(§ 7) B. Implied repeal. In general.[53]—Repeals by implication are not favored,[54] and in order that such a repeal may be given effect, the two statutes in question must be irreconcilable.[55] Every rule of construction is to be applied without efficiently harmonizing provisions seemingly in conflict before holding that there is any irreconcilable inconsistency between them,[56] the legal presumption being that the legislature did not intend to keep really contradictory enactments in the statute book, or to effect so important a measure as the repeal of a law, without expressing an intent to do so.[57] Nevertheless a subsequent statute repeals a prior one in so far as they are clearly repugnant,[58] although the earlier statute is not mentioned in the later one,[59] and even where statutes in pari materia are to be construed together, so as to make a harmonious whole, those of later date are to be given controlling preponderance where there is any inconsistency or uncertainty,[60] and where two sections in the same act are irreconcilable, the provisons of the later

Act May 23, 1901 (Kirby's Dig. § 5450), relative to the restraint of cattle running at large in cities of first and second classes and incorporated towns, does not repeal Act Apr. 20, 1895 (Kirby's Dig. § 5451), prescribing procedure in case of impounded animals. Town of Benton v. Willis [Ark.] 88 S. W. 1000. Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, §§ 6130, 6131, being c. 72, p. 587, Laws 1887, do not operate as a repeal of that part of § 8756 relating to the liability of municipalities for the construction and repair of bridges. Central City v. Morquis [Neb.] 106 N. W. 221. The amendment of 1854 (2 Acts 1853-54, p. 453, c. 913) was not repealed by that of 1869 (1 Acts 1869, p. 230, c. 1393), to the original charter of the Shelby Railroad, (2 Laws 1850-51, p. 368, c. 431), § 8. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Jarvis, 27 Ky. L. R. 986, 87 S. W. 759. Acts 1873, p. 100, c. 64 (Shannon's Code, §§ 4067, 6028), giving county courts concurrent jurisdiction with the chancery and circuit courts to sell real estate of decedents, etc., does not impliedly repeal the Code provisions for the administration of insolvent estates. Key v. Harris [Tenn.] 92 S. W. 235. The local option law (Laws 1905, p. 41, c. 2, § 1) does not supersede the provisions of the Portland city charter (Sp. 57. Wilson v. State [Fla.] 39 So. 471. Rev. St. 1892, § 2396, is not repealed by § 2598, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 4965, p. 111, they not being contradictory but denouncing separate and distinct offenses against females. Id.

58. Struthers v. People, 116 Ill. App. 481; Sandys v. Williams [Or.] 80 P. 642; State v. Drexel [Neb.] 105 N. W. 174. The anti-trust act of 1897, known as the "Gondring Act" (Sess. Laws 1897, p. 347, c. 79), was repealed by implication by the "Junkin Act" (Sess. Laws 1905, p. 636, c. 162) except as to § 1, defining "trusts." State v. Omaha Elevator Co. [Neb.] 106 N. W. 979. If there is an irreconcilability between the domestic wine act (Acts 1877, p. 33) and Acts 1877, p. 335, prohibiting the sale of liquors on the Island of St. Simons, it extends only to the wine whose sale is the subject of the general law, and the local act would be unrepealed so far as it related to liquors other than the wine referred to in the general law. James v. State [Ga.] 52 S. E. 295. The conflict between § 2805 and the later act of May 10, 1902, terminates all the powers of city boards of equalization appointed under the prior section. State v. Godfrey, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 511.

Determination of priority: Where an annual volume of laws contains two acts, identical except as to the penalty imposed, and both signed on the same day, it is competent for a reviewing court, having before it the case of an accused person sentenced under one of these acts, to determine whether the act under which sentence was pronounced was the one actually in force. Derby v. State of Ohio, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 91. In determining such a question, resort will first be had to the journals of the two houses of the General Assembly, and failing to thus establish which act was the last to be signed, the one which appears last in the printed volume, and to which the compiler of that volume has given the highest number, will be presumed to be the latest expression of the lawmaking power on that subject. one will govern.[61] Where the general provisions of a statute conflict with the express provisions of a later act, the latter governs, although the words of the earlier general act, standing alone, would be broad enough to include the subject of the more particular provisions,[62] but prior acts prohibiting particular kinds of combinations do not except dealers coming thereunder from the provisions of a later act covering all illegal combinations.[63] If the conflicting part of the later act is unconstitutional and void, it will not operate to repeal the former act by implication.[64] Repeals by implication are not affected by constitutional provisions requiring the subject of every act to be expressed in its title.[65]

A subsequent statute revising the whole subject-matter of a former statute, and evidently intended as a substitute for it, repeals the former statute,[66] although there are no express words to that effect.[67]

62. Act Feb. 25, 1852 (50 Ohio Laws, p. 84), giving probate courts general jurisdiction in habeas corpus (now incorporated in § 5727, Rev. Laws 1897, p. 347, c. 79, and Sess. Laws 1905, p. 636, c. 162, applying to all illegal combinations to fix prices, etc. State v. Omaha Elevator Co. [Neb.] 106 N. W. 979.

Act Mar. 20, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 422, c. 354), regulating chattel loans, did not take effect until May 19, and Act Mar. 21, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 711, c. 550), relating to the same subject, became effective on its passage. 67. Sandys v. Williams [Or.] 80 P. 642; Struthers v. People, 116 Ill. App. 481. A codifying act, designed to reduce all statutes on a subject to a complete and harmonious system, is presumed to exhaust the subject to which it relates unless a different intention appears on its face or is an irresistible inference from special circumstances, and is substituted in the place of all statutes previously existing and becomes the sole rule of action. Pratt Institute v. New York [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 1119. The Code of Alabama of 1896 is not a mere compilation of the laws previously existing, but is a body of laws duly enacted so that laws which previously existed cease to be law when omitted from said Code, and additions which appear therein become the law from the approval of the act adopting the Code. State v. Towery [Ala.] 39 So. 309. Act Feb. 12, 1885 (Acts 1884-85, p. 114), § 2, relative to the vesting of the homestead title in the widow in certain cases, was neither adopted into Code 1886 nor otherwise preserved, and was therefore repealed by the adoption of the Code. Bailes v. Daly [Ala.] 40 So. 420. But where a Code is a mere compilation, the failure by the compilers to include therein a statute, or a part thereof, does not amount to a repeal of it by implication when there is nothing in such Code inconsistent with it. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright [Ga.] 53 S. E. 251. The compilers of the Code of 1895 failed to include part of an act of 1885 (Acts 1884-85, p. 30) relative to returns of property for taxation, but it was held to be in effect. Id.

Repealing revisions: Act July 22, 1897, P. L. 305, intended as a substitute for the prior legislation relative to the assessment of school tax on male taxables over 21 years of age, as authorized by Act Apr. 11, 1862. Phillips v. Barnhart, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 26. Act July 11, 1901, P. L. 663, to regulate and establish sheriffs' fees, supersedes and repeals the fee bill of Apr. 2, 1868, P. L. 3. Lenhart v. Cambria County, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 350. Acts 1903, p. 428, to further regulate elections, is a general revision of the election laws, intended as a substitute for existing ones, and repealing them. Prowell v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 164. Act Mar. 11, 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 286, c. 120), relating to incompetents residing out of the state, repealed all conflicting laws by implication. Coleman v. Cravens [Wash.] 82 P. 1005.

68. See 4 C. L. 1542.

69. Acts 1894-95, p. 498, limiting the criminal jurisdiction of justices and notaries in certain places, was not repealed by Acts 1900-01, p. 216, § 8, relative to the jurisdiction of the circuit in the same locality. Lee v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 366. The result of the cases may be summed up as follows: First, the rule that a general statute does not repeal by implication a local act with different or inconsistent provisions is still the prevailing rule. Second, but the rule being founded on a presumption of legislative intent, will not apply when a contrary intent is clearly apparent. Third, where the clear, general intent of the legislature is to establish a uniform and mandatory system as in the municipal classification acts, the presumption must be that the local acts are incilable repugnancy between them,[70] but conflicts in terms and provisions between general and local acts often exist and yet both stand, each having a field of operation.[71] In such case a later general act does not repeal an earlier one, unless a repeal is necessary to give the words of the general act any meaning at all.[72] A city cannot be incorporated under a general law while a special act incorporating it is in force.[73]

STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

Grounds for stay.[74]—The effect of supersedeas bond is treated elsewhere.[75] Stay of proceedings is usually discretionary, and its granting or refusing is not error unless arbitrary and prejudicial.[76] The power to grant a stay is equitable in its nature, and intended to prevent the vexatious multiplication of suits,[77] and it is held in some jurisdictions that to authorize a stay the suit must be vexatious,[78] and a stay necessary to the ends of justice.[79] On the bringing of a second suit involving the same facts and for the same purpose against the same defendant, the rule is well established that a stay of proceedings will be granted until the costs of the former suit are paid, and if not paid in a reasonable time, a dismissal of the action will be proper,[80] but the motion for a stay for nonpayment of costs in some jurisdictions is addressed entirely to the discretion of the court and cannot be reviewed on appeal.[81] However, in case of vexatious suits brought and then abandoned, and new suits brought without payment of costs, it might be an abuse of discretion not to grant a stay until costs were paid or secured.[82] In New York stay of proceedings will not be granted for nonpayment of costs unless the new trial is conditioned thereon by statute or by the court.[83] On reversal of judgment the trial court may stay proceedings until plaintiff pays cost of appeal,[84] and it has been held that the court may stay a second appeal until the costs of the first appeal tended to be repealed. Fourth, where an act is passed to carry into effect a mandatory general provision of the constitution, the presumption must be that it was intended to repeal even local acts inconsistent with its terms. Nissley v. Lancaster County, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 405. Act Feb. 27, 1798, 3 Sm. L. 306, and Act Apr. 14, 1864, P. L. 422, creating "The Directors of the Poor and of the House of Employment of the County of Lancaster," and fixing their compensation, is not affected by Act July 2, 1895, P. L. 424, fixing salaries of county directors of the poor in counties of over 150,000 inhabitants. Id. Act Mar. 24, 1892 (P. L. p. 255), relating to assessment of damages in condemning land in first class cities, is not rendered inapplicable to Newark by the passage of the general condemnation act of 1900 (P. L. p. 79), that city being within the exception of § 17, p. 86. Morris v. Newark [N. J. Law] 62 A. 1005. Gen. Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 797, c. 908, § 4, subd. 7, as amended, exempting from taxation certain real estate of educational institutions, repealed the special provisions on that subject in the charter of the Pratt Institute (Laws 1887, p. 497, c. 398). Pratt Institute v. New York [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 1119. Acts 24th Leg. (Laws 1895), p. 213, c. 132, creating a road system for certain counties, provides that in case of conflict with the general laws the local act shall prevail. are paid.[85] The court may grant a stay in the later action to await the decision of the former.[86] Of course the stay must be on the ground that the action in the other case is material to the decision of the case stayed,[87] but a suit cannot be suspended merely because a legal question may be common to two suits,[88] nor ought a stay to be granted if another suit pending involves only one of the matters litigated, as it does not cover the whole case,[89] nor when the decision in one case will not determine the other;[90] but the fact that a former action is pending for the same cause between the same parties is not ground for a stay where the courts are in different states or one is a Federal and the other a state court,[91] not even if the Federal court is in a district embracing the state.[92] Neither does the fact that a criminal action is pending involving the same state of facts furnish a good cause for continuing a civil case,[93] nor will a stay of proceedings be granted a second action to await the decision of a prior action involving the same subject-matter, but different parties with varying and unparallel authority over the matter in litigation.[94] Proceedings under an interlocutory money judgment may be stayed without securing its holder for payment in case of affirmance on appeal.[95] The fact that an appeal is pending, if properly shown,[96] is ground for a stay in lower court,[97] but where the movant for a stay was the one who incurred the unpaid costs of an appeal,[98] and where the appeal was prosecuted merely to right an error committed by the lower court,[99] no ground for stay is laid because nothing constituting "vexatious multiplications" of suits is involved.[1] The grant of a stay of proceedings pending an appeal from an order vacating an attachment of the property of a foreign corporation is proper.[2]

In a previous case in municipal court defendant had sued the plaintiff for work, labor, and services rendered, and plaintiff had set up a counterclaim. Plaintiff procured a stay of proceedings in municipal court. This was error. Walkup v. Mesick, 110 App. Div. 326, 97 N. Y. S. 142. Where an action against a mortgagor, his wife, and several judgment creditors, to foreclose a mortgage was begun after an action instituted by the mortgagor as sole plaintiff to have the mortgage set aside as void for usury, no stay will be granted in the former action to await the decision of the later, because neither the parties, nor the cause of action, nor the relief sought are the same. Curlette v. Olds, 110 App. Div. 596, 97 N. Y. S. 144.

91. It was no abuse of discretion to refuse a stay of proceedings in foreclosing a mortgage brought in a county court, because the mortgagor had brought an action involving the validity of the same mortgage in a Federal court. Curlette v. Olds, 110 App. Div. 596, 97 N. Y. S 144.

92. Curlette v. Olds, 110 App. Div. 596, 97 N. Y. S. 144. Action brought by the City of New York against the Interborough Rapid Transit Co. to compel them to remove signs, vending and weighing machines from subway stations. Later similar action was brought by the Board of Rapid Transit Railroad Commissioners of the city. A stay of proceedings in later action granted on theory that former action covered all that the second one did. Held error because the board may have had greater or perhaps the only authority in the matter and preference is given by statute to actions by the board. Id.

Proceedings to obtain a stay.[5]—Where the statute requires the giving of a bond in order to procure a stay in actions for money judgments only, it is improper to grant a stay without requiring such a bond,[6] nor will an interlocutory judgment for the delivery of property enforceable "forthwith" be stayed unless its holder is given the benefits which would accrue from actual delivery.[7] Likewise a stay of proceedings will be granted to one sued for debt, entitled to an accounting on a copartner in the venture, provided he files a bond to pay the sum for which judgment against him may ultimately be granted.[8]

Effect of stay.—Conflict of jurisdiction arising on the pendency of two suits is obviated by a stay of one of them.[9]

A contract for steam supply for certain premises may be regarded as incident to the use thereof and incident to a lease,[11] and may be protected by an injunction where a sudden cutting off of the supply in violation of contract is threatened.[12]

STENOGRAPHERS.[13]

The appointment[14] of official stenographers is within the power of the courts in most states.[15] It is the practice in the courts of admiralty for the parties to stipulate for the employment of a stenographer,[16] but the court may in the furtherance of justice order the services of a stenographer to advance its business,[17] and

9. Pending proceedings in the courts of administration to sell decedent's lands for debts, a bill was filed by the purchaser for relief, the administrator filed a cross bill for specific performance, and the former proceedings were stayed by stipulation. Podesta v. Binns [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 815.

if the parties refuse to stipulate, it will authorize such employment where necessary in its discretion, and the stenographer's fees are taxed as costs upon the parties.[18]

The court in the exercise of sound discretion may in some jurisdictions order a transcript of the proceedings to be made by the official stenographer whenever necessary,[19] but in others it can order a transcript only when it is necessary to determine the accuracy of the bill of exceptions submitted to it,[20] and of course either party to a suit may order a transcript of the official stenographer's notes but is not bound to do so.[21]

The fact that a transcript of the evidence was not prepared by the official court reporter is no valid excuse for a refusal by the judge to sign said transcript,[22] for it is the duty of the trial judge to examine the bill of exceptions which is submitted to him and to determine whether it is correct and accurate, regardless of whether it is written up from the official stenographer's reports or not;[23] nor may the trial judge substitute the notes of the official court reporter for his own judgment or his own recollection as to what occurred on the trial, but he may use them as an aid to his memory.[24] The reporter's notes will not be accepted as determining what evidence was introduced and what rulings were made,[25] for signing and sealing a bill of exceptions is a judicial act, presupposing a judicial determination of its accuracy which cannot be delegated to a court reporter.[26] The trial court may designate a reasonable time within which the reporter shall file his transcript of the evidence,[27] but the court can designate the time only in cases where it is the duty of the reporter to make a transcript and the court is appealed to to designate the time within which the reporter shall perform his duty.[28]

The official court reporter is entitled to his per diem compensation and to be paid the same by the county treasurer independently and outside of the cost of writing up his notes after they have been taken, in many jurisdictions.[29] When the transcript is ordered by the judge or court, his fees therefor become a proper charge against the county treasury,[30] but where the request for a transcript comes from either party, the stenographer is bound to make it only on tender, or payment of his fees or charges.[31] If a person is unable to pay he may appeal to the judge who will order such parts of the record transcribed as is necessary and fit in criminal cases,[32] and the settled rule in Kentucky is that where a person is poor he is entitled to a transcript of the reporter's notes without payment.[33] Under a statute providing that an official stenographer shall be paid by the folio of 100 words, he cannot charge for punctuation marks.[34] Under a statute[35] providing that official stenographers of circuit courts shall be reimbursed for money actually expended in railroad fare, a stenographer who pays for his fare by labor, through private arrangement with the railroad company, is not entitled to be reimbursed by the county.[36]

STIPULATIONS.[37]

Right to make and form.[38]—Parties to actions may make stipulations for the government of their conduct,[39] or the control of their rights,[40] or the conduct of a litigation,[41] which, unless they be unreasonable or against good morals or sound public policy,[42] not only bind them but must be enforced by the courts,[43] and such stipulations may be by express agreement, by acts inconsistent with the objection, or by silence and omission to present proper objections when one ought to.[44] One may stipulate away statutory [45] and even constitutional rights. Facts may be stipulated by the parties and used as evidence,[46] but an oral agreement to enter into a written stipulation will not be enforced by the courts.[47] The attorneys in a case may agree to try the case on the sufficiency of the averments in the bill rather than the merits of the issue,[48] and for a judge to ignore such a stipulation would be reversable error.[49] An attorney can make stipulations binding his client as to the principal matter in an action,[50] but otherwise as to collateral matters,[51] and the client may by his acts ratify an unauthorized stipulation entered into on his behalf by his attorney.[52] The court cannot recognize nor the opposite party act upon any stipulation made by a litigant in a cause unless it is done with the express assent of his attorney of record,[53] hence the president of a corporation cannot stipulate a consent to judgment without the consent of the attorneys for the corporation,[54] and such a stipulation signed by a litigant himself can be made effectual only by an application to the court on notice to his attorneys.[55] A stipulation between attorneys to the effect that evidence set forth in a bill of exceptions on a previous appeal, that it shall be considered before the court, although not incorporated in the record in the latter case, will not be effectual.[56] Where a party is by statute disabled from acts in respect to a suit which lies without the province of his attorney, a stipulation by a party for discontinuance is ineffectual[57] except so far as the settlement on which it is based is ground of dismissal regardless of such stipulation.[58]

Enforcement and effect.[59]—The court always has the power to enforce in a summary way, by motion, the observance of an undisputed and proper stipulation entered into by the parties to an action,[60] but when the existence or validity of a stipulation is dependent on voluminous evidence, an action for its enforcement may be the proper remedy.[61] Where a stipulation, not in writing, is sought to be proved or disproved by the affidavits of the counsels, the court will not decide between conflicting affidavits.[62] Stipulations based on an erroneous interpretation of the legal effect of a contract should be disregarded.[63] A trial court may relieve a litigant from the effect of a stipulation because of mistake, inadvertence, or other good cause, but such relief must be promptly asked for.[64] Fraud will always avoid a stipulation even though signed by the litigant's attorney.[65] If not competent evidence, a fact, though stipulated, may be excluded.[66] Where a stipulation that no writ of error shall be prosecuted appears of record, it is proper to move the dismissal of the writ.[67] A stipulation not to present an application for the appointment of a receiver, but to hear a bill for such an appointment on its merits, does not preclude the appointment of a receiver after the cause is heard on its merits.[68] Where a

Note: In an action for libel the plaintiff's attorney entered into successive stipulations with the defendant's attorney for a year's extension of the time within which he might serve his complaint. The stipulations contained also the following provision: "The defendant to have the same amount of time in which to answer or demur to the complaint when the same shall be served, as the plaintiff has had altogether in which to serve the complaint." After the above extensions of time had been granted by the defendant the plaintiff obtained an order of substitution and his substituted attorney refused to be bound by this provision. Held the court will not relieve the defendant from such stipulations. Morris v. Press Pub. Co., 98 App. Div. 143, 90 N. Y. S. 673. An attorney has exclusive control of the suit and may enter into stipulations in regard thereto; thus he has authority to stipulate for a discontinuance but not to release the cause of action itself. Barrett v. Third Ave. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 628, 635. The court may relieve a party from stipulations entered into by his attorney (Barry v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 536), but the exercise of this power is discretionary and the party seeking relief must show that the stipulation was entered into under a clear mistake, or was procured by fraud, imposition, or collusion (Becker v. Lamont, 13 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 23). None of these elements existing and the sole ground for asking relief being the carelessness of the attorney, the courts have been prone to refuse it. So in an action for personal injuries a stipulation by the defendant's attorney that the cause of action should survive the death of the plaintiff was upheld. Cox v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 63 N. Y. 414. If, as in the principal case, the stipulation has been acted upon, it seems unjust to allow the party who has had the benefit to escape performance on his part. Mark v. City of Buffalo, 87 N. claimant agrees to abide by the result of the trial of a co-claimant, he is bound thereby, however erroneously or through whatever misfortune the conclusions may have been reached.[69] A stipulation that the pleadings, findings, and decree in a foreclosure suit are sufficient in form and substance will make such proceedings binding on one served by publication, and pass his interest in land sold under the foreclosure suit.[70] Where evidence in addition to a stipulation of facts is introduced without objection, it is proper for the jury to consider the evidence though it contradicts the stipulated facts.[71] A prior agreement, by which the interested parties mutually agree upon terms of settlement on condition that a patent in controversy is sustained by the courts, cannot upon principle and authority deprive a court of its inherent power and jurisdiction.[72] A stipulation, not limited to a particular occasion or temporary object, may be used in a later trial.[73] The court cannot infer an essential fact from the stipulated facts, which are not as a matter of law to be necessarily inferred, but is confined to a consideration of facts agreed to.[74] A stipulation of disclaimer of interest in property made at the trial will estop an appellant from urging that it was error not to make the person disclaiming a party defendant because of having an interest in fact in the property in controversy.[75] A minute entry by the court "heard," the time having gone by, is not equivalent to a stipulation or agreement to waive the irregularity in filing exceptions.[76] Admitting, by stipulation, the maintenance of a certain aperture, does not admit its maintenance in an unlawful condition.[77] An agreement empowering the judge to sign the judgment after adjournment does not include the form to hear and determine the motion to set the verdict aside.[78]

*Author of "Street Railway Accident Law."

This topic is limited to the law of street railways, excluding their ordinary character as corporations,[79] carriers,[80] or employers.[81]

§ 1. The franchise or license to operate a street railway and regulation of its exercise.[82]—The distinction between a street railway and a general traffic railroad depends not upon the motive power used but upon the general character of the road.[83] The distinction is fundamental, and statutes relating to railroads are not construed to include street railroads.[84] There is no warrant in the legislation providing for intra and extra urban railways for the theory of classification of municipal and interurban passengers on any basis which would discriminate in favor of one as against the other with respect to rights of transfer on railways within the city limits; on the contrary, within the city limits, urban and interurban passengers have precisely the same rights as to transportation.[85] In Kentucky street car franchises must be offered for sale to the highest and best bidder.[86] The franchising power is in the state which has paramount authority over streets and highways,[87] though the obtaining of the consent of local authorities is often required,[88] and as

An electric street railway company was organized under the railroad law, as distinguished from the street railroad act, and was authorized to operate through several counties, and transport passengers, their ordinary baggage, mail, express, and milk, is a commercial railroad, and is not entitled to lay its tracks in a street, the fee of which is in the abutting owner, without condemning a right to do so. Wilder v. Aurora, De Kalb & R. Elec. Traction Co., 216 Ill. 493, 75 N. E. 194. An electric railway, operating beyond the limits of a city, and into a town incorporated for the mere maintenance of a park adjacent to the city, was a street railway, within a power reserved in the lease of the land used for the park, reserving to the lessors the right to grant a right of way through the land "for street railway purposes." Montgomery Amusement Co. v. Montgomery Traction Co., 139 F. 353.
84. A city ordinance providing that it shall be unlawful for any locomotive, railroad car, or other vehicle to be propelled or drawn on such part of any railroad as shall be within the limits of a city at a faster rate than six miles an hour, has no application to the cars of a street railroad operated in such city. Licznerski v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 62 A. 1057. The law relating to the establishment of grade crossings (97 O. L. 546) relates exclusively to steam railroads, and in the case of an application to the common pleas court under this act by a railroad for permission to lay its tracks at grade over street crossings, and to prescribe what gates, signals, etc., shall be maintained, if the court find from the testimony that such railroad is not a steam railroad it is without jurisdiction in the premises. Where the consent of a supervisor of a township was essential for an extension of a street railway, and the office of supervisor was abolished during the life of the street railway, extension cannot be made without official consent, but the provision is satisfied by the consent of the trustees of the town, which had the power to control and supervise streets and highways. Blair v. Chicago, 26 S. Ct. 427. Id. Where an ordinance granting a franchise to a street railway company provided that before the rights conferred should be enjoyed the company should obtain from the county court a confirmation of the right of way over a bridge, the obtaining of the a matter of practice the power of the state to determine upon what conditions the franchise shall be granted is to a large extent delegated to the municipal or other local authorities,[89] the legislature having the power to determine by what officer or board such delegated power shall be exercised,[90] and, as a check upon the power of the local authorities, the consent of a certain proportion of the abutting owners is usually made a further condition precedent to the granting of the franchise.[91] consent of the county court was a reasonable and enforceable condition precedent to the acquisition of any rights under the franchise, and the company was required to obtain the consent within a reasonable time, one month not being long enough to be termed a reasonable time. Little Rock R. & Elec. Co. v. North Little Rock [Ark.] 88 S. W. 826. Where, in a suit to annul a street railway franchise, conferred by ordinance, providing that, before the franchise should be enjoyed, the company should obtain from the county court a confirmation of the right of way over a bridge, the complaint alleged that application to the county court to confirm the right of way had never been made, and the answer admitted the allegation and the only proof was the testimony of the company's manager that no application was made to the county court, and that he had believed that permission to cross the bridge would not be granted, the question of the authority to revoke the franchise on the refusal of the county court to grant permission was not presented. Little Rock Ry. & Elec. Co. v. North Little Rock [Ark.] 88 S. W. 1026.

89. The granting of power to a municipality to pass all necessary ordinances for the protection of the safety of citizens is not an infringement of the maxim that legislative power may not be delegated. Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 189 Mo. 107, 88 S. W. 648.

90. A statute giving the control of streets of the city of New York, and the power to grant franchises to street railway companies, to the board of estimate and apportionment, taking the power away, from the board of aldermen, is constitutional and does not violate that provision of the constitution prohibiting the legislature from passing local bills authorizing the construction of street railways except with the consent of the local authorities having control of the public streets. Wilcox v. McClellan, 47 Misc. 465, 95 N. Y. S. 941. A statute transferring from the board of aldermen to the board of estimate and apportionment the authority to consent to the use of the streets by corporations having franchises therefor, is not in conflict with a provision in the constitution authorizing the legislature to pass general laws providing for the construction and operation of street railroads on the consent of the local authorities, the legislature having the right to designate the local authorities whose consent is required, and the board of aldermen having no right to retain control over the streets for the purpose of giving such consent. Wilcox v. McClellan, 110 App. Div. 378, 97 N. Y. S. 311. Where a statute makes a street railway company city property, and vests control in the rapid transit commissioners, a borough president has no authority to remove advertising signs, news stands, and automatic vending machines from the stations of the road, and his act in threatening to do so may be enjoined. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. v. New York, 47 Misc. 221, 95 N. Y. S. 886.

91. Under the New York statute which requires the obtention of the consent of the owners of one-half in value of the land abutting on a street before a street car line may be built thereon, the value of the land is estimated on the value of the entire tract bounding on the street as appearing on the last assessment roll. The fact that it extends back to another street has no effect. Fox v. New York City Interborough R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 338. Consent of abutting owners requires by statute in order to confer jurisdiction on a township committee must be a consent that municipal permission may be granted for the construction of the street railway line for which application was made to the township committee, and consents of said owners acknowledged prior to the date on which the company resolved to construct its line and the date on which the ordinance was introduced are not valid. Mercer County Traction Co. v. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 461. Where a statute provided that a street surface railroad should not be built unless the consent of the owners of one-half of the assessed value of the property "bounded on" the street should have been obtained, and property relied on toward making up the one-half of the value of the property abutting on a street on which a railroad was contemplated consisted of an entire block fronting on the street and extending eight hundred feet to a street in the rear, the block having been improved and used for an academy and being assessed as a single tract, it was held that the manner of assessing the property did not deprive the court of the power to determine what part of it should be deemed as "bounded on" the street, and in determining the voting power of the tract it should neither be taken as a whole nor regarded as a tract fronting on the street and extending back one hundred feet, but the court should make such an apportionment of the value thereof as would result in giving justice to the railroad company and an objecting property owner. Fox v. New York City Interborough R. Co., 48 Misc. 162, 95 N. Y. S. 251. A statute providing that a city shall not grant a street railway franchise excepting to the corporation or individual that will agree to carry passengers at the lowest fare, and shall have obtained the written consent of a majority of the property holders upon each street, confers upon the property holders the right to grand or withhold consent, but not the right to limit their consent to a particular corporation or individual. Such limitation in his consent is void, but the consent is good as a consent to the lowest bidder. Forest City R. Co. v. Day [Ohio] 76 N. E. 396. Where a petition of abutting owners for the grant of a street railroad franchise prayed that such grant should be for a

Municipal authorization has of course no extra-limitary effect.[92] Municipalities must conform to the authorizing statute, but a complete and proper municipal grant is not affected by the fact that it purports to be an amendment of a previous void grant.[93] Where a franchise is granted by the state subject to a municipal regulation, the corporate franchise granted by the state is distinct from the street railway franchise, which is to be exercised only on terms imposed by the city whose streets are used.[94] Where the power of a municipality over certain territory is suspended by injunction, no franchises can be granted therein and expenditure by the railway company does not work an estoppel.[95] If the grant of a franchise gives an option as to nature and extent of structure and affixes a time limit for construction, no additional construction is authorized after such time[96] unless excuse for delay is shown.[97] The grant is to be strongly construed against the company.[98] Franchises are not exclusive unless expressly made so[99] or unless statutes so provide.[1] Right to make connections with another company is not implied.[2] A franchise may prop-term of forty years from the passage of the ordinance, an ordinance, granting authority to a traction company for a term of thirty-eight years from the passage thereof, did not conform to the petition. Wilder v. Aurora, De Kalb & R. Elec. Traction Co., 216 Ill. 493, 75 N. E. 194. Where a petition by property owners for the passage of an ordinance granting a street railway franchise, as required by statute, was for the grant to certain individuals, their representatives and assigns, and not to defendant corporation, and an ordinance granting such franchise to such individuals was void, an assignment of their rights thereunder to a subsequent corporation did not operate as an assignment of the petition so as to entitle the city council to pass another ordinance thereunder granting a new franchise to the corporation. 93. Previous grant was to individuals and statute authorized only grant to company. Wilder v. Aurora, De Kalb & R. Elec. Traction Co., 216 Ill. 493, 75 N. E. 194.

94. By statutes of 1859 and 1861, street railway companies were incorporated with a corporate life of twenty-five years, subject to the authority of the city of Chicago to fix the terms and conditions upon which said companies should occupy its streets. By statute of 1865 the corporate life of these companies was extended to ninety-nine years. It was held that under the earlier statutes the city had the power to fix the term of the occupation of the companies, and that the statute of 1865 did not give the right to use the streets for ninety-nine years without reference to any limitation as to time fixed by the city. Blair v. Chicago, 26 S. Ct. 427.

95. Little Rock Ry. & Elec. Co. v. North Little Rock [Ark.] 88 S. W. 826.

96. A city ordinance, granting a street railway the right to build and maintain a single or double track railway, with all necessary switches or turnouts upon certain streets of the city, provided that the entire line shall be completed and in operation before a certain date, gives the railway an option to build either a single or a double track line within the specified time, and its exercise of that option, by building and putting in operation a single track line, exhausts its rights under the ordinance, and it cannot, after the expiration of the time limited, lay additional tracks and thus convert its line wholly or partially into a double track line. Eastern Wisconsin Ry. & Light Co. v. Winnebago Traction Co. [Wis.] 105 N. W. 571.

97. When a street railway by an ordinance is allowed a certain time in which to lay its tracks, and, that time having expired, seeks to enforce its rights by mandamus, it must allege such a state of facts as excuses the delay, and where it was provided that delay caused by injunction should not be counted, an injunction on an unimportant connecting line will not serve as an excuse. Blocki v. People [Ill.] 77 N. E. 172.

98. A grant by the public, such as authority by a city to a street railway to build its road in the street, is to be construed most strongly against the grantee. Such a grant is a mere license to be exercised upon the conditions named in the grant. Blocki v. People [Ill.] 77 N. E. 172.

99. In the absence of statutory restriction a city council has power to grant a right to construct a street railroad over substantially the same route as that embraced within the franchise of another corporation. Electric City R. Co. v. Niagara Falls, 48 Misc. 91, 95 N. Y. S. 73.

1. Where a statute provides that no street surface railroad corporation shall construct, extend, or operate its road or tracks in that portion of any street, avenue, road, or highway in which a street surface railroad is or shall be lawfully constructed, except for necessary crossings, without first obtaining the consent of the corporation owning or maintaining the same, it was held that the consent of an existing railroad to the use of streets occupied by it by a competing company was not a condition precedent to the right of such competing company to obtain the consent of local authorities to the use of such streets. Electric City R. Co. v. Niagara Falls, 48 Misc. 91, 95 N. Y. S. 73.

2. The grant by a city to a company organized under the train railway act, of the right to construct and operate a street railway with all necessary tracks and connections, all tracks to be constructed under the supervision and with the approval of the common council, does not authorize the company to make a connection in the streets of erly be renewed and extended.[3] A provision for forfeiture of the franchise in case of noncompliance with certain conditions may be embodied in the permission granted by the legislature or by a municipality to construct and operate a street railway.[4] Franchise rights cannot be collaterally questioned,[5] but a street railroad company seeking to enforce rights must show the jurisdiction of the officers granting the same.[6]

Rights and duties under franchise.[7]—It is well settled that under its franchise a street railway company secures certain vested rights which cannot arbitrarily be interfered with.[8] On the other hand, the legislative power granting the franchise the city with the tracks of a company organized and operating under the general railroad laws, and having no franchise from the city, though in the ordinances granting franchises to such train railway company and to another company organized under the general railroad laws, a connection between them, and transfers from the one to the other, were required. City of Monroe v. Detroit, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 1035, 106 N. W. 704.

3. An intention to prolong the life of a street railway franchise from the date originally fixed for the termination to a date fixed for the expiration of a franchise granted to another company with which the company operating the former franchise was, with the consent of the city, consolidated, must be inferred from subsequent ordinances authorizing the consolidated company to extend its lines and change to electricity as a motive power, the rights under all of which were to terminate with the franchise of the "main line" which was recognized as continuing until that date. Such extension does not violate a statute that a city shall not release the grantee from any obligation or liability imposed during the term of a street railway grant or renewal thereof, nor a statute permitting a city to renew a street railway grant at its expiration. City of Cleveland v. Cleveland Elec. R. Co., 201 U. S. 529, 5 L. Ed. ——. An ordinance which recites that it is intended by it to renew and extend all the franchises, rights, and privileges now owned by a street railway company, and which provides in plain terms that the rights, privileges, and franchises granted under a former ordinance "be and the same are hereby renewed and extended," continues and renews the right of the company to lay tracks on a portion of the territory covered by the original ordinance, but not constructed at the passage of the renewing ordinance, notwithstanding the fact that such territory is not specifically named in the renewing ordinance. City of Akron v. Northern Ohio Traction & Light Co., 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 445.

4. Where one section of a statute provided that if any railroad corporation within five years after its certificate of incorporation was filed failed to begin construction, its corporate existence should cease, and another section on street surface railroads provided that if any such railroad began the construction of its road or an extension within a year after consent was given and did not finish in three years all rights should be forfeited, it was held that a street railway given the right to construct an extension and not commencing within five years lost its rights ipso facto under the first section quoted, the same being self-executing. In re Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co., 106 App. Div. 240, 94 N. Y. S. 113. When an ordinance granting a street railway franchise provides that a failure to comply with the terms and conditions of the ordinance after twenty days' notice from the city council shall operate as a forfeiture of all rights and franchises granted, the failure of the owner of the franchise to lay a track in a portion of the territory covered by the franchise will not work a forfeiture of its rights to lay such track in the absence of notice given as provided in the ordinance. City of Akron v. Northern Ohio Traction & Light Co., 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 445. Permission by a municipality to a street railway company to construct and operate its railway in the streets of the town, when the ordinance is accepted by the company, constitutes a contract, and if the ordinance provides for forfeiture as the penalty for non-compliance with certain conditions, substantial performance is no defense, even though the conditions not complied with are of relatively small importance. Equity, however, has discretionary power in such a case to grant relief from forfeiture to prevent unfairness and oppression, and where the company is able and willing immediately to perform the covenant the company is entitled to an injunction preventing the town authorities from removing or disturbing its track. Wheeling & E. G. R. Co. v. Triadelphia [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 499.

5. Whether occupation of streets was unlawful because without consent of municipality cannot be raised in an action for personal injuries. Roberts v. Terre Haute Electric Co. [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 323.

6. Upon application to court of chancery, under statute, to define the mode in which one railroad may cross another, it was incumbent upon the petitioner to show it had lawful power to construct the road, and therefore to show the jurisdiction of a township committee granting such power. Mercer County Traction Co. v. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 461.

7. See 4 C. L. 1560.

8. See Constitutional Law, 5 C. L. 619; Franchises, 5 C. L. 1518. Where a street railway company was in existence prior to the passage of a statute providing a method for alteration and amendment of street railway charters, and was therefore authorized to make alterations in its charter and to change its lines and their termini as provided by an earlier statute, the company's right under the earlier statute was saved from the effect of the later act by a clause thereof that nothing therein should be so may reserve the power to alter, amend, or repeal the charter of the company, subject to the qualification that this right is not to be exercised in an arbitrary manner.[9] A law empowering the city solicitor to sue in the name of the city, "whenever an obligation or contract made on behalf of the corporation, granting an easement or creating a public duty, is being evaded or violated," authorizes a suit by the city solicitor to enjoin traction companies from refusing to give or receive transfers in accordance with the grant to the lessor company.[10]

Rates, fares, and transfers.[11]—The requirement by statute that street railway companies shall issue half-fare tickets to school children does not impair the obligation of any contract with the municipality fixing the rates which such company might charge.[12] The giving of transfers is for the benefit of individuals and mandamus will not lie to enforce a contract obligation to do so, but only one imposed by positive law.[13] The state or city may take street railway property for the purpose of linking it with some larger corporation so as to compel operation on the one fare and universal transfer principle, but cannot compel independent private corporations to so operate.[14] It cannot compel independent street railway companies to enter into a co-partnership for the purpose of accepting transfers from each other.[15]

§ 2. Property and the acquirement thereof; eminent domain.[16]—A street railway franchise carries no implied power of eminent domain,[17] and where the power of eminent domain was given to a corporation under certain conditions which have construed as to affect the rights, etc., of any corporation now existing and chartered under the general or special laws of the state. Montgomery Amusement Co. v. Montgomery Traction Co., 139 F. 353.

9. All domestic corporations being by the Code subject to legislative control at all times, where a street railway company is granted a franchise with an exemption from liability for paving the streets, there is no impairment of the obligation of contract in a later statute requiring the company to do such paving between its tracks and for one foot outside. Marshalltown Light, Power & R. Co. v. Marshalltown, 127 Iowa, 637, 103 N. W. 1005. A supplement to a charter of a street railway company enacting that no municipal corporation shall interfere with the company's constructing and running its railroads, provided the same are constructed and run according to the charter, does not discharge the company from its contractual obligations to a city previously undertaken by the company, and does not modify the terms of contracts thereafter made between the city and the company. Jersey City v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 61 A. 95.

12. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Altgelt, 200 U. S. 304, 50 L. Ed. ——. Any contract exemption from legislative regulation of rates, possessed by a street railway company chartered before the adoption of the Texas constitution of 1876, which, by § 17 of the Bill of Rights, subjects to the control of the legislature all privileges and franchises granted by it or created under its authority, was lost by the sale of its property on foreclosure, and the acquisition of its franchise, under a municipal ordinance, together with that of another company, by a new corporation incorporated since the adoption of such constitution, although such ordinance provides that all the rights and privileges previously granted to the old corporations were conferred on the new one, including all the limitations, contracts, and obligations. Id.

13. A writ of mandamus should not issue at the instance of a municipal corporation to compel a street railway company to give transfers to its passengers within the municipality when the obligation of the company to do so arises wholly from its assent to certain municipal ordinances, which of themselves have no legislative force. City of Newark v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 62 A. 1003.

14. Chicago City R. Co. v. Chicago, 142 F. 844. On a question of compelling independent street railway companies of Chicago to accept transfers from each other, the constitutional question of due process together with multiplicity of suits is involved so as to give rise to a suit in equity under the constitution and give the Federal courts jurisdiction. 17. The county court from which authority was obtained had no control over private ways. Restetsky v. Delmar Ave. & C. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 85 S. W. 665. The charter of a street railway company, authorizing it to acquire such real and personal estate as may be necessary and convenient in the prosecution of its business, does not confer the power of eminent domain, the charter not conferring the power expressly, pointing out any steps to be taken in its exercise, or making any provision for compensation. Claremont R. & Lightning Co. v. Putney [N. H.] 62 A. 727. A statute providing that street railway companies may take and hold such lands as may be necessary to install and maintain power plants does not author-all been exercised and complied with years before, a street railway company, coming into possession of its franchises, cannot use the power to extend the tracks formerly laid or change the route.[18] Where the power for condemnation was given for surface roads it cannot be used for elevated roads.[19] Where such power is given property may be condemned for sites for barns and power houses.[20] Property may of course be acquired by purchase or lease.[21]

§ 3. Taxes and license fees.[22]—An exemption from taxation will not be sustained unless the intent of the legislature clearly appears.[23] A street railway company may not be assessed for the widening of a street merely because of its occupation of the street with its track.[24] In an action to recover taxes on cars, where the ordinance provides a specified tax on each car running within said borough, it is not necessary that each car run every day, nor the whole of any particular day.[25] Where, under an ordinance providing for a specific tax on each street car, the company refuses to give a list of the cars operated, the public may offer in evidence the testimony of policeman authorized to make and keep a list of the numbers of cars passing on three different days, and it may base its tax on these lists.[26]

§ 4. Street railway corporations.[27]—The corporate activities of a street railway company are governed by the rules relating to corporations generally.[28] Leases by street railroad companies[29] are generally sustained unless they amount to a ize a street railway company to condemn land and water privileges to divert streams and procure power with which to operate power plants erected on its own land, but the authority is limited to taking such land as may be necessary for locating or placing power plants in position for use and maintaining the same Id.

21. Where a town was incorporated merely for park purposes, had never been platted, was without streets, and its entire territory had been surrendered to a private corporation, it was nevertheless a town which might legally be made the terminus of a street railway, and the building of such railway into the town not being ultra vires, the railway had a right to acquire a right of way over private property within the town by purchase or lease from the owners, regardless of whether it had power to condemn a right of way over property in the town. Montgomery Amusement Co. v. Montgomery Traction Co., 139 F. 353. Where a lease of land for park purposes reserved to the grantor the right to grant a right of way through the park for street railway purposes, mere acquiescence by the lessors in a prior entry of a street railway company into the park at the instance of the lessees, and its use of a part of the premises as a station for receiving and delivering passengers, did not constitute an exercise of the power reserved. Id.

22. See 4 C. L. 1562.

23. A statute requiring street railway companies to pay for paving between the tracks is an exercise of the taxing power of the legislature, and since an exemption from taxation will not be sustained under the intent of the legislature clearly appears, a prior statute granting certain immunities from paying for paving is not a contract right of which the company cannot be deprived, but a mere gratuity, recoverable at the pleasure of the legislature, and such immunity, being a personal one, does not pass to a lessee of the road. City of Rochester v. Rochester R. Co., 182 N. Y. 99, 74 N. E. 953.

24. In re East 133d St., 9 N. Y. S 76. In proceedings to acquire land for the widening of an avenue in New York city, the right of street railway, electric light, telephone, or gas supply corporations to maintain their rails, wires, and pipes on such street being unaffected by the widening or narrowing of the street, and not being in any way increased in value because of the widening, such corporations are not subject to assessment for benefit because of such improvement under the Greater New York charter. In re Anthony Ave., 46 Misc. 525, 9 N. Y. S. 77. Under an ordinance granting a street railway franchise containing a provision that, if on said street a pavement has already been laid and an assessment therefor placed on the tax duplicate, and that said company shall pay to the city such proportion of the assessment for said improvement as the space occupied by its tracks and one foot on the outside of the outer rails thereof bears to the entire width of the improved railway, held that the railway company is bound by its contract to pay said proportion of the assessments made and levied upon the feet front of the abutting property, and cannot defend upon any of the grounds that would have been available to abutting lot owners, or to the company if not bound by such contract obligations. 29. Adjustment of rights on expiration of lease: Where a lease of the lines of a consolidated street railway company to defendant provided for a return of equipment, on cancellation of the lease, to each company, of equal value to that received by the lessee, the lessor's claim for return of specific cars virtual surrender of the corporate franchises,[30] and lessees and sublessees are bound by all the obligations of the original charter.[31] Where the lessee of a railroad company agrees to pay all damages incident to its operation, the lessee may be called in warranty as defendant in the place of the owner in Louisiana.[32] Where a street railway company enters into a contract whereby competition will result with the effect that its value as security will greatly diminish, a court of equity will interfere on behalf of a mortgagee.[33] Transfer of a franchise is sometimes permissible,[34] and the successor of a street railroad company is not liable for negligence of the original company.[35] Where a railroad was empowered by its franchise to operate on behalf of certain of the consolidated companies or termination of the lease by the insolvency of the lessee was an equitable right enforceable against property in the hands of its receivers by petition for surrender of specified cars, but the lessor's claim, under a betterment clause in the lease, for a share of cars purchased by the lessee which had not been appropriated to such lines, was a legal claim, allowable only as a claim against the proceeds of a sale of all of the insolvent's property by the receivers. Johnson v. Lehigh Valley Traction Co., 138 F. 601. A consolidated electric railway company, composed of several independent companies, leased its lines to defendant, the lease providing that defendant, in addition to rentals, should expend $100,000 for improvements within two years, so that at all times the roads and rolling stock should be at least of equal efficiency and value as at the date of the lease; and at the termination of the lease defendant agreed to return the property to the consolidated companies in as good condition and repair as it was at the date of the lease, together with all the improvements, additions, betterments, enlargements, and extensions which were made during the lease. Held, that on defendant's insolvency and cancellation of the lease, the receivers were bound to return equipment to each subordinate company equal in value and efficiency to that which was received, and not merely equipment equal in value and efficiency to that received under the lease as a whole. Held, also, that the excessive value of equipment returned to one of such companies could not be set off against the claim of another company for return to it of cars of equal value and efficiency. Id.

30. A street railway company wishing to extend the tunnel under a river, leased from a connecting street railway company the right to use part of its land for such purpose for nine hundred and ninety-nine years. The land was practically vacant, and such use did not interfere with exercise of the franchises of the lessor. Held that such lease was not ultra vires, and when defendant interfered by force, plaintiff was entitled to an injunction restraining such acts. Hoboken & M. R. Co. v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 539. Although a railroad company leases so much of its terminal plat for nine hundred and ninety-nine years as to permanently prevent the enlargement of its terminal facilities, a mortgagee holding as security the franchises of the company cannot on this ground restrain the performance of the contract. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Hoboken & M. R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 273.

31. The provision of § 1777, empowering the city solicitor to sue in the name of the city, "whenever an obligation or contract made on behalf of the corporation, granting an easement or creating a public duty, is being evaded or violated," authorizes a suit by the city solicitor to enjoin traction companies from refusing to give or receive transfers in accordance with the grant to the lessor company. 33. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Hoboken & M. R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 273.

34. Where the holder of a Havana horse-car franchise executed an assignment of his right to the concession, and agreed to follow the assignment by proper transfer when the Havana authorities should grant a right to use electricity as a motive power for the road, which assignment defendant acknowledged he had received, and was to hold in escrow in accordance with the terms of the agreement, which trust he thereby accepted the receipt constituted a mere escrow contract by which defendant agreed to hold the assignment until an electric concession was granted, and did not create a fiduciary relation between him and complainant. Havana City R. Co. v. Ceballos [C. C. A.] 139 F. 538. The assignment contract having been cancelled three years after it was made, because of the inability of complainant and the assignor to then obtain an electric concession, the fact that defendant had acted as the holder of the escrow agreement for complainant, and had knowledge thereof, etc., did not preclude him, more than a year after the contract was cancelled, from himself obtaining an assignment of the original concession. Id. One who agrees to convey a street railway franchise to another in consideration of the latter constructing the road to a certain point, both to perform by a certain date, cannot sue for damages for nonperformance of the defendant where he himself did not offer to perform until two years after the agreement. Monarch v. Owensboro City R. Co., 27 Ky. L. R. 30, 85 S. W. 193. Where the plaintiff assigned to defendant a void street railway franchise under certain mutual covenants, and brought suit for breach of them, the defendant might set up nonperformance on part of plaintiff as a defense, although he had accepted the assignment of the void franchise and accepted the dismissal of a suit based on the assignment on the theory that the assignor was not prejudiced by such assignment or the dismissal of such suit. Id.

35. In an action against a street railway company and its successor for negligence, a verdict is properly directed in favor of the successor on its appearing that it was not on the west and south side of Chicago, and it voluntarily conveyed all its rights on the west side to another corporation, which transfer was ratified by the legislature, that relieved the South Side Company so far as the public was concerned of all further rights and duties on the west side.[36] The courts will not ordinarily restrain a street railway company from executing a lease or other contract whose effect is to encourage competition,[37] but a mortgagee may restrain a street railway company whose franchises he holds as security from granting terminal facilities to a rival which will seriously impair the value of the mortgagee's property through increased competition.[38] A street railway company has power to dedicate land to public use but such dedication will not be presumed.[39]

§ 5. Location, construction, equipment, and operation in general.[40]—The duty of paving the portion of the street occupied by the tracks is frequently imposed.[41] Power to establish crossings over railroad tracks and rights of way is usually conferred.[42] It is only when the unlawful construction or operation of a railway inflicts peculiar damage on an abutter that he may have it abated as a nuisance,[43] and

41. A city ordinance granting a location for street railway tracks, and containing restrictions that the company is to pave the street in which the tracks are laid, is not unreasonable, or ultra vires, and successors in title are bound by such restrictions. Borough of Rutherford v. Hudson River Traction Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 84. A city ordinance gave a street railway the right to lay tracks on certain specified streets, and provided that the company should pay the cost of the improvement between its tracks and the lines of its tracks and one foot on each side thereof of all highways which it occupied which should hereafter be improved. Held to apply to all streets occupied by the company, and not merely those enumerated in the ordinance. City of McKeesport v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 1075. Though a city may have no power to impose on a street railroad the burden of repaving any portion of its streets, or to exact a contract for such repaving, it may impose on the company, as a condition to granting it the right to use electricity in propelling its cars, and to erect poles and wires for that purpose, the burden of paving the parts of the street between and adjoining the tracks. Such action is not ultra vires, and the payment of the franchise tax does not relieve the company from such duty of paving. Inhabitants of City of Trenton v. Trenton St. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 1. A franchise providing that when the streets are not paved the street railway shall spike lumber to the ties, and that the railway shall not in any case be required to pave the streets except as provided in the franchise, does not require the company to pave, and exempts the company when a statute provides that all street railway companies must pave unless by their franchises they are not bound to. Marshalltown Light, Power & R. Co. v. Marshalltown, 127 Iowa, 637, 103 N. W. 1005.

42. A railroad company owning the bed of its road in fee where the road crosses a public highway is not in the same position as its vendors would have been with reference to a street railway company desiring to lay its tracks on the highway. If the street railway company is otherwise fully entitled, the railroad company holds subject to such right all the land which constitutes its roadway, or "right of way," with respect to all other land the railroad's right is as perfect as that of a private individual. In case of doubt, the court will not restrain a street railway company from laying its tracks on the turnpike on which the land abutts, and extending them on the turnpike across the railroad's right of way. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Inland Traction Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 115. Where, in a suit by a steam railroad to restrain a street railway company from laying its tracks at grade over the tracks of the steam railroad, the evidence showed that the street was so closely built up that no view of coming trains could be had until the crossing was reached; that fourteen trains passed across the street daily; that, because of a neighboring switch, a large amount of shifting across the street was required; and that many vehicles and pedestrians passed hourly, it was error to dissolve a preliminary injunction on conflicting evidence. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Danville, etc., R. Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 80.

43. Where by Code a private person may sue for a public nuisance only if it is specially injurious to himself, and a street railway, in violation of its franchise, built its track near the side of the street in front of the property of an abutting owner, it was held that the injury was one suffered alike by the public at large, and that the plaintiff could not have it abated as a public nuisance specially injurious to her. Reynolds v. Presidio & F. R. Co. [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1118. A complaint alleging the existence of a nuisance consisting of the obstruction of a street in front of plaintiff's premises by the

where the abutter is guilty of laches an injunction will be refused,[44] nor will it issue to restrain the construction of a street railway through a park where there was a right to so construct it but the entry so to do was forcible.[45] Though the business of a street railroad is confined to transportation of passengers, it may transport on its tracks such materials and supplies as are incident to the conduct of its business.[46] The use of street passenger railway tracks for freight traffic is an injury to an abutter[47] for which he can recover permanent damages, but not successive damages as in nuisance.[48] When suing for damages the measure is the depreciation in value of his land based on the hypothesis of a permanent and lawful freight traffic.[49] It is no defense that such unfranchised traffic may be prevented by the public if it so elects and thus lose its supposed permanency.[50]

General rules of care in equipment and operation.[51]—Street railway companies are ordinarily required to keep in repair the portion of the street occupied by their tracks,[52] and are liable for injuries resulting from its negligent failure to do so,[53] tracks of a street railroad, and further alleging that it had depreciated the rental value of plaintiff's property in a certain sum, and praying that the tracks be adjudged to be a nuisance and that they be abated, and demanding damages equal to the depreciation in the rental value of the premises, could not be held to be one for compensation for damaging private property, within the rule that authorizes an abutting owner to sue for damages suffered through the occupation of a street by a railroad, but was one for the abatement of a nuisance. 44. Where plaintiff, who had been the owner of property abutting a street in New York in which defendant's elevated railway was constructed, made no objection for ten years to defendant's construction of a third track on which to operate express trains, which, though constructed without right, was built in good faith and under color of legislative authority, the court, in a subsequent suit by plaintiff to restrain the maintenance of such track as an unlawful interference with plaintiff's easement of light and air, had power to refuse an injunction on condition that defendant pay damages for the injuries sustained, though defendant had no power to condemn plaintiff's easements; the damage to defendant and to the public, caused by the removal of the track, being greatly in excess of the damage accruing to plaintiff by continuance thereof. Knoth v. Manhattan R. Co., 109 App. Div. 802, 96 N. Y. S. 844.

45. Where a street railway's entry into complainant's park was lawful if properly made, and became unlawful only because it was alleged that the entry was by force at the hands of one from whom the possession was wrongfully withheld, a court of equity, in the absence of irreparable injury from the mode of entry and occupation, would not protect the possession of one wrongfully seeking to withhold it by injunction. but would leave such complainant to redress the forcible trespass by ordinary remedies. Montgomery Amusement Co v. Montgomery Traction Co., 139 F. 353. Where a lease of land for park purposes reserved to the lessors a power to grant a right of way by deed or grant through any part of the leased premises for street railway purposes, the lessors were only entitled, after the improvement of the park, to grant a right of way to a railway company at such a location as would not unreasonably interfere with the arrangement of the park. 46. Carrying coal to power house. Caswell v. Boston Elevated R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 380.

47. 48. In Illinois the court puts recovery for injury to abutting property by the unauthorized use of streets for freight traffic on the ground that it was "unauthorized and not contemplated by the franchise." The fee is there presumed to be in the public. Rockford & I. R. Co. v. Keyt, 117 Ill. App. 32. Liability, however, is not placed on the ground of lack of authority or franchise, since that gives the abutting owner no greater rights nor affects the question of damages. Id.

49. The depreciated market value of the property affected is the proper measure of damages in such a case. Rockford & I. R. Co. v. Keyt, 117 Ill. App. 32. The evidence in such a case should be confined to such use as is of a permanent character and reasonably necessary. Id. A mere temporary use of the street for freight traffic purposes is not to be considered in estimating permanent damages. Id. The mere maintenance of a freight depot and the hauling of freight to and from it by teams would not be an element of damages. Id. Whether the property was benefited by the use of the entire railway system for freight traffic is not an element to be considered. Id. The street railway will be allowed to show that abutting property was not injured and that the land was adapted to other uses than its present specific use. Id.

50. Owner may recover for the permanent injury to his property, although at some future date, that same use might be enjoined or abated. Rockford & I. R. Co. v. Keyt, 117 Ill. App. 32.

52. A city ordinance requiring any street railway company operating a line within the corporate limits to keep in good repair all that part of the street occupied by its tracks includes additional tracks to be laid as well as those already laid and under operation. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Smith [Ala.] 39 So. 757.

53. The fact that a street railway is by city ordinance required to keep that part of the street over which its track passes in and are likewise liable for injuries by defects in the track itself.[54] If electricity be used as a motive power they are liable for injuries resulting from negligent use thereof.[55] In most states by statutes railroads, even urban roads in rural districts, must fence their right of way.[56] Cars are frequently required to be equipped with fenders and other safety devices,[57] and occasionally examination and licensing of employes in charge of cars is imposed.[58] Unless the evidence establishes that the railroad company used the fenders improperly, no action can be predicated on injuries inflicted by them.[59] The speed at which cars shall be operated is often regulated.[60] Cars may be allowed to stand on the track for a reasonable length of time.[61] good repair does not make it any the less liable for negligence in leaving an excavation made by it in such street without the usual safeguards. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Smith [Ala.] 39 So. 757. Irrespective of ordinance, where a street railway company takes possession of a portion of a public street for the purpose of building and operating a railway under its franchise, it necessarily assumes a duty to the public to keep that part of the street occupied by it free from pit falls and in a safe condition, and where the work to be done is intrinsically dangerous, the company cannot escape liability by employing an independent contractor, but is liable for his acts, however skilfully performed. Id. Where a street railway company had a street torn up between its tracks, and put down a board crossing, the fact that there was a knot hole in a board whereby a pedestrian was injured does not show negligence where it is not shown that the company put the board there, had knowledge of the defect, or that the board was there long enough to charge them with notice. Keating v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 105 App. Div. 362, 94 N. Y. S. 117. In an action against a street railway company for an accident caused by a defect in a bridge, the plaintiff must show that the company and not the town was responsible for the repairs of the bridge. Wagner v. Lehigh Traction Co., 212 Pa. 132, 61 A. 814. The fact that the city engineer is overlooking work done by a street railway in a public street in the course of repairing its tracks does not relieve the railway from the duty resting on it to keep such part of the street in a safe condition. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Smith [Ala.] 39 So. 757.

Contributory negligence: A pedestrian on a public street need not ascertain whether or not the way is clear, but, if knowing of an instruction or having reason to believe that one exists, he must exercise ordinary care in looking for and avoiding it. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Smith [Ala.] 39 So. 757. Pedestrian injured by stepping into knothole in board at temporary crossing must show, to show due care, that he took precautions to observe state of temporary crossing of which he had knowledge. Keating v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 105 App. Div. 362, 94 N. Y. S. 117.

54. Where a child of seven caught his foot between one of the rails and the boards of one of defendant's crossings, the question of negligent construction is for the jury upon all the evidence. McDermott v. Severe, 25 App. D. C. 276. Where by the construction of a subway beneath the roadbed of a street railway a trolley slot thereon would spread at times about an inch for a distance of two feet, and a bicycle rider was thereby injured, and the evidence showed the slot was safe up to within a short time of the accident, it was held that the street railway company was not chargeable with notice of its condition so as to make it liable on the theory of negligence. Griffin v. Interurban St. R. Co., 46 Misc. 328, 94 N. Y. S. 854. A street railway company is not liable for an injury to a wagon through a switch, licensed by the city, if reasonable care is used in the selection and maintenance of the same, and the danger is not so great as to have the switch amount to a nuisance. Morie v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 91 S. W. 962.

57. A city ordinance, providing that it shall be unlawful on and after a certain date to run any street car within the city without having securely fastened to its front end a proper automatic fender made by a particular fender company, or some other fender equally as good, to be approved by the common council or its street committee, is void for nonuniformity and is arbitrarily discriminating in favor of some manufacturers of fenders and against others. City of Elkhart v. Murray [Ind.] 75 N. E. 593. When a passenger alighted at a terminus and, going directly in front of the car, stumbled over the fender, it being dark at the time, it was held that the company was not negligent. Poland v. United Traction Co., 107 App. Div. 561, 95 N. Y. S. 498.

58. A person employed to stand at the rear end of a car, in charge of a motorman and loaded with coal, to look out for the trolley, turn switches, and unload the coal, is not a "conductor," and the failure of such person to obtain a license has nothing to do with an accident where the only negligence, if any, was that of the motorman. Caswell v. Boston Elevated R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 380.

59. In backing a car around a curve plaintiff was struck and injured by a fender. No negligence because it was not raised, especially where no custom or necessity for raising them was shown. Hoffman v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. [Pa.] 63 A. 409.

60. The proper construction of an ordinance limiting the speed of cars to fourteen miles, including stops, is that at the end of the run the average speed should not exceed that rate. Columbus Ry. v. Connor, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 361. It is negligence per se to run a street car at a speed prohibited by a city ordinance. Heintz v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 353.

61. Poland v. United Traction Co., 107 App. Div. 561, 95 N. Y. S. 498.

Reasonable restrictions and conditions may be imposed,[62] and if the company enters on the enjoyment of a franchise containing restrictions it is estopped to deny their validity.[63] An ordinance requiring motormen to keep a vigilant lookout and stop the car at the first appearance of danger is a valid exercise of the police power.[64] Statutes regulating the operation of railroads are sometimes held to apply to interurban street car lines.[65]

§ 6. Injuries to passengers.[66]

§ 7. Injuries to employes.[67]

§ 8. Injuries to persons other than passengers or servants. A. Travelers on highway.[68] Pedestrians run over. Due care of plaintiff.[69]—It is well settled that a pedestrian must use due care in approaching and crossing street railway tracks, but where there is no evidence on this point, there is a conflict of opinion as to whether due care may or may not be presumed.[70] Some jurisdictions hold that he must look and listen before crossing as an absolute matter of law,[71] others hold that there is no such absolute duty imposed, and that due care is a question to be determined by the circumstances of each particular case.[72] As a general rule, where a pedestrian goes in front of a car, and there is evidence either that he did not look or that he had a clear view and could have seen the car if he had looked, he cannot recover.[73] Where it appears that a pedestrian did look for a car, this is

62. An ordinance limiting the speed of electric cars will not be interfered with by the courts except for good cause shown, and a limit of 6 miles an hour between crossings and 4 miles an hour over crossings is not unreasonable. Cincinnati, L. & A. Elec. St. R. Co. v. Stahle [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 551. A municipality may provide by ordinance for the separation of the races on street cars in such city under its police power, and an option that the company may provide separate cars or divide its cars is not an unauthorized delegation of authority. Patterson v. Taylor [Fla.] 40 So. 493. The legislative or municipal control over streets in the matter of authorizing the placing of obstructions thereon is not absolutely unlimited and must be exercised for the public welfare, and private structures which are inconsistent with the primary use of the streets or structures which prevent the use of the streets for travel or access to abutting property cannot be licensed. Morle v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 91 S. W. 962.

63. Where ordinances of a city gave to a street railway company permission to construct lines of railway in the streets and to operate cars thereon, upon terms of paying annual license fees for each car so operated, and the company accepted the ordinance upon these terms, constructed the lines of street railway, and for many years operated cars thereon, it was held that the company and its successors who acquired its railway lines and assumed its obligations are estopped from setting up that the terms imposed by the ordinances were ultra vires the municipal corporation. Jersey City v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 61 A. 95.

Hurd, providing an engineer must come to a full stop within 800 ft. of a railroad which crosses the tracks on which the engineer is running, applies to an electric railroad as well as a steam road, and failure to make the stop is negligence. 70. In the absence of evidence to the contrary it will be presumed, in an action for death by being run over at a crossing, that the deceased looked and listened for an approaching car and was in the exercise of due care. Eckhard v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 593, 89 S. W. 602. Where a pedestrian was run over by a car it was held that, assuming the motorman's negligence just before the accident, the burden was on the plaintiff to show due care, and the burden was not sustained where plaintiff was last seen walking near the track, and there was no evidence of due care between this and the accident. Gorham v. Milford, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 634.

71. A pedestrian about to cross street car tracks is under obligations to listen and look both ways and failure to do so is negligence. Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 390; Heintz v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 353.

72. It is not a rule of law that a person is bound under all circumstances to look and listen before crossing the tracks of a street railway. Chicago City R. Co. v. Barnes, 114 Ill App. 495. A person crossing the tracks of an electric railway is not bound to the same duty to stop and look and listen as when crossing a steam railway. Finnick v. Boston & N. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 500.

73. Where a pedestrian run over at night had a clear view of an approaching car, and the car was lighted by electricity, there can be no recovery. Chicago City R. Co. v. Barnes, 114 Ill. App. 495. A woman possessed of good eyesight and hearing who walks across a street car track in broad daylight, oblivious to her surroundings, is guilty of contributory negligence. Waddell v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 680, generally enough to take the question of due care to the jury, especially when there are other circumstances tending to show negligent operation of the car.[74] The mere fact of looking once, however, does not absolve the pedestrian from taking further precautions. If he sees a car when he is some distance from the track and goes on the track without looking again, he is guilty of negligence.[75] Where there are double tracks and a passenger alights from a car, crosses in the rear of the car, and is struck by a car coming in the opposite direction, if it appears that he crossed without looking he is generally held to be guilty of lack of due care,[76] although a recovery has been allowed under such a state of facts.[77] A pedestrian has a perfect right not only to walk in the street where a street railway track is situated, but also to walk on the tracks themselves, always provided that he uses due care.[78] A

88 S. W. 765. Where a pedestrian walked in front of a car when there was nothing to obstruct his view except a car coming in the opposite direction, it was held that there could be no recovery. McEntee v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 110 App. Div. 673, 97 N. Y. S. 476.

74. Where a pedestrian looked for a car, and it appeared that his view was obstructed, and that the car which struck him was run at high speed without warning, his due care is a question for the jury. Wachter v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 270, 88 S. W. 147. Where a pedestrian saw an approaching car, and was injured while attempting to cross in front of it, and there was evidence of a defective lookout on the part of the motorman, due care was held to be a question for the jury. Knoxville Traction Co. v. Brown [Tenn.] 89 S. W. 319 Where a pedestrian saw an approaching car, but was injured while attempting to cross in front of it, and there was evidence that the car was being driven at high speed, due care is a question for the jury. Chicago City R. Co. v. Nelson, 116 Ill. App. 609.

75. Where a pedestrian looked when she started to cross the street, saw a car coming, and did not look again until struck by the car, there is no evidence of due care. Boring v. Union Traction Co. [Pa.] 61 A 77. A pedestrian must look, not only before crossing a street, but also after her view has been intercepted by a wagon, and if her failure to look is the direct cause of her injury, there can be no recovery. Knoxville Traction Co. v. Brown [Tenn.] 89 S. W. 319. It is not enough for a pedestrian to look once when some distance away from the track. He must continue to look until he is safely across. Lofsten v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 1035; Ross v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 600, 88 S. W. 144. If a pedestrian saw the danger or should have seen it under the circumstances and could have avoided it by reasonable care, her right of recovery is defeated. Hoffman v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. [Pa.] 63 A. 409.

76. Where a passenger steps off a car, goes around behind it, and is struck and killed by a car coming in the opposite direction, and it appears that there was a clear view and that the car was lighted, there is no evidence of due care. Axelrod v. New York City R. Co., 109 App. Div. 87, 95 N. Y. S. 1072. A passenger who alights from a car, and, absorbed in a paper, passes behind the car onto a parallel track without looking, is not in the exercise of due care. Deane v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 91 S. W. 505. Where a passenger alighted from a car, went around behind it without looking, and was struck by a car coming on a parallel track in the opposite direction, he is not in the exercise of due care and cannot recover, even if the company is negligent, unless their negligence is willful or wanton. The question of due care is not affected by the fact that the company did not observe its rules as to stopping and sounding the bell, it not appearing that such rules were customarily observed or that the plaintiff relied upon or knew of them. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Oldham, 141 Ala. 195, 37 So. 452.

77. A motorman must use ordinary care at a street crossing immediately after a car bound in the opposite direction has stopped there to let off passengers, and where a passenger alighted on a foggy night, and was struck by a car coming at high speed, a verdict for the plaintiff was held to be sustained by the evidence. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Nuetzel, 114 Ill. App. 466.

78. A pedestrian has a right to walk on an electric car track if he is in the exercise of due care, and this question is for the jury where the plaintiff was struck by a car on a country highway at night, where cars only ran once an hour, and it appeared that no warning was given and that a freight train in the near vicinity was making much noise. Neary v. Citizens' R., Light & Power Co., 110 App Div. 769, 97 N. Y. S. 420. Where plaintiff, standing between two parallel tracks at a regular stopping place waiting to board a car, was struck by a car, and it appeared that the motorman was not looking ahead and had temporarily abandoned control of his car to fix his fender, it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant. Hawley v. Columbia R. Co., 25 App. D. C. 1. One who is standing in the street near the curve of a street car track, which is plainly visible to him, is bound to step back a sufficient distance to avoid being struck by the overhang of the rear end of a car which he sees approaching the curve. Matulewicz v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 107 App. Div. 230, 95 N. Y. S. 7. Where a pedestrian miscalculated the swing of a car rounding a curve and was injured, it was held that he could not recover. McCabe v. Interurban St. R. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 353. Where plaintiff left a sidewalk because of alleged defects, and, with full knowledge of the locality, and plenty of space between the car track and the sidewalk, walked so near the track on a dark night that he was struck by a car coming from the rear, he was held guilty of contribcommon case is that of injury to a laborer working on the tracks of a street railway.[79]

Negligence of company.[80]—A street railway company is bound to use ordinary care to avoid accidents.[81] At street crossings the rights of the car and the pedestrian are usually held to be equal.[82] Notwithstanding a pedestrian's lack of due care, the company may nevertheless be held liable if it could have prevented the accident by the use of ordinary care,[83] but it is a qualification of this rule as important as the rule itself that, where there are no intervening facts to give rise to a new situation, the rule cannot properly be applied.[84] Various rulings have been utory negligence. Dooley v. Union R. Co., 106 App. Div. 397, 94 N. Y. S. 635. One who stands on a street car track talking, with knowledge that a car is rapidly approaching, and without taking any precaution to avert injury to himself, is guilty of contributory negligence. Gargano v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 544. In an action for injuries sustained by being struck by a street car, where it appeared that the plaintiff was stooping near the track with his face in the direction from which the car came, and could have seen it had he looked, and could have heard it had he listened, it was proper to direct a verdict for defendant. Quinn v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 188 Mass. 473, 74 N. E. 687. Where a pedestrian walking on the track did not see or hear a car coming, but was warned by a companion, who easily avoided injury, he was held guilty of contributory negligence. Garvick v. United Rys. & Electric Co. [Md.] 61 A. 138.

79. A workman in a trench under a street railway track cannot rely on being signalled by the motorman, nor can he rely on his sense of hearing alone, and if he forgets to use due care in keeping a lookout he cannot recover. Clancy v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 91 S. W. 509.

80. See 4 C. L. 1670.

81. Hoffman v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. [Pa.] 63 A. 409. The violation of a municipal ordinance with regard to the use of fenders is prima facie evidence of negligence. Chicago City R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 114 Ill. App. 359. The degree of care to be exercised by a motorman necessarily varies with circumstances and no unbending rule can be laid down. Hanlon v. Philadelphia & W. C. Traction Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 223. The mere fact that a car strikes and injures a pedestrian raises no presumption of negligence on the part of the street railway company. Garvick v. United Rys. & Electric Co. [Md.] 61 A. 138. The mere fact that the horses of a street car driver broke away and ran while they were being detached from the car to get around a hole in the street does not establish the defendant's negligence. Cunningham v. Dry Dock, etc., R. Co., 96 N. Y. S. 1070. Where the only person in the company's employ charged with negligence was the conductor, an instruction that the defendant could not be held liable because the motorman did not reverse his power instead of relying on the brakes was held improperly refused. Cunningham v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 104 App. Div. 525, 93 N. Y. S. 700.

82. At street crossings the rights of pedestrians and street cars are equal, each being bound to use ordinary care to avoid injury. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Oldham, 141 Ala. 195, 37 So. 452. The right of the electric railway company to use its tracks, although laid on a public highway, is superior to that of a pedestrian or the driver of a vehicle. Minninch v. Wright [Pa.] 63 A. 438. Where one crosses street car tracks at their intersection with a highway he is not a trespasser. Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 390.

83. The contributory negligence of a person injured will not defeat his action if the defendant, by reasonable care and prudence, might have avoided the consequences of such contributory negligence. Hawley v. Columbia R. Co., 25 App. D. C. 1. Though a pedestrian is negligent in going upon a track (Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 390), yet if the motorman by the exercise of ordinary care could have avoided injuring him and failed to do so, then the pedestrian's negligence is no defense (Id.). If a pedestrian or driver through an error of judgment attempts to cross in front of a car and is injured, the question of negligence is not a matter of law but for the jury. Heintz v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 353. If a pedestrian has placed himself in a position of peril through his own negligence, and the employes in charge of a car of a street railway company, comprehending the situation in time to avoid injury, deliberately run him down, the company is liable. Ross v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 600, 88 S. W. 144. Though a pedestrian negligently places herself in a position of peril while crossing a street railway track, the street railway company may nevertheless be held liable if the motorman, knowing of the pedestrian's peril in time to prevent the injury negligently fails to do so. Waddell v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 680, 88 S. W. 765. Where a pedestrian negligently catches his foot in a street railway track the company is liable if the employes in charge of a car could have discovered his peril in time to avoid injury by the exercise of proper care, but failed to do so. Williams v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 114 Mo. 1, 89 S. W. 59. A motorman who discovers the peril of a person on the track is bound to use only ordinary care to use all means at hand to avoid injuring the person in peril. Beaty v. El Paso Electric R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 365.

84. Plaintiff, waiting in the space between two tracks, was struck by a passenger attempting to board another car on a parallel track and thrown under the car. A charge that if plaintiff was negligent, yet if the conductor could have avoided the accident the plaintiff was not barred from recovmade on the question of what constitutes a proper lookout,[85] what constitutes proper warning,[86] and what is proper speed at which to run a car.[87] If a motorman operating a street car sees a pedestrian or vehicle crossing the tracks before him and he fails to stop the car in time to avoid the accident when he might have done so, he is guilty of negligence.[88]

Children run over.[89]—Whether a child is so young as to be incapable of contributory negligence is a question which has come frequently before the courts. In some cases it is held as a matter of law that a child is non sui juris, while in others whether or not the child is non sui juris is held to be a question for the jury.[90] If ery, held error. Cunningham v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 104 App. Div. 525, 93 N. Y. S. 700.

85. Motormen are bound to look out not only for persons on the track but for people moving towards it with evident intention of crossing. Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 390. A motorman is not required to assume that pedestrians approaching the track will act carelessly in going upon the track in front of him. To make it incumbent to stop there must be something noticeable in the conduct of the pedestrian sufficient to show some danger of an accident. Ross v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 600, 88 S. W. 144. A motorman may assume that a person, apparently normal, approaching the track, will stop before crossing, but if the conduct of the pedestrian tends to show that he is not going to stop, the motorman must run his car as if he knew that the pedestrian was going to cross in front of the car. Eckhard v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 593, 89 S. W. 602. When a man was run over at a street crossing at midnight, and the car was brilliantly lighted, and there was no evidence of undue speed or failure to give proper signals, a nonsuit is proper. Mulvaney v. Pittsburg Rys. Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 926. A motorman has a right to assume that a pedestria non the track, possessing full powers of locomotion and free to escape from danger, will leave the track in time to avoid injury, especially when he knows the car is approaching. Garvick v. United Rys. & Electric Co. [Md.] 61 A. 138. A motorman on a street car may rightfully assume that an adult, apparently in full possession of health and vigor, standing in the street near a curve in the track, but not near enough to be struck by the forward end of the car, will draw back far enough to avoid being struck by the overhang of the car as it rounds the curve. Matulewicz v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 107 App. Div. 230, 95 N. Y. S. 7. Where a pedestrian standing near the track suddenly ran in front of an approaching car, there was held to be no negligence on the part of the company. Greve v. New Orleans & C. R. Light & Power Co., 114 La. 974, 38 So. 698. A motorman running over the company's private right of way is not bound to keep a lookout for trespassers where he has a right to assume that the track is clear, but where pedestrians have been for some time in the habit of walking along the right of way, a motorman, before reaching a point where he has reasonable grounds to anticipate the presence of such persons, must be on the alert and keep a lookout. Levelsmeier v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 104. A statute provided that engineers and conductors of railroads should stop their trains before crossing the tracks of another road and not proceed until they know the way to be clear, and a municipal ordinance required persons in charge of street cars to stop them before crossing railroad tracks, and requires the conductor to "walk across the track" in front of the car. A conductor of a street car stopped his car on a dark, rainy night, walked to the center of the track, and, hearing no train, signaled the motorman to cross. The car was struck by a train running at high speed without lights or warning, and the conductor was killed. Held that whether he violated the statute and was thus guilty of contributory negligence, and whether his death was proximately caused by his negligence in failing to comply literally with the ordinance, were questions for the jury. Southern R. Co. v. Jones [Ala.] 39 So. 118.

86. If a pedestrian knew that a car was approaching, whether or not those in charge of the car gave warning is immaterial. McEntee v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 110 App. Div. 673, 97 N. Y. S. 476. Failure of motorman to ring gong is not evidence of negligence when pedestrian knew of car's approach. Garvick v. United Rys. & Electric Co. [Md.] 61 A. 138. Where a pedestrian saw a car before it started, whether the motorman rang his bell or not is immaterial. McCabe v. Interurban St. R. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 353. It is error to dismiss the complaint at the close of plaintiff's case in an action for a collision of a street car with a uniformed street sweeper engaged in sweeping the track when there is evidence that he was seen by the pasengers at a considerable distance, that the motorman did not slacken speed until the accident was inevitable, and gave no warning, though the sweeper saw the car two blocks away, and, expecting a warning, did not look up again. Reilly v. Interurban St. R. Co., 108 App. Div. 254, 95 N. Y. S. 721.

87. A pedestrian has a right to assume that a car at a crossing will be run in obedience to a city speed ordinance. Eckhard v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 593, 89 S. W. 602. Speed of 20 to 25 miles an hour at crossing, in violation of 10 mile speed limit, is evidence of negligence. Id. Where a motorman 120 ft. from a crossing well lighted by an arc light, where a pedestrian is trying to cross, runs his car at a prohibited speed and fails to ring a gong, it is a question of fact for the jury whether he could have avoided the accident by ordinary care. Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 390

88. Heintz v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 353. That he honestly believed the pedestrian or vehicle would clear the track in time to avoid the danger is no excuse. Id.

90. In a suit on account of injuries to a

it is decided that a child is non sui juris, and consequently incapable of exercising due care, there is a conflict as to whether the lack of due care of the parent or person in charge of the child may be imputed to it.[91] The children are not held to the same degree of care as adults, yet they must exercise the degree of care which ordinarily prudent children of their age and intelligence would exercise under like circumstances.[92] Due care requires a child to use some degree of watchfulness before attempting to cross a street railroad track[93] and if children unreasonably, intelligently, and intentionally run into danger from street railways, they should take the risks.[94] The youth of a plaintiff does not relieve him from proving negligence.[95] A street railway company must use more care towards children than towards adults,[96] boy eleven years of age from being struck by a car, it is error to charge that, in the absence of greater intelligence and capacity than is common to boys of his age, the law presumes that he is incapable of being charged with contributory negligence. Cincinnati Traction Co. v. Blackson, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 233. No presumption arises as to whether a boy eleven years of age can be charged with contributory negligence, but his capacity to avoid danger is a question to be left entirely to the jury. Id. If it is not averred that a child is non sui juris, he is not entitled to prove such fact. Roberts v. Terre Haute Elec. Co. [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 895. A child of ten may be guilty of contributory negligence sufficient to bar recovery. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. McGinnis, 112 Ill. App. 177.

91. Negligence of parents in allowing child of four to go alone on city street where street cars are run cannot be imputed to child in action by him for being run over. Jacksonville Elec. Co. v. Adams [Fla.] 39 So. 183. Whether the parents of a bright child of 5 are negligent in allowing the child in the street alone is for the jury. Wabnich v. Dry Dock, etc., R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 38. Even though the parents of a child are negligent in allowing it to be alone in the street, if a child run over by a street car at the time of the accident exercised the due care of an adult, mere negligence on the part of the servants of the company is sufficient for the maintenance of the action, and there is no need to show wanton negligence. Chicago City R. Co. v. Jordan, 116 Ill. App. 650.

92. Colomb v. Portland & B. St. R. Co. [Me.] 61 A. 898. Age and intelligence of a party are important factors in determining whether due care has been used. Id. Though a child, one crossing street car tracks is bound to exercise due care. Id. A child run over by a street car in order to recover was bound to show not only the defendant's negligence but affirmatively that there was no want of due care on her part. Id. A child of ten, in crossing street railway tracks, must exercise the care reasonably to be expected from a child of his age and intelligence. West v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 105 App. Div. 373, 94 N. Y. S. 250. A child of 5 years and 2 months is bound to use the care to be expected from a child of her age and condition. Wabnich v. Dry Dock, etc., R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 38. Where the mental capacity of a boy of twelve is in question, the rule is that he is bound to exercise all the care that he might reasonably have exercised by the employment of his faculties. Roberts v. Terre Haute Elec. Co. [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 895. A boy nine years old running from behind a wagon suddenly and unexpectedly in front of a street car, and instantly struck by the car, so that the motorman had barely an instant in which to stop the car was guilty of such negligence as barred recovery. Wirzginda v. Schuylkill Traction Co., 212 Pa. 360, 61 A. 943. It is not enough for a boy of twelve to look for cars before crossing the track but he must exercise due care while on the track as well. Lipis v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 259. Where a boy of ten saw a car 200 feet away, and attempted to cross in front of it, he is not negligent as a matter of law. Hovarka v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 90 S. W. 1142. For a child of five to pass behind a car and step on a parallel track without looking for an approaching car is not negligent as a matter of law. Chicago City R. Co. v. Jordan, 116 Ill. App. 650. The attempt by a 10 year old child to cross the track in front of a moving car, which could not have been many feet from her, was conduct "such as the judgment of common men universally would condemn as careless in any child of sufficient age and intelligence to be permitted to go alone" across a street on which electric cars are frequently passing. Colomb v. Portland & B. St. Ry. Co. [Me.] 61 A. 898. The due care of a boy of ten who crossed from behind a wagon where there were double tracks and was struck by a car coming in the opposite direction on the further track is for the jury. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. McGinnis, 112 Ill. App. 177.

95. Wiszginda v. Schuylkill Traction Co., 212 Pa. 360, 61 A. 943.

96. More care must be used towards children than towards adults, and where a motorman should and must have seen a young child, alone, dangerously near the car tracks, it was his duty to use means "strictly commensurate with the demands and exigencies of the occasion" to prevent injury, and the company must prove such means were used or be liable. Jacksonville Electric Co. v. Adams [Fla.] 39 So. 183. A motorman operating a street car on approaching a crossing where a number of children are congregated or passing across the tracks is bound to know that they may not exercise the care of older persons, and to take special precautions accordingly to avoid their injury and where in such case a child was run over and there was substantial evidence tending to show that the car approached the crossing at a speed of 10 to 15 miles an hour, without giving any warning of its approach, although such evidence was contradicted, a verdict finding the company negligent will not be

although some courts prefer to state the rule as being that ordinary care under all the circumstances of each particular case is the general standard to be applied, whether the case be that of a child or an adult.[97] Numerous rulings have been made on the question of proper lookout on the part of those in charge of the car,[98] and what is proper speed for a car.[99] The care due from the company may be affected by the fact that a child is a trespasser upon the company's premises.[1]

(§ 8) B. Accidents to drivers or occupants to wagons. Collisions between car and wagons.[2]—The driver of a wagon must use due care in approaching and crossing street railway tracks.[3] As a general rule, where there is evidence that the driver of a wagon either did not look for a car or could have seen it if he had disturbed. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Broom [C. C. A.] 139 F. 595.

97. Although the age of the plaintiff is one of the circumstances to be considered, and although conduct which might not be negligent towards an adult might be negligent in the case of a child, still it is not proper to say that the company owes more care to a child on a crowded street crossing than to a man on a vacant street. Chicago City R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 114 Ill. App. 359.

98. Plaintiff, a child less than three years old, in attempting to cross a street, darted from a sidewalk behind a wagon standing in front of plaintiff's house and struck the running board of defendant's street car. The car was going at moderate speed, and as it approached there was nothing in sight and no children in sight for 200 yards. It was held there was no negligence in failing to sound the gong. Bouthillier v. Old Colony St. R. Co. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 960. When a child of five was playing behind a pile of earth about five feet from a street railway track, and suddenly ran out on the track when the car was not more than four feet away, there is no negligence on the part of the company. Sontgen v. Kittanning, etc., R. Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 523. Where a boy of nine was walking behind a wagon and stepped suddenly in front of a car, there was held to be no negligence on the part of the company. Leitzel v. Harmsburg Traction Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 102. A street railway company is not liable for the death of a child, who ran across the street directly in front of the car, in the absence of evidence that anything the gripman could have done would have avoided the accident. West v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 105 App. Div. 373, 94 N. Y. S. 250. Where a boy of ten started to cross the track 200 feet ahead of the car, the motorman was not negligent in not attempting to stop the car. Hovarka v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 90 S. W. 1142. Where a child of nine is negligent in going on the track, and it is proved that the motorman did not see the child until after the accident, there can be no recovered, for according to California law the motorman must actually be aware of the child's danger to hold the company in such a case. Bennischen v. Market St. R. Co. [Cal.] 84 P. 420. Where a child of seven was caught in the track and a motorman saw him 300 or 400 feet away, but made no effort to stop until 35 or 40 feet away, where he saw the boy was caught, negligence is for the jury, and it is not enough that the motorman did what he could after he actually saw the boy was caught. McDermott v. Severe, 25 App. D. C. 276. Where a child is too small to be guilty of contributory negligence, inevitable accident is no defense; when a motorman might have discovered it 50 ft. ahead of him and by the exercise of due care have stopped the car 'nside of 40 feet. Koenig v. Union Depot R. Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 497. Where there is an allegation of wanton negligence, and there is no evidence that the motorman saw the child in time to avoid the injury, and no evidence that he purposely ran over her, it must appear that his negligence was so gross as to amount to wanton or willful negligence. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. McGinnis, 112 Ill. App. 177.

99. In an action for injuries caused by being struck by a street car, evidence that the father of the plaintiff, then an infant one year old, before going on the track saw that the car had stopped about 40 feet away, and that as he stepped on the track the motorman quickened speed, so that the car struck him as he was on the last rail, presenting a case for the jury. Franco v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 108 App. Div. 14, 95 N. Y. S. 476. Dangerous speed and the failure to give warning at a crossing sustains a charge of wantonness. Chicago City R. Co. v. Jordan, 116 Ill. App. 650.

1. Where a child of two was run over by an electric car of a coal company operated on its own grounds, there was held to be no evidence of negligence. Estep v. Webster Coal & Coke Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 1082. In the case of an injury to a boy trespasser it was held that a company erecting and maintaining an elevated railway structure upon which there is a live rail is required to use only ordinary care in precluding children from getting on the rail, and that not to prevent people from climbing on the structure at a point where there is no temptation to do so is not negligence, nor is it negligence not to place warning signs on the live rail where there is no custom of children climbing on the structure and nothing about the structure alluring to them. McAllister v. Jung, 112 Ill. App. 138.

2. See 4 C. L. 1572.

3. Even if the street railway company is negligent, yet, if a driver is also negligent, and his negligence contributed to the accident so that but for it he would not have been injured, there can be no recovery. Lexington St. R. Co. v. Strader [Ky.] 89 S. W. 158. An instruction authorizing recovery only if the plaintiff was "free" from negligence is improper as saying that any negligence, however slight, will bar recovery. Palmer Transfer Co. v. Paducah R. & Light Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 515. Failure to look for an approaching street car is negligence per se. Houston Bros. Co. v. Traction Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 374. Any one before crossing a looked for it, he cannot recover for injuries received from driving in front of the car.[4] As a general rule, where there is evidence that the driver did look for a car, this is sufficient to take the question of his due care to the jury, especially where there is evidence of negligent operation of the car.[5] The mere fact of looking once for a car, however, does not by any means absolve the driver from the duty of taking further precautions. If he sees a car coming when he is some distance from the track, and drives on the track without looking again, he is not in the exercise of due care,[6] although under a somewhat unusual state of facts the question of the track should not only look but also listen for approaching cars. Hattcher v. McDermot [Md.] 63 A. 214.

4. Evidence that plaintiff's servant was driving along a street in the same direction in which a street car was traveling, and, without looking or taking any precaution, drove on the track in front of the car, does not show freedom from contributory negligence. Kueski v. New York & Q. C. R. Co., 109 App. Div. 209, 95 N. Y. S. 650. To convict a driver of negligence it must appear that if he had looked about him he could have discovered an approaching car in time to avoid the accident. Minnich v. Wright [Pa.] 63 A. 428. There is always a duty on the part of a driver about to cross a street railway to look for an approaching car, and if the street be obstructed, to listen, and in some situations to stop. Houston Bros. Co. v. Traction Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 374. The time of looking for an approaching car is not on first entering a street but just before he enters onto the track. Id. A jury might find that a driver failed to look for a car where the collision occurred in daytime and a free view of the track, 30 feet before approaching it, was obtainable. Weske v. Chicago Union Traction Co., 117 Ill. App. 298. Where, if the driver of a cab had looked, he could not have failed to see a car approaching at high speed, he cannot recover. Hebron v. New York City R. Co., 9 N. Y. S. 341. There can be no recovery where the driver of a wagon either saw or could have seen a car approaching but drove directly in front of it when it was but 15 or 20 feet distant. Williams v. New York City R. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 393. There is no evidence of due care when the driver of a team driving near the tracks at night turned suddenly onto the track in front of a car which he could have seen if he had looked. American Ice Co. v. New York City R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 219. A failure to look and listen is not always negligence. North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Canfield, 118 Ill. App. 353. Going upon a track without looking or listening is negligence when nothing is shown to excuse the failure to exercise reasonable and ordinary care. Id.

5. For a cab driver to attempt to cross the tracks of a street railway company ahead of an approaching street car is not negligence per se. Fisher v. Chicago City R. Co., 114 Ill. App. 217. Due care is for the jury where the accident occurred on a snowy night, and the plaintiff was struck by a car which he saw 150 feet away, there being evidence to show that the car came at high speed without warning. Id. It was error to take a case from the jury where plaintiff before crossing looked 300 ft. up the track and saw no car. Gaffka v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 44, 106 N. W. 1121. Where a driver looked for a car, but was injured while crossing the track, and there was evidence of defective lookout on the part of the motorman, the driver's due care was held to be for the jury. Macon R. & Light Co. v. Streyer, 123 Ga. 279, 51 S. E. 342. Due care is for the jury where the driver of a wagon saw a car coming but was injured, and there was evidence that the car was being driven at high speed. Central R. Co. v. Sehnert, 115 Ill. App. 560. The due care of the driver of a team injured in a collision is for the jury where the driver looked for the car, and there was evidence of defective lookout on the part of the motorman and evidence that the brakes were in a defective condition. Hot Springs St. R. Co. v. Charlton [Ark.] 88 S. W. 1006. The due care of the driver of a team who looked for an approaching car is for the jury when there was evidence of a defective lookout on the part of the motorman. Rapp v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 144, 88 S. W. 865. Due care is for the jury where the driver of a team looked for an approaching car, and there was evidence that the car approached a crossing at high speed without warning. Orth v. Boston El. R. Co., 188 Mass. 427, 74 N. E. 673. Due care is for the jury where the driver of a team with a heavy load saw a car and drove on the tracks when the car was 75 feet away. Murphy v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 110 App. Div. 717, 97 N. Y. S. 483. Where the driver of a team looked for a car before attempting to cross the part of the motorman and evidence that the track, and there was evidence that the car was being driven at high speed, the due care of the driver is for the jury. United Rys. & Electric Co. v. Watkins [Md.] 62 A. 234. Where street car had to travel over 200 feet, embracing two crossings, while driver's truck was traveling about 60 feet in crossing tracks obliquely, and the driver testified that the speed of the car was increased, that he used his whip and almost got clear, it was held that he was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Mattes v. New York City R. Co, 95 N. Y. S. 596. Whether driver of vehicle was justified in believing he could cross street at a crossing in front of a street car, or whether he was negligent, held a question of fact for jury. Omaha St. R. Co. v. Mathiesen [Neb.] 103 N. W. 666.

6. Where a driver drove on the tracks before rounding a curve and looked once, although he could see but a short distance, and then did not look again until struck by a car, and there was no allegation of wilful negligence or that the motorman saw the danger in time to prevent the accident, there can be no recovery. Allworth v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 630, 105 N. W. 75. It was error to nonsuit a plaintiff who, before going across one track behind a car looked up and down the driver's due care in such a case has been held to be one for the jury.[7] Similarly, if he sees a car coming and determines to take his chances of getting across ahead of it, and miscalculates the distance, he is unable to recover,[8] and he has no right to proceed on the supposition that the car will be stopped before it reaches him.[9] There are other circumstances which may properly be taken into consideration on the question of the plaintiff's due care, such as the obstruction of the street,[10] or the nature of the load on the driver's wagon,[11] or the unusual length of his team.[12] track to see if it were safe, but after having passed across the track did not look again, was hit on the adjoining track by a car, inasmuch as it was not necessarily his duty to look again. Mathers v. Interurban St. R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 433. Where a driver, to avoid a collision with a car coming towards him, deliberately crossed over to the opposite track in front of a car which he had seen approaching from the rear, without looking to see where it was, he was held guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery. Coats v. Seattle Electric Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 830. If one looks and sees a street car coming on a track and drives into it deliberately, he cannot recover, nor can he recover if he completely fails to look where he is going and drives onto a track and is injured. Minnich v. Wright [Pa.] 63 A. 428. To attempt to cross a street car track in front of a rapidly approaching car, where it appears that the person must be struck unless the car is stopped or slackened in speed, is not contributory negligence as a matter of law. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Jacobson, 118 Ill. App. 383. It is a question of fact for the jury. Id. By the law of Pennsylvania a driver must look and listen immediately before crossing an electric railway track, and where a wagon had a hood and the driver looked when he was some distance from the track and then drove on the track without looking again, this is negligence per se. Berger v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 141 F. 1020. Where a driver looked for a car when he was twenty feet from a crossing where he knew cars ran at high speed, this is not sufficient. He must exercise due care up to the time of crossing and failure to look again is negligence. Fancher v. Fonda, etc., R. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 666. Where the driver of a wagon looked once for a car when he was some distance away from the track, and then drove onto the track without looking again, he is not in the exercise of due care. Fisher v. New York City R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 221. A nonsuit is proper when the driver of a team driving on a level street which crossed the car tracks at right angles testified that he looked for approaching cars as he passed the house line, at least twenty-two feet from the first car rail, saw the headlight of a car, and did not look again until the horse was on the tracks at the very moment of collision. Walsh v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 89.

7. Where, on driving onto a street occupied by a street railroad, the driver looked and was unable to see any car approaching, his failure to look when he drove on the track a little later, the driver relying on a warning being given by the motorman and having poor eyesight, and being in a position where it was inconvenient for him to look, did not render him guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where there was evidence that the car came at improper speed without warning. Petersen v. St. Louis Transit Co., 114 Mo. App. 374, 89 S. W. 1042. One is not bound as a matter of law to stop to look and listen before driving upon street car tracks to avoid an obvious and imminent danger on the highway. Palmer v. Larchmont Horse R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 567.

8. Whether one driving across the tracks in front of a rapidly approaching street car, whose speed he misjudged, is guilty of contributory negligence is a question for the jury. Heintz v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 353. Where a driver saw a car approaching rapidly only fifty feet away, and took his chances of crossing ahead of it, he cannot recover. Norton v. Interurban St. R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 216. Where a driver saw a car coming at high speed and deliberately took his chances of getting across the track ahead of it, he cannot recover. Couch v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 393.

9. Where a teamster deliberately drives on the tracks of a street car company, knowing that a car is approaching at a high rate of speed and must strike his wagon unless the car is stopped, and with intent to compel the car to stop, he is guilty of negligence per se. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Jacobson, 217 Ill. 404, 75 N. E. 508. The action of a teamster in driving slowly across a track in front of a rapidly approaching street car, relying for his safety upon a supposition that the car will stop at the crossing before it reaches him, is negligence. Chicago City R. Co. v. Strampel, 110 Ill. App. 482. Where a driver tried to pass in front of a car twenty-five feet away, it was error to refuse an instruction that if it was apparent to the driver, or would have been apparent to a person of ordinary prudence, exercising ordinary care, that the car would overtake him unless it slackened speed, it was not a prudent act for him to proceed, though it was the motorman's duty to slow down or stop to enable him to cross. Goodman v. New York City R. Co., 95 N. Y. S. 544.

10. A driver of a vehicle is not negligent in driving on a street car track about forty feet ahead of a car going six or seven miles an hour to avoid another vehicle. Latson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 91 S. W. 109.

11. Where the plaintiff could not see a car coming on account of the height and width of his load, and testified that he and a companion listened carefully before crossing the track, a verdict for the plaintiff was held to be justified. Shea v. Lexington & B. St. R. Co., 188 Mass. 425, 74 N. E. 931. The driver of a long van or barge, enclosed on all sides except the front, has a right to suppose that a motorman coming from behind will give him time to cross the tracks after he has started to do so, and not run against

One attempting to cross the tracks before a street railway train has a right to assume that it will stop at its usual place, and is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law for acting on that assumption.[13] It would seem that not so much care need be exercised by a driver at a time of the night when cars do not usually run, than at times when he might expect them.[14] One about to drive over street car tracks has no right to assume that because one car has passed another may not come immediately after it.[15] Where under the rules of the road an electric car should be traveling on a certain track, and it in fact travels on another through which the driver of a vehicle is injured, it is no defense to the railroad that the driver could have seen the car, unless he also could see it was not on its customary track.[16]

Driving on or near tracks.[17]—The driver of a wagon has a perfect right not only to drive in the street where street railway tracks are situated, but to drive upon the tracks themselves, provided he uses due care.[18]

Imputed negligence.[19]—The general rule on the subject of imputed negligence appears to be that, where the passenger has no opportunity to exercise direction or control, the driver's lack of due care cannot be imputed to him,[20] but if a person is injured in part by the negligence of another and in part by the insufficiency of the driver, horse, or carriage by which he was being conveyed, which insufficiency was due to his own want of care in selecting them, no recovery can be had.[21]

Negligence of company.[22]—A street railway company is bound to use reasonable care to avoid accidents.[23] The rule as to right of way is generally stated to be him while he is crossing. Williamson v. Old Colony St. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 655. While it is his duty to use reasonable care for his own safety, he may suppose that others will do theirs. Id.

12. Where a driver started to drive a long team (thirty-seven feet) across a track, taking no precautions until he had gone too far to turn back, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Houston Bros. Co. v. Traction Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 374.

14. Finnick v. Boston & N. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 500.

15. Hattcher v. McDermot [Md.] 63 A. 214. The fact that a street railway operates an extra car running only a few seconds behind the scheduled car is not evidence of negligence of part of the company and will not relieve the person injured from exercise of due and ordinary care in crossing the tracks. 18. Hellriegel v. Southern Traction Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 392. One driving along the highway has the right to traverse any part of such highway subject to the paramount right of a street railway to operate its cars in a reasonably careful manner. Palmer v. Larchmont Horse R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 567. It is not negligence as a matter of law to drive a team so near a street car track that a car going in the same direction will collide with it. Logan v. Old Colony St. R. Co. [Mass.] 76 N. E. 510. It is the duty of the driver of a vehicle using car tracks to watch for approaching cars, and if one were coming on the track he occupied, to leave it and permit the car to pass. Minnich v. Wright [Pa.] 63 A. 428. A driver may drive upon any portion of a street including the street car tracks, only giving way to the street cars, nor would he be a trespasser. Chicago City R. Co. v. Rohe, 118 Ill. App. 322. Where a truck was being driven on a street railway track, and was nearly off the track when it was struck by a car, the due care of the driver of the truck is a question for the jury. Central Brewing Co v. New York City R. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 1025. Where a driver of a covered van was about in the middle of a block, and looked back and saw a car coming rapidly two hundred feet away, and then, after driving some distance, turned and was struck, he is guilty of contributory negligence. Kiley v. New York City R. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 375.

20. Negligence of a husband taking his wife to drive cannot be imputed to the wife, but in an action by her she must prove freedom from negligence. Teal v. St. Paul City R. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 945. Where a passenger is riding in a coach, the driver not being her servant or under her control, and the passenger is several feet from the driver and seven feet from the ground, contributory negligence is not attributable to her for either failing to warn the driver of danger or in not leaping from the coach. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton [C. C. A.] 141 F. 599. Plaintiff driving in closed hired carriage on winter night and having no knowledge of danger until he saw car bearing down on him is not guilty of contributory negligence and cannot have the negligence of the driver imputed to him. Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 189 Mo. 107, 88 S. W. 648.

23. The mere fact of a collision with a buggy does not raise a presumption of negligence against the street car company. Feitl v. Chicago City R. Co., 113 Ill. App.

that between street crossings the cars of a street railway, since they cannot leave their tracks and since they are being run primarily for the convenience of the public, have a superior, although not an exclusive right of way.[24] A statute giving the fire department the right of way over all vehicles except those carrying the United States mail is constitutional, and a motorman must obey the statute, using reasonable care under the circumstances.[25] This superior right of way does not exist at street crossings where the rights of the car and the wagon are held to be equal,[26] each being bound to exercise due care under all the circumstances of the case,[27] although the rule at street crossings has been declared to be the same as that prevail-

381. A street car company is charged with the duty of employing all reasonable means to avoid injuries to such of the public as it knows to be rightfully using the streets where its track lies. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Jacobson, 118 Ill. App. 383.

24. The cars of a street railway have the right of way over vehicles, since the cars cannot leave the tracks and since the street railway company, as a carrier, owes a duty to the public convenience. Chicago City R. Co. v. Meinheit, 114 Ill. App. 497. Where a street car track passes an intersecting street which is at that place a cul de sac, a request that the place was not a street crossing and that the car had the right of way should have been given. Rutz v. New York City R. Co., 107 App. Div. 568, 95 N. Y. S. 345. Error in refusing to charge that a street railroad has a paramount right of way in a street where its track passes an intersecting street which is at that point a cul de sac is not cured by an instruction that the motorman, though seeing the traveler at a distance of half a block from the track, was not bound to bring his car to a stop, but had a right to believe that the traveler would not attempt to drive across in front of the car. Id. The rights of the street railway company and the individual to use the streets are equal. Each owes the other the duty to use reasonable care to avoid injury. United Rys. & Electric Co. v. Watkins [Md.] 62 A. 234. A street car has no exclusive right to the use of its tracks. Both the driver of a wagon and those in charge of the car must use due care to avoid accident. Palmer Transfer Co. v. Paducah R. & Light Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 515.

26. Note: Both the plaintiff and defendant had the right to use the streets and its intersections; both owed the reciprocal duty of exercising that right with due reference to the other, in connection with the knowledge and the fact that the defendant's car followed a fixed path only. 2 Current Law, 1762. While the vehicle was being driven parallel with and near the track on which the car was running, the motoneer was not bound to anticipate that it would abruptly attempt to cross the tracks immediately in front of the car. If it did so undertake, the defendant company might not be guilty of negligence because of the failure of the motorman in charge to stop or slacken speed, or to avoid the collision. Fritz v. Street R. Co., 105 Mich. 50, 62 N. W. 1007; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Browdy, 206 Ill. 615, 69 N. E. 570; Chicago Street R. Co. v. Ahler, 107 Ill. App. 397; O'Connell v. St. Paul City R. Co., 64 Minn. 466, 67 N. W. 363. But the duty rested upon the street car company to have its cars in control at these points that the rights of others might be protected. People using the highways for lawful purposes had a right to rely in some measure upon the discharge of this duty (Sesselmann v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 65 App. Div. 484, 72 N. Y. S. 1010; Id., 76 App. Div. 336, 78 N. Y. S. 482; Traction Co. v. Glynn, 59 N. J. Law, 432, 37 A. 66); and it would be actionable negligence to run a car at a rate of speed incompatible with the lawful and customary use of highways by others with reasonable safety (Railway Co. v. Block, 55 N. J. Law, 607, 27 A. 1067, 22 L. R. A. 374; Searles v. Elizabeth, etc., R. Co., 70 N. J. Law, 388, 57 A. 134)."—Per Jaggard, J., in Smith v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 16.

27. The rights of a cab driver and of a street car company at a street crossing are the same, neither has the right to use it to the exclusion of the other and both must use reasonable diligence under the circumstances. Fisher v. Chicago City R. Co., 114 Ill. App. 217. At a street intersection the rights of a car and a wagon are equal. Each must use due care for the safety of the other under all the circumstances of the case. Smith v. Minneapolis St. R. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 16. The driver of a team at a street intersection must look and listen for cars, even though a car has just passed and there is a rule of the company that its cars shall keep a certain distance apart. Dewez v. Orleans R. Co. [La.] 39 So. 433. While the driver of a vehicle and a motorman are both bound to ordinary care, ordinary care for the motorman is greater in extent than is the driver's. Weske v. Chicago Union Traction Co., 117 Ill. App. 298. Where a milk cart and an electric car, moving upon lines which intersect each other almost at right angles, collide in such a way as to show that the points of contact were the right shaft of the cart and the left front umbrella post of the car, it cannot be said that the car ran into the cart any more than that the cart ran into the car. Dewez v. Orleans R. Co. [La.] 39 So. 433. Where a motorman sees a driver approaching a track and slows up, which gives the driver the idea he will be allowed to cross, and he proceeds while the motorman in the meantime has turned off the brakes and turned on the current, as a result of which the car strikes the driver's vehicle, the jury may find negligence. Brown v. Los Angeles R. Co. [Cal. App.] 84 P. 362. The driver of a wagon must use due diligence to avoid injury at a street crossing. Ford v. Hine Brothers Co., 115 Ill. App. 153.

ing between crossings.[28] Perhaps no rule of law is more often involved in cases of collisions between wagons and street cars than that known as the "last clear chance" rule. This rule embodies the principle that notwithstanding the plaintiff's lack of due care, if the company in the exercise of ordinary care could nevertheless have avoided the accident, it may still be held liable.[29] Various rulings have been made on the questions of what constitutes a proper lookout,[30] what constitutes the proper giving of warning,[31] and what is a proper speed at which to run a car.[32]

28. At street crossings a street car has a preferential right of way owing to its ponderous construction, the fact that it cannot leave its tracks, and the duty owed to the public convenience by the street railway company. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton [C. C. A.] 141 F. 599.

29. A charge that contributory negligence on the part of the driver of a team would defeat recovery, and that the verdict, if such contributory negligence were found, must be for the defendant, is error. Thomas v. Gainesville & D. Electric R. Co. [Ga.] 52 S. E. 801. Notwithstanding the plaintiff's negligence, the street railway company may still be liable for injury to the driver of a team if those in charge of the car discovered his peril or could have done so by the exercise of ordinary care in time to avoid the accident. Louisville R. Co. v. Hoskins' Adm'r [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1087. Although the driver of a team may be guilty of negligence, a street railway company may yet be held liable if, after discovering the plaintiff's danger, or if, in the exercise of due care they should have discovered it, they could have prevented the accident by the use of ordinary diligence. Hanson v. Manchester St. R. Co. [N. H.] 62 A. 595. Notwithstanding the negligence of the driver of a team a street railway company may nevertheless be liable if those in charge of the car could have prevented the accident by the use of ordinary care after discovering the plaintiff's danger. Rapp v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 144, 88 S. W. 865. Although a driver of a wagon may have been guilty of negligence, the street railway company is liable if it failed to use the means at its command to save him when by the exercise of ordinary care it would have discovered his danger in time to have done so. Jager v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 114 Mo. App. 10, 89 S. W. 62.

30. Even if a motorman saw a person coming toward a crossing he might assume that such driver would not put himself in a perilous position. Hattcher v. McDermot [Md.] 63 A. 214. A motorman is bound to use greater care in approaching a street crossing than at many other points along his route. Fisher v. Chicago City R. Co., 114 Ill. App. 217. A motorman is only required to use ordinary care under the circumstances, so that a charge that the motorman was obliged to use "more than ordinary caution" because the day was wet was erroneous. Quinn v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 560. If a wagon standing near the track is suddenly turned onto the track so that the motorman cannot prevent the collision by the exercise of ordinary care, the company is not liable. Louisville R. Co. v. Hoskins' Adm'r [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1087. Where a motorman having a clear view of the tracks for at least one thousand eight hundred feet ahead runs into the rear end of a thirty-seven foot team and van, he may be found guilty of negligence. Williamson v. Old Colony St. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 655. It is the duty of motormen to notice the apparent movement and consider the probable movement of teams traveling before him in the same direction, especially if the driver was so seated that he could not see a car approaching behind him. Id. Where the evidence showed that a car was approaching a crossing at a high rate of speed without giving any warning, not under control, and that the motorman was not exercising the degree of care the situation demanded, is ground for leaving question of negligence for jury. Chicago City R. Co. v. McDonough [Ill.] 77 N. E. 577. If a driver cuts suddenly in front of a car and there is no negligence on the part of those in charge of the car, there can be no recovery. Chicago City R. Co. v. Meinheit, 114 Ill. App. 497. Where there was a collision between a wagon and a car on a dark night, and there was evidence that the car was running at moderate speed and that the motorman was on the lookout and stopped the car as soon as he saw the wagon, there was held to be no evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Wagner v. Lehigh Traction Co., 212 Pa. 132, 61 A. 814. Where the driver of a wagon drove on the tracks on a dark night, the fact that the motorman momentarily ceased to keep a lookout will not render the company liable when there is nothing to show that a constant lookout would have prevented the accident. Theobald v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 90 S. W. 354. A breach of an ordinance relating to the keeping of a vigilant watch by motormen is negligence per se, and the ordinance is not void on the ground that it requires a higher degree of care than that required by the common law. Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 189 Mo. 107, 88 S. W. 648. Where the driver of a vehicle goes on a street car track about forty feet ahead of a car going six or seven miles an hour to avoid another vehicle, the motorman is guilty of negligence under an ordinance requiring him to stop on the first appearance of danger. Latson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 91 S. W. 109.

31. Warning may be given in any manner. Hattcher v. McDermot [Md.] 63 A. 214. Failure to ring a gong or sound a whistle on approaching a crossing is evidence of negligence on part of a street railway company. Id. The question of negligence on part of a street railway will not be submitted to jury on evidence merely that no gong was sounded, there being no other evidence of negligence to give warning of approaching car. Id. An instruction that if an engineer failed to ring a bell or blow a whistle within eighty rods of public cros-

Frightening horses.[33]—The circumstances attending each particular case of this description are so varied that it is impossible to lay down any more specific rule of law than that the driver of the horse and the employe in charge of the car must both do what they reasonably can under all the circumstances of the case to avoid the danger of an accident.[34]

(§ 8) C. Bicycle riders; automobiles; animals.[35]—Riders of bicycles and drivers of automobiles have a right to use the streets occupied by street railway tracks and to go on the tracks themselves, provided they exercise due care under all the circumstances of each case.[36] Those in charge of the car must, in turn, also sing, as required by statutes, as a result of which a collision with a street car causing the death of engineer occurred, the jury might find engineer guilty of negligence, is more than sixty feet from the crossing, it proper. Roy v. E. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co., 119 Ill. App. 313. Where a motorman is required by ordinance to sound the gong within sixty feet of a crossing, and does not do so, but the driver of a coach sees the car is error for the court to direct particular attention to the failure to sound the gong. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton [C. C. A.] 141 F. 599. From evidence showing that motorman was running car at a very high rate of speed, dropped no fender, used no brake, and gave no signal of warning at or before running over a child, the jury may infer negligence. Koenig v. Union Depot R. Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 497. A street railway company is not bound to sound a gong at a point where there is no intersecting street, in the absence of knowledge that there is any one on the street at that point. Theobald v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 90 S. W. 354. Where the driver of a team saw a car coming some distance away, and then had her attention distracted, whether failure to ring the gong was negligence was held to be a question for the jury. Teal v. St. Paul City R. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 945.

32. Running a car at a speed prohibited by ordinance, negligence per se. Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 390. From facts which indicated the running of a street car at a high rate of speed, faster than twelve miles an hour, at an unusual time of the night, without sounding any warning at cross streets, under circumstances making it difficult for the motorman to see approaching team or pedestrians, the jury might find negligence. Finnick v. Boston & N. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 500. A speed of from eight to fifteen miles an hour in an outlying district of a city over an unimproved street is not negligence as a matter of law. Theobald v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 90 S. W. 354. A good cause of action is shown, by one sueing for damages from injuries for being run into, by offering an ordinance prohibiting fast motoring in the city and proving its violation by the street car company. Heintz v. St. Louis Transit Co [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 353. A speed of fifteen to twenty miles an hour in a thinly settled district is not negligent as a matter of law. American Ice Co. v. New York City R. Co., 98 N. Y. S. 219. A motorman, who ran his car with full power at a speed of forty-five miles an hour on a down grade, when he knew that a steam roller was either on or close to the track, until he had reached a point where it was impossible for him to stop and avoid the danger of a collision with the roller, is guilty of contributory negligence. Hanson v. Whalen, 97 N. Y. S. 237. To be guilty of wilful or wanton conduct a motorman must be conscious that injury will probably result from his conduct, and must proceed with reckless indifference to consequences. Montgomery St. Ry. v. Rice [Ala.] 38 So. 857. The fact that a car colliding with a team was not being run faster than five or six miles an hour does not show as a matter of law that the motorman was not guilty of wilful misconduct. Id.

33. See 4 C. L. 1578.

34. Where a horse reared once some distance away from a car, then proceeded as usual until near the car, and then jumped suddenly in front of it, there was held to be no negligence on the part of the motorman. Wright v. Monongahela St. R. Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 918. When plaintiff left his horse in front of his store fastened to a weight, and the horse was frightened by cars decorated with cotton cloth and running at high speed, due care and negligence were held to be questions for the jury. Joyce v. Exeter, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 76 N. E. 1054. The negligence of a motorman in ringing his gong and not stopping his car after he sees that a horse is frightened is a question for the jury. Dulin v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Kan.] 83 P. 821.

35. See 4 C. L. 1579.

36. A bicycle rider has a right to assume that when he is compelled to ride close to the track that a motorman will not run his car by at a high and dangerous rate of speed without warning. South Chicago City R. Co. v. Kinnare, 117 Ill. App. 1. Where owing to a narrow street two bicycle riders and a buggy are compelled to pass in close proximity and one of the bicycle riders is pushed very close to the tracks, it is the duty of the motorman of a passing street car to get his train under control and give warning. Id. A traveler on a street on which street cars are operated has the right to travel on any part of the street, having equal rights with the car except as modified by the fact that the car cannot leave its tracks and therefore must not be unreasonably impeded, but the traveler must use reasonable care to avoid a collision and has the right to expect corresponding care from the motorman. Kerr v. Boston E. R. Co., 188 Mass. 434, 74 N. E. 669. The question of reasonable care on part of injured and negligence on part of railroad in a street car accident, whereby a bicyclist was injured, is primarily for the jury and the appellate court will not interfere with their verdict except on clear and manifest error. South Chicago City R. Co.

use due care to avoid the risk of accident.[37] Although an adjoining tract of land is platted into lots, streets, and alleys, it is nevertheless the duty of an interurban electric railroad to fence in its right of way and place cattle guards across entrances and exits to inclosures.[38] Cattle pastured in a private inclosure abutting a street railroad, which is not fenced in according to law, are not running at large, nor are they trespassers if they go upon the railroad lands.[39] Where a motorman can see that cows are attempting to cross a track and the owner is exerting himself to prevent them, he is bound to have his car completely under control.[40] A plaintiff for damages to his horse and vehicle for being run into by a street car must first show that he himself was in the exercise of due care.[41]

§ 9. Damages, pleading and practice in injury cases[42] are governed by rules which pertain to other topics. Only a few illustrative decisions of peculiar pertinency are here retained. Upon the issue of negligence, customs,[43] and rules of the company,[44] ordinances regulating the operation of street cars[45] and all the facts

v. Kinnare, 117 Ill. App. 1. Plaintiff and four other bicyclists were riding single file along a smooth path next to the rail of a street railway track when they saw a car approaching. New material had been recently placed on the carriage path in the road, which was unoccupied by other vehicles, making it unfit for bicycle travel, and plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the car passed the bicycle rider, who was fifteen feet in front of plaintiff, before plaintiff attempted to turn away from the car, and that it then increased its speed by a mile and a half an hour and struck plaintiff's bicycle before he could get out of the way, causing plaintiff's injuries. Held that the collision was due, in part at least, to plaintiff's negligence in not turning farther from the track soon enough to avoid a collision, and that he could not, therefore, recover. Dechene v. Greenfield & T. F. St. R. Co., 188 Mass. 423, 74 N. E. 600. A person riding a bicycle at about noon in a crowded city street, who, when about to cross a street car track, looked to ascertain whether a car was coming, and, his view of an approaching car being obstructed, took his chances, and while crossing the track was struck by the car, was held guilty of contributory negligence. Bartlett v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 706. One in a position of danger is not required to use the highest degree of care but only such as the ordinary prudent person would exercise under like circumstances. South Chicago City R. Co. v. Kinnare, 216 Ill. 451, 75 N. E. 179.

37. In an action against a street railroad for injuries to an automobile which was struck by a passing car, the evidence showed that the motorman of a stalled car motioned for the operator of the automobile to pass in front of him. The operator stood up and saw the car with which he collided approaching about seventy-five feet away, and then crossed the track at slow speed. It was held that the signaling of the motorman was not negligent. Hirsch v. Interurban St. R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 330. Where an automobile running parallel to a street railway track was struck from behind by a car, the negligence of the street railway company was held to be for the jury. Foley v Forty-second St., etc., R. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 958.

One who leaves a horse in a street, where street cars pass and were about due, wholly unfastened for ten minutes or more without looking after it, and a street car runs into the horse and vehicle, the street railway company is not liable. 43. A practice and custom of stopping cars at certain places and under certain conditions become part of the res gestae of an injury. Chicago City R. Co v. Lowitz, 119 Ill. App. 360. Evidence of the general custom of other railways in the matter of construction, maintenance, and operation is not always admissible, and even when admissible upon the question of negligence it is neither conclusive nor of especially great weight. McDermott v. Severe, 25 App. D. C. 276. Evidence of a custom where two street car tracks cross for one to give precedence to the other is admissible. Chicago City R. Co. v. Sugar, 117 Ill. App. 578. On the ground of being a part of the res gestae. Id. But it would not necessarily absolve either company, the question of negligence being dependent on other elements of care besides this. Id.

44. The rules of a street railway company for the conduct of its motormen and conductors are admissible in evidence to prove practise and custom, and in connection with other testimony to prove negligence in management of car. Chicago City R. Co. v. Lowitz, 119 Ill. App. 360. But a substantive cause of action cannot be founded on its breach. Id. Rule of street car company providing when its cars will stop to receive or discharge passengers not competent in own behalf in personal injury suit. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Brown, 112 Ill. App. 351.

45. In an action against a street railroad company for personal injuries caused by a collision in a street, an ordinance giving the railroad company the right of way in the street was admissible as bearing on the degree of caution imposed on the motorman. Quinn v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S.

which are part of the res gestae of the accident are admissible,[46] while previous and subsequent acts and conditions not part of the res gestae are inadmissible.[47] A statute providing that no examination, request, or advice of a board of railroad commissioners shall impair the liability of a railroad does not operate to exclude evidence of advice given by the board to a street railway corporation as to the manner of rendering their roadway safer in an action for personal injuries.[48] Notice to a railroad of a defect, no matter what the source, is competent evidence in action against the railroad due to injuries flowing from the defect,[49] but violation by a motorman of an ordinance requiring a vigilant watch does not show negligence by the company.[50]

SUBMISSION OF CONTROVERSY.[52]

A case stated must rest on a pending action.[53] Where an agreement is set forth at length in a case stated, the construction of such agreement is a question of law for the court.[54] A submission of a controversy cannot be entertained by a court where some third party has an interest which will be affected by the determination and has not been made a party.[55] Where a statute provides that the case stated shall be in certain form and contain certain matters, such statute must be observed or the court has no jurisdiction.[56]

SUBROGATION.

§ 1. Definition and nature.[58]—The doctrine of subrogation rests generally upon the principle that one who pays the debt or liability of another to protect his own interest in the property, is entitled to and may enforce all the liens and securities of the party to whom he pays,[59] and being based upon an equitable right, a party is ordinarily entitled to be subrogated whenever it will work out justice as between the parties unless his own contract negatives that intent.[60]

§ 2. Right to subrogation.[61]—The doctrine of subrogation is generally applied to cases where one secondarily liable discharges an obligation upon which another is primarily liable,[62] and upon payment he is entitled to all the rights and securities of the creditor as against the principal[63] and co-sureties,[64] but must first pay the costs.[65] Subrogation does not exist in favor of a mere volunteer who pays the obligation of another,[66] but a surety who pays the debt after default is not a an affidavit setting out certain facts, a failure to accompany the statement with such affidavit invalidates all proceedings of the court. Lax v. Fourteenth Street Store, 97 N. Y. S. 396; Pollock v. Platt, 97 N. Y. S. 990.

Sledge [Miss.] 38 So. 673. Where an administrator pays out more than his share as distributee, which fact is known to the party receiving it, the surety upon the administrator's bond upon paying the estate is subrogated to the rights of the administrator de bonis non as against such third party, and if the third party still holds the property sold the administrator, the surety may subject the administrator's interest therein to the liability. Caviness v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 265. Where the maker of a note given to take up other notes who was surety only for an anomalous endorser, pays the same, he is entitled to the notes for which it was given. Jennings v. Moore [Mass.] 75 N. E. 214. Where an administrator distributes all of the estate and his surety is obliged to pay an unexpected debt presented against the estate, he is subrogated to his principal's rights against the distributees. Baldwin v. Alexander [Ala.] 40 So. 391. Where lands of a wife are taken to discharge obligations of the husband, she is subrogated to the creditors' interests. Long v. Deposit Bank [Ky.] 90 S. W. 961. Where a mortgage covers several lots owned by different persons, one owner who discharges the entire mortgage is not subrogated to the mortgagee's interest. Senft v. Vanek, 110 Ill. App. 117. Where mortgaged chattels are sold under an execution issued upon a judgment against the mortgagor, the mortgage not being filed, the mortgagee is subrogated to the lien of the judgment. Boice v. Conover [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 159.

A life tenant paying valid assessments where it appears that general taxes, which he was bound to pay, were refused, unless the assessments were also paid. Eddy v. Leath, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 249.

Held volunteers: A third person paying a mortgage on lands in which he has no interest. Doxey v. Western State Bank, 113 Ill. App. 442. One discharging a lien inferior to his. Anthes v. Schroeder [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1072. Where a husband takes a transfer from wife of a bond for titles upon the consideration that he pays an obligation therein, such assignment being void, which payment is made. Webb v. Harris [Ga.] 53 S. E. 247. Where one pays a mortgage on cattle not covered by his mortgage under a volunteer though not compelled by legal process.[67] The entire debt must be paid before the surety can participate in the securities held for the payment of the remainder.[68]

Where one has assumed to exonerate another from a liability, the latter upon paying the same will be subrogated; thus a vendor who pays a lien assumed by the vendee is subrogated to the mortgagee's interest,[69] and the same may be enforced as against subsequent vendees,[70] but where a vendee pays a mortgage which he assumed as a part of the purchase price, he is not subrogated as against other lien holders.[71] It is also applied to cases where the property of one has been used to discharge a debt where such payment was made under a void contract or sale.[72] One who discharges a lien upon land to protect his own interest in the land is subrogated to such lien.[73]

Where mortgaged premises are sold by administratrix to pay the mortgage debt and the purchasers have not paid, the creditor is subrogated to the vendor's lien.[74] Where a judgment creditor of a tenant levies upon cotton raised on the premises, and a judgment in conversion is recovered by the landlord who owns an interest therein, upon discharging such judgment he is subrogated to the landlord's interest,[75] and may plead the same in any action wherein the title of the landlord was assailed.[76] A creditor is entitled to be subrogated to securities given by a principal to his sureties if such were given to secure the payment of the debt,[77] but if given as indemnity securities against losses, he can not be subrogated while the principal is solvent.[78] Where a surety pays a debt and takes an assignment of the note in the form of a purchase, the transaction will be treated as a payment as against those jointly liable.[79]

Where a power coupled with a trust is created to sell certain lands for the support and care of the beneficiary, and a sale is made and services rendered to the

Where one having only a divided interest in lands executes a mortgage upon the entire interest to raise money to discharge a lien upon the whole, the mortgagee is subrogated to the discharged lien. Ligon v. Barton [Mass.] 40 So. 556.

beneficiary in reliance on the trust, the purchasers and persons rendering services are subrogated to the beneficiary's interest where the sale fails.[80] A fire insurance company upon payment of a loss is subrogated to the rights of the insured against one responsible for the fire.[81]

The doctrine of subrogation will not be applied where it will be inequitable.[82]

§ 3. How forfeited or lost.[83]—A release in good faith by sureties of indemnity securities defeats the creditor's right to be subrogated to such securities,[84] as does laches in prosecuting an action to be subrogated.[85] An entry of satisfaction of a judgment paid by sureties does not destroy the right of subrogation.[86]

§ 4. Remedies and procedure.[87]—A purchaser of lands at a sale to pay debts of a decedent, to be entitled to subrogation as against a devisee in remainder who was not a party to the proceedings, must prove that the debts were a charge upon the land.[88] In working out a subrogation all persons interested either in the judgment or property covered by it, at the time the subrogation is worked out, are entitled to be heard as to their equities.[89] Where a decree in equity provided that a judgment should be paid out of the proceeds of a sale of chattels mortgaged to a third person, the owner of the judgment was subject to a decree subrogating the mortgagee to the judgment.[90]

The party subrogated must prosecute his rights within the time allowed by statute.[91] Where one discharges a lien upon land to protect his interest therein, the period of limitation is measured from the time the lien accrued in the hands of the original party,[92] but where one secondarily liable pays a debt, the right of action on the implied contract then accrues and statute runs from that period to enforce the securities received by subrogation.[93]

SUNDAY.

Sunday as dies non juridicus.[4]—Where a defendant in a criminal case has an opportunity to poll the jury, a verdict is not vitiated because brought in on Sunday.[5]

Violations of Sunday laws as defense to actions.[6]—Contracts made in violation of the Sunday law are void and cannot be enforced,[7] and a loan by check made on Sunday is within the rule though the check was not cashed or the deed given as security recorded on that day;[8] but an executory contract of sale, though not enforceable because made on Sunday, is rendered enforceable by the making and accepting a delivery of the property on a subsequent secular day.[9] The mere signing of an instrument on Sunday is no defense in an action to enforce it, plaintiff not being a party to the signing.[10] Where a note is given on Sunday, the maker cannot avoid payment of it without restoring the consideration received.[11] A note given on Sunday is valid in the hands of a subsequent bona fide purchaser.[12] The fact that a defendant in his answer fails to assert the fact that a contract sued on was made on Sunday does not cut off his right to assert its invalidity.[13]

Sunday laws and prosecutions for their violation.[14]—The Sunday law is justified as a sanitary measure and as a legitimate exercise of the police power.[15] Statutes prohibiting the public selling or offering for sale of property on Sunday must be liberally construed for the protection of the Sabbath.[16] In interpreting such a law it is necessary to consider its object, and mere changes in the view of people as to the nature of the Lord's day are immaterial.[17] Such statutes do not violate the Federal or state constitutions.[18] Laws prohibiting public traffic in certain articles of merchandise do not contravene the constitutional provisions regarding religious freedom,[19] and laws prohibiting the business of barbering on Sunday are constitutional,[20] although there is some conflict of authority on this point.[21] The Sunday law of Texas does not violate the local option section of the constitution of that state.[22] Under statutes excepting works of necessity, the fact that a compliance with the law would subject defendant to some additional expense and inconvenience is not a defense.[23] In jurisdictions rendering a defendant liable both civilly and criminally for violating the Sunday law, both actions may generally be brought independently.[24] The complaint need not specify the particular business in which defendant was engaged,[25] and the fact that the indictment failed to allege that the acts charged were not works of necessity or charity is no ground for a new trial;[26] but under a statute imposing a fine for performing worldly labor on Sunday, except works of necessity and charity, a charge that defendant performed worldly business is defective if it does not negative the exceptions contained in the statute.[27] Under statutes prohibiting Sunday entertainments in which fees are charged, the fact that seats are sold is competent evidence that a fee was charged,[28] and where the statute prohibits the pursuing of one's ordinary calling on Sunday, proof that on several other Sundays the accused had conducted the same business is sufficient to convict.[29] In prosecutions for permitting one's place of business to be opened for traffic on Sunday, it is not necessary to prove a sale,[30] and the fact that the grand jury failed to indict others for violating a Sunday law is no defense.[31] It is immaterial in such case whether the door is open or was opened for ingress and egress and closed as soon as the parties went in or out.[32] A sale on Saturday of goods sent out on Sunday does not necessarily constitute an opening up of a house for traffic on Sunday.[33] Generally the owner of a saloon or dealer in intoxicants is prohibited from keeping his place of business open for traffic on Sunday.[34] The fact that a defendant who has violated a Sunday law conscientiously believes in observing and does observe another day of the week is no defense.[35] Statutes making it a defense in a prosecution for "servile labor" that another day of the week is uniformly kept as holy time do not apply to publicly selling groceries.[36] Where an act charged is contrary to an express provision of the statute, it is no defense that it did not interfere with religious observances of Sunday by the public.[37] The Sunday law is not suspended as to a liquor dealer because of his license.[38] A judicial officer having jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter cannot be held personally liable for prosecuting a suit on Sunday in the absence of malice, or evidence that defendant objected during trial.[39] Repeated convictions of violating a Sunday law which in its nature is merely a civil regulation cannot be made a basis for compelling a person to give security for his good behavior where such violations do not disturb the peace.[40]

§ 1. Nature, occasion, and propriety.[41]—Statutory provisions in aid of exection for ascertaining and taking of equitable interests in land have been construed to be merely cumulative or alternative, and not exclusive of the ordinary remedies when both are applicable.[42] Though proceedings supplementary to execution are not named they must be deemed included in the spirit and intent of the bankruptcy act vacating all liens accruing within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.[43] Supplementary proceedings in New York, though termed "special" in the Code,[44] have been held to be an ordinary action.[45] They necessarily

§ 2. Proceedings necessary on which to base remedy.[48]—On the return of an execution unsatisfied, supplementary proceedings may be instituted any time within ten years,[49] and in the absence of an allegation to the contrary, will be presumed to have been instituted in time.[50] They are instituted by a motion on affidavit which must correctly describe the judgment, but a slight error in the amount will not vitiate the proceedings.[51]

§ 3. Application for an examination of defendant and debtors. A. Affidavit and opposition to same.[52]—In New York an affidavit for an order requiring a third person to be examined under supplementary proceedings must prove either that the person has property exceeding $10 of the judgment debtor or that he owes the judgment debtor over $10,[53] and an allegation in an affidavit that the complainant derives his knowledge from the records of transfers of real property and statements made under oath by the defendant is not proof sufficient to sustain an order for an examination of third persons.[54] An assignee who seeks to examine the judgment debtor must show in his affidavit all the facts entitling him to act in the judgment.[55] A subpoena duces tecum may be issued with the order for an examination, but only to enable the witness to refresh his own memory.[56] Where a judgment is regular, remains unsatisfied of record, and with no written agreement to satisfy it in any event, it is sufficient to sustain the order for a third party examination, no irregularity appearing otherwise.[57] In a proceeding for the examination of a third person, no order could issue compelling a retransfer of property or the appointment of receiver,[58] nor under such proceedings can the validity of transfers of real estate from a judgment debtor to his wife be tested;[59] hence where such a transferee denies in an action pending to set aside a conveyance that any of the property received is subject to the payment of the judgment, no order for an examination should issue, for no order could result therefrom.[60] examination is "an order in an action"[62] which, though issuing out of the city court of New York, may be served in any part of the state.[63]

§ 4. Procedure at and after examination.[64]—Where in supplementary proceedings a debtor was served with a subpoena duces tecum which does not entitle the plaintiff to an examination of defendant's books, he cannot ask for information which requires the reading of the books in court,[65] as there is no practical difference between physical possession and inspection of the books and compelling a witness to read from them,[66] nor can questions be asked not germane to the litigation in hand and to be used in another case.[67] It is well settled also that where the question of title is raised in supplementary proceedings, relative to property in hands of third person, the proper procedure is to appoint a receiver who can test the question by action, and not to determine the question by motion.[68]

§ 5. Relief against defendant. A. Order for payment or delivery.[69]—If an examination discloses that the debtor possesses property or the cash proceeds of property, the court will order payment of the debt.[70] In New York, by statute,[71] a judgment creditor, on the return of an unsatisfied judgment for necessaries, may obtain an order of the court for execution against the debtor's salary or wages against any person or corporation,[72] but this does not include municipal corporations.[73] An order or judgment for payment must be in direct and appropriate language, not merely inferential.[74]

(§ 5) B. Receivership or other equitable relief.[75]—The appointment of a receiver is a step in the proceedings supplementary to execution, and he may be appointed at any time in the course of a properly instituted proceeding.[76] Whether a receiver shall be appointed or not rests very largely in the discretion of the court to whom the application is made.[77] The time of the appointment is immaterial when the supplementary proceedings were properly instituted.[78] While a receiver should be appointed if the judgment debtor has any property applicable to the lien of the judgment, none should be appointed if he does not have any and where it may only harass the debtor without benefiting the creditor.[79]

A receiver in supplementary proceedings upon his appointment becomes vested with title to all the property of the debtor [80] and all the rights of the creditor for the enforcement of the judgment against such property; [81] likewise, title to property coming to a judgment debtor after the appointment of a receiver immediately vests in his receiver,[82] but only for the purpose of paying the judgment he represents,[83] and such title relates back under the Code of some states to the time of the service of the third party order,[84] but for title to vest in the receiver the proceeding must have been prosecuted to judgment in favor of the creditor against the debtor's debtor.[85] A receiver appointed in one state may assert title to garnisheed property of the debtor located in another state,[86] however, by the appointment of a receiver, a judgment creditor's liens are not assigned or surrendered to him.[87]

A receiver may bring an action for the sale of the real estate on a judgment lien against the real estate accruing before his appointment.[88] His appointment, however, will not preclude the original judgment lienor from issuing execution to sell real estate previously attached.[89] So too, creditor's suit may be maintained by judgment creditors on their own account and for their exclusive benefit after a receiver in supplementary proceedings has been appointed,[90] without even a request to and a refusal by the receiver to maintain the same,[91] nor in a suit by the receiver for an award for the taking of the property of the judgment debtor for public purposes is the judgment debtor a necessary party.[92]

An order for the appointment of a receiver is not void because it does not provide for the statutory exemptions.[93] At most it is only an irregularity, and would still entitle the judgment debtor to withhold the exempted property.[94] In New York [95] it is necessary to give a judgment debtor two days' notice of the application for an order for the appointment of a receiver, unless the court is satisfied that he cannot be found inside the state.[96]

SURETYSHIP.

This topic excludes bonds,[2] their requisites, form, and validity, and the rights and liabilities under particular kinds of bonds;[3] it is confined to the law of suretyship strictly.

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions.[4]—It is immaterial so far as the rights and liabilities of a surety are concerned whether it be an individual or a corporation.[5] His liability is primary, like a principal's, while that of a guarantor is secondary.[6] Accommodation indorsers are mere sureties.[7] So is an agent who signs the contract as an obligor,[8] and where for additional security two persons write their names on the back of a note, they are prima facie joint makers and in fact sureties,[9] and consequently liable to each other for contribution.[10] If land is conveyed subject to mortgage the grantee becomes a principal and the grantor the surety for the payment of the mortgage,[11] and upon default upon the part of the grantee, one of several

Where a creditor of a judgment debtor, because of failure to appear or refusal to answer when duly notified in the proceedings in aid of execution before a justice of the peace, has been ordered to pay money to the plaintiff, as provided in §§ 6680-3 and §§ 6680-4, Revised Statutes, and said plaintiff under favor of §§ 6680-5 brings his action against said creditor, the petition must set forth not only the proceedings before the justice but also an allegation that the defendant is in fact indebted to the judgment debtor. grantors may pay the same and have recourse against the principal by foreclosure and against the other grantors as co-sureties by way of contribution.[12]

§ 2. The requisites of the contract.[13]—No particular or formal phrase is required to create a contract of surety.[14] Either natural persons or corporations may be parties to the contract,[15] but in some states corporations cannot be sureties on official bonds.[16] It requires a consideration like every other contract,[17] but such consideration need not flow to the surety himself.[18] In Georgia where the test of guaranty is a benefit flowing to the guarantor a contract to answer for or guaranty another's performance or payment, with the consideration flowing merely between debtor and creditor, is regarded as one of suretyship.[19] An unqualified order to a person to let the bearer of the order have anything he wants and the writer would "see to it that it was paid for" constituted the latter a surety,[20] and he was liable on his promise without notice of acceptance by plaintiff, nor of the default in payment by the principal.[21] It is immaterial whether the relation appears upon the face of the contract or not,[22] for an apparent principal may show that he is merely a surety, regardless of whether obligee was aware of the suretyship or not.[23]

Want or failure of consideration for a promissory note will not change the relations of makers and payee of a note into principal and surety, even though indorsed to an innocent purchaser, and the makers have no defense against the holders.[24]

§ 3. The surety's liability.[25]—Independent of statute, the general rule is that a creditor cannot be compelled to exhaust his remedy against the principal before resorting to the surety.[26] The liability of a surety becomes fixed with that of the principal,[27] being co-extensive with and measured by it,[28] and he is liable if the

Where an executed contract of indebtedness already exists, an execution of a mortgage by a third person to provide additional security, given without any consideration, is not binding on him as a surety or otherwise (Bluff Springs Merchantile Co. v. White [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 710), but whether any consideration or not existed was a question for the jury (Id.). Where by an assignment a debt becomes instantly due under the statute as to the principal, it would seem that the liability of the surety is co-ordinate. P. L. 1893, p. 433, c. 453, § 1. Pritchard v. Mitchell, 139 N. C. 54, 51 S E. 783. When a surety, in pursuance to the terms of undertaking, assumes the performance of the principal's contract, such surety by being subrogated to the rights of the principal also becomes subject to his liabilities. Payment of material used in constructing building. Ausplund v. Aetna Indemnity Co. [Or.] 81 P. 577.

28. Pritchard v. Mitchell, 139 N. C. 54, 51 S. E. 783. Ordinarily the duration of the liability of a surety on official bonds is coextensive with the officer's tenure of office and ceases when the term expires by operation of law. Aultman Taylor Machinery Co. v. Burchett [Okl.] 83 P. 719. Sureties on a bond to comply with a statute or an order of the court are estopped in the same manner and to the same extent as the principal by any order or decree estopping him to deny that he has failed to comply with the condition of his bond. State v. Corron [N. H.] 62 A. 1044. The authorized finding of a board of commissioners that a liquor dealer had violated a liquor act and that his license should be cancelled was conclusive both on the dealer and his sureties in an action on the bond. Id.

29. Where lessee is not relieved of covenant to pay rent, surety will be held. Shand v. McCloskey, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 260.

30. Moroney v. Coombes [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 527, 88 S. W. 430; Police Jury of Parish of Vernon v. Johnson, 111 La. 279, 35 So. 550. The contract of a surety is to be given no retroactive effect so as to cover past delinquencies, unless it in express terms provides that it shall have that effect, but a bond given to go into effect March 1st, though not received and approved by proper authorities until March 16th, takes effect from March 1st. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Fultz [Ark.] 89 S. W. 93. Sureties are favorites of the law and their liability must be found within the terms of their consent. Stewart v. Knight & Jillson [Ind.] 76 N. E. 743. So "surety" who undertakes to "guaranty" is liable only for obligations of the kind guarantied, as, guaranty of "advances" does not cover "credits" given to be taken up out of other transactions. C. S. Hirsch & Co. v. Meldrim [Ga.] 52 S. E. 813.

31. C. S. Hirsch & Co. v Meldrim [Ga.] 52 S E. 813; Police Jury of Parish of Vernon v. Johnson, 111 La. 279, 35 So. 550. Sureties on an official bond not liable for an assault unnecessarily committed by a constable in the discharge of his duty, under its strict interpretation. State v. Dayton [Md.] 61 A. 624. Surety not bound for objects not in contemplation of parties when contract was signed. Police Jury of Parish of Vernon v. Johnson, 111 La. 279, 35 So. 550.

Building contracts: The liability of a surety on a builder's contract arising in case a building fell to ruin in whole or in part, under §§ 2762, 3545, will be construed strictly. Police Jury of the Parish of Vernon v. Johnson, 111 Ga. 279, 35 So. 550. A distinction is drawn sometimes between active and passive violation of a contract. In the latter case notice to contractor is necessary before his surety can be held. Id. The discovery of latent defects requires notice to contractor with opportunity to him to remedy them before surety on builder's contract can be held. Id. Where defects were discovered in a building nearly two years after its completion, no element of fraud or deception being involved, the parties were not entitled to call on the surety on the bond to make good without notifying the contractor. Id.

32. Surety on a forthcoming bond in attachment proceedings held not liable to produce property. Gilbert v. Yunk's Estate, 214 Ill. 237, 73 N. E. 335. Sureties do not assume liabilities not fairly inferrable from the terms of their contract, as an obligation by a lessee to pay charges incurred by the lessor in recovering the property leased did not warrant a recovery from the sureties on the bond of the lessee of atorney's fees paid by the lessor in order to protect the property against third persons. White River L. & W. R. Co. v. Star Ranch & Land Co. [Ark.] 91 S. W. 14. Sureties on a liquor dealer's bond, who covenanted that if the state recovered judgment against the dealer for breach of the bond they would pay the state's damages if the dealer did not, were liable for any judgment enforceable against the liquor dealer. State v. Corron [N. H.] 62 A. 1044.

33. Where a contract called for a two-inch asphalt coating, but stating that such an estimate of thickness was approximate and reserving the right to vary it in the discretion of the city, repairs 2 1-2 inches thick entailing additional cost on the surety, is not such a variation of the contract as to release the surety. American Bonding Co. v. Ottumwa, 137 F. 572.

34. A surety on a bond conditioned that a defendant pay any judgment rendered for plaintiff was not released because plaintiff was allowed within the proper time to amend his complaint so as to ask for damages instead of specific performance. Doon v. American Surety Co., 110 App. Div. 215, 97 N. Y. S. 270.

35. On a bond. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Fultz [Ark.] 89 S. W. 93. But sureties on an official bond not liable for a penalty imposed by statute for fraudulent collection of fees by strict construction. Eccles v. Walker [Neb.] 106 N. W. 977.

36. East Bridgewater Sav. Bank v. Bates [Mass.] 77 N. E. 711. Where the signers of recover against a surety, default by the principal within the terms of the contract must be shown.[37] Mere notice that he will no longer be liable will not release a surety.[38] A surety may be discharged by the same acts before or after judgment,[39] and if after judgment he may enjoin the collection of the debt.[40] Where one surety company absorbs another it becomes liable on the bonds of the company absorbed.[41] A surety is estopped by recitals in the bond executed by him.[42] He may make the principal his agent for the delivery of the contract of suretyship.[43] The fraud of the principal upon the surety, of which obligee has no notice, will not release the surety from his liability.[44] In so far as the relation of two apparently joint purchasers to each other is concerned, it is always competent to show that one of them stands in the relation of surety to the other.[45] Although an old bond given has not yet expired, the sureties on a new bond for the same purpose of indemnification are liable.[46] Where sureties are liable on a note and a new note is given as collateral security on the original obligation, which is indorsed by all but one of the original sureties, the one not indorsing the new note is still liable on the original obligation, and may be held for contribution by his co-sureties, but he is entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of the new note.[47]

§ 4. The surety's defenses. A. Legal defenses to surety's liability.[48]—The existence of legal defenses will defeat a bill in equity to restrain certain parties from enforcing a judgment against sureties.[49] Sureties cannot be held where the original contract,[50] or the contract of suretyship, is void,[51] nor where a release is notes jointly and severally promise to pay, the fact that defendant signed as a surety did not affect her joint and several primary liability. Id.

37. In order to recover upon the bond of a public officer it is necessary to allege and show defaults covered by and included within the conditions of the bond sued on. Aultman Taylor Machinery Co. v. Burchett [Okl.] 83 P. 719. The fact that plaintiff had recovered a judgment against the principal as sheriff does not show that it was for defaults covered by bond sued on. Id.

38. Where a lessee enters premises under a contract with the privilege of renewal, a surety cannot release himself from liability for rent for the second term by mere notice that he will not be liable. Shand v. McCloskey, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 260. Even though given before any work was actually done under a contractor's bond. A. S. Ripley Co. v. Cooes [Colo.] 84 P. 817.

41. Manny v. National Surety Co., 103 Mo. App. 716, 78 S. W. 69.

42. Where a surety in an insolvency bond recited that the debtor was in custody, he is estopped to deny this recital. Hauser & Son v. Ryan [N. J. Law] 63 A. 4.

43. Where a surety executes a bond and delivers it to the principal for the purpose of aiding the latter in his negotiations, the latter is made the agent of the former for its delivery (Gritman v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. [Wash.] 83 P. 6), and if there is nothing on the face of the bond to put the creditor on guard, the surety is bound (Id.). A recital that the sureties will be liable on a note so long as there is any liability on the part of the principal does not constitute the latter the agent of the former for renewing the note. Newell v. Clark [N. H.] 61 A. 555. The mere fact that the note is payable on demand with interest annually does not show that the sureties intended to constitute the maker their agent to renew it. Id.

44. Thompson v. Chaffee [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 167, 89 S. W. 285; A. S. Ripley Bldg. Co. v. Cooes [Colo.] 84 P. 817.

45. First Nat. Bank v. Dutcher [Iowa] 104 N. W. 497.

46. Bond given May 16, 1899, running one year, did not release sureties on a bond given March 1st, 1900, for loss occurring March 2nd, 1900. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Fultz [Ark.] 89 S. W. 93.

47. Adams v. DeFrehn, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 184.

48. See 4 C. L. 1599.

49. Dampskibsaktieselskabet Habil v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 54. Averments that an action had been begun against the principal, that he had interposed certain pleas in bar which were true and constituted a good defense, do not constitute a discharge. Action against bond company on breach of contract by Machine Company with Steamship Company. Defense of Machine Company, unauthorized alteration of contract, stoppage due to inspection, and so forth. Id.

50. Agreement by principal to do freight handling considered and held not void for indefiniteness or want of mutuality so as to relieve sureties on the principal's bond. Eastern R. Co. v. Tutgeur [Wis.] 105 N. W. 1067. Sureties cannot question the power of the promissee to enter into the contract secured as defense on the ground that the contract of lease was not within the charter power of plaintiff's assignor. White River L. A. W. R. Co. v. Star Ranch & Land Co. [Ark.] 91 S. W. 14.

51. Signatures to bonds: Where a bond is void for lack of sufficient signatures, a granted by statute on proper notice,[52] or by statute of limitation.[53] An infant's contract of suretyship may be avoided by mere disaffirmance.[54] When the liability of the surety is once discharged it cannot be revived by any subsequent arrangement between the principal and creditor without the consent of the surety.[55]

(§ 4) B. Defenses based on extinguishment or absence of principal's liability.[56]—A termination of the contract secured does not discharge the sureties from liabilities already fixed.[57] Even though a surety make a valid agreement not to plead the statute of limitations, such an agreement can only be taken advantage of by estoppel or to bring an action upon it.[58] Sureties on a bond may be released though the principal is still charged; but they are never liable if the principal establishes a defense in bar.[59] The death of the principal does not discharge the sureties if the cause of action forming the liability be one that survives.[60] An adjudication that there is no liability on part of principal releases the surety.[61] A release of a debtor obtained by fraud will not release the surety where he is informed of the fraud of the principal before he has placed himself in a worse position in reliance upon the supposed release.[62] Discharge in bankruptcy of the debtor does not release his surety.[63] An acceptance by the obligee of an assignment for benefit of creditors upon condition that the sureties on an indemnity bond will not be resurety will not be liable thereon even though for a time he acknowledge his liability as a surety, as where one of three sureties signed a bond. On breach of conditions the surety who signed thinking himself liable tried to borrow money to pay the debt. Slaughter v. Hampton [Ky.] 90 S. W. 981. Bonds being delivered in an incompleted state and without the signatures of all the sureties, the liability of the signing sureties depends upon the authority of the principal to deliver as the act of such sureties. Such authority may be implied from the acts and conduct of the sureties (Baker County v. insufficient as a matter of law to show authority (Id.). The liability of the sureties did not depend entirely upon the question Huntington [Or.] 83 P. 532, but the mere signing and attempting to limit their liability by writing amounts before their names and leaving the bond with the principal was whether there was an agreement or understanding at the time of signing that the bond should not be delivered until others had signed it. Id. A surety may waive the right to insist that co-sureties must sign the bond before he is liable. Insertion of names in body of bond in red ink is notice that the surety who signs will not be bound unless the co-sureties also sign. Slaughter v. Hampton [Ky.] 90 S. W. 981.

52. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 812, entitling sureties as a matter of right to a discharge from obligation on the bonds of fiduciaries, a surety is entitled to a discharge during the term for which it has been paid for being surety. In re United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 98 N. Y. S. 217.

53. In Kentucky, sureties on a note are discharged from liability seven years after the cause of action accrues. Weller v. Ralston [Ky.] 89 S. W. 698.

54. Civ. Code § 17, requiring a return of the consideration upon the disaffirmance by an infant of a contract beneficial to himself and made at the age of over 18 years, does not apply. Helland v. Colton State Bank [S. D.] 106 N. W. 60.

55. Where the surety liability was expressed in a letter which the principal gave the creditor, and after some time creditor returned letter to principal with directions to have the surety modify it, this discharged the surety and the subsequent return of the letter by the principal to the creditor, without the sureties knowledge or consent, did not review the surety's liability. Stewart v. Knight & Jillson [Ind.] 76 N. E. 743.

56. See 4 C. L. 1599.

57. Termination of a lease by accepting a return of the property leased did not discharge the sureties from liability for rent then due. White River L. & W. R. Co. v. Star Ranch & Land Co. [Ark.] 91 S. W. 14.

58. Newell v. Clark [N. H.] 61 A. 555.

59. Thompson v. Chaffee [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 167, 89 S. W. 285. In Pennsylvania a surety on a sealed bond is not released by the fact that limitations have run against the debt secured by the bond. United States v. Mercantile Trust Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 1062.

60. Action under civil damage act. State v. Soale [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1111.

61. Especially true in an action against surety on the bond of a county treasurer where treasurer was declared not liable. Stevens v. Carroll [Iowa] 105 N. W. 653.

62. A creditor gave back a note to a debtor on receiving a check which, however, was dishonored at the bank. The surety had been informed of the release of the note and soon thereafter the creditor informed him that he would hold him on the note. Held surety was not released. Hogan v. Kaiser, 113 Mo. App. 711, 88 S. W. 1128.

63. Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 16. Carpenter v. Goddard [Mass.] 76 N. E. 953. A surety upon a poor debtor's recognizance is not released by the adjudication of the debtor as a bankrupt after his default. Id. The liability of a surety on a poor debtor's recognizance fixed by Rev. L. c. 168, § 66, requiring execution on such recognizance to issue for the full amount of the judgment, cannot be reduced to nominal damages by the subsequent adjudication of the debtor as a bankrupt. Id.

leased does not release such sureties where the assignment is not secretly made, especially where the obligee is a trustee of the debt for third persons.[64]

(§ 4) C. Defenses based on change of contract or increase of the risk.[65]—A material change of the contract of suretyship releases the surety without regard to whether surety is prejudiced thereby or not,[66] unless waived,[67] but an immaterial variation from the terms of the contract will not constitute a release.[68] A surety may estop himself by consent and conduct from asserting that the contract has been modified.[69] The liability of sureties on a bond are not relieved by an order of the court requiring further security.[70]

(§ 4) D. Defenses arising out of forbearance or suspension of liability of principal.[71]—An extension of time for the payment of a debt, made without the consent of the surety, discharges him,[72] but such extension must have all the essentials of a binding contract[73] and must be for a definite period, and for a valuable

A waiver of covenants by a lessee without the knowledge or consent of his sureties will release them. Sureties of lessee of hotel on waiver of covenants of repair and furnishing. Stern v. Sawyer [Vt.] 61 A. 36. Sureties of a lessee are released by a sale of a part of the leased premises by lessor, although with the lessee's consent. Id. The reservation in a lease of the right to sell the entire leasehold on six months' notice to the lessee will not justify the sale of a part without notice to the sureties. Id. Where a contractor was to remove a stone in 12 months, but through lapse of lease by government his time was reduced to 9 months, after which he refused to go on with the work, his surety was not liable for breach of the contract. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. United States [C. C. A.] 137 F. 866.

Building contract: Payment to the contractor without presentation of certificates of the architect and without reserving a certain percentage as provided by the contract discharged the sureties. First Nat. Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 415. A surety is not liable if notice is not given according to the terms of the contract. Notice to be given within 21 days of default. Union Surety & Guaranty Co. v. Sevenson, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 324. Parol evidence admissible to show material change in terms of contract without surety's consent or knowledge. A parol understanding that part of consideration for mortgage should be an extension of time in which to pay note secured, made without consent or knowledge of sureties. Moroney v. Coombes [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 527, 88 S. W. 430.

67. First Nat. Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 415. A promisee who waives performance according to the terms of a contract cannot thereafter hold the sureties to answer for subsequent obligations. Plaintiff who had accepted property returned to him by his lessee at a place other than that required by the contract could not thereafter hold the sureties for expenses in removing the property or for rent after such acceptance. White River, L. & W. R. Co. v. Star Ranch & Land Co. [Ark.] 91 S. W. 14.

68. Defendant directed plaintiff to deliver teeth to a dental company "said teeth to be consigned and paid for every 30 days as sold." Held the fact that plaintiff did not collect every 30 days did not release the surety. Eccleston v. Sands, 108 App. Div. 147, 95 N. Y. S. 1107. Payment of labor and material bills by obligee in building contractor's bond without retaining a percentage as provided by the contract held not necessarily to release surety. First Presbyterian Church v. Housel, 115 Ill. App. 230. The contract providing that wages earned by the principal up to the 15th of the month should be paid on or about the 20th. payment on the 15th did not discharge the surety. Eastern R. Co. v Tuteur [Wis.] 105 N. W. 1067. In an action by a city to recover from a contractor and surety the amount of a judgment against it for injuries caused by the contractor, the fact that the city did not after notice of the claim retain from the salary of the contractor money with which to pay the judgment did not release the surety where the contract simply provided that such sum might be retained if in the judgment of the board of public works it was necessary. City of Spokane v. Costello [Wash.] 84 P. 652.

69. A surety on a contractor's bond having waived provisions as to the time of performance and payment was estopped from defending on the ground that the contract could not be varied by parol where plaintiff relied on the waiver and would be prejudiced were it repudiated. Hellman v. City Trust, Safe Deposit & Surety Co., 98 N. Y. S. 51.

70. Defendants who were sureties on a bond conditioned that the principal would pay $45 per month for the support of his wife for one year from May 7, 1901. Court issued an order that before July 1, 1901, a new bond should be executed conditioned upon the payment until further order of the court. Held no release. Keefer v. Keefer, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 256.

71. See 4 C. L. 1601.

72. Fanning v. Murphy [Wis.] 105 N. W. 1056. Absence of consent must be alleged and proven. Patnode v. Deschenes [N. D.] 106 N. W. 573.

73. A mere agreement to extend the time at the same rate of interest is not binding, and co-surety is not released. Fanning v. Murphy [Wis.] 104 N. W. 1056. Such extension cannot be supported on the theory of an exchange of promises on the part of the consideration,[74] and the holder must have knowledge that the party seeking release is a surety.[75] The mere indulgence of the holder of a note in not enforcing its collection is not sufficient to release the sureties.[76] The personal representatives and legatees of a surety cannot raise the defense of laches by a creditor when the cause of the creditor's delay was the fact of a suit pending against the principal and another surety, the effect of which suit was to reduce materially the liability of the surety in question.[77]

(§ 4) E. Defenses based on impairment of surety's secondary remedies against principal or collateral securities.[78]—A creditor owes no duty to the surety of active vigilance to collect from the principal,[79] but he does owe proper diligence to preserve the security of a debt, and failure to exercise it releases the surety to the extent of the loss incurred,[80] and a request by the surety to sue the principal relieves the surety from liability if the creditor by negligence loses the means of recovering his debt from the principal.[81] The rule that a release of collateral security merely discharges the surety pro tanto does not apply as to a condition going to the completion of the entire contract,[82] nor is it necessary that a creditor be in collusion with a debtor to make him liable for the diversion of the surety's security.[83] A creditor's diligence or lack of diligence may be shown by parol evidence,[84] but if the release of the security was erroneous and the surety was notified of the error before being preju-debtor to keep the money and on the part of the creditor to loan. Id. Must bind creditor as against principal to release surety. Higgins v. McPherson, 118 Ill. App. 464. An agreement which cites that the holder of a note has purchased of the maker a piece of land which the maker agrees to sell on or before a certain day, which day is after the maturity, and that the holder will refund to the maker all of the sale price in excess of the note, is an extension of the time of payment. Carter-Battle Grocer Co. v. Clarke [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 880. The insolvency of the husband does not affect the rule that an extension of the time on a debt for which the wife is surety releases her if made without her participating in it. De Barrera v. Frost [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 593, 88 S. W. 476. Even though the amount to be paid at the end of the extended period be exactly the same as what was previously due. Id. Payment of interest before it is due does not of itself amount to an agreement to extend the time. Weaver v. Prebster [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 674. Consent of holder of note to receive less interest for the first half year than he could have demanded, held a mere gratuity. Fanning v. Murphy [Wis.] 105 N. W. 1056. The payment of interest after alleged extension, no consideration. Id. Unilateral memorandum on back of note made 4 days after the agreement for the alleged extension, ineffectual. Id. The fact that the holder of the note entered the result upon the loan register as a renewal loan immaterial. Id.

74. Held by divided court that payment of interest before maturity is insufficient consideration. Weaver v. Prebster [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 674. The hypothecation of land for the payment of a note and the additional interest to accrue because of the extention is sufficient consideration to support an agreement to extend time. Carter-Battle Grocer Co. v. Clarke [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 880. Payment of interest in advance is sufficient consideration, and such payment is prima facie evidence of such an agreement. Higgins v. McPherson, 118 Ill. App. 464. Payment of interest already due is insufficient. Id.

75. Mutuality must exist between payee and the maker. Weaver v. Prebster [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 674.

76. Titterington v. Murrell [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 510. A note due Oct. 24, 1902, had on the back an indorsement "Rec'd $10, interest on this to Nov. 24th '02," but the evidence showed that this $10 was paid 6 or 8 weeks after said note was due without any understanding as to any extension of time on the note. Held, sureties were not released. Id. Where debtor was unable to pay at date of maturity, the creditor said "Let it go on," and he did let the note run another six months. Surety not released King v. Griggs, 116 Ill. App. 132..

diced, he is not relieved,[85] and creditor may apply funds received from debtor to other unsecured debts without releasing surety.[86]

(§ 4) F. Defenses based on fraud or concealment by creditor of material facts.[87]—The liability of a surety may be relieved by acts of bad faith of the obligee,[88] but sureties are not discharged by concealment of facts by approvers of a bond who were not the obligees thereof and under no duty to disclose.[89]

(§ 4) G. Other defenses.[90]—In a suit by a creditor against his debtor and sureties, the sureties may set up as an offset a debt due the principal.[91] If an administrator or trustee wrongfully applies a trust fund with acquiescence of the beneficiary, the sureties are released from liability to the beneficiary.[92] Of course a surety may purchase his release,[93] but surety is not discharged because after a contract has been broken by the principal the other party refuses to continue performance on his part,[94] nor will the fraud of the principal relieve the surety, the obligee having no notice,[95] nor will the subsequent correction by the surety of a violated duty of the principal release him generally.[96]

§ 5. Rights of surety against principal and co-surety.[97]—Under the common law a surety who paid a debt was entitled to all rights of the creditor, including an assignment of securities,[98] but the right of subrogation does not exist until the sureties have discharged the obligation of suretyship.[99] However, where the funds are about to be paid to third persons, they may stay the proceedings until the extent

85. Where a mortgage was released by mistake, and the sureties on a note soon thereafter had notice that such release was erroneous, that note was unpaid, and that the creditors still claimed the debt, the sureties are liable, although the principal sold the mortgaged property two or three years after the alleged release. Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Taylor [Iowa] 105 N. W. 125.

Where plaintiff refused to furnish the principal with more gold from which to make watch cases, and withdrew all the principal had on hand after the latter had refused to make good a deficiency, though the bond was conditioned that the principal perform at the termination of the contract. 95. It is immaterial that notice was served upon the obligee that he would not be liable on the contractor's bond before any work was done under it. A. S. Ripley Bldg. Co. v. Coors [Colo.] 84 P. 817; Thompson v. Chaffee [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 167, 89 S. W. 285. Where a contract provides that the contractor will furnish all material at his own cost, and his bond is conditioned for a strict performance of the contract, it is no defense to a suit against the sureties on the bond to recover money paid to discharge a mechanic's lien for material that plaintiff did not file the contract which would have relieved him. 3 Mills' Ann. Where a surety is sued on his bond for the failure of his principal to pay into court a sum of money, it is no defense that the surety now offers to pay into that court the money and to await its decision as to his defenses. Grafflin v. State [Md.] 63 A. 373. Where for violation of duty the committee of a lunatic has been discharged and ordered to bring the funds into court, in a suit on the bond against the surety it is no defense that the violation of duty was corrected after the order was issued. of their liabilities are determined and discharged.[1] Where the fact of suretyship does not appear in a decree, the surety cannot enforce his rights thereunder except on adjudication of his suretyship,[2] but as against a claimant under a co-defendant with notice, he may subsequently have an adjudication of suretyship.[3]

Indemnity and contribution.[4]—The surety has no claim against the principal until after payment of the debt by the surety, even though liability be incurred,[5] but upon the payment of the debt by the surety a new and distinct debt is created, rendering the principal liable to the surety for the full amount paid.[6] The relation of principal and surety continues notwithstanding the rendition of a judgment against the surety.[7] When he is sued alone he may notify the principal to defend the suit, and upon failure of the principal to indemnify him and defend, the surety, upon paying the judgment against him, may in the absence of fraud recover the amount paid from the principal, whether the principal was actually liable or not.[8] Advice of the attorney of an assignee to his sureties to settle a claim against the assignee will not bind him,[9] but where an assignee refuses to have anything further to do with a case and declares that his bondsmen may do as they please, they are justified in making settlement with the creditors;[10] and where sureties make such settlement as a result of which the accounts of the assignee are confirmed by withdrawal of exceptions to them, the assignee cannot in good conscience be heard to assert that because the record is clear he cannot be held for indemnity by the sureties[11] on the ground that when an adverse opinion is about to be filed against an assignee in an action of surcharging and falsifying, and his sureties obtain a postponement and settle certain claims in the meantime, such payment is not voluntary but legal and binding on the assignee as principal.[12] Where a surety who has paid a note releases one of his principals in consideration of the latter selling his interest in a partnership business to another who should assume the liability, which sale is afterwards rescinded by the other partner, but without the ratification of the rescission by the first partner, the surety cannot hold such principal.[13] A creditor cannot charge the sureties with expense of a collection of a claim filed in bankruptcy proceedings against the principal at the principal's suggestion, but not authorized by the sureties.[14]

principal's debt [16] under compulsion,[17] but a surety need not wait until payment is coerced by the creditor.[18] It is an equitable principle based on the idea of equality of burden between co-sureties where loss has been sustained,[19] but many modern authorities now hold the liability of contributions to be contractual and not merely equitable, as formerly regarded.[20] Nevertheless, the right of contribution not arising until after the closing up of the estate of a deceased co-surety, it may be enforced in equity against his legatees or distributees.[21] A co-surety failing to exercise diligence to realize on security given by the principal, he is not entitled to contribution.[22] Where a surety pays the debt of his principal with his principal's money, he is not entitled to contribution from co-sureties.[23]

§ 6. Security held by surety and rights therein.[24]—If conveyanees are made by a principal to a surety for the purpose of securing the payment of a debt, the creditor has an interest therein which the surety cannot destroy,[25] but if the conveyance is made to a surety for an indemnity, the ereditor has no interest therein except such subsequent equitable interests as may arise out of the insolvency of the parties principally liable.[26] A surety may release such a security unless such equitable interests intervene.[27] In fact the mortgagee if acting in good faith may release such security even after insolvency, no demand for it having been made upon him.[28] Although creditors might have been entitled to certain indemnification securities in the hands of sureties if claimed in time, to do so more than twenty years after their release is laches.[29] Creditors cannot lay claim to a deceased surety's interest in an indemnity mortgage by proceedings against other sureties to whieh neither the heirs nor representatives of the dead surety are parties.[30] Although a principal quitclaims land to his surety before judgment is rendered in consideration of the surety's payment of the judgment, the latter is nevertheless entitled to the land as surety.[31] Notes executed by the prineipal for payments made on the debt by the sureties are not new obligations but merely evidenee of the old one, and as such are protected by any security originally exeeuted for the indemnification of the sureties.[32]

The allowance of such amendment was not an adjudication as to the materiality or effect of evidence necessary to support the amendment. Id. Under a statute providing that the allowance of an amendment shall not be binding upon persons not parties to the record, sureties on attachment bond may contest the effect of an amendment to the declaration in the original suit (Morton v. Shaw [Mass.] 77 N. E. 633), but where the amendment merely puts the cause of action in proper form, it is binding on the sureties (Id.). Where the original court founded on a written contract of sale was amended so as to declare on an oral contract of which the writing was a memorandum, the sureties are bound. Morton v. Shaw [Mass.] 77 N. E. 633. Mere correction of a clerical error does not affect the binding force. Id. Townsend v. Sullivan [Cal. App.] 84 P. 435. TAXES.[52]

§ 1. Nature and kinds, and power to tax.[53]—A tax is an enforced contribution from a citizen to the state to be applied for governmental or public purposes.[54] It is not a "debt."[55]

The power to tax is an attribute of sovereignty necessary not only to the public welfare but to the maintenance of the government, and hence subject to no limitation or restriction beyond those set up in the fundamental law,[56] or found in the structure of the government itself.[57] There are, however, several well defined limitations upon the power, some of which have been expressly incorporated in the written fundamental law of the nation and the various states. Thus, the provisions of the Federal constitution guarantying equal protection of the laws,[58] forbidding 52. Special assessments, 6 C. L. 1158, and Internal Revenue Laws, 6 C. L. 161, are given separate treatment.

53, 54. See 4 C. L. 1605.

55. A tax is not a debt in the sense that it will be barred by a statute of limitations against actions on open account or on implied contract. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright [Ga.] 53 S. E. 251.

56. Washington Nat. Bank v. Daily [Ind.] 77 N. E. 53.

57. "The only security against the abuse of this power [of taxation] is found in the structure of the government itself. In imposing a tax the legislature acts upon its constituents. This is, in general, a sufficient security against erroneous and oppressive taxation." Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 50 Law. Ed.—— (quoting from McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 428); Succession of Levy [La.] 39 So. 37.

58. The New York mortgage tax law, Laws 1905, c. 729, § 307, is held not to deny equal protection of the laws, since, though applicable only to mortgages recorded after July 1, 1905, it makes no distinction between persons in the same class or condition.

the deprivation of property without due process of law,[59] and denying to states the right to tax objects of interstate commerce;[60] and provisions of state constitutions,[61] such as those restricting the rate of taxation, and the purposes for which taxes may be imposed,[62] and requiring uniformity and equality[63] within the limits of the taxing authority,[64] must not be violated. It is also essential to the validity of a tax that the property taxed shall be within the territorial jurisdiction of the taxing power.[65]

People v. Ronner, 95 N. Y. S. 518; Id., 110 App. Div. 816, 97 N. Y. S. 550. The North Carolina road tax law does not discriminate between the inhabitants of towns and of the country, since inhabitants of towns, though not required to work on roads, are under greater expense for city streets. State v. Wheeler [N. C.] 53 S. E. 358. The North Carolina statute requiring citizens to contribute four days' labor per year on the public highways or to make a money payment in lieu thereof, is held not objectionable as double taxation, though the roads are worked in part by funds derived from taxation. Requirement of labor is not a "property" tax, time and labor not being property in this sense. Id. The fourteenth amendment to the Federal constitution was not designed to prevent a state from changing its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, nor to compel the states to adopt an iron rule of equality to prevent the classification of property for taxation, or the imposition of different rates upon different classes. It is enough that there is no discrimination in favor of one as against another of the same class, and that the method of assessment and collection is not inconsistent with natural justice. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 50 Law Ed.—. U. S. Const., Amend. 14, does not require equality of taxes by state. State v. Wheeler [N. C.] 53 S. E. 358.

59. Laws 1905, c. 729, § 307 (New York mortgage tax law), does not violate due process of law requirement. People v. Ronner, 95 N. Y. S. 518; Id., 110 App. Div. 816, 97 N. Y. S. 550.

60. A license tax on a corporation which sells oil from barrels, tanks, or wagons of the corporation is not a tax on interstate commerce, since the property of the corporation is in the state and mingled with the mass of other property therein. Standard Oil Co. v. Fredericksburg [Va.] 52 S. E. 817. A license tax on a foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce is not a tax on interstate commerce. American Smelting & Refining Co. v. People [Colo.] 82 P. 531.

61. The Michigan railroad tax law does not violate the provision of the Michigan constitution requiring tax laws to distinctly state the tax and the object to which it is to be applied. Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 F. 223. New York mortgage tax law does not interfere with freedom to contract, or the home rule principle. No power of "assessing" is withdrawn by the act from local assessors. People v. Ronner, 95 N. Y. S. 518; Id., 110 App. Div. 816, 97 N. Y. S. 550. There is no constitutional prohibition against double taxation. State v. Wheeler [N. C.] 53 S. E. 358.

62. Laws 1903, c. 551, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 667, does not violate Const. art. 5. §§ 1, 2, requiring poll taxes to be applied to education and support of the poor. State v. Wheeler [N. C.] 53 S. E. 358.

63. Sess. Laws 1905, p. 273, provides that where live stock is pastured in more than one county during the year, it shall be subject to taxation in each county in proportion to the time it remains in each. It also provides for payment of taxes in the home county for the full year at the rate of the last preceding levy, if the owner of the stock has no realty liable for the tax. The act fails to provide for any equalization or adjustment in case the rate for the "last preceding year" should be different from that of the current year. Held owners of stock who have no realty are not taxed at the same rate as owners of other property, and the law is unconstitutional under Const. art. 1, § 32, and art. 9, § 1. Lake County v. Schroder [Or.] 81 P. 942. Sess. Laws 1903, p. 290, c. 151, requires payment of fees to clerk in probate proceedings, proportionate to the amount of the estate, to be paid into the county funds. The tax is construed as a property tax and violates Const. art. 7, §§ 1, 2, 9, requiring property to be taxed in proportion to its value and at an equal and uniform rate. State v. Case [Wash.] 81 P. 554.

NOTE. "Fees" as taxes: "If a charge, though in the statute authorizing it designated as a 'fee,' is in fact based entirely upon a property valuation and not upon actual and necessary services rendered or to be rendered, it is a property tax, rather than a fee for services. State v. Gorman, 40 Minn. 232, 41 N. W. 948; State v. Mann, 76 Wis. 469, 45 N. W. 526; Fatjo v. Pfister, 117 Cal. 83, 48 P. 1012. A law providing for the collection of a 'fee,' which has for its direct and only purpose the creation of a fund by an exaction on property to be paid into the state treasury to be used indiscriminately for any and all public purposes creates a tax. Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State, 49 Ohio St. 189, 30 N. W. 435, directly in point; and by way of inference In re Wau Yin, 22 F. 701, where a charge as a 'license fee' was held to be a tax because the charge was much greater than the service rendered would warrant."—4 Mich. L. R. 169.

64. Acts 1904, c. 167, which purports to incorporate a town and to exempt the inhabitants from certain county taxes, is unconstitutional, violating Const. art. 13, § 168, requiring uniformity of taxation on the same class of subjects within the taxing authority. Campbell v. Bryant [Va.] 52 S. E. 638.

65. A tax in Kentucky on the rolling stock of a corporation permanently employed and located in other states, under Ky. St. § 4020, is a denial of due process of law.

Municipal corporations[66] have no inherent powers of taxation but possess only such as are expressly delegated to them.[67] The control of the legislature over the power of taxation delegated to municipal corporations is subject to the prohibition of the Federal constitution against legislation impairing the obligation of contracts,[68] and a law restricting or withdrawing from such a corporation the power to tax to such an extent as to impair the obligation of its contracts, made upon a pledge, expressly or impliedly given, that it shall be exercised for its fulfillment, is void.[69] Thus, a statute limiting the county tax rate for various purposes, and also placing a limitation upon the total rate for all purposes,[70] thereby authorizing county authorities to dispense with a levy for the sinking fund to pay its bonded indebtedness, is invalid.[71] Legislative control over municipal taxation is also subject to provisions of the state constitutions restricting the power of the legislature with respect to municipal affairs.[72] The power of a de facto municipal corporation to levy taxes for authorized municipal purposes cannot be collaterally attacked in a proceeding to collect the tax.[73]

Construction of tax laws.[74]—The language of a law providing for a constitu-

Property placed outside the limits of a municipality by a change in its territorial limits is not liable to taxation for bonds issued by the municipality before its territory was reduced (Miller v. Pineville [Ky.] 89 S. W. 261), even though property owners in the territory taken from the municipality agreed to pay their portion of the debts of the municipality (Id.). The power to levy taxes rests alone with the legislature, it is not the subject of agreement. Id. Assessment of property to a nonresident owner is a jurisdictional defect, not curable by Laws 1904, c. 234, curing irregularities in taxes in city of Poughkeepsie. Rowley v. Poughkeepsie, 106 App. Div. 258, 94 N. Y. S. 454.

67. Applied to county courts. Southern R. Co. v. Hamblen County [Tenn.] 92 S. W. 238. Thus, counties of Tennessee cannot levy and collect for general county purposes taxes in excess of the amount allowed by law (Southern R. Co. v. Hamblen County [Tenn.] 92 S. W. 238), and taxes for general purposes in excess of the statutory limit are invalid, though styled in the levy as "special" taxes (Id.). County court has no power to levy "special" tax to defray expense of suppressing smallpox epidemic and to repay loan from sinking fund. Id. Act March 7, 1901 (P. L. 40), pars. 4 and 22 of § 3, art. 9, authorizing license taxes by cities of the second class does not authorize a tax of 25 cents per lineal foot of street railways, this being a property tax though designated a "license" tax by the ordinance. West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 54, 74 N. E. 771. Const. art. 9, § 10, prohibiting the general assembly from imposing taxes on municipal corporations or their inhabitants for corporate purposes, is not violated by Laws 1893, p. 136, authorizing city treasurers to retain a portion of the interest on funds under their control. City of Chicago v. Wolf [Ill.] 77 N. E. 414. Const. art. 11, § 12, prohibiting the legislature from imposing taxes on municipalities for municipal purposes, and providing for the vesting of the power to impose such taxes on the municipalities themselves, is not violated by Acts 1903, c. 186, requiring submission of a proposed charter amendment to vote of the people, though such requirement will entail expense to the municipality. 74. NOTE. Construction of tax laws: "No consistent rule for the interpretation of tax laws has been laid down by the authorities. Precedents can be cited from courts of high standing in large numbers to sustain almost any view contended for. The construction is sometimes aggressively hostile to the state (Blackwell on Tax Titles, 728, approved in Buell v. Boylan, 10 S. D. 180, 72 N. W. 406), requires the resolution of doubts against it (Commercial Bank v. Sanford, 103 F. 98, 100), and denies the propriety of applying thereto any equitable considerations (Lord Cairns, tional method of taxation is to be construed fairly and reasonably so as to effectuate legislative intention, and to compel property protected by the state to contribute its ratable share of public revenue, and to avoid discrimination in taxation between property owners.[75] The validity of a statute providing for a method of taxation for property of a particular class cannot be attacked on the ground that officers executing the law have systematically undervalued other property, thereby causing an inequality in taxes.[76] Statutes imposing restrictions upon business or the common occupations of the people, or levying a tax upon them, are to be construed strictly.[77] The rule that in case of doubt as to the validity of a tax the doubt is to to be resolved in favor of the citizen is not applicable in construing a statute imposing a license fee on foreign corporations.[78] Repeals and revisions of revenue laws have a prospective operation only, unless the legislative intent to the contrary clearly appears.[79] The construction of particular statutes, not included under the general principles already discussed, is treated in the note.[80]

§ 2. Persons, objects, and interests taxable. A. Taxable property and its classification.[81]—The legislature has power to classify persons or property for purposes of taxation,[82] and to impose different rates upon different classes,[83] or to tax in Partington v. Attorney Gen., L. R. 4 H. L. 100, 122). More frequently the construction is merely strict. 'A tax cannot be imposed without clear and express words for that purpose.' Pollock, C. J., in Burr v. Scuddus, 11 Exch. 191, approved in U. S. v. Isham, 17 Wall. [U. S.] 504, 21 Law. Ed. 728, and in Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 45 Law. Ed. 853. In an increasing degree, however, the tendency is to construe tax laws, not literally, but liberally, to effectuate their manifest and reasonable purpose, and in the light of surrounding circumstances. Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 45 Law. Ed. 853. 'Revenue statutes are not to be regarded as penal, and therefore to be construed strictly. They are remedial in their character, and to be construed liberally, to carry out the purposes of their enactments.' Swain, J., in United States v. Hodson, 10 Wall. [U. S.] 395, 406, 19 Law. Ed. 937. And see Cliquot v. Cham, 3 Wall. [U. S.] 114, 18 Law. Ed. 116; Taylor v. U. S., 3 How. [U. S.] 197, 210, 11 Law. Ed. 559. Much of the apparent inconsistency of the formulas used will disappear when they are confined to the facts involved in the decision under consideration, especially with reference to whether the matter for determination be the right of the state to tax, the legal sufficiency of the language employed, or the machinery prescribed, the creation of the tax by officials of the law, or its collection. Usually a construction, liberal to the state, is applied to the earlier stages of tax proceedings which are anterior to the attempt by the state to collect the tax, as to the method of taxation and the determination of a sum to be collected as a tax; while a construction, strict as against the state, is applied to the later proceedings to seize and sell property in satisfaction of, or otherwise to collect, the tax as thus ascertained." The right to redeem from a tax sale made under Laws 1890, c. 132, was a "right accrued," and was perpetuated as it existed under that act, including the provisions for terminating and exercising the right by the saving provisions contained in Rev. Codes 1895, § 2686, though the code of 1895 repealed the revenue laws of 1890. Blakemore v. Cooper [N. D.] 106 N. W. 566. Provisions of Rev. certain kinds of property and not others.[84] It also has power to provide for different methods of assessment and collection of taxes upon different classes.[85] The exercise of these powers is subject only to the limitations that the tax imposed must not discriminate in favor of one as against another of the same class,[86] and the method prescribed must be consistent with natural justice.[87]

(§ 2) B. The persons liable.[88]—In general, the owner of property at the time of assessment is liable for the taxes.[89] Personalty must be assessed to the owner,[90] but a person to whom it is assessed may be estopped by his conduct to deny ownership as against a purchaser at a tax sale.[91]

Vendor and vendee.[92]—As between vendor and vendee, taxes becoming a lien before the conveyance is completed are chargeable to the former.[93] An assessment against property as an entirety having been paid by the original owner, an assessment against a vendee of an interest therein for the same year is void.[94] Where a purchaser of land agrees with his vendor to pay the taxes on the land for the current year, a judicial assessment against the purchaser for such year, though erroneous, is not prejudicial and will not be set aside.[95] Where the liability of a township, and of property therein, is fixed by a judicial decree ordering a special tax to pay an existing indebtedness, prior to the transfer of property in the township, free from claims or liabilities against the vendor, the vendor must pay the special tax.[96]

Mortgagor and purchasers under mortgage sale.—If property is sold in foreclosure proceedings during the year following the assessment, the purchaser is not liable for prior taxes.[97] Where, after assessment to the owner, the land is sold under a mortgage, subject to the tax, the tax collector cannot be enjoined from collecting the tax from the owner,[98] but the owner is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the tax collector as against the purchasers under the mortgage.[99]

Estates of decedents.[4]—The Louisiana revenue law, levying a tax on property held by executors, has reference only to property so held that is subject to taxation.[5] Where a universal legatee is one whose property is exempt by law, the property composing the universal legacy, which passes to such legatee immediately upon the death of the testator, becomes exempt and cannot be assessed to the succession while it is in course of administration;[6] but particular legacies, which are in the hands of the succession representative to be turned over to the legatees, not being themselves exempt, are properly assessed to the succession.[7]

Property of nonresidents.[8]—Under the Iowa statute, classing as owners for purposes of assessment persons who hold taxable property of nonresidents, property consigned to a warehouseman who has no power to sell but holds it subject to shipping orders of the owner is properly assessed to such warehouseman.[9] The assessment of such property is not an unlawful interference with interstate commerce.[10]

(2) C. Corporations, and corporate stocks and property.[11] Corporate franchises and privileges.[12]—It is now well settled that franchises and privileges of corporations are proper objects of taxation.[13] It has been held that license fees are not taxes in the ordinary meaning of the term, but are contract obligations assumed by corporations organized under statutes requiring payment thereof.[14] Usually, however, the exaction of such payments is considered an exercise of the taxing power.[15] But license or franchise taxes are not taxes on property,[16] even though the capital[17] or earnings[18] of the corporation constitute the means of measuring the amount to be paid. Consequently, constitutional requirements as to uniformity and equality of taxation do not apply,[19] and the state has power, in imposing such taxes, to make any classification of corporations deemed proper,[20] may impose such tax on some corporations and not on others, and may discriminate between foreign and domestic corporations;[21] but it is essential to the validity of such taxation that there be no discrimination between corporations belonging to the same class.[22] What corporations are subject to such taxes is to be determined by reference to the terms of the statute and the nature of the corporation and its business.[23]

For purposes of taxation, corporate franchises are classified as creative, such

NOTE. Nature of franchise tax: "It is a generally accepted rule that a state may tax a corporation on its franchise, capital stock, business and profits. But a tax on these subjects may be either a property tax or an excise or privilege tax. And the nature of the tax is usually determined by the phraseology of the statute. The test often applied is whether the tax is on the capital stock by that name without regard to its value, in which case it is a franchise or excise tax, or whether it is on the stock at its assessed value, in which case it is a property tax. State v. Stonewall Ins. Co., 89 Ala. 335; Phoenix Carpet Co. v. State, 118 Ala. 143, 72 Am. St. Rep. 143; Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. [U. S.] 594, 18 Law. Ed. 897. But this test cannot always be applied and the courts do not agree that a tax such as that provided for in the principal case is a franchise or excise tax, though the weight of authority seems to be that it is. Southern Gum Co. v. Laylin, 66 Ohio St. 578, 64 N. E. 564; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Heppenheimer, 54 N. J. Law, 439; Jones v. Savings Bank, 66 Me. 242; Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. [U. S.] 594, 18 Law. Ed. 897. As a franchise or excise tax it is not subject to the restrictions as to uniformity imposed on a property tax. The fact that a filing fee or other charge is exacted of a corporation before it can file its articles of incorporation or secure its franchise does not by implication exempt the corporation from further taxation and the imposition of another charge or fee does not impair the obligation of contract. New Orleans City & L. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 143 U. S. 192, 36 Law. Ed. 121; Erie R Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 Wall. [U. S.] 492, 22 Law. Ed. 595. 18. A statute imposing on express companies a percentage tax on the gross receipts from business done in the state, and a pro rata share of interstate business from and to the state, imposes a franchise tax, not a tax on property. Rev. St. 1883, c. 6, § 55, construed. State v. Boston & P. Exp. Co. [Me.] 61 A. 697.

19. Sess. Laws 1902, c. 8, § 65, imposes a license tax of 4 cents on each $1,000 of capital stock of foreign corporations (or 2½ cents per 1,000 shares if stock is less than $1 per share). The law is held not to violate the constitutional requirement as to uniformity, not being a property tax. American Smelting & Refining Co. v. People [Colo.] 82 P. 531.

20. Imposing a license tax of 4 cents on each $1,000 of capital stock and 2½ on each 1,000 shares, where the par value of each share is less than $1, is not an unreasonable classification for the purposes of such taxation American Smelting & Refining Co. v. 21. Sess. Laws 1902, c. 8, § 65, imposing annual license tax on foreign corporations, is not invalid as discriminating against them. American Smelting & Refining Co. v. People [Colo.] 82 P. 531.

22. An ordinance which imposes a license tax on corporations transporting oil to the state in bulk, in tank cars, or through pipes, for the purpose of sale in the city, and imposes a smaller tax on corporations transporting oil in barrels only, is discriminatory and invalid. Standard Oil Co. v. Fredericksburg [Va.] 52 S. E. 817. But an ordinance imposing a tax of $1.50 on those engaged in selling or offering for sale oil at wholesale, or at wholesale and retail, and applying to any person, firm, or corporation, storing its oil in stationary tanks within or without the city, and transporting the oil in tank wagons or barrels through the streets for delivery to purchasers at their place of business, is reasonable and valid. Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, art. 81, § 86, imposes a franchise tax only on a savings bank, institution, or corporation organized to receive deposits and pay interest thereon. as a franchise to exist and act as a corporation,[24] and special, such as the right to collect rates for water distributed or furnished to municipalities or their inhabitants,[25] or the right to use the streets of a city for the purpose of exercising corporate powers.[26] The creative franchise does not include special franchises; the two kinds are separately taxable.[27] The creative franchise of a corporation is taxable where its principal place of business is located.[28] Its special franchises are taxable where they are actually exercised.[29]

In Kentucky a franchise tax is held to be a tax on all the intangible property of the corporation;[30] hence, where such tax has been assessed by the state and apportioned to its municipalities, a city cannot impose an additional tax of the same character.[31] Where a franchise has been purchased at a stipulated annual price, it is not subject to taxation.[32]

Stocks.[33]—The taxation of corporate capital stock, franchises, and property is not a taxation of the shares held by individual shareholders.[34] Such shares are personal property of the holder and taxable as such.[35] Shares of stock of a foreign real estate conveyed to trustee who sold to corporation organized to do a general business in purchase of real estate, sale of mortgages and stocks and bonds. Held corporation subject to franchise tax. People v. Kelsey. 110 App. Div. 797, 97 N. Y. S. 197. A corporation is not entitled to exemption from the franchise tax in New Jersey unless it shows by its return that it is within the exempted class. Though an insolvent corporation's property had been turned into cash prior to the year for which it was assessed, it was liable to the franchise tax under P. L. 1901, p 31, no return being made. King v. American Electric Vehicle Co. [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 381. An oil company engaged in the business of refining and distributing oil, and which sells it to local dealers from tank wagons, is not a "merchant" and cannot escape payment of a license tax on its business by paying a license fee as a merchant. 28. Creative franchise of plaintiff company held taxable in city and county of San Francisco. San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irr. Co. v. Merced County [Cal. App.] 84 P. 285. Under Pol. Code § 3628, only the creative franchise is taxable at the principal place of business where the property used in the corporate business is located elsewhere. City and County of San Francisco v. Oakland Water Co. [Cal.] 83 P. 61.

29. Corporation was authorized to acquire property, appropriate and distribute water, construct canals, and to establish and collect water rates and rents, and these powers were exercised in Merced County. The franchise was there taxable, though the company's principal place of business was in San Francisco. San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irr. Co. v. Merced County [Cal. App.] 84 P. 285. Water company using streets of Oakland named San Francisco in its articles as principal place of business. Held franchise to use streets taxable only in Oakland; franchise to be a corporation, only, taxable in San Francisco. City and County of San Francisco v. Oakland Water Co. [Cal.] 83 P. 61. Under Const. art. 13, § 10, providing for the assessment of all property (except that of railroads operated in more than one county) in the county or district where located, the franchise of a lighting corporation giving it the right to use the streets of a city is taxable in the county where such city is situated. Stockton Gas & Elec. Co. v. San Joaquin County [Cal.] 83 P. 54.

30. An assessment of the "franchise" of a railroad company, under Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4077-4080, embraces all the intangible property of the company. Hence, there was no omission of property where the franchise and also the tangible property of a company was assessed. Commonwealth v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. [Ky.] 91 S. W. 672.

31. This would constitute double taxation and would violate the constitutional provision for uniformity. Const. § 171. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Hopkins [Ky.] 90 S. W. 594. Ky. St. 1903, § 4077, providing for a franchise tax on public service corporations, held to exhaust power to tax such franchises, hence a city franchise or occupation tax on the right of a telephone and railroad company to do business was held invalid. corporation held by a citizen are taxable even though the property of the corporation is situated in other states and is there taxed.[36] Where a deduction is made from the valuation of such shares on account of corporate property located and taxed in the state, the holder of the shares cannot complain of the tax imposed.[37] The failure of the taxing authorities to directly tax shares of stock of domestic corporations, whose property is located in the state, as property in the hands of the shareholders (the corporate property being taxed instead), while at the same time levying a direct tax on shares of stock in foreign corporations, whose property is outside the state, such stock being held by citizens of the state, is not a denial of the equal protection of the laws to the holders of the foreign stock.[38] A claim that the policy of the state, as shown in the administration of the law, denied to complainants, who were taxed on foreign stock held by them, the equal protection of the laws, is not sustained by proof that some of the tax officials had not required foreign stock to be returned, and by an admission of the comptroller general that the complainants were the only delinquents, as to such taxes, brought to his notice.[39]

Banks and trust companies.[40]—Under Federal law no tax based on income, licenses, or franchises can be imposed on national banks by a state,[41] and bonds of the United States held by a national bank as part of its capital cannot be taxed by a state or under its authority.[42] Unpaid bank dividends represented by time checks given the stockholders, payable at a future date, are, until the checks are presented for payment, taxable assets of the bank.[43] A Pennsylvania savings bank which pays a tax on its capital stock is exempt from taxation on bonds of a corporation owned by it.[44] A New York domestic trust company which pays the annual tax on its capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits is exempt from taxation on its bank stock.[45] The Montana statute providing for the taxation of trust deposit and security corporations in the same manner as national banks is held invalid.[46] A state bank or trust company may deduct from its solvent credits its just debts, provided it makes the 38. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright [Ga] 53 S. E. 251.

Note: It was held by the majority that in this case (to enjoin enforcement of executions for taxes on stock of a foreign railroad) it was not necessary to decide whether shares of stock in a domestic corporation in the hands of a stockholder are required to be taxed as such in order to comply with the uniformity clause of the constitution; nor whether, if domestic shares are taxable, it would be double taxation to assess them in the hands of the stockholder and also include them in the return made by the president of the corporation as required by law. But Candler, J., who wrote the opinion, gave it as his individual view that to assess foreign but not domestic stock to the resident stockholder would not violate the uniformity clause, since the tax on the property of the domestic corporation was in effect a tax on its stock. See syllabi 8, 9, in Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Wright [Ga.] 53 S. E. 251.

proper return to the assessor and claims the reduction and otherwise complies with the law.[47] When this is done, all its remaining property is subject to taxation the same as property of a natural person.[48] In Pennsylvania a reserve fund of a trust and insurance company, invested in securities and held to cover maturing insurance risks, is not held in trust for policy holders so as to be subject to a tax on securities held by a trustee, but is taxable as a part of the assessed value of its stock.[49]

Corporate capital and other property.[50]—The easement possessed by a corporation in a public thoroughfare may be assessed and taxed as real estate owned by the corporation.[51] To exempt from ordinary taxation property of a corporation subject to a gross earnings tax, it must be made to appear that such property was necessarily used in the ordinary conduct of the business.[52] A railroad company is liable to local county taxation on an ice plant used to furnish ice for refrigerator and passenger cars.[53] Whether property of a corporation is taxable as a railroad depends, of course, upon its character and use.[54] Under the New Jersey railroad act, whether part of a railroad is assessable as the main stem or as other real estate is a question of fact depending upon the actual use of the line at the time of assessment,[55] and not upon its history.[56]

49. Construing Pennsylvania statutes. Provident Life & Trust Co. v. Durham, 212 Pa. 68, 61 A. 636.

Note on Provident Life & Trust Co. v. Durham, 212 Pa. 68, 61 A. 636. "A tax on the capital stock of a corporation is a tax on its property and assets. Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 101 Pa. St. 119; People v. Coleman, 126 N. Y. 433, 27 N. E. 818; 1 Wilgus Corp. Cas. 778. The assets sought to be taxed in the principal case were therefore constituent elements of the appraised value of the capital on which plaintiff paid a tax. The court based its opinion that these assets were not held in trust on the fact that the fund consisted not of the net profits of the insurance business but was part of the plaintiff's gross assets subject to insurance liabilities. This seems to be placing the policy holders in the same position as the stockholders in an ordinary corporation. Until a dividend is declared the shareholder is not a creditor of the corporation. Price v. Morning Star Mining Co., 83 Mo. App. 470; Alsop v. De Koven, 107 Ill. App. 190. And even then unless some specific fund is set aside for the payment of the dividend, there is no trust relation between the company and the stockholder. Hunt v. O'Shea, 69 N. H. 600, 45 A. 480; 11 Wilgus Corp. Cas. 1628; In re Severn & Wye & Severn Bridge R. Co., 74 Law T. (N. S.) 219. In the absence of charter or contract provisions to the contrary, the profits of an insurance company belong to the stockholders and not to the policy holders. Pierce v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 145 Mass. 56, 12 N. E. 858, 1 Am. St. Rep. 433. And even where there is a provision that the policy holders are to have a share in the surplus profits,—as in the tontine policies,—no right to any specific fund accrues but only to such net earnings as are declared. Fuller v. Knapp, 24 F. 100; Bewley v. Society, 61 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 344. No trust relation is created by such provisions. Everson v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 71 F. 570; Uhlman v. N. Y. Life Ins. Land adjoining a railroad right of way and used as a reservoir for railroad purposes is properly assessed as "railroad track" in Illinois (Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 218 Ill. 463, 75 N. Foreign corporations.[57]—Foreign corporations are subject to such taxes as the state sees fit to impose as a condition of doing business in the state.[58] Thus, license taxes[59] are commonly imposed on foreign corporations engaged in business in the state, or authorized to do so,[60] or employing capital in the state.[61] The fact that only a portion of the capital of a foreign corporation is employed in the state does not relieve it from payment of the annual license tax.[62] A fee paid by a foreign corporation upon filing its articles of incorporation is merely a bonus for the privilege of existing as a corporation in the state.[63] A statute imposing such a fee does not impliedly exempt the corporation from other taxes,[64] and a subsequent statute imposing an annual license tax is not invalid as an ex post facto law,[65] nor as impairing the obligation of the charter contract of the corporation.[66] A license tax on a foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce is not a tax on interstate commerce.[67] A foreign corporation which has paid a franchise tax and otherwise complied with the law relating to such corporations is not liable to the franchise tax imposed on domestic corporations.[68]

The taxability of property of nonresidents, including that of foreign corporations, is treated in a succeeding section.[69]

The land was not a part of that on which the shops of the corporation were located, or its work carried on. Held such land was not "capital actually employed in manufacturing" and hence exempt under § 183 of the franchise tax law, nor was it "surplus," even though the full capital stock was shown to be employed and the corporation had assets in excess of the value of the land but was "capital employed in the state" and subject to the franchise tax under § 182. Held land acquired in exchange for school land, and rents arising therefrom, are "proceeds" of school grants and are not subject to taxation. People v. Chicago, 216 Ill. 537, 75 N. E. 239. This constitutional provision has reference only to grants made before adoption of the constitution. Thus, property acquired by foreclosure of a school fund mortgage is not exempt unless the money loaned on the mortgage was received prior to 1870. R. & C. Grosse v. People [Ill.] 75 N. E. 978. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 122, art. 12, § 6, providing that funds derived from the sale of school lands "or from the sale of any real estate or other property taken on any judgment or for any debt due to the principal of any township or county fund," etc., shall constitute a part of such fund, etc., does not exempt from taxation property acquired by foreclosure of a school fund mortgage. 81. Corporations organized to do a mutual insurance business are not benevolent corporations or corporations "not for pecuniary profit" under Iowa statutes, and are not exempt from taxation. Iowa Mut. Tornado Ins. Ass'n v. Gilbertson [Iowa] 106 N. W. 153.

82. Where constitution exempts "actual places of religious worship" and "institutions of purely public charity," a mortgage held by a trustee for a Catholic congregation, "solely for the same objects of religion and purely public charity as the real estate" sold, was not subject to a personal property tax. Mattern v. Canevin [Pa.] 63 A. 131.

83. The provision of the constitution exempting from taxation all the property of Tulane University of whatsoever character does not limit the exemption to property whereof the university has actual corporeal possession. Tulane University v. Board of Assessors [La.] 40 So. 445.

84. Where property used exclusively for religious and educational purposes is abandoned and ceases to be used for such purposes, it becomes taxable. Holthaus v. Adams County [Neb.] 105 N. W. 632.

85. Where assessment was completed and taxes for the year became a fixed liability 7 months before a change in the use of property, it was liable for the taxes. City of Philadelphia v. Pennsylvania Institution for the Instruction of the Blind [Pa.] 63 A. 420; Id., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 421.

86. U. S. Rev. St. § 3701, not violated by taxing, in hands of owner, checks or orders for interest on bonds, payable immediately on presentation. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. San Francisco, 200 U. S. 310, 50 Law Ed.—.

NOTE: "The inability of the states to tax the official agencies of the Federal government, whether in the form of banks chartered under its authority, or of obligations issued by it as a means of providing a revenue, or for the payment of its debts. was applied in McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. [U. S.] 316, 4 Law. Ed. 579, to a stamp tax upon notes of the United States bank; in Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. [U. S.] 449, 7 Law. Ed. 481, and in New York v. Tax Com'rs, 2 Black [U. S.] 620, 17 Law. Ed. 451, to stock issued for loans made to the government of the United States; and in the Bank Tax Case (New York ex rel. Bank of Commonwealth v. Tax & A. Com'rs), 2 Wall. [U. S.] 200, 17 Law. Ed. 793, to a tax laid on banks on a valuation equal to the amount of their capital stock, when their property consisted of stocks of the Federal government; in The Banks v. New York (New York ex rel. Bank of N. Y. Nat. Banking Ass'n v. Connelly), 7 Wall. [U. S.] 16, 19 Law. Ed. 57, to certificates of indebtedness of the United States, issued to the creditors of the government for supplies furnished in carrying on the Civil War; in Bank of New York v. New York County (New York ex rel. Bank of New York v. New York County), 7 Wall. [U. S.] 26, 19 Law. Ed. 60, to notes of the United States intended to circulate as money; and in Van Brocklin v. Tennessee (Van Brocklin v. Anderson), 117 U. S. 151, 29 Law. Ed. 845, to land purchased by the United States, for the amount of a direct tax laid thereon."—Brown, J., in Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. 88. Mich. Laws 1855, p. 305, § 9, provided special act of incorporation does not create such an inviolable contract, where, by the constitution and statutes of the state, general or special acts creating corporations are subject to repeal or alteration.[89] Municipalities have no power to contract away or limit the taxing power.[90] Thus, contracts of exemption from taxation, made to encourage manufacturing in cities, must be expressly authorized or they are ultra vires,[91] and a grant of immunity from contribution to the expense of paving, to a street railway corporation, without consideration, does not create a contract right but only a revocable license,[92] personal to the first grantee.[93] A conditional grant of exemption is unenforceable at the instance of a grantee who has not performed the conditions.[94]

§ 4. Place of taxation.[95]—Realty is to be taxed in the district where located.[96] When a single tract is located in more than one district, it is sometimes taxed at the owner's place of residence.[97] Generally, the place of residence of the owner[98]

that a certain railroad company should pay an annual tax of 1% on the capital stock, paid in, in lieu of all other taxes, except penalties imposed on the company, to be estimated upon the last annual report. The statute was accepted by the company, which in reliance thereon made large expenditures and completed an unfinished road. It was held that a contract was created exempting the company from taxation other than that specified, which could not be impaired by subsequent legislation. Powers v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 201 U. S. 543, 50 Law Ed.—. Where statutes under which a railroad was built provided for exemption of lands acquired by it for a certain term of years, a contract resulted with the state by reason of which taxes could not be legally laid on such railroad lands during the time named. Hence, a sale of land for taxes during such time transferred no title. Raquette Falls Land Co. v. Hoyt, 109 App. Div. 119, 95 N. Y. S. 1029.

89. Const. 1846, art. 8, § 1; Const. 1895, art. 8, § 1, and 1 Rev. St. pt. 1, c. 18, tit. 3, § 8, become a part of corporate charters. Pratt Institute v. New York [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 1119. The New York general tax law of 1896, repealing previous special acts granting exemption to certain corporations, is valid. Id.

90. City of Rochester v. Rochester R. Co., 182 N. Y. 99, 74 N. E. 953.

91. Act 1880, p. 259, c. 169, authorizing the abatement of taxes levied on the property of manufacturing corporations actually used in manufacturing, does not authorize a contract to exempt for a term of years a plant of a corporation on condition of its removing to the city and operating for a certain number of years (Havre de Grace Real Estate & Power Co. v. Havre de Grace [Md.] 61 A. 662), nor does Act 1890, p. 175, c. 180, authorizing abatement of taxes on real estate used in manufacturing, and providing for confirmation of a contract of exemption, give power to confirm such a contract (Id.).

92. Corporation may be subjected to contribution by subsequent legislation. City of Rochester v. Rochester R. Co., 182 N. Y. 99, 74 N. E. 953.

93. Grant of immunity from expense for paving did not pass to lessee of grantee corporation. City of Rochester v. Rochester R. Co., 182 N. Y. 99, 74 N. E. 953.

94. Contract to operate shoe factory at full capacity was not performed where part of building was used by a successor in interest for other purposes. Havre de Grace Real Estate & Power Co. v. Havre de Grace [Md.] 61 A. 662.

95. See 4 C. L. 1618.

96. In general, the location of land and not the residence of the owner determines where it shall be taxable. People v. Howell, 106 App. Div. 140, 94 N. Y. S. 488. Railroad property situated in several road and school districts, and unincorporated cities and towns, was properly divided up by the assessor and assessed with reference to such districts. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Umatilla County [Or.] 81 P. 352.

97. A farm consisting of a single tract of land was situated partly within and partly outside a village, and the owner lived on the portion outside the village. Held it was assessable only in the tax district in which the owner resided, under Laws 1902, c. 200, § 10, and not by the village. People v. Gray, 109 App. Div. 116, 95 N. Y. S. 825. Certain lots held not adjacent to and occupied and connected with relator's dwelling house so as to permit an election as to which tax district his property should be assessed in (a boundary line running through the property), under Laws 1903, c. 305, and prior laws. People v. Jacobs, 106 App. Div. 614, 94 N. Y. S. 483. An owner of two contiguous lots of land, used as one tract, all situated in one tax district, has no absolute right to have it described as one tract in the town assessment roll, so that it shall be assessed for school purposes only in the school district where he resides. People v. Howell, 106 App. Div. 140, 94 N. Y. S. 488. The act of June 1, 1883 (P. L. 51), which provides that where a county line divides a tract of land it shall be assessed in the county in which the mansion house is situated, does not apply to a tract owned by a power company on which a power plant is located in one county and farm buildings in another. The power plant may be assessed in the county where located. Appeal of York Haven Water & Power Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 97.

98. The fact that a person was a lessee of a place of abode in New York during is regarded as the situs of personalty for purposes of taxation,[99] but the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam is usually applied only to intangible personal property,[1] and tangible personal property is usually held to be taxable only in the state where it is permanently located and employed and where it receives protection.[2] Thus, personal property of nonresidents,[3] and the capital of foreign corporations employed within the state,[4] may be taxed therein. But the rule that personalty is taxable only at the domicile of the owner may be disregarded by the legislature, in its discretion, even as to intangible property.[5] Thus, in some states, bills receivable, obligations, or credits arising from business done in the state by a nonresident, are taxable in the state at the business domicile of the nonresident, or his agent or representative.[6] winter months did not make him a resident there. People v. O'Donnel, 47 Misc. 226, 95 N. Y. S. 889. A presumption of residence in a tax district does not arise from the mere fact of payment of a tax where it appears that the person paying it was in fact, and claimed to be, a resident of another state. One who lived in New York winters said he was willing to pay a tax on a certain assessment, but that he was a resident of New Jersey. Held no presumption of residence in New York for taxation purposes arose. Id.

99. Logs which have been cut and hauled to a stream for shipment are personalty assessable only in the county of the owner's residence. Ky. St. 1903, § 4039 requiring the owner of standing timber on another's land to list the same in the county where located does not apply. Morgan v. Southern Lumber Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 120. Greater New York is not a single tax district: a tax on personalty must be levied in the borough where the owner resides. People v. O'Donnell, 96 N. Y. S. 297. The situs of a chose in action for purposes of taxation is at the domicile of the creditor. Code 1904, § 491, contemplates that the commissioner of revenue will call upon the owner of the credit at his domicile. Hurt v. Bristol [Va.] 51 S. E. 223.

Securities owned by a partnership are properly listed in the township wherein the managing partner resides. Barricklow v. Bowland, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 78. An attempt to place a part thereof on the tax duplicate of the township wherein the other partner resides may be enjoined. Id.

Bonds of a nonresident are not taxable in the state when merely left in the hands of a resident agent for collection and investment. Upson v. Davis, 110 Ill. App. 375.

1. Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 50 Law Ed.—. The principle "mobilia sequuntur personam," in matters of taxation, does not embrace movable property in concrete form such as bills or notes or other paper taken in course of business, used and collected in the state where such business is done. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Board of Assessors [La.] 39 So. 601.

2. Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 50 Law Ed.—. Where movable property having no permanent situs in the state is employed therein, it is taxable in the municipalities where so used to the extent of the average amount kept therein. Average number of Pullman cars kept in Covington for repairs, etc., held taxable by that city. City of Covington v. Pullman Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 116. Resident of Kansas brought into the state, between March and September, cattle which he had bought with money already listed for taxation in his home city. The cattle were held not subject to taxes in Kansas under Gen. St. 1901, §§ 7519-7521 providing for assessment in certain cases of personalty brought into the state after March 1. Lingenfelter v. Ferguson [Kan.] 80 P. 48.

3. Personal property of a nonresident situated in the state is taxable therein. Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Keown [Ky.] 89 S. W. 116. Personal property of nonresidents is assessable in the county where it is situated. Ky. St. 1903, § 4020. City of Covington v. Pullman Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 116.

4. Corporation organized in France had an office in New York for the importation and sale of goods, and paid all the expenses of its New York business out of its local bank account, only the surplus being sent to France. Held the corporation was doing business in New York and its personalty there was taxable under Laws 1896, c. 908, § 7. People v. Wells [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 24.

5. The rule "mobilia sequuntur personam" is a fiction, not resting on any constitutional basis, and must give way before express laws destroying it in any given case, where constitutional requirements do not stand in the way. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Parish of Orleans' Assessors [La.] 39 So. 846.

6. Act No. 170 of 1898, which so provides, is valid. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Parish of Orleans' Assessors [La.] 39 So. 846. Credits or bills receivable are taxable as capital invested in the state within Tax Laws 1896, c. 908, § 7 (People v. Wells, 107 App. Div. 15, 95 N. Y. S. 100), even though they constitute proceeds of sales of goods in imported original packages, a tax on such proceeds not being one on imports contrary to Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10 (Id.). Corporation of Ireland maintained an office in New York for the importation and sale of its products in original packages, and took and held in New York notes for goods sold, the proceeds of which were in part sent to the home office in Dublin. Held the notes so taken and held for collection in New York were there taxable. People v. Wells [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 19. New Jersey corporation, having its principal place of business in Missouri, was engaged in business in Richmond county, Georgia, maintaining an agent of limited authority there, and selling goods through such agent. In the case of credit

The situs of stock of a foreign corporation for purposes of taxation is at the domicile of the owner of the stock,[7] and if legal title and the beneficial ownership are held by different persons, the stock is taxable at the domicile of the beneficial owner.[8] As to the county or tax district within the state at which corporate property should be taxed, the statutes must be consulted.[9] sales, the notes and accounts were forwarded to the principal office and paid either there or through the Georgia office. Held the notes and accounts for the Georgia business were taxable in Richmond County. Armour Packing Co. v. Clark [Ga.] 52 S. E. 145. Money being in fact loaned in the state in the course of business done therein by the nonresident, it is taxable regardless of the manner of the loan, and the power to tax the loan is not affected by the fact that the evidences thereof are removed from the state until collection. Under Const. art. 233, the tax may be enforced by process against the resident representative. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Parish of Orleans' Assessors [La.] 39 So. 846. Credits arising from business done in the state by a nonresident corporation through a resident agent, the evidences of which are held by such agent in the state until collection, are taxable. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Board of Assessors [La.] 39 So. 601.

NOTE. Situs of credits: "Credits have always been taxable at the domicile of the creditor (Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 25 Law. Ed. 558), and not at that of the debtor. State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 15 Wall. [U. S.] 300, 21 Law. Ed. 179. But the tendency of recent decisions, as noted in Monongahela River, etc., Co. v. Board of Assessors [La.] 39 So. 601, is toward assigning to credits a situs apart from the creditor's domicile whenever such a construction is possible. Thus, if the credits are controlled by an agent domiciled in the same state as the debtor, they are taxable there. Bristol v. Washington Co., 177 U. S. 133, 44 Law. Ed. 701. Or if they consist of notes, bonds, etc., they are taxable where such are held. New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 Law. Ed. 174; Assessors v. Comptoir National D'Escompte, 191 U. S. 388, 48 Law. Ed. 232. Similarly, other forms of intangible personal property, depending for their value upon the use of tangible property, are taxable where such tangible property is located. Adams Express Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 194, 41 Law. Ed. 683; Id., 166 U. S. 185, 41 Law. Ed. 965. Cf. also 5 Columbia L. R. 50; 6 Columbia L. R. 190; Judson, Taxation §§ 408, 422, 427."—6 Columbia L. 7. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Wright [Ga.] 53 S. W. 207. The case of Wright v. S. W. R. Co., 64 Ga. 783, which held that the situs of stock in a foreign railroad corporation whose road was located outside of Georgia was in the state where the road was located, was the law of Georgia until Oct 20, 1885, when a statute was approved giving such stock held in Georgia a situs in Georgia for taxation. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright [Ga.] 53 S. E. 251.

8. Stock of an Alabama corporation, beneficially owned by Georgia concern but held in trust in New York, held taxable in Georgia. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Wright [Ga.] 53 S. E. 207.

9. Under Pol. Code § 3711, requiring corporate property to be assessed in the county where it is situated, and § 3720, relating to the assessment of live stock, where a corporation owned live stock in a county where the corporation's foreman and manager resided, and drove them into another county to be winter-fed, intending to take them back, the stock was assessable in the first county. Flowerree Cattle Co. v. Lewis and Clarke County [Mont.] 81 P. 398. The personal property of logging railroad companies, not engaged as common carriers, is, in Minnesota, taxable in the counties where such corporations maintain their principal places of business, though such property is kept and used in other counties. Gen. St. 1894, § 1516. State v. Iverson [Minn.] 106 N. W. 309. Since they are not "transportation" companies within the meaning of the statute providing for the taxation of the personalty of such companies at the place where it is usually kept. Gen. St. 1894, § 1517, held not applicable. Id. What is the principal business office of a corporation, and the situs of its property for taxation, is a question of fact (Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Detroit [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 315, 104 N. W. 327), on which the fact that a certain place is named in the articles of such principal office is not conclusive (Id.). A street railroad company, operating a line from the village of Dearborn to the city of Detroit, named the village in its articles as the location of its principal office. The meetings of directors and stockholders were held there and the records were kept in this office. The officers lived in Detroit and performed most of their routine duties there. Under a statute providing that the property of a street railroad shall be taxed in the place where its principal office is located, held that the property was taxable in Detroit. Detroit, etc., R. v. Detroit [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 315, 104 N. W. 327.

Note: "The cases resolve themselves into the question as to how much business must be done at the place announced in the articles in order to make it the principal office. The fact that the directors and stockholders meet there is not sufficient. In the principal case there were several offices located at different places, all doing nearly the same amount of general business. In the former Michigan cases no business at all was done at the announced office. Transportation Co. v. Assessors, 91 Mich. 392, 51 N. W. 978; Teagan Transp. Co. v. Detroit [Mich.] 102 N. W. 273. But see City of Detroit v. Lothrop Estate, 136 Mich. 265, 99 N. W. 9. The courts usually hold that the designation in the articles will not be final upon the assessors. A contrary rule would seem to give a corporation power to evade taxation where its 'principal place of business' really is, by fixing

In New York, personalty held in trust is assessed at the place of residence of the trustees;[10] in Virginia[11] and Ohio,[12] where the property is situated and the beneficiary resides, regardless of the residence of the trustee. Credits belonging to a lunatic and held by his committee are taxable to the committee in the county of his domicile.[13]

The legal situs of a vessel engaged in commerce on the high seas, for the purpose of taxation, is in its home port.[14]

The courts of New York have reached a different conclusion. Western Transp. Co. v. Scheu, 19 N. Y. 408. See note 56 Am. Dec. 523-537."—4 Mich. L. R. 244.

10. Under the New York statutory provision that every person shall be taxed in the tax district where he resides for all personal property owned by him or under his control as trustee or executor, each borough is a separate tax district. People v. O'Donnel [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 540, rvg. 106 App. Div. 526, 94 N. Y. S. 884. Hence, where personalty is assessed in a borough against two executors and trustees, one of whom is a resident of another, the assessment is invalid as to the latter and his half thereof should be cancelled. Id. Where property is held jointly by two trustees, one of whom is a nonresident, an assessment against the nonresident is illegal. People v. Wells, 182 N. Y. 314, 74 N. E. 878. Where an assessment is on the entire trust estate and against both trustees, it should be reduced one-half as against the resident trustee, under Tax Law § 8, providing that where trustees reside in different tax districts they must be assessed for equal proportions of the property. Id. To allow the whole amount to stand against the resident trustee on the ground that the property was undervalued would be improper, because equivalent to an increase in the assessment without notice. Id.

11. Code 1887, § 492. as amended by Acts 1897-98, c. 490, construed as imposing a tax on a trust fund on the place of residence of the cestui que trust, though the trustee is a nonresident, is not unconstitutional, since the tax is not against the trustee but is merely collected through him. Selden v. Brooke [Va.] 52 S. E. 632. Under Code 1887, § 492, as amended by Acts 1897-98, c. 490, a trust fund the income of which is to be paid to the cestui que trust during life, she being over 21 years of age and a resident, is taxable where she resides, though the trustee is a nonresident. Id.

12. Where a trust estate and the beneficiaries are in one state, and the office of trustee is there exercised, the trust estate is not taxable in another state of which the trustee is a resident. Trust estate not taxable in Ohio, under St. Ohio 1890, § 2731, merely because trustee resided there, when he was appointed in Connecticut, in which state the estate and beneficiaries were. Goodsite v. Lane [C. C. A.] 139 F. 593. Where it appears that a transaction whereby legal title to certain personalty was transferred to a nominal trustee was for the sole purpose of escaping taxation in the district where the property was located, the original owner retaining full control, a court of equity will not enjoin the county auditor from listing the property for taxation. Notes transferred by a trust instrument. Sisler v. Foster, 72 Ohio St. 437, 74 N. E. 639.

18. Under Const. art. 13, § 10, the state board of equalization has power to assess only "the franchise, roadway, roadbed, rails and rolling stock" of railroads operating in more than one county. All railroad property other than that specifically mentioned is assessable only by local authorities. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. v. Stockton [Cal.] 84 P 771. Under this constitutional provision, all improvements on the right of way, even though indispensable to the operation of the road, and all tangible property outside the right of way, are assessable by local authorities. Id. The term "roadway" includes only the continuous strip of land upon which the railroad is built. Id. Tracts of land used for cattle yards, switch yards, depots, etc., are not "roadway" and are locally assessable. Id. A section of land intended to be used as roadway but not so used at the time of assessment, the road not is also statutory.[19] Mandamus will not lie to compel an assessor to place on the rolls lands which have previously been sold and not redeemed.[20] Mandamus will not issue to compel a county auditor, in Ohio, to transfer real estate on the tax list to the name of a purchaser, unless all the material facts necessary to put him in default are pleaded and proved.[21]

(§ 5) C. Formal requisites.[22] Notice.[23]—Notice and an opportunity to be heard at some stage of the proceedings is essential.[24]

The roll or list.[25]—The assessment roll must be prepared and returned as required by law. It then becomes a public document.[26] It must properly describe the property assessed[27] and must show the name of the true owner[28] or other person having been built, is also locally assessable. Id. Under Sess. Laws 1901, p. 257, the state board of equalization is authorized to fix for taxation the valuation of railroad, telephone, and telegraph lines and property belonging thereto. McConnell v. State Board of Equalization [Idaho] 83 P. 494. It is the duty of the state board of assessors to assess the property of corporations employed in the railroad business and to make due return to parochial and municipal authorities, and the parish assessor cannot assess and value railroad property upon failure of the state board to perform its duty. Louisiana & A. R. Co. v. Bailey [La.] 40 So. 358. Newport News Charter § 86, imposing assessment duties on the commissioner of revenue, does not apply where the city assessment must follow a state assessment on the same property. West v. Newport News [Va.] 51 S. E. 206.

19. In Indiana a county assessor is not entitled to a per diem as county assessor while serving as a member of the board of review of assessments. Daily v. Daviess County Com'rs [Ind.] 74 N. E. 977. The county may recover from him sums paid in excess of the per diem for the maximum number of days fixed by law. Id. An assessor who makes the assessment of such persons as remove into his district between the last assessment and May 1st, or who have been omitted from the last assessment, and returns their names with the amount of state and county tax payable by each to the board of school directors of his district, under Act of May 8, 1854, § 35, P. L. 617, is entitled to compensation out of county funds. Hoak v. Lancaster County, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 585.

21. Dye v. State [Ohio] 76 N. E. 829. Vendee of coal underlying lands cannot compel auditor, by mandamus, to transfer coal interest to his name unless he presents proof of his title and of the value of the coal as compared with the value of the real estate as a whole. Id. An agreement between the parties is not competent evidence of such facts. Id. Where petition for mandamus did not allege that proof of the required facts had been presented to the auditor, it was insufficient. Id.

24. It is essential to the validity of an assessment law that it should provide an opportunity for the property owner to be heard as to the justice and validity of an assessment. A curative statute held to have only a prospective operation, thereby providing for a notice and hearing. Whitlock v. Hawkins [Va.] 53 S. E. 401. That an assessment is not returned within the time prescribed by law is not fatal to its validity, if it was returned in due season to allow persons affected an opportunity to be heard. Id. Claim of corporation that it had no notice of an increase in an assessment paid one year after the triennial assessment untenable where it appeared that a person representing the corporation and others had notice and met the county commissioners at a meeting where the assessment was discussed. Union Coal Co. v. Cooner, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 95. The Michigan railroad tax law (Pub. Acts 1901, p. 241, No. 173), which provides for the assessment of railroad property by a state board of assessors at the average rate of other property in the state, is not invalid as making no provision for the equalization of railroad property with other property, since it names the time and place of the sessions of the assessing board, and gives to any company or person interested the right to be heard, and authorizes the board to correct the valuation. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 50 Law. Ed. —; Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 F. 223. Again, the state constitution provides that all property shall be assessed at its cash value, and it will be presumed that this has been done by the officers charged with the duty to assess. Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 F. 223. This legislation is not invalid because not providing for a hearing upon the rate, since it is fixed by the constitution and legislature, no discretion being vested in the state board of assessors. Hence a hearing before the state board could not change the result. Id.

26. A completed assessment roll, returned as required by B. & C. Comp. § 3057, becomes a public document and is sufficient, though not formally certified or identified by the assessor. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Umatilla County [Or.] 81 P. 352.

27. A proper description of land assessed is necessary to give a court jurisdiction of a proceeding to enforce the tax against it. Mayot v. Auditor General [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 279, 104 N. W. 19.

28. Description of owner as "O. R. & N.

legally liable for the taxes imposed.[29] Any description is good which would be sufficient in a deed of conveyance or contract to convey, and which affords a means of identification, and does not mislead, or is not calculated to mislead, the owner,[30] and extrinsic evidence is admissible to identify the property, explain ambiguities, and aid in the interpretation of the description.[31] A description in which abbreviations are used may be sufficient.[32] Unless several lots of a taxpayer are used together and as one piece of property, he is entitled to have each lot assessed separately,[33] but if the owner returns the property for taxation in bulk, he is estopped to claim the assessment in bulk illegal,[34] and the same rule applies when the city, in assessing unrendered property, adopts the rendition previously made by the owner.[35] The proper method of assessing lands under tide water beyond the exterior line for solid filling established by the riparian commissioners depends upon the right which has been acquired therein.[36] If a title has been acquired in such lands they should be included with lands back of the line for solid filling in a single description, or separately assessed by a distinct description.[37] If only a right has been acquired, appurtenant to the back lying land, the value of the right may properly be included in the assessment of the back lying land.[38] In West Virginia an undivided mineral interest in land is not subject to a separate assessment.[39]

Irregularities.[40]—An assessment is not invalidated by a mere irregularity[41] not shown to have been prejudicial to the taxpayer.[42] Acts or omissions of taxing Sullivan County, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 451. Assessment of real estate in the name of a former owner, long since dead, invalidates subsequent proceedings, including tax deed to purchaser at sale. Kann v. King, 25 App. D. C. 182. Where several tracts belonging to same owner are listed under the owner's name, the name need not also be placed opposite each tract. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Umatilla County [Or.] 81 P. 352.

20. Where property is assessed to the true owner the tax cannot be collected from a trustee. Neither Comp. Laws § 3826, providing for assessment to trustee, nor § 3922, relative to assessment errors, is applicable to such a case. Homer Tp. v. Smith [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 559, 105 N. W. 12.

30. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Umatilla County [Or.] 81 P. 352. The proper test of a description is whether it is sufficiently definite to be identified by a competent person. Auditor General v. Fleming [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 605, 105 N. W. 71. Certain letters and figures on assessor's list held not to constitute a description of property, hence a sale of property for taxes was void. Moran v. Thomas [S. D.] 104 N. W. 212. Under Gen. Tax Law 1882, § 16, relating to description of lands in assessments, a description by lot was insufficient where there was no known plat of the land and no reference leading to means which would identify the land. Mayot v. Auditor General [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 279, 104 N. W. 19. Description of certain lots as in "Res. Add. Pend.," etc., and of railroad property as so many miles of "R. R. bed," or "R. of W.," or of one of two wire telegraph systems, held not void for uncertainty. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v Umatilla County [Or.] 81 P. 352. 41. In the case of a general annual tax there is an obligation to pay, legal as well as moral, and a lien therefor, irrespective of the regularity of the assessment. Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 560, 82 P. 194. The assessment as a whole of several contiguous town lots is a mere irregularity cured after deed, by statute in West Virginia. Code 1899, c. 31, § 25. Duerr v. Snodgrass [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 531. Where an assessment against a trustee gave decedent's name as "Goodwin" instead of "Godwin," this was a mere clerical error and was immaterial. People v. O'Donnell, 106 App. Div. 526, 94 N. Y. S. 884. That tax levy and subsequent proceedings treated land as "lots 1 and 2" of a certain quarter section, held a mere irregularity. Morrison v. Turnbaugh [Mo.] 91 S. W. 152.

officials which constitute mere irregularities and are of such a nature that the legislature might have dispensed with them by a prior statute may be cured by subsequent retroactive legislation.[43] Tax proceedings taken under unconstitutional acts may be validated by subsequent legislation.[44] A defective description cannot be cured by the voluntary act of the tax collector,[45] nor aided by a proper description in a petition to enforce the tax.[46] Such an irregularity may be waived by failure to urge it at the proper time,[47] but payment of taxes by the person to whom they are assessed under an erroneous description does not estop him from claiming that a similar, subsequent assessment is insufficient.[48]

Lists by taxpayers.[49]—Taxpayers are commonly required to make a return of their taxable property, and a penalty may be imposed for a default.[50] Where a taxpayer has furnished the assessor with a statement of his property, and the assessor, relying thereon, has assessed the property therein described against the person furnishing the list, such person will thereafter be estopped from denying the ownership of the property in an action to enjoin collection of the tax.[51] The Georgia statute, which provides for ample notice and opportunity to be heard so far as taxpayers who make the return required by law are concerned, is not unconstitutional because failing to provide any machinery for the correction of errors in the assessment of property of one who is in default, not having made the return required by law.[52] The provisions of this statute, regarding the procedure to be followed by the

42. An assessment of railroad ties belonging to a foreign corporation under the head of "Miscellany," held not to invalidate the assessment where the owner was not misled or prejudiced, knowing what property was meant. Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Keown [Ky.] 89 S. W. 116. Name of party assessed was given in tax list and certificate of delinquency as "Houston-Chamberlain-Howe Company," "Howe" being erroneously used for "Hardware." The company answered but did not show that it was misled or deceived. Held the error was merely clerical and was not available as a defense against the tax. State v. Houston-Chamberlin Hardware Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 835.

43. Wallapai Mining & Development Co. v. Territory [Ariz.] 84 P. 85. Thus the failure of the assessor to attach his oath or certificate to the assessment roll is a mere irregularity, curable by a subsequent law, no prejudice being shown. Assessment roll held admissible in evidence in action to collect tax, though not authenticated. Id. Omission of the seal of the city from the warrant of the mayor attached to the assessment roll cured by Laws 1903, c. 522, § 1, which is valid. City of Rochester v. Fourteenth Ward Co-op. Bldg. 44. Act Oct. 19, 1903, "to validate taxes heretofore levied," is constitutional. Woolley v. Hendrickson [N. J. Law] 62 A. 278. The act validates all appropriations, taxes, and assessments made, levied and imposed under the general school laws of 1900 and 1902, which were declared invalid. Id. General school law of Oct. 19, 1903 (P. L. 1903, Sp. Sess. p. 5), and validating act passed same day, construed, and held not to disarrange pending proceedings for assessment and collection of taxes already ordered to be raised to meet school bonds maturing during school year, even in cases where boundaries of districts were changed, under §§ 32 and 34. Id. It is the evident intention of the act, shown by § 33, to postpone its operation as to adjustments between new and old school districts until the end of the then current school year. Id.

Where owner appeared before equalization board and objected to assessment as excessive, and obtained a reduction, but did not object to the description in the assessment roll, the assessment would not be set aside on a writ of review for a defective description. 50. Where a taxpayer fails to sign and swear to his assessment schedule as required by Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 120, par. 311, it is the duty of the board of review to add 50% to the fair cash valuation of the property as found by it and fix the assessment at the amount so found. Cummins v. Webber, 218 Ill. 521, 75 N. E. 1041. Revenue act § 49, prescribing a penalty for failure of a railroad to file a "statement" of its "railroad tract" with the county clerk, has no reference to the requirements of §§ 44 and 46 of the act, but only to § 41. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 217 Ill. 164, 75 N. E. 368. The minimum penalty of $1,000 prescribed by the act is not unconstitutional as disproportionate to the gravity of the offense. Id.

52. In case of defaulters the statute requires the taxing officer to make the assessment from the best information obtainable. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright [Ga.] 53 S. E. 251. Assessment against owner comptroller general in case of failure of the taxpayer to make return, apply not only to cases where no return whatever is made, but also where property subject to taxation is withheld from the return.[53] The acceptance by the comptroller general of a return omitting taxable property does not bar the state from proceeding afterwards to collect the delinquent tax on the property omitted.[54] The fact that a domestic corporation owning foreign stock made annual statements showing the ownership of such stock, which statements were accessible to the comptroller general, does not bar the right of the state to collect taxes on the stock for years when it was not returned.[55] A statement made to the taxing officer, admitting ownership of certain property, but stating expressly that it was not intended as a return for taxation, cannot be treated as a return.[56]

(§ 5) D. Valuation of taxable property.[57] In general.—The practice varies as to the frequency of valuations upon realty.[58] Local assessors may be required to follow a state assessment,[59] or state officers may be required to use valuations made by local authorities,[60] but where this is not the case, it is the duty of assessors to exercise an independent judgment in placing a valuation upon property.[61] Assessing officers are vested with discretionary, quasi judicial power, with a proper exercise of which courts will not interfere,[62] but where the action of such officers is fraudulent or arbitrary, and is not the result of an exercise of that discretion with which they are vested by law, it is not final.[63] Thus, against such action a court of equity has power to grant the proper relief[64] if the facts required to give such court jurisdiction are made to appear.[65] An arbitrary assessment, not based on proper elements of valuation, is void.[66]

The fact that property is assessed upon a lower valuation than that of other similar property in the city is not decisive of the question of the justice of the tax, since its valuation as compared with all other taxable property in the city may still of foreign stock which had not been returned held not shown to be excessive, and to show every jurisdictional fact necessary to allow comptroller general to proceed under the statute. Hence, due process of law was not violated. Id.

59. In cities and towns the assessment of property for municipal taxation must be the same as the assessment for state taxes where there is a state assessment. Const. art. 8, § 128; Va. Code 1904, § 1033h. West v. Newport News [Va.] 51 S. E. 206. An ordinance imposing a certain tax on the "assessed value" of certain bank stock was not objectionable as not being on the market value, where there had been a state assessment of the same stock at the market value. Id.

60. Under Const. art. 14, § 11, the average rate of taxation of property to be assessed by the state board is to be determined by dividing the amount of ad valorem taxes levied on other property by the assessed valuation of such property as determined by the local authorities; the board cannot use a valuation fixed by itself. Attorney General v. State Board of Assessors [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 910, 106 N. W. 698.

61. Where city assessor took the list and values of railroad property for assessment for city purposes, as made by the executive council for the general railroad tax, the assessment was invalid. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 127 Iowa, 678, 103 N. W. 997.

65. Proof held not to sustain allegations of fraud and arbitrary action by assessors, alleged to have resulted in an excessive assessment or valuation of property. National Tube Co. v. Shearer [Del.] 62 A. 1093.

66. Where the value of corporation property was arbitrarily inflated in the course of a capricious computation aimed to produce a certain valuation fixed in advance, be too large.[67] The ratio to which the valuation of property, taxes upon which are sought to be abated, should be made to conform is the ratio between the assessed valuation of all taxable property in the city, real and personal, and the true value of such property.[68]

In some states the statute makes express provision for the deduction of debts from money and credits for taxation.[69]

In Indiana the valuation of the stock of a transient merchant must be made at the time and place such stock is offered for sale.[70] In Louisiana, in assessing the stock in trade of a mercantile company, the average amount of stock on hand during the preceding year should be taken.[71]

Valuation of corporate property, stock, and franchises.[72]—The valuation of the property of telephone or telegraph companies should include both the tangible and intangible elements of value.[73] The cash value of a railroad for purposes of taxation must be determined mainly by its net earnings, capitalized at the current rate of interest, taking into consideration any immediate prospect of an increase or decrease in earning capacity.[74] The actual cost may be shown, this being, prima facie, the value,[75] but if it appears that the actual cost was in excess of the necessary cost, the necessary cost is the proper standard.[76] If the utility of the road, as shown by its net income, is less than its cost, its value must be determined by its utility alone.[77] What are necessary expenses of operation is a question of law on which opinion evidence is incompetent.[78] In Kentucky, railroads are assessed as entireties, all the property used by a company for railroad purposes, whether owned or leased, being assessed as one piece of property.[79] The assessing officers are under no duty of ascertaining whether property of a company is owned or leased, or whether it owns property which is used for purposes not authorized by law and the company's charter.[80] The Michigan constitutional amendment, and the statute pursuant thereto, the assessment was invalid. Consolidated Gas Co. v. Baltimore [Md.] 61 A. 532.

68. Where an agreed ratio was that between the assessed and true value of property, similar to plaintiff's only, an abatement to conform to such ratio would be improper. Winnipiseogee Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Laconia [N. H.] 61 A. 676.

69. An agreement binding obligors to pay a certain sum to a college, the sum being payable one year after the death of either of the obligors, made for the purpose of making other subscriptions binding, is a "debt" which may be deducted from moneys and credits for taxation purposes under Code 1897, § 1311. 72. See 4 C. L. 1623.

73. The value of the tangible property of an express, telephone, or telegraph company, apart from its gross receipts for the year prior to the time of the assessment, and its franchise, does not furnish the true value of its property for taxation. Such value should be ascertained from a consideration of all of the aforesaid items taken together, and by treating the corporation as a going concern. Nebraska Tel. Co. v. Hall County [Neb.] 106 N. W. 471. The Minnesota statute providing for the taxation of telegraph companies contemplates the assessment of the tangible and intangible property of such companies situated within the state, as a system or unit, and not merely the taxation of tangible items only. Laws 1891, p. 70, c. 8, amended by Laws 1901, p. 251, c. 180, construed. State v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 567. The statute, so construed, is constitutional. Id. The cost price of the tangible property of a telegraph company, together with reasonable deduction for natural deterioration, is not a proper basis for the valuation of such property on general lists. which require the legislature to provide a uniform rate of taxation for such corporate property as is to be assessed by the state board of assessors, and prescribe that such rate shall be the rate found by the state board to be the average rate levied upon other property upon which ad valorem taxes are assessed for state, county, township, school, and municipal purposes, is not subject to the objection that the rate is fixed by local legislative bodies and not by the legislature.[81] The mere fact that all the property in the state is taken into account in determining the average rate on railroad property is not such proof of injustice and inequality as to call for judicial interference.[82] Methods of determining the taxable value of shares of stock, assessed to the owners,[83] of the capital,[84] franchises,[85] or other property of corporations,[86] and methods of computing license or franchise taxes,[87] are treated in the notes.

83. In assessing shares of bank stock in New York, the value of the real estate of the bank must be included in ascertaining the value of the stock. Laws 1901, p. 1360, c. 550, § 2, requires all the corporate property to be considered in ascertaining the value of the stock. First Nat. Bank v. Board of Assessors, 182 N. Y. 460, 75 N. E. 306. The stock of a Montana trust deposit and security company is taxable to the owners at its full cash value, less the amount of taxable property of the company representing such stock. Daly Bank & Trust Co. v. Silver Bow County Com'rs [Mont.] 81 P. 950. It is held in Kentucky that shares of stock in national banks, when taxed under the statutes of that state, are subject to have deducted the value of nontaxable government bonds held by the bank. Marion Nat. Bank v. Burton [Ky.] 90 S. W. 944.

84. In New York, commissioners cannot place one valuation on a piece of real estate when assessing it as such and another when assessing it as part of the capital and surplus of a corporation. Statutes require appraisal at full value in each case. People v. Wells, 110 App. Div. 194, 97 N. Y. S. 47. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 4079, in determining the valuation of the capital stock of a corporation, the state board may accept the statement of the corporation made under § 4078 as the basis of value, or it may take other evidence. Hager v. American Surety Co. [Ky.] 90 S. W. 550.

85. In determining the value of the capital stock of a corporation, for the purpose of finding the value of its franchise, the state board may consider the sale price of the shares, may add the surplus to the capital, or may capitalize net earnings at six per cent, or may combine these processes or any of them. Hager v. American Surety Co. [Ky.] 90 S. W. 550. The correct process of determining the value of the franchise of a foreign corporation is to ascertain (1) gross receipts in the state from all sources; (2) proportion of state gross receipts to entire gross receipts; (3) such proportion of entire capital stock, less assessed value of property, equals value of franchise. Id. A valuation arrived at by finding a sum which at 6% would produce the net earnings in the state is erroneous. Id. Where the state board has fixed the valuation of a railroad franchise but has not apportioned to a taxing district through which the road runs the amount on which a local tax may be levied, the sole remedy of the district is by application to the board for such apportionment. Commonwealth v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. [Ky.] 91 S. W. 1137.

Value of trade mark owned by foreign corporation may be considered in determining the amount of capital stock employed in the state for the purpose of fixing the amount of its franchise tax. People v. Kelsey, 93 N. Y. S. 971. Surplus is not capital within § 182 of the franchise tax law. People v. Kelsey, 108 App. Div. 138, 96 N. Y. S. 42. (§ 5) E. Reassessment; omitted property.[88]—In Michigan, boards of supervisors are authorized to reassess taxes which are rejected by the auditor general because of an erroneous or indefinite description,[89] but such reassessment by correction is not authorized where the original description is wholly void.[90]

Provision is usually made by statute for the assessment of property omitted in previous years.[91] An ordinance providing for the taxation of omitted property, though retrospective, is not invalid as an ex post facto law,[92] but if a penalty is imposed for such back taxes, it is void as to the penalty.[93] If such an ordinance provides for a hearing before the city council, it is not invalid for not allowing an appeal from the decision of that body,[94] nor is such an ordinance invalid as conferring judicial powers on the council.[95]

In Kentucky, provision is made by statute for the filing of statements of omitted property by revenue agents[96] who are compensated by penalties against the taxpayer.[97] When such a statement is filed, a summons is issued[98] and the taxability of the property determined in a legal proceeding. In such proceeding if it appears that the property is liable to taxation and has not been assessed, it must be assessed by the county court,[99] and if it is not liable, or if it has been assessed, the county

New Jersey: Under the New Jersey law imposing a franchise tax on the amount of stock issued and outstanding, stock owned by the corporation issuing it may not be considered in determining the amount of the tax. Gen. St. p. 3335; P. L. 1901, p. 31 (Corporation tax act). Knickerbocker Importation Co. v. State Board of Assessors [N. J. Law] 62 A. 266. Where a corporation was liable to an annual charge of 1-10 of 1% on all amounts of stock issued and outstanding on Jan. 1 of each year, it was liable upon the amount outstanding at that time, though reduced prior to the date of maturity of the charge, July 1. In re Cosmopolitan Power Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 858. Where, under the statute, a charge on outstanding stock on Jan. 1 was not due and payable until July 1, it could not bear interest before the latter date. Id.

Maine: Where the statute imposing a franchise tax provides for a sworn return by the companies liable thereto, showing the amount of business done, such a return made in conformity with the statute cannot be disregarded by the assessors. Construing Rev. St. 1883, c. 6, § 55. State v. Boston & P. Exp. Co. [Me.] 61 A. 697. Under such a statute the prorating of the interstate business is to be made according to a fixed standard, and cannot be based on an equitable division of the gross receipts by assessors. The proportion between the length of the haul in the state to the length of the entire haul is the proper standard for prorating. Id.

Where property has been omitted from a triennial assessment, such property may be included in an assessment made the following year, though there have been no improvements or additions made since the triennial assessment. Union Coal Co. v. Cooner, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 95. A city of the fifth class has power to provide by ordinance for the collection of taxes on omitted property, such ordinance conforming to Ky. 96. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 4260, a revenue agent may cause an omitted license tax to be listed, independent of the auditor. Commonwealth v. Central Consumers' Co. [Ky.] 91 S. W. 711.

97. Where a state revenue agent filed statements of omitted property for taxation, but instructed the county clerk to delay issuing summons thereon until directed to do so, and in the meantime the county agent got out similar statements and had summons issued, the state agent and not the county officer was entitled to the penalty allowed by Ky. St. 1903, § 4241, as compensation for such services. Lucas v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 89 S. W. 292.

98. Ky. St. 1901, § 4241, requiring a county clerk to issue a summons within 5 days after filing of a statement of omitted property for taxation, is directory only and a summons issued thereafter is not void. Lucas v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 89 S. W. 292.

99. Commonwealth v. Reed [Ky.] 89 S. W. 294. Though the county court in Kentucky has jurisdiction to assess omitted property, it cannot assess railroad property for a turnpike district where the railroad commission has already assessed it, but the auditor has failed to certify as required by Ky. St. 1903, § 4102. Commonwealth v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. [Ky.] 91 S. W. 1139. In a proceeding to compel the listing of omitted property by a corporation, under the Kentucky statute, court should make an order to that effect.[1] A judgment listing property need not state the rate of taxation for the various past years, this being fixed by law,[2] but should properly describe the property.[3] If the order of the court determines that the property is not liable to assessment,[4] upon appeal therefrom, no appeal bond is required.[5] Upon appeal to the circuit court the trial is de novo, and if the circuit court reaches a different conclusion from the county court, the case should be remanded with directions to enter the judgment indicated.[6] The Mississippi statute authorizing the back assessment of property which has escaped taxation does not apply to property listed for taxation, the assessment of which was void.[7]

In Illinois, the board of review has sole power to assess omitted property and a county treasurer has no supervision over such board.[8] The power to tax embraces the right to adopt such regulations as may seem necessary and efficient to cause all assessable property to be listed.[9] Thus, the Indiana statute providing for the inspection of books by assessors in order to determine whether another person has omitted property from his list is held constitutional.[10] The sufficiency of an affidavit in a proceeding under this statute for an order authorizing an inspection of books must be judged in the light of the rule that tax laws are to be liberally construed in favor of the taxing power.[11] The order for inspection should not be broader than the affidavit.[12] The statute does not require notice of the proceeding to the person having the desired evidence in his possession.[13]

In Illinois, it is held that county boards have no power to employ tax ferrets to look up omitted property.[14] In Ohio, contracts with tax inquisitors have been upheld.[15] The compensation of such employes is largely regulated by statute.[16] In

15. A tax inquisitor is not a public officer but an employe, and the provision for his appointment rather than election is therefore not open to constitutional objection. State v. Gilfillan, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 153. Contracts entered into by county officers with tax inquisitors are not illegal because they stipulate for the payment of a percentage on real estate which the inquisitor causes to be returned for taxation; or because of a severable provision for the payment of a percentage to the inquisitor on penalties; or because they empower the inquisitor to compel the auditor to hold examinations of owners of omitted property at his request and in his presence; or because of the clothing of an inquisitor with an exclusive privilege; or because the contract possesses a prospective operation; or because the policy of making such contracts, or of paying so large a percentage for the work performed, does not meet with the full approval of the courts; or because of failure to enter the contracts in the minutes of the county commissioners as provided in § 878; or because an inquisitor who gave bond in accordance with the statute and the contract failed to sign the contract; or because there is no finding on the commissioners' record that they had reason to believe at the time the contract was made that there was property within the county

Iowa, a county cannot appeal from action of the county auditor or treasurer in refusing to assess omitted property found by a tax ferret employed by the county, nor can the tax ferret or his attorney take such an appeal when not authorized by his contract or by resolution of the county board.[17]

An assessing officer is not liable in a civil action for damages for an erroneous decision in the listing of property claimed by him to have been previously omitted.[18] The right of appeal from such assessment given by law is the exclusive remedy of the taxpayer,[19] even though it is alleged that the officer acted unlawfully and tortiously.[20]

§ 6. Equalization, correction, and review.[21]—While valuations by assessing officers are presumptively correct,[22] if legally and not arbitrarily made,[23] they are final only when no appeal is taken therefrom.[24] Provision is uniformly made by law for the review and correction of assessments by boards of equalization and by the courts.[25] The powers and jurisdiction of county and state boards of equalization,[26] as well as the procedure to obtain relief through them,[27] are largely controlled which had been improperly omitted from taxation. Id.

16. A tax inquisitor is not entitled to a percentage on the fifty per cent penalty added by law, or to any percentage on penalties levied and collected as such, and where there is a provision in the contract for the payment of a percentage on penalties, it will be disallowed. State v. Gilfillan, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 154. An inquisitor is not excluded from furnishing evidence of omitted property to be listed in the name of a decedent, and may discover the existence of such property from inventories filed in the probate court, but his compensation will be limited to a percentage on taxes collected on property which should have been returned in the lifetime of the decedent. Id. An auditor is not bound to assume that the returns for taxation as made are false, and the inquisitor in this case is entitled to a percentage on taxes collected on additions made to the returns for preceding years of insurance companies. Id. Where the county commissioners enter into a contract with the prosecuting attorney for the bringing of suits for the collection of taxes on property theretofore treated as exempt from taxation, and by agreement a test case is tried, the defendants in other similar cases agreeing to abide the result, the percentage the attorney is to receive in the event of his securing a judgment is not limited by either law, justice, or equity to the amount involved in the test case. State v. Taylor, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 505. An allowance of $1,250 per annum, made by county commissioners to a prosecuting attorney, whereas § 845 limits the allowance to $250 for each case in which counsel is employed, will be upheld by a court only in the event of the number of cases exceeding five in a given year. Id. The discretion lodged with county commissioners in the matter of fixing fees to be paid for the collection of taxes in such cases will not be interfered with by a court where the fee is made contingent and is fixed at five per cent; and where two separate contracts have been entered into, and the parties refuse to treat the second as superseding the first, a court will not under the circumstances of this case decree differently. 26. A city board of equalization, in reviewing an assessment, is authorized to contract for the supply of maps, abstracts, data, and information, as it requires to pass upon questions before it, and is not restricted to such evidence as the assessor is able or willing to furnish. Maurer v. Weatherby [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1083. The Arizona territorial board of equalization, in equalizing valuations throughout the territory, has power to raise the valuation of property in a county, though the aggregate valuation of property in the territory is thereby increased. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. v. Territorial Board of Equalization [Ariz.] 84 P. 511. The board may increase or diminish the valuation of property in a county by classes; it is not required to act only on the aggregate valuation of all property in the county as a whole. Id. The territorial board may require a county board of supervisors to return any class of real property on the roll, such by statute. Their orders, in matters wherein they have jurisdiction, are not reviewable collaterally,[28] and application to them for the proper relief is usually a condition precedent to the right of appeal to the courts,[29] unless their jurisdiction in the premises is attacked.[30] Boards of equalization cannot raise an assessment without evidence justifying the increase.[31] In equalizing valuations throughout a state or territory, a state or territorial board must fix and apply some uniform standard of valuation[32] which must be derived by some legal method from the valuations in the various counties.[33]

Notice[34] to the taxpayer affected is usually essential to the validity of action by boards of review.[35]

as patented mines, as a distinct or separate class. Id. Under Rev. St. 1901, pars. 3881, 3882, 3884, it is the duty of a county board, upon receiving a statement of the changes in assessments made by the territorial board of equalization, to note on the assessment roll, compute, and carry out to the proper column, the territorial tax, with any additions made by the territorial board. Territory v. Yavapai County Sup'rs [Ariz.] 84 P. 519. The county board may, under Rev. St. 1901, par. 973, require the tax collector to note on the duplicate assessment roll such changes as the board itself has not made. Id. In Nebraska a county board may correct an error of assessment or a gross injustice, whether the error or injustice be due to some act of the assessor or of the board itself. The county board of equalization has, in Nebraska, jurisdiction to hear and determine contests as to the liability to taxation of property which the law requires county authorities to assess. State v. Drexel [Neb.] 107 N. W. 110. In Nebraska the state board of equalization and assessment have general direction and control of county assessors, but have no power to direct them in the valuation of property or in determining whether or not a particular item of property is assessable. Id. The conflict between § 2805 and the later act of May 10, 1902, terminates all the powers of city boards of equalization appointed under the prior section. State v. Godfrey, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. 29. The sole remedy in the first instance of one who conceives that his property has been overvalued for taxation is to apply to the board of equalization to correct the error. Hall v. Moore [Neb.] 106 N. W. 785. A taxpayer who is subject to the jurisdiction of a board of review and who fails to appeal to such tribunal is not entitled to appeal to the courts for relief. Comp. Laws §§ 3851, 3853, 3899, provide for review by board. Traverse Beach Ass'n v. Elmwood Tp. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 746, 105 N. W. 768. An assessment of real estate was not objected to the first year but the taxes paid. The next year the valuation was based on the assessment for the prior year according to law. No objection was made before the county board of equalization, but in an action for judgment the defense was made that timber had been cut from the land since the first assessment, and that the second assessment was excessive. No attack was made on the original assessment. Held, no appeal having been made to the board of equalization to correct the assessment, the defense was not available in a court of law. In re Payment of Real Estate Taxes in Pine County [Minn.] 105 N. W. 276. Where a taxpayer is notified to appear before a board of review and show cause why his assessment should not be increased, and he fails to appear, he is not entitled to relief in equity against an increased assessment on the sole ground that the assessment is excessive and results in double taxation. Cummins v. Webber, 218 Ill. 521, 75 N. E. 1041.

St. 1903, § 4250, which authorizes the county court to release from a tax a person not the owner who was erroneously assessed, and to have the property listed to the true owner, an order releasing one person and charging another, without notice to the latter, is void as to him. Garrett v. Creekmore [Ky.] 89 S. W. 166. The statutes (Acts 1901, §§ 53, 65, pp. 250, 254) and published notice by the clerk of the board of commissioners (§ 92, p. 269) constitute notice to the taxpayer of the meeting of the board of equalization and of his right to appear and object to assessments or action of the board in relation thereto. Inland Lumber & Timber Co. v. Thompson [Idaho] 83 P. 933. Under Sess. Laws 1901, p. 233, it is the duty of the board of equalization to order the assessor to list omitted property, and where such

Review by the courts.[36]—Mandamus lies to compel a board of review to consider an application for relief,[37] but not to compel a board to take any particular action,[38] since a proceeding for mandamus is proper only where there is no adequate remedy by appeal or certiorari.[39] As has been said, application to a board of review or other tribunal provided by law is a condition precedent to the right of appeal to the courts;[40] hence, where an appeal is taken, the court will consider only such objections as were raised before such tribunal.[41] Ordinarily, findings by boards of equalization or assessment will not be disturbed by the courts[42] unless they are so manifestly wrong that reasonable minds could not differ thereon,[43] or unless the tax officials have acted fraudulently or maliciously, to the substantial prejudice of the taxpayer,[44] or have made a mistake so gross as to be inconsistent with fair and honest judgment,[45] or have proceeded upon an erroneous rule of law,[46] or without jurisdiction.[47] assessment is made before the final adjournment of the board, the taxpayer has an opportunity to be heard in regard thereto and the assessment is not void for want of such opportunity. Id. In Michigan, where the state board of assessors of railroad property, sitting as a board of review, has heard an application to reduce an assessment, no notice need be given of an increase in the assessment, since the statute does not provide for a rehearing. 39. In Nebraska an appeal lies from the action of a county board (in deciding the valuation of particular property or whether it is assessable) to the district court, but not to the state board of equalization. State v. Drexel [Neb.] 107 N. W. 110. Hence, mandamus will not lie to correct errors of the county board in such matters. Id.

41. On appeal from an order of a board of equalization in the matter of assessment of property, the cause must be tried on questions raised by the complaint before that tribunal. Nebraska Tel. Co. v. Hall County [Neb.] 106 N. W. 471. On an appeal from the action of a county treasurer in making an assessment on omitted property, a taxpayer is entitled to raise only such objections, not going to the jurisdiction, as were made before the treasurer. Neither can such writ be invoked to review the facts upon which the inferior tribunal acted, except to ascertain the fact of jurisdiction. Id. On certiorari to review action of the territorial equalization board, where the petition shows that the board treated patented mines as a distinct class of property, it will be presumed that county boards returned such property as a separate class so that the territorial board had the necessary information in the assessment rolls furnished. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. v. Territorial Board of Equalization [Ariz.] 84 P. 511. Courts will vacate an assessment if it appears that property has been grossly overvalued as compared with the valuation of other like property. Assessment vacated where property in question was assessed at twice its market value, and its valuation was higher relatively than other similar corner lots. Dickson v. Kittitas County [Wash.] 84 P. 855. Finding that assessment of relators' property was 26% higher than that on other property of the same class, held sustained by the proof, and a claim that they were not injured because their assessment was not above the average of improved and unimproved property, held not sustained. remedy to have an assessment declared not lawfully made includes only the clerical act of extending in the assessment rolls the name of the party assessed, the description of the property, the value as fixed by the proper tribunal, the millage for various purposes, and the total amount of the tax.[48] The proceeding will not reach irregularities not relating to such act.[49] Certiorari lies, in New York, to review an alleged illegal assessment, though proceedings to enforce the tax have not been instituted.[50] A banking corporation is entitled to maintain a suit in behalf of its stockholders in relation to the assessment and taxation of its shares of stock.[51] The method of perfecting an appeal to the courts,[52] and the proper form of relief to be granted by them,[53] are treated in the notes.

59. The tax levy authorized by Const. art. 7, § 9, "for state purposes," is intended to cover the current and running expenses of maintaining and conducting the state government and operating and maintaining state institutions. Gooding v. Profitt [Idaho] 83 P. 230. Public or bonded indebtedness incurred under Const. art. 8, § 1, for internal improvements and the erection of public buildings and institutions, is not covered by art. 7, § 9, and a tax levy to pay interest on such indebtedness and bonds and to provide a sinking fund therefor is not within the limitation upon the tax rate imposed by art. 7, § 9. Id.

60. Assessment for certain bonds void where proceedings to issue bonds have been held invalid. Hellman v. Los Angeles, 147 Cal. 653, 82 P. 313. In Illinois, a school district which has issued and sold bonds for part of the cost of a school building may levy an annual tax, after construction of the building, not to exceed the statutory limit of taxation for building purposes, for the purpose not only of paying interest on the bonds, but also to create a sinking fund to pay the bonds at maturity. People v. Peoria & E. R. Co., 216 Ill. 221, 74 N. E. 734. A levy by school directors for building purposes, otherwise valid, is not rendered invalid by the fact that they enter into a contract for a building in excess of the municipal levy must be correctly specified,[61] but if the levying ordinance expressly refers to the appropriation ordinance which contains such information, failure of the levy ordinance to state it is not fatal to the validity of the levy.[62] It is competent for the legislature to cure a defect in a levy arising from failure to specify the purposes of the tax,[63] unless the levy and tax have been held invalid by the state court of last resort.[64] A vote of the taxpayers upon a levy for a particular purpose is essential only when the law expressly requires it.[65]

Mandamus[66] lies to compel county officers, who are the instruments of the state for the assessment and collection of taxes, to levy a tax to pay township bonds, though the corporate existence of the township has been abolished by the state constitution and the township officers removed.[67] Such a proceeding is not a suit against the state, though the legislature has forbidden such county officers to exercise such power.[68] Municipal authorities need not levy annually the full amount of taxes allowed by law in order to meet outstanding warrants, but, in determining the amount to be levied, are vested with discretion and may consider the amount of cash on hand and the amount of outstanding, collectible taxes, as well as the amount of indebtedness;[69] hence, mandamus will not issue at the instance of a warrant holder to com-constitutional tax limit. Id. A levy by school directors for building purposes, within the statutory limit, to make up the difference between the cost of a school building and the amount realized from the sale of bonds, is valid, where the election at which the building was authorized did not limit the cost to the amount of the bonds voted, nor specify the purpose for which the bonds were to be issued. Id. It is competent for the legislature to authorize a board of commissioners of a county indebted to the state for taxes to make a sufficient levy, not to exceed a rate specified, to meet such indebtedness. Sess. Laws 1905, p. 278, sustained, and held that it was duty of Nez Perce County to levy a tax for such purpose. Gooding v. Profitt [Idaho] 83 P. 230. Under Gloversville City Charter (Laws 1899, p. 612, c. 275), §§ 242, 70, where a judgment against a city was not included in the original estimate of expenses, it could and should have been included before ratification of the tax as extended. Hence, execution on the judgment would not be stayed for want of levy and collection of a tax therefor. Frederick v. Gloversville, 97 N. Y. S. 1105.

61. Assessment for "public school improvement bonds (1899)" invalid where bonds of 1889 were intended. Hellman v. Los Angeles, 147 Cal. 653, 82 P. 313. County levy of 75 cents on each $100 of taxable property, which does not specify particular purposes of the tax, is invalid. People v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 219 Ill. 94, 76 N. E. 80. A tax levying ordinance should specify in detail each object and purpose for which the tax is levied. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 218 Ill. 463, 75 N. E. 1021. An order of a county court levying a special tax should state the purpose for which the levy was made. Failure to state the purpose held not aided by statement in chairman's report copied in the minutes of the court. Southern R. Co. v. Hamblen County [Tenn.] 92 S. W. 238. Where a levy by the fiscal court fails to "specify distinctly" the purpose of the tax, the tax is invalid, Const. § 180, being mandatory. Commonwealth v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 251.

63. Laws 1905, p. 359, held not to interfere with vested rights and to be a proper exercise of legislative authority. People v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 219 Ill. 94, 76 N. E. 80. Const. art. 9, § 8, which provides that county authorities shall not levy a tax the aggregate of which shall exceed 75 cents on each $100 of taxable property, is a limitation upon the power of counties and not upon that of the legislature, hence the legislature could authorize a levy which did not specify the purposes of the tax, and could therefore cure a levy defective for failure to do so. Id.; Bowyer v. People [Ill.] 77 N. E. 91.

64. Legislature could not make tax enforceable when court had declared it invalid. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 219 Ill. 408, 76 N. E. 571.

65. In Illinois the statute does not require the cost of a school building to be built to be submitted to the voters of the district. Where a building has been authorized by vote of the people, the directors may make levies from time to time to build such a building as the vote directed, or, in the absence of such direction, as they in their discretion determine upon. People v. Peoria & E. R. Co., 216 Ill. 221, 74 N. E. 734. Where a municipality has legally incurred an indebtedness, no vote of the people on a levy to pay interest thereon is necessary, since Const. art. 10, § 12, requiring a levy to pay interest on debts and create a sinking fund is mandatory and self enforcing. pel a levy of the full amount unless it appears that the aggregate of the amount on hand and outstanding taxes will be insufficient to meet the warrants.[70] It will be presumed in a proceeding for a writ of mandamus that appropriate levies for the municipal indebtedness fund have been made in prior years.[71]

The record[72] should show that each step required by law has been duly taken,[73] though an omission or defect in the record is not necessarily fatal to the validity of the levy.[74]

§ 8. Payment and commutation.[75]—Actual payment by any person discharges the lien of the taxes.[76] An offer to pay, which fails, through fault of the treasurer, must, to have the same effect as actual payment, be made by a person having an interest which would be lost by a sale.[77] The owner may prove the fact of payment though the treasurer is dead and though the books show no credit.[78] No laches can be imputed to an owner who, in paying taxes, or in redeeming after sale, pays the amount which upon his inquiry the treasurer demands.[79] Such payment is in legal effect equivalent to the actual payment of all that is due, and this notwithstanding a misapplication of the money paid by the treasurer, or failure to credit it properly.[80] Payment of taxes on land by one who has no color or claim of right to do so on his own behalf inures to the benefit of the owner if he elects to claim it,[81] but payment by one having an interest in the land does not inure to the benefit of another merely because the land was assessed to the latter while he was in possession.[82] Where a person pays taxes on land as the agent of the owner,[83] and, having allowed it to be-

73. Levy of additional tax held unauthorized where record of county board showed resolution therefor was "offered," but did not show its adoption. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 218 Ill. 463, 75 N. E. 1021. By Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, art. 8, § 1, a certified copy of a tax levy ordinance of a city or village must be filed with the county clerk. Filing of the original ordinance is not a compliance therewith. People v. Kankakee & S. W. R. Co., 218 Ill. 588, 75 N. E. 1063. Such noncompliance cannot be cured, on application for judgment for taxes, by allowing a certificate of authentication to be attached to the ordinance. Id. The point that no "certified copy" of the tax levy ordinance was filed with the county clerk is raised by the objection that the alleged tax levy ordinance was not certified by the county clerk. Id. In townships using the labor system for road and bridge taxes, under Road and Bridge Act § 119, the original levy certificate signed by the highway commissioners, must be filed with the county clerk. Under the cash system, § 16, the certificate is to be delivered to the town clerk, who certifies the items of levy to the county clerk to be extended as other taxes. Id.

74. Absence of itemized statement as basis for county levy held an irregularity cured by Rev. Codes § 1263. Scott & Barrett Mercantile Co. v. Nelson County [N. D.] 104 N. W. 528. B. & C. Comp. § 3085, requiring county court to levy a tax on all taxable property to defray county expenses, confers jurisdiction to levy the tax, and failure to enter the estimate required by § 3084 in the journal of the county court is not a jurisdictional defect. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Umatilla County [Or.] 81 P. 352. The journal entry of an order levying a tax was signed by the commissioners before any attempt to enforce the tax was made, hence, the fact that it was not signed when a tax payer sought to set the assessment aside, by a writ of review, was not ground for its annulment. Id. Highway commissioners' certificate of levy of 40 cents per $100 for roads and bridges is sufficient, though not stating the amount required for each purpose or the total amount required. 83. Person who had long paid taxes for owner, claiming no right of his own, and who allowed land to become delinquent, come delinquent for a year, buys at the sale but takes no deed, and thereafter continues to pay in the name of the owner, a deed taken by his heirs, under such purchase, vests no title in them as against the person for whom the taxes were so paid.[84] Payment of taxes by such heirs, who cause the lands to be charged against them alone, inures to the benefit of the true owner,[85] and the latter will not forfeit his title to the state for failure to keep his land charged with taxes.[86] Payment by a tenant in common of taxes for the common property under an assessment in his name will render a sale of his co-tenant's interest for taxes in his name for the same year void.[87] No resolution of the directors is necessary to authorize a bank to pay taxes on its stock and enforce its lien therefor by deductions from dividends.[88] A claim for reimbursement for taxes paid on stock is an asset of the bank which it alone can collect.[89]

Taxes must be paid in the funds required by law.[90] Paving certificates of a city are not receivable for taxes levied to create a sinking fund for the redemption of and payment of interest on bonds of the city.[91] The objection that such certificates were received may be raised by the city in a suit to set aside the compromise settlement by which they were accepted.[92]

§ 9. Lien and priority.[93]—The time when taxes become a lien may be fixed by statute,[94] but there can be no real or effective lien until the amount of the taxes is ascertained and determined.[95] When the rate of taxes is fixed and the amount determined, the lien for such amount relates back and attaches as of the date specified in the statute.[96] The duration of tax liens is also statutory.[97] Sales to the municipality for subsequent taxes are not a waiver of the lien of a prior sale to the municibought at sale but took no deed, and thereafter continued to pay in name of owner, held the agent of the owner. Siers v. Wiseman [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 460. Laws 1903, p. 73, c. 59, and the emergency clause, § 3, the lien for taxes on personal property attaches to the personal and real property of the person assessed immediately when such personal property is listed with the county assessor and he has placed a value thereon. Klickitat Warehouse Co. v. Klickitat County [Wash.] 84 P. 860. The moment property is listed and returned to the auditor it becomes charged with taxes, and its owner assumes the legal status of a tax payer. State v. Taylor, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 505. In Philadelphia, taxes are assessed prior to the beginning of the year and the whole tax is due at the beginning of the year. City of Philadelphia v. Penn. Inst. for the Blind, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 421. A claim for taxes assessed and levied by a township subsequent to the passage of the act of June 4, 1901, P. L. 364, has no priority over a mortgage executed and recorded prior to the act, in the distribution of the proceeds of sale under a levari facias. Caner v. Bergner, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 220.

pality,[98] and municipal authorities have no power to release property from such lien except upon payment in full.[99] A tax lien is not lost by failure of the county clerk to list lands in the county on which taxes for one or more years are delinquent.[1]

The lien of the state for general taxes is paramount to all other liens,[2] including the lien of special assessments.[3] Taxes levied and assessed for general revenue purposes constitute a lien superior to the lien of a tax sale certificate issued prior thereto.[4] Real estate taken by a railroad corporation in condemnation proceedings is subject to the lien of taxes existing prior to such proceedings.[5] Personal property in the hands of an assignee for the benefit of creditors is to be used for unpaid taxes on the personal and real property of the assignor before the real property can be used.[6] Where a receiver of an insolvent corporation is appointed upon application of a mortgagee of personalty and no provision is made in the decree of appointment for priority of payment of a franchise tax to the state, the claim of the state for such tax is not superior to the lien of the subsequent mortgagee on the personalty.[7] A claim of a county against a bankrupt tax collector for taxes collected but not paid over is not a claim for "taxes due and payable" by the bankrupt so as to be entitled to priority, under the bankruptcy act, over claims of general creditors,[8] nor is such claim, considered as a debt due the county, given priority by any statute of Maryland.[9]

When taxes against real estate are past due and unpaid, the county by which they were levied may maintain a suit to restrain waste, where the acts complained of would reduce the value of the property to an amount insufficient to pay taxes.[10] The county need not first purchase the property at tax sale in order to maintain such suit.[11]

§ 10. Relief from illegal taxes.[12]—In some states collection of a tax will not be enjoined.[13] Elsewhere, the remedy by injunction is available, provided the complainant brings himself within some recognized head of equitable jurisdiction,[14] such as fraud.[15] In the absence of statutory provisions, a court of equity will not enjoin the collection of a tax upon the mere ground of illegality.[16] The Federal

Collection of a tax will not be enjoined on the ground that the assessment was increased without notice, unless it is made to appear that the assessment is excessive and that appellant has been substantially circuit court has jurisdiction of a suit against a state auditor to enjoin collection of taxes upon railroads where the bill alleges that the state constitution and statute violate the Federal constitution, and that the auditor, acting under such constitution and statute, is about to deprive complainants of their property without due process of law.[17] Jurisdiction once acquired in such suit the court may retain it to administer relief on other grounds, though the state court could afford adequate remedy.[18] In Kentucky, where a taxpayer seeks to enjoin collection of a tax and a counterclaim is interposed for the taxes, the court has power to compel the complainant to pay the taxes into court.[19] A suit to enjoin the collection of taxes for one year is no bar to a suit to enjoin similar taxes for another year, since taxes for each year constitute a separate cause of action,[20] but a decree enjoining the collection of taxes because of a contract exemption from taxation is as controlling on future taxes as on the particular taxes to which the suit related.[21] In a suit to enjoin a tax sale on the ground that the assessment was excessive, facts showing such excessiveness must be alleged.[22] If the ground for such desired relief is that personalty should have been first proceeded against, the character and value of such personalty must be shown.[23] To warrant joinder of all the taxpayers in a county in a suit to enjoin a sale of lands bid in by the state for delinquent taxes, the grounds relied on must be common to all.[24] A suit by citizens and taxpayers to enjoin the sale of lands for taxes is a proper remedy to determine in which of two counties the lands are assessable.[25] Payment or tender of taxes justly due is a condition precedent to relief in a court of equity,[26] but this rule cannot be invoked to defeat injunctive relief in aid of a decree enjoining the collection of state taxes where all questions concerning the part of the tax not covered by the original decree were eliminated from the controversy.[27]

A tax certificate, valid on its face, is constructive notice of the lien of the tax, and a subsequent purchaser is in no better position than the original owner when seeking relief from the tax. Complainant in a suit to enjoin sale of lands bid in by the state must tender the amount of the unpaid taxes, since by Ky. Recovery back of payments.[29]—Illegal taxes paid under a sufficient protest[30] may be recovered back,[31] but taxes voluntarily paid cannot be recovered.[32] Payments are presumed to be voluntary until the contrary is made to appear.[33] The mere fact that a payment is made under formal protest does not render it involuntary.[34] A statute making it the duty of banks to collect taxes on its stock from the owners thereof and pay the same to the receiver of taxes is thereby made the agent of share owners only for the payment of legal taxes,[35] and an unathorized payment of an illegal tax out of dividends of a stockholder may be recovered back by the owner of the stock.[36] A payment of valid taxes cannot be recovered back merely because of an irregularity in the method of collection.[37] Illegal collection charges, not paid over by the collector to the township, cannot be recovered from the latter.[38] An action to recover illegal taxes must be brought within the time prescribed by statute.[39] Legality of the tax will be presumed and any illegality relied upon must be alleged[40] and proved.[41] A complaint in an action by a taxpayer, for himself and Taxpayer paid taxes on more land than he owned, though a comparison of his deed with the assessment would have shown the mistake. He could not recover. Bateson v. Detroit [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 66, 106 N. W. 1104. Where taxpayer paid a tax which was properly assessed without appearing before a board of review and without any proceedings being taken to compel payment, and the only evidence of a protest was an indorsement on the tax roll and a statement in the tax receipt, be was not entitled to recover the amount paid. Traverse Beach Ass'n v. Elmwood Tp. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 626, 105 N. W. 30.

39. An action to recover illegal taxes paid under protest must, by Comp. Laws 1897, § 3876, be brought within 30 days after payment. Lingle v. Elmwood Tp. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 703, 105 N. W. 604.

40. Where complaint alleged fallure to serve notice of proposed increase in assessment, but did not allege that the published notice required by law was not given, proper notice was presumed. People's Gas, Electric & Heating Co. v. Harrell [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 318. Complaint in action to recover taxes collected to meet bonds on the ground that the bond issue was illegal because not submitted to popular vote as required by the constitution of 1891, must show that the bonded debt was created, since such constitution was adopted. An other taxpayers, to recover illegal taxes will be dismissed if it does not show the amount which plaintiff paid.[42] When a county has paid over taxes collected by it to creditors, an action by a taxpayer on behalf of himself and others to recover taxes paid by them will not lie.[43]

Refunding.[44]—The right of the state to collect from land taxes which it has refunded to the purchaser of an invalid certificate is clear and undisputed.[45] Such refunded taxes should be collected in the statutory manner, though mere irregularities will not subject a judgment therefor to collateral attack.[46] In Colorado, where real estate has been sold for personal taxes erroneously charged on the land, the county commissioners should refund to the purchaser the amount of the personal taxes.[47] Under the Colorado statute providing for repayment by a county to a purchaser where by mistake or wrongful act of the treasurer, clerk, or assessor, land has been sold on which no tax was due, there can be no recovery by a purchaser against a county unless the land sold was not taxable, or, by reason of a double assessment, the tax was not due.[48] The fact that the tax certificate has been declared void on other grounds is not ground for recovery.[49] Under the Washington statute, providing for a refund of road taxes upon presentation of a certificate by the road supervisor that the taxpayer assessed has done road work or had it done, a county may recover, in an action for money had and received, an amount refunded upon a fraudulent certificate, the road work certified to not having been done.[50] In such action the defendant, having voluntarily paid the tax, cannot attack its validity, the action not being one to recover a tax due.[51] Limitations will not begin to run against such action until the county has refunded the money and discovered the fraud.[52] The official who fraudulently issued the certificate is not a necessary party.[53] Under the Mississippi statute, providing that money paid by a purchaser at a tax sale shall be refunded if the sale was unauthorized, because the taxes were not due or the land was not liable, and creating a state board to audit claims of purchasers, such board has no power to decide that lands sold were not within the state, and a refund on that ground is not conclusive as against the state.[54] allegation that the bonds were issued in 1894 is not sufficient. Hawkins v. Nicholas County [Ky.] 89 S. W. 484.

41. Where an ordinance and statute provided for assessment of property to owner on March 1, an amending ordinance making property assessable on May 1 was void, and taxes paid were held not recoverable, though taxpayer's statement referred to his ownership as of May 1, where it did not appear that he was not the owner on March 1. § 11. Collection. A. Collectors; their authority, rights, and liabilities.[55]—The term of office[56] and compensation[57] of tax collectors are matters of statutory regulation. Where a special contract with a collector is not authorized by law,[58] he is entitled only to legal compensation,[59] and the county may recover sums paid him in excess of such amount.[60] Collectors have only such authority as is given them by law.[61] A tax warrant issued to a collector continues in force until the whole tax is collected.[62] A surety on a collector's bond is not liable for failure of the collector to turn over money collected under an invalid levy,[63] but invalidity of the tax does not relieve the collector from liability to the county.[64]

Mandamus to compel collection of a tax lies only at the instance of one having a sufficient interest in the funds to be collected.[65]

(§ 11) B. Methods of collection in general.[66]—The method of collection is controlled by statute. There are, in general, two methods: summary proceedings against the person or property, and actions at law. Only express statutory authority will justify the use of either,[67] and authority to use any method must be

St. 1892, § 1069, entitles county auditors to the graded per cent therein specified on the entire grand duplicate of the county, including moneys collected on levies made by school boards, and also to one per cent on the latter. State v. Lewis [Ohio] 76 N. E. 564. Certain statutes construed, and held that collectors in counties of the third class are entitled to 15% for collection of poll taxes. Alameda County v. Dalton [Cal.] 82 P. 1050. A forfeiture of the commissions of a tax collector under the Louisiana statute may be waived by the police jury and will be considered as waived when belated monthly settlements have been accepted, without protest or objection, for a series of years. Young v. Parish of East Baton Rouge [La.] 40 So. 768. Such an acceptance is equivalent to a voluntary payment of commissions. Id.

58. In Iowa, county supervisors have no power to employ a tax collector by special contract, providing for compensation above that provided by law. By Code § 1407, the treasurer has charge of collection matters (Massie v. Harrison County [Iowa] 105 N. W. 507), nor does Code § 491, under which supervisors may authorize employment of additional help in treasurer's office, authorize such contract (Id.).

When a town treasurer has issued a warrant to collect a tax then payable to a person in actual possession of the office of tax collector, his authority is exhausted and he cannot be compelled to issue another warrant to another claimant of the office, since Gen. Laws 1896, c. 48, § 34, continues all warrants in force until the whole tax is collected. Briggs v. Carr [R. I.] 63 A. 487.

67. In the absence of statutes, no action at law will lie for the recovery of taxes whether on omitted property or otherwise. Shearer v. Citizens' Bank of Washington County [Iowa] 105 N. W. 1025. Laws 1903, c. 522, provides that taxes on city rolls may be collected by action, supplementary proceedings, or foreclosure of tax liens. Hence, the city may by action collect taxes previously levied. City of Rochester v. Rochester R. Co., 109 App. Div. 638, 96 N. Y. S. 152. Court of equity may grant relief authorized by Laws 1903, in action commenced prior exercised in the manner prescribed.[68] It is competent for the legislature to provide, by retrospective legislation, a remedy and procedure for the collection of taxes already due.[69]

(§ 11) C. Procedure in actions at law. Limitations.[70]—Suits to enforce taxes must be brought within the limitation period.[71] The legislature has full power to fix a period of limitation to suits by a city to collect taxes,[72] except as to pending suits, with regard to which a reasonable time must be allowed.[73] Where a suit to collect taxes for a sinking fund for bonded indebtedness is barred as to the city, the right of the bondholder to enforce the taxes is also barred.[74] A statute authorizing the enforcement of taxes which at the time of the passage of the act were barred by limitations is unconstitutional,[75] and a tax judgment including taxes which have been so barred is to that extent void.[76] In Washington the statute of limitations is held not to run against the foreclosure of tax liens, since a tax lien cannot be satisfied or removed until the tax is paid.[77] thereto, where pleadings permit, and the statute is in force when judgment is rendered. Id. Under Rochester City Charter, Laws 1880, c. 14, § 104, provides for an action by the city to foreclose an equity of redemption, after notice in which a deficiency judgment may be had against the owner of the land sold. Id. In Massachusetts a taxpayer who, having goods, refuses to exhibit them upon a demand by the tax collector, after a diligent search, may be lawfully arrested. In suit against a collector for assault and false inprisonment, whether be had made a diligent search for goods, prior to his demand, held for jury, the return on bis warrant to that effect being prima facie evidence thereof. Kerr v. Atwood, 188 Mass. 506, 74 N. E. 917. Under the Colorado statute authorizing an action of debt to recover personal property taxes when the remedy by distress and sale is not available, an action of debt will not lie unless it is made to appear that the property subject to the lien of the tax could not, by reasonable diligence, have been identified and proceeded against. Held that collector had not made proper effort to identify and seize property, and action of debt would not lie under 2 Mills' Ann. St. § 3771. Bergerman Bros. v. Beerbohm [Colo.] 81 P. 701. The act of 1874, regulating the manner of returning wild lands for taxes, authorizes the comptroller general to issue an execution against an unreturned lot of such land for the taxes of that year. Huxford v. Southern Pine Co. [Ga.] 52 S. E. 439.

68. In South Carolina, failure to proceed against the personalty of a defaulting taxpayer before sale of his realty renders a tax deed executed after such a sale of the realty null and void. Act 1880, §§ 9, 10. Johnson v. Jones [S. C.] 51 S. E. 805. In Kentucky, failure of the sheriff to proceed against personalty of a taxpayer does not render a sale of realty for taxes invalid. Under Const. § 171, and Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4019, 4021, 4143. Alexander v. Aud [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1103. Laws 1903, c. 522, validates certain taxes in the city of Rochester and provides a means of enforcement, but the remedy provided is not an additional one to those provided by city charter; it simply authorizes enforcement by the existing method of taxes validated by the act. City of Rochester v. Fourteenth Ward Co-op. Bldg. Lot Ass'n [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 692. The "foreclosure of tax liens" authorized by the curative act means liens created by the record of the list of lands sold in the county clerk's office, and not the lien created by the levying of the tax by the common council. Id.

69. Laws 1903, p. 148, No. 92, even if construed as not allowing redemption from execution sales as in other cases, do not violate Rev. St. 1901, § 63, prohibiting any local or special laws regulating judicial practice. Wallapai Mining & Development Co. v. Territory [Ariz.] 84 P. 85. The act does not deprive taxpayers of property without due process of law (Id.), nor is it void for uncertainty (Id.). A statute merely changing the method of procedure in the enforcement of taxes is available in the collection of taxes which became delinquent prior to the time the statute became effective. Laws 1903, p. 389, c. 73, is thus retroactive. Holthaus v. Adams County [Neb.] 105 N. W. 632. Since an appeal vacates the judgment appealed from and the cause stands in the appellate court as a pending action without judgment, the provision of § 3 of the Act of April 25, 1904, relating to joinder in suits for the sale of real estate for taxes, is applicable to suits pending at the time of its enactment and brought up on appeal subsequently thereto. 75. Laws of 1881, p. 176, c. 135, is invalid.

An action to recover taxes on omitted property, in Iowa, must be commenced within five years from the time the taxes should have been assessed.[78] The running of the limitation statute cannot be delayed by failure of the county treasurer to give notice or make demand as required by law,[79] nor does the act of the treasurer in assessing omitted property amount to a judgment creating a new cause of action and thus avoiding the limitation statute.[80] In Georgia, neither the statute providing a bar for the state in certain cases, when the citizen would under like circumstances be barred,[81] nor the statute providing an equitable bar arising from lapse of time and laches of complainant,[82] nor the statute of limitations against actions on open accounts or implied contracts,[83] is applicable to a proceeding by the state to enforce payment of delinquent taxes on property not returned in former years; but the "dormant judgment act" of 1887 is held applicable, and a tax lien is held to be barred by failure to issue the tax execution within seven years from the date when such execution may be lawfully issued.[84] The statute was, however, held not to run against the state during the time that the comptroller general was enjoined by the Federal court from issuing any executions for taxes on the property in dispute.[85] In Louisiana, tax liens, privileges, and mortgages securing payment of taxes for years prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1898, lapse, by virtue of the provision of such constitution applicable, in three years after the adoption of such constitution.[86] The state constitution, as so construed, is held not to impair the obligation of contracts.[87]

Notice.—In tax lien foreclosure proceedings, due notice must be given persons interested[88] in the manner required by law. Thus, notices of delinquency, and the summons, writ, or other process, must be in the proper form,[89] and must be duly published[90] or otherwise served.[91]

88. Publication of process directed to "H. E. Everts" held insufficient to support tax judgment against Henry E. Everts, a nonresident, known by the tax attorney to be owner. Evarts v. Missouri Lumber & Min. Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 372. Where at the time of tax proceedings the land in question was occupied by the owner as a homestead, a judgment and sale were void where service of process was on unknown owners by publication and the true owner did not appear. Crosby v. Terry [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 652. In a proceeding by the holder of a certificate of delinquency, under the Washington statute, to foreclose, notice need be given only to the owner described in the certificate. That persons in possession and claiming to be owners were not notified, held immaterial. Rowland v. Eskland [Wash.] 82 P. 599. Where the owner's name was omitted from the summons in a tax foreclosure proceeding, and the names of strangers inserted, and neither the owner nor his grantees had any actual notice of the proceeding, the court had no jurisdiction and the tax deed pursuant to such proceeding was void. Statement held sufficient though no dollar mark or decimal point was used, they being indicated at the head of the column. Salisbury v. Stenmoe [Minn.] 105 N. W. 416. A material variance between

Parties.—Suit, on behalf of the state or municipality, must be brought by the proper officer.[92] A mortgagee of real property is not a necessary party to an action against the owner of the fee to foreclose a tax lien.[93]

Pleading.[94]—In a suit to foreclose a tax lien, a complaint alleging that certain defendants owned the premises in fee simple, and that other defendants had or claimed some interest therein subordinate to the tax lien, is not objectionable, as to the defendants first named, as precluding any interest in the other defendants.[95] The complaint need not set out the assessment rolls, ordinances and proceedings, which are matters of public record.[96] A city in a suit to collect taxes is required to allege and prove facts showing prima facie a valid levy and assessment and that the delinquent list and the notice for judgment and order of sale deprives the court of jurisdiction to proceed. Where notice gave description of property as located in "Herman & Krutz's Roseland Park Addition," and list as located in "Sherman & Krutz's," etc., the variance was fatal. Smythe v. In a proceeding to foreclose liens embraced in a certificate of delinquency issued 5 years after the date of delinquency, under Laws 1901, c. 178, § 3, a notice by publication to the person or persons appearing as the owner or owners upon the treasurer's rolls at the time the certificate is issued is sufficient, where the notice also runs to every person, firm, or corporation, known or unknown, having or claiming any interest in the premises. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. v. Alutz, 38 Wash. 8, 80 P. 192. A citation or notice to a nonresident in a tax foreclosure proceeding, not complying with Gen. Laws 1897, c. 103, § 15, cannot support a judgment for taxes. Garvey v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 786, 88 S. W. 873. Though "E. Coulon" was used in assessment, summons to "Emil Coulon" was sufficient. Stoll v. Griffith [Wash.] 82 P. 1025. An alias writ was served within 5 years after the filing of the first, but not within 5 years after filing of the claim. The second writ was invalid. City of Philadelphia v. 96. Motion to make more definite properly denied. City of Port Townsend v. Trumbull [Wash.] 82 P. 715.

the taxes were due and unpaid.[97] In Michigan a petition for sale of land for taxes is sufficient if substantially in the statutory form.[98] It should properly describe the lands to be sold.[99]

Evidence.[1]—It will be presumed that taxing officials have performed the duties prescribed by law,[2] and that an assessment was regularly made pursuant to a valid law.[3] The admissibility[4] and effect[5] of records are treated in the notes.

Judgment.[6]—If the court is without jurisdiction of a tax proceeding its decree is subject to collateral attack,[7] but if the court had jurisdiction the judgment cannot be collaterally attacked by one who was a defendant in that suit, and who was properly brought in by personal service or by publication,[8] nor can the title of a purchaser under such a judgment be defeated by showing that the taxes for which the judgment was rendered had been paid before institution of the suit, before rendition of judgment, or before sale.[9] Suppression of the fact that taxes had been paid is not such fraud in the procurement of the tax judgment as to render the same void, as against an innocent purchaser at the sale.[10] Objections which should have been raised in the foreclosure proceedings cannot be made the basis of collateral attack.[11] Decisions regarding default judgments,[12] the form of the decree,[13] and the time of entry,[14] are given in the notes.

2. Presumed, in action to collect taxes, that delinquent lists were properly returned and certified, and that assessment was equalized by supervisors. Wallapai Mining & Development Co. v. Territory [Ariz.] 84 P. 85.

3. It will be presumed that an assessment was regularly made under a valid ordinance, and not under a subsequent void ordinance. Woblford v. Escondido [Cal. App.] 84 P. 56.

4. That assessment rolls show payment of taxes does not affect the admissibility or effect of the same as evidence when it is shown that the entry is void and of no effect because made pursuant to an invalid compromise settlement of the taxes. City of Houston v. Stewart [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 49.

5. Under Houston charter, assessment rolls, or a statement made therefrom, signed and certified by the city assessor and collector, make a prima facie case in a suit to collect taxes. City of Houston v. Stewart [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 49.

6. See 4 C. L. 1638, n. 97.

7. Mayot v. Auditor General [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 279, 104 N. W. 19. When county court has no jurisdiction to order a sale, the judgment for taxes is not conclusive evidence of the validity of the sale. Glos v. Collins, 110 Ill. App. 121.

8, 9, 10. Evarts v. Missouri Lumber & Min. Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 372.

11. Where the record shows a tax to be an apparent lien on land sold, the objection that the land is not in fact bound must be raised in the foreclosure proceedings, the judgment of foreclosure cannot be collaterally attacked on that ground. Property was assessed to the record owner, who thereafter conveyed an undivided half interest and paid half the taxes assessed. This was not notice of his conveyance, since he had a right to pay one-half. The remaining half became a lien on the land, the record not showing a case of partition between tenants whereby taxes become a lien only on the parts awarded each tenant. Moyer v. Foss [Wash.] 83 P. 12.

12. A person against whose property a default decree upon constructive service has been rendered under Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, §§ 10644-10691, is not entitled as a matter of right to have the same opened up after the term, either under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 82, or under the general equity powers of the court. State v. Several Parcels of Land [Neb.] 106 N. W. 663. An attorney who appeared voluntarily for defendants in default in a proceeding under the "Scavenger Act" may be disregarded and a default entered against each defendant. Several Tracts of Land v. State [Neb.] 106 N. W. 665.

13. Failure of judgment in tax foreclosure proceeding to contain a direction to the clerk to make out and enter an order of sale held not to invalidate it, since the statute does not prescribe the form of such judgment. Warner v. Miner [Wash.] 82 P. 1033. Where petition for taxes named defendant properly, as did order of publication of summons and proof thereof, the fact that the judgment and deed gave a wrong middle initial did not render the proceedings void and subject to collateral attack by one who bought from the former owner with knowledge of the tax title. Morrison v. Turnbaugh [Mo.] 91 S. W. 152.

14. Decree of sale held to have been made after five days from date of hearing as required by Pub. Acts 1893, p. 384, No. 206, § 66. Wolverine Land Co. v. Davis [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 440, 104 N. W. 648.

Costs.—Liability for costs is statutory.[15]

Appeals.[16]—Appellate procedure is controlled by statute.[17]

(§ 11) D. Interest and penalties.[18]—Taxes do not bear interest unless the statute so provides.[19] When collectible by suit, taxes bear interest from the time suit is brought.[20] The amount of penalties recoverable[21] and the mode of their recovery[22] depend also upon the statute. A back assessment on property omitted in former years cannot include penalties for such years.[23]

§ 12. Sale for taxes. A. Prerequisites to sale.[24]—It is essential to the validity of a tax sale that all the steps necessary to fix liability for the taxes have been duly taken as required by law,[25] and that such taxes are due and unpaid at the time of the sale.[26] Due notice of the sale must be given.[27]

15. In a suit to recover back taxes for the year 1890, in which no recovery was had because of double assessment, the county is liable for costs. Construing Laws 1891, c. 26, § 18, and c. 174, § 75. State v. Alexander [Tenn.] 90 S. W. 20.

16. See 4 C. L. 1639, n. 5.

17. Laws 1903, c. 59, § 4, requires an appeal in a tax foreclosure proceeding to be taken within 30 days after rendition of judgment. A dismissal is a final judgment within the meaning of this section. Harris v. Levy [Wash.] 81 P. 550. An appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate a judgment foreclosing a tax lien is controlled by the general statute of appeals, hence the bond required by Laws 1897, c. 71, § 104, as amended by Laws 1903, c. 59, § 4, in case of appeal from a judgment of foreclosure, need not be filed. Owen v. Owen [Wash.] 84 P. 606.

19. Henderson Bridge Co. v. Com., 27 Ky. L. R. 1104, 87 S. W. 1088. No interest on taxes in Georgia prior to act Nov. 11, 1889. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright [Ga.] 53 S. E. 251. No interest is recoverable on the 20% penalty allowed in the recovery of back taxes by a revenue officer, under Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4263, 4267. Licking Valley Bldg. Ass'n No. 3 v. Com. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 682.

20. Henderson Bridge Co. v. Com., 27 Ky. L. R. 1104, 87 S. W. 1088. In an action to recover an unpaid organization tax from a corporation, only 6% interest on the amount recovered from the date of filing the petition may be had. Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4170, 4174, allowing 10% from the time taxes on omitted property were due does not apply. Licking Valley Bldg. Ass'n No. 3 v. Com. [Ky.] 89 S. W. 682.

21. A county tax on a corporation franchise bears the 6% penalty imposed by Ky. St. 1903, § 4143. Henderson Bridge Co. v. Com., 27 Ky. L. R. 1104, 87 S. W. 1088. Acts 1902, p. 134, c. 80, § 10, fixes the penalty for nonpayment of privilege taxes as 10% of the amount, and the levee board cannot change the amount by order. S. Zemurray & Co. v. Bouldin [Miss.] 40 So. 15. The Shreveport city charter (Act No. 158, p. 305, § 14, of 1898), providing a penalty of 2 per cent per month on taxes unpaid from and after November 1 of the current tax year, does not violate Const. 1898, art. 233, since that article leaves the matter of penalties and date of delinquency to the legislature. Victoria Lumber Co. v. Rives [La.] 40 So. 382.

22. The penalty fixed by Acts 1902, c. 80, § 10, for nonpayment of a privilege tax, can be exacted only by judgment of a court from one convicted of a default. The tax collector cannot exact it. S. Zemurray & Co. v. Bouldin [Miss.] 40 So. 15.

23. Back taxes for 3 years assessed in 1903 by supplemental roll do not become delinquent until after the date of delinquency of the 1903 taxes. Victoria Lumber Co. v. Rives [La.] 40 So. 382.

24. See 4 C. L. 1639.

25. See discussion of such steps in preceding sections. It is essential to the validity of a sale that a tax was assessed by the proper authorities, was due for one whole year, and remained unpaid at the time of the sale. If several taxes were assessed, it is sufficient if only one was legally made and remained unpaid. Trexler v. Africa, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 385.

26. A sale for taxes which have in fact been paid by the owner is void. Glos v. Shedd, 218 Ill. 209, 75 N. E. 887. A tax sale made in enforcement of taxes part of which have been paid is void. Such sale cannot be aided by the prescription law. Const. 1898, art. 233. Harris v. Deblieux [La.] 38 So. 946. Payment of all taxes had been made in one parish, but portion of tract also assessed in another parish was sold for nonpayment of taxes in such parish. The sale was wholly void. Booksh v. A. Wilbert Sons Lumber & Shingle Co. [La.] 39 So. 9. In North Dakota the auditor may include in the annual sale for delinquent taxes not only unpaid taxes for the next preceding year, but also for any preceding year, if for any reason the lands charged therewith have not been previously sold. Scott & Barrett Mercantile Co. v. Nelson County [N. D.] 104 N. W. 528. A tax sale for an excessive amount, as for all the taxes assessed when a part thereof has been paid, is void. Dickinson v. Arkansas City Imp. Co. [Ark.] 92 S. W. 21.

27. Where paraphernal property of a married woman, duly recorded, was assessed in the name of the husband, and sold under such assessment without notice to the wife or husband, the sale was a nullity. Harris v. Deblieux [La.] 38 So. 946. Where names of state and county were omitted in description of land in notice to owners, the notice was insufficient and the sale invalid. Tucker v.

(§ 12) B. Conduct of sale.[28]—Statutes regulating tax sales must be strictly followed.[29] The sale should be at the place[30] and time[31] required by law. Only so much land should be sold as is necessary to realize the amount due,[32] but when the whole lot or tract assessed has been sold, it will be presumed that a sale of it was necessary,[33] and it is not necessary for the officer making the sale to certify in his return that it was necessary to sell the whole, or that he offered for sale a quantity less than the whole.[34] Tracts separately assessed should be separately sold.[35] While immediate payment in full is usually required, a slight delay in payment is not a matter of which the owner can complain.[36] That the bidder and the person to whom the certificate was issued were different persons does not invalidate a sale where it appears that both acted for the same principal.[37] An otherwise valid tax sale is not rendered invalid by an incorrect description in the tax deed. The deed is subject to correction.[38] To complete a purchaser's title, in Pennsylvania, when his bid exceeds the taxes and costs, he must give bond for payment of the surplus,[39] but where a statement made to the purchaser shows no surplus, his title is not lost by failure to enter such bond.[40] The mere fact that a purchaser paid by draft will not defeat his title where his deed recites payment of the bid and it is not shown that the amount was not received by the treasurer.[41]

(§ 12) C. Return of sale and confirmation thereof.[42]—The return of the sale should properly describe the property[43] and designate the purchaser,[44] and contain the other recitals required by law.[45] An order overruling a motion to deny

Van Winkle [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 658, 105 N. W. 607. Notice served on record owners of land being fatally defective, a valid notice to one owning a timber interest in the land is not sufficient to entitle a purchaser at the tax sale to possession. Id. Though the publication of notice of a tax sale can be proved only by the affidavit required by law, yet the fact that such affidavit was made and filed as required by law may be proved by parol. Parol evidence competent to prove Mills' Ann. St. § 3885 was complied with. Herr v. Graden, 33 Colo. 527, 81 P. 242. A notice of a tax sale published in a newspaper, legally designated and otherwise qualified to make such publication, is not illegal because of failure of the owner or manager to file with the county auditor an affidavit setting forth its qualifications as required by Laws 1890, c. 120, § 2. Blakemore v. Cooper [N. D.] 106 N. W. 566. Evidence insufficient to prove that property was not properly described in notice of tax sale. Id. The statutory provisions granting the landowner the right to object to the confirmation of sale, and defining the grounds of objection, afford him an opportunity to have the question of the validity of the tax determined before he is deprived of his property, but he may be required to wait until confirmation is applied for to litigate that question. 43. It is not essential to the validity of a tax deed that the same description of the land used in the delinquent list should be used in the return of the sale. Duerr v. Snodgrass [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 531. All that is required in either is a description sufficient to identify the land and give notice to the owner of the assessment or sale. Id.

44. Word "do" used for "ditto," when placed under name of purchaser and in same column, is sufficient to designate the purchaser in a return of a sale. Duerr v. Snodgrass [W Va.] 52 S. E. 531.

45. Failure of tax collector in district to confirmation of a judicial sale and to set aside the sale is not final or appealable.[46] A decree confirming a tax title cuts off all inquiry as to the regularity and validity of the sale.[47] A finding by the court in a proceeding to confirm a tax title that petitioner paid the taxes for the three years preceeding the confirmation is final and conclusive, in the absence of proof of fraud practiced on the court.[48]

§ 13. Redemption.[49]—The owners of land, or persons having an interest therein, are usually given a right to redeem from tax sales,[50] the manner of claiming and exercising the right,[51] and the time within which it must be exercised,[52] depending upon the statute.

One seeking to redeem has the burden of proving such an interest in the land as will entitle him to that right.[53] Paper title is not indispensable.[54] One who holds under a donation deed and who has paid taxes for a number of years has a lien on the land constituting an interest therein such as entitles him to redeem.[55] One in possession under a claim of right by virtue of a deed may redeem from a tax sale though he does not prove that title passed by the deed.[56] The homestead interest of a minor is sufficient to entitle him to redeem the fee.[57] In a suit by the state to sell land as forfeited in the name of a certain owner, wherein the owner seeks to redeem and an adverse claimant resists redemption, the burden is upon such adverse claimant to prove his contention that the land in question was a part of an earlier grant of land to him from the state.[58]

One seeking to redeem must reimburse the purchaser at the sale,[59] but a tender of the amount due may be excused if it has previously been offered.[60] Where there is no tender of taxes and the value of improvements, the one seeking to redeem is not entitled to any rents until the holder under the tax sale has filed an answer state with certainty, in his report to the recorder of deeds, the amount of taxes due on property sold, the cost of sale, or the amount for which sold, invalidates a tax deed issued under the sale. Kann v. King, 25 App. D. C. 182. A certified tax sale list which fails to show specifically and definitely the amount of each item of taxes, penalties, and costs, as required, among other things, by Acts 1899, p. 1136, c. 435, § 55, does not divest the owner's title and vest it in the state or a vendee of the state. 50. Const. art. 9, § 3, which grants the owner of real estate sold for nonpayment of taxes or assessments the right of redemption for two years from the date of the sale is self-executing, and a junior lien holder is not entitled to a decree for sale of such property without the right of redemption. City of Lincoln v. Lincoln St. R. Co. [Neb.] 106 N. W. 317.

51. No written application for redemption is necessary under Code 1896, § 4091. The right may be claimed by letter to the judge of probate inclosing the proper amount. Roach v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 685. Where tax sale was confirmed in 1895, owner could not, under existing law, redeem by paying taxes to the commissioner who made the sale. Gavin v. Ashworth [Ark.] 91 S. W. 303.

52. One seeking to redeem from a foreclosure sale based on a tax lien must bring his action therefor within two years from the date of the tax sale. Clifford v. Thun [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1052.

60. A tender is excused in a suit to redeem where plaintiff proves that he offered defendant, by his agent, the sum which would be due at the expiration of the period of redemption. Hillis v. O'Keefe [Mass.] 75 N. E. 147.

denying the right to redeem.[61] Though taxes and the cash value of improvements must be paid by one seeking to redeem, it is error for the court to order a sale of the land to pay the amount ascertained to be due, and to fix a time within which the redemption must be made.[62] One seeking to redeem in a case where no proper notice was given of the expiration of the period of redemption need not show payment of the taxes,[63] but one not entitled to such notice cannot attack a tax deed on the ground of want of it.[64]

The right of a redemptioner who has taken the steps required by law is not affected by a delay of the tax official in issuing the certificate of redemption.[65] A purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale who redeems the land purchased from tax sales is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the state as against a judgment creditor of the mortgagor who redeems from foreclosure.[66]

Mandamus lies to compel issuance of a warrant to the holder of a tax title for money paid in for redemption.[67]

Notice of the expiration of the period of redemption[68] must usually be given before the purchaser at the sale is entitled to a deed[69] or to possession,[70] or before the owner's equity of redemption can be foreclosed.[71] Statutory requirements control as to the length of the notice,[72] the contents thereof,[73] the manner of service,[74]

67. Under Laws 1899, p. 224, c. 208, amending Gen. St. 1894, § 1605, upon presentation of a certificate of tax sale, or an assignment thereof, a county auditor must issue a warrant to the holder for money paid in for redemption. That a warrant had been issued wrongfully to the original purchaser, who had assigned, is no defense to a mandamus proceeding to compel issuance of a warrant to the assignee. State v. Brasie [Minn.] 104 N. W. 962.

68. See 4 C. L. 1647.

69. Laws 1890, c. 132, which required service of notice to terminate right of redemption, is still in force as to sales made under that statute, and deeds issued without such notice are void. Blakemore v. Cooper [N. D.] 106 N. W. 566.

70. A notice to redeem is a condition precedent to the right to writ of assistance to gain possession of land under a tax deed. See Pub. Acts 1897, p. 294, No. 229. Williams v. Olson [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 560, 104 N. W. 1101.

71. The Rochester city charter requires a notice to be served upon the owner before his equity of redemption can be foreclosed. Curative act 1903 (Laws 1903, c. 522) construed, and held that such notice was not dispensed with as a condition precedent to foreclosure as provided for by the act. City of Rochester v. Fourteenth Ward Co-op. Bldg. Lot Ass'n [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 692.

72. Rev. St. 1899, § 1895, prior to the 1901 amendment, required notice of the expiration of the period of redemption at least 3 months before it expired. Held a notice dated less than one month before the expiration of such period, service of which is accepted on the last day thereof, is insufficient to warrant execution of deed. Matthews v. Nefsy, 13 Wyo. 458, 81 P. 305.

73. Where lots are separately described and sold, the notice of the sale must contain separate descriptions of each lot and the amount paid for each. Jackson v. Mason [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 1038, 106 N. W. 1112. Where notice of sale described lands as 944 acres as per plat instead of 9.44 acres, but subdivision was given and plat and county records referred to, the description was not fatally defective. Id. A notice to redeem by a purchaser who has received a single tax deed for taxes for several years need not show the amount of taxes for each year. Williams v. Olson [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 560, 104 N. W. 1101. The fact that such notice is addressed to persons named, describing them as owners, does not invalidate it. Id.

74. Statutes requiring holders of tax certificates to serve on the person in possession, and the one in whose name property is assessed, a notice of the sale and proceedings thereunder, and to file an affidavit concerning the service of such notice, is mandatory. Code § 1441. Grimes v. Ellyson [Iowa] 105 N. W. 418. The record as made up by the filing of the affidavit of service cannot be aided by evidence aliunde. Id. A sheriff may serve a notice to redeem by a deputy. Williams v. Olson [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 560, 104 N. W. 1101. Sheriff's return of service of notice to redeem is not conclusive. If denied, proper service must be proved by one seeking possession of land sold for taxes, and the owner may, in a proceeding by him, show that no proper service was made. Id.

and the persons by whom[75] and to whom[76] notice must be given. Notice is not essential when not possible.[77]

§ 14. Tax titles. A. Who may acquire.[78]—Deeds are usually issued to the purchaser at the sale or his heirs or assigns.[79] One who is under the obligation to pay taxes cannot, directly or indirectly, purchase at the sale, caused by his own default, and thereby acquire title to the property sold.[80] Thus, the purchase of the property by a life tenant, whose duty it is to pay the taxes, amounts in law only to a payment of the taxes.[81] As a general rule, if one co-tenant acquires title to the common property at a tax sale, the title so acquired inures to the benefit of the other co-tenants,[82] but this rule has no application where the alleged co-tenant, who purchases, claims adversely to the others at the time of the sale.[83] A married woman is not by reason of her relation to her husband prohibited from purchasing tax titles to property which he holds under a lease from a third person.[84] One who fraudulently has land assessed to himself, allows the taxes to become delinquent, and procures another to purchase for him at the tax sale, obtains no title, the land having also been assessed to the true owner who has regularly paid the taxes when due.[85] A purchaser at a tax sale of an entire tract of land, owned in separate parcels by himself and two others, one of whom, at the time of the purchase, contributes for that purpose more than the proportion which his land bears to the whole tract, with the understanding and agreement that, as to the parts owned by the purchaser and the party so contributing, the purchase shall operate as a redemption, acquires no title to the land of the party so contributing as against him.[86] One against whom taxes on land have been assessed and who has paid the same may nevertheless acquire a tax title under a sale of such land for taxes, and may claim the land by adverse possession thereunder.[87]

(§ 14) B. Rights and estate acquired by purchaser at sale.[88]—The purchaser at the sale acquires only the interest sold[89] and owned by the parties to the action for the taxes at the time of the decree of sale.[90] The sale itself transfers

75. Under Code § 1441, requiring the "holder of a certificate" to issue the redemption notice, where the purchaser at the sale assigned to a nonresident, and the purchaser's name was used in perfecting the title, and he was the party interested, notice in the name of the nonresident "holder" complied with the law. Nugent v. Cook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 421.

76. Under Code § 1441, notice must be served on the person in possession, though the property is assessed and taxed as "unknown." Grimes v. Ellyson [Iowa] 105 N. W. 418. Service on the real owner is not alone sufficient. Id. Notice need not be served on the personal representative of the person to whom the land was assessed, such person having died before expiration of the redemption period. Nugent v. Cook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 421. An assessment to "A. et al" is in legal effect an assessment to unknown owners (Berg v. Van Nest [Minn.] 106 N. W. 255), and the sheriff need not search the records for the true owner. If the lands are vacant and unoccupied, he may serve the notice on unknown owners by publication (Id.).

77. Where person, to whom land sold for taxes was assessed, had died, no publication of notice was necessary. Nugent v. Cook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 421.

78. See 4 C. L. 1648.

79. Executors are the "assigns" of their testators within the meaning of Laws 1891, c. 100, § 110, which authorizes the issuance of a tax deed to "the purchaser, his heirs or assigns." Blakemore v. Cooper [N. D.] 106 N. W. 566.

80. See 4 C. L. 1648, n. 97.

Held not within rule: Defendants orally agreed to buy certain lands, subject to taxes, but failed to keep their agreement. Held they did not become obligated to pay the taxes and hence could acquire the state's tax title. Ball v. Harpham [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 303, 104 N. W. 353.

89. Where a sale is of the interest of a delinquent life tenant only, and the deed mentions only his interest, such deed does not convey the interest of the remaindermen. Smith v. Proctor, 139 N. C. 314, 51 S. E. 889.

90. A decree in a personal action to enforce payment of levee taxes binds only the

to the purchaser the lien of the state for taxes,[91] which is paramount to all other liens,[92] but perfect title cannot be acquired until the period of redemption has expired, due notice thereof having been given.[93] Though under the laws of Georgia the officer making a tax sale executes a tax deed to the purchaser before the time for redemption has lapsed, yet the title acquired by such purchaser is not a perfect fee simple title, but an inchoate or defeasible title subject to the right of the owner to redeem within the time prescribed by the statute.[94] Although a tax deed issued before the time for redemption has expired, as allowed by law, is recorded, and contains no reference to the right of redemption, the public laws giving such right are sufficient notice thereof to persons dealing with the title, and are also notice of the nature of the title conveyed by the tax deed.[95] Thus, where a tax deed of wild land was recorded, but the owner redeemed and received the tax deed but did not take a reconveyance, and the purchaser at the tax sale conveyed to a third person after expiration of the period of redemption, such third person having no actual notice of the redemption by the owner, it was held that the owner's title was superior to that of the grantee of the purchaser at the sale.[96]

The title conveyed under a tax sale is not derivative but a new title, and the purchaser, if his deed is valid, takes free from any incumbrance, claims, or equities connected with the prior title.[97] A judgment for taxes against the apparent owner conveys a good title to the purchaser at the tax sale as against the true owner whose deed is not recorded,[98] but this rule has no application where there is no record title and no apparent owner other than the true owner in possession.[99] Thus, a suit against the owner in the name shown by the record gives the court jurisdiction regardless of a subsequent remarriage and change of name of such owner.[1] Where a judgment for delinquent taxes is regular on its face, and recites due service on unknown owners, a vendee of the purchaser at the sale, who purchases in good faith without notice of any irregularity, will be protected in his title as against a collateral attack, though service on unknown heirs was in fact insufficient.[2]

The doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to sales of land for taxes,[3] and the lien of a purchaser at a sale is not affected by the fact that at the time of the sale parties thereto and their privies, and a sale thereunder passes only such title as the parties thereto had at the time of such decree and sale. Kirby's Dig. § 6321. Hence, mere proof of conveyance pursuant to such sale, without proof of title in the parties to the action is not sufficient to support ejectment. Wilson & Beall v. Gaylord [Ark.] 92 S. W. 26.

Under Laws 1880, c. 14, the city of Rochester does not acquire title to lands bought in by it at tax sale until the owner's equity of redemption has been foreclosed, and until that time taxes may be assessed against the owner. 98. The tax collector need only look to the record to see who is the owner of the property. Wood v. Smith [Mo.] 91 S. W. 85. A purchaser at a tax sale, under a judgment for taxes, where the record owner is made the party defendant, acquires good title as against the holder of an unrecorded deed from such apparent owner. Evarts v. Missouri Lumber & Mining Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 372. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 9303, a suit for taxes against the record owner is sufficient. Schnitger v. Rankin [Mo.] 91 S. W. 122.

99. Homesteader showed deed to assessor, who copied description wrong and assessed to record owner, but true owner paid taxes. True owner was not divested of title by sale. Wood v. Smith [Mo.] 91 S. W. 85.

1. Schnitger v. Rankin [Mo.] 91 S. W. 122. Record showed title in name of married woman, but at time of suit she had remarried. Substituted service was had and her husband was not joined. Held judgment against such record owner was not invalid, the record of the proceeding not showing on its face that she was married. Id.

2. Service on unknown heirs in suit for delinquent taxes must be by publication for 8 weeks under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1236. Williams v. Young [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 940.

a suit is pending to foreclose and extinguish the title of the owner, to which suit the purchaser is not a party.[4]

A tax sale, in the absence of special legislation to the contrary, is subject to the rule caveat emptor,[5] and the purchaser has no recourse in case of eviction against the municipality under the authority of which the sale has been made, either for damages or reimbursement.[6] His only remedy is the right to reimbursement by the owner in case the latter succeeds in having the sale set aside.[7]

The Mississippi statute authorizing the holder of a tax title to have the same confirmed by filing a bill against all persons interested, known or unknown, does not authorize a suit by the holder of an admittedly void deed to fix a lien on the land for money paid at the sale and subsequently.[8] A purchaser of land at a tax sale cannot avail himself of the ex parte remedy provided by statute in North Dakota to enjoin foreclosure of a mortgage on the ground that the mortgage has become barred by limitations.[9]

(§ 14) C. Tax deeds.[10]—The duty of the official designated by law to execute a tax deed upon expiration of the period of redemption is a ministerial one enforceable by mandamus.[11] To convey title, a tax deed must sufficiently describe the land sold,[12] must contain the recitals, as to the preliminary tax proceedings, 11. Duty of judge of probate under Code 1896, § 4074, is ministerial. Roach v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 685. Such officer cannot raise objections to the regularity of the tax proceedings when a deed is sought by the purchaser at the sale after the lapse of the required time. Id. In a mandamus proceeding to compel execution of a deed, a person claimed by the tax official to have redeemed is not a necessary party. The issue of redemption can be litigated between the purchaser and the official. Id.

12. Vital defects or omissions in the description of a tax deed cannot be remedied or supplied by parol evidence. Gibbs v. Hall [Miss.] 38 So. 369. A material variance between the description in the deed and that in the assessment roll under which the sale was made renders the deed void. Id. Tax deed containing description other than that given in assessment roll did not convey title. Matthews v. Nefsy, 13 Wyo. 458, 81 P. 305. Though lots are separately assessed and sold, they may be included in one deed. Jackson v. Mason [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 1038, 106 N. W. 1112. Tax deed describing property as "4,520 acres in 13, range 7, W. E. L. S." is wholly ineffective to pass title to any land in the township. Powers v. Sawyer [Me.] 62 A. 349. Tax deed describing property as "4,520 acres in 13, range 7, W. E. L. S." conveys no title and casts no cloud on the title of a tenant in common who seeks partition of the township either by bill in equity or by petition. Id. Description in tax deed as "east part of southeast quarter of section 30, 5 N. 4 E., containing 60 30-100," held too uncertain to pass title. Covington v. Berry [Ark.] 88 S. W. 1005. Description in deed as "E. pt. S. E. ¼ Sec. 30 5 N. 4 E., containing 63 acres," held insufficient and deed void. Id. Sale and deed void when description was "part E. ½ N. E. ¼ sec. 32 T. 12 S. R. 1 W." Dickinson v. Arkansas City Imp. Co. [Ark.] 92 S. W. 21. The abbreviation "S. E. 4" used in description in tax deed will be interpreted as meaning "southeast quarter" when it is explicitly used in another part of the deed as the equivalent of such words. Kennedy v. Scott [Kan.] 83 P. 971. In the beginning a tax deed accurately described the tract of land and recited that it was bid off for the county. Subsequent recitals as to the assignment of the certificate and the conveyance referred to the description already given. Description held sufficient. Ham v. Booth [Kan.] 83 P. 24. A tax deed gave a full description of a single city lot, in the recital that it was subject to taxation, and in subsequent recitals as to sale, assignment of certificate and conveyance, merely referred to the description already given. It was held not void for an insufficient description, since it recited that the whole lot was sold, and this was the least quantity bid for the taxes charged against it. Gibson v. Hammerburg [Kan.] 83 P. 23.

required by law,[13] and must be executed in the statutory form.[14] A tax deed which meets these requirements is at least prima facie, and in some states conclusive[15] evidence of the regularity of the proceedings on which it is based,[16] and is prima

13. Unless the sale was made under a special law, the deed need not recite why the sale was held on the day named. Clarke v. Tilden [Kan.] 84 P. 139. Failure of tax deed to several tracts to show the separate amount for which each tract was conveyed renders the deed void on its face. Manker v. Peck [Kan.] 81 P. 171. Deed which gave only aggregate of amounts paid for several tracts and erroneously gave a total less than the true amount was void. Id. A tax deed is not void for failing to give the residence of the assignee of the certificate of sale, where such assignee is a foreign corporation, and the recital states that it is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of a designated state. Ham v. Booth [Kan.] 83 P. 24. If under the provisions of any statute the sale upon which a tax deed is based may have been legally made upon the day named in the deed, the deed will not be void on its face, if otherwise regular. Recitals of deed held to indicate an October sale under Gen. St. 1901, § 7657. Clarke v. Tilden [Kan.] 84 P. 139. Where a tax deed has been of record for more than five years, it will not be held void because of the omission of express recitals required by the statute, if the substance of such omitted recitals can be supplied by inferences fairly to be drawn from statements elsewhere made in the deed, by giving to the language employed a liberal interpretation to that end. Penrose v. Cooper [Kan.] 84 P. 115, rvg. 81 P. 489. Thus, in the case of a deed based on a certificate assigned by the county, and reciting that the property conveyed was bid off by the county treasurer, the omission of express recitals of the amount for which it was bid off, and that it was bid off for the county, may be supplied from statements that the property could not be sold for the amount against it, and that a tax sale certificate was issued by the county treasurer and assigned by the county clerk upon payment of an amount equal to the cost of redemption. Id. The omission of such a deed, which includes several distinct tracts, to recite that such tracts were offered for sale separately for the amount due against each, respectively, may be supplied by statements that the property was exposed to sale in conformity to the statute and that each tract could not be sold for the amount against it. Id. Where defendant in ejectment claims under a tax sale, his title must fail where there is nothing in the return of the sale or the deeds of the commissioners to identify the land as having been sold for taxes. Canole v. Allen, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 244. A tax deed without the judgment and precept upon which it is based is not sufficient proof of paramount title. Blair v. Johnson, 215 Ill. 552, 74 N. E. 747. Under Pol. Code §§ 3897, 3898, a deed to a purchaser from the state of lands acquired by the state for taxes is not required by law to recite facts showing how the state acquired title, and hence is not evidence of the vesting of the title of the original owner in the state, and the conveyance of that title to the state's grantee. County Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Jack [Cal.] 83 P. 705.

14. A substantial compliance with the form prescribed by statute for the execution of tax deeds is sufficient. Ham v. Booth [Kan.] 83 P. 24. Where a deed recites that it is executed pursuant to statutory authority, and that the official seal of the county is affixed, and the acknowledgment shows that its execution was an official act of the county clerk, the fact that the words of the seal recite that it is the seal of the county clerk does not make the deed void on its face because not bearing the county seal. Clarke v. Tilden [Kan.] 84 P. 139.

15. By Tax Law § 131, a tax deed is conclusive evidence that the sale and all proceedings prior thereto, from and including the assessment were regular, and only proof of a jurisdictional defect will defeat a title so shown. Culnane v. Dixon, 94 N. Y. S. 1093.

16. In Arkansas the state land commissioner's deed of land forfeited for taxes is prima facie evidence that all necessary preliminary steps were taken and these steps need not be recited in the deed. Cracraft v. Meyers [Ark.] 88 S. W. 1027. A donation deed from the state, and a copy of a certificate of improvement held prima facie proof of forfeiture to the state by regular proceedings. Waterman v. Irby [Ark.] 89 S. W. 844. In Colorado a county treasurer's deed to a purchaser of a certificate of sale to the county is prima facie evidence of facts prior to and at the time of the sale, but not of acts which a cash purchaser is required to perform after the sale and as a condition precedent to his right to a deed. Cornahan v. Sieber Cattle Co. [Colo.] 82 P. 592. A tax deed is at least prima facie evidence that the grantee named therein was the purchaser or his successor in interest. Whether § 1444, which makes deed conclusive on this point, is constitutional, not decided. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Wall [Iowa] 106 N. W. 160. A tax deed which follows the form prescribed by statute is sufficient and is prima facie evidence that the tax proceedings were regular and that every step necessary to the validity of the deed was taken. Gibson v. Hammerburg [Kan.] 83 P. 23. A duly recorded tax deed to the state, made pursuant to Act No. 85, p. 130, of 1888, and showing on its face that all the statutory requirements have been observed, must be received as prima facie evidence of a valid sale. Iberia Cypress Co. v. Thorgeson [La.] 40 So. 682. The Michigan statutes, making an auditor's deed to unredeemed tax lands prima facie proof of the regularity of proceedings, are held not to have been repealed by the legislation of 1881 and 1882. Hoffman v. H. M. Loud & Sons' Lumber Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 356, 104 N. W. 424. A properly executed and acknowledged tax deed is prima facie evidence that the necessary preceding steps in the tax proceedings were duly taken, and such deed cannot be defeated unless it is pleaded and proved that some essential act was omitted.

facie evidence of title in the holder.[17] Statutes which so provide are valid,[18] and a statute changing the rule cannot be made retroactive.[19] The common law rule of evidence must be applied to all tax conveyances when the statute has failed to prescribe any other.[20]

A tax deed issued under a sale for taxes for the year 1860, in one of the Confederate states, is void, for the reason that payment by the purchaser of taxes for two years following the sale was a condition precedent to the obtaining of a deed, and such taxes, being in aid of the Confederate government, were illegal.[21] It will be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the holder of the deed actually paid such taxes,[22] and since they were levied by a de facto government, they cannot be treated as having never been paid merely because of their illegality.[23]

(§ 14) D. Remedies of original owner.[24]—The remedies usually pursued are actions at law to recover the property sold or suits in equity to cancel the tax sale and deed or to remove clouds from title.[25] One bringing such action or suit must show himself free from laches,[26] and must allege and prove title in himself.[27] The grounds of invalidity of the taxes relied on must also be sufficiently alleged and proved.[28] Where grounds for cancellation are specified by statute, a statutory

A mere irregularity will not defeat the deed. O'Keefe v. Dillenbeck [Okl.] 83 P. 540. Where treasurer's deed recited that tax sale was conducted in the manner provided by law, this was sufficient to overcome a return made by him, though not required, reciting a sale of 160 acres in bulk instead of in 40 acre tracts. Stoll v. Griffith [Wash.] 82 P. 1025. No defect in a sheriff's affidavit to a list of sales of land for taxes will invalidate a tax deed made under Code 1899, c. 31. Day v. Fay [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 1013. Where defendant in ejectment relied on tax deeds, the fact that she set out in her answer all the steps required for the validity of her deed did not affect the presumption of validity created by Rev. St. 1898, § 1176, so as to require proof of the regularity of the proceedings as a condition precedent to the introduction of her deeds in evidence. Preston v. Thayer [Wis.] 106 N. W. 672.

17. Tax deed made prima facie case for plaintiff in ejectment. Rowland v. Eskland [Wash.] 82 P. 599. A purchaser at a tax sale has equitable title after confirmation of the sale with right to a deed, hence the fact that deed was issued by wrong person is immaterial in an ejectment suit by the owner. Gavin v. Ashworth [Ark.] 91 S. W. 303. A tax deed, executed when Rev. St. 1881, § 6480, was in force, is prima facie evidence of the regularity of the sale and prior proceedings and of a valid fee simple title. May v. Dobbins [Ind.] 77 N. E. 353. A tax deed to the state containing the proper and necessary recitals is prima facie evidence of absolute title in the state, which would cut off the lien of a prior mortgage, and the mortgagee cannot question the title of a grantee of the state on the ground that such grantee never completed the purchase from the state. Erie County Sav. Bank v. Clyde, 94 N. Y. S. 737.

18. It is competent for the legislature to change the common law rule by making a tax deed prima facie evidence of the regularity of proceedings of the officials and acts of the purchaser necessary to warrant issuance of a deed. Carnahan v. Sieber Cattle Co. [Colo.] 82 P. 592. It is competent for the legislature to make a tax deed conclusive evidence that the sale was conducted in the manner required by law. Code § 1444, part 3, is valid, and under it the deed is conclusive evidence that payment was properly made at the sale. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Wall [Iowa] 106 N. W. 160.

19. The assurance held out by the state to purchasers at tax sales under the revenue laws of 1890, as amended in 1891, that the tax certificates and tax deeds would be prima facie evidence of the regularity of tax proceedings, though relating to the remedy, constituted a substantial inducement to the purchase and entered into the contract with the state, so materially affecting its value that it cannot be taken away by subsequent legislation without affecting its value. Blakemore v. Cooper [N. D.] 106 N. W. 566.

24. See 4 C. L. 1650, Cancellation and quieting title.

25. A tax deed issued under a void sale should be cancelled as a cloud on title. Sale on assessment under Madison act (Laws 1888, p. 24, c. 9) is void. Scarborough v. Elmer [Miss.] 40 So. 69.

26. Plaintiffs in suit to cancel tax deed held not barred by laches where heirs of agent for payment of taxes had taken out deed under purchase by agent, and had claimed under deed 9 years, but without notice, and had held possession under such deed only 3 years before commencement of suit. Siers v. Wiseman [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 460.

ground for relief must be made to appear.[29] A sale under a judgment for taxes will be set aside for inadequacy of price, so gross as to shock the moral sense, where a valid judgment and sale divests the title of the owner.[30] A tax deed which has been of record for the limitation period will not be set aside because the consideration named is apparently excessive, if the excess can be accounted for by a liberal construction of the recitals of the deed.[31] Where the validity of a tax sale is attacked in a suit in equity before the deed to the purchaser is executed and recorded, and the regularity of the tax proceedings is put in issue by proper pleadings, the burden is upon the purchaser to show substantial compliance with the statutes.[32] This rule is not changed by the fact that the deed to the purchaser is recorded pending the suit.[33]

A state being a necessary party to a suit to set aside a tax deed in which it is grantee, such suit cannot be maintained in the absence of a statute authorizing suit against the state for that purpose.[34]

27. Allegations and proof of ownership under a deed and possession thereunder held sufficient to support bill to set aside a tax deed. Glos v. Garrett, 219 Ill. 208, 76 N. E. 373. In a suit to set aside a tax deed, proof of possession under claim of ownership by virtue of a quitclaim, at the time of filing the bill, is sufficient. Proof that plaintiff's agents went on the land under a quitclaim deed, fenced it, and put up a "for sale" sign, the same day the bill was filed, held sufficient proof of ownership and possession. Glos v. Davis, 216 Ill. 532, 75 N. E. 208. In Illinois, one in whose name property has been assessed for taxes may object to judgment and sale for taxes without alleging or proving interest in the property. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 218 Ill. 463, 75 N. E. 1021.

28. Allegations of complaint in action to set aside tax sale and deed held insufficient to show that there was no assessment. Scott & Barrett Mercantile Co. v. Nelson County [N. D.] 104 N. W. 528. An allegation in a pleading that a tax collector has certified certain facts gives rise to the presumption that the acts certified to have been done, and a pleading attacking the validity of a sale by the officer must show affirmatively the omission of some essential act. Ky. St. 1903, §§ 3760, 4030. Alexander v. Aud [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1103. Where a tax deed is sought to be set aside on the ground that the vendee therein was the agent of the former owner to pay the taxes on the land conveyed, the burden is on the party seeking to set aside such deed to prove such agency. Day v. Fay [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 1013. Where the state acquires title by a tax sale and failure of the owner of the land to redeem, and plaintiff, in an action of trespass, acquires the state's title, defendant claiming under the former owner and asserting that the tax sale was void because the assessment was against a dead man must prove the death of the person to whom the land was assessed prior to the assessment. Iberia Cypress Co. v. Thorgeson [La.] 40 So. 682.

29. Under Tax Law 1896, c. 908, § 132, which provides for cancellation of tax certificates or conveyances for defects in proceedings affecting the jurisdiction on constitutional grounds, failure of the assessors to sign the verification to the judgment roll is not ground for cancellation. Jackson v. Rowe, 106 App. Div. 65, 94 N. Y. S. 568; Id., 106 App. Div. 614, 94 N. Y. S. 574. Under Gen. Tax Law § 70, providing that no sales shall be set aside after confirmation except where the taxes are paid or the property was exempt where petitioner's attorney asked the county treasurer concerning delinquent taxes for the purpose of bringing suit and was told the taxes had been rejected, there was no estoppel by reason of which petitioners would be entitled to have a decree of sale set aside Bullock v. Auditor General [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 668, 105 N. W. 542. Under Gen. Tax Law § 98, a certificate that no taxes are charged against land, and payment of taxes due at time of presentation of the certificate, prevents a transfer of the property by the auditor general. Held, where the certificate was not presented, and no application made to withhold a conveyance, the certificate did not entitle the owner to redeem, after sale. Id. Under Comp. Laws § 3921, authorizing the auditor general to set aside a tax sale upon presentation to him of a certificate of no taxes charged against the land, such certificate having been given by the proper officer within the time for payment of taxes or redemption, where lands were sold in 1893, remained state tax lands until 1904, were then sold, and relator acquired original title in 1901, and a certificate that no taxes were charged against the land for the preceding 5 years, relator was not entitled to have the sale set aside. Welever v. Auditor General [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 1005, 106 N. W. 736.

30. State v. Elliott [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 122.

31. As by assuming that statutory fees for the issuance and recording of the deed have been included. Kennedy v. Scott [Kan.] 83 P. 971. Where a tax deed states the total payments for subsequent taxes made by the holder of the tax sale certificate, but fails to show the amounts paid for separate years, the amount named in the deed as the consideration will not be deemed excessive if it can be accounted for by any apportionment of such taxes among the several years that is consistent with the recitals of the deed. Id.

The owner of land who seeks relief from a tax sale or deed on the ground of irregularities in the proceedings will be required to pay taxes justly due[35] and to reimburse the purchaser at the sale for proper payments made by him in acquiring the tax title,[36] and to pay the value of improvements made in good faith,[37] and a tender of the amount to which the purchaser is entitled is necessary to relieve plaintiff of costs;[38] but if the assessment or sale for taxes is absolutely void, reimbursement of the purchaser is not a condition precedent to relief.[39] The claimant of realty un-

35. In an action to quiet title brought against a tax deed holder whose deed was not recorded within six months after its issuance, and hence void, plaintiff must pay the taxes lawfully assessed against his land before he is entitled to a decree. Wagner v. Underhill [Kan.] 81 P. 177.

36. He must repay valid taxes paid by the purchaser after the sale. Glos v. Collins, 110 Ill. App. 121. One who seeks cancellation of a tax deed must do equity by reimbursing the purchaser for his outlay in payment of taxes and proper charges. Siers v. Wiseman [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 460. An owner of property, suing to remove a void tax deed as a cloud on his title, will be required to refund to a purchaser from the state the amount of taxes, with interest, paid by him, but not penalties or costs which the purchaser may have paid. Hamilton v. Brownsville Gaslight Co. [Tenn.] 90 S. W. 159. Where it is not made to appear that a tax is void on its face, an action to recover land sold for taxes cannot be maintained without payment or tender to the person claiming under the tax title, the amount of the tax, with interest, penalties, and costs, for which the land was sold. Moyer v. Foss [Wash.] 83 P. 12. Where a decree is entered upon a bill to set aside a tax deed, complainant need only pay to the holder of the tax title the amount paid at the sale, subsequent taxes and costs, with interest thereon from the date of the sale to the date of the decree. Woodard v. Glos, 113 Ill. App. 353. Where in suit to clear title of tax deed the complaint shows that defendant paid taxes and received a deed, and tenders money into court to reimburse defendant for all payments and statutory interest, equity will not decree a clear title until defendant has been reimbursed. Hole v. Van Duzer [Idaho] 81 P. 109. Where landowner seeks cancellation of tax deed on ground of assessment of separate tracts en masse, and that land was sold for personal taxes, the deed being void, plaintiff will be required to pay the purchaser the amounts paid out by him, and also statutory interest and penalties. Elder v. Chaffee County Com'rs, 33 Colo. 475, 81 P. 244. A holder of a tax deed conveyed to his wife an undivided one-third interest pending suit to set the deed aside. The decree provided that the owner should pay the amount due the purchaser into court for the benefit of such purchaser and his assigns. Held such decree proper as to the wife. Glos v. Ambler, 218 Ill. 269, 75 N. E. 764.

In ejectment against holder of tax title, though defendant's answer was stricken as frivolous, he could prove the expenditures which he was entitled to be repaid in case his deed should be set aside. Stephenson v. Doolittle, 123 Wis. 36, 100 N. W. 1041. In an action of ejectment by the holder of a tax deed, the defense that defendants were in adverse possession of the land when the tax lien was foreclosed, and that they had no notice of the foreclosure, is not available without a tender of the taxes justly due and paid by plaintiff. Rowland v. Eskland [Wash.] 82 P. 599.

37. One claiming under a tax title, not void on its face, is entitled to adduce proof of improvements made in good faith and have that issue determined. Lamberida v. Barnum [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 698.

38. In order to throw costs on defendant in a suit to set aside a tax title, plaintiff must, before commencement of the suit, tender the whole amount paid at the tax sale, with subsequent taxes, costs, and interest, and keep such tender good by bringing the money into court. Tenders to one defendant and to counsel of the other held sufficient to warrant apportionment of costs between them. Glos v. Garrett, 219 Ill. 208, 76 N. E. 373. A tender by a receiver appointed in a suit for an accounting against trustees, to the holder of tax deeds, inures to the benefit of the beneficiaries who are parties plaintiff in a suit to set aside the tax deeds. Glos v. Ambler, 218 Ill. 269, 75 N. E. 764. A tender before suit, and an allegation in the bill of willingness to pay any amount which shall be found due, kept good by paying into court the amount found due by the decree, stops interest on the amount and throws costs on defendant. Id.

39. Reimbursement of the purchaser at the tax sale is not a condition precedent to the vacation of an absolutely void tax deed. Code 1899, c. 31, § 25, does not require such payment where sale was unauthorized. Barnes v. Bee, 138 F. 476. Reimbursement to purchaser at void sale, taxes having been paid by owner, is not necessary in order to have tax deed set aside. Glos v. Shedd, 218 Ill. 209, 75 N. E. 887. The holder of a tax deed based on a sale for taxes assessed to one not the owner of the land sold, the owner having no notice, actual or constructive, of the sale, is not entitled to reimbursement. Posey v. Ducros [La.] 39 So. 26. The owner of property sold at an invalid tax sale is under no obligation to pay the purchaser assessments which he never owed and for which his property was not liable as a der a voidable tax deed who has obtained a decree quieting title against the holder of an earlier tax deed, which is also voidable, upon being defeated in ejectment by the original owner, is not entitle to recover anything on account of taxes paid by the grantee in the first tax deed.[40]

Where a judgment and sale are set aside, it is error to give the purchaser a lien on the land for the amount of his bid, thereby including costs not properly chargeable to the owner.[41] As against such error, a motion to set the judgment aside, with a tender of proper costs and taxes, is the proper remedy.[42]

Limitations.[43]—Title by prescription under general limitation statutes is elsewhere treated.[44] There are in many states special limitation statutes prescribing the period within which proceedings attacking the validity of tax proceedings must be brought. Possession by the holder of the tax title for the period prescribed gives title and bars an action of recovery by the owner,[45] even though the tax deed under which the land is claimed is in fact void,[46] if such deed is valid on its face.[47] Such statutes begin to run only from the date of possession under the deed.[48] A valid assessment,[49] judgment,[50] and sale[51] are essential to the acquisition of title under these statutes. Being of a special character, they are applicable only in cases shown to be included within their terms.[52] In Colorado the recording of a subsequent

45. Open, continuous, adverse possession of land under a tax deed for the period within which an action against the purchaser at the sale must be brought for the recovery of the land, gives title. Kirby's Dig. § 5061, requires 2 years' possession. Carpenter v. Smith [Ark.] 88 S. W. 976. In Arkansas, two years open, continuous, exclusive, and adverse possession under a donation deed gives title. Sibly v. Gomillion [Ark.] 91 S. W. 22. Ejectment suit by owner is barred where 5 years have elapsed since confirmation of tax sale. Gavin v. Ashworth [Ark.] 91 S. W. 303. In Oklahoma, where a purchaser at a tax sale has gone into possession under a properly acknowledged and recorded tax deed, no action can be brought by the former owner or owners, or anyone claiming under them, unless within one year after the recording of the deed. O'Keefe v. Dillenbeck [Okl.] 83 P. 540. A tax deed is a "deed" within the meaning of Rev. St. 1895, art. 3342, and will support the 5 year limitation statute without proof of steps preliminary to sale. Lamberida v. Barnum [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 698.

46. Carpenter v. Smith [Ark.] 88 S. W. 976; Ross v. Royal [Ark.] 91 S. W. 178.

47. A void tax deed, if valid on its face and taken in good faith, constitutes color of title under which absolute title may be acquired after the lapse of the limitation period. Under Mills' Ann. St. § 3904, complete title is acquired when tax title is not attacked for 5 years. Williams v. Conroy [Colo.] 83 P. 959. The Arkansas two year statute of limitations does not run under a tax deed void for uncertainty in the description. Dickinson v. Arkansas City Imp. Co. [Ark.] 92 S. W. 21.

48. As so construed the 2 year statute is not unreasonable. Ross v. Royal [Ark.] 91 S. D. 178.

49. A statute requiring an action to recover land sold for taxes or to set aside a tax deed to be brought within three years after filing of the tax deed has no application to a case where the sale was void for want of an assessment. Such statutes cannot cure jurisdictional defects in the proceedings, as where there was no good description in the assessment. Moran v. Thomas [S. D.] 104 N. W. 212; Jackson v. Bailey [S. D.] 104 N. W. 268. One who claims title under a sale for delinquent taxes has the burden of proving that the taxes were duly assessed, that they were a charge on the land, and the necessary steps preliminary to the sale were duly taken. Lamberida v. Barnum [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 698. Any such proof of tax deed will support 3-years limitation statute. Id.

50. A statute of limitations is not put in operation in favor of a party claiming under a tax sale unless there is a valid judgment. Statute limiting time for bringing suit to set aside sale held not operative. Holmes v. Laughren [Minn.] 105 N. W. 558.

51. Prescription does not run in favor of a tax title, against an owner in possession, where the tax deed is based on a sale for taxes assessed to one not the owner of the land, the latter having no notice, actual or constructive, of the sale. Posey v. Ducros [La.] 39 So. 26.

52. B. & C. Comp. §§ 3146, 3128, that an action to recover land sold for taxes shall be commenced within three years, do not apply to suits to quiet title or determine adverse claims. Mount v. McAulay [Or.] 83 P. 529. B. & C. Comp. § 3135, that no action to deed to the same property within the limitation period does not alone bar the rights of the holder of the first tax deed.[53] The Louisiana prescription of three years against actions to annul tax sales is held applicable where the property in question was assessed to one who had no color of title and was sold without notice to the owner, the owner having never been in actual possession and having never paid taxes on the property.[54] The prescription law, so applied, is held not invalid as depriving the owner of his property without due process of law.[55]

(§ 14) E. Acquisition of title by state and transfer thereof.[56]—Provision is usually made for purchase and acquisition of title by the state or municipality where there is no other purchaser.[57] In the acquisition of such title,[58] and in the assignment thereof,[59] or in the sale of lands so acquired,[60] statutory provisions must be closely followed. Former owners of land held by the state, who petition for a sale thereof by the state, are estopped to assert an invalidity in the sale to the state as against the purchaser from the state.[61] The record in the county clerk's office of a certificate of sale for taxes to the municipality itself is notice to subsequent purchasers not only of the lien of the taxes for which the sale was had, but also of subsequent taxes assessed prior to the actual redemption of the property.[62] Where property has been forfeited or adjudicated to the state for nonpayment of taxes, and the state continues to assess the same property to the owner and collect taxes thereon for a series of years, equity will treat the transaction as a waiver of the prior supposed forfeiture or adjudication.[63] set aside a tax sale, or quiet title to land, or remove a cloud, shall be brought unless within two years from the date of record of the sheriff's deed, is to be construed in connection with Laws 1901, pp. 72, 73, §§ 3, 4, and has reference only to lands bid in by counties at delinquent sales. Id.

58. Deed to commissioners after tax sale, properly acknowledged before a justice of the peace, is essential to title in the county. Canole v. Allen, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 244.

59. Under 2 Mills' Ann. St. § 3888, a county clerk has no power to assign a certificate of sale to the county except within 3 years after the date thereof. Carnahan v. Sieber Cattle Co. [Colo.] 82 P. 592. In Nebraska, tax sale certificates owned by the state or any county or city cannot be legally sold for an amount less than that due thereon. [Laws 1903, p. 502, c. 75, § 26] (State v. Fink [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1059), and the amount due is to be determined by adding to the face of the certificate interest at the rate provided by the act § 27 of c. 75 of Laws 1903 (Id). In Kansas a county clerk is not authorized to issue a tax deed to the assignee of a tax sale certificate unless the assignment is indorsed thereon or attached thereto (Morris v. Bird [Kan.] 81 P. 185), and a tax deed issued to one other than the original holder of the tax sale certificate, that does not show an assignment to such person, is void on its face (Id.).

60. In Washington, county commissioners may require a sale of lands acquired by the county in tax foreclosure proceedings to be subject to confirmation by the board. Phillips v. Welts [Wash.] 82 P. 737. A purchaser at a tax sale by commissioners must show the several jurisdictional steps necessary to vest title in the commissioners, the public sale by the commissioners to himself, and the execution and delivery of deeds by the several officers. Canole v. Allen, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 244. In New Jersey, land which has already been bought by a municipality at a tax sale need not be sold for subsequent taxes. Under act Feb. 24, 1882. Maginnis v. Borough of Rutherford [N. J. Law] 63 A. 16. Land sold for taxes was bid in by the state in 1848, but no deed issued until 1855. A sale by the county in 1852 was unauthorized, the levy thereof having been made before the redemption period had expired, and the sale and deed by the county being prior to acquisition of title by the state. § 15. Inheritance and transfer taxes. A. Nature of, and power to impose.[64]—The term "inheritance tax" is almost universally used to describe a tax on the right of succession, whether by operation of law, by will, or by grant.[65] This right of succession is not a natural right but a privilege granted by the state, and therefore subject to such restrictions and burdens as the state sees fit to impose.[66] It follows from what has been said that an inheritance tax is not a tax on property but on the transfer or right of succession;[67] hence, constitutional requirements of equality and uniformity do not apply in the manner in which they are applicable to ad valorem property taxes.[68] Thus, a state may legally exempt from the tax estates below a certain value, while taxing others,[69] may classify the taxable estates according to value and apply thereto a progressive rate,[70] may discriminate between blood relatives and strangers to the blood,[71] or may make no distinction between them or between lineal and collateral descendants.[72] Inheritance taxes are expressly authorized by some state constitutions,[73] but express authorization has been held unnecessary.[74]

The New York stock transfer stamp tax law is held valid, the tax imposed being on the transfer of property and not upon property.[75] The act does not violate constitutional requirements as to due process or equal protection of laws.[76] It applies

64. See 4 C. L. 1651.

65. The title of act of Mar. 6, 1901, "An act relating to the taxation of inheritances," etc., is broad enough to cover taxes on transfers by will or otherwise than by operation of law. In re White's Estate [Wash.] 84 P. 831.

66. Inheritance taxes are not taxes upon property but upon the transmission of property or the right to acquire property by will or descent, which is not a natural right but a privilege accorded by the state. In re Hickok's Estate [Vt.] 62 A. 724.

67. State v. Bazille [Minn.] 106 N. W. 93; In re Hull's Estate, 97 N. Y. S. 701. The inheritance tax is not a tax on property but a bonus or premium which the state exacts on the transmission of property by will or descent. Vinsonhaler [Neb.] 105 N. W. 472. The transfer tax is imposed upon the right of succession to property by means of a will or through the statutes of descents and distribution. 69. Exemption of estates under $2,000 in value does not render tax invalid. In re Hickok's Estate [Vt.] 62 A. 724. Gen. Laws 1905, p. 427, c. 288, § 2, which provides for computation of an inheritance tax on the "excess" of the devise, bequest, etc., over $10,000, held to mean that the amount of the estate over the "exemption" of $10,000 is the basis for computation. State v. Bazille [Minn.] 106 N. W. 93. The statute, so construed, is valid. Id.

70. In Minnesota a tax is imposed only where the estate or property transferred exceeds $10,000 in value and is placed only on the excess, the rate being 1½ per cent for estates between $10,000 and $50,000, 3 per cent on estates between $50,000 and $100,000, and 5 per cent on estates over $100,000, $10,000 being in each case exempt. The statute is held valid. State v. Bazille [Minn.] 106 N. W. 93. The Nebraska statute does not impose a tax on the gross estate of a decedent but only upon the share received by each heir or devisee, and the rate being uniform as to each class of estates transferred, the statute is not invalid for lack of uniformity. State v. Vinsonhaler [Neb.] 105 N. W. 472.

St. 1899, p. 10,—an inheritance tax law—which imposes an inheritance tax on brothers and sisters of a decedent but not on such strangers to the blood as the wife or widow of a son or the husband of a daughter, is not a denial of the equal protection of the laws as to such brothers and sisters. Campbell v. State of California, 200 U. S. 87, 50 Law. Ed. —.

74. It is held in Nebraska that the right of succession by will or inheritance may be legally taxed, though such right is not included in the subjects of taxation enumerated in the state constitution. only to transfers within the state and is not an attempt to regulate interstate commerce,[77] and it does not attempt to tax property outside the state by imposing a tax on a transfer within the state of stock of a foreign corporation owned by a nonresident.[78]

(§ 15) B. Successions and transfers taxable, and place of taxation.[79]—In general, all transfers or successions by will, by conveyance to take effect upon the grantor's death or made in contemplation of his death,[80] or by operation of law, upon death of the ancestor, are subject to the tax. As in the case of other taxes, exemptions will be strictly construed and not extended by inference or implication to property not clearly within the terms of the statute.[81] A statute exempting from a collateral inheritance tax property passing to or for charitable, educational, or religious societies or institutions, the property of which is exempt by law from taxation, does not apply to foreign corporations.[82] This construction of the statute does not render it invalid.[83] The construction of various statutes and of statutory exemptions is further treated in the note.[84]

Inheritance tax laws are usually held to have only a prospective operation,[85] so that they have no application to transfers prior to their enactment,[86] and cannot affect rights previously acquired,[87] and this is held to be the rule whether the inter-

In re Speed's Estate, 216 Ill. 23, 74 N. E. 809.

83. Act May 10, 1901, does not violate Const. art. 9, §§ 1, 2, requiring uniformity of taxation (In re Speed's Estate, 216 Ill. 23, 74 N. Under the provisions of Act No. 45 of 1904, p. 102, excepting from the inheritance tax only such property as shall have borne its just proportion of taxes prior to the opening of the succession, state and municipal bonds, though exempt from other taxation, are not exempt from the inheritance tax (Succession of Kohn [La.] 38 So. 898), nor are shares of stock exempt, though the corporation may have been taxed on its property (Id.). Bonds of the United States, not having been taxed, are subject to an inheritance tax. Succession of Levy [La.] 39 So. 37.

85. The Ohio inheritance tax act, passed in 1904, has a prospective operation only, and applies only to rights arising upon a death which occurred subsequent to passage of the act. 97 Ohio Laws p. 398, construed. Eury's Ex'rs v. State, 72 Ohio St. 448, 74 N. E. 650.

86. A testator gave part of his property in trust to his son for life, remainder to his son's children, and died before the transfer tax law took effect. Held the children took under the grandfather's will, and the transfer tax law did not apply. In re Backhouse, 96 N. Y. S. 466. Where will devising certain estates was probated in 1865, the transfers were not subject to the inheritance tax imposed by Pub. Laws 1899, p. 284, No. 188. Miller v. McLaughlin [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 501, 104 N. W. 777.

87. In a will, taking effect before the est acquired under a will is vested or contingent;[88] but where power to tax successions existed prior to a testator's death, and a statute imposing such a tax was enacted and became effective thereafter, but before the succession was closed, the succession was held liable to the tax,[89] and the statute, as so construed, held not invalid because retroactive and impairing vested rights of the legatees.[90] It is also held that property held in trust by provision made in a will becomes subject to an inheritance tax law, which has been enacted during continuance of the trust.[91]

Powers of appointment.[92]—In New York a power of appointment, when made, is deemed a transfer taxable in the same manner as though the property to which the appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of the power and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee by will.[93] The tax is upon the transfer made by the will exercising the power,[94] and the fact that an excessive inheritance tax was imposed upon the transfer of the estate by a prior will, which created the power of appointment before the statute relating to powers of appointment was passed, does not operate to relieve the transfer by the exercise of the power from the tax;[95] but where an attempt to exercise a power is ineffective and the right to the property is acquired under a former will, which took effect before the transfer tax law became effective, the right to acquire such property is not subject to the tax.[96] The passing of the transfer tax law, A devised one-half of his estate to trustees for his daughter, to be held in trust during her life and at her death to go to her heirs-at-law, subject to a power of appointment by will in her. A's daughter, dying after the passing of the transfer tax law, devised the property in question in fee to her daughter, born before the death of A, and her only child. The surrogate imposed a transfer tax on the property. Held that the will of A's daughter transferred nothing to her daughter that was not given to the latter by A's will, which took effect before the passing of the transfer tax law, and consequently that the property and transfer were not subject to the tax. In re Lansing's Estate, 182 N. Y. 238, 74 N. E. 882. (Two justices dissenting.)

Note: A writer in the Michigan Law Review comments on the above case as follows: "An inheritance or transfer tax is one imposed on the succession to property, such succession being a privilege given by the state and not a natural right. In re Dow's Estate, 167 N. Y. 227, 60 N. E. 439, 88 Am. St. Rep. 509, 52 L. R. A. 433; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 Law. Ed. 287; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 28 L. R. A. 178. A transfer tax cannot be imposed on the acquisition of property where the acquisition has taken place prior to the enactment of a taxing statute which contained nothing showing a direct intention to give it a retrospective effect. In re Pell's Estate, 171 N. Y. 48, 63 N. E. 789, 89 Am. St. Rep. 791, 57 L. R. A. 540. The court did not agree on the point as to when the devisee's rights accrued. The majority of the judges held that the devisee, having a power of election to take either under her mother's appointment by will or under A's will, took under the latter an interest, either contingent or vested, in the estate on the death of A, which according to Brevoort v. Grace, 53 N. Y. 245, and In re Vanderbilt's Estate, 172 N. Y. 69, 64 N. E. 782, is immune from legislative attack the instant it accrues even though it be contingent. The dissenting judges held that the estate did not vest in the devisee on the death of A (Hall v. La France Fire Engine Co., 158 N. Y. 570), but only on the exercise by her mother of the power of appointment, which created a new estate, dating from the time that such appointment became effectual and governed by the laws then in force."—4 Mich. donor and donee of a power both being residents, and the exercise of the power being by will of such resident donee, the beneficiary is liable to a tax though the property involved is outside the state.[97]

Place of taxation.[98]—Personal property transmitted by will is subject to the collateral inheritance tax at the place of the domicile of the decedent,[99] that being the situs of such property for the purpose of taxation of this nature.[1] The fact that the property is located in another state, where it is also subject to an inheritance tax, under the statute of such state, does not affect the right to impose such tax at the place of the decedent's domicile.[2] Where a testator gave his executors power to sell his real estate, if necessary, and a sale of real estate in other states became necessary to pay pecuniary legacies, such realty was equitably converted into personalty and was subject to the collateral inheritance tax in the state where administration and distribution of the estate was had.[3]

The transfer by will of a nonresident of property in the state is taxable.[4] Thus, in New York, all bonds, money and stocks of domestic corporations, and real estate actually in the state, and passing as part of the estate of a nonresident, are subject to the transfer tax.[5] In ascertaining the amount and value of property which passes and to which the tax attaches, all indebtedness to persons in the state may be deducted.[6] Debts due a nonresident by residents, the evidences of which are held

(§ 15) C. Accrual of tax.[8]—In the case of estates of present enjoyment, the transfer tax accrues immediately upon the death of the testator.[9] This is also said to be the rule with reference to vested remainders,[10] though in some states a tax on the transfer of a remainder is demandable only when the remainderman comes into possession.[11] The latter rule does not prevent an effective earlier payment on behalf of the remainderman.[12] Where inheritance taxes are due and payable at the death of the testator, jurisdiction to impose the tax does not depend upon the probate of the will.[13] In Illinois, where an estate is devised in trust for a term of years to be then divided among the beneficiaries, the transfer of the entire estate is immediately taxable,[14] and the value of the precedent estate for years is not to be deducted.[15]

(§ 15) D. Appraisal and collection.[16]—Only the amount actually received by a legatee should be considered in computing the transfer tax.[17] Thus, where a residuary legatee's interest is subject to the purchase of certain annuities the amount paid therefor should be deducted.[18] Debts must be deducted from the aggregate value of the estate,[19] if such debts are paid out of assets in the state where the tax is imposed.[20] A claim owned by the estate, but which is in genuine litigation, cannot be considered in appraising the estate for the transfer tax.[21] Where a bond and mortgage owned by the estate has been deducted because merely indemnifying against a judgment, the judgment cannot be deducted as constituting an absolute liability.[22] Cases dealing with the rate of the tax[23] and the appraisal of corporate stock[24] are treated in the notes.

Statutes control as to the powers and duties of the courts in matters of appraisal and collection,[25] as to appellate procedure,[26] as to the time within which suits for collection must be brought,[27] as to commissions,[28] penalties, and attorney's fees[29] for collection, as to interest on taxes over due,[30] and as to the disposition of temporary payments on account of the tax.[31]

§ 16. License taxes.[32]—License taxes are not taxes upon property but upon occupations or callings,[33] hence, constitutional provisions relating to property taxes have no application to taxes of this kind.[34] But if a tax is in fact on property, it will be so considered, though called a license tax.[35] States have undoubted power to classify trades or occupations for purposes of taxation and to impose different taxes

25. In Massachusetts the probate court having jurisdiction of the estate has power to determine, subject to appeal, whether an inheritance tax is payable and the amount thereof. Bradford v. Storey [Mass.] 75 N. E. 256. Where notice to certain persons was of an appraisal for taxation of their father's estate, the surrogate had no power to fix a tax on property acquired under the will of their grandfather. In re Backhouse, 96 N. Y. S. 466. Laws 1896, c. 908, § 230, requires the surrogate, upon his own motion or upon application of any interested party, including the comptroller, to have the estate of a decedent subject to the transfer tax to be appraised by certain persons. This statute is held mandatory, and mandamus lies to compel the surrogate to act (Kelsey v. Church, 98 N. Y. S. 535), even though he has erroneously determined that he has no jurisdiction (Id.). An application by the state comptroller, upon affidavit setting out all the necessary facts upon information and belief, is sufficient to warrant the surrogate in proceeding under the statute. Id.

26. In New York the state comptroller may appeal from an order of a surrogate reversing an order assessing a transfer tax. In re Hull's Estate, 109 App. Div. 248, 95 N. Y. S. 819. An order of a superior court directing payment of an inheritance tax would be appealable under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3, and also reviewable on appeal from the final distribution of the estate, hence, prohibition will not lie to prohibit a judge from making such order. Cross v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco [Cal. App.] 83 P. 815. The Pennsylvania statute relating to the appraisement for collateral inheritance tax gives a right of appeal which implies the giving of notice, hence the 30 days' limitation of the right of appeal begins to run only upon the giving of notice. 27. Act 1885, c. 54, which bars actions for taxes not brought within 5 years after January 1 of the year when they accrued, does not apply to inheritance taxes. Miller v. Wolfe [Tenn.] 89 S. W. 398. Section 19 of the inheritance tax law (Acts 1893, c. 174), providing that such taxes shall be sued for in 5 years or shall be presumed to have been paid and cease to be a lien as against a purchaser of the property, is a general limitation statute for inheritance taxes, and is not merely applicable to purchasers from persons liable for the taxes. Id. In Massachusetts, neither the general statute of limitations nor the special statute relating to actions against executors or administrators applies to an action to recover an inheritance tax. Bradford v. Storey [Mass.] 75 N. E. 256.

28. In Pennsylvania a county register of wills is entitled to a commission on an inheritance tax collected by him and paid to the state. By Act May 6, 1887 (P. L. 83), § 16, allowing registers to retain such percentage of such taxes as is allowed by the auditor general, which act repeals Act March 31, 1876 (P. L. 13), requiring commissions on such taxes to be paid into the county treasury. Allegheny County v. Stengel [Pa.] 63 A. 58.

33. An occupation tax is not a tax on property or upon income, but upon the calling. Phillips v. Barnhart, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 26. Laws 1904, c. 76, § 93, imposing a license tax on "trading cars," the amount of which is determined by the distance travel-upon different classes, or to tax some without taxing others,[36] and legislative discretion in the matter will not be reviewed by the courts provided a classification adopted is not wholly arbitrary and unreasonable.[37] The requirements of equality and uniformity of taxation are satisfied if the license tax operates equally upon all members of the same class.[38] A tax on business done in the state is not a tax on interstate commerce, though the corporation required to pay it is engaged in such commerce.[39] The fact that public property which is leased is exempt from taxation does not exempt the lessee from a license tax on the business in which such property is used.[40] The business of giving trading stamps with articles sold, for which other articles may be obtained, cannot be legally subjected to an excise tax.[41]

Statutes imposing license taxes must designate the taxable objects with reasonable certainty.[42] The construction of license tax laws with reference to their

Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 50 Law. Ed. —-. A statutory exemption of the property of certain corporations not organized for pecuniary profit does not render invalid a license tax on mutual insurance companies in Iowa, since the license tax is not one on property and such corporations are not benevolent. applicability in particular instances,[43] and the basis for computing the amount of the tax,[44] is treated in the notes.

Municipalities have only such power to impose license taxes as is expressly granted.[45] The fact that a state does not impose a license tax on a particular business does not prevent a municipality from imposing one.[46] Cities and towns of Kentucky may, if they choose, substitute for the ad valorem tax on personal property a tax based on incomes, licenses, or franchises for municipal purposes.[47] Power to impose taxes by the latter method includes power to make such classification of property as is necessary.[48] Such classification must be reasonable and the taxes imposed uniform,[49] and so adjusted that property subject thereto, and property subject to the ad valorem tax, will be equally taxed.[50]

§ 17. Income taxes.[51]—Where the account of a military officer discharged in 1862, after the passage of the Federal income tax law of that year, is presented under the act of 1901, appropriating money for arrears of pay of volunteers during the civil war, the accounting officers may deduct the amount of the income tax which

A corporation which resembled street railway corporations in all respects, except that it used steam power, held liable to the excise tax on earnings of street railway corporations imposed by Rev. Laws c. 14, §§ 44-46, to be applied to the repair and maintenance of the public ways. McDonald v. Union Freight R. Co. [Mass.] 76 N. E. 655. Owner of stock of rugs who traveled from place to place selling them, and hired a room in a furniture store to display them, where he managed a sale, was "transient merchant" within Acts 1901, c. 208, requiring such persons to obtain a license and pay a fee and taxes. A bill of the goods to the furniture company was held not genuine and title was not transferred thereby. Simoyan v. Rohan [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 176. An electric light company is not a "manufacturer" within the proviso excepting certain pursuits from those upon which the legislature is authorized to impose license taxes, by Const. 1898, art. 229. State v. New Orleans Ry. & Light Co. [La.] 40 So. 597. Tanner manufactured leather in Virginia but sold it in Pennsylvania, though it was cut in the store where sales were made. Such sales were liable to the mercantile tax. Commonwealth v. Cover, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 409. Manufacturer of cigars and smoking tobacco had a factory at Philadelphia and another factory at another place. All sales were made and books kept at the Philadelphia factory. Held he was not liable to the mercantile tax on sales made from the Philadelphia factory. Commonwealth v. Vetterlein, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 294. A manufacturer who sells nothing but his own products and these only at the place of manufacture is not liable for the mercantile tax. Commonwealth v. Crum Lynne Iron & Steel Co., 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 508.

44. Under Laws 1904, c. 76, § 93, imposing a license tax on "trading cars," the distance a car may travel upon a given route upon payment of a certain fee is to be computed from the point where the car was first opened for business, and not from the point where it first entered the state. S. Zemurray & Co. v. Bouldin [Miss.] 40 So. 15.

45. Const. §§ 117, 168, 170, held not to repeal existing special charters of cities which authorized them to levy license taxes, nor to require such taxes to be levied under a general law. Standard Oil Co. v. Fredericksburg [Va.] 52 S. E. 817. Neither Code 1887, § 1042, nor Act March 23, 1871, both of which relate to license taxes in towns or cities, repeals Act Mar. 5, 1821, which gives the town of Fredericksburg power to assess a tax on inhabitants and property within its limits for the improvement, convenience, and well being of the town. Id. Social clubs are not exempted from taxation by municipalities by Acts 1902-03-04, pp. 155, 226, c. 148, cl. 144, requiring a payment of $2 per member, by clubs keeping liquors, to be made to the treasurer of the county or corporation where its club house is located, in lieu of all other taxes for selling liquor to members. Town of Phoebus v. Manhattan Social Club [Va.] 52 S. E. 839. The tax imposed by the act is a license tax within the meaning of Code 1904, § 1042, authorizing a city or town to impose a tax in addition to the state tax for the privilege of doing anything for which a "license tax" is required, hence a town in which a club is located may impose an additional tax. 49. Const. § 171, uniformity clause, applies to taxation under Const. § 181, as amended. George Schuster & Co. v. Louisville [Ky.] 89 S. W. 689. Ordinance imposing on merchants and manufacturers, in lieu of an ad valorem tax on their personalty, a tax based on the amount of sales or output, under a sliding scale, the rate decreasing as the amount of sales or output increases, is unconstitutional. 50. Ordinance which would result in an ad valorem tax on national bank stock and a tax on the incomes, licenses, or franchises accrued in 1862.[52] The travel pay and commutation of subsistence of the officer is subject to the tax to the extent of any surplus over and above the officer's actual traveling expenses, and where he failed to render an account thereof, to the whole extent of travel pay, and commutation of subsistence.[53]

§ 18. Distribution and disposition of taxes collected.[54]—The distribution of taxes among taxing districts or municipalities,[55] and the use of funds so received,[56] is controlled by statute. Cities authorized to impose both kinds of taxes may apportion a franchise tax between different objects in the same proportion as ad valorem taxes are divided.[57] Where taxes have been paid for school purposes without objection or protest, their use for such purposes will not be prevented by a merely technical objection to the manner of the levy.[58] That it may be proposed to divert a tax when collected to a purpose other than that authorized, and for which it was levied, is not a ground for refusing to enforce collection of the tax, if legally levied.[59] The West Virginia statute requiring an estimate to be made and spread upon the records of county courts before making the annual levy does not prevent the diversion of funds raised from the purposes named in the estimate to other proper purposes,[60] and the laying of a special levy for a particular purpose does not limit the expenditure for that purpose to the amount raised by such levy, if there are other proper funds.[61]

A county treasurer is not the agent of the county in collecting taxes for townships and towns, and the county is not answerable for his delinquencies in the col-of state banks and trust companies, held to discriminate against national banks. George Schuster & Co. v. Louisville [Ky.] 89 S. W. 689. Ordinances imposing a tax on incomes, licenses, and franchises of merchants, manufacturers, banks, and trust companies at a fixed yearly rate, though the ad valorem rate on other property would vary from year to year, held void. The New York mortgage tax law, which provides that one-half the money derived from the tax shall be held subject to the order of county boards, does not violate the section of the constitution requiring a two-thirds vote of both branches of the legislature to appropriate money for local purchases. Under Laws 1905, c. 729, § 307, the proceeds of the tax belonging to the counties never becomes state money, and is not within Const. art. 3, § 20. People v. Ronner, 95 N. Y. S. 518. In New York a county is not a "tax district" so as to be entitled to a share of the taxes collected on bank stock. Mineral School Dist. No. 10 v. Pennington County [S. D.] 104 N. W. 270. Under New York statutes a county treasurer has no authority to borrow money on the credit of the county to pay a state tax levied on the county, and charge the same to a town, when all the towns have paid their proportion of the state taxes. lection of such taxes.[62] A warrant upon a county treasurer to pay tax funds to a town treasurer creates no liability against the county, but is merely the authority under which funds of the town are paid over.[63] Mandamus lies to compel a county treasurer to pay over to a town treasurer public funds belonging to the town to the custody of which the town treasurer is entitled,[64] provided the county treasurer has such funds in his possession.[65] A county treasurer who pays over to a town supervisor the town's share of railroad taxes, instead of investing the same for the benefit of the sinking fund to pay railroad bonds, as required by law, is liable to the town for the amount.[66] In a suit to recover the same, the defendant has the burden of proving a defense that the town had received the benefit of the money so paid over.[67] Such illegal payment cannot be validated by a subsequent curative statute.[68] In an action by a tax collector to recover alleged overpayments to a parish, he must prove payments as claimed by him to have been made.[69]

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

§ 1. Franchises and licenses, property and contracts, and corporate affairs.[1]—The franchise rights of telegraph and telephone companies depend largely upon statute and must be exercised within the limits thereof.[2] In Ohio, telegraph and telephone companies get their right to use the public streets from the state, and the municipality may agree on the mode of use but cannot agree on the right to use, or grant or require special benefits, or fix charges beyond what may be necessary to restore the pavement to its former usefulness.[3] In that state the probate court may fix the mode of using the streets where the city and the company cannot agree,[4] but in such case it cannot exercise legislative functions or give directions for the use of

4. Requisites of petition: A telephone company petitioning the probate court for the mode of using streets need not set out in the petition what streets it proposes to occupy, nor the character of the structures it proposes to erect (Fitzsimmons Tel. Co. v. Cincinnati, 2 Ohio N. P. [N. S.] 51), but the petition must show the specific questions of difference between the city and the company (Queen City Tel. Co. v. Cincinnati [Ohio] 76 N. E. 392). The petition must be reasonably certain (Id.), and incorporation of the company must be shown (Id.).

streets generally for the present and future,[5] nor does the statute authorize it to grant to a telephone company the right to put wires and apparatus under the streets without the consent of the city.[6] A board of county commissioners cannot grant privileges to a telegraph company except within the limitations of the statute under which they act.[7] Where a statute prohibits the use of highways by telegraph companies in such a way as to incommode the public no board can determine for all time the question of convenience,[8] and the same or subsequent board may order the removal of lines when necessity demands it.[9] In Kentucky the county court cannot authorize the construction of a telephone line without the consent of the fiscal court.[10] An ordinance granting the right to operate lines within the city limits under certain conditions for a specified period covers all territory included within the city limits by subsequent merger during that period.[11] The right given to telegraph companies by the Federal statute to erect their lines on post roads does not interfere with the right of the states or local authorities to regulate and control highways,[12] but it has been held that where a telegraph company has placed its line upon a public highway by consent of the local authorities, and has complied with the Federal law, it cannot be required without compensation to remove such line because of inconvenience to the public.[13] Quo warranto is the proper remedy to declare the forfeiture of the right of a corporation to exercise its franchise under a city ordinance,[14] but the fact that a telephone company fails to comply with its license to use the public streets does not warrant a forfeiture of its franchise.[15] In such case the license may be revoked for abuse.[16] One who signs a petition for a franchise to a telephone company on condition that service be furnished at a certain rate becomes a party to the contract with the city and may sue to enforce its provisions as to rates.[17]

Consideration.—While the transportation law of New York gives to telephone companies the right to use the streets of a city, it gives them no rights in public places outside of streets,[18] nor does it deprive the city of its police power,[19] and, accordingly, a contract by which a company secures the use of streets and other public places in consideration for service at certain rates is supported by a sufficient consideration.[20]

License fees and taxes.[21]—Municipalities generally have the power to impose upon telegraph and telephone companies a reasonable charge for the occupation of the streets,[22] but a city has no power to impose upon a telephone company an occupation tax, as a revenue measure, in addition to a franchise tax already collected;[23] and where by statute a company has been granted the right to construct and operate its lines in highways or streets in consideration for services to the public, a municipality has no power to impose any tax or rental on its poles for the use of the streets.[24]

Transfers, line contracts, leases and mortgages.[25]—Contracts between different companies for their mutual benefit are not revocable at the will of one of the parties,[26] and a court of equity will decree specific performance of such contracts in order to preserve the status quo of the parties.[27]

§ 2. Construction and maintenance of lines, and injuries thereby.[28]—The use of highways by telegraph and telephone compauies is subordinate to their use by the public for the primary purpose of travel,[29] and this is so although the right to use the streets is given by statute.[30] Municipal authorities have the power of reasonable control and regulation of the use of the public streets by telephone companies,[31] and in proper cases may require a telephone company to place its lines underground,[32] provided there is no discrimination.[33] Local boards are often required to specify portions of highways where telegraph or telephone lines may be erected.[34] A grant to a telephone company to erect a line over and along certain property and

Village of Carthage v. Central New York Tel. & T. Co., 96 N. Y. S. 919.

33. Where one of two telephone companies extended its lines without permission of the village trustees, the fact that the trustees required such extension to be placed underground without requiring the other company to place its wires underground does not prove discrimination, if the rival company made no extension. Village of Carthage v. Central New York Tel. & T. Co., 96 N. Y. S. 919, rvg. 48 Misc. 423, 96 N. Y. S. 917. Where a city council is required to designate the places in streets where a telephone company may place its poles, it cannot be required by mandamus to designate the

to place poles along the highway adjoining such property does not permit the erection of a line diagonally across the property.[35] The right of a telephone company to construct lines on private lands must be clearly and expressly granted.[36] The remedy against a telegraph company for erecting its line outside of its right of way is one for damages and not condemnation.[37] Where the bond of a telephone company is sufficiently broad to cover damages arising from the construction of lines on roads abutting on the lands of private owners, an injunction will not lie on behalf of a private owner to prevent such construction though the municipal authorities have not consented to the use of the roads.[38] A telephone wire stretched over the property of another without authority, but causing no obstruction, is not a nuisance which may be summarily abated by cutting the wire,[39] but an action of ejectment will lie for stringing telephone wires over one's land without permission, although the soil is not interfered with.[40] A license to a telephone company to attach wires to a building is revocable at the pleasure of the owner,[41] and in trespass for attaching wires to buildings without authority the measure of damages is the value of the use to the defendant.[42] The degree of care required in the placing of telegraph and telephone lines is commensurate with the dangers reasonably to be apprehended in each particular case.[43] Where it is not customary or practicable for a telephone company to maintain guard-wires to prevent injury, the company is not negligent for failure to so maintain them.[44] To warrant a recovery for injuries caused by the communication of electricity by telegraph or telephone wires, negligence must be shown or presumed.[45] The question whether a telephone company is negligent in failing to learn

Duty and care.*[48]—The law imposes a public duty upon telegraph and telephone companies to promptly and correctly transmit and deliver messages,[49] and they are liable for a breach thereof to parties for whose benefit the particular message was sent.[50] As a general rule the party injured has the right to recover the damages arising.[51] An undisclosed principal of the sender of a message may sue in his own name for damages resulting from an erroneous transmission,[52] but a telegraph company is not liable to the sender for failure to deliver a message unless it is charged with notice of his interest either from the message itself or otherwise,[53] nor is it liable for negligence to the undisclosed principal of the sence of proof of negligence on the part of one or more of said companies. Marsh v. Lake Shore Elec. R. Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 405. As between a telephone company and one with whom it has no contract relation, the mere fact of an accidental breaking of a wire in a severe storm raises no presumption of negligence on the part of the company so as to warrant a recovery for the killing of a horse. Aument v. Pennsylvania Tel. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 610.

46. Where a break occurred in a great and unusual sleet storm, the company was held not negligent for failure to learn of and repair the break within an hour and a half. Aument v. Pennsylvania Tel. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 610.

47. A charge that jury should consider whether plaintiff knew or ought to have known of the danger from an electric wire held proper, after a definition of what plaintiff ought to know. Owen v. Portage Tel. Co. [Wis.] 105 N. W. 924. Where plaintiff permitted a wire connected with the telephone ground wire and extending into a pump house to hang coiled up near a looking glass and there combed his hair in a storm, question of contributory negligence held proper for the jury. Id. Held not contributory negligence for plaintiff's employee to lead a horse through a pool of water in which a live wire had lodged. Aument v. Pennsylvania Tel. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 610.

48. See 4 C. L. 1662.

49. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ford [Ark.] 92 S. W. 528.

50. Plaintiff held entitled to damages where in reliance on a telegram quoting the price of machinery he contracted to erect a plant for a city, and the telegraph company had made a mistake in the message (Wolf Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 129), and where the sender's message is a mere estimate and not a contract with the addressee, the sender cannot be liable to the addressee, nor can the company be considered the agent of the sender for the purpose of transmitting the erroneous message (Id.). In such case, where defendant's evidence tends to show negligence in the author of the message, it is proper for plaintiff to show in cross-examination that the negligence was that of the operator in transmitting the message. NOTE. To whom liable for negligence: "The telegraph cases are cited and exhaustively reviewed. But when the opinions in them are carefully read and analyzed, they recognize and affirm the rule that a company owes a duty and incurs a liability to those parties only of whose interest it has notice and for those injuries only which it might reasonably anticipate. The pertinent cases fall into four classes; (1) Those which assert a duty and liability to the undisclosed principal of the sender. Milliken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 110 N. Y. 403, 18 N. E. 251, 1 L. R. A. 281; Harkness v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 Iowa 190, 34 N. W. 811, 5 Am. St. Rep. 672; Leonard v. Telegraph Co., 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. St. Rep. 446; Cashion v. Western Union Tel. Co., 124 N. C. 459, 32 S. E. 746, 45 L. R. A. 160; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Morris, 28 C. C. A. 56, 83 F. 992; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531, 12 S. W. 857, 16 Am. St. Rep. 920, 6 L. R. A. 844; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654, 10 S. W. 734, 13 Am. St. Rep. 843; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Church [Neb.] 90 N. W. 878, 57 L. R. A. 905. (2) Those which recognize a duty and liability to a person who appears on the face of the telegram to be its beneficiary although neither its sender nor the addressee. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Mellon, 96 Tenn. 66, 33 S. W. 725; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531, 12 S. W. 857, 16 Am. St. Rep. 920, 6 L. R. A. 844; Telegraph Co. v. McKibben, 114 Ind. 511, 14 N. E. 894. (3) Those which deny any duty or liability to those who do not appear from the message to have any interest in it. McCormick v. Western Union Tel. Co., 25 C. C. A. 35, 79 F. 449, 38 L. R. A. 684; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 76 Tex. 217, 218, 13 S. W. 78, 18 Am. St. Rep. 37; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carter, 85 Tex. 580, 22 S. W. 961, 34 Am. St. Rep. 826; Morrow v. Western Union Tel. Co., 21 Ky. L. R. 1263, 54 S. W. 853. (4) The decision which denies any liability to the undisclosed principal of the addressee. Lee v. Western Union Tel. Co., 51 Mo. App. 375. In the cases of the two latter classes the duty and liability are denied on the ground that the company received no notice from the telegrams of their probable existence, and hence could not have anticipated injuries to those who did not appear to be beneficiaries of the addressee.[54] It does not guarantee that information sought by a voluntary office message will be received.[55] The question of reasonable care in handling messages is ordinarily one for the jury.[56] A telegraph company is not bound to open its place of business on Sunday, but if it does so it must observe reasonable hours.[57]

Transmission.[58]—The failure of a telegraph company to transmit a message is a breach of its contract and raises a presumption of negligence.[59] Where defects in the wire of a telegraph company are caused by its negligence, the company is not relieved of its duty to transmit messages with all reasonable dispatch,[60] nor is delay in transmission authorized because a sender assumes other risks in connection with the message.[61] The presumption is that the agent of a telegraph company for the reception of messages has power to bind the company as to the time for sending them.[62] The question whether delay in transmission was the proximate cause of an injury is one for the jury.[63] messages or to be likely to incur the damages which were sought. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kerr [Tex. Civ. App.] 23 S. W. 564, 565, the court refused to permit the undisclosed principal of a sender to recover damages for mental anguish on the ground that such damages could not have been reasonably anticipated and were not the natural consequence of the negligence, although the right of such a principal to maintain the action for such damages as appeared from the telegram to be likely to result to her was conceded. The same ruling may be found in Pacific Exp. Co. v. Redman [Tex. Civ. App.] 60 S. W. 677. In Cashion v. Western Union Tel. Co., 124 N. C. 459, 32 S. E. 746, 45 L. R. A. 160; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654, 10 S. W. 734, 13 Am. St. Rep. 843, and Western Union Tel. Co. v. Church [Neb.] 90 N. W. 878, 57 L. R. A. 905, all the damages which the undisclosed principal of a sender may suffer are held to have been reasonably anticipated by the telegraph company and recoverable. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wood, 6 C. C. A. 432, 57 F. 471, 21 L. R. A. 706, the addressee of a telegram was denied damages for mental suffering and for a failure to attend to business before a person named in the message died, because the telegram did not indicate any relationship or business between the addressee and the deceased. A more extended review of cases would be futile. Suffice it to say that through them all the line of demarcation between legal injury and that damnum absque injuria for which courts may not grant relief is the answer to the question whether the message gave such notice of the interest and probable injury of the plaintiff that the company might reasonably have anticipated the latter as the natural and probable effect of its negligence."—Western Union Tel. 63. Under the evidence held that the question whether plaintiff's failure to reach his wife's deathbed was the proximate result of defendant's negligence in transmit-

Delivery.[64]—Telegraph and telephone companies are bound to exercise reasonable diligence in delivering messages and proof of delay raises a presumption of negligence.[65] The fact that the sender of a message is negligent in not giving the specific address of the sendee will not excuse a negligent failure to deliver,[66] but a mistake in a message caused by the agent of the addressee cannot be charged to the company.[67] A telegraph company is bound to exercise diligence in accordance with its reasonable rules regardless of holidays,[68] but it is not ordinarily bound to deliver messages outside of office hours.[69] A telegraph company is not bound to deliver a message in the country, and outside the point to which it is addressed, in the absence of knowledge by it of the residence of the addressee and an agreement express or implied to deliver at such residence,[70] and an unauthorized agreement to deliver at such point does not bind the company;[71] nor is a telephone company bound to deliver a message at a point beyond that indicated by the contract of transmission.[72] In order to recover damages for negligence in the delivery of a message there must be a breach of some duty.[73] The damages must have naturally and proximately resulted from the breach of duty,[74] and it must appear that but for the failure to deliver, the damages would not have resulted.[75] Where no purpose could have been served thereby, failure to notify the sender of the nondelivery of a message is not a ground for action.[76] Willful refusal to pay over money due on telegraph orders renders the company liable in all damages reasonably resulting,[77] and in such case the company is not relieved by merely remitting to the transmitting bank the amount received.[78]

Delivery to others for addressee.—Sending a telegram in care of a corporation constitutes it the agent of the addressee to receive the message,[79] and the telegraph company is bound to deliver to the corporation, although it did not get the name of any of its officers and although the addressee is not connected with the corporation.[80] Where a telegram is addressed in care of a person other than the addressee, the company need not deliver it to any other person.[81]

Spurious messages.—A telegraph company is bound to exercise reasonable care to receive and transmit only genuine and authorized messages.[82] This duty it owes to senders, to undisclosed principals of senders, to addressees, and to those who appear in the telegrams to be beneficiaries thereof,[83] but in the absence of facts or circumstances which would awaken inquiry in the mind of a person of ordinary prudence, a company is not bound to ascertain the identity or authority of one who presents a message for transmission,[84] whatever may be the mode of communication to the operator.[85] When facts or circumstances calculated to awaken inquiry come to the notice of the company or operator, reasonable care only requires the party receiving the notice either to investigate and ascertain the authority of the sender or to communicate the facts and circumstances and his inquiry to the addressee at or before delivering the message.[86] The action for damages arising from false representations in a spurious message is one of tort for breach of duty to transmit authorized messages only, and not an action on contract,[87] and, accordingly, a company is not liable for false representations to one to whom it owes no duty and whose injuries could not have been reasonably anticipated.[88] The liability of a telegraph company for misrepresentations in a telegram is not analogous to that of a common

83. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Schriver [C. C. A.] 141 F. 538. Where a telegraph company negligently transmits a message, falsely representing that a certain bank will honor checks, the existence of a state of facts which would have created a cause of action against the bank had the telegram been genuine is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action against the telegraph company (Bank of Havelock v. Western Union Tel. Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 522; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Totten [C. C. A.] 141 F. 533), but plaintiffs cannot recover if the bank had authorized the sender, or estopped themselves from denying his authority, to send the message complained of (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Totten [C. C. A.] 141 F. 533), nor if they failed to exercise ordinary care (Id.).

carrier for the loss of goods so as to render it liable as an insurer of the correct receipt and transmission of messages.[89]

(§ 3) B. Injury and damages. Conflict of laws.[90]—In an action for failure to deliver a telegram the law of the place where the contract was made controls.[91] The measure of damages for delay in delivering a message is not governed by the law of a foreign state from which it is sent.[92] In Arkansas, damages for mental anguish can be recovered by the receiver of a message even though such damages could not be recovered in the state whence the message came.[93]

General and special damages.—At common law a telegraph company is liable for all damages fairly and substantially caused by negligence in the transmission and delivery of messages,[94] but it is liable for such injuries only as could reasonably be considered within the contemplation of the parties under the circumstances.[95] Where it does not appear from the message itself that certain damages might flow from negligence in delivery, such damages cannot be recovered unless the company knew of the circumstances.[96] In Georgia the telegraph company is held to be the agent of the sender of a message, to whom, and not to the company, the addressee must look for damages from erroneous transmission.[97] Where damages are claimed because of wrongful delivery to a party other than the addressee, it must be shown that such delivery was the proximate cause of the injury.[98] Whether damages are too remote depends upon circumstances.[99] Damages for mental suffering are actual damages.[1]

Bank of Havelock v. Western Union Tel. Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 522. A draft by Barnes was not essential to the maintenance of the action. Id. The telegram was not too indefinite to justify plaintiff in acting on it. Id. The fact that sufficient security remained, immaterial. Id. Damages held too remote where telegraph company negligently failed to deliver to plaintiff a message requesting the price of land but containing no offer to buy. Bennett v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Iowa] 106 N. W. 13. Where one receives a false telegram stating that a bank will honor certain checks and thereupon advances money on such checks, the damages resulting are not too remote. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Totten [C. C. A.] 141 F. 533. Damages held too remote where plaintiff was compelled to sell his household goods, etc., at a sacrifice because of the nondelivery of a telegram asking assistance for his sick son, who died later, causing plaintiff mental anguish. Special damages may be recovered where a company knew or ought to have known that they would probably arise in case of negligence.[2] Only such damages as were caused by a company's negligence[3] or misrepresentations can be recovered.[4] Where damages claimed are too remote, a plaintiff is entitled to only the price of transmitting the message,[5] and when both legal damages and damages too remote are proven, but the amount of either is unknown, only nominal damages can be recovered.[6] Where a message is never delivered a sender is entitled to at least nominal damages.[7] The general rules as to the measure of damages apply.[8]

Mental anguish.[9]—For negligence in the transmission or delivery of messages, many jurisdictions now allow recovery for mental anguish independent of bodily or pecuniary injury where the message is for the benefit of plaintiff or concerns his domestic or social interests.[10] It is no defense to such actions that had a telegram been received plaintiff would have suffered other mental anguish,[11] or that the recipient was in fact relieved of anxiety during a delay.[12] To justify a recovery for mental anguish, however, it must appear that the company had notice, either from

Nominal damages only could be recovered where plaintiffs, in reliance on a false telegram promising to honor checks for stock, incurred other items of expense also, and there was no proof of the amount paid for stock. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Totten [C. C. A.] 141 F. 533. In an action to recover small amounts paid out at different times in reliance on a false message, plaintiff must prove each specific amount and general statements are not competent. Id.

Where, through mistake in the transmission of a message, plaintiff supposed that his offer to sell mules at $135 had been accepted, and thereupon delivered the mules, but received only $130 for them according to the intended message, he was entitled to the $5 damages, $135 being the market price. McCarty v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 91 S. W. 976. $1,100 held not excessive for failure to attend funeral of a son. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shaw [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 58.

12. Telegram announcing serious illness of plaintiff's wife was received 28 hours late, of which fact plaintiff was informed before he left to see her. Held no defense that he was relieved of mental anxiety for 28 hours and that his wife recovered. Hamrick v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 232.

the face of the telegram or otherwise, of circumstances enabling it to foresee that such anguish would reasonably result from the negligence complained of.[13] No damages can be recovered for the suffering of the object of a plaintiff's concern in an action for mental anguish.[14] It must further appear that the injury was the natural and proximate result of such negligence,[15] that had the message been promptly delivered the injury would not have occurred,[16] and that ordinary care on the part of plaintiff could not have avoided it.[17] Contributory negligence will also defeat a recovery for mental anguish.[18] Where it is held that one cannot recover for mental anguish alone resulting from the failure of a company to deliver a message,[19] there can be no recovery for physical injuries resulting from such anguish.[20] A brother may recover for mental suffering caused by delay in delivering a message.[21] A statute rendering telegraph companies liable for mental anguish applies to any corporation doing a public telegraph business.[22]

Exemplary damages.[23]—Punitive damages may be recovered for wanton and willful negligence in delivering a message.[24] This rule applies also under statutes allowing recovery for mental anguish although the statute does not mention such damages.[25] A conscious failure to exercise due care in transmitting a message constitutes willfulness.[26]

13. Demurrer sustained where complaint failed to show that telegram was sent for plaintiff's benefit. Rogers v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 772. Telegram held sufficient in itself to show close relation between sendee and a party fatally shot, and this, with information given by the sender, held sufficient to authorize the introduction of evidence as to affection. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 312. Where one could not attend the funeral of a relative because of a negligent delay on the part of a telegraph company in delivering the message announcing the death, damages for mental anguish could be recovered if the telegram showed a probability that he would have arrived in time and would have gone if the message had been promptly delivered, even if the time for the funeral had been fixed so that he could not have arrived in time when he did not know this fact. Hughes v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 52 S. E. 107. Telegraph company charged with notice that addressee would probably desire to attend the funeral of her son, and the route she would have taken was not so improbable as not to be contemplated by the parties. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ford [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 677. Evidence that wife notified operator that husband would be worried unless he got the message held sufficient to constitute notice. Dayvis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 139 N. C. 79, 51 S. E. 898. Plaintiff could not recover for absence of relatives from funeral of his wife where the message announcing the death did not show that it was intended they should come. Du Bose v. Western Union Tel. 16. Charge that if jury believed the evidence they should return verdict for actual damages caused by failure to deliver telegram held error, where jury might have found that a physician could not have arrived even if message had been delivered. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Haley [Ala.] 39 So. 386. Evidence held to show that had message been delivered plaintiff would have taken a certain route to attend the funeral of her son. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ford [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 677. Evidence held sufficient to show that plaintiff would have attended funeral of son had she received message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shaw [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 58.

17. Plaintiff held not entitled to damages for mental anguish because of failure to attend her father's funeral where she learned the facts at 11 o'clock P. M. Saturday, and two trains left Sunday morning which would have taken her to the funeral in time. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Baker [C. C. A.] 140 F. 315.

18. Held contributory negligence for plaintiff not to go three miles and borrow the fare sufficient to go and return from a funeral where she had 4 hours in which to traverse it by daylight in the city. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Baker [C. C. A.] 140 F. 315.

33. Where a notice of claim for damages for delay in delivering a message was not alleged in the complaint as required by Code § 2164, it was error, under a general denial, to permit plaintiff to prove it. Heald v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 588. In such case a motion to arrest judgment in favor of plaintiff should have been sustained where plaintiff failed to amend as allowed by Code § 3760. Id. A demurrer to the whole complaint in an action for failure to deliver a message held too broad, where mental anguish was not set up as a separate cause of action but merely as an element of damages, and it was sought to eliminate that feature. strued.[37] The statute of Arkansas imposing a penalty for refusing to transmit messages applies only to a willful and negligent refusal.[38] The word "dispatches" as used in the Missouri statute has reference to a written dispatch, and a company is not liable for refusing to place a party in personal communication with another.[39] A clause exempting the telegraph company from damages or statutory penalties unless claims are presented within sixty days applies to actions for penalties as well as to actions for damages,[40] and the parties may agree that a message shall be subject to delays and thus waive a penalty in favor of an individual;[41] but a statute imposing penalties for delay in the "transmission" of messages has been held to include delay in delivery as well as in transmission;[42] and the words "discrimination" and "impartiality," as used in the Indiana statute do not imply intentional and positive wrongdoing as distinguished from negligence.[43] Under a statute imposing a penalty for failure to faithfully and promptly transmit messages, a company is liable where the points of receipt and destination are within the state, although part of the transmission was over the company's lines in another state.[44]

§ 4. Telephone service.[45]—Equity will not compel specific performance of a contract by a telephone company to furnish service at a rate which, by reason of increased cost of service, has become so low as to bankrupt the company, if continued.[46] Where a telephone company reasonably suspects that telephone service applied for will be used for illegal purposes, it may properly require the applicant to give assurance that he will not use it for such purposes and may deny service on failure to give such assurance.[47] Under a contract to furnish service at a certain rate provided subscribers use their own instruments, a company may still use its own instruments, if desired, but cannot make any extra charge on that account.[48]

§ 5. Quotations and ticker service.[49]—Where a telegraph company has furnished continuous quotations of prices of products on a board of trade for such a length of time as to make such quotations necessary for business in such products, it is bound to furnish such quotations on equal terms so long as it continues in that business,[50] but a telegraph company is not bound to furnish quotations intended to be used for gambling purposes.[51]

§ 6. Rates, tariffs, and rentals.[52]—A court of equity can compel a telephone company to furnish service at a reasonable and just price and at uniform rates, and can prevent discrimination,[53] but the power to regulate telephone rates is not a power incidental to the government of a city,[54] hence a municipality cannot fix rates for telephone service unless authority to do so has been delegated to it by the state.[55] A bill in equity will lie to enjoin the enforcement of an unconstitutional ordinance fixing unreasonably low rates where a multiplicity of suits can thereby be avoided.[56] Where a telephone company has agreed not to increase its rates for a specified time, it cannot increase the rates during that time by reason of later improvements in the service.[57]

MENTAL SUFFERING AS AN ELEMENT OF DAMAGES IN TELEGRAPH CASES.

[Special Article by Oscar Hallam.*]

Reference should also be had to the appropriate section of the topic Telegraphs and Telephones,[59] and also to a previously published special article by the same author.[60]

§ 1. Preliminary considerations.—The doctrine of damages for mental pain resulting from the negligent failure of a telegraph company to seasonably deliver a message had its origin in the case of So Relle v. Western Union,[60a] decided in 1881. In that case, a verdict of $1,000 based upon mental suffering on account of delay in delivery to plaintiff of a telegram announcing the death of his mother was sustained. Since that time the courts of various states have dealt with such cases in large numbers. Some have followed the doctrine, others have repudiated it. The conflict is irreconcilable. It has simply been a question of taking opposite sides of the same proposition. The prevailing tendency was, at first, toward the doctrine.[61] In more recent years there has been a reaction, set in motion by the abandonment of the doctrine by the Indiana supreme court, upon recommendation of the court of appeals of that state, after an adherence to it for eleven years,[62] and the repudiation of the doctrine by the Federal courts in some of the states where it had been followed.[63] The doctrine is still substantially adhered to in Texas and has been followed in Iowa,[64] Kentucky,[65] Louisiana,[66] Nebraska,[67] Nevada,[68] North Carolina,[69] Tennessee,[70] the Federal court for one district of Texas,[71] and with some modification in Alabama.[72] It has been repudiated in Arkansas,[73] Dakota,[74] Florida,[75] Georgia,[76] Indiana,[77] Kansas,[78] Minnesota,[79] Mississippi,[80] Missouri,[81] New York,[82] Ohio,[83] Oklahoma,[84] South Carolina,[85] Virginia,[86] West Virginia,[87] Wisconsin,[88] and the federal courts for Georgia, Tennessee, Virginia, and one district of Texas.[89] It will accordingly be observed that the weight of authority is against it.

It may be well, at the outset, to note the nature and scope of the cases in which the doctrine has been followed. This suggests several considerations.

Is the action on contract or in tort? Many of the cases do not make it clear

61. Sutherland on Damages [3rd Ed.] § 97 (1892) reviews the situation as follows: According to the weight of authority and the tendency of late decisions, if a message delivered to a telegraph company apprises the agent who receives it, or he is otherwise informed, that it is of immediate importance to the party to whom it is addressed and relates to the illness, death or burial of some near member of his family, the negligent failure to deliver it makes the company liable to him for such mental distress as he may sustain, in consequence, or to the sender as may be endured by him, if the person who is summoned by it fails to arrive by reason of neglect to deliver it in time.

whether the action is to be considered one for breach of contract or in tort.[89] Some sustain the doctrine only where the action is upon a breach of contract,[90] others only on the theory that it is in tort,[90a] others again hold that it may be sustained on either theory,[91] and some of the courts opposed to the doctrine have treated the action as on contract and have based their opposition in some measure on the ground that mental suffering is not to be recognized as an element of damages in actions on contract.[92]

In one case[92a] it is said, "The action is not one of tort but on contract; its gist and gravamen being the breach of the contract. * * * The best test of this is the fact that such an action could not be maintained without pleading and proving the contract." That this is not a true test is demonstrated by another decision of the same court[92b] where it is said of an action by a passenger, ejected from a train, "it is evident that plaintiff could not have maintained the action at all without pleading and proving his contract with the defendant and its breach. * * * In that sense it is an action arising on contract. But it is not an action on the contract, properly so called. The gist or gravamen of it is a tortious act, which constituted a breach of contract. It is what is sometimes called an action for tort founded on contract. * * * In considering the measure of damages

90. In Alabama, it is held that where the action is on contract, there may be a recovery for mental suffering, but if the declaration is in tort, there can be no recovery when it is not shown to have been accompanied by other damage resulting from the wrong. This is on the theory that "damages for mental suffering are not recoverable except where there is a right of recovery aside from such injuries." Blount v. Western Union Tel. Co., 126 Ala. 105, 27 So. 779; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kirichbaum, 132 Ala. 535, 31 So. 607; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blocker, 138 Ala. 484, 35 So. 468.

90a. The cases supporting the doctrine generally follow this line and hold that "it is not a mere breach of contract, but a failure to perform a duty which rests upon it as a servant of the public." Reese v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 Ind. 294, 24 N. E. 163. That the telegraph company owes to the public the duty to promptly deliver a telegram, irrespective of contract, and failure to deliver a message makes the company liable for mental anguish not as breach of contract but of public duty. Cashion v. Western Union Tel. Co., 124 N. C. 459, 32 S. E. 746.

91. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Linn, 87 Tex. 7, 26 S. W. 490, the court suggests both theories but adopts neither.

In Bryan v. Western Union Tel. Co., 133 N. C. 603, 45 S. E. 938, it is said that if such action is for breach of contract, there is the same reason for recovery of damages without physical injury as in actions for breach of contract of marriage and the like, i. e., that in both cases the parties have notice that mental anguish will be the probable consequence of a breach of contract. If viewed as an action of tort there is the same ground of recovery of damages for mental anguish caused thereby as in action for seduction and the like, besides there is the further reason that the company has violated a public duty.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Moore, 76 Tex. 66, 12 S. W. 949, it is said, "It is true that the damages recoverable in actions of this character are limited to such as may reasonably be presumed to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract is made," and in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 71 Tex. 723, 10 S. W. 323, it was said that only such damages as might naturally result from a failure to receive the message will be considered as being within the contemplation of the parties. These observations are consistent only with the treatment of the action as one on contract, but in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hamilton, 36 Tex. 390, 81 S. W. 1052, the action is clearly treated as in tort.

In Mentzer v. Western Union Tel. Co., 93 Iowa, 752, 62 N. W. 1, the court justifies recovery on the ground of contract, but holds that the real nature of the action is tort and the true principle of recovery is that "he who is responsible for a negligent act must answer for all the injurious results which flow therefrom, by ordinary, natural sequence, without the interposition of any other negligent act or overpowering force." The same court in the case of Cowan v. Western Union Tel. Co., 122 Iowa, 379, 98 N. W. 281, after stating the rule of damages in tort, held that under this rule damages for mental suffering may in such cases be recovered.

92. In Connell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 116 Mo. 34, 22 S. W. 345, the court said, "the proposition relates simply to damages arising from a breach of contract."

and the elements of damage proper to be considered, the courts in this country have almost universally treated such actions as sounding in tort." This last case states the rule now generally followed in actions by passenger against carrier and under the analogy of such cases it is held that the failure of a telegraph company to deliver a telegram in ordinary commercial transactions constitutes a tort.[92c] It may fairly be said that the action to recover for failure to deliver a telegram is to be considered as an action in tort and the damages recoverable are to be determined on the principles applicable to tort actions.[93]

§ 2. Who may maintain action. Sender.—If the doctrine is to be sustained at all the sender may clearly maintain an action where he is the party aggrieved.[94]

Addressee.—Whether the addressee may maintain such an action is a more controverted question. The general rule is that the addressee of a telegram may sue for nondelivery, or delay in delivery, if it appear that he procured it to be sent or that he was to be benefited by the contract for sending the message, and this fact was made known to the company when it received the message for transmission either from the language of the message or otherwise.[95] In such case the telegraph company has been said to become the common agent of both parties.[95a] In most cases, however, the liability is regarded as in tort.[95b] In a leading case it is held that the addressee of a telegram may recover for mental suffering for a negligent delay in its delivery. In that case the message showed unmistakably that it was intended for the benefit of the plaintiff.[95c] In the So Relle case[95d] the plaintiff was the addressee of a telegram announcing the death of his mother. He sustained no contract relation with the company and the sender sustained to him no relation of agency. He was held entitled to recover. This much of the So Relle case was overruled by a later case[95e] in which it was held there could be no recovery by a father for delay in delivering to him a message announcing the death of the son's wife and child. The

93. This fact is recognized by many of the cases opposed to the mental suffering doctrine (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 64, 60 N. E. 674, 1080), and the arguments advanced in favor of the doctrine are met on that assumption.

94. Accordingly, it has been held that a wife about to be confined may recover for mental suffering on account of failure to deliver a message sent by her to her husband (Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 107 N. C. 449, 12 S. E. 427) and also for mental anxiety for delay in delivering a telegram sent in her behalf by her husband to a physician to attend her (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Church [Neb.] 90 N. W. 878; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507, 9 S. W. 598). In the last cited case it was held that the husband could not in such case recover for injury to his feelings. In other cases in the same state, however, it has been held that a father may recover for mental anguish, caused by witnessing the suffering of a sick child, where such anguish is caused by the negligent failure of the company to promptly deliver the father's message to a physician. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cavin, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 152, 70 S. W. 229; Gulf etc., Tel v. Richardson, 79 Tex. 649, 15 S. W. 689. In Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 563, it was held that plaintiff, a son, might recover on account of mental anguish resulting from failure to deliver a telegram sent by him to his father announcing the death of plaintiff's wife and child and asking the father to come to his assistance, and in another state it was held that for delay in delivering a message by a husband to a physician which read "Come first train to see my wife, very low" the mental anxiety of the husband was a proper element of damage. court said of the So Relle case, "The opinion in that case does seem to maintain the proposition necessary to sustain this action; but we are of the opinion that it cannot be sustained upon principle, nor upon the authority of adjudicated cases." Although overruling the So Relle case the court did not repudiate the mental suffering doctrine, but did hold that recovery for mental suffering must be based upon some legal wrong to the plaintiff, that the action cannot be maintained independently of a right of action on other grounds for at least nominal damages, and that an addressee who had sustained no breach of contract nor any damage to his person, name or estate, could not maintain the action where the mental distress resulted from the breach of a contract made with and for the benefit of another, to which he is not a privy, nor where it resulted from a tort, through which some other person receives an injury personal to himself, for which damages may be given. In a still later case [95f] the court hews close to this line, but allowed recovery in view of the fact that the plaintiff, addressee, had procured the telegram to be sent to him. In a still later case in the same state the doors are thrown wide open and it is held that the question as to who may maintain such an action does not depend upon the payment of the fee or upon the question whether the sender had been previously constituted an agent for that purpose by the party to whom the dispatch is sent, but upon the question, who was in fact served and who is damaged.[95g] In Iowa it is held that the addressee may recover, though he made no contract with the defendant,[95h] and elsewhere it has been held that recovery may be had by an addressee for a husband's disappointment and suffering in being kept away from the bedside of his sick wife,[95i] for failure to deliver a telegram announcing the death of plaintiff's father,[95j] where plaintiff was prevented by delay in delivery of a telegram from reaching his mother's bedside before her death,[95k] and for failure to transmit money by telegraph to a wife for transportation of the body of her husband.[95l]

Third persons.—It has been held that where a telegraph message on its face discloses that it is sent for the benefit of a third person, the latter was entitled to sue for damages sustained by the company's delay in delivery.[96]

§ 3. What relationship required.—Where the doctrine prevails, it is generally held that relationship of some sort between the parties to the transaction is necessary to support a recovery. No very definite rule is anywhere laid down as to what degree of relationship is required. Any one in loco parentis is within the rule.[97] So is a grandparent,[97a] a second cousin,[97b] and a stepson,[97c] and it has even been held that a message announcing the illness of sender's wife to his sister's husband is within

W. 857, it was held in that case that recovery may be had for the benefit of the wife of the addressee for failure to deliver a telegram announcing that her brother was dying.

the rule.[97d] It has elsewhere been held that a stepson is not within the rule,[97e] nor uncle and niece,[97f] and that whether a brother-in-law is or not is a matter of proof. That mental anguish will not in such case be presumed and that plaintiff cannot recover unless he proves that at the time the message was delivered to the defendant, the latter was notified of the special tender relations existing between plaintiff and his brother-in-law. It is further said that "No doubt cases do exist in which the suffering of a friend is as great as that of a brother under like circumstances, but it is not the common and known result."[97g]

§ 4. What notice to the company is necessary.—The company must in some manner be advised of the significance of the telegram and the situation of the parties or there can be no recovery. Where compensation for mental suffering is sought, either the message must disclose or the sender must inform the company of facts rendering such a result probable.[98] The fact that a message, announcing the death or serious illness of a near relative, is delivered for transmission is held to be notice to the company that mental suffering will probably result to some person if it is not promptly transmitted.[99] But it has been held not necessary that the company should be apprised of the relationship of the parties, if it in plain terms announces the illness of some person.[100] Telegraph companies, it is said, are required to take notice of whatever the dispatch suggests and if further information is needed they must seek it or be held to possess all the knowledge such inquiries could have elicited.[1] All that is necessary is that the message should announce sufficient to inform the company that mental pain will result from nondelivery.[2] It is held sufficient if facts are shown which put the company on inquiry as to the real situation.[3]

§ 5. Relieving anxiety.—If anxiety exists because of the illness of a relative, it is generally held that its continuance as the result of negligent failure to deliver a message which would remove or alleviate it is not an element of damage,[4] but in another case it was held that failure to deliver a telegram which would have relieved the anguish of parents on account of the absence, supposed death, and loss of their young child is an element of damage.[5] Mere "disappointment and regret" it is said are not a subject of recovery under the mental anguish rule.[6]

§ 6. Physical conditions aggravating damages.—If the action is in tort, it should follow that the company is liable for all damages flowing naturally from the wrong, although aggravated by circumstances of physical condition of which the company had no knowledge, within the rule that "a party who commits a trespass or other wrongful act is liable for all the direct injury resulting from such act, although such resulting injury could not have been contemplated as a probable result of the act done."[7]

§ 7. Amount of damages recoverable.—The damages recovered have in many cases been large.[8]

§ 8. Reasons pro and con.—The foregoing cases illustrate conditions which gave birth to the doctrine and also the difficulties in the way of its application. There are strong opinions on both sides of the question.

Thus, in one case,[9] the court said "A telegraph company is a quasi-public agent, and as such it should exercise the extraordinary privileges accorded to it with diligence to the public. If in matters of mere trade it negligently fails to do its duty, it is responsible for all the natural and proximate damage. Is it to be said or held that, as to matters of far greater interest to a person, it shall not be because feelings or affections are only involved? If it negligently fails to deliver a message which closes a trade for $100, or even less, it is responsible for the damage. It is said, however, that if it is guilty of like fault as to a message to the husband that the wife is dying, or the father that his son is dead and will be buried at a certain time, there is no responsibility save that which is nominal. Such rule, at first blush, merits disapproval."

Hamilton, 36 Tex. 300, 81 S. W. 1052, this principle was carried as far as could be desired. The message read, "Come home at once, your wife is very ill, will have to operate." It was held that the company "should be held to know that the young, the old, the large, the small, and the infirm, may be, as they often are, involved in the subject-matter of messages transmitted, and that unusual results often will, and do naturally arise and flow from a want of proper care in their transmission and delivery," and that it was accordingly proper to take into consideration the fact that plaintiff's wife was a very large woman, and that decomposition was more rapid and embalming more difficult in case of large bodies, although the company had no knowledge of her peculiar size, citing Western Union Tel. Co. v. Linn, 87 Tex. 7, 26 S. W. 490; McAllen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 226, 7 S. W. 715. But see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pearce, 82 Miss. 487, 34 So. 152.

In another,[9a] it is said that to hold that the defendant is not liable "would justify the conclusion that the defendant with impunity might have refused to receive and transmit such messages at all, and that it has the right in the future to do as it has done in this case. * * * To such a result we think no court should submit. The telegraph company is the servant, rather than the master, of its patrons. It is their prerogative to determine what messages they will present; and, so they are lawful, it is bound by law, upon payment of its toll, to transmit and deliver them correctly and promptly. It has no right to say what is important and what is not; what will be profitable to the receiver and what will not; what has a pecuniary value, and what has not; but its single and plain duty is to make the transmission and delivery with promptitude and accuracy, when that is done its responsibility is ended. When it is omitted, through negligence, the company must answer for all injury resulting, whether to the feelings or to the purse, one or both, subject alone to the proviso that the injury be the natural and direct consequence of the negligent act. That the amount of damages allowable in such a case as this is not capable of easy and accurate mathematical computation is freely conceded; but that should not be a sufficient reason for refusing or defeating the right of action altogether, for the same objection may be urged with the same force in all cases where mental and bodily suffering are treated as proper elements of damage. Nor do we think the suggestion that the decision we are making may encourage the bringing of other suits of a similar nature, is of very great moment. It is rather to be hoped that instances of such dereliction of plain, easy and important duty have not been very numerous in the past, and that they will seldom transpire in the future."

On the other hand, in an able dissenting opinion in this same case, it is said: "The reason why an independent action for such injuries cannot and ought not to be sustained is found in the remoteness of such damages. Such injuries are generally more sentimental than substantial. The suffering of one under precisely the same circumstances would be no test of the suffering of another. Vague and shadowy, there is no possible standard by which such an injury can be justly compensated, or even approximately measured. Easily simulated, and impossible to disprove, it falls within all of the objections to speculative damages, which are universally excluded because of their uncertain character. That damages so imaginary, so metaphysical, so sentimental, shall be ascertained and assessed by a jury with justness, not by way of punishment to the defendant, but as mere compensation to the plaintiff, is not to be expected. That the grief natural to the death of a loved relative shall be separated from the added grief and anguish resulting from delayed information of such mortal illness or death, and compensation given for the latter only, is the task imposed by the law, as determined by the majority."

The United States circuit court for the Northern District of Texas repudiated the Texas doctrine and held damages for mental anguish resulting from simple negligence in the prompt delivery of a telegram are too uncertain, remote, and speculative to be recoverable. It was held that this was a question of general law on which a Federal court is not bound by the decisions of the state where the cause of action arises.[9b]

In Mississippi it was said: "We are not disposed to depart from what we consider the old and settled principles of law, nor to follow the few courts in which the new rule has been announced. The difficulty of applying any measure of damages for bodily injury is universally recognized and commented on by the courts. But in that class of cases demands for simulated or imaginary injuries are far less likely to be made than will be those in suits for mental pain alone. No one but the plaintiff can know whether he really suffers any mental disturbance, and its extent and severity must depend upon his own mental peculiarity."[9c]

Likewise, in Minnesota the court said: "The difficulty is in the character of the damages. The injuries in such case are too hard to determine with any reasonable certainty, are more often assumed than real; and the suit is too liable to be wholly speculative. Damages for mental suffering open into a field without boundaries, and there is no principle by which the court can limit the amount of damages."[9d]

The opinion in a late Indiana case[10] is probably the strongest presentation of the negative of the proposition. Of the reasons given against the doctrine the following are very convincing: (1) There is no open or practicable manner by which the damages occasioned by a negligent act that causes only mental anguish can be assessed. It is not a question of difficulties purely. The parties have not an even chance. The mental anguish doctrine awards damages for a state of mind not provable by evidence open to both parties. (2) The mental anguish doctrine warps the rules of evidence, which forbid a witness to testify what he would or would not have done in a stated contingency.[11] (3) It gives freest hand in collecting compensatory damages to the plaintiff who is most moving in depicting an alleged psychical condition, and readiest to declare what he would have done under circumstances that never occurred. (4) It is a wrongful discrimination. Unless the addressee is a relative, there can be no legal mental anguish. "The Horatian heirs who have been itching for the ancestral estates may recover on the strength of this mourning raiment, while a David who misses the last look upon the face of his Jonathan gets nothing for his bleeding heart." And there is much force in the further suggestion that "the difficulties of navigation, without chart or compass, are understandable without experiment, but the experiences of the courts that uphold the mental-anguish doctrine probably outrun any mere a priori conjecture as to possibilities."

The doctrine is not without substantial reason to support it, but the difficulties in its practical application are such that in recent years it has not gained ground. On the contrary, the states which have recently considered the question for the first time have for the most part repudiated the doctrine.

TENANTS IN COMMON AND JOINT TENANTS.

or devise, to two or more, creates a tenancy in common, unless a contrary intent is expressed.[14] A grantee of a tenant in common becomes a tenant in common.[15] A tenant by curtesy being entitled to the exclusive possession and occupancy of the land, against everybody as well as to the rents, issues, and profits arising therefrom during his life, is not a co-tenant with the heirs and remaindermen.[16, 17] In California a homestead cannot be created out of lands held in co-tenancy so as to come within the exemption laws.[18] In Montana, by statute,[19] the difference between estates in common and in severalty are almost entirely abolished, leaving only the duty to protect and preserve the estate of a co-tenant, and the right of partition.[20] At common law, dower rights might be held in common with the rights of other co-tenants.[21] A widow's dower interest does not attach to any particular part of a tenancy in common unless the same has been partitioned before her husband's death.[22]

Joint tenancy, whether in land or personalty, is not favored either in law or equity, and it will never be inferred where any other deduction can be fairly made.[23] A conveyance to several with words of survivorship creates a joint tenancy,[24] but a mere gift or conveyance to several does not, except they be husband and wife.[25] By a divorce a tenancy in entirety is destroyed and becomes a tenancy in common.[26]

§ 2. Rights and liabilities between tenants.[27] Title and interests.[28]—Lands owned in common may be so held as long as the tenants desire.[29] The interest of each tenant in common is an undivided interest in the whole,[30] and each is entitled, equally with all the others, to the entire possession of the whole.[31] By virtue of this unity of interest, co-tenants sustain a fiduciary relation towards each other,[32] and neither will be permitted to deal with the property to the prejudice of his co-tenants.[33] A tenant in common cannot sell his interest in merely a parcel of the common premises,[34] but must dispose of his interest or some aliquot part thereof in the whole property.[35] They may contract with each other with reference to common property.[36] Co-tenants, obtaining a patent to common property from the United States, take title in trust for one entitled to a share but whose name accidentally or purposely has been omitted.[37] The paying of taxes by the tenant would be presumed to be on behalf of their co-owner.[38] Any title acquired by one co-tenant by actual conveyance, legal presumption, or otherwise, inures to the benefit of all.[39] In fact, any rights acquired by one against strangers,[40] or any acts in regard to the common estate, beneficial thereto, will be presumed to be for and will inure to the benefit of all.[41] This rule, however, is merely one of presumption.[42]

While redemption by one of two joint owners inures to the benefit of both, a stranger buying an equity of redemption at a foreclosure sale buys it for his own benefit,[43] and this is true even though he subsequently purchases the undivided interest of one of the joint owners.[44] Likewise, where a tenant in common claims adversely to his co-tenants, anything that he may do thereafter in purchasing outstanding titles or improving property is thereafter presumed to be done for his own benefit.[45]

Under a statute providing that a co-owner's share in mining property will be forfeited for failure to pay share of expenses on notice to him served personally or published 90 days,[46] the notice must contain his name, and one addressed to "whom it may concern" will not suffice.[47]

Tax title (Moragne v. Moragne [Ala.] 39 So. 161; Stoll v. Griffith [Wash.] 82 P. 1025), based by some courts upon the confidential relation existing between the co-tenants, others upon the ground that the obligation to pay taxes resting equally on all co-tenants, one tenant cannot be permitted to take advantage of his own remissness (Stoll v. Griffith [Wash.] 82 P. 1025), but some courts hold that a tenant in common, buying in a tax title for taxes which accrued before he acquired his interest in the land and which he was not obligated to pay, may thereby acquire title to the common property (Id).

and possession of all[49] and inures to the benefit of all,[50] but this presumption of holding for benefit of co-tenants may be overthrown by facts.[51] The rule at common law was that, where one co-tenant occupied the common property, and took the whole profit, the other had no cause of action against him unless the acts of the occupant amounted to an ouster of his companion, or unless the occupant held under an agreement by which he became bailiff for the other as to his share.[52] The statute of Anne was enacted to give more suitable means of redress to a co-tenant to obtain his share of the rents and profits. By it, one co-tenant receiving more than his share of the rents and profits from another person, became a bailiff of the other co-tenant, but when he occupied and cultivated the ground himself, he could not be made to account for any part of them.[53] In the one case, ejectment lay in favor of the ousted co-tenant to admit him into joint possession, in the other, he had his action of account for his share of the rents and profits.[54]

Adverse possession.[55]—By reason of their unity of possession the general rule is that statute of limitations does not run as between tenants in common,[56] but if as a matter of fact the entry and the possession of one is adverse to the other, a right of action may be barred or title may be acquired under a statute of limitations.[57] The four elements of such adverse possession by a co-tenant are hostile entry,[58] adverse occupation,[59] ouster,[60] and actual or constructive notice to co-tenants.[61]

Hostile entry.—To be hostile, an entry by a co-tenant must be under a claim of ownership in severalty of either the whole or a part of the estate.[62] It is generally under a deed in severalty.[63] Such an entry would not be entry as a co-tenant.[64] Title by adverse possession under such entry will accrue at the end of the statutory period, regardless of the time when the deed is put on record or even if not recorded at all.[65] It is permissible to show the character of the entry and possession by declarations made during such adverse holding.[66] One may enter as a tenant in common and gain title by adverse possession for himself and his co-tenants against a third person.[67]

Adverse occupation.—As to co-tenants, the character of occupancy necessary to constitute adverse possession is very different from that obtaining in the case of strangers.[68] Open, notorious, and exclusive occupation, accompanied with open claims of title and improvements made, will establish adverse possession against a co-tenant,[69] wholly within the claimant's own right.[70] Again, it has been said the occupation of one tenant in common is adverse to a co-tenant where it is of such a character as to give notice to the co-tenant that his title is not acknowledged and that possession is adverse to him.[71] Mere occupation by a co-tenant cannot ripen into adverse possession, no matter how full and complete,[72] nor how long continued,[73] unless inconsistent with a tenancy in common.[74]

Possession under a deed from a co-tenant reserving mineral rights will not ripen into adverse possession as to these.[75] There is nothing in the relation of heirs which will prevent the possession of one from becoming hostile to the others.[76] Stronger evidence is required to prove adverse holding by a tenant in common than by a stranger.[77] The claim of exclusive right may be established by proof that one tenant in common has entered on the whole land and taken possession of and occupied the whole, claiming the profits for the legal period, without acknowledging the claim of his co-tenant.[78] While this would not afford a legal presumption, justifying the court in taking the case from the jury, still therefrom the jury should presume an actual ouster, though none be proved.[79] Where one takes possession of land under a deed, the terms of the instrument may be very important as indicating the character of the claim asserted.[80]

Ouster.[81]—To disseise a co-tenant there must be an ouster.[82] Many cases state that an actual ouster is necessary,[83] but according to some a constructive ouster suf-

Sanders [Pa.] 62 A. 27). Payment of taxes by a tenant in common will be held to have been made for the benefit of all the tenants in common, and does not entitle him to the benefit of Rev. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 54, 55, declaring that one who pays taxes for 10 successive years, being in actual possession of the land under claim of color of title, or having color of title of land unoccupied, will constitute adverse possession. fices,[84] and a leading author says that an ouster is necessary but does not differentiate the two.[85] A presumption of ouster arises on failure to assert title by a co-tenant for the statutory length of time after an attempted conveyance in severalty by a tenant in common.[86] Mere possession is not an ouster,[87] nor the taking of a tax deed to unimproved, wild land, without any exclusive residence upon and occupation of the same,[88] but entry under a deed in severalty would be,[89] likewise, long, exclusive, and uninterrupted possession by one, without any possession or claim for profits by the other.[90] However, the evidence necessary to establish ouster by a tenant in common must be clear, positive, and unequivocal.[91]

Lester, 48 Misc. 13, 96 N. Y. S. 67.

Note: In 1818, one Thayer died intestate seised of certain real estate here in dispute, leaving a widow and three daughters, one of whom, Mary by name, is the great grandmother of the petitioner and through whom she claims. Mary was the owner of one undivided third subject to her mother's right of dower. In 1826 the husband of one of the daughters, and a third person, purchased the interest of the widow and the second daughter, receiving deeds therefor. These grantees, in 1829, conveyed the whole of the property by warranty deed, containing the usual covenants, and the wife joined in relinquishment of her right and claims. This deed, acknowledged by all three, was not recorded until August 22, 1902. Samuel Dyer, the father of defendant, and from whom he claims, entered into possession under this deed in 1835, and from that time until the present, the possession of father and son, respectively, has been open, peaceable, continuous, and exclusive. On June 2, 1886, Mary, then 86 years of age and a widow, conveyed by quitclaim deed to her son, petitioner's grandfather, "all right and title which I hold in said property." Held that the possession of the Dyers was such as to constitute an ouster and Mary's right was barred. Joyce v. Dyer [Mass.] 75 N. E. 81. While the conveyance to Samuel Dyer purported to convey the entire property, it did not convey the interest of Mary, and therefore Samuel Dyer became a tenant in common with her. The general rule is that the possession of one tenant in common, although exclusive, does not amount to a disseisin of the co-tenant, for his possession is to be taken as the possession of the co-tenant, and not adverse and therefore the co-tenant will not be barred by lapse of time. Alexander v. Kennedy, 10 Tex. 488, 70 Am. Dec. 358; Hogg v. Beerman, 41 Ohio St. 81, 52 Am. Rep. 71; Coleman v. Clements, 21 Cal. 245. However, there may be an ouster of one tenant in common by the other and the possession thereafter becomes adverse, and if continued for a sufficient length of time, the right of the co-tenant out of possession may become barred. Rickard v. Rickard, 13 Pick. [Mass.] 251, 253; Doe v. McCreary, 2 Ind. 405; Bellis v. Bellis, 122 Mass. 414, 415. All the evidence in this case pointed to an actual ouster and indicated that the possession was not only exclusive but adverse. Dyer did not enter as a tenant in common but claimed the whole under the conveyance. Mary must be presumed to have had notice that the possession was adverse, for while the deed had not been recorded, she lived in intimacy with the Dyers and made no objections whatever to their acts of exclusive possession. At the time she attempted to convey her interest to her son by statute the deed was required to be delivered on the premises. Therefore, as the grantor was then disseised, the deed was of no effect even if she had an interest to convey. Sohier v. Coffin, 101 Mass. 179.—4 Mich. L. R. 246.

structive.[94] "Actual adverse possession" is presumptive notice.[95] It is not notice of a hostile holding if a tenant in common claims to hold land adversely when there is no muniment of title on which to found the claim.[96]

Rents, profits, and proceeds.[97]—At common law a tenant in common could not have an accounting for rents and profits from the occupying tenant in the absence of an express contract, even though excluded from the common property.[98] Most states have abrogated the common-law rules by statutes.[99] A tenant in common occupying premises without denying the rights of her co-tenants, nor excluding them from the enjoyment of the property, is not obligated to pay rent in the absence of an express agreement,[1] nor to pay for the use and occupation of the premises,[2] but if he receives rent from a third person, he must account for it,[3] and if there is an agreement to pay rent, though no definite amount is mentioned, the rule is otherwise.[4] The exclusive use by one is a sufficient consideration to support his promise to pay rent at a stipulated rate.[5] However, where property is operated at a loss, a co-tenant is not entitled to an accounting for rents and profits.[6] One who sues for complete title but establishes only the rights of a tenant in common may recover to the extent of his rights proven in rent, lands, and contribution for taxes paid.[7] At the common law a co-tenant could work open mines and appropriate the proceeds so long as he did nothing amounting to an ouster or unlawful destruction of the common property,[8] but a co-tenant taking oil under a mistaken notion that he owned the entire tract, being innocent of fraud, must nevertheless account for the value of the oil after production and not in place.[9]

8. Now, by statute (Code Civ. Proc. 1895,

A tenant in common does not need to account for what the rental value of the premises might have been or should have been under proper management, but only for the actual amount received above his just share.[10]

Generally, the lien of a co-tenant for rents and profits takes precedence of other incumbrances,[11] but vendors' liens are superior to the liens of co-tenants arising subsequently,[12] nor will the rule be applied to every claim arising between co-tenants without regard to how it came to arise,[13] for an ordinary trust deed previously executed may take precedence of a co-tenant's lien for rents and profits under circumstances making it inequitable to give the latter lien priority,[14] and even a simple mortgage may under circumstances of peculiar negligence on the part of a co-tenant take precedence.[15]

Guardians must account for rents and profits, not as tenants in common but as guardians, where they are co-tenants with their infant wards,[16] and a guardian de facto is chargeable with an infant's share in the proceeds of joint property, whether he rents the same to strangers or occupies it himself.[17] The fact that an infant's interest in land was not definitely ascertained does not relieve the guardian from accounting therefor.[18] Where a partition has taken place, an infant is entitled to the proceeds from the part apportioned to himself, not merely a proportional part of the whole.[19]

Contribution.[20]—A tenant in common may require contribution from co-tenants for improvements made in good faith,[21] for the payment of taxes above the amounts of rent received,[22] for care of the property and collection of rents by one co-tenant,[23] for the purchase of an outstanding title or incumbrance,[24] for the purchase of dower and homestead rights,[25] and for expenses incurred in the prosecution or defense of a lawsuit for the benefit of the joint property;[26] but it is well settled that a tenant in common guilty of mala fides cannot recover for improvements put upon the property,[27] nor his grantee, who is not an innocent purchaser.[28] Equity requires contribution from tenants in common only to prevent injustice.[29]

Subrogation.[30]—Where the equity of the case would make it unjust to apply the doctrine of subrogation, the courts will refuse to apply it.[31]

Agency.[32]—An unauthorized leasing by one tenant of common property is not binding on his co-tenants,[33] whether of a part[34] or of the entire premises.[35] Under such a conveyance the grantee could only occupy the position of his grantor. Under no circumstances would his rights be greater,[36] and the grant would not even be valid against the grantor if its enforcement would be prejudicial to his co-tenants,[37] nor can one tenant in common by acquiescence change a peaceable into a hostile entry so as to bind her co-tenants.[38] Where one tenant in common has been in the habit of managing the joint property for his co-tenants, but on selling any has always consulted them, a sale without such consultation would not be binding, no written authority existing.[39] One tenant may orally ratify a sale authorized by a co-tenant and be bound thereby.[40] A tenant in common may be estopped from denying the validity of sale of his interest by a co-tenant.[41] Acceptance of the benefits of a lawsuit engaged in by one tenant in common for the joint property by a co-tenant amounts to a ratification thereof,[42] but a bill asking for an accounting for rent received under a lease by a co-tenant does not necessarily ratify the lease.[43]

Conversion.[44]—A refusal by one tenant in common to yield exclusive control to another tenant in common is not conversion.[45]

Trespass and waste.[46]—In West Virginia, by statute,[47] tenants in common, joint tion (Id.). The mere fact that a co-tenant did not want the suit brought or defended, or that he remained inactive, will not relieve him from his share of the burden of the litigation so long as he accepts its benefits. Id.

tenants, and co-parceners, are made liable to one another for waste.[48] The ousted co-tenant may recover damages from his co-tenant on plea of trespass.[49]

Actions.[50]—No action of ejectment will lie against a co-tenant[51] unless his entry is hostile.[52] The royalties received by and due to a co-tenant are a proper measure of mesne profits in an action for ejectment and damages.[53] An ouster gives rise to a suit in trespass and damages.[54] A tenant in common, in suit to recover his rights, must generally allege a demand and refusal.[55] A co-tenant is not a necessary party defendant in an action to quiet title.[56] In Montana an action may be maintained for use and occupation, and in an action for an accounting must aver demand for a general accounting and a refusal, but may resort to any action most appropriate.[57]

Partition.[58]—Any tenant in common may ask for partition,[59] and where an ancestor is presumed dead,[60] ordinarily, it will not be refused at the suit of heirs unless it affirmatively appears that there are outstanding debts of the ancestor.[61] In a suit for partition, where the divorced wife claims the entire fee of a former tenancy in entirety on the ground that the land was purchased by her means, the burden of proof is on her.[62] Fraud in partition is a ground for redistribution.[63] A voluntary partition or division of lands by co-tenants may be established by any competent evidence.[64]

One who buys land from a tenant in common with notice of oral partition and acts thereunder cannot acquire more rights than his grantor had.[65] On oral partition, followed by actual occupation of the partitioned lands, and the execution of a deed by one co-tenant to the other to his share binds the latter, though he does not execute a deed to the former.[66] After the death of a co-tenant, her acts and declarations are admissible in evidence to show the character and extent of her possession under an oral partition.[67] Where lands are of such a character as to render division among claimants impracticable, they will be ordered sold.[68]

TERRITORIES AND FEDERAL POSSESSIONS.

§ 1. Political status.[70]—Congress has power to grant land situated below high-water mark within a territory of the United States.[71] A resident of Porto Rico, who shows birth or naturalization in Porto Rico, need not show further evidence of United States citizenship to register with the U. S. Board of Labor Employment at the U. S. Navy Yard at Washington for employment.[72]

Congress has reserved to itself not only the power to legislate within the District of Columbia, but the power to enact municipal ordinances,[77] and the commissioners of the District have power to make only such police regulations as are authorized by congressional authority.[78] The acts of Congress authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make all reasonable and usual police regulations gives no authority to legislate.[79] Neither the board of school trustees nor the commissioners of the District of Columbia can incur any obligation in the absence of an appropriation by Congress providing for the payment of such obligation.[80]

TIME.[87]

The general method of computing time when an act is required to be done within a certain period from or after a specified time is to exclude the day named and include the last day of the period.[88] Where the last day of a period falls on Sunday, it is generally sufficient if the act required be done on Monday,[89] but when a statute requires an act to be done within a certain time, and the last day to perform falls on Sunday, it cannot be excluded unless the legislature manifestly so intended.[90] Where a statute provides that "at least" so many days or months must intervene between certain events, both terminal days are excluded.[91] Where time is given "until" a certain day, it expires on the preceding day.[92] The term "months" when used in a statute means calendar months in the absence of anything indicating that a contrary meaning is intended.[93] A calendar month is not uniform, but varies according to the Gregorian calendar.[94] A court will take judicial notice that "standard" or "railroad" time has long been universally adopted for designating time.[95] The legal fiction excluding fractions of a day does not apply when a statute provides for the record of the precise time in which an official act is done.[96] The

TOBACCO.

The Indiana anti-cigarette law has been construed as not intending to prohibit the act of smoking cigarettes or keeping them in possession solely for that purpose.[98] The purpose of the Nebraska act is to suppress the traffic in cigarettes, and not to forbid their use,[99] hence the word "manufacture," as used therein, refers only to the business of manufacturing cigarettes for traffic, and the statute does not prohibit the act of rolling cigarettes from one's own materials for one's own use.[1]

Cigarettes are a legitimate article of commerce and hence their importation in original packages for personal consumption involves interstate commerce, and cannot be prohibited by a state legislature,[2] nor do they become subject to state regulation on the termination of the transportation, nor while they are in the importer's possession for personal consumption.[3]

plenary power over ferries and bridges as over public roads,[9] may prohibit the competing operation of free bridges or ferries,[10] and may enjoin the operation of a free ferry or bridge within prohibited distance as established by statute,[11] certain bridges established by municipalities being excepted.[12] The police jury's exclusive right to maintain toll bridges attaches to bridges excepted as soon as the charters of such bridges expire.[13]

Actions to enforce or question right.—In an action to determine a bridge company's right to its franchise and to collect tolls, it is error to grant an order pendente lite restraining defendant from collecting tolls,[14] but the remedy is in appeal, not by mandamus.[15] A petition to enjoin defendants from collecting tolls need not negative matters which constitute a defense.[16] One joint owner of a public toll bridge may maintain an action to enjoin an infringement of its privileges without joining the co-owner as party plaintiff.[17]

Acquisition by public.[18]—Under statutory authority, local divisions of the state may take toll bridges for free use.[19] On the expiration of the charter rights of a toll road company, the road vests in the public, and a subsequent conveyance by the company passes nothing.[20]

NOTE. "Tort liability of contractor or vendor to parties not privy to the contract: It is stated as a general rule of law that a contractor or vendor is not liable to third parties for the negligent construction of a chattel after its completion or sale. Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109. The inroads, however, made upon this doctrine by American decisions (Huset v. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 120 F. 865, 61 L. R. A. 303) give pertinence to a question of its real existence in this country. The principal reason urged in support of the rule in question is that a contractor or vendor owes no legal duty of care in the construction of his wares where there is no privity of contract. The American courts, however, early found such a legal duty owing to third parties where the chattels sold are imminently dangerous to human life. Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397; Devlin v. Smith, 89 N. Y. 470. The principle of these cases has been applied not only where the article is imminently dangerous in its normal state, but also where such imminent danger arises solely from defects in its construction. Skinn v. Reutter, 135 Mich. 57, 106 Am. St. Rep. 384, 63 L. R. A. 743. See 17 Harv. L. R. 274. Thus, in a recent case before the Kansas City Court of Appeals, a bridge company, which had turned over a bridge to county commissioners on a building contract, was held liable to the plaintiff for defects in the bridge which rendered it imminently dangerous to human life and of which the company had notice. Casey v. Wrought Iron Bridge Co., 114 Mo. App. 47, 89 S. W. 330. Nor need the defects even be such as imminently to imperil life; if at the time of completion or sale the contractor or vendor knows of the latent defect, he will be liable, although the danger be not extraordinary. Lewis v. Terry, 111 Cal. 39, 52 Am. St. Rep. 146, 31 L. R. A. 220. An attempt has been made to explain this latter class of cases on the ground of deceit. But to hold that a vendor by the mere sale of a chattel known to be defective, makes, with intent to defraud, a false representation to every probable user of that chattel, and that such third party acts in reliance upon such representation, is such a strain upon actual facts as to call for a broader ground of liability to support the cases. Under the decisions, the legal duty of a contractor or vendor to use care in the construction of chattels seems to extend generally to third parties, except, perhaps, in the single case where the defective article is but slightly dangerous to life, and the vendor has no knowledge of its condition at the time of sale. Schubert v. Clark Co., 49 Minn. 331. The reasoning of American courts in these cases (Huset v. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 120 F. 865, 61 L. R. A. 303) shows a strong inclination to apply the basic principle of all liability for negligence—that where a person sustains such relations to society that danger to others will result from a failure to use due care in his activities, he owes the legal duty of such care to that class of persons likely to be injured by his failure to exercise it. The specific application of this principle would make a contractor or vendor liable to probable lawful consumers for not necessarily enter into a determination whether a cause of action exists.[32] A destruction of a property right arising ex contractu may give rise to a tort.[33] Malicious interference with the business of another with an intent to injure such business is a tort.[34] Every one has an inherent right to the benefits of his contract,[35] and any interference with it unless justifiable gives a cause of action.[36] Under a statute authorizing a town to pay the damages to sheep caused by dogs, and then to proceed against the owner of such dog, such action against the owner is in tort, the town being subrogated to the rights of the sheep owner.[37] A tort cannot be malicious unless done "intentionally."[38]

All parties to a conspiracy to ruin one in his business are liable for all overt acts done pursuant to such conspiracy, whether active participants or not.[39] Every tort-feasor is presumed of law to know the tortious nature of his act.[40]

Negligence to be actionable need not be the sole or immediate cause of the injury, and if the injury would not have happened but for the negligence, and the circumstances are closely connected with the injury in the order of events, an action will lie.[41] A tort feasor cannot contend that the property injured belongs to someone other than the plaintiff, when such person has testified in the case and made no claim.[42]

the negligent construction of chattels, such liability being limited of course by the ordinary rules of 'natural and probable cause' and 'contributory negligence.' 1 Thompson, Negligence, §§ 821, 824; Clerk & Lindsell, Torts [3d Ed.] 442-453; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2d Ed.] 461, 462. The most palpable case for such an extension of a vendor's liability would be in favor of a sub-vendee where the chattel is sold to a retail dealer for the express purpose of resale; but on principle the extension should obtain in favor of every probable, lawful user, and such an extension has, in fact, been recognized in the case of the guest of a vendee who had bought for his own use. Lewis v. Terry, 111 Cal. 39, 52 Am. St. Rep. 146, 31 L. R. A. 220. Though logically applicable to injuries to property, the proposed rule will probably not be extended beyond personal injuries for some time to come, in view of the fact that it is growing out of exceptions established in cases of imminent danger to life. But see Skinn v. Reutter, 135 Mich. 57, 106 Am. St. Rep. 384, 63 L. R. A. 743."—From 19 Harv. L. R. 371.

in place and time, together cause the injury, each is jointly and severally liable for the whole injury.[56] One who negligently places in the hands of another or authorizes the use by another of a dangerous instrument under circumstances that he has reason to know is likely to result in injury is liable to one injured.[57] The rule that where two or more contribute by their wrongdoing to the injury of another, such injured person may recover from all of them in a joint action, or he may pursue one of them and recover from him, in which case the one thus compelled to respond is entitled to neither indemnity nor contribution from those who with him caused the injury, does not apply where the wrongdoer who was compelled to respond for the injury was not, as between the wrongdoers themselves, a wrongdoer at all, and recovery by the injured party from such a party is not a bar to an action by him against the other parties to the wrong.[58]

§ 5. Pleading and procedure as applied to specific torts is elsewhere discussed.[59] In an action for tort it is not necessary to allege and prove nonpayment of the damages,[60] such payment being an affirmative defense.[61] Where one is injured by an act of one of several joint tort feasors, it is not necessary in an action against one to prove that the particular defendant himself did the act which resulted in the injury.[62] In an action to recover damages for a tort, a counterclaim arising out of tort cannot be interposed.[63] It is not necessary that plaintiff prove all the allegations of the complaint.[64] The defense of justification in actions of tort must be specifically pleaded.[65] At common law, settlement with one joint tort feasor bars recovery against the others,[66] and where separate judgments are rendered against joint tort feasors, a satisfaction of one judgment is a satisfaction of all,[67] but the entry of judgment against one does not preclude plaintiff from proceeding against the others.[68] Where the original complaint alleged a tort committed by three joint tort feasors, it is not error to allow it to be amended so as to allege committal by only two.[69]

TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE WITH ANOTHER'S CONTRACT.

[CRITICAL NOTE.]

Interference with contract relations is involved in or is at base of several well known causes of action, such as the old action for enticement of servants founded on the English Statute of Laborers,[70] under some circumstances in actions for slander[71] and actions for deceit,[72] or for conspiracy to obstruct and ruin one's business,[73] or actions where there is some wrong to property rights.[74] There are also some statutes creating a liability either in respect to enticement of any servants, or particularly with reference to agricultural laborers. Some of these statutes impose criminal responsibility.[75]

The particular subject of this note is the tort liability for inducing a breach of contract relations when the predicate for the actions before mentioned does not exist. The cases hold, but not unanimously, that, for maliciously procuring plaintiff's employer to discharge him, an action lies.[76] It is not an essential that by discharge a legal right of servant against master be violated,[77] though there must be discharge.[78] There need be no agreed compensation or wages[79] but only a means of determining the value thereof.[80] Speculative loss of profits from the cutting off of prospects of an admittance to a partnership with the employer will not be reckoned as damages, but knowledge on defendant's part that such expectations existed may be shown on the question of exemplary damages,[81] whether there was or was not a fixed term of service.[82] That defendant, however, in order to coerce a discharge, withheld promised gratuities from the employer, or broke a contract with him, is immaterial to the employee's cause of action[83] except as evidence of malice.[84]

This doctrine is said to have originated in the case of Lumley v. Gye,[85] and is ably commented upon in several notes which follow.[86]

86. From 4 Mich. L. R. 58, 138, by Prof.

"The 'right to contract' is gradually taking on more definite shape by the decisions of the courts in controversies between employers and employees, growing out of existing labor conditions, and arising from the various devices resorted to by one party or the other to secure and maintain a position of advantage over the other.

"The 'right to contract,' as it is sometimes termed, includes certain rights existing aside from the rights created by the contract, either as between the parties to the contract, or as to third parties. As between the parties to the relation, there are rights existing independent of the contract, or before it is entered into,—such as a right by each party not to be defrauded, or put under duress or undue influence, by the other. And as between the parties to the relation or proposed relation and third parties, there are certain rights of non-interference by such third parties, which have been difficult to define. These, of course, can conceivably take two forms: (1) Right to exemption from such interference as prevents or tends to prevent the formation of the contract; and (2) Right to exemption from such interference as induces or tends to induce a breach or termination of the contractual relation already entered into. These latter are usually divided into two classes: (A) Contracts of service, and (B) contracts other than for service; and the first of these may be divided into (a) contracts of service for a definite term, or (b) those terminable at the will of either party. The controversies have been largely concerning 1, A (b), and B.

"Judge Cooley in his work on Torts, p. 328, states the general principle underlying these rights as follows: 'It is part of every man's civil rights that he be left at liberty to refuse business relations with any person whomsoever, whether the refusal rests upon reason, or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice, or malice. With his reasons neither the public nor third parties have any concern. It is also his right to have business relations with any one with whom he can make contracts, and if he is wrongfully deprived of this right by others, he is entitled to redress. Thus if one is prevented by the wrongful act of a third party from securing some employment he has sought, he suffers a legal wrong, provided he can show that the failure to employ him was the direct and natural consequence of the wrongful act.'

"One phase of the question—the right to have an existing contractual relation of service, though terminable at will, not disturbed by a third person without justifiable cause—has been carefully dealt with in a recent case."[87] Quoting Judge Knowl-

87. Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 74 N. E. 603. See, also, ante, Torts, § 1, 6 C. L. The facts in this case were: "This is an action of tort, brought to recover damages sustained by reason of the defendant's malicious interference with the plaintiff's contract of employment." Plaintiff was a shoemaker employed by Goodrich & Co. under a contract terminable at will, and had been so employed for nearly four years. The defendant was the representative, and a member, of the Boot & Shoe Makers' Union. The evidence showed that he caused Goodrich & Co. to discharge the plaintiff greatly to his damage. Shortly before the discharge of the plaintiff, a contract was entered into between the Union and Goodrich & Co., which was signed by the defendant for the Union, and which stipulated that "the employer agrees to hire only members of the Union in good standing, and agrees not to retain any shoe worker in his employment after receiving notice from the Union that such shoe worker is objectionable to the Union on account of being in arrears for dues, or disobedience of Union rules or laws, or from any other cause." Plaintiff was not a member of the Union. Soon after the contract was made defendant demanded of Goodrich that the plaintiff be discharged, and the evidence tended to show that the sole ground for the demand was that the plaintiff was not a member of the Union and that he persistently declined to join it after repeated suggestions that he should do so. At the close of the evidence the defendant asked that the jury be instructed that the contract with Goodrich & Co. was valid; that the defendant had a right to call the firm's attention to the fact that they were violating its terms by keeping the plaintiff employed, and insisting upon an observance of the contract even if the defendant knew such observance would result in plaintiff's discharge; that the contract was a justification of the defendant's acts; and that he could not be liable unless he used threats, intimidation, slander, or unlawful coercion ton, who wrote the opinion—'The primary right of plaintiff [the discharged servant] to have the benefit of his contract and to remain undisturbed in the performance of it is universally recognized. Such a right can lawfully be interfered with only by one who is acting in the exercise of an equal or superior right which comes in conflict with the other. An intentional interference with such a right without lawful justification is malicious in law, even if it is from good motives and without express malice.'[88]

"As to the provisions of the contract by which the employer agreed not to keep in his employment any shoe worker that was objectionable to the Union for any cause, it is said, 'Whatever the contracting parties may do if no one but themselves is concerned, it is evident that, as against the workman, a contract of this kind does not of itself justify interference with his employment by a third person who made the contract with his employer.[89] No one can legally interfere with the employment of another unless in the exercise of some right of his own, which the law respects. His will so to interfere for his own gratification is not such a right. * * * If the plaintiff's habits or conduct or character had been such as to render him an unfit associate in the shop for ordinary workmen of good character, that would have been a sufficient reason. * * * The only reason for procuring his discharge was his refusal to join the Union.' Is such an interference unlawful? Labor unions justify it as a kind of competition, either competition among laborers themselves, or competition between employers and employees. Of the first of these the court says: Such competition 'would justify a member of the Union, who was seeking employment for himself, in making an offer to serve on such terms as would result, and as he knew would result, in the discharge of the plaintiff by his employer, to make a place for the newcomer. Such an offer, for such a purpose, would be unobjectionable. It would be merely the exercise of a personal right, equal in importance to the plaintiff's right. But an interference by a combination of persons to obtain the discharge of a workman because he refuses to comply with their wishes, for their advantage, in some matter in which he has a right to act independently, is not competition. * * * Inducing a person to join a union has no tendency to aid them in such competition. Indeed, the object of organizations of this kind is to prevent such competition, to bring all to equality and to make them act together in a common interest.'

"As to the second—the competition between employers and the employed,—in the strict sense, this is hardly competition. 'It is a struggle or contention of interests of different kinds which are in opposition, so far as the division of profits is concerned.' It permits 'reasonable efforts of a proper kind, which have a direct tendency to benefit one party in his business at the expense of the other. It is no legal objection to action whose direct effect is helpful to one of the parties in the struggle that it is also directly detrimental to the other.' The gain which a labor union may expect to derive from inducing others to join it 'is too remote to be considered a benefit in business such as to justify the inflicting of intentional injury upon a third person for the purpose of obtaining it. If such an object were treated as legitimate, and allowed to be pursued to its complete accomplishment, every employee would be forced into membership in a union, and the unions, by a combination of those in different trades and occupations, would have complete and absolute control of the industries to or against plaintiff's employer, and thereby induced plaintiff's discharge. The court refused to give this charge, the defendant excepted, and plaintiff had judgment for $1,500.

of the country. Employers would be forced to yield to all of their demands or go out of business. The attainment of such an object in the struggle with employers would not be competition but monopoly. A monopoly, controlling anything which the world must have, is fatal to prosperity and progress. In matters of this kind the law does not tolerate monopolies. The attempt to force all laborers to combine into unions is against the policy of the law, because it aims at monopoly. It therefore does not justify causing the discharge, by his employer, of an individual laborer working under a contract. * * * Labor unions cannot be permitted to drive men out of employment because they choose to work independently. * * * The fact that the plaintiff's contract was terminable at will, instead of ending at a stated time, does not affect his right to recover. It only affects the amount that he is to receive as damages.'[90] There has been a great variety of opinion and much conflict upon cases of this kind. In Allen v. Flood, A. C. 1, the House of Lords with an extraordinary conflict of views, and contrary to the opinion of the majority of the law judges called upon to advise them, held that 'persuading or inducing a man without unlawful means (in this case inducing a master to discharge two workmen not hired for a definite period of time, by informing the employer of the intention of all of the other workmen in the master's employ to strike), to do something he has a right to do, though to the prejudice of a third person, gives that person no right of action whatever the persuader's motive may have been.' The same view was held by the court of appeals of New York in a decision in which there was almost as great a variety of opinion.[91] In the later English cases, what was supposed to be the rule in Allen v. Flood has been considerably modified. In Quinn v. Leathem,[92] it is said, 'A combination of two or more, without justification or excuse, to injure a man in his trade by inducing his customers or servants to break their contracts to deal with him or continue in his employment, is, if it results in damages to him, actionable;' and in the later case of Giblan v. National Amalgamates, etc., Union,[93] Romer, L. J., said that 'a combination of two or more persons without justification, to injure a workman by inducing employers not to employ him or continue to employ him, is, if it results in damage to him, actionable,' —relying on Quinn v. Leathem. In the recent case of South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co.,[94] the House of Lords has removed the doubt cast upon the case of Lumley v. Gye[95] by the statements of Lord Herschell, Lord Macnaghten, and Lord Shand, in Allen v. Flood,[96] by unanimously affirming the decision rendered in the Glamorgan Coal Co. case in the court of appeal,[97] and holding, in the language of the syllabus, 'it is unlawful, in the absence of legal justification, for persons to combine in procuring a breach of contract by others, and the absence of malice or sinister or indirect motive, and the desire, in discharge of a supposed duty, to benefit the persons induced to break their contracts, constitutes no defense to an action based on such procurement.' Halsbury, and Lords Macnaghten, James of Hereford, and Lindley, delivered opinions, each taking substantially the same view.[98] On the question of advice, Lord Halsbury says: 'The facts in this case show nothing in the nature of advice.' Lord James says: 'Can it be lawful to advise the unlawful breaking of a contract of service? * * * They (the defendants) initiated, they directed, and they gave orders, * * * they induced and procured the workmen to break their contracts. * * * The commission of an unlawful act places them in a very different position from that occupied by a person whose duty it is to offer advice to one who needs to be guided or protected.' Lord Lindley said: 'That there are cases in which it is not actionable to exhort a person to break a contract may be admitted. * * * But the so-called advice here was much more than counsel; it was accompanied by orders to stop, which could not be disobeyed with impunity.' This shows a hesitancy to state a rule of liability as broadly as does Judge Cooley, for the 'active wrong,' where he says the wrongdoer 'is always responsible for the conduct which he counsels, advises or directs, and for whatever naturally results from his counsels.'[99] So, too, it perhaps hardly goes as far as Read v. Friendly Soc., etc.,[1] or Holmes, C. J., in Moran v. Dunphy,[2] where persuading by malevolent advice is equivalent to force or fraud. As to the word 'wrongfully,' Lord Lindley said: 'To break a contract is an unlawful act. * * * Any party to a contract can break it if he chooses; but in point of law he is not entitled to break it even on offering to pay damages. * * * Non-lawyers are apt to think that everything is lawful which is not criminally punishable, but this is an entire misconception.' In the Glamorgan case[3] the miners' federation claimed there was a duty upon it to advise the workmen so as to protect their interests, and that it did so in good faith. To this Lord James replied: 'The fact that their motives were good in the interests of those they moved to action does not form any answer to those who have suffered from the unlawful act;' and Lord Lindley said: 'A legal duty to do what is illegal, and known to be so, is a contradiction in terms.' As to 'maliciously,' it was admitted there was no hatred or ill will exercised or existing between the defendants and plaintiffs, and Lord James says it 'may be treated either as an unnecessary averment, or as being proved by inference drawn from the proof of the act being wrongfully committed;' and Lord Lindley says: 'When all that is meant by malice is an intention to commit an unlawful act and to exclude all spite or ill feeling, it is better to drop the word and so avoid all misunderstanding.' Lord Lindley also makes some pertinent and sensible remarks on the subject of combination: 'It is useless to try and conceal the fact that an organized body of men working together can produce results very different from those which can be produced by an individual without assistance.

Miners' Federation, 72 Law J. K. B. 893; Id. [1903] 2 K. B. 545 [2 Mich. L. R. 305].

98. The facts in South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co. [1905] App. Cas. 239, 74 Law J. K. B. 525, were: The plaintiffs were mine owners; the defendants were the Miners' Federation and individual members of it; contracts for a definite term of service existed between certain members of the Federation and the mine owners; the Federation directed its members to observe certain "stop days," in order to decrease the output of coal, increase the price thereof, and indirectly increase their own wages; the defendants knew of the existence of the contracts of service. Plaintiffs alleged defendants, well knowing the terms and conditions of the contracts, wrongfully and maliciously procured and induced the workmen to break their contracts. The defendants denied this and alleged that they acted in the bona fide belief that the course of action advised by them would greatly benefit both the plaintiffs and defendants, and that the latter had reasonable justification and excuse for their acts. (For fuller statement of facts see 2 Mich. L. R. 305.) It was found that there was a combination to procure a number of persons to break the contract, that this was done, and serious damage resulted.

Moreover, laws adapted to individuals not acting in concert with others require modification and extension if they are to be applied with effect to large bodies of persons acting in concert. The English law of conspiracy is based upon and justified by this undeniable truth."[4] In the United States, it is often said that what one person may lawfully do, two or more may agree to do jointly without liability, but the cases are not entirely consistent with one another.[5] In Massachusetts these questions have in recent years been more fully and carefully considered by the supreme judicial court than in any of the other states, and the decision here commented upon[6] was already fairly involved in what has been said before."[7]

In Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555, Judge Wells held on demurrer that a court alleging the defendant wilfully induced workmen to leave plaintiff's employment, and others who were about to enter it to abandon it, stated a cause of action. In May v. Woods, 172 Mass. 11, on 14, Mr. Justice Holmes, in dissenting to the ruling of the majority on a demurrer as to what were essential allegations in such cases, said, "I regard it as settled in this Commonwealth, and rightly settled, that an action will lie for depriving a man of custom, that is, possible contracts as well when the result is effected by persuasion as when it is accomplished by fraud or force, if the harm is effected simply from malevolence, and without some justifiable cause, such as competition in trade."—citing several earlier Massachusetts cases. In Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, it was held by Hammond, J. (Holmes, J. dissenting), that "a general scheme on the part of a labor union to compel the members of another union to desert it and become members of the former, and if necessary to that end to threaten employees and cause them to believe there would be trouble and strikes or boycotts if they continue, unless they abandon their own union and join the other, is unlawful and may be enjoined, and it is not material that no violence has been resorted to." And in Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, Holmes, C. J., himself said, "Maliciously procuring the discharge of a servant, whether accomplished by intimidation, slander or malevolent advice is actionable. Maliciously and without justifiable cause to induce a third person to end his employment, whether the inducement be false slanders or successful persuasion is an actionable tort." This is the same principle, though the reverse in application, as the decision in Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 74 N. E. 603. The opinion contains pretty full references to the cases upon the subject. For criticism of Allen v. Flood, see 1 Mich. L. R. 28, and for a short history of such actions, see 2 Mich. L. R. 305.

10. Where a line has been located, established, and treated for a long period of

Hampshire, disputed boundary lines between towns are established by the supreme court or a committee appointed for that purpose.[11] The decision of such committee is final[12] in the absence of legal error.[13] In Pennsylvania, in proceedings relative to the division of townships, the inhabitants have a natural right to a hearing before the commissioners.[14] It is the duty of the commissioners to view the proposed division line,[15] and, where they have reported in favor of division according to a line specifically described in the petition, their report cannot be objected to because of descriptive words added which do not produce a variance between the petition and report.[16]

§ 2. General powers and exercise thereof.[17]—A town or township is an institution of the state and possesses such powers as are expressly delegated to it or are to be reasonably implied therefrom,[18] and no others.[19] It may exercise police power within its territory.[20] Where a town ceases to exist, privileges granted by ordinances, which do not specify the period for which they are to exist, terminate.[21]

§ 3. Property.[22]

§ 4. Contracts.[23]—A town can make only such contracts as it is expressly granted power to make, or as are incident to powers granted, or are essential to the years as the correct boundary between towns. Town of Bath v. Haverhill [N. H.] 63 A. 307. Evidence insufficient to justify a finding that a line had long been recognized and acquiesced in. Id.

11. It is the duty of the committee appointed under Pub. St. 1901, c. 52, § 6, to establish a disputed boundary between towns not only to determine the location of the line but to mark it upon the ground (Town of Bath v. Haverhill [N. H.] 63 A. 307), and having done so, upon a return of their report a motion for judgment thereon would raise the question whether there was legal error in their proceedings (Id.).

12. Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 52, § 6, the findings of a committee appointed to establish a disputed boundary line between towns is conclusive in the absence of legal error. Town of Bath v. Haverhill [N. H.] 63 A. 307.

13. If their conclusion involves error of law it may be rejected, or if sufficient facts appear to show the location of the legal boundary at the point in dispute, a decree may be made on the report. Town of Bath v. Haverhill [N. H.] 63 A. 307. Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 52, § 6, providing for the establishment of disputed boundary lines between towns, the decree pronounced by the court and not the findings of fact made by triers is the final decision. 14. Under Act April 15, 1834, P. L. 537, it is the duty of the commissioners to give notice. Stowe Tp. Division, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 285. Act April 28, 1899, P. L. 104, is not repugnant to Act April 15, 1834, P. L. 537, nor is there anything in the nature of a township of the first class which prevents division in the mode prescribed by general law. Id.

18. Under the Act of April 28, 1899, P. L. 104, a township of the first class has power to fix the maximum rate of speed for automobiles and bicycles. This power is not suspended by Act April 23, 1903, P. L. 268, permitting a maximum speed of 20 miles per hour outside of cities. Radnor Tp. v. Bell, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 1. Ordinance fixing the maximum speed at 10 miles per hour held not unreasonable. Id. Under Rev. Codes 1899, § 1115a, relating to the purchase of road graders by township boards, the board may purchase a grader or other road machinery on its own motion without previous authorization or petition by the freeholders or voters. Bank of Park River v. Norton [N. D.] 104 N. W. 525. Under Rev. Codes 1899, § 1115a, providing that a township board may purchase road machinery "on credit or otherwise," the board may purchase such machinery and order payment out of the general fund in certain cases instead of by taxation. Id. Where under Rev. Laws c. 48, §§ 54, 56, county commissioners accept a relocated street, it has no effect upon the rights of the town to insist upon the work being done to the satisfaction of the selectmen. Town of Wellesley v. Norfolk County Com'rs [Mass.] 75 N. E. 725.

19. Under Comp. Laws §§ 2407, 2410, 2413, boards of respective townships into which a single township has been divided may not agree that one shall pay the other a sum of money spent on highways in one township in excess of what was spent in the other. objects and purposes of the corporation.[24] A contract binding against it may be implied.[25] Its contracts must be based on a sufficient consideration.[26] Where a town voted a railroad aid subscription, the making of a contract to pay such subscription was not necessary to entitle the railroad to recover on compliance with the terms of the vote.[27] It is liable in damages for breach of its contracts.[28] Money paid a town under a contract which the council has no power to make is without consideration and may be recovered.[29] It is not relieved from liability on notes it is authorized to issue because the money raised for their payment has been expended for other purposes.[30]

§ 5. Officers and employes.[31]—A township trustee is but a special agent of the township with limited statutory authority.[32] Persons who deal with him as such agent are charged with notice of the extent of that authority.[33] The township cannot be bound by estoppel or otherwise by his acts beyond such limited authority.[34] A town is not liable for the negligence of its agent in doing an act in his capacity as a public officer in the performance of his duty,[35] nor for damage due to a dangerous condition resulting from such act and natural causes combined.[36] In Pennsylvania the system of accounting of township officers is entirely statutory and consists of a settlement in the first instance with the township auditors with a right of appeal to the common pleas.[37] Further appeal is allowed only as prescribed by law[38] and upon a question properly saved.[39] Where allowed it must be taken within the period prescribed,[40] in the absence of a showing that the settlement was procured by fraud.[41]

Where town supervisors are required to provide for the support of the poor and have no regular physician to attend its paupers, and a pauper requires immediate medical attendance, a physician who renders such services may recover compensation from the town, though he had not been requested by the authorities to attend the patient. § 6. Fiscal management.[42]—A town may reimburse public officers for expenditures made in good faith in a matter in which the town has a corporate right, duty, or interest.[43] Appropriations can be made only where there are funds available.[44] In Illinois there are two complete codes of law applying to road and bridge taxes.[45]

§ 7. Claims.[46]—A board of town auditors may be compelled to perform duties imposed upon them by statute relative to the auditing and filing of claims.[47] A township is not liable for invalid charges made by its treasurer in the collection of a tax where it never received such charges.[48] Where bonds are issued for the purpose of funding outstanding warrant indebtedness, the warrants for the payment of which the bonds were issued become merged in the bonds and the funds realized from the sale of the bonds is a special trust fund for their payment which cannot be used for any other purpose,[49] and until such bonds are sold, payment of the warrants is necessarily suspended.[50] The proceedings in the court by which the validity of the warrants is determined, and the amount and terms of the bonds approved and authorized, is in the nature of a decree or judgment.[51] If the sale of the bonds should be unreasonably delayed and the payment of the warrants unreasonably postponed, any interested party may maintain an action to vacate the proceedings by which the bonding was authorized and to cancel the bonds,[52] but until such proceedings are taken, no action can be maintained upon the warrants.[53]

§ 8. Actions by and against.[54]—A town is within a statute providing that any person who has sustained injury by reason of breach of duty of a public officer may maintain action on his official bond where provision is not made by law for prosecution of actions on such bond.[55] Under statutes providing that a town shall pay for damage done by dogs and recover in an action on the case from the owner of the dog, it is essential to allege and prove that statutory requirements have been complied with.[56] Allegations not prescribed by the statute are improper.[57] The ac-issue framed and submitted to the jury is not in all cases indispensable, and if no exception is taken to the refusal of an issue, the question cannot be raised on appeal by a mere general exception to the judgment. Dunmore Borough School Dist. v. Wahlers, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 35.

St. 1903, c. 121, § 119, in townships having the labor system, the original certificate of the highway commissioners must be filed with the county clerk, and under § 16, in townships having the cash system, the certificate is to be delivered to the town clerk who certifies the items of levy to the county clerk to be extended as other taxes. People v. Kankakee & S. W. R. Co., 218 Ill. 588, 75 N. E. 1063. TRADE MARKS AND TRADE NAMES.

§ 1. Definition, and words or symbols available.[60]—The function of a trade mark is to distinguish the products of a manufacturer or the objects of commerce, and to point out distinctively the origin or ownership of the article to which it is affixed,[61] while a name importing corporate existence may be a mere trade name.[62] No one can acquire the exclusive right to call any article by a common name which appropriately designates it,[63] although expressed in a foreign language,[64] but an arbitrary, composite name may constitute a valid trade mark,[65] and a geographical and a personal name combined in an original device are thus available.[66] As a general rule a color cannot be monopolized by adoption.[67] No one can acquire the right to use the arms of a state against the state itself, and a statute prohibiting such use is not invalid as against previous users.[68]

§ 2. Acquisition, transfer, and abandonment.[69]—Registration under the trade mark laws must be accompanied by a sufficiently definite description of the trade mark,[70] and will give no rights as against persons previously acquiring the right to use the same mark or name.[71]

The use of a distinctive name will confer rights upon the user, but such use must be exclusive[72] and distinctive,[73] and must be applied as a distinguishing mark

Ed. ——; Leschen & Sons Rope Co. v. Macomber & W. Rope Co., 142 F. 289. And see Dodge Mfg. Co. v. Sewall & Day Cordage Co., 142 F. 288.

71. Revere Rubber Co. v. Consolidated Hoof Pad Co., 139 F. 152. Stock of cigar labels which had been used merely as an attractive designation of any kind of cigars were purchased and used in other states by several manufacturers before plaintiff's adoption and registration thereof in New England. Held not to preclude acquisition of rights by plaintiff in New England. Cohen v. Nagle [Mass.] 76 N. E. 276.

72. A manufacturer cannot claim rights in a name used simultaneously by several. Complainants using a descriptive geographical trade name simultaneously with others, held not entitled to its exclusive use. Siegert v. Gandolfi, 139 F. 917. Where several persons had used a word upon goods prior to plaintiff, but had not used it in such a way as to give them a right of property therein, and had abandoned it, this did not prevent plaintiff from acquiring the right to use it as a trade name. Cohen v. Nagle [Mass.] 76 N. E. 276. The adoption of collated features disclosing a differentiation whereby a product is recognized by the public will be protected. Old elements used by to goods of a particular style or quality;[74] and mere user without clear proof of adoption and use as such will not give exclusive right.[75]

The protection of a trade mark does not, in the absence of a restrictive contract, extend to the product of a tree, or of anything else which by the law of its nature is reproductive and derives its chief value from its innate vital powers, independent of the care and ingenuity of man.[76]

The right to the exclusive use of a trade name passes with the sale of the assets and good will of the business,[77] and is not assignable apart therefrom.[78] The right of a man to use his own name in connection with his own business is so fundamental that an intention to entirely divest himself of such right and transfer it to another must be clearly shown,[79] yet by a valid transfer of stock in a company, a person equitably estops himself from questioning its right to the use of its corporate name, although the company is named after himself,[80] and although generally no person has the right to attach to his goods the surname of another dealer in similar goods, yet such a right may be lawfully acquired.[81]

§ 3. Infringement and unfair competition.[82]—The unauthorized simulation of the trade mark of a competitor,[83] in a manner calculated to deceive the unwary,[84] constitutes an infringement without other fraudulent intent shown.[85]

Unfair competition consists in deceiving the public into the belief that the goods of one party are the goods of another, accompanied by such acts and devices as are likely to do so, or such duplication in form and dress of the one by the other as will produce a confusion likely to bring this about.[86] There may be unfair competiothers put with new ones to form a trade mark, held valid. De Long Hook & Eye Co. v. Francis Hook & Eye & Fastener Co., 139 F. 146.

74. A trade mark not affixed to goods until after their purchase for the consumer lacks the essential elements of equitable protection. Medlar & H. Shoe Co. v. Delsarte Mfg. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 410. The prior use of a symbol upon one kind of goods, not denoting ownership or origin, will not prevent a subsequent appropriation of that symbol as a trade mark upon another kind of goods. Johnson v. Seabury [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 5. The use of a particular name upon various kinds of goods, so that the name does not indicate any particular brand or kind of goods, will not be protected. Perlberg v. tion resulting from an unauthorized and improper use of trade names or symbols, although the plaintiff has no property right in them as a trade mark,[87] and where one person has acquired a valuable trade name by the long continued use of a word in a certain business, and he has acquired a right of property in such word, it is a fraud upon him for another to use the word in selling similar goods in such a way as to mislead the public.[88] Likewise it is a fraud on a person who has an established trade, and carries it on under a given name, that another person should assume the same name with a slight alteration, so as to induce people to deal with him in the belief that they are dealing with those who have given a reputation to the name in the particular line of business.[89] However, the manufacture and sale of a substance patented under a descriptive name is not unfair competition after the expiration of the patent thereon,[90] neither is using one's own name in his own business where the character and location of the business are shown, although the name had been used formerly in another business,[91] using an initial instead of the full name by a person entitled thereto.[92] Where there is no fraudulent intent shown or that purchasers have been deceived by defendant who did not adopt complainant's trade mark for the purpose of palming his goods off on the public, but the mark resulted incidentally in the manufacture of the goods, there is no unfair competition.[93] No one can appropriate a trade mark similar to that used by a rival dealer if the resemblance is such as to mislead the ordinary purchaser into the belief that his goods are those of his rival,[94] and two trade marks are substantially the same in law if the resemblance between them is so close that it deceives a customer exercising ordinary care in his dealing and induces him to purchase the goods of one manufacturer for those of another.[95] Exact similitude is not required,[96] and the person first in the field may require others to take the trouble of taking such reasonable precautions as are commercially practical to prevent their lawful names and advertisements from deceitfully diverting custom.[97] A person will not be allowed to resort to any artifice or contrivance in the use of his name for the purpose of deceiving the public as to the identity of his business or products,[98] but when clearly differentiated, similar trade marks may be used by different persons.[99] Imitation of a distinctive feature is essential to unfair competition.[1] It is not necessary to relief for the wrongful appropriation of a trade name that the intention of the person adopting the name was wrongful or fraudulent, and the absence of fraudulent intention is no defense.[2]

§ 4. Remedies and procedure.[3]—Injunction is available,[4] and is the only adequate remedy,[5] in cases of unfair competition, but it must appear that complainant is himself free from fraud[6] and otherwise clearly entitled to relief[7] before injunction will issue. that plaintiff must come with clean hands has reference only to his conduct under consideration and the court will not examine the plaintiff's conduct in other matters.[12]

In a suit for an accounting and injunction, where there has been an aggravated and flagrant imitation of labels, and the bill alleges a threatened continuance of the injury, although the use of the infringing labels had been discontinued before suit was brought, a court of equity is not deprived of jurisdiction to afford adequate relief,[13] but a suit for unfair competition cannot be maintained when the party aggrieved has a remedy either in equity for specific performance or at law for breach of contract,[14] nor will mandamus lie for the issue of a franchise to a company to conduct business under a given name when such action would work a fraud upon another company and would be enjoined.[15]

Persons directing the action of a corporation in committing acts of unfair competition and infringement are joint tort feasors with the corporation.[16]

When upon an accounting, insolvency and transfer of the property of defendant corporation are shown, the objection that such proof is not within the scope of the pleadings, no supplemental bill having been filed, is untenable.[17] The profits recoverable in equity for unfair competition are the same as in cases of infringement of trade marks, and are not limited to such as accrue from sales in which it is shown that the customer is actually deceived, but include all profits made on the goods sold in the simulated dress or package, and in violation of the rights of the original proprietor.[18]

Res judicata.—Where defendants were large stockholders in, and directed and controlled the affairs of, a company, and a final decree was rendered against the company for infringement of trade marks, this decree is binding upon defendants, and the evidence relating to their participation in the acts of the company is res adjudicata.[19]

§ 5. Statutory registration, regulation, and protection.[20]—The jurisdiction of the Federal courts depends solely upon the question whether a trade mark has been registered valid under the act of congress; they do not take jurisdiction on the ground of unfair competition,[21] and the act of congress in regard to copyrights does not apply to names or trade marks.[22] By filing a label in the United States patent office, no rights are obtained as against any person doing business in the same state.[23] A statute providing that no person shall use the arms or the great seal of the commonwealth for any advertising or commercial purpose is constitutional,[24] and makes the act prohibited a crime, although it provides no punishment for the offense, when another statute provides that the court shall impose sentence in such case;[25] but an act regarding labels and trade marks is unconstitutional wherein it purports to empower the party injured by a violation of the statute to fix, within the limits prescribed, the amount of the penalty to be exacted from the offender.[26] A statute inhibiting sales of goods not in original packages or under manufacturer's label or mark does not apply to such goods after being used in the manufacture of other articles.[27] By statute in Illinois the fraudulent use of another trade mark which has been properly filed is a criminal offense.[28]

TRADE UNIONS.

§ 1. Nature of trade unions.[29]—Private unincorporated societies like trade unions were not recognized at common law as having any legal existence apart from their members.[30] They are rated as partnerships, and to enforce a right either for or against them the name of every individual member must be set forth,[31] hence in some states there is no power to sue or be sued in the union name,[32] and without a special statute the common law rules as to unions prevail in full force.[33] In such states it is not error to refuse an injunction against a union.[34] In some jurisdictions they may now sue and be sued as unions, hence they as well as their members may be enjoined,[35] they may be fined for violating an injunction,[36] and may be guilty of a crime and fined for contempt of court.[37]

§ 2. The union and the public.[38]—Where there is a conflict between the obligations of a member to the union and to the public, the latter is paramount.[39] An employer has a perfect right to employ nonunion men when the union men are out on a strike,[40] and agreements to employ none but union labor have been held to be invalid.[41]

That labor has the right to organize as well as capital is now well established.[42]

Labor unions may strike peaceably,[43] and may persuade but not intimidate others to join them.[44] Picketing is sometimes sustained,[45] but under varying circumstances has been held illegal.[46] In some jurisdictions a peaceable boycott will be enjoined on the principle that acts, though legal when committed by one, if, when committed by many in agreement, they injure another or destroy his business, they become an unlawful conspiracy which the courts will enjoin.[47]

When members of a union agreed to prevent the employ of other men in their place by calling a strike, and by force, threats, intimidation, and picketing, they were guilty of a conspiracy.[48]

§ 3. The union and its members.[49]—The right of membership in a union is a property right.[50]

A union cannot require acts contrary to law or public policy from its members, hence the obligations which a union requires of its members are to be construed with reference to the purpose of the organization, and are binding on them only in so far as they are lawful and are to be attained by lawful means.[51]

Members of a union should exhaust the remedies within their organization before appealing to the courts,[52] but where a union has no means provided for remedying a wrong, and meets demands with futile correspondence and vexatious delay, the appeal to the courts is properly taken.[53]

A union may fine its members in accordance with its constitution and by laws.[54] It cannot transfer a fine from one member to another merely because the latter is Christensen v. Kellogg Switchboard & Supply Co., 110 Ill. App. 61.

46. Picketing by a union is unlawful by whatever name it may be called, and will be punished by fine and imprisonment. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Gee, 140 F. 153. The very presence of a large number of pickets, with the avowed purpose of preventing complainants' employees from remaining in its employ and those seeking employment to desist therefrom, was itself intimidation. Christensen v. People, 114 Ill. App. 40. The fact that pickets are serving under appointment and instruction from their union adds nothing to their rights and privileges as affecting third persons and the public. Karges Furniture Co. v. Amalgamated Woodworkers' Local Union No. 131 [Ind.] 75 N. E. 877. Where a labor union sought to compel an employer to employ none other than union men, and, to carry out their purpose, established pickets at the entrance to complainant's place of business to dissuade customers from entering and dealing with him, an injunction was granted restraining such acts on the part of the union. 52. Schneider v. Local Union No. 60 [La.] 40 So. 700; Fuerst v. Musical Mut. Protective Union, 95 N. Y. S. 155. An appeal under a by-law of a union then in force, but subsequently changed, to conform to the rights of appeal in the general association was nevertheless such an exhaustion of remedies within the organization as warranted an appeal to the courts. personally responsible for the payment.[55] A threat to suspend or expel, for nonpayment of a fine void ab initio, is duress and will make the payment of a fine under protest void.[56]

The courts are at variance as to the responsibility of the union for the violence of its members during a strike, some holding that when a union orders a strike, which results in violence by its members, it is no excuse that it counselled its members to be orderly and obey the law,[57] and others that because some members of a union disregard its orders and policy to strike peacefully, and intimidated, on their own initiative, other employes, is not sufficient to condemn the union as a body.[58]

The members of an unincorporated beneficial society, such as a labor union, in Pennsylvania are not individually liable for any breach of contract by the union. The remedy there is an action at law for damages or a suit in equity for specific performance against the union.[59]

TREASON.[60]

TREATIES.[61]

Treaties between nations should be given a "reasonable,"[62] although some courts favor a "liberal," construction.[63] Where a state constitution or laws are in conflict with a treaty, the treaty must prevail.[64] By treaty, the consuls of some countries have the exclusive right to be appointed administrators of the estates of their citizens deceased in the United States,[65] and such treaties come within the treaty making power of the president and senate.[66] The treaty of Dec. 11, 1871 (17 U. S. St. 928), between Germany and the United States, giving the consular officers of each country exclusive jurisdiction over controversies between the captains and crews of their respective vessels, does not exempt a German vessel from observing the provisions of section 24 of the act of Dec. 21, 1898, c. 28, 30 Stat. 763, prohibiting advance payments to seamen,[67] nor does it give the consuls jurisdiction where the seaman is not a bona fide member of the crew.[68]

The right of a citizen of the United States to invoke the jurisdiction of the national courts, if his case is cognizable in such courts, cannot be deprived by treaty.[69]

In pleading it is not necessary to make a formal claim of rights secured by a treaty.[70]

TRESPASS.

§ 1. Acts constituting trespass and right of action therefor.[71]—Trespass to property is the unlawful and forcible[72] invasion of another's possessory rights,[73] and to maintain the action, plaintiff must have the actual possession or the right to immediate possession,[74] but a reversioner may maintain trespass on the case though not entitled to the possession where the injury to the inheritance is of a permanent character.[75] Actual possession as a general rule is sufficient to sustain an action for trespass as against a mere intruder,[76] but exclusive possession of public lands will not sustain an injunction to restrain trespass, though defendant asserts no interest.[77]

76. Especially possession under color of title. Kunkel v. Utah Lumber Co. [Utah]

The presumption of ownership arising from possession of personal property cannot be disputed by one who does not connect himself with the title.[78] Negligence or the want of it is no element of trespass or of a defense.[79] One who wilfully drives his cattle upon the unenclosed premises of another is liable in trespass, though there would be no liability if they strayed upon it.[80] Under some statutes, trespass is the proper remedy to recover for the wrongful use and occupancy of land.[81] Trespass quare clausum fregit is not the appropriate remedy to recover for damage to property by bees.[82] Where trespass is committed by animals, the person in possession of them and not the owner is liable.[83]

In a suit to recover for a trespass committed, it is no defense that defendant is no longer trespassing,[84] nor that the damaged property lacked in conformity to some legal regulation regarding it.[85] Right of action may be lost by contract or a contract liability be substituted.[86]

It is a trespass to the person[87] to commit any assault or directly inflict any injuries.[88] In Missouri it is held that one maliciously annoying another by means of loud noises, etc., thereby injuring the health and business of the latter, is guilty of trespass.[89]

Right of entry and other matters in justification.[90]—Lawful entry may be under an easement[91] or a license,[92] and one who so enters is not liable in trespass[93] unless he exceeds his license.[94] Where the entry is with the consent of the person in possession, subsequent misconduct will not make defendant a trespasser ab initio,[95] but he becomes a trespasser from then on.[96] A license to be a justification must be given by one authorized to give it,[97] and where one acts under a license given by a party who cannot give such license, he is liable irrespective of good faith.[98]

A city is not liable for a trespass committed while in discharge of a governmental function.[99] An officer who takes property under a writ of execution is not liable unless he takes property not authorized to be taken,[1] but if he wrongfully levies upon the property of a third person, trespass will lie.[2] Where an officer attempts to justify under a writ of replevin issued by a justice of the peace, he must show jurisdiction.[3]

Parties in the tort.[4]—Joint tort feasors are liable.[5] A principal is liable for the trespasses of his agent when committed in the course of his employment,[6] but not, ordinarily, for those of an independent contractor.[7] Where two or more are co-owners of the reversionary interest, the defendant when sued by one can require the co-owners to be joined as parties, but a general denial waives this right.[8] Members of a board charged with the care of streets who do not participate in or ratify a trespass committed by other members are not liable.[9]

§ 2. Actions. A. At law.[10]—Actual possession or title to unimproved lands must be shown,[11] but where a grantee has color of title and the acts done by the grantor were under the authority of the grantee, the grantee has such constructive possession as will sustain an action for trespass.[12] Ownership of land raises a presumption of ownership of timber growing thereon.[13] Where plaintiff seeks to establish his ownership to the land by adverse possession, he must establish all the elements which are necessary to give title.[14] A plea of title does not make the action one "to determine title to land,"[15] nor does the fact that the jury incorporated a finding as to title.[16]

Where actions to determine title to land must be brought in the county where the land is located, the fact that the title to the land becomes involved in an action of trespass will not deprive a court of jurisdiction, though the land does not lie in that county. Huxford v. Southern Pine Co. [Ga.] 52 S. E. 439.

in favor of defendant, it becomes res judicata so that a second action cannot be maintained for trees cut since that suit was commenced involving the same points.[17]

A recovery in an action of replevin[18] or trover, with satisfaction, is a bar to a subsequent action of trespass for the same property.[19] Where two of three distinct trespasses have been barred by the statute of limitations, recovery can be had only on the last.[20]

Joint actions.—Under some statutes, where several trespassers are sued in trespass, the plaintiff may recover against all for the greatest damage done by any one,[21] or the action may be dismissed as to some and maintained as to others.[22]

There must be a community of interest in the subject-matter which is threatened to authorize the joinder of two or more plaintiffs in an action to enjoin a trespass.[23]

Where two joint tort feasors are joined as defendants, a nolle prosequi may be entered as to one who is discovered during trial to be a minor, and the verdict and judgment will stand as to the other.[24]

Pleading, issues, and proof.[25]—Plaintiff's possession must be clearly alleged,[26] and the description of the property alleged to have been trespassed upon must be sufficient to identify the premises.[27] Complainant need not deraign title,[28] and when a lease is pleaded as a basis for possession, it is not necessary to set out the entire contract.[29] Complaint must allege the time when the alleged trespass was committed,[30] and when a specific date is alleged without any continuance, recovery will be confined to a trespass committed on some one day,[31] and plaintiff may be compelled to elect a day on which the trespass will be proved.[32] Complaint must describe the act of violence so that issue may be joined thereon,[33] and issues having been joined, the proof must correspond[34] as respects possession, title[35] and place.[36] It is not necessary that plaintiff specifically allege that he claims some or all the damages as punitive.[37] A petition setting up numerous and continuous trespassers to personal property states but one cause of action.[38] Where the trespasses constitute but one cause of action, it is unnecessary to specifically state the amounts of the various items.[39]

An answer which controverts a material allegation of the complaint is sufficient.[40] Matters of justification must be specifically pleaded.[41]

Under the general issue, title to the land may be determined.[42] A plea of liberum tenementum to a complaint charging trespass quare clausum fregit puts in issue the freehold within the meaning of the statute providing for an appeal to the supreme court.[43]

Where in trespass the title to the land is litigated under a plea of general issue, defendant may amend his plea after verdict to make it conform to the proof if necessary.[44]

Evidence.[45]—Evidence tending to show the nature of plaintiff's possession is admissible.[46] Where plaintiff attempts to prove possession under a statute, he must prove all facts necessary to invoke the statute.[47] Where both parties claim title under a common grantor, the plaintiff need trace his title no further than such grantor.[48] Proof of ownership of land raises a presumption of possession,[49] and upon further proof that defendant entered, establishes a prima facie case as the entry will be presumed to be wrongful.[50] Ownership may be presumed from circumstances.[51] Where plaintiff's title is referable to a deed, the execution of which is to be established by presumption, evidence tending to sustain or rebut such presumption is admissible.[52]

50. Leave or license must be proved by defendant. McRae v. Blakeley [Cal. App.] 84 P. 679. The fact that telephone wires were attached to the building before plaintiff became the owner does not raise the presumption that they were put there by license. Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. S. 66.

51. Defendant's ownership of telephone wires will be presumed upon proof that there is no other telephone company in town. Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. S. 66.

The burden is upon the plaintiff to prove all the elements of the trespass[53] and the extent of the injury,[54] but when he has made a prima facie case, the burden is on defendant to prove a justification.[55] An allegation in the complaint that the trespass was committed without plaintiff's consent does not shift the burden of proof from defendant to plaintiff.[56] Where the trespass is for telephone wires attached to plaintiff's house, it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove that defendant actually used the wires for telephone purposes.[57]

Instructions[58] and jury questions.[59]—A charge is too broad that calls for proof of a greater trespass than is in evidence,[60] but it is not error to charge liability for the full consequences of it if there is no evidence of injury other than to plaintiff.[61] Where there is evidence tending to show that the trespass was committed by one acting as agent for defendant, it is a question for jury.[62]

Verdict and judgment.[63]—Findings must correspond to the pleadings as to the place of trespass.[64] If a partial trespass only is established, the verdict and judgment must be according to that proved.[65]

A failure to recover against some will not defeat a recovery against the others.[66]

Costs.—A statute giving plaintiff an additional cost in an action of trespass must be limited to the intention of the legislators.[67]

(§ 2) B. In equity.[68]—Where a threatened trespass will result in an irreparable injury,[69] or portend frequent repetition,[70] or a multiplicity of suits, an injunction will issue restraining such trespass,[71] but it will not issue for a past trespass[72] unless the circumstances show an intention to continue,[73] or, it seems, where there is a continuing damage.[74] Where an injunction is claimed upon the ground of irreparable injury, the facts constituting such irreparable injury must be stated and proved.[75] but inconveniences and annoyance which result from continued and repeated trespasses which interfere with the free use of real property are sufficient to sustain an injunction, though nominal damages would be full compensation.[76] Where the defendant railway's entry is unlawful only because made in an improper place, equity will enjoin its use, but where conditions warrant, defendant's equities will be preserved.[77] Where one could not maintain an action for trespass if the act was committed, he cannot maintain an action for an injunction to prevent it.[78]

Where plaintiff fails to prove any title,[79] or fails to prove exclusive right to the entire premises as against defendant, an injunction will not issue.[80] In an action to restrain the cutting of timber by alleged trespassers in possession, plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title,[81] but one who has been forcibly ousted from the actual possession has such possession as will enable him to maintain an action.[82]

A trustee of an express trust may, under statute in some states, maintain an action to restrain a trespass.[83]

80. Will not lie against a tenant in common. Country Club Land Ass'n v. Lohbauer, 97 N. Y. S. 11.

81. Where plaintiff fails to establish title, it is immaterial whether a link in defendant's title was sufficiently proven, defendant being in possession. Taulbee v. Buckner's Adm'r [Ky.] 91 S. W. 734.

82. Slaughter v. Mallet Land & Cattle Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 282.

83. Civ. Code Prac. § 21. Not necessary to join the party for whose benefit it is brought. Goff v. Boland [Ky.] 92 S. W. 575.

84. See 4 C. L. 1704.

85. Where defendant tore down fence of plaintiff and repaired it to as good a condition as before, he is not liable for damages done by stock breaking through. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. McMurrough [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 476, 91 S. W. 320.

Damages held not excessive: Where it appeared that 16 wires were attached to a stock fastened to the chimney of plaintiff's house and some of them were attached to another chimney, $50 damage is not excessive. Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. S. 66.

86. Where the trespass resulted in the destruction of some springs, it was error to permit a witness to testify as to the value of the springs in themselves. Rabe v. Shoenberger Coal Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 854. Where soil is removed, it is not the value of the soil so removed but the damage done to the estate that regulates the recovery. Parrott v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 127 Iowa 419, 103 N. W. 352.

87. Where the loss of a spring can be repaired by the piping from another, the cost an entirety.[88] The measure of damages for destruction of crops is the market value as standing,[89] although it has been held that where trees are removed and manufactured into lumber, the plaintiff may recover the value of the lumber less the cost of manufacturing.[90] Where the premises trespassed upon could be put to no other use, the value of the use to defendant is the proper measure of damages.[91] Plaintiff may recover all reasonable costs incurred in reducing the damage as much as possible.[92] But in all cases plaintiff can recover only for the damages which he could not have prevented by use of reasonable diligence.[93]

In trespass for entering on the premises and removing a building, the question of damages is not affected by the fact that the land was mortgaged for more than its value.[94]

The damages recoverable by a tenant in a suit against the landlord for trespass are the injuries to the leasehold and not to the freehold.[95]

The recovery must correspond to the interest proved.[96] Where personal property is injured, the value of the property destroyed or the extent of the injury must be proved,[97] but a mere trespass without actual damage entitles plaintiff to nominal damages.[98]

The questions as to whether the damage was the direct result of the acts complained of, and the extent of those damages, are for the jury,[99] under the instructions of the court.[1]

Punitive damages.[2]—Punitive damages are recoverable only when the acts were done wantonly or maliciously, or with circumstances of aggravation.[3] By statute in some states exemplary damages may be recovered by the owner of a private park against one killing birds, fish, etc., therein.[4] Where the statute prescribes the amount of recovery for trespass committed by an officer executing a writ and plaintiff has declared on the statute, no additional punitive damages can be recovered.[5] of such piping is the measure of damage. Rabe v. Shoenberger Coal Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 354.

91. As where telephone wires are attached to the roof of a house. Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. S. 66.

92. Where defendant's trespass consisted in the destruction of a boom and removal of some of the logs, the cost of watching the remainder until they could be removed to a place of safety is recoverable. Syson Timber Co. v. Dickens [Ala.] 40 So. 753.

93. Where defendant wrongfully tore down plaintiff's fence, and stock destroyed the crops, defendant not liable for the destruction of crops if by exercising reasonable care plaintiff could have repaired the fence. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. McMurrough [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 476, 91 S. W. 320; Linn v. Hagan's Adm'r [Ky.] 92 S. W. 11.

4. Forest, Fish & Game Law (Laws 1900, p. 59, c. 20) § 203. Where one endorsed his summons in justice court, "action for a penalty," and in his complaint stated facts which entitle him to the statutory damages, held that act was under the statute. Rockefeller v. Lamora, 106 App. Div. 345, 94 N.

Multifold damages.[6]

§ 4. Criminal liability.[7]—It is no defense to a criminal prosecution for entering upon the property of another after warning that defendant had occasionally entered the land before the warning, especially where the complaining witness has had possession for several years.[8] A prosecution for trespass after warning does not involve the question of title, and evidence of title is inadmissible.[9] Under a statute which makes it an offense to willfully cut a telephone wire, the fact that it was strung over defendant's property without his consent, does not justify a cutting, especially where it does not obstruct the use of the property,[10] and the motive does not make any difference if done willfully.[11]

There is no criminality where the trespass was not willful.[12] Entry under a statute authorizing a railway company to enter lands for the purpose of making a survey for a proposed road is a "legal cause and good excuse" within the statute making it an offense to enter the lands of another after warning without legal cause and good excuse.[13] A license by a tenant to pass over the premises is a good defense to the criminal prosecution for "willful" trespass.[14]

An indictment under the penal code charging that the accused did enter upon the lands of A, the person entitled to the possession of the land for the time being, is not supported by evidence that A held the land as agent of B.[15]

§ 5. Trespass to try title.[16]—In trespass to try title, plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title,[17] but the actual possession of the land by plaintiff is sufficient to maintain the action against one showing no right,[18] as it raises a presumption of title which is not destroyed by failure to connect with the sovereignty of the soil.[19]

Where one seeks to recover upon prior possession under claim of right, he must show possession of the particular tract.[20]

Y. S. 549. Forest, Fish & Game Law (Laws 1900, pp. 56, 57, c. 20) §§ 185, 188, providing a penalty for killing birds, etc., to be recovered in an action in the name of the people, has no application to an action brought by the owner of a private park under § 203. Id.

17. In a contest for public lands it is not sufficient to show a defect in defendant's title, but plaintiff must establish his own right. Trevy v. Lowrie [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 75, 89 S. W. 981.

Evidence insufficient to show title in plaintiff where it appeared that plaintiff's grantor received a grant of all the land in an original grant not previously conveyed, but it does not appear that the land in controversy was not so conveyed. Ball v. Carroll [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 1023. Where plaintiff claims under a deed which purports to convey "that portion of an original tract which had not been previously conveyed," he must show that the property in controversy had not been previously conveyed. Ball v. Carroll [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 1023. Where plaintiff shows that title to the property has passed from the state, a deed to himself, and possession under the deed prior to defendant's possession, he can recover unless defendant proves a superior title. Not necessary to deraign title from the government. Cook v. Spencer [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 730, 91 S. W. 813. Plaintiff must prove title from the government or a superior title from a common source. Moore v. Kempner [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 330, 91 S. W. 336.

18. Magerstadt v. Lambert [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 410, 87 S. W. 1068.

19. Only rebutted when the title under which possession was taken is proven invalid. Kirby v. Boaz [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 498, 91 S. W. 642.

The plaintiff in trespass to try title against one who was awarded the land by the commissioner of the general land office must come with clean hands.[21] One claiming under a purchaser at a foreclosure sale may recover without paying the purchase price paid by one who subsequently purchased from the original holder.[22]

A defendant who claims under a tax deed valid on its face is entitled to prove improvements under his plea of good faith and have his rights determined.[23] Where defendant admits plaintiff's ownership, but sets up possession under a contract, the burden is upon defendant to establish his plea by a preponderance of the evidence.[24]

Pleading and procedure.[25]—In trespass to try title in Texas, where plaintiff has not alleged his title specifically, he may prove any title except that of limitation.[26] Title by limitation must be specifically pleaded.[27] In founding a claim under the ten-year statute of limitations, the plaintiff must claim some definite tract.[28] Under a plea of not guilty, the defendant may prove an outstanding title in a third party superior to plaintiff's title.[29]

The evidence of particular titles such as those by adverse possession,[30] deed,[31] descent,[32] acquisition from the public domain,[33] or by other methods pertains to topics treating of such matters. Evidence which tends to show plaintiff's claim of title is admissible,[34] and where one of the parties relies on a particular title, any evidence which tends to establish such title is admissible.[35] Where plaintiff seeks to establish a title by raising a presumption of a grant, a deed of quitclaim from heirs is admissible although the parties who executed it could not execute a valid deed for the heirs.[36] Evidence of occupancy is immaterial where plaintiff claims under a purchase from the state.[37]

The instruction must conform to the issues and the evidence.[38] The court in charging the jury should not assume that a deed upon which one of the parties claims title is void simply because it is a deed from husband to wife.[39]

Where the evidence is sufficient to identify the portion claimed by defendant out of the tract described in the pleadings, a judgment may be entered thereon.[40]

TRIAL.

Scope of article.[41]—Many important and really distinct matters of trial procedure are given separate treatment in Current Law. Thus the law relating to dockets, calendars, and trial lists,[42] continuance and postponement,[43] argument of counsel and the right to open and close the same,[44] examination of witnesses,[45] making of objections and taking of exceptions,[46] trial by jury,[47] questions of law and fact,[48] instructions,[49] directing verdict and demurrer to evidence,[50] discontinuance, dismissal, and nonsuit,[51] verdicts and findings,[52] has been excluded from this article, which includes principally only such matters as do not readily lend themselves to such separate treatment. The subjects of Evidence,[53] Pleading,[54] and Witnesses,[55] are also fully treated elsewhere. As to the hearing in equity, see article on Equity,[56] and for matters peculiar to criminal trials, see Indictment and Prosecution.[57]

§ 1. Joint and separate trials.[58]—Two or more suits involving the same facts may in the discretion of the trial court be consolidated for the purpose of trial,[59] but suits pending in different courts of different jurisdictions cannot be consolidated.[60] The matter of granting a separate trial to one of several defendants in proceedings under the eminent domain act rests in the discretion of the trial court.[61] Where, in an action at law, the answer interposes an equitable counterclaim, the issue arising on the latter should be heard and determined by the court before a trial of the legal issues, as if the counterclaim were a separate suit in equity.[62] A plain-

Where there are two actions pending in the same court, based on the same contracts, in which the plaintiff in one and defendants in the other and vice versa, each depending on the same evidence, the court may, in its discretion, compel their consolidation. Lehmann v. Webster & Co., 110 Ill. App. 298. Two actions against two defendants jointly to recover for injuries received in one accident, to which the same defense was interposed in both actions, and the establishment of the cause of action and the defense in both cases depended on the same evidence, may properly in the discretion of the trial judge be consolidated under Rev. St. U. S. § 921, though different amounts are claimed as damages. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton [C. C. A.] 141 F. 599. A party cannot complain of the consolidation of two suits to one of which he is a party where it appears that his rights can be fully protected in the consolidated action. Miller v. tiff joining several causes of action may prove them separately so long as he keeps within the rules of practice and cannot be compelled to consolidate them under penalty that if he fails to do so a reference will be ordered.[63]

§ 2. Course and conduct of trial.[64]—To constitute a lawful trial, there must be a lawful term or session[65] of a duly constituted court,[66] and an issue duly joined[67] and properly brought on for hearing,[68] but after issue joined, the trial may proceed though a party defaults of appearance.[69] The presence of an official reporter is not essential to the constitution of the court,[70] and temporary absence of the judge is a mere irregularity.[71] Practice is governed by statutes in force at time of trial.[72] It is a general rule that irregularities in the course of judicial proceedings do not render them void.[73] It is within the discretion of the court whether he will suspend a trial and wait for a witness who has not been subpoenaed, but promised to be present.[74] Whether an interpreter shall be called is within the discretion of the court and its refusal is not error unless there has been an abuse of discretion.[75] Sequestration of witnesses[76] and demeanor of parties and witnesses in court and manifestations of suffering[77] or grief[78] are matters to be controlled by the trial judge in his discretion.

Argument and conduct of counsel[79] is the subject of a separate article.[80]

Remarks and conduct of judge.[81]—While the trial judge may properly stop and rebuke misconduct,[82] he must preserve entire impartiality of demeanor, and unjust

69. It is not an abuse of discretion to proceed to the trial of a cause where it is reached, though one of the parties and his counsel are absent, where no postponement has been granted or permission to be absent given. Linderman v. Nolan [Okl.] 83 P. 796.

70. If the appellant's attorney was present at the time of the trial of a cause and did not object to the absence of the official reporter, he cannot seek a new trial on that ground. It was his duty to call the trial court's attention, and if an order for his attendance was refused he should have had such fact preserved in the record by exception. Tootle-Weakley Millinery Co. v. Billingsley [Neb.] 105 N. W. 85.

71. Absence of judge when sealed verdict is received is a mere irregularity and may be authorized by stipulation. Chichester v. Winton Motor Carriage Co., 110 App. Div. 78, 96 N. Y. S. 1006. Where the attorneys in a civil action stipulate that a verdict may be received by the clerk in the absence of the presiding judge, the parties are bound thereby and a judgment entered thereon is valid. 77. That plaintiff, in a personal injury suit, exhibited in the presence of the jury an appearance of great weakness, is not a ground for reversal, though witnesses for defendant testified that such appearance could be feigned and that on other occasions plaintiff did not have such appearance. The genuineness of such appearance is for the jury. Chicago & J. Elec. R. Co. v. Spence, 115 Ill. App. 465.

78. The fact that a woman in an action to recover damages for failure to deliver a telegram, preventing attendance at her son's funeral, appeared on the witness stand in deep mourning and gave way to her emotions while testifying as to circumstances of his death and funeral is not such misconduct as authorizes new trial. 80. See Argument and Conduct of Counsel, 5 C. L. 253.

82. It is not error for the trial judge to correct the statement of counsel as to what the testimony of a witness was when he correctly states the substance of such testimony. State v. Lane [Or.] 84 P. 804. It is the duty criticisms of counsel,[83] or questions,[84] or remarks[85] intimating his opinion on the facts, are ground for reversal.

§ 3. Reception and exclusion of evidence.[86]—A party cannot by a mere ingenuity in pleading, as for instance, by putting his answer in the form of an affirmative allegation, rather than a specific denial, deprive his opponent of the right to open and close, if the substantial effect of the pleading is to controvert the truth of the essential averments of the complaint. But the discretion of the trial court in such regard will not be interfered with, on appeal, unless an abuse of discretion prejudicial to the appellant is shown.[87] The party on whom rests the burden of the issue, if he so elects and there be no objection thereto, may proceed to offer evidence on all the issues in the case.[88] The court may allow a witness to give his testimony in narrative form and without the aid of questions.[89] The court should require that evidence be introduced in an orderly manner.[90] Since objection to evidence must be specific,[91] it should ordinarily be required to be offered in such form as to facilitate specific objection,[92] and must either appear admissible of itself or be accompanied by such an offer as will make its admissibility apparent.[93]

The order of proof[94] rests largely in the discretion of the trial court,[95] and ac-of the court to avoid making remarks that may in any degree reflect on counsel, but when the conduct of an attorney is such as to provoke the judge, his making improper remarks will not constitute reversible error where they did not in any way indicate the court's views as to the merits of the case. Chicago City R. Co. v. Shaw [Ill.] 77 N. E. 139. May stop and rebuke improper argument. Finan v. New York, etc., R. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 859.

83. Remarks of court accusing counsel of lack of preparation held reversible error. Kleinert v. Federal Brewing Co., 107 App. Div. 485, 95 N. Y. S. 406. Remarks made by the trial judge in the hearing of the jury which tend to discredit the attorney of either of the parties, constitute grounds for a new trial and reversible error. Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. McAllister [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 933.

84. Questions to a witness which insinuate that he is testifying falsely are erroneous when there is no evidence contradicting the witness. O'Donnell v. People of Illinois, 110 Ill. App. 250. The effect of testimony elicited by an improper question from the court is more effective to impress the jury than when in response to a question by counsel and hence error is more easily predicable thereon. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Shepherd, 112 Ill. App. 458. A trial judge may propound questions to a witness in order to elicit pertinent facts, provided that he does so in a manner which will not indicate his opinion of the facts. Arkansas Cent. R. Co. v. Craig [Ark.] 88 S. W. 878.

85. It is reversible error for the trial judge to make any remarks in the presence of the jury calculated to increase or diminish the weight to be given to the evidence by the jury. Lewter v. Lindley [Tex. Civ. App.] 89 S. W. 784. Any statement or remark by the trial judge which indicates his opinion as to weight of the testimony is erroneous. Kozlowski v. Chicago, 113 Ill. App. 513; Chicago City R. Co. v. Enroth, 113 Ill. App. 285. Remarks intimating an opinion on the merits and an intention to set aside a verdict opposed thereto held error. Corrigan v. Funk, 109 App. Div. 846, 96 N. Y. S. 910. Where the trial judge states in the presence of the jury that there is only one issue in the case, stating it, while as a matter of fact there are other material issues, the party prejudiced by such remark is entitled to a reversal though the court by its instructions gave such other issues to the jury. Chicago Junction R. Co. v. Pietrzak, 110 Ill. App. 549.

90. A defendant could not, on cross-examination of one of plaintiff's witnesses and against plaintiff's objection, stop in the cross-examination of the witness and introduce in evidence certain letters identified by the witness, which were admissible only as a part of defense. Armour Packing Co. v. Vietch-Young Produce Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 680.

91. See Saving Questions for Review, 6 C. L. 1385.

92. A number of exhibits offered en masse are properly excluded. Dowie v. Priddle, 116 Ill. App. 184. The rule that where evidence is admissible for any purpose, its admission is not error, applies only when the objection is general and where on an offer the opposite party objects to it as being inadmissible for a certain purpose and the counsel offering does not disclaim that it is offered for that purpose or state for what purpose it is offered the objection should be sustained when not admissible for purpose stated. Burns v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [Pa.] 62 A. 845. Offer of evidence containing relevant and irrelevant evidence is properly rejected, when made as one offer. Mease v. United Traction Co., 208 Pa. 434, 57 A. 820.

93. An offer of evidence, not shown to be material is properly rejected. Lewis, Hubbard & Co. v. Montgomery Supply Co. [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 1017. And see Saving Questions for Review, 6 C. L. 1385.

cordingly the reception of evidence out of order[96] or the scope permitted in rebuttal will rarely be reviewed,[97] and a like discretion is recognized as to the reopening of a case for further testimony.[98]

Timely objection must be made to improper evidence,[99] but where the inadmissibility of evidence becomes apparent only after it has been received[1] as where it was admitted on an assurance of other proof which was not supplied,[2] a motion to strike

95. In Ind. T. the statutes expressly provide that the trial court shall regulate the order of proof. Miller v. Springfield Wagon Co. [Ind. T.] 89 S. W. 1011. The order of proof is largely in the discretion of the trial court. Sheridan v. Patterson [Colo.] 82 P. 539.

96. McBride v. Steinweden [Kan.] 83 P. 822. A judge may receive evidence tentatively on promise of the party offering it to connect it so as to make it relevant, subject to its exclusion in case he fails to show its relevancy. Lanier, Hamilton & Co. v. Hebard, 123 Ga. 626, 51 S. E. 632; Loder v. Jayne, 142 F. 1010. Allowing the introduction in evidence by defendant of evidence in support of his defense after plaintiff has introduced evidence in rebuttal of evidence offered to support defense rest in the discretion of the trial court and is not reviewable. Southern Industrial Inst. v. Hellier [Ala.] 39 So. 163. It is within the discretion of the trial court to allow plaintiff to give at one time all his testimony, though at the time of its introduction its materiality to the case had not been shown, though subsequently made applicable to defendant. Campbell v. Railway Transfer Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 547. In Wisconsin contributory negligence is defensive matter, and in an action for negligence plaintiff cannot give testimony to show that he was free from contributory negligence as part of his case in chief. If in describing the injury the plaintiff incidentally gives testimony tending to show contributory negligence on his part, the court may in its discretion allow plaintiff as part of his case to show that he was free from contributory negligence so as to prevent a nonsuit. Owen v. Portage Tel. Co. [Wis.] 105 N. W. 924.

97. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Reuter, 119 Ill. App. 232; Hall v. Wagner, 97 N. Y. S. 570. Declarations of plaintiff's intestate shown by defendant may be disproved on rebuttal. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 712. Where defendant's evidence tends to show that plaintiff wrote a letter at a certain time denial thereof is proper in rebuttal. Bazelon v. Lyon [Wis.] 107 N. W. 337. It is not necessarily reversible error to admit evidence in chief in rebuttal. The matter is vested in the sound discretion of the trial court. Only in case of abuse of discretion will a reversal be allowed. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Board [Ky.] 90 S. W. 944; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Lynch [Ky.] 89 S. W. 517; Union R. Co. v. Hunton, 114 Tenn. 609, 88 S. W. 182; Pharr v. Shadel [La.] 38 So. 914; Olwell v. Skobis [Wis.] 105 N. W. 777. In Indiana where a party under oath denies the execution of a written instrument sought to be introduced in evidence against him the party offering it must as a part of his case in chief introduce all of his testimony as to its authenticity and cannot merely make a prima facie case and then rebut testimony tending to show its nonexecution by the party charged. Baum v. Palmer [Ind.] 76 N. E. 108. The court may in its discretion allow a party to introduce in rebuttal testimony which properly should have been introduced as part of his case in chief. Prudential Ins. Co. v. Hummer [Colo.] 84 P. 61.

98. Richards v. Meissner, 24 App. D. C. 305; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Cox [C. C. A.] 143 F. 110; Standard Supply & Equipment Co. v. Merritt, 48 Misc. 498, 96 N. Y. S. 181; Jones v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 1010; In re Walker's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 770; Parker v. Ricks, 114 La. 492, 38 So. 687; Door Cattle Co. v. Chicago & G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 103 N. W. 1003; Graham v. M. Transp. In an action to restrain the levying of an assessment for opening a road when all the evidence was in writing, it was not error for the court to let one of the parties introduce further written evidence several days after the trial had closed, such matter resting in the discretion of the court. Todd v. Crail [Ind.] 77 N. E. 402. Court held to have erred in refusing to admit an offer of evidence made by plaintiff after he had closed and before action was dismissed when the reception of it would have made a case for plaintiff, which up to the time of the offer he had not done. Pittsburg Plate Glass Co. v. Roquemore [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 579, 88 S. W. 449.

1. Where exhibits are prima facie competent at the time they are received in evidence, a motion to strike out should be made where subsequently it appears that they are incompetent. Village of Grand Park v. Trah, 115 Ill. App. 291. Where the preliminary examination of a witness does not show that the testimony sought to be elicited was a privileged communication, an objection to the offer is properly overruled. Where it subsequently appears that it is inadmissible, it is the duty of counsel to move to strike out and not the trial judge on his own motion. Brown v. Moosic Mountain Coal Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 76. It is not error to refuse to strike out evidence which has been received and which was competent, merely because the party introducing it has more accurate evidence (as to measurements) in his possession. Harvey v. Chester [Pa.] 61 A. 118.

2. When evidence is received before the proper foundation for its admission is laid, on condition that such foundation shall be subsequently supplied, there should be a motion to strike in case there was no foundation laid. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v.

will lie. A trial court may of its own motion refuse to receive incompetent evidence, though not objected to and may of its own motion strike out such evidence.[3]

Cumulative testimony[4] may be limited[5] and mere repetition prevented.[6]

Stipulations[7] or admissions[8] may be received in lieu of evidence, and counsel is concluded by his admissions in open court.[9] Statements made by counsel in his opening are not to be received as evidence, but may be considered and have the binding force of admissions.[10]

Evidence admissible for one purpose only.[11]—Evidence admitted generally is before the jury for all purposes,[12] but where evidence is admissible for but a single purpose it should be so limited.[13]

§ 4. Custody and conduct of the jury.[14]—The court must keep the jury together in such manner as will best facilitate a fair verdict.[15] In some states it is allowable to excuse a juror for cause and either proceed with eleven[16] or supply another.[17] In other states the entire jury may be excused under such circumstances.[18]

Schlavone, 116 Ill. App. 335. When the court overrules objection and provisionally admits evidence, on the statement of counsel that he will subsequently supply a defect in the preliminary proof necessary to its admission, it is not for the judge on his own motion to determine whether such defect has been cured and strike out the testimony, without a request to that effect from the other party. Hix v. Gulley [Ga.] 52 S. E. 890.

3. Boyer v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Cal. App.] 81 P. 671.

4. See 4 C. L. 1714.

5. The court may in its discretion limit the number of witnesses whom it will allow to testify on each side as to particular fact where the testimony is cumulative. Clark Co. v. Rice [Wis.] 106 N. W. 231. The admission of cumulative evidence rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. Bruce v. Wanzer [S. D.] 105 N. W. 282. It is error for the court to refuse to hear cumulative testimony and then decide the question of fact for the adverse party. Brown v. Cohen, 96 N. Y. S. 116.

6. It is proper for the trial court to refuse to allow a witness to repeat his testimony. Camp v. League [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 1062; Griswold v. Nichols [Wis.] 105 N. W. 815; Spinks v. Clark, 147 Cal. 439, 82 P. 45.

7. See Stipulations, 6 C. L. 1554; Submission of Controversy, 6 C. L. 1580.

8. Facts may be admitted. A case may be tried on a theory that a fact is assumed to exists, the legal effect of which alone is questioned. Having admitted the fact a party cannot afterwards complain that it was not proven. Matousek v. Bohemian Roman Catholic First Cent. Union [Mo.] 91 S. W. 538.

12. Where evidence is received it may be considered upon a point which counsel introducing it disclaimed an intention of proving thereby. Board of Sup'rs of Macomb County v. Lovejoy [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 51, 107 N. W. 276.

13. Straight Creek Coal Co. v. Haney's Adm'r, 27 Ky. L. R. 1117, 87 S. W. 1114. Where evidence is material and competent on one theory of the case on which the party offering it is proceeding but not on the theory on which the other is proceeding and the correctness of either theory depends on questions of fact, the evidence should be received and its effect limited by proper instructions according as the jury may determine such questions of fact. Radel v. Lesher, 137 F. 719. Where testimony offered is admissible for a certain purpose but not for another on which it has some bearing, the jury should be instructed not to consider it on the latter issue. McMerrow v. Dowell [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 728. Where the court admits a document for a specified purpose only, other papers attached are not to be deemed in evidence where they are not relevant to the purpose for which the principal document was admitted. Security Trust Co. v. Robb [C. C. A.] 142 F. 78.

14. See 4 C. L. 1716.

15. That one of the parties to an action held private conversation with a juror and treated him to a drink while the jury were considering the case is ground for setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial. Buchanan v. Laber [Wash.] 81 P. 911. Misconduct known at the time cannot be objected to after verdict. Bernikow v. Pommerantz, 94 N. Y. S. 487. It is improper for a juror to communicate with his family by telephone without leave of court. Baizley v. Welsh, 71 N. J. Law, 471, 60 A. 59.

18. A jury should be released from the consideration of a case when it appears that by reason of facts existing at the time the jury was impaneled, but unknown to the court or facts occurring afterwards, that members of the jury are biased and cannot act impartially. Questions asked a witness by a juryman indicated prejudice toward defendant. Sorenson v. Oregon Power Co. [Or.] 82 P. 10. A request to excuse all the jurors where one is excused after part of the evidence is in is addressed to the discretion of the court. Turner v. Territory [Okl.] 82

It is largely discretionary with the trial court what papers shall be taken out by the jury.[19]

Allowance of a view of premises by the jury,[20] allowance of microscopic examinations,[21] or compelling the production of movable property in court for inspection,[22] rests in discretion. It is immaterial whether the court orders a view at the request of one of the parties, or on its own motion, or at the request of a juror, if in the opinion of the court such a view is necessary or proper.[23]

P. 650. It is no ground for declaring a mistrial that a juror is fearful that he will be unable to keep an important engagement and may acordingly be unfitted for jury service. Morrison v. Dickey, 122 Ga. 417, 50 S. E. 178.

19. Any exhibit in evidence may be allowed to be taken out. Chicago & J. Elec. R. Co. v. Spence, 115 Ill. App. 465. It is discretionary to refuse to allow the jury to take out a map which is not exact. Commonwealth v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 235. No abuse of discretion for court to refuse to let jury take out with them a map which was before them during trial of an action for damages in falling into improperly guarded trench in street. Carty v. Boeseke-Dowe Co. [Cal. App.] 84 P. 267. In Illinois it is not error for the jury to take the pleadings to the jury room. Hancheft v. Haas, 219 Ill. 546, 76 N. E. 845. The practice of allowing pleadings in civil actions to be taken to the jury room is not to be commended, but it is not reversible error. When appellant had an opportunity to prevent pleadings containing counts as to which demurrers had been sustained from going to the jury room and did not do so his formal exception to its bring done will not work a reversal. Elgin, A. & S. Traction Co. v. Wilson, 217 Ill. 47, 75 N. E. 436. Where papers which should not properly go to the jury are sent to the jury room inadvertently and not through the connivance of the prevailing party, a verdict will not be set aside when it appears the papers were not read by the jury. Birmingham R. & Elec. Co. v. Mason [Ala.] 39 So. 590. Where the jury took to the jury rooms exhibits which had not been received in evidence, a verdict will not be set aside, where immeor, more accurately, security deeds with power of sale,[1] or of charitable gifts[2] or of the construction of the trust as violating the laws of perpetuities and accumulations.[3] Trustees of bankrupts[4] and of incompetents[5] are also treated elsewhere.

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions.[6]—A trust is a right of property, real or personal, held by one party for the benefit of another,[7] and must be distinguished from fiduciary relations.[8] A trust executed is where the party has given complete directions for settling his estate, with perfect limitations;[9] an executory trust is where the directions are incomplete and are rather minutes or instructions for the settlement.[10] The distinction between express trusts and powers in trust is that in the former the trustee takes the legal title, which, however, does not pass to the trustee of a power.[11]

§ 2. Express trusts. Nature and elements.[12]—In order to have a valid trust there must be a designated beneficiary[13] or purpose,[14] an identified trust fund or estate[15] and a designated, competent trustee,[16] though, except where the trust is diately on discovery of the fact the court admonished the jury not to regard it and it appears that the jury had agreed on a verdict before the exhibits came to their possession. Lewes v. John Crane & Sons [Vt.] 62 A. 60. In Rhode Island it is not proper to allow depositions to be taken to the jury room, but when by inadvertence a deposition is taken to the jury room, it is not reversible error where the testimony contained in the deposition relates to only one fact which could not have been forgotten by the jury. Fottori v. Vessela [R. I.] 61 A. 143. Generally it is recognized as a matter largely in the discretion of the trial court to permit the jury to take with them to the jury room exhibits which have been received in evidence. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron [C. C. A.] 137 F. 48. Photographs which have been received in evidence may be taken to the jury room, though had the party objecting to its being taken out by the jury moved to have it stricken out such motion could have been properly granted. Chicago & J. Elec. R. Co. v. Spence, 115 Ill. App. 465.

20. Where a jury is permitted to view premises it is not error for a party to call their attention to an observable physical fact relevant to the issue on trial. Flint v. Union Water Power Co. [N. H.] 62 A. 788. It is not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to refuse a view of machinery referred to in the testimony when it appears that the jury could have understood its situation and operation from the oral testimony received. Shalgren v. Red Cliff Lumber Co. [Minn.] 104 N. W. 531.

21. In an action to recover damages caused by the construction of an elevated railroad in front of plaintiff's building, it was held that the court could in its discretion refuse to allow the jury to examine through a microscope dust collected by a magnet from the walls of the building and claimed to consist in part of steel dust caused by operation of road. Cotton v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 698.

22. In an action to recover damages for injuries to personal property, the court may in its discretion refuse to compel plaintiff to produce the property for inspection of the jury where it appears that witnesses for defendant were allowed to inspect it before trial. Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 511, 104 N. W. 773.

personal as to the trustee,[17] equity will not permit a trust to fail for want of a trustee,[18] and an actual delivery or legal assignment with the intention of passing title to the trustee as such.[19] A complete valid trust will be enforced regardless of whether it is supported by a consideration or not.[20] intent can be fairly ascertained from the examination of the instrument, the courts will uphold it.[24] To that end they will not be restrained by narrow and technical rules of construction; but if the intent of the grantor or donor be apparent, even though not expressed with technical nicety, the trust will not be avoided.[25] The word "trust" need not be used,[26] and being used is not conclusive.[27] Words of express condition in a deed are not inapt as introductory to a declaration of trust[28] and this is especially true where words of determination or reverter are omitted.[29] In determining such question, the whole clause in its form and scope must be considered.[30] The question whether a will is aptly expressed to create a trust is treated elsewhere.[31] It is essential that the settlor part with his interest as absolute owner.[32] Where paper is sent a bank for collection and there is no authority to mingle the proceeds with the other funds of the bank, there is a trust.[33] While it is not necessary that any beneficial interest pass to the trustee,[34] still a testamentary trust is not void because the trustees are among the beneficiaries thereof.[35] Neither notice to the cestui que trust[36] nor assent by the trustee[37] is essential to validity of trust. It is essential that there be no fraud or undue influence exercised in procuring the trust.[38] By statute in some states a person with whom or

A grantor conveyed real estate to a trustee by warranty deed in the usual form and for the consideration of "one dollar and the execution of the trust hereby created," and as a part of the same transaction executed an instrument providing for the appointment of a trustee "to take and hold title" to the real estate "from and after my death and not before," and that at the grantor's death the trustee should take possession of the property and dispose of it in the manner prescribed, held that the deed and instrument created a trust; the words "from and after my death and not before" not limiting the authority given to the trustee "to take and hold title" to the property conveyed. Lewis v. Curnutt [Iowa] 106 N. W. 914. A grantor conveyed real estate to a trustee by a warranty deed, and as a part of the same transaction delivered to the trustee an instrument providing for the appointment of a trustee to hold the property "for and in behalf of" the grantor, and authorizing the trustee to do any act for carrying out the trust which the grantor "could do if present." NOTE. Right to revoke: The intention to or not to create a trust is the controlling element. Kelley v. Snow, 185 Mass. 288. Many courts hold that a mere deposit in trust for another without more raises an inference of a trust. Gafney's Estate, 146 Pa. 49; Robertson v. McCarty, 54 App. Div. 103. Others hold that some further act is necessary to evidence intent. Cleveland v. Hampden Sav. Bank, 182 Mass. 110; Marcy v. Amazeen, 61 N. H. 131, 60 Am. Rep. 320. Some jurisdictions go farther and hold that it may be a trust, even though the donor intends to retain control over it till his death. Martin v. Martin, 166 N. Y. 611; Miller v. Clark, 40 F. 15. But the general rule is that reservation of the power of revocation negatives the intention to create a trust. Providence Sav. Inst. v. Carpenter, 18 R. I. 287.—From 15 Yale L. J. 42.

The confusion in the authorities is due to a failure of the courts to distinguish between the inherent revocability of a testamentary disposition and the revocability stipulated for in a declaration of trust. in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another is a trustee of an express trust.[39] In New York it has been stated that vested remaindermen have an "irrevocable trust" in the property.[40]

Validity of purpose.[41]—In many states, statutes abolish express trusts for all but specified purposes; constructions placed on such statutes are shown in the notes.[42] The trust having for its object the acquisition of lands, its validity is governed by the law of the state where such land is situated.[43] An attempted trust being an entire and complete scheme for the control and disposition of a part of the property, the invalidity of a portion renders the entire trust void,[44] though the rule is otherwise where a valid part of the trust is severable from the remainder without destroying the purpose of the settlor.[45]

Spendthrift trusts.[46]—In order to create a spendthrift trust certain prerequisites must be observed, to wit: First. The gift to the donee must be only of the income. He must take no estate whatever, have nothing to alienate, have no right to possession, have no beneficial interest in the land, but only a qualified right to support and an equitable interest only in the income.[47] Second. The legal title must be vested in a trustee.[48] Third. The trust must be an active one.[49] It is not necessary that an instrument creating a spendthrift trust should contain an expressed declaration that the interest of the cestui que trust in the trust estate shall be beyond the reach of his creditors, provided such appears to be the clear intention of the testator or donor as gathered from all parts of the instrument construed together in the light of the circumstances.[50] The fact that a trustee is appointed and vested with the estate, and the beneficiary is given the income only, is a circumstance from which the intention of the testator to create a spendthrift trust may be inferred.[51] A spendthrift trust is recognized in Missouri.[52]

Establishment by parol and extrinsic evidence.[53]—In order to establish an express trust by parol, the evidence must be full, clear, and satisfactory;[54] whether the evidence is sufficient is for the jury.[55]

Bank deposits in trust.[56]—While the courts have refused to lay down any arbitrary, inflexible rule, they substantially agree that something more is necessary with respect to deposits in banks than the mere opening of the account in the name of the depositor in trust for another.[57] In New York a deposit by one person of his own money, in his own name as trustee for another, standing alone, establishes a tentative trust merely.[58]

Construction.[59]—The construction of testamentary trusts is treated elsewhere.[60] Deeds of trust are to be construed according to the intention manifested in the instruments themselves when viewed in their necessary relation to the circumstances surrounding the parties.[61] A practical construction is of great weight.[62]

Active and passive trusts.[63]—A trust is active when the interposition of the trustee is necessary to carry out its purpose, with respect to immediate or remote beneficiaries.[64] A trust is passive when the trustee has no duty to perform, or when the trust serves no purpose, or none that would not be equally served without it.[65] In California an express trust to convey real property is void,[66] but a trust to lease property, collect and pay rentals to a designated person, is valid.[67]

statutes of most states require that an express trust of realty be evidenced by a written declaration, some statutes requiring the creation of the trust to be a written instrument, others requiring merely a written declaration.[74] This rule does not apply, however, as against creditors seeking to set aside conveyances as in fraud of their rights.[75] A third party has no standing to invoke a statute requiring the trust to be in writing.[76] In Minnesota a trust within the meaning of the statute of frauds is an obligation arising out of a confidence reposed in a person to whom the legal title to property is conveyed that he will faithfully apply the property according to the wishes of the creator of the trust.[77]

§ 3. Implied trusts.[78]—The tendency of the modern decisions, both in England and in this country, is to restrict the deducing of a trust from the expression by the testator of a wish, desire or recommendation regarding the disposition of property absolutely bequeathed.[79] Words of desire, request, recommendation, or confidence in a will, addressed by a testator to a legatee whom he has the power to command, create no trust in favor of the parties recommended, unless (1) the intention of the testator to make the desire, request, recommendation, or confidence imperative upon the legatee, so that he should have no option to comply or to refuse an agreement requiring him to sell the same, pay the debts and return the balance. Nearly all of the property received by defendant was personal, and the real estate was held by him as security for his claim. Held, that though the statute prohibits the admission of parol evidence to establish a trust in realty, parol evidence proving the agreement was admissible, the implied agreement growing out of the transaction not being different from the express one. to comply with it, clearly appears from the whole will and the relation and circumstances of the testator when it was made;[80] (2) unless the subject-matter is certain;[81] and (3) unless the beneficiaries are clearly designated.[82] When these three conditions exist a precatory trust may be created in favor of the parties recommended.[83] The test of the first condition of a precatory trust is the clear intention of the testator to imperatively control the conduct of the party to whom the language of the will is addressed by the expression of the wish or desire, and not to commit to his discretion the exercise of the option to comply or to refuse to comply with the wish or suggestion expressed.[84] Persons appointed as executors of a will become trustees thereunder by implication of law where the will imposes upon such executors duties other and further than the mere settlement of the estate.[85]

§ 4. Constructive trusts. A. Trusts raised where property is held or obtained by fraud.[86]—Constructive trusts are implied not from agreement,[87] but from actual or legal fraud on the part of the alleged trustee[88] rendering the creation of a trust necessary to protect the equities of an innocent party.[89] The trust attaches only to the property acquired by fraud.[90] The breach of an express trust to hold title

Page v. Harper [Kan.] 84 P. 1024. Absolute and unconditional deeds by husband to wife held not to create a trust. Williams v. Williams, 94 N. Y. S. 1128. The act of one of two parties to an option for the purchase of land in obtaining title to a second contract, made after the termination of the first one, held not a fraud on the other. Commercial Bank v. Weldon [Cal.] 84 P. 171. Plaintiff's husband and another located a mining claim, a portion of which they sold to plaintiff's grantor. The assessment work not having been performed, plaintiff relocated the claim and obtained a patent from the United States therefor. Held no trust. Helstrom v. Rodes [Utah] 83 P. 730. Where a commissioner for the sale of real estate of an infant transferred proceeds of a sale to a third person, the latter became a constructive trustee holding the amount transferred to him for the benefit of the infant, and was not merely indebted to the commissioner for the amount so transferred. Pope v. Prince's Adm'r [Va.] 52 S. E. 1009. Where a party procures a life tenant of real estate, to whom he has paid a small consideration, and her children, who are entitled to the remainder in fee, to convey the property to another who, in turn without consideration, conveys to the first person's wife, who holds it for his benefit, the wife, even in the absence of a showing of misrepresentation, will be assumed to hold the property as trustee for the children and be required to reconvey to them. Slater v. Rudderforth, 25 App. D. C. 497. One taking a deed for land knowing that another has a valid equitable title to the same land from the same vendor is held in equity as holding the legal title for the benefit of the first purchaser and equity will compel him to pass the legal title to such first purchaser. Reel v. Reel [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 1023. Plaintiffs held entitled to land which would have descended to them from their ancestor, had he had title thereto, defendants violating their agreement in procuring patent to land to allow plaintiffs to share therein. Coons v. Clay, 27 Ky. L. R. 1139, 87 S. W. 1078. Where one, for the purpose of defrauding creditors, has title to his land taken for his benefit in the name of another who furnishes the purchase money, there is no trust, he not having been overreached. Layne v. Layne [Ky.] 90 S. W. 555.

89. Plaintiff's hands must be clean. Employes fraudulently using for their own benefit a secret process used by their employer held not trustees, their employer having procured the process by fraud. Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co. [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 881.

90. Husband's separate deed to wife of their homestead on her promising to hold same for another after her death held not to

for another will not of itself constitute fraud on which a court of equity will build up a constructive trust.[91] Under certain circumstances one to whom the property of a decedent has passed by will, and perhaps by operation of law, takes the same subject to certain expressed agreements or contracts which constitute them trustees with respect to such property.[92] A depositee is not bound to see that funds properly withdrawn are properly applied,[93] hence in the absence of participation in the fraud[94] or notice thereof,[95] the mere intermingling of trust and individual funds by a trustee is insufficient to raise a trust against the depositee.[96]

One standing in a fiduciary relation with another and obtaining an advantage thereby becomes a trustee for the latter;[97] it is essential that the alleged trustee consents to assume the relation[98] and that confidence is reposed and betrayed.[99] This

Note: In considering these facts it must be borne in mind that certificates of deposit and drafts, unlike certificates of stock in corporation or promissory notes, are mere temporary representatives of value or credits. They do not bear interest. They are negotiable paper according to the law merchant. 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. §§ 1653, 1703, 1705. In the ordinary course of business such paper is uaed like currency to pass money presently from one person to another in business transactions, not to represent money more or less permanently invested with a view of producing income. Decisions relating to the transfer by trustees of certificates of stock, promiasory notes and similar papers afford little aid in a case of this kind.—From Brookhouse v. Union Pub. Co. [N. H.] 62 A. 219.

Dillow, 218 Ill. 537, 75 N. E. 1046. Where an attorney for execution creditors purchases land at a sheriff's sale for a less sum than the amount of the claims of his clients upon which it it is being sold, a "resulting" trust arises in favor of his clients. Whitman v. O'Brien, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 208. An officer of a corporation, employed on a salary to sell its stock for the benefit of the corporation must account for all the proceeds thereof, such funds being trust funds. Camden Land Co. v. Lewis [Me.] 63 A. 523. A president of a corporation issuing, without authority, treasury stock to himself is regarded as holding the stock in trust for the corporation. Id. Where one employed to act as agent for another in the purchase of real estate becomes the purchaser himself, he will be considered in equity as holding the property in trust for his principal although he purchased with his own money, subject to reimbursement for his proper expenditures in that behalf. Johnson v. Hayward [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1058. Evidence held sufficient to show the existence of such confidential relations as to make the purchase by defendant inure to plaintiff's benefit so as to entitle him to a conveyance. Morrison v. Hunter [Neb.] 105 N. W. 88.

98. Merely reposing confidence in another does not of itself create a trust, nor make a trustee of one in whom confidence has been reposed. To create a fiduciary relation by contract it is necessary that the consent of the trustee to assume that relation be expressed in the contract or be derived therefrom by necessary implication. State v. State Journal Co. [Neb.] 106 N. W. 434.

99. That corporation authorized its pres-constructive trust does not depend upon the fairness or unfairness of the unauthorized disposition which the trustee attempts to make of the trust property, nor upon the existence of an intention to create a trust by the unauthorized transaction.[1]

A constructive trust is not within the statute of frauds.[2] The same rule as to the certainty of the property embraced applies to constructive as to express trusts.[3]

Burden of proof and evidence.[4]—The proof to establish the trust must be clear and convincing,[5] a mere preponderance of the evidence is insufficient.[6]

(§ 4) B. Trusts by equitable construction in the absence of fraud.[7]—When necessary to prevent injustice, equity will construct a trust, though there be no fraud.[8] The obligor in a bond for a deed holds the title as trustee for the obligee.[9] In the absence of any elements of fraud, gift, or payment of antecedent indebtedness, the mere fact that property is purchased at a price known to the vendor and vendee to be less than its true value does not constitute the vendee a trustee for the benefit of the vendor's creditors for the difference between such purchase price and value.[10] Equity will not imply a greater or a different trust than the circumstances, including the understanding and purpose of the parties, render necessary to protect the interests of a beneficiary who is innocent of wrong, especially when the trustee appears to have acted with fidelity and in accordance with the mutual purpose.[11]

§ 5. Resulting trusts.—The general rule[12] is that where the purchase money is paid by one person and the legal[13] title to the property is conveyed to another, ident to act for it in the purchase of property does not create a trust, he purchasing the property in his own name and with his own money. Camden Land Co. v. Lewis [Me.] 63 A. 523. Assignment of legacy by son to father held not to create a trust. Chapman v. Ferns, 118 Ill. App. 116. The mere grant of licenses or permits to cut timber on certain described lands in the public domain does not make the cutting of timber on other lands by the licensees the act of trustees ex maleficio. 8. Where money was deposited in a bank under the mistaken belief of the depositor that it belonged to a partnership between himself and decedent which was subsequently judicially declared never to have existed and that the money belonged to the decedent, held the bank was an involuntary trustee under Civ. Code §§ 2223, 2224, defining an involuntary trustee as one who wrongfully detains a thing or gains the same by fraud, accident, mistake or other wrongful act. First Nat. Bank v. The fact that the obligor may have been allowed to collect rents beyond the amount necessary to repay advances held not to necessarily negative claim on the part of the obligors that they had become vested with the full right and equitable title to the property on the previous surrender of the note given by the obligees. Id. It is a recognized rule that under an enforceable contract for the sale of land, especially where possession is given to the vendee and the only condition precedent to the transfer of the legal title is the making of a deferred payment, the vendor's interest in the land becomes in equity that of a mortgagee rather than owner, and he thereafter holds such title in trust to secure the promised payment. 13. An action to declare a resulting trust cannot be maintained against one who has made final proof for government land and received a final receipt therefor, until he has received a patent from the government con-

a trust results in favor of the person furnishing the consideration.[14] In case a legacy or devise in trust elapses there is a resulting trust in favor of those who would otherwise have been entitled to the property.[15] A trustee dying, his heirs and devisees take the property charged with a resulting trust in favor of the beneficiary.[16] The beneficiary's hands must be clean,[17] although even if the trust arises out of complainant's fraud he is nevertheless entitled to relief if he is not obliged to disclose the fraud in making out his case.[18] The trust is not within the statute of frauds.[19]

By statute in some states, resulting trusts are abolished.[20] A mortgage of real estate is not a conveyance within the meaning of such statutes.[21]

17. A trust cannot result in one of two persons for the benefit of the other, if they intended and agreed to obtain land from the government unlawfully and fraudulently. Keely v. Gregg [Mont.] 82 P. 27.

18. The trustee cannot defeat the trust because it is fraudulent as to third persons. A married man purchasing property taking title in a woman not his wife and whom he was engaged to marry as soon as he was divorced, held resulting trust though title was so taken to defeat wife's claim for alimony. 21. Gen. St. 1901, § 7880 construed. Hanrion v. Hanrion [Kan.] 84 P. 381, citing 2 C. L. 1933, n 4.

The consideration[22] must be furnished by or on behalf of the beneficiary,[23] and, if paid by one for him, he must incur an obligation to repay so that the consideration actually moves from him at the time.[24] The consideration must be adequate and substantial though it need not be money.[25] And where a part only of the purchase money is furnished by the beneficiary, the trust is for a proportionate share of the land bought.[26]

Presumption of gift or advancement.[27]—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, where the purchaser is under a legal, or in some cases even a moral obligation to support the grantee named in the deed, equity raises a presumption that the purchase is intended as a gift or advancement;[28] but this presumption is not conclusive[29] and may be overcome by clear and satisfactory proof;[30] the burden of proof being on the claimant,[31] the question being one of intent and consequently one of fact.[32] This presumption does not extend to a case where the one furnishing the consideration is engaged to marry the grantee as soon as the former's wife obtains a divorce.[33]

Where one who has, by his own labor and at his own expense discovered a mine, but has not made a location thereof under the mining laws, afterwards discloses to another the location of such mine, in consideration of and in reliance upon an agreement or understanding between them to the effect that the mine, when located, shall be their joint property and such other person locates the mine in his own name and that of a third person a resulting trust arises. Stewart v. Douglass [Cal.] 83 P. 699. In an action to enforce a resulting trust of a half-interest in mining claims, the complaint alleged that in an interview plaintiff said that, if the claims were taken up, plaintiff would be entitled to a half-interest, therein, to which defendant agreed, and that plaintiff relied on such statements and representations and in consequence of such reliance conducted defendant to the mines, showed him their situation, and in pursuance thereof defendant wrongfully located the mines in the name of himself and another, and refused to allow plaintiff any interest therein, held sufficient. § 6. The beneficiary. His estate, rights, and interest.[39]—The beneficiary takes merely an equitable estate[40] limited by the terms of the grant[41] and is not entitled to the possession of the property.[42] A trust deed passes an interest to the beneficiary instantly upon its execution and delivery,[43] and this is true thought the grantor reserves a power of revocation,[44] and regardless of how far in the future the enjoyment of the benefit may be deferred;[45] but the beneficiary's right to the enjoyment of the benefit being contingent, he has no leviable interest in the property.[46] The beneficiary's interest is not affected by a reconveyance by the trustee.[47] The settlor may make the trust conditional,[48] and in such case the beneficiaries take cum onere,[49] but regard will only be had to stated conditions.[50] The refusal of a trustee of an active trust to accept the trust does not vest title to the trust fund in the cestui que trust.[51] Beneficiary may sue for damages to property by the construction of a highway.[52]

Where trustees are to be merely depositaries, receiving money and immediately paying it over, the beneficiary can sue in his own name for breach of the contract.[53]

The statute of uses[54] which is a part of the law of almost all states operates to convey the legal as well as the equitable title to the beneficiary of a passive trust.[55]

Rights between beneficiaries.[56]—Mere knowledge of and consent to an unauthorized loan by a trustee, on part of a beneficiary, in the absence of fraud or collusion or the receipt of any of the money, is not sufficient to create a liability against him to reimburse his co-beneficiaries for such loss as may occur.[57]

Income and principal.[58]—The determination of whether stock dividends are income or capital depends upon the substance and intent of the action of the corporation as manifested by its vote or resolution.[59] In other words, when a dividend based upon the earnings of a company is declared payable in stock, and the company has the power of so distributing it and this power is validly exercised, it will be treated as income and goes to the life tenant.[60] Under what has come to be known as the "Massachusetts rule" cash dividends upon corporate stock are ordinarily to be regarded as income and stock dividends as capital,[61] but this rule is not an absolute one and will yield when necessary to accomplish justice,[62] and the burden of so showing is on the party asserting its failure to so work out.[63] Where trustees in their discretion are authorized to draw upon the principal for the purpose of present necessities of the beneficiaries in case the income to which they are entitled under the trust is insufficient therefor, amounts so appropriated should be considered part of the income.[64] Where the principal has been invested in unproductive realty, the increase in the value thereof has been held to be income.[65]

Charges on income.[66]—Whether premiums paid for bonds are chargeable to the principal or income depends upon whether it is the intent of the settlor that the ages to realty held in trust. Davis v. Charles River Co., 11 Cush. [Mass.] 506. Where a plaintiff held real estate under a contract of purchase, on which all payments had been made, so as to entitle him to a deed, in an action for damages to the land, the court, though recognizing the necessity of joining the legal owner, allowed cestui to recover on the ground that the defendant had failed to object at the proper time. F., E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Setright, 34 Neb. 253. But the principal case, which is not rested by the court on any statute, seems to go farther than any other. It disregards the true nature of the trust relation in suggesting that the rights of the cestui are here analogous to those of a lessee.—From 19 Harv. L. R. 307.

60. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. White [Md.] 61 A. 295. When the profits or surplus of a corporation, which it has earned or realized in the management of its business, are paid to the stockholders by way of dividends, whether such profits or surplus has been earned before or after the creation of the trust, so long as the amount that is actually distributed is actual surplus earned, or income or profits made, by the corporation in its business and distributed as such, it is income. Robertson v. De Brulatour, 98 N. Y. S. 15. Where corporate stock was devised in trust, held on a dissolution of the corporation and sale of all its assets, the value of the plant, equipment and materials, betterments, good will, patents, patent rights, licenses, trade-marks, rights, privileges and franchises and working capital constituted principal and the invested surplus, surplus cash capital and accumulated surplus earnings constituted "dividends, issues, and profits." beneficiary shall have the full income or the remainderman the entire principal.[67] Where the remainderman, by investment of the capital of the trust, derives a material benefit, consisting of a very large increase in the estate, he is not entitled to call on the life tenant to create a sinking fund from the income to make good the premium on the bonds which wears away as the bonds mature.[68] A statutory stockholder's liability cannot be enforced against the beneficiary of the earnings of such stock where the bequest to him does not constitute a segregation of such stock.[69]

Claims enforceable against trust funds or estate.[70]—Authorized permanent improvements may be made a charge on the corpus of the estate.[71] An intention of the settlor to make his debts a charge on the estate may be inferred from circumstances.[72] The expenses of the trustee in defending a suit attacking the validity of the trust should be charged against the corpus of the estate.[73]

Rights of creditors and assignees of beneficiary.[74]—The beneficiary's interest[75] is assignable absolutely or as security.[76] As the beneficiary has only the legal title the aid of a court of equity is necessary to establish such lien.[77] An assignment of one's interest in a spendthrift trust for the support of one's family is not a charging or incumbering of it.[78] In New York the beneficiary of a trust to receive rents and profits cannot assign future income.[79] A probate or orphans' court being of limited jurisdiction, a provision allowing the beneficiary to sell the trust property with the consent and approbation of such court is void.[80] The constructions placed on specific assignments are shown in the notes.[81] Creditors of the beneficiary may, in equity, reach such of his interest as has become vested.[82] Whether a particular creditor of the trustee is entitled to a preference, owing to peculiar circumstances, depends upon equitable rules and principles.[83] That one of a preferred class of creditors institutes suit against the trustee as such to enforce his claim does not entitle him to priority over the other creditors of the same class,[84] except, perhaps, for taxed costs and reasonable counsel fees.[85]

Representation of beneficiary by trustee.[86]—In the management of the estate the trustee is the representative of all the beneficiaries who take through him,[87] hence, as a general rule, the latter are not necessary parties defendant[88] or plaintiff.[89] As between the trust estate and a stranger, the statute of limitations runs as in other cases, and if the trustee is barred the cestui que trust is equally barred,[90] though this rule does not apply where the legal title to the land is in infant heirs of the trustee.[91]

§ 7. The trustee.[92] Judicial appointment.[93]—Suits for the appointment of trustees are equitable,[94] and any person interested absolutely or contingently in the funds in the hands of a trustee has sufficient interest in the fund to qualify him to petition for the appointment of a proper trustee or the removal of an improper one.[95] The suitability of a trustee is a fact that must be proved in every case before the court is authorized to make the appointment,[96] and consequently the fact that the settlor makes such approval necessary does not render the trust invalid.[97] Order of appointment cannot be made without notice to beneficiaries and remaindermen,[98] though lack of such notice may be waived;[99] but it has been held that failure to give such notice is not ground for dismissing the petition,[1] but the court should order the parties interested to be brought into court and then pass upon the merits of the application.[2]

In New York the statutory provisions for the appointment of a trustee of an express trust apply also to trustees of powers in trust,[3] and the supreme court has inherent power to execute a power in trust, and, in the absence of a trustee, it may take upon itself its execution.[4] trustees than those which merely relate to the performance of trusts for the benefit of a beneficiary, the beneficiary can act as trustee for the others interested in the estate.[7] The grantor may create himself trustee.[8] The statutes of California authorize the creation of trusts to receive the rents and profits of realty and pay or apply them to the use of any person for himself and family.[9] An alien's incapacity to hold lands being removed he may become a trustee.[10]

Qualification and acceptance of trust.[11]—Though a mere agreement to undertake a trust in the future without compensation is not obligatory, yet where the donee of a fund accepts it for the benefit of third persons, his undertaking will be sustained.[12]

De facto trustees.—The trustee dying and the guardian of a sole beneficiary taking up the office without appointment, he becomes a de facto trustee.[13]

Succession and judicial appointment of new trustee.[14]—Where one of two trustees dies, resigns or renounces the trust, the entire trust devolves upon the remaining trustee and so long as he continues to act there is no vacancy.[15] The declaration of trust not placing the power of appointment elsewhere, a court of equity will, in a proper case, upon due application, fill a vacancy.[16]

A trustee will not be removed merely because he failed to keep a separate bank account until some time after his appointment, where it appears that the income of the estate was small and was promptly paid over, that an account had been stated by the trustee and confirmed by the court, that the disbursement of the income had been approved by the cestui que trust, and that the security of the fund had been in no way impeached. Strickler's Estate, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 455. The Act of June 3, 1893, P. L. 273, which gives to the surety of the trustee the right to compel the trustee to file a statement exhibiting the manner of investing the trust funds and which provides for the removal of the trustee in case of the irregular or improper investment of the trust funds, cannot be extended so as to give the surety the right to demand the removal of the trustee because the latter had failed to keep proper books and render full accounts, had invested trust funds in his own name and mingled them with his own funds and was wasting and mismanaging the estate. Id. The fact that a solvent trustee with ample bond deposited part of the trust funds in a bank in his individual name when his account was overdrawn and did not keep any separate books of account of his trusteeship, and the fact that his loaning of the fund was not done in accordance with approved business methods did not make it incumbent on the court to remove him, especially where the trustee considered that he was liable for interest on the whole sum received. number designated by the creator has become excessive or insufficient.[22] Where an executor is appointed by will and he is by implication of law also trustee thereunder, a revocation of his appointment as executor operates, likewise, as a revocation of his appointment as trustee.[23] A bill for a removal must show the necessity thereof.[24]

§ 8. Execution and administration of the trust. A. Nature of trustee's title and establishment of estate.[25]—The trustee of an active trust[26] takes the legal title[27] to such estate as is necessary for the performance of the trust,[28] the unnecessary portion of an estate given a trustee becoming executed by the statute of uses.[29] The extent of the trustee's title is largely dependent upon the terms of the instrument creating the trust.[30] Every estate not embraced in the trust, and not otherwise disposed of, is left in the author of the trust or his successors, and can be transferred or devised by him subject to the execution of the trust.[31] A trustee may sue a corporation to recover dividends declared upon corporate stock which he holds in trust,[32] but he does not represent legal estates in the trust property.[33] In the absence of substitutionary provisions in the instrument of creation, the trustee's title is inheritable and passes to his heirs at law, who hold as trustees until the court appoints a successor.[34] The trustee's estate terminates upon the completion of the trust.[35] Where a will devises land in trust for the purposes of a sale and division among the trustees and other beneficiaries, the trustees take a joint title, and their separate interests as beneficiaries are not merged with their interest as trustees.[36] The trustee does not hold adversely to beneficiary,[37] and in ejectment by a trustee his legal title will not prevail against the cestui que trust in lawful possession under the trust.[38] Except as to personal discretionary powers,[39] succeeding trustees are vested with all the rights and clothed with all the powers of the original trustees.[40] A substituted trustee becomes in equity the assignee of any rights of action possessed by the cestuis que

trustent for injuries done to the trust property before the substituted trustee's appointment.[41]

Receipt and establishment of estate.[42]—So far as their legal effect is concerned, the characteristic distinction between a will and a trust is that while the former becomes operative only at the death of the testator a trust passes an interest to the trustee and beneficiary instantly upon the execution and delivery of the writing by which it is created.[43]

(§ 8) B. Discretion and general powers of trustees and judicial control.[44]—The trustee's powers are not limited to those expressly conferred,[45] but extend to all means which are reasonable and proper to render general directions effectual,[46] and to all acts done in good faith for the manifest good of the estate.[47] Equity has jurisdiction upon a proper showing to enlarge the powers conferred upon trustees by the declaration of trust, but such enlargement will not be made except from necessity and then no further than the circumstances of the particular case urgently require.[48] Limitations on the powers of trustees are for the benefit of the cestui que trust and the preservation of the estate.[49] If trustees undertake to administer the trust without seeking the aid and protection of any court, they may exercise the discretion and execute the powers conferred on them by the instrument creating the trust, and equity will not interfere with them, so long as they act in good faith and with fair discretion.[50] But if, upon their application or that of their cestuis que trust with their assent, a court of equity, by an appropriate decree, assumes jurisdiction of the trusts and directs them to be executed under its direction and supervision, the authorities agree that the situation of the trustees is thereby changed so that they must thereafter secure the sanction or ratification of the supervising court for the successive steps of their administration of the trusts,[51] such as the selection of a depository for current cash balance.[52] And the orders of the supervising court as to discretionary matters are not subject to appeal.[53] While in the absence of arbitrary wrongdoing the court will not interfere with an exercise of discretion by the trustee,[54] still a trustee failing to exercise discretionary powers so as to accomplish the purpose of the trust, a court of equity will intervene.[55] A trustee cannot justify his failure to perform the duties of the trust by showing that no one asked him to perform them.[56] A power being coupled with active trust duties, it is imperative,[57] and the courts will not allow such a trust to fail of execution when by any possible means it can be executed by the court itself; and the court will act retrospectively and in the face of the greatest difficulties to accomplish this object.[58] There being several trustees, one of them has no power to act for them all.[59] A trustee has authority to pray for an assignment of dower.[60] He has no right to pass upon questions in which he is directly interested as beneficiary and involving an exercise of discretion.[61] Unless special confidence is reposed in the trustee as an individual,[62] discretionary powers pass to a substituted trustee.[63]

Judicial instructions.[64]—A trustee is entitled to the protection of a court of equity in executing the trust, and when real and serious doubts confront him as to his duty, is entitled to the advice of the court to guide him.[65] In instructing a trustee it is not proper for the court to pass upon an objection to parties.[66]

(§ 8) C. Management of estate and investments.[67]—The trustee is only required to exercise the care of an ordinarily prudent man.[68] It is his duty to invest the fund in safe interest-bearing securities, and not put it at risk by investment in a business of uncertain and precarious character.[69] Where the same persons are the executors and trustees of an estate they may act as trustees though they have not been discharged as executors and they have not formally transferred the estate from themselves as executors to themselves as trustees.[70] A trustee borrowing money on behalf negligence on his part, repaid the loan before it was due to a single trustee by a check payable to that trustee alone, and had received from him a forged satisfaction piece of the mortgage securing the loan, where the trustee to whom payment was made embezzled the money paid to him. NOTE. Trusts upon personal confidence: It is now a well settled rule of equity, that a trust will not be allowed to fail for want of a trustee. Perry [5th Ed.] § 267a and cases cited; Ames Cases Trusts, p. 230, n. 2. Even where a trust deed has failed to name a trustee, the court has inherent jurisdiction to appoint one. Dodkin v. Brunt, L. R. 6 Eq. 580; Ames, p. 226, and cases cited. In every trust, certain general powers, although not expressly mentioned in the instrument creating the trust, are conferred upon the trustees by implication, for the successful execution of the trust, Perry, § 473; e. g., the power to reserve trust lands, Lerow v. Wilmarth, 9 Allen [Mass.] 382, to make repairs, Sohier v. Eldredge, 103 Mass. 345, or to compromise debts due to the trust estate. Forshaw v. Higginson, 8 De Gex, M. & G. 827. Although these powers involve the exercise of discretion, they attach to the office, being connected with the management of the trust estate, and pass with the title to a subsequent trustee. They are to be distinguished from such special powers as lie in the personal confidence of the trustee named by the creator of the trust. The question is one of intention, to be ascertained from the nature and objects of the trust. Trust Co. v. Sutro, 75 Md. 361, 365. The doctrine is founded on reason and ancient authority that a discretion vested in the original trustee cannot be exercised by the court or by a new trustee; for example, a discretion to settle a fund upon marriage with the trustee's consent (Clarke v. Parker, 19 Ves. 1), or to pay over the income when the cestui's conduct should be satisfactory to the trustees (Walker v. Walker, 5 Madd. 424. See, also, Cochran v. Paris, 11 Grat. [Va.] 348, 356), or to pay an annuity unless circumstances render it inexpedient (French v. Davidson, 3 Madd. 396), or to increase an annuity in the trustees' discretion (Hull v. Hull, 24 N. Y. 647). For a similar reason a discretionary "power" not coupled with a duty, can be exercised only by the donee of the power. Coleman v. Beach, 97 N. Y. 545. A trust solely upon personal discretion terminates upon the death of the trustee. Gambell v. Trippe, 75 Md. 252, 32 Am. St. Rep. 388; Security Co. v. Snow, 70 Conn. 288, 66 Am. St. Rep. 107. Unless the discretion is expressly delegated, as e. g., to trustees "or their successors" (Lorings v. Marsh, 6 Wall. [U. S.] 337, 353, 18 Law. Ed. 802), or to "whoever shall execute" a will (Royce v. Adams, 123 N. Y. 402), or to the "trustees for the time being" (Bartley v. Bartley, 3 Drew. 384). So a trust to pay so much of the income and principal as the trustee should deem expedient, if ever, terminates upon the trustee's death, and there being no intention that the cestui should of necessity ultimately receive the entire fund, and no gift over, the testator died intestate as to the trust fund. of himself and beneficiaries is a "borrower" or "debtor" within the meaning of usury laws.[71] Adding the word "trustee" to one's name in signing a contract without designating the beneficiary renders one liable personally and as trustee.[72]

Delivery of control to beneficiary.[73]—Where the trustees in accordance with the provisions of the declaration of trust convey to part of the beneficiaries their undivided interests, the trustees and such beneficiaries hold as tenants in common,[74] and thereafter the trustees or either of the grantees are entitled to ask for partition.[75]

Estoppel of beneficiaries to question acts.[76]—Free and voluntary[77] acquiescence of a beneficiary in the wrongful application of a trust fund releases the trustee and his bondsmen from liability to the beneficiary.[78] Except in the case of fraud or breach of trust,[78] the beneficiary cannot accept and retain the benefit of the trusteeship and at the same time repudiate the powers and title under which it was held and acts done thereunder.[80]

(§ 8) D. Creation of charges, mortgage and lease of estate.[81]—Advances made to meet the expenses of the trust are in the nature of debts of the trustee,[82] and the latter has implied power to pay the same.[83]

Power to lease.[84]—The exercise of a power to lease must be reasonable.[85]

Mortgages.[86]—As a general rule where necessary for the preservation of the estate the trustee may mortgage the property.[87] The power is frequently expressly given,[88] and a power to "take charge of, manage and control" property includes power to mortgage,[89] but not so as to a power to sell and convey real estate.[90] A trustee being authorized to execute mortgages to pay off incumbrances, such mortgages may be made direct to the incumbrancers.[91] An unauthorized mortgage given by a trustee is valid as to his individual interest in the property.[92]

Application of proceeds.[93]—Where the creator of the trust confides the application of the money to the discretion of the trustee, the mortgagee need not see to its application.[94]

(§ 8) E. Sale of trust property.[95]—The right of the trustee to sell the property depends upon the intention of the settlor,[96] the legal presumption being against the power.[97] A power to divide has been held to include a power to sell.[98] If a trustee being clothed with a power of conveying the legal title by the appointment and direction of the cestuis que trust, dies before its execution, the power is gone.[99] A mode of alienation being prescribed in the instrument it must be followed.[1] Where the consent of one of the beneficiaries of the trust to the exercise of a power of sale by the trustee is required, it is not necessary that such person should join in the deed by the trustee or endorse thereon a written approval of the sale and conveyance; but such consent may be evidenced by a written assent to the sale entered upon an application for leave to sell presented by the trustee to the court.[2] A will requiring a majority of testator's children to sign a request to sell, neither the trustee nor the party to whom the sale is to be made, though children of testator, should be counted.[3] In New York sales made by the trustees qualifying are valid.[4] The trustee should not sell without notice to all the beneficiaries.[5] A deed of bargain and sale made by a trustee as such, who has no interest in the premises conveyed otherwise than as trustee, will serve to execute a general power of private sale conferred upon him by the trust deed though the deed makes no reference to such power.[6] Where the trustees are also executors of decedent's property, and in their capacity as trustees have an absolute power of sale, the fact that they signed the deed as executors, instead of trustees, does not invalidate the sale.[7] While ordinarily a court of equity will give its sanction to a sale made by a trustee in the exercise of a discretionary power conferred under a deed or will,[8] still such sale must be for the advantage and interest of all the parties under the trust and the discretion reposed in the trustee must be fairly and reasonably exercised,[9] and a beneficiary cannot have a sale set aside in the absence of a showing of fraud or collusion, or that the property did not sell for its true value.[10] One purchasing at an unauthorized sale with knowledge of such fact holds the property subject to the trust.[11]

Application of proceeds.[12]—The trust attaches to the proceeds of the sale.[13] Purchasers under a discretionary power of sale are not required to see that the proceeds are invested according to the trust.[14]

(§ 8) F. Payments or surrender to beneficiary.[15]—Payments by the trustee are frequently made discretionary with him and if made in good faith will be sustained.[16] Where trustees are vested with discretionary powers as to the amount to be apportioned to beneficiaries there must be real and substantial differences of situation germane to the subject and calling for difference in treatment to justify discrimination in amount.[17] To make a valid decree for the management and distribution of the trust fund it is not necessary that the court should obtain jurisdiction of every person interested in it by making personal service upon each such as would be necessary for the maintenance of an adversary suit in personam.[18] On the final distribution of the fund the probate court has power, and it is its duty, to correct errors made in distributing other portions of the fund.[19]

24. Every violation by a trustee of a duty which equity lays upon him, whether willful and fraudulent or done through negligence, or arising through mere oversight or forgetfulness, is a breach of trust. Safe protects him from losses occurring through his carelessness or bad judgment,[25] and he is liable for knowingly permitting a co-trustee to misappropriate the funds of the estate.[26] A trustee refusing to perform unless paid a certain sum, a payment so made can be avoided[27] upon the trustee being put in statu quo,[28] or upon the benefit to be derived by him from the trust agreement being shown.[29] Equity will enforce a trust against the executor of a deceased trustee.[30] The estate of a trustee who has failed to account for an investment in real estate will be held liable in the sum originally realized therefrom, where that sum is definitely fixed and it is impossible to determine with precision the ultimate fate of the investment.[31] The fact that a substituted trustee holds the legal title to the trust estate and that he seeks to recover money due the trust estate does not deprive equity of jurisdiction to compel restoration, for the primary interest to be maintained is essentially equitable.[32]

§ 10. Liability on trustee's bond.[33]

§ 11. Personal dealings with estate.[34]—To be sustainable, personal dealings by the trustee with the estate must be fair and free from fraud,[35] such dealings being voidable at the election of the beneficiary[36] if he exercises the right with reasonable diligence.[37] The trustee is liable for all profits made in the transaction.[38] Unless permission is given by the court,[39] sales to the trustee or to others upon a secret arrangement for his benefit, or by him after he thus gets title, to purchasers with notice, or to his wife or relations, at a less price than he could have obtained from other buyers, are voidable at the election of the cestuis que trust.[40] They may resort to a court of equity either to compel a reconveyance upon payment of the purchase price, or to require the property to be resold, or upon their affirmation of the sale, if the trustee has sold it in excess of the price paid by him, he must account for the proceeds, or if unsold, they may charge him in his account for its actual value at the time of sale.[41] It is not essential that the sales be by the trustee.[42] The duty not to deal with trust property ceases on termination of the trust.[43]

beneficiary may unite in bringing an action,[45] though the latter is not generally deemed a necessary party.[46] A foreign trustee may sue to recover any part of the trust estate,[47] and an additional title of executors may be disregarded.[48] Where an action is prosecuted against defendants as trustees, the court has power to turn the action into one against them individually;[49] in such case the summons, as well as the complaint, should be amended.[50] In a suit by the trustee against a third party, an allegation that plaintiff has taken title in himself for the benefit of another is sufficient.[51] Where plaintiff makes a trustee a party as such and alleges that he is interested in the subject of the action, it is within the discretion of the court, on its own motion, to require him to answer for the protection of his beneficiary.[52] Failure of the record to show that the trustees have given bonds will not defeat an action by them.[53]

§ 13. Compensation and expenses.[54]—A testamentary trustee is a devisee under the will[55] and though he may not deal with the property as fully as he may after distribution he is entitled to compensation for necessary services and expenses rendered before distribution.[56] Trustees are entitled to commissions on money borrowed on a mortgage and beneficially expended in restoring burned property.[57] The question of what is reasonable compensation to trustees depends largely upon the circumstances of each particular case and cannot be determined by any inflexible rule.[58] While in practice it is usually claimed and awarded as a commission, the rate is not determined by any established rule.[59] It may be graduated according to the responsibility incurred, the amount of the estate, and the extent of the services necessarily performed.[60] When an agreement creating an express trust provides that the trustee shall be compensated and fixes the compensation, if, by an express agreement, new duties are required to be performed by the trustee different in their nature from such as were required of him under the original agreement, a court of equity may allow reasonable compensation for the performance of such duties.[61] Unless he voluntarily makes good the losses resulting,[62] a trustee forfeits his right to compensation by mis-

62. Where a trustee has voluntarily mad good whatever loss has occurred in the in vestment of a trust fund, and had regu larly paid the whole income to the ben management, and this is especially true where the mismanagement creates the necessity for the services for which compensation is claimed.[63] Failure to claim commissions at a proper time will not be deemed a waiver of the right thereto where at the time of accounting the trustee has sufficient accrued income in his hands to pay his commissions and the failure to claim them at the proper time was due to the fact that he did not know he was entitled to them.[64] The time when the trust is to be terminated is a proper time for determining the value of the services.[65] Commissions being compensation are not allowable until the services for which they are given are performed,[66] the general rule being that they are not earned until an accounting is had and an allowance made,[67] though this rule has been changed by statute in some states.[68] Where a federal court has taken jurisdiction of the settlement and distribution of a trust in a suit by a beneficiary, it also acquires jurisdiction to fix the compensation of the trustee.[69]

The expenses of administration are a proper charge on the entire estate.[70]

Attorney's fees and expenses.[71]—Litigation being necessary, reasonable counsel fees may be allowed,[72] but the expenses of adverse litigation are not a charge against the estate.[73] The cost of litigation, including attorney's fees, arising in connection with the administration of the trust, should first be charged against surplus income arising after the purpose of the trust has been fulfilled.[74] As a general rule the court has no power to allow and tax as costs the fees of the solicitor of the beneficiary.[75]

§ 14. Accounting, distribution, and discharge.[76]—Accounting, and not assumpsit, is generally the proper way of obtaining a balance due from a trustee.[77] The right to an accounting is not an absolute one, but is based on equitable principles.[78]

Jurisdiction of accounting and distribution[79] is in a court of general equity powers.[80] A federal court may grant the relief.[81] Testamentary trustee in a preliminary accounting claiming an allowance for counsel fees in procuring distribution, the court does not lose jurisdiction of such item by passing upon the other items of account and declining such item for an alleged lack of jurisdiction to grant such allowance.[82] The Ohio statutes requiring trustees to account to the probate court do not confer on such court control over the property itself, but only authority to biennially settle the trustee's accounts,[83] consequently such jurisdiction does not attach where the subject-matter of the trust has been drawn into the possession and control of a Federal court by the filing of a bill for settlement and distribution by one of the beneficiaries of the trust.[84]

Interest[85] is properly allowed where it appears that the judgment is for money received by the defendant for the use of another and retained by him without the owner's knowledge.[86] Mesne profits, or rental value, does not ordinarily bear interest, at least until it becomes a liquidated sum.[87]

Credits and charges.[88]—The trustee improperly investing the fund is chargeable with the entire amount and interest less proper credits for the property actually purchased, permanent improvements thereon, etc.[89] A trustee is chargeable with rents and profits arising from the fund.[90] If an agent or person occupying a fiduciary relation toward an owner of property buys it in at a judicial sale, he is chargeable with the reasonable rental value of the property.[91] A trustee cannot en-

81. Where the powers and duties of executors and trustees under a will are severable, and, prior to the filing of a bill in the Federal court by a beneficiary under the trust, the administration of the personal estate by the executors had ended, and nothing remained but the management and disposition of the trust real estate remaining unsold for the completion of the trust, the Federal court has jurisdiction to decree an accounting by the trustees and direct distribution and settlement of the trust. force any claim against the trust property which he purchased after his appointment as trustee.[92]

Procedure on accounting.[93]—Only those against whom relief is sought are necessary parties.[94] Plaintiff is not bound by statements made in reports and letters attached to the complaint to show the trust relation.[95] The cause of action relating simply to money paid in by plaintiff, the complaint is not demurrable because asking relief against defendants personally and as trustees.[96] The burden is on the trustee to show what he did with the property while in his possession or charge.[97] The sufficiency of objections to raise specific questions,[98] and the effect of specific statements by the trustee,[99] are shown in the notes.

Costs and appellate expenses.[1]—An extra allowance of costs may be allowed the trustee.[2] The beneficiaries being divided into groups litigating against each other, an extra allowance of costs to them out of the estate is improper.[3]

Decree.[4]—A decree upon an accounting approving investments binds all parties to the proceeding even though the investment be unauthorized by law.[5] A beneficiary assenting to a proposed plan of distribution and to its being embodied in the final account, and such final account being allowed by the probate court, it will be regarded as a final settlement not only of matters appearing on the face of the account,[6] but also of those matters of which the beneficiary in the exercise of reasonable diligence could have known.[7]

§ 15. Establishment and enforcement of trust and remedies of beneficiary. A. Express trusts. Jurisdiction.[8]—The enforcement of a trust in equity has in contemplation the terms, conduct, and management of the trust, the settlement of the trustee's accounts, compensation to the trustee, the order of payment over and his discharge from his trusteeship.[9]

Laches, limitations, and estoppel.[10]—Laches may be invoked against an express trust.[11] Limitations do not run against the beneficiary of an express trust until repudiation.[12]

Parties.[13]—The general rules as to parties apply.[14] The beneficial owners may sue to enforce the trust.[15] In an action relating to a trust deed in which there is a dispute between the beneficiaries, the beneficiaries, as well as the trustees, are necessary parties.[16]

Pleadings.[17]—Specific, definite facts showing the trust relation must be pleaded.[18] The bill must show that statutory requirements as to writing, signature, etc., have been complied with.[19] The general rules prohibiting variance between the pleadings and amendments[20] and the pleadings and proof[21] apply.

Evidence.[22]—Letters by the grantor to the grantee of the deed of trust being delivered with the deed and not altering, varying, or contradicting the terms thereof, may be considered.[23] A claim filed in the probate court by the alleged beneficiary showing merely a promise to give the property to him is admissible against him.[24]

(§ 15) B. Implied trusts.[27]

(§ 15) C. Constructive trusts.[28]—The enforcement of a trust may be had, as between proper parties, whenever it is required upon equitable considerations and is justified by the pleadings and proof in the case.[29]

Jurisdiction.[30]—In the absence of statutory regulations equity has exclusive jurisdiction to enforce a constructive trust,[31] and the fact that the property is that of a decedent does not give the probate court jurisdiction.[32]

Laches and limitations.[33]—Unreasonable delay amounting to laches will bar the right to enforce the trust.[34] Limitations run against constructive trusts,[35] from notice of fraud.[36]

Evidence.[37]—The general rules apply.[38]

Relief granted.[39]—The court should determine all facts necessary to establish the trust.[40] The trust being established the decree should impress it upon the property and require the holder of the legal title to convey to the beneficiaries.[41] The court should also, by said decree, retain jurisdiction of the cause for the purpose of affording other and further relief to the parties.[42] After entry of such relief, the court should permit the beneficiary, if he so desires, to amend his bill so as to ask for partition,[43] or a defendant having an interest may file a cross bill therefor.[44] If either of the parties should so seek a partition, the cause will then proceed as an ordinary suit for partition and accounting.[45] If no such amendment or cross bill is filed a receiver should be appointed and the cause referred to a master to take an account of rents and profits if such relief is prayed for by the bill.[48]

Laches, limitations, and estoppel.[49]—The statute of limitations does not run so long as there is no adverse holding or repudiation of the trust.[50] The trust arising from fraud, limitation does not start to run until notice or discovery of fraud.[51] The complaint need not show when the trust resulted.[52] Where an involuntary trustee has acquired the apparent legal title to the property of the beneficiary under a mortgage foreclosure sale, such judgment and sale will not estop the beneficiary from establishing the trust.[53]

Parties.[54]—In Missouri a married woman may sue alone in equity to establish a resulting trust in her favor in land, her interest in which existed before the passage of the married woman's acts.[55]

Remedies.—The beneficiaries have a right to claim the benefit of the purchase and to demand a conveyance if they think fit to reimburse the sum actually paid, or an account for the profits in case of a resale.[56]

Pleading.[57]—A trust being established, it may be decreed under a general prayer for relief in a cross bill.[58]

Evidence.[59]—Widow may testify as to circumstances of purchase and source of money.[60]

§ 16. Following trust property.[61]—As between the beneficiary and trustee and all persons claiming under the trustee otherwise than by purchase for a valuable consideration without notice,[62] all property belonging to the trust, however changed or altered,[63] continues subject to the trust.[64] And as against such third parties this Wentzel v. Chesley, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 181. When an agent deposits his principal's funds in a bank in the agent's individual name, the principal has the right to such funds as against the agent or the bank, and it is immaterial that the funds have been mingled with other funds of the agent. Packer v. Crary, 121 Iowa, 388, 96 N. W. 870.

right may be enforced by the trustee.[65] The fact that the beneficiary brings suit as administrator of the trustee to recover the funds does not preclude him from suing in his own name therefor.[66] The amount of the beneficiary's recovery is not the amount due him from the trustee but the amount wrongfully transferred by the trustee less proper expenditures.[67] The equitable remedy given a cestui que trust to follow trust funds into property in which they have been fraudulently invested by his trustee is not taken away by statutory provisions affording a remedy by attachment or garnishment; but the legal and equitable remedies are to be considered concurrent.[68] Nor is such equitable remedy defeated by the fact that the cestui que trust might sue the trustee and his bondsmen and enforce his claim by levy;[69] the rule being well settled that the defrauded party has his option either to hold the trustee personally liable or to follow his money into the property in which it has been reinvested.[70] Nor is the remedy of the defrauded cestui que trust to realize out of such property affected by the fact that the agreement between the trustee and the owner of such property which led up to the diversion of such funds was illegal, the cestui que trust not being a party to such agreement.[71] In actions to follow such trust property, the burden of proof is on defendant.[72] Laches will bar the right.[73] As to whether or not the beneficiary is entitled to a preference against an insolvent trustee's estate depends upon equitable rules, and Federal courts are not bound by the decisions of the state where the contract was made.[74]

Identification of fund.[75]—It is essential that the trust property can be identified in its altered or substituted form.[76] Identification is a question of fact,[77] and the burden is on the claimant to prove the identification[78] and to show the amount if less than the whole of the substituted property.[79] An earmark is not indispensable to enable a real owner to assert his right to property, or its product or substitute.[80] Evidence of substantial identity may be attached to the thing itself or may be extraneous.[81] In regard to money, substantial identity is not oneness of pieces of coin or of bank bills.[82]

65. Any person who receives property knowing that it is subject to a trust and that it has been transferred in violation of the duty or power of the trustee, takes it subject to the right, not only of the cestui que trust, but also of the trustee to reclaim the property. 80, 81, 82. Packer v. Crary, 121 Iowa 388, 96 N. W. 870.

Bona fide purchasers[83] are protected against secret trusts and hence the beneficiary cannot follow the property into their hands.[84] In order to occupy the position of a bona fide purchaser the purchaser must have had neither actual nor constructive notice of the trust.[85] The word "trustee" following the name of the grantee in a deed is notice that he is not the owner of the property and is sufficient to put all subsequent purchasers from him on inquiry as to the existence and nature of the trust.[86] The legal presumption is that a trustee has no power of sale and a mortgagee of property which was conveyed to the mortgagor as trustee and all subsequent purchasers through him are bound to exercise reasonable diligence to ascertain whether or not the equitable owners of the property had authorized the execution of the mortgage.[87] Such diligence is not exercised where there is nothing of record, and they fail to make inquiry of the trustee himself and make no effort to do so; and the contingency that he might have denied the trust is no excuse for such failure.[88] A person dealing with a trust is chargeable with notice of the trust conditions,[89] and one taking trust property in violation of such condition takes it subject to the right of the trustee or cestui que trust to reclaim possession.[90]

§ 17. Termination and abrogation of trust. Acts of the settlor.[91]—In the absence of fraud, undue influence or mistake, a trust cannot be revoked by the grantor unless he reserves a power of revocation.[92] In New York a deposit by one person of his own money, in his own name as trustee for another, standing alone, establishes a tentative trust merely, revocable at will until the depositor dies or completes the gift in his lifetime by some unequivocal act or declaration.[93] A power of revocation not being exercised by the donor during his lifetime does not affect the trust.[94] So, also, a power to apply the principal of a trust to the use of the beneficiary merely renders the trust defeasible to the extent the power is exercised and does not invalidate the trust nor interfere with the vesting of the remainder.[95]

94. Witherington v. Herring [N. C.] 53 S. E. 303.

95. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681.

The trustee[96] cannot, without the consent of the cestui que trust, change his relation to that of a debtor.[97]

Termination by consent.[98]—Equity will not compel the execution of the trust against the wishes of the persons beneficially interested,[99] hence all persons receiving or likely to receive a benefit from the trust being of full age and consenting, the trust may be terminated.[1] An administrator has no power to relieve an involuntary trustee of money belonging to the estate from his trust relation to the estate.[2]

Termination for failure or completion of purpose.[3]—Unless terminated by act of the parties or of a court of competent jurisdiction, the trust continues until its objects have been fully accomplished or rendered impossible.[4] When such time arrives the trust ceases.[5] A testamentary trust may be terminated as to certain property and continued as to the balance.[6] In Massachusetts the supreme court has jurisdiction in a proper case to terminate a testamentary trust.[7]

Union of equitable and future legal estate.[8]—If the equitable and legal estates meet in one person, the equitable estate is generally merged in the legal and the trust ends.[9] There must be an identity of person and present interest.[10]

Federal possessions,[13] extradition,[14] and the like, which obviously command separate treatment. Property rights in the public domain are also treated elsewhere.[15]

§ 1. Contracts.[16]—The rules as to contracts in general[17] and the usual rules of construction and interpretation apply to contracts with the United States.[18] The United States is liable like an individual where it improperly interferes with the work of a contractor,[19] and is not relieved from liability because it suspends the contractor's work from motives of public consideration.[20] The finding of a commission under a contract providing that if changes are made in the plans or specifications affecting the cost of the work, the increased or diminished compensation should be fixed by a board appointed for that purpose, is conclusive.[21]

The bond of a government contractor given pursuant to the Federal statute conditioned that he shall pay for all material and services, protects persons who furnish material though it does not become part of the permanent structure,[22] but not persons who furnish equipments for carrying on the work.[23] Any person who furnishes labor or material subsequent to the execution of the bond is protected by it.[24] The United States is not a preferred creditor under such bond.[25] The act confers an independent right of action upon each creditor having a claim under the bond,[26] and a suit by one is not a bar to an action by another.[27] A bond in the language of the statute conditioned on the payment of all laborers and materialmen constitutes a covenant by the contractor to pay them.[28] An action on the bond is properly brought in the name of the United States as covenantee in the bond,[29] and may be enforced under the laws and practice, and in the courts of the state where the suit is brought.[30]

§ 2. Officers and employes.[32]—The acts or omissions of officers, authorized to bind the United States or to shape its course of conduct as to a particular transaction, when they have acted within the purview of their authority, may in a proper case work an estoppel against the government.[33] A government is not liable for the tortious acts of its officers unless it authorizes[34] or ratifies them.[35] A subsequent ratification of the act of a public officer is equivalent to original authority.[36]

§ 3. Claims.[37]—The willful presenting of a false claim against the United States is, by statute, declared to be a criminal offense.[38] A contract for the prosecution of a claim against the United States which makes compensation for services rendered thereunder a lien upon the claim, is a violation of the rule forbidding an assignment in advance of allowance.[39] But such a provision does not invalidate a portion of the contract providing for the payment for such services of a sum equal to one-third of the amount allowed.[40] Claims against the United States do not bear interest unless it is given by stipulation or express statutory provision.[41]

§ 4. Actions by and against.[42]—When the United States comes into court to assert a property right, its rights are precisely the same as those of any other suitor.[43] The United States is not subject to be sued without its consent.[44] Actions against the United States must be brought within the limitation period prescribed.[45] Under the Tucker Act the United States district courts have jurisdiction to entertain petitions for a salvage award where the United States has benefited by the salvage service.[46]

UNITED STATES MARSHALS AND COMMISSIONERS.[47]

A marshal, under the statute of limitations, cannot recover from the United States for disbursements made or services performed, after six years, counting from the actual date of disbursing and performing, and not from the expiration of his term of office.[48] Likewise the United States may be barred by the statute of limitations,[49] or by estoppel from reopening its accounts with a former marshal,[50] or from recouping money paid under an error of law, but used honestly to recompense deputy marshals.[51] A disbursement by a marshal for bailiffs is neither "fees," "salary," nor "compensation,"[52] and accordingly suit therefor in the circuit court is allowable under the Tucker Act. The right of a marshal to reimbursement for fuel, lights and "other contingencies that may accrue in holding the courts" covers the hire of extra bailiffs put in charge of juries.[53] No suit on accounts can be brought against the United States by a commissioner until he has furnished his accounts to the district attorney who shall submit them for approval to the district or circuit court,[54] whence they shall be sent to the attorney general who will forward it to the treasury department,[55] and only after such an account has been acted on or has been neglected for six months, has the court of claims any jurisdiction.[56]

USES.[58]

In construing the statute of uses three rules are applied whereby conveyances are excepted from its operation, viz.: (1) Where a use was limited upon a use;[59] (2) where a copyhold or leasehold estate or personal property was limited to uses;[60] (3) where the trust is an active one.[61] The statute executes passive trusts.[62] What trusts are active and what are passive are treated elsewhere.[63] The provision of the New York statute of uses and trusts, declaring that every valid express trust shall vest the whole estate in the trustee, is, by settled construction, limited to the trust estate, and has no application to future legal estates in lands covered by the trust to take effect in possession on the termination of the trust.[64] The statute of uses will execute any unnecessary portion of an estate given a trustee.[65]

USURY.

§ 1. Elements and indicia.[66]—Usury is the taking of more for the use of money than the law allows; it is an illegal profit.[67] The subject pertains alone to obligations growing out of contracts and not to the matter of taxes, which do not rest upon contractual relations.[68]

There must be an intention to exact an excessive rate.[69] A fraudulent purpose to evade the usury laws is the true test,[70] and erroneously claiming more than is due,[71] or reserving excessive interest through mistake in fact, on the part of the lender, does not render the contract usurious.[72] Usury cannot be presumed,[73] and an unlawful intent cannot be imputed, so long as the acts of the parties admit of a lawful construction.[74] The good faith, purpose, and intent of such transactions are or-

and sisters without a conveyance by the trustee. Uzzell v. Horn, 71 S. C. 426, 51 S. E. 253.

Where a person, in lieu of a loan of money sells to another an article at a price beyond its real value, that the vendee may sell it to obtain money to relieve his necessities, the contract is usurious or not, according to the intent of the parties. Barry v. Paranto [Minn.] 106 N. W. 911. Where a sum of money apparently in excess of the legal rate of interest was retained by the lender, it was competent to show that a part of it was received in payment of an independent claim and not reserved as interest. Patton v. Bank of Lafayette [Ga.] 53 S. E. 664. The taking of interest for a part of a year, computed on the principle that a year consists of 360 days, or 12 months of 30 days each, is not usurious, if such rule is resorted to in good faith and for convenience in computation. 74. Transaction between mother and son whereby the latter loaned her money and accounted for interest held not to be usurious. Lusk v. Smith [Kan.] 81 P. 173. Where the loan was to be repaid from the proceeds of collections and the interest charged was such that it might not exceed the legal rate, considering the uncertain time of payment, the contract was not deemed usurious.

dinarily questions of fact for the jury;[75] and the burden is always upon the party seeking to impeach the transaction to show guilty intent and that the contract was a cover for usury.[76] Whenever the lender stipulates for the chance of an advantage beyond the legal interest, the contract is usurious if he is entitled to have the money lent repaid with interest thereon at all events.[77] But the supreme court of the United States has held that when the promise to pay a sum above legal interest depends upon a contingency, and not upon any happening of a certain event, the loan is not usurious.[78] Where an agreement is not affected with usury at its inception, it will not be invalidated by subsequent usurious transactions between the parties.[79]

There must be a loan or forbearance.[80]

The aggregate of the exactions must exceed the legal rate[81] to constitute usury. Where a fixed amount of dues and interest was paid per week, by a borrowing member of a building and loan association, and the dues were applied on the principal, thus reducing it while the interest payments continued the same in amount, the contract was clearly usurious.[82] If the debt on which it is complained usury is exacted may be wholly discharged, according to its terms, without reaching the usury, there is no usury since the debtor has the privilege of paying the lawful sum only.[83]

Discounts, bonuses, commissions and other deductions and charges.[84]—The most common devices for the securing of unlawful interest are charges against the bor-

Codes & St. § 3669, permitting 12 per cent per annum, a note at 10 per cent interest stipulating that, if the interest was not paid when due it should be added to the principal and the whole should bear interest at 12 per cent, was not usurious, although providing for interest on both principal and accrued interest after maturity of the note. Blake v. Yount [Wash.] 84 P. 625. In South Carolina, a note given at 10 per cent interest "annually from this date," draws that rate of interest only until maturity, when the statute fixes the rate at 7 per cent, and the exaction of 10 per cent after maturity is usury. Earle v. Owings [S. C.] 51 S. E. 980. An agreement which provided that the lender might at his option demand payment of the note given or cancel it and take the stock deposited as collateral security, together with accrued dividends, was usurious. Hungerford Brass & Copper Co. v. Brigham, 47 Misc. 240, 95 N. Y. S. 867.

Discount in lieu of interest: The discount of a note is not added to, but is in lieu of interest, when interest runs only from the maturity of the note. Lichtenstein v. Lyons [La.] 40 So. 454. Where the rates charged, whether as interest or discount do not exceed the lawful rate, the contract is not usurious. Id. rower by way of commissions, fees for appraisals, views, examinations and renewals in connection with the loan.[85] A provision in a contract which bears the highest legal rate of interest, in the nature of a penalty for non-performance of the terms of payment, was held not to render the contract usurious;[86] and where an interest in an estate was assigned as collateral security for a loan, an agreement for the payment of collection charges to the lender was not usurious, although such charges were exorbitant and oppressive.[87]

The taint of usury is not removed[88] by the renewal of a contract infected therewith and the payment of the illegal interest to the date of renewal.[89] The assignment of a usurious debt and mortgage to an innocent purchaser does not remove the taint;[90] but where the debtor procured the assignment of such debt and mortgage to an innocent party who advanced money to pay the usurious debt on an agreement by the debtor to execute a new mortgage, on his failure to execute such new mortgage equity regarded the old one as its equivalent and held the land bound by it, notwithstanding the usury in the original debt.[91]

Usury statutes.[92]—The right of the legislature to prescribe a maximum rate of interest for the forbearance of money, and to attach penalties for disregard thereof, has been recognized and exercised from an early date.[93] Such statutes are enacted for the protection of the borrower on the theory that his necessities deprive him of freedom in contracting and place him at the mercy of the lender.[94] Such legislation is valid unless it imposes such arbitrary restrictions upon the individual and his business as are palpably foreign to the legitimate purposes of such laws.[95] The principle that the usury laws affect only the remedy and not the substance of contracts has no application to valid contracts made without the state.[96]

Usury laws as applied to building and loan contracts.[99]—Such associations in some states are relieved from the strict operation of the usury laws[1] upon compliance with the statutory provisions as to making their loans.[2] A rather strict compliance with law is required of building and loan associations, when they seek to obtain more than the legal rate of interest under the plea of subscriptions to stock, bonuses, bids for loans, fines, etc.;[3] but the statutory provisions as to competitive bidding for loans are sufficiently complied with, when an opportunity for bidding is given and priority or preference of loan is awarded to the highest bidder, even though but one is present.[4] It was not the purpose of the legislature to exempt such associations from the operation of the usury laws generally, upon any and all contracts howsoever made, but the exemption is restricted to interest, premium, fines and interest on such premiums as shall accrue "according to the provisions" of the law.[5] A corporation doing, in effect, a banking business, is not entitled to the benefit of such provisions and cannot enforce fines and premiums which, but for such laws, would be usurious.[6] It does not necessarily follow that the law against usury is violated by such associations, if a larger sum is reserved to be paid for a loan or for an advance, whichever it may be called, than the principal and interest of the amount advanced.[7] The charter privileges of such associations must be regarded in determining the question of usury.[8] A member who bids for a loan at a specified premium, his bid being ac-pay when he became a member of the association and which he was bound to pay to mature his stock, was held not usurious under Maryland laws. Id.

Armor v. Bank of Loudon [Miss.] 39 So. 17. And in Kentucky a contract for the payment of a fixed amount of dues and interest per week, the dues being applied to reduce the principal while the interest payment remained the same, was held to be clearly usurious. cepted and the money loaned him in good faith, is estopped, after receiving the benefits of the transaction, to deny the validity of the loan on the ground of usury.[9]

§ 2. The defense of usury.[10]—This defense is personal to the borrower;[11] and a trustee, who borrows money for himself and his beneficiaries, may plead usury as a defense in behalf of himself and the beneficiaries.[12] A purchaser of real estate charged with a usurious debt, who assumes to pay it in consideration of his purchase, cannot defend against the usury;[13] but it has been held that such grantee may avail himself of the defense, where the mortgagee was a corporation assuming to be a loan association, but was in effect doing a banking business.[14] A person who borrows money from another to pay a usurious debt cannot avoid his obligation to the latter because of the taint of usury in the original debt;[15] but where a note is given in renewal of another, usury in the original transaction may be shown, upon a proper plea and between the original parties.[16] So long as any portion of the debt remains due, the defense of usury is available;[17] and a counterclaim for usury is available and effective as long as the right of action exists on the principal sum.[18] A person may be estopped to set up the plea of usury by his submission to an award of arbitrators,[19] or by his own fraudulent inducement of the contract,[20] or by participation in the benefits of the transaction.[21] Under charter authority to define by ordinance the powers and privileges of pawnbrokers, a city cannot authorize them to charge usury.[22]

19. Where defendant's indebtedness to plaintiff was submitted to arbitrators on the agreement that legal interest was to be computed on items of indebtedness from maturity, and defendant took no exceptions to the award by appeal (Code 1896. § 522) or otherwise, but gave his notes and mortgage therefor, he was estopped to set up as a defense against foreclosure, that the arbitrators had included usurious charges in their award. Hoffman v. Milner [Ala.] 38 So. 758.

20. Where the maker of a usurious note induces another to purchase it after maturity, representing a stated amount to be due thereon and promising to pay that sum later, he is estopped from pleading the usury, where the purchaser acts in good faith and without knowledge of the usury. Walker v. Hillyer [Ga.] 53 S. E. 313. Where the borrower, who was the lender's attorney, informed him that the contract drawn was "all right," the borrower was estopped to plead that the contract was usurious. Hungerford Brass & Copper Co. v. Brigham, 95 N. Y. Supp. 867. See 19 Harv. L. R. 454.

21. A member of a homestead loan association who bids for a loan is estopped, after the acceptance of his bid, the loan of the money to him in good faith and the receipt of the benefits of the transaction, to deny the validity of the loan on the ground of usury. Broch v. French, 116 Ill. App. 15; Home Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. McKay, 217 Ill. 551, 75 N. E. 569. Where the grantee of land subject to a usurious mortgage has received as a part of the consideration the benefit of the amounts claimed to be usurious, the law estops him to set up usury (Cobe v. Summers [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 965, 106 N. W. 707); but where such amount has not been deducted from the purchase price, he is not estopped (Id.).

25. Under the Illinois statute. Home Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. McKay, 217 Ill. 551, 75 N. E. 569. It must set up the usurious contract, specifying its terms and the parquirements of a plea of usury in Georgia are fixed by statute, where the purpose is either to recover back usury or set off the same against plaintiff's demand, the purpose being that the amount sought to be recovered or set off may be determined accurately from the allegations, without aid from extraneous sources.[26] A defense of usury common to husband and wife when pleaded by him inures to her benefit though not pleaded by her.[27] Where defendant pleaded the defense of usury specially and filed a notice of set-off therewith, his giving evidence in support of his plea of usury was a waiver of his notice of set-off.[28] That a contract is in fact usurious may be shown by parol evidence, although it is in writing.[29] The burden of proving the usury remains on defendant to the end.[30]

§ 3. The effect of usury.[31]—Contracts made in connection with the loaning of money, under a scheme whereby the lender or his agent receives payments of money or its equivalent in excess of the legal rate, have been held to be prohibited by the law and unenforceable.[32] Where certain funds coming to a bankrupt from his father's estate were claimed in part by virtue of specific liens or assignments, the assignee senior in time could recover no portion of the fund, if his assignment was usurious;[33] but, where he made no claim on the fund in controversy, but was brought into the case as a defendant, by the other assignees, the latter could not have the fund released from his claim, without returning to him the consideration received by the bankrupt.[34] Where a debt secured by mortgage of personal property is constituted in part of usury, the mortgagee is neither a purchaser nor creditor without notice within the meaning of the recording acts.[35]

Forfeitures.[36]

Application of usurious payments.[37]—Usurious payments are to be applied in reduction of the principal.[38]

§ 4. Affirmative relief and procedure.[39]—The practice has always prevailed in chancery to allow the complainant to have a discovery of the particulars of usurious transactions, on the condition that he submits to pay the debt with legal interest.[40] The statute of New York being to the contrary, the plaintiff cannot be required, as a condition to relief, to make restitution of the moneys actually received upon the loans adjudged usurious.[41] Where a borrowing member of a loan association had repaid in full an original loan tainted with usury, he was entitled to have his trust deed securing the loan canceled, even as against an innocent holder of his notes and security.[42]

ticular facts relied upon to bring it within the statutory prohibition (Rogers v. Morton, 46 Misc. 494, 95 N. Y. S. 49), and the amounts paid (Nance v. Gray [Ala.] 38 So. 916).

Recovery of usury.[43]—An action to recover must be based on an actual payment of usurious interest.[44] Where the complaint in an action to recover usurious interest paid states the sum loaned, the amount retained as interest and for what time, from which it appears that there was an illegal rate of interest charged, it is sufficient although the rate of interest is not specifically stated.[45] Such actions may be barred by statute;[46] but, on a series of usurious transactions, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until they are all closed and a settlement made between the parties.[47]

Actions under statute.[48]—The requirements of a plea of usury, in Georgia, in an action to recover back usury paid, is fixed by statute, which provides that the amount sought to be recovered shall be determined accurately from the allegations, without aid from extraneous sources.[49]

Crimes and penalties.[50]—The legislature may make the violation of the usury laws a criminal offense.[51] Those who maintain a place where usurious rates of interest are taken, and the usury statutes habitually violated, may be indicted for keeping a disorderly house.[52] In the absence of express authority, a municipality cannot, by ordinance, impose a penalty upon money loaners for the exaction of usury.[53]

Cary [Wis.] 105 N. W. 792. Rev. St. 1899, § 2358, making it a misdemeanor to take interest above 2 per cent per month, is not repugnant to Const. art. 2, § 30, and Const. U. S. Amdt. 14, § 1, guaranteeing due process of law. Ex parte Berger [Mo.] 90 S. W. 759. Nor is that statute obnoxious to Const. art. 4, § 53, prohibiting special or exclusive privileges or immunities, or to Const. U. S. Amdt. 14, § 4, guarantying equal protection, on the ground that, since the general law allows only 8 per cent per annum, it arbitrarily divides usurers into criminal and noncriminal classes. Id. The statute does not discriminate by applying only to those who take more than 2 per cent a month "by means of commissions or brokerage charges," but applies alike to all who exceed the specified limit directly or indirectly. Id. The act of 1898 (22 St. at Large p. 749), relative to usury being made applicable only to future contracts, the penalty of the act of 1882 (18 St. at Large, p. 35) applies to all contracts made prior to the act of 1898. But where draw poker is specified in the charge, the court will take judicial notice that it is a gambling game. Id. If any game is specified, it is immaterial what game it is, since any game may be played for money or other stakes thus making it gambling. Id.

restrain and punish vagrants may pass an ordinance declaring what acts shall constitute vagrancy, but such power must not be exercised unreasonably and must be limited to the generally accepted meaning and scope of the law relating to the subject.[56] The state must prove all the essential ingredients of the crime.[57] Under a statute declaring that able-bodied married men who shall neglect or refuse to support their families shall be deemed vagrants, a professional man cannot be declared a vagrant merely because his profession does not yield an income sufficient to support his family.[58] In Georgia a child under sixteen years of age cannot be convicted of vagrancy.[59]

VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.

§ 1. The contract for the sale of land. A. General nature, requisites and validity.[60]—A sale is a transmutation of title in consideration of money.[61] A contract for the sale of land is governed by the principles applicable to other contracts,[62] consequently it must be free from fraud[63] or mistake,[64] and if entered into by an agent he must have authority.[65] It is not essential to the existence of the contract that the vendor have title.[66] A contract forbidden by law may be valid as to a bona fide vendee.[67] A contract is not fully executed until possession is delivered.[68]

56. Minneapolis ordinance approved July 15, 1891 held void in so far as it attempts to punish as a vagrant one found trespassing on private premises without giving a good account to the court of his conduct, and upheld as to its other provisions. State v. McFarland [Minn.] 105 N. W. 187.

57. No proof that defendant had no property. Vandiver v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 88.

58. Wife held not entitled to divorce on the ground that husband was a vagrant. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2228, 2921. Gallemore v. Gallemore [Mo. App.] 91 S. W. 406.

61. Authority in a broker to sell is not authority to make an exchange. Lucas v. County Recorder of Cass County [Neb.] 106 N. W. 217. One in possession under a contract for personal services and entitled to purchase on certain conditions is in as agent of the owner and not as vendee. National Fire Ins. Co. v. Three States Lumber Co., 217 Ill. 115, 75 N. E. 450.

62. See Contracts, 5 C. L. 664.

63. Evidence tending to show title in a vendor held admissible on the question of his good faith in entering into the contract. Hardman v. Kelley [S. D.] 104 N. W. 272. And see Fraud and Undue Influence, 5 C. L. 1541.

64. Where the purchaser through an honest mistake not attributable to his own negligence believes he is buying more land than the agreement covers, the contract will not be enforced against him. Cawley v. Jean [Mass.] 75 N. E. 614. See, also, Mistake and Accident, 6 C. L. 678.

65. A contract signed by a person who is not an authorized agent of the owner cannot be enforced. Trau v. Sloan [Pa.] 62 A. 984. Contract for the sale of land construed and

Form of contract.[69]—No particular words or form is essential.[70] The contract if partly performed may be oral.[71] A contract may be read from correspondence,[72] a promise to sell,[73] a memorandum,[74] or a deed,[75] but a contract of sale will not be read from one creating an agency.[76]

Certainty and definiteness.—The contract must be definite and certain[77] as to time of performance[78] and price.[79]

Offer and acceptance.[80]—There must be an offer to sell, and such offer must be accepted according to its terms.[81] Where a contract is void under the statute of held to have been executed by one individually and not as agent for the owner. Hardman v. Kelley [S. D.] 104 N. W. 272. See, also, Agency, 5 C. L. 64.

66. As where the paramount title is in the state, but he has made valuable improvement for which he is equitably entitled to compensation. Williams v. Finley [Tex.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 762, 90 S. W. 1087.

67. Under a rule making it a misdemeanor for an owner to survey a plat and sell it in violation of the terms of the act, a violation of such act does not render void a sale to a bona fide purchaser. Thomas v. Cowin [Ala.] 39 So. 898.

70. "I, Edward Gaule, hereby agree to sell and convey to James Foley all my interest in 320 acres of land at $14 per acre" construed and held a contract for the sale of an interest in the land at such price per acre. Ward v. Foley [C. C. A.] 141 F. 364. An instrument certifying that the owner of a tract of land has agreed to convey it to a certain person for a certain price, and containing a statement that "it is further noted" that such person is to pay such price and fixing the time of payment and conveyance is a mutually binding contract. Brownson v. Perry [Kan.] 81 P. 197. Where the purchaser accepts and acts upon it, his omission to sign is immaterial. Id. Writing construed and held to show a contract of sale to one in possession ostensibly as tenant. That upon payment of the purchase price he was to become the owner. Barfield v. Saunders [La.] 40 So. 593. Under an agreement by which one in possession ostensibly as tenant was to become the owner on payment of the purchase price, it is held that under the terms of the agreement the vendor could not sell to another after the first payment of the purchase price had been made. Id. A contract providing for the payment of the purchase price in instalments evidenced by notes and on payment of the notes a deed should be executed, and in case of default in payment all notes should become due and payments already made were to be considered as rent, is valid. Morris v. Green [Ark.] 88 S. W. 565.

71. See, also, post, Statute of frauds. Evidence sufficient to show that an oral contract was made. Veum v. Sheeran [Minn.] 104 N. W. 135; O'Brien v. Knotts [Ind.] 75 N. E. 594; Sprague v. Jessup [Or.] 83 P. 145. A contract by which one agreed to purchase a house and lot and give it to another in consideration of care and support during the life of the promisor may be enforced after his death. Ayers v. Short [Mich.] 105 N. W. 1115.

Evidence insufficient to establish a contract by an incompetent to convey or devise land in consideration of services. Hayden v. Collins [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1120.

72. Correspondence between vendor and vendee held to constitute a contract for the sale of land and not for an option. Hobart v. Frederiksen [S. D.] 105 N W. 168. Correspondence held to constitute a contract. Warner v. Marshall [Ind.] 75 N. E. 582.

73. An agreement to make a promise to sell is not a promise to sell within Civ. Code art. 2462. Kaplan v. Whitworth [La.] 40 So. 723.

74. Memorandum signed only by a party sought to be charged reciting receipt of payment for timber on certain lands held to constitute a contract of sale and not a mere option. Dennis Simmons Lumber Co. v. Corey [N. C.] 53 S. E. 300.

75. Instrument in form a deed construed to be a contract to convey a certain interest in lands when title thereto should be acquired by the vendor. Ames v. Kinnear [Wash.] 84 P. 629.

76. A contract by which one agrees to select government lands for another for which he is to be paid a certain sum per acre to be paid whenever he should deliver a deed from the person making the location, is not one of sale but one creating an agency. Farnum v. Clarke [Cal.] 84 P. 166.

77. A promise to convey land if the grantee would abandon her purpose of going abroad and remain in a certain city is a sufficiently definite consideration. The time they were to remain in such city being a reasonable time having reference to the nature of the contract. White v. Poole [N. H.] 62 A. 494. Receipt held not to constitute a valid contract, it being uncertain and containing no terms obligating the vendor to give a deed. Rosenblum v. Liener, 98 N. Y. S. 836.

78. Contract held not indefinite as to time of performance. Veum v. Sheeran [Minn.] 104 N. W. 135.

79. The terms as to price must be fixed and definite. Kaplan v. Whitworth [La.] 40 So. 723. Where the price per acre is fixed, and the only uncertainty is in the number of acres which can be ascertained by a survey, the price is definite. Howison v. Bartlett [Ala.] 40 So. 757. That a surveyor was not selected held not to render the contract indefinite. Id.

80. See 4 C. L. 1769 n. 45 et seq.

81. An offer to sell imposes no obligation until accepted according to its terms. Henry v. Black [Pa.] 63 A. 250. The offer must be frauds, a party may insert any provisions in a contract subsequently drawn up and sent by him to the other party for execution.[82] If the other party inserts additional terms there is no contract until such terms are accepted.[83]

Mutuality.—The contract must be mutual,[84] but a contract not binding on the purchaser may bind the vendor though it is not an option.[85] A contract to sell by the real equitable owner is mutual,[86] and where a vendee has paid a portion of the purchase money and gone into possession, the fact that he did not sign the contract does not render it not binding on him.[87]

Construction.[88]—The contract will be construed to give effect to the intent of the parties.[89] The construction placed upon the contract by the parties is binding upon them.[90] Every part of the contract is to be given effect and if consistent a construction adopted that will attain that end.[91] The validity of the contract is to be determined by the law of the place where the land is situated.[92]

(§ 1) B. Reformation and cancellation.[93]—A contract may be reformed[94] or canceled[95] for fraud,[96] mistake, or accident.[97] A cause of action for reformation of the contract and for damages to the freehold by the vendor after its execution may be joined.[98]

(§ 1) C. Statute of frauds.[99]—As a general rule a contract to be enforceable must be in writing,[1] and if made by an agent, he must have written authority,[2] but it accepted substantially as made. Frahm v. Metcalf [Neb.] 106 N. W. 227. A completed contract is not shown where the vendor accepts the price offered and expresses a willingness to close the deal at once, but afterwards submits additional proposals and leaves the matter open to the purchaser to make known his further wishes. Somerville v. Coppage [Md.] 61 A. 318.

82. Bewick v. Hanika [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 672, 106 N. W. 63.

83. Signing a contract with a builder for the construction of a house on the premises held not an acceptance of such terms. Bewick v. Hanika [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 672, 106 N. W. 63.

84. The vendor may withdraw from or repudiate a unilateral contract. Cooley v. Moss, 123 Ga. 707, 51 S. E. 625. Where one obtains possession under an option to purchase on certain conditions which he fails to perform, the contract is unilateral and the vendor need not tender a deed before maintaining action to recover possession. Bruschi v. Quail Min. & Mill. Co., 147 Cal. 120, 81 P. 404. An agreement whereby one person binds himself to make another a bond for title, but which imposes no obligation on the other party, is not bilateral. This is not a promise to sell within Civ. Code art. 2462. Kaplan v. Whitworth [La.] 40 So. 723. A written contract by the terms of which A. agrees to pay B. a sum of money in consideration of his conveying to C. certain land is not on its face unenforceable for want of mutuality. Quinton v. Mulvane [Kan.] 81 P. 486.

85. An instrument executed by a landowner reciting that a person had paid $500 as earnest money to be applied as cash payment on the purchase price when abstracts were approved, and stipulating that the owner had agreed to sell is an agreement enforceable against the owner but not against the third person. Clark v. Wilson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 770, 91 S. W. 627.

88. See 4 C. L. 1771.

89. In a contract conveying a certain number of acres "being my interest in," etc., "interest" means "part or share" and not the extent of the vendor's title. Brooks v. Halane, 116 Ill. App. 383.

90. Where a contract provided for dedication of a portion of the land, but not for acceptance of such dedication, but an accepted dedication was intended. McCormick v. Merritt [Iowa] 105 N. W. 428. 99. See 4 C. L. 1770. See, also, Frauds, Statute of, 5 C. L. 1550.

1. An oral contract to convey a life estate is not essential that it be signed by both parties.[3] A party may be precluded from asserting the defense of the statute,[4] hence a vendee who sues to enforce a contract not signed by him waives the benefit of the statute;[5] but a vendor is not estopped to set up the statute because the vendee relies and acts upon the oral agreement.[6] A contract may be taken out of the operation of the statute by part performance.[7] What constitutes part performance depends on the circumstances of each particular case.[8]

(§ 1) D. Options to buy or sell.[9]—An option is a contract whereby one purchases the right for a certain time, at his election, to demand and receive or to deliver certain land at a certain price.[10] Until an option to purchase has been exer-

with certain exceptions, the vendee to pay the vendor a certain sum per year during her life is one for the sale of land. Miller v. Hart [Ky.] 91 S. W. 698. A parol agreement to purchase land at execution sale, resell it and after deducting the purchase price and expenses pay the balance to the execution defendant is within the statute of frauds. Bryan v. Douds [Pa.] 62 A. 828. A contract void under the statute of frauds should be rescinded upon equitable terms. Miller v. Hart [Ky.] 91 S. W. 698.

NOTE. Right of vendee to recover money paid under a contract within the statute of frauds. Where he is in possession: The fact that the vendee has been put in possession will not defeat his right to recover payments upon refusal of the vendee to execute a conveyance. Jellison v. Jordon, 68 Me. 373; Wyvill v. Jones, 37 Minn. 68, 33 N. W. 43. He cannot, however, if the vendor does not repudiate. Donaldson v. Waters, 30 Ala. 175. Nor can he maintain an action to recover it until he restores possession. Abbott v. Draper, 4 Denio [N. Y.] 51. And the amount of the benefits received will be deducted from the amount of the recovery. Richards v. Allen, 17 Me. 296; De Montague v. Bacharach, 137 Mass. 123. 72 N. E. 938. If he has materially affected the value of the premises by cutting timber, this may prove a bar to recovery. Gilley v. Burkholder, 41 Mich. 749, 3 N. W. 221. Some authorities hold that he can recover nothing for his labor and improvements on the property. Gillett v. Maynard, 5 Johns. [N. Y.] 85; Bidell v. Tracy, 65 Vt. 494. See, also, Shreve v. 4. A vendee may not set up the statute of frauds to a parol extension when the vendor tendered performance within the original period and granted the extension at the request and for the benefit of the vendee. Daniels v. Rogers, 108 App. Div. 338, 96 N. Y. S. 642. One who after giving an option recognizes the validity of the contract by agreeing to an extension of the time within which it may be taken advantage of thereby estops himself from claiming that the contract is within the statute of frauds. Alston v. Connell [N. C.] 53 S. E. 292. One who has cut timber under an oral contract of sale cannot defend an action for its value on the ground that the contract was unenforceable under the statute of frauds. Alford Bros. v. 10. See Cyc. Law. Dict. Option 645. Instrument reciting that one has an option to purchase certain land for a certain price, a certain sum paid down to be forfeited if the balance was not paid before a certain date creates a mere option. White v. Bank of Hanford [Cal.] 83 P. 698. An agreement to rent a farm "with the refusal of buying it next fall for the sum of $6 per acre, and providing that if the second party did not take the place, any buildings belonging to him should be paid for by the first party at a reasonable price, if they did not "trade," was held to rent the farm with the option of buying at the time and place stated. Wellmaker v. Wheatley, 123 Ga. 201, 51 S. E. 436. An instrument by which a beneficiary in a trust deed who purchased on foreclosure certified that he had purchased and bound himself at any time prior to a certain date to convey to whom the mortgagor should direct is an option. cised, the person holding it has no title.[11] A contract which merely specifies how the vendee may acquire title is a mere option and does not pass the equitable title.[12] An offer of an option until accepted in accordance with its terms is governed by the same rules as an offer to sell and may be withdrawn at any time,[13] and where a written contract is contemplated no option is created until the writing is executed.[14] The conditions essential to the validity of any other contract must exist.[15] An option contract is converted into a contract of sale by an acceptance according to its terms[16] and within the time specified.[17] The acceptance must be unconditional.[18] An acceptance in terms varying from those of the offer amounts to a rejection of the offer.[19] The holder of an option to purchase who once rejects the offer cannot revive it by tendering an acceptance.[20] Time is necessarily of the essence of an option contract,[21] and if not taken advantage of during the period prescribed therein the person holding it loses all rights thereunder.[22] The option will be given effect[23] and continued in force[24] according to the legal import of its terms. An option is surrendered where the purchaser signifies his intention to surrender it and forfeit his rights, and the vendor thereupon takes possession.[25]

§ 2. Condition, quantity, and description of lands. What land.[26]—In determining whether the sale was by the acre, the deed will not control but the parties may go behind it and prove the contract of which the deed is intended as an expression.[27] The recital in a deed of the number of acres is not a warranty that the tract contains

15. Evidence sufficient to show that the consideration for an option contract was paid. Jones v. Barnes, 105 App. Div. 287, 94 N. Y. S. 695. An option procured by fraud is unenforceable. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co. v. Stevens [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 86, 253, 107 N. W. 436.

16. Couch v. McCoy, 138 F. 696. A vendee after accepting an option, making tender of the price and demanding a deed and on being refused sued for specific performance is estopped to assert that the contract was not binding on him. Jones v. Barnes, 105 App. Div. 287, 94 N. Y. S. 695.

23. Where a lease for one year provided that if the produce of the land should amount to more than taxes, insurance and rent, the excess might be applied in the purchase of the premises, the lessee was entitled to purchase any time within the year with funds not so derived. Rankin v. Rankin, 216 Ill. 132, 74 N. E. 763. Where the lease provided for a sale of the premises, but gave the lessee the preference as purchaser in case of sale, he could be deprived of his right to purchase only by a bona fide sale. A fictitious and collusive sale, at an alleged price beyond the value of the property, or an alleged gift by the owner to her son could not be relied upon to oust the lessee from his right to purchase. Ogle v. Hubbel [Cal. App.] 82 P. 217. And the lessee may show his ability and willingness to purchase the property at a fair market price and his ineffectual attempts to get the lessor to place a price upon it. Id.

so many acres.[28] But where the deed contains the equivalent of an express covenant that the tract contains a given number of acres, it will be treated as a warranty.[29]

Description.[30]—The contract must contain a description sufficiently definite to identify the land.[31] The description is sufficiently definite if the lands can be ascertained by the aid of such extrinsic evidence as is admissible under the rules of law.[32] Certainty to a common intent is all that is required,[33] and if a description can be made certain by proof of an extrinsic fact referred to in the contract, it is sufficient.[34] The description may be aided by the contemporaneous construction of the contract by the parties.[35] By statute in California, evidence of the circumstances under which the conveyance was made including the situation of the subject-matter and of the parties is admissible if the description is imperfect.[36]

What acreage or quantity.[37]—In a sale in gross an immaterial difference between the acreage mentioned in the contract and that actually contained in the tract will

29. Rich v. Scales [Tenn.] 91 S. W. 50.

Note: The principles by which to determine whether a contract is for a sale by the acre or in gross are summarized as follows in Benson v. Humphreys, 75 Va. 196:

"First. Every sale of real estate, where the quantity is referred to in the contract, and when the language of the contract does not plainly indicate that the sale was intended to be a sale in gross, must be presumed to be a sale per acre.

"Second. The language 'more or less,' used in contracts for sale of land, must be understood to apply only to small excesses or deficiencies, attributable to variations of instruments of surveyors, etc. When these terms are used, it rather repels the idea of a contract of hazard, and implies that there is no considerable difference in quantity.

"Third. While contracts of hazard are not invalid, courts of equity do not regard them with favor. The presumption is against them, and, while such presumption may be repelled, it can only be effectually done by clear and cogent proof.

"Fourth. The burden of proof is always upon a party asserting a contract of hazard; for, the presumption always being in favor of a sale per acre, a sale in gross or contract of hazard must be clearly established by the facts.

"Fifth. Where the parties contract for the payment of a gross sum for a tract or parcel of land upon the estimate of a given quantity, the presumption is that the quantity influences the price to be paid, and that the agreement is not one of hazard.

"Sixth. Whether it be a contract in gross or for a specific quantity depends, of course, upon the intention of the contracting parties, to be gathered from the terms of the contract, and all the facts and circumstances connected with it. But in interpreting such contracts the court, not favoring contracts of hazard, will always construe the same to be contracts of sale per acre, wherever it does not clearly appear that the land was sold by the tract and not by the acre. See Watson v. Hoy, 28 Grat. [Va.] 698, where all the cases decided by this court and many others are carefully collected in the elaborate opinion of Judge Burks."

See, also, to the same effect, the subsequent cases of Cunningham v. Millner, 82 Va. 530; Trinkle v. Jackson, 86 Va. 238, 9 S. E. 986, 4 L. R. A. 525; Boschens v. Jurgens, 92 Va. 756, 24 S. E. 390; Hull v. Watts, 95 Va. 10, 27 S. E. 829.—See Berry's Ex'x v. Fishburne [Va.] 51 S. E. 827.

31. Too indefinite: A contract for the sale of a certain number of acres which are a part of a larger tract which does not specify from what part of the tract the land sold is to be taken. Brooks v. Halane, 116 Ill. App. 383. Where the land is so vaguely described that the writing furnishes no key to its identification, the contract cannot be enforced nor will an action for damages lie for its breach. Tippins v. Phillips, 123 Ga. 415, 51 S. E. 410.

32. Warner v. Marshall [Ind.] 75 N. E. 582; Farmer v. Sellers [Ala.] 39 So. 772; Howison v. Bartlett [Ala.] 40 So. 757. The contract is not void for uncertainty if the land intended to be described can be identified from the description by the aid of parol evidence. Hiskett v. Bozarth [Neb.] 105 N. W. 990. The description must be sufficient to fit and comprehend the property so that with the assistance of extrinsic evidence it may be applied to the land intended. Whiteside v. Winans, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 244. Parol evidence is admissible to identify the premises referred to in a contract by which one person had rented another's place with an option to purchase. Wellmaker v. Wheatley, 123 Ga. 201, 51 S. E. 436. An obvious omission in the description may be read into it. In re Garnier's Estate, 147 Cal. 457, 82 P. 68.

36. It may be shown that the vendee had occupied the premises for many years and improved them. In re Garnier's Estate, 147 Cal. 457, 82 P. 68.

not defeat the contract.[38] The words "more or less" following a statement of the number of acres in a contract containing a description by metes and bounds are words of precaution,[39] but where a contract does not describe the land by metes and bounds or any ascertainable monuments, the words "more or less" do not weaken the statement as to quantity.[40] In a contract providing only for a sale of the vendor's right, title, and interest, a covenant to furnish an abstract showing perfect title clear of incumbrances does not enlarge the estate agreed to be granted.[41]

§ 3. Title, deed, and incumbrances. What was sold.[42]—Lands intended by the parties not to be included in the contract do not pass.[43] A contract for the sale of lands, and not an estate therein, though subject to certain restrictions contemplates a fee,[44] as also does one for a clear title.[45] A contract to convey land and the building thereon, giving the boundaries, is for the conveyance of the land within the boundaries and the building thereon, and not the building and the land under it.[46]

Sufficiency of that tendered.[47]—A purchaser cannot be required to accept land other than that he contracted to buy.[48] A contract which calls for an abstract showing a good title is not satisfied by anything less no matter what the vendor's real title may be.[49] A purchaser is entitled to a marketable title[50] unless he had notice of defects at the time the contract was made.[51] A marketable title means one free from reasonable doubt,[52] fairly deducible of record[53] and which does not invite or

49. Howe v. Coates [Minn.] 107 N. W. 397. Where a contract provides for a conveyance "by warranty deed with abstract showing good title" a title by adverse possession which cannot be shown by abstract is not sufficient though in fact good. Fagan v. Hook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 155.

50. "Good title" in a contract means "marketable title." Fagan v. Hook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 155. Contract construed and held to call for a marketable title. Howe v. Coates [Minn.] 107 N. W. 397. Under a contract for the exchange of lands, each party is entitled to a good title. Blackledge v. Davis [Iowa] 105 N. W. 1000. An agreement to convey real estate, "by a good and sufficient, full and covenant warranty deed," is satisfied by the tender of a good marketable title with warranty. Egle v. Morrison, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 609. Evidence insufficient to show title in the vendor. Cawley v. Jean [Mass.] 75 N. E. 614.

51. A purchaser need not investigate facts that may affect the title which are not disclosed by the abstract furnished under the contract or actually known of by him. Whelan v. Rosseter [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1082. Ordinary building restrictions applicable to all the property in the neighborhood, of which a proposed purchaser has knowledge, cannot be classed as an incumbrance unless they affect the marketable quality of the title, and the presumption is that they are a benefit rather than a detriment to the property. Egle v. Morrison, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 609.

52. Howe v. Coates [Minn.] 107 N. W. 397. A title open to reasonable doubt is not marketable and the court cannot make it so by passing upon an objection depending upon a disputed question of fact or a doubtful question of law in the absence of the party in whom is vested the outstanding right or claim. Id. The vendee is entitled to a title which will enable him to hold the land in peace and reasonably sure that no flaw will come up to disturb its marketable value. Metz v. Wright [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 1125. A title is not marketable when so defective as to affect the value of the land or interfere with its sale. Howe v. Coates [Minn.] 107 N. W. 397.

Held unmarketable: Title through foreclosure proceedings held unmarketable because statutory requirements as to publication of summons were not complied with.

expose one holding it to litigation.[54] But a mere possibility of litigation does not render it unmarketable.[55] A title by adverse possession is marketable.[56] A purchaser of a title free from incumbrances is not required to accept a title subject to a lease,[57] mortgage of record,[58] easement,[59] party wall agreement,[60] lien for taxes,[61] special assessments,[62] lis pendens,[63] or building restrictions.[64] An easement in favor of the vendor which he is estopped to assert does not render the title unmarketable.[65]

Fink v. Wallach, 47 Misc. 247, 95 N. Y. S. 872. Title under foreclosure proceeding held unmarketable where persons who had a right to assail the validity of the mortgage were not made parties. Cook v. Sackett, 96 N. Y. S. 1085. Where a prior purchaser was not made a party to an action to foreclose a mortgage and so far as the abstract shows is still the owner with right to redeem, the abstract does not show good title. Fagan v. Hook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 155. A statute authorizing the recordation of affidavits explaining a defect in a chain of title does not authorize a vendor to indicate by affidavit the parol evidence available to establish it. Id.

Held marketable: Title through mortgage foreclosure held a marketable one. Hirth v. Zeller, 108 App. Div. 198, 95 N. Y. S. 747. A vendee cannot object to a mortgage not satisfied of record where it appears the mortgage debt has been due for a period greater than prescribed for maintaining action thereon, and it does not appear that any payments have been made within such period and the vendor gave evidence that the mortgage had been satisfied. Forbes v. Reynard, 98 N. Y. S. 710. Where the record shows a mortgage given by a guardian, the vendee cannot object because it is not shown that the guardian had accounted into court after payment of the mortgage as he may have accounted out of court after his ward obtained majority. Id. Where the vendor holds title through a corporation whose articles have been recorded as required by law, the failure of the register of deeds to index the record does not render the title unmarketable. Woodman v. Blue Grass Land Co., 125 Wis. 489, 103 N. W. 236, 104 N. W. 920. Where all liens against the land are payable presently and amount to less than is payable at delivery of the contract such liens being payable out of the purchase money at the time of execution of the deed do not render the title unmarketable. Id. Where a vendor's title depended on a decree under which a sale for taxes was made, an answer in a suit by him to compel performance putting in issue his title by reason of defects in a lien under which he bought states no defense. Finnegan v. Summers [Ky.] 91 S. W. 261.

53. A purchaser under a contract calling for a perfect title is entitled to a title fairly deducible of record, free from reasonable doubt and litigation. Whelan v. Rosseter [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1082. A purchaser will not be compelled to take a title when there is a defect in the record of it, which can be cured only by resorting to parol evidence. Howe v. Coates [Minn.] 107 N. W. 397.

54. Under a contract providing for a merchantable title, the vendee is not required to accept property the possession of which he may be required to defend by litigation. Empire Realty Corp. v. Sayre, 107 App. Div. 415, 95 N. Y. S. 371. Not where a suit involving the validity of building restrictions is pending. Whelan v. Rosseter [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1082.

56. Where the vendor has been in possession for the statutory period, paying taxes, etc., under color of title, he has a good title by adverse possession which he can convey. Beste v McGaugh [Del. Super.] 63 A. 28.

57. A lease is an incumbrance within a contract to sell free from incumbrances. Kuhn v. Eppstein, 219 Ill. 154, 76 N. E. 145.

58. Under a contract calling for a perfect title the purchaser is not obliged to accept so long as an outstanding mortgage remains of record. Hobart v. Frederiksen [S. D.] 105 N. W. 168.

59. A light and air easement is an incumbrance though a building has been erected on the dominant estate without windows facing the servient one. Remsen v. Wingert, 98 N. Y. S. 388. Evidence insufficient to establish an easement in the premises sold in favor of an adjacent lot owned by the vendor. Empire Realty Corp. v. Sayre, 107 App. Div. 415, 95 N. Y. S. 371.

60. A party wall agreement is an incumbrance within a contract calling for a title free from incumbrances. Oppenheimer v. Knepper Realty Co., 98 N. Y. S. 204.

61. In Oklahoma land is assessed to the owner on the first day of January and the owner on such date is liable for the taxes for that year if he sells after such date without an agreement to the contrary. Rudd v. Dunlap [Okl.] 83 P. 431.

62. Where one corporation sells its property to another, to be free from all claims against the seller "or said property at the date of the transfer," a special tax levied to pay a debt incurred by the township in which the property was located before the transfer was made must be paid by the seller. Hudson Coal Co. v. Ogden, 212 Pa. 407, 61 A. 902.

63. Where it appears that notice of lis pendens concerning the land sold has been filed and an action is pending in which the validity of the vendor's title is assailed the title is prima facie unmarketable. Moulton v. Kolodzik [Minn.] 107 N. W. 154.

64. A purchaser may rescind because of building restrictions though the covenants concerning them do not run with the land since equity may enforce them. Whelan v. Rosseter [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1082.

65. An owner of adjacent lots who contracts to sell one free from incumbrances is estopped to assert an easement in favor

§ 4. Price and payment.[66]—The purchase price falls due when the conditions upon which it is to be paid are complied with,[67] and the vendor's right to it at such time cannot be postponed by subterfuge.[68] On the death of a vendor, his claim for the purchase money passes to his personal representative,[69] who may maintain action to recover it without joining the heirs at law.[70] A separate agreement to take and pay for a policy of title insurance though incorporated into the contract for the sale of the land does not make the amount a part of the purchase money.[71] Where no fraudulent purpose is involved, the vendee cannot be charged as a trustee for the vendor's creditors with the difference between the price and the known value of the premises.[72] A purchaser is entitled to an abatement of the price for failure of the vendor to perform a condition of the contract,[73] for damages to the premises caused by the vendor after the contract was made,[74] for sums paid by him in perfecting title,[75] for fraud[76] or breach of covenant.[77] Equity will enjoin the collection of the purchase money where the vendee is in possession under a conveyance with covenants of warranty, where the title is questioned by suit, prosecuted or threatened or where

66. See 4 C. L. 1781, 1783.

67. Under a contract providing that the vendee should make a certain payment when the vendor perfected his title, the vendor is entitled to the payment upon obtaining a deed from the purchaser at a tax sale though the time to appeal from the tax judgment has not expired. Stoll v. Griffith [Wash.] 82 P. 1025. When a vendee sold the land to one who assumed his indebtedness to his vendor, the vendee agreeing to pay taxes and interest on a mortgage, and procured his vendor to execute a deed to the purchaser from him, the vendor's right to sue for the amount due him accrued on execution of the deed and was not defeated by subsequent failure of the vendee to pay taxes and interest. Farmers' Exch. Bank v. Crump [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 724. Where an attorney for the purchaser retained a portion of the purchase price under an agreement to hold it until violations filed by the tenement house department had been removed, the vendor on removing such violations was entitled to the deposit. Eastern Crown Realty Co. v. Isaacs, 95 N. Y. S. 602. Contract construed and held an unconditional agreement to pay a certain sum as the payment. Williams v. Brooks [Idaho] 83 P. 610.

68. A vendee who assumes a mortgage under an agreement that he need not pay the purchase price until after he pays the mortgage cannot postpone the vendor's right to the purchase price by securing an extension of the time for payment of the mortgage and executing a new one without the vendor's knowledge or consent. Branch v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 14, 89 S. W. 813.

71. Alexander v. Vidootzky, 97 N. Y. S. 992.

72. Rosenheimer v. Krenn [Wis.] 106 N. W. 20.

73. Where the vendor agreed to procure the acceptance of a dedication and the deed was made and the vendee took possession on the mutual understanding that acceptance was a formal matter only, and acceptance was refused until the proposed streets were graded up to the official grade, it was held that since neither party contemplated that the acceptance would involve the establishment of a grade, the vendor could recover on the purchase-money notes less the damages sustained by the vendee by reason of the failure to procure the acceptance. McCormick v. Merritt [Iowa] 105 N. W. 428.

74. Where pending an option the vendor cuts standing timber and the vendees gave immediate notice that they elected to exercise the option, they may deduct from the purchase price the deterioration in the value of the land caused by cutting the timber. McCowen v. Pew, 147 Cal. 299, 81 P. 958.

75. In an action for the purchase price the vendee should be credited with sums paid by him in perfecting his title. Brackett's Adm'r v. Boreing [Ky.] 89 S. W. 496.

76. The vendee may have an abatement of the price for fraud and misrepresentation of the vendor in the sale. Williams v. Neal [Ala.] 40 So. 943; Kell v. Trenchard [C. C. A.] 142 F. 16, modifying 127 F. 596.

77. A purchaser under a deed containing full covenants of warranty who retains a portion of the purchase price as security against a lien upon the land may purchase the land at a proceeding enforcing the lien and in a suit by the vendor for the purchase money counterclaim for damages for breach of covenant though the judgment has in the meantime been reversed and the lien held unenforceable. Talbott v. Donaldson [Kan.] 80 P. 981.

Note: While a covenantee who purchases an outstanding title has the burden of proving that it is paramount to that acquired from his covenantor (Hamilton v. Cutts, 4 Mass. 349, 3 Am. Dec. 222; Thomas v. Stickle, 32 Iowa 71), the fact that he purchased it will not affect his right to bring an action on his covenant (Whitney v. Dinsmore, 6 Cush. [Mass.] 124). Where the covenantor has suffered the property to be sold under a judgment after the covenantee has taken possession and the covenantee purchased the outstanding title in good faith, the covenantor will be estopped from denying the validity of the judgment even though it is it is clearly shown to be defective.[78] Such injunction will not be granted unless the bill alleges facts showing a clear outstanding title in a stranger,[79] and the burden is on the plaintiff to show such outstanding title.[80] Purchasers who acquire notice of equities before paying the entire purchase price must account to the holder of such equities for the unpaid balance.[81] A purchaser who assumes a debt of the vendor as part of the purchase price cannot assert against it a defense personal to the vendor.[82] A grantee of land subject to a mortgage, who agrees with the grantor to pay said mortgage as part of the purchase price, after payment of the mortgage, is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee as against the lienholders.[83] Attorney's fees provided for in purchase-money notes should be included in a judgment thereon.[84]

§ 5. Time.[85]—If time is of the essence of the contract, its conditions must be complied with within the period specified.[86] If time is not of the essence of a contract and no time is specified within which it must be completed, a reasonable time under the circumstances of the case will be implied,[87] hence under such a contract the vendor has a reasonable time within which to make the conveyance,[88] and the vendee has a reasonable time within which to pay the purchase price.[89] What constitutes a reasonable time depends on the circumstances of each case.[90] A provision making time of the essence will be construed to apply only to the provisions intended.[91] If time is not of the essence of the contract it may be enforced after the time invalid and has been reversed. Smith v. Dixon, 27 Ohio St. 471. But this would not be the case if the covenantee voluntarily acquired an outstanding title which had vested previous to his purchase and possession. Cummings v. Holt, 56 Vt. 384. Greater protection is given to a covenantee who takes steps to keep another from acquiring an outstanding paramount title than to one who voluntarily buys an outstanding title after it has been acquired by another. Cain v. Fisher, 57 W. Va. 492, 50 S. E. 752, 1015.—See 4 Mich. L. R. 170.

78. Harvey v. Ryan [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 7. Where a vendee is in possession under a deed with covenants of general warranty and in an action of ejectment a stranger asserts title to and recovers the land and the vendee is evicted, equity will enjoin the collection of the purchase money due the vendor. Id.

79. Allegations of defects in title which do not show in what respect such defects exist, or facts which establish nothing more than that the title is doubtful will not support an application. Harvey v. Ryan [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 7.

83. Dieboldt Brewing Co. v. Grabski, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 221.

84. In an action by the vendor to recover possession of the land for nonpayment of the purchase-money notes, a judgment for him subject to the vendee's right to the land, on payment therefor, should require the vendee to pay the face of the notes together with attorney's fees stipulated for. Moore v. Brown [Tex. Civ. App.] 89 S. W. 310.

85. See 4 C. L. 1783.

86. Where time for performance is fixed at a certain hour, on a certain date, and the vendee appears ready to perform and waits an hour, he may recover what he has paid though the vendor was ready to perform at a later hour of the same date. Zirinsky v. Post, 98 N. Y. S. 132.

87. Ullsperger v. Meyer, 217 Ill. 262, 75 N. E. 482. If the contract is silent as to the time within which it is to be performed the law infers that it is to be completed within a reasonable time. Clark v. Wilson [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 627. Time is not of the essence so as to defeat the right of a vendee who has paid a portion of the purchase price and made improvements, to enforce the contract, where the delay can be compensated by the payment of interest. McWhorter v. Stein [Ala.] 39 So. 617.

88. White v. Poole [N. H.] 62 A. 494.

89. Veum v. Sheeran [Minn.] 104 N. W. 135. Where time is not of the essence of the contract and delivery of an abstract showing good title is a condition precedent to a deferred payment and such abstract had not been furnished on the day fixed for performance, the fact that the purchaser was not in a position on such day to make the deferred payment did not defeat his right to rescind on the vendor's subsequent failure to furnish good title. Fagan v. Hook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 155.

90. Where a vendor fails, for seven months after notice that the vendee has rescinded, to take steps to perfect his title, he cannot assert that he was not given a reasonable time to comply with the contract. Fagan v. Hook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 155. Under an agreement for the transfer of a perfect title which required the vendee to perform within 15 days, the vendors are not entitled to two or three months in which to perfect title. O'Neil v. Printz [Mo. App.] 91 S. W. 174.

91. Under an option providing that if not accepted within a specified time and a second specified in the contract,[92] and a provision making time of the essence may be waived.[93] Where strict compliance with the terms of the contract as to time of performance is waived, a vendor is not entitled to rescission because the vendee failed to seasonably perform.[94] As to when time commences to run is to be determined from the terms of the contract.[95]

§ 6. Conditions, covenants, and warranties.[96]—A condition in a contract that the title shall be approved by attorneys must be performed[97] unless waived,[98] but such approval cannot be arbitrarily withheld,[99] and a contract which contemplates ratification by a court which sets aside the sale cannot be thereafter enforced on the ground that ratification is unnecessary.[1] A covenant to furnish an abstract is an essential part of the contract.[2] A complete abstract within the meaning of a contract requiring such a one to be furnished is one certified up to the date of its delivery.[3] Covenants to pay the purchase price and to execute the deed are mutual and dependent,[4] providing the contract is dual,[5] unless a contrary intent is clearly apparent,[6] and neither party can put the other in default without an offer to perform on his payment made a certain sum should be forfeited, time is of the essence of the contract only as to the first two payments. Where the second payment was promptly made, the option was at an end, and the vendor could not insist on forfeiture for nonperformance by the vendee but could only retain sufficient to compensate him for breach of the contract. Davis v. Barada-Ghio Real Estate Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 113.

92. Hobart v. Frederiksen [S. D.] 105 N. W. 168.

93. A vendee who calls for additional evidence of title after the expiration of the time for performance thereby waives performance by the vendor within the time limited by the contract. Metz v. Wright [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 1125.

94. His rights being fully protected by requiring the vendee to deposit in court the sum of the payment which had been postponed beyond the time for performance. Hurd v. Fleck [Colo.] 82 P. 485.

95. Under a contract requiring the vendee to point out defects in the title within seven days after being furnished with a complete abstract by the vendors, the seven days commence to run from the date a complete abstract is furnished and not from date of delivery of an incomplete one. Davis v. Fant [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 8, 93 S. W. 193.

96. See 4 C. L. 1772, n 75 et seq.

97. A promise to sell upon condition that the title was approved by attorneys within a specified time is not binding if the title is not approved within such time. Flournoy v. Miller, 114 La. 1028, 38 So. 818.

98. A purchaser who is given a deed under a contract providing for approval of the title by his attorney, who after disapproval disposes of the property, thereby affirms the contract and renders himself liable for the purchase money. Parkhurst v. Dickinson [Wash.] 83 P. 895.

99. Where a city council authorized the purchase of land, title to be approved by the city attorney, such approval if arbitrarily withheld does not preclude the vendor from enforcing a contract entered into in accordance with the resolution. Lighton v. Syracuse, 98 N. Y. S. 792; Lighton v. Syracuse, 48 Misc. 134, 96 N. Y. S. 692.

1. North Avenue Land Co. v. Baltimore [Md.] 63 A. 115.

2. A covenant by the vendor in an option contract to furnish an abstract within the time limited by the option is not an independent one but an essential and material part of the contract, the performance of which is necessary to enable the vendee to intelligently exercise his option. Reynolds v. Lynch [Minn.] 107 N. W. 145. A provision in a contract calling for an abstract of title to be furnished with the deed cannot be ignored. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Findley [Iowa] 105 N. W. 206.

3. Davis v. Fant [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 8, 93 S. W. 193.

4. A vendee cannot recover damages for the vendor's default without tendering the purchase price regardless of the vendor's failure to tender a deed conveying clear title. Davis v. Barada-Ghio Real Estate Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 113. A vendor who contracts to convey clear of incumbrances on payment of purchase price cannot insist on full payment before he pays off incumbrances. Id. A tender of performance by the vendor is a condition precedent to maintaining an action for the purchase price due. Michigan Home Colony Co. v. Tabor [C. C. A.] 141 F. 332. Hence, in an action to foreclose a lien for the purchase money, failure to allege tender of a deed or offer to convey before bringing the action renders the complaint demurrable. Hunt v. Lake, 48 Misc. 570, 97 N. Y. S. 298.

5. Under a contract not signed by the vendee by which a vendor agrees to convey on a specified date on payment of the purchase price and where the vendee takes possession, on refusal of the purchaser to pay the price or restore possession without intimating that refusal was because no deed was tendered failure of the vendor to make such tender does not preclude him of his right to regain possession. Bowling v. Bowling [Miss.] 40 So. 871.

6. Under a contract providing that conveyance is only to be made upon demand after completed payment, the promise of pay-part,[7] and where they are contemporaneous acts parol evidence is admissible to show the conditions upon which they were performed.[8] A requirement that the vendee give written notice of defects in the title within a specified time after being furnished with an abstract does not require written notice.[9] Under a contract to sell to three persons, the vendor may refuse to convey to two until proof has been made that the interest of the other has been eliminated.[10] A provision in the contract that no assignment shall be binding on the vendor unless approved by him, cannot be taken advantage of by a subsequent assignee of the contract as against a prior assignee.[11] Performance of the conditions of a contract may be waived.[12] Covenants in the contract do not merge into those in the deed.[13]

§ 7. Demand, tender, and default.[14]—On breach of the contract by the vendee, an oral demand for possession by the vendor is sufficient upon which to maintain an action.[15] Neither party can put the other in default without tender of performance of mutual and concurrent conditions,[16] but if one party is unable to[17] or has stated ment is absolute and may be enforced without tender of conveyance. The duty to convey is neither a condition precedent nor an act which may be demanded concurrently. Collins v. Schmidt [Wis.] 105 N. W. 671.

7. Coles v. Meskimen [Or.] 85 P. 67. Under a contract providing for the payment of the purchase price upon execution of the deed, either party in order to put the other in default must make a tender. Claude v. Richardson, 127 Iowa 623, 103 N. W. 991. Where a contract provides for payment of the balance of the purchase money on execution of the deed, and if the purchaser fail to comply with the contract within 30 days, money paid should be forfeited, the vendor cannot insist on forfeiture without showing that within the specified period he tendered a deed. Loewenstein v. Armstrong, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 543. Where owner of land executed a contract of sale but failed to deliver deed and demand payment, and the grantee failed to complete his payments, held grantor could not maintain ejectment. The Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Turney, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 370, afd., without report 73 O. S. —.

11. McPheeters v. Ronning [Minn.] 103 N. W. 889.

12. Under a contract providing for conveyance of a clear title on payment of the balance of the purchase price it is competent for the parties to waive such conditions by the vendee's failure to object to making payment because certain incumbrances have not been discharged and by failure of the vendor to insist on cash payment by failure to object to the vendee's offer to pay on the ground that the money was not tendered. Davis v. Barada-Ohio Real Estate Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 113. Where a contract for the purchase of real estate gives to the vendor a specified time within which to remove any objections which may be made to the title, the failure of the vendee to make any objection as to a matter of which he had knowledge and which might have been corrected, constitutes a waiver thereof. Egle v. Morrison, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 609. A contract cannot be avoided by the vendor on the ground that a nominal consideration for an option was not paid where on tender thereof he stated that if he wanted anything he would take it all at once. Seyferth v. Groves & S. R. Co., 217 Ill. 483, 75 N. E. 522.

13. Where a contract provides for a deed of the premises and of the gas fixtures, etc., the covenants in the contract do not merge in those in the deed which does not mention the fixtures and the vendor is liable where they are removed by a third person. Wynne v. Friedman, 96 N. Y. S. 838. Evidence held to show that there was no merger of the contract into the execution of the deed and purchase-money notes so as to deprive the purchaser of the right to insist upon performance of the conditions of the contract. McCormick v. Merritt [Iowa] 105 N. W. 428. Right to demand full payment of the purchase price as provided by the contract. Bach v. Kidansky, 106 App. Div. 502, 94 N. Y. S. 752. A provision that certain lands be dedicated is not waived by the acceptance of a deed and execution of purchase-money mortgage prior to the acceptance of the dedication where done under belief that acceptance would be procured. McCormick v. Merritt [Iowa] 105 N. W. 428.

14. See 4 C. L. 1781.

15. Where one is in possession under a conditional option and fails to perform the condition, but puts another in possession with directions to resist entry by any person, an oral demand for possession by the owner is sufficient to entitle him to maintain action for possession. Bruschi v. Quail Min. & Mill. Co., 147 Cal. 120, 81 P. 404.

16. See ante, § 6. If time is not of the essence, a vendee is not in default because of mere failure to make final payment, until the vendor tenders a deed and demands payment. Coles v. Meskimen [Or.] 85 P. 67.

17. Where the purchaser is ready and able to perform at the time fixed but the vendor is not he cannot set up in an action to recover the purchase money paid that the purchaser did not offer to perform. Nelson v. Chingren [Iowa] 106 N. W. 936. Where the vendor is unable to convey the title called for by the contract, the vendee may recover money paid and damages without tendering that he will not comply with the contract, the other is excused from making tender.[18] That the purchaser states at the time the contract is made that he does not know where he will obtain the money to make payment does not excuse the vendor from offering performance at the appointed time;[19] especially where before such time the purchaser informed him that he intended to abide by his contract.[20] The tender of performance must be sufficient in law[21] and made within the time specified in the contract,[22] but actual production of money may be waived.[23] A refusal of a tender on a specific ground is a waiver of other grounds.[24] A vendee need not tender a deed for execution by the vendor unless by the terms of the contract the preparation of the deed devolved upon him.[25] A vendee in default cannot recover a sum paid by him upon the contract price,[26] nor enforce delivery of the deed from a depository who holds from the vendor.[27] One in possession under a conditional option, the conditions of which he fails to perform, cannot retain possession indefinitely and refuse to pay the purchase price on the ground that the vendor cannot convey good title to part of the land.[28] A vendee in an unrecorded contract who has title and possession but has paid only a portion of the purchase money is not injuriously affected by the filing of a lis pendens.[29] But when he comes to pay the balance of the purchase money he may protect himself by any means permitted under the original or a subsequent contract, or by making payment into court.[30] If, however, vendor undertakes to enforce the provision of the contract making time of its essence, and the contract contemplates an examination of the title according to abstracts to be furnished by the vendor, the vendee may rescind and recover purchase money paid in case the vendor cannot deliver a marketable title.[31]

§ 8. Forfeiture, rescission, and waiver. Forfeiture.[32]—The grounds upon which a contract may be forfeited must be contained in the contract,[33] and a contract will not be extended by construction to include other grounds than those specified.[34] A stipulation that in case instalment notes for the purchase price of land were not paid at maturity, a certain sum as rent should be paid and the relation of landlord performance on his part. Oppenheimer v. Knepper Realty Co., 98 N. Y. S. 204. A vendor who has no title at the time fixed for performance is not entitled to a reasonable time to cure defects in his title. Nelson v. Chingren [Iowa] 106 N. W. 936.

18. Where prior to the date on which payment was to be made the vendor repudiated his contract, the vendee can sue for the breach at once or wait until performance is exacted by the contract. Kuhlman v. Wieben [Iowa] 105 N. W. 445. A vendor may, until notified to the contrary, rely on notice given by the vendee that he will do nothing further to carry out the contract. Claude v. Richardson, 127 Iowa, 623, 103 N. W. 991. If a vendor gives notice that he will not carry out his contract, tender of the purchase money by the vendee is not a condition to a suit to enforce performance. Whiteside v. Winans, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 244.

25. Wellmaker v. Wheatley, 123 Ga. 201, 51 S. E. 436. Under an option contract providing that the holder of the option should give notice of his determination to take advantage of it and that payment should be made on delivery of the deed, from the date of notice, it is the vendor's duty to execute a deed and hold it for delivery on payment of the purchase price. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Findley [Iowa] 105 N. W. 206.

and tenant exist, was in the nature of a forfeiture reserved for the vendor's benefit,[35] and at his discretion he could dispense with or waive it.[36] Forfeitures are not favored,[37] and if possible such a construction of the contract will be adopted as will prevent a forfeiture,[38] but where clearly provided for will be given effect.[39] Relief from them will be granted if possible,[40] and a party may be estopped from asserting a forfeiture in accordance with the terms of the contract.[41] Default of itself does not work a forfeiture[42] unless time is of the essence of the contract;[43] and a provision authorizing the vendor to declare a forfeiture of the vendee's rights for default in making deferred payments does not authorize him to declare such forfeiture if he himself is unable to comply with the contract,[44] and where time is stated to be of the essence of the contract if the parties treat the time clause as waived, one of them cannot suddenly insist on forfeiture but must give reasonable, definite, and specific notice of his intention.[45]

W. 784. A suit to foreclose a vendee's interest and to cancel a bond for a deed is a recognition that he has some rights in the premises which will not be cut off without giving him a reasonable time to comply with the contract. Higinbotham v. Frock [Or.] 83 P. 536. On foreclosure of a land contract under which a substantial payment has been made, the court may not fix an unreasonably short time within which to make the remaining payment in order to redeem under the contract. Dickson v. Loehr [Wis.] 106 N. W. 793. Equity will not decree a forfeiture of the vendee's rights but will leave the vendor to his remedy at law, if any. Higinbotham v. Frock [Or.] 83 P. 536.

38. Where a vendee retained a portion of the purchase price under an agreement that it was to be forfeited to him if the vendor did not "perfect a perfect or satisfactory title" within a specified time, the vendor is only bound to furnish a satisfactory title and not a perfect one and the vendee is relegated to the covenants in his deed for failure of title. Letchworth v. Vaughan [Ark.] 90 S. W. 1001.

39. Complaint by a vendor against a depository of forfeit money held to state a cause of action against the vendee. Peirson v. Pierce [Wash.] 84 P. 731. Where a vendor sues for a deposit made by the vendee on condition that it should belong to the vendor if the vendee failed to perform the terms of the contract and it appeared that the only reason for failure to perform was the vendee's inability to do so, the vendor was entitled to recover. Id.

40. Under Rev. Codes 1899, § 4970, one who has subjected himself to forfeiture by breaching the contract may, by making compensation, be relieved therefrom when the breach is not grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent. Bennett v. Glaspell [N. D.] 107 N. W. 45.

41. Where the vendee is an illiterate and did not know of the provision for forfeiture and the vendor after forfeiture had been incurred according to the strict letter of the contract accepted payments of the purchase money, retained the vendee's notes, and permitted him to improve the land without notifying him of the forfeiture. Morris v. Green [Ark.] 88 S. W. 565.

42. A provision in a bond for title that on default in making deferred payments the vendor may declare the bond void and repossess himself of the land gives the vendor power to elect to put an end to the agreement after reasonable notice to the vendee and a default does not of itself terminate the contract or forfeit the vendee's rights. Higinbotham v. Frock [Or.] 83 P. 536.

43. Under an option contract of which time is of the essence requiring certain payments at certain dates default of the vendee in making payments entitles the vendor to forfeit his rights without notice. Commercial Bank v. Weldon [Cal.] 84 P. 171.

Kell v. Trenchard [C. C. A.] 142 F. 16. The doctrine of caveat emptor does not apply to a deficiency in the represented acreage which is not open and patent to the observation of the purchaser. Judd v. Walker, 114 Mo. App. 128, 89 S. W. 558. The doctrine of caveat emptor has no application in cases of actual fraud. Kell v. Trenchard [C. C. A.] 142 F. 16. A purchaser who assails a title action for damages maintained.[48] As to whether damage is essential in such case there is a conflict of authority.[49] Inability of a party to perform,[50] entire or partial failure of consideration,[51] breach of covenant to furnish an abstract,[52] is ground for rescission, and a contract will be rescinded where to enforce it would be inequitable.[53] Rescission may be presumed from long abandonment of the land;[54] but that the vendor did not have title at the time the contract was made is not ground.[55] One who affirms the contract with full knowledge of facts which entitle him to rescind is not thereafter entitled to rescission;[56] but one is not estopped to rescind because with his knowledge the vendor disposes of the purchase money[57] or because he has assumed control of the property.[58] A vendee who seeks to recover payments made on the ground of fraud inducing the contract must first rescind the contract.[59] In order to rescind, the party seeking rescission should offer to do equity.[60] Upon rescission bond for fraud or mistake has the burden of proof. Begley v. Combs, 27 Ky. L. R. 1115, 87 S. W. 1081. A vendor cannot rescind for lesion beyond moiety unless the proof shows a disparity between value and consideration of more than half. Bonnette v. Wise [La.] 38 So. 960. Where two promoters of a corporation while acting as directors of it fraudulently sold property to it at an excessive valuation, the fact that title stood in one before the transfer and that he had a half interest therein does not affect the right of the corporation to maintain a bill to rescind and for damages against the other. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 188 Mass. 315, 74 N. E. 653. A bill by a corporation to rescind a sale to it by its promoters on the ground of fraud and to recover damages, is not demurrable on the ground that there exists an adequate remedy at law. Id. A prayer for rescission and damages in a bill by a corporation against its promoters alleging a fraudulent sale of land to it, is not inconsistent. Id.

49. A contract cannot be rescinded for fraudulent representations in procuring its execution unless damage is shown. Sonnesyn v. Akin [N. D.] 104 N. W. 1026. A contract induced by fraud may be rescinded without proof of damage. Greiling v. McLean's Estate [Wis.] 107 N. W. 339.

50. Where the vendor did not have title at the time the contract was made and there was a flaw in the title of those from whom he expected to obtain title. Smith v. Glenn [Wash.] 82 P. 605.

51. Rescission may be effected by a party when the consideration has wholly or partially failed through the act of the other party. Miller v. Shelburn [N. D.] 107 N. W. 51. The consideration of a contract for the sale of land in the vendee's favor is the title to be conveyed and if the vendor refuses to convey after full performance or offer to perform by the vendee, the consideration fails and is ground for rescission. Id. Where a vendor made no effort to cure defects in the title pointed out by a vendee, the admission of evidence of other defects in an action to recover earnest money is not error. Davis v. Fant [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 8, 93 S. W. 193.

52. On breach by a vendor of his covenant to furnish an abstract, the vendee may rescind and recover money paid. Reynolds v. Lynch [Minn.] 107 N. W. 145.

53. Where the contract was made by an agent of the vendor and can be enforced only by making the purchaser pay for what he did not get or making the vendor liable for what he did not authorize his agent to sell, equity will rescind it. Begley v. Combs, 27 Ky. L. R. 1115, 87 S. W. 1081.

54. Where soon after a sale under which the vendor retained a lien the vendee abandoned the land and the vendor resumed possession and held it for 20 years, it is proper for the jury to find that the contract was rescinded and that the vendee had consented that the vendor take back the land. Staley v. Stone [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 827, 92 S. W. 1017.

55. It is not ground for rescission that the vendor did not own the property but had only a contract to purchase it and failure of the vendee to have notice of this fact being his own fault. Barden v. Badham [Ala.] 38 So. 1029. A vendor may compel specific performance if he tender a good title perfected during pendency of the suit. Finnegan v. Summers [Ky.] 91 S. W. 261. That a vendor who contracts to sell land which he has contracted to purchase has not paid the entire purchase price is no defense to an action to compel his vendee to perform. His vendee may have a decree requiring a sufficient portion of the purchase price paid to the owner. May v. Getty [N. C.] 53 S. E. 75. Where the vendor sues on purchase-money notes and the vendee sets up defect in title which before suit was brought had been cured, the vendor is entitled to recover. Cornett v. Ault [Ga.] 53 S. E. 460.

56. Voluntarily accepts benefits under the contract. Bennett v. Glaspell [N. D.] 107 N. W. 45.

57. Where a purchase from an administrator is induced by fraud the purchaser is not estopped to rescind because with his knowledge the administrator has paid out the purchase money to satisfy liens against the property, the administrator being afforded protection. Greiling v. McLean's Estate [Wis.] 107 N. W. 339.

58. A purchaser is not estopped to rescind for inability of the vendor to convey a good title because of the fact that he has leased the property and listed it for sale where it does not appear that the vendor has been prejudiced. Fagan v. Hook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 155.

for nonpayment of the purchase price, the vendor must tender so much of the price as has been paid,[61] but no tender need be made where on adjustment of mutual rights nothing will be due.[62] A purchaser who is given a deed under a contract providing for approval of the title by his attorney must, in order to rescind on disapproval by his attorney, and escape liability for the purchase money, tender a deed of reconveyance.[63] Where the vendor refuses to perform after full performance or offer to perform by the vendee and the contract has been rescinded, purchase money paid may be recovered in an action for money had and received.[64] In such case notice of rescission is sufficient if there is nothing to be returned under the contract.[65] The right to rescind must be exercised within a reasonable time[66] or within the time prescribed by law.[67]

Rights of vendee after rescission.[68]—After rescission the vendee is entitled to recover what he parted with by virtue of the contract[69] and will be given a lien on the land therefor,[70] and is chargeable with rent while he held the land.[71] On rescission for fraud he may recover the increase in the vendible value of the property caused by permanent improvements made by him,[72] but one who purchases an option may be precluded from recovering the amount paid where the contract is rescinded because of the vendor's fraud.[73]

Abandonment is shown by acts plainly indicating an intention to repudiate the contract[74] or by acts inconsistent with a claim of rights under the contract.[75] A written contract may be waived or abandoned by parol.[76]

60. If sought by the vendor he must tender back the purchase price. Cecil v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 271, 93 S. W. 216. Where a purchaser takes possession and leases the property in reliance on the vendor's ability to perform in an action to rescind because of the purchaser's inability to furnish a good title delivery of the lease and rent received is a sufficient restoration of the property. Fagan v. Hook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 155. A vendee while in possession claiming title cannot maintain action against his vendor to recover a portion of the purchase price paid, and damages for breach of the contract. Before he can do so he must surrender possession and thus place himself as nearly as possible in statu quo. Nolde v. Gray [Neb.] 104 N. W. 165. Where a vendee after tendering the balance of the purchase money and refusal of the vendor to convey rescinds and recovers judgment for money paid and the increased value of the land which the vendor supersedes and appeals from, pending such appeal the vendor cannot recover possession. Gray v. Nolde [Neb.] 107 N. W. 224.

69. On rescission of contract for the exchange of personal property for land after the personal property has been delivered to the vendor and disposed of by him, he must pay its value as fixed by the contract and cannot show that it was not worth that much. Fagan v. Hook [Iowa] 105 N. W. 155. In an action by the vendee to recover the amount paid on an option contract after rescission for failure of the vendor to furnish abstracts within the time agreed, the contract is admissible. Reynolds v. Lynch [Minn.] 107 N. W. 145. In an action to recover purchase money paid after default by the vendor, testimony of the vendor that nothing had been paid is immaterial where he admits payment to his authorized agent. Lewis v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 247.

70. On rescission of a contract for equitable considerations, the vendee will be adjudged a lien for purchase money paid and the value of improvements and charged with rent while they held the land. Begley v. Combs, 27 Ky. L. R. 1115, 87 S. W. 1081.

74. Frequent and emphatic letters from the vendee to the vendor stating that he considered the contract rescinded and demanded return of the earnest money under threat of immediate suit constitute a repudiation of the contract. Woodman v. Blue Grass Land Co., 125 Wis. 489, 103 N. W. 236, 104 N. W. 920. A vendee who tells the vendor that he cannot procure the purchase price and if the vendor could make his money out of the land to do so and who thereafter leaves the state and never exercises acts of ownership over the property, thereby abandons his equities under the contract.

§ 9. Interest in the land created by, and rights and liabilities under the contract.[77]—A contract of sale does not destroy the unconditional ownership of the vendor,[78] and until a deed is executed, the legal title remains in him.[79] The principle that the vendor holds the title in trust for the vendee who holds the purchase money in trust for him applies only in equity.[80] The vendee, however, becomes vested with an interest in the land.[81] If he has paid a portion of the purchase price he has a mortgageable interest,[82] but payment of earnest money does not give him an interest subject to levy and sale on execution.[83] Whether he acquires a right to possession rests in the terms of the contract.[84] Where a sale to several entitles them to possession, notice to the lessee to quit is properly signed by one only.[85] An agreement to sell in the future does not pass the equitable title.[86] Neither a purchaser in possession under an oral contract nor his heirs can dispute the title while the purchase money remains unpaid.[87] Under a contract providing for the execution of a deed after a certain portion of the purchase price has been paid, the delivery of the deed relates back to the date of the contract.[88] In Texas a vendor who expressly reserves a lien for the purchase money has the superior title[89] which he may assign.[90] He has not, however, such an interest as is subject to sale on execution until he rescinds the contract.[91] On release of an expressly reserved lien, the superior title vests in the vendee and the vendor has nothing left but his lien for the purchase price.[92] Under

90. An assignee of purchase-money notes secured by a vendor's lien who takes a conveyance of the vendor's interest has the same right to recover the land on nonpayment of the notes as the vendor had. Rutherford v. Mothershed [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 620, 92 S. W. 1021.

92. On failure of the vendee to pay the a deed expressing as part of the purchase money the assumption by the vendee of vendor's lien notes owed by the grantor and reserving a lien for their payment, the superior title to the land remains in the grantor until the notes are paid,[93] and on failure of the grantee to pay such notes the vendor may convey the land to the holder of them.[94] But where the deed of such grantee recites a cash consideration only, failure of the grantee to pay the notes does not entitle the grantor and the holder of the notes to treat the deed as void but only entitles the holder to foreclose his lien.[95] Such vendee acquires all the rights of his vendor and may require payment of the notes before the superior right to the land vests in the prior grantee.[96]

The rights of the parties under the contract rest in its terms[97] and conditions,[98] and no rights are acquired except as appear from the contract.[99] A purchaser is not liable for an incumbrance unless he expressly or impliedly agrees to pay it.[1] A vendor may be entitled to rights under the contract though his title fails in whole[2] or in part.[3] A vendee cannot materially alter a contract and claim rights under it as altered.[4] Money paid on the contract cannot be recovered prior to the time for the delivery of a deed.[5] A vendor who after execution of a deed negligently causes injury to the premises is liable in damages.[6] A vendor can retain the legal title until reim-

97. Where one conveyed his interest in land which had been sold under execution under a contract that the purchaser should redeem and reconvey a portion if the income satisfied the incumbrances, on accounting to determine whether the purchaser had been reimbursed, he is chargeable with taxes accruing and improvements made after he obtained possession (Clutter v. Strange [Wash.] 82 P. 1028), also with the expense of foreclosing a mortgage the object of which was to enable him to acquire land which the grantor had previously sold subject to mortgage (Id.), also to the value of a crop cultivated by them less the expense of producing it (Id.); and the fact that he was required to purchase an outstanding title did not relieve him from complying with his contract (Id.). A relinquishment by a vendor of his interest in crops reserved by a contract of sale in consideration of the cancellation of such contract vests in the vendee full title to the crops. Thurston v. Osborne-McMillan Elevator Co., 13 N. D. 508, 101 N. W. 892.

A purchaser under a contract providing that no timber shall be cut or removed from the premises until the contract has been complied with has no power to sell growing timber with permission to remove the same until the contract is fully completed. 2. When the vendor's title wholly fails and the paramount title is in the state but he has in good faith made valuable improvements, purchase-money notes are not wholly without consideration so that the right to compensation for improvements is not enforceable. Williams v. Finley [Tex.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 762, 90 S. W. 1087. Where the vendor's title to the land has failed, he is entitled to recover the increased value of the land caused by improvements made by him with interest but not the full purchase price less the amount paid by the vendee to acquire the paramount title. Id.

bursed money advanced under an agreement that it was to be repaid before execution of the deed.[7] Purchasers under an unenforceable oral agreement from holders of an equity of redemption, who have taken possession and made valuable improvements, are entitled in equity to compensation for them.[8] The assignment by the vendor of an executory contract for the sale of land as security for a debt vests in the assignee a lien upon the vendor's interest in the property, not exceeding the purchase money unpaid.[9] A bond for title conveys to the vendee rights superior to a judgment subsequently recovered against the vendor,[10] but a bond for a deed executed prior to the time the obligor acquired title from the United States cannot operate to pass any subsequently acquired title.[11]

The statute of limitations does not run against a vendor in favor of a vendee holding under a contract of sale,[12] nor does it run where the original possession of the holder was in privity with the rightful owner until an open disclaimer of holding under the contract is brought to the notice of the vendor,[13] but adverse possession does run.[14]

One who enters into possession under another looking to him for title cannot dispute the title of his vendor,[15] but a vendee in possession may purchase an outstanding title and when sued rely on his original title and set up defects in the outstanding title as against subsequent purchasers of it.[16] A vendee who procures his vendor to execute a deed to his vendee is estopped to set up his older deed against the purchaser from him.[17]

Taxes.[18]—A vendor is liable for taxes which become a lien prior to the execution of the deed,[19] though the contract is enforced from the date conveyance should have been made,[20] unless failure to complete the contract is because of inability of the vendor to perfect his title and the purchaser in possession has paid them,[21] or their payment has been assumed by the purchaser.[22] A vendee who purchases after his vendor has paid a special assessment on the premises is not entitled to the amount so paid where the proceeding by which the assessment was levied is subsequently declared void.[23]

Interest, rents, and profits.[24]—As a general rule, the vendor is entitled to interest on the purchase money from the time fixed for completion of the contract,[25] or from the time the vendee takes possession,[26] unless he is in default[27] or the purchaser has paid out money on his account,[28] and the vendee is entitled to rents and profits.[29] Where the vendor after payment of the purchase money repudiates the contract, the vendee is entitled to interest on the sum paid from date of payment.[30] Rents and profits accrued at the date of sale belong to the vendor.[31]

A sale of standing timber[32] to be measured and paid for each month before removal vests title in the vendee as the timber is cut.[33] A conveyance of standing trees and a right of entry do not give the grantee possession actual or constructive until he engages in felling the trees.[34]

§ 10. Liability consequent on breach.[35] Rights of the vendor.—That the purchaser repudiates the contract before arrival of time for performance does not relieve the vendor from showing ability to perform in order to recover forfeit money deposited by the vendee,[36] but he need not allege tender of performance.[37] That the vendor did not own a portion of the land is no defense to an action to foreclose the vendee's rights if he could have furnished title at the time for performance,[38] and that a vendor after execution of the contract mortgaged the premises with the consent of the

27. A vendor who fails to execute and tender a deed as required by his contract is not entitled to interest on the purchase price while he remains in default. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Findley [Iowa] 105 N. W. 206.

28. A purchaser in possession in order to protect against trespassers under a contract requiring the vendor to make clear title contemporaneously with the payment of the purchase price, which they were unable to do for a number of years, is not liable for interest where it appears that taxes paid greatly exceeded the income. Wood v. Deskins [C. C. A.] 141 F. 500.

29. Where a contract and deed with full covenants of warranty is placed in escrow and the grantee pays the full purchase price with interest from date of the contract, he is entitled to rents accruing from such date. Scott v. Sloan [Kan.] 84 P. 117.

30. Not merely from the date he was entitled to a deed. Lewis v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 86, 91 S. W. 247.

31. A vendor who sells subject to a lease which entitles him to a certain per cent of the income when due is entitled to his rent for the month preceding the sale though the income was not collected until after the sale. 38. That the vendor did not own some of the property included in the contract is not defense to an action to foreclose it where it does not appear that he could not have fur-vendee is no defense to an action at law to recover possession after default by the vendee in making payments.[39] Where the vendor does not elect to treat the vendee's repudiation of the contract as a breach, he must show ability to perform in order to defeat recovery of the earnest money.[40]

Rights of vendee.—After a vendee is once released because of inability of the vendor to perform, the obligation is not revived by an agreement between the vendor and a third person which enables him to perform.[41] If a vendor is unable or refuses to perform, the vendee may rescind and recover the purchase money paid[42] or maintain an action for damages for the breach,[43] and if through no fault of his he is unable to restore what he has received under the contract, he need not return it prior to suing for purchase money paid, but may offer to allow credit for the value of what he cannot restore.[44] If a vendor puts it beyond his power to comply with the contract, the vendee has an immediate cause of action against him,[45] and if he dies after breach no demand on his executor is necessary before maintaining action to recover purchase money paid.[46] If the vendor is unable to convey all the land called for by the contract, the vendee may recover the purchase price paid and establish and enforce a vendee's lien therefor.[47] A purchaser who deposits forfeit money as security for performance is entitled to recover it unless the vendor has a cause of action against him for default in performance,[48] but where he has paid money upon a contract and refuses to proceed, he cannot, except under exceptional circumstances, recover back the amount paid.[49]

In an action for breach of the contract it is not necessary to allege in terms that the claim is due and unpaid.[50]

Measure of damages.[51]—If the contract prescribes the damages recoverable on breach, no other measure can be recovered,[52] but such provision does not preclude the enforcement of a lien therefor,[53] and one who does not seek to exercise his option to terminate the contract and recover liquidated damages may keep it alive and recover damages for the breach irrespective of the amount fixed.[54] In some states

the measure of damages is prescribed by law.[55] The measure of damages when one fails to execute a contract is the value of the contract upon the date it should have been executed.[56] Where breach is caused by refusal or inability of the vendor to perform, the measure is the loss suffered by the vendee.[57] When one purchases land for another and agrees to convey it to him on payment of the purchase price the measure of damages for his refusal to do so is the value of the land at the time of tender of the purchase price with interest less any depreciation due to the action of the person entitled to the land.[58] A vendor who agrees, unconditionally, to convey certain land, is liable to the vendee for the value thereof on breach of such agreement.[59] A vendee who has paid more than the amount due may, on breach by the vendor, recover such excess with interest in addition to damages for the breach,[60] but a purchaser on recovering the difference between the land he purchased and what he thought he was purchasing cannot recover interest on such amount where he has had possession of the entire tract.[61] The measure recoverable by a vendee for false representations as to the rental value of the premises is the difference between the market value of the premises if the rents were as represented and their actual market value.[62] The measure for breach of the contract by the vendee is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the land with interest from date of breach.[63]

Deficient quantity or other partial failure of consideration.[64]—In a sale by the acre and not in gross, the vendee is entitled to an abatement of the purchase price for a deficiency in quantity,[65] especially if the acreage is misrepresented,[66] and that

64. See 4 C. L. 1776, n. 17 et seq.

65. Where the vendor represented the tract to contain a certain number of acres, the sale was held to be by the acre though the deed recited that the tract contained a certain number of acres, more or less. Berry's Ex'x v. Fishburne [Va.] 51 S. E. 827. Where land is sold by the acre, relief will be granted for either an excess or a deficiency. Rich v. Scales [Tenn.] 91 S. W. 50. In an action by the vendee to recover for a deficit in the acreage, evidence held to show that the sale was by the acre and not by the entire tract. Brooks v. Grief [Ky.] 90 S. W. 273. Where the number of acres is of the essence of the description if the tract contains a less acreage than specified, the vendee is entitled to a proportionate reduction in the price. Civ. Code 1895, § 3542, relative to sales by the entire tract or body, does not apply. Strickland v. Hutchinson, 123 Ga. 396, 51 S. E. 348.

66. Where a sale is by the acre and the number of acres is fraudulently represented by an agent of the vendor, he is liable for the price per acre for the difference. Lang v. Merbach [Minn.] 105 N. W. 415. If the deed recite the number of acres and it subsequent-

a vendee made declarations tending to estop him from claiming a rebate for a deficiency in the acreage as against an assignee of the purchase money bonds is no defense to the vendor's liability on his covenant of warranty;[67] but where the sale is in gross no compensation will be granted for either an excess or a deficiency.[68] If part of the land purported to be conveyed is in the adverse possession of another and the vendee have notice of such fact he cannot recover for a deficiency,[69] and a purchaser is not entitled to an abatement of the price because of a deficiency resulting from the fact that streets called as boundaries are shorter than recited in the deed.[70] If a deficiency arise because a portion of the land is held by a paramount title, relief may be had upon the covenant of seisin,[71] and if there has been an eviction, upon the covenant of warranty,[72] or the vendee may rescind either totally or partially and retain that which is good and recover compensation for the rest.[73] A vendee is not entitled to an abatement in price because of a prior sale of minerals where he learned of such sale shortly after the contract, but made no objection, has never been molested and has used the land so as to decrease its value to the vendor.[74]

§ 11. Rights after conveyance.[75]—Ordinarily the execution and acceptance of a deed concludes the contract and prior negotiations are extinguished.[76] But not where the executory contract embraces other obligations than those relating to the conveyance of real estate.[77] Nor will provisions in the deed be held to modify those in the contract if inserted under inequitable conditions,[78] or are without consideration.[79] A purchaser may enforce restrictive covenants which run with the land.[80] A grantee in a deed warranting the right to cut timber cannot, when such timber has been conveyed to another, voluntarily incur a penalty imposed for cutting timber belonging to another and hold his warrantor liable.[81] Under a deed reserving to the vendor the right to reacquire the property upon the happening of certain conditions he should not be denied such right when the conditions are fulfilled.[82]

§ 12. Vendor's liens and their enforcement. A. Express.[83]—A lien created by deed continues in full force until released of record, discharged by payment, or barred by limitations.[84] The lien attaches to all interest in the land conveyed,[85] and ly be ascertained that there is an excess or deficiency so great as to justify an inference of fraud or mistake, relief may be granted. Rich v. Scales [Tenn.] 91 S. W. 50. If, however, the vendee inspected the land and obtained all he intended to buy or the vendor to sell he can have no relief though the deed purport to state the number of acres (Id.), unless the difference is so great as to shock the conscience of the court (Id.).

A lien retained by deed to secure payment of the purchase money is not barred by the expiration of the statutory period if payments have been made within such period. Id. Maker of note held estopped to deny the holder's right to a vendor's lien where the note recited that it was given in payment for land and was a lien thereon and the maker did not deny the specific averment that it was secured by a lien. Id. One claiming under the sole heir of a vendee cannot recover without payment of a vendor's lien retained. Wall v. Club Land & Cattle Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 677, 88 S. W. 534. The rights of an assignee of purchase-money notes secured by a vendor's lien to recover the land can be defeated only by payment of the notes. Rutherford v. Mothershed [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 620, 92 S. W. 1021. Where it is admitted by the pleadings that purchase money notes had not been paid, a is superior to all subsequently acquired rights.[86] A vendor loses his superior title under his lien by foreclosure and sale under it,[87] but not by merely bringing an action on the notes.[88] A vendor's lien reserved in an unrecorded deed is not lost where purchasers from the vendee take possession and improve the land but do not repudiate the title remaining in the vendor by virtue of his lien,[89] but is lost if the vendor's title fails.[90]

(§ 12) B. Implied.[91]—A vendor's lien exists in every case where the purchase money is not paid unless it be otherwise agreed between the parties[92] or waived[93] as by taking an independent security.[94] It attaches to all the land which is the subject of the contract,[95] but only to the interest contracted to be sold.[96] It is superior to homestead[97] or dower rights.[98]

85. Where a deed reserved a vendor's lien and the purchaser sold mineral rights to one who transferred them to another, the mineral rights were subject to the lien. Tom's Creek Coal Co. v. Skeene [Ky] 90 S. W. 993.

86. Vendor's liens continued for the beneficiary of a deed of trust given to raise money to pay notes creating such liens are superior to the lien of a co-tenant on the grantor's share for rents wrongfully retained by such grantor. Flach v. Zanderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 540, 91 S. W. 348. Where purchase-money notes reserving a lien and reciting that if it should be ascertained that there was an excess in acreage, the vendee should pay for it, were assigned with all rights thereunder but not expressly carrying a lien on the excess, assignees of notes given for the excess have a prior lien on such tract, and assignees of the other notes have a prior lien on the tract less than the excess. Colquitt v. Sturm [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 596, 91 S. W. 872.

87. A purchaser at foreclosure of the lien may recover from an assignee for the benefit of creditors of the vendor without paying the purchase price. Club Land & Cattle Co. v. Wall [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 212, 91 S. W. 778. Is confined to such rights as his judgment gives him. Wall v. Club Land & Cattle Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 677, 88 S. W. 534.

88. An assignee of purchase-money notes secured by a vendor's lien who sues to foreclose and after the plea of limitations is set up changes the action to one of trespass to try title does not by the action on the notes affirm the contract so as to deprive him of his right to assert his superior title. Rutherford v. Mothershed [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 620, 92 S. W. 1021.

89. Gilbaugh v. Runge [Tex.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 993, 91 S. W. 566. A vendor in a deed reserving a lien is not bound to inquire from purchasers from the vendee as to the right by which they claim the land nor to ascertain whether they know of his rights. Such purchasers must investigate the title of their vendor though his deed is unrecorded. Id.

Complaint on notes and to enforce a vendor's lien securing them alleging that the notes were given in payment for the land and that a lien was reserved by the deed and an answer by a third person not containing an express denial of the lien held to warrant judgment for the plaintiff on the pleadings. Tom's Creek Coal Co. v. Skeene [Ky.] 90 S. W. 993. Notes given on a settlement of all claims between a vendor and vendee held to be for a balance due on the land and that the vendee could not claim that the consideration of the notes was money due for personalty and for the land and that the lien was therefore lost. Nance v. Gray [Ala.] 38 So. 916. The vendor is entitled to a lien for a portion of the purchase price unpaid. Bach v. Kidansky, 106 App. Div. 502, 94 N. Y. S. 752. Where an administratrix sells property of the estate to pay a debt secured by a mortgage thereon to purchasers who pay nothing but buy for the benefit of another, the administratrix has a vendor's lien to the extent of the purchase price to which the creditor for whose benefit the land was sold is subrogated. Campbell v. Perth Amboy Shipbuilding & Engineering Co. [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 319.

93. The burden is on the vendee to show that the vendor has waived it. Cecil v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 271, 93 S. W. 216.

94. If the vendor takes an independent security, even the note of a third person, it is a waiver of his lien. Spence v. Palmer [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 749.

95. Where one pays a judgment recovered in a suit foreclosing a vendor's lien under an agreement that he is to hold the lien until the land is conveyed to him he becomes subrogated to the vendor's lien which is not discharged by a conveyance of less land than was contemplated by the agreement. Brown v. Rash [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 783, 89 S. W. 438.

96. On decreeing specific performance, the court may not, on the purchaser's failure to pay the purchase price, decree a lien on any interest he may have in the land except the interest the vendor contracted to

(§ 12) C. Remedies.[99]—A suit to enforce a vendor's lien may be sustained by proper proof with or without the purchase-money note[1] or deed.[2] A purchaser in possession under an oral contract has the burden to prove payment of the purchase price.[3] The widow and children of the vendee of land are not estopped from insisting, in an action to enforce vendor's lien notes and foreclose the lien by rescission of the contract and reclamation of the land, that they be allowed to pay off the notes, by reason of the fact that they objected to the establishment of the notes as a claim against the estate on the ground of payment and because they were not presented in time,[4] nor by the fact that they interposed the defense of administration pending to a previous suit to establish the debt and foreclose the lien in which plaintiff took a voluntary nonsuit.[5] An assignee of purchase-money notes is entitled to have the land sold in order to enforce the vendor's lien.[6] Where an answer in an action to enforce a vendor's lien contained a mere denial of the allegation of the lien set forth in the petition, a reply was unnecessary.[7] Supplemental pleadings may be filed in vacation.[8] One who establishes his vendor's lien is entitled to a decree of foreclosure on tender into court of a deed conveying to the vendee.[9] When a vendor sues to cancel his deed, he is not entitled to foreclosure of his lien on a prayer for general relief.[10] When vendor's lien notes provide for interest and attorney's fees, they should be allowed on foreclosure of the lien.[11] A decree may provide for the protection of purchasers from the vendee.[12] In Texas a vendor's lien when established in the district court against the estate of a decedent must be collected through the probate court.[13]

Only persons named in the statute may redeem from foreclosure of a vendor's lien,[14] and then only upon compliance with statutory conditions.[15]

Rixey, 76 Va. 694, 700; Moore v. Lackey, 53 Miss. 85. In Texas, until payment, the situation as to title is reversed. Peters v. Clements, 46 Tex. 114, 123. The vendor has also an equitable lien, which follows the notes. Elmendorf v. Beirne, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 188. The vendor's legal title passes only by express conveyance (Hamblen v. Folts, 70 Tex. 132); but may not be disposed of to defeat the lien of the assigned note. Russell v. Kirkbride, 62 Tex. 455. Though a barred note extinguishes the lien (Hale v. Baker, 60 Tex. 217), the legal rights remain (Burgess v. Milllcan, 50 Tex. 397; White v. Cole, 97 Tex. 500). If the legal title and equitable lien vest in the same person, he may sue on the note and foreclose, or rescind the contract and recover possession of the land. Hale v. Baker, 60 Tex. 217; Stephens v. Mathews' Heirs, 69 Tex. 341, 344. But rescission is not granted if inequitable to the vendee. Hamblen v. Folts, 70 Tex. 132.—See 5 Columbia L. R. 479.

§ 13. Enforcement of the contract of sale.[16]—A vendee may enforce performance so far as the vendor is able to perform,[17] but where the vendor is unable to convey all the premises agreed upon, he cannot compel acceptance of the portion he can convey.[18] Under a contract providing that if the vendor cannot make good title the contract shall be void, and the purchase money paid refunded, the remedy fixed is exclusive and on the happening of the condition the contract is void.[19] In such case the vendee is not entitled to performance to the extent of the vendor's ability.[20] A vendee who elects to pursue his remedy at law for damages[21] or who abandons his contract[22] cannot thereafter enforce specific performance. It is competent for the legislature to provide that when a vendor dies prior to executing a deed, the court may, upon verified petition by the vendee, authorize his personal representative to execute the conveyance.[23] Under a rule that where one bound by a written contract to convey real estate dies before making the conveyance his personal representative may be compelled to convey, the personal representative may not be compelled to carry out the terms of an oral contract.[24] Under a statute providing that a contract shall not be forfeited without notice to the vendee, no notice is necessary in order to maintain an action to enforce the contract.[25] Where a vendee resorts to equity to enforce his contract and an equitable defense is set up, it is within the province of the chancellor to say whether the contract was fair, just, and equitable.[26] Under a bill for specific performance which contains no prayer for a money decree, a money decree may be given under a prayer for general relief.[27] One not a party to the contract but holding void deeds from the vendor cannot be compelled to join in the conveyance.[28]

VENUE AND PLACE OF TRIAL.

§ 1. The proper venue. A. The nature of the action.[29]—The character of an action is generally determined from the complaint or prayer.[30] sults in the loss of the debt. Wall v. Club Land & Cattle Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 677, 88 S. W. 534.

14. A statute extending the right to a vendee of the debtor applies only to one who purchases prior to sale on foreclosure of the lien and not to one who purchases after such foreclosure. Wallace v. Markstein [Ala.] 40 So. 201.

15. Under a statute providing that a vendee who does not deliver possession on demand to a purchaser at foreclosure of a vendor's lien cannot redeem from such foreclosure, it must appear that a demand for possession by the purchaser had been made. A mere casual conversation held insufficient to constitute a demand. Henderson v. Hamrick [Ala.] 39 So. 918.

19. Schwab v. Baremore [Minn.] 104 N. W. 10. Where the wife of the vendor did not join in the contract and refused to execute the deed, it constituted such a defect in the title as to render the contract of no further force. Id.

20. Schwab v. Baremore [Minn.] 104 N. W. 10.

21. Where the vendor was unable to convey the title he contracted to and the vendee directed his attorney to refuse to accept the conveyance and requested payment of liquidated damages stipulated for. Sutton v. Miller, 219 Ill. 462, 76 N. E. 838.

22. A vendee who by positive and unequivocal acts abandons his contract cannot maintain a suit for specific performance. May v. Getty [N. C.] 53 S. E. 75. A vendee

(§ 1) B. Local actions; actions concerning real estate.[31]—Actions affecting[32] real property must usually be tried in the county where the land is situated. Under this rule, actions for injuries to real property must be tried in the county where the land is situated, except where a change may be ordered for special reasons;[33] and a suit to forcelose a mortgage,[34] or to partition land is properly brought where the land or some part of it is situated.[35] When the action is primarily one to establish a trust in land, the action is properly brought in the county where the land is situated even though an accounting is also requested as an incident thereto.[36] Where only the title to land is concerned and the court is called upon to act upon the person of the defendant only, equity may grant relief in any county where defendant is found;[37] but where the court is requested to act directly upon property, such property must be within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.[38] Actions of replevin as a rule must be tried where the property is located.[39] The trial of issues of fact must take place at the county seat unless trial at another place is expressly authorized by statute or agreed upon by the parties.[40] In most states certain actions have been localized by statute.[41] suing to recover purchase money paid because of inability of the vendor to make a good title cannot obtain a decree for specific performance. Duke v. Stuart, 105 App. Div. 376, 94 N. Y. S. 235. Where the vendee on ascertaining that the vendor's title is defective unconditionally refuses to accept the only title he can convey, he cannot thereafter maintain an action for specific performance. Riley v. Allen [Kan.] 81 P. 186.

23. In re Garnier's Estate, 147 Cal. 457, 82 P. 68. Under such a statute, the executor or administrator has the same right to file a petition as an outside party and need not first resign his position in order to have his claim enforced. Id.

32. A suit to enjoin the removal of a court house "may affect real estate" within § 3, c. 22, Hurd's Rev. St. 1903. Munger v. Crowe, 219 Ill. 12, 76 N. E. 50.

33. Code Civ. Proc. § 392. Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Superior Ct. of San Francisco, 147 Cal. 467, 82 P. 70. Where the whole or any part of damages claimed is for injuries to the freehold, an action is local and must be tried in the county or state where the land is situated. Code Civ. Proc. § 392. Id.

34. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 62, an action to foreclose a mortgage on land, of which a person died seised may be brought in the county where the land is situated where none of the actions enumerated in §§ 65, 66, relative to estates of decedents, is pending. Galloway v. Craig [Ky.] 92 S. W. 320.

35. So held in suit brought after administration of the estate where the land of a decedent lay partly in the county where suit was commenced though other statutory provisions required actions to settle, distribute or partition estate of deceased persons to be brought where the personal representative qualified. Kirkley's Dig. §§ 6063, 6064. Cowling v. Nelson [Ark.] 88 S. W. 913.

37, 38. Munger v. Crowe, 115 Ill. App. 189.

39. A nonresident principal for whom the property was held could be sued in replevin with his agent in the county where the latter had actual possession. Central Nat. Bank v. Brooke [Kan.] 81 P. 498.

40. An election contest must be tried at the county seat. Bell v. Jarvis [Minn.] 107 N. W. 547. Where an election contest was tried at a place other than the county seat over the objection and exception of defendant, the case must be reversed although the decision of the lower court was sound on the merits. Id. Appellant did not waive the objection by taking part in the proceedings. Id.

41. The failure of a sheriff to seize property located in his own county constitutes a cause of action arising in that county within Code § 983, requiring certain actions to be tried where the cause of action arose. Packard v. Hesterberg, 40 Misc. 30, 96 N. Y. S. 72. Evidence held sufficient to show that the killing of hogs by defendant railroad occurred in the township where the suit was brought. Payne v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 609, 88 S. W. 164. In an action on a contract to procure the purchase of timber the cause of action arose, at least in part, where the contract was made and performed. Peach River Lumber Co. v. Ayers [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 684, 91 S. W. 387. The action was properly triable in the county where the cause of ac-

(§ 1) C. Transitory actions.[42]—As a general rule, transitory actions must be tried in the county or district where defendant resides.[43] The privilege of being sued at one's residence cannot be defeated by fictitious allegations to lay venue elsewhere.[44] In Kentucky, a single defendant in a civil action must be sued in the county wherein he resides or is summoned, unless he makes defense before objecting to the jurisdiction of the court.[45] But to entitle a plaintiff to serve the other defendants in such case, the defendant in the county where the action is brought must be a bona fide defendant with an interest adverse to plaintiff,[46] or he must be a necessary party.[47] An action may be brought where a necessary party defendant resides although the principal defendant resides in another county,[48] and the fact that a plaintiff in such case might have maintained an action against one of the defendants alone for part of the relief to which he is entitled does not authorize a change of venue.[49] An action to recover only the value of property severed from the freehold is transitory and may be brought where defendant can be served even tion arose, at least in part, though defendant neither resided nor had an agent there. Id.

42. See 4 C. L. 1798.

43. The question of the residence of defendant is one of fact for the trial court, and depends upon a person's intentions as evidenced by his acts and declarations. Barfield v. Coker & Co. [S. C.] 53 S. E. 170. Where defendant had family in one county but worked and spent most of his time in another. Id. The statute provided that no inhabitant of the state should be sued outside the county of his domicile unless defendant resided outside the state or his residence was unknown. Held, the fact that defendant, a citizen of New York who had resided in a county in Texas for 14 months, also maintained a residence in New York where he had his family, did not deprive him of the right to be sued in the county of his residence in Texas. Statute construed. Taylor v. Wilson [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 577, 93 S. W. 109. Acts 1900-01, p. 1854, giving the city court of Bessemer jurisdiction of personal actions the causes of which arise within certain limits whether the parties reside therein or not, did not limit the jurisdiction to causes arising within such limits but the court has jurisdiction when either of the parties resides there. Harris v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 267. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1208, providing for the bringing into a case of additional necessary or proper parties, does not authorize the joining of parties not domiciled in the county where the action is brought. Mugg v. Texas & P. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 876. Acts 1903, p. 182, relating to the venue of actions for personal injuries does not apply to suits commenced prior to its passage. Harris v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 267.

44. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Waddell Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 647, 88 S. W. 390.

45. In an action in one county by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, to settle the affairs of a corporation, wherein stockholders in other counties were made defendants, the assignee could not by amended petitions obtain personal judgments against such stockholders for individual debts due the corporation. Civ. Code Prac. §§ 78, 79, 65, Louisville Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Smith's Adm'r [Ky.] 90 S. W. 1080. The fact that the debtor might ultimately get some part of the estate as a stockholder is immaterial. Id. The fact that the claim was on notes given to protect the corporation from loss occasioned by alleged mismanagement on the part of the debtor did not confer jurisdiction. Id. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 78, providing that transitory actions may be brought where defendant resides or is summoned, an action on a note by a nonresident against a nonresident may be brought in the county where defendant is summoned. Bishop v. Jackson [Ky.] 91 S. W. 263.

46. State v. Bradley [Mo.] 91 S. W. 483; Railroad Commission of Ga. v. Palmer Hardware Co. [Ga.] 53 S. E. 193. An action against all the defendants was properly brought, by a beneficiary in a trust deed, in the county of the residence of the trustee, where the trustee was guilty of fraud in which certain of the other nonresident defendants participated. Sawyer v. First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 151. Two attorneys had separate claims against a third for fees collected. Held, one of the two could not be made defendant so as to give jurisdiction of the third who resided in another county. Rev. St. 1899 § 562. State v. Bradley [Mo.] 91 S. W. 483.

47. Where A, B, and C prosecuted an action for which C collected the fee, held, B was not a necessary party in a suit by A against C for his share. State v. Bradley [Mo.] 91 S. W. 483. In a suit to set aside conveyances as frauduient, the bill prayed that certain grantees residing outside the county where the land was situated, be declared trustees for complainant, required an accounting, etc., held suit could be brought in the county of their residence, they being "material defendants" within the statute. Chisolm v. Wallace [Ala.] 40 So. 219.

48. In an action on a promissory note secured by a pledge of stock the maker was not entitled to a change of venue from the residence of the corporation to his own residence where the latter claimed an interest in the stock. Heilman v. Logan [Cal.] 82 P. 848.

though plaintiff may be compelled to prove the ownership of the land.[50] Congress has by various acts provided for the place of trial in Federal courts when defendants are residents of different districts in the same state.[51] General legislation as to the place of trial in the United States does not necessarily repeal previous special legislation not in accord with the general provisions.[52] In the absence of any act of Congress designating the tribunal in which suits brought by the United States in a Federal court may be instituted, the general grant of jurisdiction to the circuit court will control as to the place of trial.[53]

Distinct causes of action.[54]

(§ 1) D. Special actions and proceedings and equitable proceedings.[55]

Injunctions.[56]—The mere fact that an injunction is prayed against a resident defendant does not always give the right to require nonresident defendants to answer.[57] The relief sought against the resident defendant must be substantial.[58] In Georgia a suit against railroad commissioners to enjoin the enforcement of discriminating rates must be brought in the county where one or more of the commissioners reside.[59] An injunction affecting realty must be sought where the property is located.[60]

Actions affecting public officers.—Under statutes requiring actions against public officers for acts done in the performance of their duties to be tried in the county where the cause of action arose, the fact that an officer's co-defendants reside in another county does not give a right to sue in such other county.[61] "State Officers" required to be sued at the Capitol, are only the heads of state departments.[62]

(§ 1) E. Suits against corporations.[63]—The statutes of the several states generally make corporations suable in the county of their principal place of business[64]

64. A private domestic business corporation having its principal office in a given county cannot be sued in another county for a tort committed therein if it has no agency or place of business in such county. Code 1895, § 1900, construed. Tuggle v. Enterprise Lumber Co., 123 Ga. 480, 51 S. E. 433. A corporation having its plant and transacting most of its business in one county, although having its principal office in another county, may be compelled in mandamus by the court in the former county to permit a stockholder to inspect its books. Acts June 8, 1893 (P. L. 345) and March 19, 1903 (P. L. 32). Neubert v. Armstrong Water Co. [Pa.] 61 A. 123.

or where the cause of action arose[65] or where a contract was made.[66] In the latter case, an action on a contract to carry passengers, made with a railroad company in one county, is properly brought in such county against the company and a connecting carrier in another county.[67] Under statutes providing that suits against foreign corporations may be brought in any county where defendant has an office or where some person resides on whom process may be served, the court has no jurisdiction of an action in any other county.[68] In Texas a foreign corporation may be sued in contract in any county where the contract was made or broken as well as at the county of its principal place of business.[69] Under the Federal statute relative to jurisdiction, a corporation is an "inhabitant" only of the state under which it was incorporated and cannot be sued elsewhere without its consent.[70]

(§ 1) F. De facto counties.[71]

(§ 1) G. Effect of improper venue.[72]—Upon proper objection being made that an action is brought in the wrong county, the court is without jurisdiction to pass on the merits of the case,[73] and where a proper objection to venue cannot be timely made because of illness, a default judgment entered against a defendant will be set aside.[74] Where a judge is constitutionally disqualified, a judgment rendered by him is void though no provision for transfer is made.[75] Objection to the venue may be waived[76] by a general appearance,[77] or where it is not taken by demurrer or answer.[78] The right to have a mortgage foreclosed in the county where the property is located

65. In Georgia suits against railroad companies for injuries caused by its servants must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose if the company has an agent in that county. Code 1895, § 2334. Southern R. Co. v. Grizzle [Ga.] 53 S. E. 244. A foreign railroad company operating in this state, and its engineer, may be sued jointly in the county in which the cause of action arose though the residence of the engineer be in another county, the corporation having an agent in the county where the cause of action arose. Id. The corporation is a resident of such county within Civ. Code 1895, § 5872, relating to joint trespassers. Id.

66. But one of several connecting carriers of property under a bill of lading creating separate contracts between the shipper and each carrier cannot be sued for a separate default, in a county where it has no road or place of business. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Waddell Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 647, 88 S. W. 390.

67. In whose behalf the contract was in part made and who subsequently ratified it by undertaking to perform. Civ. Code Prac. § 72. Southern R. Co. v. Cassell [Ky.] 92 S. W. 281. Civ. Code Prac. § 73, localizing certain actions does not apply to a contract to carry passengers. Id. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 73, allowing actions for injuries to be brought in the county where plaintiff resides if he resides in a county into which the carrier passes, the action may be brought where plaintiff resides if the carrier has a track through that county though it never operated trains thereon. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Sander's Adm'r [Ky.] 92 S. W. 937.

68. Where in a suit in one county the process was served on the agent in another. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4854. Hammiel v. Fidelity Mut. Aid Ass'n [Wash.] 85 P. 35. The court having no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the objection was not waived because defendant's appearance was general in form. Id.

74. Though neither the justice court nor plaintiff's counsel had notice of the illness, where no negligence was shown. Mistrot Bros. & Co. v. Wilson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 314, 91 S. W. 870.

75. Where judge had been of counsel in the previous case it was so held although the statute did not make disqualification of a judge a ground for transferring the case to another county and though such disqualification was disclosed on motion to transfer to another county. Johnson v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 85, 89 S. W. 1102.

76. It is not a waiver of the right to be sued in the county of one's residence where the plea of privilege could not be made because of illness on the day of trial. Mistrot Bros. & Co. v. Wilson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 314, 91 S. W. 870. A defendant in justice court is not required to file his plea of personal privilege to be sued in the county of his residence before the day of trial. Id.

77. Right to be sued in district of defendant's residence. Mahr v. Union Pac. R. Co., 140 F. 921. Objection that a change of venue was made to a county not in the same or next adjoining circuit held waived where the court had jurisdiction of the class of cases in question and objector went on with trial. is a personal privilege which may be waived by a failure to assert it.[79, 80] The fact that an improper change of venue is made is not necessarily reversible error.[81]

§ 2. When change is allowable, necessary, or proper.[82]—Statutes granting a change of venue, being in furtherance of justice, should be liberally construed.[83] An application for a change of venue must, however, be made in time.[84] One is entitled as of right to a change of venue to the county where the statute requires an action to be brought and an affidavit of merits is not necessary in such case.[85] Where an action is brought against one who has no real interest in the suit, the real party in interest upon coming into the case is entitled to have the venue changed to the place of his residence.[86] The fact that all defendants in an action join in a motion for change of venue to the residence of one properly laid does not make such change necessary.[87] Where a bill is one to try a purely legal title, or is multifarious, a motion to dismiss for want of equity raises the question of venue.[88] A change of venue is generally allowed for the convenience of witnesses.[89] A garnishee is entitled to a change of venue where an impartial trial cannot be had or where the convenience of witnesses or the ends of justice require it.[90] The granting of a change of venue for the convenience of witnesses is largely within the discretion of the court,[91] and a change will not be reviewed unless such discretion is abused.[92]

79. Failure to assert for 80 days after general appearance held waiver. Burton v. Graham [Colo.] 84 P. 978.

80. The statutes of Utah (Rev. St. 1898, §§ 2928-2933), fixing venue, do not offend Const. art. 8, § 7, providing that all business arising in a county must be tried there unless changed. Snyder v. Pike [Utah] 83 P. 692.

Under statute requiring a change of venue before trial, a hearing and determination of issues on a demurrer in justice court is a "trial." Rev. Codes 1899, § 6652. Walker v. Maronda [N. D.] 106 N. W. 296. The word "may" in sec. 6652, Rev. Codes 1899, relating to change of venue in justice court should be construed to mean "must" as regards duty to transfer when bias of the justice is alleged. Id. Application too late in justice court after demurrer argued and overruled. Id. Demand for change to county of defendant's residence was too late after appearance and demurrer or answer. Wadleigh v. Phelps, 147 Cal. 541, 82 P. 200. Act 1879 (17 St. at Large p. 14) entitling a party to change of venue after answering did not prohibit a change before issue joined. Fishburne v. 91. Barfield v. Coker & Co. [S. C.] 53 S. E.

Prejudice of the judge is generally a ground for change of venue.[93] A party seeking a change of venue for disqualification of the judge must present facts showing such disqualification.[94] Under the statutes of Missouri an applicant for a change of venue cannot disqualify more than one judge by an affidavit of prejudice.[95] In some jurisdictions a defendant in a criminal case is entitled to a second change of venue upon reversal of the court to which the case had been previously transferred.[96] In Louisiana, if a case has not been tried within nine months from the date of a recusation, it must be transferred to an adjoining district.[97] The question of local prejudice is one of fact for the trial court.[98]

On appeal from inferior to superior courts.[99]—Statutes relative to change of venue in courts of record do not apply to cases there by appeal from justices of the peace.[1] Where an action has been improperly removed from an inferior to a superior court, a change of venue will not be granted in the superior court.[2]

§ 3. Procedure for change.[3]—The duty of a court to allow a change of venue in a proper case is imperative,[4] though he may in his discretion decide what is a reasonable notice such as the law requires,[5] but under statutes requiring reasonable notice of such change, what is reasonable notice must be left to the discretion of the court and such discretion will not be interfered with in the absence of abuse.[6] The change is usually made upon motion and affidavit of one of the parties.[7] The Phelps, 147 Cal. 541, 82 P. 200.

93. In contempt proceedings, the judge before whom the cause was to be heard could refuse to transfer the cause to another judge where there was no proof that an impartial trial could not be had before him though the contempt consisted of disobedience to his own orders. Back v. State [Neb.] 106 N. W. 787. Code Civ. Proc. § 396, providing for the trial of an action although "not commenced" in the proper county unless demand for change of venue is made at the time of appearance, does not apply to a change under § 397, on the ground of disqualification of the judge. Dakan v. Superior Ct. of Santa Cruz County [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1129. The provision in the statute granting a change of venue to some other county to which there is no valid objection does not apply to applications for change on account of the prejudice of judges. 95. The statutes of Missouri applicable to the circuit court of the city of St. Louis providing that as regards change of venue said city is a county and that each division of the court therein is a separate court also requiring the cause to be sent to some other court of record in said city when change is taken for cause pertaining to only one judge; and to be sent to an outside county only when the cause disqualifies all judges (Rev. St. 1899, § 832) do not allow as of right a change of venue from the city of St. Louis to a county outside the city in case an application is based on grounds applicable to all the judges in the city, on the mere application and allegation that such is the fact. 7. In New York, the court cannot on its own motion change the place of trial of an giving of notice of motion is needless where the filing of application makes change obligatory.[8] In Wisconsin the court has until the last day of the term to rule on a motion.[9] An application for leave to reply to a counter affidavit in a motion for change of venue and to submit further evidence on the ground of surprise, should be made at the time of hearing the motion.[10] The petition must be properly executed.[11] The affidavit should be regular in form, properly verified,[12] and served.[13] The burden is on the party seeking a change of venue to establish the ground thereof.[14] In Montana the filing of an affidavit for a change of venue of itself disqualifies the judge and terminates his general authority to act in a case.[15] In Wisconsin the county court endowed with like powers as the circuit court may order a change of venue to another county except in cases of disqualification of the county judge when it goes up to the circuit court.[16] It is reversible to deny such a motion for a supposed want of power which in fact exists and to ignore the merits.[17] Whether an order denying a change of venue should be set aside on the ground of surprise or lack of opportunity to reply to counter affidavits is within the discretion of the court.[18]

Mandamus.[19]—An application for mandamus to compel removal of a case will be dismissed where the time to remove has not yet arrived,[20] and mandamus will not lie to compel action on an application for a change of venue before the expiration of the time within which an order for a change must be made.[21] If a court

21. So held where court did not refuse to without power or discretion to order a change of venue nevertheless makes the order mandamus to proceed with the trial is the proper remedy to correct such order.[22]

Prohibition.[23]—The writ of prohibition is granted only where the proceedings in an inferior court are in excess of or without jurisdiction.[24] It will lie to stop proceedings in a local action involving title to land situated in another state where many of the expenses in such action cannot be recovered as legal costs.[25] A petition for this writ on the ground of disqualification of the judge must allege facts showing such disqualification.[26] Prohibition will lie to prevent further proceedings where plaintiff has joined a mere nominal defendant for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction in one county of the real defendant residing in another county.[27]

§ 4. Results of change of venue.[28]—Upon a change of venue being granted, a stay of proceedings in the original court necessarily follows.[29] A judge does not lose jurisdiction of a case by granting a change of venue upon an application not made pursuant to statute.[30]

VERDICTS AND FINDINGS.

§ 1. Definitions and nature.[31]—The purpose of a special verdict is to obtain from the jury the findings upon material, issuable facts, and the legal effect of such findings is exclusively for the court.[32] By a special verdict the jury find and state all the facts at issue and conclude, conditionally, that if upon the whole matter as thus found the court thinks plaintiff has a cause of action, then verdict is for plaintiff, otherwise for defendant.[33] Where the finding determines the whole issue, it is not a special finding.[34]

§ 2. General verdicts.[35]—A general verdict necessarily determines all of the material issues in favor of the party for whom such verdict is given.[36] It must be given a reasonable intendment,[37] must be construed in the light of the pleadings,[38] but must conform to the pleadings[39] and instructions thereon,[40] and must be responsive to the issues,[41] and must definitely determine the issues;[42] but as a general rule where the verdict can be made certain by reference to the pleadings or the admitted facts, and enough can be gathered from such sources to supply any apparent uncertainty, the court is inclined to favor the validity of the verdict,[43] and

39. A verdict for an amount in excess of the amount claimed in the pleadings is fundamentally erroneous. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Shults [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 506. A verdict is not open to the objection that it does not conform to the pleadings because it is for an amount in excess of two counts in the declaration, where there were other counts which amounted to more than the amount of the verdict. First Nat. Bank v. Chandler [Ala.] 39 So. 822. Where the defense to an action on a note was that the note had been given for property which proved to be other than as represented by the plaintiff, a verdict that the plaintiff should take property back and that the notes should be canceled, was erroneous. Wootan v. Partridge [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 39, 87 S. W. 356. A verdict will not be set aside if one or more counts in the declaration is sufficient to sustain it. Defendant should have moved for an instruction as to each of the counts not sustained, in order to avail itself of the want of sufficient evidence to sustain a part of the counts only. Shickle, Harrison & Howard Iron Co. v. Beck, 112 Ill. App. 444.

40. Where the court instructs the jury to find the value of the horse as of the time of trial, a verdict finding the value as of another date is irregular. Burke v. Graham, 106 App. Div. 108, 94 N. Y. S. 559.

41. Verdict upon an exception to the confirmation of paving assessments, held to sufficiently conform to the issues, although the verdict was that the property of the objectors was not assessed more than it would be "benefitted," without the use of the words "specially benefitted." McLannan v. Chicago, 218 Ill. 62, 75 N. E. 762.

42. Where the only question in issue was whether the claim sued on had been settled, a verdict that "we, the jury * * * find for the defendant that the plaintiff's claim sued upon has been settled," was sufficiently definite to authorize a judgment for the defendant. Kolleen v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Kan.] 83 P. 990. A verdict for $545, "with interest at 7% per annum" is not invalid for uncertainty as to amount, where such interest can be found by computation from the time when cause of action arose. Corcoran v. Halloran [S. D.] 107 N. W. 210. Where a claim in favor of a husband and one in favor of him and his wife are sued upon in the same action, the verdict should show the damages awarded upon each claim separately; and where damages are awarded generally the plaintiff may have the defect remedied by a motion for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, or for a venire de novo. Spencer v. Haines [N. J. Law] 62 A. 1009. See Municipal court act, § 237, Laws 1902, p. 1560, c. 580. Sullivan v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 370.

As to damages or amount: In a suit upon a contract to cut hay at a certain price per bale, a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for a certain sum per bale, but which does not find the number of bales cut, is too uncertain as to the amount to sustain a judgment. Parker v. Stroud [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 734. The failure of a verdict in detinue to assess the values of the several items of the property is not error where there was no evidence as to such separate values. Howard v. Deens [Ala.] 39 So. 346.

obvious clerical errors may be disregarded.[44] Where a verdict is clear upon the issue submitted, irregularity in form will not invalidate it.[45]

In reaching a general verdict, the jury may properly consider facts shown by the evidence, though not shown in the answers to special interrogatories.[46] The absence of a general verdict is not necessarily fatal.[47] A verdict of less than a full jury is a nullity unless authorized by a valid statute.[48] In Missouri a verdict may be rendered by nine of the jury.[49]

A statutory provision that the verdict must be in writing is directory,[50] and irregularities in a verdict which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties will be disregarded.[51]

§ 3. Special interrogatories and verdicts. When proper.[52]—In some states the submission of questions calling for special findings is within the discretion of the trial court,[53] but in others the court is required to submit special interrogatories whenever properly required by a party so to do.[54] But it is not error to refuse to submit special interrogatories which have already been submitted to the jury in the

43. Brown v. Gillett [Wash.] 81 P. 1002. Where judgment is demanded for a certain sum with interest from a certain date, and the date is not disputed, a verdict for the sum demanded with interest, but without specifying the amount of interest, is sufficiently certain. Id. In a suit upon a contract to cut hay at so much per bale a verdict for so much per bale, followed by an aggregate amount, is sufficient. Parker v. Stroud [Tex. Civ. App.] 87 S. W. 734. A verdict for "1,800" without specifying whether it was for $1,800 or 1,800 cents, held sufficient to sustain a judgment for $1,800, where the suit was for $2,000 and the verdict when read to the jury was for $1,800, and was assented to by them and so entered. Notwithstanding Code Civ. Prac. § 325, requiring verdict to be in writing. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. v. Leonard, 27 Ky. L. R. 1055, 87 S. W. 809. A verdict for the "full amount claimed" is sufficient where a specific amount is claimed by the declaration. Sullivan v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 370. Mere informality in the form of a verdict which is perfectly intelligible will be disregarded. Meyer v. Purcell, 114 Ill. App. 472.

44. A verdict is not vitiated by the use, under certain circumstances, of the word "defendant" instead of "defendants." Verdict sustained where defendants were partners, relied on same defense, and referred to themselves as "defendant" in their own instructions. Ziegenhein v. Smith, 116 Ill. App. 80.

Signature: Laws 1901, providing that the signature of the foreman alone is sufficient where the verdict is unanimous, but that if the verdict is merely by the constitutional majority all of those who agreed must sign the verdict, did not become operative until June 16, 1901; and hence a majority verdict signed by the foreman alone was sufficient until such statute became operative. Kelly-Goodfellow Shoe Co. v. Sally, 114 Mo. App. 222, 89 S. W. 889.

Although the questions submitted for special verdict are covered in a general way by the questions in issue, the court should nevertheless, when so requested, submit to the jury the particular physical facts directly put in issue by the pleadings. Olwell v. Skobis [Wis.] 105 N. W. 777. Omission to find on all material issues is ground for reversal. Stanley v. Flint, 10 Idaho, 629, 79 P. 815. In an action for injuries in which the question as to whether plaintiff fell over a wire was in issue, the submission of a special interrogatory as to whether the plaintiff could or ought to have seen the wire was proper, a particular instruction having already been given as to contributory negligence in not seeing wire. Buchholtz v. Radcliffe [Iowa] 105 N. W. 336. Special interrogatories as to ultimate material facts should be submitted charge of the court,[55] or which are covered by interrogatories already submitted;[56] and where a certain issue will be material only in the event of a finding being made in a certain way, the failure to submit such issue is without prejudice where the finding is made some other way.[57] Where a party is called in to defend an action he cannot have a special finding as to matters between him and the defendant.[58] A statute authorizing the court to enter judgment in the absence of findings by the jury upon special issues is not unconstitutional.[59] A statute providing that in all trials by juries in civil proceedings, the jury may render a special or general verdict at their discretion, has no application to a suit in chancery where their verdict is but advisory.[60]

Requests for and submission of special issues or interrogatories.[61]—The court is not required to submit special interrogatories in the absence of a request therefor,[62] but may submit them of its own motion.[63] Special interrogatories must be submitted to the opposing counsel before argument.[64] A waiver of a general charge is not necessary to authorize the court to submit the case on special issues.[65]

Form and requisites of special interrogatories.[66]—Special interrogatories should be confined to such questions as are controverted and put in issue by the pleadings or as might properly have been put in issue by the pleadings.[67] They should not be directed to evidentiary facts,[68] nor should they require the jury to state the specific grounds of their findings,[69] nor call for mere cross-examination of the jury,[70] nor is it error to refuse to require the jury to answer special interrogatories where such inter-to the jury where the evidence is such as to require their consideration. Held error to refuse to submit a special interrogatory requiring the jury to answer whether they found "that the placing of plaintiff's arm at the place he had it just prior and at the time it was hurt was the exercise of ordinary care on his part for his own safety." The object of the statute is to elicit material facts, and not mere fragments or items of evidence; hence interrogatories that are calculated to mislead, confuse, or harass the jury, should not be submitted. City of Lawton v. McAdams [Okl.] 83 P. 429. Where the determination of the fellow-servant issue is material, a question which sets forth a test should be given upon request. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Brooks, 115 Ill. App. 5. Upon an issue of contributory negligence, a question as to whether the plaintiff performed his work "as such work was usually performed by other men" was evidentiary only. Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co. [Wis.] 106 N. W. 1077. Where the ultimate fact is whether under all the circumstances shown by the evidence plaintiff exercised ordinary care, a special interrogatory "Could the plaintiff by the exercise of ordinary care have seen the crane coming in time to avoid it," is properly refused. Leighton & Howard Steel Co. v. Snell, 119 Ill. App. 199.

69. In an action for injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective machine, questions covering different phases of the evidence concerning the nature of the defects were improper. Montayne v. Northern Electrical Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 105 N. W. 1043.

70. In an action for injuries caused by an explosion of a tank, an interrogatory as to rogatories do not relate to any fact necessarily involved in the findings of the general verdict.[71]

A special interrogatory should be single so as to admit of a single categorical answer.[72] Special interrogatories should not be submitted together, although the same instructions would be applicable for all.[73]

Form and requisites of special verdict.[74]—The form of a special verdict is very much in the discretion of the trial court.[75] But a special verdict which is but little more than a general verdict in sections is not sufficient.[76] A special verdict must be responsive to the interrogatories submitted,[77] must be definite,[78] and must find every material fact in issue.[79] In other words, a special verdict should be of such nature that nothing remains for the court but to draw from such facts the proper conclusions of law.[80] But it is not necessary that the answers of interrogatories framed by one party should affirmatively establish the claims of the other party.[81] Special verdict should present ultimate facts, not the evidence thereof.[82] Absence of a finding in a verdict which may be supplied by intendment may be regarded as merely technical error.[83] An immaterial variance between the findings and the pleadings is not fatal,[84]

71. Answers to interrogatories as to extra work in an action upon a contract for excavation of dirt. Root v. Coyle [Okl.] 82 P. 648. Where the issue is whether a certain tract was benefited, a question whether "any part" of plaintiff's land was benefited, is insufficient. Perdue v. Big Four Drainage Dist. of Ford County, 117 Ill. App. 600.

72. A question as to whether the plaintiff knew that the edges of certain sheets of brass which he was feeding to a machine were liable to contain slivers and rough edges was improper. Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co. [Wis.] 106 N. W. 1077.

77. Where, in condemnation proceedings, the court submitted interrogatories as to the value per acre of the land appropriated, as to the value of the residue of the defendant's land at the time of the appropriation and as to the value of such residue after such appropriation, a verdict which simply found that the value of the land appropriated was a certain amount per acre, and that the value of the residue was a certain amount per acre, without any finding as to the amount of such residue, was not responsive. Kirby v. Panhandle G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 421, 88 S. W. 281.

78. Nicholson v. Maine Cent. R. Co. [Me.] 61 A. 834. Finding that the property in controversy in action for breach of contract to sell, was "about" a certain value, insufficient. Schnull v. Cuddy [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1030. Where the jury found that the partition which gave away and killed plaintiff's intestate had not been constructed by defendant in a reasonably safe manner and was not maintained in a reasonably safe condition, that such condition was known by the defendant, and that such condition was the proximate cause of the death of the deceased, the word "condition" as used in the second, third, and fourth of such findings related to the unsafe condition at the time of the injury, and the findings were not subject to an objection for uncertainty. Mueller v. Northwestern Iron Co., 125 Wis. 326, 104 N. W. 67.

79. Answers to interrogatories as to value of property held not sufficient to support the computation of damages. Schnull v. Cuddy [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1030. In action for deceit the jury found that the defendant made actionable misrepresentations to the plaintiff as to the amount of money in the treasury of a corporation, but made no findings from which the extent of such misrepresentation could be ascertained. Beare v. Wright [N. D.] 103 N. W. 632. The general rule will be satisfied if all the facts essential to a recovery which are controverted by the evidence are specially found in the verdict; so that the formal verdict may be sufficient, although it does not find separate facts which, although put in issue by the pleadings, were not controverted on the trial or were established by undisputed evidence. White v. Hines, 114 Mo. App. 122, 89 S. W. 349.

80. Where, in proceedings upon a writ entry, a special interrogatory is made as to whether the plaintiff's title is subject to an easement belonging to the defendant, a verdict of "Yes" without determining what part of the premises is subject to the easement, is insufficient. If the answer is "No," this will determine the controversy and will be sufficient. Nicholson v. Maine Cent. R. Co. [Me.] 61 A. 834.

81. Inland Steel Co. v. Smith [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 852.

82. Special verdict finding that services were requested by conduct need not set forth the conduct. Brown v. Ricketts, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 215. Probative facts or conclusions of law contained in the findings of a special verdict must be wholly disregarded by the court, when it comes to scrutinize the legal value of the facts found; and judgment will be granted only when determinative facts sufficient for its support remain, after the verdict has been stripped of all improper but an admission in the pleadings must prevail over a finding to the contrary by the jury.[85] The failure of the foreman of a jury to sign a special finding is not such an irregularity as to affect any substantial right of parties to the cause,[86] and it is not error for the court to refuse to require the jury to make a specific finding more definite when such answer would have the same legal effect.[87]

Interpretation and construction.[88]—An answer to a special interrogatory will be construed in light of the instruction of the court given in connection with the submission of such interrogatory.[89] The use of the word "opinion" by a jury in a special finding is equivalent to a deliberate conclusion and judgment by the jury upon the evidence of the case.[90] Issues not covered by a special verdict will be presumed to have been found so as to sustain the finding made.[91] So, also, where parties fail to prepare and request an appropriate charge submitting a special issue, such issue, if not submitted, should be resolved in favor of the judgment.[92] Instances of the construction of particular findings are collated in the notes.[93]

§ 4. Conflicts between verdicts and findings.[94] General verdict.[95]—A verdict in favor of the plaintiff which awards a grossly inadequate sum is inconsistent.[96] So, also, a verdict for the defendant upon a counterclaim that the plaintiff promised the defendant to pay him a certain sum is inconsistent with a verdict for nominal damages in favor of the defendant.[97] Where an inconsistent verdict is rendered, one of the inconsistent parts cannot be treated as surplusage where it does not appear that if the jury had known of the inconsistency they would have omitted that part and returned the other.[98]

General verdict and special findings.[99]—Where the special findings are in irreconcilable conflict with the general verdict, the former must control,[1] but it is only matter. Ginn v. Myrick, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 448.

83. In an action of debt on a penal bond, a finding for the plaintiff and assessment of damages is not a reversible error although the verdict should have stated the amount of the debt and damages. Pickett v. People, 114 Ill. App. 188.

Johnson v. St. Paul & W. Coal Co. [Wis.] 105 N. W. 1048. A finding in an action for injuries that "such injury" ought to have been "foreseen" by a person of ordinary care, construed to mean that such an injury or an injury of like nature must have been apprehended or considered probable. Coolidge v. Hallauer [Wis.] 105 N. W. 568. A finding that the defendant in a divorce suit was addressed by her husband by a certain name, and that the name of the defendant as given by the marriage certificate was different, but that no fraud was practised in respect to the name of the defendant, and that no one was misled as to such name, and that the person from whom the divorce was granted was the person named in the marriage certificate, construed to mean that the defendant was known by two names, within the rule that where a person is known by two names he may be sued by either one. App.] 75 N. E. 25. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 1408, c. 110, § 58c. Court of Honor v. Dinger [Ill.] 77 N. E. 557. Southern R. Co. v. Roach [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 606. Burns' Ann. St. § 556. Catterson v. Hall [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 889. One of the modes of testing the correctness of the general verdict is by facts specially found by answers to interrogatories. Therefore, if, when applying the facts so found by the jury to the facts which might have been proven under the issues, it clearly appears that the general verdict is based upon some other hypothesis or upon facts not within the issues, or the facts as specially found are inconsistent with or contradictory of material facts which must have been found to support the general verdict, in either case such verdict must yield, and the special findings control. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Fike [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 636. Where the plaintiff claims a certain item only on condition of the jury's finding in his favor upon a certain issue, a general verdict in his favor will not entitle him to such item where the finding is against him upon the special issue. Hildebrand v. Head [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 599, 88 S. W. 438.

General verdict overcome by special findings: Special findings held to show that servant assumed risk of employment, and hence general verdict in his favor could not stand. Bedford Quarries Co. v. Turner [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 25. Special findings held to show that defendant's servants were not guilty of negligence in blowing whistle while plaintiff was driving across track, and hence that a general verdict for plaintiff could not stand. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Fike [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 636. A special finding that the plaintiff was injured by the breaking of an axle was inconsistent with a general verdict based upon allegations of negligence in failure to inspect a wheel, and on account of defective cross ties, and running heavy trains over such defective track at a dangerous rate of speed. Southern R. Co. v. Roach [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 606. A finding that the deceased did not intentionally place himself against a certain piece of machinery and a finding that he did not come in contact with it by accident, are either inconsistent with each other or show that they were necessary by reason of an absence of evidence, and in either case they are inconsistent with a general verdict for the plaintiff. Stratton v. Nichols Lumber Co. [Wash.] 81 P. 831. A special finding that plaintiff by the exercise of reasonable care could have avoided the accident is irreconcilable with a general verdict of guilty. Miller v. Chicago City R. Co., 110 Ill. App. 195.

2. Union Traction Co. v. Sullivan [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 116; Lindley v. Kemp [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 798; Anderson v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 811; Cincinnati, L. & A. Elec. St. R. Co. v. Klump [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 869. Finding that plaintiff knew of a certain defect where it did not appear that he had such knowledge prior to the injury or of the danger. Henrietta Coal Co. v. Campbell, 112 Ill. App. 452. In order that a special finding shall control the general verdict, it must not only be inconsistent with it but they must be so irreconcilable that the conflict cannot be removed by any evidence admissible under the pleadings. Chicago City R. Co. v. White, 110 Ill. App. 23. A special finding that defendant's employe did not "willfully" injure plaintiff is not irreconcilable with a general verdict for plaintiff where the declaration contained counts of negligence. Id. Unless the answers to the interrogatories disclose facts so inconsistent with the general verdict that they cannot be reconciled with it under any conceivable state of facts provable under the issues, a motion for judgment upon the special verdict as against the general verdict will be denied. City of Jeffersonville v. Gray [Ind.] 74 N. E. 611.

General verdict not overcome: In action for injuries sustained while traveling with stock. Plaintiff was traveling in car with stock. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Teeters [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1014. General verdict as to contributory negligence of passenger. Union Traction Co. v. Sullivan [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 116. Special findings as to whether an arrest and imprisonment were justified held not to overthrow a general verdict for false imprisonment. White v. Madison [Okl.] 83 P. 798. In action for damages for conspiracy to defraud plaintiff of property. Lindley v. Kemp [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 798. In action by servant against employer for injuries, special findings held not to show contributory negligence or assumption of risk, as against general verdict for plaintiff. Inland Steel Co. v. Smith [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 852. Answers to special interrogatories in action against city for personal injuries, held not to show contributory negligence as against a general verdict in favor of the plaintiff. City of Jeffersonville v. Gray [Ind.] 74 N. E. 611. Special findings that the plaintiff was suffering with chronic laryngitis, but was in reasonably good health at the time his insurance policy was reinstated, held not inconsistent with a general verdict for the plaintiff. Court of Honor v. Dinger [Ill.] 77 N. E. 557. A finding that the accident was caused by a defective truck and by failure to make proper inspection was not inconsistent with an allegation that the accident was caused by the negligent operation of the train, so as to control a general verdict for plaintiff. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Bravard [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 899. Answers to special interrogatories held not to show that the debt for which the note sued on was given was not a partnership debt, as against a general verdict for plaintiff against defendants as partners. Anderson v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 811. Findings that a party who was killed while committing an assault was not so far under the influence of liquor as to be incapable of forming an intent, that he went to the place where the crime was committed for the purpose of committing it, and that he came to his death by his own wrongful act, held not inconsistent with a general verdict against the defendant for selling him the liquor, there being nothing in the special findings to indicate that the intent to commit the assault was formed by the deceased before he procured the liquor. Marswers, moreover, cannot be aided by presumptions,[3] while, on the other hand, every reasonable presumption must be indulged in favor of the general verdict,[4] and every reasonable hypothesis will be indulged for the purpose of reconciling the answers to special interrogatories with the general verdict of the jury;[5] but these presumptions must be confined to, and the jury's range of facts supporting such verdict must be found within, the facts properly provable under the issues.[6]

The failure of the jury to answer special interrogatories does not necessarily prevent a judgment from being entered upon a general verdict.[7] And where, upon exceptions to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the answer to proper interrogatories, it appears that any possible answers supposable would not necessarily have produced a material conflict with the general verdict, the exceptions will not be sustained.[8] Where special findings are inconsistent with the general verdict, but no complaint is made on this account in the lower court, and the action of the court in failing to enter judgment on the special findings is not complained of on appeal, the inconsistency in the findings is immaterial.[9]

Between special findings.[10]—In determining whether there is such a conflict the answers to the special interrogatories must be considered together.[11] Inconsistency in the answers to special interrogatories will not affect the general verdict.[12] And where the findings are contradictory or irreconcilable, the defeated party is entitled to the benefit of those most favorable to himself.[13] Particular findings construed with view of ascertaining whether they were in conflict will be found in the notes.[14]

tin v. Fisher [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 8, 107 N. W. 86. Where a deed claimed to have been executed in consideration of services rendered by the grantee is set aside by a verdict on the ground of want of mental capacity, a special finding in favor of the defendant as to the value of services alleged to have been rendered by him, could not, at the instance of the defendant, overcome the general verdict. Parker v. Ballard, 123 Ga. 441, 51 S. E. 465. In an action by a passenger against a railroad company to recover for injuries which it was claimed were caused by the negligence of the company in starting its train without giving him sufficient time to get off in safety, where the jury found generally for the plaintiff, a special finding that the train stopped the usual and ordinary length of time did not warrant the court in rendering judgment for the railroad company non obstante veredicto. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wimmer [Kan.] 84 P. 378. A general verdict in a suit to quiet title which found that plaintiff's father purchased the property, paid a part of the consideration, had it conveyed to a trustee for himself and his heirs, but without intent to hinder or delay his creditors, and that after the death of plaintiff's father his widow procured the trustee to convey the property to her without consideration and that one of the defendants procured her to convey the property to him without consideration, and that such defendant knew that the property was held in trust, answers to special interrogatories that defendant did not know of the trust and that the jury did not know from the evidence whether plaintiff's father had any intention to defraud his creditors, did not overcome the general verdict. Catterson v. Hall [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 889. In order to justify a judgment on the special findings notwithstanding the general verdict, the answers must make a case of such antagonism on some vital point as cannot be removed by any evidence admissible under the pleadings. App.] 76 N. E. 798; Anderson v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 811. The general verdict covers all the issues in the case, and cannot be overthrown by findings of fact returned by the jury in answer to interrogatories, unless, after being re-enforced by the assumed proof of all favorable facts provable under the issues and all natural inferences arising from such facts, such verdict, in its relation to such special findings, is so incompatible and contradictory in some material point that both cannot possibly be true. § 5. Separate verdict as to different counts, causes of action, or parties.[15]—Where a complaint states two causes of action, and there is no evidence to support a verdict on one of the causes, a general verdict for the plaintiff is erroneous.[16] But a general verdict for a joint sum upon two causes of action tried as one will not be disturbed in the absence of proper objection in the trial court.[17] Nor will the failure of the verdict to dispose of one of the counts in the declaration be fatal, where the court grants a nonsuit as to such count.[18] A verdict "in favor of the plaintiff," in an action against two defendants, is a verdict against both defendants.[19] And in action against two defendants, a verdict against one defendant, without any finding as to the other, constitutes a mistrial;[20] but a finding, in such an action, that only one defendant is liable, is not outside of the issues, and will sustain a judgment against such defendant.[21] A separate verdict against one defendant alone cannot be sustained, however, where the gist of the action is an unlawful combination between two defendants.[22] So, also, where, in action against corporation and its servant, based solely upon negligence of the servant, a verdict exonerating the servant from negligence also exonerates the corporation.[23]

§ 6. Submission to jury, rendition, and return.[24]—The submission of issues of fact to a jury in an equitabde action is within the discretion of a trial court.[25] So, also, the trial court may submit issues separately.[26] The presumption is in favor of the proper submission of the issues;[27] but comments by the court upon submitting

14. A finding that the plaintiff knew certain facts in connection with his employment and ought to have known the danger resulting therefrom was inconsistent with a finding that he was not guilty of contributory negligence, assumption of risk being only a form of contributory negligence. Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co. [Wis.] 106 N. W. 1077. Findings that the plaintiff ought to have known of the danger which resulted in his injury, but that the defendant, his employer, ought not to have known of such danger, were inconsistent. Id. Where the jury found that the true consideration of a note which was acquired by the plaintiff was $300, but also found that the plaintiff had no knowledge when he acquired the note that its consideration was less than the amount stated on its face, which was $750, and that the plaintiff took the note upon representation that the amount for which the defendant was liable was stated on the face of the note, such findings were sufficient to sustain a judgment for the face value of the note. 16. Barfield v. Coker & Co. [S. C.] 53 S. E. 170.

17. When two causes of action against a defendant in favor of different plaintiffs are tried at one time as a result of the failure of the defendant to raise the objection to the misjoinder of the causes of action at a proper time, and a verdict for one sum in favor of both plaintiffs is rendered, and no objection is raised at the time the verdict is received, the irregularity in the form of the verdict is no sufficient reason for granting a new trial. The payment of the verdict as rendered to the parties jointly, or to their attorney of record, will discharge the defendant from liability to both of them on account of all matters alleged in the petition. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Tice [Ga.] 52 S. E. 916.

18. Where a petition contained two counts, and the jury was instructed to find for the defendant on one count, a verdict for the plaintiff on the other count, without any finding for the defendant on the other count, will be upheld, the instruction of the court being equivalent to a nonsuit as to the cause of action stated in the count referred to in such instruction. Mitchell v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 111.

21. Heinrich v. Heinrich [Cal. App.] 84 P. 326.

22. The defendant against whom no verdict was returned having had an entry of judgment made in his favor without the knowledge of the court, a subsequent order of the court setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial, upon a motion of the other defendant, operated to set aside the verdict as to both defendants and to grant a new trial as to both. Evans v. Freeman, 140 F. 419.

23. Stevick v. Northern Pac. R. Co [Wash.] 81 P. 999.

24. See 4 C. L. 1808.

25. Cochran v. Cochran [Minn.] 105 N. W. 135.

26. Lebensberger v. Scofield [C. C. A.] 139 F. 380.

27. In the absence of any showing in the record as to what questions were submitted to the jury or what the jury found, the appellate court will assume that the issues were properly submitted and that the

to a special inquiry may amount to taking the question away from the jury.[28] The court, in submitting special interrogatories, should not intimate to the jury the legal effect of their answers.[29] An instruction as to the form of the verdict, however, is permissible.[30] Admonitions as to the conduct of the jury upon separation need not be repeated after the submission.[31] The rights of the parties are to be determined as they existed at the time of the submission of the case to the jury, and neither party, therefore, is entitled to have notice or be present at the time of the signing and filing of the findings.[32] Nor will the fact that one of the parties is insane at the time the verdict is returned affect the validity of the verdict.[33] The absence of the trial justice and the jury when the verdict is received is a mere irregularity which the parties may waive.[34]

§ 7. Amendment and correction.[35]—The verdict of a jury in a suit in chancery is merely advisory.[36] Until judgment, the verdict is under the control of the court by virtue of common-law powers.[37] Where it appears during trial for a joint tort that one of the defendants is a minor, a nolle prosequi may be entered as to him after verdict.[38] Clerical[39] but not substantial errors[40] may be corrected, and matters appearing by record may be supplied.[41] There has been some modification as to jury heeded the instructions. Kinney v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen [N. D.] 106 N. W. 44.

29. Meyer v. Home Ins. Co. [Wis.] 106 N. W. 1087. In such case the special verdict should be rendered by the jury entirely uninfluenced as to the final result of applications of the law as to the facts, and hence the instructions should be confined to an explanation of the questions of the special verdict, without informing the jury of the legal effect of their answers to the questions. Van De Bogart v. Marinette & Menominee Paper Co. [Wis.] 106 N. W. 805.

30. A communication by telephone from the judge to the jury as to the form of their verdict is not fatal error. Whitney v. Com. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 516.

31. Where the jury, upon submission of civil case, are told that if they have not reached an agreement within an hour they may then separate for a definite period, and at the same time are given the statutory admonition with regard to their conduct during such separation, it is not necessary that the admonition be repeated before the separation actually takes place. Fields v. Dewitt [Kan.] 81 P. 467. Where, upon the submission of a civil case, the jury are instructed regarding their duties during any separation that may take place before their deliberations are concluded, and the attorneys for both parties afterwards assent to a proposal made by the court that the jury be permitted to separate for a definite time, the proposal being made under such circumstances and stated in such terms that the court is justified in understanding that the attorneys consent to the jury's being dismissed by the bailiff in the absence of the judge, the objection that the jury were not given an additional admonition before such separation is not available on review. 35. See 4 C. L. 1810.

36. Bird v. Bird, 218 Ill. 158, 75 N. E. 760. Where the verdict of a jury in an equitable action found in favor of one of the parties, and added that each party pay one-half of the cost of suit, and no special exception was made to that part of the verdict, or reference made to it in the brief of counsel, the appellate court will treat it as being a mere recommendation to the presiding judge, which he may or may not follow in his discretion. Strickland v. Hutchinson, 123 Ga. 396, 51 S. E. 348.

37. May refuse judgment or set aside the verdict for any reason which appeals to his judicial discretion. Conrath v. Border, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 15.

38. Verdict will stand as to the others. Crane v. Lynch, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 565.

39. A mistake in filling in blanks furnished to the jury for their verdict may be corrected after the return of the verdict to the court. Whitney v. Com. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 516.

40. Where the defects in a verdict as to description of land are substantial and not merely formal, the verdict cannot be amended. Where the defects are such that the intention of the jury would have to be guessed at, no amendment can be made. Stephens v. Gunzenhauser, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 417.

41. Where in an action of debt the verdict is for the plaintiff and assesses the damages but fails to state the amount of the debt, the court may amend by inserting the proper amount. Koehler v. King, 119 Ill. App. 6. Where in an action by the vendor to recover possession of real estate for default in payment the verdict fails to state

a venire de novo in the case of special verdicts, but the old rule remains the same as to a general verdict, and all the defects in the verdict which are apparent upon the face of the record may be corrected by a venire de novo.[42] Motions to modify, strike out, or add to a verdict are improper.[43] But when a jury returns a verdict which is incomplete on account of failure to embrace therein a finding on a material issue, it is not error for the court to call the attention of the jury to the fact and require them to return to their room and complete the verdict.[44] An agreement between the parties empowering the judge to sign the judgment after adjournment of the term will not authorize him to hear and determine a motion to set aside the verdict after such adjournment.[45]

§ 8. Recording, entry, and effect of verdict; impeachment.[46]—Defects in pleading may be cured by the findings.[47] A verdict will not be disturbed unless it is plainly erroneous.[48] Where the evidence upon which the verdict is based is conflicting[49] or where there is substantial evidence to support it, the verdict is conclusive of the facts found thereby.[50] A ruling of the court, therefore, which ignores an adverse finding of the jury is erroneous.[51] But the question as to whether there is any evidence to support the verdict proper to be submitted to the jury is a question of law or legal inference upon which an appellate court must pass,[52] and a verdict against unimpeached and conclusive evidence will not be allowed to stand.[53] There is a distinction, however, between the points of view from which the question of the suffiamount due complainants, the court may amend the verdict by including the proper amount. Gould v. Young [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 60, 107 N. W. 281.

42. Such remedy is available where the verdict on its face is so uncertain, ambiguous or defective that no judgment can be rendered thereon, or where the damages are not assessed on account of some material omission. Douglas v. Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co. [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 892.

43. Where any or all of the facts found are not sustained by sufficient evidence, or are contrary to law, or when facts should have been found, but were not, the proper remedy is a motion for a new trial. Tyler v. Davis [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 3.

53. Dinan v. Supreme Council Catholic Mut. Ass'n [Pa.] 62 A. 1067. Where the jury is instructed that the plaintiff is required to establish a certain fact in order to entitle her to a verdict and there is no evidence tending to establish that fact, a verdict in plaintiff's favor will be set aside. Shoemaker v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. [Neb.] 106 N. W. 316. The verdict of the jury will be set aside when clearly conciency of the evidence will be regarded by a trial and an appellate court.[54] A verdict or other finding not followed by a judgment will not serve as an estoppel by res judicata.[55] Nor will a party be bound by answers to special interrogatories submitted by him, where there is no evidence to support such answers, where he challenges the sufficiency of the evidence both at the close of the plaintiff's testimony and at the close of all the testimony.[56] In a civil case, the affidavits of the jurors cannot be used as evidence to impeach their verdict,[57] nor can a verdict be impeached by written statements of several jurors that they did not fully understand the issues and the legal effect of their findings;[58] but the affidavits of the jurors may be received to support their verdict,[59] especially when such affidavits relate to extrinsic matters that do not pertain to the deliberations of the jury.[60]

§ 9. Finding by court or referee.[61] Referee.[62]—A reference may be had to a court commissioner to determine questions the determination of which is necessary to carrying out the decree.[63]

Findings by the court.[64]—In civil cases the court is authorized by statute to try cases without a jury where it is so agreed between the parties.[65] And in actions at law, where the case is submitted to the court without a jury, it is the duty of the court to make findings of fact.[66] Such findings constitute the real basis of the judgment,[67] and are just as essential, if properly requested, in an action at law when the same is dismissed, as where an affirmative judgment is entered.[68] But findings of fact, however, are not necessary in equitable actions,[69] nor where judgment is entered upon a stipulation,[70] nor where the case is submitted upon an agreed statement of facts,[71] nor where no request is made for such findings.[72] A demand for additional trary to the evidence, and the supreme court will, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction over the law and the facts, render a final judgment on the merits of the cause. Gomez v. Tracey [La.] 40 So. 234. See Appeal and Review, 5 C. L. 121.

54. It is the duty of a trial judge to set aside the verdict of a jury unless he is satisfied that substantial justice has been done. An appellate court should not set aside a verdict unless it is manifest that injustice has been done. Linderman v. Nolan [Okl.] 83 P. 796. See Appeal and Review, 5 C. L. 121; New Trial and Arrest of Judgment, 4 C. L. 810. Where one of the grounds of a new trial is that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence, but the court does not declare upon which ground the motion is granted, the evidence being conflicting, the appellate court will not review the order granting a new trial. 71. Although findings of fact are not necessary where the case is submitted upon agreed statement of facts, the court may findings of fact is in ample time if made before judgment is rendered on the findings already made.[73] In New York the court is not required to note on the margin of a request for findings of fact and conclusions of law what disposition he made of them.[74]

What may or what must be found.[75]—The findings of the court should cover all the material issues,[76] and must not leave any of the facts to be presumed or to be supplied by intendment, but must state all the facts which are deemed material, so that the court will have nothing further to do but to declare the law upon the subject.[77] The findings should be of the ultimate facts and not of the evidentiary facts.[78] Evidentiary facts need not and should not be found,[79] nor is it necessary to make findings upon matters not raised by the pleadings,[80] nor as to matters admitted by the pleadings,[81] nor upon matters which are fully covered by the findings made,[82] nor upon issues as to which there is no evidence,[83] nor as to immaterial matters.[84] So, where the action is dismissed as to one of the defendants, no findings are

In a law case the appellate court cannot make findings of fact or draw deductions from such findings, or treat as found that which might have been found. Mitchell v. Jensen [Utah] 81 P. 165. The appellate court cannot look to the pleading to determine the facts which should have been stated in the special findings. Union Inv. Co. v. McKinney [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1001. Failure of the court to make any finding upon an issue of res judicata is fatal error where a finding upon such issue might have changed the decision. Societa di Mutuo Socorso v. Mantel [Cal. Where a special finding is silent as to a fact the existence of which is necessary to plaintiff's case, the presumption is that the facts were not established by the evidence and is equivalent to a finding upon that point against such party. Mitchell v. Jensen [Utah] 81 P. 165. The court in entering a judgment of dismissal for want of service, should find the facts on which its action is based, and not merely that all the facts set out in the several affidavits are true. 83. Glassell v. Glassell, 147 Cal. 510, 82 P. 42. A judgment will not be reversed or a new trial granted for want of a finding upon an issue raised by allegations of an affirmative defense or made by a cross complaint, where there is no evidence in relation to such issue, and even where the record does not show the evidence given on a trial, it will not be presumed against the correctness of the judgment that any such evidence was given. Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 82 P. 66.

necessary as to him.[85] In other words, the general rule will be satisfied if all the facts essential to a recovery which are controverted by the evidence are specially found, although there is no finding as to separate facts which, although put in issue by the pleadings, were not controverted on the trial, or are established by the undisputed evidence.[86] A party cannot complain of the failure to find the facts in the absence of a request for such findings.[87] So also, where the court omits to find in regard to a disputed item, but the respondent, upon argument, confesses the error and files a written release to the extent of such item, the error is cured.[88] In the absence of a showing to the contrary, the necessary findings to support the judgment will be presumed.[89]

The finding should be[90] stated separately from the conclusions of law.[91] So also, it is held in some states that in equity the findings of fact and law should be expressed in separate and numbered paragraphs so as to present each one independently and distinctly.[92] But it is held, on the other hand, that the statutory rule that the findings of fact and conclusions of law must be separately stated applies only to actions at law tried without a jury, and not to equitable or probate proceedings.[93] A finding of fact is none the less a finding of fact though stated as a conclusion of law.[94] Findings should never be put in the form of a résumé of the evidence, nor should findings include matters of argument in support of the conclusions.[95] A finding must be of the facts themselves and not of the legal conclusion drawn from them.[96] Findings stated in the same form as in the pleadings are sufficient.[97] The trial court is not required to paragraph and number special findings.[98] Findings must be responsive to the issues,[99] and must be definite and certain.[1] Where the finding upon one issue necessarily defeats a cause of action, it is not necessary to make findings upon the other issues,[2] and where two separate defenses present a single issue of fact, one finding will suffice.[3] A finding which substantially conforms to the allegations of the complaint which are expressly admitted by the answers is sufficient.[4] So also, special findings which follow the theory of the complaint and substantially find all the material facts disclosed by the evidence are sufficient.[5]

Interpretation and construction.[6]—A finding of facts made by the court is in the nature of a special verdict, but is not considered so critically as a special verdict. Its sufficiency, however, is determined by the same general rules.[7] No inferences or intendments are allowed in the aid of special findings;[8] but findings of a trial court are to receive such construction as will uphold rather than defeat the judgment,[9] and facts will be presumed in support of a finding when their existence may be legally presumed from facts which are found, otherwise the presumption will not be made.[10] A general finding includes a finding upon all the issues in favor of the party for whom it is made;[11] but a special finding will control as against a general finding where there is a conflict.[12] On the other hand, the special findings may be supported

A statement in the opinion of the trial court in a suit to restrain the operation of a foundry, that the foundry had been owned and operated for more than twenty years, was sufficient under evidence showing that the foundry had been operated since 1872. Over v. Dehne [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 664. A finding that defendant was wrongfully constructing a ditch across plaintiff's premises was a sufficient finding that the plaintiff was deprived of the free use and possession of his property without right, and would be permanently deprived thereof, so as to sustain an injunction. by the general finding.[13] Special findings which seem to be contradictory should be reconciled when it can be reasonably done,[14] and where there is a conflict between two special findings, the one which supports the general finding or the judgment will control.[15] The statement of facts in a general finding does not transform it into a special finding.[16] Surplus findings will be disregarded;[17] and so also findings of facts admitted by the pleadings.[18] Particular findings which have been construed are collated in the notes.[18a]

Signing, filing, and entering.[19]—It will be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary that findings of fact and conclusions of law were made and filed as required by statute.[20] The opinion of the court setting out both the facts and conclusions of law upon which the decree is based is informal, but sufficient, though no other findings were filed in the lower court.[21] In proceedings on claims against the United States the court must file its written opinion setting out both the specific findings of fact and the conclusions of law.[22]

a certain number of years if there should be a default, the reserve of the policy should be applied to continue the policy, a finding that the replication to the plea to such count was not sustained by the evidence, was not a finding that there was no guarantee fund applicable to the extension of the insurance, so as to control a general finding in favor of the plaintiff. 17. If the special findings, taken as a whole, when stripped of all extraneous matters, such as facts not sustained by sufficient evidence, without the issue, and contrary to law and legal conclusions, still contain facts properly found within the issues, upon sufficient evidence upon which to predicate the conclusions of law, such conclusions will be upheld and the surplus findings disregarded. Major v. Miller [Ind.] 75 N. E. 159. Where the court, after making a general finding as to the amount of damages, itemized the damages, such itemized findings were treated as surplusage, and hence the contention that the demands were not supported by the evidence could not be sustained. In an action by a tenant who had never had possession, but who had paid rent to the defendant, wherein the plaintiff claimed that the lease was to be surrendered as soon as the defendant found a new tenant, and the defendant claimed that the plaintiff was bound for one month whether he occupied the premises or not, a finding that the premises were empty for one week from the beginning of the term, was equivalent to a finding that the new tenant's rent began to run after the expiration of such week. Fallis v. Gray [Mo. App.] 91 S. W. 175. A special finding that the director of public works "then determined that Chapel street pavement should be replaced" and "the city authorities then decided that these brick pavements required repairs," means that it was decided that the street was out of repair and not that repairs should commence then. City of New Haven v. Eastern Pav. Brick Co. [Conn.] 63 A. 517. A finding, in suit to set aside a mortgage as fraudulent, that the mortgagor was insolvent at the time the suit was brought did not raise a presumption of insolvency prior to that time. Dinius v. Lahr [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1033. A finding, in a suit to set a mortgage aside as fraudulent, that the mortgagee took the same with full knowledge of the claims of the plaintiff and other creditors and that the mortgage would render the mortgagor insolvent, was not a finding that the execution of the mortgage on the day thereof left the mortgagor insolvent and without property sufficient to save plaintiff's claim. Dinius v. Lahr [Ind. App.] 74 N. E. 1033. In action for breach of a contract to purchase a lien on condition that such lien was the "first claim" against certain property, a finding that certain taxes were prior "claims," was a sufficient finding upon the question as to whether the lien was the first claim, such finding being equivalent to a finding that the taxes constituted a "claim" within the meaning of the contract. Dodson v. Crocker [S. D.] 105 N. W. 929. A finding that the residence of a party is not at a particular place is a finding of fact, and not a conclusion of law. Pillsbury v. Streeter, Jr. Co. [N. D.] 107 N. W. 40. As to whether a finding is of law or of fact, see ante this section, The findings must be; and post, this section, Conclusions of law. As to construction of findings with a view of ascertaining whether they are sufficiently definite and certain, see ante this section, The findings must be.

The amendment of findings.[23]—Motions to modify findings and to find additional facts will not be considered.[24]

The effect of the findings.[25]—The findings of a court of law in a case tried without a jury have the conclusive effect of a verdict,[26] and will not be disturbed unless plainly erroneous.[27] Such findings will not be disturbed when there is evidence to support them,[28] nor where the evidence is conflicting.[29] The conclusiveness of the findings will not be affected by the incorporation therein of the evidence upon which such findings are based.[30]

Conclusions of law.[31]—It is the duty of the trial court to make conclusions of law,[32] and such conclusions are just as necessary in an action at law which is dismissed as where an affirmative judgment is entered;[33] but conclusions of law are not necessary in equitable actions;[34] nor will a judgment be reversed for want of conclusions of law in the absence of any request therefor.[35] The conclusions of law should not contain matters of argument in support thereof.[36] But they should be within the issues,[37] and should be stated separately from the findings of fact;[38] but where a conclusion of law is placed among the findings of fact, it does not lose its character as a conclusion of law.[39]

39. Conclusion as to statute of limitations. Towle v. Sweeney [Cal. App.] 83 P. 74. Where the court ruled and found as a matter of law that, upon the facts stated in the report of the case, the respondent had no right of way over any portion of the petitioner's land, the appellate court construed

Where there is a conflict between the conclusions of law and the judgment, the latter will control, being based upon the findings of fact, and not upon the conclusions of law.[40] But an appellate court which is limited in the scope of its review to questions of law will not reverse a judgment because it is based upon a mixed question of law and fact, where the conclusion of law is legally inferable from the facts proven.[41] The sufficiency of the evidence may be reserved as a question of law.[42]

Propositions of law under the Illinois practice are proper only in cases where the parties are entitled to a trial by jury and have waived it;[43] nor are they proper when the case is disposed of without trial.[44] Propositions of law neither granted nor refused are considered as refused.[45]

§ 10. Objections and exceptions.[46]—Exceptions to the findings or judgment are necessary except where errors of law appear on face of record.[47] Where no objection is made that the verdict is too indefinite to support the judgment, the question can be raised on appeal.[48] So, where no exceptions are taken to any of the court's conclusions of law on the special findings, such conclusion will not be reviewed on appeal.[49] An objection that the judgment does not conform to the verdict is a matter for motion in the lower court and cannot be made for the first time on appeal.[50] Exceptions to findings or failure to find must specify the particular finding that was made or refused concerning which the exceptions are taken,[51] and the appellate court will consider only such objections to the special findings as are particularly specified in the appellant's motion for a new trial.[52] Nor will the appellate court consider a ruling denying a motion to set a verdict aside, in the absence of exceptions to such ruling.[53] So also where no objection is made below on account of failure to make findings of fact and conclusions of law, the judgment will not be reversed on account of such failure.[54] Where the special findings recite the facts alleged in a pleading and an exception is taken to the conclusion of law, the appellate court will not pass directly upon the sufficiency of the pleading.[55] Where the case is tried by the court, special findings of fact made, conclusions of law stated on the findings, and judgment is entered in accordance with the findings and conclusions, the only question before the appellate court is the correctness of a conclusion of law.[56] The appellate court will not determine what might have been the effect of submitting the case upon a theory different from that upon which it was submitted.[57] The phrase "special verdict," as used in the praecipe and in the clerk's certificate to the transcript, is a sufficient designation of the answers to the interrogatories referred to by a statute, providing for the submission of special interrogatories.[58]

VERIFICATION.

Necessity.[59]—A statute which requires each pleading subsequent to a verified pleading to be verified implies that where a pleading is unverified, subsequent pleadings need not be,[60] but lack of verification when required may in some states confess the facts pleaded in the complaint.[61] By statute in some states if the instrument sued on is set out, specific verified denial is necessary to put the genuineness and execution thereof in issue, otherwise it is admitted.[62] Not even waiver of answer under oath will dispense with the necessity of verified denial of execution of instrument set out.[63] The statute requiring denial under oath of execution of instrument set up, applies equally to instruments set up in defense,[64] and the statute providing that special matters of defense need not be denied does not dispense with denial under oath when the defense is founded on a writing whose execution is questioned.[65] But the execution of an instrument sued on need not be denied under oath to avoid it for fraud, duress, mistake, or the like.[66]

In equity.[67]—Ordinarily where the original bill is verified, the amendment should also be.[68] However, the rule requiring verification of amendments is not a rigid and unbending one.[69] Answer to a bill praying for an injunction, to be given effect, must be made under oath.[70]

verification where the pleading denies having any information on which to ground a belief.[72] It is no objection to a verification that it employs the phrase "stated to be alleged upon information and belief" instead of "stated upon information and belief."[73]

By whom.[74]—Ordinarily a verification must be made by the party in action himself.[75] Probably a joint plea should be verified by all the defendants in whose behalf it is filed.[76] There are also authorities to the effect that where the defendants are united in interest a joint pleading in behalf of such defendants need be verified by only one of them.[77] Certainly where a complaint is of such a nature as to affect each defendant separately, the answer should be verified by all.[78] But when it is unduly expensive or inconvenient or impracticable to procure verification of all the defendants and such fact is made to appear, the court may allow a joint plea to be verified by less than all the defendants.[79] A verification of an answer to a rule to show cause must be made by the claimant himself or the reason why made by another for him fully set forth.[80] An attorney may verify a pleading for his client,[81] and if so stated the same verification may be for himself as a party.[82] A reason why the attorney verifies is sufficiently apparent in a statement that the client is absent.[83] The attorney must verify of his own knowledge,[84] and he must so state.[85] Where a verification by an attorney is positive and not upon information and belief, his knowledge of the facts will be presumed without being specifically set forth in the affidavit, especially when the averments of the bill are direct and positive.[86] In many of the states, an officer of the corporation may verify for the corporation.[87]

Defects, objections, and amendments; waiver.[88]—A defective verification may be cured by leave of court.[89] A pleading, defectively verified, may, after notice, be treated as a nullity.[90] Where a plea is verified by a part of the defendants, the technically proper course is to take a decree pro confesso as to the remainder.[91] After setting a plea down for argument, it is more proper to allow a defective verification to be amended than to permit a waiver to be disregarded and a decree pro confesso taken.[92] In the Federal courts, the great weight of authority is that objection to the omission of verification may be waived.[93] Want of verification will be deemed waived, unless objection is made to the pleading at the proper time.[94] Setting down a plea for argument waived objection to form of verification.[95]

WAR.[96]

WAREHOUSING AND DEPOSITS.[97]

Definitions and elements.[98]—A warehouse is a place for storage of goods for hire.[99] It may be such though used for other purposes too.[1] An actual warehouse is not essential to the warehousing of goods.[2] They may be warehoused upon a parcel of ground, inclosed, or open, or partly so.[3] They may even be warehoused upon the owner's premises and without changing their location thereon from what it was before.[4] The only thing essential is that their possession be changed from that of their owner to that of the warehouseman,[5] and the test of a change of possession is whether the warehouseman has acquired exclusive control thereof.[6] To acquire exclusive control it is not necessary to place goods warehoused under lock and key. To place someone in custody who alone exerts control over them and prevents others from interfering with them is sufficient.[7] When there is conscious control, the intent to exclude and the exclusion of others, with access to the place of custody as of right, there are all the elements of possession in the fullest sense.[8] Even if the goods had been in a place under the exclusive control of the warehouse without its knowledge, they would still have been under its control.[9] However, though all the forms indicate a warehouse bailment, by a different understanding, a different relation would be created;[10] and certainly exclusive power of the warehouseman may so taper down that as a matter of law there finally would be no bailment.[11] A garage for automobiles is not a warehouse so as to give its keeper a lien on automobiles kept, for the reason that the possession of the automobiles is not exclusive and continuous.[12] Although the motive for warehousing may be for conveniences of pledging rather than storage it does not invalidate acts otherwise sufficient to constitute a warehousing.[13]

A "public" warehouse must be publicly advertised and serve the public at large.[14] Where a company holds itself out as a public warehousing concern, but has no local office or sign, no storage room exclusively its own, no regular agents except the employes of its depositors, and where the goods and premises are liable to be surrendered any time on surrender of receipts, no public warehouse exists.[15] The business of carrying on a warehouse is a part of the general commercial business of the country which may be carried on by corporations.[16]

Licensing and public regulation.[17]—Although a warehouse company fails to pay a statutory tax, it does not invalidate the receipts issued nor the contracts entered into.[18]

Warehouse receipts.[19]—Apart from statute, a warehouse receipt simply imports that the goods are in the hands of a certain kind of bailee.[20] The object of storing goods and accepting a warehouse receipt in lieu thereof is that the owners of the goods so deposited may have some evidence of ownership easily and readily negotiable.[21] An agent may issue receipts for his own goods if known and approved by his superior.[22] Bills of lading and warehouse receipts are not negotiable in the same sense that bills and notes are, but their delivery with or without indorsement is constructive delivery of the property,[23] and the receipt by a public warehouseman on his own goods is just as negotiable as the receipt on the goods of a third person.[24] If the warehouse company has no possession of the goods, its receipts for them are nullities as against the real owners of the goods.[25] Hence, warehouse receipts are only quasi

Laws 1860, c. 340, p. 346 (Amended c. 73, p. 96, Laws 1863), confers negotiability on warehouse receipts given for goods deposited with any warehouseman, wharfinger, vessel, boat, railroad company, or other person. Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand [C. C. A.] 143 F. 32.

24. By statute in Wisconsin. Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand [C. C. A.] 143 F. 32. In Wisconsin, by statute, an owner of grain and other named commodities can store them negotiable securities, and the fact that a person takes a transfer of them in good faith gives him no right over the property on which they purport to be issued, if in fact the warehouseman had no custody or control over the property at the time of their issuance,[26] and in some states a warehouseman is forbidden by statute[27] to issue receipts for goods not bona fide received in store.[28] Under the laws of some states the negotiability and commercial value of such receipts is enhanced by the fact that they are incontestable by the warehouse company,[29] for the warehouseman is estopped to deny the actual receipt and possession of the goods represented by said receipt,[30] nor is he permitted to make any offset, claim or demand against a negotiable receipt when called on to deliver the goods, other than is expressed on the face of the receipt.[31]

The legal holder of warehouse receipts is the person entitled to possession of the goods whether he is the owner or not.[32] The transfer of a warehouse receipt in pledge is not a symbolical delivery, it is a real delivery, to the same extent as if the goods had been transported to another warehouse named by the pledgee.[33] Therefore it is common for warehousemen to give receipts to the order of the depositor, because by a receipt in that form the bailee assents in advance to becoming bailee for one who is brought within the terms of the receipt by an indorsement of the same.[34]

Contracts of warehousing in general.—In construing a parol contract for the care of goods by a warehouseman, it is proper to consider not only what was said but also what was done.[35]

Where a wife deposits her household goods in her husband's name, the warehouseman having no knowledge of her ownership is justified in treating them as belonging to her husband.[36]

Care and protection of goods stored.[37]—A warehouseman is bound only to the use of ordinary care[38] commensurate with the warehouseman's knowledge of the goods stored.[39] This requires the placing of goods in a proper and suitable place and the exercise of ordinary diligence and care in protecting from injury by the weather or in his own elevator or storehouse and issue receipts on them. Id. In Wisconsin, one not the owner of a public warehouse (except a grain owner) cannot obtain a negotiable receipt for his goods, except by taking them to a public warehouse. Id.

other causes.[40] Where there was a contract to store goods and prevent them from freezing, the fact that an employe of the depositor, having no authority, approved of the place of storage does not relieve the depositee,[41] and where it had notice that funds deposited with it by an administrator were so deposited by order of the court, it had sufficient notice to render it liable for the unauthorized payment of the funds.[42] Whether the owner of goods had such opportunity to become acquainted with the condition of storage in a warehouse as to charge him with notice is a question for the jury.[43] A safety deposit company is required at all times to exercise that degree of care which a prudent person would exercise to prevent unauthorized third persons from having access to boxes in vaults.[44]

Insurance.[45]

Damages.[46]

Charges and lien therefor.[47]—At common law a warehouseman has a lien on the goods for storage,[48] but, in the absence of a statute, he had no right to sell them, but only to hold them until the charges were paid.[49] Where a general provision grants a warehouseman the right of sale for charges and later a special law is enacted defining the rights of the depositor and warehouseman much more accurately and in some of its provisions repugnant to the former, the general provision is repealed by implication.[50] A bailee (warehouseman) asserting a lien for charges has technical possession of the goods.[51]

Trover and conversion.[52]—The owner of deposited goods may maintain an action for trover notwithstanding that they were deposited in another person's name.[53] If goods are attached in a warehouseman's hands he is bound to keep them as trustee and he could not be deemed guilty of conversion for so doing,[54] and if articles stored with warehousemen are so stored that he cannot separate the articles exempt under an attachment from the leviable ones he is not at fault for refusing to deliver the exempt property to the owner.[55] But it would not excuse him from delivering articles having a separate identity and easily distinguishable, which were clearly exempt from attachment.[56] Where the evidence discloses a demand by the owner of goods for them and an unreasonable delay by the warehouseman in delivering them, an action in conversion will lie.[57] It has been held, however, that a bailee,

50. Stoddard v. Crocker [Me.] 62 A. 241. Rev. St. 1883, c. 91, is broad enough to authorize sale for lien of warehouseman; under it, sale may be made at any time. It is the general provision and hence is repealed by Laws 1897, c. 304, and Revision 1903, c. 33, § 10, which authorizes a public warehouseman to sell goods held for storage, but only after one year has elapsed from last payment, being a specific provision. such as a warehouseman, of property to which there are adverse claimants might refuse to deliver the same for such reasonable time as will enable him in good faith to investigate the facts as to the real ownership.[58] Statutory conditions relied upon to exempt a warehouseman from a suit in replevin or conversion must be set forth in his answer in order to give him the benefit of them.[59] Whenever a demand is necessary to create a cause of action against a warehouseman for conversion, the demand must be reasonably made before limitation has run.[60]

Actions and procedure.[61]—The owners of goods may sue a railroad company through whose negligence the goods are burned in a warehouse, though the owners were stockholders of the warehouse corporation which had waived all claim for damages from destruction of warehouse by the acts of the railroad.[62] A law which relieves warehousemen from actions in replevin and conversion unless they claim some other interest in property than a lien for charges is unconstitutional.[63]

Crimes and penalties.[64]—In some states the issuance of a fraudulent receipt is a crime.[65] Where a statute makes it a crime to issue a warehouse receipt fraudulently without naming the crime, a general description of the offense in the indictment is sufficient.[66]

WARRANTS; WARRANTY, see latest topical index.

WASTE.[67]

Waste consists[68] in whatever does a lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance.[69] A lease of the superficies of the soil does not include minerals and their removal would be waste.[70] The right of estovers is part of the common law of Iowa[71] and is incident to a mere lease of farm land.[72] The cutting of trees is not permissible as estovers of house bote unless the trees are such and the local custom such as to sanction that use of them[73] but dead or fallen timber may be so used.[74]

In order to maintain an action to restrain waste, a complainant must either be in possession or must show a valid and subsisting title in himself to the premises.[75] Hence, under the modern law anyone having a reversion or remainder for life or years as well as any fee owner may sue for damages for waste.[76] One who has acquired a good title to land by adverse possession may restrain an adverse claimant from committing waste.[77] It is well settled that one entitled to a contingent remainder cannot maintain an action to recover damages for waste,[78] but an injunction may issue to protect him.[79] A mortgagee or his trustee[80] or a lienor for purchase money may maintain a suit to restrain waste impairing the security[81] by invoking equity to prevent the injury actually committed or threatened,[82] or he may have an action on the case for damages, for an injury to his security by waste by mortgagee,[83] but for trivial acts of waste the courts will not interfere.[84] Although a proposed waste, if successful, would be profitable a mortgagee may object to losing in whole or in part a satisfactory security and accepting in its place one dependent on contingencies.[85] When taxes against real estate are past due and unpaid, the county by which the taxes were levied may maintain a suit to restrain waste, where the acts complained of would reduce the value of the property to an amount insufficient to pay the taxes.[86] In order to maintain such a suit, it is not necessary that the county should first become a purchaser of the property at a tax sale.[87] A county treasurer, as trustee of the state or a subdivision thereof, might bring and maintain such action.[88] An administrator or executor who has no estate in the premises except the right to lease is not injured by waste and cannot sue.[89] upon the tenancy of him committing the waste (Co. Litt. 218b, Butler's note); and it was furthermore necessary that there be what was termed "privity" between the plaintiff and defendant (Co. Litt. 53b; 2 Inst. 301; Foot v. Dickinson, 2 Metc. [Mass.] 611; Bates v. Shraeder, 13 Johns. [N. Y.] 260, Finch's Cas. 460; Lander v. Hall, 69 Wis. 331; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 118).

Note: The common-law action of waste could be brought only by one who had an estate of inheritance following immediately

"At common law, the assignee of the tenant by the curtesy cannot be sued in waste. The action ought to have been brought against the tenant himself by the heir; and the books state that thereby he shall recover the lands against the assignee, for the privity which is between the heir and tenant by the curtesy. Walker's Case, 3 Coke, 23. So, if tenant in dower, or tenant by the curtesy, grant over their estate, yet the privity of action remains between the heir and them, and he shall have an action of waste against them for waste committed after the assignment; but if the heir grant over the reversion, then the privity of action is destroyed, and the grantee cannot have any action of waste, but only against the assignee, for between them is privity in estate, and between them and the tenant in dower, or the tenant by the curtesy, is no privity at all." Bates v. Shraeder, 13 Johns. [N. Y.] 260, Finch's Cas. 460. But an action on the case for waste may be brought by one having a reversion or remainder for life or years, as well as by one having a fee simple or fee tail (Greene v. Cole, 2 Saund. 253, note; McLaughlin v. Long, 5 Har. & J. [Md.] 113; Dozier v. Gregory, 46 N. C. 100), and there is, by some authorities, to sustain such action, no requirement of privity of estate (Chase v. Hazelton, 7 N. H. 171; Randall v. Cleaveland, 6 Conn. 328; Dickinson v. Baltimore, 48 Md. 583; Dupree v. Dupree, 49 N. C. 387, 69 Am. Dec. 757; Robinson v. Wheeler, 25 N. Y. 252. Contra. Bacon v. Smith, 1 Q. B. 345; Foot v. Dickinson, 2 Metc. [Mass.] 611). An action on the case cannot, however, be brought by one whose interest is merely contingent. Sager v. Galloway, 113 Pa. 500. So, where the statute provides for an action by the person having the next immediate estate of inheritance. Hunt v. Hall, 37 Me. 363. Generally, where there is a statutory provision as to waste, the persons entitled to bring the action are specified. 1 Stimson's Am. St. Law, § 1353. See Curtiss v. 89. Adams v. Slattery [Colo.] 85 P. 87. Injunction will not lie. Id.

At common law against a tenant who committed waste, the remedy was an action for waste; and later, an action on the case for waste and for injunction, and an action for forfeiture for waste would not follow unless a re-entry was preserved by the lease.[90] The remedy by injunction is now fully established and has practically superseded the old common-law remedy of action for waste and action on the case for damages. The injunction will be granted in all cases where the former common-law actions would lie.[91]

WATERS AND WATER SUPPLY.

[By Benj. W. Wood.]

The scope of this topic[92] includes the general law of waters and the use and supply thereof except as other topics below cited[93] cover necessary exclusions.

§ 1. Definition and kinds of waters.[94]—A natural watercourse is one in which water uniformly or habitually flows, having reasonable limits as to width.[95] It is not necessary that the flow be sufficient to wear out a channel having well defined sides or banks.[96]

94. See 4 C. L. 1824.

95. If surface water uniformly or habitually flows over a given course having reasonable limits as to width, the line of its flow is a watercourse. Hull v. Harker [Iowa] 106 N. W. 629.

§ 2. Sovereignty over waters and lands beneath.[97]—The ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by tide waters within a state is in such state.[98] The same doctrine as to the dominion and sovereignty over and ownership of lands under navigable waters of the Great Lakes applies, which obtains at common law as to lands under tide waters on the borders of the sea.[99] As between nations, the minimum limit is a marine league from the coast, and within these limits a state may define its boundaries on the sea and extend its sovereignty and jurisdiction to all places within such territorial limit.[1] As, therefore, by the treaty with Great Britain, the boundary line between the two countries is through the middle of Lake Huron and the boundary of Michigan coincides therewith the laws of that state so far as applicable extend over the whole of the waters of that lake within the state boundaries in the same manner as if they were tide waters extending only one league from shore.[2] It is the duty of the legislature to preserve the use of streams, title to the bed of which is in the state, to all persons and for all purposes.[3] The right of the public to use a public stream is not confined to fishing in and taking water and ice therefrom but includes the use of the stream for boating, skating, and other sports.[4] Though the state of New York has dominion over the waters of Niagara river and power to regulate the use and diversion thereof, it has no property or ownership in them within the constitutional provision prohibiting the appropriation of public property for private use without the assent of the legislature.[5]

§ 3. Rights in natural watercourses.[6]—Every proprietor of land on the banks of a natural stream has an equal right to have the water of the stream continue to flow in its natural course as it was wont to run without diminution in quantity[7] or deterioration in quality,[8] unless otherwise agreed upon by the parties,[9] or unless

3. Board of Park Com'rs of Des Moines v. Diamond Ice Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 203. Laws 1901, p. 131, c. 179, giving the park board jurisdiction over the Des Moines River in the city of Des Moines where city property abuts on the river and empowering such board to improve the bed of the river for boating, skating, and other sports, and to prohibit the taking of ice therefrom, is not as to other riparian owners a taking of property without due process. Id. Under Laws 1901, p. 131, c. 179, giving the park commissioners of Des Moines jurisdiction over the Des Moines river within specified limits, and providing that if a dam was built below an existing one it could prohibit the taking of ice from between the dams, it is held that they may prohibit the taking of ice above the existing dam. 5. Niagara County Irrigation & Water Supply Co. v. College Heights Land Co., 98 N. Y. S. 4. Laws 1891, p. 483, c. 259, creating a corporation to construct a waterway from Niagara river to supply water to villages, gives the corporation no property of the state in the bed of the stream but merely gives it power to do what is necessary to carry out the provisions of the act. Id. Hence the assent of two-thirds of the legislature was not essential to its enactment under the constitutional provision requiring such assent to laws appropriating public property for private use. 7. A lower riparian owner has the right to the natural flow of the stream and an upper owner cannot divert water from the stream to such an extent as to deprive him of that right. New England Cotton Yarn Co. v. Laurel Lake Mills [Mass.] 76 N. E. 231. Where one shows himself entitled to an injunction against diversion of water from a stream which furnishes his only unfailing supply, the same should be granted without qualification since there is no adequate remedy at law. Stoner v. Patten [Ga.] 52 S. E. 894. A diversion of the water or the making the same noxious is a nuisance. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Turner [Ala.] 39 So. 603.

8. See post, § 3, Nuisance and pollution. He has a right to have the water come down unheated and unpolluted. New England Cotton Yarn Co. v. Laurel Lake Mills [Mass.] 76 N. E. 231.

9. A contract between an upper and lower riparian owner by which the former acquired the right to turn all water used in condensing into the latter's condensing pond, held to absolve him from the duty of return-inconsistent rights have been acquired by prescription.[10] This right exists notwithstanding he has never utilized the full flow,[11] and he cannot be deprived of it without his consent except by condemnation proceedings and the payment of compensation.[12] An upper riparian owner has a right to use the water for power[13] or other reasonable nonconsumptive use.[14] This involves the right to detain it long enough and discharge it in such manner as will make it useful.[15] But he has no right to detain or discharge it in an unreasonable manner.[16] The only rule is that the detention, discharge, and use must be reasonable under the circumstances of the particular case;[17] but outside of regions where appropriative rights in water are recognized,[18] he has no absolute right to take water from the stream for irrigation.[19] An upper owner has a right to construct artificial drains to discharge into a stream water which would naturally find its way there.[20] Riparian rights on a navigable stream do not depend on ownership of the bed of the stream.[21] The riparian owner's right to use waters of a navigable stream for irrigation is subject to the right of the state to improve its navigability,[22] and the state may so improve the river without compensating him for injury to such right.[23] A riparian owner on a navigable stream may place obstructions therein so long as rights of navigation are not interfered with.[24] Fish traps set in a navigable stream may not be wantonly destroyed.[25] The owner of upland may not trespass upon intervening land of a private owner for the purpose of reaching navigable water which lies beyond.[26]

ing the water to the stream, notwithstanding a provision in the contract that neither party waived riparian rights. New England Cotton Yarn Co. v. Laurel Lake Mills [Mass.] 76 N. E. 231.

10. The use of the water by a riparian proprietor in substantially the same manner for the statutory period with the knowledge of a lower owner raises a presumption of a right to continue to so use it. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Turner [Ala.] 39 So. 603. One who maintains a dam for fifty years acquires a prescriptive right and its reconstruction in a non-negligent manner will not give a cause of action to a land owner claimed to have been injured by overflow. 19. The taking of water from a stream for irrigation is not an ordinary or natural use. Bigbam Bros. v. Port Arthur Canal & Dock Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 848.

20. Where a landowner constructs drains emptying into a natural watercourse but which do not draw any water into such course which would not naturally have found its way there at the place where the drains discharge it he is not liable to a lower owner along such course for damages for constructing such drains. Hull v. Harker [Iowa] 106 N. W. 629. A landowner who allows a ditch over his land to become obstructed so as to overflow his land cannot recover damages against an upper owner whose tile drains discharge into such ditch which, except for the obstruction, is the natural course for such water. 22. Bigham Bros. v. Port Arthur Canal & Dock Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 848. A canal forming a deep water channel between a navigable river and the sea is a practical improvement to which a riparian owner's right to use the water for irrigation is subservient. Id.

23. Bigham Bros. v. Port Arthur Canal & Dock Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 848. A company authorized to construct a deep water canal between a navigable river and the sea will not be required at great expense to construct locks to prevent the water from becoming salty and thus destroying it for purposes of irrigation, to the injury of a riparian owner. Interference and obstruction.[27]—An upper riparian proprietor has as against a lower one the right to have the water flow from his land according to nature,[28] and a lower proprietor may not obstruct the flow so as to flood the lands of upper owners[29] or interfere with their systems of drainage,[30] and if he does so he is liable in damages for resulting injuries,[31] providing his act was the cause of the injury.[32] One who, for his own convenience, closes a natural watercourse and provides an artificial channel, must make such channel sufficient to carry the waters then carried by the natural channel and waters which may lawfully be turned into it.[33] The action for damages for injuries so caused must be brought within the limitation period[34] and in a court which has jurisdiction.[35] Damages recoverable depend on the character of the injury[36] whether temporary or permanent,[37] and the relief demanded the law as to obtaining the right to maintain them. Fowler v. Harrison [Wash.] 81 P. 1055.

27. See 4 C. L. 1826.

28. Where a riparian owner sued to enjoin the construction of a dam by named individuals who answered that they were officers of a corporation and it appeared that petitioner's property would be injured, it was proper to grant an injunction though the corporation was not a party. Warner v. Maxwell [Ga.] 52 S. E. 809.

29. A lower owner may not place obstructions in the stream causing the water to back up and overflow the land of an upper owner. Winsor v. Hanson [Wash.] 82 P. 710. Complaint against a railroad company for obstructing the waters of a stream and causing them to flood land, held to state a cause of action. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mitchell [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1144.

30. Under the rule that one must so use his own rights as not to infringe upon the rights of others, a lower riparian owner may not dam the stream and thereby obstruct a drainage system lawfully maintained by upper owners to the injury of a crop lawfully brought into existence. Thomas v. Bolsa Land Co. [Cal. App.] 82 P. 207.

31. A railroad which so constructs a bridge across a stream as to cause ice and debris to accumulate and form a jam which backs up the water and floods adjacent land is liable for resulting injuries. Miller v. Buffalo & S. R. Co., 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 515. Evidence sufficient to show that damages to one's land by flooding was caused by the construction by a railroad company of an obstruction to a natural stream. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mitchell [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1144. Where a dam is negligently constructed, the owner is liable for damages from flooding caused by such obstruction, though there would have been an overflow to some extent had the obstruction not existed. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Harbison [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 67, 88 S. W. 452. Where after institution of a suit for damages caused by flowage, the defendant removed a portion of the dam causing the flood, evidence of the time within which a subsequent flood subsided from the land held admissible as showing the action of the water in the creek when the dam was in and that the remaining portion contributed to the injury. Id. One who diverts water from its natural channel and causes it to be discharged on the land of another is liable in damages. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mitchell [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1144. Where a lower owner sues for a nuisance created by an upper, the question of negligence is immaterial. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Turner [Ala.] 39 So. 603.

32. One who obstructs a watercourse is not liable for injuries caused by overflow unless the obstruction is the cause of the injury complained of. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. McClerran [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 653. In the absence of negligence in the construction of its road bed across a natural watercourse, a railroad company is not liable for damages to adjacent property by reason of a flood so unprecedented as to amount to an act of God. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Buel [Neb.] 107 N. W. 590. A riparian proprietor who has constructed dams in the usual manner and which resist usual freshets is not liable to a lower owner for injuries caused where the dam is broken by an extraordinary flood. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Turner [Ala.] 39 So. 603.

33. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 110 Ill. App. 626. A landowner injured by overflow of an artificial channel along a railroad right of way is not precluded from recovering because he constructed such channel on specifications from the railroad company. Id.

34. Where an injury to crops and land is caused by the negligent construction of a railway embankment which arrested and held the flood waters of a natural stream, a cause of action accrues at the date of the injury and not at the date the obstruction was constructed. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mitchell [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1144.

35. In a suit by several to enjoin the obstruction of a stream, the matter in dispute must exceed $2,000 as to each complainant to give the Federal court jurisdiction. Eaton v. Hoge [C. C. A.] 141 F. 64.

36. Where land is flooded through a continuing injury, the measure of damages is the rental value. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 110 Ill. App. 626. Where crops are injured, the measure of damages is the difference in their value before and after the overflow. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mitchell [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1144.

37. The building by a railroad company of an embankment across the channel of a stream and diverting the waters thereof into an artificial channel which is insufficient to carry them is not an improvement of the character that requires one injured to treat in the complaint.[38] The destruction of an obstruction in a navigable stream which is not and may only possibly become a nuisance at some future date may be enjoined.[39] Flooding of lands caused by the erection of a dam in the exercise of the police power is not a taking which requires compensation if such flooding can be prevented by dikes.[40]

Nuisance and pollution.[41]—A riparian owner has no right to unreasonably corrupt or pollute the waters of a stream to such an extent as to impair its purity,[42] and such act may be enjoined[43] in the absence of equities or qualifying circumstances which abrogate the general rule.[44] A municipal riparian owner is not estopped from exercising its right to prevent the pollution of the stream by the fact that it has been guilty of the same offense in discharging sewage into it.[45] To entitle one to enjoin the discharge into a stream of foul and noxious matter he must show it as permanent and bring one action for all damages present and prospective. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 110 Ill. App. 626.

38. Petition for damages resulting from flooding land caused by insufficient drainage facilities through a railroad roadbed, held sufficiently broad to permit recovery for a deposit of mud on the land. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Harbison [Tex.] 90 S. W. 1097. Claim for damage caused by flooding land resulting from insufficient drainage facilities through a railroad roadbed, held not to show a claim based on the theory that injury resulted from a deposit of sediment. Id. Where because of insufficient drainage facilities through a railroad bed damage is caused by flowage, damages recoverable could not be reduced by showing that the value of the land was enhanced by the deposit thereon of sediment where the value of such benefit was not shown. Id. Where one injured by flowage was not seeking recovery on the ground that his land had been injured by sediment deposited there it is immaterial that sediment would not have injured but would have benefited the land. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Harbison [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 67, 88 S. W. 452. Complaint against a railroad for damages caused by insufficient drainage facilities through its roadbed held sufficient to authorize the introduction of evidence as to the filling up of plaintiff's ditches with debris. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wynne [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 823.

39. Obstruction did not constitute a nuisance but at most there was a probability that it would sooner or later constitute a nuisance. Winsor v. Hanson [Wash.] 82 P. 710.

40. Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, 50 Law. Ed. —.

41. See 4 C. L. 1827.

42. The right to pollute the waters of a natural watercourse forms no part of the riparian rights of the abutting owners; and in order to prevent such pollution it is not essential that a municipality, or other riparian owner who is affected thereby, should condemn any right which such abutting owner may have or claim in the water. Hildebrand v. Toledo, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 450. Complaint by a lower owner against an upper one for polluting the waters of the stream held to state a cause of action. Muncie Pulp Co. v. Keesling [Ind.] 76 N. E. 1002.

43. A lower riparian owner may enjoin the pollution of the stream by an upper owner. Thropp v. Harpers Ferry Paper Co. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 690. The riparian owners along the Passaic river below the city of Paterson, but along tide water, may restrain the pollution of the stream by turning sewage therein unless the city shall elect to compensate them for their injury. Doremus v. Paterson [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 396. Where a city seeks to enjoin the pollution of a stream from which its water supply is taken and at a trifling expense the offensive matter discharged into the stream by the defendant could be turned into another stream where it would injure no one, a preliminary injunction will be granted. Roaring Creek Water Co. v. Anthracite Coal Co., 212 Pa. 115, 61 A. 811.

44. Where waste water used in washing ore had been run into settling pools before being turned into the stream but on extending the operations the settling pools were abandoned and the water turned directly into the stream it was held that the owner of a pulp mill lower down injuriously affected could enjoin such action until it was shown that he could avoid the injurious effects by a reasonable expenditure. Thropp v. Harpers Ferry Paper Co. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 690. An upper owner will not be enjoined from carrying on an industry which pollutes the water of a stream to the detriment of a lower owner where the latter may remedy the evil at an ascertainable and reasonable expense and to enjoin the former would paralyze his industry. Salem Iron Co. v. Hyland [Ohio] 77 N. E. 751.

45. Hence, the collection by a municipality of an assessment to pay the cost of constructing a sewer to carry off sewage which otherwise would be drained into the stream cannot be enjoined merely because the municipality has also emptied its sewerage into the stream. Hildebrand v. Toledo, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 450. The fact that a municipality owning lands abutting on a stream has not taken wholly effective measures in all cases to prevent the pollution of the water thereof, which goes into its waterworks system, will not hinder or prevent it from taking measures, such as the building of a sewer, to divert the sewerage to another course; nor will such fact prevent the collection of an assessment levied against the property specially benefited by such sewer, to pay the cost that his rights are thereby interfered with.[46] A municipality which adopts a natural watercourse as an open sewer is bound to keep the channel of the stream open and prevent the accumulation of filth.[47] One who diverts water from its course and which water subsequently becomes polluted and injures another is liable though the source of the pollution was beyond his control.[48] Upper owners who acting independently of each other are depositing filth in the stream are jointly liable,[49] and it is no defense to an action to restrain one, that others contributed to the nuisance.[50]

Damages recoverable for pollution[51] depend upon the character of the nuisance, whether permanent or temporary,[52] and the character and value of the land injured.[53] Sickness resulting[54] and destruction of fish in the stream are elements to be considered.[55] Where a claim for damages includes injury to health and trade and deprivation of the use of water, actual damages may be recovered irrespective of the value of the land.[56] The action must be brought within the limitation period.[57] thereof. Hildebrand v. Toledo, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 450.

46. The discharge into the Mississippi river through an artificial canal of the sewage of Chicago with a large amount of pure water from Lake Michigan will not be enjoined at the instance of the state of Missouri on evidence that leaves doubtful whether disease germs survive the long journey and are the cause of sickness in that state. State of Missouri v. State of Illinois, 200 U. S. 496, 50 Law. Ed. —.

47. It is liable in damages for injuries done a riparian owner resulting from failure to do so. Glasgow v. City of Altoona, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 55. In such case if injury to real property is permanent, the measure of damages is the cost of remedying the injury up to the value of the property. Id.

48. Where one diverts water from its natural channel by means of a culvert which fills up with minerals from a mine which are then washed onto adjacent land, the person who constructed the culvert is liable for injury caused though he did not own the mine. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Taylor [Ky.] 89 S. W. 121. Where waters are diverted from a stream and afterwards discharged onto land to its damage, a cause of action accrues at the date of the injury and not at the date of the diversion. Id.

49. A lower riparian owner may join in one action and enjoin all upper owners who, acting independently of each other, are polluting the stream by depositing filth therein. Warren v. Parkhurst, 105 App. Div. 239, 93 N. Y. S. 1009.

50. It is no defense to an action to restrain the pollution of a watercourse that other persons contributed to the nuisance complained of. Doremus v. Paterson [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 3.

51. See 4 C. L. 1828, n. 7, et seq.

52. Where complainants in a suit to restrain the pollution of a watercourse estimated their damages on the basis of the injuries being permanent, an answer admitting the nuisance should state whether it is perpetual or temporary and if the latter how long it is to continue. Doremus v. Paterson [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 3. The measure of damages to a riparian owner, caused by the wash from mines poured into the stream above him, is the difference in the value of the land before and after the injury occurred, and not the depreciated rental value from the date of the occurrence of the injury; and it is consequently competent for a plaintiff in such a case to prove the nature and extent of the injuries complained of and the amount of loss sustained. Upson Coal & Min. Co. v. Williams, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 293. The measure of damage a lower owner is entitled to recover because of a continued nuisance consisting of the pollution of the stream by an upper owner is the depreciation in the rental value of his land to commencement of the suit. Muncie Pulp Co. v. Keesling [Ind.] 76 N. E. 1002. Complaint by a lower owner against an upper for polluting the waters of the stream held to show a continued nuisance rather than permanent injury to the property of the lower owner. Id. Where riparian lands are permanently injured by pollution of a stream, the damages recoverable should be based on such injury and not on the value of crops destroyed. Tutwiler Coal, Coke & Iron Co. v. Nichols [Ala.] 39 So. 762.

53. Where a lower riparian owner sues for pollution of a stream it is competent to show what crops he raised and their value as tending to show the character of the land and its value. Tutwiler Coal, Coke & Iron Co. v. Nichols [Ala.] 39 So. 762. In an action by a lower riparian owner for pollution of the stream he may show that nonriparian land owned by him was affected. Id.

54. In an action by a lower riparian owner for pollution of the stream it is competent to show that there was an odor from the stream and that the health of his family had been injuriously affected. Tutwiler Coal, Coke & Iron Co. v. Nichols [Ala.] 39 So. 762.

55. In an action by a lower riparian proprietor for pollution of a stream, it is competent to show that fish in the stream had decreased though he had no title to such fish until caught. Tutwiler Coal, Coke & Iron Co. v. Nichols [Ala.] 39 So. 762.

56. Glasgow v. Altoona, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 55.

57. Under Code 1896, § 2801, subd. 6, a lower riparian proprietor can recover from an upper for polluting the stream only damages which accrued within one year prior to the commencement of the action. Tutwiler Coal, Coke & Iron Co. v. Nichols [Ala.] 39 So. 762. Evidence of the condition of the stream prior to the twelve-month limitation period and subsequent to the commencement of the ac-

Diversion.[58]—A proprietor may change the course of a natural watercourse within the limits of his own land if he restores it to the original channel before the lands of another are reached,[59] provided he does not in so doing cast upon adjoining lands water which would not in the course of nature flow there.[60] He must also see that the water passes onto the lower land at the same point it would naturally reach it.[61] The fact that the flow of water will be thereby accelerated and debris carried onto the lower land which would not reach it if the water followed its natural course will not preclude him from exercising this right.[62] The state being the last riparian owner on tidal rivers has the right to the ultimate disposition of what remains of all waters naturally emptying into such streams after the transient rights of riparian owners have been exhausted,[63] and hence may insist upon the proper riparian user of such waters, and may regulate its diversion for commercial purposes.[64] Thus, it may restrain such diversion, and such restraint may be limited tion is admissible for the purpose of showing the effect of the pollution on the plaintiff's land and in the river. Id. Under the rule that a lower riparian owner is limited in damages recoverable for pollution of the stream to such as accrued within one year prior to the commencement of the action, the fact that he had been as greatly injured for more than one year prior to beginning action as he was at the time action was brought does not preclude him from any recovery. 64. McCarter v. Hudson County Water Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 710.

Note: The decision is based upon the ground that the state, being the owner of the navigable portion of the river further down, was entitled to riparian rights. The Columbia Law Review says the case involves the larger principle of the right of the state by legislation to prevent taking water from the stream and transporting it to another state. On this question there is but little authority. Howell v. Johnson, 86 F. 556, doubts the existence of any property right in the state such as would entitle it to regulate the use of its non-navigable streams. See, also, Lamson v. Vailes, 27 Colo. 201. It has been suggested that the state could prevent the removal of the bed of a river from its jurisdiction by invoking the principle of state ownership of water propounded by its constitution. Bigelow v. Draper, 6 N. D. 152. But it would seem dangerous to found the state's right to control its non-navigable waters on the theory of state ownership, because of the difficulty of defining the nature of such property right. It is said that where the stream is navigable the state, by virtue of ownership of its bed, holds the water in trust for the public (Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. Law, 369), but if the stream were non-navigable throughout its course and the bed subject to private ownership, the state would have no right to interfere as having any property right in the water. Tiedeman, Lim. of Police Power, § 125. Even where states have announced public ownership of non-navigable streams, such ownership is not construed so as to interfere with riparian rights (Bigelow v. Draper, 6 N. D. 152), and is also subject to the right of the Federal government to protect navigation below (United States v. Rio Grande Irrigation Co., 174 U. S. 690, 43 Law, Ed. 1136), and in view of the undivided sovereignty of the United States, it is doubtful if the state governments have any more property in the water of the state than in the land. But see McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 Law. Ed. 248. A far simpler basis on which to found the right of the state to control water within its boundaries is the police power. See State v. Wheeler, 44 N. J. Law 88; Vernon Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 237; White v. Canal Co., 22 Colo. 191; Am. Exp. Co. v. Illinois, 133 Ill. 649.—See 6 Columbia L. R. 113.

Note: The doctrine is a novel one, that the state has the rights of a riparian owner through the ownership of the bed of the navigable portion of the stream. The words "riparian rights," suggest that ownership of the bank is a necessary element, and this view is supported by the English rule that these rights do not depend on ownership of the soil under the stream. Lyon v. Fishmongers Co., 1 App. Cas. 662. Riparian rights and restrictions, moreover, seem to have arisen from the benefit conferred by the stream upon the riparian tract. So a riparian owner may make a reasonable use of the water, such right of user being an incident to the soil and passing therewith. Union M. & M. Co. v. Ferris, 2 Sawy. [U. S. C. C.] 176. He is entitled to the natural flow save for a reasonable use by upper owners. Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mass. [U. S. C. C.] 397. But he may not assign his rights in gross. Stockport Water Co. v. Potter, 3 H. & C. 300. Nor may he use the water beyond the riparian tract. Moulton v. Newburyport Water Co., 137 Mass. 163. In the present case none of the usual riparian benefits are conferred upon the bed of the stream and the reason for extending riparian rights to the owner thereof fails. The decision may, however, be supported on the ground of the state's right to object to improper interference with a nav-

to such persons as it may elect.[65] The meaure of damages a lower riparian owner may recover for diversion of water above his premises is the difference in their value before and after such diversion estimated as of the date of trial.[66]

Bridges and culverts.[67]—One who constructs a fill across a watercourse must put in a culvert sufficient to allow the passage of the volume of water ordinarily flowing in the stream at seasons of low or usual high water,[68] but extraordinary or unprecedented freshets need not be anticipated.[69] One who fails to provide adequate drainage facilities is liable in damages,[70] if the injury could not have been averted by the landowner injured.[71] In some states this duty is imposed by statute.[72] In Texas the drainage facilities through a railroad roadbed must be sufficient to drain the land in its natural lay[73] taking into consideration such future conditions as igable stream even though such interference took place beyond the limits of the state or above the navigable portion. Cf. Pennsylvania v. Wheeling, etc., Bridge Co., 13 How. [U. S.] 518, 14 Law. Ed. 249; United States v. Rio Grande Irrigation Co., 174 U. S. 690, 43 Law. Ed. 1136; Missouri v. Illinois & Chicago Dist., 180 U. S. 208, 45 Law. Ed. 497.—See 19 Harv. L. R. 216.

65. Act May 11, 1905 (P. L. 1905, p. 461), making it unlawful to transport the water of any fresh water river of the state through pipes to another state for use therein is valid. McCarter v. 68. A railroad company in constructing a fill over a watercourse must make provision for the passage of such amount of water as is known to flow in the stream in times of usual freshets and as might be reasonably expected to flow in time of flood shown by experience to be liable to occur. Price v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 83 P. 843. A railroad company which constructs a fill across a watercourse is bound to ascertain the character of the stream and how it had been affected by previous rain storms and would probably be affected by future conditions and provide a suitable culvert. Perrine v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 62 A. 702. But no duty rests on a landowner on the upper side of the fill to ascertain whether a suitable culvert had been constructed so as to preclude his recovery of damages caused by back water. Id. That such upper owner stacked his grain on a knoll that had never been submerged does not raise a conclusive presumption that the railroad company with the knowledge it had obtained should not have anticipated that the fill as constructed would be likely to flood the knoll. Id. In an action for damages caused by negligently constructing a fill over a stream, it was improper to charge that the size of another culvert through which the stream ran could be considered unless it was shown that such culvert was a standard of sufficiency. Price v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 83 P. 843. In an action for damages caused by an insufficient culvert in a railroad fill over a stream, it is incompetent to show that certain employes of the railroad company were informed as to the size of the culvert necessary without proof that such employes were agents of the company in constructing the fill. Id.

69. Where a landowner sought to recover damages for injuries sustained by back water caused by an insufficient culvert in a railroad fill across the channel of a stream, it was held for the jury whether the storm causing the flood was so unprecedented that in the exercise of ordinary care it could not have been anticipated. Price v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 83 P. 843.

70. A railroad company is liable for damages from flooding caused by its defective embankment. Shores v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 699. But not for injuries caused by its lessee in removing an obstruction in a culvert. Id. A lessee of a railroad who builds an addition to a culvert which gives way and causes the water to back up and destroy crops is liable in damages. Id. Where one's property was injured by water turned back because of an insufficient culvert in a railroad fill across the channel of a stream and the water causing the damage was the continuous overflow of the stream it could not be regarded as surface water in determining the rights of the parties. Price v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 83 P. 843.

71. Where injuries were caused by obstruction of a railroad culvert if damages could have been relieved by ditches, it was held competent to show that it was difficult and expensive to construct them. Shores v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 699.

72. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5153, requiring a railroad crossing a stream to do so in such manner as to afford security to property, applies to a railroad using a culvert constructed by its predecessor. Graham v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 57.

73. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4436, providing that a railroad bed shall not be constructed without first constructing such culverts as are required for the drainage of the land, a mandatory injunction directing the removal of a dam and the construction of necessary culverts is not indefinite for failure to point out what additional culverts would be necessary. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Harbison [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 67, 88 S. W. 452. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4436, providing that a railroad company shall not construct a roadbed without first constructing necessary culverts, a complaint for damages to land because of insufficient culverts need not allege that necessary culverts were not put in. It being a matter of might reasonably be foreseen,[74] and failure to do so is negligence,[75] but no greater drainage facilities need be provided.[76] An action for damages caused by flowage because of the construction of a railroad embankment across the channel of a stream must be brought within the statutory period.[77]

§ 4. Rights in lakes and ponds.[78]— Water rights acquired by a littoral proprietor from the United States are within the laws of a state subsequently erected which preserve existing rights in waters and this regardless of whether they were navigable.[79] Where it appears that the convenient use of property situated on a lake shore would be impaired and its value depreciated by an illegal obstruction between such property and the lake, injunction lies to abate such obstruction.[80] In Massachusetts title to islands in great ponds is in the state unless it has been granted away.[81]

§ 5. Rights in subterranean and percolating waters.[82]—All subterranean waters which do not exist in a known and well defined channel are deemed percolating waters.[83] The owner of land who explores for and produces percolating water is limited to a reasonable and beneficial use of it where to otherwise use it would deplete the supply of a valuable spring on neighboring land.[84]

§ 6. Rights in tide waters.[85]—The ownership of the bed of tidal rivers by the state, so far as the tide ebbs and flows, carries with it the ordinary property rights of riparian owners in the water covering it, whether fresh or salt.[86]

bordering land have no title to the ice which forms thereon as incident to their ownership of the bank,[89] hence, there can be no vested right to such ice because of improvements on the land or because of the length of time the riparian owner has harvested it.[90] The state may not deny the right to take ice from a public stream any more than it may interfere with the right to take water therefrom or fish therein.[91] But all such rights are subject to reasonable regulations.[92] Pond rentals if exacted are part of the expenses of harvesting ice under a contract obligating a party to pay all expenses of such harvest.[93]

§ 9. Surface waters and drainage or reclamation.[94] Common-law rule.[95]—Surface water is the common enemy of mankind and a landowner may fight it in any way he chooses providing he does so without working injury to his neighbor.[96] A proprietor may lawfully improve his property by doing what is necessary for that purpose, and unless negligent he is not liable to an adjoining proprietor for causing surface waters to flow onto his premises to his damage.[97]

Civil-law rule.[98]—By the civil-law rule, the owner of a dominant heritage has a natural easement over the land of the servient heritage for the flow of surface waters,[99] and he may accelerate and increase such flow[1] but cannot divert it so that it reaches the servient heritage at a place different from where it naturally would, or discharge there water which would not naturally reach such heritage.[2] The owner of the servient heritage cannot interfere with or divert the flow of the watercourses,[3] and the ground that good husbandry rendered the same necessary for the protection of his crops does not justify such action.[4] The owner of the servient heritage cannot obstruct the flow of surface waters on the ground that the course of natural drainage of ordinary surface water over his land was not necessary.[5] A license to the servient owner to construct a levee, on a certain line, given by an arbitration award is terminated by the destruction of such levee, and cannot be rebuilt by virtue of the award,[6] nor can such award be enlarged by parol.[7] Highway authorities cannot be compelled by adjoining owners to restrain surface water which naturally flows over the highway onto the land of such owners.[8] This is so though

The owner of higher land is not only entitled to the natural flow of the water therefrom upon the lower but he may tile drain his higher land and thereby carry off water in the natural channel though the flow of water upon the lower land in such natural channel is thereby increased. Bickel v. Martin, 115 Ill. App. 367.

2. Where one landowner causes water to be discharged upon the land of another at a point where it would not have flowed in the state of nature and also discharges water thereon which would never reach his land in its natural course, the injured person is entitled to nominal damages though the result was beneficial to his land. 8. Tower v. Somerset Tp. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 983, 106 N. W. 874. Where an original surface watersluice had been obstructed by natural causes and the water wore another channel along the highway which was permitted to remain until after repeated efforts to protect the highway had failed, the new such flow has for many years been diverted, where to allow it to resume its natural course would not result in injury to such owner.[9]

Natural drainage channels.[10]—Surface water which flows in a well defined course, be it ditch, draw, or swale, in its primitive condition, and seeks its discharge in a neighboring stream cannot be arrested by one landowner to the injury of a neighboring proprietor,[11] and what a private proprietor may not do neither can the public authorities,[12] except in the exercise of eminent domain.[13] Where one diverts water from its natural course so that it, with water which naturally flows in another direction, is discharged upon the land of his neighbor, the latter may obstruct the stream though in so doing he obstructs water which it is his duty to receive.[14] One who wrongfully casts surface water on the land of another cannot escape liability on the ground that another person demanded the waters on the opposite side of the injured person's premises, thus preventing their escape;[15] but where water diverted out of its natural course by one would not have caused injury except for the act of another, the person making the original diversion is not liable.[16]

Obstruction of surface waters.—A landowner may by prescription acquire the right to obstruct the natural flow of waters from upper land.[17]

Railroad companies in the construction of their roadbeds must provide adequate drainage facilities through them[18] and keep such facilities in repair,[19] and, if by reason of failure to do so adjacent land is flooded, the company is liable in damages.[20] One is not precluded from recovering by the fact that he dug drain-

20. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1110, a railroad age ditches toward the conduit where it is not shown that the flow of water to be discharged through the conduit was thereby augmented.[21] If the damages are original, the measure is the depreciation in the value of the land[22] and must be recovered in one action.[23] But where the injury is continuing or intermittent in character, the damages are continuous and one recovery is not a bar to separate actions for damages thereafter accruing from the same wrong.[24] If the injury is temporary, the measure of damages is the cost of putting the land in its prior condition[25] and no more,[26] and if crops are injured the measure is the value of such crops.[27] Limitations run against such cause of action from the time injury is done.[28]

A landowner has no right to collect surface water in a body[29] and discharge it upon the land of another[30] in increased quantities and at a place different from which by its embankment holds back surface waters and floods land is liable in damages. Williamson v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 401. A railroad company which negligently subjects land to overflow so that it cannot be cultivated is liable to the owner who rented it out on shares. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Seale [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 48, 89 S. W. 997. Where it appears that by reason of an insufficient culvert put in by a railroad company surface water was backed up over the land of an adjoining owner and there was no evidence upon which to ascertain a proper measure of damages, the land owner was nevertheless entitled to nominal damages and to have the case go to the jury for that purpose. Harvey v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 958.

21. Harvey v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 958. Where one sought to recover damages for injuries to his land by flooding caused by the putting in by a railroad company of an insufficient culvert under its track, the question whether certain ditches dug toward the culvert by the landowner augmented the flow of water to be discharged through the conduit is one of fact. Id.

22. Harvey v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 958. Damages arising from the occasional flooding of land because of an insufficient culvert under a railroad track are continuous, not original. Id. But if an action therefor be tried on the theory that they are original, the parties will be bound thereby. Id. Where land is overflowed, the measure of damages is the difference in value just before and after the overflow occurred. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. Pearce, 110 Ill. App. 592. A warranty deed reciting the consideration executed shortly before the overflow occurred is admissible. Id.

23. Where surface waters are dammed so as to cause an injury to land that will continue indefinitely without change from any cause but human labor, the damages are original and there can be but one recovery measured by the decrease in the value of the land. Harvey v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 958.

24. Harvey v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 958.

25. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Seale [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 48, 89 S. W. 997.

26. The amount paid by a landowner for the removal of Johnson grass which grew as a result of a flood could not be recovered in the absence of proof that it was reasonable. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Seale [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 48, 89 S. W. 997. One who constructs a ditch which discharges surface water on another's land is not liable for damages caused by water emptied into its ditch by lateral ditches constructed by strangers without his consent. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Morris [Ark.] 89 S. W. 846.

27. Where a cotton crop is destroyed by flooding, the value of the lint and seed are elements of damage. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Jenkins [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 77, 89 S. W. 1106. Where crops are injured by wrongful discharge on the land of accumulated surface water, the measure of damages is the difference between what the land would and what it did produce less the difference in the cost of producing and harvesting a full crop and the crop actually raised. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Morris [Ark.] 89 S. W. 846. Where hay land is injured by flooding caused by an embankment which holds back surface water it is competent to show that one crop of hay was considerably injured and other crops practically destroyed. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. Alderman, 113 Ill. App. 23. Where by reason of an insufficient culvert constructed by one owner the land of an adjoiner is flooded, the value and condition of the crops on the land flooded and the extent to which they were injured are elements of damage. Harvey v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. [Iowa] 105 N. W. 958.

28. Where one constructs a ditch which unless properly attended to is liable to become obstructed, and damage caused thereby is intermittent, limitations run against actions to recover for such damage from the time it is done and not from the construction of the ditch. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Morris [Ark.] 89 S. W. 846.

29. See 4 C. L. 1833.

30. A proprietor over whose land surface water flows in several channels may not collect it into a single channel and discharge it upon a lower proprietor to his damage. Humphreys v. Moulton [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1085. Where one constructs an embankment to retain surface water which in the course of nature flows evenly, and takes no precautions to strengthen the bank against storm, and water collected broke over such embankment and injured the premises of an adjoiner, the negligence in the manner of construction was the proximate cause of the injury. Cox v. Odell [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1086. A complaint where it would reach such land according to nature.[31] A lower owner may protect himself against such act.[32] This rule applies to municipal corporations.[33] A county drain commissioner, who wrongfully enlarges an artificial drain to the injury of an adjoining township is personally liable,[34] but a county is not liable to an individual landowner for the negligent diversion of surface water in the improvement and construction of public highways,[35] and a township may not recover for injuries to its highways, bridges, and culverts caused by the enlargement of an artificial watercourse by adjoining townships and counties.[36]

Storm sewers[37] must be sufficient to carry off the ordinary and usual flow of surface water,[38] and due care must be exercised in their construction and maintenance,[39] but they need not be sufficient to carry off such quantity of water as results from extraordinary storms.[40] for the collection and discharge of surface waters onto one's land averring that the parties owned separate tracts, plaintiff's tract adjoining defendant's on the east with a road extending along their northern boundary, sufficiently describes the land. Id. Where one seeks to recover damage for the retention and discharge of surface water onto his land, evidence as to the cost of putting his land in repair is admissible. Id.

31. A lower owner may enjoin the maintenance of a dike which obstructs the natural flow of surface water and casts it upon his lands in an increased quantity and at an entirely different place from where it originally flowed. Priest v. Maxwell, 127 Iowa, 744, 104 N. W. 344.

32. Where an upper owner builds a dike which casts surface water on the land of a lower owner in a greatly increased quantity and at a place different from where it originally flowed, the lower owner may maintain a dike to protect himself. Priest v. Maxwell, 127 Iowa 744, 104 N. W. 344.

33. A city is liable in damages where in improving a street it collects in an artificial channel large quantities of surface water for which it provides no outlet and the water is thrown onto the land of an abutting owner. City of Valparaiso v. Spaeth [Ind.] 76 N. E. 514. A township may clean out old waterways or drains to the depth they were originally excavated but cannot enlarge them and thereby cast larger quantities of water collected from an additional area during shorter periods on the highways, bridges, and culverts of an adjoining township. Merritt Tp. v. Harp [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 417, 104 N. W. 587. Waterways are none the less artificial because in constructing them use is made of depressions and washed out channels which were insufficient to afford desired drainage. Id. A suit by a township to prevent the enlargement of artificial waterways constructed by other townships in other counties is properly brought in the county where complainant is located. Id.

35. Hopper v. Douglas County [Neb.] 106 N. W. 330. A county is not liable for injuries caused by the overflow of a ditch constructed by it. Siewerssen v. Harris County [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 333.

NOTE. Duties of municipal corporations with respect to surface water: In the absence of statute a municipal corporation is under no duty to provide for drainage of surface water for the benefit of its inhabitants. Henderson v. Minneapolis, 32 Minn. 319, 20 N. W. 322; Alden v. Minneapolis, 24 Minn. 254; Waters v. Bay View, 61 Wis. 642, 21 N. W. 811; Carr v. Northern Liberties, 35 Pa. 324; Fair v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. 309; Gould v. Booth, 66 N. Y. 62; Mills v. Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 489; Union v. Durkes, 38 N. J. Law, 21. It is not bound to furnish drains to relieve a lot whether the water be its own or that flowing from other premises (Jordon v. Benwood, 42 W. Va. 312, 26 S. E. 266), nor to provide a sewer to abate a nuisance caused by water running from its streets along a natural depression over abutting property (Miller v. Newport News, 101 Va. 432, 44 S. E. 712). It is not, as a matter of law, its duty to enlarge a ditch constructed for drainage purposes after an alleged increase of the flow of surface water therein. Huntsville v. Ewing, 116 Ala. 576, 22 So. 984. A city which voluntarily constructs a sewer to carry off surface water is not bound to make it sufficient to carry off all surface water under all circumstances. Atchison v. Challiss, 9 Kan. 603. It is not bound to protect one who owns land below the level of the street (Aicher v. Denver, 10 Colo. App. 413, 52 P. 86; Americus v. Eldridge, 64 Ga. 524, 37 Am. Rep. 89), nor is it bound to construct surface drains of sufficient capacity to relieve private property of water naturally coming thereon (Dudley v. Buffalo, 73 Minn. 347, 76 N. W. 44). In the lawful exercise of its power to grade streets it is not bound to drain ponds of surface water which collects on private property below the grades established. Clark v. Wilmington, 5 Harr. [Del.] 243. It has, however, authority to provide for the drainage of surface water. Bohan v. Avoca, 154 Pa. 404, 26 A. 604.—See note to Johnson v. White [R. I.] 65 L. R. A. 250.

38. City of McCook v. McAdams [Neb.] 106 N. W. 988.

39. A city is liable in damages where because of its negligence in constructing and maintaining a storm sewer, it bursts, and injures adjacent property. Kramer v. Los Angeles, 147 Cal. 668, 82 P. 334. A city which negligently permits a drain pipe to become obstructed thereby causing surface water to

One may not allow surface water to accumulate in pools and become stagnant[41] to the injury of adjacent proprietors,[42] and if he does so he is liable in damages[43] for injuries caused,[44] but for no other.[45]

Drainage of ponds.—A landowner may cut through the rim of a basin on his land at its lowest point so that the basin may be entirely drained and cause the water to pass therefrom onto the land of his neighbor,[46] but he has no right to cut through the rim at any other than the lowest point.[47]

§ 10. Lands under water.[48]—Until granted away, tide lands belong to the state where they are,[49] or, before erection of the state, to the Federal government.[50] A grant of a right to use tide water carries only a right to such use as is reasonably necessary,[51] but such right will be protected.[52] A grant of right to fill in tide flats will not be read from the mere enumeration of powers of a corporation.[53] In Louisiana the beds of navigable streams so long as they are covered by water belong to flow onto adjacent land is liable for injuries caused. Town of Central Covington v. Beiser [Ky.] 92 S. W. 973.

40. A city must maintain a system of sewers and drains sufficient to carry off an ordinary and usual flow of surface water but not such quantity as results from extraordinary rain storms. City of McCook v. McAdams [Neb.] 106 N. W. 988. Evidence that injury was due to an extraordinary flood held admissible under the pleadings. Siegfried v. South Bethlehem Borough, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 456. Where an abutting owner sued a city for damages caused by surface waters being thrown on his premises by a ditch, it was held error to refuse to admit evidence that the water was the result of extraordinary rains. City of Valparaiso v. Spaeth [Ind.] 76 N. E. 514. In constructing side ditches, culverts and outlets for surface waters, in improving a street, a city is required to provide for such water only as may reasonably be expected to fall and not for extraordinary rains. Id. In order that a flood be extraordinary it is not necessary that it be the greatest flood within memory. Its character is to be tested by the comparison with the usual volume of floods ordinarily occurring. Siegfried v. South Bethlehem Borough, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 456. And even if with an extraordinary flood there is concurring negligence, the party chargeable is not liable if regardless of such negligence the injury would have occurred. Id.

41. See 4 C. L. 1835.

42. A railroad company which digs an excavation on its right of way which causes water which otherwise would pass off to gather in pools and become stagnant is liable in damages for injuries sustained regardless of the question of negligence. McFadden v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 989. In an action against a railroad company for permitting stagnant water to stand on its right of way it is competent to show that the person injured notified the company's section boss of the pool, as showing notice to the company of the claim of injury. Id.

43. A railroad company which fails to construct necessary drainage facilities through its roadbed as the natural lay of the land requires is liable in damages for injuries sustained by reason of such failure. McFadden v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 989.

44. A railroad company which by failure to construct adequate drainage facilities through its roadbed contributes to the creation of a nuisance consisting of stagnant pools is liable for such portion of the nuisance as it created. McFadden v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 989.

45. A railroad company which constructs sufficient drainage facilities through its roadbed and does not obstruct the natural flow of the water is not liable for injuries from water naturally accumulating on its right of way. McFadden v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 989.

46. Fenton & T. R. Co. v. Adams [Ill.] 77 N. E. 531. An owner may in the interests of good husbandry drain ponds of a temporary character which have no natural outlet, by means of an artificial channel into a natural drain on his own premises and through such drain over the land of another, though the flow over the land of the latter is thereby increased. Such action, however, must be free from negligence. Aldritt v. Fleischauer [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1084.

49. Chicago Transit Co. v. Campbell, 110 Ill. App. 366; Town of West Seattle v. Seattle Land & Imp. Co., 38 Wash. 359, 80 P. 549. The title to a tide water bay is presumed vested in the state. Cain v. Simonson [Ala.] 39 So. 571.

50. Kneeland v. Korter [Wash.] 82 P. 608.

51. Code 1896, c. 84, granting to owners of land abutting on a bay the right to plant and gather oysters to a certain distance from the shore gives such owner no exclusive right to the use of such waters for all purposes but only such reasonable use for passage and freight as will enable him to plant and gather oysters not detrimental to other abutters who enjoy a like privilege. Cain v. Simonson [Ala.] 39 So. 571.

52. Persons entitled under Code 1896, c. 84, to plant and gather oysters in a bay in front of his land may enjoin unlawful and unnecessary sailing over their oyster bed. Cain v. Simonson [Ala.] 39 So. 571.

53. St. 1810, p. 136, c. 94, interpreted and held that it did not give a corporation power the public.[54] Batture land formed within the limits of a municipal corporation is under the control and administration of the municipality,[55] and the ownership of riparian proprietors is subject to the right of the corporation to reserve and use such portion thereof as may be necessary for navigation, commerce, public highways, and streets.[56] It may convey such right but no greater estate.[57] Owners of land bounded on non-navigable lakes have no title to the submerged bed of such lake.[58] A grant of lands described by metes and bounds passes submerged lands within such bounds.[59]

§ 11. Levees, dikes, seawalls, and other protective works.[60]

§ 12. Levees, drainage, and reclamation.[61]—The drainage and reclamation of aqueous lands are treated of in a separate topic.[62]

§ 13. Milling and power and other nonconsuming privileges; dams, canals, and races.[63]—A lower riparian owner may not construct a dam in such manner as to injure the power rights of an upper owner,[64] and if he does he is liable in damages for injuries caused.[65] The mere tendency of an increased flow of water, at times, in its natural channel, does not of itself give a cause of action against the owner of a dam,[66] and where a dam has been constructed under Mill Acts in a lawful manner and the water is not discharged in a negligent manner no damages can be recovered because the current is deflected to the injury of lands along the bank.[67] If a mill dam will create a nuisance, its construction may be proto fill in flats owned by it over which the tide ebbed and flowed. Scully v. Com., 188 Mass. 178, 74 N. E. 342.

55. Batture land is under the control and administration of the municipality. City of Shreveport v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [La.] 40 So. 298.

56. There is, however, no public servitude in favor of railroads. Minor's Heirs v. New Orleans [La.] 38 So. 999. Under Rev. St. 1870, § 318, a riparian proprietor may recover such portion of batture formed in front of his property as is not necessary for public use. Id.

57. A municipality may not grant the fee of batture land. It may grant its right subject to its power to so control the land as to enable the public to have access to the stream and enable its grantee to enjoy an easement of way granted. City of Shreveport v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [La.] 40 So. 298.

64. May not construct a dam in such manner that slush ice must necessarily form a jam that will set the water back on the wheel of an upper mill owner. Michigan Paper Co. v. Kalamazoo Valley Elec. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 342, 104 N. W. 387.

65. Where an upper owner sues for damages caused by the negligence of a lower owner in the management of his dam, evidence that he notified the lower owner of the injury at the beginning thereof is admissible on the question of such owner's negligence in not remedying the defects complained of. Michigan Paper Co. v. Kalamazoo Valley Elec. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 342, 104 N. W. 387. In an action against a lower owner for damages caused by his negligence in permitting an ice jam to form above his dam setting the water back on an upper owner's wheel, where the lower owner claimed that like jams had occurred prior to the construction of his dam, it is competent for the upper owner to show that a break in his dam caused him to shut down at the time of the prior jam on the question of whether the conditions were the same. Id. Where a mill owner is obliged to shut down because of negligence of a lower owner in the care of his dam, he is entitled to recover damages though it does not appear that he was required to cancel any orders because of the shut down. Id.

66. To so hold would prevent the improvement of inland navigation and paralyze the industries dependent on water power. Inhabitants of Durham v. Lisbon Falls Fibre Co. [Me.] 61 A. 177.

67. Such damage is damnum absque injuria. Inhabitants of Durham v. Lisbon Falls Fibre Co. [Me.] 61 A. 177. See, also, Brooks v. Cedar Brook, etc., R. Co., 82 Me. 17, 19 A. 87, 7 L. R. A. 460.

Note: The state is invested with the right of enacting such laws as give authority to improve the navigation and thus promote the interests of the public even though it may be an inconvenience to the private individual. Angell on the Law of Waters; Hollister v. Union Co., 9 Conn. 436. The present case applies this principle to the improvement of inland rivers. But the courts are not unanimous in so considering the matter. It has been held that one injured by the erection of a dam without his consent may recover notwithstanding the dam was duly authorized by law. Cain v. Hays, 4 Dana [Ky.] 338.

hibited.[68] Where waters in a natural stream are stored in a reservoir, the reciprocal rights of owners of mill privileges below the dam are the same as if the stream was left in its natural condition.[69] Where mill privileges at a dam are possessed in common but are subject to priorities between the owners, each must exercise his rights reasonably in view of the rights of the others.[70] The owner of a senior right is not required to reconstruct his mill so that a smaller amount of water will supply his requirements.[71] Several owners of junior power rights who acting independently, unlawfully appropriate the water to the injury of the owner of a senior right, are joint tort feasors.[72] Where the power of eminent domain is exercised in the construction of a dam, the measure of damages for land injured is the difference in its value just before and after the construction of the dam.[73] Due process is not denied an upper owner by giving lower owners the right to flowage where compensation is secured.[74] The right to maintain a dam carries the necessary right to flowage.[75] If such right is exceeded, the owner of the dam is liable[76] in damages for injuries caused[77] in an action properly

Also the privilege of erecting a dam over a watercourse is against common right and to uphold the grant of such a privilege the record must affirmatively show a compliance with all requisites of the statute. Martin v. Rushton, 42 Ala. 298.—See 15 Yale L. J. 150.

68. Under Va. Code 1904, p. 856, § 1353, the report of the commissioners on a petition for the establishment of a mill dam that the neighborhood will be annoyed by the stagnation of water is conclusive against the right of the applicant to establish the dam. Bishop v. Bagley [Va.] 51 S. E. 205. Where commissioners appointed under Va. Code 1904, p. 753, to investigate and report on an application for the establishment of a mill dam designated one of their number to write out the report and sign their names to it, their subsequent acknowledgment of the report in open court was a sufficient compliance with the law. 70. The owner of a subordinate privilege may not make unreasonable drafts nor can the owner of a preferential privilege have the water unreasonably stored for his benefit. Berry v. Hutchins [N. H.] 61 A. 550. Rights of each judicially determined. Id. A decree determining the relative priorities of power rights in the waters of a stream is evidence of such rights in a subsequent suit in which they are questioned but is not res judicata of a question of damages not adjudicated in such suit. Elkhart Paper Co. v. Fulkerson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 283.

71. Where the owner of a senior power right was entitled to an eight-foot head, the owner of a junior right cannot defend against an unlawful appropriation by him of the water on the ground that the former might have reconstructed his mill so that a four-foot head would have supplied him. Elkhart Paper Co. v. Fulkerson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 283.

72. If it is impossible to determine the injury caused by each, each is liable for the entire injury. Elkhart Paper Co. v. Fulkerson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 283. Where it appeared that the owner of a senior power right was obliged to close his mill, the rental value of which was $25 to $30 per day for 167 days because of the unlawful appropriation of the water by the owner of a junior right, $4,000 was held not excessive damages. 73. Brown v. Weaver Power Co. [N. C.] 52 S. E. 954. The fact that a railroad company owned an easement of way over the land should be considered in estimating the damages. Id.

74. Otis Co. v. Ludlow Mfg. Co., 201 U. S. 140, 50 Law. Ed. —. Compensation in such case is sufficiently secured by a provision for recovery of damages sustained within three years with annual compensation for future injury, or in lieu thereof a gross sum to be computed by a jury and for the bringing of a new complaint in case of dissatisfaction. Especially since no easement or title is acquired in the upper lands and injunctive relief may be had if other remedies fail. Id.

75. Evidence insufficient to show as a matter of law that a flowage right had been interfered with in the construction of a highway. Schneider v. Brown Tp. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 632, 105 N. W. 13. In an action under the Mills Act, Pub. St. 1882, c. 190, to have the extent of a right of flowage determined where there was nothing relative to the extent of the right in deeds under which it was claimed, the question is one of fact to be ascertained from evidence of the extent to which the right had been exercised. Forbes v. Byfield Woolen Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 51.

76. In an action for illegal flowage it is proper for a civil engineer to testify that water would percolate through the soil and that he dug a hole in the land and found that water stood in it on a level with the water in the river. Flint v. Union Water Power Co. [N. H.] 62 A. 788. The fact that he was allowed to testify implies a finding that he was qualified. Id. In an action for damages for flowage it was held proper during the view to call the attention of the jury to the height of water in a newly dug hole as compared with the height in the stream as bearing on the extent of the flowage. Flint v. Union Water Power Co. [N. H.] 62 A. 788.

77. In an action for illegal flowage, evidence that the plaintiff relied on the lowlands which could be cropped without fertilizing to keep up his upland and that his

§ 14. Irrigation and water supply; common-law rights and the doctrine of appropriation.[80] A. Rights in the water.[81] Common-law rule.[82]—An upper riparian owner who obstructs the flow of water to which a lower owner is entitled need not remove the obstruction to his own injury if he adopts other means of conveying the water to the person entitled to it.[83] Patentees whose patents were issued prior to the act of Congress providing for the appropriation of water do not acquire common-law rights as against prior appropriators.[84]

An appropriation[85] is an intent to take, accompanied by some open physical demonstration of the intent, and for some valuable use.[86] As applied to settlers on public lands it is a grant by the general government of the right to its use from a non-navigable stream to the injury of all public land above the point of diversion which may be within or beyond the boundaries of the settler's claim.[87] damages was a certain amount during the past six years was held admissible. Flint v. Union Water Power Co. [N. H.] 62 A. 788. Where it is sought to recover damages to property by the erection of a dam, the rights of the parties are to be determined by the ordinary stage of water and not by "low and minimum waters." Remington & Son Pulp & Paper Co. v. Watertown Water Com'rs, 96 N. Y. S. 975.

78. A complaint for flowage not inserted in a writ of attachment, may, under the statute be presented to the court in term time or be filed in the office of the clerk during vacation, but before it can be served there must be an order of service by the court in term time or by some justice thereof in vacation. The delivery of a copy of the complaint attested by the clerk of court by the sheriff to the respondent without such an order is not a sufficient service. Wyman v. Piscataquis Woolen Co. [Me.] 62 A. 655.

79. Under the testimony of this case, it was not error to refuse a request for a charge to the jury to the effect that, if they found the defendant was guilty of negligence, but that the plaintiff under all the facts and circumstances of the case, which were known or should have been known to him, did not exercise reasonable and ordinary care to prevent the breaking of the bank of his millrace and overflow of adjacent property, then negligence on his part contributed proximately to the injury, and he cannot recover from the defendant the damages in which he has been compelled to respond on account of their joint negligence. Northern Ohio R. Co. v. Akron Canal & Hydraulic Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 69. So also, it was not error to refuse a request to charge the jury to the effect that, if the plaintiff knew of acts on the part of the defendant which affected the safety of the mill-race, and himself took no steps to avoid the injury which resulted, he was guilty of such contributory negligence as would prevent his recovering from the defendant the damages assessed against him in another action. Id. And the defendant could ask for no stronger instruction than was given to the effect that, if the breaking of the plaintiff's millrace bank was caused by the joint or concurrent negligence of the plaintiff in not caring for the water and regulating its flow in the race and of the defendant in constructing a cofferdam therein, which improperly impeded and obstructed the flow of the water, then the verdict should be for the defendant. On an issue of prior appropriation an admission by one party that his right to use the water was a subsequent one held sufficient to show a prior appropriation by the other when corroborated by a use for several years by such other of sufficient water to irrigate his land. Morgan v. Shaw [Or.] 83 P. 534. Where a water right was owned separate from land which was sold on execution, the fact that water was furnished to the purchaser for three years and that the execution defendant did not apply for water during such period did not operate to forfeit his interest and amount to a reappropriation by the purchaser. 87. Morgan v. Shaw [Or.] 83 P. 534. Where the common-law doctrine of riparian rights as modified by the rule of prior appropriation is recognized, when a prior settler on public land appropriates the water of a stream running through it, the stream is not flowing through public lands at the time of the diversion of the water thereof by a subsequent settler. Morgan v. Shaw [Or.] 83 P. 534.

The passive acceptance of water which flows into one's canal which was acquiesced in by the original owner when he did not wish to use it for his own purposes is not an appropriation.[88]

Who may appropriate.[89]—Water may be appropriated by any citizen who can devote it to a beneficial use.[90] An appropriator need not be the fee owner of the land upon which the water is used.[91]

What may be appropriated.[92]—Water subject to a prior appropriation cannot be appropriated until the right is abandoned.[93] Water of a spring which is the source of a creek the water of which is appropriated is not subject to appropriation though the means by which the water is conveyed from the spring to the creek are subterranean[94] or because the water in the spring is partly seepage from irrigated lands.[95] Percolating water cannot be appropriated under statutes relating to streams.[96]

Method of appropriating.[97]—One desiring to appropriate waters of a stream may do so by actually diverting the water and applying it to a beneficial use,[98] or he may pursue the statutory method by posting and recording his notice and prosecuting his work within the time and in the manner prescribed by statute,[99] and in the latter case his right will relate back to the date of posting his notice.[1] In such case the appropriation is initiated by posting the notice and an inchoate right thereby arises which may ripen into a complete appropriation upon final delivery of the water at the place of intended use.[2]

89. See 4 C. L. 1839.

90. Under a rule that the use of waters in the streams of the state is a public one, every citizen has a right to divert and use it so long as he does not infringe upon the rights of one who has acquired a right by prior appropriation. Bullerdick v. Hermsmeyer, 32 Mont. 541, 81 P. 334.

93. Where one purchased water rights in a spring and the ditches and flumes used for its conveyance, water which continues to flow through such artificial courses is not subject to appropriation unless abandoned. Gill v. Malan [Utah] 82 P. 471. Evidence that the waters of a creek sank at a point above a cienega and ran or seeped under the ground through the cienega and emerged into a creek again below not as percolating water but as an underground stream, sufficiently shows that the water in the cienega is part of the water of the stream. Cave v. Tyler, 147 Cal. 454, 82 P. 64.

94. Later appropriators cannot lawfully acquire rights to springs which constitute the source of supply of a creek simply because the means by which the water is conveyed by the springs to the creek are subterranean and not well defined. Clark v. Ashley [Colo.] 82 P. 588.

95. Later appropriators can acquire no rights to water in a spring which is the source of a creek the waters of which are appropriated because the volume of water in the spring was increased by seepage from irrigated lands above. Clark v. Ashley [Colo.] 82 P. 588. Laws 1899, p. 215, relative to rights in irrigation ditches has no retroactive effect. Clark v. Ashley [Colo.] 82 P. 588.

One who posts and records notice and in all respects pursues the successive steps prescribed by Laws 1899, p. 380, is entitled to have his right relate back to the date of posting notice. Sand Point Water & Light Co. v. Panhandle Development Co. [Idaho] 83 P. 347. One who posted and recorded notice of intention to appropriate water under Sess. Laws 1899, p. 380, and within 60 days thereafter commenced work on his diverting system and continued such work with reasonable diligence, is entitled to have his right date from posting notice and it is superior to a subsequent appropriator claiming either under the statutory method or actual diversion. Id. The right of a settler on public land to use the waters of a stream running through it relates back to the initiation of its use, and not to the time his ditches were

Right to supply from water companies.—Under the rule that water appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution is a public trust, a user is entitled to a continued supply[3] upon compliance with the conditions upon which water is supplied.[4] A pledgee of water stock who is compelled to pay an assessment thereon may recover from the pledgor but cannot enforce payment by withholding water from the pledgor's land though the stock stands in his name on the corporation books.[5] But the pledgor cannot enhance the damages recoverable by further refusal to pay or passively allowing time to elapse in the unwarranted expectation that the pledgee would change his mind.[6]

Limit, measure, and extent of right.[7]—An appropriator can acquire a right to no more water than he can beneficially use,[8] but if he uses it without waste and in accordance with his appropriation he cannot be compelled to use it in a different manner.[9] He may use it on any lands owned by him,[10] but when his necessary use ceases he must restore the water to the stream whereupon it may be used by any person who needs it.[11] One interested in the water of a stream may enjoin the diversion of it to nonriparian lands if such diversion injuriously affects him[12] but not otherwise.[13] One injured by a wrongful appropriation may enjoin it though prior rights exhaust the supply of water.[14] The share of one who appropriates a specified amount does not depend on the average amount of water in the stream,[15] but he cannot increase the amount to which he is entitled by using an

3. Under the rule that water appropriated for sale, rental or distribution is a public trust and the rule that one within the flow of a ditch who has been furnished by an irrigation corporation with water is entitled to a continued use on the same terms as purchasers of land from the corporation, such corporations owe a public duty to furnish water irrespective of contract. Cozzens v. North Fork Ditch Co. [Cal. App.] 84 P. 342. Mills' Ann. St. § 570, requiring ditch companies to furnish water whenever they have a supply unsold, and § 2297, requiring them to sell to persons who have already purchased, have no application to a proceeding between individuals to which a ditch company is not a party to determine whether a sheriff's deed passed title to a water right. Cooper v. Shannon [Colo.] 85 P. 175.

4. Where a land owner's shares of stock in an irrigation company are sold under a void sale for nonpayment of assessments such owner is not entitled to enjoin the corporation from withholding water from his land until he pays subsequent assessments of which he received no notice. Curtin v. Arroyo Ditch & Water Co., 147 Cal. 337, 81 P. 982.

5. Mabb v. Stewart, 147 Cal. 413, 81 P. 1073. Where a pledgor of water stock sues the pledgee for damages for directing the company to withhold water from the pledgor for refusal to pay an assessment, evidence as to what became of the water shut off except so far as it was delivered to the pledgee, is irrelevant. 8. Where it appears that an appropriator does not beneficially use the amount of water diverted into his canal because of wastage and seepage caused by defective maintenance and that there is enough water in the stream if economically used to supply him and other higher riparian owners, he may not enjoin the use of water by such owners. Santa Rosa Irr. Co. v. Pecos River Irr. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 1014.

15. One who appropriates a specified amount is entitled to it if such amount is amount in excess of his appropriation.[16] The owner of a senior water right in an irrigation ditch cannot enlarge his use of the water to the injury of a junior right holder.[17] Appropriators of the water of a stream may join as parties plaintiff to have the rights of each determined.[18] Under the law of California where the common-law rule of riparian rights prevails, and the law of Nevada where the rule of prior appropriation prevails; whether or not the lands are riparian, riparian owners in California and appropriators lower down the stream in Nev da are equally protected in the rights given them by the laws of their respective states, both subject to the limitation that only a reasonable quantity for the use to which it is devoted shall be taken,[19] and when the volume is insufficient for the needs of all, each is to have a reasonable apportionment[20] to be determined by allowing each to appropriate the entire volume for a certain portion of the time.[21]

Title to a water right cannot be divested by mere noncompliance with the by-laws of an irrigation company.[22]

A water right may be acquired by adverse user or prescription.[23]—The rule that adverse possession of land vests title in the adverse holder applies to the prescriptive right to divert water.[24] In order to acquire a prescriptive right, the use must be open, notorious, exclusive, and adverse under a claim of right for the statutory period,[25] and to the detriment of the owner of the superior right.[26] A

In a suit to restrain such use by a senior right holder, the complaint did not show that such limitation had been waived. Eaton v. Larimer & Weld Irr. Co. [Colo.] 83 P. 627.

18. Settlers along a stream who have acquired the right to use water therefrom as a common source, each owning his land and water right in his individual capacity have such a common interest in having the rights of respective appropriators determined, as to join as parties plaintiff under Rev. St. 1887, § 4101. Frost v. Alturas Water Co. [Idaho] 81 P. 996.

19. Anderson v. Bassman, 140 F. 14. One who has acquired a right to water of a stream flowing through public lands by prior appropriation in accordance with the laws of Congress, is protected in such rights by Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2339, 2340, as against subsequent appropriators, though the latter withdraw the water within the limits of a different state and the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to determine rights of the parties is not affected by the fact that their lands and the points of diversion are in different states. Anderson v. Bassman, 140 F. 14.

Note: One who has by priority of possession acquired rights under the law of a state to water of a stream flowing through public lands is protected in them against subsequent grantees of the Federal government even though the lands granted lie in a different state. U. S. Rev. St. §§ 2339, 2340. Howell v. Johnson, 89 F. 556. By the law of Nevada an owner by prior appropriation gains a paramount right to the quantity of water which he has appropriated to a beneficial use. Reno Smelting, etc., Works v. Stevenson, 20 Nev. 269; Bliss v. Grayson, 24 Nev. 422, 456. The California decisions adopt the common-law rule of reasonable user, that a riparian owner can take at any time for irrigation only his proportionate share determined by the number of other riparian owners applying the water to an equally beneficial use. Lux v. Hoggin, 69 Cal. 255; Union Mill Co. v. Dangberg, 81 F. 73. The present decision holds that the rights under the laws of the two states are identical and enforces the California rule. Such an interpretation of the Nevada law is questionable and finds explanation only in the desire to curtail the doctrine of appropriation so as to permit irrigation of the greatest possible area.—See 19 Harv. L. R. 475.

20, 21. Anderson v. Bassman, 140 F. 14.

22. Though by-laws of an irrigation company required written application for the water each year and that one entitled to purchase water should forfeit his right if he failed to pay for two years, such by-laws could not without affirmative action by the company of which the owner was notified, operate to vest title to the right in the company or another to whom the same amount of water was delivered. Cooper v. Shannon [Colo.] 85 P. 175. Whether a tenant at will is entitled to hold a water right is immaterial in a suit to quiet title to such right, since the fact that he was not would not vest such right in the owner of the land. Cooper v. Shannon [Colo.] 85 P. 175.

24. Wutchumna Water Co. v. Ragle [Cal.] 84 P. 162.

25. Bullerdick v. Hermsmeyer, 32 Mont. 541, 81 P. 334. Evidence insufficient to show color of title based upon a government patent and mesne conveyances without paper title conveying water rights cannot prevail against a decree awarding such rights to another under a prior appropriation.[27] Ordinarily a lower riparian owner may not prescribe against an upper owner.[28] A tenant cannot acquire water rights by adverse use as against his landlord.[29]

The right of appropriation can be lost only by abandonment or adverse possession.[30]—The right acquired by appropriation may be lost by abandonment.[31] To constitute abandonment, there must be a concurrence of act and intent.[32] The mere intention to abandon if not coupled with the yielding up of possession or a cessation of user is not sufficient.[33] Nor will nonuser alone without an intention to abandon amount to an abandonment.[34] The question of abandonment is one of fact.[35] An abandonment of an old or dilapidated flume is not an abandonment of the right to divert or use water conveyed through such flume.[36] Failure of the owner of a water right to pay the irrigation company the stipulated price for carrying his water does not entitle another to contract with the company for carrying such water and thereby become the owner of the water right.[37] that one had acquired the right by adverse possession to use all the waters of a stream. Bullerdick v. Hermsmeyer, 32 Mont. 541, 81 P. 334. A right by prescription cannot be sustained where it appears that within the statutory period another had used the water under a judicial decree awarding it to him. Clark v. Ashley [Colo.] 82 P. 588. An upper appropriator who for the statutory period diverts a certain amount of water, thereby depriving a lower appropriator of the full amount appropriated by him acquires a right to such amount by prescription. Hubbs & Miner Ditch Co. v. Pioneer Water Co. [Cal.] 83 P. 253. Evidence held to show that one had acquired by prior appropriation and adverse user a right to a certain amount of water. Ledu v. Jim Yet Wa, 67 Cal. 346.

26. A use does not become adverse until some superior right is infringed and the owner of it suffers deprivation. Bullerdick v. Hermsmeyer, 32 Mont. 541, 81 P. 334. No adverse user can be initiated until the owners of the water right are deprived of the benefit of its use in such substantial manner as to notify them that their rights are being invaded. Clark v. Ashley [Colo.] 82 P. 588. So long as the use by one did not deprive the other of the quantity he was entitled to, or when such quantity was interfered with the latter forcibly prevented its use, the statute does not run. Anderson v. Bassman, 140 F. 14. No prescriptive right or right by adverse use can be established by the use of waters only when the original owner does not use them for his own purposes. (§ 14) B. Rights in ditches and canals.[38]—Under the law of New Mexico the right of a landowner to have an original community ditch run through or near his land upon its ancient course is a property right secured by the mutual understanding by which the ditch was constructed upon such course.[39] By entering into an enterprise to construct a community ditch a landowner does not vest, in the majority interested in such ditch, power to change at will, to his damage, the ancient course of such ditch.[40] But such change could be effected only by his consent,[41] except where the maintenance of the ditch on its ancient course becomes a practical impossibility.[42] The mere fact that the expense or inconvenience connected with the use of an old ditch is greater than would be present upon some other course will not justify a change of the course.[43] The difficulties must amount to a practical prohibition of its further maintenance.[44] The exception does not rest upon the power to detract from property rights upon the ground of necessity but upon the ground that under the original understanding all parties are presumed to have consented in advance to a modification if it should become essential to the continued existence of the community enterprise.[45] The Colorado statute providing that ditches constructed for utilizing waste, seepage or spring waters shall be governed by the rules applicable to ditches constructed for the purpose of utilizing water from running streams, if valid, applies only to such waters before they reach a natural stream.[46] One claiming water under such statute has the burden of proving that the water claimed is of the character designated, and the quantity thereof.[47]

One entitled to a supply of water from a community ditch may restrain interference with his rights.[48] One owner along a community ditch may not turn the water on his land in such manner as to flood the land of another.[49] The usual rules of construction apply to contracts between users of water from a ditch,[50] and Candelaria v. Vallejos [N. M.] 81 P. 589. Comp. their rights and liabilities rest in the terms of such contract.[51] Under contracts by which the owner of a canal and users of water therefrom agreed to pay the expense of maintaining it in proportion to the water used by each, and reserving to the owner the right to develop waters in addition to the amount provided for to be conveyed by the canal to other lands, users from the original canal are not bound to bear any of the expense of maintaining an extension,[52] and the fact that such users paid a portion of such expense does not estop them from denying liability under the contracts nor constitute a conclusive construction of such contracts.[53]

Ditch rights of way.[54]—A statute providing for the condemnation of rights of way must afford due process to the landowner.[55] A private person invoking the power of eminent domain under a statute giving him such power must bring himself within its purview.[56] Where a right of way for a ditch is condemned, only such estate or interest is acquired as is reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose in view,[57] and the owner of land across which a ditch right of way has been condemned has a right to a right of way across the condemned strip for the conveyance of water, subject to the superior easement in the land condemned.[58]

One who has acquired an easement for a ditch over public land has no right as against one who subsequently acquires title to change the line of such ditch.[59] Where it is determined that by reason of a right to maintain one ditch across the land of another there is no right to maintain another on a different line, the construction of the second ditch may be enjoined[60] regardless of the question of damage.[61]

In a suit to restrain one from changing the location of a ditch he had an easement to maintain, it was not error to refuse evidence as to the construction of the ditch on the land of another. The continuance of an action that obstructs a landowner in the free use and enjoyment of his land which if continued will ripen into an easement may be enjoined regardless of other damage. Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 715, 82 P. 381.

Wyoming it is provided by statute that owners of a reservoir are liable for injuries resulting from leakage or overflow.[63] One who constructs a large basin in connection with an irrigation canal, and to guard his dams and works erected spills from the basin onto the land of an adjacent owner, is liable at common law for injuries thereby caused.[64] An owner who consents to the flooding of his land waives his right to recover damages until such consent is withdrawn.[65] Owners of an irrigation canal are not liable as insurers for injuries resulting to adjacent property by seepage and overflow, but only for negligence.[66] The owner of an artificial ditch through which water runs for irrigating and domestic purposes must not negligently allow water running therein to break through or escape onto the lands of another.[67] Where it is sought to recover damages caused by obstruction of a stream into which an irrigation system naturally drained and it does not appear that the owner of the drainage system was acting otherwise than wholly within his rights, it is presumed that he had title and right to maintain the drainage system.[68]

(§ 14) C. Remedies and procedure.[69]—Under the rule that water appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution is a public trust, mandamus lies to compel a company to furnish a user with water,[70] but mandamus will not lie to enforce a private contract for the supply of water though the person contracting to furnish it is a common carrier.[71] The question whether one has more water than is required to satisfy his needs[72] or whether a change in the point of diversion may be made[73] must be litigated in an appropriate proceeding and not by suit to quiet

63. An extension basin constructed in a plan for irrigation though referred to as a lake or reservoir constitutes a reservoir within Rev. St. 1899, § 974, making owners of reservoirs liable for damage resulting from leakage or overflow or floods caused by breaking of banks. Howell v. Big Horn Basin Colonization Co. [Wyo.] 81 P. 785. In an action for damages caused to land by water seeping through the banks of a canal, evidence held to show that the canal owing to its loose manner of construction was the source of the seepage and that leakage from a reservoir did not materially contribute to the injury. Where water comes onto one's land from spills in an irrigation reservoir and the landowner authorizes such flow instead of acquiescing in the reservoir owner's offer to construct a ditch to divert the water away. Howell v. Big Horn Basin Colonization Co. [Wyo.] 81 P. 785. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 901, 932, 933, 3069, requiring ditch owners to maintain embankments, etc., so as to prevent damages by water to adjacent premises, though not specifically requiring care in the construction of the bottom of the canal, do not exempt the owner from liability for negligence in that regard. Id.

71. One who has a private contract for a supply of water has an adequate remedy at law if the other party fails to comply with it and mandamus will not lie though it be conceded that the other party is a common carrier of water. State v. Washington Irr. Co. [Wash.] 83 P. 308.

72. Where a purchaser of land at sheriff's sale claims a water right as being appurtenant whether he has more water than is actually needed to irrigate the land cannot be litigated in a suit to quiet title to such water right. Cooper v. Shannon [Colo.] 85 P. 175.

73. In an action to quiet title to a water right, the court may not adjudge that a title to water rights. Where water rights were purchased under deeds providing that when rights equal to the capacity of the system were sold, the title to the system should pass to the grantees of the rights, a cause of action to cancel a sale of rights in excess of the capacity of the system accrued at the time such deeds were made.[74]

In an action to procure a peremptory writ of mandate against a water master commanding him to distribute water from a different creek from that named in the decree under which he is a making distribution, all persons to be affected should be made parties.[75] Subsequent appropriators are necessary parties to a suit to enjoin the water commissioner from diverting water in a stream from the use of prior appropriators to their use.[76]

A decree awarding a water right should comply with the findings upon which it is made.[77] It should specifically define the respective rights and obligations of the parties to it[78] and protect all superior rights.[79] A water master, in allotting rights, is not required to look beyond a decree clear upon its face.[80] Under a contract providing that users of water from a canal should bear the expense of maintaining it in proportion to the amount of water used, a judgment fixing their rights on an extension is not erroneous because it based the rights on the amount flowing instead of the amount used.[81] Such judgment is not indefinite because failing to fix the place of measurement.[82] In Wyoming the order of a district court appointing a person to distribute the water of a partnership ditch is final.[83]

Wutchumna Water Co. v. Ragle [Cal.] 84 P. 162.

78. A decree enjoining interference with a water right where it appeared that there was an implied right that the party restrained should have the use of the water during certain periods should specifically award such right to him. Twaddle v. Winters [Nev.] 85 P. 280. Where one testified that the irrigation closed October first and that he sometimes used water a little later, a perpetual injunction against interference with his rights should limit his right to use the water to October fifteenth. Laws 1903, p. 122, c. 93, providing that the decision of the district court on a hearing for the appointment of a person to distribute the waters of a partnership ditch shall be final, no appeal lies from the order of appointment of the district court. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 83 P. 218. The provision of such act "The decision shall be final unless appeal is taken to the district court" means final in the sense that there shall be no further appeal. § 15. Irrigation districts and irrigation and power companies.[84]—Irrigation districts are organized under statutes providing for their creation,[85] and in their organization all statutory provisions must be complied with.[86] Towns and villages may be included within their boundaries.[87] Persons owning land under the system of canals of an irrigation district become by operation of law members of it.[88] It may institute such judicial proceedings as are authorized by law,[89] and in such proceedings all questions necessary to the accomplishment of the end in view may be inquired into.[90] The validity of proceedings to establish an irrigation district is not subject to collateral attack.[91] Bonds must be issued in conformity to the law by which they are authorized.[92] A landowner who has waived his right to the use of water from a district is not liable on bonds issued by it.[93] Holders of bonds issued by an irrigation district are entitled to have money collected for the payment of interest thereon so applied[94] if available,[95] and mandamus will issue to compel the treasurer of an irrigation district to pay interest coupons on bonds issued by the district;[96] but the personal liability of the treasurer for interest on interest coupons attached to bonds issued by the district for failure to pay them on presentation, cannot be enforced by mandamus.[97] Interest is not collectible

87. When lots and lands within a town or village will be benefited by irrigation under the system proposed for a district organized under Laws 1903, p. 150, such towns and villages may be included in the district. Nampa & M. Irr. Dist. v. Brose [Idaho] 83 P. 499.

88. Where an irrigation district is formed under Laws 1884, p. 127, c. 49, the parties owning land under the system of canals become by operation of law members of the district, and title to the property of the corporation remained in them and cannot be transferred by the district or its trustees. Thompson v. McFarland [Utah] 82 P. 478.

89. Under the provisions of Laws 1903, p. 150, an irrigation district may institute proceedings in which the proceedings of the board and of the district providing for the issue and sale of bonds may be judicially examined, approved, and confirmed, whether or not any of said bonds have been sold. Nampa & M. Irr. Dist. v. Brose [Idaho] 83 P. 499. Notice of the hearing for confirmation may be by posting and publication as provided in the act. Id.

90. Under Laws 1903, p. 150, in a proceeding to determine the validity of bonds issued by an irrigation district, the court may examine into all proceedings looking to the organization of such district and all other proceedings which may affect the validity of the bonds. Nampa & M. Irr. Dist. v. Brose [Idaho] 83 P. 499. Provisions of Laws 1903, p. 150, relative to the issuance of bonds by an irrigation district held to have been complied with. Id. 93. While Laws 1903, p. 150, contemplate a general plan for the purchase and construction of canals and works, a landowner within such district may, with consent of the district, waive his right to water from such district if no one will be injured, and in such case no part of the bond issue can be apportioned to his land. Nampa & M. Irr. Dist. v. Brose [Idaho] 83 P. 499.

94. Where bonds and interest coupons of an irrigation district had not been refunded, the right of the holder of the bonds to have money collected for the payment of interest coupons so applied could not be defeated by a transfer of the fund to other purposes. Hewel v. Hogin [Cal. App.] 84 P. 1002.

95. Where on a hearing of a petition to compel the treasurer of an irrigation district to pay interest coupons on bonds, it was contended that there was no evidence to show that there were available funds in the hands of the treasurer, evidence that an assessment had been levied for the purpose of paying interest on such bonds and others held to show that money in the hands of the treasurer was subject to the payment of such coupons. Hewel v. Hogin [Cal. App.] 84 P. 1002. It was not error to exclude parol evidence that the purpose of the assessment was different from that declared in the resolution adopted when the assessment was levied. Id.

on overdue interest coupons on bonds of an irrigation district, where no provision for such interest is made.[98] A decree by which members of a quasi public irrigation district are restrained from interfering with the ditches of the district becomes functus officio on dissolution of the district and the members are remitted to their original rights as landowners.[99] Irrigation companies are quasi public corporations with no powers except those granted expressly or by implication.[1]

§ 16. Water companies and water supply districts.[2]—A water company is not divested of its property rights in water because it transmits it to its customers through pipes belonging to another person.[3]

Water franchises.[4]—A contract by which a municipality grants a franchise to construct and operate a waterworks system is within its incidental powers.[5] It is an exercise of its business or proprietory powers and not a delegation of a governmental function.[6] It may place a reasonable time limit on the exercise of the rights conferred.[7] The invalidity of a portion of the contract which attempts to make such franchise exclusive does not preclude the enforcement of the valid portions.[8] A grant of a waterworks franchise is not to be construed by implication to divest the city of power to construct a system of its own,[9] and a construction by the city of a competing plant is not a taking of the company's property without due process nor a taking without just compensation,[10] nor is it an impairment of the obligation of its contract,[11] though the grant is exclusive as against any other person or corporation.[12] But if a wholly exclusive franchise is granted, the municipal-

A decree in favor of an irrigation district formed as authorized by Laws 1884, p 127, c. 49, restraining interference with the ditch belonging to such company does not survive the dissolution of the company under Rev. St. 1898, § 2920, declaring that an action does not abate by the death of a party if the cause survive. Id. Where damage if any in taking water from a ditch in violation of an injunction resulted to all landowners entitled to water therefrom, a proceeding for contempt for violation of such injunction cannot be maintained by the district in the absence of proof of actual or special damage. 1. The Act of February 28, 1895 (Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 8-14), construed and held, that ditch corporations thereby created were involuntary quasi public corporations with no powers except those expressly conferred or impliedly necessary to the performance of statutory duties. Candelaria v. Vallejos [N. M.] 81 P. 589. This act does not confer upon the officers or majority interested in the ditches thereby incorporated power to change the ancient course against the consent of owners who would be injuriously affected. Id. An irrigation company may contract with an engineer to furnish plans for the construction of a proposed canal and from which the board of directors of the district may estimate the cost thereof and the amount of bonds to be voted therefor. 9. Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 32, 50 Law. Ed. —. A contract by which a city grants a water company a franchise to lay its mains in the streets and furnish water to the inhabitants which the company agrees to do but containing no provision that the grant shall be exclusive or that the city will not construct a plant of its own does not by implication bind the city not to do so. Tillamook Water Co. v. Tillamook City, 139 F. 405. Contract granting a franchise and obligating the company to construct a system and maintain it for a term of years and binding the city to take and pay for water during such term. City of Meridian v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 67. There cannot be an implied contract in a grant of a franchise by a municipality that it will do nothing to impair or destroy the validity thereof or that it will not enter into competition with the grantee, such a restraint can be imposed only by express provision. Phoenix Water Co. v. City Council of City of Phoenix [Ariz.] 84 P. 1095.

ity is precluded from constructing a competing system.[13] A provision in an ordinance granting a waterworks franchise that if the company failed to furnish pure water, the city might after a certain period after giving notice, be relieved from paying hydrant rentals, is valid as a provision for liquidated damages[14] and is not a provision for a forfeiture.[15] The acceptance of impure water by the city is not a waiver of such provision, where no preliminary test is provided for and the impurities were not known of at the time of the acceptance.[16] A water company may be ousted of its charter for furnishing impure and contaminated water.[17] Where a water company holds its franchise under a contract providing that the city might acquire its plant upon payment of its value determined by appraisers the company is not entitled to a temporary injunction in a suit by it to perpetually enjoin the city from taking steps to acquire the plant.[18]

Condemnation of property by water companies.[19]—Water companies are frequently authorized to exercise the power of eminent domain.[20] The ascertainment of the measure of compensation is regulated by statute.[21] A water company may lay its pipes in a public street without paying compensation to any one.[22]

Water boards and districts[23] have such powers as are conferred upon them by statute.[24]

12. The obligation of a contract by which a city gives a waterworks company an exclusive franchise as against any other person or corporation is not impaired where the city erects a system of its own under subsequent legislative authority. Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 32, 50 Law. Ed. —. A bill by which a waterworks company seeks to enjoin the construction of a system by the city on the ground that it has a contract with the city by which it has exclusive privileges, the obligation of which will be impaired, raises a question for the Federal court regardless of the citizenship of the parties. Id.

13. An ordinance by which a city grants a franchise to construct and maintain waterworks, expressly stating that when accepted it should constitute a contract and measure the rights and liabilities of the parties, obligating the grantee to construct a plant according to plans furnished by the city and maintain the same for a specified period with a capacity sufficient to supply all the needs of the city and binding the city to take and pay for water during the term with an election to purchase at stated times upon specified conditions is when acted upon a contract and precludes the city from constructing a competing plant during the period it is in force. 14. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Pontiac, 112 Ill. App. 545. Service of such notice upon the superintendent of the waterworks is service upon the company. Id. A claim that such notice had not been served is frivolous where it appears that it was received and acted upon. Id.

A water company maintained a line connected with a mill pond which received the sewage of a town, and at times of low water or when there was a fire, water from the pond was pumped into the mains of the company, and mixing with other water rendered it unfit for use. Held that a judgment of ouster was proper although the company had an agreement with the borough to maintain a connection with the mill pond. Commonwealth v. Potter County Water Co., 212 Pa. 463, 61 A. 1099.

18. The prosecution of the arbitration to determine the value of the plant does not create such a cloud on the company's title as entitles it to a temporary injunction. Eau Claire Water Co. v. Eau Claire [Wis.] 106 N. W. 679. Nor is it ground for such injunction that the company would be compelled to participate in the proceedings and devote time to ascertaining the fair valuation. Id. Nor that it would be compelled to incur expense in such proceedings. Id. Before proceeding with the arbitration, the city should give bond to indemnify the company for expenses incurred. Id.

20. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 4833, giving authority to hydraulic companies to condemn land in order to erect dams is not void on the ground that the use is not a public one. Stoy v. Indiana Hydraulic Power Co. [Ind.] 76 N. E. 1057.

21. Under Pub. St. Supp. 1895, c. 498, §§ 14, 15, giving one a right to trial by jury of the question of damages where his prope ty is taken for metropolitan water supply, the report of the commissioners finding that he was not entitled to damages could be disregarded in passing on his motion for a jury trial. Carville v. Commonwealth [Mass.] 75 N. E. 639. Where one whose property is taken for metropolitan water supply is dissatisfied with the determination of damages made by a commission he may claim a trial by jury of such question under the provisions of Pub. St. Supp. 1895, c. 488, §§ 14, 15. Id. The acceptance by the court of the commissioner's report finding that he was not entitled to damages did not, in the absence of waiver, preclude the allowance of a motion for a jury trial, where the motion was filed not later than the succeeding term after the report was filed. Id.

Public ownership.[25]—Municipal corporations may be authorized by law to acquire ownership of waterworks.[26]

Contracts for public supply.[27]—The question whether the construction and operation by a city of a system of waterworks determined upon in a lawful manner would be an economical and wise enterprise is not a matter for judicial inquiry.[28] Municipalities may contract with each other for water supply only when so authorized by statute.[29] Such a contract must be in writing,[30] and contain all the elements essential to the validity of any other contract.[31] Such a contract is not modified by an extension of the limits of the municipality supplied[32] and a wrongful use of water by such municipality may be enjoined.[33] In making a contract for the supply of water, the municipal authorities are charged with knowledge of the natural laws of water but not with a technical knowledge.[34] A city authorized to incur indebtedness for waterworks owned by it and to exchange water rights for rights acquired and owned by it may acquire water rights on condition subsequent.[35] A contract by a municipality to pay for water used by it may be implied.[36] A contract for a longer period than the city is authorized to contract for is binding until rescinded.[37] A company authorized to furnish water to the town and

30. A contract between two municipalities for a supply of water for public and private use is within the statute of frauds. Jersey City v. Harrison [N. J. Err. & App.] 62 A. 765.

31. Where one town authorized the preparation of a contract for a supply of water from another and the latter accepted before the contract was presented to them it was held that no contract was created because the one prepared did not correspond to the terms of the resolution authorizing it and such resolution did not constitute a proposal that the latter could accept. Jersey City v. Harrison [N. J. Err. & App.] 62 A. 765.

32. Where one municipal corporation, as authorized by statute, contracted to furnish water to another throughout its district, the contract is not modified so as to require it to furnish water outside such limits by a statute extending the limits of the latter but containing no reference to the contract. Turners Falls Fire Dist. v. Millers Falls Water Supply Dist. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 630. It is doubtful whether the legislature may constitutionally increase the contractual obligation of a municipal corporation which has agreed to furnish water to another similar corporation by extending the boundaries of the latter into another town and providing that the contract should apply to the additional territory. Id.

33. Where one municipal corporation is unlawfully using water supplied it by another and it is impossible to determine how much is being so used or to interrupt such wrongful use without breaking the contract, relief may be granted by injunction. Turners Falls Fire Dist. v. Millers Falls Water Supply Dist. [Mass.] 75 N. E. 630.

34. They are charged with notice that where the top of the dam is but little higher than the hydrants in the higher part of town, the pressure there would be very weak but not with knowledge that the use of water as contemplated by the contract would reduce the level in the reservoir so that none would flow into such higher hydrants. Town of Boonton v. Boonton Water Co. [N. J. Ch.] 61 A. 390.

35. A contract by which a city exchanged water from its canal for other water suitable for domestic use upon condition that if it failed to furnish the exchange water the other party could use the rights he parted with during the period of default unless such default extended beyond a certain period, in which case it was optional with the other party to terminate the contract, is valid. State v. Salt Lake City [Utah] 81 P. 273.

36. Where a municipality receives and its inhabitants for certain purposes can furnish it for no other to the detriment of those specified.[38] Covenants in a contract by which a water company agreed to furnish water to a town and its inhabitants are continuing in their nature and run with the waterworks.[39] Substantial compliance by the water company with the terms of the contract is all that is required.[40] It is a reasonable regulation to require a water company to obtain permission from the town council before laying its mains in the streets.[41] Where the order in which work shall be done is not prescribed in a contract granting a waterworks franchise, it is not a prerequisite to a suit by the company to compel the designation of streets upon which pipes shall be laid and the places where hydrants shall be placed that they show performance of the contract on their part by the purchase of machinery or otherwise.[42]

Breach and enforcement of public contract.[43]—Individual takers may enforce performance of a contract by which they are to be supplied.[44]

§ 17. Water service and rates.[45]—Water companies are quasi public in nature and are bound to supply water[46] at reasonable rates[47] and on equal terms to all who apply.[48] Especially is this so where the use of all water appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution, is declared to be a public one.[49] A city which is the equitable owner of a water plant may restrain actions against it for water furnished by the legal owner until equities are adjudicated.[50] uses water though not under an express contract, an obligation to pay for it will be implied. New Jersey Suburban Water Co. v. Harrison [N. J. Err. & App.] 62 A. 490.

37. A contract by a city for a water supply which by its terms is to remain in force for a period longer than the city is authorized to contract for, is binding so long as no action is taken to rescind it. McGonigale v. Defiance, 140 F. 621.

38. A contract by which a company is to furnish water to a town for domestic purposes, extinguishment of fires, and for public and domestic purposes of the inhabitants, does not authorize it to furnish manufacturing and other commercial purposes to the detriment of the inhabitants of the town. Town of Boonton v. Boonton Water Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 390. A schedule of rates attached to a contract containing an item "special rates, including hydrants in hotel yards, stables, business and factory use," relates to the use for domestic purposes and does not authorize a sale of water to furnish power, to the detriment of the inhabitants. Id.

39. Are binding on a company to which the works are transferred, though not purporting to bind the original company's assigns. Town of Boonton v. Boonton Water Co. [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 390. The assignee of a water contract takes it subject to a limitation therein as to the rates for which water is to be furnished. Robbins v. Bangor Ry. & Electric Co. [Me.] 62 A. 136.

40. It is no defense to an action by a water company to recover from a city under its contract that conditions of the contract were not complied with in all respects, where there was a general compliance, and the city has accepted benefits under the contract for several years without giving notice of an intention to rescind or forfeit for noncompliance with such conditions. McGonigale v. Defiance, 140 F. 621.

41. Beaver Valley Water Co. v. Conway Borough [Pa.] 62 A. 844. Under a rule requiring a water company to obtain a permit from the town council before laying its mains in the streets, application must be made to the council and not to the burgess. Id.

42. City of Gadsden v. Mitchell [Ala.] 40 So. 557. Where it is impossible for a waterworks company which is granted a franchise by a contract which gives the city power to designate the streets on which pipes shall be laid, to proceed without such designation, mandatory injunction is the proper remedy upon the city's refusal. Id.

43. See 4 C. L. 1851.

44. While a town is not the agent of its citizens and authorized to make contracts binding on them yet if as a consideration or as a mere inducement for the making of a hydrant contract, it agrees to supply the inhabitants at specified rates, the contractor is bound to fulfill the contract as to individual takers. 48. A city which owns its waterworks cannot arbitrarily select its patrons. City of Chicago v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 218 Ill. 40, 75 N. E. 803.

49. A beneficiary of such use may compel a water company to supply him with water. Petition for mandamus held to show that a water company was in control of a public use and that petitioner was a beneficiary of such use. Mahoney v. American Land & Water Co. [Cal. App.] 83 P. 267. If there was any defect in the petition it was held cured

Service contracts.[51]—A contract must be based on a consideration[52] and there must be a duty imposed on the company to supply him with water.[53]

Injuries from deficient supply or equipment, and negligence.[54]—A water company required by its contract with the municipality to furnish a certain pressure is liable for injuries by fire which result from failure to maintain such pressure.[55] Where sued for such loss it is competent for it to show what pressure it usually maintained,[56] also what pressure was necessary to throw water to the height required by its contract,[57] also that persons using faucets just before the fire had the usual pressure.[58] But a company under contract to furnish a city a sufficient supply of water for extinguishing fires is not liable to a citizen whose property is destroyed because of failure to furnish such supply.[59] A city which is granted a right of way over land and has legislative authority to lay and maintain a pipe line must use ordinary care in selecting the material for and in constructing the line, in the use of the same and in operating its pumps,[60] and is liable for negligence in carrying out the work.[61] One who seeks to recover from a borough for injuries sustained because of a leaky water main must show that the borough maintained the waterworks, that injury resulted from faulty or negligent construction of the pipe, or negligence in not preparing the same after notice or failure to use due diligence under the circumstances.[62] Punitive damages may be recovered under some circumstances.[63]

50. A city entered into a contract for the construction of a water plant, water to be furnished at specified rates, and the city to have an option to purchase the plant within a year after completion. The contractor failed to complete the plant within the time specified and the city purchased water from a third person at a specified price. Later the third person turned over his supply to the contractor who commenced to furnish water from the incomplete system at rates specified in the contract. The city exercised its option. Held that since the city on exercising its option became the equitable owner but could not resist an action to recover for water furnished at the rates specified, such action would be restrained until the equitable questions were settled subject to the right of the contractor to interest on the purchase price less amounts paid him for water. 52. A complaint by a private consumer against a water company for failure to comply with its contract to furnish him water must show that such contract was based on a consideration and was binding on the company at the time of the alleged breach. Spencer v. Bessemer Water Works Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 91.

53. A complaint by a private consumer against a water company for failure to furnish him water must show a contract between the water company and the municipality imposing a duty on the company to furnish such water. Spencer v. Bessemer Waterworks Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 91.

Rules and regulations of service; pipes, meters and consumption.[64]—A water company which is a public service corporation may adopt reasonable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business to which individual water takers must conform.[65] It may require payment for a reasonable time in advance.[66]

Water rates.[67]—Rates must be uniform, reasonable, and just,[68] and are to be fixed by a competent tribunal if no agreement can be reached.[69] The reasonableness of rates is determined by the right of the company to derive a fair income based upon the fair value of its plant at the time it is being used, taking into account the cost of maintenance or depreciation and current operating expenses and the right of the public to have no more exacted than the services in themselves are worth.[70] Water takers may be classified on reasonable grounds but not arbitrarily.[71] A charge to small customers is not necessarily unreasonable because in excess of what a large customer would have to pay for the same amount of water.[72] The quantity of water used and not the cost of the individual service are the principal elements for consideration in fixing the charges as between individual water takers or classes of takers.[73] A difference in price cannot be made according to the use made by the customer nor is a discrimination proper based on the value of the service to the customer.[74] Rates fixed by the contract under which the company acquires the right to lay its mains cannot be subsequently altered by the company,[75] but rates may be revised if no contract prevents.[76] Within these limitations it may change from an annual or flat rate to a meter rate.[77] In case of unnecessary waste a meter may be applied and reasonable meter rates charged.[78] Municipalities have power to prescribe reasonable rates,[79] and to correct extortionate ones.[80] Where maximum rates are fixed by the ordinance accepted by the company, rates not in excess of such maximum are binding on consumers[81] unless altered by the municipality under statutory authority.[82]

L. 1876 p. 318 (Rev. 1877 p. 1365), requiring consent in writing of the municipalities to be supplied, to impose terms as to rates to be charged for both public and private consumption. Long Branch Commission v. Tintern Manor Water Co. [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 474.

80. Where a water company furnishes water to a municipality for public and private consumption the municipality, independent of statute, has power to protect inhabitants from extortionate rates. Long Branch Com-

If water rates due a city are not a lien on the property delinquent as against a subsequent purchaser,[83] one who purchases property after water rates have become delinquent and under protest and to prevent the water being shut off pays the amount claimed may recover it with interest in an action at law.[84] In Philadelphia there is no personal liability on owners of real estate for water rent.[85]

Remedy for nonpayment of charges.[86]—A water company may cut off water from a customer who neglects or refuses to pay reasonable rates,[87] but has no right to cut off water until arrearages due from a former owner are paid in the absence of a statute expressly authorizing it or making such arrearages a lien on the land;[88] but under a rule that for nonpayment of water rents the water may be shut off from the premises until arrears shall be fully paid, a grantee of premises cannot compel a city which owns the waterworks to furnish him with water until arrearages due by his grantor are paid.[89] A statute which renders the owner of premises liable for water furnished by a municipality to a tenant is not void as a taking of property without due process or making one person liable for the debts of another.[90] Where mandamus to compel a water company to refrain from refusing to furnish water would be ineffective as against lessees of the property and the deprivation of such supply involve the comfortable use of the property, relief by injunction may be granted.[91]

The shutting off of the public water supply for refusal of a borough to pay an unreasonable charge for past service may be enjoined,[92] and where a water company which is the sole source of supply threatens to shut off the water for refusal of the town to pay for past service which it asserts is reasonable and which the town asserts is unreasonable, a preliminary injunction will be granted pending the settlement of the question[93] upon compliance with proper conditions.[94]

Rates for irrigation and payment of charges.[95]—There rests upon an irrigation company which is a public service corporation, so long as it uses its franchise, a duty to render to the public, at reasonable rates, the service for which it was created.[96] Whether unreasonable rates are charged is a proper subject for judicial inquiry.[97] What is a reasonable rate is a question of fact to be proved as other facts are proved.[98] In determining what is such reasonable rate, the effect of the rate upon persons to whom service is rendered is as important a factor as is the effect thereof upon the profits of the corporation.[99] Where statutes do not prescribe a maximum lawful rate, if rates are exacted which in the light of all the circumstances are excessive, one who pays such rates under protest or under circumstances which do not amount to an acquiescence in the charge may recover the excess.[1]

§ 18. Grants, contracts and licenses.[2]—In the conveyance of water rights the formalities prescribed by law must be observed.[3] A transfer of a right to a certain amount of water of a stream is within the statute of frauds,[4] but may be taken from the operation of such statute by sufficient part performance.[5] A grantee of land becomes vested with a right to use water right appurtenant together with the means of using the same,[6] especially when the deed conveys appurtenances.[7] Where the deed does not specify the particular appurtenant right it may be established by extrinsic evidence.[8] A water right, though appurtenant to the land, is property and may be transferred either with or without the land.[9] Whether a deed of land conveys water rights depends on the intention of the grantor to be gathered from the terms of the deed or if the deed is silent from the presumption arising from circumstances and whether such right is or is not incident to and necessary to the bene-

A deed of land "together with one-half interest in the Clear Fork irrigation ditch and one-half interest in the water belonging to said ditch or that is entitled to run through the same either by decree, appropriation, or ownership," held to pass 20 inches of water owned by the grantor as part of the appropriation of another ditch but which was diverted and used through Clear Fork ditch. Fluke v. Ford [Colo.] 84 P. 469.

7. Where one constructs a ditch in which water continually flows, which is a benefit to the land and subsequently conveys a portion of the land and exacts an additional consideration for the right to use the water of the ditch, the right to use water from the ditch is a quasi easement which passes as a "privilege and appurtenance." ficial enjoyment of the land.[10] The conveyance of appurtenant water rights to a corporation organized to hold them does not segregate them from the land,[11] even though the stock received in lieu of such rights is personal property for the purpose of transfer.[12] A transfer of utilities for conveying water does not pass water rights.[13] Water rights which are easements connected with the land pass in their entirety.[14] A purchaser of a water right takes free from equities of which he has no notice.[15] A reservation of a power right will be construed according to its terms and the intent of the parties,[16] but a grantor who excepts a certain amount of water is entitled to it.[17]

The usual rules of construction apply to grants of easements of flowage.[18] In determining the nature and extent of an easement of flowage created by express grant, recourse may be had to all the attendant circumstances at the time of making it in connection with the language of the grant.[19] A reservation by a lessor of a right to flood lands reserves the right to flood no greater area than is described in the lease.[20] Where a deed of a moiety of a tract of land included a flowage privilege, the reconveyance of the moiety extinguished the privilege.[21] A prescriptive easement

Where an owner of land constructed a flume through it and thereafter subdivided it and sold it to several purchasers granting to each the right to use a designated quantity of water from the flume subject to reservations in his favor, the water rights reserved and granted were easements connected with the land and when the grantor parted with all his land he had no water rights though he had not granted the entire volume of the flume. in the water of a well may be acquired by use under a claim of right for the statutory period.[22] Such easement carries a right to pass to and fro over the well lot to get water.[23] Where a grantee of land with the right to use a designated quantity of water from a flume uses an amount in excess of his grant without objection for over 20 years and in reliance on the right to use such quantity had improved his premises at great expense, he is entitled to continue to use that amount.[24]

Under a lease from the state of the right to use water from a canal reserving to the state the right to direct where and in what manner the water is to be taken, the closing down of the dam in order to make repairs at a time the lessee was not using water is not in hostility to his rights.[25] Failure of the state to collect rents or declare a forfeiture for nonpayment thereof did not render use of the water by the lessee unlawful.[26] The right of forfeiture in such lease is to be strictly construed.[27] The lessee is liable for interest on overdue rents.[28]

Where injury resulted from flooding alleged to be caused by a dam, it is proper to admit evidence of the character of the flood as to the amount of rainfall and snow, and the temperature at the time of the flood. Id. Where injuries to land by flooding are caused during an extraordinary flood by a dam made by debris accumulated against a gas pipe, the owner of the pipe the flow of water thereon, the tort of one is no defense to an action against the other.[38] Ordinarily no duty rests upon a municipality through whose boundaries a stream passes to keep it in a safe condition or free from obstructions not of its own causing.[39] This is so though such stream be used in connection with the sewer system under statutory authority.[40] The owner of a building must prevent water from the roof thereof from falling on and injuring adjacent land.[41]

The damages recoverable are limited to such as proximately results from the negligent act complained of.[42] The measure of damages for temporary injuries caused by flooding is the cost of restoring the land to its former condition together with compensation for loss of its use,[43] and for permanent injury it is the depreciation in the value of the land.[44] The measure of damages for the destruction of springs is the permanent depreciation in the value of the land.[45]

not extend to every conceivable manner in which arms may be borne.[51] The right to carry concealed weapons is completely denied and may be entirely prohibited[52] on the ground that the habit of carrying concealed weapons is one of the most fruitful sources of crime;[53] hence conferring authority to carry them by legislative act upon some persons is no infringement of the rights of others not so authorized.[54] Such legislation is referable to the police power.[55] The provision in Section 4 of the Bill of Rights "that the people have the right to bear arms for their defense and security" refers to the people collectively.[56] It was intended to protect society rather than the individual.[57] It is essentially military in its character,[58] and the 2nd amendment to the Federal Constitution is proof that the right to bear arms is restricted to members of the militia, or some other military organization.[59] In states where it is held that a citizen has the constitutional right to bear such arms as are used in civilized warfare, it is placed on the ground that it was intended that the people should accustom themselves to arms so as to be familiar with them in case of need in times of war.[60] This argument is weakened, however, by the existence of an organized state militia.[61] It follows that in the absence of constitutional or statutory authority, no person has the right to assume the duty of protecting society by carrying weapons.[62] It is lawful to carry a pistol under certain constitutional[63] and statutory exceptions[64] relating to arresting officers,[65] travelers,[66] persons in actual and imminent danger of attack,[67] or authorizing mere transportation with no view to its use.[68]

ally or negligently is generally a question for the jury.[71] In affidavits and indictments, the statute should generally be followed strictly,[72] but it is not a defect if more is stated than is called for.[73] Cases on questions of evidence will be found in the notes.[74] In an action for damages from injuries from the firing of a weapon, counsel may not in his address to the jury refer to another case where a boy was imprisoned for the negligent firing of a gun.[75] The fact that a person carried a gun to a house 2 or 3 days before a barbecue, and, on the day, left the crowd and returned to it with his gun, would justify a jury in finding that he had brought a deadly weapon to a public gathering contrary to statute;[76] but it has been held that coming into possession of a deadly weapon while at a public gathering is not the same thing as carrying a pistol to such a gathering.[77] Punishment may be by fine[78] or imprisonment, or both.[79] An instruction that if one carrying a pistol was not on his way home but going about town was guilty of violating the statutes in regard to weapons is not erroneous.[80]

§ 4. Civil liability for negligent use of weapons.—Whether a person who fires off a revolver intentionally or negligently is liable for the consequences depends upon the circumstances under which the shot is fired.[81] In order to recover for the killing of a child by a deadly weapon, it must appear that the death was caused by wrongful act.[82] Gross neglect is necessary to establish a liability in Louisiana.[83] Probably no case declares that where persons are gunning together voluntarily and lawfully each may be held responsible for every accident or mishap.[84] Where several jointly engage in an unlawful shooting whereby a third person is injured they are each liable without proof of which one actually fired the shot.[85]

Holman v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 646. Where on a charge of shooting into a dwelling house, the prosecution has established facts tending to show that the motive of the accused in doing the shooting was to get rid of a negro camp near the house, the defendant may show that a notice had been served upon the occupant of the house by the white people of the neighborhood that the negro camp must go. State v. Nugent [La.] 40 So. 581. Testimony that one drew a six-shooter, flourished it, said, "Let's shoot 'em up," put it back into his pocket, walked off and later shooting was heard in the direction in which he had gone, is insufficient evidence to permit the case to go to a jury on the charge of disturbing the peace of a town. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.[86]

A law requiring the state weighing of grain going into and coming out of public warehouses does not conflict with the Federal constitution.[87] The statute of Missouri providing for official weighing where state grain inspection is established does not authorize such weighing except where the law requires inspection,[88] even where the state inspectors do inspect the grain by permission of the board of trade,[89] and official weighing of grain is, therefore, not authorized except as to grain going into or coming out of public warehouses.[90] The fact that grain is required to be weighed by state weighers does not prohibit other persons interested from themselves weighing the same grain where there is no intrusion of the state office.[91]

WHARVES.

Wharves are public and private.[92]—The question whether a wharf has been dedicated to the public is for the jury,[93] but whether an ordinance operates as an abandonment of a wharf so dedicated is a question of law for the court.[94]

A municipality has no power, in the absence of a special legislative grant, to release a wharf dedicated to public use.[95] A wharf, although privately constructed and owned, may become so affected or impressed with a public interest as to be subject to public control and regulation.[96]

Uses of public wharves.[97]—Under a statute authorizing the commissioner of docks to lease wharves, piers, slips, etc., the commissioner is not authorized to lease for purposes not incidental to the use as a wharf.[98] The state of Louisiana being charged with the administration of the banks of the Mississippi river and having conferred on the board of commissioners of New Orleans full administrative power over the public wharves, the city of New Orleans could not authorize the construction of a railroad bed thereon without the consent of the board.[99]

Duty and care respecting wharf and injuries thereat.[100]—Under statutes in some states it is the duty of the city to keep public wharves in repair and it is liable if it fails to do so.[101] A dock owner must exercise reasonable diligence in ascertaining the condition of the berths, and if there is any dangerous obstruction, must remove it or give due notice to vessels about to enter.[102] In an action to re-

Statutes in some states provide that devises or bequests for religious, benevolent, charitable, or scientific purposes are void in case testator dies within a specified time after the execution of the will.[7]

In Louisiana one cannot by will leave immovables, nor movables in excess of one-tenth part of the whole value of his estate, to one with whom he has lived in open concubinage.[8]

In many states a share of the estate is given to children born after the making of the will who are not mentioned or provided for therein.[9] One has the same right to disinherit his adopted children as his natural children.[10]

Laws 1848, p. 448, c. 319, § 6, making such gifts to corporations void if testator dies within two months after execution of the will applies only to gifts to corporations organized under that statute. In re Cooney's Will, 98 N. Y. S. 676. Under Act April 26, 1855, § 11 (P. L. 328) bequests or devises in trust for religious or charitable purposes are void unless made at least one calendar month before the death of testator. In re Gregg's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 856. Statute must be literally read and strictly construed. Id. Calendar month is not one of any given number of days throughout the entire year, but varies in length according to the Gregorian calendar. Id. Charitable bequest in will executed Oct. 8, 1899, between hours of 3 and 5 P. M. held void where testator died Nov. 8, 1899, between 7 and 8 P. M., a calendar month in such case being 31 full days. Id.

Concubinage must be open, and one maintained under the cloak of an innocent relation, and sought to be kept secret will not give rise to the incapacity pronounced by such article. Id. Will held valid. Id.

9. Ky. St. 1903, § 4847, provides that a will made by one having no children living, but who dies leaving a child, "wherein any child he might have is not provided for or mentioned," shall, except insofar as it provides for the payment of testator's debts, be construed as if the devises and bequests therein had been limited to take effect in the event that the child shall die under the age of 21, unmarried, and without issue. Logan v. Bean's Adm'r, 27 Ky. L. R. 1081, 87 S. W. 1110. This section is to be construed in connection with §§ 4842, 4848, in regard to pretermitted children. Id. Where will provided that, "if my wife has any children at my death, I desire that this will be the same," held that child born after execution of will was "mentioned" within the meaning of such statute. 10. In the absence of an agreement on the part of an adopting parent to leave property to his adopted child, the adoption does not support a claim beyond the statutory provisions. Logan v. Lennix [Tex. Civ. App.] 13

The right to appoint testamentary guardians for minor children depends on the statutes of the various states.[11]

The legatee or devisee must be capable of taking and holding the devise or bequest.[12]

Contracts to devise or bequeath.[13]—One may make a valid agreement to dispose of his property in a particular way by will,[14] and such contracts may be enforced in equity after his decease against his heirs, devisees, or personal representatives,[15] provided they have all the essentials of an ordinary contract, are fair and equitable, and

Tex. Ct. Rep. 572, 88 S. W. 364. Sayles Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 1, 2, places the adopted child on same footing as a legal heir in so far as adopting parent's property is concerned, and hence parent may disinherit him. Id. Instrument of adoption reciting that it was executed in consideration of love and affection for the child, and relinquishment of its possession and control by its parents, and providing that child should have all the privileges of a legal heir of the adopting parent, held not to place child in any more advantageous position than such an heir. Id.

11. In the absence of statute a mother of minor children has no right to appoint a testamentary guardian for them, and a provision of a will attempting to do so is a nullity. Rev. St. 1892, § 2086, confers such power on the father alone, and mother has no such power or right from the common law, or otherwise. Hernandez v. Thomas [Fla.] 39 So. 641. Under Laws 1896, c. 272, p. 215, art. 5, §§ 50-54, a testator cannot appoint testamentary guardians of the persons or estates of his minor children, and an attempt to do so is void. Kellogg v. Burdick, 96 N. Y. S. 965.

12. See, also, Aliens, 5 C. L. 96; Charitable Gifts, 5 C. L. 566; Corporations, 5 C. L. 764; Associations and Societies, 5 C. L. 292. In order that a devise or bequest to a corporation for charitable purposes may be valid, the corporation must be endowed by law with capacity to receive, hold, and administer the gift. A bequest to a corporation, organized for the care of the sick, aged, infirm, and poor, "for the benefit and use of the Blessed Virgin Mary Purgatorial Fund" of the corporation's hospital, held invalid as not within the purposes of the corporation, there being no such fund existing, and the only possible object of such a fund being the saying of masses for the souls of the dead in purgatory. Johnston v. Sisters of the Poor of St. Francis, 98 N. Y. S. 525. An unincorporated voluntary association or society is incapable of taking a direct devise, and this rule is not changed by Laws 1893, p. 1748, c. 701. Fralick v. Lyford, 107 App. Div. 543, 95 N. Y. S. 433.

14. Koslowski v. Newman [Neb.] 105 N. W. 295; Lewallen's Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 320. Contract to make mutual wills is as binding as any other contract. Wilson v. Gordon [S. C.] 53 S. E. 79.

Contract to devise homestead in consideration of services rendered to decedent and his wife, to which wife consents, is valid. Brandes v. Brandes [Iowa] 105 N. W. 499. Contract to devise land to plaintiff's parents at decedent's death in consideration of their care of him is enforceable after decedent's death, though land is a homestead. Soper v. Galloway [Iowa] 105 N. W. 399.

15. Schaadt v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. [Cal. App.] 84 P. 249. Such a contract, upon performance by the other party, is irrevocable and enforceable upon the death of the promisor. Koslowski v. Newman [Neb.] 105 N. W. 295. Administrator is not entitled to possession of personalty as against one to whom testator agreed to bequeath it in consideration of services which were fully performed, in the absence of proof that there are creditors whose claims take precedence over that of defendant. Id. Decree of distribution directing that fund bequeathed by codicil be turned over to trustee held bar to suit by plaintiff, who was a party to the proceedings, for specific performance of contract between himself and testator whereby latter agreed to make no distinction between his children in his will. Phalen v. United States Trust Co., 100 App. Div. 264, 91 N. Y. S. 537.

NOTE. Specific performance: It seems to be generally accepted that a person may bind himself by a parol agreement to make a particular disposition of his property, both real and personal by will though as regards realty the authorities are not harmonious. Johnson v. Hubbell, 10 N. J. Eq. 332, 66 Am. Dec. 773; Lamb v. Hinman, 46 Mich. 112, 8 N. W. 709. Such an agreement may be made in consideration of personal care and services such as are characteristic of the domestic relations. Leonardson v. Hulin, 64 Mich. 1, 31 N. W. 26; Laird v. Vila, 93 Minn. 45, 100 N. W. 656, 106 Am. St. Rep. 420; Brown v. Sutton, 129 U. S. 238, 32 Law. Ed. 664. The remedy for a breach depends upon the nature of the services. If their value cannot be estimated, specific performance will be decreed, otherwise an action must be brought for damages. In many instances the denial of specific performance would accomplish a fraud (Winfield v. Bowen, 65 N. J. Eq. 636, 56 A. 728; Grant v. Bradstreet, 87 Me. 583, 33 A. 165), and equity will follow property fraudulently conveyed to a third party (McCullom v. Mackrell, 13 S. D. 262, 83 N. W. 255; Leonardson v. Hulin, 64 Mich. 1, 31 N. W. 26). Specific performance will not, however, be decreed unless the complainant shows by clear and convincing evidence, a complete contract properly executed on his own part (Spencer v. Spencer, 26 R. I. 237, 58 A. 766; Stellmacher v. Bruder, 89 Minn. 507, 95 N. W. 324; Richardson v. Orth, 40 Or. 252, 66 P. 925; Rodman v. Rodman, 112 Wis. 378, 88 N. W. 218); nor if it would work a hardship as in case of a promise to give all one's property at death, made before marriage and are definite and certain in their terms.[16] So, too, one rendering services under the promise and expectation that they will be paid for by testamentary provision may recover for the same on a quantum meruit if no such provision is made.[17] In such case plaintiff's cause of action accrues on the breach of the agreement.[18]

If in parol, the proof of such a contract must be clear and convincing,[19] the burden of establishing it being on the party claiming under it.[20]

there is a surviving wife without knowledge of such promise (Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 P. 710, 33 L. R. A. 369; see, also, Mahaney v. Carr, 175 N. Y. 454, 67 N. E. 903). In Rosenwald v. Middlebrook, 188 Mo. 58, 86 S. W. 200, the complainant failed in his proof. The decision is undoubtedly correct both in principle and on authority. Clawson v. Brewer, 67 N. J. Eq. 201, 58 A. 598; Seitman v. Seitman, 204 Ill. 504, 68 N. E. 461; Briles v. Goodrich, 116 Iowa, 517, 90 N. W. 354.—3 Mich. L. R. 665.

16. Must be definite and certain, it must have the essentials of a contract, must be clearly established, and must be fair and equitable. Pattat v. Pattat, 93 App. Div. 102, 87 N. Y. S. 140.

Must be a sufficient consideration: Under Civ. Code 1605, a benefit conferred to which promisor is already entitled is not a sufficient consideration to support a promise, and hence fact that wife had possession of, and paid premiums on insurance policy on life of husband out of her separate estate, and delivered it to him to enable him to have it changed into a paid up policy, constituted no consideration for his promise to dispose of the proceeds thereof by will in a certain manner in the absence of anything to show that she had a right to possession of the policy or was bound to pay premiums, or that she paid them on the faith of such promise. Schaadt v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. [Cal. App.] 84 P. 249. Specific performance will not be denied because of the event that a relatively small consideration passed. Warner v. Marshall [Ind.] 75 N. E. 582. Like other enforceable contracts it must be founded upon a sufficient consideration. Promise by a father to give to his children at his death all property acquired by them from their mother held based on a sufficient consideration. Lewallen's Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 320.

A contract to make mutual wills, the one being the consideration for the other, must be definite and certain and must be established by clear and convincing evidence in order to be enforceable. Wilson v. Gordon [S. C.] 53 S. E. 79.

17. In re Funk's Estate, 98 N. Y. S. 934. Where deceased agreed to compensate claimant for services by leaving him a stock of goods but failed to do so. Shane v. Shearsmith's Estate [Mich.] 100 N. W. 123. Though contract is void under statute of frauds. Raycraft v. Johnston [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 237.

18. The statute of limitations does not begin to run until the death of the deceased notwithstanding fact that services ceased before that time. In re Funk's Estate, 98 N. Y. S. 934. On promisor's death without performance. Raycraft v. Johnston [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 237. If person rendering services could abandon contract at any time and recover on quantum meruit, she was not obliged to pursue such a course, and where she continued to perform until promisor's death, her cause of action did not accrue until then. Id.

19. Rosenwald v. Middlebrook, 188 Mo. 58, 86 S. W. 200. Proof of contract to reimburse one by will for expenses incurred on trips taken as decedent's companion will be closely scrutinized and will only be sustained by strongest evidence. Apollonio v. Langley, 106 App. Div. 40, 94 N. Y. S. 274. Evidence should be given or corroborated in all substantial particulars by disinterested witnesses. Id. Loose declarations made to outside parties, indefinite understandings, suggested gratuities, anticipated benefactions, and testamentary intentions not carried out are insufficient to establish contract to pay for services at death, or to provide for compensation by legacy. Grossman v. Thunder, 212 Pa. 274, 61 A. 904.

Evidence sufficient to show contract. In re Funk's Estate, 98 N. Y. S. 934. That land was to go to plaintiff's parents at decedent's death in consideration of their care of him during his lifetime. Soper v. Galloway [Iowa] 105 N. W. 399. Between decedent and his wife and their daughter to devise land to latter in consideration for services rendered. Brandes v. Brandes [Iowa] 105 N. W. 499. To compensate claimant for services by leaving him stock of goods. Shane v. Shearsmith's Estate [Mich.] 100 N. W. 123. That niece was to receive compensation for her services, and she was not bound to wait until defendant's death and then sue for wages only in case she was not provided for by his will. Einolf v. Thompson [Minn.] 103 N. W. 1026.

Evidence held insufficient to show contract. Rosenwald v. Middlebrook, 188 Mo. 58, 86 S. W. 200; Haberman v. Kaufer [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 976; Grossman v. Thunder, 212 Pa. 274, 61 A. 904; Murphy v. Murphy, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 547; Apollonio v. Langley, 106 App. Div. 40, 94 N. Y. S. 274. In any event plaintiff was not entitled to recover for clothing purchased by her under contract to reimburse her for expenses of journey. Id. To will property to defendant in consideration of services. Pattat v. Pattat, 93 App. Div. 102, 87 N. Y. S. 140. To leave property to adopted child. Logan v. Lennix [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 572, 88 S. W. 364. Evidence that testator had merely remarked that he would remember certain devisees, but which failed to indicate how, or the particular consideration for which this was to be done, held insufficient to show that devises to them were in pursuance of a contract so as to entitle them to have widow's dower set apart from other property. Brandes v. Brandes [Iowa] 105 N. W. 499.

Contract to make mutual wills: An agreement to make mutual wills devising realty may be shown by parol, where the wills were

If within the statute of frauds, the contract must be in writing, or must have been partly performed.[21]

As in the case of other contracts, plaintiff must show performance on his part, or that he was prevented from performing by the other party.[22]

§ 2. Testamentary capacity, fraud and undue influence. A. Essentials to capacity.[23]—In order to have testamentary capacity the testator must have sufficient mind and memory to intelligently understand the nature of the business in which he is engaged, to comprehend generally the nature and extent of the property constituting his estate and which he intends to dispose of, and to recollect the objects of his bounty.[24] Capacity to contract[25] or for ordinary business is not the test.[26] actually made and the party who undertook to revoke after the death of the other had received the full benefit of the provisions of the latter's will. Wilson v. Gordon [S. C.] 53 S. E. 79. Evidence held insufficient to show that wills made by two sisters, whereby each gave her property absolutely to the other with an alternative devise in case the devisee died during testatrix's lifetime, were mutual wills, made pursuant to a binding contract, and surviving sister had right to destroy her own will after accepting benefits under that of her sister. Id. On issue of an agreement to make mutual wills evidence of one of the parties, since deceased, given in probate court in establishing the will of the other is admissible as a declaration against her right to revoke her will. Id. Under rule that declarations in one's favor are admissible on cross-examination when part of a conversation is brought out in chief, where witness testified that one of the parties to an alleged contract to make mutual wills had told her that she had burned her will, held proper for her to state on cross-examination that she had told her in the same conversation that she had notified the other party to the contract of that fact. Id. Little if any consideration should be given to the testimony of those claiming the benefit of such a contract. Id.

20. One seeking to compel legatees to release charge of legacies on building which he claims testator agreed to leave him in fee, free from incumbrances, in consideration of services, has burden of proving that contract was made and was obligatory on him as well as on decedent. Haberman v. Kaufer [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 976.

21. Lewallen's Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 320. An indivisible oral contract to devise realty and bequeath personalty is void under the statute of frauds. Dixon v. Sheridan, 125 Wis. 60, 103 N. W. 239. Evidence held insufficient to show an independent agreement presently transferring the personalty. Id.

Part performance: Oral contract between owner of land whereby it was to belong to third persons at his death in consideration of their caring for him during life, held not void under statute of frauds, where they fully performed. Soper v. Galloway [Iowa] 105 N. W. 399. One who has performed services on faith of promise may recover their reasonable value though contract is void. Raycraft v. Johnston [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 237.

22. Daughter held entitled to land where she performed as far as possible and until deceased refused to receive further performance, and was at all times ready and willing to perform. Brandes v. Brandes [Iowa] 105 N. W. 499. Where plaintiffs' parents entered into contract with decedent whereby they were to have his land in consideration of caring for him during his lifetime and fully performed same until their death, and thereafter plaintiffs continued performance with decedent's acquiescence, held that they were entitled to the land on his death. Soper v. Galloway [Iowa] 105 N. W. 399. Contract of child to remain with and work for father during his lifetime in consideration of his willing her one-fourth of his property held to require her to remain with him until his death, unless prevented by him. Tussey v. Owen [N. C.] 52 S. E. 128. Contract held entire and indivisible so as to prevent recovery on implied contract for partial performance. Id. Evidence held insufficient to show that daughter was prevented from performing by her father. Id.

24. May make valid will if he knows his property and the manner in which it is invested, and his relatives who are the objects of his bounty. In re Dole's Estate, 147 Cal. 188, 81 P. 534. The fundamental test is whether testator's mind and memory, were sound enough to enable him to know and understand the business in which he was engaged when he executed the instrument claimed to be his will. In re Nichols [Conn.] 62 A. 610. Instruction requiring testatrix to know what she was doing, the nature of her business, the nature and condition of her property, and to appreciate who were or should be the natural objects of her bounty, and her relations to them, and the manner in which she wished to distribute it, and the scope of the provisions of the will held erroneous as imposing too severe a test. Havens v. Mason [Conn.] 62 A. 615. Testator has capacity if his mind and memory are sufficiently sound to enable him to intelligently understand the business in which he is engaged when he executes the will. Todd v. Todd [Ill.] 77 N. E. 680. Ability to act "rationally in the ordinary affairs of life" properly erased from charge and ability to "comprehend disposition he was making" substituted. Johnson v. Farrell, 215 Ill. 542, 74 N. E. 760. Instruction in action to contest that jury might find testator competent if they should find among other things "that he had the capacity to know what he was doing and the effect of what he was doing," approved. Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755. Instruction defining unsoundness of mind and monomania held proper. Id. In-

Capacity depends upon the condition of testator's mind when the will was made.[27] Mere feebleness of mind or body,[28] old age,[29] personal eccentricities,[30] the fact that testator was insane long prior to making his will and again became so long after making it,[31] or that he had previously suffered from melancholia,[32] or neurasthenia,[33] or delusions,[34] or that he committed suicide,[35] or that he had previously struction that testator was required to possess mind and memory enough to know and grasp at the one time while making his will, the extent and value of his property, etc., approved. Id. Test is did he have sufficient active memory to collect in his mind and comprehend, without prompting, the condition of his property, his relations to persons who might properly be his beneficiaries, and the scope and hearing of his will, and to hold these things in his mind a sufficient length of time to perceive their obvious relations to each other, and be able to form some rational judgment in relation to them. In re Brannan's Estate [Minn.] 107 N. W. 141. Must have sufficient understanding to comprehend the nature of the transaction in which he is engaged, the nature and extent of his property, and to whom he desires to give it and is giving it, without the aid of any other person. Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University [Mo.] 90 S. W. 787. Instruction approved. King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367. Must have sufficient understanding and intelligence to transact his ordinary business affairs, and to understand the nature and character of his property, and the persons to whom he is giving it. Roberts v. Bartlett, 190 Mo. 680, 89 S. W. 858. Where testator, though aged and infirm, understands the nature of the act he is performing, knows and can retain in mind the amount and character of his property, and who are or should be the objects of his bounty, and has a full understanding of the persons to whom and the purposes for which his devises and bequests are made, he is competent. In re Nelson's Estate [Neb.] 106 N. W. 326. Has sufficient capacity where he thoroughly understands the character of his property, remembers those who would naturally be the objects of his bounty, and is able to discriminate between them. Finding that testatrix had capacity held proper. Barker v. Streuli [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 408. It is not necessary that testator should be possessed of his maximum strength of mind, or the degree of mental strength necessary to make a contract; but he should be able to remember his property, and the proper objects of his bounty, and to make a testamentary disposition of his property without suggestion. Moore v. Caldwell, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 484. If testator understands what he is doing at the time he executes the will, and has full knowledge of his property and how he wishes to dispose of it among those entitled to his bounty, he has sufficient capacity, notwithstanding his old age, sickness, debility of body, or extreme distress. In re Buren's Will [Or.] 83 P. 530.

25. Stametz v. Mitchenor [Ind.] 75 N. E. 579. One may be capable of making a will, though incapable of making a contract or managing an estate. Roberts v. Bartlett, 190 Mo. 680, 89 S. W. 858.

26. Disposing capacity is test. Johnson v. Farrell, 215 Ill. 542, 74 N. E. 760.

27. Threlkeld v. Bond [Ky.] 92 S. W. 606.

28. Physical decrepitude and bad eyesight and the opinions of witnesses that testator was of unsound mind do not overcome the fact that he was able to properly transact ordinary business. Graham v. Deuterman, 217 Ill. 235, 75 N. E. 480. Extreme bodily weakness will not alone invalidate the will. Masseth v. Masseth [Pa.] 62 A. 1076. Fact that testator was always of weak intellect furnishes no legal reason why he might not have had sufficient mental capacity to execute the will. Fact that he never fully understood family settlement, etc. In re Nichols [Conn.] 62 A. 610. Derangement of mental faculties does not incapacitate one from making a will if it does not render him unable to transact his ordinary business, and incapable of understanding the extent of his property, and of appreciating the natural objects of his bounty. Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University [Mo.] 90 S. W. 787. Mere defect of memory insufficient to show incapacity. Instruction approved. King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367. Evidence that testator took medicine for insomnia, and that he was mentally distressed by the idea that his mother's death was caused by her care of him, held not to tend to show incapacity. Roche v. Nason [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 1007, afg. 105 App. Div. 256, 93 N. Y. S. 565.

29. Old age alone is insufficient to invalidate the will. In re Dole's Estate, 147 Cal. 188, 81 P. 534. That testatrix was 96 raises no presumption of incapacity. In re Brower's Will, 98 N. Y. S. 438.

30. Fact that testator preferred to stay by himself, "seemed to be thinking or studying," or "talking to himself," etc., held of no probative force. Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University [Mo.] 90 S. W. 787.

31. Fact that he was insane prior to 1869 and again became so after appointment for conservator for him in 1903 held not to prevent finding that he had sufficient capacity in 1890. In re Nichols [Conn.] 62 A. 610.

32. Fact that testator had melancholia 20 years before he executed will held of no probative force where it was due to overwork, and was shown to have been cured and never to have reappeared. Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University [Mo.] 90 S. W. 787.

33. Fact that testator suffered from neurasthenia when in sanitarium before will was executed held not to show lack of capacity where he never manifested any serious symptom of that affection after his discharge. Roche v. Nason [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 1007, afg. 105 App. Div. 256, 93 N. Y. S. 565.

34. Where will was executed in 1899, evidence that testator was ill in 1890 and then had delusions held inadmissible, it appearing that he recovered from such illness and thereafter attended to business as usual. Hibbard v. Baker [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 384, 104 N. W. 399.

35. The mere fact that one commits suicide does not of itself warrant the deduction committed crimes,[36] or that the will is unfair to his relatives,[37] or contains expressions which can only be understood by one familiar with a law to which it refers, where testator executed it in reliance on the assurance of counsel that it conformed to the instructions given,[38] do not of themselves necessarily show lack of capacity.

A will is invalid if at the time of its execution testator is suffering from an insane delusion,[39] or from monomania which prompts his action and affects his purpose and object in making a will.[40]

Primarily every person is presumed sane until the contrary is proved.[41] When unsoundness of mind is shown to exist and to be settled, a presumption then arises in favor of its continued existence.[42] Thus one who has been adjudged insane and that his mind was unsound at the time, or prior thereto, or that he lacked testamentary capacity. Roche v. Nason [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 1007, afg. 105 App. Div. 256, 93 N. Y. S. 565. Nor does it raise an inference of insanity. Id.

36. Petty thefts many years before do not tend to prove incapacity. Graham v. Deuterman, 217 Ill. 235, 75 N. E. 480.

37. The fact that testator gave the bulk of his estate to the university from which he graduated is no evidence of insanity. Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University [Mo.] 90 S. W. 787. On the issue of capacity, the fact that the will is unfair to testator's relatives may be taken into consideration. Roberts v. Bartlett, 190 Mo. 680, 89 S. W. 858. Capacity not determined by whether or not he dealt justly under the circumstances with his relations. In re Sherwood's Will [Wis.] 105 N. W. 796.

38. Does not tend to show unsoundness of mind. Instruction that if terms of will were so indefinite that ordinary persons would not know what they meant, fact that testator executed it was evidence that she was of unsound mind, held erroneous. Havens v. Mason [Conn.] 62 A. 615.

39. Under evidence and issues held that court should have instructed that if deceased, at the time of executing the will, was under an insane delusion that his brother had grossly wronged him in business transactions and was of unsound mind on this subject, and by reason of such unsoundness of mind made a different disposition of his property than he otherwise would have done, the will was invalid, though he was sane on other subjects, but that to invalidate will on that ground deceased must not only have been mistaken, but must have been insane on the subject, and the will must have been induced by such insanity. Lancaster v. Lancaster's Ex'r, 27 Ky. L. R. 1127, 87 S. W. 1137. Where there was evidence that testator thought that brother whom he disinherited had injured him in the matter of a deceased brother's property, and it was the theory of contestant that the disinherited brother was the benefactor of his brothers, and that testator was acting under an insane delusion, held that testimony whether administration had been granted on the estate of the deceased brother, whether he had been assessed with any property, and whether a power of attorney from contestant to testator and his brother had been revoked, was admissible. Id. Where there was evidence that testator had been offended by what his brother, whom it was alleged that he had disinherited because of an insane delusion that he had wronged him, had testified to in bankruptcy proceedings on subject of testator's capacity, held that contestant should have been permitted to state what he had testified and that testator had testified to the same thing. Id. No belief that has any evidence for its basis is in law an insane delusion. Belief that he had appendicitis held not an insane delusion, where some of the physicians whom he consulted believed he had that disease and he was finally operated on for it, though he did not have it. Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University [Mo.] 90 S. W. 787. A delusion on the part of a testator does not constitute mental incapacity unless it is an insane delusion, and in determining whether a testator was suffering from such a delusion at the time he made his will, the testimony offered on the subject should be considered by the jury, that of experts not being allowed to outweigh absolutely that of laymen who had known the testator for years, and had business transactions with him, and frequently met and conversed with him. Moore v. Caldwell, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 484. The fact that testator was subject to delusions due to the habit of taking narcotics for the relief of pain is properly disregarded, where it appears that they were not continuous, and did not affect his mind as to matters involved in the making of the will. In re Masseth's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 640.

40. Instruction approved. Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755.

41. In re Glass' Estate, 127 Iowa, 646, 103 N. W. 1013. All persons are presumed to be of sound mind until the contrary is proved. Todd v. Todd [Ill.] 77 N. E. 680. Under Illinois statute validity of will cannot rest on that presumption alone but must be accompanied by proof of capacity. Id. The law does not presume incapacity. Threlkeld v. Bond [Ky.] 92 S. W. 606.

42. Jury must find a continued and settled mental unsoundness before indulging in this presumption. In re Glass' Estate, 127 Iowa, 646, 103 N. W. 1013. Instruction that if deceased was afflicted with senile dementia, affecting his capacity to make a will, presumption would be that it continued up to the time that will was made, and burden would then be on proponents to show its execution during lucid interval held erroneous, there being evidence tending to show that senile dementia was not necessarily a settled condition of the mind rendering the placed under guardianship as such is prima facie incapable of making a will until such judgment is superseded.[43] But a will made by one mentally unsound during a lucid interval and when he has the power of intelligent comprehension is valid.[44] The burden of proving capacity in such case is, however, on the proponent.[45]

The condition of testator's mind before and after the execution of the will,[46] the mental condition of his blood relations in the ancestral line,[47] his physical condition after the execution of the will, when it tends to show his condition at the time of such execution,[48] the fact that he used intoxicants to excess,[49] and facts tending to show the reasonableness of the will,[50] may be shown. The admissions of one legatee as to incapacity are not binding on the others, and hence are inadmissible.[51]

The ordinary rules as to the admission of expert testimony apply,[52] the value and bearing of such evidence being for the jury.[53]

tator incapable of intelligently executing will. Id.

43. King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367. Appointment of conservator for testator in 1903 on ground that he was mentally incapable of suing to set aside certain conveyances, and finding that he had been incapable of managing business affairs of any consequence since 1872, held not conclusive as to his capacity to make a will in 1890, that question not having been within the issues or involved in the adjudication. In re Nichols [Conn.] 62 A. 610.

44. In re Brannan's Estate [Minn.] 107 N. W. 141. If at the time of the execution of the will his mental condition was such as to enable him to intelligently give directions for the disposition of his property, will is valid however feeble he may have been immediately before. Id. Presumption arising from an adjudication of insanity may be rebutted by proof that testator was of sound mind when the will was executed. Rule not changed by Rev. St. 1889, § 3682. Instructions approved. King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367.

45. Where testator had been adjudged insane. King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367. All that contestant is required to do in order to shift the burden of proof is to show that testator was suffering from a disease of the mind of a permanent and progressive nature amounting to unsoundness. Instruction held erroneous and misleading. In re Jones' Estate [Iowa] 106 N. W. 610.

46. Is only important in so far as it tends to show his mental condition at the very date of such execution. In re Dole's Estate, 147 Cal. 188, 81 P. 534. Is only a circumstance to be weighed with other facts in determining its condition at the time the will was made. Threlkeld v. Bond [Ky.] 92 S. W. 606. Where it appeared that testatrix was under guardianship as a person of unsound mind when will was executed and at her death, held that record of probate court on inquiry as to her sanity, in which a new trial was granted, showing that verdict of first jury was that she was of sound mind, was admissible. King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367.

47. Tends to establish fact in issue. In re Myer's Will [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 920, rvg. 100 App. Div. 512, 91 N. Y. S. 1104. But in order that evidence of diseases afflicting such relations and affecting their mental faculties may be admissible there must be evidence tending to show at least that such diseases are hereditary or transmissible. Evidence that mother and brother of testatrix were afflicted with paresis held inadmissible. Id. Fact that testator's father and grandmother had mental trouble held not to lead to inference of unsoundness of mind on his part, in absence of evidence tending to show any manifestations of derangement during his lifetime. Roche v. Nason [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 1007, afg. 105 App. Div. 256, 93 N. Y. S. 565. Hearsay statement of testator's father that his cousin had been insane held of no probative force, especially where there was no evidence of the nearness of the relationship, which was at most collateral, and the nature of the insanity or its cause was not developed. Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University [Mo.] 90 S. W. 787.

48. Is not admissible when such subsequent condition appears to have arisen from a new cause which was not in existence when the will was executed. Todd v. Todd [Ill.] 77 N. E. 680.

49. Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755. Instructions as to effect of drunkenness held to have correctly stated and applied the law to the evidence upon the subject, and not to have invaded the province of the jury. Id. Where witness testified that he had taken a trip with testator, that he had never seen him intoxicated, and that he was of sound mind, held proper to allow proof in rebuttal that testator was drunk on such trip with the witness, testator's habit with respect to the use of intoxicants and its resultant effects upon his mind being involved. Id.

50. Evidence of the faithfulness of a beneficiary to the testator. Moore v. Caldwell, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 484.

51. Cannot be limited to party making them without injuriously affecting others. King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367. In a suit to establish a will, the admission of affidavit of one of proponents made in support of motion for new trial in proceeding to inquire into sanity of testatrix, at a time prior to the execution of the will, held reversible error. Id. Admissions and declarations of one legatee as to testator's want of capacity are inadmissible, in a proceeding to revoke probate. Since they cannot bind the other legatees and, as there can be only one decree, their admission would be prejudicial to the rights of such others. In re Myer's Will [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 920, rvg. 100 App. Div. 512, 91 N. Y. S. 1104.

Nonexperts are generally allowed to give an opinion, founded on their own observations, as to testator's sanity provided they detail the circumstances on which their conclusions are based.[54] They cannot, however, testify as to testator's capacity to make the will in question.[55] In some states they may only state their contemporary impressions as to the rationality or irrationality of the conversations or conduct testified to by them.[56]

The conclusions of the subscribing witnesses are admissible,[57] and prominence is justly given to their testimony.[58] In the opening of the case their evidence is usually confined to the appearance, conduct, and surroundings of the testator at the time

52. Medical expert held properly permitted to explain the distinctive peculiarities of a mind suffering from insane delusions (Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755), the symptoms of dementia (Id.), upon a hypothetical statement of facts showing some form of mental unsoundness, to state under what class of unsoundness of mind testator should be placed (Id.), and to explain the effect on the nervous system, brain, and body, of the excessive use of intoxicants (Id.). An expert who has given a diagnosis of the case and indicated his treatment may be fully cross-examined as to testator's condition of both mind and body in order to test his credibility, the efficacy of his treatment and the effect thereof as tending to cure or alleviate the suffering and diseased condition which he says he reduced. In re Jones' Estate [Iowa] 106 N. W. 610. Held error to refuse to allow physician, who testified that when he called on testatrix shortly before execution of will, she had toxaemia, to answer a question as to whether her mind was affected thereby (Id.), and as to whether she was suffering from senile dementia while he was treating her (Id.). Expert cannot state the relative merits of the testimony of other experts. Lancaster v. Lancaster's Ex'r, 27 Ky. L. R. 1127, 87 S. W. 1137. Objection to question asked testator's physician as to why he allowed testator to go to sanitarium, held properly sustained, as it called for operation of witness' mind. Roche v. Nason [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 1007, afg. 105 App. Div. 256, 93 N. Y. S. 565. Question asked testator's physician as to what testator said to him about his health held improper. Id.

53. Held that evidence of experts, who testified that person suffering from conditions testified by testatrix's physician to have existed in her case, would not have sufficient mental capacity to make a will, should have gone to the jury. Byrne v. Byrne, 109 App. Div. 476, 96 N. Y. S. 375. Their testimony is not binding on the jury but is to be considered by them, like any other testimony, in connection with all the facts given in evidence and given such weight as they consider it entitled to receive. Instruction approved. King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367.

54. Where nonexpert had previously testified to acquaintance with testator for ten years, and as to his habits of using intoxicating liquors and other habits, held proper to allow witness to state that such habits had grown more pronounced in his later years. Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755. Where witness stated that testator had grown more indecent, held proper to allow him to explain his meaning in using that word. Id. Witnesses held to have revealed a sufficient acquaintance with testatrix to justify the submission to the jury of the question as to the weight of their opinion of her sanity. Heaston v. Kreig [Ind.] 77 N. E. 805. Opinion must be limited to the facts and appearances detailed to the jury. Question held not to violate this rule. Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755. If any material facts at all are stated by a nonexpert witness tending to show such knowledge and intimacy with the testator as to enable him to form an opinion of the latter's mental condition, it is the duty of the trial court to permit such opinion to be expressed and to go to the jury for what it is worth. Witness held competent. Id. The weight of such opinion depends upon the primary facts, and is exclusively for the jury. Id. Instruction as to weight to be given opinions of nonexperts held erroneous for failure to confine opinions to such as were based on matters detailed by witnesses who gave them as a basis for their conclusions. In re Jones' Estate [Iowa] 106 N. W. 610. May testify as to capacity at a time prior to the execution of the will. In re Glass' Estate, 127 Iowa, 646, 103 N. W. 1013. A nonexpert, whose testimony shows only acts which are entirely consistent with sanity, and have no tendency to show insanity, cannot testify that in his opinion testator was incompetent. Hibbard v. Baker [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 384, 104 N. W. 399. A witness may express his opinion as to the unsound condition of testator's mind, based upon facts within his knowledge. May state facts, and then his opinion. Franklin v. Boone [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 93, 88 S. W. 262. Mere statement of opinion that testator was not capable of self-control or self-government held inadmissible. Id.

55. Testimony of nonexperts that deceased was of unsound mind and incapable of intelligently transacting his business or disposing of his property at or about the time of the execution of the will is inadmissible. In re Glass' Estate, 127 Iowa, 646, 103 N. W. 1013.

56. Cannot give their opinion. In re Myer's Will [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 920, rvg. 100 App. Div. 512, 91 N. Y. S. 1104. Held error to exclude question addressed to testator's agent as to whether her acts, which he had remembered and testified to, impressed him as rational or irrational. In re Brower's Will, 98 N. Y. S. 438. Ruling held not ground for reversal under Code Civ. Proc. § 2545, in view of fact that acts had been fully described, and of proponents' evidence. Id.

of the execution of the will, and their opinions based thereon.[59] Their cross-examination need not, however, be confined to what occurred at that time, but the contestants may seek to elicit facts indicating that the opinion of the witness is of little weight because of bias, that it is not a candid one, or that it is based wholly or in part upon his previous acquaintance or experience with testator rather than upon what he observed when the will was executed.[60] Declarations of the testator before or after the execution of the will are generally held to be admissible though not evidence of the facts therein stated.[61]

The question of capacity is one of fact[62] for the jury.[63] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence of capacity will be found in the note.[64]

(§ 2) B. Constituents of fraud and undue influence.[65]—In order to be undue, and to avoid the will, the influence exerted on testator's mind must be such as to destroy his free agency, and to substitute the will of another for his own,[66] and must Declarations of testator, made subsequent to the execution of the will and in the absence of a child, that he had given property of a certain value to such child, are not evidence of that fact, but are competent to be considered on the issue of capacity. Instruction approved. Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755. Must amount to such a degree of restraint and coercion as to destroy the free agency of testator. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. Instruction not objectionable as isolating certain facts. Id. Must be such as subjects the will of the testator to that of the person exerting it, and makes the instrument express the purpose of the latter rather than that of the testator himself. Must be equivalent to moral coercion. Parker v. Lambertz [Iowa] 104 N. W. 452. Testator must be so influenced by persuasion, pressure, or fraudulent contrivance that he does not act intelligently or volun-

be directly connected with the execution of the will, operating at the time it was made.[67] It may be exercised through threats or fraud.[68] It must not be merely the influence of affection or attachment,[69] nor the result of a desire on the part of the testator to gratify the wishes of one beloved, respected, and trusted by him.[70]

Neither solicitations[71] nor persuasion, argument,[72] suggestions or advice addressed to testator's understanding or judgment,[73] nor the fact that testator makes a different will from that which he at some former time expressed an intention to make,[74] is of itself sufficient to show undue influence. No presumption of undue influence arises from the fact that testator distributed his property unequally[75] or contrary to natural justice,[76] or that he was friendly and intimate with the person altarily, and is subject to the will and purpose of another. Must be sufficient to destroy his free agency and substitute the will of another for that testator. In re Tyner's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. Where husband and wife execute mutual wills leaving to each other all of their community property, which is all the property they possess, pursuant to an agreement that if husband survives he will provide for her relatives by will, held that such agreement does not constitute undue influence, though it influences wife to make different disposition of her property than she had intended. Morrison v. Thoman [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1069. Instruction held erroneous. Id. Must be coercion and duress destroying testator's freedom of will and action. Mueller v. Pew [Wis.] 106 N. W. 840. The fact that the will is executed at the suggestion or request of the grantee or devisee, and is prompted by the influence which such person has acquired by business confidence or the showing of an affectionate regard, will not prove undue influence, unless the freedom of the testator's will has been in some way impaired or destroyed. Parker v. Lambertz [Iowa] 104 N. W. 452.

Fact that the will is inofficious, harsh, and unjust. In re Tyner's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 898. Fact that no reason is shown why testator did not remember some of his relatives does not establish undue influence. Fethergill v. Fethergill [Iowa] 105 N. W. 377.

76. Is not persuasive. In re Sherwood's Will [Wis.] 105 N. W. 796. Fact that the will is unreasonable and unjust. In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 105 N. W. 110. The mere fact that the disposition of his property made by a parent among his children appears unreasonable or unjust will not leged to have exerted the influence,[77] or was extremely fond of one for whom he made no provision,[78] or that certain legatees receive more than under a former will,[79] or from the existence of an opportunity to exert such influence,[80] though these facts may be considered in connection with other evidence,[81] nor does the fact that testator's agent employed a lawyer from another city to draw the will tend to show such influence on his part.[82]

Undue influence need not be shown by direct proof, but may be inferred from facts and circumstances.[83] It may be shown by the relation of the parties, the mental condition of the testator, and the character of the transaction.[84] The will itself,[85] evidence of testator's mental[86] and physical condition,[87] and of the financial condition of the person alleged to have exerted the influence,[88] that two former wills were substantially the same, and to explain the changes made by the later of the two,[89] and that shortly before the making of the will in dispute testator was still much interested in certain charitable institutions provided for in such former wills but not in the last one,[90] and evidence showing what part the party alleged to have exerted the influence took in the preparation of the will,[91] is admissible. So is evidence tending

79. Does not establish undue influence. Fethergill v. Fethergill [Iowa] 105 N. W. 377.

80. From fact that beneficiary had special opportunities to exert undue influence over testator. In re Tyner's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 898. It is not enough to show that there was an opportunity to exercise undue influence, but there must be evidence that it was exercised, and that it was instrumental in procuring the will. In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 105 N. W. 110. Opportunity and disposition to procure a will which is favorable to one of the legatees is not of itself sufficient evidence of undue influence. Fethergill v. Fethergill [Iowa] 105 N. W. 377.

81. When there is independent evidence tending to show acts of undue influence over testator to procure the will on the part of those who appear to have been preferred, the fact that the distribution of property is grossly unequal and unjust may be received to strengthen the evidence of undue influence. In re Tyner's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 898.

85. Roberts v. Bartlett, 190 Mo. 680, 89 S. W. 858.

86. Held proper to show reasons for testatrix's custom of having her agent prepare and sign, as her attorney in fact, checks used in paying current bills. In re Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252. Evidence that deed by testatrix to her agent and his declaration of trust in her favor were read over to her when executed in 1902, and her statements at that time as to their purpose and effect held competent to show her failing memory and weakness of intellect in 1903 when will was made and when she appeared to have forgotten them and could not comprehend them. Id. In suit to set aside a will, evidence of testatrix's mental condition is properly excluded where it is admitted that she was of sound mind and memory. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678.

87. Since physical condition has much to do with mental condition. Roberts v. Bartlett, 190 Mo. 680, 89 S. W. 858. Evidence of complaints of failing eyesight and other bodily ailments made three years before execution of will held admissible. In re Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252.

88. Held error not to require husband of testatrix's daughter, who was principal legatee, to answer question as to how much property he owned shortly before the making of the will. In re Jones' Estate [Iowa] 106 N. W. 610.

89, 90. In re Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252.

91. On issue of undue influence evidence that legatee who drew will, in speaking as to why no provision was made for creditors, said "Damn the creditors; we were not thinking about them when that will was made," held admissible for purpose of showing that such legatee was not a mere amau-to show the motives of one alleged to have exerted undue influence in procuring the execution of a new will,[92] and his conduct and dealings with testator,[93] and evidence of the dealings of testator with his agent, where it is claimed that he was induced to revoke his former will and execute a new one by reason of false representations as to such agent's conduct.[94]

It is generally held that while the acts and declarations of the testator not constituting a part of the res gestae, and not made at the very time of the execution of the will in dispute, are inadmissible to show that the influence was exerted or that it affected his actions, they are admissible to show his mental condition, and consequent susceptibility to such influence.[95] Declarations made before the execution of the will, and which are in harmony with its provisions, are, however, sometimes admitted to contradict the theory of fraud or substitution,[96] or of undue influence.[97] uensis in the preparation of the will. Lancaster v. Lancaster's Ex'r, 27 Ky. L. R. 1127, 87 S. W. 1137.

92. Evidence of feelings of party alleged to have exerted influence by making false representations as to honesty of testatrix's agent toward such agent and toward testatrix, held relevant on issue of fraud and undue influence, though motives and bad faith alone would not be sufficient proof thereof. In re Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252.

93. Evidence that third person had not told party alleged to have exerted influence that trust deed to agent could not be revoked without latter's consent held admissible, where there was evidence that party had so stated to testatrix. In re Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252. Evidence that deed to contestant was made absolute in form because intending purchaser objected to deed executed by attorney in fact held admissible. Id. Evidence that such contestant had told party alleged to have made false representations of the state of testatrix's affairs, and of his doings as her agent held admissible. Id.

94. Where it was claimed that testatrix was induced to revoke former will and execute new one by false representations that one of the contestants, who had been her business manager and trustee, had abused the trust reposed in him, evidence showing the extent and character of the estate committed to his charge, the reasons leading her to give him a power of attorney, and the general nature and character of the business done by him for her was admissible. In re Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252.

95. Effect should be limited to question of his condition of mind. In re Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252. Declarations of testator, made shortly after the date of the execution of the alleged will, to the effect that he had not made a will, and that if he had signed a paper purporting to be one, he did not know what he was doing, are admissible solely for purpose of showing his mental state when alleged will was executed, and whether he then had testamentary capacity, or was in a condition to be easily influenced, but are not admissible as evidence of the truth of the facts stated, nor to show fraud or undue influence, nor as evidence that he had revoked the will. Credille v. Credille, 123 Ga. 673, 51 S. E. 628. Declarations of testatrix made before or after she executed her will as to how she meant to leave her property are inadmissible to show undue influence or fraud. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. Are properly excluded when it is admitted that testatrix was of sound mind when she made the will, though they might be otherwise admissible to show mental condition. Id. On an issue of undue influence mere declarations of the testator, whether made prior or subsequent to the execution of the will, amount to very little in the face of a prima facie showing of competency and lack of coercion, particularly where the will was prepared under his personal direction and remained under his control to the time of his death. Declarations are corroborative merely, and should be accompanied by independent proof before they are considered, and then they are chiefly pertinent to show his condition of mind. In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 105 N. W. 110. Declarations of the testator made before the execution of the will are incompetent as substantive evidence of undue influence but are admissible for the purpose of illustrating testator's mental capacity and his susceptibility to extraneous influence, and also to show his feelings, intentions, and relations to his kindred and friends. Hobson v. Moorman [Tenn.] 90 S. W. 152. Declarations of testator tending to show the exertion of undue influence over him are inadmissible, and even when admitted are not evidence of the facts therein narrated. Declarations that his wishes were opposed by his wife and that he could not act against her wishes. Mueller v. Pew [Wis.] 106 N. W. 840.

96. The fact that the provisions of the will correspond with testator's previous declarations as to his intentions is a circumstance going to contradict the theory of fraud or substitution. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678.

97. Are admissible by way of rebuttal to show his intention as to the disposition of his property upon ground that will made in conformity to such declarations is more apt to have been executed without undue influence than if its terms are contrary to such declarations. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. The declarations thus admissible are those in harmony with the provisions of the will actually made, and not

A witness cannot ordinarily express an opinion as to whether testator was easily influenced,[98] or that he was influenced in making the will,[99] though he may be permitted to do so where the facts upon which his conclusion is based are such that they cannot be fully detailed to the court as they appeared to him.[1] Declarations of a beneficiary against his interest are inadmissible where there are other beneficiaries.[2]

An inference unfavorable to the validity of the will may be drawn from the fact that the testator was dependent upon, or subject to the control of, the person in whose favor it was made.[3] Some courts hold that the mere existence of confidential or fiduciary relations between the testator and the beneficiary is not, in and of itself alone, sufficient to raise a presumption of undue influence in the making of the will that will avoid it in the absence of rebutting evidence.[4] Others hold that proof of the existence of such relations raises a presumption of undue influence which will be fatal to the gift unless rebutted by proof of free deliberation and spontaneity on the part of the testator and good faith on the part of the legatee or devisee,[5] and that this rule applies in case the gift is made to a relative of the

those opposed to such provisions. Id. Prior declarations of an intention contrary to the subsequent disposition cannot be shown to establish undue influence in respect to the disposition finally made. Parker v. Lambertz [Iowa] 104 N. W. 452.

98. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. Statement of witness that testator's wife controlled his conduct in most matters held inadmissible. Franklin v. Boone [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 93, 88 S. W. 262.

99. A question—Did you notice any signs of undue influence—is bad. Stametz v. Mitchenor [Ind.] 75 N. E. 579.

1. Where witness testified to conversations between testator and his brother in relation to execution of will, and that testator deferred to brother in certain matters, held proper to permit contestant to ask him whether there was any act or statement on the part of the brother indicating coercion or an attempt to influence testator. In re Nichols [Conn.] 62 A. 610.

2. Declarations that the reason why heirs had not been remembered was because they had attempted to make him pay a note a second time. Fethergill v. Fethergill [Iowa] 105 N. W. 377.

3. From fact that plaintiff was confidential adviser of testatrix in respect to all her business affairs, and that she was dependent upon him and subject to his control in respect to them, that her physical and mental condition was such that she could be easily influenced, and that she had formed an intention of dying intestate, but that he, knowing her condition, took her to a scrivener and remained with her while she executed a will giving him substantially all her property. Edgerly v. Edgerly [N. H.] 62 A. 716.

4. In order to put burden of upholding validity on beneficiary, must, in addition to proof of such relations, be some evidence of coercion in its execution, or, in other words, that the will is not the will of testator. Hutcheson v. Bibb [Ala.] 38 So. 754. In a suit to set aside the will the burden of proving undue influence is on contestants to the end of the trial, and this is true notwithstanding the fact that a fiduciary relation is shown to have existed between the beneficiary and the testator. Instructions properly refused. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. When it is said that in such case the burden is shifted, all that is meant is that there is a necessity of evidence to answer the prima facie case thus made out or it will prevail, but the burden of maintaining the affirmative of the issue involved is still on the party alleging the fact constituting such issue, and this burden remains throughout the trial. Id.

5. Burden of rebutting presumption is on legatee or devisee. Dausman v. Rankin, 189 Mo. 677, 88 S. W. 696; Roberts v. Bartlett, 190 Mo. 680, 89 S. W. 858. Where the principal legatee was in no way related to testator, was his legal advisor, the draftsman of the will, procured the witnesses, and in so far as it appears was the only person who ever read or had possession of it, he must show affirmatively that testator had an intelligent knowledge of its contents. In re Bedell's Will, 107 App. Div. 284, 95 N. Y. S. 12. Evidence insufficient to sustain burden of doing so. Id. Where testator was of advanced years, and will was drawn by principal beneficiary who, though a layman, advised him in regard to it, and testator acted without independent advice, and contrary to previously expressed intentions, and will was unequal and unjust, held that burden was on proponent to show affirmatively that will was free, intelligent expression of testator's intention. In re Eckler's Will, 47 Misc. 320, 95 N. Y. S. 986. Evidence held insufficient to sustain burden. Id. Clerk of testatrix's attorney who drew will was principal beneficiary, and stood in position of peculiar confidence toward testatrix, held to be regarded as her attorney in determining question of fraud, and he was required to show that will expressed testatrix's true intention. In re Egan's Will, 46 Misc. 375, 94 N. Y. S. 1064. Evidence insufficient to sustain such burden. Id. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2235 fact that one of residuary legatees, who was testator's attorney, drew the will, and that testator was old, feeble, and ill, raises technical person standing in such relation to testator, or to a charity represented by him,[6] it being immaterial that the beneficiary is entirely innocent.[7] Some courts hold that, though undue influence will not be presumed, yet when such facts are proved as will authorize a jury to find the existence of undue influence,[8] or when the contestants have made a prima facie case, by the production of evidence from which the presumption of undue influence arises, the burden is then upon proponents to show that the instrument is the will of testator.[9]

Undue influence is a question of fact[10] for the jury.[11] Where deceased was of sound mind and was not easily changed or influenced, the evidence of undue influence must be clear and convincing,[12] but in cases where incapacity and undue influence are both relied upon, and there is substantial evidence of the former, any evidence, however slight, tending to prove the latter, is freely admitted.[13] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence to show fraud[14] and undue influence[15] will be found in the notes.

presumption of undue influence, or at least requires proponents to show what actually did occur at time of execution of will and prior thereto. In re Morey's Estate, 147 Cal. 495, 82 P. 57. Evidence that there was no undue influence exerted, and that testator expressly affirmed will sometime after its execution when free from any possibility of undue influence, etc., held to overcome presumption. Id. Person standing in a confidential relationship must be shown to have been in some manner directly connected with the making of the will. Mere fact that he was in same room at the time is insufficient to shift burden. In re Barry's Will, 219 Ill. 391, 76 N. E. 577. Rule does not apply where such person takes nothing under the will. Confidential advisor of testatrix who procured lawyer to draw will, and was made one of two executors and trustees held not to be beneficiary. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. The fact that a confidential agent of testator drew the will or procured it to be drawn, and was made executor and trustee thereunder, may call for additional scrutiny as to the fairness of the transaction, but such facts do not alone invalidate the will where the other evidence shows that there was no fraud, or imposition, or attempt to exert undue influence. Id. Evidence held not to raise presumption of undue influence so as to throw burden of proof on proponent to show that none was exerted. In re Arneson's Will [Wis.] 107 N. W. 21.

9. This means that a point is then reached where the contestant must prevail unless the proponent assumes the obligations of going forward with his evidence. In re Tyner's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 898.

10. Dausman v. Rankin, 189 Mo. 677, 88 S. W. 696. The fact that an inference unfavorable to the validity of a will, which may be drawn when it appears that a person who was dependent upon or subject to the control of another makes a will in the latter's favor, may be rebutted by showing that the transaction was fair and honest, does not change the question of whether or not it has been rebutted from one of fact to one of law. Edgerly v. Edgerly [N. H.] 62 A. 716. Whenever facts that would sustain the will are put in evidence, together with other facts from which an inference unfavorable to its validity may be drawn, the question whether such unfavorable inference should be drawn, and if so whether it has been rebutted, are both questions of fact. Id. Evidence held to require submission of question of undue influence to jury. Id.

11. Instruction in action to set aside will held erroneous as in effect charging jury that there was sufficient evidence to sustain a finding of undue influence, the evidence in that regard being conflicting. Niemann v. Cordtmeyer, 97 N. Y. S. 670. Issue of fraud held properly submitted to jury where there were facts and circumstances shown from which they could find that testatrix's husband induced her to make the will in issue by a tacit agreement upon which she relied, but which he did not at the time intend to keep and perform. Morrison v. Thoman [Tex.] 89 S. W. 409. See, also, [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1069.

12. Where he was prosperous business man, with strong and vigorous mind. In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 105 N. W. 110. In case the testator was of sound mind, it is not sufficient to show that the circumstances are consistent with the hypothesis of its having been obtained by undue influence, but it must be shown that they are inconsistent with a contrary hypothesis. Instruction approved. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. The presumption in favor of the validity of a will executed with all the formalities required by law, and by a testator of full age and sound mind, is one of fact only and does not arise under circumstances which would justify a finding of undue influence. Edgerly v. Edgerly [N. H.] 62 A. 716.

13. In re Glass' Estate, 127 Iowa, 646, 103 N. W. 1013. Evidence held to require submission of issue to jury. In re Jones' Estate [Iowa] 106 N. W. 610.

14. Evidence insufficient to show fraud: To show that will in favor of husband was procured by false or fraudulent promises, there being no evidence to establish an intention on his part not to comply with agreement to dispose of property as wife wished,

§ 3. The testamentary instrument or act. A. Requisites, form, and validity.[16] —A will may be defined as any instrument, executed with the formalities required by law, whereby a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his death.[17] A will is entitled to probate though it does nothing more than appoint executors of testator's estate.[18] So, too, a properly executed codicil is a final testamentary disposition, and, if sufficiently complete in itself to be capable of execution, will be given effect, though the will which it was intended to supplement is invalid because improperly executed.[19]

A will which is to become effective only upon the happening of a contingency is a contingent or conditional will,[20] and is annulled and revoked by the failure of the contingency to happen.[21] The will is conditional only if the contingency is referred to as the condition upon which the disposition is to become operative.[22] It is unconditional in case the event is referred to merely as giving the reason or inducement for making it.[23]

A testamentary disposition of property involves the act or will of a single individual only.[24] The distinguishing feature of a will is that it passes no present conceding the existence of such an agreement. Morrison v. Thoman [Tex. Civ. App.] 86 S. W. 1069.

Evidence held to show fraud. Parker v. Lambertz [Iowa] 104 N. W. 452. To show that will was result of delusions fraudulently created or fostered by the principal beneficiary, and was, therefore, the result of fraud and undue influence. In re Egan's Will, 46 Misc. 375, 94 N. Y. S. 1064.

15. Evidence held sufficient to show undue influence. In re Tyner's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 898. To sustain finding of undue influence. Dausman v. Rankin, 189 Mo. 677, 88 S. W. 696; Irving v. Bruen, 110 App. Div. 558, 97 N. Y. S. 180.

24. A received certain sum from B and gave latter a mortgage providing for payment to him of a certain sum per annum during life, and further providing that the intention of the parties was to secure to B the interest on the principal sum for life, interest in the property, does not take effect until the maker's death, and is ambulatory and revocable by him during his lifetime.[25] An instrument which operates to pass some present interest is not testamentary in character,[26] even though the right to possession and enjoyment is postponed.[27] The question is one of intention[28] and that in case such interest was paid as provided, such principal sum was "to remain to A, her heirs, etc." and upon the death of said B and payments of interest as aforesaid, this obligation is to become null and void. Held not to be an attempted testamentary disposition of B's property. Fiscus v. Wilson [Neb.] 104 N. W. 856.

25. In re Hall's Estate [Cal.] 84 P. 839; O'Day v. Meadows [Mo.] 92 S. W. 637. It is of the essence of a testamentary disposition of property that it be purely posthumous in operation, since during life the intent of the testator must continue ambulatory. Heaston v. Kreig [Ind.] 77 N. E. 805. Distinguishing feature is that it takes effect upon death. In re Emmons' Will, 96 N. Y. S. 506. In determining whether an instrument is a deed or a will the question is whether the maker intended any interest or estate whatever to vest before his death and upon the execution of the paper, or whether he intended that all the interest and estate should take effect only after his death. If former, it is deed, and if the latter, a will. McLain v. Garrison [Tex.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 758, 89 S. W. 284. For former opinion see [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 484. A will speaks, and is intended to speak, as of the death of the testator, and until that time the title, legal and equitable, remains unchanged in the testator, and he may sell, convey, and dispose of the same as fully as if no will had ever been made by him. No right, title, or interest of any kind in the thing devised or bequeathed passes to devisee or legatee until testator's death, and not then if it appears that he has otherwise disposed of the property during his lifetime. Lewis v. Curnutt [Iowa] 106 N. W. 914. Wills are ambulatory during the life of the testator, and are necessarily revocable, while deeds take effect upon delivery, and are operative and binding during the life of the grantor. Instrument is a deed if it cannot be revoked, defeated, or impaired, by the act of the grantor, but is a will if it is not to take effect until maker's death, and he has the unqualified power of revocation. McLain v. Garrison [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 758, 89 S. W. 284. For former opinion see [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 484. O'Day v. Meadows [Mo.] 92 S. W. 637. The distinction between a will and a trust is that the former becomes operative only at the death of the testator, while the latter passes an interest to the trustee and the beneficiary instantly upon the execution of the writing by which it is created. Lewis v. Curnutt [Iowa] 106 N. W. 914.

Instruments held testamentary in character: Instrument in form of a contract, Heaston v. Kreig [Ind.] 77 N. E. 805. Note regular in form, shown to have been given in consideration of promise by payee to "distribute" a certain sum after maker's death to a priest for masses, another sum to a sister, and to "keep" the balance. McCourt v. Peppard [Wis.] 105 N. W. 809. Though note recites present consideration, parol evidence is admissible to show that true consideration was promise to do something in future, and hence was testamentary. Id.

26. Instruments held not to be testamentary: Assignment of bonds to trustee charging him with the payment of the interest thereon to the donor for life and directing the delivery of the bonds to persons named on the donor's death, held to constitute an irrevocable disposition of the property passing title immediately. Robertson v. Robertson [Ala.] 40 So. 104. Paper in form of a deed, attested as such, and delivered to the party named as grantee, and in the granting, as well as in the habendum and tenendum, clause purporting to convey the title in praesenti, should not be construed as testamentary in character because it recites that the premises are to "remain the right and property" of the grantor "for and during her natural life," the purpose and effect of such recital being to reserve a life estate in the grantor. Sharpe v. Mathews, 123 Ga. 794, 51 S. E. 706. Deed to sister reserving to grantor a life estate in the land and providing that the consideration mentioned therein was to be deducted from the grantee's share of the grantor's estate, held to convey an immediate vested interest in remainder and not to be testamentary in character on the theory that it amounted to an attempted revocation of the residuary clause of a previous will so far as such realty was concerned. Seaton v. Lee [Ill.] 77 N. E. 446. Deed and another instrument held to pass present title. Lewis v Curnutt [Iowa] 106 N. W. 914. Fact that trust includes gifts which do not pass into the possession of the cestuis que trust is not conclusive against instrument being a deed and valid as such. Id. Fact that writings provided for payment of expenses of settling grantor's estate, thus rendering possible the entire exhaustion of the estate to the exclusion of the benficiaries, held not to show that a trust could not have been intended. Id. Power of revocation does not prevent present passing of title. Id. Where a grantor executed deeds with a testamentary purpose, and delivered them to his wife with the direction to keep them until he was done with them and then "deliver them to the girls," his action taken in connection with all the circumstances held to constitute a good delivery. Wissel v. Pierson, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 428.

27. O'Day v. Meadows [Mo.] 92 S. W. 637. Words "from and after my death" held to have no reference to time when title or interest should pass under deed, but to refer merely to time when trustee should have authority to take possession and proceed with active performance of the trust. Lewis v. Curnutt [Iowa] 106 N. W. 914.

Instruments held not testamentary: Instrument whereby husband, in consideration of $5 and love and affection, does "grant, bargain, sell, and convey" certain property to his wife, and providing that it is "to remain null and void during my lifetime, but to be gathered from the instrument itself,[29] parol evidence being inadmissible to show a different intention from that expressed.[30] It affords no objection whatever to the testamentary character of an instrument that it contains provisions of a contractual nature,[31] nor is it material by what name the instrument is called.[32]

If testamentary in character the instrument must operate as a will, if at all.[33] If the paper is, on its face, equivocal, the presumption is against its being testamentary, unless it is made clearly to appear that it was executed animo testandi,[34] but a construction rendering it operative will be preferred to one rendering it ineffectual.[35]

(§ 3) B. Execution of will. 1. Mode of execution.[36]—The right to dispose of one's property by will being purely statutory,[37] the statutory requirements as to the manner of its execution must be at least substantially complied with,[38] testator's intention being immaterial in this regard.[39] to become of full force and effect immediately upon my decease without court process of any kind," and purporting to have been "signed, sealed and delivered" in the presence of the witnesses, held not a will but a deed transferring property in praesenti. In re Hall's Estate [Cal.] 84 P. 839. Deed by husband and wife whereby they, "in consideration of the sum of one dollar to them in hand paid" by the grantee, "hereby remise, sell and quitclaim" to him an estate in certain land commencing on the death of the husband and continuing during the wife's lifetime, held not to be testamentary in character. O'Day v. Meadows [Mo.] 92 S. W. 637. Instruments in the form of deeds, containing all the elements of deeds, granting and conveying to the grantee the interest described and concluding with usual habendum, tenendum, and warranty clauses, held deeds notwithstanding provisions that they were not to take effect until maker's death, in view of Rev. St. 1895, art. 632 (556), providing that an estate of inheritance to commence in futuro may be created by deed. McLain v. Garrison [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 484; rehearing denied, 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 758, 89 S. W. 284.

28. Whether an instrument is testamentary in character is to be determined, not necessarily from the language nor from the belief or understanding of the parties as to its legal effect, though these should be considered, but the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time of its execution are also to be taken into consideration, and from all the facts the court will determine whether the instrument was intended to have a post mortem effect. McCourt v. Peppard [Wis.] 105 N. W. 809.

29. Intention as gathered from the face of the instruments controls. McLain v. Garrison [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 484, rehearing denied [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 758, 89 S. W. 284. An intention that deeds shall be testamentary in character cannot be given effect as against their plain and unambiguous provisions. Dodson v. Dodson [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 831, 105 N. W. 1110.

30. Where an instrument is in terms plainly a deed conveying a present interest, and there is nothing therein to indicate a testamentary intent, extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show the contrary. Deeds held unambiguous and hence not subject to probate as a testamentary disposition of property, though circumstances showed that they were so intended. Dodson v. Dodson [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 831, 105 N. W. 1110. If the instrument contains every element of a valid will, and is incapable of operating in any other way, the animus testandi will be implied, and parol evidence is inadmissible to show a different intent. 38. In re Pederson's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 958; In re Moore's Will, 109 App. Div. 762, 96 N. Y. S. 729, rvg. 46 Misc. 537, 95 N. Y. S. 61; In re Willing's Estate, 212 Pa. 136, 61 A. 812. A substantial compliance is sufficient. Garnett v. Foston [Ky.] 91 S. W. 668. In case of holographic will. Brogan v. Barnard [Tenn.] 90 S. W. 858. Fact that will is holographic does not dispense with substantial compliance with provisions of statute in regard to its execution, but it shows that testator understood its contents and that it expresses his wishes, and the necessity for exercising great care in considering evidence relative to execution does not exist to the same extent as it otherwise would. In re Eldred's Will, 109 App. Div. 777, 96 N. Y. S. 435.

39. Intention has no bearing on the question of publication. Failure to prove publication cannot be supplied by resorting to inference that testator knew he was executing his will, but desired to withhold that

In order to be incorporated into the will by reference, extrinsic papers must be described in clear and definite terms.[40] In New York no testamentary provision in other unexecuted or unattested papers can be incorporated into a will.[41] Whether a trust deed previously executed is a part of the will is a question of law for the court.[42]

The will must be executed animo testandi,[43] and testator must know its contents.[44] The fact that it was not read over to testator is immaterial where there is no doubt that it correctly expresses his intent.[45] A will prepared from instructions and directions given by him, and signed by him upon the assurance that it expresses his wishes, is void if the language incorporated therein does not, in legal effect, make the provisions intended by him,[46] but this rule does not render a will void for failure to incorporate therein provisions supplied by the statutes of inheritance.[47]

The manner of execution, being purely statutory, varies in the different states. The more common requirements are that the will must be in writing and signed by the testator, or by some other person for him, in his presence and by his express direction,[48] that he must sign or acknowledge his signature,[49] in the presence knowledge from the witnesses. In re Moore's Will, 109 App. Div. 762, 96 N. Y. S. 729, rvg. 46 Misc. 537, 95 N. Y. S. 61.

40. Unsigned memorandum held no part of will which alluded generally to any "memorandum which I may leave." Minot v. Parker [Mass.] 75 N. E. 149.

41. Will which is invalid because attested by only one witness cannot be validated by, or incorporated into, a properly executed codicil subsequently made. In re Emmon's Will, 96 N. Y. S. 506.

42. In re Glass' Estate, 127 Iowa, 646, 103 N. W. 1013.

43. The animus testandi does not depend upon the maker's realization that the instrument he is making is a will, but upon his intention to create a revocable disposition of his property to take effect after his death. Heaston v. Kreig [Ind.] 77 N. E. 805. Testatrix directed that dwelling house should be appraised and that her son should have option to take it at appraised value. Later she signed a writing addressed to her son stating that she had bequeathed to him "the house I now live in for the sum of $10,000, as expressed in my will written by" M. Hold that the admission of such writing as a codicil was properly refused, there being nothing to identify the will proved as the one referred to therein, or the house, and the writing being merely a declaration as to a past act, and not of a present intention to make a testamentary disposition of the property. In re Bright's Estate, 212 Pa. 363, 61 A. 941.

44. The fact that the will was written in a language which testator did not understand is immaterial if it clearly appears that he was otherwise accurately informed of its contents and meaning in a language which he did understand. In re Arneson's Will [Wis.] 107 N. W. 21. Instructions calling attention of jury to question whether or not testatrix knew contents of will when she executed it, and fully understood its provisions, held not objectionable as calling attention of jury to ignorance or understanding of testatrix as an isolated fact, where bill alleged that she was illiterate, had no knowledge of value of her estate, and no understanding of contents of will. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. Illiteracy of testatrix held not to justify setting aside will on ground that she did not know its contents in view of evidence of her clearness of mind, etc. Id. Evidence held to sustain finding that will was drawn according to the express wishes of testatrix and that she knew its contents. Barker v. Streuli [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 408. Where testator is shown to have executed an instrument as his will, being in his right mind, and there is no evidence of fraud or imposition, it will be presumed that he was aware of its contents. Proof of testator's signature to the will is prima facie evidence of his having understandingly executed the same. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. Is presumed that one signing an instrument understands its nature and contents. Todd v. Todd [Ill.] 77 N. E. 680. Instruction that jury should find against will if evidence on question whether testator understood nature and contents of will was evenly balanced held erroneous, there being no averment in the bill that testator did not know the nature of the will or what was in it. 47. Not where property passes under the will in connection with the statute to persons to whom he intended it to go, as where residuary clause in favor of mother was omitted but properly passed to her under statute, it not having been disposed of. In re Brannan's Estate [Minn.] 107 N. W. 141.

48. Gen. St. 1894, § 4426. In re Pederson's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 958. Wood v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 757. Testator made copy of letter to attorney directing him to prepare codicil to his will so as to leave certain property to certain person, and indorsed envelope in which he placed it "copy of codicil to my will," but did not sign indorsement. Attorney refused to prepare codicil, but testator put copy in his desk, called beneficiary's attention to it, of the statutory number of witnesses,[50] who must in most states be informed that the instrument is his will,[51] and who must sign as witnesses in his presence,[52] and, in some states, at his request.[53] and told her that it made no difference and was all right. Held that copy was not a valid codicil, since it was not intended as such when made, and if indorsement was made later and intended as a publication, it was inoperative because not signed. In re Willing's Estate, 212 Pa. 136, 61 A. 812. Where will is not personally signed by testator by writing his name or making his mark it is void unless his name was so signed by his direction and in his presence. In re Pederson's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 958. Direction need not be given in express words, but acts relied on to show such direction must be unambiguous and clearly indicate the necessary direction or request, and the act of signing must be in obedience to the direction thus conveyed. Id. Evidence held to sustain finding that will was not properly executed. Id. Where statute provided that will must be in writing "with the name of the testator subscribed thereto by himself or by some other person in his presence and by his direction," etc., held that will was sufficiently executed though testator's signature was written by another out of his presence, where it was subsequently read over to him, and he, being unable to write, made his mark in the presence of the witnesses. Garnett v. Foston [Ky.] 91 S. W. 668. The signature is that of the testator himself where he holds the pen, though his hand is guided by some other person. Is not a signature by some other person for him so as to require proof of express authority. Wood v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. [R. I.] 61 A. 757.

49. Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that will was signed by testator in the presence of the subscribing witnesses. Senn v. Gruendling, 218 Ill. 458, 75 N. E. 1020. It is not necessary that the witnesses see testator sign the will or see his name thereon, or for him to acknowledge that he signed it, but it is sufficient if he acknowledges to them, either by words or acts that the instrument is his act and deed. In re Barry's Will, 219 Ill. 391, 76 N. E. 577.

50. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 5335, 5336, will not written entirely by testator must be attested by two witnesses. McLain v. Garrison [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 484. Witness who takes part in the physical act of writing her name by holding the pen while another writes it, and who does so animo testandi, in the presence of testator, and at his request, is an effectual subscribing witness, though she is able at the time to write her own name. In re Pope's Will, 139 N. C. 484, 52 S. E. 235.

51. The publication of the will is essential to its validity (In re Moore's Will, 109 App. Div. 762, 96 N. Y. S. 729, rvg. 46 Misc. 537, 95 N. Y. S. 61), and this is equally true in the case of a holographic will (Id.). Held error to admit will where only evidence as to publication was to the effect that testator told subscribing witnesses that instrument was not his will, but was merely a memorandum of his property which he expected to use in preparing a will in the future. Id. Publication is a declaration by the testator that the writing is his last will. Vernon v. Vernon [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 409. Publication may be by words, or acts or signs which clearly and distinctly make known to the witnesses that the instrument to which they are requested to subscribe is the testator's will. Evidence of publication held sufficient. Id. Evidence held insufficient to show publication. In re Sarasohn's Will, 47 Misc. 535, 95 N. Y. S. 975.

Contra: In Illinois it is not necessary for the testator to state, or for the witnesses to know, that the instrument is a will. In re Barry's Will, 219 Ill. 391, 76 N. E. 577.

52. A paper not attested by two witnesses in the presence of the testator is not a will. Standley v. Moss, 114 Ill. App. 612. "Presence" means conscious presence giving visual or other sensory knowledge of the attestation by the witnesses. Calkins v. Calkins, 216 Ill. 458, 75 N. E. 182. Attestation by taking will from testator to adjoining room out of vision thence returning and acknowledging signatures is not in testator's "presence." Id. Attestation in same room with testator is good without regard to intervening objects which might or did intercept his view, where he could have seen had he looked. In re Brannan's Estate [Minn.] 107 N. W. 141. Evidence held to sustain finding of due execution. Id. Where the witnesses sign in the same room with testator and at his request, it is immaterial that his eyesight is so dim that he does not actually see the act of writing. In re Arneson's Will [Wis.] 107 N. W. 21.

NOTE. Meaning of "In the Presence of:" Where, after testator had signed his will in the presence of the attesting witnesses, they took it into another room and there signed it, being out of testator's sight at the time, and then returned to his room and read the will to him, showing him their signatures, with which he expressed satisfaction. Held, that the attestation was not "in the presence of" the testator. Calkins v. Calkins, 216 Ill. 458, 75 N. E. 182. The decision is in line with the older cases holding that the words "in the presence of" should be strictly construed, the tests of the presence being vision and mental comprehension. 30 Amer. & Eng. Enc. of Law [2d Ed.] 598; 1 Jar. Wills, 120; 1 Underhill, Wills, § 196; Mendell v. Dunbar, 169 Mass. 74, 47 N. E. 402, 61 Am. St. Rep. 277; Boldry v. Parris, 2 Cush. [Mass.] 435. Thus, where testator is unconscious when the attestation is made, it is void. Sanders v. Stiles, 2 Redf. [N. Y.] 1. So when he cannot see the signing, even though it is in the same room and near him, it is not in his presence. Reed v. Roberts, 26 Ga. 441. But if testator can see the act, it is immaterial whether it occurs in his immediate presence or not. Shire v. Glascock, 2 Salk. 688; Drury v. Connell, 177 Ill. 43, 52 N. E. 368. In Michigan under almost identical circumstances with those of the principal case, it was held that the attestation was good on the ground that only a substantial compliance with the statute was necessary. Cook v. Winchester, 81

Proponent must show affirmatively that all the conditions required by the statute in the execution of the will were complied with,[54] particularly where there is no attestation clause;[55] but when it is established that testator affixed his signature to the instrument and that the persons whose names appear as subscribing witnesses signed a certificate declaring all the steps required by statute for due execution, there arises a strong presumption that such steps were taken which need not be suppported by affirmative memory of witnesses,[56] and which, to defeat the will, must be overcome by evidence to the contrary.[57] In case the subscribing witnesses testify against the due execution of the will, proponents may, if they can, show proper execution by other evidence, but they cannot supply a defect in the proof of due execution by proof that such witnesses had previously stated facts showing due execution.[58] One is a competent witness to testify to the execution of a will when he was competent at the time he attested it.[59] An attesting witness is not disqualified as a witness to prove the will by the fact that by the terms thereof he is appointed executor.[60] The court is not bound to accept the testimony of the subscribing witnesses that the will was executed by the deceased, even though it is not directly and expressly contradicted.[61] Admissions of the witnesses that they may be mistaken,[62] or that their memories may be poor, go only to their credibility.[63]

On the issue of whether the will is genuine or a forgery, any competent evidence tending to show either fact is admissible.[64]

Whether the will was properly executed[65] and whether or not it is a forgery[66] are questions of fact. Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence to show due execution of the will,[67] and its genuineness,[68] will be found in the note.

Riggs, 135 Mass. 238. These cases have never been regarded favorably in this country on account of their tendency toward bringing about fraudulent practices. See note by Bigelow, 1 Jarman, Wills, 122, note 1. In the principal case, Cook v. Winchester, and Cunningham v. Cunningham, were cited and criticised. The decision in the principal case is purely technical, as the court regarded the circumstances as precluding any attempt at fraud. (§ 3B) 2. Nuncupative and holographic wills. Nuncupative wills.[69]—Nuncupative wills are generally required to be reduced to writing and offered for proof within a specified time after the speaking of the testamentary words.[70] In Louisiana a nuncupative will by private act is not invalid because written in the presence of the five attesting witnesses without formal dictation.[71] The presentation of such a will supplies or dispenses with dictation.[72] Presentation need not be manual, but the acknowledgment of the testator that the paper contains his last will implies the presentation provided by law, even though such acknowledgment is in response to a question.[73]

The burden of proving an alleged nuncupative will in proceedings for its probate is on proponent.[74]

Holographic wills.[75]—A holographic will is one which is entirely written by the testator.[76] In many states attestation may be dispensed with in the case of such wills.[77] Statutes sometimes require that such wills be found among testator's valuable papers after his death.[78] By valuable papers is meant such papers as are regarded by the testator as worthy of preservation, and as are, therefore, in his estimation, of some value.[79] It is not sufficient that the will be found among his valuable effects.[80]

Where writing in form of contract but claimed to be a revocation of an existing will, is clear, complete, and unambiguous, oral evidence of declarations made by decedent is inadmissible to show that he understood and intended it to be a revoca-

the same mental capacity to revoke as to make a will.[83] Wills may generally be revoked by canceling or destroying them.[84] The question whether cancellations were made animo revocandi is one of intention.[85] Cancellations or erasures made with ink are presumed to have been made animo revocandi,[86] and the same has been held true in the case of a clear and distinct erasure made with a pencil.[87] If a will shown to have been in testator's custody is found among his effects after his death canceled or defaced, it is presumed that he canceled or defaced it animo revocandi,[88] but if it was last in the custody of another, the party asserting revocation must show that it again came into testator's custody, or that it was mutilated or destroyed by his direction.[89] Whether alterations in a will were made by a legatee after its execution is a question of fact for the jury.[90] The cancellation of a part of the will does not affect the balance.[91] A will devising land in fee is not revoked by a subsequent conveyance of the land to the devisee.[92] In states where a married woman may make a will, it is generally held that marriage of a feme sole does not of itself operate to revoke her prior will,[93] but her subsequent marriage and the birth of issue will do so.[94]

Where it appears that the will was in the possession of testator from the time of its execution until his death, that immediately after his death it was found among his effects, and that when so found ink lines were drawn through certain portions of it, it will be presumed that cancellations were made by testator, animo revocandi. N. 793, 105 N. W. 1114. Rule not changed by Comp. Laws, § 9285, making pro-

Presumption from failure to find will.[95]—If a will, shown to have been made and left in testator's custody, cannot be found after his death, there is a presumption that he destroyed it animo revocandi,[96] and the burden is on the party seeking to establish the will to overcome such presumption by evidence which is strong, positive, and free from doubt.[97] Declarations of the testator made after the execution of the will are competent to strengthen or rebut this presumption.[98] So, too, the fact that the decedent's papers, including the will if there was one, fell under the control of contestants, who had powerful motives for suppressing it, may be taken into consideration on the question of revocation.[99]

By subsequent will or codicil.[1]—In the absence of an express provision therein to the contrary, a later will revokes a former one only in so far as the two are inconsistent, and in so far as they are consistent the two are to be taken together.[2] The declarations of the testator at the time of the execution of the second will are admissible to show that no revocation was intended.[3] A valid provision in the former will is not revoked by an invalid repugnant provision in the subsequent one.[4]

A will and a codicil must be taken and construed together as parts of one and the same instrument,[5] and the codicil will not be allowed to vary or modify the will unless such was the plain and manifest intent of the testator,[6] nor to disturb its vision for children born after making of father's will. Id.

Codicil disposing to others the "$2,000 given for the benefit of my sister" held to refer to the principal of $2,000 given in trust for her use of the income and not to $2,000 given her absolutely. Harlow v. Bailey [Mass.] 75 N. E. 259. Codicil providing that share of son should be paid to trustee who should pay income to son during life, and that at his death his share should be paid to his heirs, held to have altered provision of will that residue should be divided among all the children at a fixed future time, and to require distribution of son's share immediately on his death. Throp v. Throp [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 377. Clause in will giving wife residue of estate absolutely on condition that she re-provisions further than is necessary.[7] Where the terms of a will clearly give an estate, the words of a codicil must manifest an equally clear intention to revoke or change it before they will be construed to have such an effect.[8] The disposition of a will will not be disturbed by an erroneous recital of its contents in a codicil, unless a design to modify or revoke the former disposition can be fairly collected from the whole will.[9]

(§ 3) D. Republication and revival.[10]—A will which has been revoked can only be revived by a re-execution thereof or by a codicil executed in the manner prescribed for the execution of wills.[11] A substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient.[12] A will properly executed in form which has been revoked by operation of law, or which was executed while testator was incompetent or under restraint, may be revived and validated by the proper execution of a codicil referring to it, or executed for that purpose,[13] but a will which is invalid because not properly executed cannot be so revived by, or incorporated into, a properly executed codicil.[14] A codicil republishes the whole will as of the date of the codicil.[15]

The revocation of a will revoking a former one does not operate to revive the latter, but a republication is necessary.[16]

main unmarried, with devise over to children in case she remarried held superseded by codicil giving to wife absolutely certain realty acquired after will was made "together with all my other real and personal property wheresoever situate and not before devised or bequeathed in my said wills or codicils." "Not before devised or bequeathed" means not specifically devised or bequeathed, and widow took residue free from condition against remarriage. Mulry v. Mulry, 110 App. Div. 374, 97 N. Y. S. 309. Testator gave residue of his estate to his heirs at law, and later executed codicil giving to certain of his heirs specified sums "and no more." McGauly [Ala.] 39 So. 677. By the first paragraph of his will testator made an absolute devise of realty, in a part of which he owned an undivided interest and the balance of which he owned absolutely. By codicil he ratified and confirmed the will "except as the same shall be changed hereby," recited the devise of certain of the realty, describing it but omitting a description of that in which he owned only an undivided interest, and declared that he revoked "said devise and will," and gave the property to devisee for life, with remainder over. Held that will was altered only in regard to the property particularly described in the codicil, and devise of property in which testator owned only an undivided interest was not altered. Id.

§ 4. Probating, establishing, and recording. A. Place of probate and jurisdiction and powers of courts.[17]—The will of a resident of the state must ordinarily be proved originally as a domestic will, and, in so far as that state is concerned, cannot primarily be proved elsewhere, and brought into the state for purposes of secondary and ancillary administration,[18] though there seems to be some conflict of authority in this regard.[19] The will need not, however, be first probated in the state of testator's domicile,[20] and the fact that it has already been probated in a foreign state does not prevent the subsequent institution of a proceeding for its original probate as a domestic will in the state of the domicile.[21] Every state has plenary power with respect to the administration and disposition of the estates of deceased persons as to all property of such persons found within its jurisdiction, and the courts of a state may grant original probate upon wills of deceased nonresidents leaving property in such state,[22] but this exercise of original jurisdiction over the estates of nonresidents can affect only the property within the state, and the judgment admitting the will to probate is valid in other states only as to property within the jurisdiction of the court pronouncing the judgment.[23] On application for the probate of a foreign will,

St. 1897, providing that a will may be revoked by a subsequent will, codicil, or declaration in writing, etc., execution of such a subsequent will or writing has the effect of revoking the former will immediately upon its publication, regardless of what may thereafter become of it, and a republication is necessary to give effect to the former one. 18. Code Civ. Proc. § 1294, providing that wills must be proved and letters testamentary granted in the county of which decedent was a resident at the time of his death, in whatever place he may have died, fixes the place for all grants of original probate, while § 1322, relating to the probate of foreign wills, and providing that all wills duly proved and allowed in any other of the United States or in any foreign country may be allowed and recorded in the superior court of any county in which the testator shall have left any estate, does the same for grants of ancillary probate of authenticated copies of wills proved and probated in foreign jurisdictions. In re Clark's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 760. These statutes require that the will of a resident of the state of California must be proved originally as a domestic will in the county of his residence, and, in so far as that state is concerned, it cannot primarily be proved elsewhere and brought into that state for purposes of secondary and ancillary administration. Id. Words "all wills," as used in § 1322, means "all foreign wills," and "foreign wills" means "all wills other than domestic ones." Id. Const. U. S. art. 4, § 1, requiring each state to give full faith and credit to the adjudications of sister states, does not deprive a state of any of its sovereign rights, of any of its rights of primary jurisdiction, nor of any of the rights of its subjects to have the will of a fellow-resident originally proved in the county of his residence. Id. Will has not been duly proved and allowed unless the proof has been taken in a court whose territorial jurisdiction includes testator's domicile. Id.

23. In re Clark's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 760. Where wills of nonresidents leaving property within the state are admitted to probate on original proceedings for the purpose of administering such property, it is the property within the state that constitutes the res, and proof of the will is allowed as a mere incident or means of determining its disposition, and decree is not binding as to the will itself in other jurisdictions where the sufficiency of the proofs of foreign probate, and the question of the residence of the deceased, may always be inquired into.[24]

The powers of courts in the probate of wills and in subsequent actions to test their validity are fixed by statute, and vary in the different states.[25] In states where the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of the probate of a will and has power generally to check and revise proceedings for probate tainted with mistake, fraud, or illegality, a court of equity will not entertain jurisdiction to set aside a will or the probate thereof.[26]

(§ 4) B. Parties in will cases and the right to contest.[27]—Any person interested may ordinarily propound a will for probate,[28] or contest its admission.[29] The fact that the widow is given a legacy in lieu of dower does not deprive her of her right to attack the will for any legal reason.[30] The executor is not a necessary party to an action to contest where there are no debts, and no personal property,[31] or where the estate has been fully settled and he has been discharged.[32] A defect of parties cannot be complained of by one whose rights are in no way affected thereby.[33] When proceedings are taken either on a caveat or for a review of the probate of a will, all the deceased left property, nor upon the courts of the domicile. Id. Foreign probate where testator had realty will be recognized as foreign judgment if properly authenticated though testator resided elsewhere. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Winslow, 216 Ill. 166, 74 N. E. 815.

(§ 4) D. Probate and procedure in general.[37]—Probate is not ordinarily necessary to pass title to the realty devised.[38] Probate cannot be refused because of the lack of a living legatee, devisee, or executor,[39] or because of the invalidity of the provisions of the will.[40] Where a will is executed in duplicate, both copies need not be proved and admitted to probate,[41] though the proponents of either duplicate may be required to produce the other.[42]

The necessity of notifying heirs[43] and legatees of the proceedings,[44] and the manner of such notification,[45] depends upon the statutes of the various states.

In some states the testimony of both subscribing witnesses must be taken unless one or both have died, or are absent from the state, or are incapacitated.[46] In New York probate will be refused where the surrogate is not judicially satisfied that the will was properly executed, or that it speaks the true intention of the testator, or that at the time of executing it he was in all respects competent to make a will and was not under restraint.[47] The probate court has a reasonable discretion as to advancing and postponing cases, which will not be interfered with unless abused.[48]

Whitney v. Hanington [Colo.] 85 P. 84. Affidavit for publication under § 25, alleging that minor heirs cannot after due diligence and inquiry be found in the state, held sufficient. Id. Further allegation on information and belief that they resided in a specified state held unnecessary to give court jurisdiction to issue order for publication. Id. Fact that notice of petition for probate, published under the direction of the county court, was published in a paper which did not circulate in the vicinity where plaintiff's wards resided, held not sufficient to impeach notice, nor to furnish grounds for setting aside probate. In some states a will may be probated in common form without notice to anyone and upon the testimony of one subscribing witness,[49] and the court has no jurisdiction in such a proceeding to entertain a caveat by an objecting party, or to pass upon the issue of devisavit vel non attempted to be raised thereby.[50] The probate and record of a will in common form is not conclusive upon anyone interested in the estate adversely to the will,[51] but he may at any time within the statutory period require proof in solemn form, and interpose a caveat.[52] The usual mode of procedure in such case is for the complaining party to make application for a citation to issue calling on the propounder to prove the will in solemn form.[53] The only issue raised by such application is that of devisavit vel non,[54] and if probate in solemn form is refused the effect is to set aside the probate in common form and declare an intestacy.[55]

The probate proceeding is in the nature of a proceeding in rem,[56] and is binding on all parties entitled to participate who are brought in by due process of law.[57] It is not a suit inter partes until a sufficient and valid contest has been instituted.[58] The filing of the contest is in effect the commencement of the suit.[59] One desiring to contest the will in the proceedings for its probate is generally required to present a petition or statement of contest, which must state facts showing his right to contest,[60] and must allege one or more of the statutory grounds of contest.[61] The suffication for probate of a will, a second will of later date was offered for probate, held that it was not an abuse of discretion to continue the hearing as to the first will until the day set for the hearing of the second, to refuse on such day to hear the first until the second case was disposed of, and to further continue the first hearing pending an appeal from a judgment refusing to admit the second will. The right to cite the executor of a will probated in common form to prove it in solemn form is not confined to the heirs at law, but is available to anyone interested in the estate. Id. Fact that Civ. Code 1895, § 3282 provides for notice only to heirs at law when will is proved in solemn form does not change rule. Id. A grantee, for value and before probate, of the sole heir of a decedent has the same right to attack the validity of the probate as his grantor would have had. Id.

52. Will become concluded if he delays an attack on probate more than seven years. Civ. Code 1895, § 3283. Hooks v. Brown [Ga.] 53 S. E. 583. When will was offered for probate in common form, written objections in form of caveat were filed. No judgment of probate was entered by court of ordinary, but parties entered into a written agreement that issue should be taken to superior court by appeal. Held that such agreement was a nullity, and an order by the superior court approving and allowing a settlement by the parties thereto was not binding upon anyone having an interest under or adverse to the will, and did not prevent the admission of the will to record at any time thereafter. Id. Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 187, § 9, an interested party may have the probate of a will in common form re-examined, and the will proved in solemn form within one year after probate, or, in case of disability, one year after it is removed. 60. Must state facts, not conclusions. Henry v. Wirt [Ala.] 39 So. 711 [advance sheets only]. Petition failing to negative facts which may be reasonably presumed to exist from those stated, and which would bar petitioner's right to contest, if true, is demurrable. Id. Petition of grandson predciency of the petition in these particulars is properly tested by demurrer.[62] In many states no answer or reply is necessary.[63] It is not error to require proponent to introduce his preliminary proof on his petition for probate before proceeding with the contest.[64] Grounds of contest not presented when a motion to dismiss the contest is made will not be entertained after an order of dismissal has been made.[65] The court of probate may take cognizance of transfers, releases, and extinguishments of heirship set up as defense by way of estoppel to contest.[66] A suit by the remainderman under a will probated in common to recover land from a grantee of testator's sole heir at law is properly enjoined pending the determination of an issue of devisavit vel non raised by the application of such heir to have the will probated in solemn form.[67] The same rule as in other civil cases applies in determining whether or not the evidence produced by contestant is sufficient to require the submission of the case to the jury.[68] In Maryland the orphans' court is bound to accept the conclusions of the jury, duly certified from a court of law, on trials of caveats of wills, as final, and to make them effective by proper orders,[69] and such an order is conclusive of all issues tried in the suit.[70]

In some states wills admitted to probate are required to be recorded.[71]

(§ 4) E. Burden of proof on the whole case.[72]—Generally speaking the law

icating his right to contest as a person interested on legacy left to his mother since deceased held demurrable for failure to allege facts negativing presumption that mother's husband was still living. Id. Statement of contest presented by the state merely alleging by way of conclusion that state is the only party entitled by law to the proceeds of the estate held insufficient to show that decedent died without heirs or that such heirs are nonresident aliens so as to give state a present or a future contingent interest in the property under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 670, 672, 1404. State v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 82 P. 672. Petition filed by public administrator alleging that "deceased had no heirs residing in the state" held not to show an interest in the state. Id. Notice filed in probate proceedings addressed to public administrator and others claiming an interest purporting to be notice that state claimed entire estate on specified grounds, held not a pleading recognized by law and not to take the place of allegations showing state's interest which should have been contained in statement of contest. Id. In any event a notice that state claims property on ground that deceased left no surviving heirs is not an allegation of the fact that he left none. Id. Possibility that no heirs may appear and claim property within five years and that escheat proceedings may then be commenced under Code Civ. Proc. § 1269, and that no heir may then, or within 20 years after the judgment, appear to claim the property, and that the state may thereupon acquire absolute title under §§ 1271, 1272, does not constitute such an interest as will authorize state to maintain contest. Thomas v. Williamson [Fla.] 40 So. 831. Rev. St. 1892, § 1110, providing that certified copies of all wills and letters testamentary "heretofore recorded" in any public office of record shall be received as evidence in all courts of record in the state, applies only to wills recorded prior to its adoption. presumes testamentary capacity, due execution, and that the will contains the unrestrained wishes of the testator. Hence it is usually held that the burden upon the whole evidence is on the party attacking the will to prove the contrary.[73] In some states, however, the burden is on proponent from first to last to establish such facts by a preponderance of all the evidence.[74] In others proponents are first required to furnish prima facie proof of the validity of the will, and the burden is then upon contestants to prove their allegations by a preponderance of all the evidence.[75]

In secondary proceedings to contest the validity of the will, the judgment or decree of the probate court admitting it to probate is generally held to be prima facie proof of its due execution and validity, and the burden of proving the contrary in such cases is, therefore, on contestants.[76]

Sufficiency of evidence and shifting of burden.[77]—The capacity of the testator,[78]

73. Burden of showing undue influence is on party asserting it. In re Tyner's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 898.

74. See 4 C. L. 1892, n. 96. On an application for the probate of a will, the burden is on proponent to show that it was not procured by undue influence (Edgerly v. Edgerly [N. H.] 62 A. 716), and hence absence of all evidence tending to prove how the will was procured prevents its allowance (Id.). Unless there is evidence tending to sustain validity of will, verdict must be directed for objectors. Id.

75. Burden of proving proper execution is on proponent, particularly in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2622, requiring surrogate to be satisfied as to such execution. In re Sarasohn's Will 47 Misc. 535, 95 N. Y. S. 975. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2623, providing that "if it appears to the surrogate" that the will was duly executed, and that testator was competent and not under restraint, then it must be admitted to probate, the fact of competency and that testator was not under restraint must be established in the first instance by sufficient evidence by proponents, or the will cannot be admitted. Presumption of sanity is insufficient. In re Schreiber's Will, 98 N. Y. S. 483. Ordinarily proof of the factum of the will is sufficient to meet the burden always cast upon the proponent of showing that the instrument offered was in fact the will of the testator. In re Bedell's Will, 107 App. Div. 284, 95 N. Y. S. 12.

76. California: In an action to contest a will after its admission to probate it is presumed that testator was of sound and disposing mind, and the burden is on contestant to allege and prove the contrary. In re Dole's Estate, 147 Cal. 188, 81 P. 534.

Georgia: Upon the trial of an issue of devisavit vel non in a suit to set aside a will the burden in the first instance is upon the propounder of the alleged will to make out a prima facie case by showing the factum of the will, and that at the time of its execution the testator apparently had sufficient mental capacity to make it, and, in making it, acted freely and voluntarily. Credille v. Credille, 123 Ga. 673, 51 S. E. 628. When this is done the burden shifts to the caveators. Id.

Illinois: In a suit to set aside a will, where proponents furnish prima facie proof of its validity, the burden is on the contestants to show undue influence by a preponderance of the evidence. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. In a suit to set aside a will the burden is on the party asserting the validity of the will to prove capacity (Todd v. Todd [Ill.] 77 N. E. 680), but when such proof is made the law adds the presumption that all persons are of sound mind, and the evidence of want of capacity must be sufficient to neutralize both the evidence of capacity and the presumption of law (Id.). Instructions should give proponent the benefit of the presumption. Instruction held erroneous. Id.

Iowa: In a suit to set aside the will, there being no claim of general derangement of mind, the burden is on plaintiff to show that, at the very time of the execution of the will, testator was not of sufficient mental capacity to make it. Fethergill v. Fethergill [Iowa] 105 N. W. 377. In a will contest the burden of proving undue influence, and that it operated on the mind of testator at the very time the will was made to such an extent that the will was the result thereof, is upon the contestant. In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 105 N. W. 110; Parker v. Lambertz [Iowa] 104 N. W. 452.

Missouri: In a suit to establish the will, the burden of proving undue influence is upon those who assert it (King v. Gilson [Mo.] 90 S. W. 367), and this is true though testator was under guardianship for insanity when the will was made (Id.). Instruction held erroneous (Id.). In a suit to contest the burden of proving undue influence is on the party alleging it. Dausman v. Rankin, 189 Mo. 677, 88 S. W. 696.

New York: In an action under Code Civ. Proc. § 2653a to determine the validity of the probate of a will, the burden of proving incapacity is on the contestant, since probate is prima facie evidence of its due execution and validity. Heyzer v. Morris, 110 App. Div. 313, 97 N. Y. S. 131. Plaintiff is only required to introduce the will and the decree admitting it, and it thereupon becomes incumbent on defendants to offer their evidence impeaching it. Carolan v. O'Donnell, 105 App. Div. 577, 94 N. Y. S. 171.

Texas: In a suit to set aside a judgment admitting a will to probate, the burden is on plaintiff to establish the invalidity of the will. Franklin v. Boone [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 93, 88 S. W. 262.

the freedom of his will from fraud and undue influence,[79] and the due execution of the will,[80] must be fully proved, either by the presumptions favoring such facts, or from positive proof, or both, according to the strength of the opposing case. The constituent facts and evidence on which each of these may be based have already been discussed and need not be repeated.

(§ 4) F. Establishment of lost will.[81]—One seeking to establish an alleged lost will must prove by clear and satisfactory evidence its execution,[82] its contents,[83] and that it was unrevoked at testator's death.[84] The fact of the existence of a will unrevoked after the death of the testator can be established by presumption and circumstantial evidence, as well as by direct evidence.[85] When restored, a copy of the will becomes written evidence of the will, and takes the place of the lost instrument, standing in its stead for all practical purposes, as the will of the testator.[86]

(§ 4) G. Judgments and decrees.[87]—The judgments of courts to which the proof of wills is confided, while unreversed, are generally held to be as conclusive and binding as those of any other courts, and are not subject to collateral attack,[88]

W. 1037. On application for probate of alleged lost will held that question whether paper was original draft or memorandum thereof should have been submitted to jury, where it was shown that it was in scrivener's handwriting, that he never executed but the one will for testator, that it was found on floor near table where will was executed on day of its execution, and was in same condition when offered in evidence as when found. Ewing v. McIntyre [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 535, 104 N. W. 787. If it was such original draft, held that it was admissible to prove its contents. Id. Preponderance of evidence is sufficient. Evidence held sufficient to go to jury. Id. In a suit to probate and establish an alleged lost will the attorney who drew it is competent to testify to its provisions. Inlow v. Hughes [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 763. In Indiana no will may be proved and established as lost or destroyed unless its provisions are clearly proven by two witnesses, or by a correct copy and the testimony of one witness. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2779. Id. Evidence in suit to establish and probate lost will held insufficient to prove contents as required by this statute. Id. Declarations of the testator, made after the execution of the will, are admissible if at all, only by way of corroboration in the furnishing of the clear proof by two witnesses of the provisions of the will, as matters of fact within their knowledge, which is required by the statute. Id. The contents of a lost will, or of one which has been destroyed or canceled without testator's consent, cannot be shown until its execution has been proved by the testimony of two witnesses. Under Act April 8, 1833 (P. L. 249; 2 Purd. Dig. 2102), providing that a will must in all cases be proved by oaths or affirmations of two or more competent witnesses. Michell v. Low [Pa.] 63 A. 246.

84. Evidence must be positive and sufficient to overcome both the presumption of revocation by testator, and the presumption of innocence on the part of a third person charged with destroying the will. Michell v. Low [Pa.] 63 A. 246. Evidence held insufficient. Id. Burden of proof is on the proponents to satisfy the court that a "lost" will was in existence and unrevoked at the time of the death of the testator. Gibson v. Gibson, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 269.

85. Gibson v. Gibson, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 269. The word "lost," when used with reference to an alleged last will and testament in a probate proceeding, has some of the significance of "spoliated" or "destroyed." Id.

Dunsmuir v. Coffey [Cal.] 82 P. 682; In re Dunsmuir's Estate [Cal.] 84 P. 657.

Colorado: Judgment admitting will can only be attacked by appeal or error for errors committed in exercising jurisdiction, where there is no error in assuming jurisdiction and no fraud was practiced in procuring such judgment. Camplin v. Jackson [Colo.] 83 P. 1017. Under Const. art. 6, § 23, 1 Mills' Ann. St. §§ 395, 1095, giving county court jurisdiction to determine whether the instrument offered for probate is the last will of deceased, it has authority to determine all pertinent facts, including the question whether or not the will is a forgery, and was properly executed and attested. Id. Errors committed in deciding any of such questions are errors in exercise of jurisdiction and not errors in assuming it. Id.

except for fraud or want of jurisdiction apparent on the face of the record.[89] So, too, such courts are usually regarded as courts of general jurisdiction in regard to probate matters, and are entitled to all the presumptions in favor of their proceedings which are allowed in the case of other tribunals of general jurisdiction.[90]

In North Dakota in county court the final decree consists of the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and statement of the relief awarded, and all these should be embodied in one document, signed by the judge, and filed.[91]

(§ 4) H. Revocation of probate.[92]—The power of the probate court to set aside its judgment admitting the will to probate depends on the statutes of the various states.[93]

Florida: Under Rev. St. 1892, § 1810, making the probate of wills of personalty conclusive, and of wills of realty prima facie, evidence of their validity, the manner of execution and attestation of a will admitted to probate cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding. Thomas v. Williamson [Fla.] 40 So. 831. Prima facie evidence is such as in the judgment of the law is sufficient to establish the fact, and if unrebutted, remains sufficient for that purpose. Id.

Georgia: Where a will has been probated in common form, the judgment of probate cannot be collaterally impeached in the superior court by any proceedings attempting to raise the issue of devisavit vel non. Not in suit by remainderman under will to recover land from sole heir at law. Hooks v. Brown [Ga.] 53 S. E. 583.

Illinois: An order of a probate court admitting a will to probate is an adjudication of its validity as a testamentary instrument, and, until appealed from, is binding on all parties before the court as to all matters material to the issue involved. As to domicile of testatrix, where a finding in that regard is necessary to confer jurisdiction. Palmer v. Bradley, 142 F. 193. Cannot be collaterally attacked except for fraud or some disability whereby complainant might be legally relieved from binding force of order. Id.

Kentucky: The probate of a will by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive against the world, as a proceeding in rem, until reversed or vacated in a direct proceeding allowed for that purpose. Brooks v. Paine's Ex'rs [Ky.] 90 S. W. 600.

New Hampshire: The probate of a will is conclusive of its genuineness and validity until avoided by a direct proceeding. Cannot be collaterally attacked for failure to notify heir, which at most renders proceedings voidable. Knight v. Hollings [N. H.] 63 A. 38.

New York: Under Code Civ. Proc., § 2626, a decree of the surrogate admitting will to probate is, in so far as it relates to personalty, final and conclusive unless reversed upon appeal, or revoked by the surrogate, or unless an action to determine the validity of the will is brought under Id. § 2653a. In re Wohlgemuth, 110 App. Div. 644, 97 N. Y. S. 367. Decree admitting two holographic instruments as testator's last will cannot be collaterally attacked on proceedings for distribution on ground that instrument last executed was complete in itself and revoked the former one. Id.

89. The action of a probate court in assuming jurisdiction of a will and admitting it to probate may be collaterally attacked where lack of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record. Upson v. Davis, 110 Ill. App. 375.

90. Particularly where they are courts of record. Knight v. Hollings [N. H.] 63 A. 38. Will having been proved in common form, it must also be presumed that there was no contest. Pub. St. 1901, c. 187, § 6. Id. On petition to set aside and revoke probate it will be presumed that judge admitting will found that deceased was last an inhabitant of the county, or had estate therein at the time of his death, or both, such facts being necessary to give him jurisdiction under Pub. St. 1901, c. 182, § 8. Id. It will be presumed on a bill to compel distribution that all parties in interest were duly notified of a hearing in the probate court at which the will was set aside. Crockett v. Sibley [N. H.] 61 A. 469.

91. In re Lemery's Estate [N. D.] 107 N. W. 365. Where, in proceedings to probate will, county court made and filed findings and conclusions, and subsequently filed a separate document purporting to be the judgment, held that the latter should be regarded as a completion or amendment of the former, and both documents taken together constitute the final judgment. 93. California: In the absence of an application for relief on the ground of mistake, etc., made within one year as prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, an order admitting a foreign will cannot be set aside by the court which entered it except in a separate action, and any order purporting to vacate it is void for want of jurisdiction. Dunsmuir v. Coffey [Cal.] 82 P. 682. On prohibition to prevent the execution of an order appointing a special administrator and directing him to retake property previously distributed the court may consider the validity of a previous order annulling an order admitting the will to probate, on which the validity of the order appointing the administrator depends, and also whether the order admitting the will is void on its face. Id. An order granting a motion to vacate an order admitting a will to probate is erroneous and void, where such motion is not made within the time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, and the order admitting the will is not void on its face. In re Dunsmuir's Estate [Cal.] 84 P. 657.

Colorado: In order to sustain a judgment

(§ 4) I. Suits to contest.[94]—In many states the validity of the will may be contested by a suit brought for that purpose within a specified time[95] after its admission to probate.[96] A court of equity has no inherent jurisdiction to entertain a bill for the contest of a will, and hence any jurisdiction conferred by statute must be construed in accordance with the terms therein employed.[97] The law in force at the time when the bill is filed governs as to the jurisdictional requirements.[98] of the county court, and the district court on appeal, annulling a decree admitting the will in a proceeding commenced more than six months after the rendition of the judgment admitting the will, it must appear that the latter judgment was absolutely void. Camplin v. Jackson [Colo.] 83 P. 1017. Where a county court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties admits a will to probate, it is error for such court, in a proceeding started more than six months after the entry of the decree, to make an order vacating its previous judgment admitting the will, notwithstanding the fact that such serious error was committed in admitting the will as would have worked a reversal on appeal or error, it not being contended that there was any fraud in procuring the decree admitting the will. Id. It is also error for the district court, on appeal from the order vacating the order admitting the will, to annul the decree of probate. Id. Heirs at law expressly consenting to probate of will cannot, without any showing of fraud, have decree set aside where court had jurisdiction of persons and subject-matter. Id.

New Hampshire: The probate court may set aside its decree admitting the will to probate, provided sufficient cause is shown. Knight v. Hollings [N. H.] 63 A. 38. Such power is, however, equitable in its nature, and will only be exercised on a showing of some substantial ground therefor, such as fraud, accident, or mistake, rendering it against conscience to execute the decree, and of which plaintiffs were prevented from availing themselves by fraud or negligence on their part. Id. Plaintiffs held barred by laches where proceedings to revoke probate were not begun until more than 12 years after decree admitting will. Id.

94. See 4 C. L. 1896.

95. California: Code Civ. Proc., § 1330, does not give the right to contest a will after probate on the ground that court did not have jurisdiction, and objection that court did not have jurisdiction because deceased was not a resident of the county cannot be raised in such a proceeding, particularly when not pleaded. In re Dole's Estate, 147 Cal. 188, 81 P. 534.

Illinois: Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 148, § 7, authorizing any person interested to file a bill in chancery to contest a will within one year after the probate of the same in the county court, and providing for the making up and trial of an issue of law in the circuit court, is not a statute of limitations, but merely a grant of jurisdiction to the circuit court, which can only be exercised in the mode and under the limitation prescribed. O'Brien v. Bonfield [Ill.] 77 N. E. 167. The time limited for filing the bill is jurisdictional and must be strictly construed. Id. In case of an appeal from the order of the county court admitting the will to probate and an affirmance by the circuit court, the probate of the will in the county court is not final and complete until a certified copy of the order of the circuit court admitting the will is filed in the county court, and hence the year in which the will may be contested does not commence to run until that time. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 148, §§ 7, 14, 18, construed. Id. Laws 1903, p. 355, limiting the time for filing bills to contest wills to one year, applies to wills probated previous to the time when such act went into effect. Clowry v. Nolan [Ill.] 77 N. E. 906. Must be instituted within statutory period. Benda v. Kalina, 119 Ill. App. 196.

Kansas: Under Gen. St. 1901, c. 117, § 20, action in district court to contest a will must be brought within two years after probate. Medill v. Snyder [Kan.] 81 P. 216. This provision is not affected by the provision of the general statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc., § 23) that if an action be commenced within due time, and a judgment thereon for the plaintiff be reversed, or if plaintiff fails in such action otherwise than on the merits, and the time limited for the same shall have expired, the plaintiff may commence a new action within one year after such failure or reversal, the general statute being inapplicable to such a case. Id. Special statute is not a mere statute of limitations, and hence cannot be modified by general statute. Id.

Washington: Under 2 Bal. Ann. Codes & St. § 6110, action to contest must be instituted within one year from the probate of the will. In re Sullivan's Estate [Wash.] 82 P. 297. Where petition was filed within a year but was not properly verified and after expiration of year motion to strike was granted with leave to amend, as authorized by 2 Bal. Ann. Codes & St. § 4955, and amendment was subsequently made, held that contest was instituted within a year, court not having lost jurisdiction by granting motion and allowing amendment. Id. Where no valid decree admitting will is ever entered, contestants are not limited to one year from date of entry of a void decree. Id. Petition to contest was filed in time but plaintiffs subsequently instituted proceedings in the Federal court which restrained proponent from asserting any rights under the will. This decision was subsequently reversed. Held that proceedings in state court would not be dismissed for want of prosecution because of delay pending determination of suit in Federal court. Id.

96. By § 7 of the statute the admission of a will to probate by the probate court is a condition precedent to the right to file a bill in chancery to contest it. Henline v. Brady, 110 Ill. App. 75.

97. O'Brien v. Bonfield [Ill.] 77 N. E. 167. The right to contest a will in chancery after

The final settlement of the estate and the discharge of the executor is not a bar to proceedings to contest,[99] the orders approving the executor's report[1] and of final settlement not being res adjudicata of the validity of the will.[2] In such case, however, as to all acts which have been properly done in preparing the estate for settlement under the probated will, the contestant who delays must accept conditions as he finds them.[3]

The bill or complaint must allege the grounds of contest in accordance with the ordinary rules of pleading.[4] Plaintiff may propound for probate a later will claimed to have revoked the one whose probate is contested.[5] In such case the later will is the foundation of his cause of action, and is properly attached to the complaint as an exhibit.[6]

The practice is ordinarily the same as at law.[7] The issue involved is to be submitted to the jury as a new and original question, and determined exclusively by the evidence introduced.[8] The order admitting the will is not admissible.[9] Proponent makes out a prima facie case when he introduces the evidence of the witnesses of the will and puts the will in evidence.[10] In Illinois he is not bound to call the subscribing witnesses, though unexplained failure to do so might be a suspicious circumstance.[11] A subscribing witness may be called though his testimony in the probate court has been read in evidence.[12]

(§ 4) J. Suits to establish.—A proceeding to establish a will is one at law,[13] and the issues raised thereby are properly submitted to a jury.[14] Such an action under the Missouri statute has the same effect as if an appeal had been taken from the probate is purely statutory. Benda v. Kalina, 119 Ill. App. 196.

98. A proceeding in chancery to contest a will after probate is as to jurisdictional requirements governed by the law in force at the time the bill is filed and not that in force at the time the will was probated. Benda v. Kalina, 119 Ill. App. 196.

99. Though contestant had notice and knowledge of the proceeding, and made no objection, and gave no notice of his intention to contest. Foley v. O'Donaghue [Ind.] 77 N. E. 352. The three-year period given by the statute in which to contest the validity of a probated will is not in the nature of a statute of limitations, but the right granted is a substantive one which it is the duty of the court to recognize without abridgment or exception. Id. Where the estate devised consists of both realty and personalty, and action is brought within prescribed time. Stuckwisch v. Kamman [Ind.] 77 N. E. 349. In the absence of anything in the answer going to show that the will gave the executor any control over the realty devised or affected thereby, it will be presumed on appeal that his final settlement applied only to the personalty, and had no relation to the realty. Id.

1. The filing of the final report of the executor in no way involves or tenders as an issue the validity of the will, and hence such issue is not determined and adjudicated by the judgment approving such report. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 2545-2547, 2557, 2558, relating to settlement of estates and discharge of executors construed. Stuckwisch v. Kamman [Ind.] 77 N. E. 349.

2. Since that question is not involved. Otherwise the statutes authorizing an action to contest within three years, and the settlement of the estate at the expiration of one year after notice of the granting of letters could not be brought into accord. Foley v. O'Donaghue [Ind.] 77 N. E. 352.

3. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2412m. Assets may, in the absence of an intervening contest, be distributed under the will as if its provisions were wholly immutable. Foley v. O'Donaghue [Ind.] 77 N. E. 352.

4. Must allege that the attesting witnesses were incompetent, or facts which amount in substance to such an averment or the will will not be set aside on such ground. Standley v. Moss, 114 Ill. App. 612. Complaint alleging that a "contract" made by decedent was testamentary and denying its right to probate on grounds of undue influence and unsound mind is not to rescind contract but to contest probate. Stametz v. Mitchenor [Ind.] 75 N. E. 579.

5, 6. Heaston v. Kreig [Ind.] 77 N. E. 805.

7. On trial of a will contest before a jury in chancery the practice is the same as at law and exceptions to the rulings of the court must be properly saved in order to have them reviewed on appeal. Henline v. Brady, 110 Ill. App. 75.

8. The trial is de novo and without regard to the fact that the will has been admitted to probate. Henline v. Brady, 110 Ill. App. 75.

probate court and in effect transfers the probate proceedings to the circuit court.[15] Hence in such case the judgment of the probate court is not conclusive.[16] In Iowa there is no statutory authority for a proceeding by those claiming under a will to have it established and confirmed.[17]

(§ 4) K. Suits to set aside.[18]—In an action of an equitable nature to set aside the probate of a will, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the county court was without jurisdiction to admit the will, or that some wrong was committed in the proceeding which amounted to a fraud prejudicial to his rights.[19] He must also show some valid cause for the contest of the will, and convince the court that the cause of contest is prima facie valid, or that sufficient grounds existed to refuse the probate.[20]

The New York statute provides for an action at law to determine the validity of a will after its admission to probate.[21] This act does not prevent the bringing of a suit in equity to set aside a will not yet admitted to probate, at least where the fact that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law is not pleaded.[22] Suits in equity to set aside a deed and a will, both of which are alleged to have been wrongfully obtained by defendant and either of which would give him title to the property in dispute are properly joined and tried as one,[23] and this is true though the will has not yet been probated.[24]

Under the statute of Virginia a bill in equity may be brought to impeach a will admitted to probate.[25]

(§ 4) L. Appeals.[26] Appeals from probate courts.[27]—Appeals are generally allowed from all final orders or decrees of the court having jurisdiction of probate

15. Proceeding under Rev. St. 1899, § 4622, in circuit court, to establish will which probate court has previously refused to admit. Schaaf v. Peters [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 1037.

16. Probate or rejection of a will is not a finality until after the five years allowed by the statute in which to bring the action in the circuit court, even though no appeal was taken therefrom. Schaaf v. Peters [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 1037.

17. Defendant, in action to set aside will, set up that will had been duly probated and that it was the last will of deceased and fully expressed his desires as to the distribution of his property, and prayed judgment confirming the probate and establishing the will. Plaintiffs dismissed action before submission of case. Held that court had no jurisdiction to retain case and render judgment as prayed for by defendant on theory that allegations and prayer of answer were equivalent to a counterclaim, since there is no statutory authority for a proceeding by those claiming under a will to have it established and confirmed. Davis v. Preston [Iowa] 106 N. W. 151.

19. Evidence insufficient. In re Glandt's Estate [Neb.] 107 N. W. 248.

20. Evidence held insufficient. In re Glandt's Estate [Neb.] 107 N. W. 248. Fact that will was admitted upon evidence of but one subscribing witness after guardian ad litem of minor heirs and beneficiaries had filed general denial and demanded proof of execution, held no ground for setting aside probate in absence of showing of prejudice. Id.

21. Under Code Civ. Proc., § 2653a, action to test validity of probate of will must be brought within two years after the admission of the will to probate, except that minors, persons absent from the state, etc., may bring such action within two years after the removal of the disability. Bell v. Villard, 48 Misc. 587, 97 N. Y. S. 244. Persons absent from the state means residents of the state who happen to be absent therefrom, and does not include a foreigner who is a permanent resident of a foreign country, and a nonresident of the state. 25. Code 1887, § 2544, providing for a bill in equity to impeach a will admitted to probate, on which bill a trial by jury shall be ordered to ascertain whether any, and if any, how much of what was offered for probate is the will of the decedent, does not undertake to prescribe the terms of the issue, and where bill attacked will as a whole and stated a case which, if true, avoided the whole of it, and answer accepted issue thus tendered and sought to sustain will as an entirety, held that issue framed for a finding for or against will as an entirety was not erroneous on theory that it should have permitted a finding sustaining a part of the will. Roland v. Roland [Va.] 52 S. E. 366.

matters,[28] and may ordinarily be taken by anyone interested,[29] or by anyone aggrieved thereby.[30] The jurisdiction of appellate courts,[31] the time within which an appeal must be taken,[32] and the method of perfecting it,[33] depend upon the statutes of the various states.

28. Orders held appealable: Order dismissing contest, heard and determined when will was offered for probate, held reviewable on appeal from subsequent order admitting will to probate. Code Civ. Proc., §§ 956, 963, 1307, 1312-1314, 1714, construed. In re Edelman's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 962. Order vacating prior order dismissing petition to contest and ordering dismissal of the petition affects the substantial rights of proponent with respect to the extension of time within which petitioner may appeal, and is appealable. In re Sullivan's Estate [Wash.] 82 P. 297.

Orders held not appealable: An order revoking an order refusing to admit a will to probate is not appealable, it not being specified in Code Civ. Proc., § 963. In re Bouyssou's Estate [Cal. App.] 82 P. 1066. An order vacating an order appointing an administrator being appealable, and proceedings for appointment of an administrator and for probating a will being distinct, an order granting a "motion to vacate order refusing probate of will and appointing administrator" will be construed distributively and an appeal from such order will not be dismissed in so far as it relates to the revocation of such appointment, there being nothing in the bill of exceptions to show that the appointment did not proceed upon a separate record, or that it was dependent on order denying probate. Id. The ordinary, having no jurisdiction to entertain a caveat in proceedings to probate a will in common form, or to pass upon the issue of devisavit vel non attempted to be raised thereby, can render no decision which can properly be made the subject of an appeal, and an appeal by consent to the superior court from such a proceeding does not lie. Hooks v. Brown [Ga.] 53 S. E. 583.

29. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 4859, authorizing any person interested in the probate of a will to appeal to the circuit court from order of county court admitting will, held that general creditors of an insolvent, disinherited heir, who claim that the will was revoked by testator, may appeal from an order probating the will upon ex parte proceedings, where the heir refuses to do so. Brooks v. Paine's Ex'rs [Ky.] 90 S. W. 600.

30. Under Laws 1903, c. 27, p. 35, an heir at law is a party aggrieved, and may at any time within 30 days appeal from an order admitting a will to probate, though he did not appear at the hearing and take part in the proceedings. In re Sheeran's Will [Minn.] 105 N. W. 677. In case such heir dies after the entry of the order in the probate court and before the expiration of the time allowed to appeal, a special administrator may perfect the appeal within such time. Id.

31. Appeal will lie to supreme court from order refusing to admit will to probate on ground that freehold is involved though will does not in terms devise realty, where it appears from the record that testator owned realty which was devised by the residuary clause. Senn v. Gruendling, 218 Ill. 458, 75 N. E. 1020.

32. County court may, in furtherance of justice, permit service of an amended notice of appeal to district court after expiration of statutory time for appeal, where the appeal was taken in good faith in the proper time, but by mistake the original notice was technically defective because of the omission of some of the necessary parties. Rev. Codes 1899, § 6259. In re Lemery's Estate [N. D.] 107 N. W. 365. Rev. St. 1898, § 4035, prohibiting the allowance of a petition for leave to appeal from a judgment admitting a will to probate after the expiration of the time within which an appeal is allowed as a matter of right without reasonable notice to the adverse party, and only permitting the allowance of the petition when it appears that justice requires a review of the case, contemplates a hearing if the adverse party desires it and that he may obtain a more definite statement of the material facts than that contained in the original petition if the court deems it necessary. In re Scaife's Will [Wis.] 105 N. W. 920. Hence the same liberal rules apply in the construction of such a petition as are applied in support of a pleading when challenged for insufficiency, and essential facts are deemed to be inferentially stated which are alleged according to their legal effect. Id. Statement that petitioners are heirs at law and near relatives of deceased and entitled to a distributive share of his estate if will should be set aside held to sufficiently show that petitioners were heirs at law and next of kin and entitled to appeal. Id. Where notice of appeal from judgment of county court admitting will to probate is filed within 60 days as provided by Rev. St. 1898, § 4031, the fact that the undertaking required by Id. § 4032 is not filed with such notice is not a fatal defect though it is not filed within the time limited for taking the appeal. In re Box's Will [Wis.] 106 N. W. 1063.

33. Notice: Where, pending proceedings for probate of a will and the appointment of an executor, the petitioner became insane and was committed to an asylum, but no suggestion for a stay of proceedings or for the appointment of a person to represent him was made to the court, held that the service of a notice of appeal from decree refusing probate on the attorney for petitioner who continued to prosecute the case was sufficient, under Rev. Laws, c. 162, §§ 11, 40, and Chancery Rule 22. McKenna v. Garvey [Mass.] 77 N. E. 782. A notice of appeal dated and served after the perfection of the decree, clearly indicating that appellant desired to appeal from the whole final decree, and describing the decree as one dated the day the findings and conclusions were filed, should be construed as a notice of appeal from the final decree, and not from findings and conclusions alone. In re Lemery's Estate [N. D.] 107 N. W. 365.

Bond: In an appeal to the circuit court from an order of the county court probating or rejecting a will, no appeal bond is necessary. Civ. Code Prac., §§ 700, 724, con-

An appeal to an intermediate court generally operates to suspend the operation of the order appealed from.[34] Objections to a party's right to contest probate cannot first be raised on appeal.[35] In Massachusetts probate appeals are on the equity side of the court and the practice is according to equity.[36]

A trial by jury of issues of fact is frequently provided for,[37] the verdict being conclusive in some states,[38] and in others merely advisory.[39] The right to render judgment notwithstanding the verdict,[40] and to a new trial, depends on the statutes of the various states.[41] There is no provision in Massachusetts for reporting the evidence taken before a jury from a justice to the full bench to review it.[42]

In Illinois on appeal to the circuit court from an order of the county court refusing to admit a will to probate, the parties seeking the probate of the will may support the same by any evidence competent to establish a will in chancery,[43] and, while they are required to produce the subscribing witnesses if alive and sane, and within the jurisdiction of the court,[44] they are not limited to,[45] or necessarily bound by their testimony,[46] but may prove the necessary facts by any competent evidence.[47]

34. An appeal to the circuit court operates to suspend the operation of an order of the county court admitting the will to probate, and prevents the running of the time within which suit to contest must be commenced. O'Brien v. Bonfield [Ill.] 77 N. E. 167. The judgment of the county court refusing to admit the will is superseded by an appeal to the circuit court, and a dismissal of the petition in the latter court puts an end to the whole proceeding. Judgment of county court in such case is no bar to new proceeding. Senn v. Gruendling, 218 Ill. 458, 75 N. E. 1020.

In New York if on appeal it appears that the disposition by the surrogate of the questions of fact raised on an application for the probate of a will is not free from doubt, and his decision is not entirely satisfactory, such questions will be sent to a jury for determination. 39. A verdict of a jury on an appeal to, and new trial in, the circuit court, after the admission of the will by the latter, is advisory merely, and no error can be predicated on a failure to submit the issues to a jury. Capacity and undue influence. Mueller v. Pew [Wis.] 106 N. W. 840.

40. When an issue is sent to a jury in a probate appeal in Massachusetts the court cannot on a revision of the evidence enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict; he must either render judgment according to it or set it aside. Crocker v. Crocker, 188 Mass. 16, 73 N. E. 1068.

41. Creditor attaching the interest of an heir on the theory that decedent died intestate who knows of proceedings in the probate court and the common pleas division for the probate of a will disinheriting the heir but takes no steps to become a party thereto, is not a "party" within the meaning of Gen. Laws 1896, c. 251, § 2, authorizing a new trial when it is made to appear by any party that judgment has been rendered by reason of accident, mistake, or any unforeseen cause, and is not entitled to relief against a judgment rendered under a compromise without notice to him. Seward v. Johnson [R. I.] 62 A. 569. Where evidence as to execution of will, its contents, and the capacity of testator was given, but contestants offered no evidence though represented in court, held that there was no default as to them or as to such creditor. Appeals in actions to contest or to set aside wills[48] are governed by the ordinary rules of appellate procedure as to parties,[49] the weighing of evidence by the appellate court,[50] and the like.

(§ 4) M. Costs.[51]—The allowance out of the estate of costs and expenses incurred by devisees in defending the will is generally discretionary.[52] A defendant in a suit to establish a will will not be allowed his costs and disbursements out of the estate where his defense is not meritorious.[53] Counsel fees may be allowed contestants except where the contest was without merit.[54] Whether an executor can be allowed credit in his account for expenses incurred in the successful defense of the will depends upon the circumstances of each particular case.[55]

The costs of an appeal by one filing a caveat will be taxed against him, where he had no reasonable cause for appealing.[56] The expense of transcribing and printing worthless evidence on appeal will not be allowed.[57]

(§ 4) N. Recording foreign wills.[58]—Statutes generally provide for the record of certified copies of foreign wills and of the proceedings admitting them to probate.[59] A will conveys no interest in lands in a state other than that of testator's domicile, in which it has not been probated, in favor of a remainderman as against one who has Contestants in petition for revocation of probate, who are neither heirs at law of testator, nor in any way related to him, are not parties interested in the estate, and hence are not parties aggrieved by denial of their motion for a new trial within Code Civ. Proc. § 938. In re Ahtoldi's Estate [Cal.] 81 P. 278.

50. See, also, Appeal and Review, 5 C. L. 121.

Where evidence in suit to set aside will is conflicting as to undue influence, court of review will not disturb verdict of jury, which has been approved by trial court, unless verdict is clearly against weight of evidence. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678. Where there is evidence in suit to set aside a will showing that testator was not unduly influenced, finding of jury to that effect will not be set aside on appeal. Id. Verdict binding unless clearly against evidence. Johnson v. Farrell, 215 Ill. 542, 74 N. E. 760. A suit to contest a will is an action at law, and hence the supreme court will not weigh conflicting evidence to determine whether the jury found against the weight of the evidence, though it will examine the record to see if there is any testimony to support the verdict. Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University [Mo.] 90 S. W. 787. Will reverse judgment if there is no evidence. Roberts v. Bartlett, 190 Mo. 680, 89 S. W. 858. Verdict of jury in suit to establish is controlling on appeal. Schaaf v. Peters [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 1037.

51. See 4 C. L. 1897.

52. Fact that some devisees and legatees refused to contribute to expense of contest held to furnish no reason for interfering with order refusing to allow executors sum set apart to reimburse those who did contribute. In re Scott's Estate [Cal. App.] 83 P. 85. Code Civ. Proc. § 1720, authorizing appellate courts to allow and order paid costs incurred in a will contest, refers only to costs incurred in such courts or by reason of an appeal, and does not authorize them to allow costs that superior court has discretion to disallow. In re Scott's Estate [Cal. App.] 83 P. 85.

53. Conceding that action to establish validity of will under Code Civ. Proc. § 2653a, is one in equity, held an abuse of discretion to allow defendant costs and disbursements payable out of the estate where verdict was directed for plaintiff on ground that the evidence was insufficient to go to jury on issues raised by defendant. Carolan v. O'Donnell, 94 N. Y. S. 171.

54. Allowance held proper. Hilyard v. Wood [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 7. Laws 1901, c. 397, p. 569, authorizing allowance of attorney's fees to successful contestant applies to county court only, and does not authorize allowance by circuit court on appeal. In re Gertsen's Will [Wis.] 106 N. W. 1096.

55. Weir v. Weir, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 289. In a case where the attack on the will was chiefly due to the fact that a large special bequest was made to the executor, such an allowance is not permissible, the hardship cast upon the legatee in making the defense against an attack which was perhaps not justified being only one of the burdens incident to the acquisition and ownership of property. Id.

59. Under Rev. St. 1898, § 3789, a will duly admitted to probate in another state and in the place of testator's domicile may be admitted to probate and recorded in Wisconsin by duly filing an exemplified copy of said will acquired title by adverse possession.[60] The foreign probate is conclusive if made by a court of competent jurisdiction in accordance with the laws of the foreign state.[61] It will be presumed that a certified copy of the record contains an exact copy of the will.[62] In New York a foreign will devising realty in that state cannot be recorded unless it appears that it was executed in conformity with the New York statutes,[63] and the fact that the will has been so executed must be established in the manner pointed out by such statutes.[64]

§ 5. Interpretation and construction.[65]

Scope of section.—There are numerous rules applicable to interpretation which may be called general. To them the first subsection applies. The four subsections following indicate four general classes of objects to which the terms of a will are addressed.[66] and of the record admitting the same to probate. In re Box's Will [Wis.] 106 N. W. 1063. Exemplified copy means a duplicate or transcript of the records or proceedings in the foreign probate court admitting such will to probate, duly authenticated under the seal of the court and duly certified to by the custodian of such records and proceedings, in view of Id. §§ 3790, 4140, 4145, and Rev. St. U. S. § 905, relating to mode of authentication and proof of records and judicial proceedings of courts of several states. Id. Court held to have no jurisdiction to admit will where no such authentication or certification. Id.

(§ 5) A. General rules.[67]—The expressed[68] intention of the testator,[69] to be

60. A will executed in Indiana by a resident of that state, devising lands in Ohio but not probated in Ohio for forty years after its execution, conveys no interest in said lands in favor of a remainderman as against the adverse claims of those who have held open and notorious possession for more than twenty-one years claiming title. Hosler v. Haines, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 261. Such possession is adverse notwithstanding the fact that the warranty deed under which it was originally acquired from the devisee in said will recited the fact that the grantor held title by such devise. Such recital, while said will remains unprobated in Ohio, is not such notice to the one in possession as to prevent the statute of limitations from running in his favor. Id.

61. Under Rev. St. 1898, § 3790, providing that if on the hearing it shall appear to the court that the order or decree of the foreign court admitting the will to probate was made by a court of competent jurisdiction, the will shall have the same force and effect as if it had been originally proved and allowed in the same court. In re Gertsen's Will [Wis.] 106 N. W. 1096.

62. When the original will is lost and a certified copy of the record of said will in a foreign jurisdiction is offered in evidence and it further appears that said original record contains a marginal item and that a part of said marginal item as recorded was below the signature of the testator, the presumption is that said record is a true copy and a true reproduction in form of the will as originally signed by said testator, and unless this presumption is overcome by evidence, such will is by reason of said marginal item, invalid in Ohio to pass title to property in Ohio. Hosler v. Haines, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 261.

63. Code Civ. Proc. § 2703, provides for the record of a foreign will devising realty in that state or any interest therein in the office of the surrogate in any county in that state where the will is duly executed in conformity with the laws of that state and has been admitted to probate in, and filed or recorded in accordance with the laws of, the place where decedent resided. In re Hagar's Will, 48 Misc. 43, 96 N. Y. S. 96.

64. Cannot be recorded where exemplified copy of proofs shows that only one subscribing witness was examined, without any explanation of the failure to call the other, the calling of both being necessary under the New York law except under certain circumstances. In re Hagar's Will, 48 Misc. 43, 96 N. Y. S. 96.

65. See 4 C. L. 1898.

66. These classes may be determined by their responsiveness to four questions: (1) What property was meant? (2) What persons were intended to take? (3) What estate was given? (4) How was it to be administered?

67. See 4 C. L. 1898.

68. Intent must be derived from will itself if possible. Platt v. Brannan [Colo.] 81 P. 755; Newlin v. Phillips [Del.] 60 A. 1068; Montgomery v. Brown, 25 App. D. C. 490; Lomax v. Lomax, 218 Ill. 629, 75 N. E. 1076; Cary v. Slead [Ill.] 77 N. E. 234; Garrison v. Day [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 188; Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193; Stoors v. Burgess [Me.] 62 A. 730; Turner v. S. 436, rvg. 44 Misc. 6, 89 N. Y. S. 706; In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879; In re Wiley, 97 N. Y. S. 1017; Saul v. Swartz, 98 N. Y. S. 549; Freeman v. Freeman [N. C.] 53 S. E. 620; McNeal v. Pierce [Ohio] 75 N. E. 938. Intent as apparent from will when read in light of surrounding circumstances. Bulkeley v. Worthington Eccl. Soc. [Conn.] 63 A. 351. Clear and unambiguous language controls. Id. Effect should be given to intention as expressed when it is plain, and not contrary to law. McDevitt v. Hibben [Ill.] 77 N. E. 586. Real intent and meaning, if it can be derived from the instrument, and is gathered from the whole will,[70] must govern when not in conflict with any rule of law or public policy,[71] and all technical rules of construction must yield to it.[72]

The form of the will is unimportant except as showing the intent.[73] Where the meaning is plain, there is no room for construction and none should be attempted.[74] Each will must be read and considered with reference to its peculiar provisions and to the circumstances attendant upon its making, and precedents are rarely of avail.[75] lawful, mnst be given effect. Moran v. Moran [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 1010, 106 N. W. 206. The fact that testator was illiterate and unable to write his name, and that the will was not written by one learned in ths law does not change the rule. Freeman v. Freeman [N. C.] 53 S. E. 620.

S. 1087; Freeman v. Freeman [N. C.] 53 S. E. 620; Devenney v. Devenney [Ohio] 77 N. E. 688; Burnes v. Burnes [C. C. A.] 137 F. 781. All parts of a will are to be construed in relation to each other, and so as, if possibls, to form one consistent whole. Code § 1321. In re Buhrmeister's Estate [Cal. App.] 81 P. 752; In re Lux's Estate [Cal.] 85 P. 147. In ascertaining intention as to source from which payments under a trust shall be made, court should not restrict itself to an examination of the particular subdivisions directing such payments, but resort should be had to all ths provisions of the will tending to show testator's intention in that regard. In re Heywood's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 755. Purpose of construction is to enforce intention as shown by the entire will. Powell's Ex'r v. Croshy [Ky.] 89 S. W. 721.

71. Intention must control if consistent with rules of law. Montgomery v. Brown, 25 App. D. C. 490; Crapo v. Price [Mass.] 76 N. E. 1043; In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879; Bentley v. Ash [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 636. Intent to be ascertained and given effect if not contrary to some positive rule of law, or to public policy. Platt v. Brannan [Colo.] 81 P. 755; Cary v. Slead [Ill.] 77 N. E. 234. In Illinois the rule in Shelley's case is a rule of property, and where it applies controls notwithstanding the expressed intention of the testator that the ancestor shall take less than a fee. Rissman v. Wierth [Ill.] 77 N. E. 108. If violates no principle of law or rule of property. Gordon v. Smith [Md.] 63 A. 479. Given effect so far as it is consistent with law. Yoesel v. Rieger [Neb.] 106 N. W. 428.

72. Technical rules of construction will not be allowed to overthrow intention. Crapo v. Price [Mass.] 76 N. E. 1043. It is ths intention of the testator, and not rules of construction, which governs. Wheeler v. Long [Iowa] 105 N. W. 161. Where the intent of the testator clearly appears in the will itself, it is unnecessary to apply technical rules in order to determine the meaning intended. Todd v. Armstrong [Pa.] 62 A. 1114. All rules of construction yield to the actual intention when that is reasonably clear to the court. Richards v. Hartshorne, 110 App. Div. 650, 97 N. Y. S. 754. Technical rules yield to obvious intent gathered from whole will. O'Day v. O'Day [Mo.] 91 S. W. 921. Technical rules of construction may be disregarded when they stand in the way of the manifest intent of the testator. Metz v. Wright [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 1125. The court has no power to construe the will so as to sliminate a clearly expressed intention. Boggs v. Boggs [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 1114.

73. In re Holbrook's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 368.

74. Mitchell v. Mitchell [Wis.] 105 N. W. 216.

A liberal construction should be adopted and all reasonable intendments indulged in with a view of sustaining the purpose which it is disclosed the testator had in view,[76] and this is particularly true in regard to provisions for testator's wife,[77] and charitable gifts.[78] A reasonable and sensible construction should be given to the language used,[79] words being taken in their ordinary and usual sense in the absence of anything showing a contrary intention,[80] but the intention must control the literal sense of particular words and expressions,[81] and the legal operation of words, however technical.[82] Words used more than once are presumed to be used in the same sense unless the context shows a contrary intention.[83]

Effect should, if possible, be given to every word and clause,[84] each term employed being given its full and natural meaning.[85] Of two contradictory provisions relating to the same subject-matter, the last controls,[86] but the inconsistency between

75. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 989. Precedents are of some assistance, but too much reliance is not to be placed on them, for two wills are rarely, if ever, precisely alike. Platt v. Brannan [Colo.] 81 P. 755.

76. In re Heywood's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 755.

77. To be liberally construed in her favor. Montgomery v. Brown, 25 App. D. C. 490.

78. Clauses making gifts to charitable institutions will be liberally construed, and they will be upheld unless there is some unsurmountable reason for holding them void. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cem. Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998.

79. In re Davis' Estate [Minn.] 104 N. W. 299.

80. Words not technical are interpreted in their ordinary and popular signification, but not always so. Platt v. Brannan [Colo.] 81 P. 755. Word "also" is generally used in the sense of "in like manner," or "in the same manner." Id. Testatrix gave to her husband "all my right, title and interest," in a certain lot "in which I own an undivided interest as tenant in common with my said husband. Also all of my right and interest" in certain other property, to have and to hold the same "during the term of his natural life," with a gift over after his death. Held that there was a single devise of the different tracts, and that husband took only a life estate in the first lot. Id. Freeman v. Freeman [N. C.] 53 S. E. 620. Where words used are plain and unambiguous they must be given their ordinary and usual meaning and cannot be controlled by conjecture. Travers v. Reinhardt, 25 App. D. C. 567. Words are to be taken in their ordinary and grammatical sense, unless a clear intention to use them in another sense can be collected, and that other can be ascertained. Code Civ. Proc. § 1324. In re Jeffrey's Estate [Cal. App.] 82 P. 549. Language used to be given its ordinary meaning unless something shows different intention. Potts v. Shirley [Ky.] 90 S. W. 590; Hardy v. Roach [Mass.] 76 N. E. 720. The grammatical and ordinary sense of the words must be adhered to, unless such a course would lead to an absurdity or some repugnancy or inconsistency with the rest of the instrument. Gordon v. Smith [Md.] 63 A. 479. Unless, upon so reading them in connection with the entire will, or upon applying them to the facts of the case, an ambiguity or difficulty of construction arises, in which case ordinary meaning may be modified, extended, or abridged. Shipley v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. [Md.] 62 A. 814. Words "dower and thirds of my wife," to which certain gifts were made subject, held to mean third interest for life in realty and an absolute third interest in the personalty. Id.

81. Intention which can be collected with reasonable certainty from entire will, with aid of proper extrinsic evidence. Shipley v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. [Md.] 62 A. 814. The intention, when ascertained, prevails, regardless of inapt expressions and the dry words of the testament, unless prohibited by established rules of law. Burnes v. Burnes [C. C. A.] 137 F. 781.

82. Mills v. Tompkins, 110 App. Div. 212, 97 N. Y. S. 9, rvg. 47 Misc. 455, 95 N. Y. S. 962.

83. Nontechnical words. Platt v. Brannan [Colo.] 81 P. 755.

84. Newlin v. Phillips [Del.] 60 A. 1068; Montgomery v. Brown, 25 App. D. C. 490; Pennsylvania Land Co. v. Justi [Ky.] 90 S. W. 279; Gordon v. Smith [Md.] 63 A. 479; In re Donohue's Estate, 109 App. Div. 158, 95 N. Y. S. 821. Words are to receive an interpretation which will give to every expression some effect, rather than one which will render any of the expressions inoperative. Civ. Code § 1325. In re Buhrmeister's Estate [Cal. App.] 81 P. 752; In re Jeffrey's Estate [Cal. App.] 82 P. 549. Every word is to be given effect provided an effect can be given it not inconsistent with the general intent of the whole will taken together, and no word is to be rejected unless there cannot be a rational construction of the will with the word as it is found. Bently v. Ash [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 636; Olcott v. Tope, 115 Ill. App. 121; Sorenson v. Carey [Minn.] 104 N. W. 958. No words should be rejected or refused their sensible meaning in the place where employed, unless it be required to make sense for the context of the will. Cruit v. Owen, 25 App. D. C. 514. A construction making a part of the will ineffective will not be adopted unless absolutely necessary, but all the provisions will be construed in harmony when it can be done. Tyler v. Theilig [Ga.] 52 S. E. 606.

85. Cruit v. Owen, 25 App. D. C. 514.

86. Eckert v. Pennsylvania Trust Co., 212 Pa. 372, 61 A. 935; In re Buhrmeister's Estate [Cal. App.] 81 P. 752.

the two must be clear and irreconcilable,[87] it being the duty of the court, if possible, to read all provisions in pari materia together, so as to produce a harmonious whole.[88]

A disjunctive force may be given to a conjunctive word, or vice versa,[89] words and phrases may be transposed, provisions read in a different order from that in which they appear, provisions inserted or left out,[90] and words clearly omitted supplied when necessary to effectuate the intention of the testator as gathered from the context;[91] but the court cannot correct a mistake,[92] make a new will for the testator,[93] or add words merely to make the terms conform to an assumed intention.[94]

87. Eckert v. Pennsylvania Trust Co., 212 Pa. 372, 61 A. 935. Rule applies only to cases of invincible repugnancy where no general intent is deducible to control particular and substitutionary clauses. Doyle's Estate, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 579. After giving a number of pecuniary legacies a testator directed that all his property be sold and the proceeds held for the support of his wife during life, the balance remaining to be divided among his children, held that the pecuniary legacies should be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the estate, the balance to go into the trust fund created by the will. Id. Mere alternative provisions, one of which creates a trust if a child be born, and the other a different distribution if no child is born, are not in conflict, and one does not destroy the other. Tyler v. Theilig [Ga.] 52 S. E. 606. Devise in remainder to testator's heirs held not in conflict with subsequent alternative or conditional provision for children born after execution of the will. Id. Rule is never applied unless the last clause is as clear as the first, and cannot be reconciled therewith. Rule applies only where later provision is as plain and decisive as the earlier, when the real intention cannot be gathered from the general scope of the will or otherwise, and when the two provisions are wholly irreconciliable and cannot possibly stand together. Adams v. Massey [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 916.

88. Conflicting provisions will be held irreconcilably repugnant only as a last resort. Newlin v. Phillips [Del.] 60 A. 1068. All clauses harmonized if possible. Moran v. Moran [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 1010, 106 N. W. 206. Testator bequeathed to sons their respective shares of residue of the estate, "to hold the same to said sons respectively, their respective heirs," etc., subject during their minority to the provisions "hereinbefore and hereinafter contained." Subsequent paragraph provided that if any of his children died without leaving issue, or issue who should not reach age of 21, his share should go to the others. Held that two paragraphs construed together meant that if son died before 21 without issue, his share should go to other children, and on his reaching that age he took a fee simple title. Eckert v. Pennsylvania Trust Co., 212 Pa. 372, 61 A. 935. If there is no doubt as to the meaning of the earlier clause, while there is of the later so that either of two constructions is possible, that construction will be adopted which will give effect to both. Doubt as to meaning of later clause confirms the first. Adams v. Massey [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 916. Gift to wife for life held not converted into fee by subsequent clause giving her any other property "not herein otherwise disposed of that may be in my possession at the time of my decease." Id.

89. When evidence of such an intent is so unmistakable as to require it. Where will provided that no sale of farm should be made during lifetime of testator's daughters, who were beneficiaries of a trust, without their consent, "nor" unless it was necessary to pay debts, held that testator intended "nor" in the sense of "or" and that power of sale could be exercised with consent of daughters without reference to necessity to sell to pay debts. Reed v. Longstreet [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 500. "And" will not be substituted for "or" where there is no expression of such controlling intention as to require this substitution. Travers v. Reinhardt, 25 App. D. C. 567. Where testator provided that in case any of his sons should die "without leaving a wife, or a child, or children living at his death," then estate should go to surviving sons, held that "or" would not be construed to mean "and," and that on death of brother leaving wife but no children, his share went to his heirs. Id. Not when intent would be defeated. Where testatrix gave property to infant daughter absolutely, provided that if she should die under age of 21, "or" without disposing of all of it, "or" without making a will, then it should go over to others, held that "or" could not be construed as "and" so as to make the contingencies coterminous, since, considering the incapacity of the infant to make a will or dispose of the property during minority an intent is disclosed to make only the contingency of her death applicable to the period of minority. In re Polley's Estate [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 553. "Or" will be construed "and" if it was apparently so intended. Olcott v. Tope, 115 Ill. App. 121.

90. Only in aid of testator's intent and purpose, never to devise a new scheme, or make a new will. Leggett v. Stevens [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 874. Testator gave to widow a certain sum for her support, and provided that after her death what was left should "be equally divided between" his daughter if living, "if she has children to go to them; if not, to go to my nearest of kin," but named no other person who was to take the other half. Held that words directing equal division could not be transposed so as to make them refer to daughter's children, the will as a whole showing that such was not testator's intention. Id.

91. Olcott v. Tope, 115 Ill. App. 121. Where it is clear on the face of the instrument that testator has not acurately or clearly expressed his meaning by the words used, words may be supplied to effectuate the intention as gathered from the context. Where there is an insufficient description of

A construction giving effect to the whole will will be preferred to one nullifying a part of it,[95] a construction allowing both of two clauses to stand to one making them hostile to each other,[96] and a reasonable construction to one leading to an absurdity.[97] So, too, when the meaning of the language used is doubtful, it should not be so construed as to render one of its provisions inconsistent with testator's general intention.[98] A testator is to be considered as intending to benefit the object of his gift,[99] and if the language is equally capable of two constructions, that will be adopted which will preserve his right to dispose of his property as he pleased.[1] A general intent controls a particular one,[2] and in case the two are incompatible the latter may be considered to be in the nature of an exception.[3]

The law presumes that testator did not intend to disinherit the heir,[4] or to die intestate as to any of his property.[5] So, too, it is presumed that testator knew the law,[6] that his intention was lawful,[7] and that he chose the language employed in the instrument with a view to its ordinary legal signification.[8]

As to time.[9]—The will speaks and takes effect upon testator's death,[10] and its property devised. Sorenson v. Carey [Minn.] 104 N. W. 958.

92. Held that devise of "undivided one-fifth" of certain tract to five daughters could not be construed as a devise of a fifth to each, though it was the result of a mistake by the scrivener. Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193.

93. Fulghum v. Strickland, 123 Ga. 258, 51 S. E. 294; Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193; Central Trust Co. v. Egleston [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 989, rvg. 96 N. Y. S. 1116, 47 Misc. 475, 95 N. Y. S. 945; People's Trust Co. v. Flynn, 106 App. Div. 78, 94 N. Y. S. 436, rvg. 44 Misc. 6, 89 N. Y. S. 706.

94. When language used is plain and free from doubt. Gordon v. Smith [Ind.] 63 A. 479.

95. Steiff v. Seibert [Iowa] 105 N. W. 328. Will will not be held to contain void trust unless its invalidity is beyond question, and cannot be reasonably construed otherwise. In re Heywood's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 755. Void trust to convey. In re Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315. Courts will never hold a bequest void for uncertainty unless compelled to do so. Speer v. Colbert, 200 U. S. 130, 50 Law. Ed.—, afg. 24 App. D. C. 187.

96. Potts v. Shirley [Ky.] 90 S. W. 590.

97. One leading to an absurdity will never be adopted when one founded in reason appears. In re Sander's Estate [Wis.] 105 N. W. 1064.

98. Pennsylvania Land Co. v. Justi [Ky.] 90 S. W. 279.

99. In re Jeffreys' Estate [Cal. App.] 82 P. 549.

1. In re Holbrook's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 368.

2. The general intention must prevail even though it sets aside some particular portion of the will. When intention is plain from will taken as a while, court will endeavor to carry it out, and in doing so will, if necessary, disregard particular expressions and broaden restrictive provisions. Pennsylvania Land Co. v. Justi [Ky.] 90 S. W. 279.

3. Particular intent to create separate trust for wife. In re Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 46 Misc. 544, 95 N. Y. S. 59.

4. Adams v. Massey [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 916. Heir is never to be excluded on mere conjecture, though he may be excluded by a devise by implication, where it is apparent that it is necessary to sustain such a devise in order to give effect to the plain intention of the testator. Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665. The implication must be obvious, and not merely possible or probable. Id. Is not to be disinherited except by express words or necessary implication. Long v. Hill, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 606. Yet if such intention is clearly manifest from the language of the will and not contrary to law, it will prevail. Olcott v. Tope, 115 Ill. App. 121. Presumption that testator intended property to go to his relatives and heirs rather than strangers to his blood is founded on presumed intention, and always yields to actual intention when it can be gathered from the entire will. Adams v. Massey [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 916. In doubtful cases, that construction is favored which consistently with the terms of the instrument will result in a distribution in conformity to the general rules of inheritance rather than one which will disinherit an heir at law. Lehman v. Lehman, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 60.

5. See § 5 D, post, Property not effectually disposed of.

6. Rule that intent controls is governed by presumption that testator knew the law. Yoesel v. Rieger [Neb.] 106 N. W. 428. Gifts to widow will be presumed to have been made with knowledge of her right to reject the will and take under the law. Garrison v. Day [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 188. It is conclusively presumed that gifts to relatives are made with knowledge of the statute to prevent lapses and its effect. Larwill's Ex'rs v. Ewing [Ohio] 76 N. E. 503. There is a legal presumption that when testator devises less than his whole estate he knows that the law gives the balance to his heirs. Adams v. Massey [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 916.

7. In re Holbrook's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 363.

8. Yoesel v. Rieger [Neb.] 106 N. W. 428.

9. See 4 C. L. 1902.

10. Garrison v. Day [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 188; Crapo v. Price [Mass.] 76 N. E. 1043; Robinson v. Harris [S. C.] 53 S. E. 755. In determining whether power of alienation is validity must be determined by the facts existing at that time rather than those existing when it was executed.[11]

Extrinsic evidence[12] is not admissible to supply, contradict, enlarge, or vary the terms of the will, or to explain the testator's intention,[13] except where there is a latent ambiguity arising dehors the will as to the person or subject meant to be described.[14] The court may, however, put itself in the place of the testator at the time unlawfully suspended. In re Lux's Estate [Cal.] 85 P. 147. Where the will gave complainant testatrix's right of action to recover certain property which she had been induced to convey through fraud, held that on allowance of the will complainant's title to the property related back to testatrix's death. Busiere v. Reilly [Mass.] 75 N. E. 958.

11. Provision for husband who predeceased testatrix need not be considered in determining whether devise for use of several persons contravenes rule against perpetulties. Graham v. Graham, 48 Misc. 4, 97 N. Y. S. 779.

12. See 4 C. L. 1902.

13. Parol evidence is only admissible for the purpose of affording light whereby what is in a will may be read, understood, and applied (Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193), and cannot be received to give the will operative elements, language, or provisions, not in it before (Id.). Not for purpose of changing a will, or for the purpose of making a new one. Id. No extrinsic evidence is admissible to show an intent independent of the language of the will. In re Donohue's Estate, 46 Misc. 370, 94 N. Y. S. 1087, rvd. on other grounds, 109 App. Div. 158; 95 N. Y. S. 821. Where there is no ambiguity, evidence is inadmissible to prove an intention different from that implied in the terms of the will. McNeal v. Pierce [Ohio] 75 N. E. 938. Inadmissible to show intent, where expressions of will are free from ambiguity. Bulkeley v. Worthington Eccl. Soc. [Conn.] 63 A. 351. Never admissible unless, in the opinion of the court, upon reading the words questioned in connection with the entire will, or upon applying them to the facts in the case, there arises an ambiguity or difficulty of construction. Shipley v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. [Md.] 62 A. 814. Not if language used affords the means for a reasonable interpretation and one generally harmonious. Turner v. Burr [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 346, 104 N. W. 379.

Extrinsic evidence inadmissible: Where the terms of a devise are clear and unambiguous on their face, parol evidence is inadmissible to show a mistake in the description of the property. Lomax v. Lomax, 218 Ill. 629, 75 N. E. 1076. Where testator devised "the southwest fractional quarter of section 24" etc., extrinsic evidence held inadmissible to show that he meant section 14, though he owned a tract in the latter section containing the number of acres stated in the will, and there was no other tract of that extent in the township specified, and he owned no land in section 24. Id. Where will gave "the undivided one-fifth" of certain tract of land to testator's five daughters, to show that each was to have a fifth of the whole tract. Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193. Is not ambiguous, and since devises to two or more create an estate in common unless a contrary intent is expressed (Code § 2923), no words need be supplied to make it intelligible. Id. Declarations of the testator made after execution of will as to the meaning of words used. Shipley v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. [Md.] 62 A. 814. To explain meaning of words "subject to the dower and thirds of my wife." Id. Evidence of declarations of testatrix to scrivener tending to show that she did not intend to include husband in using the word "heirs." Turner v. Burr [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 346, 104 N. W. 379. Evidence as to conversation with testatrix in which she undertook to give suggestions or directions as to the disposition of the residue by the executor to whom it was left. Manson v. Jack [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 394. Affidavit of scrivener who received instructions from testator in regard to the will held inadmissible to show that certain clause was intended as a disposition of personalty in a certain warehouse only. In re Donohue's Estate, 46 Misc. 370, 94 N. Y. S. 1087, rvd. on other grounds, 109 App. Div. 158, 95 N. Y. S. 821. Declarations made after execution of will, for purpose of construing bequest to trustees for charitable purposes which leaves the selection of the particular charity to them. Rothschild v. Goldenberg, 103 App. Div. 235, 92 N. Y. S. 1076. Where, by terms of will, it appears that intention was to confer a bounty, it is not competent to prevent a lapse by showing that legacy was given in payment of a debt. McNeal v. Pierce [Ohio] 75 N. E. 938. A memorandum among testator's private papers will not be received to explain a will wholly free from ambiguity. Best v. Berry [Mass.] 75 N. E. 743.

14. Parol evidence is admissible to explain a latent ambiguity in a will, where such evidence is necessary to enable the court to ascertain testator's intention. St. James Orphan Asylum v. Shelby [Neb.] 106 N. W. 604. Is admissible to remove a latent ambiguity arising dehors the will as to the person intended to be described. Where remainder was given to grandchildren of testator's children, and there were no such persons in existence, to show that testator's grandchildren were intended. In re Stocum's Will, 94 N. Y. S. 588. For the purpose of enabling court to identify person intended by testator, court may inquire into every material fact relating to person claiming to be interested in the will, and into circumstances of testator, and of his family and affairs. Id. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a gift to a charitable institution having no existence under the name used was intended for an existing organization. In re Paulson's Will [Wis.] 107 N. W. 484. A testamentary designation which is equally applicable to more than one person or thing raises a question of intention which is independent of construction, and permits an in-he executed the will,[15] and to that end may take into consideration all the circumstances and conditions then existing.[16]

(§ 5) B. Of terms designating property or funds.[17]—Being subject to fair and untechnical construction, words will carry any property which in common use they import, restricted only by the intent,[18] even though technically they might quiry as to testator's actual purpose. In re Welch's Will [Vt.] 61 A. 145. In such case the intention is to be gathered from the language of the will, aided by proof of the circumstances in which it was used. Cannot inquire further as to her purpose. Id. The ascertainment of the person intended in such case must be treated as a judgment of construction, and not as a mere finding of fact. Id. To explain latent ambiguities arising from mistaken or insufficient description of property where will is merely ambiguous, and not so indefinite or uncertain as to be void. Sorenson v. Carey [Minn.] 104 N. W. 958. To identify property described as "my farm consisting of about 95 acres situated in F. county." Id. To correct mistake in description of property, as where testator never owned S. W. ¼ of N. W. ¼ of a certain section of land which he devised, but did own S. W. ¼ of S. W. ¼. St. James Orphan Asylum v. Shelby [Neb.] 106 N. W. 604.

15. Cruit v. Owen, 25 App. D. C. 514; Lindsay v. Wilson [Md.] 63 A. 566; In re Davis' Estate [Minn.] 104 N. W. 299; Freeman v. Freeman [N. C.] 53 S. E. 620. Will must be considered from standpoint of testator when he executed it. Mull v. Masten, 98 N. Y. S. 746. The court may, and should as far as possible, put itself in the place of the testator when he made the will, and then, from a consideration of the instrument itself, of the relation of the testator to the parties affected by it, and of the circumstances and situation of the testator, and of the parties in interest at the time of its execution, endeavor to ascertain the actual intention and to effectuate it. Burnes v. Burnes [C. C. A.] 137 F. 781.

16. Bulkeley v. Worthington Eccl. Soc. [Conn.] 63 A. 351; Strawbridge v. Strawbridge [Ill.] 77 N. E. 78; Adams v. Massey [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 916. In case of uncertainty arising upon the face of a will as to the application of any of its provisions, the testator's intention is to be ascertained from the words of the will, taking into view the circumstances under which it was made, exclusive of his oral declarations. Civ. Code § 1318. In re Buhrmeister's Estate [Cal. App.] 81 P. 752. Will should be construed in light of circumstances surrounding testator when it was made. Manson v. Jack [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 394; Gordon v. Smith [Md.] 63 A. 479; In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879. Evidence regarding all relevant facts surrounding testator at the time the will was made is admissible. Freeman v. Freeman [N. C.] 53 S. E. 620. May inquire into the condition of his family and amount and character of his property. Cruit v. Owen, 25 App. D. C. 514. The state of the property devised may be looked to. Olcott v. Tope, 115 Ill. App. 121. But surrounding circumstances cannot be inquired into for the purpose of importing into the will any intention not therein expressed. Lomax v. Lomax, 218 Ill. 629, 75 N. E. 1076. Rule does not permit the reading into the will of a provision as to which it is silent, or the adding thereto of a substantial bequest. Reinhard v. Reinhard, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 280.

17. See 4 C. L. 1904.

18. Devise of the "undivided one-fifth" of a tract to testator's five daughters, held to give them one-fifth collectively and not a fifth each. Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193. Provision requiring consent of majority of them to a sale held not to show contrary intent. Id. Will held not to show intent to exclude sons from any further share in the estate, thus negativing idea that he intended to die intestate as to balance of tract and requiring different construction. Id. Provision giving "all moneys derived from my father's estate as my share of the same after my decease" to be equally divided among sons, the share of one to be given him "as soon as convenient" after the executors received the same, held to refer only to money so derived after testator's decease, and not to entitle sons to any money received by testator from his father's estate during his lifetime. Demarest v. Demarest [N. J. Err. & App.] 61 A. 569. An inference that land may have been included in a devise is rebutted by proof that it must have fallen into the intestate estate. Vendor of land failed to deliver deed to vendee during latter's lifetime, but after his death deeded other land to his heirs. They, on discovering this fact after the vendor's death, sued to recover the land originally sold, and, a part of it having been sold by the vendor to others, a decree was entered directing a conveyance of the remainder and payment of the value of that sold, and a cancellation of the vendor's deed. Vendor devised to plaintiff's grantors certain similar land, which was later sold to pay the debts of his estate, in a proceeding to which such devisees were parties, and to which sale the record did not show that they objected. Held that since the land surrendered by the vendee's heirs went to the vendor's heirs and not to his devisees, such facts were insufficient to establish any interest in such land in plaintiffs. Gwinner v. Michael, 103 Va. 263, 48 S. E. 895. Bequest to husband in trust for charitable purposes was void for indefiniteness, and he inherited the property under intestate laws. His will recited the provisions of his wife's will, and provided for the division of such property as he might receive thereunder among certain charitable institutions. Held that such provision was inoperative, since he did not receive under his wife's will any property to which it would apply. Hegeman's Ex'rs v. Roome [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 392. The term "dollars" means money, and cannot alone mean notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness. Devenapply only to one class of property or to a specific thing,[19] or though that which is given as realty is in fact personalty, or vice versa.[20]

ney v. Devenney [Ohio] 77 N. E. 688. Where will gave son income on $1,000 for life, with remainder over, and provided that such sum should be paid to the son on his executing security for its return to the executor at his death, held that such provision was one for the payment of money only, and son could not compel delivery to him of securities in which executor had invested $1,000 in conformity with the provisions of the will. Id.

Errors in description of subject-matter will not avoid gift, if enough remains to show with reasonable certainty what was intended. St. James Orphan Asylum v. Shelby [Neb.] 106 N. W. 604.

Certainty: A provision that "a sufficient sum out of said fifth shall be aplied to the support and maintenance of my granddaughter" during her minority is not void as discretionary, since court could at any time ascertain the amount necessary for the purpose stated, and compel it to be devoted to such purpose. In re Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315. Bequest of sum "not exceeding $5,000," to be "equally divided between" two institutions, held not void for uncertainty as to amount, it being the intention to divide the sum named. Speer v. Colbert, 200 U. S. 130, 50 Law. Ed.—, 24 App. D. C. 187. Bequest of "a sufficient sum, not to exceed $3,000, the income to be applied to maintain a scholarship," held not void for uncertainty as to amount, the intention being that the income of the full amount shall be applied if necessary, and of a less amount if not. Id. Gift to hospital of a sum sufficient to produce an annuity of $50, held not void for uncertainty of amount. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998. "Grounds and buildings composing my livery stable property in Bloomington, Ill.," is definite. Lander v. Lander, 217 Ill. 289, 75 N. E. 487.

19. Bequest of "all my books and papers" held not to pass title to deposits in banks evidenced by bank books, where testator left a large number of other books, particularly as such an interpretation would have rendered other provisions of no effect. In re Jeffreys' Estate [Cal. App.] 82 P. 549. Will devised "the lot owned by me and situated on" a certain corner, "being 120 feet of lot 13" of a certain subdivision. Lot 13 was in fact only 108 feet deep, but was represented on an unofficial map, and generally understood by the public, to be 141 feet deep. Tract owned by testatrix included lot 13, was 120½ feet deep, and was occupied by her as an entirety, being covered by continuous buildings. Held that testatrix intended to devise entire tract owned by her without limitation to boundaries of lot 13. Lewis v. Sherman Bros. [Iowa] 104 N. W. 511. Gift of all "money" that remains after all debts are paid, held to include remainder of personalty consisting of mortgages, stocks, and bonds, it appearing that testatrix knew that there would be nothing left unless they were included. In re Blackstone's Estate, 47 Misc. 538, 95 N. Y. S. 977. The word "legacy" is primarily applicable only to personalty, but may refer to realty if the testator so intended, and similarly the word "legatee" may include "devisee." Lindsay v. Wilson [Md.] 63 A. 566.

"Devise" is the appropriate word to pass realty and "bequeath" to pass personalty, but realty may pass where the latter word alone is used if such is the apparent intention. Mills v. Tompkins, 110 App. Div. 212, 97 N. Y. S. 9, rvg. 47 Misc. 455, 95 N. Y. S. 962.

"Give, bequeath, and dispose of," held not to show intention not to pass fee. Ludlam v. Ludlam, 47 Misc. 232, 95 N. Y. S. 862.

20. Conversion of realty into personalty. See, also, Conversion in Equity, 5 C. L. 758.

Where realty is directed to be sold and the proceeds divided, the gift will be considered as one of money and not of land. Starr v. Willoughby, 218 Ill. 485, 75 N. E. 1029. Partition by the takers will not lie. Burbach v. Burbach, 217 Ill. 547, 75 N. E. 519. Gift of life estate to wife at her death to be sold and proceeds to be divided works conversion at testator's death. Nelson v. Nelson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 679. Land held given as personalty where legacies were charged and an imperative power of sale was conferred. Thissell v. Schillinger, 185 Mass. 180, 71 N. E. 300. Persons to whom the proceeds are to be distributed acquire no title under the will by electing to take the land, nor can such an election defeat the right of the widow to her distributive share of such proceeds. Bullock v. Bullock, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 190. Conversion takes place where it is absolutely necessary to sell realty in order to carry out the provisions of the will, though there is no imperative direction to sell. In re Vanuxem's Estate, 212 Pa. 315, 61 A. 876. Where will gave pecuniary legacies largely in excess of the value of the personalty, and gave executors a discretionary power of sale, held that land in foreign state which it was necessary to sell in order to pay such legacies in Pennsylvania was converted into personalty and legacies were subject to taxation in that state. Id. Necessity of a conversion to accomplish the purposes expressed being equivalent to an imperative direction to convert. Stake v. Mobley [Md.] 62 A. 963. Where testator gave pecuniary legacy, and then gave balance of estate, consisting largely of realty incapable of division in kind, to children in equal shares, and gave power of sale to executor, and personalty was insufficient to pay debts and such legacy, held that will operated as conversion. Id. There is no conversion where the same right devolves upon the same person whether the property be treated as money or land, and where no rights of third persons depend upon the conversion. In re Sheldon's Estate, 96 N. Y. S. 225. Direction to sell "for and toward the performance of this my last will" held not to work conversion where no sale was necessary to carry out the will. Id. Equity will not presume a conversion unless the purpose of testator will fail without it. Monjo v. Widmayer, 46 Misc. 352, 94 N. Y. S. 835. There should be an implication of a direction to convert so unequivocal and so strong as to leave no substantial doubt in the mind. Id. Discretionary power of sale, which has never been exercised and is unnecessary to effectuate testator's intention furnishes no argument in favor of a conversion. Id. Gift of power to devise property which was exercised by devising premises to named persons as tenants in common held not to give rise to conversion. Id. Where testatrix gave property to trustees to retain it in its then state of investment, or to convert it into money to be invested for the purposes of the trust and provided that they might postpone sale of all or any part of it for so long as they saw fit, and sale was not necessary to carry out provisions of the will, held no conversion. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. In order to work a conversion it must be the duty of the grantee of the power to sell in any event, and this duty is to be determined from the whole will, as where its purposes require such a sale. In re L'Hommedieu, 138 F. 606. Provision empowering executor "in his own discretion, at such time or times as he shall deem proper, to sell either at public or private sale, any or all of my real estate," held not to work a conversion. Id.

All that is incident to a thing goes with it.[21] Since the will speaks as of testator's death, the properties then subject to his disposal are meant,[22] including powers,[23] such as fall within the terms of ownership which he used. After-acquired properties are ordinarily included.[24]

Time of conversion: When there is an imperative direction to sell, or a provision equivalent thereto, conversion takes place as from testator's death, unless the time is qualified in some way. Stake v. Mobley [Md.] 62 A. 963. In the absence of a contrary intent expressed or clearly implied, conversion takes place as from the date of testator's death. In re Miller's Will [Iowa] 105 N. W. 105. Hence benefit of this doctrine can be asserted only as to lands of which testator was seised at his death. Id. Thus where testator directed that land was to be sold and proceeds divided among certain legatees, but himself sold the land before his death, held that such legatees were not entitled to proceeds in his possession at the time of his decease. Id. Where will operates as a conversion as of date of testator's death, mortgage by heir of all his right, title, and interest in realty creates no lien thereon. Stake v. Mobley [Md.] 62 A. 963.

Conversion of personalty into realty: Where will directed sale of all testator's property, some of which was realty in other states, and the investment of the proceeds in realty in a certain city, held that property would be regarded as realty in that city, and validity of trusts would depend on laws of state in which it was situated. In re Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315.

21. Under Civ. Code § 1311 providing that every devise of land conveys all the estate of the devisor, water right appurtenant to land, represented by shares of stock in water company, held to have passed to devisee of land. In re Thomas' Estate, 147 Cal. 236, 81 P. 539. Under Rev. Code 1892, §§ 1881, 1882, 1892, rents from testator's lands accruing during the year of his death, and crops remaining on his land at the time of his death, whether gathered or not, or matured or unmatured, are assets of the estate and pass to the executor, constituting a portion of the funds for payment of debts, etc., and do not go to the devisees of the land. Gordon v. James, 86 Miss. 719, 39 So. 18. Nothing short of a positive, unequivocal expression of the testator can avoid this statute. Id. Provision that in case testator died before Jan. 1, 1900, the rents due from a plantation were to be paid to his executors, held not to indicate that a different rule than that prescribed by such statute should apply, where testator died after that date. Id. A specific legacy of stocks and bonds carries with it dividends earned and declared after testator's death. Id.

22. In the absence of a contrary intention manifestly appearing in the will a devise of all testator's property carries all property owned by him at the time of his death, which he was then entitled to devise. In re Lux's Estate [Cal.] 85 P. 147. Will purported to dispose of all testator's property, "real, personal and mixed, and wheresoever the same may be," and recited that all the estate of which he was possessed was his separate estate except a certain lot, and that he had undertaken to dispose of all his separate estate, "and one-half of the community property." Testator's wife died after execution of will but before testator's death. Held that will was operative as to all property which testator was entitled to devise at time of his death, and hence passed title to all of the community property. Id. Under Code §§ 3270, 3271, providing for passing of after-acquired property, the will speaks as of the date of testator's death, and hence a devise of realty must be satisfied, if at all, by applying it to realty of which testator died seised. In re Miller's Will [Iowa] 105 N. W. 105. Hence if testator disposes of all his realty during his lifetime and has none at his death any devise thereof fails, not necessarily because of an ademption, but because testator leaves no property within the terms of the gift. Id. Proceeds of realty sold by testator during his lifetime held to pass under residuary clause and not to those to whom realty was devised. Id.

23. The intention to exercise a power of appointment by will must appear by a reference in the will to the power, or to the subject of it, or from the fact that the will would be inoperative without the aid of the power. Will held not a valid exercise of power reserved to grantor in trust deed, particularly where power was conditional, and only to be exercised under circumstances which never arose. Thom v. Thom [Md.] 61 A. 193. A general residuary clause will well execute a general power even though the will antedates the power. Stone v. Forbes [Mass.] 75 N. E. 141. Especially when a codicil made after knowledge of the power republishes the will (Id.), and probably as to special powers the rule also applies (Id.); and the rule is of greater force where the testator

(§ 5) C. Of terms designating or describing persons or purposes.[25]—The particular intent governs technical and precise meanings in ascertaining what takers were meant,[26] and this rule is equally applicable where a purpose charitable or otherwise is fastened on a gift.[27] The purposes for which the gift is made[28] and the persons to take must be definite and certain, or capable of being made so,[29] but a mere misnomer or variation is not an uncertainty.[30] had the use of the property to which the power related (Id.). "Over which I may then have any power" held to intend a power conferred after making will. Id.

24. At common law will of realty was held to speak as of the date of the will and after-acquired property did not pass, but this rule has been generally abrogated by statute Code, §§ 3270, 3271. In re Miller's Will [Iowa] 105 N. W. 105. Under Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 93, § 329, providing that every will executed in due form of law after a specified date shall pass all the realty which testator had at the time of his death. Lindsay v. Wilson [Md.] 63 A. 566. Act does not apply where will shows contrary intention. Id. Will held to pass property acquired by testator as heir after its execution. Id. Fact that testator does not know when he makes the will that he will acquire such property is immaterial. Id.

25. See 4 C. L. 1906.

26. Where testator gave property in trust for his three "unmarried" daughters, naming them, and one of them was a widow when the will was made, held that the word "unmarried" would be construed to mean "not being married at the time in question," that is, when the will was made. Trenton Trust & S. D. Co. v. Armstrong [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 456. Where will directed that money given to one for life should then be "divided between the above said nieces that has received no money," held that it should be divided between all the nieces, previously mentioned as a class, and not between those previously mentioned by name. In re Cunning, 49 Misc. 44, 98 N. Y. S. 312. Where will directed that remainder should be equally divided "among the schools and missionary societies mentioned in the above will," held that an ecclesiastical society organized for the spread of religion by the maintenance and support of a certain church of which testator had been a member and to which he had left a legacy, was not included in term "missionary societies," and was not entitled to share in such remainder. Bulkeley v. Worthington Ecclesiastical Soc. [Conn.] 63 A. 351. Where will provided that any property not specifically disposed of should be sold and the proceeds distributed and paid to "the legatees hereinbefore named" in proportion to the amounts theretofore given them, held that trustees, and not beneficiaries, were legatees of a trust fund theretofore provided for, and took legal title to trust's share of proceeds. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998. Such legatees include all persons receiving specific legacies. Id. Fact that some of the legatees are societies or corporations does not of itself exclude them. Id. Does not include legatee who is to receive a sum sufficient to produce a specified annuity. Id.

27. Where testatrix directed that she be buried in a certain cemetery and that a monument be erected over her grave, and her body was so buried with her husband's consent and remained there for over a year, when her husband had it removed and cremated, held that executor was required to erect monument on spot where she had been buried, though her ashes were not returned to the grave. In re Koppikus' Estate [Cal. App.] 81 P. 732. Charitable trust will be sustained if testator sufficiently shows his intention to create a charity, and indicates its general nature and purpose, and describes in general terms the class of the beneficiaries, though there may be indefiniteness in the declaration and description and much is left to the discretion of the trustees. Columbian University v. Taylor, 25 App. D. C. 124. Provision for free education of young men to fit them for U. S. Naval Academy and making devise therefor in trust to incorporated institution of learning held to create a special charitable trust, which was not void for uncertainty, or incapacity of execution apparent on its face. Id. In a devise or bequest directly to a charitable corporation, the trusts need not be set out so specifically and definitely as if made to individuals, in order to make them valid, since the trusts and purposes for which such corporation is organized are set out in its charter. Carson v. Carson [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 175. Devise and bequest to trustees of church to be used in promotion of Christianity held valid. Id. A bequest for masses held not a provision for funeral expenses so as to be exempt from transfer tax. In re McAvoy's Estate, 98 N. Y. S. 437.

28. Held void for uncertainty: A direction that testatrix's grave be "cared for and kept in order for at least 20 years" after her death held invalid as too indefinite to be enforced. In re Koppikus' Estate [Cal. App.] 81 P. 732. Bequest of sum not to exceed $5,000 to be expended under the personal supervision of the trustees in purchase and erection of chime of bells, memorial window, etc., for a Catholic church in the District of Columbia to be designated by testator's mother, or in case she fails to do so, said trust to be carried out by the trustees, giving preference to church built by Jesuits, held void for uncertainty. Speer v. Colbert, 200 U. S. 130, 50 Law. Ed.—, afg. 24 App. D. C. 187. Bequest to trustee "for the purpose of making such distribution among religious, benevolent, or charitable objects as he may select," held void because too vague and indefinite to be enforced. Hegeman's Ex'rs v. Roome [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 392.

29. In no case will a bequest be deemed void for uncertainty as to the person to take, where person intended can be identified by any competent evidence. In re Stocum's Will, 94 N. Y. S. 588. Gift to "grandchildren" of testator's children, there being no such persons in existence, held to be intended for

The words heirs, issue, children, and the like, may be used as words of purchase, but more often the question is whether they are words of limitation. For the purpose of avoiding confusion and unnecessary repetition the cases construing them have been collected elsewhere.[31]

(§ 5) D. Of terms creating, defining, limiting, conditioning, or qualifying the estates and interests created. Particular words and forms of expression.[32]— The words "heirs,"[33] "heirs of the body,"[34] "children,"[35] "issue,"[36] "lineal descend-testator's grandchildren. Id. Where it appeared that testator, a native of Germany, was known as Carl F. Theilig in that country, and as Charles F. Tyler in the United States, and that will was signed with both names, held that a devise in remainder to "the lawful heirs of Charles F. Tyler in the United States of America, or the lawful heirs of Carl F. Theilig, formerly of Noulitz, Saxon Altenberg," was not void as a devise in the alternative, the alternative expression being merely a means of identification. Tyler v. Theilig [Ga.] 52 S. E. 606. Direction to trustees to devote remainder, at death of life beneficiary, to creation of some charitable or educational institution in a designated city without restriction as to the character of such institution except that it should be nonsectarian, held valid under Laws 1893, p. 1748, c. 701, providing that no gift to charitable uses, otherwise valid, shall be deemed void by reason of uncertainty as to the beneficiaries. Rothschild v. Goldenberg, 103 App. Div. 235, 92 N. Y. S. 1076. Statute applies only to gifts in trust for such purposes and not to absolute gifts. Fralick v. Lyford, 107 App. Div. 543, 95 N. Y. S. 433.

Held void for uncertainty: Trust, for failure to name beneficiary. Filkins v. Severn, 127 Iowa, 738, 104 N. W. 346. Gift "to be distributed" but not limited to "charitable or worthy" not extended to all of testator's "overlooked" relatives, and in no wise apportioned. Minot v. Parker [Mass.] 75 N. E. 149. Will gave widow a certain sum for her support and provided that what was left at her death should "be equally divided between his daughter," but named no other person who should take the other half. Testator's son was made residuary legatee after the payment of certain other legacies. Held that, though will showed an intention that other half should go to son, such intention could not be effectuated as he was not named and that as to such half the provision was void for uncertainty. Leggett v. Stevens [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 874.

30. Evidence held to show that legacy to testatrix's niece, Harriet Ellen Hubbard, was intended for Harriet Ella Field, whose name was Hubbard before her marriage, rather than Harriet Anna Hubbard. In re Welch's Will [Vt.] 61 A. 145. The mere misnomer of a charitable corporation will not invalidate a devise or bequest to it if it clearly appears who was intended thereby. Carson v. Carson [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 175. Devise and bequest to the "Board of Trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in the United States of America," held valid though correct corporate name was the "Trustees of the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church." Id. A bequest to "the trustees of St. Francis Hospital," there being no corporation of that name, may be properly paid to the "Sisters of the Poor of St. Francis," a corporation owning and controlling a hospital known as St. Francis Hospital. Johnston v. Sisters of the Poor of St. Francis, 98 N. Y. S. 525. Institution incorporated as "The President and Directors of Georgetown College" held entitled to property bequeathed to "Georgetown University in the District of Columbia," where there was no such corporation as the latter in the District, and charter of former provided that no misnomer should defeat bequest or devise to it. Speer v. Colbert, 200 U. S. 130, 50 Law. Ed.—, afg. 24 App. D. C. 187. Bequest of certain sum to be divided equally between "St. Vincent's and St. Joseph's Catholic Orphan Asylums in the city of Washington" held valid though correct corporate names of such institutions were "St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum" and "The Trustees of St. Joseph's Male Orphan Asylum," respectively. Id. Gift over to "Norwegian Home and Foreign Missionary Association" held intended for "The Home and Foreign Missions of the United Norwegian Lutheran Church of America." In re Paulson's Will [Wis.] 107 N. W. 484.

31. See § 5 D, post, Particular words and forms of expression.

32. See 4 C. L. 1907.

33. In its primary and technical meaning the word is used to express the relation of persons to some deceased ancestor, and, when used to point out devisees or legatees, that meaning should be given it unless it is clearly shown by legitimate evidence that testator used it in a different sense. Gerard v. Ives [Conn.] 62 A. 607. Where will devised property in trust to pay rents and profits to beneficiary for life and after her decease gave it to her "lawful heirs" forever, held that word "heirs" could not be construed as meaning either children of the life beneficiary or her lawful heirs living at testator's death. Id. Where will provided that on death of life tenant estate was to be divided among testator's "heirs," held that word "heirs" did not mean children, and that it was necessary to resort to statute of distribution to ascertain who were his heirs. Brantley v. Bittle [S. C.] 51 S. E. 561. "Issue" or "heir" of a son held not to include, under Massachusetts laws (St. 1876, p. 210, c. 213), one whom the son adopted as son. Blodgett v. Stowell [Mass.] 75 N. E. 138. Where testator devised residue to widow for life or during widowhood, with remainder after her death or remarriage to "my lawful heirs" according to the laws of inheritance in force in Georgia, held that the heirs referred to were testator's heirs other than the widow, and she took a life estate only, though otherwise she would have taken the ants,"[37] "nearest blood relatives,"[38] "legal representatives,"[39] and "succession legiti-remainder under the statute referred to and would thus have had the fee. Tyler v. Theilig [Ga.] 52 S. E. 606.

Is prima facie a word of limitation and will be so construed unless it is so plain as to preclude misunderstanding that testator intended to use it in other than its ordinary legal sense. Nesbit v. Skelding [Pa.] 62 A. 1062. Devise of realty to son "and his heirs after him" held to give him a fee. Id. Held not a word of limitation. McDaniels v. Hays, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 257.

Personalty: When personalty is given to persons described as heirs, it will pass to those entitled to personal estate under the statute of distribution. Throp v. Throp [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 377. Thus where personalty is bequeathed in trust for son for life, and on his death to his "heirs," on his death leaving a widow and children, the widow is entitled to one-third thereof, and may compel the administrator c. t. a. and the trustee to account therefor. Id. In limitation to heirs of first taker, held to mean next of kin, and to include widow. In re West's Estate [Pa.] 63 A. 407. Where will provided that property was to be converted into money and that, after paying certain specific legacies, the residue was to be distributed among testatrix's "lawful heirs" held that it would be distributed according to statute of distributions, and husband was entitled to share. Turner v. Burr [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 346, 104 N. W. 379.

34. Are words of limitation unless will shows a different meaning. Watkins v. Pfeiffer [Ky.] 92 S. W. 562.

35. It is prima facie to be given its natural meaning, but a more extended meaning may be given it where such a course will prevent the testamentary disposition from becoming inoperative, or where the language of the will indicates such an intention. Dilts v. Clayhaunce [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 672.

Is primarily a word of purchase, but it may be construed as a word of limitation equivalent to "heirs," where it appears from the will that it was used in that sense. Strawbridge v. Strawbridge [Ill.] 77 N. E. 78. Where testator devised residue of realty, upon death of life tenant, to be divided among his children naming them, and to their "children" forever, held that word "children" meant heirs, particularly as at time will was made two of testator's children had no children when will was made or at testator's death. Id.

Does not include grandchildren in the absence of something in the will showing a contrary intention. Pimel v. Betjemann [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 157, rvg. 99 App. Div. 559, 91 N. Y. S. 49. In a devise to children as a class is ordinarily to be construed as immediate offspring, and will not include grandchildren in the absence of something in the will showing a contrary intention. Fulghum v. Strickland, 123 Ga. 258, 51 S. E. 294. Testator gave wife life estate in property so long as she remained a widow, and provided that in the event of her remarriage the estate was to "immediately go to and be distributed or divided equally among the children of my two sisters and my brother, each of the above families to share equally, to have one-third of my property." Held that bequest was to the children of such sisters and brother as a class, that only the children took, and that the descendants of children who died before testator took nothing. Id. Phrase "each of the above families to share equally," held to indicate the plan of division, and not to enlarge meaning of word "children" so as to include grandchildren. Id.

Includes only legitimate children, unless illegitimate children are so described as to leave no doubt that they are to be included. Bealafeld v. Slaughenhaupt [Pa.] 62 A. 1113. Where testator left estate to wife for life, with remainder to "her children and mine," held that illegitimate child born to wife before her marriage, and of whom testator was not the father, took nothing. Id.

May include adopted child where such an intention sufficiently appears from expressions in the will and from the state of testator's family at the date of the will. In re Truman [R. I.] 61 A. 598. Gift to "children or issue" of deceased brother held to include child adopted under act of the legislature. Id.

Held to mean issue: Where estate was devised to daughter "and the heirs of her body," with a provision that in case she died without "children" the estate should go to others, word "children" held synonymous with "issue" or "heirs of the body." Watkins v. Pfeiffer [Ky.] 92 S. W. 562.

Held to mean "descendants." Dilts v. Clayhaunce [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 672.

36. Prima facie means "heirs of the body," and will be construed as a word of limitation. Beckley v. Riegert, 212 Pa. 91, 61 A. 641; Todd v. Armstrong [Pa.] 62 A. 1114.

"Lawful issue" in its legal sense means descendants, in absence of anything in will or surrounding circumstances to show contrary intention. Phelps v. Cameron, 109 App. Div. 798, 96 N. Y. S. 1014. Will directed division of estate into equal parts, income from each to be paid to child for life, and on her death principal to be divided among her "lawful issue." Held that on death of daughter principal should be divided equally among her children and her grandchild. Id.

37. Held to mean "heirs of the body." Paine v. Sackett [R. I.] 61 A. 753. Devise in trust to pay income to children for life and, on death of any of them, to transfer and convey his share of the estate to his "lineal descendants," or if none, then to the survivors of testator's descendants, or to their lineal descendants, if any, descendants of any deceased child to take parent's share, and in case of death of all of testator's children then to testator's heirs, held that "lineal descendants" meant "heirs of the body" and that equitable estates in fee tail were given to the children, with contingent cross-remainders to the survivors or their descendants if either child died without issue. Id.

38. The words "my nearest blood relatives" generally mean such persons as take under the statutes regarding the distribution of estates of intestates, but they may be given any reasonably different meaning necessary to effectuate testator's intention. In re Sander's Estate [Wis.] 105 N. W. 1064. Intention to devise property to illegimates ma,"[40] will be given their ordinary legal meaning unless a contrary intent appears.

Words of survivorship are generally held to refer to the time of testator's death unless a specific intent to the contrary appears.[41] A gift to a particular class of persons ordinarily is a gift to those coming within that description at testator's death, in the absence of anything showing a contrary intention.[42] A gift to one "so long as she may remain unmarried" is not a condition in restraint of marriage.[43] is to be respected and effectuated the same as though they were legitimate. Id. Where testator left property to his "nearest blood relatives, if there be any," and must have known, or had reasonable ground to suppose, that he had no relatives other than the descendants of his illegitimate brother and sister, held that he intended such persons to take. Id.

39. Technically they mean executors and administrators, but may be held to mean heirs or next of kin. Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. S. 265.

Held to mean executors and administrators. Alexander v. McPeck [Mass.] 75 N. E. 88.

Held to mean heirs in devise to wife for life with remainder to children, "or to their legal representatives." Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. S. 265. In bequest to sister and in case of her death before that of testator to her heirs and legal representatives, held to mean "heirs," and to be treated as surplusage. In re Reisenberg's Estate [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 1170.

40. Testator bequeathed remainder of his estate "in the character of fidei-commissum and that the other [shares] may [profit by] accretion, in case of death without succession legitima, by equal parts" to certain nieces and a foster child. Held that words "succession legitima" meant "issue" and not "lawful heirs," and foster child's share went to nieces on her death. De Rodriguez v. Vivoni, 26 S. Ct. 475, 50 Law. Ed.—.

41. Taylor v. Stephens [Ind.] 74 N. E. 980. To the end that the estate may vest at the earliest possible moment. Campbell v. Bradford [Ind.] 77 N. E. 849. Will gave realty to wife for life with remainder to testator's sons, and provided that "if either of them shall be deceased leaving children surviving them" then his share should go to such children, and if either died leaving no children the surviving son should inherit the whole. Held that death referred to was death during testator's lifetime and remainders were vested. Id. When the devise is of a fee absolute in the first instance, and the gift is immediate. Richards v. Bentz, 212 Pa. 93, 61 A. 613. Word "survivor" or "surviving," following a prior gift. Black v. Woods [Pa.] 63 A. 129. "Surviving" held to relate to the death of testator rather than to the death of the life tenant there being a special provision for such as should survive the latter, and a reference elsewhere to survivorship at that time. Ball v. Holland [Mass.] 75 N. E. 713. Provision that on death of widow, to whom use for life was given, realty should be sold, and proceeds divided among testator's "surviving" children, held, in view of other provisions indicating an intention that portions of the children's shares might be advanced to them during widow's life and that share of any child dying should go to survivors, to refer to children surviving testator and not merely to those surviving the widow. Boggs v. Boggs [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 1114. Devise to wife for life and on her death to children or their heirs held to vest absolute title in such children as were living at time of testator's death, and the heirs of such as had predeceased him, the substituted gift to heirs being only intended to take effect in case child died before testator. Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. S. 265. Testator directed trustees to pay balance of income to surviving children of his sister and of his brothers, and to S., M., F., and H., "and the surviving issue of any deceased child of said" sister or brothers, "and the surviving children of S., M., F. and C., having deceased before me, to be divided equally between them." Held that, where son of one of brothers survived testator, son's daughter was not, on his death, entitled to any part of the income. Howe v. Booth, 97 N. Y. S. 267. Where testator created trust to exist during lifetime of wife and sister, and provided that, on cessation of same, estate should go to "my nieces and nephews who may be living" and niece of wife, and issue of those who had died, held that nieces and nephews referred to were those living at testator's death, from which time will is presumed to speak. In re Woolsey's Estate, 49 Misc. 201, 98 N. Y. S. 936. Gift in trust for son to be conveyed on his death in fee to his issue, but in case he died without issue, "then to convey the same to my surviving children, share and share alike," held to refer to children surviving on death of testator. Black v. Woods [Pa.] 63 A. 129. Fact that direction to convey is expressed in a trust is immaterial, the question being one of substance rather than form. Id.

Held not to refer to death during testator's lifetime: Will directed that residuary estate should be divided equally among named nieces and nephews, and provided that the portions which certain of them "shall receive shall at their death revert to their children." Held that death referred to was not death during testatrix's lifetime, and nieces and nephews took life estate only. Powell's Ex'r v. Crosby [Ky.] 89 S. W. 721. Where will gave property in trust for daughter for life with direction that upon her death it should be equally divided among son and survivin- grandchildren, held only those took who survived life tenant. In re Stocum's Will, 94 N. Y. S. 588.

42. See Individual rights in gifts to two or more, post, this section.

43. Harlow v. Bailey [Mass.] 75 N. E. 259. A provision for the support of daughters as long as they continue unmarried and need support is valid, where the evident intention

The words "die without issue" ordinarily import an indefinite failure of issue,[44] unless the will shows a contrary intention.[45]

Ordinarily where there is a gift to one absolutely, and, in case of his death, or his death without issue, to another, the contingency referred to will be held to be his death during testator's lifetime;[46] but this does not apply where another point of time is mentioned to which the contingency can be referred, or where another provision of the will evidences a contrary intent.[47] "Die leaving no living issue" is to provide support and not to restrain marriage. Trenton Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Armstrong [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 456. Gift of income "during the term of her natural life, or so long as she remains unmarried," with a gift over "in case of her death or marriage," held a limitation in favor of the beneficiary during the period of her nonmarriage which was valid, and not a bequest for life upon condition of forfeiture in case of marriage, which would be void. In re Holbrook's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 368.

44. "Dying without issue," when standing alone. Beckley v. Riegert, 212 Pa. 91, 61 A. 641. Devise over "should my heirs and their heirs cease to exist, and the time ever come when there was no lineal descendant," held not to refer to failure of issue at death of first taker, but at some indefinite time in the future. Merrill v. American Baptist Missionary Union [N. H.] 62 A. 647.

45. Rule that "dying without issue" means an indefinite failure of issue always yields to an apparent intent on face of will that words were to have a more restricted meaning, and to be applied to descendants of a particular class, or at a particular time. Beckley v. Riegert, 212 Pa. 91, 61 A. 641; Todd v. Armstrong [Pa.] 62 A. 1114. Under devise to son for life, and if he should "die without lawful issue" then over, but if he had "lawful issue at the time of his death," then to him and his heirs forever, held that limitation over was after a definite failure of issue, and son took life estate and not an estate tail by implication. Beckley v. Riegert, 212 Pa. 91, 61 A. 641. Devise to daughter with provision that, if she should die unmarried, or having been married, "should die without issue born of her body," the estate should vest in her mother for life if living, or in daughter's husband for life, if living, and on failure of these, then over, held to import definite failure of issue, and the mother having died before the daughter, and the daughter having died without leaving living issue, her surviving husband took a life estate. Daughter did not take fee. Todd v. Armstrong [Pa.] 62 A. 1114. Where will gave property to wife for life, with power of disposal, all remaining at her death to be equally divided among her children, and gave sons their share absolutely, and codicil provided that "in case one of my sons dies without children," his share was to return to testator's family, held that death referred to was not death during wife's lifetime, but death at any, or an indefinite time. Pennsylvania Land Co. v. Justi [Ky.] 90 S. W. 279.

46. Daniels' Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 358; Hogg's Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 428. Where will devised realty to grandson "as his full property, which he shall take in possession immediately after my death," and also gave him certain personalty for which he was to make certain payments to his sister and others, and provided that if the grandson or his sister should "die without heirs, so shall that one's share of inheritance fall back to the other," held that the grandson took an absolute and indefeasible fee if he survived testator. Richards v. Bentz, 212 Pa. 93, 61 A. 613. Devise to daughter in fee, but if she should die "single, unmarried, and without issue," then over to mother and her heirs. Daughter having married and had children has fee though children all die. Cooper v. Leaman, 212 Pa. 564, 61 A. 1106. In any event having survived testatrix's mother she takes vested remainder in fee as her heir and her deed passes fee title. Id. An estate to A. and in case of her death without heir, then over, gives A. a fee if she survives the testator. Hogg's Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 428. Where use and income of half of residuary estate was given to son for life, with direction that after his death the property was to go to the son's son, but, in case the latter should die leaving no living issue, then to the daughter as an absolute estate, not to pass to her however until the death of testator's son, held that the provision for the issue of the grandson took effect only in case latter should die before testator, and on his surviving testator, grandson took an absolute title, subject only to father's life estate. Hull v. Holmes [Conn.] 62 A. 705. Where will directed that one share of property was to be paid to brother, if living, or, if not, to his issue, held that his issue were entitled to his share on his death before that of testatrix. Varick v. Smith [N. J. Eq] 61 A. 151.

47. Rule does not apply where another point of time is mentioned to which the contingency can be referred, or where a life estate intervenes, or where will shows a contrary intent. In re Wiley, 97 N. Y. S. 1017. "In case of the death of" any of the residuary legatees, property to be divided among survivors, referred to death before period of distribution. Id. Where there is a gift to children for life, and, as each child dies leaving issue, a gift of the share of the child so dying to the issue of that child, with a gift over to surviving sons and daughters of testatrix if the life tenant dies without issue, the surviving sons and daughters are the sons and daughters who survive the life tenant who dies without issue, unless there is something in the will showing a contrary intention. Dary v. Grau [Mass.] 77 N. E. 507. Testatrix gave six parts of her estate in trust to pay income to six named children in equal parts and directed that on the death of each of such children leaving issue his share of the corpus should be conveyed to such issue in equal shares in fee, but that in the event is equivalent to "die leaving no surviving issue."[48] A limitation over to surviving takers on the death of any without issue does not impliedly attach to what the survivors take from the deceased one's share; hence such portions may be alienated,[49] and if children have been born and are deceased, the shares descend to their heirs.[50]

Gifts by implication.[51]—Since no particular form of expression is necessary to constitute a legal disposition of property,[52] a devise may be held to exist by implication where the context requires it,[53] but the probability of such an intent must be so strong as to leave no hesitation in the mind of the court, and permit of no other reasonable inference.[54] An erroneous recital in a will of a previous devise of the death of any of the children without issue, his share of the corpus should be held by the trustees for the use of the "surviving" children to be equally divided between them, the shares devised in trust "to be held upon the like trusts and purposes herein already before declared, and finally to be conveyed, divided, and distributed among their issue as hereinbefore provided." Four children survived testatrix and left issue who survived the last of testatrix's children. Held that on the death of the last of testatrix's children the trust estate was properly divided into four equal parts, one part to be divided among the issue of each of the four children of testatrix who left issue. Id. Gift over to surviving children meant those surviving the several life beneficiaries dying without issue, and did not include children of testatrix who predeceased her, or their issue. Id. Provisions of a will held to disclose an intent on the part of the testator not to limit the meaning of "die without issue" to the death of the legatee during his own lifetime. Daniels' Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 358.

48. Hull v. Holmes [Conn.] 62 A. 705.

49. Will provided that on death of life tenant the estate was "to be equally divided among all my heirs, share and share alike," the child or children of any deceased parent taking the share to which the parent would have been entitled if living. Two of the heirs died during the continuation of the life estate without leaving children, and a third died after having conveyed all her interest in the estate, leaving children. Held that the shares which the latter heir took as one of the heirs of the other two were not subject to the provisions of the will, there being nothing to show an intention to create cross-remainders, and passed to her grantee to the exclusion of her issue. Brantley v. Bittle [S. C.] 51 S. E. 561.

50. Where will provided for a division of residuary estate into equal shares to be held in trust for testator's brothers and sisters, and at their death to be paid to their children, or if any of them died without children, to the remaining brothers and sisters or their issue, held that on the death of one of them without issue his share went to the surviving brothers and sisters and the descendants of those who were dead, the latter taking such share as the parents would have taken if living, and on the death of a sister leaving a son, her share went to him absolutely, and on his death passed under the law of descent and not under the will. Barret v. Gwyn [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1096.

51. See 4 C. L. 1909.

52. A direction that property be divided among certain persons is equivalent to a devise to them. Dilts v. Clayhaunce [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 672.

53. A devise by implication will be sustained where it is apparent that it is necessary to do so in order to give effect to the plain intention of the testator. Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665. Where it is plainly manifest that testator intended to bequeath an interest which is not given by formal words, such words may be supplied by implication. Peabody v. Tyszkiewicz [Mass.] 77 N. E. 839. Where will gave certain sum in trust to pay over income to testatrix's daughter, and "upon" her decease to pay over the income to her child or children, and the issue of any deceased child in such shares as daughter should by will appoint, or, in default of appointment in equal shares, the issue of a deceased child taking the parent's share, held that children of daughter took vested interest for life contingent on their surviving the daughter, and trust was not terminated by daughter's death. Id. Further provisions that principal should remain in trust so long as law allowed and that when trust was terminated under limitation provided by law, a final distribution should be made to surviving children and their issue, the issue of a deceased child taking the parent's share, held not to cut down life estate previously given to daughter or children, and legal title must be held by trustee at least until death of one of such children. Id. Where estate was given in trust, the net income to be paid to the beneficiaries, "and at their deaths the principal to their heirs," held that words of direct gift to heirs would be implied. In re West's Estate [Pa.] 63 A. 407. The phrase "die leaving no living issue" is equivalent to "die leaving no surviving issue," and carries a plain implication in favor of any issue of the first taker who may survive him. Hull v. Holmes [Conn.] 62 A. 705. Where will gave widow use of rooms in a house devised to defendant and her board, etc., or use of rooms and an annuity to be paid by defendant at her election, held that, on her election to take the annuity, she was entitled to arrange rooms for housekeeping and could put in cook stove, etc. Begin v. Begin [Minn.] 107 N. W. 149.

54. In order that the heir at law may be excluded by a devise by implication, the implication must be obvious, and not merely possible or probable. Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665. A devise exists by implication may operate as a devise by implication,[55] but not an erroneous recital of a gift by some other instrument.[56]

Quality of estate, whether legal or equitable, use, trust, or power.[57]—Full legal ownership may be implied from a use which is equivalent thereto,[58] or from a gift with words ordinarily indicative of a trust or beneficial ownership, or a power.[59]

when the testator uses words manifesting an intention to give by so strong a probability that the contrary intent cannot be supposed to have existed in his mind when he made the will. Metz v. Wright [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 1125. Where trust for benefit of son so rested in personal discretion of trustee that it terminated at his death, and there was no direct gift to son, and no disposition of the property in case the trustee died before the son, and it was discretionary with trustee whether trust should be terminated during son's lifetime by paying over principal to him, held that there was no implied gift to son. Benedict v. Dunning, 110 App. Div. 303, 97 N. Y. S. 259.

55. A recital that testator has devised something in another part of the will when he has not done so. Noble v. Tipton, 219 Ill. 182, 76 N. E. 151. Clause reading "my son" naming him "I have given" certain personalty "and 120 acres of land, priced at $600," describing it, held to be a devise of such land to the son, though word "devise" was not used. Metz v. Wright [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 1125.

56. Not though deed referred to was insufficient to pass title for want of delivery. Noble v. Tipton, 219 Ill. 182, 76 N. E. 151. Nor can recital aid in establishing that there had been a valid delivery of such deed. Id. The rule that a devise will not be implied from an erroneous recital of a deed has no application to such a recital followed by a declaration of testator's will to the same effect. Lander v. Lander, 217 Ill. 289, 75 N. E. 487.

57. See 4 C. L. 1910, n. 63 et seq.

58. Gift of use: Gift of realty to wife "for her occupancy or otherwise as she may deem best for the comfort and maintenance of the family" with furniture, etc., "to be disposed of or used as my wife may think best" held to give her a fee. Ludlam v. Ludlam, 47 Misc. 232, 95 N. Y. S. 862. Where testator bequeathed the residue of the personalty in trust to K. to pay premiums on policy of insurance on life of M., and if any money remained after paying premiums gave the "use, improvement, and enjoyment of the same" to said K., held that the residue of income after paying the premiums belonged to K. absolutely. State v. Sliney [Conn.] 62 A. 621. Where testator gave wife all his property "she to have full control of said property during her life," and then provided that "one-half of all property belonging to my estate at my wife's death" should go to one of his daughters in fee and the other half to his other daughter for life with remainder to her children, held that widow took only a life estate and was not authorized to dispose of fee. Hoefliger v. Hoefliger [Iowa] 107 N. W. 312.

Power of disposal: A gift of the unqualified power to dispose of the property is a gift of the property. Gift of residue to executor "to be disposed of as he shall think expedient" held an absolute gift. Manson v. Jack [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 394. Residence while they live to husband, mother and children and power in husband to sell personalty and reinvest for their use held to give him no estate subject to debts, until perhaps when he shall have survived. Linn v. Downing, 216 Ill. 64, 74 N. E. 729.

Gift of income: Every person who, by virtue of any grant, devise or assignment, is entitled to the actual possession of lands and the receipts of the rents and profits thereof in law or in equity shall be deemed to have a legal estate therein, of the same quality and duration, and subject to the same conditions, as his beneficial interest. Gen. St. 1894, § 4276. In re Poseng's Estate [Minn.] 104 N. W. 137. This statute refers only to devises concerning which there are no limitations, and does not mean that every person who is by will entitled to possession of land and the receipts and profits thereof shall be deemed to have a legal estate therein. Cannot be invoked for the purpose of enlarging limitation imposed by the devise itself. Id. Where will gave husband rents and profits of realty "during his natural life," provided that he should pay taxes, insurance, etc., and further provided that such gift was an express condition that property should not be incumbered in any manner by him, held that he did not become vested with legal estate, but that interest and profits thereof were devised to him for life only. Id. A devise of the income of lands is, in effect, a devise of the lands. Devise of "the use, income, and occupancy" to children and their heirs forever. Merrill v. American Baptist Missionary Union [N. H.] 62 A. 647. Will gave "to W., my housekeeper, $500 to be in trust of my executor and put in savings bank, the income to be paid to her yearly," and authorized executor, if he thought best, to buy a house with the principal for her to occupy during her life. There was no residuary clause, and housekeeper died leaving principal unimpaired and unconverted by executor. Held that on trust becoming fully executed by her death, the legal title to the fund followed the equitable one, and fund became a part of her estate. Hayward v. Rowe [Mass.] 76 N. E. 286.

59. Bequest to unincorporated society to be used by it in such manner as it may deem most expedient for the advancement of spiritualism in a certain town, is an absolute gift to the society and not a gift in trust. Fralick v. Lyford, 107 App. Div. 543, 95 N. Y. S. 433. Where an estate is given to a person generally or indefinitely, with power of disposition, such gift carries the entire estate, and the devisee or legatee takes, not a simple power, but the property absolutely. Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665; Pedigo's Ex'x v. Botts [Ky.] 89 S. W. 164. But where the property is given expressly for life, and a

On the other hand a trust may be found without the artificial words of one,[60] and power of disposition of the reversion is annexed, the first taker has but a life estate with the superadded power. Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665. The express limitation for life will control the operation of the power and prevent it enlarging the estate into a fee, and the residuum undisposed of by the life tenant will go to the remaindermen. Pedigo's Ex'x v. Botts [Ky.] 89 S. W. 164. Gift of realty and personalty held to have given widow life estate with unlimited power of disposition, with remainder, in residuum undisposed of by her in her lifetime, to children. Id. Residuary clause "all the rest of my estate I give her full control," held to give wife an absolute estate, and not merely a life estate, in the residue. Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665.

Effect of precatory words: Words of desire, request, recommendation, or confidence, addressed by testator to a legatee whom he has power to command, create a trust in favor of the parties recommended only when the intention to make such desire, etc., imperative upon the legatee, so that he shall have no option to comply or to refuse to do so, clearly appears from the whole will and the relation and circumstances of the testator when it was made, when the subject-matter is certain, and when the beneficiaries are clearly designated. When these three conditions exist, a precatory trust may be created in favor of the parties recommended. Burnes v. Burnes [C. C. A.] 137 F. 781. The test of the first condition of such a trust is the clear intention of testator to imperatively control the conduct of the legatee by the expression of the wish or desire, and not to give him a discretionary power to comply or refuse to comply with the wish or suggestion at his option. Id. Precatory or recommendatory words will create a trust if they are sufficiently imperative to show that it is not left discretionary with the party to act or not, and if the subject-matter of the trust is defined with sufficient certainty, and if the object is also certainly defined, and the mode in which the trust is to be executed. Civ. Code 1895, § 3162. Glore v. Scroggins [Ga.] 53 S. E. 690. Question whether words were meant merely by way of advice, or were intended as mandatory is one of intention. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston, 47 Misc. 693, 98 N. Y. S. 1055.

Precatory words held to create trust: Testator devised all his property to his children "in equal shares, share and share alike." By a later article he expressed a "desire" that a certain son should have use of a fruit ranch for 5 years at a specified annual rental to be paid to the other children and "directed" the latter to execute to him a lease of the premises. Held that provision in favor of son was mandatory and not mere expression of a wish or desire. In re Buhrmeister's Estate [Cal. App.] 81 P. 752.

Precatory words held not to create trust: Gift to wife of all testator's property for life "for her to give to our children as they arrive of age as she may be able, keeping a memorandum so as each child may be equal," held not to create trust. Glore v. Scroggins [Ga.] 53 S. E. 690. Testator gave property in trust to pay income to his wife for life absolutely, "for her own use and to enable her to support, educate, and maintain our children," she not to be liable to account therefor in any manner, the same being given to her "absolutely to use and apply as she may deem best and proper," held that testator's son had no enforceable interest in income. Slater v. Slater, 46 Misc. 332, 94 N. Y. S. 900. "Desire" that trustee advance certain sums to wife held to be meant as direction to trustee. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston, 47 Misc. 693, 98 N. Y. S. 1055. Testator gave property to brothers "to be held and disposed of by them absolutely as their own property." He expressed a desire that they should adopt his children as their heirs so that they would share equally with their own children in their estates, etc., and further provided that nothing in the will, and no request, direction or bequest therein should be construed to create a charge or incumbrance upon any of the property bequeathed to such brothers. Held that will did not create trust in favor of children, either in estate of testator or the property of his brothers. Burnes v. Burnes [C. C. A.] 137 F. 781.

60. No particular form of expression is necessary to constitute a valid trust, but it is sufficient that, from the language used, the intention of the testator is apparent, and that the trust atempted to be created is consistent with the rules of law. In re Heywood's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 755; Central Trust Co. v. Egleston [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 989, rvg. 96 N. Y. S. 1117, 47 Misc. 475, 95 N. Y. S. 945.

The character of a trust may be found in the provisions of the will construed with reference to the condition of parties. Bennett v. Bennett, 217 Ill. 434, 75 N. E. 339. Gift of income only and a trust may betoken a spendthrift trust. Id. It will not militate against the constitution of several trusts that the capital of the estate is to be kept together and administered as one fund for convenience, if it appears that the shares or interests of the beneficiaries are made, or clearly intended to be made, distinctly several. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 989, rvg. 96 N. Y. S. 1117, 47 Misc. 475, 95 N. Y. S. 945. Will held to create a single trust for lives of testator's three sons. Id.

Held to create trust: Gift to executors "to be distributed by them" but without accountability. Minot v. Parker [Mass.] 75 N. E. 149. Bequest to executor in trust to invest money and pay it over "together with the increase thereof" to son or to his wife and children "at such time or times and in such manner" as executor deems for son's best interest held to create valid trust and to give trustee same right to pay over principal as income. In re Wilkin [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 1105, rvg. 100 App. Div. 509, 91 N. Y. S. 1118. Where testator gave one a certain sum "to be expended by him as I have instructed him during my lifetime," and also gave him a certain other sum "for his personal use," held that first gift was intended to create a trust for some other object than the legatee's personal use, and being insufficient as a trust, was invalid. In re Keenan, 94 N. Y. S. 1099. Testator be-such words may, if clearly so intended, import a power,[61] and will be so construed if there is a provision for the disposal of the unconsumed portion.[62] A gift subject to a surviving husband's "legal rights" gives him no title to personalty as against the executor.[63]

Estates or interests created.[64]—Words of inheritance are not necessary to carry a fee, but any words suffice which carry that intent.[65] So, too, no particular queathed to wife and son the use of certain sums for life, directed his executors to pay such sums to a certain bank, and the bank to pay the income and principal to legatees according to the terms of the will. Held to create a valid express trust in personalty. In re McKay, 143 F. 671. Gift to son to lease realty and invest personalty and to receive rents, income, etc., thereof, and, after paying taxes, expenses, etc., to apply residue to support of wife, unmarried daughters, and minor children of testator, until minor daughters became of age, and then to distribute estate in specified manner, held to create an express trust under N. Y. real property law, § 76, subd. 3 (Laws 1896, p. 571, c. 547) of which wife and children were the beneficiaries. In re L'Hommedieu, 138 F. 606.

Held not to create trust: Testator devised property to trustees to invest, and directed them to divide income into five parts, one part to be paid to his wife and one to each of his children, and that at the death of each his share was to "go to," or "be distributed" or "transferred" or "paid" to certain persons on certain contingencies. Held that will showed intention to make direct devises to remaindermen, and did not create an invalid trust to convey to beneficiaries. In re Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315. Where no beneficiary was named held that trust could not be supported as for implied benefit of testator's sole heir, such an intention being in no way suggested by anything in the will. Filkins v. Severn, 127 Iowa, 738, 104 N. W. 346. One gift to a person held absolute from the fact that it lacked qualifying words there being another gift to him in trust. Thissell v. Schillinger, 186 Mass. 180, 71 N. E. 300. To constitute a testamentary trustee it is necessary that some express trust be created by the will. Kellogg v. Burdick, 96 N. Y. S. 965. Provision appointing certain persons "to be guardians of the persons" of minor children, and certain others "to be joint guardians of the estates" of such children to receive, hold, and pay out all funds belonging to them, held not to create trust so as to make latter guardians trustees. Id.

For cases in regard to creation of resulting trusts by oral agreements between devisee and testator at time of making will, see Trusts, 6 C. L. 1727.

61. Gift to widow of the "use and improvement" of realty for life, with further provision that, if use and improvement should not be sufficient for her support and maintenance, she might sell so much of the realty as might be necessary for that purpose, held to give her life estate with limited power of sale. Bartlett v. Buckland [Conn.] 63 A. 350.

62. "All my estate, after paying debts, costs of administration, legacies, and bequests I give and bequeath and the free and liberal use thereof to my wife for and during her life and whatever remains at her death" over, construed to vest in the wife a right to the possession of the property and to control the same during her lifetime with full power of disposition at her discretion. Teel v. Mills, 117 Ill. App. 97. No additional power of disposal given to the devisee of a life estate, which evidently contemplates the possibility of a portion of the property remaining undisposed of and therefore subject to the devise of the remainder after the termination of the life estate, will convert the devise of a life estate into a fee simple. Steiff v. Selbert [Iowa] 105 N. W. 328. Where a life estate is given and the provisions as to an added power of disposal, no matter how broad, contemplate a possibility that a portion of the property may remain undisposed of under the power, the provision as to a remainder in such portion as may be undisposed of at the termination of the life estate is effective, and vests such remainder in the devisees named. Id. Devise to widow "during her lifetime" with an absolute power of disposal, with further provision that, in case any of the property remained after her death undisposed of by her, it should go to children, held to give widow a life estate only, with a vested remainder in children in so much of the property as she did not dispose of. Id. Gift of all testator's property to his wife "for her exclusive use and benefit during her life and after her death and funeral expenses are paid what remains to be equally divided between my children," held to give wife life estate only, even if she had implied power of sale. Haviland v. Haviland [Iowa] 105 N. W. 354.

63. His rights are purely equitable and not legal rights in wife's estate. In re Folwell's Estate [N. J. Err. & App.] 62 A. 414.

64. See 4 C. L. 1912.

65. A devise to one without the use of the words "heirs and assigns" gives him a fee simple estate of inheritance, unless the will reduces the estate to one less than a fee by express words, or by construction or operation of law. Hill v. Gianelli [Ill.] 77 N. E. 458; Boehm v. Baldwin [Ill.] 77 N. E. 454. Under Act Aug. 27, 1784, 3 Gen. St. p. 3763, a devise which omits the words "heirs and assigns" or "heirs and assigns forever" must be construed as passing an estate in fee, unless there are expressions in the will whereby it appears that the devise was intended to convey only an estate for life "and" no further devise be made of the devised premises after the death of the devisee. Morris v. Le Bel [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 501. Though the two classes of excepted cases are connected by "and," held that the plain intent requires that word to be read as "or," and the statutory construction cannot be made either if the will shows an intention to convey only a life estate, or if there is no devise over after the words are necessary to constitute a life estate.[66] An express limitation to life cannot be enlarged into a fee by words of doubtful meaning.[67] A devise or bequest death of the first devisee. Id. Devise of land to one on condition that he shall not incumber it, nor have the power to sell it, but shall have the power to devise it by last will, held to show an intent to create life estate only. Id. Under Act April 8, 1833, § 9 (P. L. 250, Purd. 2103), the whole estate passes notwithstanding omission of words of inheritance, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention. In re Brooke's Estate [Pa.] 63 A. 411. Devise in remainder to daughter held to pass fee. Id. Devise to son "and his heirs after him," held to give him fee. Nesbit v. Skelding [Pa.] 62 A. 1062. Provision in codicil giving wife a certain sum in lieu of a larger one given her by the will, to be set apart to her as provided in the will held to give her a fee, the gift being without qualification except as to the manner of selecting it. Hartring's Ex'x v. Milward's Ex'r [Ky.] 90 S. W. 260. Testatrix devised all her estate to two grandchildren equally to be their estate, not subject to the control of their husbands, and in case of the death of either her share to go to the survivor, and upon the death of the survivor without descendants the estate to go to others. Held that grandchildren took the property in fee with power to dispose of it as they saw fit, and there was a devise over of only so much as might be left in the hands of the survivor upon the death of both of them without issue. Irvine v. Putnam [Ky.] 89 S. W. 520. The rule is different where a life estate only, without power of disposition, is given to the first taker. Id. The presumption against intestacy, when applicable, may be relied on to support a contention that a gift asserted to be only one for life is in reality absolute, especially where there is no limitation over, and where the alleged intestacy would occur in the residuary clause. Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665. Testator gave certain land to his son "and his children provided he should have children by his wife," and then provided that if he and his wife should have no children, and he should die before his wife she should be entitled to one-third of the proceeds of the land so long as she remained his widow. He also stated at the end of the will that he had disposed of all his property so far as known to him, but there was no limitation over on failure of son to have issue. Held that son took fee though he had no issue. Boehm v. Baldwin [Ill.] 77 N. E. 454. Residuary clause "all the rest of my estate I give her full control," held to give wife an absolute estate. Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665.

66. Held life estates: Gift of property to widow "to be hers her natural life or widowhood," for the support of herself and children, the remainder to be distributed in a specified manner at her death or marriage. Walters v. Bristow [Ark.] 91 S. W. 305. Testator devised realty to wife for life, provided she did not remarry, and on her death or remarriage to all of his children then alive as tenants in common and in case of their death without issue then to testator's brothers and sisters. Widow did not remarry and children survived her. Held that realty being community property, half of it went to wife in fee, and she took a life estate in the other half, with remainder to surviving children. Pryor v. Winter, 147 Cal. 554, 82 P. 202. Gift of property to wife "during her lifetime or widowhood, for her to give to our children as they arrive of age as she may be able, keeping a memorandum so as each child may be equal," held to give wife an estate for life or widowhood, with remainder to children. Glore v. Scroggins [Ga.] 53 S. E. 690. "During her natural life" gives life estate, and power of sale added in order if necessary to pay debts does not enlarge it. Nelson v. Nelson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 679. "Use and occupancy during life." Taylor v. Stephens [Ind.] 74 N. E. 980. Bequest of personalty to widow "to have to hold by her during her life, and at her death the same or whatever remains to be divided between my children," held to give her a life estate only, with an unlimited power of disposition added as a separate gift, and if she failed to exercise such power, the remainder passed to the children at her death. Webb v. Webb [Iowa] 104 N. W. 438. Devise with power to sell and reinvest proceeds and use income "so long as she remains unmarried." Harlow v. Bailey [Mass.] 75 N. E. 259. Testator devised to wife his "homestead consisting of 30 acres on the southeast corner of section 5." By a subsequent clause he devised to his son all his lands in sections 2 and 4, "reserving the right of my widow to occupy the homestead during her natural life." Testator had a homestead on section 2, but none and no 30 acres on section 5. Held that his intention was to give widow life estate in homestead, with remainder in fee to son. Thorn v. Scofield [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 37, 107 N. W. 100. Son held not to have done anything inconsistent with his right to claim fee. Id. Devise to one on condition that he shall not incumber it or sell it, but giving him power to dispose of it by will. Morris v. Le Bel [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 501. Provision that three unmarried daughters, the survivors and the survivor of them, should have the use of property until they married held to have given them an estate for life, subject to defeat in case of their marriage. Graham v. Graham, 48 Misc. 4, 97 N. Y. S. 779. Testator gave property to trustee, who was to convey it to son on his arrival at the age of 25 "to be held by him as follows," and then provided that if son died before testator or after him without leaving lawful issue property was to go to nieces and nephews. He further provided that in case son died before reaching age of 25 without issue, property was to go to same nieces and nephews. Son reached age of 25. Held that he took a life interest in the property with remainder over to his issue and with limitation over by way of executory devise in case he died without issue. Webel v. Kelly, 97 N. Y. S. 1009.

67. Thus disinheriting the heir at law. Adams v. Massey [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 916. Gift of realty and personalty to wife for life, held not converted into fee by subsequent clause over, though in terms made upon the marriage of the donee of the preceding estate, is limited on a life estate and is to be extended by implication so as to take effect on the determination of that estate by death.[68] Technical words, when used, will be given their technical meaning if no contrary intent be apparent.[69]

It is the general policy of the law to adopt such a construction as will give a fee,[70] or the largest possible estate,[71] in the first taker, so as not to tie up prop-giving her "any other property not herein otherwise disposed of that may be in my possession at the time of my decease," to liquidate his debts, the balance, if any, to be at her sole disposal, where only small provision was made for testator's invalid daughter. Id.

68. Trenton Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Armstrong [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 456. Will providing that, on death of widow, estate should go to three unmarried daughters "so long as they remain unmarried" and "in case they all marrying," then over, held to create an estate for life in daughters, subject to an earlier termination on the marriage of all of them, with remainders which vested on testator's death, and took effect in possession on determination of preceding estate, either by death or marriage of daughters. Id.

69. Estates tail: Devise in trust for use of daughter "and the heirs of her body" held to give her an estate tail, converted into a fee by the statute. Watkins v. Pfeiffer [Ky.] 92 S. W. 562. Fact that will further provided that in case she died without "children" estate should go to others held to show that words "heirs of her body" were not intended as words of limitation, the word "children" being used in sense of "issue," or "heirs of the body." Id. A limitation over to take effect on the failure of issue within a given time, will not give rise to an estate tail by implication in the first taker. Beckley v. Riegert, 212 Pa. 91, 61 A. 641.

Rule in Shelley's Case: Where an estate of freehold is given to one and in the same gift of conveyance an estate is limited either mediately or immediately to his heirs, either in fee or in tail, the word "heirs" is a word of limitation of the estate and not of purchase, and the first taker is entitled to the estate or interest imported by the limitation. Johnson v. Buck [Ill.] 77 N. E. 163. Devise to one "for life, and after his decease to his heirs (lawful) forever," gives first taker a fee simple under the rule. Pitchford v. Limer, 139 N. C. 13, 51 S. E. 789. Gift of personalty in trust for one to be paid at age 40 or on his dying before "it shall go to his heirs," held not within rule. Bennett v. Bennett, 217 Ill. 434, 75 N. E. 339. Gift over to "heirs" of personalty held not within rule where no present legal estate given ancestor. Id. Where will gave estate to testator's daughters and his grandson "and their heirs, share and share alike," held that the gift to the grandson was not within the rule, so as to render void a subsequent provision that his share should be held in trust and a limitation over by way of executory devise, since will did not purport to limit a remainder to his heirs, but conferred the estate immediately upon him. Johnson v. Buck [Ill.] 77 N. E. 163. If remaindermen take as purchasers under the testator, the particular estate is limited by the literal words of the will and the rule has no application, but if the remaindermen take as heirs to the donee of the particular estate, the first donee takes the fee, whatever words may be used to describe the estate given to him. In re Belcher's Estate [Pa.] 61 A. 252. Rule does not apply where testator gives life estates in severalty with no limitation over in fee to the heirs of any one of them, but with a contingent remainder in fee to such issue of the life tenants collectively as shall be living at the death of the last life tenant. Id. Rule does not apply where one of the estates sought to be carried out is equitable and the other is legal. Slater v. Rudderforth, 25 App. D. C. 497. Devise in trust until beneficiary reaches age of 16, when she is to have, hold, and enjoy property, and to take rents and profits for life, with remainder in fee to her lawful issue, held to give her life estate only. Id. Such a trust for a married woman is active and not passive, and hence she does not take legal title. Id. Does not apply where trust is created for benefit of life tenant and legal title is given to heirs in remainder. In re West's Estate [Pa.] 63 A. 407.

In Illinois the rule is one of property, and where it applies the expressed intention of the testator to the contrary can have no effect. Rissman v. Wierth [Ill.] 77 N. E. 108. Will gave residue of estate to wife "to hold and to have to her, my said wife, and to her heirs and assigns forever," but provided that if she remarried half of the estate should be sold and divided among named legatees. It was further provided that if wife should remain widow she was to have whole estate for her own support until her death, and, after her death the residue was to go to the same legatees. Held that the widow took the fee, and that on her death the property passed to her heirs. Rissman v. Wierth [Ill.] 77 N. E. 108.

70. Particularly in view of Rev. St. 1903, c. 30, § 13, providing that every estate in lands devised shall be deemed a fee simple estate of inheritance, if a less estate be not limited by express words, or do not appear to have been devised by construction or operation of law. Strawbridge v. Strawbridge [Ill.] 77 N. E. 78.

71. Illinois statute gives largest possible estate. Boehm v. Baldwin [Ill.] 77 N. E. 454. Testator gave land to his son "and his children provided he should have children by his wife" and then provided that if son and his wife should have no children and he should die before his wife she should have one-third of the proceeds of the land so long as she remained unmarried. There was no limitation over on failure of issue. Held that son took life estate though he had no children. Id. Rule in Wild's case under which son would have taken an estate tail, since he had no

erty and suspend the power of alienation.[72] Provisions which standing alone would pass an absolute estate may be so restricted and limited by subsequent clauses as to pass a life estate only, or to impose conditions by which the estate may be entirely defeated upon certain contingencies,[73] provided the intent to do so appears in as clear and unmistakable language as that which expresses the absolute gift.[74]

Where the will creates a fee simple with absolute power of disposition, a remainder over,[75] or a condition in restraint of alienation, is void for repugnancy,[76] children at testator's death, held inapplicable as being in conflict with statute. Id.

72. A restriction of alienation on the grant of a fee, being against the general rule of law, must be strictly construed. Devise of realty to daughter with provision that no part thereof should be sold until latter's death, but that it should be rented, etc., held not a restriction on the daughter's right to sell, but only a direction to the executors. Sanders v. Mamolen [Pa.] 62 A. 981. Testatrix devised part of her realty to her daughter with provision that no part thereof should be sold until after daughter's death, but that it was to be leased and the rents divided between her and another beneficiary. By codicil she provided that, if it should become necessary to sell realty prior to or after her death, daughter should be entitled to her portion annually until death of her husband, after which she was to receive the full amount of her share. Held that will was not intended to restrict daughter's power to sell, and that codicil gave power of sale with absolute right in daughter, after her husband's death, to receive the proceeds. Id.

73. Wheeler v. Long [Iowa] 105 N. W. 161. A devise of the fee may be restricted by subsequent words in the will and changed to an estate for life. Hill v. Gianelli [Ill.] 77 N. E. 468.

Illustrations: Devise of realty to one provided that after his death it should revert to testatrix's heirs at law, held to give first taker a life estate with remainder in fee to testatrix's heirs. Hill v. Gianelli [Ill.] 77 N. E. 458. Testatrix gave her entire estate to her daughter in general terms, but by subsequent paragraphs provided that if she should die before reaching the age of 18 the property should go to others, and that if she married before reaching that age, she should become entitled to "full control" of such property. Held that added clauses did not cut down fee to life estate, but merely prescribed valid condition that until devisee arrived at such age or sooner married her estate was determinable by her death. Wheeler v. Long [Iowa] 105 N. W. 161. The clearly expressed intention of testator to create an absolute estate determinable by death of the devisee until she arrives at a certain age or marries, will be enforced. Id.

74. Mull v. Masten, 98 N. Y. S. 746; Illensworth v. Illensworth, 109 App. Div. 399, 97 N. Y. S. 44. An estate conveyed or interest created in one clause of the will cannot be cut down or taken away by raising a doubt from other clauses, but only by express words or by clear and undoubted implication. Montgomery v. Brown, 25 App. D. C. 490; Pitts v. Milton [Mass.] 77 N. E. 1028. Intention to cut it down must clearly appear. Richards v. Bentz, 212 Pa. 93, 61 A. 613; Hogg's Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 428; McDaniels v. Hays, 6 Ohio C. C. [N. S.] 257; Strawbridge v. Strawbridge [Ill.] 77 N. E. 78.

Estate held cut down by subsequent provisions: Absolute gift held cut down to beneficial interest for life, in so far as personalty was concerned, by subsequent direction that property was to be invested by executors for benefit of brother during his life and his wife and issue after his death. Illensworth v. Illensworth, 110 App. Div. 399, 97 N. Y. S. 44.

Estate held not cut down: Will gave realty to wife for life, with power to mortgage under certain circumstances, and by the next paragraph, without any limitation or qualifying clause, bequeathed to her his life insurance and all other property not otherwise disposed of. Two specific legacies were then given, after which it was provided that at the death of the widow all testator's property, real, personal, and mixed, should revert to brother and his heirs forever. Held that widow took life insurance absolutely. Montgomery v. Brown, 25 App. D. C. 490. Where will gave estate to wife "for the purpose of maintaining herself and our children, to her and her heirs forever," held that wife took a fee, and that no trust was created in favor of the children. Pitts v. Milton [Mass.] 77 N. E. 1028. Testator gave residue to son, his heirs and assigns, "except that in the event of his death without heirs by his present wife" she was to have use of it for life or so long as she remained his widow, and on her death or remarriage property was to go to others. Son's wife predeceased him and they never had any children. Held that son took a fee. Null v. Masten, 98 N. Y. S. 746.

75. Steiff v. Seibert [Iowa] 105 N. W. 328. A fee simple given in the first portion of a devise, with absolute power of disposition, cannot be limited or cut down by subsequent clauses and provisions of the will. Carson v. Carson [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 175. Devise over if property is not disposed of is void. Irvine v. Putnam [Ky.] 89 S. W. 520. Where absolute power of disposal is given in express and unequivocal terms, or clearly and unmistakably implied to the first taker. Montgomery v. Brown, 26 App. D. C. 490. If the first devisee has the absolute right to dispose of the property in his own unlimited discretion, and not a mere power of appointment among certain specified persons or classes. Newlin v. Phillips [Del.] 60 A. 1068. The power of disposition which will defeat an executory devise must, however, be a power given by the will itself, and not one attaching as a legal incident to the estate given by the will. Carson v. Carson [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 175. An absolute devise followed by the provision "and at his death I direct that after his funeral expenses and just debts are paid the remainder of said tract to go," to others, held not to give such an absolute power of disposition as to defeat the devise over, but devisee took only a life estate. Id. If upon consideration of the whole will, it appears that it was not the intention of the testator to give the first taker such a right, such a construction will, if possible, be adopted as will harmonize the apparently repugnant provisions, and for this purpose the court may restrict or decrease the prior devise if necessary. Newlin v. Phillips [Del.] 60 A. 1068. Will held not to give wife a fee in the realty or the absolute ownership of the personalty, though the language used in the first paragraph was sufficiently broad to do so, there being no express power of disposal and the implied one being limited to what might be necessary upon emergency, and that the limitations over on the wife's death were valid. Id. Where testatrix gave all her residuary estate absolutely to her infant daughter, provided, however, that if she should "die before attaining the age of 21 years, or without disposing of the same or all of it, or without having made a last will" then over, held that power of disposal would not avoid gift over if first contingency, viz., death of the infant during minority, should happen, there being an intent disclosed, when taking into consideration the infant's inability to make a will or dispose of her property during minority, to make only the first contingency applicable to period of minority, and the others to infant's life after coming of age. In re Polley's Estate [N. J. Prerog.] 62 A. 553. Word "or" cannot be construed to mean "and" so as to make the contingencies coterminous. Id. Provision giving trustees of two minor legatees power to dispose of the realty only in case "it is absolutely necessary or unquestionably advisable," held not to nullify executory devise to survivor of the minors dependent on the death of the other before majority on ground of repugnancy. O'Day v. O'Day [Mo.] 91 S. W. 921. Where power of disposal is conditioned, as for the support of the first taker, it will not enlarge his estate, given in general terms, into a fee, or render limitation over of what remains invalid. Newlin v. Phillips [Del.] 60 A. 1068.

but a provision creating a trust for its management and control for a limited period,[77] or a limitation over by way of an executory devise upon the happening of a specified contingency, is valid.[78] A devise with a gift over on certain contingencies is frequently held to give a defeasible fee to the first taker.[79]

Provisions void for repugnancy: Devise to children and their heirs forever, with devise over "should my heirs and their heirs cease to exist, and the time ever come when there was no lineal descendant," held void as an attempt to create a conditional fee or an estate in fee tail, so that children took an absolute fee. Merrill v. American Baptist Missionary Union [N. H.] 62 A. 647. Gift of money for life, remainder over of "what may be left," is absolute gift, remainder over being void. Martin v. Foskett [Mass.] 75 N. E. 709. Where will gave property to wife "to be hers absolutely," further provision "that if at her death any of the said property be still hers, then the residue still hers shall go to my, not her, nearest heirs." Moran v. Moran [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 1010, 106 N. W. 206.

76. The rule that where an estate has vested a condition in general restraint of alienation, or entirely repugnant to its nature, will be declared void, has no application where the condition in restraint of alienation is a condition precedent. Pitchford v. Limer, 139 N. C. 13, 51 S. E. 789.

77. Will gave fee to grandson with provision that it should vest in testator's three daughters or the survivor or survivors of them in trust for him until he reached the age of 25. Held that trust was valid, the fee vested in the grandson not being cut down or limited except so far as necessary to the creation of the trust for its management and control for a limited period. Johnson v. Buck [Ill.] 77 N. E. 163.

78. Where, after an absolute gift in fee, there is a subsequent limitation over upon the happening of a contingency, the two are not repugnant, and the gift over is valid. Provision that, "in case of the death of" any of the residuary legatees, property should be divided among survivors, held to vest property in legatees on testator's death subject to limitation over to survivors in case of death of any of them before period of distribution. In re Wiley, 97 N. Y. S. 1017.

79. Where will directed that on death of life beneficiary his share of the corpus should go to such persons as he might appoint, and in default of appointment to testator's heirs, held that the title vested in the heirs subject to be divested by a valid appointment, and remained in them if there was no appointment or no legal authority to make one. In re Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315. Testator devised realty to his wife "free from all charge or limitation, to her own proper use, benefit, and behoof," and then provided that in the event that he and his wife should die without children, he devised the property to F. in fee simple, such devise, however, in no way to limit his wife's interest. He further provided that, in case F. died before his wife, leaving no children, "then this devise shall revert and become a part and parcel of my general estate, subject to any disposition that my wife may make of the same." Held that widow took a fee simple determinable upon her death without issue, in which event F., if living, or her children, if she had previously died leaving children, would take a fee simple. Tyler v. Theilig [Ga.] 52 S. E. 606. In case of death of F. without issue prior to widow's death, property would revert to testator's general estate, subject to control of widow, and to her disposition by deed or will. Id. Devise to daughter with provision that if she shall die without issue living at her death it shall go to brothers and sisters held to give her defeasible fee, subject to be divested on her dying without issue. Hartring's Ex'x v. Milward's Ex'r [Ky.] 90 S. W. 260. Where will gave a share of the estate to niece, with a

In the case of personalty, the use of technical words of limitation of realty may signify a corresponding estate in the personalty, especially if the two are blended in one fund, but this is not necessarily the case.[80]

"Interest" and "income."[81]—The "dividends, issues, and profits" of securities means practically "income or earnings."[82] A gift of the interest on a certain sum is a gift of the annual income by way of interest on that sum.[83] Income embraces only the net profits after deducting all necessary expenses and charges.[84]

Interest or income does not include an increase in the value of the property itself,[85] or distribution of assets by corporations in liquidation.[86] Amounts drawn provision that "if she should die without child" her portion should go to another, held that she took a defeasible fee, subject to be defeated in the event she should die without issue. Powell's Ex'r v. Crosby [Ky.] 89 S. W. 721. Where testator gave fee to his children, subject to a leasehold for a definite term of years, the share of any child dying without issue during such term to go to the survivors, but in case such child left issue his share to go to them, held that fee vested in children and grandchildren upon testator's death, burdened with leasehold estate, and subject to executory devises in favor of the survivors contingent upon the death of any of them during the continuance of the term without issue surviving, and upon the death of one of such children during such term leaving issue her estate in fee became absolute and passed to her issue. Yoesel v. Rieger [Neb.] 106 N. W. 428. Where will devised realty to widow for life with remainder to stepson in fee, with a provision that, if latter should die without issue, property should go to testator's brothers and sisters, held that stepson acquired a vested estate in fee, subject to be divested upon his death without issue. Dilts v. Clayhaunce [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 672. Testator gave each of his three daughters a certain sum per month for ten years, at the end of which time his residuary estate was to be equally distributed among them. In case any daughter died prior to such distribution her issue was given her share, and in case any one of them died without issue her share was to go to daughters surviving at time of distribution. Held that each daughter took a base or qualified fee in one-third of the estate, subject to be defeated by her death prior to the time fixed for distribution. In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879. Devise to wife and son to be held for herself and in trust for son, provided that if wife married again, the whole should go to the son in fee and the trust should terminate, held to give wife a defeasible fee simple in half the property, becoming absolute fee on her death without marrying again. Rohrbach v. Sanders [Pa.] 62 A. 27. Where an estate is given to one "for her benefit forever" and if she die before or after attaining the age of 21 without issue, then over, and circumstances show that the testator contemplated that the devise might take effect before the devisee attained majority, the devisee takes an estate defeasible on her death without issue at any period of her life. Daniels' Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 358.

80. The blending of real and personal estate in a testamentary disposition may in the absence of inconsistent provision indicate an intention to give the same interest in both and hence when the language employed is such as to create a fee in the realty the testator intends to make the gift of the personalty absolute. Long v. Hill, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 606. But even terms expressing an absolute gift of the personalty will not create a fee in the realty when it appears that the intention of the testator is to give a less estate. Testator stated that he intended to dispose of his whole estate and gave his wife all his estate, real, personal and mixed, to be hers so long as she remained a widow. Executors were given power of sale. There was no residuary clause. Held the widow did not take a fee to the realty. Id.

82. In re Stevens, 98 N. Y. S. 28, afg. 46 Misc. 623, 95 N. Y. S. 297. On dissolution of company the stock of which was given in trust to pay over the "dividends, issues, and profits" thereof, held that value of plant, equipment and materials, and its good will, patents, patent rights, licenses, trade-marks, rights, privileges, franchises, necessary working capital and betterments were to be regarded as principal as between beneficiary of trust and remaindermen. Id.

83. Bequest of the interest on a certain sum is a gift of the annual income by way of interest on that sum, and cannot be regarded as an annuity in an amount equal to the interest on such sum at the rate earned by testator's estate at the time of his death. Conklin v. Clark, 48 Misc. 432, 96 N. Y. S. 914. Gift of interest on a specified sum to one for life, the principal to go to her children on her death, is not an annuity. Bank of Niagara v. Talbot, 96 N. Y. S. 976.

84. Differs from an annuity in that the latter is a fixed amount to be paid absolutely and without contingency. Peck v. Kinney [C. C. A.] 143 F. 76. "Net income" held to include increment in value of nonproductive property investments. Billings v. Warren, 216 Ill. 281, 74 N. E. 1050.

85. In re Stevens, 98 N. Y. S. 28, afg. 46 Misc. 623, 95 N. Y. S. 297. On dissolution of corporation invested surplus, surplus cash capital, and accumulated surplus earnings held to constitute "dividends, issues, and profits" of stock as between life beneficiary of trust and remaindermen. Id. In the absence of an expressed intention to the contrary, the increase from natural causes in the value of the corpus held by a trustee is principal and not interest. Devenney v. Devenney [Ohio] 77 N. E. 688. Where will gave son the income on $1,000 for life and provided that such $1,000 should be paid to son on his executing security to the executor for its return to him on son's death, and such executor invested such sum in bonds in conformity with the provisions of the will, held that premium accruing on bonds did not be-from principal by trustees for the support of the beneficiaries pursuant to a discretionary power conferred by the will are to be treated as income.[87] Property purchased with income goes with it.[88] A division of the profits of a business should include a part of them used in enlarging the plant.[89]

Whether a legatee of income is entitled to any part of the corpus from which it is derived,[90] and the length of time during which payments are to be made,[91] are questions of intention. One who has the right to use the principal as he may need it is the sole judge of such necessity.[92] One to whom the income of a designated portion of the estate is given for life is entitled to all income accruing thereon from and after the death of the testator, in the absence of anything showing a contrary intent.[93] long to son, and executor would not be required to deliver bonds to him on his executing security for return of $1,000. Id.

86. As between the remainderman and the life tenant. Bulkeley v. Worthington Ecclesiastical Soc. [Conn.] 63 A. 351.

87. Where trustees were authorized to draw on principal in their discretion in case income was insufficient to support beneficiaries, held that amounts so appropriated should be treated as income, and that neither the recipients nor their representatives could be held accountable therefor. Sterling v. Ives [Conn.] 62 A. 948.

88. Will provided that, at death of trustee, all the property then remaining should go to testatrix's children then living, but if any of them should then be dead, the child or children of such a deceased child should take the share to which its parent would have been entitled if living, and further provided that in the final division of the property each child should be accountable for any portion of the estate previously set off to him by the trustee at any time after his majority in pursuance of powers previously granted the trustee. The will previously provided that the property was to be used and managed during trustee's lifetime for the benefit of testatrix's children. Held that a child of one of the children had no interest, contingent or otherwise, in a lot purchased by the trustee out of the income of the estate. Clisby v. Clisby [Ala.] 40 So. 344.

89. Testator directed that his business should be carried on for five years, and that so much of the net profits as could be spared without injury to the business should be divided yearly among his children, and when estate was closed up that capital should be distributed among them, his daughters' shares to be held in trust with remainder to their children. Held that total profits were to be divided as such among the children, though a part of them were used in enlarging the plant, thereby increasing the amount for which it was subsequently sold. In re Weschler's Estate, 212 Pa. 508, 61 A. 1091.

90. Where testator gave residue of estate to trustees to pay part of income to children for support of families with remainder over to grandchildren and authorized trustees, in case income should be insufficient, to appropriate so much of the principal of the estate or of a certain fund bequeathed to charity as might be necessary for that purpose, held that upon the death of one of such children neither the income nor the principal of his share could be reduced by appropriations in favor of the families of the other beneficiaries. Sterling v. Ives [Conn.] 62 A. 948. Where it is apparent from the terms of a bequest that a testator intended to bestow upon a legatee only an income, such legatee does not take the corpus from which the income is derived. Potter v. Mortimer, 114 Ill. App. 422. Testatrix gave certain shares of stock in trust to receive quarterly dividends thereon and to pay over to her son "so much thereof as shall be necessary in the judgment of" the trustee for his support. Held that income alone could be used for that purpose. In re Van Decar, 49 Misc. 39, 98 N. Y. S. 309. Where testatrix gave property in trust to pay income to husband for life or until remarriage and "in trust for all my children who shall attain the age of 25 years," etc., in equal shares, held that she intended to give children an interest in the principal. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. Where testator gave property to his wife to be invested, she to have income and right to use principal as she might need it, and if at her death she should not have used up the principal, gave what remained to others, held that she took more than a life estate, and could use principal as necessity required. In re Trelease, 96 N. Y. S. 318.

91. Where testator bequeathed property in trust to pay certain portions of income to widow and for support of his children and their families, created a spendthrift trust for the benefit of the legatees, and authorized additions to income from principal if necessary to the support of the wife and children and their families, held that the provisions thus made for the family of any particular beneficiary became inoperative on the death of such beneficiary, the family intended being that of which he was and remained the head. Sterling v. Ives [Conn.] 62 A. 948.

92. In re Trelease, 96 N. Y. S. 318.

93. Until sum is set apart in accordance with provisions of will legatee is entitled to proportionate amount which income of amount specified bears to income of the entire estate. Bank of Niagara v. Talbot, 96 N. Y. S. 976. Where the estate is sufficient for the payment of debts and other charges, and

Legacies.[94]—A general legacy is one payable out of the general assets of testator's estate.[95] A specific legacy is a gift of a specified part of testator's personalty, distinguished from all others of the same kind.[96] A demonstrative legacy is a gift of a certain sum of money, stock, or the like, payable out of a particular fund or security, but differing from a specific legacy in that if the fund pointed out fails, resort may be had to the general assets of the estate.[97]

An annuity is a grant of a stated sum of money payable at the expiration of fixed consecutive periods, for a definite term or for life.[98] Whether a deficiency for one year in an annuity charged upon the net income of a fund can be made up from the income of subsequent years depends upon whether it is charged upon such income generally or upon income de anno in annum,[99] which is a question of intention.[1] The fact that the annuity is given to testator's wife in lieu of dower does not change the rule.[2] A gift of an annuity to a corporation without limitation or qualification as to its duration is, in the absence of anything to show a contrary intention, to be understood as a gift to it so long as it exists and fulfills the purposes designed by its charter.[3] Whether an annuity is to be charged on the corpus of the estate, or on the income only, is a question of intention.[4]

Advancements.[5]—In the absence of statute the law of advancements does not apply unless the ancestor dies wholly intestate.[6] is so invested as to be productive of income from the death of testator. Conklin v. Clark, 48 Misc. 432, 96 N. Y. S. 914. Four per cent held reasonable rate to be paid from time of decedent's death, where executor failed to immediately invest principal, though estate was so invested by testator as to be drawing six per cent at time of his death. Id. A gift of income after testator's debts are paid and discharged does not, under such circumstances, authorize the withholding of all payments thereof until the last of testator's debts has been liquidated. Id.

95. White v. White [S. C.] 53 S. E. 371.

96. May be satisfied only out of the particular thing. White v. White [S. C.] 53 S. E. 371. Legacies will not be declared to be specific unless the language of the will clearly shows that such was testator's intention. Id. Legacy of a sum sufficient to produce an annuity of $50 is not specific. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998. Where will directed that shares of stock "should pass to and vest in my said children equally, share and share alike," held there was a specific bequest thereof, and the other personalty being sufficient to pay testator's debts, the title to the stock vested in the legatees so that guardian of infant legatees had power to sell shares bequeathed to them. Cabble v. Cabble, 97 N. Y. S. 773.

97. White v. White [S. C.] 53 S. E. 371. Where will directed executors to collect insurance policies "and from this said amount" to pay certain legacies, held that legacies were demonstrative. Id. In order to constitute a demonstrative legacy there must be a bequest in the nature of a general legacy which must point to a fund out of which payment is to be made. Bequest to daughter payable out of life insurance held not such a legacy where policy was, by its terms, payable to wife and daughters, since no fund existed as the property of testator. In re Tinney's Estate, 99 N. Y. S. 159.

98. See, also, Annuities, 5 C. L. 121. Differs from income in that the latter embraces only the net profits after deducting all necessary expenses and charges, while an annuity is a fixed amount to be paid absolutely and without contingency. Peck v. Kinney [C. C. A.] 143 F. 76. Essential element is the certainty of the amount to be paid periodically at a certain rate per annum or in a certain aggregate annual amount, and it is immaterial that the periods for the payment may be distributed through the year. Id. It is not necessary that it should be for the life of the individual beneficiary, but it may be fixed at a shorter period by words of limitation in the grant. Id. Provision that trustees should pay "from time to time as often as once in six months" from the trust estate, including accumulations of income as well as the corpus of the estate, at the rate of a specified sum per year, to widow and children or their descendants per stirpes, with provision for payment to survivors in case of death of child without issue, held to create annuity. Id.

99. If the former it may be, but otherwise not. Comstock v. Comstock [Conn.] 63 A. 449.

1. Where testator gave wife annuity to be paid at least semi-annually from the net annual income of a trust fund, and then appropriated to specific objects the whole of each year's excess income, held that annuity was not charged on net income generally, and that deficiencies could not be made up. Comstock v. Comstock [Conn.] 63 A. 449.

2. Comstock v. Comstock [Conn.] 63 A. 449.

3. Fact that it may continue perpetually is immaterial, where gift is for charitable purposes. Merrill v. American Baptist Missionary Union [N. H.] 62 A. 647.

4. Annuities held charged upon income and not upon the corpus. Merrill v. American Baptist Missionary Union [N. H.] 62 A. 647.

Support.[7]—Whether the trustee is to pay over the income directly to the persons for whose support a trust is created, or is to personally use and apply it for their benefit,[8] and the time when the support is to commence, are questions of intention.[9] The separate income of a beneficiary is not to be taken into consideration in determining how much of the income is necessary for his support.[10] Where property is given to one in trust for the maintenance of himself and his minor children, the court will not, except in case of absolute necessity, make a fixed division of the fund between the beneficiaries to stand during the trusteeship,[11] nor can the trustee's creditors reach his share until he becomes the sole claimant under the terms of the will.[12] A provision for maintenance requires more than the mere furnishing of food and clothing.[13]

Release of debts.[14]—The appointment of a debtor as executor does not release the debt unless a contrary intention is expressed in the will.[15] Testator may direct the deduction of debts owed him by a beneficiary, whether barred by limitations or not.[16]

5. See Estates of Decedents, 5 C. L. 1183.

6. Testator is conclusively presumed to have considered the advancements and the bequests made in the will collectively, and to have made distribution as he intended to make it. Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193. Under statute providing for bringing advancements into hotchpot when given by an "intestate" to his heir, no property so given can be taken into account in the distribution of an estate where the ancestor leaves a will, though he may not have disposed of all his property thereby. Id.

7. See 4 C. L. 1920.

8. Where a testator directed that his executor sell his estate, invest the proceeds and pay the income to his son for the purpose of keeping up the property and to support his children, or if the executor so elect to use the money for that purpose himself, or divide it among the son and his children, one of such children has no standing to compel her father as trustee to pay to her a proportionate share of money paid him by the executor. No such intention disclosed by the will. Smith's Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 494.

9. Where will required executors and residuary legatees to "provide comfortable support" for his mother-in-law during her life, held that, in view of her advanced age, impoverished condition and helplessness, the manifest intention was that support was to begin immediately upon testator's death. Owens v. Waddell [Miss.] 39 So. 459.

10. Where a bequest in trust is made for a lunatic, the income or so much thereof as is necessary to be used for her support, remainder over, the committee of the lunatic is entitled to the entire income though the lunatic had a separate income from her individual estate. Minnich v. People's Trust, Savings & Deposit Co., 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 334.

11. In such case the court will not construe the will merely or chiefly with reference to the relation existing between the husband and his creditors in order to assist the latter, but its first concern will be to carry out testatrix's intention with reference to the other beneficiaries, and it will give its aid to the creditors only as a secondary consideration and only when it can be seen that such aid can be given without injury to such other beneficiaries. Linn v. Downing, 116 Ill. App. 454, afd. 216 Ill. 64, 74 N. E. 729. Provision giving certain allowance in trust to husband for maintenance of himself and the children held to be mandatory and to require him to apply same to use of children in such a manner as might be necessary, his discretion as to amount to be used and manner of use not being an arbitrary one, and that his interest could not be severed so as to render it subject to his debts. Id.

12. Though a support in a fixed sum be given to a husband for the lives of him and others jointly, his creditors cannot reach it even if in lieu of curtesy till the others predecease him and leave him sole claimant. Linn v. Downing, 216 Ill. 64, 74 N. E. 729, afg. 116 Ill. App. 454.

14. See 4 C. L. 1920.

15. No such intention can be deemed to appear where the debt did not exist at the date of the execution of the will. Phillips v. Duckett, 112 Ill. App. 587.

16. Where will provided that all notes and obligations held by testator at time of his death on which beneficiary should be liable should be appraised at full amount due thereon, whether barred by limitations or not, and recited that it was testator's intention that no beneficiary should obtain any benefit by reason of any advancement made or assistance rendered him by testator before his death, held that amount due on notes given to testator by beneficiary who went through bankruptcy before testator's death should be charged against his share. Stephenson v. Norris [Wis.] 107 N. W. 343. Testatrix devised land to daughter with remainder to her children but provided that, in case certain notes given to her by her daughter were not paid within a year, executors should sell the premises and pay the notes, whether barred by limitations or not, loan balance of proceeds, and pay interest to daughter for life with remainder to children. Notes were not paid within a year, but daughter was discharged in bankruptcy. Held that discharge did not constitute payment of notes nor bar executor's right to

Cumulative legacies.[17]—Separate devises or bequests to the same persons will be deemed cumulative, unless a contrary intention appears.[18]

Vesting.[19]—The law favors the early vesting of estates,[20] hence the interest will, if possible, be deemed vested in the first instance,[21] or at the earliest possible moment,[22] and remainders will be held vested rather than contingent,[23] unless the language of the will clearly shows a different intention.[24] sell the property under the will. In re Fussell's Estate [Iowa] 105 N. W. 503.

18. Where in one paragraph testator gave son $1,000 if living "or if dead to go to his wife or widow, E. S.," and next paragraph read "$800 to E. S., $100 to her son F., $100 to her daughter M.," held that the will should be construed as giving E. S. an absolute legacy of $800 in addition to contingent one given by first paragraph, in view of surrounding circumstances. Gordon v. Smith [Md.] 63 A. 479. Advances to be made to wife by trustee for benefit of wife and sons during first year and a half after testator's death held to be in addition to separate provisions made for wife and sons during settlement of estate. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston, 47 Misc. 693, 98 N. Y. S. 1055. Gifts of royalties and proceeds of certain lands to charities held not cumulative on previous bequests to them, but merely directory of the method of paying such previous legacies. In re Handley's Estate, 212 Pa. 11, 61 A. 350. Legacies given to the same person by a will and a codicil will be regarded as cumulative. In re Sigel's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 175. Separate devises, unless an express purpose to the contrary appears. Where will gave wife use of upper story of house for life, and codicil gave her whatever share of the estate she would be entitled to by law if testator had died intestate, held that devises were cumulative. Westgate v. Farris [Mass.] 76 N. E. 223.

19. See 4 C. L. 1920.

20. Sterling v. Ives [Conn.] 62 A. 948. Will be held vested when it can fairly be done without doing violence to the language of the will. Roberts v. Roberts [Md.] 62 A. 161.

21. Vesting at testator's death is favored when there is any doubt. Nelson v. Nelson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 679. To make estates contingent, must be plain expression to that effect, or such intent must be so plainly inferable from the terms used as to leave no room for construction. Roberts v. Roberts [Md.] 62 A. 161. Presumption is that testator intended that his dispositions should take effect in enjoyment and interest at his death, and gifts will be regarded as vested at that time unless language of will by a fair construction makes them contingent. Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. S. 265. Estates are to be regarded as vesting immediately on testator's death unless there is a clearly manifested intention to make them contingent upon a future event. Crapo v. Price [Mass.] 76 N. E. 1043.

22. Campbell v. Bradford [Ind.] 77 N. E. 849. Testator gave life estates in realty to his daughters with remainder to their children or issue, and provided that trustees should convey to the children or descendants of any child of his at her death the share of such deceased child of his. Held that on death of one of testator's daughters her share vested immediately in her child, without conveyance by trustees, so as to entitle child's husband to curtesy therein. Potts v. Shirley [Ky.] 90 S. W. 590. To be paid to son "if he survive me" otherwise over vests at once in son surviving. Alexander v. McPeck [Mass.] 75 N. E. 88. Testator bequeathed estate to wife for life and directed that after his death it should, without sale or appraisement, pass into the hands of his children, or such as should remain on the property for 25 years, unless they elected to divide it sooner, and that, at the expiration of 25 years, or at the time they elected to divide, the estate should be equally divided among all his children. Held that children took an ultimate fee simple in the property in remainder after the death of their mother, and that their interests were liable for their debts. Scott v. Patterson's Adm'r [Va.] 51 S. E. 848. Where an estate is given to a life tenant with remainder to the latter's children, it vests at once upon the birth of each child, subject to open and let in afterborn children, and this without regard to whether or not a child survives the life tenant. In re Wetherill's Estate [Pa.] 63 A. 406. Where testator gave estate to a friend for life, and after her death a certain sum to her niece for life, and on the latter's death "to her children, if she have any, and, if not, to her natural heirs," held that estates in remainder vested in niece's children when they were born, and where niece died before first life tenant, having had two sons, one of whom survived her, the administrator of the deceased son was entitled to half the estate in remainder. Id. Word "have" held not used in sense of "leave" so as to make remainders contingent. Id. Will created trust for benefit of three children and provided that on death of any of them his share of the income was to be paid "in like manner equally to or for the benefit of such surviving issue" until they arrived at the age of 21 respectively, and as they respectively attained that age gave to them respectively in equal portions the share of the principal set off for the use of their parent. It was further provided that, in case either of testator's sons died leaving a widow, one third of the income given to her husband should be paid to her for life, and that, upon her death leaving issue, such third part of income and principal "to go for the benefit of such issue in the same manner as the other two-thirds." Held that, on death of one of testator's children leaving a widow and children, his share of the income was payable to his widow and surviving issue until such issue respectively became of age (Sterling v. Ives [Conn.] 62 A. 948), and that each of such issue took a vested estate in his proportional share of

Words of contingency are so referred in time as to favor vesting,[25] and may be so read that remainders will accelerate.[26] The words "upon," "until," "after," "when,"[27] "surviving,"[28] and the like, do or do not postpone vesting according to two-thirds of one-third of the principal of the trust fund (Id.). The phrase "in the same manner" held to designate the mode in which the recipients should be benefitted, and not to describe who such recipients were. Did not operate to send either income or principal to those in whose favor estates in other two thirds had already been created, but the recipients intended were the issue living at the widow's decease. Id.

23. Deemed vested on the death of the testator unless it plainly appears that he intended them to be contingent upon a future event. Minot v. Purrington [Mass.] 77 N. E. 630; Haviland v. Haviland [Iowa] 105 N. W. 354. Remainder is never to be considered contingent if it can be construed as vested consistently with testator's intention. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 198, 96 N. Y. S. 681. Not in any case where it may be fairly construed as vested. Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. S. 265. The law presumes that words postponing the estate relate to the beginning of the enjoyment of the remainder and not to the vesting of that estate. Campbell v. Bradford [Ind.] 77 N. E. 849. Law favors such a construction as will avoid the disinheritance of remaindermen who die before the determination of the precedent estate. Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. S. 265.

24. Vesting will not be helped out by rejecting harmonious parts of the will. Reid v. Voorhees, 216 Ill. 236, 74 N. E. 804. Though law favors vesting of estates, where it is clear from reading of entire will that testator intended to postpone vesting until period of distribution, that intention will be carried out. Starr v. Willoughby, 218 Ill. 485, 75 N. E. 1029. Rule does not apply when such construction will defeat the intention of the testator as expressed in the will. Stoors v. Burgess [Me.] 62 A. 730. When the language used by testator is doubtful the court inclines to that construction which will make the remainders vested rather than contingent, but this rule will not be allowed to interfere with rule requiring court to ascertain and effectuate testator's intention, and remainders will be held contingent when it appears from whole will that testator so intended. Freeman v. Freeman [N. C.] 53 S. E. 620. Rule favoring vesting of estates is never applied when whole will shows a contrary intention. Richards v. Hartshorne, 110 App. Div. 650, 97 N. Y. S. 754.

25. See Particular words and forms of expression, ante, this section.

26. Since the remainder is only postponed in order to let in the life tenant, it takes effect immediately when the life estate is determined by a revocation, or by death, or by the renunciation of the widow, or by any other circumstance which puts the life estate out of the way. Cummings v. Hamilton [Ill.] 77 N. E. 264. Remainder not accelerated by life tenant conveying his interest to remaindermen. Id.

27. The words "on," "when," "after," and other like expressions, used in a devise of a remainder following a life estate, do not afford sufficient ground in themselves for adjudging a remainder contingent, but, unless their meaning is enlarged by the context, will be held to relate merely to the time of enjoyment and not to the time of vesting. Devise to wife for life, "and on her decease" to children held to give latter vested remainders. Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. S. 265. Will gave realty to wife for life and provided that "at the death of" his wife the property should go to his sons. Held that sons took vested remainders. Campbell v. Bradford [Ind.] 77 N. E. 849. "Desire that said lands be owned equally" by children "at the decease of" testator's wife vests at his death not the wife's. Taylor v. Stephens [Ind.] 74 N. E. 980. Rule that where life estate is given with remainder to take effect at, after, upon, or from the death of the first taker the remainder vests at testator's death, yields to expression of contrary intent manifested in the will. Hebberd v. Lesc, 107 App. Div. 425, 95 N. Y. S. 333. Testatrix devised land to daughter for life "and on her death" to her children, "but should she not leave any her surviving" then to a certain church. She also gave executors power to dispose of a part of property should they deem it necessary to the support of the life tenant, and directed that at life tenant's death whatever might be left should be divided among her children. Held that remainder did not vest until death of life tenant. Id. Where testator gave estate in trust to pay income to brother for life, and "upon his death" to transfer and deliver corpus to brother's children in equal shares, and to children of any who might be dead, grandchildren to take parent's share, or in case brother should die leaving no children or grandchildren, to children of testator's sisters, held that remainders did not vest until time for distribution. In re Keogh, 98 N. Y. S. 433, mdfg. 47 Misc. 37, 95 N. Y. S. 191 on other grounds. Where will provided that estate should be sold as soon as practicable and the proceeds divided among such of testator's children "as may be living at that time," held that vesting was postponed to time of distribution. Starr v. Willoughby, 218 Ill. 485, 75 N. E. 1029. Expression "ultimately to be divided among all" grandchildren held to postpone division and consequently vesting till all life tenants of income were dead and until takers attained specified ages if they had not already done so, and to include after-born. Pitzel v. Schneider, 216 Ill. 87, 74 N. E. 779. Testator's intention controls technical words and expressions and hence words "upon," "until," and the like may be so explained and controlled by the context of the will as not to prevent immediate vesting. Hooker v. Bryan [N. C.] 53 S. E. 130. Where testatrix gave realty and personalty to her nephew "upon his becoming 21 years of age," and lent the same to her sister "until" that time, held that nephew took vested remainder, and that on his dying before reaching age of 21, the interest of the sister terminated and prop-

the sense in which they are used. Vesting is inquired of the creation of the estate or interest and not of possession or enjoyment, hence it is not postponed by words of futurity or contingency related to possession and enjoyment only, and the consequent uncertainty whether a taker may ever enjoy his estate in possession,[29] or whether it may not be divested does not prevent its vesting in interest, whether caused by the existence of a trust[30] or power,[31] a direction for an accumulation,[32]

erty passed at once to remainderman's heirs at law. Id.

28. See Particular words and forms of expression, ante, this section.

29. A vested remainder is one which takes effect in interest and right immediately on the death of the testator, though not taking effect in possession and enjoyment until the determination of the preceding particular estate. In re Kountz's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 1103. Future estates are vested where there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to possession of land upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate. Laws 1896, p. 559, c. 547. In re Yerk's Estate, 94 N. Y. S. 1121. It is the present capacity of taking effect in possession if the possession were to become vacant, not the certainty that it ever will become vacant while the remainder continues, which distinguishes a vested from a contingent remainder, that is, in the former the enjoyment is uncertain and in the latter the right to that enjoyment. In re Kountz's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 1103. If upon the whole will it appears that the gift over is only postponed to let in some other interest, it will be held to be vested, though the time of enjoyment may be postponed. Barnes Cycle Co. v. Haines [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 515. Where an absolute property in a fund is bequeathed in fractional interests in succession at periods which must arrive, the interests of the first and subsequent takers will vest together. Id.; Moore v. Matthews [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 743.

Remainders held vested: Devise to wife for her exclusive use and benefit during her life and after her death and funeral expenses are paid what remains to be equally divided between my children." Haviland v. Haviland [Iowa] 105 N. W. 354. Testator bequeathed personalty in trust to pay income to daughters for their lives, provided that upon the death of a daughter the income that would have gone to her should go to her descendants, if any, according to the law of descents, and made the duration of the trust period coexistent with the life estate of the survivor of the daughters. Held that, where daughter died leaving one child, the income of the daughter's share earned during the time in which such child survived her mother belonged to her absolutely and was payable to her estate on her death. Potts v. Shirley [Ky.] 90 S. W. 590. Gift of residue to wife for life, and upon her death a certain part of the land included therein to his daughter for life, with direction to executor to sell land on daughter's death and divide proceeds among three named grandsons. In re Yerk's Estate, 94 N. Y. S. 1121. Gift in trust to pay income to husband for life until his remarriage and "in trust for all my children who shall attain the age of 25 years or marry under that age in equal shares." Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. Where income from land was given to wife for life, and on her death to two other persons for their joint lives, and "on the death of" the latter the realty was given in fee to A. and H. in equal parts, held that A. and H. took a fee as tenants in common in equal shares, which vested immediately upon testator's death. Moore v. Matthews [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 743. Clause appointing executor trustee and authorizing him to sell the realty held not to make devise over contingent. Id. Gift "from and after the death of" wife of property in which she was given life estate to "such child or children as I shall leave or have living at the time of my decease, and to their heirs and assigns forever." Barnes Cycle Co. v. Haines [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 515. Where testator bequeathed residuary estate in trust to invest a certain part thereof and pay net income to grandson "until he shall attain the age of 25 years, at which time" principal was to be paid him, held that he took vested interest in principal. In re Middleton's Estate, 212 Pa. 119, 61 A. 808. Gift in trust to pay income to testator's wife until grandson became 25, and then or at his prior death to convey one-third to each of testator's two sons and their wives in equal shares or, if either son should be dead, to pay a specified sum to his wife and to convey the remainder to his grandson absolutely upon his becoming 25. In re Middleton's Estate, 212 Pa. 119, 61 A. 808.

30. The creation of a trust does not of itself prevent the creation of a remainder vesting at the death of testator. In re L'Hommedieu, 138 F. 606. Gift in trust to apply rents and profits to maintenance of wife and children until minor daughters died or became of age, when trust should cease and property be distributed among testator's children, the descendants of any deceased child to take the share the parent would have taken if living, the trustee being given a discretionary power of sale, held to give children a remainder vesting at testator's death. Id. It makes no difference as to the vesting whether the legal estate be devised to trustees who are required to convey according to the directions of the will, or whether the interest is provided to take effect without the intervention of trustees, nor that the trust provides for the accumulation of income until the period of payment or distribution arises. Roberts v. Roberts [Md.] 62 A. 161. Where testator devised and bequeathed residue to his wife for life in trust for the use and benefit of herself and children, author-or a divesting condition.[33] Where the persons or the class who are to take in remainder,[34] or the happening of the contingencies on which they are to take,[35] or ized her to sell any part of the realty, the proceeds to be invested upon the trusts of the will, or to lease the same, and gave her authority, in her discretion, to use so much of the principal as might be necessary for support of herself and children, and then gave all of his estate "remaining at the death of my wife" to children in equal shares in fee, children of a deceased child to "receive and have" the share its parents "would have been entitled to if living," held that the remainders vested at the death of testator. Roberts v. Roberts [Md.] 62 A. 161. Power to apply principal of trust to use of beneficiary does not interfere with vesting of remainder limited on trust, but merely renders it defeasible. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. Where residue of estate was bequeathed to trustee to pay rents and income to son in such amounts and at such times as should, according to the judgment and discretion of the trustee, seem best, in sums not to exceed $10 at any one time, and on son's death to transfer all the property, interest and income "then in his hands or possession" to others, held that the son did not take a vested interest in the income during his life, and same could not be reached by creditors. Dubois v. Barbour [R. I.] 61 A. 752.

31. Power given to life tenant to use so much of the principal as might be necessary for support and education of children held not to make remainders contingent. Roberts v. Roberts [Md.] 62 A. 161.

32. Vesting is not negatived by a direction to accumulate income pending the time for division. It is only one circumstance. Bosworth v. Stockbridge [Mass.] 75 N. E. 712. Even when coupled with the fact that one or more of the shares will go to children of the first takers as a class. Id.

33. The fact that an estate is liable to be divested in whole or in part upon a contingency does not make it a contingent estate. Fact that life tenant is given power of disposition for certain specified purposes does not, but estates vest subject to power. Roberts v. Roberts [Md.] 62 A. 161. Will provided that on death of widow, to whom use for life was given, realty should be sold and proceeds divided among testator's surviving children. Held that each child surviving testator took a vested interest to come into possession upon widow's death. Boggs v. Boggs [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 1114. Further provision that share of any child on his death was to be "inherited" by survivors held to make vested estate of each child liable to be divested by his death before the time of distribution. Id. Provision that shares of two of the children should be invested during their lives and the interest paid to them, held not to diminish their interest in the estate, but only to restrict the use of it for life and not to prevent their shares passing to the survivors on their death before the time of distribution. Id. Testator gave residue to his two daughters jointly during their lives, on the death of one her share to go to the other, and, on the death of the other, the whole estate "to be equally divided among all my heirs, share and share alike," the child or children of any deceased parent taking share the parent would have been entitled to if living. Held that heirs of testator living at his death took vested remainders, but if any such heir died during the continuance of the life estate, his interest would be divested and his children would take as executory devisees by substitution in preference to a grantee of such heir. Brantley v. Bittle [S. C.] 51 S. E. 561. Devise over in case of death of one of members of class given remainder does not negative present vesting. Taylor v. Stephens [Ind.] 74 N. E. 980.

34. Laws 1896, p. 564, c. 547, § 30. Richards v. Hartshorne, 110 App. Div. 650, 97 N. Y. S. 754. The remainder is not made contingent by uncertainty as to the amount of the estate remaining undisposed of at the expiration of the life estate, but by uncertainty as to the persons who are to take. Roberts v. Roberts [Md.] 62 A. 161. The fact that some of the remaindermen cannot be ascertained until after the termination of the life estate has a strong tendency to show that all the remainders are contingent. Crapo v. Price [Mass.] 76 N. E. 1043.

Remainders held contingent: Will devised realty in trust to collect rents, pay annuity to wife for life, and after paying expenses, etc., to pay balance to son, son's wife, and certain named grandchildren in equal shares. Distribution of income in case of divorce of son's wife or death of any of the grandchildren was provided for, and it was then provided that after death of testator's wife, his son, the death or marriage of the son's wife, and when all the named grandchildren reached the age of 21, the trust should terminate and the land vest in fee simple absolutely in such grandchildren and their descendants, descendants of any deceased child taking parent's share. Held that remainders to grandchildren were contingent. Brownback v. Keister [Ill.] 77 N. E. 75. Devise to wife for life "and at her death to be equally divided among my then living children or their heirs," held to give remainders to children and living issue of deceased children contingent on their surviving the life tenant. Scheirich v. Maxwell [Ky.] 89 S. W. 4. Testator bequeathed personalty in trust to pay income to daughters for their lives, provided that upon the death of a daughter the income which would have gone to her should go to her descendants according to the law of descents, made the duration of the trust coexistent with the life estate of the survivor of the daughters, and at the death of such survivor gave the personalty absolutely to grandchildren or their descendants in equal portions. Held that gift of corpus to grandchildren was contingent, only those living at the death of the survivor of the daughters being entitled to take. Potts v. Shirley [Ky.] 90 S. W. 590. Will gave sum to trustees to pay income to friend of testatrix for life, "and after her decease to pay, distribute and divide the said principal fund, however the same may then be invested, to and among the children" of the life tenant "and the issue the shares which they are to have, are uncertain, there is a contingency to which vesting is postponed. A remainder directly over to others after the termination of a life estate will be deemed to vest at testator's death in the absence of anything of any deceased child by right of representation, such issue taking the share which would have belonged to their deceased parent." Held that the remainders were contingent, the parties entitled to take being those who, at the death of the life tenant, were her children, and the issue of any deceased child by right of representation. Crape v. Price [Mass.] 76 N. E. 1043. Devise in trust to pay income to two persons, and on the death of the survivor to convey the land to their issue, or, if they have none, to a certain association. Richards v. Hartshorne, 110 App. Div. 650, 97 N. Y. S. 754. Where testator gave property to trustee to pay income, after payment of debts, etc., to his daughter for life, with direction that "upon her death" property should be divided among son and surviving grandchildren of children, held that title did not vest in remaindermen until death of life beneficiary, only those surviving at that time taking. In re Stocum's Will, 94 N. Y. S. 588. Testator gave each of his three daughters a certain sum per month for ten years, at the end of which time residuary estate was to be equally distributed among them. In case any of them died after the execution of the will and prior to such distribution her share was to go to her issue, and in case of death of any of them prior to such time without issue her share was to go to daughters surviving at time of distribution. Held that the estates created in favor of issue of daughters were contingent. In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879. Where testator devised land to his daughter for life and provided that "after her death" it should go to her children and the children of such as were dead. Latham v. Roanoke, R. & Lumber Co., 139 N. C. 9, 51 S. E. 780. Where testator gave wife use of his property for life and provided that at her death it should be sold and the proceeds "equally divided among all my children that appears personally and claims their part, and this will shall disinherit all of said children that applies through an agent," held that gift was only to children living at time fixed for distribution. Freeman v. Freeman [N. C.] 53 S. E. 620. Under devise of realty to trustee to be held until grandson should be 21, proceeds to be divided equally between children of deceased son, the trust to be discharged and the realty to become the property of the "remaining" children jointly and equally when the grandson became 21 or died, held that each of testator's three granddaughters took a present vested estate in common in one-fourth of the land, with a remainder in one-third of a fourth contingent on the death of the grandson before reaching the age of 21. Smith v. Myers, 212 Pa. 51, 61 A. 573. Word "remaining" means "other" and not "then" surviving children, and does not make the fourth of each of the granddaughters contingent. Id. Gift in trust to pay income to children for life, and then to grandchildren, and after death of last child and ten years after youngest child became of age, to divide principal among grandchildren. In re Keuntz'e Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 1103. Where testator gave residue of his property to his nieces to their sole and separate use, free from control of their husbands, "said nieces to have the use and benefit of said property, half to each, for and during their natural lives, and then to their respective heirs to have their own half" and recited that what he meant to say was that "if either of these nieces should die without children, the share of the one so dying shall go to the surviver or the surviving children." Rutherford v. Rutherford [Tenn.] 92 S. W. 1112.

35. Remainder is contingent when limited so as to take effect upon a contingency which may never happen. Stoors v. Burgess [Me.] 62 A. 730. Legacies made payable on conditions which may never happen and placed in the possession and under the control of a trustee and subject to a condition precedent are contingent. In re Paulson's Will [Wis.] 107 N. W. 484. When a future time is named for the payment of a legacy, whether it is vested or contingent is a question of intention. Id. Where testatrix bequeathed sum to her son to be paid in 15 annual installments on condition that he attended certain church and provided that if he did not it should go to charitable institution, held that will did not vest absolute title in son, but that intention was that condition was to attach to gift and defeat it upon failure of son to perform and that possession and control of bequest should remain in executrix during period necessary to complete the trust. Id. A bequest to one when he arrives at the age of 21, or words of a similar meaning, is contingent. Shanley v. Herold, 141 F. 423.

Remainders held contingent: Where will gave property to husband for life, and then to testator's three children, naming them, and provided that, in case of the death of either of them prior to the death of testator or of the life tenant leaving a child or children, such child or children or its or their descendants should inherit the share "which would have vested in their parents." Cummings v. Hamilton [Ill.] 77 N. E. 264. Where will provided that grandchildren were to take in remainder only in case testater's daughter died before attaining age of 25 without issue, and his wife survived her. Stoors v. Burgess [Me.] 62 A. 730. Residuary bequest in fee, "should my daughter die under twenty-one years of age and without issue." Cutter v. Burroughs [Me.] 61 A. 767. Testator directed that residuary estate was to be equally distributed among his three daughters at the end of ten years, the share of any one of them dying after execution of will and before the time of distribution to go to her issue, and the share of anyone dying before such time without issue to go to the daughters surviving at the time of distribution. Held that each daughter took a future contingent estate by way of cross-remainder in the share of each of the others, in the event of their death without issue within the 10 year period, and on the further con-showing a contrary intention.[36] A gift found in a direction to pay, convey, or divide, may show an intention to postpone vesting until the time of distribution.[37] There is no vesting when payment is postponed for reasons personal to the taker.[38] Where there are separate gifts of income and capital, the latter does not vest until the period of distribution.[39] tingency that she herself survive that period. In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879. Where testatrix left estate in trust to pay half of income to husband during joint lives of himself and son, and to former in prescribed proportions should son die first, and provided that after husband's death all of the estate and income should descend to son, that if son died before husband estate should remain intact and income be divided in specified proportions, and that after death of both husband and son estate should remain in trust and income be paid to son's children, held that son's estate was contingent on his surviving his father, and that it never vested where he predeceased him. Ritter v. Knerr [Pa.] 63 A. 605.

36. Provision that upon death of one for whom estate is held in trust for life the fee simple title to the property shall vest in grandson held to give latter a vested remainder in fee to come into possession and enjoyment upon termination of the life estate. Landram v. Jordan, 25 App. D. C. 291. As a general rule gift to one for life with remainder to his children gives a vested remainder to each of such children who is alive at testator's death. Crapo v. Price [Mass.] 76 N. E. 1043. This is true though such remainder is to a class and may open up to let in afterborn members up to time of distribution, or through issue of any remainderman dying during the continuance of the life estate are to take his share by right of representation. Id. Where will directed trustees after death of daughter to hold estate during lives of daughter's children and pay net income to them, held that life estates given to such children vested in them at testatrix's death, subject to open up to let in affer-born children. Minot v. Doggett [Mass.] 77 N. E. 629. Will gave income of part of residue to children of testator's deceased son during their lives, the share of any child dying without issue to go to the survivors, and directed that on the death of all the children, the corpus of the trust should be distributed among son's grandchildren, who were to take by right of representation and to receive their shares as they became of age, taking the income thereof in the meantime. Held that grandchildren took vested remainders, subject to open to let in after-born grandchildren. Minot v. Purrington [Mass.] 77 N. E. 630. Fact that accretions to shares of surviving life tenants coming from the death of two of them without issue were contingent did not prevent grandchildren taking vested interests therein since whole estate was to go to them ultimately. Id. Fact that after death of life tenant interest is to be paid to remainderman shows intention to create vested remainders. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681.

37. Vesting is suspended if futurity is annexed to the substance of the gift, as where the only gift is found in a direction to divide or pay at a future time. Richards v. Hartshorne, 110 App. Div. 650, 97 N. Y. S. 754. Will gave estate in trust to pay income to one for life, and provided "from and after the death of" the life tenant "I direct my executors and trustees to convey" estate and accumulations of interest to "my heirs at law and next of kin, whomsoever they may be." Held that gift over was contingent, being to heirs living at death of life tenant. In re Cooper's Will, 109 App. Div. 566, 96 N. Y. S. 562. Fact that there is no present gift to remaindermen but only a direction to pay and divide the principal among the remaindermen after the death of the life tenant indicates an intention that the remainders shall not vest until the period of distribution. Crapo v. Price [Mass.] 76 N. E. 1043. Where testator devised realty to widow for life with remainder to stepson in fee, and provided that if latter should die without issue, same should be divided among testator's brothers and sisters, and that in case any of them died their share should "descend to their children," held that provision in favor of brothers and sisters was in nature of an executory devise, which was descendible and transmissible. Dilts v. Clayhaunce [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 672. The provision for the substitution of children for deceased parents does not require an implication that testator intended to limit his bounty to brothers and sisters who should survive the stepson and the children then living of such as had died, but the direction to divide indicates an intention that those who are to share are the brothers and sisters surviving on the death of the stepson. the children of any who had died leaving children, and the grantee, devisee, or heirs at law of any who had died leaving no child. Id. A gift which is only implied from a direction to pay is necessarily inseparable from the direction and must partake of its quality, so that if the one is future and contingent the other is also. In re Kountz's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 1103. Gift in trust to pay income to children for life, with direction to divide principal among grandchildren at future period held to give latter contingent remainders. Id. Vesting is suspended where futurity is annexed to the substance of the gift, but not where the gift is absolute and the time of payment only is postponed. In re L'Hommedieu, 138 F. 606. Mere omission of technical words expressing a present gift do not necessarily prevent vesting at death of testator. Id. Direction to "distribute" held not to postpone vesting the language and surrounding circumstances not requiring such a construction. Id. Gift of proceeds to be divided among children at wife's death held vested. Nelson v. Nelson [Ind. App.] 75 N. E. 679.

38. Bennett v. Bennett, 217 Ill. 434, 75 N. E. 339.

39. Where there are separate gifts of income and capital, the latter does not vest until

Perpetuities[40] and void accumulations should not be found,[41] but terms necessarily leading to such a result will not be denied their intended meaning.[42] the period of distribution. In re Kountz's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 1103.

40. See 4 C. L. 1924.

41. Where trust is created for benefit of several, the shares and interests may be regarded as several, though the trust fund or corpus remains undivided, where it was clearly the intention that the interest and income given in equal shares were to constitute separate trusts under which rights of each beneficiary were to be separate and distinct in his share of income, and that property was to be kept in solido for mere convenience of administration or investment. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. Rule against perpetuities does not apply to charitable trusts, and fact that annuity to charitable corporation may continue perpetually does not affect its validity. Merrill v. American Baptist Missionary Union [N. H.] 62 A. 647. Will speaks as of testator's death as to perpetuities. Will in execution of power left personalty in trust for testator's daughter during her minority and gave her principal on reaching majority. Trust provision was void as unlawfully suspending absolute ownership of personalty but daughter became of age before testator's death. Held that provision creating trust was inoperative, and principal vested in daughter immediately on testator's death. In re Pilsbury's Will, 99 N. Y. S. 62.

Provisions held valid: Provision creating trust to continue "during the life of my son, and of all of his children who are living at the time of my death," held not to violate Civ. Code § 715, prohibiting the suspension of the power of alienation for a longer period than during the continuance of lives in being at the creation of the condition or limitation, since will speaks as of date of testator's death and limitation or condition was created at that time. In re Lux's Estate [Cal.] 85 P. 147. Fact that, by reason of provision directing distribution of property among the children of the son living at termination of trust, children born after testator's death would receive a share, held not to prolong period of suspension. Id. Testatrix devised realty to one for life with remainder to testatrix's heirs at law, but only after the payment by them to the life tenant's heirs of the value of any improvements made by the life tenant. Held that the condition did not violate the rule against perpetuities since the heirs of testatrix who were to perform the condition were those living at testatrix's death, and since it was required to be performed by them during their lifetime, and hence during lives in being. Hill v. Gianelli [Ill.] 77 N. E. 458. Where will described such heirs as residents of Switzerland and treaty provided that citizens of the latter country who were unable to hold property in the United States by reason of the fact that they were aliens should have three years in which to dispose of it, held that since their interest in the property could only last three years a perpetuity was not created by gift to them, but their neglect to perform condition would only defeat their title. Id. Where will gave income to daughter for life and on her death to latter's children for life, held that equitable life estates in latter were not too remote since as to those living at testatrix's death they would vest at that time, and, as to one in ventre matris, at her birth, though subject to be divested as to those who did not survive their mother. Peabody v. Tyszkiewicz [Mass.] 77 N. E. 839. Will directed that part of testatrix's estate should be held in trust after daughter's death during lives of her children to pay income to such children, and that at the death of such children the corpus should be paid to daughter's grandchildren as they respectively attained the age of 21, such grandchildren to take by right of representation, and during their minority after the death of their parents to have income on share of capital which they would receive on arriving at 21. Held that grandchildren were not to be treated as members of one class to be considered together, but that the limitation over to each was to be considered by itself alone, and that shares of children of life tenant were to be considered separately, so that as to those of them who were living at testator's death the devise to the grandchildren was not too remote, though it was as to children born after testator's death. Minot v. Doggett [Mass.] 77 N. E. 629. Where will placed estate in trust for two lives, fact that it also provided for payment of annuity to third person did not prevent vesting so as to violate rule against perpetuities. Cole v. Lee [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 975, 106 N. W. 855. An entire estate may be held in trust for one beneficiary for life, and on his death may then be divided into shares, each of which may be held in trust for a second separate life, and it is not necessary that testator create a single trust in a single piece of property, but he may create separate trusts in undivided interests, the validity of each of which is dependent wholly on its own provisions. In re Mount's Will [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 999, afg. 107 App. Div. 1, 95 N. Y. S. 490. Testatrix gave property in trust to pay income to sister for life and provided that on her death the property should be divided into equal shares, one to be set apart for each child of a nephew then living or who might have died leaving surviving issue, the share of each child to be held in trust for him for life with remainder to his issue, and the share of each child who predeceased the sister leaving issue to vest absolutely in such issue on their arriving at age of 25. Held that as to share of child of nephew living at testatrix's death the suspension was only for two lives and validity of trust in favor of children then living was not affected by disposition in favor of children born thereafter. Id. Devise of property to wife and children "to be equally divided and equally shared among them after the youngest child of them shall have attained the age of 21 years and until such time and during his minority I desire that my said wife shall receive and have the sole use of" the income, held not to suspend power of alienation for more than Possession and enjoyment[43] accompany a present vested legal estate. In the case of a future interest they await its vesting as a legal estate,[44] and in the case of a trust or equitable estate the beneficiary becomes entitled to possession when the trust is completed or the conditions on which testator made the right depend are satisfied.[45] In case of a life tenancy in consumable personalty or money, special conditions of possession to protect future interests may be found.[46]

two lives, the period of suspension terminating on arrival at majority or death of youngest child. Jacoby v. Jacoby, 94 N. Y. S. 260. Where testatrix devised property in fee, subject to life estates in daughters or the survivors or survivor of them while they remained unmarried, held that the power of alienation was not suspended since life tenants and remaindermen could jointly dispose of the fee. Graham v. Graham, 48 Misc. 4, 97 N. Y. S. 779. Will creating trust providing for semi-annual payments of income to life tenant without any provision that it should not be paid oftener, held to vest income in life tenant as it was paid in, so that income which had accrued at time of latter's death passed to his representatives, notwithstanding provision directing trustees on death of life tenant to transfer corpus of estate "and any income remaining in their hands" to remaindermen and not to create void accumulation. In re Keogh, 98 N. Y. S. 433, modifying 47 Misc. 37, 95 N. Y. S. 191 on other grounds.

42. Power of sale given trustees does not take trust out of statute where proceeds remain subject to trust. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. Where estate could not be created by direct devise without violating rule, it cannot be created by intervention of power. Id. In applying rule as to suspension of absolute ownership of personalty, provisions of a will attempting to exercise a power of appointment conferred by will must be tested by reading them into the will conferring the power. In re Pilsbury's Will, 99 N. Y. S. 62. Under Laws 1897, p. 507, c. 417, § 2 (Gen. Laws c. 47, p. 3900) and Laws 1896, p. 583, c. 547, § 158 (Gen. Laws c. 46, p. 3824), period of suspension is to be computed from date of creation of power, and provision of will executing power suspending ownership for life of person not in being at creation of power is void. Id. The validity of the testamentary disposition is not to be determined by what occurs after testator's death, but by what might have occurred upon any possible contingency. Question whether trust for benefit of wife and others violates rule against perpetuities is not affected by fact that wife elects to take against the will. People's Trust Co. v. Flynn, 106 App. Div. 78, 94 N. Y. S. 436, rvg. 44 Misc. 6, 89 N. Y. S. 706. Trust to collect rents and pay income to beneficiaries for 30 years followed by words "thirty years after my death I give" corpus to same beneficiaries held harmonious and rejection of latter clause to avoid remoteness was wrong. Reid v. Voorhees, 216 Ill. 236, 74 N. E. 804.

Provisions held void: Devise in trust for life with remainder to heirs of beneficiary held void as to remainders under statute against perpetuities in force in 1871. Gerard v. Ives [Conn.] 62 A. 607. Trust to pay income to children for life then to grandchildren and to divide estate among grandchildren as the females should attain 21 years and the males 25 years is too remote. Pitzel v. Schneider, 216 Ill. 87, 74 N. E. 779. Laws 1896, c. 547, p. 571, § 76, subd. 3, authorizes trust to pay annuities, and calling it an annuity does not make interest of beneficiary assignable. People's Trust Co. v. Flynn, 106 App. Div. 78, 94 N. Y. S. 436, rvg. 44 Misc. 6, 89 N. Y. S. 706. An annuity chargeable upon a residuary estate does not prevent the vesting of the fee in possession, while a beneficial interest in a trust does. Id. Testator gave property to trustees to collect rents, etc., and out of net income to pay his wife a certain sum per annum for life, and after payment of such amount to divide the balance of the income among certain named persons until the death of two named daughters, and upon their death gave corpus to certain named persons. Held that provision for widow did not create an annuity independent of the trust, but was a part of it and gave her an unassignable beneficial interest, and hence trust was void because its duration was measured by three lives. Id. Attempted continuance of trust after death of husband and a daughter for benefit of daughter's husband by power of appointment of income, certain other powers, and alternative provisions in case of default in exercise of powers, held invalid as attempting to suspend power of alienation for more than two lives. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. Testator directed that residuary estate was to be equally distributed among his three daughters at the end of ten years. In case any of them died after the execution of the will and prior to such distribution her share was to go to her issue, and in case of the death of anyone prior to such time without issue her share to go to daughters surviving at time of distribution. Held that the provision made for daughters by way of cross-remainders contravened rule against perpetuities since persons on whose survivorship the estate was limited to take effect could not be determined until ten years from death of testator, a period not measured by lives. In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879. A devise over limited upon an indefinite failure of issue is void for remoteness. Devise over "should my heirs and their heirs cease to exist, and the time ever come when there was no lineal descendant to occupy and care for said property." Merrill v. American Baptist Missionary Union [N. H.] 62 A. 647. Gift in trust to pay income to children for life, and after the death of last child, and 10 years after youngest grandchild became of age, to divide principal among grandchildren. In re Kountz's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 1103. Will held to create single trust for three

Individual rights in gifts to two or more.[47]—At common law a legacy to two or more persons by name makes them joint tenants with right of survivorship[48] in the absence of words indicating an intention to confer distinct interests,[49] but this rule has been generally changed by statute.[50]

A gift to a class is a gift to those coming within that description at testator's death,[51] in the absence of anything showing a contrary intention,[52] and those surviving testator take the entire legacy.[53] Where the gift is coupled with a postponement of division, all those, and only those, answering the description at the time of division will share,[54] including after-born members of such class.[55] The fact that

48. Will gave property in trust to pay over income to testator's "children and grandchildren now living or who may be living at the time of my decease, in equal shares and proportions" for the life of each of said children, and directed that "upon the death of the last surviving one of my children" the trustee should convey the estate "together with any income of the same remaining in his hands, to the heirs and legal representatives of my deceased children in equal shares," the latter to take by way of representation. Held that the gift of income to children and grandchildren was a gift to them as a class and not as tenants in common, and hence the share of a child dying without issue after testator and before the time of division went to the survivors. Meserve v. Haak [Mass.] 77 N. E. 377. Without words indicating contrary intention. Trenton Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Armstrong [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 456. Gift in trust for three unmarried daughters so long as they remain unmarried, with remainder over in the event of "all marrying," held to make them joint tenants with right of survivorship, the word "all" applying only to so many of the class as remain capable of marrying, and the death of one not destroying the class because all cannot marry. Id.

49. "Equally and jointly" implies a tenancy in common, the former quoted word overcoming the latter. Taylor v. Stephens [Ind.] 74 N. E. 980. Joint tenancy is negatived by provision that shares of deceased members of a class of takers shall go to their children. Taylor v. Stephens [Ind.] 74 N. E. 980. Words "in equal shares and proportions" generally mean tenancy in common but they are not conclusive. Meserve v. Haak [Mass.] 77 N. E. 377.

50. A devise to two or more creates a tenancy in common unless a contrary intent is expressed. Code § 2923. Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193. Unless expressly declared to be joint tenancy. Real Property Law, § 56. In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879. Where testatrix devised property in fee, subject to use thereof by her three unmarried daughters, and the survivors and survivor of them, while they remained unmarried, held that three unmarried daughters became tenants in common with cross remainder for life. Graham v. Graham, 48 Misc. 4, 97 N. Y. S. 779.

51. Remainder to "my children." In re L'Hommedieu, 138 F. 606. Does not include persons dead before the making of the will, who, had they survived till that time, would have fallen within the description given such class. Gift to "children who shall have arrived at the age of 21 years." Pimel v. Betjemann [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 157, rvg. 99 App. Div. 559, 91 N. Y. S. 49. Testator devised land to sister and her own children and to his nephew and his children, share and share alike, as long as they live. Held that gift was immediate and vested in named persons and the children in esse at the death of testator to the exclusion of children born after that time. Robinson v. Harris [S. C.] 53 S. E. 755.

52. Testator bequeathed to wife the interest on certain mortgage for life, and provided that "at her death the said principal sum" of the mortgage "to be equally divided between my sons or their heirs." Held that sons meant were those living when will was made so that issue of sons who predeceased testator took parents' share. In re Smith's Estate, 97 N. Y. S. 321.

53. Davis v. Sanders, 123 Ga. 177, 51 S. E. 298. Civ. Code § 3330, providing that legacy to legatee who dies before testator or before the execution of the will shall not lapse but shall go to his issue, if any, living at testator's death, does not apply where the gift is to a class, and some member of the class survives testator. Id. Gift to named daughter and her children held a gift to a class, and where the daughter had two children, both of whom died before testator and one of whom left issue, held that daughter would take the whole legacy to the exclusion of such issue. Id.

54. See, also, ante this section, Vesting. When a legacy is given to a class, as grandchildren, the heirs of a grandchild who was living at the death of testator, but who dies before the time fixed for distribution, take nothing, but after-born grandchildren, living at the time of distribution, will share. Stoors v. Burgess [Me.] 62 A. 730. Where will provided that should testator's wife survive his daughter the latter dying without issue, she was to have whole income for life, and that "at her death" the estate was to be divided equally into two parts, one part "to be divided equally among the grandchildren of my some of the individuals are named does not necessarily deprive the gift of its character as one to a class.[56]

Descendants of testator generally take per stirpes.[57] A direction to divide equally ordinarily requires a division per capita,[58] but where the takers are descend-deceased father," held that only grandchildren living at the death of the wife were entitled to share. Id. Where testator left residuary estate in trust for daughter for life, and provided that "upon" her death property should go to "her heirs at law" in case she failed to make a will, held that gift over was to those who were her heirs at law at the time of her death, and not to those who would have been her heirs at the time of testator's death. Coffin v. Jernegan [Mass.] 75 N. E. 958. Will gave part of estate in trust for use of daughter during life, and provided that on her death it was to go to her children then living, or, in case there were none, then to testator's (misprinted "her" in N. Y. S.) heirs at law in such shares as they would take realty of which he should die possessed under the intestate laws. Held that on the death of the daughter after testator without issue, the property passed to persons who would have been testator's heirs at law had he died immediately after daughter. Beers v. Grant, 110 App. Div. 152, 97 N. Y. S. 117.

55. Vested gifts to a class to come into possession in future. Bosworth v. Stockbridge [Mass.] 75 N. E. 712. In the case of gifts to children or grandchildren the remainder will open to let in after-born members of the class. Minot v. Purrington [Mass.] 77 N. E. 630. Children. Minot v. Doggett [Mass.] 77 N. E. 629. Grandchildren. Stoors v. Burgess [Me.] 62 A. 730; Peabody v. Tyszkiewicz [Mass.] 77 N. E. 839. Where a devise is made to one and his children, and he has a child when the devise is made, such child will take an equal share with the parent, and the estate will open up and let in after-born children. Bently v. Ash [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 636. Testator devised realty in equal shares to his children, but provided in regard to the share of one of his daughters that "it is my express will and desire and I hereby give the same to her and her child or children, to be held by them free from the claim or claims of control of her husband," the same to be held and enjoyed by daughter and child or children as their separate property, and the husband not to have any control over it. Daughter had child living when will was made and at testator's death. Held that not only such child, but all children born to daughter thereafter took each in fee equally under the will with the daughter. Id.

56. Where one of the persons who are to take as a class is named, and the others are uncertain in number, to be ascertained in the future, the share of each dependent upon the actual number, the devise is to the class as a body of persons, and not as individuals, unless the will or the attendant circumstances require a different construction. Davis v. Sanders, 123 Ga. 177, 51 S. E. 298.

57. Testator gave estate to daughter in trust for his wife for life, and after her death in trust for his four daughters equally for life, and after their death in trust for the child or children of each of the daughters then living in fee simple, such child or children respectively to take the share of his, her, or their parent. It was then provided that if any daughter should die unmarried her share should "pass to her or their surviving sisters or sister for life equally; and upon her or their death shall vest in her or their child or children in the same manner, and for the same estate, as her or their original share or shares." Two of the daughters died unmarried, and a third thereafter died leaving children. Held that, the widow also having died, such children took their mother's entire share, and were entitled to half the net income of the estate, and equitable remainder of entire estate was in them and their heirs, subject to be opened to let in after-born children of other daughter. Cruit v. Owen, 25 App. D. C. 514. Where will provided that on death of daughter her share of principal of trust fund should be paid "to her lawful issue, share and share alike," held that the division should be made among the children of the daughter and the issue of deceased children taking per stirpes, and that the issue of a living child was not entitled to a share. Coates v. Burton [Mass.] 77 N. E. 311. Under will devising property to children or issue of deceased brother and providing that they should take per stirpes, the children or issue of any deceased child of such brother to take the "same share which their deceased parent would have taken if living," held that the children of a daughter of the brother who died before the will was made took only the share their mother would have taken had she survived testatrix. In re Truman [R. I.] 61 A. 598.

58. Where will provided that if wife survived daughter estate was to be divided into two parts on wife's death, one part "to be divided equally amongst the grandchildren of my deceased father," held that grandchildren living at death of wife took per capita. Stoors v. Burgess [Me.] 62 A. 730. Equality imports a gift to several as individuals. Hence representatives take. Best v. Berry [Mass.] 75 N. E. 743. Testator created trust in personalty, gave income to daughters for their lives, provided that upon the death of a daughter the income that would have gone to her should go to her descendants, if any, according to the law of descents, and made the duration of the trust period coexistent with the life estate of the survivor of the daughters, and then disposed of the personalty by giving it absolutely to his grandchildren, or their descendants, in equal proportions. Held that grandchildren, on the death of the survivor of the daughters, took per capita. Potts v. Shirley [Ky.] 90 S. W. 590. Where will directed division of balance of estate in equal portions among named persons, described as daughters of testator's deceased brothers, a named brother of testator, and the children of a certain deceased sister, naming them, held that ants of testator and stand in different degrees of relationship they take per stirpes in the absence of anything showing a contrary intention.[59] Naming persons does not make the gift per capita where they are relatives standing in different degrees.[60] Where the gift is to persons standing in the same relationship and by alternation to those who constitute their descendants, the latter take per stirpes.[61]

Conditions.[62]—No precise words are necessary to create a condition, any words showing such an intent being sufficient,[63] but conditions are not favored, and, in the absence of express terms to that effect, will not be implied unless the intent is clear.[64] Whether a condition is precedent or subsequent is a question of intention.[65] If precedent, it must be complied with before the estate will vest.[66] If personal legatees took per capita. Hardy v. Roach [Mass.] 76 N. E. 720. Where will provided that on death of life tenant the estate was "to be equally divided among all my heirs, share and share alike," the child or children of any deceased parent taking the share to which the parent would have been entitled if living, held that those answering the description of "heirs" at testator's death took per capita. Brantley v. Bittle [S. C.] 51 S. E. 561. Provision as to child of deceased parent taking parent's share held not intended to show proportions in which those answering description of heirs at testator's death should take, but to mean that the child or children should take the share of an heir who died after the testator and before the falling in of the life estate. Id.

59. Where will gave personalty in trust for daughter for life, and provided that upon her death the property should be divided equally among son and the surviving grandchildren of testator, held that division should be made per stirpes. In re Stocum's Will, 94 N. Y. S. 588.

60. A devise to A son of B; C son of D; E son of F; the ten children of G, naming them, and if any of the ten die before testator, their share to the survivors of such ten. All legatees were children of testator's brothers. Held that the estate should be divided into four parts and distributed per stirpes. Fleck's Estate, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 466.

61. Where will gave estate in trust to pay income to brother for life, with provision that upon his death corpus was to go to brother's children in equal shares, the children of any deceased child to take the parent's share, or in case brother should die leaving no children or grandchildren, to children of testator's sisters, the child or children of each to take an equal portion thereof, held to show an intention to treat the child or children of each sister as a class and to divide the remainder equally among the classes. In re Keogh, 98 N. Y. S. 433, modifying 47 Misc. 37, 95 N. Y. S. 191.

62. See 4 C. L. 1926.

63. Bequests to employes "Provided these three named parties shall continue to manage and have charge of the business I am now engaged in," held to vest on testator's death, and not to be on condition precedent and dependent upon a continuation of the business. In re Davis' Estate [Minn.] 104 N. W. 299. Testator gave wife life use of realty and one-third of it in fee, but directed that, in case of her remarriage, she, as executrix, should sell the land, "and, after paying all the payments and satisfying all the provisions hereinbefore made," should herself take one-third of the proceeds and pay the other two-thirds to certain other persons. Held that, on her remarriage, she was not entitled to a life estate in the realty or its proceeds. Linzy v. Whitney, 96 N. Y. S. 1075. Provision giving legacy to son payable in 15 annual installments on condition that he should attend the regular meetings of worship of a certain church, when not sick in bed or unavoidably prevented, with bequest to missionary society if he did not try in good faith to comply therewith held not void for indefiniteness, but to require attendance at meeting for 15 years, and that if he defaulted the sum not already paid to him should be paid to society. In re Paulson's Will [Wis.] 107 N. W. 484.

64. Provisions as to support held not conditions which were required to be performed in every particular to prevent a forfeiture. Heaston v. Kreig [Ind.] 77 N. E. 805.

65. Provision giving widow use of remainder of estate in lieu of dower, subject to maintenance and education of certain persons, held not to impose conditions precedent to payment of bequest to her, but bequest was subject to performance of the conditions when she had received under the will the moneys which would enable her to perform. In re Tisdale, 110 App. Div. 857, 97 N. Y. S. 494. Testator provided that his wife might retain a certain estate as a homestead and that she might purchase the same for not less than a specified sum, the estate so purchased to be subject to her disposal by will, or in case of her death intestate, to descend to her heirs at law. He further provided that, should she purchase it "and with the understanding that the estate thus acquired shall descend to the sons, one or all, whom she has brought forth," then a devise of another tract to such sons should be void, and the same should pass to a daughter. Held that the devise to the sons could only be annulled by the widow purchasing and providing in some manner that the estate should go to sons at her death, and was not annulled where she purchased and deeded the same in fee to a third person, and that she acquired and could convey the fee. Allen v. Howe [R. I.] 63 A. 559.

66. Where will provided that complainant was to receive his share of the estate "upon becoming married and settled in some legitimate and prosperous business," held that the limitation was binding and that he was not entitled to his share until he had complied therewith. Boggs v. Boggs [N. J. Eq.]

property is bequeathed upon condition, either precedent or subsequent, which becomes impossible of performance through no fault of the legatee, the legacy does not fail unless it appears that performance was the controlling motive for making the bequest.[67] Where a legacy is given to a daughter upon her marrying with the the approval of the widow, her marriage during testator's lifetime with his approval will be deemed a substantial compliance and entitles her to the legacy.[68] In case lands are devised on condition that the devisees make specified payments to named persons, the latter may waive payments in cash.[69]

Intent to require election[70] may be found from gifts in the alternative,[71] or where property is so disposed of that statutory rights are necessarily cut off by taking under the will,[72] or where testator disposes of property not his own, and also confers benefits on the owner thereof.[73] No election can be required so as to alter 60 A. 1114. Where will gave son privilege of selecting certain tract of land which was to belong to him in fee on condition that he reside on the place, and in case he decided not to take the property, held that the title to such tract never vested in him on his refusal to perform such condition, his estate being in the nature of an executory devise dependent on a contingency which did not occur, or, if an estate on condition, such condition was a condition precedent. Pitchford v. Limer, 139 N. C. 13, 51 S. E. 789. Where will gave certain sum to brother in case he should "pay" testatrix or her estate the amount of a certain note, held that he was entitled to legacy where testatrix assigned note to third person before her death. Morley v. Calhoun, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 285. The verb "pay" usually means to satisfy in money, but it has a much wider signification and includes the ideas of satisfaction and discharge in any manner. Id.

See, also, ante, this section, Vesting.

67. Morley v. Calhoun, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 285.

68. Saul v. Swartz, 98 N. Y. S. 549. Will provided that any daughter marrying with her mother's consent was to be paid a certain sum "being part of her said share in my estate," but provided that from such sum was to be deducted any sum which testator "may have charged against my said daughter on account thereof." Held that daughter who married before execution of will was entitled to difference between sum then paid her by testator and the amount specified. Id.

69. Where lands were devised to testatrix's heirs in remainder on condition that they pay the life tenant's heirs the value of any improvements made by him, held that the heirs of the life tenant could waive payment in cash for such improvements, and accept, in lieu thereof, a decree making the amount due them a lien on the property. Hill v. Gianelli [Ill.] 77 N. E. 458. Intention held to be that improvements should be paid for within a reasonable time. Id. Heirs of life tenant held to be the only persons who could complain in reference to time and manner of payment. Devisee of life tenant could not do so, and could not complain that heirship of those held to be owners of property was not proved. Id.

70. See 4 C. L. 1927. See, also, Election and Waiver, 5 C. L. 1078.

71. Will held to entitle widow to use of certain rooms in house devised to son and to certain benefits in the way of support, etc., or to the use of the rooms and to an annuity at her election, but not to both benefits and annuity. Begin v. Begin [Minn.] 107 N. W. 149.

72. Where testator intentionally attempts to dispose of land owned by himself and his wife as tenants by the entirety, and gives her other property in lieu thereof, and she voluntarily accepts the provisions of the will, she is estopped from asserting title to such lands. Young v. Biehl [Ind.] 77 N. E. 406. It is immaterial, in such case, whether testator erroneously believed the lands to be his own or knew that they were not. Id. The widow may take both a life estate under the will and her distributive share under the law unless the will clearly manifest a contrary intention, in which case she is required to elect between them. Can only take both when not inconsistent or incompatible with the terms of the will. Parker v. Parker [Iowa] 106 N. W. 8. Will held to show intent to give her a life estate in lieu of distributive share. Id. Where will made provision for contingency of widow's election, but fixed no time when it should be made, held that it could be made at any time before a final decree of distribution, unless widow had done something amounting to an estoppel. In re Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315.

73. The doctrine of election properly arises when a testator manifests a clear intention to dispose of property not his own, and by other parts of his will from his own estate confers benefits upon the owner of that property. Walker v. Bobbitt, 114 Tenn. 700, 88 S. W. 327. In such case the owner is put upon his election, and if he accepts the benefits, is excluded or estopped from asserting claim to the property so disposed of. Id. This rule applies only in a case of property in which testator has no interest. If he has some interest of his own, more than mere possession, in the thing disposed of, he will be deemed by his use of general term, to have intended only a gift of his interest, and owner will not be put to an election between maintaining his former title and claiming the new benefits. Id. Wife held not put to an election where husband devised to her for life an entire tract owned by them by entirety, and fact that she took under will did not prevent her taking the remainder as survivor. Id.

the terms of an antenuptial agreement.[74] The share which a child receives under a will should not be deducted from his share of the property as to which deceased died intestate.[75]

Charges, exonerations, and funds for payment.[76]—Whether legacies are to be charged on the realty is always a question of intention.[77] Such a charge may be inferred from the making of bequests greatly exceeding the amount of personalty and which there is realty enough to pay.[78] Where the devisee of lands charged with

Where testator gave widow a life estate in lands belonging to her, together with personalty exceeding in value that to which she would have been entitled under the statute, with remainder over in realty and remaining personalty. Sorenson v. Carey, [Minn.] 104 N. W. 958. Where disposes of property belonging to wife in her own right and also makes provision for her by his will, she has the same right of election as other persons under similar circumstances, and such election may be made expressly or impliedly. Pence v. Life [Va.] 52 S. E. 257. Code 1887, § 2271, providing that a widow who fails to renounce provisions of husband's will is presumed to have elected to take under it, does not apply in such cases, but only provides how she must proceed in case she desires to reject provisions made for her out of property other than her own, and to take such interest in his lands as the law gives her. Id. Sale of her land by widow held to amount to an election, and purchaser took good title. Id. Where testator devised to his wife, with remainder to children, realty of which wife was a part owner, and she qualified as executrix, took possession of the land and remained in possession for nine years until her death, and children acquiesced in will for eight years, held that there was an election, and lands could not be sold to pay widow's debts after her death. Hoggard v. Jordan [N. C.] 53 S. E. 220.

74. Testator made antenuptial agreement whereby wife was to receive $4,000 with interest within six months after his death in lieu of dower. Will recited agreement and that testator had decided to increase the amount to $10,000, and directed executor to pay her that amount, "which said sums aggregating $10,000 are to be accepted by my wife in full satisfaction of dower." Held that $6,000 was a general legacy, the words quoted being of no legal effect since testator could not modify agreement by will. In re Bostwick's Estate, 49 Misc. 186, 98 N. Y. S. 932.

75. Where testatrix authorized trustee to pay over to her sons such part of the principal of the trust fund as he might, in his discretion, see fit, the amount paid over to one of the sons should not, on distribution of the estate after his death, be deducted from the share of the son's child in the property as to which testatrix died intestate. In re Ogden's Estate, 211 Pa. 247, 60 A. 785. Act of April 8, 1833 (P. L. 315) providing for the deduction from the share of a child of any amounts received by him by way of advancements or settlement applies only in case of intestacy and not to testamentary gifts. Id.

76. See 4 C. L. 1927.

77. Children held to take residuary estate on arrival at age subject to lien of widow for payment of amount provided for her support, and her right to use a certain house, and after the payment of certain legacies. McDevitt v. Hibben [Ill.] 77 N. E. 586. Where will devised realty to children and their heirs forever provided they should keep the property insured, pay taxes, etc., and pay certain annuities to a corporation, and that if testator's heirs and the heirs of the children should at any time cease to exist, the property should go to said corporation, held that, though the attempt to create a conditional fee or fee tail was void, and the children took the fee, they took it subject to a trust to pay such annuities. Merrill v. American Baptist Missionary Union [N. H.] 62 A. 647. Provision giving wife the interest on a certain sum so long as she lives and remains unmarried, "to be left secured on my real estate," held not to require legacy to be secured by mortgage on testator's realty, but to itself charge the payment of such interest on the land. Plum v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 763. Fact that land charged was sold under mortgage foreclosure proceedings, and thereby reduced to money, held not to relieve the resulting fund from the obligations imposed upon the land. Id. Cost of erecting monuments held not charged on land devised in remainder. Stark v. Byers [Pa.] 62 A. 371. Where testatrix, after making certain pecuniary legacies, devised residue of her estate to complainant, and personalty was insufficient to pay debts and such legacies, held that he took realty passing as residue, charged with payment of such legacies. Haberman v. Kaufer [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 976. Will gave wife use of realty and one-third in fee, but provided that, in case of her remarriage, land should be sold, and that, "after paying all the payments and satisfying all the provisions hereinafter made," proceeds should go one-third to her and balance to others. One of the prior provisions was that testator's mother was to be given a home for life provided she lived in the house on testator's farm, but not otherwise. Held that widow was not entitled to compensation for care of mother, that being an incumbrance attached to life use of farm. Linzy v. Whitney, 96 N. Y. S. 1075. Where mother lived in house on farm until it was burned, when she went to live with one of her sons, held that latter was entitled to compensation for her care out of income of avails of farm which was sold on widow's remarriage. Id. Such support held a charge on proceeds of such sale. Id.

78. Thissell v. Schillinger, 186 Mass. 180, 71 N. E. 300.

certain debts refuses to accept the devise, so that the property goes to testator's heirs, such debts are charged on the shares of all of such heirs.[79] Whether contributions are to be made by several beneficiaries collectively or individually is a question of intention.[80]

Trust estates and interests.[81]—The trustee takes such an estate as the will defines or the terms of the trust require.[82] The kind of trust created,[83] its duration,[84]

79. Where son did not accept devise of lands charged with payment of his debts to testator, so that they passed to testator's heirs at law, held that debts became charged on the shares of all such heirs, and could not be restricted only to shares which went to son's children. Youngs v. Youngs, 102 App. Div. 444, 92 N. Y. S. 546.

80. Will held to require contributions of certain sums "to maintain the home" to be made by each son separately and not by all collectively. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston, 47 Misc. 693, 98 N. Y. S. 1055. In absence of express designation, and it not appearing from will as a whole that there was any other intention, advances directed to be made to wife by trustee during first year and a half for her benefit and that of sons held not chargeable against any specific beneficial interest elsewhere provided, but word "advance" is to be regarded as equivalent to "pay" and payment should be made from funds in trustee's hands. Id.

82. Takes only such estate as is necessary for the performance of his trust, and it terminates when the trust ends. In re Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315. His estate in realty is commensurate with the powers conferred by the trust and the purposes to be effected by it. Olcott v. Tope, 115 Ill. App. 121. Limitation on powers of trustees given an absolute ownership denying general power to sell or mortgage held not to negative a legal title sufficient to sustain ejectment. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Winslow, 216 Ill. 166, 74 N. E. 815. The trustee takes only such estate as the purposes of the trust require. In re L'Hommedieu, 138 F. 606. Where estate was given in trust to son to collect income and apply residue, after payment of taxes, etc., to support of wife and children of testator, until two minor daughters became of age or died, and then to distribute estate in specified manner, held that the only estate which vested in him was one for the lives or minority of such daughters. Id. Quantity of trustee's estate was coincident with beneficial right of cestuis que trust, and when their right ceased, the purposes of the trust and the estate of the trustee ceased. Id. Was not extended by direction to distribute estate, since trust could not be created for purposes of distribution only, and while person acted as grantee of power to distribute, title was in distributees or heirs. Id. The trust not being one to sell, the mere grant of a discretionary power of sale does not enlarge trustee's estate, and grantee of power would sell as such and not as trustee. Id.

83. Under Civ. Code, § 857, providing for trustee to receive the income of real property and apply it to the use of any person for himself or his family, a provision directing income to be paid to daughter to be applied to support of granddaughter during her minority is valid. In re Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315. Will held not to create invalid "trust to convey." In re Lux's Estate [Cal.] 85 P. 147. Testator gave realty and personalty in trust to "manage" same, and to collect income, and out of it "to pay" annuities to daughter and wife and provided that on the death of his wife half of the property "shall vest absolutely" in his daughter and the other half in certain other persons. In case his daughter should die before his wife without leaving children her share was to be "divided" among others. Any excess of income after paying annuities was to be used in improvement of unimproved property, or invested. Trustees were also authorized in their discretion to sell any part of the property and reinvest proceeds. Held to create valid trust to receive rents and profits of realty and pay them to beneficiaries as authorized by Civ. Code, § 857, subd. 3. In re Heywood's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 755. Direction to "manage" property does not make trust one not authorized by § 857, though trust to manage is not specifically authorized by that section, since trustees are bound to manage property in any event for purpose of carrying out the trust. Id. Will held to show intent that annuities were to be paid from income alone, so that trust was not void because authorizing resort to the corpus. Id. Direction that property shall be "divided" does not make an invalid trust to divide, the will showing an intention to make direct devises in remainder. Id. Devise to widow in trust to be used by her until youngest child arrives at age of 21, when property is to be divided between widow and children, held void as trust since widow was both trustee and beneficiary, but widow, being entitled to possession, takes legal estate equivalent to her beneficial interest under Laws 1896, p. 570, c. 547, § 72. Jacoby v. Jacoby, 94 N. Y. S. 260.

Active or dry trust: A provision giving the trustees a full and unlimited discretionary power to pay or withhold from the beneficial life tenant any or all of the income of the fund, the legal title to which is to remain in the trustees during the continuance of the trust, creates an active, and not a dry or naked trust. Such a trust created for life of beneficiary will not be sooner terminated. Mason v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. [Conn.] 61 A. 57. In such case the beneficial life tenant takes no absolute right to the income. Cannot alienate his interest or estate, and it is protected from his creditors. Id. The fact that the cestui que trust is given a naked power of appointment does not enlarge his estate. Id. Renunciation of an active trust in personalty does not vest full legal title in beneficiary. Bennett v. Bennett, 217 Ill. 434, 75 N. E. 339. Gift of a sum in trust to pay income to and the powers and duties of the trustee,[85] are questions of intention. The will may relieve the trustee from liability for losses occurring without his fault.[86]

legatee till 40 years old, then to pay principal on a certain contingency, otherwise not to pay it till 50, held not a dry trust vesting the principal presently. Id. Bequest to certain individuals in trust for use and benefit of a certain institution for purpose of having masses and prayers said for benefit of testatrix's soul held to be one directly to the institution. The trusteeship being a passive one, the bequest would, by analogy to the real property law (Laws 1896, p. 570, c. 547, §§ 73, 77), go directly to the beneficiaries, subject to the duty of saying such prayers and masses. In re Cooney's Will, 98 N. Y. S. 676. Testatrix left estate in trust to be kept intact until after the death of her husband, and to pay half the income to him during joint lives of her son and husband, and to latter in prescribed proportions should son die first. Will further provided that after the death of the husband, all of the estate and income should descend to son; that if son died before the husband, on the death of the latter, the income should be divided among testatrix's grandchildren; and that after death of husband and son the estate should remain in trust and income be paid to latter's children. Held that, where son died before father, on the death of the latter the estate passed to the son's children under a dry trust. Ritter v. Knerr [Pa.] 63 A. 605.

Spendthrift trusts: An equitable life estate under which the life tenant may have absolute rights may by appropriate language, be created by one for the benefit of another, which shall be inalienable by the latter, and beyond the reach of his creditors. Mason v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. [Conn.] 61 A. 57. Provision prohibiting anticipation or incumbrance by legatee of his share of income, etc., held to create spendthrift trust. Sterling v. Ives [Conn.] 62 A. 948. Provision in spendthrift trust in favor of children that if "any person" conveyed his share of income so as to deprive himself of the benefit thereof, his right to such income should cease held not applicable to grandchildren to whom deceased child's share of income and, on their reaching the age of 21, of the principal also, was given in remainder. Id. Further provisions authorizing trustees in their discretion to withhold income in certain cases held also inapplicable to grandchildren, the death of any one of testator's children working a severance of his share. Id. Will directed payment of income to one during life, then to his children in equal parts and in case of the death of a child to his children if he had any, if not, to the survivors. The trustees were given full power of sale. The will also provided that the shares in the income should go to the persons designated and be nonassignable and not subject to attachment for debt. Held under the last clause a grandson of a deceased son was precluded from assigning his share of the income. Rockhill's Estate, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 28.

84. Testator gave property in trust to pay net proceeds to his daughter "so long as" she remained "a married woman," and provided that if she should "survive" her present husband the premises should be conveyed to her absolutely and in fee, and that, "while she is the wife of her present husband," neither she nor any one for her should have the right to sell or dispose of the premises, or do anything which would deprive her of the benefit thereof. Held that she was entitled to a conveyance on her divorce from her husband. Cary v. Slead [Ill.] 77 N. E. 234. Will held to create trust to continue during lives of both his son and latter's wife. Cole v. Lee [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 975, 106 N. W. 855. Will held to create trust by terms of which income was to be divided equally between testator's widow, brother, and sister, and which was to continue as long as widow lived or remained unmarried. Hiles v. Garrison [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 865. Residuary clause created trust to continue during lives of those two of his children who should be the youngest at the time of his death, for the purpose of meeting certain payments directed to be made by previous clauses; to set aside and separately invest a sum sufficient to give a specified annual income to wife for life, and on her death "to dispose of said sum as hereinafter directed in respect to the principal of my residuary estate;" to distribute the income of the trust estate among his children during the trust term; and to distribute the residue when the trust was ended. Held that separate trust was created for wife for term of her lifetime alone, and on her death principal and accumulated income was to be distributed in manner provided for distribution of principal of residuary estate. In re Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 46 Misc. 544, 95 N. Y. S. 59. Testatrix gave property to brother to be invested by executors "for his benefit during his natural life and for the benefit of his wife and issue after his death." Held that investment was to continue only during brother's life, and that wife and issue took absolutely on his death. Illensworth v. Illensworth, 110 App. Div. 399, 97 N. Y. S. 44. Where will bequeathed property in trust to pay income to beneficiaries during their lives "and at their death the principal to their heirs," held that trust terminated at death of beneficiaries. In re West's Estate [Pa.] 63 A. 407. Even if it could be regarded as continuing to the heirs for the purpose of paying over the principal to them, it was, as to them, a dry trust which, on the death of the first takers was immediately executed so as to vest legal title in heirs. Id.

85. For powers and duties of trustees as to sales, distribution, time of payment, etc., see § 5 E, post. Where will provided that on death of each of the children trustees should transfer and convey the same to his lineal descendants, held that trustees were bound to make the conveyance though the lineal descendants of the deceased child did not desire it. Paine v. Sackett [R. I.] 61 A. 753. So also, on the death of a child, the trustees could not be required to longer exercise the duties of trustees with respect to his share. Id.

Powers of appointment and beneficial powers of sale.[87]—A power of appointment can only be exercised under the circumstances[88] and in the manner prescribed by the will,[89] and in favor of the persons or class therein designated.[90]

Whether a life tenant has an absolute power of sale is a question of intention.[91] When such power is based upon and restricted by necessity, proof of the existence of the necessity at the time of the sale establishes the right to make it without an order of court.[92] Purchasers need not see to the reinvestment of the proceeds unless the will so provides.[93]

Cy pres doctrine: Where the will exhibits the intention that the donation shall be devoted generally to charity, or to some more or less particularly defined charity, and prescribes a particular mode or means whereby such purpose shall be carried out, the failure of such mode during testator's lifetime will not be allowed to defeat his general charitable purpose. Brown v. Condit [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 1055. This rule, however, has no application, where, at the time of testator's death, it is impossible to carry into effect his actual charitable intent. Id. Where testatrix bequeathed residue of estate to "the hospital fund for sick seamen" at a certain navy yard, "care of W., chaplain," but W. was not chaplain of the navy yard, and died before testatrix, and there was no fund maintained for the benefit of such seamen, held that court could not, under cy-pres doctrine, give such bequest to another institution conducting similar work among sailors but of larger scope than that conducted by W. Id.

86. Trustee who, though knowing that his cotrustee had collected rents belonging to estate and converted them to his own use, permitted him to continue to collect rents, without attempting to control the receipts, held personally liable for subsequent misappropriations, notwithstanding provision in will exempting every trustee "from liability for losses occurring without his own willful default," since he intentionally disregarded rules regulating actions of prudent men in conducting their own business, the exemption clause referring merely to losses due to bad judgment or carelessness. In re Mallon's Estate, 110 App. Div. 61, 97 N. Y. S. 23.

87. See 4 C. L. 1930.

88. Where will gave daughter power of appointment in case she should die unmarried "and" without leaving lawful issue, held that the power was strictly limited and could not be exercised where she was married when she died. Beers v. Grant, 110 App. Div. 152, 97 N. Y. S. 117.

89. Execution of power held in strict conformity to power conferred. Stoors v. Burgess [Me.] 62 A. 730.

90. A devise to a wife for herself and children and to dispose to the children "as long as she remains unmarried" gives her no power to dispose of it otherwise than to children. Sayer v. Humphrey, 216 Ill. 426, 75 N. E. 170. Under a power by which the wife of testator is directed to provide for the children out of certain described property, the amount to be given each is discretionary and an equal division need not be made. Biggins v. Lambert, 115 Ill. App. 576. If the donee is given a right to distribute the property to "relations," his right of selection is not confined to the next of kin. Where testator gave property to wife for life and provided "previous to her death she may will or distribute to her relations or to my relations any property as she may choose or desire them to have," held that she was not bound to distribute it to his or her next of kin, but word "relations" meant blood kin of any degree. Levi v. Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Co. [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1083. Power held a mere naked one to be exercised at the discretion of the donee. Id. Will held to give wife testamentary power of disposition over half the estate, subject only to limitation that it must be exercised for charitable or religious purposes. Stoors v. Burgess [Me.] 62 A. 730. Testator gave property to his wife for life, with power to devise it to any or all of their children or grandchildren or both "in such shares or proportions as to her shall seem best." Held that a devise by wife to children and grandchildren as tenants in common, the share of a granddaughter being charged with a debt of her father, and share of son with amount of his debt to testatrix, which debts were made part of her residuary estate, was valid exercise of power. Monjo v. Widmayer, 94 N. Y. S. 835.

91. Where testator gave his wife all his realty and personalty "for her own use and for the maintenance and education of my children during her natural life, and after her death all of said property then remaining" to be divided among children, held to give her unlimited power to sell and convey, particularly in view of provisions giving her such power as executrix. Wenger v. Thompson [Iowa] 105 N. W. 333.

92. Where widow was given life estate in land with limited power to sell in case the "use and improvement" thereof should be insufficient for her support. Bartlett v. Buckland [Conn.] 63 A. 350.

93. Will devised land to niece for her sole use, free from management, control, and debts of her husband, with a provision that if she sold it the proceeds must be invested in other realty and the title taken to her in the same manner, and that the purchaser must see to the reinvestment of the proceeds in the prescribed manner, and that no title should pass until this was done. Held that deed to land by niece and her husband passed no title to the grantee, where proceeds of sale were paid to husband and never reinvested as directed. Bell v. Bair [Ky.] 89 S. W. 732. Where daughter was given defeasible fee with power to sell and dispose of the property and reinvest the proceeds in other suitable property to be held on the same conditions, held that, where she joined in petition to sell estate, and tendered sufficient deed after the sale, the purchaser took good

Lapse, failure, and forfeiture.[94]—A trust may fail because in view of the circumstances it has become wholly impracticable,[95] and charitable gifts lapse where existing conditions make testator's purpose wholly impossible of accomplishment.[96] A gift to an institution lapses where there is no such institution in existence,[97] and a contingent remainder where the remainderman dies before the happening of the contingency.[98] An elective gift in lieu of another does not fail because it becomes impossible to elect.[99] Ordinarily a legacy or devise will lapse by the death of the legatee or devisee during testator's lifetime,[1] in the absence of a provision to the contrary,[2] but this rule does not apply to a legacy expressly given in payment of a debt.[3] For the purpose of preventing lapses, statutes in many states give the share of one so dying to his issue or heirs,[4] particularly in the case of gifts to testator's children, descendants, or relations.[5] title, there being nothing in the will requiring him to see to the reinvestment of the purchase money, particularly where court retained control of such money to require its reinvestment. Hartring's Ex'x v. Milward's Ex'r [Ky.] 90 S. W. 260.

94. See 4 C. L. 1932.

95. As where it must have expired before it could be organized and would cost more than could be dispensed. Gift of income of $2,000 to one who lived but a month. Harlow v. Bailey [Mass.] 75 N. E. 259.

96. Charitable gifts lapse where conditions existing at time of testator's death make his actual charitable purpose impossible of accomplishment. Brown v. Condit [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 1055. Bequest of residue to "the hospital fund for sick seamen" at a certain navy yard, "care of W. chaplain," held to have lapsed, where W. was not chaplain of the navy yard and died before testatrix, and there was no fund maintained for the benefit of such seamen. Id.

97. Where there is no such institution in existence, and was none at testatrix's death. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998.

98. Cutter v. Burroughs [Me.] 61 A. 767.

99. Where widow's right of election fails by reason of her death within a year the legacy given her in lieu of dower does not fail with it but right to collect legacy vests in her executor. Flynn v. McDermott [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 931, afg. 102 App. Div. 56, 92 N. Y. S. 1126.

1. Gift in trust to brother, if living, and, if not, then to his issue held to have lapsed where he died without issue during lifetime of testatrix, and trust resulted in favor of heirs at law and next of kin of testatrix. Varick v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 151. Except in so far as rule has been changed by statute, Legacy given to one not a descendant of testator who was, to testator's knowledge, dead when will was executed, lapses and does not pass to legatee's next of kin. Roberts v. Bosworth, 107 App. Div. 511, 95 N. Y. S. 239.

2. Where residuary estate was given in trust for three sisters, each share to be invested and rents and profits to be paid over to sisters respectively during their lives, on the death of any one of them her share to go to her children as she should appoint, and in default of any appointment such children to take equally, and if no children, the share to go to the sister's next of kin, held that the share of sister dying without issue before death of testatrix did not lapse, but passed to her next of kin. Varick v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 151.

3. McNeal v. Pierce [Ohio] 75 N. E. 938.

4. Civ. Code § 3330 providing that if a legatee dies before the testator, or if dead when the will is executed, but shall have issue living at the death of the testator, such legacy if absolute shall not lapse, but shall vest in the issue in the same proportion as if inherited directly from their deceased ancestor, does not apply where gift is to a class, and some member of the class survives testator. Davis v. Sanders, 123 Ga. 177, 51 S. E. 298. Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 93, § 320, no devise shall lapse or fail of taking effect by reason of the death of the devisee in testator's lifetime, but it shall, in such case, have the same effect and operation in law to pass the estate devised as if the devisee had survived testator. Lindsay v. Wilson [Md.] 63 A. 566. Devise to husband who predeceased testatrix held to have passed to his sole heir at law. Id.

5. When a legacy or devise is given to a descendant of testator, or to a brother or sister of testator, or to a descendant of a brother or sister, and the devisee or legatee dies during testator's lifetime, leaving children or descendants of children who shall survive testator, the devise or legacy does not lapse, but vests in such children or descendants. Laws 1887, p. 63, c. 47, 3 Gen. St. p. 3763. Varick v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 151. This statute applies to will executed prior to its enactment, where testatrix dies subsequent thereto. Id. Where on death of sister, her share was to go to her children, and she predeceased testatrix leaving two children and a grandchild, the latter being a daughter of a son who predeceased his mother, held that the granddaughter was entitled to an interest in such share under the statute. Id. Whenever any estate, real or personal, shall be devised or bequeathed to a child or other descendant of testator, who shall die during testator's lifetime leaving a child or other descendant who shall survive testator, such devise or legacy shall not lapse, but the property shall vest in the surviving child or other descendant of the legatee or devisee as if the latter had died intestate after testator. 2 Rev. St. [1st Ed.] p. 66, pt. 2, c. 6, tit. 1, § 52. Pimel v. Betje-

Partial invalidity.[6]—Since it is the policy of the law to carry out the testamentary intention so far as possible, valid portions of the will will be allowed to stand and the invalid provisions alone cut off, where the two are distinct and separable, and testator's intention will not be subverted thereby.[7]

Residuary clauses.[8]—A residuary clause relates to the surplus of an estate after all debts and particular legacies are discharged.[9] No particular form of expression is necessary to constitute a residuary bequest or devise, anything showing an intention to pass all the property not otherwise disposed of being sufficient.[10] Residuary mann [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 157, rvg. 99 App. Div. 559, 91 N. Y. S. 49. Statute applies to case where legacy is given to one who is dead when the will is executed. Id. Legacy given to one not a descendant of testator who was, to testator's knowledge, dead when will was executed, cannot be upheld as a gift to legatee's next of kin on theory that testator supposed it would go to them under the law. Roberts v. Bosworth, 107 App. Div. 511, 95 N. Y. S. 239. Effect of Rev. St. 1905, § 5971, is to prevent the lapsing of devises and bequests clearly made to a child or other relative of testator when such primary devisee dies before testator, but leaving issue which survives him, unless to give it that effect would be subversive of a dispositive intention clearly expressed in the will. Larwill's Ex'rs v. Ewing [Ohio] 76 N. E. 503. Where will making bequest to testator's sister made no disposition of the property in case she should predecease him, held that provision in codicil that testator had intentionally omitted several relatives and that he had decided to exclude from participation in his estate all persons not mentioned in will or codicil did not prevent statute from becoming operative on death of sister during testator's lifetime, and in such case her surviving child took her share. Id.

6. See 4 C. L. 1933.

7. Though effect cannot be given to the entire will or to certain entire provisions thereof, valid provisions which can be separated from the rest of the will without doing violence to testator's general intention will be given effect. Landram v. Jordan, 25 App. D. C. 291. Reid v. Voorhees, 216 Ill. 236, 74 N. E. 804. Void provisions will be cut off and disregarded where by so doing the main testamentary scheme and purpose of testator can be preserved and carried into effect. Such parts only should be eliminated as will cause the least disturbance of the testamentary scheme. In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879. Void provision may be eliminated even if it is only a part of a sentence. Id.

Provisions held independent: Primary trust estate to pay income held not invalidated by direction to use excess of income in improving realty or to invest it, the latter provision, if invalid, being separable. In re Heywood's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 755. Where an estate has been vested in trustees on several independent trusts, one of which is legal, though the others may not be, the estate of the trustees will be upheld to the extent necessary to enable them to execute the valid trust though avoided as to the others. Landram v. Jordan, 25 App. D. C. 291. Trust to pay income from certain property to one for life held separate from and independent of trust for remainderman, and hence not affected by invalidity of latter. Id. Neither the equitable life estate of one for whom the estate is given in trust, nor a vested remainder in fee is rendered void by an unlawful attempt to postpone the enjoyment or restrain the alienation of the fee, but such restraint alone will be avoided. Id. Where primary purpose of testatrix was to provide for sister and trust for her benefit was independent of every other provision, and not a part of any general plan or scheme, held that it would be separated from all directions for subsequent disposition of trust property and upheld as valid, regardless of whether such direction were valid or not. In re Mount's Will, 107 App. Div. 1, 95 N. Y. S. 490. Primary objects of testatrix's bounty being husband and children, held that remaining provisions whereby she attempted to provide for those who were to come after her daughters, and which contravened rule against perpetuities, could be disregarded. Hayden v. Sugden, 48 Misc. 108, 96 N. Y. S. 681. Words quoted in provision that in event of death of one of testator's daughters without issue before the time of distribution, fixed at 10 years from testator's death, her share should go to daughters surviving "at the time of distribution or payments," eliminated. In re Perry, 48 Misc. 285, 96 N. Y. S. 879.

Dispositions held dependent: Residue falls into intestacy when residuary disposal is by an entire trust void in part. Pitzel v. Schneider, 216 Ill. 87, 74 N. E. 779. Devise of realty void for remoteness carries with it bequest of personalty the amount of the two being equal and the purpose being equality of division between legatees and devisees. Reid v. Voorhees, 216 Ill. 236, 74 N. E. 804. Whole will held to fail because of invalidity of indivisible trust for three lives of testator's sons. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 989, rvg. 96 N. Y. S. 1116, 47 Misc. 475, 95 N. Y. S. 945. Annuity for widow, being part of testator's scheme, held to fall with trust. Id. Bequest held to be so dependent upon attempted disposition of residuary estate as part of same testamentary scheme as to fall with it. People's Trust Co. v. Flynn, 106 App. Div. 78, 94 N. Y. S. 436, rvg. 44 Misc. 6, 89 N. Y. S. 706. Where contingent remainders given grandchildren were void under rule against perpetuities, held that preceding particular estate in trust to pay income to children and grandchildren was also void. In re Kountz's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 1103.

9. Garrison v. Day [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 188.

10. Bequest of all personalty and realty clauses should always receive a broad and liberal interpretation, with a view of preventing intestacy as to any portion of the estate,[11] and where the residuary bequest is not circumscribed by clear expressions in the instrument and the title of the residuary legatee is not narrowed by special words of unmistakable import, such legatee will take whatever may fall into the residue.[12] In the absence of statute, and unless otherwise specifically provided, all personalty not otherwise specifically disposed of,[13] and all void or lapsed legacies of personalty, fall into the general residuary fund.[14] This rule does not, however, apply where the legacies and the residuum are given to the same legatees, in which case lapsed legacies become intestate property.[15] There is a conflict of authority as to whether it applies to lapsed and void devises of realty, some courts holding that it does[16] unless the will shows a contrary intention,[17] and others that such property descends as in case of intestacy.[18] to three persons named, share and share alike, held, in effect, a gift of all the residue of the estate after the payment of the debts and special legacies. Cronan v. Coll [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 1092. Provision "subject to the advancements hereinbefore mentioned, I hereby will and direct that all my property and estate not hereinbefore disposed of by this will shall be divided and paid as follows," held to be general residuary clause. Garrison v. Day [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 188. Gift to wife of "any other property not herein otherwise disposed of that may be in my possession at the time of my decease," held in view of the circumstances, not to be intended as a general residuary clause, and not to carry remainders in property previously given to wife for life. Adams v. Massey [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 916.

11. O'Connor v. Murphy, 147 Cal. 148, 81 P. 406.

12. Mills v. Tompkins, 110 App. Div. 212, 97 N. Y. S. 9, rvg. 47 Misc. 455, 95 N. Y. S. 962. Will recited that testator wished to dispose of all his personalty, and by later clause "gave and bequeathed" to his wife "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my property." Held that wife took realty belonging to testator. Mills v. Tompkins, 110 App. Div. 212, 97 N. Y. S. 9, rvg. 47 Misc. 455, 95 N. Y. S. 962.

13. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998. Where a codicil revokes the provisions as to two only of three residuaries, provides otherwise for them and divides what then remains, the original residuary gift remains unchanged as to the third not revoked and the ultimate residue to be divided is the undisposed of two-thirds. Harlow v. Bailey [Mass.] 75 N. E. 259. Testator provided that remainders, etc., should go to "my residuary devisees, named in the ninth clause of this my will." By the eighth clause, after making certain specific bequests, he gave "all the personal effects belonging to me and on storage in" a certain warehouse to a certain person, and by the ninth clause gave "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my property, of every kind and character," to another person. Held that personalty not specifically bequeathed, and not in the warehouse passed under the ninth clause. In re Donohue's Estate, 109 App. Div. 158, 95 N. Y. S. 821, rvg. 46 Misc. 370, 94 N. Y. S. 1087. Will gave all testator's property with the exception of a certain sum to his wife in trust for certain purposes with remainder over, and gave residue of estate to her absolutely. Held that she took the excepted sum absolutely under residuary clause and not in trust. Mitchell v. Mitchell [Wis.] 105 N. W. 216. A general residuary bequest of personalty carries with it everything that falls into the residue after the making of the will by lapse, invalid disposition, or other accident. Leggett v. Stevens [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 874. Undisposed of half of remainder in sum given to widow for her support held to pass to general residuary legatee. Id.

14. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998. Where bequest to found scholarship was adjudged invalid, held that fund provided for therein would pass under residuary clause. Speer v. Colbert, 200 U. S. 130, 50 Law. Ed.—, afg. 24 App. D. C. 187. Testatrix bequeathed "all the balance of the money now on hand and of which I die possessed after the payment of my just debts and the legacies mentioned herein" to certain persons. Held that two of such legacies which lapsed by reason of the death of the legatees during testatrix's lifetime fell into the general residuum. Woodroof v. Hundley [Ala.] 39 So. 907.

15. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998.

16. The devisees under a general residuary clause take all property described in a particular devise which for any reason fails to be effectual. Under Civ. Code, § 1332, providing that a devise of testator's real property passes all realty which he was entitled to devise at the time of his death not otherwise effectually devised. O'Connor v. Murphy, 147 Cal. 148, 81 P. 406. Will devised and bequeathed "all the rest and residue of my property wherever situated" to wife and children in certain proportions, and subsequently attempted to create a trust in a portion of the realty included in the residue in favor of wife and one of such children until latter reached age of 18. Held that even if trust was invalid the realty became a part of the residue and did not pass as intestate property. Id. A general residuary clause carries with it any legacies or devises which for any reason have lapsed, or are void, or have been refused. Garrison v. Day [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 188. Where widow elected to take against will, one-third of realty in fee devised to her held to pass under residuary clause. Id. Where testator devised prop-

Substitutions.[19]—Estates may be created to take effect in the alternative.[20] Clauses disposing of shares of legatees and devisees dying before a given period do not, without a positive and distinct indication of such an intention, extend to shares accruing thereunder.[21]

Property not effectually disposed of.[22]—Any property which the will does not attempt to dispose of,[23] or which is not effectually disposed of[24] and which does not fall into the residue,[25] passes to the heirs at law or next of kin as in case of intestacy. It will, however, be presumed that testator intended to dispose of all his property in trust to pay income to his wife until his grandson should be 25, and then, or at his death before that time, to convey one-third to each of testator's sons and his wife in equal shares, or if either son should be dead, to pay his wife a certain sum, and the remainder to his grandson absolutely upon his attaining the age of 25, and one of the sons died before grandson leaving a wife, and grandson died before reaching age of 25, held that wife of deceased son was entitled to sum specified and that balance of son's share lapsed into residuum and passed to estate of grandson. In re Middleton's Estate, 212 Pa. 119, 61 A. 808.

17. Unless it is manifest from the provision of the will that testator intended to exclude a certain portion of his estate from the operation of the residuary clause. Must be manifest that in no event was such property intended to fall within the residuary clause, and it is not sufficient that it appear that testator simply intended to make a particular devise of a portion of his estate, which for some reason failed to be effectual. O'Connor v. Murphy, 147 Cal. 148, 81 P. 406.

18. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998.

19. See 4 C. L. 1935.

20. Gift of residuary estate to an established charity and another institution which testator wanted to establish, with provision that if he should not establish it the property should be divided between the established institution and his wife according to her will, held valid. Franklin v. Boone [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 93, 88 S. W. 262.

21. But if there is a manifest intention that the entire subject of disposition shall remain in mass until the period of distribution and then be distributed among one and the same class of objects, then the accruing shares will be carried over to those objects, together with the original shares. Boggs v. Boggs [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 1114. Where will, providing that proceeds of realty remaining unsold at death of testator's widow should be divided among testator's surviving children, clearly indicated an intention to separate children's respective interests, and to give them vested estates, held that the original share of any child dying during widow's life passed to the then surviving children, but the portions of shares accruing to any child by such survivorship passed at his death to his representatives, and not to the children surviving him. Id.

23. Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193.

Held to pass as in case of intestacy: Undisposed of land, where testator devises property which he does not own. Godfrey v. Wingert, 110 Ill. App. 563. Residue not disposed of. In re Brannan's Estate [Minn.] 107 N. W. 141. Undisposed of corpus of fund after expiration of trust estate. Hiles v. Garrison [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 865. Where testator gave wife an estate for life in realty and personalty and at her death gave two-thirds of what remained to a certain university, but failed to dispose of the other third, and university accepted from the executrix a sum less than such two-thirds in full satisfaction of the gift to it, held that balance of such two-thirds and the undisposed of one-third passed as in case of intestacy. Walker v. Bobbitt, 114 Tenn. 700, 88 S. W. 327.

24. Held to pass as in case of intestacy: Share of daughter of life tenant, dying without issue before death of life tenant, where will directed that estate should be held in trust for lives of children of life tenant to pay income to them, with remainder over to grandchildren on their arriving at age of 21, since shares of children were to be considered separately in reference to their disposition after their death. Minot v. Doggett [Mass.] 77 N. E. 629. Property given in trust for benefit of son, where trust so rested in personal discretion of trustee as to terminate on latter's death, and there was no direction as to disposition of the property in case trustee predeceased son, and no gift to son could be implied. Benedict v. Dunning, 110 App. Div. 303, 97 N. Y. S. 259. Property disposed of by void trust, there being no provision as to the ultimate disposition of the body of the estate. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 989, rvg. 96 N. Y. S. 1116, 47 Misc. 475, 95 N. Y. S. 945. Void charitable trust. Hegeman's Ex'rs v. Roome [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 392. Void charitable bequest. Moore v. Deyo, 212 Pa. 102, 61 A. 884. Property devised under trust which was invalid because no beneficiary was named. Filkins v. Severn, 127 Iowa, 738, 104 N. W. 346. Trust contravening rule against perpetuities. In re Kountz's Estate [Pa.] 62 A. 1103. Lapsed charitable gift of residue. Brown v. Condit [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 1055. A lapsed residuary devise goes to the heirs of testatrix who are next of kin of equal degree, living at the time of her death, or their descendants by right of representation. Cutter v. Burroughs [Me.] 61 A. 767. Realty devised to institution, where there is no such institution in existence and was none such at testator's death, notwithstanding that there is a general residuary clause. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 218 Ill. 399, 75 N. E. 998.

erty,[26] and, if possible, a construction will be adopted which will prevent a partial intestacy.[27] Intestacy as to any part of the estate is to be determined as of the date of testator's death.[28] In New York accumulated surplus income not disposed of goes to those presumptively entitled to the next eventual estate.[29]

(§ 5) E. Of terms respecting administration, management, control, and disposal.[30]—Testator may delegate to another the power to name his executors, in which case the appointees will have exactly the same powers as if he had himself selected them.[31] In case testator designates the portion of his estate which is to be used for the payment of his debts, it alone may be resorted to for that purpose,[32] but income will not be accumulated to pay incumbrances where there is a gift of it and other provision is made for the payment of such incumbrances.[33] Whether interest on incumbrances and taxes on property given to the widow are to be paid out of income given to her or out of the general estate is a question of intention.[34]

26. Glore v. Scroggins [Ga.] 53 S. E. 690; Strawbridge v. Strawbridge [Ill.] 77 N. E. 78; Boehm v. Baldwin [Ill.] 77 N. E. 454; Long v. Hill, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 606. Making of will raises presumption that testator intended to dispose of all of his estate. O'Connor v. Murphy, 147 Cal. 148, 81 P. 406; Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665; Mills v. Tompkins, 110 App. Div. 212, 97 N. Y. S. 9, rvg. 47 Misc. 455, 95 N. Y. S. 962. Is strengthened by rule favoring a construction preventing partial intestacy. Id. Where the residue is given, every presumption is to be made that no intestacy was designed. Welsh v. Gist [Md.] 61 A. 665. The presumption, when applicable, may be relied on to support a contention that a gift asserted to be only one for life is in reality absolute, especially where there is no limitation over, and where the alleged intestacy would occur in the residuary clause. Id. Presumption is founded on presumed intention, and always yields to the actual intention when it can be gathered from the entire will. Adams v. Massey [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 916. Presumption held neutralized by presumption against intention to disinherit heir. Id.

27. Filkins v. Severn, 127 Iowa, 738, 104 N. W. 346; In re Blackstone's Estate, 47 Misc. 538, 95 N. Y. S. 977; In re Pilsbury's Will, 99 N. Y. S. 62. Will must, if possible, be so construed as to prevent partial intestacy. Civ. Code, § 1326. O'Connor v. Murphy, 147 Cal. 148, 81 P. 406. A construction favorable to testacy will always obtain when the language used reasonably admits of it. In re Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 95, 81 P. 315; In re Heywood's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 755. Construction disposing of entire estate will be adopted if that meaning can be reasonably given it. Strawbridge v. Strawbridge [Ill.] 77 N. E. 78. "Children" construed as "heirs" for purpose of avoiding partial intestacy. Id. When will is subject to two constructions the one preventing partial intestacy should be adopted. Gilmore v. Jenkins [Iowa] 106 N. W. 193. The rule does not apply so as to favor a construction which will prevent intestacy as to a part of testator's property, where he concededly died intestate as to another part. Id. Will not be applied so as to construe a gift of the "undivided one-fifth" of the west half of a certain tract to testator's five daughters as a gift of an undivided fifth to each of them, where no disposition was made of east half. Id.

31. Provision that, on the death of "either" of the executors and trustees appointed by the will, the "survivor" should "appoint some other individual in the place of the deceased executor," who should have all the power of an executor and trustee as if originally named in the will, held not to give authority to the person so appointed by the survivor to appoint another trustee on the death of such survivor. In re Boning's Estate [Pa.] 63 A. 296.

32. Where he provides that debts are to be paid out of a certain fund it is error to charge them to the general estate. Phillips v. Duckett, 112 Ill. App. 587. Devise of land "with the distinct understanding that" the devisee "is to pay and assume any and all indebtedness due by me on account of purchase money of said place," exonerates the testator's personalty from its primary liability therefor. Gordon v. James, 86 Miss. 719, 39 So. 18. Debt constitutes no part of the indebtedness of the estate, and having been assumed by devisee before widow elected to take under the statute, held that her interest in the land was free from any incumbrance by reason thereof. Id. Where the will directs the payment of all testator's debts from the personalty, a devisee of realty, incumbered by testator after the execution of the will, is entitled to have the incumbrance discharged out of the personalty, though persons to whom pecuniary and specific legacies have been given will be thereby disappointed. French v. Vradenburg's Ex'rs [Va.] 52 S. E. 695.

33. Testator left farm in trust, to pay income, rents, and profits to daughters for life, with remainder to their children, gave trustee power of sale under certain conditions, and empowered him, if a mortgage which incumbered the farm was called in, to mortgage the farm to an amount not exceeding the incumbrance. Farm produced an income over the interest of the mortgage and the necessary expenses. Held that testator intended such income to be divided between daughters, and trustee was not bound to accumulate it for the ultimate payment

As a general rule pecuniary legacies become payable one year from the death of the testator, and bear interest only from that date,[35] in the absence of any provision in the will showing a contrary intention.[36] In Louisiana the universal legatee is, in the absence of forced heirs, invested with the ownership and seisin of the universal legacy from the moment of the death of the testator.[37] Shares given in trust should ordinarily be paid over to the trustees rather than to the beneficiaries.[38] A direction to distribute equally between children does not forbid the turning over of the share of one of them to an administrator, or to one legally entitled to receive it.[39] One entitled to a specified portion of the net income of the estate is entitled to have the estate held intact for the purpose of its payment.[40] A court of equity may make a selection of property which the will directs to be made by commissioners appointed by the county court.[41] of the mortgage. Reed v. Longstreet [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 500.

34. Will held to give widow net annual income of a specified sum in addition to the use of a house, or the rents and income thereof, so that interest on mortgage on house, taxes, etc., were payable out of the income of the residuary estate, and not out of widow's income. In re King [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 584.

35. See Estates of Decedents, 5 C. L. 1183.

36. Will giving certain sums in trust to pay the principal to beneficiaries in specified installments, and directing that "at every payment of principal there shall be added to such payment all the accrued interest on the whole principal unpaid up to the date of such payment," held not to require payment of interest from date of testator's death. Redfield v. Marvin [Conn.] 63 A. 120. Pecuniary legacy to be paid "out of my residuary estate upon final distribution," held, in view of the whole will, not to be payable until time fixed for division of residuary estate by trustees, and not at time of final settlement of estate in probate court. McDevitt v. Hibben [Ill.] 77 N. E. 586. Legacy in lieu of dower does not draw interest until a year from testator's death in the absence of anything in the will showing an intention that it shall become due and payable before that time. In re Martens, 106 App. Div. 50, 94 N. Y. S. 297. Where testator devised realty to wife and also gave her legacy, and will provided that provisions for her were in lieu of dower, held that she was not entitled to interest from testator's death, Id. Where will directed that legacies were to be paid "not later than the expiration of six years after my decease," held that they did not commence to bear interest until the expiration of that time. Bank of Niagara v. Talbot, 96 N. Y. S. 976.

37. Under the maxim "Le morr saisit le vif." Civ. Code arts. 940-942. Tulane University v. Board of Assessors [La.] 40 So. 445. Rule that property is owned by succession pending administration means only that it is so held for purposes of administration, and not that it is so held in hostility to or exclusion of the ownership and legal seisin of the universal legatee. Id. Though any taxes assessed against the succession are in effect assessed against the universal legatee, since the universal legacy is composed of what is left after all particular legacies, debts, and charges are paid, it does not follow that, where universal legacy is exempt, the particular legacies are also exempt, but the latter being in the hands of the succession representative for payment to the legatees, are properly assessed to the succession. Universal legatee does not pay the tax, but receives that much less under the will. Id. Hence if property of such legatee enjoys immunity from taxation, the property composing such legacy is exempt, and cannot be assessed to the succession while the succession is in the course of administration. Id.

38. Testator held to have left the disembarrassment of the estate from the widow's dower in the modes prescribed by the will to the discretion of the trustee to be exercised to the best interests of the cestuis que trust. Shipley v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. [Md.] 62 A. 814. Fund subject to power held payable to trustees appointed by donee for the appointees of the fund and not direct to appointees themselves. Stone v. Forbes [Mass.] 75 N. E. 141. Testator gave residuary estate to executors in trust to divide principal into as many parts as he should leave grandchildren, to collect and pay over income, and to pay over to each of said grandchildren one of the parts as they respectively became of age. Held that on settlement of accounts of surviving executor he should be required to turn over the whole residue to himself as trustee for the purpose of making division though two of the grandchildren were of age, the shares of the latter being payable after division. In re McCormick, 46 Misc. 386, 94 N. Y. S. 1071.

39. As where testator gave property to four children of his brother and appointed third person "to distribute the proceeds of the said property equally between them." Darlington v. Turner, 202 U. S. 195, 50 Law. Ed.—, rvg. 24 App. D. C. 573.

40. Where widow was entitled to one-third of the net income of the estate during life or widowhood, held that she was entitled to have the estate held intact for that purpose, and executor would not, at instance of remainderman, be required to sell the estate after giving widow satisfactory assurances. Marfield v. McMurdy, 25 App. D. C. 342.

41. Where will gave wife a certain sum to be selected from realty or personalty by commissioners, held that court of general equity jurisdiction had power to do what

Whether an executor[42] or trustee has a power of sale,[43] and the extent of such a power,[44] are questions of intention. A direction to divide an estate does not include a power to sell it,[45] but a power to partition realty does when the land is so situated that actual partition cannot be had.[46] An unexecuted power of sale given to the executor by the will for the purpose of distributing the proceeds in the manner provided is not revoked by an order of the court settling the estate and discharging the executor.[47] Devisees take subject to an express power of sale conferred on the executor,[48] which can only be defeated by a valid election on the part of all of them to take the realty in kind.[49] Trust powers may be implied by the fact that ordinary limitations of executorial power are negatived.[50] A power given executors to partition realty devolves upon the court if for any reason they are disqualified, or are unable or refuse to act.[51] Courts of equity have full power to authorize the conversion of property contrary to the provisions of a will, and differing from the purposes and plans of the testator, when necessary for the preservation of the estate.[52] Discretionary powers to sell,[53] or to apportion sums given to a class among its members,[54] or to pay commissioners might have done, and election was properly made where she filed a pleading in a proceeding for the sale of the realty electing to take realty, it not appearing that she got any peculiar advantage, or that any one suffered any detriment thereby. Hartring's Ex'x v. Milward's Ex'r [Ky.] 90 S. W. 260.

42. Testatrix gave realty and personalty to certain persons to be divided among them in unequal shares, and provided that such shares should not be paid until donees should become of age, but in the meantime should be deposited in a bank on interest, and that her executor was "not to be prevented" from applying any share during the minority of the donee to his or her support and maintenance in his discretion. She then empowered executor to sell and dispose of estate as the law might require him to do. Held that executor had power of sale of both realty and personalty. Weber v. Waldeck [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 495.

43. Will held to give trustees power to sell property of trust estate for purpose of reinvestment, subject to limitations of the trust, and the approval of the court. Bertron v. Polk [Md.] 61 A. 616. Will held to give trustees power to convert realty into money for the purpose of making a division among the beneficiaries of the trust. Varick v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 151.

44. Power to sell and reinvest personalty for the purpose of raising an income held not absolute or unqualified. Linn v. Downing, 216 Ill. 64, 74 N. E. 729. Provision ordering and directing executor to apply income to support and education of daughter, and ordering and directing sale of certain realty for that purpose if necessary, held to create an imperative power and trust duty, and not a mere naked and discretionary power to sell. Cutter v. Burroughs [Me.] 61 A. 767. Power held imperative where legacies were charged on land by implication whichever provision came first. Thissell v. Schillinger, 186 Mass. 180, 71 N. E. 300. Where realty was given to trustees with provision that no sale should be made during lifetime of beneficiaries without their consent, "nor" unless it was necessary to pay debts, held that testator intended "nor" in the sense of "or," and that power could be exercised without reference to necessity to sell to pay debts. Reed v. Longstreet [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 500. Will directed payment of debts, expenses, etc., and authorized executrix "for that purpose" to sell such standing timber as might be sufficient therefor, "leaving to the good judgment of my executrix" what portions thereof to sell. Held that she had no authority to sell except for the purpose of meeting debts, etc. Linzy v. Whitney, 96 N. Y. S. 1075.

45. Glore v. Scroggins [Ga.] 53 S. E. 690.

46. O'Donaghue v. Smith [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 621, afg. 85 App. Div. 324, 83 N. Y. S. 398. As where power of sale given by will is revoked by codicil, but codicil states that testator does not intend to alter beneficial interests in land given by will, or trust therein created. Id.

47. Does not revoke power of sale given executor which directs him to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds among certain beneficiaries, where power has not been executed when such order is entered. Starr v. Willoughby, 218 Ill. 485, 75 N. E. 1029.

48. Cronan v. Coll [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 1092.

49. See Election and Waiver, 5 C. L. 1078.

50. Where testatrix gave realty and personalty to certain persons to be divided among them in unequal shares, provided that shares should not be paid until donees should become of age, but in the meantime should be deposited in the bank on interest, that executor was "not to be prevented" from applying any share during the minority of the donee to his or her support in his discretion, and then gave executor a power of sale, held that, as to the share of any minor, the executor was a trustee and was required to deposit his share at interest and had implied power to use it for support of minor in his discretion. Weber v. Waldeck [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 495.

51. O'Donaghue v. Smith [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 621, afg. 83 N. Y. S. 398.

52. Must be some important and controlling reason for such action, it being insufficient that court may think some other plan better than that of testator. Johnson v. Buck [Ill.] 77 N. E. 163. Bill held not to state facts justifying sale of property. Id.

or withhold income or principal given to a beneficiary, must not be exercised arbitrarily, the discretion being a sound legal one.[55]

Testator may designate the kind of property in which funds are to be invested,[56] direct the employment of an accountant,[57] and fix the compensation of the trustee[58] or executor.[59]

Trustees need not qualify for a trust become functus officii.[60] Trustees should be appointed by the court in case none are appointed by the will,[61] or the will so directs.[62] Where only one of several trustees qualifies, he may exercise powers conferred by the will.[63] Giving powers to executors or their survivor negatives any power to

53. As a general rule a court of equity will give its sanction to a sale made by a trustee in the exercise of a discretionary power given by will, if it is fairly and reasonably exercised, having regard to the interest and character of the trust reposed in him. Bertron v. Polk [Md.] 61 A. 616. Exceptions to sale of stock upheld where, under will, proceeds would have to be invested so as to reduce income. Id.

54. Cannot be exercised arbitrarily, or through whim or caprice, but must be a sound legal discretion, its conclusions must be based on the application of the principles of right and justice to the facts, and the facts to be considered must be facts justly and legitimately bearing upon the comparative claims of the parties for recognition as recipients of the testator's bounty. Stephenson v. Norris [Wis.] 107 N. W. 343. In order to justify discrimination in amount as between beneficiaries there must be real and substantial differences of situation germane to the subject, and calling for differences in treatment. Discrimination among beneficiaries whose circumstances are substantially the same would be arbitrary and capricious. Id. Will giving shares of estate in trust directing trustees, upon happening of certain events, to pay to descendants of beneficiaries certain portions of the estate, "giving to each of said descendants such portion thereof as my said trustees shall deem best," held to give trustees broad discretion to apportion sums given to a class among its members equally or unequally, or to cut off one or more entirely. Id. Such discretionary power held wholly distinct from discretionary power given by another provision authorizing them to withhold for unfitness or unworthiness, and not to be limited by latter provision. Id.

55. Court will intervene when it appears that any trustee, however broad his discretion, is so administering his trust that it fails to accomplish the purpose for which it was created. Where trustee was directed to pay over to beneficiary so much of the income of certain stock as might, in his judgment, be necessary for his support, and it appeared that latter was sick and had no income except a pension, and that entire income and pension would be insufficient for his support, held that it would be an abuse of discretion for trustee to withhold any part of the income. In re Van Decar, 49 Misc. 39, 98 N. Y. S. 309. Will giving executor authority to pay over principal and increase of trust fund to certain persons, at such time or times and in such manner as such executor may deem best for their interests, held to give executor sound discretion in the premises, to be exercised according to his best judgment and in the best of faith, and not an absolute discretion. In re Wilkin [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 1105, rvg. 100 App. Div. 509, 91 N. Y. S. 1118. Where residue of estate was bequeathed to trustee to pay income to son in such amounts and at such times as should, according to the judgment and discretion of the trustee, seem best, in sums not to exceed $10 at any one time, and on son's death to transfer all the property, interest, and income then in his hands or possession, held that court would not interfere with exercise of trustee's discretion unless upon a showing of arbitrary wrongdoing amounting to a deprivation of the beneficiary of the benefits of the trust. Dubois v. Barbour [R. I.] 61 A. 752. Refusal to pay debts of beneficiary held not to warrant interference. Id.

56. Purchase of realty is a proper investment where will directs fund to be invested "on bond and mortgage, or in other property." In re Trelease, 96 N. Y. S. 318.

57. Executor held properly allowed amount paid accountant where his employment was suggested by the will. In re Arnton, 106 App. Div. 326, 94 N. Y. S. 471.

58. Provision in will charging estate with payment of such reasonable compensation to trustees "as they may deem just and proper according to the time and attention they may severally devote" to the affairs of the estate held to entitle them only to such sum as the law itself would allow, or as the court would determine to be reasonable. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678.

59. Where will gave executor certain sum annually in lieu of commissions "so long as he acts as executor of this will," held that he was entitled to such compensation beyond the period of administration, so called, particularly where will contemplated that executorship should last several years. Marfield v. McMurdy, 25 App. D. C. 342. Where will provides for payment of compensation out of the income generally, without any limitation, a deficiency of compensation in one year may be made up from the excess of income in succeeding years, particularly where no provisions of the will will be made to fail thereby. Id.

60. Trust for support of person already deceased. Harlow v. Bailey [Mass.] 75 N. E. 259.

61. Fact that no trustee is appointed will not prevent execution of trust. Hiles v. Garrison [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 865.

62. Where will provided for appointment of trustee by circuit court in case testator's daughter should die, held that it was court's appoint a substitute in case only one renounces.[64] Powers or trusts not resting in the personal discretion of a trustee or executor may be exercised or executed by substituted trustees or administrators.[65]

(§ 5) F. Abatement, ademption, and satisfaction. Abatement.[66]—As a general rule where the payment of debts is charged on the personalty either by the will or by operation of law, personal property at large must first be taken, then the residuary legacy, then general pecuniary legacies, then specific legacies, and lastly realty devised by the will.[67] In case, however, the will shows an intent to divide the estate equally, the share of each devisee or legatee will abate ratably, no distinction being made between realty and personalty.[68] Demonstrative legacies abate only ratably with specific ones if the fund out of which they are primarily payable exists as a part of testator's estate at his death, but if it does not so exist they abate pro rata with general ones.[69] Devises and bequests abate ratably to make up the share of the widow when she elects to take against the will.[70] Losses due to the insolvency of the duty to do so on the happening of such contingency. Cruit v. Owen, 25 App. D. C. 514.

63. Where will appointed executor trustee and in case he should at any time cease to act, appointed two others to act in his stead, and executor resigned, one of the two others renounced, and the other was appointed trustee by the court, held that latter was entitled to exercise discretionary powers given as part of trust. In re Wilkin [N. Y.] 75 N. E. 1105, rvg. 100 App. Div. 509, 91 N. Y. S. 1118. Provision in will giving to trustees "and to any two of them" power to sell realty held intended to enlarge power of trustees rather than to restrict it, and not to render inapplicable Code Civ. Proc. § 2642, making sales by executors or trustees who qualify valid though others who do not qualify do not join, and deed by one trustee passed title where others did not qualify. Draper v. Montgomery, 108 App. Div. 63, 95 N. Y. S. 904.

64. Mullanny v. Nangle, 212 Ill. 247, 72 N. E. 385, afg. 113 Ill. App. 457.

65. Power conferred on husband as trustee to sell property "as he may deem best" held a personal trust which could not be exercised by substituted administrator. Hageman's Ex'rs v. Roome [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 392. Trust for benefit of son held to so rest in personal discretion of trustee that it terminated at latter's death. Benedict v. Dunning, 110 App. Div. 303, 97 N. Y. S. 259. Alternative devise to trustees to apply proceeds to maintenance and education of men preparing for the ministry, "to be selected by said trustees or any two of them," held not to repose personal confidence in trustees as to selection of beneficiaries, such power of selection pertaining to the office of trustee in any event, and hence charity was not limited to lifetime of trustees named, but was a permanent one, and was not rendered invalid by their death. Woodroof v. Hundley [Ala.] 39 So. 907. Court would appoint others. Id. Where testator gave property to trustees "to pay and see to the application of" a certain sum to a college to be used for the endowment for the prosecution of a certain line of research, held that there was no such personal trust as would defeat the bequest on the death or resignation of the trustees, but the court would appoint their successors. Speer v. Colbert, 200 U. S. 130, 50 Law. Ed.—, afg. 24 App. D. C. 187. Same held true of bequest of income of certain sum to maintain a scholarship for the study of medicine, preferably in a named university, otherwise in some college in District of Columbia. Id. Trust powers conferred on an "executor" are construed as attaching to the office, conversely they attach to the person if he be a trustee though also an executor. Mullanny v. Nangle, 212 Ill. 247, 72 N. E. 385, afg. 113 Ill. App. 457.

66. See 4 C. L. 1939.

67. Gordon v. James, 86 Miss. 719, 39 So. 18. The doctrine of forced contribution does not apply against specific devisees in favor of specific legatees, as by statute it does among devisees, but specific legacies must be first obliterated before specific devises can be abated for the payment of debts, particularly in view of Code 1892, §§ 1881, 1893, making personalty the primary fund for payment of debts. Id.

68. Where it appears that testator intended, in the distribution of his property among his wife and children, to make them as nearly equal as possible, and devises and bequeaths his property specifically among them, and charges no specific property with the payment of his debts. O'Day v. O'Day [Mo.] 91 S. W. 921. Where will first directed payment of debts, then made specific gifts of realty and personalty to wife and children, and then gave all the remaining realty and personalty in equal shares to widow and children, no specific property being charged with payment of debts, and shares of children being substantially equal, held that entire residuary estate must first be disposed of to pay debts. Id.

69. O'Day v. O'Day [Mo.] 91 S. W. 921.

70. Devises and bequests abate ratably to make up the share of the widow when she elects to take under the statute. Gordon v. James, 86 Miss. 719, 39 So. 18. Under Code § 3279, providing that the amount allowed on any claim which it becomes necessary to satisfy in disregard of or in opposition to the will must be taken ratably from the interests of heirs, devisees and legatees, where testator gave his wife a life estate in six-tenths of his property with remainder over and gave the balance to others, and widow elected to take her dower, held that the executor are borne equally by the whole estate.[71] Wills frequently provide that legatees shall take pro rata in case the estate is insufficient to pay legacies in full.[72] Legacies given in payment of debts,[73] or in lieu of dower,[74] do not abate, but a devise of land charged with the payment of the unpaid purchase money does.[75]

Ademption.[76]—A devise of realty is ordinarily adeemed by the sale or alienation of the property by testator during his lifetime.[77] So, too, a legacy is adeemed where testator, before his death, pays the full amount of it to the legatee in full satisfaction thereof.[78] amount thereof should be deducted from the entire estate rather than from the part given to her for life, her use being immediately terminated on her election. Dillavou v. Dillavou [Iowa] 104 N. W. 432.

NOTE. Abatement to make up dower: Previous to the decision of Dillavou v. Dillavou [Iowa] 104 N. W. 432, the rule in Iowa has been as laid down in Hoskins v. Hoskins, 43 Iowa, 452, that the widow's dower should be deducted from the share set aside for her in the will. In the Hoskins case, which was cited and relied upon by the contestant in the Dillavou case, the estate was divided into moieties, one of which was given in fee to one daughter, the other to the widow for life with a remainder over to another daughter. The widow having elected to take her dower, the court held that it should be deducted from the moiety given to her in the will, and that the moiety given to the first daughter should not contribute. This was on the ground that the testator evidently intended to discriminate between the daughters. Aside from the fact, which the court in the Dillavou case says was manifestly overlooked, that the statute governs absolutely, it is difficult to see how the decision in the Hoskins case could have been reached. It stands alone in support of the proposition that the widow's dower should be taken from only part of the estate. While the amount of the dower is regulated by the statute it must be taken from the entire estate. 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 117. Darrington v. Rogers, 1 Gill [Md.] 403; Lilly v. Menke, 126 Mo. 190; Appeal of Heineman, 92 Pa. 95; Wallace v. Wallace's Ex'r, 15 W. Va. 722. And if advancements have been already made to the heirs or legatees they must be regarded as part of the estate for the purpose of computing the dower. Plympton v. Plympton, 6 Allen [Mass.] 178; Worth v. Atkins, 4 Jones Eq. [N. C.] 272.—See 4 Mich. L. R. 84.

71. Where will directed estate to be divided into equal shares to be held in trust for brothers and sisters, and on their death the principal to be paid to their children, and, after paying over a portion of such shares to a part of the children the executor became insolvent, held that the loss was to be borne by the whole estate, and that nothing more should be paid to those who had received partial payments until the others had received an equal amount. Barret v. Gwyn [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1096.

72. Direction in codicil for pro rata payment "of the sums given and bequeathed to sundry persons and institutions as enumerated in my will and codicil if there should not be sufficient money left from the salable portions of my estate to pay the full amounts of the sums" so given, held that all legacies, except specific bequests, and including legacies given out of trust fund abated pro rata in case there was not enough to pay them in full after paying debts, expenses, etc. Emmons v. Dow [Mass.] 77 N. E. 310. Where the estate proved insufficient to permit of the carrying of the provision for the widow and also payment of bequests to children and grandchildren, held that the children and grandchildren take pro rata under a subsequent clause providing that the sum remaining be divided pro rata among them. Moore v. Idlor, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 19.

73. Dower of widow electing to take against will should be set off from property other than that devised in consideration for services pursuant to contract by decedent, to which she consented. Brandes v. Brandes [Iowa] 105 N. W. 499.

74. If, at the time of the making of the will, the wife had an inchoate right to any dower out of the testator's estate. Legacy is not a voluntary bounty or favor in such case, but is based on a meritorious consideration. Plum v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 763. Will held to show an intent that legacy was to be in lieu of dower, though not expressly so stating. Id. Testator bequeathed to his wife, in lieu of dower, the interest on a certain sum which was charged on land. Sum was invested in a mortgage on all testator's land, which, default having been made in payment of interest, was foreclosed for sum insufficient to pay principal and interest. Held that legacy to widow would not abate so long as any portion of testator's realty or the proceeds thereof remained, and hence her administrator was entitled to preference over other legatees in payment of interest accruing before widow's death. Id.

75. One accepting a devise of land charged with the payment of, the unpaid purchase money is not a purchaser for value, but occupies the same position as the other devisees and legatees and his share must abate ratably to make up the share of the widow who elects to take against the will. Gordon v. James, 86 Miss. 719, 39 So. 18.

76. See 4 C. L. 1939.

77. Upon the sale of devised realty by the testator during his lifetime the proceeds thereof of which he may die possessed will not be substituted for the property itself, unless the will so directs. In re Miller's Will [Iowa] 105 N. W. 105. Sale or alienation by testator during his lifetime of devised property works revocation of devise, and it lapses. Hoffman v. Steubing, 49 Misc. 157, 98 N. Y. S. 706. Testator gave wife certain realty free of incumbrances and a sum of money which provisions were to be in lieu

Satisfaction of debts by legacies.[79]—A legacy to a creditor will not be deemed a satisfaction of the debt unless the will shows that testator so intended.[80] A gift "in consideration of" services is not an acknowledgment of a debt.[81]

(§ 5) G. Proceedings to construe wills.[82]—In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary,[83] courts of equity have jurisdiction to construe wills[84] for the purpose of directing the executor or administrator in the performance of his duties,[85] or where a trust is involved,[86] or where such relief is incidental to the relief sought in suits of which they have jurisdiction.[87] There must, however, be a reasonable doubt as to the meaning of the language used,[88] and some equitable estate or interest must be involved.[89] The question whether a legatee or devisee takes for his own of dower. During his lifetime he sold the realty, his wife joining in the conveyance, grantee giving a purchase money mortgage to testator's daughter by his direction. Held that widow was only entitled to the money bequest in lieu of dower and was put to an election whether she would take it or under the statute. She was not entitled to an equivalent of the proceeds of the sale of the realty nor to the amount of a mortgage thereon when it was sold. Id. Testator gave certain realty, "or the proceeds derived from the premises," and a certain trust fund to his daughter in remainder, if living on the happening of a certain contingency, or if not directed that the title to said property and the fund "or, in the event of the sale hereinafter had of said premises, then the proceeds derived from the same," to be paid to his grandchild. Testator sold the realty during his lifetime. Held that devise over was revoked but that proceeds of sale passed to devisee. Id.

78. Gallagher v. Martin [Md.] 62 A. 247.

79. See 4 C. L. 1940.

80. Not where will states some other motive or reason for making the gift. In re Arnton, 106 App Div. 326, 94 N. Y. S. 471. Not where legacy was larger than debt and will recited that it was made for purpose of repaying those who had been kind to testator during his illness. Id.

81. Legacy reciting that it is "in consideration of her care for" testator's mother and son held not to imply a debt, but a bounty, and not to be an acknowledgment of a legal obligation so as to remove the bar of limitations in an action for such services. McNeal v. Pierce [Ohio] 75 N. E. 938.

82. See 4 C. L. 1940.

83. Probate court has exclusive original jurisdiction to construe wills when such construction is necessary to the administration of the estate. Appleby v. Watkins [Minn.] 104 N. W. 301. Nothing short of an express statute will make the jurisdiction of the county court to construe wills exclusive so as to prevent circuit court from giving directions to trustees. Laws 1905, c. 163, p. 239, giving county courts jurisdiction to construe wills in proceedings brought solely for that purpose does not, and does not purport to abridge the powers of the circuit court in that regard. Stephenson v. Norris [Wis.] 107 N. W. 343.

84. The chancery court is clothed with the fullest jurisdiction to determine all matters relating to the administration of estates, and is always open for the hearing of a petition by anyone interested asking for the construction of the will of a decedent. Owens v. Waddell [Miss.] 39 So. 459.

85. An executor or administrator with the will annexed may ask and receive the aid and direction of a court of equity in the execution of his trust when his duty with respect thereto is a matter of doubt. Norris v. Beardsley [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 425.

86. Court of equity held to have jurisdiction to construe will attempting to create trust. Filkins v. Severn, 127 Iowa, 738, 103 N. W. 346. The circuit court has plenary jurisdiction over actions for the construction of wills especially where trust powers are involved. Stephenson v. Norris [Wis.] 107 N. W. 343. It is not necessary in such cases that there should be an actual litigation begun or contest pending to justify the court in entertaining the action. Id. A trustee is entitled to the protection of the court in the execution of his trusts, and when real and serious doubts confront him as to his duty, is entitled to, and should ask for, the advice of the court to guide him. Case held proper one for exercise of such jurisdiction. Id.

87. The original jurisdiction of the district court over an action to quiet title to realty is not defeated by the fact that the construction of a will is necessarily involved in the inquiry. St. James Orphan Asylum v. Shelby [Neb.] 106 N. W. 604. Whenever the equitable relief sought in an action in the court of chancery involves the construction of a will, that court will construe the same so far as requisite to that relief. Such construction may be necessary in statutory suit to quiet title. Morris v. Le Bel [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 501. A suit for the construction of a will and the appointment of a trustee to execute such trusts as it may be determined are thereby established, is properly brought in the court of chancery, since the relief sought is the appointment of a trustee, and the necessity for such appointment requires the construction of this will as an incident to the relief sought. Hiles v. Garrison [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 865.

88. Executor or administrator cannot maintain a bill in equity to construe the will, when the case is clear, and there is no reasonable doubt as to his duty. Whether there is a reasonable doubt depends on circumstances of each case. Norris v. Beardsley [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 425.

89. A bill to construe an ambiguous devise of land will not lie where no equitable estate or interest is involved. Not where matter in dispute is between rival claimants under conflicting legal titles. Norris v. Beardsley [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 425. In any benefit or upon some trust which is not in any way disclosed in or suggested by the will is not open for consideration.[99] Statutes prohibiting the bringing of actions against executors, or proceedings to compel distribution until the expiration of a certain time after the grant of letters, have no application to such suits.[91]

All other powers to entertain proceedings for the construction of wills depend on the statutes of the various states.[92] Statutory proceedings for construction may generally be maintained by parties in interest.[93] As a general rule there is no power to construe a will in anticipation of and in order to defeat probate.[94] Service of process is regulated by statute.[95] The petition must set out the whole will, even though the construction of only one item is sought.[96]

In construing wills the court will not decide questions which may never be presented by actual conditions and occurrences, and are of no present importance,[97] nor event such a bill could not be entertained on behalf of an executor who is charged with no duty in respect to the land in dispute. Id. Court of equity has no jurisdiction of bill merely seeking opinion as to legal title to realty devised where executrix asks no instructions in regard to her duties, and no trust is involved nor equitable relief of any sort sought. Beard v. Beard [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 25.

90. In suit by executor. Manson v. Jack [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 394. Not in any event where the beneficiaries of the alleged trust, which is claimed to be void, are not parties. Id.

91. Where legatee was given comfortable support for life, held that she might file a petition in equity for the construction of the will and to fix the amount to be paid her without regard to Code 1892, § 1922, prohibiting the bringing of actions against an executor until six months after the date of his letters, or § 1961 authorizing a proceeding to compel distributien at any time after the expiration of 12 months from the grant of letters. Owens v. Waddell [Miss.] 39 So. 459.

92. Minnesota: The probate court has exclusive original jurisdiction to construe wills when such construction is necessary to the administration of the estate. Appleby v. Watkins [Minn.] 104 N. W. 301.

New York: Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2624, if party expressly puts in issue before surrogate the validity, construction, or effect of any disposition of personalty by will, he must construe it unless he refuses probate by reason of failure to prove matters specified in Id. § 2623. In re Pilsbury's Will, 99 N. Y. S. 62. Statute does not authorize construction before will is admitted. Id. Must determine it on decree if will is admitted. In re Stocum's Will, 94 N. Y. S. 588. While he has no power to pass on a devise of land he may construe a will and declare the validity of a trust embracing personalty. Realty and personalty were blended. In re Trotter's Will, 182 N. Y. 465, 75 N. E. 305. May determine all questions of construction, though disposal of proceeds of realty is involved, whenever it may be necessary in order to accomplish distribution on an accounting. In re Keogh, 47 Misc. 37, 95 N. Y. S. 191, modified on other grounds, 98 N. Y. S. 433.

93. Where testator gave legacies to widow for life with remainder to others, thus constituting her trustee for the remainder-men, held that the widow's executor had capacity to sue for a construction of the will of testator and for an accounting for the purpose of obtaining directions as to the distribution of the remainder of such legacies. Leggett v. Stevens [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 874.

94. In re Davis' Will, 182 N. Y. 468, 75 N. E. 530.

95. Service of process by publication on a non-resident defendant in a suit to construe a will is authorized under Code § 3534. Dillavou v. Dillavou [Iowa] 106 N. W. 949.

96. A petition in a cause brought under Rev. St. 1906, § 6202, to obtain the construction of one item only of a will, which does not set forth the entire will is bad on general demurrer. Devenney v. Devenney [Ohio] 77 N. E. 688.

97. In construing will on application for partial distribution on theory that primary trust created by the will is void court will not determine validity of provision as to disposal of excess income by trustees which is entirely independent of primary trust to pay income held to be valid, particularly where it does not appear that there is, or is likely to be, any such excess. In re Heywood's Estate [Cal.] 82 P. 755. Under a petition for instructions to testamentary trustees the court is not called upon to consider future conditions which may not arise in the form anticipated by the parties, or to give directions beyond what is required to enable the trustees to perform their present duties. Peabody v. Tyszkiewicz [Mass.] 77 N. E. 839. Executor or administrator cannot maintain a bill to construe gifts of personalty where the amount thereof is small and it does not appear that he has obtained, or can obtain, possession of any of it, or that after paying the expenses of administration, there will be anything left for distribution. Norris v. Beardsley [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 425. Executor not entitled to directions as to the distribution of property which is not yet in his hands and in regard to which he is not then, and may never be, charged with any duty of distribution. Bill for construction for purpose of obtaining instructions as to proper disposition of money which it was alleged would come into complainant's hands as proceeds of sale of property in which testatrix was interested, held premature when brought before land had been sold or its proceeds had been paid to him. Id. Executor not will a provision be construed at the instance of one whom it cannot possibly affect.[98] The court is not concerned with the widow's rights under an antenuptial contract purporting to set aside a certain sum as a marriage settlement, where at testator's death no specific property has been set aside for that purpose.[99]

The usual rules as to the conclusiveness of judgments[1] and as to the right to appeal therefrom[2] apply.

Costs[3] and attorney's fees are allowable as in other equitable cases.[4] The amount allowed is generally discretionary.[5] Allowances to guardians ad litem of in-entitled to directions at a time when the parties entitled to take on such distribution cannot yet be ascertained. Id. Where property is given in trust for beneficiary during her life, and on her death to her children as she shall appoint, and in default of appointment to designated persons, held that court would not, during beneficiary's lifetime, direct the trustee as to his duty in case she should die without making such appointment. Varick v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 151. Code Civ. Proc. § 2624, requiring surrogate to construe dispositions of personalty in certain cases, does not deprive him of the discretion possessed by a court of equity to refuse to decide questions which may never be presented by actual conditions or occurrences. In re Mount's Will [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 999, afg. 107 App. Div. 1, 95 N. Y. S. 490. Surrogate held not to have abused his discretion. Id. Where testator gave property to trustees to pay income to wife for life, and thereafter to devote it to the creation of some charity or to pay it to some existing one, held that court would not select charity in suit to construe will before wife's death. Rothschild v. Goldenberg, 103 App. Div. 235, 92 N. Y. S. 1076. Evidence as to present intention of trustees in that regard, prior to wife's death, held incompetent. Id. Where will makes conditional alternative dispositions of a remainder after a trust presently in force, some of which may be valid and some void, and the disposition which will take effect cannot be ascertained until the time for carrying it into effect arrives, and there is no present necessity for determining the ultimate rights of the parties, the decree admitting the will will not adjudge the validity of such provisions. In re Mount's Will, 107 App. Div. 1, 95 N. Y. S. 490. Court will not construe will for purpose of determining proper distribution of deceased son's share, where time of distribution has not yet arrived, and there is no present necessity for any decision on the question and where there may be other interested parties in existence at the time for distribution who will be entitled to be heard. Saul v. Swartz, 98 N. Y. S. 549.

98. Will devised realty in trust to use income for a valid charitable purpose, and subsequently provided that a portion of such income should be used to keep up a certain graveyard excepted from such devise. Held that if the latter provision was valid it would simply reduce the amount of income applicable to the trust purposes, and if invalid it was of no effect, and whole income would go to trust, so that other devisees and legatees had no interest in question of its validity. Woodroof v. Hundley [Ala.] 39 So. 907.

99. Central Trust Co. v. Egleston [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 989, rvg. 96 N. Y. S. 1116, 47 Misc. 475, 95 N. Y. S. 945.

2. See Appeal and Review, 5 C. L. 121. Trustees appointed to take charge of property and, after death of life beneficiary, to apply residue to some charity to be selected by them, are entitled to appeal from judgment, in suit to construe will, disposing of trust property in contravention of testator's intention. Rothschild v. Goldenberg, 103 App. Div. 235, 92 N. Y. S. 1076. Executor held aggrieved party within meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 4031, and to have right to appeal from judgment construing will. In re Paulson's Will [Wis.] 107 N. W. 484. In suit to construe a will failure of defendants to serve notice of appeal on nonresident beneficiary, who stood on same footing as plaintiffs and had been joined as defendant, held to deprive appellate court of jurisdiction. Dillavou v. Dillavou [Iowa] 106 N. W. 949, rvg. 104 N. W. 432.

3. See 4 C. L. 1941. See, also, Costs, 5 C. L. 842. In action by heir at law seeking to have bequests and devises set aside, in which event property would have gone to heirs as intestate, where residuary devise was sustained and certain of the bequests set aside, held error to charge residuary devisees with any part of plaintiff's costs or attorney's fees, the action being in effect one to recover the property bequeathed and devised. Ky. St. 1903, § 889, construed. Trustees of Home for Poor Catholic Men v. Coleman [Ky.] 92 S. W. 342.

4. Where executor brought an action to construe will which attempted to execute powers conferred on testatrix by the will of her husband, and court decided that there was no valid execution of such powers, and appointed an administrator with the will annexed for the first estate, held that executor was entitled to reasonable attorney's fees. Ketchin v. Rion [S. C.] 51 S. E. 557. In an action by an executor to construe a will the court has no authority to make an allowance of attorney's fees to defendants, payable out of the estate, in addition to the taxable costs. Kronshage v. Varrell [Wis.] 107 N. W. 342. Laws 1901, c. 397, p. 569, relating to attorney's fees in will contests does not apply to actions to construe wills. Stephenson v. Norris [Wis.] 107 N. W. 343.

5. The question of the allowance of counsel fees in suits to construe wills is a judicial one resting largely in the discretion of the court to which it is presented. Watkins v. Bigelow [Minn.] 104 N. W. 683. The amount allowed must, however, be limited to a fair

fant parties should ordinarily be paid out of the shares of such infants rather than out of the general estate.[6]

§ 6. Validity, operation, and effect in general.[7]—The will speaks from the death of the testator, and title to property bequeathed passes at that time.[8] A fee may be limited upon a fee by way of executory devise in a will, though this cannot be done by deed.[9] A provision in the will of a married woman directing the erection of a monument over her grave is valid.[10] A will held void for want of capacity is void for all purposes.[11]

A provision making the payment of a legacy conditional on the regular attendance of the legatee at a certain church is not contrary to public policy,[12] nor does it violate the constitutional provision guarantying freedom of worship.[13] The mere fact that testator committed suicide shortly after the execution of his will is insufficient to warrant the inference that it was executed with suicidal intent so as to render it void as contrary to public policy.[14] A gift upon condition subsequent working a forfeiture in case of the marriage of the beneficiary is void as in restraint of marriage,[15] but a limitation in favor of a beneficiary during her nonmarriage is valid.[16] A codicil revoking a bequest in case the legatee presents a claim against the estate is not void on its face, but is only void in case such claim is presented.[17]

Estates taken by appointment come from the donor and not under a will by which the power is exercised.[18] The effect in New York of the exercise of a power to appoint by will to certain persons is to transmit their title from the donor to the donee and from the donee to the appointees.[19] The exercise of a special power is not to be regarded as nugatory merely because the appointment is greatly similar to what the donor's devise would have accomplished in case of nonexercise, the dissimilarity being in a material particular.[20] Administrative powers may be extinguished by family settlements which make them unnecessary.[21]

In Louisiana questions as to the transmission of the property from the deceased to those who are to take it under the will, and as to the terms of the latter are governed exclusively by the civil code, and the common law has no application.[22]

What law governs.[23]—At common law and as a general principle of international comity, the lex loci rei sitae governs the formal execution and validity of a will of realty.[24] This rule has, however, been changed by statute in some states so as to make valid a will of realty executed in accordance with the law of the place of testator's domicile.[25] As a general rule the validity of a will of personalty is to be determined by the law of testator's domicile,[26] and the same is true in regard to its interpretation[27] in the absence of a statute[28] or a provision of the will to the contrary.[29]

The property rights created by the will are judged in the Federal courts according to state laws.[30]

C. (N. S.) 261. Where by a will executed in another state a testator devises land situated in Ohio to his daughter "during her natural life and at her decease to go to her lawful heirs," although under the rule prevailing in such other state such will would have conveyed a fee simple in accordance with the rule in Shelley's case, yet under the rule prevailing in Ohio, these words created only a life estate in such Ohio lands. 25. Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 93, § 327, providing that every will made outside the state shall be held valid therein if executed according to the law of the place where the same was made, or where testator was domiciled when it was made, or according to the laws of the state, applies equally to wills of realty and personalty. Lindsay v. Wilson [Md.] 63 A. 566. Holographic will executed according to laws of France by a citizen of Maryland domiciled in that country held to pass realty in Maryland, though not witnessed as required by the laws of that state. Id.

26. Under Ill. statute of wills (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 148) §§ 2, 9, will is valid to dispose of personalty having its situs in that state, wherever executed, either when exepeachment and corroboration, and the privileges of witnesses. The competency, materiality, and relevancy of testimony,[31] the manner of eliciting the same from witnesses,[32] and the qualification and examination of experts,[33] are elsewhere treated.

§ 1. Capacity and competency of witnesses in general.[34]—Possession or lack of personal knowledge of the facts in regard to which he is called to testify is sometimes applied as a test of the competency of the witness;[35] but it would seem that an objection, based on lack of personal knowledge of the witness, should be directed to the competency of the testimony, as that it is hearsay or opinion evidence,[36] and not to the competency of the witness, except where it is sought to qualify a witness to give expert or opinion evidence.[37] But lack of personal knowledge may, of course, be shown to affect the weight of evidence and the credibility of the witness.[38] That a witness is under the influence of a party is not a disqualifying circumstance.[39] An imbecile is not, in Iowa, necessarily incompetent; the question of his competency is for the court.[40] An objection to the competency of a witness should be made when cuted in accordance with the requirements of such statute, or if executed and proved in accordance of the laws of the state where it is executed. Palmer v. Bradley, 142 F. 193.

27. The law of the place where the will is made and the testator is domiciled controls in the ascertainment of the persons who are to take personalty under the will, in the absence of a provision to the contrary. 28. Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 93, § 327, providing for the probate of a foreign will of a testator originally domiciled in Maryland, and that when so probated it shall be governed by and construed and interpreted according to the laws of that state regardless of the lex domicilii, unless testator shall expressly declare a contrary intention therein, does not require the court to give a foreign word or expression a different meaning from that given it in the country where the will was written. Lindsay v. Wilson [Md.] 63 A. 566. Merely means that after a will written in a foreign language has been translated, and the meaning of the words and terms used therein ascertained, the law of that state rather than that of testator's domicile is to control in construing and interpreting it. Id. French will attempting to dispose of all property of which testator could dispose at his death, and appointing wife sole legatee, held to pass realty in Maryland, the French word translated "property" including in France both realty and personalty, and the word translated "legatee" also designating one to whom realty passes by will. Alimony clerk in office of the commissioner of public charities and witness on a bond conditioned for payments for support of one convicted of abandoning his wife without adequate support is not competent to testify to what has been paid on the bond. Tully v. Lewitz, 98 N. Y. S. 829. An attorney who drew a lost will is competent to testify as to its provisions. Inlow v. Hughes [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 763. In an action for trespass, consisting of the attaching of telephone wires to the roof of plaintiff's building, a former employe of defendant who had procured several thousand licenses for defendant for the use of roofs for telephone purposes and had procured the licenses for the terminal station in question, held competent to testify that the wires in question belonged to defendant. Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. S. 66. One who has had business correspondence with another is competent to testify as to the genuineness of a letter alleged to have been written by him though he never saw him write. State v. Goldstein [N. J. Law] 62 A. 1006. A witness testified that he knew accused's reputation for peace or violence and that it was good. On cross-examination he admitted he had never heard accused's reputation discussed. Held error to exclude all his testimony. Sinclair v. State [Miss.] 39 So. 522.

the witness is called,[41] and the party raising it has the burden of proving the witness incompetent.[42]

Children.[43]—The law fixes no precise age within which children are absolutely incompetent;[44] the question of their competency is one for the trial court,[45] the tests applied being their intelligence,[46] religious training,[47] moral sense,[48] and ability to understand the nature of an oath.[49]

Persons acting in official capacity at trial.[50]—In a prosecution in a superior court, a justice before whom defendant has previously been convicted of the same offense is competent to testify as to occurrences at the former hearing.[51] A juror at a previous trial is competent, when called as a witness in a subsequent trial, to testify to material, relevant facts coming to his knowledge while making a view of the premises involved.[52]

Persons convicted or accused of crime.[53]—The common-law disqualification for conviction of an infamous crime has been generally removed by statute.[54] Thus, in some states, one who has been jointly indicted with another and who has entered a plea of guilty is a competent witness for the state on the trial of his co-defendant.[55] But in Texas, one jointly indicted with another is incompetent as against his co-defendant.[56] Proof of conviction of crime is essential to render a witness incompetent in states where that ground of disqualification still exists.[57] Conviction of crime may be shown in many states to affect the credibility of a witness, though it cannot affect his competency.[58]

46. Code Civ. Proc. § 1880 provides that children under 10 years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly, shall not be witnesses. People v. Bradford [Cal. App.] 81 P. 712.

47. A child of 9 said she knew it was wrong to tell a lie, and that if she did the judge or God could put her in jail; also that she had been to church and Sunday school. It was held that she was not a competent witness, not showing such a religious training and instruction as excited a hope of future reward to the good and fear of punishment to the wicked. Jones v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 947.

48. A child eight years of age who clearly comprehends the difference between truth and falsehood and his duty to tell the truth, is substantially qualified. Commonwealth v. Furman, 211 Pa. 549, 60 A. 1089. Boy of 7, of more than average intelligence who knew difference between truth and falsehood, competent. Clark v. Finnegan, 127 Iowa 644, 103 N. W. 970.

§ 2. Disqualification on ground of interest.[61]—Interest in the event of the suit does not now render a person incompetent, though the fact of interest may be shown as affecting credibility.[62] But the contrary common-law rule remains in force in some states in actions of a particular kind.[63]

§ 3. Disqualification of one party to transaction or communication, on death of the other.[64]—Practically all the states have statutes which provide, in substance, that a party to an action, or a person interested in the event thereof, or a person from whom a party derives his interest, shall be incompetent to testify as to transactions or communications had with a deceased person, when the adverse party represents, or derives his interest from, the deceased.[65] In some states there are similar statutes disqualifying parties to transactions or communications with persons who have since become insane.[66] The manifest design of such statutes is to prevent living witnesses, who, being interested, have a motive for falsification, from taking advantage of the death or incompetency of the other party to a transaction or conversation, whereby contradiction of the witness with respect thereto is rendered impossible, and the construction placed by the courts on statutes of this character is largely controlled by this purpose.[67] Evasion of the statutes by indirect means will not be permitted.[68]

The adverse party, or party against whom the witness is offered, must represent the decedent, or derive his interest from the decedent.[69]—Thus, the statutes are usually applicable in proceedings by or against executors and administrators,[70] and defendant had been convicted of an assault growing out of the same affair, and had not paid his fine and costs. He was held incompetent, though the sheriff had accepted a verbal promise of another to pay such fine and costs. Watson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 935, 89 S. W. 270.

60. In a bastardy proceeding, the mother of a bastard is a competent witness to prove all the elements necessary to sustain the charge including nonaccess of the husband under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 990, 992, providing that in such proceeding she is a competent witness. Evans v. State [Ind.] 75 N. E. 651.

61. See 4 C. L. 1946.

62. The fact that an expert is entitled to a fee contingent on the result of the suit and is therefore interested goes to his credibility and not to his competency. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. King, 216 Ill. 416, 75 N. E. 166. That a prosecuting witness is a detective does not per se render him incompetent in a prosecution under the intoxicating liquor law. Rector v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 41.

63. In Georgia, neither party to an action for breach of promise of marriage is a competent witness. The common-law rule in this respect was not modified by Civ. Code 1895, § 5272. Graves v. Rivers, 123 Ga. 224, 51 S. E. 318.

64. See 4 C. L. 1946.

65. Act of May 23, 1887 (P. L. 159), relative to the competency of interested persons where the party to the controversy is dead, applies to any civil proceeding, hence to a proceeding in the orphans court. In re Crossetti's Estate, 211 Pa. 490, 60 A. 1081.

66. Code § 4604, disqualifying a party to a conversation or transaction with a person who has since become insane, held not applicable where the only evidence of the incompetency of such person was that his mind and memory were clouded, and he was very weak physically. Percival-Porter Co. v. Oaks [Iowa] 106 N. W. 626.

67. Gen. St. 1894, § 5660, referring to testimony having reference to conversations with a deceased person by one interested in the result of the action should be strictly construed upon the theory that its main object is to prevent possible fraud when one of the parties has been removed by death. Pitzl v. Winter [Minn.] 105 N. W. 673.

68. It is not permissible to state in the form of conclusions of fact the result of a conversation with a decedent. Pitzl v. Winter [Minn.] 105 N. W. 673. The rule that one cannot testify as to transactions with a deceased person cannot be evaded by indirect interrogatories (Telford v. Howell [Ill.] 77 N. E. 82), nor under a pretense of letting in corroborative testimony (Id.).

69. See 4 C. L. 1947.

70. In mortgage foreclosure suit, interested witnesses were incompetent to testify to transactions with deceased persons whose estates were involved. Ryan v. Shaneyfelt [Ala.] 40 So. 223. A married woman brought suit on a note against the maker's executor, and joined her husband as defendant, but alleged that he signed only as surety and not as co-maker. She was held incompetent in her own behalf, since her husband was really interested with her, and the executor was the sole adverse party. The proviso of Rev. St. 1899, § 4652, that a party may testify in such case if the contract in issue was made by a person still living and competent to testify was held inapplicable. Scott v. Burfeind [Mo. App.] 92 S. Civ. St. art. 2302, relative to transactions with deceedents does not render incompetent, in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover property fraudulently conveyed through the bankrupt's wife, one who had conversations with the wife, since deceased, he not being a party and the action not being brought against the defendant as executor. Shelley v. Nolen [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 524.

71. Heirs sued to cancel a tax deed issued under a sale against the ancestor. Holder of deed was incompetent to testify to agreement between him and such ancestor whereby he was to get title by a tax deed in consideration of payments made to the ancestor. Grimes v. Ellyson [Iowa] 105 N. W. 418. Under Sayles Rev. St. 1897, art. 2302, prohibiting testimony as to transactions with deceased persons, a defendant in an action by an heir for partition of notes is incompetent to testify as to transactions with plaintiff's ancestor. Jones v. Day [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 308, 88 S. W. 424.

72. Under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 2, providing that no party to any action shall be allowed to testify on his own motion or in his own behalf where the adverse party sues or defends as the heir of a decedent where a plaintiff claims title as legatee or devisee of her father and the defendant defends as heir of his mother, neither party is competent to testify against the other. Heintz v. Dennis, 216 Ill. 487, 75 N. E. 192.

73. The administrator of a deceased payee of a note transferred the note to the payee's widow who sued thereon. The maker was held incompetent to testify to a transaction with deceased claimed to constitute payment. Carpenter v. Stiggins [Ala.] 40 So. 216. Defendants in action to recover land claimed as representatives of plaintiff's deceased father, deriving title from the executor under his will. Hence, plaintiff was incompetent, under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5991, to testify to conditions of bond for title and other matters transacted between himself and his father. Reynolds v. Reynolds [Wash.] 84 P. 579. Under St. 1893, § 4212, no party may testify in his own behalf to any transaction or communication had personally by such party with a deceased person, when the adverse party is the assignee of such deceased person and the party acquired title to the cause of action immediately from such deceased person. Conklin v. Yates [Okl.] 83 P. 910. In action by grantor against successor in interest of deceased grantee to set aside the conveyance, the grantor cannot testify to oral or written transactions or communications had by him with the deceased grantee. St. 1893, § 4212. Id.

Statute held inapplicable: Where in ejectment, plaintiff claimed through several conveyances and the grantor in the first demise was dead, an objection to the testimony of a witness on the ground of the interest of such deceased remote grantor was held untenable. Doe ex dem. Anniston City Land Co. v. Edmondson [Ala.] 40 So. 505. Partnership was dissolved by death of a member and distributee of deceased then became a member. In an action by the surviving partner against the distributee for an accounting, plaintiff was competent witness to testify to fact of partnership with deceased and terms of the agreement. Flynn v. Seale [Cal. App.] 84 P. 263. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 51, § 2, providing that when one sues or defends as heir or devisee no adverse party shall be allowed to testify does not apply to one who as grantee defends a suit by devisees of her grantor, to set aside the deed on the ground of mental incapacity of the grantor and undue influence. Seaton v. Lee [Ill.] 77 N. E. 446. Within the meaning of laws upon this subject an "assignee" is one who holds by the voluntary act of his assignor, not one who holds by operation of law or the judgment of a court, or through an executor's judicial sale and in spite of such assignor. Gen. St. 1901, § 4770, construed. Powers v. Scharling [Kan.] 81 P. 479. Rev. St. 1899, § 4652, providing that in actions where one of the original parties to the cause is dead the other shall not be competent to testify, does not render one incompetent to testify as to transactions with the other party to the suit who claims as assignee of the decedent and is attempting to enforce the contract for his own benefit. Weiermueller v. Scullin, 109 Mo. App. 193, 88 S. W. 1008. Where in an action on promissory notes, defendant was sought to be held as a member of the firm indorsing them, testimony of defendant that he had been engaged in business with his mother and brother, that prior to the execution of the notes the mother stated to defendant and his brother that if they wanted to continue the business it would have to be in her employ, and that she thereupon took out a license in her own name, held admissible though the mother was dead, there being nothing in the relation of the parties to bring the testimony within the prohibition of Code Civ. Proc. § 829. Bernstein v. Cahen, 48 Misc. 639, 96 N. Y. S. 209.

Under Code 1896, § 1794, a physician suing an executor for services rendered deceased, is incompetent to testify as to the number of visits paid deceased, and what he did for him. Duggar v. Fitts [Ala.] 39 So. 905. Under 16 Del. Laws, p. 708, c. 537, § 1, providing that in actions against an executor neither party is competent to testify against the other as to transactions with deceased unless called by the opposite party, one who brings action against a decedent's estate for services is incompetent to state the nature of his claim or whether he did any work for decedent for which the action is brought. A defendant in an action by an administrator cannot testify as to transactions with decedent. Jones v. Purnell [Del.] 62 A. 149. In an action by an administrator of a grantor to cancel a deed on the ground that the deceased was mentally incompetent to make it, that it was procured by undue influence, and that the services which purported to be the consideration were never rendered, the grantee is incompetent to testify that the services were rendered, and to their character. Parker v. Ballard, 123 Ga. 441, 51 S. E. 465. Party in interest is incompetent in his own behalf as to any fact or transaction occurring in the lifetime of deceased relative where the representative of deceased is the adverse party; nor is such party competent as against minor heirs or adult heirs not present at the time of the occurrence of such facts or transactions. Hall v. Hall, 118 Ill. App. 544. Party in interest to a proceeding instituted under § 81 of the administration act is an incompetent witness in his own behalf, since the petitioner proceeds in a representative capacity. Mohlke v. People, 117 Ill. App. 595. Party to action incompetent to testify to transactions with two deceased persons. Code Civ. Proc. § 606. Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Reesor [Ky.] 91 S. W. 717. Payee of note and mortgagee of mortgage, both written in his handwriting, and signed with the mark of the debtor, who has died, cannot establish the validity of the note and mortgage by his own testimony. Clark v. Clark [Ky.] 91 S. W. 284. In a suit to determine the ownership of a life insurance fund, between an assignee of the policy and the administrator of deceased, the assignee is incompetent to testify that the assignment covered all the debts owed by deceased to assignee. Reinhardt v. Marks' Adm'r [Ky.] 93 S. W. 32. In a suit to construe a will a wife of the decedent cannot testify as to conversations in which he stated what her interest under the will would be. Shipley v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. [Md.] 62 A. 814. One cannot establish by his own testimony a claim against a decedent's estate which originated during the decedent's lifetime. Rev. Code 1892, § 1740. Stanton v. Helm [Miss.] 39 So. 457. Under this statute where complainants in partition claimed an interest as heirs of a deceased son of the deceased owner and defendants as remote grantees of the owner, a defendant through whom others claimed could not by his own testimony show he was a remote grantee of the owner. Liverman v. Lee, 86 Miss. 370, administrator. Wilson v. Terry [N. J. Eq.] 38 So. 658. In action against an administrator, plaintiff was incompetent (Laws 1897, p. 245), to testify to an assignment to him of a claim against the decedent, with the latter's consent. Darais v. Doll [Mont.] 83 P. 884. Under Evidence Act (P. L. 1900, p. 363) § 4, an administrator who sues to have his absolute deed to his decedent, declared a mortgage, is incompetent to testify to transactions with decedent tending to show that the deed was a mortgage, on his own behalf and not on his behalf as administrator. Wilson v. Terry [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 310. A plaintiff administrator is a party within the prohibition of the statute. Harvey v. Cullings, 48 Misc. 344, 96 N. Y. S. 638. In contest to determine ownership of money alleged to have been given by a decedent in his last illness to plaintiff, plaintiff was not a competent witness. Lavelle v. Melley, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 69. Under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 406, in a suit against a husband for partition of lands claimed by him through his deceased wife he is incompetent to testify that he paid her a certain sum for her interest. Corbett v. Fogle [S. C.] 51 S. E. 884. Where the administrator sues to recover for the estate money in the hands of heirs, the latter cannot testify to transactions with deceased. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2302. Manchester v. Bursey [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 817.

76. "Interested in the event thereof" means a direct and immediate pecuniary interest adverse to that of the party against whom his testimony was offered. Gen. St. 1894, § 5660, construed. Pitzl v. Winter [Minn.] 105 N. W. 673. Where, in action for wrongful death, plaintiff sues as administratrix, the motorman of defendant company, who would be liable to the company in the event of a recovery against it, is an interested witness and incompetent under the statute. Feitl v. Chicago City R. Co., 113 Ill. App. 381. Where both parties claim under a deceased person and by virtue of statute neither is competent to testify against the other, the plaintiff's husband is incompetent to testify in her behalf. Heintz v. Dennis, 216 Ill. 487, 75 N. E. 192. Plaintiff in ejectment could not show by her husband, who was also her agent, and who was interested by reason of his marital relations, any transaction or agreement between her and a remote vendor of the defendant, since deceased, relative to a boundary line. Hollingsworth v. Barrett [Ky.] 89 S. W. 107. Testimony of a witness interested in the event of an action of ejectment as to transactions or communications between him and a decedent from whom defendant derived title is incompetent regardless of the extent of the interest. Campbell v. Everhart, 139 N. C. 503, 52 S. E. 201. On an issue of title to shares of stock claimed by plaintiff to have been transferred without authority to defendants, by one who obtained possession of them for plaintiff's testatrix, the person who made the transfer and under whom defendants claimed and who would himself be liable to defendants in case of failure of their title, held incompetent to testify for defendants to transactions with plaintiff's testatrix, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829. Hall v. Wagner, 97 N. Y. S. 570. In an action against a corporation for death of plaintiff's intestate, an employe, a stockholder is not competent to testify that he did not put deceased to work on the scaffold claimed to be defective. Andrews v. Reiners, 98 N. Y. S. 658. Under Act May 23, 1887 (P. L. 159) rendering incompetent any person whose interest is adverse to those of a decedent as in regard thereto,[78] and usually an agent who makes a contract for his principal is incompetent to testify in regard thereto after the death of the other party.[79] to any matter occurring prior to his death where on the death of a husband and wife the executor of the former claimed on the audit of the account of the administrator of the latter that a deposit in the wife's name was the property of the husband, a child cannot testify in support of the claim of her mother's administrator. In re Crossetti's Estate, 211 Pa. 490, 60 A. 1081.

Witness held not disqualified by interest: One not a party to a proceeding to compel payment of a decedent's debt and not interested in the claim is not incompetent to testify to transactions with the decedent under Code 1896, § 1794. Little v. Marx [Ala.] 39 So. 517. In ejectment there were three demises. The lesser in the first was dead and his representative was not a party. The lesser in the second had conveyed all his interest to the lessor in the third demise. Held that under Civ. Code 1895, § 5269, the lessor in the second demise was not incompetent as to transactions between himself and the lessor in the first demise on an issue between the lessor in the third demise and the tenant in possession. Priester v. Melton, 123 Ga. 375, 51 S. E. 330. In a suit by an administrator to recover certain funds, he intervened in his individual capacity claiming such funds were held in trust for him. His brothers and sisters, though heirs, were not disqualified to testify to declarations of the mother regarding such funds, since they were not interested in the intervention. Jacobs v. Jacobs [Iowa] 104 N. W. 489. Gen. St. 1901, § 4770, forbidding a party to testify in his own behalf in respect to transactions or communications with a deceased person does not render a maker of a note, not a party to a suit thereon, incompetent to testify that he was the maker of the note and defendant the surety and that the deceased payee had extended the time without the surety's knowledge. Koger v. Armstrong [Kan.] 83 P. 1029. Where an administrator sues on a note payable to his intestate, a defendant who testifies that he had been sued on the note and judgment had been rendered against him and that he no longer had any interest in the litigation, is competent to testify in favor of a co-defendant. Walker's Adm'r v. Turley [Ky.] 90 S. W. 576. One interested merely as a parent is not incompetent to testify as to a contract made by her child with a person since deceased. McMorrow v. Dowell [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 728. In an action by a married woman to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey, against representatives of a deceased person, the husband of plaintiff is a competent witness in her behalf, since his interest is remote. Hiskett v. Bozarth [Neb.] 105 N. W. 990. St. 1893, § 4212, does not prohibit proof of transactions and communications had personally between a party to the suit and the deceased grantee of such person by disinterested witnesses, or other competent evidence other than that of a party to the suit. Conklin v. Yates [Okl.] 83 P. 910. Under Act May 23, 1887 (P. L. 158) providing that where any party to a thing or contract in action is dead and his right has passed to a party on the record who represents his interest, no remaining party to the thing or contract or any person whose interest is adverse to the deceased shall be competent, a guarantor on a note whose guarantee is solely between himself and the payee is not incompetent in an action by the executor against the maker, but he may testify as to payment of the note during the life of the payee where he had been discharged in bankruptcy after the guaranty was made. Pattison v. Cobb, 212 Pa. 572, 61 A. 1108. Under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 400, an agent though usually partial to his principal is not legally interested so as to render him incompetent to testify as to transactions or communications with a decedent where his principal sues the representative of such decedent. Kean v. Landrum [S. C.] 52 S. E. 421. Where an heir of one of the payees of a note sues for partition, a defendant who disclaims any interest may testify as to transactions with the plaintiff's ancestor. Jones v. Day [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 308, 88 S. W. 424.

77. Under Code § 4604, if a right asserted by a claimant against a decedent's estate depends for its existence and validity upon a transaction between the deceased and a third person, the evidence of such third person is incompetent to prove such transaction, the statute disqualifying persons from whom a party derives his interest by assignment "or otherwise." McClanahan v. McClanahan [Iowa] 105 N. W. 833. Thus, where a claim arose out of a payment to decedent in trust for claimant, the person making the payment was incompetent to testify thereto. Id. A real estate agent wrongfully delivered a release of a mortgage without payment of the debt. In a suit to foreclose, the agent was not a party in interest, nor one through, under, or from whom either party derived his interest, so as to be incompetent to testify to transactions with the deceased mortgagor. Franklin v. Killilea [Wis.] 104 N. W. 993.

78. Rev. Code 1899, § 4652, providing that where one of the original parties to a cause of action is dead the other party may not testify in his own behalf or that of a party claiming under him, renders incompetent a parent who made a contract with a person since deceased for the rendering of services by her child to the decedent, in an action by the child against the estate to recover for services rendered under such contract. McMorrow v. Dowell [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 728. A parent is not a party to an implied contract by a person, since deceased, to pay her child for services, and under Rev. St. 1899, § 4652, is not incompetent as a witness where the child sues the estate of the decedent on such contract. This is so though a waiver of her right to her child's earnings must be proved. Id. Evidence Act (P. L. 1900, p. 363), § 4, expressly renders incompetent the testimony of one seeking to enforce a contract between himself on one hand and a third person and a decedent on the other as to transactions between himself and the decedent, which resulted in the contract. Mills v. Hendershot [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 542.

Transactions and communications to which disqualification extends.[80]—The disqualification extends to all personal transactions between the witness and deceased,[81]

79. See 6 C. L. 1950, n. 66. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 5269 subd. 5 in order to render incompetent the testimony of an agent or attorney of a sane or surviving party as to transactions with the insane or deceased adverse party at interest, the agency or confidential relationship must have existed at the time of the transaction testified about. Sanders, Swan & Co. v. Allen [Ga.] 52 S. E. 884.

Contra: An agent contracting on behalf of his principal with a person since deceased is a competent witness in behalf of his principal against the estate of the deceased person to prove the transaction. Brown v. Click [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 16.

80. See 4 C. L. 1951.

81. The word "transaction" as used in the Code, embraces every variety of affairs the subject of negotiations, actions, or contracts between the parties. Fitch v. Martin [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1072. Defendants to suit on note, payee of which is dead, cannot testify to transactions between themselves and the deceased payee out of which the note resulted. McAyeal v. Gullett, 105 Ill. App. 155. In partition against heirs, the complainant is incompetent to testify to the fact of her marriage to the deceased land owner. Crane v. Stafford, 217 Ill. 21, 75 N. E. 424. One who asserts that she is the widow of a deceased person is not competent to testify to the fact of marriage either directly or indirectly. Bowman v. Little [Md.] 61 A. 223. She is also incompetent to testify to collateral facts from which marriage could be inferred. Bowman v. Little [Md.] 61 A. 1084. A question to witness whether he owed a deceased person any money except the purchase price of land at the time he made a payment to him held not to call for the result of a conversation with a deceased party; hence admissible. Veum v. Sheeran [Minn.] 104 N. W. 135. In an action on a note by executors of the deceased payee, the defendant was incompetent to prove when and where note was given, and attendant circumstances, and whether note in suit was the only one given, and that he never had any other dealings with decedent. Regan v. Jones [N. D.] 105 N. W. 613. Testimony of a claimant to the possession of a note executed by decedent is, when given for the purpose of raising an inference of delivery from deceased to claimant, there being no proof of any other method of delivery, evidence of a transaction between claimant and decedent. In re Knibbs' Estate, 108 App. Div. 134, 96 N. Y. S. 40. On a judicial settlement of the accounts of an executor, testimony of the executor that a certain note was paid by him because he knew deceased's signature and all circumstances attending the note and had been told them by deceased in his lifetime is within the prohibition of Code Civ. Proc. § 829. In re Knibbs' Estate, 108 App. Div. 134, 96 N. Y. S. 40. A broker suing the representative of a deceased person for breach of warranty based on the fact that decedent assuming, without authority, to act as agent for another, employed the broker to procure a purchaser for the property, is incompetent to prove that he gave decedent notice that he had procured a purchaser. Bloodgood v. Short, 98 N. Y. S. 775. Code § 590 prohibiting parties in interest from testifying as to communications or transactions with deceased persons as against their personal representative applies where an administrator sues for caring for his intestate and offers to testify that the intestate was altogether helpless, that he gave him medicine, prepared his food and cared for him generally. Davidson v. Bardin, 139 N. C. 1, 51 S. E. 779. One who sues an administrator on an implied contract for services rendered his intestate is incompetent to testify that he rendered services and what was their reasonable value, as such testimony indirectly shows a transaction with a deceased person as to which he is incompetent under Revisal 1905, § 1631. Dunn v. Currie [N. C.] 53 S. E. 533. Where an administratrix is sued on the note of her intestate the plaintiff is precluded by Code § 590 from testifying that he demanded payment from the intestate during his lifetime. Davis v. Evans, 139 N. C. 440, 51 S. E. 956. In suit to recover for services rendered defendant's testator, plaintiff's testimony that during the period in controversy he worked on the public road and in the field attending to business of someone other than himself, and as to its value, though not expressly disclosing that such services were rendered to testator, held incompetent as disclosing a transaction between plaintiff and decedent in violation of Code, § 590. Stocks v. Cannon, 139 N. C. 60, 51 S. E. 802. Facts which constitute fraud on the part of a deceased person necessarily include personal transactions or conversations, with such deceased person. Conklin v. Yates [Okl.] 83 P. 910. Limitations being pleaded against a claim against an estate, the claimant cannot testify that deceased had made payments during her lifetime. Pierce v. Stitt [Wis.] 105 N. W. 479.

Statute held inapplicable: In an action for wrongful death caused by injuries received in a mill, a witness was competent to testify that he was constantly in and about defendant's mill up to a certain date, when he sold out his interest, such testimony not relating to any transaction or conversation with deceased, within Code 1896, § 1794. Yates v. Huntsville Hoop & Heading Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 647. In a suit by a corporation against an executor the agent of the corporation is not incompetent to testify to his opinion as to the genuineness of the signature of the defendant's testator, his opinion being given as an expert and being based upon a comparison of the signature with other writings proved to be genuine. Patton v. Bank of Lafayette [Ga.] 53 S. E. 664. Testimony of party claiming land by grant from a decedent held competent so far as it did not but not to transactions between witness and a third person[82] or between deceased and another in which the witness did not participate.[83] Transactions which did not occur during the lifetime of deceased are not, of course, within the rule.[84] In Ohio, the statute excludes evidence of facts which occurred prior to the decedent's death;[85] in Michigan, evidence relating to matters equally within the knowledge of deceased is excluded.[86] In Kentucky, a witness may testify in his own behalf concerning transactions with a decedent where he exhibits his books of original entry showing regular and chronological entries covering such transactions,[87] and may also testify to the correctness of such entries[88] provided the accounts are such as would be competent evidence at common law.[89]

relate to personal transactions with decedent. Foreman v. Archer [Iowa] 106 N. W. 372. Defendants claimed lands under deeds left by their father among his papers at his death. A brother of defendants was competent to testify that he had officed with decedent, that he had a private drawer in the safe, and that witness did not know of the contents of the drawer nor of the existence of the deeds. Shetler v. Stewart [Iowa] 107 N. W. 310. One who filed a claim against the estate of a deceased person for legal services performed under a yearly contract is not incompetent to testify to certain independent acts which he performed when the deceased had no personal connection therewith, and in which he did not participate. Fitch v. Martin [Neb.] 104 N. W. 1072. Evidence Act (Revision 1900), § 4, does not render incompetent the testimony of a widow who is seeking to establish a resulting trust in property held in her deceased husband's name. Small v. Pryor [N. J. Eq.] 61 A. 564. Where, in an action on a partnership contract, alleged to have been made between deceased defendant and B., the latter testified simply that deceased and himself had acquiesced in defendant's proposal, held defendant could deny the making of the contract with B., similar to that testified to by him. Code Civ. Proc. § 829, construed. Lefevre v. Silo, 98 N. Y. S. 321. In an action by plaintiff against an executrix to recover for services as an architect, plaintiff could testify that he made certain plans, etc., and to the value of his services, the fact that they were for testator being otherwise shown. Buckler v. Kneezell [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 367.

82. Testimony of deceased's wife that she paid certain bills for household expenses during deceased's last illness, although given in support of a claim of the wife for reimbursement for the money paid by her, is not testimony of a transaction or communication with a deceased person. In re Knibbs' Estate, 108 App. Div. 134, 96 N. Y. S. 40.

83. A party, claiming under a decedent, may testify to statements made by decedent to a third person in the presence of the party testifying. Foreman v. Archer [Iowa] 106 N. W. 372. Where plaintiff claimed title by parol conveyance from her father, her husband could testify to conversation between plaintiff and her father in which he did not participate. Smith v. Fry [Iowa] 103 N. W. 1002. Plaintiff could testify to conversation between her father and her husband, in which she did not participate. Id. Wife of defendant in suit by administrator to recover moneys was competent to testify to a conversation between decedent and defendant in which witness did not participate, the testimony not relating to transactions between decedent and the witness. Drefahl v. Security Sav. Bank [Iowa] 107 N. W. 179. Where a contract was made during a miscellaneous talk on different subjects one who participated in the conversation, but not in the contract, is not incompetent to testify as to the contract after the death of one of the parties. McMorrow v. Dowell [Mo. App.] 90 S. W. 728.

Contra: A party to an action or interested in the event thereof is not competent to testify to conversations with or admissions of a deceased party had with or made to a third party in his presence. In re Pederson's Estate [Minn.] 106 N. W. 958.

84. An administratrix who is the wife of a decedent is competent to testify as to where personal property belonging to her decedent was found after his death. Hartzell v. Hartzell [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 439. Civ. Code Prac. § 606, prohibiting testimony of a witness for himself as to transaction with a person since deceased does not render one incompetent to testify as to occurrences subsequent to the death of one whose estate is involved. Huntsberry v. Smith's Adm'r [Ky.] 90 S. W. 601.

85. The operation of § 5242, relating to the competency of a party to testify, is not limited to transactions with the decedent, but to facts which occurred prior to his death; and testimony as to transactions with the agent of the decedent is, therefore, incompetent. Wehrmann v. Beech, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 367.

86. Testimony of complainant's wife, in suit for specific performance of contract between complainant and a decedent to convey realty, in regard to matters equally within the knowledge of the decedent, was incompetent. Ayers v. Short [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 183, 105 N. W. 1115.

87. Civ. Code Prac. § 606. Swafford's Adm'r v. White [Ky.] 89 S. W. 129.

88. Civ. Code Prac. § 606, subsec. 6. Clark v. Clark [Ky.] 91 S. W. 284.

89. The payee of a note cannot, after the maker's death, testify to correctness of a private account showing transactions closed by the note. Clark v. Clark [Ky.] 91 S. W. 284.

statutes under consideration.[91] Testimony for the estate or person representing or deriving his interest from the decedent is not barred.[92] But in some states, where it is held that the statute was not enacted for the sole benefit of the estates of decedents,[93] testimony of an interested party is excluded though offered for the benefit of the estate on behalf of the executor.[94]

Waiver or removal of disqualification.[95]—The disqualification created by the statutes under consideration is waived where the adverse party fails to make proper and timely objection,[96] or where such adverse party himself calls the interested witness[97] or other witnesses,[98] or goes on the stand himself[99] to testify to matters

90. See 4 C. L. 1949, n. 60.

91. Under Acts 1897, p. 53, the only circumstances under which the representative of a deceased person who is jointly sued with such representative will be incompetent to testify as to transactions with his deceased co-defendant are, when his evidence would tend to relieve or modify the liability of the party offered as a witness and tend to make the estate of the deceased primarily liable for the debt or default. Sanders, Swan & Co. v. Allen [Ga.] 52 S. E. 884. In an action on a life insurance policy by the administrator, wherein an assignee of the policy is made a party defendant, the assignee is competent to testify to transactions with deceased tending to show the policy invalid, such testimony being not for himself, but for the company. Bromley's Adm'r v. Washington Life Ins. Co. [Ky.] 92 S. W. 17. A defendant is competent to testify on behalf of a co-defendant in regard to transactions with a decedent represented by plaintiff. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 606, subsec. 2. Since a jury may find for one and against the other defendant. Schonbachler's Adm'r v. Mischell [Ky.] 89 S. W. 525.

92. Testimony of a legatee under a will that deceased told his wife to use her own money to pay household expenses and that she would be repaid for it, when given in support of the claim of the wife for reimbursement for the money advanced, is not evidence in behalf of the legatee. Code Civ. Proc. § 829 construed. In re Knibbs' Estate, 108 App. Div. 134, 96 N. Y. S. 40. Code, § 590 rendering incompetent against an administrator an interested person as to transactions with the decedent does not disqualify a witness for the administrator though he may be liable over to the defendant in the action if the administrator prevails. Bonner v. Stotesbury, 139 N. C. 3, 51 S. E. 781. Where a claim is presented in the ordinary way against the estate of a decedent the heirs, legatees and other interested persons are competent to testify in favor of the estate but incompetent to testify adversely to it. In re Crossetti's Estate, 211 Pa. 490, 60 A. 1081.

93. Gen. St. 1894, § 5660, is not for the sole benefit of representatives of a decedent, and its provisions cannot be waived by them at will. Pitzl v. Winter [Minn.] 105 N. W. 673.

94. Judgment debtor held incompetent in garnishment proceedings to testify for the executor as to conversations with testator relative to the application of a devise to extinguish a debt due the estate in case of the testator's death prior to its payment. Pitzl v. Winter [Minn.] 105 N. W. 673.

95. See 4 C. L. 1952.

96. Objection to competency of evidence does not go to competency of witnesses on ground of statutory disqualification by Rev. St. 1898, § 4069. Wells v. Chase [Wis.] 105 N. W. 799. Objection to competency of husband to testify to transactions with deceased wife waived where not raised until after testimony was given. Davis v. Hall [Iowa] 105 N. W. 122.

97. An executrix, suing as plaintiff, introduced the answers of defendants to interrogatories filed in the suit relating to transactions with the testator. This was held a calling of defendants as witnesses, under Code 1896, § 1794, and defendants could testify in regard to the same transactions. German v. Browne [Ala.] 39 So. 742. Where a party makes a witness of his adversary who otherwise would be incompetent because the matter in issue related to transactions with a decedent, the adversary becomes a competent witness to testify as fully as any other witness. Strode v. Frommeyer, 115 Mo. App. 220, 91 S. W. 167. Where a claimant against the estate of a decedent testifies in his own behalf as to matters occurring since the death of the decedent and is cross-examined as to matters occurring during the lifetime of the decedent, he becomes a competent witness for himself as to such matters. In re Clad's Estate [Pa.] 63 A. 542. Where a party to a suit, otherwise incompetent by the death of another, is called for cross-examination by the adverse party, and examined as to matters occurring in the lifetime of the decedent, he is thereby rendered a competent witness in his own behalf on all relevant matters. Mothes' Estate, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 462. In a suit brought by an executor at the instance of a residuary legatee against defendant for an accounting, held that the residuary legatee being the real party in interest the introduction of defendant's evidence taken when a witness for the legatee, on exceptions to the executor's accounts, constituted a waiver of the executor's right to object that defendant was disqualified to testify as to the whole of the transactions referred to in such testimony. Cole v. Sweet, 98 N. Y. S. 625.

98. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 51, § 3, expressly provides that a plaintiff in an action against an administrator may testify as to certain of his own transactions and conversations with the decedent which have been testified to by witnesses called by the defendant but not as to other transactions not so testified to. Calkins v. Calkins [Ill.] 77 N. E. 102.

99. Plaintiffs, representatives of deceased, testifying to certain conversations between within the protection of the statutes; but such waiver extends only to matters concerning which testimony has been introduced by the adverse party.[1] The introduction of decedent's testimony given on a former trial renders other evidence as to transactions with him competent, if offered at the proper time.[2] This rule does not of course, operate unless decedent's former testimony is offered in the subsequent case.[3]

§ 4. Privileged communications, and persons in confidential relations. A. Attorney and client.[4]—Confidential communications by a client to his attorney are privileged and cannot be testified to by the attorney[5] without the consent of the client.[6] The communication made, or knowledge gained, must be in fact confidential,[7] and made or gained in the course of the professional employment of the attorney. It follows that the relation of attorney and client must have existed at the time,[8] but it is not essential that any judicial proceeding should have been com-deceased and defendant, defendant is entitled to testify concerning the same conversations. Hurd v. Fleck [Colo.] 82 P. 485.

1. Interrogatory asked when and by whom defendants were employed in a certain cause and their answer was that testator employed them, and the date of employment and the nature of the cause was stated. This was testimony relating to transactions with the decedent, and having been called for by the executrix, the persons called could testify in regard thereto. German v. Browne [Ala.] 39 So. 742. A party to a cause is incompetent to testify where the adverse party sues or defends in a representative capacity and where another person testifies for the adverse party, the interested witness can only testify to the same transaction or conversation. Symonds v. Caldwell, 112 Ill. App. 341. Parties in interest are incompetent when the adverse party defends in a representative capacity, though such representative may call such witnesses in behalf of the interest which he represents. Lennartz v. Estate of Peter Popp, 118 Ill. App. 31. Code Civ. Proc. § 2709, providing that, if a witness called for examination before the surrogate in an endeavor to discover assets of the estate is examined concerning any personal communication or transaction between himself and the decedent, an objection under § 829 to his testimony as to the same in future litigation is waived, does not entitle a witness who is examined by the surrogate to thereafter testify, in an action brought by him against the decedent's administrator, to all personal transactions and communications had between him and the decedent. Killian v. Heinzerling, 47 Misc. 511, 95 N. Y. S. 969.

2. Refusal to allow plaintiff to testify in a case where the administrator of defendant had been substituted was not rendered erroneous by the subsequent admission of defendant's testimony taken at a former trial, where the fact of the preservation of such testimony was unknown to the court at the time of the ruling and plaintiff's offer was not renewed. Harrington v. Butte & B. Min. Co. [Mont.] 83 P. 467.

3. Under Laws 1902, p. 718, c. 495, § 2, providing that in actions against administrators no party can testify as to transactions with the intestate unless called by the opposite party or unless the intestate's evidence shall already have been given in the same case, where a joint maker of a note died pending appeal in a suit for contribution on a retrial one who was not called by decedent's administrator is not competent where the decedent's testimony on the former trial is not offered in evidence. 6. Under Code Civ. Proc., § 1881, subd. 2, the advice of an attorney to his client may be given in evidence by the consent of the client. Wood v. Etiwanda Water Co., 147 Cal. 228, 81 P. 512.

7. To impose upon an attorney the duty of not disclosing a communication from his client, it must be of a confidential nature and so regarded, at least by the client, at the time, and must relate to a matter which is, in its nature, private and properly the subject of confidential disclosure. In re Elliott [Kan.] 84 P. 750. An answer prepared to be filed by or on behalf of the client and read by the notary, with the client's consent, and the substance of which has been given by the client to a newspaper for publication, and which has been shown by the client to, and read by, another attorney appearing against him, and which has been used in a petition by the client against his own attorney is not privileged. Id. Attorney held competent to testify to matters done in open court and to statements made by client to the court. Foreman v. Archer [Iowa] 106 N. W. 372. Question to attorney whether he had advised his client concerning a paper identified by him did not call for a privileged communication. Nixon v. Goodwin [Cal. App.] 85 P. 169. Attorney held not incompetent to testify as to a conversation between husband and wife in his office, he at the time being attorney for the husband. State v. Cummings, 189 Mo. 626, 88 S. W. 706.

8. Statements of defendant to witness who was a notary public and justice, but not the attorney of defendant, as to ownership of property, held not privileged. Frederick v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 915. An affidavit by an attorney to the effect that a party came to the office and inquired for menced.[9] Communications in the presence and hearing of a third person, are not privileged.[10] Where two or more persons employ the same attorney in the same business, communications made by them in relation to such business are privileged as to their common adversary but not inter se.[11] Communications to an attorney by two persons who employ him jointly to draw two wills of like import are not privileged as against persons claiming under one of such wills.[12]

A statement submitted by an agent to his principal, pursuant to a business rule, for the purpose of being laid before an attorney for his guidance in litigation, is privileged.[13] This is so though the party claiming the privilege is a corporation and obtained its information through the usual agencies of the corporation.[14]

The privilege accorded by the statute as to communications between attorney and client is the client's, and where he volunteers his own testimony as to such communications he thereby waives his privilege.[15] The fact that co-conspirators employ the same counsel does not preclude one from waiving the statutory privilege as to communications with counsel.[16]

(§ 4) B. Physician and patient.[17]—By statute in many jurisdictions, information acquired by a physician in his professional capacity for the purpose of treating or prescribing for the patient is privileged.[18] A state statute of this character relates only to the remedy and is of no effect in a Federal court in another state.[19]

another attorney saying he wished to employ him, and that when told that such attorney was not in town, the party went away and did not return until after judgment had been rendered in the case, was not inadmissible as involving privileged communications between affiant and the party. Baker v. Jackson [Ala.] 40 So. 348. When defendant took his brother to an attorney to employ him in the matter of the brother's assignment for creditors, statements made by the defendant to the attorney are not privileged. Code Civ. Proc. § 3163, subd. 2, construed. Mackel v. Bartlett [Mont.] 82 P. 795. The inhibition does not extend to communications between the attorney and persons having social or business relations with the client, and certainly not when the statement does not purport to be conveyed to the attorney from the client, but on the contrary is the representation of a witness as to his knowledge of the transaction. Statements made by wife of defendant to an attorney while endeavoring to retain him as counsel, he not being retained, were not privileged under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2. People v. Heart [Cal. App.] 81 P. 1018.

9. The privilege extends to every communication which the client makes to his legal adviser for the purpose of professional advice or aid upon the subject of his rights and liabilities, and it is not essential that any judicial proceeding in particular should have been commenced or contemplated. Rogers v. Daniels, 116 Ill. App. 515.

App.] 83 P. 577. Where a physician, testifying in an action on a life insurance policy, said that he acquired the information that the insured's mother and two sisters had died of consumption, prior to the making of an application for insurance which alleged that none of the family had consumption while attending such persons in his professional capacity, he could not testify thereto. Comp. Laws, § 10,181. Krapp v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 1032, 106 N. W. 1107. Information acquired by physicians while attending patient and in such attendance held privileged. Perry v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 978, 106 N. W. 860. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, subd. 4, § 505, making inviolate matters communicated by a patient to his physician in the course of his professional business protects such confidential relations except where the patient consents to their disclosure by the physician. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Willis [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 560.

19. Doll v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. [C. C. A.] 138 F. 705. Rev. St. U. S. § 721, providing that the laws of the several states shall be regarded as rules of decision in

The statutory privilege includes information gained by the examination of the patient[20] as well as information orally communicated by him.[21] Information acquired before the relation of physician and patient is established,[22] or not shown to have been imparted to enable the physician to treat the patient professionally,[23] is not privileged. A physician in charge of a railroad hospital, whose services are compensated by assessments upon the wages of the employes, acts professionally while examining an injured employe[24] and communications by the employe to such physician in the course of his examination are privileged.[25] Statutes prohibiting disclosure of information professionally acquired by physicians do not necessarily render incompetent a physician's certificate of death as evidence of the cause of death.[26] Such a statute is held to apply to a proceeding to which the patients are not parties, and though the patients are dead at the time.[27]

Waiver of privilege.[28]—The patient may waive the privilege, since it is for his benefit,[29] and waiver by the patient is operative as to persons claiming under the patient.[30] But the privilege cannot be waived in part and retained in part; being once waived, it ceases to exist, at least so far as the trial in question is concerned.[31] The privilege may in some cases be waived by the personal representative of the deceased patient.[32] In Indiana the executor of a patient may waive the privilege for the purpose of upholding an attempted testamentary disposition of the patient's property.[33] But in an action to revoke the probate of a will and probate a subsequent will in its stead, the executor named in the earlier will cannot waive the privilege.[34] In New York, a testator's physician may testify to his condition at a certain time, in a suit to probate the will, where the contesting defendants waive the statutory prohibition.[35] The privilege is held to be waived where the patient himself calls the physician to testify.[36] Testimony by a patient merely describing his condition and stating that certain physicians treated him[37] or testimony as to complaints made by the patient to his physician[38] does not constitute a general waiver. In New York, in the absence of previous waiver by stipulation, the privilege can only be waived in open court on the trial of the action or proceeding.[39]

38. Patient and his daughter testified as above in personal injury suit without waiving right to object to testimony of physician for defendant. Indianapolis & M. Rapid Transit Co. v. Hall [Ind.] 76 N. E. 242.

NOTE. What constitutes a waiver: "It has been held that where the patient directly attacks the physician, as by an action for damages for malpractice, he abandons the protection given by the statute, for he thereby challenges the physician to disprove the patient's contention as to the character of his injury or of the physician's treatment. Lane v. Boicourt, 128 Ind. 420, 27 N. E. 1111, 25 Am. St. Rep. 442. It has also been held that where two or more physicians are employed at the same time, with respect to information gained at the same consultation, calling one of the physicians as a witness by the patient constitutes a waiver of the statutory prohibition as to the other or others (Morris v. Railway Co., 148 N. Y. 88, 42 N. E. 410, 51 Am. St. Rep. 675), although this doctrine is disputed by respectable authority (Baxter v. Cedar Rapids, 103 Iowa, 599, 72 N. W. 790). Likewise it has been held that, where the patient calls the physician as a witness at one trial, this constitutes a waiver of the privilege as to that physician upon a second trial of the same case. McKinney v. Railroad Co., 104 N. Y. 352, 10 N. E. 544. But this doctrine has also been disputed in Burgess v. Sims Drug Co., 114 Iowa, 275, 86 N. W. 307, 89 Am. St. Rep. 359, 54 L. R. A. 364, and Grattan v. Insurance Co., 92 N. Y. 274, 44 Am. Rep. 372. But so far as our investigation discloses, no court of last resort has ever held that the mere fact that the patient testifies generally concerning his condition constitutes a waiver of the privilege granted by the statute. In Marx v. Railroad Co., 10 N. Y. S. 159, the Supreme Court of New York held that where the patient assumes to tell all that took place between himself and the physician, this constitutes a waiver of the privilege; and in Treanor v. Railroad Co., 16 N. Y. S. 536, decided by the Common Pleas Court of New York City, it was also held that where the patient testifies without reservation as to his injuries and their effect upon him, this likewise constitutes a waiver of the privilege. But these cases were later disapproved, and in effect directly overruled, by the Supreme Court of New York in Fox v. Turnpike Co., 69 N. Y. S. 551, and Dunckle v. McAllister, 74 N. Y. S. 902, and by the Court of Appeals of New York in Morris v. Railroad Co., 148 N. Y. 88, 42 N. E. 410, 51 Am. St. Rep. 675. In Highfill v. Railroad Co., 93 Mo. App. 219, it is said that where a patient goes on the stand and testifies as to what his physician found and said, he thereby waives the privilege under the statute. It may be safely said that the Missouri appellate court is now the only court asserting the doctrine announced by it."—From opinion in May v. Northern P. R. Co. [Mont.] 81 P. 333.

Communications made by husband to wife, or vice versa, are, unless consent is shown, absolutely incompetent when offered to be shown by testimony of one of the spouses. Humphrey v. Pope [Cal. When a divorced wife sues her former husband to recover possession of a note, neither party is competent to testify as to whether the wife gave the husband the note in consideration of services performed by him for her. On the prosecution of a husband for murder of his father-in-law a letter written by the decedent to the defendant's wife, and by her shown to her husband, is a confidential com-the privilege extends only to marital communications which it would be contrary to public policy to permit to be disclosed.[42] A divorced spouse cannot testify to communications made while the marriage relation existed.[43] Neither the husband nor wife is precluded from testifying in a suit between strangers to facts coming to knowledge by means equally accessible to any person not standing in the relation of husband and wife.[44] The rule as to confidential communications does not render inadmissible, in a suit by the wife for the alienation of the husband's affection, testimony by her as to physical and verbal acts of the husband tending to show his affection for her and the subsequent loss or withdrawal thereof.[45] Voluntary confessions are not within the rule of privileged communications.[46] A letter written by a wife to her husband, which is produced and offered in evidence by the officers of the state in a prosecution of a third person has lost its character as a privileged communication.[47] A letter from an accused person to his wife, intercepted and never delivered to the wife, has been held competent evidence against the husband[48] but there are contrary holdings.[49]

Macon R. & Light Co. v. Mason, 123 Ga. 773, 51 S. E. 569. An exclamation by a husband in the presence of his wife and mother-in-law, made immediately upon firing a shot which killed his father-in-law, is not a confidential communication as to which the wife is forbidden to testify on his prosecution for murder. 49. NOTE. "The admissibility of letters passing between husband and wife, and offered by a third person has frequently been before the courts, and the decisions are conflicting. Even those holding to the same view of the question sometimes present different reasons for the ruling. The following decisions are against the competency of the evidence, holding it privileged: Mercer v. State, 40 Fla. 216, 24 So. 154, 74 Am. St. Rep. 135; Wilkerson v. State, 91 Ga. 729, 17 S. E. 990, 44 Am. St. Rep. 63; Scott v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky. 511, 23 S. W. 219, 42 Am. St. Rep. 371; Seldon v. State, 74 Wis. 271, 42 N. W. 218, 17 Am. St. Rep. 144; Bowman v. Patrick, 32 F. 368; Liggett v. Glenn [C. C. A.] 51 F. 381. The last case was not between husband and wife, but attorney and client, but the reasoning of it applies to the privilege between husband and wife as fully as between attorney and client. The following authorities declare the letter admissible, and not privileged in hands of the third person: State v. Buffington, 20 Kan. 599, 27 Am. Rep. 193; State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89; State v. Ulrich, 110 Mo. 350, 19 S. W. 656; People v. Hayes, 140 N. Y. 484, 35 N. E. 951, 23 L. R. A. 830, 37 Am. St. Rep. 372; State v. Mathers, 64 Vt. 101, 23 A. 590, 33 Am. St. Rep. 921, 15 L. R. A. 268; Lloyd v. Pennie, 50 F. 4; Ohio cases (not accessible in the library) cited in note at page 97 of 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law [2d Ed.]. In Mahern v. Linck, 70 Mo. App. 380, the court of appeals evidently overlooked the fact that the supreme court in State v. Ulrich, 110 Mo. 350, 19 S. W. 656, had cited approvingly the Buffington and Hoyt Cases, and held that generally such letters were not admissible, but said they would be when accompanied with evidence that they had not been procured by the connivance of the wife, which doctrine would admit the letter here in question. The writers on evidence hold that the letter as presented in this case is admissible. Wharton on Criminal Evidence, § 398; Underhill on Criminal Evidence, § 187; 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. virtue of statute,[51] though the scope of the rule has been very generally limited, and it now rests upon a different reason.[52] One who is interested in the event of the action is not incompetent merely because his wife is a party.[53] Under a statute allowing a party to call the adverse party for cross-examination, where a husband and wife are co-defendants, the wife may be examined by plaintiff but her testimony is competent only against herself.[54] The wife of a party who appears in an action merely as a next friend is competent to testify therein, regardless of whether such next friend is liable for the costs of the action.[55] In many states, a wife is a competent witness for the husband as to a business transaction wherein she acted as his agent,[56] but agency as to the particular matter in issue must be shown.[57] In Louisiana, in those personal actions of the wife which are under the control of and are brought by the husband, both husband and wife are competent witnesses;[58] but in actions for damages resulting from personal injuries to the wife, the testimony of the husband should be excluded.[59] In Kentucky, in an action against a married woman which might have been brought against her had she been unmarried, either the husband or wife may testify, but both cannot do so.[60] In New Jersey, a petitioner for divorce is a competent witness in his or her own behalf[61] except as to certain facts,[62] and a husband who brings an action for criminal conversation is a competent witness as to the 29 Am. St. Rep. 415, 9 L. R. A. 351. Buffington v. State, 20 Kan. 599, 27 Am. Rep. 193, is the leading case on the subject. The doctrine there is that the statute, which is substantially similar to section 2916, Sand. & H. Dig., limits the privilege to the husband or wife testifying for or against the other, but does not provide that other parties obtaining the communications shall not produce them; and that the privilege attached to letters extends only to them while in the possession or control of the husband or wife or their agents or representatives. "The authorities are practically agreed that, when a conversation between husband and wife is overheard, it may be testified to by the third party. 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 254; Com. v. Griffen, 110 Mass. 181; Fay v. Guynon, 131 Mass. 31; Allison v. Barrows, 3 Cold. [Tenn.] 414, 91 Am. Dec. 291; State v. Center, 35 Vt. 378; Griffen v. Smith, 45 Ind. 366. It is also held that a conversation is not privileged when made in presence of third persons. Reynolds v. State, 147 Ind. 3, 46 N. E. 31; Mainard v. Beider, 2 Ind. App. 115, 28 N. E. 196; Robb's Appeal, 98 Pa. 501. As the tendency of the rule is to prevent a full disclosure of the truth, it must be strictly construed. Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 508; Foster v. Hill, 12 Pick. 53. Where nieces of a deceased claimed property as heirs in the absence of a will, the proponents of an alleged will had the burden of proving its existence. The husbands of the nieces had, therefore, prima facie a marital interest in the lands in dispute and were competent witnesses in the will contest. Roberts v. Bartlett, 190 Mo. 680, 89 S. W. 858.

56. Lumbard v. Holdiman, 115 Ill. App. 458. Where an evidentiary fact is material as regards a party to an action, and the wife of such party acted as his agent in regard to the matter, her acts within the scope of her agency may be testified to by her. Schwantes v. State [Wis.] 106 N. W. 237. It is inconsistent to exclude the testimony of the wife on the ground that she is not shown to have acted as the agent of her husband and at the same time to condemn the husband upon the ground of his ratification of a contract held to have been made by the wife in his behalf. Shepherd v. Schomaker [La.] 39 So. 554.

57. Where it appeared that the wife of defendant was his agent in various transactions but not in the one in issue, she was an incompetent witness as to such transaction. Vette v. Sacher, 114 Mo. App. 363, 89 S. W. 360. In an action for damages for the killing of the horses of plaintiff, a married woman, by defendant, her husband, who testified that he was his wife's general agent for the transaction of all her business, was incompetent, under Kirby's Dig. § 3095. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Courtney [Ark.] 92 S. W. 251.

fact of marriage.[63] In Georgia, one spouse cannot testify to the fact of adultery by the other in any proceeding instituted in consequence of such act.[64]

In criminal prosecutions[65] against one spouse the other is not usually a competent witness[66] though there are some statutory exceptions to this rule,[67] as where the offense by one is against the person of the other,[68] and in some states the common-law disqualification has been entirely removed.[69] Where the wife is by law incompetent against the husband, the fact that she sustained a personal injury by the same criminal act of the husband which caused the death of another, for which he is being prosecuted,[70] or the fact that the wife is the only witness to the crime,[71] does not render her competent. The wife being incompetent against her husband her declarations to a third party[72] or to him[73] are also incompetent against him. One not the legal wife of a defendant is competent, even though the relation of husband and wife was assumed.[74] Where the relation of husband and wife has been assumed, a second wife is not a competent witness to prove the fact of the first marriage,[75] since she cannot testify at all until the illegality of the second marriage has been

63. Rev. P. L. 1900, p. 363, § 5, recognizes and affirms such competency. Hill v. Pomelear [N. J. Err. & App.] 63 A. 269.

64. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 5272, which renders one spouse incompetent in an action or proceeding instituted against the other in consequence of adultery, where a husband sought a divorce on the ground of desertion, he could not, in a proceeding by the wife for alimony, testify to her act of adultery. Bishop v. Bishop [Ga.] 52 S. E. 743. The mere fact that such evidence is not objected to does not render it competent. Id.

66. Wife of defendant in a criminal prosecution is not a competent witness against him. Hoch v. People, 219 Ill. 265, 76 N. E. 356; State v. Woodrow [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 545. Wife is not a competent witness for husband on issue of his sanity. Commonwealth v. Woelfel [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1061. Wife incompetent witness in prosecution of her husband for homicide. State v. Wilson [Del.] 62 A. 227.

69. A wife is a competent witness against her husband in a prosecution for bigamy under a statute providing that in all criminal proceedings the husband or wife of the accused is a competent witness and may testify to the fact of her marriage. Richardson v. State [Md.] 63 A. 317.

70. In a prosecution against a husband for the murder of his infant child, though the pistol ball which killed the child in its mother's arms wounded the mother, the latter is incompetent. State v. Woodrow [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 545.

Note: "There is a strong dissenting opinion in the case of State v. Woodrow [W. Va.] 52 S. E. 545. It is a well recognized rule in criminal actions that the wife shall not be compelled to testify against her husband. An exception exists where the offense is alleged to have been committed by him upon her. It is difficult to determine exactly what offenses are included in this exception. Where the act is one of personal violence to the wife, she is a competent witness. Whipp v. State, 34 Ohio St. 87, 32 Am. Rep. 359. It has been held that the wife is competent where the husband is indicted for bigamy. State v. Sloan, 55 Iowa, 217. Also for adultery. Lord v. State, 17 Neb. 526. Contra, People v. Quanstrom, 93 Mich. 254; Compton v. State, 13 Tex. App. 271. In Bassett v. United States, 137 U. S. 496, 34 Law. Ed. 762, it was held that the wife was not a competent witness against her husband on trial for polygamy. The weight of authority seems to be that the offense in the main case was not upon the wife, within the meaning of the exception, and that the case was rightly decided."—4 Mich. L. R. 486.

Where woman living with defendant was not his wife, he having another wife living, she was a competent witness against him, regardless of their confidential relations and her belief that she was in fact his wife. Young v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 92 S. W. 841. Bigamous wife is competent. Hoch v. People, 219 Ill. 265, 76 N. E. 356. Testimony of mistress, who was the wife of another man, held competent. State v. Hancock [Nev.] 82 P. 95. Where a witness was claimed to be incompetent because she had married defendant two days before, but it appeared that she had been married before but her husband had left her 2 years before the second marriage and she did not know his whereabouts, she was held competent, her marriage to defendant being void. Lara v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 5, 89 S. W. 840. Where a witness offered is alleged to be the wife of the accused and it is proven that the accused was previously married and that his wife by such prior marriage is still alive and undivorced, all presumptions in favor of the validity of the shown by proof of the fact and validity of the first.[76] A woman who has been divorced from her husband is a competent witness against him, except as to a communication made by one to the other during marriage.[77] In a prosecution for living in adultery, the husband of defendant's paramour is a competent witness, where the paramour is not on trial nor charged with crime.[78]

(§ 4) D. Miscellaneous relations.[79]—Statutes prohibiting disclosure of confessions to a clergyman do not render a clergyman incompetent as to information not gained through a confession.[80]

§ 5. Credibility, impeachment and corroboration of witnesses. A. Credibility in general.[81]—The credibility of witnesses[82] and whether they have been successfully impeached[83] are questions exclusively for the jury. The jury may disregard the testimony of a witness who has willfully[84] sworn falsely[85] to a material fact[86] except in marriage between the accused and the person offered are overcome, and such person is competent. Hoch v. People, 219 Ill. 265, 76 N. E. 356.

Improper to ask one witness if another is not mistaken in his testimony. Braham v. State [Ala.] 38 So. 919. Instruction erroneous because withdrawing from jury consideration of credibility of witnesses. Thomas v. Law, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 19. Instruction in eminent domain proceedings held not to violate this rule that credibility is for jury. Indianapolis Northern Traction Co. v. Dunn [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 269. Credibility of witnesses is for jury, taking into consideration evidence directed thereto and also appearance of witness on the stand. Peterman v. Henderson [Ala.] 40 So. 756. Whether a witness has any interest in the outcome of a case, and whether such interest, if any there is, is such as to affect his testimony, is for the jury. Miller v. Territory [Okl.] 85 P. 239. The evidence of a prosecutrix in a bastardy proceeding need not be corroborated, but its weight is for the jury. Evans v. State [Ind.] 75 N. E. 651. The law indulges no presumption that an unimpeached witness testified truly. An instruction to such effect invades the province of the jury. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. O'Brien, 219 Ill. 303, 76 N. E. 341. It is erroneous to instruct that when witnesses are otherwise equally credible and their testimony otherwise entitled to equal weight greater weight and credit should be given to those whose means of information are superior. Muncie, etc., R. Co. v. Ladd [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 790. It is erroneous to instruct that a witness who is interested in the result of a suit will not be as honest, candid, and fair in his testimony as one who is not interested. Id.

83. Whether a witness has been impeached is a question of fact, not of law. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. O'Brien, 219 Ill. 303, 76 N. E. 341. Effect of proof of contradictory statements on witness' credibility is for jury. Jones v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 947. An instruction as to the weight to be given the testimony of witnesses who have been impeached may specifically refer to such witness where only one is sought to be impeached. Stevens v. People, 215 Ill. 593, 74 N. E. 786.

84. Jury must believe witness has "knowingly and willfully" sworn falsely. Hughes v. Ferriman, 119 Ill. App. 169. Where written statement after an accident did not include an incident testified to by the writer on the trial, and he was otherwise discredited, the jury were warranted in believing him guilty of willful false swearing and in disregarding all his testimony. Anderson v. Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co., 86 Miss. 341, 38 So. 786.

85. It is not error where an instruction is asked telling the jury that they are the sole judges of the credibility of witnesses and may believe them or not, to modify the instruction so as to tell them that they cannot arbitrarily disregard the testimony of a witness unless they believe it untrue. State v. Legg [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 545. The doctrine falsus in uno falsus in omnibus does not apply to the testimony of a witness who has knowingly belittled or exaggerated a material fact about which he testified. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kline [Ill.] 77 N. E. 229.

86. False testimony must relate to a material matter. Hughes v. Ferriman, 119 Ill. App. 169; Bennett v. Susser [Mass.] 77 N. E. 884. Instruction held erroneous. Johnson v. Farrell, 215 Ill. 542, 74 N. E. 760. Instruction erroneous because not requiring jury to find willfully false swearing as to a material matter before permitting them to disregard the entire testimony of a witness. Geringer v. Novak, 117 Ill. App. 160. Instruction erroneous because not permitting jury to believe a portion of witness' testimony, and not telling them that witness' false testimony must relate to some material matter. Bickerman v. Tarter, 115 Ill. App. 278. On a trial for murder an instruc-

so far as such witness has been corroborated by other credible evidence[87] or by facts and circumstances proven upon the trial,[88] and an instruction to this effect should be given on request where a witness has been wholly discredited[89] or has been contradicted as to a material point.[90] The giving or refusal of instructions on the credibility of witnesses is, however, largely discretionary with the trial court.[91]

Impeaching and discrediting in general.[92]—The extent to which cross-examination of a witness may be carried for the purpose of testing his credibility is a matter largely discretionary with the trial court.[93] Cross-examination of a party for the purpose of discrediting his evidence is governed by the same rules as that of any other witness,[94] though greater latitude is usually permitted in such case.[95] The impeachment of one witness does not operate to impeach other witnesses for the same party.[96] The more usual methods of impeaching or discrediting a witness are more tion: "If you believe that a witness has willfully testified falsely as to any fact, you are authorized but are not bound to disbelieve the entire testimony of the witness," held not erroneous because omitting the word material. People v. Dinser, 98 N. Y. S. 314. An instruction should not direct the jury to disregard the testimony of a witness if certain facts are shown discrediting him, but should only authorize them to disregard his testimony if they find he has willfully sworn falsely as to a material matter. Funderburk v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 672. If it appears that an accomplice of defendant has willfully sworn falsely in regard to a material matter, his testimony, uncorroborated, cannot support a conviction. Jahnke v. State [Neb.] 104 N. W. 154.

87. Instruction erroneous because omitting proviso as to corroboration. Szymkus v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 114 Ill. App. 401. Instruction based on the hypothesis of other "credible witnesses" is erroneous. Johnson v. Farrell, 215 Ill. 542, 74 N. E. 760. Corroboration need not be by "witnesses," it may be by other credible "evidence." Hughes v. Ferriman, 119 Ill. App. 169. An instruction that "the testimony of one credible witness may be entitled to more weight than the testimony of many others if you believe such others are mistaken in their testimony or have knowingly testified untruthfully and are not corroborated by other credible witnesses, or by facts or circumstances proven," is erroneous. Tri-City R. Co. v. Gould, 217 Ill. 317, 75 N. E. 493. Though a witness has been impeached and has sworn falsely as to some material fact, his testimony as to other facts corroborated by other witnesses, must be considered (but not necessarily believed) by the jury. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Powell, 116 Ill. App. 151.

88. A witness who has knowingly sworn falsely to a material matter may be wholly disbelieved except so far as corroborated by other credible evidence or by facts and circumstances proved. United Breweries Co. v. O'Donnell [Ill.] 77 N. E. 547. Instruction held to state rule properly. Williamson Iron Co. v. McQueen [Ala.] 40 So. 306. Instruction held erroneous: "You may disregard the testimony of any witness if you believe the witness has testified falsely, and is not corroborated by other credible witnesses in the case." Hughes v. Ferriman, 119 Ill. App. 169.

89. Fields v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 642, 88 S. W. 134.

90. Where a witness makes statements in material matters inconsistent with former statements the party against whom he testifies is entitled to an instruction that if the jury believe that the witness made inconsistent statements concerning such matters they may disregard his entire testimony or give it such weight as they think it entitled to. State v. Trail [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 17. Where there is a variance between the testimony of the complaining witness at the preliminary hearing and her testimony at the trial of a bastardy proceeding, it is error to refuse a requested instruction on such variance as affecting her credibility as a witness. Quinn v. Eggleston [Neb.] 106 N. W. 976.

91. Refusal of instruction that want of chastity of plaintiff could be considered by jury on her credibility not an abuse of discretion where general instruction on credibility of witnesses had been given. Beasley v. Jefferson Bank, 114 Mo. App. 406, 89 S. W. 1040. Refusal of instruction that entire testimony of witness could be disregarded if the jury believed he had willfully sworn falsely to a material fact, held not error. Id.

92. See 4 C. L. 1959.

93. As to cross-examination of witnesses in general, see Examination of Witnesses, 5 C. L. 1371. To what extent a witness may be cross-examined on collateral issues to test his honesty or credibility rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. Robinson v. Old Colony St. R. Co. [Mass.] 76 N. E. 190. Discretion not abused in ruling out an offer to show what a witness had said regarding his unwillingness to testify. Commonwealth v. Ezell, 212 Pa. 293, 61 A. 930. The evidence of detectives and informers is always carefully scrutinized by the courts, and the cross-examination allowed a person prosecuted by such witness is broad, especially when the witness claims to have induced the criminal act for the express purpose of prosecution. State v. Bryant [Minn.] 105 N. W. 974.

94. Schwantes v. State [Wis.] 106 N. W. 237.

95. Where one's case depends principally upon his own testimony, it is proper to show on cross-examination for the purpose of impeaching him that he had recovered a default judgment on the same claim which had particularly discussed in succeeding paragraphs.[97] In general, the testimony of a witness may be discredited by proving facts contrary to those testified to by him[98] or tending to show such testimony improbable,[99] or by showing acts[1] or statements[2] of the witness, or other circumstances,[3] inconsistent with his testimony.[4] That a wit-been set aside for fraud and collusion. Masters v. Seeley [C. C. A.] 138 F. 719.

96. Korter v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 258.

97. See § 5, subsecs. B, C, and D.

98. In determining the credibility of testimony of defendant in a criminal prosecution the fact, if it is a fact, that he has been contradicted by other and credible witnesses, is to be considered. Maguire v. People, 219 Ill. 16, 76 N. E. 67. Where witness denied giving a letter to another for plaintiff, the letter was admissible to contradict him. Davis v. First Nat. Bank [Ind. T.] 89 S. W. 1015. Where witness told the court he could not understand English sufficiently to testify, that statement could be contradicted by other witnesses. State v. Goodson [La.] 40 So. 771. A testator's son who testifies on an issue of his father's mental capacity may be contradicted by the testimony of any person cognizant of the facts covered by his testimony whether a party to the issue or not. Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755.

99. Where the only person who could directly dispute the testimony of a witness is dead, close scrutiny should be given to it and the question of improbability should be taken into consideration in determining its credibility. In re Bailey, 98 N. Y. S. 725. In murder trial a witness for the state said that he saw the killing, and admitted that on the preliminary hearing he had said he did not see it, and he explained the inconsistency by saying he had been influenced by defendant's uncle and father. It was held proper for defendant to show by the witness that he had been arrested for the crime before the preliminary hearing. Snyder v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 978.

1. Evidence of acts done by witness while on a trip with an officer admissible to impeach testimony of witness as to purpose of trip and why officer went along. Vagts v. Utman, 125 Wis. 265, 104 N. W. 88. One accused of running a lottery testified in chief that he was never in the employ of a certain lottery company, and never authorized to do business for it. It was proper to show on cross-examination that he made a business of buying and selling lottery tickets of such company. State v. Miller, 190 Mo. 449, 89 S. W. 377. Where a witness denied the signing and execution of a written instrument, and that it was executed in duplicate, it was proper to ask him if he had not compared, with counsel, before the jury, a contract offered by plaintiff with a copy given his counsel by him. Mellini v. Duly [Miss.] 40 So. 546. Where witness denied making certain declarations in presence of third person, the fact that he did make them could be proved by such third person. Marris v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 608. A witness who on the stand denies having made a certain statement may be impeached by evidence that he did make such statement. State v. Forsha, 190 Mo. 296, 88 S. W. 746. Where in a personal injury action, a plaintiff's wife testifies that she had no conversation with a certain person relative to the actions of her husband, the testimony of such person to the contrary is competent by way of impeachment. McInnis v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 76 N. E. 911.

2. See, also, § 5 D. A witness who testifies to certain evidentiary facts which have a tendency to prove certain ultimate facts may be impeached by cross-examination as to whether he had made statements inconsistent with such ultimate facts and by proof that he made such statements. Johnson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [N. C.] 53 S. E. 362. Pleadings and testimony in other litigation may affect the credibility of a litigant as to testimony given in a particular case but should not ordinarily estop him from testifying. Ackerman v. Larner [La.] 40 So. 581. Where in an action on a life policy a witness testifies that he has known the insured all his life and had never seen him intoxicated, it is error to refuse to allow him to be cross-examined as to whether he had not talked with the beneficiary of the policy about having a complaint made against the insured for intoxication. Rossenbach v. Supreme Court I. O. F. [N. Y.] 76 N. E. 1085.

3. Where one setting fire to woods testified that after the fire got beyond his control he returned by a certain way to avoid being seen, held error to exclude evidence that the route was so covered with brush and debris as to be impassable. Sampson v. Hughes, 147 Cal. 62, 81 P. 292. A plaintiff in an action for damages to his building because of the maintenance of an elevated railway in the street who testifies that after the erection of the structure his building was worth from $7,000 to $10,000 may be impeached by evidence that he employed agents to sell it and named $17,000 as the price. Cotton v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 698.

4. Statements must be in fact inconsistent with testimony or it is inadmissible. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 474, 104 N. W. 694; Clark v. Dalziel [Cal. App.] 84 P. 429. Impeaching matter must be in fact inconsistent with testimony or it is inadmissible. Seibert Bros. & Co. v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. [Iowa] 106 N. W. 507. A witness who does not recognize certain buildings in the locality in which he resides from a photograph of them cannot be impeached by the admission of such photographs in evidence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kline [Ill.] 77 N. E. 229. It is not competent to contradict a witness by evidence entirely consistent with his testimony. One who testifies that he purchased property on a certain date cannot be contradicted by a deed of a later date. Roessler-Hasslacher Chemical Co. v. Doyle [C. C. A.] 142 F. 118. A statement of a witness has never been heard to make statements made on the stand is not a discrediting circumstance,[5] but previous silence of a witness concerning facts testified to may sometimes be shown.[6] Intoxication of the witness at the time of the events to which he testifies may be shown,[7] as may any other fact tending to show lack of knowledge or want of ability or an opportunity to learn the facts testified to.[8]

A party cannot impeach his own witness,[9] but if the party is surprised by the witness' testimony[10] he may inquire as to previous inconsistent statements to test ness that she was asked at the first trial to point out the plaintiff, and did so, is not inconsistent with her statement that she knew plaintiff by sight. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Boykin [Tex.] 89 S. W. 639. In a prosecution for arson, declarations, made 10 days after the fire, by a witness who testified on the trial that he had used a brush and oil on the floor, to the effect that the oil was put on "for a purpose," does not contradict him or affect his credibility. People v. Brown, 96 N. Y. S. 957. Prior statements of a witness that a railroad running through certain land would damage it a certain amount cannot be received to discredit his testimony as to damages done to other lands by virtue of a railroad being run through them. Prather v. Chicago Southern R. Co. [Ill.] 77 N. E. 430.

Mere discrepancies in the testimony of a witness in different actions, of slight importance, and explained by the witness as mistakes in recollection, do not justify the court in wholly disregarding the testimony of the witness. Allen v. Ellis, 125 Wis. 565, 104 N. W. 739.

5. A witness cannot be impeached by testimony of a person that he never heard him make the statement he made on the stand, though he was present at the time of the circumstance testified about. Fields v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 642, 88 S. W. 134. A witness not shown to have been present at the time certain conversations with a deceased person were had cannot for the purpose of contradicting witnesses who were present, testify that he had never heard the deceased make certain statements. Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678.

6. Where a defendant in a prosecution for murder testifies that on the night before the homicide he was shot at under circumstances which led him to believe that deceased fired the shot he may be impeached on cross-examination by asking him why he did not report the shooting to the authorities. Long v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 559, 88 S. W. 203. Where plaintiff's assignors claimed that a partial payment had been made within the period of limitations, held error for the court to refuse to permit defendant to cross-examine them with reference to why they had uniformly omitted to previously assert such partial payment. Lefkowitz v. Reich, 98 N. Y. S. 695. Where in an action by the trustee of a bankrupt to recover goods purchased from an agent of a creditor, the defendant testified that the agent told him that the goods belonged to the creditor, the trustee could show without laying foundation therefor that at a former trial the plaintiff in testifying as to the same occasion had not stated that the agent made such statement. Coolidge v. Ayers, 77 Vt. 448, 61 A. 40. The failure of a witness to deny a statement made in his presence and hearing cannot be shown to impeach his testimony unless he was under the duty to speak. Thompson v. Mecosta [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 474, 104 N. W. 694. The fact that a highway commissioner, who testified to a conversation between the parties to a suit concerning water rights, wherein defendant had said certain water flowed west, did not mention the conversation at the time of an agreement concerning the water between plaintiff and the township which was made in his presence, did not discredit his testimony, though the agreement assumed that the water flowed east. O'Connor v. Hogan [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 272, 104 N. W. 29.

7. Sharpton v. Augusta & A. R. Co. [S. C.] 51 S. E. 553. That witness was intoxicated at time of event to which he testified may be shown. Morris v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 608.

8. Where it appeared that the prosecuting witness in a prosecution for violation of the local option law was unfriendly to the defendant and his recollection as to the time of sale and other facts was confused it is proper to show that he purchased liquor from other persons at about the time he purchased from defendant and drank it at the place he claimed to have drunk that purchased from defendant. Rutherford v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 172.

9. See 4 C. L. 1960. A party who voluntarily calls a witness so far vouches for the credibility of the witness that he will not be permitted deliberately to impeach him. State v. Stephens [La.] 40 So. 523. State cannot impeach a witness for the prosecution by showing that he was charged on affidavit as being an accessory before the fact to the crime in question. State v. Gallo [La.] 39 So. 1001. A party who is not surprised with the testimony of his own witness cannot impeach him. Franklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 641, 88 S. W. 357. The state cannot impeach its own witnesses unless they have testified to something injurious to the state. Reyes v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 88 S. W. 245. Where a party took the deposition of a person but failed to introduce it or the person making it, the party's testimony could not be objectionable as contradicting the party's own witness. King v. Phoenix Ins. Co. [Mo.] 92 S. W. 892.

10. Where witness told prosecuting attorney that he was mistaken as to facts stated by him before the grand jury, his testimony on the trial, different from his statements before the grand jury could not be discredited by the state by proof of his prior statements. Ware v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 92 S. W. 1093. Evidence given by a the witness' recollection and cause him to review what he has said[11] and may call other witnesses to prove that the facts are otherwise than as stated by the witness.[12] But if the sole purpose of such inquiry and other testimony is to discredit the witness, it is inadmissible unless the party has been entrapped by a hostile witness[13] and even then, to justify impeachment of the witness, it must appear that he has testified against the party calling him and in favor of the adverse party in some material matter.[14] A mere failure of a witness to testify as expected is not ground for impeachment by the party calling him.[15] Testimony of the adverse party, called as a witness, is not conclusive on the party calling him.[16] One who has impeached a witness testifying for the other side cannot introduce original testimony through him by calling him and refusing to vouch for him as a witness; he must put him on the stand as any other witness testifying originally on his behalf.[17]

A witness cannot be contradicted or impeached as to collateral matters,[18] whether such matters were brought out on the direct or cross-examination.[19] Collateral witness at the examining trial cannot be introduced to impeach him where the testimony at the trial is substantially the same. Franklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 641, 88 S. W. 357. Defendant's motorman made two written statements concerning accident, both favoring the defense, and made similar statements in a deposition taken by plaintiff. Later, he resigned his position, and still later, went to plaintiff's attorney and made contrary statements, and was taken to the place of trial by plaintiff but not used so that defendant could not use his deposition. Defendant put him on the stand, and he testified against it. It was held that a claim of surprise was well founded, and that defendant could contradict him by his deposition and written statements. Clancy v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 91 S. W. 509.

11. State v. Stephens [La.] 40 So. 523. Where a witness unexpectedly gives testimony against the party calling him, such party may for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness ask him if he did not, on a particular occasion, make a contrary statement. Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. McAllister [Tex. Civ. App.] 90 S. W. 933.

12. State v. Stephens [La] 40 So. 523. One who calls a witness vouches for his credibility and cannot impeach him, though he may contradict his statements by other witnesses. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts [Colo.] 84 P. 68. Though a party cannot impeach his own witness, he is not precluded from contradicting the witness by other witnesses. In re Bailey, 98 N. Y. S. 725. A party by introducing a witness is not concluded by his testimony given on cross-examination by the adverse party, when the party introducing him is surprised thereby; he may call other witnesses to prove the facts to be otherwise. Civ. Code Prac. § 596. Southern R. Co. v. Goddard [Ky.] 89 S. W. 675. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 515, providing that a party calling a witness may contradict him by other evidence and by showing that he made statements contradictory to his testimony, a defendant in a bastardy proceeding who calls a witness and asks him if he had not had intercourse with the relatrix on a certain date to which the witness replies "not that I know of" may testify that such witness made contradictory statements to him. Walker v. State [Ind.] 74 N. E. 614.

13, 14. State v. Stephens [La.] 40 So. 523.

15. Where a party introduces a witness who simply fails to prove a fact which he wishes to establish, it is not competent to prove that the witness has stated out of court that such is the fact. Threlkeld v. Bond [Ky.] 92 S. W. 606. A party may not impeach his own witness where he gave no testimony that was injurious to him but simply failed to recollect a fact. Willis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 1100. Where one is given full opportunity in the absence of the jury to refresh the memory of his witness, he cannot further examine him in the presence of the jury for the purpose of laying a predicate to contradict him. Id. Where one party for the purpose of laying a foundation for impeachment asks a witness for the other about matters not brought out by such party, the witness becomes his own as to such matters and failure to elicit the desired answers is a failure of proof and other witnesses cannot be called to rebut his statements. Casey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 1018.

16. A party who calls his opponent as a witness is not concluded by his testimony but may contradict him. Mississippi Glass Co. v. Franzen [C. C. A.] 143 F. 501. A party who calls a hostile witness or the adverse party does not thereby hold him out as entitled to credit where by statute he is entitled to impeach him in a particular manner. A contestant of a will who calls one charged with having exercised undue influence in the execution of such will does not hold him out as entitled to credit. Emerson v. Wark, 185 Mass. 427, 70 N. E. 482.

17. Williams v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 620, 87 S. W. 1155.

18. See 4 C. L. 1961. Funderburk v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 672; Hinson v. State [Ark.] 88 S. W. 947; Dillard v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 303; Seibert Bros. & Co. v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. [Iowa] 106 N. W. 507; Thompson v. Mecosta [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 474, 104 N. W. 694; Bell v. State [Miss.] 38 So. 795; Scott v. State [Miss.] 39 So. 1012. Not error to exclude impeaching evidence on unimportant, immaterial matter. Bialy v.

matters, within the meaning of this rule are such as the party would not be allowed to prove as a part of his own case.[20] The rule forbidding contradiction of a witness on collateral matters does not apply where the facts sought to be shown go to the credit or capacity of the witness to testify truly in the particular case, as distinguished from facts discrediting him generally.[21]

(§ 5) B. Character and conduct of witnesses. 1. In general.[22]—Proof of the general moral character of a witness is usually held incompetent,[23] but is admitted in some jurisdictions.[24] In Florida, the general character of a witness

Krause [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 702, 105 N. W. 149. Matters entirely irrelevant cannot be inquired into on cross-examination even for the purposes of impeachment. Schwantes v. State [Wis.] 106 N. W. 237. Questions relating to merely imaginary circumstances, without reasonable grounds to expect favorable answers, or to be able to impeach the answers, are improper. Id. A witness is not to be discredited because of a discrepancy as to a wholly immaterial matter. Instruction held inaccurate but in this case harmless. Mann v. State [Ga.] 53 S. E. 324. Though witness denies making immaterial statements, he cannot be contradicted in regard thereto. Cooper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 115, 89 S. W. 816.

19. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Matthews [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 949, 89 S. W. 983. Even though a witness has testified to immaterial matter on his direct examination, a predicate for his impeachment on such matter cannot be laid on his cross-examination. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Quinn [Ala.] 39 So. 756. Where witness is cross-examined as to collateral matters not testified to in chief, the cross-examiner is bound by the answers given and cannot impeach the witness in regard thereto. Moody v. Peirano [Cal. App.] 84 P. 783.

20. Bell v. State [Miss.] 38 So. 795. Questions on cross-examination are not relevant for purposes of impeachment unless it would be competent to prove the existence of the circumstance suggested by the question otherwise, upon a proper foundation being laid therefor, where one is required. Schwantes v. State [Wis.] 106 N. W. 237. Statements by witnesses for the state constituting links in the evidence against accused, could be attacked. State v. Rogers [La.] 38 So. 952. A witness testified that plaintiff had the reputation of being lazy and on cross-examination gave the name of the person who had told him so. Proof by such person that he had never made such statement to witness was not an attempt to impeach witness on a collateral matter. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Bryson [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 829. On an issue as to whether injuries were caused by the plaintiff's negligence or defendant's contributory negligence, the plaintiff's testimony that he had not been in the habit of stealing rides on the cars cannot be contradicted. Hot Springs St. R. Co. v. Bodeman [Ark.] 88 S. W. 960. Proof of a difficulty between prosecuting witness, in assault, and a third person, denied by witness, was incompetent impeaching evidence because irrelevant. Honeycutt v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 92 S. W. 421. A testator's son who testifies on an issue of his father's mental capacity and states that the relations between himself and father had always been friendly is not impeached as to a collateral matter by evidence of particular instances of trouble between himself and his father. Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755. Where it was attempted to be shown that plaintiff and her husband, who was acting for her, had acquiesced in the claim of a witness for defendant to ownership of stock in question, and the witness testified on his direct examination to conversations with plaintiff and her husband in relation to the stock, and on cross-examination that he showed the paper on which his claim was based to plaintiff's husband, testimony of the husband denying that he was shown the paper held not subject to the objection of contradicting the witness on a collateral matter. Hall v. Wagner, 97 N. Y. S. 570.

21. State v. Malmberg [N. D.] 105 N. W. 614.

22. See 4 C. L. 1961.

23. A witness cannot be impeached by evidence that he is a "cocaine fiend." Williams v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 88 S. W. 334. General reputation of defendant as a violent and turbulent man is inadmissible to affect his credibility. State v. Richardson [Mo.] 92 S. W. 649. A question asked of a witness on cross-examination as to whether he was not the notorious person who was tarred and feathered and run out of the county held properly excluded. State v. Mann, 39 Wash. 144, 81 P. 561. In Florida the general character of a witness not shown to have been convicted of any crime cannot be inquired into to affect his credibility, the only inquiry permissible being as to his character for truth and veracity. Baker v. State [Fla.] 40 So. 673.

Bad character of witness as to chastity cannot be proved. State v. Baudoin [La.] 40 So. 239. Want of chastity cannot be shown to affect credibility. Baker v. State [Fla.] 40 So. 673. It is not an abuse of discretion to exclude questions as to whether the witness had been an inmate of an assignation house 15 or 20 years prior to the trial. Cline v. Waters [Ky.] 90 S. W. 231. Reversible error to show on cross-examination of witness for defendant that she was mother of bastard child. Davis v. State [Miss.] 39 So. 522. In a prosecution for rape of a female under the age of consent it cannot be shown as affecting her credibility that she was pregnant at the time and had had intercourse with many different men. State v. Stimpson [Vt.] 62 A. 14.

24. The character of a witness may be considered in determining the weight and credibility to be given his testimony where each party contends that the testimony on shown to have been convicted of a crime may be inquired into,[25] but in such cases the inquiry should be confined to general character and should not be extended to particular phases or traits of character.[26] Specific acts of wrongdoing, not amounting to crimes, conviction of which may be shown under the statute,[27] cannot usually be proven.[28]

The reputation of a witness for truth and veracity may, of course, be shown.[29] Proof thereof must not be too remote from the time of trial.[30] The reputation of a witness at a place other than his permanent domicile may be shown, provided he resided at the place in question long enough to have acquired a reputation for truth and veracity.[31] behalf of the other is unreliable. Instruction approved though there was no evidence of character introduced. Harrison v. Lakenan, 189 Mo. 581, 88 S. W. 53. The general moral character of a defendant in a criminal prosecution who testifies in his own behalf may be assailed for impeaching purposes. State v. Woodward, 191 Mo. 617, 90 S. W. 90. The defendant in a criminal case assuming the character of a witness is subject to the rules applicable to any witness, and questions as to his past life and conduct which would impair his credibility are not improper. State v. Buffington [Kan.] 81 P. 465. Proof of character whether it relates to the accused or to witnesses is to be considered the same as any other evidence tending to show credibility, guilt, or innocence and is entitled to such weight as the jury deems just in connection with all other evidence in the case. State v. Collins [Del.] 62 A. 224. In a prosecution for seduction it is competent for the purpose of discrediting the prosecuting witness, to admit letters by her to a third person showing a vulgar and lascivious mind on her part. Nolen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 735, 88 S. W. 242.

26. Such as want of chastity. Baker v. State [Fla.] 40 So. 673.

27. See post, § 5 B 2.

28. A witness cannot be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts other than conviction of a felony. Code Civ. Proc. § 2051. People v. Gray [Cal.] 83 P. 707. Evidence that a witness had been arrested for being drunk held inadmissible on issue of character of witness for truth, honesty and integrity. Id. A witness cannot be impeached by evidence of particular acts. Richardson v. State [Md.] 63 A. 317. Witnesses cannot be impeached by testimony not going to their general reputation but to specific conduct. Bringgold v. Bringgold [Wash.] 82 P. 179. The character of a witness cannot be assailed by evidence of specific acts occurring subsequent to the offense for which he was being tried. State v. Wertz, 191 Mo. 569, 90 S. W. 838. A witness who testifies on cross-examination as to the good character of a party cannot be asked on redirect examination if he has not heard of certain circumstances derogatory of his character. Coxe v. Singleton, 139 N. C. 361, 51 S. E. 1019. In a will contest, held error to permit contestant to be asked if he had upon his return from testator's funeral demanded of the custodians a redelivery of an unrecorded deed which he had executed and delivered to testator, and when he answered the question in the negative, to contradict him. Civ. Code § 597 construed. Lancaster v. Lancaster's Ex'r, 27 Ky. L. R. 1127, 87 S. W. 1137. Where in an action for fraud and conspiracy the defendant was asked on cross-examination whether he had ever been found guilty of a fraudulent transaction and replied in the negative, held that a record in a suit to which he was a party but to which plaintiff was not, to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, was inadmissible. Murray v. Moore [Va.] 52 S. E. 381.

Contra: It was competent, to discredit defendant's testimony explaining a transaction between the parties, to show by a witness that defendant had cheated witness out of money by false statements. Lewter v. Lindley [Tex. Civ. App.] 89 S. W. 724. Character evidence consisting of specific delinquencies occurring after the offense for which the witness is being tried can be introduced only for the purpose of affecting his credibility. State v. Wertz, 191 Mo. 569, 90 S. W. 838.

29. See, also 4 C. L. 1961. A defendant in a criminal prosecution who testifies in his own behalf may be impeached by evidence as to his character for truthfulness but the jury should be instructed to consider the evidence only for such purpose. Newman v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1089. Where the credibility of a witness is assailed by cross-examination, the rule in Connecticut is that the particular acts shown must be such as to indicate a lack of veracity. Shailer v. Bullock [Conn.] 61 A. 65. A witness is sufficiently impeached where 12 persons who know him testify that they would not believe him under oath. Gantz v. Kintzing, 212 Pa. 562, 61 A. 1105.

30. State v. Bryant [Minn.] 105 N. W. 974. Though there is a presumption against any sudden change in the character of a person who has reached the age of maturity. Id. When evidence of the reputation of a witness is received, relating to different times, the weight to be given such evidence is for the jury and does not depend wholly on the nearness in time of the evidence. Hardwick v. Hardwick [Iowa] 106 N. W. 639. There is no presumption that a person with a bad reputation in the past is reforming. Id.

31. State v. Rogers [La.] 38 So. 952. The reputation of a witness for truth and veracity at places where he formerly lived may be shown in connection with his reputation

(§ 5B) 2. Accusation and conviction of crime.[32]—Conviction of crime does not now, as at common law,[33] disqualify a person as a witness; but the fact of conviction may be shown as affecting credibility.[34] In some states only proof of conviction of a felony or an infamous crime[35] is admissible; in others conviction of a misdemeanor may be shown;[36] while in some the crime must be one involving moral turpitude.[37] Usually proof of accusation[38] or arrest for crime is inadmissible except in connection with proof of conviction.[39] But in some states proof that a witness has been charged with crime is competent.[40] A conviction must be proved by competent evidence.[41] at his place of residence at time of trial, where he had recently changed his place of residence. Craft v. Barron [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1099.

32. See 4 C. L. 1962.

33. At common law, persons convicted of infamous crimes were disqualified as witnesses. Koch v. State [Wis.] 106 N. W. 531.

34. Modern statutes have removed the disqualification but permit the fact of conviction of crime to be shown as affecting credibility. Koch v. State [Wis.] 106 N. W. 531. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, authorizing proof of conviction of a felony to impeach a witness, either by the evidence of the witness himself or by the record of his conviction, evidence is admissible, not only to show that the witness had been convicted of one of several felonies but also to prove the name of the particular felony or felonies of which he had been convicted. People v. Eldridge, 147 Cal. 782, 82 P. 442. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 597, which applies to criminal and civil actions alike, it may be shown on cross-examination of accused that he has been convicted of a felony. Farmer v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 91 S. W. 682. In a criminal prosecution the defendant may be recalled for the purpose of proving by him that he had been in the penitentiary. McQueen v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 88 S. W. 1047. Where accused becomes a witness he may be impeached by proof of conviction of crimes or misdemeanors under Code 1892, §§ 1743, 1746. Williams v. State [Miss.] 39 So. 1006. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4680, the state, on a prosecution for crime, is entitled to ask the defendant on cross-examination as to his previous conviction for crime in another state. State v. Heusack, 189 Mo. 295, 88 S. W. 21. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4680, providing that the conviction of a witness of crime may be proved to affect his credibility, either by the record or his own cross-examination a defendant who takes the stand on his own behalf may be asked as to any prior conviction. State v. Spivey, 191 Mo. 87, 90 S. W. 81. Rev. St. 1899, § 4680, providing that the prior conviction of a witness for crime may be proved to affect his credibility is not in conflict with § 2637 providing that a person is not incompetent as a witness because of being the one on trial, etc., but such fact may be shown to affect his credibility. Id. The credibility of a defendant in a criminal prosecution who testifies in his own behalf may be assailed by evidence of his prior conviction of crime. State v. Woodward, 191 Mo. 617, 90 S. W. 90. When a witness admits having pleaded guilty to a common assault, it may be shown, as affecting his credibility, that he pleaded guilty to a charge of assault with intent to kill. State v. Forsha, 190 Mo. 296, 88 S. W. 746. A defendant who offers himself as a witness may be asked on cross-examination whether he has been previously convicted of a like offense for the purpose of affecting his credibility. State v. Mount [N. J. Law] 61 A. 259.

35. Under Code 1896, § 1795, only proof of conviction of infamous crimes is competent on the issue of credibility. Williams v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 405. Hence a question whether witness was ever convicted of "a crime" in the city court of a certain city was too general. Id. In a prosecution for homicide it is not proper to impeach a witness for the state by admitting a docket entry of a justice of the peace showing that he had been convicted of carrying concealed weapons. State v. Powell [Del.] 61 A. 966.

36. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4680, proof of a former conviction for a misdemeanor is admissible. State v. Heusack, 189 Mo. 295, 88 S. W. 21. In Wisconsin, conviction of a misdemeanor as well as of a felony may be shown. Rev. St. 1898, § 4073. Koch v. State [Wis.] 106 N. W. 531. Thus conviction of a violation of Rev. St. 1898, § 1561, making it a criminal offense to be found drunk in a public place, may be shown. Id. But conviction of a violation of a city ordinance cannot be shown. Id.

37. Arrest for gambling inadmissible, the offense not being one involving moral turpitude. Henderson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 91 S. W. 569. Proof of intoxication inadmissible. Tally v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 699, 88 S. W. 339.

38. Mere accusations of crime are not admissible. Wade v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 503.

39. Arrest for crime cannot be shown except in connection with proof of conviction. Koch v. State [Wis.] 106 N. W. 531. It is not competent by way of impeachment to ask a witness on cross-examination if he had ever been arrested for a crime, or if he was in attendance on court in custody of a sheriff under arrest for a crime, without any reference to whether or not witness had ever been convicted of a crime. State v. Bryant [Minn.] 105 N. W. 974.

40. It is competent to show that one being tried for homicide is under indictment for assault to murder. Lucas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 880. A defendant in a criminal prosecution may be impeached on his cross-examination by showing that he has been charged with passing counterfeit money and is under bond to await the action

(§ 5) C. Interest and bias of witnesses.[42]—Interest in the event of the action[43] or in its prosecution[44] or any facts tending to show bias[45] such as hostility of a witness toward a party[46] may be considered as affecting the credibility of the witness. Where a party seeks to show ill-will or a motive for falsification, he has the right to show so much of the facts and circumstances as may be necessary to fairly inform the jury of the cause, nature, and extent of the alleged improper in-

of the grand jury. Childress v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 30. As affecting the credibility of a witness it may be shown that he had been charged with forgery. Willis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 1100.

41. See, also, Evidence, 5 C. L. 1301. A foreign judgment properly authenticated is inadmissible to impeach a witness where it does not show a conviction of the witness of a felony. Kennedy v. Lee, 147 Cal. 596, 82 P. 257. Record of conviction of "William S. Barker" prima facie proof of conviction of witness "William Barker." State v. Loser [Iowa] 104 N. W. 337. Record in disbarment proceedings against witness, who was an attorney, containing specific charges of criminal conduct and specific findings of the court thereon, admissible to affect his credibility. Lansing v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 912, 106 N. W. 692. Rev. St. 1898, § 4073, authorizes conviction to be shown to affect credibility. Evidence held sufficient to show identity of defendant with person named in another indictment and to render copy of conviction admissible. Colbert v. State, 125 Wis. 423, 104 N. W. 61.

42. See 4 C. L. 1963.

43. Where a plaintiff in a personal injury action testifies in his own behalf and in contradiction of other witnesses, the defendant is entitled to an instruction that in considering such evidence the jury should consider the fact that the witness was directly interested in the result of the suit. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton [C. C. A.] 141 F. 599. The interest of a witness in the result of a suit may be considered in determining his credibility, and, where there are circumstances inconsistent with the truth of his testimony, the jury is not obliged to believe him though he is not contradicted by other witnesses. Detwiler v. Cox, 120 Ga. 638, 48 S. E. 142. It is not error to ask a witness for defendant in a criminal prosecution any question likely to show his interest in the outcome. Thus, he may be asked concerning an affidavit for change of venue signed by him. Miller v. Territory [Okl.] 85 P. 239. In action by employe of corporation to recover for services, the fact that a witness was a director of the corporation and financially interested could be shown. McCowan v. Northeastern Siberian Co. [Wash.] 84 P. 614.

44. Evidence tending to show activity, interest, and bias on the part of a witness in the prosecution, should be admitted. Borck v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 580. It is proper to show that the prosecuting witness instituted the prosecution for the purpose of extorting money from defendant if she, the prosecuting witness, is first asked whether or not she had begun the prosecution for such purpose. People v. Delbos, 146 Cal. 734, 81 P. 131.

45. Where a husband and wife have been divorced testimony of the former tending to uphold a transfer of property by himself to the latter against claims of his creditors is not open to the suspicion attached to the testimony of interested parties. Davis v. Yonge [Ark.] 85 S. W. 90. The fact that a person may voluntarily come from another state and without process appear and testify in court does not impair his competency as a witness, nor necessarily deprive his testimony of probative force. Timma v. Timma [Kan.] 82 P. 481. Where the state's case in a prosecution for abortion rested principally on the testimony of a witness jointly indicted with the defendant, it was proper on cross-examination to ask him if he expected further prosecution or if he expected lighter punishment because of his testimony. Stevens v. People, 215 Ill. 593, 74 N. E. 786. On cross-examination of an impeaching witness it may be shown for whom he acted in obtaining his information, in order that the fact and manner of his interest may be shown. National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. Fagan, 115 Ill. App. 590. Evidence that attesting witness to will, produced after conveyance of land by her husband, who was one of testator's heirs, joined in such conveyance, is admissible as tending to impeach her. Savage v. Bowen, 103 Va. 540, 49 S. E. 668. Membership of a witness in the same labor union as the party for whom he is testifying may be shown to affect his credibility. People v. Cowan [Cal. App.] 82 P. 339. The testimony of a witness who purchases liquor on Sunday for the purpose of prosecuting the seller, while admissible, is to be weighed by the jury in the light of such fact. Borck v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 380. The per diem, which the prosecution has agreed to pay its witnesses in addition to the amount which they will receive from the state, is a proper subject of cross-examination. Volk v. Westerville, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 241. In a criminal case held error to refuse to allow defendant to show that a witness had stated that if he told what he knew defendant could not be convicted, but that he would not do it because it would clear defendant and implicate another. Brownlee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 621, 87 S. W. 1153.

46. Proper to show unfriendly feeling between accused and witness on account of unpaid whisky bill. Sanford v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 370. In homicide case bad feeling of witness toward decedent may be shown. Morris v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 608. Bias of witness against prosecutrix in assault case may be shown. Funderbunk v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 672. The state of mind of a witness as to his friendship or hostility towards the parties is a proper matter for investigation. People v. Cowan [Cal. App.] 82 P. 339. Questions tending to disclose the animus or bias of a witness are proper. Hampton v. State fluence.[47] While previous difficulties between a prosecuting witness and an accused may be shown, the details of such difficulties are inadmissible unless they are otherwise relevant.[48]

(§ 5) D. Proof of previous contradictory statements.[49]—Prior statements of witnesses inconsistent with their testimony upon material issues are always competent as impeaching evidence[50] when a proper predicate has been laid therefor.[51] Thus, oral or written statements out of court,[52] statements in letters,[53] affidavits,[54]

[Fla.] 39 So. 421. In action for an assault, defendant could show that witness for plaintiff was a former customer of defendant's, had ceased dealing with him and had at one time been ordered out of defendant's place of business. Salzman v. Mandel, 98 N. Y. S. 825. Defendant in a divorce suit may discredit plaintiff by proving on his cross-examination his declarations to the effect that he was trying to help plaintiff get a divorce, that he and defendant had disagreements in business and he was trying to get even with him by helping plaintiff. Lederer v. Lederer, 108 App. Div. 228, 95 N. Y. S. 623. On cross-examination the examining party has an absolute right, within reasonable limits, to interrogate the witness as to specific facts and circumstances which tend to show ill-will or other motive for falsifying, though the witness has denied the existence of such motives. State v. Malmberg [N. D.] 105 N. W. 614. That defendant and witness belonged to opposing factions in the village and were rivals for the postmastership could be shown. Id. Unfriendly feeling of material witness toward a party may be shown either on his cross-examination or by the testimony of other witnesses. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. McCarty [Tex. Civ. App.] 89 S. W. 805.

52. Written statement, admitted by plaintiff to have been signed by him, and containing material admissions, admissible to impeach him. Edmunds Mfg. Co. v. McFarland, 118 Ill. App. 256. A witness having denied a conversation, error to refuse to allow examination of another witness in regard thereto, the point being material. Tuthill v. Smith, 88 N. Y. S. 942. Declarations of one suing as trustee, inconsistent with his testimony, may be shown to impeach him. Thompson v. Mecosta [Mich.] 12 Det. Leg. N. 474, 104 N. W. 694. Where physician testified that he had examined plaintiff for insurance and that he had found that he could not recommend him as perfect physically, his report to the insurance company, containing his questions and plaintiff's answers, was admissible. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Parks [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 130. Error to exclude contradictory statements of prosecutrix in rape case, proper foundation having been laid. State v. Hazlett [N. D.] 105 N. W. 617. In a prosecution for seduction evidence that prosecutrix stated to defendant's attorney after the alleged seduction that the defendant had raped her is admissible by way of impeachment. Nolen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 735, 88 S. W. 242. Where accused in a prosecution for murder testifies that up to within a few days before the homicide he and deceased had been friendly, evidence that he told persons about a year before that he had had trouble with some of his neighbors including deceased and was afraid that he would have to hurt some of them is admissible by way of impeachment. Long v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 559, 88 S. W. 203. A testator's son who testifies as to facts tending to show his father's testamentary capacity and who denies having made contradictory statements may be impeached by evidence that he made contradictory statements at a certain time and place. Swygart v. Willard [Ind.] 76 N. E. 755. Where in an action against a street railway company a motorman testified that though he had been stung on the hand he had at the time of the accident one hand on the controller and the other on the brake and denied having stated that he did not have his hand on the brake, it is competent to impeach him by proving that he had stated that he was rubbing his hand at the time of the accident. Robinson v. Old Colony St. R. Co. [Mass.] 76 N. E. 190. Where witness in action to recover cows testified they never belonged to defendant, defendant could prove that witness had said he could not sell one of them because it belonged to defendant. Giddens & Co. v. Rutledge [Ala.] 40 So. 759. Papers containing conversation between witness and third person was identified by witness as having been previously read to him, and he said its contents were correct with certain exceptions. It was proper to have the third person testify that the witness had previously said that the paper was all correct. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Clark [Ala.] 39 So. 816.

53. A relatrix in a bastardy proceeding who denies that she was alone with a witness, who the defense asserts is the father of the child, on the night the child is alleged to have been begotten and who denies that she ever had intercourse with any person other than defendant may be impeached by a letter written to defendant in which she admitted being alone with witness on the date in question and that twice before she had had intercourse with him. Walker v. State [Ind.] 74 N. E. 614.

54. Prior affidavit. Lederer v. Lederer, and depositions,[55] have been held competent. Statements made under oath on a former trial[56] or at a coroner's inquest[57] are also competent. A prior statement of a witness which amounts only to an expression of opinion is not a proper predicate for impeachment.[58]

(§ 5) E. Foundation for impeaching evidence.[59]—A proper predicate must be laid for the introduction of impeaching evidence,[60] and this is usually done upon the cross-examination of the witness sought to be impeached.[61] A predicate for proof of inconsistent oral statements is usually laid by inquiring of the witness whether he made a certain statement,[62] specifying in such preliminary question the time and place of such statement, the person to whom made, and the language used.[63] If the witness then denies making the statement[64] or makes an evasive

108 App. Div. 228, 95 N. Y. S. 623. Affidavit made by witness on motion to dissolve restraining order held admissible only as impeaching evidence. Graham v. Smart [Wash.] 84 P. 824. A subscribing witness of a will who testifies in the circuit court may be contradicted by affidavits made in the county court. In re Barry's Will, 219 Ill. 391, 76 N. E. 577. In ejectment for a mining claim, a plaintiff who testifies that he has done the required amount of work on the claim in question may be contradicted by copies of affidavits filed by him in the land office, to the effect that the work in question was done on an entirely different claim. White River Min. & Nav. Co. v. Langston [Ark.] 88 S. W. 971. Witness had made statements in an affidavit, through an interpreter, contrary to his testimony on the trial, also given through an interpreter. The affidavit was held admissible to contradict the witness, though the interpreter was not sworn, the latter acting as the agent of both parties. Davis v. First Nat. Bank [Ind. T.] 89 S. W. 1015.

55. A witness may be cross-examined as to statements made by him in a deposition taken prior to the trial but not introduced. Warth v. Loewenstein, 219 Ill. 222, 76 N. E. 379. Plaintiff could be cross-examined as to statements in deposition made by her though it was not used on the trial by her. Glasgow v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 191 Mo. 347, 89 S. W. 915.

56. Reading of official stenographer's report of defendant's testimony on former trial held proper. Mackmasters v. State, 83 Miss. 1, 35 So. 302.

57. Evidence of witness at coroner's inquest competent to impeach him where he admits signing it. Chicago City R. Co. v. Jordan, 116 Ill. App. 650; Kirk v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 108, 89 S. W. 1067.

58. Where witness in homicide case denied, under oath, that he had said "it was a cold-blooded murder" proof that he had made such statement was incompetent. Scott v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 93 S. W. 112.

59. See 4 C. L. 1965.

60. Proof of contradictory statements held inadmissible, no predicate having been laid. Coker v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 516. Where the witness who made the statement is not identified, proof that one of two witnesses heard the other make it would not impeach either witness. Reiter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. Hamlin [Ala.] 40 So. 280. The hostility of a witness cannot be shown by his oral statements out of court unless a foundation is laid by inquiring of the witness on the stand with particularity of the time, place and occasion, whether he made the statements or not. State v. Barditti [Vt.] 62 A. 44. One witness should not be permitted to contradict the testimony of another witness by stating that the latter agreed with him in the matter, without first laying the proper foundation for such contradiction. Lancaster v. Lancaster's Ex'r, 27 Ky. L. R. 1127, 87 S. W. 1137. Where the uncontradicted evidence of a witness was that he had not read what purported to be copies of papers used in a suit in another state, that he did not know of the suit and that he thought they referred to a transaction different from that in issue in the case, the copies insufficiently authenticated, were inadmissible, either as impeaching or substantive evidence of the facts therein alleged. Keim v. Rankin [Wash.] 82 P. 169. Questions to a witness before a committing magistrate, which witness did not answer, cannot be made the predicate for impeachment. Crossland v. State [Ark.] 92 S. W. 776.

61. Foundation must be laid on cross-examination for proof of inconsistent statements. Code Civ. Proc. § 2052. People v. Gray [Cal.] 83 P. 707. Questions relating to the credibility of a witness are material and proper on the cross-examination and the testimony thus sought may form the basis for impeaching the witness. Vickery v. State [Fla.] 38 So. 907. It is proper on cross-examination to ask a question laying a proper foundation for proof of a statement which, if made by the witness, was inconsistent with his testimony. Birmingham R. & Elec. Co. v. Mason [Ala.] 39 So. 590.

62. Where a witness testifies to a particular fact it is error to refuse to allow a question as to whether he had previously made affidavit to the contrary. Randell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 1012. Where witness on a first trial said she knew plaintiff by sight, she cannot be impeached on the second trial at which her deposition used at the first, is introduced, by proof that when asked to point out plaintiff, she pointed out another person, no foundation for such impeachment having been laid by asking witness whether she had said a certain person was plaintiff. International, etc., R. Co. v. Boykin [Tex.] 89 S. W. 639.

63. Attention of witness must be called to these circumstances. Lerum v. Gening [Minn.] 105 N. W. 967. Persons present and answer,[65] it is proper to show by other evidence that he did make it. If the witness does not deny making the statement, other proof of it is usually inadmissible.[66] Where a writing is offered to impeach a witness it should first be shown to counsel for the adverse party.[67] It should also be shown to the witness or read to him,[68] unless it be a written statement under oath in a judicial proceeding,[69] and the witness should be examined as to the portions of it intended to be used to impeach him.[70] It is then admissible if it contains statements inconsistent with the witness' testimony.[71] The authenticity and correctness of written impeaching evidence must, of course, be made to appear.[72]

Where the former testimony of a deceased or absent witness is introduced, or a showing is made for an absent witness, such evidence cannot be contradicted by declarations of the witness[73] even though such declarations were made subsequently to the examination of the witness, or if made before, were unknown to the party seeking to discredit the witness[74] since no foundation can be laid for such impeachment;[75] but this rule is not violated by the admission of inconsistent evidence not involving any declaration of the absent witness.[76]

The impeaching testimony must be confined to the predicate laid.[77]

(§ 5) F. Corroboration and sustentation of witnesses.[78]—When no attempt circumstances of alleged statements not sufficiently shown to lay proper foundation for impeachment. Clark v. Daiziel [Cal. App.] 84 P. 429.

64. A proper predicate is laid by asking the witness if he did not make certain statements, and a denial by the witness that he made them. Jones v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 947.

65. Contradictory statements of a witness may be shown where, upon laying the foundation therefor, he practically admits having made them, but his answers are indefinite, uncertain and evasive and not more than a partial admission. Chicago City R. Co. v. Mattheison, 113 Ill. App. 246.

66. Where witness admitted making a statement there was no error in refusing to allow proof of it by another witness. Raines v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 932. A witness cannot be impeached by proof of prior statements the making of which he does not deny when testifying. State v. Hummer [N. J. Law] 62 A. 388.

67. Counsel for adverse party is entitled to see a letter before it is introduced. State v. Rogers [La.] 38 So. 952.

68, 69. Washington v. State [Ga.] 52 S. E. 910.

70. Where a witness admits having written a letter he cannot be contradicted as to statements therein unless first examined as to the portions of the letter used to impeach him. State v. Rogers [La.] 38 So. 952.

71. Where a witness does not directly deny having made statements contained in a writing, yet the writing may be admitted to impeach him if it contains statements contradicting his testimony, and he admits his signature thereto and that he read it before he signed it. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Crose, 113 Ill. App. 547. A paper which has been shown a witness, read by him, and which he admits to have signed, may, within the discretion of the court, be permitted to be read upon his cross-examination, where it contains statements contradictory to his testimony. Chicago City R. Co. v. Mattheison, 113 Ill. App. 246. See, also, Evidence, 5 C. L. 1301.

72. The unverified minutes of the stenographer on a former trial are inadmissible to contradict a witness. Jaffe v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 1037. Where it is sought to contradict a witness by the minutes of the stenographer on a former trial the party against whom such evidence is offered is entitled to insist that the correctness of the minutes be properly proven and this involves the right to cross-examine whoever is produced to verify them. Id. Witness in murder case could not be impeached by transcript of testimony at inquest nor by stenographer's notes, where stenographer could not say that notes contained all the testimony given by the witness. State v. Martin [Or.] 83 P. 849.

73. When a showing has been admitted for an absent witness, the evidence so given cannot be contradicted by declarations of the absent witness. Funderburk v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 672. Where a witness on a former trial of an action is without the jurisdiction of the court at the time of the second trial thereof and his testimony on the first trial is received in evidence, it cannot be impeached. Lerum v. Geving [Minn.] 105 N. W. 967. On a subsequent trial the evidence of a deceased witness, taken at a second trial, cannot be impeached by showing that some of his statements on the witness stand at the first trial are inconsistent therewith, where, upon the second trial, his attention was not directed to such statements, and he was given no opportunity to explain the alleged discrepancies. Omaha St. R. Co. v. Boesen [Neb.] 105 N. W. 303.

has been made to impeach a witness, evidence which is merely corroboratory of his testimony is inadmissible.[79] But where the credibility of a witness has been attacked by proof of statements out of court inconsistent with his testimony, other statements of the witness consistent with his testimony may sometimes be shown.[80] The mere fact that other witnesses have testified to a different state of facts will not, however, make competent such corroboratory evidence.[81] The party calling a witness sought to be impeached has the right to re-examine the witness to explain contradictory statements or circumstances proved against him.[82] Where the character of a witness has been attacked, proper evidence in rebuttal is, of course, com-

79. Green v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 1115. Where there was no attempt to impeach the witness, evidence of consistent statements was inadmissible to corroborate him. Kesserlin v. Hummer [Iowa] 106 N. W. 501. Cross-examination of a witness held not an attempt to impeach him. Commonwealth v. Tucker [Mass.] 76 N. E. 127. Where plaintiff in a personal injury action examined two physicians who testified that plaintiff's leg was broken, it was improper to ask a physician testifying for defendant, on the cross-examination, whether plaintiff's witnesses were not reputable physicians. Weitzel v. Fowler [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 90, 107 N. W. 451. A statement by a witness tending to show the confidence reposed in his integrity by his employer is irrelevant and inadmissible. Peters v. State [Ga.] 52 S. E. 147. A defendant in a criminal prosecution cannot introduce testimony to corroborate an unimpeached witness for the state. State v. Cato [La.] 40 So. 633.

80. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Irvine [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 822, 89 S. W. 428; Franklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 641, 88 S. W. 357; Burch v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 168; Hudson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 177; Craven v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 311. Where a witness is cross-examined for the purpose of impeaching him and of showing that his story was a recent fabrication created under the influence of counsel, a similar statement made previously may be shown in corroboration. Griffin v. Boston, 188 Mass. 475, 74 N. E. 687. Where a witness stated that he was present and saw the fatal shot fired and is impeached by evidence of contradictory statements, the party calling him may prove that he made statements that he was present, but could not prove such statements. Hicks v. State [Ind.] 75 N. E. 641. Where a witness is contradicted by way of impeachment by evidence of statements different from those made at the trial, the party by whom the witness was called may prove statements made about the time the contradictory statements are alleged to have been made in harmony with those made by the witness at the trial. Id. This rule, however, does not authorize the admission of all prior harmonious statements but only such as are in harmony with the part of his testimony which has been contradicted by the alleged contradictory statements given in evidence. Id. Where a witness has been sought to be impeached by contradictory statements, prior statements consistent with his testimony cannot be shown except for the purpose of showing a motive for the false statement, removed at the time of the trial, or of showing the contradictory statement to be a falsification of recent date. Chicago City R. Co. v. Matthieson, 113 Ill. App. 246. This is the rule even though the corroboratory statements sought to be proved were made under oath. Id.

Held incompetent: A witness, sought to be impeached by proof of contradictory statements cannot be supported by proof that he made elsewhere other statements consistent with his testimony on the stand. Cook v. State [Ga.] 53 S. E. 104. The impeachment of a witness by showing that he has made statements in conflict with his present testimony cannot be met by the party calling such witness with evidence that at other and different times the impeached witness has made statements in harmony with his present testimony. People v. Turner [Cal. App.] 82 P. 397. Particularly is this the rule where there is nothing to show that the witness did not have the same motive or interest to deceive when he made the confirmatory statement that he may have had when he testified to the fact. Id.

81. Under Code Public General Laws 1904, § 3, art. 35, providing that it shall not be competent for a party to a cause who has been examined as a witness, when impeached to corroborate his testimony by proof of his own declarations made to a third person out of the hearing of his adversary, a plaintiff who testified to a certain fact which was contradicted cannot corroborate by evidence of his own declarations or statements to his wife. Maryland Steel Co. v. Engleman [Md.] 61 A. 314.

82. Where it was shown, to impeach a witness, that he had not divulged facts he was then testifying to, on a previous examination, he may show why such facts were omitted by him. Carwile v. State [Ala.] 39 So. 220. It is not error to permit a witness, who has made statements out of court at variance with his testimony given in the trial of a cause, to explain or give his reasons, if he has any, for making the contradictory statements. Baum v. State of Ohio, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 515. Where a written instrument signed by a witness is introduced to impeach him by showing that its contents are inconsistent with his testimony it is proper to show in rebuttal evidence of what transpired at the time the paper was signed in order to explain the inconsistency. Shreve v. Crosby [N. J. Err. & App.] 63 A. 333. Where a written statement has been introduced to impeach a witness, it is competent, where it is claimed that the statement was obtained by fraud and deception to show all

petent.[83] Thus, where conviction of a felony has been shown, the fact that the witness had been pardoned has been held competent.[84]

§ 6. Privilege of witnesses.[85]—By the fifth amendment to the Federal constitution, and by the several state constitutions and bills of rights, a person accused of crime cannot be compelled to be a witness or give evidence against himself.[86] The privilege has been held not to be violated by admitting statements of the accused after he had been duly warned,[87] nor by admitting articles unlawfully in possession of the accused and taken from him when arrested,[88] nor by admitting testimony of officers concerning articles worn by accused and voluntarily given up by him when arrested.[89] Where the accused takes the stand and testifies in his own behalf, he waives his privilege as to all matters legal and pertinent before the court.[90]

The constitutional provision under consideration not only protects an accused person from being made a witness against himself in a prosecution against him, but under it no witness in any legal proceeding can be compelled to give evidence that would tend to incriminate him. In order that a witness may be entitled to claim the privilege, it must appear from the nature of the evidence which the witness is called upon to give that there is reasonable ground to apprehend that, should he answer, he would be exposed to a criminal prosecution.[91] That a fact that was done and said at the time it was obtained. National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. Fagan, 115 Ill. App. 590. Though the fear of being convicted of crime will not excuse a witness for swearing falsely, yet, where upon a succeeding trial he admits the falsity of the former testimony and deposes to the contrary, attributing his perjury to the fear above set out, it may afford a moral explanation sufficient to account to the jury for the false testimony and where the explanation is satisfactory to the jury the witness may be believed with or without corroborating circumstances or evidence. Chandler v. State [Ga.] 53 S. E. 91.

83. Where evidence of reputation is erroneously admitted, the party whose character is assailed should be allowed to rebut it. Murray v. Moore [Va.] 52 S. E. 381. Where incompetent impeaching evidence is introduced it may be met by countervailing evidence and motion to have it stricken need not be made. State v. Speritus, 191 Mo. 24, 90 S. W. 459. The state laid a predicate for impeaching defendant on his cross-examination but the impeaching witness did not testify until the state put in its rebuttal evidence. It was held the defendant could then introduce proof of his good reputation for truth and veracity. Neill v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 91 S. W. 791.

86. A contempt proceeding is not a criminal case, within Const. art. 1, § 9, providing that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to give evidence against himself. State v. Reilly [Wash.] 82 P. 287. Under Code 1899, c. 152, § 20, providing that in criminal prosecutions evidence shall not be given against the accused of any statement made by him as a witness upon legal examination does not apply where a justice without warrant of law takes the sworn statement of a person who at the time is not accused of the homicide but is afterward indicted, for the purpose of determining whether he will hold an inquest. State v. Legg [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 545. Game Laws, Laws 1900, p. 58, c. 20, § 193, providing that "no person shall be excused from testifying in any civil or criminal action or proceeding taken or had under this act upon the ground that his testimony might tend to convict him of a crime," does not relate to a party to criminal action. 89. In prosecution for larceny of shoes, testimony of a witness describing the shoes worn by defendant when arrested was proper, where defendant was simply asked to take them off and did so, no threats being made or inducements offered before defendant removed them. Moss v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 340. If there was error in admitting such testimony, it was cured by defendant's subsequent statement that he was asked to take off his shoes and did so. Id.

90. Person accused of assault having testified in chief that he went into a pit and got a gun, a question on cross-examination as to where he got the pistol was proper. Miller v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 342. Defendant in prosecution for illegal sale of intoxicants having availed himself of the privilege of testifying given by Code 1895, § 5086, it was competent to prove by him that a license had been issued to him. Davis v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 663.

91. Rudolph v. State [Wis.] 107 N. W. 466. Grand jury was investigating liability of national bank employe for disappearance of cash from the vaults and a cash book of a broker was desired. Proceedings were pending against the broker in his own state as a party to a "bucket shop." Held, the possibility that the cash book would disclose a violation of the "bucket shop" law, or show that he was an abettor of the embezzler, jusconcerning which a witness is questioned may become material in a criminal prosecution against him is not alone conclusive; the fact must be a necessary and essential part of the crime.[92] The statement of the witness that his answer will tend to criminate himself is not conclusive;[93] the question is one for the court to be determined in view of the circumstances of the particular case and the nature of the evidence sought to be elicited.[94] The privilege is waived where the witness testifies freely, and in such case his testimony may be used against him.[95]

Statutes providing that witnesses shall not be excused from testifying in certain cases and granting immunity from prosecution on account of any transaction concerning which they may testify[96] are as broad, as to the immunity granted, as the constitutional privilege of silence as to self-incrimination, but no broader.[97] Such statutes operate only when the witness testifies under real compulsion, other than compelling the witness to appear by a subpoena.[98] But it has been held that the statutory immunity may be claimed by one who has not been subpoenaed or sworn,[99] as in the case of persons who appear before the commissioner of corporations and testify in an investigation being made by him under direction of a resolution of Congress.[1] The Federal statute of 1903 providing that no person shall be prosecuted or be subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under the anti-trust act and certain other statutes, is held to furnish sufficient immunity from prosecution[2] though it may not afford protection against prosecution in state courts for an offense disclosed.[3] The examination of witnesses before the grand jury concerning an alleged violation of the anti-trust act is a "proceeding" within the meaning of the act of 1903.[4] The tified his refusal to produce the book or to make statements showing his possession of it. Ballmann v. Fagin, 200 U. S. 186, 50 Law. Ed. —. An officer of a bankrupt corporation who is under indictment in a state court for embezzlement of the funds of the corporation, cannot, on his examination before the referee, as against his claim of privilege, be required to state whether he misappropriated certain money of the corporation but may be compelled to state whether he has any of the corporate property in his hands or under his control. In re Hooks Smelting Co., 138 F. 954.

92. Rudolph v. State [Wis.] 107 N. W. 466. Under Laws 1901, p. 106, c. 85, no party or witness shall be excused from testifying in certain cases, but persons testifying are protected from prosecution for matters testified to. The fact that a person testified before a grand jury that he was an alderman but knew of no bribery or crookedness in public affairs, did not render him immune to a prosecution for bribery though proof that he was an alderman was essential to prove that crime. 95. Where a person not under arrest makes a statement before the grand jury believing at the time that he is under suspicion of having committed the offense being investigated by that body, his statement may be used against him on his trial for such offense though he was not given the statutory warning. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 90 S. W. 37.

96. An alderman who testified before the grand jury that he knew of no alderman having solicited or received money for votes, and that he had not received money for his vote, was held not to have testified to any transaction which would make him immune to a prosecution for bribery under Laws 1901, p. 106, c. 85. State v. Murphy [Wis.] 107 N. W. 470.

97. State v. Murphy [Wis.] 107 N. W. 470. Dodge, J., who writes the principal opinion, dissenting. The view of Judge Humphrey, of the Federal district court, is that the immunity granted by the act creating the department of Commerce and Labor is broader than the privilege. United States v. Armour & Co., 142 F. 808.

98. State v. Murphy [Wis.] 107 N. W. 470. Dodge, J., dissenting. A person is not compelled to give evidence against himself until he has been summoned and sworn as a witness and his rights are not infringed on his being required to appear before the grand jury in pursuance of a subpoena and be sworn. People v. Hummel, 96 N. Y. S. 878.

99. United States v. Armour & Co., 142 F. 808.

1. Persons who appeared before the commissioner of corporations in the "Beef Trust" investigation which the commissioner of corporations was directed to institute by the Martin Resolution of the House of Representatives of February 25, 1903, are entitled to the immunities granted by 27 Stat. 443 and 32 Stat. 827, 904. United States v. Armour & Co., 142 F. 808.

immunity granted by the act is not rendered insufficient by the difficulty, if any, of procuring the testimony given before the grand jury, in order to sustain a plea of immunity.[5] The privilege against self-incrimination is purely personal to the witness and he cannnot claim it for another person,[6] nor for a corporation of which he is an officer or employe.[7] A corporation cannot claim the privilege where its agents are called upon for evidence.[8] A witness subpoenaed to testify in regard to violations of the Kansas anti-trust act cannot refuse to testify on the ground that the immunity granted by the act does not preclude use of his testimony in a prosecution under the Federal anti-trust act.[9]

Note: "It is evident from its origin that the function of the privilege is to protect a person who is called to the stand to testify and that it is not intended to protect those who are not witnesses. State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 20 Am. Rep. 688; Commonwealth v. Shaw, 4 Cush. [Mass.] 594; New York Life Ins. Co. v. People, 195 Ill. 430; McElree v. Darlington, 187 Pa. 593, 63 Am. St. Rep. 592; Wigmore, Evidence, § 2196, p. 3136. Consequently the witness can set up his privilege only for his own protection and not for another's benefit. In re Moser [Mich.] 101 N. W. 588; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 Law. Ed. 819. This is also true where that other person is the principal or employer of the witness. Gibbons v. The Waterloo Bridge Co., 4 Price, 491; U. S. Exp. Co. v. Henderson, 69 Iowa, 40. Should not the rule be applied in accordance with the two cases last cited to an officer of a corporation, who, himself granted annesty by statute, refuses to answer questions put to him before a Federal grand jury on the ground that his answers will incriminate the corporation against which criminal proceedings are being taken? This question the Supreme Court of the United States has recently answered, in the affirmative in the cases of Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 Law. Ed. ---, and McAlister v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 90, 50 Law. Ed. ---. In view of the historical reason for the existence of the privilege no other answer could be given."—6 Columbia L. R. 344.

8. The right to immunity from prosecution for violation of the Anti-Trust or Interstate Commerce Laws, because of evidence given before the Commissioner of Corporations or Interstate Commerce Commission is limited to the individuals who give evidence and cannot be claimed by corporations whose agents such individuals are. United States v. Armour & Co., 142 F. 808. See, also, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 Law. Ed. ---, and McAlister v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 90, 50 Law. Ed. ---.

Note: Following are comments on Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 Law. Ed. ---: "In England the principle 'nemo tenetur seipsum accusare' is merely a rule of evidence, but in the United States it is a constitutional right. Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 Law. Ed. 1110. This constitutional right is, however, only an enactment of the common-law doctrine (See Wigmore, Ev., § 2252), and however differently expressed in the various constitutions, the same principle is enunciated by all. Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, at 584-586, 35 Law. Ed. 1110. The application of this principle to corporations involves two questions: first, is there anything in the nature of the privilege that makes it inapplicable to corporations? secondly, is there anything in the nature of a corporation that unfits it for the privilege?

"The privilege is in its nature personal, for no one can assert it except the one from whom the evidence is sought (New York Life Ins. Co. v. People, 195 Ill. 430), and that one must be the person who is in danger of incrimination. An agent, provided he himself is in no danger of incrimination, cannot refuse to testify for fear of incriminating his principal, even though the principal be a corporation (Gibbons v. Proprietors of Waterloo Bridge, 5 Price, 491), though there is at least one case to the contrary, holding that the agent on the stand is the corporation on the stand (Davies v. Lincoln Nat. Bank, 4 N. Y. S. 373). The Supreme Court, however, accepts the prevailing view, and if that is sound, it must follow logically that a corporation can never be a witness, with a possible exception in the case of a bill of discovery filed directly against it. In such a case it has been held that a corporation is entitled to the privilege against self-incrimination. Logan v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 132 Pa. 403. But bills of discovery apply only to civil cases (See Logan v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 132 Pa. 403), and it is, therefore, difficult to see how the corporation could assert the privilege in an investigation by the state, unless one adopts the apparently erroneous New York view that an officer on the stand represents the corporation. From the nature of the privilege, then, it is seen that the corporation may in one narrow class of cases be in a position to exercise it. While, then, in a civil suit, it would seem that there is no reason for treating the corporation differently from a natural person, yet, in an investigation by the state, there is a difference arising from the very nature of a corporation and of corporate rights. The corporation receives its rights from the state and can act only in a manner prescribed by its creator. It has special privileges and franchises and must account for their use, and it would be subversive of justice to say that it could refuse to do so on the ground that it had abused them. Therefore, although a corporation is held by the principal case within the protection of the Fourth

The constitutional protection against unreasonable searches and seizures cannot ordinarily be invoked to justify refusal of an officer of a corporation to produce its books and papers in obedience to a subpoena duces tecum issued in aid of a grand jury investigation of an alleged violation of the anti-trust act.[10] But if a subpoena is so sweeping as to the documentary evidence demanded as to amount to an unreasonable search and seizure, the corporation is entitled to immunity therefrom.[11] Refusal of corporate officers to produce documentary evidence cannot be justified on the ground that their possession of the evidence desired was not personal but that of the corporation.[12] The immateriality of evidence sought to be elicited cannot justify the refusal of witnesses to obey the orders of the Federal circuit court, requiring them to answer questions put to them and to produce written evidence in their possession, on their examination before a special examiner.[13]

The fact that stolen property was returned to a person upon his solemn promise of secrecy and immunity from prosecution of the person who committed the larceny does not excuse such person, testifying before the grand jury, from disclosing the name of the person who returned the property,[14] even though it should be made to appear that the person who returned the property was the wife of the guilty party and could not be made to testify against him.[15]

A witness may not be required to disclose trade secrets.[16]

(Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 Law. Ed. ——), and has been held within the protection by the clause in the Fifth forbidding double jeopardy, it would seem that its nature prevents it, as between it and the state, from receiving immunity from investigation and disclosure of its internal affairs."—19 Harv. L. R. 523.

"It is declared in the opinion that a corporation cannot set up the privilege against self-incrimination in refusing to produce its books, since "there is a clear distinction between an individual and a corporation." It may be questioned whether this was necessary to the decision, and whether the grounds stated are intended to make the proposition an unqualified one. But the language is express; and the ruling seems to be the first one of its kind in any jurisdiction.

"What does it teach, as to the practical method for going about to procure this sort of evidence against corporations, in the proceedings now so common? The prosecutor or investigator, it is obvious, has his choice at the outset between two modes. Either he may call upon the corporation directly for its documents, or he may demand them of an officer of the corporation. If he takes the latter course, he must inevitably give immunity to the officers personally, supposing that he is a prosecuting attorney, and he runs a great risk of producing the same effect, if he is an investigating commissioner, under the recent ruling in the Chicago Packers' Case (noticed elsewhere). But if he takes the latter course, demanding from the corporation directly, he avoids these disadvantages; for the corporation has no privilege to refuse (under Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 Law. Ed. ——), and the officers, not having been personally subjected to the demand, cannot invoke their privilege, and, therefore, do not benefit by the immunity clause. Thus both the corporation and (most important) the officers remain liable to prosecution. Is not this the practical lesson to be drawn from these decisions?

"Yet it remains to ask whether the Court's opinion has not left a vital point still unnoticed. That point is this: The privilege began, continued, and now exists at common law, independently of statute; the Constitution merely guarantees it against legislative alteration; did the supreme court, then, mean to say that a corporation was and is not within the privilege at common law? or did they mean to say merely that the Constitutional guarantee of it to all 'persons' does not include corporations? If they meant the former, then no immunity needs to be given to, nor can be claimed by, a corporation; and courts are free to exact everything from a corporation. But if they meant the latter, then the privilege stands, for corporations, until abolished by the legislature; hence, if the legislature has not abolished it, the corporation may still claim it; and hence also, if the legislature in abolishing it has chosen (unnecessarily, to be sure) to grant immunity as an inseparable gift annexed thereto, the corporation will get the immunity when forced to relinquish the privilege. The importance of this distinction in the current attempts to investigate corporate conduct is obvious. But we doubt whether any certain light upon it is to be found in Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 Law. Ed. ——." Professor Wigmore in 1 Ill. L. R. 43.

9. Under Kan. Laws 1897, c. 265, § 10, only such questions as relate to transactions within the state are material in a hearing under the act; hence a prosecution under the Federal act based on testimony given in a state case, is too remote a possibility to warrant a refusal to testify. Jack v. State of Kansas, 201 U. S. 92, 50 Law. Ed. ——.

10. Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 Law. Ed. ——.

§ 7. Subpoenas, attendance, and fees.[17]—The compensation of witnesses[18] and liability therefor[19] and the mode of compelling their attendance[20] are statutory. A witness cannot be compelled to attend unless his compensation has been paid or tendered.[21] The production of documentary evidence is elsewhere treated.[22]

11. Subpoena held unreasonable. Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 Law. Ed. —.

14. Witness properly fined for refusing to disclose name. Rogers v. State [Miss.] 40 So. 744.

15. Rogers v. State [Miss.] 40 So. 744.

16. Requiring one to disclose the names of men he uses to fraudulently obtain goods from another is not a trade secret. In re Park, 138 F. 421. An order requiring a witness to answer certain questions on cross-examination in interference proceedings in the Patent Office may be denied on the claim of the witness that they require him to disclose a secret process. Herreshoff v. Knietsch, 127 F. 492.

17. See 4 C. L. 1970.

18. One testifying as an expert in a criminal prosecution on a subject requiring special knowledge and skill, in the absence of a special contract, is entitled only to the statutory fee. Main v. Sherman County [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1038. In Montana, a witness attending a trial is entitled to mileage and sums paid as mileage may be taxed as costs, though witness resided out of the county of trial and more than 30 miles from the place of trial. Great Falls Meat Co. v. Jenkins [Mont.] 84 P. 74.

19. Under the Indiana statutes where the state in a criminal prosecution in good faith procures the attendance of witnesses it will not lose its right to recover the costs of such witnesses because the subsequent conduct of the accused renders their attendance unnecessary. Where the defendant at first pleaded not guilty but at the time set for trial entered a plea of guilty the defendant is liable for the costs of all witnesses though the names of some of them were not indorsed on the indictment. Cameron v. State [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 1021.

20. In New York children, when witnesses, may be committed to secure their attendance as witnesses. Code Cr. Proc. §§ 215, 218 and Pen. Code § 291, construed. People v. Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 48 Misc. 175, 95 N. Y. S. 250. By statute (Rev. St. c. 51, § 36), the report of the master is made the basis for the order of attachment against one who willfully neglects to obey a subpoena issued by the master, and such report must contain the necessary elements to warrant the order for attachment. Hollister v. People, 116 Ill. App. 338.

21. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3318, a witness cannot be compelled to attend unless he is paid mileage and the statutory per diem. In re Depue [N. Y.] 77 N. E. 798. And in a proceeding for contempt for not appearing it must be shown that those conditions were complied with. Id. An attachment for contempt for failure to obey a subpoena should not be ordered where it does not appear that the witness was paid or tendered his fees. Hollister v. People, 116 Ill. App. 338.
