration of a low rate of freight limit the liability of a carrier for loss of goods through its negligence to less than their value. Everett v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 138 N. C. 68, 50 S. E. 557. A city ordinance prohibiting hanging on the outside of a street car passed at a time when horse cars were universal has no application to passengers riding on the running board of open electric cars. Frank Bird Transfer Co. v. Morrow [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 189. A statute prohibiting common carriers transporting intoxicating liquors for delivery in towns in which licenses are not granted will not support a prosecution of one not a common carrier. Commonwealth v. Beck, 187 Mass. 15, 72 N. E. 357. The railroad commission may require that specified trains must stop at a station in order that the community may be properly served. Proceedings held to constitute due process of law. Railroad Com'rs v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 641.

The tariffs that may be charged by railroad companies are within control of the state within reasonable limits. Matters to be considered in determining reasonableness. State v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [Fla.] 37 So. 314. Particular rates may be prescribed lower than a general one. State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Fla.] 37 So. 652. Rate held reasonable. State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Fla.] 37 So. 657. Burden is on company to show unreasonableness. State v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [Fla.] 37 So. 658. Lease construed to bring two roads under one management so as to constitute but one road within rules of railroad commissioners regulating freight rates. State v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [Fla.] 37 So. 314. The state statutory classification of freights and the rulings of the state railroad commission are not applicable to interstate shipments. Greason v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 722.

17. By lease or otherwise. McLaughlin v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 653; Griffin v. Interurban St. R. Co., 179 N. Y. 438, 72 N. E. 513. Only a single penalty can be recovered in a single suit. Where three suits are begun in one day for three separate penalties, the last suit waives the others. McLaughlin v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 653. Refusal to accept a valid transfer when tendered for passage is equivalent to refusal to give one rendering the carrier liable to the penalty. Harris v. Interurban St. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 42. Where two lines operate on same street, it will not be presumed in the absence of evidence that the car on which transfer was refused was defendants'. Id. Answer pleading possible alternative route but not showing that transfers were issued over it is bad. Holmes v. Interurban St. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 57. Timely notice is necessary where carrier offers transfers over only one of two available routes. Freeman v. New York City R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 47; Holmes v. Interurban St. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 57. Statute held not repealed. Lux v. New York City R. Co., 45 Misc. 222, 92 N. Y. S. 109. Court can take judicial notice of other cases in determining whether an erroneous judgment shall be reversed or modified and affirmed. In re Transfer Penalty Cases, 92 N. Y. S. 322. No excuse that to give transfers might cause undue crowding of cars. Moskowitz v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 385. A woman whose husband or escort pays her fare may recover. Carpenter v. enforcing this duty are common.[22] Damages for failure to transport freight as agreed are recoverable,[23] and a connecting carrier is bound to receive a shipment when tendered it in the absence of any valid reason for declining.[24] Intersecting railroads are generally required to interchange business,[25] and may be required to build tracks,[26] and exercise the power of eminent domain where necessary to facilitate such exchange.[27] A statute prohibiting delay by carriers and providing a penalty for violation thereof is a proper exercise of the police power of the state.[28]

The duty to furnish cars [29] may be enjoined by statute,[30] under penalty,[31] and where so enjoined is properly enforceable by mandamus.[32] Cars may be appor-

[Neb.] 101 N. W. 23. Must furnish suitable cars. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall [Ark.] 86 S. W. 802. A connecting carrier is not obliged by a through bill of lading to furnish immediate transportation of cattle, but is only bound to forward them with reasonable diligence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kapp [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 233. A common carrier cannot be required to receive freight on or along a private switch, but its duty in that regard is confined and limited to its own depots or shipping and receiving points. Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co. v. Oman, 134 F. 441. That the enforcement of the duty will result in financial loss to the railroad is immaterial. Commonwealth v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 712. Persons who have no property rights in a private switch over another's land cannot compel the latter to permit the railroad to receive and ship their freight over the switch to the railroad's own track. Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co. v. Oman, 134 F. 441. A railroad company is under no legal duty to receive and transport passengers on a special train made up and used for the purpose of going to and returning from a wreck on the company's line. One who with full knowledge of the circumstances contracts with the conductor to be carried as a passenger on such train to and from the wreck, and who pays fare for his passage in going, has no right to an action ex delicto against the company for its breach of the contract to furnish him return transportation. Du Bose v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 121 Ga. 308, 48 S. E. 913. A telephone company as a common carrier may be liable for refusal to grant connections to all making proper application. Gwynn v. Citizens' Tel. Co., 69 S. C. 434, 48 S. E. 460. Contract to furnish cars held not shown by telephone conversation with person answering at railroad company's office. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Fromme [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 651.

22. It is the duty of railroads to furnish cattle yards to restrain cattle offered for transportation prior to their being loaded. Pub. St. 1901, c. 160, § 1. Flint v. Boston & M. R. Co. [N. H.] 59 A. 938. The delivery of cars to shipper's private track scales is a public duty connected with carriage which may be regulated by the state. Norfolk & P. Belt Line R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 103 Va. 289, 49 S. E. 39. A petition founded on the statute of Indiana requiring railroad companies to keep stations open before the time of arrival of scheduled trains must aver that the train in question was scheduled. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5188. Draper v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. [Ind.] 74 N. E. 889. An order of the railroad commission requiring the operation of trains to and from two stations is proper and enforceable. It is not complied with by running a through train that does not stop at these stations. Traffic agreements between parties to lease cannot be effective to nullify a statute or order of the commission. Commonwealth v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 712. Indictment for failure to provide waiting-room at station must charge that railroad commission ordered it. Commonwealth v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Ky.] 86 S. W. 542.

30. Application held sufficient. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Mayes [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 53. Whether carrier could refuse to furnish for shipments out of state is not in issue in action for delay where no such claim was made when cars were furnished. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Buchanan [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1073.

31. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Everett [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 17.

32. Alternative writ may be amended tioned in case of scarcity.[33] Damages for failure to furnish cars on demand or as contracted are recoverable.[34] It is not a discrimination to prefer shippers owning spurs over those who must load on the company's sidings which it needs for the conduct of its own business.[35]

(§ 2) C. Charges.[36]—The courts have no general supervisory jurisdiction over rates,[37] but the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation is eminently a question for judicial investigation.[38] Charges may be regulated [39] but cannot be reduced below an amount sufficient to allow the carrier to earn an amount equal to the legal and usual rate of interest in the locality on the amount actually invested.[40] Reasonable compensation for the service actually rendered is all that a common carrier is permitted to exact,[41] and railroads have no right to graduate their charges in proportion to the prosperity which attends the industries whose products they transport,[42] nor can they advance an already reasonably remunerative rate on a particular commodity because they need more revenue.[43] Limitations in the franchises of corporate carriers are enforceable.[44] A shipper is entitled under the common law to relief in a state court from unreasonable freight rates though the shipment was interstate and the rate has been filed with the interstate commerce commission as required by the Federal statute.[45] An agreement between as to percentage demanded, and may run against officer of railroad. West Virginia Northern R. Co. v. United States [C. C. A.] 134 F. 198. Mandamus will not lie to enforce a contract between the carrier and shippers prescribing the ratio of distribution of cargo. United States v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 138 F. 849.

33. West Virginia N. R. Co. v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 198; State v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Neb.] 101 N. W. 23.

34. Contract held not shown with person authorized to represent railroad. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Fromme [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 651. Complaint held demurrable for failure to show demand on person authorized to furnish cars. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Moss [Ark.] 86 S. W. 828. Injury to cattle from delay is recoverable. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Scott & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1065. Complaint held sufficient. Plaintiff held entitled to recover for expense of keeping teams used to load logs. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Interstate Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 530. A statute forbidding railroad companies to charge for transportation for any specific distance a greater sum than the charge for carriage over a greater distance is within legislative discretion and is valid. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Anderson [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1019. In California a carrier once reducing a rate to compete with another cannot again raise it without the consent of the state. Const. art. 12, § 20. Restriction of privileges on limited ticket held no consideration for reduction. Edson v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 144 Cal. 182, 77 P. 894. An action for a penalty for an overcharge is not supported by proof of a declaration by defendant's agent that there was an overcharge on a shipment coming from another state where no tariff or statute fixing the rate is shown. Latta Martin Pump Co. v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 50 S. E. 686.

40. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brown, 123 F. 946. The general rule is that the greater the tonnage of the commodity transported the lower should be the rate of freight charges for such transportation. Tift v. Southern R. Co., 138 F. 753.

41, 42, 43. Tift v. Southern R. Co., 138 F. 753.

44. The granting of a franchise between specified points on condition that only one fare shall be charged on said road has no application to charges made on other portions of the system of roads operated by the same company. Byars v. Bennington & H. V. R. Co., 99 App. Div. 34, 90 N. Y. S. 736. Where suit is brought for a penalty for charging excessive fares and the fare charged is not contrary to the wording of the franchise, extrinsic evidence is not admissible to explain the franchise so as to give it a different meaning. Id. In Massachusetts the selectmen of towns have no authority to limit rates of fare on street railroads. Cunningham v. Boston & W. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 355.

45. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1052. If the rate on a shipment to Mexico is not higher than that government allows, there can be no recovery. Concession construed. Ulmer v. National R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 838. Where the rate charged for two single deck cars of sheep is no more than the carrier was authorized to charge for a railroad company and a competitor that for a limited time the railroad company will not reduce its rates of fare unless required to do so by law is not against public policy.[46]

(§ 2) D. Discriminations and preferences.[47]—Unjust and unreasonable discriminations by common carriers are unlawful alike by common and statute law,[48] and statutes providing for the enforcement of the carrier's duty in this respect are common.[49] A railroad company may lawfully contract to furnish a shipper solid trains for the transportation of his freight unmixed with other freight, to use one engine only for such transportation and to deliver the shipment at a certain time.[50] A union depot company may grant an individual the exclusive right to solicit cab passengers on its grounds.[51]

§ 3. Connecting carriers, draymen, and transfermen.[52]—In the absence of a special agreement, the initial carrier's responsibility ends[53] and the connecting one double deck car, there is no extortion. Nynn v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 562.

46. Raritan River R. Co. v. Middlesex & S.Traction Co., 70 N. J. Law, 732, 58 A. 332.

47. See 3 C. L. 592.

48. A railroad cannot charge a higher rate for the carriage of raw materials to those who will not agree to reship their manufactured product by its line. Hilton Lumber Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 136 N. C. 479, 48 S. E. 813. A railroad company receiving and delivering freight in car lots from and to shippers along a switch track cannot refuse its service to some of such shippers while extending it to others. Agee & Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 680), except to enforce car service regulations (Id). Car service association is not a "trust." Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles [Miss.] 37 So. 939. Discrimination is none the less unlawful, though based on a socalled "rebilling rate." What constitutes true rebilling rate. Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Mississippi [Miss.] 38 So. 356. A voluntary rate made to favored shippers by a carrier so low as to be unremunerative is none the less a rate and must be granted to all alike. Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission [Miss.] 38 So. 356. Since exemplary damages are recoverable for a willful violation of the rule against discrimination, an averment in the petition showing willfullness should not be stricken. Augusta Brokerage Co. v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 121 Ga. 48, 48 S. E. 714. It is not discrimination to charge more for sheep than for cattle. Wynn v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 562.

Note: Exclusive patronage will not allow discriminations (Minacho v. Ward, 27 F. 529); nor is the fact that one individual gives heavier traffic to the railroad material (Hays v. Pennsylvania Co., 12 F. 309), unless the cost of transportation is less because of car-load lots (Brownell v. Railroad, 4 Interstate Com. Rep. 285). On the other hand, it has been held that differences between two towns in population and tonnage traffic justify different rates. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Interstate Com., 74 F. 803. The question seems to be one of economics rather than of legal theory. In passenger cases, the economic question does not arise, so that party-tickets are allowable. Interstate Com. Com. v. Baltimore & O. Railroad, 145 U. S. 263, 36 Law. Ed. 699.—5 Columbia L. R. 244.

49. The Georgia Railroad Commission has power to promulgate a rule requiring all railroad companies operating in the state "to afford to all persons equal facilities in the transportation and delivery of freight without unjust discrimination against any." Augusta Brokerage Co. v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 121 Ga. 48, 48 S. E. 714. Rule prohibits discrimination against persons but not against commodities. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 473. The Federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of actions for damages for unlawful preferences under the act of congress. Gulf, etc., Co. v. Moore [Tex.] 83 S. W. 362. Refusal to accept a shipment as shipper routes it, and compelling him to route differently, is actionable. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Stribling [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 374. Cause of action is not defeated by acceptance under duress of shipping contract routing shipment as carrier desires. Id.

53. Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 52. In the absence of special contract the initial carrier's liability ceases when he has delivered the property safely to the connecting carrier. Thomas v. Frankfort & C. R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1051, 76 S. W. 1093; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Woodward [Ind.] 72 N. E. 558; Meredith v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 137 N. C. 478, 50 S. E. 1; Bishawaiti v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 783; Soviero v. Westcott Exp. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 375; Southern R. Co. v. Vaughn [Miss.] 38 So. 500. Kansas statute attempting to place burden of showing cause of loss on initial carrier held inapplicable. Laws 1893, p. 176, c. 100, § 7. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Canton Milling Co. [Kan.] 79 P. 656. Where there is delay in shipment and damage to the goods, the burden is on the initial carrier to show safe delivery to the connecting carrier. Statute raising presumption carrier's begins,[54] on the safe delivery to it of the article carried. By agreement between the carriers,[55] or by the terms of the ticket,[56] or bill of lading,[57] creating a partnership or agency between them all carriers participating in a contract of carriage may become responsible for the acts of each,[58] and in some states the that injury to freight in possession of carrier was caused by its negligence has no application to discharge initial carrier. Meredith v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 137 N. C. 478, 50 S. E. 1.

54. A connecting carrier is not liable for a loss occurring while the shipment is in the hands of the initial or an intermediate carrier, in the absence of agency or partnership. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Stock & Sons [Va.] 51 S. E. 161; Vincent v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. [La.] 38 So. 816. There is a presumption that goods lost from a package were lost by the connecting carrier where it appears that the package was in good order when delivered to the original carrier and also when delivered by it to the connecting carrier. Bullock v. Haverhill & B. Dispatch Co., 187 Mass. 91, 72 N. E. 256. Prima facie case against last carrier is shown by evidence of damage to goods at time of delivery and delivery to the initial carrier in good condition. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Pitts & Son [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 727. Connecting carrier not liable for defects in car furnished by initial carrier. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Myer [Ark.] 86 S. W. 999.

55. Carriers may issue through bills of lading and may make contracts for through shipments and for the interchange of business with each other. Graham v. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. [Ga.] 49 S. E. 75. A bill of lading guarantying a through rate to destination does not establish an agency or partnership relation. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Stock & Sons [Va.] 51 S. E. 161. Where acceptance is not specially enjoined upon a carrier by law, acceptance of freight from a connecting carrier involves assent to the terms of the bill of lading issued by the original carrier. Bank of Commerce v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 15 Ohio Dec. (N. S.) 32, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 403. A connecting carrier is not liable for the default of another carrier in performing part of the transportation, where there was merely a traffic agreement for division of profits arising from the transportation. Wilson v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 1091.

Note: The theory of the action is that all and each of the corporations are liable by reason of some arrangement or agreement between them, and that they are to be bound by the undertaking of the initial carrier. This situation must result from some contract or agreement which would constitute the defendants liable for the default of any one of the carriers in performing the contract of transportation. Swift v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., 106 N. Y. 206, 12 N. E. 583. In the absence of a special contract, the liability of the first carrier ceases when it has safely carried and delivered the shipment to the second without unreasonable delay. Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Woodward, [Ind.] 72 N. E. 558. Where goods are delivered to a transportation company to be transported over its route, and over several railroads to the place of their destination, the companies having associated and formed a continuous line, an intermediate company is liable in the absence of a special contract for the loss of goods happening upon its part of the line. Barter & Co. v. Wheeler, 49 N. H. 9, 6 Am. Rep. 434; Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. McDaniel & Strong, 42 Ga. 641; Bullock v. Haverhill & B. Dispatch Co., 187 Mass. 91, 72 N. E. 256; Montgomery & West Point Railroad Co. v. Moore, 51 Ala. 394; Lotspeich v. Central R. R. Co. of Georgia, 73 Ala. 306. Recovery may be had of the initial carrier for injury to perishable goods shipped over connecting lines, caused by negligent delay in transporting, though each carrier was guilty of delay, there being no evidence that the damages were caused solely by the delay of the subsequent carriers. St. Louis, I. M. R. Co. v. Coolidge [Ark.] 83 S. W. 333. But a mere traffic arrangement for a division of the profits of transportation among different corporations does not create a joint contract. Merrick v. Gordon, 20 N. Y. 96.—3 Mich. L. R. 662.

56. A railroad company selling a coupon ticket for transportation to a station beyond its own line may by special contract assume responsibility for safe carriage for the entire trip, but in the absence of evidence the presumption is that the initial carrier acts only as agent of the connecting carrier, and is responsible only for safe carriage on its own line. Pennsylvania Co. v. Loftis [Ohio] 74 N. E. 179; Id. [Ohio] 74 N. E. 182. Where ticket is bought and baggage checked to a certain station in a certain city and passenger and baggage are both delivered there, without intimation that the carriers line ends elsewhere, the contract will be deemed a through one to that place. Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 52. Instruction predicating recovery on showing of defendant's negligence held error where partnership is alleged. Woman died from exposure in cold cars. Hardin v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 440.

57. Initial carrier may contract for safe delivery at destination, and in that event the connecting carrier becomes his agent. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Woodward [Ind.] 72 N. E. 558. A receipt for baggage which recites "to be delivered" to a place named is not a special contract for through transportation. Soviero v. Wescott Exp. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 375. Contract to deliver beyond its own line within time specified. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. American Trading Co., 195 U. S. 439, 49 Law. Ed. 269. Where carrier is paid full freight to destination, it is a through contract. Eckles v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 99. A carrier contracting to deliver a shipment at a certain place and time is liable for the default of a connecting carrier. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 499.

58. Where live stock is shipped in Texas on a through contract, both roads are liable for damages occasioned by each and each is entitled to a judgment over for the damage inflicted by the other. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Andrews [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 390. Recovery may be had of the initial initial carrier is responsible for the entire trip in the absence of express contract to the contrary.[59] The initial carrier is responsible for the effects of its own negligence though they do not develop until in the hands of the connecting carrier,[60] and connecting carriers are not liable for delay arising from the misrouting of the shipment.[61] An initial carrier is not negligent in delivering freight to a connecting carrier to be transported to a station on the connecting carrier's line which it has officially stated to be open for business but which is not so in fact.[62] An intermediate carrier concurring in causing delay is not relieved by showing that the others by the exercise of reasonable diligence might have delivered the shipment in time.[63] Where several are sued in Texas the jury may apportion the damages among them.[64] The act of one carrier in accepting for transportation a ticket that has expired does not bind the succeeding carrier.[65] Nor is the carrier which sells a special return ticket responsible for the acts of the agent of the connecting carrier at destination in stamping and signing it ahead of time and assuring the passenger that it would be honored for passage.[66] A carrier to whom money is paid, for the passage of a person from another point from which another carrier must be the initial carrier, is not liable for the initial carrier's delay in delivering the the ticket in accordance with telegraphic instructions.[67]

Part II. Carriage of Goods.

§ 4. Delivery to carrier and inception of liability.[68]—The liability of a common carrier does not begin until there has been a complete delivery of the goods for immediate shipment with the knowledge and consent of the carrier.[69] carrier for delay, though each carrier was guilty, there being no evidence that it was wholly caused by subsequent carriers. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Coolidge [Ark.] 83 S. W. 333. Certificate of state inspector as to quality of corn shipped held not admissible as against a last carrier not a party thereto nor to the bill of lading. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Diamond Roller Mils [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 660. Instructions as a whole held not objectionable as authorizing recovery against one for negligence of other. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Gray [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 838.

59. Baggage. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Washington [Ark.] 85 S. W. 406; Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Record [Ark.] 85 S. W. 421. Carrier may limit responsibility to injuries inflicted by himself on interstate shipments. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. McCampbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1158.

60. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Stephens [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 933. Failure to furnish proper cars. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall [Ark.] 86 S. W. 802. Furnishing passenger coach incapable of being warmed. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Foster [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 879. Cars improperly bedded by the initial carrier do not become on acceptance a part of the connecting carrier's equipment so as to relieve initial carrier for damaging effect of improper bedding developing on connecting line. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. O'Loughlin [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1104.

61. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Buchanan [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1073.

68. See 3 C. L. 594.

69. Goods loaded on carrier's car and by him placed in warehouse for want of shipping instructions raises liability only of warehouseman. Louisville & N. R. Co.'s Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 405. Delivery of cotton on platform at point where there is no agent is not a delivery to the carrier. Anderson v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 661. The liability of a carrier does not attach until the goods are unconditionally delivered by the shipper and accepted by the carrier. Chicago, B. & O. R. Co. v. Powers [Neb.] 103 N. W. 678. A railroad is not liable as a common carrier for goods deposited in its warehouse awaiting shipping instructions from the owner. Louisville & N. R. Co.s Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 405. Mere marks on the goods do not impose the duty of immediate transportation where the custom is to require written bills of lading and shipping instructions. Id. As a general rule a railroad company is not obliged to receive

§ 5. Bills of lading and other contracts of carriage.[70]—Bills of lading and special contracts of affreightment in so far as they are not illegal or violative of law[71] are binding upon the parties to them as are other contracts.[72] Where a shipper contracts for the carriage of a certain number of cattle and within the knowledge of the carrier's agent includes with his own sufficient of another's to make up the number, the third person is a party to the contract and can sue on it.[73] A breach of contract to furnish cars is actionable,[74] and a carrier has authority to contract to furnish cars off its own line.[75]

Interpretation.[76]—The legal qualities of a bill of lading are governed by the law of the place where it is issued.[77] Where freight is accepted without any special agreement as to the charge for transporting it, the law implies an undertaking to pay the usual rate.[78] A bill of lading issued by a railroad company for cotton to be delivered "ship side" merely means that it will be delivered at a wharf accessable to the railroad and is not notice that carriage has been contracted for freight except at stations, but it may as a result of custom or as a consequence of an express contract become obligated to receive freight at a point on its line where there is no station, depot, platform, cars or agent. Georgia, S. & F. R. Co. v. Marchman, 121 Ga. 235, 48 S. E. 961. An agent who has authority to contract to place cars along a railway at points where there is no agent, freight house or other accommodation to receive freight has authority to agree on behalf of the company to receive such freight when deposited in such places to await the arrival of cars, though he may not have authority to make a contract of affreightment. Georgia, S. & F. R. Co. v. Marchman, 121 Ga. 235, 48 S. E. 961. The carrier is not responsible as such for cattle awaiting shipment in its stock pens while the shipper has the right to remove them to feed and water before shipment. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Powers [Neb.] 103 N. W. 678. Held question of fact whether cattle in railroad stock yard were in possession of carrier or shipper. Flint v. Boston & M. R. Co. [N. H.] 59 A. 938. Cars loaded and attention of conductor called completes delivery, though no bill of lading delivered. Pine Bluff & A. R. Co. v. McKenzie [Ark.] 86 S. W. 834.

70. See 3 C. L. 595.

71. A contract made in a neutral state in time of war to transport articles that are contraband of war is not illegal. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. American Trading Co., 195 U. S. 439, 49 Law. Ed. 269. A stipulation that no action shall be brought for damages after the expiration of sixty days is an attempt to vary the statute of limitations and invalid. Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker, 26 Ky. L. R. 1025, 83 S. W. 106.

72. Goods received by railroad company for transportation and the freight paid for under their classification, the company could not reclassify afterwards and charge a different rate. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Seitz, 105 Ill. App. 89. The acceptance of freight from the initial carrier does not bind the connecting carrier to the terms of an oral contract of shipment. Thomas v. Frankfort & C. R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1051, 76 S. W. 1093. The rule in bills of lading imposing demurrage for dilatoriness in unloading cars is binding upon consignees, even if they in fact be ignorant. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles [Miss.] 37 So. 939. A special written contract of affreightment is not affected by printed matter in a through bill of lading delivered after the shipment of the goods. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. American Trading Co., 195 U. S. 439, 49 Law. Ed. 269. Contract with live stock agent of defendant held binding on it. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 47. A rate quoted on lumber does not include railroad switch ties. Greason v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 722. Rate made by agent in ignorance of rate promulgated by interstate commerce commission is binding on carrier. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Gardner [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 793. Contract held binding, though not signed by shipper or his agent. Eckles v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 99.

77. Cappel v. Weir, 92 N. Y. S. 365; Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 52; National Bank of Bristol v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 99 Md. 661, 59 A. 134. An express company's shipping receipt is governed as a contract by the law of the state in which it is made and the carriage begins. Powers Mercantile Co. v. Wells-Fargo & Co., 93 Minn. 143, 100 N. W. 735.

on any particular ship.[79] An express company's local or general custom with regard to the delivery of packages is not admissible to contradict the express terms of the shipping receipt.[80]

Indorsement and transfer.[81]—Bills of lading and shipping receipts are not negotiable in an unrestricted sense,[82] and such negotiability as they ordinarily possess may be defeated by a restrictive statement.[83] But non-negotiable bills of lading like any other non-negotiable instrument may be transferred by assignment,[84] which will transfer title to the property subject only to the rights of the parties to it.[85]

§ 6. The duty to furnish cars [86] is discussed above.

§ 7. Forwarding and transporting goods.[87]—During transportation the goods are ordinarily under the exclusive control and protection of the carrier, who has a right to their custody until delivery at destination.[88] The shipper may, however, contract to care for them en route, and relieve the carrier from responsibility for resultant injuries.[89] Loss occurring by reason of carrier's failure to ice car as agreed may be recovered.[90]

82. National Bank of Bristol v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 99 Md. 661, 59 A. 134. A bill of lading is not negotiable like a bill of exchange, and the rights arising out of a transfer correspond not to those arising out of the indorsement of a negotiable promise to pay money, but to those arising out of a delivery of the property itself under similar circumstances. Grayson County Nat. Bank v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1094, citing cases.

83. Negotiability may be destroyed by writing or printing the words "non-negotiable" across its face. National Bank of Bristol v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 99 Md. 661, 59 A. 134.

84. The assignee taking subject to the equities between the original parties. National Bank of Bristol v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 99 Md. 661, 59 A. 134.

85. National Bank of Bristol v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 99 Md. 661, 59 A. 134. A bill of lading represents the property, and a valid title to it obtained by pledge or otherwise is as valid a title to the goods as could be obtained to the goods themselves. Grayson County Nat. Bank v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1094, citing cases. A bank discounting a draft attached to a bill of lading is not a mere collector, but is entitled to the property as security for the money advanced. Mather v. Gordon Bros. [Conn.] 59 A. 424. Where the bill of lading is taken to the seller's order and his assigns, the mere fact that the buyer is named as consignee will not pass title to him. Grayson County Nat. Bank v. Nashville & C. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1094. Where a bank has discounted a draft with a bill of lading attached it owns the goods represented by the bill. Cannot be attached by creditor of shipper. Temple Nat. Bank v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 518, 82 S. W. 253; Bank of New Roads v. Kentucky Refining Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 1103. When a bill of lading taken to the order of the seller is endorsed by him and attached to a draft upon the purchaser for the price, and the draft is then delivered to a bank for collection, or is discounted by the bank in reliance upon the security of the bill of lading, no title passes to the purchaser until by payment of the draft he has duly obtained possession of the bill of lading. Grayson County Nat. Bank v. Nashville & C. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1094, citing cases. Evidence held to show that bank discounted draft attached to bill of lading and not that it held as a mere collector. Temple Nat. Bank v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 518, 82 S. W. 253. The bank to which such a draft is sent for collection and which delivers the bill of lading without payment is liable only for the actual value of the goods, where they are defective and refused for that reason. People's Nat. Bank v. Brogden [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 601.

88. It is not incumbent upon a railroad company to deliver goods or live stock while in transitu to the shipper consigned to himself, at least unless the freight is paid. Olds v. New York, etc., R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 924. A shipper has no right to have a car diverted en route from the destination provided in the bill of lading to another without paying a reasonable charge therefor. Carr v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 799.

89. A shipper who fails to care for the goods as per contract cannot hold the carrier for resultant loss. Where a shipper of live stock does not elect to take charge of them as he agrees under the contract, he cannot complain of failure of attention on the part of the carrier. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. James, 117 Ga. 832, 45 S. E. 223. Where plaintiff assumes the care of his own team while on a ferry boat, the ferryman is not responsible as a common carrier. Ferryman requested him to unhitch during passage. Frierson v. Frazier [Ala.] 37 So. 825. Where shippers undertake to supply a car with ice, the carrier has a right to assume in the absence of notice that enough was supplied to last until delivery could be made

Delay in transportation.[91]—The transportation must be accomplished with reasonable expedition,[92] the carrier being liable for all damages proximately caused by negligent delays,[93] and in some states for a destruction of the goods by act of God which they would have escaped but for the delay.[94] A statute authorizing special damages for detention does not apply to an action to recover the value of a shipment converted by the carrier.[95]

Delivery to succeeding carrier.[96]—In the absence of specific directions, the initial carrier has the right to route shipments beyond its own line,[97] but a contract of this sort may be changed or modified by subsequent oral agreement,[98] and for its breach by himself or a succeeding carrier, the initial carrier is held liable.[99] in the ordinary course of business. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Reyman [Ind.] 73 N. E. 587. But if actual delivery is delayed beyond the usual time, there is an implication that the carrier will protect the shipment from heat. Id.

90. Damage incurred after leaving initial carrier may be recovered against it. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Wilkerson Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1069. See, also, Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Reyman [Ind.] 73 N. E. 587.

In order that recovery may be had for delay in shipment, some evidence must be produced of the length of time ordinarily required. Johnston v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Neb.] 97 N. W. 479. Where no time is provided in the contract, the time must be reasonable. Sloop v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 111. Keeping live stock on track from 8 a. m. till 3 p. m., at destination before delivery is gross negligence not covered by limitation in contract. Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 9. Where freight is accepted without notice that delivery will be delayed, the carrier is not absolved by a rush of business or an accumulation of freight. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kolp, Jr. [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 417.

93. The mismarking of three of four packages constituting a single shipment is no defense to an action for a penalty for failure to forward the one properly marked, where the three mismarked ones were forwarded to the place addressed. Lexington Grocery Co. v. Southern R. Co., 136 N. C. 396, 48 S. E. 801. The statute of North Carolina subjecting to a penalty carriers who delay shipments more than four days does not relieve them of their common-law liability for delays less than that period. Laws 1903, p. 999, c. 590. Meredith v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 137 N. C. 478, 50 S. E. 1. Evidence that a defective engine delayed a shipment shows negligence, though the train crew worked faithfully to put the engine in order. McCrary v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 82. The mistaken act of a deputy collector of customs in refusing a clearance to a ship while the shipment in question is on board is no excuse to the carrier for failure to transport as agreed. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. American Trading Co., 195 U. S. 439, 49 Law. Ed. 269.

Damages: Only interest on the amount invested in the commodity for the time of the delay is recoverable in the absence of notice of special loss. Lee v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 136 N. C. 533, 48 S. E. 809. Where a carrier has no notice that delay in shipping will result in any special damage, the measure of damages for delay is the difference in market value of the goods when delivered and when they should have been. Id. Traveling salesman working on commission held not entitled to recover for lost time for delay to samples. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Harris, 121 Ga. 707, 49 S. E. 703. Whether plaintiff was bound by routing in contract of shipment occasioning delay complained of held question for jury. Houston & T. Cent. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1073. Complaint showing five days' delay in forwarding shipment held sufficient. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Moss [Ark.] 86 S. W. 828. Carrier held not injured by admission of evidence of oral contract as to time of delivery, same having been suspended by written contract containing no such stipulation, the delay having been negligent. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Hadley [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 932.

94. Whether the goods are perishable or non-perishable. Flood overtaking delayed shipment. Bibb Broom Corn Co. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 102 N. W. 709; Grier v. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal R. Co., 108 Mo. App. 565, 84 S. W. 158. Not liable on theory of breach of contract for loss not reasonably to be anticipated. Flood. Moffatt Commission Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 117. Negligent delay in forwarding goods will not render the carrier liable for their destruction by fire for which the carrier was not responsible, though they would not have been destroyed but for the delay. General Fire Extinguisher Co. v. Carolina & N. W. R. Co., 137 N. C. 278, 49 S. E. 208. A carrier is not liable for a loss of property in shipment through an act of God which could not reasonably have been foreseen, although but for its previous negligence delaying the shipment the property would have escaped the danger and the loss would not have occurred. Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 135 F. 135.

§ 8. Loss of or injury to goods [1] not traceable directly to the shipper's fault,[2] an act of God [3] or the public enemy,[4] renders the carrier liable, within the valid stipulations of the contract, for the value of lost goods,[5] or the amount of injury to goods not totally destroyed.[6] If negligence of the carrier co-operates with a natural catastrophe in bringing about the loss of a shipment, the carrier is liable.[7] A private carrier is liable only for negligence,[8] and not for an injury by a third person that could not have been foreseen.[9]

§ 9. Delivery by carrier and storage at destination.[10]—The responsibility of land carriers as such does not end with the arrival of the goods at their destination, but the contract includes in the case of express companies their delivery to the consignee,[11] and in the case of railroads, notice to the consignee and reasonable opportunity after notice to take them away.[12] The liability for goods left in other line. Steidl v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. [Minn.] 102 N. W. 701. The initial carrier is liable for increase of freight caused by deviation from shipping directions where communication with the shipper was feasible. Fisher v. Boston & M. R. Co., 99 Me. 338, 59 A. 532. The diversion of the shipment by an intermediate carrier to a line other than that designated by the initial carrier is not negligent where the next succeeding carrier designated could not take it on account of floods and no injury from the diversion was reasonably to be anticipated. Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 135 F. 135. If the initial carrier routes the shipment on the bill of lading and then delivers to another connecting carrier, it is liable. Eckles v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 99.

5. Where an express company pays for a lost shipment on an agreement for reimbursement in case the shipment is subsequently restored in the same condition as when shipped, it is entitled to recover on evidence that it tendered the goods in apparent good condition. Platt v. Gross, 92 N. Y. S. 249. Delivery of a lady's bonnet in good order in the customary paper box for transportation from New York to Newark and its delivery ten days later to the consignee with the appearance of having been trampled upon, the bonnet being ruined, makes a case. Jacoby v. Platt, 94 N. Y. S. 435. Where a transfer man deposited baggage on the station platform, he is responsible for it though the railroad company's servants knew it was his custom so to do. Alexander v. McNally [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 1.

6. The consignor may refuse to receive a returned C. O. D. package offered in a damaged condition. Freeman v. Weir, 94 N. Y. S. 327. The owner cannot refuse to accept property injured in transportation and recover its full value but must accept it and sue for the injury. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Everett [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 257. That the goods were unsaleable to plaintiff, a wholesaler, does not entitle him to refuse them because damaged and sue for their value. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Pitts & Son [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 727.

8. Bassett v. Aberdeen Coal & Min. Co. [Ky.] 88 S. W. 318.

9. Jaminet v. American Storage & Moving Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 128.

10. See 3 C. L. 598.

11. It is the duty of a carrier by express to reliver packages to the consignee at his residence or place of business. United States Exp. Co. v. State [Ind.] 73 N. E. 101. Citing many cases. An express company's duty where it receives a package addressed to a point at which there is no express service is to forward it to its nearest office and notify the consignee. Rogers v. Fargo, 93 N. Y. S. 550.

12. In Michigan the carriers' liability as such continues until the consignee has been notified of the arrival of the goods and he has had reasonable time in the common course of business to take them away after such notification. Immaterial that he knew probable date of shipment and probable time of arrival. Walters v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 102 N. W. 745. The liability of a carrier as such continues until the consignee has had a reasonable time to remove the goods. No notice required in South Carolina. Bristow v. Atlantic Coast Line R. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 529. Notice of arrival of ship and cargo at 3 o'clock one day destroyed at 5 the next, held not sufficient to relieve carrier. Rosenstein v. Vogemann, 102 App. Div. 39, 92 N. Y. S. 86. The placing of a car of fruit at the usual point for unloading, according to the usages of the trade, relieves the carrier from further obligation than that of warehouseman without further notification to the consignee of its arrival. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Reyman [Ind.] 73 N. E. 587. Where the carrier has no warehouse and consignees are expected to unload freight di-

the carrier's possession after delivery and acceptance by the consignee,[13] and for goods remaining on hand after reasonable attempts to deliver, is that of warehousemen.[14] Where there is a refusal to deliver,[15] or a misdelivery,[16] the carrier is liable for the value of the goods; and being responsible for misdelivery he is entitled to take all necessary precautions to assure himself that the claimant of goods is entitled to them,[17] and to protect his possession of the goods by all lawful means.[18]

Liability for conversion.[19]—Unexplained refusal to deliver a shipment as agreed amounts to conversion.[20] A carrier cannot set up title in himself to defeat

rect from the cars, delivery is not complete until the car has been placed and the consignee notified. Bachant v. Boston & M. R. Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 642. Postal notice is sufficient. Normile v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 36 Wash. 21, 77 P. 1087. Especially where the consignee is aware of a local custom to give such notices. Friedman v. Metropolitan S. S. Co., 45 Misc. 383, 90 N. Y. S. 401. Evidence held insufficient to show that notice of arrival of shipment was given. Rogers v. Fargo, 93 N. Y. S. 550. The mere setting out of a flat car on which freight is loaded at a flag station is not a delivery to the consignee. If the carrier does not put such a shipment in its warehouse and it is stolen it is liable. Normile v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 36 Wash. 21, 77 P. 1087. Where a consignee noticed a shipment of freight on track and immediately took steps to ascertain if it was his and if so to have it unloaded, no notice of arrival by the carrier was necessary. Id. Where a car containing freight is set out on a side track at the destination, the consignee is not guilty of lâches in not being prepared to take it away until the day following notice of arrival. Id. Where there is no dispute as to the facts, the question what is a reasonable time for removal of goods is a question of law for the court. Id. Car load freight must he offered at the usual place. Loeb v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 118.

13. Verification and receipt by consignee for goods in car on track is a valid delivery and for subsequent theft the carrier is not liable in the absence of gross negligence. Kenny Co. v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 132.

14. After termination of the transit the carrier's liability is that of warehousemen only. Southern R. Co. v. Aldredge [Ala.] 38 So. 805.

15. Refusal to deliver based on failure to pay an unauthorized additional charge for freight cannot be justified on the ground of the absence of the shipping bill. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Seitz, 105 Ill. App. 89. Carrier cannot refuse delivery for underrating due to fault of its clerks. Id.

16. An answer defending misdelivery on account of similarity of packages and their marks must show that plaintiff was responsible for the similarity. Ullman v. Southern R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 480. Where goods have been transferred from one carrier to another, the last carrier is bound to deliver them to the holder of the bill of lading issued by the first carrier. Grayson County Nat. Bank v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1094. When the seller takes a bill of lading which expressly stipulates that the goods are to be delivered at the point of destination to himself, his order or assigns, there is the clearest evidence upon the face of the transaction that notwithstanding such an appropriation of the goods as might have been sufficient to transfer the title to the buyer the seller has determined to prevent this result by keeping the goods within his control. Id. Citing cases. Where an intermediate common carrier is required by statute to carry freights offered, it is bound to take notice of the fact that a bill of lading was issued, and is responsible for the delivery of the goods without the production of the bill of lading, but is not bound by its terms as to freight charges and like conditions. Bank of Commerce v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 403, 15 Ohio Dec. N. P. 32.

17. There is no delay in delivery where delivery was made to the consignee's employe as soon as his authority to receive was produced. Moore v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 103 Va. 189, 48 S. E. 887. The carrier has a right to demand identification of a consignee unknown to it and to demand production of the bill of lading before making delivery. Sellers v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 398. The carrier, being bound to deliver the goods in accordance with the bill of lading, is under obligation to ascertain whether or not a bill of lading was delivered to the shipper, and if delivered, he must retain the property until it is demanded by one claiming under it. Grayson County Nat. Bank v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1094.

18. Where a seller ships goods consigned to himself and forwards the bill of lading with draft attached for collection and the buyer without authority takes possession and refuses to pay the draft, the carrier on paying for the goods can maintain trover against the buyer to recover their value Fordyce v. Dempsey [Ark.] 82 S. W. 493. A consignee procuring delivery of a shipment without the bill of lading on furnishing an indemnity bond cannot after paying the value of the shipment to the carrier recover the sum so paid from him as garnishee, the carrier having paid it to the consignor. Collins, Grayson & Co. v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 477.

19. See 3 C. L. 599.

20. On refusal by consignee, shipment was sent to another point to sell for charges but before sale consignee demanded it and offered to pay charges. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Rines & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1092. A cause of action for conversion is not made out by proof of failure to deliver a shipment and failure to return it because of loss (Gold-an action for conversion,[21] but evidence of his ownership is admissible on the question of damages.[22] The damages for a conversion at the point of destination are the value of the property at that point less the unpaid freight charges.[23]

§ 10. Liability of carrier or connecting carrier [24] is discussed above.[25]

§ 11. Limitation of liability.[26]—In the absence of restrictions in the contract, a common carrier is liable as an insurer for the loss of goods intrusted to it for transportation unless caused by the act of God, a public enemy, some inherent defect in the goods, or by the shipper himself.[27] It is competent, however, in most states for the shipper and carrier to agree that the carrier's liability shall extend only to losses through its actual or "gross" negligence,[28] on its own line,[29] and that its liability shall be limited to a stated amount unless a greater amount or value is declared in the bill of lading and an increased rate paid therefor.[30] An agreement, in consideration of a reduced rate, that the carrier shall not be liable for failure to deliver at a particular time, is valid.[31] Such contracts being drawn by the carrier for his own benefit are construed liberally in favor of the shipper,[32] and strictly against the carrier,[33] and will not as a rule avail to relieve the carrier bowitz v. Metropolitan Exp. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 318), or of delay in notifying the consignor of the consignee's refusal of the goods (Fishman v. Platt, 90 N. Y. S. 354). A mortgagor shipping cattle cannot recover against the carrier for commission where the carrier delivered them to a mortgagee entitled to possession. Johnston v. Cbicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Neb.] 97 N. 28. Cau v. Texas & P. R. Co., 194 U. S. 427, 48 Law. Ed. 1053; Russell v. Erie R. Co., 70 N. J. Law, 808, 59 A. 150. Except as to such gross negligence or misfeasance, as public policy forbids such stipulation. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 105 Ill. App. 54. A carrier cannot limit its liability for negligence by contract. Eckert v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [Pa.] 60 A. 781; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Dolan [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 302; Bibb v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 663; Trace v. Penn. R., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 466; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Fox, 113 Ill. App. 180. Where the contract of shipment stipulates against liability for loss by fire unless occurring through the carrier's negligence, no liability is shown by mere proof of loss by fire. Michaels v. Adams Exp. Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 142; Anderson v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 661. Liability for negligence in supplying defective cars cannot be provided against. Nevius v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Wis.] 102 N. W. 489. Burden is on carrier to plead and prove special contract limiting liability. Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. Dunlap [Kan.] 80 P. 34. And that loss occurred without his negligence. Georgia So. & F. R. Co. v. Johnson, King & Co., 121 Ga. 231, 48 S. E. 807. Contract to ship "released" must be construed to mean that carrier is only relieved from losses occasioned without his negligence. Id.

29. Eckles v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 99; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. McCampbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1158. A contract limiting the carrier's liability for damages to cattle to injuries occurring on its own line wil not relieve it from the consequences of failure to properly bed the cars, though the actual damage did not occur until the shipment had passed from its control. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. O'Loughlin [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1104.

30. A carrier may limit the amount of recovery to an agreed valuation in case of loss or damage as a result of its negligence or otherwise. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Hubbard [Ohio] 74 N. E. 214. An express company can limit its liability for loss by negligence to $50 unless a greater value is declared. Macfarlane v. Adams Exp. Co., 137 F. 982. In Minnesota and Illinois express companies cannot limit their common-law liability. Powers Mercantile Co. v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 93 Minn. 143, 100 N. W. 735. An arbitrary fixing of amount by carrier, by printed stipulation in the bill of lading, is invalid but a bona fide fixing of value by the shipper whereby he obtains a lower rate will be sustained. Georgia So. & F. R. Co. v. Johnson, King & Co., 121 Ga. 231, 48 S. E. 807. An arbitrary limitation without consideration will not be enforced. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McIntyre [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 346. Such limitation not permitted in Kentucky. Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker, 26 Ky. L. R. 1025, 83 S. W. 106. That damaged stock brought the full declared value does not absolve defendant; his liability in that case being such a proportion of the loss as the declared bears to the actual value. United States Exp. Co. v. Joyce [Ind.] 72 N. E. 865.

31. Does not cover a negligent delay. Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 9.

of liability for the full value of goods lost through his negligence.[34] The contract containing the limitation must be shown to have been assented to by the shipper,[35] and founded on a sufficient,[36] though not necessarily an independent consideration.[37] Contracts of carriage are construed and enforced according to the law of the state where they are made,[38] except in the case of stipulations as to time to sue,[39] and the courts of the state in which the loss occurs will enforce a limitation of liability as the courts of the state where the contract was made would have done.[40] In states in which carriers are not allowed to limit their liability, they may make a special contract under which the shipper of live stock shall assume responsibility

34. A regulation of the state corporate commission fixing a rate on certain goods limited to $5 per hundred-weight and "released" does not relieve the carrier of liability for the full value of goods lost through his negligence. Everett v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 138 N. C. 68, 50 S. E. 557.

35. Statement by agent "I don't suppose you wish to declare any excess" not replied to by shipper held no contract though limitation was printed on receipt. Colvin v. Fargo, 94 N. Y. S. 377. Limitation of liability cannot be invoked where package was delivered to carrier by servant not in plaintiff's employ and who stated she did not know its value. Woolsey v. Long Island R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 56. Where a storage company sends a cartman with a package and shipping receipt, the carrier has no right to assume the carter has authority to consent to a modification or alteration of the shipping order. Russell v. Erie R. Co., 70 N. J. Law, 808, 59 A. 150. A contract limiting the carrier's liability is invalid where the shipper had no choice but accept it or not ship. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. McKinney [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 148; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McIntyre [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 346. Alternative contracts need not be presented to shipper. Cau v. Texas & P. R. Co., 194 U. S. 427, 48 Law. Ed. 1053. General words of exemption from liability for damage in the case of shipments of glass, and the words "Owner's risk" do not operate to relieve a carrier from the consequences of its negligence. Rieser v. Metropolitan Exp. Co., 45 Misc. 632, 91 N. Y. S. 170. Where the carrier attempts by a document that is both a receipt and a contract to limit its common-law liability, it is essential that the assent of the shipper to such limitation be shown. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Fox, 113 Ill. App. 180. The fact that a person is in charge of cattle at the time of delivery to the carrier and while in transit is not conclusive of his authority to contract on behalf of the owner where an oral contract had been previously made. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Watson [Kan.] 81 P. 499. Such a contract signed by the shipper, who did not know its provisions, after the stock was loaded and etarted on its way is invalid. McNeill v. Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 32; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 47; Olds v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 924; Keyes-Marshall Bros. Livery Co. v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 553. Such contract held binding. Hoover v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Kan. App.] 88 S. W. 769. Whether contract was signed by plaintiff in ignorance of its contents held question for jury. Olds v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 924. Plaintiffs who had been shipping for years held bound by contract. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Byers Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1087. The use for personal transportation of an otherwise invalid live stock contract does not so ratify it as to render it binding on the shipper. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 47. Delivery by carrier's agent unsigned to shipper's wife who was illiterate does not bind. Patrick v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 88 S. W. 330.

36. Agreement that damages shall be value at point of shipment instead of destination held void for want of consideration. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Coolidge [Ark.] 83 S. W. 333; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall [Ark.] 86 S. W. 802. Where live stock is shipped under a through contract, a new contract made by the shipper and a connecting carrier, merely limiting the latter's liability is without consideration and void. Barnes v. Long Island R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 616. Lack of consideration renders limitation ineffective. Sloop v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 111. Mere recital in contract that shipment was carried at reduced rate is not binding. Keyes-Marshall Bros. Livery Co. v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 553.

37. Cau v. Texas & P. R. Co., 194 U. S. 427, 48 Law. Ed. 1053. An express consideration is necessary. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall [Ark.] 86 S. W. 802.

38. Cappel v. Weir, 92 N. Y. S. 365; Powers Mercantile Co. v. Wells, Fargo Exp. Co., 93 Minn. 143, 100 N. W. 735; National Bank of Bristol v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 99 Me. 661, 59 A. 134; Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 52; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 286. If an Ohio contract is relied on in Kentucky it must be shown to be valid in Ohio and that the loss occurred there. Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker, 26 Ky. L. R. 1025, 83 S. W. 106.

39. Missouri, etc., R. Co. of Texas v. Godair Commission Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 871.

40. Pennsylvania only enforces them when the loss occurs in a state where such contracts are enforceable generally; hence the courts of New York will enforce a limitation in a contract made in Pennsylvania, the loss occurring in New York. Cappel v. Weir, 92 N. Y. S. 365, opinion on former appeal, see 90 N. Y. S. 394. A Kentucky contract being void as to the limitation it will not be enforced in New York. Barnes v. Long Island R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 616.

for proper loading.[41] A provision that the shipper accepts the cars tendered and agrees that they are satisfactory does not relieve the carrier from liability for defects therein.[42] A special contract to haul a circus train limiting carrier's liability and providing for indemnity against injury to the circus company's officers, agents, etc., is not against public policy.[43]

Provisions for notice of injury and limitations on the time to present claims [44] are upheld [45] if reasonable [46] in states where limitation of common-law liability is allowed,[47] but such provisions may be waived.[48]

§ 12. Public records of traffic.[49]

§ 13. Remedies and procedure. Timely notice of suit [50] is necessary when properly stipulated for and not waived.[51]

Persons who may sue.[52]—Whoever holds the legal title to goods may recover for their loss,[53] but plaintiff cannot recover for the loss of goods where the evidence does not exclude the right of the consignor or consignee to recover also,[54] and consignors cannot recover in the absence of evidence to rebut the presumption of title in the consignee.[55]

Particular remedies available.[56]—A shipper may at his election bring either an action on the contract or in tort for injuries to goods shipped.[57] A suit for damages for breach of contract of affreightment is an action ex contractu.[58] An action under the Georgia "Tracing Act" is an action for a penalty which cannot be converted into an action on a contract by amendment of the declaration.[59]

41. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Edins [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 253. Such a contract does not apply where the carrier himself does the loading. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Dolan [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 302. A contract which stipulates that the shipper shall assume all risks of feeding, watering, etc., of the stock while in the cars, yards, etc., does not relieve the carrier from liability for its own negligence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 286.

Venue.[60]—Where two or more carriers, parties to an interstate shipment, operate their roads in Texas, all, any, or either of them are properly sued in any county into which the road of either extends.[61]

Pleading, proofs, and evidence.[62]—A declaration on a bill of lading or shipping contract [63] must be accompanied by the bill or a copy,[64] and where plaintiff founds his action on a shipping contract he cannot contend that he is not bound by its terms.[65] Gross or willful negligence, against which a common carrier may not stipulate, must be alleged in order to obtain a finding to that effect.[66] A contract limiting the liability of common carriers need not be specially pleaded, but is available under the general issue.[67] In Texas a plea of lack of notice of injury in accordance with the contract must be sworn to.[68] Specific acts of negligence alleged must be proved.[69] Immaterial variances are disregarded.[70]

The presumtion that title to goods passes to the consignee on delivery to the carrier is sufficient to support an action by the consignee against the carrier for their loss.[71] The doctrine of res ipso loquitur applies to goods,[72] and where goods received in good order by a carrier for transportation are lost [73] or delivered in a damaged condition,[74] the carrier is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have been negligent.[75] In trover, a prima facie case is made by show-

There must be evidence that the goods were in good order when the carrier received them. Not sufficient to show bill of lading stating that they were in apparent good order except as otherwise noted. Jean, Garrison & Co. v. Flagg, 45 Misc. 421, 90 N. Y. S. 289. In the absence of proof of the origin of a fire, the loss of goods thereby will be imputed to the negligence of the carrier. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. [La.] 38 So. 873. Where it appears that goods were destroyed by fire and the carrier offers no evidence to explain it, there is a presumption that the loss occurred from the carrier's negligence. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McIntyre [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 346. Evidence that money was delivered to a carrier and that when the package was delivered to the consignee it contained nothing but waste paper is sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff. Bank of Irwin v. American Exp. Co. [Iowa] 102 N. W. 107.

74. Rieser v. Metropolitan Exp. Co., 45 Misc. 632, 91 N. Y. S. 170.

75. Fire in car of horses. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Dishman [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 319. Fire in car is not excused by showing the use of the best spark arrester and em-

ing delivery to the carrier and his failure to redeliver.[76] After the carrier has shown that the loss occurred from a cause excepted in the bill of lading, the burden is on the plaintiff to show that it occurred by the carrier's own negligence from which it could not be exempted.[77] The last carrier when sued has the burden of proving that goods properly delivered to the initial carrier were not lost or damaged on the last carrier's line,[78] and when he has shown this, the burden falls on the next preceding carrier to show likewise as to his line.[79] The burden is on the carrier to show that notice of claim for injury was not given.[80]

Admissibility of evidence is governed by rules applicable in other cases.[81]

Cases in which the sufficiency of evidence is discussed are mentioned below.[82]

Trial and instructions [83] are governed by familiar rules.[84]

ployment of competent engineer. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 479. In an action for injury to goods the burden is on plaintiff to show that defendant injured them or at least facts raising that presumption. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Capper [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 694. Where goods are lost, the burden is on the carrier to account for it. Alexander v. McNally [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 1.

76. Grier v. St. Louis Merchants' B. T. R. Co., 108 Mo. App. 565, 84 S. W. 158.

77. Fire in car of cotton. Cau v. Texas & P. R. Co., 194 U. S. 427, 48 Law. Ed. 1053. Where there is no limitation in the contract the burden is not on the shipper to show negligence. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 479.

78. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Birdwell [Ark.] 82 S. W. 835; Paterson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 621; Modern Match Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. [Mich.] 104 N. W. 19. Presumption is one of fact merely which should not be changed where there is evidence tending to rebut it. Bibb v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 663. Presumption does not apply where it is indisputably shown that no act of final carrier contributed to the damage. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Clayton [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1069.

79. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Pitts & Son [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 727. A railroad delivering goods to a transfer company for delivery to the consignee cannot be held liable for injuries discovered after delivery to the consignee in the absence of evidence to show their condition at the time they left the railroad company's hands. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Capper [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 694.

80. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Crowley [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 342.

81. Letters of a third party showing a shortage of freight cannot be introduced there being nothing to connect the writer with the carrier. Ragsdale v. Southern R. Co., 69 S. C. 429, 48 S. E. 466. Letters purporting to be written by defendants' freight claim agent held admissible without showing of authority. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McIntyre [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 346. Evidence of losses of other freight by other persons is incompetent. Ragsdale v. Southern R. Co., 69 S. C. 429, 48 S. E. 466. Evidence that according to the rules, usages, and customs of railway companies a particular bill of lading would authorize delivery of the freight without its production will not be admitted where contrary to the legal effect of the bill. Grayson County Nat. Bank v. Nashville, etc., R. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1094. Evidence that a package undelivered was addressed differently than the receipt for it shows is admissible. Cappel v. Weir, 92 N. Y. S. 365, opinion on former appeal, see 90 N. Y. S. 394. Plaintiff's claim filed before suit brought is admissible to show that at that time he claimed less. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Clayton [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1069. Notification to carrier of a superintendent of terminals not to bring shipment to terminal because of strike is admissible on issue of negligent delay. Sterling v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 655. Evidence of the usual time required between termini (Texas & P. R. Co. v. Crowley [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 342; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Ellerd [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 362), and that connecting carriers did not require the shipment is admissible (Texas & P. R. Co. v. Crowley [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 342). Statements of conductor that he knew he could not get far with such an engine held admissible or at least not prejudicial. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Russell [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 591, 88 S. W. 379.

Parol evidence of freight tariffs on file with interstate commerce commission is inadmissible. Sloop v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 111. Invalid written contract does not prevent shipper from showing terms of oral contract. McNeill v. Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 32. Plaintiff cannot show the contents of the bill of lading without evidence of its loss. Ragsdale v. Southern R. Co., 69 S. C. 429, 48 S. E. 466.

82. Loss by delay in transporting perishable freight and defendant's responsibility therefor held sufficiently shown to go to jury. Hanson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Law] 60 A. 1101. The weights specified in a bill of lading containing the clause, "Weight, measure and contents unknown" are not conclusive on the carrier. The Seefahrer, 133 F. 793. Evidence that four days after its arrival the address on a package was different from that on the shipping receipt is not conclusive proof that the two addresses were different at the time of shipment or excuse failure to deliver as agreed. Cappel v. Weir, 45 Misc. 419, 90 N. Y. S. 394; opinion on subsequent appeal, see 92 N. Y. S. 365.

83. See 3 C. L. 605.

84. Whether tender by a city delivery company on Monday, of goods received by

Damages.[85]—Only such damages as are reasonably in contemplation of the parties are recoverable. These generally extend only to the market value of the property at destination in case of loss,[86] and to the difference in value caused by the injury [87] or delay [88] in case there is not a total loss. Loss of profits,[89] time, and expenses, are not recoverable, nor can there be a recovery for the loss of property not carried, occasioned by failure to deliver that carried, in the absence of notice of special circumstances.[90] Notice of special circumstances after shipment was made it on Saturday, is within a reasonable time is a question for the jury. Dressner v. Manhattan Delivery Co., 92 N. Y. S. 800. Instruction held erroneous as assuming that express company's driver had authority to contract for delivery of a shipment by a particular train. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Needham [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 22. Where plaintiff sues on an oral contract and defendant defends on a written contract and facts are shown which invalidate the written contract a charge that the oral contract was not in force is properly refused as on the weight of the evidence. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 587, 88 S. W. 499.

85. See 3 C. L. 606.

86. Horses. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Snyder [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1041. The measure of damages for loss of goods is their value at destination with interest from the time they should have been delivered, less unpaid freight. Carrier not entitled to time to investigate. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Stock & Sons [Va.] 51 S. E. 161. The damages for misdelivery of goods is their market value at the destination less freight charges if unpaid. Not the contract price. Grayson v. County Nat. Bank v. Nashville, etc., R. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1094. Unless it is shown they have no market value, evidence of their intrinsic value, or of their market value at some other place, as the point of shipment, is immaterial. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 479.

87. Where the connecting carrier refused to transport goods to their destination, but transported them to another place, the damages for injury must nevertheless be based on their market value at the contract destination. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Tracy [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 833. Contract price at which cattle were to be sold is immaterial if the carrier had no notice of it. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 191. Market price at nearest place where there is a market may be shown. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. A. S. Veale & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 202. The carrier is entitled to the advantage of a compromise between the consignor and consignee settling the damage. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McDurmitt Grain Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 355; Atchison, etc, R. Co. v. Waddell Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 647, 88 S. W. 390.

88. Decline in price of commodity during delay. Wool. Butterick Pub. Co. v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 551, 88 S. W. 299. To be liable for special damages for delay the carrier must have had notice before or at the time the contract was made. Crutcher v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. [Ark.] 85 S. W. 770. The difference in market value of cattle between the time they reached their destination and the time they would have reached it if the delays complained of had not occurred is the measure of damages for delay. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Startz [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1071; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Beattie [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 367; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Foster [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 44. So of grain. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. C. C. Mill Elev. & L. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 753. Shrinkage of cattle is to be considered. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 499. Nominal damages and costs are recoverable in any case. Crutcher v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. [Ark.] 85 S. W. 770. Rule where cattle are shipped to one point with privilege of changing destination to point further on at through rate. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Nelson [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 616. Rule where reshipped. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Gunter [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 938. Negligence resulting in missing two successive contracts of sale. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Stewart [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 631. The measure of damages when a carrier through negligence or violation of duty delays the delivery of merchandise or baggage beyond a reasonable time is the difference between the value when delivery should have been made, and the value when delivery was made. Notice to the baggageman that a trunk contained samples does not justify the allowance of profits on sales that might have been made had the trunk been delivered. Katz v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 720. Evidence of notice of special circumstances is not admissible where special loss not pleaded. Stock shipped for entry at fair. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Ellerd [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 362.

89. Profits lost by reason of the nondelivery of a machine cannot be recovered. Traywick v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 549. Profits of crop not put in because of non-arrival of horses not recoverable. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Allen [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 168.

90. Delay in transporting feed for cattle occasioning injury to cattle. Daube v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 797; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co v. Bourland [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 173. Fish lost because of non-arrival of ice shipped cannot be recovered for in the absense of notice on the part of the carrier that the ice was necessary for that purpose. Lewark v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 137 N. C. 383, 49 S. E. 882.

charges in the absence of evidence that any were paid,[92] and in an action for injuries, based on the value of the goods at destination, evidence of the amount of freight paid is immaterial.[93] Demurrage paid by the shipper and made necessary by the delay may be recovered.[94] For failure to adjust a claim within a stated time, a penalty is provided in several states to be recovered in addition to the amount of the claim.[95]

§ 14. Freight and other charges.[96]—The carrier has a lien on the goods carried for freight charges,[97] charges advanced,[98] demurrage,[99] charges for steerage,[1] and other extras,[2] unaffected by the default of the preceding carrier causing injury to the goods.[3] The lien, however, is lost by delivery,[4] and does not arise as to goods delivered to it by a wrongdoer.[5] A carrier is bound by the freight rates quoted by its agent and accepted by the shipper.[6] He may, however, reclassify freight, the character of which was misrepresented, and hold it for the higher rate,[7] but not in cases where there was no misrepresentation.[8]

Part III. Carriage of Live Stock.

§ 15. Duty to carry and contract of carriage in general.[9]—In nearly all the states railroads are common carriers of live stock and are required to furnish means for its care and transportation,[10] but are not required, as common carriers, to transport a circus train, part of which is loaded with wild animals, and may refuse to do so except under a special contract limiting its liability to that of a private carwill not bind.[91] In an action for failure to deliver, plaintiff cannot recover freight

In providing cattle pens at a particular point a railroad company is only required to look to its own probable business, not that of all the roads entering that place. Casey v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 20.

rier.[11] A station agent has implied authority to contract to furnish cattle cars for shipment from his station.[12]

§ 16. Care required of carrier.[13]—Common carriers of live stock are insurers to the same extent and degree that they are of goods, except as to losses arising from the nature or proper vices of the animals themselves,[14] and are charged with certain extraordinary duties arising from the requirements of live animals as distinguished from dead freight.[15] Reasonable diligence to transport stock within a reasonable time must be used.[16] Failure to transport without rough handling is not negligent per se.[17] An owner of live stock cannot recover for injuries to it caused by his own negligence in overloading.[18]

Rest and feeding[19] are duties imposed by statute,[20] for the neglect of which penalties are imposed in several states.[21]

Averments of damage held sufficiently specific. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Sherrod [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 363.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to the carriage of live stock,[28] and the burden is on the carrier to show that loss or death of live animals resulted from the nature or vice of themselves.[29] The burden, however, is on plaintiff to show that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of injury to stock,[30] and in an action for negligent delay, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the delay was negligent, a mere showing of delay is insufficient.[31] In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be assumed that the servants of a railroad company did their duty with respect to watering stock.[32]

Instructions are governed by the ordinary rules.[35]

§ 21. Damages[36]—Where stock is injured the measure of damages is the difference between the market value of the stock at destination in an undamaged condition and the highest realizable value as actually delivered.[37] Additional expenses having effect to reduce the damages are recoverable.[38]

Part IV. Carriage of Passengers.

§ 22. Who are passengers.[39]—A passenger is one who travels in some public conveyance, by virtue of a contract, express or implied, with the carrier.[40] Payment of fare is not necessary,[41] but there must be an intent to become a passenger,[42] and an intent or a willingness to pay if requested.[43] A railway mail clerk is a passenger for hire.[44] But neither is an express messenger,[45] a sleeping car porter,[46] nor a servant employed by a railroad company and riding home after the day's work on a work train, a passenger.[47] Persons boarding a train to assist passengers to enter it are not entitled to the protection accorded passengers.[48]

Trains other than passenger trains.[49]—Ordinarily one is not a passenger who boards a train not designed for such traffic,[50] and no implied acceptance as passenger of one who rides on place not designed for use of passengers;[51] but a person of authority may permit one to so become a passenger.[52] Caretakers of live stock in transit are passengers for hire,[53] though they assume the risks and inconveniences

R. Co. v. Gunter [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 938. Time and medicine recoverable for. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Allen [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 168. Where a shipper has cattle delivered to him relying on an agreement of the carrier to furnish cars on a certain day, he may recover all loss caused by failure to furnish them. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Tison, 116 Ill. App. 48.

39. See 3 C. L. 617.

40. See 3 C. L. 617, § 22.

Note: The holding that one may become a passenger after the carrier has refused to enter such a relation (McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co., 135 N. C. 682, 47 S. E. 765), is said to demonstrate that the "contract test" to determine when the relation begins is fallible. 5 Columbia L. R. 53, pointing out that the relation springs from duty not contract.

42. A newsboy boarding a car merely to sell papers without intending to travel to any particular place or pay fare is not a passenger. Barry v. Union R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 449.

43. Reynolds v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 50. Instruction assuming that boy who got on car on opposite side from conductor to ride short distance intending to pay fare if demanded was a passenger as a matter of law held error. Dallas Rapid Transit Co. v. Payne [Tex.] 82 S. W. 649.

44. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Patton, 23 App. D. C. 113. A mail clerk is entitled to the same degree of care that a passenger for hire is. Cavin v. Southern Pac. Co., 136 F. 592; Southern Pac. Co. v. Schuyler, 135 F. 1015. Postal clerk going between cars with notice of liability to bump together, held negligent barring recovery. Rice v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 186 Mass. 521, 72 N. E. 79.

45. The liability of the railroad company to him is akin to that of one of its own employes. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. O'Brien [C. C. A.] 132 F. 593. No liability arises from failure to light depot and grounds in favor of employe of express company at a time when no express train is due, though company has been given permission to use baggage room. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Harbison [Tex.] 85 S. W. 1138.

49. See 3 C. L. 618.

50. All persons are required to take notice that work trains are not intended for the transportation of passengers, and persons traveling on them if injured and seeking damages must show that they were rightfully there and that the company owed them the duty of carrying them safely. Pennsylvania Co. v. Coyer, 163 Ind. 631, 72 N. E. 875.

51. Street car step. Strong v. North Chicago St. R. Co., 116 Ill. App. 246.

52. One who boards a freight train under the erroneous information from a track superintendent that he can ride is not a passenger under an implied contract. But is not a willful trespasser. Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Livingston, 84 Miss. 1, 36 So. 256.

53. Carrier cannot stipulate as to negligence. Sprigg's Adm'r v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 60 A. 143; Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Teeters [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1014; Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co. [Mich.] 102 N. W. 1037. Entitled to protection while walking along the track at direction of the company's agent. Lake Shore R. Co. v. Hotchkiss, 24 Ohio C. C. 431, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 505; Elgin, etc., R. Co. v. Thomas, 215 Ill. 158, 74 N. E. 109; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Troyer [Neb.] 103 N. W. 680. A stipulation that only "bona fide employes will be allowed to ride on drovers' passes will not prevent liability to one who was actually in charge of stock, though he had never before been employed by the shipper and was to be given no other compensation for his services than his transportation. Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co. [Mich.] 102 N. W. 1037.

that necessarily attend upon the care of stock, and the means of transportation.[54] The servant of a shipper riding in the car for the mutual advantage of carrier and shipper is a passenger.

When relation begins.[56]—One may be a passenger who has neither paid fare, purchased a ticket,[57] or entered the conveyance, if he has properly indicated his intention,[58] and where one presents himself at a railway station a reasonable time before the scheduled departure of his train,[59] and purchases a ticket,[60] with intent to take passage,[61] he is a passenger and entitled to protection as such until his journey ends.[62]

When relation ceases or is interrupted.[63]—The relation continues until the passenger has had a resonably safe opportunity to alight from the train and make his way from the station by the ordinary course,[64] and while he is transferring from one car to another, he having been furnished a ticket enabling him to do so.[65] On alighting from a street car in the street, a passenger becomes at once an ordinary traveler on the highway.[66] One who has been ejected from a train notwithstanding his possession of a ticket entitling him to ride is not a trespasser on the track.[67]

54. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Troyee [Neb.] 103 N. W. 680; Young v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 175.

55. Holmes v. Birmingham So. R. Co., 140 Ala. 208, 37 So. 338.

56. See 3 C. L. 619.

57. The relation may exist, though the person claiming to be a passenger has neither paid his fare nor provided himself with a ticket, since it cannot be presumed he would not pay his fare on demand. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 111 Ill. App. 234.

58. Though one who has merely signaled a street car to stop is not before he actually reaches the car a passenger. Duchemin v. Boston El. R. Co., 186 Mass. 353, 71 N. E. 780. After reaching car and attempting to board he is a passenger. Lewis v. Houston Elec. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 659, 88 S. W. 489.

59. The relation of passenger and carrier begins on arrival at the station a reasonable time before the schedule time of departure of the intended conveyance, and continues for a reasonable time for departure after arrival at the destination. Abbott v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 80 P. 1012. One who enters the office of the railroad over an hour before train time to do some writing is not a passenger. Andrews v. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 773.

60. One on the way to the station and on the railroad company's property is not a passenger, though intending to become one. Eakins v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 102 N. W. 104. One who enters a railroad station and purchases a ticket intending to board a passenger train soon to arrive is a passenger. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Holloway [Kan.] 80 P. 31.

61. Mere purchase of a ticket at the station does not make one a passenger. The purchase must be made with a purpose of taking passage on a train scheduled to depart within a reasonable time thereafter. Fremont, etc., R. Co. v. Hagblad [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1033. The mere possession of a ticket that one intends to use later does not make one a passenger. Vandegrift v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 60 A. 184.

62. From the time a person places himself under the care of the carrier by presenting himself at its station for carriage until he has had a reasonable opportunity to depart from the station at his destination, he is a passenger. Fremont, etc., R. Co. v. Hagblad [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1033. One who has purchased a ticket and is crossing the station platform to board the train is a passenger. Maxfield v. Maine Cent. R. Co. [Me.] 60 A. 710. Where an ordinary car was engaged by excursionists to go to and from a certain place, plaintiff was not a passenger in going to the car during the day for his own purposes. Archer v. Union Pac. R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 349, 85 S. W. 934.

63. See 3 C. L. 620.

64. Ten or fifteen minutes' delay in station before starting for highway will not bar one from recovering for injury caused by falling over obstruction in path. Glenn v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 861. It is immaterial what the passenger's purpose was in making his journey. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Batchler [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 902. May alight at intermediate station without losing right to protection as passenger. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Ellison [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 213.

65. Walger v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 14; Clark v. Durham Traction Co., 138 N. C. 77, 50 S. E. 518.

66. Fry v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 960. One alighting from a street car and passing around its end and falling over a rail is not a passenger at the time of his injury, though the track is laid in a place from which ordinary traffic except pedestrians is excluded. Conroy v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 672. He is still a passenger if the ground crumbles and lets him into a ditch before he takes a step. MacDonald v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 374, 83 S. W. 1001.

67. Third rail accident. Anderson v. Seattle-Tacoma Interurban R. Co., 36 Wash. 387, 78 P. 1013.

§ 23. Duty to receive and carry passengers.[68]—A railroad as a common carrier must accept as passengers all persons fit or entitled to travel,[69] who expose tickets valid on the train on which offered,[70] or pay or tender the regular fare, must sell tickets on demand at proper times,[71] and provide transportation at the time and to the place agreed upon.[72] A rule requiring passengers to purchase tickets before entering the cars is reasonable,[73] but in order that it may be enforced by ejection of the passenger or charging him an additional fare, reasonable opportunity to purchase tickets must be given.[74]

Through trains.[75]—A railroad company may adopt regulations under which certain of its trains shall stop only at the more important stations and the mere possession of a ticket reading to a certain station does not entitle the holder to passage on a train not scheduled to stop there.[76]

68. See 3 C. L. 620.

69. A carrier may exclude and deny transportation to any person who on account of physical or mental disability is unable to care for himself, but if the applicant is in fact able to travel alone to the knowledge of the carrier, his exclusion is actionable. Blind man. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Smith [Miss.] 37 So. 643. Not obliged to accept passenger too drunk to take care of himself. Price v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 88 S. W. 575.

NOTE. Blindness as ground for rejection: The defendant's agent in accordance with the rules of the company refused to sell a railroad ticket to the plaintiff on the ground that he was blind and unaccompanied by an attendant. Held, that the defendant is not liable in the absence of proof that its agent knew, or had reasonable grounds to believe, that the plaintiff, though blind, was qualified to travel alone. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Smith [Miss.] 37 So. 643.

The prima facie duty of a carrier to accept all persons who present themselves for transportation must necessarily be subject to certain limitations made for the protection of the company. In view of the rule that a passenger who is affected with a disability of which the carrier knows, or has reason to know, is entitled to greater care and attention than an ordinary passenger, it seems but fair that the company should have the right of refusing to assume this added responsibility by requiring such persons to be accompanied by attendants. Cf. Croom v. Chicago, etc. R. Co., 52 Minn. 296, 38 Am. St. Rep. 557, 18 L. R. A. 602; Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Powell, 40 Ind. 37. The cases which hold that a railroad may refuse to carry drunken and insane persons rest partly upon this principle of fairness to the company, as well as upon the policy of protecting passengers from annoyance and danger. Cf. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Vandyne, 57 Ind. 576, 26 Am. Rep. 68; Meyer v. St. Louis, etc. R. Co., 54 F. 116. Blindness alone would appear sufficient cause for rejection, unless the company's agent has reason to believe that the person is able to take care of himself. Cf. Zachery v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 75 Miss. 746, 65 Am. St. Rep. 617, 41 L. R. A. 385.—18 Harv. L. R. 540.

70. Two thousand five hundred not excessive for rude and insolent denial of admission to car for which plaintiff had a ticket and in which he was entitled to travel. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Mattingly [Miss.] 37 So. 708.

71. A passenger may recover his damages from refusal of the carrier's agent to sell him a ticket for passage on a train soon to leave, though the refusal resulted from a mistake of the agent as to whether a through train or a local would be first to arrive. Coleman v. Southern R. Co., 138 N. C. 351, 50 S. E. 690.

72. Action will lie for being put off a train at a station short of destination, where there was an express contract to carry the passenger on that train. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Moore [Tex.] 83 S. W. 362. Punitive damages may be awarded where a passenger with a ticket to a way station is put off a through train because it does not stop at his destination, where the agent selling the ticket and the trainman directing him to board it told him it would stop. Richardson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 261. Railroad companies may be penalized for failure to carry passengers as agreed by their agents and according to their published schedules. Comp. Laws, § 6235. Countermand of schedule not brought to agent's attention held no defense. Van Camp v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 771. A passenger directed to the wrong car by the carrier's servants whereby he is left at a point other than his proper destination can recover for the resulting inconveniences and hardships. Robertson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 831. Where a passenger is carried to a place not called for by his ticket against his will, he is entitled to recover any damages suffered thereby. Latour v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 265. Five hundred dollars held not excessive for young woman being put off in woods five miles from her station at night. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Covetts, 26 Ky. L. R. 934, 82 S. W. 975.

75. See 3 C. L. 621.

76. Usher v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Kan.] 80 P. 956; Hancock v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 210. Plaintiff held not misled into getting upon wrong train. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bell [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 730.

77. See 3 C. L. 621.

Ejection of passengers.[77]—A passenger failing to produce transportation valid on its face,[78] or pay fare,[79] though without his own fault,[80] may be expelled at a reasonably safe place and time,[81] the carrier using no more force than is necessary for the purpose, and for such an ejection the carrier is liable only for actual damages.[82] If the ejection is unauthorized,[83] or is malicious,[84] or unnecessarily violent,[85] or insulting and humiliating,[86] and the carrier participates or ratifies

78. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stratton, 111 Ill. App. 142 Where the ticket upon its face is one that does not entitle plaintiff to passage, he cannot recover for ejection. Mileage book made to "Mr." presented by woman. Parish v. Ulster & D. R. Co., 99 App. Div. 10, 90 N. Y. S. 1000. Ticket against which statute of limitations has run. Cassiano v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 806. A merely ambiguous ticket does not justify ejection, and where a ticket appears to have expired before it was sold, no invalidity appears. Jevons v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Kan.] 78 P. 817. An ejection is wrongful where the passenger tendered a transfer which the carrier was bound to and in fact did issue, though it claims that it did not at that time issue such transfers. Chiert v. Interurban St. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 781. Statement of ticket agent to one who has lost his ticket that conductor will let him ride is not binding on the carrier. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 852. Refusal to stamp return ticket so as to validate it entitles passenger to ride on it unstamped. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Payne [Tex.] 87 S. W. 330. Return ticket stamped and signed too long before offered for passage. Boling v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 35.

79. Conductor is not obliged to accept pawn of jewelry for passage, the company's rule requiring ticket or cash. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 852.

80. A passenger who is in fact without transportation to his destination, though without fault on his part, and because of the mistake or wrong of some agent of the carrier, should pay his fare and take his remedy against the carrier for breach of contract. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stratton, 111 Ill. App. 142. Failing in this, he is liable to ejection. Id. Where plaintiff presented an order for a ticket to the agent and he told her she could travel on it and gave it back to her without a ticket, the carrier is liable for her ejection. Chase v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Kan.] 79 P. 153. Agent at destination told plaintiff ticket would be good. Boling v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 35.

81. A passenger in a drunken condition who refuses to state his destination or pay fare may properly be ejected at a point where lighted houses are near. Korn v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 125 F. 897. The knowledge of a station agent of a passenger's stupor from the use of liquor or drugs is not necessarily imputable to the company, as it is not his duty to pass upon a passenger's fitness to travel or inform the conductor as to it. Id. It is a trespass to eject a passenger either when the train is in motion or with unnecessary force, though he is subject to ejection. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stratton, 111 Ill. App. 142. Where one takes passage upon a train which he knows does not stop at his destination, it is lawful for the company to eject him without unreasonable violence, at any reasonably safe place between stations, upon his refusing to pay fare to the next station at which the train stops. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Willing, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 137. Leaving a train in obedience to a command by the conductor to the porter to see that the passenger leaves at the next station, is an ejection. Boling v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 35. For the passenger to leave the train against the conductor's advice that she remain and allow him to hold her baggage check as security for her fare is not an ejection, though the conductor refuses to honor her ticket. Id.

82. Transfer too old. Exemplary damages not recoverable. Little Rock Traction & Elec. Co. v. Winn. [Ark.] 87 S. W. 1025.

83. Passenger tendered good money which conductor refused to accept believing it counterfeit Breen v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 443, 83 S. W. 998. Recovery may be had for an injury received by one who was lawfully on a railway train, and was unlawfully ejected therefrom between stations in the nighttime, and was injured by falling into a cattle guard while making his way to the nearest highway crossing. NOTE. Drover's Pass—Release from Liability: Weaver, the plaintiff's decedent, while being transported on one of defendant's freight trains in charge of a shipment of cattle, met his death through the negligence of the defendant's engineer. He was riding on a drover's pass in the form of a live stock transportation contract, which permitted the shipper or one of his employes to accompany the stock. The contract contained a release of liability for damages on account of negligence of the carrier and was signed by Weaver, who was not the owner of the stock but merely one of the shipper's friends who desired a free ride and incidentally undertook to look contract with an express or sleeping car company from liability for negligent injuries to employes of the latter companies.[15] Though there may be risks which a railway postal clerk must assume different from those of an ordinary passenger, those risks do not include negligence of the railroad company in the operation of its trains.[16] A conductor who accepts an unattended passenger too drunk to take care of himself acts within his authority.[17]

The carrier which owns the road is liable for the negligence of another which runs trains over it with the owner's authority, regardless of the provisions of the contract between them,[18] and a consolidated railroad company of South Carolina is liable for an injury to a passenger committed by a constituent company prior to the consolidation.[19]

Degree of care required.[20]—A carrier of passengers is not an insurer of their safety,[21] but is bound to a very high degree of care which is variously defined.[22] after the stock on the way. Held, that the plaintiff's decedent was a bona fide employe of the owner of the cattle; that he was a passenger for hire; and that the release of liability for damages on account of the carrier's negligence was invalid. Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co. [Mich.] 102 N. W. 1037.

This decision is interesting because of the Michigan holding that railroads are not common carriers of live stock. Railroad Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165, 4 Am. Rep. 466; Heller v. R. Co., 109 Mich. 53, 66 N. W. 667, 63 Am. St. Rep. 541; McKenzie v. R. Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 260. Many cases support the doctrine that a carrier may properly impose any condition it sees fit upon its granting a purely voluntary privilege. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hawk, 36 Ill. App. 327; Quimby v. Boston, etc. R. Co., 150 Mass. 365, 23 N. E. 205, 5 L. R. A. 846; 6 Cyc. 579, n. 53. Thus where a railroad company grants privileges to a sleeping car company, a contract by which it relieves itself from liability for injuries to employes of such a company is valid. Russell v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 157 Ind. 305, 61 N. E. 678, 87 Am. St. Rep. 215, 55 L. R. A. 253. And a contract relieving a railroad company from liability for injuries to express messengers is held to be valid on the same grounds. Blank v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 82 Ill. 332, 55 N. E. 332; Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21, 44 N. E. 796, 58 Am. St. Rep. 348, 38 L. R. A. 93; Bates v. Old Colony R. Co., 147 Mass. 255, 17 N. E. 633. It has also been held that as a railroad company is under no obligation to carry passengers in freight trains it can limit its liability for personal injuries to one to whom this privilege is granted. Arnold v. I. C. R. Co., 83 Ill. 273, 25 Am. Rep. 383. The holding in the principal case is rather an extreme application of the rule followed by the majority of the American courts that a stipulation in a stock drover's pass exempting the railroad company from liability for negligence is void. N. Y. C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall [U. S.] 357, 21 Law Ed. 627. A contrary doctrine is well established in England, Ireland, Canada and some American states. McCawley v. Furness R. Co., L. R. 8 Q. Carriers of passengers are held to the exercise of the highest degree of care consistent with their undertaking,[23] irrespective of the means of conveyance,[24] the rule applying equally to street railroads,[25] elevators,[26] and the like, from the time passengers approach to board the car until they alight,[27] and to injuries in the production of which the passenger is a factor.[28] There must be some negligence on the part of the carrier or its servants,[29] and the negligence complained of must be the proximate cause of the injury,[30] though it is no defense that the negligence of another [31] or an act of God, concurred.[32] There is no liability for casualties which the exercise of reasonable foresight would not have anticipated or due care have avoided,[33] and carriers are not bound to so restrain their passengers that no act of their own can put them in unnecessary danger; [34] but a passenger too drunk to take care of himself is entitled to ordinary care.[35] Failure to perform a statutory duty is negligent,[36] but speed ordinances are not available to a passenger leaving a moving train.[37]

(§ 25) B. Contributory negligence of passenger.[38]—A carrier is not responsible for injuries proximately resulting from the passenger's negligent failure to use his natural senses for his own safety.[39] Passengers are required, however, to exercise only ordinary care,[40] having a right to assume that conveyances, stations and approaches are reasonably safe,[41] and if a passenger places him-

Parker v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 465, 83 S. W. 1016. Where, after a collision in which plaintiff was injured, someone stated in her hearing that another train was approaching and there would be another collision, whereupon she left the car and was poisoned by ivy along the track, the collision was the proximate cause of the poisoning. Estes v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 725, 85 S. W. 627. Cold waiting room. Charge on proximate cause held necessary. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Lowe [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1059. Proximate cause of injury to passenger in elevator. Hensler v. Stix [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 108.

31. Where a railroad company places its dining car at the rear of a vestibule train and invites the passengers to go to it, it is bound to provide them safe passage from car to car and cannot escape responsibility because the cars are the property of a sleeping car company. Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 689. A railroad company sued jointly with a sleeping car company for the death of a passenger by reason of a defective vestibule on the sleeping car is not concerned in the direction of a verdict for the car company. 39. Passenger standing on running board of street car struck by vehicle. Fraser v. California St. Cable R. Co. [Cal.] 81 P. 29. Passenger having hand injured on door joint when door closed held negligent. O'Rourke v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 92 N. Y. S. 317. A passenger in the caboose of a freight train who stands while switching is in progress and is knocked from his feet by a jolt cannot recover for consequent injuries, he being accustomed to riding on freight trains and having notice of its dangers. Shamblin v. New Orleans & N. W. R. Co. [La.] 38 So. 421. Where plaintiff while standing between tracks waiting for a car was run down by one going in the opposite direction, there being room to so stand in safety his negligence bars recovery. Chunn v. City & Suburban R., 23 App. D. C. 551. When a passenger on an interurban railway car was thrown therefrom and killed by the derailing of the car while running through the open country, the fact that he was standing on the platform at the time cannot be held to be the proximate cause of his death, when the evidence does not disclose that there was available or reasonably convenient room on the inside of the car; that the injury would not have happened had he been on the inside; that he had notice of a sign prohibiting passengers from standing on the platform; or that he was ordered inside the car by the company's servants, and refused to go. Cincinnati, L. & A. Elec. St. R. Co. v. Lohe, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 144, 27 Ohio C. C. 138. Where it appears that a passenger was thrown by lurch of train against stepladder in closet of passenger coach and against window breaking it and injuring himself, no issue of contributory negligence is raised. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 943.

41. A passenger stepping on an icy platself in a position of danger while alighting in the exercise of ordinary care, he is not for that reason negligent.[4] Contributory negligence cannot arise where a passenger too drunk to take care of himself is knowingly accepted for transportation and injured.[43]

Acts due to impulse of sudden danger [44] are regarded with less strictness than others.[45]

Acts done at direction of employes.[46]—Directions of the carrier's employes [47] may prevent an imputation of negligence,[48] unless the danger is so apparent that no one of ordinary prudence would follow them.[49]

form in front of an approaching train is not negligent, he having a right to presume the carrier has made it reasonably safe. McGuire v. Interborough R. T. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 316. Passenger stepping into hole in platform is not negligent for not staying in waiting room until time of departure nor for deviating thirty feet from direct line from waiting room to conveyance. White v. Seattle, E. & T. Nav. Co., 36 Wash. 281, 78 P. 909. A passenger may leave the conveyance during the stop at an intermediate station for the purpose of transacting his private business and depend on the ordinary safety of the station premises without being responsible for injuries arising therefrom. Abbott v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 80 P. 1012. A passenger provided with a well lighted car in which to wait for his train on a dark night is guilty of contributory negligence where he leaves it to walk for exercise on the unlighted station platform. Id. Held not negligent for passenger to alight from long train in the night, part of train length from station platform and attempt to follow track to station. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 103 Va. 635, 49 S. E. 997; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Smith, 103 Va. 326, 49 S. E. 487. Contributory negligence of passenger walking into open elevator shaft held question for jury. Morgan v. That flagman said "This door" to a passenger going out does not amount to an invitation to alight from a moving train. Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Jones [Miss.] 38 So. 545.

48. Inviting plaintiff to pass along running board into car to find seat. Wheeler v. South Orange & M. Tract. Co., 70 N. J. Law, 725, 58 A. 927. Plaintiff may show that brakeman advised her to go to get a ticket and on her return told her to board the moving train, it appearing that conductor waited brakeman's signal before starting. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Flaherty, 202 Ill. 151, 66 N. E. 1083. It is not negligent as a matter of law for a passenger to assume without looking that the running board of a street car has been placed in proper position after the conductor has cried "All out." La Clair v. New York City R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 837. Protest by passenger at unsafe place to alight and taking hold of arm by conductor saying "jump this way" relieves passenger of negligence. Senf v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 887.

49. A passenger may rely upon the superior experience of the trainmen in determining whether the action he is advised to take is dangerous unless the danger is so glaring as to be apparent to anyone of ordinary prudence. Staines v. Central R. Co. of N. J. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 385. Invitation to woman to alight from moving train after assisting children aboard held not sufficient to relieve her of contributory negligence. Flaherty v. Boston & M. R. Co., 186 Mass. 567, 72 N. or the speed of the train and the difficulties in the way are so obviously dagnerous that a person of ordinary prudence would not attempt it.[53]

Riding in dangerous position[54] is generally negligent,[55] unless required or permitted under circumstances of necessity;[56] But a caretaker of live stock is not negligent per se in riding with the stock instead of in the caboose.[57]

Riding on platform or running board of street car[58] is not generally negligent as a matter of law,[59] the car being full,[60] and the carrier being accustomed to permit it,[61] but it may be negligent under special circumstances.[62]

Riding on platform of railroad train[63] is generally regarded as prima facie negligent, in the absence of excusing circumstances,[64] and statutes in many states provide against recovery in such cases.[65]

Jackson v. Natchez & W. R. Co. [La.] 38 So. 701; Morgan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 836. A passenger who leaves the car after the station is called but before the train stops and stands on the platform cannot recover for an injury caused by the steps striking a baggage truck along the track. Fletcher v. Boston & M. R. Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 552.

Note: Plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's excursion train. All seats and aisles were full and passengers were on the platforms. Plaintiff stood in the aisle of the smoker until he became faint, as a result of bad air. Not being able to get near a window, he went out on the platform, where he became unconscious and fell off. Held, he was not guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law. Morgan v. Lake Shore, etc. R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 836. The decisions are at variance as to whether riding upon the platform under such circumstances is contributory negligence as matter of law. It has been held not to be in Willis v. L. I. R. Co., 34 N. Y. 670, and Werle v. L. I. R. Co., 98 N. Y. 650. In Ward v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 102 Wis. 215, 78 N. W. 442, it is held to be a question for the jury. In Rolette v. G. N. R. Co., 91 Minn. 16, 97 N. W. 431, it is held negligence if there be standing room in the aisles. Defendant's contention that riding on the platform is prima facie negligent seems to be supported by the weight of authority and is based on the following cases: Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Moneyhun, 146 Ind. 147, 44 N. E. 1106, 34 L. R. A. 141; Worthington v. Central Vt. R. Co., 64 Vt. 107, 15 L. R. A. 326; Hickey v. B. & L. R. Co., 14 Allen [Mass.] 429; C. & A. R. Co. v. Hoosey, 99 Pa. 492, 44 Am. Rep. 120, and Rolette v. G. N. R. Co., 91 Minn. 16, 97 N. W. 431. But the court held that all these cases recognize the rule that if the passenger is necessarily on the platform because of conditions created by the railroad company, he is not precluded from recovering damages. This tends to raise a question in each case as to what constitutes necessity. Two of the justices dissent on the ground that plaintiff was justified by no serious necessity.—3 Mich. L. R. 406.

78. Contributory negligence of plaintiff alighting at stop made before crossing other tracks held for jury. Camden & S. R. Co. v. Rice [C. C. A.] 137 F. 326. Rules applicable to railroads do not apply to street railroads where it is presumably safe to alight anywhere. Selby v. Detroit R. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 382, 104 N. W. 376. Plaintiff falling over unplanked track in night after being set down at unusual place held not negligent. Hancock v. New York, etc., R. Co., 100 App. Div. 161, 91 N. Y. S. 601. Negligence of one alighting from street car and falling into ditch held for jury. McDonald v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 374, 83 S. W. 1001.

79. Topp v. United R. & Elec. Co., 99 Md. 630, 59 A. 52. Where a pregnant woman is required to jump from a flat car causing a miscarriage she is not negligent in failing to inform the carrier's servant of her condition. West v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Mo.] 86 S. W. 140.

80. See 3 C. L. 632.

81. Must exercise reasonable care in providing and keeping safe its depot and grounds. Glenn v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 861. A railroad company is bound to exercise only such degree of care in the construction of its stations and platforms as is sufficient to protect passengers using ordinary care from injury. Lauterer v. Manhattan R. Co. [C. C. A.] 128 F. 540. Its platforms for ingress and egress to and from stations. McCormick v. Detroit, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 104 N. W. 390. Instruction stating degree of care required held not too strict. Hart v. Seattle, etc., R. Co. [Wash.] 79 P. 954. It is the carrier's duty to exercise ordinary care to maintain its station platform in such a reasonably safe and suitable condition that the passengers who are themselves in the exercise of ordinary care can walk over it in safety. Maxfield v. Maine Cent. R. Co. [Me.] 60 A. 710. A railroad owes no duty to keep access to its station free from obstruction by freight trains at times when no passenger train is scheduled to stop. Agent had agreed to flag fast train for passenger. Eakins v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 102 N. W. 104. Where passenger stepped from an icy platform in front of an approaching train, negligence is for jury. McGuire v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 93 N. Y. S. 316. Unguarded hole in dock floor two feet long and four inches wide is negligent. White v. Seattle, etc., Nav. Co., 36 Wash. 281, 78 P. 909.

82. Must be kept properly lighted for a reasonable time before and after arrival and departure of night trains. What is reasonable held for jury. Abbott v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 80 P. 1012; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Smith, 103 Va. 326, 49 S. E. 487. Instruction on comparative negligence held inapplicable where plaintiff fell from dark station platform at night. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Cannady [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1069. Character of lights required depends on character and extent of business transacted at station. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall [Kan.] 81 P. 169. A railroad company agreeing to stop its train at a station to take on a passenger agrees to keep open its waiting room for the accommodation of the passenger while waiting for the train. Draper v. Evansville, etc., R. Co. [Ind.] 74 N. E. 889. No duty to light depot for benefit of express company's employe at a time when no train is due, though express company has license to use baggage room. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Harbison [Tex.] 85 S. W. 1138. Passenger falling from unlighted and unguarded platform in strange place at night may recover for injuries sustained. Instructions held not prejudicial to defendant. Gerhart v. Wabash R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 105, 84 S. W. 100.

Separate waiting rooms for white and colored passengers are required in some states.[83]

§ 27. Means and facilities of transportation,[84] such as tracks with their appliances,[85] engines or motive power,[86] cars,[87] with their platforms,[88] couplings,[89] and other accessories,[90] and passenger elevators,[91] must be maintained at the highest degree of efficiency that human care, vigilance, and foresight can achieve under the circumstances. Failing in this the carrier is responsible for every injury proximately resulting from the defect. Failure to equip a train with the tools usually carried for use in case of accident will render its owner liable for the additional suffering to which a passenger is subjected by reason of delay in releasing him from a wreck, irrespective of responsibility for the wreck or contributory negligence in being caught by it.[92]

Separate accommodations for white and colored passengers[93] are required by statute in many states,[94] and such statutes are enforceable by indictment,[95] to which unavoidable accident is a defense.[96]

§ 28. Operation and management of trains and other vehicles.[97]—That high degree of care which skillful and practical railroad operatives would exercise under similar circumstances,[98] including a reasonable degree of presence of mind

83. Accommodations need not be equally commodious. Indictment held bad for failure to specify inequality. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. State [Ark.] 87 S. W. 426.

84. See 3 C. L. 633.

85. That there was a stone on the track causing injury to a street car will not absolve its owner unless it had used due care to prevent injury from that source. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 163 Ind. 360, 71 N. E. 201. That the trolley post which struck plaintiff was slightly nearer the track than others does not establish negligence. Bridges v. Jackson El. R., Light & Power Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 788.

86. Kelly v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 583.

87. Screens of large mesh across the lower half of windows of a trolly car on the side near which the poles stand are a sufficient protection and warning to passengers not to allow any portion of their bodies to project from the car on that side. Christensen v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 708. Instruction on duty to keep fastenings of windows safe held bad as taking question from jury. International, etc., R. Co. v. Hubbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1062. That the guard rail was down on the side on which plaintiff was struck by a trolly post is not per se negligent. Bridges v. Jackson El. R., Light & Power Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 788. Whether open car with seats projecting beyond floor is negligent as to children held question for jury. Northern Texas Tract. Co. v. Roye [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 621. Not absolutely bound to furnish safe seats. Boyles v. Texas & P. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 936. Injury by defective door fastening allowing door to slam on passenger. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Leakey [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 496, 87 S. W. 1168.

88. Leaving an open space between the platforms of cars made necessary by curves in the road, and allowing passengers to pass from car to car at stations without warning of the space is not negligent. Welch v. Boston El. R. Co., 187 Mass. 67, 72 N. E. 500; Falkins v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 338.

89. Negligence held shown by fact that coupler had previously come apart and safety chains were thrown off to expedite business. Williams v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. [Wash.] 80 P. 1100.

90. Leaving a space of three inches between the door sill of an elevated railway car and the station platform is not negligent construction where the sway of the car in motion is from one to five inches. Willworth v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 333. That a vestibule door intended to be closed was open because of a defect which inspection would have disclosed is negligence. Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 689. Negligence in the running of an interurban car at a high rate of speed; care required of company to avoid the use of cracked or imperfect wheels. Cleveland & S. W. Tract. Co. v. Ward, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 385.

91. Leaving the entrance to an elevator shaft unguarded is negligent. Morgan v. Saks [Ala.] 38 So. 848. It is not negligent for the owner of a passenger elevator to allow a movable stool to remain therein for the convenience of the operator. Gibson v. International Trust Co., 186 Mass. 454, 72 N. E. 70.

92. Jackson v. Natchez & W. R. Co. [La.] 38 So. 701.

93. See 3 C. L. 634.

94. Screen law held not complied with. Southern Light & Traction Co. v. Compton [Miss.] 38 So. 629.

95. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Com. [Ky.] 84 S. W. 566. Failure to provide sufficient accommodations so that white passengers were compelled to ride in compartment for colored passengers is not a violation of Ky. St. 1903, § 795. Commonwealth v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 87 S. W. 262.

96. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Com. [Ky.] 84 S. W. 566.

97. See 3 C. L. 634.

98. The violation of any statutory or valid municipal regulations established for in the presence of danger,[99] must be exercised. High speed, when accompanied by other dangerous conditions,[1] and unnecessary and unusual jerks and bumps,[2] on cars and trains other than freight and mixed trains,[3] are negligent. The overcrowding of cars [4] and station platforms [5] may of itself be negligence, and overcrowding always imposes on the carrier a higher degree of care in the operation of its trains.[6] Running a car or train past a station platform where passengers are waiting,[7] or past another car or train where passengers are alighting,[8] may be the purpose of protecting persons or property from injury is of itself sufficient to prove such a breach of duty as will sustain an action if the other elements of actionable negligence concur. Lincoln Tract. Co. v. Heller [Neb.] 100 N. W. 197. Injury to passenger by careless coupling of cars on another train. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Nichols [Miss.] 38 So. 371. Where a street car approaches a crossing protected by a derailing switch, there is no negligence in the mere act of the conductor going ahead to operate the switch. Camden & S. R. Co. v. Rice [C. C. A.] 137 F. 326.

99. That the motorman was obliged to act quickly and without a chance for deliberation is to be considered. Tozier v. Haverhill & A. St. R. Co., 187 Mass. 179, 72 N. E. 953. To charge a motorman with negligence it must appear that he had notice of the agency which caused the injury, or contributed thereto, long enough to enable him to form an intelligent opinion as to how the injury might be avoided and apply the means. Team unexpectedly shying towards car. North Chicago St. R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 115 Ill. App. 110.

1. A carrier must be held to know of the existence of a reverse curve which is a part of the permanent construction of its road and also of the violence of the lurch of a passenger coach caused by passing over it at a high speed. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Newell, 113 Ill. App. 263, afd. 212 Ill. 332, 72 N. E. 416. In order that a street car company be held responsible for injuries to a passenger on the ground that it was running its car at an unlawful speed, the speed must have contributed to the injury. Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. Ison [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 408.

2. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Colly [Ky.] 86 S. W. 536. Stopping a car so suddenly as to hurl a passenger from the car is plainly negligent. Glassberg v. Interurban St. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 731. Sudden stop throwing passenger from his seat is actionable. Redmon v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 185 Mo. 1, 84 S. W. 26. Jerk of car held to authorize submission to jury. Sheeron v. Coney Island & B. R. Co., 89 App. Div. 338, 85 N. Y. S. 958. That the car stopped on signal with a sudden jerk, throwing plaintiff who had left his seat and was standing on the running board, no negligence of the carrier is shown, there being nothing to show what caused the jerk. Conroy v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 102 N. W. 641, rehearing denied, 104 N. W. 319. Where an injury is referred to the sudden movement of a car, its actual management, not the resultant effects, should determine the question of the carrier's negligence. Faul v. North Jersey St. R. Co., 70 N. J. Law, 795, 59 A. 148. Fight on street car does not justify a stop so sudden as to disable motive power of car and injure passengers. Willis v. St. Joseph R. Light, Heat & Power Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 567.

3. One traveling on freight train assumes risk of jerks and jolts. Young v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 175.

4. Negligence where train is so crowded as to necessitate standing on platform is for jury. Kohm v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 93 N. Y. S. 671.

5. A common carrier engaged in a great city, in the transportation of a large number of passengers between stations from which it can control their admission to its trains, is bound to exercise care to so direct the movements and disposition of those whom it undertakes to transport as to preserve their safety. Kohm v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 93 N. Y. S. 671. Carriers are bound to exercise reasonable care so as to regulate the movements and disposition of those whom they undertake to transport as to preserve the safety of all. Allowing passenger to enter car through window to injury of another. Grogan v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 97 App. Div. 413, 89 N. Y. S. 1027.

6. Where the carrier knows of the overcrowded condition of its train before it leaves the station, it is its duty to exercise additional care commensurate with the dangers and perils caused by such overcrowded condition. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Newell, 113 Ill. App. 263, afd. 212 Ill. 332, 72 N. E. 416. Though it is not negligent per se for a street car company to fail to furnish seats for all its passengers, when it permits its cars to be crowded with standing passengers, it owes them the duty of greater care than when all are seated. Halverson v. Seattle Elec. Co., 35 Wash. 600, 77 P. 1058.

7. To run a freight train between a passenger train and the station is as to passengers awaiting to board the passenger train negligent. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Holloway [Kan.] 80 P. 31. Whether a railway company was negligent in running its car at a high speed past the point where passengers were waiting between parallel tracks to take a car bound in the opposite direction is a question for the jury. Chunn v. City & S. R. Co., 23 App. D. C. 551.

8. Negligence of street car company and plaintiff's contributory negligence held properly for jury where plaintiff was run down by car going in opposite direction after he had alighted to transfer to car on intersecting street. Craven v. International R. Co., 100 App. Div. 157, 91 N. Y. S. 625. An ordinance prohibiting a moving car from passing a standing one applies, though the standing car has stopped before crossing a street. Id.

negligent. Passengers are entitled to warning of dangers unknown to them but known to the carrier's servants.[9] Reasonable regulations of the conduct of passengers may be adopted.[10]

§ 29. The duty to protect passengers[11] renders a carrier liable for an assault,[12] an unintentional injury,[13] a malicious arrest,[14] or an injury to feelings because of insulting language[15] by a conductor,[16] other employe,[17] fellow-passengers,[18] and strangers;[19] but not for injury to reputation resulting therefrom,[20] and not if the assault was brought on by the passenger's own acts,[21] or was entirely beyond the

9. Failure to warn an intoxicated passenger of the danger of going out on the platform of a car when the servant of the carrier knows of his purpose is negligence, warranting a recovery for injuries from being thrown from the platform. Fox v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 624. Advice by the ticket agent to a belated passenger to get aboard a moving train is not an intentional wrong so as to entitle him to punitive damages for a resulting injury. Pickett v. Southern R. Co., 69 S. E. 445, 48 S. E. 466. Where passengers are invited either expressly or impliedly to get off a train at a place other than that at which they usually alight, and there is any special danger attending their approach to the station, it is the duty of the railway company to warn them of such danger and to aid them in reaching the station in safety; especially is this true in the night-time. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Smith, 103 Va. 326, 49 S. E. 487; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 103 Va. 326, 49 S. E. 997. Where the conductor tells a passenger to pass through the car to find a seat, it is his duty to warn the passenger as to the existence of a nearby curve or to so control the car as to obviate the danger. Chicago City R. Co. v. McCaughna, 216 Ill. 202, 74 N. E. 819.

10. Where the seats are all occupied and a passenger is standing on the floor of the car in front of another passenger, the conductor has no right to compel him to take his place in front of some other passenger. Guariello v. Union R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 538.

11. See 3 C. L. 636.

12. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Batchler [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 902; Flynn v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 560. Steamboat owner is liable for assault by captain and threats to arrest for attempting to defraud. Levidow v. Starin [Conn.] 60 A. 123. Evidence held insufficient to support verdict for plaintiff based on assault by conductor. Guariello v. Union R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 538. Duty exists until passenger has safely alighted. Conductor followed passenger off car. O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co., 185 Mo. 263, 84 S. W. 939.

13. The carrier is responsible for an injury to a passenger caused by the conductor falling against him irrespective of the conductor's competency or the carrier's notice thereof. Spinney v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 1021.

14. Dwyer v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 152, 83 S. W. 303. A carrier is not required to make active resistance to an officer who is attempting to arrest a passenger or to inquire into his authority, but must not voluntarily assist an unlawful arrest. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Dean [Tex.] 85 S. W. 1135.

15. Passenger asked for change. Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 178 N. Y. 347, 70 N. E. 857. Threats to arrest. Levidow v. Starin [Conn.] 60 A. 123. Insulting language by conductor. Georgia R. & Elec. Co. v. Baker, 120 Ga. 991, 48 S. E. 355. Refusal to accept transfer and resistance to passenger's efforts to leave car. Five hundred dollars punitive and $25 compensatory damages held not excessive. Mueller v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 325, 83 S. W. 270. Whether carrier was negligent in expelling woman and children from sleeping car and exposing them to insults of drunken men on car platform held question for jury. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor [Ky.] 85 S. W. 168.

16. The conductor of a palace car, though the servant of the company owning the car, is also the agent of the carrier in his relations to passengers. Blake v. Kansas City So. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 430.

17. Brakeman. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Winslow [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1175.

18. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Winslow [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1175. Fellow-passenger. Stutsky v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 433. Immaterial that no physical injury appears. Plaintiff was insulted and driven from train at point of pistol. International, etc., R. Co. v. Henderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1065. Carrier is liable for allowing profane and indecent language by drunken passengers in presence of ladies. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 270. Passengers shooting and exploding dynamite unrestrained by carrier. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Flake [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 326.

19. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Winslow [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1175. A railroad company is not liable to one of its passengers for an injury received while waiting for his train, by the carelessness of an employe of another company using the same station. Miller v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 13. A carrier is not liable for injury to a passenger at the hands of a mob where it has no reason to expect injury from that source. Bosworth v. Union R. Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 982.

20. Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 178 N. Y. 347, 70 N. E. 857.

21. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Batchler [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 902; O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co., 185 Mo. 263, 84 S. W. 939. A passenger who voluntarily and without cause interferes between another passenger and the carrier's servant cannot recover from the carrier for injuries received at the hands of the servant. Gardner v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 45 Misc. 424, 90 N. Y. S. 373. Evidence held scope of the employe inflicting it.[22] A carrier is not responsible for the act of a passenger which it had no opportunity to anticipate and prevent.[23] A passenger directed by the porter to ride in the smoker on entering the train and not requesting any other seat cannot recover for sickness caused thereby.[24]

§ 30. Taking up or setting down passengers.[25]—A carrier is bound to exercise the greatest care consistent with the operation of its cars towards its passengers, not only while they are on the cars but while they are in the act of boarding them.[26] Trains must stop a sufficient time to allow passengers to board with safety,[27] considering their age and physical infirmity,[28] including all who are reasonably supposed to be passengers;[29] but a carrier owes no duty to hold its train for a belated passenger,[30] and there is no negligence in starting after all are safely on except late comers and those as to whom there is no notice of intention to board.[31] Slowing a car in obedience to a signal may be an invitation to board.[32] Passengers must board the train within a reasonable time after it stops at the station.[33] Persons boarding a train to assist passengers are not entitled to the protection accorded passengers.[34] In New York it is provided that no train on an elevated rail-to require submission to jury whether plaintiff or employe was aggressor. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Winslow [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1175.

22. O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co. 185 Mo. 263, 84 S. W. 939. An assault on a passenger by a conductor after the relation has ceased to exist and while the conductor is not in the performance of his duty as such is not chargeable to the carrier. Plaintiff followed conductor to company's office in dispute over change. Reilly v. New York City R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 319. Baggage agent assisting officer to make unlawful arrest of passenger as he was about to enter train renders the company liable, though not about the company's business. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Dean [Tex.] 85 S. W. 1135. Conductor following passenger off car during fight. Passenger held still entitled to protection. Flynn v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 560.

23. Drunken passenger cut off rear car and another was injured by concussion when parts of train came together. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Storey [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 852.

24. Brezewitz v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 87 S. W. 127.

25. See 3 C. L. 637.

26. Motorman inviting passenger to board by front platform owes same degree of care otherwise due. Brake handle slipping and striking passenger. Thompson v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 465.

27. Maggioli v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 416, 83 S. W. 1026. If a passenger is thrown from the step or platform of a car by the starting of it before he is safely on, the carrier is liable for the injuries sustained. Hatch v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 480. Instruction in effect taking negligence and contributory negligence from jury in case where plaintiff was attempting to board a car held erroneous. Ward v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 99 App. Div. 126, 90 N. Y. S. 897. Starting car before passenger has reached place of safety is negligent. Lehner v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 215, 85 S. W. 110.

Elevator operator held negligent in starting while plaintiff was entering. Luckel v. Century Bldg. Co., 177 Mo. 608, 76 S. W. 1035.

28. Shanahan v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 783.

29. When a street car has been stopped to take on passengers it is the duty of the conductor to see that all are safely on before giving the signal to start. Guenther v. Metropolitan R. Co., 23 App. D. C. 493. Conductor on single track road must look on both sides of the car to see if passengers are about to enter. Redington v. Harrisburg Traction Co. [Pa.] 60 A. 305. It is the duty of a street railway company when stopping its cars for the purpose of receiving passengers to use the highest degree of care to see that those who are intending to take passage thereon have safely boarded the cars before giving the signal to start. Normile v. Wheeling Traction Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 1030; Clark v. Durham Traction Co., 138 N. C. 77, 50 S. E. 518.

30. Pickett v. Southern R. Co., Carolina Division, 69 S. C. 445, 48 S. E. 466.

31. If every one reasonably supposed to be a passenger is safely on before a car starts, there is no negligence as to one stepping on the platform just as the train starts who is thrown off and injured. Hatch v. Philadelphia & R. Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 480.

32. Spencer v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 593. One injured by an increase of speed in an attempt to board a moving car at a point not the usual stopping place for passengers cannot recover, though the car had slowed up for him, where it does not appear that the motorman had actual notice of his attempt. Nathan v. New York City R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 35.

33. Instruction held erroneous in repeatedly introducing qualification of plaintiff's condition and circumstances. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Condra [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 528.

34. Flaherty v. Boston & M. R. Co., 186 Mass. 567, 72 N. E. 66; Georgia, etc., R. Co. v. Hutchins, 121 Ga. 317, 48 S. E. 939. There is no obligation on the part of a railroad to hold its train at a station until every road shall be permitted to start until every passenger on the platform desiring to enter shall have done so unless due notice is given that the cars are filled.[35]

Setting down.[36]—The carrier's duty extends to setting down its passengers safely at the end of their journey,[37] and for this purpose they should be apprised of approach to their stations,[38] warned of any unexpected or unusual stops,[39] or other dangers in the vicinity of the place where the stop is made,[40] be provided with a safe place to alight,[41] and be given time to alight safely in the use of reasonable diligence and care under the circumstances.[42] Failure to slow down for passengers person not a passenger leaves it irrespective of the length of the stop. Dunne v. New York, etc., R. Co., 99 App. Div. 571, 91 N. Y. S. 145.

35. Laws 1890, p. 1126, c. 565, § 138. Statute does not create presumption of negligence. Brown v. Manhattan R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 190. A statute providing that no train on an elevated railroad shall be permitted to start until every passenger on the platform desiring to enter shall have done so unless due notice shall have been given that the cars are filled cannot be construed to require the opening of the gates after they have once been closed and the signal to start given, though persons come upon the platform desiring to board. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 12, 82 S. W. 1108. The conductor of a street car should know before starting whether all passengers alighting have safely done so. Union Traction Co. v. Siceloff [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 266. The duty of a carrier to passengers alighting at terminal stations is the same as at intermediate stations. Farr v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 332. That the injuries would not have been sustained by a younger person or one of less weight does not absolve defendant. Staines v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 385. It is not negligence to ask passengers leaving an elevated railway car to move quickly. Willworth v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 333. Failure to take measures to prevent crowding of passengers on leaving car held not negligent. Id. Failure to let down movable step causing plaintiff to fall is negligent. Hutchels v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 779. Equal care is required in affording safe place to alight as in carriage. Harvey v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 116 Ill. App. 507.

38. Sleeping car company where a common carrier must notify passenger of arrival soon enough to afford sufficient time to alight. Pullman Co. v. Kelly [Miss.] 38 So. 317. Staines v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 385. When a street car is stopped under circumstances which justify a passenger in believing that he is invited to alight, the conductor must not start the car while the passengers are in the act of alighting. Selby v. Detroit R. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 382, 104 N. W. 376. Evidence held insufficient to justify recovery for failure to give infirm passenger time to alight at station and subsequent putting off between stations. Southern R. Co. v. Hobbs, 121 Ga. 428, 49 S. E. 294. Company failing to stop on signal of passenger wishing to alight held negligent. Dallas Rapid Transit Co. v. Payne [Tex.] 82 S. W. 649. A reasonable time is such as one of ordinary care under the circumstances should be allowed to take. Barringer v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co.

to alight as agreed may charge the carrier with liability for injuries in alighting from a train moving too rapidly.[43] Whether the acts and conduct of the carrier's servants amount to an invitation to alight is generally a question of fact rather than of law.[44] It is the passenger's duty to alight with reasonable promptness,[45] and to exercise ordinary care in so doing;[46] but failure to alight does not render him a trespasser.[47] An ordinance requiring street cars to stop on the far side of the crossing is not available to show negligence of a passenger who attempts to alight at a point where the car has customarily stopped to receive and discharge passengers.[48]

§ 31. Duty to persons other than passengers.[49]—These usually fall within the category of employes,[50] or licensees, trespassers, and strangers.[51] A person boarding a train to assist a passenger is not entitled to the protection due a passenger,[52] but if the carrier suffers such a person to enter a car it owes him ordinary care until he leaves it.[53] For such a person to attempt to leave the car while in motion is negligence which will prevent recovery if it contributed to his injury.[54] To a person allowed to ride on a construction train gratuitously,[55] and to persons not passengers on its station platform, a carrier owes only ordinary care,[56] but owes

Failure of railroad employes to assist a mother in placing her children on the train if negligent was too remote to create liability on its part for injury to her from leaving the train while in motion. Flaherty v. Boston & M. R. Co., 186 Mass. 567, 72 N. E. 66. That a railroad's servant saw a passenger's escort walking towards the platform did not make it negligent for him to give the starting signal before the escort could alight. Dunne v. New York, etc., R. Co., 99 App. Div. 571, 91 N. Y. S. 145.

55. Pennsylvania Co. v. Coyer, 163 Ind. 631, 72 N. E. 875, citing many cases. Where an employe of a contractor has notice of a rule of a railroad company prohibiting the employes of his master from riding on its trains, the habitual disregard of such rule by the employes and the trainmen in charge of trains will not render the railroad company liable for an injury to the employe in the absence of proof of knowledge and acquiescence by the company of the disregard of its rule. Id.

56. Fremont, etc., R. Co. v. Hagblad [Neb.] 101 N. W. 1033. A railroad company station to receive a friend or guest upon arrival ordinary care for his safety while at the station and is liable for an inpany owes to one who comes to its passen-no duty to a trespasser on one of its trains, except that of refraining from willful and wanton injury.[57] In removing a trespasser from a train the employes in charge thereof may use such force as is reasonably necessary to effect their purpose,[58] the company being liable for the conduct of its conductor in cursing and abusing him.[59]

§ 32. Remedies and procedure.[60]—The measure of damages differing in no respect from that in other personal injury cases is elsewhere treated.[61] The notice of injury required by the statutes of Wisconsin cannot be waived by acts of the claim agent of the railroad.[62]

Pleading.[63]—The plaintiff's statement of his case must show that he was a passenger,[64] that defendant was negligent,[65] and that that negligence was the proximate cause of his injury.[66] Matters going merely in aggravation or extenuation, and having effect to enhance or diminish the damages need not be pleaded.[67] If it appears therefrom that plaintiff's own negligence contributed to his injury, the pleading is bad.[68] Averment of inconsistent grounds of negligence presents an election.[69] That plaintiff was traveling on a pass under which he released defendant from responsibility for injuries must be specially pleaded.[70]

General allegations as to negligence permitting collision are sufficient. Estes v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 725, 85 S. W. 627. Petition for negligent starting of car held sufficient though failing to allege that plaintiff informed motorman of her purpose to alight. Cramer v. Springfield Trac. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 24.

66. Allegation that defendant ran its car at a dangerously high rate of speed into a switch, off the track and against a pole throwing plaintiff down, etc., shows that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of injury. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 163 Ind. 360, 71 N. E. 201. Averment held sufficient to permit recovery on theory that speed of train caused plaintiff to fall from platform. Morgan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 836. Petition alleging injury from jolt, jar, or shock resulting in miscarriage, held good. Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 788. Allegations in complaint for injury by fall of elevator held sufficient to show causal connection between negligence and injury. Alexander v. McGaffey [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 462.

67. Insulting language of conductor calling forth similar language from passenger relied on as justification for assault. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Batchler [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 902.

68. A complaint is not demurrable merely because it states facts from which an inference of contributory negligence may be drawn, but only in case no other inference is possible. Cooper v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 69 S. C. 479, 48 S. E. 458. Petition held not demurrable, though alleging that train was in motion when plaintiff attempted to alight. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 445.

69. Starting without sufficient time to alight and allowing passenger to alight while car was in motion in violation of city ordinance. Behen v. St. Louis Transit Co., 186 Mo. 430, 85 S. W. 346. Complaint alleging negligence in starting while plaintiff

Issues, proof and variance.[71]—As in other cases all substantial and necessary averments in the complaint must be proved,[72] in substantial conformity to the allegations, and evidence not so conforming is inadmissible,[73] though slight variances are disregarded.[74] Recovery cannot be had on a theory substantially different from that set up in the pleadings.[75]

Presumptions and burden of proof.[76]—Accident to the means of transportation,[77] resulting in injury to a passenger,[78] of itself raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the carrier[79] sufficient to warrant recovery of damages, unless refuted by evidence on behalf of the company showing that the accident was not

71. See 3 C. L. 650.

72. An allegation that plaintiff's intestate, killed while riding in the private conveyance of another, was a passenger therein for hire, is an essential part of plaintiff's case and must be proved. Lydon v. Robert Smith Ale Brewing Co., 133 F. 830. A complaint charging that plaintiff was injured by the starting of defendant's street car while he was boarding it and before he had an opportunity to reach a place of safety thereon does not require proof that the car started with more than ordinary violence. Fine v. Interurban St. R. Co., 45 Misc. 587, 91 N. Y. S. 43.

73. An allegation of the duty of exercising due care to transport safely is broad enough to raise the issue whether sufficient care was exercised in giving passengers opportunity to alight. Camden & S. R. Co. v. Rice [C. C. A.] 137 F. 326.

74. A variance between petition and proof as to whether a street car had come to a full stop at the time an accident occurred, whereby plaintiff was injured in alighting from a car, or stopped three feet further on, is too slight to be prejudicial. Toledo R. & L. Co. v. Ketrow, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 254. Variance held immaterial. Cars colliding with wagons. Chicago City R. Co. v. McClain, 211 Ill. 589, 71 N. E. 1103. Co., 185 Mo. 239, 84 S. W. 873. Where the gravamen of the charge is stopping at unsafe place, an allegation that the ground was lower than the car and proof that it was higher than the car floor is immaterial. Senf v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 887.

75. A passenger injured by the car platform on which he was standing colliding with a baggage truck belonging to another carrier cannot recover against the owner of the truck on a mere allegation of duty on his carrier's part to carry him safely. Fletcher v. Boston & M. R. Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 552. Petition counting on sudden start while plaintiff was alighting will not support recovery on proof that plaintiff alighted from slowly moving train. Bond v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 124.

Interurban St. R. Co., 45 Misc. 568, 91 N. Y. S. 21. Passenger receiving shock from controller box on electric car. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Smith [Ky.] 86 S. W. 970.

caused by the negligence of itself or its employes.[80] This rule is applied with caution,[81] and never from the mere fact of injury.[82] Mere presence in a conveyance does not necessarily raise the presumption that the person present is a passenger,[83] and a caretaker of stock riding in the stock car rather than the caboose has the burden of showing that he was justified in riding where he did.[84] Contributory negligence may appear from plaintiff's case.[85]

Admissibility of evidence [86] is governed by the rules applicable to other cases.[87]

80. Proof that derailment was caused by cow on track does not absolve. Clark v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 609. Interference of strikers with track held sufficiently shown to rebut presumption. Cheetham v. Union R. Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 881. Explanation of cause of explosions under electric car held to call for instructions on burden of proof. Lynch v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 378. Presumption is rebutted by showing that derailment was caused by stones being thrown at car which got on rails. Swigelsky v. Interurban St. R. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 350. This presumption does not change the burden of proof which rests upon the plaintiff throughout. Maher v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 102 App. Div. 517, 92 N. Y. S. 825; Patterson v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 81 P. 531. Statutes so providing are merely declaratory of common law. Southern R. Co. v. Cunningham [Ga.] 50 S. E. 979. Where defendant admits the relation of carrier and passenger and the fact of collision, it assumes the burden of disproving negligence. Wilbur v. Southwest Mo. Elec. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 671. Where sudden stop was caused by a bolt or pin getting into the rail which was taken away by defendant's operatives, the burden is on it to show how the obstruction got there. Redmon v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 185 Mo. 1, 84 S. W. 26. An assault on the conductor by a passenger, if not the operation of a cause beyond the control of the carrier, does not excuse a stop so sudden as to throw passengers from their seats. Willis v. St. Joseph R., Light, Heat & Power Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 567.

81. And only where there is an absence of positive proof of any definite act of negligcnce, or want of skill, though the accident itself is of an unusual and extraordinary character and one not likely to occur without such cause. Kight v. Metropolitan R. Co., 21 App. D. C. 494.

82. Res ipsa loquitur does not apply where injury arises from attempt to alight from car. Blake v. Camden Interstate R. Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 408. Applies to injury by conductor. Kohner v. Capital Traction Co., 22 App. D. C. 181. Does not arise where the accident might as plausibly have resulted from passenger's negligence; nor is it applicable to the death of a passenger from circumstances personal and peculiar to him and not by reason of any management of or accident to the train itself. Price v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 88 S. W. 575. The mere fact that a passenger was injured does not of itself raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the carrier. Man standing on platform thrown off as car passed switch. State v. United R. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 60 A. 249. Passenger thrown in attempt to alight. Lincoln Traction Co. v. Webb [Neb.] 102 N. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 85 S. W. 94. Where it appears that the proximate cause of the accident was in part the negligence of a third person, no presumption of carrier's negligence arises. Loehner v. North Chicago St. R. Co. & Chicago Union Traction Co., 116 Ill. App. 365.

83. Railroad train. Pennsylvania Co. v. Coyer, 163 Ind. 631, 72 N. E. 875. There is no presumption that a person riding in a private vehicle of another is a passenger for hire as would be the case were he in the public conveyance of a common carrier. Lydon v. Robert Smith Ale Brewing Co., 133 F. 830.

84. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Teeters [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1014.

85. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Hand [Md.] 61 A. 285; Bridges v. Jackson Elec. R. L. & P. Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 788.

86. See 3 C. L. 652.

87. Where the injury was caused by collision of a street car with a vehicle, an ordinance giving the street car company the right of way is immaterial. Chicago City R. Co. v. Lannon, 212 Ill. 477, 72 N. E. 585. Where a boy was killed while attempting to board a slowly moving car and defendant claims he was trying to steal a ride, it may be shown he had money to pay his fare. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Lundahl, 215 Ill. 289, 74 N. E. 155. The number of persons killed in a collision may be shown to show its severity where the claim is that plaintiff was not injured. Estes v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 725, 85 S. W. 627. Plaintiff may state whether acts of brakeman in making room for plaintiff and stating to others that plaintiff wanted to get off influenced him in believing he had arrived at his destination. Long v. Red River T. & S. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1048. Witness cannot state that sometime after the accident he called someone's attention to a defective step, its defects being in issue. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Ellison [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 213. Plaintiff having a right to transportation on a way bill cannot prove it by a letter

Sufficiency of evidence.[88]—The presence or absence of due care or other grounds of recovery [90] must be determined from all the facts and circumstances of the particular case and is usually for the jury. Cases in which the sufficiency of the evidence to establish particular grounds of recovery, or to authorize the submission of the question to the jury, has been considered, are grouped in the footnotes.[91] Plaintiff's evidence alone may be sufficient,[92] but not when uncorroborated press copy. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Lynch [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 884.

Subsequent statement of brakeman that he started to slap plaintiff and was sorry he did not do it, held not admissible. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Winslow [Ky.] 84 S. W. 1175. Statement of conductor after accident as to what caused it is not admissible either as res gestae or as an admission. Redmon v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 185 Mo. 1, 84 S. W. 260. Conversations between plaintiff and defendant's motorman sometime after accident not admissible. Butler v. Detroit, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 232.

Opinion whether train stopped long enough to allow passengers to alight held inadmissible. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 445. Opinion of roadmaster that running of train over submerged track was not dangerous held inadmissible, opinion not being limited to conditions in issue. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Cain [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 682. Plaintiff may state that he tried to get between the seats of a crowded car to escape being injured by poles, but could not because of its crowded condition, such statement not being a mere conclusion. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Haverstick [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 34. Where the issue was whether the motorman and conductor knew or ought to have known car was off track, passengers may state that the noise and motion of the car was unusual. Beers v. West Side R. Co., 101 App. Div. 308, 91 N. Y. S. 957. Conductor may state whether it was duty of brakeman to caution and warn passengers. Long v. Red River T. & S. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1048.

Prior happening of similar accidents within rule of res ipsa loquitur may be shown. Cheetham v. Union R. Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 881.

A custom to allow passengers to ride on running boards may be shown, though there is no claim that the custom was known to the person injured. Stone v. Lewiston, etc., R. Co., 99 Me. 243, 59 A. 56. Where it is claimed that plaintiff attempted to board the car at a point where passengers were not received, he may show defendant's custom to receive passengers there. Gleason v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 99 App. Div. 209, 90 N. Y. S. 1025.

The contract made between the carrier and passenger may be proved by parol evidence aside from the ticket sold. Pennsylvania Co. v. Loftis [Ohio] 74 N. E. 179. It is competent to prove by parol that one who lost his life in a railroad accident had upon his person at the time a ticket entitling him to passage on the train from which he received his injury, though the ticket is not produced. Elgin, J. & E. R. Co. v. Thomas, 115 Ill. App. 508, afd. 215 Ill. 158, 74 N. E. 109.

Reports made by conductors and motormen of accidents occurring along the line made to the claim agent of a street railway company are not privileged and must be produced under a duces tecum issued in an action growing out of such an accident. Ex parte J. H. Schoepf, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 93, 16 Ohio Dec. N. P. 17.

88. See 3 C. L. 653.

89. Evidence that the car was started as plaintiff was boarding and that he was thrown down justifies an inference of negligence. Fine v. Interurban St. R. Co., 45 Misc. 587, 91 N. Y. S. 43. Negligence of ferry hands in failing to block wheels of wagon going up drop held for jury. Townsend v. Boston, 187 Mass. 283, 72 N. E. 991.

90. Evidence held insufficient to show that plaintiff was kicked from defendant's train by a brakeman. Murphy v. New York, etc., R. Co., 101 App. Div. 610, 92 N. Y. S. 192. Where a train porter wrongfully took plaintiff's bag and took her money and ticket from it which was not returned, she was entitled to go to the jury, regardless of the sufficiency of proof as to other injuries. Southern Pac. Co. v. Maloney [C. C. A.] 136 F. 171. Whether a motorman claimed to have thrown a newsboy from a car was acting within the scope of his authority is a question for the jury. Barry v. Union R. of N. Y., 94 N. Y. S. 449.

91. Liability where decedent was run down by car on opposite track while alighting. Louisville R. Co. v. Hartman's Adm'r [Ky.] 83 S. W. 570. Evidence held to show that servant of carrier instigated unlawful arrest. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Dean [Tex.] 85 S. W. 1135.

Taking on passengers: Whether passenger transfering struck by another car could recover held for jury. Walger v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 14. Evidence held not to establish that car was moving when plaintiff attempted to board. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Brown, 112 Ill. App. 351. Plaintiff stepped between platforms passing from one car to another standing at station. Held, no liability. Welch v. Boston El. R. Co., 187 Mass. 118, 72 N. E. 500; Falkins v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 338. Recovery sustained where plaintiff on excursion was crowded through glass door. Madden v. New York, etc., R. Co., 98 App. Div. 406, 90 N. Y. S. 261. Weight of evidence held against finding that car was not in motion when plaintiff attempted to board. Koester v. Interurban St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 375; Hanau v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 1086. Sudden starting of car as plaintiff was boarding. Held for jury. McKee v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 470, 83 S. W. 1013.

Setting down passengers: Evidence held insufficient to support finding that car had stopped when plaintiff attempted to alight. Wager v. Interurban St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. and contradicted by disinterested witness.[93] Physical facts may demonstrate falsity of oral testimony.[94] Positive evidence of the death of a passenger,[95] or its cause, is unnecessary.[96] Ownership by defendant must be proved.[97]

403; Adams v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 99 App. Div. 621, 90 N. Y. S. 937; Gunther v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 45 Misc. 117, 91 N. Y. S. 589. Negligence in starting while plaintiff was alighting held for jury. Gordon v. Nassau Elec. R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 487. Negligence of street railway company using its own right-of-way in failing to provide safe place to alight held shown. Invitation of conductor to alight held shown. Contributory negligence of passenger held not shown. Topp v. United R. & Elec. Co., 99 Md. 630, 59 A. 52. Whether plaintiff was justified in believing he had arrived at his destination and was negligent in alighting from moving train held question for jury. Long v. Red River T. & S. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1048. Evidence held to sustain recovery on theory that plaintiff was thrown from train by jerk and was not injured by slipping on grass after alighting. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Byrne [Ark.] 84 S. W. 469. Evidence held sufficient to show that plaintiff's ticket called for a stop at the station where he was injured in alighting. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1094.

Means of transportation: Where trolly wire and pole fell while car was at high speed, resulting in commotion and fright of passengers during which plaintiff either fell or was thrown from car, negligence was for jury. Stern v. Westchester Elec. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 870.

Care en route: Evidence held sufficient from which to infer that street car was being propelled at a dangerous speed at night Chicago City R. Co. v. Bennett, 214 Ill. 26, 73 N. E. 343. Evidence held sufficient to go to jury that plaintiff was injured by jolting of car. Murphy v. Interurban St. R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 728. Evidence held insufficient to show that carrier was responsible for plaintiff's fall from moving train. Box v. Atlantic & B. R. Co., 120 Ga. 1050, 48 S. E. 427. Evidence held sufficient to support theory that car window was broken by collision with another car. Binsbacher v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 1, 82 S. W. 546. Evidence held sufficient to show negligence in running train over submerged track. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Cain [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 682. Negligence of elevator operator held question for jury. Hensler v. Stix [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 108. Negligence of conductor allowing drunken passenger to go on platform and fall off held question for jury. Price v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. [Ark.] 88 S. W. 575.

Contributory negligence: Evidence of admissions of plaintiff held sufficient to require charge on contributory negligence. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Riegler's Adm'r, 26 Ky. L. R. 666, 82 S. W. 382.

Contra, plaintiff leaving moving train. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Byrne [Ark.] 84 S. W. 469. Passenger slipping on incline. Charge on contributory negligence for going on place obviously dangerous held necessary. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Criswell [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 373.

Proximate cause: Injuries held sufficiently shown to have been caused by the accident complained of. Johnson v. Yonkers R. Co., 101 App. Div. 65, 91 N. Y. S. 508. Evidence held sufficient to support verdict on theory that plaintiff's blindness resulted from injury. O'Neal v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 145. That plaintiff's injuries were caused by sudden start of train as plaintiff was alighting. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1094.

92. An allegation that a ticket was from one to another of two stations is sufficiently proved by an uncontradicted statement of plaintiff to that effect, though there is no evidence as to how the ticket in fact read. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Stratton, 111 Ill. App. 142. Evidence held insufficient to rebut plaintiff's testimony that the injury occurred, and sufficient to support theory that varicocele resulted from it. Bial v. Interurban St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 434. Where plaintiff shows that he was injured in the face by being struck by the hand of the conductor of the car, testimony on the conductor's part that the act was purely involuntary and unintentional does not require the directing of a verdict, it being for the jury to say whether his explanation was true. Kohner v. Capital Tract. Co., 22 App. D. C. 181. Evidence by plaintiff that as she was about to take her seat another car bumped so hard as to throw her down requires denial of peremptory instruction. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Colly [Ky.] 86 S. W. 536.

93. Plaintiff's statement as to her injury held not sufficient to support a verdict in contradiction with all other witnesses. Heltzen v. Union R. Co. [R. I.] 59 A. 918.

94. Slippery condition of track from rain held not sufficiently shown to conclusively rebut plaintiff's case that car was started with a jerk. McNamara v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 Mo. App. 349, 80 S. W. 303. Estimates that speed of car was not unlawful held insufficient to overcome presumption arising from physical fact that passengers were hurled from their seats by speed of car rounding curve. McEwen v. Atlanta R. & Power Co., 120 Ga. 1003, 48 S. E. 391. Injury to plaintiff's right hand on jamb of door closing from right to left held not a physical impossibility. Stein v. Manhattan R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 437. Evidence held insufficient to rebut presumption that car window fell because not raised high enough for bolt to catch. Faulkner v. Boston & M. R. Co., 187 Mass. 254, 72 N. E. 976.

95. Evidence held sufficient to show that passenger not afterwards heard of was killed in railroad wreck, though body was never identified. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Gunning [Colo.] 80 P. 727.

96. Facts held not to leave death of passenger to mere conjecture, but to justify the inference that he was thrown out of defective vestibule by lurching of train. Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 689.

97. Defendant's ownership of car held not

Instructions[98] as in other cases must submit the issues fairly,[99] conform and be confined to the evidence,[1] and respect the province of the jury.[2]

Part V. Carriers of Baggage and Passengers' Effects.

§ 33. Rights, duties and liabilities.[3]—The contract of carriage of a passenger implies the carriage also of baggage, consisting of personal effects proper and nec-

98. See 3 C. L. 656.

99. Instructions in case of injury to mail clerk by derailment of train by washout approved. Southern Pac. Co. v. Schuyler [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1015. Instructions in similar case disapproved. Cavin v. Southern Pac. Co. [C. C. A.] 136 F. 592. Instructions where passenger was thrown down by jolt from coupling cars approved. Columbia, N. & L. R. Co. v. Means [C. C. A.] 136 F. 83. Instructions on leaving moving car held not prejudicial. Cody v. Duluth St. R. Co. [Minn.] 102 N. W. 397. Instructions as to contributory negligence of mail clerk falling over pile of sacks by reason of jerk of train held proper. Graves v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 136 N. C. 3, 48 S. E. 502. Question whether injury was caused by plaintiff's haste in leaving car held properly submitted. Tucker v. Central of Georgia R. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 128. Instruction on care required of street railway held too general. El Paso Elec. R. Co. v. Harry [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 735. Specifications in starting a car before plaintiff was afforded a reasonable opportunity to safely get on and in not stopping subsequently to avert the peril impending in his jeopardous situation of being dragged and clinging to the car, are not inconsistent. Shanahan v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 783. Assault on passenger by conductor. Insulting words by passenger. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Batchler [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 902. Complaint relying on wanton ejection does not authorize charge on use of unnecessary force and careless and wanton injury. Ruebsam v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 437, 83 S. W. 984. Instruction on starting while plaintiff was boarding, failing to take into consideration willfullness or negligence of defendant's servants is bad. Maggioli v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 416, 83 S. W. 1026. Charge authorizing jury to consider failure of defendant to provide employe to look after trolly pole held not justified by pleadings. Denison & S. R. Co. v. Freeman [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 55. Instructions in case where passenger and conductor fought and conductor followed passenger to sidewalk and killed him, discussed. O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co., 185 Mo. 263, 84 S. W. 939. Instruction predicating defense of contributory negligence on finding of several unnecessary facts conjunctively held error. Boarding moving train. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Ellison [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 213. Instructions submitting issue of passenger vel non as alleged in declaration cannot be complained of after verdict. Corum v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 143.

1. Instruction authorizing jury to draw inference from their own experience whether plaintiff ran after moving car. Hanan v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 1086. Where the negligence claimed is improperly starting the car while plaintiff was alighting, an instruction submitting failure to stop should not be given. Chicago Union Tract. Co. v. Hanthorn, 211 Ill. 367, 71 N. E. 1022. An instruction in effect authorizing substantial damages for insignificant injuries is erroneous. Rosenberg v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 1115. Where the negligence alleged is in the operation of a train, an instruction authorizing recovery for failure to use due care in keeping appliances in a safe condition is bad. Maynard v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 78 P. 983. Where the negligence charged is the premature announcement of the station, it is proper for the jury to consider whether plaintiff knew when he went upon the step of the car that the proper point of alighting had not been reached, and an instruction on whether there was a light is proper. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Anderson, 121 Ga. 666, 49 S. E. 791. Evidence that plaintiff alighted with extraordinary force warrants submission of issue whether he alighted before car stopped. San Antonio Tract. Co. v. Warren [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 26. Instruction on proximate cause of injury held properly refused. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Martin [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 387. Where there is no evidence that car stopped for any purpose but to discharge passengers, instructions should not submit whether it stopped for another purpose. Corum v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 143.

2. An instruction characterizing as negligent an act of the motorman that is not so as a matter of law is erroneous. Ward v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 99 App. Div. 126, 90 N. Y. S. 897. Requests in case where plaintiff attempted to board a car which started before he had time to get safely on and then failed to stop after he had been put in a precarious situation, held bad as comments on evidence. Shanahan v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 83 S. W. 783. Charge held not bad as assuming that defendant's employes violated rule requiring them to satisfy themselves of safety of road and bridges in time of flood. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Cain [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 682. Instructions where car stopped suddenly throwing plaintiff from seat held properly refused as argumentative. Willis v. St. Joseph R. Light, Heat & Power Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 567. Instructions on duty to provide reasonable time to board train held not to invade province of jury. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Copley [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 219.

essary,[4] and in a reasonable amount considering the length and purpose of the journey, and the circumstances of the passenger,[5] and for such baggage, delivered to the carrier,[6] a reasonable time before departure of his conveyance,[7] the carrier is liable prima facie as a carrier of freight,[8] whether or not the passenger in fact traveled on his ticket.[9] The carrier's liability as warehouseman extends only to losses through negligence.[10]

§ 34. Care of baggage and effects.[11]—The general liability is that of an insurer.[12] A railroad company carrying a passenger and his baggage on a pass is a gratuitous bailee as to the baggage and responsible only for ordinary care.[13]

§ 35. Limitation of liability.[14]—The carrier may contract for a reasonable limitation of its common-law liability for loss or damage to baggage not resulting from its negligence,[15] but the passenger must consent to the limitation [16] and have notice in such a way as to afford an opportunity to accept or reject.[17]

4. Business papers, though carried in a trunk by a business man, are not baggage and cannot be recovered for if lost, nor can damages be allowed for delay in transporting them. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Georgia Home Ins. Co. [Miss.] 37 So. 500. A railroad baggage master has authority to accept merchandise from a passenger and contract to carry it as baggage without extra compensation. Saleeby v. Central R. of N. J., 99 App. Div. 163, 90 N. Y. S. 1042. Where the carrier undertakes to transport as baggage without extra compensation a traveling case, knowing that it contains merchandise and samples, it is liable for the loss thereof. Id. Whether shot guns are baggage held properly submitted to jury. Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Record [Ark.] 85 S. W. 421. In the absence of special agreement, the carrier's liability extends only to such articles as are baggage in a technical sense; but jewelry, opera glasses, watches, bracelets, pins and rings may be baggage when carried in a woman's trunk for her personal use. Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 52.

5. The carrier is liable for money necessary for traveling expenses and jewelry for personal use carried in a trunk. Battle v. Columbia, etc., R. Co. [S. C.] 49 S. E. 849. That articles lost were not suited to plaintiff's station in life is matter of defense not inquirable into on appeal in the absence of evidence or requests for instructions on the issue. Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 52.

6. Deposit at place designated by only person at station and notice that owner will appear shortly is delivery to carrier. Battle v. Columbia, etc., R. Co. [S. C.] 49 S. E. 849. Delivery of baggage to a carrier is not accomplished by unloading it in the absence of station officials onto a truck standing out of doors, where a safe and readily accessable place is provided. Lennon v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 343.

7. A steamship company is responsible for the loss of baggage delivered several days in advance of sailing for the carrier's convenience and by it kept on the dock. North German Lloyd S. S. Co. v. Bullen, 111 Ill. App. 426.

8. Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 52.

9. Adger v. Blue Ridge R. Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 783. See note on liability for baggage not accompanied by passenger in 3 C. L. 662, n. 29.

10. Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 52. The status of warehouseman begins when the passenger has had a reasonable time after arrival to take baggage away. Id.

11. See 3 C. L. 661.

12. Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 52. The unexplained loss of luggage checked as baggage makes out a prima facie case. Saleeby v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 99 App. Div. 163, 90 N. Y. S. 1042. The liability of a steamship company for property of a passenger stolen from a stateroom is that of an insurer in the absence of negligence on the part of the passenger. Leaving stateroom unlocked held not negligent. Hart v. North German Lloyd S. S. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 338.

13. Proof that officers attempting to arrest a fugitive shot into baggage does not convict the railroad of negligence. White v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 962.

14. See 3 C. L. 662.

15. Baggage limited to one hundred and fifty pounds at $1 per pound. Words printed on ticket. Mogill v. Central R. R. of N. J., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 164. Under a statute authorizing carriers to limit their liability for baggage by stipulation in tickets liability for merchandise accepted for transportation as baggage is not limited by stipulation in the ticket. Saleeby v. Central R. of N. J., 99 App. Div. 163, 90 N. Y. S. 1042. Cannot limit liability in Texas. White v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 962.

16. A contract limiting the carrier's liability for baggage to $100 unless an excess value is declared at the time of making the contract or of delivery to the ship is not applicable where baggage was lost on delivery to the ship's agents at the dock. Holmes v. North German Lloyd S. S. Co., 100 App. Div. 36, 90 N. Y. S. 834.

17. A passenger is not bound by conditions relative to the carrier's responsibility for baggage which are printed in fine print on the ticket, and to which his attention was not called and to which he in no way assented. Hutchins v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. Y.] 73 N. E. 972. Printing on back of ticket. Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Record [Ark.] 85 S. W. 421.

§ 36. Damages.[18]—Where defendant produces the baggage at the trial and tenders it to plaintiff, the damages are the reasonable loss and delay to plaintiff and the depreciation of value.[19]

§ 37. Remedies and procedure.[20]—Where there is a failure to deliver baggage arriving at the passenger's destination, the burden is on the carrier to account for the default.[21] The husband has title to wearing apparel of his wife and children,[22] and may testify to the value of the articles after the wife has enumerated them.[23] Cases in which some special questions of pleading,[24] evidence,[25] and new trial,[26] appear are cited in the notes.

CASE, ACTION ON.

An action on the case will not lie for breach of a contract to convey land, though the land be subsequently conveyed to another. The breach of the contract and not the conveyance to another is the proximate cause of injury.[65] A declaration alleging the letting of a team of horses and a promise to drive them to a certain place and no other, in a moderate and proper manner, and that the team was driven to another place and greatly injured by immoderate driving, states a cause of action in case.[66] In an action on the case counts upon the statutory liability under the Pennsylvania dram-shop act may be joined with a common-law count for conversion of property.[67]

Case Agreed; Case Certified; Case Settled; Cash; Catching Bargain. see latest topical index.

CAUSES OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.[68]

A cause of action consists in "a right possessed by one or more persons[69] and a violation thereof by another."[69a] The party plaintiff must derive such right

69. This is called the "primary right." Emerson v. Nash [Wis.] 102 N. W. 921.

69a. Emerson v. Nash [Wis.] 102 N. W. 921. A "transaction" out of which several causes of action arise is not the same as the "primary right." It is the circumstance or circumstances out of which the primary rights arise because of the status of persons toward each other respecting from, or it must be recognized by, the laws of the state or nation.[70] A right which is incident to another is not alone a cause of action.[71] It must be fully matured [72] by demand if necessary,[73] and all conditions precedent fulfilled.[74] The injury may be but slight,[75] though if nothing but a trifling amount be involved a cause may be disposed of as de minimus.[76] Damage ensuing because of statutory bar to relief is not an injury.[77] A party subject to be sued is essential.[78] An entire cause cannot be severed,[79] but in different aspects of a situation there may be one or several causes of action.[80] The fact that a transaction was criminal does not bar a civil action, at least where the crime, if any, was in another state.[81a] A private cause of action may co-exist with a public wrong,[81] and one may waive tort and sue in assumpsit.[82] A cause of action may be recognized, though created by foreign statute if consonant with domestic policy.[83] Whether a cause is equitable is to be determined in a code state by the prayer when the facts might be either legal or equitable.[84]

A defense must be that which if true furnishes a legal reason why the pleader should not be held in the action.[85] It is no defense that another was also in the wrong,[86] or that plaintiff has no right as against a third person,[87] or that a wrong

87. Want of permit to cross necessary street no defense to condemnation proceed-

was done in an endeavor to rectify the wrong of a third person.[88] No action lies in aid of what is against the law or its policy.[89] Acts of plaintiff after suit may be pleaded as a defense.[90] Defenses are either a complete bar or an abatement of the action.[91] Prematurity of suit resting in the terms of an instrument declared on is a bar, but if it rests in a collateral agreement it is abatement.[92] Prematurity does not affect separable claims set up but fully matured,[93] but one can recover only the sum due when action brought.[95] Equitable defenses may now usually be made at law.[95]

CEMETERIES.[96]

Where the general public has acquired the right to use land as a burying ground, individuals cannot by staking off portions of the land into lots acquire any exclusive title therein.[97] The fact that numerous members of a church took part in improving the grounds, does not give the church any title or control over the land.[98] Generally, one receiving from a cemetery association a deed of a burial lot does not thereby take title to the soil itself.[99] The rights of burial are so far public that private interests in particular lots are subject to reasonable police regulations of the association having charge of the cemetery.[1] The association may be regarded as holding the fee in trust for the purposes for which the corporation was organized.[2] In the case of a city cemetery, the person in whose name a lot stands on the record is entitled to the use of it, no other special evidence of such right being required by the rules.[3] A lot owner, though not a member of a cemetery association, may maintain suit to enjoin a misappropriation of funds by the company;[4] and where the object of a company, as declared in its certificate of incorporation, is to maintain and use its property for cemetery and burial purposes only, a bill alleging that cemetery grounds were uncared for and in need of attention, and that the association was without funds to pay its debts, sets out grounds for enjoining a gift to a church, some members of which were also members of the company.[5] In Connecticut, violation of by-laws of cemetery association providing for the care and management of burial lots is made a criminal offense.[6]

A cemetery is not necessarily a nuisance but may become so from location and the manner of its use.[7] The petition in a suit to enjoin location of a cemetery on certain lands must set out facts which show with reasonable certainty that injury will result to plaintiffs if the cemetery is located as proposed.[8] Mere depreciation in the value of adjoining or nearby property is not ground for such injunction.[9]

That a city cemetery superintendent caused an old grave to be disturbed in the digging of a new one is not alone ground for his discharge, where there was nothing to indicate the existence of the old grave.[10]

The tax exemption of cemeteries continues after abandonment for burial purposes until all the bodies have been removed.[11]

CENSUS AND STATISTICS.[12]

A statute authorizing supervisors to have the census of a township taken, and providing that when so taken it shall be the official census of the township, does not authorize the supervisors to declare by ordinance that the population is a certain number, no census having been taken.[13] The provision of the Greater New York charter, requiring filing of birth notices with the department of health, is sufficiently complied with by due mailing of the notice.[14] But when it appears that a notice has not been filed, the burden is upon the attending physician to prove the mailing of the notice, in order to escape the penalty for omission to file.[15] An undated, unsigned death certificate, the facts of which are not certified to by the health officer who certifies it to be a part of the records of his office, is not evidence of death of the person described therein.[16] Where a death certificate describes deceased as having lived in a certain county and gives only two initials, it cannot be presumed that such person is identical with one who lived in a city of the county, whose name was the same, except that he had a middle initial.[17]

St. § 4453, giving towns, cemetery associations, and ecclesiastical societies power to make such by-laws or regulations, and making violation thereof a crime, applies to joint stock cemetery associations as well as to non-stock associations. Id. This statute authorized a by-law, providing that no person should plant, cut or trim herbage of any kind, or erect any monument or memorial stone, except with the consent and direction of the association's president or superintendent. CERTIORARI.

§ 1. Nature, occasion and propriety of the remedy.[18]—The writ of certiorari,[19] sometimes denominated by statute the writ of review,[20] is one of the extraordinary remedies, and lies only when an inferior court,[21] tribunal,[22] board,[23] or officer,[24] exercising judicial functions,[25] has exceeded jurisdiction,[26] or acted illegally,[27] and there is no appeal,[28] nor in the judgment of the court any other plain, speedy and adequate remedy.[29] The writ in many states has been extended beyond what it was at common law, and is not now confined to reviewing the decisions of courts, properly so called,[30] but may also be used in certain instances to review the proceedings of special tribunals, boards, commissions, and officers of municipal corporations.[31] In the latter class of cases, however, the office of the writ is confined to acts that are strictly judicial or quasi-judicial in their nature.[32] But certiorari will not lie to bring in question the legal existence of the court to which the writ is directed,[33] nor is it the appropriate remedy to try title to office;[34] neither will the writ lie where the relator must in any event fail.[35] The writ brings up nothing but the record of the tribunal to which it is directed, and whose proceedings it is sought to review.[36]

Ancillary certiorari.[37]—Frequently the writ issues as ancillary to another proceeding, as habeas corpus,[38] but it issues in aid of an appeal only when diminution of the record is suggested.[39] In cases over which the supreme court of the United States possesses neither original nor appellate jurisdiction, it cannot grant prohibition, mandamus, or certiorari as ancillary thereto.[40]

CERTIORARI—Cont'd.

§ 2. Right to certiorari; parties.[42]—At the common law the writ of certiorari was not a writ of right, but the granting or refusal thereof rested in the sound discretion of the court.[43] The parties to an application for certiorari cannot deprive the court of the exercise of its discretion by stipulating that the formal writ shall not issue and that no formal return need be made.[44] The writ will not issue at the suit of a stranger to the record;[45] on the contrary he must have been a party to the suit or matter in controversy,[46] or show some interest[47] or injury peculiar to himself.[48]

§ 3. Procedure for writ; writ, service and return.[49] Application[50] must be made seasonably,[50a] contain proper allegations,[51] specifically assign errors of law,[52] and affirmatively show necessary jurisdictional facts.[53] Facts alleged in the petition must be treated as admitted where the return is silent with regard thereto.[54] A motion to dismiss a petition is in the nature of a special demurrer.[55]

People v. Snedeker, 94 N. Y. S. 319. Certiorari to a circuit court of appeals will not be granted upon dismissing, for lack of jurisdiction, a writ of error to that court, where the judgment sought to be reviewed was entered May 27, 1902, the writ of error was allowed May 22, 1903, the cause docketed June 1, 1903, and the petition for certiorari filed Feb. 17, 1905. Williams v. State, 121 Ga. 169, 48 S. E. 906. The answer of the justice of the peace to the writ of certiorari not verifying the allegations in the petition for the writ of certiorari that there was a final verdict and judgment, and no steps having been taken to traverse the answer or require the magistrate to answer over, neither the superior court nor this court can properly undertake to pass upon the merits of the assignments of error made in the petition for certiorari. 55. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. v. Cummins, 125 Iowa, 430, 101 N. W. 176.

A petition for certiorari is such a suit as can be renewed under the provisions of the Georgia Civ. Code 1895.[56]

The statutory bond [57] must be given.[57a]—At common law a bond for the writ as a supersedeas was not necessary.[58] The bond required by the Georgia Act of 1902 (p. 105) is merely an appearance bond.[59]

The writ.[60]—Under the New York Code of Civil Procedure the writ must direct the return that is to be made.[60a] Where the clerk of the superior court, in issuing the writ of certiorari, made a clerical error in dating it, the judge of that court may pass an order authorizing the clerk to correct such error so as to make the writ bear the true date of its issuance.[61]

Notice of the writ.[62] must be given as required by the local statute or rule of court.[63]

Service of the writ [64] must be upon the officer whose decision is sought to be reviewed.[65] In some jurisdictions notice of the issuance of the writ must also be served upon opposing counsel.[66]

The return [67] should consist of a full transcript of the proceedings sought to be reviewed,[68] and, when responsive,[69] and covering the points of error appearing 56. Civ. Code 1895, § 3786. If, however, the petition be void for any reason, the suit cannot be renewed. Bass v. Milledgeville, 121 Ga. 151, 48 S. E. 919.

57. See 3 C. L. 672.

57a. Where a party has given a statutory bond with security for the payment of the eventual condemnation money, or to produce property sued for or levied on, or to pay damages in case he fails to recover, and a judgment adverse to the principal has been rendered, the security on such bond cannot be surety on a new bond required in proceedings seeking to secure a reversal. Woodliff v. Bloodworth, 121 Ga. 456, 49 S. E. 289. Where the only provision for certiorari proceedings, in an act creating a city court, indicates a legislative intent that the general provisions of the Georgia Civil Code of 1895, § 4637, relating to such proceedings from "inferior judicatories," should apply, no bond is required in criminal cases as a condition precedent to the issuance of the writ. Dixon v. State, 121 Ga. 346, 49 S. E. 311.

58. The court in the exercise of its discretion might however require it. Webb & Stagg v. McPherson & Co. [Ala.] 38 So. 1009. If a bond be required by law to be given on the allowance of a certiorari for the protection of the defendant in certiorari in case the proceedings below be affirmed, the court may, in its discretion, deny an application, presented on final hearing, for the dismissal of the writ because such bond was not given. City of Orange v. McConnell [N. J. Law] 59 A. 97.

63. Mansf. Dig. § 1273 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 775), providing that where either party conceives that the copy of the record is imperfect the clerk of the supreme court shall on his application issue a certiorari to the clerk of the lower court, does not require notice to the opposite party of an application for the writ. Bracey-Welles Const. Co. v. Terry [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 846. Even if it is essential, where a case is taken by certiorari to the superior court, that the record should contain a return of service of notice of the certiorari, either made by an officer authorized to make service or verified by the affidavit of a private person, it is error, upon the hearing of the certiorari, to refuse to allow the plaintiff in certiorari, who has made an unsworn return, to amend the same by verifying it under oath. Jones v. Gill, 121 Ga. 93, 48 S. E. 688.

67. See 3 C. L. 673.

68. If the prosecutor in certiorari obtains a rule on the lower court to certify the facts found, and then brings the cause to final hearing without procuring a return to the rule, he waives a complaint based on the insufficiency of the facts to support the judgment. Willett v. Morse [N. J. Err. & App.] 60 A. 362. Under the New York Code, § 2134, the person upon whom the writ is served must make and annex to the writ a return with the transcript annexed and certified by him of the record or proceedings and a statement of the other matters specified in and required by the writ. People v. Greene, 92 N. Y. S. 1112. The report or opinion of a referee in a proceeding to dismiss an officer from the police force is no proper part of the return. People v. Partridge, 99 App. Div. 410, 91 N. Y. S. 258. Affidavits heard by the court by consent of counsel on a motion for a rehearing are a part of the record on such rehearing and may be brought into the record for review by certiorari. Bracey-Welles Const. Co. v. Terry [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 846. After a bill of exceptions has been certified, the defendant in error cannot have in the affidavit for certiorari, is conclusive.[70] Under the Georgia practice the defendant in certiorari may at the first term, and before the hearing, traverse the truth of the answer or return.[71] It is only where the return is defective that a further return may be required.[72]

Objections and amendments.[73].—The court issuing the certiorari is not authorized to consider a paper as a part of the statement of facts unless it was properly made a part thereof by the trial court, nor has the court power to amend or add to the statement of facts as actually prepared.[74]

Quashal or dismissal.[75].—The failure of a judge whose decision is sought to be reviewed by the writ of certiorari to file his answer by the first day of the term to which the writ is returnable may subject him to punishment for contempt, but will not authorize a dismissal of the certiorari, when the answer is made during the first term, and before a motion to dismiss the certiorari is filed.[76] Where a writ of certiorari shows on its face that it is insufficient in law and that it does not lie to review the acts complained of, the court granting the writ has the power to quash it before the return.[77] Failure to deliver a writ of certiorari and a copy of the petition to the officer whose decision is sought to be reviewed is cause for dismissal but does not render the proceeding void.[78] Where an appeal is entered in a justice's court, and judgment rendered therein against the appellant, and a writ of certiorari sued out, the judge of the superior court should not dismiss the certiorari on the ground that the appeal is void, unless its invalidity affirmatively appears.[79] Certiorari to review the action of the district court in granting an injunction and appointing a receiver will be dismissed where pending its disposition the district court has dissolved the injunction and discharged the receiver, although its action in so doing was based on erroneous grounds, and it did not consider or determine the questions raised on certiorari.[80] Where a writ of certiorari has been quashed for defect or sufficiency in the petition or proceedings and liberty to amend has been denied, another writ may not be had.[81]

any additional evidence or other matter sent to the appellate court, except such as is part of the record, and of file in the office of the clerk. Jones v. Gill, 121 Ga. 93, 48 S. E. 688. Where the parties to an appeal to the circuit court of appeals in bankruptcy were unable to agree as to the contents of the appeal record, it was the duty of the appellant to file a praecipe with the clerk, pointing out specifically what records, in his judgment, should be certified, leaving appellee, if in his opinion the records certified are insufficient, to suggest a diminution of the record and ask for certiorari. 71. Should it appear that the return was filed at such a time as not to give the plaintiff in certiorari an opportunity to prepare a traverse, the court should allow sufficient time to prepare the traverse. Folds v. State [Ga.] 51 S. E. 305. Where a certiorari has been sued out, taking a case from an inferior judicatory to the superior court, and a traverse is filed to the answer by the plaintiff in certiorari, such traverse may be verified by his attorney at law. § 4. Hearing and questions which may be raised and settled.[82]—Where the record of an inferior tribunal is brought before the appellate court by a common-law writ of certiorari, the only question before the court is the validity and sufficiency of the record certified to by that tribunal.[83] In some jurisdictions, however, errors of fact as well as law may be reviewed,[84] and in New York the hearing is in the nature of a new trial and evidence is admissible.[85] Where the court on certiorari is empowered to determine disputed questions of law and fact, the adjudication of the court on questions of fact is final and not open to review on writ of error, if there are any facts on which conclusion could be based.[86] Upon the hearing of a certiorari a superior court can decide such questions only as are raised by proper assignments of error in the petition and verified by the answer, or as are made by motion in reference to the certiorari proceeding itself.[87] The record as it existed at the time of the issue and service of the writ is all that can be considered by the court.[88] A general reason is sufficient when the error is apparent on the face of the proceedings,[89] and, on certiorari to review refusal of circuit judge to issue a writ of mandamus, the answer to the order to show cause will be taken as true.[90]

The court will not review facts stated in the return to a writ of certiorari in proceedings to widen a highway where they are founded on personal inspection and individual knowledge of the locality. People v. Van Brunt, 99 App. Div. 564, 90 N. Y. S. 845. Certiorari to set aside an order granting a liquor license is a direct attack thereon, and the court has power to review the question whether the petition on which the license was granted was sufficient to confer jurisdiction, notwithstanding the trial court's finding that it had jurisdiction. State v. Tulloch, 108 Mo. App. 32, 82 S. W. 645. On certiorari to a ruling of the board of review sustaining an assessment of property, the court cannot investigate the evidence and vacate the board's ruling on the ground that it is contrary thereto, but can only determine whether there is a reasonable basis, from the standpoint of the board, for its ruling, and, if there is such a basis, its determination must be sustained. State v. Fisher [Wis.] 102 N. W. 566. The decision of the court of appeals that defendant, who appealed to the county court from a justice's judgment, waived the right to charge grounds of objection to the justice's jurisdiction of the defendant's person, which were not presented to the justice, was, if incorrect, mere error, and not reviewable by the supreme court on certiorari. People v. Court of Appeals [Colo.] 79 P. 1017.

84. In Tennessee errors of fact and law may be reviewed on certiorari. Staples v. Brown [Tenn.] 85 S. W. 254.

Georgia: When the only error alleged in a petition for certiorari is that the verdict therein complained of is contrary to law and to the evidence, and it appears that the evidence demanded a verdict for the plaintiff in certiorari, the superior court should sustain the certiorari; but it is erroneous in such a case though there be no conflict in the evidence to render a final judgment in his favor. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Shuman, 121 Ga. 113, 48 S. E. 680. When the evidence is conflicting, the discretion of a judge of the superior court in granting, upon certiorari, a first new trial, will not be controlled. Casey v. Crane & Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 92. The supreme court will not disturb the first grant of a new trial upon certiorari from a city court when the verdict was not demanded by the evidence. Brantley v. Taylor, 121 Ga. 475, 49 S. E. 262. Where evidence was conflicting, court did not err in refusing to set aside verdict. Williams v. Mangum [Ga.] 50 S. E. 110. Evidence warranted verdict and it was not therefore error to overrule certiorari. Southern R. Co. v. Rollins, 121 Ga. 436, 49 S. E. 290.

87. Casey v. Crane & Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 92. In reviewing the judgment of a superior court in ruling upon a certiorari, the supreme court must ascertain the facts from the answer to the writ. Allegations in the petition not verified by the answer cannot be considered. Akers v. J. M. High Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 105. It is upon the record alone that review by certiorari is had, not upon the averments in the petition for the writ. Leppel v. District Court of Garfield Co. [Colo.] 78 P. 682.

88. If the return shows subsequent proceedings nullifying the action complained of, the question is a mere moot one and will not be reviewed. In re Weeks, 97 App. Div. 131, 89 N. Y. S. 826. See 3 C. L. 675, n. 68.

89. Borough of Rutherford v. Maginnis [N. J. Law] 60 A. 1125.

90. Kenyon v. Board of Sup'rs of Ionia County [Mich.] 101 N. W. 851.

§ 5. Judgment.[91]—In certiorari cases the judge of the superior court may make one of four orders: (1) If there is no error the writ should be quashed; (2) If there is no question of fact and an error of law which must finally govern the case, the judge of the superior court must himself make a final disposition of of the cause; (3) if there is other form of error, he may grant a new trial generally, returning the case to the court from which it came; or (4) if such error has been committed, he may return the case to the lower court with instructions.[92] Where such instructions are given, and not reversed on the application of the opposite party, they are to be treated as the law of the case, and must be given full effect on a second trial.[93] Where in justice court a defendant's answer is unsworn, but may in that respect be amended, it is error for the appellate court on certiorari to enter judgment for plaintiff.[94]

§ 6. Costs.[95]

§ 7. Review of certiorari.[96]—No appeal lies from the judgment of a court of common pleas on a certiorari to a justice of the peace, where the record shows that the justice had jurisdiction.[97] Where a case was carried to the superior court by certiorari, the answer of the justice of the peace traversed, verdict rendered against the traverse, and a motion for new trial made and overruled, a writ of error did not lie as the main case was still pending.[98] Where there is some evidence open which the finding of a superior court might have been based, the discretion of the court exercised in overruling the certiorari will not be reviewed.[99] The supreme court will not interfere with the order of the judge of the superior court refusing to sanction certiorari from a judgment of conviction in a county court, where the record fails to show that petitioner filed the affidavit required by the Penal Code of 1895, § 765.[1] Statements of fact contained in the brief of counsel and the attached affidavit of the justice, explaining what he meant by his answer, cannot be considered in reviewing the order of the judge of the superior court in sustaining the certiorari and in directing a new trial.[2] Michigan Circuit Court Rule 18, authorizing an extension of time to apply for new trial, includes the power to grant rehearing on certiorari.[3]

An agreement by an attorney to pay all or some portion of the court costs to accrue in a suit which he is employed to prosecute is champertous,[9] except where the consideration of such payment does not arise out of the claim in suit.[10] Where an attorney purchases a litigious right in the form of a judgment, the remedy of the defendant is to oppose its execution when the attorney attempts to enforce it.[11] An attorney at law is not entitled to recover any fees for services rendered in connection with the prosecution of a suit after he has made a champertous contract with respect thereto,[12] but he is entitled to recover upon a quantum meruit for all services rendered up to the time of the making of such contract.[13]

The defense of champerty[14] is an affirmative one,[15] and can only be interposed in an action between the parties to the champertous contract, and does not furnish any reason for refusing relief in the proceeding to which the champertous agreement relates.[16]

Maintenance.—In order to be guilty of maintenance, it is essential that the alleged maintainer have no real interest in the action.[17]

Agreement between holder of a nonnegotiable chose in action and an attorney, whereby the latter in consideration of an assignment of the claim to him, agrees to enforce the collection thereof by suit, himself to pay all the expenses, and remit to the assignor one-half of the proceeds, held void. Slade v. Zeitfuss [Conn.] 59 A. 406. See. also, Attorneys and Counselors, 5 C. L. 319.

NOTE. Contingent fees: A contract by an attorney to prosecute an action at his own expense in behalf of his client, for a share of the proceeds of the suit, is the typical modern case. Such a contract, of course, falls exactly within the old definition of champerty; and the English courts, even though the attorney, in the utmost good faith, agrees to take the righteous cause of a penniless client for a contingent fee of ten per cent. of the recovery, refuse to enforce it. Strange v. Brennan, 15 Sim. 346. By American courts, on the other hand, all such contracts are usually enforced, but on various theories. Bayard v. McLane, 3 Harr. [Del.] 139, 216. Some courts, looking only at the old statutes and seeing that the danger of intimidation of the courts does not exist in the United States, reject the whole doctrine. Mathewson v. Fitch, 22 Cal. 86. Such a view was expressed in the recent case of Smits v. Hogan, 35 Wash. 290, 77 P. 390. Others recognize the illegality of champerty and maintenance at common law, but evade the logical result wherever possible by technical distinctions. For example, if the attorney agree to pay the costs of the suit, the contract is champertous; if he agree to prosecute the action at the client's expense, for a contingent fee, it is not champertous. West Chicago, etc., Com'rs v. Coleman, 108 Ill. 591, 601. And in Massachusetts, if the attorney stipulate for one-fouth of the proceeds, the contract is champertous; if he is to receive an amount equal to one-fourth of the proceeds, it is good. Blaisdell v. Ahern, 144 Mass. 393, 395, 59 Am. Rep. 99.—18 Harv. L. R. 223.

16. Henderson v. Kibbie, 211 Ill. 556, 71 N. E. 1091. In a suit to set aside a sale of certain real estate, the fact that the contract between plaintiff and his attorney is champertous is no defense. Id.

17. Insurance company indemnifying the insured for injuries to an employe is not trasted with the beneficial use for a private purpose or individual.[20] In order that a gift may come within the rules relating to charitable gifts, some charitable utility must be derived from its execution.[21] A gift for the benefit of a particular Christian church or for the advancement of religion is charitable.[22]

Gifts in trust for charitable purposes must designate with reasonable certainty the property donated,[23] the objects and purposes to be accomplished,[24] and the manner in which the trust is to be executed.[25] It is sufficient if the founder describes the general nature of the charitable trust, and he may leave the details of its administration to be settled by trustees under the superintendence of a court of chancery.[26] Bequests in trust for, or made directly to, unincorporated societies are valid, though no purpose is mentioned to which the fund is to be applied, provided the testator has made plain the objects of his bounty so that the courts may enforce the application of the fund as he intended.[27]

In many states it is regarded as inherent in public charities that the beneficiaries be somewhat uncertain;[28] but in others the ordinary rules as to private trusts apply and the beneficiaries must be certain or capable of being made certain.[29] Beneficent bequests will not, however, be defeated by mere misnomers,[30] but it is enough if the testator uses language sufficiently clear to enable courts by extrinsic evidence to identify the beneficiary and trustee,[31] and parol evidence is admissible for that purpose.[32]

indefinite, or dependent upon the discretion of a last trustee.[34] In such case the court is given control of the property for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the donor as nearly as possible.[35]

In many states charitable gifts made within a specified time before the death of the donor or the testator are void.[36]

In New York any person having a husband, wife, child, or parent is prohibited from devising or bequeathing more than half his estate after the payment of his debts to any charitable, scientific, religious or literary society, association, or corporation, in trust or otherwise.[37] The act applies to a disposition of property for a foreign trust.[38] As a general rule the value of the widow's dower must be deducted from the gross value of the estate in determining the amount which may lawfully be given to charities,[39] but this does not apply where she accepts a provision given her by will in lieu of dower.[40] The act applies only to testamentary dispositions of property.[41] It is for the benefit of those named therein and those of the next of kin who would take in connection with them under the intestacy laws,[42] and may be waived by them.[43] Any one who would take any interest in the estate if the instrument should be declared invalid may invoke its provisions.[44]

The rule against perpetuities does not ordinarily apply to charitable gifts.[45]

Where objects of society, for the benefit of which estate was given in trust are admittedly charitable, and it is plainly manifest that testatrix intended to create charitable trust for furtherance of such objects. In re Merchant's Estate, 143 Cal. 537, 77 P. 475.

§ 2. Capacity of donee or trustee.[46]— The power of a corporation to take gifts for charitable purposes generally depends on the terms of its charter.[47] It may hold and execute a trust for charitable objects which are in accord with, or tend to promote, the purposes of its creation, even though it would not have had authority to have established them or to have expended its funds therefor.[48]

Restrictions imposed by the charter of a corporation upon the amount of property it may hold can be taken advantage of only by the state in a direct proceeding, and not collaterally by individuals.[49] Hence where the state by special legislation enlarges its powers in that regard, its capacity cannot be questioned in any manner.[50] Where a testator devises his property to trustees to be held for a term of years and then to be transferred to a corporation to be organized for a charitable purpose, the fact that at the time of his death such a corporation is not permitted to hold property to the amount of the devise does not invalidate the gift as to the excess, since it is to a corporation only which is legally capable of taking,[51] and the legislature may, after his death, authorize the organization of such a corporation.[52]

A charitable devise to an unincorporated body is valid in Arkansas.[53] The burden is on the person attacking such gifts to prove that the organizations do not exist, or that their charitable purposes are too vague and uncertain to enable them to take.[54]

A charitable corporation cannot act as trustee in a matter in which it has no interest,[55] but where it has an interest either in the principal or the income, it may act as trustee for another or others having an interest in the whole or part of the income for life.[56]

§ 3. Interpretation and construction.[57]—Charitable donations are favored by the courts and will be carried into effect if it is possible to do so consistently with the rules of law.[58]

The ordinary rules of interpretation apply.[59]

46. See 3 C. L. 680.

47. Laws 1895, p. 343, c. 158, relating to the organization of corporations to administer and furnish relief and charity for the worthy poor of a designated locality, does not authorize such corporations to take property in trust for purposes not authorized by statute, but does authorize them to take property subject to such conditions and limitations as the donor may impose, if not inconsistent with their corporate purposes. A gift of testator's residuary estate to his executors to be allowed to accumulate for a term of years and then to be transferred to a corporation to be formed for the purpose of maintaining a hospital for the care of the indigent sick in a certain county creates a charitable trust from the time of the probate of the will.[60] Both the legal and equitable estates vest immediately, the former in the executors as trustees, and the latter in that part of the public which is to be benefited.[61] Since the equitable interests vest from the death of the testator, a limitation over from one charity which speaks from his death to another is valid without regard to the technical character of succeeding changes in title, or the rule against perpetuities.[62] Nothing passes directly to the corporation under the will, but it takes through a conveyance from the trustees, made in the execution of their trust.[63] The income and accumulations of the property go with the corpus of the fund in so far as the title is concerned.[64]

A gift to an existing corporation or to one to be thereafter organized within the time limited by law, with directions or conditions as to the use or management of the subject-matter of the gift which are reasonably consistent with the corporate purposes of the donee, is not a gift in trust, but an absolute one to the corporation within the meaning of the statute of uses and trusts.[65]

queathed residue of estate to charitable corporation, and thereafter by codicil changed same so as to give a specific sum therefrom to another charity, and such codicil was void, held, that the first named corporation was entitled to the entire residue, including the void bequest. The provisions as to the accumulation and management of the fund and its transfer to the corporation are mere details of administration which do not affect the character of the gift or the nature of the title created. Codman v. Brigham, 187 Mass. 309, 72 N. E. 1008.

65. Term absolute gift is used in contradistinction to a gift in trust. Not a trust where both the legal and beneficial ownership in the donee, though gift is a conditional one. Watkins v. Bigelow, 93 Minn. 210, 100 N. W. 1104. Such a gift is not invalid as an attempt to evade the law relating to uses and trusts. Id. table society, it is not necessary to minutely and precisely identify the ultimate recipients of the bounty.[68] A gift is for the "benefit" of the donee if the donee is of such character that it stands for all those who may be actual beneficiaries.[69]

The powers and duties of trustees for charitable purposes are generally fixed by the instrument creating the trust.[70] Where a valid gift for charitable purposes has been made by will, the heirs have no standing in equity to question the powers or title of the devisee or of intervening executors.[71] The mere fact that the society which is the beneficiary bestows its largess on other charitable institutions does not involve a delegation of its discretionary power to select beneficiaries.[72]

If, on account of a change in circumstances, it becomes impracticable to administer the trust in the precise manner provided by its creator, it will be administered as nearly as possible in accordance therewith.[73]

Courts of equity have an original and inherent jurisdiction over charities both under the statute of charitable uses and independent of it.[74] They may prevent any misappropriation of the trust fund or correct any abuse in its management by the trustees,[75] provided such jurisdiction is invoked by some one interested in the trust, or in the name of the attorney general, as the representative of the state, in an action or proper proceeding authorized by law for that purpose.[76] Unless such power is conferred by the instrument creating the trust, the court has no jurisdiction to act in the matter of his own volition and on his own motion without any information or action on the part of anyone.[77]

It can only be created by grant when property is thereby conveyed to it. Id.

The removal of trustees rests in the sound discretion of the court;[78] but a trustee appointed by deed or will should not be removed in the absence of such misconduct as to show a want of capacity or fidelity, putting the trust property in jeopardy.[79]

The donor may, if he so desires, appoint trustees and confer the power of appointing their successors on them or on the beneficiaries.[80] The trustees of an unincorporated academy have, in the absence of power conferred by grant, no authority to perpetuate their succession by filling vacancies in the board.[81]

Equity will not allow an otherwise valid charitable trust to fail for want of a competent trustee, but will appoint one to take the trust property and carry out the charitable intent of the donor,[82] provided there is nothing to show that the donor reposed special personal trust and confidence in the persons whom he himself appointed.[83] Statutes in some states specifically provide to the same effect.[84]

Colbert v. Speer, 24 App. D. C. 187. If it appears that the testator reposed special personal trust and confidence in those named, the powers and discretion given them cannot be exercised by any one else (Id.); but if it be found that new trustees may reasonably perform such duties, they will be appointed by the court with direction to proceed in the execution of the will (Id.). CHATTEL MORTGAGES.

This topic deals exclusively with chattel mortgages,[86] and does not treat of general trust deeds upon the property of corporations,[87] such as railroads,[88] street railways,[89] and water companies.[90] The effect of the mortgage as a preference or fraudulent transfer is treated elsewhere,[91] as is the operation of limitations upon actions to enforce it.[92]

§ 1. What constitutes a chattel mortgage.[93]—The essential elements of a chattel mortgage are an indebtedness between the parties,[94] a transfer of property by the debtor to the creditor to insure the payment of the debt,[95] and a right in the debtor to have all that remains after the debt is paid.[96] The intention of the parties governs;[97] thus bills of sales,[98] and conditional sales,[99] have been held chattel mortgages. That an instrument absolute on its face is in fact a chattel mortgage may be shown by parol.[1]

A contract for the purchase of mill machinery, providing that the title thereto should remain in the seller until the purchase price was paid, and that failure to execute and pay notes as provided in the contract should entitle the seller to retake possession and resell the property, and retain any balance unpaid, together with interest, attorney's fees, etc., and pay the buyers any surplus and collect from them any deficiency, held, an equitable mortgage and not a conditional sale. § 2. Subject-matter. What may be mortgaged.[2]—The mortgage may cover after-acquired property,[3] provided there is an interest in praesenti of which the future acquisition is the product, or in such wise incident to or connected with it, constituting a tangible and substantial predicate of a contract.[4] As to such property the lien attaches as between the parties upon the property coming into the possession of the mortgagor,[5] and, as between such parties, it relates back to the date of the mortgage.[6] Shares of stock in a corporation may be mortgaged.[7]

Title and interest of mortgagor.[8]—The mortgagor must have some title or interest in the property,[9] but this title need not be absolute, a contingent interest being sufficient to sustain the mortgage;[10] thus a purchaser under a conditional sale has a mortgagable interest in the property;[11] but he cannot by executing a mortgage affect the rights of the seller.[12] Partnership property cannot be mortgaged by one partner without the consent of the other partner, for the purpose of securing his individual debt, so as to defeat the claims of partnership creditors.[13] Statutory provisions as to the power of a husband to mortgage his wife's property govern.[14]

Description of property.[15]—The description must be such as, aided by the inquiries which the mortgage itself indicates and directs, will enable third persons to identify the property.[16] Location may make the description certain,[17] but failure to give the location,[18] or an error therein,[19] the description being ample in other re-

The recordation of a deed which furnishes a stranger with the obvious means of identifying the property gives constructive notice. Id. Description "One bay horse 12 year sold, named Mike, one hay mare, white star in forehead, named Mollie, 12 years old * * * purchased by G. from S. of O.," is sufficient. Colean Implement Co. v. Strong [Iowa] 102 N. W. 506. A mortgage of "one hundred two year old steers" branded in a certain way and "twenty-five head of yearling steers" branded in a certain way, "said cattle being held in the L. M. pasture ahout 18 miles south of D.," sufficienty describes the property. Scaling v. First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 715. Error in classifying cattle as steers instead of stags does not invalidate the mortgage, where the breeds, ages, colors and location of the cattle are correctly given. Sedalia Nat. Bank v. Cassidy Bros. Live Stock Commission Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 142.

17. So held where there were two mortgages given by the same mortgagor on two herds of cattle, all having the same brand and of the same description, except as to age and location. National Bank of Boyertown v. Schufelt [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 927.

18. Mortgage giving residences and occupations of mortgagor and mortgagee and giving number and description of cattle mortgaged, held sufficient, though it did not state where the cattle were located, it be-spects, does not invalidate the mortgage. The description being sufficiently definite to justify the admission of the mortgage in evidence, extrinsic evidence is admissible to identify the property.[20]

By statute in some states indefiniteness only impairs the title to the chattel while in the possession of the mortgagor.[20a]

The question of what is covered by the description is largely one of intent.[20b] In order that the mortgage may be extended to after-acquired property, the intention to have it so apply must be clearly expressed in the instrument.[20c] There is a conflict as to whether an after-acquired property clause extends to or covers the interest the mortgagor acquires in property as a purchaser under a conditional sale [20d] but in no case can it affect the rights of the seller in such sale.[20e]

§ 3. Consideration.[21]—Like other contracts a chattel mortgage must be based upon a lawful consideration.[22] The mortgage is wholly void if the consideration therefor is exaggerated with fraudulent intent.[23]

§ 4. Fraudulent conveyances.[24]—In the absence of circumstances raising a presumption of fraud, a chattel mortgage to be fraudulent must appear to have been given by the mortgagor and received by the mortgagee with a fraudulent intent,[25] and in this connection the fraud of an agent will be deemed that of his principal.[26] A mortgage permitting the mortgagor to retain and sell the mortgaged property in the ordinary course of trade [27] though valid as between the parties,[28] is in most [29] but not

20a. Connecticut: Failure to observe the requirements of Gen. St. 1902, § 4132, in regard to definiteness of description by the terms of the statute only impairs the title to the chattel in the possession of the mortgagor, hence such defect is immaterial in trover and conversion against one taking the property from the possession of the mortgagee. NOTE. Mortgagor in Possession: The authorities are conflicting as to whether or not a chattel mortgage will be good, as against the mortgagor's creditors and third parties, where the mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession of the goods with a power of sale. Many states have adopted the rule that such a mortgage is fraudulent per se. Stevens v. Curran, 28 Mont. 366, 72 P. 753; Mandeville v. Avery, 124 N. Y. 376, 26 N. E. 951, 21 Am. St. Rep. 678; Barchard v. Kohn, 157 Ill. 579, 29 L. R. A. 803; Standard Implement Co. v. Schultz, 45 Kan. 52, 25 P. 625. About an equal number of states take the view that such possession by the mortgagor, while presumptive evidence of fraud, does not constitute fraud per se. Blanchard v. Cooke, 144 Mass. 207, 226; Fink v. Ehrman Bros., 44 Ark. 310; Black Hills Mer. Co. v.

all [30] of the states held to be conclusively fraudulent as to creditors, unless, by the terms of the agreement, the proceeds of such sale are to be applied to the payment of the mortgage debt,[31] or unless the mortgage is recorded, or the mortgagee takes actual, open, notorious and unequivocal possession,[32] and in the latter case its validity dates from the date possession is so taken.[33] Statutory provisions govern.[34] A statutory presumption of fraud raised by the mortgagee failing to take immediate possession is not available to one attaching the property after the mortgagee has taken possession.[35] In the absence of insolvency in the mortgagor, or of any intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, the fact that the mortgage covers property worth much more than the debt secured does not invalidate the mortgage.[36] The mortgagee may, if he acts in good faith, by the terms of the mortgage appoint the mortgagor his agent in selling the mortgaged property.[37] A mortgage being void as to creditors, it is void as against the mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy.[38]

§ 5. The instrument. Form, execution and delivery.[39]—Like other contracts, a chattel mortgage is invalidated by fraud entering into the execution of the contract.[40] A verbal chattel mortgage is binding on the parties and those having knowledge of its existence.[41] A mortgage not executed in the manner and form prescribed by law is good between the parties.[42] A signature by mark and the attestation thereof are not invalidated by the fact that the attesting witness was an agent or employe of the mortgagee.[43] An unsigned contract printed on the back of a mortgage, and not referred to therein, cannot in any way qualify the terms of the mortgage.[44]

Acknowledgment, affidavit and extension.[45]—Statutory requirements as to acknowledgement must be complied with in order to render the mortgage valid as to third persons.[46] The signature of the affiant is not necessary, in the absence of a rule of court or statute requiring it.[47] An affidavit describing the affiant by name followed by the word "mortgagor" is a sufficient designation of him as the person who made the mortgage.[48]

Alteration and construction.—An intentional and fraudulent insertion of additional property in a chattel mortgage by the mortgagee renders the instrument void.[49] The mortgage being partly written and partly printed, the former controls the latter if the two are inconsistent.[50]

Proof of instrument.—A certified copy of a chattel mortgage is competent for the purpose of proving additions made to the original instrument, already in evidence, since its execution.[51]

Renewal affidavit.—An interested party may, as a notary public, administer the oath to a renewal affidavit.[52]

§ 6. Filing or recording and notice of title or rights.[53]—The recording of a chattel mortgage and the effect thereof are governed by the law of the state where the property is situated.[54] In some states a mortgage covering real and personal property is sufficient if recorded as a real estate mortgage.[55] In some states the mortgage must be recorded in the county where the mortgagor resides.[56] The index must be sufficient to give notice.[57] Failure of recording officer to discharge his duty in respect to mortgages duly filed with him does not affect the mortgagees' rights.[58] A mortgage is valid between the parties, though unrecorded,[59] but void as to third parties who, not having actual notice of the mortgage,[60] have acquired adverse rights or suffered prejudice during the interval between execution and recording or taking possession by the mortgagee.[61] To a certain extent recordation of the mortgage pro-

Smith v. Bean [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 793.

Kentucky: Under Ky. St. 1903, § 496, the tects the mortgagee from prior unrecorded claims of which he had no knowledge.[62] A chattel mortgage being executed on property in one state, and duly filed for record, it will be binding on the property after its removal to another state,[63] even as against an innocent purchaser for value from the mortgagor.[64] In New York an unfiled chattel mortgage is absolutely void as against the creditors of the mortgagor, and as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith;[65] but only those who have obtained judgment and execution,[66] or placed the property in the custody of the court through the medium of a receiver,[67] can assert and take advantage of the invalidity. In New Jersey the chattel mortgage must be immediately recorded,[68] and knowledge of the existence of the mortgage does not preclude a creditor of the mortgagor from assailing the instrument for want of compliance with the statute.[69] Depositing with the clerk is a sufficient compliance, the mortgage being actually recorded.[70] In the absence of an agreement between the parties, a mere withholding of the mortgage from record is insufficient to render it fraudulent,[71] nor does such fact, no prejudice being shown, estop the mortgagee from relying on the mortgage.[72] In New York failure to refile the mortgage does not render it invalid as against, nor subordinate to, a subsequent mortgage executed after the first mortgage has been recorded and while such filing is in force.[73]

The word "creditor" as used in statutes, declaring unrecorded chattel mortgages to be void as against creditors and bona fide purchasers for value, means creditors

NOTE. Delay in filing: As to the question of delay in recording a chattel mortgage, it is held by many courts that a mortgage is not rendered fraudulent, as to subsequent creditors, by mere failure to record, where there is no agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee that the mortgage shall not be recorded. Mull v. Dooley, 89 Iowa, 312, 56 N. W. 513; Stewart v. Hopkins, 30 Ohio St. 502; Grimes Dry Goods Co. v. McKee, 51 Kan. 704, 33 P. 594. The court in Clark v. McDuffie, 21 N. Y. S. 174, held that the chattel mortgage, although filing was delayed, was good as against one who, with actual notice of the mortgage, had purchased the mortgaged property at sheriff's sale. Where, however, there has been delay in filing a chattel mortgage and the rights of creditors have intervened between the execution of the chattel mortgage and the filing thereof, such rights will not be affected by the subsequent filing of the mortgage. Willamette Casket Co. v. Cross, etc., Co., 12 Wash. 190, 40 P. 729; Cutler v. Steele, 85 Mich. 627; Maddox v. Wilson, 91 Ga. 39, 16 S. E. 213.—3 Mich. L. R. 661.

having some sort of lien fixed by law or legal proceedings upon particular property, and does not include a mere general creditor.[74] The word "purchasers" includes mortgagees for value.[75] A "factor" is neither a creditor of the mortgagor nor a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee.[76] A mortgage debt being tainted with usury, the mortgagee is not a purchaser or creditor in good faith.[77] One having knowledge of the mortgage is not a bona fide purchaser.[78]

Notice of title or rights.[79]—The property[80] and parties[81] being correctly described in the mortgage, recording is equivalent to actual notice.[82] A mortgage, ineffective as notice to third parties for want of a sufficient description of the property when entered and recorded, cannot be made effective notice as to such third parties by thereafter writing into the original instrument the necessary descriptive words.[83] Actual, open and notorious possession by the mortgagee is just as efficacious as filing.[84] The mortgagee, asserting that the mortgagor's creditors had notice, must prove it.[85]

§ 7. Title and ownership.[86]—The general rule, following the common law, is that the mortgagee takes the legal title subject to be defeated on the performance of the conditions,[87] but the courts are not all in harmony with this rule.[88] Upon default of the mortgagor, the legal title to mortgaged chattels vests absolutely in the mortgagee,[89] and a subsequent tender of the amount due does not operate to revest the title in the mortgagor,[90] the latter's sole remedy being a bill to redeem,[91] and the mortgagor cannot, without proof of payment or other extinguishment of the mortgage, maintain an action against the mortgagee for a conversion of the property.[92] The alteration of the mortgage after execution and delivery does not divest the title of a purchaser acquired under the paper as made.[93]

the immediate possession of the property,[95] and, except as against persons without interest,[96] this possession must be taken within a reasonable time after default,[97] a failure to so do destroying the lien of the mortgage as against subsequent purchasers and attachment or judgment creditors.[98] What is a reasonable time must be determined by the situation of the parties and the special circumstances of each case,[99] and the burden is upon the one claiming under such mortgage to establish a reduction to possession within the time required by law.[1] This possession the mortgagee is entitled to take from anyone who holds the property by a title subordinate to the mortgagor,[2] and for the purpose of assuming this possession, replevin is an appropriate form of action;[3] in such action no issue is involved except the question as to the plaintiff's right of possession;[4] hence it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff to join any person except the one who actually withholds possession.[5] The effect of statutory provisions upon the mortgagee's right to take possession is shown in the notes.[6] The mortgagee lawfully taking possession, a detention by him is not unlawful, no demand or tender being made.[7]

§ 9. Liens and priorities; waiver. Duration of mortgage lien.[8]—Upon what chattels the mortgage is a lien must be determined largely from the mortgage itself.[9] The lien of a mortgage upon after-acquired property attaches as soon as the property is acquired by the mortgagor,[10] and as between such parties it relates back to the date of the mortgage.[11] The lien of the mortgage cannot be defeated by the fraud of the mortgagor and a purchaser from him.[12]

Conflicting liens; waiver.[13]—In the absence of consent by the mortgagee,[14] a mortgage is generally paramount to liens created by the mortgagor, if the lienors are affected with notice of the mortgage.[15] A second mortgagee claiming priority by agreement, the burden is upon him to show such an agreement,[16] and in this connection a mortgagor is not the agent of the mortgagee so as to bind the latter by representations in obtaining a loan of another by mortgage on the same property.[17] The mortgagor owning the mortgaged property individually the mortgagee cannot be postponed in the collection of his debt to the adjustment of equities existing between the mortgagor and his partner.[18] The mortgagee takes subject to liens given priority by the law of the state where the parties to the mortgage reside and where the chattels are located, even though the property be removed to a state the law of which gives the mortgagee priority.[19] The mere taking of additional security does not necessarily waive the mortgage lien.[20]

§ 10. Disposal and use of the property by the mortgagor.[21]—In some states an unlawful disposition of mortgaged property is a crime.[22] In a criminal prosecution for so doing the general rules as to the sufficiency of the indictment apply,[23] and there must be evidence showing a sale and removal.[24]

§ 11. Assignment of the mortgage.[25]—An assignment of the debt carries the mortgage with it.[26] A mortgage securing a negotiable note so far partakes of its character as to pass free from equities between the original parties to a bona fide indorsee of the note.[27] The assignor of a mortgage has no right to take possession as against a junior mortgagee.[28] In Illinois the mortgagee cannot assign the legal title vested in him by virtue of the mortgage;[29] but after he assigns the debt secured by his mortgage, he becomes a mere naked trustee of the legal title, with no power to release or discharge the mortgage lien or otherwise to dispose thereof, and he has no right, of his own motion and for his own benefit, to institute and maintain an action for the recovery of the property or for a violation of a right secured by such mortgage, and this notwithstanding he may be liable as an indorser, and the defendants may have been guilty of wrongful conversion;[30] nor does the absolute reacquisition of the note and mortgage by the chattel mortgagee after the commencement of the suit alter his rights therein.[31]

§ 12. Payment and discharge.[32]—The mortgage fixing no time for payment becomes due immediately upon the execution of the mortgage, and the mortgagee may foreclose at any time.[33] A promise to forbear, or extend the time of payment of a debt actually due, based upon a promise of the debtor to pay the sum with interest on a later date, is without consideration and unenforceable.[34] Payment being tendered and refused, the mortgagee has no right to thereafter take possession of the mortgaged property.[35] The taking of a second note and mortgage does not of itself discharge the original security unless it is intended to so operate,[36] and this question of intent is generally one for the jury.[37] A surety upon a note secured by a mortgage, paying the same is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.[38] A release to be valid must be supported by a consideration.[39] Damages suffered by the mortgagor by reason of the mortgagee's default may be deducted from the mortgage debt.[40] Though the mortgage provides for attorney's fees, such fees cannot be collected if the mortgagor has a meritorious defense to a part of the amount claimed.[41] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence are shown in the notes.[42]

One purchasing property months after the maturity of a mortgage appearing of record against it may rely upon the presumption that such mortgage has been discharged, and will be protected in his purchase, unless the mortgagee has since the maturity of the mortgage debt exercised reasonable diligence to locate and obtain possession of such property,[43] and the burden of proving such diligence rests upon the mortgagee.[44] No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a sufficient request to enter on the margin of the record of a mortgage a partial payment or payments on the mortgage.[45] All that is necessary in such notice is that the words used in the request are such as shall reasonably inform the mortgagee that entry of payment is desired.[46] In an action to recover the statutory penalty for failure of a mortgagee to record a partial payment, defendant cannot show that he recorded such entry after the expiration of the statutory time and after suit was commenced.[47]

Revival.—A dormant mortgage may be revived and made effectual by the acts of the parties, but an instrument which has ceased to be valid cannot be thus revived by any act of the parties to it.[48]

§ 13. Redemption.[49]—A second mortgagee is an "assignee of the mortgagor" within the meaning of statutes designating parties who may redeem.[50] As a general rule a tender of the redemption money to be effectual must be kept good.[51] In some states a notice of intention to redeem is required.[52] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence are shown in the notes.[53]

53. Evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that the mortgagor had, by agreement, a year within which to redeem. Farrell v. Danbury [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 380, 104 N. W. 383.

§ 14. Enforcement, foreclosure; sale.[54]—In order to foreclose the mortgagor must be in default;[55] but the fact that the mortgagee is given the right to enter, take possession and sell upon default, does not bar the right to foreclose.[56] In order to foreclose under an insecurity clause, the circumstances must be such that a reasonable man thus situated might in good faith believe himself unsafe and insecure.[57] The parties may control the enforcement of the mortgage by a parol agreement, and an injunction may lie to enforce such parol agreement.[58]

A suit to foreclose is equitable in its nature,[59] and jurisdiction thereof is largely governed by statutes.[60] The bill to foreclose must show defendant's connection with the mortgage.[61] An answer alleging an agreement by the mortgagee to exchange the mortgage for other securities, constitutes no defense, it not being alleged that the agreement was carried out.[62] The proof must conform to the issues,[63] and there must be no material variance between the description of the property in the mortgage and that in the petition.[64] The judgment must be supported by findings.[65] In the absence of proof of the value of the property claimed, or of evidence to authorize the finding of a money decree against claimants to property sought to be foreclosed, such decree will be reversed as to the claimants.[66]

Prior to the judgment of foreclosure, the court's power with reference to the property is limited to the appointment of a receiver.[67] As a general rule a receiver will be appointed when the property in controversy is in danger of being lost or materially injured.[68]

property to satisfy the debt,[69] but if he sell more than sufficient to satisfy the same and costs necessarily incurred, he will be liable for conversion of such excess.[70] A junior mortgagee or his assignee may sell the property subject to prior liens,[71] and free from the interference of everyone but the holder of such a claim.[72] A sale by agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee is in effect a mortgage sale.[73] The sale being conducted in bad faith and the mortgagee bidding in the property for an inadequate price, the sale is void.[74] A mortgagee taking possession under a void sale is guilty of conversion, and is liable for the value of the property at the time of conversion,[75] and the action will lie, he having sold the property, thus rendering redemption inadequate.[76] The proper measure of actual damage in an action for the wrongful and premature foreclosure of a chattel mortgage is the loss of the use of the property during the time it was out of the possession of the mortgagor.[77] In such a case vindictive damages should not be allowed where no improper conduct attended the seizure, and no unnecessary damage was done.[78] A mortgage being void as to creditors, the mortgagee is liable to account in equity to creditors for the value of the property seized and sold by him,[79] and this suit for an accounting may properly be brought by a receiver in supplementary proceedings.[80] The mortgagor cannot maintain trover for an alleged wrongful foreclosure, where with full knowledge of all facts and without objection or protest, he has accepted the surplus arising from the alleged wrongful sale.[81]

NOTE. Liability of mortgagee for selling more property than enough to satisfy debt: In arriving at the decision in the principal case, the court follows Omaha Auction & Storage Co. v. Rogers, 35 Neb. 61, 52 N. W. 826. The same principles were adhered to in Griswold v. Morse, 59 N. H. 211, where the court held that a mortgagee is liable for conversion when he sells a part of the mortgaged chattels after having already sold sufficient to pay the debt and costs. To the same effect are Thompson v. Currier, 24 N. H. 237; Hutchins v. King, 1 Wall. [U. S.] 53; 17 Law. Ed. 544; Stromberg v. Lindberg, 25 Minn. 513. Contra, Ingalls v. Vance, 61 Vt. 582, 18 A. 452. However, the fact that more of the mortgaged property is sold than is sufficient to satisfy the debt will not make the sale void. Keating v. Hannenkamp, 100 Mo. 161, 13 S. W. 89. When upon the exercise of a power of sale, contained in a chattel mortgage, there remains unsold some of the mortgaged property over and above that which was sufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt, there is an implied agreement that the part so unsold shall be turned over to the mortgagor. Kohn v. Dravis, 94 F. 288. The mortgagee holds the unsold property for the mortgagor and is bound to surrender it to him on demand, but the mortgagee is not bound to return the unsold property to the premises of the mortgagor. Campbell v. Wheeler, 69 Iowa, 588, 29 N. W. 613. In case only a part of the mortgaged property is sold and the net amount realized from the sale is not sufficient to discharge the mortgage debt and costs, the chattels unsold are not released from the chattel mortgage, but there is still a lien on them for the sum remaining unpaid. First Nat. Bank of DeSmet v. Northwestern Elevator Co., 4 S. D. 409, 57 N. W. 77; Rose v. Page, 82 Mich. 105, 46 N. W. 227; Hopkins v. McCrillis, 158 Mass. 97, 32 N. E. 1026. In the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, a sale of all the mortgaged goods is not necessary if the sale of part of the property will pay the debt and costs of the sale; for, in that case, there is a termination of the right of the mortgagee to possession and an extinguishment of his title. Moore v. Ryan, 31 Mo. App. 474; Bellamy v. Doud, 11 Iowa, 285; Charter v. Stevens, 3 Denio [N. Y.] 33, 45 Am. Dec. 444.—3 Mich. L. R. 316.

will be presumed.[83] In replevin by the mortgagor to recover property from the mortgagee, want of consideration may be set up as a basis of plaintiff's claim.[84] An injunction will not lie to restrain a default in the absence of a personal covenant on the part of the mortgagor.[85]

§ 16. Remedies against third persons.[86]—A mortgagee is entitled to an equitable lien on property substituted for the mortgaged property, the one exchanging property with the mortgagor having knowledge of the existence of the mortgage.[87] A mortgagee may maintain an action against one wrongfully converting the mortgaged property or a part thereof,[88] and it is immaterial whether or not the security remaining in his hands, if any, is exhausted or worthless, or has been converted by some one else,[89] and this is true, though the mortgagee is not entitled to the possession of the property.[90] A mortgagee having possession of the property may maintain conversion against one wrongfully attaching it.[91] In such case it is not necessary to set out in the petition the particulars of plaintiff's lien.[92] In trover by a mortgagee to recover the property from a creditor of the mortgagor, who had replevied the same, a draft which furnished the consideration of the mortgage is admissible.[93] A factor selling mortgaged goods on commission without notice or knowledge of the mortgage does not derive such a benefit from the transaction as to authorize the mortgagee to waive the tort and recover in an action upon an implied contract.[94] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of evidence are shown in the notes.[95] In replevin the measure of damages for wrongful seizure, in case return of the goods cannot be had, is the value of the goods up to the amount of the indebtedness, with accrued interest.[96] In conversion the amount of the damages is the amount of the debt if that be less than the value of the property converted,[97] otherwise it is the value of such property at the time of the conversion.[98] A claim by a mortgagee for the conversion of a definite amount of property of a stated value to the consequent impairment of his lien is susceptible of pecuniary measurement, and does not sound in damages merely within the meaning of statutes relating to the right of set-off.[99]

NOTE. Naturalization by accession of territory: Manifestly the nationality of the inhabitants of territory acquired by conquest or cession becomes that of the government under whose domain they pass, subject to the right of election on their part to retain their former nationality by removal or otherwise, as may be provided. Admission on an equal footing with the original states, in all respects whatever, involves equality of constitutional right and power, which cannot thereafterwards be controlled, and it also involves the adoption as citizens of the United States of those whom Congress makes members of the political community, and who are resognized as such in the formation of the new state with the consent of Congress. cases applies to the detention of a bankrupt taken into custody before bankruptcy [14] and in such case he may be discharged on a writ of habeas corpus.[15] The bankruptcy court may issue an order restraining the arrest of the bankrupt even though a petition for review of an order refusing to revoke a discharge is pending.[16]

§ 2. Arrest on mesne process. When allowable.[17]—In some states one failing to pay his taxes may be arrested.[18] The term "debt" as employed in a constitutional provision prohibiting imprisonment therefor does not extend to or embrace any pecuniary obligation imposed by the state as punishment for crime, whether the money, the payment of which is demanded, be for fines or costs, or even, in certain quasi-criminal proceedings, other penalties of a money nature which may be lawfully inflicted by a court.[19]

Procedure to obtain order of arrest.[20]—In New York in an action of conversion, the affidavit must state facts showing the value of the articles alleged to have been converted.[21]

Validity and use of order.—An illegal and improper use of a writ of capias ad respondendum does not invalidate the writ or the act of the court issuing it,[22] but plaintiff may be responsible to defendant for the improper use.[23]

§ 3. Execution against the body. Occasion and propriety. Procedure to obtain.[24]—There is no imprisonment for debt in Illinois; but refusal to surrender non-exempt property to satisfy a judgment is regarded as a fraud, which after hearing and trial by jury may be punished by imprisonment for a limited time at the creditor's expense.[25] In New York a defendant may be arrested in an action for damages for an injury inflicted through the negligence of defendant's servant,[26] and wage-earners suing for wages earned are entitled to an execution against the person of their former employer [27] provided the action to recover such wages is commenced within one month after the accrual of the cause of action.[28] Also if the nature of the action is such that an execution against the person could be issued upon a judgment recovered by the plaintiff, such an execution may be issued against the plaintiff on a judgment against him for the costs,[29] and this is true though the defendant, owing to its corporate character, is not subject to arrest.[30]

What allegations are essential to the validity of the affidavit depends upon the local statutes.[31] Where the affidavit alleges fraud in general terms, and is such that the debtor might be entitled to have specifications filed, if seasonably requested, yet where no request is made for such specifications, or where the charge can be made specific by its reference to the action or otherwise, the debtor can be called upon to plead.[32]

The order and writ.[33]—An order correct in itself is not made erroneous because it follows upon a wrong conclusion or procedure of the court.[34] Upon appeal the order of the lower court will be sustained if possible.[35]

Arrest and return.[36]

§ 4. Supersedeas bail or discharge from arrest. Final process.[37]—Under a statute providing for the release of the detor where malice is not the gist of the action, the term "malice" implies a wrong inflicted on another with an evil intent or purpose.[38] The phrase "gist of the action" means the essential ground or object of a suit, and without which there is not a cause of action.[39] Under the Massachusetts statutes if the debtor voluntarily makes default he is not entitled to the benefit of proceedings for the relief of poor debtors.[40] In New Jersey the making of an assignment to the assignee appointed by the court of all the debtor's real and personal estate, except such property as is exempt, is necessary before the order of discharge can be made,[41] and an order of discharge will be set aside where it appears that the petition presented to the court was not filed with the clerk for more than two months afterwards.[42]

Costs.—The misconduct of the debtor rendering the proceeding necessary costs may be taxed against him.[43]

§ 5. Liability for false imprisonment.—In an action on plaintiff's bond, the general rules of pleading apply.[44]

CIVIL RIGHTS.[45]

Perfect equality in civil rights with the white race given by the 13th amendment is a right, privilege or immunity secured to members of the emancipated race by the Federal constitution.[46] A private citizen cannot, in a constitutional sense, prevent equal protection of the laws.[47] The right to have the state afford due pro-

47. Since the fourteenth amendment concess when a citizen is taken into custody to punish him for a crime is secured by or dependent upon the Federal constitution,[48] and forcibly taking a prisoner from the custody of the state and murdering him destroys such right, privilege or immunity.[49] When a citizen is deprived of a right, privilege or immunity secured by the Federal constitution, though there is no dereliction of duty on the part of the state, congress has power to punish the act.[50] "Places of public accommodation" in Civil Rights Acts does not include a bootblacking stand,[51] and an apartment or family hotel where suites are rented on annual leases is not a hotel within a law requiring equal accommodations in hotels.[52]

Failure to comply with statutes requiring carriers to furnish separate coaches [53] or waiting rooms of equal and sufficient accommodation for the white and black races is a public offense,[54] unless it is the result of an accident.[55] The object of such statutes is to prevent discrimination.[56] A carrier who has violated the provisions of a law requiring the separation of the races cannot invoke minor provisions of it as a justification for ejecting a passenger.[57]

CLERKS OF COURT.

§ 1. General powers and duties.[58]—The clerk of a court of record is the custodian of its records and files and his certificate as to what is contained in the record must be looked to in preference to any other evidence.[59] A clerk has no judicial powers;[60] he has only such authority to satisfy judgments as is given him by statute,[61] hence the receipt of money by a clerk for the satisfaction of a judgment, except as provided by law, is not an official act of the clerk,[62] and he cannot be

amerced for failure to pay over money so received.[63] A clerk in making up a transcript of a record for an appellate court has no discretion to omit anything which is directed by either party to be inserted, if it is a paper or proceeding in the cause having relation or leading up to the order or decree appealed from.[64] But he should omit all papers and proceedings in the same or another distinct cause which have no relation to, and which do not lead up to, the order or decree appealed from, even though such papers or proceedings have been directed to be inserted.[65] The clerk's certificate of the transcript should follow the rules prescribed therefor.[66] A clerk is not the agent of county commissioners to make contracts for services to be performed in his office, and cannot compel reimbursement where he has paid therefor.[67] A clerk of a Federal circuit court has authority to issue a subpœna duces tecum, when ordered to do so by the court, for production of documents on the taking of a deposition de bene esse before him.[68] The issuance by a clerk of a Florida circuit court of a commission to take the deposition of an absent witness, when all the preliminary steps prescribed by law and the rules of practice have been complied with, is a mere ministerial act, and ordinarily the clerk has no right to refuse its issuance because he is of the opinion that the deposition, when taken, will be incompetent in the proceeding in which it is to be used; he should issue the commission, leaving the competency of the deposition to the court when it should be tendered as evidence.[69] A clerk of the circuit court in Michigan may not object to an order of the court directing the filing with him of a certificate of deposit in lieu of a bond as security for costs.[70] Under the North Carolina statutes an appointee to fill a vacancy in the office of clerk of the superior court, occurring during the term, holds only until the next general election and not for the unexpired term,[71] though the order appointing him purports to make the appointment for such unexpired term.[72] Where a statement of claim shows on its face that plaintiff has no lawful demand or good cause of action, he is not injured by refusal of the clerk to file the papers and issue summons.[73]

75. Arkansas: The indexing of orders of the court relating to commissioners of accounts, petit jurors and grand jurors, is a part of the burden of the office of clerk of the circuit court. Kirby's Dig. § 3490, allowing ten cents for indexing each case, each item, has no reference thereto. Hempstead County v. Harkness [Ark.] 84 S. W. 799. Kirby's Dig. § 3490, allowing the clerk ten cents each for filing papers in a cause, does not include papers taken from a justice of the peace for presentation to the grand jury. Id. Since fifty cents is allowed by § 3491 for each indictment returned into court, the clerk is not entitled in addition to ten cents per one hundred words for recording indictments under section 3490, as "copies of bonds and papers." Id.

Florida: Under Rev. St. 1892, § 1394, the circuit clerk is entitled to charge fifteen cents for each search for unpaid taxes and tax certificates for each year for which search is made, whether or not a tax sale be found. Edwards v. Law [Fla.] 36 So. 569.

Missouri: Clerk of circuit court is entitled to ten cents per one hundred words of the copy of a petition for mandamus incorpo-court who, under the statute, is also ex officio county recorder, fills but one office, and is entitled to but one salary, which must not exceed the limit fixed by law for the office of clerk of court.[77] Costs taxed for copies in favor of a clerk are a part of the emoluments of the clerk's office necessary to discharge office expenses, and the clerk cannot be deprived of such compensation by the fact that parties make and furnish such copies.[78] Where parties themselves, or by agents or assistants, inspect court records and make extracts therefrom, receiving no assistance from employes in the clerk's office, who merely watch and supervise as a part of their duty to keep the records safe, the clerk is not entitled to any fee or compensation.[79] A clerk who certifies to facts as well as to a paper containing a statement of such facts is entitled to reasonable compensation therefor in addition to the fee allowed by statute for certification of the paper.[80] Thus if a clerk makes a search of records to ascertain what liens, if any, exist against lands described in an abstract of title, and makes a statement of the result of his search on the abstract, he is entitled to reasonable compensation therefor.[81] But if the search of the records was a necessary part of another duty, to the performance of which a fee is attached, he cannot make an additional charge therefor.[82] A clerk extends credit at his peril and will be required to account for fees earned, whether the same are collected or not.[83] A clerk is not required to account for fees collected by him for services rendered by his predecessor before the enactment of a statute limiting salary, though the fees were collected after such statute went into effect.[84] He is chargeable with fees collected by him for compensating work left undone by his predecessor.[85] In Illinois the county clerk is not entitled to a fee for acknowledging a tax deed, but is entitled to one for recording it.[86] In Nebraska a clerk of the district court is required to account for fees earned by him as a member of the board of commissioners of insanity.[87] In Arkansas a clerk of a circuit court is entitled to his fees in cases in which a nolle prosequi has been entered.[88] A clerk of a circuit court in Wisconsin may recover of defendant his statutory fees, on dismissal for want of prosecution, though he has not required payment of fees in advance or by the prevailing party before entry of judgment.[89] The Indiana act of 1903 relating to salaries of clerks and sheriffs entitled such officers to unpaid salary from January 1, 1900.[90] Where, in an action to enforce a penalty for exacting illegal fees, it appears that services not required by law were performed, and a fee charged for their performance, it will not be presumed that the charge was more than the services were reasonably worth.[91]

United States courts.[92]—Under the statute entitling a clerk of a circuit court to a commission for receiving, keeping, and paying out money, such a clerk is not entitled to a commission on proceeds of mortgaged property paid by the master making the sale directly to the mortgagee,[93] nor on a fund paid by a master into a United States depositary, pursuant to an order of the court and subject to be withdrawn at its order, when the fund is so paid out,[94] nor on railroad bonds deposited in a circuit court as collateral security, and kept in a bank vault to which the clerk has the key.[95] A clerk of the circuit court may charge the statutory fees for copies of an injunctional order, though such orders were printed.[96] A clerk of the district court is not entitled to a fee for each notice sent to creditors of the filing of a petition for a discharge in bankruptcy, but is entitled only to the actual expense incurred.[97] Clerks are not entitled to fees for duplicates of their accounts to be retained in their offices as provided by law.[98]

§ 3. Liability on bond.[99]—A clerk who certifies to an acknowledgment of a deed taken before one of his deputies, the signature and acknowledgment being in fact forged, is liable to the purchaser for the price paid, he having relied on the certificate of acknowledgment.[100] Though a clerk's bond is given to the United States as sole obligee, any private suitor who has suffered loss by failure of the clerk to discharge his duties may sue thereon.[101] In Maryland, charges for work done in performance of duties of the office of clerk of the circuit court of Baltimore city, and the salaries of deputies, are in the nature of expenses of the office, payable before payment of the clerk's salary, and hence the clerk is liable therefor on his bond.[102] Under the statutory scheme for payment of such services, it is presumed, in the absence of contrary evidence, that the fees received were sufficient to pay for the maintenance of the office.[103]

COMBINATIONS AND MONOPOLIES.

§ 1. Combinations violative of the Federal anti-trust act.[9]—The Sherman anti-trust act declares illegal any attempt at monopoly or restriction upon competition in interstate commerce,[10] and relative to carriers it applies only to interstate transportation companies.[11] A combination to secure less than lawful freight rates is a violation of the act;[12] but a contract giving an exclusive right to manufacture and sell certain articles[13] or a contract between a telegraph company and a board of trade, limiting the communication of quotations collected by the latter, is not;[14] and no monopoly or combination can arise from the fact that agents of the state only are allowed to perform duties devolving upon them by law.[15] The designation by city officials of a certain kind of asphalt to be used in paving a street is not a violation of the act.[16] The act makes a distinction between a contract, and a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade.[17] A general allegation of intent colors and applies to specific charges in a bill seeking relief against violations of the act.[18] A declaration must describe with definiteness and certainty

§ 2. Combinations violative of state anti-trust acts and of the common law.[21]—A pool or trust is a combination having the intention, tendency and power to monopolize business or to control production, interfere with trade or regulate prices.[22] The form of an association will be disregarded and its actual operation examined to determine its legality;[23] but if the form and purpose of a combination is legal, it will not be denounced as illegal because it occasionally effectuates its purpose by exceptional rules,[24] and a contract not inimical to public welfare will be upheld unless so operated as to be oppressive to private rights, or works public detriment.[25] It is not necessary that any actual agreement to combine be entered into,[26] nor that the combination result in a complete monopoly,[27] or that prices be raised by virtue of it,[28] or that evil intent or actual injury to the public be shown;[29] but to render a combination to injure one in his business actionable, damage must result.[30] Such combinations are inimical to public welfare[31] and contrary to public policy, and are condemned by the common law[32] and by stat-

23. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles [Miss.] 37 So. 939.

24. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles [Miss.] 37 So. 939. Withdrawal of car service from a siding because the owner refused to pay demurrage charges held not to constitute the car service association an illegal trust or combine. Id.

25. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles [Miss.] 37 So. 939. When an order of car service is reasonable, whether it was rightfully invoked in a particular instance does not affect the question of whether the association is a trust. Id.

26. A tacit understanding is all that is essential. Chicago, Wilmington & V. Coal Co. v. People, 114 Ill. App. 75.

27. It is sufficient if it tends to that end. Hunt v. Riverside Co-op. Club [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 264, 104 N. W. 40.

28. Hunt v. Riverside Co-op. Club [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 264, 104 N. W. 40.

29. Needles v. Bishop & Babcock Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 77.

30. By inducing employes to leave his service or break their contracts with him. Employing Printers' Club v. Doctor Blosser Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 353. Proof of excessive payment for car service is not conclusive proof of damage under anti-trust act (Acts 1900, p. 128, c. 88, § 7), in the absence of proof that such excessive payment is due to the existence of such trust or combine. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles [Miss.] 37 So. 939.

31. Under the Mississippi statute, the test of a trust is whether the combination or contract is in its results obnoxious to public policy or inimical to public welfare. Under Const. 1890, § 198, Code 1892, § 4437, and Acts 1900, p. 125, c. 88. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles [Miss.] 37 So. 939.

32. Contrary to public policy: An association of common carriers which has for its purpose the elimination of competition is illegal. Tift v. Southern R. Co., 138 F. 753. A combination, the object of which is to obtain sole control of a particular branch of business, is unlawful at common law and contrary to public policy. Charleston Natural Gas Co. v. Kanawha Natural Gas, Co. v. Kanawha Natural Gas, Light & Fuel Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 876. An agreement ute,[33] and statutes prohibiting them are a valid exercise of the police power.[34] Contracts having for their purpose the creation of such combinations are void.[35] Agreements between public service corporations of a character to prevent competition in the interest of the public are condemned by the common law [36] and are contrary to public policy.[37] Contracts not to engage in a particular line of business for the purpose of limiting the production of a commodity and regulating its price is illegal as in restraint of trade. Evans v. American Strawboard Co., 114 Ill. App. 450.

Not contrary to public policy: A contract between two mercantile houses engaged in the same line of business by which each acquires an interest in the gross profits of the other. Fechteler v. Plam Bros. & Co. [C. C. A.] 133 F. 462. A contract between a telegraph company and a board of trade limiting the communication of quotations by the latter. Board of Trade Chicago v. Christie Grain & Stock Co., 25 S. Ct. 637. Completion of the Gainesville road by the Georgia held not to defeat or lessen competition. Weed v. Gainesville, J. & S. R. Co., 119 Ga. 576, 46 S. E. 885.

33. Statutes violated: An agreement between an association of master plumbers and wholesalers, fixing the price of supplies to members and increased the price of supplies to members and increased price to non-members, the master plumbers agreeing not to sell supplies or labor below a fixed price and to make their estimates on contracts relative to such prices violates Pub. Acts 1899, p. 409, No. 255, § 1. Hunt v. Riverside Co-op. Club [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. 264, 104 N. W. 40. Allegations of facts tending to show the creation of a monopoly in fertilizer business held to state a cause of action under Civ. Code 1902, § 2845, prohibiting trusts. State v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 455. An agreement to refrain rom purchasing salt within the state or abroad and to discourage importations by others violaters Civ. Code, § 1673, forbidding contracts in restraint of trade. Getz Bros. & Co. v. Federal Salt Co. [Cal.] 81 P. 416. Admitted facts held to show an unlawful combination to fix the price of coal in violation of Anti-trust Act of 1891 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 38, § 269a). Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 244 Ill. 421, 73 N. E. 770.

Statutes not violated: A car service association which is merely an agent of the railroads in enforcing payment for car service and demurrage charges but cannot control the railroads nor fix the charges is not a trust within Acts 1900, p. 125, c. 88, defining trusts as agreements whereby others than the contracting parties control their business. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles [Miss.] 37 So. 939. The condemnation of the right of way of one railroad company by another for the purpose of operating a double track does not violate a constitutional provision against owning a competing or parallel line. Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 211 Ill 352, 71 N. E. 1017. The operation of a railway by a lessee in connection with other lines owned by it is in no sense a combination of the lessor with such other lines in violation of the constitution of Ohio. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 109. A stipulation in a contract granting a sleeping car company the exclusive right for 15 years to furnish sleeping cars for use on all the roads operated by a railroad company or thereafter acquired and operated does not violate a provision prohibiting combinations from restricting the free pursuit of any lawful business. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. State [Tex.] 87 S. W. 336. An agreement by a railroad company to haul the cars of a sleeping car company held not a violation of the Anti-trust Act (Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94), § 2, defining a monopoly as (2), where any corporation acquires the franchises or rights of another for the purposes of lessening competition, as the sleeping car company did not acquire any franchise of the railroad company. Id. A stipulation in a contract between a railroad and sleeping car company that the latter might charge passengers on its cars such fares as were customary on competing lines does not violate Anti-trust Act (Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94), through interference with transportation of passengers. Id. Nor did the contract affect transportation or charges in that its provisions required the railroad company to pay the sleeping car company a certain mileage if the sale of berths did not amount to a certain sum. Id. Giving more favorable terms to one who would handle his goods exclusively is not a violation of an act forbidding a sale on condition that there shall be no dealing in the goods of others. Commonwealth v. Strauss [Mass.] 74 N. E. 308.

34. A statute which prohibits trusts and combinations which tend to lessen full and free competition is a valid exercise of the police power in regulating monopolies. Not a violation of U. S. Const. art. 14, § 1. State v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 455.

35. One who leases his property to another as a step in the creation of a monopoly to control the production and price of a commodity cannot recover rent. Hartz v. Eddy [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 251, 103 N. W. 852. Whether a lease was made for the purpose of limiting or controlling the production of salt held a question for the jury. Id. Contracts which impose restraint upon business and tend to prevent competition will not be enforced by the courts. Charleston Nat. Gas Co. v. Kanawha Nat. Gas, Light & Fuel Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 876.

36. Agreement between gas companies tending to create a monopoly. Charleston Nat. Gas Co. v. Kanawha Nat. Gas, Light & Fuel Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 876.

37. Where the object is to limit production, regulate prices or kill competition. Charleston Nat. Gas Co. v. Kanawha Nat. Gas, Light & Fuel Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 876. Combination between carriers to prevent competition is prima facie illegal. Chicago, in a certain place or district are generally held not to be in violation of anti-trust laws,[38] and contracts fixing and regulating the price of labor are not within such laws;[39] but such combinations cannot be specifically excepted.[40] An illegal combination may be enjoined from enforcing an illegal agreement to the injury of a person engaged in a competitive business,[41] and previous connection with an illegal combination will not deprive one who has been injured by it from being heard in equity.[42]

A combination by the producers of a necessary of life to control the output, price and sale of it is criminal,[43] notwithstanding the organization was voluntary and no articles of association were reduced to writing.[44] The fact that a combination does not have a complete monopoly,[45] or that the prices fixed may be reasonable and not have been advanced,[46] does not prevent it's being criminal. The criminal offense is complete as soon as the combination is formed,[47] and each member is bound by the acts of his fellows done in furtherance of the object sought to be accomplished.[48]

etc., R. Co. v. Southern Ind. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 843.

38. An agreement by one partner on dissolution of the firm not to engage in the same line of business in the town so long as the remaining partner was in business there does not violate the Anti-trust Act (Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94). Crump v. Ligon [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 250. A contract by the seller not to enter into the same line of business in a limited territory within a limited period is not a violation of Gen. Laws 1899, c. 359, prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade, to fix prices or control the production of a commodity. Espenson v. Koepke, 93 Minn. 278, 101 N. W. 168. A contract not to engage in the mining or shipping of coal in the territory traversed by the Ohio, Monongahela, and Mississippi rivers and their tributaries, for 10 years, is not contrary to public policy, though the purchaser had similar contracts with several other operators. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Jutte, 210 Pa. 288, 59 A. 1088. A contract not to engage in the newspaper business in a certain town for five years is valid. Andrews v. Kingsbury, 212 Ill. 97, 72 N. E. 11.

NOTE: Agency in restraint of trade may be illegal. (See Hammon, Contracts, § 444a et seq.), In so far as it unnecessarily or unreasonably restrains the right of either principal or agent to exercise his trade or business, or to sell commodities which are the subject of trade and commerce. Althen v. Vreeland [N. J. Eq.] 36 A. 479; Cleaver v. Lenhart, 182 Pa. 285; Lanzit v. Sefton Mfg. Co., 184 Ill. 326, 75 Am. St. Rep. 171; Curran v. Galen, 152 N. Y. 33, 57 Am. St. Rep. 496, 37 L. R. A. 802. But this does not render reasonable restrictions unlawful, and as a general rule a stipulation in a contract of agency, although in partial restraint of trade, if there is a sufficient consideration, is held valid. Swanson v. Kirby, 98 Ga. 586; Up River Ice Co. v. Denler, 114 Mich. 296, 68 Am. St. Rep. 480; Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650, 34 L. R. A. 389; Tillinghast v. Boothby, 20 R. I. 59. 47. The acts of the different parties which thereafter tend to further the purposes of the combination are binding on all. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 214 Ill. 421, 73 N. E. 77. A combination to prevent competition in the sale of an article which is a necessary of life amounts to a common-law conspiracy regardless of what is done in furtherance of it. Id.

49. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 38, declaring it a conspiracy for two or more persons to conspire to do an illegal act injurious to public trade, and subjecting to fine one who attempts to corner the grain market or gives an option to buy grain at a future time. Chicago W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 214 Ill. 421, 73 N. E. 770.

A violation of the Illinois anti-trust law may be proscuted by indictment, though an action of debt also lies to recover the penalty.[50] An indictment in the language of the statute is suffcient.[51] The place of organization of a corporation defendant need not be alleged or proved in a prosecution for violation of the Illinois anti-trust act.[52]

Rights in an action brought under a particular statute must be determined from such statute alone;[53] but a ruling that a certain act is not a violation of a general statute which embraces within its terms a specific one is conclusive that it does not violate the latter.[54]

Declaring the forfeiture of the license to do business of a foreign corporation, for violation of an anti-trust law is not taking property without due process,[55] and a foreign corporation subject to forfeiture of its right to do business and to criminal prosecution is not denied equal protection of the laws, though by virtue of other statutes certain excepted classes are not subjected to criminal prosecution.[56]

Anti-trust statutes are not retroactive.[57] Acts relative to specific contracts are not repealed by acts general in their terms.[58]

§ 3. Grants of privileges by statute, ordinance and contracts with municipalities tending to create monopolies.[59]—A law securing to the successful bidder the exclusive right to supply books to the public schools does not create a monopoly.[60] Statutes putting obstacles in the way of new public service corporations are unconstitutional as tending to create a monopoly;[61] but authorizing a railroad company

51. Indictment for conspiracy held to charge that the combination was formed with fraudulent or malicious intent as required by Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 38. Chicago W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 214 Ill. 421, 73 N. E. 770. An indictment charging that a conspiracy was "unlawfully, maliciously, fraudulently and wickedly" entered into is sufficient, though the object of the combination was not unlawful until so declared by statute. Chicago, Wilmington & V. Coal Co. v. People, 114 Ill. App. 75.

52. Chicago, Wilmington & V. Coal Co. v. People, 114 Ill. App. 75. Where the object of the statute is to prevent combinations to fix prices, the fact that the statute reads "Corporations organized for the transaction of business within this state" does not require an indictment to so allege. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 214 Ill. 421, 73 N. E. 770.

53. Where an action is brought to recover penalties for violation of a state law, no rights can be predicated on the ground that the contract created a common-law monopoly or was in violation of the Federal Anti-trust Act. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 370. Agreements in violation of a statute specifically prohibiting them will be controlled by such statute and not by the general Anti-trust Act. State v. Wilson [Kan.] 80 P. 639. Gen. St. 1901, §§ 2439-2441 forbids agreements to maintain minimum rates of commission for services in the sale of live stock, but not relative to services in purchasing live stock. Id.

54. A ruling that a certain contract is not in violation of the Anti-trust Act of 1903 is conclusive that it does not violate the act of 1899, since the former is broader in its scope and effect than the latter. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 370.

58. Gen. St. 19001, §§ 2439-2441, prohibiting combinations between cattle buyers and sellers, is not repealed by the general Anti-trust Law, §§ 7864, 7874. State v. Wilson [Kan.] 80 P. 639. Section 46 of the Illinois Criminal Code, relating to the crime of conspiracy, was not repealed by the Anti-trust Act of 1891. Chicago, Wilmington & V. Coal Co. v. People, 114 Ill. App. 75. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 38, declaring that if two or more persons conspire to do an illegal act injurious to public trade, they shall be guilty of conspiracy, is not repealed by Anti-trust Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 38, § 269a), providing that it is a conspiracy for a corporation to become a member of a pool to fix the price of a commodity. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 214 Ill. 421, 73 N. which has acquired more than three-fourths of the stock of another company and is unable to agree with the holders of outstanding stock for a purchase thereof, to condemn it, is not an exclusive privilege.[62]

COMMERCE.

§ 1. Nature of commerce; domestic, interstate or foreign.[63]—Commerce consists of intercourse between citizens and inhabitants, and includes not only the transportation of persons and property and the navigation of public waters for that purpose, but also the purchase, sale and exchange of commodities.[64] Thus the soliciting of orders is commerce,[65] but insurance is not,[66] nor is issuing contracts to be fulfilled in the order of their issue by the accumulation of funds from contributions by the holders of such contracts,[67] nor the carrying of a pleasure party on a steamboat.[68] nor a contract made by a resident agent of a foreign corporation to furnish labor and material for construction work in pursuance of which laborers and material are sent into a state.[69]

Interstate commerce consists of intercourse and traffic between citizens and inhabitants of different states.[70] Thus, a sale in one state of goods manufactured in another;[71] goods shipped to an agent to fill orders previously taken;[72] but not goods shipped to be held in stock and offered for sale on the open market.[73] A foreign corporation selling goods to be shipped into a state upon orders to be approved by it, whether taken by a local or transient agent, is engaged in interstate commerce.[74] A C. O. D. shipment of intoxicating liquors from one state into another is interstate commerce;[75] but a shipment cannot be given an interstate character by a mere subterfuge to evade local option laws,[78] and it loses its interstate character when the carrier ceases to sustain the relation of carrier to it and holds it as a warehouseman or bailee.[77] Interstate freight retains its character as such until actual delivery to the consignee,[78] and an article of commerce though subject, on its arrivel within a state, to the police regulations thereof, is not divested of its interstate character so as to entitle the consignee to immediately remove inspection marks and labels.[79] Where the initial and terminal points of a telegram sent are within the same state, it is not interstate commerce, though the message is transmitted through another state.[80] A passenger traveling on an independent pass between two points within a state is a state passenger, notwithstanding he commenced his journey on a different pass at a point outside the state and his baggage was checked through from the initial point to destination.[81] It is not interstate commerce for an agent of a nonresident to solicit local business for a resident.[82]

Original packages.[83]—The original package exemption applies only when goods are imported in the form ordinarily used for the importation of that class of goods.[84] Goods do not lose their interstate character so long as they remain in original packages.[85] An importation may be divided into any number of original packages and still be subject to national control,[86] and the mere fact that goods are subject to be opened and inspected by the purchaser before delivery does not deprive them of their interstate character;[87] but their character is destroyed if the package is broken for the purpose of distributing its contents.[88]

88. Single brooms tagged with the name of the purchaser tied in bundles and shipped to an agent who unties and delivers them are not, after the bundle is broken, an original package. Commonwealth v. Rearick, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 384. Where one takes orders and sends them to a wholesale house without the state where the different articles are made up in packages and shipped to him where the bulk is broken and the packages for each customer segregated and delivered on receipt of the price the transaction is not interstate commerce. Town of Canton v. McDaniel [Mo.] 86 S. W. 1092.

§ 2. Regulation of commerce. A. The "commerce clause" and its application to particular regulatory measures.[89]—The commerce clause of the Federal constitution confers on congress the exclusive power to regulate interstate commerce,[90] and commerce with the Indian tribes,[91] and the eleventh amendment of the Federal constitution cannot be applied to nullify it.[92] The power extends to retail as well as wholesale trade,[93] and to commerce conducted by corporations as well as to that conducted by individuals;[94] but does not include the power to regulate the production of commodities to be used in such trade.[95] Therefore a state cannot place restrictions on interstate commerce,[96] and an attempt to regulate it cannot be sustained under the police power;[97] but if a matter is local and concerns the public policy of the state, though it incidentally affects interstate commerce, congressional inaction is an invitation to the state to regulate under its police power[98] but if a state law conflicts with a congressional regulation, the latter controls.[99] A state may, however, enact reasonable police regulations which incidentally affect interstate commerce,[1] but not unreasonable ones which directly affect it.[2] Requiring

90. The sole power to prescribe rules by which interstate commerce shall be regulated is in congress. Barnhard Bros. v. Morrison [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 376.

91. The commerce clause does not give congress power to punish, under Act January 30, 1897, the sale of liquor within a state to an Indian citizen subject to the laws of the state. In re Heff, 25 S. Ct. 506.

97. So much of Civ. Code 1902, § 2845, as prohibits importation with a view to lessen competition is void. State v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 455.

98. Where congress has not acted relative to a river lying wholly within a state, the state has jurisdiction as to the world except future congresses. Corrigan Transit Co. v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago [C. C. A.] 137 F. 851. Expenditure of money by the Federal government for the improvement of river does not evidence an intent to exclude the state from all dominion over that part of the waterway which lies wholly within it. Id.

NOTE. Rivers, improvements tolls: A state may authorize the improvement of a river within its borders by opening, widening, deepening or straightening it, or changing its course, and may authorize tolls to be charged all persons using it. Withers v. Buckley, 20 How. [U. S.] 84, 15 Law. Ed. 816; Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U. S. 288, 31 Law. Ed. 149; Huse v. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, 30 Law. Ed. 487; McReynolds v. 1. P. L. 1898, p. 812, is not in conflict with the interstate commerce clause, though it may incidently operate to prevent interstate wagers by telegraph. Ames v. Kirby [N. J. Law] 59 A. 558. Laws 1899, p. 246, c. 225, § 2, requiring grain commission merchants to make a report to the consignor within 24 hours after the sale, is not an interference with interstate commerce. State v. Edwards [Minn.] 102 N. W. 697.

NOTE. Licenses: Any system of license taxes which discriminate between the products of different states. (Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 Law. Ed. 347; Firman v. Rinker, 102 U. S. 123, 26 Law. Ed. 103; Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 Law. Ed. 565; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 29 Law. Ed. 691), or gives a citizen or resident of one state the right to carry on commerce on more favorable terms than are accorded citizens of another state, cannot be sustained (Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. [U. S.] 418, 20 Law. Ed. 449; State v. Wiggen, 64 N. H. 508, 1 L. R. A. 56). A statute imposing a license tax on peddlers of articles of foreign manufacture is invalid. State v. Pratt, 59 Vt. 590; Rodgers v. McCoy, 6 Dak. 238; Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 754, 8 L. R. A. 754; Marshalitown v. Blum, 58 Iowa, 184; Vines v. State, 67 Ala. 73; State v. Browning, 62 Mo. 591. But a license tax applicable to all peddlers is valid (State v. Emert, 103 Mo. 241, 23 Am. St. Rep. 874; Ex parte Butin, 28 Tex. 304), and it has been held that a state may prohibit all peddling within its limits (Commonwealth v. Gardner, 133 Pa. 284, 19 Am. St. Rep. 645, 7 L. R. A. 666).—From note to People v. Wemple [N. Y.] 27 Am. St. Rep. 563.

carcasses of calves shipped from any point within a state to be tagged is a proper exercise of the police power,[3] and not an interference with interstate commerce, though broad enough to apply to carcasses to be shipped into another state.[4] The designation of a specific material to be used in a public work is not an interference with interstate commerce.[5] The imposition of a property tax on an instrument of interstate commerce is not a regulation, though the value of property beyond the state be used in ascertaining the proper valuation.[6]

The selling of oleomargarine in unstamped or unmarked packages is made a crime by the Federal statutes.[7]

Regulation of foreign corporations in general.[8]—A state may prescribe the conditions on which a foreign corporation may do business therein except to regulate interstate commerce;[9] therefore a state tax on a resident agent of a nonresident corporation is not an interference with interstate commerce where the agent also does local business to some extent,[10] but when such regulations impose conditions which restrict them in their right to make contracts pertaining to interstate commerce, it invades their constitutional right.[11]

Regulation of telegraph and telephone companies.[12]—A state may impose a penalty on a telegraph company for failure to transmit an interstate message.[13] A

2. Acts 1904, p. 186, c. 109, requiring separate cars for the white and black races and making it an offense for a passenger to refuse to occupy a car to which he is assigned is invalid as to interstate passengers. Hart v. State [Md.] 60 A. 457. Act South Carolina, Feb. 16, 1904 (24 St. at Large) prohibiting the transportation of any shad fish beyond the limits of the state, is an interference with interstate commerce. McDonald v. S. 618, 48 Law. Ed. 1142. A municipal ordinance requiring all contracts for public work involving the use of dressed stone to require the work of dressing the stone to be done within the state does not violate the interstate commerce clause. Allen v. Labsap [Mo.] 87 S. W. 926. Act March 4, 1903, p. 167, securing to the successful bidder the exclusive right to supply the public schools with books adopted by the state school board does not violate the interstate commerce clause. Dickinson v. Cunningham, 140 Ala. 527, 37 So. 345.

6. Taking the entire valuation of the property of a railroad company without as well as within the state and dividing it upon the mileage basis for the purpose of fixing the value within one state. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 132 F. 629.

9. Attorney General v. Electric Storage Battery Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 467. A statute requiring a foreign corporation to file with the secretary of state a copy of its articles and comply with other requirements as a condition of doing business does not apply to its interstate commerce. De Witt v. Berger Mfg. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 334. Rev. Civ. Code, §§ 833, 835, requiring foreign corporations to file their articles with the secretary of state and appoint a state agent on whom process may be served, as a condition to doing business does not apply to the interstate commerce of such corporations. Iowa Falls Mfg. Co. v. Farrar [S. D.] 104 N. W. 449. An answer to a complaint for the price of goods, setting forth that at the time of the sale plaintiff was a foreign corporation and had not filed its articles in the state as required does not show that the basis of the action was interstate commerce. Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Hampton [Ala.] 37 So. 552.

10. Agent of nonresident meat packing house who sold to customers as well as filling orders already taken. Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 49 Law. Ed. 663; Id., 117 Ga. 969, 44 S. E. 854. A statute imposing certain duties on all foreign corporations applies to corporations engaged in interstate commerce, but which maintains a place of business for other purposes as well. Attorney General v. Electric Storage Battery Co. [Mass.] 74 N. E. 467.

11. A foreign corporation may enforce such contracts, though it has failed to compiy with the requirements of a state law as to filing their articles of incorporation with the secretary of state. Greek-American Sponge Co. v. Richardson Drug Co. [Wis.] 102 N. W. 888. A foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce cannot be required to file its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state as a condition to enforcing its contracts. Belle City Mfg. Co. v. Frizzeli [Idaho] 81 P. 58.

telegraph company transmitting a message from one point to another within the state is subject to state regulation, though the message is transmitted through another state.[14] A telephone company engaged in both interstate and intrastate commerce is not exempt from a license tax on its intrastate business.[15]

Regulation of traffic in intoxicating liquors.[16]—Under the Wilson Bill a state prohibition law does not attach until liquor shipped in from another state is delivered to the consignee.[17] State laws directly affecting interstate commerce in intoxicating liquor are void;[18] but laws which only incidentally affect it are valid.[19]

Inspection laws.—The state has power to pass inspection laws which incidentally affect interstate commerce,[20] though they are enacted for the sole purpose of detecting fraud or crime.[21] A valid inspection law is not rendered invalid because it operates to deter shipments into the state,[22] nor because it does not provide for an adequate inspection and imposes a burden beyond the cost of inspection.[23]

State burdens on foreign commerce.[24]—The Federal constitution prohibits a state from laying any duty on tonnage[25] or exports or imports.[26] A state may levy a property tax on an instrumentality of interstate commerce which has a situs within the state.[27] State pilotage regulations are not necessarily repugnant to the commerce clause in the absence of Federal regulation.[28] Compulsory pilot regulations authorized by Federal statutes do not violate the constitutional provision that the ports of one state shall not be given any preference over those of another.[29]

Regulation of railroads and other carriers.[30]—A state law requiring a carrier to observe a general duty is not an attempt to regulate interstate commerce,[31] nor is the imposition of a penalty for failure to furnish cars to a shipper on due application;[32] but the imposition upon the initial or any connecting carrier as a condition of availing itself of a valid contract of exemption from liability beyond its own line, of the duty of tracing the goods and informing the shipper when, where and how lost or destroyed, is.[33] If adequate train service is furnished or if inadequate service can be otherwise remedied, a state commission cannot require through interstate trains to stop at particular stations.[34]

The Interstate Commerce Act forbids traffic pools,[35] and it is no justification for such a pool that it prevents unlawful rebates from connecting lines to shippers.[36] A contract for the division of earnings of competing lines of railroad violates the Interstate Commerce Act, whether or not actual division is made.[37] It is not a violation of the act for the carrier to pay a debt by carriage done at its legally established rates.[38] An interstate carrier may buy a commodity and sell the same to be transported over its lines at a less price than the cost, expense and its published rates, unless it is a mere device for covering a discriminatory rate;[39] but if the contract operates to give the purchaser an undue advantage to the prejudice of other dealers, it is a violation of the act,[40] and no action lies for breach of it.[41]

The Safety Appliance Act [42] embraces locomotives,[43] and applies to all cars used in moving interstate commerce,[44] though not actually running at the time.[45] Couplers which will both couple and can be uncoupled without the necessity of men going between the cars is what is meant by this act,[46] and cars with a defective appliance are not to be put in service.[47] Reasonable diligence to keep the apparatus in repair is no justification for a violation of the act,[48] and if it was, is not shown to have been exercised where several cars cut out for delivery to connecting carriers were found with defective appliances.[49]

Discrimination in rates.[50]—Reasonable compensation for the service actually rendered is all that a common carrier can be permitted to exact.[51] The reasonableness of a rate is a question of fact [52] for judicial investigation.[53] The general rule is that the greater the tonnage of the commodity transported the lower should be the freight rate,[54] and railroads have no legal right to graduate their rates in proportion to the prosperity which attends industries whose product they transport.[55]

(§ 2) B. Regulations of trade and commerce within a state.[56]—The several states may regulate commerce within their borders.[57] They may regulate unincorporated carriers[58] and require a carrier to perform a general duty[59] within the terms of the law imposing it.[60] They may determine the reasonableness of interstate rates,[61] and regulate trade in an article which, because of its peculiarities, fraud with reference to transactions relative to it may be readily perpetrated.[62]

That which of itself is not a business in a commercial or legal sense cannot be regulated as a business.[63] The trading stamp business is not contrary to public policy,[64] and equity will enjoin the purchase and resale as an article of merchandise the trading stamps issued and redeemable by another.[65]

§ 3. The Interstate Commerce Commission; its functions and proceedings before it.[66]—The Interstate Commerce Commission, though clothed with quasi-judicial functions, is an administrative body and its orders are not self-executing.[67] It is an expert tribunal empowered to determine in the first instance the reasonableness of a rate;[68] but has no legislative powers;[69] hence no power to fix rates.[70]

69. An order of the commission requiring railroads joining in a pooling contract to desist from enforcing it is not legislative in character. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 F. 829.

Words used in the act are given their customary meaning.[71] In enforcing its orders, it represents the people, and relief will not be denied it because complainants before it participated in unlawful practices.[72] Though an action to enforce an order of the commission is triable de novo, the cause of action must have been included in the order and have constituted the basis of it.[73] The Act gives a party claiming to be damaged by its violation a right to complain to the commissioner or bring action for damage, but he is confined to the proceeding he elects.[74] A bill by the commissioner alleging generally a violation of the Act, which is denied, raises the issue as to every possible violation of the Act.[75]

The Act does not confer on a Federal circuit court jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus in an original proceeding.[76] A state court has no jurisdiction of an action for a violation of the Act,[77] but has jurisdiction, in a case of interstate carriage, to afford relief from unreasonable freight rates exacted, notwithstanding such rates have been promulgated under the provisions of the Act.[78]

The findings of fact set out in a report of the Commission are in all judicial proceedings deemed prima facie evidence of the facts found,[79] and except for controlling reasons, the national courts should not disparage or discredit them;[80] but the mere opinions of the Commission are not evidence.[81] The lawfulness of an order does not necessarily depend on the evidence adduced before it, but on the existence of facts warranting the reparation ordered.[82]

70. An order requiring a carrier to change an article of freight from one class to another is an attempt to fix rates. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 134 F. 942. See 3 C. L. 713, n. 56.

78. The act does not abridge common-law remedies. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1052.

Note: Whether the interstate commerce regulations made by congress will permit a shipper to appeal to the common-law principles and to bring an action against a railroad company in a state court on account of unreasonable rates is a nice question. It was held in Swift v. Phil. R. Co., 58 F. 858, that interstate commerce is governed solely by the law of the United States, and that the United States as such has no common law; further, that the right to question the reasonableness of interstate rates is a matter of primary as well as of exclusive jurisdiction in the Federal courts. The contrary is held, however, in Murray v. C. & N. W. R. Co., 62 F. 24. In Van Patten v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 81 F. 545, the court held that it was a good defense to an action for damages for alleged unreasonable freight charges to show that the defendant in obedience to the Interstate Commerce Act has adopted, printed and posted a properly proportioned schedule of rates and that the charges complained of are in accordance with those in the schedule. In W. U. Tel Co. v. Call Pub. Co., 181 U. S. 92, 45 Law Ed. 765, it was held that the principles of the common law are operative upon all interstate commercial transactions, except so far as they are modified by congressional enactment. See, also, Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Peters, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 515, 40 S. W. 429; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Carden [Tex. Civ. App.] 34 S. W. 145; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 39 Law. 81. In a proceeding to enforce reparation of unjust rates. Western New York & P. R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 343. The provision of the act that findings of the commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts found in a subsequent proceeding to enforce the order means that they should be offered in evidence unaccompanied by opinions or other extraneous conclusions. Id.

82. Such facts may be established in an action to enforce the order. Western New York & P. R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 343.

The orders of the Commission must be enforced, if at all, in toto; a court cannot separate an illegal part from the legal.[83] Only those who are parties to the hearing before the Commission are bound by its orders.[84] No appeal or writ of error lies from an order of the Commission.[85] The provision that an appeal from proceedings to enforce an order of the commission will not operate to supersede the order of the court appealed from does not affect the discretionary power of the court to grant a stay;[86] but a stay will not be granted where the damage resulting from enforcement will be less than that sustained by the other party if the order is suspended.[87]

Where carriers have stipulated that if a rate is held unreasonable they will repay the unlawful exactions, a reference will be had to ascertain the amount and a decree rendered therefor.[88]

§ 4. State railroad and corporation commissions[89] are not the state,[90] and though given quasi-judicial powers, are not courts.[91] A commission authorized to make reasonable rates cannot in consideration of a low rate limit the liability of the carrier for loss through its negligence to less than the value of the goods.[92] The North Carolina Corporation Commission has power to fix the time allowed as free time for intermediate points and make regulations as to time of transit, but not to change the time allowed as free time at the initial point.[93]

COMMON LAW.

In general.[94]—From the time of their acquisition by the United States until 1868, the common law was prevalent over the separate portions of the region from which the state of Kansas was carved, under all civilized forms of governmental organization established for them;[95] and from 1855 until 1868 the common law, not inconsistent with the constitution of the United States, the Kansas-Nebraska act, or statute law, was the rule of action and decision, notwithstanding any law, custom or usage to the contrary.[96]

COMPOSITION WITH CREDITORS.

Any secret agreement between the debtor and any single creditor in contravention of equality is against the policy of the law, and, so long as it remains executory, it cannot be enforced,[1] and if fully executed at or before the composition, the excess may be recovered by the debtor;[2] but being made after the composition is effected, the excess payment cannot be recovered, though made pursuant to a prior agreement.[3] The other creditors have no lien or other right, in the proper sense of the terms, recognized either by the common law or by chancery, with reference to any amount received by a creditor who obtained such an advantage.[4]

CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.[10]

An attorney has power to confess judgment on behalf of his client[11] in an action of debt brought for a statutory penalty.[12] Authority to confess judgment is valid without a seal.[13] A judgment entered without authority cannot affect the rights of defendant.[14]

Authority to confess judgment without process must be clear and explicit,

and must be strictly pursued;[15] and if there is no power to enter the appearance of the debtor and confess judgment, the judgment is a nullity and subject to collateral attack.[16] A judgment by confession can only be sustained by a warrant authorizing it at the time and in the manner and form in which it is entered.[17] Thus a power to confess judgment for rent due under a written lease cannot be construed as a power to confess judgment for rent due under an implied contract resulting from a holding over by the tenant, or for rent due under a subsequent agreement for renewal of the lease.[18] Under a joint warrant to confess judgment, a judgment can only be confessed against all the makers, and in case of the death of one, no judgment can be confessed against the survivors.[19] A warrant authorizing any attorney to appear and confess judgment does not give defendant the right to be heard before entry of judgemnt.[20] Where a warrant of attorney attached to a promissory note authorizes confession of judgment in favor of the holder, and judgment is confessed in favor of one not the legal or equitable owner of the note at the time of commencement of the suit, without service on or appearance of defendants, the judgment so entered is without due process of law,[21] and when suit is brought thereon in another state, it may be collaterally attacked, notwithstanding the full faith and credit clause of the constitution.[22] A surety on a judgment note who has paid the note on default of the principal may have judgment entered to his own use,[23] and such judgment cannot be attacked by the wife of the principal, without authority from the principal, and without interest in the note.[24] A provision in a promissory note authorizing confession of judgment before maturity makes the note nonnegotiable.[25] In Oregon an offer by defendant to allow judgment, served on plaintiff before trial, is deemed withdrawn if not accepted within three days, and cannot be used as evidence.[26]

Under the statute requiring affidavits for judgment on warrant of attorney to state the true consideration for the bond, and that the debt is justly due, judgment may be confessed on any actionable debt due at the time of confession, though not due at the date of giving the bond, provided such demand is supported by the same consideration as that which supports the bond.[27] Omission to state the consideration, or a false statement of it, in the affidavit, renders a judgment entered pursuant thereto a nullity;[28] but substantial truth in the statement of

A judgment is not entirely void because entered on a warrant of attorney for an excessive amount. Davenport v. Wright, 51 Pa. 292. The debtor only can complain that the judgment is excessive. A creditor cannot raise the objection. Adam v. Arnold, 86 Ill. 185. Judgment on note must be on note of same date as that described in warrant. Chase v. Dana, 44 Ill. 262. the consideration is sufficient.[29] The fact that time of payment has been extended does not prevent entry of such judgment.[30] Provided the indebtedness is unpaid, it is immaterial whether a right of action thereon has accrued or not.[31] A judgment on bond and warrant of attorney, entered for the amount of the penalty and in pursuance of the express direction of the warrant, is not illegal, though a part of the real debt had been collected by foreclosure of a mortgage given for the same debt.[32]

A judgment by consent is binding only on parties to the record.[33] A consent decree entered between two terms of court is a nullity,[34] and is not cured by a subsequent order in term time purporting to correct only an error in the description of one of the parties.[35] Courts of law exercise after the term equitable control over judgments by confession.[36] The opening of such judgments is largely discretionary.[37] A judgment by confession may be opened by the court in the exercise of its equitable powers, on the application of any defendant having a meritorious defense, whether or not codefendants join in the application.[38] A motion to open a judgment by confession questions the right of plaintiff to recover on the merits, and is a waiver of irregularities in procedure.[39] Under the Rhode Island statute providing that on failure of defendants to plead to bills or petitions in equity within the proper time, judgment may, on motion of complainants, be taken as confessed, and that a decree so entered shall be conclusive unless motion to set it aside is made in five days, the court has the same power to vacate a decree so entered as in the case of default or mistake, or in the case of decrees in equity cases.[40] In Illinois there can be no appeal from a judgment entered by confession, and a motion to dismiss such an appeal may be made at any time.[41]

NOTE. Extraterritorial effect of penal laws: It is a universally accepted rule of law that the courts of no country or state will execute the penal or criminal laws of another state or country. Such laws are strictly local, and affect nothing more than they can reach. Story's Conflict of Laws [8th ed.] § 620; The Antelope, 10 Wheat. [U. S.] 66, 123, 6 Law. Ed. 337; Flash v. Conn, 109 U. Miller, 25 Grat. [Va.] 331, 18 Am. Rep. 686. The difficulty is in determining what liabilities are in their nature penalties. A liability imposed by statute upon a certain class of persons, as, for instance, the officers or stockholders of a corporation, which is made dependent upon the contingency of their failing to perform some duty required by the statute, is in the nature of a penalty, and cannot be enforced beyond the jurisdiction of the state. E. 523), and the liability of the maker (Midland Steel Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 290), are determined by the law of the place of payment. An indemity insurance policy being executed, countersigned and payable in New York, is governed as to interest by the law of New York, although the policy may have been delivered in another state. Cudahy Packing Co. v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 132 F. 623. As to whether or not contract is usurious is to be determined by the law of the place where it is to be performed. Allen v. Riddle [Ala.] 37 So. 680.

Where is contract to be performed? Where a firm doing business in California and Costa Rica purchased goods in England through complainant, as a purchasing agent, under an agreement that complainant in England should advance the money for the purchase, and to prepay freight, insurance and other charges for a commission, complainant's contract was to be performed in England. Easton v. Wostenholm & Son [C. C. A.] 137 F. 524. Where residents of New York executed a bond to a resident of New Jersey, secured by a mortgage upon property in the latter state, and the mortgage was foreclosed in that state, the rights of the parties held governed by the laws of New Jersey. Stumpf v. Hallaham, 101 App. Div. 383, 91 N. Y. S. 1062.

NOTE. What law governs as to usury: The general principles governing this and other questions involved in the conflict of laws are: 1. That if a note or obligation was valid where it was made, and did not there conflict with any usury law, it is equally valid in any other state in which an action is brought upon it, or whenever it is otherwise sought to be enforced, though its payment was secured by a mortgage or other security upon lands situate in a state other than of its execution. Conner v. Donnell, 55 Tex. 174; De Wolf v. Johnson, 10 Wheat. [U. S.] 367, 6 Law. Ed. 343; Andrews v. Pond, 13 Pet. [U. S.] 65, 10 Law. Ed. 61; Miller v. Tiffany, 1 Wall. [U. S.] 298, 17 Law. Ed. 540; Jewell v. Wright, 30 N. Y. 259, 86 Am. Dec. 372; Davis v. Garr, 6 N. Y. 124, 55 Am. Dec. 387. 2. That if it offended the statute against usury in the state wherein it was executed and was payable it is subject to the penalties imposed by that statute, though the action upon it is in another state, by whose laws it would not have been usurious if executed therein. Clague v. Creditors, 2 La. 114, 20 Am. Dec. 300; Jewell v. Wright, 30 N. Y. 264, 86 Am. Dec. 362. 3. That if the obligation was made in one state, but was to be performed in another, the parties were at liberty to regard it as a contract of either state, and to stipulate for any rate of interest allowable in either. Peck v. Mayo, 14 Vt. 33, 39 Am. Dec. 205; McAllister v. Smith, 17 Ill. 328, 65 Am. Dec. 651; Chapman v. Robertson, 6 Paige [N. Y.] 627, 31 Am. Dec. 264; Kennedy v. Knight, 21 Wis. 340, 94 Am. Dec. 543; Depau v. Humphreys, 8 Mart. N. S. [La.] 1; Cromwell v. County of Sac, 96 U. S. 51, 24 Law. Ed. 681; Dugan v. Lewis, 79 Tex. 246, 23 Am. St. Rep. 332, 12 L. R. A. 93; Kilgore v. Dempsey, 25 Ohio St. 413, 18 Am. Rep. 306. And as a result of this rule the parties to a contract may make it payable, or otherwise stipulate for the performance of it, in a state other than that of its execution, and, when they do so, may agree to pay the highest rate of interest permissible in either state. Thornton v. Dean, 19 S. C. 583, 45 Am. Rep. 796; Wayne County Sav. Bank v. Low, 81 N. Y. 566, 37 Am. Rep. 533; Bigelow v. Burnham, 83 Iowa, 120, 32 Am. St. Rep. 294; Junction, etc., Co. v. Bank of Ashland, 12 Wall. [U. S.] 226, 20 Law. Ed. 385; Cockle v. Flack, 93 U. S. 344, 23 Law. Ed. 949; Cromwell v. County of Sac, 96 U. S. 51, 24 Law. Ed. 681; Tilden v. Blair, 21 Wall. [U. S.] 241, 22 Law. Ed. 632; Scott v. Perlee, 39 Ohio St. 63, 48 Am. Rep. 421. To this last proposition there is a vigorous dissent in some of the states, the courts of which maintain that their laws against usury will be constantly evaded and rendered ineffective if the parties to a contract are at liberty to designate the place of payment or performance and to stipulate for the highest rate of interest allowable at that place. Martin v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 481, 8 L. R. A. 170; Falls v. United States, etc., Co., 97 Ala. 417, 38 Am. St. Rep. 194, 24 L. R. A. 174. The proper answer to this argument is that mere shams and evasions are not permitted to counteract and annul the law, and where it appears that the purpose of the parties in making the obligation payable in another state was to depend upon the lex fori.[50] The rules being based upon the principal of comity,[51] the first two are inoperative when the law of such state is in conflict with that of the forum,[52] and a state legislature may by enactment so limit the rules.[53] These rules are not changed by the taking of foreign security.[54] The parties may by intent, expressed or implied, make the law of a place, other than that indicated by these rules, controlling.[55] A contract is made where one party unqualifiedly accepts the offer of the other.[56] The state where a promissory note is delivered is the place where it is made.[57] A bill of lading is governed by the laws of the state where issued.[58] As a general rule where an insurance policy must be countersigned by a local agent it is deemed to have been made in the state where it is so countersigned.[59] Goods being shipped to the purchaser, the sale occurs at the time and place of delivery to the carrier.[60] In North Carolina the place of delivery is the place of sale.[61] In considering statutes on this subject it should be remembered that the legislature has no power to arbitrarily fix the locus of a sale regardless of the rules of contract law.[62] evade the law against usury of the state in which it was executed, it will be regarded as infected with usury. Pratt v. Adams, 7 Paige [N. Y.] 615; Railroad Co. v. Bank of Ashland, 12 Wall. [U. S.] 226, 20 Law. Ed. 385; Andrews v. Pond, 13 Pet. [U. S.] 65, 10 Law. Ed. 61.—From note to Bank of Newport v. Cook [Ark.] 46 Am. St. Rep. 178, 201.

Complaint alleging that prior to and at the time of the execution of the contract the law of the foreign state was so and so, of the supreme court of such state may be read, considered and introduced in evidence when bearing upon questions of law involved in the case on trial.[98] Where it is sought in the trial court to prove the law of a sister state by the introduction of portions of the reports of the decisions of the courts of that state the opinions relied upon, or excerpts, therefrom, must be set forth in haec verba in the bill of exceptions in order that such proof may be before the appellate court.[99] Testimony of an attorney as to what he believed the law of another state to be is admissible.[1] In the absence of proof to the contrary, the law of a foreign state is presumed to be the same as the lex fori;[2] but this rule does not apply to positive statutory enactments.[3] In the absence of proof, it is presumed that the common-law rule exists in a sister state.[4] The common law of another state will be presumed to be the same as that of the state of the forum.[5]

§ 9. Torts.[6]—The right of action for a tort is governed by the law of the place where the cause of action arose.[7] The courts of a state have the power to enforce rights of action granted under foreign statutes.[8] But in such cases the right of action being unknown to the common law, the foreign statute must be pleaded, and the remedy prescribed by it must be pursued.[9] A right of action given by the statutes of another state will be enforced if the lex fori gives a similar right under the same state of facts.[10] It is not necessary that the statutes should be identical.[11]

CONSPIRACY.

§ 1. Civil liability.[12]—To constitute an actionable conspiracy there must be an agreement to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means, and acts pursuant thereto causing damage,[13] and such as would have given a cause of action against the doer without regard to conspiracy.[14] If neither object nor means are unlawful, a malicious motive does not make the combination actionable.[15] Concerted refusal to sell to a particular person is not actionable, however wrongful the motive.[16] A statute punishing such conspiracies is valid.[17] A conspiracy to drive one from business is actionable if unlawful means are used,[18] as is a conspiracy to procure one's employes to leave him.[19] One entering a conspiracy after it is formed is liable for all acts from the inception of the conspiracy.[20] A corporation may become a party to a conspiracy.[21] Husband and wife cannot between themselves be guilty of conspiracy.[22] Several injurious acts pursuant to a conspiracy form but one cause of action.[23] After proof of conspiracy, acts and declarations of each conspirator in furtherance of the common purpose are admissible against all;[24] but not those accruing after the purpose of the conspiracy is completed.[25] Reception of separate acts of alleged conspirators before prima facie proof of conspiracy rests in discretion.[26] Admissibility[27] and sufficiency of evidence of particular conspiracies is shown in the footnote.[28] Proof of an assault and battery by several entitles plaintiff to recover, without proof of an averment that it was pursuant to a conspiracy.[29]

§ 2. Criminal liability.[30]—The Illinois statute relating to conspiracy to do an act injurious to public trade did not abrogate the common law relating to conspiracy to fix prices.[31] A conspiracy to commit a crime is complete when the agreement is made and no overt act is essential.[32] Overt acts beyond the jurisdiction will sustain the charge.[33] Mere approval of an unlawful agreement without co-operation or agreement to co-operate does not constitute conspiracy.[34] Each member is liable for the acts of all after the combination is formed.[35] It is no defense to a charge of conspiracy to bribe a juror that the court had no jurisdiction of the case in which such juror was empanelled.[36] To constitute conspiracy to defraud the United States, the contemplated fraud need not be such as would itself be a violation of a penal statute,[37] nor is it necessary that the conspiracy should contemplate depriving the United States of money or property, but any fraudulent interference with its functions is within the statute.[38] Conspiracy for offering to the United States in exchange under act June 4, 1897, lands in which another had an equity is a conspiracy to defraud the United States under § 5440 Rev. St.[39] A conspiracy to induce one to bet and place property in the hands of a stakeholder is not a conspiracy to obtain title to the property.[40] A strike to compel an agreement for a closed shop is a conspiracy for an unlawful purpose.[41] A combination of producers to prevent competition in sale is unlawful irrespective of means.[42] A combination to control prices need not be formal or by written articles of association.[43] A tacit agreement without a formal contract is sufficient.[44] That a combination to fix prices did not result in a complete monopoly is no defense.[45]

lawful agreement which would result in fraud, need not allege intent to defraud.[47] An indictment for conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States must state as proposed all the legal elements of such offense.[48] An indictment for conspiracy to defraud the United States by causing a violation of a certain statute need not negative an exception in such statute.[49] An indictment is not double because it charges the commission of a felony pursuant to the conspiracy.[50] Where the statute forbids conspiracy to injure the business, property "or" rights of another an indictment in the conjunctive is good.[51] Overt acts need not be alleged with the same particularity as though they were the gist of the crime.[52] An averment that defendants fraudulently and maliciously conspired is sufficient under a statute prohibiting conspiracy "with fraudulent or malicious intent."[53] An indictment under the Anti-trust Act of 1891, relating to conspiracy by corporations need not allege that defendant corporation was organized to do business within the state.[54] Where the alleged object is unlawful, unlawful means need not be alleged.[55]

Variance.—The overt act is not conclusive as to the purpose of the conspiracy, and accordingly the fact that it varied from the purpose charged does not require an acquittal.[56] An indictment for conspiracy to cheat by false pretenses will not sustain a conspiracy to steal.[57]

Evidence.[58]—Conspiracy may be established by circumstantial evidence.[59] Where declarations are admitted on promise to supply proof of conspiracy, they should be stricken out if such proof is not made.[60]

This topic treats of the organic law of the nation and the states and of the distribution of power between them. Several of the clauses which relate to a specific and indivisible subject matter like "Commerce," "Jury" and "Rights of Persons Accused of Crime" are treated in topics which are specifically devoted to such subjects.[61]

§ 1. Adoption and amendment of constitutions.[62]—A court cannot inquire into the legality of a constitution to which it owes its own life and existence;[63] but the regularity of the adoption of amendments may be questioned,[64] and whether an amendment has been regularly proposed, adopted and ratified, is a question for the courts and not for the political department of the government.[65]

Amendments [66] are usually required to be passed upon by the legislature acting with certain formalities similar to those prescribed for the enactment of statutes,[67] and publication of the proposed amendment, and its submission to the electors under certain restrictions as to form and subject-matter, are generally provided for,[68] though popular adoption will generally cure any purely technical defect in the proceedings.[69] Proposed amendments to particular sections must be germane to the sections amended, though amendments to a constitution as a whole may embrace matters not mentioned in the original.[70] A majority of the electors voting upon the question is generally sufficient for its adoption.[71]

§ 2. Operative force and effect.[72]—Constitutions do not operate retrospectively,[73] or extra-territorially,[74] and laws in force at the time of adoption of a constitution and not in conflict therewith continue of force until expressly repealed.[75] Statutes in conflict are repealed by implication.[76] A treaty cannot supersede the Federal constitution.[77]

Self-executing provisions [78] are those which require no further legislation in order that the right given may be enjoyed and protected, or that the duty imposed may be enforced.[79] Provisions limiting the indebtedness of municipalities,[80] determining the tenure of officers appointed to fill vacancies,[81] and those contained in the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the Federal constitution,[82] have been construed as self-executing. The contrary is said of a provision authorizing the mayors of cities to suspend and remove police officers.[83]

§ 3. Interpretation and exposition. A. When called for.[84]—Courts refuse to pass on the constitutionality of a statute unless absolutely necessary to a decision of the case,[85] and cannot attempt, prior to an actual controversy, to pass upon the validity of provisions that may never be properly questioned.[86] Thus, the validity of a statute cannot be questioned by one to whom it has no application,[87] or who is not injured by it,[88] or who has voluntarily complied with it,[89] or invoked its provisions,[90] or who may avail himself of its provisions or not as he elects,[91] or who has waived his rights.[92] Whether a statute would be unconstitutional under a construction that has not been given it will not be decided.[93]

Objections to a statute must point out what provision of the constitution is violated,[94] the manner of its violation,[95] and the objector must show facts sufficient to bring himself within the protection of the clause invoked.[93] In order that an appellate court may pass upon a constitutional question, it must generally have been properly raised below,[97] decided adversely to appellant,[98] and fully argued on appeal.[99] The constitutionality of the statute or ordinance under which a conviction was had cannot be tested by habeas corpus.[1]

(§ 3) B. General rules of interpretation. Constitutions.[2]—The words in constitutions must be regarded as being used in their natural sense[3] and to mean what they say,[4] and technical words are given their technical meaning unless clearly used otherwise,[5] though the intention of the framers must prevail, whatever the language used to express it.[6] All parts relating to the same subject must be construed together, and every part, if possible, rendered effective.[7] The position of an article in the instrument is not controlling.[8] Conditions, existing when the constitution was adopted,[9] debates of the members of the convention framing it,[10] and contemporaneous construction by co-ordinate branches of the government,[11] are resorted to in aid of doubtful provisions,[12] though where the language is plain there is no room for construction.[13] A provision adopted from a particular state brings its construction with it,[14] but not if the same provision is found in several constitutions and has received varying constructions.[15] That the validity of a constitutional amendment is not free from doubt is of itself a sufficient reason for sustaining it.[16]

Federal courts usually follow the state court's interpretation of the state constitution,[17] and the state courts are bound to follow the supreme court of the Decisions of the supreme court of a state construing and applying a constitutional amendment are not conclusive on the Federal courts on the question of its proper proposal and adoption. Knight v. Shelton, 134 F. 423. The Federal court is not bound to follow the local construction in respect to a right ac-

United States in interpreting the Federal constitution.[18] Limitations imposed for the protection of the people, or a minority of them are not to be regarded as penal, but as remedial, and are to be so construed as to afford the protection contemplated.[19]

Statutes violative of the constitution[20] in the least degree are unenforceable it being unquestionably the duty of the courts to give effect to the organic law as the supreme will of the people.[21] Enactments against the spirit of the constitution may be declared void, though not expressly prohibited in the instrument.[22] The courts are not at liberty, however, to set a statute aside on the ground of natural justice and right,[23] or public policy,[24] nor can they inquire into its wisdom,[25] the manner in which favorable consideration was obtained for it,[26] or the motives of the legislature in passing it,[27] the courts being bound to assume that the legislature acted in good faith and with a desire to promote the public good.[28] A statutory construction law is only applicable when not inconsistent with the general object of a subsequent statute, or the context of the language construed, or other provision of the repealing law indicating a different intent.[29]

Every presumption favors the validity of a statute,[30] a reasonable doubt as to its constitutionality being sufficient to sustain it.[31] Doubtful statutes are so construed if possible as to harmonize them with the constitution,[32] and both the statute cruing prior to that construction. Wicomico County Com'rs v. Bancroft [C. C. A.] 135 F. 977; City of Sioux Falls v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 136 F. 721.

A statute will not unnecessarily be given a retroactive effect where the result would be to invalidate it as impairing the obligation of contracts (Condon v. Eureka Springs, 135 F. 566), or interfering with vested rights (King v. Irving, 92 N. Y. S. 1094; Investment Co. v. Hambach, 37 Wash. 629, 80 P. 190). In Rev. St. § 2813, providing for the per diem of county commission-and the constitution will be liberally construed in favor of the validity of legislative action;[33] but the court cannot give a statute for the purpose of sustaining it a construction which its language forbids.[34] A statute unobjectionable but for an unjust exemption or discrimination may be sustained by extending the exemption to all persons.[35] The validity of a statute is to be tested, not by what may possibly be attempted, but by what it authorizes to be done.[36]

A statute containing invalid provisions yields only to the extent of its repugnancy to the constitution,[37] and a part may be unconstitutional without rendering the whole statute bad,[38] if the invalid part is so independent of the remainder that it may be eliminated without rendering the whole ineffective,[39] unless the invalid portion was manifestly the inducement for the passage of the remainder.[40] The presumptions, however, favor the unconstitutionality of the remaining portions,[41] and where the unconstitutional portion is essentially and inseparably connected in substance with that which is constitutional, the whole must be rejected.[42]

Scope of Federal and state power.[43]—The government of the United States exercises only granted powers,[44] while the state legislatures exercise all powers not expressly prohibited by the Federal or state constitution.[45] A grant of power implies also the grant of all others necessary to make it effectual.[46]

The court cannot consider evidence aliunde,[47] but is confined to the consideration of the law itself, and the material facts of which the court can take judicial notice.[46]

Where the words of a statute are plain,[49] no construction is permissible.[50] Every word must be given its due force and effect,[51] and all parts construed together and harmonized,[52] with all other statutes in pari materia if possible.[53] A construction leading to an absurdity [54] or that would aid evasions of the statute is not favored.[55]

A statute copied from a similar statute of another state[56] is presumed to be adopted with reference to its prior construction, but the presumption is not conclusive,[57] and is never indulged where the same statute exists in several states and has been varyingly interpreted.[58]

A proviso[59] is considered strictly and takes no case out of the enacting clause not fairly within its terms.[60]

NOTE. Eight hour law. Health regulations: Application for habeas corpus to be discharged from imprisonment for violation of St. of 1903, p. 33, c. 10, making it a penal offense for any man to work more than eight hours a day in underground mines, smelters and all institutions for the reduction or refining of ores and metals. Petitioner contends that the law contravenes the constitutional provision guaranteeing the right to acquire and possess property and the fourteenth amendment of the United States constitution. Held, that the law was sustainable under the police power of the state. Ex parte Kair [Nev.] 80 P. 463.

A number of interesting cases have arisen lately in many of the states in regard to the constitutionality of the eight-hour laws, and the decisions are not harmonious. Eight-hour laws, applied indiscriminately to all trades, are seemingly unreasonable, and the numerous authorities holding them void are supported by strong arguments; but, when they are to apply to workmen in underground works or other obnoxious places or to women or children, another proposition confronts us. The state may within its police power look after the health, safety and comfort of its citizens. This has been recognized in many states by upholding the validity of statutes like the present. State v. Holden, 14 Utah, 71; Id., 96, 37 L. R. A. 108, afd. Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 Law. Ed. 780; State v. Cantwell, 179 Mo. 245; State v. Buchanan, 29 Wash. 602, 92 Am. St. Rep. 930, 59 L. R. A. 342; In re Boyce, 27 Nev. 299, 65 L. R. A. 47; Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 120 Mass. 383; Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 Law. Ed. 148. The only state, perhaps, that holds the eight-hour law, as applied to miners, invalid, is Colorado. In re Eight-Hour Bill, 21 Colo. 29; In re Morgan, 26 Colo. 415, 77 Am. St. Rep. 269, 47 L. R. A. 52. This last case holds that the decision of the United States supreme court on the constitutionality of eight-hour laws is not binding upon the state courts.—3 Mich. L. R. 663.

Interstate commerce cannot be interferred with under the guise of the police power. State v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 455. Arbitrary extension of limits within which gas works are prohibited while works are in process of construction on property bought for that purpose evidently to perpetuate a monopoly. Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 49 Law. Ed. 169; Daly v. Elton, 195 U. S. 242, 49 Law. Ed. 177. It is not competent either for the legislature or for a municipality, under the guise of the exercise of the police power, to impose unequal burdens upon individual citizens. Act of congress requiring removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks of the District of Columbia by the occupants of improved property. McGuire v. District of Columbia, 24 App. D. C. 22. A legislative determination as to what is necessary to protect public health unless clearly oppressive and without relation to the mischief intended to be corrected is conclusive on the courts. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 Law. Ed. 643.

16. State v. Robb [Me.] 60 A. 874; City of Richmond v. Caruthers, 103 Va. 774, 50 S. E. 265. The only question that can be raised respecting a license fee imposed under the police power is whether it is reasonable. Braddock Borough v. Allegheny Co. Tel. Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 544. The burden is on the party assailing it to show that it is unreasonable. Kittanning Borough v. Kittanning Consolidated Nat. Gas Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 355. The question is primarily for the legislature and ultimately for the courts. Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. Edwardsville [Ala.] 38 So. 1016. It is not the hardship of the individual case that determines the reasonableness of a police regulation, but rather its general scope and effect in protecting the health and promoting the welfare of the community at large. Tenement House Dept. v. Moeschen, 179 N. Y. 325, 72 N. E. 231. A fine of not less than $25 nor more than $200, or imprisonment not less than ten nor more than sixty days for violating an ordinance prohibiting the entertainment of women in saloons is not unreasonable. State v. Nelson [Idaho] 79 P. 79. An ordinance prohibiting public meetings on the streets except as authorized by municipal authority is not unreasonable. Fitts v. Atlanta, 121 Ga. 567, 49 S. E. 793. Fee for factory inspection held reasonable. State v. Vickens, 186 Mo. 103, 84 S. W. 908.

17. The true purpose of the police power is the preservation of the health, morals and safety of the community, and a law or ordinance interfering with personal or property rights to be sustained must appear to have been enacted for one of these purposes. City of Chicago v. The Gunning System, 114 Ill. App. 377. Statute requiring all fiduciary agents to give surety company bonds held invalid as not promoted by considerations of public necessity or public welfare. State v. Robins, 71 Ohio St. 273, 73 N. E. 470.

W. 172. City may be authorized to license saloons beyond its boundaries. Jordan v. Evansville, 163 Ind. 512, 72 N. E. 544. The regulation and control of electric light companies in respect to their use of streets and the erection and construction of appliances is within the police power generally delegated by the state to municipal corporations. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Rose, 214 Ill. 545, 73 N. E. 780.

19. Tax on business of trading stamps held clearly intended to be prohibitory and therefore void as unduly restrictive of the right to engage in a lawful business. In re Hutchinson, 137 F. 949. Ordinance is void which makes it unlawful to sell merchandise by means of sale of trading stamps for distribution by merchants with their sales. Id., 137 F. 950; City Council of Montgomery v. Kelly [Ala.] 38 So. 67; State v. Merchants' Trading Co. [La.] 38 So. 443. Prohibition of trading stamp business held an unwarranted interference with legitimate business. People v. Zimmerman, 102 App. Div. 103, 92 N. Y. S. 497. A statute requiring surety company bonds of all fiduciary agents is an undue restriction on the liberty of contract. State v. Robins, 71 Ohio St. 273, 73 N. E. 470. A statute requiring all who contract about erecting buildings to secure their contracts by bonds to enure to the benefit of all who furnish materials to be used in the building is unreasonable. Montague & Co. v. Furness, 145 Cal. 205, 78 P. 640. See 3 C. L. 752, n. 4. A statute prohibiting the payment of laborers by any order or evidence of indebtedness not redeemable in money is invalid as interfering with the right of contract. Leach v. Missouri Tie & Timber Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 579. An ordinance requiring that all dressed stone used in municipal work be dressed within the state does not interfere with the right to enjoy the gains of industry. Allen v. Labsap [Mo.] 87 S. W. 926. Malicious mischief is a familiar and proper subject for legislative repression as are also combinations for the purpose of inflicting it. And liberty to combine to inflict such mischief even upon such intangibles as business or reputation is not among the rights the fourteenth amendment was intended to protect. Aikens v. Wisconsin, 195 U. S. 194, 49 Law. Ed. 154. Combinations in restraint of trade may be controlled. Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U. S. 447, 49 Law. Ed. 546. The limitation of the hours bakers and confectioners shall work is unreasonable. Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 Law. Ed. 937.

20. See 3 C. L. 750.

21. A municipal ordinance defining garbage as in this case, and forbidding its removal through the streets by others than the city contractor, or the placing of it upon private property, contravenes the fourteenth amendment of the Federal constitution. Bauer v. Casey, 26 Ohio C. C. 598, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 69. A statute requiring that a city to be liable for injuries from a defective sidewalk must have had written notice of the defect is bad as taking away the right of action altogether, and destroying a property right. Actual notice is sufficient. MacMullen v. Middletown, 92 N. Y. S. 410. A statute regulating the hours of labor in mines, smelters and ore mills does not interfere. Ex parte Kair [Nev.] 80 P. 463.

See 3 C. L. 750.

22. See 3 C. L. 753.

23. Free speech is not curtailed by an ordinance prohibiting public meetings on streets except as authorized by the municipal authorities. Fitts v. Atlanta, 121 Ga. 667, 49 S. E. 793. The power of a court to punish one for a contempt consisting of a libelous article published in a newspaper is no invasion of the liberty of the press. Burdett v. Com. [Va.] 48 S. E. 878. The law will not permit the right of privacy to be asserted in such a way as to curtail or restrain freedom of speech or of the press. The one may be used to keep the other within due bounds, but neither can lawfully be used to destroy the other. Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 68.

24. The publication of the picture of a person without his consent as a part of an advertisement for the purpose of exploiting the publisher's business is in no sense an exercise of the liberty of the press, but is a violation of the right of privacy of the person whose picture is reproduced, and entitles him to recover without proof of special damage. Dissenting opinion in Roberson v. Rochester Folding-Box Co., 171 N. Y. 540, 64 N. E. 442, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, 59 L. R. A. 478, approved. Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 68.

25. See 3 C. L. 753. A statute prohibiting the marriage of epileptics is not invalid as an interference with the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Gould v. Gould [Conn.] 61 A. 604. The arrest of employes of a telephone and telegraph office where news of races is collected and the seizure of the instruments and books thereof without knowledge or information by the officers that any violation of law had been committed is an unwarranted invasion of personal rights. People v. Breen, 44 Misc. 375, 89 N. Y. S. 998. A statute prohibiting the giving of Christian Science treatment for a fee does not abridge rights of conscience and worship. State v. Marble [Ohio] 73 N. E. 1063. The Federal statute denouncing peonage is authorized by the thirteenth amendment. Clyatt v. U. S., 197 U. S. 207, 49 Law. Ed. 726.

Personal liberty includes not only freedom from physical restraint but also the right "to be let alone;" to determine one's mode of life, whether it shall be a life of publicity or privacy, and to order one's life and manage one's affairs in a manner that may be most agreeable to him so long as he does not violate the rights of others or of the public. Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 68. Personal liberty is not infringed by a requirement of vaccination as a condition of remaining in a certain town. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 Law. Ed. 643.

Personal security includes the right to exist, and the right to the enjoyment of life while existing, and is invaded not only by a deprivation of life, but also by a deprivation of those things which are necessary to the enjoyment of life according to the nature, temperament and lawful desires of the individual. Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 68.

the absolute rights of personal security and personal liberty. Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 68. The right of privacy is derived from natural law, recognized by municipal law, and its existence can be inferred from expressions used by commentators and writers on the law as well as judges in decided cases. Id. Liberty of speech and of the press when exercised within the bounds of the constitutional guaranties are limitations upon the exercise of the right of privacy. Id.

26. See 3 C. L. 754. A plumber's law requiring all members of a partnership to be registered whether they have anything to do with the actual work or not is unduly restrictive. Schnaier v. Navarre Hotel & Importation Co. [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 561.

27. See 3 C. L. 754. A commitment for contempt for failing to comply with an order requiring the payment for money is not imprisonment for debt within the meaning of the constitution. Perry v. Pernet [Ind.] 74 N. E. 609.

28. Lamar v. Prosser, 121 Ga. 153, 48 S. E. 977. Clothing furnished one during imprisonment and unpaid for may be used as a basis for further imprisonment. Ex parte Diggs [Miss.] 38 So. 730.

29. See 3 C. L. 755.

30. Probably all of the state constitutions guaranty equal protection in terms as broad as the fourteenth amendment. Ohio Bill of Rights, § 2, providing that all political power is inherent in the people and that government is instituted for their equal protection and benefit. Kane v. Erie R. Co. [C. C. A.] 133 F. 681; State v. Robins, 71 Ohio St. 273, 73 N. E. 470. Special privileges or immunities cannot be granted in Indiana. Board of Com'rs v. Lindemann [Ind.] 73 N. E. 912.

31. Equal protection of the laws is not denied by a statute requiring vaccination as a condition of attending the public schools. Viemeister v. White, 179 N. Y. 235, 72 N. E. 97. See 3 C. L. 756, n. 61. The fourteenth amendment, which expressly declares that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, does not purport to extend to authority exercised by the United States. But it does not follow that congress in exercising its power of legislation within and for the District of Columbia may therefore deny to persons residing therein the equal protection of the laws. All of the guaranties of the constitution respecting life, liberty and property are equally for the benefit and protection of all citizens of the United States residing permanently or temporarily within the District of Columbia as of those residing in the several states. Imposition of licenee tax on brokers. Lappin v. District of Columbia, 22 App. D. C. 68.

32. The fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the Federal constitution have reference solely to acts of the state and have no reference to acts of individuals. Ex parte Riggins, 134 F. 404. See 3 C. L. 755, n. 52. The assessment by a state board of the property of a railroad company at a higher percentage of its actual value than other property assessed, in violation of the state constitution and without statutory authority and contrary to law as declared by the supreme court of the state, is not an act of the state within the equal protection clause. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 132 F. 629. Law requiring surety company bonds held invalid or exempting officers giving bonds of less than $2,000. State v. Robins, 71 Ohio St. 273, 73 N. E. 470. A statute prohibiting the taking of fish and game by nonresidents is unequal in so far as it prevents nonresidents from using their own land as residents do. State v. Mallory [Ark.] 83 S. W. 955.

33. It is unnecessary that a statute passed in exercise of the police power shall apply equally and uniformly on all citizens; it need apply only to all of the same class. Wright v. Hart, 103 App. Div. 218, 93 N. Y. S. 60. A statute which contains inequalities in fact cannot be upheld on the theory of classification where the lines of division between persons or classes appear clearly to have no just relation to the subject-matter. Sellers v. Hayes, 163 Ind. 422, 72 N. E. 119. That a law prohibiting school sinks in tenement houses applies only to cities of the first class does not invalidate it. Tenement House Dept. v. Moeschen, 179 N. Y. 325, 72 N. E. 231. Railroads may be required to carry school children at half fare. Commonwealth v. Interstate Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 530. Salary law held operative on all of a certain class of sheriffs and for that reason unobjectionable. Board of Com'rs v. Lindemann [Ind.] 73 N. E. 912. A statute regulating the use of automobiles on the highway is not assailable as class legislation. Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035. A Jewish applicant for a public position is not discriminated against by holding the examination therefor on Saturday which is his Sabbath. Cohn v. Townsend, 94 N. Y. S. 817. An arbitrary discrimination is not made by an ordinance that prohibits public meetings on the streets except as authorized by municipal authority. Fitts v. Atlanta, 121 Ga. 567, 49 S. E. 793. An exception in a vaccination law in favor of children certified by physicians to be unfit for vaccination does not require a similar exception in favor of adults. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 Law. Ed. 643. An ordinance requiring that all dressed stone used in municipal work be dressed in the state does not deny equal protection of the law. Allen v. Labsap [Mo.] 87 S. W. 926.

and licenses,[34] and providing for taxation,[35] local improvements,[36] regulations of business, trades and professions,[37] and the operation of railroads,[38] are sustained.

34. See 3 C. L. 756. Vehicle license ordinance held not unjustly discriminative between residents and nonresidents. Sterling v. Bowling Green, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 217, 26 Ohio C. C. 581. A statute regulating the practice of medicine and providing also for the licensing of practioners of osteopathy is not invalid because not also providing for Christian Scientists. State v. Marble [Ohio] 73 N. E. 1063. Horseshoers cannot be compelled to take out licenses. In in Aubrey, 36 Wash. 388, 78 P. 900. An exemption from a liquor law of wines produced from grapes grown in the state while in the hands of the producers or manufacturers is not unequal. Douthit v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 352; Id. [Tex.] 83 S. W. 795; McLaury v. Watelsky [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 404, 87 S. W. 1045. A factory inspection law applying to all factories in the state is not assailable as discriminating between those in the city and those in the country. State v. Vickens, 186 Mo. 103, 84 S. W. 908. A license tax on occupations is not invalid because it excepts professional men called to the city to attend to some specific matter. Evers v. Mayfield [Ky.] 85 S. W. 697. A statute against peddling but exempting resident merchants is invalid. Ex parte Deeds [Ark.] 87 S. W. 1030. An exception from a cigarette license tax in favor of wholesale dealers doing an interstate business does not invalidate it. Cook v. Marshall County, 196 U. S. 261, 49 Law. Ed. 471.

35. See 3 C. L. 757. The fourteenth amendment was not designed to enforce uniformity of taxation (St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 132 F. 629), or compel the states to adopt an iron rule of uniformity (Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 F. 223). There may be classification, and different rates may be imposed on different classes. It is enough that there is no discrimination in favor of one as against another of the same class and that the method for the assessment and collection of the tax is not inconsistent with natural justice. Id., citing many cases. That railroads are assessed by a state board as a whole and the assessment divided among the counties through which they run pro rata per mile, while other property is locally assessed, does not discriminate. Fire Ins. Co. v. Omaha [Neb.] 101 N. W. 3. The Federal constitution does not forbid the taxation of the franchise of a domestic corporation at a different rate than is levied upon the tangible property of the state. Coulter v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 196 U. S. 599, 49 Law. Ed. 615. A tax on the managing agent of a nonresident packing company does not deny him the equal protection of the laws where it is imposed alike on the agents of foreign and domestic companies. Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 49 Law. Ed. 663; Smith v. Clark [Ga.] 50 S. E. 480. A street railroad is not denied the equal protection of the laws because taxed a fixed sum per mile of track for the privilege of doing business, and the use of the streets and steam railroads are not similarly taxed, though they do switching within the city limits and receive pay for it. Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Savannah, 198 U. S. 392, 49 Law. Ed. 1097. Equal protection of the law is not denied by a law taxing public service franchises that exempts subsurface railroads, or that provides for a deduction of the amount annually paid by same holders for their franchises. Building and loan association law held valid. Cramer v. Southern Ohio Loan & Trust Co. [Ohio] 74 N. E. 200. A statute licensing peddlers is not bad for exempting manufacturers, farmers, mechanics, and nurserymen selling their own wares. People v. De Blaay [Mich.] 100 N. W. 598. A statute regulating instalment investment companies but exempting building and loan associations, savings banks, etc., as to which other statutes are effective, does not discriminate. State v. Northwestern Trust Co. [Neb.] 101 N. W. 14. Grazing on the public lands of the United States within the limits of the state may be regulated. Spencer v. Morgan [Idaho] 79 P. 459. Statute prohibiting sales of commodities on margins but exempting purchasers in the ordinary course of business does not discriminate unlawfully. State v. McGinnis [N. C.] 51 S. E. 50. A statute to regulate smoke nuisances is not unreasonable because it makes proof that no known device will prevent it a defense, nor because it exempts locomotives and steamboats. State v. Tower, 185 Mo. 79, 84 S. W. 10.

Criminal laws and procedure,[39] and civil remedies and proceedings,[40] are unassailable unless unequally oppressive as to particular persons.

§ 11. Privileges and immunities of citizens.[41]—Those sections and amendments of the Federal constitution, guaranteeing the civil rights of the citizens of the several states and the United States, operate only on discriminations by the states in their sovereign capacity, and not upon the acts of individuals,[42] and the rights, privileges and immunities which the fourteenth amendment and statutes for its enforcement were designed to protect are such as belong to citizens of the United States as such, and not as citizens of the state.[43] Congress has power to legislate for the protection of such rights.[44] The right to sell intoxicating liquors

44. NOTE. Interference With Civil Rights. Power of Congress to Enforce the Fourteenth Amendment: Petition for discharge on habeas corpus, on the ground that the indictment under which petitioner is held does not charge any offense against the United States. Petitioner is indicted under Rev. St., §§ 5508, 5509 (making it a penal offense for any person to interfere with the rights guaranteed by the constitution and laws of the United States), for conspiring to injure and for murdering in the prosecution of the conspiracy, a colored citizen, accused of a crime, in order to prevent his trial by the Alabama courts. Held, that it is within the powers of congress to make laws for the enforcement of the rights guaranteed by the 14th Amendment. Ex parte Riggins, 134 F. 404.

The question presented in this case is a most interesting one, and the decision of the court seemingly correct. There is no doubt that the rights guaranteed by the 14th amendment were intended to be enforceable in some way, and § 5 of that amendment as well as the implied powers clause, show that intention. In Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 29 Law. Ed. 746, the supreme court laid down the rule that constitutional provisions for the security of persons and property should be liberally construed. In the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. [U. S.] 36, 71, 21 Law. Ed. 394, 407, it is said, as to the last three amendments, "one prevading purpose is found in them all, and lying at the foundation of each, and without which none of them would have been even suggested; we mean the freedom of the slave race, the security and firm establishment of that freedom, and the protection of the rights of the newly made freeman and citizen from the oppression of those who had previously unlimited dominion over them." In United States v. Cruikshank, 1 Woods, 308, Fed. Cas. No. 14,897, afd. 92 U. S. 542, 23 Law. Ed. 588, it was held that congress had power to enforce the 14th amendment by making any violations of it a punishable offense, and the same doctrine has been supported by the following cases: Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. [U. S.] 539, is not one of the privileges or immunities attaching to citizenship in the United States,[45] and a corporation is not a citizen within this section.[46] A state statute extending a certain special privilege to citizens of the state is not for that reason invalid, the constitution being effective to extend it also to the citizens of the several states.[47]

§ 12. Grants of special privileges and immunities; class legislation.[48] Whether or not classifications of municipalities are reasonable or unjust and arbitrary generally arises with reference to whether statutes infringe the provisions against local and special laws. This question is elsewhere treated.[49] The fourteenth amendment is satisfied if all persons similarly situated are treated alike,[50] and a law which is uniform in its operation is not rendered invalid merely because of the limited number of persons who will be affected by it.[51]

Licenses, and privilege and occupation taxes[52] are unassailable unless raising invidious distinctions.[53]

Taxation.[54]—The subjects of taxation may be classified so long as the classification is reasonable.[55]

Regulations of business, trades and professions[56] are upheld unless unfairly oppressive of particular individuals or classes.[57]

Railroad companies[58] can properly be invested with special privileges,[50] and

68. Rev. St. § 6451, providing that in condemnation proceedings the jury fees shall be paid by the corporation as part of the costs, imposes no burden upon one suitor or class of suitors from which others similarly situated are exempt, and does not therefore violate Ohio Const. art. II., § 26. Cincinnati, etc., Traction Co. v. Felix, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 270, 25 Ohio C. C. 393. A statute merely bringing a previously exempted class of judgments under the general limitation law is not invalid as class legislation. Wooster v. Bateman, 126 Iowa, 552, 102 N. W. 521.

69. See 3 C. L. 765. The obligation of a contract is not impaired by a statute which authorizes the condemnation by one railroad company of shares of stock in another for the purpose of effecting a merger of connecting lines. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Offield, 77 Conn. 417, 59 A. 510. There is no impairment of contract in a law that provides for forfeiture of good time when a convict is again convicted of crime during the period of his first sentence. Ex parte Russell, 92 N. Y. S. 68. A law reducing the interest rate on redemption of land from sale on execution is valid. Welsh v. Cross [Cal.] 81 P. 229. A statute providing that all rules, by-laws, etc., meant to be part of insurance contracts, must be attached to the policy, applies to a by-law adopted after the policy is issued, and so construed the statute is not violative of the obligation of the contract. Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Hunziker [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1134.

What is a contract: The obligation of a contract is not terminated by the rendition of a judgment thereon, and a statute of limitations unduly restrictive of the right to enforce a judgment may impair. Lamb v. Powder River Live Stock Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 434. A contract between the state and a municipality that has expired for laches of 30 years cannot be impaired. Wheelwright v. Boston [Mass.] 74 N. E. 937. Where the state constitution provides against the annulling or impairing of any grant made by the King of Great Britain before the Revolution, such a grant is a contract the obligation of which cannot be impaired by the state. Trustees of Brookhaven v. Smith, 98 App. Div. 212, 90 N. Y. S. 646.

70. The power of a municipality corporation to levy taxes enters into its contracts and cannot be restricted to the injury of its existing creditors. Statute reducing assessments. City of Ft. Madison v. Ft. Madison Water Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 214. A withdrawal of the taxing power stipulated to be used in favor of municipal bonds is invalid. City of Austin v. Cahill [Tex.] 88 S. W. 542. A county officer's salary law which does not attempt to take away salaries already earned, or diminish or increase them, but merely changes the conditions for their payment in full, does not impair the obligation of contracts. Board of Com'rs v. Lindemann [Ind.] 73 N. E. 912. Limitation on taxing power held not to impair contracts of county bondholders. Desha County v. State [Ark.] 84 S. W. 625. See 3 C. L. 768.

71. The state cannot bargain away its right to exercise at all times its police power (Erie City v. Erie Elec. Motor Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 77; Braddock Borough v. Allegheny County Tel. Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 544; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. New Orleans Drainage Commission, 197 U. S. 453, 49 Law. Ed. 831), nor can a municipality to which is delegated the state's police power over streets and highways enter into any contract by which the free exercise of the power granted can be abridged, limited or destroyed (Erie City v. Erie Elec. Motor Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 77; Braddock Borough v. Allegheny County Tel. Co., 25 Pa. Super.

Regulations of remedies,[75] merely, are enforceable, provided they do not materially impair vested rights.[76]

§ 14. Retroactive legislation; vested rights.[77]—Save under those constitutions which forbid retroactive laws, they may be passed so long as other constitutional limitations are untouched.[78]

Ct. 544). An exemption of a railroad from taxation is a contract that cannot be abrogated by the state. Wicomico County Com'rs v. Bancroft [C. C. A.] 135 F. 977; Bennett v. Nichols [Ariz.] 80 P. 392; Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Powers, 138 F. 264. Reasonable regulations passed in pursuance of a reserved power of amendment do not impair. People v. Rose, 207 Ill. 352, 69 N. E. 762. Exemptions from taxation may be repealed under reserved powers of amendment. City of Rochester v. Rochester R. Co., 98 App. Div. 521, 91 N. Y. S. 87. Where there is no reserved power of amendment, there can be no change in rates without notice or hearing. City of Rushville v. Rushville Nat. Gas Co. [Ind.] 73 N. E. 87. Where a railroad's charter authorized it to condemn land under the general law which did not require notice to the landowner, an amendment to the law requiring notice did not impair the charter, being merely of the remedy. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Abbott, 215 Ill. 416, 74 N. E. 412. A statute providing for the assessment of the value and purchase of dissenting minority stockholder's shares on a merger of railroads does not impair. Spencer v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 137 N. C. 107, 49 S. E. 96; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Offield, 77 Conn. 417, 59 A. 510. A statute conferring exclusive powers on a local corporation that have heretofore been exercised by a foreign corporation does not impair the obligation of contracts. National Council Junior Order U. A. M. v. State Council Junior Order U. A. M. [Va.] 51 S. E. 166. A city has no contract rights with respect to the burdens of street repairs which it imposes on street railroads as a condition of their occupancy of the streets which will interfere with the right of the legislature to relieve street railroads from such obligations. City of Worcester v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co., 196 U. S. 539, 49 Law. Ed. 591.

Impairment of contracts with Corporations, see Clark & M. Corp. §§ 270, 271. See 3 C. L. 768.

72. Street railway franchise. Cleveland Elec. R. Co. v. Cleveland, 135 F. 368. A municipality has no power to contract away its taxing or police power. City of Rochester v. Rochester R. Co. [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 953. Immunity in street railway franchise from paying for pavement between tracks is not contractual and does not prevent city from requiring company to pay for its share of pavement subsequently laid. Id.; Marshalltown Light, Power & R. Co. v. Marshalltown [Iowa] 103 N. W. 1005. The imposition on a gas company of the cost of changing the location of its pipes made necessary by the installation of an improved system of drainage does not impair its contract rights. New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Drainage Commission of New Orleans, 197 U. S. 453, 49 Law. Ed. 831. No contract right is impaired by the levy of a franchise tax on the holders of public franchises who have paid either a lump sum for their franchises or who pay a stated sum annually therefor. People of State of New York v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 1, 50 Law. Ed. ----; Id., 199 U. S. 48, 50 Law. Ed. ----. See 3 C. L. 769.

Vested rights[79] including contract rights,[80] interests in realty,[81] and in some instances defenses to actions,[82] cannot be diminished.

Taxes, licenses and public rights.[83]—Taxes cannot be levied retrospectively,[84] but a healing act confined to matters which the legislature might previously have authorized or omitted is valid,[85] and reassessment[86] and regulations of procedure may be provided.[87] Licenses may be withdrawn,[88] and the conditions of obtaining them changed.[89]

Laws affecting corporations[90] are sustained if not retroactive on vested rights.[91]

Mfg. Co., 77 Conn. 528, 60 A. 132. Statutes of limitation may be retrospective provided contracts or vested rights are not impaired. Edelstein v. Carlile [Colo.] 78 P. 680.

79. See 3 C. L. 770. A city has no vested right in a statute authorizing it to call in outstanding warrants. Condon v. Eureka Springs, 135 F. 566. A statutory right of one county of the state to recover of another for the support of an indigent insane person is not a vested right, even as to support furnished before its repeal. Jefferson County v. County of Oswego, 102 App. Div. 232, 92 N. Y. S. 709. The objection of a land grant railroad that an act of congress interferes with its vested rights is waived by its acceptance of the act. Humbird v. Avery, 195 U. S. 480, 49 Law. Ed. 286.

80. See ante, § 13. Contract rights acquired under a prior interpretation of a statute cannot be divested by a subsequent reversal of that interpretation. Municipal bonds issued under a law first held valid and subsequently held invalid. Rees v. Olmsted [C. C. A.] 135 F. 296. Federal court is not bound to folow local construction of a statute with respect to a right accruing prior to that construction. Wicomico County Com'rs v. Bancroft [C. C. A.] 135 F. 977. This distinction does not apply where rights arise solely by contract and not under any statute or constitution. City of Sioux Falls v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 136 F. 721. A statute providing that where a conditional vendor retakes the property he must sell it at public auction within a time stated and if he does not he will be liable to the vendee for the amount he has paid on the contract, cannot operate to impair rights under contracts in existence at the time of its passage. Haefelein v. Jacob, 94 N. Y. S. 466.

81. Law authorizing court to permit wife to deed her lands without husband's consent is insufficient to destroy his life estate. Acts 1896, p. 42, No. 49. Hubbard v. Hubbard [Vt.] 58 A. 969. After title to land has passed to a city under condemnation proceedings and the owner is entitled to compensation, a statute which attempts to revest the title and deprive him of his right is void. Hellen v. Medford [Mass.] 73 N. E. 1070. A law extending the time of redemption on execution sale is void as to liens accruing prior to its enactment. Welsh v. Cross [Cal.] 81 P. 229. See 3 C. L. 771.

82. A vested right to existing defenses is under the protection of the law save only as to those defenses which are based on informalities not affecting substantial rights, which do not touch the substance of the contract, and are not based on equity or justice. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. East Grand Forks [Minn.] 102 N. W. 703. The bar afforded by a statute that withdraws rights of actions from litigants who have not paid their privilege tax may be lifted by an amenesty act, even as to suits begun before its passage. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Edwards [Miss.] 37 So. 748. An acknowledgment of a mortgage to a corporation invalid only because the acknowledging officer was a stockholder in the corporation may be cured by legislative act. Maxwell v. Lincoln & Fifth Ward Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 216 Ill. 85, 74 N. E. 804.

83. See 3 C. L. 771.

84. A tax on the exercise of a power of appointment under a will is valid and applies to a power created by a will made before the taxing law was passed. In re Delano's Estate, 176 N. Y. 486, 68 N. E. 871. But if the power is never exercised, there can be no tax. In re Lansing's Estate [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 882. A statute levying a succession tax on all successions opened and to be opened and not yet closed is not retroactive. Succession of Levy [La.] 39 So. 37.

85. Local improvement bonds. Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 80 P. 81.

86. An ordinance providing for the assessment of omitted property, though retroactive, is not for that reason invalid, nor is it ex post facto. Muir's Adm's v. Bardstown [Ky.] 87 S. W. 1096.

87. It is within the power of the legislature after an assessment has been made and before sale to prescribe the conditions under which redemption may be had of the property taxed and sold. Rogers v. Nichols, 186 Mass. 440, 71 N. E. 950.

88. A permit to sell intoxicating liquors may be withdrawn. Newman v. Lake [Kan.] 79 P. 675; State v. Durein [Kan.] 80 P. 987.

89. A vested right is not conferred by a statute which merely prescribes a method by which such right may be obtained; and it is competent for the legislature to raise the conditions for obtaining such a right both as to those who were and those who were not therefore incompetent to acquire it. Ohio v. Board of Dental Examiners, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 55, 26 Ohio C. C. 369.

90. See 3 C. L. 771.

91. An act regulating tontine investment companies allowing all to comply with its provisions held not retroactive. State v. Preferred Tontine Mercantile Co., 184 Mo. 160, 82 S. W. 1075. Laws 1897, p.

Regulations of procedure.[92]—There is no vested rights in a rule of evidence,[93] but an extinct right of appeal cannot be revived.[94]

Statutes of limitation[95] affecting existing rights are not invalid if a reasonable time is given for the commencement of an action before the bar takes effect,[96] but where the bar has once attached, the legislature cannot disturb it.[97]

§ 15. Deprivation without due process of law, or contrary to law of the land.[98]—The fifth amendment to the Federal constitution is merely restrictive of Federal powers,[99] and the fourteenth operates only against deprivation by a state or under its authority, and adds nothing to the rights of any citizen aginst another.[1] The Congress may penalize acts designed to frustrate one's enjoyment of this guaranty.[2]

Due process of law[3] does not necessarily require the exercise of the power of the courts,[4] but merely means the law of the land,[5] and is secured by laws operat-

313, c. 384, § 30, imposing a liability on directors of a corporation for failure to file an annual report, being an imposition of a penalty, did not create a vested right in a party entitled to recover thereon. Davidson v. Witthaus, 94 N. Y. S. 428.

92. See 3 C. L. 771.

93. That failure of a corporation to report to the secretary of state is made by statute evidence of nonuser, which it was not before, is no objection to the statute. People v. Rose, 207 Ill. 352, 69 N. E. 762.

94. A statute providing that appeals which have been dismissed for nonpayment of register's fee may be reinstated on terms on payment of the fee is as to appeals dismissed before its enactment an unconstitutional impairment of vested rights. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 15. Lohrstorfer v. Lohrstorfer [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 296, 104 N. W. 142.

95. See 3 C. L. 772.

96. July 1 to Jan. 11 following is sufficient. Fitzgerald v. Scovil Mfg. Co., 77 Conn. 528, 60 A. 132. One year to one who has permitted adverse possession of realty for nine years is reasonable. Schauble v. Schultz [C. C. A.] 137 F. 389. Six months is reasonable as to the liability of a director of a corporation failing to file its annual report. Davidson v. Witthaus, 94 N. Y. S. 428. The time intervening between the passage of the act and the time it takes effect is to be considered. Wooster v. Bateman [Iowa] 102 N. W. 521. Unreasonable restriction of time to sue on foreign judgment is void. Lamb v. Powder River Live Stock Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 434. A statute providing that constructive possession of unimproved lands shall be in the person who with color of title pays taxes thereon for a period of seven years, three of which must be subsequent to the passage of the act, is not void as interfering with vested rights. Towson v. Denson [Ark.] 86 S. W. 661.

1. See 3 C. L. 772, n. 19. A municipal ordinance passed in contravention to the law of the state is invalid and not within the prohibition. City of Savannah v. Holst [C. C. A.] 132 F. 901.

2. Note: The defendants took a prisoner from the custody of state officers and lynched him. They were indicted under a Federal statute providing for the punishment of persons who should conspire to prevent or hinder the free exercise or enjoyment by any citizen of any right or privilege secured to him by the constitution or laws of the United States. Held, that the defendants may be convicted of a conspiracy to deprive the prisoner of his right under the Fourteenth Amendment to have the state afford him due process of law. Ex parte Riggins, 134 F. 404.

The Fourteenth Amendment operates as a guaranty only that the state shall not deprive any citizen of the United States of due process of law; and in the absence of state action, or such inaction as to amount to deprivation, it is difficult to see how any right of the citizen under the amendment can be infringed. The reasoning of the court, though ingenious, leads in effect to the conclusion that the amendment safeguards the citizen against the acts of individuals, a theory which has been expressly repudiated. Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 27 Law. Ed. 835. If the decision be sound, persons conspiring to prevent a negro from voting at state elections could be punished for a conspiracy to deprive him of the right not to have state officials discriminate against him in excluding him from voting. It has been held, however, that the Fifteenth Amendment gives no authority to punish such persons. Karem v. United States, 121 F. 250, 61 L. R. A. 437. The leading case upon which the court relies rests only upon the power of congress to regulate Federal elections. Ex parte Yarborough, 110 U. S. 651, 28 Law. Ed. 274; Lackey v. United States, 107 F. 114, 53 L. R. A. 660. If the decision be upheld, the generally accepted view that the constitutional amendments leave exclusively to the states the final protection of their citizens must be substantially modified; and the limits of Federal power of interference will be difficult to define. Ex parte Brown [Wash.] 81 P. 552. Contra. In re Boyett, 136 N. C. 415, 48 S. E. 789.

NOTE. Incarceration of insane persons accused of crime: Application for a writ of habeas corpus to be released from an asylum, where petitioner was kept by order of the judge of the superior court under L. 1899, c. 1, § 65, providing that persons convicted of crimes and acquitted on the ground of insanity are to be committed to asylums for the dangerous insane, at the discretion of the judge, and are to be discharged only by act of the general assembly. Held, that the act is unconstitutional because authorizing restraint without due process of law and attempting to interfere with the powers of the courts to inquire into the legality of the restraint. In re Boyett, 136 N. C. 415, 48 S. E. 789.

This is not the first time that a court has been called upon to pass on the validity of similar statutes, and the universal ruling holding them unconstitutional is based upon the fundamental principles of justice. During the last forty years, the absurd length to which the defense of insanity has been allowed to go, whereby so many criminals have escaped punishment, has led to the enactment of these statutes; but it must be conceded that the remedy is not to be sought by destroying the safeguards of private liberty. In Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1, 20 Am. Rep. 633, where a statute almost identical with this was before the court, Campbell, J., said: "The state has an ultimate guardianship over noncompotes in cases where it is necessary. * * * Neither judge nor expert has any power under the constitution to select his own means and process of inquiry and pass ex parte upon the liberty of citizens." In the following cases similar decisions have been rendered: State v. Billings, 55 Minn. 467, 43 Am. St. Rep. 524, and note; In re Lambert, 134 Cal. 626, 86 Am. St. Rep. 296, 55 L. R. A. 856;

§ 16. Compensation for taking property[49] for public use is guaranteed by all constitutions,[50] and this guaranty is invariably construed to mean that private property shall be taken for private use under no circumstances.[51] A use is public when it will tend to promote the public interest.[52] A taking occurs when any injury for the benefit of the public is done or permitted,[53] though injuries resulting from mere police regulations need not be compensated.[54] The limitations on the power of eminent domain imposes no restriction on the legitimate exercise of the police power.[55] Uncompensated obedience to a regulation enacted for the public safety under the police power of the state is not taking property without due compensation.[56]

§ 17. Right to justice and guaranty of remedies.[57]—A certain remedy at law for every injury is a natural right, confirmed by probably every constitution,[58]

People v. St. Savior Sanitarium, 34 N. Y. App. Div. 363; In re Clayton, 59 Conn. 510, 21 Am. St. Rep. 128, 13 L. R. A. 66. The ruling as to the unconstitutionality of the provision in the statute, that the persons confined in the asylum are to be released only by act of the general assembly, is undoubtedly correct. The right to inquire into the legality of the restraint is exclusively within the province of the judiciary. Buswell, Insanity; Palmer v. Judge, 83 Mich. 528; Doyle, Petitioner, 16 R. I. 537. 27 Am. Agricultural drainage is a public use. Sisson v. Buena Vista County Sup'rs [Iowa] 104 N. W. 454. A union depot is a public use. Riley v. Charleston Union Station Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 485.

53. In an action for injury to plaintiff's property by a municipal contractor blasting a tunnel, it is proper to put before the jury by instruction the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. City of Chicago v. Murdoch, 113 Ill. App. 656.

54. A statute prohibiting the transportation of fish taken from the inland waters of the state except under conditions does not take property for public use without just compensation. State v. Nergaard [Wis.] 102 N. W. 899. It being the common-law duty of a railroad to make such changes in its bridges as may be necessary to provide drainage for all waters flowing in streams crossed by it, though increased by artificial improvements, compelling it to do so by statute is not a taking of its property without compensation. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 212 Ill. 103, 72 N. E. 219. A police regulation requiring tenement house owners to substitute water closets for school sinks at their own expense does not take their property without compensation. Tenement House Dept. v. Moeschen, 179 N. Y. 325, 72 N. E. 231. A statute which merely provides for the cleaning out of an established ditch need make no provision for compensation to owners. Taylor v. Crawford [Ohio] 74 N. E. 1065.

which right is not dependent on the frequency of its assertion.[59] Constitutional rights may exist without a remedy for their enforcement.[60] A statute forfeiting the license of a foreign insurance company that removes cases against it to the Federal court is not in conflict with the Federal constitution.[61]

§ 18. Jury trials preserved.[62]—This right of trial by jury as it existed at common law has been almost universally preserved. Some constitutions dispense with unanimity. In some states the constitutional right is supplemented by a statutory right in cases where it did not exist at common law.[63]

§ 19. Crimes, prosecutions, punishments and penalties.[64]—Under American constitutions persons accused of crime[65] are entitled to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury,[66] to be informed of the nature of the accusation against them,[67] to confront the witnesses against them,[68] are protected from giving evidence against themselves,[69] from ex post facto laws,[70] and bills of attainder,[71] from being placed twice in jeopardy for the same offense,[72] and from excessive fines and cruel punishment.[73] Disbarment proceedings against an attorney are not ment law providing for reassessment of defective levies held not violative. Haubner v. Milwaukee [Wis.] 101 N. W. 930. A statute limiting the period in which a landowner must act to invalidate a special assessment does not violate. City of Denver v. Campbell [Colo.] 80 P. 142.

59. That invasions of a particular right are rare, or that a right has not been asserted for a long time, is not conclusive of its absence. Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 68. Where a case is new in principle, the courts cannot give a remedy, but where the case is new only in instance, it is the duty of the courts to give relief by the application of recognized principles. 65. The term "crime" as used in the Federal and state constitutions forbidding involuntary servitude except as a punishment for crime includes misdemeanors and all offenses in violation of penal laws. Stone v. Paducah [Ky.] 86 S. W. 531.

66. The confinement in an insane asylum of one acquitted of homicide on the ground of insanity as required by law does not deprive him of jury trial, infringe his right of counsel, inflict cruel punishment, nor deprive him of his right to demand judicial investigation of his restoration to sanity. Ex parte Brown [Wash.] 81 P. 552.

67. A statute authorizing criminal prosecution by information and reserving to the circuit courts the right to convene grand juries when advisable is a proper exercise of legislative power under a provision authorizing the modification or abolition of the grand jury. State v. Gugliemo [Or.] 79 P. 577. Under a provision that no warrant shall issue but on probable cause supported by oath or affirmation, an information filed by the district attorney or his deputy need not be verified, since it is supported by his official oath. State, 140 Ala. 172, 37 So. 250.

68. The right of confrontation of witnesses is not impaired by allowing record proof of marriage in bigamy. Sokel v. People, 212 Ill. 238, 72 N. E. 382.

69. Ordinance requiring automobile users to display number of license in large figures held not to compel giving of evidence against one's self. People v. Schneider [Mich.] 103 N. W. 172.

70. Any statute depriving a person accused of crime of a right which he possessed at the time the offense was committed is invalid as an ex post facto law. People v. Johnson, 44 Misc. 550, 90 N. Y. S. 134. The right of one convicted of crime to a diminution of sentence by good behavior is a substantial right which cannot be taken away by a law passed after the offense was committed. Id.; State v. Tyree [Kan.] 78 P. 525. A statute making a married woman a competent witness against her husband in certain cases is not ex post facto. Wester v. State [Ala.] 38 So. 1010. A change in the punishment not altering the situation to the material disadvantage of the convict does not render the law ex post facto. Changing place of execution and interim confinement from county jail to state penitentiary. Rooney v. North Dakota, 196 U. S. 319, 49 Law. Ed. 494.

71. A resolution of the state senate resulting in the expulsion of a member is not a bill of attainder. French v. Senate of State, 146 Cal. 604, 80 P. 1031.

72. A convict convicted a second time during the period of his first sentence and regarded as having forfeited his commutation for good behavior allowed on his prior sentence is not thereby placed in double jeopardy. Ex parte Russell, 92 N. Y. S. 68.

73. A statute providing for a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500 or imprisonment in the county jail not exceed-criminal, and the customary safeguards thrown around persons accused of crime are not applicable.[74] Involuntary servitude except as a punishment for crime is not permitted.[75]

§ 20. Searches and seizures.[76]—Unreasonable searches and seizures are prohibited.[77]

§ 21. Suffrage and elections.[78]—The provision that all elections shall be free and equal has no application to primary elections.[79] Primarily, elections belong to the political branch of the government and are beyond control of the judiciary.[80]

§ 22. Frame and organization of government; courts; officers.[81]—The legislature may impose the duty of rebuilding a bridge between two cities upon them in such proportion as it sees fit.[82]

The right to local self government,[83] is guarantied in terms in several constitutions,[84] and prohibitions on the imposing on the people of counties and municipal subdivisions of the state, new liabilities in respect of past transactions are met with.[85] But in the absence of such a provision a state can compel any of its political subdivisions to pay obligations not enforceable in the courts but which they in equity and good conscience ought to pay.[86]

Courts[87] and their jurisdiction are generally placed beyond control of the legislature except to a limited extent.[88]

ing six months or both for violation of a statute regulating the hours of labor in mines does not impose unreasonable fines or excessive punishment. Ex parte Kair [Nev.] 80 P. 463.

74. Information or indictment. Trial by jury. Confrontation of witnesses. State v. McRae [Fla.] 38 So. 605.

75. A statute compelling persons incarcerated in jail for want of sureties to keep the peace to labor to an extent sufficient to pay their board conflicts with the thirteenth amendment. Stone v. Paducah [Ky.] 86 S. W. 531. Compare the title Slaves, 4 C. L. 1494, for the law relating to peonage.

An article taken from defendant's house under an invalid search warrant issued solely for the purpose of obtaining evidence against him is inadmissible in evidence against him. State v. Sheridan, 121 Iowa, 165, 96 N. W. 730. An order of the common council of a city made in the exercise of its charter powers commanding the production before it of the books and papers of a corporation in aid of investigations as to evasions of license taxes is not a violation of the provision. 88. The Texas act (26th Leg. p. 40, c. 33), giving corporation courts some of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, is valid. Ex parte Freedman [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 1125. The provision that at least two terms

No offices may be created[89] except as authorized by the constitution. Nor may tenure, terms, or compensation be altered beyond such authority.[90]

§ 23. Taxation and fiscal affairs.[91]—In the absence of constitutional restraint the legislature has absolute power with respect to taxation,[92] provided the power is exercised for a public purpose.[93] This right to redeem from tax sales is specifically granted by the constitution of Nebraska.[94]

Equality and uniformity.[95]—The limitation upon the taxing power as to equality and uniformity of taxation has its foundation in state constitutions,[96] though taxes must not be so nonuniform as to violate the fourteenth amendment.[97] Exact equality is not necessary,[98] and classification[99] and executions do not violate the provision.[1]

Double taxation.[2]

95. See 3 C. L. 787.

96. Given a reasonable and just classification of taxpayers, all that the fourteenth amendment requires is that all in the class shall be treated alike. Territory v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. [N. M.] 78 P. 74. Is not violated by a law reassessing the cost of a local improvement, but providing that those who have paid under a prior invalid assessment shall not be again assessed. Warren v. Boston Street Com'rs, 187 Mass. 290, 72 N. E. 1022. The equality and uniformity clause in Nebraska requires that the value of its property and franchises within the state be the basis of taxation of every corporation both foreign and domestic. Aachen & M. Fire Ins. Co. v. Omaha [Neb.] 101 N. W. 3. Under a constitutional requirement of uniformity in proportion to value, a tax of a specific amount for a particular act cannot be upheld as a valid property tax. Public improvements.[5]—Works of internal improvement by the state are prohibited by several state constitutions.[6]

Debt limit, and limit of levy.[7]—Provisions limiting the indebtedness that may be incurred by the legislature in behalf of the state,[8] or by the municipalities of the state,[9] and limitations on the tax levy,[10] are met with, and contracts and statutes having effect to increase indebtedness or levy beyond the limit are invalid.[11]

Submission of question of indebtedness.[12]

Provision for payment of debts.[13]

Public aid, donations and loans of credit.[14]—Donations of public funds to private individuals are invalid;[15] but it is within the general legislative power of the state to make provision for any legitimate class, recognized as such either by the constitution itself, or by a sense of justice and the common reason of the people of the state.[16]

§ 24. Schools and education; school funds.[17]—The constitutional provision for free schools is not violated by a law requiring children to be vaccinated as a condition of attendance.[18] Statutes applying school funds and property of various districts and imposing the burden of school support on them as the legislature sees fit are not assailable as interfering with property rights without compensation.[19]

§ 25. The enactment of statutes [20] is hedged about with various inhibitions, such as those against local and special laws, laws addressed to a plurality of subjects, and not reciting their subjects in their titles, and amendatory acts not setting out that amended. The powers of special sessions are limited, and there are also provisions regulating legislative procedure, and some relating to interpretation and effect of statutes.[21] building & Dry Dock Co. v. Baltimore, 195 U. S. 375, 49 Law. Ed. 242. If a state unites in one undertaking an exercise of the police power with a commercial business, the national government cannot be compelled to aid the operation of the police power by foregoing its constitutional right to lay and collect an impost or exercise on the business part of the transaction (liquor dispensary system). § 26. Miscellaneous provisions other than the foregoing,[22] chiefly matters more properly belonging within the domain of legislation, are to be found in the more recent state constitutions. Among them are provisions respecting claims against the state,[23] public lands [24] and waters,[25] homesteads and other exemptions,[26] married women,[27] master and servant,[28] usury laws,[29] regulations of carriers,[30] corporations,[31] the liquor traffic,[32] and provisions respecting actions for wrongful death.[33]

Right to acquire information by compulsion.[34]—Production of papers cannot be compelled, where it is evident to the court that they must tend to subject the party to whom they belong to penalties and punishment.[35]

The right to bear arms [36] is subject to such reasonable regulations and limitations as may be imposed by the legislature.[37]

The full faith and credit clause is not violated by a state statute that prohibits suits between foreign corporations in the state courts, though construed to include foreign judgments.[38] This clause is oftenest invoked to protect foreign judgments.[39]

§ 1. Nature of contempt and what constitutes. A. Elements of contempt and nature of proceedings; civil or criminal.[1]—Direct contempts are contempts in facie curiae. Constructive contempts are those committed outside the presence of the court, but tending by their operation to embarrass or prevent due administration of justice.[2] When brought for the purpose of vindicating the power and authority of the court and maintaining its dignity, contempt proceedings are criminal. When brought for the purpose of collecting an indemnity for the damages sustained by a party to an action because of the misconduct of other party, they are civil.[3]

(§ 1) B. Disrespect to the court in general.[4]—Disrespectful utterances to or concerning a judge in his official capacity, even respecting a case which has been terminated, are contempt;[5] but a proper assertion of legal rights,[6] or a truthful answer to a question by the judge,[7] cannot be considered as contempt.

(§ 1) C. Acts in disobedience of court.[8]—Failure to comply with an order of court is contempt[9] if the order is a valid one and within the jurisdiction;[10]

An intent to commit a forbidden act is as essential to guilt as in the case of a charge of a criminal offense. Hutton v. Superior Court [Cal.] 81 P. 409. The willful violation of an injunction by a party to the cause is contempt of court, constituting a specific criminal offense. Marinan v. Baker [N. M.] 78 P. 531.

5. Burdett v. Commonwealth [Va.] 48 S. E. 878.

Note: Of this ruling the Columbia Law Review (V. 249) says: "As the origin of the offense of criminal contempt lay in the fiction that the king in the person of his judges presided over the courts of Westminister (Neel v. State, 9 Ark. 259, 264, 50 Am. Dec. 209), and that contemptuous conduct toward the judge was a mild form of treason (3 Columbia L. R. 45), in England scandalization of the court, not with reference to a pending cause, constitutes contempt. Queen v. Gray, 2 Q. B. 36. In the United States, however, the idea of offense to the sovereign was supplanted by the idea of interference with the administration of justice, to prevent which the court possesses the inherent power to punish for contempt. Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. [U. S.] 505, 22 Law. Ed. 205; Cartwright's Case, 114 Mass. 230; Watson v. Williams, 36 Miss. 331. Interference with the administration of justice, therefore, should be the test of criminal contempt, whether the interference be with a pending cause or with the future course of justice; 4 Bl. Com. 285. But the general rule in the United States is that a libelous attack on a court concerning a cause already terminated is not a criminal contempt. Storey v. People, 79 Ill. 45, 22 Am. Rep. 158; Cheadle v. State, 110 Ind. 301, 59 Am. Rep. 199; Rosewater v. State, 47 Neb. 630. From the effect of such act on the course of justice it is hard to see why the distinction exists. State v. Morril, 16 Ark. 384. See Com. v. Dandridge, Va. Cas. 408, 421. The principal case would seem to adopt the better rule."

The Michigan Law Review (3, 319) says: "There was no question as to the libel, but defendant contended that a publication with respect to an ended cause could not be punished as a contempt of court. A number of cases support this contention. Storey v. People, 79 Ill. 45, 22 Am. Rep. 158; Cheadle v. State, 110 Ind. 301, 59 Am. Rep. 199; State v. Anderson, 40 Ia. 207; Rosewater v. State, 47 Neb. 630; State v. Kaiser, 20 Ore. 50. But when the contempt consists in scandalizing and defaming the court itself, other courts hold that it need not relate to a pending suit. State v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 205, 76 S. W. 79 (in which the subject is discussed at considerable length.) In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588, 67 N. W. 1071; State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384."

6. The filing of an affidavit of bias and prejudice against a judge in a contempt proceeding is not contempt per se, though the affidavit is insufficient. Hunt v. State, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 621.

See Contra. Ohio v. Fronizer, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 476.

7. For one on contempt proceedings for saying out of court that the judge was corrupt to state in answer to a question of the court that he had given publicity to the statement that he heard the judge was corrupt, does not constitute a contempt committed within the presence of the court. Davis v. State [Ark.] 84 S. W. 633.

Refusal to answer improper question: An attorney is not guilty of contempt from refusing to answer questions which would require him to divulge a privileged communication made to him by his client. Elliott v. United States, 23 App. D. C. 456. A witness cannot be adjudged guilty of contempt for a refusal to answer questions that are not legal and pertinent. Rogers v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 145 Cal. 88, 78 P. 344. Questions calling for hearsay testimony. Ex parte J. H. Schoepf, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 93.

11. Christensen v. People, 114 Ill. App. 40. Whether order increasing alimony was properly served on defendant and whether he was bound to comply with it, was not determinable on motion to vacate commitment for contempt. Keller v. Keller, 100 App. Div. 325, 91 N. Y. S. 528. A party who refused to obey an order of court directing him to deliver certain property to a receiver could not defeat contempt proceedings by contesting the right of the receiver to the possession of such property, which was adjudicated by the order from which he did not appeal. Lawson v. Tyler, 98 App. Div. 10, 90 N. Y. S. 188. A party is not excused from obeying a valid injunction by showing that it was subsequently dissolved for an irregularity or for want of equity. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Cleburne Ice & Cold Storage Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 1100. Where a petition for an order to show cause why a party should not be punished for contempt of court in violating a decree was demurred to, the question whether decree was sustained by the evidence could not be considered on the demurrer, the court having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter. State v. District Court of Third Judicial Dist. for Deer Lodge County [Mont.] 79 P. 319.

12. A person not a party to an action cannot be adjudged guilty of contempt for failure to comply with order of court made therein. American Mortg. Co. v. Sire, 92 N. Y. S. 1082. Where plaintiff procured an order from the probate court directing defendant, a warehouseman, who had certain property in storage the title to which was disputed by the plaintiff and the executors of her husband's estate, to deliver the property to plaintiff, and he delivered a warehouse receipt to her, but subsequently refused to deliver the property, held that defendant not being a party to any of the probate proceedings, he was not guilty of contempt. Drasdo v. Beck [Wash.] 79 P. 948.

13. Sloan v. People, 115 Ill. App. 84; Christensen v. People, 114 Ill. App. 40. Where injunction ran to parties and their employes, employe knowingly violating it is guilty of contempt. People v. Marr [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 431. Where injunction was addressed to association and "its each and every member," members violating it are in contempt. Id. One who, with knowledge that others have been enjoined from infringing a patent takes over their business in the sale of the infringing articles and continues it in collusion with them to invade the injunction, by which acts the profit is punishable for contempt, whether actually employed and paid by them or not. Diamond Drill & Mach. Co. v. Kelley Bros. 132 F. 978. A party may be punished for contempt for disobeying an injunction prohibiting them from "aiding and abetting" the defendant from doing certain acts notwithstanding the defendants themselves have been discharged. Sloan v. People, 115 Ill. App. 84.

14. Unintentional violation of order of court by defendant's agents, they having no knowledge of said order, held not to constitute contempt. Encyclopaedia Britannica Co. v. American Newspaper Ass'n, 130 F. 493. Where an order directing tenants in a building to attorn to a receiver appointed in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding affecting the property was not formally served on the tenant, he could not be adjudged guilty of contempt for refusing to comply with its provisions. American Mortg. Co. v. Sire, 92 N. Y. S. 1082.

16. The commencement of an action against a receiver without leave of court. Pruyn v. Black, 93 N. Y. S. 995. Interference with receiver's possession of property. Gunning v. Sorg, 113 Ill. App. 332.

17. Talking with jury during trial in manner designed to affect verdict. Drady v. District Court of Polk County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 115. A party to a cause may, without being guilty of contempt, interview person acquainted with jurors, to ascertain whether there is any room for challenging a particular juror. Wells v. District Court of Polk County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 106. A member of a general grand jury panel, who has not been sworn to try an issue in any particular case, is a juror within § 4461, Iowa Code, giving the court power to punish as contempt an attempt to influence a juror. Marvin v. District Court of Polk County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 119.

18. A person soliciting an attorney engaged in the trial of a case to bribe jurors through him by gifts of money is guilty of criminal contempt. Hurley v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 74 N. E. 677.

19. The publication of newspaper articles relating to a murder case, setting forth fac similes of a specimen of handwrit-davits,[20] presenting false claims to the court for allowance,[21] putting in fictitious bail,[22] and similar acts tending to the obstruction of justice, are contempt.

§ 2. Defense, excuse or purgation.[23]—While intent to contemn has been sometimes deemed essential,[24] it is generally held that neither advice of counsel,[25] nor the fact that contemnor is animated only by zeal for a client[26] is an excuse. Even impossibility of complying with an order has been deemed no excuse for disobedience where it was not presented in opposition to the passing of the order,[27] but grounds of opposition which could not have been previously presented will be considered.[28] Official duty of a Federal officer has been held to justify disobedience of the order of a state court.[29]

§ 3. Power to punish or redress; contempt or other remedy.[30]—The power to punish contempt of their authority is inherent in courts[31] of general[32] but not of

ing of the person indicted for the crime, and of a paper found by the side of the body of the person murdered, followed by an analysis of the likeness and unlikeness in the handwriting, including interview with experts employed by the commonwealth, stating the methods of the prosecuting office in connection therewith, and discussing the interest of reading public in the specimens of handwriting constitutes contempt of court because interfering with the administration of justice. Globe Newspaper Co. v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 74 N. E. 682. The publication of a newspaper article which would constitute contempt of court if published during the trial or immediately before the trial of a cause cannot be justified on the ground that the trial to which it referred was not in progress or immediately to he begun, but would occur at a time to be afterwards fixed, though this fact should be taken into consideration in imposing sentence. Id.

20. An attempt to improperly influence the administration of justice by presenting false affidavits to the court constitutes contempt. Seastream v. New Jersey Exhibition Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 914.

21. Under chapter 301, Comp. Laws of Michigan, the presentation of a false claim to the court for allowance is contempt. Ex parte Toepel [Mich.] 102 N. W. 369.

22. Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 14, subd. 2, it is made contempt for a party to an action to put in fictitious bail whereby the remedy of the other party to enforce his judgment is defeated, impaired, impeded, or prejudiced. Hall v. Lanza, 97 App. Div. 490, 89 N. Y. S. 980.

23. See 3 C. L. 798. A publisher of a newspaper, charged with contempt of court in publishing an article relating to a cause pending in court, cannot justify by showing that the article was true and that it was published without an express intent to injure the parties or to interfere with the administration of justice, though the same may be material in considering the punishment. Globe Newspaper Co. v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 74 N. E. 682.

24. One acting in good faith and meaning no disrespect to the court should not be punished for contempt. Boone v. Riddle [Ky.] 86 S. W. 978; Powers v. People, 114 Ill. App. 323. A municipal corporation will not be adjudged guilty of contempt unless it clearly appears that it is acting in bad faith and seeking to evade the orders of the court. Sponenburg v. Gloversville, 94 N. Y. S. 264. Either an attorney or his client may by legal methods and in a respectful manner test the validity of a rule of court. Hunt v. State, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 621.

26. People v. Newburger, 98 App. Div. 92, 90 N. Y. S. 740.

27. One ordered to pay alimony, to protect himself from contempt proceedings for noncompliance therewith because of stress of circumstances, should apply for the revocation or modification of the order. State v. Second Judicial Dist. Court [Mont.] 79 P. 13. Where defendants contested an application to compel them to produce books and papers for inspection on the ground that plaintiff was not entitled to such examination, and made no claim that the books and papers desired were not under their control, proof in a subsequent proceeding to punish them for contempt in failing to comply with an order requiring such production, that the books and papers had been accidently or mistakenly lost or destroyed prior to the hearing of the application for production, was insufficient to purge their contempt. London Guarantee & Acc. Co. v. Doyle, 134 F. 125.

28. Where a motion for an order adjudging defendant guilty of contempt for failure to comply with an order previously made in supplemental proceedings, requiring him to pay certain money to plaintiff's attorney was denied without prejudice, defendant was entitled on a subsequent motion for an order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for the same reason to present a defense arising after the making of the order in the supplemental proceedings. Gardiner v. Ross [S. D.] 104 N. W. 220.

29. Where an assistant U. S. district attorney procured the production of the state court records before a Federal grand jury under an ordinary subpoena duces tecum and thereafter held possession of such records as such attorney, he was not subject to punishment for contempt of the state court for failure to return such records on demand. In re Leaken, 137 F. 680.

30. See 3 C. L. 798.

31. A judge at chambers has no author-limited jurisdiction,[33] and as such is usually held to be beyond legislative impairment,[34] though there are contrary holdings.[35] An act may be punished as contempt, though it is also punishable as crime.[36] The power to punish contemptuous publications does not invade the freedom of the press,[37] nor is a commitment for contempt for disobedience of order for the payment of money imprisonment for debt.[38]

§ 4. Pleadings and other proceedings before hearing.[39]—Contempt in facie curiæ may in the absence of statute be summarily tried;[40] but in all other cases a reasonably specific,[41] verified[42] charge must be filed,[43] and notice or process

ity to punish for a contempt not committed in his presence, unless expressly authorized by statute. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 76 P. 584; State v. Scarborough [S. C.] 49 S. E. 866. Under § 3610, Rev. St. Wyoming, which provides that all motions, demurrers and other matters not involving a trial or an issue of fact pending in any district court may be determined by the judge in vacation, held that one charged with contempt for interfering with a water distributer appointed by the court commissioner involved the trial of a question of fact and could not be punished for contempt by the judge in chambers or the commissioner. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 76 P. 584.

32. Mahoney v. State, 33 Ind. App. 655, 72 N. E. 151. The court has power to enforce by punishment for contempt the complainer of any order which it had a right to make, notwithstanding the absence of statute giving it such authority. Ex parte Latham [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 1046.

33. Inferior tribunals are without inherent power to punish for contempt. In absence of statute this power is confined to courts of record. Farnham v. Colman [S. D.] 103 N. W. 161. Under the charter of the city of Macon, Georgia, providing that the city recorder shall be to all intents and purposes a justice of the peace so far as to enable him to issue warrants for offenses committed within the corporate limits of said city, the recorder has power to punish for contempt without reference to whether he is suing for the trial of offenses against the municipal ordinances or as a court of inquiry for investigation of offenses committed against the state within the limits of the city. Faircloth v. Macon [Ga.] 50 S. E. 915.

34. Some courts hold, however, that the power of courts to command respect and enforce their decrees cannot be abridged, limited or taken away by the legislature either directly or indirectly by attempting to define the offense or undertaking to regulate procedure. Anderson v. Indianapolis Drop Forging Co. [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 277.

35. The power of court to punish for contempt is inherent, but is subject to the limitations imposed by constitution and statute. O'Neil v. People, 113 Ill. App. 145.

36. Laws of 1891, North Carolina, p. 87, c. 87, making it a misdemeanor to intimidate or to attempt to intimidate any witness, is in addition to the power given by the code to punish for contempt, and not in repeal of that provision. In re Young, 137 N. C. 552, 50 S. E. 220. A court has power to punish an act which is a contempt, notwithstanding such act may, likewise, constitute a statutory crime, and notwithstanding further the guilty party may be indicted for the same offense. O'Neil v. People, 113 Ill. App. 195.

37. Burdett v. Commonwealth [Va.] 48 S. E. 878.

39. See 3 C. L. 799.

40. Mahoney v. State, 33 Ind. App. 655, 72 N. E. 151. A court may punish for contempt without issue or trial in any form. Burdett v. Commonwealth [Va.] 48 S. E. 878. Under a statute providing that, whenever any person shall be arraigned for a direct contempt, no affidavit or complaint shall be required to be filed against him, the word "arraigned" is held to have been used synonymously with the word "accused" or "charged," and not in the sense in which that term is used in criminal law. Mahoney v. State, 33 Ind. App. 655, 72 N. E. 151. A court of record may not punish, as for a criminal contempt, summarily, without formal accusation or complaint, and without affording the accused a reasonable time to prepare his defense, except in those cases in which the judge is, while in the exercise of his office, an actual witness of the alleged contemptuous conduct, or at least of a substantial part thereof, so that he is not compelled to inform himself concerning it, and of the circumstances of its commission, by the testimony of witnesses. Gordon v. State [Neb.] 102 N. W. 458. A prosecution for contempt of court is sui generis. If the contempt is committed in the presence of the judge, no complaint or process is necessary to give the court jurisdiction. If the contempt instead of being direct is indirect and constructive, and not committed in the presence of the court, knowledge of it should be first brought to the court in a way to justify formal action. Hurley v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 74 N. E. 677.

41. A rule requiring a bankrupt to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for refusing to answer "sundry questions" put to him during his examination before the referee is sufficient, although it does not set out the questions, where it refers to the transcript filed with the certificate of the referee, from which they fully appear. United States v. Goldstein, 132 F. 789. Where a contempt is committed without the presence of the court, the affidavit of facts constitutes the complaint, and is insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court to punish the defendant unless it shows a case of contempt on its face. Hutton v. Superior Court [Cal.] 81 P. 409; Rogers v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 145 Cal. 88, 78 P. 344. Where, on an application to punish defendant for contempt in must be served,[44] unless the contemnor voluntarily appears.[45] Constructive contempts in equity are properly punishable in a proceeding in the original suit.[46]

§ 5. Hearing; evidence; trial.[47]—Contempt proceedings are said to be criminal in their nature, and this statement has been applied so far as to invoke the presumption of innocence [48] and require clear and convincing proof,[49] but has never been carried to the extent of importing into contempt proceedings the formalities of procedure guaranteed to persons accused of crime,[50] such as jury trial [51] and confrontation with witnesses,[52] nor does a rule to show cause violate the guaranty violating an injunction restraining the infringement of a patent for an improvement in valves for air brakes, served on defendant's attorneys March 19, 1903, the affidavits allege that an examination of the cars in which the infringing valves were found showed that the cars were dated April, 1903, and that someone "informed" one of the affiants that the cars were "set up" between March 23 and 28, 1903, and that affiant "was also informed," without stating by whom, that all the braking equipments were delivered by defendant on August 28, 1902; such affidavits were insufficient to show a violation of the injunction. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. Christensen Engineering Co., 128 F. 749.

42. A complaint by an assistant district attorney, signed by him as a public officer, charging one with a constructive criminal contempt is sufficiently verified to justify judicial action. Hurley v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 74 N. E. 677. The use of ex parte affidavits in procuring an order to show cause why respondents should not be adjudged guilty of contempt of court is proper where affiants are present at the hearing on the return, and are offered for cross-examination to the persons named in the order. Seastream v. New Jersey Exhibition Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 914.

43. Hunt v. State, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 621. The act of a county attorney in counseling the county auditor to violate an order of the superior court directing him not to issue certain warrants is, if contempt at all, a contempt without the presence of the court, and under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 5804, can only be prosecuted by affidavit. State v. Pendergast [Wash.] 81 P. 324.

44. In dealing with contempts not committed within the presence of the court, the defendant must be brought before the court by a rule or some sufficient process. Burdett v. Commonwealth [Va.] 48 S. E. 878. Where one is adjudged guilty of contempt committed both within and without the presence of the court and a judgment entered against him for both, he is not prejudiced by not having sufficient notice of the proceeding whereby he was punished for the contempt committed without the presence of the court when the punishment imposed therefore had been remitted. Davies v. State [Ark.] 84 S. W. 633. Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2269, authorizing the court to issue a warrant of attachment for a person charged with contempt in certain cases or to make an order requiring him to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, an order to show cause issued after the final judgment in an action for divorce requiring defendant to show cause why he should not be punished for failure to obey an order amending the judgment, the court cannot acquire jurisdiction of the defendant by service of said order on his attorney in the action, it appearing that such attorney has no authority to appear after final judgment. Keller v. Keller, 100 App. Div. 325, 91 N. Y. S. 528. Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2269, a proceeding to punish judgment debtor for contempt in violating a restraining order in supplementary proceedings should be issued by attachment or order to show cause and not by a notice of motion. This objection is waived by failure to make the same at special term. Maigille v. Leonard, 102 App. Div. 367, 92 N. Y. S. 656.

45. It is not indispensable that the party proceeded against be actually served with notice of the application for attachment for contempt. Christensen Engineering Co. v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 774. Parties who appear to contempt proceedings cannot complain of lack of process. Anderson v. Indianapolis Drop Forging Co. [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 277.

46. The application to punish defendant for contempt was properly made in an equity case then pending, instead of proceeding by an independent action commenced in the name of the state. Ferguson v. Wheeler [Iowa] 101 N. W. 638.

47. See 3 C. L. 799.

48. Hunt v. State, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 621.

49. Contempt proceedings are criminal in their nature, and to authorize a conviction, proof of guilt should be clear and convincing. Wells v. District Court of Polk County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 106; Hunt v. State, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 621.

50. Though a proceeding to punish for contempt is criminal in its nature, it is not a criminal case within section 3019, Iowa Code, requiring the county attorney to appear in criminal cases. Brennan v. Roberts, 125 Iowa, 615, 101 N. W. 460.

51. In the absence of statutory provisions, the right to trial by jury does not exist in contempt proceedings. Drady v. District Court of Polk County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 115; O'Neil v. People, 113 Ill. App. 195.

52. A contempt proceeding is not a criminal case or proceeding within the meaning of the constitutions of various states, requiring a party accused of a crime to be confronted with the witnesses against him. O'Neil v. People, 113 Ill. App. 195.

Section 4513, Rev. St. Utah 1898, provides that in criminal prosecutions the defendant shall be confronted with witnesses against him, held that proceedings for contempt for violation of an injunction restraining the infringement of a trade mark were civil against self crimination.[53] At common law a person accused of criminal contempt is entitled to an acquittal and discharge on his sworn denial of the facts charged; and in case of his failure to deny, his punishment may be assessed without the hearing of evidence.[54] This rule does not apply to civil contempts.[55] Contempt proceedings in equity should be determined by the chancellor, though the investigation of the facts may be referred to a vice chancellor or master.[56]

§ 6. Finding and judgment.[57]—To support a conviction of contempt there must be findings reciting the convictions and the facts on which it is based.[58] and if the recited facts do not constitute contempt, the conviction will be set aside.[59] The court may of its own motion remit part of the fine.[60] and it was proper to admit a deposition in evidence. Davidson v. Munsey [Utah] 80 P. 743.

53. It is not in violation of the constitutional provisions requiring that no one shall be compelled to give evidence against himself in any criminal proceeding to enter a rule against a respondent to show cause why he should not be punished for criminal contempt. O'Neil v. People, 113 Ill. App. 195.

54. Anderson v. Indianapolis Drop Forging Co. [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 277. Burn's Ann. St. Ind. 1901, § 1025. Under §§ 654, 656, Code of North Carolina, authorizing the punishment as for contempt of unlawful interference with the proceedings in an action, or acts tending to defeat or impair rights or remedies in an action, a person proceeded against as for contempt for attempting to induce a witness against him to leave the state cannot purge himself of the contempt by avowals of lack of intent. In re Young, 137 N. C. 552, 50 S. E. 220.

55. Christensen v. People, 114 Ill. App. 40; Sloan v. People, 115 Ill. App. 84. A statute regulating contempts of court, prescribing penalties and methods of procedure and authorizing, among other things, an aquittal on a sworn denial of the facts charged as a contempt, but which provides that nothing therein contained shall be construed as affecting proceedings against any party for contempt "for the enforcement of civil rights and remedies" has no application to contempt proceedings in chancery, brought for the violation of the injunctive process of the court, in which the rule has always been that the truth of defendant's answers to interrogatories may be controverted, and the whole matter inquired into and ascertained by the court. Anderson v. Indianapolis Drop Forging Co. [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 277. Iowa Code 1897, tit. 21, c. 17, which prescribes the procedure for the punishment of constructive contempts, and contemplates a trial on the issues raised by accused's answer, instead of treating that answer as conclusive, is not unconstitutional as depriving the courts of their inherent powers, but merely regulates the exercise of such powers; nor does it take away an inherent right possessed by the accused or punish him without due process of law. Drady v. District Court of Polk County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 115. Where defendants were ordered to produce books and papers for inspection at a certain time and failed to properly comply with the order, the burden was on them to show facts excusing their default, in order to relieve them from punishment for contempt. London Guarantee & Acc. Co. v. Doyle, 134 F. 125.

Evidence held to sustain decree adjudging a person guilty of contempt for aiding others who had been enjoined from infringement of a patent in evading the injunction by taking over and conducting the business in his name with actual knowledge of the injunction. Hamilton v. Diamond Drill & Mach. Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 417. Where in proceeding for contempt, based on the charge that the accused had violated a decree enjoining him from selling liquor except in accordance with law, the accused admitted that his saloon was open on the 4th of July and did not deny sale of liquor therein. A denial of a change of venue was not prejudicial. Brennan v. Roberts, 125 Iowa, 615, 101 N. W. 460. It is always within the discretion of the court to allow a party to disclaim contemptuous intent and submit to the order of the court. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Alexander [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 279.

58. When the court adjudges acts or conduct to be a contempt, its adjudication is a conviction. Mahoney v. State, 33 Ind. App. 655, 72 N. E. 151. An order punishing a judgment debtor for contempt in supplementary proceedings, describing the conduct constituting contempt as "willfully disobeying the order requiring him to appear June 14, 1904, for examination," was not objectionable on the ground that the words quoted were merely descriptive of the order, and did not set forth the act or omission of which the debtor was adjudged guilty. New Jersey Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Siebert, 45 Misc. 357, 90 N. Y. S. 468. Under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1211, providing that when a contempt is committed in the immediate presence of the court, it may be punished summarily, and that an order must be made reciting the facts as occurring in such immediate presence, adjudging that the person proceeded against is thereby guilty of contempt and that he be punished as therein prescribed, it was held that the jurisdiction to punish for contempt is special and limited and the authority of the court to render judgment must be shown by the record of conviction. Ex parte Hoar [Cal.] 79 P. 853.

59. Under Ball. Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 5800, requiring an order adjudging a party guilty of contempt in the presence of the § 7. Punishment; fine and commitment; further proceedings.[61]—Punishment to vindicate the dignity of the court lies in its discretion, but punishment to enforce an order for the benefit of the party is of private right and may be compelled by mandamus.[62] Contempt is usually punishable by fine or imprisonment,[63] and where the statute is in the alternative, both cannot be imposed.[64] Costs and attorney's fees are sometimes provided for.[65] Where the contempt results in injury to a party, the fine may take the form of a mulct for his benefit.[66] Payment of fine [67] or making of reparation is usually enforceable by imprisonment.[68] The pleadings of a party in contempt may be stricken out,[69] and in no event will he be heard until the contempt is purged,[70] though there are cases holding that denial of the right to make a defense because of alleged contempt is a taking of property without due court to recite the facts on which it is based, an order or judgment reciting that defendant would be in contempt of court unless he apologized to the presiding judge, and that having failed to apologize he was adjudged guilty of contempt, is in excess of the court to make and the facts recited therein did not constitute a contempt. State v. Pendergast [Wash.] 81 P. 324.

61. See 3 C. L. 800.

62. Crocker v. Conrey, 140 Cal. 213, 73 P. 1006.

63. Under a statute requiring commitments for contempt to be for a definite term, but providing that nothing therein should be construed to limit or control any proceeding against any officer or person for contempt for the enforcement of civil rights, it was held that in a contempt proceeding against a husband for failure to comply with an order issued in an action by a wife against the husband for support, and requiring him to pay a certain sum weekly, the husband could be punished by imprisonment for an indefinite term. Perry v. Pernet [Ind.] 74 N. E. 609. A person guilty of criminal contempt may be committed to jail as authorized by Mass. Rev. Laws, c. 166, § 13, but cannot be imprisoned in the house of correction, as c. 220, Rev. Laws Mass. § 5, authorizing imprisonment in the workhouse of one convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment in a jail does not apply to a case of contempt of court. Hurley v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 74 N. E. 677.

64. Under U. S. Rev. St. § 725, U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 583, limits the power of the United States courts to punish contempt to either fine or imprisonment, and they have no authority to punish by both fine and imprisonment. Moss v. United States, 23 App. D. C. 475.

65. Under section 3368, providing that if actual loss to a party in an action is caused by a contempt, the court, in addition to fine or imprisonment, may order payment to the party aggrieved of a sufficient sum "to indemnify him, and to satisfy his costs and expenses," it was held that in proceedings against one for contempt in violating an injunction restraining him from infringing a trade-mark, it was proper on finding for the plaintiff to award him a reasonable attorney's fee. Davidson v. Munsey [Utah] 80 P. 743. Where one is adjudged guilty of contempt in violating a decree enjoining him from selling liquor except in accordance with law, the judge is expressly authorized by Iowa Code, § 2429, to tax an attorney's fee as part of the costs in addition to ten per cent. of the fine. Brennan v. Roberts, 125 Iowa, 615, 101 N. W. 460. Where the fees to which a sheriff was entitled in a proceeding to punish defendant for contempt in violating orders issued in supplementary proceedings were not fixed in the order nor made part of the fine, such order was erroneous in so far as it provided for defendant's commitment unless he paid the fine and fees. Maigille v. Leonard, 102 App. Div. 367, 92 N. Y. S. 656. Under New York statute in a proceeding to punish for a criminal contempt, costs are not allowable. People v. Marr [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 431.

66. A fine or contempt may be imposed equal to the applicant's actual loss, if the party obstructing the administration of justice caused the loss by his wrongful act. Lorick v. Motley, 69 S. C. 567, 48 S. E. 614. But there must be some evidence which tends to show the amount of such loss, and such loss or damage must be proved according to the rules of law which would govern in a civil action brought to recover damages for loss sustained. Davidson v. Munsey [Utah] 80 P. 743.

67. Section 4633, Rev. St. Wis. 1898, providing that when a fine is imposed as the whole or any part of the punishment for any offense that the defendant shall be committed to the county jail till such fine and costs are paid, but limiting the period of imprisonment does not apply to punishment for contempt, and in cases of commitment for contempt the defendant may be committed until the fine is paid. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Washburn Brewing Co., 122 Wis. 515, 100 N. W. 832.

68. Where one willfully violates an order of the court of competent jurisdiction, he can be imprisoned until he makes such apology and reparation as lies within his power, and, until this is done, he cannot complain of any inaccuracies in the judgment. Ex parte Kruegel [Tex. Cr. App.] 86 S. W. 1020.

69. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1991, authorizing the court to strike out the answer of a party for refusal to attend when required and give his deposition, is unconstitutional, as tending unduly to restrict the right to defend an action. Summerville v. Kelliher, 144 Cal. 155, 77 P. 889.

70. Where plaintiff in a suit in equity is in contempt of court, he has no absolute right to proceed with the trial. Campbell process.[71] Excessive punishment for contempt does not render the judgment void, but only invalid, if at all, as to excess.[72]

§ 8. Discharge or pardon.[73]—When a person is committed for failure to comply with an order requiring him to pay money, the court has power to discharge him from custody on a showing that the failure to pay was due to actual inability to do so;[74] but where the imprisonment was to compel an act for the benefit of a party, the court can order a discharge without notice to such party.[75]

§ 9. Review of proceedings.[76]—Contempt proceedings were not appealable at common law, and in some states this rule obtains,[77] but in most jurisdictions, if the decision is final,[78] appeal or error lies.[79] Where there is no remedy by appeal or error, a more or less limited review on certiorari,[80] mandamus,[81] or habeas corpus,[82]

v. Justices of Superior Court [Mass.] 73 N. E. 659. Where a party to an action is in contempt of court, a court of chancery has power to refuse to allow him to plead further until he has purged himself of the contempt. Bennett v. Bennett [Okl.] 81 P. 632.

75. Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2038, the court has no authority to discharge on habeas corpus proceedings a debtor imprisoned for contempt for failure to appear for further examination in supplementary proceedings, without notice to the creditors on whose application he was imprisoned. People v. Melody, 91 App. Div. 569, 86 N. Y. S. 837.

76. See 3 C. L. 800.

77. Seastream v. New Jersey Exhibition Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 914. An order of the circuit court refusing to punish an alleged violation of an injunction as for contempt is not reviewable on appeal. People v. Ann Arbor R. Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 892. Under Rev. St. Missouri 1899, § 2696, allowing an appeal from a final judgment rendered upon an indictment, a complaint informing the court of a violation of an injunction is not an indictment and judgment rendered thereon is not appealable. State v. Bland [Mo.] 88 S. W. 28.

78. An order punishing a witness for contempt for failure to answer questions in a proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2707, 2709, for discovery as to property of a decedent's estate, is a final order and appealable to the court of appeals. King v. Ashley, 179 N. Y. 281, 72 N. E. 106. A motion to punish a third party for contempt for failing to appear and submit to an examination pursuant to an order of a justice. An order requiring such party to appear and submit to an examination, otherwise commitment to issue, was not a final order, and no appeal therefrom would lie. Siegel v. Solomon, 92 N. Y. S. 238; Field v. White, 102 App. Div. 365, 92 N. Y. S. 848. Under a statute providing for the review of convictions and judgments for contempt of court, an order of an orphan's court directing a writ of attachment to issue for an alleged contempt, made after hearing on an order to show cause, is not appealable. 2 Gen. N. J. St. p. 2600. In re Doland [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 879. Where, in contempt proceeding, a part only of the fine as assessed against the defendant was awarded to the complainant, the proceeding was reviewable by appeal, though if the entire fine had been so awarded the order could have been reviewed only on writ of error. Christensen Engineering Co. v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 774.

79. State v. Bland [Mo.] 88 S. W. 28; Hurley v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 74 N. E. 677. Under section 3406 of the Compiled Laws of New Mexico 1897, which confers jurisdiction upon the supreme court to review by appeal final judgments rendered upon any indictment, an appeal will not lie from a judgment of the district court committing a person to jail for the willful violation of an injunction. Marinan v. Baker [N. M.] 78 P. 531. In Massachusetts under statutes (Rev. Laws, c. 193, § 9; c. 156, § 3) which provide that a judgment in a criminal case may be examined on writ of error and which declare that the supreme judicial court shall have general superintendence of all inferior courts to correct errors, etc., it has been held that a judgment adjudging one guilty of a criminal contempt may be reviewed on writ of error. Hurley v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 74 N. E. 677. Under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 806, providing that any party aggrieved by any judgment in any civil cause from which an appeal is not prohibited by the constitution may appeal from any final judgment in the case, an appeal lies from an order committing for contempt for violating an injunction. State v. Bland [Mo.] 88 S. W. 28.

80. Under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 2065, which provides that a witness need not answer questions, the answers to which would degrade the witness or his character, a judgment of contempt against a witness for refusing to answer certain questions is reviewable on certiorari on the question whether the answers would have a tendency to degrade the witness or his character. Rogers v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 88, 78 P. 344. Under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 2066, providing that a witness can be compelled to answer only such questions as are legal and pertinent to a matter in issue before a tribunal, a judgment of contempt against is usually allowed, and remand on habeas corpus has been held not to be a bar to an application for certiorari.[83] The appellate court can look to the moving papers and the whole judgment in order to ascertain in what the adjudicated contempt consisted.[84] A statement filed by a judge and entered of record, relating to an alleged contempt in the presence of the court, imparts absolute verity,[85] and every intendment will be made in support of the decision;[86] but the reviewing court will not go outside of the record to determine whether there is matter other than that contained in the record which will support a charge of contempt of court.[87]

CONTINUANCE AND POSTPONEMENT.

Postponement of criminal prosecutions is elsewhere treated.[88]

§ 1. Power and duty of court.[89]—The granting or refusal of an application for a continuance is very largely discretionary, and a ruling of a trial court will not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears.[90] But where a legal and a defendant for refusal to answer certain questions is reviewable on certiorari on the question whether the questions were legal and pertinent. Id. Under §§ 4154, 4466, 4468, Iowa Code, the supreme court on certiorari may review the facts in contempt proceeding. Wells v. District Court of Polk County [Iowa] 102 N. W. 106. A writ of mandamus or certiorari will not be granted to review a motion to quash contempt proceeding prior to the final determination thereof. Toepel v. Donovan [Mich.] 102 N. W. 369. The sufficiency of the affidavit which was the basis of a proceeding to punish a party for contempt may be reviewed on certiorari. Hutton v. Superior Court [Cal.] 81 P. 409.

81. The circuit court cannot review by mandamus the action of a committing magistrate in refusing to punish a witness for contempt. Farnham v. Colman [S. D.] 103 N. W. 161.

82. A party committed to jail for contempt by a court without jurisdiction, there being no legal authority for his commitment, is entitled to be discharged on a writ of habeas corpus. Elliott v. United States, 23 App. D. C. 456. Habeas corpus to procure discharge of one committed for contempt of court is a collateral attack upon the judgment of commitment and cannot succeed unless that judgment is absolutely void. Errors, if any, committed by the court in contempt proceeding, can be reviewed and corrected only on appeal. Perry v. Pernet [Ind.] 74 N. E. 609.

83. Under a California statute providing that a judgment on habeas corpus remanding a petitioner is not a bar to a subsequent application of the same kind, it was held that a decision of the supreme court, remanding a petitioner who had sought his discharge from a judgment fining him for contempt of court, was not available as res judicata on certiorari to review the judgment. [S. D.] 101 N. W. 722. Especially where application is not statutory. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Henserlang [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 948. Abuse of discretion must affirmatively appear to warrant interference with ruling. Banker Min. & Mill. Co. v. Allen [Colo. App.] 78 P. 1070. There must have been a palpable abuse of discretion, to the prejudice of the applicant, clearly and affirmatively shown on the record, to warrant reversal for refusal of continuance. Reynolds v. Smith [Fla.] 38 So. 903. Motion for continuance raises a question of fact for the trial term. Hutchinson v. Manchester St. R. Co. [N. H.] 60 A. 1011. Permission to withdraw announcement of ready and verify a plea is discretionary, and refusal is not reviewable unless an abuse appears. Hamilton v. Bell [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 289. Refusal of continuance in midst of trial to permit defense to procure and bring in written document not an abuse of dis-valid excuse for a postponement exists, a party cannot be deprived of his right.[91] Terms to be imposed on granting a continuance are also largely discretionary.[92] If a motion for continuance be overruled for insufficiency, the court may require an election to proceed to trial or consent to a reference, and a consent to a reference so given cannot be said to have been given under duress.[93] A stipulation by attorneys for adjournment of the cause to a certain day will be enforced by the court[94] according to the reasonable construction of their agreement.[95]

The Wisconsin statute relative to loss of jurisdiction by justice courts by adjournment without sufficient cause does not apply to courts of record.[96]

§ 2. Grounds for continuance or postponement. A. In general.[97]—A continuance will not be granted unless it is made to appear that the moving party will be prejudiced by a denial of his motion.[98] Due diligence by the movant or his attorney in preparation of the case,[99] and in procuring the attendance of witnesses or counsel,[1] must also be made to appear. Distance of subject-matter from the place of trial is only one element to be considered in allowing time to prepare for trial, and is never alone conclusive.[2] Where plaintiff does not apply for a continuance, and does not show why he cannot at once proceed to trial, there is no error in overruling an objection to immediately proceeding.[3] Where a second motion for continuance is made on the same ground as the first and it is not claimed that any change of circumstances has occurred since the first was made, the denial of the first may be treated as an adjudication of the question and the second denied on that ground.[4] After a cause has been submitted and a final decree rendered in equity, a continuance will not be granted the defeated party merely to allow him to make further proof.[5] Submission of a cause in equity for hearing without a request for a continuance is a waiver of the right thereto.[6] A civil case for violation of a liquor law will not be postponed until a criminal case based on the same violation has been disposed of.[7]

(§ 2) B. Absence or disability of party or counsel.[8]—Absence of a necessary [9] party is ground for a continuance.[10] Where several continuances have already been granted on account of illness of a party, it is not an abuse of discretion to deny a motion for a further continuance,[11] especially where at preceding term the court has announced that the case will not be again continued, and that interrogatories should be sued out if the party's testimony be desired.[12] While absence of counsel does not entitle a party to a continuance as a matter of absolute right,[13] it will usually be granted on that ground,[14] as where it appears that counsel is ill or engaged before another court,[15] unless it also appears that the movant is represented by other competent counsel and will not be prejudiced by a denial,[16] or that movant had not been duly diligent in procuring other counsel.[17]

19. Where material witness for defendant was beyond jurisdiction and was notified to respond but failed to do so, and a short adjournment was asked, held error to order inquest and enter judgment for plaintiff. Faist v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 89 App. Div. 593, 85 N. Y. S. 646.

20. No continuance where testimony would have been incompetent over defendant's objection. Meyer v. Knott [Mich.] 100 N. W. 907.

21. It must be made to appear that the absent person is in fact a witness to some matter necessary to be shown. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Anderson, 121 Ga. 666, 49 S. E. 791. Proper to deny continuance where only plea was to jurisdiction and absent witness' testimony, if given, would have been on merits. Fox v. Armour Packing Co., 121 Ga. 273, 48 S. E. 924. Testimony of absent witnesses that person on premises of liquor dealer had the appearance of one of legal age, immaterial in action on bond for permitting presence of minor. Brewster v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 685, 88 S. W. 858. Case called after 6 p. m., and witness had left. On request for adjournment, party was excused from there are not other witnesses by whom the facts can be as well proved,[22] that it is not merely cumulative,[23] that due diligence has been exercised to obtain the presence of the desired witness,[24] and that it is reasonably certain that the witness will be present, competent to testfy, when the case is again called.[25] Where continuance for a stated time is asked, it must appear that attendance of the witnesses cannot be sooner procured.[26] Due diligence of the movant must also appear to warrant a continuance for the taking of a deposition,[27] or for non-return of interrogatories.[28] In Iowa a continuance should be granted to take depositions, a party having elected to take testimony in that form.[29]

Admission of testimony to avoid continuance.[30]—Where the adverse party consents that the affidavit for continuance may be read as the deposition of the absent witness, a continuance is properly denied.[31] The testimony of witnesses as contained in the affidavit should be accorded the same credit as would be given the oral testimony of such witnesses if personally present and testifying.[32] Where two defendants are hostile to each other, a continuance should not be denied on the motion of one, on account of the admission by plaintiff of facts to which an absent witness would testify, unless the other defendant also consents to the admission of such facts as testimony.[33]

(§ 2) D. Surprise.[34]—A continuance should be granted where an amendment to a pleading presents a new issue,[35] or where evidence is allowed to be intro-making affidavit of materiality of testimony of absent witness, on ground that he had answered "ready" and adjournment would be refused. Held, party prejudiced, and new trial granted. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co. v. New York City R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 374.

22. Conlan v. Murry, 92 N. Y. S. 58.

23. Where testimony of absent witness would not have affected result, since covered by other witnesses, refusal of continuance to procure his testimony is not ground for reversal of judgment. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Oilis [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 850.

24. Where subpoena was issued twelve days before trial, and was not served, and witness was not paid or tendered his fees, continuance to procure his presence denied. Hicks v. Porter [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 437. Motion denied for want of diligence where it appeared that physician had ordered witness to leave county for his health ten days before, but it did not appear that the attorney did not then know of such fact, or that his deposition could not be procured, or that the witness was unable to be present. Banker Min. & Mill Co. v. Allen [Colo. App.] 78 P. 1070.

25. Where it appeared that insane person would not recover for months, and perhaps never, denial of postponement for his testimony proper. In re Burbank's Estate, 34 Civ. Proc. R. 247, 93 N. Y. S. 866. Where two continuances had been granted to allow a party to procure a witness, and the sheriff, with bench warrant, could not find him, and it appeared to be doubtful if he could testify if obtained, owing to his mental condition, refusal of third continuance proper. Leghorn v. Nydell [Wash.] 80 P. 833.

26. Conlan v. Murry, 92 N. Y. S. 58.

27. When party was not diligent in retaking deposition, and did not show what additional testimony was expected in case the deposition was retaken, denial of continuance for the purpose was proper. Louisville Rock Co. v. Cain, 26 Ky. L. R. 849, 82 S. W. 619. Delay of three years in securing deposition of surveyor whose name could have been learned from examination of records in his office fatal to motion for continuance to secure such deposition. Hicks v. Porter [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 437.

28. Civ. Code 1895, § 5136. Not due diligence where party depended on adverse party to pay expense of interrogatories. Thompson v. Hays [Ga.] 51 S. E. 33.

30. See 3 C. L. 804.

31. Manders' Committee v. Easter State Hospital [Ky.] 84 S. W. 761. Where testimoney of absent witness was cumulative only and affidavit of counsel as to what witness would testify to was read, denial held proper. City of Covington v. Bostwick, 26 Ky. L. R. 780, 82 S. W. 569. No adjournment where party admitted competent portion of absent witness' testimony. Meyer v. Knott [Mich.] 100 N. W. 907.

32. Held error to refuse to so instruct jury where affidavit was admitted to avoid continuance. Bloomington & Normal R. Co. v. Gabbert, 111 Ill. App. 147. See 3 C. L. 804, n. 14, 15, 16.

33. Doyle v. St. Louis Transit Co., 103 Mo. App. 19, 77 S. W. 471.

34. See 3 C. L. 804.

35. Where issues presented were simple negligence and contributory negligence, and amended complaint presented wanton negligence, it was an abuse of discretion to refuse continuance of at least twenty days in which defense could be prepared. Wright v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Wash.] 80 P. 197. Amendment of complaint in personal induced of facts not pleaded and of which the adverse party had no notice.[36] But the claim of surprise is untenable where the amendment merely conforms the pleadings to proof already in,[37] or merely amplifies and renders more specific matters already pleaded,[38] or where the proof, though constituting a variance from the complaint, conforms to the claim alleged and proved by defendant.[39] Failure of the adverse party to file a copy of an account is not ground for continuance where it does not appear that the moving party cannot prepare, and where he does not object to the evidence offered.[40] Unauthorized entries by the clerk, leading a defendant to believe a case had been discontinued, do not entitle him to a continuance at the ensuing term when the court subsequently struck out such entries and the case was regularly placed on the calendar.[41] An opposing party should not be forced to trial on the day a supplemental pleading is filed.[42] A demand for a bill of particulars is not alone equivalent to a request for a continuance.[43] A continuance will not ordinarily be granted on the ground of surprise following a ruling on a motion for a nonsuit.[44]

§ 3. Sufficiency of affidavits or moving papers.[45]—In deciding upon the sufficiency of an affidavit for continuance, no presumption favorable to the appellant will be indulged.[46] It is commonly required that the affidavit should allege that the application is not made for the purpose of delay,[47] and that the movant has been duly diligent,[48] and, if application is by the defendant, it must show that he has a meritorious defense.[49] The affidavit for continuance to procure attendance of absent witnesses should show what testimony was expected of the absent witness,[50] and should state that the expected testimony is true or that applicant believes it to be jury action held to introduce new element, not in previous actions, and to warrant postponement. Denial ground for new trial. McDonald v. Holbrook, Cabot & Daly Contracting Co., 93 N. Y. S. 920.

36. Request to withdraw juror should have been granted where evidence was put in of injury not pleaded, and of which no notice was given. Brown v. Manhattan R. Co., 82 App. Div. 222, 81 N. Y. S. 755.

37. Claim of surprise untenable where counterclaim was amended so as to conform to proof, the variance having been called to the parties' attention in a former opinion in the same case. Finlen v. Heinze [Mont.] 80 P. 918. Continuance not granted where amendment, allowed after the parties had rested, merely conformed pleading to proofs already in, both parties having put in evidence on point covered by amendment. Tyler v. Bowen, 124 Iowa, 452, 100 N. W. 505.

38. Denial of continuance proper where amended petition merely amplified and rendered more specific matters complained of in original petition. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Henserlang [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 948. An amendment merely amplifying grounds of recovery already stated does not work surprise. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cluck [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 852 An amendment merely adding an evidentiary fact, the pleading being sufficient without it, does not work surprise entitling adverse party to continuance. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hirsch [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 394.

48. Application must state that due diligence has been used to procure testimony of absent witnesses. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1277. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Needham [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 22.

49. City of Elgin v. Nofs, 113 Ill. App. 618. Denial of continuance for absence of counsel proper where defendant did not make such showing. City of Elgin v. Nofs, 212 Ill. 20, 72 N. E. 43.

50. Copper River Min. Co. v. McClellan [C. C. A.] 138 F. 333. Affidavit for continuance in bastardy case, setting out that absent witness would testify that he saw a man other than defendant having intercourse with prosecutrix at or about the time of conception, held sufficient without stating the name of the man so seen. State v. Gordy [Del. Gen. Sess.] 60 A. 977.

true.[51] If the moving party does not personally know to what the absent witness will testify, he must present the affidavit of his informant upon that fact.[52] The affidavit for continuance because of the absence of a party to the cause should disclose fully the precise facts of the substance of the testimony expected to the proven by such party,[53] and that such facts cannot be sufficiently proven by other witnesses.[54] Where it appears that the absent witness is the only disinterested person by whom a material fact can be proved, the motion for continuance is not defective because of failure to allege that such material fact cannot be proved by any one else.[55] The verification of the application must comply with legal requirements.[56] That the motion is for a longer adjournment than the court has power to grant does not prevent a proper adjournment.[57]

§ 4. Appellate procedure.[58]—Where an affidavit for a continuance is read in evidence as the deposition of an absent witness, the continuance being denied, on appeal, the same effect will be given statements in such affidavits as though contained in depositions.[59]

§ 1. Nature and formal requisites. A. Definition and kinds of contracts; parties.[63]—A contract is an agreement by which at least one of the concurring parties acquires a right to an act or a forbearance upon the part of the other or others.[64] Anything not forbidden by law may legally become the subject or the motive of a contract.[65] The right is limited by the consideration that the contract must be an honest and legal one, and the right of the other party to expect such a contract must not be impaired.[66]

Contracts are either executed or executory. An executed contract is one in which all the parties thereto have performed all the obligations which they have originally assumed, and an executory contract one in which something remains to be done by one or more of the parties.[67]

Contracts are also either written or oral. It has been held that they will be presumed to have been oral in the absence of a showing to the contrary;[68] but the general rule is that if writing is essential to the validity of a contract, it will be presumed.[69] A written contract is not legal evidence of an oral one.[70] It is not necessary in order to make a written contract that the terms thereof be reduced to writing in a formal way on one piece of paper, but it is sufficient if a written offer by or on behalf of one party is accepted by or on behalf of the other, and the language

An instrument admitting an indebtedness, providing for its payment on the happening of certain contingencies, and stating the manner of payment, is a contract, whether based on transactions had between the parties at its date, or the result of an agreement relating to past transactions. 67. Hardwick v. American Can Co. [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 797. A contract between attorney and client whereby the former in consideration of services to be rendered by him in prosecuting certain actions is to have a part of the amount recovered, is executory merely, the cause of action remaining in the client and the attorney taking no interest therein, either by way of assignment or lien. Weller v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 459. Where anything remains to be done by either or both parties to a contract of sale, before delivery, either to determine the identity, quantity, or price of the thing sold, the contract is executory, and title does not vest in the purchaser. Robinson v. Stricklin [Neb.] 102 N. W. 479. Mason v. Lievre, 145 Cal. 514, 78 P. 1040. A contract for the sale of a certain portion of crops yet to be planted, the portion sold to be identified by means of a certain standard set forth therein, is executory, and title does not pass until the part sold is separated and delivered to the buyer. Robinson v. Stricklin [Neb.] 102 N. W. 479. Where defendants paid full consideration at the time of the execution of a contract for the sale of timber to them, held, that the contract was an executed one, though it contained the words "agrees to sell." used shows a meeting of the minds on some particular subject-matter.[71] The execution of one copy of a contract renders it effective and binding, even though a duplicate is afterwards executed.[72] If the original contract signed by defendant has not been changed, the fact that a purported duplicate offered in evidence is not the same as the original does not change or affect his liability.[73] A written contract need not necessarily be signed by both of the parties thereto.[74] An agreement to contract is, of course, not a final contract because something is left open.[75] Thus where the parties make the reduction of the contract to writing and its signature by them a condition precedent to its completion, it will not be a contract until it is reduced to writing and signed.[76] But where they assent to all of its terms, the mere reference to a future contract in writing will not negative the existence of a present and completed one.[77]

A quasi contract exists independently of the intention of the parties, and is founded upon the doctrine of unjust enrichment.[78] Its origin may be in the partial performance of a contract, as where a partial performance has resulted in benefit to the other party.[79] An express contract excludes an implied one covering the same subject.[80]

71. Report of creditors' committee advising compromise and agreement by creditor to accept compromise held to constitute written contract. Corbett v. Joannes [Wis.] 104 N. W. 69. Evidence held to show contract made by correspondence for employment of plaintiff at a reasonable compensation to be fixed in future. Walker Mfg. Co. v. Knox [C. C. A.] 136 F. 534. See, also, post, § 1, B.

72. Rule that written contract cannot be modified or altered by proof of what was said by the parties before or during the making of it does not prevent proof of an oral waiver of a provision made after the execution of one copy of the contract but before the execution of a duplicate. Morehouse v. Terrill, 111 Ill. App. 460. Each copy of a contract executed in duplicate is primary evidence, and one party, by proving that his copy is lost, has no right to prove its contents by parol, where he has taken no steps to cause the other party to produce the duplicate copy in his possession. Norris v. Billingsley [Fla.] 37 So. 564.

73. Standard Mfg. Co. v. Hudson [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 137.

74. A contract for the sale of land need not be signed by the purchaser. Hyden v. Perkins, 26 Ky. L. R. 1099, 83 S. W. 128. The fact that the vendee in a contract to purchase land has not signed it does not render it any the less binding on him where he has paid a portion of the purchase price and gone into possession. Cannot by actual fraud made possible by reason of possession thus obtained, obtain title and hold it adversely to vendor. Butterfield v. Nogales Copper Co. [Ariz.] 80 P. 345. Though the grantee in a deed containing an assumption clause does not sign it, yet, if he accepts the instrument and places it on record with knowledge of its contents, he is bound thereby as effectually as though he had done so. 75. Carlisle v. Barnes, 102 App. Div. 573, 92 N. Y. S. 917. Where contract obligated defendants to furnish lease to plaintiff with option to purchase, and plaintiff refused to accept lease because of certain litigation to which defendants were not parties and for which they were not responsible, plaintiff could not maintain action for specific performance or damages on such option. Livesley v. Muckle [Or.] 80 P. 901.

77. Where employer assented to terms of written draft of proposed contract of employment, and told employe to go to work and it would be fixed up later, held, that there was a completed contract though written contract was never signed, and employe could recover compensation provided for in proposed contract. Featherstone Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Criswell [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 30. Principal making contract signed by one party and acted on by the other binding on both is not applicable so as to render such contract written instead of oral. Id. Defendant held estopped by its conduct to contend that the execution of formal written contract for oil was condition precedent to plaintiff's right to recover for failure to furnish oil. Vicksburg Waterworks Co. v. Guffy Petroleum Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 302. Agreement by defendant to enter into written contract with plaintiff and others to furnish them such quantities of fuel oil as they might require during one year at a specified price, held to be itself a binding and enforceable contract, though it did not state the amount of oil to be delivered to each party. Id. In suit on contract to employ plaintiff as attorney to recover claims against the government, held that defendant waived requirement that contract be reduced to writing. Carlisle v. Barnes, 102 App. Div. 573, 92 N. Y. S. 917.

79. Benefit conferred on defendant and not detriment incurred by plaintiff is basis of the liability. Dame v. Woods [N. H.] 60 A. 744.

80. Applies to building contracts where substantial performance is not shown.

An alternative contract is one whereby a person promises to do one of several things specified.[81]

Parties.[82]—A person may become a party to a contract by entering into it himself, either directly [83] or through his duly authorized agent,[84] or by accepting a stipulation made in his favor by the contracting parties,[85] or by adopting as his own a contract entered into by third persons.[86] It has been held that one not a party to an offer may, by accepting it, become a joint contractor,[87] and of course if the offer is to the public generally, whosoever shall accept becomes a party.[88] One contracting on behalf of himself and another is estopped to deny the rights of the latter, though he made the contract in his own name alone.[89]

Everyone has the right to determine with whom he will contract and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent.[90] As a general rule only parties to the contract are bound thereby,[91] and they alone can enforce it; [92] but if

Burke v. Coyne [Mass.] 74 N. E. 942. An express contract as to the price to be paid for services controls, and where it exists there can be no implied contract to pay what they are reasonably worth. 85. He remaining a stranger until he becomes a party by accepting it. Allen & C. Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 113 La. 1091, 37 So. 980. These two methods are necessarily exclusive of each other. Id. A stipulation pour autrui on which the beneficiary may sue may result by implication. Id.

86. Instead of reducing their agreement to writing the parties may, by reference or otherwise, adopt the terms of an existing contract between others. Contract of railroad company to build spur track. Butler v. Tifton, T. & G. R. Co., 121 Ga. 817, 49 S. E. 763. In an action on an agreement between plaintiff and defendant made on the terms of a contract between defendant and a third person, held not necessary for plaintiff to show an assignment of the contract to him. American Electrical Works v. New England Elec. R. Const. Co., 186 Mass. 546, 72 N. E. 64. Is bound thereby in the same manner as though he had originally made it himself. Where contract cancelling previous one for sale of land recited sales of timber by vendee to various parties and provided that latter might remove it within certain time, held, that vendor thereby adopted such contracts of sale. Watson v. Gross [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 104. One purchasing the subject of a written contract and undertaking its performance thereby makes it his own. Oral adoption by railroad company purchasing another line, of contract whereby latter agreed to maintain its offices and shops in certain town held binding and not within statute of frauds. City of Tyler v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 238.

87. Plaintiff made an offer in writing to furnish machinery to "G. & Co.," such offer to be subject to the approval of the plaintiff's manager. The written acceptance was worded: "Your proposal as above is hereby accepted," signed "G. & Co. By S. S. G., W. B. G., T. H. G." W. B. G. was not an agent for G. & Co., but signed the acceptance individually. Held, that by joining in the acceptance of the offer the defendant became a joint contractor, although the offer was not addressed to him. Gill v. General Elec. Co. [C. C. A.] 129 F. 349.

Note: Several courts adopt the anomalous doctrine that where one not mentioned in the body of a simple contract signs his name thereto, he thereby makes himself a joint contractor; and this irrespective of whether the offer was made to him. Clark v. Rawson, 2 Denio [N. Y.] 135; Staples v. Wheeler, 38 Me. 372. There can be no meeting of the minds where the offeror has not the acceptor in mind in making the offer. Evans v. Conken, 24 N. Y. S. 1081; Lancaster v. Roberts, 144 Ill. 213. The better view would be to regard him as surety, but in that case the consideration must be recited in order to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Gould v. Moring, 28 Barb. [N. Y.] 444.—4 Columbia L. R. 512.

89. Murphy v. Smith, Walker & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 678.

90. Langdon v. Hughes, 113 Ill. App. 203. One cannot make himself the creditor of another without the latter's consent. Evidence sufficient to support finding that defendant borrowed money from plaintiff's deceased wife and not from him. Id. If defendant believed she was borrowing money from plaintiff's wife, though the money was in fact his, she was not liable therefor to him in action of assumpsit. Id. And see Novation, 4 C. L. 838.

91. In action on contract whereby defendant agreed to return certain bags to plaintiffs filled with grain, and to pay a certain price for all not returned or accounted for by certain date, but in which defendant has also been guilty of a breach of duty to a third person as well as a breach of contract, he cannot escape liability to such third person by setting up such contract.[93]

The term privity denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property.[94] Privity has been called "a mode of becoming a party." [95]

There is a conflict of authority as to the right of a third person to enforce a contract made for his benefit, to which he is not a party, though as a general rule twine was not mentioned, held error to render judgment for twine, where evidence, though showing contract by defendant with third person in regard to it, failed to show that plaintiffs had been substituted as the parties in interest. Curtin v. Ingle, 143 Cal. 354, 77 P. 74. Tenant's wife not bound to care for landlord's room under tenant's agreement to do so, but if her services are, with her consent, rendered by way of performance thereof, his liability is thereby extinguished. Kennedy v. Swisher [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 724. A stipulation in a contract between the relief department of a railroad company and an employe that the bringing of a suit against the company by his representative or beneficiary or the payment by the company of any damages recovered against it by reason of his death or injury shall release the department from all claims by reason of the employe's membership, is not void as attempting to bind persons not parties to it. Rights of beneficiary are fixed by contract. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Ray [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 942. A contract signed by two persons as sureties for one about to enter an old men's home, but not by the latter, in which they covenant that he has no property and that he will convey any which he may acquire to the institution, is not the contract of the inmate and he cannot be held liable by virtue thereof. Baltimore Humane Impartial Soc. v. Pierce [Md.] 60 A. 277. Where plaintiff claimed proceeds of certain cattle deposited in bank to credit of R., agreement between plaintiff's agent and manager of company by which cattle were sold and money deposited that plaintiff should have time to investigate and bring suit to which neither the bank or R. were parties, was not binding on them. Drumm-Flato Com. Co. v. Gerlach Bank, 107 Mo. 426, 81 S. W. 503. Where purchasers of land took with notice of a prior sale of timber thereon, a promise by their grantor to secure or release of the timber contract was unavailing as against those claiming under it. Brodack v. Morsbach [Wash.] 80 P. 275. Where a contract is under seal, no one can sue or be sued to enforce the covenants therein contained, except those who are named as parties to the instrument, and who signed and sealed the same. If made by an attorney or agent, must be made in the name of the principal. Spencer v. Huntington, 100 App. Div. 463, 34 Civ. Proc. R. 30, 91 N. Y. S. 561. This is true though a seal is not essential to the validity of the contract. Persons not parties to contract under seal for purchase of stocks, alleged to have been made for their benefit, held not liable thereon. Id.

92. A mere stranger to a contract cannot maintain an action thereon. Contract between plaintiff's father and deceased, whereby plaintiff was to live with and work for deceased until he became of age in consideration of which deceased would provide by will or otherwise for him to have half his estate, held not to give plaintiff right of action against decedent's estate, though he performed the services and deceased failed to comply with his contract. Cooper v. Claxton [Ga.] 50 S. E. 399. One cannot recover damages for breach of a contract unless he is privy thereto, either from having been a party to it originally or from having accepted a provision therein in his favor, no matter how directly damages may result from the breach. Allen & C. Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 113 La. 1091, 37 So. 980. The fact that defendants' title to a part of the machinery of their mill is defective is no defense to an action for breach of a contract whereby plaintiff agreed to enter into a joint enterprise with them for the manufacture of staves, there being no privity between plaintiff and the real owner of the machinery. Cannot be considered to reduce damages. Alderton v. Williams [Mich.] 102 N. W. 753. One not a party to a contract cannot, as a general rule, sue in respect of a reach of duty arising out of the contract. O'Donnell v. Rosenthal, 110 Ill. App. 225. Parties building piers, etc., not liable for injuries to scow belonging to third persons resulting from failure to remove piles in accordance with contract, where they were otherwise under no obligation to do so. Conklin v. Staats [N. J. Err. & App.] 59 A, 144.

93. Action by administrator of lessee's infant son for damages for death alleged to have been caused by failure of lessor to furnish steam in accordance with contract with lessee. O'Donnell v. Rosenthal, 110 Ill. App. 225.

94. Where lessee under gas lease mingles gas from demised premises with that of other persons so as to constitute a confusion of goods, and is compelled to pay and account to them for the whole mass of gas, the lessor is not entitled to collect from such persons the royalties on the gas taken from his land, there being no privity of contract or estate. Aiken v. Zahn, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 411. There is no privity of contract between one furnishing provisions to a railroad contractor and an indemnity company giving a bond to the railroad conditioned for the payment of persons supplying provisions to the contractor, so as to enable him to recover on such bond as a common-law obligation. Armour & Co. v. Western Const. Co., 36 Wash. 329, 78 P. 1106.

Georgia: Railroad company, though not party to agreement whereby its promoters agreed to render services in furthering the enterprise without compensation, held entitled, as matter of defense, to negative any implied promise to pay for such services by showing that they were rendered for its benefit in pursuance thereof. Powell v. Georgia, etc., R. Co., 121 Ga. 803, 49 S. E. 759.

In Illinois he may do so. Thus if part of the consideration for a conveyance is the assumption by the grantee of a mortgage on the premises, the mortgagee may enforce the agreement in an action at law for his benefit. Merriman v. Schmitt, 211 Ill. 263, 71 N. E. 986.

In Indiana may do so, though he was not privy to it, and no consideration passed from him to the party bound. Agreement to place telephone in plaintiff's house in consideration of release of right of way by other persons held mutual. Foster v. Leininger [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 164. Third person need not allege an acceptance thereof, since an acceptance is implied from bringing suit upon it. Id.

In Iowa, where one, for a sufficient consideration agrees to assume and pay the debt of another, the creditor is impliedly included as within the privity o the promise and may sue the promisor by direct action. Malanaphy v. Fuller & J. Mg. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 640. In such case the rights of the creditor are to be measured by the terms of the agreement, and he takes subject to all the equities existing between the principal parties thereto. Where on sale of firm's business, purchaser assumed a debt of the firm as part of consideration therefor, and as between them the seller assumed the obligation of surety therefor, the creditor was bound to observe such relation and release of one of purchasing firm released seller. Acceptance by creditor of note signed by both firms did not change rule. Id. One who on a sufficient consideration, agrees with another to pay the future balance of the latter's open account to a third person, is liable to pay balance found due on investigation of its accuracy. Rule not changed because claim is on an account stated. Runkle v. Kettering [Iowa] 102 N. W. 142. In such case the defense of want of consideration is as available to defendant as though the suit had been brought by the other party to the contract. Id.

In Kansas third parties not privy to the contract or to the consideration thereof may sue thereon to enforce any stipulation made for their especial benefit or interest. A contract by one of the creditors of a decedent to pay all of the debts of the estate in consideration of the other acknowledging payment of a judgment against the estate, and of the heirs conveying certain tracts of land to them, may be enforced by the administrator after the heirs have ratified it by making the required conveyances, though neither he nor the heirs knew of the contract when it was made. Stewart v. Rogers [Kan.] 80 P. 58.

In Louisiana may sue on contract containing provision in his favor which he has accepted. Allen & C. Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 113 La. 1091, 37 So. 980.

In Missouri laborers and materialmen may sue on a bond given by a contractor for a public improvement, conditioned on his paying for labor and material furnished, as a contract made for their benefit. Buffalo Forge Co. v. Cullen & S. Mfg. Co., 105 Mo. App. 484, 79 S. W. 1024. Provision authorizing assignment of bond to laborers and materialmen and providing that in case of assignment it shall inure to benefit of all laborers and materialmen does not prevent a materialman who is the only creditor of the contractor from suing on it without an assignment as a contract for his benefit. Id.

In Montana a contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it. Evidence held to show sufficient privity of contract between plaintiff and abstract company to enable former to maintain suit against latter for damages resulting from failure of abstract to disclose judgment against owner of lands seeking loan thereon, where defendant knew that abstract was to be furnished for plaintiff's exclusive benefit and that it would rely thereon. Western Loan & Sav. Co. v. Silver Bow Abstract Co. [Mont.] 78 P. 774.

New Jersey: Evidence in action to recover for services rendered in assisting deputy marshal held not sufficient to justify court in finding as a matter of law a contract whereby a third person was to receive the entire compensation for such services, so as to require a nonsuit for lack of privity, though it may have shown that she had some beneficial interest therein. Murray v. Pfeiffer [N. J. Err. & App.] 59 A. 147.

New York: Where defendant agreed with one member of a firm that, if latter would sell his interest to defendant's brother for a certain price, he would pay the firm debts, but it did not appear that defendant received any of the firm assets, the promise was for the protection of the retiring partner only, and could not be enforced by firm creditors not parties thereto. Caeser v. Kulla, 92 N. Y. S. 798. An agreement between defendant and his son's wife whereby he was to make certain payments to trustees for the benefit of herself and her children, to which the trustees were not parties, held enforceable by her, and she was entitled to sue thereon in her own name. Recknagel v. Steinway, 94 N. Y. S. 119.

Pennsylvania: Bond given by contractor performing work under a municipal contract conditioned to pay claims for labor and material, held to embrace in the class of persons entitled to sue thereon a materialman furnishing material to a subcontractor. Bowditch v. Gourley, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 342.

South Carolina: Under an agreement be-benefit of a third person so as to entitle him to sue thereon is one of intention.[97] There is a strong presumption, however, that the contract was made solely for the benefit of the parties thereto.[98]

One with whom or in whose name a contract for the benefit of another is made may sue thereon in his own name as the trustee of an express trust.[99]

A party signing a contract in his own name as an individual may properly sue thereon to compel payment for the work done, notwithstanding a private understanding between himself and a third person whereby the latter becomes a partner in the enterprise.[1]

Execution.—To prove the execution of a chattel mortgage, where one of the subscribing witnesses is absent from the country, it is only necessary to call the other witness, and in case his recollection is at fault, the facts in regard to the execution may be proved by the mortgagor.[2]

Delivery.—The necessity for the delivery of the contract generally arises in connection with deeds [3] or promissory notes, and questions relating thereto are therefore treated in connection with those subjects.[4]

(§ 1) B. Offer and acceptance.[5]—Since no contract is complete without the mutual assent of the parties,[6] their minds must meet as to all its essential terms.[7]

tween two brothers to pay the proceeds of certain insurance policies to their sisters, the latter may sue thereon. Willoughby v. Willoughby [S. C.] 50 S. E. 208.

In Wisconsin one for whose benefit a contract is made between two other persons may enforce it at law without any prior acceptance thereof on his part. Gilbert Paper Co. v. Whiting Paper Co. [Wis.] 102 N. W. 20. Where one, for a valuable consideration moving from another, agrees to pay money to a third person, the latter may, at his election, sue to enforce such promise, and in the interval the original grantor of the property or payor of the consideration has no power of revocation. General creditor of promisee cannot, in such case maintain garnishment proceedings against promisor, since latter has no money or property belonging to him. Id.

98. Allen & C. Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 113 La. 1091, 37 So. 980. Agreement by waterworks company to lease five hydrants to city and to furnish water for use of fire department, held engagement in favor of city and not of inhabitants individually. Not a stipulation pour autrui in their favor, and they had no right to sue thereon. Id. Rule not changed by fact that contract recited that it was entered into "in consideration of the public benefit and of the protection to property." Id.

One under no obligation to pay for medical services rendered to another cannot be held responsible therefor in the absence of a promise to pay relied on by the physician rendering them. Must appear that he said or did something showing an intent to pay for them. Evidence insufficient to show contract. Dorion v. Jacobson, 113 Ill. App. 563. Statute declaring that avails of life insurance policy are not subject to insured's debts in absence of a special contract (Code, § 3313) requires a meeting of the minds and all the essentials of a valid contract. By railroad company for transportation of lead to Japan by steamer leaving on certain day. Northern P. R. Co. v. American Trading Co., 195 U. S. 439, 49 Law. Ed. 269. In action to recover for services under an alleged contract to design and prepare models for statue, instruction that evidence was insufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover held properly refused as ignoring plaintiff's own evidence. Hodges v. Pike [Md.] 59 A. 178. In action on contract whereby defendant employed plaintiff to transport men to his camps, finding that defendant agreed to pay a certain sum for every man shipped to him rather than for every one received sustained on conflicting evidence. Idol v. San Francisco Const. Co. [Cal. App.] 81 P. 665.

Evidence insufficient to establish contract: Authorizing work of installing mining machinery to be done on defendant's account. Abner Doble Co. v. McDonald, 145 Cal. 641, 79 P. 369. Evidence in action for specific performance of contract to convey land held to support finding that there was no independent verbal agreement made at the time of the writing requiring defendant to construct a house on the land. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 464. To sustain finding that plaintiff was employed to prepare plans for building, or that defendant's testator ever accepted or used such plans, or derived any benefit from them. Minuth v. Barnwell, 94 N. Y. S. 649. Agreement between plaintiff, defendant, and firm of brokers for employment of plaintiff and the firm to sell certain property and an apportionment of commissions between them superseding the original employment of plaintiff. Teesdale v. Bennett, 123 Wis. 355, 101 N. W. 688. To show agreement on basis of contemplated written building contract, which was never made on account of a final disagreement as to its terms, and which would have taken the place of the preliminary provisional agreement sued on. Building contract. Holland v. Ryan, 92 N. Y. S. 242. In an action to recover deposit made to secure the execution of a contract for the sale of realty evidence insufficient to support finding that prospective seller promised to insert stipulation that property was of a certain rental value. Rosenbloom v. Cohen, 91 N. Y. S. 382. Statement of attorney for plaintiff held not an agreement to release defendant in a capias from his obligation to surrender himself to jail in case he failed to secure his discharge as an insolvent, in accordance with the terms of a bond given by him. Irwin v. Hudson, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 72. To show that plaintiff agreed to provision limiting carrier's liability. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McIntyre [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen [C. C. A.] 137 F. 403. Proposal submitted with reference to fireproofing of building held ineffectual, and there was no contract for a deduction of sum proposed therefor, upon change in plans by which it was omitted. Connors v. United States, 130 F. 609. Prima facie the custody of an infant is in the father, and a contract relinquishing this right must be established by clear and strong evidence. Evidence insufficient. Looney v. Martin [Ga.] 51 S. E. 304. Evidence to establish special contract required by Iowa Code, § 3313, to make proceeds of life insurance policy subject to insured's debts must be clear and satisfactory. In re Donaldson's Estate, 126 Iowa, 174, 101 N. W. 870. Evidence insufficient to show that policies were taken out in pursuance of contract with creditor. Id.

Contracts alleged to have been made with persons since deceased must be established by the clearest and most convincing evidence. If based on parol evidence, it should be given or corroborated in all substantial particulars by disinterested witnesses. Promise by father of illegitimate child to settle certain sum on it. Rosseau v. Rouss, 180 N. Y. 116, 72 N. E. 916.

Evidence insufficient: To show contract to reimburse plaintiff for expenses incurred in certain trips which she took as decedent's companion. Apollonio v. Langley, 94 N. Y. S. 274. In any event insufficient to authorize her to charge up cost of clothes. Id. To support finding of parol agreement,

There must in every case be an offer by one party and an acceptance thereof by the other.[8] An offer of course imposes no obligation until it is accepted,[9] and may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance,[10] but not thereafter.[11] In order to convert it into a contract, the acceptance must be absolute and unconditional.[12] A proposal to accept or an acceptance upon terms varying from those offered is a rejection of the offer, and puts an end to the negotiations, unless the party making the orig-partly performed, to will property to defendant. Pattat v. Pattat, 93 App. Div. 102, 87 N. Y. S. 140. To show definite parol contract obligation to devise land. Lozier v. Hill [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 234.

Evidence sufficient: To authorize submission of claim for services rendered deceased in discovering ore on mining claim, and for which it was alleged the latter agreed to pay a certain sum, to the jury, and directing of verdict for defendant, held error. Titus v. Bernard [Colo. App.] 77 P. 256. To show contract by decedent to convey land to plaintiff if he and his wife would live with decedent and attend to her business, and to show performance on his part. Turner v. Burr [Mich.] 101 N. To show that deceased intended and agreed to pay plaintiff for services rendered during his last sickness. Birch v. Birch [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 1106. See, also, Wills, 4 C. L. 1863.

Where claims for services are made against the estate of a decedent which were not presented to him during his lifetime, it must be clearly proved by disinterested witnesses that such services were accepted with an intent to pay therefor. Evidence held to show that services rendered by daughter-in-law, and for which no claim was made until after provisions of the will were known, were not under contract of employment. Rock v. Rock, 93 N. Y. S. 646. Claim for services, there being no opportunity for a demand, since the agreement was to pay therefor by will. Bair v. Hager, 97 App. Div. 358, 90 N. Y. S. 27. inal offer renews it, or assents to the modification suggested.[13] It is a new proposal[14] which must, in its turn, be accepted by the party making the original offer.[15] The acceptance of an offer as made is not rendered conditional because accompanied by a request for departure from its terms as to time and place of performance.[16] A party having once rejected the offer cannot afterwards revive it by tendering an acceptance of it.[17]

In the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, an oral acceptance is sufficient.[18]

Where the parties have adopted the mail as a means of communication in their negotiations, the mailing of a letter accepting an offer makes a complete and binding contract dating from the moment of the deposit of the letter in the postoffice unless the offer is so qualified as to require a receipt of the letter to constitute an acceptance.[19] It is immaterial in such case that the acceptance is delayed or lost and never received by the party making the offer.[20] The fact that the parties have previously used the mail as a means of communication in conducting their negotiations,[21] or that their situation is such as to make it highly probable that each contemplates its use, justifies its use in accepting an offer.[22] Proof that the letter was actually received, accompanied by proof of when it was written renders it unneces-

13. Brophy v. Idaho Produce & Provision Co. [Mont.] 78 P. 493. Order for "choice potatoes" is not an acceptance of proposal to sell "nice white potatoes (peerless stock)." Id. Proposal to sell ten cars of potatoes is not accepted by order requiring cars to average a certain number of pounds. Id. Proposal to sell ten cars of potatoes for winter use is not accepted by order of eight cars for winter storage. Id. Order for potatoes requiring seller to select the stock and send no small ones is not an acceptance of an offer to sell 10 cars of "nice white potatoes (peerless stock)." Id. In action on subscription contract, instruction that if, after it had been signed, plaintiff demanded an additional subscription as a condition of building the road, defendant had a right to treat the negotiations as at an end and withdraw his subscription, and that it could not be collected, held proper. Doherty v. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899. Proviso that demand and withdrawal must have been made before plaintiff had commenced construction held unnecessary and erroneous, but harmless. Id. Acceptance of offer to furnish feed, and pens and water to feed cattle, held to constitute modification of offer justifying defendant in withdrawing it altogether. Ingham v. Cisco Oil Mill [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 630. Notification that coal "will be accepted" according to terms of option is a completed acceptance of option and not a mere promise to accept it in the future. Turner v. McCormick [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 28.

14. Civ. Code, § 1585. No contract where offer is to sell oil of guaranteed gravity of 15 degrees and acceptance requires it to be of that gravity at a temperature of 60 degrees. Four Oil Co. v. United Oil Producers, 145 Cal. 623, 79 P. 366. Conditional acceptance of proposition to sell ranch and water rights held not to constitute contract. Talcott v. Mastin [Colo. App.] 79 P. 973.

15. Letter held not an acceptance of requirement in qualified acceptance that deed should include certain stock. Talcott v. Mastin [Colo. App.] 79 P. 973. Where broker in accepting offer for sale of apples included a warranty of quality which seller refused to accept, and in turn proposed form of contract which broker refused to accept, and nothing further was done, held no contract. Wood v. Ellsworth, 45 Misc. 584, 91 N. Y. S. 24. Assent of dealer could not be inferred from his silence. Id.

16. Provided the request be not so worded as to limit or qualify the acceptance. Acceptance of option for sale of land "according to the terms of the option given me" to which there is added by the conjunction "and" a request for a departure from its terms as to time and place of performance, held absolute. Turner v. McCormick [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 28. Request relates to performance, and is not an element in the making of the contract. Id.

18. Option. Turner v. McCormick [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 628.

19. Sale of land. Campbell v. Beard [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 747. An offer must be considered as made every instant the letter is upon its journey. Boyd v. Merchants' & Farmers' Peanut Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 199.

20. Mailing of notice that defendant had sent oil lease to third person to be delivered to plaintiff on his returning the rent received by him held to have precluded plaintiff from withdrawing his offer to rescind, though notice was never received. Carter v. Hibbard, 26 Ky. L. R. 1033, 83 S. W. 112.

sary to show in detail that it was properly addressed, stamped, and deposited in the postoffice.[23]

Where it is expressly stipulated that acceptance must be made within a specified time, acceptance within such time is a condition precedent to the validity of the contract.[24] In case no time is fixed, the offer must be accepted within a reasonable time,[25] what is a reasonable time depending on the circumstances of each particular case.[26] When an offer is made by an agent having authority to sell, it may, if no time for acceptance is designated, be accepted at any time before the expiration of the agents authority.[27]

An offer made to a particular person can be accepted by him alone.[28] So, too, where the offer requires an acceptance by a particular officer of a corporation, it is not binding until so accepted.[29]

Where one of several parties to a contemplated contract, containing mutual covenants which are on each side the consideration for those of the other, refuses to become bound thereby or to perform, it is not binding on the others.[30]

An option is a mere continuing offer.[31] It cannot, however, be revoked if

23. Campbell v. Beard [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 747. Proof by a witness that he wrote a letter on a certain day, accompanied by proof of its receipt by the party to whom it was written on the day on which it would have arrived in due course of the mail, is sufficient to support a finding that it was mailed on the day on which it was written. The acceptance must be by return mail where the offer so provides or where the nature of the business is such as to give the offerer a right to expect that it will be. Boyd v. Merchants' & Farmers' Peanut Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 199. The mere sending of a letter and telegram to a party accepting an option to purchase property is insufficient to constitute a contract unless received within the time limited for acceptance. Kibler v. Caplis [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 57, 103 N. W. 531. Where offer to sell was made on Sunday with understanding that it would expire on following day, Sunday is included in calculating time limit. Ropes v. John Rosenfeld's Sons, 145 Cal. 671, 79 P. 354. See, also, Time, 4 C. L. 1680.

Where party giving option to purchase certain land went to distant point before its expiration, thus preventing the vendee from making a tender within the specified time, held that letter left at vendor's residence constituted an acceptance, which together with his subsequent offer by mail and alleged continued readiness and willingness to perform prima facie entitled him to specific performance. Homes v. Myles [Ala.] 37 So. 588.

25. Offer by mail. Boyd v. Merchants' & Farmers' Peanut Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 199.

26. Situation of the parties and the subject-matter of the negotiations. Boyd v. Merchants' & Farmers' Peanut Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 199. Where the parties are dealing with regard to a mercantile commodity, the price of which in the market changes from day to day, and the party who receives the offer does not post his acceptance on the same business day, he cannot take advantage of a rise in the market price and accept upon some future day. 28. Option to purchase land not assignable, and assignee acquires no right to convert option into contract of sale by tender or payment of purchase money. Rease v. Kittle [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 150.

29. Where written order for threshing machine contains a condition that it shall not be binding until accepted by officers of selling corporation, the signer of such order is not bound thereby until it is so accepted. Robinson & Co. v. Ralph [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1044. By executive officer of company. Goldberger v. Morris, 94 N. Y. S. 359.

30. Where agreement to exchange realty was signed by husband for his wife without her authority, and she thereafter repudiated it and refused to perform. Griefen v. Hubbard, 112 Ill. App. 16.

31. Written contract whereby one party, for a valuable consideration, agrees to sell land to another for a specific price within a certain time thereafter, the purchase money to be paid in cash within such time, and, on failure to make such payment, the contract to be void. Rease v. Kittle [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 150. Contract whereby vendor agreed to sell land on stated terms, but only requiring vendee to pay small sum as deposit, which he did, and not binding him to purchase the property or to do anything else, held mere option not enforceable against vendee, and, never having been exercised, it did not entitle broker introducing parties to a commission as for sale, though vendor was willing to perform. Milstein v. Doring, 102 App. Div. 349, 92 N. Y. S. 417. An agreemnt by the owner of land to sell it and to make a deed on specified notice from the other party, but without any agreement on the part of the latter to buy it, is an option. Swank v. Fretts, 209 Pa. 625, 59 A. 264. Optional agreement for sale of minerals held to have expired by failure of vendee to pay purchase price and accept deed so that his assignee acquired no rights thereunder. Notley v. Shoemaker, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 584. Agreement between based on a valuable consideration.[32] An election to exercise it converts it into an executory contract, specific performance of which will be enforced.[33]

(§ 1) C. Reality of consent.[34]—Since the mutual assent of the parties is necessary,[35] there can be no valid agreement where the contract is the result of mistake or accident,[36] duress,[37] misrepresentation, fraud, or undue influence,[38] or where one or both of the parties are mentally incapacitated.[39]

§ 2. Consideration.[40]—A legal consideration is essential to the validity of every contract.[41]

At common law a contract under seal imports a consideration,[42] and in such case lack of consideration is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded and insurance company and palace car company in consideration of one dollar and other valuable considerations that former would renew latter's policies at a specified rate, held a mere option, though signed by both parties, and not to bind latter to take insurance. Liability of the indorser of a promissory note. Peabody v. Munson, 211 Ill. 324, 71 N. E. 1006. Oral agreement by landlord during continuance of lease to repair premises. Altsheler v. Conrad, 26 Ky. L. R. 538, 82 S. W. 257. In action for specific performance of contract to convey land, a contention that there was no finding on the issue that defendant never received any adequate consideration for the alleged agreement held untenable where court found that the contract price was the reasonable value of the lot and evidence showed that defendant received $5 and refused to take balance when it was tendered. Bird v. Potter, 146 Cal. 286, 79 P. 970. Evidence insufficient to show that creditor for consideration agreed to release a note. Siewing v. Tacke [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 1103. A mortgage may only be foreclosed or right under it enforced where it is given to secure debt, at least where it is not given to secure a note or bond intended as a gift. Perkins v. Trinity Realty Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 167. Evidence held to show both pecuniary consideration and detriment to one of the parties, so as to justify denial of motion for nonsuit. Willoughby v. Willoughby [S. C.] 50 S. E. 208. Held proper under the evidence to submit question to jury to determine whether any consideration was paid and accepted for permit to string telegraph line over plaintiff's land. Burnett v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 780. Evidence held insufficient to show that release of damages claimed in a libel in admiralty was without consideration, or that it was procured by collusion and fraud. Naretti v. Scully [C. C. Provision limiting carrier's common-law liability unenforceable in absence of a special consideration therefor. Evidence held to justify finding that there was none. Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. McKinney [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 148. Instructions assuming a contract to be in force are properly refused, where there is evidence justifying a finding that it was without consideration. Id. Evidence insufficient to show agreement to release railroad from its common-law liability in transportation of stock in consideration that it would furnish him with free transportation. Rice v. Wabash R. Co., 106 Mo. App. 371, 80 S. W. 974. Where the freight rate on cattle was based on weights estimated by the carrier's agent, which were less than those estimated to him by the shipper, the carrier cannot claim that it carried them at a reduced rate by reason of their weight being underestimated, which entitled it to limit its common-law liability. Id. Evidence insufficient to show that cattle were undervalued by reason of which plaintiff secured lower freight rate than he would otherwise have had to pay. Rice v. Wabash R. Co., 106 Mo. App. 371, 80 S. W. 974. Contract for carriage of cattle and subsequent one for carriage of carctaker held a single contract, supported by the same consideration, viz., the price paid for carrying the cattle. Sprigg's Adm'r v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 60 A. 143. Consideration expressed in bill of lading held sufficient to support entire contract including exemption of carrier from liability for loss of cotton by fire, notwithstanding the fact that no different rate was offered the shipper. Arthur v. Texas & P. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 127. For a full discussion of this subject, see Carriers, 5 C. L. 507.

42. At common law no consideration is needed to pass the legal title to land. Deed by father to his bastard son, because latter would not inherit any of his land, held valid. Hall v. Hall, 26 Ky. L. R. 610, 82 S. W. 300. Is prima facie evidence and pre-proved by the party desiring to take advantage of it.[43] This rule has been modified or abrogated by statute in many states.[44] In some states the presumption of a consideration exists in favor of all written contracts.[45] There is no call for any further proof in regard to the consideration for a deed which itself recites a consideration.[46]

Where a contract of guaranty is entered into concurrently with the principal obligation, a consideration which supports the latter supports the former also.[47]

It is not necessary that the consideration move to the promisee,[48] but it must be furnished by one having a legal interest in the performance of the promise,[49] and at the instance of the promisor.[50] Thus where several agree to contribute proportionately, the promise of the others is a sufficient consideration for the promise of each,[51] contracts of subscription being the most common illustration.[52]

A consideration good as between the parties is good as to all the world.[53]

vents the contract from being attacked for want of consideration. Phillips v. American Tel. & T. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 247. Rule does not apply when the question is as to the return of the consideration before repudiating the contract for fraud, and in such case it may be shown that no consideration was received and none can be returned. 45. Promissory note. Rohrbacher v. Aitken, 145 Cal. 485, 78 P. 1054. The presumption of consideration for a note and mortgage arising from their execution and testimony that they were given to secure money borrowed from the estate is not overcome by the fact that they were not mentioned in the account of the executrix, it not appearing when she was executrix. Ambrose v. Drew, 139 Cal. 665, 73 P. 543. Release of a mortgage. Court not bound to believe an interested witness to the contrary, if presumption satisfies his mind. Code Civ. The consideration for a mortgage need not move to the mortgagor, and the debt which it is given to secure may be that of another person. Perkins v. Trinity Realty Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 167. A benefit accruing to the person accommodated is a sufficient consideration to sustain the liability of the accommodation maker or indorser of a promissory note. First Nat. Bank v. Lang [Minn.] 102 N. W. 700. Consideration passing from payee of note to principal debtor. Chambers v. McLean, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 567. Caretaker accompanying shipment of cattle held passenger, though consideration for carrying him, which was included in price paid for shipment, did not move from him. Sprigg's Adm'r v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 60 A. 143.

49. The consideration for a promise for the benefit of a third person. Promise of mother to support illegitimate child and to keep him in particular place held consideration, if there was any, for agreement by father to give him a certain sum of money. Rosseau v. Rouss, 180 N. Y. 116, 72 N. E. 916. A note given by a third person to a wife to settle difficulties between her and the husband is without consideration. Kramer v. Kramer [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 474.

50. In order that a forbearance to sue may constitute a consideration for a promise of a third person to pay a debt, it must be given at the instance of the promisor. Gilman v. Ferguson, 116 Ill. App. 347. There must be an agreement to forbear, either express or implied, a mere voluntary forbearance being insufficient. Id.

51. The promise of each of the joint makers of accommodation paper to pay his share is on a sufficient consideration, but the secondary liability of each for the share of the other is not. Kellogg v. Lopez, 145 Cal. 497, 78 P. 1056.

Contracts held to be supported by a sufficient consideration: Parol agreement reducing rate of interest on mortgage, by agreement on part of mortgagor to pay all taxes. In re McDougald's Estate, 146 Cal. 196, 79 P. 875. Where defendant contended that paper sold was property of his wife, and hence agreement not to engage in newspaper business was without consideration, but he made all negotiations and nothing was said about her ownership and he signed bill of sale containing warranty of title, held that as between the parties, he was the owner. Andrews v. Kingsbury, 212 Ill. 97, 72 N. E. 11, afg. 112 Ill. App. 518. Even if property belonged to wife, yet, if defendant was managing it for her as her agent, any agreement made by him to further the sale and as a part of the consideration therefor is binding on him. Id. Where evidence shows that agreement not to engage in newspaper business was left out of bill of sale of paper by mistake, and that subsequent agreement was executed to rectify it, the two will be regarded as parts of the same transaction and the latter is supported by the consideration for the sale. Id. Promise to pay certain debts, by executed agreement to turn over all the proceeds of a farm to the promisee. Runkle v. Kettering [Iowa] 102 N. W. 142. Where fences on lands leased for stock-raising were torn down and landlord refused to rebuild them or allow tenant to do so, landlord's promise to pay tenant all damages he might sustain from absence of fence. Ensign v. Park, 69 Kan. 870, 77 P. 583. A contract by a city for supplying its fire department with water finds its sanction in the right of the city to demand specific performance, or damages, or the revocation of the contract for nonperformance, and not in any right of the individual inhabitants to recover damages resulting from its breach. Allen & C. Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks, 113 La. 1091, 37 So. 980. Bond given in order to secure employment, though executed two days later than contract of employment, where parties were in different states and the two instruments were executed as nearly contemporaneously as possible. Stauber v. Ellett [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 156, 103 N. W. 606. New agreement to carry out the terms of a contract rescinded by mutual consent. Koerper v. Royal Inv. Co., 102 Mo. App. 543, 77 S. W. 307. A substituted agreement providing for the conveyance of land to defendant and his wife is sufficient consideration for plaintiff's promise to accept less than was due under the original agreement for the sale of the land which provided for its conveyance to defendant alone. Tucker v. Dolan [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1126. Evidence insufficient to show such an agreement. Id. Appeal bond which, though insufficient under statute, operated to stay proceedings and to perfect appeal. Gein v. Little, 43 Misc. 421, 89 N. Y. S. 488. Contract whereby defendant hired plaintiff for fixed period at agreed wages, and plaintiff agreed not to strike and not to leave defendant's employment without his written consent. Silberman v. Schwarcz, 45 Misc. 352, 90 N. Y. S. 382. Where plaintiff agreed with a publishing company that it might publish his book within a certain time and that if it did not, his rights should revert to him on payment of a certain sum, contract with defendant, who had knowledge of such facts, that latter would pay him certain royalty in consideration of his permission to publish the work, since it disabled plaintiff from questioning defendant's right to publish it. Barry v. Smart Set Pub. Co., 45 Misc. 402, 90 N. Y. S. 455. Where sausages were purchased under agreement that they were to be dry enough for export and, on inspection, they were rejected as containing too much fat, agreement by seller to indemnify buyer if claim was made for too much fat, in reliance on which buyer accepted them. Promise to pay certain sum to missionary society, by acceptance of obligation, receipt of payment on account, sending of missionaries, and refraining from making other collections. Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions v. Smith, 209 Pa. 361, 58 A. 689. Agreement whereby defendant was to present claim against government for rent of and injury to his land by troops while in possession of plaintiff as lessee, and that plaintiff was to receive half of the amount paid as rent and a specific sum from the amount paid as damages. Bomgardner v. Swartz, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 263. Note given by builder to materialman in part payment of order drawn by contractor, though order was not yet payable, where provision for payment after completion of contract was waived. Potter v. Greenberg, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 502. Capital stock of corporation held good consideration for transfer of property to it by person organizing it, in absence of fraud. Gardner v. Haines [S. D.] 104 N. W. 244. Contract to advance money to purchase land for plaintiff, defendant to take deed in his own name and

convey to plaintiff when amount advanced was repaid, held a mere loan as between plaintiff and defendant, and interest thereon, which in the absence of agreement was the legal rate, furnished a sufficient consideration therefor. Lucia v. Adams [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 335. Agreement between author and publisher succeeding to rights of corporation owning copyrights of certain of her books, by agreement of author to enlarge the work and to perform revisory services in connection with its publication. In re McBride & Co., 132 F. 285. Agreement not to engage in competing business, by payment of sum in excess of that to which defendant was entitled under agreement in regard to certain stock. Knapp v. Jarvis-Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1008; Bossert v. Jarvis-Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1015. Deed and lease executed by same parties on or about the same date and in relation to same subject-matter, held each to be a consideration for the other. Stadler v. Missouri River Power Co., 133 F. 314.

Contract held to be without consideration: If a conveyance is made purely as a mortgage for the purpose of securing an indebtedness, that fact alone does not furnish any consideration for a promise to pay a previous mortgage. Merriman v. Schmitt, 211 Ill. 263, 71 N. E. 986. Promise in letter accepting offer to purchase fruit to wire prices before shipping held not part of contract, but a mere voluntary gratuity. Olcese v. Mobile Fruit & Trading Co., 211 Ill. 539, 71 N. E. 1084, afg. 112 Ill. App. 281. Subsequent agreement to complete building before certain date. Bolter v. Kozlowski, 211 Ill. 79, 71 N. E. 858, afg. 112 Ill. App. 13. If services of tenant's wife in caring for landlord's room were voluntarily rendered by way of performing labor for her husband and family, and not in pursuance of agreement between herself and landlord, they could not be a consideration for such latter agreement. Agreement whereby defendant was to furnish money for purchase of certain land and divide the profits of its to meet payments provided for by contract sale with plaintiff. Forrest v. O'Bryan, 126 Iowa, 571, 102 N. W. 492. Subsequent agreement giving plaintiffs longer time in which for sale of land. Apking v. Hoffer [Neb.] 104 N. W. 177. Promise by one upon whom there rested no duty or obligation to do so, to go after certain horses which had strayed. Smith v. Corrigan [Neb.] 101 N. W. 331. Contract whereby husband placed deed of property in escrow to be delivered to wife in case he got drunk, and where at time of his death deed had not been delivered, he was owner of the property. Bosea v. Lent, 44 Misc. 437, 90 N. Y. S. 41. Agreement by defendant to pay plaintiff a certain per cent. on sales of improved property made by defendant and in regard to which plaintiff, under his contract as defendant's manager and agent, had nothing to do. Wright v. Fulling, 93 N. Y. S. 228. Where plaintiff conveyed land to a bank and subscribed to stock therein, the bank agreeing that in consideration of a certain sum, payable in instalments, equaling the dues on plaintiff's stock, it would reconvey the land, and the bank at the same time gave plaintiff a certain sum which he loaned to its president on his personal bond to pay the instalments on the stock, held, that the bank having received no benefit from the loan, was not liable therefor or for a breach of the president's bond, and that its subsequent agreement to indemnify the president from loss on such bond was without consideration. People v. Mercantile Co-op. Bank, 93 N. Y. S. 521. Services rendered gratuitously are not a sufficient consideration to support an executory promise. Strevell v. Jones' Estate, 94 N. Y. S. 627, afg. 92 N. Y. S. 719. Held, that no legal duty existed on plaintiff's part to set apart for son any share in his father's estate, and hence son's rights were not such as to furnish consideration for family settlement. Slater v. Slater, 94 N. Y. S. 900. Contract to divide commissions for sale of realty unenforceable where plaintiff rendered no services and sole inducement for making it was his threat that by the use of his personal influence as agent of owner he would procure cancellation of agreement between owner and defendant, and prevent latter from earning them. Fox v. Seabury, 211 Pa. 140, 60 A. 508. Agreement to pay nonexpert witnesses more than legal fees. Ramchasel's Estate, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 262.

56. Discharge of attorney's obligation sufficient consideration for transfer to him of certain stock recovered by his client. Thaxter v. Thain, 100 App. Div. 488, 91 N. Y. S. 729. The surrender of a valid note for the execution of a new one. Garrigue v. Keller [Ind.] 74 N. E. 523. Note for amount of judgment supported by satisfaction of judgment. Snyder v. Knight, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 309.

57. Agreement by association to pay retiring agent certain sum supported by surrender of his interest in funds arising from business procured by him. Rollins v. Co-operative Bldg. Bank, 98 App. Div. 606, 90 N. Y. S. 631. The abrogation of an antenuptial settlement held to constitute a sufficient consideration for postnuptial conveyance by husband to wife, as against his creditors. Clow v. Brown [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 534.

58. Release by plaintiffs of certain property on which they had mortgage held to support promise by defendants to hold them harmless in sale of remainder of the property held under the mortgage. Cliff Foy & Bro. v. Dawkins, 138 Ala. 232, 35 So. 41.

59. Note given in consideration of release of valid subsisting judgment against the maker. Blythe v. Cordingly [Colo. App.] 80 P. 495. Contract whereby wife, desiring to obtain loan on land, the legal title to which was in her husband, obligated herself to pay amount due on a judgment against him to which his apparent interest in the land was subject, thereby securing the release of such apparent incumbrance, even though he had no real interest in the land. Atlanta Suburban Land Corp. v. Austin [Ga.] 50 S. E. 124.

of the time for the payment of an existing debt,[60] and the rendition of services, have been held sufficient.[61]

The consideration need not exist at the time of making the promise, but it is sufficient if the person to whom it is made incurs any loss, expense, or liability in consequence of, and in reliance upon, such promise.[62]

Mutual promises[63] operate as a consideration each for the other.[64]

Forbearance[65] or a promise to forbear from doing what one has a right to do may constitute a sufficient consideration.[66] Thus forbearance to sue,[67] or the dis-

60. Will support mortgage. Creditor becomes bona fide purchaser within meaning of recording act, and mortgage takes priority over one previously given but not recorded until after second one. O'Brien v. Fleckenstein [N. Y.] 73 N. E. 30. Evidence sufficient to sustain finding that there was extension of time. Id.

61. Services to be rendered by plaintiffs in securing divorce for defendant held to support agreement by her to execute deed of trust on certain property to secure their payment, provided they succeeded in vesting title thereto in her. Enforceable when services fully performed. Patrick v. Morrow [Colo.] 81 P. 242. Satisfaction of mortgage supported by valuable services rendered by the mortgagor to the mortgagee. Sherman v. Matthieu, 94 N. Y. S. 565. Services performed under an express or implied promise to pay therefor, or in expectation of such payment, are a sufficient consideration for a promissory note. Strevell v. Jones' Estate, 94 N. Y. S. 627, afg. 92 N. Y. S. 719.

62. Agreement by railroad to construct sidetrack by plaintiff's building if he would move it and repair and remodel it so as to make it suitable for a warehouse, held supported by sufficient consideration where plaintiff thereafter incurred expense in so doing. Thomas v. South Haven & E. R. Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 1009. Services are sufficient consideration for note, though they were rendered without any specific request therefor or promise to pay for them, where they were for the benefit of the maker and were received and accepted by him. Yarwood v. Trust & Guarantee Co., 94 App. Div. 47, 87 N. Y. S. 947. The mere fact that the services for which the note was given were rendered by infants, whose services presumably belonged to the family with whom they lived, does not defeat recovery thereon, where the persons entitled to such services were present when the note was given and acquiesced in payment to the infants. Id. A promise to sell certain stock, though gratuitous in its inception, will be enforced where a part of the purchase price has been paid. In re Brown's Estate [Pa.] 60 A. 147. Evidence held to support claim of half interest in certain stock held by decedent. Id.

64. Must be concurrent and obligatory on both. Smyth v. Greacen, 100 App. Div. 275, 91 N. Y. S. 450.

Contracts held supported by sufficient consideration: Promise by tenants to replace mill machinery destroyed by fire, and their performance thereof, held sufficient consideration for promise by landlord to rebuild kiln. Frey v. Vignier, 145 Cal. 251, 78 P. 733. Covenant of each of the parties sufficient to support promise of other In contract between railroad company and firm for exchange of freight business, whereby firm was to acquire and operate steamboat and railroad was to erect hoist for transfer of freight. Civ. Code, § 3361. Graham v. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. [Ga.] 49 S. E. 75. Lease of boat and firm's readiness to receive and deliver freight amounted to performance justifying their demand for corresponding performance of railroad's agreement to erect hoist and receive and deliver freight as stipulated. Id. Mutual promises of the promoters of a railroad to perform services in furtherance of the enterprise without consideration held a valid consideration for the obligations assumed by each under the agreement. Powell v. Georgia F. & A. R. Co., 121 Ga. 803, 49 S. E. 759. Promise by one party to publish and deliver books, and by other to pay for the same when delivered. Allen v. Confederate Pub. Co., 121 Ga. 773, 49 S. E. 782. Contract between parties engaged in real estate and insurance business whereby plaintiff agreed to and did turn over to defendant the lands he had for sale, and not to engage in real estate business during continuation of contract, and defendant agreed to give plaintiff half his commissions and not to engage in insurance business. Roush v. Gesman Bros. & Grant, 126 Iowa, 493, 102 N. W. 495. Contract by which defendants agreed to change mill into a stave mill in consideration of plaintiff's agreement to advance money to carry on the business. Alderton v. Williams [Mich.] 102 N. W. 753. Promises of defendant to aid in effecting sale of certain land and of plaintiffs to pay him a certain part of their commissions for such sale held mutual promises. Barnett v. Block [Minn.] 102 N. W. 390. Subcontractors being under no obligation to finish work after abandonment by principal contractor, their promise to do so was sufficient consideration for agreement by owner to pay them for what they had done and what they would do. Reisler v. Silbermintz, 99 App. Div. 131, 90 N. Y. S. 967. A mutual promise between two brothers to pay the proceeds of an insurance policy to their sisters, especially when followed by performance on the part of one of them to his detriment. Instruction held not charge on facts. Willoughby v. Willoughby [S. C.] 50 S. E. 208.

66. Where seller of certain rock broke contract but plaintiff refrained from terminating contract, held that there was a consideration for seller's guaranty to thereafter furnish rock containing a higher per missal of a suit, will support a contract,[68] irrespective of whether or not the suit would have been successful.[69]

The compromise of a doubtful right[70] is, in the absence of fraud, sufficient consideration to support a promise,[71] and this is true, though the claim could not have been supported in whole or in part either at law or in equity.[72]

Marriage[73] is a valuable consideration and will support an antenuptial settlement,[74] but not a subsequent contract by the parties thereto.[75] cent. of phosphate. Globe Fertilizer Co. v. Tennessee Phosphate Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 1177. Extension of forbearance to debtor held to support mortgage by third party to secure past due debt. Notes secured thereby payable at intervals in the future held to imply agreement to extend time of payment of original debt, though no express agreement to that effect. Perkins v. Trinity Realty Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 167.

67. Noyes v. Young [Mont.] 79 P. 1063. Forbearance on part of creditor to prosecute claim against estate of decedent held to support promise on part of widow to assume and pay it as an original obligation. Franchi v. Tirelli, 92 N. Y. S. 784.

68. Mortgage conditioned that defendant in bastardy proceedings would support complainant and her child, by dismissal of proceedings and marriage of the parties. Jangraw v. Perkins [Vt.] 60 A. 385; Grand Lodge v. Ohnstein, 110 Ill. App. 312. There being an apparent shortage in accounts of plaintiff's deceased husband as executor of an estate, dismissal of proceedings against his co-executor and refraining from presenting claim against estate of deceased executor held sufficient consideration for plaintiff's note for amount of shortage. Rohrbacher v. Aitken, 145 Cal. 485, 78 P. 1054.

69. Rohrbacher v. Aitken, 145 Cal. 485, 78 P. 1054; Noyes v. Young [Mont.] 79 P. 1063. The renunciation or abandonment of a doubtful right is sufficient. Grand Lodge v. Ohnstein, 110 Ill. App. 312.

71. Walker v. Shepard, 210 Ill. 100, 71 N. E. 422. Compromise of dispute as to performance of work under first contract held to support second contract. White v. Magirl, 113 Ill. App. 224. Evidence insufficient to show that compromise of disputed claim was consideration for agreement by creditor to accept less than amount due. Tucker v. Dolan [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1126. Compromise of claim of retiring stockholder against corporation held good consideration for note of corporation for amount of the compromise. Warshawsky v. Grand Theatre Co., 94 N. Y. S. 522. Answer showing that there was difference between the parties as to the amount defendant owed plaintiff, and that it was settled by giving of the order sued on in consideration of the release of a lien by plaintiff, held to show sufficient consideration, and practically to admit liability. Creveling v. Saladino, 97 App. Div. 202, 89 N. Y. S. 834. An oral agreement fixing a disputed boundary line between two contiguous tracts of land is supported by a sufficient consideration when there is actual doubt and uncertainty as to its true location. Oral agreement not valid unless there is such uncertainty and unless it is executed by actual possession. Le Comte v. Carson [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 238. Where grantor in deed, given in consideration of support by grantee, sued to recover title on ground of grantee's failure to perform, a new deed given in settlement of the controversy in which grantor reserved life estate and grantee covenanted to pay taxes held supported by valuable consideration. Burgson v. Jacobson [Wis.] 102 N. W. 563. The rule that where a liquidated sum is due, the payment of a less sum in satisfaction thereof, though accepted as satisfaction, is not binding as such, for want of consideration, does not apply where there was a dispute between the parties as to the medium of payment when the agreement was made, and the subject-matter of such dispute is embraced in the agreement. Refusal of instruction that compromise would be binding held prejudicial. City of San Juan v. St. John's Gas Co., 195 U. S. 510, 49 Law. Ed. 299. See, also, Accord and Satisfaction, 5 C. L. 14.

72. Where entered into in good faith, court will not consider merits of controversy. Walker v. Shepard, 210 Ill. 100, 71 N. E. 422. An agreement to settle a claim of infringement, made in good faith, even though it should appear that such claim was in fact wholly unfounded. License to use dredging machinery. 74. Clow v. Brown [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 534. Broadrick v. Broadrick, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 225. Where a marriage contract purports to release the wife's marital claims on payment to her by the husband of a specified sum, a further provision that "for the same consideration" she released, assigned, and conveyed any claim against his estate which she might have as his widow to his children by a former marriage, held without consideration, the first provision having exhausted the entire consideration expressed. Sawyer v. Churchill [Vt.] 59 A. 1014. A note given by a stranger to a husband in order that he might give it to his wife, to whom it was made payable, for the purpose of securing domestic peace between a newly married couple, is not a promise in consideration of marriage, and is without consideration and unenforceable by the wife. Fact that the two are brothers does not change rule. Kramer v. Kramer [N. Y.] 74 N. E. 474.

75. Is irrevocable. Postnuptial settlement void. Clow v. Brown [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 534.

bound to do by contract or otherwise is no consideration for a contract;[77] but this does not prevent one from binding himself by merging an oral agreement into a written contract, nor enable him to escape the written contract merely because the consideration passed to him prior to its execution.[78] It has also been held that the duty of a husband to support his wife furnishes a sufficient consideration for his promise to support her after a contemplated separation.[79]

A promise to forbear, or extend the time of payment of a debt actually due, based upon a promise of the debtor to pay the sum with interest at a latter date, is without legal consideration and unenforceable.[80] The same is true of an agreement by a creditor to accept less than is due in full payment of a matured debt.[81]

77. Bailey v. Devine [Ga.] 51 S. E. 603; Tucker v. Dolan [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1126; Noyes v. Young [Mont.] 79 P. 1063.

Contracts held void for want of consideration: Where interest on mortgage was, on death of mortgagor leaving an insolvent estate, reduced from ten to seven per cent. by Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, in regard to rate of interest on claims against insolvent estates after publication of first notice to creditors, a prior parol agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee reducing rate of interest to seven per cent. on condition that the mortgagor pay all taxes, was unenforceable against the estate for want of consideration. In re McDougald's Estate, 146 Cal. 196, 79 P. 875. Assignment by widow of her right to certain interest money under will of her deceased husband in consideration of support for life, where assignees were bound to furnish such support under previous agreement. In re Castner's Estate [Cal. App.] 81 P. 991. Where attorney was employed at an agreed fee by defendant to defend her son who was in prison, a promise by her to pay him an additional sum for another attorney employed by persons held as witnesses for the state against the son to secure their release, is without consideration, since defendant acquired no benefit therefrom. Bailey v. Devine [Ga.] 51 S. E. 603. Promise of first attorney to bring on son's trial at once if additional sum was paid held no consideration, since he was bound to do so under his original contract. Id. A promise to release from an unlawful imprisonment which the promisor himself made unlawful does not afford any valid consideration for a contract to pay for such services. Id. Where payee of note, on failure of maker to pay it, surrendered it and accepted guarantor's note for same amount, indorsement of old note to him, since the guarantor was entitled to the old note on the execution of the new one, and created no liability against the guarantor as indorser. Peabody v. Munson, 211 Ill. 324, 71 N. E. 1006. Where one agrees for a consideration to give another a mortgage on certain property, a subsequent promise exacted from the mortgagee, as a condition to the execution of the mortgage, to pay certain debts of the mortgagor not included in the prior contract. Runkle v. Kettering [Iowa] 102 N. W. 142. Agreement to advance certain sum for purchase of grain and to grant extension of time for its delivery. Strange v. Carrington, Patton & Co., 116 Ill. App. 410. An agreement by the payee of a note to cancel the same by will at his death, upon the regular payment of interest. Trombly v. Klersy [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 349, 104 N. W. 419. Agreement of wife to live with and care for husband in consideration of agreement to deed her certain property in case he got drunk again. Bosea v. Lent, 44 Misc. 437, 90 N. Y. S. 41. Agreement by plaintiff's intestate to cancel defendant's note provided defendant would pay or cause to be paid a certain note and condemnation bonds of a railroad on which both were liable, held without consideration where, prior to the making of such agreement, defendant was made receiver for such railroad and paid the note and bonds under order of the court. Utah Sav. & Trust Co. v. Bamberger [Utah] 81 P. 887. Fact that defendant was promoter of, and furnished the capital for, the corporation which purchased the property of the railroad at the receiver's sale, held not to have furnished consideration, since such corporation was organized prior to the execution of the agreement. Id. Family agreement held unenforceable where consideration therefor was son's signature to agreement which he was bound to sign as executor if it was advantageous to the estate, and if disadvantageous he could not derive any benefit therefrom personally. Slater v. Slater, 94 N. Y. S. 900.

78. Written contract acknowledging prior indebtedness and agreeing to pay it on happening of certain contingency. Noyes v. Young [Mont.] 79 P. 1063.

79. Duty of husband to support wife furnishes sufficient consideration to support contract for furnishing support after separation. Patterson v. Patterson, 111 Ill. App. 342.

80. Agreement to extend time of payment of mortgage debt held no bar to foreclosure of chattel mortgage. Repelow v. Walsh, 98 App. Div. 320, 90 N. Y. S. 651. A promise to extend the time of payment of a debt is void unless founded upon a good consideration. Hilderbrandt v. Fallot, 92 N. Y. S. 804.

81. May collect balance. Tucker v. Dolan [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1126. Payment of the undisputed debt under insurance policy no consideration for release of further claim thereunder. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Crayton, 110 Ill. App. 648. Agreement to accept a sum admitted by both parties to be due under a bond in full satisfaction of all liability thereon, said amount being less than that claimed by one of the parties, is without consideration.

An agreement to pay a price greater than that fixed by the contract must rest on a new consideration.[82] So, too, an agreement to pay one liquidated debt will not support a release by the creditor of another liquidated or unliquidated debt.[83]

Natural love and affection [84] is not, as a general rule, a sufficient consideration to support a promise,[85] but it will support a deed of real property between husband and wife, or relatives within the degree of nephew or cousin.[86]

A mere moral obligation [87] is not ordinarily a sufficient consideration for a promise,[88] but the moral obligation of a father to support his illegitimate children is a sufficient consideration for his bond to do so.[89]

Mere gratitude is not by itself a sufficient consideration for a contract,[90] but the sufficiency of valuable services as a consideration is not affected by the fact that the obligor felt and declared a sense of gratitutde therefor, which was not at all intended to supplant or exclude a recognition of a legal obligation to pay for them.[91]

Past consideration.[92]—A promise by one to pay a past indebtedness of another cannot be enforced unless some new consideration moves to the promisor,[93] but if a surety is a party with his principal to a contract executed in consideration of some benefit to accrue to the latter, the consideration is sufficient as to him, and he is bound.[94] So, too, when one person is rendering services to another which he is under no legal obligation to perform and the party receiving the benefit expressly promises to pay therefor, upon the faith of which promise the services are continued, there is a sufficient consideration to support the promise to pay for all the services, past as well as future.[95]

Adequacy.[96]—A slight benefit to the promisor or a slight detriment to the promisee is a sufficient consideration for any contract,[97] so that it is not essential that the consideration be adequate in value.[98] Courts of equity may, however, refuse to specifically enforce contracts for inadequacy of consideration when the inadequacy is so gross as to be evidence of fraud, or when accompanied by other circumstances tending to show fraud.[99]

Failure of consideration.[1]—If the consideration fails in whole or in part, plaintiff's right to recover must fail pro tanto.[2] So, too, money advanced on a consideration which subsequently fails may be recovered back.[3] The fact that one of several agreements constituting the consideration for a contract is unenforceable does not render the contract unenforceable.[4] In order to entitle one to rescind for failure of consideration, the evidence must show more than mere inadequacy.[5] The defense is premature where the failure is as yet merely anticipatory.[6]

One giving note in payment for a horse cannot defend on ground of failure of consideration because horse has been taken from him by judgment in replevin, where it appears that he permitted such judgment to be entered against him by default, and it does not appear that the seller of the horse was notified to defend the action, or had knowledge of its pendency. Moul v. Pfeiffer, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 280. The fact that whiskey was not such as to meet the demands of defendant's trade, as plaintiff's agent represented it would do, held not to amount to a failure of consideration for a note given for the purchase price thereof, it not being denied that the whiskey had value. Shiretzki v. Julius Kessler & Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 422. Failure of consideration for note held not established by proof that indorsement was made relying on promise of plaintiff to observe agreement whereby he was to manage business of certain corporation and a breach of such agreement. Evidence held to show different consideration. Batchford v. Harris, 115 Ill. App. 160. Promise to thresh certain wheat held consideration for a note. Aultman Threshing & Engine Co. v. Knoll [Kan.] 79 P. 1074. Where defendant agreed to pay plaintiffs a certain sum in consideration of a loan of their credit for the purpose of raising funds for the construction of a street railway, but no one could be found to advance money on their indorsement in consequence of which the enterprise was abandoned without any notes having been executed or offered plaintiffs for their indorsement and they were not asked to lend their credit and did not assume any obligation, held, that the contract was at an end and plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the balance of the consideration remaining unpaid. 6. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Holmes, 88 Minn. 389, 93 N. W. 606.

§ 3. Validity of contract. A. General principles.[7]—Mere unreasonableness or absurdity does not render a contract unenforceable.[8]

Contracts between corporations and their officers and directors, or with third persons, including ultra vires contracts,[9] the effect on its contracts of the failure of a foreign corporation to comply with the statutory requirements for doing business within the state,[10] the contracts of aliens,[11] infants,[12] and married women,[13] usurious [14] and gambling contracts,[15] and contracts made on Sunday, are treated in separate articles.[16]

(§ 3) B. Subject-matter or consideration.[17]—If a statute directly prohibits the making of a certain class of contracts, or either enjoins or prohibits the doing of a certain class of acts, an agreement entered into in violation thereof, or which involves a violation thereof, is void.[18] There seems to be a conflict of authority as to whether the mere imposition of a penalty on any specific act or omission renders invalid a contract to do or omit to do such act. There is authority for the proposition that the imposition of such a penalty excludes all others, and that contracts in contravention thereof are not void unless it clearly appears that the legislature intended otherwise.[19] The generally accepted and more logical rule, however, appears to be that all such contracts are void unless the statute shows a contrary intent on the part of the legislature.[20] The presumption against their validity is particularly strong where the statute in question is one enacted for the public good.[21]

The mere fact that contracts are of a speculative character does not neces-

18. Hammon on Contracts, p. 338. Contracts violating positive law or contrary to public policy. Poling v. Board of Education. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 148. All contracts requiring or tending to encourage, or arising out of, or connected with, the performance of an act forbidden by the terms of a statute, which is designed to forbid the performance of such act altogether and not merely to penalize it for revenue purposes. Note given in payment for pasturage of cattle on public land inclosed in violation of Federal statute making such inclosure a misdemeanor. Tandy v. Elmore-Cooper Live Stock Commission Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 614. The fact that the amount of the note was arrived at by a common-law arbitration of the differences between the parties does not cure the invalidity. Id. Where a city charter provides that before anyone shall sell liquor he shall take out license, and makes it unlawful to sell it without such license, agreement between city and dealer, made pursuant to resolution of council, whereby dealer gave his note on understanding that he might carry on business without a license until its maturity when one was to be issued, held illegal, and note void. Meyer-Marx Co. v. Ensley [Ala.] 37 So. 639. Under the statute prohibiting the charging of usury, the promise to pay the usurious interest is void and cannot be enforced. Erwin v. Morris, 137 N. C. 48, 49 S. E. 53.

20. Physician who has failed to register in compliance with Pol. Code 1895, §§ 1479, 1480, cannot recover for professional services rendered by him. Contract void. Murray v. Williams, 121 Ga. 63, 48 S. E. 686. One acting as real estate broker without written authority which is misdemeanor, cannot recover compensation. Davis v. Kidansky, 86 N. Y. S. 6. Are prima facie void, the question being one of legislative intent. Poling v. Board of Education [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 148.

21. Neither a court of law or of equity will enforce a contract in violation of laws enacted for the public good. Contract of sale to board of education of articles to be used in schools, made by member of the board in violation of Code 1899, c. 45, § 57, is void. Poling v. Board of Education [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 148. A plea setting up its illegality need not allege prejudice to the purchaser. Id.

sarily affect their validity.[22] One may lawfully agree to deliver in the future something that he has not got, provided it is a thing which he may get;[23] but may not sell or transfer that which has no potential existence.[24]

An assignment of wages to be earned in the future under an existing contract of employment to secure a present debt or future advances is valid as an agreement, and takes effect as an assignment as the wages are earned;[25] but an assignment of wages to be earned without limit as to amount or time is void.[26]

An agreement lawful in its character and purpose is not rendered unlawful because some of the parties thereto attempt to put it to an unlawful use.[27]

A void contract cannot be validated by subsequent acts of the parties recognizing its existence.[28]

Definiteness and certainty of terms.[29]—In order to be enforceable, the contract must be reasonably definite and certain in its terms,[30] or must at least be capable of being made certain.[31] It will be held too uncertain to be enforced only when

23. In action for breach of contract for purchase and sale of stock, plaintiff need not allege that defendant owned it. Wiggin v. Federal Stock & Grain Co., 77 Conn. 507, 59 A. 607. A contract whereby a person gives to another an option to call for goods at a future time on tender of a certain price is lawful, though the person giving the option does not at the time own the goods. Stocks. Id.

24. Sale of all improvements in certain machines on which patents might thereafter be obtained held void at law. Wilson v. Maxon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 123. Equity will regard the same as an executory contract, enforceable or not in the sound discretion of the court, if not contrary to public policy and the several rights of the parties as they appear. 29. See 3 C. L. 818.

30. Parol contract to will property. Pattat v. Pattat, 93 App. Div. 102, 87 N. Y. S. 140. Promise or agreement of the parties must be certain and explicit so that their full intention may be ascertained to a reasonable degree of certainty. Evidence held not to show contract for increased compensation. Nothing from which there could be inferred that what plaintiff was to receive would be based on a quantum meruit. Mackintosh v. Kimball, 101 App. Div. 494, 92 N. Y. S. 132. In order that it may have the effect of depriving a father of the custody of his child. Looney v. Martin [Ga.] 51 S. E. 304.

Contracts held sufficiently definite: Stock option contract held not void for indefiniteness as to time when it should become operative. Cothran v. Witham [Ga.] 51 S. E. 285. Agreement by father that, on sale of certain land conveyed to him by his daughter, he would pay her a certain sum, held not unenforceable on ground that time of payment was uncertain. Schweitzer v. Schweitzer, 26 Ky. L. R. 888, 82 S. W. 625. Contract to engage in business of manufacturing staves to continue "so long as they could get sufficient timber for that purpose in the locality of the mill," not void for uncertainty as to its duration. Alderton v. Williams [Mich.] 102 N. W. 753. Guaranty of performance of certain contract, though ungrammatical. De Reszke v. Duss, 99 App. Div. 353, 91 N. Y. S. 221. Agreement whereby defendant was to advance money to pay for land for plaintiff and to convey to him on repayment held not void because there was no definite agreement as to the time and manner of repayment. Lucia v. Adams [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 335; Lone Star Salt Co. v. Texas Short Line R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 355. Agreement whereby defendant was to be permitted to receive sheriff's certificate on mortgage foreclosure, sell the land, and account to plaintiff for proceeds, less a debt owing defendant. Chaffee v. Conway [Wis.] 103 N. W. 269. To warrant a decree for the specific performance of a parol contract, it must be clearly and unequivocally proved, and its terms as to consideration, subject-matter, and all other essentials must be clear and unambiguous. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen [C. C. A.] 137 F. 403. Informal oral agreement for purchase and sale of stock. Van Tine v. Hilands, 131 F. 124.

Contracts held void for uncertainty: Clause in contract for sale of land permitting the vendees to cut and remove "portions of the timber now standing on said premises" held too vague and uncertain for enforcement in a court of law, and to be binding on the parties only in so far as they mutually acted on it. Watson v. Gross [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 104. Too indefinite to show any title in plaintiff. Id.

31. Contract for manufacture and sale of stoves held not too indefinite to be sus-

the court, after applying all the tests which the rules of law and of reason will permit, is unable to reasonably discover what the parties agreed to.[32] Mere indefiniteness of details does not render the contract void,[33] nor can it be called uncertain because based on a contingency where the contingency has occurred.[34]

(§ 3) C. Mutuality.[35]—As a general rule the obligations of a contract must be mutual; that is, it must be capable of enforcement by either party against the other.[36] The rule, however, does not apply to contracts which have been executed ceptible of enforcement, but to require those supplied to be of the kinds and assortment supplied under previous contracts. Hardwick v. American Can Co. [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 797.

32. Semon, Bache & Co. v. Copper, Zook & Mutschler Co. [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 41. Even the appearance of a contract has binding effect after execution. Oil lease held binding. Houssiere Latreille Oil Co. v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate [La.] 38 So. 932.

33. Contract to engage in business of manufacturing staves held not void for uncertainty because it did not precisely specify what kind of machinery was to be bought or what kind of staves manufactured. Alderton v. Williams [Mich.] 102 N. W. 753; Schweitzer v. Schweitzer, 26 Ky. L. R. 888, 82 S. W. 625.

34. Contract providing for payment on sale of certain mining claim, where claim was sold before suit was brought. Noyes v. Young [Mont.] 79 P. 1063.

36. Baltimore Humane Impartial Soc. v. Pierce, 99 Md. 352, 58 A. 26. Equity will not enforce contract unless mutual. Gibson v. Brown, 214 Ill. 330, 73 N. E. 578. If the contract, either from personal incapacity, the nature of the agreement, or any other cause, is incapable of being enforced against one party, he cannot enforce it against the other, though he otherwise could do so. Baltimore Humane Impartial Soc. v. Pierce, 99 Md. 352, 58 A. 26. Because involving personal services and relation of trust and confidence. Harlow v. Oregonian Pub. Co., 45 Or. 520, 78 P. 737. A unilateral executory contract is a nudum pactum. Where it is left to one of the parties to an agreement to choose whether he will proceed or abandon it, neither can specifically enforce its execution in equity. Berry v. Frisbie [Ky.] 86 S. W. 558. A contract failing to impose any liability on one of the parties thereto is unenforceable. Semon, Bache & Co. v. Coppes, Zook & Mutschler Co. [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 41. Where the consideration for the promise of one party is the promise of the other, there must be absolute mutuality of engagement, so that each has the right to hold the other to a positive engagement. American Agricultural Chemical Co. v. Kennedy, 103 Va. 171, 48 S. E. 868. Both parties must be bound or neither will be. Id. Obligations must be reciprocal. Swindell & Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 121 Ga. 714, 49 S. E. 673. Performance by one party must confer on him the right to demand the corelative obligation from the other. Id. Where, in action on notes, the sole defense is a plea in recoupment for damages for breach of unilateral contract, verdict for plaintiff is demanded by the evidence. Id.

Contracts held mutual: Contract between railroad company and firm for exchange of freight, under which latter was to acquire and operate steamboat and former was to erect a hoist for handling freight transferred. Graham v. Macon, etc., R. Co. [Ga.] 49 S. E. 75. Subscription contract for books, since statement on back thereof amounted to agreement to publish and deliver them. Allen v. Confederate Pub. Co., 121 Ga. 773, 49 S. E. 782. Contract stating that one party has bought certain stock and in consideration of the price paid and for value received he agrees not to sell any of it until he has first offered it to the other party in writing at its book value, giving him ample time to accept or refuse it. Cothran v. Witham [Ga.] 51 S. E. 285. Agreement to place telephone in plaintiff's house in consideration of release of right of way by others. Foster v. Leininger [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 164. Contract to order goods from defendant providing that plaintiff would take same as specified on order between certain dates, subject to plaintiff's privilege to change sizes, and to cancel, in case of an emergency, such portions of the order as had not been taken in work by defendant. Semon, Bache & Co. v. Coppes, Zook & Mutschler Co. [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 41. Agreement to purchase piano and to pay therefor partly in cash and partly in advertising at an agreed rate, at least after seller had furnished advertising matter and availed himself of resulting benefits. Mail & Times Pub. Co. v. Marks, 125 Iowa, 622, 101 N. W. 458. Contract whereby telephone company agreed to place telephone in plaintiff's home in consideration of being allowed to place poles and wires on his farm. Anderson v. Mt. Sterling Tel. Co. [Ky.] 86 S. W. 1119. Oil lease requiring lessee to commence operations within specified time or pay quarterly rental until an oil well is completed, giving him right to cancel lease at any time on payment of certain sum, and providing for division of gross yield of oil and gas held not void on its face for want of mutuality or as containing a protestative condition. Houssiere Latrellle Oil Co. v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate [La.] 38 So. 932. Provision in contract to furnish electricity that the electric company did not bind itself to furnish it at any particular time after the acceptance of the application held, when taken with other provisions, to have been inserted for purposes of protecting it against delays due to strikes, etc., and hence not to render contract void. Klosterman v. United States Elec. Light & Power Co. [Md.] 60 A. 251. Contract by which defendants agreed to change mill into stave mill in consideration of plaintiff's agreement to advance money to carry on busi-in whole or in part.[37] Neither is it necessary that the contract be enforceable by both parties in the same manner,[38] nor, when time is not of the essence of the contract, does the fact that specific performance could not have been decreed on the day it was made invalidate it.[39] Mutuality may also be waived by the conduct of the party against whom the contract could not have originally been enforced.[40]

ness. Alderton v. Williams [Mich.] 102 N. W. 753. An agreement that a contracter will do all the plumbing work and furnish all the material for a building at a maximum specified cost entitles him to be paid that sum on performance, though there is no specific promise to pay it and hence is not void. Flitcroft v. Allenhurst Club [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 82. Contract whereby defendant hired plaintiff for fixed period at fixed wages, and plaintiff agreed not to strike and not to leave defendant's employment without his written consent. Silberman v. Schwarcz, 45 Misc. 352, 90 N. Y. S. 382. Contract for transportation of freight with proposed railroad providing that it shall terminate without notice whenever such road and another railroad shall cease to compete for business, held not to authorize the road to terminate it at its option, and hence valid. Lone Star Salt Co. v. Texas Short Line R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 355.

Contracts held to lack mutuality: Contract to furnish cement, not containing any agreement on the part of the other party to purchase any in any stated or otherwise definite quantity, held mere offer to sell at stated prices during a given time. Huggins v. Southeastern Lime & Cement Co., 121 Ga. 311, 48 S. E. 933. Contract whereby bank agreed to advance to manufacturer certain sum of money but not binding him to accept any of it unless he found it necessary in conducting his business. Swindell & Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 121 Ga. 714, 49 S. E. 673. Where there is no consideration for the promise of one party to furnish or sell to the other so much of a commodity as he may want except the promise of the latter to accept and pay for so much as he may want, and there is no agreement that he shall want any quantity whatever, and no method exists by which it can be determined whether he will want any, or how much he will want. Higbie v. Rust, 211 Ill. 333, 71 N. E. 1010, afg. 112 Ill. App. 218. Agreement by one entering home for aged persons to execute contract to convey to it any property which he might acquire in the future. Baltimore Humane Impartial Soc., 99 Md. 352, 58 A. 26. An agreement to rent a telephone for three years at a stipulated rental, because not signed by plaintiff in consequence of which it could not be enforced against it. Co-operative Tel. Co. v. Katus [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 187, 103 N. W. 814. In action for damages for breach of contract to convey land, held that vendor was entitled to take advantage of provision that contract should be void in case title was not good and could not be made so. Schwab v. Baremore [Minn.] 104 N. W. 10. Contract whereby husband placed deed of property in escrow to be delivered to wife in case he got drunk again. Bosea v. Lent, 44 Misc. 437, 90 N. Y. S. 41. Agreement whereby plaintiff promised to marry defendant at his request and defendant promised to marry plaintiff "on his request." Smyth v. Greacen, 100 App. Div. 275, 91 N. Y. S. 450. A mere naked agreement in a policy of fire insurance to arbitrate may be revoked at any time before the arbitrators have agreed upon an award. Lacks mutuality unless both parties bound to abide the event. Seibel v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 154. Contract whereby plaintiff agreed to sell fertilizer and defendants agreed to buy, but providing that plaintiff might cancel it at any time, held void, and defendants could refuse to purchase though plaintiff manufactured it, put it in sacks marked for them, and made tender thereof. American Agricultural Chemical Co. v. Kennedy, 103 Va. 171, 48 S. E. 868.

37. The element of mutuality exists whenever anything passes from one party to the other or to the latter's nominee, which forms the consideration for it. Agreement to purchase mortgage at its maturity if plaintiff would advance money to corporation thereon which he did, held valid. Law v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 327. If lacking in mutuality, defect remedied by tender to defendant of assignment of mortgage. Id. A mere offer or promise to buy, though unilateral in its inception, becomes absolute and binding when the other party accepts and tenders performance. Agreement to pay certain sum on conveyance of land to third person, not obligating other party to sell, becomes binding on conveyance being made, and party conveying may recover contract price. Quinton v. Mulvane [Kan.] 81 P. 486. Option or offer to convey land for specified price, when other party pays or tenders purchase price before its withdrawal. Bird v. Petter, 146 Cal. 286, 79 P. 970. Though a contract to order manufactured goods is lacking in mutuality because not binding on the buyer, the manufacturer is bound to furnish goods to the extent that they are in fact ordered under the contract before its withdrawal. Simon, Bache & Co. v. Coppes, Zook & Mutschler Co. [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 41.

38. Sufficient if enforceable by both in some manner. Lone Star Salt Co. v. Texas Short Line R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 355.

39. Though vendor of realty is not able to make good title at time of sale, equity may enforce specific performance if he can do so before final decree. Gibson v. Brown, 214 Ill. 330, 73 N. E. 578.

40. Where contract for sale of land lacks mutuality for want of interest in vendor, purchaser who investigates title and makes requisitions or concurs in proceedings for remedying defects is thereafter precluded from setting it up. Gibson v. Brown, 214 Ill. 330, 73 N. E. 578.

(§ 3) D. Public policy in general.[41]—Speaking generally, public policy is that principle which holds that no one can lawfully do that which tends to injury to the public or is contrary to the public good.[42] Contracts restricting the freedom of employment,[43] to pay witnesses more than the fees allowed by law,[44] a contract by a guardian to sell his wards realty made without any legal authority,[45] and agreements designed to defraud third persons,[46] or the public,[47] or to induce one to commit an unlawful act,[48] or which are unconscionable or extortionate,[49] have been held invalid as contrary to public policy.

A contract valid elsewhere will not be enforced if condemned by positive law, or inconsistent with the public policy of the state, the aid of whose tribunals is invoked for the purpose of giving it effect.[50] Neither will the courts of a state enforce a contract of sale made in another state and valid where made if the purpose of both parties was to violate the laws of the forum and the vendor has done some act in furtherance of such purpose.[51]

Contracts by corporations to repurchase their own stock,[52] or guaranteeing dividends thereon,[53] a provision in a contract for the sale of a majority of the stock

A contract is not void as against public policy unless it is injurious to the interests of the public or contravenes some established interest of society. Osgood v. Central Vermont R. Co. [Vt.] 60 A. 137.

43. Contract whereby an employer agrees not to employ any one not a member in good standing of a certain labor union, and to abide by the rules of such union. Note given to union as collateral security for performance held unenforceable. Jacobs v. Cohen, 97 App. Div. 481, 90 N. Y. S. 854.

44. Witness in charge of grade proceedings held not an expert. Ramschasel's Estate, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 262.

45. Le Roy v. Jacobosky, 136 N. C. 443, 48 S. E. 796.

46. A contract which has for its object the practice of deception or fraud upon a third party, or to take advantage of confidential relations with him for the purpose of drawing him into a bargain by which the party undertaking to so use his influence will secretly receive a benefit from the seller. Evidence in action for commissions by real estate agent held insufficient to show such a contract. Instructions approved. Torpey v. Murray, 93 Minn. 482, 101 N. W. 609. Creditors of a party thereto. Bryant v. Wilcox [Mich.] 100 N. W. 918.

47. Contention that arrangement whereby mortgage was executed was entered into for purpose of avoiding the payment of taxes on mortgage and hence was unenforceable because a fraud on the public, held untenable, since note which it was given to secure was taxable. Smith v. Nelson [Or.] 78 P. 740; Pape v. Standard Oil Co., 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 252; Id., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 514.

48. Held, that contract for publication of book could not be reasonably construed as an attempt by plaintiff to induce defendant to commit an unlawful act by undertaking the publication of a story in violation of the property rights of others therein. Barry v. Smart Set Pub. Co., 45 Misc. 402, 90 N. Y. S. 455.

49. Loan contracts providing for payment of interest at the rate of 35 per cent. per week, irrespective of the usury laws. Woodson v. Hopkins [Miss.] 37 So. 1000; Id., 38 So. 298. Contract required to be executed by one about to become the inmate of an old men's home providing that any property which he may thereafter receive shall become the property of the institution. Baltimore Humane Impartial Soc. v. Pierce [Md.] 60 A. 277.

50. Where provision limiting time within which suit may be brought on a contract is void in state of performance and state where it is sought to be enforced, it will not be enforced on removal from state to Federal courts. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Kempton [C. C. A.] 138 F. 992. If against the settled policy of the state where it is sought to be enforced. Unreasonable limitation of carrier's liability. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McIntyre [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 346. Statute prohibiting married woman from becoming surety does not render the enforcement of such a contract entered into in another state where it is valid, against public policy. Garrigue v. Keller [Ind.] 74 N. E. 523.

51. Vendor cannot recover purchase price of liquors in courts of state to which they were to be transported and sold in violation of its laws, where he knew of purpose of vendee, and did acts in furtherance thereof. Corbin v. Houlehan [Me.] 61 A. 131. See, also, Conflict of Laws, 5 C. L. 610.

52. Contract to repurchase held valid, though all stockholders were not given same rights, where no fraud was alleged or proved, and there was no averment that corporation was insolvent, or that stock was not worth amount agreed to be paid therefor. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Tel. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 742.

53. Contract giving free use of telephone lines as dividends on stock in telephone company. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Tel. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 742.

in a corporation that a certain person shall hold certain corporate offices for a designated period,[54] conditions in life insurance policies against the suicide of insured while insane,[55] a stipulation in a contract between the relief department of a railroad company and an employe that the payment by the company of any damages recovered against it by reason of his death or injury shall operate as a release to the department of all claims by reason of membership therein,[56] the business of issuing trading stamps to merchants,[57] and agreements to waive mechanics' liens have been held to be valid.[58] The fact that the lender of money causes the note and mortgage given therefor to be made payable to an alien for the purpose of avoiding local taxation thereon does not render the contract invalid or prevent the foreclosure of the mortgage.[59]

A stipulation in a contract that neither party may resort to the courts is void;[60] but a provision in the laws of a society conditionally prohibiting its members from resorting to the courts for the redress of membership grievances until they have exhausted the remedies provided by the laws and rules of the society is valid.[61]

There is a conflict of authority as to the validity of provisions limiting the time within which an action may be brought on the contract. They are prohibited by statute in some states.[62] Some courts hold them to be contrary to public policy as attempts to vary the statute of limitations.[63] Others hold them valid provided the limitation is reasonable.[64] Such a stipulation may be waived.[65]

By statute in Texas no stipulation in any contract requiring notice to be given 54. Even though it might be invalid as against subsequent stockholders and creditors, where all the stockholders joined. Kantzler v. Benzinger, 214 Ill. 589, 73 N. E. 874, rvg. 112 Ill. App. 293.

56. Provision is reasonable and binding on one accepting contract knowing of it. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Ray [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 942.

57. When honestly conducted. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Temple, 137 F. 992.

58. Building contractor. Gray v. Jones [Or.] 81 P. 813.

59. Unlawful purpose was collateral and incidental, and formed no part of consideration. McKinnon v. Waterbury, 136 F. 489.

60. Provision in compromise agreement that judgment entered in pursuance thereof shall not be appealed from. Hager v. Shuck [Ky.] 87 S. W. 300. An agreement in advance of the arising of a controversy to submit a question of law to a private person for his decision is invalid as an attempt to renounce one's right of appeal to the courts for the redress of his wrongs. Whether defendant was, under contract, charged with duty of providing right of way for canal. Sanitary Dist. v. McMahon & Montgomery Co., 110 Ill. App. 510.

61. McGuiness v. Court Elm City, No. 1, Foresters of America [Conn.] 60 A. 1023. Member of beneficial association convicted, fined, and suspended under alleged invalid order not entitled to sue in civil courts to restrain enforcement of sentence until he had exercised his right to appeal to appellate tribunal of order as authorized by by-laws. Id. See, also, Associations and Societies, 5 C. L. 292; Fraternal Mutual Benefit Associations, § 4, 3 C. L. 1503.

62. Civ. Code Mont. § 2245; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3925. Limitation of time within which action could be brought for damages to live stock held void. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Kempton [C. C. A.] 138 F. 992. Civ. Code S. D. § 1276 Limitation on time within which action on fire policy may be commenced, though form of policy was prepared by state auditor under Laws 1893, c. 105, p. 174, since he had no authority to insert provisions in conflict with statutes. Vesey v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1074.

64. Ausplund v. Aetna Indemnity Co. [Or.] 81 P. 577. Limitation of six months in indemnity undertaking to secure performance of building contract held unreasonable and inoperative where amount of liens filed against building could not be determined until they were foreclosed, which was more than six months after breach. Id. Provision in bond held valid. Marshalltown Stone Co. v. Louis Drach Const. Co., 123 F. 746. Not available to a party to the contract in an action for its breach brought against him and the surety on the bond given to secure its performance. As to contractor the action is based on the contract to which the bond is merely an incident. Id.

65. Waived by indemnitor on building contract, who assumed performance thereof on its breach, and received money due thereon, but failed to promptly pay claims as required by the contract in consequence of which liens were filed against the building. Ausplund v. Aetna Indemnity Co. [Or.] 81 P. 577. Evidence held to show waiver of stipulation requiring suit to be brought on contract of shipment within ninety days. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Godair Com. Co. [Tel. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 871.

of any claim for damages as a condition precedent to the right to sue thereon is valid unless it is reasonable, and any stipulation fixing the time within which such notice shall be given at a less period than ninety days is void.[66] The burden is on the party setting it up to show by proper pleading and proof that the limitation is reasonable.[67] It will also be presumed that the required notice has been given unless want of notice has been specially pleaded under oath.[68]

(§ 3) E. Limitations of liability.[69]—Contracts between master and servant relieving the former from liability for injuries caused by his negligence, or from statutory duties, are contrary to public policy and void.[70] So, too, common carriers cannot by contract relieve themselves from liability for their own negligence, though they may, for a valuable consideration, limit their common-law liability to passengers and shippers.[71]

Contracts breaking down common-law liability and relieving persons from just penalties for their negligent and improper conduct are not favored, and will not be given an enforcement beyond that demanded by their strict construction.[72]

(§ 3) F. Relating to marriage or divorce.[73]—No recovery can be had under a contract for services to be rendered in promoting or bringing about a marriage.[74] Contracts and undertakings made with a view to procure a marriage between the defendant in bastardy proceedings and the complaining witness are valid and enforceable.[75]

A promise to marry a married women is contrary to public policy,[76] but an antenuptial agreement made in consideration of marriage is not invalid by reason of the fact that the man has a wife living, where the woman is ignorant of that fact.[77]

66. Rev. St. 1895, art. 3379. Stipulation allowing ninety-one days cannot be declared unreasonable and void as a matter of law, but question is one of fact. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Honea [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 267. Provision requiring notification of injury to stock transported within one day after their receipt, held invalid. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 286. Statute not a restriction on interstate commerce. Id. Stipulation relates only to the remedy, and hence law of forum governs as to its validity. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Godair Commission Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 871.

67. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Godair Com. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 871.

68. Rev. St. 1895, art. 3379. Burden is on defendant and plea alleging failure to give notice raises no issue unless sworn to. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Honea [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 267. Where plea in action on contract for shipment of cattle was not sworn to, erroneously sustaining demurrer thereto on ground that stipulation was unreasonable as a matter of law, held harmless. Id.

74. Promise to pay plaintiff if he would give woman such information concerning defendant as would induce her to marry him. In re Grobe's Estate [Iowa] 102 N. W. 804. The rule applies to advice or solicitations with reference to carrying out a marriage contract as well as to those with reference to its formation. Id.

75. Mortgage given by a relative of defendant in bastardy proceedings to father of complainant in order to procure dismissal of the proceedings and marriage of parties, and conditioned that defendant would support complainant and her child, held valid. Jangraw v. Perkins [Vt.] 60 A. 385.

76. Notwithstanding fact that marriage was not to take place until after the woman had procured a divorce, or until the husband should have been absent for five years, the statute providing that such absence shall be regarded as dissolution of former marriage, for purpose of remarriage. Shannon's Code, § 4188. Johnson v. Iss [Tenn.] 85 S. W. 79.

77. Agreement to substitute woman for his mother as beneficiary under a certificate in a beneficial association held enforceable by her as against the mother who was a mere volunteer. Broadwick v. Broadwick, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 225.

Agreements between husband and wife whereby one may forfeit to the other any part of his or her property by reason of certain shortcomings on his part are invalid.[78] So, too, are agreements whereby they seek to change or avoid the obligations of their marriage, in so far as they contravene public policy or disregard duties imposed by law.[79] Agreements made in furtherance of divorce [80] or tending to procure a separation between husband and wife are void;[81] but a contract by the husband looking to the support of his wife after separation is valid.[82]

(§ 3) G. Contracts tending to promote immorality.[83]—Contracts tending to promote immorality are contrary to public policy.[84]

(§ 3) H. Litigious agreements.[85]—Agreements tending to promote litigation,[86] or to prevent the settlement of cases, are contrary to public policy.[87]

(§ 3) I. Compounding offenses.[88]—Contracts founded upon agreements to compound felonies, or to stifle public prosecutions of any kind are contrary to public policy.[89]

78. Deed placed in escrow to be delivered to wife if husband got drunk again. Bosea v. Lent, 44 Misc. 437, 90 N. Y. S. 41.

79. Patterson v. Patterson, 111 Ill. App. 342. Agreement by husband to support wife who separates from him held no bar to her suit for separate maintenance. Id. Such suit held not waiver of right to instalments due under contract. Id.

80. Agreement whereby wife released statutory interest in husband's property for a sum of money on understanding that he should sue for divorce and that she would not depend on or demand alimony. In re Bell's Estate [Utah] 80 P. 615. Evidence held to show that agreement was made on understanding that husband should secure divorce, and was agreement for that purpose. Id. Contracts tending to stimulate divorces or to discourage defenses in divorce suits, or which in any way impose on the court. Silberschmidt v. Silberschmidt, 112 Ill. App. 58. Agreements as to alimony pending a suit for divorce without the sanction of the court. Agreement made antecedent to decree fixing alimony held not to affect power of chancellor to fix alimony and that he might entirely disregard it, particularly as it was unfair, unreasonable, and inequitable. Id. Courts do not favor such agreements but rather incline against them as tending to collusion between the parties and to facilitate divorces. Id. A contract intended to facilitate the procuring of a devorce by either of the parties thereto. Transfer of property to husband to induce him to allow wife to procure divorce. Davis v. Hinman [Neb.] 103 N. W. 668. Contract whereby plaintiff and her husband agreed that if she would dismiss pending action for divorce and would release all claims against third persons for alienating his affections, he would not defend an action for divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment and would pay her a certain sum, held illegal. McAllen v. Hodge [Minn.] 102 N. W. 707.

81. Courts of equity will not enforce contracts tainted with an understanding, contemporaneous with the marriage, looking to a possible or probable separation in the future, and, in the nature of things tending to bring it about. Marriage contract held void. Sawyer v. Churchill [Vt.] 59 A. 1014. Phrase "to wit" in a marriage contract used in referring to date of wedding as the date of the contract is immaterial in fixing the true date. Has not same force as in a pleading. Id.

82. Though made directly by the parties. Patterson v. Patterson, 111 Ill. App. 342. A separation agreement between husband and wife, through the intervention of a trustee, by which the wife, in consideration of certain payments made and to be made her by the husband, releases him from liability for her support and agrees not to institute suit for separate maintenance, is valid. Held bar to proceedings by her for support, which could be availed of by husband in probate court, and hence trustee not entitled to enjoin its violation. Bailey v. Dillon, 186 Mass. 244, 71 N. E. 538.

86. See, also, Champerty and Maintenance, 5 C. L. 565. An agreement whereby an attorney in consideration of the assignment to him of a nonnegotiable chose in action undertakes to enforce the same by suit, he to pay all the expenses, and to remit to the assignor half the proceeds and keep the balance for his services in said suit and other services theretofore rendered is void as against public policy. Slade v. Zeitfuss, 77 Conn. 457, 59 A. 406.

87. When the whole legal and equitable title to a cause of action rests in plaintiff and the sole responsibility to answer his claim rests upon defendant, an agreement by plaintiff with his attorney not to settle the case without the latter's consent is void, and cannot deprive defendant of his right to compromise, if he acts in good faith, even if it is enforceable as against plaintiff. Weller v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 459.

88. See 3 C. L. 822.

89. Note and mortgage given to prevent prosecution of obigor's son for felony which obligee represented the son had committed, whether son had committed offense or not. Corbett v. Clute, 137 N. C. 546, 50 S. E. 216. Evidence held to show that consideration for note and mortgage was compounding of felony. Id. Contract whereby parents agreed to convey land to plaintiff in payment of a debt due him from their son, on his agreement to forego his pur-

(§ 3) J. Interfering with public service.[90]—Contracts tending to do away with competition at public sales,[91] or to pay public officers extra compensation for services which they are required by law to perform,[92] or by which public officers assign their salaries,[93] and contracts by a city with a corporation in which a member of the city council is a stockholder, are contrary to public policy and void.[94] So, too, is a contract whereby an executor undertakes to sell his right to administer on the estate of his testator.[95] It is also contrary to public policy to procure the consent of property owners to the licensing of a dramshop by the payment to them of any valuable consideration.[96]

Agreements to use improper methods in obtaining public contracts,[97] or to improperly influence legislation, are void;[98] but if a contract contemplates only legitimate services, it is not illegal merely because an agent employed under it may use corrupt methods.[99] Contracts to procure legislation at a compensation contingent on success are generally regarded as contrary to public policy, without regard to whether improper means are contemplated or used in their consummation;[1] but there seems to be some conflict of authority in this regard.[2] pose to prosecute son criminally for disposing of mortgaged property. Agreement also a penal offense under Pen. Code, art. 291. Medearis v. Granberry [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1070. An agreement by the county attorney to dismiss a criminal prosecution on payment of a certain sum. Johnson v. Owen [Neb.] 100 N. W. 945. Evidence held to establish that note was given by decedent for a valid consideration and was not part of a transaction for the compounding of a felony. Currie v. Michie, 123 Wis. 120, 101 N. W. 370. Contract for lease of building at stipulated rental and on condition that defendants would not prosecute plaintiff's husband for burglary. Graham v. Hiesel [Neb.] 102 N. W. 1010. One executing a deed of trust for the purpose and with the understanding that his son shall not be prosecuted by the beneficiary is not guilty of compounding a felony under Pen. Code 1895, art. 291. Gray v. Freeman [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 1105. Agreement of third person to give property to procure discharge of one from arrest. Sellers v. Catron [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 742.

90. See 3 C. L. 822.

91. Agreement between two persons, each desiring to purchase stock which had been put up as collateral and was to be sold at public sale, that one was to purchase for the benefit of both, the only inducement therefor being prevention of competition which was expressly agreed upon, will not be enforced in equity. Fletcher v. Johnson [Mich.] 102 N. W. 278. Acceptance of check by one party with intention to deliver stock held a mere carrying out the original contract and not to show a new one based on a different consideration. Id.

92. Pay court stenographer, appointed by judge for single case only, more than compensation fixed by statute for transcribing testimony. Dull v. Mammoth Min. Co. [Utah] 79 P. 1050.

93. Agreement of a city fireman assigning and selling his salary for the month then begun for a certain percentage thereof, and promising to collect the same when due and to turn over the whole amount thereof to plaintiff. Mercantile Finance Co. v. Welsh, 91 N. Y. S. 723.

94. Contract for city printing requiring payments to be made out of city treasury. Hardy v. City of Gainesvile, 121 Ga. 327, 48 S. E. 921. Not validated by the subsequent sale of such member's stock. Id.

97. Kerr v. American Pneumatic Service Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 857. Evidence in action on contract for services in procuring government contract held to sustain finding that the exercise of improper or corrupt methods was not contemplated. Parks & Lacy Co. v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 145 Cal. 534, 78 P. 1065, 79 P. 71.

98. Lobbying contract in regard to sale of water rights. Reynolds v. Britton, 102 App. Div. 609, 92 N. Y. S. 2.

99. Contract employing agent contemplating the procuring of government franchises for carrying mail by pneumatic tubes, and securing contracts for carrying mail, and providing for increase in agent's salary when amount of such contracts reaches a certain sum, does not necessarily call for corrupt practices on agent's part and is not void on its face, or contrary to public policy in absence of evidence showing that such services are contemplated. Kerr v. American Pneumatic Service Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 857.

1. To procure municipal franchise for operation of trolley line. Sussman v. Porter, 137 F. 161. Claims for credit by surviving partner under contract for division of attorney's fees for expenses paid to attorneys for procuring legislation by congress looking to reference and payment of certain claims held properly disallowed

Contracts made without the consent of the state, which disable public service corporations from performing their functions are contrary to public policy and void.[3] An agreement by a railroad company, in consideration of the conveyance to it of a right of way and certain other lands, to establish and perpetually maintain on the latter its machine shops and general offices, is valid.[4] The right of such a company to contract in regard to the construction of depots and the time and place of the stoppage of its trains is restricted by the rights of the public, and public policy must be considered in determining the validity of such contracts.[5] Though there is no such restriction on its right to contract with reference to the construction and maintenance of spur tracks to private enterprises,[6] a court of equity will refuse to decree specific performance of such a contract, since it would or might be detrimental to the public interests.[7]

(§ 3) K. Restraint of trade.[8]—A contract in total restraint of trade is contrary to public policy and void;[9] but a contract in partial restraint of trade which is reasonable in its provisions as to time and place and is supported by a valuable consideration is valid.[10] The test of reasonableness is whether the restraint is such as is necessary to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in whose favor it is given, and not such as to unreasonably restrict the other party, or to interfere with the interests of the public,[11] the legality of the contract depending as not being the subject of a legal contract. Consaul v. Cummings, 24 App. D. C. 36.

2. A contract between an attorney and client for purely professional services is not necessarily invalid because a part of the services to be rendered thereunder is the procurement of legislative action, nor because it provides for a contingent fee (Stroemer v. Van Orsdel [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1053); but it will be enforced unless it appears that it contemplates the use of unlawful or improper means, or that such means were employed in pursuance thereof and to attain the object for which it was made. Contract for such services as might be necessary in submitting to the Indians and the government claims of those who had purchased Indian land, which involved appearance before congressional committees in support of proposed bill, held valid. Stroemer v. Van Orsdel [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1053.

3. Contract between complainants and the receiver of a street railway company and a city by which company was permitted to permanently discontinue its railway on a certain street, held void. Thompson v. Schenectady R. Co. [C. C. A.] 131 F. 577. Contract between railroad company and a firm by which the latter was to acquire and operate a steamboat, and each party was to receive and deliver its freight to the other at the usual rates, in consideration of which the railroad agreed to erect a hoist for the handling of freight transferred, held valid. Graham v. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. [Ga.] 49 S. E. 75.

7. Existence of necessity for removal not an issue in the case, it being sufficient that general public might at some time be injured by depriving company of right to exercise its discretion in the matter. City of Tyler v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 238. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4367, requiring companies to keep and maintain their offices, etc., at the place where they have, for a valuable consideration, contracted to keep them, does not change the rule where the contract is made with a city or with individuals, its provisions being mandatory only in so far as they relate to contracts with counties made in consideration of bond issues. 10. Andrews v. Kingsbury, 212 Ill. 97, 72 N. E. 11, afg. 112 Ill. App. 518. The mere fact that the contract is in partial restraint of trade raises no presumption that it is unlawful, but the party alleging its illegality has the burden of proving it. Knapp v. Jarvis Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1008; Bossert v. Jarvis Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1015.

11. Roberts v. Lemont [Neb.] 102 N. W. 770; Andrews v. Kingsbury, 212 Ill. 97, 72 N. E. 11; afg. 112 Ill. App. 518. The true test of the validity or invalidity at common law of a contract or combination to fix the price or control the supply of a commodity is whether it affords only a fair and just protection to the parties thereto and whether it is so broad as to interfere with the interests of the public Combination of corporations creating a virtual monopoly in crushed granite business, and preventing any competition therein, held illegal both at common law and under Sess. Acts 1889, p. 96; Sess. Acts 1891, p. 186. Finck v. Schneider Granite Co., 187 Mo. 244, 86 S. W. 213. Contracts entered into in furtherance of combination held continuing ones, and though legal when made, become invalid upon the facts of each case.[12] The restraining covenant must be ancillary to the main contract,[13] but the fact that a separate consideration is paid therefor does not necessarily render it void.[14] on the subsequent passage of an act prohibiting them, and such act is not thereby given a retroactive effect. Id. The restriction may lawfully extend to all territory wherein plaintiff's trade is likely to go, having regard to the nature of the business. East of Denver held valid. Knapp v. Jarvis Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1008; Bossert v. Jarvis Adams Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1015. Ordinarily a contract prohibiting one of the parties from carrying on a specific trade or business without any limitation as to time or place is void. Total restraint of right to engage in insurance business. Evidence held not to justify its limitation to a particular city. Roberts v. Lemont [Neb.] 102 N. W. 770. Not enforceable where the business is of such a character that it presumably cannot be restrained to any extent whatever without prejudice to the public interests. Charleston Nat. Gas Co. v. Kanawha Nat. Gas, Light & Fuel Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 876. Thus any agreement between competing public service corporations, the consequence of which is the controlling of prices, limiting of production, or suppressing of competition, so as to create a monopoly in things useful to the public, is contrary to public policy, and void. Agreement between two natural gas companies parceling out the territory between them, giving to each the exclusive right to sell gas in a given boundary, fixing prices and prohibiting their change except by mutual consent, binding one company to use for public consumption only gas supplied by the other, and prohibiting one from producing from other's territory. Contracts held legal: Agreement not to engage in newspaper business in a certain city for five years. Andrews v. Kingsbury, 212 Ill. 97, 72 N. E. 11, afg. 112 Ill. App. 518. In suit to enjoin breach of contract, evidence that paper operated by defendant is not of same character as that sold to plaintiff and does not draw its patronage form same source is immaterial. Id. Agreement by one selling good will of business not to engage in same or similar business in same city for three years. Rugg v. Rohrback, 110 Ill. App. 532. Contract between plaintiff and defendant, both of whom were engaged in the real estate and insurance business whereby former agreed not to do any real estate business during continuation of contract, and to turn over to defendant the lands he had for sale, and latter agreed to give him half the commissions received from sale thereof and not to engage in insurance business. Roush v. Gesman Bros., 126 Iowa, 493, 102 N. W. 495. A municipal ordinance giving the exclusive privilege of removing garbage to a person or persons specially appointed, and prohibiting all others from doing so. State v. Robb [Me.] 60 A. 874. Agreement by seller of butcher business, as part of consideration for sale, not to engage in such business for five years within ten miles of certain town. Espenson v. Koepke, 93 Minn. 278, 101 N. W. 168. Evidence held to conclusively show violation of agreement and to warrant direction of verdict for plaintiff for amount of stipulated damages provided for therein. Id. Contract whereby manufacturer of printing presses agreed to sell those adapted to printing of strip tickets only to a certain printing company where their adaptation to that use was joint work of both parties, and agreement was integral part of the thing sold. 14. New York Bank Note Co. v. Hamilton Bank Note Engraving & Printing Co., 180 N. Y. 280, 73 N. E. 48. Though consideration for sale of presses and agreement not to sell to others was divided, held, that contract should be treated as an entirety,

The mere loaning of money to a competitor is not a breach of an agreement not to engage in a business similar to that of another.[15]

Statutes in some states make all contracts restraining one from exercising a lawful business or profession void unless they accompany the sale of the good will of such business.[16]

A combination tending to prevent competition and create a monopoly is unlawful at common law as against public policy, and all contracts for the accomplishment of such purpose are void.[17]

(§ 3) L. Effect of invalidity.[18]—Neither a court of law nor of equity will lend its aid to the enforcement of contracts which are illegal or immoral or which are contrary to public policy.[19] If executed, either wholly or in part, it will leave the parties where it finds them.[20] Thus a party cannot recover money paid under an illegal contract or money due him as profits thereunder where he is obliged to make out his case by showing the illegal contract or transaction, or through its medium, or when it appears that he was privy to the original illegal contract or transaction.[21] The rule is not changed by the fact that the parties acted in good and restrictive covenant regarded as in aid of and collateral to sale. Id.

15. Injunction restraining breach of agreement made by one member of a firm, on its dissolution, not to engage in a similar business within the state, held not erroneous in so far as it refused to restrain defendant from loaning money to his son for that purpose, or to restrain son from engaging in such business. Salzman v. Siegelman, 102 App. Div. 406, 92 N. Y. S. 844.

16. Civ. Code, §§ 1673, 1674. Contract by vendor of stock in corporation binding him not to engage in same business as corporation is void, since he cannot sell good will of latter's business. Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 P. 879. Agreement made in connection with purchase and sale of salt, not to purchase salt from anyone else for two years, not to import any or cause any to be imported, and to discourage importations by others, held void and no recovery can be had on checks given for consideration. Getz Bros. & Co. v. Federal Salt Co. [Cal.] 81 P. 416. Gen. Laws 1899, c. 359, relating to trusts and monopolies, does not apply to agreement by seller of business, as part of consideration for sale, not to engage in such business for five years within ten miles of certain town. Espenson v. Koepke, 93 Minn. 278, 101 N. W. 168. Promise by partner on purchase of business by copartner not to engage in same business in that town so long as the latter remains in the business there is not void at common law or under Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94. Crump v. Ligon [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 250. Instruction in action for breach of such contract held to substantially present the issues. Id. 3 How. Ann. St. § 9354j does not invalidate contract whereby stockholders of corporation, on sale of its business, agree not to engage in similar business for ten years in specified district. Davis v. 21. Woodson v. Hopkins [Miss.] 37 So. 1000; Id. [Miss.] 38 So. 298. Plaintiff cannot recover money paid county attorney to procure dismissal of criminal prosecution, and his release from jail. Johnson v. Owen [Neb.] 100 N. W. 945. Where one loaning money at extortionate rates and by contracts contrary to public policy established an agency in charge of defendant, who subsequently claimed the business as his own and refused to account, his principal could faith and under the mistaken belief that their agreement was legal, where they had knowledge of the facts and the law.[22] But when an illegal contract has been fully executed and the interests and differences of the parties agreed upon, and the proceeds deposited to the credit of one of the parties, the person with whom it is deposited cannot set up the illegality of the original contract in an action to recover the money brought by the party to whom it was due.[23] A contract valid on its face and which has been partially performed may not, in a court of equity, be shown to be invalid as against public policy in order that plaintiff may do that which he has contracted not to do, and thus take advantage of his own wrong.[24]

If the contract is executory, neither party can enforce it [25] or recover damages for its breach.[26]

The law lends itself to him who would destroy an unlawful contract and only refuses to have anything to do with the matter when both parties are equally guilty and an enforcement of the illegal contract is sought.[27] While public policy forbids the enforcement of an illegal or immoral contract, it is equally insistent on the enforcement of contracts which are lawful and contravene none of its rules, not maintain a bill to recover the money and for an injunction and receiver. Woodson v. Hopkins [Miss.] 37 So. 1000; Id. [Miss.] 38 So. 298. Of agreement to represent bank in another state in which he knows it is not entitled to do business. People v. Mercantile Co-op. Bank, 93 N. Y. S. 521. Judgment against plaintiff in former suit against bank for damages suffered in prosecution for doing business in such other state without compliance with its laws by the bank, in which his knowledge of the illegality of the agreement must have been directly involved, held conclusive on that question in subsequent suit for breach of such contract. Id. For breach of a promise to marry a woman already married. Johnson v. Iss [Tenn.] 85 S. W. 79. Agreement to purchase farm and hay cut and cocked for a lump sum, plaintiff to take care of the hay, is wholly void under the statute of frauds, and damages cannot be recovered for failure to care for the hay. Schultz v. Kosbab [Wis.] 103 N. W. 237.

27. The fact that one gives a mortgage in consideration of the compounding of a felony does not prevent him from avoiding and no contract should be held invalid or set at naught on a mere suspicion of illegality.[28]

If a contract is not severable, the illegality of a part of it renders the whole void.[29] If severable, the illegal portion may be rejected and the legal portion retained and enforced.[30] The rule is equally applicable whether there are two distinct promises, one to do a legal act and the other to do an illegal one, or one divisible promise, or whether the consideration for the two promises is entire or apportionable.[31] Public policy will not avoid a contract embracing an unlawful clause which was mutually disregarded.[32]

If the principal obligation is void for illegality, the infirmity will extend to and vitiate a contract guaranteeing it, and will constitute a defense open to the guarantor in an action on the guaranty itself.[33] Where the consideration for a mortgage is legal, it is no defense to a suit by the assignee thereof to foreclose it that the consideration for the assignment was illegal.[34] It has, however, been held that a bank sued by the endorsee of a certificate of deposit may show that the indorsement was made in pursuance of an illegal contract.[35] If property is sold absolutely and unconditionally, mere knowledge on the part of the vendor that it will thereafter be illegally sold, or will be applied to some illegal or immoral use, will not bar an action for the purchase price, unless it is part of the contract that it shall be so sold or used, or unless the vendor aids or participates in the illegal objects otherwise than by the mere act of making the sale.[36] A member of a firm cannot preclude recovery by his innocent co-partner of his share of the partnership profits by showing that they were realized in an unlawful manner.[37]

The court should admit and consider legal evidence offered to show that the cause of action springs from an illegal or corrupt agreement,[38] even though the objection is not pleaded;[39] and whenever the evidence of either party, whether introduced for that purpose or not, shows illegality, should of its own motion direct a nonsuit.[40] So, too, the appellate court will not enforce such a contract, though the question was not raised in the lower court and is not urged on appeal.[41]

§ 4. Interpretation. A. General rules.[42]—The primary rule of construction is to give effect to the intention of the parties.[43]

Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman Poulsen & Co. [Or.] 80 P. 424. As to whether sum contracted to be paid on breach of contract is liquidated damages or penalty. Santa Fe St. R. Co. v. Schultz [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 39.

Particular contracts construed. Advertising contracts: Indorsement on order for publication of advertisement that it was given with understanding that publishers should "produce business to the amount of the cost of the advertisement or no pay," held to mean that orders for goods because of the advertisement should be treated as payment pro tanto of the bill, and that advertiser could not recover the balance. Snyder v. International Economist Co., 91 N. Y. S. 748. Evidence held to show contract that plaintiff was to receive commissions on continuing advertising contracts only while he remained in defendant's employ and was influential in securing their continuance. Hooke v. Financier Co., 99 App. Div. 186, 90 N. Y. S. 1012. In action to recover for advertising evidence held to support finding that plaintiff did not agree to submit proof to defendant before publication. Morning Journal Ass'n v. Harris, 92 N. Y. S. 316.

Building and construction contracts [See 5 C. L. 455]: Provision that payment was to be made for materials if they were satisfactory to the architect not waived by further provision that payment might be made in advance of delivery. Bateman Bros. v. Mapel, 145 Cal. 241, 78 P. 734. Finding that contract did not call for monument similar in design and size to another one held proper. Braun v. Hothan, 87 App. Div. 611, 84 N. Y. S. 8. Contract held to render defendant liable to plaintiff only for such iron as was actually used in the building for which it was furnished. Weber v. Farrell, 84 N. Y. S. 272. Iron used in necessary temporary work held to be included in contract. Id. Assignment of contract to surety held absolute and not merely for security, though the instrument so recited. Aetna Indemnity Co. v. Ladd [C. C. A.] 135 F. 636. Contract held to entitle plaintiff to furnish as much granite as was necessary to make construction walls for bridge and approaches and not merely as much as defendant might call for. United Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Broadnax [C. C. A.] 136 F. 351. Contractor held to have assumed risk of depth of excavation required, and could not recover extra compensation because levels on plans were inaccurate and it was necessary to go to a greater depth than indicated. Connors v. U. S., 130 F. 609. Agreement to install heating plant "in a good and workmanlike manner," held to require installation in such a manner that it would operate with reasonable success in heating building. Ideal Heating Co. v. Kramer [Iowa] 102 N. W. 840. Provisions of contract for construction of breakwater held to require contractors to maintain stakelights in the proper positions, and to keep them properly trimmed and burning, and they were liable for injuries to vessel resulting from extinguishment of light. Harrison v. Hughes [C. C. A.] 125 F. 860. Contract held not to restrict contractors in placing lights to those prescribed therein or to those ordered by the officers in charge of the work. Id. Contract held to require construction of complete dam and not merely the furnishing of materials therefor. Montgomery Water Power Co. v. Chapman, 132 F. 138. Contract for building wall and sloping bank held to entitle plaintiff to $1 per yard for all sloping in excess of 300 yards necessarily removed, in absence of objection to his removing such excess, though defendant did not expressly consent to such removal, and though plaintiff began to slope at bottom of wall instead of at top. Necessity a question for jury. Dugan v. Kelly [Ark.] 86 S. W. 831. Contract for railroad construction work held not to give engineer authority to waive written orders for extra work, to make allowances for loss or damages for doing work for which price was fixed by contract, or to bind principal by parol modification. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Jolly Bros. & Co., 71 Ohio St. 92, 72 N. E. 888. Contract held to require only the construction of such fire escapes as would satisfy tenement house department when completed, and production of their certificate entitled plaintiff to recover, though escape as constructed would not have satisfied law when contract was made. McManus v. Annett, 101 App. Div. 6, 91 N. Y. S. 808. Contract for construction of drainage canal held to require defendant to furnish right of way. Sanitary Dist. v. McMahon & Montgomery Co., 110 Ill. App. 510. Under contract providing for payment of $250 to plaintiff for drawing plans, as security for which defendant was to deed him the equity of redemption in certain lands, payment to be made within two years, and plaintiff to reconvey on payment, provided he had not previously sold the land, which he was authorized to do, in which event the price received was to release defendant, held, that plaintiff, not having sold the lot or been paid within two years, was entitled to recover contract price. Perkins v. Hanks [Mass.] 74 N. E. 314. In action for architect's services, there being a conflict as to whether the plans were workable, evidence held insufficient to sustain judgment for defendant. Repelye v. Lynch, 102 App. Div. 622, 92 N. Y. S. 371.

Contracts for drilling wells: Contract held to provide for payment at certain rate per foot for boring through earth until rock was struck, and after that different sum per foot, whatever the substance might be. Mansfield v. Morgan, 140 Ala. 567, 37 So. 393. There being no guaranty that water would be provided, where evidence showed that after boring a certain distance defendant advised plaintiff to bore elsewhere, which he did, and procured water, for which well defendant paid, held, that instruction that it made no difference as to plaintiff's right to recover for first well whether defendant obtained any benefit from it or not, if he consented to boring second one, was proper. Id. So also was instruction that where, in absence of express contract, services are rendered by one for another which are accepted by the latter, the law presumes an obligation to pay the reasonable value thereof. Id. Complaint held not demurrable for failure to allege that water was procured where there was no guaranty that water would be procured. Id. Contract held to mean that whenever well would furnish continuous supply of twenty-five gallons of water per minute, either by natural flow or by use of deep well pump, the contractor would be entitled to discontinue boring, provided he notified owner that use of deep well pump was necessary. Moore v. Pritchett, 121 Ga. 139, 49 S. E. 292. Contract held to require such a well as would be adapted to defendant's needs, the exact depth to be determined in the future according to the success achieved, and to require work to continue until sufficient amount of water was obtained or it became reasonably certain that further driling would be useless. Poland v. Thomaston Face & Ornamental Brick Co. [Me.] 60 A. 795. Plaintiffs held entitled to no pay where work was stopped before reaching water because casing became fast, nor was defendant bound to allow them to drill in a new place. Caruthers v. Cook [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 690.

Contracts of employment: Resolution for appointment of county physician held to impose on him the duty of rendering medical aid to residents of a certain township who were not able to pay therefor, as well as to inmates of certain named institutions. Cochran v. County of Vermilion, 113 Ill. App. 140. Contract giving defendant exclusive right to sell goods in certain territory held not to give him right to fix prices at which goods sold by the manufacturer in such territory should be billed and sold for its own profit. La Favorite Rubber Mfg. Co. v. H. Channon Co., 113 Ill. App. 491. Contract for payment of advances to agent to be repaid from commissions to be earned, and requiring defendant to remain in plaintiff's employment so long as he was in debt to him, held not to constitute such advances a debt which could be recovered by plaintiff on failure of the venture. Arbaugh v. Shockney, 34 Ind. App. 268, 72 N. E. 668, 71 N. E. 232. Use of word "debt" did not import personal liability. Id. Advancements provided for in contract which was supplemental to one employing plaintiff as insurance solicitor, held a part of and not in addition to commissions provided for in primary contract. Id. [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 232, rehearing denied, 34 Ind. App. 268, 72 N. E. 668. Evidence held to show that use of farm was given plaintiff in return for services rendered in caring for his father and that he was not entitled to recover additional compensation for services rendered prior to subsequent agreement to pay him an additional sum. Durr v. Durr, 26 Ky. L. R. 855, 82 S. W. 581. Use of farm after father's death held to balance amount of additional compensation to which he was entitled under latter agreement. Id. Where defendant agreed to continue employment if trial for four months was satisfactory, he was not bound to notify him at the end of that period that it was unsatisfactory, on pain of being bound by continuance of the contract. Carter & Co. v. Weber [Mich.] 101 N. W. 818. Held that plaintiff should have inferred that it was unsatisfactory from defendant's conduct. Id. Defendant not estopped from claiming that it was unsatisfactory by failure to answer plaintiff's letters. Id. Minimum compensation provided for held to be $50 per week. Weik v. Williamson-Gunning Advertising Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 144. In action on contract to pay broker certain sum for selling land, instruction that defendant's proposition contained in a certain letter only required plaintiff to secure a purchaser for all the land if it contained an average quantity of timber, held erroneous where letter was silent in that regard. Veatch v. Norman [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 350. Plaintiff held entitled to defendant's exclusive services. Seaburn v. Zachmann, 99 App. Div. 218, 90 N. Y. S. 1005. Contract allowing the employer to disregard orders sent in by a salesman, from persons of doubtful financial responsibility does not authorize him to disregard orders sent in at prices below those authorized. Highland Buggy Co. v. Parker, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 383. Evidence insufficient to support plaintiff's claim for extra compensation for nursing and caring for decedent. Services held to have been rendered in pursuance of contract between plaintiff's husband and decedent. Normile v. Osborne, 207 Pa. 367, 56 A. 937. Contract of theatrical employment held not to entitle defendant to make deduction from plaintiff's salary for performance omitted because of absence of other actors, for which neither plaintiff nor defendant was to blame. Wentworth v. Whitney, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 100. In action for an accounting under agreement whereby defendant was to sell farm acquired under mortgage foreclosure and account to plaintiff for proceeds, less the amount of a debt owing defendant, held not to show that defendant was entitled to compensation for supervising farm before sale. Chaffee v. Conway [Wis.] 103 N. W. 269. Agreement by employe to assign to plaintiff a half interest in all inventions made by him relative to automatic organs in consideration of an increased salary, held to cover inventions equally applicable to automatic organs and pianos. Vocalion Organ Co. v. Wright, 137 F. 313.

Services of attorney held not contemplated by contract, and he was entitled to additional compensation therefor. Barcus v. Sherwood [C. C. A.] 136 F. 184, afg. 130 F. 364. Contract by attorney to procure payment of legacy to heirs for a contingent fee held to cover all necessary services, including those rendered in taking an appeal from an erroneous decision of the lower court. Cavanaugh v. Robinson [Mich.] 101 N. W. 824. Defendant's agent not bound to furnish appeal bond, and if no appeal was contemplated plaintiff had no authority to proceed therewith at defendant's expense. Id.

Franchises: Provision in franchise ordinance requiring company to reimburse property owners for "cost of paving," held to cover expense of excavating, grading, etc., preparatory to laying pavement. Danville St. R. & Light Co. v. Mater, 116 Ill. App. 519. Agreement by street railroad company with property owner to operate the line for half the period of its charter, which was for fifty years, held to require continuous operation for twenty-five years from time of contract. Santa Fe St. R. Co. v. Schutz [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 39.

Gas and oil leases: See, also, Mines and Minerals, 4 C. L. 649.

Lessee under gas lease not bound to furnish gas for use outside of house under contract requiring it to equip house of lessor for use of natural gas and furnish gas free. Gillespie v. Iseman, 210 Pa. 1, 59 A. 266. Under contract in regard to prospecting for gas and oil, held that the gas company could, on the development of gas in paying quantities while drilling for oil, and its election to pay the cost of drilling the well, take possession of it, and other party could not continue operations in effort to find oil in lower stratum. Carnegie Nat. Gas Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 548.

Loans: Agreement held to require plaintiff to hold money in readiness to lend to defendant at any time between specified dates and obligate defendant absolutely to pay interest thereon during such time, even though he did not borrow it. Ehlen v. Selden, 99 Md. 699, 59 A. 120. Agreement whereby defendant was to furnish money to purchase certain land from third persons under no obligation to sell, and to divide the profits with plaintiff, held not to give the latter any right or interest in the land. Forrest v. O'Bryan, 126 Iowa, 571, 102 N. W. 492. Agreement to furnish money for prosecution of business of corporation, "and for paying up the outstanding accounts of said company, which are now due, less stockholders' notes," etc., held not to require payment of notes. Fairbairn v. Houghten [Mich.] 102 N. W. 284. Where defendant promised that he would pay the expenses of procuring loan to pay third mortgage owned by him on property of plaintiffs, not to exceed a certain sum, he was only liable for the actual expense proved. Marks v. Appelbaum, 92 N. Y. S. 239.

Mail contract requiring contractor "to take the mail from and deliver it into the postoffices, mail stations, and cars," held to require him to carry it from his wagons up to the stations or cars of an elevated railroad. Utah Stage Co.'s Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 420.

Mining contracts: See, also, Mines and Minerals, 4 C. L. 649. Contract providing that money advanced for formation of mining company shall be repaid out of the proceeds of "ore sales, compromises, or otherwise," and that no other money shall be paid out, except for necessary operations, until after such repayment, held to mean that if net proceeds of ore sales and compromises does not amount to enough to liquidate such claim within a reasonable time, the obligation shall become absolute. McIntyre v. Ajax Min. Co., 28 Utah, 162, 77 P. 613; White v. Century Gold Min. & Mill. Co., 28 Utah, 331, 78 P. 868. Limitations do not begin to run against plaintiff's cause of action until expiration of reasonable time after creation of the obligation, and plea of limitations cannot avail on appeal where it does not appear from records or findings at what date reasonable time elapsed. Id.

Relating to mortgages: A contract by a mortgagee not to enforce his unsecured claims against the equity of redemption of the mortgagor does not preclude him from acquiring legitimate claims of other parties and enforcing them, unless at the time it was executed mortgagee entertained design of thereafter doing so for purpose of preventing mortgagor from obtaining benefit of the contract. Rich v. Hayes, 99 Me. 51, 58 A. 62. Release by mortgagor to mortgagee held broad enough to embrace equity of redemption. Leusenhop v. Einsfeld, 93 App. Div. 68, 87 N. Y. S. 268. Contract held to authorize retention of senior mortgage until advancements were paid and to prevent purchase of equity under junior mortgage by holder of both mortgages from operating as payment of senior mortgage. Continental Title & Trust Co. v. Devlin, 209 Pa. 380, 58 A. 843.

Payment: Contract authorizing defendant to pay out of sums due one with whom he had a contract for cutting certain timber "the actual labor claims incurred in cutting, removing, and logging said timber," and providing that balance remaining from month to month shall be paid to plaintiffs until their claims and any indebtedness thereafter incurred to them shall be settled, held to require payment of all labor claims incurred prior or subsequent to the making of the contract before making payments to plaintiffs. Esmond v. Gillies Logging & Mercantile Co., 36 Wash. 499, 78 P. 1016. Evidence as to amount of timber cut and amount of defendant's advancements, held admissible. Id. Evidence held to sustain finding that nothing applicable to plaintiffs' claims remained in defendant's hands. Id. Contract to accept specified monthly payments on certain note, given by one who received but did not pay over premiums on plaintiff's insurance policies, and that a certain per cent. of the premiums on all policies issued to plaintiff and certain of its officers should also be applied on the note, held not to bind plaintiff to take out any insurance, or at least that any obligation to do so was conditional on the prompt payment of the monthly instalments by defendant. Old Dominion Min. & Concentrating Co. v. Daggett & Co. [Wash.] 80 P. 839. Vendee of mortgaged land agreed with mortgagor to pay what was "actually due" on the mortgage debt. Mortgage called for usurious interest and vendee sued to restrain a foreclosure, alleging a tender of the amount actually due. Held, that injunction should have been continued to final hearing to determine whether words "actually due" meant the face of the note or the amount legally due. Erwin v. Morris, 137 N. C. 48, 49 S. E. 53. Defendants conveyed land to plaintiff by warranty deed. Later it appeared that there were outstanding tax claims against it. Defendant's grantor, recognizing his liability to pay them, agreed to do so, and conveyed to plaintiff as security a house subject to a mortgage, and at same time defendant executed a contract to plaintiff guaranteeing the "payment of the taxes" in any event and that they should suffer no loss. The house was sold under the mortgage and plaintiff never realized anything from it. Held, that a verdict was properly directed for defendant. Bigelow v. Stearns [Mich.] 100 N. W. 125.

A guaranty of "the payment of all bills payable by this contract" includes a balance of the total amount of the minimum contract price remaining unpaid. Klosterman v. United Elec. Light & Power Co. [Md.] 60 A. 251. Agreed consideration for contract whereby plaintiff was to receive money on deposit and pay it out to defendant's creditors held to have been the use by plaintiff of the deposit, which was not to be allowed to fall below a certain sum, and the opportunity for trade which the cashing of the orders would afford him, and he was not entitled to additional compensation for his services. Temple v. Schultz [Fla.] 36 So. 59.

Sales: See, also, Sales, 4 C. L. 1318. Contract held agreement for shipment of cotton, with liquidated damages for its breach, and not a mere usurious loan. Allen-West Commission Co. v. People's Bank [Ark.] 84 S. W. 1041. Contract to install complete printing press at a certain time requires installation of one fully equipped to do the work required of it at the time of delivery, and where plates were worn out plaintiff cannot recover contract price, less cost of new plates, though they were worn out in trials of its efficiency and it has been demonstrated that press will do the work according to contract. Inman Mfg. Co. v. American Cereal Co., 124 Iowa, 737, 100 N. W. 860. Contract for rock held to require defendant to furnish the run of the mine, so long as the per cent. of bone phosphate of lime therein did not fall below that specified. Globe Fertilizer Co. v. Tennessee Phosphate Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 1177. Agreement to purchase "all" the srap iron which plaintiffs might receive at specified price held to have been made with reference to business in which they were engaged, and to include only such iron as they would naturally and reasonably accumulate in such business as then conducted, and not iron purchased from wholesalers on drop in price. Helper v. MacKinnon Mfg. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 804. Contract for sale of ties held to bind neither party unless proposed new lines of railroad were actually built, and then only to the extent that they were needed for that purpose. Laclede Const. Co. v. Moss Tie Co., 185 Mo. 25, 84 S. W. 76. Demand for delivery of ties under contract held not to place defendant in default where neither it nor the evidence showed that they were needed for purpose specified. Id. Transfer of contract to construction company held not to have created new contract or changed rights of parties. Id. Contract held either a conditional sale of cattle or an absolute sale accompanied by a purchase-money mortgage, so that defendant could not contend that he was merely given possession of the cattle for purpose of taking care of them for plaintiff at specified compensation. Tucker v. Dolan [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1126. Agreement to indemnify buyer of sausages for export in case claim was made for too much fat, held to render seller liable for damages resulting from refusal of authorities of country to which they were shipped to allow them to be landed. James v. Libby, 92 N. Y. S. 1047. Warranty "only against breakage caused by manifest defects in material for the year in which they are sold," held to exclude all other warranties of quality, express or implied. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Mahon [N. D.] 101 N. W. 903. The fact that the word "sell" is used in the contract does not show as a matter of law that a present sale was intended rather than a contract to sell. Pacific Export Lumber Co. v. North Pacific Lumber Co. [Or.] 80 P. 105. Contract for manufacture and sale of stoves held to require the buyer to receive at least the specified number within the time limited. Hardwick v. American Can Co. [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 797. Contract for sale of telephone line held not to have vested title thereto or exclusive control in the buyers before the expiration of five years. Murphy v. Smith, Walker & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 678. Contract held to mean that title to lumber bought with money advanced by bank should remain in it until such money was repaid, when what remained was to be transferred to and become property of plaintiff. Dennis v. Montesano Nat. Bank [Wash.] 80 P. 764. Agreement by sellers of fishing plants not to engage or become interested in business of catching certain fish or manufacturing their products along the Atlantic coast for twenty years, held personal in its nature and to preclude them from engaging in such business on Chesapeake Bay. Fisheries Co. v. Lennen [C. C. A.] 130 F. 533. Evidence held not to show contemporaneous oral contract to furnish defendants with employment. Id. Provision in contract for purchase and sale of specified quantity of goods "deliveries to be made as wanted until further agreement" held not to give purchaser right to refuse to accept goods no matter when tendered, but he was bound to accept within a reasonable time. Dunn v. Mayo Mills [C. C. A.] 134 F. 804. Under contract to furnish government supplies in such quantities as might be ordered from time to time, held, that there could be no breach by failure to furnish supplies unless they were ordered, and fact that contractor became bankrupt and that contract was annuled did not create any liability on his part for failure to furnish supplies where none were ordered. Sparhawk v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 720, rev. In re Stoever, 127 F. 394. Provision that vessel should be transferred "with her unexpired insurance fully paid," held to mean that to the extent to which the vessel was covered by insurance on Dec. 15th, the vendor was obliged to vest the vendee on Feb. 1st, with fully paid policies issued by underwriters as good at least as those which were underwriting her on Dec. 15th. Brauer v. Macbeth [C. C. A.] 138 F. 977.

Sales of realty: See, also, Vendors and Purchasers, 4 C. L. 1769. Where one agrees to convey land on the payment of money, the word "convey" means the making and delivery of a deed. Quinton v. Mulvane [Kan.] 81 P. 486. Contract held one for the sale of land to defendants and not to have merely constituted them plaintiff's agents to promote a sale. Harmon v. Thompson [Ky.] 84 S. W. 569. Held, that confirmation of land grant by court of private land claims was a "confirmation by the congress of the United States" within the meaning of a contract to pay a certain sum on such confirmation. Joseph v. Catron [N. M.] 81 P. 439. Also held that it was none the less a "confirmation" because only the allotments, and not the claim for the outlying pasture land, were confirmed. Id. Contract for sale of land held to be that of defendant individually and not as agent of the owner, though word "agent" was used in connection with his name and words "subject to the ratification of the owner of the land." Hardman v. Kelley [S. D.] 104 N. W. 272. Covenant in lease held to grant defendant right to raise its dam and to release it from liability for damages resulting to other lands owned by plaintiff in vicinity which would incidentally be flooded by the flooding of those described. Stadler v. Missouri River Power Co., 133 F. 314.

Miscellaneous contracts: Contract in regard to certain grain bags held not to render defendant absolutely liable to pay stipulated price for all bags not shipped to plaintiff by that date, but to give him the option to pay or account therefor. Curtin v. Ingle, 143 Cal. 354, 77 P. 74. Agreement held to constitute waiver by widow of her right to an award out of decedent's estate. Bennett v. Morris, 111 Ill. App. 150. Contract by real estate agent to turn over to defendant properties which he had for sale held merely agreement to turn them over for purpose of allowing defendant to make other arrangements for their sale with the owners, and hence not objectionable on ground that plaintiff could not transfer his authority. Roush v. Gesman Bros., 126 Iowa, 493, 102 N. W. 495. Contract held to be for the furnishing of a particular pasture, and not for furnishing sufficient pasturage for a certain number of cattle. Brown & Co. v. St. John Trust Co. [Kan.] 80 P. 37. Notes held not given in discharge of contract of purchase but were a part thereof and merely evidence of the debt thereby created, and failure to pay them was breach. Mason v. Edward Thompson Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 507. Contract under which G. was to be permitted to use certain premises for piling granite to be furnished plaintiff, held to entitle him only to so much of the space thereon as he actually needed, and where he was furnished that much he was not excused from performance because he did not have it all. Degnon-McLean Const. Co. v. City Trust; Safe Deposit & Surety Co., 99 App. Div. 195, 90 N. Y. S. 1029. Contract whereby defendants agreed to be at the expense of all actions and legal proceedings necessary for obtaining or maintaining certain railroad franchises, held not to entitle plaintiffs to employ their own attorneys to take part in any litigation regardless of whether they were interested therein or not, and regardless of the necessity therefor, and defendants were not liable for fees of attorneys so employed. Johnson v. Atlas Imp. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 950. Mere fact that defendants consented to cooperation of attorneys so employed held not to make them liable. Id. Plaintiff held entitled to recover for cutting up of meadow by street railway company under oral agreement to compensate him therefor, though not entitled to do so under written agreement for use of a part of the land for a right-of-way. Quigley v. Montgomery & C. Elec. R. Co., 208 Pa. 238, 57 A. 512. Contract whereby each of two mercantile houses acquired interest in gross profits of the other held not to provide for such a sharing of profits as to create a partnership. Fechteler v. Palm Bros. & Co. [C. C. A.] 133 F. 462.

Acceptance of order for payment of money held conditional only on the value of certain lumber on the switch between the date of the order and the time named therein for its payment. Fletcher v. Simms [Ark.] 86 S. W. 993. Evidence held to show that plaintiff had authority to sell a certain farm and hence he was entitled to part of commissions received by defendant for making sale, under agreement between them to divide commissions on business turned over to defendant by plaintiff. Roush v. Gesman Bros., 126 Iowa, 493, 102 N. W. 495. Contract to furnish fuel oil held to show intention that it should be modified to conform to new conditions in case certain wells should cease to gush, and parties not having been able to make new contract, court could not make one for them. United Fruit Co. v. Louisiana Petroleum Co. [La.] 38 So. 958. Money which a debtor on disclosure claimed as exempt was deposited with a third person and agreement in writing entered into to the effect that the creditor should commence suit against the debtor as principal and the third person as trustee, and reciting that said arrangement was made for the purpose of testing the creditor's right to the fund, and that it was agreed that all provisions of law should be available in defense as though the fund had remained in the debtor's hands. In suit commenced by trustee process, it was decided that the fund was not exempt. Held, that creditor was entitled to it under the agreement without further proceedings on his part. Hathorn v. Robinson, 98 Me. 334, 56 A. 1057. Money became contingent property of plaintiff when placed in third person's hands, dependent upon decision of the court. Word "right" means ownership. Id. Money was not attached or put in the custody of the law by proceedings under trustee process. Id. Subsequent death of debtor and insolvency of his estate did not affect creditor's rights. Id. Contract between manufacturer of electric lamps and dealer, whereby latter was to carry a specified number of lamps in stock and to give a note to manufacturer which he was to be allowed to settle "by return of lamps * * * at any time at the option of either party, and by a sixty-day notice by either party," held to give dealer option to pay note by return of lamps, but not to give manufacturer right to elect to take them in payment, the words "at the option of either party" referring to time of payment merely. Union Trust Co. v. Michigan Elec. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 131, 103 N. W. 556. Contract to furnish water power held to require defendant, after expiration of ten years from date power was first used, to pay $5 per horse power for all power used. Great Falls Water Power & Town Site Co. v. Boston & M. C. Copper & Silver Min. Co. [Mont.] 81 P. 392. Instrument held to amount to assignment of wages to be earned and not mere power of attorney authorizing their collection. Quigley v. Welter [Minn.] 104 N. W. 236. Renewal of notes held not a collection thereof within meaning of contract whereby defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a certain sum on their collection. Dickinson v. Motley Co., 90 N. Y. S. 286. In action for an accounting under contract for sharing profits of promoting a corporation, evidence held to show that defendants were partners as between themselves, and finding that one of them had no interest in the contract was prejudicial to his rights. Boice v. McCormick, 94 N. Y. S. 892. Contract by owner to transfer stock to new corporation providing that old corporation should be free from all indebtedness maturing before certain date and that he would assume any not then paid, held to render him liable for costs of suit in which old company was engaged, which on an appeal being taken, had been paid by defendant therein to such company's solicitors under rules of English court where case was tried, and which such company had credited on solicitors' bill, and which new company had to repay on reversal of the judgment. Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Hoagland, 180 N. Y. 35, 72 N. E. 634.

Duration of option held to be for fifty days, that being the period within which the first payment was to be made. Swank v. Fretts, 209 Pa. 625, 59 A. 264. Where lease provided that expense of keeping dam in repair should be borne equally by the parties thereto and that it should be binding on the assigns, etc., of the parties, and the lessor sold the rental to one party and the land to another, held that the lessee was entitled to deduct half the cost of repairs from the annual rental before paying it to the person to whom the rental was sold. Hamaker v. Manheim Light, Heat & Power Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 484. Contract with proposed railroad in regard to transportation of product of salt works held to entitle road to certain per centage of both the ingoing and outgoing tonnage incident

If the language of a written contract is clear and explicit, it alone must govern.[44]

Courts cannot interpolate terms as to which the minds of the parties have not given assent,[45] but stipulations which are necessary to make the contract reasonable and conformable to usage will be implied with respect to matters concerning which no contrary intention is manifested.[46]

A contract must receive such an interpretation as will make it lawful, operative, definite, reasonable, and capable of being carried into effect, if it can be done without violating the intention of the parties.[47] When two constructions are pos-to the operation of the works. Lone Star Salt Co. v. Texas Short Line R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 355. Contract in settlement of will contest providing that one party should have all property standing in name of deceased at time of his death "which said property is more particularly described in a quitclaim deed executed in conformity with this agreement," held to entitle him to realty which was discovered, after execution of instrument, to have been so owned by deceased, though not described in the deed. Lamona v. Cowley, 31 Wash. 297, 71 P. 1040. Provision giving author right to object to assignment of copyrights held valid and to prevent their sale by publisher's trustee in bankruptcy. In re McBride & Co., 132 F. 285.

Lease of lot "as a cattle feeding lot" held not to require lessee to divide lot into pens, or to put in cross-fences, or piping, or feeding troughs, but merely to give him permission to do so with privilege of removing them at end of lease. Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 168. Contract to quarry marble held to give plaintiff right to demand pay for all marble stripped by him which he should quarry before a specified date provided he fulfilled contract in all respects, and having failed to quarry amount required by contract, he could not recover damages for defendant's refusal to permit him to quarry marble so stripped. Freedley v. Wilson [C. C. A.] 136 F. 586. , 44. Fletcher v. Simms [Ark.] 86 S. W. 993; Midland Sav. & Loan Co. v. Solomon [Kan.] 79 P. 1077; Dennis v. Montesano Nat. Bank [Wash.] 80 P. 764. Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 789, 790. American Soda Fountain Co. v. Gerrer's Bakery, 14 Okl. 258, 78 P. 115. Whatever may be the result, and whether foolish or not. Santa Fe St. R. Co. v. Schutz [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 39. The fact that the profits under a contract are large does not prevent its enforcement. Where, in an action for loss of profits on a contract which defendant refused to permit plaintiff to fully perform, the contract is established and the cost of doing the work thereunder is found by the jury on sufficient evidence, the fact that the cost would have been much less than the contract price is immaterial, and does not render a verdict for the difference excessive. Norton v. Shields, 132 F. 873. Provision as to what laws shall govern. Midland Sav. & Loan Co. v. Solomon [Kan.] 79 P. 1077. Contracts are matters of fact to be decided by their terms and stipulations and the intent of the contracting parties. As to place of sale of intoxicating liquor. Keller v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 87 S. W. 669. Intention must be sought from the language used. Kephart v. Buddecke [Colo. App.] 80 P. 501. If possible must be ascertained from the instrument itself without resort to extrinsic circumstances. Carnegie Nat. Gas Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 548. The purpose of the court is to arrive at the meaning of the parties as it may be gathered from their written agreement, and not necessarily what may have been in their minds. Harmon v. Thompson [Ky.] 84 S. W. 569. One writing a contract may not question the plain and obvious meaning of its terms. Boyd v. Liefer, 144 Cal. 336, 77 P. 953. The law presumes that a party meant what his language, under the circumstances in which it was used, would be fairly understood to mean, and this presumption cannot be rebutted by proof that he intended something different, which he did not express, and which a person dealing with him neither understood or had reason to understand. Santa Fe St. R. Co. v. Schutz [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 39. Where the time for the completion of the work provided for in a written contract is left blank, the court cannot say that the parties intended to fill them, or what insertion they intended to make. Bolter v. Kozlowski, 112 Ill. App. 13, afd. 211 Ill. 79, 71 N. E. 858. Even if a party had authority to fill blanks in written instrument, it did not appear that he ever did so, and in any event original contract was not produced with such blanks filled, but only a copy. Id.

45. Courts are powerless to interpolate terms and conditions to which the minds of the parties have not given assent. Westfall v. Albert, 212 Ill. 68, 72 N. E. 4.

46. Czarnowski v. Holland, 5 Ariz. 119, 78 P. 890. In a contract of employment for a limited time, the employe agreeing to promote the interests of the employer, there is an implied representation on the part of the employe that he has the experience and ability to promote the interests of the employer. Highland Buggy Co. v. Parker, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 383. Contract giving plaintiffs the right to represent defendant in the sale of cotton wadding held to contain an implied agreement on defendant's part to continue manufacturing during the entire year, and it was guilty of a breach in suspending manufacture and transferring its business. Horton v. Hall & C. Mfg. Co., 94 App. Div. 404, 88 N. Y. S. 73.

sible, that will be adopted which is most equitable, and which will not give an unconscionable advantage to one party over the other.[48] So, too, a reasonable construction will be preferred to an unreasonable one,[49] one rendering the contract binding and operative to one rendering it inoperative,[50] and one rendering it lawful to one which would make it unlawful.[51] Agreements waiving legal rights will not be construed or extended beyond the fair import of their terms.[52] Explicit provisions control those which may be implied.[53]

48. Allemong v. Augusta Nat. Bank, 103 Va. 243, 48 S. E. 897. Courts construe agreements so as to prevent a failure of justice, and hold dependent covenants to be independent when the necessity of the case and the ends of justice require it, notwithstanding the form. Id. Provision in compromise agreement in regard to alleged void conveyance of land, for satisfaction of an individual indebtedness released by one of the parties, and a pro rata division of the balance of the proceeds of a sale by a trustee, held not dependent upon provision for sale for particular sum, so as to require a pro rata deduction of the amount to be applied on the debt on forced sale for less amount. Id. Where sale was never made, held that action would be in equity to compel sale and distribution. Id.

sible being given to every word and clause.[55] Words which do not add to or take from a written contract in any legal sense may be rejected as surplusage,[56] but no provision should be ignored or expunged if it is possible to avoid it, nor unless it clearly appears that such provision is annulled intentionally by other provisions,[57] and no word regarded as superfluous if a meaning which is reasonable and in harmony with the other parts of the contract can be assigned to it.[58] Repugnant words may be rejected in favor of a construction which renders effectual the evident purpose of the entire instrument.[59] In case of a repugnancy between clauses, the one which essentially requires something to be done to effect the general purpose of the contract itself is entitled to greater consideration than one tending to defeat a full performance.[60]

The most obvious and natural construction should be adopted,[61] technical rules being disregarded in favor of the meaning and intention as gathered from the whole instrument.[62]

62. Allemong v. Augusta Nat. Bank, 103 Va. 243, 48 S. E. 897.

Words should be given their popular and accepted meaning in the absence of anything showing a different intention.[63] So, too, the contract should be given its natural, grammatical construction.[64] The spirit and intention, however, will control the literal meaning.[65] Technical words are to be construed as usually understood by persons in the profession or business to which they relate.[66]

For the purpose of interpreting an ambigious contract, it is the duty of the court to place itself as nearly as possible in the position of the parties when it was made,[67] taking into consideration the subject-matter and purpose of the contract, the situation and conduct of the parties, and all the surrounding circumstances,[68] and the mutual intention of the parties may be inquired into.[69]

63. Word "lumber" in contract for its transportation, where no evidence was introduced to show that it was employed in an unusual sense, held not to include ties. Greason v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. May consider the situation of the parties, the acts to be performed under it, and the time, place, and manner of performance. Hathorn v. Robinson, 98 Me. 334, 56 A. 1057. May be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates. Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 798. American Soda Fountain

In case of ambiguity the practical interpretation put upon the contract by the parties themselves may be looked to to determine their intention.[70] Ambiguity calling for construction may appear from language clear in itself but leading to some absurd result when applied literally to the situation with which it deals.[71]

Written or typewritten provisions control printed ones.[72]

When an enumeration of specific things is followed by general words or phrases, the latter are usually held to refer only to things of the same kind or class as those specified.[73] The rule does not, however, apply unless the word "other" is used,[74] nor where its application would operate to defeat a larger intent as gathered from the whole instrument,[75] or to deprive the general words of all meaning.[76]

Laws existing at the time and place of making a contract and where it is to be performed enter into and form a part of it as though incorporated therein.[77]

If ambigious the contract will be construed most strongly against the party preparing it,[78] and in the sense in which the promisor believed at the time of making it that the promisee understood it.[79]

Co. v. Gerrer's Bakery, 14 Okl. 258, 78 P. 115. The intention of the parties, to be ascertained from the words employed, the connection in which they are used, and the subject-matter in reference to which the parties are contracting, must control. (§ 4) B. What is part of contract.[80]—Where a contract consists of several different instruments, each will be read and construed with reference to the others, and the contract will, if possible, be given effect as a whole.[81] So, too, several agreements between the same parties made at the same time and referring to the same subject-matter will be construed together as though constituting a single instrument.[82] to exist. The promisor is presumed to be such party. Czarnowski v. Holland, 5 Ariz. 119, 78 P. 890. Contract for shipment of cotton. Allen-West Commission Co. v. People's Bank [Ark.] 84 S. W. 1041; Leslie v. Bell [Ark.] 84 S. W. 491. Contract held to require defendant to use every effort to set aside a sale of certain lands on a judgment, and, in the event that he succeeded in doing so, to reconvey 80 acres and retain the balance as his compensation. Id. Where defendant, failing to recover the land by suit, redeemed from the execution sale, held that he would be deemed to have acted under the contract and would be held to a reconveyance of the 80 acres, whether the contract contemplated a redemption or not. Id. Employment. Silberman v. Schwarcz, 45 Misc. 352, 90 N. Y. S. 382. Where the terms of a grant are ambiguous or self-contradictory, they are to be construed most favorably to the grantee. Lessee held to have had right to hold for two additional years beyond term, notwithstanding notice of termination by lessor, or to quit at end of first additional year. Henderson v. Schuylkill Val. Clay Mfg. Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 422. Plaintiffs agreed to sell defendants a half interest in mining property, certain advances which were to be made by defendants for litigation and improvements to apply on purchase price. By subsequent contract such advances were to be repaid defendants, and by third contract a corporation, to which the property was conveyed, did "assume and agree to pay" the moneys advanced "as per" the first contract. Held, that words "as per" referred to the advancements and did not qualify the words "assume and agree to pay" and did not abrogate provisions of second contract providing for their repayment. Gibson v. Milner, 28 Utah, 438, 79 P. 556. Where the terms of the contract are plain and unambiguous and it is not claimed that plaintiff did not have ample opportunity to read and understand it before signing, it is immaterial who drew it. Evidence that building contract was drawn by contractor properly excluded. Novelty Mill Co. v. Heinzerling [Wash.] 81 P. 742.

(§ 4) C. Character; joint and several, entire or divisible, etc.[83]—Whether the contract is joint, several, or joint and several, generally depends upon the intention of the parties.[84]

The question whether the contract is entire or divisible is one of construction, the intention of the parties controlling.[85] A severable contract is one in its nature and purpose susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts in respect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent upon each other and not intended to be.[86]

(§ 4) D. Custom and usage.[87]—The general customs and usages of the trade in respect to which the contract is made form a part of it,[88] and proof thereof is admissible to annex a term, or to explain ambigious or technical terms, but not to vary or contradict the plain meaning of the language used.[89] for sale of slop by distilling company and lease of land by purchaser to company to be used for feeding purposes held separate and distinct contracts, each complete in itself and requiring no reference to the other to be understood. Contract to do all necessary excavating for building at certain rate per cubic yard for rock and at different rate for earth held entire. Toher v. Schaefer, 45 Misc. 618, 91 N. Y. S. 3. Contract providing for erection of house and stable held an entirety, such being the evident intention. First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 46 Misc. 30, 93 N. Y. S. 231. Successive subcontracts made by one subcontractor under contract for the erection of a house and stable, held to be regarded as one contract as between the owner and the subcontractor who files mechanic's lien. Id. Where defendant contracted with plaintiff corporation to purchase certain amount of its capital stock, to be paid for in lumber, further agreement by plaintiff to increase stock and secure bona fide subscriptions for a certain amount thereof, to be paid in full within a certain time, held independent and separable, so that strict performance thereof was not condition precedent to suit against defendant. Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman, Poulson & Co. [Or.] 80 P. 424. It is no defense that plaintiff did not use proceeds of sale of such stock in accordance with the contract. Id. Contract to furnish brick held severable. Iowa Brick Mfg. Co. v. Herrick, 126 Iowa, 721, 102 N. W. 787. Where there is a purchase at the same time of different articles at different prices, the contract is several as to each article, unless the accepting of the whole is rendered essential, either by the peculiar nature of the subject-matter or the terms of the contract. Contract for sale of pants held several, and retention of one lot did not prevent return of others as not corresponding to sample. Slayden-Kirksey Woolen Mills v. Spring, 116 Ill. App. 27. If the part to be performed by one party consists of several separate and distinct items and the price to be paid by the other is to be apportioned to each item to be performed or is left to be implied by law, the contract will generally be regarded as several. Sanitary Dist. v. McMahon & Montgomery Co., 110 Ill. App. 510. The same is true where the price to be paid is clearly and distinctly apportioned to the different parts of what is to be performed, though the latter is in its nature single and entire. Id. Covenant going only to part of consideration, breach of which may be paid for in damages, will be regarded as independent. Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman, Poulsen & Co. [Or.] 80 P. 424.

(§ 4) E. As to place, time, and compensation.[90]—Where a contract is by its terms to be performed on a day named, both parties have the whole of the business day in which to tender performance.[91]

A contract silent as to the time of performance must as a general rule be performed within a reasonable time.[92] So, too, performance according to the terms of the contract having been prevented by one of the parties, the other has a reasonble time after request in which to fulfill, if he so desires.[93]

At common law, time is always of the essence of the contract, and the same rule applies in equity if it appears from the contract that the parties so intended.[94] The modern rule, however, appears to be that time is never regarded as of the essence of the contract unless the parties expressly so stipulate, or the nature of the subject-matter or the surrounding circumstances renders it probable that they so intended.[95] One cannot enforce a forfeiture of a contract to convey

94. Monarch v. Owensboro City R. Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 193. Time held to be of essence of agreement to convey right of way to defendant and to transfer to it all plaintiff's rights in a street railway franchise in consideration of which defendant agreed to construct certain line, and it was necessary for plaintiff to tender performance within the time specified in order to maintain an action at law for damages for breach of the contract. Id.

95. Evidence held to show that time was not of the essence of a contract whereby plaintiff furnished certain bags to defendant to be used in shipping grain, so as to render defendant's retention of them after a specified date an election to purchase them. Curtin v. Ingle, 143 Cal. 354, 77 P. 74. Where defendant agreed to pay agreed price or account for bags received by him for plaintiff to be used in shipping grain and not returned by a certain date, he cannot be required to pay for those retained after such date in the absence of a demand for an accounting, or embracing that in the alternative. Id. Provision in contract for sale of land for higher rate of interest if deferred payments were made after maturity and fact that plaintiff allowed them to remain unpaid when due without notice or demand for settlement, held to show that time was not of the essence of the contract, and it could be enforced in equity, though such payments were not made as provided by contract. land for the purchaser's failure to make payment in time, without the consent of one to whom he has conveyed it as collateral security.[96]

A contract to give one permanent employment for as long as he desires to retain his position and his services are satisfactory is not enforceable unless he fixes the period of his services at the time he presents himself for work.[97] Electing one an officer of a corporation does not ordinarily constitute a contract of employment with him for a stated time.[98]

Where the relations of the parties to a contract of employment are continued after the expiration of the year for which it was made without making any change or new agreement, the terms and conditions of the old contract are thereby continued.[99]

Payment.[1]—Parties may agree upon the commodity in which payment for services may be made, and having done so may not insist on some other measure of their value.[2] In the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, the character of money current at the time fixed for performance of the contract is the medium in which payments may be made.[3] Where the mode of measurement for ascertaining the amount to be paid is specified in the contract, that mode, and no other, must be followed.[4] In case such method is impossible, plaintiff may recover on a quantum meruit, resort being had to the best evidence obtainable to ascertain the amount due.[5] Where a contract of sale is silent as to the mode of payment, it is competent to prove a general custom among dealers in that regard.[6]

3. Error in instructing that time of making contract was to be alone considered in determining what was the foreign current money in which the contract provided for payment to be made, held harmless where it was conceded that United States money was within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, and that it was also current when performance was due. 4. Souther Iron Co. v. Laclede Power Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 450. Where construction of contract for electric power was submitted to arbitration, held that, in an action to recover an overpayment found by the arbitrators to have been made, the award and decree were admissible to show what the contract was. Id. Complaint in action to recover amount of overpayment, found by arbitrators to have been made on a contract for electric power, held to state cause of action, particularly after verdict. Id.

5. Where it is impossible to measure electric power used by the kind of meter designated, evidence of other measurements and of the amount used by plaintiff under a subsequent contract with another company is admissible. Souther Iron Co. v. Laclede Power Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 450. In such case plaintiff is not bound to pay for more power than he actually uses, but some other adequate appliance must be used to measure the amount actually used. Id.

payment must be made on performance.[8] Where a contract for services provides for payment of a certain sum per month, payment is not due until the end of the month, in the absence of provision to the contrary.[9]

As a general rule the alteration must be made by an instrument of equal dignity with the original contract.[18] By statute in some states a contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed parol agreement, and not otherwise.[19] Such a provision does not, however, preclude the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel to defeat an action for nonperformance, where sufficient cause therefor exists.[20]

In order that a contract may be a renewal of a former one, it must be between the same parties.[21] An undertaking to be liable only in the event that another person fails to pay cannot in law be a renewal of an obligation to pay absolutely and at all events without regard to the liability of another.[22]

Repudiation.[27]—If one party to a contract to be performed in the future announces his intention not to perform, the other may, if he so desires, elect to treat such announcement as a breach and sue at once therefor.[28] The repudiation must, however, be absolute and unequivocal, go to the whole of the contract, and be accepted and acted upon by the other party.[29] A party has no rights under a contract which he has repudiated.[30]

One may treat a contract as abandoned by the nonperforming party when failure or refusal to perform substantially deprives the innocent party of some benefit that he would have otherwise derived.[31]

App. 268, 71 N. E. 232, rehearing denied 72 N. E. 668. May also elect to keep it still in force. Hence mere announcement not of itself a breach unless other party elects to treat it as such. Supreme Council A. L. H. v. Lippincott [C. C. A.] 134 F. 824. Payment of assessments after reduction of amount of plaintiff's benefit certificate held election not to rescind. Id.

29. A mere renunciation of an executory contract by one of the parties thereto, which is retracted within a few minutes thereafter, and before any declaration has been made or act performed by the other party in respect to such renunciation, and before any change in the situation of the parties or the subject-matter of the contract has taken place, does not ordinarily constitute a breach. Sale of stock of merchandise. Swiger v. Hayman [W. Va.] 48 S. E. 839.

30. Where vendee under executory contract for sale of land abandons contract and refuses to comply with its terms, vendor, after electing to sue for damages for breach and after time when conveyance was to have been made, may mortgage land without regard to the contract. 33. Party performing after knowledge that contract was procured by false representations, or who, without necessity, completes performance and accepts contract price, waives fraud. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Jolly Bros. & Co., 71 Ohio St. 92, 72 N. E. 888. Where the evidence shows that plaintiff after becoming fully informed in regard to the facts constituting the alleged fraud, continued to act with defendant in attempting to negotiate a sale of land in accordance with the contract, he is estopped to subsequently rescind on the ground of fraud. Carlock v. Sweeney [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 469. The fact that there was fraud or illegality in the organization of a corporation cannot be set up to defeat its right to enforce a contract by one who receives and retains the benefits thereof. Henion v. Bacon, 100 App. Div. 99, 91 N. Y. S. 399. Of right to rescind contract for sale of land for failure to make payments when due. Kuhn v. Skelley, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 185. Of provisions in building contract requiring extra work and materials to be ordered in writing, and that the compensation therefor should be estimated at the rates fixed by the contract for similar work, and each party held estopped by his acts from enforcing them against the other. Kilby Mfg. Co. v. Hinchman-Renton Fire Proofing Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 957. One furnishing logs to another to be cut, knowing that they cannot be cut until after the performance of another contract, cannot recover damages caused by delay incident to the performance of the latter contract. Crawford v. Thomas [Ark.] 86 S. W. 285. The right to object that plaintiffs purchased tomatoes for others than defendants in violation of the contract is waived by failure to repudiate the contract until after purchases and shipments have been made by defendants, where plaintiffs had knowledge of the facts before that time. Massey v. Greenabaum Bros. [Del. Super.] 58 A. 804. Party for whom well was being bored cannot complain that work was not stopped at his request when water was reached, where he deferred to opinion of superintendent that supply was insufficient and allowed him to continue work without objection. Council v. Teal [Ga.] 49 S. E. 806. This is true though sufficient supply of water was subsequently obtained at same depth in another well near at hand. Id. A party cannot evade payment of his proportion of the cost of a party wall on account of an apparently inadvertent deviation from the contract of which he, through his representative, had knowledge in ample time to remedy the same. Evans v. Howell, 211 Ill. 85, 71 N. E. 854, afg. 111 Ill. App. 167. One accepting and retaining a report of a sale of goods by a broker without objection cannot thereafter repudiate the sale because report differs from its acceptance of offer. Must object within reasonable time. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 115 Ill. App. 71. A seller of a machine receiving and acting upon a notice of defects therein thereby waives his right to insist on the "written notice by registered letter" required by the contract. Advance Thresher Co. v. Curd [Ky.] 85 S. W. 690. Held, that defendant, by permitting plaintiffs' timber to be deposited in certain gulch on his land, waived strict compliance with provision requiring its removal within certain time. Watson v. Gross [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 104. Failure of contractor to complete building on time held waived by conduct of owner in thereafter urging him to hurry completion of work, and owner estopped to resist payment on ground that time was of the essence of the contract. Crocker-Wheeler v. Varick Realty Co., 94 N. Y. S. 23. Defendant agreed to give builder ten per cent. of profits on sale of certain building if he would superintend its construction, he not to receive any benefit from any other source, and in case of his death before the completion of the work, his compensation to be a certain sum per day. After death of builder before completion defendant agreed to pay such per centage to widow. On subsequent discovery that builder had received commissions, half of them were returned by widow, and it was then agreed that percentage was to be paid, less the rest of them. Held, that defendant, by his subsequent conduct, waived other misdoings of the builder thereafter discovered, and widow was entitled to accounting under her agreement. Komp v. Luria, 92 N. Y. S. 569. Though, at time of first agreement, defendant had agreed to pay builder's widow ten per cent. of the profits on a building only in case it was sold during the winter, the second agreement, containing no such limitation, re-established the contract on the same basis as that with her deceased husband, and without such limitation. Id. Where contract required plaintiff to increase its capital stock and obtain bona fide subscriptions to a part of it, failure of defendant to object to a certain subscription on receiving notice thereof held to be an admission of its genuineness. Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman Paulsen & Co. [Or.] 80 P. 424. Provision requiring defendant to start mill and demonstrate that it could be successfully run, held waived by plaintiff taking immediate possession and demonstrating that fact himself. Livesley v. Muckle [Or.] 80 P. 901. Vendor held to have waived right to terminate contract for sale of realty for nonpayment of instalment of purchase price and right to forfeit amounts already paid. Weaver v. Griffith, 210 Pa. 13, 59 A. 315. Where, on default in performance of a contract for work, the person for whom it is to be done construes the contract as authorizing him to complete the work and deduct the cost of so doing from the contract price, notifies the other party of his intention to do so, and does so with his acquiescence, he cannot prevent recovery by the contractor of the difference between the contract price and the cost of completing the work by contending that the contract is an entire one and there can be no recovery for part performance. Asbestos Mfg. Co. v. Burns, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 84. Where for over a year payments for ice have not been made weekly as provided by the contract, the seller cannot make a sudden, unconditional, and absolute recission on that ground, the seller being solvent and not having willfully refused to pay bills overdue, but notice of seller's intention to insist on strict compliance with contract in future must first be given. Portland Ice Co. v. Connor, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 493. Action of builder in giving materialman a note on account of order drawn in latter's favor held waiver of provision of order that it should not be payable until after completion of work, where note became due before completion. Potter v. Greenberg, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 502. Railroad cannot set up provision that shipper shall attend to loading and unloading at his own risk where it assumed control of such matters. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Dolan [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 302. Author entitled to royalty on "wholesale" price of her books accepting as full payment checks based on a price twenty per cent. below the publisher's list price, held to have acquiesced in construction so placed on contract, and payment operates as an accord and satisfaction. Acts held not to constitute waiver: Where defendant agreed to return certain bags filled with grain to plaintiff by certain date, and to pay or account for any remaining in his possession on that date, statement of account sent to defendant a year later charging him with bags, to which defendant made no reply, held to amount to nothing in evidence, where suit was not based on account stated, and defendant had previously stated to plaintiff that he did not intend to acquiesce in his statements by failure to reply to them. Curtin v. Ingle, 143 Cal. 354, 77 P. 74. Assignment of void street railway franchise held to pass no rights so that its acceptance by assignee, and dismissal by assignor of action against assignee based thereon, did not preclude him from urging assignor's nonperformance of other portions of contract of which assignment was a part, in order to defeat an action on such contract. Monarch v. Owensboro City R. Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 193. Notification to plaintiffs to continue deliveries of iron under contract after discovering that they were purchasing it from others on drop in price in violation of their agreement, made after refusal to receive any more, held only a waiver of such refusal and not to constitute new contract waiving plaintiffs' departure from the old one. Helper v. Mackinnon Mfg. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 804. Contract for sale of oil required shipments to be made monthly as ordered by buyer. Seller informed buyer that if he did not comply with contract in giving orders for shipment he would ship without notice, and thereafter shipped one car which was paid for. Buyer did not reply to letter. Held, that seller had not waived buyer's obligation to comply with contract, since buyer could not rely on variation in its terms in absence of acquiescence. Kellogg v. Frohlich [Mich.] 102 N. W. 1057. Plaintiff does not waive his right to damages resulting from a default by the other party by completing the contract at the latter's request after notifying him that he will claim such damages and that he does not thereby waive them. Where contractor placed crib for waterworks in wrong place through mistake of city engineer, and notified city that he would hold it liable for damages and board of public works required him to proceed to complete the contract, which he did by putting crib at right place and repairing damages caused by mislocation under protest of any waiver of extra expenses incurred in so doing, held, that he did not waive right to recover such expenses. O'Neill v. Milwaukee, 121 Wis. 32, 98 N. W. 963. Evidence held to show that check was not accepted in full for plaintiff's services rendered under contract to pay their reasonable value. Walker Mfg. Co. v. Knox [C. C. A.] 136 F. 334.

36. One who voluntarily accepts goods delivered to him in part performance of a contract of sale is bound to pay for them, and cannot set up a breach of the contract in bar of the suit, though he may recoup the damages suffered by him in consequence thereof. Gibboney v. Wayne & Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 436. Evidence held to have so far tended to show that the fruit was of the kind and quality contracted for and that it was accepted by the buyer, as to warrant submission of question of acceptance to the jury. Olcese v. Mobile Fruit & Trading Co., 211 Ill. 539, 71 N. E. 1084, afg. 112 Ill. App. 281. Instructions as to proper course of buyer who has accepted goods and afterwards discovered that they are not of the quality contracted for, held not inapplicable under the evidence. Id. Where vendee of goods sold at specific price refuses to take them, vendor may sell them to best advantage and recover difference between amount so received and contract price. Id. The acceptance of plumbing done under a building contract is a waiver of any defects therein. Burke v. Coyne [Mass.] 74 N. E. 942. Though time is of the essence of the contract, one cannot, after allowing the time for payments to pass, rescind and declare the other parties' rights forfeited without reasonable notice of his intention to do so. Contract for sale of land. Kuhn v. Skelley, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 185. Applies equally whether time is or is not of the essence of the contract, or where performance is to be made within a reasonable time. Tingue v. Patch, 93 Minn. 437, 101 N. W. 792. waived by the promisor's voluntary performance of acts which he might have postponed.[37]

An agreement extending the time for completion of the contract is a waiver of previous difficulties interposed by the other party, and an acknowledgment that the contract is not then completed.[38] A payment under protest is not a waiver of the right to compensation for a breach of the contract.[39] Extending the time of payment after the time when it is due by the terms of the contract is a waiver of the right to enforce a forfeiture for default in prompt payment.[40] Permitting performance after the time does not extend the time, but waives a complete performance.[41] The right to forfeit a contract for failure to make payments due thereunder is not waived by the acceptance of past due payments.[42] In an action for a specific amount of damage for an agreed sum resulting from a breach of a contract of employment, plaintiff is not required to prove that he actually performed any work thereunder.[43]

One refusing to perform [44] or objecting to the performance by the other party on a particular ground thereby waives all other grounds.[45]

47. Contract made on April 28th to convey land on April 23d. Le Roy v. Jacobosky, 136 N. C. 443, 48 S. E. 796. Signature by ward to contract on former date could not operate as ratification of guardian's promise to convey land on or before latter date. Id.

As a general rule, one who unqualifiedly undertakes to do a particular thing is not excused because performance is prevented by the act of God or a vis major,[48] or is rendered impossible by some unforseen contingency;[49] but this rule does not apply where the parties have expressly stipulated to the contrary,[50] nor where the contingency is of such a character that it cannot reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties, though the general words used are large enough to include it.[51]

Though the contract provides that a party shall not be liable if performance is prevented by hinderances beyond his control, he is nevertheless bound to use all reasonable and proper effort to overcome any hinderances which may arise,[52] and, of course, is not thereby relieved from performance by a hinderance of his own making.[53]

Where a party is prevented by the visitation of God, as by sickness or death, from performing in full, he or those in succession may recover the amount of the compensation promised, subject to the deduction of such loss or damage as is sustained by the other party.[54]

If the contract is of a continuing character, or to be performed at a future time and is dependent upon the continuing existence of a particular person or thing, or the continuing ability of the obligor to perform, subsequent death, de-

Where plaintiff absolutely guaranteed to install a heating plant which would heat a house to a certain temperature and effect a saving of fuel, held, that he was not excused for a failure to do so because a flue in the building was too small and that the building was difficult to heat by reason of its construction, particularly where he had knowledeg of those facts or could have acquired it. White v. Von Waffenstein, 94 N. Y. S. 257.

50. The failure to deliver goods sold within the time prescribed by contract is not excused by act of God by reason of the fact that the vessel in which they were shipped was prevented from sailing because storms rendered it impossible to cross the bar, where they could have been transported by land and there was nothing in the contract permitting transportation by water to exclusion of transportation by land. Action for damages. Fleishman v. Meyer [Or.] 80 P. 209. Revolution in port of vessels discharge rendering it practically impossible to receive cargo with dispatch contemplated, either because of intrinsic danger incident to unloading or inability to secure necessary men, held to constitute an unavoidable hindrance and to excuse performance and relieve charterers from liability under provision requiring them to pay demurrage for detention by default of themselves or their agents. Burrill v. Crossman [C. C. A.] 130 F. 763. Erroneous refusal of collector of port to grant clearance to vessel carrying lead on ground that it was contraband of war, held not to constitute a "restraint of prices, rulers, or people" within meaning of bill of lading so as to excuse nonperformance of agreement to ship it on that vessel. Where it becomes necessary to appoint an administrator for an estate, a previous agreement to settle it without administration becomes inoperative in so far as it is executory, and rights of parties are to be determined as though it had not been made. Bennett v. Morris, 111 Ill. App. 150. Refusal of deputy collector of port to permit vessel to sail with certain freight because it was contraband of war held no excuse for breach of contract to ship it by that vessel, where it was made with knowledge that difficulties might arise by reason of the character of the freight. Northern P. R. Co. v. American Trading Co., 195 U. S. 439, 49 Law. Ed. 269.

52. Under contract for delivery of coal, defendants held to be excused from performance if prevented by inability to obtain cars from only line of railroad reaching their colliery, provided they put forth all reasonable and proper exertion to obtain them even to the extent of paying any additional necessary expense, and made deliveries to all customers ratably. Jessup & Moore Paper Co. v. Piper, 133 F. 108. Not relieved from liability if made shortage an excuse for demanding an increased price, and gave preference to such customers as paid it. Id.

struction, or disability will excuse performance.[55] Thus, when complete performance of an entire contract to do work upon another's building or other structure is prevented by its total destruction, completion is excused and the contractor may recover pay at the contract price for the portion of the work done.[56] So, too, where a verbal contract contains no guaranty that the work to be done under it shall secure a particular result, and such result may become impossible from the nature of things, the law implies a condition that both parties may be excused from their obligations when it becomes reasonably certain that a continuance would be useless.[57]

Performance is excused when rendered impossible by act of law,[58] and the rule applies equally whether the law is in force when the contract was made[59] or is enacted thereafter.[60] In such case, however, the parties are bound to make a tender of the best possible performance under the circumstances.[61]

The mere fact that performance would render a party liable in damages to third persons is no excuse.[62]

On destruction of building to be repaired, the contractor may recover for the amount of contract work done which had become so far identified with the structure that, but for its destruction, it would have inured to the owner as contemplated by the contract. Id. Thus, where contract for repair of bridge provided that compensation should be a certain sum per thousand feet of lumber used and that no work should be done until material for half the work should be upon the job, held that, on destruction of bridge by fire before completion, plaintiff was entitled to recover for lumber actually used but not for that which he had distributed along the bridge but not used. 58. Labaree Co. v. Crossman, 100 App. Div. 499, 92 N. Y. S. 565. Refusal of deputy collector of port to permit vessel to sail while carrying lead because it was contraband of war held no excuse for breach of contract to ship it by that vessel, when contract was not unlawful when made and was not rendered so by a subsequent legislation, and was made with knowledge that such difficulties might arise. Southern P. R. Co. v. American Trading Co., 195 U. S. 439, 49 Law. Ed. 269.

59. Defendants excused from performance of contract to deliver certain coffee sold to plaintiff at a specified port at a certain time, where the board of health refused to allow it to be landed because coming from infected port. Labaree & Co. v. Crossman, 100 App. Div. 499, 92 N. Y. S. 565.

60. Passage of law making it necessary for corporation to abolish expense fund from which plaintiff's compensation was to be paid, held to release defendant, particularly where contract provided that it should have right to change its method of doing business when required to do so by law. Wood v. Iowa Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 126 Iowa, 464, 102 N. W. 410.

61. Defendants held to have made such tender where they offered to transport coffee, which board of health had refused to allow to be landed, to any point designated by plaintiff, on assumption and under bona fide belief that board would allow it to be landed elsewhere, though, as a matter of fact, they would not have done so. Labaree & Co. v. Crossman, 100 App. Div. 499, 92 N. Y. S. 565. Plaintiff could not contend that tender was insufficient because it could not have been performed where they did not refuse it on that account, but because they elected to stand on the liberal terms of the contract and insist on a strict performance. Id. Evidence held not to show that defendants should have made further efforts to induce board to change its attitude. Id.

to enable one to recover on the contract,[65] but in the case of building or construction contracts, a substantial performance is sufficient, provided the contractor acts in good faith.[66]

One who performs work in accordance with the terms of the contract is not liable for damages resulting from faults in the contract itself.[67]

In the absence of a stipulation to the contrary and where no element of special trust and confidence is involved, the promisor is not bound to perform the contract himself, but may do so through the medium of a third person.[68]

A stipulation in a contract that a party for whom work is to be done or to whom an article is to be furnished may reject the work or article unless it is satisfactory to him, gives him the right to reject it as unsatisfactory in any respect if he acts in good faith, but does not authorize him to reject it arbitrarily,[69] that is, he must find some substantial fault in the work or article itself, and not merely a reason for changing his mind regarding the project he had in view, and for which he ordered the work or the article.[70] The same is true where performance is to be to the satisfaction of a third party.[71]

If there has been a novation of parties promisor, the promisee cannot object that the original promisor failed to perform.[72]

Schultze v. Goodstein, 180 N. Y. 248, 73 N. E. 21. Evidence in action on contract for recovery of commission on sale of defendant's realty held to show that contract was fully performed and commission fully earned. Storer v. Markley [Ind.] 73 N. E. 1081. Plaintiffs contracted to obtain options for defendants to purchase realty in case they should elect to do so upon examination, and entered into negotiations with third person to obtain such an option and brought matter to defendants' attention. Held, that on defendants' purchasing land before formal option was obtained, they they were liable to plaintiffs as upon a full performance. Emerson v. Nash [Wis.] 102 N. W. 921.

66. See Building and Construction Contracts, 5 C. L. 455. Substantial compliance with the terms of a contract of subscription to a railroad, made for the purpose of procuring its extension, is sufficient to entitle the railroad to collect the subscription. Instructions approved. Doherty v. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899.

67. Contractor not liable for damages caused by tamping concrete as required by the contract, though contract was faulty in requiring such tamping to be done, unless he failed to do the tamping in the way it should have been done. Novelty Mill Co. v. Heinzerling [Wash.] 81 P. 742. Question whether piers were weakened by reason of default or neglect on contractor's part held for the jury under the evidence. Id.

68. Contract to bore well. Council v. Teal [Ga.] 49 S. E. 806. In action on contract for services in procuring reduction of fire insurance rates, where plaintiff showed that the reduction had been procured and that defendant had received the full benefit provided for in the agreement, held immaterial that he had procured the reduction through another. Prager v. Levy, 92 N. Y. S. 236. Evidence held to justify refusal to allow additional $100 to plaintiff. Id. Where a contract to pay plaintiff the reasonable value of his services in securing the sale of goods did not stipulate that he was to be the sole factor in accomplishing the sale, he was entitled to recover, though he did not do all that was done to promote the sale. Walker Mfg. Co. v. Knox [C. C. A.] 136 F. 334.

69. Cann v. Rector, etc., of Church of Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. Any dissatisfaction whether reasonable or unreasonable, authorizes him to refuse to accept, provided only that he acts in good faith. Contract to manufacture printing presses. Inman Mfg. Co. v. American Cereal Co., 124 Iowa, 737, 100 N. W. 860. Where contract provides that work is to be paid for when satisfactorily done, the contract price is not collectible until the person for whom the work is done is satisfied, provided he acts reasonably. Manning v. School Dist. No. 6 of Ft. Atkinson [Wis.] 102 N. W. 356.

70. Vestry of church held to have right to reject plans for church on the ground that they called for too expensive a building. Cann v. Rector, etc., of Church of Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. Evidence held not to show bad faith in rejection of plans. Id. Rejection of plans on ground that building prices were unreasonable, and that it would be expedient to postpone the work would not relieve owner from liability. Id.

71. Under a contract for a building loan providing for advancements as the work progressed, provided no liens existed having priority over the mortgage, as to which fact the opinion of an attorney should be conclusive, his adverse opinion, honestly entertained, relieves the defendant from the obligation to make such advances. Glidden v. Massachusetts Hospital Life Ins. Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 538. For interpretation and effect of provisions in building contracts requiring a certificate of performance by an architect or other person, see Building and Construction Contracts, 5 C. L. 455.

72. Agreement to support parent in consideration for conveyance. Brumback v. Chowning, 26 Ky. L. R. 917, 82 S. W. 974.

(§ 6) E. Rights after default.[73]—A party subjected to injury by breach of a contract is required to make reasonable exertions to render it as light as possible,[74] and if he negligently or willfully allows his damages to be unnecessarily enhanced, the increased loss falls on him.[75] The burden of proving that the damages could have been prevented rests upon the party guilty of the breach.[76]

§ 7. Damages for breach.[77]—The subject of damages is fully treated elsewhere.[78]

§ 8. Rescission and abandonment. A. By agreement or under special provisons of the contract.[79]—The parties to a contract may provide for its discharge or annulment and fix and limit the rights of each in the event of a failure to perform.[80] If a remedy is fixed by the contract itself it is exclusive.[81] Though a

Where a buyer of goods, who has accepted them, refuses to remove them from the cars, the seller is not bound to exercise any further control over them or to receive the proceeds of their sale, but may recover the contract price. Olcese v. Mobile Fruit & Trading Co., 211 Ill. 539, 71 N. E. 1084, afg. 112 Ill. App. 281. Where building contractor does not abandon work but in good faith endeavors to fulfill the contract, the owner is not bound to take charge and complete the work himself to lessen the amount of damage he may claim for delay. Leghorn v. Nydell [Wash.] 80 P. 833. Can charge the other party only with such damages as he could not, with reasonable expense and exertion, prevent. Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 168. Buyer of distillery slop for feeding purposes not precluded from recovering damages for breach of provision requiring seller to deliver it in suitable troughs and tubs because he did not himself erect proper appliances, when he relied on repeated promises of the seller to do so. Id. Fact that injured party relied on such promises unreasonably long and thereby suffered a greater loss than he reasonably should have does not prevent recovery of damages sustained before he was bound to take the necessary steps to save himself from loss. Id. Whether he did so a question to be determined on the evidence. Id.

75. Evans v. Howell, 211 Ill. 85, 71 N. E. 854, afg. 111 Ill. App. 167. Bidder for government supplies failing to execute contract cannot be held liable for difference between contract price and price paid government printer three months after default, where articles could have been purchased in open market for several weeks after default at less than the contract price, especially where it does not appear that the price subsequently paid was market price. 80. The right to cancel a contract in case of an "emergency" refers only to some unforeseen event or unexpected combination of circumstances, which, in view of the business to which it related, would furnish a reasonably substantial ground for cancellation, and not to a mere whim or wish. Does not render contract lacking in mutuality. Semon, Bache & Co. v. Coppes, Zook & Mutschler Co. [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 41. Provision giving defendant right to meet lower quotations if received, or to cancel such portions of order as had not been taken in work, and likewise the balance of the contract, held not to make right to cancel dependent on defendant's wish, but on decline of prices, evidenced by his receipt of lower quotations and an election on his part not to meet them. Id. Passage of act making it necessary for corporation to abolish expense fund held to release it from contract employing plaintiff for a compensation to be paid out of such fund, which provided that defendant should have the right to change its method of doing business when required to do so by law. Wood v. Iowa Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 126 Iowa, 464, 102 N. W. 410. Either in original contract or by subsequent agreement. Schwab v. Baremore [Minn.] 104 N. W. 10. Contract for sale of realty held to have become void under its terms where defendant was unable to convey good title. Id. Defendant held to have right to rescind contract for purchase of threshing machine under provision authorizing rescission in case of breach of warranty. Robinson & Co. v. Ralph [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1044. Under contract for production of play providing that defendant could terminate it on plaintiff's failure to pay royalties, he was entitled to do so though plaintiffs had arranged with their agents to remit royalties, which the latter neglected to do. Weber v. Mapes, 98 App. Div. 165, 90 N. Y. S. 225. Plaintiffs held not entitled to recover on railroad contract because of provision that company might annul it without giving them any claim for damages. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Jolly Bros. Co., 71 Ohio, 92, 72 N. E. 888. Under contract to furnish supplies to government in such quantities as might be ordered from time to time, providing that on contractor's failure to furnish them they might be ordered in open market, and difference between price paid and contract price should be charged to contractor, and authorizing the postmaster general to annul contract for failure to perform and that exercise of such right should not impair right to recover damages for breach, held that such an annulment did not affect right to thereafter purchase supplies to fill orders previously given and not filled, and to re-contract provides that a failure to make payments at a specfied time shall render it null and void, release both parties from further liability thereunder, and work a forfeiture of the amounts previously paid thereunder, it is generally held that a mere failure to make a payment does not terminate the contract in the absence of an election on the part of the innocent party to enforce the forfeiture.[82] In order that a party may take advantage of a provision giving him the option of rescinding before a specified date on return of all that he has received, he must notify the other party of his disaffirmance, and return or offer to return the property within the time limited by the contract.[83] A party cannot revoke authority conferred by one part of a contract which he is not entitled to revoke as a whole.[84]

The right given by a contract for services to revoke it at any time does not include a right to deprive the other party of compensation for services already rendered under it,[85] and in such case he may recover on quantum meruit a reasonable compensation therefor.[86] cover difference between cost and contract price. Sparhawk v. United States [C. C. A.] 134 F. 720, rvg. In re Staever, 127 F. 394.

81. Schwab v. Baremore [Minn.] 104 N. W. 10. Under contract for sale of realty providing that it should become void in case the title was not good and could not be made so and that the part of the purchase price already paid should in that event be refunded, where vendor's wife refuses to join in conveyance vendee is not entitled to per- a conveyance of all land except homestead formance to extent of vendor's ability, viz., and subject to wife's one-third interest in remainder, nor to damages for failure to perform, in the absence of fraud. Id. Stockholder in corporation sold his stock to director on latter informing him that option had been given for sale of all the corporate property, and on understanding that if sale should not take place he could reassert his right to the stock. After expiration of option director offered to return stock, but offer was refused, and stockholder filed bill praying that director be required to pay him difference between selling price and actual value of stock, or that he be given option to be reinstated as stockholder, alleging that sale was induced by false representations. Held that complainant, having refused offer to return stock in accordance with the agreement, could not maintain the suit. A provision for the termination of a newspaper carrier route contract held not to prevent either party from terminating it as his election subject to liability to the other for such damages as he may have sustained by reason of the fact that it was not done in the manner provided. Provision for arbitration held not to apply to right to terminate contract but only to ascertainment of amount to be paid on its termination. Harlow v. Oregonian Pub. Co., 45 Or. 520, 78 P. 737.

82. Will not be held to ipso facto terminate it unless the intent of both parties to that effect be made apparent by clear, precise, and unequivocal language. Weaver v. Griffith, 210 Pa. 13, 59 A. 315. The presumption is that such forfeiture clause is for the benefit of the vendor, and enforceable at his election, and in case he fails to enforce it and waives it by his conduct he thereby keeps alive his obligation to sell. Id.

83. Contract for purchase of certain mining stock, a certain part of the purchase price being paid down which payment is to be regarded as giving the parties an option on the property until a specified date, at which time they may either pay the balance or return all that they received. Guss v. Nelson, 14 Okl. 296, 78 P. 170. Rule applies though such other party resides in a different state. Evidence held to show that other party was not notified. Id.

84. Authority of architect to decide as to meaning of specifications given by building contract. Norcross v. Wyman, 187 Mass. 25, 72 N. E. 347.

85. New Kanawha Coal & Min. Co. v. Wright, 163 Ind. 529, 72 N. E. 550.

86. Cannot recover on contract as there has been no breach. New Kanawha Coal & Min. Co. v. Wright, 163 Ind. 529, 72 N. E. 550.

87. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Gortatowsky [Ga.] 51 S. E. 469. Return of goods to agent authorized to receive them and a receipt thereof by him before suit, held not of itself to effect a rescission, there being nothing to show an agreement or a right or election of the purchaser to rescind. Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Hampton [Ala.] 37 So. 552. Contract whereby brick mason agreed to do brick work for per centage of cost of labor held rescinded by subsequent agreement. Hughes v. Brennan Construction Co., 24 App. D. C. 90. Where time is of the essence of a contract for the sale of land, the vendor may exercise the reserved right to rescind on default by the vendee. Civ. Code, 1895, § 3675. Lytle v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 402. Evidence held to support finding that contract was rescinded by mutual consent of all the parties and plaintiffs entitled to recover money paid by them, they having returned what they had received. Williams v. Peterson [Minn.] 103 N. W. 722. Evidence sufficient to sustain finding that contract for bailment of mill had been canceled and that mill had been turned over to defendants as their property. Cox v. Burdett, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 346. Letter written by plaintiffs to defendants held admissible on question whether original agreement of bailment of mill had been canceled unless third persons have acquired vested rights thereunder, in which case their consent is also essential.[88]

An executory parol contract may be discharged by word of mouth.[89] An executory contract for the sale of land, whether written or oral, may, in equity, be waived or rescinded by parol, provided that possession be given up or the writing be destroyed.[90]

A contract may be discharged by the parties thereto or the beneficiaries therein by an entirely new contract entered into by them with reference to the same subject-matter, the terms of which are co-extensive with, but repugnant to, the original contract.[91] There must, however, be a meeting of the minds of the parties.[92]

and mill had been turned over to defendants as their property. Id. An agreement that all rights of the parties under a former contract shall cease and determine releases a right of action thereunder. Swarts v. Narragansett Elec. Lighting Co., 26 R. I. 388, 59 A. 77. This is true though second contract stated that first was abrogated in consequence of a notice theretofore given, and such notice was of itself ineffectual to work such abrogation. Id., 26 R. I. 436, 59 A. 111. Defendant held to have been released from agreement to purchase all his beer from plaintiff on repaying money loaned him and releasing plaintiff from liability as his surety. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co. v. Jensen, 36 Wash. 462, 78 P. 1007. Consent must be mutual. Contract for transportation cannot be rescinded by one party merely notifying other of his intention to rescind. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Gortatowsky [Ga.] 51 S. E. 469. Goods having been received by railroad company for transportation and the freight paid for under their classification, it could not reclassify afterwards and charge a different rate. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Seitz, 105 Ill. App. 89.

88. Insured cannot surrender life policy for cancellation without beneficiary's consent, unless right to do so is specially reserved in the policy. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Allen, 212 Ill. 134, 72 N. E. 200. Proof of abandonment is sufficient evidence of the existence of such agreement unless the contrary is shown. Wilson v. Maxon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 123. Any circumstance or course of conduct from which an agreement to put an end to the contract can be clearly deduced will amount to a rescission. Marsh v. Despard [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 24. The uncorroborated oral evidence of a party may be sufficient proof of the oral rescission of a written contract, but in such case the evidence must be clear, cogent, and convincing as against the party denying the rescission and seeking to sustain the writing. Evidence held to show rescission of written agreement as to division of profits and commissions from sale of realty, and the substitution of a different oral agreement therefor. Cooke v. Cain, 35 Wash. 353, 77 P. 682.

90. Must be something done by way of rescission or waiver. Marsh v. Despard [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 24.

91. Execution and acceptance of leases held to have put an end to contract of sale of land. Marsh v. Despard [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 24. Provision in contract authorizing agent to sell large tract of land, held to have become a part of contract, authorizing him to sell another tract by reference to former one, and the subsequent merger of both into one. Campbell v. Beard [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 747. Execution of new contract does not work abrogation of former one unless the latter covers the entire subject-matter of the former, or two are so inconsistent that both cannot stand. Berkey v. Lefebure, 125 Iowa, 76, 99 N. W. 710. Warranties in contract for sale of stallion that he was sound and a good foal getter held not abrogated by note subsequently given for part of purchase price reciting that it should be void if at end of two years he should not be in a "good serviceable condition as a stallion, and sound as he now is." Id.

92. Entire transaction must be looked to to determine the intention. Berkey v. Lefebure, 125 Iowa, 76, 99 N. W. 710. Taking of notes for balance and pinning them to contract with certain indorsements held not to abrogate the promise to pay made in contract. Walkau v. Manitowoc Seating Co., 105 Ill. App. 130.

Contract to supply borough with water held not to have been rescinded or abandoned by company's offer to enter into a new one upon the same terms as the old, except as to the price, which offer was not accepted, nor was company thereby estopped to sue on old contract. Ephrata Water Co. v. Ephrata Borough, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 353.

93. See 3 C. L. 844.

94. See Fraud and Undue Influence, 3 C. L. 1520. The right to rescind for fraud is one accruing to the parties under the law and is separate and distinct from any right of rescission given by the contract. Guss v. Nelson, 14 Okl. 296, 78 P. 170. To rescind an executed contract in equity on the grounds of fraud, such fraud must be clearly alleged and fully sustained by proof if denied. Wilson v. Maxon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 123. A party to a written contract cannot have it rescinded on account of representations made by the agent of the other party, a corporation, when there is a printed provision on the back of it that the company accident or mistake,[95] duress,[96] or a failure of consideration in whole or in part through the fault of the other party.[97] On failure or refusal of one party to perform, the other may rescind the entire contract and demand to be restored to his former position,[98] but this rule does not apply where the party seeking to rescind has himself done some act justifying the other in refusing or delaying performance, or has failed to perform his part of the contract.[99] Where the contract is an entirety or there is but one consideration for a number of conditions, it must generally be rescinded as a whole if rescinded at all.[1] will only be bound by representations and stipulations contained in the contract itself, and not by statements of any of its officers or agents. Butler v. Standard Guaranty & Trust Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 132.

97. Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 2. Refusal of defendant to receive any more payments on debenture contract, and statement that it had decided to go out of business, held failure of consideration entitling plaintiff to rescind and recover what it had paid. McDonald v. Pacific Debenture Co., 146 Cal. 667, 80 P. 1090.

98. Mason v. Edward Thompson Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 507. Where in ejectment plaintiffs proved that defendant went into possession under a written contract of purchase from plaintiff's grantors and had retained possession ever since, held that it was error to refuse to allow plaintiffs to prove a breach of such contract by defendant since it was essential for them to show a breach by him under such circumstances of negligence as showed an abandonment by him, after notice fixing a reasonable time for its performance, and since, if defendant had not lost his rights under the contract, it operated as an estoppel and a defense to the suit. Morris v. Billingsley [Fla.] 37 So. 564. Insubordination and disrespectful conduct on part of employe held to justify rescission of contract of employment. Parker v. Farlinger [Ga.] 50 S. E. 98. Evidence held to show that tender and demand for deed under contract for sale of realty were not in good faith so that purported rescission based thereon did not preclude decree for specific performance. Gibson v. Brown, 214 Ill. 330, 73 N. E. 578. Mere fact that thereafter the owner of the hardware stock which was to be exchanged for the land sold part of it and added to it held not to prevent specific performance. Id. Evidence held to show rescission by plaintiff of contract for purchase of stallion on defendant's breach. Berkey v. Lefebure, 125 Iowa, 76, 99 N. W. 710. Evidence held to show willful and surreptitious breaches by defendant of contract for the exchange of land. Bales v. Roberts [Mo.] 87 S. W. 914. Evidence held insufficient to show intention on plaintiff's part to repudiate contract for exchange of land. Id. Orders for goods made at different times held not parts of same contract, so that failure of purchaser to pay for goods previously sold does not authorize seller to rescind. Southern Car Mfg. & Supply Co. v. Scullin-Gallagher Iron & Steel Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 845. Refusal of plaintiff to perform compromise agreement on his part held to have given defendant a right to rescind same, and he could not recover thereon for defendant's failure to perform. Benson v. Larson [Minn.] 104 N. W. 307. Contract whereby complainant agrees to make and deliver to defendant for certain period all castings required by it, each delivery to be paid for within sixty days thereafter, is an entirety, and entire contract may be terminated on defendant's failure to make one of such payments. Ross Meehan Foundry Co. v. Royer Wheel Co., 113 Tenn. 370, 83 S. W. 167. Complaint held to allege cause of action for rescission of contract for raising alfalfa and feeding cattle. Hodges v. Price [Wash.] 80 P. 202.

99. Evidence held to show breach by failure to pay notes given pursuant to contract of sale law books. Mason v. Edward Thompson Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 507. Failure to pay installment due under building contract relieves contractor. Koerper v. Royal Inv. Co., 102 Mo. App. 543, 77 S. W. 307. Defendant held entitled to terminate contract for performance of a particular "Comedy Act," where performance as given for him was materially different from that previously given and with respect to which defendant contracted. McLaughlin v. Hammerstein, 99 App. Div. 225, 90 N. Y. S. 943. Where defendant sold plaintiff a stallion under an agreement that another would be substituted for him in case the warranties in regard to him were untrue, held that on refusal of defendant to deliver such other stallion as agreed defendant was not confined to an action for damages, but might rescind and recover the amount paid and any damages which he had suffered. Berkey v. Lefebure, 125 Iowa, 76, 99 N. W. 710.

1. Buskirk Bros. v. Peck [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 432. Can be no partial rescission and a refunding of a part of the consideration, unless in an extreme case where there is no other possible remedy. Commercial Inv. Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 36 Wash. 287, 78 P. 910. Where one of the conditions of a settlement between plaintiff and defendant was broken, held that plaintiff was entitled to recover only the actual damages sustained by reason of such breach, and not that part of the whole consideration claimed to have been paid to secure the particular covenant broken. Id. Purchaser of oranges who sells a part of them and retains money received therefor has not effected a rescission. Seattle Nat. Bank v. Powles, 33 Wash. 21, 73 P. 887.

As a general rule rescission is in toto and abrogates the contract completely, leaving the rights of the parties and the amount of damages, if any, to be determined by a court

(§ 8) C. Time and mode of rescission or abandonment.[2]—Since the remedy is largely equitable,[3] a party having a right to rescind must elect to do so within a reasonable time [4] and in some unequivocal manner.[5] He must restore [6] or offer to restore everything of value which he has received from the other party under the contract,[7] unless the latter is unable or positively refuses to do likewise,[8] or it seems probable that there will be nothing due him on final adjustment.[9] It is sufficient if one seeking to rescind for fraud tenders back the consideration in his petition.[10]

It is ordinarily sufficient if the other party is placed in substanitally the same position he occupied before the contract was made.[11] If it is impossible to restore of equity rather than by the rescinded contract. Lytle v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 402.

The court having found that defendant fully performed his contract so that an action to rescind it would not lie, rejection of evidence to show that plaintiff was not dilatory in commencing the action is immaterial. Boyd v. Liefer, 144 Cal. 336, 77 P. 953. After recovery from intoxication. Fowler v. Meadow Brook Water Co., 208 Pa. 473, 57 A. 959. Where owner of lot agrees that owner of adjoining lot may insert beams in wall which he is about to build, with a provision that the covenant shall run with the land, he cannot declare the contract void ten years thereafter as against the grantee of the second lot unless he can show that the latter had notice of the invalidity of the agreement when he purchased. Immaterial that purchaser had no notice of agreement. Knappenberger v. Fairchild, 210 Pa. 173, 59 A. 986. Fraud. Rumsey v. Shaw, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 386. Stockholders held prevented by laches and acquiescence from rescinding contract whereby they delivered stock to corporation, formed pursuant to unlawful combination, in return for its stock. 7. Need only make a fair offer to return what he has received, and demand what he has parted with. If refused, it is sufficient if he proves such fact at the trial, and makes restoration in such manner as the court may direct. Corse & Co. v. Minnesota Grain Co. [Minn.] 102 N. W. 728. Evidence held to show offer to restore consideration and a demand that the other party return what it had received. Id. A party relying upon the rescission of a contract must tender a return of the property or security which was the subject-matter of the contract except in cases where it is entirely worthless or has ceased to exist. Fraud. Rumsey v. Shaw, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 386. One cannot rescind sale for fraud without returning or offering to return what he has received. Affidavit of defense to note insufficient. Brian v. Merrill, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 629. Evidence held to justify instruction that there was nothing for defendant to return. Pacific Export Lumber Co. v. North Pacific Lumber Co. [Or.] 80 P. 105.

8. Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 2. Where defendant positively refused to refund money received under debenture contract under any circumstances held that plaintiff was not bound to tender or offer to return contract prior to commencing action. Sufficient where produced them at trial and offered to cancel them or turn them over to defendant. McDonald v. Pacific Debenture Co., 146 Cal. 667, 80 P. 1090.

9. Action to rescind contract of sale for nonpayment of purchase price. Succession of Delaneuville v. Duhe [La.] 38 So. 20.

10. Sufficient if he does so in his petition provided suit was not brought too late, the question of unreasonable delay being referred to the date of the suit. Tompkins v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 953. Where the case is tried and submitted to the jury on the theory that plaintiff tendered back the consideration before suit, he is not entitled to a verdict on evidence showing a tender of only part of it. Id.

11. Civ. Code, §§ 3407, 3408. Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 80 P. 234. One from whom a conveyance was obtained by fraud gave notice of rescission immediately on discovering the fraud, and tendered back the certificate of deposit which he had received as the consideration. Held that rescission was completed by the tender and that he was not required to thereafter keep the original conditions, the innocent party may, without a formal rescission have compensation in damages for the injury sustained, either as an equitable defense to an action on the contract, or to be recovered in a suit for that purpose.[12]

(§ 8) D. Remedies.[13]—On repudiation of a contract the innocent party may recover the consideration paid by him.[14] In such case resort should not be had to a court of equity, unless for some special reason the remedy at law is unavailing or inadequate.[15]

The statutes of California provide for rescission by complying with certain rules therein prescribed, and that if such rescission is not acceded to it may be enforced by action.[16]

The rescission of a contract necessarily constitutes a bar to its performance by either party,[17] and the rescinding party thereby loses his right of action for its breach.[18] Where the evidence shows plaintiff to be entitled to a rescission, defendant's claim for specific performance is necessarily eliminated from the case.[19] If the contract is to all intents and purposes wholly executory at the institution of the suit, any question of part performance as interfering with plaintiff's right to rescind is also eliminated.[20]

§ 9. Remedies for breach. A. The right and its accrual.[21]—On breach of a continuing agreement, the innocent party may sue at once for his entire damage without waiting for the expiration of the contract period.[22] The same is true where performance is prevented by the other party,[23] or where he intentionally the certificate intact, but was sufficient if he was able to return the amount of money represented thereby. Id.

12. Rumsey v. Shaw, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 386. In action to recover balance of purchase price of option on stock, where it appears that defendant secured new option before expiration of one purchased, and did not discover false representations until first option had expired, he may set up such representations as a defense though he had not rescinded the contract and tendered back the first option. Id.

13. See 3 C. L. 846.

14. On discovering fraud, if he elects to rescind, may sue in equity for a rescission and recover what he has parted with upon such conditions as the court may deem equitable, or rescind by his own act and sue at law for what he has parted with. Corse & Co. v. Minnesota Grain Co. [Minn.] 102 N. W. 728. On repudiation by a railroad company of a contract whereby it agreed to maintain its offices and shops in a city, the city and individuals may recover the land conveyed to it as a consideration therefor, together with any other consideration which passed. City of Tyler v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 238. A verbal contract for the exchange of personalty may be rescinded by either party thereto for good cause, and a suit at law maintained for the restitution of the property. Wilson v. Maxon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 123. Vendee under executory contract for sale of realty may, on rescinding for non-performance, recover amount paid in action for money had and received. Seibel v. Purchase, 134 F. 484.

15. Wilson v. Maxon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 123.

16. Civ. Code, § 1691. Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 80 P. 234.

17. Marsh v. Despard [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 24.

18. Plaintiff, by taking property into her own charge, held to have rescinded contract whereby defendant agreed to care for it and pay her a certain sum monthly, and to have lost her right of action for defendant's breach in refusing to longer pay more than a less sum. Seymour v. Warren, 93 N. Y. S. 651.

19. Exchange of land. Bales v. Roberts [Mo.] 87 S. W. 914.

20. Bales v. Roberts [Mo.] 87 S. W. 914.

21. See 3 C. L. 846.

22. May also elect to wait. Globe Fertilizer Co. v. Tennessee Phosphate Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 1177. Where case is not tried until expiration of term of employment, he may recover salary for whole time, less payments made, and such sums as he earned or might have earned by reasonable diligence after the breach. Morgan v. McCaslin, 114 Ill. App. 427.

23. Degnan v. Nowlin [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 758. Though the purchase price of machines is not due for thirty days after they are installed and accepted, plaintiff may sue before the expiration of that period where defendant has absolutely rejected them. Inman Mfg. Co. v. American Cereal Co., 124 Iowa, 737, 100 N. W. 860. Defendant held to have committed breach of contract, whereby plaintiffs were to publish an advertisement for him for a year, by notifying them at the end of the first quarter to discontinue publication, warranting plaintiffs, without doing more, in considering contract at an end, and in suing for loss of profits on the part they were not permitted to perform. Stumpf v. Merz, 92 N. Y. S. 789.

makes performance on his own part impossible,[24] or where he repudiates the contract before the time when performance is due.[25]

As a general rule in order to recover on an entire contract, plaintiff must show full performance,[26] or, in case the contract calls for concurrent acts, a readiness to perform on his part,[27] or that performance was prevented by the other

24. As where firm, which has agreed to pay balance of purchase price of mining property from the proceeds of its resale, conveys it, for a nominal consideration, to a corporation formed by them. Guthiel v. Gilmer, 27 Utah, 496, 76 P. 628.

25. See ante, § 6 A.

26. Massey v. Greenabaum Bros. [Del. Super.] 58 A. 804; Toher v. Schaefer, 45 Misc. 618, 91 N. Y. S. 3; Lassen v. Burt, 92 N. Y. S. 796; Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman Paulsen & Co. [Or.] 80 P. 424; Trumbower v. Woodley, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 249. Civ. Code, § 1439. Plaintiff held not entitled to any interest in mine where he failed to make payments provided for in contract. Cameron v. Burnham, 146 Cal. 580, 80 P. 929. If a contract calls for successive acts, first by one party and then by the other, there is no breach by one if the precedent act has not been performed by the other. Osgood v. Skinner, 211 Ill. 229, 71 N. E. 869, afg. 111 Ill. App. 606. Finding that plaintiff had delivered all the wire called for by defendant by contract held warranted by evidence that defendant had exercised option given him by making necessary payments. American Electrical Works v. New England Elec. R. Const. Co., 186 Mass. 546, 72 N. E. 64. Cannot be enforced by one who has not performed conditions precedent. O'Connell v. New York, etc., R. Co., 187 Mass. 272, 72 N. E. 979. Strict performance is a condition precedent to recovery on a building contract itself, in the absence of a waiver. Burke v. Coyne [Mass.] 74 N. E. 942. Building contract. Wagner v. St. Peter's Hospital [Mont.] 79 P. 1054. Where services and materials furnished under special contract are such that they can be rejected, and obligee can avoid receiving any benefit therefrom and refuses to accept same, there can be no recovery without complete performance. Dame v. Woods [N. H.] 60 A. 744. Right to compensation for services in consolidating corporations contingent on obtaining funds from underwriting syndicate, which plaintiffs failed to do. Fry v. Miles [N. J. Err. & App.] 59 A. 246. Refusal to receive 250 barrels of cement a week as required by contract held breach on plaintiff's part. Pitts v. Davey, 40 Misc. 96, 81 N. Y. S. 264. Failure to prove performance by plaintiff in matter of inspection of electrical installation and presentation of certificate held to justify judgment for defendant. Electrical Equipment Co. v. Feuerlicht, 90 N. Y. S. 467. Under contract authorizing plaintiff to insert defendants' advertisement in his publication for a period of 34 insertions, for which defendants agreed to pay a certain sum "in monthly payments as due," proof of 7 insertions between dates specified in complaint held to entitle plaintiff to recover therefor regardless of whether contract was entire or for a year. McKillop, Walker & Co. v. New York Preparatory School, 91 N. Y. S. 338. Where personalty is sold on time, the title to remain in the vendor until the purchase money is paid and delivery is made to purchaser subject to certain conditions to be performed by seller before possession or title can pass, latter cannot, before he has substantially performed such conditions, elect to treat property as that of purchaser, and sue for and recover contract price upon failure of purchaser to accept the property and pay the purchase money as agreed. American Soda Fountain Co. v. Gerrer's Bakery, 14 Okl. 258, 78 P. 115. Where purchaser of eight cases of tobacco returns four as not according to sample, it is error to permit recovery for whole eight cases, plaintiff being only entitled to verdict for value of four retained and for damages for breach of contract as to four returned. Barnett v. Becker, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 22. One contracting to drill oil well through fourth sand cannot recover where prevented from completing work by breaking of tools in well. Caughey v. Parker, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 289. Common-law rule. Woodford v. Kelley [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1069. One guaranteeing that a well which he is to drill will be a flowing one cannot recover the contract price if it is not, though it can be profitably operated with a pump. Cox & Co. v. Markham, Jr. & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 375, 87 S. W. 1163. Where contract of sale provided for payment after delivery, seller was not entitled to recover purchase price without showing delivery or refusal to accept. Southern Car Mfg. & Supply Co. v. Scullin-Gallagher Iron & Steel Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 845. Where a contract of employment is an entire one, an employe rightfully discharged cannot, in an action on the contract, recover for partial performance. Parker v. Farlinger [Ga.] 50 S. E. 98. Must show performance on his part down to the time when instalment sued for became due. Seaburn v. Zachmann, 99 App. Div. 218, 90 N. Y. S. 1005. Where plaintiff was employed at a weekly salary and left without cause, he could not recover salary for any future time, nor for the week in which he left. Id. Where wages are payable monthly, cannot recover on contract for wages of month during which he was discharged. Parker v. Farlinger [Ga.] 50 S. E. 98.

27. Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman Paulsen & Co. [Or.] 80 P. 424. Tender in such case means offer accompanied by ability to perform if other party will concurrently do what is required of him. Tender of stock held sufficient. Osgood v. Skinner, 211 Ill. 229, 71 N. E. 869, afg. 111 Ill. App. 606. Where contract provided that defendant was to pay a certain sum on condition that plaintiff turned over to him by proper assignment a certain warehouse receipt, held, that plaintiff must show offer or ability to turn over receipt. Paddock v. Buchanan & Co., 110 Ill. App. 29. Where claimant repaired machinery under contract, requiring payment when work was completed, and shipped same with draft attached to bill of party.[28] Ordinarily there must be an actual tender of performance,[29] but this does not apply where the other party has repudiated the contract,[30] or has put it beyond his power to perform.[31]

The rule requiring full performance has been relaxed in many states to the extent that, though it is still necessary in order to recover on the contract, yet if defendant has accepted and used what plaintiff has done in a partial compliance therewith, he will be held liable for the benefit he has received, on an implied promise to pay for the same.[32] One cannot, however, recover on a quantum lading for more than the amount due, defendant was not entitled to recover possession of the machinery without tendering the amount actually due. Dutton v. Shaw [Miss.] 38 So. 638. Before plaintiff can recover in an action for the nondelivery of goods sold to him, he must show that when he demanded it he was able to pay for it in the manner fixed by custom. Blalock v. Clark, 137 N. C. 140, 49 S. E. 88.

28. Foster v. Leininger, 33 Ind. App. 669, 72 N. E. 164; Fry v. Miles [N. J. Err. & App.] 59 A. 246; Trumbower v. Woodley, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 249. Refusal of plaintiff to pay a monthly instalment when due under a contract for furnishing electric power is not a breach on his part, where the bill is for an amount in excess of that actually due, and defendant, at the time, owes him more than the amount of such instalment. Souther Iron Co. v. Laclede Power Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 450. As where contract with amusement company provides that plaintiff shall install his apparatus only in localities assigned to him by defendant, and latter refused to assign space and incumbered ground so that it would have been impractical for plaintiff to construct and operate his concessions. Claudius v. West End Heights Amusement Co. [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 354. Instructions approved. Id. Where defendant's lessee, after partially performing a contract to grub the land, was notified by him to do no more, defendant could not contend, in an action for plaintiff's resulting damages, that since the evidence showed that plaintiff was in possession and was not prevented from carrying out the contract, he could not recover. Campbell v. Howerton [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 370. Letter of purchaser held not a refusal to accept so as to excuse delivery. Southern Car Mfg. & Supply Co. v. Scullin-Gallagher Iron & Steel Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 845.

29. Osgood v. Skinner, 211 Ill. 229, 71 N. E. 869, afg. 111 Ill. App. 606.

30. But if before or at the time of performance one party declares his intention not to perform or refuses to do so, the other need not make an actual tender of performance, but it is sufficient for him to prove that he was ready and willing to perform. Evidence held to show repudiation of contract to repurchase certain stock. Osgood v. Skinner, 211 Ill. 229, 71 N. E. 869, afg. 111 Ill. App. 606. Where there was evidence that repudiation of joint contract was made to one of the parties who was acting for both, evidence of such repudiation was not objectionable as to the other on the ground that it was made to a stranger and had not been communicated to the person seeking to avail himself of it. Id. Refusal of seller to deliver cotton sold, because price has gone up, and on account of buyer's delay, renders tender of price by buyer before suing for nondelivery unnecessary. Blalock v. Clark, 137 N. C. 140, 49 S. E. 88.

31. Where one party puts it beyond his power to perform, the other is thereby absolved from the duty of placing himself in readiness or ability to perform, and it is sufficient if he tenders performance in his pleading. By selling land to another. Morehouse v. Terrill, 111 Ill. App. 460. Where one party to an executory contract has placed it out of his power to perform, a tender of performance by the other party is not necessary to entitle him to rescind and recover a payment made thereon, when the time for performance by the other has expired. Seibel v. Purchase, 134 F. 484.

32. Where there has been an imperfect performance of a contract for irrigating crops which has been accepted, the water rent stipulated in the contract will be due up to the full amount thereof if the crop has been benefited that much, but the debt will be offset by any loss that may have resulted from the dereliction of the contractor. Hunter Canal Co. v. Robertson's Heirs, 113 La. 833, 37 So. 771. In such case only the excess of the rent can serve as a basis for sequestration. Id. For benefits such as improvement of the other's property, the sale and delivery of goods to him, or work done for him. Cann v. Rector, etc., of Church of the Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. One may receover on the theory of a quasi contract. Dame v. Woods [N. H.] 60 A. 744. Any liability to pay for a partial performance which does not result in such benefit must rest wholly on the special contract. Id. Plaintiffs held entitled to reasonable value of work and labor performed in pursuance of contract to cut, bale and deliver hay, less damages suffered by defendant on account of failure to fully perform. Woodford v. Kelley [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1069. Where no evidence of reasonable value of hauling part of hay to certain station, plaintiffs held not entitled to contract price therefor, but only proved value of cutting, stacking, and bailing. Id. An action in quantum meruit may be maintained to recover for labor and materials furnished under a building contract, subject to right of defendant to set up contract for purpose of limiting recovery to contract price, less damages for delay. Stephens v. Phoenix Bridge Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 248. Where the services are from their very nature accepted from day to day as the work progresses and the benefits thereof must necessarily be regarded as appropriated and accepted, there is a liability to pay the fair value thereof over and above the damages sustained by the breach, though the contract is not fully meruit for services rendered under a special agreement by the terms of which his compensation is contingent on performance.[33]

If the contract is divisible, either party, having fully performed any one of the several covenants therein contained, may maintain an action against the other party for a breach without pleading or proving performance of the entire contract on his own part.[34]

A material breach of the contract justifies the innocent party in refusing to be longer bound thereby, and entitles him to recover for what he has already done.[35]

One who has violated his obligations under a contract cannot compel performance by the other party or complain of his refusal to perform,[36] nor can one performed. Dame v. Woods [N. H.] 60 A. 744. One contracting to furnish and install heating plant for a sum to be paid on completion is not entitled to recover on theory of quasi contract to pay for benefits on ground of necessary acceptance from day to day, where the work is destroyed by fire before completion, it not appearing that materials could not have been removed for reasonable sum had they not been destroyed. Id. One who himself breaches a contract has no interest in future profits thereunder, but is entitled only to the present value of his interest, in an action by the other party for a rescission because of such breach. Hodges v. Price [Wash.] 80 P. 202. Evidence held to sustain finding that defendant was the first party guilty of a breach. Id.

33. Where contract provided for compensation of plaintiffs for consolidating corporations on condition that they secured funds through an underwriting syndicate, could not recover where failed to secure them. Fry v. Miles [N. J. Err. & App.] 59 A. 246.

34. Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman Paulsen & Co. [Or.] 80 P. 424. Where, under a contract of sale, delivery, acceptance, and payment were to take place in instalments, the vendor may maintain an action to recover any instalment when it becomes due without pleading or proving full performance on his part. Sale of entire mill cut of timber for the season. Barnes v. Leidigh [Or.] 79 P. 51. Contract for loan for which borrower was to give nine notes secured by trust deed held not indisvisible so as to preclude lender, who did not advance the whole amount contemplated, from maintaining an action on the notes and deed for the amount actually advanced. Less v. English [Ark.] 87 S. W. 447. Contract to furnish brick required by contractor to construct walks for city, price to be paid monthly for those furnished during the month, as they were used, held severable, and failure of purchaser to pay one instalment did not release seller from contract. Iowa Brick Mfg. Co. v. Herrick, 126 Iowa, 721, 102 N. W. 787. A contract may be entire and the performance severable so that a part of the payment or performance on one side may be recovered before the whole consideration has been paid by the other. Subscription contract whereby set of books containing 51 volumes to be issued at the rate of two volumes per month is subscribed for, and subscriber agrees to pay on delivery at a specified rate per volume, held a promise to pay for the volumes as delivered, so that an action can be maintained for the price of any volumes delivered before delivery of the entire set. Barrie v. Jerome, 112 Ill. App. 329. As to what contracts are severable and what entire, see § 4 c, ante.

35. In suit on contract for drilling well, held that defendant's failure to furnish pipe constituted breach justifying plaintiff in abandoning work and entitling him to recover for what he had already done. Cook v. Columbian Oil, A. & R. Co., 144 Cal. 670, 78 P. 287. The value of the services rendered may be recovered where complete performance has been prevented by the act or default of the other party. By refusal to make payments on account. Poland v. Thomaston, F. & O. Brick Co. [Me.] 60 A. 795. Where purchaser of oil refused to take it within time provided by contract, seller was not obliged to accept his subsequent offer to take it on terms provided in contract. Kellogg v. Frohlich [Mich.] 102 N. W. 1057.

36. Where plaintiff refused to make advances to insurance solicitor as required by a contract supplemental to that by which the latter was employed, and refused to continue him in his service unless he entered into new contract, could not receover for failure of solicitor to further perform. Arbaugh v. Shockney, 34 Ind. App. 268, 71 N. E. 232, rehearing denied 72 N. E. 668. Claimants repaired machinery under contract requiring payment when work was completed, and shipped same to defendant with draft attached to bill of lading. Defendant replevied same from railroad without paying draft. Claimant did not have a part of the necessary material and intended to complete work after delivery to defendant. Held, that defendants, having themselves breached the contract, could not be heard to complain that complainants had not completed the work. Dutton v. Shaw [Miss.] 38 So. 638. Cannot recover damages for breach of a contract where the failure to comply therewith was his own. Plaintiff cannot recover damages where defendant exercises option to declare contract for sale of land at an end for plaintiff's failure to make payment on specified date. Apking v. Hoffer [Neb.] 104 N. W. 177. Cannot recover damages for neglect of duties devolving on his own agent. Brown & Co. v. St. John Trust Co. [Kan.] 80 P. 37.

who has directly or indirectly prevented performance by the other party recover for the breach primarily due to his own act or neglect.[37]

(§ 9) B. Particular remedies and election between them.[38]—Every material breach entitles the injured party to an action at law for his resulting damages.[39]

A party discovering facts entitling him to rescind may either do so and demand the return of what he has paid, or elect to affirm the contract and sue for his resulting damages.[40]

After a breach of the contract the party not in fault may either sue for damages, or rescind, and, after returning what he has received, recover the value of what he has paid or done.[41] In certain cases he may also sue in equity for specific performance.[42] If there has been no delivery of personal property sold, the vendor may either sell it and sue for the unpaid balance of the contract price, or he may treat it as the property of the vendee, notwithstanding a refusal to accept it, and sue on the contract for the whole contract price.[43]

37. Pitts v. Davey, 40 Misc. 96, 81 N. Y. S. 264. Where plaintiff frequently demanded copy for advertisement and finally published defendant's business card as he had a right to do under the contract, and otherwise fully performed, held, that defendant could not defend on the ground of a misunderstanding with plaintiff's solicitor as to the subject-matter of the advertisement. Keniston v. Flaherty, 101 App. Div. 605, 91 N. Y. S. 568. S. D. Rev. Civ. Code, § 1173. Plaintiffs estopped to maintain action for loss due to defendants failure to keep building insured as required by contract, where failure was due to their own objections. Fransen v. Regents of Education of S. D. [C. C. A.] 133 F. 24. Instructions as to necessity of showing that plaintiff had offered performance and that defendant had refused to perform, approved. Brauer v. Macbeth [C. C. A.] 138 F. 977. Cannot in such case avail himself of nonperormance within time limited. Lehman v. Webster & Co., 110 Ill. App. 298.

38. See 3 C. L. 846.

39. In the absence of a provision to the contrary, one who is prevented from performing his contract by the other party thereto is entitled to compensation therefor. Sanitary Dist. v. McMahon & Montgomery Co., 110 Ill. App. 510. Where deceased agreed to compensate plaintiff for services by bequeathing him certain goods, but failed to do so, he was entitled to recover the value of such services from the estate. Evidence sufficient to justify finding that such agreement existed. Shane v. Shearsmith's Estate [Mich.] 100 N. W. 123. Where decedent promised to compensate claimant for services by a sufficient provision in her will, but failed to make any provision, she was entitled to compensation as a creditor of the estate for the value of the services, whether the omission was intentional or not. Bair v. Hager, 97 App. Div. 358, 90 N. Y. S. 27.

40. Fraud. Corse & Co. v. Minnesota Grain Co. [Minn.] 102 N. W. 728. Exchange of horses. Smeesters v. Schroeder, 123 Wis. 116, 101 N. W. 363. Sale of land. Schoonover v. Ralston, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 375.

41. Seattle Nat. Bank v. Powles, 33 Wash. 21, 73 P. 887. Where the vendee under an executory contract for the sale of land takes possession, and the vendor's title fails or he is unable to make conveyance as stipulated, he may rescind, and, after restoring or offering to restore possession, recover what he has paid, or he may retain possession, pay the purchase price, and accept such title as the vendee can give, but he cannot retain both the land and the money until the vendor can give perfect title. Livesley v. Muckle [Or.] 80 P. 901. On failure of defendant to obtain conveyance on day named, time being of the essence of the contract, vendee may disaffirm contract for sale of realty. Seibel v. Purchase, 134 F. 484. On refusal of owner of building to furnish plans in accordance with contract for steelwork, the remedy of the other party was to refuse to proceed with the contract and to hold the owner for damages for its breach. New York Architectural Terra Cotta Co. v. Williams, 102 App. Div. 1, 92 N. Y. S. 808. Where performance is prevented by the other party, plaintiff's remedy is an action for damages caused by defendant's breach, alleging his prevention of performance, or in an action on quantum meruit for so much of the work as he has done. Contract to do necessary excavating for building. Toher v. Schaefer, 45 Misc. 618, 91 N. Y. S. 3. May treat contract as abandoned and sue for what he has done. Cann v. Rector, etc., of Church of the Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. Refusal of employer to pay employe his share of net profits in accordance with contract entitles him to leave service and collect amount due him under contract for time of actual employment. Dunn v. Crichfield, 214 Ill. 292, 73 N. E. 386.

42. On breach of a contract for the sale or exchange of property, may either treat the contract as rescinded and sue for damages, or he may sue for specific performance, but he cannot do both, the two remedies being inconsistent. Pyle v. Crebs, 112 Ill. App. 480. The only remedy for breach of a contract for personal services is an action for damages. Cannot be specifically enforced. Wood v. Iowa Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 126 Iowa, 464, 102 N. W. 410. For discussion of what contracts will be specifically enforced, see Specific Performance, 4 C. L. 1494.

43. Osgood v. Skinner, 211 Ill. 229, 71 N.

An election of remedies once made is final ,and cannot thereafter be rescinded.[44] The actual commencement of a suit predicated on either theory is plenary, and complete proof of the exercise of such election.[45]

The remedy of the maker of a promissory note which has been sold by the payee to an innocent purchaser for value, in direct violation of the contract of the parties, is an action for damages for the amount of the note with interest.[46] The fact that the contract provides for the recovery of a partial payment thereunder on the happening of a certain contingency does not prevent its recovery on the happening of another contingency, not provided for, which prevents performance by the other party.[47]

Where the contract has been broken, the other party may fulfill it for himself, provided he does so in a reasonable manner and does not incur unnecessary expense in so doing.[48] He is not, however, bound to do so before suing for damages for the breach.[49]

Ejectment will not lie to enforce the performance of a contract which is the consideration for a deed of conveyance.[50]

One who maliciously interferes and induces one party to break a contract to the injury of the other is liable in damages to the latter.[51]

E. 869, afg. 111 Ill. App. 606. See Sales, 4 C. L. 1318, for a full discussion of this subject.

44. Where all grounds warranting rescission were in existence and complete when plaintiff elected not to rescind, he cannot, more than two years thereafter, make a second election reversing former one. Where he does some decisive act evidencing his choice of such remedies, he thereby adopts such position finally, and cannot ordinarily recede therefrom. Evidence held to show election to rescind contract for exchange of horses, and he could not thereafter sue for breach of warranty. Smeesters v. Schroeder, 123 Wis. 116, 101 N. W. 363. In action for price of brick sold, held, that notices by defendant to plaintiff that brick were of inferior quality and that he would purchase brick elsewhere and charge difference to plaintiff, did not amount to an election of remedies so as to preclude defendant from recovering other damages for plaintiff's breach of contract, where plaintiff did not claim that he relied on the alleged election. Iowa Brick Mfg. Co. v. Herrick, 126 Iowa, 721, 102 N. W. 787. For a full discussion, see Election and Waiver, 3 C. L. 1177.

45. Smeesters v. Schroeder, 123 Wis. 116, 101 N. W. 363. The fact that the terms of the contract are stated in the petition is not determinative of the question whether a plaintiff, who has been prevented from completely performing by the other party, is suing for damages for breach of contract, or has waived such damages and is suing on a quantum meruit for the value of the work actually performed. Cann v. Rector, etc., of Church of the Redeemer [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 994. He may state a contract and its breach by defendant, and yet state a cause of action on quantum meruit, if he avers a waiver of damages for the breach and asks only for the reasonable value of what he has done toward performance before the other party stopped him. Petition in action by architects held not to state cause of action on quantum meruit. Id. Plaintiff by suing in indebitatus assumpsit on the unjustifiable refusal of defendant to perform thereby consents to the termination of the contract. Poland v. Thomaston F. & O. Brick Co. 51. Morehouse v. Terrill, 111 Ill. App. 460. Where claimants' undertaking to complete repairs by a certain time was conditioned on the delivery of the machinery at their shop within a specified time, which was not done, they were only bound to complete them within a reasonable time. Dutton v. Shaw [Miss.] 38 So. 638.

Note: As a general rule it may be stated that an action will lie against one who maliciously persuades another to break his contract with plaintiff to the injury of the latter. Perkins v. Pendleton, 90 Me. 166, 38 A. 96, 60 Am. St. Rep. 252; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; Morgan v. Andrews, 107 Mich. 33, 64 N. W. 867; Lally v. Cantwell, 30 Mo. App. 524; Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. The disaffirmance of a contract which is merely voidable does not impair the right of the other party to recover money earned thereunder prior to such disaffirmance.[52]

If the contract is fully executed and nothing further remains to be done on the part of the plaintiff, he may sue and recover upon the common counts.[53]

Remedy by injunction.[54]—Equity may by injunction restrain conduct contrary to the terms of the contract where the remedy at law is inadequate, even though it is not a case where specific performance could be decreed.[55] Thus the court may, in proper cases and where irreparable injury is shown, enjoin a violation of negative covenants therein.[56] An injunction will not, however, issue to restrain the breach of a personal contract or one relating to personal property, or a mandatory injunction to compel specific performance thereof, where the recovery of damages at law would adequately redress the impending injury.[57] The breach of valid agreements in restraint of trade may be restrained by injunction provided they are established by clear and satisfactory proof,[58] even though plaintiff will not

It has also been held that the person so induced to violate his contract may also recover. Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 52 N. E. 924, 54 N. E. 524, 68 Am. St. Rep. 203.

There is, however, a line of cases holding that an action will not lie against one who from malicious motives, but without threats, violence, fraud, falsehood, deception, or benefit to himself induces another to violate his contract with plaintiff, with whom he does not stand in any personal relation. 60. Plaintiff sold proprietary medicines to wholesale and retail druggists under contract providing that they should only be sold at uniform prices and to dealers who became parties to the contract. Defendant who was not a party to the contract, obtained medicines from one who was, and after mutilating packages, or removing medicines therefrom, sold medicines at reduced prices. Held, plaintiff was entitled to preliminary injunction restraining defendant from inducing parties to contract to violate it, and from selling medicines as plaintiff's, in other than original packages and at less than contract price to the injury of plaintiff's business. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Goldthwaite, 133 F. 794. Use and distribution of quotations of prices on sales of grain, etc., for future delivery collected by board of trade, and which cannot be obtained without a known breach of the confidential terms on which they are communicated by the board to its customers, may be enjoined, even though such quotations relate to "pretended buying and selling" within Ill. Act June 6, 1887, prohibiting the keeping of places where such transactions are made. Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co., 25 S. Ct. 637.

Trading stamps. New Jersey ruling: Trading stamps which, under the contract between the company issuing them and the merchants purchasing them, are redeemable when issued and collected in the regular way without limitation except as to the minimum number which can be presented at one time, are choses in action. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Hertzberg [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 368. When so issued and collected they are a property right, bought and paid for by the collector, and are assignable, in the absence of a provision to the contrary in the contract. Id. Where stamps are issued without any limitation on the right of holders to transfer them, the company cannot thereafter, by any change of its plan or its contracts with merchants, limit such right as to stamps previously issued and acquired by the holders in the regular way. Id. The retention by the company of the title to the stamp as a chattel after it has been issued does not interfere with its use as the token or evidence of the chose in action, and such title cannot, in a court of equity, be asserted adversely to the holder of the right of redemption. Id. When the transferable obligations represented by the stamps have been put upon the market subject to certain specified conditions in respect of their discharge, the company can exercise no further control over them. Id. When, under contract of company with merchant, a stamp is delivered to a customer of the latter, all three parties may be bound with reference to its transfer or use by any contract they may see fit to make. Id. But when stamp escapes from control of first party who took it under the contract, the contract cannot follow it, no condition created thereby can attach to it, and the only remedy of either of the three parties who may be injured by the violation of the contract is a suit on the contract against the party thereto who was guilty of such violation. Id. The company cannot prevent a merchant not one of its customers from acquiring such stamps from holders to whom they have been issued in the regular way and distributing them for advertising purposes, though its business may be injured thereby. Id. In any event complainant's right is a doubtful one and hence a preliminary injunction will not issue to prevent their use by such merchant, especially in the absence of a showing of defendant's insolvency. Id.

The Federal courts have held that when such stamps have once been issued by a merchant they have served the advertising purpose for which they were intended, and that they can thereafter be used for redemption purposes only. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 135 F. 833. See, also, Id., 128 F. 800. And, while transferable for that purpose, a merchant having no contract with the company cannot acquire them from persons collecting them and reissue them to his customers for advertising purposes. Id. Such a use is an unlawful interference with the company's business and may be restrained by injunction. Law being clearly inadequate for that purpose, equity will see that the one who is served and the one who serves each gets what the contract calls for, and that neither shall appropriate more to the injury of the other. Id. The stamp book informs the collector what he is to have and what the merchant is to have and equity will not allow him to appropriate what he is told is the merchant's benefit in the transaction. Id. One who has been in the company's employment long enough to know that the necessities of its business require that such stamps shall not be dealt in by the public generally is not an innocent purchaser. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Temple, 137 F. 992. And he will be restrained from selling as articles of merchandise stamps purchased by him from persons who have received them with purchases, and from advertising generally that he will purchase them as articles of merchandise. Cannot deal in them generally as articles of merchandise. Id. He cannot, however, be prohibited from purchasing them so far as he sees fit to do so. Id.

If defendant's affidavit clearly makes it appear that the very contract upon which the statement shows the action is founded is in writing, and statement is not accompanied by copy, defendant has shown a valid reason why summary judgment should not be entered against him, even though he does not set forth a perfectly valid defense upon the merits. Id. In action on book account, where defendant alleges written contract as basis of the action and relies on its breach for a defense, and plaintiff is ruled to produce it and denies its existence under oath and thereby obtains judgment, but its existence in plaintiff's possession is subsequently shown, the judgment should be opened. Id. Error to enter judgment on plaintiff's affidavit without giving defendant opportunity to show existence of contract by depositions. Id. In such case the fact that defendant did not give the exact date of the contract is immaterial, where he otherwise sufficiently designated it. Id.

86. Mansfield v. Morgan, 140 Ala. 567, 37 So. 393. Complaint setting out contract in haec verba is not demurrable because such contract is somewhat indefinite and obscure in its terms, where it is capable of being rendered certain by matter aliunde. Cliff Foy & Bro. v. Dawkins, 138 Ala. 232, 35 So. 41. A mere allegation of duty is insufficient, but there must be an allegation of facts sufficient to show such duty or obligation. Complaint in action for breach of contract to furnish water for irrigation purposes held insufficient in failing to show that said contract was binding upon the parties at the time of the alleged breach. Spencer v. Bessemer Waterworks Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 91. Complaint alleging that defendant had exclusive right to furnish water to the citizens of the city, but failing to allege that defendant was under any contractual obligation to the city to furnish water to plaintiff, or that there was a contract between plaintiff and defendant for the water, or what rate was to be paid for the water, or that either plaintiff or the city was under any obligation to pay for it at all, held bad. Id. Petition in action on alleged contract on the part of testator to give plaintiff half his estate by will in consideration of his services held too vague and indefinite to withstand demurrer on ground that it fails to set forth terms of the contract. Cooper v. Claxton [Ga.] 50 S. E. 399.

87. Samuel Cupples Envelope Co. v. Lackner, 99 App. Div. 231, 90 N. Y. S. 954. Where complaint alleges contract "ready to be produced when and where the court may direct," but only sets out a part of its provisions, a copy of the contract attached to the answer cannot be added to, and construed in connection with the complaint. Hudson River Power Transmission Co. v. United Traction Co., 98 App. Div. 568, 91 N. Y. S. 179.

88. That a petition counting on a contract in writing alleges that the agreed amount to be paid for plaintiff's services is their reasonable value is immaterial. Contract to pay commissions for selling land. Jenkins v. Beachy [Kan.] 80 P. 947.

89. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Tel. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 742. Contract by corporation to repurchase its stock on happening of certain contingencies held not contrary to public policy where no fraud is alleged or proved, and there is no averment that corporation is insolvent or that stock is not worth the amount agreed to be paid therefor. Id.

90. Minnesota Sandstone Co. v. Clark, 35 Wash. 466, 77 P. 803. Answer, in action on contract whereby plaintiff was to secure release of defendant as surety on certain notes, alleging fraud held to state a good defense. Ryan v. Riddle [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1117. Affidavit of defense in action on note given for stock attempting to allege fraud and want of consideration held insufficient. Brian v. Merrill, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 629.

91. In an action on a contract, a defense which expressly or impliedly admits the making of the contract and seeks to show that it is in contravention of public policy by reason of some fact outside of the statements in the complaint is based upon new matter which cannot be proved unless pleaded. Mills' Ann. Code. Colo. § 56. Rucker v. Bolles [C. C. A.] 133 F. 858. Pleadings held to sufficiently present issue on which jury determined case. Id. Evidence sufficient to sustain judgment for plaintiff. Id.

92. Answer in suit on contract whereby wife agreed to pay judgment of husband held to state defense. Atlanta Suburban Land Corp. v. Austin [Ga.] 50 S. E. 124. In action on note given to plaintiff as substitute for judgment bond for same amount, where it appeared that bond was given at time of execution of deed to defendant, which deed acknowledged receipt of the consideration in full, specifying the amount, held that an affidavit of defense averring that the bond was given to secure annual payment of a dower interest in the land, and that the widow was dead, but not specifically stating that the bond was not a part of the consideration named in the deed, was insuffiof a foreign state,[93] the failure of a foreign corporation to comply with the laws of the state where the action is brought,[94] and a breach,[95] or rescission of the contract,[96] must be pleaded. There is a conflict of authority as to the necessity of pleading waiver and estoppel.[97]

A consideration must be alleged [98] unless the contract itself imports one or shows one on its face,[99] or unless the complaint shows a partial performance.[1]

cient. Snyder v. Knight, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 309.

93. In order that a contract may be declared invalid under the laws of a foreign state where it was made they must be pleaded. Perkins v. Trinity Realty Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 167. Lex loci contractus must be pleaded in order to control construction. Otherwise lex fori will control. Neverman v. Bank of Cass County, 14 Okl. 417, 78 P. 382. In order to protect itself under a contract made in another state, and void in the state in which the action is brought, a carrier must show that the contract was valid in that state and that the loss occurred there. Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker, 26 Ky. L. R. 1025, 83 S. W. 106. In action in Massachusetts on South Dakota contract there is no presumption that the statute law of the two states is the same, but it will be presumed that the common law is, in the absence of proof to the contrary. Cherry v. Sprague, 187 Mass. 113, 72 N. E. 456. Promissory note payable in South Dakota and sent to payee in that state is a South Dakota contract. Id. Averment that contract was executed in New York held denial of allegation that it was executed in Pennsylvania, and not new matter subject to demurrer under Code Civ. Proc. § 494. Onderdonk v. Peale, 93 N. Y. S. 505.

94. New York Architectural Terra Cotta Co. v. Williams, 102 App. Div. 1, 92 N. Y. S. 808. In an action by a foreign corporation on a contract alleged to have been executed and delivered in another state, held that its failure to secure the certificate required by statute could not be pleaded in bar of the action in the absence of an averment that it was doing business within the state. Onderdonk v. Peale, 93 N. Y. S. 505.

95. Complaint held to sufficiently allege breach of contract to save plaintiffs harmless in sale of certain property under a mortgage. Cliff Foy & Bro. v. Dawkins, 138 Ala. 232, 35 So. 41. Complaint in action on contract for purchase of stock on margins held to sufficiently allege breach of duty by defendant. Wiggin v. Federal Stock & Grain Co., 77 Conn. 507, 59 A. 607.

Pleadings held insufficient: A declaration in assumpsit for breach of a mutual compact to make a donation, which recites no consideration and fixes no time for performance, where no breach other than a conveyance of the property which was to be donated is alleged, and there is no allegation of a demand and refusal of performance. Foulds v. Watson, 116 Ill. App. 130. Answer in action on contract whereby plaintiffs agreed to send defendants orders only from first class firms who would pay them commissions on wheat sold for them and would pay cable expenses. Duryee v. Parker, 94 N. Y. S. 981. In an action to recover money paid for threshing outfit and to rescind contract for breach of warranty, failure of plaintiff to comply with the terms of the warranty is new matter which must be pleaded by defendant, if relied on as a defense. Defendant held not entitled to prove such conditions under the pleadings. Westinghouse Co. v. Meixel [Neb.] 101 N. W. 238. Instructions held to properly state issues raised by pleadings. Id. Answer attempting to set up breaches of contract as a defense to promissory notes issued pursuant thereto failing to specifically assign the breaches. Julius Kessler & Co. v. Perilloux & Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 903.

96. Storer v. Markley [Ind.] 73 N. E. 1081. Petition held to sufficiently plead rescission of contract for purchase of stallion. Berkey v. Lefebure, 125 Iowa, 76, 99 N. W. 710.

97. In Texas waiver must be pleaded. Of provision requiring oil well to be a flowing one. Cox & Co. v. Markham, Jr., & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 1163.

In Illinois, waiver of a strict performance or estoppel to insist on it may be proved though not pleaded. Evans v. Howell, 211 Ill. 85, 71 N. E. 854, afg. 111 Ill. App. 167. For a full discussion, see Estoppel, 3 C. L. 1327; Election and Waiver, 3 C. L. 1177.

98. Oral agreement by landlord to repair premises. Altsheler v. Conrad, 26 Ky. L. R. 538, 82 S. W. 257. For a nonnegotiable instrument not under seal and not reciting a consideration. Promise to pay money on confirmation of land grant. Joseph v. Catron [N. M.] 81 P. 439. Held no evidence in record to show consideration. Id. Complaint in action for damages for failure to furnish water according to contract held insufficient in failing to show consideration for alleged contract. Spencer v. Bessemer Waterworks Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 91. Complaint in action for breach of oral contract to furnish and put on a slate roof held insufficient. Taylor v. Lesson [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 907. Failure to allege consideration is not cured by verdict. Id.

99. Taylor v. Lesson [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 907. Need not be averred in action on written contract in states where such contracts import consideration. Noyes v. Young [Mont.] 79 P. 1063.

1. Spencer v. Bessemer Waterworks Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 91.

2. See, also, § 9A, ante. In action on contract employing plaintiffs as architects, petition held not to allege performance on plaintiffs' part with sufficient definiteness, or to show with legal certainty the amount of damages suffered by the alleged breach. Golucke v. Lowndes County [Ga.] 51 S. E. 406. Error in failing to allege in complaint that vendee under contract for sale of land was able, ready and willing to comply with his contract is cured where, after verdict and judgment, it affirmatively appears that but performance or a readiness to perform need not be alleged where defendant has repudiated the contract, affirmatively refused to perform, or denied liability under it.[4]

A plea is subject to demurrer where the only damages alleged appear to have been suffered by one not a party to the suit.[5]

In order that extraneous evidence may be admitted to explain an ambiguous contract there must be a plea on which to base it.[6]

Anything showing that plaintiff is not entitled to recover is admissible under a plea of nonassumpsit.[7] The defense that no contract was in fact made,[8] that the contract has been satisfied,[9] or that plaintiff himself breached the contract is admissible under a general denial.[10] In an action on an oral contract, a defendant who pleads a general denial need not also plead want of consideration.[11] The illegality of a contract valid on its face,[12] fraud in the procurement of the contract,[13] or that it was so modified after its execution as to release defendant from his obligation thereunder, is inadmissible under the general issue.[14] Performance of conditions precedent may, in some states, be proved under the common counts.[15] If the obligation to pay depends on a contingency, its occurrance

he was. Harmon v. Thompson [Ky.] 84 S. W. 569. In action for monthly instalment of contract price of power furnished where plaintiff claims that defendant has rescinded the contract and is therefore liable for prospective profits, answer alleging excuse for nonperformance and that defendant has always been willing to perform and offers to proceed with performance, held to set up equitable defense. Hudson River Power Transmission Co. v. United Traction Co., 98 App. Div. 568, 91 N. Y. S. 179. Counterclaim in action on contract for furnishing electrical energy alleging breach by plaintiff held insufficient in failing to allege performance by defendant. Id. Complaint in action on contract requiring payment of certain sums on specified contingencies held demurrable for failure to allege performance by plaintiff of covenant to surrender certain stock certificate. Fisk v. Black, 91 N. Y. S. 323.

3. In action for breach of contract for examination and insurance of title to certain premises, where special defense set forth different contract from that alleged in complaint without avoiding or barring latter, denial of performance held denial of one so alleged and not one sued on, and answer was demurrable. Barnard v. Lawyers' Title Ins. Co., 45 Misc. 577, 91 N. Y. S. 41. In an action to recover the contract price for the erection of a building, no plea is necessary in order to present the defense of nonperformance in the district court. Isetts v. Bliwise [N. J. Law] 60 A. 200.

4. In action for damages for breach of contract to construct telephone line, held unnecessary to allege that plaintiff had erected poles as required. Foster v. Leininger, 33 Ind. App. 669, 72 N. E. 164.

5. Plea of recoupment for damages for breach of contract sued on held subject to demurrer where such damages are alleged to have been suffered by defendant's alleged principals, who are strangers to the suit. Gibboney v. Wayne & Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 436.

6. To enable the court to put itself in the position of the parties when it was made. Westfall v. Albert, 212 Ill. 68, 72 N. E. 4. When the existence of a contemporaneous oral agreement is alleged, the conditions which make proof thereof admissible must also be alleged. Affidavit of defense alleging that boiler was not delivered within time specified in contemporaneous oral agreement which varied terms of written contract held insufficient to prevent judgment, where there was no allegation of fraud or mistake and contract provided that it alone should govern rights of parties and that acceptance should constitute waiver of all claims for delay. Tranter Davison Mfg. Co. v. Pittsburg Trolley Pole Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 46.

7. On issue framed after a judgment has been opened, where it is agreed that contract shall stand for a declaration and that defendant shall plead non assumpsit, and defendant so pleads, it is not error to refuse to permit additional plea of non est factum to be filed at trial, since she could prove anything showing that plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Mulhearn v. Roach, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 483.

8. Mail & Exp. Co. v. Wood [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 244, 103 N. W. 864.

9. Defendant in an action on a quantum meruit for services rendered to be paid for by bequest held entitled to take advantage of the satisfaction of the contract under a general denial without a plea of estoppel. Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 380. Alerding v. Allison, 31 Ind. App. 397, 68 N. E. 185.

10. In suit for salary for services, where defendant denied rendition of services, he was entitled to show that plaintiff violated contract by engaging in other employment, and that consequently salary sued for never become due. Seaburn v. Zachmann, 99 App. Div. 218, 90 N. Y. S. 1005.

11. Plaintiff must show consideration under such circumstances. Kennedy v. Swisher, 34 Ind. App. 676, 73 N. E. 724.

12. Must allege facts on which to rely as invalidating it. Wiggin v. Federal Stock & Grain Co., 77 Conn. 507, 59 A. 607.

13, 14. Cir. Ct. Rule 7, subd. b. Carter & v. Weber [Mich.] 101 N. W. 818.

15. Performance of work, etc. Leach v.

must be alleged.[16] A denial that plaintiff has performed all the conditions precedent is not a negative pregnant.[17] In some states a denial of execution must be made under oath.[18]

Where recovery is sought on the theory of a contract performed, and the answer denies full performance, defendant is not required to give a bill of particulars showing in what particulars plaintiff has failed to perform.[19]

Where defendant denies performance and alleges by way of offset, without counterclaim, that he has expended money for labor and materials in completing the contract, plaintiff is entitled to a bill of particulars with reference thereto.[20]

Evidence.[21]—The burden is on plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that a contract valid under the statute of frauds was entered into between the parties, its breach, and his damages.[22] The burden of proving consideration is ordinarily on plaintiff,[23] unless the contract itself imports one.[24] He also has the burden of showing performance.[25] The burden of proof is on defendant to show by a preponderance of the evidence that he did not sign the contract sued on.[26]

In the absence of proof of fraud, accident, or mistake, it is conclusively presumed that an unambiguous written contract, complete in itself, contains the final agreement of the parties and all prior or contemporaneous negotiations are deemed to have been merged therein.[27] Hence, as a general rule, parol evidence is inadmissible to vary, contradict, or add to it.[28]

Spencer v. Huntington, 100 App. Div. 463, 34 Civ. Proc. R. 30, 91 N. Y. S. 561. Sale by sample where there is a written contract for the sale of machinery specifying terms and conditions. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Mahon [N. D.] 101 N. W. 903. Other warranties where contract restricts warranty intended to be made. Id. Written warranty of quality cannot be enlarged by proof of prior parol warranties. Houghton Implement Co. v. Doughty [N. D.] 104 N. W. 516. Contemporaneous agreement that liability on note absolute in its terms was contingent. Neverman v. Bank of Cass County, 14 Okl. 417, 78 P. 382. Subsequent parol modification of written contract. Id. Buyer's understanding of price of goods, where price was plainly shown by letters constituting contract. Fletcher v. Underhill [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 726. Where contract for sale of stone provided for payment of freight by purchasers, that seller agreed to pay any freight in excess of certain rate, where contract provided for its payment by purchasers. Minnesota Sandstone Co. v. Clark, 35 Wash. 466, 77 P. 803. That a written contract is a mere part performance of a verbal one and to show the terms of the latter where the two are inconsistent or contradictory. Corbett v. Joannes [Wis.] 104 N. W. 69. Antecedent and contemporaneous conversations and negotiations. Julius Kessler & Co. v. Perilloux & Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 903. Representations, promises, or agreements made, or opinion expressed in the previous conversations of the parties. Kilby Mfg. Co. v. Hinchman-Renton Fire Proofing Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 957. Prior negotiations as to height of walls required by building contract. Id. Warranty that drill would bore holes as rapidly and economically as a diamond drill. Davis Calyx Drill Co. v. Mallory [C. C. A.] 137 F. 332. To explain phrase "acceptable to the engineer," it being unambiguous. United Engineering & Contrcting Co. v. Broadnax [C. C. A] 136 F. 351. To give witnesses construction of unambiguous written contract, at variance with its terms. Julius Kessler & Co. v. Perilloux & Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 903.

Contract in regard to sale of land held sufficiently clear and consistent, when properly construed, to prevent the admission of parol evidence to show that defendants were merely acting as plaintiff's agents to promote a sale. Harmon v. Thompson [Ky.] 84 S. W. 569. In action on oral agreement for purchase of wire based on written contract between defendant and third person, evidence of statements of latter's salesman as to number of pounds of wire in a mile, made before execution of written contract, held both incompetent and immaterial. American Electrical Works v. New England Elec. R. Const. Co., 186 Mass. 546, 72 N. E. 64.

Of custom: Parol evidence of a custom in construing contracts, which is inconsistent with the terms of the one in suit, is inadmissible to vary its terms. Wiggin v. Federal Stock & Grain Co., 77 Conn. 507, 59 A. 607. Of custom requiring real estate agent to render other services than those required by his contract in order to earn his commission. Torpey v. Murray, 93 Minn. 482, 101 N. W. 609. See, also, Customs and Usages, 3 C. L. 988.

29. Union Special Sew. Mach. Co. v. Lockwood, 110 Ill. App. 387. In such case the implication cannot be overcome or disputed by attempting to show a parol prior or contemporaneous agreement that a condition should exist at variance with the implication. Id. Where contract does not specify time during which defendant shall continue in plaintiff's employment, law supplies missing term by conclusively presuming that the relation shall last as long as both parties desire and terminate at the will of either on notice to the other to that effect, and extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show prior negotiations to the contrary. Id.

30. Fact that memorandum of sale of goods, otherwise constituting a complete contract, is signed only with the buyer's surname, necessitating the introduction of parol evidence to identify him as a partner in the defendant firm, and to show that he contracted on its behalf, does not authorize defendant to prove by parol a condition not therein expressed. Dunn v. Mayo Mills [C. C. A.] 134 F. 804.

31. If the terms employed are sufficient to create a contract susceptible of interpretation in itself. Helper v. MacKinnon Mfg. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 804.

32. United Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Broadnax [C. C. A.] 136 F. 351.

33. Implied warranty of fitness of steam heating apparatus for contemplated use. Ideal Heating Co. v. Kramer [Iowa] 102 N. W. 840. A provision that the contract shall

If the contract is ambiguous, the situation of the parties when it was made and all the surrounding circumstances may be shown for the purpose of arriving at their intention.[35] So, too, in such case, parol evidence is admissible to show the relation of the language to the subject-matter, or to identify any person or thing mentioned in the contract,[36] or to show the sense in which the parties used a word of vague meaning,[37] or the meaning of words peculiar to a particular business or trade, which are not in common use and have no settled judicial meaning,[38] or to supply omitted terms.[39] fully express the agreement of the parties does not exclude an implied warranty where one would otherwise be found. Implied warranty of fitness of heating apparatus for contemplated use. Id.

34. Mason v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 781.

35. See, also, Interpretation, § 4A, ante. L'Engle v. Scottish Union & Nat. Fire Ins. Co. [Fla.] 37 So. 462; Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. McMahon & Montgomery Co., 110 Ill. App. 510. Contract for excavating held not ambiguous. Dugan v. Kelly [Ark.] 86 S. W. 831. The acts, conduct, and declarations of the parties, to explain what the contract actually covers or to what conditions or subject-matter it applies, where its meaning in that regard is not obvious on inspection. Conduct and declarations of parties admissible on question whether contract, by its terms to be performed on consolidation of two corporations, was limited to consolidation resulting from negotiations then pending or applied to one resulting from future negotiations, where contract was silent on the subject. Donner v. Alford [C. C. A.] 136 F. 750. An ambiguous contract is open to explanation by parol. Evidence held to show contract to convey land to defendant on payment of purchase price. Tingue v. Patch, 93 Minn. 437, 101 N. W. 792. Civ. Code 1895, § 5202. Where contract of sale of business was ambiguous as to method of paying part of purchase money, held competent to prove prior agreement that it was to be paid out of profits of a certain enterprise, and, if there were no profits, nothing further was to be paid. Morrison v. Dickey [Ga.] 50 S. E. 178.

Evidence held admissible: Where deed provides that grantee shall assume mortgages, taxes, and claims of any and every description, to show what claims were meant. Gage v. Cameron, 212 Ill. 146, 72 N. E. 204, rvg. Cameron v. Sexton, 110 Ill. App. 381. To show condition of property which was subject of contract for sale of standing timber with view to arrive at intent of parties in terms used. Walker v. Johnson, 116 Ill. App. 145. Contemporaneous conversations in regard to when goods to be shipped would be wanted. Semon, Bache & Co. v. Coppes, Zook & Mutschler Co. [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 41. To show the general character of the business of the parties. In suit on contract to purchase scrap iron, evidence that plaintiffs, on a drop in the price, purchased iron in unusual quantities and accumulated it in larger quantities that either party had a right to expect when contract was made, though contract provided for purchase of all the iron which plaintiff might receive. Helper v. MacKinnon Mfg. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 804. Evidence as to purpose for which ties were or would be needed, to show meaning of words "as needed" and similar expressions in offer to furnish them. Laclede Const. Co. v. Moss Tie Co., 185 Mo. 25, 84 S. W. 76. As to verbal understanding referred to in memorandum transferring tie contract from railroad to construction company, to show what contract was meant. Id. Oral and written statements of parties contemporaneous with making of contract between attorney and client, to show what services were to be performed and how payment was to be made. Barcus v. Gates, 130 F. 364, afd. Barcus v. Sherwood [C. C. A.] 136 F. 184.

36. To show what property was meant, where land sold is designated by a general name. Where it is described in contract of sale as farm consisting of about twenty acres, known as the "V. farm," Not admissible where question is which of two parcels was meant. Hyden v. Perkins, 26 Ky. L. R. 1099, 83 S. W. 128. To show who was meant by offer to furnish "you" ties as needed. Laclede Const. Co. v. Moss Tie Co., 185 Mo. 25, 84 S. W. 76. Evidence which is explanatory of the subject-matter of the written contract, consistent with its terms, and necessary for its interpretation. Cox v. Wilson, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 635. Where, in the application of the contract to the subject-matter, an ambiguity or uncertainty arises which cannot be removed by an examination of the instrument alone, parol evidence of the circumstances under which it was made and of statements made in the prior negotiations is admissible to resolve the ambiguity and prove the real intention. Admissible to explain indefinite provisions in building contract in regard to paving approaches to certain sheds. Kilby Mfg. Co. v. Hinchman-Renton Fire Proofing Co. [C. C. A.] 132 F. 957. To explain the meaning of the language used or its relation to the facts. Where memorandum for sale of goods is signed only with buyer's surname, admissible to identify him as a partner in defendant firm, and to show that he contracted on its behalf. Dunn v. Mayo Mills [C. C. A.] 134 F. 804.

37. "Lumber" in contract to transport it. Greason v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 722.

38. Words "merchantable lumber, mill run," in contract of sale. Barnes v. Leidigh [Or.] 79 P. 51.

39. When a letter claimed to contain the terms of the contract refers to prior correspondence, or negotiations, or understandings which are intended to be considered as a part of the immediate letter, or as em-

Parol evidence is also admissible to show the execution of the contract,[40] its actual date,[41] a subsequent modification thereof,[42] or an independent collateral agreement not inconsistent with it,[43] to show fraud,[44] accident or mistake,[45] illegal-bracing a part of the contract, or as defining the obligation assumed, evidence in regard to them is admissible for the purpose of fully showing the terms of the contract. Letters admissible to show that agreement to pay drafts was not limited to acceptances for invoices mentioned in first letter, and to throw light on general course of dealing between the parties. James v. Lyons Co. [Cal.] 81 P. 275. Where one of the terms agreed upon has not been incorporated into the written contract, and the latter appears to be incomplete or uncertain as to the object or extent of the engagement. Union Special Sew. Mach. Co. v. Lockwood, 110 Ill. App. 387. Rule does not apply where the apparent omission is supplied by implication of law. Id. Contract to furnish advertising not so ambiguous as to justify admission of parol evidence to explain when publication was to begin. No time being specified, law will imply agreement to furnish copy within reasonable time. Mail & Express Co. v. Wood [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 244, 103 N. W. 864. Where a contract for the transportation of live stock is silent as to the time and manner of performance, parol evidence is admissible to show that it was customary to transport stock amounting to ten cars or more in separate train when demanded. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Kempton [C. C. A.] 138 F. 992.

40. Where defendant denied that memorandum of sale of hops reciting consideration of $1 was ever executed or delivered as a contract, but claimed that it was signed as a part of the negotiations for the sale, which negotiations were never consummated, held, that evidence as to such negotiations and as to the amount to be paid for the hops was admissible for purpose of sustaining such contention and not incompetent as varying the terms of a written contract. Schwarz v. Lee Gon [Or.] 80 P. 110.

41. To show that building contract containing stipulation against liens, which was dated October 3d and filed October 19th, was not executed until October 18th. Cutter v. Pierson, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 10.

42. Evidence as to conversations between the parties, had on same day but after contract to furnish information as to timber and homestead locations had been entered into and information had been given, in which defendants undertook to get plaintiffs to reduce the price, held admissible in action for contract price. Cummings v. Weir, 37 Wash. 42, 79 P. 487.

43. Where company's regulations provided for special charge for delivery of telegrams beyond free limits but did not require its prepayment, held possible for parties to contract with reference to custom of company to make such deliveries without prepayment without thereby contravening the terms of the written contract of which such regulations formed a part. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bowman [Ala.] 37 So. 493. An independent oral agreement to make repairs prior to the beginning of the term, collateral to a subsequent lease under seal. Daly v. Piza, 45 Misc. 608, 90 N. Y. S. 1071. Agreement to pay it out of the first grain sold off the place. Saffer v. Lambert, 111 Ill. App. 410.

44. Minnesota Sandstone Co. v. Clark, 35 Wash. 466, 77 P. 803. Where it is claimed that permit giving telegraph company permission to locate its line where it wishes over plaintiff's property was obtained by fraud, to show verbal agreement to locate it at particular place. Mason v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 781. No person can be precluded by any contract or writing that he has been induced to enter into through fraud or deceit. Acceptance of warranty deed to property held not to preclude inquiry into fraud in original contract in pursuance to which it was taken. Rule that previous and contemporary negotiations merge in conveyance does not apply. Kroll v. Coach, 45 Or. 459, 80 P. 900. A distinct verbal agreement may be set up as a defense in an action between the parties to prevent the use of the writing to effect a fraudulent or dishonest purpose. Debtor may show prior parol agreement as to collateral held by him in action to recover it on the ground that all liability was extinguished by payment under subsequent written compromise. Corbett v. Joannes [Wis.] 104 N. W. 69. The rule that a party to a written contract seeking to vary its terms on the ground of fraud, accident, or mistake, must prove his allegations by clear, precise, and indubitable evidence does not apply to a third person alleging that it was executed for the purpose of defrauding him, but he is only obliged to prove his case by a preponderance of testimony. To be determined by jury. Meyers v. Meyers, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 603. A written agreement may be modified, explained, reformed, or set aside by parol evidence of an oral promise or undertaking material to the subject-matter of the contract made by one of the parties at the time of the execution of the writing, and which induced the other party to put his name to it. Wheatley v. Niedich, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 198. In action on agreement in writing for sale of chattel to recover deferred instalments of purchase-money secured by chattel mortgage, affidavit of defense alleging that defendant was induced to execute agreement and mortgage on promise that he should thereby incur no personal liability, held sufficient. Id. On rule to open judgment entered on judgment note it appeared that note was given for lightning rods sold under written guarantee to pay a certain sum if rods did not protect building. Defendant proved parol contemporaneous agreement that guaranty was to be put in form of insurance policies which was inducement to execution of contract. Policies were never delivered and rods were negligently constructed. Held error not to open judgment. Keeler v. De Witt, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 463. The law regards it as a fraud by ity,[46] failure of consideration,[47] or the true consideration, even though it is different from that stated,[48] that a deed absolute in form was intended as a mortgage and that it was never delivered to the grantee or accepted by him,[49] that the delivery of a deed was conditional and that the condition essential to make it absolute never arrived,[50] or to show the true relation of the parties to a note where it appears that the payee knew that certain of them signed as sureties only.[51]

The contract itself is generally admissible.[52]

In order to support a plea of failure of consideration, it is competent to prove that the notes in suit were asked for and given as a mere matter of form,[53] and the alleged purpose of the parties in giving them.[54] such means to secure an unfair advantage and subsequently to deny the parol qualification, upon the faith of which the contract was made. Wheatley v. Niedich, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 198.

45. Minnesota Sandstone Co. v. Clark, 35 Wash. 466, 77 P. 803. Where there has been a defective attempt to reduce to writing the terms of an agreement actually made, to show that fact, and to show what the true agreement was. Question whether there has been such a mistake held for jury on conflicting evidence. Contract for sale of patent medicines. Locke v. Lyon Medicine Co. [Ky.] 84 S. W. 307. Error in a written contract of sale in regard to the thing sold. Pharr v. Shadel [La.] 38 So. 914. To show that part of contract appearing below the signatures of the parties was a part of the original agreement, and that signatures had been placed above it because place for them had been arranged before that part had been added. Cox v. Burdett, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 346.

46. Minnesota Sandstone Co. v. Clark, 35 Wash. 466, 77 P. 803. To show that the writing is but a cover for usury, or a penalty or forfeiture. May be shown to be void. Civ. Code 1895, § 5203. Thus, what is called "rent" in a contract for the sale of land may be shown to be usury, unreasonable liquidated damages, or purchase money, if as purchase money it could not be retained by the vendor on rescission. Lytle v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 402.

47. For promissory note. Aultman Threshing & Engine Co. v. Knoll [Kan.] 79 P. 1074.

48. Tucker v. Dolan [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1126. Consideration for indorsement of note as between indorsee and his immediate indorser. Peabody v. Munson, 211 Ill. 324, 71 N. E. 1006. Where the consideration is expressed in money only. Contract for release of claim to fund derived from sale of realty expressing consideration of $1. Anderman v. Meier, 91 Minn. 413, 98 N. W. 327. The consideration for any written agreement, under proper allegations in the pleadings. Noyes v. Young [Mont.] 79 P. 1063. To show the real consideration for a deed (Merriman v. Schmitt, 211 Ill. 263, 71 N. E. 986), regardless of the recitals therein (Tucker v. Dolan [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1126). Grantee agreed to pay the taxes in addition to the consideration named in the deed. Henderson v. Tobey, 105 Ill. App. 154. Mere fact that consideration named in deed was natural love and affection and $1 does not estop grantee from showing by parol, as against persons claiming through sheriff's deed under judgment against the insolvent grantor, that the real consideration was a money payment equal to the value of the land. Miles v. Waggoner, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 432. Presumption is that claims assumed by grantee are part of consideration, and hence they may be identified. Gage v. Cameron, 212 Ill. 146, 72 N. E. 204, rvg. Cameron v. Sexton, 110 Ill. App. 381. For sale of standing timber, even though different from that stated. Walker v. Johnson, 116 Ill. App. 145.

49. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 95, § 12. Merriman v. Schmitt, 211 Ill. 263, 71 N. E. 986.

51. Iowa Nat. Bank v. Cooper [Iowa] 101 N. W. 459.

52. In action by broker to recover commissions for sale of land where it appears that defendant acquiesced in the terms of sale, held error to exclude contract of employment on ground that sale as made was not according to its terms. Broker must show written contract of employment to make the sale. Czarnowski v. Holland, 5 Ariz. 119, 78 P. 890. Where action is brought on common counts on contract fully performed. Evans v. Howell, 211 Ill. 85, 71 N. E. 854, afg. 111 Ill. App. 167; Risley v. Beaumont [N. J. Law] 59 A. 145. Where one sues on quantum meruit for services rendered under contract before its rescission under its terms, he must introduce contract in evidence. New Kanawha Coal & Min. Co. v. Wright, 163 Ind. 529, 72 N. E. 550. In indebitatus assumpsit on the termination of a special contract. Poland v. Thomaston F. & O. Brick Co. [Me.] 60 A. 795. In action by sisters on contract between brothers to pay them the proceeds of an insurance policy, agreement held properly admitted in evidence. Willoughby v. Willoughby [S. C.] 50 S. E. 208. In determining whether services were rendered under a written contract or under a subsequent parol modification thereof, the jury may consider the terms and provisions of the writing. Contract for architect's services. Ritchie v. State [Wash.] 81 P. 79.

53. Independent Brewing Ass'n v. Klett, 114 Ill. App. 1.

54. May show that they were given by way of guaranty that certain saloon fixtures would not be sold or removed, and that appellant's beer only would be sold. Independent Brewing Ass'n v. Klett, 114 Ill. App. 1. Does not vary or alter terms of

One's financial condition or possession of property is relevant to the question of whether he received the money or property alleged as the consideration.[55]

The performance of conditions precedent must be proved.[56]

The general rules as to the admissibility of evidence apply. Particular examples will be found in the note.[57]

note, but admissible in any event where failure of consideration is pleaded. Id. Evidence sufficient to support finding that conditions had been complied with, and hence there was a failure of consideration. Id.

55. Admissible that bank account showed no deposit corresponding to alleged loan. Wright v. Davis, 72 N. H. 448, 57 A. 335.

56. See, also, § 9A, ante. Provision that third person shall decide all questions relative to execution of contract and that his decision shall be final and binding held not condition precedent to maintenance of action on contract. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. McMahon & Montgomery Co., 110 Ill. App. 510. Where plaintiff was only entitled to recover under order accepted by defendant for iron actually used in building, the burden was on him to show delivery and progress of the work to a point where payment became due. Weber v. Farrell, 84 N. Y. S. 272. Where the bond and contract sued on are pleaded according to their legal effect, and no conditions precedent appear therein, an objection to the introduction of evidence on the ground that performance of such conditions is not alleged is untenable, in the absence of a motion to make the complaint more definite and certain. Building contract. Leghorn v. Nydell [Wash.] 80 P. 833. Where promise of secretary of navy to pay persons submitting designs for vessels depends entirely upon subsequent adoption of plans, their adoption or use must be established in order to recover. Lundborg's Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 23.

57. See, also, Evidence, 3 C. L. 1334.

As to execution of contract: Evidence held admissible. In action to recover wages which it was alleged deceased had deposited in a bank and promised to hold subject to plaintiff's order, evidence as to the property and circumstances of deceased. Tripp v. Macomber, 187 Mass. 109, 72 N. E. 361. And as to conduct of plaintiff in regard to claim after death of deceased. Id. Also declarations of testator made in his lifetime to defendant, or testator's sister, or contained in his will, under Rev. Laws, c. 175, § 67. Id. Where the plaintiff denies the existence of an express contract, evidence that the amount alleged by defendant to have been called for by the contract is the reasonable value of the work. Guglielino v. Cahill, 185 Mass. 375, 70 N. E. 435. In action on alleged oral contract by stockholder of one of two corporations, which had united to form the plaintiff company, to make good the loss resulting from the cancellation of a certain contract with it by transferring to plaintiff certain patents, evidence of defendant's representations as to the earning capacity of his company, made at the time of the consolidation. Anderson Carriage Co. v. Pungs[Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 218, 103 N. W. 839. In action for rent under written lease, where sole issue was existence of subsequent oral agreement whereby lessee was to erect building on premises and was to be allowed to set off its value against rents for last two years of term, letters written by one of the lessors to the lessee tending to prove that building was erected under some such agreement. Chamberlain v. Iba, 181 N. Y. 486, 74 N. E. 481. In action for nondelivery of cotton, option for the sale of which plaintiff had accepted by telegram, it was competent to prove the telegram by the operator at the sending office, though he was not the one who sent it, where he testified that he brought it from the office files. Blalock v. Clark, 137 N. C. 140, 49 S. E. 88.

As to terms of the contract. Evidence held admissible: On issue as to terms of contract for drawing plans for defendant's house, declarations of defendant's wife in that regard, made in his presence when the terms were being considered, coupled with his acquiescence in her wishes. Hight v. Klingensmith [Ark.] 87 S. W. 138. Where written contract is uncertain, and evidence is offered showing market price, it is not reversible error to admit testimony in rebuttal showing what a fair price would be for the particular work. Schmidt v. Turner, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 492. Memorandum of contract dictated by one party in presence of manager of the other, a corporation, a copy of which was shown to have been delivered to the latter, held admissible as an admission by such corporation in suit involving an alleged breach by it, though unsigned. Pacific Export Lumber Co. v. North Pacific Lumber Co. [Or.] 80 P. 105. In action for breach of contract whereby plaintiff was to move buildings across water on scows, where each party claimed that it was the duty of the other to procure the scows, conversations by plaintiff with scow owners relative to securing them. Anderson v. Hilker [Wash.] 80 P. 848. Under a complaint alleging merely the advancement of money to defendant for its use and benefit, a bond executed by defendant to plaintiff reciting the defendant's need of the money and the advancement of the same by plaintiff to show the nature of the transaction between the parties. Aetna Indemnity Co. v. Ladd [C. C. A.] 135 F. 636.

Evidence inadmissible: On the issue of the terms of a parol contract of employment, evidence of the terms of defendant's contracts with other employes is irrelevant. That none of them were paid commissions. Featherstone Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Criswell [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 30. In action for services as bookkeeper, entries made by plaintiff in defendant's books containing statements of third person as to his understanding of a transaction whereby a certain note was assigned by defendant to plaintiff, held hearsay. Mattingly v. Shortell [Ky.] 85 S. W. 215. On claim against an estate for board of decedent, evidence as to payment of similar claims to others held incompetent, but its admission was harm-

Variance.[58]—As in other actions, a party can recover, if at all, only on the cause of action alleged in his pleadings, and hence pleading and proof must correspond.[59] One suing on an express contract cannot recover on an implied one,[60] less. Tyndall v. Van Auken's Estate, 94 N. Y. S. 269.

Offers of compromise: Under B. & C. Comp. § 532, relating to offers to compromise, a tender by defendant which is not accepted is not an admission of the terms of the contract sued on and of the breach alleged. Young v. Stickney [Or.] 79 P. 345.

As to damages. Evidence held admissible: In action for breach of contract for sale of hides made in Detroit, trade paper showing their market value in Chicago, it having been shown that more were taken off in the latter city than in any other place in the country. Kibler v. Caplis [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 57, 103 N. W. 531. Evidence that plaintiff had to go on the market and buy cotton at an advance by reason of defendant's failure. Blalock v. Clark, 137 N. C. 140, 49 S. E. 88. In any event it was harmless where no price was given and court subsequently ruled it out upon issue of damages. Id. Where there is a dispute as to whether the work was performed under a special contract or as defendant's agent, evidence as to the reasonable value thereof. Radel v. Lesher [C. C. A.] 137 F. 719. Where jury found that recovery should be for work, labor and materials, evidence as to amount actually expended for materials held properly admitted. Id. Where defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a reasonable sum for his services, evidence as to the usual amount paid for similar services held not objectionable because failing to show any fixed custom to pay any definite price. Walker Mfg. Co. v. Knox [C. C. A.] 136 F. 334.

As to performance: Evidence admissible. In action on contract for transporting men to defendant's camp, original book in which plaintiff entered names of men shipped held admissible as book of original entries up to the time when such names were copied from the way bils. Idol v. San Francisco Const. Co. [Cal. App.] 81 P. 665. In any event its admission was harmless where plaintiff's evidence as to the number of men carried was uncontradicted. Id. In an action by a broker to recover commissions for the sale, evidence that the proposed purchaser is financially able to pay the price demanded. Czarnowski v. Holland, 5 Ariz. 119, 78 P. 890. Letters of plaintiff and his agents and evidence that other letters were written to refute defendant's evidence that plaintiff had done nothing in matter of procuring certain government contracts. Parke & Lacy Co. v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 145 Cal. 534, 78 P. 1065. In action for breach of contract to convey land, deeds and correspondence from owner and third persons, to show defendant's ability to give title and disprove allegations of bad faith. Hardman v. Kelley [S. D.] 104 N. W. 272. In action for nondelivery of cotton, it is competent for plaintiff to testify that he was prepared to pay for it when he went to get it. Blalock v. Clark, 137 N. C. 140, 49 S. E. 88.

Evidence inadmissible: Where subscription to extension of railroad merely required that it should be of standard gauge, and built of new material, and provided that it should be payable when road was completed to certain town and first train was run thereon, if done before a certain date, evidence as to whether railroad had any interest in said town (Doherty v. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899), as to whether it put in ties after completion of the road, and as to the schedule and speed of trains (Id.), and as to whether it worked on the track after the specified date, held immaterial (Id.). Evidence as to acceptance of proposition and commencement of work after deposit of subscription, held admissible. Id. Evidence that first class steel was subsequently replaced properly stricken because not showing who made the change. Id. Letters complaining of difficulties interposed by defendant to the completion of the contract are incompetent in an action on the contract, because if the things complained of were prejudicial to plaintiff and were the acts of defendant, proving them is enough. Inman Mfg. Co. v. American Cereal Co., 124 Iowa, 737, 100 N. W. 860. They are also incompetent where previous difficulties have been waived by an extension of the time for completion. Id. In action to recover contract price for water furnished to a borough for a particular period, evidence as to the condition of the water company's reservoir and the sufficiency of its water supply at a time subsequent to such period. Ephiata Water Co. v. Ephiata Borough, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 353.

As to payment: In action for services rendered deceased, deed executed by him to plaintiff long prior thereto and inferentially shown to have been based on a different consideration, held inadmissible. Birch v. Birch [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 1106. Held no evidence to show payment for goods purchased for defendant by plaintiff which defendant admitted that he had received. Carter & Co. v. Weber [Mich.] 101 N. W. 818.

Miscellaneous evidence: In action for money paid under debenture contract, rescinded because of its breach by defendant, held proper to refuse to allow inquiry as to what had been done with monthly payments received by defendant thereunder. McDonald v. Pacific Debenture Co., 146 Cal. 667, 80 P. 1090. In action on contract whereby wife agreed to pay judgment against her husband, evidence that execution was subsequently levied on certain land of husband held irrelevant. Atlanta Suburban Land Corp. v. Austin [Ga.] 50 S. E. 124.

Dickey [Ga.] 50 S. E. 178. Evidence in action to recover balance claimed to be due on sale of business held to justify verdict for defendant. Id. A petition alleging that a contract between three parties on one side and one on the other is invalid, and praying that the entire contract be set aside and canceled, is not supported by evidence that it was invalid as to only two of the three contracting parties. Barlow v. Strange, 120 Ga. 1015, 48 S. E. 344. Cannot set up forbearance to sue as consideration for agreement of third person not to sue, where different consideration is alleged. Gilman v. Ferguson, 116 Ill. App. 347. In action for contract price of brick, evidence that buyer was unable to pay for those furnished because of his financial condition held inadmissible, there being no such issue in the case. Iowa Brick Mfg. Co. v. Herrick, 126 Iowa, 721, 102 N. W. 787. There is no material variance between an allegation that a contract was entered into between two creditors and the heirs of a decedent and proof that it was entered into by the creditors and afterwards ratified by the heirs. Stewart v. Rogers [Kan.] 80 P. 58. No variance between an allegation of an unconditional promise to pay and proof of a promise to pay when able. Mattingly v. Shortell [Ky.] 85 S. W. 215. In action on notes guaranteed by defendant and given for fertilizer, plaintiff is not entitled to claim that the report of the analysis of the fertilizer by the agricultural experiment station is the only competent evidence of its quality, where it fails to allege that it has complied with the statute requiring such analysis, and under such circumstances testimony of persons who have purchased the fertilizer is admissible as to its quality. Hardy Packing Co. v. Sprigg [Ky.] 84 S. W. 532. Where defendant gives notice of recoupment based on breaches of the contract, evidence as to alleged fraudulent representations leading to its making is inadmissible. Mail & Express Co. v. Wood [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 244, 103 N. W. 864. In action to recover overcharges on shipment of ties, where plaintiff counted on a contract for the transportation of "lumber," he was entitled to recover only for a breach of such contract, and a recovery could not be had on the ground that defendant embraced ties in the word "lumber" in its published tariff sheets and thereby expressly or impliedly agreed that they would be carried at lumber rates, though the classification might assist plaintiffs in showing that ties were among the articles called lumber, and hence that agreement to carry lumber at specified rate was agreement to carry ties. Instruction held erroneous. Greason v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 722. Opinion of interstate commerce commission that ties should be put in same classification as lumber held irrelevant and prejudicial. Id. Where complaint alleged and evidence showed that defendant accepted deed under agreement that he should pay plaintiff any surplus remaining on sale of the property after deducting the amount of a debt owing him by plaintiff and any taxes he might pay, and that there was a surplus remaining after such sale, which plaintiff sought to recover, his action was at law, and it was error to allow him to recover on theory that defendant was a mortgagee in possession and liable to account for rents and profits. Johnson v. Stephens, 107 Mo. App. 629, 82 S. W. 192. One pleading performance of all the conditions of the contract on his part cannot recover on proof showing a waiver of some of them. Contract to haul logs. Young v. Stickney [Or.] 79 P. 345. Plaintiff must set out in his declaration the whole of his contract and his proof will be limited to his allegations. If evidence discloses fact that he has not done so, it will be stricken as being at variance with his allegations. Carpenter & Co. v. Vulcanite Portland Cement Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 75. It cannot be said that there is a variance because the writing offered in support of the contract declared on also contains words not pleaded, if they do not in themselves alter the meaning of the words pleaded. Id. Where plaintiff declares on contract based on telegram letter of same date containing copy of telegram which was the same as that set out in the declaration except that it contained the additional words "letter received" held admissible, since they did not alter effect of defendant's offer. Id. The fact that the contract declared on and established by plaintiffs is not the whole of the contract between the parties is a matter of defense. Defendant cannot complain as long as plaintiff's evidence tends to prove the contract pleaded and does not disclose any other. Id. In action of trespass on the case in assumpsit allegations in bill of particulars indicating contract between plaintiff and defendant and its breach, held not supported by evidence that defendant merely prevented a third person from performing a contract with plaintiff, to which defendant was not a party. Plaintiff's remedy is in action of trespass on the case. Feamster v. Feamster [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 238. Evidence held to show contract for plaintiff's services in securing other contracts which were made by correspondence in February as alleged, though consummation of scheme was postponed until September. for the court,[64] but when its language is indefinite or ambiguous, or it is averred that some provision was, by mistake, left out of it and parol evidence is admitted to explain what the parties intended, it is for the jury to determine its meaning from the evidence.[65] So, too, where its terms are definitely known, the interpretation of an oral contract is for the court,[66] but on conflicting evidence it is for the jury to determine both the existence of the agreement [67] and what its terms really were.[68] Where the contract consists both of oral negotiations and subsequent correspondence, it is for the court to instruct the jury as to the effect of the writing

Lyon Medicine Co. [Ky.] 84 S. W. 307. It is for the court to say what is meant by a word in a written contract used, as far as appears, in its ordinary, instead of a technical or trade sense, or a peculiar one adopted by the parties. Greason v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 86 S. W. 722. Error to leave question to jury where meaning is free from doubt. Grueber Engineering Co. v. Waldron [N. J. Err. & App.] 60 A. 386. In assumpsit, where there is no substantial dispute as to the facts but the case turns on the construction of a written contract, it is proper for the court to enter judgment without the intervention of a jury. Continental Title & Trust Co. v. Devlin, 209 Pa. 380, 58 A. 843.

65. Locke v. Lyon Medicine Co. [Ky.] 84 S. W. 307. Held error for court to assume that contract for sale of patent medicine required seller's agent to go over territory but once, and then only to introduce goods. Id. Letters held not to so clearly express the terms of a contract employing plaintiff as salesman as to make it error for the court to refuse to treat them as embodying the whole contract or to charge the jury as to their purport and meaning. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899. Whether tenant's wife cared for room occupied by landlord under agreement between latter and tenant that it should be cared for in payment of the rent, or under an independent agreement between herself and the landlord. Kennedy v. Swisher, 34 Ind. App. 676, 73 N. E. 724. Whether a certain person was plaintiff's agent and accepted defendant's offer in regard to an advertising contract. Mail & Express Co. v. Wood [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 244, 103 N. W. 864. Whether new contract was made between defendant and plaintiff, independent from that between plaintiff and the contractor, whereby plaintiff was to furnish defendant with material previously ordered by contractor. Spring Brook Lumber Co. v. Watkins, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 199. Whether conversations over telephone in relation to purchase and sale of copper wire, supplemented by subsequent written order, constituted a contract, in view of the custom of the trade and the course of dealing between the parties, or whether acceptance of offer was not to be binding until submitted to main office, and whether agent had authority to make contract. Direction of verdict at close of plaintiff's evidence held error. Monarch Elec. & Wire Co. v. National Conduit & Cable Co. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 18. Question whether there was an oral contract between two railroads for the use of each other's tracks and what were its terms, and its validity held for court where there was no conflict. Looney v. Metropolitan R. Co., 24 App. D. C. 510.

68. Terms of oral contract for drawing plans for house. Hight v. Klingensmith [Ark.] 87 S. W. 138. Question whether, under contract of hiring, the work at which plaintiff was engaged when injured was within the scope of his employment. Annadall v. Union Cement & Lime Co. [Ind.] 74 N. E. 893. leaving it to them to determine whether a contract, and if so what contract, was made by the negotiations and the writings taken together.[69]

What is a reasonable time for the acceptance of an offer,[70] except where the time is so reasonable or unreasonable as to leave no doubt in regard to the matter,[71] whether an offer was accepted before it expired,[72] whether work was done under an express contract or under the general authority of an agent,[73] whether the contract is severable or entire,[74] whether the contract was modified,[75] abandoned,[76] or rescinded,[77] whether the rescission was promptly made,[78] whether the contract has been performed,[79] whether performance was prevented by plaintiff,[80] whether performance has been accepted,[81] what is a reasonable time in which to perfom [82] or to accept performance,[83] and the reasonable value of services rendered,[84] are questions for the jury on conflicting evidence.

Judgment, verdict, and findings.[85]—A ruling on demurrer as to the validity of the contract in suit is not conclusive under the evidence introduced on the trial before another judge at a subsequent term.[86]

The court having found that defendant fully performed his contract so that an action to rescind it would not lie, a failure to find upon defendant's assurances that he was ready to carry out the contract is immaterial.[87]

70. Where the answer to the question depends on many different circumstances, which do not continually recur in other cases of like character, and with respect to which no certain rule of law could be laid down. Question held for the jury. Boyd v. Merchants' & Farmers' Peanut Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 199.

71. In such commercial transactions as happen in the same way, day after day, and present the question upon the same data in continually recurring instances, and where the time is so clearly reasonable or unreasonable that there can be no doubt in regard to the matter. CONTRIBUTION.

§ 1. General principles.[88]—Contribution is the right of a joint debtor paying more than his share to be reimbursed by his co-debtors thereby benefited.[89] It does not exist where the payor is secured by his principal,[90] or where he could not have been compelled to pay,[91] or where he pays only his proportionate share of the indebtedness.[92]

§ 2. As between joint tort feasors and persons in particular relations.[93]—No obligation in contribution arises in favor of one joint wrongdoer as against another where the former has been compelled to pay damages for the joint wrong,[94] except where the joint tort feasor agrees to bear equal proportions of the damages.[95] Accommodation indorsers may have contribution between themselves.[96] The devisees of a deceased person may be called upon for contribution by one of them paying the debts of the estate.[97] A tenant in common in possession paying off a recorded mortgage is entitled to bring an action for contribution against a bona fide purchaser of his co-tenant's interest at an execution sale,[98] and it would seem that where persons were engaged in a joint venture that the right of contribution existed between them.[99] No action lies where two persons at a judicial sale purchased two separate parcels both covered by a common incumbrance.[100]

88. See 3 C. L. 865.

89. One who with others executes a note is liable in contribution for an excess paid by his co-surety regardless of whether they are joint makers or co-sureties. Wilks v. Vaughan [Ark.] 83 S. W. 913. Where one surety pays the entire debt of both, the other is liable to him for his share thereof. Wash v. Sullivan & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 368; Strickler v. Gitchel, 14 Okl. 523, 78 P. 94. A joint maker cannot compel another to contribute toward payment of any portion of a debt for which he was primarily liable. Saulsberry v. Saulsberry, 26 Ky. L. R. 735, 82 S. W. 415. Where one of the persons liable is insolvent, the loss is to be apportioned among the solvent sureties. Id.

91. Surety paying debt barred by statute of limitations cannot recover in contribution. Saulsberry v. Saulsberry, 26 Ky. L. R. 735, 82 S. W. 415.

92. Where one surety pays the entire note and the other relying on the assurance of the creditor that nothing has been paid pays to him his proportionate part, he cannot recover it back from the creditor. Wash v. Sullivan & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 84 S. W. 368.

A terminal company held jointly liable with a railroad for neglect to discover a defective brake, on payment of all the damages cannot compel the railroad to contribute any portion thereof. Union Stock Yards Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 196 U. S. 217, 49 Law. Ed. 453.

95. Southwest Missouri Elec. R. Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 300, 85 S. W. 966. Or where the party so paying had no notice to guard against the accident and the other was the last wrong-doer. Robertson v. Trammell [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 258.

96. Stockholders who endorsed for accommodation of the corporation held sureties entitled to contribution. Kellogg v. Lopez, 145 Cal. 497, 78 P. 1056.

97. Where a widow takes a devise in lieu of dower, she can be compelled to contribute to the heirs and devisees on account of debts of her deceased husband paid by them. Ohio Rev. St. § 5973. Allen v. Tressenrider [Ohio St.] 73 N. E. 1015. After closing an estate the executor cannot recover in contribution from other distributees of an estate money expended by him for counsel fees, for a matter purely between the executor in his representative capacity and the estate, and should have been included in his final account. Blair v. Blair, 97 App. Div. 507, 90 N. Y. S. 190. Where a decedent leaves three tracts of real estate of which two are mortgaged, the mortgaged debt should be apportioned against the two mortgaged estates. Hogg v. Rose, 94 N. Y. S. 914.

99. Where parties engaged in the business of pooling corporations, they have a right to an accounting and distribution of

§ 3. Proceedings to enforce.[101]—The right as between co-obligors rests not on the contract which they assume but on a collateral contract implied between them.[102] Where sureties stand as such not only in equity but also in law, assumpsit lies,[103] but the paying surety cannot take an assignment and bring assumpsit on the original obligation[104] except to recover from a co-surety the proportion which he owes as his share primarily.[105] A court of equity can wind up the affairs of a partnership and decree contribution among the parties thereto,[106] but the right cannot be enforced by a decree or suit until after a final accounting.[107]

The burden of proving joint liability is upon the person seeking to recover,[108] and is a question for the jury.[109] In an action by one surety against another, the whole amount of principal and interest paid on behalf of the defendant may be recovered together with interest on the entire sum from the date of such payment.[110] While the holder of a note made out in blank may have authority to insert the name of the payee, this does not extend to one of the joint sureties in an action against another for contribution.[111] The statute of limitations runs from the time of payment by the party and not on the original obligation or judgment.[112] earnings. Hart v. Sickles, 45 Misc. 174, 91 N. Y. S. 897.

102. Sherling v. Long [Ga.] 50 S. E. 935.

103, 104, 105. Three stockholders made a note payable to one of their number and indorsed for accommodation of their corporation. The payee paid it and took an assignment. Kellogg v. Lopez, 145 Cal. 497, 78 P. 1056.

NOTE. Remedy at law or in equity: "The right to sue in equity for contribution was formerly an established head of chancery jurisdiction (Couch v. Terry, 12 Ala. 225); but courts of law have now adopted it (Jeffries v. Ferguson, 87 Mo. 244; Weidenmeyer v. Landon, 66 Mo. App. 520; Hanna v. Hyatt, 67 Mo. App. 308). And see Soule v. Frost, 76 Me. 119. Courts of equity have not, however, been ousted of their jurisdiction in matters of this kind on account of the assumption thereof by the law courts, but their jurisdiction is now considered concurrent. Thomas v. Hearn, 2 Port. [Ala.] 262; Chipman v. Morrill, 20 Cal. 130; Mitchell v. Sproul, 28 Ky. 264; Craig v. Ankeny, 4 Gill [Md.] 225; Owens v. Collinson, 3 Gill & J. [Md.] 25; McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 Mich. 476; Walker v. Cheever, 35 N. H. 339; Williams v. Craig, 2 Edw. Ch. [N. Y.] 297; Rindge v. Baker, 57 N. Y. 209, 15 Am. Rep. 475; Boyer v. Marshall, 8 N. Y. St. Rep. 233; Glasscock v. Hamilton, 62 Tex. 143; Mateer v. Cockrill, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 45 S. W. 751.

The common remedy at law in an action for contribution is assumpsit. Taylor v. Reynolds, 53 Cal. 686; Bailey v. Bussing, 29 Conn. 1; Carroll v. Bowie, 7 Gill [Md.] 34; Van Petten v. NOTE. Nature of the Action: "It becomes necessary to determine the nature of the action in order to apply the appropriate statute thereto. Where one joint debtor pays a note, and then sues for contribution, the cause of action is based on an implied contract of the other to repay, and is governed accordingly by the statute of limitations: Sexton v. Sexton, 35 Ind. 88; Faires v. Cockerell, 88 Tex. 428, 31 S. W. 190, 28 L. R. A. 528, rvg. 29 S. W. 669. But see Murphy v. Gage [Tex. Civ. App.] 21 S. W. 396, holding that where one joint and several obligor paid off a note, he was subrogated to the rights of the payee as against his co-obligors, and his cause of action was founded on a written instrument. "Laches may bar the right of one co-obligor to contribution from another: Doughty v. Bacot, 2 Desaus. [S. C.] 546; but if the lapse of time has not worked a bar, mere passiveness in asserting his rights cannot prejudice him. Owen v. McGehee, 61 Ala. 440." —From note to Stockwell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. CONVERSION AS TORT.

§ 1. What constitutes.[1]—Generally speaking, every act of dominion over personal property in violation of the owner's right is a conversion.[2] It has been said to be any unauthorized act which permanently deprives a man of his property.[3] There must be some unlawful act either of taking [4] or of detention,[5] and the detention must be wrongful [6] and unequivocal,[7] such as a wrongful disposition of goods by a bailee [8] or pledge;[9] but storing goods in a warehouse by a lessor when lessee refuses to take them away or receive them is not a conversion.[10] An unauthorized attachment [11] or sale [12] is conversion, and the purchaser is equally liable therefor.[13] The refusal of a corporation to transfer stock, asserting its right to

2. Custodian forbade owner to take his property. Lucas v. Sheridan [Wis.] 102 N. W. 1077. Refusal of agent to surrender "privileges" held for certain purpose, but used in violation of orders, held conversion. Vroom v. Sage, 100 App. Div. 285, 91 N. Y. S. 456.

Code of Montana makes a sale by one partner of all partnership property unlawful. Buyers under such circumstances are guilty of conversion. Doll v. Hennessy Mercantile Co. [Mont.] 81 P. 625. Melting metal owned by plaintiff held to be a conversion. Great Western Smelting & Refining Co. v. Evening News Ass'n [Mich.] 102 N. W. 286. But it is not conversion by a vendor if he sells property to which he is to retain a title until purchase price is paid if there is a default in payment. Scaling v. First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 715.

5. When property comes lawfully into possession of defendant, mere nonfeasance will not be sufficient to constitute conversion. Andrews v. Carl [Vt.] 59 A. 167. Simply detention of goods by mortgagor is not conversion of them. Shelton v. Holzwasser, 91 N. Y. S. 328. Refusal by a lessor or custodian to allow the removal of property. Miller v. Hennessy, 94 N. Y. S. 563; Lucas v. Sheridan [Wis.] 102 N. W. 1077.

6. But retention of property by a carrier for charges for storage after arrival. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Propst Lumber Co., 114 Ill. App. 659.

7. Mere delay in sending a notice of consignee's refusal to accept the consigned goods is not. Fishman v. Platt, 90 N. Y. S. 354. But a shipment of goods by the carrier as unclaimed property for the purpose of selling the same within less than six months after their arrival is a tort. Georgia, So. & F. R. Co. v. Johnson, King & Co., 121 Ga. 231, 48 S. E. 807. Assertion by carrier that goods are lost, is not. Goldbowitz v. Metropolitan Exp. Co., 91 N. Y. S. 318. A sale by a vendee before he acquires title is conversion. Wesoloski v. Wysoski, 186 Mass. 495, 71 N. E. 982. After a trade of pianos has been agreed upon and one of them delivered, conversion cannot be brought for a refusal to redeliver the same although plaintiff does not deliver so as to consummate the agreement. Forbes v. Rogers [Ala.] 38 So. 843. Denial of possession of the owner's goods. Lorain Steel Co. v. Norfolk & B. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 73 N. E. 646. Mere assertion of title insufficient. Brown v. cancel the same,[14] or a wrongful change of registered bonds to bonds payable to bearer is a conversion.[15]

§ 2. Property subject to conversion.[16]—Realty is not subject to conversion,[17] but any personal property[18] of value[19] is.

§ 3. Elements necessary to maintain the action.[20]—As a general rule, to maintain trover the plaintiff must have legal title;[21] but a beneficiary of an insurance policy may sue,[22] and one having possession and claiming a lien on property may also bring an action for its conversion.[23] Some cases hold that bare possession is sufficient to enable the plaintiff to maintain replevin or trover against a mere stranger to the property.[24]

Immediate right of possession and ownership[25] of property at the time of the conversion are necessary in order to recover.[26] If plaintiff sues in conversion he must show that he is entitled to possession or is the owner of the property.[27]

Demand and refusal[28] are evidences of conversion.[29] If original taking is wrongful, plaintiff can maintain trover without demand;[30] if lawful, demand is necessary,[31] unless it in some way appears that a demand would have been futile.[32]

25. See 3 C. L. 869.

26. Trover for shares of stock. Title had passed to defendant. Newman v. Mercantile Trust Co. [Mo.] 88 S. W. 6. Where a mortgagor has lost his right to possession on default of payment, and possession is in the mortgagee, the former cannot maintain the action of trover. John O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson [Wis.] 101 N. W. 1050. In Texas a mortgagee may maintain an action against one who wrongfully converts the property, whether he is entitled to immediate possession or not. The tort feasor is charged with notice of plaintiff's right, although conversion takes place in another state. Sceebing v. First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 715. A trespasser who plants a crop cannot harvest it when another has rightful possession. The one in possession may maintain action of conversion if property is taken. Stebbins v. Demorest [Mich.] 101 N. W. 528. Redemption is necessary to deprive a pledgee of the right of possession. Pledgee cannot recover and own above loan. Brown v. Leary, 100 App. Div. 421, 91 N. Y. S. 463.

30. Zorger v. Selicovitz, 115 Ill. App. 37; Morley v. Roach, 116 Ill. App. 534.

31. Mortgagee of property acquiring rightful possession can sell same without a tender for and own due or demand for return of property. Shelton v. Holzzwasser, 91 N. Y. S. 328. Landlord holding a part of crop for tenant's widow is liable after demand and refusal. Parker v. Brown, 136 N. C. 280, 48 S. E. 657. A pledgee of property is entitled to demand. Scrivner v. Woodward, 139 Cal. 314, 73 P. 863. Possession was rightful. Demand necessary. Hitchcock v. Wimpleberg, 92 N. Y. 997. Where goods are delivered or sale on approval, demand must be shown. Possession after demand justifies conclusion of refusal. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kauffman & Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 659.

32. Remark made by appellant in mag-

When demand is necessary it must sufficiently comply with the law.[33] The party who makes a demand must have authority to do so.[34]

Right to maintain and persons liable.[35]—A beneficiary of an insurance policy may maintain trover against an insurance company for conversion by the agent of the latter.[36] Action may be brought by a trustee in bankruptcy.[37] An attaching creditor of the morgtagor is liable in trover when he takes from the mortgagee property in the latter's possession.[38] Although a vendor owns a fourth of the property sold by him, the owner of the remainder can recover from the vendee.[39] An agister having a lien superior to a prior mortgager may recover from an innocent commission merchant who sells property for the mortgagor.[40] An owner of property may maintain an action of trover against a purchaser of property levied on, although he has failed to file a claim on the property.[41]

When a statute of a state provides that one partner cannot sell all of partnership property, a purchaser acquires no title regardless of good faith.[42] If timber cut is to be property of vendor if not removed by a certain date, after failure to remove, the vendor cannot sue the former for converting the same.[43] A crop planted by a trespasser cannot be harvested by him when another has lawful possession.[44]

One cannot sue in trover on theory that he is the owner and subsequently sue on contract as if title had passed.[45] A party cannot maintain both trespass and trover or replevin.[46] When goods have been sold the plaintiff may waive the tort and bring an action for money had and received.[47] Although plaintiff had elected to bring action for conversion, he may under Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, prove a debt originating upon an open account or upon a contract express or implied.[48]

adopting the issuance and execution of an illegal writ is liable to owner of property for wrongful seizure.[50]

§ 4. Defenses.[51]—Defendant may plead title in himself [52] or title in a third person unless he obtained possession under plaintiff.[53] Condemnation of property by board of health excuses a defendant from liability for conversion.[54] An offer to return the goods [55] or to substitute like property instead of that converted is not a defense but may be evidence to show mistake and disprove conversion.[56] A tender of property to constitute a defense must be made before a complaint demanding "money judgment or property" is amended so as to demand only a money judgment.[57] Consent to an alleged wrongful sale will prevent recovery; [58] but failure to object at the time of the wrongful appropriation will not preclude him from asserting his legal rights.[59] Whether an acceptance of part payment by a principal from his agent constitutes a waiver is a question of fact.[60] When a mortgagor has agreed to accept surplus arising from a sale, trover cannot be maintained by alleging the sale to be wrongful.[61] A plea of infancy is a good defense in an action in the form of conversion, if the fraud originated in a contract.[62]

§ 5. Practice and procedure.[63]—When defendant comes into possession lawfully, the statute of limitations runs from time of demand and refusal.[64]

Parties.[65]

The complaint.[66]—A complaint need not allege the particulars of a lien,[67] nor the value of the property,[68] but it must allege ownership or right to possession.[69] The complaint need not allege a tender of payment for repairs in addition to allegation of unlawful refusal to surrender the propery,[70] but such allegation of tender has been held necessary where property has been pledged.[71] An allegation of a conversion on a certain date will admit evidence of conversion several months

69. Suit brought by one of partners for conversion of partnership funds. No allegation of accounting was made. This too is necessary. Riddell v. Ramsey [Mont.] 78 P. 597. A complaint alleging ownership but failing to allege right to possession is not subject to an attack for the first time by an assignment of errors on appeal for such failure. Crystal Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Marion Gas Co. [Ind.] 74 N. E. 15. Plaintiff must allege title. Vinson v. Knight [N. C.] 49 S. E. 891.

70. Alling v. Weissman [Conn.] 59 A. 419.

71. Plaintiff is not entitled to recover amount that property is worth above loan previous.[72] A conversion by demand and refusal can be shown under an allegation of conversion by sale.[73] If a complaint can be construed as a contract or tort, the latter will prevail.[74] In the note different constructions are referred to.[75]

The answer or plea.[76]—An answer alleging infancy is a sufficient defense if the fraud originated in a contract.[77] Under a general denial, defendant is permitted to show title in another.[78] A refusal to allow an amendment to an answer when defendant would still be liable is not error.[79] Where conversion is denied by answer, consent to an alleged wrongful sale may be shown.[80]

Proof.[81]—Burden to establish conversion,[82] to show the amount of loss,[83] and to prove ownership of property at time of conversion, is on the plaintiff.[84] Burden is on a carrier to establish that loss was without negligence.[85] When a statute provides that innocent purchaser for value acquires a good title unless a conditional sale is recorded, burden of proof is on plaintiff to show lack of good faith when the contract is not of record.[86] If defendant is permitted to lessen amount of damages by proof of unintentional conversion, burden of proof is on him.[87] Plaintiff must prove conversion [88] as well as ownership,[89] right to possession,[90] and value.[91] To prove conversion by mortgagee in possession, proof of payment or release of mortgage is necessary.[92] When there is failure of proof plaintiff cannot recover.[93] To show title something more than proof of a parol agreement to will real estate and personalty is necessary.[94] It is not necessary to prove that defendant was in possession at the time of filing the suit.[95]

CONVERSION IN EQUITY.

§ 1. Definition and nature of doctrine.[97]—Equitable conversion is a change of property from realty into personalty or from personalty into realty presumed by construction or intendment of equity to have taken place, though it has not in fact.[98] The basis of the doctrine is the maxim that equity regards that as done which ought to be done.[99]

§ 2. How effected.[1]—The doctrine is applicable to wills, conveyances to trustees, marriage settlements, contract for the sale of land, and to realty belonging to a partnership.[2]

By will.[3]—The most usual application of the rule is found in the case of a devise of realty to trustees with a direction to sell the same and distribute the proceeds among designated beneficiaries, or a bequest of personalty with directions to convert it into realty,[4] and where such direction is found, equity will regard the subject of the gift as that species of property into which it is directed to be converted.[5] The question whether a conversion takes place in such case is one of intention,[6] the doctrine being applicable only in furtherance of testator's intention, and never to defeat it.[7]

To constitute a conversion it must be the duty of the grantee of the power to sell in any event,[8] a mere unexecuted discretionary power,[9] or a power to sell if necessary to pay testator's debts being insufficient.[10] There must either be a positive direction to sell,[11] or the will must disclose a clear intention that a sale shall take place.[12] An intention to convert will be implied where the executor or trustee is authorized to sell, and there is an absolute necessity for so doing in order to carry out the provisions of the will.[13]

The conversion takes place only for the purposes for which it is authorized, and, in so far as such purposes do not extend or do not take effect, the property is regarded as remaining in its original condition and passes accordingly.[14]

Neither the lapse of one of the legacies to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale,[15] nor the assignment by a legatee of his interest to the executor, prevents a conversion.[16]

As a general rule the conversion is to be considered as having been effected on the death of the testator,[17] even though the sale is postponed,[18] or the time of sale is made discretionary with the executor;[19] but a discretionary power of sale does not work a conversion until the sale takes place.[20]

§ 3. Reconversion.[21]—Before there has been any actual change in the property, there may be a reconversion, which takes place when the direction to convert is countermanded by the persons entitled to the property.[22] In order to work a reconversion, all the parties beneficially interested must, by some explicit and binding action, direct that no actual conversion shall take place, and elect to take the property in its original form.[23] Such an election, if properly made, extinguishes the power of sale under the will, and entitles the beneficiaries and their grantees to hold the property as it is.[24] In case the beneficiaries are all sui juris, the election may be made by deed in which all join, or by answer expressly stating that the parties desire to hold the land as it is, or partly by deed and partly by answer.[25] If some of them are infants, an election cannot be made either by or for them except by sanction and order of the court after due inquiry.[26]

§ 4. Effect of conversion.[27]—A direction in a will to change property from real to personal will have the effect, in equity, of changing the legal character at once, and the will should be construed as one of personalty only.[28] Gifts of the proceeds will be regarded as bequests of personalty,[29] and distribution should be made on the theory that the donation was made in money in the first instance.[30] The land will also be considered as personalty for the purpose of devolution and transfer,[31] and the beneficiaries have no interest in the realty as such, and cannot sell, convey, mortgage, or devise it.[32]

Where the proceeds of the sale are only partially disposed of in fulfillment of the purposes for which it was made, the surplus passes as money.[33]

CONVICTS.[1]

Only prisoners convicted of a violation of penal laws can be condemned to involuntary servitude.[2] One sentenced to hard labor cannot be detained an unreasonable length of time before commencing service of his sentence.[3] A convict cannot be deprived of substantial rights by an ex post facto law,[4] and in Kansas one under sentence of death is not rendered incapable of managing his estate.[5] A life convict is not disqualified as a witness.[6] A convict leased out by the state does not assume the risks of employment which a free man engaging therein would be charged with having assumed,[7] but he cannot voluntarily incur unnecessary risks,[8] Nor is there any liability if he sustains injury as the result of an accident.[9] An escaped convict is entitled to the benefit of his contracts up to the time of his re-

COPYRIGHTS.

Acquisition, extent and loss of copyright.[14]—A photograph contains such expression of idea, thought or conception as to be susceptible of copyright,[15] and a combination of separate pictures taken at different times and which connectedly tell a story likewise is.[16] Multicolored pictures impressed from plates of metal, each carrying one color, are prints and not "chromos or lithographs" [17] and are copyrightable, though not from plates made in this country.[18] The "Interim Copyright Act" for the protection of foreign publications exhibited at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition does not protect a foreign publication previously published in this country.[19] The notice prescribed by statute must at least in all substantial particulars be followed.[20]

10. Where he engages as a seaman but is injured and leaves the service before the expiration of the term of his shipment. McCarron v. Dominion Atlantic R. Co., 134 F. 762.

NOTE. The right of a convict to contract: A distinction was early made between the rights of one under attainder of treason or felony and one civilly dead. A person attainted was at times spoken of as "civiliter mortus" (Bullock v. Dodds, 2 B. & Al. 258), but the results of such attaint were not the same as the results of civil death. The latter term was synonymous to natural death and was strictly confined to cases of persons banished, or abjured the realm, or who had entered the church (Platner v. Sherwood, 6 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 118). Certain proprietary rights were preserved to a man attainted. He did not forfeit his freehold so long as he lived until office found or entry by the king. Doe v. Pritchard, 5 B. & A. 765; Avery v. Everett, 110 N. Y. 317, 6 Am. St. Rep. 368, 1 L. R. A. 264. Until this entry was made, a grant by one under attainder bound all persons, but the king and the lord, of whom the lands were held. Sheppard's Touchstone, 231; Perkins' Profitable Book, 62. Likewise where the forfeiture of the estate was limited to the lifetime of the one attainted, the remainder of the estate could be devised by the felon. Rankin's Heirs v. Executors, 6 T. B. Mon. [Ky.] 531, 17 Am. Dec. 161.

It seems perfectly clear that the rights to personal safety of the one attainted were inviolated. He was not absolutely at the disposal of the crown, for until execution, the creditors had an interest in his person for securing their debts and after pardon granted, he could bring an action for personal injuries received during imprisonment. See Ramsay v. MacDonald, Foster's Crown Cas. 62, note. Whether his contract rights were preserved is not so clear. It is intimated that an attainted person could make a valid contract, although perhaps unable to enforce contracts at the time. Kynnaird v. Leslie, L. R. I. C. P. 389. This question has recently been passed upon by the Federal district court in Massachusetts as one of novel impression. A convict who had escaped was allowed to recover, after his subsequent recapture and service of sentence, upon his contract made during the period of his escape. McCarron v. Dominion Atlantic R. Co., 134 F. 762. In the eyes of the law, a convict's disqualifications attach the moment sentence is passed and continue wherever he may go by authority or by his own escape. Miller v. Finkle, 1 Park. Cr. R. 374; Ruggin's Case, 21 Grat. [Va.] 790. No distinction can, therefore, be drawn between the contractual rights of an escaped convict and one who is still incarcerated. In the light of the decision in the principal case, a convict's position today would seem to be analogous to that of one under attainder rather than one civilly dead. In the absence of a statute expressly making his contracts void, cf. 33 & 34 Vict., c. 23, his right to contract would seem to survive, although his remedy is temporarily suspended, and upon the ceasing of the disability, the remedy is itself restored.—5 Columbia L. R. 468.

Publishers cannot by a printed notice (following copyright notice) restrict the dealer's license to sell below a fixed price books in which the publisher reserves no property or control.[21] A dealer purchasing such a book for resale is not a licensee or agent[22] and reselling below price was not within Rev. St. U. S. § 4964,[23] nor is the marketing of such books by the publisher, subject to such restriction, a mere license, but a sale.[24] A restrictive condition as to the retail price does not constitute a limitation of the retailer's title,[25] and where books were purchased at the full price demanded and were sold at a loss, there was no infringement, though the resale was at less than the price fixed by the publisher.[26]

At common law property in intellectual productions is lost by publication.[27] Exhibition of a painting in a gallery admission to which is limited and without permission to copy is not a free publication.[28] On the question of free publication, evidence that it was in a gallery and subject to certain restrictions is admissible.[29]

Assignments and royalty contracts.—An assignment to a publisher for publication on royalty with conditions against further transfer and for a reversion is a personal engagement of the publisher.[30] When assigned absolutely, a copyright is property transmutable to the assignee's trustee in bankruptcy.[31] A privilege of revoking a license for nonpayment of royalties may be exercised, even though tardiness of the licensee's agent was the only reason for delay in payment.[32] Acceptance of royalties in arrear does not reinstate a contract of license forfeited for nonpayment.[33]

Infringement.[34]—The use of a compiled work as a guide to original sources is not improper,[35] and one who has followed up such information and found it to be correct may publish it, though it is the same as that in a competing work.[36] He may work by taking memoranda from a copyrighted work and on investigation terpolation of the word "published." Hills & Co. v. Hoover, 136 F. 701.

Note: This is decided on the authority of Hills & Co. v. Austrich, 120 F. 862, which held that this notice was "good within the rule" in Bolles v. Outing Co., 77 F. 966, 46 L. R. A. 712. But Bolles v. Outing Co., simply held that a notice was not bad which omitted the initials of the person obtaining the copyright and abbreviated the year to the two last numerals as commonly done. The notice held good read "Copyright 93 by Bolles Brooklyn." There was no interpolated word between the words "Copyright 93" and the name of the person obtaining it. Hence there was no question and consequently no rule in the Bolles Case as to interpolated words. The opinions in both the Hills & Co. cases and in the Bolles Case contain dicta intimating if not expressing the doctrine that the notice suffices if it does not mislead. Of that doctrine Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for the United States supreme court, in a very late case (Mifflin v. White, 190 U. S. 260, 47 Law. Ed. 1040), said: "It is incorrect to say that any form of notice is good which calls attention to the person of whom inquiry can be made and information obtained, since the right being purely statutory, the public may justly demand that the person claiming a monopoly of publication shall pursue in substance at least the statutory method of securing it." The opinions in the Hills & Co. Cases (120 F. 862, 136 F. 701) are therefore not only unsupported by the precedents which they cite, but they lose part of their own force by following a doctrine repudiated by the supreme court. Since it is only by inference that a notice,—"Copyright 1902. Published by Hills & Co.," states who obtained the copyright, whether author or proprietor, and if the latter, whether he is also the publisher; it is difficult to see how it could be sustained under the rule laid down in Mifflin v. White, 190 U. S. 260, 47 Law. Ed. 1040.

NOTE. Accidental omission of notice: In 66 L. R. A. 444, under the report of American Press Ass'n v. Daily Story Pub. Co. [C. C. A.] (120 F. 766, 66 L. R. A. 444), the annotator with great reason criticizes the doctrine of the case and collates the authorities. Laches[38] is not imputed until reasonable time to sue.[39]

Remedies and procedure.[40]—If matter has been copied from one compilation into another without resort to original sources, injunction may issue.[41] Proof of damages is not essential.[42] Infringement of copyright of cartoons and of a copyrighted dramatic composition based on them may for convenience be joined in one bill.[43] A demurrer to such a bill will not reach the question whether there was any dramatic possibility in such cartoons.[44] It seems that an assignee of dramatic rights is a mere licensee unable to sue in his own name.[45] If a copyrighted publication is attached to the bill and profert made, it will be examined as part of the bill.[46] The granting of a preliminary injunction is discretionary,[47] and will be denied if complainant's right is doubtful.[48] If complainants allege infringement of what was itself not original, that fact should first be challenged on hearing for the preliminary injunction.[49] Unless it appears that the infringeing matter cannot be expunged, the injunction will merely restrain sale whilst such infringing matter appears and will not be made general.[50] A bill should be dismissed where there is no equity and an immediate appeal thus facilitated rather than to enter an interlocutory order refusing an injunction.[51]

56. Young v. Pulaski County [Ark.] 85 S. W. 229.

§ 1. Definition and nature of corporation.[58]—A corporation is usually deemed a "person" within the meaning of statutes,[59] but is not such a "person" as can be licensed to practice medicine,[60] or within the terms of some constitutional provisions[61] The fundamental idea of business corporation is the advantage coming from an aggregation of wisdom, knowledge and business foresight, resulting from bringing a large number of stockholders and directors into a common enterprise.[62] But courts of equity will sometimes disregard the corporate form, where justice requires it and where its retention is not needed to protect some interest requiring protection.[63]

§ 2. Classification of corporations.[64]—The objects and purpose of a corporation must be determined from the provisions of its charter and not from the declarations of its officers or agents.[65]

A corporation organized for the purpose of improving the breed of horses by promoting the interests of the American trotting turf, having no capital stock and acquiring no property other than membership fees and dues, held to come within the provisions of Pub. Acts 1903, p. 290, No. 171, for the incorporation of associations not for pecuniary profit. American Matinee Ass'n v. Secretary of State [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 262, 104 N. W. 141. A corporation organized to receive money or property contributed or devised, to invest the same and apply the income thereof to the relief of poverty and distress, as well as to act generally in respect to property received for any charitable use or purpose, held to be benevolent and charitable within Laws 1848, p. 447, c. 319, § 1. Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Soc., 44 Misc. 594, 90 N. Y. S. 168. A corporation organized for the purpose of carrying on a wholesale and retail ice business, selling ice of its own cutting and large quantities purchased from others, is engaged chiefly in trading and mercantile pursuits within the meaning of the bankruptcy act. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3423]. First Nat. Bank v. Wyoming Valley Ice Co., 136 F. 466.

§ 3. Creation, name and existence of corporations, and the amendment, extension and revival of charters.[66]—Corporations can be created only by some sovereign authority,[67] the grant of corporate existence being a grant of special powers and privileges to the incoporators, to pursue the objects of the incorporation, and transact corporate business the same as an individual does.[68] In this country charters are generally granted either by special acts of the legislature or obtained under general statutes regulating the subject.[69] When a corporation is created by special act, that constitutes its charter;[70] but when formed by the adoption of articles of incorporation, in pursuance of general laws, such articles, in connection with the statutes, answer the same purpose as a special charter,[71] and the same rules of construction apply to them as to special charters.[72]

Unless there is a constitutional requirement, no particular forms are necessary to effect a grant of corporate franchises;[73] but where certain things are required in the organization of a corporation and a form of charter prescribed, they must be followed,[74] though a substantial compliance with the statute will be suf-

They are creatures of statute—of local laws—and, except for such laws, would have no existence. Booth & Co. v. Weigand [Utah] 79 P. 570. There is no common-law rule in respect to the granting of charters to private business corporations. Hence no presumption can be indulged as to what the law of another state is in regard to granting them. Florscheim & Co. v. Fry [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1023. 71. Dempster Mfg. Co. v. Downs, 126 Iowa, 80, 101 N. W. 735. All applicable provisions of the general law, not expressly set forth in the certificate or articles of incorporation, are to be read into, and taken to be a part of the charter. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 94 N. Y. S. 65. The very object of requiring the filing and recording of the articles is to give them the same publicity, as nearly as may be, as statutory charters. Dempster Mfg. Co. v. Downs, 126 Iowa, 80, 101 N. W. 735.

The articles of association are expressive of the relative obligations of the company and stockholders and where in the certificates of stock, in whosoever hands they may come. Dempster Mfg.. Co. v. Downs, 126 Iowa, 80, 101 N. W. 735. They form the very basis of corporate existence. Everyone who deals with the corporation or its stock is charged with knowledge of their contents. Liens on stock, created by the articles, are binding as against third persons, although they have no actual notice thereof. Id.

72. Dempster Mfg. Co. v. Downs, 126 Iowa, 80, 101 N. W. 735. The charter of a stock corporation is, as between the corporation and its stockholders, and as to the stockholders, inter sese, an executed contract. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 94 N. Y. S. 65, citing Long Island W. S. Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 694, 41 Law. Ed. 1165.

73. Any expression showing the legislative intent to confer the right to exercise corporate franchises is sufficient. The use of the word "incorporate" is not necessary. A corporation may be deemed to be created by implication. Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Soc., 44 Misc. 594, 90 N. Y. S. 168.

74. It is essential to name the termini of any proposed railroad under Shannon's Code, § 2412, prescribing the form of a railroad charter. But the route of a commercial railroad, as distinguished from a street railway, need not be definitely stated; and a railroad may be constructed entirely within one city, of circular or polygonal outline, having both termini at the same place, if the several connecting routes and their termini are named. Collier v. Union R. C., 113 Tenn. 96, 83 S. W. 155. In Ohio, in designating the route for a proposed railway in the articles of incorporation, the counties through which it is to pass must be named; but not the townships; where the latter are named, it is mere surplusage. Hayes v. Toledo R. & T. Co., 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 281, 26 Ohio C. C. 395. Since stockholders in corporations organize under the law for sake of the special privileges given them and the special immunity from unlimited liability, their organizations must be in good faith, in obedience to the law. Greater Pittsburg Real Estate Co. v. Riley, 210 Pa. 283, 59 A. 1068. In the incorporation of a charitable society, the law does not require that the ultimate recipients of the county be minutely and precisely identified. Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Soc., 44 Misc. 594, 90 N. Y. S. 168. In Illinois, the recording of the secretary of state's certificate of organization in the county where the principal office of the ficient to show a corporation de facto,[75] and a defective organization may be legalized.[76]

For all purposes connected with the collection of subscriptions to its capital stock, the organization of corporation is complete when its entire capitalization has been unconditionally subscribed.[77]

A corporation has no legal existence without the limits of the jurisdiction which created it,[78] and unless it has both existence and some rights and powers in the state of its domicile, it cannot invoke the doctrine of comity to give it any in another state.[79]

In Indiana an act to continue the corporate existence for thirty years of private corporation created by special act of the legislature is unconstitutional.[80]

company is located is an essential condition precedent to legal organization. Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1899, c. 32, § 4. Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Loveland, 132 F. 41. The acknowledgments required to certificates of incorporation cannot be taken before one of the signers of the certificate. Laws 1890, p. 1082, c. 565, § 2. People v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 93 N. Y. S. 584. The validity of a corporate charter is not affected by the fact that one of the two affidavits required to be made upon application to the secretary of state contains matter not required by the statute. Laws of 1890, c. 154, § 5. So held in South Dakota. Thomas v. Wilcox [S. D.] 101 N. W. 1072.

75. In an action between the corporation and a private person. San Diego Gas Co. v. Frame, 137 Cal. 441, 70 P. 295. A reasonable latitude is allowed as to what may be included in the certificate of incorporation. All matter required by the law must be inserted, and other provisions may be inserted, germane to the purposes of the corporation and not contrary to law or public policy. Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Soc., 44 Misc. 594, 90 N. Y. S. 168. The officer whose duty it is to file or record articles of incorporation, while a ministerial, and not a judicial officer may exercise discretion in the premises, as to whether the articles are entitled under the law to be filed or recorded. The inclusion in a certificate of incorporation of powers not permitted held to justify the recording officer in refusing to accept it for record; also, informalities apparent on the face of the certificate in the matter of its execution. Dancy v. Clark, 24 App. D. C. 487.

76. It being within the power of the legislature to prescribe the necessary formalities. An act passed to remove the limit of the amount of property that a charitable society might take had the effect of validation the incorporation of a society which exceeded the limit in its original incorporation. Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Soc., 44 Misc. 594, 90 N. Y. S. 168.

77. It is immaterial that a part of its stock was issued without consideration. Merrick v. Consumers Heat & Elec. Co., 111 Ill. App. 153. An insurance company is organized, under the Illinois statute, for all purposes except issuing policies, when its charter has been filed as required by law and approved by the attorney general, its capital stock subscribed and its directors elected. Act of 1869. Blinn v. Riggs, 110 Ill. App. 37. Incorporators in Mississippi become a corporation upon the approval of their proposed charter by the governor, and the certification of such approval by the secretary of state, under the great seal. Notwithstanding certain conditions precedent to the commencement of business have not been complied with. Wells Co. v. Gastonia Cotton Mfg. Co.,198 U. S. 177, 49 Law. Ed. 1003.

81. Where the certificate filed declares that the signers have adopted an "amendment" to the charter of a certain corporation, complying with the statutory requirements thereto, it cannot be considered the formation of a new corporation. Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, art. 23, § 47. Brown v. Maryland Tel. & T. Co. [Md.] 61 A. 338. But the change of name of a corporation, so as to include the word "trust" in the new name, is so far the organization of a new corporation as to violate a statute providing for the organization of trust companies and prohibiting the use of the word "trust" in the name of any corporation organized under any other act. Laws 1903, p. 367, c. 176. State v. Nichols [Wash.] 80 P. 462. Railroad corporations can extend their lines by amendment of their charter in the manner prescribed by law. Acts 1897, p. 271, c. 176, provides that corporations organized under Acts 1875, p. 232, c. 142, or acts amendatory thereof, may amend their charters as prescribed by § 19, p. 257, of the Acts of 1875. Collier v. Union R. Co., 113 Tenn. 96, 83 S. W. 155. The right of a corporation in New York to amend its charter, by inserting therein any matter which might have been originally inserted, contemplates only corporate action by the board of directors. Laws 1892, p. 1955, c. 690, § 52. An amendment merely assented to by owners of a majority of the shares of stock, without a corporate meeting held, is not binding on the minority stockholders. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 94 N. Y. S. 65. A constitution adopted by a membership corporation after

Corporate name.[82]—The corporate name is a necessary element of the corporation's existence,[83] and though it is an artificial and impersonal thing, selected arbitrarily by the corporators themselves,[84] it is a thing of value, when connected with a profitable business,[85] and any imitation of it, in such manner as to deceive the public, may be restrained.[86]

A mere change in the name of a corporation has no effect upon its legal status, or upon the rights of creditors.[87]

Purposes.[88]—In determining the purposes of a corporation, the charter will be strictly construed.[89] its organization, not in conormity with its charter or certificate of incorporation, is invalid. A corporation organized and incorporated as a club for social and literary purposes could not be changed into a political club, by a change of constitution. Stein v. Marks, 44 Misc. 140, 89 N. Y. S. 921.

84. Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 P. 879. A corporation may adopt the name of its president for the execution of commercial obligations, bills of exchange and promissory notes in the usual course of its business. Midland Steel Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 290.

85. Chicago Landlords' Protective Bureau v. Koebel, 112 Ill. App. 21. Where a stockholder confers upon a corporation the right to use his name in the corporation name, he cannot, upon selling his stock in the corporation, resume the use of his own name in carrying on the same business, during the life of the corporation, so as to mislead the public. Equity will give the corporation relief in such a case. McFell Elec. & Tel. Co. v. McFell Elec. Co., 110 Ill. App. 182. Nor can he, by becoming a stockholder in a new corporation, confer on it the right to adopt a name similar to that of the other corporation, to palm off the business of the new corporation as that of the old one. Dodge Stationery Co. v. the president of a corporation, whose individual name was included in the corporation name, continued to do business in the name of the corporation after its failure, such subsequent business will be regarded as his personal business and not a continuation of the corporation's business. Boyle v. Northwestern Nat. Bank of Su-Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 P. 879. But where perior [Wis.] 103 N. W. 1123.

86. Exact simillitude is not a condition of relief; it is enough that the similitude is such as to be calculated to mislead the public. The use of the name "Landlords' Protective Department" was enjoined at the suit of plaintiff. Chicago Landlords' Protective Bureau v. Koebel, 112 Ill. App. 21. In the absence of statutory provisions regulating the subject, parties organizing a corporation must choose a name at their peril, and the use of a name similar to one adopted by another corporation will be enjoined at the instance of the latter, if misleading and calculated to injure its business; and the fact that the name was assumed by the second corporation in good faith is immaterial, the probable and ordinary consequences of the act, regardless of the intent or motive, being the test. Nesne v. Sundet, 93 Minn. 299, 101 N. W. 490. The names "The Dodge Stationery Company," and the "J. S. Dodge Company," considering the fact that the business of the two is the same, held sufficiently similar to warrant an injunction restraining the latter. Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 P. 879. Where a word was evidently adopted by a corporation as part of the corporate name, for the purpose of availing itself of the trade reputation given to that word by another, the use of the word by the corporation in its business was enjoined. Eureka Fire Hose Co. v. Eureka Rubber Mfg. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 561. Where the secretary of state permits the filing of a certificate of incorporation, in which the name adopted so nearly resembles that of another corporation as to be calculated to deceive, the action of the secretary of state is not conclusive, and the corporation aggrieved can have relief in equity. "The Columbian Chemical Company" held to resemble the name of relator, "Columbia Chemical Company," so nearly as to be calculated to deceive; but certiorari held not to lie to review the secretary of state's action in filing the certificate. People v. O'Brien, 101 App. Div. 296, 91 N. Y. S. 649.

87. Allen v. North Des Moines M. E. Church [Iowa] 102 N. W. 808. And an unauthorized change of name will not render the stockholders liable as partners for subsequent liabilities. Two stockholders of a mercantile corporation moved its stock from the state, opened a store and sold goods, having changed the name of the corporation. Judgment on a note for borrowed money, to pay former debts of the corporation and signed in the new name, reversed. Robinson v. First Nat. Bank [Tex.] 82 S. W. 505.

89. Stein v. Marks, 44 Misc. 140, 89 N. Y. S. 921. The "manufacturers' and miners'" act of Indiana, ch. 35, Rev. St. 1881, limits the business to be adopted by a corporation thereunder to a single class of the several classifications enumerated, and it is not competent to combine two or more of the purposes so classified in a single incorporation, as primary business. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Quinby [C. C. A.] 137 F. 882. Under a statute for the organization of corporations for the transaction of any commercial business, a corporation may be formed for warehousing goods for shipment. Civ. Code, § 393 (25). Orient Ins. Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Mont.] 78 P. 1036.

Fees[89] for filing articles[91] and for continuing in existence are imposed in most states.[92]

Proof of incorporation.[93]—The fact of incorporation may be inferred,[94] or established by admissions,[95] and proof may be waived;[96] but the denial of corporate existence in a suit by it puts the burden of proof upon the corporation.[97]

§ 4. Effect of irregularities in organization, and of failure to incorporate. Stockholder as partner or agent.[98]—The parties in an unsuccessful attempt to organize a corporation may be liable and held as partners.[99]

In the District of Columbia, a company cannot be incorporated to do all the classes of business for which corporations may be formed under the general law, but can be incorporated to engage in only one such business or enterprise. Sub. chap. 4, D. C. Code. And the provision that, upon certain conditions a company may extend its business to any other business authorized by law means extension by taking in something cognate to its original business. Dancy v. Clark, 24 App. D. C. 487. But a statute providing for the formation of corporations for mining manufacturing, mechanical, quarrying "and other industrial pursuits, and for any other lawful business," does not limit the formation of corporations to purposes similar to those enumerated. 91. A reincorporation, after the expiration of a charter, held to be the creation of a new corporation and subject to the payment of the organization tax, under Ky. St. 1903, § 4225. Commonwealth v. Licking Valley Bldg. Ass'n, 26 Ky. L. R. 730, 82 S. W. 435.

92. The "yearly license fee or tax," imposed by the law of New Jersey, is imposed arbitrarily as a condition to the continued existence of the corporation. Act 1884 (P. L. 1884, p. 234, § 4). The state does not lose the right to enforce such fee against the property of an insolvent corporation, because, at the time of its assessment, it is in the hands of a Federal receiver. Duryea v. American Wood Working Mach. Co., 133 F. 329. Where instruments purporting to be certificates of preferred stock are ambiguous in their language, the corporation is estopped, by a declaration in its articles, that money represented by such certificates is a part of its capital stock, from asserting the contrary in a proceeding to fix its liability to the franchise tax. People v. Miller, 180 N. Y. 16, 72 N. E. 525. Corporation doing a wholesale and retail ice business is not liable for the mercantile license tax of Pennsylvania, under Act of May 2, 1899, P. L. 184, which is intended only to deal with mercantile pursuits. Commonwealth v. Pocono Mountain Ice Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 267.

93. See 3 C. L. 883.

94. A certified copy of the designation, by a foreign insurance company, of a resident agent for the service of process, in accordance with law, is sufficient evidence of incorporation. So made by St. 1871-72, p 826, c. 566, § 1, as amended by St. 1899, p 111, c. 94, § 1. Anglo-California Bank v Field, 146 Cal. 644, 80 P. 1080.

95. A mortgage in the form of a deed, reciting that the deed is subject to the claim of the "Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited," imports that the bank is incorporated and is prima facie evidence of corporate character, and the acceptance of such an instrument is an admission that the bank mentioned at that time was a corporation, and that condition having been once shown to exist is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field, 146 Cal. 644, 80 P. 1080. By the recital of the corporate existence of plaintiff corporation in a bond executed by defendant, on which such is brought. Campbell & Zell Co. v. American Surety Co., 129 F. 491.

96. Where a defendant is sued under a name that implies corporate existence, the fact of incorporation may be inferred from its having issued the obligation sued on under that name, by its president and secretary. Florscheim & Co. v. Fry [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1023. Where, in an indictment of a railroad company for a nuisance in maintaining an alleged illegal crossing over a highway, the company is alleged to be "an existing corporation, duly chartered," it may well be questioned whether the defendant corporation is bound to defend the validity of its incorporation. Commonwealth v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 235.

97. See 3 C. L. 883, n. 44. Ohio Oil Co. v. Detamore [Ind.] 73 N. E. 906; Campbell & Zell Co. v. American Surety Co., 129 F. 491. Where the alleged incorporation of a company under the laws of a sister state is denied under oath, it devolves on the party alleging incorporation to affirmatively prove it. Florscheim & Co. v. Fry [Mo. App.] 84 S. W. 1023.

99. Mitchell v. Jensen [Utah] 81 P. 165. Where it is claimed that defendant is liable individually for goods ordered, because of the illegality of the organization of the corporation he represented, the declaration must be framed upon that theory in order to present the question. The declaration containing no such averment, the sole question was whether the contract was between plaintiff and defendant. Love v. Ramsey [Mich.] 102 N. W. 279. But where defendant contracted "for a bridge company to be organized and incorporated," the contract reciting that the party of the second part desire to build the bridge, and concluding, "In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals," but signed by plaintiff and defendant without a seal, defendant is personally liable. O'Rorke v. Geary, 207 Pa. 240, 56 A. 541. When an existing partnership becomes in-

De facto corporation. Collateral attack.[1]—Where the law authorizes a corporation and there has been an attempt in good faith to organize, and corporate functions are thereafter exercised, there exists a corporation de facto,[2] the legal existence of which cannot be questioned collaterally,[3] either by the state or by a private individual,[4] but only in a direct proceeding brought for that purpose.[5] There cannot be a corporation de facto, where there could not have been a corporation de jure,[6] as under an unconstitutional statute,[7] and the existence of such a corporation is subject to collateral attack.[8] So may the performance of acts, which are essential steps in the process of incorporation and prerequisite to corporate existence, also be challenged by private parties, unless estopped from doing so, whenever the question of corporate existence becomes material to them.[9]

Estoppel to deny incorporation.[10]—Whether or not a corporation exists, which may sue or be sued, is always open to challenge by a proper plea, in an action by or against it as such.[11] But one who deals with an association as a corporation is estopped from denying its corporate existence.[12] corporated without formal dissolution and notice thereof, and continues dealing in the old way, the persons comprising such partnership are liable as partners, where the change of name does not convey information of the incorporation. Weise v. Gray's Harbor Commercial Co., 111 Ill. App. 647. An association of individuals, formed under the statutes of Ohio to carry on a private banking business, but not incorporated, is a partnership and subject to be adjudged a bankrupt, though it is entitled to exercise some of the attributes of a corporation. Lanning's Rev. Laws Ohio, § 4891 et seq. (Bates Ann. St. § 3170-1 et seq.). Burkhart v. German-American Bank, 137 F. 958.

1. See 3 C. L. 884.

2. Held, that a de facto corporation existed under the facts in this case. Lusk v. Riggs [Neb.] 102 N. W. 88; Shawnee Commercial & Sav. Bank Co. v. Miller, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 198. To constitute a corporation de facto, there must be (1) a valid charter or law under which a corporation of the kind in question might be formed; (2) a bona fide attempt to incorporate thereunder; (3) a colorable compliance with the charter or law; and (4) the exercise or user of corporate powers. Clark v. American Cannel Coal Co. [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 727, citing Doty v. Patterson, 155 Ind. 60; Clark & M. Corp. § 82. See, also, Clark v. American Cannel Coal Co. [Ind.] 73 N. E. 1083. It is essential to the existence of a corporation de facto that there be a user of such corporate rights as could be authorized by law, and not merely such as might be exercised by individuals or unincorporated societies. Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Loveland, 132 F. 41.

3. Mitchell v. Jensen [Utah] 81 P. 165; Terry v. Chicago Packing & Prov'n Co., 105 Ill. App. 663; Lusk v. Riggs [Neb.] 102 N. W. 88. Under the statutes of California (St. 1862, p. 110, § 6) irregularities and defects will not defeat incorporation, where the questions are raised collaterally, as where the articles were filed with the county recorder instead of the county clerk. San Diego Gas Co. v. Frame, 137 Cal. 441, 70 P. 295. Whether or not a corporation was properly organized to engage in a particular business cannot be determined collaterally, upon an objection to the admission in evidence of a deed made by it as a link in the chain of title. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899. One who received pledged property from a corporation as such cannot deny the corporate character of the company for the purpose of holding the property. Blanc v. Germania Nat. Bank [La.] 38 So. 537. Parties who have given a bond to a corporation recognizing its corporate existence, cannot escape their liability on the bond by denying the capacity of the corporation to sue. Thompson v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. [Colo. App.] 78

§ 5. Promotion of corporations; acts prior to incorporation; incorporation of partnerships, etc.[13]—Promoters,[14] including every person acting by whatever name in the forming and establishing of a company at any period prior thereto,[15] occupy a fiduciary relation toward the corporation they seek to promote,[16] and subscribers for stock of a proposed corporation, before they are incorporated, are partners in the business they have in hand.[17]

A corporation is not bound by contracts between its promoters unless it ratifies or adopts them.[18] The specific performance of a contract to incorporate will

P. 1073. One who sells a chose in action, even under false representations, to a purported corporation, is estopped to assert a want of legal corporate existence, as against a bona fide transferee. Green v. Grigg, 98 App. Div. 445, 90 N. Y. S. 565. Persons whose claims arise out of transactions with a company as a corporation cannot assert the invalidity of a trust deed given by it, on the ground that it was not legally incorporated. Hasbrouck v. Rich [Mo. App.] 88 S. W. 131. When one deals with a corporation, knowing that it is not in fact a de jure corporation, he, as well as the corporation, is estopped to deny its legality and cannot hold its manager liable individually or its stockholders liable as partners. Fairbairn v. Houghten [Mich.] 102 N. W. 284. The members of a corporation are not liable, where it is a corporation de facto, though not de jure, and the plaintiff has dealt with it as a corporation. Love v. Ramsey [Mich.] 102 N. W. 279. Where a corporation is acting within the general scope of its powers, it, as well as any person contracting with it, may be estopped to deny that it has complied with the legal formalities prerequisite to its existence or action, because they might have been complied with. Doherty v. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899.

13. See 3 C. L. 885.

14. A promoter is one who brings about the incorporation and organization of a company, who brings together the persons who become interested in the enterprise, who aids in procuring subscriptions and sets in motion the machinery which leads to the formation of the corporation itself. The Telegraph v. Loetscher [Iowa] 101 N. W. 773; Shawnee Commercial & Sav. Bank Co. v. Miller, 24 Ohio C. R. 198.

15. Defendant agreed with the owner of a patent to assist him in organizing a company to exploit the patent, receiving a cash consideration for his services. Defendant afterward became a director and assisted as such in the purchase of the patent. Held, that defendant was a promoter and liable to account to the corporation for the amount received from the patentee for his services. The Telegraph v. Loetscher [Iowa] 101 N. W. 773. Persons who act as promoters of a corporation do not necessarily cease to be such when the corporation is organized to do business. If they continue to act for the corporation by inducing persons to subscribe for stock, their relations as promoters continue. Pietsch v. Milbrath, 123 Wis. 647, 101 N. W. 388.

16. The Telegraph v. Loetscher [Iowa] 101 N. W. 773; Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow [Mass.] 74 N. E. 653; Shawnee Commercial & Sav. Bank Co. v. Miller, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 198; 24 Ohio C. C. 198. The fact that property was bought by promoters with a view to reselling it to a corporation to be organized for the purpose, and that that purpose was ultimately carried into effect, does not entitle the corporation to the benefit of the purchase. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow [Mass.] 74 N. E. 653. And where an undisclosed promoter of a corporation, formed to pool certain mills, was made a trustee of the corporation by the owners of the mills and not as a part of the contract of promoting, his claim against the corporation for services and disbursements as trustee was not inconsistent necessarily with his claim of a share in the promotion fees. Boice v. Jones, 94 N. Y. S. 896.

17. In such a partnership, where property is purchased before incorporation, the majority must have the right of control, so long as they act within the purview of the contract of subscription, and if they incorporate the property belongs to the corporation formed by them. Mt. Carmel Tel. Co. v. Mt. Carmel & Flemingsburg Tel. Co. [Ky.] 84 S. W. 515. Partnership relation of joint promoters of a corporation. Boice v. McCormick, 94 N. Y. S. 892. Assets of a dissolved firm, being appropriated and used in the business of a corporation, will be deemed to have entered into the business of the latter as capital, and any profits earned by the corporation should be distributed to such assets according to their value. Rowell v. Rowell, 122 Wis. 1, 99 N. W. 473. But where a part of the profits was the result of the use of patented improvements not owned by the firm, a reasonable royalty for the use thereof should be deducted. Id.

18. Preliminary agreement by promoters of corporation that certain subscriptions to stock are to be paid by transfer of franchise not binding on corporation when organized. Merrick v. Consumers' Heat & Elec. Co., 111 Ill. App. 153. The weight of authority recognizes the power of a corporation, when formed to adopt or ratify such contracts. A survey made by promoters of a railroad, for its purposes, may be adopted as the location of the road, after incorporation. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Deepwater R. Co. [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 890. Those undertaking to organize a corporation cannot be its agents before it comes into existence, for there can be no agent unless there is a principal. Jones v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 210. An agreement among promoters by which several of their number subscribe for stock upon condition that payment therefor shall be made by the transfer of a certain franchise, is not binding upon the corporation when not be enforced by equity where a large proportion of the proposed incorporators are insolvent.[19]

Fraud of promoters.[20]—Promoters cannot secretly obtain profits from the corporation they cause to be organized,[21] and where a promoter fails to fulfill promises made to induce subscriptions to stock, the default vitiates the contract.[22] False and fraudulent representations in a prospectus issued by promoters, as to the value of property to be transferred by them to the corporation, afford ground for equitable relief against the corporation in behalf of one who relied on such representations in his suscription for stock.[23]

§ 6. Citizenship and residence or domicile of corporation.[24]—The national character of a corporation arises from the jurisdiction under whose laws it is organized,[25] and its domicile is that fixed by those laws.[26] A corporation is an inhabitant of the state and district in which its principal offices are, and its corporate business is transacted;[27] and for purposes of Federal jurisdiction, it is conclusively presumed that all the stockholders of a corporation are citizens of the state which by its laws, created the corporation;[28] but a corporation is not a citizen of a state within the meaning of the Federal constitution, securing to the citizens of organized. Merrick v. Consumers' Heat & Elec. Co., 111 Ill. App. 153. Where the promoters of a railroad mutually agree to render without compensation their personal services in furthering the enterprise, one of them, who performs such services, cannot recover payment therefor from the railway company receiving the benefit of the same. Powell v. Georgia, etc., R. Co., 121 Ga. 803, 49 S. E. 759. A corporation that receives the fruits of advances made by a director before incorporation may assume the payment of the debt so created. Pitman v. Chicago-Joplin Lead & Zinc Co. [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 10. Such adoption may take place by express corporate action or by any of the other modes by which corporations ratify or adopt the unauthorized or officious acts of others in their behalf. Where the promoter of a corporation requested an attorney to prepare a charter and certificate, to give advice in connection therewith and to rewrite by-laws, the corporation was not liable therefor, nor was the use of the charter and by-laws so prepared an adoption of the promoter's contract. Jones v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 210.

19. The Illinois incorporation act clearly contemplates that subscribers to capital stock should be persons of financial responsibility. Hernreich v. Lidberg, 105 Ill. App. 495.

20. See 3 C. L. 885.

21. Where promoters purchase property and afterward, as directors, sell it to the corporation at a price largely in excess of its value, without making a full disclosure of the circumstances, the corporation can rescind the contract for fraud. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow [Mass.] 74 N. E. 653. But where there are no other stockholders but themselves, as when the corporation is organized with dummy directors, there is no one deceived and the corporation cannot afterward rescind the transaction. Old Dominion Copper Min. Co. v. Lewisohn, 136 F. 915. And where parties acquire property, intending to promote the organization of a corporation to purchase it from them at a profit, limiting the membership to interested parties until the deal is completed, and intending thereafter to cause the rest of the stock to be sold to outsiders ignorant of the nature of the transaction, they are guilty of actionable fraud upon the corporation and responsible to it for the gains made. Pietsch v. Milbrath, 123 Wis. 647, 101 N. W. 388. Promoters will not be permitted to assert, either expressly or impliedly, that they will reap no benefit from the organization when in fact they will so do. Shawnee Commercial & Sav. Bank Co. v. Miller, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 198. An affidavit for an order of attachment, in an action against promoters for debt, held sufficient to charge actual fraud and the fraudulent contracting of the debt for which suit may be brought under Rev. St. § 5521, subd. 9. Id.

22. As where he promised, in consideration of stock to be retained by him as a part of the plan of organization, he would furnish certain subscriptions for the benefit of the subscribers. each state the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several states.[29] An action against a corporation created by an act of congress can be maintained only in a Federal court of the district of which it is an inhabitant.[30]

§ 7. Powers of corporations. A. In general.[31]—A corporation is endowed with no natural attributes.[32] It possesses only such powers as are expressed or fairly implied in the statute by or under which it is created.[33] Its charter, however, is to be read in the light of any applicable general laws,[34] and its powers, in effecting its objects, are as broad and comprehensive as those of an individual, when not expressly prohibited.[35] Where the primary object and powers of a corporation are stated in its organization, the exclusion of all others not fairly incidental is strictly implied.[36]

Grants of corporate franchises are construed most strongly against the donee,[37] and any doubt respecting the possession of any particular power,[38] or whether or not a conflict exists between a company's special charter and a general law of the state, will be resolved against the corporation.[39]

Quasi public corporations.[40]—A quasi public corporation can exercise no power

The implied powers of a corporation are not limited to such as are indispensably necessary to carry into effect those which are expressly granted, but comprise all that are appropriate, convenient and suitable for such purposes, including the right of a reasonable choice of means to be employed. not expressly conferred or necessarily implied for the purpose of carrying out the powers expressly granted;[41] nor on the other hand can it avoid the public burdens imposed on it without legislative permission.[42]

(§ 7) B. Power to take and hold property.[43]—Though the capacity of a corporation to take and hold property is measured solely by the statute,[44] only the state, or a claimant of property claimed by the corporation, can raise the question of power.[45] If authorized generally, they may acquire title in any recognized mode,[46] and public and quasi public corporations can be vested with the power of eminent domain.[47] A stockholder has no property in any of the assets of a corpor-

41. A corporation organized to supply a municipality and its inhabitants with water. New Albany Waterworks v. Louisville Banking Co. [C. C. A.] 122 F. 776. The special act incorporating the Chicago city railways, and the amendments thereto, constituted a grant directly to the companies named, over the streets designated or to be designated, and was not a mere grant to the city to grant, in turn, a franchise to the railways. Laws 1859, pp. 530-532; Laws 1861, p. 340; Laws 1865, p. 597. As to ordinances passed by the city prior to its coming under the general municipal act of 1872 (Act April 10, 1872; Laws 1871-72, p. 229, art. 5, § 1, subd. 24), giving cities a general control over the operations of street railway corporations, there exists, between the companies and the city, a contract relation; but as to those streets occupied under ordinances since then, the contract relation is to be looked for solely in the ordinances themselves. Govin v. Chicago, 132 F. 848.

42. Where a public duty is imposed upon a corporation by its charter, it cannot relieve itself of that duty by a lease of its property and franchises, under a general authority to lease. Defendant was not released from its obligation to maintain bridges over its canal, by a lease of the same with all its boats, etc., and franchises to a railroad company. Ryerson v. Morris Canal & Banking Co. [N. J. Law] 59 A. 29. Legislative assent to such action must be unequivocally given, or necessarily implied, in the terms of the grant of powers. No such power is conferred upon companies, organized to supply municipalities and their inhabitants with water, by the laws of Indiana. New Albany Waterworks v. Louisville Banking Co. [C. C. A banking corporation may have a good will, which constitutes a species of property. Lindemann v. Rusk [Wis.] 104 N. W. 119. A trading corporation may acquire the good will of a business, as well as a private person (Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 P. 879), and it becomes the property of the corporation alone (Id.). The vendor of its stock cannot transfer any part of it. Id.

45. Myatt v. Ponca City L. & Imp. Co., 14 Okl. 189, 78 P. 185. The question of the necessity of real property, for the purposes of the corporation, cannot be raised as a defense to an action by it to recover possession; that is a question which concerns the state alone. Id.

46. Corporations can acquire title to land by prescription. So held under Civ. Code, § 354, subd. 4, construed with § 1007, although Civ. Code, §§ 286, 360, provides that a corporation may obtain title by purchase and condemnation. Montecito Valley Water Co. v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 578, 77 P. 1113. The fact that a deed to a corporation was dated four days before the filing of its articles did not invalidate the conveyance, where the delivery and acceptance occurred after the incorporation. San Diego Gas Co. v. Frame, 137 Col. 441, 70 P. 295. The fact that a bequest to an institution took effect during the time between the expiration of its charter and its renewal, does not invalidate the bequest, where the name of the legatee clearly indicated the work in which it was engaged and the purpose in making the bequest. Bequests to "Furman University" and other organizations sustained, as there was no proof of the nonexistence of such institutions and the court could not assume such a state of facts against the assertion of the testator. Snider v. Snider [S. C.] 50 S. E. 504.

47. The legislature, in extending to certain corporations the right of eminent domain, can burden the privilege with a provision for taxing the corporation with attorneys' fees and expenses of the landowner, where the appropriation proceeding is abandoned after verdict. Wiler v. Logan Natural Gas & Fuel Co., 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 206. When asking the aid of the courts in condemnation proceedings they are estopped to deny the constitutionality of the acts granting such privileges. Chap. 8, Probate Code, Lan. R. L. 9990-10,030 (Rev. St. 6414-6453). Id. In Tennessee, only such a railroad corporation, as is chartered under the General Incorporation Act, is authorized to condemn property under the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Act 1875, p. 238, c. 142, § 6 (Shannon's Code, §§ 2414-2425). Collier v. Union R. Co., 113 Tenn. 96, 83 S. W. 155. Under the laws of Pennsylvania, a telephone company has not the right of eminent domain. Act of April 29, 1874, sec. 33, P. L. 73. It seems ation, in the sense that he may control it, otherwise than as the charter directs.[48] The books and papers of a private corporation are not public, but private, records and documents.[49]

(§ 7) C. Power to transfer or incumber property and franchises.[50]—Corporations may, in the ordinary course of business, transfer their property with the same freedom accorded to individuals. A transfer of all the assets and franchises of a corporation, however, is unauthorized, except under express statutory authority, as to effect a consolidation,[51] unless it be for the purpose of closing up a losing venture,[52] and even in that case, such a transfer will not be effective to wipe out the corporation's liabilities.[53] They may lease [54] and encumber [55] their propthat a telephone company is a telegraph company within the meaning of that statute. Pennsylvania Tel. Co. v. Hoover, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 96. Act of July 10, 1901, P. L. 632, held not to confer upon a state normal school power to condemn a public street on its own land, over which the public had had passage for more than twenty-one years. South Western State Normal School, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 99, citing Pennsylvania R. Co.'s Appeal, 93 Pa. 150; Groff's Appeal, 128 Pa. 621. In Kentucky railroad corporations organized in other states are required to organize as corporations of that state before they can acquire the right to control and operate railways therein. Const. Ky. § 211; Ky. St. 1903, §§ 763, 765, 841. Evansville & H. Traction Co. v. Henderson Bridge Co., 134 F. 973.

48. Huet v. Piedmont Springs Lumber Co., 138 N. C. 443, 50 S. E. 846. Where a corporation, whose sole asset consisted of a lease of convicts, by agreement among its corporators and with the consent of the state authorities, apportioned the convicts among themselves individually, an individual corporator was estopped to deny that the corporation became a lessee of convicts, subject to all the provisions of law relative thereto. Acts 1876, p. 40. Dade Coal Co. v. Penitentiary Co. No. 2, 119 Ga. 824, 47 S. E. 338.

49. So held to be the case in West Virginia. Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 392.

50. See J C. L. 886.

51. Where the stockholders of two corporations, by resolutions, authorized the conveyance by one of all its property to the other, a claim that the contract was afterward modified could be substantiated only by showing that the modification was the act of all the stockholders. Pinchback v. Bessemer Min. & Mfg. Co., 137 N. C. 171, 49 S. E. 106.

52. Even in the absence of express statutory power, a private corporation doing a losing and unprofitable business may sell its entire assets, upon a vote of a majority of the stockholders. Hinds County v. Natchez, J. & C. R. Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 189.

53. A corporation cannot, any more than a natural person, by transfer of its assets and liabilities, discharge its liabilities or disturb suits already pending to enforce them. Wells v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co., 108 Mo. App. 607, 84 S. W. 204. Where a corporation made an executory conveyance of real estate, taking lien notes for the price, the superior legal title remained in the corporation, and the land passed by a deed of its receiver of all the corporation's assets. Austin v. Lauderdale [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 413. In the absence of any showing that the county did not pay full value or that the company did not have in its treasury the consideration received, available for its creditors, held that the transfer of a toll road to the county, under provisions of law therefor, passed the title to the same relieved from the claim of creditors of the company. Under the "free turnpike act" (Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4748b et seq.). Roush v. Vanceburg, etc., Turnpike Co. [Ky.] 85 S. W. 735.

54. A lease of the real estate used by a corporation to carry on its business does not constitite an abandonment of its purposes. A corporation organized to mine for oil and owning no property except lands, leased all its lands for twenty years, the lessee agreeing to bore for oil and pay the company a royalty. Held no abandonment. Starke v. Guffey Petroleum Co. [Tex.] 86 S. W. 1. A railroad company may lease its property for nine hundred and ninety-nine years. Under Railroad Law, § 78 (Laws 1890, p. 1106, c. 365) providing that any railroad company may contract with any other for the use of their respective roads. Wormser v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 98 App. Div. 29, 90 N. Y. S. 714. Under statutes authorizing a railroad company to make contracts for building, completing and operating its road, it cannot divest itself of its franchises and exempt itself from any liability attaching to it, by a lease to a foreign railroad company. Acts 1865-66, p. 664, c. 755, confers no such authority. Brooker v. Maysville, etc., R. Co., 26 Ky. L. R. 1022, 83 S. W. 117.

55. A mortgage given by a corporation to secure its bonds, describing both real and personal property, is a lien on the personalty, although recorded only as a real estate mortgage. Under Laws 1897, p. 536, c. 418, § 91, such mortgages need not be refiled as chattel mortgages. Washington Trust Co. v. Morse Iron Works & Dry Dock Co., 94 N. Y. S. 495. A mortgage authorized by the board of directors of a manufacturing corporation, without being authorized by a majority of the stockholders, held invalid. Under Mills' Ann. St. Rev. Supp. § 481. Carlsbad Water Co. v. New [Colo.] 81 P. 34. A mortgage given merely to secure antecedent debts is not given for "a valuable consideration" within the meaning of the New Jersey corporation act. P. L. 1896, p. 298. Empire State Trust Co. v. Trustees of Fisher & Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 60 A. 940. Whenever a corporation has

erty in pursuance of the purposes for which they are organized, and are generally authorized to pledge their credit, in pursuit of their other corporate business,[56] but not otherwise.[57]

(§ 7) D. Power to contract and incur debts.[58]—Business corporations are impliedly authorized to borrow money,[59] contract for the sale of their bonds,[60] guaranty dividends upon their stock,[61] and make all contracts necessary and proper to expedite the business for which they are formed.[62] In the absence of express statutory authority, however, a corporation cannot enter into a partnership.[63]

Mode of execution of contracts.[64]—A corporation in contracting can act only through its officers and agents,[65] pursuant to authority lawfully granted to them by the corporation,[66] though the presence of the corporate seal on a contract is prima facie evidence of its validity.[67] power to mortgage its property generally, it can, in the absence of any restraining statute, mortgage after-acquired property. Cummings v. Consolidated Mineral Water Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 353; Georgetown Water Co. v. Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Co.'s Trustee, 25 Ky. L. R. 1739, 78 S. W. 113.

56. A trust company has power to execute a note for the benefit of a railroad company which it was financing. So held under Rev. St. (Mo.) 1899, § 1427 authorizing such companies to act as agent or attorney in fact in the management of property, execute trusts, guaranty fidelity, loan money, buy and sell securities, etc. First Nat. Bank v. Guardian Trust Co., 187 Mo. 494, 86 S. W. 109.

57. Accommodation notes given by a business corporation are invalid against creditors or dissenting stockholders. Perkins v. Trinity Realty Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 167. In the absence of express or necessarily implied power given in the charter, one corporation cannot indorse paper for the accommodation of another. McCampbell v. Fountain Head R. Co. [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 1070.

58. See 3 C. L. 887.

59. The power to borrow money in furtherance of its corporate purpose is a necessary incident to the power conferred by the charter of a corporation. Peoria Star Co. v. Cutright, 115 Ill. App. 492; Midland Steel Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 290. The borrowing of money by a corporation to repair its property, even from one of its directors, is a valid transaction, when the corporation is not imposed upon. Buck v. Troy Aqueduct Co., 76 Vt. 75, 56 A. 285. Loan made by officers of a corporation upon a pledge of its stock and bonds, each officer also obliging himself individually, if the loan was not paid, to purchase on demand his proportion of the collateral and to pay the lender the amount set opposite his name. Buffalo Loan, Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Carstensen, 94 N. Y. S. 907. Stockholders may become sureties for the corporation by making and indorsing a note for its accommodation. Kellogg v. Lopez, 145 Cal. 497, 78 P. 1056.

60. Construction of contract made with a syndicate formed to sell bonds for a construction company. Philadelphia Const. Co. v. Cramp [C. C. A.] 138 F. 999.

61. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Tel. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 742.

62. A corporation may be formed, by licensed physicians, and may make contracts for the services of its members and other legally authorized physicians. State Electro-Medical Institute v. Platner [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1079. In actions against a corporation upon a contract, it is presumed that the contract was within the powers of the corporation and that the officers executing it on behalf of the corporation acted within the law, unless the petition shows the contrary. Willow Springs Irr. Dist. v. Wilson [Neb.] 104 N. W. 165. A voidable contract cannot be rescinded by a minority of the stockholders of a corporation. Continental Ins. Co. v. New York & H. R. Co., 103 App. Div. 282, 93 N. Y. S. 27.

63. Fechteler v. Palm Bros. & Co. [C. C. A.] 133 F. 462.

64. See 3 C. L. 887.

65. Crall v. Com. [Va.] 49 S. E. 638; Holder v. Cannon Mfg. Co., 138 N. C. 308, 50 S. E. 681; Russell v. Washington Sav. Bank, 23 App. D. C. 398; New Orleans Terminal Co. v. Teller, 113 La. 733, 37 So. 624.

66. To recover on a note purporting to have been executed by a corporation, by its president and treasurer, it must be shown that the officers were authorized to sign the corporate name, or that the corporation received the proceeds of the note, or that there was a course of business which justified the accepting of the note as the obligation of the corporation. National Bank v. Snyder Mfg. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 982. Where it appears on the face of a deed that the corporation caused it to be executed, such fact, after lapse of time, is sufficient to raise a presumption of the grantor's authority to execute. More than thirty years. Altschul v. Casey, 45 Or. 182, 76 P. 1083. The note of a corporation executed in the name of its president held to be the note of the corporation. Midland Steel Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 290. A note signed by a director in the corporate name only, when the corporation consisted of but three stockholders who were also its directors, two of whom were present and taking part in the transaction, is valid. Buck v. Troy Aqueduct Co., 76 Vt. 75, 56 A. 285. Where judgment and execution sale of a corporation's property has been had, proof of irregularity or absence of authority, in the execution of the note on which judgment was had, the note having been given in payment of actual indebt-

(§ 7) E. Power to take and hold stock.[68]—In the absence of constitutional, charter, or statutory prohibition, corporations have inherent power to buy, to sell, and to retire their own stock,[69] but one corporation cannot become a stockholder in another corporation unless authority therefor is clearly granted by statute.[70] edness, is not proof of such fraud as will warrant the cancellation of the sheriff's deed. Relender v. Riggs [Colo. App.] 79 P. 328. See, also, post, § 15.

67. That the act of the corporation was executed by corporate authority. Kirkpatrick v. Eastern Milling & Export Co., 135 F. 144. Is presumptive of the fact that it was affixed by the proper authority. Graham v. Partee, 139 Ala. 310, 35 So. 1016. Burden on objecting party to show contrary. Quackenboss v. Globe & R. Fire Ins. Co., 177 N. Y. 71, 69 N. E. 223. Where the execution of a contract by the president and secretary, in the name of the corporation and under its corporate seal is not denied, it must be taken as a conceded fact. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Tel. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 742. The seal of a corporation affixed is evidence that a note is the obligation of such corporation. Reed v. Fleming, 209 Ill. 390, 70 N. E. 667. A contract bearing the signatures of the president and secretary, as well as the corporate seal, is presumptively an obligation of the corporation. Quackenboss v. Globe & R. Fire Ins. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 723. Assignment of indebtedness secured by a deed of trust. Collier v. Alexander [Ala.] 38 So. 244. The name of the corporation need not be signed to a power of attorney bearing the corporate seal, purporting on its face to be the act of the corporation and signed by its chairman, secretary, and one other of its directors, it having no president. Graham v. Partee, 139 Ala. 310, 35 So. 1016. The seal of a corporation attached to a note prevents the word "president" following the signature from being regarded as mere personal description. Reed v. Fleming, 209 Ill. 390, 70 N. E. 667. Where instruments introduced as evidence of the personal obligation of defendant appear on their face to be the obligations of a corporation it is not necessary for defendant to prove the corporate seal to relieve himself. Id. Where a corporation authorized impressions of its seal to be delivered to the disbursing officer of a city, to be used on papers executed in connection with its business, and its president knew that, in the execution of a release, the seal was required, but, instead of attaching it himself, left it to be attached by the disbursing officer, the corporation is bound by such release. Uvalde Asphalt Pav. Co. v. New York, 99 App. Div. 327, 91 N. Y. S. 131.

68. See 3 C. L. 888.

69. Burnes v. Burnes [C. C. A.] 137 F. 781. Unless the transaction renders it insolvent and operates as a fraud on its creditors. In re Smith Lumber Co., 132 F. 618. Notes given by it in part payment for such purchase are invalid. Id. An agreement by a corporation to repurchase stock in case of sale of its franchise is neither ultra vires, illegal, nor immoral. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Greene & W. Tel. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 742. The transfer of its own stocks to a corporation, under an agreement on its part to pay annuity to the former owners, sustained. Burnes v. Burnes, 132 F. 485. The prohibition of ownership of stock in Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 26, refers to stock in other corporations. Leonard v. Draper [Mass.] 73 N. E. 644. Where the entire capital stock of a corporation was subscribed for by its promoters and issued to them as full-paid, though for a nominal consideration, and the secretary and treasurer donated a large number of shares to the company, the latter became the lawful owner of such stock and could sell or reissue it. Krisch v. Interstate Fisheries Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 855. Held in Louisiana that a corporation cannot purchase shares of its own stock. Bartlett v. Fourton [La.] 38 So. 882. Where a corporation has power to purchase its own stock and pay therefor with its bonds, the corporation cannot deny the validity of such bonds in the hands of innocent purchasers for value. Hoskins v. Seaside Ice Mfg. & Cold Storage Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 645. Stock repurchased by a corporation and resold by it cannot be considered unissued stock. Hartley v. Pioneer Iron Works, 181 N. Y. 73, 73 N. E. 576. The purchase by a corporation of shares of its own stock is not a reduction of its capital stock, within the meaning of the Massachusetts statute, where such shares are kept ready for sale to other parties. Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 26. Leonard v. Draper [Mass.] 73 N. E. 644.

70. Warren v. Pim, 66 N. J. Eq. 353, 59 A. 773. An agreement made in the purchase of stocks of one corporation by another construed to be not an ultra vires guaranty of dividends whether profits were earned or not, but a valid agreement to pay stated sums at stated periods as deferred payments on account of the purchase price of the stocks. Windmuller v. Standard Distilling & Distributing Co., 94 N. Y. S. 52. Although the right of one corporation to own and vote stock in another, in case of domestic corporations, and those of other states, has been granted, yet that right cannot be extended by comity to a corporation organized in a foreign country, as a "voting trust" to own and vote stock in a domestic corporation. Warren v. Pim, 66 N. J. Eq. 353, 59 A. 773. Even though a corporation is not authorized to purchase and hold stock in a bank, yet, having done so and having received dividends for a number of years, with knowledge of all its stockholders, it will be estopped from denying its liability as a stockholder. Under Laws 1899, p. 315, c. 272. Defendant held further estopped by participating in a scheme to reorganize the bank. Hunt v. Hauser Malting Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1032.

§ 8. Effect of ultra vires and illegal transactions.[71]—An ultra vires contract, in the proper sense, is not voidable only, but wholly void [72] and incapable of ratification [73] or becoming effective by estoppel [74] by the acts of either party, though where such a contract has been fully performed on both sides, what has been done will not be undone at the suit of either.[75]

To determine whether the acts of a corporation are ultra vires or not, recourse must be had primarily to its charter,[76] and they must be shown to be neither within the scope of its charter, nor within its express or implied powers,[77]

71. See 3 C. L. 889.

72. Anglo-American L., M. & A. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721; Doherty v. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899; Metropolitan Stock Exch. v. Lyndonville Nat. Bank, 76 Vt. 303, 57 A. 101. Notes given in a transaction foreign to the purpose for which a corporation was created are ultra vires and void. Richmond Guano Co. v. Farmers' Cotton Seed Oil Mill & Ginnery Co. [C. C. A.] 126 F. 712.

When acts of corporations are spoken of as ultra vires, it is not intended that they are necessarily unlawful. First Nat. Bank v. Guardian Trust Co., 187 Mo. 494, 86 S. W. 109. There is a well-defined distinction between acts mala in se, or mala prohibita, and those which are merely ultra vires; in the former the peace and good order of the state is involved and every contract is perforce such an act, or in consideration or furtherance of such performance, is absolutely void, while that which is merely ultra vires does not necessarily involve moral turpitude or illegality. A street railway company might, through its directors, make a subscription to build a church, or an orphans' home, or an asylum, and the contract would be ultra vires, but there is no illegality in such enterprises. Peoria Star Co. v. Cutright, 115 Ill. App. 492. Where a statute specifically prohibits the doing of an act by a corporation, neither the corporation nor the person dealing with it will be allowed to rely on such transaction, or assert any benefits that grow out of it. Fidelity Ins. Co. v. German Sav. Bank [Iowa] 103 N. W. 958. By the Missouri constitution, a corporation is both impliedly and expressly prohibited from exercising any power other than those granted in its charter or the law under which it is formed. Anglo-American L., M. & A. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721. Bonds held to be ultra vires under the New York statute, prohibiting the issue of bonds by a corporation, except for money, labor, or property actually received for its use and lawful purposes. Stock Corporation Law 1892, p. 1835, c. 688, § 42. In re Waterloo Organ Co. [C. C. A.] 134 F. 341. The business of defending physicians against civil suits for malpractice is a professional business, and within the inhibition of section 3225, forbidding the carrying on of a professional business by a corporation. State v. Laylin, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 185; 15 Ohio Dec. N. P. 360.

73. Because it could not have been authorized by either. Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & Ag. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721; Doherty v. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899; Metropolitan Stock Exch. v. Lyndonville Nat. Bank, 76 Vt. 303, 57 A. 101.

74. Neither the corporation nor the other party can be estopped, by assenting to it, or acting upon it, to show that it was prohibited by law. Doherty v. Arkansas & O. R. Co. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 899; Metropolitan Stock Exch. v. Lyndonville Nat. Bank, 76 Vt. 303, 57 A. 101. A creditor of a corporation is not estopped from asserting the ultra vires character of a contract, because he is capable of contracting. Anglo-American L., M. & A. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721. A contract between two corporations, which is ultra vires as to one, is as invalid as though beyond the powers of both. Id.

75. Anglo-American L., M. & A. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721, citing McIndoe v. St. Louis, 10 Mo. 575; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543; Land v. Coffman, 50 Mo. 243, 255; Ragan v. McElroy, 98 Mo. 349; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 117 Mo. 261, 38 Am. St. Rep. 656. Where a contract with a city has been substantially performed, equity will not enjoin its further performance at the suit of a stockholder of the contracting (private) corporation on the ground that the contract is ultra vires. Fisher v. Georgia Vitrified Brick & Clay Co., 121 Ga. 621, 49 S. E. 679.

76. Flaherty v. Portland Longshoremen's Benev. Soc., 99 Me. 253, 59 A. 58; Bank of Montreal v. Waite, 105 Ill. App. 373. Where a corporation is organized under a statute authorizing the formation of corporations for general mining purposes, donations by it for political purposes are ultra vires. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill Co., 35 Mont. 55, 76 P. 194; Id. [Mont.] 79 P. 248. So is the payment of money as the company's portion of the expense of lobbying a bill through the legislature. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill Co. [Mont.] 79 P. 248. Held that a corporation organized "to drill and mine for natural gas," etc., had no power to use its assets, after the supply of natural gas was exhausted, to manufacture artificial gas and furnish it to consumers. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Quinby [C. C. A.] 137 F. 882. A contract of guaranty of the performance of a building contract, entered into by a company incorporated to buy and sell lumber and building materials is ultra vires and void. In re Smith Lumber Co., 132 F. 620.

77. Flaherty v. Portland Longshoremen's Benev. Soc., 99 Me. 253, 59 A. 58; Bradbury v. Waukegan & W. Mln. & Smelting Co., 113 Ill. App. 600. The test seems to be, if the act is one which could be legally performed, when concurred in by the majority of the stockholders, then it is not ultra vires.

the conclusion being a legal one, to be drawn from the facts.[78] Several contracts assailed as ultra vires are discussed below.[79]

A corporation, having no authority under its charter to exercise certain pow-

Matters pertaining to the manner in which stock is issued, the price paid or to be paid therefor, the manner in which such stock is voted and the use which is made of the money arising from the sale of stock cannot be said to be acts ultra vires. Bradbury v. Waukegan & W. Min. & Smelting Co., 113 Ill. App. 600.

78. Spencer v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 137 N. C. 107, 49 S. E. 96.

79. A corporation is incapable of being a director. O'Connor v. International Silver Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 321. Letters of administration on an estate cannot be granted to a corporation as a creditor of decedent. In re Rhoda, 93 N. Y. S. 973. The board of trade has not the power to pass upon the property rights of its members without their consent. Bank of Montreal v. Waite, 105 Ill. App. 373. A mutual building and loan association cannot contract that stock will mature in a definite time. People's Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Purdy [Colo. App.] 78 P. 465. In the absence of express authority, a corporation cannot acquire all the stock of another corporation for the purpose of controlling its affairs or exercising its powers through the use of its name, and such purchase is ultra vires and void. Rev. St. Mo. 1889, § 2839, subd. 9, does not confer such power to trust companies. Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & Ag. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721. Nor can either a corporation or its stockholders, incidental to the sale of its property or otherwise, clothe another corporation with the right to maintain the corporate life or exercise the corporate powers. Id. The removal of the entire official business of a domestic corporation beyond the state and attempts of the directors to hold regular monthly meetings as directors in another state, are ultra vires. Comp. St. 1887, div. 5, § 449, provides that when a corporation is formed to carry on part of its business outside of the state, the certificate of incorporation shall so state. Action of directors held insufficient to ratify the ultra vires acts. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill. Co. [Mont.] 76 P. 194. An application, by the New York Sabbath Committee, for a revocation of a theater license, was denied as it was not shown that the right to make such an application was within its corporate powers. In re New York Sabbath Committee, 44 Misc. 422, 89 N. Y. S. 992. A manufacturing corporation, which has otherwise no power to make accommodation indorsements, is not given such power by the Negotiable Instruments law. Laws 1897, p. 727, c. 612, § 41. Oppenheim v. Simon Reigel Cigar Co., 90 N. Y. S. 355. A subscription by a railroad company to the stock of a land company is ultra vires, notwithstanding it was made in the name of trustees. McCampbell v. Fountain Head R. Co. [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 1070. Where the note of a corporation was in fact accommodation paper and the holder knew that fact, proof of its execution by the president and treasurer is not sufficient to bind the corporation. National Bank v. Snyder Mfg. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 982. If a covenant by a tunnel company not to exercise the right of eminent domain over lands belonging to a railroad company, is valid, still it cannot be enforced in equity against the successor of the tunnel company. It is not a covenant running with the land and did not pass to defendant on foreclosure sale. Morris & E. R. Co. v. Hoboken & M. R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 332. The consent of a city to the transfer of its property and franchises, by a water company, will not authorize such a transaction, when the company is not authorized to do so by the laws of the state. New Albany Waterworks v. Louisville Banking Co. [C. C. A.] 122 F. 776. Where the right to raise the water of a pond, by a dam at the outlet, was given, it was not ultra vires to erect the dam across the river outlet, below the pond, it being within the township in which the dam was authorized to be constructed and not appearing to be an unreasonable distance below the actual outlet and the fact that land overflowed was in another state did not make the construction of the dam ultra vires, where no law of such other state was violated. Phillips v. Watuppa Reservoir Co., 184 Mass. 404, 68 N. E. 848. An agreement to pay in annual instalments, during the lives of the vendors, for property which a corporation has authority to buy, is not the granting of an annuity, such as is forbidden by the constitution and statutes of Missouri. Const. Mo. art. 12, § 7; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, §§ 1319, 7852, 7990. Those provisions merely prohibit corporations organized for pecuniary profit, and not for the purpose of granting and dealing in annuities, from doing so. Burnes v. Burnes [C. C. A.] 137 F. 781. A brewing corporation, organized to manufacture and sell intoxicating liquors, to erect, sell, lease, rent, exchange and otherwise handle suitable buildings and real estate for the prosecution of its business, may become surety on a liquor bond of a licensed dealer, where it appears that such undertaking is given with a view of renting its real estate and building, and to procure the sale of its products through such dealer. Horst v. Lewis [Neb.] 103 N. W. 460. And where it is necessary for a corporation to take and dispose of stock in other corporations, or property which it is not authorized to deal in, in order to secure itself against loss. Fidelity Ins. Co. v. German Sav. Bank [Iowa] 103 N. W. 958. Under statutes giving corporations, not authorized to hold land, a certain time to sell it, and providing, in case of forfeiture by the state, that the land shall be sold and the proceeds distributed to the stockholders, the acquirement of land by such a corporation is not unlawful. Rev. St. 1895, arts. 749c, 749e. The mere want of authority to hold real estate did not destroy the good faith of the transaction and prevent the corporation from defending itself as an innocent purchaser. Schneider v. Sellers [Tex.] 84 S. W. 417.

ers and franchises, cannot acquire such powers and franchises by the purchase of all the property of another corporation possessing them.[80]

Each state may determine what powers shall be possessed by corporations organized under its authority, and what effect shall attach to acts done by corporations beyond their powers.[81] And only the state,[82] or stockholders or creditors whose rights would otherwise be injuriously affected,[83] can take advantage of the want of power of a corporation to perform an act not clearly within the terms of its charter or the law. When the courts are appealed to to restrain the performance of an ultra vires act, the rule is applied with great stringency to the corporation.[84] Questions as to the powers of a national bank to buy or hold real estate can be raised by the Federal government only.[85]

Estoppel to assert ultra vires.[86]—A corporation cannot deny its power to make a contract fully executed by the other party,[87] and of which it has received the benefit,[88] unless it is illegal, immoral, fraudulent, or contrary to public policy.[89]

80. Southern R. Co. v. Mitchell, 139 Ala. 629, 37 So. 85.

81. Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & Ag. Co. v. Lombard [C. C. A.] 132 F. 721.

82. Whether a corporation has violated its charter or exceeded its powers in taking a conveyance of land will not be inquired into collaterally in an action between private parties contesting the title to the land. Scott v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank [Tex.] 75 S. W. 7.

83. Perkins v. Trinity Realty Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 167.

84. Peoria Star Co. v. Cutright, 115 Ill. App. 492.

85. Minneapolis Thresh. Mach. Co. v. Jones [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1017.

86. See 3 C. L. 889.

87. Fidelity Ins. Co. v. German Sav. Bank [Iowa] 103 N. W. 958. A contract of insurance, which the corporation had no power to make, but which was performed by the other party, could not be defended against as ultra vires. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Posey [Ark.] 85 S. W. 1127. Where defendant corporation executed a note to enable the co-maker, a corporation it was financing, to obtain a loan and the contract was fully performed by the payee. First Nat. Bank v. Guardian Trust Co., 187 Mo. 494, 86 S. W. 109. Where a corporation applied a portion of the money, borrowed for a purpose authorized by its charter, to a purpose not so authorized, the purchaser of its bonds could not control the use of the proceeds and the mortgage security was valid as to him and could not be defeated by the defense of ultra vires. Camden Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Citizens' Ice & Cold Storage Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 529. Where a private corporation becomes a borrowing stockholder in a building and loan association and the contract has been executed by the association, such corporation cannot defeat the enforcement of the contract against it, on the ground that the contract was ultra vires, because of its want of power to become a stockholder. United States Sav. & Loan Co. v. Convent of St. Rose [C. C. A.] 133 F. 354. That the original note was given for an ultra vires purpose cannot be set up by the transferring corporation, as a defense to an action on its guaranty, given at the time of its transfer. Hunt v. Northwestern Mortg. Trust Co., 16 S. D. 241, 92 N. W. 23.
