W. R. Co. v. Everett [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 890, 89 S. W. 457. Kaiser v. Hahn Bros., 126 Iowa, 561, 102 N. W. 504.

70. It is not negligence as a matter of law for one to cross a street railway track between two motionless cars. Fitzgerald v. New York City R. Co., 92 N. Y. S. 732. Owen Portage Tel. Co. [Wis.] 105 N. W. 924. Boys bathing at resort held not negligent where they did not go beyond the places ordinarily used by bathers, and there were no limits or warning signs, and a sudden wind blew them out into the lake where one was drowned. Larkin v. Saltair Beach Co. [Utah] 83 P. 686.

71. Servant of a contractor at work in a mill could not recover where he went to a part of the mill where his duties did not require him to be and fell into a hatchway. Hutchinson v. Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 457, 104 N. W. 698. Chicago City R. Co. v. Albrecht, 114 Ill. App. 474. Person who placed his hand under a heavy rock and was injured by its fall could not recover. Culver Construction Co. v. McCormack, 114 Ill. United Gas & Elec. Co. [N. H.] 60 A. 848. Scowden v. Erie R. Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 15. Workman who stood partly within and partly without an elevator while waiting for the operator, and or to use one's senses or opportunities to observe and avoid danger,[74] constitute contributory negligence. Mere knowledge or notice of the existence of a fact or condition is not conclusive on the issue;[75] it must also appear that the danger was appreciated.[76] A mere error of judgment in attempting to escape from sudden and impending danger does not charge one with contributory negligence,[77] and one who is injured in an attempt to save another from injury will not be held negligent unless he rashly exposed himself to danger.[78] was killed by the sudden starting of the elevator, was guilty of negligence. Green v. Urban Contracting & Heating Co., 94 N. Y. S. 743.

Cullen v. Higgins, 216 Ill. 78, 74 N. E. 698. Evidence held to show contributory negligence where teamster walked into elevator shaft in store. Swanson v. Boutell [Minn.] 103 N. W. 886.

75. Mere knowledge by plaintiff that there was a hole in a platform would not bar a recovery for injuries received by falling into it. Day v. Emery-Bird-Thayer Dry Goods Co., 114 Mo. App. 479, 89 S. W. 903. Mere knowledge that there was some danger, without an appreciation of it, will not alone preclude recovery. Ward v. Dampskibselskabet Kjoebenhaven, 136 F. 502.

76. It must appear that the danger was known and appreciated or that an ordinarily prudent man under the same circumstances would have acquired such knowledge and appreciation. Stevens v. United Gas & Elec. Co. [N. H.] 60 A. 848. Whether an employe of an independent contractor, working on a staging near which electric wires ran, knew or ought to have known that a dangerous current of electricity was liable to be passed through the wires, held a question for the jury under the evidence. Id.

77. Where the harm complained of is the result of an effort to escape a sudden and impending danger, resulting from negligence of the person sought to be charged, contributory negligence is not made out as a matter of law by showing that the person injured might have escaped by pursuing a different course. Dolson v. Dunham [Minn.] 104 N. W. 964. Employe was not chargeable with contributory negligence as a matter of law where in attempting to escape imminent danger from falling rock he jumped in the wrong direction. McRae v. Erickson [Cal. One confronted with sudden danger is not required to use the same degree of foresight and deliberation which might be required in ordinary circumstances. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Newmiller, 116 Ill. App. 625. An act done to escape impending danger is not contributory negligence as a matter of law, though it contributes to the injury. Ward v. District of Columbia, 24 App. D. C. 524. Where girl ran in front of car to save a boy of 4 or 5, she was not chargeable with contributory negligence in electing a mode of escape from the danger which was more perilous than one she might have chosen. Manzella v. Rochester R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 457. Law does not demand that one placed in a position of danger shall exercise the highest degree of self-possession, coolness, and skill, but only such as an ordinarily careful and prudent man would exercise under like circumstances. Thus, a bicyclist, caught between a street car and a vehicle, was not negligent as a matter of law in placing his hand on the side of the moving car. South Chicago City R. Co. v. Kinnare, 216 Ill. 451, 75 N. E. 179. One suddenly placed in a position of peril is not responsible for an error of judgment in selecting a mode of escape. Thus, where an employe jumped from a moving car to avoid peril, whether he was negligent, considering the circumstances, was for the jury. Pierson Lumber Co. v. Hart [Ala.] 39 So. 566.

Children.[79]—A child of very tender years is presumed incapable of negligence under any circumstances;[80] but a child not of tender years is required to exercise such care as children of the same age, capacity and experience use under like circumstances.[81] Whether a child is sui juris is ordinarily a question of fact.[82]

Comparative negligence.[83]—The doctrine of comparative negligence,—that if plaintiff's negligence was slight as compared with defendant's, recovery may be had,—is generally disapproved;[84] but contributory negligence is no defense to a charge of wanton or willful negligence or wrongdoing.[85]

78. Verdict for plaintiff, in action for death of her husband, sustained, where deceased was killed by a train after pushing or warning a boy off the track. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Ridley, 114 Tenn. 727, 86 S. W. 606. Where girl ran in front of street car to save a boy of 4 or 5 who was in danger and as she stepped back was struck by a car on the other track, she was not chargeable with contributory negligence. Manzella v. Rochester R. Co., 93 N. Y. S. 457.

79. See 4 C. L. 774.

80. Children under 7 are not capable of contributory negligence. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 111 Ill. App. 234. Child under 6. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. & Western I. R. Co. v. Eganolf, 112 Ill. App. 323. Child 6 years and 10 months old. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Jamieson, 112 Ill. App. 69. Child a little over 5 could not be guilty of contributory negligence, and the fact that she ran across the street into defendant's wagon would not defeat recovery if driver could have avoided accident with reasonable care. American Tobacco Co. v. Polisco [Va.] 52 S. E. 563.

81. Holmes v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 190 Mo. 98, 88 S. W. 623. Youth of person injured is to be considered both on issue of his own due care and on care used by defendant. Wilmot v. McPadden [Conn.] 61 A. 1069. The care required of infants is that degree of care exercised by children of the same age, of ordinary care and prudence, under similar circumstances. Goldstein v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 60 A. 975. Ordinary care, which is that of every prudent man, is not the standard to be applied to the conduct of a child. Due care according to age and capacity is all that the law requires of children of tender years. Stewart v. Southern Bell Tel. & T. Co. [Ga.] 52 S. E. 331. A child is bound to use such reasonable care as one of his age, mental capacity and experience is capable of using; and a failure to do so is negligence. Fitzgerald v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 114 Ill. App. 118; Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. Moran, 110 Ill. App. 664; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 110 Ill. App. 304. Child of 7. Kinnare v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 114 Ill. App. 230. Child of 10. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. McGinnis, 112 Ill. App. 177. Fitzgerald v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 114 Ill. App. 118. A young child is required to exercise for its own safety that degree of care to be expected from one of its age and experience. Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co., 127 Iowa, 483, 103 N. W. 481. Girl of 9 must use that degree of care reasonably to be expected of children of her age. Young v. Small, 118 Mass. 4, 73 N. E. 1019. If child between 6 and 7, sitting on the curb, moved along when told to do so by ice man, and was injured by a piece of ice which he dropped and which bounded against her, she was not negligent as a matter of law. Slattery v. Lawrence Ice Co. [Mass.] 76 N. E. 459. Mere fact that child 6 years and 8 months old was playing with others in the street does not bar recovery for negligence of ice man dropping a piece of ice which struck the child. Id. The standard of care of an infant plaintiff, if found capable of going on the public ways unattended, depends upon his age and intelligence. Id. Girl of 9, playing in the street, ran across without paying any attention to use of the street by others, and was struck by a horse, which she would have seen if she had looked about her. She could not recover. Young v. Small, 188 Mass. 4, 73 N. E. 1019. The test for a minor's responsibility for conduct charged to have been negligent is the caution usually displayed by ordinary children of the same age and capacity. Fry v. St. Louis Transit Co., 111 Mo. App. 324, 85 S. W. 960. A child is only required to exercise that degree of care to be reasonably expected of a child of his age. Christensen v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Utah] 80 P. 746. Children of 5 are not chargeable with "ordinary care" in use of walks, as that term is used in the case of adults. Parrish v. Huntington [Va.] 50 S. E. 416. Lawrence Ice Co. [Mass.] 76 N. E. 459. It is proper to submit to the jury the age and capacity of a minor in passing on the question of contributory negligence. Edwards v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 112 Mo. App. 656, 87 S. W. 587.

84. The doctrine of comparative negligence has been repudiated in Missouri. Ross v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 600, 88 S. W. 144. Comparative negligence doctrine does not prevail in Kansas. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Kellerman [Tex. Civ.

Last clear chance doctrine.[89]—The fault of the one who can at the time, but who does not, prevent an injury, is its sole legal cause, however the dangerous situation was created.[87] Thus, negligent failure to avoid injury, after discovery of plaintiff's peril, renders defendant liable, though plaintiff was guilty of negligence;[88] and, similarly, plaintiff cannot recover, if subsequent to defendant's negligence, he negligently fails to avoid injury.[89] The doctrine of discovered peril has no application in the absence of actual knowledge on the part of the person causing the injury of the peril of the person injured in time to prevent the injury by the use of means within his reach.[90]

Imputed negligence.[91]—Where the relation of master and servant or principal and agent does not exist, negligence of one person is not imputable to another who is injured, unless the former was subject to the latter's control at the time of the injury.[92] Thus, negligence of the driver of a vehicle is not imputable to a person riding therein, who exercises no control over the driving, whether such person be the guest of the driver,[93] or one who has hired the vehicle and driver;[94] but if the

88. Ross v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 600, 88 S. W. 144; MacFeat v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. [Del.] 62 A. 898. A person's negligence in placing himself in a perilous position is not a bar to a recovery where the defendant was willfully negligent thereafter. Fitzgibbons v. Manhattan R. Co., 88 N. Y. S. 341. Contributory negligence of plaintiff will not defeat recovery if defendant could have avoided the accident by the exercise of ordinary care. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Spencer's Adm'x [Va.] 52 S. E. 310; Hawley v. Columbia R. Co., 25 App. D. C. 1; Georgetown & T. R. Co. v. Smith, 25 App. D. C. 259. Contributory negligence is no defense when it is alleged that defendant knew of plaintiff's peril and could have avoided the injury by reasonable care. Northern Tex. Traction Co. v. Yates [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 283. If a motorman could have prevented a collision after seeing plaintiff's danger, plaintiff could recover though he had been previously negligent in selecting a drunken driver. Co. & Western I. R. Co. v. Eganolf, 112 Ill. App. 323. Where a motorman saw or ought to have seen a child close to the track, the burden was on the company in an action for injuries to the child, to show that the motorman used the degree of care "strictly commensurate with the demands and exigencies of the occasion" to prevent injury to the child; if such care was not used, the company would be liable. driver was the servant of the person injured,[95] or was subject to the direction and restraint of such person,[96] or if negligence of the person injured concurs with that of the driver,[97] there can be no recovery for the injuries suffered.

By weight of modern authority, negligence of a parent or custodian is not imputable to a child non sui juris, so as to bar an action brought on its behalf.[98] But contributory negligence of a beneficiary will defeat an action for wrongful death.[99]

Bevis v. Vanceburg Tel. Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 126. Where plaintiff was riding in a sleigh with her husband, who was driving, his negligence, if any, could not be imputed to her, so as to bar recovery in an action by her for injuries suffered in a collision with a street car. Plaintiff's testator was riding in a covered express wagon, driven by another, and was sitting on a trunk in the rear of the wagon, when a collision occurred. Negligence of driver not imputable to one riding in vehicle unless relation of master and servant exists. Buckler v. Newman, 116 Ill. App. 546. App. 204.

94. Where plaintiff hired a carriage and driver and simply directed the driver where to go, negligence of the driver contributing to produce a collision with a street car was not imputable to plaintiff. Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 189 Mo. 107, 88 S. W. 648. If motorman was negligent in running car into carriage, the occupant could recover from defendant, though the driver of the carriage over whom plaintiff had no control or direction was negligent in suddenly turning the carriage on the track. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Leach, 215 Ill. 184, 74 N. E. 119.

95. Negligence of a servant driving the master's wagon is chargeable to the master who suffers injury while riding therein. Markowitz v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 186 Mo. 350, 85 S. W. 351.

Where two persons riding in a vehicle were killed at a railroad crossing, one being the guest of the other, who drove, there could be no recovery for the guest's death where he joined with the driver in an effort to cross in front of a train, even though negligence of the driver was not imputable to the guest. Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Thomas, 33 Colo. 517, 81 P. 801. If plaintiff was negligent in driving with one who was drunk, and whose act contributed to produce a collision, and the motorman could not have prevented the collision after discovery of plaintiff's danger, plaintiff could not recover. Hanson v. Manchester St. R. Co. [N. H.] 62 A. 595. Where plaintiff was riding in a closed carriage on a dark night and could not see or communicate with the driver in time to direct him to avoid a street car, he could not be held guilty of contributory negligence. Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 189 Mo. 107, 88 S. W. 648.

98. Mattson v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 443. Where a boy 7½ years old was fatally injured while playing in a building which was being torn down, the fact that his parents were negligent in permitting him to go unattended into a place of danger would not defeat a recovery for his death by his administrator, though the parents would be benefited by a recovery in such action. Wilmot v. McPadden [Conn.] 61 A. 1069. The contributory negligence of parents in permitting a child, a boy four years and one month old, to go without a care-taker upon streets where electric cars are run, cannot be imputed to the child in an action by him for injuries caused by negligent operation of a car. Jacksonville Elec. Co. v. Adams [Fla.] 39 So. 183. Negligence of parents who take their child on a street car of defective construction is not imputable to the child in an action by it for injuries received from falling off the car. Northern Tex. Traction Co. v. Roye [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 621. Where child a little over four years old was injured by falling through a defective walk while his father held him by the hand, negligence of his father would not bar an action by the child. Boehm v. Detroit [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 397, 104 N. W. 626. Plaintiff's two sons, each under nine years of age, found on the premises of defendant a stick of dynamite, which they exploded, instantly killing the younger and permanently maiming and injuring the other. This action was for the benefit of the injured boy. The jury found that the defendant company was guilty of negligence in permitting the dynamite to remain on or about its premises unguarded or unprotected. Held, that, conceding the contributory negligence of the children's father (a point which was in dispute) the plaintiff could recover. Mattson v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co., [Minn.] 104 N. W. 443.

§ 5. Actions. Pleading.[1]—The complaint or petition must allege facts disclosing a duty owed by defendant to the person injured.[2] A general allegation of negligence is sufficient as against a general demurrer,[3] provided the complaint is predicated upon some act or omission,[4] but is insufficient as against a special demurrer for want of facts,[5] or a motion to make more specific.[6] A specification of the particulars of the negligence relied on cannot be avoided by alleging that such matters are more peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant, and cannot,

Note: This case overrules the previous one of Fitzgerald v. The Railway Company, 29 Minn. 336, 13 N. W. 168, 43 Am. Rep. 212. The leading case of Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. [N. Y.] 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273, which holds that the negligence of the parent is imputable to the child, was relied on in Fitzgerald v. Railway Co., 29 Minn. 336, 13 N. W. 168, 43 Am. Rep. 212, and is followed in some jurisdictions. Terre Haute St. Ry. Co. v. Tappenbeck, 9 Ind. App. 422; Casey v. Smith, 152 Mass. 294, 23 Am. St. Rep. 842, 9 L. R. A. 259; Holly v. Light Co., 8 Gray [Mass.] 123; O'Brien v. McGlinchy, 68 Me. 552; Leslie v. Lewiston, 62 Me. 468; Canavan v. Stuyvesant et al., 12 Misc. [N. Y.] 74; Decker v. McSorley, 111 Wis. 91. However, the principal case seems to be in accordance both with the weight of authority and reason. Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213; Berry v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 70 F. 679; Daley v. Norwich, etc., R. Co., 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 413; Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 396; Battshil v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 514, 31 N. W. 894, 28 Am. & Eng. R. Cs. 597. 57 Am. Rep. 474 (note); Erie City Pass. R. That the negligence of the actual custodian is imputable to the child is held in some jurisdictions which have repudiated Hartfield v. Roper (above). The Burgundia, 29 F. 464; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Caldwell, 74 Pa. 421. The principal case should be distinguished from that class of cases where the action is brought on behalf of the parent himself. Where the parent is the real beneficiary, his contributory negligence may be pleaded. Westerberg et al. v. Kinzu, etc., R. Co., 142 Pa. 471, 24 Am. St. Rep. 510; Battshill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 514.—Sec 4 Mich. L. R. 79; 5 Columbia L. R. 552; and note 4 C. L. 778.

1. See 4 C. L. 779; also Pleading, 4 C. L. 980.

2. The facts and circumstances from which the law will imply a legal duty must be stated. Ward v. Danzeizen, 111 Ill. App. 163. Declaration which alleged only that defendant owned a building which it leased to another, and that a bucket dropped from the building upon plaintiff's head, and did not show where plaintiff was, or that any relation existed between them, did not show a duty owed by defendant to plaintiff. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Gardanier, 116 Ill. App. 619. It was unnecessary to specially allege that it was defendant's duty to keep a switch closed and locked, where it was alleged that injury resulted from negligence in failing to keep switch closed and locked. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Vandenberg, 164 Ind. 470, 73 N. E. 990.

3. Hudgins v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 974. A complaint charging negligence in general terms, no specific act of negligence being charged, is sufficient as against a demurrer. Casey v. American Bridge Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 623. Negligence may be inferred from facts and circumstances shown in evidence and it is not necessary to plead all the facts and circumstances from which this inference may be drawn. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Wise [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1107.

4. A complaint characterizing an act as having been carelessly and negligently done is sufficient to withstand a demurrer for want of facts. Under such allegation facts constituting the negligence may be shown. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Fike [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 636; Southern Ind. R. Co. v. Messick [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1097. An allegation of carelessness is a sufficient allegation of want of ordinary care. Coney Island Co. v. Mitsch, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 81. While a general allegation that an act was negligently done is sufficient as against a demurrer for want of facts, yet a complaint for negligence which is not predicated upon some act or omission is demurrable. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. McFall [Ind.] 76 N. E. 400. Where a complaint charged negligence of three railroad companies in running trains and giving and receiving orders as the cause of a collision but did not set out any act or omission of any or all defendants, no negligent act being directly alleged, it was insufficient. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Marshall [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 973. Complaint alleging that there was some defect on the running board of a street car, and that plaintiff's foot was caught, causing her to fall, held insufficient, amounting merely to a general allegation of negligence. Wilbur v. Rhode Island Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 601.

5. The particulars of the negligence must be set out when a special demurrer is filed, raising the objection that the allegations are too general. Hudgins v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 974. Complaint alleging that defendant negligently and improperly manufactured and prepared mince meat which decedent ate and died held to state a cause of action, but to be defective because not alleging particular acts of negligence, and hence bad as against demurrer for want of facts. Salmon v. Libby [Ill.] 76 N. E. 573.

for want of information, be alleged.[7] Allegations of a petition cannot be aided by the maxim res ipsa loquitur.[8] A complaint which sets out several acts of negligence, each alleged to be a proximate cause of injury, is not demurrable,[9] though it may be open to the objection that it is not sufficiently specific.[10] A complaint to recover for injuries to a child inflicted by dangerous machinery on defendant's premises must allege an express invitation to come upon the premises, or that the dangerous machinery was so attractive to children that its maintenance amounted to an implied invitation.[11]

Contributory negligence is generally held to be matter of defense which need not be negatived in the complaint[12] unless the facts pleaded tend to show it.[13] But in some states the complaint must allege freedom from contributory negligence.[14] An allegation of due care by plaintiff must be broad enough to cover the entire transaction.[15]

The answer.—The defense of contributory negligence is usually not available as a defense if not specially pleaded,[16] unless plaintiff's evidence discloses such negligence.[17] The facts claimed to constitute contributory negligence must be set out.[18] While a denial of negligence and an allegation of contributory negligence are verbally inconsistent, they are not so in practice, and a defendant need not elect

6. Casey v. American Bridge Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 623. Defendant has the right to a specific statement of the facts relied on as constituting negligence, but plaintiff is not required to make a prolix statement of the details. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Simons [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 883.

7. Hudgins v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 974.

8. Where objection is that averments of negligence are too general. Hudgins v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 974.

9. Complaint held to allege sufficiently that negligence complained of caused the injury where several acts of negligence were set out and it was then alleged that "said acts were the direct and proximate cause of the death" complained of and that all of said acts contributed thereto. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Glover [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 263, 88 S. W. 515.

10. A complaint is not demurrable for alleging several acts of negligence, each alleged to be a proximate cause of injury; but defendant may, under Va. Code 1904 § 3249, demand a more specific statement of the cause of action relied on. Pocahontas Collieries Co. v. Rukas' Adm'r [Va.] 51 S. E. 449.

11. Complaint held insufficient in action to recover for injuries to a child of 5 caught in an endless chain arrangement for hauling lumber. Driscoll v. Clark [Mont.] 80 P. 1.

12. Southern Ind. R. Co. v. Corps [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 902. Burden of proving contributory negligence is on defendant and plaintiff need not allege freedom therefrom in his complaint. Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Chinn [Ky.] 89 S. W. 188. Where allegations necessary to state the cause of action in no way suggest negligence on the part of plaintiff, there is no implication of negligence to be negatived, and an averment that plaintiff was without fault is unnecessary, and if made, is mere surplusage. Nellis v. Cincinnati Traction Co., 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 527.

13. Where a complaint alleges that the damages set up were caused solely by acts of defendant, it shows by necessary inference that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. Indiana Nitroglycerine & Torpedo Co. v. Lippencott Glass Co. [Ind.] 75 N. E. 649.

14. See 4 C. L. 781, n. 19.

15. Ward v. Danzeizen, 111 Ill. App. 163.

16. Where the immaturity of the plaintiff is set out in an action for damages sustained in the service of the defendant, and the answer is a general denial and contributory negligence is not pleaded, the rule which requires the plaintiff to show that he was without fault does not apply, and the silence of the jury upon that question does not amount to a finding against the plaintiff. Ginn v. Myrick, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 448. When plaintiff's evidence and pleadings do not tend to show contributory negligence, the defense is not available unless pleaded; hence, where answer is general denial and plea of contributory negligence, such plea is not mere surplusage, and a motion to make more definite will lie. Nellis v. Cincinnati Traction Co., 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 527.

Contra: Contributory negligence may be proven under a general denial. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Robbins [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 804. Though contributory negligence is matter of defense it may be proved under a general denial. Roberts v. Terre Haute Elec. Co. [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 895.

17. Where plaintiff's evidence shows contributory negligence, the defense is available though not pleaded. Kappes v. Brown Shoe Co. [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 1158. Where plaintiff's evidence shows contributory negligence, defendant is entitled to take advantage of the defense though it is not specially pleaded; thus, it was available though defendant's plea of contributory negligence had been stricken. Engelking v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 187 Mo. 158, 86 S. W. 89.

18. Southern R. Co. v. Branyon [Ala.] 39 So. 675.

between the two defenses;[19] nor does the plea of contributory negligence, when properly pleaded, admit the negligence as charged in the petition.[20]

Issues and proof.[21]—Plaintiff must prove his case as pleaded,[22] and proof of negligence not alleged is excluded,[23] as a recovery cannot be based thereon.[24] If several acts of negligence are relied on, proof of one or more of those well pleaded, as the cause of the injury, is sufficient.[25] Where particular acts of negligence are charged, plaintiff will be confined thereto though the petition contains also a general charge of negligence.[26] To sustain a joint judgment against defendants sued jointly, the evidence must show that the acts of negligence co-operated concurrently or in continuous successive order to produce the injury.[27] If he fails to show joint liability, plaintiff may amend and proceed against the party shown to be at fault.[28]

20. [Conflict noted.] Jackson v. Natchez & W. R. Co., 114 La. 981, 38 So. 701. A plea of contributory negligence, coupled with a plea of not guilty, is not an admission of negligence; the case may be tried upon either or both defenses. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearce [Ala.] 39 So. 72.

22. Where a complaint charges that a fire was started by sparks from the engine blown upon the building by the wind it is not supported by proof that the fire spread from the right of way. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. McFall [Ind.] 76 N. E. 400. No variance where it was alleged that a boy was injured by a live wire on a certain street and the proof showed that the boy reached through a fence and caught hold of the wire which was hanging from a tree in a neighboring yard. Lynchburg Tel. Co. v. Booker, 103 Va. 594, 50 S. E. 148. Where complaint alleged negligence in ordering plaintiff to jump from a moving train, and the answer denied negligence, instructions authorizing a recovery without finding negligence were erroneous. Burton v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 111 Mo. App. 617, 86 S. W. 503.

23. Recovery, if any, must be on ground negligence alleged, or which constitute the res gestae. Hudgins v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 974. It is error to admit evidence of negligence not charged in the complaint. Stenger v. Buffalo Union Furnace Co., 109 App. Div. 183, 95 N. Y. S. 793. In action for injuries to child, proof that he was non sui juris was inadmissible, that fact not being alleged. Roberts v. Terre Haute Elec. Co. [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 895. Where a specific act of negligence is alleged, an allegation that plaintiff's injuries were caused by defendant's negligence and not by any act of plaintiff is not a general allegation of negligence under which evidence of acts not charged may be introduced. Albin v. Seattle Elec. Co. [Wash.] 82 P. 145.

24. Recovery, if any must be on ground alleged. Wabash R. Co. v. Warren, 113 Ill. App. 172; Bartz v. Chicago City R. Co., 116 Ill. App. 554. Plaintiff must prove the specific acts of negligence charged. Tucker v. Central of Georgia R. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 128. Plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon proof of the specific acts of negligence charged. Augusta R. & Elec. Co. v. Weekly [Ga.] 52 S. E. 444. Plaintiff can recover only for negligence alleged even though other causal negligence of defendant be proved. Chicago City R. Co. v. Bruley, 215 Ill. 464, 74 N. E. 441. When declaration is for common-law negligence, there can be no recovery for statutory negligence. Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Robizas, 111 Ill. App. 49. Refusal to charge jury not to consider any negligence not pleaded was error. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 72 Ohio St. 586, 74 N. E. 1071. The negligence alleged in the complaint must be established, and an instruction which does not so limit the right of recovery is erroneous. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Thrasher [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 829. Judgment for plaintiff reversed where court submitted a theory including negligence not charged. Politowitz v. Citizens' Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 1031. Where negligence charged was permitting stairway "to become slippery and dangerous" it was reversible error for the charge to permit a recovery for failure to properly light the stairway. Reeves v. Fourteenth St. Store, 96 N. Y. S. 448. Where complaint charged failure to guard excavation near highway, so as to render the latter safe, there could be no recovery upon proof that excavation was 2 to 5 feet from highway and plaintiff knowingly left the highway and went upon the private premises. Crimmins v. United Engineering & Contracting Co., 96 N. Y. S. 1032.

25. Dutro v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 111 Mo. App. 258, 86 S. W. 915. Instruction requiring plaintiff to prove every allegation of every count held erroneous. Harvey v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 116 Ill. App. 507. A plaintiff may plead in one paragraph different acts of negligence and upon the trial it is sufficient if he prove such negligence charged as will establish his case, and this may be a single act of negligence. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Robbins [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 804.

26. Politowitz v. Citizens' Tel. Co. [Mo.] App.] 90 S. W. 1031.

27. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Van Elderen [C. C. A.] 137 F. 557. Where suit is brought against two defendants for joint negligence, there can be no recovery upon the joint action where it appears that there was no community of fault by the two defendants in the act which occasioned the injury. Sturzebecker v. Inland Traction Co., 211 Pa. 156, 60 A. 583.

28. Where counsel refused to amend, though no concert of action was shown, a

Under a plea of not guilty it may be proved that the damage alleged resulted from a cause other than that charged in the complaint.[29] Where a petition charges a joint tort against two defendants, and the answer is a general denial, one of the defendants may show that the other is an independent contractor and that negligence of his servants caused the injury complained of.[30]

Evidence. Admissibility.[31]—Negligence, like any other fact, may be proved by circumstantial evidence;[32] hence, evidence of the circumstances of an accident[33] tending to show the conduct of the parties[34] or to explain or excuse conduct alleged to have been negligent[35] is admissible. Usually, evidence must be confined to the time and place in issue;[36] but other evidence is sometimes admitted to show notice or knowledge[37] or to prove a negligent course of conduct.[38] Evidence of repairs or precautions subsequent to an injury is inadmissible.[39]

29. An answer in a trespass case categorically denying the numbered paragraphs of the statement of claim is equivalent to a plea of not guilty, and is supported by proof that the damage claimed resulted from some cause other than that alleged; such other cause need not be specified or alluded to in the plea. Siegfried v. South Bethlehem Borough, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 456. Thus, in an action for damages alleged to be due to defective sewers, defendant may under such a plea, prove that an extraordinary flood caused the injury. Id.

33. Evidence of circumstances surrounding accident at street crossing, including absence of a lookout, is admissible. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Mayer, 112 Ill. App. 149. Presumptions and burden of proof.[40]—The burden is upon the plaintiff to prove negligence of the defendant[41] as the proximate cause of the injury complained of.[42] This burden is sustained by a preponderance of evidence[43] fairly and reasonably tending to establish the facts essential to a recovery.[44] Evidence which merely raises a surmise or conjecture as to the existence of such facts is insufficient.[45]

42. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 61 A. 189; Kearns v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 131; Ramsbottom v. Atlantic Coast R. Line Co., 138 N. C. 38, 50 S. E. 448; Missourl, etc., R. Co. v. Greenwood [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 10, 89 S. W. 810. In action for wrongful death, plaintiff has burden of proof to show negligence and that such negligence caused the death. Pegram v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 51 S. E. 975.

43. Negligence of defendant need not be shown beyond a reasonable doubt to be the cause of injury; a preponderance of evidence is sufficient. Southern R. Co. v. Railey Bros., 26 Ky. L. R. 53, 80 S. W. 786.

44. A verdict cannot rest upon conjecture; there must be evidence fairly tending to show negligence as the cause of injury. Stewart v. Van Deventer Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 562. Plaintiff need not prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt; to make a prima facie case he need only make it appear more probable that injury resulted from negligence complained of than that it resulted from some other cause. Wood's Adm'x v. Southern R. Co. [Va.] 52 S. E. 371. The plaintiff must show more than a probability of a negligent act. Southern R. Co. v. Hall's Adm'r, 102 Va. 135, 45 S. E. 867. Evidence sufficient to support verdict against defendant where plaintiff's son was struck by an automobile while crossing the street. Spina v. New York Transp. Co., 96 N. Y. S. 270. Evidence that a boiler was old, rusty, cracked and patched, and that an explosion occurred at a point where these defects were, was sufficient to show negligence in its use. Davis v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 552. Negligence may be proved by circumstantial evidence but the circumstances must be such as to reasonably lead up to and establish the fact to be proved. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Greenwood [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 10, 89 S. W. 810.

45. The proof must reasonably tend to establish the essential fact; evidence which merely raises a surmise or conjecture as to such fact is insufficient to support a verdict. Byrd v. Southern Exp. Co. [N. C.] 51 S. E. 851. In an action for wrongful death based on delay of defendant in forwarding medicine for boy ill with typhoid fever, the physician in charge testified that the medicine was needful, and that the chances for recovery would have been better had the medicine arrived on time; he would not say that recovery would have resulted had timely delivery been made, nor that recovery would in such case have been probable. Held, evidence insufficient to establish defendant's negligence as proximate cause of boy's death. Id. Evidence held insufficient to warrant reasonably the inference that failure of engineer to stop engine sooner was proximate cause of crossing accident. Kearns v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 131. There can be no recovery when situation disclosed by evidence is equally consistent with the absence as with the existence of negligence. McDonough v. James Reilly Repair & Supply Co., 93 N. Y. S. 491. Where workmen went into an elevator, the door being open, to wait for the operator, and one stood partly within and partly without the elevator and was killed by the sudden starting of the elevator, which was shown to be in perfect condition, no negligence of the owner of the building or contractor in charge of elevator was shown. Green v. Urban Contracting & Heating Co., 94 N. Y. S. 743. Where conductor was thrown from platform of his car by a sudden jerk, while car was being hauled by servants of defendant—not plaintiff's master—and the cause of the jerk was not shown, there could be no recovery for injuries suffered. McGinness v. Third Ave. R. Co., 104 App. Div. 342, 93 N. Y. S. 787. Evidence held

Negligence is not to be presumed from the mere fact of injury.[46] But the manner of the occurrence of an injury and the attendant facts and circumstances may well warrant the inference of negligence,[47] as where the instrumentality causing the injury is under the sole control of the defendant,[48] and the accident is one which does not ordinarily happen if due care is used.[49] When applicable, the res ipsa loquitur rule operates only to make a prima facie case,[50] sufficient to go to the insufficient to prove that defendants had caused injury to plaintiff's building by negligence in blasting operations. Luria v. Cusick, 93 N. Y. S. 507. Where hostler pulled lever on engine to back it, and the lever flew back and the engine went forward into a turntable pit and injured him, but he did not prove any defect in the engine, mere proof of such injury did not show negligence of the master. Green v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 52 S. E. 45. No recovery where evidence did not show greater probability that defendant's negligence caused the accident than that it was otherwise caused. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Jolly's Adm'x [Ky.] 90 S. W. 977.

46. Queen Anne's R. Co. v. Reed [Del.] 59 A. 860; McDonough v. James Reilly Repair & Supply Co., 93 N. Y. S. 491; Venbuvr v. Lafayette Worsted Mills [R. I.] 60 A. 770. Mere fact that death was caused by crossed electric wires belonging to two different companies held not proof of negligence. United Electric Light & Power Co. v. State [Md.] 60 A. 248. Negligence of carrier cannot be inferred from mere bare fact that a passenger was injured. State v. United R. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 60 A. 249. Negligence will not be presumed from the mere happening of an accident; there must be some reasonable evidence of well defined acts of negligence or breach of duty by defendant causing the injury complained of. Evidence held not to show negligence where street car struck pedestrian who was walking on the track. Garvick v. United R. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 61 A. 138. The mere fact that an elevator passenger receives an injury, without regard to the circumstances which surround that fact, is not enough to throw upon the defendant the burden of explaining the cause of the injury. Edwards v. Manufacturers' Bldg. Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 646. Where passenger on a street car got her foot caught on the running board and fell when she was about to alight, the fact of such injury did not alone raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the company. Wilbur v. Rhode Island Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 601.

47. Negligence is never presumed from the mere fact of injury; but it may be inferred from that fact taken in connection with attendant facts and circumstances. Libby v. Banks, 110 Ill. App. 330. The doctrine res ipsa loquitur does not mean that negligence may be inferred from the mere fact that an accident and injury occurred; but that negligence may be inferred from some attendant fact or circumstance, taken in connection with the fact of injury. Wilbur v. Rhode Island Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 601. The fall of a loaded elevator is prima facie evidence of negligence in the person charged with the duty of operating it. Edwards v. Manufacturers' Bldg. Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 646. In each case for a tortious injury the question as to what evidence will make a prima facie case of negligence and require an explanation from the defendant will depend upon the nature and circumstances of the injury and the measure of care due from the defendant. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. South Fork Coal Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 528.

48. The maxim res ipsa loquitur applies when the cause of an accident is under the control of the party charged. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Campbell, 116 Ill. App. 356. Where regular passenger train ran into train hauling workmen, maxim was applicable. Id. Where street car passenger, exercising due care, was injured by blowing out of controller of car, over which company had control, a presumption of negligence arose. Firebaugh v. Seattle Elec. Co. [Wash.] 82 P. 995. Evidence that a fire has been started by sparks from an engine is presumptive evidence of negligence on the part of the operators of the engine. Martin v. McCrary [Tenn.] 89 S. W. 324. Where a structure on which meals were being served collapsed and injured plaintiff, defendant, who was in possession, had the burden of showing that he had used ordinary care to make the structure reasonably safe. Schnizer v. Phillips, 108 App. Div. 17, 95 N. Y. S. 478.

49. When an unusual and unexpected accident happens, caused by a machine in the exclusive management, possession, or control of the defendant, the accident speaks for itself, and its mere occurrence is prima facie proof of negligence sufficient to impose on defendant the duty of showing freedom from negligence. Chicago City R. Co. v. Eick, 111 Ill. App. 452. Rule held applicable where electric car ran down a street without an attendant and caused a collision. Id. Where the place of injury is such that ordinarily no accident is to be expected unless from a careless construction, inspection, or user, and both inspection and user were at the time of the injury in the control of the party charged, and the accident happened without any voluntary act of the person injured, the doctrine res ipsa loquitur may be applied. Weber v. Lieberman, 94 N. Y. S. 460. Thus, where plaintiff was injured, while on a sidewalk looking into a show window, by going through a grating in the walk, such facts gave rise to a presumption of negligence on the part of the lessee whose duty it was to make repairs. Id. Where temporary shed built over sidewalk by defendants during building operations fell, injuring plaintiff, the doctrine res ipsa loquitur was held applicable. Lubelsky v. Silverman, 96 N. Y. S. 1056.

50. The fall of a part of building, injuring plaintiff, makes a prima facie case of negligence against the owner, sufficient, unless rebutted, to sustain a recovery by plaintiff. Connolly v. Des Moines Inv. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 400.

jury;[51] it does not shift the burden of proof.[52] Whether negligence shall be inferred from the circumstances shown,[53] and whether defendant has successfully rebutted the prima facie case made by the plaintiff,[54] are questions for the jury. The application of the res ipsa loquitur rule in the case of injuries to passengers and servants is fully treated elsewhere.[55]

In some states, plaintiff must show want of contributory negligence, as an element of his case;[56] but in most jurisdictions contributory negligence is matter of defense, and must be established by defendant[57] by a preponderance of the evi-

51. Proof that an accident occurred is sufficient to take the issue of negligence to the jury, but has no special weight as evidence of negligence. Stewart v. Van Deventer Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 562.

52. Connolly v. Des Moines Inv. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 400. Proof of the occurrence of an accident suffices only to take the issue of negligence to the jury. The operation of the res ipsa loquitur rule to this extent does not relieve plaintiff of the burden of proof nor raise any presumption in his favor. Ross v. Double Shoals Cotton Mills [N. C.] 52 S. E. 121; Stewart v. Van Deventer Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 562; Lyles v. Brannon Carbonating Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 233. Though circumstances attending an injury to a passenger are such as to raise a presumption of negligence, the burden of proof is still upon plaintiff to prove negligence by a preponderance of evidence, and the court may properly so charge the jury. Patterson v. San Francisco & S. M. Elec. R. Co., 147 Cal. 178, 81 P. 531. The burden of proving the negligence charged rests upon plaintiff throughout the trial. Thus, the burden is not shifted, where plaintiff establishes a prima facie case by proving injuries resulting from a collision between a street car and ice wagon belonging to the two defendants. Maher v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 102 App. Div. 517, 92 N. Y. S. 825.

53. The res ipsa loquitur doctrine simply makes proof of the occurrence of an accident evidence, the inference from which as to negligence of defendant is to be drawn by the jury. Lyles v. Brannon Carbonating Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 233.

54. Whether the prima facie case made by the application of the res ipsa loquitur rule has been overcome by defendant is for the jury. Chicago City R. Co. v. Eick, 111 Ill. App. 452. Where blowing out of controller of street car caused injury to passenger and witnesses for company said they did not know cause of its blowing out, and that sometimes the cause could not be learned, and plaintiff showed several possible causes, all within control of defendant, whether defendant had overcome presumption of negligence was for jury. Firebaugh v. Seattle Elec. Co. [Wash.] 82 P. 995.

56. Buchholtz v. Incorporated Town of Radcliffe [Iowa] 105 N. W. 336; Connolly v. Des Moines Inv. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 400. One complaining of injury through negligence of another must make it appear that on his own part he was in the exercise of due care. Calloway v. Agar Packing Co. [Iowa] 104 N. W. 721. No recovery for death where deceased got off a street car and went around behind it and was struck by car on other track. Axelrod v. New York City R. Co., 109 App. Div. 87, 95 N. Y. S. 1072. When there is neither direct nor circumstantial evidence showing the presence or absence of contributory negligence, plaintiff cannot recover without some affirmative proof of freedom from fault. Scialo v. Steffens, 94 N. Y. S. 305. The question of defendant's negligence should not be submitted to the jury unless there is evidence of freedom of contributory negligence sufficient to go to the jury. Larsen v. United States Mortg. & Trust Co., 104 App. Div. 76, 93 N. Y. S. 610.

Rep. 29, 87 S. W. 863. Burden of proving contributory negligence is on defendant by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 359a. Diamond Block Coal Co. v. Cuthbertson [Ind.] 73 N. E. 818; Davis v. Mercer Lumber Co., 164 Ind. 413, 73 N. E. 899; Roberts v. Terre Haute Elec. Co. [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 323; Union Traction Co. v. Sullivan [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 116; New Castle Bridge Co. v. Doty [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 557; Fletcher v. Kelly [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 813; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Robbins [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 804. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 359a, applies though the cause of action arose in another state. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Vandenberg, 164 Ind. 470, 73 N. E. 990. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 359a, a person injured in a collision at a railroad crossing is presumed to have been in the exercise of due care, and the burden of proving the contrary rests, throughout the case, on defendant. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Reed [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 50. Contributory negligence is strictly defensive and properly no evidence thereof should be admitted until after the close of plaintiff's case. Owen v. Portage Tel. Co. [Wis.] 105 N. W. 924. Affirmative evidence of due care by plaintiff is unnecessary; it may be inferred from circumstances and from a lack of evidence of a want of due care. Stevens v. United Gas & Elec. Co. [N. H.] 60 A. 848. Contributory negligence is a defense in the federal courts but the burden thereon is on defendant, since due care by plaintiff or the person injured is presumed. Ward v. Dampskibselskabet Kjoebenhaven, 136 F. 502. Where there was evidence from which the character of plaintiff's conduct could be determined, it was error to instruct that it would be presumed that he stopped, looked, and listened before crossing a street railway tract. Los Angeles Traction Co. v. Conneally [C. C. A.] 136 F. 104.

dence.[58] All the evidence in the case is to be considered on the issue;[59] and if contributory negligence is disclosed by plaintiff's pleadings[60] or evidence,[61] the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the defense so shown, though he introduces no proof of it.

Questions of law and fact.[62]—Ordinarily, negligence,[63] contributory negli-

58. New Castle Bridge Co. v. Doty [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 557. A preponderance of evidence is sufficient to establish contributory negligence; instruction that it must be shown by evidence "clear and convincing," error. Sanders v. Aiken Mfg. Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 679. Defendant must prove contributory negligence by a preponderance of evidence. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Anglin [Tex.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 104, 89 S. W. 966. Contributory negligence need only be established by a preponderance of the evidence, and it is error to require it to be proved by a preponderance "to the satisfaction of the jury." El Paso Elec. R. Co. v. Kitt [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 678. It is error in a negligence case to say that the defendant must "satisfy" the jury as to the claim of contributory negligence; or to say that the defendant was bound to use such guards or warnings as would "prevent an accident" to a person using ordinary care. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Sivey, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 221.

59. A charge that defendant is bound to prove contributory negligence by a preponderance of evidence is erroneous because it deprives defendant of the benefit of any evidence adduced by plaintiff which may tend to show contributory negligence. City of Indianapolis v. Cauley, 164 Ind. 304, 73 N. E. 691; Indianapolis & E. R. Co. v. Barnes [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 583. An instruction that defendant may prove contributory negligence under a general denial and that the burden of proving such negligence is on defendant, is not erroneous as withdrawing plaintiff's evidence from the consideration of the jury on the issue. Town of Winamac v. Stout [Ind.] 75 N. E. 158.

60. As where the declaration alleges facts which prima facie show contributory negligence, but such facts are coupled with matter in avoidance. Simms v. Forbes [Miss.] 38 So. 546.

61. Simms v. Forbes [Miss.] 38 So. 546. Contributory negligence need not be shown by defendant's evidence alone; it is sufficient to defeat a recovery that it is established by a preponderance of all the evidence, including that of plaintiff; and if plaintiff's own evidence shows such negligence, defendant need not introduce any proof, but is entitled to the benefit of the defense so shown. Philadelphia B. & W. R. Co. v. Hand [Md.] 61 A. 285. If plaintiff's evidence and all just inferences therefrom show contributory negligence, it is the duty of the court to direct a verdict even though defendant introduces no evidence to support his plea. Bridges v. Jackson Elec. R., Light & Power Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 788.

Negligence is a mixed question of law and fact. Jones v. American Warehouse Co. [N. C.] 51 S. E. 106. Nonsuit cannot be granted on ground that plaintiff has failed to prove want of ordinary care by defendant unless no other legitimate conclusion can be drawn from the proof by the jury. King v. Zierz [N. J. Law] 62 A. 287. When, in order to determine the nature of an act claimed to have been negligent, it is necessary to pass upon all the attendant facts and circumstances, the determination of the question is for the jury. United R. & Elec. Co. v. Watkins [Md.] 62 A. 234. If there is any evidence of negligence upon which the jury can properly find a verdict, or if the conclusion therefrom is debatable or rests in doubt, though the facts are undisputed, or gence,[64] and proximate cause,[65] are questions of fact for the jury; but if the facts are undisputed and such that only one reasonable conclusion can be drawn therefrom, such issues may be properly passed upon by the court.[66] The capacity of children over seven years of age is for the jury.[67]

if the evidence is conflicting in regard to any material fact, it becomes a question of fact for the jury. Queen Anne's R. Co. v. Reed [Del.] 59 A. 860. As a matter of law an elevator is not a place of danger, and to give a special charge to the contrary would be error. Breuer v. Frank, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 581. Even in cases where the res ipsa loquitur rule is applicable, it is error for the court to charge that certain acts do or do not constitute negligence, where there is no statute or ordinance on the subject; the question is for the jury. Augusta R. & Elec. Co. v. Weekly [Ga.] 52 S. E. 444. It is error for the court to tell the jury what facts do or do not constitute negligence unless there is a statute or valid municipal ordinance which in terms or effect declares the act referred to to be negligence. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Hudson [Ga.] 51 S. E. 29. Where evidence was conflicting as to negligence of a driver who dumped lumber so that it rolled on plaintiff, the decision of the trial judge on the question, based on a decision as to the credibility of the witnesses, was not disturbed. McDonnell v. New Orleans Cypress Co. [La.] 38 So. 896. Whether negligence of driver of vehicle or motorman caused collision. Palmer Transfer Co. v. Paducah R. & Light Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 515. Whether the evidence shows that an accident was the direct result of an act of God is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Boyce [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 153, 87 S. W. 395. If different minds might honestly draw from the testimony (from which negligence of the defendant could reasonably be inferred) different conclusions as to the cause of the accident, that question is for the jury. Ferguson v. Central R. Co., 71 N. J. Law, 647, 60 A. 382.

66. Negligence for court. McAllister v. Jung, 112 Ill. App. 138; McIntyre v. Orner [Ind.] 76 N. E. 750; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v.

Instructions.[68]—They should cover all issues raised by the pleadings and supported by evidence,[69] but should not submit issues not so raised and supported.[70] "Negligence," "ordinary care," and "proximate cause," should be properly defined when the terms are used in other instructions.[71] Where an instruction clearly requires the jury to find all the facts which go to make up the negligence as charged in the petition, the failure to use the word "negligently" in the charge does not render it erroneous.[72]

Haas [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1003. When it appears from the undisputed facts that the injury cannot by any fair process of reasoning be attributed to the negligence complained of, the question is one of law. Terminal R. Ass'n v. Larkins, 112 Ill. App. 366. If plaintiff fails to produce any evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, or if no fair inference of negligence can be drawn from the evidence favorable to plaintiff, assuming that such evidence is true, it becomes the duty of the court to nonsuit the plaintiff, or to direct a verdict for defendant. Queen Anne's R. Co. v. Reed [Del.] 59 A. 860. Though the facts are undisputed, the question of negligence is for the jury if more than one reasonable inference might be drawn therefrom. Sharp v. Erie R. Co. [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 923.

Contributory negligence for court. Christensen v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 708. Evidence being clear and certain, unconflicting, and leaving no room for doubt, contributory negligence is for the court. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearce [Ala.] 39 So. 72. Where from admitted facts all reasonable minds must conclude that plaintiff's negligence alone caused the injury, a verdict may be directed for defendant. Hewes v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 217 Ill. 500, 75 N. E. 515; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Schwanenfeldt [Neb.] 105 N. W. 1101. If taking the evidence most strongly in favor of plaintiff, the jury could not properly find that he was exercising due care, the court should direct a verdict. Patterson v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co., 111 Ill. App. 441. The court may pass upon contributory negligence if there is no room for doubt as to the character of some prominent and decisive act done by plaintiff. United R. & Elec. Co. v. Weir [Md.] 62 A. 588. When facts are not disputed and the inferences and conclusions therefrom are indisputable, the question of contributory negligence is for the court. Bridges v. Jackson Elec. R. Light & Power Co. [Miss.] 38 So. 788. The court may find as a matter of law that certain conduct constitutes contributory negligence per se, when it is such an act that all men must conclude that it was the proximate cause of the injury complained of. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., v. Lohe, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 144.

67. Whether children over 7 have been guilty of contributory negligence is a question of fact. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 111 Ill. App. 234. The question as to the measure of capacity of an infant more than fourteen years of age is a question for the jury, notwithstanding the legal presumption that he is sui juris. Columbus R. Co. v. Connor, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 361. No presumption arises as to whether a boy eleven years of age can be charged with contributory negligence, but his capacity to avoid danger is a question to be left entirely to the jury. Cincinnati Traction Co. v. Blackson, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 233. Child of 8 injured while playing on turntable. Berg v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 293. Where conduct of child was such that it would constitute contributory negligence in an adult, it was properly left to the jury to say whether the child was capable of contributory negligence. Chambers v. Milner Coal & R. Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 170.

69. Where contributory negligence is pleaded and supported by proof, defendant is entitled to an instruction thereon, grouping the facts relied on. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Everett [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 890, 89 S. W. 457. Two distinct though concurring acts of negligence being charged, each party has a right to proper instructions on each ground relied on, and a general verdict cannot stand if there was error in instructing or refusing to instruct on either ground. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Voelker [C. C. A.] 129 F. 522.

70. Instruction should not be given on contributory negligence if there is no evidence thereof. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Nelson [Ky.] 89 S. W. 200. Where wilful injury was not claimed, an instruction that if plaintiff was a trespasser or licensee he could not recover without proof of willful or gross negligence, was error. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Thrasher [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 829. Submission of issue of contributory negligence held prejudicial error where there was no evidence to support it. Clingan v. Dixon County [Neb.] 105 N. W. 710. Judgment reversed where instructions submitted negligence not charged in petition. Politowitz v. Citizens Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 1031.

71. In an action based on negligence, the court should define the terms "ordinary care" and "negligence" as used in other instructions. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Nelson [Ky.] 89 S. W. 200. In an action based on negligence, negligence should be defined, though ordinary care is also defined. Covington Saw Mill & Mfg. Co. v. Drexilius, 27 Ky. L. R. 903, 87 S. W. 266. Failure to define proximate cause was not error when the court charged that negligence must be found to have been the "direct cause" of the injury, since a detailed and technical definition might have only confused the jury. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coutourie [C. C. A.] 135 F. 465. A special charge is properly refused, where it holds plaintiff to the exercise of proper care and caution, without defining what would constitute proper care and caution under the circumstances of the case under consideration. Breuer v. Frank, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 581.

Verdicts and findings.[73]—If special findings are inconsistent with a general verdict, the verdict will be set aside.[74]

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.[75]

§ 1. Elements and indicia.[76]—A negotiable instrument is an unconditional written promise or order[77] to pay to a certain person[78] or his order or to bearer[79] a certain amount of money[80] at a certain time.[81]

The time of payment[82] or the fact of the maturity of the instrument at some time must be morally certain,[83] and the certainty must exist at the time the instrument is executed.[84]

The amount[85] must be certain.[86] It is certain if it can be rendered so by computation.[87] A promise to pay a stated sum plus or minus a definite amount or discount is certain.[88] The amount is not rendered uncertain by a provision for exchange[89] and by the weight of authority a provision for attorney's fees does not

74. Where special findings show contributory negligence on part of plaintiff, a general verdict for plaintiff should be set aside on motion. National Brass Mfg. Co. v. Rawlings [Kan.] 80 P. 628.

75. Scope of topic: Matters of general contract law have been excluded to Contracts, 5 C. L. 664, though arising out of suit on a negotiable instrument. The doctrines peculiar to such instruments mark the scope of the topic. Compare post, Non-Negotiable Paper, 6 C. L.

77. "Deposited with me by David Luther eight hundred dollars in cash and three hundred dollars in Yorktown bonds, to be delivered on call" is a promissory note and governed by the rules of law pertaining to that class of instruments. Luther v. Crawford, 116 Ill. App. 351. The negotiable instruments law defines a bill of exchange as an unconditional order drawn by one person on another, and a check as a demand bill drawn on a bank. Instrument held a bill of exchange and not a check. Amsinck v. Rogers, 103 App. Div. 428, 93 N. Y. S. 87.

82. See 4 C. L. 789. A provision that without notice the payee or holder may extend the time of payment destroys negotiability. Rosenthal v. Rambo [Ind.] 76 N. E. 404. Act May 16, 1901 § 5, P. L. 194 makes a note containing a provision for confession of judgment before maturity, non-negotiable. Milton Nat. Bank v. Beaver, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 494.

83. Joseph v. Catron [N. M.] 81 P. 439. A note payable upon the confirmation by congress of a certain land grant is not negotiable. Id.

86. Loring v. Anderson [Minn.] 103 N. W. 722. There must be no uncertainty as to the amount called for at any particular time. Smith v. First State Bank [Minn.] 104 N. W. 369. Where one part of a note recites a consideration of $1,500 but other parts and the coupons attached as well as the mortgage securing it recites that it was given for $1,000 the amount is definite. Griggs v. Carson [Kan.] 81 P. 471.

destroy certainty;[90] but certainty is destroyed by provisions for costs and collection charges[91] or for accelerated maturity if interest is not paid when due.[92] A provision for compound interest does not destroy negotiability[93] unless under a rule that the instrument must contain no condition not certain of fulfillment.[94]

Words of negotiability[95] must be contained in the instrument.[96]

The instrument must be delivered.[97] The acts which constitute a delivery are not dissimilar from those required to complete the execution of any other contract.[98] Delivery before date does not affect validity.[99]

§ 2. Form and interpretation and effect.[1]—The amount must be stated in the body of the instrument,[2] but where stated on the margin a bona fide holder may fill in a blank with such amount and enforce the instrument at law,[3] and if the amount was left blank by mistake, equity may correct it.[4] That the instrument is post dated does not destroy negotiability.[5] An instrument becomes non-negotiable after maturity.[6] In Indiana the instrument must be payable at a bank within the state.[7] A certificate of deposit is negotiable.[8] A mortgage is not.[9] Warehouse

A provision for exchange and collection charges renders the amount uncertain. Smith v. First State Bank [Minn.] 104 N. W. 369. See 15 Yale L. J. 200.

94. Under a rule that the instrument must contain no condition not certain of fulfillment, a provision that if not paid when due principal and interest shall bear an increased rate of interest destroys negotiability. Cornish v. Woolverton [Mont.] 81 P. 4.

95. See 4 C. L. 789.

96. An admission of execution of an instrument payable to a certain person or his order admits the negotiability of the paper. Brown v. Feldwert [Or.] 80 P. 414.

Possession by a bona fide holder held insufficient to show delivery where there was uncontradicted evidence that delivery had been refused, that the payee had surreptitiously gotten possession of them, and that the maker on discovering their absence had demanded their return. Godman v. Henby [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 423.

2. That the amount stated on the margin is in words as well as in figures does not supply the omission to insert it in the body of the instrument. Chestnut v. Chestnut [Va.] 52 S. E. 348. A note with a blank amount is not admissible to prove an allegation of a specified sum due. Id.

3. Chestnut v. Chestnut [Va.] 52 S. E. 348. See 4 Mich. L. R. 474. Unless it appears that the amount was left blank by mistake it is presumed that the holder has a right to fill it in unless he has delayed doing so unreasonably. Chestnut v. Chestnut [Va.] 52 S. E. 348.

Note: This holding seems to be in accordance with the weight of authority. Hollen v. Davis, 59 Iowa, 444, 44 Am. Rep. 688; Smith v. Smith, 1 R. I. 398, 53 Am. Dec. 652; Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 86, 86a. In Strickland v. Holbrooke, 75 Cal. 268, the contrary view is taken upon the theory that it is immaterial whether the amount follows or precedes the promise. In the other cases the view seems to be that the marginal figures are not a part of the instrument but aids to remove ambiguities. Bank v. Hyde, 13 Conn. 279; Merritt v. Boyden, 191 Ill. 136, 85 Am. St. Rep. 246; Prim v. Hammel, 134 Ala. 652, 92 Am. St. Rep. 52.—See 4 Mich. L. R. 474.

7. Under the laws of Indiana notes payable in bank in another state are not negotiable. Ray v. Baker [Ind.] 74 N. E. 619.

8. Title to the deposit passes by indorsement of the certificate. Hanna v. Manufacturers' Trust Co., 104 App. Div. 90, 93 N. Y. S. 304. A certificate of deposit payable to the depositor's order on demand is negotiable under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7515. First Nat. Bank v. Stapf [Ind.] 74 N. E. 987.

receipts possess attributes of negotiability.[10] Municipal warrants[11] and bills of lading[12] are not negotiable, and if an agent had not authority to issue bills of lading for goods not received,[13] such facts may be shown as against bona fide indorsee.[14]

Matters bearing on execution, interpretation and validity,[15] including the capacity of the parties, are governed by the law of the place of execution.[16] Matters connected with the payment,[17] including presentation, notice, demand, protest and damages for nonpayment[18] by the law of the place where the instrument by its terms is payable, matters respecting the remedy to be pursued,[19] including the bringing of suits, service of process and admissibilty of evidence[20] by the law of the place where action is brought, the validity of an indorsement,[21] and the indorser's liability,[22] are governed by the law of the place where the indorsement is made.

A statute abolishing grace applies to all instruments falling within its terms.[25]

An instrument will be construed according to the plain import of its terms.[26] Instruments executed contemporaneously are to be construed together.[27] A provision for attorney's fees should be enforced if the condition is broken.[28] possess the same perfect negotiability as a note and the right of the mortgagor to contest its validity is not to be determined from the bona fides of the holder but from the fact of whether the mortgagor is estopped. Hillard v. Taylor, 114 La. 883, 38 So. 594.

Note: It would seem from the conclusion of the court that it holds no more than that a mortgage is assignable [Editor].

22. Colonial Nat. Bank v. Duerr, 108 App. Div. 215, 95 N. Y. S. 810. The liability of an indorser is governed by the law of the place where the indorsement is made and not of the place of presentment. Amsinck v. Rogers, 103 App. Div. 428, 93 N. Y. S. 87.

23. Kirby's Dig. § 513, declaring void notes given in payment of a patented article if they do not show on their face for what they were given applies to a sale of an interest in a right to sell a patented article in a given territory. John Woods v. Carl [Ark.] 87 S. W. 621.

24. A statute providing that notes given in payment of a patented article or patent right are void if they do not show on their face for what they were given is not repugnant to the Federal constitutional provision that congress may promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing to inventors the right to their discoveries. John Woods & Sons v. Carl [Ark.] 87 S. W. 621.

25. Comp. Laws 1897, § 4877, abolishing grace as to checks drawn on a bank payable at a specified date, applies to an order or check drawn on a bank payable 90 days after date. Jocque v. McRae [Mich.] 105 N. W. 874.

26. Note reciting "90 days after date we promise to pay," etc., followed by "Payments to be ten dollars per month or more if maker desires," is an instalment note. Crowe v. Beem [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 302.

27. Where an instrument refers to another they must be construed together and conditions in the one referred to may render the former non-negotiable. Cornish v. Wolverton [Mont.] 81 P. 4. Negotiable instrument and a written agreement executed contemporaneously qualifying their effect are to be construed together. Myrick v. Purcell [Minn.] 103 N. W. 902.

Maturity is to be determined by computing from the date of the instrument.[29] A note payable on demand after date is demand paper.[30] An agreement to extend the time of payment until the holder is dissatisfied with his security does not make the instrument demand paper.[31] An agreement to extend the time of payment must be definite[32] and in some states is required by statute to be in writing.[33] Such an agreement is not conclusively implied from an acceptance of interest in advance.[34] An agreement to extend the time of payment of a debt is not to be implied from the acceptance of a note.[35] An omission to make interest payable at a particular date may be supplied by other recitals.[36]

A joint and several instrument may be shown to be a contract of each maker to pay only his proportionate share.[37] An instrument signed by one as an individual is presumed to be his personal obligation though he is secretary and treasurer of a corporation.[38] If an instrument appears on its face to have been executed in a representative capacity it will be regarded as the obligation of the principal,[39] and where the payee has notice that the maker signs as a representative, the maker is not personally liable,[40] but the mere addition of description letters to the signer's name will not exempt him from personal liability,[41] especially where the consideration is appropriated by him.[42] That the payee's name is followed by letters indicating his official capacity in an association does not show that the note was payable to him other than in his own right.[43]

33. Payment of interest beyond maturity does not extend the time of payment under a rule that an extending agreement must be in writing. Breneke v. Smallman [Cal. App.] 83 P. 302.

34. The acceptance of interest in advance is prima facie but not conclusive evidence of a contract to delay the time of payment. Kellam v. Brode [Cal. App.] 82 P. 213.

35. Where a creditor takes from his debtor a note payable at a future day, on account of his claim, the law raises no implication that he agrees to give time until the maturity of the note but the agreement must be proved as a fact. Hummelstown Brownstone Co. v. Knerr, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 465.

36. The words "with the privilege of paying one or more thousand at interest date" makes interest payable annually and supplies an omission to make it payable at a particular date. Illinois Nat. Bank v. Trustees of Schools (Two cases consolidated), 111 Ill. App. 189.

37. By a contract executed contemporaneously. City Deposit Bank Co. v. Green [Iowa] 103 N. W. 96.

38. Sheldon Canal Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 206.

39. "Thirty days after date we promise to pay," etc., signed "The Akron White Sand & Stone Co., L. K. M. Secy. & Treas. D. B. Aungst, Pres." is the note of the company. Aungst v. Creque, 72 Ohio St. 551, 74 N. E. 1073.

40. Where the payee knows that the maker executes as a trustee and does not intend to incur personal liability, a note signed by one as trustee imposes no personal liability though the note does not on its face show that the consideration was for the benefit of creditors. Kerby v. Ruegamer, 107 App. Div. 491, 95 N. Y. S. 408.

41. Under the negotiable instruments law the mere addition of words describing the signer as filling a representative capacity without disclosing his principal, does not exempt him from personal liability. This is the rule notwithstanding the lithographed form bore the name of the corporation as well as the corporate seal. Daniel v. Glidden, 38 Wash. 556, 80 P. 811.

42. A note signed by corporation officials with their official designations is their personal obligations where the loan was procured by false representations and the money was not turned over to the corporation. Daniel v. Glidden, 38 Wash. 556, 80 P. 811.

43. Luster v. Robinson [Ark.] 88 S. W. 896.

agreement that he signs in a different capacity,[46] and payment by him extinguishes the debt.[47] That the term "indorse" was used does not reduce his liability.[48] In Kentucky an accommodation indorser is liable as a surety.[49] In Vermont it is held that if one not a party signs at any time he is prima facie a maker.[50] Parol evidence is admissible to show the capacity in which he signed where the indorsement is in blank.[51] But if he signs pursuant to an agreement, his character is to be determined from the terms of the agreement.[52] In Nebraska persons who indorse in blank, paper payable to the maker who afterwards indorses it to another are in the absence of any special agreement liable as indorsees,[53] and such character cannot be changed by parol evidence.[54] In equity it may be shown that the apparent maker is in fact only a surety.[55] This is the rule in Kentucky in an action at law.[56] As a general rule parol evidence is inadmissible to show an agreement between indorsers and indorsee that indorsers were not to be held liable as such.[57] A surety who executes a renewal note becomes bound as principal.[58]

§ 4. Liabilities and discharge of primary parties.[59]—A payee who negotiates paper in direct violation of his agreement not to do so is liable to the maker for the amount of the note with interest.[60]

Payment[61] at the place where the instrument is by its terms payable does not discharge the maker if the person to whom payment is made has not possession of the instrument nor authority to collect.[62] Where a payee indorses to another but retains possession, a payment to him is good though it is not indorsed by his indorsee.[63] One who pays to another than the holder has the burden of proving that the person to whom payment was made had authority to receive it.[64]

46. One who indorses before delivery without any agreement that his liability should be that of an indorser is liable as a maker. First Nat. Bank v. Guardian Trust Co., 187 Mo. 494, 86 S. W. 109. That one count in a complaint on a note is against a party as an indorser or that the note was protested is insufficient to show an agreement that one who signed before delivery should be liable as an indorser only. 63, 64. Higley v. Dennis [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 609, 88 S. W. 400.

A material alteration[65] after delivery renders the instrument void in the hands of the payee or a bona fide holder.[66] The negotiable instruments law rule that such is not the effect as to a bona fide holder not connected with the alteration does not apply to rights fixed prior to its enactment.[67] An immaterial alteration[68] or one made to make a note conform to the intention of the parties[69] will not avoid it.

Defenses between the original parties.[70]—Except as affected by the doctrine of bona fides,[71] a negotiable instrument is a contract and subject to all defenses.[72] Hence, as between the parties, all equitable defenses are available.[73] The consideration may always be inquired into[74] and want or failure of a consideration is a defense.[75] It may be shown that delivery was conditional upon the performance of an unfulfilled condition,[76] or that the instrument was accommodation paper.[77] The capacity in which a party signed may be inquired into.[78]

§ 5. Liabilities and discharge of sureties, guarantors and other anomalous parties.[79]—A surety who signs upon an unfulfilled condition is not liable to a payee with notice.[80] An extension granted at maturity without notice to a surety releases him;[81] but a mere indulgence without a valid extension agreement does not.[82] A surety is not released by the surrender of the note on receipt of a worthless check if he was not prejudiced.[83] A surety may be released by contract with the holder,[84] but such release must be in writing.[85] The surety's obligation may be barred by limitations.[86] A surety who pays is entitled to be subrogated to all rights of the creditor against his principal[87] and to contribution against co-sureties,[88] but under the statutes of California payment by a surety extinguishes the debt[89] and he is only entitled to maintain action against the maker on an implied contract of indemnity.[90] A guarantor contracts to pay if the maker does not.[91] Illegality of consideration is a defense to the guarantor on his contract of guaranty.[92]

§ 6. Negotiation and transfer generally.[93]—Notes payable to one in a firm name may be assigned by him.[94] Title to bearer paper passes by delivery,[95] and that the transfer is to enable the transferee to recover for the benefit of the transferror does not affect the validity of the transfer.[96] A written assignment is not necessary to transfer the equitable title of order paper.[97] An undelivered deed of all the grantor's property does not operate as an assignment of a note held by him.[98] Rights incident to the paper pass with an assignment of it.[99] An indorsement for transfer carries with the instrument title to collateral security.[1] The assignment of a part of several notes secured by a lien with a guaranty of payment is a waiver of the lien as to the notes retained.[2]

§ 7. Acceptance.[3]—The drawer is not liable until he accepts.[4] By accepting a check the drawer makes himself a guarantor of it.[5] In some states an acceptance must be in writing.[6] The acceptor's rights rest in the terms of the instrument entitled to contribution. Adams v. DeFrehn, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 184.

92. That the note was given for an illegal consideration is a defense available to the guarantor in an action upon the guaranty. Tandy v. Elmore-Cooper Live Stock Commission Co., 113 Mo. App. 409, 87 S. W. 614.

NOTE: The undertaking of a guarantor and that of an indorser are materially different. The contract of both is conditional, but the conditions are unlike. The contract of indorsement is primarily that of transfer; the contract of guaranty is that of security. First Nat. Bank v. Babcock, 94 Cal. 96, 29 P. 415, 28 Am. St. Rep. 94. Moreover, the contract of a guarantor is more onerous than that of an indorser. "The indorser," says Mr. Daniel, "contracts to be liable only upon condition of due presentment of the bill or note on the exact day of maturity, and due notice to him of its dishonor. And he is absolutely discharged by failure in either particular, although he may suffer no actual damage whatever. The guarantor's contract is more rigid, and he is bound to pay the amount upon a presentment made and notice given to him of dishonor, within a reasonable time. And in the event of a failure to make presentment and give notice within a reasonable time, he is not absolutely discharged from all liability, but only to the extent that he may have sustained loss or injury by the delay. The same person may be guarantor, and also indorser of a note; and in such a case, while failure to give due notice of demand and nonpayment will discharge him as indorser, he will be bound as guarantor." 2 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 1754, citing Arents v. Commonwealth, 18 Grat. [Va.] 770; Castle v. Rickly, 44 Ohio St. 490, 9 N. E. 136, 58 Am. Rep. 839; Burrow v. Zapp, 69 Tex. 476, 6 S. W. 783; Deck v. Works, 57 How. Pr. [N. accepted[7] and in collateral agreements.[8] An acceptance upon specific conditions is subject to no other,[9] but the acceptor is not liable until the performance of the condition.[10] An acceptance of a draft for a certain sum is not an acceptance of one for that sum with exchange.[11] A partial acceptance is a qualified acceptance of a particular bill.[12] An acceptance in general terms of a bill addressed to a particular place will be deemed payable there.[13] An acceptance to pay at a particular time is waived by giving a note on account payable prior to such time.[14] Where a bill shows on its face that the drawer will pay from his own funds, an indorsee who is negligent in not ascertaining the genuineness of prior indorsements is liable to the drawer from whom he has collected.[15]

As between banker and depositor, the former is held to a knowledge of the latter's signature,[16] and cannot recover from intermediate indorsers if a forged check is honored.[17]

14. Where an order is accepted payable at a certain time but the acceptor subsequently gives a note on account of the order he will be deemed to have waived the acceptance to the amount of the note and be held liable on it at maturity. Potter v. Greenberg, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 502.

15. LaFayette & Bro. v. Merchants' Bank [Ark.] 84 S. W. 700.

Note: The general rule in such cases, where money has been paid under a mistake of fact, is that it may be recovered. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Nat. Bank of Commerce, 139 Mass. 513; Thompson v. Bank, 82 N. Y. 1. But to this rule there is the well settled exception that where a draft with a forged indorsement has been put into circulation by the drawer or his agent, no recovery is allowed by the drawee as against the bona fide holder to whom he has paid. Hortsman v. Henshaw, 11 How. [N. Y.] 177. The latter class of cases are held to be analogous to those where a draft is drawn and indorsed in the name of a fictitious payee, in which case the drawer or his principal is estopped to deny its validity. Meachers v. Fort, Hill [S. C.] 227; Phillips v. Mer. Nat. Bank, 140 N. Y. 556, 37 Am. St. Rep. 596, 23 L. R. A. 554; Coggill v. Amer. Ex. Bank, 1 N. Y. 113, 49 Am. Dec. 310. By virtue of the relations in this case between the drawee and the drawer it was argued that the exception to the general rule as to mistake ought to apply, and the defendant be discharged. But the court held, very justly, it seems, that the bill of sale on the back of the draft was sufficient notice to defendant of the arrangement between drawer and drawee, to have put defendant on its guard and that the bill of sale was really a part of the draft. Thus, though the signature on the draft was genuine, the instrument itself was fraudulent and defendant must suffer the loss. Weisser v. Dennison, 10 N. Y. 69, 61 Am. Dec. 731; note 12 L. R. A. 791; 5 Cyc. 547, et seq.—3 Mich. L. R. 478.

§ 8. Indorsement.[18]—An indorsement in blank converts order paper into bearer paper,[19] and vests title in the holder, but if after indorsement the paper gets back into the hands of the payee the law converts his possession into prima facie legal title upon which suit may be predicated, and the burden is on the defendant to overcome this presumption.[20]

An indorsement in blank on a note dated and payable in a certain state is presumed to have been made in such state,[21] and the indorser is estopped as against a bona fide holder to deny that it is a contract of such state.[22]

Authority in an agent to indorse commercial paper must be expressly conferred,[23] and one who accepts such indorsement is bound to see that it is authorized.[24] The principal is not liable unless it has ratified the indorsement[25] or is estopped to deny the authority of the agent to make it.[26]

An indorsement of payment is in the nature of a receipt, not of a contract, and may be contradicted by parol.[27]

Indorser's liability.[28]—An indorser guaranties the genuineness of all prior indorsements,[29] but does not warrant to the drawee the genuineness of the signature of the drawer.[30] An indorser's liability is contingent upon failure of the maker to pay at maturity[31] due protest and notice thereof.[32] One who indorses a postdated

32. Colonial Nat. Bank v. Duerr, 108 App. Div. 215, 95 N. Y. S. 810. A complaint against an indorser showing on its face want of protest or notice of nonpayment is demurrable. Beauchamp v. Chester [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1055. Failure to demand payment or give notice of dishonor at ma-instrument is bound by the liabilities imposed by his indorsement as to all subsequent holders.[33] An indorsement for the mere purpose of passing title does not impose upon the indorser the liabilities flowing from the contract.[34] It is immaterial to an indorser having no legal defense whether the subsequent transfers of a note were made in good faith for a valuable consideration or before maturity.[35] Unless there was an understanding that indorsers should indemnify the payee, he cannot recover from them the expense of bringing a creditor's suit against the maker.[36] An indorser who is required to pay may recover from the maker the amount paid with interest from date of payment.[37] An indorser may be sued without joining the maker.[38]

Indorsers are liable inter se in the inverse order of their indorsement.[39] Under the negotiable instruments law it may be shown that indorsers have agreed as to liability otherwise than as appears from the order of indorsement.[40] As between indorser and indorsee an indorsement may be impeached for fraud.[41]

An indorsement for collection[42] makes the indorsee the mere agent of the indorser,[43] but he may sue in his own name.[44]

Discharge of indorser.[45]—An extension granted the payee discharges an indorser[46] if granted by one with authority to make the contract.[47]

§ 9. Presentment and demand.[48]—Presentment for payment is essential to charge an indorser.[49] A note payable at a bank is properly presented there though the bank is in the hands of a receiver.[50] Demand paper must be presented within a reasonable time[51] in order to charge an indorser.[52] What is due diligence depends

52. This is the rule where the effect of Gen. St. 1888, § 1859, providing that demand paper not presented within four months is on the circumstances of each case.[53] If presentation would have been useless failure to present may be excused,[54] and the question of diligence is immaterial.[55] No custom, general or special,[56] or negligence of agents,[57] will excuse want of due diligence in presenting a check for payment; but due diligence does not require the holder, in the absence of special circumstances or custom, to present it at other than banking hours.[58] Failure to present cannot be complained of if it is the result of the drawer's act.[59] One receiving a check on a distant bank is required to transmit it to the place of payment the day following receipt.[60]

§ 10. Protest and notice thereof.[61]—Foreign bills must be protested in order to charge the drawer.[62] A contract for waiver of protest is not to be extended beyond the fair import of its terms.[63]

Notice of nonpayment is essential to charge an indorser[64] or a drawer of a check.[65] That presentment is excused does not excuse notice of nonpayment.[66] The date recited in the instrument controls as to maturity for the purpose of giving notice of dishonor.[67] Notice must be given the day following date of dishonor.[68] Due diligence must be observed in delivering notice.[69] Delivery to an agent may be deemed dishonored, is waived. Hampton v. Miller [Conn.] 61 A. 952.

68. The negotiable instruments law requires notice of dishonor, if to be given at the place of business of the person entitled, to be before close of business hours on the day following dishonor; hence notice two or three days after maturity is too late. Solomon v. Cohen, 94 N. Y. S. 502.

69. Negotiable instruments law providing that notice of dishonor to charge an indorser may be given personally or through the mail to a party or his agent on his behalf is not shown to have been complied with by evidence of service on a hotel corporation by leaving the notice at the cashier's window without calling any one's attention to it. American Exch. Nat. Bank v. American Hotel Victoria Co., 103 App. Div. 372, 92 N. Y. S. 1006.

sufficient.[70] Under the negotiable instruments law a maker cannot on his own behalf give notice of protest to an accommodation indorser, yet he may give such notice as agent of the holder.[71] The fact of depositing in the post office a letter enclosing notice of protest raises a presumption that it reached its destination.[72] This is so whether it is deposited in a street mail box or in the general post office.[73] Such presumption may be rebutted by showing that the letter was not received.[74] The letter must be properly addressed,[75] but if actually received error in the address is immaterial.[76]

The certificate of protest as evidence.[77]—A notary's certificate is presumptive evidence of the facts therein certified,[78] but not of facts not stated.[79]

§ 11. New promise after discharge and waiver of presentment or the like.[80]—A waiver of notice of presentment, dishonor and protest is not a waiver of presentment and demand for payment.[81]

§ 12. Accommodation paper.[82]—An extension of time of payment is a sufficient consideration for the indorsement of one not before a party.[83] An accommodation party is liable according to the terms of the instrument though a holder knows his status.[84] The destruction of the instrument after delivery does not affect his liability.[85] Accommodation paper is not enforceable as between the accommodation signer and the person for whose benefit he signed,[86] nor in the hands of a party with notice that the signature was procured by fraud.[87] An accommodation maker who is compelled to pay may recover from the parties for whose accommodation the note was made.[88] Such an action is not one upon the note.[89]

An accommodation note made by a married woman who is prohibited by law from making such paper never becomes her obligation and the law merchant does not apply to it.[90] The provisions of the negotiable instruments law does not give validity to an accommodation note executed by a married woman in violation of law.[91]

As a general rule a corporation has no power to issue accommodation paper,[92] and is not liable on an accommodation indorsement in the hands of one who takes with knowledge of the character of the paper, though such indorsement was authorized by all the directors and a majority of the stockholders.[93] Accommodation paper of a business corporation cannot be enforced as against creditors or dissenting stockholders,[94] but the corporation itself cannot plead ultra vires.[95]

§ 13. The doctrine of bona fides. Who may be a holder.[96]—To be a bona fide holder one must take in the usual course of business,[97] before maturity,[98] for a valuable consideration[99] and without notice of infirmities.[1] The paper must be properly indorsed if it is payable to order.[2]

Once bona fide holdership always bona fide holdership,[3] consequently a bona fide holder may transfer his rights to one with notice,[4] but this rule does not apply where the paper is returned to the hands of the payee.[5]

That a note was made by the officers of a corporation payable to the corporation, indorsed in the name of the corporation and by the president and secretary is not notice that it is accommodation paper which the corporation has not power to execute. In re Troy & Cohoes Shirt Co., 136 F. 420. The fact that a banker's draft fraudulently prostances[8] or negligence, however gross,[9] is not enough. That a party discounting notes knows that the president and secretary of a corporation maker were members of the firm for whose accommodation the notes were made does not charge him with notice of the character of the notes,[10] or that it is accommodation paper which the maker had not power to execute;[11] but one who is told by an indorser that there is something wrong with the paper and not to take it cannot afterwards claim to be a bona fide holder as against such indorser whose indorsement was procured by fraud,[12] and if a holder informs a purchaser that he has no title or that he holds as agent, such purchaser is not a bona fide holder.[13] Under the negotiable instruments law, one who has knowledge of a defect in his transferror's title or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking amounts to bad faith is not a bona fide holder.[14] A purchaser who has been put upon inquiry cannot rely on information imparted by one whose interest it is to deceive him.[15] An indorsee is charged with notice of facts appearing from the face of the instrument.[16] One who takes from an officer of a corporation in payment of his personal debt the notes of such corporation does so at his peril,[17] and one who takes from an agent is bound to ascertain the scope of his authority,[18] but may rely on apparent authority.[19] An agent cured by an ex county treasurer and given by him to the treasurer in payment of a shortage in his accounts was made payable to the treasurer does not charge the county with notice of irregularity in its procurement and it may retain as against the drawers the proceeds when collected from the drawee. Negotiable paper indorsed in blank in the hands of an agent cannot be regarded by a stranger with notice of the agency as prima facie proof of title and of power of attorney to do all acts incident to ownership, but he may deal with the agent as such and rely on his apparent authority to sell. Id.

who has possession for collection only of paper indorsed in blank may be dealt with by strangers having no notice of the capacity in which he holds as the owner.[20] But if a stranger has notice of the fact of agency he must regard the paper as the property of the principal and deal with the paper accordingly.[21] A person in possession of order paper indorsed in blank is presumed to be either the owner or an agent with full power to dispose of it,[22] and in the absence of actual or constructive notice of defect of title, fraud or other circumstance which would vitiate title, a purchaser need not make inquiry as to how the holder of paper acquired it.[23] Notice to an agent who takes paper for his principal is notice to the principal.[24] Notice acquired subsequent to taking the paper does not divest one of his character as a bona fide holder.[25]

Taking in due course of business.[26]

Taking before maturity.[27]—To be a bona fide holder the paper must be taken before maturity.[28] In the absence of proof of the date of an indorsement it is presumed to have been made before maturity and that the indorsee is a bona fide holder.[29] That paper is taken after maturity does not subject it to any defenses other than such as are connected with the paper itself,[30] and a signer must prove as against an indorsee after maturity that he had a defense against the payee.[31] The rule that a taker after maturity takes subject to defenses available to the maker does not prevent the operation of the rule that an assignee from an apparent owner takes free from an equity in favor of an intermediate transferror.[32]

Parting with value.[33]—One who takes as security for an antecedent debt under an agreement to forbear suing for a time is a holder for value,[34] but a bank discounting paper for a depositor and placing the proceeds to his credit is not, until the deposit is withdrawn, a bona fide holder.[35] Under negotiable instruments law if value has at any time been given, a holder is deemed to hold for value as to all who become parties prior to that time.[36]

30. A contention that the paper was stale and dishonored at the time it was taken is without merit. Caldwell v. Dismukes, 111 Mo. 570, 86 S. W. 270.

31. In an action by an indorsee after maturity a signer has the burden of proving that he signed under an agreement with the payee that he should not be held liable and that the payee would indemnify him. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Cammer [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 625.

36. Hence, an allegation of defense in an action by an indorsee that the note was executed and indorsed without consideration is insufficient as it admits the transfer to plaintiff for value before maturity. Rogers v. Morton, 46 Misc. 494, 95 N. Y. S. 49.

37. See 4 C. L. 804.

38. Negotiable instruments law expressly provides that a bona fide holder takes free consideration,[40] payment,[41] or fraud,[42] is no defense; but that one was induced to sign by fraudulent trick or device[43] is a defense if there be no negligence on the part of the signer.[44] Negligence in such a case is generally a question for the determination of the court or jury trying the cause,[45] but on an established or undisputed state of facts it is a question of law.[46] Under the negotiable instruments law, a material alteration does not avoid an instrument in the hands of a bona fide holder.[47] Where a note is given by a municipal corporation for a debt which it is forbidden by the constitution to contract, it is void in the hands of a bona fide holder.[48] from defenses available between the original parties. Broadway Trust Co. v. Manheim, 47 Misc. 415, 95 N. Y. S. 93. That the paying teller of a drawer of a check refuses to honor it does not relieve the drawer of liability to the drawee or a bona fide holder. Land Title & Trust Co. v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 211 Pa. 211, 60 A. 723.

39. A drawer of a check who delivers it to an imposter supposing him to be the person whose name he assumed is liable to a bona fide holder. Land Title & Trust Co. v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 211 Pa. 211, 60 A. 723.

Note: A bona fide holder gets good title though he purchases from a thief. First Nat. Bank v. Gates, 66 Kan. 505, 97 Am. St. Rep. 383; Wheeler v. Guild, 20 Pick. [Mass.] 545; Kuhns v. Gettysburg Nat. Bank, 68 Pa. 445; Whiteside v. First Nat. Bank [Tenn. Ch. App.] 47 S. W. 1108. To defeat his right it is not sufficient to show that a prudent man would have been put on inquiry (Dutchess County, etc., Ins. Co. v. Hachfield, 73 N. Y. 226), nor will evidence of gross negligence (Seybel v. Nat. Currency Bank, 54 N. Y. 288). An instrument stolen from the maker before it becomes effective by delivery cannot be enforced by one who takes from the thief. This seems to be the better rule though there is authority to the contrary. Salley v. Ferrill, 95 Me. 553, 85 Am. St. Rep. 433, 55 L. R. A. 730; Benson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415; Hall v. A bona fide holder is entitled to recover the face value of the paper though a special verdict that the consideration had failed in part was returned. Featherstone v. Brown [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. 43. Where judgment is taken by confession on a note which appears to have been executed under belief that it was another instrument, leave to plead should be allowed. Funk v. Hossack, 115 Ill. App. 340. One induced to sign a note under belief that it was a release. Yakima Valley Bank v. McAllister, 37 Wash. 566, 79 P. 1119.

Note. The circumstances of the case are somewhat novel, but the holding seems to be clearly correct. Though the signature of the defendant appeared on the back of the note, it was not really his indorsement. To quote from the opinion, "It is not the physical act which constitutes a transaction of this kind, but it is the intention of the parties." If this was not a case of forgery, it was certainly closely akin to forgery. It is not necessary that the physical act be done by the forger himself. See Marden v. Dorthy, 160 N. Y. 39, 46 L. R. A. 694; State v. Shurtleff, 18 Me. 368; McGinn v. Tobey, 62 Mich. 252, 4 Am. St. Rep. 848; Walker v. Ebert, 29 Wis. 194; Putnam v. Sullivan, 4 Mass. 54, 3 Am. Dec. 206; Foster v. McKinnon, L. R. 4 C. P. 704. For an opposing view as to the rights of the parties see dissenting opinion in Marden v. Dorthy, 160 N. Y. 39, 46 L. R. A. 694. As to the rights of bona fide holders, see Daniel's Neg. Inst. § 836 et seq.—3 Mich. L. R. 658.

44. If a party not guilty of negligence is induced by fraud to sign a negotiable instrument under the belief that it is something else, he may defend against it in the hands of a bona fide holder. Note. While the court states the above rule in the syllabus, the opinion seems rather to hold that in such case an indorsee is charged with notice of want of power in the city officials to issue the paper. [Editor.]

Burden of proof.[49]—The holding of one in possession of paper regularly indorsed is presumed to be bona fide,[50] and the burden is on a defendant to show that it is not;[51] but where the paper is shown to have been without consideration and fraudulent in its inception[52] or a defense not available against a bona fide holder is set up,[53] or the good faith of his holding is denied,[54] or the consideration is shown to have been illegal,[55] or it is shown that the title of the person who negotiated the paper was defective,[56] or where the indorsement to the holder is denied,[57] he must prove the bona fides of his holding.[58]

§ 14. Remedies and procedure peculiar to negotiable paper.[59] Parties.[60]—An indorsee after maturity,[61] an assignee by parol of order paper,[62] or an agent who purchases a note with his principal's money and has it indorsed to himself,[63] may maintain an action in his own name. In Ohio a suit on a promissory note must be brought by the real party in interest.[64] Where holders of orders on a fund superior to the order on which action is brought have been paid, they are not necessary parties.[65]

Pleading. The complaint.[66]—The instrument should be pleaded by copy or according to its legal effect.[67] The allegations should be definite.[68] An allegation of execution includes one of delivery.[69] It is not necessary to allege facts showing want of consideration.[70] But where the consideration has failed, facts showing such failure should be pleaded.[71] If attorney's fees are claimed, facts warranting their recovery should be alleged.[72] A complaint against an indorser need not allege exhaustion of remedies against the maker,[73] and one on a note secured by a mortgage which has been extinguished need not allege the execution of the mortgage or its extinguishment.[74] A complaint on an instalment note though for the entire amount states a cause of action for the amount of instalments due.[75] A complaint by a payee on a lost note which does not allege loss before maturity need not allege that the note was not indorsed by the payee.[76]

The answer.[77]—The grounds of defense must be plainly stated so as to give notice of their character.[78] A separate defense must be complete in itself.[79] Inconsistent defenses should not be pleaded,[80] nor should conclusions of law.[81] An answer in an action by the holder that he is not the real party in interest must allege facts on which such allegation is based.[82] A denial of facts not alleged raises no issue.[83] Allegations not denied are deemed admitted.[84] In some states certain denials must be verified.[85]

Leave to amend by inserting an allegation of notice rests in the discretion of the court.[86]

NEW TRIAL AND ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

This topic is designed to treat only the grounds for which judgment will be arrested or a new trial granted in the trial court. The grant of new trials by reviewing courts,[13] the modification and vacation of judgments without resort to a new trial,[14] the erroneous[15] or prejudicial[16] character of particular rulings, the necessity of objections and exceptions to save rulings for motion for new trial and the necessity of motion for new trial to save questions for the reviewing court,[17] are elsewhere treated.

§ 1. Nature of the remedy by new trial and right to it in general.[18]—A new trial is for the purpose of re-examining issues of fact,[19] hence, where there has been a mistrial a new trial cannot be granted.[20] A motion for a new trial reaches matters occurring at the trial and not matters which occur before[21] or after the trial has terminated.[22] The motion will not reach an insufficient pleading[23] or a defective verdict,[24] though statutory enumeration of grounds sometimes gives a broader scope. It is the appropriate remedy where the judge is not satisfied with the verdict[25] or the findings are not sufficiently sustained.[26] The grant of a new trial

Action of the court in fixing the amount of recovery in an action for penalty for fraudulent marriage and abandonment is part of the judgment and not matter occurring at the trial, and the question as to the amount cannot be raised by motion for a new trial. 25. The grant of a new trial and not the direction of a verdict the other way where rests largely in the discretion of the trial court[27] whether at law or in equity.[28] It is the duty of the court to act on matters resting in its discretion,[29] but a new trial cannot be granted without legal ground.[30] The right to a new trial does not exist unless provision therefor is made by law.[31]

§ 2. Grounds. A. In general.[32]—The grounds upon which a new trial may be had are prescribed by statute,[33] and an aggrieved party to be entitled to the remedy must bring himself within the statutory provisions.[34] A new trial will not be granted for any cause which the moving party might have avoided by the exercise of due diligence[35] nor to prove issues in direct contradiction of the allegation of the plaintiff in motion,[36] nor to satisfy the caprice of the parties,[37] nor for nonprejudicial error.[38] Hence that papers which should not go to the jury room are sent there through inadvertence or accident is not ground unless it appears that the unsuccessful party was prejudiced.[39] A mistake of a witness is not ground in the opinion of the trial court the verdict is against the weight of evidence. Dowling v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 107 App. Div. 312, 95 N. Y. S. 105. Judgment notwithstanding the verdict that a will was obtained by undue influence should not be rendered unless in a clear case, but the remedy is to grant a new trial. It is the duty of the judge to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial unless he is satisfied that substantial justice has been done. Linderman v.

upon which the verdict was reached is conflicting.[91] An excessive[92] or inadequate verdict[93] is ground for a new trial. The allowance of excessive damages not occasioned by passion or prejudice does not require a new trial but may be remedied by a remission[94] except under a rule requiring all questions of fact to be submitted.[95]

(§ 2) G. Surprise, accident or mistake.[96]—Surprise,[97] accident or excusable neglect may be ground for a new trial,[98] but to bring a case within this rule it must appear that the moving party used due diligence to prepare and appear for trial and present his case and was prevented from doing so because of some accident or misfortune[99] which preventative precautions could not avoid.[1] That a party did not appear at the time set for trial because of business interests is not excusable neglect.[2] Where a party intentionally fails to appear a new trial will not be granted on the ground of inadvertence and excusable neglect to permit him to set up a defense provable under the issues filed[3] or other meritorious defense known to his counsel

Nolan [Okl.] 83 P. 796. A judge who declares a verdict shocking to every sense of justice should grant a new trial. Dinan v. Supreme Council Catholic Mut. Ben. Ass'n [Pa.] 62 A. 1067. If a trial judge is dissatisfied with the verdict and grants a new trial, some latitude must be allowed to his discretion especially where the propriety of his action is affirmed by a verdict in favor of the moving party. 93. Where nominal damages were allowed a parent for the death of a 17 year old son and the evidence did not entitle the defendant to a directed verdict. Rawitzer v. St. Paul City R. Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 499. On a rule to show cause a new trial may be granted where an error has resulted in a verdict for excessive damages though such error was not subject to an exception at the trial. Butler v. Hoboken Print. & Pub. Co. [N. J. Law] 62 A. 272.

94. Circumstances held to show that a verdict excessive by $5,000 was due to mistake of judgment, the jury not having been advised of any basis upon which to estimate the damages. City of Argentine v. Bender [Kan.] 80 P. 935; Sorenson v. Oregon Power Co. [Or.] 82 P. 10; Noxon v. Remington [Conn.] 61 A. 963; McKnight v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 105 N. W. 673; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Foster [Tex. Civ. App.] 89 S. W. 450. Remittitur of an excessive verdict within a specified time may be made the condition of refusing a new trial. Such time may be extended during term. Campbell v. Pittsburg Bridge Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 138. Where the damages assessed are excessive, but not in a degree to necessarily imply the influence of passion or prejudice in their finding, the court in the exercise of a sound discretion may make the remittitur of the excess the condition for refusing to grant a new trial. American Contracting Co. v. Sammon, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 121. Where the amount of an evident error in a verdict is specific and certain as shown by other findings, the amount may be deducted and a new trial need not be granted. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Turley [Kan.] 80 P. 605. Where a judgment can be reformed so as to do full justice under the evidence such action may be taken in lieu of granting a new trial. Alabama Oil & Pipe Line Co. v. Sun Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 202.

95. Under a rule that either party shall have the right to have all questions of fact submitted to a jury, a court cannot if it deems a verdict excessive in a case where the damages are incapable of exact ascertainment, permit a remittitur but should award a new trial. Southern Pac. Co. v. Fitchett [Ariz.] 80 P. 359.

98. Sickness and death preventing a party from attending trial are accidental causes. Massucco v. Tomassi [Vt.] 62 A. 57.

99. The rule authorizing the court to relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect does not necessitate a new trial where default judgment is taken in a case where a party intentionally abandons his defense after answer and makes no effort to prepare for trial or obtain a continuance. Peterson v. Crosier [Utah] 81 P. 860. On the hearing of a motion on the ground of surprise, accident or fraud, evidence held insufficient to justify granting the motion. Wells v. Gallagher [Ala.] 39 So. 747. Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4760, authorizing courts to vacate their judgments and grant a new trial for fraud in obtaining the judgment, does not authorize a new trial where a party neglects to appear after waiving service of summons and been given full opportunity to prepare a defense. Williamson v. Williamson [Okl.] 83 P. 718.

at the time the original pleading was filed.[4] A new trial will not be granted for mistake, casualty or misfortune directly attributable to the negligence of the moving party[5] or his attorney,[6] or for mistake due to ignorance of law.[7] A party cannot assert surprise at evidence he knew would be introduced[8] and surprise at certain evidence is not ground where no cause is shown why rebutting evidence was not introduced at the trial[9] or a continuance asked to procure it.[10] Surprise is not ground unless a different verdict is probable.[11]

(§ 2) H. Newly discovered evidence.[12]—Newly discovered evidence which is material and important and could not have been produced at the trial is ground for a new trial[13] if it will probably change the result.[14] Such evidence is not limited to matters known to the applicant at the time of filing the motion but may include any that have been developed since that time.[15] The evidence must have been discovered subsequent to the prior trial[16] and its non production at the trial excused,[17] and it must be such as could not have been discovered before the trial by the ex-

7. That an attorney did not introduce evidence on a material issue because he believed the burden of proof of such issue rested on the opposite party does not entitle him to a new trial on the ground of surprise. LeTourneux v. Gilliss [Cal. App.] 82 P. 627.

8. One cannot claim a right to a new trial on the ground of surprise because of the introduction of evidence he knew would be introduced and had asked a continuance in order to procure rebutting evidence. 10. Surprise arising from absence of witnesses or unexpected testimony is not ground where no claim of surprise was made at the trial, no continuance asked to procure attendance of absent witnesses and evidence to meet the emergency. Woods v. Globe Navigation Co. [Wash.] 82 P. 401; Renshaw v. Dignan [Iowa] 105 N. W. 209. Where no subpoena was served on a material witness and though it was discovered before the trial that he could not be found, such fact was not called to the attention of the court nor motion for continuance made until the court had disclosed its determination of the case, a party is not entitled to a new trial on the ground of accident and surprise. Refusal of new trial held not an abuse of discretion where the applicant knew of the existence of the witness and discovered his whereabouts during the prior trial but made no request for a continuance. Dumontier v. Stetson & Post Mill Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 693. Evidence is not newly discovered which at the time of the trial is known to the plaintiff in interest who had taken upon herself the prosecution of the case and which any inquiry of her would have made known to the nominal plaintiff. Emmet v. Perry [Me.] 60 A. 872. In an action for injuries sustained because of a defective sidewalk, testimony of a sidewalk inspector who called at the home of the injured party and said he was going to examine the premises where the accident occurred but it did not appear that such party saw him there or knew that he went there, and it did appear that counsel knew nothing of the incident, is newly discovered. Brennan v. Seattle [Wash.] 81 P. 1092. Where a beneficial association had paid one of two contesting claimants but did not notify its counsel, who was defending an action brought by the other, of such fact, it cannot set it up as newly discovered evidence entitling it to a new trial where judgment goes against it. Robins v. Modern Woodmen [Iowa] 103 N. W. 375. Evidence that a party has knowledge of before the trial and which became material during the trial but on the witnesses being reported absent from the city no request to delay the trial was made is not newly discovered. ercise of ordinary diligence.[18] Whether reasonable diligence has been used is a question for the court upon the affidavits presented.[19] Granting a new trial for newly discovered evidence is discretionary with the trial court,[20] and it will not be granted for evidence which is immaterial[21] or is merely cumulative,[22] contradictory[23] or impeaching,[24] and which would probably not produce a different result;[25] but

(§ 2) I. As a matter of right in ejectment.[27]—The Minnesota statute applies only where the right to possession as well as ownership is involved[28] and does not apply to all actions in which title to realty is questioned.[29] The substance and not the form determines whether a party is entitled to a second trial.[30] The Indiana statute does not apply where title is questioned only as incidental to the main relief sought.[31]

§ 3. Proceedings to procure new trial.[32]—The entry of a motion for new trial suspends the judgment[33] and constitutes an abandonment of an appeal previously granted.[34] Motion for a new trial is waived by filing a motion in arrest,[35] except where the grounds of the former are unknown at the time the motion in arrest is made.[36] A judgment prematurely entered does not deprive a party of his right to file a motion for a new trial.[37]

A motion will not be read from an amended pleading filed after reversal and remand of the cause.[38] A motion based on statutory grounds must assert a ground within the statute.[39] If an assignment of a statutory ground contains irrelevant matter, the latter may be regarded as surplusage.[40] In the absence of an order requiring them to do so, specific grounds for the motion need not be stated by the movant.[41] All grounds not specified are deemed waived.[42] The grounds must be well assigned as a whole[43] and must be stated in such terms as will clearly indicate merely cumulative, and not likely to change the result. Shepard v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 42. Not for newly discovered evidence which is flatly contradicted where the witness was present and testified at the trial. Barber v. Maden, 126 Iowa, 402, 102 N. W. 120. 39. Under the rule that a new trial may be granted because the verdict or decision is not sustained or is contrary to law, an assignment that the decision of the court is contrary to the evidence presents no question. State v. Richeson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 846. Where a new trial is authorized on the ground that the decision is not sufficiently sustained, specifications in a motion that "special findings" specified were not sustained, were without the issues and contrary to the law, are insufficient, since "decision" means "special finding" when one has been required. Major v. Miller [Ind.] 75 N. E. 159. Where it is claimed that damages awarded in an action to recover unliquidated damages are excessive or inadequate and were given under the influence of passion or prejudice, the motion must be made in the trial court under Gen. 43. Grounds are not well assigned where the exclusion of evidence as to a number the error complained of.[44] If specifications are arranged under a general heading and it is readily apparent what errors are intended to be assigned, it is sufficient.[45] Newly discovered evidence asserted as a ground must be set out in the motion.[46] An amendment supplying additional grounds[47] or specifications of error may be allowed.[48] Whether a second motion should be allowed to be filed rests in the discretion of the court.[49] If so required by rule of court, the motion must be verified.[50] A motion for a venire de novo applicable only to the general verdict raises no question concerning the finding of the jury in answer to a special interrogatory.[51]

A motion is indivisible and when made by more than one party must be allowed or overruled as to all;[52] but this rule should not be invoked to defeat a meritorious petition.[53] A court is not required to grant a new trial as to part of a case.[54] of facts is set up and the witnesses by whom it is sought to prove such facts are competent to testify to part of them but there is no segregation of the competent from the incompetent. Indianapolis & M. Rapid Transit Co. v. Hall [Ind.] 76 N. E. 242.

44. In the motion the grounds must be stated in such terms as will clearly indicate to the court the identity of the particular subject and ruling complained of. Continental Casualty Co. v. Lloyd [Ind.] 73 N. E. 824.

[Mont.] 80 P. 370. Specifications that the verdict is excessive is not sustained by the evidence and is contrary to law and that the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict. Missouri, etc., R. An assignment "there has been no evidence introduced at the trial tending to show that the plaintiff has sustained any loss by reason of the act of the defendant." Clark v. Rauer [Cal. App.] 83 P. 291.

Held insufficient: A ground of motion assigning error in refusing to permit a witness to answer a certain question should show not only what answer was expected but that the judge was informed as to it. Sanders v. Central of Georgia R. Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 728. A motion based on the theory that the verdict is contrary to the law must point out wherein the law was disregarded. Ard v. Crittenden [Ala.] 39 So. 675. A specification that the verdict is contrary to the law and evidence is too general. Dodd v. Presley [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 73. Specifications that the court erred in the admission of evidence, and in instructions given and refused, are too general. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Ind. T.] 89 S. W. 668. Under a rule that all grounds be stated and set out separately in the motion assignments of "error in the admission and exclusion of evidence" and "in refusing special instructions asked" are insufficient for failure to set out the evidence and instructions. Memphis St. R. Co. v. Johnson, 114 Tenn. 632, 88 S. W. 169. An assignment that the decision is contrary to law does not raise the question of the amount of recovery. State v. Richeson [Ind. 45. Where in a statement on motion for a new trial all the errors were under the heading "Specification of errors appearing at said trial," assignments questioning the sufficiency of evidence were not fatally defective because designated errors of law when in fact they were attempts to point out particulars wherein the evidence was insufficient. Gillies v. Clarke Fork Coal Min. Co. [Mont.] 80 P. 370.

46. Johnson v. Thrower [Ga.] 51 S. E. 636.

47. The trial court may permit an amendment to the motion after decision thereon by inserting an additional ground where such relief will not prejudice the opposite party. Jung v. Theo. Hamm Brewing Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 233.

48. An assignment containing no specification of error or particulars wherein the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict may be amended by inserting them. Clark v. Rauer [Cal. App.] 83 P. 291.

49. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Ray [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 942.

50. A motion for new trial on newly discovered evidence is a motion grounded on facts not apparent from the record and under rule 16 of this court should be verified by affidavit in order to entitle it to be considered. Emmet v. Perry [Me.] 60 A. 872. A motion on the ground of newly discovered evidence and the affidavit in support thereof must be verified. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 40, 86 S. W. 943. When not founded on evidence must be verified by affidavit is a valid rule. Dietrich v. Lancaster, 212 Pa. 566, 61 A. 1112.

51. Spaulding v. Mott [Ind.] 76 N. E. 620.

52. Godfrey v. Smith [Neb.] 103 N. W. 450. Where excessiveness of judgment was attempted to be presented by motion, on the fifth statutory ground and a new trial was sought only as to the cross complaint and not as to the whole case the motion was properly denied. Oglebay v. Todd [Ind.] 76 N. E. 238.

53. The rule that a motion for a new trial is indivisible cannot be invoked to defeat a review of a meritorious petition in error filed by a minor defendant in error whose guardian ad litem had inadvertently joined him with a mere nominal defendant who had no substantial rights involved. Godfrey v. Smith [Neb.] 103 N. W. 450.

The motion must be filed within the time prescribed by law[55] usually within a certain number of days[56] or during the term at which the verdict was rendered[57] unless a delayed filing is excused.[58] Where no motion was filed within the time prescribed, the court may not at a subsequent term direct it to be filed nunc pro tunc,[59] and an order extending the time to file the motion cannot be entered nunc pro tunc where no such order was previously made.[60] It must be filed in the proper venue[61] and before the court entitled to entertain it.[62] The motion must be prosecuted with due diligence.[63] A motion may be heard at a subsequent term[64] if filed and recognized during the term at which the verdict was rendered;[65] but a stipulation that the judge may sign the judgment after adjournment of the term does not authorize him to hear and determine a motion for a new trial.[66] A motion for a venire de novo must be made before final judgment.[67]

54. Where issues raised by a cross complaint were so identified with those raised by the complaint that a retrial of one would not avail a movant if the others were found against him, a motion for a new trial of those made by the cross complaint was properly denied. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co. v. Wall [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 668. Where the evidence is insufficient as to one party but sufficient as to another, the motion is properly overruled. Capital Lumber Co. v. Barth [Mont.] 81 P. 994.

55. Klein v. Southern Pac. Co., 140 F. 213.

56. A district court has no authority to grant a new trial upon an application made more than 30 days after judgment unless the application is based on newly discovered evidence. Flaherty v. Pack [N. J. Law] 62 A. 269. Rev. St. 1899, § 3748, amended by Laws 1901, p. 69, c. 66, § 1, fixing the time within which motion for a new trial may be filed, is mandatory. Todd v. Peterson, 13 Wyo. 513, 81 P. 878. A motion filed four days after entry of judgment is timely under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5075, requiring it to be filed within two days, where the last two days are holidays. § 4790 provides that time shall be computed by excluding the first and including the last day unless it is a holiday in which case it also is excluded. Kubillus v. Ewert [Wash.] 82 P. 147. A verdict contrary to law may be set aside on motion made at the close of the trial or within five days from judgment rendered. Express provision of Laws 1902, p. 1563, c. 580, § 254. O'Reilly v. Erlanger, 108 App. Div. 318, 95 N. Y. S. 760. Rev. St. 1899, § 803, providing that motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment shall be made within four days after trial does not apply to a judgment of the supreme court directing the setting aside of an order granting a new trial and the entry of judgment on the verdict. Such action is not a trial. Scullin v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo.] 90 S. W. 1026.

57. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 570, providing that the application for a new trial may be made at any time during the term at which the verdict is rendered, and § 1443, providing that business undisposed of at the end of the term may be proceeded with at an adjourned term, such adjourned term is part of the regular term and a supplemental petition then filed is in time. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Ray [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 942.

58. Rev. St. 1899, § 3748, amended by Laws 1901, p. 69, c. 66, § 1, excusing the failure to file motion within the statutory period, if such failure was unavoidable, does not excuse a failure which is the result of inadvertence of a party's attorney. Todd v. Peterson, 13 Wyo. 513, 81 P. 878.

59. Todd v. Peterson, 13 Wyo. 513, 81 P. 878.

60. That the judge expressed a willingness to make such order does not warrant its entry nunc pro tunc. Klein v. Southern Pac. Co., 140 F. 213.

61. Where pursuant to stipulation a case pending in one county was decided at chambers in another and the judgment was to be sent to the county in which it was pending for entry, a motion filed in the county where the court made the decision was ineffectual. Todd v. Peterson, 13 Wyo. 513, 81 P. 878.

62. A motion on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict must be made before the judge who tried the cause at the same term. Knowles v. Savage, Son & Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 930. A motion on the ground of mistake, surprise, inadvertence, excusable neglect and irregularities in the judgment can be granted only by the justice who rendered the judgment. McWhirter v. Bowen, 103 App. Div. 447, 92 N. Y. S. 1039. Where a case is heard and determined and no question of law saved, a motion for new trial, after the death of the judge before reporting the case to the supreme court as he had intended, made before another judge, is properly denied. Newburyport Inst. for Sav. v. Coffin [Mass.] 75 N. E. 81.

63. The usual practice in moving the denial or dismissal of a motion for a new trial on the ground of laches in prosecuting it is to make the motion when the application for new trial comes up for disposition, but the party need not wait until such time but may make his motion at any time. Ryer v. Rio Land & Improvement Co., 147 Cal. 462, 82 P. 62.

64. The Federal circuit court may dispose of a motion for a new trial filed at a prior term provided such motion was filed in time and entertained by the court. Klein v. Southern Pac. Co., 140 F. 213.

65. The mere filing of a motion in due time at the term at which the judgment is rendered does not of its own force and without any order or recognition by the

The motion is not continued by a general order continuing "all cases, actions, motions and proceedings."[68] A postponement is properly denied if the motion is required to be heard during the term.[69]

The adverse party is entitled to notice of the time and place of the hearing of the motion and to be present and present his side of the case.[70] If so required by law a copy of the rule nisi must be served upon him.[71] Where a rule nisi was granted on a motion and ordered served and the motion set to be heard at an adjourned term of the court at which it was made to be held more than 80 days after the date of the rule the court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the motion for want of service, there being no excuse for failure of service nor evidence of waiver[72] in ample time to allow opportunity to prepare for the hearing.[73]

The hearing on the motion at a subsequent term is an independent action.[74]

The motion may be granted at any time before judgment entered.[75]

Evidence in support of motion.[76]—The statutory right of a hearing upon a motion for a new trial is conditional upon furnishing the law court with a report of the evidence.[77] This condition cannot be waived or dispensed with.[78] The transcript should contain only the evidence on the point as to which error is asserted.[79] If court carry it over to the succeeding term so as to give the court jurisdiction, without the consent of the opposing party to then hear and dispose of it. Klein v. Southern Pac. Co., 149 F. 213.

66. Knowles v. Savage, Son & Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 930.

67. McCaslin v. State [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 844.

68. A general order continuing all "cases, actions, motions and proceedings" until the next term does not keep alive against the objection of the opposite party a motion for a new trial. Southern R. Co. v. Jones [Ala.] 39 So. 118.

69. Where a court is required to dispose of the motion during the term at which it is filed and a motion to postpone the hearing to a date beyond the term properly overruled though a deposition could not be produced during the term. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 40, 86 S. W. 943.

70. Sufficiency of proof of service of notice discussed. Peter v. Kaley [Idaho] 83 P. 526. Under Rev. St. 1887, §§ 4441, 4442, where a motion is made on affidavits, the adverse party is entitled to 10 days after service on him of the affidavits to file and serve counter affidavits and within such period the court cannot hear the motion on the affidavits of the movant. Id. Civ. Code 1895, § 4324, providing that 10 days notice of the time and place of the hearing of a motion for a new trial be given to parties in interest, applies only in a case where the trial judge upon the application of one of them, in vacation fixes a time and place for hearing during vacation. Gould v. Johnston & Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 608.

71. Civ. Code 1895, § 5475 expressly provides that in all applications for a new trial the opposite party shall be served with a copy of the rule nisi unless such copy is waived. McMullen v. Citizens' Bank [Va.] 51 S. E. 342. Such service is essential though the application is to be heard during the term at which the trial is had. Id.

72. McMullen v. Citizens' Bank [Ga.] 51 S. E. 342.

73. No time is prescribed within which the respondent shall be served with a copy of a rule nisi made in term under the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 5484, and where service has been made in ample time to allow him to prepare for the hearing, it is not ground for dismissal that it was not served within 10 days after it was granted. Gould v. Johnston & Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 608.

74. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 572, providing that applications for a new trial where the causes are discovered after the term may be made not later than the second term after the discovery, are independent actions and trial must be had as in any other independent proceeding. Slusser v. Palin [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 17.

75. Until judgment the verdict is under control of the court and a new trial may be granted for any reason which appeals to its discretion, therefore where the court discharges a rule for a new trial and the defendant fails to pay costs so judgment may be entered the court may reinstate the rule and make it absolute. Cronrath v. Border, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 15.

NOTE. New trial after satisfaction of judgment: The trial court is not deprived of jurisdiction to grant a new trial within the period allowed by statute by the fact that the judgment has been affirmed on appeal and execution returned satisfied. Chambliss v. Hass [Iowa] 68 L. R. A. 126 and note.

76. See 4 C. L. 822.

77. Morin v. Claflin [Me.] 61 A. 782.

78. Morin v. Claflin [Me.] 61 A. 782. Where by reason of the death of the official court stenographer a party who has filed a motion for a new trial is unable to procure a report of the evidence, the motion must be overruled. Id.

79. A petition for a new trial in a will contest on the ground that the evidence shows that the will was not executed according to law should not contain a transcript of the evidence other than on that duly approved and allowed it is prima facie a complete record.[80] A rule requiring all papers used on the motion to be filed does not apply to a transcript of the stenographer's notes prepared at the expense of the movant.[81] The movant has the burden of establishing facts warranting a new trial.[82] Facts admitted for the purposes of an exception to a conclusion of law may be controverted on motion for a new trial.[83]

Bill of exceptions.[84]—The rule that a motion for a new trial must be prosecuted with due diligence extends to the preparation of the bill of exceptions[85] and the burden is on the movant to show excuse for unreasonable delay.[86] Whether due diligence has been exercised is a question for the judge.[87] Due diligence must be observed in having the bill settled[88] and in procuring the judge's signature to it.[89] A bill of exceptions cannot be filed before it has been signed by the judge.[90]

Affidavits.[91]—Affidavits in support of a motion must set up controlling and conclusive grounds.[92] It must be made to appear by affidavits that the existence of alleged newly discovered evidence was not known at the time of trial and could not have been known by the exercise of ordinary diligence[93] unless such showing is excused.[94] The mere statement of such fact as a conclusion is not enough.[95] Statu-point. Wood v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 757.

80. A party attacking it as deficient must present and support his corrections by affidavit. Wood v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 757.

81. Gen. rule of practice that when an order is entered all the papers used on the motion shall be filed does not apply on a motion for a new trial under Code Civ. Proc. on the judge's minutes, to a transcript of the stenographer's notes which the moving party has obtained at his own expense and which § 1007 authorizes the judge to treat as his minutes. Schlotterer v. Brooklyn & N. Y. Ferry Co., 102 App. Div. 363, 92 N. Y. S. 674.

82. One seeking a new trial on the ground that the cause was tried out of its order on the docket and after his attorney had withdrawn from the case without notice to him has the burden of showing no notice of his attorney's withdrawal. Ranson v. Leggett [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 668.

83. An exception to a conclusion of law though admitted for the purpose of the exception that the facts are correctly found. Reserve Loan Life Ins. Co. v. Hockett [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 842.

84. See 4 C. L. 822 et seq.

85. Miller v. Queen Ins. Co. [Cal. App.] 83 P. 287.

86. Where five months' delay is unexplained. Miller v. Queen Ins. Co. [Cal. App.] 83 P. 287. Other business of counsel for a moving party may be considered on the question of negligence in prosecuting a motion for new trial. Id.

87. In causing a bill of exceptions to be engrossed and in procuring the judge's signature thereto. Miller v. American Cent. Ins. Co. [Cal. App.] 83 P. 289. Unreasonable delay in procuring the judge's signature to a bill of exceptions is governed by the same rules as delay in engrossing the bill. Id.

88. Where the judge was absent on the day fixed for presentation of the bill of exceptions, the movant should ascertain when he would return, and obtain an order fixing the date for settlement. He is not relieved from further action until he learns that a date has been set. Miller v. Queen Ins. Co. [Cal. App.] 83 P. 287. Where after motion to dismiss a motion for a new trial the movant gives notice fixing a date for settling the bill of exceptions, such action does not cure previous negligence and delay in prosecuting his motion. Id. Where the judge was absent on the day set for settling the bill of exceptions, meetings of the parties at the judge's chambers for the purpose of settling the bill is a waiver by the movant from the judge of notice of a day fixed for such action. Id.

89. Due diligence not shown where there was a delay of three months after the bill was engrossed. Miller v. American Cent. Ins. Co. [Cal. App.] 83 P. 289. That a judge was absent when the engrossment of a bill of exceptions was completed does not relieve the movant from the exercise of due diligence in ascertaining the date of his return and procuring his signature. Id. The clerk with whom a bill of exceptions has been left is under no duty to present it to the judge for his signature. Id.

92. Netcher v. Bernstein, 110 Ill. App. 484. Affidavits that a juror was asleep during a portion of the trial but which do not show how long he slept or what testimony was taken during his nap do not show ground. Kozlowski v. Chicago, 113 Ill. App. 513.

93. Johnson v. Thrower [Ga.] 51 S. E. 636.

94. Where witnesses who are to give newly discovered evidence are employes of the opposing party, such fact excuses compliance with the rule requiring affidavits of such witnesses as to what they will testify to. Brennan v. Seattle [Wash.] 81 P. 1092.

95. Jessen v. Wilhite [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1064. Should show what diligence was used, tory requirements as to affidavits of absent witnesses must be complied with.[96] Controverted affidavits raise a question of fact for the court to decide.[97]

Brief of evidence.—In Georgia a brief of evidence is essential to the validity of a motion for a new trial.[98] The time and method of preparing and filing such brief is regulated by order of court.[99]

Order granting or refusing new trial.[1]—An order cannot be made before the statement upon which the motion is based is filed.[2] An order in general terms granting a new trial is good if any ground assigned is sufficient to sustain it.[3] Such order authorizes a trial of the entire case.[4] An order made after judgment entered has the effect of vacating it.[5] Where a motion based on several grounds is sustained upon one "and no other" it constituted an explicit overruling of the motion on other grounds.[6] Statements or recitals in the order as to the showing made constitute no part of it.[7] A general order cannot be limited by an independent writing stating the grounds.[8] An order granting a new trial should be conditioned upon the payment how the new evidence was discovered and why it was not discovered before. In re Colbert's Estate [Mont.] 80 P. 248. An affidavit must show such facts relating to its discovery as to enable the court to see that it probably could not have been discovered before the trial by the exercise of ordinary diligence. Stewart v. Doak [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 95.

96. 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5076, requiring an affidavit of the absent witness to the effect that his evidence will be forthcoming not complied with. Dumontier v. Stetson & Post Mill Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 693. Where the affidavit of the witness who is to give newly discovered evidence is not filed nor excuse given for failure to file it, the new trial is properly denied. City of Dayton v. Hirth, 27 Ky. L. R. 1209, 87 S. W. 1136. It is not error for the court to refuse to appoint a commissioner to take affidavits as to misconduct of jurors and newly discovered evidence which could not be procured by voluntary affidavits. Devoy v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 91 S. W. 140.

97. Presenting alleged newly discovered evidence. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Posey [Ark.] 85 S. W. 1127. Conflicting evidence of misconduct of jurors presents a question for the trial court. Dysart-Cook Mule Co. v. Reed, 114 Mo. App. 296, 89 S. W. 591.

98. Paper presented as a motion which is unaccompanied by anything purporting to be a brief of the evidence introduced is properly dismissed. Moxley v. Georgia R. & Elec. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 339.

99. Under an order passed in term fixing a day in vacation for the hearing of a motion, and granting leave to movant "to amend his motion and until said day and on said day to amend and perfect his brief of evidence," the movant may on such day present his brief of evidence for approval and file the same after it has been approved. Gould v. Johnston & Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 608. This is the rule where the hearing is set for a day at a subsequent term. Cross v. Coffin-Fletcher Packing Co. [Ga.] 51 S. E. 704. Order continuing the time of hearing on a motion held to preserve the right to have approved and filed a brief of the evidence. Arrington v. Cronin [Ga.] 51 S. E. 708. Where three continuances of the hearing on the motion, covering a period of 30 days have been granted, because of failure of the official stenographer to transcribe his notes, it is not an abuse of discretion to dismiss the motion on the last day fixed for hearing, for the reason that no brief of the evidence is tendered for approval and no reason is shown why the movant could not have prepared such brief without reference to the stenographer's transcript. Edmonds v. State [Ga.] 50 S. E. 936. Whether any of the dates fixed in the orders for continuance are in vacation is immaterial. Id.

1. See 4 C. L. 825, n. 60 et seq.

2. An order granting a new trial made before the statement upon which the motion is based is settled and filed is premature. Buckle v. McConaghy [Idaho] 83 P. 525. Rev. St. 1887, § 4442 contemplates that a motion for a new trial shall not be passed upon before the statement of the case upon which the motion is based is settled and filed. Id. The provisions of the statute in that regard are mandatory. Id.

4. Where a motion for a new trial except as to a certain finding is granted in general terms, the granting order set aside the verdict in toto and authorized a new trial of the excepted issue. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Fayetteville [Ark.] 87 S. W. 1174.

5. Where in an action against conspirators a verdict is returned against one and on his motion an order was entered at the same term granting a new trial, but prior to the entry of such order the plaintiff had procured the entry of judgment without the knowledge of the court, the effect of the order granting the motion for a new trial was to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial as to all defendants. by the moving party of the trial fee,[9] and costs where granted on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence.[10] Conditions not authorized by statute cannot be imposed where the order is made by a statutory court.[11] The judgment of a law court denying a motion for a new trial is conclusive on a court of equity as to all grounds which were or might have been presented.[12] An order denying a motion in whole or in part is a final order.[13] It may be vacated for inadvertence and excusable neglect on the part of the movant or his attorneys.[14] An order granting a new trial is not reviewable in another division.[15] An appellate court will interfere more reluctantly when granted than when denied.[16]

Subsequent new trials.—Failure to except to a denial of a motion concludes the movant from making a subsequent motion on the same grounds.[17] A rule precluding the granting of more than two new trials on the ground that the verdict is not sustained does not preclude the granting of any number for errors of law in giving instructions or admitting evidence.[18]

23. Code, § 3758. A motion in arrest held good where petition in an action on an injunction bond for damages for suing out a temporary injunction failed to allege that suit had been disposed of. Lacey v. Davis, 126 Iowa, 675, 102 N. W. 535, former opinion 98 N. W. 366 withdrawn. Upon proper motion judgment will be arrested if it appears that there is no substantial cause of action. George v. Robinson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 607. A motion on the ground of insufficiency of the petition should be sustained where the plaintiff does not avail himself of his statu-

tion is curable error against which a motion cannot avail.[24] It will not lie where there is one good count in the declaration,[25] nor where a party has first demurred to a declaration because of the absence of allegations of damage, and, after the demurrer was overruled, has pleaded,[26] nor because the verdict did not follow the statutory form.[27]

(§ 5) B. Motions and proceedings thereon.[28]—A motion may be amended at any time prior to final decision.[29] If a motion is once granted for any reason and the judgment thereon is set aside, the motion is still pending, with the right of the movant to amend as in the first instance.[30]

(§ 5) C. Effect.[31]—The filing of a motion in arrest constitutes a waiver of a motion for a new trial.[32]

NON-NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

The term "non-negotiable paper" comprehends those contracts for the payment of money which possess the form and other essentials of bills and notes but lack the characteristic of negotiability.[33] The indicia of negotiability and the elements which destroy it have been elsewhere treated.[34] A non-negotiable instrument is an evidence of indebtedness which will support an action by the payee.[35] An instrument will be construed according to the fair import of its terms.[36] An instrument not under seal and containing no recital of a consideration does not import such.[37]

The legal title of a non-negotiable instrument passes by indorsement,[38] but the indorsement does not create the liability which follows from the indorsement of a negotiable instrument.[39] The assignee takes it subject to equities existing between the original parties,[40] but the right of the maker to assert those equities may be defeated by superior equities of the holder.[41] Payment to the payee without notice of assign-tory right to amend. Heald v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 588.

Harlem Occidental Club, 94 N. Y. S. 518), and a provision that after maturity the bond would be accepted in payment of club charges does not create an exclusive method of realizing on the bond (Id.).

ment is a complete defense to an action by the assignee.[42] A maker of non-negotiable paper who induces a bank to discount it cannot deny liability though the bank gave him no notice of its action in discounting it.[43] In Kentucky an assignor is liable only in case the maker is unable to pay.[44]

NOTARIES AND COMMISSIONERS OF DEEDS.

Notaries public are governmental officers[45] and consequently at common law women are disqualified from appointment to the office.[46]

Notaries public are generally authorized to take acknowledgments of conveyances.[47] Interest may disqualify an otherwise duly qualified attorney from acting in certain cases.[48] Statutes prohibiting attorneys from acting as notaries public in causes in which they may be professionally engaged do not apply to matters concerning the cause of action but performed before suit is commenced.[49] In Indiana a deputy prosecutor who is also a notary public may take an affidavit upon which to base an information though he is employed to act as attorney in the prosecution.[50] Acts of a de facto notary cannot be collaterally questioned.[51]

In Alabama part of the notaries hold office for three years and until their successors qualify, but this holdover clause is only operative for a reasonable time.[52]

In taking a deposition a notary public can compel the production of evidence,[53] but he cannot commit a witness for contempt for refusing to answer questions calling for hearsay testimony.[54]

In order to be liable the notary's act must have been the proximate cause of the injury.[55] The complaint in an action against the notary and his sureties must show that injury has resulted.[56]

NOTICE AND RECORD OF TITLE.

This title deals only with public records affecting title; other public records[57] and private records[58] are treated elsewhere, as is also the method of restoring lost or destroyed records.[59] The term bona fide purchaser or occupant as used in the betterments[60] or occupying claimant's acts[61] is distinct from the term as used in this article.

§ 1. Bona fide purchasers and the doctrine of notice.[62]—The doctrine of bona fide purchase without notice applies only in favor of the purchaser of a legal title, and not of a bare equity.[63] In equity the doctrine is that a bona fide purchaser takes title free from equities of third persons.[64] Though a deed is unrecorded, one who has notice takes subject to it.[65] As a general rule the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to judicial and execution sales, though there is a conflict of decisions based largely on the equities of particular cases.[66] One may be a bona fide purchaser from a municipality.[67]

Requisites of a bona fide purchaser.[68]—They are (1) a valuable consideration; (2) good faith; and (3) the absence of notice or knowledge, and the burden is on one claiming exemption from prior claims or liens.[69]

The purchaser was a newcomer and had no knowledge of the family history, and bought the land upon the advice of an attorney that the record title was perfect. Lyster v. Leighton, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 62, 81 S. W. 1033.

64. A mortgagee for value, without notice, is protected, notwithstanding the mortgagor may have obtained his title by fraud or undue influence over his grantor, or the alleged mental incapacity of the latter. Parsons v. Crocker [Iowa] 105 N. W. 162. Such a purchaser may safely take the recitals in a judgment at their face value, without inquiry as to whether it was an agreement judgment. Jones v. In execution sales. Pullen v. Simpson [Ark.] 86 S. W. 801. The purchaser at an execution sale, whether the judgment creditor or another, without notice actual or constructive of equities of third persons, when the title to the real estate stands in the judgment debtor as the apparent absolute owner, is protected as a bona fide purchaser. Mansfield v. Johnson [Fla.] 40 So. 196. As to actual notice by purchasers at judicial sale, see Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Stryker [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 953; Davidson v. Marcum [Ky.] 89 S. W. 703.

68. See 4 C. L. 830.

69. Under a conveyance absolute in form the claimant must, as against the legal title, make his innocence affirmatively appear. Wynne v. Ward [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 237. But where creditors attack a conveyance by their debtor as fraudulent, the grantee must show the payment of consideration and then the burden is on the creditors to show that the vendee had notice of his grantor's fraud. Morimura v. Samaha, 25 App. D. C. 189. The facts showing that one is a bona fide purchaser must be pleaded. Deskins v. Big Sandy Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 695. The burden is upon the party asserting an equity against a legal title to show that the purchaser of the latter did not pay value therefor or had notice of the Valuable consideration.[70]—The consideration must be actually paid though not necessarily in money,[71] or the purchaser must be irrevocably bound for its payment.[72] An antecedent indebtedness is not a valuable consideration,[73] nor is the discharge of a pre-existing judgment.[74] But a mortgagee who purchases the premises on foreclosure sale, without paying money but crediting his bid on the judgment against the mortgagor, is a purchaser for value.[75]

Good faith.[76]—Belief, to be bona fide, must be founded on ignorance of fact and not ignorance of law.[77] One who purchases chattels long after the maturity of a mortgage on record may rely upon the presumption of its payment, unless the mortgagee has exercised reasonable diligence to locate and secure the property.[78] A finding by the court that a purchase of personalty was bona fide was sufficient, in the absence of requests for specific findings on the questions of fact going to show whether the sale was bona fide.[79]

Notice or knowledge.[80]—"Knowledge" and "notice" are not synonymous, for what does not amount to actual knowledge may constitute notice.[81] In order that one may, as a bona fide purchaser, claim priority over the equities of third persons, he must not, at the time of purchase, have had either actual or constructive notice of such equities.[82] Registration or record,[83] or notice or knowledge of facts which

One who sends a draft to be delivered in payment for lands when the deed is executed, but receives notice of adverse claims to the land in time to stop payment of the draft and makes no effort to do so is not a bona fide purchaser. 76. See 4 C. L. 830. By "good faith" is meant a purchase made not merely for a consideration, but also without notice to the purchaser of an adverse claim to the property by others; for the taking of an estate after notice of a prior right makes one a mala fide purchaser. King v. Huni, 25 Ky. L. R. 2266, 81 S. W. 254, citing Kellar v. Stanley, 86 Ky. 246.

77. A mortgagee with full knowledge of probate proceedings afterward held fraudulent and void, whereby the mortgagor secured the title of minor heirs, cannot, after foreclosure, be considered an innocent purchaser, because it mistook the legal effect of such proceedings. Brodack v. Morsbach, 38 Wash. 72, 80 P. 275. Notice to a purchaser at a judicial sale of an outstanding title in a third person, either legal or equitable, or that the vendor's title is fraudulent, at any time before the payment of the purchase money or the execution of the deed, deprives him of the character of an innocent purchaser. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Stryker [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 953. Where the purchaser and the assignee of his bid at a judicial sale were parties to the proceedings and knew, or must be presumed to have known, the illegal method resorted to in depriving minors of their land, they were not bona fide purchasers within the meaning of Civ. Code Prac. § 391, protecting such purchasers, on an application by an infant for vacation of a judgment. Davidson v. Marcum [Ky.] 89 S. W. 703. A third party with notice is bound by a contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee to keep alive the security, to secure future loans. Girard Trust Co. v. Baird, 212 Pa. 41, 61 A. 507. Evidence of payment of full value for land, after the death of the purchaser and the lapse of years sufficient to authorize a finding of no notice of defects in vendor's title. Eastham v. Hunter, 98 Tex. 560, 86 S. W. 323. Evidence that plaintiff, through its president, was investigating its debtor's standing, was admissible as bearing on the question of notice. Capital Nat. Bank v. Wilkerson [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 258. Evidence held to show that, when plaintiff acquired title to the land by deed from the same party that defendant claimed under by virtue of a contract in writing, he was charged with notice of defendant's possession. Myers v. Schuchmann, 182 Mo. 159, 81 S. W. 618. Testimony of grantor that grantee had no knowledge of defect in title authorized inference that grantor's communication to grantee did not include information of such defect. Id. Oral proof is competent to show that a grantee had actual notice of a prior lease. Ladnier v. Stewart [Miss.] 38 So. 748. Finding of chancellor on conflicting evidence that second mortgagee had knowledge of prior, unrecorded mortgage, not interfered with. Flowers v. Moorman, 27 Ky. L. R. 728, 86 S. W. 545. An averment in a petition that defendant had notice of the validity of an adverse claim upon the premises when he acquired, or attempted to acquire interests therein, which is not denied in the answer or other pleadings, is taken as confessed, and prevents his being considered as an innocent purchaser. King v. Huni, 25 Ky. L. R. 2266, 81 S. W. 254.

84. San Augustine County v. Madden [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 219, 87 S. W. 1056; Sicher v. Rambousek [Mo.] 91 S. W. 68. The right in any case to postpone a senior to a junior deed rests in part upon the absence of notice or knowledge of some fact or circumstance which ought to have provoked effective inquiry; and whether there was such notice or knowledge is always a fact inquiry. Wynne v. Ward [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 237. A purchaser from a fraudulent vendor is put upon inquiry, where he has knowledge of facts reasonably sufficient to excite suspicion. Morimura v. Samaha, 25 App. D. C. 189.

ILLUSTRATIONS. Facts constituting constructive notice: The fact that the vendor has only a bare equity is notice to the purchaser that secret trusts may be outstanding. Deskins v. Big Sandy Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 695. The reference to a mortgage in a note brings to the notice of every one dealing with the note all the conditions of the mortgage. Cornish v. Woolverton [Mont.] 81 P. 4. A plea filed by defendant in foreclosure proceedings that he had sold the property and delivered possession to another was such notice as called for vigilance on the part of the mortgagee, although the deed was unrecorded. Licata v. De Corte [Fla.] 39 So. 58.

Break in chain of title: Where there is a break in the chain of title but the grantor's deed contains sufficient to show the death of the former owner, that he left a will and that grantor was his "legatee," the grantee is put upon inquiry as to the nature of his grantor's estate under the will and is chargeable with notice that it is but a life estate. Weigel v. Green, 218 Ill. 227, 75 N. E. 913. Such is the case, even though the recorded copy of the will does not, because of insufficient authentication, operate as constructive notice. Id.

The word "trustee:" The word "trustee" following the name of the grantee in a deed constitutes notice of the character of his title. Flitcraft v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & Trust Co., 211 Pa. 114, 60 A. 557; Sternfels v. Watson, 139 F. 505. Where the word "trustee" follows the name of the grantee in the record, but there is no declaration of trust recorded, an investigation which does not include the trustee or any effort to do so is not sufficient to protect a mortgagee. Id. The visible erasure of the word "trustee," after the grantee's name in a deed, puts a trust company about to loan money on the premises upon inquiry. Flitcraft v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & Trust Co., 211 Pa. 114, 60 A. 557.

Purchase pendente lite: [See, also, Lis Pendens, 6 C. L. 484]. One buying land in litigation is charged with constructive notice of the pendency of the suit and its nature, and must abide its result. Jones v. Robb, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 263, 80 S. W. 395; Rothschild v. Leonhard, 33 Ind. App. 452, 71 N. E. 673; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Stryker, [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 953. He is affected with notice of everything set forth in the pleadings and exhibits with sufficient certainty and distinctness to advise him of its bearing upon the property in litigation. Bristow v. Thackston, 187 Mo. 332, 86 S. W. 94; Deskins v. Big Sandy Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 695. He is bound by the agreements made by his vendor in the course of the litigation, and change of venue by agreement does not destroy the force of the suit as lis pendens. Jones v. Robb, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 263, 80 S. W. 395. But a dismissal by the plaintiff of the count in the petition claiming a lien on the land terminates the lis pendens. Bristow v. Thackston, 187 Mo. 332, 86 S. W. 94. He is affected by lis pendens none the less because judgment was for a third person who became a party after the purchase, the latter's recovery being by force of the former's right. Jones v. Robb, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 263, 80 S. W. 395. A purchaser from the mortgagor of the mineral rights in lands, pending foreclosure of the mortgage, takes subject to the judgment that may be rendered and its consequences and takes no rights against a purchaser on his own account at foreclosure sale. Deskins v. Big Sandy Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 695. But if the purchaser at such sale is a secret agent of investigation would have revealed the claims of the other party,[85] are equivalent to actual notice.[86] But it is not incumbent on a party put upon inquiry to exhaust every possible source of information;[87] nor does the rule impute to him notice of every conceivable fact and circumstance, however remote, which might be so brought to light.[88] But there must appear such a connection between the facts discovered and the further facts to be discovered that the former furnish a reasonable and natural clue to the latter.[89] Visible user[90] or possession of real estate,[91] unless such possession be consistent with the record title,[92] with the mortgagor, the purchaser pendente lite will hold the rights he attempted to acquire by his purchase. Id. In a suit to reform a deed executed by the person having the legal title, the record title being in the defendant, the complainant is not required to file a notice under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 328, but a purchaser from defendant pending the suit is chargeable with notice of complainant's claim. Rothschild v. Leonhard, 33 Ind. App. 452, 71 N. E. 673.

Failure to deliver bond to assignee of bond and mortgage puts assignee upon inquiry, notwithstanding assignor's statements. Syracuse Sav. Bank v. Merrick, 182 N. Y. 387, 75 N. E. 232, rvg. 96 App. Div. 581, 89 N. Y. S. 238, cited 4 Curr. L. 831, n. 54. One buying a mortgage of one not in possession of either note or mortgage, under the rule of caveat emptor, must exercise more than ordinary diligence to ascertain who is in possession of them. Richards Trust Co. v. Rhomberg [S. D.] 104 N. W. 268; Miller v. Berry [S. D.] 104 N. W. 311. Where a party is advised by the seller that a note and mortgage are lost, he is put upon his inquiry as to the true ownership and buys at his peril. Barringer v. Loder [Or.] 81 P. 778. But the mere nonproduction of a bond and mortgage by the assignees thereof, when the mortgagor paid the same, was not notice to him of the claims of other parties, although the assignees were daughters of the mortgagee and the assignment was not recorded for a long time. Weinberger v. Brumberg [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 732.

Acceptance of second lease: The acceptance by a tenant under a recorded lease of a lease from a claimant of the land, which he did not record, but continued to pay rent to his original landlord, was not notice to a grantee of the latter of such other claim to the land, of which he had no actual notice. San Augustine County v. Madden [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 219, 87 S. W. 1056.

86. A person having such knowledge is not different in law from one who is shown to have had direct and certain knowledge. Morimura v. Samaha, 25 App. D. C. 189. There is no difference in legal effect between actual and constructive notice. Wickham v. Twaddell, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 188. When the conditions which the law says shall constitute constructive notice are shown to have existed, the presumption of such notice is conclusive. Prewitt v. Prewitt, 188 Mo. 675, 87 S. W. 1000.

89. The fact that H.'s deed to E. was missing and unrecorded would create no reasonable or natural ground for suspecting that E.'s deed to B. was invalid. Johnson v. Erlandson [N. D.] 105 N. W. 722.

90. Parties who had knowledge of a well-defined, open roadway across the land and a claim of right to use the same were not bona fide purchasers without notice of the easement. Van de Vanter v. Flaherty, 37 Wash. 218, 79 P. 794. The completion and operation of an irrigation canal on lands is notice to subsequent purchasers of the rights of the canal company as against their vendors. Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, 143 Cal 248, 76 P. 1032. The occupation of the land in the highway, in front of a farm, by the poles and wires of a telephone company, is notice to subsequent purchasers of such rights as the company may have in connection therewith. Barber v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 105 App. Div. 154, 93 N. Y. S. 993. The operation of a railroad through land is constructive notice of the railroad company's rights therein, though its deed is unrecorded. Harman v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 689; Harman v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 689. See 15 Yale L. J. 201. The construction of the "Board walk" at Atlantic City, along the ocean front above high water was not notice to a grantee of lands below high water, of covenants in an unrecorded deed of right of way to the city by his grantor, not to erect any structure on the ocean side of the way so granted, of which covenant such grantee had no actual notice. Atlantic City v. New Auditorium Pier Co., 67 N. J. Eq. 610, 59 A. 158, rvg. 67 N. J. Eq. 284, 58 A. 729.

91. Adverse possession is notice of whatever facts as to the title would be developed by inquiry of the person in possession; and if inquiry is not made, the presumption is that, had it been made, the right, title or interest of the possessor would have been discovered. Austin v. Southern Home Bldg. & Loan Ass'n [Ga.] 50 S. E. 382. If it can be shown that the purchaser made such inquiry and pursued it in good faith, and was informed that the title was in the party from whom he purchased, the presumption arising from possession will be overcome. Id. Where husband and wife are in possession, the possession is presumed to be the husband's (Civ. Code 1895, § 3931), and the purchaser must make inquiry of the husband. Id. In case of possession by husband and wife and record title in the husband, who applies for a loan, the lender is protected against any secret equity in the wife, the husband's application indicating that any inquiry from him would have elicited the information that he was the owner. Id. Where the mortgagee knew that the mortgagor's grantor had a room in the house, that she had some interest in the premises, and that part of the money raised acts of dominating control, improvements, the continuous cultivation of the land, etc., are as potential in imparting notice of a claim of title as the record of a deed.[93] But possession is notice only of such right as the party has; it does not create title or make no title a good one.[94] There is a conflict as to whether or not the grantee in a quitclaim deed is a bona fide purchaser.[95] Although it has been held that the fact that the immediate grantor of the purchaser holds under a quitclaim deed is a circumstance well calculated to excite inquiry, yet when the last two grantors held under warranty deeds, it was not incumbent upon the purchaser to make inquiry, simply because there was a quitclaim deed in the chain of title, especially in view of the fact that the statutes provide that such a deed shall be lawful to convey land in fee simple;[96] and a quitclaim deed loses its significance as a circumstance to show bad faith in the purchaser, when its use is sufficiently explained, and especially when it is admitted that the purchaser acted in good faith and without notice.[97] In Texas, if an inspection of the whole instrument discloses that the vendee purchased and the vendor sold the land as distinguished from a mere claim or chance of title, the instrument will support the plea of innocent purchaser.[98] And in cases of doubtful construction the payment of adequate consideration and the retention of a vendor's lien for the purchase money may be taken into consideration.[99] Notice to one is imputed from certain representative relations in which he may stand.[1] The grantee of a bona fide purchaser takes clear of equities, on his mortgage had gone to settle her claims for support under the contract for the transfer of the property, he had sufficient notice of her equities, and his mortgage was subject thereto. Gall v. Gall [Wis.] 105 N. W. 953. Knowledge by a loan association's local representative of the occupancy by a third party of the land mortgaged held constructive notice to the association of such party's claim to the land. Dennis v. Atlanta Nat. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n [C. C. A.] 136 F. 539. Where the possession is of an ambiguous and equivocal character, the question of its sufficiency to constitute notice is a question of fact for the jury. Butler v. Wheeler [N. H.] 59 A. 935. If part of the land purporting to be conveyed be held in adverse possession, of which fact the vendee has knowledge at the time of his purchase, he can have no relief, either at law or in equity; otherwise if he has no knowledge of such adverse possession. Rich v. Scales [Tenn.] 91 S. W. 50.

92. Possession of land retained by the grantor was not notice to an innocent purchaser of the grantee that more land was included than was intended, it being presumed that he held under the grantee. Malette v. Wright, 120 Ga. 735, 48 S. E. 229. Continued occupancy of premises by the grantor's attorney in fact, when consistent with the deed executed, is not notice of any defect in grantee's title. Eastham v. Hunter, 98 Tex. 560, 86 S. W. 323.

Where the will of a nonresident had been probated at his domicile and administration taken out on his estate in Texas, the holder of lands under a quitclaim deed from the administrator, in good faith, and without notice of any community interest, was protected in his title. Nelson v. Bridge [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 885.

97. The quitclaim deed was given by a board of levee commissioners, because there was a doubt at the time whether a perfect title could be given to certain lands conveyed to the commissioners by the state, by Act 97, p. 107, of 1890. Williams v. White Castle Lumber & Shingle Co., 114 La. 448, 38 So. 414.

though he himself knew thereof.[2] And the grantee of one who was not a bona fide purchaser may himself be one.[3] To affect a mortgagee's rights the notice must be communicated before the execution of the mortgage.[4] Actual, and not merely constructive, knowledge is necessary to deprive a purchaser of the benefit of the statute of Iowa for the setting aside of the sale and recovery of the purchase money, when land is sold on which the judgment is not a lien and that fact is unknown to the purchaser.[5]

§ 2. Statutory records or filings as constructive notice. A. In general.[6]—An act requiring recordation of transfers of title does not apply to pledges.[7]

(§ 2) B. Deed and mortgage records. Eligibility to record.[8]—A mortgage[9] or a written assignment of a mortgage is a conveyance within the meaning of the recording acts,[10] and an agreement to convey a strip of land for a railroad right of way is a contract relating to real estate within the meaning of such acts.[11] The Code of Iowa, in permitting the record of affidavits explaining any defect in the chain of title to real estate, does not authorize the supplying of a link in the chain by indicating, in the form of an affidavit, the oral evidence available to establish it, and thus making out a title resting in parol.[12] The word "record," in statutes relating to recordable papers has a technical meaning, the legal registry of an acknowledged or proven paper,[13] and the record of a deed without such proof or acknowledgment is a nullity.[14] But the fact that a lease was improperly acknowledged and not en-

Ford v. Axelson [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1039.

3. The innocent purchaser for value from the grantee of land at an administrator's sale, holding under a warranty deed, is not charged with notice of outstanding equities when there is nothing in the chain of title to put him upon inquiry, although the first purchaser's payment was by credit on antecedent indebtedness. Nelson v. Bridge [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 885. Purchasers of county school lands, in good faith and without notice of any defect in the consideration moving from the original grantee, hold a good title as against the county, notwithstanding such defect. San Augustine County v. Madden [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 219, 87 S. W. 1056. One who acquires title by fraud or undue influence has title until dispossessed by the person having the right to do so, and meanwhile may convey a good title or give a valid mortgage to a third party without notice or knowledge. Swanstrom v. Day, 93 N. Y. S. 192. Where the ostensible owner of property has fraudulently mortgaged it and negotiated the mortgage, the right of the real owner to contest the validity of the mortgage does not depend exclusively upon whether it was acquired for value, in good faith and before maturity, but rather upon whether he is estopped, under all the circumstances, from doing so. Hillard v. Taylor, 114 La. 883, 38 So. 594.

4. A mortgagee who takes a mortgage and makes advances without notice that the mortgaged property is the wife's separate property cannot be affected in his right to acquire title on foreclosure sale by any notice subsequent to the execution of the mortgage. titled to record does not affect it as against a subsequent grantee with actual knowledge of its existence,[15] and the record of a deed, which is void as a record, because of the improper acknowledgment of the deed, is nevertheless admissible to show the existence of the deed.[16] Contracts for the sale of standing timber,[17] or deeds thereof[18] convey an interest in the land and must be recorded.

Necessity, operation and effect of recording.[19]—Record of a deed is not essential to delivery, even though it be withheld from record by agreement of the parties.[20]

The only purpose of recordation is to give notice,[21] failure to record not affecting the validity of the instrument as between the parties,[22] or those having knowledge thereof.[23] The Mississippi law requiring the recording of town plats before sale of lots by reference to them has no application to prior sales.[24]

St. 1899, § 3118, does not operate to cure such defect, except in deeds recorded one year prior to 1887. Id. Clark v. Strong, 105 App. Div. 179, 93 N. Y. S. 514. Under Civ. Sufficiency, operation and effect of record.[25]—Public records operate as constructive notice to those persons only who, for their own protection, are bound to search for them; as to other persons, the notice must be actual, not constructive.[26] The recording act does not operate to cure jurisdictional defects in tax proceedings.[27] The presumption is that notice to the public is given only by a recording of the document in the official records, and the burden of proving a prior notice is upon the party alleging it.[28] A person may rest upon the constructive notice which the record of his title imparts and he is under no obligation to give any other notice to any one who assumes to deal with other parties in reference to such property.[29] But while he may remain passive, he must not actively deceive or mislead a reasonable person or deter or dissuade him from examining the record and learning the true condition of the title.[30] Record begins with the delivery of the instrument to the proper officer,[31] and in such case a mistake made in the actual record thereof does not prejudice the party interested as against a subsequent purchaser.[32] The instrument must be recorded in the proper book.[33]

33. Previous to June 13, 1892, when Rev. St. 1901, § 2518, is notice to subsequent purchasers of the quantity of land authorized to be sold and conveyed. Pierce v. Vansell [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 554. Where the owner of lands conveys the same, with an exception of rights under a prior oil and gas lease, and the conveyance is duly recorded, subsequent purchasers take with constructive notice of such exception, whether they have actual knowledge or not. Moore v. Griffin [Kan.] 83 P. 395. Where an administrator's deed described the record, volume and page where the order for the execution of the deed was entered, as prescribed by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2518, subsequent purchasers are chargeable with notice of what the record discloses, as to quantity of land authorized to be sold and conveyed. Pierce v. Vansell [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 554. A recorded plat is constructive notice to all the world of the lots, streets and avenues therein. Wickham v. Twaddell, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 188. The owner of a lot in such a plat is entitled to assume that every newcomer will regard the notice furnished by the public records of the location and width of the streets and avenues therein. Id.

36. A statement in a deed that the interest conveyed was an undivided one-half interest, imported notice to subsequent purchasers from the grantor that there was an undivided one-half interest outstanding and not claimed by the grantor. Costello v. Graham [Ariz.] 80 P. 336. The purchaser of land entered under the homestead law is chargeable with notice that the entryman had power to convey or incumber his land any time after final proof made and is bound to search the record for conveyances executed by him after such time and prior to issue of patent. Peterson v. Sloss [Wash.] 81 P. 744. Where a purchaser from the mortgagor paid the debt to the assignor of the mortgage, after the assignment had been recorded, and took a release, a subsequent purchaser from him who made such payment was charged with notice that the assignor had no power to execute the release, and was not a bona fide purchaser for value. Cornish v. Woolverton [Mont.] 81 P. 4. Where building restrictions appear in the direct chain of title to real property, the purchaser thereof is chargeable with knowledge of the purpose of such restrictions. Hemsley v. Marlborough House Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 455. Where, on sale of a minor's land, the deed was made to a third party who immediately conveyed to the guardian, the simultaneous dates of the deeds on record constituted notice to a mortgagee of the fraudulent character of the transaction. Burns v. Cooper [C. C. A.] 140 F. 273. In Pennsylvania the filing in the prothonotary's office of a building contract containing a stipulation against liens, bearing date more than ten days prior to the date of the filing, puts all persons upon inquiry as to the actual date of the contract. Act of June 26, 1895 (P. L. 369) requires a contract to protect property against liens to be filed within 10 days after its execution. Cutter v. Pierson, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 10.

37. It is not the grantee's duty to see that the deed is properly indexed before he removes it, but the clerk's. Ky. St. 1903, §§ 500, 513. Herndon v. Ogg, 27 Ky. L. R. 268, 84 S. W. 754.

38. Meacham v. Blaess [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 412, 104 N. W. 579. A deed executed by the entryman under the homestead law, after final proofs made but before patent issued, was not without the chain of title. Peterson v. Sloss [Wash.] 81 P. 744. Where Texas lands owned by a nonresident were sold to pay debts, regardless of the testator's will, such will was not in the chain of title of a subsequent purchaser, though filed and proved in Texas, and was not notice of outstanding equities. Nelson v. Bridge [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 885. Recitals in recorded deeds not in the chain of title are not notice of equities of third persons. Mansfield v. Johnson [Fla.] 40 So. 196.

39. Record of will held not to show to what use plaintiff's money, due her thereunder, had been put, and record of deed held not to show that the lands described therein had been purchased with her money. Prewitt v. Prewitt, 188 Mo. 675, 87 S. W. 1000. The record of a defective title to are entitled to rely on the public records[41] as written[42] as to title and incumbrances.[43] In the absence of notice a recorded instrument has preference over an unrecorded one.[44] In Montana the burden is on the grantee in an unrecorded deed to show that a subsequent purchaser, whose deed is recorded, had notice, either actual or constructive;[45] but in California the subsequent purchaser must show that he is a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration.[46] The word "subsequent" in county school lands is not notice to the grantee of the holder of such title that a new deed from the county to such holder, prior to the grantee's deed, was intended to cure defects in the title and hence invalid. San Augustine County v. Madden [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 219, 87 S. W. 1056. The record of a mortgage is constructive notice only of its existence and its ownership by the mortgagee named therein, but not of any assignment to another. Friend v. Yahr [Wis.] 104 N. W. 997. The holder of a trust deed is charged with constructive notice of such facts only as appear of record at the time of its filing for record, and not of a tax sale and deed subsequent, although they were of record when he granted an extension of time on the trust deed. Garrett v. Simpson, 115 Ill. App. 62.

40. A bona fide purchaser is not bound by secret trusts existing against his vendor Deskins v. Big Sandy Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 695. The bona fide purchaser of lands sold on foreclosure, without notice of an alleged agreement for additional time to redeem, cannot be disturbed. Matuey v. Williams [Ky.] 89 S. W. 678. A mortgage containing no covenants of seisin or warranty, executed and recorded before the mortgagor had acquired title to the premises described therein, has no greater effect than a quitclaim deed and is not enforceable against the premises in the hands of a purchaser for value, and without actual notice of the existence of the mortgage, from the mortgagor's heir. Donovan v. Twist, 105 App. Div. 171, 93 N. Y. S. 990.

41. As a general rule the tax collector in suing for taxes is obliged to look no further than the record of deeds to learn who is the owner of lands (Wood v. Smith [Mo.] 91 S. W. 85; Schnitger v. Rankin [Mo.] 91 S. W. 122); but this rule does not apply where no patent to the land has been issued, so that there is no record title and no apparent owner but the true owner in possession of the land (Wood v. Smith [Mo.] 91 S. W. 85).

42. A record showing legal title in "Cheffey" is no notice of judgments against him under the name "Sheffey." Boyd v. Boyd [Iowa] 104 N. W. 798.

43. While there is conflict of authority as to whether an unauthorized delivery of a deed held in escrow conveys any title even in favor of an innocent purchaser, yet the grantor in such a deed who knows that the grantee therein has obtained wrongful possession thereof and had it recorded is estopped by negligence in permitting the grantee's apparent ownership to exist of record for an unreasonable length of time, to assert title as against an innocent purchaser. Johnson v. Erlandson [N. D.] 105 N. W. 722. Where a mortgagee assigned the note and mortgage by indorsement on the note, but no assignment of the mortgage was recorded, and the mortgagee foreclosed by advertisement, a purchaser without notice or knowledge of the assignment was protected by the record. Huitink v. Thompson [Minn.] 104 N. W. 237. A person taking a mortgage on real estate may rely upon the record of a satisfaction of a prior mortgage by the record owner, in the absence of knowledge of ownership of the prior mortgage by any other person. Friend v. Yahr [Wis.] 104 N. W. 997. Purchasers and incumbrancers for value, without notice other than the records, are protected by the satisfaction of a mortgage executed by the mortgagee, where there is no assignment of the mortgage on the record. McVay v. Tousley [S. D.] 105 N. W. 932. The purchaser of real property may rely upon the record of a release of a deed of trust executed by the party to whom the deed was given, in the absence of any actual knowledge of any fraud in the execution of the release. Bristow v. Thackston, 187 Mo. 332, 86 S. W. 94. The purchaser from one who holds the record title, without notice that his deed was only a mortgage and that another had an equitable claim to the property, will hold as against such claim. Bean v. Venable, 27 Ky. L. R. 927, 87 S. W. 262. If the rule that one may rely upon the record works hardship to a third person, it is usually chargeable to the latter's negligence in not exercising ordinary care to guard his own interest by causing the record to show the actual state of the case. Friend v. Yahr [Wis.] 104 N. W. 997.

44. Williams v. White Castle Lumber & Shingle Co., 114 La. 448, 38 So. 414. Where A. sells to B., who fails to record, and B. sells to C., who records, and A. sells to D., who records after C., the title of C. prevails. Phelan v. Wilson, 114 La. 813, 38 So. 570. Where an attachment, levied without notice of a prior, unrecorded deed, is perfected by judgment, execution sale and deed, it holds as against the grantee in the unrecorded deed. Ray v. Keith, 218 Ill. 182, 75 N. E. 921. Where two mortgages are filed simultaneously, neither has priority and the foreclosure of one extinguishes the lien of the other; hence, a written notice served on the sheriff that the sale was to be made subject to the lien of the other had no effect. Bonstein v. Schweyer, 212 Pa. 19, 61 A. 447. In order that a subsequent unrecorded mortgage lien may be held prior to the lien of a recorded mortgage to secure future advances, as to such advances made after the second mortgage, notice must have been given to the prior mortgagee before such later advances. Proof of notice insufficient. Peacock, Hunt & West Co. v. Thaggard, 128 F. 1005.

45. Civ. Code, § 1641. Sheldon v. Powell [Mont.] 78 P. 491.

46. Under the rule embodied in §§ 1214, the Colorado recording act has reference to the recording, and not to the date of the instrument, so that the bona fide purchaser whose conveyance is first filed for record is entitled to preference.[47]

Recording officers and administration of the acts.[48]—The act of recording papers is the creature of statute, and the statute must be followed.[49] The recorder of deeds is a ministerial officer and has no jurisdiction to pass upon the validity of instruments presented for record.[50] He is required to receive, and file or record instruments duly executed and purporting on their face to be such instruments as are entitled to be filed or recorded.[51] He may use discretion, but not judicial discretion.[52] It is the duty of the recording clerk to see that deeds are properly indexed and not of the person presenting them for record.[53] Under the statutes of Tennessee, relative to the bonds of the register of deeds and his liability thereunder, he is liable for a failure to register a deed correctly, although his negligence is neither willful nor so gross as to imply willfulness.[54] The cause of action therefor accrues when the vendee is deprived of his property.[55] Under the Massachusetts statute requiring the final decision in the supreme or superior court, in proceedings to register title therein, to be certified to the land court where an appeal is taken from the land court to the superior, and thence to the supreme court, the latter's decision cannot be certified directly to the land court, but through the superior court.[56]

(§ 2) C. Wills and their probate and administration proceedings.[57]—Where a will was duly probated and the records of the county were afterwards destroyed by fire, it will be presumed that the clerk duly recorded the will and its probate according to law, making it constructive notice.[58] Especially when a clerk's certificate to that effect appears on the original will; and the fact that the will was not permitted to remain in the clerk's office as required by law is immaterial as to third persons.[59]

(§ 2) D. Chattel mortgages, conditional sales and other liens.[60]—In most states chattel mortgages,[61] conditional sales,[62] and other liens, are void as against 1217, of Civil Code. And the fact that plaintiff alleged that defendants had notice of his title when they took their conveyance, and that such allegation was traversed, did not shift the burden. Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, 78 P. 957.

47. Mills' Ann. St. p. 593, § 446, provides that deeds, etc., shall take effect as to "subsequent bona fide purchasers" after filing for record. Houlahan v. Finance Consol. Min. Co. [Colo.] 82 P. 484.

61. A contract which conveys personal property to another to secure the payment of a debt is a chattel mortgage and must be signed by two witnesses and filed with the register of deeds, as required by §§ 3578, 8583, Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, to be valid as against creditors. Thompson v. Crosby [Okl.] 82 P. 643.

62. A transaction is a conditional sale, whenever payment is a prerequisite to the passing of title. Pringle v. Canfield [S. D.] 104 N. W. 223. An instrument called a "lease." acknowledging the receipt of part payment and providing for payment by instalments, until a certain sum was paid, whereupon the property involved was to belong to the lessee, was a conditional sale (Id.), valid as to third parties as well as to the parties to the transaction (Kidder v. Wittler-Corbin Machinery Co., 38 Wash. 179, 80 P. 301). A creditors and subsequent creditors or mortgagees in good faith, unless filed or recorded or accompanied by a visible and continuing change of possession.[63] An assignment of a deposit in a bank by check being absolute, the property does not remain in the possession of the assignor and is not affected by the recording acts,[64] and the fact that the mortgage was duly recorded does not prevent the attaching of an artificer's lien for repairs duly authorized to be made on the chattels.[65] Statutory provisions as to filing or recording must be strictly complied with by the mortgagee;[66] but the failure of the officer with whom a chattel mortgage is filed, to perform his duty in any respect does not affect the mortgagee's rights.[67]

Registration of a chattel mortgage is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers,[68] and a chattel mortgagee for money presently paid, who records his mortgage, has a superior right to the holder of a prior unrecorded mortgage, of which he had neither actual nor constructive notice;[69] but the unauthorized registration of a mortgage on personal property is not constructive notice.[70] While one buying from the possessor of chattels ordinarily takes as a bona fide purchaser, yet in Alabama he can not so take from a bailee until after three years' possession,[71] and it is incumbent on him to show this as against the true owner,[72] and the purchaser of chattels is bound by any knowledge he may have affecting the title to the same.[73]

contract by the United States, by which all parts of certain machinery, paid for by the government under a specified system of partial payments, became the sole property of the United States, was not a conditional sale requiring record under Va. 63. Kimball Co. v. Piper, 111 Ill. App. 82. Where a chattel mortgage is declared to be "absolutely void as against the creditors of the mortgagor," unless recorded, it is void as to creditors of a purchaser of the mortgaged property, he becoming a mortgagor within the meaning of the statute. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Staten Island Clay Co. [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 441. The holder of corporation bonds secured by a trust mortgage executed prior to the purchase of property by the corporation under a conditional contract is neither a subsequent purchaser nor mortgagee, within the New Jersey statute making unrecorded conditional sales void as to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith. Tilford v. Atlantic Match Co., 134 F. 924. The receiver of the conditional vendee is entitled to the property or its proceeds, after the payment of the full contract price to the vendor. Id. Under the Ohio statute Rev. St. §§ 4155 (2), 4155 (3), declaring conditional sales void as to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, and creditors, unless evidenced by writing deposited with the township clerk, an adjudication in bankruptcy and appointment of a trustee operated as a seizure of all such property in the bankrupt's possession. In re Press-Post Printing Co., 134 F. 998. And a conditional sale not so evidenced is void as against his creditors, whether their claims arose before or after the contract was made. Dolle v. Cassell [C. C. A.] 135 F. 52. Laws 1893, p. 56, c. 36, § 1, re-enacted as Rev. Civ. Code, § 1315, and declaring that all conditional sales shall vest title in the vendee, as to third persons with notice, unless in writing and duly filed, is not a deprivation of property without due process of law. Pringle v. Canfield [S. D.] 104 N. W. 223. An agreement in the nature of a chattel mortgage, though neither acknowledged nor recorded, giving the debtor the possession and right to sell in the usual course of business, is good as to third parties having no prior lien, after possession taken thereunder. Martin v. Sexton, 112 Ill. App. 199. While the withholding of a chattel mortgage from record may invalidate it as a lien as against subsequent creditors without notice, yet it does not affect the mortgagee's right to prove his debt in bankruptcy nor subordinate his claim to others. NOVATION.

Definition and elements.[77]—Novation is the extinguishment of one obligation and the creating of another.[78]

Novation between the same parties.[79]—Novation may be accomplished by the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with the intent to extinguish the old obligation.[80] Unless the second agreement in terms purports to rescind the former one or unless the entire subject-matter of the earlier agreement is covered by the later one, or the later one is so inconsistent with the former one that both cannot stand together, there is no rescission of the former.[81]

Novation by the substitution of new parties.[82]—Novation may also be accomplished by the substitution of a new debtor or creditor.[83] A novation contract is to

73. The purchaser of personal property is bound by his knowledge of the life tenancy of the vendor, and takes only such interest. Dickinson v. Griggsville Nat. Bank, 111 Ill. App. 183. One who took a claim against a corporation for labor performed while he was manager, with knowledge that the expense incurred therefor was beyond the limit of his authority to bind the corporation, was not a bona fide purchaser for value. Farrell v. Gold Flint Min. Co. [Mont.] 80 P. 1027. A person who had been connected with the trading stamp business long enough to know that the stamps are not intended or adapted to the use of the public generally, and cannot be so used without detriment to the business, was not an innocent purchaser of such stamps for resale. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Temple, 137 F. 992.

81. Where purchaser of a stallion warranted to be a good foal-getter gave a note for part of the purchase price, such note providing that it should be void if the stallion was not as warranted at the end of two years, held, the second agreement was not a substitution of contracts or an abrogation of the original contract. Berkey v. Lefebure & Sons, 125 Iowa, 76, 99 N. W. 710. 83. Where D. works for R. and on settlement therefor R. agrees to pay C. and S. to whom D. is indebted, held to constitute a novation. Sherer v. Rubedew [Idaho] 83 P. 512. Where owner of property sold it on condition that it remain in his possession and control until paid for and the buyer resold it, his buyer, by consent of all parties, agreeing to pay the original owner, held a novation. Clark v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 138 N. C. 25, 50 S. E. 446. A vendee of land agreed in writing to pay a part of the purchase price in cotton, and the vendor transferred such instrument to a third person. The vendee made default and died insolvent. The vendee's heir after the death of the vendee agreed to transfer the land to the original vendor and another under a verbal agreement that they would pay off the instrument. The holder of the instrument subsequently agreed to this. Held insufficient to establish a novation discharging the liability of the purchasers on the verbal agreement. Conly v. Hampton [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 425, 87 S. W. 1171. Uncompleted offer of vendee of property to pay agent negotiating the sale the latter's claim against the vendor for commissions, held not to amount to a novation. Bandman v. Finn, 103 App. Div. 322, 92 N. Y. S. 1096.

be distinguished from an agreement by one person with another for the benefit of a third. The latter may be enforceable without any element of a novation contract characterizing it.[84] One contract cannot be wiped out and another formed unless the assent of all the parties interested in both contracts is given.[85] The substitution of one debtor for the other constitutes a consideration for the promise by the defendant.[86]

Essentials.[87]—An express agreement is not requisite for a novation or substitution of parties to a contract; it may be implied.[88] A contract of novation is not within the statute of frauds.[89]

Proof.[90]—Novation must be clearly proved;[91] in the absence of such proof the presumption is that there is no novation,[92] the burden of establishing it being on the party asserting it.[93]

Legal effect of novation.[94]—By a substitution of debtors, the old debtor is released and the new debtor becomes liable.[95] Contracts being substituted the old one is extinguished.[96]

The intention to novate must clearly appear from the terms of the agreement or by a full discharge of the original debt. Sucker State Drill Co. v. Loewer & Co., 114 La. 403, 38 So. 399. Where plaintiff sued upon a contract, a defense that the obligations of the contract had been extinguished by novation by reason of the creditors having received other notes signed by the debtor, together with other and new parties, payable at different dates and with higher rates of interest, held not sustained. nature continuing.[99] A private nuisance is defined to be anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements or hereditaments of another.[1] The doctrine now is that a nuisance may at the same time be both public and private.[2]

§ 2. What constitutes a nuisance.[3]—At common law, acts or things which are (1) prejudicial to public morals, (2) dangerous to life, and (3) injurious to public rights, were nuisances per se.[4] But this rule has often been made to bend to suit the requirements of commerce or manufacture,[5] and an authorized business properly conducted at an authorized place is not a nuisance.[6] An owner may make a lawful and reasonable use of his property, although it may cause some annoyance and discomfort to those in the vicinity,[7] and the motive of such owner in so using his own property is immaterial on the question of his liability to the adjoining owner as for a nuisance.[8] Nevertheless, when the use of one's own property actually results in injury of a substantial character to another it creates a nuisance.[9]

A thing is a nuisance when of itself it constitutes an unlawful annoyance or a source of danger to others. Casey v. Wrought Iron Bridge Co., 114 Mo. App. 47, 89 S. W. 330. A small-pox hospital, established for many years under 72 O. L. 77, by a municipality outside of its own corporate limits, at a distance of 250 feet back from a public highway, will not be abated as a nuisance, although a large township school house has since been erected on the highway opposite to it and dwellings have also been built adjacent. But the erection of an additional building to be used for hospital purposes, directly opposite the school house, and within fifty feet of the highway upon which the hospital lot abuts, will be enjoined as a public nuisance. Trustees of Youngstown Township v. Youngstown, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 498. Such specific acts as the throwing of refuse from the table and kitchen of the hospital at such points in the open as to be accessible to the dogs and cats of the neighborhood, and the permitting of nurses and convalescents, at a small-pox hospital, to walk upon the highway opposite the school house, may be restrained as a public nuisance. 9. Farver v. American Car & Foundry Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 579. To constitute the condition or use of property a nuisance, some legal right must be violated, either public or private, and it must work some material annoyance, inconvenience or injury, either actual or implied, from the invasion of the right. Lazarus v. Parmly, 113 Ill. App. 624.

The legislature has the power to declare what is a public nuisance,[10] and in some states nuisances are defined by statutes;[11] and, on the other hand, the legislature may, and often does, authorize and even direct, acts to be done which are harmful to individuals and which, without such authority, would be nuisances.[12] The legislature may also authorize a municipal council to declare what shall be considered nuisances.[13] But a council must legislate generally in so doing; it cannot enact ordinances that will affect only one factory, unless it is a nuisance per se or a public nuisance.[14] Neither the state nor a municipality, however, can make that a public nuisance which is not such in fact.[15]

The pollution of streams,[16] causing overflow of waters,[17] keeping a gaming house,[18] the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors,[19] the discharge of smoke, soot, cinders and dust,[20] or noxious odors,[21] noise and vibration,[22] or escaping electrici-

Meek v. De Latour [Cal. App.] 83 P. 300. Sec. 1930 B. & C. Comp. is substantially the definition of a nuisance at common law. State v. Nease [Or.] 80 P. 897. To constitute an offense thereunder, neither an actual breach or disturbance of the peace nor actual or threatened violence is necessary, but any immoral or criminal act disturbing the quiet of society, to the injury of public order or decorum, etc. Id. Manager of any establishment from which dense smoke is emitted deemed guilty of misdemeanor, under Laws 1901, p. 73. State v. Hemenover, 188 Mo. 381, 87 S. W. 482. But the natural and reasonable amount of smoke, dust and cinders from the proper operation of a brick plant is not a nuisance (Phillips v. Lawrence Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. [Kan.] 82 P. 787), and smoke was not a nuisance at common law (Glucose Refining Co. v. Chicago, 138 F. 209). Where the evidence showed that the occasional injury to plaintiff from smoke, etc., depended upon the direction of the wind and did not decrease the rental value of his property more than $25 per year, a permanent injunction would not be granted. Bentley v. Empire Portland Cement Co., 48 Misc. 457, 96 N. Y. S. 831.

Acts not nuisances per se may become so by reason of the manner or place of their commission.[28] When this happens it must be abated, for no one can have the legal right to do that which destroys his neighbor's property or health.[29] Where the question of a private nuisance is raised, the result produced by it upon persons of ordinary health and sensitiveness, rather than those afflicted with disease or abnormal physical conditions, is to be taken as the criterion.[30]

§ 3. Right to maintain; defenses.[31]—The fact that a business is a lawful one,[32] or that it is properly and carefully conducted,[33] or that there are large investments therein,[34] or that the erection complained of is lawful, or necessary to the operation of the business, is no defense if the nuisance actually exists.[35] While one may properly conduct a lawful business,[36] or make a reasonable and lawful use of his own property,[37] although it may result in some annoyance or inconvenience to his neighbor, yet the right to injure another's land at all in the use of one's own is an exception and the burden is always upon the defendant to bring himself within the exception.[38] Although a party may have operated a foundry in a certain locality long enough to acquire a prescriptive right to do so, yet he cannot so operate it as to create and continue a nuisance to an adjacent property owner, especially when it is possible to operate it so as to avoid the same.[39] A municipality is not barred by mere lapse of time from removing an obstruction from a public street which constitutes a public nuisance.[40]

§ 4. Remedies against nuisances. A. Abatement and injunction. Abatement.[41]—A public nuisance may always be abated.[42] The underlying principle, which should control in defining and regulating nuisances is that rights of owners and users are held subject to the right of the proper authority, to require them to conform to those regulations which are essential to the preservation of life, health, morals and good government.[43] A purely public nuisance can be abated only at the suit of the public.[44] The section of the New York Public Health Law which provides for the enforcement by mandamus of the performance of any duty enjoined in the law is intended only to compel health boards and officers to do their duty, and mandamus does not lie thereunder against an individual to abate a nuisance in compliance with a local board's order.[45] Cities are generally given the power to abate nuisances within their boundaries;[46] but when a party, notified to abate a nuisance, neglects to do so, and the municipality abates it, the expense thereof cannot, in the absence of statutory authority, be charged to him, even though his property is benefited thereby.[47]

Injunction.[48]—A private nuisance can be abated either by a bill in equity to restrain,[49] or by an action at law for damages as often as any injury occurs;[50] or the aggrieved party may generally bring one action for the abatement of the nuisance and the recovery of damages;[51] and where the nuisance is abated at the

46. Rev. St. Ill. art. 5, c. 24, par. 75 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 294) authorizes city councils to declare what shall be nuisances and to abate the same. Glucose Refining Co. v. Chicago, 138 F. 209. A township not charged with duties pertaining to the public health cannot, independent of contract authorized by law, file a bill for protection against a public nuisance common to all its citizens, that being the right of the attorney general. Belleville Tp. v. Orange [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 331.

47. Village trustees under direction of the State Board of Health filled up a pond which was declared to be a nuisance. Held, that section 63, c. 24 of Cities, Villages and Towns statute (Rev. St. 1901, 286) contains no authority to charge such expenses to the owner of the property. Palmyra v. Warren, 114 Ill. App. 562.

49. Lamay v. Fulton, 109 App. Div. 424, 96 N. Y. S. 703. The jurisdiction of a court of equity to enjoin a continuing nuisance and compel its abatement is too well settled to admit of question. Nixon v. Boling [Ala.] 40 So. 210. Injunction is applicable to restrain the owner of property from using it for the gathering of large, boisterous, dissolute crowds of lawless people, so as to make it a nuisance. Palestine Bldg. Ass'n v. Minor, 27 Ky. L. R. 781, 86 S. W. 695. Where timber and brush had been cut down and left lying on plaintiff's land, in making a survey, if leaving it there constituted a nuisance because of the menace of forest fires it was not one which defendants continued by any overt act and which could be restrained by injunction. time of the hearing and it is not probable that it will be renewed, yet equity will retain jurisdiction to determine the damages.[52] While equity has jurisdiction to restrain the continuance of either public[53] or private nuisances,[54] it will not interfere with one's lawful enjoyment of his own premises as he sees fit, unless his doing so constitutes a public or private nuisance,[55] and unless, in view of all the circumstances, it is just to do so.[56] An injunction will not ordinarily be granted against an anticipated nuisance, unless the facts alleged and proven are sufficient to show that it will be a nuisance per se,[57] or that, if not a nuisance per se, it is a nuisance in view of the particular circumstances of the case,[58] and it must appear that the injury would be irreparable.[59]

An action to abate a nuisance is an equitable action,[60] and neither party is entitled to a jury as a matter of right.[61] The trial of an action to enjoin the maintenance of a nuisance under the prohibitory liquor law need not be dismissed or continued to await the disposition of a criminal charge against defendant for a violation of that law.[62] The question that a temporary injunction to restrain a nuisance is too broad cannot be first raised in the appellate court.[63]

Parties.[64]—The right to recover for damages to land caused by overflow resulting from the construction of a dam accrues to those who own the land or hold damageable interest therein at the time of the injury.[65] A tenant is entitled to relief from the continuance of a nuisance by another tenant of part of the same premises.[66] Although the borough council had permitted a contractor to adapt the

66. Temporary injunction to restrain the operation of a shooting gallery, the noise and music of which was driving away the construction of a building to a pavement that might be laid in the future at an established paper grade, the borough had a standing to maintain a bill to enjoin the construction of a sidewalk at such paper grade, making it a dangerous public nuisance.[67]

Pleading, evidence and defenses.[68]—A bill which alleges that to be a nuisance which is not one per se must set forth specifically the facts and circumstances which make it a nuisance.[69] A complaint that showed that plaintiff was damaged by the continuance of an alleged nuisance was sufficient for the issuance of a temporary injunction, though it failed to allege and demand damages in any specific sum.[70] A complaint by a city for the removal of permanent constructions, encroaching on a sidewalk, asking that they be declared a nuisance and that defendant be ordered to remove them or the plaintiff authorized to charge the expense of removal to defendant, was not objectionable as uniting improperly in the same count an equitable cause of action to abate a nuisance and an action of ejectment.[71] Where a bill was filed to restrain the pollution of a stream by sewage, a cross bill averring that a certain water company above had diverted water that would have diluted the sewage and another company had built a dam below that prevented the passage of sewage, was bad as pleading matters not germane to the original bill;[72] and where the bill, in such case, tendered the opportunity of avoiding an injunction by making compensation, an answer which failed to make election was bad;[73] and also, where complainants calculated their damages upon the basis of their injuries being permanent, such calculation necessitated a counter statement whether the pollution was to be permanent or temporary, and, if temporary, for how long; and for lack thereof the answer was bad.[74]

In a suit by a private person to enjoin the obstruction of a street, the allegation of several grounds of special injury, but proof of only one, did not constitute a variance.[75] It is no defense that the acts of others contributed to cause the nuisance, there being no contribution among independent wrongdoers.[76] Municipal guests of plaintiff's hotel. Grantham v. Gibson [Wash.] 83 P. 14.

NOTE. One without proprietary interest in his place of residence sought to recover damages for sickness caused by a palpably foul well on the defendant's adjacent land. Held, that the plaintiff might recover. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Glenn, 97 Tex. 586, 80 S. W. 992.

The court concedes that to recover for a nuisance causing mere personal annoyance in the enjoyment of real property or damage to it, a plaintiff must show legal interest in it to the extent, at least, of possession. Kavanagh v. Barber, 131 N. Y. 211. But it distinguishes a second class of nuisances, composed of those which, as in the principal case, cause physical injury to the person, and allow recovery without a property basis. This distinction was maintained by the lower court in a New York case, which, however, was reversed on other grounds by the higher court. Hughes v. City of Auburn, 12 App. Div. [N. Y.] 311. Contra. Ellis v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 63 Mo. 131, 21 Am. Rep. 436. This conflict over the scope of nuisance could be wisely avoided by considering cases of the second class not under that most indefinite head, nuisance, but under the law of negligence. The defendant should use due care to prevent the escape from his premises of unhealthful air liable to cause physical injury to people in the vicinity. This duty he seems to have violated in the principal case and so was properly held liable. See Holly v. Boston Gas Light Co., 8 Gray [Mass.] 123.—18 Harv. L. R. 68.

People v. Wing, 147 Cal. 382, 81 P. 1104. Complaint of the construction of stairway, area, etc., encroaching on the sidewalk, held to set forth facts entitling plaintiff to relief. sanction constitutes no defense,[77] and the establishment of a mere paper grade by a borough confers no right on a property owner to elevate his sidewalk above the natural grade, so as to make it a dangerous public nuisance.[78] An acquittal on the charge of illegally selling intoxicating liquors under the prohibitory liquor law is no bar to an action to restrain the maintenance of a nuisance under said law.[79] The statute of limitations is no defense to a bill filed for the abatement of a public nuisance.[80] Although a nuisance may have been created beyond the period of limitation, if it is maintained as a continuing nuisance, that is a renewal of the wrong and is actionable.[81] It is no defense to the maintenance of a nuisance that the plaintiff is only a tenant, where the injury is to his business and not to the freehold.[82] A receipt for payment, for which consent was given for the operation of a soap factory on certain premises, was not a license to create noxious odors.[83]

An injunction will be denied where the nuisance has been abated pending the action,[84] or where the plaintiff himself contributes to the acts complained of.[85]

Judgment or decree.[86]—In a suit for an injunction, the court may, as incidental to the main relief sought, ascertain and allow for the injury already done.[87] A judgment for abatement may, in the discretion of the court, follow a judgment for private damages resulting from a public nuisance.[88]

Costs.[89]

(§ 4) B. Criminal prosecution.[90]—An ordinance which declares an act unlawful by necessary implication declares it of a noxious character, and may punish it as a nuisance without any formal declaration that it is a nuisance.[91] In Missouri the manager of any building or establishment from which dense smoke is emitted is made by statute guilty of a misdemeanor.[92] Public nuisances are generally punishable by indictment and criminal prosecution.[93] On an indictment of a railroad

D.] 103 N. W. 389. An indictment charging a railroad company with having suffered and committed a nuisance by the improper erection and maintenance of a bridge and ap-company for a nuisance for maintaining an illegal crossing, the questions of the forfeiture of its charter and the constitutionality of its act of incorporation cannot be raised.[94] There is no variance between an information charging the setting up and maintenance of "a public or common nuisance in and upon a public highway" and an indictment charging the same "in a common road, or highway for all citizens of this commonwealth to go, pass or travel at their will."[95] On the indictment of a railroad company for a nuisance for maintaining an illegal crossing over a country road, it is a question for the jury to determine whether the traveled part of the road has been so narrowed as to impede public travel.[96]

(§ 4) C. Action for damages.[97]—One creating or maintaining a nuisance is liable for the damages resulting therefrom,[98] regardless of the degree of care exercised by him, his liability being of the character of an insurer.[99] If a landlord

Lockard, 112 Ill. App. 423. The fact that the defendant is a quasi public corporation, invested with the right of eminent domain, does not affect the right of an adjacent landowner to bring a second or third action for what, in the case of a private individual, would be a continuing nuisance. Crow Wing County Com'rs [Minn.] 104 N. W. 1089. Where there was evidence of a nuisance on the premises, but affirmative proof that the premises were owned by only one of the two joint defendants, a motion by the plaintiff to set aside the judgment and grant a new trial should have been granted as to the owner and denied as to the other defendant. Berger v. Content, 94 N. Y. S. 12. The contractor who built a bridge, ordered and contracted for as provided by law, could not be held liable for personal injuries to plaintiff caused by its fall, on the theory that, by reason of negligent and improper construction, it constituted a nuisance. Casey v. Wrought Iron Bridge Co., 114 Mo. App. 47, 89 S. W. 330. A railway and light company stands on the same footing as an individual, as to the maintenance of a nuisance, and if its power house is injurious to property adjoining, on account of the smoke, vibration and escaping electricity, the company is liable for the injury. 99. Casey v. Wrought Iron Bridge Co., 114 Mo. App. 47, 89 S. W. 330. Persons maintaining a powder magazine on their own premises are bound to use every possible precaution to prevent injury to those living in the neighborhood, and are liable for such injuries, unless caused by an explosion precipitated by some great and unanticipated natural force, or acts of persons over whom they had no control and which could not reasonably have been anticipated. Flynn v. Butler [Mass.] 75 N. E. 730. Parties using the sidewalk in the prosecution of their business must see that it is kept reasonably safe for persons walking thereon with ordinary care. Fruit merchants held respon-lets premises already a nuisance, he and the lessee are, both or either, liable for the continuance;[1] and even if the lessee adds to the nuisance, not by a separate, independent work, but one used along with the original nuisance, the lessor is still liable.[2] Where town officers blew up ice in a river to drain off the water overflowing a highway so negligently as to cause a nuisance endangering private property, the town was not under obligation to remove the nuisance and liable for not doing so.[3] In an action based upon nuisance, negligence is not an essential element.[4]

Where direct injury to an individual results from a public nuisance, a private action can be maintained for the damages suffered,[5] to be followed in the discretion of the court by judgment for an abatement.[6] Where the sickness complained of may have just as well resulted from other causes as the stagnant water allowed to accumulate on defendant's premises, the plaintiff cannot recover;[7] especially if those other causes existed upon plaintiff's own premises.[8] To entitle a reversioner to maintain an action for damages, the injury caused by the nuisance must necessarily be of a permanent character.[9] Where the nuisance is of a permanent nature, rendering the premises useless and valueless to plaintiff, he should recover the entire damages in a single action.[10] But if the nuisance is of such a character as can be abated and the injury terminated, plaintiff is not limited to a single action, but may sue, in successive actions, for injuries resulting from its maintenance.[11] A former recovery against a quasi public corporation for constructing a structure so as to be a continuing nuisance does not estop an adjacent landowner from recovering damages subsequently accrued.[12] While it is not necessary to notify one whose act or acts constitute a nuisance or request him to abate it,[13] yet, where the property is transferred to another during the existence of the nuisance, the grantee is not lisible for damage to person stepping on a ripe banana and slipping, when the sidewalk was obstructed with boxes of bananas by them. Garibaldi v. O'Connor, 112 Ill. App. 53.

13. A demand for the abatement of a nuisance is not necessary before an action for damages. If any necessity for such demand previously existed, it was abrogated by § 3483. Civ. Code. Coats v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Cal. App.] 82 P. 640.

able for its continuance until he has been notified thereof or requested to abate it, unless it appears that he had full knowledge of the facts that would be conveyed to him by such notice.[14] It has been held that statutes requiring the presentation of claims for damages against municipalities before the commencement of suit therefor have no application to suits for relief from a nuisance.[15] But in Georgia it is held that a declaration on a money claim for damages against a municipal corporation for the maintenance of a nuisance, must allege a substantial compliance with such an act.[16] In case of a nuisance, continuous but not permanent in character, the statute of limitations does not begin to run from the beginning of the nuisance but from the time of actual damage from it.[17] In Alabama, an action by a lower riparian proprietor for pollution of a water course must be brought within one year.[18]

Pleadings.—A complaint, when first attacked in the appellate court, will be held sufficient if it states the facts constituting the alleged nuisance sufficiently to bar another action.[19] A declaration alleging the maintenance of a nuisance was sufficient after verdict, though it did not allege that offensive odors permeated the air on plaintiff's premises, but did allege that the odors caused much sickness in the vicinity and plaintiff's family were made sick by them.[20] In a complaint for damages resulting from falling into a defectively covered coal hole in a sidewalk, it is not necessary to allege that the maintenance of the hole constitutes a nuisance.[21] A complaint for the abatement of a nuisance and for private damages alleged is good, although it shows that the nuisance may also be a public nuisance;[22] but in such case the complaint must show that plaintiff will suffer some special and peculiar injury therefrom different in kind from that of the public generally.[23] An allegation that defendant could so arrange and operate his cupola that sparks, etc., would not be carried upon plaintiff's house, warranted an inference that a more careful arrangement would prevent the nuisance though the particular means were not set forth.[24]

Evidence.[25]—The existence of a nuisance must be proved by evidence of the things that constitute the nuisance.[26] It was not necessary for plaintiff to show that defendant's business, though lawful, was carried on recklessly or not properly managed, but to show that it was carried on greatly to his injury.[27] On the trial of a railroad company for a nuisance by maintaining an illegal crossing, the court may

Where the nuisance was of a temporary character, instructions authorizing a recovery of the difference between the fair value of the use of the property before and after the creation of the alleged nuisance were proper. If the plaintiff could by a reasonable expenditure under the circumstances, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, by work on his own land, have lessened the damages or obviated them in whole or in part, it was his duty to do so (Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 110 Ill. App. 626), and it is proper to take into consideration whether the injury could be so obviated in whole or in part (Id.). In an action by a life tenant for damages from the maintenance of a continuing nuisance, plaintiff could not be compelled to a determination of her damages on the basis of her life expectancy, where the injury complained of was not permanent in character, but resulted from negligence in the construction and maintenance of the structure claimed to constitute the nuisance. Hartman v. Pittsburg Inclined Plane Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 360. punitive damages against a railroad company for refusal to remove the carcasses of animals killed by its locomotive and thrown into a ditch near her premises.[35] The plaintiff must show that the injury was not one common to those living in the vicinity, but one peculiar to him and substantial in its character.[36] Where there is a direct physical injury to plaintiff's premises or physical interference with the enjoyment of them, different in kind from that suffered by the public generally, it is proper, in connection therewith, to show all other elements of damage.[37] Where a street railway company lays tracks upon highways in opposition to the abutting owner's protests and without authority, it cannot demand that damages therefor be assessed upon the same basis as if it had acted in the lawful exercise of the right of eminent domain.[38] Where the nuisance complained of is the pollution of a stream by sewage, plaintiff may recover the entire damages for injury to health, to trade and to water supply, up to the time of the suit, regardless of the value of the land.[39] But the municipality may show that the injury to the land is not permanent, as it is possible to abolish the conditions of which complaint is made.[40] If the nuisance is permanent in character, but one recovery of damages can be had.[41]

OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE.[51]

Preventing attendance of witness.—At common law an indictment would lie for bribery or attempting to bribe or dissuade a witness from appearing before a court pursuant to a subpoena,[52] and in Missouri it is a misdemeanor;[53] but to constitute the offense, it is necessary that a criminal prosecution against some person be actually pending in which such witness was to have appeared or testified,[54] and it is an essential element of the offense of offering to bribe a witness that the accused should know that the person to whom the bribe was offered was in fact a witness.[55] It is not necessary to the offense of inducing a witness to depart that his testimony be material,[56] nor is it necessary that the witness be under subpoena.[57] To constitute "hindering or preventing" a witness from appearing, physical intervention is not necessary but advice or threats will suffice.[58] An indictment in the language of the statute is sufficient,[59] and an averment that the witness was induced to leave the "jurisdiction" instead of the "state" is sufficient.[60] In an indictment for offering to bribe a witness it is not essential in all cases to allege expressly that the accused knew the party to whom the bribe was offered was a witness, as in many cases it is necessarily implied from a statement of the acts constituting the offense.[61]

Obstructing officer.—An averment in the language of the statute that the officer resisted was engaged in an effort to maintain the peace is not sufficient.[62]

"Officer" and "employe" distinguished.[66]—The courts seem to be in comparative uniformity upon the proposition that the distinction between those employments which are and those which are not public offices is as follows: Where one's employment does not arise out of contract and he performs services or owes duties to the government, state or municipality, and not merely to those who appoint or elect him; in other words if he is invested with a portion of sovereign powers, the office is a public one. It is in the application of this distinction that the courts generally have differed. It must also be remembered that in statutes the term "officer" may be used in a larger and narrower sense than here defined.[67] An office is distinct from its incumbent,[68] and exists independent of the resignation or death of the latter.[69] A salary or emolument is an incident to an office merely and not a neces-

Kinds of officers.[73]—With reference to the service performed officers are divided into civil[74] and military or naval[75] officers.

In the United States, with reference to the governmental body served, officers may be classified as Federal,[76] state,[77] county,[78] or city[79] officials.

Classified according to the legality and character of their title, officers are either de jure officers, de facto officers or usurpers.[80] To be a de facto officer there must be an office to fill.[81] An official holding over after the expiration of his term without reappointment is a de facto officer[82] if he continues to perform official acts.[83] In the absence of any color of appointment or election a mere intruder, to be treated as a de facto officer, must have acted as such under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as are calculated to induce people, without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action in the supposition that he is in truth an officer[84] and mere proof of his performance of the act concerning which a controversy arises is not sufficient proof of his authority to perform it.[85]

As to whether or not a new office is created is largely dependent upon the circumstances of each case.[89] A few states require a notice of an intention to apply for the passage of a local law stating the substance of such law.[90] The determination of the number of employes needed is frequently left to the discretion of some board or officer,[91] and an exercise of such discretion will not be reviewed by the courts in a collateral proceeding.[92] The number of employes allowed similar county officers in different counties need not be the same.[93]

§ 3. Eligibility and qualifications. A. In general.[94]—The right to hold office is not one of the fundamental privileges which belong of right to all the citizens of the states,[95] and a state has the same freedom of employment that belongs to an individual, and it may by legislative enactment, determine to employ in public service only citizens of a certain class other things being equal.[96] Special qualifica-

Id. Laws 1903, p. 225, c. 119, § 12, providing for the appointment of road overseers from among "the qualified electors" in each district held not violative of Const. art. 1, § 12, relating to class legislation. NOTE. Preference to a certain class of citizens. Nature of and right to an office: "The right to hold office can be no more a natural and personal right, nor more sacred than the right of suffrage, and it is the general holding of the courts that the right of suffrage is not a natural and personal right, but a political and civil right. It owes its existence to the constitution of civil government and not to the personality of the individual; nor does the right necessarily follow and become an attribute of citizenship. It is a right which is conferred, withheld or limited at the pleasure of the people, acting in their sovereign capacity. Once granted it may be taken away by the same power that granted it, and it is therefore not a natural right, which is held to be inalienable like the rights of conscience. Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 16 Am. Rep. 82; Barker v. People, 3 Cow. [N. Y.] 686, 15 Am. Dec. 322; People v. Barber, 48 Hun [N. Y.] 198; Anderson v. Baker, 23 Md. 531; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. [U. S.] 162, 22 Law. A public office has in it no element of property but is rather a personal public trust, created for the benefit of the state, and not for the benefit of the individual citizens thereof. Nor are the prospective emoluments of a public office property in any sense, for the salary and other perquisites may be reduced or otherwise regulated by law at all times, unless such change is forbidden by the constitution. tions such as residence[97] and that the officer be a taxpayer[98] are frequently imposed. The exaction of a filing fee as a prerequisite to filing for office under a primary election law does not constitute the imposition of a property qualification upon holding office.[99] At common law women are disabled from holding public office.[1] In Texas a deputy clerk of a county need not be a qualified voter,[2] and a woman is eligible to the office.[3] Generally one holding an incompatible[4] or lucrative public office is disqualified from holding another public office. A lucrative office is one the pay to which is affixed to the performance of its duties and, when the duties of the office are fixed by statute, it is immaterial that the compensation of the officer is fixed by some other board or officer.[5] A retired officer of the United States army is not holding office.[6] Under the Florida constitution a senator or representative is ineligible to appointment or election, during the time for which he was elected, to any civil office under the Constitution that has been created or the emoluments whereof have been increased during such time.[7] Such ineligibility continues during Donahue v. County of Will, 100 Ill. 94. The state has the same freedom of employment that belongs to the individual, and no one will contend that the individual may not employ whom he wishes to employ, or that he may not choose his employes from a certain class." Shaw v. City Council of Marshalltown [Iowa] 104 N. W. 1121, 1123, 1124. The same view is taken by a recent author of note. Abbott, in his work on Municipal Corporations, vol. 2, § 607, p. 1491, says: "The holding of public office is a special grant or mark of favor by the corporation. It is not an inherent, a vested or a natural right, and the people acting in constitutional convention or through the state legislature can prescribe such qualifications as they may deem desirable or expedient and which must be possessed by those desiring to become public officials and perform public duties."

Constitutionality of preferential statutes: In many states, and particularly under civil service laws, veterans and firemen are given a preference in appointments to public office or employment. The courts have invariably sustained the constitutionality of such statutes. Shaw v. City Council of Marshalltown [Iowa] 104 N. W. 1121, 1124, citing In re Wortman, 2 N. Y. S. 324; People v. Construction and operation of statutes: Such statutes do not exempt such preferred persons from the civil service examination, but they simply mean that where all applicants are equally qualified and one of them is within the preferred class he is entitled to the office; it is essential, however, that none of the applicants be better qualified than the one within the preferred class. the entire time for which such member was elected and cannot be removed by resignation from the legislature.[8] A resolution of a state legislature expelling a member is not a bill of attainder within the inhibition of the Federal constitution.[9]

Courts have jurisdiction to determine the constitutional qualifications of one who has been elected to office.[10] Under a constitutional provision giving the judicial department of the government the right to review the proceedings of all special statutory tribunals, the determination of a municipal common council as to the qualification of its members is subject to judicial review,[11] and the state legislature is powerless to take away or abridge such right.[12] In such case it is the province of the court to see that no arbitrary act is done.[13] One's qualifications cannot be collaterally assailed.[14]

One holding an office to which he is ineligible is guilty of usurpation of office.[15]

(§ 3) B. Civil service.[16]—Under the civil service laws of most states appointments and promotions must be from competitive examinations and according to the rating established thereby,[17] but not necessarily the one rated highest.[18] In mandamus against civil service commissioners to compel them to strike certain names from the list of eligibles for a certain office, all persons whose rights will be affected are necessary parties.[19] An omission in this regard requires the reversal of a decree for the relator,[20] and the defect cannot be waived by those who are made parties.[21]

§ 4. Choice or employment.[22] A. How chosen or employed.[23] Elections.—The election of public officers by popular vote is treated elsewhere.[24] All other "elections" are regarded as elective appointments and are treated under appointment.[25]

Right to appointment and enforcement of right.[29]—Under the laws of most states an honorably discharged Federal soldier or sailor is given a preference to appointive offices; the right to such preference, however, may be lost if not claimed in due season.[30] The right to the appointment being absolute, mandamus will lie.[31]

By whom appointed.[32]—The power of appointment is purely statutory.[33] Executive officers[34] and departmental boards and officers are frequently authorized to appoint subordinate officers.[35] The power is often conditional.[36] In Nebraska the legislature cannot appoint county officers, nor by an act solely for that purpose extend the terms of such officers.[37] A board having authority to retain counsel whenever it has litigation has no authority to appoint a person counsel at an annual salary.[38] The right of local self-government as understood in most of our states prohibits the appointment of local officers by state authority.[39] Police officers being state rather than municipal officials, a state legislature may provide for their appointment without infringing this right.[40] Power to accomplish a certain result, which evidently cannot be accomplished by the person or body to whom the power is granted without the employment of other agencies, includes the implied power to employ such agencies.[41]

People v. Houghton, 182 N. Y. 301, 74 N. E. 830, afg. 102 App. Div. 209, 92 N. Y. S. 661.

40. Pub. Laws c. 804, authorizing the Governor to appoint a board of police commissioners for the city of Newport, held constitutional. Horton v. City Council of Newport [R. I.] 61 A. 759. Such law is not in violation of Const. art. 4, § 10, declaring that the general assembly shall continue to exercise powers previously exercised, unless prohibited in the constitution. Id. See ante, § 1. Definitions and classification, for cases holding that police officers are state officers.

41. A county board of supervisors has implied power thereunder to appoint a health officer and provide for the payment of his salary, regardless of the validity of St. 1897, p. 464, c. 277, § 25, subd. 20, conferring express authority therefor. Valle v. Shaffer [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1028.

Manner of appointment.[42]—In order that there may be a valid appointment by a board or council there must be a quorum present.[43] A quorum being present, the act of a majority of the quorum is the act of the body,[44] and this is true though some of the members present refrain from voting.[45] Misconduct of the appointing board renders the appointment voidable.[46] Under the New York civil service law an appointment, in the noncompetitive class, of the person nominated cannot be made until the civil service board certifies as to his qualification and fitness.[47]

(§ 4) B. Filling vacancies and promotions.[48]—Like the power of appointment the power to fill a vacancy is entirely statutory.[49] The power of appointment to an elective office is exhausted when once exercised, and any subsequent appointment, until the incumbent has been removed or the office has become vacant, is void.[50] Statutes providing that if an officer die during his term of office his sureties may nominate a successor do not apply where the officer resigns.[51]

In New York promotions in the civil service must be based on competitive examinations.[52] As to ungraded service a mere increase in salary does not, ipso facto, constitute a promotion.[53] Under the New York City Charter a patrolman is not entitled to a promotion and increase of salary until the expiration of one year from the end of his probation term.[54]

Contracts of public employment.[55]—The general principles relating to public contracts are treated elsewhere.[56] In Indiana counties are prohibited from entering into contracts of employment on the percentage or commission basis unless the necessity of such employment and the contract therefor are entered of record.[57] If sanction of an employment is essential it must be proven.[58]

The county commissioners appointed one to fill the unexpired term "until January 1, 1905, or until his successor is appointed and qualified." Board of Com'rs of Howard County v. Garrigus, 164 Ind. 589, 74 N. E. 249, afg. former opinion 73 N. E. 82.

§ 5. Right to office and remedies to enforce same.[59] A. Indicia and evidence of right.—The absence of any record showing an appointment is prima facie evidence that the appointment was never made or approved.[60] An officer's commission is merely evidence of his appointment and, in collateral inquiries, the fact of the appointment may be shown by other means.[61] Proof that a person acts as a public officer is prima facie sufficient to show that he is such officer.[62] The rule that a certificate of election issued by the proper authority is prima facie or presumptive evidence of right to the office cannot apply where two certificates were issued to two persons for the same office.[63] There is no material difference in effect between a "commission" and a "certificate of election."[64]

(§ 5) B. What remedy.[65]—The determination of title to offices belongs exclusively to courts of law.[66] Quo warranto[67] and not certiorari[68] or mandamus[69] is the proper remedy to try title to public office, though it has been held that the title of a petitioner to an office may be determined in mandamus to compel the payment of his salary.[70] Relator being the sole claimant to an office, mandamus lies to compel his instalment.[71] A public officer, either de jure or de facto, in possession of an office is entitled to an injunction to restrain one who disputes his right to it or any one else from interfering with him in the discharge of his official duties.[72] Mandamus will not lie.[73] There being an adequate remedy by quo war-

St. 1895, art. 4343, providing for quo warranto proceedings in such cases, does not alter the rule. Id. Injunction will lie to protect the possession of a de facto officer against the interference of a claimant where his title is disputed, until the latter establishes his title by a proper proceeding. Petition for writ of prohibition

ranto,[74] injunction will not lie to restrain one from holding an office to which he is ineligible.[75] The title of a de facto incumbent to a public office cannot be examined in any collateral proceeding attacking his official acts.[76] On proceedings in the nature of quo warranto to determine the legal existence of a certain office, the title of the claimant to the office is not involved.[77]

A board having power to determine the election and qualifications of its own members, an executive officer cannot interfere in exercise of such power[78] and the board in determining the matter acts in a quasi-judicial capacity and no man can vote for his own case.[79]

(§ 5) C. Procedure and practice in particular remedies.[80]—The procedure and practice in particular remedies is largely treated in the specific topics dealing with those remedies.[81] The action must be brought within the period of limitations.[82] By failing to demur one may waive lack of certainty in the complaint.[83] An amendment must not change the cause of action.[84] Where, pending mandamus, by one illegally ousted from an office, the officer's term expires, the writ of mandate will simply direct the payment of relator's salary from the time of the ouster until the expiration of the term and will not direct his recognition as an officer.[85] A school director holds a state office within the meaning of constitutional or statutory provisions governing appellate jurisdiction.[86]

the beginning of a term of office, the general presumption is that the official term dates from the legal ascertainment of the result of the election and the officer assumes the duties of the office as soon thereafter as he can qualify and receive his commission.[89] Ordinarily the word or words "term" or "term of office," when used in reference to the tenure of office, mean a fixed and definite period of time;[90] hence, under constitutional or statutory provisions that officers shall hold office for a certain time and until their successors shall qualify the "term of office" is deemed to be the fixed, certain and definite period of time therein specified.[91] It is generally provided that an officer shall continue in office until his successor is elected or appointed and qualifies.[92] Such provision is not intended to prolong one's term of office beyond such reasonable time after the election or appointment as will enable the newly designated officer to qualify,[93] and if he fails to qualify before the expiration of such reasonable time the office becomes vacant.[94] An office being abolished an incumbent cannot hold over and exercise the duties of a new and distinct office even though the duties of the two offices be similar.[95] Continuing an officer in office beyond his term is equivalent to an appointment for the time he is so continued in office.[96] Where by the fundamental law the term of an office and the beginning and termination of such term are prescribed as well as the time for the election of a successor, the legislature is without authority to postpone the election of such successors and extend the term of office of the incumbents during the intervening time,[97] even though the fundamental law contains a provision that an officer shall hold over until his successor qualifies.[98] A constitutional amendment giving the legislature power to extend existing terms of office means the terms of office existing at the time of the adoption of the amendment.[99] Stat-

NOTE. Postponement of election of successor as an extension of the incumbent's term: Where the state constitution contains an unqualified limitation of the term of office, with no holding over clause, the legislature cannot alter it either directly or by postponing the date for the successor's qualification. State v. Askew, 48 Ark. 82; Howard v. State, 10 Ind. 99. But almost invariably there is a constitutional provision or general law authorizing holding over, as in the principal case. It is then frequently held that a statute postponing an election is not contrary to constitutional provisions fixing the terms of officers. The act is construed not to contemplate extending the term of the incumbent. The legislature acts under general authority to regulate elections. The incidental result is delay in the qualification of a successor; and a condition is created by virtue of which the constitutional provision for holding over operated to keep the then incumbent in office. State v. McCracken, 51 Ohio St. 123; State v. Menaugh, 151 Ind. 260, afd. Larned v. Elliott, 155 Ind. 702; Treadwell v. Supervisors, 62 Cal. 563; State v. Andrews, 64 Kan. 674. Contra. Gemmer v. utes providing that a judge may settle and sign a bill of exceptions after the expiration of his term of office do not operate to extend such term.[1] In Nebraska the legislature cannot by an act solely for that purpose extend the terms of county officers.[2] Where long and short terms of office are to be filled at the same election and the ballot used does not indicate which candidate is to serve for the short term, the proper method for settling the question is for the candidates elected to cast lots;[3] but it is not against public policy for them to agree to elect one of their number president of the body in consideration of his taking the short term,[4] and such an agreement is binding on such member, estopping him, after the expiration of the short term, from claiming a long one.[5] Deputy supervisors of elections have no power to decide upon a disputed term of office.[6] One elected to fill a vacancy takes only the unexpired term of his predecessor.[7] Many offices are held during the pleasure of some superior officer or departmental body.[8] A statutory provision allowing officers to hold office during good behavior is not necessarily in conflict with a constitutional provision providing that the duration of offices shall never exceed a stated period.[9] A void promotion does not create a vacancy in the office from which the officer was promoted.[10] In California a judgment annulling a certificate of election not being appealed from within the statutory time vacates the incumbency.[11]

Courts will take judicial notice of the statutory terms of office of public officers.[12]

(§ 8) B. Abandonment.—An office cannot be abandoned without an intention, actual or imputed, of so doing.[16] Mere nonuser or neglect of duty do not of themselves produce a vacation of the office without judicial determination.[17] The intention to abandon an office is one of fact for the jury[18] and may be inferred from the conduct of the party.[19] If his acts and statements are such as clearly indicate absolute relinquishment, a vacancy will thereby be created and no judicial determination is necessary.[20] Evidence that void removal proceedings were pending when the official left the state is admissible on the question of intent.[21] An officer by accepting a second incompatible office is deemed to have abandoned his first office;[22] but the mere acceptance of additional duties does not affect one's status as an officer.[23] If one accepts a second incompatible office his certificate of appointment is admissible against him although the oath subscribed by him erroneously described the office.[24]

(§ 8) C. Removal.[25] Who has the power.[26]—The power of removal is generally expressly provided for,[27] but no such provision being made, it is generally held to be incident to the power of appointment.[28] The right of appointment to the classified civil service of the United States carries with it the right of removal, which power of removal is unrestricted except for the single cause of failure to contribute money or services to a political party.[29] The power is incident to the office and cannot be exercised by one whose term has expired.[30] Being lodged in a board the board when exercising the power must be legally constituted.[31] The action of a de facto officer is valid as to the official removed.[32] The power lodged in a board to determine the election and qualification of its members does not authorize them to take from a member without right an office into which he has already been inducted under a previous board and to which he has a vested right.[33] Under the Los Angeles city charter the only qualified signers of a petition for removal are those whose names appear on the great register.[34]

What constitutes a removal.—The term "removal" as used in statutes on this subject is generally held to refer only to cases where an officer or employe is removed for some reason personal to himself,[35] and does not apply where the office or position has been abolished in good faith[36] or where the incumbent is dismissed for want of sufficient funds to pay for his services,[37] or to reduce expenses.[38] The reduction of one wrongfully promoted is not a "removal."[39]

36. McCann v. New Brunswick [N. J. Law] 62 A. 191. Civil Service Acts do not abrogate or curtail in any respect the power of a municipality to abolish offices (City of Chicago v. People, 114 Ill. App. 145), consequently in the absence of statute or express contract making the employment one for a definite term, a civil service employe may be discharged when his services are no longer needed. Under the Federal civil service laws a probationer has no right to be retained for the full period of six months if his services are not needed. Brown's Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 255.

An order notifying a sawyer, employed by the department of street cleaning, that "you are discharged from this department as a sawyer, your services being no longer required," does not necessarily import that the position of sawyer has been abrogated or that the department of street cleaning has no longer any work for a sawyer. People v. Woodbury, 102 App. Div. 462, 92 N. Y. S. 442.

37. Sess. Laws 1895, p. 88 construed. Incumbent at time of dismissal had notice of reason. Fitzsimmons v. O'Neill, 214 Ill. 494, 73 N. E. 797, afg. 114 Ill. App. 168. A suspension of a municipal employe because of failure to appropriate sufficient funds to pay for his services is not wrongful, and neither a civil service act nor a contract of employment could afford him protection. Walsh & Co. v. Queen Ins. Co., 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 1.

38. Sess. Laws 1895, p. 88, construed. Incumbent at time of dismissal had notice of reason. Fitzsimmons v. O'Neill, 214 Ill. 494, 73 N. E. 797, afg. 114 Ill. App. 168.

39. Where one was promoted to an office from which another has been illegally removed. People v. McAdoo, 92 N. Y. S. 1004. A police captain appointed an inspector when there was no vacancy in the latter office to fill, held properly directed by police commissioner to resume his duties as captain. People v. McAdoo, 96 N. Y. S. 362.

42. Member of a state legislature being guilty of bribery, he may be expelled. Const. art. 4, §§ 35 and 9 construed. French v. State Senate, 146 Cal. 604, 80 P. 1031.

43. The common council of the city of New Brunswick is authorized to remove from office members of the board of water commissioners who fail to comply with the requirements of P. L. 1904, p. 259. Cohn v. Common Council of City of New Brunswick [N. J. Law] 62 A. 285.

44. An officer knowingly failing to prosecute gamblers is guilty of "willful misconduct." Coffey v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 147 Cal. 525, 82 P. 75. For a mayor to persistently refuse to sign orders for the pay of city officials to which they are entitled under valid ordinance is misconduct authorizing removal. Riggins v. Waco [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 21, 90 S. W. 657. A charge that two councilmen have accepted bribes and fifteen others have been influenced in their voting by a party who contributed to their individual campaign funds constitutes a charge of mis-an officer. One lawfully assuming the duties of another office may be dismissed for a neglect thereof.[45] One month's absence from the state is not a willful neglect of duty on the part of a county superintendent of schools,[46] and this is true though he fails to leave some one in charge of his office during his absence, the law making no provision for the appointment of such a person.[47] The fact that no official duty was performed during such absence does not imply willful neglect, as there may have been no such duty to perform.[48] Drunkenness while on duty and unprovoked assaults upon citizens warrant the dismissal of a police officer.[49] Misrepresentation in application is ground for removal[50] even though the statement was not knowingly made.[51] A statute authorizing removal for good and sufficient cause contemplates some substantial cause such as corruption or inefficiency in office, infraction of rules, commission of a crime, etc.[52] The power of removal from the classified civil service of the United States is unrestricted except for the single cause of failure to contribute money or services to a political party.[53] Under a statute providing for the compulsory retirement of a police officer who has become permanently disabled, physically or mentally so as to be unfit for duty, the test is not whether he is physically and mentally perfect and capable of efficiently performing every act that may properly be required of a police officer in all branches and departments of the service, but whether he possesses the physical and mental qualifications efficiently to perform the duties of the position he is filling.[54] Under New York City Charter a removal of a policeman to the pension fund roll must be based on the personal certificate of as many police surgeons as the police commissioner may require.[55] Such a certificate must be read and construed as a conduct in office. Cleveland Elec. Illuminating Co. v. Hitchens, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 57. A mayor is incompetent who confesses and admits that obedience to ordinances is discretionary with him or that his conscience will not admit of his observing them. Riggins v. Waco [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 21, 90 S. W. 657.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain order dismissing police sergeant for neglect of duty. People v. Greene, 104 App. Div. 496, 93 N. Y. S. 720. Evidence held insufficient to show violation of duty by relator or any neglect on his part in failing to discharge carpenter for alleged intoxication. People v. Monroe, 94 N. Y. S. 366.

Regulation of police department providing that a member of the police force may be dismissed for entering any building while in uniform, except when in the discharge of duty, held reasonable. McManus v. Newark Police Com'rs [N. J. Law] 62 A. 997.

52. Laws 1893, p. 176, c. 202, giving the police commissioners of the city of Manchester authority to remove police officers, construed. Gibbs v. Manchester [N. H.] 61 A. 128. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 381, c. 24, par. 457 (Civil Service Act), providing that an officer cannot be removed except for cause, misconduct of a police officer in wrongfully obtaining money from the state is cause for his removal though he was not acting strictly in the discharge of his legal duties. Joyce v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 466, 75 N. E. 184. Civil Service Act §§ 4, 5 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 380, c. 24, pars. 449, 450), directing that the commission shall make rules for removals in accordance with its provisions, and providing for their publication and when they shall take effect, do not require a statement of the grounds on which removals by the commission may be based, such grounds being prescribed by § 12 (p. 381, par. 457), providing for removals for cause. 55. A certificate purporting to be a reso-whole.[56] The terms of the contract of employment may specify the grounds for dismissal.[57]

Mode of proceeding.[58]—Under the constitutions of most states officers holding by appointment and inferior officers of any kind are not subject to impeachment.[59] Judicial officers are generally only removable by impeachment.[60] As to whether quo warranto will lie there is a conflict.[61] Statutory proceedings are often provided.[62]

Nature of proceeding and procedure.[63]—A public office is not the property of the incumbent within constitutional provisions providing that no one shall be deprived of his property without due process of law.[64] In the absence of statutory provisions defining a quorum the usual parliamentary rules apply.[65] Unless expressly authorized to proceed summarily,[66] an officer having power to remove another for cause[67] or to remove one appointed for a definite term,[68] it will not be lution passed by "a board of surgeons of the police department" and signed by the "board's" president and secretary, is insufficient. Metcalf v. McAdoo, 95 N. Y. S. 511, afd. 109 App. Div. 892, 96 N. Y. S. 868.

56. Statement that relator was unfit to perform "full police duty" held to qualify and limit a prior clause that he was "unfit for police duty." People v. McAdoo, 109 App. Div. 892, 96 N. Y. S. 868.

57. Where school teacher agreed to teach certain term providing work was satisfactory to school board, held, board being dissatisfied, it could dispense with teacher's services. Kingston v. School Dist. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 263, 104 N. W. 28.

59. A state superintendent of a water district appointed by the governor is not subject to impeachment. State v. Grant [Wyo.] 81 P. 795, petition for a rehearing denied 82 P. 2.

60. A state superintendent of a water district is not a judicial officer, within the meaning of Const. art. 3; § 18, providing that judicial officers shall be liable to impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors, in such manner as to permit his removal from office only by impeachment. State v. Grant [Wyo.] 82 P. 2.

61. Note: When an officer has been duly elected and has qualified, the authorities are in conflict as to whether quo warranto will lie to remove him. State v. Gardner, 43 Ala. 234, holds that it will not. Contra. State v. Wilson, 30 Kan. 661. When the alleged forfeiture has been caused by a criminal act, there must be a conviction, with jury trial, before quo warranto can be brought. Commonwealth v. Jones, 10 Bush [Ky.] 725. Contra. Royall v. Thomas, 28 Grat. [Va.] 130. However, forfeiture for cause other than crime may always be found by the court for itself in quo warranto proceedings. State v. Wilson, 30 Kan. 661; People v. Heaton, 77 N. C. 18; Commonwealth v. Allen, 70 Pa. 465. In re Bolte, 97 App. Div. [N. Y.] 551 the legislative provision created ipso facto a forfeiture, and thereafter respondent was a de facto officer, analogous to one holding over after the expiration of the term (Oliver v. Mayor, 63 N. J. Law, 634, 76 Am. St. Rep. 228, 48 L. R. A. 412), and to oust him from possession of the office, illegally held, quo warranto would lie, as his counsel contended, brought either by an adverse claimant or by the attorney general. Compare State v. Hixon, 27 Ark. 398. Without deciding this question, the court properly held that it had authority, upon the entire charges, under the statutes cited, to make the removal.—5 Columbia L. R. 160.

62. Pen. Code, §§ 758, 772, conferring on the superior court jurisdiction to remove municipal officers, do not control a provision of a freeholders' charter providing for the removal of such officers by a municipal board of trustees, but prescribe merely a concurrent remedy, and are not displaced as to the municipality by Const. art. 11, § 6. 64. Since a public officer has no property right in his office, Sess. Laws 1905, p. 101, c. 59, providing for the removal of certain state officers by the appointing power, on filing a reason therefor in writing with the secretary of state, is not unconstitutional as depriving an office holder, so removed, of his property without due process of law. State v. Grant [Wyo.] 81 P. 795. Members of a state legislature having been expelled by that body in the manner prescribed by and under the authority of the state constitution are not deprived of their office without due process of law. presumed that such removal can be made without notice and a hearing; but one holding office during the pleasure of the appointing power may be removed without charges, notice or trial,[69] and the removal in such a case is an administrative or ministerial act.[70] Employes may generally be summarily removed.[71] A proceeding before a civil service commission for the removal of an officer is not a common-law or criminal proceeding, but an investigation.[72] Statutory provisions govern.[73] Charges against a municipal employe may generally be investigated by a committee and the latter's report acted on by the council.[74] In New York the appointment of a deputy commissioner to take evidence upon the trial of charges against members of the police force may be made orally,[75] and the fact that such deputy commissioner directed the making of the charges does not disqualify him from conducting the hearing.[76] The impeaching body of a state legislature has no power to appoint a committee to investigate alleged misconduct of an executive officer whose term will expire before he can be tried or impeached.[77] All essential jurisdictional facts must appear.[78] Removal being authorized for cause and after due hearing, the proceedings are judicial in character,[79] and the mode of procedure not being specified, the substantial principles of the common law recognized and enforced in proceedings affecting private rights are to be observed.[80] Action in such cases must not be taken arbitrarily but upon proof of charges of sufficient gravity to authorize such removal.[81] Unless waived[82] the accused is entitled to have the charges intended to be brought against him stated specifically and with substantial certainty,[83] though not necessarily with the technical nicety required in indictjudicial department of government cannot revise even the most arbitrary expulsion of a member from the legislature.[4] To what court the appeal lies is regulated by statute.[5] As regards the taking of an appeal a dismissal takes effect from the time it is communicated to the employe.[6]

Only allegations of fact in a petition for certiorari need be denied.[7] On certiorari evidence aliunde the record of its proceedings is properly excluded.[8] Objection must be made in order to have sufficiency of written charges reviewed.[9] In New York upon certiorari a judgment or determination of dismissal will not be disturbed unless there is an absence of evidence to sustain it,[10] and such determination will be regarded as conclusive, the evidence being conflicting and contradictory and there being sufficient evidence, if believed, to sustain such determination.[11] It will be set aside as against the weight of the evidence if it could not stand if it had been the verdict of a jury.[12] In New York appeals are in certain cases regarded as special proceedings,[13] and the removing officer may be required to return a record of the removal proceedings and show cause why his determination should not be set aside.[14] In Illinois an appeal from the action of a board of police and fire commissioners removing a patrolman should be determined on a hearing de novo.[15]

One does not cease to be an officer pending an appeal from a wrongful discharge.[16]

Joyce v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 466, 75 N. E. 184. The courts have no power to review the action of the head of an executive department of the government in removing a clerk from office on the ground that the removal was not in accordance with the civil service rules requiring notice to be given and an opportunity to reply to charges. (§ 8) D. Reinstatement.[17]—A legislature, or either house thereof, having expelled a member, cannot reinstate him except when lawfully called in session.[18] The right to reinstatement may be waived or abandoned[19] or barred by limitations.[20] Mandamus will lie to compel the reinstatement of an officer wrongfully or summarily removed,[21] but not where there has been a "judicial" investigation and trial of the charges against him.[22] Certiorari, but not mandamus, lies to compel the reinstatement of an officer dismissed after trial though there were errors in the trial, they not being so grave as to make it appear that the dismissal was not the result of a judicial act.[23] In order that an officer may be entitled to reinstatement by mandamus he must establish that at the time of his discharge he was an officer de jure.[24] A former officer is not entitled to mandamus to prevent his successor from performing the duties of the office and to compel the petitioner's reinstatement on the ground that the ordinance under which both were appointed is invalid.[25] One's superior officer refusing to recognize an order of reinstatement issued by a civil service commission, application should be made to a tribunal having jurisdiction to decree and enforce a reinstatement.[26]

§ 9. Powers and duties.[27]—A public officer takes his office subject to its burdens,[28] and has only such powers as are expressly or impliedly conferred upon him,[29] and all acts in excess of such powers[30] or done after his term has expired, he not having the status of a de facto officer,[31] are of no binding force or effect. An officer has such implied powers as are necessary to enable him to discharge the duties imposed upon him.[32] A grant of power to "regulate" does not include the power to "prohibit."[33] All persons dealing with a public officer are conclusively presumed to have notice of the limitations of his powers.[34] As a general rule Federal officers are special agents acting within legally prescribed limitations, and beyond those limitations no responsibility attaches to their acts as against the government;[35] and where an officer acts in subordination to the authority of a superior officer he has no discretion to bind the United States beyond the limits of his delegated powers.[36] But a depot quartermaster, while subordinate to the quartermaster general, is a general agent of the government in the purchase of supplies and in the right, when directed so to do, to sell unnecessary supplies.[37] If officers of the United States are authorized to bind the government or to shape its course of conduct as to a particular transaction and they have acted within the purview of their authority, their acts or omissions may in a proper case work an estoppel against the government.[38] Where an officer having authority appropriates private property for public use, an implied contract to make compensation will arise.[39] Fraudulent acts of a municipal officer may be repudiated by the city.[40] When a superior officer with full knowledge of the facts[41] ratifies and confirms the action of his subordinate, the ratification is equivalent to express authority.[42] A sheriff is not liable for the contracts of his deputy though they grow out of and are connected with his official duties, so long as they are not a part thereof.[43] In serving a writ the deputy sheriff can bind his principal only as to those things necessary in the proper service of the writ.[44] Official acts of members of the Federal cabinet must be regarded as acts of the president.[45] Power of insane asylum trustees under authority delegated by the legislature to contract with railroad companies with reference to a track across the asylum lands is functus officio when once exercised and contract cannot be afterwards modified.[46]

The duty of enforcing laws is primarily imposed upon executive officers.[47] It is only when executive officers renounce or fail to perform their primary duty in such a case that an appeal to the courts to enforce such a law may be made.[48] Such officers charged with the duty of enforcing an injunctive law may prevent without writ or process its violation where they can do so without infringing the rights of those who threaten to break it, and no man has any personal or property right to violate a valid law.[49] A lawful rule made by the chief of an executive department to which the enforcement of a law is intrusted, which appoints a subordinate for the purpose and imposes upon him the duty of enforcing the law is sufficient process of law to authorize him to prevent its violation in cases where he can do so without infringing upon any personal or property right of those who threaten to break it.[50]

Although an office be a constitutional one if its duties are statutory, the legislature may within reasonable limits change the duties of the office if the public welfare requires it.[51]

Unless expressly empowered to do so a public officer cannot delegate judicial functions.[52]

In the absence of evidence to the contrary the law presumes that a public official has done his duty[53] in good faith,[54] and, in some cases, that he had authority to act.[55] As to future action it will be presumed that officers will act in a legal manner.[56]

The act of a de facto officer where it is for his own benefit is void;[57] but where it is for the benefit of strangers or the public, it is valid.[58]

White v. Clarkesville [Ark.] 87 S. W. 630.

The theory of the doctrine of officers de facto and the principles sustaining the validity of their acts are that, though wrongfully in office, justice and necessity require that their acts done within the scope of official authority and duty, be sustained to the

There is a conflict as to whether a public commission can act without using reasonable diligence to notify all the members of the meeting.[59]

Mandamus will lie to enforce ministerial duties[60] where the relator has a clear legal right to have such duty performed[61] and has no other adequate legal remedy.[62] It is essential that the performance of the duty result in benefit to the petitioner.[63] Where the duty to be performed is judicial or involves the exercise of discretion, mandamus will lie to compel the official to act in the premises and exercise his judgment and discretion,[64] but will not direct how the duty shall be performed or the discretion exercised.[65] If, however, such judgment or discretion is abused or there is a mistaken view of the law taken as applied to the admitted facts of the case, the writ will issue to compel action according to law.[66] Where mandamus is invoked to enforce a specific duty and the remedies at law are illegal, aid will not be refused merely because occupancy or incumbency or title is incidentally involved.[67] Official action cannot be collaterally attacked for errors of judgment.[68] Where the grant of power is of a business or proprietary character, to be exercised in an administrative manner for the benefit of a particular community, the courts cannot review the judgment nor control the discretion of such authorities though they may entertain an attack thereon on the ground of fraud.[69]

A special policeman not under the duty of removing obstructions from or repairing defects in sidewalks on his beat is entitled to recover for injuries sustained by defects in such sidewalks, the municipality being negligent.[70] When assaulted a policeman may defend himself with such force as may be necessary but no more.[71] A policeman is entitled to rewards offered for work which he is under no duty to perform.[72] A special policeman's right to continuous service is statutory.[73]

A police officer who, in arresting a criminal, acts solely in the discharge of his duty, under the directions of his superior officer, is not entitled to a reward offered by a private person for the arrest of the fugitive. Atwood v. Armstrong, 101 App. Div.

§ 10. Liabilities of public officers. A. Civil liability.[74]—A public officer is liable for public money deposited by him in a bank which subsequently fails.[75] A taxpayer may invoke the interposition of a court of equity to prevent the illegal disposition of public funds,[76] but where the fund has been already wasted or paid out, the action to recover it back must be brought by the state or municipality to which it belonged,[77] though this rule has been altered by statute in some states.[78] A suit for the recovery of interest paid on public deposits can be recovered only by a suit by an officer or officers authorized to care for or protect such funds.[79] An officer is liable for the acts of a volunteer or unauthorized person whom he permits to perform duties officially committed to him or his legally appointed deputy,[80] and his negligence being the proximate cause of the loss, the fact that other officers are negligent is no defense.[81] He is not liable for the negligent acts of his successor.[82] An officer is not generally personally liable for the salaries of the clerks in his office.[83] Officers are not bound at their peril to adopt the correct interpretation of the statutes.[84]

Persons contracting with public officers deriving their authority exclusively from a statute are charged with knowledge of the extent and limitations of such authority, and, in the absence of bad faith, contracts entered into in the supposed exercise of public powers and functions so derived will not impose upon the officials executing them any personal liability to the party contracted with.[85] A public officer engaged in the performance of a public duty is responsible to employes for ordinary care in the selection of men and materials,[86] and having exercised this care he is liable for injuries resulting from personal acts of misfeasance;[87] but not

Sears v. James [Or.] 82 P. 14. Code Civ. Proc. § 1925 is independent of Laws 1881, p. 709, c. 531, and an action may be maintained against officers of a municipality to prevent waste of or injury to its estate by one who is not assessed for any particular amount and without furnishing a bond. NOTE. Liability of public officer or agency, especially for acts of servants: The principal ground on which public officers find exemption from liability for negligence in the performance of their official duties in certain cases is the same as that which relieves cities and towns and other agencies of the government from a liability to individuals for a failure to perform similar duties. Unless under some special statutory provision, a public officer can have no greater exemption from such a liability than is granted to a city or town which neglects to perform the public duties imposed upon it. Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344-361, 23 Am. Rep. 332. The subject of the liability of officers and agencies of government for negligence in the performance of public duties was considered at great length in Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332, with an elaborate review of the cases, both English and American. The rule adopted in that case is the same as previously had existed in England, and was understood to be then in force there. Following this rule, it has always been held in the American courts that an agency of government or a public officer, while performing a duty imposed solely for the benefit of the public, is not liable for a mere failure to do that which is required by the statute. Negligence that is nothing more than omission or nonfeasance creates no liability. Russell v. Men of Devon, 2 Term R. 667; Young v. Davis, 7 H. N. 760; Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board, App. Cas. 345; Municipal County of Sydney v. Bourke, App. Cas. 433; Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289; Mahoney v. Boston, 171 Mass. 427, 50 N. E. 939; Sampson v. Rep. 517; Conelly v. Nashville, 100 Tenn. 262; 46 S. W. 565. "For a wrong done by a public agent which constitutes only a breach of duty to the public, as such, and results in an injury to the public only, such agent is liable only to the public by a public prosecution; and a private individual cannot maintain an action against him therefor, unless he can show that he has sustained some special and particular injury by reason of such wrong." 2 Clark and Skyles Ag. p. 1322, citing Butler v. Kent, 19 Johns. [N. Y.] 223, 10 Am. Dec. 219; Barlett v. Crozier, 17 Johns. [N. Y.] 449, 8 Am. Dec. 428; Moss v. Cummings, 44 Mich. 359.

Prior to the decisions in Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, L. R. 1 H. L. 93, and Foreman v. Canterbury, L. R. 6 Q. B. 214, which overruled the case of Holliday v. St. Leonards, Shore Ditch, 11 C. B. (N. S.) 192, it was held in England that for negligent acts of misfeasance by the servants or agents of a municipality or a public officer performing duties strictly public there was no liability upon the employer, on the ground that the doctrine respondeat superior does not apply to the servants of one who is acting only as a representative of the government for the benefit of the public. Holliday v. St. Leonards, Shore Ditch, 11 C. B. (N. S.) 192; Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Cl. & Find. 894-903; Hall v. Smith, 2 Bing. 156-159. This is the rule generally in the American courts. Sampson v. Boston, 161 Mass. 288, 37 N. E. 177; Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 24 N. E. 781, 21 Am. St. Rep. 465, 8 L. R. A. 243; Mahoney v. Boston, 171 Mass. 427, 50 N. E. 939; Kelley v. Boston, 186 Mass. 165, 71 N. E. 299, 66 L. R. A. 429. See, also, cases above cited. But now the law in England seems to hold agencies of the government liable for injuries from acts of misfeasance committed by servants or agents engaged in a public work. See Foreman v. Mayor of Canterbury, L. R. 6 Q. B. 214. The American doctrine is thus summed up in 2 Clark and Skyles on Agency, § 610, pp. 1324, 1325: "The doctrine of respondeat superior does not in general apply to public agents or officers, including all grades of officers whose trust proceeds from and whose responsibility is due to the government, and they are not personally liable for the misfeasance or nonfeasance of their official subordinates, while in the discharge of their official duties (citing among numerous other authorities Dunlop v. Monroe, 7 Cranch [U. S.] 242, 3 Law. Ed. 329; Conwell v. Voorhees, 13 Ohio, 523, 42 Am. Dec. 206; Richmond v. Long's Adm'rs, 17 Grat. [Va.] 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461); unless, where appointed or removed by them, they have been guilty of negligence in selecting, appointing or retaining improper or unfit subordinates (citing among others, Bishop v. Williamson, 11 Me. 495; Wiggins v. Hathaway, 6 Barb. [N. Y.] 632; Schroyer v. Lynch, 8 Watts [Pa.] 453), or in superintending them in the discharge of their official duties (Dunlop v. Monroe, 7 Cranch [U. S.] 242, 3 Law. Ed. 329; Schroyer v. Lynch, 8 Watts [Pa.] 453; Richmond v. Long, 17 against an officer for charging an "illegal fee" is one to recover three times the value of the fee or compensation taken.[90]

Generally an action against an officer must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose.[91] Statutes of limitations to actions on the officer's bond have no application to an action against the officer personally.[92] Laws indemnifying officials for expenses in defending an action against them for an official act generally are held to apply only to official acts in which the public has a concern.[93]

(§ 10) B. Criminal liability.[94]—Besides being criminally responsible for bribery,[95] embezzlement,[96] extortion,[97] and other specific crimes,[98] a public officer

Grat. [Va.] 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461); or unless they have in some way participated in the subordinate's tort (Ely v. Parsons, 55 Conn. 83; Conwell v. Voorhees, 13 Ohio 523, 42 Am. Dec. 206)." Whenever the work is not entirely public, but is in part for profit or when any element of pecuniary advantage enters into it, there is a liability for the negligent acts of servants. On this ground it was long ago held that a city or town might be liable for negligent acts of misfeasance done by its servants in the construction or repair of a common sewer. Coan v. Marlborough, 164 Mass. 206-208, 41 N. E. 238; Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289; Lynch v. Springfield, 174 Mass. 430, 64 N. E. 871; Norton v. New Bedford, 166 Mass. 48, 43 N. E. 1034; Childs v. Boston, 4 Allen [Mass.] 41, 81 Am. Dec. 680; Allen v. Boston, 159 Mass. 324, 34 N. E. 519, 38 Am. St Rep. 423; Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505-508, 24 N. E. 781, 21 Am. St. Rep. 465, 8 L. R. A. 243. Another and different class of cases in which there is a liability for the misfeasance of servants or agents is referred to by Chief Justice Gray in Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344-358, 23 Am. Rep. 332, as follows: "If a city or town negligently constructs or maintains the bridges or culverts in a highway across a navigable river or a natural watercourse so as to cause the water to flow back upon and injure land of another, it is liable to the same extent that any corporation or individual would be liable for doing similar acts. Anthony v. Adams, 1 Metc. [Mass.] 284, 285; Lawrence v. Fair Haven, 5 Gray [Mass.] 110; Perry v. Worcester, 6 Gray [Mass.] 544, 66 Am. Dec. 431; Parker v. Lowell, 11 Gray [Mass.] 353; Wheeler v. Worcester, 10 Allen [Mass.] 591. So if a city, by its agents, without authority of law, makes or empties a common sewer upon the property of another to his injury, it is liable to him in an action of tort. Proprietors of Locks and Canals v. Lowell, 7 Gray [Mass.] 223; Hildreth v. Lowell, 11 Gray [Mass.] 345; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208. But in such cases the cause of action is not neglect in the performance of a corporate duty, rendering a public work unfit for the purposes for which it is intended, but it is the doing of a wrongful act causing direct injury to the property of another, outside of the limits of the public work." This doctrine was reaffirmed in Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289, and it has been applied in many cases. Its exact limits have not been very clearly defined. Perhaps it includes Elder v. Demis, 2 Metc. [Mass.] 599, and Hawkes v. Charlemont, 107 Mass. 414, in which the reasons for the decisions were not very plainly stated, but in each of which the negligent act was a trespass causing a direct injury to the plaintiff's property outside of the limits of the highway. Highway commissioners are not liable in an action for injuries resulting to an individual from the manner in which they have discharged their official duties to the public, even if there is proof from which the jury might find that such duties were not discharged with reasonable prudence and skill. Neville v. Viner, 115 Ill. App. 364.

Proc. § 145, providing that an action against a public officer for an act done in the performance of his public duties must be tried in the county where the cause of action or some part thereof arose, the fact that some of the officer's co-defendants lived in a county other than the one in which the cause of action arose does not give the right to sue in such other county. Fishburne v. Minott [S. C.] 52 S. E. 646.

92. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 294, subd. 2 has no application to an action against a county auditor to recover from him personally sums collected by him during his term of office and wrongfully detained by him. Zuelly v. Casper [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 646.

is, as a general rule, criminally liable for malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance in office; hence police officers willfully refusing to arrest persons who raise riots and affrays are punishable on indictment.[99] One holding an office to which he is ineligible is guilty of usurpation of office.[1] On a prosecution of a criminal offense having as one of its ingredients a refusal to pay over money on demand, an actual seasonable demand is essential.[2] An indictment for official misconduct in the performance of executive and ministerial duties need not contain an averment that the misfeasance was corrupt.[3] An indictment for willful neglect is not double though it details several offenses in characterizing it.[4] In California an accusation against a municipal officer for misconduct in office is criminal in its nature and in presenting the same the grand jury acts as in finding an indictment,[5] and the accusation may be presented by twelve members of the jury.[6]

A statutory enactment providing in advance for the reimbursement to a public officer of the reasonable expenses actually incurred by him in defending himself against a criminal prosecution based upon a charge of official misconduct is within the constitutional power of a legislature.[7]

§ 11. Liabilities of the public and of private persons for acts of public officers. —The general rule is that a governmental body is not bound by the acts, contracts or representations of its officers unless such acts, contracts or representations are within the scope of such officers' authority.[8] Police officers in the preservation of Commonwealth v. Shoener, 212 Pa. 527, 61 A. 1093.

3. Where police officer assigned for duty at polling place permitted voters to be obstructed, assaulted and interfered with in his presence and view, held, indictment need not allege that he acted corruptly. State v. Flynn [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 37 [Advance sheets only].
Note: At common law indictments of judicial officers for misconduct in the performance of duty were always required to charge they acted corruptly. The ancient and modern precedents and the forms of criminal pleadings given by approved text writers conform to that rule. The underlying principle of the distinction between the above rule and that stated in the text appears to be that when the official act complained of is of doubtful legality and the official enjoyed a discretion in the performance of his duties, he cannot be convicted of acting wrongly unless he acts corruptly. But when the illegality of the act is palpable, then willful and intentional delinquency on the part of an official, whether it be a nonfeasance or a misfeasance, is indictable, even though his motive was not corrupt in the sense that he sought personal profit.—From State v. Flynn [Mo. App.] 87 S. W. 37 [Advance sheets only].
4. Where an indictment against a police officer for willful neglect of duty charged that he was detailed for duty at a polling place, and stood by and saw voters obstructed, assaulted, etc., without going to their assistance and detailed the manner in which the voters were molested, naming them, it charged but a single offense and was not objectionable for duplicity. A municipality is liable in damages for an assault committed by the custodian or caretaker of a public park, where the assault is committed by such employe while acting in the line of duty. Bloom v. Newark, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 480. A city is liable for negligent acts of an employe committed in the course of his employment. Gorney v. New York, 102 App. Div. 259, 92 N. Y. S. 451. See the peace are not municipal agents or servants, but their powers and duties are derived from the state to which their direct responsibility is due, therefore the municipality is not liable for their omissions or commissions, malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of their duties.[9] The liability of particular public bodies is discussed under appropriate titles.[10] The power of an officer to bind the governmental body which he represents has been already shown.[11]

The liability of private persons for acts of public officers is treated elsewhere.[12]

§ 12. Official bonds and liabilities thereon.[13]—The contract of sureties upon an official bond is subject to the strictest interpretation, nothing being taken by construction against the obligors.[14] The sureties are not liable for acts not performed in the discharge of the principal's official duty,[15] though they are liable for the acts of a volunteer or unauthorized person whom the officer allows to perform duties officially committed to him or his legally appointed deputy,[16] and the officer's negligence being the proximate cause of the injury, the fact that other officers were negligent is no defense,[17] for there is no implied condition that other public officers shall perform their prescribed duties, and any one who becomes a surety on the bond of a public official is held to do so with knowledge of this rule.[18] Ordinarily the duration of the sureties' liability on the official bond of a public officer is coextensive with the officer's official tenure of office and ceases when the term expires by operation of law.[19] Where one holds an office for more than one term with different sets of sureties it is the time of an actual defalcation and not that of the technical breach that imposes an obligation as between the different bonds.[20] One directly participating in and contributing to the negligent act of the officer cannot recover from the latter and his sureties damages suffered thereby.[21] The failure of the proper officers to examine and approve a bond[22] or to designate the term of appointment of the bonded officer[23] does not invalidate the bond. A bond intended by the obligors thereon to be the official bond of a public officer and which such public officer acts under is by statute in many states the official bond of such officer, and in legal contemplation and effect such bond is payable and conditioned as the statute requires.[24] Any person, other than the obligor, having a legal identity may be the obligee in a bond.[25] A bond by which the obligors "bind ourselves, our heirs, executors and administrators, and each and every one of them" creates a joint and several obligation.[26] What constitutes a breach of particular bonds is decided in the cases below.[27] A de facto officer cannot in an action on his bond deny that he was an officer de jure.[28] Statutes providing for prosecuting an official bond in cases where no special provisions apply are remedial and should be liberally construed.[29] All official bonds, whoever may be named as obligee, are given for the use of the parties having a legal interest in their enforcement.[30] Though the bond of a United States circuit court clerk is given to the United States as sole obligee, it is available to any private suitor to indemnify him for any loss he has sustained by reason of the clerk's delinquency.[31]

The action on the bond must be brought within the period of limitations.[32] The pleadings must show a breach of the bond[33] and that actual damages have been

The measure of liability on the bond of a recorder of deeds for negligently permitting a trust deed to be falsely marked "Satisfied" cannot exceed the amount due on the trust deed at the date of the entry of satisfaction.[37] Sureties of a tax collector are liable for interest on the unpaid balance at the time of the trial from the date of the filing of the auditor's report.[38]

Where a continuing bond is given, the officer is liable for the premium thereon until release is obtained by the furnishing of another bond or by returning the property in his possession to the state, or turning it over to his successor in office after he has been duly qualified.[39]

§ 13. Compensation.[40]—The compensation of many public officers is paid in fees. Neither a per diem allowance[41] nor expenses incurred in performing a duty[42] can be regarded as "fees" within the meaning of constitutional and statutory provisions. The right is purely statutory[43] and unless a salary is lawfully attached to an office the officer is not entitled to any.[44] So long as he is not removed an officer is entitled to the salary affixed to his office irrespective of whether he has properly discharged his duties.[45] A public officer can only claim such fees and compensation as are fixed by law for services which the law makes it his duty to perform,[46]

the sureties of a bond of a United States marshal, allegations that the marshal had retained certain money held insufficient to show a breach of the bond, there being no allegation that the money was improperly retained. United States v. Meade [Ariz.] 80 P. 326, afg. on rehearing Id., 76 P. 467. In an action against the sureties on an official bond, an allegation that a judgment has been recovered against the principal obligor is insufficient to show a breach of the bond. Judgment is merely evidence of breach. Id.

App.] 77 P. 361), nor does it authorize them to charge any fee for entering on their books an assignment of the certificate of purchase of land at a tax sale (Id.). A county treasurer is not entitled to commissions on any part of the taxes on personal property collected by him, as agent for the county and transmitted to the state treasury. Kirkendall v. even though he performs them before or after office hours;[47] and a contract to pay extra compensation is against public policy and void.[48] It is, however, proper to provide extra compensation for services not within the compass of the officer's official duties.[49] Compensation of county officers need not be the same in different counties.[50] The Pennsylvania constitution prohibits the giving of extra compensation after the services have been performed.[51] In California compensation must be fixed in proportion to duties.[52] In South Carolina the general assembly has no power to enact local laws fixing the amount of compensation of any county officer.[53] An officer may by agreement limit his right to compensation.[54] The amount of an officer's compensation is often fixed by the nature of the public body served.[55] A state legislature may provide for the payment of the salaries of local officers or employes out of local funds.[56] Certain boards and officers are frequently given

Under Laws 1892, p. 1746, c. 686, § 12, subd. 5, and p. 1775, § 141, subd. 5, a county treasurer whose salary is duly fixed by the board of supervisors is not entitled, in addition to his salary, to collect and receive fees for collecting and paying over state, school and court funds. People v. Steuben County [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 1108, afg. 93 App. Div. 604, 87 N. Y. S. 1144, afg. 41 Misc. 590, 85 N. Y. S. 244. Prior to such act the fees in counties where the treasurer was a salaried officer were to be retained by him for the benefit of the counties, but in counties in which he was not a salaried officer he retained such fees for his own compensation. People v. Monroe County Court, 93 N. Y. S. 452. Such rule held not changed by an ordinance of the city of Rochester providing that the city treasurer should receive, from moneys collected by him in payment of assessments for the construction of the sewer, the sum of $1,350 annually for the purpose of clerk hire. the power to fix the salaries of subordinate officers or employes,[57] but this power must be exercised in accordance with statutory enactments.[58] A public officer having power to employ and discharge help may, as a condition to retaining his place, reduce an employe's salary,[59] and if the employe continues in the place and continues to draw the reduced salary, it is equivalent to an agreement on his part to accept the latter sum for his services.[60] A statute extending rules relative to part of a consolidated municipality does not operate to extend such rules to parts of the municipality to which they are inapplicable.[61] An exercise of discretion as to the amount of compensation to be paid an employe will not be reviewed by the courts in a collateral proceeding.[62] An officer being entitled to a reasonable compensation, the courts will not interfere with the amount fixed unless it is unreasonably small.[63] In New York certiorari will lie to review the action of a town board of audit in reducing the compensation of a public officer though the claim has been passed on to the board of supervisors in regular order.[64]

Although an office be a constitutional one if its duties are statutory, the legislature may within reasonable limits change the duties and diminish the emoluments of the office if the public welfare requires it;[65] but a board having exercised its delegated authority to fix an officer's salary for his entire term, its power is exhausted and it cannot increase or diminish such salary.[66] A constitutional inhibition against the increase or diminution of the salary of an officer during his existing term does not render it incompetent for him to accept compensation, fixed after he enters upon the discharge of the duties of his office and before the expiration of his term, no compensation having been theretofore provided,[67] or where the statute fixing his salary is, during his term of office, declared void.[68] Under the New York City Charter a patrolman is not entitled to a promotion and increase of salary until the expiration of one year from the end of his probation term.[69]

An officer is not entitled to unearned fees,[70] but the right to earned fees is property which is not lost by the expiration of one's term,[71] nor can his right thereto be affected by any action of the governing body he served.[72] Where county commissioners enter into a contract with the prosecuting attorney for the bringing of suits for the collection of taxes on property theretofore treated as exempt and by agreement a test case is tried, the defendants in other similar cases agreeing to abide the result, the percentage the attorney is to receive in the event of his securing a judgment is not limited by either law, justice or equity to the amount involved in the test case.[73] The exclusive power to fix salaries being vested in a board, the legal incumbent of a position is entitled to the salary fixed by the board without any further step being necessary on the part of the head of the department under whom he serves.[74] As a general rule one is not entitled to salary pending proceedings disputing his right to the office.[75] Unless waived, as by failure to make a demand for reinstatement,[76] an officer is entitled to his salary while pending reinstatement after a wrongful discharge,[77] even though engaged in other employment.[78] An

The unearned salary of a public officer cannot be assigned or attached in satisfaction of a judgment.[82]

In order that an officer or employe may obtain his salary, there must in most states be an unexpended appropriation therefor,[83] a public officer not being as a general rule, personally liable for the salaries of employes.[84] As a general rule the failure of an employing officer to procure the determination of an employe's fees will not deprive the employe of his right thereto.[85] In North Carolina a county superintendent of health cannot delegate the performance of his duties so as to give his employes the right to make their services a county charge.[86]

One who has a legal right to an office for which a salary has been lawfully provided[87] has a cause of action to recover such salary if a claim therefor has been properly presented and wrongfully refused,[88] or if his services have been tendered and refused.[89] Mandamus will not lie to compel the payment of a salary for which no appropriation has been made.[90] Under Greater New York City Charter a recovery for salary during period of wrongful suspension cannot be had in reinstatement proceedings.[91] An officer suing for salary must establish his right to the office to which the salary attaches,[92] and any fact tending to show that he was not an officer is available to defendant under a general denial.[93] An admission of plaintiff's appointment establishes a prima facie case in plaintiff's favor.[94] Allegations in the petition must be consistent.[95] Payment to a de facto officer is a good defense to an action brought against a municipality by a de jure officer to recover the same salary after he has acquired or regained possession.[96] The court of claims has no jurisdiction of actions to recover the fees of a Federal court commissioner unless his accounts have been submitted to the district or circuit court and to the attorney general for approval.[97] In California the supreme court is the only tribunal to which the justices of the district courts of appeal can appeal for the determination of the amount of the latter's salary.[98]

Payments exceeding the amount fixed by law may be recovered[99] with interest.[1]

An officer being required to account for fees he will be required to account for all fees earned by him for official services whether collected or not,[2] and an officer dying during his term, fees paid his successor by the deceased officer's representatives to finish certain work which deceased had been paid for are properly chargeable against the successor.[3] In Ohio fees collected by a mayor for violation of penal ordinances should be paid into the city treasury when the amount of such fees and also the salary of the mayor has been fixed by the council.[4] Under statutes providing for reimbursement of officers for "sums of money actually expended," officials are not entitled to reimbursement for expenses paid for in work.[5]

99. A county is entitled to recover from the county assessor the sum he has been paid for his services rendered in excess of the per diem for the maximum number of days fixed by Acts 1895, p. 207, c. 101. Daily v. Daviess County Com'rs [Ind.] 74 N. E. 977. The court says: "A county is not to be absolved from the obligations of common honesty where it is seeking the return of money paid under mistake and we do not assert that the mere fact that a county may have had a technical defense to a demand will relieve it of the consequences of payment where, in the matter of substance, and as between man and man, it would be just for the defendant to retain the money." Id. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 7913, 7918, a settlement and dismissal of a suit brought to recover money illegally allowed county auditor does not release the defendant from liability to the county for the repayment of moneys illegally detained by him. PARDONS AND PAROLES.

A convict accepts a pardon subject to all its valid conditions and limitations and must comply therewith.[11] If he violates the terms of a conditional pardon he may be rearrested and recommitted to undergo the punishment imposed by his sentence or so much thereof as he has not already suffered.[12] But such rearrest and recommitment cannot be had upon the mere order of the board of pardons, unless the statute or the terms of the pardon so provide.[13] The convict is entitled to a hearing before a court of general criminal jurisdiction to show that he has performed the conditions of his pardon or has a legal excuse for not having done so.[14] But where the terms of a pardon expressly authorize the arrest and detention of a convict who has violated the terms of his pardon, it is the duty of a sheriff to whom the fact of such violation is made known from any responsible source, to make such arrest,[15] and where the rearrested convict then makes application for a writ of habeas corpus it is the duty of the court to which application is made to inquire into the truth of the alleged violation of the terms of the pardon.[16]

NOTE. Procedure: "The proceeding to test the question whether or not there has been a violation of or noncompliance with the condition or conditions of a pardon is purely informal. The established practice at the common law and in the American states, in the absence of statutory regulation and in the absence from the pardon itself of express stipulations for that purpose, is for some court of general criminal jurisdiction, upon having its attention called, by affidavit or otherwise, to the fact that a pardoned convict has violated or failed to comply with the conditions of his pardon, to issue a rule, reciting the original judgment of conviction and sentence, the pardon and its conditions, and the alleged violation of or noncompliance with the condition or conditions thereof, and requiring the sheriff to arrest the convict and bring him before the court, to show cause, if any he can, why the original sentence imposed upon him should not be executed. A copy of such rule should be served upon the convict at the time of his arrest. When brought before the court upon such rule, if the prisoner denies that he is the same person who was convicted, sentenced, and pardoned, he is entitled to have a jury summarily empaneled to try such issue; but, if his identity is not denied, all the other facts and issues can be heard and tried by the judge alone, unless the judge solely within his discretion, shall see proper, for his own satisfaction, to submit the facts to a jury for determination. If it he found upon such investigation that there has not been a violation of or noncompliance with the condition or conditions of the pardon, or if the convict shall show to the satisfaction of the court some valid reason or excuse for such violation or noncompliance, he should be discharged from custody; but if the violation of or noncompliance with the condition or conditions of the pardon be established to the satisfaction of the court, without any legal reason or excuse therefor, the convict should be remanded to custody and ordered to have the original sentence imposed upon him, duly executed, or so much thereof as has not been already suffered by him. Such inquiry and proceedings may properly be had on the trial of a habeas corpus proceeding instituted by the convict himself to test the validity of his arrest and detention by the sheriff for an alleged violation of the condition of the pardon."—From syllabus (by court) in Ex parte Alvarez [Fla.] 39 So. 481.

A statute in existence at the date of a judgment against a convict, providing for commutation of sentences for good conduct and defining credits to be allowed, becomes a part of a sentence and inheres into the punishment assessed.[17] Such a statute is not therefore an invalid interference with the power to pardon as conferred on certain officers by the constitution.[18] But a statute which authorizes a local board to remit a portion of a sentence without fixing any basis for such remission by defining credits to be allowed for good conduct is unconstitutional because an infringement of the power to pardon conferred by the constitution.[19] The Federal act of 1902 "to regulate commutation for good conduct for United States prisoners" does not apply to prisoners sentenced before its passage.[20] The fact that an attorney convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude was pardoned by the governor of the state is no defense to a disbarment proceeding based on such conviction.[21] An escaped convict cannot be allowed time on his sentence while illegally at large upon unlawful escape.[22]

Where a reprieve by the governor fixes a date for execution of a death sentence beyond the date of a decision by an appellate court denying a new trial, such court need not fix a day for the execution.[23] A reprieve staying execution of a death sentence, granted to allow an appeal to the Federal supreme court in a habeas corpus proceeding is not a "proceeding against the prisoner" pending such proceedings in the Federal court.[24]

Cal. § 1747, under which guardians may be appointed for children, or their estates when no guardians have been appointed by deed or will, is valid; and proceedings thereunder whereby parents were deprived of the custody of children, the president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children being placed in charge, gives no right of action by the parents. Wadleigh v. Newhall, 136 F. 941.

there is a statute to the contrary, the courts are bound to recognize the father's paramount right to the custody of his child, unless he is unfit or disqualified,[28] for it is to the best interests of child that it should be with its natural parents.[29] His right is superior to or inclusive of the mother's[30] or any other relative's,[31] and neither the mother's attempted testamentary disposal of custody of the child[32] nor the appointment of a guardian pursuant thereto[33] will defeat it. The father's paramount right is not dependent on his support of the child.[34] In absence of statute the father's authority passes on his death to the surviving mother.[35] The father is presumed fit for custody of child until the contrary is proven.[36] He may teach it any religion that does not inculcate breaking of laws.[37] His power of disposition of it is limited only by interest of child,[38] though it is said that contracts by parents to transfer to others the custody of their children are against public policy and ordinarily unenforceable.[39] The prima facie right to custody of a minor child being in the father, a claim that this right has been relinquished by contract must be supported by clear and strong proof,[40] and a contract, to have the effect of depriving the father of his rights, must be certain and definite.[41] Where as in divorce the custody is taken from the father and given to the mother, reasonable access to visit the child is implied unless clearly forbidden.[42] As between them it will be awarded to whoever can best care for the child.[43] In New York a statute[44] abolishes common-law preference of father and makes either parent equally entitled to custody of child.[45] In some states a parent may by will fix the custody of the child and its guardianship.[46] Some allow only the father to do this.[47]

But while the courts recognize the rights of the natural parents to their children's custody,[48] and will prefer them to grandparents or others,[49] and will separate children from parents only on the most convincing proof of the parents' unfitness,[50] the paramount consideration is the children's welfare,[51] though mere consideration of wealth[52] or personal affections are not sufficient to abrogate the parent's paramount right.[53] Little weight is attached to child's preference[54] unless it is mature.[55] Adopting parents are entitled to custody of infants (if not shown to be unfit) rather than a grandmother[56] and especially when she is of bad character.[57]

The power to make the award of custody is discretionary and is generally for the trial court.[58]

The right of custody ends at maturity.[59] It is not a taking from rightful custody if a child of intelligent age goes voluntarily from one in loco parentis to another.[60]

§ 2. Support and necessaries.[61]—It is a legal duty of the father to support the child[62] and he is not relieved of this duty by a divorce from the mother,[63] and even a contract between himself and a third person to furnish support to them will not relieve him from his obligation.[64] Necessaries include medical attendance[65] among other things.[66] The crime of nonsupport or abandonment of child,[67] involves an absence of adequate provision for them by the father[68] or by others,[69] and to make out an abandonment there must be actual separation.[70] To be a defense, physical disability must disable earning power.[71] If coupled with wife abandonment want of a valid marriage may be shown.[72] The residence of the neglected children is the venue of such offense.[73]

When the father neglects or refuses necessary support, another may give it and an action on implied promise will lie.[74] He will remain liable though divorced and denied the custody of the child in favor of the wife if support is not charged thereby on the wife.[75] The duty of support is not reciprocal to the right of custody.[76] A direct action may be maintained by the wife in such case,[77] but whether future support and an adjustment of property rights may also be had in such an action depends first on full jurisdiction of both parties, and if it was had, second, on whether the divorce left such rights open.[78] In an action involving a claim by a divorced wife for support of a child born after the divorce was granted and for whom no provision was made in the decree for alimony, it is error to so instruct the jury as to create the impression that the care and support of the child was a joint obligation upon both parents.[79] So far as necessary care and support are concerned, the whole legal obligation as between the father and the mother is upon the father.[80] In such a case the wife is not entitled to pay for her whole time in caring for the child, but only for such a proportion of her time as was necessarily thus occupied;[81] and for support the allowance should be proportionate to the father's means, considered in connection with the health and interests of the child.[82] Allowance for children cannot be made incident to divorce in Texas.[83]

When children have an estate of their own and the parents are poor, the income from their estate may be touched[84] and sometimes the principal.[85] A guardian who is charged by law to educate and support the ward[86] cannot come on the father.[87] The duty of support ends at maturity and the courts cannot extend it beyond maturity.[88]

tody of the child it would be unjust to allow him to plead his own wrong as an excuse for relieving himself from an obligation. There is a serious conflict of authority as to the father's liability in an original action by the wife for the child's support when the divorce decree, as in the principal case, awards the custody of the minor children to their mother but is silent as to their maintenance. Gibson v. Gibson, 18 Wash. 489, 51 P. 1041; Plaster v. Plaster, 47 Ill. 290; Pretzinger v. Pretzinger, 45 Ohio St. 452, 15 N. E. 471, 4 Am. St. Rep. 542. See contra, Hall v. Green, 87 Me. 122, 47 Am. St. Rep. 311; Finch v. Finch, 22 Conn. 410; Brown v. Smith, 19 R. I. 319, 33 A. 466, 30 L. R. A. 680. It is well settled that if the decree of divorce is silent as to the custody of the minor children, then the liability of the father remains the same after divorce as before, both to the divorced wife and any other person. Gilley v. Gilley, 79 Me. 292; Monroe County v. Abbeglen [Iowa] 105 N. W. 350. If the divorce was obtained because of the misconduct of the wife and she retains the custody of the children either by agreement or by the decree of the court, the father is not liable for the child's support. Fitler v. Fitler, 33 Pa. 50; Kelly v. Davis, 49 N. H. 187, 7 Am. Rep. 499; Gordon v. Potter, 17 Vt. 348. The general doctrine is that jurisdiction over the custody and support of children in divorce cases is a continuing one and the court may change or modify the order for custody and support at any time. The better rule would seem to be therefore that if the custody of the child is given the wife, the father is relieved from all liability for the child's support except such as the court may order in the decree of divorce or in some subsequent decree in the same proceeding. Burritt v. Burritt, 29 Barb. [N. Y.] 124; Brown v. Smith, 19 R. I. 319, 30 L. R. A. 680; Hall v. Green, 87 Me. 122, 47 Am. St. Rep. 311.—From Spencer v. Spencer [Minn.] 105 N. W. 483.

83. Liability of father for necessaries for children continues after a divorce, but a court has no power in a divorce proceeding to order payment of a monthly sum for a child's support. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2987 does not give such power. Ligon v. Ligon [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 365, 87 S. W. 838.

84. Commonwealth v. Lee, 27 Ky. L. R. 806, 86 S. W. 990. A stepmother can recover for support of infant son when he has property from which he derives sufficient income. Watts v. Watts' Ex'x [Va.] 51 S. E. 359. Where stepmother had use of land part of which stepson had inherited from his mother, the stepmother was properly charged with rents and profits of the son's land, and properly allowed compensation for supporting the son, in partition proceeding brought by him after his father's death. 85. St. 1903, § 2034 gives cases in which principal of infant's estate may be used. Commonwealth v. Lee, 27 Ky. L. R. 806, 86 S. W. 990. When child supports himself out of his own estate he should receive credit for work done for parent, who is too poor to support him. Id. The rule which permits a widowed mother without means or income other than that resulting from her own labor to charge the estate of her child for support and education is applicable to one who by her own exertions supported a stepson until he was sixteen years of age. St. 1903, § 2032, guardian must provide necessary and proper maintenance and education of ward out of her estate. Clay's Guardian v. Clay, 27 Ky. L. R. 1020, 87 S. W. 807. 90. A minor's clothing belongs to the father and he may sue for injury to it. Parents with 21 months old child were riding on the train, the infant, according to when a father is deprived of that service or those earnings through the fault of another, whether by enticement[91] or death, he may recover for the loss.[92] An action for loss of services and expenses of medical attention and nursing caused by an injury to a minor child is not an action for an injury to the person within the meaning of the Wisconsin statute requiring service upon defendant of a notice of the claim within one year.[93] A father is presumed entitled to his son's wages during the latter's minority, and burden of proving the contrary is upon the defendant,[94] and dutifulness of a child in giving earnings to father is also presumed.[95] A mere intention on part of minor son to contribute in future to parents' support would entitle them to recovery.[96] But when a son has been earning money for some time, the evidence should show that he either did or was about to contribute to parents' support.[97] While some still require proof of actual loss of services,[98] Kentucky among other states adopts the modern view that no actual loss of service need be shown to recover.[99] In Minnesota a father may recover damages for death of his unmarried minor child.[1] In West Virginia a father cannot maintain an action as an individual for the negligent killing of his minor son.[2] The measure of damages, in case of son's injury, is total earning capacity plus doctor bills.[3] The complaint should plead that defendant wrongfully deprived plaintiff, and custom, riding free. In a collision, clothes of infant in father's trunk were injured. Held, father could recover. Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 511, 104 N. W. 773.

91. To maintain action for enticement evidence must show an actual service of the parent by minor child, and some active or affirmative effort by the defendant to detract child from that service. Kenney v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. [Md.] 61 A. 581. Plaintiff conspired with another to assist him in eloping with defendant's daughter. Action was one of damages for assault and battery and defendant sets up as a counterclaim loss of daughter's service, medical expenses incurred, and injuries to her clothing. Held valid counterclaim. 95. A 10 year old boy was injured by a falling cleaver while playing near a telephone pole. Boy was injured and father recovered $1,000. Brunke v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 112 Mo. App. 623, 87 S. W. 84.

96. Parents offered to show by letters from son promises of future support. It was error to exclude this. Dean v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 38 Wash. 565, 80 P. 842. Proof by father of child's age, residence at home and nature of injury is sufficient to uphold a verdict of $1,000 recovery for loss of earnings of 10 year old child. Brunke v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 112 Mo. App. 623, 87 S. W. 84.

97. Plaintiff sued for death of 18 year old son, who had left home some years before without parents' consent, had never sent any money home, and over whom parents exercised no control, but evidence was offered and excluded which tended to show promises of future remittances. Dean v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 38 Wash. 565, 80 P. 842. It was error to permit a mother to show that she was dependent on her work for support, for she could only recover the diminution of the value of his services whether she be rich or poor. Gulf. etc., R. Co. v. Johnson [Tex.] 90 S. W. 164. Evidence that another son contributed to her support was also properly excluded as not tending to show her loss due to injury of the son. Id.

1. Swift & Co. v. Johnson [C. C. A.] 138 F. 867. Under Minn. St. 1894, § 4477, cl. 6, an action to recover damages for death of an unmarried minor child can be brought only for benefit of the father if he be living, even though he may have abandoned the child and his whereabouts be unknown, still it was error to permit mother who received his monthly earnings to show her expectancy of life or permit jury to get the impression that any one else than the father might share or have title in the recovery. Id.

2. But in West Virginia father can recover for death of child, if at all, only as administrator. Shaw v. Charleston [W. Va.] 50 S. E. 527.

3. Galligan v. Woonsocket St. R. Co. [R. I.] 62 A. 376. In an action by father for injuries to minor son, it was error to instruct jury that plaintiff might recover for the time the son was unable to work and receive compensation for lack of son's capacity to work during his minority, as allowing double recovery. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Anglin [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 785.

where plaintiff is the mother that she was the one entitled to their services.[4] Recovery is limited to actual, probable pecuniary loss not to possible or speculative or hoped for pecuniary gain.[5] However it is not necessary to show what a child can earn when unknown.[6] The son's contributory negligence[7] or assumption of risk, though good as a defense to an action by himself, will not defeat parent's claim for loss of service or earnings[8] unless the parent consented to the son's employment.[9] A father may waive his rights of recovery, and whether he does so or not is a matter of intention.[10]

Emancipation.—A father may emancipate his son and so put him on the same footing as owner of his own rights as if he were already twenty-one years old.[11] The status of an infant, as to whether emancipated or not, may be shown by an agreement or circumstantial evidence.[12] Emancipation may be by parol or in writing and may be proved by circumstantial evidence or implied from the conduct of the parties.[13] A mere intention if clearly established is all that is necessary to emancipation, and this may be inferred from conduct.[14] Thus permitting the child to own property[15] or control its earnings[16] is evidence of emancipation. This may be done at any time in the course of such employment as well as at its beginning.[17] Also to free a child for all the period of minority from care, custody and control constitutes complete emancipation; for a part of period or of parents' rights, limited or partial emancipation.[18] That a father makes a contract of employment for his son whom he has emancipated is not inconsistent with the independent status of a child,[19] nor is the fact that the son remains at home controlling as to emancipation.[20]

6. When earnings of a 10 year old child because of its youth are merely conjectural, no evidence to show them is necessary, it being left to the good sense of the jury to estimate from experience and observation the probable damage. Brunke v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 112 Mo. App. 623, 87 S. W. 84.

7. Son was working for defendant without father's consent and defendant claims contributed to his own injuries. Held no bar to father's recovery. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Hervey [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 80, 89 S. W. 1095.

10. Action by father as next friend of son to recover damages for injuries to son; later this action was brought by father to recover his damages in loss of services. The fact of these two suits being brought shows an intention not to waive. Slaughter v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 90 S. W. 243.

16. Father consented that son's earnings, amounting some years to $2,500, be turned over to the mother and held by her in trust for the son. Jacobs v. Jacobs [Iowa] 104 N. W. 489. Where son was allowed to collect his wages and use them as he saw fit, and in action to recover loss of earnings through injury, his mother appeared as next friend and testified for him, there was sufficient evidence of emancipation to take the issue to the jury. Zongker v. People's Union Mercantile Co., 110 Mo. App. 382, 86 S. W. 486. Silence from early childhood to maturity held conclusive. McMorrow v. Dowell [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 728.

20. Son lived with father but was permitted to have horses, purchased with his own uncontrolled earnings, and treat them as his own. Bristor v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 104 N. W. 487.

Emancipation prevents recovery by parent,[21] and a minor may, until his father's license to collect his own wages is revoked, recover them from whom they are owing,[22] and having assigned them, may disavow and recover from the assignee.[23] The child when come to majority may recover without proof of the death of a parent who by abandonment worked a virtual emancipation.[24]

§ 4. Property rights and dealings between parent and child.[25]—Transactions between parent and child will be closely scrutinized for fraud or undue influence.[26] "Favor and affection" are sufficient to support a deed from father to child.[27] When the gift is beneficial to child, equity will imply an acceptance on their part until they arrive at maturity, when they may reject it within a reasonable time.[28] Executing a conveyance and placing it on record is sufficient evidence to pass title.[29] Parol gifts between father and child, fully executed, followed by valuable improvements, are binding,[30] and a mother may give all her property to one child to the exclusion of others.[31] There is no presumption of invalidity of a gift by a parent to a child, in the absence of mental incapacity of the parent or fraudulent or improper conduct on the part of the child.[32] Gifts from parent to child are not revocable as presumptively fraudulent[33] but are if improvident.[34] When a father, who owes his son, places money to the son's credit in the bank, payment and not a gift is presumed.[35] A contract between parents though in part for children's benefit confers no interest in them.[36] The presumption is that no remuneration is expected when a child stays with its parent or one in loco parentis after its maturity,[37] but this is rebuttable.[38] When a child is supported out of its own estate

PARKS AND PUBLIC GROUNDS.[1]

Acquisition and creation of parks.[2]—Sale by reference to plat having space marked "Park" is a dedication for exclusive park purposes,[3] though the dedication purports to be of "streets and highways,"[4] but a space exterior to a shore drive was held not to be a park.[5] The acceptance by the public of a dedicated park need not be immediate,[6] especially when the reverse is contemplated.[7]

An act is valid which allows cities to condemn parkways beyond their limits.[8] Such authority is germane to an act entitled "to acquire, improve, and maintain parks."[9] The park or parkway need not be an indispensable public necessity as distinguished from a convenience.[10] A river which belongs to the public may be devoted by the public to park purposes, the substitution of public uses being no taking of property.[11] An act provides compensation if it directs the taking to proceed "in the manner now provided by law" and if the general law provides a sufficient method.[12] The public appropriating land for parks is amply protected by injunction pendente lite, which restrains destruction of all trees or natural ornaments useful for a park as against the objecting owner.[13]

The public title[14] is generally a fee for public use,[15] and park lands held by one municipality for the public are not taxable by a co-ordinate branch of government.[16] A dedication by platting and selling being on consideration and not a mere

Rights of individuals in or to parks.[20]—Abutters on a street fronting a dedicated park have a right to its continuance.[21]

Adverse possession, abandonment, and diversion; actions.[22]—The dedicator's possession cannot be adverse to the public whilst he is legally a trustee for the public,[23] and mere nonuser in the interval pending acceptance of a dedicated park is no abandonment.[24] An abutter on a dedicated park may sue to enjoin diversion,[25] but his damage must be special and different from that to the general public.[26] Mere offense to the mind from the intrusion of trolley poles and wires upon the view from his property is not such.[27] A taxpayer may sue to restrain the letting of "illegal" advertising privileges in New York, though no waste of money or injury to public property is shown.[28] Neither the city nor the dedicators are necessary parties to an injunction suit by abutters against encroachers or trespassers.[29]

32. An act for the acquisition of park lands, the levy of taxes, and payment of bonds is valid, though it does not specifically meet the constitutional requirements of a tax provided adequate to keep up interest and pay principal in 20 years. Pettibone v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 215 Ill. 304, 74 N. E. 387. The tax need not be levied in advance for all the years. Id. An annual levy suffices. Id. Neither is the act invalid because it provides that bonds shall be kept up and met out of the regular park tax without specifying that enough of it must be applied for that purpose. Id. The constitutional provision being self-executing will be read in so far as this is concerned. Id.

missioner charged by statute to maintain the beauty and utility of a park may not lease the privilege of displaying signs on even a temporary fence about the park.[38]

Injuries in parks. Public parks.[39]—Park commissioners are city, not state, officers, when their duties are wholly for the benefit of the city[40] and the city is liable for their acts.[41] Parol proof is proper to show that a defective structure in a park was erected by public officers in the absence of any law requiring a record or an act in writing.[42] The mere fall of a stand erected by them does not import negligence.[43] A municipality is liable in damages for an assault committed by the custodian or care-taker of a public park, where the assault is committed by such employe while acting in the line of duty.[44] It is not of itself negligent to discharge fireworks, such as rockets, in a public park.[45] The question of negligence is one of fact.[46]

Privately owned parks open to public.[47]—Proprietors of publicly patronized bathing places must see to proper guards and warnings,[48] and make prompt efforts to rescue or relieve any who are missing or in danger.[49] Attendants should be provided wherever and whenever conditions of peril exist or are likely to exist.[50] A patron is not guilty of contributory negligence in going anywhere within the generally used area for bathing, no warnings being displayed.[51]

PARLIAMENTARY LAW.[52]

The ordinary rule that a majority constitutes a quorum applies where the fundamental law or statutes do not provide otherwise.[53] A majority of a quorum present has power to act[54] except where a majority of the entire membership is required by the fundamental law governing the assembly.[55] A regular meeting may adjourn to a definite future day, and at such adjourned meeting the body may transact any business which might have been transacted at the meeting from which the adjournment was had.[56] Members are not entitled to notice of the time of an adjourned meeting.[57] A meeting held on a special day to which a regular meeting is adjourned is part of the regular meeting for the purposes of a motion to reconsider.[58] As a general rule, in the absence of any special rule upon the subject of the particular legislative body acting, a vote upon a reconsideration need not be taken either at the same or the next succeeding meeting, but may be taken at any time before rights have intervened in pursuance of the vote taken, or before the status quo has been changed.[59] A motion that certain business be "continued on

PARTIES.

Scope of title.—Only general principles are here treated. As to parties in particular actions, or as controlled by relationship, see appropriate title.[53]

§ 1. Definition and classes.[54]

§ 2. Who may or must sue.[55]—In the code states every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.[56] One having no interest in the subject-matter cannot maintain an action,[57] and persons not parties to a contract or instrument sued upon need not be joined as parties plaintiff.[58] One who has no special beneficial interest in the performance of a contract to which he is not a party cannot maintain an action for damages for its breach.[59] Courts will not entertain a controversy concerning the title or right of possession of real or per-

Garver, 146 Cal. 577, 80 P. 860. A. recovered judgment against B. & C. B. sued to enjoin enforcement of judgment and by amendment set up payments to A. under duress, C. alleging the same. C. had transferred his interest in the cause of action and B. assigned for creditors pending the suit. Held, B. was not real party in interest and could not maintain action, under Code Civ. Proc. § 449, nor could he continue it under § 756. Foster v. Central Nat. Bank, 93 N. Y. S. 603. One who is not the owner of a promissory note is not the real party in interest, and the presumption of ownership arising from the possession of the note endorsed in blank may be rebutted. Suit on the note must be by the real party in interest. Independent Coal Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 225.

57. A shipper of goods, consigned to himself, who sells the goods while in transit to others, cannot maintain an action in conversion based on failure of the carrier to deliver part of the goods. Sweeney v. Frank Waterhouse & Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 1005. Where a premium put up by a local society was won by fraud, plaintiff corporation, of which local society was a member, could not sue for its recovery, the claim not having being assigned, after demand, by the local member to plaintiff, since the local member could thereafter sue therefor. American Trotting Ass'n v. Reynolds [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 410, 104 N. W. 578.

58. In an action on a contract for the purchase of hay to recover for a deficiency in the amount delivered, vendees of the plaintiff were not necessary parties. Reed v. McDonald [Cal. App.] 82 P. 639. Name of plaintiff's wife was inserted in a lease as one of the parties of the first part, but she did not execute the lease. An action thereon was properly brought by plaintiff alone, the pleadings showing no parties thereto except plaintiff and defendant. Boal v. Citizens' Nat. Gas Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 339.

59. Adjoining property owner could not sue for damages for breach of railroad company's contract with levee and drainage commissioners, damage being caused by overflow, where it did not appear that such owner's lands would be assessed for benefits or that he would be called on for a part sonal property except at the instance of some person or persons having or claiming a right thereto derived from or recognized by the laws of a state or of the United States.[60] In most jurisdictions an assignee of a claim or chose in action may sue thereon in his own name; as the real party in interest;[61] but in some states only the original owner can sue thereon.[62] Public rights in action must be sued by the proper public functionary.[63] By virtue of statute in some states a trustee of an express trust may sue without joining the beneficiary.[64] These statutes do not apply where no trust relation in fact exists.[65] Where the parties interested are numerous, some statutes allow one or more to sue for the benefit of all.[66] In Illinois a beneficial plaintiff only cannot sue in his own name.[67] Thus, the holder of legal title of a chose in action is the only proper party plaintiff in an action thereon.[68]

In determining whether or not a state is the real party in interest in order to determine whether limitations is an available defense, reference will be had not only to the name in which the action is brought, but to the facts as they appear of record.[69]

Allen, 94 N. Y. S. 880. The assignee of a judgment for plaintiff in an action to recover possession of personal property is the real party in interest entitled to sue on the redelivery bond, which provides for a return of the property or payment of its adjudged value. Odell v. Petty [S. D.] 104 N. W. 249. One to whom a judgment against an administrator on a claim against a decedent's estate was assigned was the real party in interest and was required to bring the action for enforcement of the judgment in his own name, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 444, 1909. Bamberger v. American Surety Co., 48 Misc. 221, 96 N. Y. S. 665. The transferees of the holders of school bonds which have been illegally issued stand in the shoes of the original holders and are the real parties in interest in a suit to recover out of the property bought with the proceeds of the bonds the amount paid by them for the bonds. Board of Trustees of Fordsville v. Postel [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1065. An agent guaranteeing an account for his employer and being compelled by agreement to pay the same weekly, becomes in law the assignee of such account and is entitled to sue in attachment in his own name. 63. A suit for recovery of interest paid to a village treasurer on public deposits can be recovered only by a suit by an officer or officers authorized to care for or protect such funds. Nicholson v. Maile, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 201. Action on bond given by bank in which county funds are deposited as required by Mich. 65. A shipper of goods, consigned to himself, who has sold the goods while in transit, cannot sue for conversion for failure to deliver part of the goods, on the theory that he is trustee of an express trust. Sweeney v. Frank Waterhouse & Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 1005. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 252, by which a trustee of an express trust may maintain an action for the benefit of the beneficiary, does not authorize the county auditor to sue on the bond of a county ditch contractor on behalf of property owners concerned, where such contractor has refused to perform and the contract has been relet at a higher price, and the increased cost has been assessed against the lands liable; an action on an official bond must be in the name of the state under § 253. 75. Where, in an action by an indorsee of a note given for the purchase price of a machine, in which one who signed the contract of sale as surety for the buyer was not made a party, the defendant files a cross petition for damages for breach of warranty, the surety, who disclaims any interest in the machine or cause of action set up in the cross petition, is not a necessary party thereto. First Nat. Bank v. Dutcher [Iowa] 104 N. W. 497. A railroad receiver assigned to a contractor a right to a subsidy from a town to aid in the construction of the road, and the contractor assigned to plaintiff. Held, the mere right of the contractor, who had no interest in the property, to redeem the subsidy did not make him a necessary party to an action to recover the subsidy, since the receiver had the right to redeem from the contractor. Paige v. Rochester, 137 F. 663. Where defendant corporation by fraudulent representations induced plaintiff to become a party to the underwriting of bonds pledged with defendant to secure a note, plaintiff could sue defendant alone for rescission of the underwriting agreement without joining the corporation issuing the bonds or another corporation which made a loan thereon, defendant having received proceeds of note. Rose v. Merchants' Trust Co., 96 N. Y. S. 946. The joinder of a cause of action on a promissory note with one to compel the payment of debts by a principal to save his sureties is improper and open to demurrer, as is also the joinder as parties defendant to such an action of creditors of the principal who are strangers to the note and in no way connected therewith. Schick v. Ott, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 325.

76. A person may be a necessary party to litigation though he will not be bound by the result. McDougald v. New Richmond Roller Mills Co. [Wis.] 103 N. W. 244. Plaintiff in suit to abate a dam was tenant by curtesy of land concerned, title being in his children. Held, children were necessary parties. Id. A vendor assigned his contract of sale of realty and the assignee recovered judgment against the vendee on the contract. In an action by the vendee to recover rents and profits of the land pending the litigation, the assignee having been in possession, a person for whom the assignee was acting, who had paid for the contract, and received the rents and profits, was properly made a party defendant. Ferguson v. Epperly, 127 Iowa, 214, 103 N. W. 94. Where an educational corporation transferred its property, franchise and good will to a charitable corporation in consideration of the payment of certain debts by the latter and the transfer by it of such property to another educational corporation, and the agreement was performed, the first grantee was a necessary party to an action by the original owner to recover the property. State v. U. S. Grant University [Tenn.] 90 S. W. 294.

77. A corporation is a necessary party defendant in an action by stockholders for an accounting by the president of the corporation, since a judgment against defendant must be in favor of the corporation and a judgment cannot be rendered for one not a party. Peck v. Peck, 33 Colo. 421, 80 P. 1063.

78. In an action by a mother to set aside a deed to her son for failure to perform his agreement to support her, the son's wife is a proper but not a necessary party, since the wife's inchoate right of dower or homestead would not be affected by the decree, and she would have no right to possession of the homestead apart from the right of her husband. Mash v. Bloom [Wis.] 105 N. W. 831. Where a dower right accrues subsequent to the entry of a decree concerning certain realty, the decree will not be reversed on appeal because the owner of such right was not a party, since her right was contingent and she was not an indispensable party. She will not, however, be bound by the decree. Landram v. Jordan, 25 App. D. C. 291. In a suit to cancel notes and a mortgage and to impose liens on certain land, a purchaser pendente lite, with notice of plaintiffs' rights, is properly made a party defendant by an amended complaint. Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 739, 82 P. 436.

79. Conservative Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Omaha [Neb.] 103 N. W. 286. A minor recovered a judgment against a city for per-certain fund has been settled by a personal judgment against them are neither necessary nor proper parties to a contest between others for the fund.[80] Where the purpose of a judicial proceeding is to expose real estate to public sale, the better practice is to make all persons who have any interest, contingent or otherwise, in the property sought to be sold, parties to the proceeding.[81] In some cases a trustee, in an action against him concerning the trust property, is regarded as being in court for and in behalf of the beneficiaries, and the latter are not necessary parties.[82]

In equity all persons materially interested, either legally or beneficially, in the subject-matter of a suit, must be made parties either as complainants or defendants, so that a complete decree may be made, binding upon all parties.[83] Where a general right is claimed, arising out of a series of transactions tending to one end, the plaintiff may join several causes of action against defendants who have distinct and separate interests in order to a conclusion of the whole matter in one suit.[84] In a proceeding to obtain an account of a partnership all the partners are necessary parties.[85]

sonal injuries, which her guardian assigned to plaintiff. Later the guardian was removed and a second appointed. Held in an action by plaintiff against the city to quiet title to the judgment, the second guardian, who claimed the assignment to plaintiff was void, was a necessary party, but the surety of the first guardian was not. Id.

80. Sanger Bros. v. Corsicana Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 737. Two children of a legatee were parties to an action for construction of a will, wherein a judgment determined that a certain fund should go to the issue of such legatee at her death. In a subsequent action involving the same fund between the same parties, representatives of the two children, who had died, were not necessary parties. Jewett v. Schmidt, 108 App. Div. 322, 95 N. Y. S. 631.

81. Roden v. Helm [Mo.] 90 S. W. 798.

82. City of Austin v. Cahill [Tex.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 321, 88 S. W. 542. In a mandamus proceeding by holders of original bonds issued by a city to compel payment of interest out of taxes levied and collected to pay interest on and provide a sinking fund for refunding bonds and to make provision for the payment of such original bonds, the holders of refunding bonds issued to take up the original bonds were not necessary parties, since the city was a constructive trustee of the holders of such refunding bonds. Id.

83. Florida Land Rock Phosphate Co. v. Anderson [Fla.] 39 So. 392. All persons who are legally or equitably interested in the subject matter of the suit are necessary parties to a chancery proceeding, but the interest must be a present substantial interest as distinguished from a mere expectancy or future contingent interest. Pinkney v. Weaver, 115 Ill. App. 582. The court cannot properly adjudicate matters involved in a suit if it appears that necessary and indispensable parties are not before the court. Florida Land Rock Phosphate Co. v. Anderson [Fla.] 39 So. 392. Indispensable parties to proceedings in equity are persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest, or leaving the controversy in such condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Landram v. Jordan, 25 App. D. C. 291. In a proceeding in equity to remove a cloud from the title and have a conveyance canceled as fraudulent, the parties executing the conveyance, against whom fraud is alleged, are necessary and indispensable parties, especially if the conveyance contains covenants of general warranty. Florida Land Rock Phosphate Co. v. Anderson [Fla.] 39 So. 392. One who has such an interest in land as to render it necessary or desirable that such interest be adjudicated is a necessary party to a bill to remove a cloud and reform a deed. Getzelman v. Blazier, 112 Ill. App. 648. In a suit to enjoin a county contractor from entering upon property condemned by the county to construct a public work, the county is a real party in interest entitled to come in and defend the suit. Johnston v. O'Rourke & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 501. In a creditors' suit in aid of execution, all persons who assert any claim in the subject matter, whether prior or subsequent, are necessary parties, because the order of the respective liens is involved in the litigation and should be determined in the final decree. Gavazzi v. Dryfoos, 47 Misc. 15, 95 N. Y. S. 199. One partner, without his copartner's consent, advanced to a bank part of the firm's proceeds to pay his individual debts, the bank having knowledge of the facts. Held, in a suit by one partner for an accounting, the bank was a proper party, being the equitable assignee of the partner making the advancements. Jefferson County Sav. Bank v. Jeffers [Ala.] 39 So. 228.

84. Oyster v. Iola Min. Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 198. Thus where it was alleged that a manager of a corporation with the consent of the corporation converted it and its assets to his own use and used the same in a reckless manner with the purpose of defeating plaintiff's and creditors' rights, the corporation and manager were properly joined, since the transactions were so connected and interwoven that justice could only in such manner be done plaintiff, who prayed for a

Joinder of parties defendant.[88]—Joint tort feasors may be sued jointly[87] or severally, at plaintiff's election.[88] Hence, in a joint action, plaintiff may dismiss as to one and proceed against the other.[89] Where judgment is rendered against both, and is set aside as to one, the judgment against the other is not impaired; but the action should be dismissed as to the defendant judgment against whom has been set aside.[90] Agents of a corporation, for whose negligence the corporation is liable, may be sued jointly with it.[91]

The joinder of two or more defendants in a suit at common law, based upon contract, express or implied, can only be upheld upon the theory of joint liability.[92]

§ 4. Designating and describing parties.[93]—The name of a party to a suit must be the name of the person intended to be designated.[94] An action cannot be maintained in a name as plaintiff which is neither that of a natural person, a partnership, nor of such artificial person as is recognized by the law as capable of suing.[95] A proceeding commenced in such a name, there being no plaintiff, is not an action, but a mere nullity, and may be dismissed at any time on motion.[96] Where a partnership cannot sue in the firm name, the plaintiffs must be properly described as individuals.[97] Where the name of the plaintiff or of the defendant is stated in such words as to imply a corporation, the party plaintiff or defendant will be presumed to be a corporation until the fact is put in issue by a denial.[98] Where the

85. Where surviving partner sued for contribution from representatives of a deceased partner, an allegation that other partners had no individual estate was not sufficient to justify nonjoinder of such other partners. Bruns v. Heise [Md.] 60 A. 604.

86. See 4 C. L. 893.

87. To maintain such suit community of fault must be made to appear. Sturzebecker v. Inland Traction Co., 211 Pa. 156, 60 A. 583. Where an injury is the result of neglect to perform a common duty resting upon two or more persons, though there may be no concert of action between them the party injured may sue the persons owing him a duty which was neglected jointly if he so elects. Birch v. Charleston Light, Heat & Power Co., 113 Ill. App. 229. In an action for wrongful death authorized by Rev. Laws, c. 171, § 2, joint tort feasors may be sued jointly though there can be but one satisfaction of any judgment obtained. Onlighan v. Butler [Mass.] 75 N. E. 726. An action for personal injuries may be maintained against two independent corporations though the relation of master and servant exists between plaintiff and only one of such defendants. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Harris, 85 Miss. 15, 38 So. 225. Joint tort feasors are jointly and severally liable. Weathers v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 111 Mo. App. 315, 86 S. W. 908.

88. Where a complaint against three defendants is amended so as to dismiss as to one, the remaining two defendants have no cause of complaint, since plaintiff may sue separately if he so elects. Olwell v. Skobis [Wis.] 105 N. W. 777.

Where, in a joint action, the evidence fails to show community of fault, plaintiff may amend and proceed against the single defendant shown by the evidence to be liable. Where evidence failed to show concert of action but plaintiff refused to amend, a nonsuit was proper. Sturzebecker v. Inland Traction Co., 211 Pa. 156, 60 A. 583. 95. Western & A. R. Co. v. Dalton Marble Works [Ga.] 50 S. E. 978.

96. Where the "Dalton Marble Works" commenced an action as plaintiff it was error for the justice to allow the words "H. P. Calvard, Proprietor" to be added to the title of the plaintiff, and then allow the action to proceed. The title and amendment did not name a person, natural or artificial, nor a partnership capable of suing, and the action should have been dismissed. Western & A. R. Co. v. Dalton Marble Works [Ga.] 50 S. E. 978.

97. Summons and complaint describing plaintiffs as "A. S. Thornton, W. D. Nesbitt, and W. D. Carr, partners as Thornton, Nesbitt & Co.," the suit was by persons named as individuals, the words "partners, etc.," being merely descriptio personarum. Thornton, Nesbitt & Co. v. First Nat. Bank [Ala.] 40 So. 78.

98. Where defendants were sued as the "Huntington Light & Fuel Co.," and the "Ohio Oil Co.," the absence of an allegation that they were corporations was immaterial, summons and title of a complaint describe defendant as an individual only and the cause of action stated is against him as a trustee under the will of a decedent, the complaint is demurrable for defect of parties, and for failure to state a cause of action.[99]

§ 5. Additional and substituted parties.[1]—In suits in equity,[2] and in other proceedings, by virtue of code provisions in many states, where it appears that the presence of persons not before the court is necessary for a complete determination of the controversy, they should be brought in.[3] The court need not wait for an objection that necessary parties are not before the court but may of its own motion require them to be brought in,[4] and may entertain a motion in regard to the matter at any time while jurisdiction to hear the case remains.[5] Failure of the court to cause necessary parties to be brought in is error which is not waived by failure of the parties to raise the objection.[6] Statutory provisions requiring other persons to be brought in when a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without them relate only to persons not parties whose rights must be ascertained and settled before the rights of parties to the suit can be determined.[7] Under such statutes a plaintiff who seeks only a money judgment cannot be compelled to bring in other parties defendant and thereby change the character of his action, as well as the kind of testimony required.[8] Additional parties cannot be brought where the objection was first raised on appeal. Ohio Oil Co. v. Detamore [Ind.] 73 N. E. 906.

3. The court may at any time, before or after judgment, direct other persons to be made parties to the end that substantial justice be done. Walker v. Miller [N. C.] 52 S. E. 125. A court should not proceed in the absence of persons whose interests are liable to be prejudiced by a judgment rendered in the action. McDougald v. New Richmond Roller Mills Co. [Wis.] 103 N. W. 244. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 389, where it appears that the presence of persons other than those named in the complaint is necessary for a complete determination of the controversy, they may be brought in. DeLeonis v. Hammel [Cal. App.] 82 P. 349. Where in suit to restrain payment of a judgment, the answer alleged that the claim sued on had been assigned before judgment to third persons, it was proper to allow the complaint to be amended so as to bring in the assignees and settle the entire controversy. Murphy & Co. v. American Soda Fountain Co. [Miss.] 39 So. 100.

4. McDougald v. New Richmond Roller Mills Co. [Wis.] 103 N. W. 244. When it appears that a necessary party is not joined, it is the court's duty to order that he be brought in though no objection is raised by defendant. Donovan v. Twist, 105 App. Div. 171, 93 N. Y. S. 990.

5. McDougald v. New Richmond Roller Mills Co. [Wis.] 103 N. W. 244. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 389, requiring court to bring in parties without whom a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had, the court should entertain on the merits a motion to vacate an order sustaining demurrers by certain defendants and to bring such defendants in, where no final order or judgment has been made, even though the movant shows no mistake or inadvertence, and has failed to amend. De La Beckwith v. Superior Ct. of Colusa County, 146 Cal. 496, 80 P. 717.

6. Rev. St. 1898, § 2654, relative to waiver of defects in pleadings, does not apply to a defect of necessary parties. The court should bring such parties in under § 2610. McDougald v. New Richmond Roller Mills Co. [Wis.] 103 N. W. 244.

7. Bankers' Nat. Bank v. Security Trust Co. [S. D.] 103 N. W. 654. Code Civ. Proc. § 452 refers to interested persons who were not made parties at the time the action was brought and who ask to intervene. Callanan v. Keeseville, etc., R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 513. Code Civ. Proc. § 452, requiring the court to have necessary parties brought in, or to permit them to intervene on application, does not apply where the estate of a person who was made a party seeks to intervene in his place. § 756 controls in such case, and the case may proceed with the parties still living unless the court directs others to be brought in. Id. Where an owner of realty sues for injunction and damages for interference with his easement of light, air, and access, and thereafter sells a part of the property reserving only the right to past damages, a motion to bring in the grantee as additional party plaintiff is properly denied. Welde v. New York & H. R. Co. 108 App. Div. 286, 95 N. Y. S. 728. In a suit to restrain a city from polluting a stream, a cross bill by the city setting up that certain water companies had diverted water from the stream and built a dam in it causing it to become sluggish and preventing passage of the sewage, was multifarious and not germane to the original bill; hence the water companies could not thus be made parties to the suit. Doremus v. Paterson [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 3.

in after suit is commenced unless they could be sued on the same cause of action in the same county, independently of the pending suit.[9] An amendment that works an entire change of parties should not be allowed.[10]

An objection to an order bringing in an additional party will not be sustained in the absence of prejudice to the party objecting.[11] Such an order is usually discretionary in North Carolina.[12] The order must be made to appear in the record, or it is ineffective.[13]

The Missouri statute providing that where a cause of action against a city arises from the wrongful or negligent act of a person or corporation, also liable to plaintiff and subject to service in the state, the city may cause such person or corporation to be joined, does not apply to an action to recover damages to private property caused by a public improvement, negligence of the contractor not being alleged.[14]

Intervention.[15]—In many states the right of intervention is governed by statute, and in these states mere interest in the matter in litigation warrants intervention in actions at law. Such interest must, however, be direct and immediate and such that the intervener will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment.[16] Where there are no such statutes, the right of intervention is controlled by the general rules of equity.[17] Thus, parties having an interest in the subject-matter of a suit in equity, and who are either necessary or proper parties to such suit, if not made so by the plaintiff, may intervene as parties complainant or defendant to the end that their interests may be adjudicated and protected.[18] But if a suit in equity is brought by complainant for himself and all others similarly situated, a person whose claim is similar to complainant's will not be

Where indorsee of note sues maker, who defends on ground that there was no consideration for the note and that the transfer to plaintiff was colorable mercly and without consideration, the maker cannot by a cross complaint seeking an accounting and other equitable relief against the payee, make him a party to the action. Bankers' Nat. Bank v. Security Trust Co. [S. D.] 103 N. W. 654. A mere verbal order of the court at the close of the plaintiff's case that a certain person should be made party defendant, the pleadings not being amended, no appearance entered on the record, and no issue joined as to the new party, does not make him a party. 18. Wightman v. Evanston Yaryan Co., 217 Ill. 371, 75 N. E. 502. In a suit to foreclose a trust deed on the plant of a heating and lighting corporation, given to secure bonds, persons who hold contracts for heat and light cannot intervene, even though the receiver refuses to perform their contracts, and though fraud and collusion are alleged, the object of which is to cancel such contracts and raise the price. Id. A lease provided that it should terminate if the lessee transferred his interest without the lessor's consent, and the lessor commenced a forcible entry and detainer action based on the giving of a deed of trust by the lessee of his interest. Thereafter the beneficiary in the trust deed commenced a foreclosure suit and the property was placed in the hands of a receiver, so that the lessor's forcible entry and detainer action could not be successful. Held, the lessor was properly allowed to intervene in the foreclosure proceeding to ask for a cancellation of the trust deed. Gunning v. Sorg, 214 Ill. 616, 73 N. E. 870. A claimant should upon his or her motion be admitted as a party allowed to intervene by separate counsel where it is not proposed to dispose of the case on the final hearing otherwise than in the usual way.[19] An intervener takes the case as he finds it and cannot be heard to make objections to the pleadings or process which the defendant vouching him into court did not urge.[20] In an action involving the title to property, an interpleader is restricted to the issue as to his title or claim to the property.[21] He does not, strictly speaking, become a party to the action in the same sense and with the same status as the original parties or those made parties pending the action by the court of its own motion, or upon application.[22]

Substitution.[23]—Where the cause of action has not been transferred a substitution of parties is ordinarily effected by motion of the party desiring to be substituted.[24] The application for substitution raises the issue as to whether there has been a change of ownership of the cause of action, and unless this is admitted, it must be established by competent evidence before the order of substitution will be entered.[25] But where the transfer of interest is admitted or is not disputed in the hearing on the motion, the ruling thereon is an adjudication of the question.[26] A supplemental pleading is not, in such case, necessary.[27] The right to a substitution of parties may be barred by laches.[28] A substituted party takes up the prosecution or defense at the point where the original party left it, assuming the burdens as well as receiving the benefits.[29] An order substituting a new party plaintiff is not, in New York, reviewable on an appeal from a final judgment.[30]

§ 6. Objections to capacity and defects of parties.[31]—The right of a plaintiff to maintain the action[32] is properly raised by a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.[33] An objection to the right of plaintiff to sue is waived if not raised by demurrer or answer.[34]

Nonjoinder.[35]—When the defect of parties appears upon the face of the complaint, the proper remedy is by demurrer.[36] If the defect does not appear upon the face of the complaint the objection may be taken by answer[37] or verified plea in abatement,[38] but is not raised by a demurrer.[39] If the objection is not taken by demurrer, answer or plea in abatement, it is waived.[40] But this rule does not apply to an indispensable party without whom the court cannot properly proceed to a decree or judgment.[41] Thus, though the question of parties was not raised in the court below by demurrer, plea, or answer, and is not suggested in the appellate court, if it plainly appears from the record that there is a lack of necessary and indispensable parties, the appellate court will notice the fact of its own motion, and reverse and remand the cause, with leave to add such parties.[42]

Misjoinder.[43]—The method of objecting to a misjoinder of parties depends upon the form and nature of the action and upon the statute.[44] The objection is waived if not raised until after verdict.[45]

Misnomer.—Where, in a civil case, the party proceeded against is designated and described by a wrong name, the objection of misnomer should be taken by a plea in abatement and not by a motion to dismiss.[46] The objection is waived by a plea to the merits.[47]

PARTITION.

§ 1. Nature, right, and propriety.[51]—Partition operates upon the possession and not upon the title, and serves only to sever the unity of possession before existing.[52] The remedy is equitable in its nature though generally provided for by statute.[53]

The right, and parties entitled.[54]—Only joint tenants or tenants in common[55] who have a legal estate in the land[56] are entitled to a partition. A decree for specific performance of a contract transforms an equitable into a legal estate if defendants refuse to comply with the decree,[57] and the complainants may maintain a bill for partition, though an appeal is pending from the decree for specific performance.[58] Possession or right to possession is essential,[59] and persons who have neither corporated, and that the company sued was a co-partnership. Held, it was error to refuse to allow plaintiff to amend, under Civ. Code Prac. § 134, by making the proper persons defendants. Teets v. Snider Heading Mfg. Co., 27 Ky. L. R. 1061, 87 S. W. 803. To permit plaintiff to amend by striking out the word "Window" from the name "Wilkinson Co-operative Window Glass Co." was a proper exercise of the court's discretion under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 397, permitting amendments by leave of court. Wilkinson Co-op. Glass Co. v. Dickinson [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 957. A court may permit the summons and complaint against defendants "as executors" to be amended so as to be against defendants individually, even though limitations have run against them individually. Kerrigan v. Peters, 108 App. Div. 292, 95 N. Y. S. 723. In an action against defendants "as executors" the case was never put upon the calendar, and was not moved by either party. Held, a motion to amend by making the action one against defendants individually, would not be denied on the ground of laches, though a year and a half had passed since the filing of defendants' answer. Id. See Pleading, 4 C. L. 980, for full treatment of amendments.

55. A bill for partition alleging that plaintiff owned the land and conveyed to defendant the right to remove three-fourths of the underlying coal, and that a portion of the coal had been mined by defendant, held insufficient, since it did not show a tenancy in common of the coal, nor how much had been removed, and since partition could not be had of the coal which had been severed from the realty. Brand v. Consolidated Coal Co., 219 Ill. 543, 76 N. E. 849. A trust provided that on the death of one of the beneficiaries his share should be transferred to his lineal descendants. Held, where such a transfer was made the grantees became tenants in common with the trustees and either could have partition. Paine v. Sackett [R. I.] 61 A. 753.

56. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 106, authorizing partition by joint tenants or tenants in common, a beneficiary under a trust in land, with no legal estate therein, cannot maintain a bill for partition. Mason v. Mason, 219 Ill. 609, 76 N. E. 692.

59. A person claiming to own land as ten-the right to possession nor the power of disposition cannot have partition.[60] Partition may be had at the suit of a life tenant which will be binding on the remaindermen.[61]

Statutory sale for partition.—Statutes giving courts power to order a sale where partition is impracticable introduce no new principle into the law of partition of estates in common.[62] Power to order a sale rests upon the same ground as power to order partition and is simply an alternative remedy where actual partition of the property is impracticable.[63] Thus, an alleged tenant in common who has been disseized cannot have a sale decreed.[64] Under the Kentucky statute property may be sold where there are vested estates jointly held, though one so holding is a life tenant and the remaindermen are infants.[65] A sale and division may also be had under this statute, though one of the owners is an infant whose undivided interest is subject to a dower right.[66] An incompetent's vested estate may also be sold, under this statute.[67]

What may be partitioned.[68]—Where the law permits neither the husband nor wife to dispose by sale or conveyance of a homestead right without the express consent of the other, neither can accomplish this result indirectly by a sale on partition.[69] The property of minors may be sold for partition.[70]

Partition of estates of decedents.—Ordinarily partition of a decedent's estate cannot be had until the estate has been settled,[71] in the absence of special circumstances.[72] In Illinois partition may be made, or, if the premises are not divisible, a decree of sale may be entered prior to the expiration of the period for proving claims against an estate.[73] But if the administrator answers in the partition suit that the personalty is insufficient to pay debts, and no proof is taken thereon, and a decree of sale entered, the court should, on the return of the report of the sale, take additional proof and make such order with reference to the distribution of the proceeds as will secure the satisfaction of claims.[74] In Wisconsin heirs have an estate in possession such as enables them to maintain a suit for partition, though the ancestor's estate has not been settled,[75] and such suit may be instituted pending administration of the estate.[76] In New York a suit by heirs for partition may continue during the pendency of proceedings in the surrogate's court for sale of realty to pay debts of the decedent,[77] since the statute provides for a deposit of the proceeds of the sale in partition until the estate is settled.[78] In Missouri a partition suit brought before expiration of the period within which a minor heir may contest the validity of a will of the property which has been admitted to probate is not premature, but a decree of distribution does not take effect until an estate is finally settled.[79] A precatory provision in a will postponing division of the estate makes premature a suit for partition brought before the expiration of the time specified by testator.[80] But jurisdiction attaches under a prayer for an accounting and other equitable relief, and having once attached is retained for all purposes, including partition.[81] Where a testator leaves property to be divided among his children by his widow as she may deem best, the children cannot maintain a bill for partition and accounting of rents and profits while the widow lives and while she has not exercised the power conferred on her by the will.[82] Where heirs petition for a sale and all the parties in interest are before the court, sale by the trustee appointed in the will may be ordered, the trustee having implied power to sell under the will.[83] A sale in partition rather than by an executor will be ordered when that course will save expense and prevent delay.[84] A legatee of a share of the proceeds of real estate directed by a testator to be sold has no standing to demand partition of the real estate.[85] Where, on the death of the ancestor, title to all his real estate passes to the heirs subject to dower rights of the widow, any of the interested parties who attempt to compel partition must include in the proceeding all the real estate which passed to the heirs and is held by them as tenants in common.[86] The fact that certain heirs made an agreement with the widow assigning to her use one-half the property is no reason for not including such property in the suit.[87]

A will gave property to trustees for testator's widow for life, then to be held until his grandson reached the age of 25, and then to be equally divided between the grandson and a granddaughter, if alive, or to their issue by right of representation. In a suit for partition a daughter of the grandson, who had absconded, but would be 25 at time of suit if alive, was a necessary party. Van Williams v. Elias, 106 App. Div. 288, 94 N. Y. S. 611.

3. Where an intestate's estate was not a party to a partition suit involving land in which intestate's heirs were interested, the court had no jurisdiction in such suit to divide rents and profits in which the intestate had an interest, and such division would not bind the estate. Perkins v. Goddin, 111 Mo. App. 429, 85 S. W. 936.

4. Where in a suit for partition of a decedent's estate a trustee under his will was not made a party, the discharge of the trustee shortly after the commencement of the suit divested him of any interest he might have had and made it unnecessary to join him as a party. Van Williams v. Elias, 106 App. Div. 288, 94 N. Y. S. 611. Where a minor heir had no interest in a devise of the premises, the fact that he could, within a period which had not expired, contest the validity of the will, did not make him a necessary party to the partition suit under Rev. St. 1899, § 4375. Robertson v. Brown, 187 Mo. 452, 86 S. W. 187. Proceedings for partiparties. The statutory guardian of an infant defendant is the person required to file the answer,[5] and one who so styles herself need not exhibit evidence of the fact of guardianship when no issue is made thereon.[6] Where a defendant was made administrator of the estate pending partition proceedings, and no application is made to have him joined as a defendant in his capacity as administrator, he cannot complain of his not being made such.[7] In Louisiana a married woman, though a minor, can, when aided and assisted by her husband, sue for the partition of property in which she is interested, without being authorized so to do by the judge, on the advice of a family meeting.[8] The fact that a presumptive heir of the parties whose successions were being partitioned was not made a defendant in partition proceedings will not necessarily render them and sale thereunder void, where the absence of such person, together with attendant circumstances, warrant a presumption of his death.[9]

Pleading and evidence.[10]—The bill must describe the land, show the interests of the parties, and show such an interest in complainant as entitles him to partition.[11] Where a bill does not disclose that the parties are owners in common of other property not included in the bill, it is not demurrable on that ground,[12] nor will a demurrer lie on the ground that the court has acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter in a previous suit, where the record of such suit shows that only a one-third interest of the lands were involved in that suit.[13] A plea in abatement is not a proper plea in a proceeding for partition.[14] A plea of adverse possession is insufficient if the elements of a title by adverse possession are not made to appear.[15] If the answer leaves no issue as to plaintiff's right to partition, or as to his ownership of an interest in the land, plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the pleadings,[16] unless defendants also ask for affirmative relief and plaintiff waives

A complaint wherein plaintiffs claim a one-third interest as remaindermen under the will of a certain person and allege that one defendant is entitled to two-thirds of a certain tract, and another to two-thirds of another tract, and that defendants acquired title through mesne conveyances from those who held under the will of the person under whom plaintiffs claim, states but one cause of action. Woodward v. Santee River Cypress Lumber Co. [S. C.] 52 S. E. 733. A petition describing the land, making all the tenants in common parties, and showing the interest of each and which of them are infants, and alleging that the property cannot be equitably divided among the owners, gives the probate court jurisdiction to proceed and on proof of the allegations to decree a sale. Edwards v. Edwards [Ala.] 39 So. 82. Where bill sought partition between heirs and alleged that one had acquired a tax title by fraud, but the facts alleged did not show fraud, the bill for partition was insufficient since an equitable right superior to the tax title was necessary in order to maintain the suit. Cross complaint alleging that cross complainant and defendants were owners as tenants in common of the realty described, and setting out their interests in the realty, held sufficient as an application for partition, under Burns' Ann. the admission of the answer by proceeding to the trial of other issues raised.[17] Though a bill for partition has been dismissed as against a party asserting title by adverse possession, on the grounds of lack of jurisdiction, multifariousness, and laches, equitable relief against him being denied, such party is entitled to intervene in the suit which would cast a cloud upon his title.[18] Where a bill is filed for the partition of one piece of property belonging to the estate of one person, a cross bill to sell another piece of property belonging to the estate of another person to pay the latter's debts is not germane to the relief asked in the original bill.[19] The usual rules as to waiver of objections to the pleadings apply.[20]

Plaintiff must prove his title or interest by a preponderance of the evidence.[21] Complainant in a suit for partition is not a competent witness to prove the fact of her marriage to the person under whom she claims.[22] A defendant has a right to show that title to the land is in a third person not a party to the record.[23]

Mode and time of trial.—In New York, issues of fact in an action of partition are triable by a jury, whether defendant is an infant or adult,[24] and any party to the action has the right to insist upon a jury trial and to resist an application to refer.[25] A reference can be had only by consent of all parties to the issue, or in case of the default of all parties, including the practical default of an infant who submits his rights to the court.[26] Where a motion for a jury trial is denied, the denial of such motion is conclusive on a retrial of the suit, there being nothing in the motion or order denying it limiting their operation to one trial.[27] In Georgia an application by one co-tenant against another for partition of land by sale may be tried at the term to which application is made, if defendant has time, in the judgment of the court, to prepare and file his objections, otherwise it should be tried at the next term thereafter.[28]

To give the court jurisdiction to settle questions of title in a partition suit, defendant must be a person who claims under one who was a joint owner with plaintiff. See Pillow v. S. W. Imp. Co., 92 Va. 144, 23 S. E. 32, 53 Am. St. Rep. 804, cited in Moon's Adm'x v. Highland Development Co. [Va.] 52 S. E. 209.

of partition, the suit should be postponed until the dispute concerning the title may be settled in a court of law,[31] if the adverse claim is supported by substantial proof.[32] The existence of a dispute touching title of complainants does not, however, deprive a court of chancery of jurisdiction.[33] If the adverse claim asserted is an equitable one, the case should be retained and decided in the chancery court,[34] and where it appears that the parties are tenants in common, joint tenants, or coparceners in the realty sought to be partitioned, and as such compellable under the statute to make partition, the court has power incident to its jurisdiction to pass upon all conflicting claims of such parties to the realty concerned.[35] The rule that a partition suit cannot be made a substitute for an action of ejectment does not apply where partition is not the sole object of the suit, which has become substantially a creditor's bill for the satisfaction of liens due by co-parceners and binding on the estate to be partitioned.[36] Partition cannot be had in an action of trespass to try title when the amended petition does not ask for such relief,[37] and where interested parties are not before the court.[38]

Costs and attorneys' fees.[39]—Costs and expenses need not in every case be charged upon the parties or their shares in proportion to their interests.[40] The fact that costs were largely created by one of the parties[41] and the manner in which a party conducts and prosecutes the suit[42] are also to be considered. A judgment for costs is a lien on the land of the person against whom it is entered, but such lien can be enforced only by an independent proceeding in equity.[43] A decree in a partition suit when nothing remains to be done except to settle the costs is a final decree.[44] Hence, further proceedings by which part of the land is sold to satisfy costs is without authority, and not binding on a purchaser pendente lite who had no notice thereof.[45] Attorney's fees may be allowed and apportioned among the parties according to their interests in the property involved, where the proceedings are amicable,[46] or where the rights and interests of all the parties are correctly set forth in the bill or petition,[47] and no substantial defense is interposed.[48]

41. Since by Code § 4260, a party is chargeable with costs created by his contest, trial court's discretion in apportioning costs partly according to the interests of the parties, and partly with reference to the fact that one party created a contest, will not be disturbed on appeal. McGuire v Luckey [Iowa] 105 N. W. 1004.

42. Thus, where a defendant conducts the suit in a hostile and persistent manner, causing substantially all the expense by presenting claims which were overruled and rejected, all costs of the suit are properly charged to such defendant. McMullin v. Doughty [N. J. Eq.] 61 A 265.

Operation and effect of decree.[49]—A partition decree does not confer title but merely severs the unity of possession.[50] Rights not adjudicated in the proceeding are not affected by the decree.[51] In an ex parte proceeding for division of land, a judgment electing for one of the parties to take a life estate in a portion of the land instead of a dower interest is binding upon such party, though the petition contains nothing on which such order could be based.[52] The rule that one party to a partition decree may not acquire the title of a stranger and set it up against the other party does not apply where a decree has been procured by fraud.[53] Where all persons having a vested or contingent interest in land were made parties to a partition suit, and the decree, as to part of the land subject to a trust, substituted the fund derived from sale of the land, for the land, and left such fund intact in the hands of the trustees for the purposes of the trust, the land was freed from the trust, and the decree was conclusive against all persons, whether in being or not, who had or might have any right to share in the trust estate.[54] Under the Michigan statute conferring on the probate court jurisdiction to partition estates of decedents assigned to heirs as tenants in common and providing that a decree of partition shall be conclusive, a decree assigning a life estate to an heir, acquiesced in by her, is conclusive and precludes the subsequent assertion by her of a different estate.[55]

§ 5. Commissioners or referees and their proceedings.[56]—The qualifications[57] and number[58] of commissioners is statutory in New Hampshire. The appointment of a committee to make partition does not have the effect of a final decree upon the rights of the parties.[59] The appointment may be revoked for cause shown[60] where an objection is seasonably made.[61] An infant defendant should be represented by a guardian ad litem when testimony is taken before a master in support of the cause of the adverse party, and such guardian is entitled to notice of the proceeding.[62] A master need not stop proceedings merely because a person not a party to the partition suit files a bill in equity against the plaintiff to stay proceedings and gives the master notice of the filing of such bill.[63] Ex parte affidavits are incompetent evidence in a hearing before a master.[64] Claims against a decedent are not cognizable in a proceeding before a master for partition or sale, and it is error for a decree of sale to direct that such claims should be paid out of the proceeds of the sale.[65]

If it appears that referees appointed to partition realty have not complied with the order of the court, and that the partition made is unjust and inequitable, their report should be set aside.[66] A decree sustaining a master's report in partition will not be reversed, because the master failed to give notice to creditors, where there is no evidence that there were creditors and it appeared the master made proper searches for liens of record and found none.[67] Where a commissioner's report finds that the property cannot be divided without prejudice to the owners' interests, and this report is confirmed and embodied in the decree of sale, it is immaterial that two additional reports recommending a sale did not expressly recite that partition would be prejudicial.[68] Where a report recommends a sale of the property, objections thereto on the ground that the property is divisible in kind are properly overruled when not supported by evidence.[69]

§ 6. Mode of partition and distribution of property or proceeds.[70]—The right to sale did not exist at common law. Partition in kind could be had as of right.[71] By statute it is now generally provided that the property may be sold where partition in kind would be impracticable and prejudicial to the interests of the parties.[72] Jurisdiction of the courts to order a sale being wholly statutory, it must be exercised in strict conformity thereto,[73] and a sale for a purpose not authorized is void.[74]

Distribution.[75]—Where one of several tenants in common has made improvements upon the property the court should, if possible, allot to him the portion improved without taking into account the value of the improvements.[76] If such a division cannot be made the court will then allow to the one making the improvements remuneration for the increased value of the premises caused thereby.[77] In distributing the proceeds of a sale, an heir who is indebted to the estate should be charged with the amount of his debt.[78] Advancements to heirs should also be considered in making the division of a decedent's property,[79] and a purchaser from one of the heirs is entitled to have such advancement paid out of the personalty if possible.[80] A life tenant in partition cannot be awarded any portion of the proceeds which represents property belonging to the inheritance.[81] Where it appears that certain tenants have had exclusive possession of the common property, receiving the rents and profits therefrom, the court may require an accounting of such rents and profits.[82] Unliquidated claims for damages to the property cannot be considered.[83] Allowances should be made for taxes paid and for the value of proper permanent improvements made, with lawful interest on sums so expended.[84] Where plaintiffs sued to be recognized as joint owners and for partition, and the judgment ordered defendant to account for rents, he is not estopped to set up in the partition proceedings claims for disbursements for taxes, insurance, and necessary repairs.[85] A defendant in default for the price of property adjudicated to him owes legal interest thereon from the date of the judgment and not prior to such date.[86]

Owelty[87] is a sum paid or secured in lieu of land in partition in order to equalize the portions, where an equal division in kind cannot be made.[88] Where a decree in a partition suit between a father and his children charged land allotted to the children with owelty to the amount of a debt of the father, secured by a trust deed on the land, the amount so charged was not owelty as to the creditor who was not a party to the suit.[89] The decree did not operate as an assumption of the father's debt by the children,[90] nor was the creditor subrogated by the decree to rights of the father.[91] Land allotted to the father being also charged with other debts, the father would have no right to reimbursement in case he should pay the debt secured by deed of trust, unless upon settlement of all the claims against the entire estate he should show a right to such relief.[92]

Terms of sale of minors' interests.—The authority of the judge, under the Louisiana statute, to convoke a family meeting to fix the terms of credit and security on which the interest of minors in property partitioned is to be sold, is not conditioned upon such convocation having been made at the special instance and request of the tutors and curators of such minors.[96] The court may order it ex officio.[97]

the decree.[99] The fixing of a minimum in the decree does not relieve the officer in charge from realizing as much as possible from the sale.[1] Failure to disclose at the sale the existence of a restrictive covenant which decreases the value of the land entitles a purchaser to be relieved from his purchase.[2] Though the land to be sold consists of several tracts in which the parties are interested in different proportions, a sale of all the land at a certain price per acre is binding upon the purchaser when the adult parties adopt and approve the sale.[3] The sale is not invalid as to an infant party, since the court may hold the proceeds until it has been determined whether the sale so made is just as to the infant and award him an amount justly due.[4] Informalities in a sale may be cured by prescription.[5]

A misdescription of the land in the advertisement,[6] decree,[7] or commissioner's deed[8] does not invalidate the sale if the land intended to be sold was in fact sold and no prejudice is shown to have resulted therefrom. An objection that the land partitioned was insufficiently described is unavailable after the parties have sold their interests and the purchasers have taken possession.[9] A purchaser takes only the land in issue in the partition proceeding and subject to sale, notwithstanding a different description in the commissioner's deed.[10]

The omission of property belonging to an estate or succession from a partition is not ground for rescission but simply for supplemental partition.[11]

Confirmation of sale.[12]—Confirmation should be entered of record, but a formal order is not essential if the fact of confirmation appears from the record as a whole.[13] Confirmation of a sale on the day the report thereof is filed is valid, if no prejudice is shown as the result of such procedure.[14] An order confirming a sale is a final judgment over which the court rendering it has no control after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered,[15] except for statutory causes for new trial available at a subsequent term.[16] A purchaser cannot defeat confirmation of the sale on the ground that there are outstanding taxes,[17] or that there is pending a contest of the will of a former owner whose heirs and devisees are parties to the proceedings,[18] or that the wife of one of the parties,[19] or the personal representative of a grantor of one of the parties, whose deed reserved a lien for a portion of the purchase price,[20] was not made a party.

7. Where a bill for partition correctly described the land and the decree ordered sold the land described in the bill, an error in the description following such direction in the decree rendered it and the proceedings thereunder erroneous but not void. The error was a clerical one correctable by the record. Failure to appeal for 17 years barred relief. Farmer v. Allen, 85 Miss. 672, 38 So. 38.

When unpaid taxes are a lien on the land but are not due at the time of the sale, the proper practice is to have their amount credited on the sale bonds and for the purchaser to pay them, or to require them to be paid out of the purchase-money fund in court. A purchaser cannot defeat confirmation of the sale on the ground that such taxes are outstanding. Wise v. Wolfe, 27 Ky. L. R. 610, 85 S. W. 1191.

18. Where devisees and heirs of a former owner of an interest in land are parties to a partition suit, the pendency of a contest of the will of such former owner is no ground for refusing confirmation of the sale, as against the purchaser, since distribution of the interest of such devisees or heirs may be deferred until the will contest has terminated, a sufficient fund being retained for that purpose. Wise v. Wolfe, 27 Ky. L. R. 610, 85 S. W. 1191.

19. The fact that the wife of one of the parties was not made a party to the suit is no ground for refusing to confirm a sale as against the purchaser, since the court may and should cause her to be made a party, and have the amount of her dower interest determined and paid her out of the proceeds. Wise v. Wolfe, 27 Ky. L. R. 610, 85 S. W. 1191.

NOTE. Effect of partition on dower: "In proceedings in partition, either at law or in equity, the inchoate right of dower of femes covert, whether infants or adults, in the undivided shares of their husbands in the lands, is divested by a sale under the judgment or decree of the court, so as to protect the purchasers against the dower of such femes covert, if they survive their husbands, provided such wives are made parties to the proceedings. The cases everywhere agree upon this, although there is some conflict as to the effect of a partition sale when the wife is not made a party to the proceedings. In the following cases she was made a party: Jackson v. Edwards, 7 Paige, [N. Y.] 386; afd. 22 Wend. [N. Y.] 498; Jordan v. Van Epps, 19 Hun [N. Y.] 526, afd. 85 N. Y. 427; Weaver v. Gregg, 6 Ohio St. 547, 67 Am. Dec. 355; Warren v. Twilley, 10 Md. 39; Rowland v. Prather, 53 Md. 232. Thus, if in an action to recover a dower interest in land, it appears that there exists a judgment rendered in an action for partition of such lands in which the feme covert claims her dower, and that she was duly served and made a party defendant in such action, but failed to appear, it must be held that such judgment is a bar to the action for dower, although such judgment fails to make any provision for dower. Jordan v. Van Epps, 85 N. Y. 427. This case overrules the early case of Bradshaw v. Callaghan, 5 John. [N. Y.] 80, which maintains an exactly contrary doctrine.

Although there is some conflict of authority as to whether a wife is a necessary party to partition proceedings between co-owners of land, the vast majority of the decisions of courts of last resort establish the rule that the seisin of a husband who acquires title to land as a tenant in common with others is subject to the paramount right of his co-tenants to demand partition in an action brought for that purpose. His wife's right of dower therein is therefore subordinate to that paramount right, which, when enforced by a sale made under a decree of the court, defeats her inchoate right of dower in the land, although she was not made a party to the action of partition. Hence, in a partition suit between co-tenants, the wife of one of them is not a necessary party, and in the event of a partition sale of real estate in a proceeding wherein such wife was not made a party, she is bound by such proceedings and sale, though she outlives her husband and becomes his surviving widow, for her inchoate right to one-third of her husband's land subsists by virtue of his seisin, and is always subject to any encumbrance, infirmity, or incident which the law affixes to the seisin, either at the time of the marriage or at the time her husband becomes seised, and liability to be devested by a partition sale is an incident which the law affixes to all estates in co-tenancy. For these reasons the courts almost universally hold that a sale of land for the purpose of partition bars the inchoate right of dower of the wife of one of the joint tenants or tenants in common, and the purchaser takes a clear title to the land. Davis v. Lang, 153 Ill. 175, 38 N. E. 635; Holley v. Glover, 36 S. C. 404, 15 S. E. 605, 31 Am. St. Rep. 883; Mitchell v. Farrish, 69 Md. 235, 14 A. 712; Williams v. Wescott, 77 Iowa, 332, 42 N. W. 314, 14 Am. St. Rep. 287; Lee v. Lindell, 22 Mo. 202, 64 Am. Dec. 262; Sire v. St. Louis, 22 Mo. 206; Hinds v. Stevens, 45 Mo. 209; Weaver v. Gregg, 6 Ohio St. 547, 67 Am. Dec. 355; Haggerty v. Wagner, 148 Ind. 625, 48 N. E. 366. A sale of land in partition proceedings is a judicial sale, and such a sale of a husband's interest in lands in a proceeding to which he is a party extinguishes the wife's right of dower therein, although she was not made a party to the proceeding. Williams v. Wescott, 77 Iowa, 332, 42 N. W. 314, 14 Am. St. Rep. 287. The leading case on the subject is Weaver v. Gregg, 6 Ohio St. 547, 67 Am. Dec. 355." See, also, Davis v. Lang, 153 Ill. 175, 38 N. E. 635; Haggerty v. Wagner, 148 Ind. 625, 48 N. E. 366; Hinds v. Stevens, 45 Mo. 209; Holley v. Grover, 36 S. C. 404, 15 S. E. 605, 31 Am. St. Rep. 883.

runs in favor of the purchaser at the sale against the parties, though the sale was void.[21]

Rights and liabilities of purchasers or bidders.[22]—A purchaser at a sale becomes a party to the partition proceedings so as to be affected with constructive notice of facts shown by the record.[23] He need not look to the distribution of the proceeds of the sale to protect his title, but need only inquire if the sale and preliminary steps were regular and legal.[24] He is entitled to be informed of the existence of liens or charges on the land.[25] A purchaser acquires no interest from a party who had parted with his interest prior to the partition suit.[26] One who accepts and appropriates the proceeds of a sale of realty in partition is estopped to assert want of title in the property sold and to set up a subsequently acquired adverse title against the rights of the purchaser at the sale.[27] Where the special master making a sale is informed before accepting the cash payment that the bidder represents other persons, such agent cannot be held liable upon failure of the principals to complete the purchase; hence, the principals have no standing in court to procure their substitution as the original bidders merely because the master threatens to hold the agent.[28] A plaintiff whose bid for the property is accepted will be left to his legal remedy to regain possession which is wrongfully withheld by a defendant.[29] Where a master accepts the bid of plaintiff and awards one-half the bid to defendant charging it on the land until paid, the land is sufficient security for defendant's share and no bond need be required of plaintiff.[30]

Land sold at a void sale may be recovered, though a proper allowance should be made for improvements made by the purchaser after he acquired color of title.[31]

§ 8. Appeal and review; vacation of sale.[32]—Exceptions to an interlocutory judgment in a partition suit are reviewable though there is no final judgment.[33] A decree that partition of lands cannot be made, and ordering the master to sell the lands and distribute the proceeds is a final, appealable decree.[34] An infant defendant may attack such a decree for errors apparent on the face of the record by an original bill in equity, and is not required to apply for a rehearing or file a

A purchaser cannot defeat confirmation of a sale on the ground that the interest of one of the parties was by deed reserving a lien for an unpaid portion of the purchase price, and that the grantor therein has died and his representative was not made a party, since the representative may be brought in and his rights adjudicated before distribution of the proceeds. bill for review or sue out a writ of error.[35] Such a bill may be filed at any time during minority or within the period allowed after majority for the prosecution of a writ of error.[36] Confirmation of a report of commissioners is not a final, appealable decree when the plan of distribution is dependent upon a sale yet to be made, which would require confirmation.[37]

Vacation of sale.[38]—In Illinois a petition by a guardian ad litem for infant defendants asking that a sale be vacated is a sufficient basis for an order setting aside the sale.[39] Mere inadequacy of price is not ground for setting aside a sale.[40] But if fraud or misconduct in the purchaser, or in the officer conducting the sale, or other persons connected therewith, be shown, or if the owner or party interested has been surprised or misled into a mistake by the conduct of the purchaser or officer or other person connected with the sale, such facts will be considered, together with the inadequacy of price, and the sale set aside if the best interests of the parties concerned demand it.[41] The disabilities of parties interested should also be considered.[42] Where the attorney in charge of a partition suit purchases at the sale the burden is upon him, in a suit to set aside the sale, to show fairness, adequacy, and equity.[43] The same rule applies to one who associates himself with the attorney and purchases through the attorney as his agent.[44]

Where persons standing in a fiduciary relation to parties interested purchase at the sale, and the sale is set aside, the purchasers are to be deemed equitable mortgagees and are to be paid expenditures for purchase money, taxes, and improvements, with interest, and to be charged with rents and profits, and in case of sale to innocent purchasers without notice, with the excess of the amount realized over what they paid.[45] If upon a resale no advance is made upon the sum paid by such persons, they are to be considered purchasers.[46] When a void sale is set aside and partition decreed the purchaser at the first sale should be credited with money paid to complainants in the second suit and with money which was expended for the benefit of the entire estate,[47] but not with sums applied to payment of attorneys' fees and costs in the original proceeding.[48] Where, in a proceeding to vacate a sale, an offer to increase the bid was made absolute before the order setting aside the sale was made, and a bond was filed instead of paying the earnest money into court, the interests of other parties were sufficiently protected.[49]

Laches cannot be charged to one seeking to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud, actual or constructive, until after his knowledge of the facts, or of circumstances sufficient to put him on inquiry which would have led to such knowledge.[50] An heir who has participated in all the partition proceedings until after a sale under a decree and until after all the parties were before the notary for the settlement of the rights of the heirs inter se, cannot, in a suit to annul the sale, raise the objection that the succession had been opened in another division of the district court and had not yet been closed, and that debts were still unpaid by it.[51] Where it appears that all creditors have been paid, the objection that debts of the succession are unpaid must fail for want of a party with legal interest to urge it.[52]

§ 9. Voluntary partition.[53]—A voluntary partition is binding only on the parties thereto.[54] A partition agreement between two co-tenants made after one of them had contracted to convey to a third person, such contract being recorded, is not binding on the grantee of such third person unless ratified by him.[55] Where partition is made by consent of all the parties interested, who take charge of their respective allotments without objection, neither they nor purchasers from them with notice of the partition proceedings can afterwards object thereto.[56] A judgment creditor of one tenant in common is not bound by a voluntary partition made between the tenants in common after the recovery of his judgment;[57] but a purchaser of an undivided interest under the judgment may be brought into equity for partition of all the lands owned in common before the voluntary partition, and may also, by equities raised against him or the tenant in common under whom he claims, be required to receive on the partition the lands received by the judgment debtor on the voluntary partition.[58]

§ 1. What constitutes. Definition and kinds.[62]—Wherever two or more persons engage in a legal business or occupation under an agreement, either express or implied, to share the profits and losses, a partnership is created.[63] The relation, except in some instances as to third persons, is a contract one.[64] A partnership may be formed for the purpose of either buying and selling generally,[65] or for the accomplishment of a single venture or undertaking.[66] Unincorporated associations[67] and joint stock companies[68] are, in many respects, deemed partnerships.

A trading partnership is one whose business consists in buying or preparing for sale and selling commodities for profit.[69]

A partner agreeing to share his proportion of profits with a third person, in such manner as to constitute himself and such third person partners, forms a subpartnership.[70] Such a relation involves all the responsibilities of any other partnership, except that the subpartner is not a member of the main firm nor liable for its debts.[71]

A partnership is, for some purposes, a distinct entity, separate from the persons composing it.[72]

Essential elements.[73]—The essential elements of every true partnership is a contract between the parties[74] and a joint ownership of the profits.[75] Mere sharing the existence of the relation. It is not essential that the profits shall be liquidated in the form of money or property in possession for division in the ratio of the interests of the members respectively, it is sufficient if the ultimate result contemplated is a community of profits and losses.[79] Except in the case of a partnership by estoppel,[80] the relation cannot be created except by the consent of the parties,[81] either personally or through their duly authorized agents.[82] Like other contracts the agreement must be definite,[83] mutual, executed, and based upon a sufficient consideration.[84]

The essential elements of an ordinary partnership do not enter into a mining partnership. The principle of delectus personarum does not apply to such a partnership and no contract is necessary to create it. Such a partnership exists when the tenants in common of a mine work it together for a joint profit.[85]

Intent as test.[86]—What constitutes a partnership, that is the legal elements of a partnership, is a question of law for the court.[87] There is no arbitrary test by which to determine when a partnership exists,[88] the true test being the intent of the parties as evidenced by their agreement and acts done thereunder,[89] and this inten-

NOTE. Agreement to share profits: The early English cases held that when individuals shared profits they were partners as to third persons. Grace v. Smith, 2 Wm. Bl. 998; Waugh v. Carver, 2 H. Bl. 235, 2 Smith's Leading Cas. 1316. In Torbert v. Jeffrey, 16 Mo. 645, 61 S. W. 823, it was held that participation in profits raised a presumption of partnership and that this presumption was conclusive unless rebutted by satisfactory evidence. There are some cases in other jurisdictions that still support this doctrine. Brandon v. Connor, 117 Ga. 759, 45 S. E. 371, 63 L. R. A. 260; Cleveland v. Anderson, 2 Tex. Ct. App. 138; Leggett v. Hyde, 58 N. Y. 272; Magovern v. Robertson, 116 N. Y. 61; Wessels & Co. v. Weiss & Co., 166 Pa. 490; Cossack v. Burgwyn, 112 N. C. 304. Under the modern doctrine the majority of the courts hold that partnership depends in all cases upon the contract and intention of the parties as made out by the facts of the case. As between themselves, parties are partners when they intended to combine their property, labor, and skill in an enterprise or business as principals for the purpose of joint profits. Id. Whether persons are partners as between themselves depends upon their contract with each other. Reynolds v. Radke, 112 Ill. App. 575. Where lessees of mining property agreed with a third person that when the latter had sunk a shaft to a certain depth he should be entitled to one-half interest in the property, held error to instruct that the contract itself did not make the parties partners, unless the jury believed that the work had been action must be ascertained from the whole evidence and all the circumstances of the case.[90] But where a partnership exists as the legal result of an agreement actually made, the parties are partners, even though they have stipulated that they are not to be such.[91]

Who may become partners.[92]—A partnership cannot be formed with an unknown person.[93] In the absence of statutory authorization, corporations have no power to enter into partnership with each other.[94] A partnership agreement entered into by an infant is voidable as to him[95] and he may set up his incapacity for the purpose of releasing himself from liability for the purchase price of the firm's assets.[96] He will not, however, be permitted to derive an undue advantage from his disability, and hence he cannot, at the same time, set up his disability to relieve himself of the firm's debts and retain possession of the firm's assets.[97] Under the married women's acts of most states a married woman can enter into a contract of co-partnership,[98] though in some states the rule has not been extended to cases where the relation is sought to be created between husband and wife.[99] In others it has been so extended,[1] and in such states, as to third persons, she may create the relation by estoppel in pais.[2] In the absence of proof as to what the law of a foreign country is as to the capacity to become a partner, it will be presumed that it is the same as that of the forum.[3]

Formalities of contract of partnership.[4]—The provision of the statute of frauds requiring contracts which cannot be performed within a year to be in writing does not apply to contracts of partnership.[5] By the great weight of authority the provision of such statute requiring contracts for an interest in real property to be in writing does not require a contract of partnership to be in writing, even though the partnership property consists of realty and the very purpose of the partnership is to deal in real estate,[6] though there are authorities to the contrary,[7]

98, 99. Norwood v. Francis, 25 App. D. C. 463.

1. A husband and wife may become partners or subpartners. Morrison v. Dickey [Ga.] 50 S. E. 175. So held under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6967, providing that a married woman shall be liable for debts in carrying on a separate business, or as partner with another, etc. Anderson v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 811.

2. So held where she borrowed money from bank to be used in partnership business. Anderson v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 811.

3. Contract of partnership made in Mexico and accounting had in Texas. Avocato v. Dell'Ara [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 830. See Conflict of Laws, 5 C. L. 610.

4. See 4 C. L. 910.

5. A verbal contract of partnership for the term of five years is not within the statute of frauds, since the death of one of the partners might work a dissolution at any time. Shropshire v. Adams [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 540, 89 S. W. 448.

6. Larkin v. Martin, 46 Misc. 179, 93 N. Y. S. 198. As regards the statute of frauds an agreement to become partners in dealing in real estate is neither a contract to buy, nor a contract to sell, real estate as between the parties to it. Garth v. Davis, 27 Ky. L. R. 505, 85 S. W. 692.

7. An oral agreement of partnership to deal in real estate is void under Rev. St. 1898, § 2302, providing that no estate or interest in lands shall be created or transferred, except by operation of law or by deed or conveyance in writing. Scheuer v. Cochem [Wis.] 105 N. W. 573.

and in the latter cases part performance may give validity to the contract.[8] Even statutory formalities are not always conditions precedent to the right of the firm to do business.[9]

Stockholders in illegal or defective corporations.[10]—Where parties merely assume a corporate name and merely pretend to be a corporation which is neither de facto nor de jure, the incorporators may be held liable as partners,[11] but where it is sought to hold them thus liable there must be something more than the mere fact that they signed the articles of incorporation.[12] Nor is a partnership created where one party advances money to another with a view to the formation of a corporation to develop the latter's property, but the property is never conveyed to the corporation and the corporation fails, there being no agreement between the two parties as to the sharing of profits and losses.[13]

Evidence.[14]—The burden of proving the existence of a partnership is upon the party alleging it,[15] and as between alleged partners themselves there must be an actual partnership proved, either directly or indirectly, by a preponderance of proof.[16] A partnership may be proved as between the parties and also as to third persons by evidence of the acts, dealings, conduct, admissions, and declarations of the parties themselves as well as by direct proof in different lines.[17] The relation may be proved by parol evidence.[18] Declarations or admissions of a partner are admissible to prove a partnership against him,[19] but, as a general rule, mere declarations of an alleged partner are inadmissible for the purpose of showing a partnership with another.[20] One claiming to be a partner is a competent witness to es-

8. Where under oral agreement of partnership to deal in real estate defendant took title to the real estate, and plaintiff made repairs and received a portion of the rents, held not to constitute such part performance as to give the contract validity. Scheuer v. Cochem [Wis.] 105 N. W. 573. While in Larkin v. Martin, 46 Misc. 179, 93 N. Y. S. 198 the statute of frauds was held inapplicable, still it was stated that if it had been the facts were insufficient to show a part performance.

9. Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, providing for the recording of the names of the members of partnerships. Hanfek v. Held & Co. [Neb.] 106 N. W. 171. Filing of certificate. La Montagne v. Bank of New York Nat. Banking Ass'n [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 33. Pub. Gen. Laws Md. art. 73, § 4, providing for filing of certificate. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Cahn [Md.] 62 A. 819. See post § 8, Limited Partnerships.

10. See 4 C. L. 910.

11. Too few incorporators and legal formalities not complied with. Mitchell v. Jensen [Utah] 81 P. 165.

12. There must be a finding of the facts showing their participation in or authorization of the conduct of the business carried on in the corporate name, or some holding out in respect thereto as principals in the business, or facts from which such matters may be inferred. Mitchell v. Jensen [Utah] 81 P. 165.

13. The party advancing the money is merely entitled to an accounting therefor. Fourchy v. Ellis, 140 F. 149.

14. See 4 C. L. 910.

15. Mitchell v. Jensen [Utah] 81 P. 165. In suit for accounting. Thompson v. Walsh, 140 F. 83. In action against partnership. McDonald Bros. v. Campbell [Minn.] 104 N. W. 760. Defendant pleaded non est factum, and burden was likewise on plaintiff to prove execution of note. Clifton v. Royse Cotton Oil Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 182. Involuntary bankruptcy proceedings against partnership. Jones v. Burnham, Williams & Co. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 986. See post § 6 B, Pleading and Proof of Partnership.

18. Hanfek v. Held & Co. [Neb.] 106 N. W. 171.

19. Admission to representative of mercantile agency. McDonald Bros. v. Campbell [Minn.] 104 N. W. 760. Defendant, when told that plaintiff's attorney held the firm note, said "If you have a firm note, I guess you will have to wait for it, for the reason that we are tied up now. We will have to make an arrangement about paying it later. I don't intend to pay it, and if you don't want to wait you will have to sue to get your money." It was held that this, with defendant's failure to deny that he was a member of the firm, was evidence against him, but not conclusive. Bernstein v. Cahen, 48 Misc. 639, 96 N. Y. S. 209. Where employe managed business at a monthly salary, and a commission on net profits, declaration by employer in casual conversations that he was going to make the employe a partner held insufficient to create a partnership as between the two. Strode v. Gilpin, 187 Mo. 383, 86 S. W. 77.

20. But an admission by one of two alleged partners that the other is liable to the plaintiff is not admissible to prove the partnership as against the other alleged partner, where the latter was not present when the admission was made. Bailey v. Fritz Bros. [Ark.] 88 S. W. 569. Where one party seeks to establish the relation of partnership between himself and another or tablish the partnership.[21] The testimony of a witness who has done business with a firm as to who compose it is admissible.[22] Participation in profits and losses may constitute prima facie evidence of the existence of the relation.[23] Individual notes are irrelevant on the issue of partnership.[24] The appointment of an alleged partner as administrator of the firm does not determine his status as a partner.[25] A statute providing for the recording of a certificate showing the names of partners constituting a firm does not provide an exclusive method of proving the partnership, and a partnership may be proved by any method permissible before the statute was enacted.[26]

Questions of fact.[27]—What constitutes a partnership is a question of law for the court.[28] Whether in fact a partnership exists is a question of fact for the jury.[29]

others, his mere statement that he is or was a partner is inadmissible, without stating the facts upon which such statement is founded. Hubbard v. Mulligan [Colo.] 82 P. 783. A commercial statement of assets and liabilities made by one person and signed in the name of another is not admissible to prove that the latter was a partner. Statement made by husband and signed in name of wife. The husband, however, having testified that his wife was not a partner, the statement signed by him was admissible as affecting the value of his testimony. McDonald Bros. v. Campbell [Minn.] 104 N. W. 760. On an issue as to whether defendant was a member of certain partnership, evidence as to what one of the members of the firm said as to who constituted the firm was incompetent. Rector v. Robins [Ark.] 86 S. W. 667.

21. Suit for accounting. Flynn v. Seale [Cal. App.] 84 P. 263.

24. Rector v. Robins [Ark.] 86 S. W. 667.

25. Does not bar an action against him for conversion of the property on the ground that no partnership in fact existed. Strode v. Gilpin, 187 Mo. 383, 86 S. W. 77.

Finding of existence of partnership agreement is sufficient if it meets the test for pleading a partnership prescribed by Rev. St. 1898, § 4197, which permits a partnership to be pleaded in general terms. Briere v. Searls [Wis.] 105 N. W. 817. See Verdicts and Findings, 4 C. L. 1803.

28. Jones v. Purnell [Del.] 62 A. 149.

29. Jones v. Purnell [Del.] 62 A. 149. Where there was evidence that one of the defendants, who claimed not to be a partner, participated in the profits of the firm and there was testimony explaining this circumstance, but there was also testimony of a contradictory character tending to discredit the explanatory evidence, the question as to whether the defendant was a partner was for the jury. Berry v. Pelmeault, 188 Mass. 413, 74 N. E. 917.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain special verdict that one of the defendants was a member of the defendant partnership. McKibben v. Day [Neb.] 104 N. W. 752, for former report of this case see 98 N. W. 845. See 4 C. L. 916. Where there was evidence tending to show that defendants bought from the estate of G. W. M. a store, and that they changed the name of the store by adding the word "The" before and the word "Store" after the name of the former proprietor, and that they hired a manager, carried on the business, took the profits, and that one of them represented to the people from whom they bought goods and to the commercial agencies that they were partners, this, with other evidence, warranted a finding that the defendants were partners. Gay v. Ray [Mass.] 75 N. E. 138. Where a party orders goods in another's presence and afterwards the two order goods together, and on refusal to sell on account of a balance due from the first party the seller is informed by such party that he will send someone to settle the old account, and the next day the other partner and a third person call on the seller, and the third party is introduced as the financial man of the concern and pays the bill of the first party, and tells the seller to ship the goods ordered and that he himself is worth a good deal of money, there is sufficient evidence to sustain a finding of a partnership between the three so as to bind them all for the goods. Fay v. Walsh [Mass.] 77 N. E. 44. Agreement to participate in both losses and profits held sufficient. Jones v. Purnell [Del.] 62 A. 149. Where a plaintiff, who denies the existence of a partnership with the defendant, is met by several witnesses who testify as to admissions by him of a partnership, and his name does not appear on the weekly pay-roll except in one instance, and he is unable to show any contract with the defendant whereby he was to furnish the material and money which he did furnish for the prosecution of the work, a verdict in his favor is clearly against the weight of the evidence and should be reversed on that ground. Schardt v. Stopper, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 256. Evidence held to show an agreement between plaintiff and his alleged partner for an equal sharing of the net profits and that plaintiff substantially performed the contract on his part. Larkin v. Martin, 46 Misc. 179, 93 N. Y. S. 198. Admissions by a married woman that she was furnishing the capital for a business carried on ostensibly by her husband and a third person, and was responsible for the debts of such firm, made to a representative of a commercial agency, held sufficient to

Partnerships as to third persons.[30]—Although parties may not be in fact partners, they may so conduct themselves towards third persons as to make themselves liable to such person as partners,[31] and in such a case their agreement between themselves is immaterial.[32] One cannot be held a partner by estoppel unless it be shown that the person seeking to so hold him knew of the acts or representations, and relied upon them to his detriment.[33] A partnership in fact existing, it is immaterial that the partner sought to be held falsely told the creditor that he was not a member of the firm.[34] show that the woman was a partner, notwithstanding conflicting evidence to the contrary. McDonald Bros. v. Campbell [Minn.] 104 N. W. 760.

Evidence held insufficient to show partnership in mining venture. Thompson v. Walsh, 140 F. 83. The fact that land purchased by one party was partly paid for by an exchange of land once owned by another, and may have been acquired jointly by both parties, does not show, in the absence of evidence that both parties were interested in the property at the time of the exchange, that the parties were partners as to the land received by one of them in the last purchase. Rogers v. Tompkins [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 161, 87 S. W. 379. In an action against a partnership for breach of a contract of employment, plaintiff's testimony that, when he was employed, a member of the firm introduced him to defendants saying, "These are the two other members of the firm," held insufficient to counterbalance the positive testimony of one of the defendants that another person was a member. Reisman v. Silver, 48 Misc. 399, 95 N. Y. S. 483. Where one stated he wished to purchase a certain opera and that another, to whom he intended to give an interest in the production, would close the deal for him, evidence held insufficient to show that two latter persons were partners, the formal contract being made by the second person alone and the first mentioned party simply advancing him money. Atchison-Ely v. Thomas, 104 App. Div. 368, 93 N. Y. S. 693. Where, in involuntary bankruptcy proceedings, it appeared that one of the alleged partners did not participate in the profits of the firm, and there were no written articles and no express oral agreement was shown, and the alleged partner specifically denied his relation as a partner, which allegation was supported in the main by the correspondence of the firm, the fact that the alleged partner indorsed notes for one of the admitted partners, and at various times guaranteed bills for the firm and otherwise backed it financially in particular transactions, was not sufficient to establish the partnership, although the partner whose notes had been thus indorsed testified that the alleged partner was a partner. There was some evidence of a special partnership but that question was not in issue. The admitted partner also testified that he had introduced the other to various persons as his partner, but these persons were not called as witnesses. Jones v. Burnham, Williams & Co. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 986. Where plaintiff purchased livery with his own money, hired defendant as foreman, the latter not participating in the profits, and the business was afterwards sold and the proceeds appropriated by the plaintiff without objection by the defendant, and were invested by the plaintiff in a live stock ranch, on which defendant was employed as manager, it was held that the defendant was not a partner in either business. Hubbard v. Mulligan [Colo.] 82 P. 783.

30. See 4 C. L. 911.

31. Jones v. Purnell [Del.] 62 A. 149; Reynolds v. Radke, 112 Ill. App. 575. Where it appeared that plaintiff had been selling goods to two brothers separately, but never claimed to hold them both on the goods shipped to one until the transaction sued on occurred, and that even then plaintiff did not rely on a belief that there was a partnership between the brothers but relied on a joint order to which plaintiff's salesman testified, but the salesman was contradicted by both of the brothers, it was held that a finding of the trial court that there was no partnership would not be disturbed. Pritz v. Smith, 97 N. Y. S. 1003. In an action against a sales agent of a partnership to recover the price of goods sold the partnership, billheads made out as payable to the sales agent, and which had sometimes been used in returning goods to plaintiff, held inadmissible to show that defendant was a partner in the buying firm in the absence of evidence that such use was with defendant's knowledge. Ludowieg v. Talcott, 93 N. Y. S. 621. Where defendant's name was painted, with that of another, on the window of the place of business, the two names were jointly printed on advertising matter, license to conduct the business was taken out in defendant's name, defendant was frequently around the store and was introduced as the other man's partner, held to establish a partnership as to plaintiff, a third person. Reynolds v. Radke, 112 Ill. App. 575. Wife held partner with husband where she borrowed money from bank to be used in partnership business. Anderson v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 811.

32. The fact that, by agreement between several persons, goods purchased by one of them are to be paid for by him alone can have no effect on the seller's rights if the circumstances were such as to make them liable to the seller as partners. Tamblyn v. Scott, 111 Mo. App. 46, 85 S. W. 918.

33. So held as regards sales agent of a firm. Ludowieg v. Talcott, 93 N. Y. S. 621. Members of a firm sued on a firm contract held not estopped from setting up a defect of parties in that all the partners were not joined because at the time of entering into the contract plaintiff was told that defendants were the only members. Reisman v. Silver, 48 Misc. 309, 95 N. Y. S. 483.

§ 2. Firm name, trade mark, and good will.[35]—The firm name need not contain the names of the actual partners, as where the name remains the same after the personnel of the firm has changed.[36] While the word "company" ordinarily imports a corporation, in the absence of statutes to the contrary, there is no objection to its use in a partnership name.[37] In the absence of express provisions to the contrary there must be imported into the articles of a partnership, the business of which is dependent upon the personal attributes of the members of the firm and the confidence of its patrons therein, a mutual understanding that with the termination of the partnership the use of the firm name shall come to an end,[38] and one partner may, after the expiration of the partnership, procure an injunction to restrain the unauthorized use by the other partner of the firm name, regardless of the pendency of an action against the former for a judicial determination that he has no interest in the firm name.[39]

As regards public stores and the like, the good will of a firm is deemed attached to the premises on which the business is conducted.[40] Where a sale of partnership property is made under decree of court the general rule is that there is no implied covenant on the part of any partner that he will not solicit trade from the former customers of the firm.[41] The good will of a trade or business of a partnership, and the beneficial interests it has under an agreement by another not to engage in a like business in the same community, may be assigned by a retiring partner to the one remaining in the business.[42] While a firm name may in some cases be deemed a part of the good will of the business, it is not of itself, and necessarily, a part of the good will, and while in trade it may, under some circumstances, be such, it cannot become a part of the good will in cases of business which depend upon the personal attributes of the partners engaged therein, such as professional or banking partnerships.[43]

§ 3. Firm capital and property. In general.[44]—Property contributed to the partnership[45] or acquired with partnership funds or assets is partnership property,[46]

34. It being alleged that defendant was a member of the firm at the time the debt was contracted an instruction that, if before that time defendant told the creditor he was not a member of the firm, he was not liable, held erroneous, inasmuch as the statement would not relieve him from liability unless true. Rector v. Robins [Ark.] 86 S. W. 667.

35. See 4 C. L. 911. See, also, Good Will, 5 C. L. 1590; Trade Marks and Trade Names, 4 C. L. 1689.

36. The fact that a partner who has sold his interest to a third person knows that the old name of the firm is retained and assists in collecting notes given in a resale by the continuing partner, and knows of and insists on the application of the proceeds to the debts of the old firm, held insufficient to justify the court in taking from the jury the question as to whether the first sale had been rescinded. Johnson v. Wynne [Ark.] 89 S. W. 1049.

37. The name "Artope & Whitt Company" imports a corporation, but the business may be owned and operated by a partnership. Whitt v. Blount [Ga.] 53 S. E. 205.

46. Real estate acquired by exchange of partnership property. McKee v. Covalt [Kan.] 81 P. 475. Fixtures purchased with partnership funds, and a storehouse built for the partnership and apparently paid for with partnership funds, constitute partnership property. Taber-Prang Art Co. v. Durant [Mass.] 75 N. E. 221. A factory operated by a partnership which is rebuilt out of the proceeds of an insurance policy taken out in the partnership name, the premiums on although the title be taken in the names of the individual partners[47] or be held in the name of one of the partners alone.[48] Even where most of the purchase price is paid by the partner in whose name the title is taken, the land will still be regarded as partnership property where the evidence shows that it was purchased for the partnership.[49] The intention with which the purchase is made controls.[50] Use by the partnership of one partner's individual property,[51] or of property owned by the partners as tenants in common,[52] does not make it partnership property, nor does the fact that buildings are erected on the lands with partnership funds conclusively show an intention to regard the property as partnership property, the firm being reimbursed out of the rents collected.[53] A transfer or assignment from one partner to another will not change the property covered thereby from partnership to individual property, where such transfer is executed merely to facilitate the partnership business.[54] But where a contract with a partnership stipulates that all moneys due thereunder by the other party shall be made payable to one of the partners, who shall be responsible for all the liabilities incurred thereunder, the interest of such partner in the money accruing under the contract is not merely the interest of a partner, but more in the nature of a personal or individual interest.[55]

The interest acquired in the property depends upon the contract of acquisition.[56]

The right of possession of partnership property is a partnership asset which belongs to each and all the partners, but to none in exclusion of the rest.[57] A partner's right of possession is terminated upon his retirement from the firm[58] and is which were paid by the partnership, constitutes partnership property. Id. A seat in a stock exchange purchased by one partner with money furnished by the other is not a partnership asset, so as to prevent its sale for the debts of the purchaser to other members of the exchange to the exclusion of the partner who furnished the money. When a note is purchased by a firm, but indorsed and delivered to one member, who sues thereon, the proceeds are held by him in trust for the firm. Barber v. Stroub, 111 Mo. App. 57, 85 S. W. 915. A note and mortgage were executed to one member of a partnership for money advanced by the partnership. The note was thereafter assigned by the partner to a third person and then assigned by the latter to the partnership. It was held that by the last transfer the note became partnership property, both in law and in equity, and that the sole legatee and executrix of the partner to whom the note and mortgage were originally made had no title to the mortgage and no right to assign the same, and that no title would pass to her until all the affairs of the partnership had been fully settled. Miller v. Berry [S. D.] 104 N. W. 311.

56. Where a nonassignable contract provides that one of the parties may "associate with himself such other party in the enterprise herein as he desires," and a partnership is formed by him, the contract being contributed to the partnership subject to the conditions named therein, held, on dissolution, the contract was not part of the firm property. Arthur v. Sire, 45 Misc. 257, 92 N. Y. S. 158.

57. Where the lessee of a hotel for a certain term transferred a one-half interest in the hotel saloon to another party, and took such party in as an equal partner in the saloon business, for the term of the lease to the hotel, the right to occupy the saloon premises for the purpose of conducting the business became a partnership asset of which the hotel lessee could not deprive his partner during the term, nor could the trustee in bankruptcy of the lessee oust the lessee's partner. Lamb v. Hall, 147 Cal. 44, 81 P. 288.

58. So held where one of the partners sold his interest in the business. Lamb v. Hall, 147 Cal. 44, 81 P. 288.

not assignable, the purchaser of his interest obtaining no right of access to or possession of the property, but such right remains in the liquidating partner for the purpose of closing up the business, unless he chooses to accept the purchaser as a partner.[59] A partner being adjudged a bankrupt, his co-partner is entitled to the possession of the partnership property pending settlement of the business, subject only to the duty to account for the interest of the bankrupt partner when the business is closed.[60]

As regards the statute of frauds, partnership lands are to be regarded as personalty.[61]

A partnership may transfer its property to a corporation, organized for the purpose of holding such property and continuing the business, in consideration of the transfer of a certain portion of the shares of the corporation to the partners.[62]

How title is held.[63]—All effects of a partnership are held in trust.[64] A deed to a partnership in the firm name conveys at least an equitable title,[65] and even though all the partners are dead, such a deed will at least convey an equitable title for the benefit of the heirs of the deceased partners.[66] While a mortgage to a partnership in the firm name is not enforceable at law, it may be foreclosed in equity.[67]

Partner's interest.[68]—The title to property put in as capital contributed by one partner as against labor contributed by the other remains in the original owner.[69] Where a firm ceases to do business, but there has been no accounting or settlement, neither of the partners has an undivided interest in the firm property which he can dispose of to the detriment of the firm's creditors.[70]

§ 4. Rights and liabilities as to third persons. A. Power of partner to bind firm. In general; contracts.[71]—One partner may bind the firm and all the members thereof to any transaction within the apparent scope of the partnership business,[72] unless the person dealing with the partner had notice of his want of authority.[73] As to whether or not an act is within the apparent scope of the partnership

Where the indorsee of a note executed in the name of a firm knew that the proceeds of such note were to be used by one member of such firm individually, and not for firm purposes, he cannot recover except as against the partner so deriving the benefit from such note. Adams v. Long, 114 Ill. App. 277. In such a case, under a plea denying joint liability, held proper to introduce in evidence a contract made as a part of the note transaction to which plaintiff was a party, which tended to show the use to which the proceeds of such note were to be applied. Id. Where in an action against a firm, on a contract signed in its name, the evidence is generally a question of fact for the jury.[74] Thus it has been held that a partner may bind his firm by borrowing money,[75] may employ agents,[76] purchase[77] and sell[78] goods, rent premises upon which to conduct the firm business,[79] transfer a note and mortgage owned by the firm,[80] receive a deposit of money,[81] or enter an appearance in court.[82] In the absence of express limitations, the extent of a particular power of a partner extends to such acts as are reasonably necessary for the success of the business.[83] A partner has prima facie authority to sell the business.[84] In some states a sale by one partner of the entire partnership property at once, the other partner not having abandoned the business, is void as to the nonassenting partner.[85] Such sale, however, is valid as to the individual interest of the partner making the sale, but the purchaser acquires only this individual interest,[86] and the fact that the purchase price is applied to firm debts does not validate the sale or preclude the nonassenting partner from suing the purchaser for a conversion.[87] Where such a sale is made, ratification by the nonassenting partner can only be made with full showed that it was signed by an unauthorized person, and that plaintiff knew of his lack of authority, held erroneous not to submit the issue whether firm became bound solely by reason of the execution of the contract in its name. Slayden & Co. v. Palmo [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 908.

74. Where, in an action against a partnership formed to exploit a summer resort, there was evidence tending to show that the partnership contemplated more than the mere sale of lots, that it engaged in cleaning up the ground, building a dock, and other things requiring the use of a team, and that the team, the price of which formed the subject of the action, was used by the firm and that it afterwards claimed to own it through purchase from the partner who purchased it from plaintiff, these circumstances, together with evidence tending to show that the purchasing partner had authority to make the purchase, were sufficient to make the question of authority one for the jury. Beckwith v. Mace [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 124, 103 N. W. 559.

Where one of two partners who conduct a hotel absconds with money deposited with him by a guest, the depositor may recover from the other partner, the right to recover in such case being based upon the law of partnership and not upon the laws applicable to innkeepers. Id.

knowledge of all the facts and circumstances.[88] A partner cannot bind his co-partner by a contract relating to matters not properly pertaining to the business.[89] Even as against the other partners, an act of a partner for his own exclusive benefit may be binding on the firm, where there was nothing to show affirmatively that the act in question was not for the benefit of the firm, and nothing which ought to have put a prudent person on his guard as to the true nature of the transaction.[90] A partner's authority may be enlarged by implication[91] or by a general usage acquiesced in by all the members of the firm,[92] but before such a custom or usage will become binding upon a partner who has not expressly authorized it, the circumstances must be such as to show that he not only knew of the course of dealing in particular instances, but contemplated and assented to a regular course of dealing with the public, rather than a departure from the partnership articles in the excepted cases.[93] The members of a nontrading partnership have not the same extent of authority to bind the other members of the firm,[94] but this is because the scope of the business of such firms is not so wide as that of trading partnerships, and where the act is within the scope of the firm's business, and so within the scope of the partner's authority, a member of a nontrading partnership may bind his co-partners just as truly as can the members of a trading partnership.[95] Where a firm assumes the payment of a mortgage, either member of the firm may extend the statute of limitations by making a payment.[96]

Partnership bills and notes.[97]—Where the transaction is within the scope of the firm's business, a partner may bind his firm by executing[98] or indorsing[99] a note or accepting an order.[1] Ratification is equivalent to previous authorization.[2] A

88. Hence, in an action against the purchaser for conversion, a bare offer to show that the plaintiff received a certain sum from his partner, with full knowledge of the sale, was admissible as tending to show a ratification, but an offer to show that the price of the property was applied to the firm debts, without showing that it was with the knowledge and consent of the nonassenting partner, was properly excluded. 98. Note for borrowed money. Brite v. Guy [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1069. Where one of three partners was about to retire, and one of the continuing partners told the other to settle with the retiring partner the best he could, and the partner making the settlement executed a note to the retiring partner to which he signed the name of the continuing partners, the trial court and jury were justified in finding that there was sufficient authority to execute the note. Taylor v. Herron [Kan.] 82 P. 1104.

99. Where nothing appears to show that the indorsement was without the authority of the other partner, and there was nothing to show that the transaction was not within the scope of the firm's business, or to put the other party on his guard as to the true nature of the transaction, the firm was bound, though the indorsement was for the partner's private benefit. Calvert Bank v. Katz & Co. [Md.] 61 A. 411. In an action by a continuing partner against a bank to recover the amount of a note which was charged to the plaintiff's account, after the dissolution of the firm, there was no question of recoupment, and it was error to charge upon that theory. The only question in the case was the right of the bank to charge the note to the plaintiff. Id. In such case the defendant's liability is for the jury. Id.

2. Where one of two partners made and signed a promissory note payable to a third note signed individually by each member of a firm is prima facie the several obligation of each and not a partnership debt,[3] but this presumption may be rebutted by proof aliunde.[4] Partners in a nontrading firm have no implied power to bind one another by commercial paper executed in the name of the firm.[5] To make such paper binding the party seeking to hold other members must show either previous authorization or subsequent ratification.[6] Authority to a member of a nontrading partnership to act as managing partner, with full power and authority to conduct the firm's business, does not empower him to bind the other members with notes signed in the firm name.[7]

Notice to one as notice to all.[8]

Nature of partnership liability.[9]—Partners, even though silent or dormant,[10] are jointly and severally liable for all the firm's debts,[11] but his individual liability does not accrue until the insufficiency of the firm assets is made to appear.[12] The liability of partners is controlled by the laws of the place where the articles of copartnership were executed.[13] The liability of partners on a firm contract is joint.[14] The fact that credit is apparently given one partner will not relieve the partnership from liability where the latter has had the benefit of the transaction.[15] person and indorsed it in the firm name, and the note was then discounted for such third person by a bank in curtailment and renewal of another note similarly indorsed, and after the dissolution of the firm the note was charged to the account of the other partner, who thereafter had a consultation with the president of the bank regarding the charge, and finally, through his attorney, received the note from the bank with other cancelled vouchers and retained for over two years without protesting against the bank's right to make the charge, having in the meantime, moreover, sued the other parties on the note, it was held that he could not, while still retaining the muniment of title to the debt, sue the bank for the amount thus charged to his account. Calvert Bank v. Katz & Co. [Md.] 61 A. 411. Failure of one partner to deny his liability upon a note signed by his co-partner in the firm name may be sufficient to sustain a finding that the act of the co-partner in signing the note was ratified. Questions of evidence: Upon an issue as to the liability of one alleged member of a nontrading firm on a note executed in the firm name, evidence that before the execution of the note two of the other partners asked the plaintiff bank if they could get money, making no mention of the member whose liability was disputed, was proper. Third Nat. Bank v. Fults [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 755. In an action against alleged partners on a note, evidence as to what one defendant told plaintiff's officers as to another defendant being a member of the firm held inadmissible, being hearsay. Id. In an action on a note signed by a nontrading partnership, proof of a custom of other similar partnerships to execute notes signed by all the partners did not justify submission to the jury of the question whether a partner who did not sign the note was liable thereon. 19. Firm held not liable for such an act done by an employe under the direction of one of the partners. Bernheimer Bros. v. Becker [Md.] 62 A. 526.

NOTE. Partnership liability for unauthorized tort of partner: The liability of one partner for the unauthorized torts of the other rests on the principles of agency. Ashforth v. Stanwix, 3 E. & E. 701; Pollock, Digest of Partnership [6th Ed.] 47; Burdick on Partnership, 194 (note 3). Thus he is responsible for such acts of his partner as fall within the "scope of the authority apparently conferred upon him." Lindley on Partnership, 157. Upon the words of the rule the courts are agreed. It is when they come to decide what the rule means in any given case that we find the diversity. A manifestation of a tendency to narrow the "scope of authority" is seen in the recent Maryland case (Bernheimer Bros. v. Becker [Md.] 62 A. 526) above cited. This decision is based on a previous Maryland case, Kirk v. Garrett, 84 Md. 383, which goes mainly on the unsatisfactory ground that the offending partner cannot by his wrong "drag in" the innocent one. That case, however, is clearly distinguishable, since there the unauthorized detention by one of the partners was not for the recovery of firm property but for the purpose of having the plaintiffs give testimony for the conviction of others who were charged with stealing from the firm. The innocent partner was rightly held not liable just as in the case of unauthorized malicious prosecution (Farrell v. Friedlander, 63 Hun [N. Y.] 254, 257; Marks v. Hastings, 101 Ala. 165), or the arrest of a would-be thief to secure conviction (Edwards v. London N. W. R. Co., L. R. 5 C. P. 445; Turnpike Co. v. Green, 85 Md. 161). In these cases the innocent partner is not held since the act cannot be said to have been in and for the firm business. But where ordinary legal proceedings have been instituted by one partner without the other's knowledge for the recovery of firm property, in the course of which an attachment is levied on the goods of a stranger to the action, the firm is liable in tort (Kuhn v. Weil, 73 Mo. 213), even though the litigating partner knows that they are the wrong goods (Harvey v. Adams, 32 Mich. 472). It has been suggested that there is implied authority to protect the principal's interests by causing the arrest of a person who is believed to be infringing them, but not to seek to punish after the attempt has ceased. Huffcut on Agency, 309; Allen v. London & S. W. R. Co., L. R. 6 Q. B. 65.

The favorite reason for decisions similar to that in the principal case is that no authority to do a thing which the principal could not lawfully do can be presumed. Mali v. Lord, 39 N. Y. 381; Kirk v. Garrett, 84 Md. 383; Petrie v. Lamont, Car. & Marsh. 93. The case of Mali v. Lord was an action against the members of a firm for the act of their superintendent, who had attempted to recover firm property by the means used in the principal case, except that he called in an officer of the law to aid him. The extreme of this doctrine, which has been severely criticized (Huffcut on Agency, 309; Burdick on Partnership, 197), appears where one partner refused to return collateral taken by him as security for a usurious loan made by him in the partnership business, and the innocent partner is not held in conversion (Graham v. Meyer, 4 Blatch. [N. Y.] 129). This case however is to be distinguished from the case where an agent in making the loan extorts a commission from the borrower which raises the cost of the loan to usury where the principal is not held because the act is plainly for the agent's own benefit. 2 Columbia Law the other partners will not be liable for such an arrest unless they ratify the acts of their co-partner.[20] Where a complaint is against the individual members of a firm, an objection that the allegations charge the firm with the tort is unfounded.[21]

(§ 4) B. Commencement and termination of liability. Incoming partner or firm.[22]—Unless expressly assumed, an incoming partner is not liable for the debts of the old firm.[23] A partnership on taking over the business of another firm may, by agreement, assume the debts and liabilities of the old firm,[24] and "liabilities" as here used includes tort liabilities.[25] One assuming the liabilities of a partnership is not liable to one of the partners for breach of a contract with him, rendered unavoidable by reason of the performance of partnership contracts.[26]

Notice of dissolution and rights of third parties dealing with firm after apparent dissolution.[27]—Except where dissolution is caused by operation of law,[28] notice of dissolution or retirement is necessary in order to terminate liability for future acts of the other partners,[29] and no notice being given, the fact that the retiring partner relied on the continuing partner to give notice of dissolution will not relieve him from liability.[30] As to former dealers, actual notice or knowledge of facts

Review 256. The English courts have decided that when railroad companies have by statute the right to arrest passengers for defrauding them of fares, they are liable for the mistakes of their conductors in such cases. Goff v. G. N. R. Co., 3 E. & E. 672; Moore v. Met. R. Co., L. R. 8 Q. B. 36. In the absence of this statute the reverse is true. Poulton v. London & S. W. R. Co., L. R. 2 Q. B. 534. It is submitted that this position is untenable since the servant has the duty of protecting the interest of the company, and his decision as to what means should be used in any given case should bind the company. To say that in no case where the principal would not have had the right to do the act can he be held, is to say that he is never liable for the unauthorized tort of his agent. It cannot be said that the principal would have the right to violate the revenue laws (Stockwell v. U. S., 13 Wall. [U. S.] 531, 20 Law. Ed. 491; Rex v. Strannyforth, Bunb. 97), or to commit forgery (Boardman v. Gore, 15 Mass. 331), or to publish a criminal libel (Rex v. Walter, 3 Espin. 21), or to obstruct omnibuses (Limpus v. London Gen. Omnibus Co., 1 H. & C. 526), or negligently to drive a coach so as to injure someone (Moreton v. Hardern, 4 B. & C. 223), or to kick a boy stealing a ride from a swiftly moving train (Rounds v. D. L. & W. R. Co., 64 N. Y. 129); yet on all these cases the innocent partner would be held (Moreton v. Hardern, 4 B. & C. 223). The principal case seems unsound, the true rule being that where an agent, and therefore a partner, is under a duty to act in the protection of the interests of the principal or firm, his acts done in the performance of that duty, for the benefit of the principal or firm, shall render the latter liable. The new firm being thus under obligation to pay the debts of the old to the extent of what was realized from the latter's assets, a payment of a debt due by the old firm by one of the partners in the new was not a misappropriation of the assets of the new firm. sufficient to put him on inquiry is necessary.[31] No particular kind of notice is essential,[32] and it is not necessary that the parties in interest should be distinctly apprised and know at the time that what is claimed to be notice was intended as such notice,[33] the question of notice being often one of fact for the jury.[34] The taking of an order for the sale of goods will constitute one a former dealer.[35] Failure of a seller to retake possession of goods sold the firm by an exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu, after receiving notice of dissolution, does not bar recovery from the retiring partner.[36] As to persons who have had no dealings with the firm prior to its dissolution, fair notice in any public and notorious manner is sufficient,[37] but, where the change of name does not convey information of the incorporation, mere incorporation of the partnership is insufficient.[38] A retiring partner is not liable to one dealing with the partnership for the first time after his retirement, where such person does not know of nor rely on such retiring partner's former connection with the firm.[39]

Novation.[40]—By agreement between all the parties a firm creditor can accept an incoming partner[41] or a new firm[42] as his debtor and thereby release all other parties, and if he so accepts an incoming partner as his debtor, he has no right to compel an accounting by the new firm.[43] In the absence of consent an agreement by one partner to assume the firm debts has no effect on the rights of the creditor,[44] and an acceptance of part payment does not constitute such consent or an estoppel.[45]

Robertson Lumber Co. v. Anderson [Minn.] 105 N. W. 972. Even after dissolution the power of a partner to bind the firm remains in full force as to parties with whom the firm has been dealing, until notice of the dissolution has been given, although, as between the partners themselves, the dissolution is a revocation of the authority of each to bind the others. Milleman v. Kavanaugh [Pa.] 62 A. 907.

42. Evidence held insufficient to justify the court in taking from the jury the question as to whether the sale by the retiring partner had been rescinded, thus reviving such partner's liability to an indorser of the firm's paper who had released him and accepted the new firm as debtor. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Cahn [Md.] 62 A. 819.

45. Acceptance of part payment by assignee of firm held not to bar firm creditor from recovering balance from a retiring

A retiring partner, the purchaser of whose interest has assumed the debts of the firm, occupies the relation of a surety with respect to such funds,[46] and notice being given to a firm creditor, he must look primarily to the continuing partner, and the retiring partner cannot be proceeded against until the remedy against the continuing partner has been exhausted.[47] This rule does not modify the original contract with the creditor and is based upon the fact that the continuing partner has come into the sole possession of the assets, and not upon his agreement with his partner to assume the debts.[48] The debts becoming due and remaining unpaid, the retiring partner may maintain a suit to compel his principal to pay them.[49] A novation cannot be rescinded without the consent of the retiring partner.[50]

(§ 4) C. Application of assets to liabilities. Firm debts and assets.[51]—There is an equity between partners giving them the right to compel application of firm assets to the payment of its debts.[52] This right may be preserved by an outgoing partner for his protection in extinguishment of partnership liabilities, and, when so preserved, it will inure to the benefit of creditors who may claim through such partner's equity,[53] but being expressly relinquished, no right remains in him to which the creditors can be subrogated.[54] A partnership has the same right of disposition of the partnership assets that individuals enjoy in the law,[55] and the partners may, during the existence of the partnership, provided they act in good faith,[56] convert joint or partnership property into separate property, or separate into joint, and the property will on dissolution be held to possess that character which is thus impressed upon it.[57] It follows that partnership creditors have no other claim or lien than creditors generally have on a debtor's property,[58] and, until equity obtains jurisdiction of a partnership for the purpose of winding up its business, the right to insist that partnership property shall be applied primarily to the discharge of partnership debts is one belonging solely to the several partners themselves, and is not available to the creditors of the firm,[59] and by the weight of authority this is true, though the firm or partner be insolvent.[60] A partner has no right to fraudulently use or waste firm assets.[61] As to the other partners a transfer of partnership

50. Fact that retiring partner urges collection of notes received by continuing partner in name of old firm in resale of entire business, and consents to the application of the proceeds to the debts of the whole firm, held not sufficient to take from the jury the question as to whether the retiring partner had ratified a rescission by the continuing partner of the former's sale of his interest to a third person. property by a partner in payment of an individual debt to one having notice of the character of the property is voidable merely,[62] but if the transfer be to an innocent party, he takes good title and is not liable to the other partners,[63] and in the former case, the purchaser cannot set up an estoppel against the other partner on the ground that he did not use due diligence in discovering his partner's fraud,[64] but an estoppel does arise if the other partners assented to the transaction with full knowledge of the facts.[65] A partner so applying firm property, the fact that the creditor is also a firm creditor does not render such application a payment of the firm debt until disaffirmance by one of the other partners.[66] It follows that a partner cannot, without the consent of his co-partners, set off firm credits against individual debts.[67] Partnership property being, by consent of the partners, divided among themselves, one partner may apply the property so received by him in payment of an individual indebtedness without the consent of the other partners.[68] What is above stated constitutes one of several exceptions to the general rule that firm assets must be applied to the discharge of firm debts in preference to the claims of partners or of their individual creditors,[69] and vice versa,[70] the surplus of either fund being subject to the rights of the other creditors,[71] each partner being personally liable for the entire amount of all partnership obligations.[72] The general rule stated does not apply when the partnership is a silent one and the business is conducted in the individual name of one of the partners.[73] A creditor of an individual who becomes such in reliance on certain assets belonging to the debtor, is, as to such assets, entitled to a

69. Partnership assets being administered in probate court. Ault v. Bradley [Mo.] 90 S. W. 775. In case of insolvency of a firm the partnership property must first be applied to the payment of the firm debts before it can be applied to the individual debts of the partners. The rule is the same even where the partners are both liable for the personal debt, as where one partner endorses for the other. In re Hallock, 47 Misc. 571, 96 N. Y. S. 105.

70. Creditors of individual partners have the exclusive right to have their debts first satisfied out of the property of individual partners. Ault v. Bradley [Mo.] 90 S. W. 775. The personal assets of a partner are first applicable to his personal debts, then the surplus will be applied to the firm debts. In bankruptcy proceedings against a partnership, the court may order the personal property of one of the partners to be brought into court for the purpose of ascertaining this surplus and applying it to the firm debts, although the partner has not been adjudged a bankrupt. preference over partnership creditors of a firm subsequently formed by such debtor, and to which such property is contributed as capital.[74] So long as the partnership is solvent the partners may dispose of their individual property as they see fit,[75] and firm creditors endeavoring to set aside such conveyances as fraudulent must not only show fraud but the insolvency of the firm.[76]

§ 5. Rights of partners inter se. Duty to observe good faith.[77]—The delicate relation which partners sustain one to the other, the very nature of the relation, makes it necessary that each should rely upon the other rendering him his full share of whatever is made out of the partnership business.[78] Each partner is a trustee and also a cestui que trust, a trustee so far as his duties bind him, and a cestui que trust so far as the duties rest on the rest of the partners.[79] Each must therefore observe good faith in all dealings with firm and co-partner,[80] and must refrain from all concealment in regard to the transaction of the firm's business.[81] Failing to so do and deriving benefit therefrom, he will be treated in equity as a trustee for the firm.[82] A partner cannot, by a secret agreement with a third person, derive any benefit from a contract between such person and the firm.[83] Where one partner has

Where a partner made an agreement with firm creditors, without the knowledge of the other partner, whereby a mortgage on the business was foreclosed and the property and business were purchased by the creditors, and the business was then continued with an understanding that when the creditors were paid the business and property should be turned over to the partner with whom this secret agreement was made, and thereafter a corporation was formed, with the members of the new partnership as stockholders, the other partner in the old firm being thereafter excluded from the business, such other partner, after sleeping on his rights for five years, was not entitled to have the sales set aside or to any relief, except to have the agreement made with the creditors treated as having been made for the benefit of the firm because of the duty of the partner who made the agreement to act for the benefit of the firm. Whatever actual interest this partner had in the corporation was held to be for the benefit of himself and his former partner, who by paying the creditors their claims might have an assignment from them of their stock, which he would hold subject to an accounting between himself and the partner who made the agreement. Power of majority.[86]—In a mining partnership those having a majority interest may control its management in all things necessary for its proper administration.[87]

Firm accounts.[88]—A partner must keep an accurate and full account of funds drawn by him from the firm, and such account must show the disposition of the money.[89]

§ 6. Actions. A. By firm or partner.[90]—At common law a partnership cannot bring suit in its firm name,[91] and statutes authorizing suits against a partnership in the firm name do not alter the rule,[92] nor can an appeal be maintained in the firm name.[93] A summons which contains the name of a partnership as plaintiff, without mentioning the individual names of the partners, is not a nullity but is merely irregular and may be cured by amendment,[94] and the action should not be dismissed without giving the plaintiff a chance to so amend.[95] In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, one partner cannot maintain an action upon a firm claim,[96] though a silent partner need not be joined as plaintiff.[97] But one partner can sue to redress an individual wrong committed on him by the other partner without joining such partner.[98] A co-partnership suing in the federal courts, the citizenship of the parties composing it must be alleged and must be such as to confer jurisdiction, the names of the partners need not, however, be alleged.[99] Under the common law the defendant may challenge the averment of the citizenship of the members of the association by plea in abatement, unless waived by pleading to the merits.[1]

After dissolution a partnership may still maintain an action, provided the firm affairs have not been entirely settled.[2]

A verdict in favor of a partnership should show that it is in favor of the firm and not the individual members as such.[3] A judgment in favor of a partnership in the firm name is irregular but not void.[4]

(§ 6) B. Against firm or partner. Pleading and proof of partnership.[5]—In the absence of some claim against him a former partner is not a necessary party to an action against the firm.[6] At common law, in order to render a judgment against the firm, all the partners must be served,[7] but failure to so do does not prevent judgment against the partners served.[8] Nonjoinder of a partner may be reached by a motion to dismiss, and is waived by pleading to the merits.[9] By statute in many states a judgment may be rendered against a partnership where process is served on one of the partners,[10] and a judgment so rendered will bind the partnership property as well as the separate property of the individual partner served with process.[11] A voluntary appearance without service by a member of a firm, or by all its members by attorney, will have a like effect.[12] Where a suit is brought against a firm, no recovery can be had against one partner on an individual liability,[13] though by statute in some states judgment may be rendered against a partner in a suit against the firm.[14] Where suit is brought against a partnership and service is had only on one of the partners, a dismissal as to the other partners and taking judgment against the partner served operates to dismiss the suit as against the firm, leaving the partner served to answer individually for the debt;[15] but in those states where partners are jointly and severally liable for firm debts, the taking of such judgment does not relieve the other partner from liability,[16] but it does constitute an election by plaintiff not to proceed against the defendants as partners, and an abandonment of his right to look primarily to the assets of the partnership for the payment of his debt,[17] and is a bar to any suit on the same demand against the partnership.[18] In Colorado the only judgment that can be rendered against a co-partnership on a firm debt or obligation is one against the co-partnership jointly, and the partners summoned or appearing, whether the summons is served upon all or one or more of the defendants,[19] and a judgment rendered against a co-partnership upon a firm debt or obligation, where service is had upon less than all the partners, is a merger of the debt or obligation in the judgment and a bar to a subsequent action against the partners not served.[20]

No action can be maintained against a firm upon a several and individual contract of the partners,[21] but where partners are improperly joined in an action upon a several and individual liability, the complaint may be dismissed as to any found not liable.[22] In an action for negligence brought against defendants "as individuals or as partners," defendant cannot be compelled to elect whether he will proceed against defendants as individuals or as partners,[23] and in such a case plaintiff may inquire into the business relations of defendants between themselves.[24]

The complaint in an action against a partnership should show with reasonable certainty that the defendants are sued in their capacity as partners[25] and should allege the time in which it is claimed that the defendants were partners.[26] A plea in an action against the members of a partnership in their individual capacity, which sets up as a defense a contract alleged to have been made with them as part-

Under Iowa Code, § 3560, where the declaration in an action against a partnership is amended so as to set up an individual liability on the part of one of the members who was served with notice of the action as a member of the partnership, but no notice of the amendment was served on such partner, an individual judgment could not be rendered against him. Id. Under the Vermont Statute, providing that judgment may be taken against such defendants as are defaulted and such as are found liable, notwithstanding that all the defendants are found not jointly liable, a judgment against one member of a partnership, the other member not being served, cannot be rendered upon a showing of joint liability. The defect, however, is waived by the partner served by pleading to the merits. Armour & Co. v. Ward & Co. [Vt.] 61 A. 765.

25. Where the complaint in its caption designates the members of the defendant partnership by their individual names, and the complaint itself alleges that these persons are partners, a subsequent reference to the partners as "defendants" is not subject to an objection for ambiguity, the word "defendants" in the connection in which it is used being understood as referring to defendants in their relation as partners. Butler v. Delafield [Cal. App.] 82 P. 260.

26. The Wisconsin statute (Rev. St. 1898, § 4197) under which an irrebutable presumption arises whenever the pleadings allege that "the plaintiff or defendant or third persons were partners at any particular time," unless such allegation is denied in the manner provided by the statute, does not require the time to be specified by days and dates as to all the times at which the ners, should show that it was made with them in this capacity.[27] A demurrer filed in the name of a firm is the demurrer of all the defendants composing the partnership in their partnership capacity.[28]

Where the existence of the partnership is not denied, there is no necessity of proof on the subject,[29] but where the answer denies the existence of the partnership, it must be proved,[30] and the burden of proof is upon the party alleging its existence.[31]

A partnership may be proved by evidence of the acts, dealings, conduct, admissions, and declarations of the parties themselves, or by direct proof in different lines.[32] General rules as to the admissibility of evidence apply.[33] The sufficiency of the evidence is for the jury.[34]

Abatement.[35]—Failure to serve one of the members of the defendant partnership is ground for abatement.[36] Upon the death of one partner after a judgment against the firm in an action for tort, an appeal may be prosecuted against the survivor.[37]

Judgment and subsequent proceedings.[38]—Judgment against a partnership in the firm name is irregular but not void.[39] Under some circumstances judgment may be rendered against the individual defendants or one or more of them, though the action is against them in their relation as partners.[40]

(§ 6) C. Between partners.[41]—Until there has been a settlement or an accounting one partner cannot sue another at law upon any claim arising out of their relation as partners or connected therewith,[42] and this rule may extend to one who is not, strictly speaking, a partner.[43] The suit being upon a common-law demand the same rule applies, though the ultimate relief under the statute is to be administered by a court of equity.[44] There need be no express promise to pay, for one is implied in closing the books and stating a balance,[45] nor can a purchaser of the interest of one of two or more co-partners sue at law for his share.[46] But where the partnership affairs have been adjusted and nothing remains to be done but to pay over an amount due from one to the other, to be ascertained by a reckoning as to one single item or even as to several items, there being no complications of any kind, an action at law may be maintained.[47] So also where the partnership was for a single venture or special purpose which has been closed, and nothing remains but to pay over the claimant's share of the proceeds.[48] Where one sells his interest in the partnership to another partner, he may maintain an action for the price.[49] A partner can sue his co-partner at law upon a claim not arising out of a partnership transaction.[50]

§ 7. Dissolution, settlement, and accounting. A. Dissolution by operation of law.[52]—Unless the articles of co-partnership[53] or the deceased partner's will,[54] provide for the continuance of the partnership, the death of a partner works an immediate dissolution of the firm.[55] It seems that a partnership between attorneys at law is dissolved by operation of law upon the suspension of one of the partners from practice.[56]

(§ 7) B. Dissolution by act of partners.[57]—A partnership may be dissolved by mutual agreement,[58] or may expire by virtue of a time limitation in the articles of agreement.[59] No term being stipulated the relation can only be terminated by consent or by a suit in equity for a dissolution and an accounting.[60] As a general rule, where one partner transfers his entire interest in the firm to his co-partner, a dissolution results ipso facto,[61] but this rule does not apply to a mining partnership.[62] A partner may sell his interest in a firm, possessing real estate, by an oral contract.[63] A partnership being terminable at will, it may be dissolved by one of the partners without regard to the question of good faith or reasonableness of time or circumstance,[64] and the fact that the firm has contracts for a definite period does not by implication prevent a termination of the relation before such period.[65] Where a partnership is for a fixed term or for the accomplishment of certain definite objects the American authorities are by no means uniform as to whether one partner can affect a dissolution at will.[66] Abandonment may be a ground upon which one's co-partners may elect to consider the partnership as dissolved.[67]

(§ 7) C. Dissolution by order of court.[68]—Exclusion from participation in the business of the firm is ground for dissolution by a court of equity,[69] but mere lack of harmony among the members of a mining partnership is not sufficient ground for dissolving the firm by a decree in equity for the sale of the firm property.[70] No term being stipulated the relation can only be terminated by consent or by a suit in equity for a dissolution and an accounting.[71] General rules as to pleadings

(§ 7D) 2. As to surviving partner and estate of deceased partner.[84]—A surviving partner takes the title to the partnership property[85] and has the exclusive control and management of partnership affairs and litigation,[86] and where the partnership property remains in the hands of the personal representative of the deceased partner, he must account to the surviving partner for the rents and profits.[87] As to the deceased partner's representative, a surviving partner holds the assets of the firm as the trustee of an express trust,[88] and consequently is absolutely prohibited from acquiring any benefit from the deceased partner's interest at the expense of his representative,[89] and the burden is upon him to show by satisfactory evidence that any transaction he has with the partnership estate is in all respects fair and free from any fraud or deception.[90] It is proper and commendable that a surviving partner should apply to a competent court for administration to appoint appraisers of the partnership estate.[91] A surviving partner is not liable to the estate of his deceased partner for interest on money deposited in a bank in the firm name, where he has not had the use thereof and has derived no benefit therefrom.[92] Where a partner dies before action brought against the partnership, the estate of the deceased partner can only be made a party to the action by alleging the insolvency of the surviving partner,[93] and can only be made a party at its own request upon showing that the surviving partner is false to his trust, misrepresents the firm, or is treacherous to the interests of the decedent.[94] As a general rule a surviving partner is not entitled to compensation for winding up the business.[95] Still this rule does not apply in all cases but only where the business is immediately put an end to and no further work is done except to close the account between the partners, pay the debts, and distribute the surplus.[96] Where, therefore, one partner dies before the completion of a partnership contract, the surviving partner is entitled to compensation for that part of the work which it would have been the deceased partner's duty to contribute,[97] especially where the completion of the contract by the surviving partner is consented to by the personal representative and the sole legatee of the deceased partner.[98] He is also entitled to reimbursements for necessary expenses incurred[99] and to interest on advances made to deceased partner during latter's lifetime.[1] All parties to an agreement are necessary parties to an action to set aside the agreement.[2]

90. Surviving partner purchased deceased partner's interest. Bauchle v. Smylie, 104 App. Div. 513, 93 N. Y. S. 709. The burden is on the defendant to so show by clear and satisfactory proof. Consaul v. Cummings, 24 App. D. C. 36.

A sole surviving partner dying during the winding up of the affairs of the partnership, his personal representative takes the partnership assets as a trustee and not as part of the personal estate of such partner,[3] and a personal representative of another partner may maintain a suit for an accounting against him without having presented a demand.[4]

Under the statutes of a few states provision is made for the administration of partnership estates. In such states claims should be certified to the probate court for allowance and classification against the partnership estate.[5] In Missouri, where there is a deficiency of assets, a surviving partner should not pay claims against the partnership without requiring them to be exhibited to the proper court for allowance.[6] The administrator of a deceased partner is a proper relator in a suit on the bond of the surviving partner as the administrator of the partnership affairs.[7] An averment in such a suit that the defendant has failed and refused to discharge his duties according to law is sufficient as against a general demurrer.[8] A final settlement between an administrator de bonis non and the partnership administrator, who was also the surviving partner, has the effect of a final judgment, and until impeached in equity is a complete defense in an action by a partnership creditor on the administrator's bond.[9] Where a surviving partner makes a final report and the same is approved by the proper court, such approval is an adjudication of the trust and a bar to any action on the bond of the surviving partner as administrator of the partnership affairs. In such case such an action can only bo maintained by setting aside such final order for fraud or otherwise.[10]

97. Railroad construction contract. The fact that the surviving partner offered to take a certain sum for his services as walking boss, which offer was not accepted by the personal representative, did not preclude the surviving partner from claiming compensation for completing the contract. 99. Where a partnership was formed for the prosecution of certain claims against the United States, and provision was alone made for expenses in prosecuting allowed claims, held expenses incurred by a surviving partner in the prosecution of disallowed claims should be allowed him. 9. State v. Shacklett [Mo. App.] 91 S. W. 956. Where the administrator de bonis non of a deceased partner recovered judgment on the bond of the partnership administrator, who was the surviving partner, and it appeared that a charge that the surviving partner paid claims in full when they ought to have been paid pro rata was presented for adjudication, such charge must be taken as embraced and covered by the judgment rendered on exceptions to the surviving partner's report as administrator, and oral testimony to the contrary is inadmissible. Id.

The estate of a deceased partner is liable for firm debts,[11] but not for money loaned to another partner individually.[12] Whether the money was loaned to the partnership or to a partner individually is generally a question of fact.[13] The estate of a deceased partner paying a partnership debt is entitled to be subrogated to the creditor's rights against the partnership.[14] Stale claims by a surviving partner against a deceased partner's estate are looked upon with disfavor and every intendment will be made against them.[15] A surviving partner must proceed by bill in equity for a settlement of partnership accounts before his claim against the estate of the deceased partner can be passed upon in the orphans' court.[16] A surviving partner is not entitled to enjoin a sale of partnership realty by the executor of a deceased partner who held the title thereto, it appearing that the price offered is the fair market value of the property.[17]

(§ 7D) 3. As to continuing or liquidating partner. Retiring partner.[18]—Where the winding up of the business and sale of firm property is committed to one partner, he occupies a fiduciary position and will not be allowed to make secret profits.[19] A continuing partner cannot enforce a contract, part of whose consideration is personal trust and confidence in the retiring partner.[20] The continuing partner may assume all the firm liabilities,[21] and for a failure to perform his obligation thus incurred he will be liable to the retiring partner[22] and also to the firm creditors,[23] and when sued by the retiring partner for failure to pay these

21. An agreement to "release, remise and forever discharge" the retiring partner, though not aptly expressed, will be construed to mean an agreement to assume the liabilities of the old firm. Alexander v. McPeck [Mass.] 75 N. E. 88. Such an agreement extends to a judgment for money advanced to the partnership to be invested in stocks on a margin, the statute, St. 1890, p. 479, c. 437; St. 1901, p. 391, c. 459; Rev. Laws c. 99, § 4, giving the right of recovery where money is thus advanced. The assumption of the liability by the new partnership and the new partner was not in contravention but in furtherance of the statute. Id. Where retiring partner sued the continuing partner to recover back certain money alleged to have been paid to the continuing partner upon the false representations of the latter that the funds of a certain lodge that had been lent to the firm by the continuing partner had not been paid back, the plaintiff was allowed to amend his complaint to the effect that the money had been lent to the firm by the defendant individually, and that hence he was precluded from asserting his right to contribution from the plaintiff by the settlement. It was proper to allow defendant to amend his answer so as to show that the settlement had excluded liability for lodge money. Devereux v. Peterson [Wis.] 106 N. W. 249.

22. The assumption of the liability is a contract to pay it forthwith, and hence the retiring partner's right of action accrues, at the latest, when judgment for a debt of the old firm is rendered against him, though he has not paid it. Alexander v. McPeck [Mass.] 75 N. E. 88. It was not necessary in such case for the retiring partner, upon being sued for a debt of the old firm, to vouch in a party who has taken his place in the partnership and has agreed to assume, with the continuing partner, all his liabilities incurred as a member of the old firm, where, at the time the agreement assuming such liabilities was signed the new partner had notice that the suit in question was pending. The new partner cannot, in such case, complain that the retiring partner did not continue to defend the suit. Id.

23. Where a member of a firm of brokers retires, the remaining partners are liable to their principal without joining the retired debts, cannot claim an exemption out of the firm assets as against this equity.[24] Where a partner is illegally induced to assign his interest and the assignee enters the firm, the former partners, if innocent, are entitled to full protection in their dealings and transactions with the new partner until notice of the disaffirmance of the transfer.[25] Such former partners are necessary parties to a suit to have such assignment set aside,[26] and the assignee dying pending such suit, the action should be revived against his personal representatives.[27] In such an action an examination into the accounts of the firm at the date of the assignment is immaterial.[28] A retiring partner is secondarily liable for the firm debts.[29]

(§ 7) E. Accounting. Right to.[30]—A partner's right to an accounting is not dependent upon who is entitled to the balance,[31] and where the firm has already been dissolved by mutual agreement, the right of one of the partners to an accounting is not affected by the causes of the dissolution.[32] But a partner who has conveyed his entire interest in the firm to his co-partner in consideration that the latter shall assume the firm debts as well as an individual debt is not, in the absence of any allegations of fraud, entitled to an accounting.[33] A partner who has been excluded from participation in the business,[34] or who has paid firm obligations, his co-partners refusing to contribute, may maintain a suit for an accounting,[35] but a partner is not entitled to an accounting where there has been an account stated between the partners.[36] One may become estopped to deny that a settlement has been made,[37] and failure to object at the time an account is accepted by other partners is equivalent to an acceptance.[38] A purchaser of a partner's interest in a firm is, upon proper occasion, entitled to an accounting.[39] The individual creditors of one of the partners are not entitled to an accounting.[40] Where partners agree that profits shall be divided, not to themselves as individuals but to groups, it is no defense to an action for profits that there has not been a proper division in defend-partner for all matters which they assume to account to the principal as members of the firm which continues the business, and for all frauds and errors which enter into the accounts after such retirement. Bay State Gas Co. v. Lawson, 188 Mass. 502, 74 N. E. 921.

Where the plaintiff has sued for the settlement of partnership affairs and the defendant has pleaded settlement in bar, the plaintiff is estopped from thereafter asserting that there has been a settlement, and the defendant is estopped from denying a settlement, and the two estoppels thus destroy each other and set the matter at large. Chretien v. Giron [La.] 38 So. 881.

38. Where, after an account between partners had been completed by an expert employed by all the partners, a copy was handed to the partners and thereafter various meetings of the partners were held, at all of which the account was under consideration, and the account was finally accepted as correct by the expert and all the parties interested except one of the partners, the latter's failure to object to the account was equivalent to an acceptance. Leinbach v. Wolle [Pa.] 61 A. 248.

39. But where one partner sells the whole partnership property, the other partner not having abandoned the business, under the Mont. Civ. Code, § 3232, the sale is void as to the interest of the nonassenting partner, and valid as to the partner who makes the sale only as to his individual interest, and does not give the purchaser a right to an accounting so as to preclude a suit against him by the nonassenting partner for conversion. Doll v. Hennessy Mercantile Co. [Mont.] 81 P. 625.

40. The individual creditors of a deceased partner are not entitled to an accounting from a new partnership formed between the surviving partner and the widow, by reason of the surviving partner having promised the creditors to give them a statement of the settlement between him and the widow as administratrix, and because the widow promised to pay them out of her share of the profits of the new business. Milleman v. Kavanaugh [Pa.] 62 A. 907.

ant group.[41] Laches will bar the right.[42] A suit for an accounting may be prosecuted against the estate of a deceased partner, though claims against the personal estate of such partner are barred for nonpresentment.[43] A cause of action for an accounting against a surviving partner does not accrue until the appointment and qualification of the deceased partner's personal representatives,[44] and in Wisconsin no personal representative being appointed, the cause of action is not barred until 20 years after the dissolution of the firm.[45]

Jurisdiction.[46]—Equity has jurisdiction to decree an accounting, or a contribution, or both, as between partners or their representatives.[47] An accounting means that there is to be a complete winding up of the partnership,[48] and although the old rule that a court of equity has no jurisdiction of an accounting save with a view to the final determination of all questions and cross-claims between them has been considerably relaxed, it is still applicable where there is no reason for departing from it,[49] but in a proper case a court of equity will grant an accounting, although there is no prayer for dissolution[50] and the partnership affairs are in such shape that a final settlement cannot be had.[51] Where there has been a substantial liquidation an accounting may be had, although doubtful or discredited assets remain unprovided for.[52] Protection against firm obligations not already provided for may be afforded in the final decree, and the possibility of such a contingency will not prevent the decree for the accounting where it would otherwise be proper.[53] The jurisdiction of equity in the settlement of partnership affairs would in the absence of statute, extend to a case where one of the partners is dead,[54] but in some states proceedings in the settlement of partnerships by the surviving partner are governed entirely by statute.[55]

Parties.[56]—All partners or their representatives,[57] and all other interested parties[58] should be joined, unless it appears that their presence is unnecessary.

54. Harrah v. State [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 443. The fact that deceased partners' estates are in process of administration does not deprive circuit court of jurisdiction of an accounting against the surviving partner. Stehn v. Hayssen, 124 Wis. 583, 102 N. W. 1074.

Procedure, pleading and proof.[59]—The bill must show that the plaintiff has such an interest in the partnership as entitles him to an accounting,[60] and that grounds for an accounting exist.[61] A separate and distinct prayer for an accounting is not necessary.[62] General rules as to multifariousness or misjoinder of causes of action apply.[63] Neither a prior settlement[64] nor the existence of unaccounted for profits[65] will be presumed. Where the answer sets up an account stated, a preliminary question is thus raised which must be determined prior to any consideration of the merits.[66]

Before an alleged partner can have an accounting he must prove that he was a member of the partnership.[67] A partner cannot in a suit for dissolution and accounting introduce parol testimony to show that his partner who signed the written articles of partnership was in reality the agent of third parties, and thus hold such third parties to an accounting.[68] Where the partnership has already been dissolved by mutual consent, the cause of the dissolution is immaterial.[69] Where the action is upon an account and also for an accounting, failure of the plaintiff to furnish upon demand an itemized statement of his account will not preclude him from testifying thereto upon the accounting.[70] In the settlement of partnership accounts

58. Where a bill is brought for an accounting of partnership transactions and to procure the declaration of a lien in complainant's favor upon the interest of certain partners in the assets of a new firm, a member of a new firm against whom no liability is charged is a necessary party, in order that his interest in the assets of the new firm may be segregated from those of the partners against whom relief is sought. 60. In a suit by a partner against two surviving partners for an accounting and for judgment for his proportionate share of the net profits of the concern, where it appeared that the plaintiff's interest in the concern had been purchased by one of the other partners subject to such an accounting, it was permissible for the plaintiff to allege, by way of amendment, that the other partner, though not a party to the contract, was cognizant thereof. Houston v. Polk [Ga.] 52 S. E. 83.

61. A partnership was formed for the purchase and resale of real estate, advances made by one partner to be deducted from the profits and the balance divided, and title was taken in a dummy. The property was traded, and that received in exchange again traded. Emrich v. Goldstein, 103 App. Div. 17, 92 N. Y. S. 680. the burden is on the partner charging another with having taken goods from the stock for which he did not pay to prove the charge.[71] An entry in the partnership books is of less weight than a release under seal of the same liability.[72] In a suit for an accounting brought by the administrator of a deceased partner, the surviving partner may testify in his own behalf concerning items in books of original entry formerly kept by him in which regular and chronological entries were made concerning the partnership transactions.[73] In order that an appraisement of firm assets may be evidence against one, he must have had notice thereof.[74] Hearsay is inadmissible to show the state of the account between the parties.[75]

As between the partners the right to firm property cannot be determined by a motion in the suit for an accounting.[76]

Receivers.[77]—After an accounting a receiver may be appointed, if necessary, to carry the judgment into effect.[78] The remedy, however, is a stringent measure, not to be resorted to except remedially,[79] the matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court,[80] though when a bill seeking dissolution is filed and it satisfactorily appears that the complainant will be entitled to a decree, a receiver will be appointed as of course.[81] The receiver or liquidator stands in the place of the firm, with the same rights and liabilities as to closing up the firm business,[82] and if he continues to operate the business he must do so subject to any agreement which the firm may have had with third persons in relation to such business.[83]

78. A receiver should not be appointed by an interlocutory judgment dissolving the partnership and directing an accounting. Lowther v. Lowther, 94 N. Y. S. 159.

79. Gillett v. Higgins [Ala.] 38 So. 664. Even where surviving partners, pending actions between them and the representatives of the deceased partner, have shown a disposition to further their own interests, as against those of the decedent, and have tried to discourage bidders at the prospective sale of the firm property, a receiver will not be appointed until the termination of the actions, unless it appears that such a course is absolutely necessary for the protection of the interests of the decedent. Sarasohn v. Kamarky, 97 N. Y. S. 529.

80. Gillett v. Higgins [Ala.] 38 So. 664.

81. Where it appeared that the defendant sold out the firm's goods and turned over the business to a stranger, a prima facie case for appointment of a receiver was made out, even without notice of the application. Gillett v. Higgins [Ala.] 38 So. 664.

82. Liquidators or receivers appointed by agreement in a suit instituted by a member of a partnership simply stand in the shoes of their principals, and hence, in the absence of any issue of insolvency, cannot have a concurso or have liens and privileges in favor of creditors cancelled, thus referring the creditors to the proceeds of the property covered by the liens. Fitzner v. Nouilet, 114 La. 167, 38 So. 94. Where the members of an ordinary partnership agree upon liquidators and authorize them to take charge of the partnership assets and wind up its business, whether such authorization has received judicial sanction or not, the liquidators have an interest in reducing to possession the assets which they are authorized to take charge of, and in clearing away obstructions to their satisfactory distribution, and hence may appeal from an order dismissing a rule upon creditors to show

Credits and charges.[84]—Upon an accounting each party is held accountable according to the articles of partnership.[85] The respective rights of the partners upon dissolution do not depend upon which one of them has possession of the partnership property but upon its value as of the date when the partnership is dissolved,[86] except where such value is fixed by the partnership agreement.[87] Each partner is entitled to his proportionate share of all profits.[88] A partner should be credited with every item of expense incurred by him on behalf of the partnership during the existence of the firm.[89] Cash credits in favor of one of the partners appearing on the books kept by or under the supervision of the other will be allowed when the books are introduced in evidence and there is no dispute as to the entries;[90] and where a partner makes advances to his co-partner in order to enable the latter to carry out his portion of the partnership agreement, such advances should be allowed as a set-off against any sum found due from such partner to his co-partner on settlement,[91] but a partner cannot set off an individual claim against his co-partner.[92] A partner is not entitled to credit for money which according to the terms cause why certain inscriptions purporting to operate and privileges and mortgages should not be cancelled. Id.

83. Where a partnership which owned oil properties sold an undivided interest in certain leases of such properties to a third party, and continued to operate such leases for the joint benefit of themselves and such third party, under an agreement to do so without salaries or compensation, and a receiver was thereafter appointed who continued to operate the leases, without informing the court of the special stipulations in the contract between the partnership and the third person as to compensation, etc., the receiver was not entitled to compensation for incidental services rendered in operating the property of such third person, and such charge on account of compensation should not be made in the shape of general costs of administration any more than to the receiver direct. Rosenthal v. McGraw [C. C. A.] 138 F. 721.

85. An agreement to furnish one-half the "stock, tools and feed, teams, etc." was agreement to furnish one-half live stock and not merely one-half of the work stock. Green v. Hart, 27 Ky. L. R. 970, 87 S. W. 315. A partner agreeing in the articles of co-partnership to make such repairs to the partnership property as are absolutely necessary, not to exceed $500, held merely to limit the amount such partner could be compelled to advance for such purpose and not to limit the amount he could use for that purpose nor affect his rights to credits for reasonably necessary repairs made by him in excess of such sum. 87. Under partnership agreement fixing value of property furnished by one partner for use in the business, such partner, on dissolution of the firm, held entitled to the sum so fixed, less any amount paid by the other partner on the purchase price. Neal v. Abel, 103 App. Div. 414, 92 N. Y. S. 1045.

88. One partner, after ascertaining that his co-partner would sell his interest in partnership land for a certain sum, sold the land at a price which brought to himself a sum greatly in excess of the sum named by his co-partner. Burgess v. Deierling, 113 Mo. App. 383, 88 S. W. 770. Although such transactions may have been conducted by one of the partners alone, proceeds of option taken by one partner in name of firm and suit in firm name to recover profits, and dividends collected on stock held by one of the partners. Whitney v. Whitney, 27 Ky. L. R. 1197, 88 S. W. 311. Where the members of a firm of railroad construction contractors agreed that either of such members might subcontract a certain portion of a certain piece of work, such a contract to be dealt with the same as any other subcontract, the proceeds of such a subcontract would be credited as a firm asset at the same rate of profit as the firm usually made on subcontracts. Condon v. Callahan [Tenn.] 89 S. W. 400. Where the partners, though obligated to contribute equally, contribute unequally, distribution should not be made of the ultimate assets in proportion to the amounts contributed by each, but each should be charged with the amount which he was obligated to contribute and with the amounts withdrawn by him, and the balance should be equally divided. 91. Especially where the rights of creditors do not intervene, and even if such advances be considered as creating an individual and not a partnership debt. Logging partnership held to have commenced from time cutting was begun and not merely when logs were in stream, though one of the partners was to furnish all labor, etc., to put them in stream. Swafford's Adm'r v. White [Ky.] 89 S. W. 129. But a mutual release executed by partners upon dissolution will not include a debt evidenced by a mortgage of even date with the partnership, and given to secure an individual advancement made by one of the partners to the other. Hubbard v. Mulligan [Colo.] 82 P. 783.

92. Flynn v. Seale [Cal. App.] 84 P. 263. A claim by one partner against the other which is barred by the statute of limitations cannot be set off in a suit for an accounting. Defendant claimed he had made advances for plaintiff's benefit. Id. Person-of the partnership agreement he was to put in the firm,[93] nor in the absence of special agreement to that effect can a partner be credited with the value of his services.[94] Property contributed by one of the members does not ordinarily become his individual property upon dissolution, but the proceeds thereof must be shared with the other partner.[95] But when one of the partners contributed capital and the other labor, the one who contributed the labor is not entitled to share in the capital or property put in as capital by the other party.[96] Each partner should receive credit for all expenditures made by him in behalf of the firm,[97] but no charges or expenditures will be allowed upon an accounting except such as are bona fide,[98] nor is a partner entitled to credit for expenditures under an illegal contract, though made for the benefit of the firm,[99] nor where the expense was needlessly incurred through his own fault.[1] A partner should not be charged with items of expenses incurred by or on behalf of the firm,[2] nor with losses for which he is not responsible,[3] nor even for losses caused by his lack of judgment or discretion, unaccompanied by actual negligence of bad faith,[4] but where, after the dissolution of a firm, one of the partners undertakes to collect the debts due the firm, he will be held for the amount of such debts unless he gives an account showing why he has not collected them.[5] So, also, where a managing partner fails to keep an account of the firm assets and expenditures, only slight evidence of willful suppression or spoliation or of fraud is necessary to raise the presumption that he is responsible for any deficits in the assets,[6] and upon an accounting, mere evidence that the partnership funds unaccounted for were expended for the benefit of the firm is insufficient, an accurate

95. Contracts to star an actress and for writing of play. Arthur v. Sire, 94 N. Y. S. 346. The fact that contracts contributed by one member contain stipulations against assignment or subletting will not deprive the other partner of his interest, though they may affect the value of the contracts. Employment of railroad engineer by member of construction partnership with consent of other partner, and without concealment from the railroad, to do things not inconsistent with the engineer's regular duties, held not illegal. Condon v. Callahan [Tenn.] 89 S. W. 400. Items claimed on account of fees paid to attorneys and agents in the matter of procuring legislation by Congress, disallowed. Consaul v. Cummings, 24 App. D. C. 36.

6. Evidence of willful refusal to keep accounts. Escallier v. Baines [Wash.] 82 P. 181. Where, in a suit for an accounting against a partner who has had control of the business, the assets are less than the cash contribution to the firm made by the other partner only a few months previously, and the defendant has failed to keep accounts so as to show where the missing assets went, he cannot complain if the other partner is willing to accept and is awarded the whole amount of the assets left. account must be given.[7] Under some circumstances a partner may be charged with the value of the good will of the firm.[8]

Where there is a sale to one partner of a retiring partner's interest in the firm's property and business, made in the course of a settlement after a full accounting, the consideration of such sale, being the balance resulting from the accounting, may be surcharged to the extent that there were errors committed in arriving at the amount of the consideration, whether as the result of fraud or mistake.[9]

Interest.[10]—The allowance or refusal of interest in a partnership accounting depends upon the circumstances of each particular case,[11] but the general rule is that interest will not be allowed on partnership accounts until there has been a settlement.[12]

Reference.[13]—It is not necessary, in an equitable action for an accounting, to refer to a jury exceptions of fact to the auditor's report,[14] and the judge may pass on exceptions to the auditor's report without submitting the issues made thereby to a jury, and a judgment overruling the exceptions and making the findings of the auditor the findings of the court, unexcepted to, is valid and final.[15] When the auditor omits to include in his calculations an item which the undisputed evidence shows should be entered as a credit to one of the partners, and proper exception is taken, the exception should be allowed as a matter of course.[16]

Decree.[17]—A decree for an accounting must provide for the ascertainment of outstanding indebtedness of the firm, and no decree in favor of either partner for any balance can be made until this has been ascertained. In other words the decree must provide for a complete winding up of the firm's affairs.[18] After the relative credits and charges to which the parties are respectively entitled and liable have been adjusted, the assets will be distributed between the parties according to equitable principles.[19] In carrying out the result of an accounting the firm assets should first be exhausted, and if they are insufficient, one of the partners may have a personal judgment against the other.[20] The court may order a sale of the firm assets,[21] and it is the right of either of the partners to have the property sold so

R. 1197, 88 S. W. 311. Where surviving partners show a disposition to discourage bidders at a prospective sale of the partnership business, if the surviving partners are to be allowed to bid at the sale such sale must be made by a receiver and not by a referee, since the referee could only confer title as agent of the surviving partner, and furthermore could not obtain unprejudiced information as to the business which would enable him to inform other bidders as to the value and as to obtain the benefit of the sale of the good will.[22] General rules determine as to when a judgment is final.[23]

The scope of the accounting depends upon the particular circumstances of each case.[24]

Refusal to obey a court's order constitutes a contempt.[25]

Apportionment of costs.[26]—In an equitable action for an accounting the apportionment of the costs rests in the sound discretion of the trial court.[27]

Opening or correcting settlement.[28]—Matters which might have been reviewed on appeal are not ground for opening a partnership settlement by bill of review,[29] nor is the failure of counsel to properly effect an appeal ground for a bill of review to open a partnership settlement.[30] Where the probate court has approved the final report of a surviving partner as the administrator of the partnership affairs, such report, until set aside for proper cause, is a bar to a suit on the surviving partner's bond.[31] Where partners have been in the habit of making monthly settlements on a certain basis, it will require strong evidence to sustain a claim, set up for the first time after dissolution and in connection with the last month's settlement, that the basis of settlement was incorrect, especially where the alleged discrepancy involves a large sum.[32] Although a written settlement between partners is legally binding, one of the partners may recognize a moral obligation to contribute to a debt paid by his co-partner and not included in the settlement.[33] The right to have

In an action for an accounting, an interlocutory judgment being rendered to the effect that plaintiff was entitled to a certain number of corporate shares if defendants were in a position to transfer them, a final judgment giving defendants the option to transfer the shares or pay their value held erroneous. Reilly v. Freeman, 109 App. Div. 4, 95 N. Y. S. 1069. Where in a suit for dissolution and an accounting the plaintiff alleges that a dissolution has already been brought about by the acts of the defendant, and it appears that the plaintiff has had nothing to do with the firm since the date of the alleged dissolution, and that the defendant has, since that time, had entire charge of the firm's affairs, taken into his possession all of its assets, claiming to own the same, and, by reason of such claim, disposed of the firm property, the accounting should extend only to the date of the alleged dissolution. a partnership accounting reopened on a bill of review may be lost by negligence and laches.[34] General rules as to harmless error apply.[35]

(§ 7) F. Contribution and indemnity.—The right to contribution and indemnity cannot be enforced until the partnership has been dissolved and its accounts settled,[36] and the bill must show that such facts exist.[37] In such a proceeding all partners are necessary parties.[38]

§ 8. Limited partnerships.[39]—Limited partnerships were wholly unknown to the common law, and as they exist in the United States are entirely statutory,[40] consequently, a limited partnership can only be formed for the statutory purposes.[41] Sales and purchases of bonds, stocks, and other securities are "mercantile transactions" within the meaning of such statutes.[42] The omission to use the word "limited" merely imposes liability for indebtedness on members who participate in the omission or knowingly acquiesce therein.[43] The use of the abbreviation "Ltd." instead of the full word "Limited" is generally held sufficient.[44] Statutory provisions for the filing of a certificate showing that the special partner has paid in the amount of capital subscribed by him are remedial, and substantial compliance therewith is sufficient,[45] and even before the certificate has been filed, a valid contract may be made by the firm, the articles having been signed.[46] In Maryland the fact that the principal office of the partnership is alleged to be outside of the state is insufficient to convert it into a general partnership.[47] Limited partnerships are not corporations so as to become citizens of a state for the purposes of federal jurisdiction.[48] Limited partnership statutes must be construed with reference to the common law, and, except as otherwise provided by statute, the rights and

The use of the abbreviation "Ltd." instead of the word "Limited" after a company's letterhead will not make the person who signed the letter a general partner, so that his declarations and acts will have the same force and effect in all cases as the acts and declarations of a co-partner in an ordinary partnership. liabilities of the partners and their creditors are governed by the rules of law applicable to ordinary partnerships.[49] The fundamental difference between the liability of general and special partners is to be found in the fact that the former are responsible in solido for the debts and obligations of the firm, as in the case of ordinary partnerships, without regard to the amounts contributed by them to the social capital,[50] whilst the latter, if the statute has been complied with, are not generally liable beyond the fund contributed by them,[51] and where such amount has actually been paid in, it is immaterial where it came from.[52] Hence, a statute requiring all suits respecting the business of the partnership to be brought against the general partners only must be construed to apply to suits brought whilst the firm is a going concern, and to suits brought after its dissolution, but, whilst the special partner's contribution still forms part of the assets, or has been wholly absorbed in the liquidation of debts due by the firm,[53] it does not apply where the firm has been dissolved and the special partner's contribution has been returned leaving firm debts unpaid.[54] A limited partnership has the same power to contract as a general partnership.[55] The declarations of a single manager of a limited partnership association will not bind the association unless such declarations are made by him as a special agent of the association.[56]

Cahn [Md.] 62 A. 819. A special partner's contribution to the firm's capital is answerable for precisely the same debts and obligations for which such partner would have been liable if he had been a member of an ordinary partnership. Id. The relation of a partner in commendam to his firm is in the nature of a stockholder's to his corporation. He is not a partner further than is provided by the Civ. Code, art. 2844, that is to say his only relation is that he has a certain fund in the firm or has agreed to contribute a certain fund, and only this fund or the obligation to contribute it stands in the firm, and he cannot act for the firm nor the firm for him. Hence the firm is without authority to take him into court, and if it does so and a judgment is rendered against him personally on a reconventional demand, the judgment must be considered as having been rendered without citation or equivalent notice and to be null and void and incapable of revival, and in a suit for revival the facts going to such want of citation may be proved. separating wall between two buildings is presumed to be a common or party wall, if the contrary be not shown.[59] Presumptively, a party wall agreement gives each an easement in the land of the other and does not convey the fee of such land.[60] Each may use his side for proper advertising purposes.[61] Either may carry the wall up for his building,[62] and in so doing, if he uncovers the other's building by consent, is liable only for negligence.[63] Light and air coming into the higher building can not be obstructed by any use of the wall except for building purposes.[64] Each owner must contribute to necessary repair and restoration of the wall if the fact be properly established,[65] and is not relieved because of slight structural changes of which he quiescently knew,[66] but the party building must pay the extra cost if the wall is made wider or higher.[67] If a wall is sufficient for the purposes of one owner, but insufficient to support an improvement to be made by the other, the latter may rebuild the wall but must bear the entire expense.[68] In Iowa the rights of parties to separating walls are governed by statute,[69] but these statutes do not prevent owners from making special agreements concerning such walls.[70] Parol evidence is incompetent to show such an agreement,[71] but is competent to show what particular statute is applicable to a given case.[72] Under these statutes, repairs to party walls are to be made at the expense of all who have rights therein in proportion to the interest of each.[73] If an old wall is rebuilt for the purpose of increasing its height, wholly at the expense of one of the owners, the owner who did not contribute thereto may use the new wall as he used the old without additional expense,[74] but he is not entitled to make any additional use of the new wall without paying a portion of the expense of reconstruction.[75]

The existence of a party wall is sufficient notice to put grantees of one owner upon inquiry as to the rights of the co-owner in the wall,[76] but is not constructive notice to a grantee of an agreement by his grantor to pay part of the expense of the erection of the wall.[77] A subsequent purchaser who has no notice, actual or constructive, of an agreement by his grantor to contribute to the cost of a party wall is not bound thereby to pay any part of such cost to entitle him to use the portion of the wall situated on his or her land.[78] But where a contract providing for contribution by the owner of the vacant lot when he makes use of the wall is expressly made binding upon the heirs and assigns of the parties, the contract creates covenants running with the land,[79] and where conveyances are made by each owner after the party wall is built, the grantee of the vacant lot who uses the wall is required to make payment therefor to the grantee of the first builder.[80] By the Pennsylvania statute the right to compensation for use of a party wall passes with the land, unless reserved until the wall is used,[81] and such right vests in the owner at the time the wall is used.[82] When the right has actually vested in an owner it does not pass from him by a subsequent conveyance, though it is not expressly reserved.[83]

NOTE. Grantee with notice: If a person purchases a lot on which there is a party wall built by the owner of the adjoining lot, with notice, either actual or constructive, of a contract between his grantor and such adjoining lot owner, that the grantor will pay one-half of the cost of constructing the wall whenever he shall use it, it is generally agreed that such purchaser is liable for the amount agreed to be paid by his grantor in case the purchaser makes use of the wall. Wickersham v. Orr, 9 Iowa, 253, 74 Am. Dec. 348; Pew v. Buchanan, 72 Iowa, 637, 34 N. W. 453; Savage v. Mason, 3 Cush. [Mass.] 500; Standish v. Lawrence, 111 Mass. 111; Richardson v. Tobey, 121 Mass. 457, 23 Am. Rep. 283; Sharp v. Cheatham, 88 Mo. 498, 57 Am. Rep. 433; Brown v. McKee, 57 N. Y. S. 684. This is especially the rule when the agreement further stipulates that the covenants therein shall extend to and be binding upon each party, his heirs, assigns, etc., and the purchaser has notice of such stipulation. Roche v. Ullman, 104 Ill. 11; Stehr v. Raben, 33 Neb. 437, 50 N. W. 327; Garmire v. Willy, 36 Neb. 340, 54 N. W. 562; Brown v. Pentz, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 227; Mott v. Oppenheimer, 135 N. Y. 312, 31 N. E. 1097. If one of the parties to a deed of a party wall covenants that he or his grantee shall pay one-half of the expense of constructing such wall whenever he shall make use of it, and stipulates that such covenant shall run with the lot, a lien is thereby created thereon which is binding upon a subsequent purchaser with such notice only as the deed affords. Parsons v. Baltimore, etc., Ass'n, 44 W. Va. 335, 29 S. E. 999, 67 Am. St. Rep. 769. If a party wall has been used by the grantor at the time the vendee purchases the property, he has a right to presume that his grantor's share of the cost of the wall has been paid, and he cannot be held liable therefor in the absence of notice of the true state of the facts. Kells v. Helm, 56 Miss. 700. If one owner has a right to use a wall of an adjoining owner under an agreement between them, he has no right, as against the grantee of the adjoining owner without notice of the agreement, to use such wall without making compensation. not the end attained, is patentable.[87] The movement of a machine, irrespective of the mechanism which causes it, cannot be patented;[88] nor is concept alone patentable, but it must be accompanied by a mechanical embodiment which must be unanticipated.[89]

A design patent is addressed to the eye and is to be judged by its ability to please.[90] Design patents cover appearances only,[91] and should be artistic, though it is not necessary that they should be practical.[92] To support a method or process patent there must be a tangible product or a change in character or quality brought about, and not simply a principle or result underlying or involved in certain mechanical means or steps.[93]

In all patents, including those covering designs,[94] invention,[95] as distinguished from mechanical skill,[96] or suggestion,[97] is essential; and a mechanical concep-

The result of the application of the common skill and experience of a mechanic, which comes from the habitual and intelligent practice of his calling, to the correction of some slight defect in a machine or combination, or to a new arrangement or grouping of its parts, tending to make it more effective for the accomplishment of the object for which it was designed, not involving a substantial discovery, nor constituting an addition to our knowledge of the art, is not within the protection of the patent laws. Sloan Filter Co. v. Portland Gold Min. Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 23, citing numerous cases. Merely making in one piece what was before made in two does not constitute patentable invention although the one piece device is cheaper or more durable, when such results are merely such ordinary consequences of dispensing with joints as would naturally be anticipated by a workman. that the inventor is wholly ignorant of all the chemical changes that take place in the course of his process is immaterial.[99] Where two inventors improve an old machine, each is entitled to the benefit of his own improvement, so long as it differs from that of the other and does not include his.[1] The mere adaptation of well known methods of one art to another does not, as a general rule, involve invention;[2] but the adaptation of an old device to a distinctly new and highly useful service discloses invention.[3] And an invention which solves the problem of practical manufacture, accomplishing by few and simple means what has before been done by means less simple and practical, may be protected by patent, though involving no important novelty in its mechanical principles.[4] Double patenting is not allowable even to the same patentee,[5] not even where one patent is for a design or process, and the other for a mechanical device, where the two are indistinguishable in their characteristics and manifestly the outcome of the same inventive idea;[6] and the fact that the design patent proves to be invalid will not save a subsequent mechanical patent for the same device from the charge of double patenting.[7] A combination of old elements is not patentable unless the result is a new and useful article,[8] and one which would not suggest itself to an ordinarily intelligent mind experienced in the art.[9] A claim for a combination must be for an operative one.[10] A combination and its elements are distinct inventions and a patent for the combination is not the same as a patent for the elements,[11] and the patentee of a combination may obtain a patent on a combination of part of the same elements, if new and useful in itself, or in connection with other well known devices.[12] Where the advance in an art is gradual and several inventors form different combinations and make different improvements which materially aid to accomplish desired results, each is entitled to his own combination or improvement, so long as it differs from those of his competitors and does not include theirs;[13] but those improvements which result from the gradual and to be expected progress which marks every great and progressive industry do not generally involve invention.[14] Where none of the prior inventors exhibits or suggests any co-operation of the elements upon the principle adopted by the patent in question, or upon any principle adapted to serve the same purpose, the use of the old elements may limit, but cannot defeat the patent.[15] The mere substitution of equivalent, known devices or ingredients,[16] does not create a patentable combination.[17] The application of an old machine or combination to a new use

6. Functional utility entitles a patentee to a mechanical patent but mere functional utility does not entitle him to a design patent for the same article. Roberts v. Bennett [C. C. A.] 136 F. 193. Where the only suggestion of a method as a distinctive part of an inventive concept in a specification is the use of the word "method," and it does not appear that there is any difference in the inventive concept underlying such disclosure from that underlying the disclosure in a patent to the applicant upon the apparatus, the alleged method claims are not applicable. In re Creveling, 25 App. D. C. 530. So held where it appeared that the substitution of the word "means" for the word "method" would not change the sense. Id. A combination of old elements, each operating the same way and producing a similar product is not patentable. American Carriage Co. v. Wyeth [C. C. A.] 139 F. 389. To sustain a patent on a combination of old devices it is well settled that a new result must be obtained which is due to the joint and co-operating action of all the old elements. Either this must be accomplished, or a new machine of distinct character and function must be constructed. Dodge Coal Storage Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 139 F. 976.

17. The mere use of known equivalents for some of the elements of prior structures; the substitution for one material of another known to possess the same qualities, though not to the same degree; the mere carrying forward or more extended application of the original idea, involving a is not invention;[18] nor is the discovery of an enlarged use of a pre-existing art of itself patentable invention.[19] But a combination of old elements which makes an advance upon the prior art discloses invention.[20]

A long series of futile experimental efforts resulting in a solution in some unthought of way sometimes serves to show inventive character;[21] and the comparative crudeness of an original construction, as contrasted with subsequent machines, is no ground for the refusal of the merit of operative success.[22] The fact that a device has gone into general use and displaced other devices,[23] that it has been acquiesced in by the public for a long time[24] and has been accorded general approval by those skilled in the art[25] is high, though not conclusive evidence of patentability, and is insufficient to support a patent, where the changes made from the prior art are mere changes of mechanical construction or of form, size or materials.[26] A labor-saving device is deemed patentable if the weakness or carelessness or dishonesty of the employe, against which the patented device is effective, is recognized as a common failing, and an appreciable source of danger to employers in like cases.[27] Patentability does not depend upon the amount of thought, labor, and time involved in the invention.[28]

A patent is firma facie evidence of the patentability, usefulness and novelty of the device covered by it,[29] though the question of its invalidity may be raised by demurrer in infringement proceedings;[30] and in such a case the patent will be sustained if the court has any doubt on the question.[31] change only in form, proportions, or degree, and resulting in the doing of the same work in the same way and by substantially the same means, is not patentable, even though better results are secured; and this is the case, although what preceded rests alone in public knowledge and use, and not upon patent. Sloan Filter Co. v. Portland Gold Min. Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 23, citing numerous cases. Identity depends not merely upon the function performed, but upon the manner in which it is performed. 20. Rowley v. Koeber, 135 F. 363. The assertion of a new function or effect can only give patentability to a device when sustained by proof of unexpected properties or uses capable of producing novel results. General Elec. Co. v. Yost Elec. Mfg. Co., [C. C. A.] 139 F. 568, afg. 131 F. 374.

21. National Tube Co. v. Spang [C. C. A.] 135 F. 351. Is very persuasive evidence that something more than mechanical skill was required, and that it demanded inventive genius to bridge the chasm between the bungling, imperfect, inoperative devices of prior inventors and the simple, economical and perfect device. Imperial Bottle Cap & Mach. Co. v. Crown Cork & Seal Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 312. Novelty is essential to all patents.[32] To determine whether a device involves patentable novelty, inquiry is made of the steps or means through which an invention is reached.[33] There is always a presumption of novelty arising from the patent itself, greater or less, according to circumstances.[34] Commercial success may be considered with reference to the question of novelty.[35]

Anticipation[36] in a prior invention is fatal to the validity of the patent.[37] That which infringes if later will anticipate if earlier;[38] but neither mere accidental use of some of the features of an invention, without recognition of its benefits, constitutes anticipation,[39] nor does prior operation of it by another than the patentee necessarily do so.[40] Prior publication will not negative the novelty of an invention

Whatever novelty in a patentable sense there may be in flakes of cooked wheat which are thin, crisp and slightly brown, must be found in some superior efficaciousness or some new properties which they possess, and not in any mere change of form produced by mechanical division of the cooked grain, either before or after the last step in cooking. Sanitas Nut Food Co. v. Voigt [C. C. A.] 139 F. 551.

34. If the patent relates to something of temporary interest, and the object sought is of little importance, and offers but slight chance of profitable use, it may receive but little attention in the patent office, and the presumption therefore is slight; but where the problem sought to be solved by the patent is of such importance that the solution of it promises great pecuniary returns, and the testimony shows that all the claims of the patent were subject to critical analysis by trained experts in that office, resulting in amendments and disclaimers designed to distinguish it from everything in the prior art, and the subject appears to have been thoroughly threshed out, the presumption in favor of novelty is greater than in those cases where the patent may have passed by inadvertence. Imperial Bottle Cap & Machine Co. v. Crown Cork & Seal Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 312.

unless it describes a complete and operative invention capable of being put into practical operation, or contains such a disclosure of the invention that any omission would ordinarily be supplied by one skilled in the art,[41] nor can an invention patented in this country be defeated by a prior foreign patent, unless the latter describes the patented invention so fully, clearly and exactly as to enable a skilled person to practice it without the necessity of experiments.[42] Anticipation is not shown by broad and general language in prior patents, although, interpreted in the light of the later invention, it may be said to include the same.[43] While the rejection of an application is no bar to a subsequent patent to another for the same device,[44] yet it does have a bearing on the question of prior invention or discovery, where that question is raised.[45]

The state of the art may sometimes be found to limit, although it may not defeat, the patent.[46] A design patent will operate as an anticipation of a subsequent mechanical patent to the same inventor, where they are indistinguishable in their characteristics.[47] Claims for a patent which would otherwise be void for anticipation cannot be saved by including in the combination some well known device which is too obvious a step in the art to involve invention;[48] nor is the effect of a device as anticipating altered by the fact that it was made to serve a purpose additional to that for which it was used in the second case, where, so far as the latter goes, the two are equivalents.[49] That a prior patent for the same invention was issued to the same patentee does not avoid anticipation.[50]

Prior public use[51] or sale for two years before filing the application,[52] although in but a single instance,[53] will defeat the right to a patent.[54] The insanity of the inventor does not affect the running of the limitation.[55] Where the first application has not been abandoned, subsequent applications and amendments constitute a continuance of the original proceeding, and the two years' public use or sale, which may avoid the patent, must be reckoned from the presentation of the first application.[56] But the abandonment of an application destroys the continuity of the solicitation of the patent; in which case a subsequent application institutes a new proceeding, and the two years' public use and sale, which may invalidate the patent, must be counted from the filing of the later application.[57] Although a reasonable degree of experimental use prior to the application for a patent is permitted,[58] yet such use must be strictly experimental, as the public cannot be permitted to use a machine or device, supposing it to be free, and then subjected to suits for infringements.[59] Experimental use of an invention, to be such, need not necessarily be made by the inventor himself or at his shop.[60] Where a patent is for a manufactured article itself, designed for general use, a presumption arises that, when the inventor issues such article to the public, he regards it as a finished product, and, in case he does not apply for a patent within two years, abandonment of his purpose to do so may well be assumed;[61] but where the invention is for a machine designed to produce articles, a different rule as to experimental use applies, and although the articles produced may be perfect, the machine may not be,[62] and the sale of the product does not necessarily render the use of the machine a public use, where none of the machines are sold and their use is entirely under the observation of the inventor.[63] The defense of prior use must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt,[64] but when it is established, the burden is on the inventor to prove by convincing proof that the use was experimental.[65]

Abandonment.[66]—An abandonment of an application for a patent is not necessarily an abandonment of the invention.[67] It does not follow, because an application has been rejected, that the invention stands as an abandoned experiment.[68] While long delay may raise a strong presumption that what was done was merely an abandoned experiment,[69] yet such presumption may be overcome by sufficient and satisfactory proof of successful operation and reduction to practice.[70]

§ 3. Who may acquire patents.[71]—The patentee must be the true inventor.[72]

§ 4. Mode of obtaining and claiming patents.[73]—The law does not favor the multiplication of applications, and of patents for devices closely related, when they can properly be included in one application.[74] Where the first application is not abandoned, subsequent applications and amendments constitute a continuance of the original proceeding.[75]

Specification and description.[76]—Only that which is new need be described in the claims; that which is old and will be understood by those skilled in the art will be read in as if described.[77] Claims to an alleged process are not patentable where they do not include all the steps necessary to effect the result stated or any useful result,[78] especially where the omitted steps are essential to the carrying out of the alleged method.[79] The unnecessary multiplication of claims is objectionable.[80] Claims must be definite and certain,[81] the claims being read in the light of the specifications and drawings.[82] While the amendment of claims and the introduction of new claims are freely allowed, provided they are disclosed and there is a proper basis for them in the original specifications or drawings,[83] yet no such amendment or addition can be allowed when the proposed amendment or addition involves new matter not so disclosed in the original application,[84] but the applicant advancing such claims may present them in a new and distinct application if he so desires.[85]

Abandonment of application.[86]—An abandonment of an application is not necessarily an abandonment of the invention, and, after such an abandonment, a valid patent for the invention may nevertheless be secured upon a new application, provided the invention has not gone into public use or been upon sale for more than two years prior to the filing of the latter.[87] Failure of an applicant for a patent to prosecute further, after rejection by the examiner, when caused by his lack of funds, cannot be interpreted as an acquiescence in the rejection and abandonment of the application.[88]

Renewal of application.[89]—The commissioner of patents cannot issue a patent on an application filed more than two years after the allowance of a patent for the same invention, on a prior application by the same party, forfeited for nonpayment of fees.[90]

Interference.[91]—There can be no interference unless there is a patentable invention and there are rival claimants to it.[92] Interferences are declared between applications rather than applicants, and are intended to disclose and determine which invention was first produced and not who has the title.[93] The sworn preliminary statements required when an interference has been declared constitute the pleadings of the parties, and they are to be held strictly to the dates given therein.[94] A party to an interference is not estopped, by a declaration that his invention was different from that of the other party, to assume a contrary position, for the differences may be in details, while the devices may be the same in substance,[95] and mere verbal differences between the original claims and the claims of the issue of one of the parties will not preclude an award of priority to him.[96]

Where in a preliminary statement an allegation of the construction of a model is followed by a separate allegation of reduction to practice in a full size device upon a later date, the idea of intention to claim anything more than conception for the first construction is precluded. Opposing party may have rested his case on later dates in view of such statement, and to hold otherwise would destroy the certainty of pleading required. Id. In fixing the date of conception of an invention in the preliminary statement, the expression "the early spring" necessarily means not earlier at the utmost than March 1, and probably not that early. Richards v. Meissner, 24 App. D. C. 305.

The junior applicant has the burden of showing priority of invention[97] and the exercise of due diligence,[98] and this burden is substantially increased where a patent has been issued to his adversary,[99] or where there are successive adverse decisions against him in the patent office.[1] Unless it discloses the issue of the interference, a prior application by the junior applicant does not alter the rule.[2] The patentee claiming that the junior applicant's rights are based on disclosures made by him, he must prove such disclosures.[3] A junior claimant cannot overcome the prior date of his adversary by proof that some third person was in fact the inventor,[4] for the issue is not whether the senior applicant may be entitled to priority as against all persons, but the question is whether the junior applicant has established his own claim to priority over that of his opponent,[5] and this rule holds good, although such third party was at one time a party to the interference.[6]

Evidence necessary to sustain burden: The junior applicant must obtain the award on the strength of his own claim to priority of invention. Prindle v. Brown, 24 App. D. C. 114. Such priority must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence (Robinson v. Seelinger, 25 App. D. C. 237), and to do this, the applicant's testimony must be corroborated, but the corroboratory testimony of one witness, though somewhat wanting in definiteness, is sufficient (Robinson v. Copeland, 24 App. D. C. 68). Where a patent is issued to the senior party while the junior party's application is pending, no benefit accrues therefrom to the senior party as to the burden of proof imposed upon his adversary. Paul v. Hess, 24 App. D. C. 462. Where the senior party relies upon his record date, the junior party must show reduction to practice prior to that date or earlier conception, followed by due diligence to reduction to practice, actual or constructive. Paul v. Hess, 24 App. D. C. 462; Jones v. Cooke, 25 App. D. C. 524. Where the question involved was rather one of originality than of priority, and the junior party filed his application only because the senior party refused to assign his invention to the company that employed him, and the senior's application was made at the instance of the company, held that this showed priority of invention in the senior party. Where junior party was first to conceive but last to reduce to practice, the burden is upon him to show that immediately before his rival entered the field, and at that time, he was exercising due diligence in perfecting his invention and attempting to reduce it to actual practice. If the testimony of a wife in favor of her husband is admissible at all in an interference, and if disclosure to a wife is disclosure of an invention to others or to the public in the sense of the patent law, which is very doubtful, the testimony, when uncorroborated, must be rigidly scrutinized and not lightly admitted. Harter v. Barrett, 24 App. D. C. 300.

7. Where a party's patent was forfeited through the fault of an agent and a second party obtained a patent. Ascencio v. Russell, 24 App. D. C. 105. Where party claimed to have conceived invention prior to other party and his testimony was inconsistent, and, though the invention was in great demand, he kept his machine concealed in a pile of rubbish for three years, evidence held insufficient to establish his case. Jenner v. Dickinson, 25 App. D. C. 316. Where a party to an interference case, in his testimony in rebuttal, attempted to show disclosure of the invention at an earlier date than he claimed in his examination in chief, it tended to discredit the earlier disclosure claimed by him. Furman v. Dean, 24 App. D. C. 277. Where both parties to an interference were employed by the same company, whose superintendent had solicited suggestions from its employes, and the senior party had seen reducing it to practice, is entitled to priority.[8] To constitute reduction to practice the machine must be capable of performing the work for which it was designed.[9] Something more than the embodiment of the invention in visible form is required, for there is no certainty that, although the device is operative as a mechanical movement, it will perform its functions when put under full conditions of practical use.[10] Neither the size of a device,[11] nor the material of which it is made,[12] nor its mechanical perfection,[13] nor the fact that it may be called and designed as a working drawings and a model of the junior party's invention, but said nothing about any previous conception or disclosure of the invention by himself, and remained silent for a year before filing application, the junior party was held entitled to an award of priority. Harter v. Barrett, 24 App. D. C. 300. Claims to early conception and disclosure are entitled to no consideration where it appears that there was a demand for a device of the kind in issue, but the party made no disclosure to manufacturers, nor any attempts at reduction to practice, but, on the other hand, attempted to sell patents upon similar devices not embodying the invention, which devices were failures for the reason that they did not possess the advantages of the invention in question. Hope v. Voight, 25 App. D. C. 22.

8. A conception is not patentable merely because it is first in time. Voightmann v. Perkinson [C. C. A.] 138 F. 56. The general rule is that he who first reduces an invention to practice is ordinarily held to be the inventor, as against another who claims to have previously conceived the idea which led to the invention. Killeen v. Buffalo Furnace Co., 140 F. 33.

What constitutes due diligence: No invariable rule of diligence can be prescribed for the government of all cases. Hammond v. Basch, 24 App. D. C. 469. Whether it has been exercised in a particular case must depend upon its special circumstances. Id. One having the first complete conception of an invention cannot hold the field against all comers by diligent efforts merely to organize and procure sufficient capital to engage in the manufacture of his device or mechanism for commercial purposes. Seeberger v. Dodge, 24 App. D. C. 476. Where both before and after date of reduction to practice the junior party was corresponding with his attorneys making arrangements to acquire patent, held to show sufficient diligence. Jones v. Cooke, 25 App. D. C. 524. Where one of the parties successfully operated his machine before the other party's date of conception, held he was the first inventor, though his machine was not as perfect as that of the other party. Jenner v. Dickinson, 25 App. D. C. 316. Priority of invention awarded one who conceived and disclosed his invention and reduced it to practice May 6, 1902, while it did not appear by any satisfactory proof that appellant had a conception of the invention before May 26, 1902. Hope v. Voight, 25 App. D. C. 22. Proof of conception in November, 1894, construction of a full-sized voting machine about the middle of December, and public operation thereof early in February, 1895, on the part of one whose application was filed Feb. 27, 1897, held to show a high degree of diligence. Ocumpaugh v. Norton, 25 App. D. C. 90. Where both parties to an interference proceeding rely upon an infringement suit to explain delay between conception and reduction to practice, one cannot take advantage of the omission of the other to show what there was in that suit to excuse delay in the matter of the invention. Hammond v. Basch, 24 App. D. C. 469. Where a party to an interference presents evidence of completion of the invention prior to the date to which he is restricted by his preliminary statement, such evidence may be entitled to some consideration upon the question of diligence as tending to show that he had some reason to be satisfied with the practicability of his device. Id. A delay by an inventor in reducing his invention to practice and applying for a patent is not excused by a supposition that prior patents in which he had an interest were sufficiently broad to include the invention. Seeberger v. Dodge, 24 App. D. C. 476. Over a year and a half delay after perfecting drawings of the invention before reducing it to practice, or even testing it, held to show lack of due diligence. Id. Where the junior party to an interference deliberately concealed his invention for two years and a half, until he learned of the senior party's efforts in the same field, and the latter meanwhile, without knowledge of his rival's invention, worked to perfect the invention and applied for a patent, it was held that the junior's rights were subordinate to the senior's. Matthes v. Burt, 24 App. D. C. 265. And the fact that the senior party's application had not ripened into a patent when the junior filed application did not affect the result. Id. A year's delay taken up with desultory talking held not to constitute reasonable diligence. Gallagher v. Hien, 25 App. D. C. 77. That one could not find a person able and willing to construct machine held not to excuse inactivity. Robinson v. Copeland, 24 App. D. C. 68.

9. Voting machine that fails to register as often as once in 100 times cannot be considered reduced to practice. McKenzie v. Cummings, 24 App. D. C. 137, dist'g Coffee v. Guerrant, 3 App. D. C. 497.

10. Ocumpaugh v. Norton, 25 App. D. C. 90.

12. Electric lamp socket made of wood. Norden v. Spaulding, 24 App. D. C. 286.

13. But a device must show that "the work of the inventor must be finished, physically as well as mentally. Nothing must be left for the inventive genius of the public." Gallagher v. Hien, 25 App. D. C. 77; Ocumpaugh v. Norton, 25 App. D. C. 90.

"model,"[14] nor the fact that there are "possibilities of greater excellence in shape, location, arrangement, material, or adjustment,"[15] affects the determination of the question of reduction to practice.[16] It is not always essential that actual tests of the invention be made in order to complete the inventive act,[17] but the device relied upon as a reduction to practice must, if it has not been worked, clearly be capable of work and not be a mere experiment.[18] Where the device is of a new type,[19] or is an improvement in an essential part of a machine already in use,[20] there must be a demonstration of utility under the conditions of practical operation. Where the invention undoubtedly belongs to that class which requires either actual use or thorough tests to demonstrate its practicability, there can be no actual reduction to practice until one or the other thing takes place and is proven.[21] The evidence of reduction to practice must embrace all the elements of the issue, leaving nothing to inference merely.[22] What constitutes a reduction to practice depends upon the facts of each case.[23] Long delay in making use of the invention or in applying for a patent has always been regarded as tending to show that the alleged reduction to

14. Norden v. Spaulding, 24 App. D. C. 286. The construction of a full sized device, capable of use to a sufficient extent to demonstrate the practical utility of the invention, may often be regarded as a reduction to practice, notwithstanding it may have been called a model, as well as intended by the inventor to be used as a model for the construction of a like device of better and different materials, when there has been some test or application to use. Hammond v. Basch, 24 App. D. C. 469. Such a model, so called, must be quite different from the ordinary model, which, while it may show invention, is incapable of operation to effect its purpose. 17. Gallagher v. Hien, 25 App. D. C. 77, following Mason v. Hepburn, 13 App. D. C. 86. Some devices may be so simple and their efficacy so obvious upon mere inspection that the construction of one of a size and form capable of practical use may well be deemed a sufficient reduction to practice without actual use or test to demonstrate its complete success and probable commercial value. Paul v. Hess, 24 App. D. C. 462, citing several cases. Where the new devices are of an old type and their novelty consists in specific constructions of that old type, it may well be that their practical utility may be determined without actual use of them under conditions of industry. 19. Paul v. Hess, 24 App. D. C. 462.

20. Type bar of a typewriter. Paul v. Hess, 24 App. D. C. 462. It is necessary for the inventor to show that a machine supplied with the new device has been constructed and tested sufficiently to show that it was capable of successfully performing the work for which it was intended. Testimony of the party claiming reduction to practice that he had operated a typewriting machine fitted with six type bars embodying the issue, but used no paper in the machine, and his satisfaction resulted from the operation of the bars singly, was not sufficient showing of actual reduction to practice. 21. Where both parties submitted their inventions to tests, it was in effect an admission by both that the device belonged to such class. Gallagher v. Hien, 25 App. D. C. 77. Tests of certain improvements in friction-springs held to show that the device was merely experimental and not a reduction to practice. Id.

22. The court cannot supply missing links in evidence and base its decision on facts only thought to exist but not disclosed. Robinson v. Seelinger, 25 App. D. C. 237, following Blackford v. Wilder, 21 App. D. C. 1. Judicial notice cannot be taken of an application filed in February, 1902, to show that what is therein disclosed was in possession of the applicant in September preceding. Robinson v. Seelinger, 25 App. D. C. 237, distinguishing Cain v. Park, 14 App. D. C. 42.

Facts constituting reduction to practice: The making of sketches showing the invention in issue from a complete tool. Richards v. Meissner, 24 App. D. C. 305. A full sized operative structure lacking only the ornamention and polish of a commercial article. Hope v. Voight, 25 App. D. C. 22. Where machine was satisfactorily and successfully operated held a reduction to practice, although machine was subsequently dismantled and some of its parts used in building other machines, which differed in some respects from the old one. Funk v. Whitely, 25 App. D. C. 313.

Facts not constituting reduction to practice: Where applicant, ten months before issuance of patent to adversary, made two devices similar to that patented and threw them both away. Lemp v. Mudge, 24 App. D. C. 282. That inventor submitted device to employers, and they rejected it and adopted another, held to tend to show that the device was not a complete and practicable invention. Paul v. Hess, 24 App. D. C. 462. Where various parts of a structure are so crude and certain of derangement that no one would seriously consider building machines according to the exhibit, without further experiment, it cannot be considered more than an experimental device. Ocumpaugh v. Norton, 25 App. D. C. 90.

practice was nothing more than an unsatisfactory or abandoned experiment,[24] especially where, in the meantime, the inventor has been engaged in the prosecution of similar inventions,[25] or other inventions without reasonable explanation have been adopted for manufacture and commercial use;[26] but an inventor after having made an actual reduction to practice is not obliged in order to preserve his rights or demonstrate his entire good faith, to file an application before the expiration of the statutory time.[27] Where neither party makes any showing of actual reduction to practice, the one who first comes to the patent office is constructively held to have been the first to reduce the invention to practice,[28] although actual reduction to practice is preferable to constructive reduction to practice.[29] Where the first applicant is shown to have also been the one who first conceived and disclosed the invention, all other questions are precluded in his favor.[30]

Where an applicant adopts a claim of a patent for the purpose of procuring an interference, the meaning of the issue is to be determined by the specification of that patent.[31]

Where the application of the junior party has been inadvertently allowed to go to patent, no advantage will be allowed him, but he will still be regarded as the junior party.[32]

Appeal and review.[33]—Under the rule of the court requiring appeals to be taken from decisions of the commissioner of patents within forty days, and the statute designating legal holidays, seven intervening Saturdays will be counted as three and a half days.[34] The determination of the question of priority of invention and of the person to whom letters patent will be issued is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the commissioner of patents,[35] and the finding by him of a question of fact, in the performance of his duties, is presumptively[36] though not conclusively[37] correct, for,

24. The excuse for the delay in applying for a patent that the inventor could not come to an agreement with his employers concerning the invention, held insufficient. Paul v. Hess, 24 App. D. C. 462, following Traver v. Brown, 14 App. D. C. 34; Reichenbach v. Kelley, 17 App. D. C. 333, and Latham v. Armat, 17 App. D. C. 345. When the construction of an experimental device involves so great cost and risk that an inventor, although possessed of sufficient means, may well hesitate to undertake the same at his own expense, due diligence requires that he should then attempt to secure his rights and promote the public interests by filing an application for a patent. Seeberger v. Dodge, 24 App. D. C. 470. While the destruction or dismantling of a first construction, and the loss of some of its parts or their use in making other machines, are sometimes important in determining the question of reduction to practice, they are only important when depending upon other circumstances tending to cast doubt upon claims of the earlier reduction, notably that of long and unreasonable delay in the exploitation of the invention. Funk v. Whitely, 25 App. D. C. 313.

27. Ocumpaugh v. Norton, 25 App. D. C. 90. Where the assignees of a patentee, on account of their hostility and refusal to testify, were allowed to make the preliminary statement, but could not procure proofs of disclosure and reduction to practice, the junior party, on showing actual reduction to practice prior to the filing of the senior party's application, was awarded priority, even though he failed to render sufficient excuse for his delay in applying for a patent until after issue of a patent to his rival. Corner v. Kyle, 24 App. D. C. 291.

28. Furman v. Dean, 24 App. D. C. 277. An unexplained delay in making application by the party first conceiving warranted the granting of the patent to the more diligent party. Ritter v. Krakan, 24 App. D. C. 271. The senior party filed an application May 28, 1903, as a division of an application dated Oct. 28, 1902, but having taken no testimony was confined to the latter date. 35. Supreme court of New York has no jurisdiction to pass upon that question under the guise of restraining by injunction one claimant of the right to a patent from prosecuting his claim before the commissioner of patents. Griffith v. Dodgson, 93 N. Y. S. 155.

36. Finding that the delay which caused the abandonment of an application was not palpable error having been committed,[38] or, under certain circumstances, one party being permitted to broaden his application for a specific invention into a generic one and thereby dominate another and different specific invention contained in the later application of another,[39] the decision of the patent office may be reversed[40] and unanimity of decision in the patent office imposes upon an appellant the burden of showing very clearly that error was committed in the final decision of the commissioner in order to warrant its reversal.[41] The court on appeal from the commissioner of patents will not interfere with rulings upon interlocutory matters in the patent office, unless, perhaps, in extreme cases it may be necessary for the maintenance of the jurisdiction of the court.[42] Unless abused the exercise of discretion will not be reviewed.[43]

Suit in equity to secure patent.[44]—It is essential that the petitioner shall have appealed from an adverse decision of the commissioner of patents to the court of appeals.[45] A bill alleging invention on a given date and an earlier application for the same invention, without explanation of the apparent contradiction, is demurrable.[46]

§ 5. Letters patent.[47]—When a patent contains a sufficient disclosure of the claimed invention, it will not be invalidated either by the failure of the patentee to state the causes which produce the operation, or by a mistaken statement as to the reasons therefor.[48] A patent for a chemical composition must give not only the names of the ingredients used but also the proportion of each, so that the invention may be practiced by persons skilled in the art, without further experimenting.[49]

Construction and limitation of claims.[50]—A patent is a contract made by the acceptance by the government of the proposition made by the inventor in his application,[51] and the rules for the interpretation of contracts govern its construction.[52] When forced to choose between a construction which destroys and one which saves the patent, the court should not hesitate to adopt the latter.[53]

37. If an invention has advanced beyond the experimental stage, has been completed and put into operative shape, and particularly if it has gone into practical and successful use, the mere fact that an application for a patent has not met with favor at the hands of the patent office does not condemn or dispose of it as an invention. 43. Whether an amendment to a preliminary statement in an interference proceeding shall be allowed is discretionary with the commissioner of patents, and nothing less than an abuse of that discretion, causing a palpable miscarriage of justice, will warrant a review and reversal of his action. Hammond v. Basch, 24 App. D. C. 469. The discretion of the commissioner of patents in refusing to reopen an interference case for the introduction of newly-discovered evidence, and for the filing of an amended preliminary statement, will not be reviewed on appeal. 53. Shepherd v. Deitsch, 138 F. 83.

Nothing is patented except what is covered specifically by the claims required by statute.[54] The claims must be read in the light of the specifications and drawings,[55] not for the purpose of limiting and contracting the claims, but for the purpose of ascertaining their true meaning and the intention of the parties when the claims were made and allowed,[56] and even to supply essential mechanical elements omitted in the claims;[57] and if from the whole a person skillful in the art can construct the thing invented, the patent is sufficient.[58] But a claim for a mechanical or apparatus patent cannot be construed in connection with the specifications, where it goes far beyond anything there suggested and also fails to refer to one of the most distinguishing features of the invention on which its novelty principally depends.[59] While an invention is to be regarded as residing in a structure of the same general character as that described in the specifications, to which the inventor is confined,[60] yet he is not restricted to the particular form made prominent in the specifications, where he evidently had variations thereof in mind and made his claim broad enough to cover them, and also made the particular form the subject of a separate claim.[61] Claims are to be taken as they read[62] and are not limited by an amendment of the specifications describing the device, made to meet objections of the patent office, the claims themselves not being changed.[63] Where a claim has two or more elements, it is what is known as a combination claim; and in such a claim, every element specified by the patentee, whether directly or by reference to the specification, must be deemed material.[64] The con-

54. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Stanley Instrument Co. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 823. U. S. Rev. St. § 4888, requires an inventor to particularly point out and distinctly claim the improvement or combination which he desires to secure as his discovery, and, when he has made his claims, he has thereby disclaimed and dedicated to the public all other devices, combinations, and improvements apparent from his specifications, and claims that are not mere evasions of those claimed as his own; and he is estopped by his patent from thereafter claiming a monopoly as to such devices, combinations, or improvements. Where claims following specifications end with the expression "substantially as described," the specification must be considered in construing such claims (Scott v. Fisher Knitting Mach. Co., 139 F. 137), for those words refer to the elements, construction, and operation set forth in the specification (Jewell Filter Co. v. Jackson [C. C. A.] 140 F. 340). But claims are founded upon and explained by the specifications, whether these words appear therein or not (Id.), although those words are not to be construed as limiting the patentee to the exact mechanism described (Avery & Sons v. Case Plow Works, 139 F. 878). That the inventor of a process is wholly ignorant of the chemical changes that take place in the course of such process may properly be taken into consideration in construing the language and terms of the specifications. 58. Shepherd v. Deitsch, 138 F. 83. Claims 2 and 3 of No. 527,361, enameling metal ware, held void, because they make no reference to the mottles nor to the intense alkalinity of the "mix" from which the enamel is made, which is the essential feature of the invention. 59. Manhattan General Const. Co. v. Helios-Upton Co., 135 F. 785. A claim which passes beyond the bounds of the specifications and deals in generalities and abstractions must be regarded as inherently defective and invalid. 62. In making his claim the inventor is at liberty to choose his own form of expression and while the courts may construe the same in view of the specifications and the state of the art, they may not add to nor detract from the claim. struction placed on the claims by the patentee should be adopted by the courts if possible;[65] and when the terms of a claim are clear and distinct, as they should be, the patentee, in a suit brought upon the patent, is bound by them;[66] but applications by the inventor, representing different developments of the same idea, made pending an application for a patent, all being allowed and issued the same day, do not necessarily limit the first invention.[67] Where a rejection of claims by the patent office is acquiesced in and the claims are amended so as to be more specific, such amended claims must be interpreted with reference to the rejected claims and the prior state of the art and cannot be construed so as to cover what was rejected or disclosed by prior devices.[68] Various constructions placed upon patents[69] and words and phrases therein[70] are stated in the notes. A patent for an inoperative machine cannot be broadly construed to cover a subsequent successful machine.[71]

A combination or adaptation of known devices, constituting a distinct step in the progress of the art, is entitled to a fairly liberal construction,[72] and a new combination of old devices to accomplish an entirely new result is entitled to a broad construction;[73] but a combination of old parts performing an old function is only entitled to a narrow construction.[74] Where claims for a new combination of old elements have been rejected and acquiesced in, and subsequently allowed only after amendment so as to contain a single new feature, the patent will be restricted to such new element.[75] Where the field of invention has been narrowed by many earlier devices, a narrow construction must be put upon a new combination and it must be limited to the very structure shown.[76]

A pioneer invention[77] is entitled to a greater liberality of construction and a wider range of equivalents[78] than one which is simply an improvement though it may be the last and successful step in the art theretofore partially developed by other inventors in the same field;[79] yet, in view of the failures of the prior art and of the novelty and utility of the invention, a fair range of equivalents is often permissible where it is not a pioneer patent,[80] and even the pioneer character of a machine does not entitle its inventor to all the means for accomplishing the same result.[81]

In the absence of disclaimer, a patent covers all equivalents.[82] 'The range of equivalents to which the patentee is entitled depends altogether upon the character and extent of his improvements, and the degree of merit is measured by the value of his contribution to the public.[83] An inventor is not called upon to describe

Where it appears from the proceedings in the patent office and a consideration of the state of the art that a patent is not a pioneer patent, its claims must be limited in their scope to the actual combination of essential parts as shown, and cannot be construed to cover other combinations of elements, of different construction and arrangements. Id. No. 383,258, machine for plucking furs, is not a pioneer invention. Cimiotti Unhairing Co. v. American Fur Refining Co., 198 U. S. 399, 49 Law. Ed. 1100, afg. [C. C. A.] 123 F. 869.

80. No. 601,405, for a brush having a reticulated back, so construed. Shepherd v. Deitsch, 138 F. 83. Patent No. 607,433, for a milk can, while not strictly a pioneer patent, discloses patentable invention in a marked degree, and is entitled to a liberal range of equivalents. Ironclad Mfg. Co. v. Dairymen's Mfg. Co., 138 F. 123.

81. American Can Co. v. Hickmott Asparagus Canning Co., 137 F. 86.

82. No. 620,036, for a multiplying camera with a "cellular box" and movable lens, covers one with a single movable cell and lens. Jenkins v. Mahoney, 135 F. 550. No. 461,734, for an improved construction of bowl and seat in water-closets, is not limited to any particular form of seat or bowl, so long as the patentable feature is retained, and held to include defendant's device. Webb Mfg. Co. v. Mott Ironworks, 136 F. 863. The device used in No. 733,059, held to be the mechanical equivalent of that adopted in No. 387,285, for an improvement in indicators for weighing apparatus, and an infringement. National Automatic Weighing Mach. Co. v. Daab, 136 F. 891.

83. McCaslin v. Link Belt Machinery Co., 139 F. 393. In applying the doctrine of equivalents, the courts discriminate in favor of a primary patent, while, where a patent is merely an improvement upon an old mechanism capable of performing the same results, a narrower rule of construction is applied. Avery & Sons v. Case Plow Works, 139 F. 878. The term "mechanical equivalent" has a broad and generous signification in the interpretation of a pioneer patent, a very narrow and restricted one in the construction of a patent for a slight improvement, and, in the interpretation of patents for the great mass of inventions between every use to which his invention may be put.[84] If he discloses it fully and clearly in one environment, a person who uses it in another and different environment, the change requiring no inventive skill, cannot escape infringement.[85] The doctrine of equivalents applies to patents for a combination although the measure of its effect in the particular case depends upon the position of the patent in the art to which it relates.[86]

§ 6. Duration of patent right, surrender and reissues.[87]—A patent does not carry with it any rights beyond the term of the patent.[88] The provision of the statute, that an American patent shall expire with a previous foreign patent to the same inventor, is plain and unambiguous and cannot be extended by construction.[89] It applies only in cases where the inventions actually claimed in the two patents are identical, and it is not sufficient that the foreign may disclose the invention of the domestic patent, where it is not claimed therein.[90] A reissued patent takes the place of the surrendered patent and is a new grant for the unexpired part of the term of the original patent, which, from the time when its surrender takes effect, is extinguished and legally dead.[91] Whatever presumption arises from the fact of the granting of a reissue patent, that new matter found in the latter was omitted from the original by mistake or inadvertence, is merely prima facie and places the burden of proof upon one contesting the validity of the reissue.[92] Delay in application for a reissue may avoid it.[93] In the specification of a reissued patent, even though the changes in the description are not material and the claims are identical with some in the original, such facts do not affect their validity.[94]

§ 7. Disclaimer and abandonment.[95]—The purpose of a disclaimer after issue is to take out of a patent what has been mistakenly or inadvertently included in it, by which it is made too broad.[96] Such disclaimer must be of some distinctive these extremes, its meaning is always proportioned to the character of the advance or invention under consideration. Mallon v. William C. Gregg Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 68.

84. Sanitary Fire Proofing & Contracting Co. v. Sprickerhoff [C. C. A.] 139 F. 801, rvg. 131 F. 868.

85. Sanitary Fire Proofing & Contracting Co. v. Sprickerhoff [C. C. A.] 139 F. 801, rvg. 131 F. 868. No. 555,693, for a fireproof wall, held infringed when used for more than one side of a room or shaft. Id.

86. Sloan Filter Co. v. Portland Gold Min. Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 23. No. 650,129, for a drip-coffeepot, accomplishes an old result in a more facile, economical and efficient way, and while not entitled to a liberal construction, is entitled to a reasonable range of equivalents. James Heekin Co. v. Baker [C. C. A.] 138 F. 63.

88. New York Phonograph Co. v. Edison, 136 F. 600.

89. Rev. St. § 4887, as it stood before the amendment of 1897. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Stanley Instrument Co. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 823.

90. Terms of Nos. 511,559 and 511,560, for an improved method and means of operating electric motors, not limited by prior British patents, because the latter do not claim the same inventions. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Stanley Instrument Co. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 823.

91. No rights can be predicated upon it; all pending suits brought upon it fail; and no judgment of any nature can thereafter be based upon it. Lattig v. Dean, 25 App. D. C. 591. It terminates interference proceedings based upon original patent. Id. An appeal from a void decision of priority in such a case will be dismissed and case remanded to patent office to be dealt with as law and justice require. Id. Rule 125 of the patent office does not change the above rule. Id.

92. Reissue No. 11,980 (original No. 642,059) machine for mounting ornamental composition directly upon circular picture frames, claims 11 to 18, held void as covering a construction not included in the original. Franklin & Co. v. Illinois Moulding Co. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 58. Reissue No. 11,913 (original No. 586,193) for improvements in transmitting electrical impulses and signals, claim 1, in attempting to claim broadly every form of imperfect contact device in the receiver goes beyond the original patent. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. De Forest Wireless Tel. Co., 138 F. 657. Reissue No. 12,085 (original No. 638,669) for a clutch mechanism, held void as not authorized on account of any accident, inadvertence or mistake in the original patent. Rawson & M. Mfg. Co. v. Hunt Co., 140 F. 716.

93. Delay of two years and three months between the granting of the original patent and the application for reissue No. 12,085 (original No. 638,669) for a clutch mechanism, held to constitute such laches as to render the reissue patent void. Rawson & M. Mfg. Co. v. Hunt Co., 140 F. 716.

and separable matter,[97] and may be made use of to avoid the effect of having included more devices than could properly be the subject of one patent,[98] or to remove an ambiguity.[99] Matters duly disclaimed cease to be a part of the invention and the patent is to be construed as though they never had been included in it;[1] but are not thereby admitted to have been a part of the prior art.[2] To be "a material and substantial part of the thing patented" within the provisions of the law providing for the filing of a disclaimer, that which the patentee really invented must be mentioned in the particular claim to which the disclaimer relates.[3]

§ 8. Titles in patent rights and license, conveyance, or transfer thereof. In general.[4]—A patent secures the exclusive right to make, use and sell the invention it protects,[5] within the territorial limits of the United States.[6] A claim of equitable ownership of a patent as against the patentee, on the ground of contract or estoppel must be clearly made out.[7]

Patent rights as between employer and employe.[8]—The obligation of an employe to assign to an employer an invention made in the course of his employment, does not arise from the existence of the relation of employe and employer alone;[9] there must be an express contract to assign,[10] and the right of the employer depends upon the terms of the contract.[11] No implied contract of license, arising from the circumstances under which the patent was taken out and the relations of the parties, can be set up in the face of a proved special contract of license.[12] But the employer may be entitled, under the particular circumstances of the case, to a shop right or license that will enable it to use such inventions without paying a royalty therefor, a right which does not strip the employe of his entire property right in his invention.[13] Unless compensation is contracted for, none is implied from a permissive use by an employer of the invention of an employe.[14] An employe agreeing to assign to his employer all inventions made by him during the term of his employment, the burden is on the employer to show that a patent applied for by the employe after the termination of the term of employment was made during such term.[15]

Royalties.[16]—A licensee is generally held liable for royalties even though the patent is invalid until he notifies the patentee that he will not be bound by the contract.[17] Where two Federal courts of equal rank and jurisdiction render conflicting decrees with reference to the validity of a patent, the patent and the decree sustaining it constitute a sufficient consideration for a subsequent contract for royalties.[18] The interpretation and construction of royalty contracts is governed by the general contract rules.[19] A mere failure to pay royalties does not constitute a cloud upon the title to the patents;[20] nor is a refusal to pay royalties due ground for rescission of the royalty contract,[21] in the absence of any provisions for forfeiture for nonpayment.[22] An ordinary royalty contract does not create a partnership, a joint adventure, nor any relation which justifies an accounting in equity,[23] but an action to recover royalties under such contract is one at law, which defendant is entitled to have tried before a jury.[24] One is entitled to royalties on articles made and sold pending an appeal.[25] Suit must be brought within the period of limitations.[26] The validity of plaintiff's patent being doubtful, the court will not generally determine his right to future royalties.[27] In Louisiana the privilege granted to landlords to sue for rent not due when the tenant abandons the house or farm leased has no application to a suit by a lessor of patented machines to recover future royalties.[28]

3. Rev. St. § 4917 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 3393]. By the peculiar wording of the disclaimer complainant describes what it desires to insert in the claim, not what it wishes to exclude or disclaim, and in so doing describes something not before included in the claim. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. New York Air Brake Co., 139 F. 265. No. 401,916, for an improved engineer's brake valve, claim 7, is void as too broad in its terms and not cured by disclaimer filed. 13. The distinction between claims for mere shop right or license and those for the entire and exclusive property right in employes' inventions must be observed in reading the cases. The distinction is observed in many Federal and state cases. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen [C. C. A.] 137 F. 403.

17. Where in an action for royalties plaintiff admitted that, after a decree holding the patent invalid, there was a serious dispute as to the terms of the contract, held proper to charge that if defendant notified plaintiff that he would no longer recognize the patent or the contract before the sales in question, plaintiff could not recover royalties thereon. 19. Under a contract requiring the payment of royalties on all devices embodying the invention until final adverse action by the patent office the refusal of some of the claims only exonerates the vendee from paying further royalties on devices made and sold by it which do not embody the remainder of the claims. Eclipse Bicycle Co. v. Farrow, 26 S. Ct. 150, rvg. 24 App. D. C. 311. The obligation of the vendee in such a contract cannot be so extended as to require an account for the manufacture and sale of a new device, accomplishing the same results, but differing radically in construction and operation, which may reasonably and honestly have been regarded as superior to the vendor's invention. Id. Lack of novelty in a supposed invention does not, until final adverse action by the patent office, which is to terminate the contract of sale, relieve the vendee of its obligation under the contract to pay royalties "on all devices made or sold embodying the invention," where the vendee took an assignment of the inventor's right, title and interest, took charge of the application and agreed to defend infringement suits. 22. Where a contract in effect assigned all of plaintiff's right to certain formulae for a term of years, plaintiff could not terminate the contract for nonpayment of the royalties stipulated. Barclay v. Charles Roome Parmele Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 715.

24. Henderson v. Dougherty, 95 App. Div. 346, 88 N. Y. S. 665. Where the inventor of a device disclosed the same to defendant, one of whom contracted to pay cash royalties and the patent fees but broke his agreement, used the invention without paying therefor and sought to delay the granting of a patent, plaintiff was not entitled to an accounting, but his action was at law for damages. Griffith v. Dodgson, 103 App. Div. 542, 93 N. Y. S. 155.

25. Where defendant broke his contract to pay royalties and plaintiff recovered a judgment for royalties and for the cancellation of the contract. Bennett v. Iron Clad Mfg. Co., 96 N. Y. S. 968.

26. Where in an action for royalties there was evidence that payments had been made on items of a running account within six years prior to the commencement of the suit, held not error to charge that items arising more than six years prior to the suit were barred. Brazel v. Thompson Smith's Sons, [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 599, 104 N. W. 1097.

27. Where plaintiff's patent has been decreed an infringement on another patent, and the cause remanded for further proceedings, and where the holders of the adverse patent have enjoined plaintiff's lessees from using the machines leased, a state court will not undertake to prejudge such litigation, but will reserve plaintiff's right to sue for future royalties as they accrue and defendant's right to interpose any defenses they may have in the premises. American Machinery & Construction Co. v. Stewart [La.] 38 So. 960.

28. Extending during a period of 14 years. American Machinery & Construction Co. v. Stewart [La.] 38 So. 960. Where the lessor of patented machines alleged his right to recover judgment for future royalties on the ground that the defendants had abandoned the machines and refused to comply with the lease, held that the issue presented pertained to the merits, and that defendants waived no rights by not filing an exception in prematurity in limine litis. pends upon the contract and its construction.[30] A contract by an inventor, who has sold his inventions, to disclose and assign to the purchaser any future inventions made by him for improvements thereon, is not contrary to public policy, but is valid and enforceable, if based on a valuable consideration;[31] but, the inventor leaving the purchaser's employment, and both parties regarding the contract as terminated, the purchaser may become estopped to claim that new inventions made and developed are within the contract.[32] Whether a contract is an assignment or a license may depend upon the extent of interest conveyed.[33] A contract of assignment may be canceled for fraud,[34] and it is no defense that the one practicing the fraud and inducing the assignment did not personally profit thereby.[35] By acquiescence the patentee may become estopped to take advantage of a variance from the terms of the contract.[36] The doctrines of bona fide purchaser and equitable notice apply to the purchaser of a patent.[37] The vendee in a contract for the sale of an invention cannot rescind for failure of consideration because of the rejection of patents for some of the claims, without returning to the vendor those parts of the supposed invention for which patents were allowed.[38] A state statute requiring copies of letters patent and affidavits of their genuineness to be filed with the clerk of the district court is not invalid as an attempt to restrict the rights of holders of patents acquired under the Federal statutes.[39]

Under an assignment whereby the assignee was to construct the patented machine and if satisfactory manufacture and sell the same paying the assignor a sum of money out of the first profits, held the machine proving unsatisfactory the assignee was not obliged to pay the assignor such sum. Comer v. Byars [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 784, 89 S. W. 80. Under a contract for the purchase of defendant's stock in plaintiff corporation, giving plaintiff the right to make and sell goods under defendant's future inventions, plaintiff was entitled to the formula of a new wire invented by defendant and a mere offer by the latter to furnish the material ready to be drawn into wire was not a compliance with the contract. Driver-Harris Wire Co. v. Driver [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 461. The contract requiring the company to keep accounts of licenses and subject to inspection by the patentee, to account for his share of the license fees, a trust was created in both the trustee and the company, in favor of the patentee, which a court of equity could enforce; and a bill charging frauds and refusal to allow inspection of the books stated a cause of action for equitable relief. Harvey Steel Co.'s Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 297.

36. Where the legal title to a patent for a gas producer was assigned to a trustee for the benefit of a corporation, in consideration of the payment of a share of all royalties received from licenses, and the company afterward engaged in the construction of the producers with the knowledge and occasional approval of the assignor, while such operations were outside of the contract he was estopped by his acquiescence to claim that it was such a violation of the contract as entitled him to a cancellation. Duff v. Gilliland, 135 F. 581, afd. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 16.

37. A corporation which purchased the assets of an insolvent corporation owning patents subject to licenses to sell and use, with full knowledge of such licenses, was bound thereby. New York Phonograph Co. v. Edison, 136 F. 600.

Where the purchaser of a patent right sold without compliance with such act, seeks to rescind the contract of sale and to recover the consideration paid, and in the petition offers to return all the benefits received, and defendant contests the rescission, the plaintiff's right to relief asked and to a judgment for costs is not affected by an omission to offer to restore the patent right before the commencement of the action. his invention, and provide in a contract with a third person for the use of such invention, they are bound to know that the contractor cannot execute his contract without using the invention,[41] and the government cannot maintain that the use was an infringement by the contractor and not a taking by the government;[42] but an implied obligation arises.[43] A license to manufacture and vend a patented article which reserves the right to license one other person and binds the patentee to prosecute for infringements is a mere personal license and not an assignment.[44] A license follows the assets of the licensor into the possession of him who buys with his eyes open to the pre-existing contractual relations and existing equities.[45] In the absence of express provisions covering the duration for which a license is granted, the legal presumption is that the parties meant to continue their relations during the term remaining at the time the license or privilege was conveyed.[46] An extension of the term of a patent does not inure to the transferee of a license, in the absence of language expressive of such intention.[47] The insolvency of the licensee does not alone operate as an abandonment of its contract rights, it being willing and capable of fulfilling its contract obligations notwithstanding its insolvency;[48] nor does a breach of covenant work a forfeiture of a license per se, unless a condition to that effect be inserted in the agreement.[49] In a suit for breach of a contract to renew an agreement for the sale of a patented article in specified territory, the measure of damages is the value to plaintiffs of such renewal.[50] The grantee of the exclusive license to sell and use, by a corporation owning patents, can recover against a successor of such corporation with full knowledge of such licenses, for a wrongful invasion of his rights under the license.[51] The rights of parties are governed by the terms of the contract granting the license.[52]

§ 9. Interference suits.[53]—The section of the patent law providing for suits to annul interfering patents, gives the court jurisdiction only to determine the question of priority between interfering claims, that is, between claims substantially identical;[54] and this section cannot be made available by a complainant having a patent for one invention to annul a patent for a different invention, on the ground of want of patentability in the latter.[55] Therefore, the court must first determine whether the claims alleged to be in interference are substantially identical.[56]

three ways: By the unlawful making, by the unlawful selling, or by the unlawful using of a patented invention.[58] To sustain a claim of infringement of a patented machine, three things must be found: First, identity of result; second, identity of means; third, identity of operation.[59] The principle of the patent should not

A.] 135 F. 520. Mere identity of results is not the test of infringement. Fitch v. Spang, Chalfant & Co., 140 F. 292. If the device shows a substantially different mode of operation, even though the result of the operation of the machine remains the same, infringement is avoided. Cimiotti Unhairing Co. v. American Fur Refining Co., 198 U. S. 399, 49 Law. Ed. 1100, afg. [C. C. A.] 123 F. 869. It is not enough to establish infringement that two machines produce similar fabrics, such as may be used for the same purpose and may compete in the market, for entirely different machines, different in elements, in combination of elements, and in operation, may produce the same result. Scott v. Fisher Knitting Mach. Co., 139 F. 137. And on the other hand, if the results—the products—of the operation of two machines in the same art are different, that fact is not conclusive that there is no infringement, for the results may be due to a different way or mode of operating the machines. Id. But if the machines necessarily operate differently, and were intended to operate differently, and if one cannot do what the other does and was intended to do, there is no infringement, even when both belong to the same art. Id. Though the same results are produced by the same elements, there is no identity if they are arranged under a different co-operative law. To constitute infringement they must coact upon each other in the same way to produce the common object. Imperial Bottle Cap & Mach. Co. v. Crown Cork & Seal Co. [C. C. A.] 139 F. 312. If a machine cannot infringe in what it produces, in its results, it does not operate in substantially the same way, with substantially the same means to produce substantially the same results. into effect.[60] A patent being merely for an improvement upon an old way of accomplishing an old result, the prima facie presumption is that it is not infringed by a later patent upon the same old way of accomplishing the same old result.[61] A new method of producing an old result does not constitute infringement.[62] A change in nonessential parts does not avoid infringement.[63] Where a complainant patentee has accomplished a new result by a new means, a defendant cannot escape the charge of infringement merely by showing a later patent.[64] No one is permitted to evade a patent by simply constructing the patented thing so imperfectly that its utility is diminished.[65] Similarity to the eye of the ordinary man is the test of the infringement of a design patent.[66] One may patent a new and useful process and another a labor saving machine by which such process may be performed, but the use of the machine in the practice of the process constitutes an infringement of the process patent.[67] A device in one mechanism, to be the equivalent of a device in another, must perform the same function and perform it in substantially the same manner.[68] A claim for a combination is not infringed if any one of the described or specified elements is omitted without the substitution of any equivalent thereof,[69] especially if the omitted element is the only new feature of the patented combination,[70] or by the substitution for one of its devices of another one, which, if a functional equivalent thereof, is nevertheless found in the prior art.[71] A combination of the same elements to accomplish the same result but under a different arrangement, in which they severally perform different functions, is no infringement;[72] but infringement cannot be avoided by a mere change of form or location of one or more elements if the functions performed remain the same and they are performed in substantially the same manner,[73] or by adding a new function to an element of a combination which does not affect its performance of the function of the patent,[74] or by mere colorable modifications of some elements of a combination not essentially varying its principle or mode of operation,[75] or by substituting a different form of one of the nonessential elements, where the only novel feature in the combination is appropriated.[76] The inventor is entitled to the benefit of the doctrine of equivalents.[77] The sale of a patented article by the owners of the patent, without condition or notice of restriction of use, carries with it dominion over the article sold, and the vendee may use it as he pleases;[78] but the owner of a patent may sell the patented article under a license restriction that it be used only in a particular manner, and any other use thereof will constitute an infringement,[79] and purchasers and users are sufficiently notified of such restrictions by a notice thereof conspicuously attached to the machine, and are bound thereby.[80] The part that gives sole patentability to a combination may not be replaced by a Contributory infringement.—One making and selling one element of a combination covered by a patent, with the intention and for the purpose of bringing about its use in such a combination,[82] or one aiding or assisting another in violating the conditions imposed by the patentee upon the use of his invention,[83] is liable.

(§ 10) B. Defenses.[84]—In a suit for infringement the lack of legal authority in the commissioner of patents to issue the same may be pleaded in defense.[85] A prior judgment cannot be pleaded in bar to a suit for infringement on the ground that defendant virtually defended the former action, when during the trial it persistently declined to admit any connection therewith, and afterward, in another suit, filed a sworn answer denying such connection.[86] To maintain the defense of prior public use and sale of a device,[87] or to establish the claim of prior invention,[88] the proofs must be clear, satisfactory, and beyond a reasonable doubt. Laches will bar one from suing for infringement;[89] but estoppel, laches, or implied license, is not made out by the complainant's delay in bringing suit for infringement during the pendency of a test suit involving the validity of the patent,[90] and mere delay in bringing suit for infringement of a patent will not prevent the owner thereof from obtaining relief in a court of equity when the infringement has been persisted in with knowledge of the existenee of the patent, and no acts on the part of the patentee to encourage its use.[91] Where the assignee of a patent sues the patentee for infringement, the latter is estopped to insist upon so narrow a construction of the patent as to virtually render it valueless.[92]

81. An attempted generalization of the cases in which an element of a patented combination may be replaced by the purchaser, of his own authority, is as follows: (1) When its consumption was the very purpose of the device; (2) when its use upon external objects must work its early destruction; (3) when it was intended to be destroyed and was destroyed after a single use, and became waste material; (4) when in the arrangement of an element, not the chief element, it is so fashioned and placed as to be specially subjected to external forces that make it peculiarly liable to breakage and wear, like the knuckle in the car coupler; (5) when it is not the chief part of the combination, like the trolley stand; (6) when it is an ordinary working part, like the cam in actuating machinery, although specially adapted for the proper operation of the device, the decision being broad enough to cover a cam which is the most essential element in a combination. But a part of a combination may not be replaced by the purchaser when it is the vital element of the combination, in fact and in regard to patentability, especially when it is not intended to be of short life by the action of external forces thereon. Morrin v. Robert White Engineering Works, 138 F. 68. The refitting of steam generators (patent No. 463,307) with new tubes by defendant, under contracts with the purchasers thereof, held to be an infringement. Id.

89. Where a patentee had full knowledge of a device made by another, and made no claim of infringement for five years, he could not put a different construction on his patent just before its expiration for the purpose of making out an infringement. McGill v. Whitehead & Hoag Co., 137 F. 97. Where the complainant himself infringed the patent prior to acquiring ownership therein (No. 473,338, for an improvement in automatic music-playing instruments), and for 12 years the general public used it in competition with the owners, who failed to mark the device "patented" as required by law, or to give notice of the patent, permitting thereby the investment of much capital and the sale of many machines, it was inequitable to restrain the use of the device. (§ 10) C. Damages, profits, and penalties.[93]—In a suit for infringement in a proper case, both profits and damages are recoverable,[94] one item of which damages may be the amount saved by defendant by the use of the patented device in lieu of the device previously used by him;[95] but the patentee, in case of infringement of a patent for a device constituting only one feature of the machine sold, must satisfactorily show the profits and damages, and apportion them between the patented and unpatented features,[96] or show that the profits and damages are to be calculated on the whole machine for the reason that the entire value of the whole, as a marketable article, is properly and legally attributable to the patented feature.[97] The question whether a machine would or would not have been marketable without the patented part is a question of fact[98] depending largely upon opinion evidence,[99] the most satisfactory of which is that afforded by the nature and extrinsic value of the improvement introduced into the art or industry in which the machine is employed.[1] The injury being nominal, only nominal damages can be recovered.[2]

(§ 10) D. Remedies and procedure.[3]—A court of equity, having jurisdiction of a suit by the owner of a patent to enjoin its infringement and to recover damages for past infringement, does not lose it by the assignment, pending the suit, of the patent to another, who is brought in by a supplemental bill under federal equity rule 57, but may proceed to grant an injunction and award damages to both the original complainant and his assignee for infringement proved during the time of their respective ownership.[4] Separate suits may be maintained between the same parties, in the same court, and at the same time, upon different claims in a patent, where such claims cover distinct and different devices, although in the same machine.[5] Claims for profits and damages arising from past infringements do not follow the title derived by a naked assignment of the patent.[6] A mere personal licensee to manufacture and vend a patented article is not a necessary party complainant to a suit for infringement.[7] Neither the officers of a corporation, acting within the scope of their duties,[8] nor an officer of a joint stock company, he not being a shareholder therein,[9] are liable for an infringement committed by the corporation or association. Such officer cannot be joined with the corporation

9. Where it does not appear that the president or treasurer of a joint stock association is required by law to be a shareholder, and there is no proof that defendant as such officer is or ever was a shareholder, he cannot be held liable for an infringement committed by the association. National Casket Co. v. Stolts [C. C. A.] 135 F. 534. In such a case the appellate court will not remand the case with permission to amend the pleadings and introduce new evidence of such connection, nor to substitute as defendant the party shown to have infringed. Id.

merely because, as president, he directs the corporation's business,[10] and when the corporation is not shown to be insolvent, or otherwise unable to respond in damages, and there is no showing that the officer is making any colorable use of the corporation for his own benefit, or that he is personally interested, it is not equitable to subject him to the trouble and expense of a separate defense.[11] In an action for infringement defendant cannot have affirmative relief for unfair competition.[12] In infringement suits a decree in interference proceedings is not binding on one not a party nor claiming under either patent.[13] Where the patent is void on its face, or is shown to have been anticipated by prior patents, or when the presumption of novelty arising from the grant is overcome by proof of the prior art by facts of which the court may take judicial notice, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury to that effect.[14]

The statutory provision that no costs shall be recovered by plaintiff or complainant in any suit for infringement of part of a patent, unless the proper disclaimer has been entered before suit brought, applies only to costs in the trial court and not in the appellate court,[15] and only where a disclaimer is necessary to save the patent.[16] The mandate on appeal being silent as to costs, the trial court's decree in the matter stands.[17]

Injunctions.[18]—As a general rule a preliminary injunction will not issue on affidavits[19] or ex parte opinions of experts[20] alone. Public acquiescence,[21] or a prior adjudication,[22] may warrant the issuance of such an injunction, but unless there is some substantial question as to its validity, the fact that a patent is unadjudicated is not sufficient ground for refusing a preliminary injunction.[23] The infringement must be clear.[24] A preliminary injunction to maintain the status quo until the final hearing will be granted, in a suit to compel an assignment of a patent under a contract, where there is a reasonable likelihood that the complainant may win on the merits.[25] An injunction to restrain defendants from exhibiting plans, etc.,

Thomson-Houston Elec. Co. v. Sterling-Meaker Co., 140 F. 554. Refused where it appeared that only a small number of the articles was in use, and also that the complaint misrepresented the scope of the decision to defendants for the purpose of an invention, on which plaintiff was seeking a patent, will be denied in the absence of any showing that defendants were threatening to make such disclosure, or that there was any reason to suppose that they would do so.[26] An order granting a preliminary injunction against infringement will be reversed on the authority of a decision of an appellate court adjudging the patent invalid.[27] The injunctive order, whether preliminary or final, against a corporation may go against the corporation itself, its officers, agents, servants, and employes, so that each of them is as effectually enjoined from infringement as if made a party to the suit.[28]

Service of a copy of an injunction restraining infringement upon defendant's solicitors, and properly addressing and mailing him a copy, is sufficient to sustain proceedings for contempt in case of violation.[29] And service upon defendant's solicitors of notice of contempt proceedings, and mailing to defendant a notice of the application for an attachment and copies of the affidavits, by registered letter, is sufficient.[30] One who acts in collusion with defendants, aiding them to evade the injunction, is guilty of contempt.[31] The attempt to see how near one can come to an infringement and escape it involves great danger and is not looked upon with favor by courts,[32] and when one violates an injunction in so doing, the fact that he did so under the advice of counsel is no defense.[33] Where the court finds that the complainant is entitled to a part of the fine imposed on defendant for contempt in violating an injunction restraining infringement of a patent, only so much should be awarded as is sufficient to reimburse complainant for expenses incurred in prosecuting the contempt and loss sustained by the infringement.[34]

Pleading.[35]—An averment that the invention was not in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years prior to the application for the patent, is essential to the statement of a good cause of action for its infringement.[36] In a suit for infringement by an exclusive licensee, failure of the bill to allege that the license includes the exclusive right to make the patented article may be cured by amendment, where the evidence shows a license to make as well as to use and vend.[37] An allegation in a bill for an infringement that complainant is a corporation, organized under the laws of a designated state, is sufficient and need not be proved unless denied by the answer.[38] A supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review may be permitted to be filed to present newly-discovered evidence of sufficient importance, and not accessible before by the exercise of due diligence.[39] Where pending suit for infringement defendant begins the use of another alleged infringing device, the court may permit the question of second infringement to be brought in by supplemental bill.[40] In pleading defenses it is not sufficient merely to allege that a patent is void, but anticipation, prior use, want of patentable invention, etc., must be set up if relied on.[41] Where the answer denies that the patentee was the first inventor of the improvement described in the patent named in the bill, giving its number, it sufficiently raises the issue of invention, although the title of the patent as stated may be technically inaccurate.[42] A plea to a bill for infringement that defendant had leased its plant, machinery, etc., to another, and had not infringed complainant's devices since that time, and had no present intention of doing so, was insufficient in view of the uncertainty of the lease and lessee, and in view of the admitted infringement.[43] A defendant is chargeable with laches if he fails to present to the appellate court his claim of the expiration, pending an appeal of the patent claimed to have been infringed, because of the expiration of a foreign patent for the same invention, and the court may deny him leave to file a supplemental bill to present the question after the case is determined on the merits, except on terms.[44] The validity of a patent may be questioned by demurrer to a bill for infringement,[45] but such a demurrer can be sustained only where the question of invention is absolutely free from doubt,[46] and, upon demurrer, the court will consider only matters shown upon the face of the patent, and matters of common and general information, known to the court to be reliable and to have been published prior to the application for the patent.[47] A petition, in the nature of a supplemental bill, to bring in the successor of a corporation against which a decree for an injunction and accounting had been obtained, is multifarious, it also asking that such successor be required to pay whatever was found due on the accounting and all damages growing out of transactions with the original defendant.[48]

Interlocutory and final decree.[51]—A circuit court decree sustaining the validity of a patent, and granting a permanent injunction and reference for an accounting, although affirmed by the court of appeals, is interlocutory merely and not final on the questions of validity of patent and infringement.[52] A judgment generally binds only those who are parties to the record or assume control of the defense.[53] If any

Settlement and removal of paupers.[2]—A person may establish a settlement in a poor district by the payment of taxes, after he has received relief from such poor district, if it appears that the taxes were not paid out of money furnished him for relief by the district.[3] But the assessment of a tax against a pauper, not coupled with its payment or his recognition of it as an existing liability, is not evidence of his place of residence.[4] Statutes providing for loss of settlement by absence for a given period are not retroactive.[5] A married woman who lived with her husband in a town where he last resided, supporting himself and family, does not gain a residence there in her own right or derive one there from her husband, so as to make such town liable to another town in which she lives for support furnished her as a pauper after her husband's death.[6] The fact that a pauper joined a lodge in a certain town is not evidence that he was a legal resident of such town.[7] The county in which persons reside at the time they become paupers is the one liable for their support.[8] One who is not a pauper at the time of his removal and who is self-supporting during a year in his new place of residence acquires a settlement therein.[9] A notice by the overseer of the poor of the town to which such person has removed to the town from which he came that aid had been supplied, which notice was in fact untrue,[10] does not prevent the acquisition of such new settlement.[11] Statutes governing the method of perfecting appeals from orders of removal of paupers must be followed.[12]

Liability of municipalities for support and aid.[13]—The obligation of municipal corporations to care for and support the indigent and infirm is wholly statutory.[14] A county board may make reasonable rules and regulations governing the giving of aid to persons as required by statute, but cannot limit its duty to a particular class of persons other than those embraced in the statute, or make its relief dependent on infringement, but is not a party to the record and is not shown to have assumed control of the defense, is not concluded by such a decree for complainant as to validity of the patent, and so estopped from setting up new defenses in a suit against him for infringement. certain lines of conduct.[15] In Illinois the primary duty to furnish aid to poor persons not coming within the definition of paupers, who may fall sick and are unable to relieve themselves, is on the county and not on the city,[16] and a city which has furnished such aid and has given notice thereof to the county may recover the reasonable value of services rendered from the county.[17] Counties are not liable for services rendered poor persons unless there is a contract made by the proper county officers in express terms,[18] or unless the services are rendered by their request and under circumstances from which a contract may be inferred.[19] In Illinois, county boards have power to contract with physicians to render, by the year, services to such persons as the county is liable to supply with such aid.[20] A physician so employed cannot recover extra compensation for services called for by his contract.[21]

Repayment by indigent or relatives.[22]—At common law the furnishing of support to an indigent person raises no implied promise to repay on the part of the indigent.[23] In Oregon, the county court, sitting in the transaction of county business, has no power to adjudge a forfeiture against a relative of a pauper for nonsupport.[24] The statute gives the county court no such power, but only the right to recover against a delinquent relative in an action before a justice or court of competent jurisdiction, a sum deemed proper for the pauper's support.[25] In Iowa, a grandfather is not liable for the support of indigent grandchildren where it is not shown that the father is unable to support them.[26] To render a father liable for the support of an adult child, under the Iowa statutes, it must appear that the child is under some mental or physical disability.[27] The Wisconsin statute authorizing recovery from the father or children of the indigent, under certain circumstances, is prospective only, and no recovery can be had from a son for past contributions to his pauper father before proceedings to compel the son to contribute are brought.[28]

PAWNBROKERS.[29]

PAYMENT AND TENDER.

Scope of article.—This title does not include discharge by novation,[30] release,[31] or accord and satisfaction,[32] nor does it include payment into court,[33] nor matters peculiar to negotiable paper.[34]

§ 1. Mode and sufficiency of payment or tender. To and by whom.[35]—Payment may be to any agent authorized to collect[36] and is binding without the payor's tracing the fund through the hands of the agent and into those of the principal.[37] One who is given a note, secured by mortgage, for collection cannot rightfully accept anything but money in payment,[38] but if he takes a new mortgage on the realty, and by its use procures means to pay off the first mortgage before his authority to collect is terminated, his authority is thereby executed and the first mortgage debt and lien extinguished.[39] This is the legal effect of the agent's act regardless of whether the money in due course or otherwise reached the rightful owner, authority to collect being presumed to continue while he had possession of the securities.[40]

Manner of payment.[41]—The law requires that the debtor must seek the residence of the creditor for the purpose of discharging the debt.[42] Where money sent by an unsafe method not authorized by the creditor is lost, there is no payment.[43]

Sufficiency of tender.[44]—To constitute a valid tender there must be an unconditional offer of the amount tendered,[45] and it must be the whole debt due.[46] There must also be not only readiness and ability to perform but actual production of the money or other thing to be delivered.[47] A tender must be made to a

E. 1105. Whether person posing as "agent" was authorized to receive payment, held a question of fact for jury. Held v. Walker, 25 App. D. C. 486. Mortgagee assigned mortgage but did not have assignment recorded, and continued to collect interest for the assignee and to turn over coupons to the mortgagor without notifying him of the assignment. Held, mortgagee was assignee's agent and payment of the principal and interest to the mortgagee was payment to the assignee. Pennypacker v. Latimer [Idaho] 81 P. 55.

Where the maker of a note sent money to the holder by unregistered letter, before maturity or demand, and the money was not received by the holder, who had not authorized the maker to send the money in the manner and at the time he sent it, there was no legal payment. 45. Mann v. Roberts [Wis.] 105 N. W. 785.
46. Mann v. Roberts [Wis.] 105 N. W. 785. A tender which is made conditional upon its acceptance as a full liquidation is not a legal tender. Hess v. Peck, 111 Ill. App. 111. In a suit to remove a cloud on title, a tender to the holder of a tax title of a sum greater than the amount due is not rendered conditional by a writing stating the tender to be in full payment of two-thirds of the amount paid at the sale, and for taxes, costs, charges, and expenses, with legal interest, and also stating that it was for the redemption of the lot as to his interest. Glos v. Dyche, 214 Ill. 417, 73 N. E. 757.
47. Leask v. Dew, 102 App. Div. 529, 92 N. Y. S. 891. There must be actual pro-person authorized to receive it[48] and to the party intended to be bound.[49] Formal requisites of a tender, such as actual production of the money or thing tendered,[50] may be waived by some positive act or declaration of the creditor[51] amounting to a positive and unqualified refusal.[52] A refusal of a tender on a certain ground is a waiver of other objections.[53] While formal requisites of a tender may be waived, there can be no waiver unless there was ability to perform.[54] A tender under a contract is excused when the opposite party has repudiated the contract.[55] A tender must be kept up, but it is sufficient if the party making it holds himself ready to pay at all times.[56]

Medium.[57]—United States currency at the rate of exchange provided by act of Congress must be accepted in payment of an obligation incurred and payable in Porto Rico, where the contract does not expressly provide otherwise.[58]

A note,[59] draft,[60] order,[61] or check,[62] does not constitute payment of the debt

duction of the money. Bolton v. Amsler, 95 N. Y. S. 481, 482.

48. Superintendent and general manager of company, who was agent with whom third person contracted, was proper person to make tender to. Birmingham Paint & Roofing Co. v. Crampton [Ala.] 39 So. 1020.

49. Plaintiff was indebted to defendant, and the latter conspired with a third person and induced plaintiff to execute to the third person a bill of sale, representing that it was a mortgage. Held, a tender by plaintiff to recover the property was properly made to the defendant, he being the beneficiary of the fraud. Harris v. Staples [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 988, 89 S. W. 801.

50. Where an offer to pay at any time was made, but other party declared he would not accept it, actual production of the money was not essential to the validity and effect of the tender. Birmingham Paint & Roofing Co. v. Crampton [Ala.] 39 So. 1020.

51. A waiver of actual production of money must be shown by some positive act or declaration of the creditor. Bolton v. Amsler, 95 N. Y. S. 481.

52. The objection that a tender was defective is not available where there was a positive and unqualified refusal. Simonson v. Lauck, 93 N. Y. S. 965. Actual production of money waived where creditor declared he would not receive it. Birmingham Paint & Roofing Co. v. Crampton [Ala.] 39 So. 1020. Where agent of vendee in contract for sale of land demanded deed, stating that balance would be paid on delivery of deed, and vendor's agent refused, saying that his principal would not sign the deed as the price was inadequate, such facts tended to show a waiver of the tender of the balance of the purchase price. Miller v. Smith [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 249, 103 N. W. 872.

53. Where a tender is refused on the ground that the money was not derived from the proper source, the objection that the tender was conditional is thereby waived. Rankin v. Rankin, 216 Ill. 132, 74 N. E. 763.

58. Contract for sale of plantation in 1894 provided for payment in money current in the province at the rate of 100 centavos for each peso. Held, obligation due in September, 1900, could be liquidated with United States currency at the rate of 60 cents for each peso, under Act April 12, 1900, § 11. Contract did not require 100 cents for each peso. Serralles' Succession v. Esbri, 26 S. Ct. 176.

59. A note is not absolute payment unless there is an express agreement by the creditor to receive it as such. City of Philadelphia v. Neill, 211 Pa. 353, 60 A. 1033. A note is not payment but only evidence of the indebtedness. On default, the creditor may sue on the original demand and bring the note into court to be delivered upon trial. Hilderbrandt v. Fallot, 92 N. Y. S. 804. A promissory note given for an antecedent debt does not operate to discharge the debt in the absence of an agreement that it shall have such effect, but it does extend the credit until the note matures. Taylor v. Wahl [N. J. Law] 60 A. 63. The taking of a second note and mortgage does not of itself discharge the original security unless it is intended so to operate. Dawson v. Thigpen, 137 N. C. 462, 49 S. E. 959. A premium note is not payment when it expressly provides that unless paid when due the policy should lapse, as for nonpayment of premium when due. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Adler [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 835. Where as part of the consideration of a sale of property defendant was induced to assume the liability of the seller to plaintiff under an indemnity contract, held, defendant was not discharged from liability by reason of plaintiff's act in accepting notes of the seller, who was insolvent, as mere evidence of his indebtedness. Waas v. Anderson [Conn.] 61 A. 433. In the absence of a special agreement to the contrary the mere acceptance by the creditor from his debtor of a note or check of a third person to the creditor's order for a pre-existing indebtedness is not absolute but merely conditional payment, defeasible on the dishonor or nonpayment of the note or check, in which case the debtor remains liable on the original debt. Hummelstown Brownstone Co. v. Kneer, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 465. Creditor took in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary,[63] or circumstances creating an estoppel to deny an acceptance as payment.[64] The burden of proving such an agreement is on the debtor.[65] A debt cannot be discharged by gift of the creditor. The debtor must give something either in money, property right, or service.[66] Mere destruction[67] or surrender[68] of a note does not extinguish the indebtedness. The transfer and assignment of an indebtedness from one person to another is never a payment of the indebtedness.[69] Where the maker of a note is a member of a committee to which the note is assigned, the assignment is not a discharge of the note, such result not being intended.[70] A bond to secure repayment of funds deposited by a note, believing it to be indorsed as agreed, and on discovering it was not indorsed, objected. Held, he could recover on the original demand, though he had not returned the note, no demand for its return having been made. Spiro v. Maiman, 94 N. Y. S. 358.

60. Unless expressly so understood and agreed the acceptance of a draft from a debtor does not merge the debt or operate as a payment. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. McNair [N. C.] 51 S. E. 949.

61. Where in awarding a contract for the construction of a factory the owners specify that the contractors shall accept in part payment an order on a citizens' committee for a sum supposed to have been subscribed to secure the location of the factory at that place, and the contractor marks the letter embodying the contract "acepted," but it afterward develops that no citizens' committee was appointed and no money was raised. the order cannot be considered as absolute payment, and the tender back of the order not a prerequisite to the bringing of suit for the amount due thereon. Weller Co. v. Washington Gordon & Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 303.

62. Mere delivery and acceptance of check does not constitute payment and is not evidence of payment. Interstate Nat. Bank v. Ringo [Kan.] 83 P. 119. Giving a check which is never paid is not an extinguishment of the original debt unless accepted absolutely as payment. Sharp v. E. Nathan Mercantile Co. [Ark.] 88 S. W. 305. Book entry, upon receipt of check, is, in case of nonpayment of check, evidence of conditional payment only. Interstate Nat. Bank v. Ringo [Kan.] 83 P. 119. The giving of an order, check, or other paper in payment of a debt and its acceptance in due course of business does not constitute absolute payment in the event the paper proves worthless, unless it clearly appears that the paper was accepted in satisfaction and without regard to its proving to be of the value for which it was accepted. Weller Co. v. Washington Gordon & Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 303. Evidence held to show that checks were accepted for a purpose other than as payments on an account. Lewis v. England [Wyo.] 82 P. 869. Reliance on the expectation that a check will be paid when presented, depositing it for collection or credit, and drawing against the account thus created or augmented, do not make the check payment, unless it is itself paid. Civ. Code 1895, § 3720. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Pope [Ga.] 50 S. E. 374. Bank holding note for collection took indorser's check, which bank drawn upon said, upon inquiry, would be paid, the statement being made by mistake as to the check referred to, and surrendered the note to the indorser, crediting the amount to the owner of the note. The check was not paid and was returned to the indorser, who gave back the note, the owner being notified of these facts. Held no payment of the note. Interstate Nat. Bank v. Ringo [Kan.] 83 P. 119.

63. Evidence held to require submission to jury of question whether sublessee's rent note was accepted by lessor as payment of lessee's note or as security therefor. Crow v. Burgin [Miss.] 38 So. 625. If note was in fact given and received as payment of a cause of action it was payment, and the court properly refused to charge that it was only prima facie evidence of payment. Belknap v. Billings [Vt.] 62 A. 56. Where bonds were accepted by brokers as payment of a joint note, bonds being valued at their market value, this constituted payment so that contribution could be enforced against the other joint obligor. Hill v. Fuller, 188 Mass. 195, 74 N. E. 361. Mortgage held to have been transferred and accepted in part payment of goods. Mahuken Co. v. Pelletreau, 93 App. Div. 420, 37 N. Y. S. 737.

64. The wife of one who furnished materials to a contractor accepted the contractor's check and executed a receipt, and her husband took the check, indorsed and deposited it, thereby ratifying his wife's act, which was originally without authority. Held, though the check was not paid, husband was estopped to deny its acceptance as payment. Steffens v. Nelson [Minn.] 102 N. W. 871.

65. City of Philadelphia v. Neill, 211 Pa. 353, 60 A. 1033; Weller Co. v. Washington Gordon & Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 303.

66. White v. Black [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 1153.

67. Destruction of a note against an estate by a creditor who took the widow's note, which was without consideration, did not extinguish the debt nor the creditor's right against the estate. Grimes v. Grimes [Ky.] 89 S. W. 548.

68. Surrender of note to maker secured by artifice in return for a worthless check is not payment. Hogan v. Kaiser, 113 Mo. App. 711, 88 S. W. 1128.

69. Insolvent corporation was reorganized, and creditors of the old assigned claims to the new and took stock in the new in exchange, the indebtedness not being applied on the purchase price of property of the old corporation. Held the indebtedness was not paid, but new corporation acquired creditors' rights against the old. McEwen v. Harriman Land Co. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 797.

public officer is not performed by a transfer of credit from the officer making the deposit to his successor.[71] But where the hand to pay is also the hand to receive, payment is made when the accounts are credited and debited.[72] Where a draft is sent to a bank for collection and the bank accepts a check on the drawee's deposit for the amount of the draft, the transaction amounts to a payment of the draft, though the bank is in fact insolvent.[73] A certified check is payment to the amount of its face.[74] A corporate resolution setting aside real property for the use of the creditor may constitute payment when so treated by the parties.[75]

§ 2. Application of payments.[76]—A debtor has a right to direct the application of payments which he makes to such obligations as he pleases.[77] If he fails to direct their application[78] the creditor may apply them to such obligations as he pleases,[79] including even claims barred by limitations.[80] But if a payment is not actually applied to any demand until litigation is begun, the creditor's right to make such application as he thinks proper is gone.[81] When neither debtor nor creditor directs any application,[82] or when the creditor has lost his right to apply a payment as he chooses,[83] the law will make such application as equity and justice may require. A partial payment made on an account, no particular application being directed or made at the time, is applied by law to the oldest items of the account.[84] But where a creditor has part of his debt secured and part unsecured,

71. Where a bank in which public money was deposited gave a bond to the county treasurer or his successor, held that the giving of a check for the amount of the deposit by the treasurer to his successor did not amount to a payment relieving the bank on the bond. Buhrer v. Baldwin [Mich.] 100 N. W. 468.

72. Where depositor draws check on bank on a deposit in the bank, payable to the bank, a transfer of the amount from one account to another would constitute payment. Patterson v. First Nat. Bank [Neb.] 102 N. W. 765.

73. The depositor of the draft and the bank then become creditor and debtor, the proceeds of the check being mingled with general funds of the bank, and the depositor has no preference over other creditors when the bank closes its doors. 75. Corporation being unable to repay loan passed a resolution setting aside lots to be sold on the creditor's account, and thereafter recognized such lots as belonging to her, paying to her the proceeds of such as were sold. Held the lots were given as payment of the debt and the creditor was entitled to have the remainder sold for her benefit. Gulfport Land & Improvement Co. v, Ansley [Miss.] 40 So. 66.

77. Civ. Code § 1479. Frutig v. Trafton [Cal. App.] 83 P. 70. The debtor in the first instance has the right to designate upon what indebtedness a payment made by him shall be applied, and the creditor is bound so to apply it. Saffer v. Lambert, 111 Ill. App. 410.

78. Where payments were made simply to "apply on account," it was held there was no direction to apply them on a portion of the account secured by note and mortgage, rather than on the current account. Frutig v. Trafton [Cal. App.] 83 P. 70. Whether payments were in fact made and whether any application of them had been directed or acquiesced in by the debtor, held issues for the jury. Howver v. Ingalls, 93 Minn. 371, 101 N. W. 604. Finding that debtor did not direct application of payment erroneous, where debtor sent letter same day as money was expressed directing application, which letter was not received by creditor and receipt showing different application was returned by debtor with further direction as to application to be made. William Mulherin Sons & Co. v. Stansell, 70 S. C. 568, 50 S. E. 497.

79. Evidence held to show application of payments to entire account, including a portion secured by note and mortgage, rather than on the current portion of the account. Frutig v. Trafton [Cal. App.] 83 P. 70. Where a payment is made by a debtor to his creditor, who has more than one demand against him, and no directions are given upon which demand to apply the same, the creditor may apply it upon either. Howver v. Ingalls, 93 Minn. 371, 101 N. W. 604; Austin v. Southern Home Bldg. & Loan Ass'n [Ga.] 50 S. E. 382. When debtor made no appropriation of proceeds of property covered by two mortgages, the mortgagee could apply the same to either debt. Lyon v. Bass [Ark.] 89 S. W. 849.

80. Where money or other property is delivered by way of payment without direction as to its application, the creditor may apply it upon any claim that is due, whether barred by limitations or not. McDowell v. McDowell's Estate, 75 Vt. 401, 56 A. 98.

the law does not apply the payment to the older items of the account, but to the unsecured debt.[85] When money is derived from a particular source or fund, payment must be applied to the relief of such source or fund unless there is a mutual agreement to apply it otherwise.[86] Where mortgagors are given additional time to pay a balance due under a settlement, and allowed to remain on the land, payments made as rent will be applied, after deducting interest and taxes, on the mortgage debt.[87] Where the debt is in the form of a lien reserved in a deed, and specific application was made by the parties of the early payments to the extinguishment of the lien, subsequent payments in the absence of circumstances indicating the contrary will be presumed to have been made for the same purpose.[88] In the absence of equitable considerations, payments made by a debtor to a creditor without designating their application should be applied to the only debt shown to exist.[89]

§ 3. Effect of payment or tender.[90]—Payment of a note secured by mortgage extinguishes the lien of the mortgage without any satisfaction thereof of record or in writing.[91] Payment in full by one of two or more joint obligors extinguishes the obligation,[92] but a decree of distribution of the estate of a payee of a note awarding the note to one of the joint makers, is not a payment of the note or an extinguishment of the obligation of the other debtor.[93] A compulsory payment may be avoided by placing the payee in statu quo.[94] A payment by mistake to the wrong party does not affect the creditor's right to recover.[95]

A valid tender precludes recovery of interest[96] and throws costs upon plaintiff, if he fails to recover more than the amount tendered,[97] but a tender of a sum less than that subsequently recovered is ineffectual to defeat a recovery of costs.[98] Where the defendant tenders and pays into court a sum of money less than the amount claimed by the plaintiff and said tender is refused and judgment rendered for more than the amount tendered, upon appeal by the defendant, plaintiff may withdraw the money tendered and apply it on his claim without barring his right to proceed for the balance claimed.[99] A tender of the amount due for stock may render a sale thereof for nonpayment void.[1] A conditional tender which is refused

Where there are no directions as to the application of payments, and the payment arises out of proceeds of property on which the creditor had a lien, the law will apply it to the debt secured by such lien. Saffer v. Lambert, 111 Ill. App. 410. When property is mortgaged to secure a debt and the property is afterwards sold and the proceeds turned over to the mortgagee, the presumption is that both parties intend to apply the payment on the mortgage debt and the mortgagee may so apply it, though such debt is not due. Lyon v. Bass [Ark.] 89 S. W. 849. Creditor advanced money so that debtor could carry on his business, and after sale of the property turned the proceeds over to the creditor. Held proper to apply proceeds to repay advances rather than on prior debt secured by deed given by debtor and his wife. Id.

and the condition of which is never fulfilled or complied with is ineffective as an admission.[2] In Colorado tender by a defendant is deemed to be withdrawn and cannot be proven by plaintiff unless the latter accepts the offer and gives notice thereof within five days.[3]

§ 4. Payment or tender as an issue. A. Pleading.[4]—Payment is a question of fact, not of law, and should be set up by plea or answer, not by demurrer.[5] A self-contradictory plea is bad.[6] Where plaintiffs allege breach of a contract by failure to pay and that there is a sum due, defendants may prove payment under a general denial.[7] Proof of a gift by the creditor is inadmissible under a plea of payment.[8] Failure of a mortgagee, who takes the mortgaged property by virtue of his contract, to apply such property on the mortgage debt, is matter of defense in a suit to recover the balance of the debt.[9]

(§ 4) B. Evidence. Burden of proof.[10]—In an action on contract for the payment of money the burden of proving payment is on the party alleging it.[11]

Where depositor draws a check on a deposit payable to the bank or order for the purpose, as the depositor claims, of changing a general deposit to a time deposit, and the check is indorsed "paid" and the bank seeks to avoid liability by a plea of payment, the burden is on the bank to prove payment to a third person at the request of the depositor. Evidence held sufficient to show payment of note and that renewal note was without consideration. Hence, decree refusing foreclosure of mortgage, and setting it aside affirmed. Campbell v. Miller [Neb.] 103 N. W. 434. Payment held proved by witness who was present when parties settled, though proof by original parties was impossible. Eakle v. Hagan [Md.] 60 A. 615. In action by an estate on notes in possession of obligor, who alleged a settlement whereby notes had been surrendered, evidence held

When an action is not upon contract for the payment of money, but is upon an obligation created by operation of law, or is for the enforcement of a lien where nonpayment of the amount secured is part of the cause of action, the fact of nonpayment must be alleged and proved by plaintiff.[12]

Presumptions.[13]—The presumption of payment from lapse of time[14] is a presumption of fact only, rebuttable by evidence tending to show nonpayment,[15] such as the institution of legal proceedings by the creditors.[16] Where the presumption arises, the party alleging nonpayment must prove his allegation by evidence of more than reasonable certainty.[17] In determining the sufficiency of evidence to rebut the presumption, the relation of the parties may be considered.[18] The pre-insufficient to prove such settlement. Bray v. Bray [Iowa] 103 N. W. 477. Proof that a payment was made does not conclusively show that it was made and received on the obligation in suit. Whether it was so made is to be determined from all the facts and circumstances shown. Robison v. Bailey, 113 Ill. App. 123. Where in action on note defendant showed a receipt and a postal order to payee's order, the two payments being equal to the note, but failed to show that such payments were on the note, the defense of payment was not made out. Silvestri v. Saveriano, 95 N. Y. S. 580.

12. Burden of proving nonpayment on plaintiff in an action to enforce a legacy as a lien on land. Conkling v. Weatherwax, 181 N. Y. 258, 73 N. E. 1028, three judges dissenting.

13. See 4 C. L. 960.

14. A presumption of payment arises when more than twenty years have elapsed since the accrual of the debt. Ayres v. Ayres [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 422. Presumption of payment arises after 30 years from time when balance of purchase price of land was due. Berger v. Waldbaum, 46 Misc. 4, 93 N. Y. S. 352. Lapse of 20 years is presumptive evidence of payment increasing in strength with lapse of time after the 20 years. Luther v. Crawford, 116 Ill. App. 351. By statute, a promissory note is presumed to be paid after ten years. United States Wringer Co. v. Cooney, 214 Ill. 520, 73 N. E. 803. Where there was no proof of nonpayment and ward might have sued guardian for more than 10 years, the facts warranted an inference of payment. Love v. Love [Kan.] 83 P. 201. Fact that certificate of deposit was not presented for 24 years, held, with other evidence, sufficient to show payment. Rosenstock v. Dessar, 109 App. Div. 10, 95 N. Y. S. 1064. Though the lien of a judgment against a decedent in his lifetime continues indefinitely against his heirs and devisees, the presumption of payment arises, even in such case, after twenty years. Roberts v. Powell [Pa.] 60 A. 258. Purchaser of mortgaged chattel after maturity of mortgage debt may rely on presumption of payment of debt and will be protected unless the mortgagee has exercised reasonable diligence to find the property after maturity of the debt. Kimball Co. v. Piper, 111 Ill. App. 82.

15. Facts and circumstances which reasonably tend to establish improbability of payment are admissible to rebut the presumption of payment from lapse of time. Allison's Ex'r v. Wood [Va.] 52 S. E. 559. Presumption of payment of note by husband to wife rebutted by proof of acknowledgments of indebtedness by husband to the effect that he would pay his wife's sister if he outlived the wife. Ayres v. Ayres [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 422.

Note. Says a writer in the Michigan Law Review, approving Ayres v. Ayres [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 422: "A presumption of payment arises at common law after the lapse of twenty years from the maturity of the indebtedness which is controlling in the absence of evidence to rebut it. Hillary v. Waller, 12 Ves. Jr. 239; Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. [U. S.] 489, 6 Law. Ed. 142; Locke v. Caldwell, 91 Ill. 417. This presumption is only of fact and may be rebutted by evidence or circumstances showing nonpayment. Sheldon v. Heaton, 88 Hun [N. Y.] 535; Parker v. Parker, 52 Ill. App. 333; Fuller v. Cushman, 170 Mass. 286. In this it differs from the bar created by the statute of limitations as that statute when relied upon is conclusive although the debt was not paid. Devereux's Estate, 184 Pa. 429. An acknowledgment of the indebtedness by the debtor within the time relied upon to raise the presumption of payment will rebut the presumption. Martin v. Bowker, 19 Vt. 526; Brewis v. Lawson, 76 Va. 36; Carll v. Hart, 15 Barh. [N. Y.] 565. This acknowledgment need not be accompanied by a promise to pay. Breneman's Appeal, 121 Pa. 641; Colvin v. Phillips, 25 S. C. 228. And it is held that the relationship existing between creditor and debtor is an element to be considered together with other circumstances in rebuttal of the presumption. Knight v. McKinney, 84 Me. 107; Updike v. Lane, 78 Va. 132; Wanmaker v. Van Buskirk, 1 N. J. Eq. 685."—3 Mich. L. R. 668.

16. Record of action and ancillary attachment proceeding including judgment and executions thereon held admissible, though judgment was erroneous and suit unsuccessful. Allison's Ex'r v. Wood [Va.] 52 S. E. 559.

17. Party alleging that person who assumed debts in mortgage had not paid had burden of proving nonpayment where mortgage debts and assumpsit in favor of mortgage creditors had been prescribed for many years. Kuhn v. Bercher, 114 La. 602, 38 So. 468. To overcome this presumption the creditor must produce evidence of the indebtedness, or account for its absence, and also show that the debt is in fact unpaid. Luther v. Crawford, 116 Ill. App. 351.

18. Relation of husband and wife, together with acknowledgments by him, held to rebut presumption of payment of note given her by him. Ayres v. Ayres [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 422.

sumption of payment of a legacy from lapse of time arises only between the executor and legatee and never arises to create liability on the part of a legatee to a third person who should have received it.[19] Possession of a written instrument providing for the payment of money is prima facie evidence that the debt therein contracted is unpaid.[20] In the absence of evidence, an agent for collection who cancels the obligation of the debtor is presumed to have done so in consideration of the face amount of the claim.[21] A negotiable note or order drawn by the debtor and accepted by the creditor is presumed to be an extinguishment of an existing indebtedness,[22] but this presumption may be rebutted or explained by proof of an agreement, usage, or circumstances inconsistent therewith.[23]

Admissibility.[24]—Indorsements[25] and receipts[26] are ordinarily strong evidence of the truth of their recitals, but are always open to explanation by parol evidence.[27] An indorsement on a note not written by the payor is evidence of payment, whether or not limitations has run against the note, though not alone sufficient to avoid limitations.[28] Original entries in books of account are admissible.[29] The mere fact that the debtor has money of which the creditor has knowledge, is not evidence tending to prove payment.[30]

(§ 4) C. Limitations.—A plea of payment is not barred, though a suit or counterclaim based on the same transaction would be barred.[31]

(§ 4) D. Questions of law and fact.[32]—Whether payment has been made is ordinarily a question of fact.[33]

Burkhardt [Minn.] 105 N. W. 971. The words "In payment of note of 15 Dec. and fact which the depositary could not undertake to determine in favor of any claimant without hazard to itself.[34] Where in an action to set aside a deed plaintiff offers to pay the consideration into court whenever the court should order a reconveyance, which offer is not accepted by the defendant, it is error to require the plaintiff to pay the money into court as a condition precedent to his maintenance of the action.[35] In an action to recover a reward, payment of the money demanded into court to be delivered to the claimant found to be entitled thereto is an admission of the offer of a reward as alleged in the complaint.[36] The fact that a fund which has been withdrawn without authority is not actually in the registry of the court does not affect the power of the court to render judgment for the party entitled thereto, since the court has power to order restoration of the fund.[37] The court may take such action without pleading, evidence, or findings by a jury where it has knowledge of the facts making such action proper.[38] Where the question involved is title to a fund paid into court, the verdict and judgment should be for the successful party generally and not for a stated sum.[39] Discharge of a defendant on paying a sum claimed into court to abide litigation among other parties who claim it is proper.[40] interstate commerce,[48] equal protection of the law,[49] privileges and immunities of citizens.[50] A municipal license imposed upon peddlers is not prohibitive merely because it is burdensome, especially when it appears that numerous persons are engaged in the business,[51] and an ordinance which classifies and imposes license taxes upon persons engaged in peddling is not open to the objection of lack of uniformity of taxation, as it does not impose a property tax.[52] A prohibition on peddling in a specified county is not repealed by a general law for licensing peddlers.[53] Under delegated authority municipalities may enact reasonable ordinances regulating the business,[54] but the power of the state to license peddlers does not supersede the right of municipalities, under their granted authority, to license such persons,[55] nor does the granting of a free license to peddle to certain persons by the authorities of a county under an act of the legislature supersede the regulations of a city within such county.[56, 57] is to be determined from the intention of the parties,[62] the language of the contract, the circumstances under which it was executed, and the character of the subject-matter.[63] The validity of such agreement is to be determined not by the names given the stipulation but by the law applicable to liquidated damages,[64] and though the amount to be paid be designated "liquidated damages," it will be held a penalty if greatly in excess of the amount that would constitute just compensation,[65] but where the sum to be paid is denominated "penalty," it will be so treated.[66] While penalties and forfeitures are not favored,[67] and in some states are prohibited by statute,[68] and to prevent injustice and oppression a construction may be employed which is not in harmony with the language used by the parties,[69] yet if resultant damages are of an uncertain character the stipulation is usually held one for liquidated damages,[70] but not otherwise.[71] Where contracts are affected by a public interest, the damages are not susceptible of proof and the presumption is that the provision was intended as one for liquidated damages.[72]

70. When from the nature of the contract the damages cannot be calculated with any degree of certainty, the stipulated sum will usually be held to be liquidated damages where it is so denominated. McCullough v. Moore, 111 Ill. App. 545. Where the subject-matter of a contract belongs to that class which is not easily susceptible of proof of actual damages, and the language of the contract indicates that the provision was intended for liquidated damages, it will be enforced as such. Phoenix Iron Co.'s Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 526. Where from the nature of the contract and subject-matter of the stipulation it is apparent that the actual damages for the breach are uncertain in their nature and difficult of ascertainment, a provision for a certain sum is regarded as compensation and not a penalty. Calbeck v. Ford [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 82, 103 N. W. 516.

71. In contracts for the sale of land, the damages are capable of exact computation, and a stipulation by which an amount in excess of such legal damages shall be paid or retained is not enforceable. Lytle v. Scottish American Mortg. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 402.

72. Where a street railway company accepted a resolution of a township board granting permission to construct and place in operation within a certain time a street railway, and the company executed a bond for $10,000 to be void if it complied with the conditions of the resolution, otherwise to be of force, the bond was held not in the nature of a penalty but a fixing in advance of liquidated damages. Springwells Tp. v. Detroit, P. & N. R. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 164, 103 N. W. 700. Failure of a street railway company to comply with specified conditions in an ordinance granting it the privilege to lay a track in the streets is ground for forfeiture of the right if the ordinance provides for such forfeiture, and substantial performance of the contract as a whole is no defense. In such case the question of materiality of the conditions is settled by the stipulations of the ordinance. Wheeling, etc., R. Co. v. Triadelphia [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 499.

74. Courts will not enforce a forfeiture if there is any reasonable excuse for doing otherwise. Watson v. Gross, 112 Mo. App. 615, 87 S. W. 104. A provision in a contract for the sale of logs that if they were not delivered within a certain time they should be scaled 10 per cent for sap rot, and if not delivered by a certain later date they should be forfeited, will not be enforced as to the latter provision. Daniel v. Day Bros. Lumber Co., 27 Ky. L. R. 650, 85 S. W. 1092. In the construction of deeds. Union Stock Yards Co. v. Nashville Packing Co., 140 F. 701.

Statutory penalties are a pecuniary mulct for the doing of an illegal act not a crime, or which is wrong as well as criminal.[76] Statutes prescribing penalties are strictly construed,[77] especially where they create and denounce a new offense.[78]

Relief from forfeitures.—Equity will not permit the enforcement of a forfeiture in an inequitable or oppressive manner,[79] nor a perversion thereof to purposes other than those for which the power of forfeiture has been reserved.[80] In the exercise of such power, under an ordinance of a municipal corporation prescribing notice and specification of cause as a preliminary step, the officers of such corporation must deal fairly and openly with the party whose rights they attempt to take away.[81] Their conduct is governed by substantially the same rules and principles as apply to proceedings by private persons under similar circumstances.[82] In order to be inequitable and oppressive their conduct need not be actually fraudu-legal fee, the illegal charge is proved by plaintiff and admitted by defendant, it is error to submit the question whether or not the statute has been violated. Wilson v. Barrett, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 68. A clause in a contract for the sale of timber to be measured and paid for each month before removal, and if the purchaser fail to have such timber measured and pay for the same each month he shall forfeit all right to the timber whether cut or not, and all payments made on account thereof, is to prevent the accrual of a large indebtedness under the contract. Buskirk Bros. v. Peck, 57 W. Va. 360, 50 S. E. 432. A street railway license or privilege in a street may be forfeited for failure to lay planks of prescribed dimensions along the rails of its track in front of improved property if the ordinance expressly gives the right to forfeit for such cause. Wheeling, etc., R. Co. v. Triadelphia [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 499.

77. Under Act Feb. 23, 1903 (24 St. at L. p. 81), prescribing a penalty for failure of a carrier to adjust claims, but that the carrier shall not be subject to penalty unless a consignee recover the full amount claimed, no penalty can be recovered unless a claim be recovered by an action in court. Best v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 52 S. E. 223. Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 9060, prescribing a penalty for taking illegal fees by a public officer is highly penal, and if it appears that a fee was exacted for service he was not required to render and for which he was entitled to reasonable compensation, together with other services for which he was not entitled to a fee, it will not be presumed that the fee exacted was more than the services for which he was entitled to compensation were reasonably worth. Sheibley v. Hurley [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1082. The penalty attached to the collection of usury by the act of 1882 (18 St. at L. p. 35) applies to a contract executed prior to 1898, since the act of 1898 has no retroactive effect. Earle v. Owings [S. C.] 51 S. E. 980. The words "false" and "falsely" in statutes and contracts which impose a penalty or forfeiture for false acts or acts falsely done generally imply culpable negligence or wrong. They signify more than incorrect or incorrectly, and mean knowingly, intentionally, or negligently false or falsely, in the absence of express provision in the contract or statute, or reasonable implications from them, their subject and circumstances to the contrary. United States v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds [C. C. A.] 139 F. 961.

NOTE. Due process of law: A statute made it a misdemeanor for a third party to use a label that had been properly registered with the secretary of state, and by its 10th section further provided that the plaintiff "might recover from the offending party, in an action of debt, a penalty of not less than $200 nor more than $500, for the use and benefit of the plaintiff." In an action for a penalty under this statute, held that the statute is unconstitutional. Cigar Makers' International Union v. Goldberg [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 457.

The statute appears to be unconstitutional for two reasons. 1. In an action of debt the amount must be definite and certain. Gottlob v. Schmidt, 66 N. J. Law, 180; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 Law. Ed. 463. In the latter case the court stated that a statute allowing the plaintiff to recover, by way of penalty, twice the amount of actual damage suffered, is constitutional. The case related to negligence of the railway company in not maintaining fences along its right of way. The court said the statute provided a definite sum. 2. The amount of penalty should always be inflicted by some public agency. It would allow the plaintiff to discharge a judicial function if he were permitted to fix the sum in his own interest without hearing his adversary, and thus violate the 5th and 14th amendments of the United States Constitution. The plaintiff relied on the case of Piper v. Chappel, 14 Mees. & W. 624, but the facts are not similar, for in that case the penalty was inflicted on a member of the organization, in accordance with its by-laws, and not on a stranger.—4 Mich. L. R. 64.

78. Where it is plain and unambiguous it may not be extended by interpretation to a class of persons who are excluded from its effect by its terms for the reason that their acts may be as mischievous as those of the class whose deeds it denounces. lent.[83] Equity will relieve from forfeitures for nonperformance of covenants other than those for the payment of money arising out of mistake, accident, or surprise, and in the absence of willful and deliberate refusal to perform when no pecuniary injury has resulted to the covenantee and the wrong is easily remediable.[84] Its power to do so, however, is discretionary and will not be exercised unless the delinquent covenantor is able and willing to immediately perform the covenant.[85]

If there has been a breach of the agreement sufficient to cause a forfeiture, and the party entitled thereto either expressly or by his conduct waives it or acquiesces in it, he will be precluded from enforcing the forfeiture,[86] but failure to declare a forfeiture at the expiration of the time fixed for the performance of the conditions of a contract is not a waiver of the right to do so at a subsequent time if the conditions are not performed.[87]

A declaration of forfeiture of a street railway privilege by the repeal of the ordinance by which such privilege was granted has not the force and effect of a judicial determination of the existence of a cause of forfeiture and does not preclude a resort to the courts.[88]

Cumulative penalties.—The weight of authority is against the right to recover more than one.[89] In New York a party suing for a penalty can recover for but one violation or default prior to the commencement of the action.[90]

§ 3. Remedies and procedure.[91]—An action to recover a penalty is a civil action and may be brought in the manner prescribed.[92] In North Carolina a qui tam action may be authorized.[93] In an action prosecuted by the state in the interest of the public, the state is the real party in interest, though a portion of the penalty goes to the prosecuting attorney.[94] In an action to recover a penalty under a statute it is essential to allege all the facts necessary to show a case falling within the terms of the statute.[95] A general statute need not be pleaded or referred to[96] if it appears what particular statute has been violated.[97]

83. If in equity and conscience it is oppressive or lacking in fairness, equity will relieve, however honest and sincere the parties attempting to forfeit may have been. Wheeling, etc., R. Co. v. Triadelphia [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 499.

By permitting the accomplishment of the general result for the prevention of which a power of forfeiture has been inserted in a contract, and standing by in silence while large expenditures are made in the prosecution of the work after the accrual of the right of forfeiture under the belief that it will not be exercised, the party having such right waives it. PENSIONS.

State and municipal.[98]—In Illinois the board of trustees in passing upon an application for a pension exercises quasi judicial power and its finding, when made, is binding and cannot be reviewed by it except upon the ground of want of authority to act or fraud in procuring the pension.[99] The Illinois police pension act is not retrospective.[1] In order to participate in a department insurance fund, one must have been in the service of the department at the time of his death.[2] No pension can be granted a police officer who has been legally discharged.[3] Upon application a pension must be granted an honorably discharged soldier or sailor who has served on the New York City police force for 20 years or over, there being no charges pending against him.[4] The board charged with the management of a pension fund are not trustees for the beneficiary and accordingly limitations run from the time when right to a pension accrues, not from refusal of a demand therefor.[5] The school teacher's pension fund does not provide a bounty, but the basis of a mutual contract, in the nature of insurance; hence all terms should be given a fair interpretation, without favor, and where one does not come within the express terms there is no reason to strain them to include such person.[6]

Federal.—An indictment for procuring the presentation of a false paper to the United States pension office must state the manner of presentation and by whom.[7] The provision of the Iowa statutes for exemption of property bought with the proceeds of a pension applies only during the life of the pensioner.[8]

PERJURY.

§ 1. Elements of the offense.[9]—Perjury is the willful making, when under oath, in a judicial proceeding or court of justice, of a false statement material to the issue or point of inquiry.[10] The oath must have been administered by one having authority to administer it,[11] in a judicial proceeding,[12] in a court of competent

11. A false oath by a surety on a dis-jurisdiction,[13] or in some matter wherein the law authorized an oath to be taken.[14] The testimony must have been false, and known to be so,[15] and must have been material to the inquiry.[16] In a prosecution for false swearing under the Kentucky statute, the matter inquired about need not have been material to the issue then being tried.[17] It is enough if the court had jurisdiction of the case, administered the oath to the witness, that he was required to and did answer the question, and that his answer was corruptly false.[18]

Subornation of perjury.[19]—One who willfully procures or induces another to swear falsely is guilty of subornation of perjury.[20]

§ 2. Prosecution.—The indictment[21] must of course set out the essentials of the offense,[22] but need only charge in ordinarily intelligible terms such facts as will apprise the accused of the particular offense for which he is sought to be punished.[23] Facts showing the materiality of the alleged false testimony must be set tiller's bond taken before one who styled himself a "notary public and ex officio justice of the peace" constitutes perjury, since U. S. commissioners have power to administer such oath (29 U. S. 14. Under U. S. Rev. St. § 3165, as amended by 20 Rev. St. 329, and Internal Revenue Laws 1900, p. 47, § 321, relative to powers and duties of internal revenue officers, an oath before a deputy collector by a distiller's surety as to his qualifications is an oath in a case wherein a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be taken, within the definition of perjury contained in U. S. Rev St. § 5392. United States v. Hardison, 135 F. 419. One who swears falsely before a deputy internal revenue collector as to his qualifications as a distiller's surety is properly charged with perjury under U. S. Rev. St. § 5392, though the state law concerning perjury required the oath to be taken in a "judicial proceeding," other false oaths being punished as "false swearing." Id. One who made false affidavit as to ownership of property in order to qualify as surety on a bail bond was guilty of perjury. People v. Froelich, 96 N. Y. S. 488.

15. The offense consists in swearing falsely and corruptly, and not through mistake. State v. Mercer [Md.] 61 A. 220. Where charge was false swearing in affidavit for marriage license, and there was evidence that defendant did not know of the false statement contained in an affidavit, being asked a different question, defendant was entitled to a charge to the effect that he could not be convicted if he did not know of the false statement in the affidavit. Porter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 714, 88 S. W. 359. False testimony by defendant in prosecution for carrying a pistol that he "did not have in his possession or on his person" a pistol is ground for a prosecution for perjury, his statement not being duplicitous. 16. In prosecution for forgery testimony of defendant that he had not been convicted of forgery 16 years before was too remote to affect his credibility, and therefore not material. 21. See 4 C. L. 972.

22. See § 1, supra. An indictment for perjury in the statutory form (U. S. 5417 form 49), is not defective for failing to allege directly that accused was sworn by a person qualified to administer an oath, since a charge of perjury implies that an oath was administered. State v. Webber [Vt.] 62 A. 1018.

23. Goslin v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 90 S. W. 223. Indictment charging defendant with having sworn falsely while testifying in his own behalf in a prosecution for gaming held to have set out with sufficient particu-

out; a mere allegation that it was material is insufficient.[24] The true facts should be alleged in order to show the falsity of defendant's testimony.[25] An indictment which alleges that at the time of the alleged perjury there was pending before the court a certain civil suit, and in the same paragraph alleges that the action was for the remission of a fine, is double.[26] An indictment for false swearing in a prosecution for gaming need not allege when the game was played, nothing appearing in the oath of the witness on that point.[27] A presentment charging with perjury two defendants jointly in the same count is duplicitous.[28] In Tennessee a grand jury has no inquisitorial power with respect to the crime of perjury.[29]

Admissibility of evidence.[30]—The pendency of the proceeding in which false swearing is charged, at the time the oath was administered to the accused, should be proved by the record of that proceeding[31] which would also show jurisdiction of the presiding judge to administer the oath.[32] The fact that accused was sworn as a witness may be shown by other evidence.[33] The person who administered the oath may testify that he was acting as judge of a court of record.[34] This being shown, authority to administer an oath is prima facie established and it then devolves on the accused to show want of authority in the particular case.[35] It is proper to prove by an interpreter that he interpreted to defendant the oath administered by a justice of the peace.[36]

Sufficiency of evidence.[37]—In most jurisdictions the guilt of the accused must be established beyond a reasonable doubt by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and strong corroborating circumstances.[38] Whether the quantum of evidence required by law has been adduced is for the jury.[39] The offense must be proved as charged.[40]

An indictment for perjury alleged to have been committed before the grand jury must specify the nature of the matter then being investigated in order to apprise the accused of the nature of the charge against him, as required by Const. art. 10. State v. Webber [Vt.] 62 A. 1018.

24. Crow v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 559, 90 S. W. 650. An indictment charging perjury by defendant in an action by him for remission of a fine is defective if it does not allege that any fine had been previously imposed upon him. Id. The alleged false testimony being that defendant believed that a cause in which he was a witness had been continued the indictment was defective in that it failed to allege that defendant had been under legal process as a witness in a pending cause and had disobeyed such process. 37. See 4 C. L. 974.

38. This is the rule in prosecutions for false swearing and perjury alike, and the court should so charge. Goslin v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 90 S. W. 223. To sustain a charge of perjury the evidence must be at least strongly corroborative of the testimony of the accusing witness. People v. Sturgis, 110 App. Div. 1, 96 N. Y. S. 1046. Direct testimony of a single witness may be sufficient to support a charge of perjury if sufficiently corroborated to prove the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Rutledge, 37 Wash. 523, 79 P. 1123. In Washington, the corroboration of the witness need not be equivalent to the testimony of another witness. Id. In Texas corroboration must be tantamount to a witness. Thus, where single witness was corroborated only by an admission, not equivalent to a confession, by the defendant for whom the person accused of perjury testified, the charge of perjury was not sustained. Grady v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 38. The Texas statute requires two witnesses to prove only the falsity of the alleged false swearing; one witness is sufficient to prove the oath taken and what was sworn as a predicate for the perjury or false swearing. Adams v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 699, 91 S. W. 225. One witness was enough to prove what accused swore to before grand jury, where several witnesses testified to the falsity of his testimony. Hambright v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 36,

Instructions.[41]—The court should charge that before the jury can convict the guilt of the accused should be established beyond a reasonable doubt by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and strong corroborating circumstances,[42] and, when requested, should apply this rule specifically to a particular issue.[43] The mere fact that two witnesses testified does not justify the court in refusing to instruct that a conviction may be based on the testimony of a single witness, if sufficiently corroborated.[44] The court should define the terms "willfully" and "deliberately" used in the indictment, and should instruct that there could be no conviction for false swearing if the false statement was made by mistake or inadvertence.[45] Where the indictment sets out several facts as one assignment for false swearing, the state must prove the willful falsity of all such facts, and the court need not treat them as separate assignments in the instructions.[46]

§ 1. The rule against perpetuities and accumulations; its nature and applications.[47]—A suspension of the power of alienation as to realty and of absolute ownership as to personalty occurs only when there are no persons in being by whom an absolute estate in possession can be conveyed.[48] Future estates must be so limited that in every possible contingency they must terminate within the statutory period.[49]

91 S. W. 232. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, married woman testified that defendant procured her to testify falsely and her husband testified that he knew she was being urged to commit perjury and advised her not to do so, and believed she would do as he told her. Held, whether husband was an accomplice, or whether his testimony was corroborative of his wife's, was for the jury. People v. Gilhooley, 108 App. Div. 234, 95 N. Y. S. 636.

40. Where the charge submitted to the jury was that defendant testified before the grand jury that he did not buy intoxicating liquors without the prescription of a physician and not for sacramental purposes, and the evidence showed his testimony to be that he never bought any whiskey at the place in question and bought none there on the day named, the variance was fatal. Ray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 759, 90 S. W. 632. Indictment charged defendant with testifying falsely that a certain person did not play or bet at a game of cards with certain other designated persons at a certain time and place; the proof was that defendant testified that such person did not play at all; held, variance fatal. Stanley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 5, 89 S. W. 829. No variance where indictment charged that defendant swore falsely that he did not see or recollect seeing certain persons playing cards on a certain Sunday at any place in the county, and proof showed that he was examined as to games at particular places in the county and also in the county generally. 49. In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879. A limitation over, so conditioned that it may not take effect within the time prescribed by the rule, is void. Pitzel v. Schneider, 216 Ill. 87, 74 N. E. 779. If the contingent event can possibly happen beyond the limits of the rule, the interest conditioned on it is invalid, although such event will probably happen within the rule. Id. In the case of contingent remainders the uncertainty as to the time of vesting is

Since annuities are ordinarily releasable or assignable, a trust to pay them does not work a suspension of the power of alienation.[50]

An estate which could not be created by direct devise without suspending the power of alienation for more than the specified number of lives cannot be created through the intervention of a power,[51] but a power of appointment which cannot be exercised beyond the limits of the rule is not rendered bad by the fact that within its terms an appointment could be made which would be too remote.[52]

A power of sale does not avoid the statute where the proceeds remain subject to the operation of the trust.[53]

The validity of a trust to a foreign corporation, as regards perpetuities and accumulations, depends on the laws of the corporation's domicile.[54]

§ 2. Computation of the period and remoteness of particular limitations.[55]—If the terms of the void devise are clear, the language or part of the devise creating the perpetuity cannot be rejected and the devise sustained by mere construction,[56] and a void limitation cannot be held, under the cy pres rule of construction, to be good as to that part which keeps within the period of perpetuity, and void only as to the excess.[57] A suspension for a minority is a suspension for a statutory life.[58]

In states where the suspension cannot exceed two lives in being, a trust to pay income until the beneficiaries, numbering more than two, reach a certain age, is invalid if the intention is to create one period of suspension and one trust to continue until the youngest child reaches the specified age,[59] but if the intention is to fatal unless it must cease, and the remainders become capable of classification as valid or invalid within the statutory period. Provisions beyond those for husband and daughter of testatrix held void under Laws 1896, c. 547, § 32. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. No interest under a will subject to condition precedent is good unless the condition must be fulfilled, if at all, within twenty-one years after some life in being at the creation of the interest. Pitzel v. Schneider, 216 Ill. 87, 74 N. E. 779. Will vesting realty and personalty in trustee during life of testator's son and daughter, and after their death to go to their children, the share of each male child to be paid to him when he reached the age of 25, and each female child when she reached the age of 21, held to create void trust. Id.

50. At common law annuities are a charge simply upon the estate or upon rents and profits and are alienable, and hence a declaration of trust in favor of a college is not rendered invalid by reason of the fact that it is upon condition that, after the death of the settler, the college will pay annuities to seven persons during their lives. Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 103 App. Div. 327, 93 N. Y. S. 92.

51. Attemped continuation of trust after death of testatrix's husband and daughter for benefit of latter's husband, by power of appoinment of income, held invalid in that it suspends power of alienation for more than two lives in being, particularly where daughter's husband was not life in being at the time of the creation of the estate. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681.

52. Power which must be executed, if at all, by the children of the donee. Stone v. Forbes [Mass.] 75 N. E. 141. Gift in trust for benefit in equal shares of children living at testator's death, and the issue by representation of any deceased child, income to be paid to them until sons arrive at age of 30 years and daughters at age of 25 when principal of their respective shares is to be paid to them, a power of appointment being given to those dying under such age, held to vest share of each in him at testator's death, and hence gifts not too remote, though made in execution of power of appointment given to testator by his father. 54. Laws 1897, p. 507, c. 417, § 2, forbidding the suspension of the absolute ownership of personalty for more than two lives in being at the date of the instrument containing the limitation, does not apply where a trust is created by a resident of the state to be executed in another state. Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 103 App. Div. 327, 93 N. Y. S. 92.

56. Reid v. Voorhees, 216 Ill. 236, 74 N. E. 804. Testator bequeathed to his nephews and nieces the rents of certain realty to be paid to them yearly for 30 years, and in case any of them should die without an heir, his or her share to go to the living heirs. Subsequent clause provided that 30 years after his death he gave and bequeathed to such nephews and nieces, or their heirs, and if no heirs, to be divided equally among the surviving heirs, all said realty, which was to be sold and the proceeds equally divided. Held that the limitation of 30 years in the first clause could not be rejected and the devise be upheld as one in fee, but it was void. Id.

58. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681.

59. Since two older members may predecreate separate and distinct trusts for each beneficiary, each to be measured by its own term, the rule is otherwise,[60] it being immaterial in the latter case that the property is to be held in solido and that there is no provision for its physical division into separate shares.[61]

The construction of deeds[62] and wills for the purpose of determining whether the language used therein creates estates void under the rule is treated elsewhere.[63] Applications of the rule to particular estates will be found in the note.[64] cease the youngest before he attains that age, and suspension may therefore be for more than two lives in being. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston, 47 Misc. 475, 95 N. Y. S. 945.

60. If two constructions are possible, the above will be preferred so as to make will valid rather than void. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston, 47 Misc. 475, 95 N. Y. S. 945. Shares held separate and distinct, and trust did not violate Laws 1897, p. 507, c. 417, § 2, prohibiting suspension of power of alienation of personalty for more than two lives in being. Id. Devise of residuary estate in trust to pay income to husband for life, and then in trust for all children who attain the age of 25, the children of any child dying during testatrix's lifetime to take the share parent would have had had he survived testatrix and reached age of 25, held to create separate trust for each child, and remaincers being vested, trusts were valid. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. Each trust is limited by life of husband and by life of child, assuming that provisions for accumulation of income for children's benefit is valid during their minority. Id. Trust to pay income to several annuitants, even if regarded as a strict statutory trust, and even if annuities should be regarded as nonassignable, held severable as to the interests of the respective annuitants so that there would be a suspension of the power of alienation of that part of the income accruing to each annuitant only during his life, which would not violate the rule. Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 103 App. Div. 327, 93 N. Y. S. 92. Annuities held intended as a mere lien or charge on the income, and no strict statutory trust was created for the annuitants. Id.

64. Provisions held valid: Devise on condition that devisee pays all taxes, keeps up repairs, and does not sell or incumber the property until she arrives at the age of 40 years, with remainder over in case of her death under 40, does not contravene Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3382, prohibiting the suspension of the absolute power of alienation for a longer period than during the existence of a life or lives in being at the creation of the estate. Matlock v. Lock [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 171. A bequest of personalty in trust to be managed and controlled by the trustee until the beneficiary shall arrive at the age of 40 years, and then turned over to her without any restrictions, does not violate Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 8133, prohibiting the suspension of the absolute ownership of personalty for a longer period than the termination of lives in being at the time of the execution of the instrument creating such ownership, or if a will, of lives in being at the death of the testator. Id. A testamentary trust to continue during the life of testator's widow and for twenty years thereafter. Robinson v. Bonaparte [Md.] 61 A. 212. Will gave estate to be equally divided between four persons. Subsequent clause directed that share of one of them should be invested by the executor for his benefit during life, and for his wife and issue after his death. Held that he did not take a life estate in the realty, since that construction would suspend power of alienation for life of devisee, his wife, and issue, and would render devise void under Laws 1896, p. 565, c. 547, § 32. Mee v. Gordon, 104 App. Div. 520, 93 N. Y. S. 675. Devise to wife and children, "to be equally divided and equally shared among them after the youngest child of them shall have attained the age of 21 years," the wife to have the rents and profits during his minority, held not to suspend power of alienation for more than two lives in being, the period of suspension terminating on the arrival of the youngest child at his majority or upon his death before that time. Jacoby v. Jacoby, 94 N. Y. S. 260. Provision that testator's brother should, within three months after being notified of testator's death, elect whether he would occupy a certain house for life, and in case he elected to do so he should be paid certain traveling expenses and an annuity, held valid, the time given for election not being an illegal suspension of the power of alienation, since such election must be exercised within the devisee's lifetime. In re Trotter's Will, 104 App. Div. 188, 93 N. Y. S. 404.

Provisions held void: Devise to the heirs at law of person in being is void, since they cannot be ascertained until his death and may be other than his children. A devise in trust for the life of the beneficiary with remainder to "her lawful heirs" forever held void, under the statute of 1871, in so far as the attempted disposition of the remainder was concerned. Gerard v. Ives [Conn.] 62 A. 607. "Thirty years after my death I give and devise" realty to named nephews and nieces, or their heirs, or if no heirs, to be divided equally among the surviving heirs. Reid v. Voorhees, 216 Ill. 236, 74 N. E. 804. Bequest of rents of realty to named nieces and nephews to be paid to them yearly for thirty years, and in case any of them should die without an heir, his or her share to go to the living heirs. Id. Will gave residuary estate in trust to pay annuity to widow for life, and remainder of income to children until death of two certain daughters of testator, when estate was to be divided. Held that provision for widow was not independent of the trust but created a non-

Charitable gifts.[65]—In most states charitable gifts are not within the rule.[66]

Accumulations of income.[67]—In New York the accumulation must be for the benefit of one or more minors in being at testator's death, and must terminate at or before the expiration of their minority.[68] A direction for an accumulation for a longer period has the same effect as if limited to the minority of such persons, and is void as respects the time beyond such minority only.[69]

§ 3. Operation and effect, complete and partial invalidity.[70]—The fact that a provision is ineffective as a restraint upon the power of alienation of whatever estate the grant conveys does not necessarily render it inoperative to characterize the quality of the estate taken under the instrument.[71]

assignable beneficial interest, and hence trust was void as suspending power of alienation for three lives. People's Trust Co. v. Flynn, 94 N. Y. S. 436. In New York the same general test applicable in determining whether there has been an unlawful suspension of power of alienation of realty is applicable in determining whether there has been an unlawful suspension of absolute ownership of personalty. Laws 1897, p. 507, c. 417, § 2, and Laws 1896, p. 565, c. 547, § 32, are to be construed together. In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879. Where testator gave each of three daughters a certain sum per month for ten years, and provided that at end of that period residuary estate, consisting wholly of personalty, should be divided equally among them, the share of any of them dying without issue to go to the survivors, held that cross-remainders to survivors in case one died without issue were void. Id. If a postponement of division be for more than two lives, and until then the trustees are forbidden to sell a certain property, the restraint is invalid. In re Trotter's Will, 104 App. Div. 188. 93 N. Y. S. 404. Where deed conveyed property to grantee to have and hold same for benefit of himself and his children, held that a further provision that after the death of the grantee and his grandchildren the land should be the property of his grandchildren was void, under Ky. St. 1903, § 2360. Brumley v. Brumley [Ky.] 89 S. W. 182. A provision in a deed to "H and children" that "it is expressly agreed by the grantee in accepting this deed that she shall not sell, convey, or incumber, or in any manner dispose of the same, but to retain the same for the use of herself and her children forever," is inoperative both under Iowa Code, § 2901, and at common law. In re Keogh, 47 Misc. 37, 95 N. Y. S. 191. Where stock of corporation was given to trustees to pay income to beneficiary until a certain age, the shares "and any accumulations or earnings thereon" to then be paid to him absolutely, and corporation went out of business and sold its assets, held that the carrying of items representing the profits or increased price received at the sale, including the price paid for good will, betterments, etc., to the corpus of the estate did not violate Laws 1897, p. 508, c. 417, § 4, prohibiting the accumulation of income of personalty except during the minority of a beneficiary, they not being "income." In re Stevens, 46 Misc. 623, 95 N. Y. S. 297. where the two are in fact independent and are not for the carrying out of a common or general purpose,[72] but where they are so connected together as to constitute a general scheme, so that the presumed intention of the testator would be defeated by such a course, or if manifest injustice would result, the rule is otherwise.[73]

PETITORY ACTIONS.[74]

A petitory action is one in which the mere title to property is litigated and sought to be enforced, as distinguished from a possessory action.[75]

Plaintiff in order to recover must at least show a better title to the property claimed than the defendant in possession,[76] and must recover on the strength of his own title.[77] He has the onus of proof[78] and may be met by a plea of prescription.[79] He has no right in this action to call his vendor in warranty.[80]

PIPE LINES AND SUBWAYS.[81]

One to whom a natural gas company has agreed, in consideration of a right of way, to furnish gas as long as the pipe line is operated cannot enjoin the removal of the line.[82] A franchise to supply gas gives no such right in the location of its pipes that the imposition on the gas company of the cost of changing the same when necessitated by the institution of a municipal drainage system impairs vested rights or takes property without compensation.[83] Contractor of subway is not

Where a trust attempted to be created is an entire and complete scheme for the control and disposition of the residuary estate, and cannot be held valid in part and void in part without defeating in part the intention of the testator, and a portion thereof is void as a perpetuity, the trust will be held invalid as a whole and the fund distributed as intestate property. PLEADING.

Scope of title.—This topic treats only of the general rules applicable to common-law and code pleading. For the sufficiency of pleadings in particular actions reference should be had to the appropriate topics. Matters particularly applicable to equity pleading,[85] the necessity of verifying pleadings and the sufficiency of the verification,[86] and all questions in regard to set-off and counterclaim,[87] are treated elsewhere.

§ 1. Principles common to all pleadings. General rules.[88]—Pleading is the statement in a logical and legal form of the facts which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action or the defendant's ground of defense.[89]

While the codes have abolished forms of action,[90] yet, since their substance remains unchanged, good pleading demands that all averments material to equitable rights of action be present and appropriately well pleaded. Conversely, matters of equity should be omitted from the pleadings in a purely legal action,[91] and, so far as rights or procedure depend thereon under the codes, the parties will be held to the kind of action or defense they have pleaded.[92] Special statutory proceedings cannot be regarded as actions at law or suits in equity,[93] nor can they be annexed to such actions or suits.[94]

In code states the only proper pleadings are those designated by the code.[95]

93. Proceedings to contest an election under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 46, § 116, are purely statutory and not to be regarded as a cause at law or in equity. Quartier v. Dawiat, 219 Ill. 326, 76 N. E. 371.

94. A proceeding to contest an election under the general local option law (Pol. Code 1895, § 1546) is not an action at law or a suit in equity, but a special statutory proceeding which cannot be annexed to an action at law or a suit in equity. Ogburn v. Elmore, 123 Ga. 677, 51 S. E. 641. Petition

Where there are no written pleadings it is the duty of the court to so frame the issues after hearing the evidence as to develop the whole case, and to present to the jury the real issues of fact in dispute.[96] While pleadings in justice court and the like are informal, and the same strictness is not required as in courts of record, yet, before a case can be properly tried, there must be something before the justice by which the conflicting claims of the parties can be determined.[97] Where an additional party is brought in by scire facias, the pleadings should be directed to the original declaration and not to the writ.[98]

Material facts should be shown by direct and issuable averment[99] and not be left to inference or pleaded by way of recital.[1] Facts, not conclusions, must be pleaded.[2] Statutes in many states allow matters to be alleged generally which it held to set forth a suit in equity and not a statutory proceeding to contest an election under the general local option liquor law. Id.

99. Corbin Oil Co. v. Searles [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 293. In action for negligence the specific act or omission relied on as constituting a breach of duty must be stated in the declaration. Mere allegation or conclusion of pleader that a legal duty existed is insufficient but must state facts showing its existence. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Peck [Ind.] 76 N. E. 163. Violation of duty may be shown under general allegation of negligence, but such allegation is insufficient to show existence of the duty. Id.

1. Both at common law and under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 341, 342. Recital asserts nothing and hence cannot be met by denial. Malott v. Sample, 164 Ind. 645, 74 N. E. 245. Greenfield Gas Co. v. Trees [Ind.] 75 N. E. 2. Complaint for injury to servant held insufficient for failure to directly aver facts showing causal connection between negligence and injury. South Bend Chilled Plow Co. v. Cissne [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 282. App.] 76 N. E. 644. Every matter of defense presented by an affidavit of defense must be set forth specifically, and with such detail as to show clearly and definitely its relation to plaintiff's claim, nothing being left to inference. Caven-Williamson Ammonia Co. v. Ice Mfg. Co., 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 381.

2. Willard v. Zehr, 116 Ill. App. 496. If fraud is relied on it must be pleaded as a fact and the circumstances constituting it must be set out clearly and with particularity. Plaintiff desiring to plead waiver by defendant of conditions of insurance policy must allege condition claimed to have been waived and facts and circumstances claimed to constitute such waiver. General allegation that particular condition has been waived is insufficient. Glazer v. Home Ins. Co., 96 N. Y. S. 1099. Averments of specific facts or circumstances from which the court may see that, if they are true, the fact was probably otherwise than the finding, are essential in a pleading for the purpose of overcoming the legal pre-would otherwise be necessary to particularize,[3] but in such case the statutory form must be strictly followed.[4]

sumption that the determination of a question of fact by an executive officer to whom its decision is intrusted by the law is correct. That a note "was wrongfully converted * * * and fraudulently delivered to said plaintiff without the knowledge and assent of these defendants, or either of them." Id. Defense of usury must set up usurious contract specifying its terms and the particular facts relied on to bring it within the statute. Allegation that note is usurious and void held insufficient. Id. Fred Macey Co. v. Macey [C. C. A.] 135 F. 725. Allegations that complainant presented to commissioner of patents good and sufficient reasons for abandonment of application for patent, which latter adjudged to be insufficient. Hayes-Young Tie Plate Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 80. Mere use of words "fraudulent mismanagement," without averments of specific facts, in bill to dissolve insurance association on that ground held insufficient to render a demurrer an admission of such mismanagement. Polk v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 137 F. 273. In suit to set aside probate proceedings mere allegations that acts of executor were "fraudulent" and that sales were "fraudulently" made, without allegations of facts showing fraud, held insufficient. Williamson v. Beardsley [C. C. A.] 137 F. 467.

Averments held not to be conclusions: That a person named died seised and possessed of certain lands. Good after verdict. Pace v. Crandall [Ark.] 86 S. W. 812. An averment that certain land had been for years used as a public alley is not a mere conclusion because not stating the manner of use. Harniss v. Bulpitt [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1022. Allegations of complaint in action on official bond of county auditor as to unlawful retention of funds. Workman v. State [Ind.] 73 N. E. 917. That deceased servant was a passenger. Of notice to owner of furnishing materials to contractor in action to foreclose mechanic's lien. Robertson Lumber Co. v. State Bank [N. D.] 105 N. W. 719.

3. Thus it is in many states permissible to allege the performance of conditions in a contract generally (see Contracts, 5 C. L. 664), or to allege that a judgment has been duly rendered (see Judgments, 6 C. L. 214), or a statute duly passed (see Statutes, 4 C. L. 1522).

4. Where by statute an averment that a judgment was "duly given" dispenses with averments of jurisdiction, an averment merely that "it was adjudged" is insufficient. Mears v. Shaw [Mont.] 81 P. 338.

5. An unnecessary averment should not be required to be made more definite and certain. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Rolfe [Ark.] 88 S. W. 870. An assignment of a chose in action, even without consideration, is not presumptively void as to a creditor who becomes such nearly four years thereafter and such presumption is not supplied by vague and general allegations, but circumstances from which fraud may be reasonably inferred must be proved or petition will be obnoxious to a demurrer. Weckerly v. Taylor [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1065. It is not an abuse of discretion to deny a motion to make definite and certain by setting forth matters which are of public record. Tax rolls, etc. City of Port Townsend v. Trumbull [Wash.] 82 P. 715.

Allegations held sufficiently definite: An averment of the month in which a demand for cars was made, where the station at which demand was made is small. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Rolfe [Ark.] 88 S. W. 870. Averments as to alleged defect in switch lock. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Snow [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 908. Complaint in action by employe for personal injuries. Fletcher Bros. Co. v. Hyde [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 9. Complaint held not so indefinite and uncertain as to require it to be amended where notice of motion did not specify any particular clauses, but asked generally that plaintiff be required to show clearly what he intended to claim in relation to the performance of the contract sued on or its modifications as alleged, he being entitled to claim at the trial any legal inference arising from the facts pleaded. Pope Mfg. Co. v. Rubber Goods Mfg. Co., 100 App. Div. 353, 9 N. Y. S. 826. On motion to make more definite and certain, held that it sufficiently appeared on face of complaint that agreement sued on was verbal. Creech v. Long [S. C.] 51 S. E. 614. Complaint on building contract held to sufficiently set out the contract as against a motion to make more definite. Ekstrand v. Barth [Wash.] 83 P. 305. An averment in a complaint that defendant converted certain goods "the property of plaintiff then in" a city and state named will be deemed to refer to the location of the goods, not that of plaintiff. Phillipos v. Mihran, 38 Wash. 402, 80 P. 527. Petition claiming damages for death of railroad employe alleging the time, place, and circumstances under which it occurred, and that it was the result of the negligence of defendant's officers, agents, and employes, held not subject to special demurrer for failure to give their names, that being a matter which it was easier for defendant to discover than plaintiff. Pierce v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 468.

Allegations held not sufficiently definite: Allegations as to contract between plaintiff and defendant's testator, whereby former was to have half of latter's estate in consideration of services rendered, held too vague and indefinite to withstand a demurrer on the ground that it fails to set forth the terms of the contract. Cooper v. Claxton [Ga.] 50 S. E. 399. By a timely special demurrer defendant is entitled to the benefit of an itemized statement of damages claimed by plaintiff in a lump sum, when it appears from plaintiff's allegations that such sum is made up of distinct and separate items. McKenzie v. Mitchell, 123 Ga. 72, 51 S. E. 34. In an action founded upon negligence mere general averments of negligence are sufficient as against a general demurrer, but not as against a special demurrer on the ground that such allegations are too general. Hidgins v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 974. Specification of particulars cannot be avoided by allegation that plaintiff has been unable to ascertain particular acts causing the injury, and that they are more peculiarly within defendant's knowledge. Id. General averments cannot be aided by doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, of evidence should be stated,[7] but this rule is not applied with the same degree of strictness in equity,[8] and allegations of inducement are permissible when it does not appear that the opposite party is injured thereby.[9] since that maxim cannot be invoked to aid a defective pleading. Id. Complaint in action on contract of employment held not to allege performance with sufficient definiteness, or to show damages with legal certainty. Golucke v. Lowndes County, 123 Ga. 412, 51 S. E. 406. Petition in action for personal injuries held not to sufficiently specify acts of negligence relied on as against a motion to require a more specific statement. Sommers v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 319, 83 S. W. 268. A complaint for injury to chattels by flooding land should on motion be made more definite by describing the chattels damaged and the nature and extent of the damage. Berg v. Humptulips Boom & River Imp. Co., 38 Wash. 342, 80 P. 528.

6. Averments as to conveyance of property in fee, free of all incumbrances, held argumentative. Wright v. Craig, 116 Ill. App. 493.

7. Western Traveler's Acc. Ass'n v. Munson [Neb.] 103 N. W. 688; Alexander v. Du Bose [S. C.] 52 S. E. 786. Evidence of facts averred need not be pleaded, but enough of the facts themselves relied upon as sustaining the cause of action or defense must be alleged to enable the court to determine their sufficiency. Willard v. Zehr, 215 Ill. 148, 74 N. E. 107. In action for injuries to servant alleged to have resulted from failure to furnish safe place to work, plaintiff need not allege that master knew or ought to have known that it was unsafe. Owens v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co., 115 Ill. App. 142. Declaration in action for injuries need not describe injury in all its seriousness but need only show the injury received. Hansell-Elcock Foundry Co. v. Clark, 115 Ill. App. 209. A party is not obliged to set out in his pleadings the evidence on which he relies. Failure to allege that contract sued on was in writing raises no presumption that it was in parol. Anderson v. Hilton & Dodge Lumber Co., 121 Ga. 688, 49 S. E. 725. Only the facts constituting the gist of the cause of action need be stated, it not being necessary to plead circumstances merely tending to prove the facts alleged. Declaration in action against carrier for injuries to passenger held to sufficiently specify particulars of carrier's negligence. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Allen [Md.] 62 A. 245.

8. McGarahan v. Sheridan, 106 App. Div. 532, 94 N. Y. S. 708. More latitude is allowed in stating the facts and circumstances upon which plaintiff depends for the relief sought, particularly where fraud is alleged. Alexander v. Du Bose [S. C.] 52 S. E. 786. Not reversible error to refuse to strike out matters which are directly or remotely relevant to the matter sought to be established. Held no error in refusing to strike allegations in complaint in action to set aside deed as fraudulent. Id.

9. Certain paragraphs of the complaint alleging matters of inducement held improperly stricken. McGarahan v. Sheridan, 106 App. Div. 532, 94 N. Y. S. 708.

10. A denial of the allegations of the complaint "as alleged" as a negative pregnant is bad, and hence plaintiff is entitled to a judgment on the ground that the answer is frivolous. Hutchinson v. Bien, 104 App. Div. 214, 93 N. Y. S. 216, afg. 93 N. Y. S. 189.

11. An irrelevant allegation is one having no substantial relation to the controversy between the parties to the suit and which cannot affect the decision of the court because having no bearing upon the subject-matter of the controversy. Noval v. Hang, 48 Misc. 198, 96 N. Y. S. 708. The test is whether, if the allegations were permitted to remain, evidence in support of them would be admissible on the trial. Id. In action for criminal conversation, allegations in answer as to plaintiff's motive in bringing the suit held irrelevant and properly stricken. Persch v. Weideman, 106 App. Div. 553, 94 N. Y. S. 800. In action by assignee of part of claim against the debtor and an assignee of another part of the claim and the assignor who owned the remainder, held that allegations of the complaint that assignor had assigned part of claim to third person, and himself owned the remainder, and that he and such third person declined to join as plaintiffs, stated no cause of action against assignor and such person and debtor was entitled to have them stricken out as irrelevant. Chase v. Deering, 104 App. Div. 192, 93 N. Y. S. 434. In action for divorce, allegations in answer of cruel and inhuman treatment and nonsupport, constituting a counterclaim under Code Civ. Proc. § 1770, will not be stricken out as irrelevant. Mason v. Mason, 46 Misc. 361, 94 N. Y. S. 868. An allegation is irrelevant when the issue formed by its denial can have no connection with nor effect upon the cause of action. In action for personal injuries, allegations stating reasons why defendant was indifferent and careless, as that it carried employers' liability insurance, are irrelevant. Gadsden v. Catawba Water Power Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 121. Allegations that "injuries were frequently attending employes" in defendant's service held not irrelevant. Is matter in aggravation of damages, of which defendant cannot complain. Id. Allegations in action to set aside fraudulent deed held irrelevant. Alexander v. Du Bose [S. C.] 52 S. E. 786.

12. Immaterial allegations will be disregarded. Allegations of fraud in action to recover overpayments made to agent. Yonkerman v. Fuller's Adv. Ag., 135 F. 613. In suit by materialman on contractor's bond running to owner, where complaint stated direct and primary cause of action in favor of plaintiff, held that further allegations attempting to set up cause of action by assignment of bond from owner could be ignored if insufficient. Ochs v. Carnahan Co. [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 788. No issue can be raised on immaterial allegations. In action to recover for goods sold to receiver, allegations that though defendant had repeatedly promised to pay plaintiff he had not done and scandalous allegations should be avoided,[15] and sham[16] and frivolous pleadings should not be interposed.[17] Surplusage will be disregarded or stricken on motion.[18] so, and that sum sued for was due and no part thereof had been paid, and that plaintiff had been duly granted leave to sue defendant, held immaterial so that denial thereof raised no issue. Hutchinson v. Bien, 93 N. Y. S. 189, afd. 104 App. Div. 214, 93 N. Y. S. 216. An immaterial averment which may be separated from the principal fact without prejudice to the substantive cause of action requires no proof. As to venue in transitory action. American Mfg. Co. v. Morgan Smith, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 176.

13. In suit on contract between defendant and plaintiff's predecessor, allegations as to various steps whereby plaintiff succeeded to rights of his predecessor held not subject to be stricken for redundancy. Pope Mfg. Co. v. Rubber Goods Mfg. Co., 100 App. Div. 353, 91 N. Y. S. 826. Motion to strike out reply as redundant and irrelevant held properly denied where matter was not immaterial to the issue, and only objection was to its reiteration, and it was not shown how defendant would be prejudiced by allowing it to remain. Id., 100 App. Div. 349, 91 N. Y. S. 828. A denial in an answer filed in the district court on appeal from the justice court that the oral contract alleged by the plaintiff was made, together with a statement that a contract was made at the time alleged differing substantially from the one set up by the plaintiff, is not subject to a motion to strike on account of changing the issues from a general denial, since allegation that a different contract was made is a mere matter of evidence tending to prove that the contract declared on was not made. Such allegations may be superfluous and redundant, but do not change the issues. McGinnis v. Johnson Co. [Neb.] 104 N. W. 869. Answer in action for divorce held not to be redundant. Mason v. Mason, 46 Misc. 361, 94 N. Y. S. 868. In action for criminal conversation, allegation in answer that defendant refused to be influenced by plaintiff in establishing intimate relations with the latter's wife held redundant, since that fact was provable under the general denial. Persch v. Weideman, 106 App. Div. 553, 94 N. Y. S. 800.

14. While it is unnecessary and not permissible to insert in a complaint either a writing of great length or matter of any kind which because of its extreme obscenity would pollute the public records, it is always essential to allege the reason justifying its omission, and in addition to describe it so fully as to identify it. Complaint against physician held insufficient to justify board of medical supervisors in revoking his license. Czarra v. Board of Medical Supervisors, 24 App. D. C. 251.

15. Facts alleged in the answer which constitute a defense may not be stricken out as scandalous. In action for criminal conversation, allegation in answer that plaintiff introduced his wife to defendant, and allegations tending to show that he aided and connived at bringing about the relations between them. Persch v. Weideman, 106 App. Div. 553, 94 N. Y. S. 800. Facts pleaded as a complete defense, which would be demurrable as constituting only a partial defense, or as being at most in mitigation of damages, may be so stricken. This on the theory that the party aggrieved thereby should not be required to admit the truth of such allegations by demurring thereto. Id. Allegations of complaint, in action for damages for deprivation of civil rights, charging defendant and others with commission of various crimes, held scandalous. Wadleigh v. Newhall, 136 F. 941.

16. A sham answer is one that is false and untrue. "Sham" means "false." State v. Webber [Minn.] 105 N. W. 490. It may be stricken out, even though interposed in good faith and in the belief that it was true, in all cases where its falsity is clearly and unquestionably disclosed. Will not be done where a fair doubt exists as to its truth or falsity. Id. In proceedings to determine the right to a public office, answer alleging that relator was not a citizen held properly stricken. Id. A denial in a verified answer which raises an issue as to any of the material allegations of the complaint cannot be stricken out as sham. Issue can only be disposed of by a trial. Schlesinger v. Wise, 106 App. Div. 587, 94 N. Y. S. 718. Cannot strike out as sham denials of material portions of the complaint in an action at law whereby the general issue is raised, whether denials are absolute, or upon information and belief, or upon an allegation that defendant has not knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth or falsity of the allegations of the complaint. Schlesinger v. McDonald, 94 N. Y. S. 721. Verified general denial cannot be stricken as sham, though shown by affidavits to be false. Id. A counterclaim cannot be stricken out as sham, particularly where there is nothing before the court authorizing it to determine whether the allegations thereof are true or false. Schlesinger v. Wise, 106 App. Div. 587, 94 N. Y. S. 718. Motion to strike answer as sham held properly overruled where it was so framed as to raise important issue of fact and disclosed a substantial ground of defense. Whitaker v. Jenkins [N. C.] 51 S. E. 104. Allegations which are false and sham to the knowledge of the pleader and are interposed merely for the purpose of defeating jurisdiction of federal court will not be allowed to have that effect. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen [C. C. A.] 135 F. 650.

17. A frivolous answer is one from which it is apparent without argument that it presents nothing for adjudication. Mills v. Territory [N. M.] 81 P. 447. One that does not, in view of the facts pleaded, present a defense to the action. In proceedings to determine the right to a public office, answer alleging that relator was not a citizen held not frivolous. State v. Webber [Minn.] 105 N. W. 490. In action against corporation for sequestration of its property and appointment of a receiver, answer alleging that defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the entry of judgment against it, and the issuance and return of an execution unsatisfied, held frivolous, as judgment and execution were matters of public record, and facts in regard to them were peculiarly within defendant's

As a general rule it is not permissible to plead in the alternative,[19] though in some states a party may state all the facts out of which the controversy arises and pray in the alternative for relief.[20]

Allegations of citizenship necessary to confer jurisdiction should be exact.[21] The parties to an action should be named with accuracy and particularity, but when once named may thereafter be referred to as plaintiff and defendant.[22]

A declaration must aver a time when every material traversable fact alleged therein transpired.[23] By statute in some states, however, when time is not material, it need not be stated, and, if stated, it need not be proved.[24] knowledge, and judgment granted on answer as frivolous. Morgan & Co. v. Quo Vadis Amusement Co., 45 Misc. 130, 91 N. Y. S. 882. Separate defense that dissolution proceedings had been begun, which had not yet been completed, held ineffective, because such fact would not prevent irreparable injury to plaintiff. Id.

18. Where petition, claiming damages for negligent killing of railroad employe, taken as a whole show that deceased was blameless, an allegation in a separate paragraph that he was "free from fault," even if a mere conclusion, is not inappropriate and furnishes no reason for striking that paragraph or dismissing the whole case. Pierce v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 468. In action for injuries to servant, where declaration charges that master negligently permitted place where plaintiff was working to become obscured and obstructed by steam and smoke, further allegation that smoke emanated from a steamer through the negligence of another company held surplusage. Owens v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co., 115 Ill. App. 142. Recitals as to another sale by defendants to plaintiffs in bill by corporation alleging fraudulent sale to it by promoters held not to be surplusage. Old Dominion Copper Min. & S. Co. v. Bigelow, 188 Mass. 315, 74 N. E. 653. In an action for personal injuries a paragraph of the complaint alleging the service of the notice of injury required by the employers' liability act may be eliminated as surplusage where the complaint states no cause of action under that act but only one at common law. Kleps v. Bristol Mfg. Co., 107 App. Div. 488, 95 N. Y. S. 337. If the complaint states facts constituting a cause of action upon a contract, which is sustained by proof, the fact that it also contains allegations of a tort does not preclude a recovery, but they will be regarded as surplusage. Action held one for breach of warranty and not one in tort. Booth v. Englert, 105 App. Div. 284, 94 N. Y. S. 700. In action for libel, innuendo pleaded in fifth paragraph of complaint held unnecessary and to be regarded as surplusage, and not to reduce complaint from a general one on the entire defamatory matter alleged to a particular complaint on the charge of larceny and murder only. Nunnally v. Press Pub. Co., 110 App. Div. 10, 96 N. Y. S. 1042. Possession under a contract with defendant being alleged, averments as to the considerations leading to the contract and the manner in which possession was acquired are properly stricken as surplusage. Action of claim and delivery. Casto v. Murray [Or.] 81 P. 883. Allegations, in action for breach of contract to erect dam, as to former decisions for purpose of showing that question of defendant's liability was res judicata stricken out as surplusage. Montgomery Water Power Co. v. Chapman, 132 F. 138.

19. As a general rule to plead in the alternative vitiates the pleading. Complaint in action for personal injuries held objectional on this ground. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Peck [Ind.] 76 N. E. 163.

20. A petition asking relief in the alternative on the same facts does not state two causes of action. Judgment prayed for title of land or for recovery of purchase money and value of improvements. Watkins v. Collins [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 40, 87 S. W. 368.

21. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron [C. C. A.] 137 F. 48.

22. Poling & Co. v. Moore [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 99. There can be no judgment upon a declaration in which no one is named as defendant, and in such case the action should be dismissed in the absence of an amendment. Cannot adjudicate the rights of the parties and dismiss action. Id.

NOTE. Averments as to capacity in which a party sues or is sued: In the title of the complaint defendant is named only in his individual capacity, but in the complaint itself a cause of action is stated against him in his representative capacity. Upon a demurrer that the complaint does not state a cause of action, held that the demurrer should be sustained. Leonard v. Pierce, 182 N. Y. 431, 75 N. E. 313.

Courts have frequently held that the title and pleadings may be considered together to determine the capacity in which a party sues or is sued. Stillwell v. Carpenter, 62 N. Y. 639 (in full in 2 Abb. N. C. [N. Y.] 238); Jennings v. Wright, 54 Ga. 537; Rich v. Sowles, 64 Vt. 408; Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292. Thus where a party's name appears in the title followed by words descriptio personae, and the complaint clearly states a cause of action against or for him as an individual, the affix to his name in the title is treated as surplusage. Stillwell v. Carpenter, 62 N. Y. 639; Litchfield v. Flint, 104 N. Y. 543, 550. And when under a similar title the complaint states a cause of action against the party in a representative capacity, the action is against him in that capacity. Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292; Knox v. Met. El. R. Co., 58 Hun [N. Y.] 517, afd. 128 N. Y. 625. In the principal case a majority of the court refused to take a step further and disregard an entire omission of the officio designata in the title. They rely upon the case of First Nat. Bank v. Shuler, 153 N. Y. 163, 60 Am. St. Rep. 601. In that

An averment of venue is immaterial in a transitory action and need not be proved.[25] Facts justifying the venue need not be alleged.[26]

Facts judicially noticed,[27] legal conclusions,[28] matters which need not be proven in order to make out a case,[29] and duties imposed by law, need not be alleged,[30] and rights under treaties need not be claimed in terms.[31] A party is not ordinarily required to anticipate matter in avoidance of his allegations,[32] though he may do so subject to liability to have his pleading attacked by motion or demurrer.[33] He should, however, negative exceptions in penal statutes.[34] It is sufficient to allege a failure of duty imposed by a statute substantially in the language of such statute.[35]

Interpretation and construction in general.[36]—The theory of a pleading is to be determined by its principal and leading allegations, and from its general scope case, however, the pleadings did not supply the defect in the title. To be thoroughly consistent with the majority of decisions and the liberal rules of pleading allowed by the Codes it seems that the court might well have either disregarded the omission or allowed it to be corrected by amendment.—4 Mich. L. R. 242.

23. Otherwise is subject to special demurrer on that ground. City Council of Augusta v. Marks [Ga.] 52 S. E. 539. Declaration in action for damages against city for building sewer and maintaining dumping station, constituting nuisance, held open to special demurrer for failure to allege when sewer was constructed and how long nuisance had been maintained. Id.

24. Code § 3613. Plaintiff, in action on benefit certificate, held not concluded by allegations as to time when deceased became a member of the association, since time was not a material allegation in the petition and became material only when defendant pleaded forfeiture for nonpayment of assessments and for false representations in health certificate, which allegations were denied. Arrison v. Supreme Council of Mystic Toilers [Iowa] 105 N. W. 580.

25. American Mfg. Co. v. Morgan Smith Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 176.

27. French v. State Senate, 146 Cal. 604, 80 P. 1031.

28. In action for negligence it need not be specifically alleged that it was defendant's duty to keep switch closed and locked. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Vandenberg, 164 Ind. 470, 73 N. E. 990.

29. The omission of allegations which need not be proved in order to make out a case does not render a declaration demurrable. French v. Lawrence [Mass.] 76 N. E. 730. In action to recover for services as a public officer allegations as to city having illegally and unjustifiably prevented plaintiff from performing his duties should be treated as surplusage, and could not be construed as averments that he had been suspended or removed, or that tender of services was made after suspension or removal. Removal is matter of defense to be pleaded in answer if relied on. Id.

30. In an action for negligence a duty implied by law need not be alleged in terms. Wells v. Gallagher [Ala.] 39 So. 747.

31. Treaties being a part of the law of every state. Ehrlich v. Weber, 114 Tenn. 711, 88 S. W. 188.

32. As to necessity of alleging absence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, see Negligence, 6 C. L. 748. In action on building contractors' bond the petition need not allege that delay was not due to alterations and additions made as provided for in the contract, that being a matter of defense which should be set up by plea. Adams v. Haigler, 123 Ga. 659, 51 S. E. 638. Where insurance policy sued on is set out in haec verba, general allegation of performance of all conditions precedent, and that loss did not happen by reason of any of the conditions provided against in the policy is sufficient, and it is not necessary to negative all conditions which, if existent, will defeat a recovery. Colonial Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Ellinger, 112 Ill. App. 302. Payment is an affirmative defense which must be alleged in the answer and need not be negatived by an allegation in the complaint. Action to foreclose mechanic's lien. Robertson Lumber Co. v. State Bank [N. D.] 105 N. W. 719. Need not aver that he has not been guilty of contributory negligence. Newport News Pub. Co. v. Beaumeister [Va.] 52 S. E. 627. Where plea sets up matter which would be a good defense if sustained by competent written evidence, and it does not appear from the plea itself that defendant relies for its establishment on parol evidence, it should not be stricken on general demurrer. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Wynne, 123 Ga. 470, 51 S. E. 389. Where answer sets up illegality of note sued on because made in contravention of a statute, if plaintiff desires to take advantage of exceptions in amendatory statute he must plead them by way of reply. Lutz v. Pender Nat. Bank [Neb.] 102 N. W. 673.

33. Waiver of notice of accident required by insurance policy and excuse for not having given it. Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n v. Tomson [Neb.] 103 N. W. 695, rvg. 101 N. W. 341.

34. In an action for damages for violation of a statute, facts showing that the case does not fall within the exceptions therein must be alleged. Complaint held sufficient. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Newsom [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 21.

and tenor.[37] Collateral averments, made for the purpose of obtaining attachment and the like, should not be considered in determining the nature of the cause of action.[38] A pleading should be construed as a whole.[39] General averments are limited and controlled by specific allegations upon the same subject.[40] The presumption of the continuance of a state of facts once shown to exist applies equally to facts alleged in a pleading.[41]

At common law everything in the pleading was taken most strongly against the pleader, and this rule still prevails in some states.[42] Under the code, however, pleadings are generally to be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties,[43] and every reasonable intendment and presumption will be

37. Must stand or fall by that theory alone, regardless of its sufficiency upon some other hypothesis. South Bend Chilled Plow Co. v. Cissne [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 282. Theory of count is to be determined from its prominent and leading allegation. State v. Petersen [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 602. Allegations of a promise to pay for services by will or otherwise, and that decedent had made provision for payment by a deposit of bonds, do not show an election to proceed as if on a performance by such act of deposit. Cooper v. Brooklyn Trust Co., 87 App. Div. 610, 84 N. Y. S. 88.

38. Simple action on account cannot be regarded as one to recover property so that trustee in bankruptcy might intervene. Jewett Bros. v. Huffman [N. D.] 103 N. W. 408.

39. Davies v. William W. Bierce, 114 La. 663, 38 So. 488. The whole complaint should be construed together for the purpose of determining whether causes of action are improperly joined (State v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 817), or whether in any count thereof a cause of action is stated (McClung v. Cullison [Okl.] 82 P. 499).

40. Boatmen's Bank of St. Louis v. Fritzlen [C. C. A.] 135 F. 650. As to abandonment of application for patent. Hayes-Young Tie Plate Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 80.

41. Property insured presumed to be on certain premises at time of loss. Thomasson v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 114 Mo. App. 109, 89 S. W. 564.

42. On demurrer pleading will be construed most strongly against the pleader. Timmerman v. Stanley, 123 Ga. 850, 51 S. E. 760. Should always be construed most strongly against the pleader. Allegation in bill to construe a will that L. and S., late partners as L. & S., obtained a certain judgment, held to mean that it was obtained in firm name, and not by them jointly. Linn v. Downing, 216 Ill. 64, 74 N. E. 729. All intendments are to be taken most strongly against pleader. American Ins. Co. v. France, 111 Ill. App. 382. Applies to bill of exceptions, which is pleading of party alleging exception. Peoria Star Co. v. Lambert, 115 Ill. App. 319; Lumbard v. Holdiman, 115 Ill. App. 458. Where doubts arise upon pleadings, they are construed most strongly against the pleader. Shenk v. Stahl [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 538. Is to be construed most strongly against the pleader when its language is uncertain and ambiguous, rendering its theory obscure (State v. Petersen [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 602); but if, upon giving the language a fair construction and from the nature of the facts averred, the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, it will not be held bad for want of facts, because so constructed as to render it difficult to determine the theory intended by the pleader (Id.). Upon demurrer every allegation is to be taken most strongly against person making it. Dick v. McPherson [N. J. Law] 62 A. 383. Declaration in action for breach of covenant in deed to defend title against grantor and persons claiming under him held not to state cause of action where it failed to allege facts showing that eviction was by the persons named in such covenant. Id.

43. Code, § 260. Wright v. Teutonia Ins. Co. [N. C.] 51 S. E. 55. Upon demurrer a bill should not be dismissed if by any reasonable construction of the language of its averments a case is stated entitling plaintiff to the relief sought. Shipley v. Fink [Md.] 62 A. 360. In action for specific performance of agreement to convey land, held allegation that defendant "offered to give" plaintiff the land on certain conditions would be construed as allegation of agreement "to convey the land," under which proof could be offered of such an agreement. Id. Pleadings are to be liberally construed. Casey v. American Bridge Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 623. In order that a complaint may be held bad on demurrer it must be wholly insufficient and it will be held sufficient if to any extent, on any reasonable theory, it presents facts sufficient to justify a recovery, however inartificially the facts may be stated. Id. Fact that negligence relied on, and the nature of plaintiff's injuries are pleaded generally does not render complaint bad on demurrer. Id. If the complaint presents two apparent theories of plaintiff's cause of action, one sufficiently and the other insufficiently pleaded, that theory will be adopted which will sustain the action rather than the one which would defeat it. Id. On demurrer a pleading should be given a broad and liberal construction, and will be held sufficient if by any fair and reasonable construction a cause of action may be spelled out of the allegations, however inartificially they may be stated. Complaint in action for damages for breach of contract held sufficient. Warren Bros. Co. v. King [Minn.] 104 N. W. 816. If open to construction, that reasonable meaning which will support it should be adopted, rather than one which will defeat it. Hart v. Neillsville [Wis.] 104 N. W. 699. On demurrer to complaint in action by a stockholder against a foreign corporation it will indulged in their favor;[44] but the court cannot draw inferences or deductions from general allegations in order to supply material facts.[45] Both at common law and under the codes, pleadings are liberally construed when first attacked at the trial,[46] or after verdict and judgment.[47] Stipulations as to the facts in a case may be looked to in aid of a pleading[48] which sets them out or relies upon them.[49]

Profert and oyer.—The fact that a declaration makes profert does not alone make the writing a part thereof without a demand of oyer.[50] There can be neither profert nor oyer of an instrument not under seal,[51] and though profert be made, it is unavailing unless the declaration professes to declare upon a sealed instrument.[52] Formal profert of the contract sued upon is not necessary, even when it is under be presumed for the purpose of sustaining the complaint, that plaintiff is a resident of the state and therefore competent to bring the action. MacGinniss v. Amalgamated Copper Co., 45 Misc. 106, 91 N. Y. S. 591.

44. The pleading will be held to state all facts that can be implied from the allegations by reasonable and fair intendment, and facts so impliedly averred are traversable in the same manner as though directly stated. In action by taxpayer against county board of supervisors to recover items in their bills for services, mileage and disbursements alleged to have been collusively and illegally audited by the board, where schedules attached to complaint specifically alleged in detail the illegality and fraudulent character of the claims allowed, held not demurrable for failure to allege that defendants auditing the claims knew that they were in excess of the fees allowed by law, that being the fair import of the word "collusive." Wallace v. Jones, 182 N. Y. 37, 74 N. E. 576. The language of the pleader will be given a reasonable intendment. South Bend Chilled Plow Co. v. Cissne [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 282. In case of one of two causes of action may be either in contract or in tort, that construction will be adopted which makes the complaint or declaration as a whole maintainable, and the different counts consonant with each other. Count for breach of warranty held to be ex delicto. Kimber v. Young [C. C. A.] 137 F. 744. On general demurrer every intendment is in favor of the pleader. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Rollins [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 82, 89 S. W. 1099.

45. South Bend Chilled Plow Co. v. Cissne [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 282. In ascertaining the sufficiency of a pleading the court is not warranted in resorting to inferences and deductions, nor can it supply material matter by intendment. Plaintiff must state all the facts essential to a cause of action. Malott v. Sample, 164 Ind. 645, 74 N. E. 245.

46. When a pleading is assailed by motion or demurrer, it is more strictly construed against the pleader than when it is attacked at the trial. Keene v. Eldriedge [Or.] 82 P. 803. The rule that the complaint should be most liberally construed when first attacked by objection to the introduction of evidence applies only where such objection has been overruled, the action tried upon its merits, and the imperfections of the pleading cured by proper proof. Bon Homme County v. McLouth [S. D.] 104 N. W. 256. The same intendments will be indulged in favor of a complaint on demurrer at the trial as in case of attack after verdict. Brooks v. McCabe [Wash.] 80 P. 1004.

47. Where a petition is first attacked on appeal for failure to state a cause of action, its allegations will receive a liberal construction, with a view of giving effect to the pleader's purpose, and, if possible, sustaining the petition. Petition in action for injuries resulting from ejectment of trespasser from train held sufficient. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kerr [Neb.] 104 N. W. 49. It will also be viewed in the light of the entire record, and where, from the nature of the answer and the evidence, it appears that both parties have placed the same construction thereon, the court will not ignore such construction, even though the petition, standing alone, might not admit of it. Id. After verdict and judgment pleadings not previously attacked will be liberally construed for the purpose of upholding the result reached by the court and jury. Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n v. Tomson [Neb.] 103 N. W. 695, rvg. 101 N. W. 341. Allegation seeking to excuse failure to give notice of accident required by insurance policy held not inconsistent with allegation of notice acquired by company's vice-president. Id. After verdict all intendments and presumptions are in favor of the pleading. Sargent Co. v. Baublis, 215 Ill. 428, 74 N. E. 455; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Gardanier, 116 Ill. App. 619. In determining whether original declaration states cause of action for purpose of deciding whether that stated by amended one is barred. Klawiter v. Jones, 219 Ill. 626, 76 N. E. 673, afg. 110 Ill. App. 31. All reasonable presumptions. Smith v. Smith [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1008. Will be given benefit of every reasonable intendment and doubt, even to extent of supplying omitted facts resulting as a natural sequence from the facts averred. Town of Knightstown v. Homer [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 13.

48. Held that stipulation that certain copy of a statute of another state should be accepted as such statute, and a certain decision be accepted as the law of such state upon all points therein, would be given effect in aid of a demurrer by considering it as if it had been written into the complaint. Hall v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 50.

seal, if a copy thereof is annexed to the declaration and referred to in the body of the pleading as so annexed.[53]

Exhibits.[54]—An exhibit cannot be looked to in aid of a defective pleading,[55] but may be considered against the pleader on demurrer.[56]

Only documents which are the foundation of the action can be incorporated by annexation and reference.[57] In a suit on a written contract, filing of the contract as an exhibit is properly required on motion to make more definite and certain.[58] A separate order book entry is not necessary in order to make an exhibit incorporated into the complaint by reference a part thereof.[59]

By statute in some states when any pleading is founded on a written instrument, the original or a copy must be filed with the pleading.[60] If a defense or cross action arises out of the same instrument, it is not necessary to file another copy with the answer or cross complaint, but is sufficient to refer to the one already on file.[61]

In some states the annexation of the instrument sued on and a reference to such annexation in the body of the declaration makes such instrument as much a

A reference in a complaint for goods sold and delivered to an attached bill of particulars in which it was alleged were "detailed certain payments" held not to amount to an allegation of value. Macksoud v. Dildarian, 93 N. Y. S. 382.

56. Where a copy of the contract sued on is by way of amendment filed as an exhibit it is to be considered against the pleader on demurrer. Gibson v. Ray [Ky.] 89 S. W. 474. Where letter written by insurance company is filed with petition in action on policy in order to show waiver of proofs of loss by denial of liability, recitals in letter that person consenting to sale of property and transfer of policy was not company's agent cannot be considered on demurrer to petition, which alleged such agency. Gragg v. Home Ins. Co. [Ky.] 90 S. W. 1045.

In action to foreclose municipal assessment, copy of assessment roll marked "Exhibit A" and filed with complaint and referred to therein and made a part thereof, held to have become a part of the complaint without a separate order book entry, though it was not attached thereto. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Porter [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 260.

60. Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Berning [Ill. App.] 76 N. E. 776. It is only necessary that a copy of the instrument upon which the action is predicated be filed, and purely evidentiary documents need not be filed. Mueller & Co. v. Kinkead, 113 Ill. App. 132. Where it is contended that written contract has been expressly abrogated and suit is brought for services under subsequent parol agreement, contract need not be filed. Id. Under Practice Act, § 171 (Acts 1886, p. 308, c. 184) Baltimore city charter § 313, plaintiff is not entitled to summary judgment unless at the time of bringing his action he shall file with his declaration an affidavit as therein prescribed and the bond, bill of exchange, note or other writing or account by which defendant is so indebted; or if the action is founded upon a verbal or implied contract, he must file a statement of the particulars of defendant's indebtedness thereunder. Mueller v. Michaels [Md.] 60 A. 485. The writing filed must show on its face at least a prima facie case of indebtedness from plaintiff to defendant. Commonwealth Bank v. Kirkland [Md.] 62 A. 799. In action on alleged guaranty to pay mortgage debt held that receipt for interest due on mortgage, alleged to have been signed by defendant, and reciting that interest was accepted with the understanding that defendant guarantied the payment of the debt, did not, unexplained, constitute a contract by defendant to pay such debt to plaintiff, and hence filing thereof was an insufficient compliance with the statute. Id. Provisions of practice act of 1887 requiring copy of the contract upon which action is founded to accompany the statement of claim is mandatory, and if copy of contract or any part thereof does not accompany statement, and its absence is not satisfactorily accounted for, omission cannot be supplied by averments of its contents or substance. White v. Sperling, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 120. If it is clearly made to appear by defendant's affidavit of defense that contract sued on is in writing, and statement is not accompanied by a copy thereof, defendant has shown reason why summary judgment should not be entered against him, even though he does not set forth a perfectly valid defense upon the merits. part of the pleading as if precisely set forth therein.[62] Recitals therein control the allegations of the pleading where the two are inconsistent.[63]

Bills of particulars.[64]—In some states plaintiff is required to file a copy of an account sued on,[65] or a statement of the particulars of defendant's indebtedness in case the suit is founded on a verbal or implied contract,[66] and defendant may be required to file a statement of the particulars of his ground of defense.[67]

The purpose of a bill of particulars is merely to amplify the pleading, and to indicate with more particularity than is ordinarily required in a formal plea the nature of the claim made, in order that surprise upon the trial may be avoided and the issues more intelligently met.[68] It is not a part of the pleadings[69] and cannot enlarge the cause of action[70] nor be used to aid the pleading,[71] nor will it be allowed to overthrow or control specific averments therein.[72]

A party should not be required to expose his evidence to his adversary,[73] nor to give particulars equally within the knowledge of the other party,[74] though it has been held that the mere fact that the latter has knowledge of the transaction in question is no ground for refusing to require a bill.[75] Whether plaintiff should be required to furnish a bill of particulars must be determined by an examination of the complaint, and does not depend upon the fact that defendant has served a bill of particulars of a counterclaim contained in his answer.[76] Cases dealing with the necessity of filing bills in particular instances,[77] and with the sufficiency of particular bills,[78] will be found in the note.

65. In action of assumpsit plaintiff does not waive the common counts of his declaration by failing to file the account required by Code 1899, c. 125, § 11, at the time of filing the declaration, but he may file it afterwards and rely upon the common counts. Federation Window Glass Co. v. Cameron Glass Co. [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 518. Where the verification of an account showed that it was asserted against defendant it is immaterial that the account shows only charges against third person. Pelican Lumber Co. v. 66. Practice Act § 171 (Acts 1886, p. 308, c. 184). Mueller v. Michaels [Md.] 60 A. 485. 67. Under the Michigan circuit court rules whenever fraud is relied on as a defense to a written instrument the facts upon which such defense is based must be plainly set forth in a notice added to defendant's plea. Cir. Ct. Rule 7, subd. c. Notice containing no statement of any particular representation held insufficient. Stauber v. Ellett [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 156, 103 N. W. 606. Object of Code 1887, § 3249 (Code 1904, p. 1709), authorizing court to require filing of a statement of the particulars of the ground of defense is to give plaintiff notice of the defense relied on, and hence it should not be required where the pleas give with detailed particularity every such defense. Where plaintiff brought action for breach of contract, and justice found that defendant contracted to engage board and lodging for the season and rendered judgment for plaintiff, held that plaintiff was not thereby allowed to recover on different cause of action from that pleaded, though his bill of particulars referred to a lease by defendant and a failure to pay rent. 72. Neither the caption of the bill nor the body thereof will be allowed to overthrow or control specific averments of the complaint in respect to the parties or person therein stated. Complaint alleging that goods were sold to C. L. held not to be rendered demurrable because caption of bill stated that they were sold to L. & Co. Stewart v. Knight & Jillson Co. [Ind.] 76 N. E. 743.

73. Is not the office of such a bill. Slingerland v. Corwin, 105 App. Div. 310, 93 N. Y. S. 953. In action for money loaned, plaintiff should not be required to specify the manner in which the alleged loan was made, whether by check, cash, or otherwise, with date and number of the check and the bank on which it was drawn. Dunn v. Dunn, 108 App. Div. 308, 95 N. Y. S. 719.

76. Fickinger v. Ives, 109 App. Div. 684, 96 N. Y. S. 396. In action against brokers for damages for alleged wrongful sale of stock purchased by them for plaintiff, where defendants furnished a bill of particulars of their counterclaim for money expended on plaintiff's account purporting to embrace the entire account of the stock dealings between the parties, and plaintiff showed by affidavit that he did not know what sales defendants made and that he had reason to believe that many of those included in the account were fictitious, held that he would not be required to furnish a bill of particulars of the sales which he claimed to be unauthorized. Id.

77. Defendant held entitled to bill: A bill is demandable in an action to recover for legal professional services. Gen. St. 1894, § 5246, applies. Davis v. Johnson [Minn.] 104 N. W. 766. In action by lessee to recover damages to personalty by reason of negligent manner in which lessor repaired and maintained roof of leased premises, held that plaintiff would be required to furnish particulars as to nature of acts relied on to constitute waiver of provision in lease requiring written notice of leakage, and of times when, and by whom, such acts were done, and of the reasonable value of the property claimed to have been destroyed. Taylor & Co. v. Asiel, 93 N. Y. S. 377. In ejectment by landlord against tenants on ground that lease has not been renewed and that defendants are not entitled to renewal because of breaches of covenants, plaintiffs should be required to give particulars as to what conditions and covenants have been broken, and when and where breaches occurred, and what defendants did which it is claimed deprived them of a right to renew, and when. Slingerland v. Corwin, 105 App. Div. 310, 93 N. Y. S. 953. In action for death of servant, allegations as to negligence held mere conclusions, and plaintiff required to furnish bill showing the particular place where deceased was at work, in what respect that place was dangerous, unprotected, unsafe, and unguarded, and also the name of the foreman alleged to be incompetent, or whether neglect complained of was a failure to employ a foreman. Causullo v. Lenox Const. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 639. When the complaint contains a general allegation of money loaned, plaintiff should be required to specify the particularities of the claim so that he will be limited upon the trial, and to prevent surprise should be required to specify date and amount of the loan. Dunn v. Dunn, 108 App. Div. 308, 95 N. Y. S. 719. In action for personal injuries held proper to require bill showing in detail how long plaintiff has been prevented from attending to her business and has been deprived of her earnings, giving the nature of her business and the amount of income derived therefrom, or, if employed, the amount of her salary. Levy v. New York City R. Co., 96 N. Y. S. 399. Portion of order requiring statement of amounts expended for medical attendance held erroneous, where there were no allegations in the complaint that plaintiff had expended money for that purpose, but only that she would be compelled to do so. Id. In action against corporation on guaranty and certain certificates alleged to have been executed by defendant, where answer alleged that they were executed on the agreement with one G. that they were not to be effective except on a certain contingency which had not happened, and that they were negotiated in violation of such agreement and transferred to plaintiff, of which fact it was alleged on information and belief plaintiff had notice, held that plaintiff was entitled to bill stating whether agreement was written or oral, the names of plaintiff's officers or agents to whom notice was given, the name of the persons who gave it, and when and where it was given. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Packard, 109 App. Div. 421, 96 N. Y. S. 412. The fact that the name of the person must necessarily be disclosed in revealing the information is no objection to granting the motion. Id. In action for death of locomotive firemen by explosion of engine, held that plaintiff should be required to give particulars showing in what respect she claimed the engine was "weak, dangerous, defective, unsafe," etc. Heslin v. Lake Champlain & M. R. Co., 109 App. Div. 814, 96 N. Y. S. 761. Plaintiff will not be excused from furnishing bill merely because she is an administratrix with no personal knowledge of the details of her cause of action, particularly where she has had an opportunity to examine the engine with her expert. Id.

Defendant held not entitled to bill: It is not the practice to furnish bills of particulars in contempt proceedings, and whether or not one shall be ordered is discretionary in any event. Christensen v. People, 114 Ill. App. 40. Bills held unnecessary to enable defendants to prepare their defense. Id. In an action against the state for damages which the legislature agreed should be paid in case the charter of a certain railroad should be repealed, held that, the damages being unliquidated and the declaration being specific in stating a cause of action, defendant was not entitled to a bill. State v. Hosmer [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 493, 104 N. W. 637. If plaintiff is entitled to an accounting, defendant must file the account, and plaintiff should not be required to furnish a bill of particulars. Fickinger v. Ives, 109 App. Div. 684, 96 N. Y. S. 396. In action against steamship company for loss of a trunk delivered to defendant by a passenger at a foreign port, defendant's application for bill of particulars held properly denied, where it was based on affidavits of local attorney and local agent stating the practice of the company abroad and their ignorance of certain things, but it did not appear that either of them knew anything about

A motion by a defendant for a bill of particulars upon the ground that it is necessary for his defense will be denied when made before service of the answer,[79] nor will plaintiff be required to furnish a bill for that purpose where defendant is wholly ignorant of the particulars of his claim.[80]

In Florida a bill of particulars is not demandable after plea to the merits.[81] There is nothing in the New York code authorizing the service of a demand for a bill of particulars, and relief of that kind can be obtained only by motion and pursuant to an order of court.[82] A defendant moving for an order for a bill after answering to the merits need not state in his moving affidavit that he has fully and fairly stated the case to counsel, with the name and address of such counsel.[83] The order for the bill may require that in case the party has no knowledge with reference to the specified particulars he may state such lack of knowledge under oath in lieu thereof.[84]

A party failing to file a bill as required by statute,[85] or by order of court, is generally precluded from giving evidence in regard to matters which should have been specified therein.[86] So, too, plaintiff is often limited in his recovery to items specified.[87]

the matter, or had ever been abroad or had had an opportunity to become acquainted with defendant's practice in foreign ports. Canonico v. Cunard S. S. Co., 96 N. Y. S. 499. In action against carrier for loss of goods in transit refusal to require plaintiffs to show in bill where the goods and chattels and cars mentioned in such bill were delivered to defendant held not error, where defendant was not thereby hindered or embarrassed in any degree in making its defense. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Stock & Sons [Va.] 51 S. E. 161.

78. Bills held sufficient: The object of the bill in an action for legal services is accomplished when it gives to the defendant the information which will enable him to prepare his defense (Davis v. Johnson [Minn.] 104 N. W. 766), and is sufficient if it describes the nature and character of the services and the result at which they arrived and the aggregate value thereof (Id.). Same degree of detail is not required as in action for merchandise sold and delivered. Id. Bill held sufficient. Id. Defendant's bill in action for breach of contract, where he alleged a prior breach by plaintiff and counterclaimed for his resulting damages. Floersheim v. Musical Courier Co., 103 App. Div. 388, 93 N. Y. S. 41. Statement of claim in action for goods sold and delivered held sufficient to call for affidavit of defense. Genesee Paper Co. v. Bogert, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 23. Statement of particulars of claim or defense authorized by Code 1887, § 3249, need not set out such particulars with the formality or precision of a declaration or plea, but only in such manner as will fairly and plainly give notice to the adverse party of its character. Tidewater Quarry Co. v. Scott [Va.] 52 S. E. 835. Itemized account held sufficient statement of defendant's plea of set-off. Id.

Bills held insufficient: In action in Baltimore city court to recover money lost at gaming, statement of particulars of claim in the form of an account describing the indebtedness only as "for cash money received from plaintiff" in a specified month and a specified sum. Mueller v. Michaels [Md.] 60 A. 485. Statement in action on note that defendant did not execute note and did not owe sum claimed or any part thereof held insufficient under Code 1904, § 3249, since it gave plaintiff no more notice of the character of the grounds of defense than the plea of nonassumpsit. Chestnut v. Chestnut [Va.] 52 S. E. 348.

79. Cannot be said that defense will be made until issue is raised by service of answer. Schultz v. Rubsam, 104 App. Div. 20, 93 N. Y. S. 334.

80. Since he may in such case deny any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to allegations of complaint in reference to it (Code Civ. Proc. § 500). Schultz v. Rubsam, 104 App. Div. 20, 93 N. Y. S. 334.

81. Peacock v. Feaster [Fla.] 40 So. 74.

82. Stone v. Hudson Valley R. Co., 47 Misc. 5, 95 N. Y. S. 220. Such a demand is a nullity which may properly be disregarded, and it may be stricken from the files on motion. Motion to strike is proper where it is doubtful whether demand can be regarded as equivalent to a demand for an account or not. Id. Fact that motion was heard after expiration of the time fixed by the notice within which the bill was demanded held immaterial. Id. Assessments sought to be recovered by a casualty association against a member do not in any sense constitute an account between the parties, and hence a demand for a bill of particulars in an action therefor cannot be regarded as serving the purpose of a demand for a copy of an account under Code Civ. Proc. § 531. Id.

85. If plaintiff in action in assumpsit fails to file the bill of particulars required by Code 1899, c. 125, § 11, his evidence as to any item not plainly described in the declaration will be excluded. Federation Window Glass Co. v. Cameron Glass Co. [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 518.

86. Order for bill of particulars of coun-

In case the bill furnished is insufficient, a further one may be required,[88] but a party whose motion for a further bill of particulars has been denied is not entitled to renew the same except on leave granted for some substantial reason.[89]

§ 2. The declaration, count, complaint, or petition.[90]—The declaration, petition, or complaint, must aver all the facts necessary to show a cause of action against the defendant.[91] Where facts entitling plaintiff to relief at law or in equity are stated, it is immaterial that the form of action is improperly stated.[92] An instrument sued on should be set out either in terms or according to its legal effect.[93] It is generally held that the common counts may be used to state a cause of action under the code.[94] In determining the sufficiency of the complaint in an action

terclaim providing that in default thereof defendant should be precluded from giving evidence of the matters set forth in the counterclaim held improper, the question of the exclusion of testimony not being before the court. Schlesinger v. Thalmessinger, 93 N. Y. S. 381. Where defendant's statement of his grounds of defense is insufficient, court should, on plaintiff's objection, order the filing of a sufficient one, and on failure of defendant to comply with such order, his evidence of matters not sufficiently described should be excluded. Chestnut v. Chestnut [Va.] 52 S. E. 348.

87. In action to compel contribution by accommodation indorser of note, plaintiff can only recover for payments specified in his bill of particulars. Pratt v. Rhodes [Conn.] 61 A. 1009.

88. Defendant having served bill of particulars before argument of a motion therefor, which complied with the demand in most particulars and was retained by plaintiff, held that proper practice was to move for further bill, or to enter order merely requiring a further bill, and not to enter an order granting the motion. Schlesinger v. Thalmessinger, 93 N. Y. S. 381.

89. Floersheim v. Musical Courier Co., 103 App. Div. 388, 93 N. Y. S. 41.

91. Should allege all the facts necessary to constitute a cause of action with such clearness that the defendant may fairly understand the charges against him, so as to be able to intelligently admit or contest them as he may desire. Complaint in action for injuries to servant sustained while operating dangerous machine should state in what respect the machine was not reasonably safe, in what respect master failed to exercise reasonable care in directing servant to work on it, and that its unsafe character caused the injury. Anderson v. U. S. Rubber Co. [Conn.] 60 A. 1057. Complaint held to sufficiently allege unsafe character of machine because of failure to warn plaintiff of danger of having his hand caught therein. Id. Where plaintiff seeks to recover punitive damages for a particular wrongful act, and relies, as evidencing the animus with which it was committed, upon a wholly independent act done at a different time and place, defendant should be advised by plaintiff's pleadings of the case he is expected to meet. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 473. It is essential to the sufficiency of a complaint on demurrer that upon a reasonable construction of the language used it may be seen by an inspection of the pleading that all the facts necessary to a complete right of action are stated in such a manner that such right may be said necessarily to arise from them upon some definite theory and in such form that, the defendant being thereby fully informed of the nature of plaintiff's claim, the pleading will be susceptible of denial by answer, so that, upon being so traversed, a distinct issue of fact will be formed for trial. Corbin Oil Co. v. Searles [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 293. Complaint in action against carrier for injuries to passenger held sufficient under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 75, § 24, subsec. 36, giving form of declaration in such actions, and providing that the same may be changed to adapt it to many cases "by merely changing the allegation as to the cause of the accident." Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Allen [Md.] 62 A. 245. In both the statement of claim and affidavit of defense, facts must be stated which, if proved as set forth, are sufficient to sustain the action in the one case or the defense in the other. Bill Posting Sign Co. v. Jermon, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 171. In action for work and materials furnished, statement held insufficient where copies of books refcrred to therein showed nothing substantial, but merely dates and figures, largely unintelligible, and did not give defendant any information as to what he was charged with having received. Id. A complaint under Rev. Pol. Code, § 1806, to remove a county superintendent of schools for neglect of duty should be sufficiently definite and certain in its accusations to enable defendant to prepare his defense, and a complaint containing only a general allegation that he was guilty of willful neglect of duty is insufficient. Bon Homme County v. McLouth [S. D.] 104 N. W. 256. The declaration is sufficient if it informs defendant of the nature of the demand made against him and states such facts as will enable the court to say that, if the facts are proved as alleged, they establish a good cause of action. In action for negligence, declaration held to sufficiently show that it was plaintiff's duty to be under a press in an endeavor to locate a defect therein. Newport News Pub. Co. v. Beaumeister [Va.] 52 S. E. 627. Otherwise it is bad on demurrer. Stephenson v. Collins, 57 W. Va. 351, 50 S. E. 439. Declaration in action on contract held to insufficiently aver breaches. Id.

against two defendants, it will be treated or considered as joint and several.[95] Allegations as to one of them cannot be considered in determining whether a cause of action is stated against the other.[96] In an action involving separable claims, the right to try those upon which a cause of action has accrued is not affected by the fact that the suit is prematurely brought as to others.[97] The performance of conditions precedent to the right to sue must be alleged.[98]

The form and character of the action are to be determined from the complaint,[99] and the nature and character of a petition from its allegations and form, and the relief asked for therein.[1] Whether the action is in tort or on contract,[2]

94. Note: Defendant, upon the solicitation of a member of the faculty of Columbia University, agreed to, and did, furnish and equip with the necessary apparatus, a hydraulic engineering laboratory at his own expense. The gift was, at the request of the donor, designated a memorial to his father. The equipment of said laboratory was furnished by the plaintiff, a corporation, of which defendant was president and owned a large amount of stock. In an action against defendant for the value of the equipment, plaintiff declared upon a common count. The trial court held, that under the code a recovery could not be had upon a common count. Held, error. Worthington v. Worthington, 100 App. Div. 332, 91 N. Y. S. 443.

In discussing the spirit of the code procedure, Mr. Pomeroy, in his Remedies and Remedial Rights, §§ 75, 544 (§§ 15, 433, 4th ed.) observes that New York jurists were originally divided as to the intent of the legislature relative to pleading under the code. The first view, which did not survive, was that the legislature intended to abolish only certain names and certain technical rules of mere form. The second view, which is now firmly established, was that the pleader must narrate in plain and concise language the actual facts from which the rights and duties of the parties arise, and not his conception of their legal effect. "And yet," he says, "with great inconsistency, as it seems to me, the courts have generally held that the ancient forms of common-law pleading in assumpsit may be used in actions upon contract, especially where the contract is implied; that they sufficiently meet the requirements of the codes, although they do not set out the actual facts of the transaction from which the legal right arises." This reasoning appears flawless, but the courts have not been disposed to follow it. That there is no abatement of the practice in New York is illustrated by the principal case, and elsewhere, by the following recent cases: Johnson-Brinkman Co. v. Central Bank, 116 Mo. 558, 38 Am. St. Rep. 615; Fox v. Easter, 10 Okl. 527; School Dist. No. 9 v. School Dist. No. 5, 118 Wis. 233; Brown v. Board of Education, 103 Cal. 531; Burton v. Rosemary Mfg. Co., 132 N. C. 17. But the rule has not received universal acceptance, and in the following cases the courts refuse longer to permit fictions to take the place of facts: Bank v. Corbett, 2 Minn. 209; Pioneer Fuel Co. v. Hager, 57 Minn. 76; Penn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Conoughy, 5 Neb. 123; Ball v. Beaumont, 59 Neb. 631, 633; Bowen v. Emmerson, 3 Or. 452; Hammer v. Downing, 39 Or. 504. And in Connecticut the rule is peculiar. Cummings v. Gleason, 72 Conn. 587; McNamara v. McDonald, 69 Conn. 484, 61 Am. St. Rep. 48. Although excluded in a few states, the use of the common counts seems to be well settled. In fact, their application has been so liberal in many states that the plaintiff is permitted to recover on a common count (quantum meruit) when the evidence discloses a special contract, the court in such cases giving to the pleading an effect not recognized at the common law. The only effect in such a case of proof of an express contract fixing the price is that the stipulated price becomes the quantum meruit in the case. Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 33 L. R. A. 295; Roberts v. Leak, 108 Ga. 806; Hecla Gold Min. Co. v. Gisborn, 21 Utah, 68; Vanderbeck v. Francis, 75 Conn. 467. Contra, Roche v. Baldwin, 135 Cal. 522; Duncan v. Gray, 108 Iowa, 599; Band v. Corbett, 2 Minn. 209; Burton v. Rosemary, 132 N. C. 17. The common counts general in form, were introduced originally to take the place of the detailed and intricate pleading at the common law, and immediately found favor because of their convenience. Their general use before the adoption of the code is in some measure a justification for what is believed to be a clear violation of the mandate of the legislature as expressed in the reformed procedure acts.—3 Mich. Law Rev. 417.

95. Where, under the code, the question of joint or joint and several liability is to be determined from the evidence. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Vandenberg, 164 Ind. 470, 73 N. E. 990.

98. Under statute requiring anyone having a claim for damages against a municipal corporation to present a claim therefor, a declaration based on such a cause of action must allege a substantial compliance with such statute, but a copy of the demand need not be annexed thereto. City Council of Augusta v. Marks [Ga.] 52 S. E. 539.

99. Declaration must be looked to to determine the form of the action. Durham v. Stubblings, 111 Ill. App. 10. Under the code the character of the action is to be determined by the substance of the complaint rather than by its form. Action to recover for goods sold held an action at law and triable by jury, though complaint alleges that defendant is entitled to certain credits in an amount unknown to plaintiff, and demands an accounting. Hoosier Const. Co. v. National Bank of Commerce [Ind. App.] 73 N. E. 1006.

or on an express or implied contract,[3] and whether the complaint states one or more causes of action, are questions of construction.[4]

Consolidation of suits.—A party whose rights can be fully protected in a consolidated suit cannot object to the order of consolidation on the ground that he should have been made a party by amendment to the original bill.[5] Though the consolidation deprives a defendant of his right to file a cross bill against a co-defendant to compel a contribution, he is not entitled to a reversal, where he may maintain an action at law against such co-defendant for the amount due from him,[6] particularly where he failed to file such a bill in either of the two suits, or after their consolidation.[7]

Joinder of causes of action.[8]—Causes of action which are of the same nature and which may properly be the subject of counts in the same species of action may be joined,[9] the test being whether the same judgment may be rendered on both.[10]

1. Where allegations clearly show that it is petition under the statute to contest an election, fact that pleading is indorsed "Bill in Chancery; Petition to Contest Election," and that it prays for general equitable relief does not make it a bill in chancery. Quartier v. Dowiat, 219 Ill. 326, 76 N. E. 371.

2. Complaint held to state cause of action for breach of contract of carriage and not for assault and battery, though complaint shows that an assault was committed. Busch v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 96 N. Y. S. 747. Complaint to recover money intrusted to defendants to be used to secure bail for third person and to be returned to plaintiff when bail was exonerated, alleging that after bail was exonerated defendants refused to return the money but converted the same to their own use, held to state cause of action ex contractu to recover on implied promise instead of ex delicto. Logan v. Freerks [N. D.] 103 N. W. 426. This held to be particularly true in view of the issues tendered by the answer, which set up defenses improper in action based on tort. Id. Notwithstanding the plaintiff used lanquage in his pleading which would be appropriate to describe a tort, if he sues, not for damages but for money actually received by the defendant and belonging to the plaintiff and for no more, it is a waiver of the tort and an election to sue upon the implied contract. Kirchner v. Smith, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 22.

3. Complaint held to have been intended to state cause of action on contract for employment only, and not on quantum meruit for services. Golucke v. Lowndes County, 123 Ga. 412, 51 S. E. 406; McCormick v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 114 Mo. App. 460, 89 S. W. 905.

4. Several counts for injuries received by falling into an excavation in the street held to state but one cause of action. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Smith [Ala.] 39 So. 757. A bill to rescind a loan procured by fraud praying judgment for the sum loaned and a lien on certain lands into which the proceeds had gone states but one cause of action. Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 739, 82 P. 436. Petition construed and held to set up but two causes of action, one on quantum meruit for services rendered to defendant's testator, and the other for breach of contract made by plaintiff's father with such testator for plaintiff's benefit. Cooper v. Claxton [Ga.] 50 S. E. 399. Complaint held to state two causes of action, one for conversion and one for assault. Rector v. Anderson [Minn.] 104 N. W. 884. All of the allegations of the complaint held germane to an action, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1781, to require director of corporation to account for money and property of the corporation in his hands which it was alleged he had wrongfully acquired. Lilienthal v. Betz, 108 App. Div. 222, 95 N. Y. S. 849. Complaint alleging sale of fertilizers under promise to execute chattel mortgage and agricultural lien to secure same, and praying that contract be declared a lien on the property and that defendant be enjoined from disposing of it, and that same be sold to satisfy debt, held to state single cause of action. Creech v. Long [S. C.] 51 S. E. 614. Complaint in action by stockholder of mining corporation held to state but one cause of action against defendant officers and directors for fraudulently conspiring to depreciate the value of the stock. Glover v. Manila Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [S. D.] 104 N. W. 261.

5, 6. Miller v. McLaughlin [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 504, 104 N. W. 780.

7. Where defendant might have appeared and filed a cross bill in either of the suits, but failed to do so, and failed to file such a bill after their consolidation, he is not entitled to a reversal because deprived of that right by such consolidation. Miller v. McLaughlin [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 504, 104 N. W. 780.

9. Count based upon liability imposed by § 9 of the dram shop act may be joined with common law count for conversion of property, both being counts in trespass on the case. Pisa v. Holy, 114 Ill. App. 6. Causes of action of the same character and not repugnant. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Matthews [Tenn.] 91 S. W. 194.

10. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Allen, 113 Ill. App. 89. No misjoinder of counts or causes of action, where there were two counts in trespass on the case, one for common-law negligence and one for willful violation of the statute, both for the same injury, to both of which same plea could be pleaded, and where same judgment would have been given if verdict had been on either count

The test to be applied in an equitable action for the purpose of determining whether causes of action are improperly united, is whether they could have been included in a bill in equity under the old practice without making it multifarious.[11] There is but one cause of action where the facts, if proved, would establish but one primary right of the plaintiff and one primary wrong of the defendant.[12]

As a general rule separate causes of action cannot be joined unless they affect all the parties to the action,[13] and accrue to plaintiff in the same capacity,[14] and alone. Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Dielie, 110 Ill. App. 684.

11. If so they may be properly united under Gen. St. 1894, § 5260. State v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 817. An equity bill is not multifarious where one general right only is claimed by it, though the defendants have only separate interests in distinct questions which arise out of or are connected with such right. Id. All of the defendants must, however, be affected in some respect by the action or by some part thereof, but all need not be equally affected. Id. Complaint in equitable action against boom company and others to determine the relative rights of the public, the relator, and defendants to the use of a navigable river for the purpose of floating logs, and to enforce them. Id. Where defendant induced plaintiffs to join with him in purchasing certain land and falsely represented to them that the purchase price was largely in excess of the amount actually paid therefor by him, thereby inducing them to pay him a sum in excess of the amount so paid, held, in an action to have plaintiffs declared the sole owners of the land, and for an accounting, and for general relief, that several causes of action were not improperly joined, all the matters complained of having grown out of the same fraud. Wilson v. Youngman [Minn.] 104 N. W. 946. Riparian proprietor may maintain suit against several upper proprietors to restrain them from depositing refuse and filth in the stream, though they act independently in so doing. Warren v. Parkhurt, 105 App. Div. 239, 93 N. Y. S. 1009, afg. 45 Misc. 466, 92 N. Y. S. 725. Multifariousness, or the improper joining in one bill of distinct and independent matters, is a ground of demurrer in equity. The existence of similar questions of fact, or the mere fact that each demand is asserted as a right growing out of the administration of an estate, so that each case involves some common elements of fact, will not warrant the joining of separate claims against several defendants growing out of different transactions and involving material inquiries which are essentially foreign to each other. Boonville Nat. Bank v. Blakey [Ind.] 76 N. E. 529. Joinder of causes against several defendants alleged to have received preferences held improper where complaint was not framed on theory of a joint liability. Id. Action to recover amount of a preference held improperly joined with action against another defendant to set aside a fraudulent preference. Id. See, also, Equity, 5 C. L. 1144.

12. On motion to make more definite and certain by setting out each cause of action separately, complaint in action by administratrix to recover an interest in land alleged to have been procured by defendants from decedent by fraud, held to state but a single cause of action. Du Bose v. Kelly [S. C.] 51 S. E. 692. Where the facts alleged show one primary right of the plaintiff, and one wrong done by defendant which violates it, the complaint states but a single cause of action, no matter how many forms and kinds of relief the plaintiff may be entitled to. Complaint by city for removal of structures encroaching on sidewalks, praying that they be adjudged a public nuisance and to be illegal, and that defendant be enjoined from maintaining and compelled to remove them, and that, on his failure to do so, plaintiff be ordered to charge the expense of doing so to him, held to state single cause of action. City of New York v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 104 App. Div. 223, 93 N. Y. S. 937.

13. Under Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4938-4946, cause of action in favor of married woman for pain and suffering growing out of injuries received through wrongful conduct of another cannot be joined with cause of action in favor of her husband for loss of her services and expenses incurred in consequence of such injuries, since two are separate and distinct and in favor of different parties. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Tice [Ga.] 52 S. E. 916. In Kansas causes of action to be joined must, except as to actions to enforce liens, affect all the defendants. Griffith v. Griffith [Kan.] 81 P. 178; Mentzer v. Burlingame [Kan.] 81 P. 196. Causes of action on several notes cannot be joined where makers are not identical. Mentzer v. Burlingame [Kan.] 81 P. 196. Equitable accounting against two defendants cannot be joined with cause of action for damages against a third. Benson v. Battey, 70 Kan. 288, 78 P. 844. Causes of action to cancel deeds to different grantees and covering separate tracts of land are improperly joined. Griffith v. Griffith [Kan.] 81 P. 178. A cause of action vested in the plaintiffs jointly cannot be joined with a cause vested in one of them alone. Count on cause of action by married woman for publication of false and malicious statement concerning her separate realty cannot be joined with count for damages to both husband and wife by reason of publication of false and malicious statement as to the wife personally. Ricardo v. News Pub. Co. [N. J. Law] 62 A. 301. Causes of action for noncompliance with law by a benefit association and for fraudulent representations held improperly joined with cause of action on benefit certificate, the plaintiffs having no interest in or rights under them. Conrad v. Southern Tier Masonic Relief Ass'n, 101 App. Div. 611, 93 N. Y. S. 626. Where property of two persons is converted at the same time two separate causes of action arise and the fact that one person subsequently becomes owner of both does not unless they are consistent with each other.[15] Under the codes, however, causes of action against several defendants are frequently allowed to be joined, where they arise out of the same transaction, for the sake of preventing a multiplicity of suits.[16] So, too, plaintiff may join causes of action against persons jointly liable.[17]

Causes of action to reform an instrument and to recover on it as reformed,[18] for money had and received and on a note given in settlement of the same,[19] separate causes of action for slander,[20] any number of counts on contract,[21] counts in case warrant the joinder of them. Foster-Cherry Commission Co. v. Davis [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 734. Under Code, § 267, husband and wife cannot join their separate actions for damages for mental anguish caused by negligent loss of wife's baggage containing her bridal trousseau, conceding that both are entitled to recover therefor. Eller v. Carolina & W. R. Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 305. Beneficial plaintiff cannot, in a single action brought in the name of three legal plaintiffs, recover the damages alleged to have arisen from the nonperformance of three distinct and independent contracts, each of which was entered into by defendant with one of the legal plaintiffs individually and severally. McNulty v. O'Donnell, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 93. Distinct causes of action against several defendants cannot be joined. Not authorized by Gen. Laws 1896, c. 233, § 20, providing that whenever plaintiff is in doubt as to person from whom he is entitled to recover, he may join two or more defendants with a view of ascertaining which is liable. Mason v. Copeland & Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 650. Negligence of livery stable proprietor in letting horses known to be intractable and in furnishing incompetent driver, and negligence of motorman in stopping car to injury of one not a passenger, held to afford distinct causes of action against each for separate torts, which cannot be joined. Id. A cause of action against a corporation for services rendered it at the request of a promoter and one against the promoter for services rendered him individually are improperly joined. Jones v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 16, 87 S. W. 210.

14. One cannot in a single proceeding combine his individual claim for rent as devisee with a claim in his representative character for rent which accrued during the lifetime of the devisor. Weil v. Townsend, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 638. Misjoinder of causes of action is a matter of substance which is fatal to the pleading. Id.

15. A party may not, in one suit growing out of a single transaction, maintain an action for an alleged breach of a written contract of employment, and also sue for the value of the services rendered regardless of the contract. Golucke v. Lowndes County, 123 Ga. 412, 51 S. E. 406. A party cannot in the same action treat a contract as rescinded and sue for the amount paid by him thereunder, and at the same time rely on the contract as existing and sue for damages resulting from its breach. Timmerman v. Stanley, 123 Ga. 850, 51 S. E. 760. Where allegations of declaration make suit one for the amount paid by plaintiff to defendant under a contract, treating the contract as rescinded, additional allegations seeking to recover damages for breach of such contract should be stricken as inconsistent. Id. Prayer for rescission, in bill by corporation alleging a fraudulent sale of realty to it by its promoters, and prayer for damages, held not inconsistent. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 188 Mass. 315, 74 N. E. 653. Where declaration contains count for breach of warranty for sale of a horse and one on theory of a rescission of the contract for false representations, plaintiff should be required to elect between them, the measure of damages not being the same. Snore v. Hammond [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 222, 103 N. W. 834. Plaintiff cannot have an alleged forged deed set aside and title to land of his deceased mother adjudged to be in him, and at the same time trace the proceeds of the sale of such land into other land and have a lien declared in his favor thereon, and complaint in which he seeks such relief is demurrable. Darragh v. Rowe, 109 App. Div. 560, 96 N. Y. S. 666. Where complaint contained counts for money lent and on bond given to secure its payment, held that election to stand on first count was not a waiver of the right to use bond in evidence if it became necessary or proper to do so. Aetna Indemnity Co. v. Ladd [C. C. A.] 135 F. 636.

16. Where six insurance companies issued fire policies, in the standard form, to plaintiff, each of which provided that the liability of the insurer should be limited to the proportion of the loss which the amount of the policy bore to the total amount of valid insurance, held that plaintiff, having suffered a partial loss, could bring a single action against all of them for the purpose of having the liability of each determined. Fegelson v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 495.

17. Where complaint alleged that defendants were running and playing games of poker for money, and that plaintiff played with them and lost and paid to them a specified sum which they won and took from him in the games so played, held that there was no improper joinder of several causes of action. Parsons v. Wilson [Minn.] 103 N. W. 163. Joint tort feasors may be sued jointly in one suit. Oulighan v. Butler [Mass.] 75 N. E. 726.

18. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Brannon [Tex.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 208, 89 S. W. 1057. Cause of action for reformation of contract for sale of land may be joined with one for damages for injury to the freehold by the cutting of trees by the vendor between the making of the contract and the execution of the deed. Equitable issue should first be tried by court, and legal issue then submitted to jury. Krakow v. Wille [Wis.] 103 N. W. 1121.

19. Rev. St. 1898, §§ 2646, 2647. Are consistent. Schultz v. Kosbab [Wis.] 103 N. W. 237.

and trover,[22] for wrongful death and for pain and anguish suffered by the deceased before his death, where both accrue to the administrator,[23] but not otherwise,[24] and claims for treble and single damages resulting from different injuries growing out of the same trespass have been held to have been properly joined.[25]

The codes generally authorize the joinder of causes of action upon claims arising out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action,[26] claims for injuries to personal property,[27] and causes of action belonging to the same statutory class and affecting equally all parties.[28]

As a general rule causes of action in tort and on contract cannot be joined,[29]

20. Code Civ. Proc. § 484.. For several slanders uttered by several persons in pursuance of a common agreement. Green v. Davies. 182 N. Y. 499, 75 N. E. 536, rvg. 100 App. Div. 359, 34 Civ. Proc. R. 1, 91 N. Y. S. 470.

21. Armour Packing Co. of Louisiana v. Vietch-Young Produce Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 680. Holder of note secured by a mortgage and note for unpaid interest thereon, signed by the same maker, may enforce both in one action to foreclose the mortgage. Kleis v. McGrath, 127 Iowa, 459, 103 N. W. 371. Causes of action alleging the sale of certain sugar under an express contract at an agreed price, on which there is claimed to be a specified balance due, the sale of same quantity of sugar of same value alleging same as the reasonable value and claiming balance due of exactly the same amount, and that defendant came into possession of the same quantity of sugar belonging to plaintiff and seeking to recover the same amount as upon an implied contract, held not so inconsistent as to require plaintiff to elect between them, at least before trial. Franke v. Taussig Co., 48 Misc. 169, 95 N. Y. S. 212.

22. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Allen, 113 Ill. App. 89.

23. A cause of action by an administratrix for damages for pain and anguish suffered by her intestate as a result of injuries received by him while in defendant's employ as a result of the latter's negligence may be joined with a cause of action to recover the pecuniary loss resulting to the father and mother of the intestate by reason of his subsequent death as the result of the same injuries. Nemecek v. Filer & Stowell Co. [Wis.] 105 N. W. 225.

24. In action by administrator for damages for killing of his intestate, a count under Rev. Laws c. 106, § 72, for injuries to deceased for which he could have recovered in his lifetime, cannot be joined with counts under Id. § 71, for death due to defects in the ways, works and machinery, and a count at common law for failure to furnish proper machinery and safe place to work. Hyde v. Booth, 188 Mass. 290, 74 N. E. 337.

25. Southern Loan & Trust Co., 138 N. C. 224, 50 S. E. 659. Complaint alleging that plaintiff's intestate had been deceived through a course of years by the systematic fraud of one of the defendants, setting out the steps taken by him for that purpose, making all those participating with him in the scheme parties and setting out their fraudulent connection with him, and seeking to compel all the defendants to surrender the property received by them in pursuance of such fraudulent scheme, held not demurrable for misjoinder of causes of action or parties. Id. Code Civ. Proc. § 144, subd. 1. Glover v. Manila Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [S. D.] 104 N. W. 261. Conceding that complaint in action by stockholder set out a cause of action for an injunction against the officers and directors to restrain them, for the benefit of the corporation, from fraudulently depreciating the value of the stock, and a cause of action for damages suffered by plaintiff personally because of the same fraud, held that they were not improperly joined. Id. An action for deceit and an action on the case for breach of warranty may be joined when they grow out of the same transaction. Under Mills' Ann. Code Colo., § 70. Counts for breach of warranty in sale of bonds, and count for deceit, growing out of and presenting different phases of same transaction and both tending to support single recovery. Kimber v. 29. Cause of action on benefit certificate, and for damages for noncompliance with law by the association, and for fraudulent representations. Conard v. Southern Tier nor can a cause of action for slander be joined with one for malicious prosecution or malicious abuse of legal process, even if they originate simultaneously,[30] nor a cause of action to quiet title with one for the purchase price of an interest in the land,[31] nor counts in trover and in replevin,[32] nor a husband's cause of action for funeral expenses against one causing death of the wife with the cause of action of a minor child for the death.[33] There seems to be a conflict of authority as to whether causes of action for common law and statutory negligence may be joined.[34]

Several aspects of the same cause of action may be pleaded in different counts.[35] Several causes of action should not be stated in a single count,[36] and plaintiff may be required to separately state and number them.[37] Where a petition contains, under different counts, more than one cause of action, each count must contain a complete cause of action, in distinct and separate paragraphs.[38] Reference in

34. A cause of action for common law negligence cannot be joined in the same count with one for statutory negligence. Negligently starting car while plaintiff was alighting and permitting plaintiff to leave car while it was in motion in violation of ordinance. McHugh v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 85, 88 S. W. 853. Negligent operation of car and failure to keep lookout as required by ordinance. Rapp v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 144, 88 S. W. 865. Where a complaint against a railroad company stated a cause of action at common law for negligently killing plaintiff's cow and a cause of action under the statute for failure to fence, whereby the cow was killed, plaintiff was properly required to elect. Harvey v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 80 P. 1061. A plaintiff who pleads a right of action for wrongful death as at common law, and also under the employers' liability act, the latter remedy being merely cumulative, cannot be required to elect before trial. Monigan v. Erie R. Co., 99 App. Div. 603, 91 N. Y. S. 657. Where plaintiff has a right of action under the employers' liability act and also at common law for personal injuries he may allege both and recover upon either, and cannot be compelled to elect between them before trial. Kleps v. Bristol Mfg. Co., 107 App. Div. 488, 95 N. Y. S. 337.

35. Landers v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 117. Where negligent injury and willful injury are alleged on the same state of facts, plaintiff should not be required to elect. Waechter v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 270, 88 S. W. 147. A husband suing for injury to his wife in a railroad crossing accident may include in one count claim for damages for loss of consortium, expenses of illness and injury to his horse and vehicle. Birmingham So. R. Co. v. Lintner, 141 Ala. 420, 38 So. 363. A petition containing several counts, each referring to the same transaction but differing from each other in substantial particulars as to its details is not bad for duplicity. Gainesville & D. Elec. R. Co. v. Austin [Ga.] 50 S. E. 983. A petition containing several distinct counts, which do not differ from each other in any substantial particular, will, on motion filed at the first term in the nature of a special demurrer, be dismissed, unless the surplus counts are eliminated by amendment. Id. A single cause of action may be stated in several counts to meet possible phases thereof subject to the right to require an election at the trial. Edwards v. Hartshorn [Kan.] 82 P. 520. Though it is better pleading to set out two possible theories in separate counts, yet the fact that both are set forth in one count does not render it subject to the objection of duplicity unless the one averment negatives the other. Douglas v. Marsh [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 459, 104 N. W. 624.

36. A petition containing one count in which two causes of action are set forth will be held bad for duplicity on special demurrer. Gainesville & D. Elec. R. Co. v. Austin [Ga.] 50 S. E. 983. Must be separately stated. Kruger v. St. Joe Lumber Co. [Idaho] 83 P. 695. Services rendered from time to time under a contract to render services on request cannot be alleged in a single count. Averment of services between certain dates held insufficient though supported by itemized account. Sidway v. Missouri Land & Live Stock Co., 187 Mo. 649, 86 S. W. 150. When properly joined should always be separately stated. Harvey v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 80 P. 1061.

37. In action for damages for libel and slander held that motion to compel plaintiff to separately state and number his causes of action, if he relied on several, or to make the complaint more definite and certain, if he intended to rely on but one, should have been granted, allegations as to time, etc., being indefinite. Cerro DePasco Tunnel & Min. Co. v. Haggin, 94 N. Y. S. 593.

38. Venable Bros. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 137 F. 981. Declaration held not to contain two counts upon separate causes of action, one for penalty under Ga. Code 1895, §§ 2317, 2318, and one on a through bill of lading, no attempt having been made to comply with this rule. Id. A paragraph does not show a cause of action against persons joined subsequent counts to matter of inducement alleged in the first is sufficient.[39] Only one theory can be contained in a single paragraph,[40] but this rule does not apply to the exclusion of additional causes of action which may be stated in a single paragraph of the complaint.[41]

Election.[42]—A motion to require an election is addressed to discretion.[43] Where two separately alleged causes of action taken together are in fact but a single cause of action, an election should not be required.[44]

Splitting causes of action.[45]—One may not split his cause of action,[46] but all damages arising from a single wrong or cause of action must be recovered in one suit.[47]

Prayer.[48]—The court is not necessarily limited to the prayer for relief.[49] A complaint which states a cause of action is not demurrable because the prayer for relief does not conform to the case made.[50] A party seeking equitable relief must specifically demand it as such, unless the nature of the demand itself indicates that the relief sought is equitable.[51]

§ 3. The plea or answer.[52]—Matters relating to set-off and counterclaim,[53] affidavits of defense,[54] and the necessity of pleading under oath, are treated in separate articles.[55]

Separate suits cannot be maintained by a widow under Rev. Laws c. 106, § 73 for damages for the death of an employe, and by the employe's legal representatives under Id. § 72, where death is preceded by conscious suffering, but under Id. § 74, if damages are sought under both §§ 72 and 73 they must be recovered in a single suit by the administrator. Smith v. Thomson-Houston Elec. Co., 188 Mass. 371, 74 N. E. 664.

47. Where plaintiff recovered judgment against a railroad company for loss of her baggage, she could not thereafter maintain a separate action for mental anguish resulting from such loss, but, if she was entitled to such damages, she should have collected them in the original suit. A demurrer will not be sustained because the allegations of the complaint do not entitle plaintiff to all the relief demanded in the prayer for judgment. Woolf v. Barnes, 46 Misc. 169, 93 N. Y. S. 219. A demurrer to the complaint will not be sustained where it states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, though such facts are insufficient to sustain the judgment demanded. In action to foreclose mechanic's lien, where complaint was insufficient to sustain foreclosure but stated facts sufficient to authorize personal judgment, held that it stated cause of action for such judgment as against a demurrer for want of facts, though it was not in terms asked for, in view of Code Civ. as he may have, whether legal or equitable.[57] There is a conflict of authority as to whether inconsistent defenses[58] and matters in abatement and in bar may be united in the same answer.[59]

Defendant is not bound to plead to an insufficient declaration,[60] nor need he, ordinarily, answer amendments to the complaint made during the course of the trial for the purpose of curing defects or supplying omissions.[61]

An answer filed by one defendant inures to the benefit of his co-defendant if their relation to plaintiff's cause of action is joint and identical,[62] or if he sets up rights in his co-defendant.[63] An answer does not put in issue allegations of new matter in the separate answer of a co-defendant,[64] and the statutory provision that new matter in an answer is taken as denied does not avail one upon whom the answer containing the new matter is not served.[65]

The answer must be responsive to the allegations of the complaint[66] and must

Thus, he may answer in denial and in confession and avoidance and rely upon both at the same time, and one of such defenses may not be used to destroy the other so long as they are set forth in separate paragraphs. In action on note, answer admitting execution of note for less sum payable to different person, but alleging that it was subsequently altered without defendant's knowledge or consent, held not inconsistent with plea of non est factum. Fudge v. Marquell, 164 Ind. 447, 72 N. E. 565, 73 N. E. 895.

Missouri: Non est factum and fraud in procuring instrument sued on are inconsistent. Vette v. Evans, 111 Mo. App. 588, 86 S. W. 504.

New York: Defendant may plead inconsistent defenses. Denial of material allegations of the complaint puts plaintiff to his proof, though inconsistent with allegations of an affirmative defense, and such inconsistency is not a ground for striking out answer as a sham. Schlesinger v. Wise, 106 App. Div. 587, 94 N. Y. S. 718. Denials which are complete in themselves raise general issue as to allegations denied, and fact that certain allegations of new matter are inconsistent with the denials does not justify court in striking out latter as sham. Schlesinger v. McDonald, 196 App. Div. 570, 94 N. Y. S. 721.

Washington: The rule against inconsistent defenses does not apply to an inconsistency between an admission and a denial. Irwin v. Buffalo Pitts Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 849. In an action to recover commissions for negotiating a sale, a defense under a contract providing for reduction of commissions if the purchase price was not paid is not inconsisent with a defense of limitations or a defense of settlement. 66. Plea of justification in libel is in confession and avoidance, and must be of the very matter alleged in the declaration to have been published, and must be complete. Commercial News Co. v. Beard, 116 Ill. App. 501. Where plaintiff was charged with protecting gamblers, plea must set up how, when, and where he did so, and what he did or said. Id. In action in mandamus to compel railroad to construct private crossing, allegations in answer that plaintiff by reason of his acquiescence in and consent to the construction of a bridge for a highway crossing was estopped to demand a highway crossing held properly stricken out, the mere allegation of consent being insufficient as a foundation for the plea of estoppel, it being the duty of the railroad to make a good and sufficient highway crossing, and every citizen is bound to acquiesce in its doing so. Herrstrom v. Newton & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 436. It is no defense to an action to recover for certain specified legal services that plaintiff's assignors had performed other services under a contract not be evasive.[67] Each separate defense[68] or plea must be complete in itself,[69] and cannot be aided by allegations or denials in another part of the answer not incorporated therein by reference.[70] A partial defense must be pleaded as such and not as a complete defense to the action.[71] A paragraph designated as a counterclaim must be tested as such, and defendant cannot, on demurrer, urge its sufficiency as a defense.[72]

The sufficiency of a plea is to be determined by reference to it alone.[73] In order to be good it must state facts from which as a conclusion of law the court can see that a defense to the particular suit either in bar or abatement arises.[74] A plea which professes to answer the whole of what is adversely alleged in the declaration, but which in fact only answers a part of it and would not prevent a recovery if the facts therein alleged were proved, is bad.[75] Special pleas amounting to the general issue are properly stricken,[76] and the rejection of a plea setting up facts provable under pleas received is not prejudicial.[77]

The contention that the action is brought improperly and without legal authority is proper matter in abatement.[78] A plea in abatement must be certain to every intent.[79] If to the jurisdiction, there must be proper averments of facts accurately and logically stated, excluding every intendment of jurisdiction.[80]

Denials and traverses.[81]—An answer need not contain admissions, but it is sufficient to deny each controverted allegation of the complaint.[82] Such allegations can be controverted only by a general or specific denial.[83] A denial of all matters not by which they agreed to accept whatever remuneration for their services the defendant should fix. Butler v. General Acc. Assur. Corp., 92 N. Y. S. 1025. In action for unlawful dissection of a dead body, answer alleging that defendant operated on deceased at her request and that she subsequently died, held bad as not meeting the allegations of the complaint. Jackson v. Savage, 109 App. Div. 556, 96 N. Y. S. 366.

67. An answer by a corporation that for want of information it can neither admit nor deny an allegation that a named person is its general manager is evasive and will be treated as an admission thereof. Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Pullman Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 1008.

In action to recover for professional services where answer alleged agreement that sum to be fixed by defendant should be accepted in satisfaction for such services, but there was no tender, and no money was brought into court, held that defense was partial one only and demurrable because not so pleaded. Id. A separate defense not pleaded as a partial defense or in mitigation of damages must be deemed to have been pleaded as a complete defense. Tested by this rule on demurrer. Code Civ. Proc. § 508. specifically admitted is good,[84] and an affirmative allegation that certain facts do not exist is equivalent to a denial that they do exist,[85] but a denial on information and belief of matters of public record is insufficient.[86]

Confession and avoidance.[87]—A denial differs from a defense in that the former puts the plaintiff to his proof, while the latter is a plea by way of confession and avoidance.[88] Matter embraced in the issue raised or which could be raised by a denial is not new matter.[89] General denials being inconsistent with confession are not properly a part of a defense,[90] but to state a valid defense it may be necessary to deny specific portions of the complaint which would otherwise be deemed admitted, and hence all denials in a defense are not necessarily surplusage or immaterial.[91] A separate affirmative defense, complete in itself, in the nature of a confession and avoidance of plaintiff's cause of action, if good in law, defeats the action, notwithstanding the fact that the answer also contains a general denial.[92] A defense of the statute of limitations is not a technical plea of confession and avoidance.[93] Whether a defense of a supposed estoppel is so or not depends upon the nature of the matter alleged to show it.[94]

§ 4. Replication or reply and subsequent pleadings.[95]—Generally, where the answer contains a counterclaim or any new matter, plaintiff is required to file a reply denying the same or setting up new matter tending to avoid it.[96] In some states new matter set up in the answer is deemed controverted and no reply is necessary.[97] In others it may be ordered in the discretion of the court when the answer sets up new matter by way of confession and avoidance.[98] In others it is required only when the answer sets up a counterclaim.[99]

Edwards, 98 App. Div. 511, 90 N. Y. S. 303. Plaintiff bought account against defendants at an assignee's sale of assets of an insolvent corporation, and in suit thereon defendants set up agreement whereby an officer of the corporation was to be allowed to trade out the amount of the purchase price at defendants' store, which was alleged to have been executed. 98. Service of a reply will only be compelled where the substantial ends of justice will be promoted thereby. Held that clearness of issue would not be realized nor the

A reply when filed relates back to the commencement of the action.[1] It should be complete in itself and should not require a reference to the answer to determine what matters are intended to be alleged.[2] No reply is necessary where the new matter set up constitutes no defense,[3] or is a mere conclusion of law,[4] or amounts to a mere denial,[5] nor is a demurrer to the answer allowable unless it contains new matter by way of confession and avoidance.[6] Co-defendants need not reply to an answer not made a cross-petition against them.[7]

Replications should traverse or directly confess and avoid the averments of the pleas to which they are addressed.[8] A replication which does not avoid the legal effect of an affirmative defense presents no issue of fact for the jury, though it denies certain averments of fact in such defense.[9] Defendant cannot be heard to say that the issue tendered by the replication is too broad where it is no broader than that tendered by the plea.[10] A plea specially replied to in confession and avoidance stands proved without evidence.[11]

Plaintiff can recover only on the cause of action set up in his complaint, and cannot in his reply take a position inconsistent therewith.[12] The petition and reply are to be construed together in so far as they treat of the same matter,[13] and, when not attacked until after verdict and judgment, they will not be treated as in conflict unless necessarily so.[14]

Additional pleadings.[15]—A replication to a plea setting up a release which charges fraud and covin should conclude with a verification rather than to the country, and a rejoinder should be interposed thereto by defendant, which should be followed by a similiter.[16]

Under the code new matter presented by replication is generally taken as denied.[17]

§ 5. Demurrer. General rules.[18]—A demurrer is directed against the pleading itself,[19] and reaches only such defects as are apparent on its face.[20] If the allegations of the complaint warrant the granting of any relief, general demurrer will not lie.[21] A demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action will be upheld where a nonsuit must follow if every fact be proved that is therein alleged.[22]

23. An exception will not lie to a portion of a pleading but it must be construed as a whole. Altgelt v. Elmendorf [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 41.

the whole of the count, plea, or defense to which it is addressed.[24] A demurrer addressed to a complaint[25] or answer[26] as a whole is properly overruled if any of the counts or defenses set up therein are good, and the same is true of a demurrer to a complaint, where plaintiff is entitled to any relief on the facts pleaded.[27] So, too, a demurrer to a particular count or paragraph should be overruled if it contains matter sufficient to constitute a cause of action or defense on any theory,[28] but a demurrer by one of two defendants is properly overruled if the complaint is sufficient as to him.[29]

The action of the court in ruling on a demurrer is to be considered only with reference to the pleading on file when the ruling was made.[30] A demurrer filed after the filing of an amended pleading will be considered as addressed to it,[31] but a demurrer once sustained is not deemed interposed against the amended pleading without refiling.[32]

24. A demurrer to a part of a defense only cannot be sustained. Demurrer held one to the entire defense, and not one to each of its subdivisions separately. Bates v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 109 App. Div. 774, 96 N. Y. S. 711. Demurrer to one subdivision of defense held bad. Id.

25. Demurrer to an entire declaration should be overruled if any count is good. Gulf Lumber Co. v. Walsh [Fla.] 38 So. 831; Jackson v. Baker, 24 App. D. C. 100. Demurrer based on ground that facts set out in first and second paragraphs of complaint did not constitute cause of action held joint, though styled a separate demurrer to the first and second paragraphs, there being no effort to separately question the sufficiency of each paragraph. Town of Winamac v. Stout [Ind.] 75 N. E. 158. Where complaint in action for damages for breach of contract to furnish wheels states a cause of action for damages for wheels not delivered, demurrer thereto is properly overruled. Counersville Wagon Co. v. McFarlan Carriage Co. [Ind.] 76 N. E. 294. A joint demurrer addressed to a pleading as a whole is bad if any paragraphs thereof are sufficient. Demurrer to "complaint and to each paragraph thereof" on the ground that "said complaint does not, nor does either paragraph thereof, state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action" is a joint demurrer, and admits truth of all facts stated in complaint. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Reed [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 50. A demurrer to "so much of" a bill as seeks to have a sale of realty rescinded, held a demurrer to the whole bill in so far as it seeks rescission, there being no part thereof seeking such relief, and will be treated as an assignment of causes of demurrer to the whole bill. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 188 Mass. 315, 74 N. E. 653. Demurrer to entire complaint is properly overruled if it contains one good cause of action properly pleaded, and is too broad to eliminate allegations as to mental anguish, which are not stated as a separate cause of action, but only as a further element of damage. Hall v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 50.

26. Where one of several defenses stated is good. Downing v. Haas, 33 Colo. 344, 81 P. 33. A demurrer to a counterclaim on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action cannot prevail if one good cause of action can be spelled out of the counterclaim as pleaded, notwithstanding that it is involved and artificial, and would have been open to the objection of duplicity if properly raised. Kneeland v. Pennell, 96 N. Y. S. 403. Partial defense constituting a new issue which, if resolved in defendant's favor, would defeat plaintiff's right to recover to the full extent demanded, and of facts which plaintiff would not be required to negative in proving his case on default, held to sustain answer as against general demurrer. Patterson v. Cappon [Wis.] 102 N. W. 1083.

27. That the complaint does not state the facts clearly, alleges unnecessary and irrelevant facts, and asks for relief to which plaintiff is not entitled, is not ground of demurrer for failure to state a cause of action if the facts alleged entitle plaintiff to any relief. Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 739, 82 P. 436. If the declaration shows a right to even nominal damages demurrer will not reach insufficient averments of special damage. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wells [Fla.] 39 So. 838. Demurrer should be overruled if plaintiff is entitled to any relief on the facts pleaded though he is not entitled to some of the relief asked. McGown v. Barnum, 182 N. Y. 547, 75 N. E. 155.

28. Where part of a count is defective, but if the defective matter were stricken a cause of action would remain, demurrer will not lie. Woodstock Iron Works v. Stockdale [Ala.] 39 So. 335. A general demurrer to a complaint in an action on a bond will be overruled, if there is a single well assigned breach. Harrah v. State [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 443. An exception for insufficiency of facts will be overruled where a cause of action might exist under some phases of the facts alleged. Hillard v. Taylor, 114 La. 883, 38 So. 594. A demurrer to a paragraph of an answer containing among other things a denial of material allegations of the complaint is properly overruled. Ingersoll v. Davis [Wyo.] 82 P. 867.

30. Without reference to subsequent developments in the cause. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Marshall [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 973.

31. Complaint. City of Vincennes v. Spees [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 277.

32. Cooley v. U. S. Sav. & Loan Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 515.

A defendant ruled to answer may nevertheless interpose a demurrer.[33] Where plaintiff has interposed a valid demurrer to a defense, a further demurrer which is bad in form may be regarded as surplusage.[34] A demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action will lie though both are pleaded in one paragraph.[35]

Form, requisites, and sufficiency.[36]—It is sufficient if the demurrer uses language equivalent to that of the statute.[37] Where the statute prescribes the grounds of demurrer, no others are available.[38] In some states the precise defect must be pointed out.[39] Special demurrers in actions at law are abolished in some states.[40] A speaking demurrer is bad.[41]

If the grounds assigned are not well taken, the demurrer is properly overruled though the pleading is otherwise defective.[42] A tender is not permissible in aid of a defective demurrer.[43]

Error cannot be predicated on the sustaining of a demurrer to a plea, when the facts therein alleged may be proved under a general denial in the answer,[44] or in sustaining a demurrer to one paragraph where all its averments may be proven under a paragraph which is held good,[45] or in overruling a demurrer to a defense

Immaterial that demurrer alleges that complaint does not "contain" facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action instead of that it does not "state" such facts. Hay v. Bash [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 644.

39. Where demurrers are required to distinctly state the ground of objection a demurrer to a plea that "it is no answer to the complaint" is insufficient. Ryall v. Allen [Ala.] 38 So. 851. Demurrer to bill to redeem mineral interests for certain lands held sufficiently specific. Code 1896, § 3303. Wallace v. Markstein [Ala.] 40 So. 201. Special demurrers must point out the precise defect. Demurrer in general terms alleging another suit pending, misjoinder of parties and ambiguity held insufficient. Mitchell v. Pearsen [Colo.] 82 P. 446. Demurrer on ground that facts alleged were insufficient to support the action against plaintiffs held too general to raise question whether complaint stated cause of action within scope of statute authorizing suits to quiet title in certain cases. Foote v. Brown [Conn.] 62 A. 667. Where demurrer on ground of misjoinder of causes of action does not specify that a misjoinder exists by reason of the presence of a certain cause in the complaint, the court will not consider such possible complaint. Wetz [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 373. Demurrer on ground of defect of parties held insufficient in failing to set forth a particular statement of the defect as required by Rev. St. 1898, § 2651. Stehn v. Hayssen, 124 Wis. 583, 102 N. W. 1074. In action by administrator for partnership accounting defendants having failed to plead in their demurrer Rev. St. 1898, § 4251, providing that fact that no one is in existence who is authorized to bring an action when cause of action accrues shall not more than double the time within which the action may be brought, cannot rely on it under provisions of Id. § 2651. which the findings show in no way entered into or affected the judgment,[46] or in overruling demurrers to argumentative denials;[47] nor is it reversible error to sustain a demurrer to a bad pleading though the demurrer is so defective in form as to present no question.[48]

Issues raised.[49]—A demurrer raises issues of law alone,[50] and only such as are involved in the facts pleaded.[51]

A demurrer, whenever and by whomsoever interposed, reaches back through the whole record, and condemns the first pleading defective in substance,[52] but if the answer is held good on demurrer, defendant cannot urge on appeal that it was error not to carry back the demurrer to the complaint.[53]

A demurrer admits the truth of all material statements of fact which are well pleaded,[54] and matters necessarily inferred therefrom,[55] but does not admit conclusions of law[56] or averments which are contrary to facts judicially noticed,[57] or allegations as to documentary exhibits.[58]

It is the duty of the judge to pass upon the sufficiency of the petition to show a cause of action in plaintiff's favor, when that question is raised by demurrer, though the case is one wherein plaintiff seeks to recover damages alleged to have been sustained in consequence of defendant's negligence. Hill v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ga.] 52 S. E. 651.

51. A demurrer to a declaration in an action for damages against a city on the ground that a copy of the demand required by statute to be made in such cases before commencing suit is not annexed to the declaration and that defendant cannot, therefore, state whether the declaration and the demand correspond, does not raise the question of the sufficiency of the demand made. A demurrer to the answer is carried back to the complaint only as to substantial defects. Smith v. Thornton [Ark.] 86 S. W. 1008. Where, in action for libel, demurrer to special replications is sustained and court subsequently becomes satisfied that special pleas of justification were not a bar to the action and that it was error to refuse to carry the demurrer back to them, he should temporarily withdraw the case from the jury, set aside order sustaining demurrer, carry it back to the pleas, enter order sustaining the demurrer to said pleas, and then permit defendant to stand by them or plead over. Dowie v. Priddle, 216 Ill. 553, 75 N. E. 243, afg. 116 Ill. App. 184. A demurrer to a plea will not be carried back to the petition where a demurrer to the latter pleading has been waived by pleading over after it was overruled. City of Chicago v. People, 111 Ill. App. 594. Defendant cannot complain that a defective replication is allowed to stand to a defective plea. Peoria Star Co. v. Floyd Special Ag., 115 Ill. App. 401. Particularly applicable in mandamus, and demurrer to answer to the writ will be overruled if writ fails to show refusal or neglect to perform an official duty, the act demanded not appearing, either by the writ or answer, to be a duty of the respondent. State v. Sams [Neb.] 99 N. W. 544. In such case it is not error to dismiss the action and render judgment against the relator for costs on overruling the demurrer, when no offer to amend or request for leave to do so is made. Id. Failure of complaint in action by foreign corporation to allege that it has complied with statutes so as to authorize it to do business in state cannot be taken advantage of on demurrer to answer, that objection being one to plaintiff's legal capacity to sue, which is waived unless taken advantage of by demurrer or answer. Portland Co. v. Hall, 95 N. Y. S. 36. A demurrer to an answer is bad where the complaint states no cause of action. Darragh v. Rowe, 109 App. Div. 560, 96 N. Y. S. 666. Hearing and decision on demurrer.[59]—A judgment on demurrer is conclusive until duly set aside, and the question thereby settled is to be regarded as res adjudicata[60] and cannot be reviewed or revised at a subsequent term,[61] but this does not apply to a mere order sustaining a demurrer or exception,[62] and such an order is not a judgment finally and irrevocably disposing of the case.[63]

The sustaining of a demurrer for inconsistency in joining certain claims with one previously made which is claimed to determine the character of the action results only in striking those particular claims, and does not authorize a dismissal of the entire action for misjoinder.[64] The action should not be dismissed where the objections raised by special demurrer are met by appropriate amendments,[65] but when the amendments are insufficient for that purpose the rule is otherwise.[66] Demurrers to the petition and to the answer should be considered independently when they raise different issues.[67]

The failure to enter a formal order showing the disposition of a demurrer is not necessarily a fatal error.[68] A statutory requirement that the decision on demurrer shall be in writing and signed will be deemed waived where counsel do not request that such decision be reduced to writing.[69]

v. City Water Supply Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 1016; State v. Henry [Miss.] 40 So. 152; Williams v. Mathewson [N. H.] 60 A. 687; Delaware County Nat. Bank v. King, 109 App. Div. 553, 95 N. Y. S. 956. The rule permitting conclusions of law to be disregarded when the sufficiency of the facts pleaded to constitute a cause of action or defense is called in question has no application to conclusions of fact. 60. Judgment overruling demurrer to petition is conclusive that plaintiff is entitled to recover on facts stated in the petition. Sims v. Georgia R. & Elec. Co., 123 Ga. 643, 51 S. E. 573. A judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint is a bar to a second action on the same facts, but is not res adjudicata where the complaint in the second action supplies the allegations rendering the first one demurrable. Duke v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 675.

61. Sims v. Georgia R. & Elec. Co., 123 Ga. 643, 51 S. E. 573. If no exception is taken thereto and it stands unreversed when the case comes on for trial on the merits, he cannot, in his instructions to the jury, give the defendant the benefit of the defense set up in the demurrer, thereby, by indirection, depriving plaintiff of the estoppel he is entitled to urge as against the defendant. If ruling on demurrer is that facts stated in petition entitle plaintiff to recover, cannot deprive him of right to recover on proof of such facts. Sims v. Georgia R. & Elec. Co., 123 Ga. 643, 51 S. E. 573.

67. A demurrer to an answer, which denies averments of fraud, and alleges that the price charged was reasonable, that plaintiff has suffered no damage, and that noncompliance with statutory requirements was inadvertent rather than willful, raises different questions from those determined on demurrer to the petition. Hunt v. Fronizer, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 303.

68. Where petition to contest election was demurred to on ground that it was a bill in chancery and that chancery court had no jurisdiction, and demurrer and motion to transfer case to law docket were considered together and latter was allowed, held that failure to enter a formal order showing the disposition of the demurrer was not a fatal error. Quartier v. Dawiat, 219 Ill. 326, 76 N. E. 371.

69. Requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 289. Mauldin v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 52 S. E. 677. Where it is admitted that demurrer on ground that complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute cause of action was submitted to judge and that he subsequently proceeded with the trial of the case on the merits, it sufficiently appears

Leave to plead over after demurrer sustained rests in discretion.[70]

§ 6. Cross complaints and answers.[71]—A cross petition must relate to the cause of action sued on.[72] A defendant may demand relief against co-defendants without asking relief against plaintiff.[73] Defendant in a creditor's suit is entitled to file a cross petition as to the amount of a debt due him from another defendant which complainants seek to reach.[74] Defendant may be granted any relief justified by the allegations of the answer and the findings of the jury upon appropriate issues, though there is no prayer therefor.[75] The failure of the cross complaint to require an answer is a waiver thereof.[76]

§ 7. Amendments.[77]—Amendments are as a rule freely granted in the furtherance of justice,[78] the matter being largely committed to the discretion of the court,[79] which may take into consideration the probable utility of the amendment[80]

73. In suit to follow alleged trust fund into land, where plaintiff brings in all parties in interest including a vendee alleged to claim an interest in the premises, the latter may set up his equities as a bona fide purchaser, and ask for relief against his co-defendants, without asking any relief against plaintiff other than that his equities be declared superior to plaintiff's. 78. It is error to refuse to allow a defective jurat to be amended. Rootes v. Thomas, 85 Miss. 493, 38 So. 502. The uniform practice of the federal courts is to permit amendments in all judicial proceedings where they are necessary to enable parties to reach the merits of the controversy they attempt to present, and their allowance will work no injustice to anyone. Under Act Sept. 24, 1789, c. 20, § 32, 1 St. 91. In re Plymouth Cordage Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1000. Applies in bankruptcy proceedings. Id.

Proc. for Cuba and Porto Rico, art. 156, allowing joinder of causes of action against or in favor of several persons arising from the same service of title, or based upon the same cause of action, held that there was no clear abuse of discretion in allowing amendment joining assignee of insurance policy as a plaintiff in a suit in Porto Rico by a mortgage creditor of the insured to enforce his right to the avails of the insurance, where assignee's rights were alleged to be subordinate to those of the mortgagee. Royal Ins. Co. v. Miller, 26 S. Ct. 46. Denial of motion made at close of evidence so as to allege illegal provisions in contract for paving not interfered with. Walker v. Detroit, 136 Mich. 6, 98 N. W. 744. Necessity of an amendment and regularity of the application for leave rest largely in the discretion of the trial court. Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Lipscomb [Fla.] 39 So. 637; Peacock v. Feaster [Fla.] 40 So. 74. The federal courts have a large discretion in permitting the correction of defects in pleadings and process by amendment [Rev. St. § 954] (Great Northern R. Co. v. Herron [C. C. A.] 136 F. 49), and rulings of this character are no ground for reversal unless the discretion is grossly abused (Id.). A refusal to allow such amendment will, however, be cause for reversal when substantial injustice appears to have been done. Substantial injustice held to have been done by refusal to allow defendant to file additional paragraph of answer during trial. Home Ins. Co. v. Overturf [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 47. While in granting leave to amend pleadings the court exercises a large discretion, yet that discretion should be exercised liberally in favor of granting such amendments in order that the case may be fully tried upon its merits. Hardman v. Kelley [S. D.] 104 N. W. 272. When application is made for leave to amend by inserting an additional defense which a party may have to the action at a reasonable time before trial, such amendment should be allowed upon such terms as the court may deem just to the adverse party. Id. Held an abuse of discretion and reversible error to refuse to permit amendment setting up additional defenses, because inconsistent with those previously set up, where motion was seasonably made, and defenses, if sustained, would have entitled defendant to judgment and one of them would have been barred by a judgment in the action. Id. Defenses inserted at the trial are properly stricken where they do not conform to the order allowing the amendment. Id. In action in municipal court, denial of motion to amend complaint so as to set up entirely new cause of action held not an abuse of discretion where terms which that court had power to impose were entirely inadequate. Toher v. Schaefer, 96 N. Y. S. 470.

and the diligence exercised in presenting it,[81] and impose such terms as seem just.[82] Amendments may, on proper leave granted, be made before the trial,[83] at the trial under proper restrictions against surprise,[84] at the conclusion of the trial to conform

80. Amendment in description of land in petition held immaterial and properly allowed on appeal. Mann v. Balfour, 187 Mo. 290, 86 S. W. 103. On issue framed after judgment has been opened generally, where it is agreed that the contract sued on shall stand for declaration, and defendant shall plead nonassumpsit, which she does, it is not error for the court to refuse to allow filing of additional plea of non est factum, since execution can be denied under plea filed. Mulhearn v. Roach, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 483. In action against railroad company, for damages for death of passenger, it is proper to disallow amendment to petition needing no amplification where only additional matter sought to be added is the assertion that defendant owed passenger a legal duty, the nonobservance of which could in no way have brought about or contributed to the injury complained of. White v. Southern R. Co., 123 Ga. 353, 51 S. E. 411. Leave to make an unnecessary amendment is properly denied. Vulcan Ironworks v. Burrell Const. Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 836. It is not an abuse of discretion to deny leave to make amendments contradictory of the original pleading and with no substantial showing that they can be proved. Bell v. Standard Quicksilver Co., 146 Cal. 699, 81 P. 17. Leave will not be given to file an amended answer setting up as special defenses matters provable under a general denial pleaded in the original answer. Schultz v. Greenwood Cemetery, 93 N. Y. S. 180. That an amendment is so framed that if demurred to it might be held insufficient is not necessarily fatal in its allowance. Pratt v. Rhodes [Conn.] 61 A. 1009.

81. Fire insurance company held to have exercised sufficient diligence in presenting additional paragraph of answer, setting up fact that plaintiff had other insurance on policy, where it discovered that fact from plaintiff's evidence the day before offer was made. Home Ins. Co. v. Overturf [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 47. Leave to defendant to amend at the trial so as to plead a misjoinder of parties is properly denied when it appears that he knew of the facts at the time of answering. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Washington [Kan.] 81 P. 461. Where defendant in ejectment asserting rights as mortgagee in possession was defeated because it appeared that she had assigned the mortgage and could not prove a reassignment under her pleadings, held that, on obtaining a statutory new trial, she would not be allowed to amend her answer so as to allege the reassignment, she having known the facts and their bearing upon her defense and having neglected to amend for two years after the sufficiency of the pleading had been passed upon by the lower court. Barson v. Mulligan, 94 N. Y. S. 687. Where case was never put upon the calendar and was not moved by either party, held that motion to amend the complaint made a year and a half after the service of the answer would not be denied on the ground of laches. Kerrigan v. Peters, 108 App. Div. 292, 95 N. Y. S. 723.

82. Imposition of terms on allowing an amendment cannot be complained of when the amendment constituted no defense. Mahoney v. Crockett, 37 Wash. 252, 79 P. 933. A provision authorizing an amendment to the complaint on payment of costs within a specified time is for defendant's benefit and may be waived by him by an extension of the time or otherwise. Written agreement for extension made by attorneys held waiver, such agreements being authorized by Rev. Laws, c. 173, §§ 69, 70. Crossman v. Griggs, 188 Mass. 156, 74 N. E. 358. Where payment of costs is a condition to amendment, acceptance and retention of moneys so paid admits full performance of such condition. Id. Amendment changing cause of action to recover under a contract to one for breach of the same contract should only be allowed upon condition that plaintiff pay all costs theretofore incurred. Dunham v. Hastings Pavement Co., 109 App. Div. 514, 96 N. Y. S. 313. Costs should be allowed defendant on the granting of an amendment to the summons and complaint changing the cause of action from one against them in their representative capacity to one against them individually. Kerrigan v. Peters, 108 App. Div. 292, 95 N. Y. S. 723. An amendment setting up after-acquired title does not require payment of costs to date where the title originally pleaded is not abandoned. McCarthy v. Woods [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 405.

83. Where the petition fails to show whether plaintiff is a corporation or a partnership, an amendment after demurrer filed is allowable. Lucile Min. Co. v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co., 27 Ky. L. R. 1100, 87 S. W. 1121. When defendant sued as a corporation pleads that it is a partnership, plaintiff should be allowed to amend. Teets v. Snider Heading Mfg. Co., 27 Ky. L. R. 1061, 87 S. W. 803.

84. Amendment at the trial is allowable in the discretion of the trial court. Altgelt v. Oliver Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 28. There is no abuse of discretion in allowing an amendment at the trial which merely corrects a defect in an existing allegation, the purpose of which is apparent, and which has been allowed to go unchallenged up to that time. In action for damages for destruction of property by fire, alleged to have been set by train, held no abuse of discretion to allow amendment of allegations as to negligence in care of right of way. Great Northern R. Co. v. Herron [C. C. A.] 136 F. 49. Amendments which take the defendant by surprise and deprive him of an opportunity to defend against a part of the claim should not be permitted at the trial except upon terms which will prevent him from being prejudiced thereby. Such as a continuance, and payment by plaintiff of costs incident thereto. Id. In action for damages for destruction by fire, alleged to have been started by train, of shed and hay which complaint alleged were situated on a specified section, held abuse of discretion to allow amendment alleging that hay was three-quarters of a mile from said section, and from hay without imposing terms. Id. Issues should not be injected after opportunity of debate has been closed save upon a very clear showing that justice will be promoted thereby. In action to compel railroad company to construct a private crossing, amendment to answer, filed after argument to the jury had been concluded, alleging that parties had agreed upon a grade crossing at a place to be determined by defendant's engineer and plaintiff, held properly stricken. Herrstrom v. Newton & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 436. Where a variance was called to the attention of the parties on a former trial, surprise cannot be claimed at allowance of an amendment at the trial. Finlen v. Heinze [Mont.] 80 P. 918. A party is not prejudiced by an amendment at the trial where the case is reopened and he is given full opportunity to make additional proof. Jordan v. Greig, 33 Colo. 360, 80 P. 1045. Where surprise is claimed and the party desiring to amend declines to consent to a continuance, denial of leave to amend at the trial is discretionary. Denial sustained. Irwin v. Buffalo Pitts Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 849. An amendment to admit evidence which on a former trial was admitted without objection is properly allowed. Gritman v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. [Wash.] 83 P. 6. Where court gave notice on appearance day that amendment must be presented before trial, amendment at trial not allowed unless delay excused. Lewis v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 247.

85. An amendment to conform the pleading to the proof is properly allowed in the absence of surprise. Landers v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 117. An amendment to correspond to the facts proven is allowed either before or after judgment, provided it does not introduce a new and different cause of action. Raley v. Raymond Bros. Clarke Co. [Neb.] 103 N. W. 57. Amendments to cure a variance between pleading and proof may be allowed after verdict under Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 7, § 1, and c. 110, par. 24. Franke v. Hanly, 215 Ill. 216, 74 N. E. 130. Where plaintiff alleged that he was injured by reason of defect in head or top of planing machine, and evidence showed that it was result of defective lock screw holding top of machine, amendment alleging screw to be defective held to cure variance and to have been properly allowed. Id. In action for malicious prosecution of suit in replevin, where declaration alleged trespass without authority and proof showed that whatever was done was by virtue of competent legal process, held not an abuse of discretion to allow an amendment, but amended declaration should have been required to be filed before verdict or immediately thereafter. Harris v. Thomas [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 239, 103 N. W. 863. In action to recover for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from a collision of a street car with an iron gate across the tracks, held not an abuse of discretion to permit an amendment to make complaint conform to evidence showing that injuries were caused in part by manner in which car was handled in attempting to make sudden stop. English v. Minneapolis & St. P. S. R. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 886. Where the parties voluntarily litigate issues of fact upon which the trial court bases conclusions of fact fairly justified by the evidence, it may amend the pleadings after trial to conform to the facts. Maul v. Steele [Minn.] 104 N. W. 4. Where answer in action to enforce specific performance of contract was unassailed by demurrer or motion and was confessedly sufficient to admit evidence that defendant was of weak mind and incapacitated from attending to business, evidence of total disability could not be excluded on the ground that it proved too much, the admission of such evidence does not require an amendment to conform the answer to the proof, and hence the allowance of such an amendment is not prejudicial to plaintiff. Miller v. Tjexhus [S. D.] 104 N. W. 519. The only limitation upon the power of the court to allow an amendment to conform the pleadings to the proof is that it must be in furtherance of justice and not change materially the claim or defense. Code Civ. Proc. § 723. Amendment to complaint in action for personal injuries so as to allege defect in the condition of the ways, works, and machinery, held properly allowed. Bovee v. International Paper Co., 108 App. Div. 94, 95 N. Y. S. 426. A variance between the pleadings and the proof is not material unless the opposite party is thereby actually misled to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits. Id. If a party insists that he has been misled, the court may, in his discretion, order an amendment of the pleadings on such terms as he may deem just. Code Civ. Proc. § 539. Id. If the variance is not material the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment without costs. Code Civ. Proc. § 540. Id. Amendment to conform to proof may be allowed after submission and before decision. Ennis Brown Co. v. Hurst [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1056. Where plaintiff sues several defendants on the theory that they are jointly liable, and the evidence or pleadings show that some are not liable at all, or that some cannot be joined in the same action, plaintiff may strike the name of any defendant who is not liable and take judgment against the rest, under the code provision allowing amendments at any stage and in all respects. Charles Lippincott & Co. v. Behre [Ga.] 50 S. E. 467. An amendment to conform the pleading to the proof will not be denied merely because an exception to the admission of evidence, which becomes admissible only by reason of the amendment, will thereby be destroyed. On motion to direct a verdict for defendant reserved until after verdict, which was for plaintiff, and motion for a new trial on the minutes, the complaint may be amended by inserting an allegation as to the laws of a foreign state to make it conform to the proof, even though such evidence was excepted to when offered. Audley v. Townsend, 96 N. Y. S. 439. Amendment on trial permitted to eliminate allegation as to bill of lading on its appearing that such bill was unsigned. Patrick v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Ind. T.] 88 S. W. 330. Suspension of charge for purpose of allowing defendant to file amendment is discretionary. Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Pullman Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 1008. Words which are merely descriptive of plaintiff and are not essential to its right of recovery may be stricken by amendment. Amendment after close of evidence striking words "Lessee of Manor Real Estate and Trust Company" following plaintiff's name, where evidence shows that all of the dealings of defendant were with plaintiff. Mineral R. & Min. Co. v. Flaherty, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 236. A copy of the policy filed with the declaration in an action on a fire insurance policy may be amended to conform to the original in case of variance, since it is a part of the declaration under Code, c. 125, § 61. Staats v. Georgia Home Ins. Co., 57 W. Va. 571, 50 S. E. 815. In an action at law the statute of jeofails does not cure the nonjoinder or want of issue altogether, and no verdict or judgment can properly be rendered in such case. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Coffey [Va.] 51 S. E. 729. Where there is no equity in the original petition, a judgment refusing an amendment striking certain allegations therein, which should have been allowed, and dismissing the petition, will not be reversed where there would have been no equity in the petition if such allegations had been stricken. Ogburn v. Elmore, 123 Ga. 677, 51 S. E. 641. An amendment to conform to the proof in case of an immaterial variance may be made at any time before judgment, and a copy of the amendment need not be served on the adverse party. Maionchi v. Nicholini [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1052. In trespass quare clausum, where title to disputed territory was tried under plea of general issue, held that, if necessary for defendant to plead specially, he would after verdict be allowed to amend pleadings in superior court to conform to the issue actually tried. Lyman v. Brown [N. H.] 62 A. 650. Under R. S. c. 110, § 23, court may allow amendment to declaration after verdict. Hansell-Elcock Foundry Co. v. Clark, 115 Ill. App. 209. Defendant held not prejudiced where only difference between declarations was that original charged that column in question was negligently and improperly erected and permitted to remain in an unsafe and improper condition, and amended one charged that it was so erected and "placed," and that amended declaration charged that plaintiff would continue to suffer and lose health by reason of his injuries. Id. An amendment may be allowed after the retirement of the jury before they agree upon a verdict. Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Pullman Co. [Ga.] 50 S. E. 1008.

86. On appeal in an equity case an amended petition may be filed in the supreme court for the purpose of conforming the pleading to the proof. Under statute providing for trial de novo on appeal in equity cases. Raley v. Raymond Bros. Clarke Co. [Neb.] 103 N. W. 57. The circuit court of appeals may allow an amendment without sending the case back to the lower court for that purpose, provided the parties consent to such a course and the amendment could have been made in the lower court. Fred Macey Co. v. Macey [C. C. A.] 135 F. 725. Where cause was removed from state to federal circuit court, but neither the original bill nor the petition for removal showed a removal cause, circuit court acquired no jurisdiction and therefore could not allow bill to be amended so as to contain necessary allegations as to citizenship, and hence appellate court could not allow it by consent. Id. On appeal from judgment of justice of the peace, where statement was ambiguous as to whether action was in contract or in tort, but averments were such as to establish a case in which action of trover and conversion would lie, and defendant pleaded nonassumpsit and went to trial on the merits, held that amendment would be permitted in appellate court, or, if there was other reversible error, it could be made below. Brown v. Kirk, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 157. Verdict will not be set aside for variance between pleadings and proof where court's attention was not called to it during trial in any way, but amendment will be allowed to conform pleadings to proof. Freund v. Greene & Sons Corp., 139 F. 703. Laws 1902, p. 1542, c. 580, § 166, requires the New York municipal court to allow amendments to be made at any time if substantial justice will be promoted there by, and Id. § 326, relating to appeals, extends that requirement by implication to the appellate court. Rein v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 636. On appeal from municipal court in action for assault by conductor on a passenger, where all the evidence bearing on the assault was admitted, held that complaint would be treated as amended so as to state a cause of action for breach of the contract of carriage over which the lower court had jurisdiction, it having no jurisdiction over the action for assault. Id. An amendment on appeal to obviate error at the trial is not allowable. Landers v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 117.

87. Where an amendment changing the issues is sought after decision on appeal, a showing as to why the matter alleged was not previously set up is necessary. Showing held insufficient. Asher v. Uhl, 27 Ky. L. R. 938, 87 S. W. 307. Where on appeal it was ruled that petition was defective in failing to allege that defendant or its servant knew of plaintiff's presence at the time of the alleged negligent and reckless act, held that amendment embodying such an allegation was properly allowed on return of the case to the lower court, the petition containing enough to amend by, and the amendment not changing the cause of action. Rome Furnace Co. v. Patterson [Ga.] 50 S. E. 928. Allowance of certain amendments being directed by the mandate, the trial

If the averments are sufficient to give jurisdiction,[89] amendments either of form or substance are allowable.[90] Parties may be eliminated or new parties added.[91] Amendments changing the cause of action or introducing new issues are ordinarily not allowable.[92] A second amendment to correct deficiencies in the first may be

89. Fred Macey Co. v. Macey [C. C. A.] 135 F. 725. Where original petition contains sufficient averments to confer jurisdiction on federal court, jurisdiction is not lost because amended petition alleges plaintiff's citizenship in present tense only. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron [C. C. A.] 137 F. 48. Jurisdictional as well as other averments may be inserted or reformed by amendment. In re Plymouth Cordage Co. [C. C. A.] 135 F. 1000.

Tice [Ga.] 52 S. E. 916. Court may permit summons and complaint to be amended by striking out words "as executors," etc., appearing after the names of the defendants so as to change action from one against them in their representative capacity to one against them individually, though limitations may have run against claim against them in the latter capacity. Jordan v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 105 Mo. App. 446, 79 S. W. 1155.

92. Amendment allowed: An amended petition does not state a new and independent cause of action from that in the original petition, (a) when the same evidence would prove either cause of action, (b) when the measure of recovery is the same on each cause of action, and (c) when a recovery upon the cause of action in the amended petition would bar a recovery on the original petition. American Mach. & Construction Co. v. Stewart [La.] 38 So. 960. The cause of action is the particular matter for which the suit is brought, and where the object of an amendment is not to forsake this, but to adhere to and effect a recovery upon it, it is the duty of the court to permit the amendment when the merits cannot be otherwise reached, and this is true whether the action is ex contractu or ex delicto. Jackson v. Gunton, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 203. In action for trespass to recover damages for unlawfully mining coal, amendment made after case had been arbitrated and an award made in plaintiff's favor from which defendant had appealed, specifying more clearly that damages sought to be recovered were treble damages under the statute (Id.), and amendment seeking to recover additional damages for injuries to premises by the manner in which coal was mined, held not to change cause of action (Id.) Held within discretion of court to allow amendment at trial of petition alleging that sale made by defendants as plaintiff's agents was a sham for purpose of deceiving him, and that defendants thereafter sold land at substantial advance so as to allege that defendants, as such agents, sold land for such increased price and retained the same. Did not change action to suit in equity. Moore v. Petty [C. C. A.] 135 F. 668. Since a cause of action for failure to warn plaintiff that his train must be stopped, and one for failure to warn him that the track was defective, are distinct, limitations may be successfully pleaded to amendments setting up the former, the original pleading having set up the latter. Wabash R. Co. v. Bhymer, 214 Ill. 579, 73 N. E. 879. An amended pleading does not state a new cause of action where it differs from the original only in its statement of details. Averment in complaint in action for wrongful death that defendant was accustomed to keep clear space on both sides of its track at place where defendant was injured, held to include averment in amended complaint that it was its practice to keep one side clear so that cause of action was same in both. Muren Coal & Ice Co. v. Howell, 217 Ill. 190, 75 N. E. 469. In action to enforce rights acquired through assignment by vendor of an executory contract for sale of realty, held not an abuse of discretion to refuse defendant's application, made after trial and decision of the case, to amend answer by setting up claim that assignment was an unlawful preference under the bankruptcy act. Lamm v. Armstrong [Minn.] 104 N. W. 304.

Amendment not allowed: Where an amended pleading introduces a different measure of damages and would not be sustained by the same evidence, a new cause of action is stated. Kramer v. Gille, 140 F. 682. Causes of action arising after the suit cannot be added by amendment. Martin v. Hanson, 114 La. 784, 38 So. 560. Where original count in action for wrongful death alleges negligence as the cause of the injury and nothing more, additional counts alleging that deceased was wrongfully, wilfully, wantonly, and intentionally forced and pushed off the car set up a new cause of action. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. McDonough, 112 Ill. App. 315. After judgment has been taken on promissory note, court cannot amend record by making legal plaintiff in such judgment the use plaintiff, and introducing another legal plaintiff. Good Roads Machinery Co. v. Old Lycoming Tp., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 156. Amendment offered at the trial held to be based on a different contract from that sued on. Patrick v. Whitely [Ark.] 87 S. W. 1179. Proper exercise of discretion to refuse to allow amendment changing cause of action when offered at the trial, particularly when such cause would have been barred by limitations. Bartz v. Chicago City R. Co., 116 Ill. App. 554. Where declaration charges only a careless and improper driving and management of a train, a new cause of action is stated by an amendment charging defendant with having carelessly and improperly equipped such train. Id. Code § 3600, providing that amendments may be permitted at any time when the claim or defense is not substantially changed thereby, does not authorize a material change. Le Mars Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Burgess [Iowa] 105 N. W. 641. In suit to foreclose mortgage given to building society, where defendant relied on by-laws and claimed to have discharged her indebtedness by payments made in accordance therewith, held error to allow amendment offered two weeks after submission of case setting up estoppel. Id. A suit in equity cannot by amendment be converted into a statutory proceeding to contest an election under the general local option liquor law. Ogburn v. Elmore, 123 Ga. 677, 51 S. E. 641. Where the statute distinguishes between contracts by persons entirely without understanding and those of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding, the former being void and the latter subject to rescission, amendment of a complaint alleging unsound mind so as to allege entire lack of understanding states a new cause of action. Maionchi v. Nicholini [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1052. An action for a penalty cannot be converted into an action upon a contract by amendment. Action against railroad company for penalty under Ga. Code 1895, §§ 2317, 2318, cannot be converted into one on contract. Venable Bros. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 137 F. 981. The court may allow an amendment changing a suit in equity to an action at law. Crossman v. Griggs, 188 Mass. 156, 74 N. E. 358. If the original declaration states no cause of action against one of two defendants, a cause of action against him stated in an amended declaration filed after the running of limitations is barred. Statute not a bar if original declaration states cause of action defectively. Klawiter v. Jones, 219 Ill. 626, 76 N. E. 673, afg. Jones v. Klawiter, 110 Ill. App. 31. In action on account for goods sold, where original petition sought to charge two defendants as partners, amendment alleging sale to one of them individually held not to set up a wholly new and distinct cause of action. Padden v. Clark, 124 Iowa, 94, 99 N. W. 152. Amended petition seeking to redeem from interest in land acquired by defendant under tax foreclosure sale after running of limitations where original petition sought only to foreclose mortgage. Clifford v. Thun [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1052.

94. In action for negligence for injuries to passenger amendment setting up addi-original.[95] The rule that an amended pleading when refiled supersedes the original does not apply where the complaint is not refiled or offered to be refiled after amendment during trial, and refiling is not demanded, and the court and both parties treat it as though it had been amended at the time when a previous demurrer thereto was overruled.[96] In case an amended petition is filed the original remains a part of the record and may be looked to for the purpose of finding whether the necessary conditions appear for entertaining the suit.[97] New and separate causes of action added by amendment do not relate back.[98] Withdrawal of a substituted petition reinstates the original.[99] Where the original complaint states no cause of action an amendment does not relate back.[1] A petition filed on the loss of the original but abandoning a cause of action therein stated is an amended and not a substituted petition, and accordingly is not to be dismissed on the finding of the original.[2] An amendment may be made by substitution of a complete amended pleading by interlineation, or by filing a statement of the additions and excisions to be made.[3] An order for an amendment made at the trial to meet evidence already adduced need not be based on affidavit.[4] Where parties try the case on the issues framed by an amendment without objection, absence of a formal order allowing the amendment is waived.[5] Where plaintiff amends before answer, notice of such amendment must be served,[6] but if the opposite party is heard on the amendment, the fact that notice was not given is immaterial.[7]

§ 8. Supplemental pleadings.[8]—The codes generally provide that, upon the application of either party, the court may permit him to make a supplemental complaint, answer, or reply alleging material facts which have occurred since his former pleading, or of which he was ignorant at that time.[9] The allowance of such a plead-tional act of negligence held not objectionable as failing to show in what manner such negligence contributed to the injury when construed in connection with the declaration. Georgia R. & Elec. Co. v. Reeves, 123 Ga. 69, 51 S. E. 610.

95. An amended petition supersedes the original. Relief prayed in original but not in amended cannot be granted. Keith v. Keith [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 126, 87 S. W. 384. Contentions in the original answer not renewed in the substituted answer will be treated as waived. Alexander v McPeck [Mass.] 75 N. E. 88.

96. Stewart v. Knight & Jillson Co. [Ind.] 76 N. E. 743.

97. To see whether it contains necessary averments as to citizenship to give federal court jurisdiction where amended petition alleges citizenship in present tense only. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron [C. C. A.] 137 F. 48.

98. Turner v. Hamilton, 13 Wyo. 408, 80 P. 664.

99. Thayer v. Smoky Hollow Coal Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 1024.

2. Phillips v. Campbell [Ky.] 86 S. W. 1112.

3. Turner v. Hamilton, 13 Wyo. 408, 80 P. 664.

4. Jordan v. Greig, 33 Colo. 360, 80 P. 1045.

5. Willman & Co. v. Alabama Brokerage Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 102.

6. Code, § 3560. Ogle v. Miller [Iowa] 104 N. W. 502. Where in action against partnership no notice of an amendment stating a cause of action against an individual partner was served, held that no judgment could be rendered against the latter. Id.

7. Where upon motion to strike off or other proceeding having that object in view the opposite party has been heard as to the propriety of an amendment, the fact that he did not have notice of the original application to amend will not of itself entitle him to a reversal of the judgment. Weiler v. Weiss, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 247. Action of court in such case in refusing to strike off amendment will be treated on appeal as equivalent to an allowance thereof and will be judged of accordingly. Id.

8. See 4 C. L. 1029.

9. Code Civ. Proc. § 544. Central Trust Co. v. West India Imp. Co., 109 App. Div. 517, 96 N. Y. S. 519. In equitable action to compel return of certain securities alleged to have been pledged with defendant, held that plaintiff should have been allowed to file supplemental complaint alleging that since the filing of the original complaint the securities had become of no value, and changing the relief demanded to a judgment for their value at the time when their return was demanded. Id. A supplementary pleading must allege material facts occurring since the last pleading. Asher v. Uhl, 27 Ky. L. R. 938, 87 S. W. 307. Held that application for leave to serve supplemental answer setting up "the exchange of consents to discontinue this action, and the exchange and delivery of the general releases by the plaintiff herein to the defendant," etc., should have been granted as presenting does not in any way involve a determination that the party is entitled to any other or different relief in consequence of the facts thus pleaded, and it should be allowed in the absence of good cause to the contrary shown by the opposite party.[10] Mere delay in making the motion should not of itself be allowed to defeat the application in the absence of a showing of resulting prejudice to the other party.[11] A supplemental answer which states the substance of a good defense, however defectively, should be allowed to be filed.[12] A supplemental pleading cannot be filed after decision,[13] and one filed out of time without leave is properly stricken.[14]

§ 9. Motions upon the pleadings.[15]—Motions to strike out part of a pleading[16] or to make more definite and certain are addressed to the discretion of the trial court.[17] Such motion should be made in writing,[18] before trial,[19] and must specifically point out the defect.[20] A motion to strike out alleged irrelevant matter must be heard upon the pleadings alone.[21] Where the irrelevancy of certain allegations appears from the pleadings, the notice of motion to strike need not allege that the moving party is aggrieved thereby.[22] A motion to dismiss the complaint upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is similar in effect to a demurrer on that ground, and admits all the allegations of the complaint.[23] A motion to strike an answer as a whole is properly denied where a portion of the matter alleged therein is properly pleaded.[24] Where, after a ing most convenient way in which to obtain adjudication upon defense claimed to be bar to further prosecution of the action. Tucker v. Dudley, 93 N. Y. S. 355. Where city was made party to suit to foreclose mortgage because it claimed lien under certain special assessments which petition alleged were junior and void, held that supplemental petition alleging that since commencement of the action plaintiffs had recovered judgment and a decree of foreclosure against the mortgagor, but that action had been continued as to the city, and asking that assessment be canceled, did not introduce a new cause of action in so far as questions of priority of lien and right to redeem were concerned. Citizens' State Bank v. Jess, 127 Iowa, 450, 103 N. W. 471. No ground exists for striking a supplemental petition from the files, where it adds nothing to the allegations of the original petition except failure to satisfy the judgment on execution. Scofield v. Excelsior Oil Co., 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 169.

10. Central Trust Co. v. West India Imp. Co., 109 App. Div. 517, 96 N. Y. S. 519.

11. Plaintiff held not guilty of laches. Central Trust Co. v. West India Imp. Co., 109 App. Div. 517, 96 N. Y. S. 519.

12. Burnett v. Kirk [Wash.] 80 P. 855.

13. Richardson v. Johnson [La.] 39 So. 449. No motion can be made for leave to file supplemental pleading pending an appeal for a judgment against plaintiff. Central Trust Co. v. West India Imp. Co., 109 App. Div. 517, 96 N. Y. S. 519.

14. Braxton v. Liddon [Fla.] 38 So. 717.

15. See 4 C. L. 1031.

16. The granting or denying of a motion to strike out matter alleged to be irrelevant or immaterial is discretionary (In re City of New York, 48 Misc. 602, 96 N. Y. S. 554), but the power should be exercised with reluctance and caution (Id.). Held that allegation in petition in condemnation proceedings that it was in fact necessary to acquire the property would not be stricken as superfluous though it was also alleged that such necessity had been determined in the statutory manner, it not appearing that moving party could be harmed thereby. Id.

17. Berg v. Humptulips Boom & River Imp. Co., 38 Wash. 342, 80 P. 528. The disposition of a motion to make more definite and certain is ordinarily discretionary with the trial court. Motion in action to enforce double liability of stockholder, that plaintiff be required to specify dates and numbers of certificates of stock held by defendant held properly denied, since defendant was presumed to have better knowledge of stock than plaintiff, and averment by latter of amount with which it charged him was sufficiently specific. Harrison v. Remington Paper Co. [C. C. A.] 140 F. 385.

18. Lindley v. Kemp [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 798; Ray v. Pecos, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 582, 88 S. W. 466.

19. Can only be made at trial when cannot be made good by amendment. Every reasonable presumption in favor of its validity will be indulged in. Strait v. Eureka, 17 S. D. 326, 96 N. W. 695. Motion by defendant to strike out a part of the answer comes too late when made after the direction of a verdict. Uzzell v. Horn [S. C.] 51 S. E. 253.

20. Motion to reform. Hubbard v. Anderson [Fla.] 39 So. 107. Acts 1903, c. 193, § 2. Mere reference to words by references to pages and lines of complaint held insufficient in motion to strike. Lindley v. Kemp [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 798.

21. Judgment roll cannot be considered. Norval v. Haug, 48 Misc. 198, 96 N. Y. S. 708.

22. Gadsden v. Catawba Water Power Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 121.

23. Rothman v. Kosower, 48 Misc. 538, 96 N. Y. S. 268.

24. Motion to strike answer interposed in district court because allegations were not in issue in justice court, from which case had been appealed, held properly denied, where only a part of the allegations set up new matter. McGinnis v. Johnson Co. [Neb.] 104 N. W. 869.

motion to make the complaint more specific has been sustained in part and overruled in part, an amended complaint is filed, and the record fails to show that any such motion was filed as to it, no question as to the motion is presented by defendant's appeal.[25]

§ 10. Right to object, and mode of asserting defenses and objections; whether by demurrer, motion, etc.[26]—Want of jurisdiction not apparent on the face of the complaint is to be set up by answer or plea.[27]

Objections to process or to the service thereof are to be taken by motion[28] or plea in abatement,[29] not by demurrer.[30]

Objection to parties for want of capacity to sue is available on special demurrer,[31] but does not amount to a failure to state a cause of action.[32] The objection that the party proceeded against is wrongly named should be taken by plea in abatement, and not by motion to dismiss.[33] Misjoinder of parties is to be reached by motion[34] or plea in abatement,[35] not by demurrer.[36] It cannot be taken for the first time at the trial.[37]

25. City of Vincennes v. Spees [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 277.

26. See 4 C. L. 1031.

27. Lack of jurisdiction of the subject-matter may be set up in the answer to the merits. Though want of jurisdiction of the person can only be raised by plea. Duke v. Duke [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 466. Where declaration in action by partnership in Federal court averred that members thereof were all citizens of Michigan, defendant held, under Illinois practice, entitled to challenge such averment by plea in abatement. Yonkerman Co. v. Fullers' Adv. Ag., 135 F. 613. When not apparent on the face of the record, want of jurisdiction may be pleaded with other defenses in the answer. Appearance before justice for purpose of having judgment set aside is not waiver of due service of process in such case (Templin v. Kimsey [Neb.] 105 N. W. 89), and defendant is not deprived of the right to so plead it by reason of the fact that he first raised the question on a special appearance and that his objections were then overruled (Id.). Fact that he appeared specially in justice court does not preclude him from interposing plea to jurisdiction on appeal to district court. Id.

28. Any defect in a writ, its service or return, which is apparent from an inspection of the record, may be taken advantage of by motion. Willard v. Zehr, 215 Ill. 148, 74 N. E. 107.

29. An objection founded on extrinsic facts must be pleaded in abatement. Willard v. Zehr, 215 Ill. 148, 74 N. E. 107. It is within the discretion of the court to permit the filing of a plea in abatement based on the same facts as an overruled motion to set aside the service of process. Dozier Lumber Co. v. Smith-Isburgh Lumber Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 714. A plea in abatement to the service of an alias subpoena may be stricken off on motion when not supported by depositions taken in accordance with the rules of court. Scott v. Stockholders' Oil Co., 135 F. 892.

30. Objection to involuntary bankruptcy petition for insufficient service of process can be raised only by motion, or by defense at the trial and not by demurrer. In re Seaboard Fire Underwriters, 137 F. 987.

31. Defect of parties must be reached by special demurrer. Gragg v. Home Ins. Co. [Ky.] 90 S. W. 1045. A defect of parties must be taken advantage of by demurrer if apparent on the face of the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 488] (Rose v. Merchants' Trust Co., 96 N. Y. 946), and by answer if not so apparent [Code Civ. Proc. § 498] (Id.). Objection to an administrator bringing suit for wrongful death of the intestate must be taken by demurrer as for want of legal capacity to sue, or by special denial. Coney Island Co. v. Mitsch, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 81. Question of the capacity of one to sue for recovery from a village treasurer of interest on public funds collected by him, can be raised by special demurrer but must be specially assigned. Nicholson v. Maile, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 201. Where petition in suit instituted by one as next friend of an insane person does not show that latter has no guardian, or allege any reason why suit should be brought by next friend rather than guardian, objection may be made by special demurrer, and, when so taken, action will be dismissed in the absence of appropriate amendment. Stanley v. Stanley, 123 Ga. 122, 51 S. E. 287. Under Code 1902, § 165, subd. 6, the objection that it appears on the face of the complaint that plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue, because the action does not survive, cannot be raised by an oral demurrer at the trial. Duke v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. [S. C.] 50 S. E. 675.

32. Failure of a complaint by a foreign corporation doing business in the state to allege due authority to do so does not affect the substance of plaintiff's claim, and hence does not render the complaint demurrable on the ground that it fails to state a cause of action (Emmerich Co. v. Sloane, 46 Misc. 513, 95 N. Y. S. 39), but it is demurrable for want of legal capacity to sue (Portland Co. v. Hall, 95 N. Y. S. 36). Where it affirmatively appears that it has not secured certificate of authority required by Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687, § 15. Emmerich Co. v. Sloane, 46 Misc. 513, 95 N. Y. 39.

33. Application for mandamus. Objection is dilatory. McIntosh County Com'rs v. Aiken Canning Co., 123 Ga. 647, 51 S. E. 585.

Misjoinder of cause of action is ordinarily ground of demurrer.[38] If the objection is to the manner of statement only, a motion to separate lies.[39]

Scandalous,[40] irrelevant,[41] sham and frivolous matter, is reached by motion to strike.[42]

Formal defects are ordinarily ground only for a motion to require their correction,[43] not for demurrer[44] except where special demurrers are authorized.[45]

Uncertainty is ground for a motion to make more definite and certain,[46] but not for demurrer.[47]

34. Objection on ground of misjoinder of parties should be taken by motion. Boonville Nat. Bank v. Blakey [Ind.] 76 N. E. 529. Under Code, §§ 3545-3549 misjoinder of parties or causes of action can only be raised by motion. Mitchell v. McLeod, 127 Iowa, 733, 104 N. W. 349.

35. Nonjoinder of a party defendant, when not patent upon the record, should be pleaded in abatement. Mueller & Co. v. Kinkead, 113 Ill. App. 132.

36. Objections on the ground of misjoinder of parties and causes of action cannot ordinarily be raised by demurrer, but the remedy is by motion. Citizens' State Bank v. Jess, 127 Iowa, 450, 103 N. W. 471; Lancaster County v. State [Neb.] 104 N. W. 187.

37. Objection to joinder in one action of three persons interested in recovery against railroad for negligently setting fires held waived where it was not raised by demurrer or answer as required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 498, 499. Jacobs v. New York, etc., R. Co., 107 App. Div. 134, 94 N. Y. S. 954.

38. Duplicity in a count must be taken advantage of by special demurrer and cannot be made the subject of objection at the trial. Objection that declaration in action for personal injuries alleges the existence of the relation of master and servant between defendant and plaintiff, and also that defendant occupied the relation of owner of premises toward plaintiff, cannot be reached by motion to direct verdict. Douglas v. Marsh [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 459, 104 N. W. 624. Misjoinder of counts will support a demurrer to the whole declaration. Ricardo v. News Pub. Co. [N. J. Law] 62 A. 301. Duplicity in a count of the declaration must be taken advantage of by demurrer and not by motion to compel an election. Lewes v. Crane [Vt.] 62 A. 60. Where plaintiff claims that the complaint states a single cause of action only, and defendants that several causes are improperly united, the question should be raised by demurrer, and cannot be raised by a motion to compel a separate statement of causes of action. Weed v. First Nat. Bank, 106 App. Div. 285, 94 N. Y. S. 681.

39. Where two causes of action are stated in one count, the remedy is by motion to require an election. McHugh v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 85, 88 S. W. 853. In case more than one cause of action is stated in the complaint the remedy is by demurrer for misjoinder or a motion to separate into paragraphs, and not by a demurrer for want of facts. State v. Petersen [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 602.

40. Complaint in action for damages for deprivation of civil rights, which had previously been determined not to state cause of action, stricken. Wadleigh v. Newhall, 136 F. 941. If the entire answer is not scandalous, it should not be stricken from the files, nor should defendant be required to surrender the original to plaintiff's attorney for cancellation, or to serve an amended pleading, but the scandalous, irrelevant, and redundant matter merely should be stricken. Persch v. Weideman, 106 App. Div. 553, 94 N. Y. S. 800.

41. Mills v. Territory [N. M.] 81 P. 447. Irrelevant or redundant matter may be stricken out on motion of any party aggrieved thereby. Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 181. Alexander v. Du Bose [S. C.] 52 S. E. 786. Irrelevant averments are properly stricken out but refusal to strike is harmless. Vandiver & Co. v. Waller [Ala.] 39 So. 136. Where the general issue is pleaded, a special plea presenting matter admissible thereunder should be stricken. Hubbard v. Anderson [Fla.] 39 So. 107. Where a complaint mingles irrelevant and improper allegations with proper ones, the remedy is by motion to strike and not by demurrer. Tittle v. Kennedy [S. C.] 50 S. E. 544. Irrelevant or redundant matter may be stricken on motion of any person aggrieved thereby. Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 181. Gadsden v. Catawba Water Power Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 121.

42. Mills v. Territory [N. M.] 81 P. 447. A sham answer may be stricken out, even though verified. State v. Webber [Minn.] 105 N. W. 490. A motion to dismiss and strike from the files a case on the ground that it is frivolous and vexatious will not be entertained when first presented on appeal. Motion is based on allegations of the complaint and is in the nature of a demurrer thereto. Fishburne v. Minott [S. C.] 52 S. E. 648.

43. A plea should not be stricken out for formal defects curable by amendment. Hubbard v. Anderson [Fla.] 39 So. 107.

44. Defects of form rather than substance should be taken advantage of by motion to strike out and not by demurrer. Improper joinder of parties. Ricardo v. News Pub. Co. [N. J. Law] 62 A. 301. Where two causes of action are embraced in a single count which might have been joined in separate counts, demurrer will not lie. Gaw v. Allen, 112 Mo. App. 711, 87 S. W. 590. The remedy for failure to verify is by motion to strike from the files, not by demurrer. Turner v. Hamilton, 13 Wyo. 408, 80 P. 664. Failure to verify is not ground of demurrer. Id.

45. Defects of form must be taken advantage of by special demurrer filed at the first term. Misjoinder of causes of action in favor of different plaintiffs. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Tice [Ga.] 52 S. E. 916. Mat-

Failure to state a cause of action is fatal on objection in almost any form,[48] and if involving the entire pleading[49] may be reached by demurrer,[50] objection to introduction of evidence,[51] motion for a peremptory instruction,[52] or motion in arrest of judgment.[53]

ters of form can be reached only by special demurrer. General demurrer does not reach argumentativeness in pleading. Wright v. Craig, 116 Ill. App. 493.

46. In a proceeding to establish a preferred claim in a receivership proceeding upon the proceeds of goods alleged to have been obtained through false and fraudulent representations and with intent not to pay for them, where petition of intervention attempts to set out the exact claim made, an objection that it is not sufficiently specific can only be reached by motion. Seeley v. Seeley-Howe-LeVan Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 380.

47. Petition for partition held good against demurrer though subject to motion to make more certain. Shetterly v. Axt [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 901. That in alleging the date of a conversion the day of the month is left blank is not ground of demurrer. Peacock v. Feaster [Fla.] 40 So. 74. Failure to specify with sufficient particularity the breaches of contract relied on can be taken advantage of only by motion to strike out the count, and not by demurrer. Harper v. Essex County Park Commission [N. J. Law] 62 A. 384. If by any fair intendment a cause of action appears from the allegations of a complaint, it is not demurrable because it is ambiguous and uncertain. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Moss [Ark.] 86 S. W. 828. Fact that declaration charges various grounds of negligence and avers that each was proximate cause of the injury complained of does not render it demurrable because it leaves defendant ignorant of the particular ground relied on, but he may guard against surprise in such case by demanding a more specific statement of the real ground of complaint, under Code 1904, § 3249. Pocahontas Collieries Co. v. Rukas' Adm'r [Va.] 51 S. E. 449. Objection that allegations as to negligence are vague and indefinite must be taken by demurrer. Atlanta R. & Power Co. v. Johnson, 120 Ga. 908, 48 S. E. 389. Indefiniteness of averment is to be reached by motion not by general demurrer. Butler v. Conwell [Wyo.] 82 P. 950. The technical defect of an averment being argumentative cannot be reached by general demurrer. Lloyd v. Travelers Protective Ass'n, 115 Ill. App. 39. Failure to definitely describe the road obstruction of which it is sought to enjoin is ground for motion to make definite and certain, but not for demurrer. Smoot v. Wainscott [Ky.] 89 S. W. 176. Where complaint states facts sufficient to constitute cause of action, but is so constructed as to render it difficult to determine the theory intended by the pleader, the remedy is by motion to make more certain, and not by demurrer. State v. Petersen [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 602. Objection to cross complaint seeking reformation of contract sued on that it failed to clearly and definitely point out the alleged mistake should be raised by motion to make more specific, and is not a ground for demurrer. Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Berning [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 776. If the ultimate facts relied on are not stated with sufficient certainty, the remedy is by motion. Does not render pleading bad on demurrer. Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n v. Munson [Neb.] 103 N. W. 688. Fact that negligence relied on and the nature of plaintiff's injuries are pleaded too generally must be taken advantage of by motion to make more definite and certain, and is not ground for demurrer. Casey v. American Bridge Co. [Minn.] 103 N. W. 623.

48. Objection to a plea insufficient in law may be taken by motion to strike or demurrer, or by objection to the evidence offered in support of it. First method is better practice. Walden v. Walden [Ga.] 52 S. E. 323.

49. An objection that part of the damages claimed are speculative cannot be raised by demurrer. Armour Packing Co. v. Vietch-Young Produce Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 680. That special damages are insufficiently alleged and a wrong measure of damages prayed is no ground for demurrer. Shropshire v. Adams [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 540, 89 S. W. 448. Only total insufficiency of a pleader will avail on objection to the reception of evidence under it. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Rollins [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 82, 89 S. W. 1099.

50. The failure of the complaint to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action should be taken advantage of by demurrer rather than by answer. Appears on face of complaint and hence should be taken advantage of by demurrer under Code Civ. Proc. § 498. Also it is not a denial of the allegations of the complaint or a statement of new matter by way of defense or counterclaim and hence cannot be included in the answer under Id. § 500. Jackson v. Savage, 109 App. Div. 556, 96 N. Y. S. 366. A defense complete in itself cannot be stricken on motion as irrelevant, even though it is insufficient but the remedy in such case is by demurrer. Noval v. Haug, 48 Misc. 198, 96 N. Y. S. 708. Omission from the narr. of proper averments of a consideration for contract sued on may be raised by demurrer. Dryden v. Barnes [Md.] 61 A. 342. The validity of a defense set up in the answer should be determined by demurrer or upon the trial, and not by a motion to strike it out as irrelevant. Rankin v. Bush-Brown, 108 App. Div. 294, 95 N. Y. S. 719. Code Civ. Proc. § 545, authorizing the court to strike out irrelevant or redundant matter, applies to allegations which are irrelevant or redundant to the cause of action or defense pleaded, and does not authorize the determination of the validity of a defense on a motion to strike. Rankin v. Bush, 108 App. Div. 295, 95 N. Y. S. 718. Failure to set out the indorsements in an action on a note, or to state that there are no indorsements, is a defect to be reached by motion and not by demurrer. Schick v. Ott, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 225.

51. Failure of a pleading to state facts sufficient may be raised by objection to evidence as well as by demurrer. Fraud alleged as mere conclusion. Barber Asphalt Pav.

Matters of defense not apparent on the face of the complaint must be raised by pleading.[54]

§ 11. Waiver of objections and cure of defects.[55]—Objections to pleadings must as a rule be made[56] and brought to hearing[57] at the earliest opportunity, and while entire failure to state a cause of action may be availed of at any time,[58]

Co. v. Field, 188 Mo. 182, 86 S. W. 860. Plaintiffs are not bound to demur to the answer but the objection to the sufficiency of the facts which might have been so raised may be raised by objections to the sufficiency of the evidence. Zuelly v. Casper [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 646. Striking out of affirmative allegations of the answer, which were explanatory of denials therein, on plaintiff's motion held not to justify plaintiff in objecting to evidence in support of facts alleged therein which were relevant under the denials. Precluded by his own conduct from claiming that facts relevant to issue raised by denials should have, in fairness, been pleaded. Wilmot v. McPadden [Conn.] 61 A. 1069.

52. A defect of substance may be raised by a request for a ruling that proof of all allegations pleaded does not entitle plaintiffs to recover. Failure in action for wrongful death under Rev. Laws, c. 171, § 2, to allege that deceased left either widow, children, or next of kin. Oulighan v. Butler [Mass.] 75 N. E. 726. Only such faults in a count as would render it insufficient to support the judgment can be reached by instructions to disregard it. Feldman v. Sellig, 110 Ill. App. 130. Proper basis of motion to instruct jury to disregard certain counts is that they are faulty, and not that there is a variance or insufficiency of proof. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. Moran, 110 Ill. App. 664. The court may instruct the jury to return a verdict for defendant though he has pleaded to the declaration, if each count of such declaration is so defective that with all the intendments in its favor that it could not support a judgment after verdict, under Prac. Act, § 51, R. S. c. 110, authorizing application for instruction to disregard faulty counts (Owens v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co., 115 Ill. App. 142), but the jury cannot be instructed to disregard a count the defects in which would be cured by verdict (Id.).

53. A judgment cannot be arrested for any mispleading or insufficient pleading. Act "Amendments and Jeofails," § 6. Illinois Terra Cotta Lumber Co. v. Hanley, 116 Ill. App. 359. It is only where a declaration is so defective that it will not sustain a judgment that such an objection may be availed of on motion in arrest in the trial court or on error or appeal. Id. On motion in arrest the court will intend that every material fact alleged in the declaration, or fairly and reasonably inferable from its allegations, was proved at the trial; and if from the issue the fact omitted and fairly inferable from the facts alleged may fairly be presumed to have been proved the judgment will not be arrested. Id. Failure of declaration to allege that breaking and collapse of scaffold which caused the injury was result of its defective condition cannot be so taken advantage of, that statement being fairly inferable from what is alleged. Id.

54. Payment is a question of fact and must be set up by answer, not by demurrer. It was claimed that account filed with complaint showed payments which should have been applied to extinguish the claim sued on. Dean v. Boyd [Miss.] 38 So. 297. A defense that the action has been prematurely commenced should be pleaded in bar if based upon the instrument in suit (The American Home Circle v. Schumm, 111 Ill. App. 316), but can only be availed of by plea in abatement if based upon transaction extraneous of such instrument, as where time of payment of benefit certificate is extended by subsequent agreement (Id.). Contract limitations should be taken advantage of by plea. Gaston v. Modern Woodmen of America, 116 Ill. App. 291. Where plea in abatement and plea in bar are filed together the former will be stricken off. Southern Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 88. The statute of limitations must be set up by plea. Cannot be raised by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment. Rich v. Scalio, 115 Ill. App. 166; Gatlin v. Vaut [Ind T.] 91 S. W. 38. Matter of confession and avoidance based on invalidity of contract sued on. Miller v. Donovan [Idaho] 83 P. 608. In equity the defense that there is an adequate remedy at law cannot be availed of unless pleaded. Rose v. Merchants' Trust Co., 96 N. Y. S. 946. Pendency of former action when apparent is ground for demurrer but otherwise remedy is by plea in abatement. City of La Porte v. Scott [Ind.] 76 N. E. 878.

55. See 4 C. L. 1038.

56. Dilatory pleas must be urged at the first opportunity. Plea that suit was prematurely brought, which is in the nature of a plea in abatement. Grand Lodge v. Ohnstein, 110 Ill. App. 312.

57. A plea to the jurisdiction is waived by a failure to act promptly in having it disposed of, or by taking any steps looking to a trial of the cause on the merits. Defendant held to have waived plea to jurisdiction by delay, and by pleading to the merits. Daley v. Iselin, 212 Pa. 279, 61 A. 919.

58. Bell v. Thompson, 147 Cal. 689, 82 P. 327; Flood v. Templeton [Cal.] 83 P. 148; Wright v. Teutonia Ins. Co. [N. C.] 51 S. E. 55. Complaint averred injury to and death of "plaintiff," instead of "plaintiff's intestate." Trott v. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 716. Pleading over after the overruling of a demurrer does not preclude defendant from contending on appeal that the declaration, aided by the verdict, does not state a cause of action and is insufficient to support a judgment. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 217 Ill. 164, 75 N. E. 368. An order made under a defective complaint is not reversible because the complaint is merely defective. It must appear that complainant has no cause of action. Belding v. Washington Cornice Co., 36 Wash. 549, 79 P. 37. Code Civ. Proc. § 499. Defend-other deficiencies are waived by pleading responsively[59] without objection by motion[60] or plea in abatement,[61] going to trial on the merits without objection[62] or ant may move for dismissal on that ground at the trial. Jackson v. Savage, 109 App. Div. 556, 96 N. Y. S. 366. The omission of a material allegation is a defective statement of a cause of action merely, and not a statement of a defective cause of action. Wright v. Teutonia Ins. Co. [N. C.] 51 S. E. 55. In action on fire insurance policy omission of allegation of value of property insured at time of fire is a defect which may be cured by amendment, and hence is waived by answer. Id. And see ante, p. 1050.

59. Strode v. Frommeyer [Mo. App.] 91 S. W. 167; King v. See, 27 Ky. L. R. 1011, 87 S. W. 758; Smith v. King of Arizona Min. & Mill. Co. [Ariz.] 80 P. 357; Feldman v. Sellig, 110 Ill. App. 130; Wright v. Teutonia Ins. Co. [N. C.] 51 S. E. 55. Fact that matter common to each count was pleaded at the end of all the counts instead of in each separately, waived. United States Brewing Co. v. Stoltenberg, 113 Ill. App. 435. In Pennsylvania filing an affidavit of defense to the merits is a waiver of any objection to formal defects or imperfections in the statement of claim. Felty v. National Accident Soc., 139 F. 57. Failure to state defenses separately. Fleishman v. Meyer [Or.] 80 P. 209. Objection that party proceeded against is misnamed is waived by his appearing and pleading to the merits by his true name without objection. McIntosh County Com'rs v. Aiken Canning Co., 123 Ga. 647, 51 S. E. 585. Questions as to propriety of cross complaint involving other property. Power v. Fairbanks, 146 Cal. 611, 80 P. 1075. A motion to strike out the complaint for joining two causes of action in the same count is waived by answering (Harvey v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 80 P. 1061), but if the causes of action are based on the same right a motion to require an election may be made at the trial (Id.).

60. Where lessor of patented machines alleged right to recover judgment for future royalties on ground that defendants had abandoned the machines and refused to comply with the contract of lease, held that the issue presented pertained to the merits, and defendants waived no rights by not filing an exception of prematurity in limine litis. American Machinery & Construction Co. v. Stewart [La.] 38 So. 960. Objection to want of verification must be taken before trial. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 47. A failure to demur is a waiver of all defects which might have been so raised. Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 75, § 9. Dryden v. Barnes [Md.] 61 A. 342. Defects in the declaration consisting of the absence of allegations of damage and the formal ad damnum will not warrant the sustaining of a motion in arrest of judgment, where defendant first demurred and then pleaded thereto. Price v. Art Printing Co., 112 Ill. App. 1. Defendant cannot object to evidence in support of allegations of the complaint setting up matters which are claimed not to be proper elements of damage, where he fails to move to strike such allegations. Milhouse v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 52 S. E. 41. Defendant cannot complain of the admission of evidence as to loss of custom resulting from defendant's failure to furnish cars, where such fact was alleged in the complaint as an element of damage and no motion was made to strike it out. Mauldin v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 52 S. E. 677. Fact that amendment to sworn bill is unverified becomes immaterial when it is demurred to. City of Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94. If the declaration states a cause of action, defects therein which might have been taken advantage of by demurrer are waived by going to trial without so doing. Pierce Co. v. Beers [Mass.] 76 N. E. 603. Failure of foreign administrator to file copy of letters in probate court before commencing suit is waived unless objection is taken advantage of by demurrer, if defect affirmatively appears from the complaint, or by answer, if it does not so appear. Pope v. Waugh [Minn.] 103 N. W. 500. Objection that two causes of action have been improperly united is waived when first raised at the trial by objection to the introduction of evidence instead of by answer or demurrer. Gen. St. 1894, §§ 5232, 5234, 5235. Campbell v. Railway Transfer Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 547. Defects appearing on the face of the petition are waived unless attacked by demurrer or motion. Defect in notice, served on sheriff by claimant of property levied on under execution, held waived where no attack was made on petition by demurrer or motion in arrest. Mitchell v. McLeod, 127 Iowa, 733, 104 N. W. 349. Objection that complaint in action by foreign corporation does not show that it has complied with statutes so as to authorize it to do business within the state goes to plaintiff's legal capacity to sue, and is waived unless raised by demurrer or answer. Code Civ. Proc. § 499. Portland Co. v. Hall, 95 N. Y. S. 36. An objection that the action is brought in the wrong county is waived unless taken by answer or demurrer. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 346. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Marshall [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 973. Want of legal capacity to sue must be taken advantage of by demurrer, if it affirmatively appears from the complaint, and by answer if it does not so appear. Gen. St. 1894, § 5235. Pope v. Waugh [Minn.] 103 N. W. 500. Failure of foreign administrator to file copy of letters in probate court. Id. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 488, 498. Failure of plaintiff, a foreign corporation, to comply with state laws, so as to authorize it to do business therein. Portland Co. v. Hall, 95 N. Y. S. 36. Want of verification is waived by failure to move to strike. Turner v. Hamilton, 13 Wyo. 408, 80 P. 664. [Wash.] 80 P. 856. Objection that plaintiff is not the real party in interest must be taken by demurrer or answer. Palatine Ins. Co. v. Santa Fe Mercantile Co. [N. M.] 82 P. 363. Where bar of limitations apparent on the face of the complaint is ground of demurrer, it is waived by failure to demur. Ausplund v. Aetna Indemnity Co. [Or.] 81 P. 577. Defects in form are waived unless taken advantage of by special demurrer filed at the first term. Misjoinder of causes of action in favor of different plaintiffs. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Tice [Ga.] 52 S. E. 916. In case defenses are inconsistent, the remedy is by motion to strike, and the objection cannot be raised by a request for an instruction. Manner of objecting to inconsistent defenses. Harper v. Fidler, 105 Mo. App. 680, 78 S. W. 1034. Apart from the question of jurisdiction, matters merely in abatement or suspension of the action, or in denial of status of a suitor, or of obligation to appear, must be presented before the cause of action or the defense is introduced, and objections resting on such matters are waived by any step taken for the determination of the cause on the merits. Applies to matters affecting the regularity of an appeal. Commonwealth v. Crum Lynne Iron & Steel Co., 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 508. Where, on appeal from justice court, plaintiff voluntarily files a statement, though under rules of court the transcript might have been considered as a declaration, defects therein which might have been assigned as grounds for demurrer and would have prevented summary judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, held waived by defendant by pleading the general issue, agreeing to a reference, and going to trial on the merits, there being no variance. Siegel v. Hirsch, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 398.

61. Filing a plea to the merits before obtaining judgment on a plea to the jurisdiction of the person is a waiver of the latter plea. Objection held waived. Lebensberger v. Scofield [C. C. A.] 139 F. 380. Randall v. Lonstorf [Wis.] 105 N. W. 663. Nonjoinder of party waived unless objected to by plea in abatement. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Seale [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 48, 89 S. W. 997. Under common-law system of pleading, pleas in abatement to the jurisdiction are waived by pleading to the merits. Youngerman Co. v. Fuller's Adv. Ag., 135 F. 613, Chicago & S. E. R. Co. v. Grantham [Ind.] 75 N. E. 265. An answer (Chamberlayne v. Nazro, 188 Mass. 454, 74 N. E. 674), or hearing on the merits is a waiver of the right to set up matter in abatement (Id.). Plea in abatement that plaintiff had no right to sue because he was acting as defendant's counsel held waived by hearing before auditor on the merits without objection, and failure to call court's attention to the matter on the trial until the close of the evidence. Id.

62. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 499, defect of parties is waived unless taken advantage of by demurrer or answer. Rose v. Merchants' Trust Co., 96 N. Y. S. 946. Where defendant contested all the allegations of a complaint setting up negligence, in a hearing on damages, without objection that such allegations were defective, any defects in such allegations were waived. Anderson v. U. S. Rubber Co. [Conn.] 60 A. 1057. A complaint for wrongful levy of execution not describing the property levied on is good at the trial. Rasco v. Jefferson [Ala.] 38 So. 246. In action in federal court by infant suing by guardian, allegation that such guardian was duly appointed by the probate court is not jurisdictional fact, and any objection to guardian's representation must be specially pleaded or propriety thereof is admitted. In any event objection could not first be raised after verdict and judgment. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron [C. C. A.] 137 F. 48. Allegation held sufficient to show citizenship in view of fact that it was so treated by counsel on both sides during trial in lower court. Id. Any informality in a complaint in bastardy proceedings, not affecting the merits of the case, is waived by going to trial without objection. Kanorowski v. The People, 113 Ill. App. 468. Absence of an essential averment is cured by evidence thereof introduced without objection. State Nat. Bank v. Clark [La.] 39 So. 844. Right to have issue of ownership raised by proper pleadings in condemnation proceedings held waived by failure to object and by introduction of evidence. Sanitary Dist. v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 216 Ill. 575, 75 N. E. 248. Objection for uncertainty cannot be made at trial. Geisseman v. Geisseman [Colo.] 83 P. 635. Objection that pleadings do not authorize the granting of equitable relief to the interveners as against the plaintiff cannot be first raised on appeal where case is tried throughout on theory that their right to such relief is the sole issue in the case. Stelpflug v. Wolfe, 127 Iowa, 192, 102 N. W. 1130. A departure in pleading is waived by going to trial without objection. Baldridge v. Leon Lake Ditch & Reservoir Co. [Colo. App.] 80 P. 477. Any objection curable by amendment is waived by going to trial on the merits without objection. Wappenstein v. Aberdeen [Wash.] 81 P. 686. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Jennings, 114 Ill. App. 622. Generality of averment is waived by going to trial without objection. Averment that defendant was owner of an undivided five-sixths interest. Joinder of issue waived: Failure to take issue on an answer is waived by reception without objection of evidence disproving it. Kinney v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen [N. D.] 106 N. W. 44. After a trial on the merits it is too late to object to the sufficiency of averments as to a question treated by both parties as in issue. In action against electric light company for death due to negligence, averments of declaration held sufficient to give notice that plan of construction of lines was brought into question. Morgan v. Westmoreland Elec. Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 638. Where action for personal injuries was tried on theory that liability of defendant depended on whether his co-or by suffering a default.[65] And by pleading over or amending after ruling on demurrer any error in the ruling is waived,[66] but where the amendments made after demurrer sustained are trivial, demurrant need not again demur but may answer over without waiving any right.[67] Omissions in a pleading supplied by the pleadings of the adverse party are thereby cured,[68] and after verdict no defect which might have been cured will avail,[69] and the court will presume that all that was pleaded defendant was an employe or an independent contractor, plaintiff could not insist on appeal that such question was not in issue under the pleadings. Overhouser v. American Cereal Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 113. By going to trial a rejoinder concluding to the country is treated as though issue were joined thereon. Godfrey v. Wingert, 110 Ill. App. 563. Going to trial without raising the objection that the replication does not reply to anything in the plea to which it is addressed is a waiver of a formal issue. Cummings v. Smith, 114 Ill. App. 35. Where replication tenders an issue to the country so that only a similiter is required to complete the formal issue, such similiter is waived by going to trial without further action. Peoria Star Co. v. Floyd Special Ag., 115 Ill. App. 401. Ruling on issue of law raised by demurrer to replication, concluding to the country and hence requiring only a similiter to complete the formal issue, is waived where there is no formal order showing an election to abide by the demurrer and defendant offers evidence and makes objections at the trial which would be irrelevant except upon the theory that issue of fact had been formed by such replication. Id. Failure to reply is waived by trying the case on the theory that the averments of the answer are in issue. Zongker v. People's Union Mercantile Co., 110 Mo. App. 382, 86 S. W. 486. Trial on theory that issue is joined waives absence of answer. State Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 123. Defendant may waive his right to plead de novo to new counts filed to a declaration after plea to the original declaration, and does so by failing to so plead and going to trial without objection. 65. An omission to lay venue cured. American Mfg. Co. v. Morgan Smith Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 176.

66. Answer over waives all objections except lack of jurisdiction and total failure to state cause of action. Hudson v. Cahoon [Mo.] 91 S. W. 72. Pleading to merits and going to trial after overruling of plea in abatement to the jurisdiction and a motion to quash the writ and return because of irregularity of service held not a waiver of defendant's rights in abatement, where it incorporated a like plea in abatement in its answer, and excepted to order striking it out. Jordan v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 105 Mo. App. 446, 79 S. W. 1155. Error in overruling a demurrer is waived by answering over. Griswold v. Griswold, 111 Ill. App. 269; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Bell, 111 Ill. App. 280; City of Chicago v. People, 111 Ill. App. 594; Eckman v. Webb, 116 Ill. App. 467; Commercial News Co. v. Beard, 116 Ill. App. 501; Weatherwax Lumber Co. v. Ray, 38 Wash. 545, 80 P. 775; Blasingame v. The Royal Circle, 111 Ill. App. 202; Rodgers v. Western Home Town Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 186 Mo. 248, 85 S. W. 369; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. C.] 50 S. E. 790.

67. Flood v. Templeton [Cal.] 83 P. 148.

68. Defects in petition in action on accident insurance policy in failing to allege that injuries were received through external and violent means which solely and independently of all other causes necessarily caused his death, and that there were external marks of the injuries held cured by answer. Continental Casualty Co. v. Hunt [Ky.] 90 S. W. 1056. A defective or ambiguous petition may be aided and its infirmities cured by averments in the answer. Petition in action for injuries received by trespasser while being ejected from train held, in connection with answer, to sufficiently show that plaintiff was injured while in the act of leaving the train and not after he had left it. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kerr [Neb.] 104 N. W. 49. An answer supplying an essential averment of the complaint cures the defect. McConathy v. Deck [Colo.] 82 P. 702. Answer supplying material averment omitted from complaint cures the defect. That judgment was "duly" given. Nolan v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1119. Where the answer cures defects of petition and trial is had on the merits, objection is waived. Cooper v. McKee [Ky.] 89 S. W. 203.

69. Rule that, where defendant avers in affidavit of defense that contract sued on is in writing, and sets out such contract as an exhibit thereto, he cannot complain on appeal from judgment for want of sufficient affidavit, that statement of claim was insufficient because copy of contract was not attached thereto, does not apply where defendant is unable to attach such copy to his affidavit, and persists in his assertion that it is material to an adequate statement of his defense that a copy be furnished, and makes a bona fide effort to compel its production. White v. Sperling, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 120. All defects in a petition short of insufficiency to support the judgment are cured by answer and trial on the merits. McKinney v. Northcutt, 114 Mo. App. 146, 89 S. W. 351. Misjoinder of causes waived by failure to move for an election. Thompson v. Randall [Ky.] 90 S. W. 251. Misjoinder of causes of howsoever defectively was well proved;[70] and if any count in the declaration be

In action for goods sold and delivered, where defendant avers in his affidavit of defense that goods were delivered under written agreement, and sets out agreement as exhibit to his affidavit, he cannot complain on a rule for judgment for want of sufficient affidavit that such copy was not filed with the statement, particularly when he attempts to set up a defense on the merits. Genesee Paper Co. v. Bogert, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 23. Defective statement of a cause of action is cured by verdict. Sauter v. Anderson, 110 Ill. App. 574. Defect in declaration in action against saloon keeper for injuries caused plaintiff by defendant's selling liquor to her husband, resulting in his intoxication and in his stabbing a man while in that condition, thereby depriving her of her support, in failing to allege that stabbing was result of intoxication, or of selling liquor to husband, held cured by verdict. Id. Misjoinder of causes of action in favor of different plaintiffs. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Tice [Ga.] 52 S. E. 916. In action for wrongful death under Rev. Laws, c. 171, § 2, where defendant joined issue without specific objection to the complaint on the ground that it failed to allege that deceased left a widow, children, or next of kin, held that such objection could not be first raised on appeal. Oulighan v. Butler [Mass.] 75 N. E. 726. Argumentative declaration will sustain verdict where issue has been joined thereon and a trial had. Mills v. Larrance, 111 Ill. App. 140. Where complaint in action for alienation of husband's affections, was objected to on appeal on ground that it did not state any fact constituting harsh and cruel treatment justifying plaintiff in leaving her husband, held that it would be treated as one first attacked after verdict, and it would be presumed, in support of judgment for plaintiff, that such conduct was sufficiently proved at the trial. Gregg v. Gregg [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 674. Paragraph of complaint, containing statement of sufficient facts to bar another action for same cause, is good when first questioned on appeal. Griffin v. Miller [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 598. If the complaint is sufficient to bar another action for the same cause, it cannot be first questioned on appeal for the omission of allegations of facts which might be supplied by proof. Embree v. Emmerson [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 44. Counts in complaint in action to recover damages for injuries received from bite of dog, defective in failing to allege that dog was accustomed to bite persons, held sufficient after verdict. Martin [Ala.] 39 So. 769. Misjoinder of counts cannot be first raised on appeal. Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Dielie, 110 Ill. App. 684. Where plaintiff to a plea of set-off replied in a single replication, non-assumpsit, nil debit, matter by way of traverse and new affirmative matter, without having obtained leave to reply double, and the parties go to trial upon the issue so made, the defects of such replication are cured by verdict, and a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto will be denied. Price v. Art Printing Co., 112 Ill. App. 1. Declaration, in action for personal injuries held to sufficiently aver that plaintiff was injured by explosion or in endeavoring to escape therefrom, at least after plea and verdict. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Newmiller, 215 Ill. 383, 74 N. E. 410. Nonjoinder of a party defendant cannot be first raised on appeal. Mueller & Co. v. Kinkead, 113 Ill. App. 132. 70. Verdict will aid a defective statement of a cause of action but does not cure the statement of a defective cause of action. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 217 Ill. 164, 75 N. E. 368. In action by employe for injuries, fact that petition alleged plaintiff's necessary expenditures and compensation for loss of time in blank held cured by verdict, where answer denied allegations of petition as written, and proof was heard as though such blanks had been filed. Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Hull [Ky.] 90 S. W. 1055. Where allegations of complaint and reply were sufficient to bar another action for same cause, held that defects in reply were cured by finding and judgment. George v. Robinson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 607. Declaration held not cured by verdict. Jones v. Klawiter, 110 Ill. App. 31, afd. Klawiter v. Jones, 219 Ill. 626, 76 N. E. 673. A complaint which is indefinite as to whether it charges ordinary negligence or willful injury, but which has been treated by both sides as charging the former, will be so treated on appeal. Morey v. Lake Superior Terminal & Transfer R. Co. [Wis.] 103 N. W. 271. Declaration in action of slander held good after verdict though it failed to state date when slanderous words were spoken so as to show affirmatively that limitations had not run, and that fact will be presumed to have been proven at the trial. Dubois v. Robbins, 115 Ill. App. 372. Objection that plaintiff could not recover because complaint proceeded on the theory that the parties were partners while it clearly appeared from the record that they were not, held eliminated by findings of master that all matters in controversy grew out of certain written contracts which were the basis of the case. Arthur Jordan Co. v. Caylor [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 419. A verdict will aid a defective statement of a cause of action by supplying facts defectively or imperfectly stated or omitted, which are within the general terms of the declaration. Sargent Co. v. Baublis, 215 Ill. 428, 74 N. E. 455. In an action for personal injuries, allegations held sufficient after verdict, to show the relation of master and servant and to create the duty alleged. Id. Failure to allege specifically what defect existed in the machinery, or how or why it was dangerous (Id.), and to allege that defendant knew or ought to have known of the defects and that plaintiff did not (Id.), and that alleged defective grindstone broke on account of defects, held cured by verdict (Id.). Defect in declaration charging the speaking of slanderous words in the Ital-good, the verdict will be referred thereto unless the state of the record forbids.[71] If a demurrer for want of sufficient facts, seasonably interposed, is overruled, the pleading must be construed on appeal with reference to the legislative requirement that it shall contain a statement of the facts constituting a cause of action, and those intendments allowed after verdict to cure a defective complaint cannot be indulged in.[72] While it is irregular to file simultaneously a demurrer to a pleading and a ian language in failing to allege that the bearers understood it is cured by verdict. Rich v. Scalio, 115 Ill. App. 166. In action for personal injuries to servant alleged to have resulted from his being ordered into a dangerous place, failure of declaration to allege that peril was not obvious to plaintiff, or that he was not aware of danger and of the surroundings held cured by verdict where objection was not raised by demurrer. Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Hill, 112 Ill. App. 475. Is good if it contains facts sufficient to bar another action for same cause, though its averments may be objectionable for uncertainty and inadequacy, or for stating conclusions instead of facts, complaint for services rendered smallpox patients and damages to property held sufficient. Town of Knightstown v. Homer [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 13. Defect in failing to describe with sufficient certainty the premises on which nuisance was alleged to have been created and maintained held cured by finding. Major v. Miller [Ind.] 75 N. E. 159. Where there is any defect, imperfection, or omission in any pleading, whether in substance or form, which would have been fatal on demurrer, yet if the issue joined be such as necessarily required, on the trial, proof of the facts so imperfectly stated or omitted, and without which it is not to be presumed that the judge would direct the jury to give, or the the jury would have given, the verdict, such defect, imperfection, or omission, is cured by verdict. United States Brewing Co. v. Stoltenberg, 113 Ill. App. 435; Olcese v. Mobile Fruit & Trading Co., 112 Ill. App. 281. Failure to allege due care on part of parents in action for death of infant. United States Brewing Co. v. Stoltenberg, 113 Ill. App. 435. Count stating cause of action defectively good after verdict (Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Dielie, 110 Ill. App. 684), but will not cure an omission to state a cause of action (Sargent Co. v. Baublis, 215 Ill. 428, 74 N. E. 455; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Gardanier, 116 Ill. App. 619). Rule does not obtain where defect is failure to aver some fact or facts essential to constitute cause of action, or where, from the facts averred, plaintiff's right to recover is clearly denied. Town of Knightstown v. Homer [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 13. Failure to allege consideration for contract sued on held not cured by verdict. Taylor v. Lesson [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 907. If, with all the intendments in its favor, the declaration is so defective that it will not sustain a judgment, such defects may be taken advantage of on appeal or error. Sargent Co. v. Baublis, 215 Ill. 428, 74 N. E. 455. Defects in a complaint will be cured by verdict and judgment unless it does not contain facts sufficient to bar another action, or totally fails to state a material fact absolutely necessary to the right of recovery. Complaint in action for separate support held sufficient. Smith v. Smith [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1008. The fact that the omission of a material fact from the declaration is cured by verdict does not relieve plaintiff from the necessity of proving it. In action for injuries to servant alleged to have resulted from his being ordered into a dangerous place, plaintiff must prove that he was not aware of the danger, though defect in declaration would be cured. Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Hill, 112 Ill. App. 475. Allegations of citizenship necessary to confer jurisdiction on Federal court held sufficient in view of the findings. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron [C. C. A.] 137 F. 48. Where the evidence eliminates one of two alleged causes of action, the misjoinder is cured. Knight v. Dalton [Kan.] 83 P. 124.

71. Plaintiff may recover upon proof of any count of the declaration, where defendant pleads to the declaration and goes to trial on the issues made, and offers no instructions limiting the right of recovery to a particular count. Illinois Terminal R. Co. v. Thompson, 112 Ill. App. 463. Instruction that jury should find for plaintiff if they believe that he has proven the allegations of any one or more counts of the declaration by a preponderance of the evidence held proper though some of such counts are faulty, where defendant did not demur but pleaded to whole declaration and joined issue thereon, and did not ask an instruction directing jury to disregard courts claimed to be faulty and not supported by the evidence. Johnston v. McNiff, 113 Ill. App. 1. Where it is apparent that verdict was based on first count of the declaration, it is sufficient if there is one good count to which evidence is applicable and the judgment responsive. Drainage Com'rs Dist. No. 2 v. Drainage Com'rs Dist. No. 3, 113 Ill. App. 114. Verdict cannot be set aside or reversed if one or more counts in the declaration be sufficient to sustain it. Shickle-Harrison & H. Iron Co. v. Beck, 112 Ill. App. 444. Is not necessary to inquire whether there is sufficient evidence to support and warrant judgment upon the verdict as to each and every count of the declaration, but it is sufficient if there is one good count fully established. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Andrews, 116 Ill. App. 8. Where there is one good count in a declaration, refusal to exclude other counts from the jury is harmless. Feldman v. Sellig, 110 Ill. App. 130.

72. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Marshall [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 973. Motion in arrest of judgment should be allowed where it appears that beneficial plaintiff seeks in one action to recover in the name of three legal plaintiffs damages alleged to have arisen from nonperformance of three distinct contracts, each of which was entered into by defendant with one of the legal plaintiffs individually. McNulty v. O'Donnell, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 93. Where plaintiff in action motion to strike it, if the motion is properly sustained there is no prejudice.[73] The court should not be required to determine on demurrer matters which may be disposed of on motion,[74] but if defendant after demurrer overruled suffers default, only substantial insufficiency of the complaint will avail on appeal.[75] Withdrawal or other express waiver of an objection precludes its being subsequently urged.[76] A waiver may be obviated by stipulation.[77]

§ 12. Time and order of pleadings.[78]—The time within which pleadings must be made is fixed by statute, but the court may, in its discretion, allow a pleading to be received out of time,[79] or extend the time for pleading[80] on such notice[81] and showing[82] as the rules may require, and the parties may of course extend the on benefit certificate alleged that deceased became a member of the society on a certain date, but case was tried on theory that he did not become a member until a later date, case would not be reversed on ground that plaintiff was concluded by his allegation, that question not having been raised below. Arrison v. Supreme Council of Mystic Toilers [Iowa] 105 N. W. 580. A departure in recitals as to plaintiff's title, in an action for conversion, between complaint in county court and that in district court on appeal cannot be taken advantage of by motion to dismiss or a plea to the jurisdiction, where the cause of action is not changed, particularly where defendant was not thereby deprived of any available defense. Epley v. Lovell, 5 Neb. Unoff. 251, 97 N. W. 1027. Act May 25, 1887, P. L. 271, does not prevent filing, in action of trespass, of a plea in abatement setting up the pendency of a former suit in the same jurisdiction, between the same parties, and for the same cause of action. Becker v. Lebanon & M. St. R. Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 367. Complaint in an action to have an execution sale of a homestead set aside held sufficient as against demurrer though it did not allege that the homestead claimant's wife joined in the deed to plaintiff. Elliott v. Bristow, 185 Mo. 15, 84 S. W. 48.

73. Enright v. Midland Sampling & Ore Co., 33 Colo. 341, 80 P. 1041.

74. On demurrer to a defense in an action on a note, plaintiff may not claim that a denial therein that note was ever duly negotiated or discounted for value is improperly included therein and should not be considered, but should move to strike such denial before demurring. Rogers v. Morton, 46 Misc. 494, 95 N. Y. S. 49.

75. Richards v. New York etc., R. Co., 77 Conn. 501, 60 A. 295.

76. When a demurrer is overruled and then withdrawn it is eliminated from the record and the decision upon it cannot be reviewed on error. Montclair Military Academy v. North Jersey St. R. Co., 70 N. J. Law, 229, 57 A. 1050. But if the final judgment appears by the record to rest solely on the pleading demurred to, or if a ruling on the trial on the question raised by the demurrer is presented in a bill of exceptions, its sufficiency may be reviewed. Id. Confession that a demurrer was not well taken and answer over waives lack of specific averment of an essential fact. Hayes v. Horton [Or.] 81 P. 386.

77. Stipulation to try sufficiency of plea after both parties had taken testimony. Ingram v. Gill [Ala.] 39 So. 736.

79. Where court determined that answer constituted a counterclaim but plaintiff had been misled by form in which it was pleaded, held that it was not an abuse of discretion to permit him to file reply after time limited by the code, though motion for permission to do so was made at the trial and not on notice as required by rules of court. State v. Coughran [S. D.] 103 N. W. 31. Leave to file a plea after time rests in discretion. Lewis v. Glass [Ala.] 39 So. 771. Allowing filing of answer after expiration of time is discretionary. Hardesty v. Mt. Eden, 27 Ky. L. R. 745, 86 S. W. 687. Failure to serve due to inadvertence of counsel relieved against. Kinney v. Beaver, 140 F. 792.

80. Order extending time to answer remains in force until an order vacating it is actually signed and entered, the mere announcement by the court that the motion to vacate is granted not accomplishing that result, and where answer is served after announcement, but before signing and entry of the order, plaintiff cannot take judgment by default. De Pallandt v. Flynn, 93 N. Y. S. 678. Granting defendant five days to answer after amendment of complaint held discretionary. Gadsden v. Catawba Water Power Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 121. A direction in a rule to give security for costs, "that pending the giving of such security all proceedings in the case be stayed, and that the defendant be not required to plead," held to merely suspend the operation of the rule to plead until the rule for security was disposed of, and that residue of time to plead fixed by the rule commenced to run when satisfaction of the rule for security was entered of record, neither a new rule, nor a reinstatement of the pending rule, nor fresh notice to defendant, being necessary. Amer. Mfg. Co. v. Morgan Smith Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 176.

81. In South Carolina no notice of applications for orders to extend the time to demur or answer need be served on the adverse party. Code Civ. Proc. § 405 makes no such requirement, the only condition imposed being the filing of an affidavit showing the grounds for such order. Fishburne v. Minott [S. C.] 52 S. E. 648. If circuit court rule 57 can be construed as applying to such a case, it is void as imposing conditions not required by statute. Id.

82. Failure to comply with circuit court rule 19, requiring a party seeking an extension of time to demur or answer, to present a certificate of his attorney that he believes he has a good defense on the merits, is excused where two of the defendants are out-

time by stipulation.[83] If plaintiff fails to reply to a plea within the time prescribed by law or the order of the court, the proper practice is to apply for a rule to compel him to do so, or, in default thereof, to suffer a judgment of non prosequitur.[84] In case the court permits the filing of additional pleadings during vacation, notice of the application should be given to the opposing counsel so as to give him opportunity to resist it, or to procure supplemental leave to file other pleadings and make up the issue.[85] It is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to stop the trial to allow preparation of a plea of discharge when there is no showing of the date of the alleged discharge.[86] In Tennessee pleas in bar and in abatement need not be interposed at the same time,[87] and generally, matter of abatement is waived by pleading to the merits.[88]

§ 13. Filing, service, and withdrawal.[89]—Pleadings are required to be filed in court, but failure to file is a mere irregularity,[90] and where due to the neglect of the clerk the filing will relate back.[91] If such action does not operate as a delay, surprise, or other injury to the opposite party, either party will be allowed to have issue set aside, withdraw a plea, file new pleas, or move to reject those already filed, or secure the filing of pleas on reconsideration by the court before time rejected.[92] Defects in service and failure to verify are ordinarily waived by failure to promptly return the pleading.[93]

§ 14. Issues made, proof, and variance.[94]—An issue of fact is formed for trial when the parties come to a point in the pleadings where a material fact is affirmed on one side and necessarily denied on the other.[95] If issue is joined on an immate-side of the United States, and the other two are dependent upon one of them for information necessary to their defense. Fishburne v. Minott [S. C.] 52 S. E. 648.

83. N. Y. Gen. Prac. Rule 24, relating to applications for orders extending the time to plead, does not prevent the extension of time to plead by stipulation without an order of court. Groton Bridge & Mfg. Co. v. American Bridge Co., 137 F. 284.

84. That judgment is appropriate where plaintiff, after appearance and before final judgment, fails to prosecute his action by neglecting to file his pleadings in due course. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Coffey [Va.] 51 S. E. 729.

85. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Coffey [Va.] 51 S. E. 729. Where after issue joined defendant obtained leave to file plea of limitations, liberty being also granted plaintiff to reply, and such plea was filed during vacation but no issue was taken by plaintiff, and his counsel first learned of the filing of the plea on argument of a demurrer to the evidence and was taken by surprise, held that the court should of its own motion have set aside the demurrer and the award of damages thereon, and have caused issues to have been made upon the plea and ordered a new trial. 90. While it is irregular to enter judgment before the filing of the complaint, the judgment is not for that reason void. Snohomish Land Co. v. Blood [Wash.] 82 P. 933.

91. Where railroad delivered necessary papers in condemnation proceedings to circuit clerk and requested him to file them, stating that its attorney would pay filing fee, which clerk did not demand of messenger delivering papers, but clerk delayed in filing papers, though subsequently again requested to do so, held that filing would relate back to date when papers were delivered. Dowie v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 214 Ill. 49, 73 N. E. 354.

92. Under the practice of West Virginia on the overruling of a demurrer to a plea to the jurisdiction, the court will not necessarily enter an order of dismissal but may allow plaintiff's motion to set aside the issue joined on such plea and to reject the same where it is of the opinion that substantial justice will be promoted thereby. Gordon v. Yost, 140 F. 79. It is not error to permit the dismissal of a paragraph of the reply. Sovereign Camp, Woodmen of the World v. Cox [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 290. After the appellate court has held that a bill of review is devoid of merit, and has reversed and remanded the case, the chancellor may permit the withdrawal of the answer and the filing of a demurrer. Wieczorek v. Adamski, 114 Ill. App. 161.

93. Where answer was served on June 30, and plaintiff's attorney was absent from his office July 1, and July 2 was Sunday, and notice that he would treat answer as a nullity because unverified was dated July 3, and it and the answer were received by defendant's attorney, who lived in a different town, the next day through the mail, held that plaintiff's attorney exercised due diligence and could not be compelled to accept service. Fuller Buggy Co. v. Waldron, 94 N. Y. S. 1017.

rial plea, defendant must prevail if it is established.[96] The only issues involved in the case are those raised by the pleadings.[97] The allegations of the petition are conclusive on plaintiff.[98] Any matter put in issue on one count is in issue for the purposes of the whole case.[99] If issue is taken on the replication, plaintiff is entitled to judgment if the averments thereof are proved.[1]

The general issue and general denials.[2]—A general denial puts in issue all the allegations to which it is directed,[3] and renders admissible all facts which directly tend to disprove any one or more averments of the complaint, or to show that plaintiff never had a cause of action.[4] A special plea of matter provable under the general issue is subject to demurrer.[5]

107. Where a special ownership in plaintiff under a chattel mortgage is alleged, a denial of plaintiff's ownership does not put the execution of the mortgage in issue. Perry County Bank v. Rankin [Ark.] 86 S. W. 279. An answer to a complaint for money had and received which alleges that defendant by agreement paid part thereof to plaintiff's creditors, and a specified sum to himself, raises an issue which will sustain a finding that the agreement was not that defendant should pay himself such sum but that he should have whatever profit was made in the transaction. Ellis v. Doherty [Cal. App.] 82 P. 545. Where service of a notice signed by a certain person is alleged, denial that such person signed the notice does not put in issue the service thereof. Hayden v. Collins [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1120. In suit to reform a deed alleged to have misdescribed the land intended to be conveyed, where complaint alleged that whatever interest the defendant B. had in the land he purchased from the grantee in the deed with knowledge of plaintiff's possession and claim of ownership, and the answer admitted that defendants claimed the land, alleged that they were the owners thereof in fee, and denied that plaintiff held the land adversely, held that pleadings raised the issue of B.'s rights distinct from those of his co-defendant. Garst v. Brutsche [Iowa] 105 N. W. 452. A denial that defendant hung a certain wire only three feet over a trestle does not put in issue the alleged time when it was hung. Bourke v. Butte Electric & Power Co. [Mont.] 83 P. 470. In an action against a firm on a contract signed in its name, an answer denying the existence of the partnership as alleged by plaintiff in his petition and denying the execution of the contract by the firm, or for its benefit, held to raise the issue as to whether the partnership which executed the contract could be held liable thereon. Slayden & Co. v. Palmo [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 908. In action for breach of warranty of peaceable possession of land, denial of any disturbance of possession raises that issue and renders admissible evidence in contradiction of plaintiff's allegation of eviction which, if preponderant, would defeat his cause of action, though such denial is based on lack of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief. Patterson v. Cappon [Wis.] 102 N. W. 1083.

96. Rasco v. Jefferson [Ala.] 38 So. 246.

97. Question whether assignment of executory contract of sale was an unlawful preference under the bankruptcy act held not an issue under the pleadings. Lamm v. Armstrong [Minn.] 104 N. W. 304. A ground of liability not pleaded cannot be considered on appeal from a judgment of nonsuit. Crowley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 122 Wis. 287, 99 N. W. 1016.

98. In proceeding to condemn land, allegations of petition as to ownership are conclusive on petitioner and defendants need not prove title. Sanitary Dist. v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 216 Ill. 575, 75 N. E. 248.

99. Plaintiff alleged in paragraph 3 of her complaint that defendant delivered her a package which he stated contained certain salts, and in paragraph 4 that it did not contain such salts but a poison. Defendant filed notice that on hearing in damages he should offer evidence to disprove allegations in paragraph 4. Held that no such notice as to paragraph 3 was necessary to enable him to show that statement of his clerk to plaintiff as to contents of package were true, and that she negligently picked up wrong package. Keating v. Hull [Conn.] 62 A. 661.

1. Union Fertilizer Co. v. Johnson [Ala.] 39 So. 684.

2. See 4 C. L. 1049.

3. Where title by specified conveyances is alleged, a general denial of plaintiff's title is insufficient. Pace v. Crandall [Ark.] 86 S. W. 812. Where general issue is pleaded to a special count, plaintiff must prove all the allegations thereof in order to recover. Godfrey v. Wingert, 110 Ill. App. 563. In all civil actions founded upon a particular contract defendant may answer by general denial and prove under it a different contract from that sued on and defeat recovery, or he may answer by a general denial and also by a special paragraph of denial setting up the contract which he admits having made in respect to the same subject-matter, but in such different terms as he understands the facts to warrant. Fudge v. Marquell, 164 Ind. 447, 72 N. E. 565, 73 N. E. 895. In trespass quare clausum where the location of a boundary line is in dispute, the title to the disputed territory may be determined under a plea of the general issue. Special plea of soil and freehold is not necessary to try title to disputed territory. Lyman v. Brown [N. H.] 62 A. 650. In an action on a subscription a general denial with an admission of making the subscription leaves the burden on plaintiff to prove the amount thereof. Ables v. Terrell University School [Tex. Civ. App.] 85 S. W. 1010.

4. Any evidence is admissible which tends to negative or disprove the matters of fact alleged in the petition. Code, § 3615. Overhouser v. American Cereal Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 113.

Special issues and special denials.[6]—Matters which lie in affirmative proof because of presumptions of law to the contrary, such as contributory negligence,[7] estoppel,[8] payment,[9] fraud,[10] and the like, must be specially pleaded.

A denial is sufficient to put plaintiff on proof, though coupled with an insufficient justification.[11]

Variance.[12]—Since a party must recover, if at all, on the cause of action set up in his pleadings, his allegations and proofs must substantially correspond.[13] Mat-

Facts provable under general denial: In action for libel defendant may prove plaintiff's general bad character, but not specific acts of misconduct. Dowie v. Priddle, 216 Ill. 553, 75 N. E. 243, afg. 116 Ill. App. 184. Defendant in action on quantum meruit for services rendered testatrix, to be paid for by testamentary bequest, held entitled to take advantage of fact that contract was satisfied by legacy which plaintiff accepted, no plea of estoppel being necessary. Overhouser v. American Cereal Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 113. Code § 3629, providing that any defense showing matter of justification, excuse, discharge, or release must be specially pleaded, does not require such defense to be specially pleaded. Id. In action against corporation and one of its employes for illegal arrest and false imprisonment, fact that individual defendant made the arrest for violation of the law, that he acted as police officer and not as agent of corporate defendant, etc. Schultz v. Greenwood Cemetery, 93 N. Y. S. 180. Under Act May 25, 1887, § 7, P. L. 271, abolishing special pleading and providing that the only plea in the action of trespass shall be not guilty, in action of trespass for injuries to land defendant in possession may offer evidence of title under the general plea of not guilty. Edwards v. Woodruff, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 575.

Facts not provable: A plea of the general issue with leave to give in evidence any matter which might be specially pleaded amounts to no more than the general issue, and evidence not germane thereto is properly excluded. Main v. Radney [Ala.] 39 So. 981. Defendant in action for libel cannot show under the general issue, and in mitigation of damages, facts tending to cast suspicion of plaintiff's guilt of the very charges which defendant has declined to undertake to prove. Commercial News Co. v. Beard, 116 Ill. App. 501. In action by depositor to recover from bank the amount of a note paid by it and charged to its account, held that defendant could not contend that it was a bona fide holder, and a holder in due course, where answer was general denial and plea of payment, and no claim in set-off was filed or averment of ownership made. Allegation that guardian was duly appointed by probate court held not a material averment within meaning of provision of Ohio Code prescribing what issues may be raised by general denial in the answer. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron [C. C. A.] 137 F. 48. Averment of plaintiff's citizenship in an action in a federal court, in which jurisdiction depends on diversity of citizenship, is a material allegation within the meaning of the Ohio Code, and is put in issue by a general denial in the answer. 11. Denial that plaintiff had an easement of way, and averment that defendant obstructed the same as agent of the owner, presents a good defense in the denial of plaintiff's right alone, and hence this answer is sufficient though justification be not shown. 12. See 4 C. L. 1050.
13. A variance is a substantial departure from the issue in the evidence adduced in regard to some matter which in point of law is essential to the charge or claim. Evidence must tend to prove different cause of action from that averred or a substantive ground of recovery not within the issue. Sattley Mfg. Co. v. Wendt, 116 Ill. App. 375. Plaintiff will not be permitted to make a different case by his evidence than that stated in his declaration. Proof without corresponding pleading is as ineffectual as a pleading without corresponding proof. Gilman v. Ferguson, 116 Ill. App. 347. Where there is a variance between the petition and the proof, it is error to enter a decree for plaintiff without previous amendment, and is ground for reversal if not waived. Cosgrove v. Farwell, 114 Ill. App. 491. The facts proved must be legally identical with those alleged. No recovery proper in collision case where there was a variance. Trout Brook Ice & Feed Co. v. Hartford Elec. Light Co., 77 Conn. 338, 59 A. 405. Where the petition in an action is framed upon the theory that an alleged accident caused an injury, and the proof offered by the plaintiff corresponds to the allegations of the petition and is repugnant to the theory of an aggravation of an existing infirmity, the defendant is entitled to have the plaintiff confined in his recovery to the scope of his allegation and proof. Where the issue raised by the pleadings was whether or not the accident caused hernia, proof that plaintiff had hernia prior to the accident constitutes a complete defense. P., C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Boswell, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 413.

Lowry Nat. Bank v. Fickett [Ga.] 50 S. E. 396. One alleging a cause of action of an equitable nature must prove one so far as the trial by jury is concerned, and cannot escape such tribunal by alleging an equitable cause of action, and, while wholly failing to prove it, obtain a trial by the court of a common-law action arising out of the transaction. Boonville Nat. Bank v. Blakey [Ind.] 76 N. E. 529. One suing on a contract alleged to have been made with defendants as partners cannot recover where his own proof affirmatively shows that it was made with a corporation. Buellesbach v. Sulka, 94 N. Y. S. 1. One suing a corporation for services rendered to it is not entitled to recover on the theory that he rendered the services to another corporation and that defendant afterwards assumed the liability. Girbekian v. Cairo Cigarette Co., 94 N. Y. S. 345. In action against owner for work and labor furnished by subcontractor, where complaint alleged that owner promised to pay subcontractor if principal contractor did not, held that there could be no recovery on the theory that the owner became the principal debtor to plaintiff. Smith v. Burditt, 95 N. Y. S. 188. In action for injuries caused by falling into an excavation, where negligence charged was defendant's failure to light or guard excavation on private property adjacent to a highway on theory that it should have done so for the safety of persons using such highway, held that there could be no recovery where evidence showed that plaintiff left highway deliberately and fell into excavation at place known to him not to be the highway. Crimmins v. United Engineering & Contracting Co., 96 N. Y. S. 1032. In a suit on a note, where the execution of the note sued on is admitted, it is error to receive a note variant from that described in the complaint. Viets v. Silver [N. D.] 106 N. W. 35. Where plaintiff sets out negligent acts relied on as a basis of recovery, he must establish those acts, and cannot recover by reason of other negligent acts of defendant not averred, even though acts proven show that latter was guilty of negligence which caused the injury. Chicago City R. Co. v. Bruley, 215 Ill. 464, 74 N. E. 441; Shickle-Harrison & H. Iron Co. v. Beck, 112 Ill. App. 444; Wabash R. Co. v. Warren, 113 Ill. App. 172. No variance: Between allegation that injury occurred while "placing a spout in said machine under said blade," and proof that it occurred while straightening a spout which had not gone in properly under the blade. National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. Vogel, 115 Ill. App. 607. If the facts alleged warrant the relief sought, the mere erroneous conclusion of the pleader that a partnership existed by virtue of such facts does not prevent the granting of such relief or constitute a variance. Calkins v. Worth, 215 Ill. 78, 74 N. E. 81. Where plaintiff sued partnership for purchase price of goods, but on trial evidence showed that goods were purchased by one of the alleged partners, who was individually liable therefor, and plaintiff amended petition so as is alleged does not constitute a variance unless contradictory of the allegations,[15] nor does a failure to prove all that is charged, provided enough is proven to make out a cause of action.[16] Where the deficiency of evidence is as to the entire scope of the pleading and not merely as to some particular thereof, it is a failure of proof and not a variance.[17]

Immaterial variances will be wholly disregarded,[18] and in such case the court may direct the facts to be found according to the evidence.[19] By statute in some to allege that plaintiff was doing business at the time mentioned in his own name, which was treated as an allegation of a sale to him individually, held that there was no variance. Padden v. Clark, 124 Iowa, 94, 99 N. W. 152. Averment that plaintiff delivered, or caused to be delivered, to defendant bank the sum claimed, to be held by it for his use, to be paid upon his order on demand, etc., held broad enough to cover deposit made by plaintiff personally. Elliott v. Worcester Trust Co. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 944. Under Civ. Ct. rule 27, subd. "b," plaintiff pleading a joint contract executed by two defendants, and the proof showing that only one of the parties executed the contract, he may recover against such party. Root & McBride Co. v. If the complaint directs attention to the true nature of plaintiff's loss, and sufficiently indicates its general and controlling cause, it is immaterial that the particular cause alleged proves not to be the true one. Osborn v. Norwalk, 77 Conn. 663, 60 A. 645. In action for damages against owner of dam, variance between allegation that damages were caused by wrongfully and negligently failing to open the flood gate early enough in periods of high water, and proof that the real cause of the injury was the opening of the gate at any time during such periods is immaterial and will be disregarded under Rules of Court, p. 45, § 149, plaintiff not having stated a defective title to relief but having made a defective statement of a good title to it. states no variance is to be deemed material unless it has actually misled the opposite party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits,[20] which fact must be established by his affidavit to that effect or otherwise.[21] A judgment notwithstanding the verdict cannot be upheld on the ground of a variance between the cause of action stated and the proof unless it further appears that the pleading is deficient to the extent that no amendment thereof can be made.[22]

A variance is waived by failure to object thereto at the trial[23] or by consenting to litigate the new issue,[24] or where a motion to exclude evidence is based solely on other grounds,[25] nor can such objection be availed of where the variance is cured by amendment.[26]

28. If defendant admits by demurrer or answer that he entered into a contract with plaintiffs by an associate name in which the suit is brought, such admission, without further qualification, is equivalent to an admission that they have sufficient capacity to bind and be bound by the instrument and to enforce the same in the contract name. Miller v. Loverne & Browne Co. [Neb.] 105 N. W. 84. Answer held to admit plaintiff's cause of action, and hence errors at the trial were harmless. Id. avoided by the answer,[29] and allegations of new matter in the answer not denied by the reply, in states where a reply is required,[30] are taken as established and need not be proved. If, however, allegations of an answer are to be taken as admissions they must be taken as a whole, and the defendant must be given the benefit of portions favorable to him.[31]

Express admissions are conclusive on the party making them.[32] They control inconsistent express averments[33] and prevail over findings to the contrary by a jury.[34] The original answer is admissible in evidence against the defendant as an admission even after the filing of an amended one,[35] but is not conclusive, and evidence bearing on its weight as an admission is admissible.[36]

Judgment on the pleadings[37] will be granted when they present such a state of conceded facts as entitle either party to relief,[38] but is improper where there is any material issue of fact.[39]

PLEDGES.

§ 1. Definition and nature.[40]—A pledge is a bailment of personal property as security for some debt or engagement with implied power of sale on default.[41] It creates a lien in favor of the pledgee.[42] The obligation secured is the principal debt in the law and governs the rights of the parties and of volunteers.[43] Whether a transfer of property is absolute, or merely as a pledge, often depends upon the character of the transaction and the circumstances of the parties,[44] but equity will consider the substance of the transaction in order to determine the intention of the parties.[45] The question may be one for the jury.[46]

§ 2. Right to make.[47]—Property cannot be pledged except by the owner or his authorized agent.[48]

§ 3. Property subject to be pledged.[49]—All personal property capable of delivery may be pledged.[50]

§ 4. The contract and its requisites.[51]—Possession is the essence of a pledge.[52] To constitute a valid pledge an actual transfer is not always essential. It is sufficient if there be such a delivery as the property is reasonably capable of, and as is reasonably suitable under the circumstances.[53] Thus, a symbolical or constructive, instead of actual, delivery is in many cases sufficient.[54] For similar reasons substitution is permitted where strict segregation of the property pledged is impracticable,[55] and if the property is already in possession of the pledgee, the pledge becomes effectual without further delivery;[56] and the consent of a bailee to becoming bailee for another to whom the owner has pledged the property is a sufficient change of possession.[57] Where there is conscious control, the intentional exclusion of others, and access to the place of custody as of right, possession is complete,[58] and the fact that the property is in a warehouse owned by the pledgor and used by him jointly with the warehouse company will not invalidate the pledge.[59] A pledge need not be evidenced by a writing,[60] and no particular formality is necessary.[61] A valid written contract of pledge cannot be varied by parol.[62] A pledge must rest on a valuable consideration,[63] but may be valid, although the debt secured is not as definite and certain as it must be in the case of a mortgage,[64] nor will the fact that the evidence of the debt may be invalid necessarily invalidate the pledge.[65] As to description of the property, it need not go beyond the fair import of a statute.[66] A defective contract of pledge may be cured by delivery of the property pledged.[67] As between the parties, a pledge of securities becomes valid without notice to the obligors.[68]

§ 5. Rights, duties, and liabilities under the pledge.[69]—The pledgor cannot cancel a contract pledged, to the prejudice of the pledgee,[70] nor can he defeat the lien of a mortgage by taking a deed of the mortgaged premises.[71] Delivery of property under the contract passes to the pledgee the right to things incidental thereto and necessary to render the pledge effectual, and he may maintain an action for their recovery.[72] The pledgee is entitled to his reasonable expenses incurred in realizing on collaterals,[73] and in the case of a pledge of stock he may recover assessments necessarily paid in order to preserve his security,[74] but in such case he cannot resort to measures unnecessary for his protection.[75] A pledge to secure a joint obligation does not give to the pledgee a lien to secure the individual undertaking of one of the pledgors.[76] Where the contract of pledge provides that other security may be substituted, any security may be substituted which will not affect the ultimate value of the obligation secured, although the same may not be devoted to the security of that obligation or be available as collateral.[77]

Possession and custody.[78]—The pledgee being entitled to possession, any possessory action may be maintained.[79] The possession of the pledgee is notice to the world.[80] A pledgee holding by constructive delivery may reduce the goods to actual possession.[81]

Title to the property.[82]—The fact that the pledgee attaches the property will not estop him from asserting that he was holding it at the time as pledgee.[83]

Duty to realize on collaterals and prevent loss.[84]—In a pledge of securities the pledgor is relieved from responsibility as to collection on them, and that duty devolves upon the pledgee.[85] If he negligently fails to collect when the collaterals are due, and the makers thereafter become insolvent, he is liable for the loss.[86] Where the pledgee is also the agent of the pledgor for the purpose of realizing on securities pledged, he is liable for loss occurring by reason of his failure to follow instructions.[87] A pledgee of stock is not, in the absence of an agreement looking to a sale, liable for depreciation in value while it is in his hands.[88]

Conversion by the pledgee.[89]—Trover lies against the pledgee where, after demand and payment of the debt secured, he wrongfully withholds the property.[90] Where a pledgee is a partnership, each partner is jointly and severally liable for a wrongful use of the property,[91] and conversion will lie against a third party who sells the property contrary to the instructions of the pledgor.[92] Where property is repledged, the original pledgee can maintain an action against his pledgee for damages for again pledging the property for an unauthorized purpose.[93] Such action is in tort and not on a contract.[94] Whether such repledge is unauthorized depends upon the terms of the contract of pledge.[95] Mere knowledge of the repledge without a ratification thereof,[96] and a payment to redeem the property pledged,[97] will not estop the party injured by the repledge from maintaining an action for damages. Where a pledgor has no notice until after a wrongful sale that the property has been converted, he may sue in conversion without demand for the property and tender of the amount due,[98] but if the pledgor demands an accounting for the proceeds from a wrongful sale, and from the use of the property, he thereby waives the tort of the pledgee.[99] Conversion will not lie against the pledgee by reason of a loss occurring because of his failure to follow the instructions of the pledgor in selling the property.[1] In a suit for an accounting, between pledgor and pledgee, defendant is not entitled to a jury,[2] and equity will not entertain a suit for an accounting if brought unreasonably late.[3]

Redemption and surrender.[4]—The pledgor is entitled to redeem, and a refusal to return the pledge is a sufficient justification for not paying the debt,[5] but he cannot recover possession of property pledged without first paying the debt, to secure which the pledge was made.[6] The pledgee cannot prevent redemption by denying the corporate existence of the pledgor.[7] He is entitled to redeem any part of the property remaining undisposed of under the contract of pledge;[8] but the pledgor cannot redeem land bought in by the pledgee, at the foreclosure of a mortgage pledged, where the pledgor had authorized the pledgee to so purchase the land.[9] Where a mortgage of real estate pledged as collateral security for a note other than the mortgage debt is foreclosed otherwise than by sale under a power, the pledgee acquiring absolute title to the land as against the mortgagor, such pledgee holds the land merely as security for the debt against the pledgor, and the pledgee's interest is liable to be defeated by payment of the debt for which the mortgage was pledged.[10] But where the foreclosure is by sale under a power and the pledgee becomes the purchaser, under the terms of the pledge the foreclosure will stand, but the proceeds of the sale will be applied as a payment on the pledgor's debt.[11]

Default, foreclosure, and sale.[12]—The pledgee cannot divest the pledgor of title to the property on default by a mere declaration that if the obligation is not performed he will consider the property as his own,[13] and an agreement that on default the property shall belong to the pledgee does not vest title absolutely in him on default, but merely gives him an option to treat it as such;[14] and in a suit on a guarantee, a mortgage pledged to secure its performance may be foreclosed in the same action,[15] but in such case the pledgee is not entitled to interest on the mortgage as a bonus.[16] In the foreclosure of a pledge the court may grant a deficiency judgment in the same action.[17] If he has several securities for the same debt he may resort to any one or all of them, and hold any surplus for the benefit of the pledgor and third persons interested.[18] But the pledgee occupies a fiduciary relation[19] and he is bound to deal fairly with the pledgor.[20] If he undertakes to sell he is bound to exercise reasonable care to obtain a fair price, although he was not required to sell.[21] He is not relieved of his obligation to exercise good faith, in disposing of collaterals, even though the contract authorized a private sale, without notice, and allowed him to bid in the property himself.[22] Where the sale is fraudulent, the pledgor is not bound to suffer judgment to be taken against him and bring another action to recover the property.[23] If, however, the pledgor approves a sale, he approves it as made,[24] except that such approval cannot operate as a waiver of subsequent negligent conduct on the part of the pledgee,[25] nor will mere delay estop the pledgor from bringing action to recover the proceeds of property pledged in the absence of prejudice to the pledgee.[26] One paying over surplus of proceeds of sale of pledged goods to an assignee with knowledge of a claim of pledgor is liable.[27] In New York, demand is necessary to a suit for accounting for proceeds.[28]

Right of action on the debt.[29]—A pledgee in possession may attach the property in an action on the debt without losing his lien.[30] Herein his rights differ from those of a mortgagee,[31] nor does a pledgee of stock waive his lien by bringing garnishment proceedings against the corporation, in a suit against the debtor, where it does not appear that the garnishment was issued because of the pledged stock held by the debtor in the corporation.[32] But the lien may be extinguished by statute when the debt is barred by limitations.[33]

Effect of insolvency and bankruptcy.[34]—A pledge of stock is equivalent to a transfer of property.[35] A pledge of warehouse receipts carries a valid title as against a trustee in bankruptcy to all the property represented by the receipts and any that may have been substituted therefor without the knowledge or consent of the pledgee.[36] After the pledgor has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, a pledge cannot be changed without the consent of the assignee.[37] The pledgee cannot prejudice the rights of a surety by any agreement with the pledgor's assignee in insolvency.[38]

Equities and defenses between one of the parties and third persons.[39]—The question of equities depends upon the law of the place where the contract was made,[40] but where such law is not in evidence, the law of the place of trial will control.[41]

40. National Bank of Commerce v. Kennedy, 98 Tex. 293, 83 S. W. 368.

The rights of a pledgee in good faith for value cannot be affected by a substitution of other property for that pledged without his knowledge or consent[42] nor by a subsequent pledge.[43] And where a contract of sale to the pledgor is clear and unambiguous, the original owner cannot defeat it as against an innocent pledgee.[44] So, also, an owner who voluntarily parts with possession of notes secured by trust deeds must stand the loss as against a subsequent innocent pledgee for value,[45] and where the stock is not transferred on the company's books, the pledgor is regarded as the owner for the purpose of the banking act.[46] The fact that the stock is transferred on the company's books to the pledgee cannot alone render him liable as a shareholder.[47] The pledgee may, however, by his acts, become the absolute owner of the property pledged as against third parties.[48] So, also, the subsequent conduct of the parties may change an original contract of pledge into an absolute assignment.[49] A surety may pledge property for the further protection of the creditor without releasing his co-surety.[50] If a surety pays the debt he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the pledgee.[51] The lien of a pledge is inferior to a mechanic's lien of which the pledgee had knowledge.[52] A third party is not liable on a conditional acceptance of an assignee as pledgee until the condition has been fulfilled.[53] Where a subscription agreement of an underwriting syndicate was intended and expressly permitted by its terms to be used as collateral security, a subscriber, when sued thereon by the assignee, cannot set off equities existing between him and the company, and arising after the contract was executed and assigned.[54]

41. Held error on a trial in one state to instruct jury that plaintiff took subject to "all defenses at any time," where the evidence showed only that the law of the state where the pledge was made provided that the pledgee takes subject to equities. Nor is the co-surety relieved because the creditor had the collateral renewed against his consent without showing actual, as distinguished from speculative injury. Id. In such case the co-surety on paying the debt is entitled to subrogation to the rights of the creditor, in the property pledged, only by reason of his suretyship, and not because of the contract. POSSESSION, WRIT OF.[56]

The writ lies only to put one into actual corporeal possession,[57] hence is not available as against a co-tenant.[58] It cannot issue on a judgment become dormant until the same is revived.[59] The writ will go against persons unlawfully using a way over land, though the judgment being in ejectment could not adjudicate easements.[60]. It will not be suspended merely because a stranger has a right to trees originating before action,[61] and not yet reduced to possession by entry,[62] nor where to do so would be tantamount to vacation of the judgment[63] or the grant of an injunction;[64] but where one having a right to cut trees, and not bound by judgment, may, before service of the writ, take possession, an exception of his rights may be put into the writ.[65] While the writ must follow the judgment,[66] it may contain a direction to leave undisturbed a possession by a person not party to the judgment,[67] and such person may apply for such relief after judgment,[68] but relief will often be made conditional on the excepted person's coming in and litigating his right.[69] One claiming under a landlord omitted from the judgment to which a tenant was party, cannot be excepted from the writ without a showing that the landlord was ignorant of the action.[70] Although a stranger held title not bound by the judgment, he may come under the writ if he buys in from defendant.[71]

POSSESSORY WARRANT.[72]

The action is wholly statutory.[73] Domestic fixtures not a part of the realty may be recovered by a tenant from the wrongful possession of his landlord.[74] A statement in a motion that the affidavit is not definite is too general to raise any distinct question.[75] compensation for the entire route as extended.[77] Additional compensation may be recovered by a contractor for new and additional service not included in the terms of the contract.[78] A contract for regulation wagon, mail messenger, transfer, and mail station service on a mail route, the contractor agreeing to take mails from and deliver them to the post offices, mail stations, and cars, requires carriage of mails up and down the steps of elevated stations.[79] A material error in the advertisement for bids for mail service may entitle the contractor to extra compensation.[80]

A postmaster is liable under his bond for the loss of a registered package entrusted to him, irrespective of whether such loss was occasioned by his negligence.[81]

More than one indorsement of a postal money order renders it invalid.[82]

Where the postmaster general, acting upon reports of inspectors and upon evidence of the party against which complaint has been made, finds, upon evidence satisfactory to him, that the mails are being used to defraud, his finding will not be reviewed by the courts.[85] But it is held that the question whether the fraud order statute is applicable in a given case is one for the courts and not the postmaster general.[86] The fraud order statute does not apply to ordinary business enterprises or frauds perpetrated in usual trade channels.[87] Thus, a fraud order cannot be issued against a mail order business wherein customers are furnished a commercial equivalent for the price paid, though the trade literature sent through the mails contains false statements and untrue trade puffing.[88]

An incorporated educational institution, conducting a correspondence college for gain, is not entitled to second class mail rates.[89] A postmaster general is not bound by a construction placed by a predecessor on the statute relating to second class mail matter, and may revoke a certificate of entry of a publication as second class matter issued by such predecessor, where no vested right has been created by such certificate.[90]

§ 3. Postal crimes and offenses.[91]—An indictment charging the breaking into a building, used in part as a post office, with intent to commit larceny in said building is insufficient; it must appear that the offense was committed in the portion of the building used as a post office.[92]

Use of mails to defraud.[93]—An indictment charging a scheme to defraud by means of false representations to be disseminated through the mails, that the scheme was carried out, that the representations were false and fraudulent, and that thereby certain named persons were induced to part with their money and give it to accused, charges all the essential elements of the offense.[94] The gist of the offense being use of the mails to defraud, and an act done in furtherance of the fraudulent scheme, and not obtaining money by false pretenses, it is not necessary to negative the truth of the representations.[95] An allegation of an intention by accused to convert the money so obtained to his own use is unnecessary.[96] An averment that the fraudulent scheme of the defendant was to be effected by the use of the post office establishment is a sufficient allegation that use of the mails was contemplated as a part of a scheme to defraud.[97] The indictment must adequately describe the scheme, artifice, or device used to defraud, in order that defendant may be informed what facts are to be proved against him. It is not always enough to follow the language of the statute.[98] Only such evidence as tends to prove the charge of the indictment is admissible.[99]

Embezzlement and larceny from the mails.[1]—The duty of a carrier with respect to a letter which comes into his possession in the course of his official employment is the same, whether the letter be genuine or a decoy, and whether or not the address is fictitious.[2] The opening, detention, destruction, or embezzlement of the contents of either kind of letter is equally punishable.[3] or to the creation or revocation of an estate therein or charge thereon, which the owner granting or reserving the power might himself lawfully perform.[6] A mere authority to convey land is in this work treated as an agency.[7]

§ 2. Creation, construction, validity, and effect.[8]—No precise form or technical words are necessary to the creation of a power.[9] A power to appoint to several beneficiaries leaves the amount to be appointed to each to the discretion of the donee.[10] A power which cannot be exercised beyond the limits of the rule against perpetuities is not rendered bad by the fact that within its terms an appointment could be made which would be too remote.[11] A power in a life tenant to dispose of his estate is only co-extensive with the estate of the donee.[12] A power to appoint a fee is power to appoint a less estate,[13] but one to appoint certain persons is not a power to appoint any other.[14] A power in a trustee, holding the fee to sell and convey on directions from the beneficiary life tenant, authorizes a conveyance of the fee.[15] A power in gross is extinguished where the donee disposes of his estate.[16]

§ 3. Execution of powers.[17]—The intention to execute a power by will must appear by a reference in the will to the power or to the subject of it, or from the fact that the will would be inoperative without the aid of the power.[18] A general power is well executed, in the absence of anything to show a contrary intention, by a general residuary clause in the will of the donee,[19] and that the power is created after the execution of the will does not prevent the will from operating as an execution of it.[20] This rule applies whether the power be general or special,[21] especially where an intention to exercise the power is apparent.[22] A codicil referring to a power the testator was authorized to exercise constitutes an exercise of the power as of that date.[23] A power to alter the proportions of an estate, which otherwise would go in specified portions to appointees designated by the donor, is not exercised by a will which does not alter or regulate the proportions in which the estate was to be distributed,[24] but any material change in the manner of disposition constitutes an exercise of it.[25] A power to a son to appoint to the donor's "direct representatives" is validly executed by bequests to the donee's "children," who were the direct representatives of the donor.[26] A power in a life tenant to appoint by

PRISONS, JAILS, AND REFORMATORIES.

This topic treats of penal and reformatory institutions, and the custody and control of the inmates. The law of criminal procedure,[29] the legal status of a convict,[30] pardon, commutation or remission of sentence,[31] and escape or prison breach,[32] are elsewhere treated.

The place of confinement is a subject of statutory regulation.[37] In Massachusetts a person guilty of criminal contempt may be committed to jail, but cannot be imprisoned in the house of correction.[38]

Persons incarcerated, not as punishment for crime, cannot be compelled to work at hard labor.[39] The constitutional provision against involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, includes misdemeanors and all offenses against the penal laws.[40] Prisoners may be required to work outside the prison.[41] The nature of the labor required is in some states prescribed by statute.[42] In Mississippi, convicts may not be leased out,[43] but this rule is not violated by working convicts on a farm leased for that purpose.[44] Under the constitution of Mississippi authorizing the working of convicts on state farms, and the purchase of farms for that purpose, the Legislature is not required to purchase a farm, but may work convicts on leased lands.[45]

A convict who escapes and is recaptured can be lawfully kept in prison until the expiration of his term.[46] Prisoners may be required to be produced for trial for other offenses.[47] One under bond to appear for trial for a felony, who is arrested and confined for misdemeanor in another county, should on demand be surrendered for trial for the felony, unless the trial for misdemeanor can be had without delay.[48]

The custodian of the prison may use such force as is necessary to preserve order and prevent disturbance in the jail.[49]

The director of charities and correction, under the "Cleveland Federal Plan," is clothed with power to discharge a prisoner from the workhouse only where the question involved in the discharge is the propriety of his retention.[50] Such discharge can only be made upon the approval of the mayor, and under such regulations as may be provided by law or ordinance, and in the absence of a regulating statute or ordinance the discharge is invalid.[51] But the failure of the mayor to endorse his approval of the discharge may be cured by a subsequent endorsement thereof, provided the proceedings are otherwise regular.[52]

Scheme of credits.[53]—There is a conflict of authority as to whether the federal statute providing for "good time" to prisoners, convicted of offenses against the United States, applies to prisoners sentenced before its enactment.[54] The term of sentence may be reduced where one is erroneously committed to the penitentiary instead of to jail.[55]

§ 3. Administration and fiscal affairs.[56]—The express power to erect a jail and issue bonds in payment therefor includes the implied power to purchase a site and issue bonds in payment therefor,[57] also to purchase furnishings and fixtures.[58] The maintenance of a prison is the exercise of a purely governmental function,[59]

A contract by which a plantation is to be worked by convict labor, the owner to have all the crops in excess of a certain amount, which he guarantees the crops will equal in value, the board of control to have absolute authority over the labor, the owner to furnish teams and implements, is a leasing of lands and not a hiring of convict labor, which is prohibited. and a municipal corporation is not liable for injuries caused by negligence or omission of duty, on the part of its officers, respecting the prison or persons confined therein.[60] Under a statute requiring cities to maintain police stations and provide food for persons detained therein,[61] a city which commits persons arrested for violation of ordinances and statutes to the county jail is liable to the sheriff for board furnished,[62] and demand by the sheriff is not a condition precedent to maintaining action for the value thereof.[63] A jailer may be required to perform such duties as the governing authorities may impose.[64] Employes of a prison may on sufficient proof of misconduct or neglect, be removed by the board in control, without being accorded an opportunity of meeting their accusers face to face or of making a defense.[65] In the absence of specific allegations of corruption or of abuse of discretion, the determination of the board in such a matter is conclusive.[66] Under the statutes of Mississippi the board of control is vested with a discretion in the management of convicts and penitentiary farms, and such discretion cannot be controlled by the courts.[67]

monses, and orders of courts of justice.[71] Sometimes actions may be instituted by notice of claim preceding the ordinary summons,[72] but a notice to redeem land from tax sale and the return of the sheriff, or the receipt for registered letter, is not the process that gives the court jurisdiction over the subject-matter.[73] In proceedings to foreclose mortgages in Georgia the process is a rule nisi.[74]

There is no jurisdiction in courts, inherent or otherwise, to adjudicate the rights of litigants without notice, either actual or constructive,[75] and mere knowledge that the court may take action in a certain matter will not dispense with the necessity of process.[76] The Federal Conformity in Practice act does not require process out of Federal courts to conform to that in the local state.[77]

Designation of court and parties.[78]—It is proper to designate the defendant by his full christian name, though the cause of action is against him by his initials only and his surname.[79] Even an erroneous designation of the defendant will not affect the validity of the judgment where the defendant is properly and actually served.[80] The summons in an action against a partnership should show the christian name of each partner.[81] Where the name of the owner is known, a summons in tax fore-

NOTE. Form and contents in federal courts: No form of process is provided for the courts of the United States by any Act of Congress now in force. Chamberlain v. Mensing, 47 F. 436.

The provisions of this section [R. S. § 914] include forms of process for commencement of suits except as to signature, which is provided for by section 911, R. S. Gillum v. Stewart, 112 F. 32. A substantial compliance with the requirements of a state statute as to the form of summons will be upheld, when to set it aside would tend to defeat the ends of justice. Johnson v. Healy, 9 Ben. [U. S.] 321.

In the name of the United States: When no law or practice or form or mode of proceeding in the state court requires that the summons shall be in the name of the state, there can be no reason that in the Federal court it shall be in the name of the United States. closure proceedings must usually contain the name of the owner.[82] The court to which the process is returnable must be designated with sufficient certainty to enable the defendant to know in what court he is required to appear.[83]

Signing and sealing.[84]—Where the statute requires the summons to be signed or subscribed by the plaintiff or his attorney, it is not necessary that the signature should be by hand. A stamped or printed signature is sufficient.[85] The general principles of orderly practice forbid a summons signed by one attorney for some of the plaintiffs, and by another attorney for other plaintiffs,[86] but a defect in this regard may be cured by amendment at any stage of the action.[87]

Indorsement.[88]—In actions for the recovery of money, the amount which will be demanded by the plaintiff must in some states be indorsed upon the summons.[89]

Direction and delivery.—Process must be directed to the sheriff or any constable of the county where it is to be executed,[90] but when directed to the "Constable or any lawful officer of the county," and the sheriff of a different county executed the writ, it was held good.[91] The process may be delivered by the clerk to the plaintiff or his attorney.[92]

Stating nature of cause of action.[93]

Penalties or consequences of nonappearance. Stating these is so essential a part of the process that their omission is necessarily fatal.[94]

The appearance day must be stated with certainty.[95]

Anderson v. Turati [Wash.] 81 P. 557.

83. A process issued by the clerk and attested by the judge of the superior court, requiring the defendant to appear "at the next ——— court to be held" for a given county on a given day, when a regular term of the superior court is required by law to be held, is a valid process of the superior court and needs no amendment, though the clerk of the superior court is also clerk of the county court, which also has a regular term on the day mentioned in the summons. 94. A summons duly served on defendant, which notifies him of the court, term, time, and place where he is required to appear, and that he is required to answer the claim of plaintiff, is not fatally defective because it omits to state the penalty for his failure to appear as specified by statute. The summons was personally served out of the state. Held the provision relating to service within the state became surplusage and the summons was good. Lawyer Land Co. v. Steel [Wash.] 83 P. 896.

quired by law,[97] and a writ defective in this particular is void.[98] Process to be published is usually returnable a certain time after the first publication.[99]

Alias, counterpart, or supplemental process.[1]—Where the summons is returned not executed, an alias writ may issue, which, if returned unexecuted, may in turn be followed by other writs until service is perfected.[2] So, also, where it is necessary to add new parties or substitute another party as defendant, a supplemental process may issue,[3] and where it is shown that the sheriff's return to a writ of possession in forcible entry and detainer proceedings is false in stating that possession had been delivered according to the mandate of the writ, such return will be quashed and an alias writ awarded.[4] A federal court to which a cause has been removed may issue an alias summons and by the service thereof acquire jurisdiction of the defendant's person.[5] A supplemental process to bring in a new party is in the same form as an original summons.[6] An alias or pluries process is a continuation of the original, and not the inception of a new suit,[7] and the date of the original process is the date of the commencement of the suit.[8] The clerk of the court has no power, without the order of the court, to issue a second process after the first has been served.[9]

§ 2. Issuance.[10]—Process, to be valid, must be issued in substantial compliance with the law.[11] It must be issued by an officer having proper authority in the premises,[12] but a process which is not issued within the time prescribed by statute is not void, but only irregular.[13] Where a statute requires the plaintiff to give

Va. c. 125, § 2, requires process to be returned within ninety days to the court on the first day of the term, or in the clerk's office on the first Monday in any month, or to some rule day, unless otherwise provided. but another section (§ 1) provides that rules shall be held on the first Monday in the month except when such day is the day on which a term of the court commences, in which case rules shall be held on the last Monday in the preceding month, process cannot be returned to the clerk's office on the first Monday of the month when such day is the commencement of a term of court. security for costs, the summons should not be issued until such security has been given, but if it is so issued it is not void, and the irregularity is cured by the giving of the bond.[14]

§ 3. Extraterritorial effect or validity.[15]—The authority to serve a process in such manner as to give jurisdiction to render a personal judgment is restricted to the territory of the state where the process is issued, and the court has no power to require persons not within such territory to appear before it,[16] but where an action is properly brought in one county as against one defendant, process may be sent for service on another defendant in another county.[17] So, also, it is held that a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action, and jurisdiction to try the case in the county in which the action is brought, may acquire jurisdiction of the person of the defendant by issuing its original process to any county in the state where the defendant resides,[18] or, if he is a nonresident, may be found.[19] The distinctions between jurisdiction in rem and in personam,[20] and the extraterritorial force of judgments,[21] are elsewhere discussed.

Mere knowledge that the court may take action is not sufficient, as where a judge informed the attorney of the plaintiff, in a divorce suit to whom the custody of her child had been granted, that if a certain party made application for the custody of the child he would grant it, but no further notice or process was served. In re Culp [Cal. App.] 83 P. 89.

24. NOTE. In equity: In some jurisdictions, statutory provisions relative to the acceptance of service of process are found. Such statutory provisions must be complied with in order to render unnecessary the service of process by a properly constituted officer. In the absence of any statute authorizing acceptance of service of process, it seems that the defendant has the right to accept service of process, and such acceptance of service, when duly proven, is equivalent to service of the subpoena by the proper officer. Banks v. Banks, 31 Ill. 162; Tuskaloosa Wharf Co. v. Tuskaloosa, 38 Ala. 514. The following indorsement, signed by the defendant on a summons, recited by the decree to have been made by the defendant, was held to be sufficient: "I acknowledge service of the within summons upon me as required by law, this 9th day of May, 1861, by the same being read to me, and receiving a copy of the same." Banks v. Banks, 31 Ill. 162. Proof of the genuineness of the acceptance of service is required to support a decree pro confesso. O'Neal v. Garrett, 3 Ala. 276; Norwood v. Riddle, 1 Ala. 195. or appearance.[25] The service must be made within the time prescribed by statute.[26] Generally personal service must be made by delivering a copy within the state to the defendant in person.[27] The discovery of a summons and its delivery to defendant by an employe is not personal serice.[28] Personal service of a summons or process cannot be made by mail.[29]

Service on minors is made, as provided by statute, either by service on the minors themselves,[30] or upon certain designated persons,[31] or, in certain cases, upon a guardian ad litem.[32] Service on one member of a partnership gives jurisdiction of the partnership property.[33]

Upon nonresidents or their agents.[34]—Nonresidents may be served personally in any county in the state where they may be found,[35] unless they are there by reason of some fraud, artifice, or trick on the part of the plaintiff, or some one acting for him, in order to obtain the service.[36] Statutes relating to service without the state do not apply to service upon a nonresident within the state,[37] but the latter may be served as though he were a resident.[38]

It is held that a recital in the decree that it appeared to the court that the defendant had been duly served with process was satisfactory proof that the defendant did make the acceptance. Banks v. Upon municipal corporations.[39]—A service upon public officers as officials is binding upon their successors.[40]

Upon domestic corporations.[41]—Service on corporations may be made by service on specified officers or agents of the corporation that may be found in charge of the corporation's business office in the state, or if there are no such officers or agents, then by posting a copy of the process in some conspicuous place at such business office.[42] Service may be made on the agent appointed for such purpose according to statute.[43] Service cannot be made on an eleemosynary corporation by service on a member of the faculty or the dean thereof.[44] It is constitutional for the state to provide that a certain officer shall be agent for service of nonresident domestic corporations.[45] An agent within the meaning of a statute providing for service upon corporations is one who does business for the corporation upon its authority and for its account.[46] The service on the officer must be made in the county where the corporation is or has its principal office;[47] but sometimes a distinction is made between service on officers and agents, service on the latter being required to be made in the county where the action is brought and the agent resides in actions against domestic corporations, while no such restriction is made as to officers of the corporation.[48]

48. Rev. St. Fla. 1892, § 1019. Putnam Lumber Co. v. Ellis-Young Co. [Fla.] 39 So.

Service on an agent of a lessee railroad company is not service on the lessor company, even though both be liable to a joint action.[49] After a corporation has ceased to do business, a service of summons on a stockholder who had been a director and trustee is of no binding force on the other stockholders.[50] After two or more corporations have been consolidated, service may be had upon any of the constituent corporations as to its debts prior to the consolidation by service on such officers as might have been served if there had been no consolidation, where such officers have not been removed except by virtue of the consolidation.[51]

Upon foreign corporations.[52]—Personal service upon an officer of a foreign corporation, while casually within the state, will support a judgment in rem against the corporation.[53] A personal judgment against a foreign corporation may rest upon service of some officer thereof while temporarily within the state on corporate business,[54] or, if the corporation be engaged in business within the state, on some officer or designated agent,[55] though there is a conflict as to whether or not, if the officer be temporarily within the jurisdiction, he must be engaged in corporate business.[56] Service upon one acting as a corporate officer to the knowledge of the stockholders is sufficient.[57] In order that a Federal court may obtain jurisdiction over a foreign corporation, the corporation must, among other things, be doing business within the state.[58] The fact that the corporation has actual notice of the proceedings will not give the court jurisdiction to render a personal judgment where there has not been sufficient personal service.[59] Service may be made on such agents as are designated by statute for this purpose, as a local agent,[60] or a managing agent,[61] or an agent transacting business in the state,[62] but service on a resident attorney at law, who has been employed by the foreign corporation to look after its interests in the event that suit is brought on the claim which afterwards forms the subject of the suit in which the service is made, is insufficient.[63]

It is often provided by statute that a foreign corporation shall appoint some person, residing in the county in which its principal place of business is, upon whom process may be served,[64] but such an agent, in receiving service, does not act officially, the meaning of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc., § 432, subd. 3, where the property insured was situated in that state, the loss was to be adjusten there, and the company in case of loss was given the option of payment or of repairing or rebuilding. Id.

NOTE. In Federal courts under U. S. R. S. § 914: It is the established rule that a mode of service prescribed by state laws for obtaining jurisdiction over foreign corporations, which is by the local courts recognized as valid, will obtain recognition in the Federal courts, subject to the fundamental principle that no one shall be condemned unheard, or compelled to answer a complaint in a foreign jurisdiction except upon such notice of the proceeding as is fair and reasonable, and the Federal courts must judge for themselves whether the mode of service prescribed by the laws of a particular state satisfies these requirements. Service upon the president of a foreign corporation temporarily in a state, but a citizen and resident of another state, cannot give jurisdiction over the corporation, organized and existing under the laws of such other state and carrying on business in that state only, having no place of business, officer, agent, or property in the state in which such service was made. This section applies only to cases of which the court has jurisdiction according to the Constitution and laws of the United States. Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. The appointment of such person is not a condition precedent to the right to do business in the state, but is expressly made by the statute a condition to the right to sue or to defend a suit. The prohibition against suing is valid, but query as to whether the prohibition agalnst debut under the power of attorney, and hence service on his deputy is insufficient,[65] nor has he any power to waive or accept service.[66] Statutes requiring foreign corporations to appoint resident agents, upon whom service of process may be made, provide an additional and not an exclusive mode of service,[67] hence, when a foreign corporation conducts a regular business within the state, and at a permanent place of business, a service of process made at such place of business upon its agent, in connection with a matter growing out of said business, is good if the same service would be good against a domestic corporation.[68] Such statutes have always been regarded as primarily designed for the protection of the citizens of the state enacting the legislation, and who might acquire rights under contracts executed with them or for their benefit while they were such citizens,[69] and are not intended to create and perpetuate a local forum to which under guise of an assignment to some resident, nonresidents may come for the purpose of instituting litigation upon contracts issued to them at their homes against a corporation, there readily subject to service, which long before had attempted in good faith to withdraw from the jurisdiction thus hunted out.[70]

It has been held that, after a foreign corporation has appointed a resident agent for service and transacted business, personal jurisdiction may be gained by serving him though it has ceased to do business,[71] and though the cause of action was not of the character specified in its application for a permit,[72] but a power to accept service is not kept alive by mail transactions and mere adjustment after revocation and withdrawal from the state.[73] Revocation of an agency for service is not effectual unless the statute provides for it[74] and the mode prescribed is followed,[75] and especially not when it is by statute to continue until another is substituted,[76] or when there is no means of imparting by a public record any constructive notice of such revocation.[77]

S. 380), and whether or not such diligence was used is generally a question for the court (Id.).

Under the peculiar wording of the statute, which is that the service may be made at the voter's place of residence "given by the registry," it was held that the service might be made by leaving a copy under a brick on the ground on the lot which was formerly occupied by defendant's residence, the house having been destroyed by fire. Applegarth v. Carter [Md.] 62 A. 712. Where the statute provides that the defend-place of residence,[89] or last and legal place of residence,[90] or usual place of residence,[91] or by leaving a copy posted at the front door of the defendant's usual place of abode.[92] In some instances it is provided that service may be made by mail.[93] In such case the service is complete when the notice or process is deposited in the post office, properly addressed to the person upon whom the service is to be made,[94] and it is sometimes required that, where the defendant is out of the state at the time the service is made, by leaving a copy at his residence, additional notice shall be given.[95] Service of a notice by mail when allowable is completed by depositing in the post office the paper properly inclosed, sealed and addressed.[96] Substituted service is made on a domestic corporation by leaving a copy of the process at the defendant's place of business in the county in which the suit is brought.[97]

Statutes authorizing substantial service should not be extended beyond the plain import of their terms, nor to cases where the language of the return is ambiguous.[98]

(§ 4) C. The server, his qualifications, and protection.[99]—Before an officer can make authorized legal service, he must give bond as required by statute to qualify.[1] Process may be served by a constable.[2] Service may be made by a de facto officer,[3] but a recital in a default judgment of due service is not conclusive of the authority of the purported officer who made the return.[4] Service may be made by unofficial persons where the return is verified by affidavit,[5] and the fact that the server is the agent of the plaintiff is immaterial,[6] unless the statute makes such relation a disqualification.[7] Service by one other than an officer is not confined to any particular county,[8] but a false return for which a sheriff is liable is one that is ant may be served "at his place of residence," this does not mean that personal service shall be made there, but that the summons shall be left there. Carter v. Applegarth [Md.] 62 A. 710.

false in fact as distinguished from a correct return of the acts actually done by him, though in violation of the law.[9] An officer to whom a process is given for service is liable for any failure on his part to do his official duty in this regard.[10]

§ 5. Constructive service. Service by publication.[11]—It is competent for the legislature to provide for service by publication upon a domestic corporation which has failed to provide officers or agents upon whom other service may be had,[12] and a personal judgment may be based thereon.[13] Statutes providing for service by publication are intended as a substitute for personal service, and, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly observed.[14] Statutes authorizing constructive notice by publication in divorce cases should be strictly construed.[15]

When proper.[16]—Service by publication is authorized where the defendant is a nonresident and no personal judgment is sought,[17] or when the defendant is a nonresident and cannot, with due diligence on the part of the plaintiff, be served, or the plaintiff has sufficient excuse for not exercising such diligence, service may be made by publication.[18] Publication is also authorized where defendants or their residences are unknown.[19]

Procedure to authorize.[20]—The jurisdiction of the court to issue the order or publication against a nonresident depends upon the affidavit required by the statute as the ground of the order.[21] The affidavit for publication need not be joined in by all plaintiffs.[22] The affidavit or showing must set forth the facts making out a statutory occasion for publication, such as absence and nonresidence,[23] and diligence

Morrison v. Turnbaugh [Mo.] 91 S. W. 152. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 575, 582, relating to divorce actions, an affidavit of nonresidence after stating the fact of nonresidence need not further state that ordinary process of law could be served upon the defendant "in this state." on plaintiff's part,[24] but even where the statute requires the plaintiff to exercise due diligence, it must appear, in order to invalidate the service, that he failed to comply with the statute in this regard.[25] In the absence of proof to the contrary, an affidavit of nonresidence being made, the nonresidence is presumed to continue for a reasonable time.[26] Where the record does not disclose whether the affidavit was attached to the petition or not, the proceedings of the court in granting the order of publication will be presumed to have been regular.[27] A return of not found is not necessary in Missouri.[28] Delay between the return of the sheriff "not found" and the making of the order for publication will not invalidate the publication where it is supported by the proper affidavits.[29] If summons is to be filed, it must be done with the officer designated.[30]

How made.[31]—Failure to publish for the time required by the statute vitiates the service.[32] Service by publication is not complete until the completion of the time prescribed for the publication,[33] and where the summons must be served a certain time before the return day, a service by publication must likewise be completed within such time.[34] Service by publication is complete on the last day of the publication as required by law.[35] The publication must be made in some newspaper of

24. Service by publication is void where predicated upon an affidavit of nonresidence by the attorney for the complainant, stating that defendant is a nonresident and that affiant has made diligent inquiry to learn his place of residence and has been "enabled" to ascertain the same. Tobin v. Brooks, 113 Ill. App. 79. Under the New York statute the affidavit must show not only that the defendant is a nonresident, but that plaintiff has used due diligence to find him within the state, but has been and will be unable to obtain service in the state, or a sufficient reason why such diligence has not been exercised. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 438, 439. Compare the former provision of the statute, Code Proc. § 135, which required due diligence to find defendant without provision as to excuse for failure to exercise due diligence. Under the present statute, as under the old, the affidavit must allege the facts showing the diligence exercised or the excuse relied on. Kennedy v. Lamb, 182 N. Y. 228, 74 N. E. 834. But under the Washington statute which requires that the affiant shall state in the affidavit that the residence of the nonresident defendant is unknown to him, the plaintiff is not required to exercise due diligence to ascertain the residence of the defendant in order that copies of the summons and complaint may be mailed to him. 25. 29. Mills' Ann. St. § 41. Under this statute the return of the sheriff is not the basis of the order, although it is provided that the publication shall be allowed only after process has been issued and returned. The publication is based on the plaintiff's affidavit of the nonresidence of the defendant. Richardson v. Wortman [Colo.] 83 P. 381.

30. Code Civ. Proc. § 442, requiring the summons to be filed with the county clerk, is not complied with by leaving the order directing service by publication with the clerk of one of the 21 parts of the supreme court in the county of New York. Fink v. Wallach, 47 Misc. 247, 95 N. Y. S. 872.

35. Code Iowa, §§ 3535, 3536. And a published summons requiring defendant to appear at an earlier date constitutes no serv-general circulation[36] printed in the county wherein the action is brought.[37] Where the notice is sufficient to advise the parties in interest of the cause of action upon which the plaintiff seeks relief, it will be held sufficient.[38]

It is usually provided that where judgment has been entered upon published service, the defendant may, within a certain time, appear and move for a new trial.[39]

In Louisiana constructive service on nonresidents is made by appointment and citation of a curator ad hoc.[40] In some states a constructive service must be accompanied by the mailing of a copy of the published notice to defendant.[41]

Order of publication.[42]—The order should be based on the facts existing at the time of the affidavits and be made within a reasonable time.[43] Where there is any evidence tending to show compliance with the statute, even if inconclusive, the court has jurisdiction to make the order, and the exercise of such jurisdiction is not open to collateral attack after the entry of judgment;[44] but where there is no evidence whatever of compliance with the statute, the order of publication is void, the court not having been authorized to act, and may be impeached collaterally.[45] All reasonable presumptions will be indulged in favor of the order.[46] The order must be filed[47]

West v. Lehmer [La.] 38 So. 969.

Personal service in lieu of publication.[50]—Personal service on a nonresident outside of the state will not authorize a personal judgment.[51]

§ 6. Return and proof of service. Official return.[52]—The return of a sheriff to a writ is an official statement by him of the acts done by him under the writ, and in obedience to its directions, and in conformity with the requirements of law, and must show a compliance with such directions or a sufficient reason for noncompliance, either in whole or in part.[53] It is not the return or proof of service that gives the court jurisdiction, but the service itself;[54] and where the service is proper, defects in the return will not affect the jurisdiction of the court, if amendment showing the proper service is subsequently made in proper time,[55] but in the absence of a legal return of service, the court is without jurisdiction to render a default judgment.[56] The return of an officer should be strictly construed.[57] By "strict construction," as here used, is meant that the return cannot be aided by presumptions or intendments that the return must show on its face that every requisite of the statute has been complied with.[58] The return should receive a reasonable and natural interpretation. It must be fairly construed and effect be given to its plain intent and meaning.[59] Substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient,[60] but the return of substituted service is strictly construed.[61] Whether presumptions will be indulged in favor of a de-court failed to file an order of publication which was handed to him, the irregularity was curable by an order to file the papers nunc pro tunc. Id. Failure to strictly comply with Laws 1902, p. 1501, c. 580, § 34, in respect to the time for filing the order and moving papers, is fatal to the maintenance of the action and the jurisdiction of the court. 53. His statement or silence with reference to any fact which his official duties do not require him to make, or his opinion as to the legal effect of his acts, whether correct or erroneous, does not form any part of the return and will not affect the rights of any party to the action, and if incorrect or erroneous will not constitute a false return. Hooper v. McDade [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1116. Where return recited that writ was served "on the within-named defendant, the Armour Packing Company (now Armour & Co.)," held the words "now Armour & Co." would be disregarded as surplusage. Failure to state the place of the service is not fatal to the validity of the judgment entered thereon, especially where the record seems to indicate that the service was made within the jurisdiction of the court. 60. Under Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 2642, providing that the affidavit shall state that the person who claims to have served the process knew the defendants to be the same persons named "in the summons," an affidavit stating that affiant "duly served the summons," etc., "in the above entitled action on (naming the defendants)," etc., "and that he knew the persons so served to be the identical persons named as the defendants in the above action," was sufficient. Schmidt v. Hoffmann [Wis.] 105 N. W. 44.

61. King v. Davis, 137 F. 198. A return of substituted service, reciting that the marshal left a copy of the papers "at the last known place of residence of the defendant," held a substantial compliance with Laws 1902, p. 1517, c. 580, § 83, authorizing substituted service by leaving a copy of the papers "at the defendant's last place of residence." Dixon v. Carrucci, 97 N. Y. S. 380. Where the statute authorizes service by leaving a copy posted at the "front door," a return that it was left posted at the "door" is insufficient. King v. Davis, 137 F. 198. The return, moreover, must state that the fective return of substituted service is a question of general law upon which the Federal courts are not bound by the decisions of the state courts.[62] The return should not be susceptible of two rational constructions,[63] but in this connection surplusage will be disregarded.[64]

The written proof of the service need not be filed with the clerk before the rendition of the judgment, provided such proof be submitted to the court before the judgment is rendered.[65] Nor is it necessary for the affidavit of service to be entered on the back of the writ.[66] The omission in the title of the affidavit of service of words descriptive of the defendant, which are contained in the title of the summons, is immaterial.[67]

A return "not found" does not abate the action where the return does not show that the defendants are nonresidents.[68]

In most states proof of service must be made by the affidavit of the server, though the certificate of various officers is generally made sufficient.[69] The need of such proof may be waived by the written admission of the defendant.[70]

business office" does not show service at principal office of corporation.[74] In Florida a return of service on a foreign corporation, need not state that the corporation is doing business in the state, or that its president, upon whom the service was made, is a resident of the state, or that he was then in the state on the business of the corporation.[75]

Amendment of return.[76]—The purpose of an amendment is not to give the court jurisdiction, which must depend upon the service and not the return, but merely to perfect the evidence of the court's jurisdiction.[77] The question of amendment addresses itself to the discretion of the court, and amendments will be allowed in the furtherance of justice,[78] and the question being one of the power of the court, the Federal courts are not bound by the decisions of the state courts thereon.[79] The fact that the service and return were made by a person not an officer will not preclude an amendment.[80]

The court, in allowing an amendment of the return, may require notice to the defendant;[81] but where the judgment rendered on defective proof of service has been stricken from the records, the plaintiff may withdraw the papers from the files for the purpose of having an amendment of the proof of service made, without leave of court or notice to the defendant.[82] Amendment of return may be made at any time during the term,[83] or even after judgment.[84] The amendment when properly made relates back to the date of the service,[85] but will not render valid a default judgment entered upon a defective return.[86] An amendment of the return in an ejectment suit in a Federal court for the state of Virginia is binding on innocent purchasers from the defendant pendente lite.[87] Where the record shows that leave to amend was granted, it will be presumed, in the appellate court, that the amendment was made.[88] Where the original record fails to show service, and a supplemental or addi-

Impeachment or contradiction of return.[90]—The return is generally held to be conclusive upon the officer making it[91] and upon the parties to the suit or action,[92] and cannot be contradicted except for fraud or mistake,[93] or in a direct action against the sheriff for making a false return.[94] This strict rule of the common-law as to the conclusiveness of the return has been considerably relaxed in many of the states,[95] though in such states the officer's return is deemed prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein.[96] A court has no jurisdiction to compel an officer to change his return.[97] If the return is false, the injured party has a remedy against sheriff and surety.[98] An order setting aside a return valid on its face is a final appealable order.[99] Where the statute provides that a written admission of service shall be sufficient proof of service, such an admission is conclusive.[1] The authority of the purported officer who made the return may be impeached,[2] and where it appears that the person who made an unsworn return was not an officer in fact, the probative value of the return is destroyed.[3] So, also, where the process was not served by the officer, and a false return has been procured through the fraud of the plaintiff or by a conspiracy between him and the officer, the return is not conclusive.[4] Federal courts of equity will entertain a bill to vacate a judgment on the ground of a false return where the plaintiff participated in the fraud,[5] or where the service and return were made by an unofficial person,[6] but such a bill will not be entertained where the plaintiff was not connected with the fraud and the person making the service and return was an officer.[7] But in no case has a Federal law court the power, after the end of the term, to set aside its final judgment on the ground of a false and fraudulent, but apparently valid, return of service.[8]

Waiver of irregularities.[9]—Where a plea in abatement is filed for defects appearing upon the face of the papers, an answer to the merits filed at the same time is a general appearance and waives defects in the return.[10] But where a return of substituted service by leaving a copy with the defendant's wife is insufficient by reason of the failure of the return to show that the wife was a member of his family, the defect is not cured by the subsequent service of a notice to amend the declaration.[11]

Return on constructive service, and proof of service by publication.[12]—Proof of service by publication must in most states be made by the affidavit of the publisher, together with a printed copy of the summons as published,[13] and a statement that publication was for the full number of weeks.[14] Where the affidavit states that the paper is "printed and published" at a certain town in the county, and the evidence shows that the paper, though issued at the town named, is printed at another town in the county, the variance is immaterial.[15] Where it is provided that an affidavit of the publication must be filed within a certain time, an affidavit filed after the expiration of the time limit is not the only evidence of the publication where the record recitals show that all was done that was necessary to the validity of the judgment.[16]

§ 7. Defects, objections, and amendments. In general.[17]—Defects in the process must be distinguished from defects in the return.[18] Where the process is sufficient to put the defendants upon notice it will be held sufficient, whatever may be its informality.[19] Error in refusing to quash a summons as to one of several defendants is harmless as to the others where the others are duly served, appear, and claim to be the exclusive owners of the property which constitutes the subject-matter of the controversy.[20] Where an action is dismissed for want of service, the court should find the facts, which will be conclusive upon an appeal.[21]

Alterations. Amendments.[22]—As a general rule amendments are freely allowed at any stage of the action,[23] except that a defective publication of service cannot be amended nunc pro tunc,[24] and one who proceeds on a defective service is at his own cost.[25] The court may by amendment change the name of the defendant,[26] the capacity in which he is sued,[27] may supply a christian name,[28] and may remedy the failure of the indorsement to state the amount which the plaintiff will claim.[29] As to whether the summons may be amended as to the return day, there is some conflict. On one hand it has been held that a summons commencing an action cannot be amended as to the return day, there being no statute to authorize it,[30] while on the other hand it has been held that a mistake in the return day of the summons is curable by amendment, even after objection to the jurisdiction of the court on that very account.[31] The right to amend may be lost by laches.[32] An order permitting an amendment so as to change the action from one against defendants representatively, to one against them individually, should allow costs to defendants.[33] is apparent from an inspection of the record, should be taken advantage of by motion,[38] but where the objection is founded upon extrinsic facts, such facts must be pleaded in abatement;[39] but a plea in abatement to the action is not the proper method of making objection to sufficiency of the service on a corporation by service on its agent.[40] The proper method in such case is a motion to quash.[41] An objection to a variance between the summons and declaration must be raised by motion to dismiss or plea in abatement, and, not being so raised, is deemed to have been waived.[42] Objections to the service cannot be raised by demurrer.[43] Process will not be quashed on a rule supported by defensive matter.[44] Defendant's privilege from service of a summons should be asserted upon an application to get rid of the service rather than by any plea or defense in connection with the merits of the action,[45] and his remedy on the court's refusal to set aside a defective service is by appeal.[46] Insufficient service may in New Jersey be attacked in chancery by plea to the jurisdiction on special appearance,[47] but it is not a common practice in other jurisdictions.[48] A bill of review or rehearing is proper where there has been no legal service.[49] A defect as to the return day may be reached in a direct proceeding in the same action to reverse the judgment for error of the trial court in refusing to quash.[50] A judgment entered on a void service may be set aside on motion.[51] Such a motion is not addressed to the discretion of the court and must be sustained by clear and satisfactory evidence,[52] and a court will not set aside a decree on the ground that it is void for want of service, without notice to the parties to be affected and a chance to be heard.[53] A judgment without legal service may be enjoined,[54] and where a judgment is entered upon a void process, a direct action may be maintained to set it aside;[55] but a domestic judgment, regular on its face, cannot be collaterally attacked for want of process of service.[56] A foreign judgment, however, may be collaterally attacked on the ground that there was no service of process on the defendant,[57] and this does not violate the comity between the states or the provision of the Federal constitution requiring full faith and credit to be given to the judicial proceedings of sister states.[58]

Waiver of irregularities or lack of process.[59]—Process and service or defects therein are waived by appearance and answer to the merits,[60] or by entering appearance generally and demurring to the petition,[61] or by demurrer and answer.[62] Where the defendant in an attachment proceeding withdraws a motion to set aside the service, and asks for and obtains time to answer, this is a submission to the jurisdiction of the court.[63] Giving bond in replevin is such an appearance as waives service or defects in the process.[64] So, also, the giving of an appeal bond is a waiver of any question as to the jurisdiction of the appellate court, and such court will not consider the refusal of the lower court to quash the summons where the case is tried de novo on appeal,[65] but not so where the appellate court sits as a court of er-

55. Where the action is to set aside a judgment of a justice of the peace on the ground that he was not a justice de jure or de facto, the complaint must declare that the justice was not elected at the general election preceding and has not duly qualified. Kane v. Arneson Mercantile Co., 94 Minn. 451, 103 N. W. 218.

56. A plea to a writ of scire facias to revive a judgment, denying service in the original action, is a collateral attack on the original judgment and inadmissible. King v. Davis, 137 F. 198, Id., 137 F. 222. See 6 C. L. 247. Where, by statute, repugnant pleas may be filed, a plea in scire facias to revive a default judgment denying service as alleged in the return is not rendered improper because another plea is filed at the same time denying the authority of the person who made the service. See Code Va. 1887, § 3264 (Code 1904, p. 1718). King v. Davis, 137 F. 198.

Jordan, 25 App. D. C. 291. Service at a wrong place is waived by voluntary appearance. Stamey v. Barkley, 211 Pa. 313, 60 A. 991. Where a notice to answer indorsed on a bill in equity gives 15 instead of 30, and a motion to dismiss the bill signed by an attorney at law gives as reasons: First that the notice is defective, and second, that the bill sets forth no cause entitling plaintiff to relief, the motion thus signed will be considered a general appearance. Taylor v. McCafferty, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 122. See Appearance, 5 C. L. 248.

61. Election contest. Quartier v. Dowiat, 219 Ill. 326, 76 N. E. 371.

62. Defendant claimed that he was a nonresident and had been served only by publication. Ennis Brown Co. v. Hurst [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1056. A general appearance and demurrer to the petition in an election contest waives all objections to the sufficiency of the service of the summons, and the right to afterwards enter a special appearance to object to the jurisdiction of the court over defendant's person. ror.[66] Objection to the service is not waived by a special appearance to set the service aside,[67] nor by a general appearance in support of a motion to set aside a default judgment entered upon such service,[68] nor by filing a demurrer after protesting against the jurisdiction of the court for want of legal service,[69] nor by pleading to the merits after the overruling of a motion to quash to which exception has been taken and made a part of the record,[70] nor by pleading to the merits after filing a plea in abatement for want of service.[71] One may by agreement waive defects.[72]

§ 8. Privilege and exemptions from service.[73]—The following persons are exempt from service in civil suits: Officers of foreign corporations temporarily in the state,[74] foreign parties to suits who are in the state in attendance on court,[75] nonresidents brought into the state by any fraudulent artifice or device in order to obtain service in a civil suit,[76] witnesses from other states while in attendance on court.[77] The exemption of parties and witnesses from other states extends not only to the time during which they are actually in attendance on the court, but the time necessary for coming and going,[78] but the exemption of a witness from another state

67. Such an appearance does not preclude a motion to remove to the Federal court. Johnson v. Computing Scale Co., 139 F. 339; Dexter v. Lichliter, 24 App. D. C. 222. Where an unauthorized personal service is attempted to be had on a nonresident, while without the jurisdiction, the latter has the right to appear specially, and attacking such service and such appearance will not operate as a waiver of his rights. Id. In an action under D. C. Code § 1531, being an adaptation of the equitable remedy of interpleader, personal service being made upon a nonresident while without the jurisdiction, the filing of an affidavit, by defendant not entitled in the cause, alleging no defense to the action and asking for no relief, but containing proof only of his actual residence at the time of the attempted service upon him, has not the effect of a general appearance. Id. It is not necessary for the defendant in appearing in a court of record to quash a defective summons to cause the record to recite that his appearance is for that purpose only in order to avoid a waiver of the defect. In such case, whether the appearance is general or special is to be determined by the record as it stands at the time the motion is made. M. Fisher, Sons & Co. v. Crowley, 57 W. Va. 312, 50 S. E. 422. Where a person describing himself as the attorney of a fire insurance company, which is a party defendant, makes a full and elaborate affidavit of defense invoking every form of legal defense, except irregularity of service of summons, the company cannot afterwards allege that an appearance filed by such person was an appearance de bene esse for the purpose of having the service of the summons set aside. A defendant does not waive objection to the jurisdiction by answering, after his motion to quash the service and his plea in abatement to the jurisdiction have been overruled and he has been ordered to answer. Duke v. Duke [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 471. But see ante, § 6, Waiver of Irregularities.

72. Agreement, "We agree that the summons * * * was served * * * and defendant waives all irregularities in the same," held to waive any irregularity. Ammons v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 570, afg. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 937.

75. Martin v. Bacon [Ark.] 88 S. W. 863. Where the president of a foreign corporation is in the state in attendance on a trial, he is exempt from service as president until a reasonable time has elapsed in which to allow him to depart from the state. 77. Even a witness in his own behalf is exempt. Martin v. Bacon [Ark.] 88 S. W. 863. A party attending court in order to avoid a forfeiture of a bail bond is within the spirit of the rule exempting witnesses and parties from other states. Id.

is personal, and does not preclude service in a suit against him in a representative capacity.[79] In Kentucky a resident of one county attending court in another county in obedience to a subpoena or returning therefrom is exempt from service,[80] but a nonresident of the state brought into the state and a certain county under arrest for a crime is not exempt from service in a civil suit,[81] unless the arrest is a mere trick or subterfuge to get him in the county in order to obtain the service.[82]

§ 9. Abuse of process[83] is treated elsewhere.[84]

PROFANITY AND BLASPHEMY.[85]

Use of profane language in the presence of females does not constitute "disturbing the peace in a loud and boisterous manner or by offensive conduct," in the absence of an averment that the peace of the person hearing it was thereby disturbed.[86] On a prosecution for using profane language in the "presence" of a female, an instruction authorizing conviction if it was used in her "hearing" was sustained.[87] Where defendant, on a trial for using profane language, denies that he ever swore, proof of the use of profanity by him on other occasions is admissible.[88]

NOTE. Definition: The writ of prohibition is one which commands the person to whom it is directed not to do something which the court is informed he is about to do. It will not lie after the cause is ended. United States v. Hoffman, 4 Wall. [U. S.] 158, 18 Law. Ed. 354; State v. Burckhartt, 3 West. Rep. 806, 87 Mo. 533; Ex parte Gordon, 104 U. S. 516, 26 Law. Ed. 814. Prohibition does not lie to restrain an inferior tribunal, after its judgment has been given and fully executed. Haldeman v. Davis, 28 W. Va. 324. It cannot be assumed that any tribunal will act in a matter over which it has no jurisdiction, and until it has done some act to indicate its intention to do so, prohibition will not lie. Romberger v. Water Valley, 63 Miss. 218. It will not issue to restrain the execution of a judgment unless it clearly appears that the court is without jurisdiction. State v. Lapeyrollerie, 38 La. Ann. 264. Nor will it lie to restrain a superior court from proceeding in a matter alleged to be in excess of its jurisdiction, unless the attention of the superior court has bunal is proceeding in excess of the jurisdiction conferred.[91] The remedy is usually preventive rather than corrective,[92] and will not lie to correct anticipated errors in matters of which a court has jurisdiction;[93] but where an inferior court has acted in excess of its jurisdiction, but something remains to be done to give full effect to its judgment, the writ may be granted not only to prevent further illegal action but also to undo what has been done.[94]

first been called to the alleged excess of the jurisdiction. Baughman v. Calaveras Co. Super. Ct., 72 Cal. 572.—From note Walcott v. Wells [Nev.] 9 L. R. A. 59.

90. People v. Davy, 105 App. Div. 598, 94 N. Y. S. 1037. Prohibition is used to prevent a court from exercising a jurisdiction it does not possess. Tehan v. Brown [Mass.] 77 N. E. 313. In New York, writ of prohibition may issue out of supreme court to restrain a judge or party from further proceeding in the action or special proceeding complained of. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2091-2096. People v. Trial Term, Part 1 (Cr. Br.), of Supreme Ct. for New York County [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 732. Civ. Code, § 3423 prohibits an injunction to prevent a legislative act by a municipal corporation. Hence, prohibition lies to prevent a court of equity from restraining a board of supervisors from acting on an application for formation of a reclamation district. Glide v. Superior Court of Yolo County, 147 Cal. 21, 81 P. 225. Judge of circuit court has no jurisdiction to issue writ of prohibition against city council to prevent removal of police officers. Hence, supreme court of appeals will issue writ prohibiting circuit judge from proceeding further with a rule to show cause. Campbell v. Doolittle [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 260. Prohibition is the proper remedy to prevent a city police judge from taking jurisdiction of an offense committed in territory not legally annexed to the city. City of Bardstown v. Hurst [Ky.] 89 S. W. 147. Although disqualification of the judge of a superior court deprives him of authority to render judgment in any action in that court, it does not take from the court jurisdiction in a cause properly brought in that county. Dakan v. Superior Ct. of Santa Cruz County [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1129.

91. People v. Davy, 105 App. Div. 598, 94 N. Y. S. 1037. The writ should not issue unless it clearly appears that the inferior court is about to exceed its jurisdiction. United States v. Scott, 35 App. D. C. 88. Prohibition is granted only when the proceedings of the inferior tribunal are without or in excess of its jurisdiction. Dakan v. Superior Ct. of Santa Cruz County [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1129. Rev. St., § 4929 does not authorize suspension of an attorney on mere production of the record of his conviction pending his appeal, with stay of execution, and prohibition will issue when the circuit court indicates an intention to take such action. State v. Sale, 188 Mo. 493, 87 S. W. 967. Prohibition lies to prevent the circuit and county court judges from proceeding further in an injunction proceeding to restrain a county officer from refusing to allow inspection of his books, since those courts may punish as for contempt disobedience of lawful orders they may make, and this is an adequate remedy. McWilliams v. Burnes [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 735.

92. People v. District Ct. of Denver, 33 Colo. 293, 80 P. 908.

93. Prohibition cannot be used to correct anticipated errors, but will issue only when the inferior tribunal is proceeding or is about to proceed in excess of its jurisdiction. Klnard v. Police Court of City of Oakland [Cal. App.] 83 P. 175. Prohibition will not issue to an inferior tribunal unless it is acting or is about to act in excess of its jurisdiction. Code Civ. Proc. § 1102. Raine v. Lawlor [Cal. App.] 82 P. 688. Where allegations for injunction conferred jurisdiction on court, prohibition would not lie to prevent continuance of the injunction. Sanders v. Emmer [La.] 39 So. 631. Though the granting of an appeal would be illogical and inconsistent with previous rulings, prohibition would not lie to prevent it. Xavier Realty v. Louisiana R. & Nav. Co., 114 La. 484, 38 So. 427. Where the subject matter is within the jurisdiction of the circuit court, prohibition will not issue to prevent its taking jurisdiction on the ground that it may erroneously decide that the petition is sufficient. The sufficiency of the pleading is for the circuit court. State v. Gates, 190 Mo. 540, 89 S. W. 881. Prohibition will not be allowed to guard against a future apprehended error of an inferior court against which, if the error should be committed, there would be an adequate remedy by appeal. People v. Smith [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 925. It will not lie, where the court has jurisdiction, to prevent an erroneous exercise of its jurisdiction. State v. District Ct. of Second Judicial Dist., 32 Mont. 394, 80 P. 673. Where a motion is made to strike an answer from the files under Code Civ. Proc. § 3306, and the court is considering that motion, of which it has jurisdiction, prohibition will not lie to restrain it from exercising such jurisdiction on the ground that § 3306 is invalid. Id. An allegation that an election contestant did not comply with Rev. St. 1899, §§ 7180, 7182, requiring a statement of election expenses to be filed, is not ground for a writ prohibiting the circuit court from proceeding with an election contest, since the effect of failure to comply with such law, and the question whether there was a noncompliance is for the circuit court. State v. Taylor [Mo.] 91 S. W. 917. The supreme court will not prohibit the circuit court from proceeding in an election contest, though the notice of the contest appears to the higher court to be defective where the defects are remediable, since the circuit court has jurisdiction of such contests by Const. art. 8, § 9, and Rev. St. 1899, § 7029. State v. Hough [Mo.] 91 S. W. 905. On application to prohibit the circuit court

The writ does not issue as a matter of right, but only in the sound discretion of the court[95] in cases of supreme necessity, where the grievance cannot be redressed by ordinary proceedings at law or in equity, or by appeal.[96] Prohibition is therefore inappropriate where there is an adequate remedy by appeal,[97] writ of error, or cerfrom ordering the ballot boxes opened, the supreme court will not, therefore, decide whether the preliminary proof has been sufficient to warrant such order. Id.

Note: A writ of prohibition is never to be issued unless it clearly appears that the inferior court is about to exceed its jurisdiction. It cannot be made to serve the purpose of a writ of error or certiorari to correct mistakes of that court in deciding any question of law or fact within its jurisdiction. Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 167, 29 Law. Ed. 601; Ex parte Gordon, 104 U. S. 515, 26 Law. Ed. 814; Ex parte Detroit River Ferry Co., 104 U. S. 519, 26 Law. Ed. 815; Ex parte Hagar, 104 U. S. 520, 26 Law. 96. People v. Trial Term Part 1, (Cr. Br.) of Supreme Court of New York County [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 732.

97. While a writ of prohibition will lie to an inferior court where it is acting manifestly beyond its jurisdiction, such writ will issue only when there is no other remedy. Alexander v. Crollott, 26 S. Ct. 161. Where defendant in forcible entry and detainer claimed to own the property and alleged lack of jurisdiction of the justice, and the decision of the justice was against him, his remedy was an appeal to the district court under New Mexico Code, § 3358, and not prohibition. Id. The objection that there is another action pending between the same parties for the same cause must be raised by demurrer or answer, from a ruling upon which an appeal may be taken, hence prohibition does not lie to prevent a judge from taking jurisdiction for that reason. Kastor v. Elliott [Ark.] 91 S. W. 8. Prohibition to police court to restrain prosecution for violation of alleged invalid ordinance denied, where petitioner had been convicted only once and had the right to appeal. United States v. Scott, 25 App. D. C. 88. Where there has been a hearing and submission of the cause, and the judge has directed counsel for plaintiff to draw findings and the form of an interlocutory decree, prohibition will not lie, since an appeal from such decree will afford an adequate remedy. Carr v. Superior Court of Monterey County, 147 Cal. 227, 81 P. 515. Prohibition will not issue upon application by an heir to prohibit a superior court from ordering payment of an inheritance tax by the estate, since such an order is appealable, and an appeal would afford an adequate remedy. Cross v. Superior Court of San Francisco [Cal. App.] 83 P. 815. Prohibition does not lie to prevent a court from exercising its jurisdiction, in a prosecution of a misdemeanor, on the ground that a dismissal of the same charge barred the prosecution, since the question whether or not the prosecution is barred, within Pen. Code, §§ 1385, 1387, is within the jurisdiction of the court, and defendant has an adequate remedy by appeal for error. Kinard v. Police Court of City of Oakland [Cal. App.] 83 P. 175. On application for prohibition against a special circuit judge the propriety of his order in appointing the receiver or directing him to take charge of the property cannot be inquired into. The remedy is by appeal. Dupoyster v. Clarke [Ky.] 90 S. W. 1. On its appearing that there is an adequate remedy by appeal, the writ of prohibition will be recalled. Barbier v. Nagel [La.] 39 So. 447. Where a court has jurisdiction to render a judgment from which an appeal lies, prohibition will not ordinarily issue to restrain execution of the judgment. Martel v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate [La.] 39 So. 705. Where a default has been entered against a garnishee defendant, and an interlocutory judgment entered against him, and a reference made to determine the amount of the judgment, the defendant's motion to quash service having been previously denied, prohibition does not lie to restrain further proceedings. Gorman v. Calhoun Circuit Judge [Mich.] 103 N. W. 567. The objection that service was had on defendant in an action before a justice, while subpoenaed as a witness in another court, cannot be raised by prohibition. Defendant should attack the service in justice court, and if error was made, appeal. People v. Smith [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 925. Denial of a motion to dismiss an indictment on the ground that defendant had been compelled to testify against himself before the grand jury is appealable in New York (Code Cr. Proc. §§ 485, 517, 519, subd. 3). Hence prohibition does not lie to restrain proceeding with a case. People v. Trial Term Part 1 (Cr. Br.) of Supreme Ct. of New York County [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 732; People v. Davy, 105 App. Div. 598, 94 N. Y. S. 1037. If an order vacating a judgment affects a party's substantial rights, it is appealable, hence prohibition would not in such case lie. State v. Tallman, 38 Wash. 132, 80 P. 272. An appeal from an order discharging a writ of garnishment is an adequate remedy, since a bond pending the appeal will preserve the fruits of the garnishment, hence prohibition will not lie to restrain such discharge. State v. Superior Ct. of King County [Wash.] 83 P. 14. A writ of prohibition cannot be made a process for correction of errors and take the place of an appeal or writ of error. City of Grafton v. Holt [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 21. An order made by a disqualified judge is not void but voidable. Hence, appeal, not prohibition, is the proper remedy in such case. Id.

tiorari.[98] It is the rule in Washington that the adequacy of the remedy by appeal, or in the ordinary course of law, is the test to be applied in applications for prohibition, and not the mere question of jurisdiction or lack of jurisdiction,[99] and that the adequacy of the remedy by appeal does not depend upon the mere question of delay or expense.[1] Elsewhere it is held that the fact that the greater part of the expenses of a proceeding could not be recovered as legal costs may be sufficient to render the remedy of appeal inadequate.[2] Where two courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction are proceeding in suits for the same relief, and such courts have made conflicting orders, prohibition lies to settle the conflict of jurisdiction and vacate improper orders,[3] since the remedy by appeal would not in such case be adequate.[4]

The constitutionality of a statute under which proceedings have been instituted will be determined upon an application for prohibition if the remedy by appeal from a judgment in such proceedings would not be adequate.[5]

Prohibition will not issue where the acts of the parties have rendered further action by the court unnecessary,[6] or where the threatened action will not affect the petitioner's substantial rights.[7]

In some states prohibition will issue only to judicial tribunals,[8] and will not go to control nonjudicial or ministerial acts,[9] even though discretionary[10] or performed by judges.[11]

Appeal held not adequate remedy: Remedy by appeal would not be adequate to correct an erroneous injunction granted to prevent consideration by supervisors of an application for formation of a reclamation district. Glide v. Superior Ct. of Yolo County, 147 Cal. 21, 81 P. 225.

98. Prohibition cannot be made to serve the purpose of a writ of error, or certiorari, to correct mistakes of law and fact by a court acting within its jurisdiction. United States v. Scott, 25 App. D. C. 88.

99. Denial of change of venue on ground of nonresidence is not a reason for prohibition. State v. Superior Ct. of Spokane County [Wash.] 82 P. 877.

1. There must be something in the nature of the action or proceeding rendering appeal an inadequate remedy. State v. Superior Ct. of Spokane County [Wash.] 82 P. 877. Appeal from final judgment is adequate remedy for error in denying change of venue on ground of nonresidence. Id.

3. Wells v. Montcalm Circuit Judge [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 301, 104 N. W. 318. Where wife commenced suit for divorce and custody of child, and process had been placed in an officer's hands, but had not been served, another circuit court had no right to entertain a suit by the husband for similar relief; hence, prohibition should issue to restrain the latter court from proceeding and to vacate its orders. Id.

5. Bell v. First Judicial Dist. Court [Nev.] 81 P. 875. Comp. Laws, §§ 1642-1645, provide that upon complaint by a private complainant for malfeasance of officers the matter will be summarily heard, and that if an order of removal is made, the officer shall not hold office pending an appeal therefrom. Held an appeal would not be an adequate remedy, and the constitutionality of the law may be determined on application for prohibition. Id.

6. Where only issues presented on application to supreme court for prohibition have become abstract questions, or only such as are within appellate jurisdiction of court of appeals, supreme court will not act. Albert Mackie Grocery Co v. Pratt, 114 La. 341, 38 So. 250.

7. If order vacating a judgment does not affect a party's substantial rights, he has no standing to demand prohibition. State v. Tallman, 38 Wash. 132, 80 P. 272.

8. The writ runs to courts, not to individuals, and will not issue against civil sheriff. Albert Mackie Grocery Co. v. Pratt, 114 La. 341. 38 So. 250. Prohibition will not issue to prevent a member of a special tribunal, created under Code 1899, c. 6, § 15, to hear election contests, from sitting and acting with such body, since it is a subordinate legislative, not a judicial tribunal. McWhorter v. Dorr, 57 W. Va. 608, 50 S. E. 838.

9. In West Virginia prohibition can go only against judicial action, or quasi judicial action. Campbell v. Doolittle [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 260. Prohibition does not lie to prevent a county court from granting a liquor license, even where the county court acts beyond its jurisdiction, since the act is not judicial but administrative in its nature. Virginia-Pocahontas Coal Co. v. McDowell County Ct. [W. Va.] 51 S. E. 1.

10. Removal of police officer by city council is nonjudicial action not controllable by prohibition. Campbell v. Doolittle [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 260.

11. Allowance of claim for construction of bridge by commissioners' court is a ministerial act. Goodwin v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 122.

Prohibition does not lie to try a right to public office.[12]

In Idaho the writ will not issue against city authorities acting within the scope of authority conferred on them by statute.[13] In South Carolina prohibition is not the proper remedy for relief from an illegal ordinance, where lack of jurisdiction and power to pass ordinances relating to the general subject is not claimed.[14]

§ 2. Practice and procedure.[15]—An application for prohibition, on the ground that a motion for change of venue because of disqualification of the judge has been made, which the judge refuses to hear, must present facts which will establish the disqualification of the judge.[16] In Montana an order of the district court sustaining a motion to quash an alternative writ of prohibition is not appealable.[17]

Jurisdiction to grant the writ may be expressly conferred by statute.[18] Prohibition will not lie to give the appellate court jurisdiction to try an issue which it would not have jurisdiction to try on appeal.[19] The Federal supreme court cannot grant prohibition in cases over which it has neither original nor appellate jurisdiction.[20] In California, when a case is such that an appeal from the judgment of the lower court would properly be taken to the district court of appeal, a petition to prohibit the proceeding should be addressed to that court and not the supreme court.[21] The court of civil appeals of Texas has no power to issue a writ of prohibition to an inferior court where the writ is not sought in aid of its appellate jurisdiction.[22] In West Virginia a judge of the supreme court of appeals may, in vacation, issue a rule to show cause why the writ of prohibition should not issue.[23]

PROPERTY.[24]

Definition and nature.[25]—In the general sense[26] "property" has recently been held to include dogs,[27] the possessory right of the locator of a mining claim on public lands,[28] a riparian right apart from the intrinsic worth of the underlying land.[29] Liquor tax certificates are not property in a full sense.[30] Letters patent have no locality as property but that of the person of the owner.[31]

Possession.—In the absence of actual possession it follows the legal title.[32]

12. Plain and adequate remedy provided by Code 1896, p. 966, c. 94, § 3420. Goodwin v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 122.

There cannot be two conflicting constructive possessions.[33] A possessor's rights are superior to a stranger's.[34] A bare possessor has a right superior to trespassers or strangers,[35] but by contract with one respecting the property he may attorn his possession.[36]

Realty or personalty.[37]—Applying the ordinary tests, growing strawberry plants,[38] crude turpentine run into boxes which are part of the tree,[39] and natural gas drawn from the earth in pipes[40] are personalty, while trees sold but not yet severed are real estate,[41] as are all fixtures.[42] A meteorite is real property until severed from its place,[43] and severance must be proved,[44] which is not done by a mere tradition that Indians used it in tribal and religious rites, to which end they supposedly had dug it from the ground and set it up.

Formulae, processes, literary and like mental productions.[45]—Literary property becomes free by publication.[46] Hence a printer, who being entrusted with plates of a book struck off copies and sold them, is not liable except he violated a copyright[47] or his contract,[48] but at most is guilty of conversion,[49] if the title to the plates having been made by him had passed to the employer.[50] If the printer's act was a mere unauthorized use by a bailee, he would be liable for the value of the use of the property with any damage to it,[51] or, if it was a conversion, then for the value of the property.[52] But in neither case is he liable for the value of the books sold.[53] The title of the books is not in such case in the employer, there being no trusteeship,[54] and in the absence of either that or copyright an injunction against sale by the printer will not issue, or an accounting be allowed.[55] The purchaser with knowledge of a secret process, from one who obtained it by inducing a violation of confidence re-

Note: Both the main facts in the case and the theory of severance by the Indians, brought forward by the defendant, are unusual and peculiar. Evidence was introduced that the meteorite, which lay in a saucer like depression on top of an eminence, had been the object of worship by the Indians as a "Tomanowas," and that the Indians in time of war laved their faces and dipped their bows and arrows in the water accumulated in the hollows or "potholes" in its surface. As the court found this evidence insufficient to infer a severance by the Indians, however, the defendant's claim as next finder was unsuccessful. As to the main proposition, that a meteorite or aerolite is realty, although not buried in the earth, the court is supported by reason and authority and follows Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Iowa, 71, 52 N. W. 1124, 41 Am. St. Rep. 481, 17 L. R. A. 788. Although brought to the earth by some planet through natural causes, the mass is one of nature's deposits and presumptively it was primarily a part of the soil or the realty upon which it was discovered. "Minerals lying beneath the surface or on the surface unworked are real estate." Park Coal Co. v. O'Donnell [Pa.] 7 Leg. Gaz. 149.—From 4 Mich. L. R. 77.

The classification of meteorites or aerolites is new to American law. Only one earlier case on the point has been found and this held the meteorite was real property. Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Iowa, 71. It is said to have been so considered under civil law rules, 20 Alb. L. J. 299. The manner of attachment to the soil is certainly somewhat analogous to the growth of land by accretion in that both are the result of natural agencies, and therefore should go to the owner of the fee. 2 Bl. Com. 262. The result might well be the same if they are classed as chattels. They would then be analogous either to wild animals, and so normally belong to the owner of the fee (5 Columbia L. R. 241), or perhaps to objects washed up on the foreshore, which are held to belong to the owner of the foreshore. Barker v. Bates, 13 Pick. [Mass.] 255.—From 5 Columbia L. R. 551.

posed in a servant, will not be protected,[56] and an agreement to keep secret the knowledge so purchased is also bad.[57] A party to such a transaction, who afterward obtains a license from the lawful owner, does not hold it in trust for the other fraudulent party.[58] One employed by a contract not specific as to the kind of service to be rendered will not be enjoined from engaging with a different employer, even though he is in possession of trade secrets,[59] but a competing employer scheming to acquire the secret may be restrained from employing him.[60] A royalty contract to transfer formulae and permit the discoverer's name to be exclusively used as a trade mark is not a mere license but a grant,[61] and the same can be forfeited for nonpayment of royalties only when the grant so provides.[62] Royalties on "suggested" preparations may, by the terms of the contract, include some, the process of which the suggester did not originate,[63] and as in other contracts the parties will be bound by the construction they adopt.[64] Chemical tests by reagents may be employed to prove the similarity of a secret process to that acquired by the user under a royalty contract,[65] and will overcome mere statements by the manufacturer that he uses a different process.[66]

Creation and transfer.[67]—Transfer is usually accomplished by sale,[68] gift,[69] inheritance,[70] or will.[71]

Loss and abandonment.[72]—The title to property cannot be lost by abandonment if no other takes possession.[73] A mere disclaimer does not divest title to personalty.[74] Lost property belongs to the finder as against all but the true owner.[75]

Note: Where trade secrets are likely to be devulged there are three ways in which the injured party may protect himself by injunction; first by restraining the employe from making known, and any future employer from using, the secrets in question. Peabody v. Norfolk, 98 Mass. 452, 96 Am. Dec. 664; Eastman Co. v. Reidenbach, 20 N. Y. S. 110; Fralich v. Despar, 165 Pa. 24, 30 A. 521; O. & W. Thum Co. v. Floczynski, 114 Mich. 149, 68 Am. This method, though employed in the principal case, does not appear to have been often made uss of by the courts; third, if the employe's contract provides for the exercise of peculiar skill, and in it he expressly stipulates not to work for another, he may be restrained from entering the employ of such other. Harrison v. Glucose Sugar Refining Co., 116 F. 304, 58 L. R. A. 915; Duff v. Russell, 14 N. Y. S. 134. To the contrary are Sanquirico v. Benedetti, 1 Barb. [N. Y.] 315; Delavan v. R. 16 Eq. 189; Webster v. Dillon, 3 Jur. [N. S.] 432; see, also, High on Injunctions, 11, 902. The principal case seems very strict, also, in requiring that it must appear affirmatively upon the face of the contract that the services to be performed require peculiar skill. This point was not so strongly insisted upon in Harrison v. Glucose Sugar Refining Co., 116 F. 304, 58 L. R. A. 915.—4 Mich. L. R. 403.

od of entering into a contract is prescribed by charter or statute, the doctrine of implied contract or estoppel does not apply,[81] but where not so restricted, a contract may be implied.[82] An implied contract arises where an officer with authority appropriates private property for public use,[83] or adopts the device of an inventor who offers its use for a reasonable royalty;[84] but no implied contract arises out of unlawful acts of public officers,[85] or from the adoption of the invention of an employe who leads the officers to believe that no royalty is expected,[86] nor can an implied contract be thrust upon the government against its will.[87] There is no implied contract on the part of the public to pay laborers employed by a contractor of public work.[88]

The commissioner of street improvements imposed with the duty of laying out an entrance to a boulevard by Laws 1896, p. 76, c. 57, § 1, amended by Laws 1897, p. 925, c. 679, is not authorized to employ an engineer to make plans for such approach. Hildreth v. New York, 97 N. Y. S. 582. A depot quartermaster has authority to sell unnecessary supplies when directed to do so. Houser's Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 508. A contract entered into by the city of Chicago cannot be altered by the commissioner of public works. City of Chicago v. Duffy, 117 Ill. App. 261. A supplemental contract substantially modifying the provisions of one let cannot be entered into by the mayor or other city officials of Chicago. Id.

90. Authority in a highway commissioner to lay out an approach and make necessary plans is not authority to take any action or make any contracts relative to the construction of the approach. Hildreth v. New York, 97 N. Y. S. 582. A committee authorized to investigate and report the best manner of raising funds for the erection of a court public as is conferred upon them by law, and one contracting with them is bound to know the scope of their authority.[91] Delegated power,[92] or power conferred to enter into a specific contract,[93] is exhausted by a single exercise thereof.

A department head,[94] or a municipal corporation, may ratify the unauthorized contracts of its agents[95] if it would have had authority to make the contract in the first instance.[96] Ratification may be implied from formal acceptance of the work and assertion in judicial proceedings of claims founded upon it.[97] A contract in violation of a mandatory statute can be ratified only by an observance of conditions essential to a valid contract in the first instance,[98] and, under a rule that a contract cannot be entered into except by ordinance, one entered into in violation of the rule can be ratified only by ordinance.[99] A curative act is not void because of erroneous recitals in its preamble.[1] When an unauthorized contract is ratified, it becomes as binding as if originally authorized,[2] but an attempted ineffectual ratification gives it no force.[3] house, and to report with plans and specifications, has not authority to decide to build a court house nor to employ architects to draft "working plans and specifications" but only preliminary plans for the information of the board. Kinney v. Manitowoc County [C. C. A.] 135 F. 491. Authority in a committee to procure plans and specifications for a court house at a cost not exceeding $100,000 is not authority to contract with architects for plans of a building to cost such sum exclusive of heating and plumbing. Id. Authority in a committee to prepare and submit plans for a public building by a certain date is not authority to extend the time to architects preparing the plans. Id.

91. Paul v. Seattle [Wash.] 82 P. 601. Since persons dealing with municipalities are conclusively presumed to have notice of the limitations of their powers, there can be no recovery from a city on a contract made without authority, even though officials have represented that the city had power to contract. Citizens' Bank v. Spencer, 126 Iowa, 101, 101 N. W. 643. A contractor is not entitled to presume that the engineer of a drainage commission has authority to consent to the substitution of cheaper materials than the contract calls for. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co., 136 F. 780.

92. Power of insane asylum trustees under authority delegated by the legislature to contract with railroad companies with reference to a track across the asylum lands is functus officio when once exercised, and contract cannot be afterward modified. State v. Toledo & O. Cent. R. Co., 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 234.

93. Comp. Laws, § 2908, providing that a city council may contract from year to year or for a period of 10 years for lights, is the full measure of power in this behalf, and when one contract for 10 years has been entered into no other contract can be made during its existence for the same period. Village of Morrice v. Sutton [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 19, 103 N. W. 188.

97. Tarentum Borough v. Moorhead, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 273.

98. A contract by a city in violation of a mandatory provision of its charter is void. City of Plattsmouth v. Murphy [Neb.] 105 N. W. 293. Where after making a contract it was ascertained that statutory conditions precedent had not been complied with, whereupon the necessary conditions were fulfilled, an alteration of the contract so as to make it refer to the latter proceedings constitutes the making of a new contract and not an attempted ratification of the original one. City of Houston v. Potter [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 389.

1. That Acts 25th Gen. Assem., p. 167, c. 179, legalizing a contract for a street improvement, erroneously recited in the preamble that a portion of the work had been done does not render the act void. McCain v. Des Moines [Iowa] 103 N. W. 979.

2. Where trustees of a town library entered into unauthorized contracts but with knowledge thereof, the town accepted their report. Nelson v. Georgetown [Mass.] 76 N. E. 606. That the appointment of a committee to make a contract was invalid is immaterial where the contract was ratified by the council which might have made it in the first instance. Under a statute vesting in the mayor and board of aldermen the duty of carrying into effect a vote of the city council, a formal vote by them adopting a contract made by a special committee ratifies it, though the committee was illegally appointed. Hett v. Portsmouth [N. H.] 61 A. 596.

3. A county cannot be estopped from asserting the invalidity of a contract by an attempted but ineffectual ratification. Baldwin v. Travis County [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 313, 88 S. W. 480.

It is within the power of a municipal corporation to provide a scale of wages and hours for laborers on work done by contract for the city.[4]

§ 2. How initiated.[5]—Some form of offer is necessary.[6] A resolution to propose a contract should be followed by official communication of it to be a good offer.[7] Statutory requirements as to advertising for bids must be complied with[8] if the contract is one required to be made under competitive bids.[9] Substantial compliance is sufficient.[10] Failure to advertise for bids may be cured by law.[11] If so required the specifications in the published notice must be so framed as to secure fair competition on equal terms to all bidders.[12] A reference to where such specifications may be found is sufficient.[13] The materials to be used may be specified,[14] but indefiniteness as to materials to be used which prevents actual competition in bidding invalidates the contract.[15] Bids must respond to the terms of the published notice.[16] The contracting board should not allow additional time for the perfecting of a bid in insufficient terms,[17] and a sealed bid should not be permitted to be changed in any material respect after it has been opened.[18] It may be prescribed by statute that failure of a board to report within a reasonable time is to be construed as favorable action.[19]

9. The purchase of stationery for the use of county officers need not be made under competitive bids under Rev. Codes 1895, § 1906, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 69, c. 59. Knight v. Cass County Com'rs [N. D.] 103 N. W. 940.

10. Substantial compliance with statutory requirements respecting advertisement for bids, and putting the public on notice of the extent and character of the work, and terms of the contract, is all that is necessary. Anderson v. Newton, 123 Ga. 512, 51 S. E. 508.

11. Failure to advertise a grading contract as required by act May 22, 1895 (P. L. 105), is cured by act April 18, 1899 (P. L. 57). In re Marshall Avenue [Pa.] 62 A. 1085.

12. Where municipal authorities can only let contracts for public work to the lowest bidder after advertising for bids, the specifications must be so framed as to secure fair competition on equal terms to all bidders, and any contract entered into with the best bidder containing provisions beneficial to him which were not included in the specifications is void. Patterson v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 566. Under Greater New York Charter the plans and specifications of a public work exceeding $1,000 in cost must be sufficiently definite to require competition on every material item, and must state as definitely as practicable the quantity of work required. Gage v. New York, 110 App. Div. 403, 97 N. Y. S. 157.

13. Where a notice to bidders refers to specifications stating when the work is to be done, the kind of material to be used, when the payments are to be made, and when proposals are to be acted upon, it is not necessary to otherwise state such facts. Owens v. Marion, 127 Iowa, 469, 103 N. W. 381.

15. Where specifications stated that "high carbon steel or nickel steel" was to be used and there was a difference in the price and the amount of the materials required, the contract was held void under Greater New York charter. Gage v. New York, 110 App. Div. 403, 97 N. Y. S. 157.

16. A bid which proposes to "construct, excavate and complete by working sections" at a fixed price per cubic yard of earth responds to a notice requiring bids to be made "by each working section, since the proposal means at the same price per yard for each working section or for the whole work. Gutschow v. Washington County [Neb.] 104 N. W. 602.

17. Under Code § 441, relative to the selection of an official newspaper, where on a contest one of the publishers failed to deposit a statement containing the names of subscribers as required by law, but merely filed an affidavit as to his total subscription list, the board has no authority to adjourn to permit the filing of such list. Sturges v. Vail, 127 Iowa, 705, 104 N. W. 366.

An unsuccessful bidder may enjoin the entering into a contract with a bidder who was allowed to materially change his bid after the bids were opened. Mohr v. Chicago, 114 Ill. App. 283.

§ 3. How closed.[20]—Acceptance is necessary, as in all contracts.[21] A resolution to propose a water contract with a sister city, and a resolution by the latter to accept, do not make a contract, unless the first resolution was transmitted,[22] and especially not if they vary.[23] If the making of a contract is an administrative act, it may be accomplished by order.[24] A contract authorized by a two-thirds vote of the council after veto by the mayor is valid when the council has such power.[25] Where an advisory board approves a bid it is the duty of the municipal officers to execute a contract with the bidder.[26] An acceptance of a bid need not be made according to parliamentary forms[27] but must be unqualified.[28] Premature acceptance may be cured by resolution after judgment confirming the validity of the contract.[29] An acceptance of a bid creates a contract,[30] and the bidder's rights are not affected by the conditional acceptance of another bid pending the determination of the validity of the contract.[31] Under the rule that all bids may be rejected and new bids adver-

22, 23. Resolution to get new and pure supply was met by resolution to contract for supply from existing reservoirs and water works. Jersey City v. Harrison [N. J. Law] 62 A. 765.

Note: The contention on the part of the plaintiffs was that the resolution of the town council was a proposition for a contract, and that the paper executed by the city and tendered for execution to the town made up a contract in writing. There is good authority for this position where the ordinance or resolution purports to be a direct offer to the other party or an acceptance of the offer of another previously made, the written record of the ordinance signed by the clerk and a written acceptance signed by the other party being regarded sufficient written memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds. People v. Board of Sup'rs, 27 Cal. 655; Argus Co. v. Albany, 55 N. Y. 495; Wade v. Newbern, 77 N. C. 460. The defence in the principal case is that the ordinance was not intended to be a contract, an offer, or an acceptance, but merely an authorization of certain officers to make a contract, and that it was not communicated to the plaintiff. This seems a good defence. A municipal corporation may make contracts within its ordinary corporate power in the same manner as individuals and other corporations, except where the statutes provide otherwise. Montgomery Co. v. Barber, 45 Ala. 237; City of Logansport v. Dykeman, 116 Ind. 15; City of Indianola v. Jones, 29 Iowa, 282. In the case of contracts between private individuals there can be no binding acceptance until the terms of the offer are communicated to the other party, and any written memorandum of the offer cannot be used by the other party as evidence if it were merely given to the agent of the first party as a direction for making the contract. Steel v. Fife, 48 Iowa, 99. Merely authorizing the town authorities to contract on certain terms with another corporate body could not be treated as an offer and accepted so as to form a binding contract until communicated by the proper authorities. But see Argus Co. v. Albany, 55 N. Y. 495.—See 4 Mich. L. R. 560.

24. Under the Los Angeles Charter the making of a contract for city advertising is an administrative act, and not the exercise of a legislative power, and may be performed by order instead of ordinance. Earl v. Bowen, 146 Cal. 754, 81 P. 133.

26. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 80851, it is the duty of the township trustee to sign a contract for the erection of a school house with the bidder whose bid is approved by the advisory board. Lincoln School Tp. v. Union Trust Co. [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 272. Such statute does not contemplate that the trustee should hold supervisory power over the board which is created as a check upon him. 27. County commissioners ought to keep minutes of their meetings at which they award contracts to improve roads, but a bid may be accepted by an agreement not arrived at through parliamentary forms. Le Moyne v. Washington County [Pa.] 62 A. 516.

28. A telegram to a bidder "you are low bidder, come on morning train" is not an acceptance under the rule that a bid is not binding until notice of acceptance to the bidder. Cedar Rapids Lumber Co. v. Fisher [Iowa] 105 N. W. 595. Action of a board in awarding a contract to the lowest bidder and instructing the secretary to telegraph him to that effect, whereupon a telegram "you are low bidder, come on morning train" was sent, does not show a completed contract. 30. Where after the acceptance of a bid a question as to the validity of the contract arose, the fact that a better bid was made did not authorize the town to ignore its acceptance, neither bid being in response to advertisement. Diefenderfer v. State, 13 Wyo. 387, 80 P. 667.

31. Where after the acceptance of a bid the validity of the contract was questioned, the fact that another bid was accepted conditionally on a result of the determination of the question does not affect the first bidder's rights. Diefenderfer v. State, 13 Wyo. 387, 80 P. 667.

tised for, the contract may not be let to a nonbidder and recovery had for the difference between the contract price and the bid of the lowest bidder who refuses to perform.[32] Under a rule requiring contracts to be let to the lowest bidder there is no authority to award to a higher bidder.[33] This rule is not nullified by one that property owners may petition for the use of a certain kind of paving.[34] The rule is not violated by requiring specified portions of the work to be done within the state,[35] nor by specifying a particular kind of material to be used[36] unless such material be a patented article,[37] nor by the fact that there was but one bidder,[38] nor by any fact not shown to have entered into the competition.[39] The rule does not apply to contracts that would be impracticable to so let out.[40] In the absence of a 36. A contract is not illegal because a particular kind of material was specified which all bidders would be required to procure from a certain producer. Gage v. New York, 110 App. Div. 403, 97 N. Y. S. 157.

37. Under a rule that contracts for street improvements must be let to the "lowest and best bidder," a city has not power to specify that a patented pavement shall be used, though the owner of the patent agrees to furnish the material at a specified price to any contractor equipped to lay it. Monaghan v. Indianapolis [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 33; Monaghan v. Indianapolis [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 424.

Note: The jurisdictions divide on the question whether such contracts are consistent with a statute requiring competition. Similar considerations to those expressed in the principal case have led other courts to the same result. Dean v. Charlton, 23 Wis. 590; Nicolson v. Painter, 35 Cal. 699; Fishburn v. Chicago, 171 Ill. 338, 63 Am. St. Rep. 236, 39 L. R. A. 482; Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 26; State v. Elizabeth, 35 N. J. Law, 351; Burgess v. Jefferson, 21 La. Ann. 143. The opposing cases maintain that the necessary competition is present in the labor, and that the city should have the benefit of patented material if the best (Hobart v. Detroit, 17 Mich. 246; In re Dugro, 50 N. Y. 513), especially when it is procurable at a fixed price (Hastings v. Columbus, 42 Ohio St. 585). In Wisconsin this limitation has been accepted where the improvements are not assessable. Kilvington v. Superior, 83 Wis. 222, 33 Am. St. Rep. 32, 18 L. R. A. 45. In several states such contracts have been authorized by statute on petition of taxpayers. State v. Elizabeth, 35 N. J. Law, 351; Nicolson v. Painter, 35 Cal. 699.—See 5 Columbia L. R. 549.

Note: Where statutes confer on municipalities the power to impose a burden on private property requiring the taking of certain steps, in their nature jurisdictional, precedent to the right to impose such burden, the municipality has only such power as the statute grants it and must comply strictly with the provisions of the statute in exercising such power. City of Bluffton v. Miller, 33 Ind. App. 521, 70 N. E. 989; Barber Paving Co. v. Edgerton, 125 Ind. 461, 25 N. E. 436. Provisions in the charter requiring competitive bidding are for the benefit of lot owners, and the city has no power to waive or ignore them. Fineran v. Bithulithic Co., 116 Ky. 495, 76 S. W. 415. The courts do not agree on the main proposition affirmed in the principal case that there can be no competition in bidding when the article specified is patented; however, the weight of authority sustains this view. Dean v. Charlton, 23 Wis. 590, 99 Am. Dec. 205; Nicholson Pavement Co. v. Painter, 35 Cal. 699; Smith v. Syracuse Improvement Co., 161 N. Y. 484, 55 N. E. 1077; Kean v. Elizabeth, 35 N. J. Law, 351; Burgess v. Jefferson, 21 La. Ann. 143; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Wilcox, 86 N. Y. S. 69; Dillon, Municipal Corporations [4th Ed.] § 467. There are, however, many strong opinions to the contrary which affirm the right of a city to advertise for bids for a patented pavement, though the charter specifies that contracts for public improvements shall be let to the lowest bidder. Hobart v. Detroit, 17 Mich. 246; In re Dugo, 50 N. Y. 513; Swift v. St. Louis, 180 Mo. 80, 79 S. W. 172; Verdin v. City of St. Louis [Mo.] 27 S. W. 447.—See 4 Mich. L. R. 78.

38. That a person to whom a contract is let, under Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 5519, requiring the contract to be let to the lowest responsible bidder, is the only bidder does not render the contract illegal in the absence of fraud or collusion, or a showing that the price is unreasonable or excessive. Gutschow v. Washington County [Neb.] 104 N. W. 602.

39. The fact that a contract specifies the number of hours to constitute a day's labor does not affect the validity of the contract where it does not appear that such specification entered into the competition. Gage v. Chicago [Ill.] 77 N. E. 145.

40. A rule that all contracts for improvements must be let out by sealed bid to the lowest bidder does not apply to the employment of an architect to prepare plans for a building. City of Houston v. Glover [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 652, 89 S. W. 425. Contract for the supervision of the construcstatute limiting the power of the board making the contract, the only limitation is that they must act in good faith and as a result of an honest exercise of discretion.[41] In the absence of a law requiring contracts to be let to the lowest bidder, the municipal body has a large discretion in the premises;[42] but technical informalities or irregularities in the form of a bid will not defeat the right of the lowest bidder to be awarded the contract,[43] nor authorize a municipal board to award the contract to a higher bidder.[44] Where the lowest bidder has not conformed to the advertised requirements, the contract may be let to the next lowest at a price less than his bid without readvertising.[45] If the letting of a contract is a discretionary act it cannot be compelled by mandamus.[46] In the absence of fraud or collusion the exercise of discretion is binding on the public[47] and is not subject to judicial review.[48] A refusal of a bidder to enter into a contract in conformity to the terms of his bid is a condition precedent to a forfeiture of the accompanying deposit.[49]

§ 4. Essential provisions in, and conditions pertaining to, public contracts.[50]—A contract must be authorized by a valid law.[51] It must be properly proposed and accepted,[52] and when the mode of contracting has been expressly prescribed by law, no other method can be adopted.[53] All statutory conditions must be complied

LeMoyne v. Washington County [Pa.] 62 A. 516. St. 1903, § 3212, providing that for the execution of a contract by the board of education the majority of the members must concur on a call for yeas and nays, a vote on call of the yeas and nays is indispensable (Board of Education of Newport v. Newport Nat. Bank [Ky.] 90 S. W. 569), and the rule that the yeas and nays must be entered of record is not satisfied by a record showing that the contract was unanimously adopted (Id.). Sayles' Rev. Clv. St. 1897, art. 797, authorizing the county commissioners court to appoint an agent to contract on behalf of the county for the repair of buildings, etc., requires the commissioners in conferring such authority to act as a body. Jackson-Foxworth Lumber Co. v. Hutchinson County [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 565, 88 S. W. 412. It is not essential, however, that the appointing order be actually entered on the minutes. Id. Act of April 4, 1870, P. L. 834, relative to advertisement for bids for the construction of a court house, held to have been complied with. Commonwealth v. Brown, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 269. Where the police jury undertakes the work of a public improvement for which it is necessary to incur a debt payable from the estimated surplus of the public revenues, the contract therefor may be made on the basis of cash realized or to be realized from certificates of parish indebtedness, to the payment of which the surplus is dedicated. Dupuy v. Police Jury of Parish of Iberville [La.] 39 So. 627. The provisions of St. 1896, p. 497, c. 500, authorizing the commissioners of a certain county to construct a county building, and providing that contracts should contain a provision that no contractor should be paid for additional material or labor unless the additional sum should be approved before the labor or material was furnished, applies to contracts made to complete the building after the original contractors had failed to perform. Cutter v. Middlesex County [Mass.] 75 N. E. 954.

55. The rule that a contract by a board is a deliberative act requires that before it is entered into the board compare ideas, consult, and deliberate. Austin Mfg. Co. v. Ayr Tp. 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 91; Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. Butler Tp., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 477.

59. Under a statute providing that contracts must be signed by the mayor or some other person authorized in behalf of the public, the city clerk may sign under authority from the council. Earl v. Bowen, 146 Cal. 754, 81 P. 133. required.[63] The contract entered into must be one authorized by law,[64] and must conform to the specifications in the advertisement for bids[65] and the resolution by which it is authorized.[66] By statute, contracts with the United States are not assignable.[67] Contracts must conform to the principles of public policy; hence, a public official cannot contract with himself on behalf of the public.[68] In some states it is a penal offense to do so.[69] Contracts must not have the effect of giving public property for private use,[70] nor be for the purpose of accomplishing an end by an unlawful method.[71]

A contractor's bond must conform to the requirements of the statute.[72] Public officers charged with the duty of exacting the bond are personally liable if they do

64. A statute prohibiting a contract except on a consideration wholly to be performed renders void a contract based on a past consideration. Morrow v. Pike County, 189 Mo. 610, 88 S. W. 99. Villages organized under the general law have not power to contract for the construction of sewers until the property owners have an opportunity to perform the work themselves as provided by Laws 1901, p. 215, c. 167. State v. Board of Education, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 345. Under a rule that the contract must be let to the lowest bidder, a provision which authorizes changes in the material and work and leaving the additional amount to be paid to the city engineer invalidates the contract. Gage v. New York, 110 App. Div. 403, 97 N. Y. S. 157.

68. A public officer having power to purchase supplies cannot contract with himself or with a firm of which he is a member for them. Lainhart v. Burr [Fla.] 38 So. 711. Where an official with power to purchase supplies contracts with himself or with a firm of which he is a member, and the purchase price has been paid, if the transaction was tainted with fraud the entire purchase may be recovered by the public, but where there is no fraud and the supplies were beneficial to the public, only the excess over cost may be recovered. Lainhart v. Burr [Fla.] 38 So. 711. Where a house of which a member of the board of health was the real owner was let to the city as a pest house at a grossly excessive rental, the lease was held a fraud upon the city. Tyrrell v. New York, 94 N. Y. S. 951. Contract for bath tubs in engine houses set aside where it appeared that a member of the city council was indirectly interested therein. City charter prohibited councilmen from being interested in public contracts. Harrison v. Elizabeth, 70 N. J. Law, 591, 57 A. 132.

71. Where a railroad company objected to a petition to lay out a street at grade across the railroad, but consented to the granting of the petition if the city would maintain a gate at the crossing, the contract to maintain the gate if an attempt to buy off opposition to the petition was beyond the power of the city to make (Old Colony R. Co. v. New Bedford, 188 Mass. 234, 74 N. E. 468), but such contract was binding on the city for a reasonable time under Pub. St., 1882, c. 112, § 128, providing that if a highway across a railroad is authorized, expenses incident to maintaining the way at the crossing shall be borne by the city until otherwise determined by a special commission (Id.).

72. A stipulation in a contractor's bond that he will furnish all labor and materials is not a compliance with a rule requiring a bond that he will pay for all labor and materials used. Hardison & Co. v. Yeaman [Tenn.] 91 S. W. 1111. Deposit held to be an additional and cumulative security in addition to the bond for the performance of a contract, and not a limited security only, to furnish an available fund to enable the city to have omitted work promptly done. 76. The failure of a city to require a bond from a contractor to pave streets, under an entire contract void because in excess of authorized municipal indebtedness, does not render the city liable under Laws 1901, p. 535, c. 321, for that neglect to a subcontractor who furnished materials. Laws 1903, p. 595, c. 382, validating such contracts and authorizing the payment of evidences of indebtedness already issued, does not impose liability on the part of the city to such subcontractor. Kettle River Quarries Co. v. East Grand Forks [Minn.] 104 N. W. 1077.

77. See 4 C. L. 1096.

78. Act March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 463), for the improvement of the Mississippi between South Pass and the Gulf of Mexico providing details generally intrusted to the executive branch of the government, is in form and substance a contract. Switzer & McHenry's Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 275.

Russian-American Packing Co.'s Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 460. A resolution of village trustees granting the petition of a contractor to change the line of a sewer from the center of the street to a point near the curb does not constitute a contract so that the resolution may not be rescinded before any work is done under it. Harrison v. New Brighton, 110 App. Div. 267, 97 N. Y. S. 246.

80. Contract by the bridge commissioner of New York for the operation of a railroad over the Williamsburgh bridge did not illegally create a franchise in the railroad company. Schinzel v. Best, 45 Misc. 455, 92 N. Y. S. 754. A contract by which an architect is employed to prepare plans is not the creation of a debt, under a rule prohibiting the creation of a debt, unless provision has been made for its payment, where it is intended that the services shall be paid for out of the current revenues. City of Houston v. Glover [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 652, 89 S. W. 425. The making of a contract for water for a number of years to be delivered in the future does not create a debt, but liability only arose as the water was used each year. City of Tyler v. Jester & Co., 97 Tex. 344, 78 S. W. 1058. The duty of a commissioner's court to audit all claims is not abdicated by a contract for the erection of a court house, according to certain plans and specifications, under the direction of a competent architect, to be paid for only after final inspection. Tally v. Commissioners' Ct. of Jackson County [Ala.] 39 So. 167. Where a city, not obliged to make any payments until the contract is completed, at the request of the contractor agreed to divert money when due to materialmen for goods furnished and to be furnished, such agreement was not a contract of guaranty or suretyship which the city was forbidden to make. Harrison v. New Brighton, 110 App. Div. 267, 97 N. Y. S. 246. Inferences and implications cannot prevail against the express term of a contract providing for the payment of interest semi-annually on a contractor's money held as security. 84. Donald's Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 357.

85. Provisions in a contract, for a street meaning intended by the parties.[86] Plans and specifications attached to a contract and referred to therein become a part of it.[87] Prior negotiations are subservient to the express terms of the written contract.[88]

A contract is not void because provision for paying the obligation it creates is unenforceable,[89] nor because creating a debt in excess of current revenues, where such result is caused by failure of the city to impose a tax it was authorized to levy.[90] A contract is not invalid because it may become improvident,[91] or because entered into hastily and ill advisedly,[92] or because when entered into it was the intention to refuse to carry out the terms of a previous one on the same subject for breach of which an action for damages will lie.[93] A paving contract is not rendered void by a provision requiring the contractor to keep up repairs.[94] A contract for one portion of the work is not affected by the fact that a contract for another portion is void.[95]

No renunciation of a city's rights is to be implied from the grant of an exclusive privilege to maintain water pipes in the highways for a period of years.[96] A municipal corporation in granting a franchise to a company to furnish water does not impliedly contract that it will never do any act by which the value of the franchise may be reduced.[97] The inventor of a patented article to be used in the work does not, by making an unsuccessful bid, waive his rights under the patent to the successful bidder.[98] improvement relative to grading, that old pavement should be removed to such depth as was necessary to enable new pavement to be put down did not contemplate any expenses for grading except such as were necessary to make room for the new pavement. McCain v. Des Moines [Iowa] 103 N. W. 979. Where plans and specifications of a sewer showed the depth of the excavation required, and such plans were to control the depth, failure of the city engineer to give instructions as to depth in accordance with a provision in the contract does not impose liability on the city for damages sustained by the contractor in the absence of request for specific instructions. Harrison v. New Brighton, 110 App. Div. 267, 97 N. Y. S. 246. A post two and one-half miles from the seacoast is not in the interior of the island, within a contract to take meat for interior posts. Simpson v. U. S., 26 S. Ct. 54.

86. When a contract for the construction of vessels provided that on default of the contractor the United States might complete the same by contract, and on abandonment of the work by the contractor a new contract for the construction and completion of the vessels was let, it was held that "construction" and "completion" as used were substantially the same in meaning. United States v. Perth Amboy Shipbuilding & Engineering Co., 137 F. 685. Held further that "constructed" as used did not imply other or different vessels than those originally contracted for. Id.

87. When a contract for street improvement provided that the work should be done according to attached plans and specifications, which should be considered as incorporated therein, a provision in the plans that the city could order omitted any portion of the work called for, and the contractor would not be entitled to pay therefor, became a part of the contract. City of Ensley v. Moore & Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 679.

88. Simpson v. U. S., 26 S. Ct. 54.

89. A construction contract is not invalid because the action of the commissioner's court in levying a special tax to meet warrants issued in payment beyond the current year is void. Tally v. Commissioner's Ct. of Jackson County [Ala.] 39 So. 167.

90. City of Providence v. Providence Elec. Light Co. [Ky.] 91 S. W. 664.

91. Wabash Ave., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 305.

94. A provision requiring a pavement contractor to keep up repairs for 10 years does not render the contract void. Erie City v. Grant, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 109. A municipal lien for paving is not void, because the contract required the contractor to keep up repairs for five years, where it appears that the paving will last five years without repair. Philadelphia v. Pemberton, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 323.

95. A contract with an architect to prepare plans is distinct from one thereafter made for the construction of a building. City of Houston v. Glover [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 652, 89 S. W. 425.

96. A contract granting the exclusive privilege of maintaining water pipes in the public highways for 20 years, with the privilege to the city of purchasing the water works after 10 years, is not an implied renunciation of the city's rights to construct water works after the 20 years' period. City of Sioux Falls v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 136 F. 721.

97. City of Sioux Falls v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 136 F. 721.

A provision that the contractor should make good any defective work does not render him liable for defects arising from other causes.[98] A provision that the contractor shall bear loss resulting from delay does not apply to delay not contemplated by the parties.[1] A provision in a paving contract that the contractor shall keep up repairs for a specified period is a mere guaranty of good work and does not require him to replace paving torn up by bursting water mains,[2] nor violate a rule that repairs shall be paid for out of the general revenue fund.[3] Damages suffered by the contractor, because of failure to comply with the terms of the contract, fall on him, though the supervising engineer did not object to the violation.[4] Where a contract provides that if any change is made in the specifications the increased or diminished cost shall be assessed by a board, the action of such board is conclusive.[5] Provisions relative to extras must be complied with in order to entitle the contractor to recover.[6]

(§ 5) B. Performance and discharge.[7]—Substantial performance of the terms of the contract is essential[8] if not waived,[9] but exact compliance with the terms is not essential if impracticable,[10] or if such performance was not intended.[11]

98. In New York, no patent hydrant valve or stopcock can be used by the water department if the patentee insists on royalty. Held that, where the owner of a patent made an unsuccessful bid to furnish said hydrants, he did not waive his rights under the patent to the successful bidder. Cayuta Wheel & Foundry Co. v. Kennedy Valve Mfg. Co., 127 F. 355.

99. Morley v. St. Joseph, 112 Mo. App. 671, 87 S. W. 1013.

1. A contract for the construction of a street provided that loss or damages from delay and unforeseen circumstances should be borne by the contractor. Held that such provision did not apply to delay caused by failure to obtain a complete right of way, as it was understood that a right of way had been secured. Sheehan v. Pittsburg [Pa.] 62 A. 642.

2. Green River Asphalt Co. v. St. Louis, 188 Mo. 576, 87 S. W. 985.

3. Allen v. Labsap, 188 Mo. 692, 87 S. W. 926.

4. Where caving in of an excavation was caused by failure of the contractor to comply with the terms of his contract as to shoring up, he cannot recover from the city, though the city engineer under whose supervision he worked did not object to the violation. Harrison v. New Brighton, 110 App. Div. 267, 97 N. Y. S. 246.

5. A contract provided that if it be deemed necessary or desirable by the United States to make any change in the plans or specifications affecting the cost of the work in a sum not exceeding $300, the increased or diminished cost should be assessed by a board appointed for that purpose. Held that an assessment because of the nonfireproofing of certain wood was within such provision, and the decision of the board was conclusive. Conners v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 16.

6. See, also, Building and Construction Contracts, 5 C. L. 455. A provision in a contract that no claim for extras should exist unless ordered by the town board precludes recovery for extras furnished under the direction of the city engineer and necessitated by a change in the plans by such officer, but not ordered by the board where it would increase the cost to a sum in excess of what the board was authorized to expend. People v. Snedeker, 106 App. Div. 89, 94 N. Y. S. 319. Under a provision in a contract that no allowance should be made for extras unless an itemized bill, and the order authorizing it, should be presented to the city engineer, or if the stipulation was not complied with unless the mayor should in writing approve the same, the mayor alone may waive compliance with the stipulation, and he only by approval of the extras in writing. Cashman v. Boston [Mass.] 76 N. E. 671.

7. See 4 C. L. 1097.

8. Preparation by architects of plans for a public building held not sufficient to enable the architects to recover, where the plans failed in 20 particulars to give such detailed drawings as were required for the builder's guidance. Kinney v. Manitowoc County [C. C. A.] 135 F. 491. Architects who furnish plans for a public building but are not entitled to recover on the contract, both by reason of its invalidity and insufficient performance, cannot recover the value of the use of the plans in the absence of proof of the value of such use. Id.

9. Provision in the contract for the construction by the state of a kiln, held waived by the contractor. Mills & Co. v. State, 110 App. Div. 843, 97 N. Y. S. 676. Where failure to maintain insurance on a public building in course of construction as required by the contract was induced by the contractors who were chargeable with the expense, they are estopped to recover loss occasioned by fire on the ground of nonperformance of the contract. Fransen v. Regents of Education [C. C. A.] 133 F. 24.

10. Where it was impracticable for a paving contractor to pave a railroad crossing, and the railroad company was required to keep up such crossing, it is no objection to the performance of the contract that the contractor failed to pave it. Hund v. Rackliffe [Mo.] 91 S. W. 500.

11. A contract for the construction of a

If a contract is to be performed to the satisfaction of the director of public works, the question of satisfactory performance involves the discretion of such director.[12] Where county commissioners accept a public improvement as a compliance with a contract, their integrity cannot be collaterally attacked.[13] Where the execution of a contract is to be under the supervision of the city engineer, extra expense due to his negligence should be borne by the city and not by the contractor.[14] Power in a superintending engineer to direct the execution of the contract is not power to change its terms or extend the time for completing the work.[15] Where because of default of a city the contract becomes impossible of performance, the contractor may abandon the work or waive the delay caused and recover damages.[16] A per diem penalty for delay cannot be collected where delay was caused by litigation concerning the construction of the contract which terminated favorably to the contractor.[17] A contract may be discontinued upon the happening of a condition specified therein.[18] A contract is not rescinded by the mere offer of one party to enter into a new contract on the same terms except as to price.[19] A company which has obtained the right to operate a telephone system for a percentage of its gross receipts is not excused from paying because others are given the right without charge.[20] If a contract is unenforceable, its obligation cannot be impaired.[21]

Time.—The necessary hauling of the material is a part of the work to be done under a contract, and doing this within the time limited for the commencement of the work is a compliance with the terms of the contract.[22] Where the only time limit is specified in the contract, it may be extended for any good cause shown.[23] A breach of a provision in the contract limiting time for performance does not invalidate the tax bills levied to meet the cost.[24]

Materials.—A contract specifying a particular material to be used is not satisfied by the use of any other.[25] A contractor who uses cheaper material than called sidewalk of a certain width does not apply where a portion of the sidewalk area has, with the consent of the city, been withdrawn from public travel and enclosed by abutting owners. Hund v. Rackliffe [Mo.] 91 S. W. 500.

13. Board of Com'rs of La Porte County v. Wolff [Ind.] 76 N. E. 247. A finding that a board of county commissioners, in accepting a public improvement as a compliance with a contract, acted negligently and in disregard of duty is not a finding that they acted corruptly or in bad faith. Id.

14. City of Chicago v. Duffy, 218 Ill. 242, 75 N. E. 912. Expense of extra work occasioned by errors of the inspector should be borne by the city. City of Chicago v. Duffy, 117 Ill. App. 261.

21. Where by reason of lapse of time a contract, obligating a city to extend a street and build a bridge, or upon default the state might do so and collect from the city, had become unenforceable, its obligation was not impaired by a statute authorizing the city to construct such improvements. Wheelwright v. Boston, 188 Mass. 521, 74 N. E. 937.

22. Hund v. Rackliffe [Mo.] 91 S. W. 500. Especially is this so where the hauling is designated by the contract as a part of the work to be done. Id.

23. Hund v. Rackliffe [Mo.] 91 S. W. 500.

24. If no ordinance requires a work of public improvement to be completed within a certain time, a contract provision requiring work to be done within a specified time under penalty does not make completion within the time a condition to the validity of the tax bills. Allen v. Labsap, 188 Mo. 692, 87 S. W. 926.

25. A contract specifying that the "best quality of imported Portland cement" should be used is not satisfied by the use of any sound imported Portland cement which fills the three special requirements of tensile strength, fineness, and weight. Drainage for by the contract is liable for the improper profits[26] in an appropriate action,[27] and the fact that he lost money on the contract,[28] or that the contract is executed, is no defense.[29] The defense of ultra vires is not available to him.[30]

Compensation and payment.—A contractor cannot be deprived of his compensation because of misappropriation of the fund raised for its payment,[31] or because of invalidity of the assessment,[32] or orders given in payment,[33] or because his work was not utilized.[34] A council cannot by ordinance bind the city to pay for work done pursuant to a written contract for which the city has paid the price stipulated in the contract.[35] Where a contractor's money is retained as a guaranty under an agreement to pay interest thereon, delay in completion of the work does not damage the government.[36] Money paid by a contractor under a contract merely malum prohibitum cannot be recovered by him.[37] Money advanced, pursuant to a condition that a town council which had laid out a highway would construct it, may be recovered where the town abandons the work, regardless of whether the council had power to bind the town in the premises.[38] After an ultra vires contract has been partly performed the city authorities will not be enjoined from restoring to the contractor such fruits of the unauthorized contract as have not been dissipated but remain in the custody of the municipality.[39]

Specific performance of an ultra vires contract will not be decreed.[40]

Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co., 136 F. 780.

26. Contractors who have used on a public work cheaper materials than the contract calls for, and have profited thereby, will not be heard to say that the material used was as good as that called for, when sued for the improper profits. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co., 136 F. 780. Acts La. 1896, p. 162, No. 114, §§ 5, 6, 7, creating a commission to provide a drainage system for the City of New Orleans, does not authorize the commission or its engineer to consent to a cheaper material than the contract specifies. Id.

27. The fact that a contractor uses a cheaper material than is specified in the contract does not, after he has been paid the contract price, give a right of action in repetition, under Rev. Civ. Code La., art. 2293, to recover the difference in cost, but the remedy is an action for damages for breach of contract under Civ. Code La. arts. 1930, 2769. National Contracting Co. v. Sewerage & Water Board [C. C. A.] 141 F. 325. Improper profits made by a contractor by substituting cheaper material than those specified may be recovered under Civ. Code La., art. 2301 (2279), providing for the recovery of that which one receives which is not due him, and art. 2302 (2280), providing that one who pays under mistake may recover it. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co., 136 F. 780.

28. That the contractor lost money in the performance of the contract is no defense to an action to recover profits made by wrongfully substituting cheaper materials than those specified. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co., 136 F. 780.

29. A contractor who made a large profit by substituting cheaper materials than those specified is liable for such profits though the contract is executed. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co., 136 F. 780.

30. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co., 136 F. 780.

31. Fund raised for its payment has been exhausted in paying debts not chargeable against such fund. City of Houston v. Potter [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 389.

32. Where an ordinance provided for payment of sewer construction by special assessment, and the contract provided that the contractor should receive assessment certificates as payment in full, the city was liable to the contractor for the amount of the certificates, though the assessment were invalid. Iowa Pipe & Tile Co. v. Callanan, 125 Iowa 358, 101 N. W. 141.

33. There may be recovery for repairs on a county court house after completion and acceptance of the work, though the contract provided for payment in interest bearing orders, and the orders given were invalid. Coles County v. Goehring, 209 Ill. 142, 70 N. E. 610.

34. That a city decides not to use plans prepared by an architect does not affect its liability under the contract by which he was employed. City of Houston v. Glover [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 652, 89 S. W. 425.

36. Switzer & McHenry's Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 275.

37. Where a contract is merely malum prohibitum and not malum in se, money voluntarily paid thereunder by the contractor cannot be recovered by him. Mills & Co. v. State, 110 App. Div. 843, 97 N. Y. S. 676.

§ 6. Remedies and procedure. A. By taxpayer.[41]—Any citizen and taxpayer may enjoin the enforcement of a void contract, which will generally affect his rights,[42] if he acts promptly,[43] and the fact that great benefits will flow to a city from carrying out an ultra vires contract is no reason for denying appropriate equitable relief to him;[44] but a taxpayer may not restrain the execution of a contract which will not prejudice him.[45] A taxpayer who seeks to enjoin a city from entering into an illegal contract is entitled to the favorable consideration of the court, though moved by private grievance to bring the action.[46] Where a municipality adopts and ratifies a contract irregularly let, a taxpayer may not set up its invalidity.[47] The city is a necessary party to an action by a taxpayer to restrain the performance of a contract made in behalf of the city.[48] Taxpayers who rely on fraud as the basis of a suit to enjoin payment to contractors must allege facts constituting the fraud.[49] In an action by a taxpayer to restrain a public officer from entering into a contract where there are no charges of fraud, the only question is the authority of the officer.[50]

(§ 6) B. By bidder.[51]

(§ 6) C. On the contract proper.[52]—When work under the contract has been completed, the amount due may be recovered under the common counts, though special counts filed with the common counts are insufficient.[53] Pendency of a taxpayer's suit to enjoin payments for a completed contract is not a bar to an action by the contractor for the balance due where the pendency of such suit is not pleaded, no injunction issued, and no cross bill filed by the contractor therein.[54] An action must be brought within the limitation period,[55] but not before conditions precedent have been complied with[56] and a fund provided for the payment of the contract price.[57] A contractor suing for the contract price, and alleging that he struction of a tidal collection chamber in another municipality, to be operated in a certain manner, it could not compel the specific performance of the provision relative to operation. Belleville Tp., Essex County v. Orange [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 331.

42. Stevens v. Henry County, 218 Ill. 468, 75 N. E. 1024. A tax payer may enjoin the payment of warrants issued in payment of goods purchased by a public officer from himself, or a firm of which he is a member. Lainhart v. Burr [Fla.] 38 So. 711. County commissioners may be enjoined by a tax payer from entering into an unauthorized contract, which if carried out would result in the imposition of an unlawful tax. State v. Newton County Com'rs [Ind.] 74 N. E. 1091.

43. A tax payer who seeks to enjoin the letting of a contract for which no appropriation has been made is not guilty of laches, if innocent parties will not be prejudiced and he prosecutes his suit with diligence. State v. Newton County Com'rs [Ind.] 74 N. E. 1091.

46. Gage v. New York, 110 App. Div. 403, 97 N. Y. S. 157. Although injunction may be the proper remedy for preventing the award of a contract for public work to another than the lowest bidder, it does not lie, where the suit is brought by the lowest bidder, unless he sue in his capacity of taxpayer, or become the beneficiary of a suit brought by a taxpayer whom he may agree to indemnify against costs and expenses. 55. An action on an implied contract to recover for construction of a public work must be brought within five years after completion of the work. Citizens' Bank v. Spencer, 126 Iowa, 101, 101 N. W. 643.

56. Under Building Code, § 155, providing that where a building commissioner has caused an unsafe building to be razed under precept from a justice he shall make return of the costs and expenses, and the amount shall be adjusted and taxed, a contractor employed by the commissioner cannot recover until return has been made and the amount adjusted. Parker Co. v. New York, 110 App. Div. 360, 97 N. Y. S. 200.

57. Sewer construction contract construed and held to give the contractor no right of action for the contract price until an assess-was to be paid out of the proceeds of a sale of bonds issued pursuant to an election, need not allege that provision for his payment had been made as required by law.[58] It is presumed that a contractor suing on a contract void in part only is suing on the valid portion.[59] A contract enforceable against a municipal corporation may be proved by circumstances, acts, conduct, and sayings of officers having authority to bind the corporation.[60] After a long lapse of time it is presumed that statutory conditions were complied with.[61] Where the amount claimed is disputed, and the city could have settled the same by measuring the work, but did not do so, the question of amount is for the jury.[62] Where a contract provides for payment of the consideration out of a specific fund, a judgment should provide for its satisfaction out of such fund.[63] Money due under the contract and unlawfully withheld bears interest.[64]

(§ 6) D. On the contractor's bond.[65]—An action on a contractor's bond lies in favor of any person falling within its terms,[66] and intended to be protected,[67] if they suffer damage because of a breach thereof;[68] but material men and laborers not provided for in a bond have no right of action thereon.[69]

The action must be brought by a party entitled to sue.[70] The city is the real party to a contract made by a committee on its behalf, and may maintain an ac-ment therefor had been levied and collected, or the trustees of the village had placed it beyond their power to levy an assessment. Harrison v. New Brighton, 110 App. Div. 267, 97 N. Y. S. 246. In an action by a contractor to recover under his contract, an answer that he had been paid in full is not an admission that the necessary assessment had been levied and paid. Id. Where an assessment is invalid and a curative act is passed, the city should be given time to reassess before an action on implied contract to recover for the work is brought. Citizens' Bank v. Spencer, 126 Iowa, 101, 101 N. W. 643.

64. Where payment of the contract price is prevented because of unwarranted refusal of the city engineer to certify to the completion of the work, the contract price bears interest from the date it should have been paid. John A. Roebling's Sons Co. v. New York, 110 App. Div. 366, 97 N. Y. S. 278.

65. See 4 C. L. 1104. Also see Public Works and Improvements, 6 C. L. 1143.

66. One who furnishes a contractor with material may recover on a bond conditioned to pay promptly for all labor and materials. City of Philadelphia v. Neill, 211 Pa. 353, 60 A. 1033. A bond conditioned to pay all labor and material furnished in the work embraces a materialman who furnishes material to a subcontractor. Bowditch v. Gourley, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 342.

Subcontractors are within the provisions of a bond conditioned on the payment for all labor and materials used, and under a rule that individuals intended to be secured may maintain action, may sue thereon. Hipwell v. National Surety Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 318. Subcontractors may rely on the security afforded by a bond conditioned on the payment of all claims for labor and material, and need not perfect their claims against a fund withheld by the building committee. Hipwell v. National Surety Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 318.

67. The Federal statute (28 Stat. 278), requiring a government contractor's bond to be conditioned for the payment of all labor and materials furnished, does not merely afford the relief given by the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, but protects persons who furnish material which does not become part of the permanent structure. United States v. Henningsen [Wash.] 82 P. 171. Under a statute, the manifest purpose of which is to protect laborers and materialmen, labor or materials used, whether furnished under the contract directly or to a subcontractor, are within the obligation of the bond. United States v. American Surety Co., 26 S. Ct. 168.

68. Where suit is brought on a bond, damages must be proved. Switzer & McHenry's Case, 38 Ct. Cl. 275.

69. A statute giving laborers and materialmen a right of action on a bond required gives them no right of action on a nonstatutory bond. Hardison & Co. v. Yeaman [Tenn.] 91 S. W. 1111. Where there are no mechanic's liens on public buildings a mechanic has no right of action on a bond providing that the surety is liable to no one except the owner. Id. Act Cong. Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, providing that the surety of a government contractor shall assume an tion on the bond for damages sustained by reason of a breach thereof.[71] Notice to the sureties may be a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action.[72]

A surety is not relieved because a bond is more comprehensive than the law requires,[73] nor because the contractor is discharged from performance of a portion of his contract for which a certain price was to be paid,[74] nor because of a nonprejudicial variation.[75] While under a statutory bond no act of the owner can relieve the surety from liability to laborers and materialmen, under a common-law bond any breach by the owner absolves the surety.[76] That a materialman extends the time for payment of the goods is no defense.[77] The defense of ultra vires is not available to a surety unless the invalidity of the contract is shown.[78] Where on default of the contractor to repair streets the work was done by the city pursuant to a stipulation to such effect in the contract, it is no defense to a surety that the money used in making such repairs was procured by issuing bonds, as in the case of original construction work.[79] It is no defense in an action on a city contractor's bond that the use plaintiff had agreed to give him a bond against defects in his work and had not done so, it not appearing that the contractor had been prejudiced.[80] Failure to comply with the terms of a contract renders the surety liable regardless of the condition in the bond, for the payment of materialmen.[81] The averments in the pleadings must be certain.[82] It is not necessary to allege the exact date the contract was abandoned.[83] A city contractor cannot, in an action obligation that the contractor shall pay all labor and materialmen, does not make the surety liable for facilities used in transporting the material to the place where the building is being erected. United States v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 86 App. Div. 475, 83 N. Y. S. 752. The word materials in a bond conditioned on the payment by the contractor for labor and materials does not include equipments used in the performance of the contract. United States v. Jacoby [Del.] 61 A. 871.

70. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 252, authorizing the trustee of an express trust to maintain an action for the benefit of the person interested in the contract, does not authorize the county auditor to sue on the bond of a contractor, as trustee for property owners, where the contractor refused to perform and the work was relet at an increased cost, which was assessed against the property liable. The provision of Laws 1897, c. 307, p. 568, § 3, that no action shall be maintained on a contractor's bond unless written notice is given to the principals and sureties within 90 days from the last item of labor or materials performed or furnished, does not apply to contractor's bonds given pursuant to the citizen's charter of St. Paul. 77. It is no defense to a surety on a government contractor's bond, conditioned for the payment of labor and materials furnished, that the seller of the goods extended the time of payment thereon to the detriment of the surety. United States v. Henningsen [Wash.] 82 P. 171.

78. The defense of ultra vires, based upon the contention that a supplemental contract varied in some particular from the original, cannot avail a surety whose contract refers to the supplemental contract, and it does not appear that in making such contract the statutory provisions as to advertising were not observed. Where a contract for building a lighthouse required the contractor to furnish furniture, the surety on the contractor's bond is liable for his failure to do so regardless of the condition in the bond requiring payment for material and labor furnished. United States v. Henningsen [Wash.] 82 P. 171.

82. Where a statement of claim in an action on a city contractor's bond alleged that the cost bond given to the city had been approved by the city solicitor, an averment in the affidavit of defense that the defendant is informed that such bond had not been approved is insufficient. City of Philadelphia v. Pierson, 211 Pa. 388, 60 A. 999.

83. Where a contractor failed to perform, and in fact abandoned the contract, it is unnecessary to allege in an action on his bond the exact date of abandonment, it appearing that the new contract was awarded after such abandonment. One suing on a city contractor's bond is entitled to recover only what is due him at the commencement of the action.[85]

(§ 6) E. Under lien laws.[86]

PUBLIC LANDS.

This topic includes both state and Federal lands. The treatment of each is separate from the other within each section, but many principles common to both may be found.

§ 1. The public domain and property therein.[87]—The collection of taxes on land does not estop the public from asserting title thereto.[88] Where land is relinquished to the United States, title vests on filing the deed of relinquishment.[89] The power of congress over the public lands is plenary so long as title thereto remains in the government, and no right of property therein has vested in another.[90]

State lands.[91]—Where one state is created from the territory of another, it acquires no title to lands within its limits previously granted by the state from which its territory is derived.[92] Tide lands belong to the states within which they are situated,[93] but prior to the admission of the state into the union they were under Federal control;[94] and one who had become entitled to a patent prior to the admission of a state was entitled to the lands where the state in its constitution disclaimed title to all lands patented.[95] Grants to a state requiring confirmation do not pass

85. That a larger sum is due when he asks judgment is no ground for awarding it. City of Philadelphia v. Pierson, 211 Pa. 388, 60 A. 999.

86. See 4 C. L. 1105.

87. See 4 C. L. 1107.

88. That taxes have for a long time been collected upon wharves does not estop the public from asserting title to the lands upon which they are located. Murray v. Barnes [Ala.] 40 So. 348.

89. Under Act Cong. June 4, 1897, c. 2, 30 Stat. 36, providing that an owner of land within a forest reserve may relinquish the same and select in lieu a tract of vacant land, title vests in the government on filing the deed of relinquishment for record, and is not dependent on the selection of land granted in lieu thereof. Territory v. Perrin [Ariz.] 83 P. 361.

92. Where, prior to the formation of Kentucky, Virginia granted land afterward included in Kentucky, Kentucky had no title. Taulbee v. Buckner's Adm'r [Ky.] 91 S. W. 734.

93. Chicago Transit Co. v. Campbell, 110 Ill. App. 366. Upon admission of Washington into the Union, tide lands became property of the state. Town of West Seattle v. West Seattle Land & Improvement Co., 38 Wash. 359, 80 P. 549.

94. Congress has power to grant tide land within a territory. Kneeland v. Korter [Wash.] 82 P. 608.

95. Where a railroad had performed all the conditions entitling it to a grant, including tide lands within its limits, before the territory became a state, it is entitled to such lands where the state in its constitution disclaimed title to all such lands patented, though the patent was not issued until after the adoption of the constitution. Kneeland v. Korter [Wash.] 82 P. 608.

title until confirmed.[96] No title to school lands granted by the Federal government to the state, and described by designation of section numbers only, vests in the state until official survey is made and approved by the Federal authorities.[97] Hence the state cannot assert title to any portion and convey a fee or grant a lease of it.[98] Public lands[99] are under the dominion of the state, though title is vested in a subdivision thereof.[1] Lands granted by congress to a state for a specified purpose[2] are to be used in the manner the legislature directs.[3] It is the province of the legislature alone to determine the manner in which said lands may be disposed of in furtherance of the purposes of the grant,[4] and such power cannot be delegated.[5] Lands granted by congress to Idaho for university purposes may be used only in support and maintenance of the university, in the payment of current expenses and charges for conducting the same,[6] and not for the erection or equipment of buildings.[7]

Under 9 Stat. 519, granting certain swamp lands to the state, and Acts 1850-51, authorizing the swamp land commissioners to demand from the United States indemnity for lands sold since the grant or which might thereafter be sold, and Act Cong. March 3, 1857, confirming to the state all lands theretofore selected, so far as they remained vacant and unappropriated, one who purchased from the United States after the grant but prior to the confirmatory act obtained good title. Cotton Belt Lumber Co. v. Kelly [Ark.] 86 S. W. 436.

99. Islands formed in navigable streams in Missouri belong to the counties in which they appear, and may be disposed of as swamp lands under Rev. St. 1899, art. 6, c. 122. Frank v. Goddin [Mo.] 91 S. W. 1057.

1. Swamp and overflowed lands vested in the counties by Rev. St. 1899, § 8195, being public lands and held as school lands, the legislature was authorized by Const. 1875, art. 2, § 4, to create a board of education with power to employ an attorney in each congressional district to look after such lands, as provided by Rev. St. 1899, §§ 9814, 9817. Phillips v. Butler County, 187 Mo. 698, 86 S. W. 231. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 9816, requiring the board of education to ascertain from counties the disposition made of the state school fund, and if any of such fund had been diverted from its channel to procure its return, the power of the board's attorney was not limited to a recovery of misappropriated lands or funds, but he might assist in a defense of a suit against a county to quiet title. Id. The legislature of Florida, under the Swamp and Overflowed Land Act (9 Stat. 519), had the right to deal with all swamp and overflowed lands in the state and grant the same in trust or otherwise before identification and patent to it by the United States, subject to the right of the secretary of the interior to determine what lands were embraced in said act. Kittel v. Trustees of Internal Improvement Fund of Florida, 139 F. 941. Under Laws Fla. 1854-55, p. 9, c. 210, known as the Internal Improvement Fund Act, creating trustees to hold such fund for the purposes provided for therein, such trustees had power to make effective a railroad land grant, passed not strictly in conformity to the internal improvement fund act, and their promise to make deeds when patents were received from the United States will be specifically enforced. Id.

2. The erection of a residence for the governor is within the purpose of the grant of land made by congress to the state for public buildings at the capitol, under § 17 of the enabling act (25 Stat. 681, c. 180). State v. Budge [N. D.] 105 N. W. 724. Act Cong. July 2, 1862, 12 Stat. 503, and Act Cong. Aug. 30, 1890, 26 Stat. 417, granting lands to the states for the benefit of colleges, is a grant to the states and not to the colleges to be received through the states as a mere conduit. State v. Irvine [Wyo.] 84 P. 90. Under these acts, the state being required to accept the grant, it was the duty of the legislature to select the beneficiary. Id.

3. The disposition of lands granted by congress to the state for public buildings at the capitol is exclusively with the legislature, and its action in such matters is final unless violative of some constitutional provision and clearly contrary to the terms of the grant. State v. Budge [N. D.] 105 N. W. 724. Act Cong. Feb. 22, 1889, granting lands to Montana for state normal schools and conferring on the legislature the manner in which such lands shall be disposed of, and Montana Const. art. 11, § 12, providing that only interest on invested funds and rents from leased lands should be used, are not inconsistent, since the act of congress referred only to the disposition of the land and the constitutional provision for the control of the fund derived from a sale thereof. State v. Rice [Mont.] 83 P. 874.

cupancy by any qualified homesteader.[9] Notwithstanding statutes declaring all mineral deposits on public lands open to exploration and purchase, the president has power by proclamation to reserve a portion of the public domain for an Indian reservation.[10] A right to locate mineral claims, under an act of congress subjecting mineral lands in an Indian reservation to mineral entry, is suspended by joint resolution passed the same day postponing the operation of the act.[11]

§ 3. Mode of locating and acquiring title. A. Federal lands.[12]—An entry must be made by one qualified to enter,[13] for the purpose for which the land is open,[14] but an entry valid on its face by one disqualified to make entry prevents the initiation of rights by another while it remains of record and unrelinquished.[15] Patents when issued relate back to the date of entry,[16] or enactment of a law constituting a grant in praesenti.[17] Erroneous recitals in the patent not required by law are not binding.[18] An acceptance of a grant of a highway over public lands may be shown by general public user.[19]

Railroad grants[20] take effect in praesenti on lands then public if selection and location are all that remains to be done to pass the land,[21] and title passes on filing of the map of definite location[22] or actual construction of the road,[23] and compliance with other statutory conditions.[24] Title to land within the place limits of the grant

The Swamp and Overflowed Land Act (9 Stat. 519) is a grant in praesenti of the equitable title of all such lands within the state, and at the request of the governor the secretary of the interior should cause a patent to be issued to the state therefor and when the patent was issued the title related back to the date of the act. 21. The grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by the act of July 2, 1864, c. 217, 13 Stat. 365, was one in praesenti and was confined in terms to public land. Land not public at the date of the grant did not pass, though it subsequently became of that character. Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien [C. C. A.] 139 F. 614. Acts 1860-61, p. 136, entitled "An act to invest the swamp land in the Campagnolle swamp land district" as stock in a certain railroad, was not a grant in praesenti to the railroad, and the grant did not take effect until the making of a deed by the governor. Cotton Belt Lumber Co. v. Kelly [Ark.] 86 S. W. 436.

22. The grants to the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company and to the Southern Pacific Railway Company by Act Cong. 1866 were grants in praesenti, which, when the maps of definite location were filed and approved, took effect by relation as of the date of the act. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Lipman [Cal.] 83 P. 445.

23. A grant for a right of way becomes definitely fixed by the actual construction of the road as effectually as it could have been by the filing of the map of location. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Quigley, 10 Idaho, 770, 80 P. 401. Act Cong. March 3, 1873, c. 291, 17 Stat. 612, granting a right of way to the Utah and Northern Railway Company and requiring the filing of a map of definite location with the secretary of the interior, is substantially complied with so far as settlers are concerned by the actual construction and operation of the road. Id.

24. A finding that it had been finally determined that a railroad company had no interest in land claimed by it under a grant, and should not receive a patent, held not sustained by the evidence. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Lipman [Cal.] 83 P. 445. A finding that a railroad company did not use passes without selection and approval[25] if not subject to a prior grant,[26] but indemnity lands do not.[27] A grant of a right of way passes no title to land previously granted.[28] A grant of a right of way of a certain width carries a right to possession of a tract of such width.[29] The grant of a right of way is not an absolute fee for all purposes, but is in the nature of a conditional grant and limited to use and occupation for railroad purposes.[30] The franchise and right of way are inseparably attached, and the company cannot convey any part of the way in such manner or for such purpose as would sever the right of possession from the franchise.[31] It therefore follows that adverse possession cannot ripen into a right which would divert the use and occupation from that to which congress made the dedication.[32] "Public land" as used by congress, when a different intention is not clearly expressed, means such land as is subject to sale or other disposal under general laws, and not such as is reserved by competent authority, though no exception is made of it.[33]

Cancellations and forfeitures.[34]—Unearned railroad lands, title to which is resumed by the state and reverted to the United States, are not lands excepted from the operation of the grant within the meaning of section five of the Adjustment Act of March 3, 1887, and a purchaser from the company acquires no right to purchase from the United States.[35] One who purchases unearned lands from a railroad company, after the state has resumed title, acquires no rights and is not protected ordinary diligence to obtain patents is not sustained where delay was caused by failure of the land department to approve report of commissioners appointed to inspect the road, on which approval depended, and by litigation relative to its right to patents, which it prosecuted as diligently as possible. 25. Title within the place limits of the grant by the act of July 27, 1866, to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company passed on the completion of the road without selection and approval by the secretary of the interior, unless the tract was within the excepted classes. Howard v. Perrin, 200 U. S. 71, 50 Law. Ed. —.

26. Lands within the place limits of a railroad grant, but also included in the lines of an official survey of a Mexican grant made at the instance of the person to whom such grant was confirmed, held excluded from the grant to the railroad company. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 200 U. S. 354, 50 Law. Ed. —. The objection that there had been no final order of confirmation requisite under the act of March 3, 1851, to justify an official survey of a Mexican grant, because of an appeal from the decree of confirmation, is not available to defeat the contention that lands within the place limits of a railroad grant were excluded because included by a survey of the Mexican grant. Id.

27. No interest in lands within the indemnity limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by Act July 2, 1864, was acquired by the company until the selections were approved by the secretary of the interior. Sjoli v. Dreschel, 199 U. S. 564, 50 Law. Ed. —.

28. Under Act Cong. March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 482, granting railroads a right of way through public lands and providing that the manner in which private lands and possessory rights may be condemned, a railroad acquires no rights against an actual settler until condemnation, and if a patent is issued to him prior to condemnation, he has legal title free from any claim of the railroad. Slaght v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 1062.

29. The grant by congress of a right of way 100 feet wide on each side of the central line of the track was a conclusive determination of the reasonable and necessary quantity of land to be dedicated to such use, and carried with it the right of possession to the whole of such tract. 33. Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien [C. C. A.] 139 F. 614. Where a withdrawal of public lands along the route of a railroad, in aid of which a grant of lands has been made by congress, is made by the chief officers of the land department in advance of the definite location of the route of such road in order that the lands may be preserved for the ultimate satisfaction of the grant, such withdrawal, if not made in opposition to the terms of the grant or other congressional enactment, is a reservation made by competent authority. Id. The reservation during its continuance removes the lands embraced therein from the category of public lands, and excludes them from subsequent railroad grants containing no declaration of an intention to include them, even though it subsequently transpires that the withdrawal was ill advised or that the lands are not required for the satisfaction of the prior grant. as a bona fide holder under the Adjustment Act of March 3, 1887, as against one who enters under the land laws of the United States to which the lands were subsequently relinquished by the state.[36] The United States may cancel fraudulent entries as against the entryman, and innocent purchasers, prior to the issuance of the patent;[37] but the title of a bona fide purchaser subsequent to the issue of a patent is superior to the equitable claim of the United States to avoid the patent for fraud in its issue.[38]

Jurisdiction of land officers and courts.[39]—The land department of the government is invested with primary jurisdiction over the disposition of public lands,[40] and is empowered, in the exercise of such jurisdiction, to try and determine all adverse claims thereto.[41] Such jurisdiction is exclusive[42] except as to possessory rights.[43] In the exercise of that jurisdiction the land department is a judicial tribunal,[44] but a decision of the commissioner of the general land office in denying a patent is not a judicial determination of the title as between the applicant and caveator, who claims under a prior patent.[45] Its decisions are final and conclusive as to matters of fact, and subject to correction by the courts only in matters of law after final hearing and conveyance by the government,[46] and in the absence of the pleadings in contest cases, the recitals of the decisions of the department are conclusive as to what issues were determined;[47] but after title has passed from the Amonson [Idaho] 81 P. 71; Smith v. Love [Fla.] 38 So. 376. Le Fevre v. Amonson [Idaho] 81 P. 71.

It is not ground for equitable relief against a decision of the land department that perjury was committed during a contest over a homestead entry. Estes v. Timmons, 199 U. S. 391, 50 Law. Ed.—. Where two homestead applicants filed simultaneously a finding by the secretary of the interior that the one who had preserved his right since his settlement should be given preference over one who had abandoned his right is proper, where it did not appear that the right had been established prior to the settlement by the other. Love v. Flahive [Mont.] 83 P. 882. The allowance of an application to contest a final entry of public land is by rule of the general land office vested exclusively in the discretion of the commissioner of the general land office, and courts will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion unless there has been such an abuse

United States, equity will convert the holder of the legal title into a trustee, if in good conscience and by the laws of congress and rules of the land department the land should have gone to another.[48] It is the settled law of the interior department that a second contest will not be entertained against an entry of public land upon a charge which has been once investigated and decided.[49]

(§ 3) B. State lands.[50]—Contracts between individuals having for their direct object the acquisition of public lands in a lawful manner are not contrary to public policy.[51] A county which holds lands in trust cannot tie its hands so as to prevent execution of its trust.[52] Public lands must be disposed of in the manner provided by law,[53] and cannot be disposed of by a boundary agreement if the statute prescribes a sale.[54] The conveyance must be based on a consideration.[55] The consideration must be such as is provided by law.[56] A power in the county court to reject or confirm a sale gives it power to prevent a sacrifice of the land.[57] In Texas, school lands in the absolute lease district cannot be sold while there is a valid lease in force,[58] and the waiver of a lease by a lessee in favor of an ineligible purchaser does not authorize a sale to any other person during the existence of the lease.[59] The amount of land to be awarded to one applicant is regulated by statute,[60] and may depend on the character of the land[61] as classified by the constitution.[62] In Texas an assignee of an "entire lease" is entitled to purchase one complement.[63] Appraisers appointed to appraise land as leased land cannot be compelled to appraise it as land actually settled.[64]

An entry is not indispensable to the validity of a grant.[65] Actual settlement at the time application is made may be essential.[66] Such settlement must be in good faith.[67]

A premature applicant acquires no rights against one who files an application before an award is made.[68] By making a second application to purchase state school lands, the applicant does not waive his rights under the first application.[69] If an application for the purchase of a home section fails, a claim of the applicant for another section as additional land must also fail.[70] If impracticable, strict compliance with the letter of a statute, requiring an application for a land certificate to particularly describe the claim to be surveyed and the land applied for, is not essential.[71] One who intends to acquire title as a substitute purchaser must comply with statutory requirements.[72] A transfer from the purchaser to one who intends to become a substitute purchaser is not rendered void by a defect amounting only to an irregularity.[73]

complied with all rules and the land is on the market.[74] After the land commissioner has accepted an applicant's proof of occupancy and issued his certificate, he cannot reverse his decision merely because of an error on his part as to the sufficiency of proof of occupancy.[75] Where, pending a petition for mandamus to compel the commissioner to award school land to relators, without reserving minerals, they accept under protest an award containing such reservation, the petition will be denied,[76] and prior to their right to demand a patent they are not entitled to mandamus to determine the commissioner's right to make such reservation.[77] Courts will not inquire into the motive that prompted an order of the board of state land commissioners, rejecting an application to purchase, where such order is regular on its face and within the authority of the board.[78] An award of school land by the commissioner of the land office is prima facie evidence that at the date of such award the land was on the market, and that all prerequisites of his power to make a sale had been met.[79]

Adverse possession may give title,[80] but does not run against the title of a county to lands granted to it for educational purposes.[81]

Grants and patents.[82]—The issuance of a patent by the state at the request of the patentee is a mere grant of the state's right as it exists.[83] A deed should refer to statutory authority for its execution and show compliance with statutory requirements,[84] but the signature of the official who executed need not be attested by a seal.[85] A conveyance under a statute authorizing a lease reserving rent is void as a conveyance.[86] A patent may be shown by extrinsic evidence to be void,[87] but one regular on its face is not subject to collateral attack.[88]

Rescissions, cancellations, forfeitures, and reversions.[89]—Where land is granted by the state on condition subsequent, a breach of the condition will not defeat the estate until the state asserts a forfeiture,[90] and an individual cannot assail the title for nonperformance of the condition.[91] Where a contract for sale is made on the express statutory condition that rights thereunder are forfeited by failure to make deferred payments as required, a default in payment ipso facto forfeits the rights of the purchaser,[92] but if legal proceedings are necessary, mere failure to pay does not work a forfeiture;[93] and a tender before a forfeiture is declared, or other rights have intervened, will save the rights of the purchaser.[94] A forfeiture must be based on a finding of facts constituting ground for such action.[95] The state of Texas has power to forfeit, through a declaration of its land commissioner, a sale of lands for nonpayment of interest on the purchase money,[96] or for failure of the purchaser to live on and improve the land.[97] The act of the land commissioner in declaring such forfeiture has the effect of restoring such land to the public domain.[98] The declaration of a forfeiture, while land is in the adverse possession of another, tolls the statute of limitations as to him.[99] Where an award is cancelled for mistake in classification, the presumption of regularity in the acts of the commissioner pertains to the cancellation and not to the award.[1] of the parties to the reference.[3] Consequently, a party who intervened without authority is not aggrieved by a judgment that one of the parties to the reference is entitled to purchase,[4] nor can he raise the point that the parties to the contest have agreed to divide the land in order to evade a constitutional provision that lands shall be granted only to actual settlers.[5] Persons designated by statute,[6] and no others,[7] have a right to intervene. The right of an actual settler to contest adverse claims to purchase under the statutes of California may be lost by laches.[8] The supreme court of Texas has no jurisdiction to pass upon a question of fact, hence, an issue as to actual settlement on the land applied for deprives it of jurisdiction to determine the rights of an applicant against the commissioner of the general land office.[9]

§ 4. Interest and title of occupants, claimants, and patentees. A. Federal lands.[10]—The legal title to a timber culture claim[11] or homestead[12] remains in the United States until patent issued,[13] and any time before patent issues the land may be withdrawn from sale and reserved for public purposes,[14] and if the entryman die before such time, his heirs take as donees of the government.[15] This is so even though the entryman's administrator uses funds of the estate to commute the entry,[16] and if he leaves no heirs, the land is open as part of the public domain for occupancy by any qualified homesteader.[17] No right of property as against the government vests in a settler on public lands until he has complied with all the prerequisites for acquiring title, and paid the purchase money.[18] A mere occupant acquires no rights against the United States,[19] but a squatter on unsurveyed public lands has an inchoate interest in the timber growing thereon as against a trespasser.[20] An occupying claimant cannot be ousted by a claimant under a homestead entry where the merits of their opposing claims are involved in a contest pending before the land department.[21] The use of public lands for pasturage confers no title on the person using them.[22] No prior right is obtained by priority of use,[23] nor is such right enlarged by or dependent upon ownership of neighboring lands.[24] One who encloses public land in violation of an act of congress, being without right to possession or color of title, cannot prevent trespass on the land by another,[25] nor recover damages for being compelled to allow his stock to run on the common range because the land was depastured by the stock of another,[26] nor can he have incidental relief by way of enjoining another from continuing to depasture the land.[27] One who settles on unsurveyed lands with the intention of claiming them under the homestead laws acquires a prior right to file when the land is surveyed,[28] which is not lost by enforced absence.[29] This prior right carries with it the right to possession, which will be protected when unlawfully disturbed.[30] The improvements on public land, knowing that it is open for exploration and sale for minerals, but makes no effort to secure title to it, under the laws of congress or local rules of miners has no claim to possession or for improvements against a patentee. Helstrom v. Rodes [Utah] 83 P. 730.

Russian-American Packing Co.'s Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 460. Any rights acquired under the Act of March 3, 1891, by settlement upon and survey of public lands in Alaska, was terminated by the proclamation of the president reserving such lands for a fish culture station. The Act of May 17, 1884, providing a civil government for Alaska and recognizing the rights of Indians and settlers in the lands, and reserving to them power to acquire title, is not available to one who took possession five years after the passage of the act. Mere occupancy of public lands and improvements thereon is not a vested right as against the United States or a purchaser from it. Helstrom v. Rodes [Utah] 83 P. 730. A trespasser acquires no right to be compensated for losses sustained by reason of enforced removal. Russian-American Packing Co.'s Case, 39 Ct. Cl. 460. 29. Where a settler has established a residence and made improvements, his enforced absence by reason of conviction for title being an equitable one, courts of equity have jurisdiction of an action of which the right to possession is the subject-matter.[31] A claimant under a homestead filing, of land in the adverse possession of another cannot recover possession by injunction though the defendant is insolvent.[32] One contesting for a preference right has no right to possession pending litigation as against a homestead entryman.[33] After making final proof, a homestead entryman has an equitable title which he may transfer.[34] The acceptance and approval of an application to purchase land, not under the homestead laws, vests in the applicant an equitable title, though the purchase price has not been paid,[35] which is perfected as of the date of the application by the subsequent payment of the price and issuance of patent.[36] A homestead entryman is entitled to possession of the land covered by his filing until his entry is cancelled by a proceeding for that purpose.[37] The locator of a mining claim on public lands, who has complied with all the conditions necessary to entitle him to a patent, has an estate not perceptibly different from that acquired by an entryman of agricultural lands.[38]

A homestead entryman[39] or pre-emptor is forbidden to sell or contract to sell prior to the issuance of a patent,[40] but a timber culture entryman is not.[41] The doctrine of relation protects a bona fide purchaser of timber lands from the patentee against wrongful conduct of the entryman.[42] A mortgagee of a patentee, who takes with notice of a conveyance of timber and right of way, cannot challenge the validity of such conveyance because made pursuant to a contract entered into prior to the issuance of patent.[43]

A bona fide purchaser of standing timber from a holder of receiver's final receipts for the purchase price of land, entered under the Timber Act of June 3, 1878, cannot be required to account to the United States for timber cut and removed, where the patents afterward issued are avoided for fraud of the entryman. Id.; United States v. Clark, 200 U. S. 601, 50 Law. Ed. ——. 43. Hartman v. Butterfield Lumber Co.,

A homestead is forever exempt from liability for debts of the patentee contracted before the patent issued;[44] and under the Federal statutes relating to homestead and pre-emption acquisition of lands, where a homestead entryman commutes his entry, the commutation does not amount to a pre-emption and an abandonment of the homestead exemption rights,[45] nor are such rights abandoned where after commuting his land but before receiving a patent he conveys it and surrenders possession.[46] Where an entryman dies prior to patent issued his heirs take subject to voluntary liens placed on the land after making final proof, but not to debts created prior to such time.[47]

Patentees of land bordering on the Columbia River take subject to fishing rights secured to the Yakima Indians by the treaty of 1859, though their patents are in absolute terms.[48] Grants bordering on streams are to be construed as to their effect according to the law of the state where the land lies.[49] A patentee, though his land be itself surrounded by two channels of the river, has all the rights of a riparian owner in the channel lying opposite his banks.[50]

Where persons agree to fraudulently obtain land from the government, but the government with knowledge of all the facts issues a patent to one, an enforceable trust may result in favor of the other.[51]

The value of land erroneously patented to a railroad and sold by it to bona fide purchasers may be recovered by the United States.[52]

199 U. S. 335, 50 Law. Ed. ——. White, J., dissenting.

Note: Public lands upon original entry of claim become private property (Hastings, etc., R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 33 Law. Ed. 3637), in which the government, after the required conditions have been performed, holds a naked legal fee in trust for the prospective grantee (Cornelius v. Kessel, 128 U. S. 456, 32 Law. Ed. 482), who obtains a complete title upon the issuance of patent (Meader v. Norton, 11 Wall. [U. S.] 442, 20 Law. Ed. 184). Since the government, though it has been held to possess the power of restraining the alienation of a granted fee (Smythe v. Henry, 41 F. 705; Jackson v. Thompson, 38 Wash. 282, 80 P. 454), has not exercised it in this connection, the view that a conveyance by the grantee is not rendered invalid by reason of the fact that it was executed in pursuance of a prior illegal agreement is unassailable. It is true the government may have the patent, as issued upon fraudulent affidavits, set aside as against the patentee (United States v Minor, 114 U. S. 233, 29 Law. Ed. 110), and consequently as against his grantee with knowledge of the fraud (Mullan v. U. S., 118 U. S. 271, 30 Law. Ed. 170), yet this should not deprive such grantee of standing in equity to maintain his title as against a third person (Armstrong v. American Exch. Bank, 133 U. S. 433, 33 Law. Ed. 747). The practical result of this position, granting as it does full recognition to rights acquired by land speculators through the voluntary performance of illegal contracts, seems well supported in legal theory, though its conflict with the homestead laws may call for legislative interference along the line of restraints on alienation.—See 6 Columbia L. R. 195.

Adverse possession[53] does not run against a patentee prior to the issuance of patent,[54] but commences from the date patent issues.[55]

Area acquired and boundaries.[56]—It is presumed that a patent was intended to follow the survey.[57] Where the boundaries of grants lap, the elder grant prevails.[58] Ordinarily the question of the location of a disputed patent is one of fact, but is one of law where only the application of legal principles will leave no question.[59] An omitted line in a patent may be supplied by reference to the original plat or survey.[60] The official surveys made by the government are not open to collateral attack in an action between private parties.[61] A patentee cannot profit by a mistake of the land department of which he must have been cognizant.[62]

Mode of proving title.[63]—Receiver's final receipts are prima facie evidence that the lands they describe were honestly and regularly entered, and that the entryman is entitled to patents.[64] It is presumed that a patent was regularly issued and that all preliminary requirements have been complied with,[65] but the effect of it in passing title may be questioned in an action at law.[66] Copies of the records of the land department are admissible on the question of title under a railroad grant.[67]

(§ 4) B. State lands.[68]—One who has settled on school lands with the intention of becoming a purchaser, and has made valuable improvements, has such an interest as will entitle him to enjoin its sale to another,[69] but one in possession who has taken no steps to acquire title has no interest.[70] Nor has one who shows neither title nor possession.[71] A grantee from one who has no title but who subsequently acquires a certificate entitling him to a patent has rights superior to one who acquires a patent fraudulently.[72] That the consideration for school lands sold by the commissioners' court was defective does not invalidate the title of a bona fide pur-

71. Where one protests entry of vacant lands under Acts 1903, p. 447, c. 272, but shows no title except deeds running to other persons, nor any possession except for two years long past, his proceeding is properly dismissed. Johnson v. Wescott, 139 N. C. 29, 51 S. E. 784.

72. Where one sells land belonging to the state, but afterward purchases from the state and receives a certificate entitling him to a patent when the title of the state is confirmed by the United States, which equitable title vests in his grantee by virtue of statute, and subsequently a patent is fraudulently acquired by another from the chaser from the grantee.[73] One who claims under a prior survey has a vested right in the lands embraced in the boundaries of the survey as against one who claims under a subsequent survey.[74] A grant of land covered by a senior grant,[75] or a grant of land in which the state has no interest,[76] passes no title; and a junior entryman who seeks to impress a trust on a grant to a senior entryman has the burden to show that the senior entry was void for indefiniteness.[77] One is not deprived of a preference right to purchase by a statute providing for a lien on the lands.[78] In Texas the grazing rights of one who purchases land inclosed with leased land are governed by statute.[79] Where public lands are granted to certain proprietors in their corporate capacity as a town, the legal title vests in the town in trust for the purpose specified.[80] A grant of land subject to entry may not be collaterally attacked for fraud or irregularity,[81] but if the land was not subject to entry, the grant is void and may be collaterally attacked.[82] Prior to the location of his certificates a pre-emptor may transfer his rights by parol,[83] but after he has performed all the requirements of the law entitling him to a patent, he is in effect the owner of the land and can convey it only by a written instrument.[84] Title passed by patent is never relinquished by abandonment.[85] A purchaser on credit may abandon his location in the manner prescribed by law.[86]

Area acquired and boundaries.[87]—A purchaser of state lands who selects the land and has a "call" survey made by protraction without actually running the lines, and obtains a patent in accordance with such survey, takes the risk of overlaps on prior grants, and of loss by reason of extension of the boundaries beyond the state.[88] That the boundaries of a tract of land, as given in a patent based on a survey made at the instance of the patentee, extend beyond the state is not ground for relocation by the courts so as to place it all within the state.[89] A map and field notes referred to in a grant as defining the boundaries may be considered in aid of the description in the grant and to supply omissions.[90]

Mode of proving title.[91]—A conveyance from the state shows prima facie title in the grantee.[92] Transcripts of the records of the land office are of equal dignity as evidence as the originals,[93] if foundation is laid for their admission.[94] Which was a senior grant may be determined from recitals in the patents.[95] Where the land commissioner in issuing patents acts on the surveyor's correction of the original field notes, it is presumed that the correction was authorized.[96]

§ 5. Leases of public lands and rights thereunder.[97]—The mere filing of an application for a lease does not confer upon the applicant any interest in the land.[98] In making a lease of school lands statutory conditions must be complied with.[99] The lease must be executed at a legal meeting of the board authorized to make it.[1] If irregularly entered into it may be validated by statute.[2] Payment of the consideration in cash instead of in instalments as prescribed by statute does not render it void.[3] In Texas classification of lands is not a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of the commissioner of the general land office to lease the same.[4] Lands cannot be released while a prior lease is in force.[5] County commissioners' courts of Texas counties have power in leasing county school lands to contract that the lessee shall have a preference right to purchase.[6] The act of the commissioner in leasing lands is presumed regular.[7] The act of the state land commissioner in releas-

§ 6. Spanish and other grants antedating Federal authority.[12]—The absence of documents evidencing an ancient Spanish grant may be explained by showing a reasonable probability that they may have been lost or destroyed.[13]

§ 7. Regulations and policing, and offenses pertaining to public lands. Cutting timber on public lands.[14]—By act of congress bona fide residents of certain states and territories are given the right to cut timber from mineral lands.[15] Under this act timber cut may be shipped to any part of the state or territory and sold for any domestic purpose.[16] The classification as mineral of land within the limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the states of Montana and Idaho, by commissioners appointed pursuant to an act of congress, is not conclusive on the United States, and does not prevent the land department from making such disposition of them as may be proper on a subsequent showing that the land is not in fact mineral.[17] Where defendant's right to cut and remove timber from public land depends on the land being mineral and not subject to entry, except for mineral entry, evidence as to the use of the adjoining land for agricultural purposes is admissible.[18] The question whether such land is mineral is not the subject of expert opinion.[19] Where the register of the land office testifies that the land had been classified by commissioners as mineral land, the government is entitled to show by him in rebuttal the nonmineral entries of other lands in the township.[20] A partial survey by the United States by lines run on two sides of a section is insufficient to identify it as an odd numbered section, and within the grant to a railroad company, so as to constitute a defense to an action for cutting timber.[21] The United States may not sue in equity for the wrongful conversion of timber on the theory that the remedy at years, it is presumed that he first determined that the land was not in immediate demand for settlement and that it was not agricultural land, and his determination of these questions is conclusive. Sanford v. Terrell [Tex.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 58, 87 S. W. 655.

law is inadequate because of devices resorted to by the principal tort feasor to cover his tracks and render it difficult to prove a case against him,[22] nor because one of the defendants is executrix of the principal wrongdoer whose estate is solvent,[23] nor because a case for an accounting is made,[24] nor because a multiplicity of suits will be thereby prevented;[25] nor can the rule that proceeds of property obtained by theft or fraud may be recovered in equity as against a voluntary assignee, or one holding in bad faith, be invoked to sustain the jurisdiction where the allegations do not identify any specific proceeds.[26] That one compromises a prosecution for cutting timber as he may do under the Federal statutes is not conclusive of his guilt,[27] but it precludes a recovery of contribution against a joint wrongdoer.[28] An action to recover the enhanced value of timber taken is for a penalty.[29] Admission of evidence showing that the value of timber taken is greater than the verdict is not prejudicial.[30]

33. One who joins his fence to the fence of another in order to make a complete inclosure violates Act Feb. 25, 1885, c. 149, 23 Stat. 321, forbidding the enclosure of public lands. Thomas v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 136 F. 159. The fact that a fence is extended into the water, but cattle could get around the end at low water, and that there was a gap across an impassable canon, does not show that the enclosure was not complete., Id. Act Feb. 25, 1885, c. 149, 23 Stat. 321, making it unlawful to enclose public lands without claim of right under the land laws, applies to the enclosure of such lands by fences built on other lands. Cardwell v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 136 F. 593.

NOTE: An indictment for fencing public lands in violation of 23 St. U. S., p. 321, is fatally defective in not alleging that at the time the alleged enclosure was made the defendant had no claim or color of title "made or acquired in good faith, or an asserted right thereto by or under claim made in good faith with a view to acquiring title under the laws of the United States" (United States v. Churchill, 101 F. 443), but it need not allege that defendant had not improved or occupied under the United States land laws, as that is a matter of defense (United States v. Cook, 36 F. 896). St. 1901, § 1068, a petition to the mayor and council of a city of the second class confers upon them exclusive power to cause an improvement to be made and to determine the kind and quality thereof. Hence, they may enact, amend, or repeal any ordinance respecting such improvement if rights of third persons be not thereby prejudiced. Carey Salt Co. v. Hutchinson [Kan.] 82 P. 721. Where neither state nor city of Boston exercised options in contract for building of bridge and street for 30 years because the cost would exceed engineer's estimate, and city was not obliged to build at such cost, the existence of such contract, which neither could enforce, did not render St. 1903, p. 350, c. 381, requiring the city to do the work, invalid. Wheelwright v. Boston, 188 Mass. 521, 74 N. E. 937. Laws 1883, p. 666, c. 490, § 2, authorizing construction of an aqueduct between some point on Croton lake or river to some point in New York, with dams and reservoirs, authorized construction of a reservoir not in the direct line between the points selected. Walter v. McClellan, 48 Misc. 215, 96 N. Y. S. 479.

42. The determination of the jurisdictional fact that an improvement is necessary is judicial in character and cannot be delegated. City council could not delegate determination of question to street commissioners. Blanchard v. Barre, 77 Vt. 420, 60 A. 970. An ordinance requiring the board of works to report on the kind of material recommended for an improvement to the general council, which was then to pass upon the report and authorize the board to close a contract, is not objectionable as delegating legislative powers of the council to the board. Ex parte City of Paducah [Ky.] 89 S. W. 302.

43. City councils have power to determine what local improvement is required, its nature and character, when it shall be made and the manner of its construction. Ton v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 331, 74 N. E. 1044. City authorities have broad discretion in determining character of an improvement. Marshall v. People, 219 Ill. 99, 76 N. E. 70. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 3096, city councils of cities of the second class are the final judges of the necessity of sidewalks. Mudge v. Walker [Ky.] 90 S. W. 1046. City councils have the sole right to designate what streets shall be paved and the character of the paving. Wabash Ave., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 305. It was within power of city council to determine whether it was practicable to maintain a street by repairing it, or whether a complete resurfacing on the concrete base already down was necessary. Bush v. Peoria, 215 Ill. 515, 74 N. E. 797. Where an objector appeals to the city council, and his objections to the manner in which the work is done are overruled by the council, its action is final and the objections cannot be urged as a defense in an action to foreclose the lien of the assessment. Lambert v. Bates [Cal.] 82 P. 767.

44. The discretion of city councils in these matters, when honestly and reasonably exercised, will not be reviewed by the courts. Ton v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 331, 74 N. E. 1044. The action of local tribunals in determining the necessity for improvements will not be interfered with by the courts so long as they act within their jurisdiction. Dyer v. Woods [Ind.] 76 N. E. 624. A city council having power to make street improvements has authority to include storm sewers in an improvement, and the necessity of such sewers will not be reviewed in a suit to set aside the assessment. Parsons v. Grand Rapids [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 507, 104 N. W. 730. County commissioners have broad discretion in determining necessity of court house and selecting location, and court will not interfere with their action in the absence of an abuse of discretion. Anderson v. Newton, 123 Ga. 512, 51 S. E. 508. Action of police jury in undertaking construction of new court house on new site is not subject to judicial review. Dupuy v. Police Jury of Parish of Iberville [La.] 39 So. 627. Equity powers of a court will be slow to move where the issue relates to the discretion exercised by the proper officials as to the amount of work to be done and assessment to be levied for cleaning out and keeping in repair a public ditch or drain. Crawford v. Taylor, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 278.

45. Ton v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 331, 74 N. E. 1044.

§ 3. Funds for improvement and provision for cost.[47]—The power of municipalities to provide for the cost of public improvements, and the method to be pursued in making an improvement of a particular kind, are controlled by the fundamental law and general legislation pursuant thereto. Thus, according to the statute applicable in the particular case, the cost may be borne wholly by the municipality,[48] or wholly by abutting property,[49] or may be apportioned between the municipality and such property.[50] In some cases more than one method has been provided, any one of which may be followed,[51] and where discretionary power has thus been conferred, courts will not interfere with the selection made by the local authorities.[52] So, also, the apportionment of the cost between the municipality and private property by the local authorities is not subject to judicial review.[53] Though a city be authorized to make improvements either by special assessment or general taxation, if it

46. One complaining that an ordinance is unreasonable must prove his claim. Sidewalk ordinance held not unreasonable. Marshall v. People, 219 Ill. 99, 76 N. E. 70. Evidence held not to show that paving ordinance was unreasonable, though it required an old curb to be replaced with a combined curb and gutter, and decision of city authorities and county court approved. Lamb v. Chicago, 219 Ill. 229, 76 N. E. 343. Evidence held to sustain finding that ordinance was not unreasonable as providing for paving which was unnecessary. McLennon v. Chicago, 218 Ill. 62, 75 N. E. 762. Held not unreasonable to require paving of street intersection. Lamb v. Chicago, 219 Ill. 229, 76 N. E. 343. A provision of a sewer ordinance requiring house slants every 25 feet is not an unreasonable and arbitrary division of the owner's lands. Washington Park Club v. Chicago, 219 Ill. 323, 76 N. E. 383. Three ordinances were passed at different times concerning street improvements which adjoined or touched each other. No improper motives being shown, they were upheld as against objection that the works constituted but one improvement and should have been provided for by one ordinance. Ton v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 331, 74 N. E. 1044.

47. See 4 C. L. 1126.

48. In street vacation proceedings under Act April 21, 1858, P. L. 385, damages to property may be assessed against the city without any assessments against property owners. Penrose Ferry Avenue, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 341.

49. Where a city constructs a street through land which has been dedicated by the owner to the public, abutting property is liable for the cost. If the land has not in fact been dedicated, and the extension is without authority, the city is liable for the cost. Terrell v. Hart [Ky.] 90 S. W. 953. A street may be repaired in sections or parts and the property owners assessed to pay the cost thereof. Andrix v. Columbus, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 368.

50. Under Act 169, p. 340, of 1898, the cost of paving in Baton Rouge is to be borne by the city and abutting owners in certain proportions. Act No. 10, p. 9, of 1896, authorizing an assessment on railways occupying city streets was repealed as to Baton Rouge by the act of 1898. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Baton Rouge Elec. & Gas Co., 114 La. 534, 38 So. 444. Under Laws 1897, p. 421, c. 414, §§ 161, 162, where a property owner is instructed by village trustees to build a four foot stone sidewalk, he is entitled to credit of three-fourths the expense on his assessment, or to be reimbursed one-half the expense, even though the trustees have previously passed a general resolution that walks were to built at owner's expense. Sanford v. Warwick, 181 N. Y. 20, 73 N. E. 490. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1893, p. 271, c. 24, §§ 24, 55, 63, assessment vouchers issued by a city for its part of the expense of constructing local improvements bear interest until paid. City of Chicago v. People, 215 Ill. 235, 74 N. E. 137.
