44. Age and capacity of child, nature of structure, and proximity to public places. Belt R. Co. v. Charters, 123 Ill. App. 322. Pumping machine in enclosed room remote from any residence and attended by competent engineer not within doctrine. Houck v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 559, 92 S. W. 738. Not applicable where boy seven and one half years old entered defendant's premises on a Sunday, without authority, and pulled supports from under chimney of house being demolished by defendants thereby causing chimney to fall. Wilmot v. McPadden [Conn.] 65 A. 157. Proprietor of body of water so situated as to present no circumstances specially enticing or hazardous to children, whereby they are led by their infantile instincts to incur danger of drowning, is under no higher duty to infant trespassers or licensees than to adults. Akron Waterworks Co. v. Swartz, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 509. No duty upon landowner to protect trespassing children from obvious danger of a pond or body of water. Sullivan v. Hidekoper, 27 App. D. C. 154.

45. Boy injured by defendant's electric wire while climbing bridge pier to get at pidgeon nests. Graves v. Washington Water Power Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 956.

46. Doctrine applies only where the injury results from some part of the alluring thing or structure, or where the attractive device is so located that in yielding to its attraction the child, without the intervention of any other cause, is brought directly in contact with some extrinsic danger. Seymour v. Union Stock Yards & Transit Co., 224 Ill. 579, 79 N. E. 950. Doctrine not applicable where child playing on clay bank, alleged to be the attractive thing or device, left his play and ran alongside cars until he fell under, question of sloping sides of bank being eliminated from case by concession of counsel that plaintiff did not contend that it was defendant's duty to make yard where clay bank was situated a safe play ground. Id.

47. In case involving turntable. Walker's Adm'r v. Potomac, etc., R. Co., 105 Va. 266, 53 S. E. 113.

48. No liability where boy fell from wall on being warned off and threatened by watchman, in absence of any evidence that boy was unduly driven or harassed. Weatherbee v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 214 Pa. 12, 63 A. 367.

49. See 6 C. L. 757.

50. McGill v. Michigan S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 788.

51. An act of negligence which would not have produced the injury, but for the intervention of an independent cause which could not have been reasonably anticipated, but which turned aside the natural sequences of events and produced the result complained of, is not the proximate cause of such result, the intervening cause being the proximate cause. American Bridge Co. v. Seeds [C. C. A.] 144 F. 605. Defendant not liable for injury caused by fall of his fence overhanging street which was caused by crowd of trespassers climbing upon it. Bannon v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 231. Negligence of shipper as to manner of preor neglectful,[52] and it may be the acts of the plaintiff himself, in which case it is usually called contributory negligence,[53] though the distinction is sometimes recognized.[54] On the other hand, the proximate cause need not be the last in point of time,[55] nor the sole cause,[56] and may consist of several elements.[57] Existing conditions contributing to the negligent act and making it more dangerous do not constitute proximate cause.[58] It has been held that what one may reasonably anticipate is not decisive in determining the question of proximate cause,[59] the question in paring sulphuric acid for shipment superseded by negligence of consignee in ordering plaintiff, an inexperienced hand, to unload it. Reddick v. General Chemical Co., 124 Ill. App. 31. Where plaintiff's driver would have driven him against defendant's car regardless of its negligent management. Kane v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 485. Negligently turning stock loose not proximate cause of their injury by railroad train some distance from place of their escape. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 17. Defendant not liable for fire started by licensee in building in which defendant kept inflammable materials. Beckham v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 638. Where persons for whose actions defendant was not responsible caused brick to fall from defendant's chimney. Strasburger v. Vogel, 103 Md. 85, 63 A. 202.

52. Cavanagh v. Centerville Block Coal Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 303.

54. White v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del. Super.] 63 A. 931; Garrett v. People's R. Co. [Del. Super.] 64 A. 254. Contributory negligence involves fault or neglect, whereas one may be debarred from recovery on account of his own act, which though not neglectful, constitutes an independent, intervening cause which was not such as ought to have been foreseen by defendant. Cavanaugh v. Centerville Block Coal Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 303.

55. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Oram [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 624, 92 S. W. 1029. Where disease results in unbroken connection from an injury, the cause of the injury is the proximate cause of the disease. Sallie v. New York City R. Co., 110 App. Div. 665, 97 N. Y. S. 491. Fact that the disease is a germ disease and that the germs do not enter the system by reason of the accident does not break the causal connection where they would not have developed except for the weakened condition of the system caused by the injury. W. 688; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Kleespies [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 1015. Where injury would not have occurred but for defendant's negligent failure to construct guard-rails along highway, fact that it would also not have occurred but for fact that horse became frightened at some goats, does not relieve defendant. Strange v. Bodcaw Lumber Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 152. Where defendant electric company turned current into circuit knowing of a "ground" but not of another "ground" created by a stranger, the two "grounds" making a short circuit which caused the injury. Harrison v. Kansas City Elec. Light Co., 195 Mo. 606, 93 S. W. 951. Negligence of third party in driving wagon against lumber pile negligently constructed by defendant. Snydor v. Arnold, 28 Ky. L. R. 1250, 92 S. W. 289. Concurrent negligence of defendant's motorman and flagman of train. Chicago City R. Co. v. Shaw, 220 Ill. 532, 77 N. E. 139. Defendant's negligence in constructing bar across railroad track, and railroad's negligence in failing to erect warning signals, concurred. Consolidated Kansas City Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Binkley [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 181. Proximate cause for jury where employe stumbled over block of wood and fell into unguarded machine. Bresewski v. Royal Brush & Broom Co., 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 457. Where stranger opened unguarded switch and car running at excessive speed and negligently operated was wrecked, injuring passenger. Elgin, Aurora & S. Traction Co. v. Wilson, 120 Ill. App. 371. Where ship owner knew that workmen were using candles and electric lights in their work on an oil tank, but nevertheless put oil in tank without notifying workmen, and an explosion was caused by gas escaping through drill holes and being ignited by candles. McGill v. Michigan S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 788. Where two acts of negligence are alleged and these unite in causing an injury, it is not a question of proximate or remote cause, but of a concurrence of two causes, for both of which the defendant may be responsible, and the one injured may allege and prove both if he can. Home Ins. Co. v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 373. Common carrier's negligence mingling with act of God. Fentiman v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 500, 98 S. W. 939. Lightning concurring with defective electric lighting appliances. Quincy Gas & Elec. Co. v. Schmitt, 123 Ill. App. 647. Fire caused by lightning communicated by defendant's telephone wire. Byron Tel. Co. v. Sheets, 122 Ill. App. 6.

57. Where several acts are alleged to have contributed to the injury, a particular act is not to be ignored because it is not the sole cause. Masterson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 504. Where several defects proved were so related as to lead to the conclusion that they interacted and cooperated together to produce a dangerous condition, it was held that the resultant condition was the proximate cause, and there was no uncertainty for failure to prove which of the defects caused the accident. Dunphy v. St. Joseph Stock Yards Co., 118 Mo. App. 506, 95 S. W. 301.

58. Frosty and slippery condition of ground which prevented plaintiff from holding hand car negligently precipitated against him. Hardt v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 427. Fact that weak physical condition contributed in measure to extent of injury is no defense. Foley v. Pioneer Min. & Mfg. Co., 144 Ala. 178, 40 So. 273.

59. Hudson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co.,

such case being merely whether the injury resulted from the defendant's negligence through a continuous and unbroken sequence without reference to whether the defendant could or should have anticipated the ultimate result,[60] but the weight of authority seems to be the other way.[61] It is not necessary, however, that the precise injury should have been foreseen.[62] The cause sine qua non is not necessarily the proximate cause.[63]

§ 4. Contributory negligence.[64]—Contributory negligence is the negligence of the plaintiff or person injured directly contributing to the injury as a concurring proximate cause thereof.[65] In most states it is a complete defense,[66] but in some

Ct. 231; Mailiefert v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 50 Misc. 160, 98 N. Y. S. 207; Byron Tel. Co. v. Sheets, 122 Ill. App. 6. Probable cause is "the efficient cause; that which acts first and produces the injury as a natural and probable result, under circumstances that he who is responsible for such cause as a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence ought reasonably to foresee that personal injury to another may probably follow from such person's conduct." Quoted in Feldschneider v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 122 Wis. 423, 99 N. W. 1034, from Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Co., 97 Wis. 279, 72 N. W. 735, and approved in Eichman v. Buchheit, 128 Wis. 385, 107 N. W. 325. Proximate cause is that which naturally leads to, or produces, or contributes, directly to, producing a result such as might be expected by any reasonable and prudent man as likely to directly and naturally follow from the performance or nonperformance of any act. Moore v. Lanier [Fla.] 42 So. 462. If, in the exercise of ordinary foresight, and the light of the circumstances, the negligent escape of a powerful current of electricity from the wires of a power company to those of a telegraph company should have been anticipated by the former as likely to occur, such negligence will be deemed the proximate cause of the death or injury of an employe of the telegraph company occasioned by his contact, while in the performance of his duties, with his employer's wires so charged. Toledo R. & Light Co. v. Rippon, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 334.

Held proximate cause: Where workman in fitting iron pipe touched defectively insulated electric wire with wrench or pipe and was killed, the defective insulation was the proximate cause. Ryan v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 621, 89 S. W. 865. Defendant should have anticipated that explosion might occur where oil was put in unfinished tank, in which holes had to be drilled, without notifying workmen who were using candles and electric lights in connection with their work. McGill v. Michigan S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 788.

Held not proximate cause: Allowing passenger to smoke in seat in which smoking was forbidden held not proximate cause of injury in rush caused by fire set to another passenger's dress by match negligently discarded by smoker. Fanizzi v. New York & Q. C. R. Co., 113 App. Div. 440, 99 N. Y. S. 281. Failure of bank teller to keep count of money in reserve chest not proximate cause of loss by theft by other employes when they did not know of such failure and it did not appear that earlier discovery of theft would have led to recovery of money. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Des Moines Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 145 F. 273. Failure of shipper to tie up bale of merchandise with cords strong enough to handle it with held not proximate cause of fall of teamster caused by cord breaking while he was pulling on it in attempt to move bale. Cronin v. American Linen Co., 147 F. 755.

62. Marsh v. Great Northern Paper Co., 101 Me. 489, 64 A. 844. If in the light of the circumstances results of the general character should have been anticipated by ordinary foresight as likely to occur, that would, so far as that question is concerned, be sufficient. Toledo R. & Light Co. v. Rippon, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 334. Fact that the particular act of concurrent negligence could not have been anticipated is immaterial. Harrison v. Kansas City Elec. Light Co., 195 Mo. 606, 93 S. W. 951.

63. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 224, 93 S. W. 195. Obstruction across railroad track held proximate cause of injury to switchman struck thereby while on top of car, though accident might not have occurred if warning signals had been constructed. Consolidated Kansas City Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Binkley [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 181.

Tullis [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 478, 91 S. W. 317; Birmingham R., L. & P. Co. v. Ryan [Ala.] 41 So. 616; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bethea [Miss.] 40 So. 813. Negligence in boarding a moving car will not defeat recovery where it was safely accomplished and plaintiff was thereafter injured. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Barnes [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 524, 95 S. W. 714. The fact that the plaintiff was violating an ordinance when injured will not prevent a recovery unless such vio-jurisdictions it is never an absolute defense in any case,[67] and in certain cases it is no defense at all.[68] It is a defense in an action for injuries caused by violation of statutory duties, unless the statute plainly excludes such defense.[69] Contributory negligence is not the same as assumed risk,[70] nor is it the same as where the injury is caused solely by the negligence of the plaintiff or the person injured.[71] These distinctions, however, being usually unimportant so far as the effect is concerned, are often disregarded, and the negligence of the plaintiff or the person injured is usually classed and treated as contributory negligence, regardless of whether it was the sole or only a contributing cause. In some cases, however, the latter distinction is of prime importance.[72] A licensee must exercise due care for his own safety.[73]

Due care by a plaintiff[74] or person injured is measured by the general standard of due care,[75] and the care which one must exercise for his own safety is correlative to the duty which others owe to him, and he may to a certain extent presume that such duties will be performed.[76] Lack of due care, or contributory neg-lation proximately contributed to or caused accident. Star Brewery Co. v. Houck, 222 Ill. 348, 78 N. E. 827. Intoxication at time of injury will not preclude recovery unless it was direct or contributory cause of injury. Black v. New York, etc., Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 797.

Where the injury is caused by the concurrent negligence of plaintiff and defendant, the plaintiff cannot recover, as the law will not weigh and balance the degree of negligence attributable to each party. Robinson v. Huber [Del.] 63 A. 873. Violation of a street car speed ordinance affords no cause of action where plaintiff was himself guilty of contributory negligence. Campbell v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 58. Potomac Elec. Power Co., 26 App. D. C. 482. Employe of one contractor had right to assume that bridge upon which he was directed to drive by another contractor who had control thereof was safe. Curtis v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 345. Employe of independent contractor working in room light enough to work in, but not to inspect insulation of electric wires, had right to assume that wires were properly insulated. Ryan v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 621, 89 S. W. 865. Employe of subcontractor may, in absence of obvious dangers, presume that contractor has provided safe place to work. Steele v. Grahl-Peterson Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 882. Person going on premises by invitation may presume that they are reasonably safe. Wills v. Taylor [Mass.] 78 N. E. 774. Plaintiff had right to assume that defendant had not been guilty of negligence in constructing windmill pursuant to contract with plaintiff. Flint & Walling Mfg. Co. v. Beckett [Ind.] 79 N. E. 503. Employe of independent contractor held entitled to drive according to signal from ligence, may consist of failure to use one's senses to avoid danger,[77] failure to take proper precautions,[78] or unnecessary exposure to obvious danger.[79] It involves some knowledge of the conditions and circumstances,[80] and some conception of the danger likely to result from the non-observance of due care;[81] but mere knowledge of the danger and opportunity to observe and avoid it are not conclusive of the question, but only circumstances to be considered by the jury.[82] Ignorance of danger, in order to prevent the application of the doctrine of contributory negligence, must be not only actual but excusable.[86] Intoxication does not necessarily constitute lack of due care but is a fact to be considered.[84] The same care is not required in cases of sudden emergencies as where there is time to deliberate,[85] the test being whether he acted as an ordinarily prudent man would have acted under the same circumstances,[86] and mere error of judgment in attempting to escape sudden peril does not necessarily constitute contributory negligence.[87] Even acting wildly under such one accustomed to give directions to workman on premises. Power v. Beattie [Mass.] 80 N. E. 606. Where plaintiff and fellow-servants were rolling a heavy wheel onto a car under the direction of a foreman, plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in taking hold in such manner as to be unable to get away when it was dropped, since the foreman may have been negligent in giving the order before he had time to get out of the way. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Metcalf, 29 Ky. L. R. 870, 96 S. W. 525. A patron of a theater may assume in the absence of warning that it is safe to follow the usher and is not guilty of negligence in failing to look for holes in the carpet. Nephler v. Woodward [Mo.] 98 S. W. 488.

Turning horse onto street railroad track upon suddenly discovering red lights in road in front. Palmer v. Larchmont Horse R. Co., 112 App. Div. 341, 98 N. Y. S. 567. One will not be held guilty of contributory negligence if in his effort to avoid circumstances is not necessarily fatal to a recovery;[88] but unreasonable fright on account of unreal danger will not excuse negligence in exposing one's self to a real danger.[89] One may adopt a perilous alternative in a sudden emergency to prevent injury to another and yet not be guilty of negligence.[90]

Children.[91]—A child so young as not to be able to appreciate a danger is not chargeable with contributory negligence in not avoiding it.[92] Children of certain ages are sometimes declared absolutely incapable of exercising care and hence not chargeable with the consequences of a failure to exercise it,[93] and a similar prima facie presumption is indulged in favor of children between certain ages,[94] but the general rule is that no presumption applicable to all cases will be indulged,[95] age being material only as bearing upon the question of capacity.[96] Under this rule the duty of the child is commensurate with its maturity and capacity in connection with the circumstances of his injury,[97] and is measured by the care which a child of the same age, capacity, intelligence and experience, would exercise under the same circumstances.[98] Mere capacity to know danger is not necessarily sufficient to make a child guilty of contributory negligence in doing a thing which would be negligence in one of mature age.[99] Where the acts of a child are the sole proximate cause of his injury and not merely a contributing cause, the question of his capacity is not involved.[1] The contributory negligence of children is usually a question for the jury.[2]

Comparative negligence.[3]—The doctrine of comparative negligence has generally been repudiated,[4] but it is held that contributory negligence is no defense in immediate danger, in the exigency of the moment, suddenly and without time to consider, puts himself in the way of other perils. Simeone v. Lindsay [Del.] 65 A. 778. 4. While doctrine of comparative negligence no longer prevails in Illinois, it does an action for willful injury,[5] or where negligence is so wanton or reckless as to amount to willfulness.[6]

Last clear chance doctrine.[7]—The doctrine of the last clear chance is merely a phase of the doctrine of proximate cause,[8] and applies where the negligence of the defendant intervenes between that of the plaintiff and the accident, thus constituting an independent and efficient cause to the exclusion of the plaintiff's negligence,[9] or where the negligence of the plaintiff intervenes in a similar way between the accident and the negligence of the defendant.[10] It does not apply so as to exclude the defense of contributory negligence where the plaintiff's peril was not discovered by the defendant in time to avoid the accident,[11] and, a fortiori, it does not apply where the defendant neither knew nor could have known of such peril by the exercise of due care.[12] It does not apply where the negligence of both parties is contemporaneous and concurring.[13] Contributory negligence occurring after the defendant's last act of negligence will bar a recovery,[14] but in such case the plaintiff's subsequent negligence must have been with knowledge of his peril.[15]

Imputed negligence.[16]—Except under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the negligence of one person will not be imputed to another.[17] Where, therefore, this not follow that plaintiff cannot recover though guilty of "slight" negligence, where he was exercising due care under the circumstances. Malott v. Schlosser, 119 Ill. App. 259.

Routledge v. Rambler Automobile Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 386, 95 S. W. 749.

Note: The doctrine of imputed negligence, first applied in Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C. B. 115, has been the subject of considerable dispute and conflict at various times and in different jurisdictions. This case, decided in 1849, was overruled in England in The Bernina, 12 P. D. 58; Mills v. Armstrong, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 1. It was cited as authority in Allyn v. Boston & H. R. Co., 105 Mass. 77, but distinctly repudiated in Randolph v. O'Riordan, 155 Mass. 331, 29 S. E. 582. It was followed in Wisconsin at an early date and is still followed there, no distinction being made between a passenger of a common carrier and one riding gratuitously as guest of the driver. Hoofe v. Fulton, 29 Wis. 296, 9 Am. Rep. 568; Prideaux v. Mineral Point, 43 Wis. 513, 28 Am. Rep. 558; Otis v. Janesville, 47 Wis. 422, 2 N. W. 783; Olson v. Winnipeg, 123 Wis. 479, 102 N. W. 30. So, also, in Michigan the rule is that, where one of years of discretion enters a private conveyance of another, he is chargeable with the contributory negligence of such other. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 26 Mich. 274; Schindler v. Railway Co., 87 Mich. 410, 49 N. W. 670; Cowan v. Railway Co., 84 Mich. 583, 48 N. W. 166. In Mullens v. Owosso, 100 Mich. 103, 58 N. W. 663, 23 L. R. A. 693, 43 Am. St. Rep. 436, however, there was a vigorous dissenting opinion. This rule is also limited so as to apply only to adults, the distinction being based upon the fiction that in such case the relation of principal and agent exists, and hence an infant too young to appoint an agent does not come within the rule, and where there is no evidence that either party supposed the relation to exist as a matter of fact, the doctrine does not apply. Humpel v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 138 Mich. 1, 100 N. W. 1002, 110 Am. St. Rep. 275. And the rule has further been limited so as not to apply where one himself in the exercise of due care riding upon a fire engine was injured by the concurring negligence of the driver and a motorman (Murray v. Boston Ice Co., 180 Mass. 165, 61 N. E. 1001; McKernan v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 138 Mich. 519, 101 N. W. 812, 68 L. R. A. 347), nor does it apply to a passenger injured by concurring negligence of his carrier and another carrier (Cuddy v. Horn, 46 Mich. 596, 602, 10 S. W. 32, 41 Am. Rep. 178). The authority of the Wisconsin and Michigan cases prevailed upon the Montana courts to adopt the same rule. Whittaker v. Helena, 14 Mont. 124, 43 Am. St. Rep. 621. In Vermont the contributory negligence of the driver is imputable to his guest. Carlisle v. Sheldon, 38 Vt. 440. The early cases in Pennsylvania follow Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C. B. 115. See Lockhart v. Licthenthaler, 46 Pa. 151; Phila., etc., R. Co. v. Boyer, 97 Pa. 91. But these cases have been overruled. Dean v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 129 Pa. 514, 18 A. 718, 6 L. R. A. 143, 15 Am. St. Rep. 733; Bunting v. Hogsett, 139 Pa. 363, 21 A. 31, 12 L. R. A. 268, 23 Am. St. Rep. 192; Little v. Cent. Dist. & P. Tel. Co., 213 Pa. 229, 62 A. 848. The rule has never been applied in Pennsylvania to a case where a guest is in the exercise of due care on his own part and in such case the plaintiff is allowed to go to the jury. Carlisle v. Brisbane, 113 Pa. 544, 6 A. 372, 57 Am. Rep. 483; Carr v. Easton, 142 Pa. 139, 21 A. 822. In Allyn v. Boston & Al. R. Co., 105 Mass. 77, it was held that where one riding in a vehicle with another used no care for his own safety, he was bound to show due care on the part of his companion to whom he had intrusted himself. In Randolph v. O'Riordan, 155 Mass. 331, 29 S. E. 582, it was held that a hack driver's negligence would not be imputed to a passenger injured in a collision with another carriage, and the doctrine of Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C. B. 115, was repudiated. Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 375, 29 Law. Ed. 652, was approved, and Allyn v. Boston & A. R. Co., 105 Mass. 77, was distinguished. In Murray v. Boston Ice Co., 180 Mass. 165, 61 N. E. 1001, it was held that where one trusts the sole management of a vehicle in which he is riding with another to such other person, he must show due care on the part of the latter; but the court declared that it did not mean to give the Allyn case any further sanction than it then had. In Yarnold v. Bowers, 186 Mass. 396, 71 N. E. 799, the doctrine of the Allyn case was applied to a case where two were riding in same rowboat which collided with steamer. In Knox v. Boston El. R., 185 Mass. 602, 606, 71 N. E. 90; Evensen v. Lexington & B. St. R. Co., 187 Mass 77, 72 N. E. 355, and Halloran v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co., 192 Mass. 104, 78 N. E. 381, the plaintiff based his own case upon due care on part of driver, thus adopting the latter's acts as his own. In Creavin v. Newton St. R., 176 Mass. 529, 57 N. E. 994; and La Blanc v. Lowell, etc., St. R., 170 Mass. 564, 49 N. E. 927, the question of indentity did not arise, as there was evidence in each case that plaintiff exercised due care. The unbroken line of authority in all the other states is opposed to the doctrine of imputed negligence, the general rule being that where the injured person and the driver do not stand in the relation of master and servant, passenger and carrier, or parent and child, and where the plaintiff is himself in the exercise of due care, the concurring negligence of the driver is not imputable to the plaintiff so as to preclude a recovery from a third person. Elyton Land Co. v. Mingen, 89 Ala. 521, 7 So. 666; Birmingham R. & Elec. Co. v. Baker, 132 Ala. 507, 31 So. 618; Dormus v. R. Co., 97 Ala. 327, 12 So. 111; Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Thomas, 33 Colo. 517, 81 P. 801, 70 L. R. A. 681; Hot Springs St. R. Co. v. Hildseth, 72 Ark. 572, 82 S. W. 245; Consolidated Ice Mach. Co. v. Keifer, 134 Ill. 492, 25 N. E. 799, 10 L. R. A. 696, 23 Am. St. Rep. 688; W., St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Shacklett, 105 Ill. 364, 44 Am. Rep. 791; West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Dougherty, 209 Ill. 241, 70 N. E. 586; Christy v. E. 218; Lake Shore, etc., R. v. McIntosh, 140 Ind. 461, 38 N. E. 467; Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Johnson, 163 Ind. 518, 72 N. E. 571; Nesbit v. Garner, 75 Iowa, 314, 39 N. W. 516, 1 L. R. A. 152, 9 Am. St. Rep. 486; Leavenworth v. Hatch, 57 Kan. 57, 45 P. 65, 57 Am. St. Rep. 309; Cahill v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 92 Ky. 355, 18 S. W. 2; Louisville R. Co. v. Anderson, 25 Ky. L. R. 666, 76 S. W. 153; State v. Boston & M. R. Co., 80 Me. 430, 15 A. 36; Neal v. Rendall, 98 Me. 69, 56 A. 209, 63 L. R. A. 668. But in Maine the general rule that the negligence of the driver is not imputable to the guest is subject to an exception based on statute where the action is for injuries caused by defective highways. Barnes v. Rumford, 96 Me. 315, 52 A. 844. In Minnesota the rule is that in the absence of the relation of master and servant, parent and child, or guardian and ward, the negligence of one party will not be imputed to another where the latter neither authorized the conduct of the former nor participated therein, nor had the right or power to control it; but where several unite in the joint prosecution of a common purpose under such circumstances that each has authority, express or implied, to act for all with regards to the means or agency employed to effect such purpose, the negligence of one in the management of such means or agency will be imputed to the others. Koplitz v. St. Paul, 86 Minn. 373, 90 N. W. 794, 58 L. R. A. 74; Teal v. St. Paul City R. Co., 96 Minn. 379, 104 N. W. 945. The general rule against imputation of negligence of driver to one riding with him prevails in Missouri, Maryland, New Hampshire and California. Dickson v. Mo. P. R. Co., 104 Mo. 491, 16 S. W. 381; Holden v. Mo. R. Co., 177 Mo. 456, 76 S. W. 973; Johnson v. St. Joseph, 96 Mo. App. 663, 71 S. W. 106, 9 Am. St. Rep. 375; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. State, 79 Md. 335, 29 A. 518, 47 Am. St. Rep. 415; Consolidated Gas Co. v. Getty, 96 Md. 683, 54 A. 660, 94 Am. St. Rep. 603; United Rys. & Elec. Co. v. Beidler, 98 Md. 564, 56 A. 813; Noyes v. Boscawen, 64 N. H. 361, 10 A. 690, 10 Am. St. Rep. 410; Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co. [Cal.] 85 P. 152. The same doctrine is also supported in a long line of decisions in New York, beginning with Robinson v. N. Y. Cent., etc., R. Co., 66 N. Y. 11, 23 Am. Rep. 1. In Brickell v. New York, etc., R. Co., 120 N. Y. 290, 24 N. E. 449, 17 Am. St. Rep. 648, the rule is held to apply only where the relation of master and servant does not exist, and where the passenger is so situated as not to be in a position to discern the danger and warn the driver. But generally in New York the guest has not been debarred from recovery as a matter of law. See Robinson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 91 App. Div. 158, 86 N. Y. S. 442, afd. in 179 N. Y. 593, 72 N. E. 1150; Van Vranken v. Clifton Springs, 86 Hun, 67, 33 N. Y. S. 329; Morris v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 63 App. Div. 78, 71 N. Y. S. 321; Dyer v. Erie R. Co., 71 N. Y. 228; Masterson v. New York, etc., R. Co., 84 N. Y. 247, 38 Am Rep. 510; Phillips v. New York, etc., R. Co., 127 N. Y. 657, 27 N. E. 978; Strauss v. Newburgh Elec. R. Co., 6 App. Div. 264, 39 N. Y S. 998; Bailey v. But it has been held in Nebraska that in a case of joint enterprise the negligence of the driver was imputable to the plaintiff. Omaha & R. Co v. Talbot, 48 Neb. 627, 67 N. W. 599. The question of imputed negligence was before the supreme court of the United States in Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 29 Law Ed. 652, and Thorogood v. Bryan was prise;[19] but the fact that some one else is driving, does not relieve one of the duty to exercise due care for his own safety.[20] The doctrine of respondeat superior is sometimes invoked as between the driver and his guest.[21]

The negligence of a parent or child is not imputable to the child so as to preclude a recovery in its behalf,[22] but the contributory negligence of a beneficiary will bar a recovery for the death of the child.[23]

§ 5. Actions. Pleading.[24]—The complaint or petition must allege the duty of the defendant to the plaintiff,[25] the negligence of the defendant,[26] and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury.[27] In some jurisdictions contributory negligence must be negatived,[28] but in most jurisdictions this is not necessary.[29] The law of the forum controls as to the necessity of negativing contributory negligence.[30] Where the complaint shows contributory negligence, no recovery can be had.[31] discredited, as resting "upon indefensible ground," and following this case, the Federal courts generally have held that the negligence of the driver is not imputable to a gratuitous passenger in a private conveyance. 31. Notwithstanding Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 359a, providing that plaintiff need not allege lack of contributory negligence. In-

The alleged duty of the defendant and the acts of negligence relied on must be stated with sufficient particularity to enable the defendant to understand the nature of the charge against him.[32] A general allegation of duty is insufficient,[33] and the same is true as to the allegation of proximate cause,[34] but negligence may be alleged in general terms provided the particular act alleged to have been done negligently is specified,[35] that is, only the ultimate act of negligence need be alleged.[36] A general averment of wantonness or willfulness is sufficient to let in proof.[37] Such an allegation is not inconsistent with allegations of negligence.[38] Several acts of negligence of the same nature and all of which may be true and either or all of which may have caused the accident may be pleaded in one count.[38] Sufficiency of the complaint on demurrer must be tested by its specific and not its general allegations of negligence.[40] It is not necessary as against a demurrer to allege that the effect of the act or omission would ordinarily produce the effect which actually did follow.[41] Allegations of conclusions are not admitted by a demurrer.[42] In alleging freedom from contributory negligence it is not necessary to use the phrase "free from fault," but the averments should be such that this condition of affairs is apparent from the language used,[43] and freedom from contributory negligence should be shown as to each act of negligence alleged against the defendant.[44] A general allegation of freedom from contributory negligence is an allegation of a mere inference which must be sustained by the facts alleged.[45] An allegation that the defendant knew or could have known of certain defects will be construed, on demurrer, merely as an allegation that he could have known.[46] The pleading of facts is not open to objec-

32. Blending allegations of duty, only one of which imposes any obligation upon defendant, and attributing the accident to the cumulative effect of all as the proximate cause, is insufficient. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stegall's Adm'r, 105 Va. 538, 54 S. E. 19.

33. That defendant was bound to give warning before shoving cars against car on siding. McAndrews v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 222 Ill. 232, 78 N. E. 6030. That defendant had no right to put any more cars on siding. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Hennessey [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 670.

35. The particular omission or act which rendered the ultimate act or omission negligent need not be alleged. McGehee v. Schiffman [Cal. App.] 87 P. 290. Where defendant's duty is sufficiently charged, it is permissible to predicate negligence, charged in general terms, upon any act or omission whereby it is claimed that such duty was violated. tion where the pleader is thereby relieved from the necessity of pleading conclusions as to negligence on the part of the defendant or contributory negligence on the part of the defendant.[47] In order to invoke the doctrine of last clear chance, knowledge of the plaintiff's peril must be alleged.[48] In a suit for injuries to a licensee it must appear that the injuries were received on the defendant's premises [49] and that the plaintiff was a licensee.[50]

Amendments are allowed as in other actions.[51]

The answer.[52]—Objection to allegation of acts of contributory negligence in the alternative must be taken by demurrer.[53] The general issue admits the defendant's connection with the accident when the case is tried on this assumption and no rebutting evidence introduced.[54] Contributory negligence is an affirmative defense and, unless developed by the plaintiff's case must be specially pleaded,[55] and the specific facts constituting such negligence must be alleged.[56]

Issues and proof.[57]—The plaintiff can recover only upon proof of the negligence alleged,[58] and where particular acts of negligence are specified the proof will be confined to such acts,[59] but it is not necessary to prove them all, proof of any one or more being sufficient.[60] Allegation of a specific act of negligence will not preclude proof of other acts under a more general allegation of the ultimate act of negligence,[61] and having alleged the ultimate facts upon which a recovery is predicated, the plaintiff may prove the logical and reasonable results arising from such facts.[62] Allegations of wantonness or willfulness will not preclude proof of ordinary negligence,[63] and under an allegation of wanton negligence, a recovery may be had for wantonness.[64]

An allegation of injury to the body is sustained by proof of injury to the members thereof.[65] Allegations of place need not be proved strictly as laid where they are not descriptive of the identity of the subject of the action,[66] but it is otherwise where the character of the negligence is affected by the place of the accident.[67] Proof of an instrumentality of the same general nature as the one alleged is sufficient.[68] A custom need not be pleaded in order to be proved as evidence of what would have been due care under the circumstances.[69] That a child was non sui juris cannot be proved unless it is pleaded.[70]

The defendant's proof must conform to his pleadings.[71] That the injury was caused by the negligence of some one for whose acts the defendant was not responsible is available under the general issue.[72]

76. Statement of person injured at same time with plaintiff's intestate three minutes tions of the conditions under which the accident occurred,[79] settlement,[80] expert testimony,[81] and circumstantial evidence.[82] Evidence of other acts of negligence [83] and other injuries [84] is generally inadmissible, but evidence of other effects of the same cause is admissible to show the nature and extent of the causal agency.[85] Although custom cannot be considered as changing the standard of care established by substantive law, it is admissible upon the issue whether such standard has been complied with,[88] but evidence of a custom contrary to a municipal ordinance is in-after accident. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Molloy's Adm'x, 28 Ky. L. R. 113, 91 S. W. 685. Declarations of the injured person immediately on returning to consciousness are admissible as to how the injury occurred, though made in response to questions by a physician, such questions not being leading or suggestive. Christopherson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 1077. Statement of man on engine that woman claimed to have been scalded held so near in point of time as to be part of the res gestae. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Tullis [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 478, 91 S. W. 317. Evidence as to how packages of flooring were tied and hoisted previous to falling of a package upon plaintiff. Smith v. Dow [Wash.] 86 P. 555.

77. Statement of witness that crossing was dangerous, inadmissible. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Molloy's Adm'x, 28 Ky. L. R. 1113, 91 S. W. 685. Witness cannot testify generally as to whether plaintiff was himself negligent but must state the facts. Forbes & Carlose v. Davidson [Ala.] 41 So. 312. Testimony that person was negligent in doing certain act is inadmissible, but witness may testify as to the proper manner of doing the act. Id. Witness should not be allowed to give his opinion as to whether the business in which defendant was engaged was dangerous or not. Olwell v. Skobis, 126 Wis. 308, 105 N. W. 777. Opinion of witness as to whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence is inadmissible, no question of science or peculiar knowledge being involved. Whether plaintiff should have known that it was unsafe to drive on bridge. Curtis v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 345. Opinion as to whether the person injured had time to escape danger admissible. Reiter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. Hamlin, 144 Ala. 192, 40 So. 280.

78. Experiments are permissible where the conditions have not been changed, but not otherwise. Elgin, A. & S. Traction Co. v. Wilson, 120 Ill. App. 371.

79. Observations made immediately after accident, or so soon as to preclude possibility of a change of conditions, are admissible. Elgin, A. & S. Traction Co. v. Wilson, 120 Ill. App. 371. Evidence of observations after change of conditions not admissible. Goddard v. Endler, 123 Ill. App. 108. Evidence of the working or action of the instrumentality which caused the injury admissible. Odegard v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 809.

80. A settlement by defendant with another injured by the same alleged negligent act is not admissible as a confession of negligence. Routledge v. Rambler Automobile Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 386, 95 S. W. 749.

81. Reiter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. Hamlin, 144 Ala. 192, 40 So. 280. Expert testimony based on observations made after the accident is admissible when the conditions have not been changed. Odegard v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 809. That steam shovel was calculated to frighten ordinarily gentle horses proved by expert horsemen. Heinmiller v. Winston Bros. [Iowa] 107 N. W. 1102. Admissible as to safety of method of tying up lumber to be hoisted. Smith v. Dow [Wash.] 86 P. 555. In action for injury from explosion of boiler, expert testimony as to construction and nature of such boilers and as to condition of one that exploded. Hanley v. West Virginia Cent., etc., R. Co., 59 W. Va. 419, 53 S. E. 625. Expert testimony admissible to prove how the accident occurred when it is necessary to the understanding of the jury. Goddard v. Enzler, 123 Ill. App. 108. Where it appeared that the injured person did not appreciate his danger until injured, expert testimony as to his ability to save himself is inadmissible. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Whiteaker, 122 Ill. App. 333.

82. Causal connection may be proved by circumstantial evidence. Omaha Water Co. v. Schamel [C. C. A.] 147 F. 502. Exercise of due care may be proved by circumstantial evidence. Elgin, J. & E. R. Co. v. Hoadley, 220 Ill. 462, 77 N. E. 151.

83. Damren v. Trask [Me.] 65 A. 513. Evidence that defendant was negligent in a previous isolated instance is inadmissible Pullman Co. v. Schaffner, 126 Ga. 609, 55 S. E. 933. That elevator door made to open and shut had been previously left open causing other accidents. Hope v. Longley, 27 R. I. 579, 65 A. 300.

84. Evidence of another injury is admissible only where it appears that the instrumentality causing the injuries was in same condition when both accidents occurred. City of Aurora v. Plummer, 122 Ill. App. 143. Other injury to plaintiff by defendant inadmissible. Id. Evidence that planks used to load and unload wagons at grain elevator had previously slipped, and that on the day prior to plaintiff's injury from such slipping defendant's door-sill on which planks rested was covered with dust and corn held properly rejected within discretion of court. Elvey v. Powers, 191 Mass. 588, 77 N. E. 1152.

85. That ice which fell from gutter through window, injuring plaintiff, broke other windows and also planks on walk held admissible to show force with which ice fell. Richardson v. Nelson, 221 Ill. 254, 77 N. E. 583. That other horses had been frightened by steam shovel on same afternoon admissible to show that shovel was calculated to frighten animals, but not to prove that plaintiff's horse was frightened. Heinmiller v. Winston Bros. [Iowa] 107 N. W. 1102.

86. In action for injury from tool attempted to be thrown by workman to anadmissible.[87] There is some conflict as to the extent to which a municipal ordinance is admissible in an action based on common-law negligence.[88] Evidence of subsequent repairs and changes is not admissible to prove negligence,[89] though it may be admissible for other purposes[90] such as the practicability of such repairs or changes.[91] In the absence of other evidence the habits of the person injured may be proved as bearing upon the question of due care on his part.[92]

Presumptions and burden of proof.[93]—The burden is on the plaintiff to prove the negligence of the defendant,[94] and this burden does not shift during the trial,[95] even where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is involved.[96] This burden cannot be sustained by mere conjecture or speculation,[97] but the plaintiff need not exclude the possibility that the accident may have happened in some way other than that alleged.[98] The mere fact of the accident raises no presumption of negligence,[99] even other on telephone pole, evidence of custom of sending up tools by lines instead of throwing them was admissible. Brunke v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 115 Mo. App. 36, 90 S. W. 753.

87. Use of uninsulated electric wires. Clements v. Potomac Elec. Power Co., 26 App. D. C. 482.

88. Held admissible though not pleaded. Mulderig v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 655, 94 S. W. 801. Held inadmissible. Fechley v. Springfield Traction Co., 119 Mo. App. 358, 96 S. W. 421. Where horses hitched to a sixty-six pound weight ran away and caused injury sued for, an ordinance requiring a weight of only twenty-five pounds was admissible on issue of due care. Coughlin v. Campbell-Sell Baking Co. [Colo.] 89 P. 53.

Soard [Ark.] 96 S. W. 121.

90. Where defendant denied the existence of a hole as set out in the complaint but did not deny the existence of some kind of hole, the case was not one for admission of evidence of repairs. Wilkes v. Gallagher, 99 N. Y. S. 866. In an action for injury to one of two horses hired by plaintiff to defendant under an alleged agreement that they should be worked together and not singly, evidence of subsequent repairs to road held admissible to show that other horse remained and was worked alone under a new contract and not under the original contract. McKenzie v. Boutwell [Vt.] 65 A. 99.

91. Thompson v. Issaquah Shingle Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 588. Enlargement of defendant's elevated station platform after plaintiff had been crowded off. Beverly v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 507.

though it appears that it was avoidable,[1] but under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur a prima facie presumption of negligence arises where the accident is such that in the ordinary course of affairs it would not have happened except for the negligence of the defendant.[2] This doctrine is invoked most often as between passenger and carrier,[3] but it may apply between master and servant,[4] or in any other case where the accident, in the terms of the maxim, speaks for itself.[5] This doctrine is not confined to cases where a contractual relation exists between the plaintiff and defendant,[6] and the mere fact that the person injured was a licensee will not prevent its application,[7] but it is held to be inapplicable in the case of a bare licensee or trespasser.[8] It may apply without the specific cause of the accident being pointed out.[9] Except as applied to carriers,[10] the doctrine is applicable only where the injury arises from some condition or event in its very nature so obviously destructive of the safety of persons or property and so tortious in its quality as to permit no inference, in the first instance, at least, except one of negligence on the part of the person in control of the injurious agency,[11] and the inference of negligence cannot rest upon only a part of the attendant circumstances shown by the evidence.[12] The doc-

11. Strasburger v. Vogel, 103 Md. 85, 63 A. 202. A door is not such a dangerous piece of machinery that its being left open will give occasion for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and the doctrine did not apply. Where plaintiff went into building at 5 A. M. to see janitor and fell into elevator shaft through door accidentally left open. Hope v. Longley, 27 R. I. 579, 65 A. 300.

12. Doctrine inapplicable where plaintiff's own evidence shows intervention of independent cause, as where it appeared that trine does not apply unless the co-operation of the plaintiff or others than defendant in the cause is negatived by the facts.[13] Nor does it apply unless every reasonable inference in favor of other causes is excluded,[14] nor where both parties were exercising equal rights and each is chargeable with the same degree of care,[15] nor when the details of the accident are seen by eye witnesses,[16] nor where the causal agency was not within the exclusive control of the defendant [17] or the person against whom the doctrine is invoked.[18] The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur neither shifts the burden of proof [19] nor enlarges the measure of care,[20] but merely raises a rebuttable presumption [21] sufficient to take the case to the jury,[22] and it is not necessary to show exactly how the accident occurred in order to rebut such presumption.[23] Even where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies, if the plaintiff alleges specific acts of negligence he must prove them.[24]

The burden is also upon the plaintiff to prove that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury,[25] and he must exclude all other causes,[26] but this last rule does not apply when the proximate cause is a condition resulting from several related and co-operating acts of negligence.[27] In an action for negligent injury to property the burden is on the plaintiff to prove his ownership of the property.[28] Where a danger has been proved to have once existed, the burden is upon the party alleging its removal to prove it.[29] Knowledge of dangerous conditions may be presumed from lapse of time.[30]

In some few jurisdictions the plaintiff must prove freedom from contributory negligence,[31] but in most jurisdictions contributory negligence is an affirmative defense and the burden of proving is on the defendant,[32] but the defendant is not bound to assume the burden thus placed upon him until the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case,[33] and he is entitled to the benefit of the plaintiff's evidence as well as his own.[34] In some states the burden of proving contributory negligence is placed upon the defendant by statute,[35] but such a statute does not create any presumption of due care on the part of the plaintiff where no such presumption existed prior to the enactment of the statute.[36] In the states where the burden as to contributory negligence is on the defendant it is sometimes declared that the plaintiff is presumed to have exercised due care,[37] especially where there is no other evidence on this subject,[38] and even in the states where the contrary doctrine obtains as to the burden of proof the same presumption is indulged in the absence of all other evidence,[39] but this presumption may be rebutted by the circumstances.[40] Where the plaintiff invokes the doctrine of last clear chance, the burden is on him to establish it by proof.[41]

58. See 6 C. L. 776.

all issues raised by the pleadings and sustained by the evidence [59] and no others,[60] but failure to submit an issue is not fatal where the party is given full benefit thereof;[61] they must not give undue prominence to any particular phase of the case;[62] they must be considered as a whole;[63] and instructions on matters fully covered by other instructions need not be given.[64] When the evidence is conflicting, the instructions must not assume the negligence of the defendant,[65] or the contributory negligence of the plaintiff,[66] or that the plaintiff was injured [67] in the manner

59. When properly requested so to do, the court should submit to the jury the particular physical facts directly put in issue by the pleadings. Rev. St. 1898, § 2858. Olwell v. Skobis, 126 Wis. 308, 105 N. W. 777. Submission as follows held sufficient. Were the alleged injuries the immediate, natural, and necessary consequences of the alleged act of negligence, were such injuries such as might naturally and probably occur from the alleged negligence, and were they such as should have been in contemplation of the defendant with reasonable certainty; was the alleged physical injury the natural and proximate result of the defendant's negligence. Kimberly v. Howland [N. C.] 55 S. E. 778.

Contributory negligence: Ruffin v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 142 N. C. 120, 55 S. E. 86. Where voluntary drunkenness is pleaded as an issue of contributory negligence, it is error to refuse to charge upon the same. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 170, 90 S. W. 918. Where servant testified that he could not stand in trench and do work, which was safer way than that employed, but physical facts testified to by him justified contrary finding, evidence justified instruction upon contributory negligence. Reeves v. Galveston, etc. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 498, 98 S. W. 929. There being evidence in action by brakeman that he voluntarily placed his foot under car, a requested instruction, that if he did so no recovery could be had, should have been given. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Mason [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 186.

Proximate cause: Instruction that falling of brick from defendant's chimney made prima facie case of negligence erroneous when evidence showed also that several persons for whose actions defendant was not responsible were leaning against chimney when brick fell. Strasburger v. Vogel, 103 Md. 85, 63 A. 202.

60. Where there is no evidence of mere accident or misadventure but an issue of negligence is clearly tendered, instructions in respect thereto are properly refused. Wise v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 546, 95 S. W. 898. Charge that there was no presumption of negligence from mere fact of accident properly refused where no such issue was raised by the evidence. Galveston, etc., R. Co v. Fitzpatrick [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 790, 91 S. W. 355. Use of word "unusual" in refering to puffing and whistling of engine, improper where there was no evidence that such acts were unusual. Phelan v. Granite Bituminous Pav. Co., 115 Mo. App. 423, 91 S. W. 440. Error to instruct upon the theory that the action is for injuries caused by a nuisance when the action is for negligence only. Loth v. Columbia Theater Co., 197 Mo. 328, 94 S. W. 847. Error to instruct on doctrine of last clear chance where evidence showed that defendant could not have prevented the accident after having discovered plaintiff's peril. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Molloy's Adm'x, 28 Ky. L. R. 1113, 91 S. W. 685. It is misleading and error to instruct on the doctrine of the last clear chance where there is no evidence to sustain the instruction, defendant being thus deprived of full benefit of defense of contributory negligence. Newport News & O. P. R. & Elec. Co. v. McCormick [Va.] 56 S. E. 281.

61. Under Revisal 1905, § 483, requiring contributory negligence to be specially pleaded and placing the burden of proof on defendant, such issue should be submitted where raised by the pleadings, but failure to submit it is not error where defendant is given full benefit thereof in the instructions given. Ruffin v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 142 N. C. 120, 55 S. E. 86.

62. In a case turning on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, it is error to give undue prominence to law of ordinary negligence. Waller v. Ross [Minn.] 110 N. W. 252.

63. The rule that an instruction must be taken in connection with the other instructions given has peculiar force with reference to a definition of negligence, it being almost impossible to give a definition of negligence in one sentence which would apply to all cases. Reiter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. Hamlin, 144 Ala. 192, 40 So. 280.

64. Where the court charged that plaintiff could not recover if he failed to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, it is not error to refuse an instruction that no recovery can be had if plaintiff voluntarily exposed himself to the danger. Wellmeyer v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 527, 95 S. W. 925. Where the jury answered an issue as to contributory negligence in the negative and did not answer an issue as to last clear chance at all, an instruction as to the latter issue did not render harmless as to defendant, failure to instruct as to proximate cause and last clear chance having reference to the special facts of the case. Baker v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 553.

65. Brewster v. Elizabeth City, 142 N. C. 9, 54 S. E. 784; Garth v. North Alabama Traction Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 627. Instruction that "where the negligence of two unite," etc., instead of "where two united in negligently causing," etc., held not misleading as assuming fact of negligence. Frank Parmelee Co. v. Wheelock, 224 Ill. 194, 79 N. E. 652. Instruction commencing "where the negligence of two unite in causing an accident," instead of "if the negligence of two," etc., held not misleading as assuming that the negligence of two did unite, etc. Id.

66. Instruction that plaintiff could not recover if accident would have been averted by his doing certain things, held to assume that things were not done. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 64 A. 304.

67. Brewster v. Elizabeth City, 142 N. C. 9, 54 S. E. 784.

alleged,[68] or that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury;[69] but it is not error to assume facts not in conflict.[70] Definitions should be given when properly requested,[71] but failure to give a definition is not necessarily fatal.[72] Definitions of negligence and ordinary care,[73] and contributory negligence,[74]

68. Garth v. North Alabama Traction Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 627.

69. Brewster v. Elizabeth City, 142 N. C. 9, 54 S. E. 784.

70. That hole in theatre aisle carpet which had existed two weeks had existed long enough for defendant to discover it. Nephler v. Woodward [Mo.] 98 S. W. 488.

71. Ordinary and reasonable care. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Norgate [C. C. A.] 141 F. 247.

72. Not reversible error to fail to define proximate cause where jury were told that the defendant's negligence must have been the "direct" cause of the injury. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Oram [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 624, 92 S. W. 1029. Leaving it for the jury to determine the proximate cause of the accident is not error where all the facts necessary to render the defendant liable are defined by the court. Harrison v. Kansas City Elec. L. Co., 195 Mo. 606, 93 S. W. 951. An instruction using the term "ordinary care" need not define the same when it is fully defined in another instruction. Nephler v. Woodward [Mo.] 98 S. W. 488.

73. Negligence: Definition of negligence as failure to do something which " a reasonable person guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, under the circumstances would do or doing something which such person under such circumstances would not do, held a sufficient preservation of the idea that the standard of care is the conduct of a reasonably careful and prudent man. Martin v. Des Moines Edison L. Co. [Iowa] 106 N. W. 359. Instruction that "negligence is the failure to observe, for the protection of the interest of another person, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury," held proper. Fisher v. Newbern, 140 N. C. 506, 53 S. E. 342. Instruction that negligence is failure to do that which person of "ordinary" prudence would do, etc., or doing that which person of "like" prudence would not have done, etc., not erroneous or misleading in use of word "like" for "ordinary." St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Dixon [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 782, 91 S. W. 626. Use of words "due diligence," where from whole instruction it appeare to be used as synonymous with "reasonable care" which has been correctly defined, held not error. Bond v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 30.

Ordinary or due care: Inaccuracies of expression in defining due care are not fatal where the care required of the defendant by the instruction as a whole is that degree of care which would be ordinary care under the circumstances. Savannah Elec. Co. v. Bell, 124 Ga. 663, 53 S. E. 109. Use of expression "such care as a person of ordinary care and prudence would have exercised," etc., held not erroneous in use of word "would." Roedler v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 88. Using expression "care which the great majority of men would have used," instead of "care which the great majority of men would have ordinarily exercised," held not misleading. Olweil v. Skobis, 126 Wis. 308, 105 N. W. 777. Phrase "by the exercise of reasonable exertion," as used in instruction on doctrine of last clear chance, held equivalent to "by the exercise of reasonable care." Phelan v. Granite Bituminous Pay. Co., 115 Mo. App. 423, 91 S. W. 440. Definition of ordinary care as the care which a "prudent" man instead of an "ordinarily prudent" person would exercise, held erroneous. City of Paris v. Tucker [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 240, 93 S. W. 233. Instruction that defendant was liable unless its servants exercised due care "in all respects" in the performance of the acts causing the accident was erroneous as not confining the duty of care to the acts alleged and proved as constituting negligence. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 170, 90 S. W. 918. Instruction that "ordinary care" is such care as an ordinary person would usually observe under the same or similar circumstances as those under "investigation" held erroneous, on ground that it is the care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the "circumstances proven." Henderson City R. Co. v. Lockett [Ky.] 98 S. W. 303. Instruction that defendant was liable if he "could" have known of the defect causing the injury, held erroneous as eliminating the element of due care. Bruckel v. J. Milhau's Son, 102 N. Y. S. 395. Use of terms "while" and at the "time" with reference to due care criticised as not being broad enough to cover antecedent time so well as mere instinct of injury. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Whiteaker, 122 Ill. App. 333.

74. Where definition is broad and true, it is better to adhere to it rather than to follow suggestions overly refined. Wilson v. Southern R. Co., 73 S. C. 481, 53 S. E. 968. Instruction that burden was on defendant to prove that plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury, and that such failure was the cause of the injury without which it would not have occurred, held a proper exposition of law of contributory negligence. Forrester v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 37, 91 S. W. 401. Charge that jury must consider "whether plaintiff was in the exercise of due care; that is, whether his failure to exercise due care, if you find that he did fail, contributed to the accident," held sufficient. Cleveland v. Washington [Vt.] 65 A. 584. Instruction "if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of any negligence which caused or contributed to his injury, if any, then he cannot recover," held sufficient in view of correct definitions of negligence and ordinary care elsewhere given. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Burns [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 72, 91 S. W. 618. Charging plaintiff with duty of exercising such care as one of same age, etc., "would ordinarily use under like circumstances," held equivalent to charging him with duty of exercising care "that person of ordinary prudence of his age," etc., must be predicated upon the particular acts of negligence alleged,[75] or shown by the evidence.[76] Instructions on negligence[77] and contributory negligence[78] must would exercise, etc. El Paso Elec. R. Co. v. Kitt [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 167, 91 S. W. 598. Instruction that if plaintiff contributed to his injury by his own negligence as the proximate cause held sufficient in absence of request for definition. Cole v. Blue Ridge R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 126. Instruction that in order to constitute contributory negligence "it must appear that there was such a relation between plaintiff's fault, and the injury that it was the natural result thereof," held not erroneous in use of word "fault" for "want of ordinary care." Sorensen v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 84.

75. Contributory negligence. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wray [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 676, 96 S. W. 74.

76. Though the petition contains only general allegations. Muiderig v. St. Louis, K. C. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 655, 94 S. W. 801.

77. Ordinariiy it is not necessary or proper to charge that any specific act is or is not negligence. McMahen v. White, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 169. See ante, this section, Questions of Law and Fact. Instruction that there is no negligence if the jury find certain facts must include all the material elements of the case, otherwise it would preclude the jury from drawing such reasonable inferences as the testimony justifies. Ruffin v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 142 N. C. 120, 55 S. E. 86. Instruction that facts showed negligence properly refused where question was for jury. Alton R. G. & E. Co. v. Webb, 119 Ill. App. 75. Instruction that failure to exercise ordinary care in doing the acts which caused the injury was negligence was not an invasion of the province of the jury. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 170, 90 S. W. 918. Where negligence is a mixed question of law and fact it is not improper to tell the jury that, if the facts are established, they constitute negligence. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Kleespies [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 252. Instruction that upon certain showing, certain presumption of negligence arises, is misleading unless it states that such presumption is rebuttable. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Crose, 113 Ill. App. 547. Instruction that burden of proof was on plaintiff to establish by preponderance of evidence that alleged injury, if any, was caused by defendant's negligence, and that, if it had been done, the burden shifted to defendant to show that accident was caused by the contributory negligence of plaintiff's son, held not erroneous as requiring defendant to disprove negligence. El Paso Elec. R. Co. v. Kitt [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 587. It is error to refuse to instruct that the party alieging facts giving rise to a presumption of negligence has the burden of proving such negligence. Lincoln Traction Co. v. Shepherd [Neb.] 107 N. W. 764.

Ininstructing on statutory negligence, it is sufficient to follow the language of the statute, though the jury are not specifically told that the injury must have been caused by defendant's negligence. Ward v. Meredith, 122 Ill. App. 159.

78. The phrase "considering his surroundings, at the time, did he exercise such reasonable care for his own safety as would be expected of an ordinarily prudent man," is equivalent to hypothesizing the instruction on "one similarly situated." Reiter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. Hamiin, 144 Ala. 192, 40 So. 280. Must be hypothesized upon plaintiff's knowledge or notice of the danger. Id. In action by brakeman for an injury alleged to have been caused by hand hold giving away thereby throwing him so that his foot was crushed, instruction that, if "plaintiff purposely loosened the hand hold, and then voluntarily placed his foot under the train," the verdict should be for the defendant, is not objectionable as requiring them to find both facts before such verdict could be given. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Mason [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 186. Not error to refuse to instruct that, in determining question of contributory negligence the instinct of self preservation should not be considered, when the attention of the jury was not called to such matter. McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 618. Instruction on contributory negligence of child properly refused when it included no explanation of what due care is in the case of a child. Coney Island Co. v. Dennan, 149 F. 687. Error to charge as to contributory negligence of child in same terms applicable to adults, without adverting to child's age, capacity and intelligence. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Johnson, 123 Ill. App. 300. Where jury is instructed to consider age of person injured, it should also be instructed that if he would have escaped injury by the exercise of such care as he was capable of there could be no recovery. Buscher v. New York Transp. Co., 114 App. Div. 85, 99 N. Y. S. 673. Instruction that child not required to exercise same care as aduit, erroneous, since his intelligence and capacity may charge him with duty to exercise such care. Wabash R. Co. v. Jones, 121 Ill. App. 390. Charge as to what the evidence showed as to the capacity and intelligence of a child properly refused as stating no proposition of law. Moss v. Mosley [Ala.] 41 So. 1012.

Burden of proof: Intimation in charge that presumption exists and remains throughout case, that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, but exercised ordinary care, was not prejudicial as requiring anything more than that negligence of plaintiff need be shown by a preponderance of the evidence only. Toledo R. & Light Co. v. Rippon, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 334. An instruction that the burden of proof was on defendant to prove by a preponderance of evidence that plaintiff was negligent, unless plaintiff's evidence showed such fact, in which case the verdict should be for defendant, is not objectionable as submitting to the jury the question as to where the burden rests. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Conway [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 898, 98 S. W. 1070. Instruction that burden of proof as to negligence is on plaintiff, and that he is entitled to recover upon proof of negligence charged and that same was proximate cause of his injury, unless he was guilty of contributory negligence, is not erroneous as placing burden on plaintiff to prove freedom from contributory negligence. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 170, 90 be predicated upon a causal connection between the negligence and the injury,[79] to the exclusion of causal agencies for which defendant was not responsible.[80] An instruction on proximate cause [81] should follow the technical definition of proximate cause,[82] but it is not fatal error to express the idea in other terms.[83] A particular doctrine or theory [84] must be invoked by a request for an instruction thereon.[85]

Verdicts and findings.[86]—The usual rules apply,[87] including those applicable to the submission of special interrogatories.[88]

S. W. 918. Instruction to find for defendant if jury was unable to determine whether the injury was caused by defendant's negligence or plaintiff's contributory negligence held misleading in that jury might infer that burden as to contributory negligence was on plaintiff. Reiter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. Hamlin, 144 Ala. 192, 40 So. 280. In Indiana defendant must be given benefit of plaintiff's evidence as well as his own in connection with burden of proving contributory negligence (City of Indianapolis v. Keeley [Ind.] 79 N. E. 499; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Mills [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 608; City of Indianapolis v. Mullally [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1132), but such is not the case in Arkansas (Little Rock R. & Elec. Co. v. Doyle [Ark.] 96 S. W. 353). Instruction that burden was on defendant to prove contributory negligence not erroneous as susceptible of inference that such negligence must be shown solely by defendant's evidence where there was also an instruction to find for defendant if the "evidence" showed contributory negligence. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Edwards [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 92, 91 S. W. 640.

79. Negligence: Johnson v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 308, 93 S. W. 866. Charge that defendant was liable notwithstanding plaintiff's contributory negligence if defendant after discovering plaintiff's danger failed to exercise due care to avoid the accident, without charging that such failure must be the proximate cause of the accident, held erroneous. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Jones [Ala.] 41 So. 146. Instruction that proximate cause is "the efficient cause without which the injury complained of would not have occurred," held insufficient in suit for contracting consumption in cold waiting room. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 224, 93 S. W. 195.

Contributory negligence: Reiter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. Hamlin, 144 Ala. 192, 40 So. 280; Betchman v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 140. Instruction that if complainant's negligence "in any way contributed" to the injury, there could be no recovery properly refused. Coney Island Co. v. Dennan, 149 F. 687.

Where the causal connection is admitted, no instruction on proximate cause is necessary in connection with instruction on contributory negligence. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cotts [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 602.

80. Where plaintiff hired team and driver to defendant and driver's negligence contributed to injury of team. Johnson v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 308, 93 S. W. 866.

81. Definition of probable cause as "the efficient cause from which the injury follows, in unbroken sequence without any intervening cause to break the continuity," held erroneous. Eichman v. Buchheit, 128 Wis. 385, 107 N. W. 325. Citing Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Co., 97 Wis. 279, 72 N. W. 735, and Feldschneider v. Chicago, etc. R. Co., 122 Wis. 423, 99 N. W. 1034, for correct definition.

82. Olwell v. Skobis, 126 Wis. 308, 105 N. W. 777.

83. Speaking of "natural result" instead of "natural and probable result." Olwell v. Skobis, 126 Wis. 308, 105 N. W. 777. As "the efficient cause which produces the injury," etc., not erroneous because of absence of phrase "that which acts first," after word cause. Roedier v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 88. Instruction that "by proximate cause as used in this charge is meant a cause without which the thing complained of would not have occurred," held not strictly correct in that it was not sufficiently comprehensive, but that, nevertheless, it was sufficient in action for death to present the question in issue. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Heard [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 617, 91 S. W. 371. Instruction on necessary connection between negligent act and injury using words "by reason of," instead of "as the direct and proximate result of," is not error. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Anglin [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 897.

84. Instruction that burden of proof shifted to defendant on defense of act of God held to mean that burden rested on defendant and, as thus construed, not erroneous. City of McCook v. McAdams [Neb.] 106 N. W. 988. Instruction on theory that injury was caused by act of God held sufficient. Id.

85. Res ipsa loquitur: Isley v. Virginia Bridge & Iron Co., 141 N. C. 220, 53 S. E. 841. In North Carolina the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur seems to be that the fact of the accident may sometimes be considered by the jury as evidence of such weight as they may choose to attach to it. Id. Inevitable accident. Southern R. Co. v. Brown, 126 Ga. 1, 54 S. E. 911.

86. See 6 C. L. 777.

87. See Verdicts and Findings, 6 C. L. 1814.

88. Question whether injury "to plaintiff" should have been foreseen erroneous. Odegard v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 809. Question whether defendant "knew or ought to have known," is double. Id. Question whether injury was caused by "incompetence or want of skill," is improper in form, since, if incompetence and want of skill are synonymous, the latter term is surplusage, and, if not synonymous, the question is double. § 1. Elements and indicia.[89]—A negotiable instrument is an unconditional written promise or order to pay a certain person or his order or to bearer a certain sum of money at a certain time.[90] The promise is not unconditional if the direction is to pay out of a particular fund.[91]

89. See 6 C. L. 777.

90. Under Negotiable Instrument Law, Laws 1897, p. 722, c. 612, § 20, an instrument not payable to order or bearer is not negotiable. Fulton v. Varney, 102 N. Y. S. 608. Promissory note which in addition to all other essential elements contains the word "negotiable" is a negotiable instrument within Negotiable Instruments Law. Alexander & Co. v. Hagelrigg, 29 Ky. L. R. 1212, 97 S. W. 353. Checks are negotiable instruments. Boswell v. Citizens' Sav. Bk., 29 Ky. L. R. 988, 96 S. W. 797. Negotiability of interest coupons attached to bonds is governed by the negotiability of the bonds. Hibbs v. Brown, 112 App. Div. 214, 98 N. Y. S. 353.

91. The fact that a draft otherwise regular recites "400 c/A. R. L. No. 3362—via. A. R. L. B. L. direct" which charged the payee with notice that a certain number of cases had been shipped and that the bill of lading went direct to the payee, does not show that the instrument was to be paid only out of a particular fund, so as to render it nonnegotiable. Waddell v. Hanover Nat. Bank, 48 Misc. 578, 97 N. Y. S. 305. Under Negotiable Instruments Law, Laws 1897, p. 722, c. 612, § 20, requiring the promise to pay to be unconditional, and § 22, providing that a promise to pay out of a particular fund is conditional, an instrument promising to pay out of the profits of a certain contract, is not negotiable. Fulton v. Varney, 102 N. Y. S. 608. Under Negotiable Instruments Law, bonds issued by a joint stock company are negotiable though by express stipulation the stockholders are exonerated from individual liability, liability being confined to the security and assets of the association, such limitation not restricting liability to a particular fund. Hibbs v. Brown, 112 App. Div. 214, 98 N. Y. S. 353. "Hutchinson, Kansas, Aug. 10, 1903. G. W. Lightner, Offerle, Kansas—Dear Sir: Pay to the order of First National Bank of Hutchinson, Kansas, on account of contract between you and the Snyder Planing Mill Co., $1,500" is negotiable "on account of" etc., is not a direction to charge to a particular fund. First Nat. Bank v. Lightner [Kan.] 88 P. 59. A municipal bond providing that it shall be payable only out of a particular fund when collected, and that the holder shall not have any claim or lien against the city except such fund, and that the city shall not be liable in case of failure to collect, is not negotiable. Northern Trust Co. v. Wilmette, 220 Ill. 417, 77 N. E. 169.

Note: The law is well settled that a bill or note is not negotiable if made payable out of a particular fund. 1. Daniel, Neg. Inst. 50; White v. Cushing, 88 Me. 339, 51 Am. St. Rep. 402, 32 L. R. A. 590. But a distinction is recognized where the instrument is simply chargeable to a particular fund. In such case it is beyond question negotiable; payment is not made to depend upon the sufficiency of the fund mentioned, and it is mentioned only for the purpose of informing the drawee as to his means of reimbursement. 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 51; Tiedeman, Bills and Notes, § 20. In Ridgely Bank v. Patton, 109 Ill. 479, 54 L. R. A. 827, it is said: "A bill or note, without affecting its character as such, may state the transaction out of which it arose, or the consideration for which it was given." "So, also, the insertion into the bill or note of a memorandum, explaining the nature of the business or debt, for which the instrument was given, will not make it nonnegotiable, for such memoradum does not make the payment conditional." Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 26. The test in every case is said to be: "Does the instrument carry the general personal credit of the maker, or only the credit of a particular fund?" 4. Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 89. A promise to pay a certain sum "out of my next quarter's mail pay, which becomes due January 1, 1883," was held in Nichols v. Ruggles, 76 Me. 25, to be an absolute promise to pay a certain sum of money. And in Pierson v. Dunlop, 2 Cowp. 571, an order which was to be charged "to freight" was held negotiable. A note expressed to be in payment of certain tracts of land was held negotiable. Bank v. Micheal, 96 N. C. 53. Likewise a note which stated that it was given in consideration of certain personal property, the title of which was not to pass unless the note was paid. Chicago R. Co. v. Merchant's Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 34 L. Ed. 349. The following authorities are also in point: Matthews v. Crosby, 56 N. H. 21; Shepard v. Abbott, 137 Mass. 224; Schmittler v. Simon, 101 N. Y. 554, 54 Am. Rep. 737; Hillstrom v. Anderson, 46 Minn. 382. See First Nat. Bank v. Lightner [Kan.] 88 P. 59.

The time of payment[92] is not rendered uncertain by a provision that sureties consent to an extension of time of payment without notice,[93] nor by a provision reserving the right to waive default in the payment of interest,[94] nor by the fact that a maker may pay before maturity.[95]

The amount[96] is uncertain where the instrument is payable in current funds.[97] There is a conflict of authority as to whether a provision for attorney's fees renders the amount uncertain.[98]

Words of negotiability[99] are essential.[1]

§ 2. Form, interpretation, and effect.[2]—Except as affected by the doctrine of bona fides,[3] a negotiable instrument is a contract, and all the elements essential to the validity of a contract must exist.[4] Hence, it must be executed by one with authority to execute it.[5] It must be based on a sufficient[6] and legal consideration,[7]

4. See Contracts, 7 C. L. 761. It is presumed that a maker read a note before he signed it. Fay v. Hunt, 190 Mass. 378, 77 N. E. 602. Where one executed a note under an agreement that it was not to be effective unless signed by another, the payee could not recover where it was not signed by such other without showing that he was willing to sign and was deterred by the wrongful act of the other. Key v. Usher [Ky.] 99 S. W. 324. Where in an action on a note it was alleged that it was agreed that such note was to be turned in on the payment of goods to be furnished the payee and the maker failed to furnish the goods, held such agreement did not affect the inforceability of the note. Houts v. Sioux City Brass Works [Iowa] 110 N. W. 166. Evidence held to show that a note was duly executed and had not been paid and was due. Johnston v. Baca [N. M.] 85 P. 237. 5. A commercial traveler has no authority to draw drafts on his principal for traveling expenses. Seattle Shoe Co. v. Packard [Wash.] 86 P. 845. Proof that he had been in the habit of doing so and that they had been paid does not show authority. Id. Evidence sufficient to show that notes were executed by authority of one sued as maker. Myrick Bros. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 143. Evidence held to show that notes were executed by the select men of a town and purchased by one suing thereon from the treasurer. Bass v. Wellesley [Mass.] 78 N. E. 543.

6. Consideration held sufficient: Though a married woman may not execute a note as surety for her husband, yet where she does, the moral consideration is sufficient to sustain a renewal note given by her after her husband's death. Rathfon v. Locher [Pa.] 64 A. 790. Notes executed to take up a sight draft held valid, though draft had not been accepted, where drafts were renewals of others which the payee had accepted and the claimants, payee in the notes, had acted in accordance with a custom, and, on execution of the notes, surrendered to the bankrupt valuable collateral which later passed to the trustee. In re New York Car Wheel Works, 139 F. 421. A note is based on a sufficient consideration where given for a specified sum which the maker received from the payee. Taylor v. Industrial Mut. Deposit Co.'s Receiver, 29 Ky. L. R. 767, 96 S. W. 462. Where the proceeds of a note were received by an agent of the maker and used for his benefit, there was a sufficient consideration, though the money was furnished the payee by a third person. Hale v. Harris, 28 Ky. L. R. 1172, 91 S. W. 660. An antecedent debt is a sufficient consideration. Gates v. Morton Hardware Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 509. Extension of time of payment is a good consideration. In re Kemp's Estate, 49 Misc. 396, 100 N. Y. S. 221. A check given on the purchase price of land under a contract to execute a contract of sale the next day, the fact that the seller refused to execute such contract does not affect the consideration for the check as it was given in consideration for the first contract, which is still in force. Caren v. Liebovitz 113, App. Div. 674, 99 N. Y. S. 952. An agreement to forbear immediate action to collect a draft is sufficient consideration for a note. Emerson v. Sheffer, 113 App. Div. 19, 98 N. Y. S. 1057. Where the payee of a note signed by three persons accepted in payment a note signed by one, it was based on a sufficient consideration. Brink v. Stratton, 112 App. Div. 299, 98 N. Y. S. 421. A valid patent or the right to sell a patented article is a sufficient consideration for a note though its value is greatly over estimated. Twentieth Century Co. v. Quilling [Wis.] 110 N. W. 174. Where an employe of a bank was either a debtor thereof or a defaulter, notes executed by him and his though such instruments prima facia import a consideration.[8] Delivery is essential.[9] An instrument which is void on the ground of public policy cannot be ratified.[10]

In construing such instruments, effect will be given the intention of the parties [11] according to the terms of the instrument.[12] The nature of the liability sister for the amount are based on a sufficient consideration. Henry v. State Bank [Iowa] 107 N. W. 1034. A check given in payment of a mortgage debt to prevent foreclosure, where the mortgagor claimed that the debt had been paid, is based on a sufficient consideration. National Bank of Newberry v. Sayer, 73 N. H. 595, 64 A. 189. Consideration held sufficient. Greene v. Osceola Gold Mines Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 733. Evidence held to show consideration. Page v. Geiser Mfg. Co. [Okl.] 87 P. 851. The note sued on is prima facia the consideration. Gates v. Morton Hardware Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 509. An agreement to pay interest is a sufficient consideration for an extension. Agnew v. Agnew [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 952.

Held insufficient: A renewal note executed for a void note is void. Gilbert v. Brown, 29 Ky. L. R. 1248, 97 S. W. 40. Renewal notes are without consideration where the original is. Cochran v. Perkins [Ala.] 40 So. 351. Voluntary services are not a sufficient consideration. In re Pinkerton's Estate, 49 Misc. 363, 99 N. Y. S. 492. Where a widow who received no property from her husband's estate executed a note in renewal of one void as to her which was executed by herself and husband, the satisfaction of the husband's obligation was not a good consideration for the renewal notes. Gilbert v. Brown, 29 Ky. L. R. 1248, 97 S. W. 40.

7. When a note did not have written on its face "Peddler's note" as required by statute, and was given for the right to sell a patented article in a certain territory to a vendor of such rights, and part of the consideration was a patented machine which did not require that the note be stamped "peddler's note," it is void. Bugg v. Holt, 29 Ky. L. R. 1208, 97 S. W. 29. The fact that the proceeds were used for an illegal purpose is no defense when the payee did not know it was to be used for such purpose. Hale v. Harris, 28 Ky. L. R. 1172, 91 S. W. 660. A note is not invalidated by the fact that the statement of the consideration shows an illegal item. Zeller v. Leiter, 114 App. Div. 148, 99 N. Y. S. 624.

8. A note in the form of a due bill implies a consideration under Ky. St. 1903, § 470. Doty v. Dickey [Ky.] 29 Ky. L. R. 900, 96 S. W. 544. Where the estate of a decedent is sued on a note, the giving of evidence by claimant upon the question of consideration does not destroy the presumption of consideration. In re Pinkerton's Estate, 49 Misc. 363, 99 N. Y. S. 492. A consideration is imported. Ellison v. Simmons [Del.] 65 A. 591. A writing stating that a certain sum is due a person is within Rev. St. 1899, § 894, providing that all instruments made and signed by which a promise to pay money is made shall import a consideration. Locher v. Kuechenmiester, 120 Mo. App. 701, 98 S. W. 92. In action on note by the administrator of a deceased payee where there is no evidence as to the transaction which resulted in giving it except the note, the evidence of the maker being incompetent, held that judgment must be rendered for plaintiff. Union Trust Co. v. Morgans, 140 Mich. 134, 12 Det. Leg. N. 111, 103 N. W. 568. Where the estate of a decedent is sued on a note testimony of claimant that there was not a consideration sufficient to support it destroys the presumption of consideration. In re Pinkerton's Estate, 49 Misc. 363, 99 N. Y. S. 492.

9. See 6 C. L. 778, n. 97 et seq. Delivery is essential as between the parties. Viets v. Silver [N. D.] 106 N. W. 35. Where a maker dies after giving a note to an agent to deliver, the authority of the agent to deliver is revoked, and a delivery by him is unavoiding. Jones v. Jones, 101 Me. 447, 64 A. 815. Where it was alleged that the note in suit was by mistake made payable to the wrong person, and the payee named endorsed it to him without recourse, and the indorsee endorsed to plaintiff, held that evidence of genuineness of the maker's signature together with possession of the paper for three years, and the denial of the payee named that the paper was ever executed to it, did not show a delivery. Digan v. Mandel [Ind.] 79 N. E. 899.

A delivery in escrow is a complete delivery as to the maker. Jones v. Jones, 101 Me. 447, 64 A. 815. When a check was deposited with a third person to be delivered upon the performance of a condition, evidence held to show that delivery was authorized. Parker v. Young [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 194.

10. A note which is void on the ground of public policy because executed in consideration a promise not to prosecute for a crime is not validated by a subsequent delivery not influenced by duress. Henry v. State Bank [Iowa] 107 N. W. 1034.

11. A note reciting that it is given as security with an assignment or scrip made and executed this day, and that on payment thereof, according to these terms the order and assignment are to be cancelled, is not a mere security for the assignment of the script but as security for the payment of the force of the note. Carey v. Hays, 41 Wash. 580, 84 P. 581. Under an agreement to extend a note for two months for a certain sum per month such sum can be collected for only two months though the note was not paid for several months. Rowland v. Watson [Cal. App.] 88 P. 495. Where the maker of the note is discharged for justifiable cause, the payee is released from his obligation to receive payment in services or to grant an extension of the note, and a suit on the note is not prematurely brought when begun within six months after maturity. Minzey v. Marcy Mfg. Co., 6 Ohio C. C. [N. S.] 593. Where the only difference between a note sued upon and the one admitted to have been made was that the latter had written across its face "in renewal of $5,000 note," a defense, on this ground is insufficient. Yardley Nat. Bank v. Vansant, 214 Pa. 250, 63 A. 544. Where the holder of valid notes executed by a town surrenders them for renewal notes assumed may be determined from the terms of the instrument.[13] It is presumed that an instrument is for the benefit of the payee,[14] and this presumption is not overcome by the fact that it is indorsed by him.[15] One who signs in a representative capacity is not personally liable [16] unless such capacity is not known to the other party thereto.[17] The nature of his contract may be shown by parol.[18] An instrument payable to one in a representative capacity is the property of his principal.[19]

A provision for attorney's fees is additional to the obligation of the note.[20] Where the amount is not stated a reasonable amount will be allowed.[21] The provision will be enforced according to its terms,[22] and, though it destroys the negotiability of the instrument, it will not preclude the right to grace.[23] which the officers of the town had no authority to execute, such surrender did not extinguish the notes. Bass v. Wellesley [Mass.] 78 N. E. 543. By construction the word "dollars" was supplied as the omitted word in a note promising to pay "one thousand with interest," especially in view of the fact that stamps thereon were appropriate to such amount. Eldridge v. Kay, 124 Ill. App. 136.

12. Where a maker of a note agrees to pay its face six months after date, "interest at eight per cent. per annum," interest runs from date of default and not from the date of the note. Dunlap v. Kelley, 115 Mo. App. 610, 92 S. W. 140. Notes construed and held that the payee was entitled to interest from maturity as provided, though an extension of time of payment is procured. Dashiell v. Moody & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 843. A provision in a mortgage securing the note that the note might be declared due at any time the payee deemed himself insecure authorizes action on the note whenever he has reasonable grounds for feeling unsafe. Warren v. Osborne [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 851. On an issue as to an extension agreement, evidence of the payee's requirement of the payment of interest in advance is admissible on the question to show improbability of such an agreement. Ellis v. Littlefield [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 514, 93 S. W. 171.

13. Where a note signed by several recites that each maker is liable for a proportional part, a joint action on the note cannot be maintained by an indorsee. National Bank of Phoenixville v. Buckwater, 214 Pa. 289, 63 A. 689.

14. In the absence of any thing indicating to the contrary, it is presumed that a note is for the personal benefit of the payee named. McGuffin v. Coyle, 16 Okl. 648, 85 P. 954, 86 P. 962. Checks payable to a certain person prima facie belong to him. Salen v. Bank of State of N. Y., 110 App. Div. 636, 97 N. Y. S. 361. The fact that the prima facie owner of notes had some arrangement with his assignor for reimbursement in case of failure of the maker to pay does not affect his title. Bennett v. First Nat. Bank, 117 Ill. App. 382.

15. Possession of a note though indorsed by the holder is prima facie evidence of title. Gumaer v. Jackson [Colo.] 86 P. 885. Possession is prima facie evidence of ownership though the paper is indorsed by the holder. Van Vlissingen v. Roth, 121 Ill. App. 600.

16. Under the Negotiable Instruments Act providing that one signing in a representative capacity is not personally liable, and that a signer is deemed an indorser unless another capacity appears to have been intended, where a note is signed by a corporation by "A.," "Treas.," and "B.," in an action against B. it was shown that he was secretary of the corporation. Held, he was not personally liable. Germania Nat. Bank v. Mariner [Wis.] 109 N. W. 574. Where a note is signed by the president and purported secretary of a corporation, it is immaterial that the person signing as secretary was not in fact secretary, as his signature was not essential to the validity of the note. Houts v. Sioux City Brass Works [Iowa] 110 N. W. 166. Where officers of a corporation sign a note on its behalf, their intention as to their personal liability controls. It is immaterial what the payee understood. Western Grocer Co. v. Lackman [Kan.] 88 P. 527. Where officers execute notes on behalf of a corporation, they need not, in order to escape personal liability, show that the corporation had power to issue such notes. Id.

17. If an agent sign a note with his name alone and there is nothing on the face of the note to show his agency, he is personally liable thereon (Burkhalter v. Perry [Ga.] 56 S. E. 631), and the addition of the word "agent" after his name, being merely descriptio personae, will not relieve him from liability (Id.).

18. Where a note is signed by a company by persons as officers, parol evidence is admissible to show that it was not their individual note. Western Grocer Co. v. Lackman [Kan.] 88 P. 527.

19. Under Negotiable Instruments Law providing that where an instrument is drawn payable to a person as fiscal officer of a bank, it is deemed payable to the bank, where a bank was collector of a debt, a draft from the debtor to the president of the bank, his name being followed by "pt.," held the presumption that the draft was payable to the bank was not overcome. Griffin v. Erskine [Iowa] 109 N. W. 13.

20. Boyett v. Standard Chemical & Oil Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 756. Where the action is on several notes all attorney's fees claimed may be set up in one count. Id.

21. A provision for attorney's fees not stating the amount means a reasonable amount. Gates v. Morton Hardware Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 509.

22. The fact that the law relative to attorney's fees is changed after the execution of a note providing therefor does not affect liability therefor according to the terms of the note. American Mortgage Co. v. Rawlings [Ga.] 56 S. E. 110 Where statutory notice is given of intention to sue on a note

In some states patent right notes are declared void by statute unless the nature of the consideration appears from the face of the instrument.[24] Such statutes are upheld in some states and pronounced unconstitutional in others.[25]

An instrument is governed as to interpretation and validity by the law of the place where made [26] unless otherwise provided by statute,[27] and by the law of the forum in regard to matters affecting remedial rights.[28] It is governed by the interest laws of the state where payable.[29] The liability of the indorser is governed by the law of the place where the indorsement is made.[30]

Negotiability is not destroyed by a qualified indorsement,[31] nor by the mere fact that the instrument is secured.[32] Bills of lading [33] and warehouse receipts [34] possess attributes of negotiability. In Kentucky bonds payable to bearer are not negotiable.[35]

While the drawing of a check operates as an assignment pro tanto of the drawer's deposit,[36] the drawing of a draft does not constitute an equitable assignment of the drawer's funds in the hands of the drawee.[37] A note procured by fraud as evicontaining a provision for attorney's fees, such fees may be recovered though prior to the first day of the term the face of the note had been paid. Everett & Son v. Ferst's Sons & Co., 126 Ga. 662, 55 S. E. 916. Where an interest bearing note provides for a ten per cent. attorney's fee for collection, the amount of the fee is ten per cent. of the principal and accrued interest. Hamilton v. Rogers [Ga.] 54 S. E. 926. A provision for attorney's fees does not apply where prior to maturity of the note the maker dies and expenses are incurred in presenting it as a claim against the estate. St. Joseph County Sav. Bank v. Randall [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 1012. Cross bill held to constitute a "suit on the notes" entitling the plaintiff to recover attorney's fees provided for. Houston Ice & Brewing Co. v. Nicolini [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 663, 96 S. W. 84.

23. A provision for attorney's fees which destroys negotiability does not preclude the right to days of grace. Sullins v. Farmers' Exch. Bank [Okl.] 87 P. 857.

24. In an action on a note not having "Peddler's note" written on its face as required by statute, it is competent to show that the payee was a peddler vending patent rights, that the note was given for the right to sell a patented article in a certain district, and that the payee traveled in other states selling rights to the same patent. Bugg v. Holt, 29 Ky. L. R. 1208, 97 S. W. 29.

25. See 6 C. L. 779, n. 23. See, also, Patents, 6 C. L. 952. A statute providing that notes given for a patent right shall state the consideration and shall be nonnegotiable is unconstitutional. Clark Co. v. Rice, 127 Wis. 451, 106 N. W. 231. Sand. & H. Dig. Art. §§ 493-496, making negotiable instruments taken for a patented machine void unless showing on its face for what it was given, and prescribing a penalty for noncompliance, is void. Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 145 F. 344.

26. Where a note is made and is payable in a state where if it was procured by fraud a bona fide holder can recover only what he paid for it, where such note is sued in another state, such rule applies. Creston Nat. Bank v. Salmon, 117 Mo. App. 506, 93 S. W. 288.

27. Under the rule that a contract is to be interpreted according to the law of the place of performance if indicated, otherwise according to the law of the place where made, the negotiability of a note payable at a certain place is to be determined by the law of such place. Barry v. Stover [S. D.] 107 N. W. 672.

28. The rules of pleading and evidence of the state where the action is brought apply in an action on a note executed and to be performed in another state. Kaufman v. Barbour [Minn.] 107 N. W. 1128. Where a note is made in one state payable on demand in another, it is presumed in the absence of proof that the law of the place where the note was made is similar to the law of the forum. Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Venner [Mass.] 78 N. E. 540.

29. Kraus v. Torry [Ala.] 40 So. 956. The laws of such state must be proved in order to recover interest. Id.

30. As to notice and protest. Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. Purcell, 142 F. 984.

31. Under the Negotiable Instrument Act a qualified indorsement does not destroy negotiability. Evans v. Freeman, 142 N. C. 61, 54 S. E. 847.

32. A mortgage given to secure a note does not impair its negotiability. Dumas v. People's Bank [Ala.] 40 So. 964.

33. Bill of lading is negotiable. Hardie & Co. v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. [La.] 42 So. 793. A railroad company is not bound by a bill of lading given by an agent for goods never received though such instrument is in the hands of bona fide holder. Henderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 116 La. 1047, 41 So. 252. This rule is not affected by Act No. 150, p. 193, of 1898, making it criminal for any person to sign a bill of lading for goods not received. Id. Act No. 150, p. 193, of 1868, makes negotiable only bills of lading issued in accordance with its provisions for goods actually received. Id.

34. Warehouseman's receipt is negotiable. Hardie & Co. v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. [La.] 42 So. 793.

35. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Chosen Friend Lodge, 29 Ky. L. R. 394, 93 S. W. 1044.

36. The drawee may maintain action against the bank. Loan & Sav. Bank v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 74 S. C. 210, 54 S. E. 364.

37. McArdle v. German Alliance Ins. Co., 183 N. Y. 368, 76 N. E. 337.

dence of an existing debt does not affect the right of the creditor to sue on the debt,[38] and, while acceptance of a check does not ordinarily extinguish a preexisting debt, it will do so if accepted with that intent.[39] In order to render an instrument drawn to the order of a fictitious person bearer paper, it must appear that the drawer so intended.[40] Authority of the holder to fill in blanks does not authorize him to materially alter the instrument.[41] A negotiable draft not payable out of a specific fund cannot be regarded as an equitable assignment.[42] An instrument is not rendered void by the fact that it is antedated.[43] The instrument can be made a specialty only when sealed in the manner prescribed.[44]

§ 3. Anomalous signatures and indorsements.[45]—As a general rule one who signs an instrument prior to delivery is liable as a maker,[46] though it is otherwise held in some states.[47] As between the parties it may be shown that a different liability was agreed upon or intended,[48] but not as against a bona fide holder.[49] Where

39. Cochran v. Slomkowski, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 385.

40. A draft drawn to the order of an existing firm which did not know of its being drawn is not drawn to the order of a nonexisting or fictitious person unless the drawer had no notice of the existence of such payee and his intent was to make it payable to bearer. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Bank of America, 51 Misc. 103, 100 N. Y. S. 740. Intent to make such draft payable to bearer may be inferred where it is drawn at the instance of an unauthorized agent in exchange for a forged check. Id.

41. The provision of Negotiable Instruments Law authorizing a holder to fill in blanks where an instrument is wanting in any material particular does not authorize him to alter a note payable to several payees jointly so as to make it payable to himself. First Nat. Bank v. Gridley, 112 App. Div. 398, 98 N. Y. S. 445.

42. Borough of Rosselle Park v. Montgomery [N. J. Eq.] 60 A. 954.

43. Rathfon v. Locher [Pa.] 64 A. 790.

44. In order to render a promissory note a sealed instrument, it must be so recited in the body of the note. The mere addition of the seal after the signature is insufficient. Jackson v. Augusta S. R. Co., 125 Ga. 801, 54 S. E. 697. The letters "L. S." after the signature indicates that the instrument is a sealed one. Langley v. Owens [Fla.] 42 So. 457.

45. See 6 C. L. 780.

46. Prior to the enactment of the Negotiable Instruments Law (c. 4524, p. 25, Acts 1897), one other than the maker or payee who indorsed a promissory note in blank before delivery to accommodate the maker thereof was liable as a maker. Baumeister v. Kuntz [Fla.] 42 So. 886. Persons who indorse at the time of execution and for the same consideration are joint makers. Jones v. Bank of Pine Bluff [Ark.] 96 S. W. 1060. Where one who is neither payee nor indorser writes his name on the back of a note, he is presumed to be a comaker. Oexner v. Loehr, 117 Mo. App. 698, 93 S. W. 333. The payee may at his election treat persons who sign before delivery as joint makers, guarantors, or indorsers. Golding Sons Co. v. Cameron Pottery Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 396. Under the rule that one who indorses prior to delivery is liable to the payee and all subsequent holders, it is immaterial that he signed for the purpose of giving the maker credit with the payee. Far Rockaway Bank v. Norton [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 709. One who places his name on the back of a promissory note before delivery is a maker or surety and is not entitled to notice of presentment and nonpayment. The act of April 17, 1902, known as "The Negotiable Instrument Act," does not change the liability of such party as established by the supreme court of the state for many years. Rockfield v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 290. One who indorses before indorsement by the payee for the purpose of giving the maker credit is a joint maker or guarantor. Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. Purcell, 146 F. 85. One who indorses a note before the name of the payee has been written therein is prima facie a joint maker. Keyser v. Warfield, 103 Md. 161, 63 A. 217.

47. Under the Negotiable Instrument Law (Acts 1897, c. 4524, p. 25), one not otherwise a party to a negotiable note who places his name thereon in blank before delivery is an indorser. Baumeister v. Kuntz [Fla.] 42 So. 886. Under a statute providing that a person's signature on an instrument otherwise than as maker shall be presumed to be an indorsement unless it clearly appears to have been otherwise intended, one placing his name on the back of an instrument before delivery is an indorser. Toole v. Crafts [Mass.] 78 N. E. 775. Where a firm made a note and one of the members indorsed it and also procured his wife to indorse it before delivery, she was an accommodation indorser and liable as such under Rev. Laws, c. 73, §§ 82, 83. Middleborough Nat. Bank v. Cole, 191 Mass. 168, 77 N. E. 781.

48. As between the parties it may be shown by parol that the makers, though they appear to be principal debtors, bear the relation of principal and surety. Kaufman v. Barbour [Minn.] 107 N. W. 1128. On conflicting evidence as to whether a married woman executed a note as joint maker or as surety for her husband, the question is for the jury. Fries v. Mather, 214 Pa. 304, 63 A. 695. Where all the signers of a note except one claimed to be sureties, it was proper to admit a contract signed by one and guarantied by the others whereby the signer agreed to consign to the payee cotton to the value of the face of the note. Kempner v. Patrick [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S.

the statute fixes the status of a party to a negotiable instrument, parol evidence is not admissible to vary the same.[50] The use of the words "indorse" and "indorsement" at the time of the transaction is not conclusive if something said or done at the time indicate otherwise.[51] A stranger who signs on the back of a note after execution is a guarantor.[52]

§ 4. Liability and discharge of primary parties.[53]—Parties primarily liable[54] are not discharged by dismissal of a suit against parties secondarily liable.[55] That delay in forwarding and presenting a check may discharge the drawer, he must show that he was prejudiced by such delay.[56] Defect of title is no defense to an action on an instrument given for the assignment of a lease.[57] One who agrees to pay a note is liable for attorney's fees therein provided for.[58]

A material alteration[59] after delivery discharges persons primarily liable.[60]

Defenses between the original parties.[61]—As between the parties the instrument is only a contract and is subject to all equitable or legal defenses,[62] as that it

W. 51. Where one agreed to take a note providing a certain person's indorsement was secured, and the maker took the note to him and had him sign it on an agreement that he was an indorser, the question as to whether he was an indorser or maker was for the jury. Oexner v. Loehr, 117 Mo. App. 698, 93 S. W. 333. Evidence insufficient to show that the payee of a note agreed to treat one who signed before delivery as an indorser. Id. On an issue as to the character of one who indorsed before delivery, an instruction that the jury must find that it was "expressly" agreed that he was to be treated as an indorser was held misleading. Id. It may be shown that in a note signed by husband and wife the wife signed as surety. Gibson v. Wallace [Ala.] 41 So. 960. In such case the wife has the burden of proof. Id. A note signed A, principal, B, surety, and C written directly below, without more, does not show that C was a surety. Scott v. Bales [Ky.] 29 Ky. L. R. 776, 96 S. W. 528.

49. Where one subscribes his name in the proper place at the bottom of a note, his liability as against a holder for value is determined by the position it occupies. Diffenbacher's Estate, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 35. Where one so affixes his name to a note as to become a maker, knowledge of a subsequent holder for value that he is an accommodation maker does not reduce his liability to surety. Id.

50. Status of an accommodation party signing in blank before delivery fixed as an indorser. Baumeister v. Kuntz [Fla.] 42 So. 886.

51. Instruction that something must have been "said and done" is misleading, as either is sufficient. Oexner v. Loehr, 117 Mo. App. 698, 93 S. W. 333. Where parties indorsed before delivery under an agreement and understanding that they would pay if the maker did not, it was held that they were liable as makers though the terms "guaranty" and "indorse" were used. Keyser v. Warfield, 103 Md. 161, 63 A. 217.

52. Thompson v. Brown [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 242.

53. See 6 C. L. 781.

54. A maker of notes and acceptor of drafts are primarily liable. Campbell v. Campbell Co., 117 La. 402, 41 So. 696.

55. A principal is not discharged where an action against himself, surety, and indorser is dismissed as to the latter two. Glenn v. Augusta Drug Co. [Ga.] 55 S. E. 103.

56. Cox v. Citizens State Bank [Kan.] 85 P. 762. The drawer of a check which is not collected because of lack of diligence in presenting it may recover the amount of a second check given on dishonor of the first. Noble v. Doughten, 72 Kan. 336, 83 P. 1048.

57. Norton v. Stroud State Bank [Okl.] 87 P. 848.

58. Trabue v. Wade & Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 591, 95 S. W. 616.

59. See 6 C. L. 782. See, also, Alteration of Instruments, 7 C. L. 115.

60. A note may be vitiated by an unauthorized alteration inserting a lower rate of interest. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Martindale [Kan.] 88 P. 559. Where an alteration is in favor of the holder and made while in his possession, the question whether it was made by him is for the jury though he testifies without contradiction that it was made by his bookkeeper without authority. McDonald v. Nalle [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 718, 91 S. W. 632. When the body of a note is written with a different pencil from that used in writing "value received with interest," the holder has the burden to show that the words were written before delivery. In re Pinkerton's Estate, 49 Misc. 363, 99 N. Y. S. 492.

61. See 6 C. L. 782.

62. As between the original parties the defense may be made that the check was to be paid out of partnership profits which have not been realized. Creery v. Thompson, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 511. Where a promissory note was given as a guaranty for a loan by the promisee to another, with the understanding that the maker should be called upon only if the borrower was unable to pay, it is a good defense to a suit thereon that the payee owes the borrower a sum in excess thereof. Marquis v. McKay [Pa.] 65 A. 678. Where a purchase price note is too large because of miscalculation in the basis adopted to ascertain the sale price, such excessive amount may be shown in a suit on the note where plaintiff has not changed his position in respect thereto. Green v. Smith, 102 N. Y. S. 629. An instrument delivered under a verbal was procured by fraud [68] in which case negligence of the maker is immaterial.[64] The consideration may always be inquired into,[65] and illegality,[66] lack,[67] or total,[68] or partial failure thereof,[69] is a defense. Payment is a defense [70] if made to one authorized to receive payment,[71] and where the maker finds the note at the place where it is payable, he may assume that the person in possession has authority to agreement that it shall not be binding until certain conditions have been performed is not valid as between the parties until the conditions have been satisfied. Hodge v. Smith [Wis.] 110 N. W. 192. Parol evidence is admissible to show such parol agreement. Id. Where the maker of a note tainted with usury induces another to take it up after maturity, promising to pay it thereafter, he is estopped to set up the defense. Walker v. Hillyer, 124 Ga. 857, 53 S. E. 313. Whether one ratified a note executed by him when he was under the impression that he was signing something else held a question of fact. Palo Alto Stock Farm v. Brooker [Iowa] 108 N. W. 307. By paying a note the maker recognizes its validity and cannot afterwards assert that it was signed and delivered in blank. Staunton v. Smith [Del.] 65 A. 593. Where one signs a note before the name of the payee is filled in, under an agreement that it is to run to a certain person against whom the signer has a demand, and the name of a different payee is filled in, the maker has a defense. Hess v. Gerstlauer, 214 Pa. 10, 63 A. 366. Such defense must be properly pleaded. Id.

63. A note procured by fraud by an agent is not collectible by the principal. Wickham v. Evans [Iowa] 110 N. W. 1046.

64. A party procuring a note by fraud or one not a bona fide holder cannot take advantage of the maker's negligence in executing the same. Wickham v. Evans [Iowa] 110 N. W. 1046. An ignorant man unfamiliar with technical legal language held not negligent in not reading all the terms of a mortgage note signed by him under representations that it was a mortgage only. Id.

65. Where notes were given by an employer for goods furnished his employe, the amount of which was deducted from his earnings, the statement of such facts is a defense to the employe in an action on the notes. Bovaird & Seyfang Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson [Pa.] 64 A. 513. As between the parties the consideration is open to inquiry. Ellison v. Simmons [Del.] 65 A. 591.

66. Illegality of consideration is a defense. Stewart v. Hutchinson, 120 Mo. App. 32, 96 S. W. 253. Where it is set up that the notes were given as part of a colorable transaction to protect the maker from threatened proceedings against him by his wife, it was competent to show unfriendly relations between the maker and his wife. Stone v. Stone, 191 Mass. 371, 77 N. E. 845. That the consideration was illegal is a defense. Yowell & Williams v. Walker [La.] 42 So. 635. Illegality of consideration is a defense between the parties. Hynes v. Plastino [Wash.] 87 P. 1127.

67. Where a check is delivered to one as a gift and the bank refuses to pay it, the payer has no cause of action against the drawer. Roney v. Dunleary [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 398. Evidence held to show that there was no consideration and that the notes were made as a memorandum of an amount to be due in case the maker sold certain bonds belonging to the payee. Hill v. Hall, 191 Mass. 253, 77 N. E. 831. Note held without consideration. Gillespie v. Salmon. 2 Cal. App. 501, 84 P. 310. An answer alleging that the note sued on was a renewal note and was given in consideration of a note which had been paid, and was therefore without consideration, is good. Eule v. Dorn [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 833, 92 S. W. 828. Want of a consideration is a defense. Sullivan v. Sullivan. 29 Ky. L. R. 239. 92 S. W. 966. Evidence held to show that the note was executed to indemnify against liability on another note. Lovell & Co. v. Sneed [Ark.] 95 S. W. 157.

68. Total or partial failure of consideration is a defense without alleging fraud. Rouse, Hempstone & Co. v. Sarratt, 74 S. C. 575, 54 S. E. 757. Failure of consideration is a defense. Alley v. Jesse French Piano & Organ Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 623.

69. Where there are two or more independent considerations and some of them fail, it is a defense pro tanto as between the parties. Tuttle v. Tuttle Co., 101 Me. 287, 64 A. 496. Evidence held to show partial failure of consideration. Id. Failure of consideration is a defense to a note under seal. Slaton v. Fowler, 124 Ga. 955, 53 S. E. 567. Where the consideration of a note from mother to son was services rendered and to be rendered, and he failed to render the services he contracted to, his recovery is limited to the value of services rendered. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 29 Ky. L. R. 239, 92 S. W. 966. Answer in an action on a note given by one partner to another, though charging fraud, held broad enough to admit evidence of failure of consideration. Davis v. Ferguson, 29 Ky. L. R. 214, 92 S. W. 968.

70. Payment is a defense. Barnes v. Barnes' Adm'r [Ga.] 56 S. E. 172. Plea of payment held good as against general demurrer. Eule v. Dorn [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 833, 92 S. W. 828. Payment is a defense. Royal Bank v. Goldschmidt, 101 N. Y. S. 101. Question of payment held for the jury. Id. Under Negotiable Instruments Law providing that an instrument is discharged by payment by or on behalf of the principal debtor, where a resident of New York gave in a foreign country a draft on himself which was negotiated to a local broker, and dishonored by the drawee, the payee who reimbursed the broker could not recover re-exchange from the maker. Pavenstedt v. New York Life Ins. Co., 113 App. Div. 866, 99 N. Y. S. 614. Nor could he recover loss sustained by reason of fluctuation of the local currency. Id.

71. Where an agent indorses a note of his principals to a bank as collateral for his private debt and upon receiving the money turns it over to the bank, the principal and not the maker must lose the money. Wickham v. Evans [Iowa] 110 N. W. 1046.

receive payment,[72] which person is the agent of the holder.[73] Fraud is a defense.[74] As a general rule when any of the above specified defenses are set up, the maker has the burden of proof.[75]

§ 5. Liabilities and discharge of sureties, guarantors and other anomalous parties.[76]—An extension of the time of payment granted those primarily liable releases parties secondarily liable.[77] But such extension must be granted without the knowledge or consent of the latter,[78] be for a definite period,[79] be based on a sufficient consideration,[80] and must be mutual as between maker and payee.[81] Pay-

72. Where the maker finds the note at the place designated as the place of payment, he has a right to assume that the person in possession has authority to receive payment. Fifth Congregational Ch. v. Bright, 28 App. D. C. 229.

73. Hence, if he absconds with the money after releasing the note, the payee and not the maker must lose. Fifth Congregational Ch. v. Bright, 28 App. D. C. 229. Since the maker has a right to pay such party in cash, the fact that he pays in a check payable to such party instead of to the payee, does not render him liable for the money converted by the agent. Id.

74. Fraud is a defense. Crosby v. Emerson [C. C. A.] 142 F. 713. As between parties the maker cannot wholly defeat recovery because of deceit whereby improper items were included in the amount but the sum actually due may be recovered. Note given to settle an account for work done under contract but which account was incorrect. Daniel v. Learned, 188 Mass. 294, 74 N. E. 322. Where some persons sign unconditionally and other signatures are procured without a disclosure of the fact, the latter may defend on the ground of fraud. Hodge v. Smith [Wis.] 110 N. W. 192. Fraud is a defense. Douglass v. Richards, 101 N. Y. S. 299. Fraud is a defense to a note under seal. House v. Martin, 125 Ga. 642, 54 S. E. 735. Where at the time one signed a note the printed matter was obscured so that he did not know he was signing a note such fact was not defense unless the concealment was intentional. Palo Alto Stock Farm v. Brooker [Iowa] 108 N. W. 307. The instrument was not a forgery unless the concealment was intentional. Id. Where a note was given by a married woman for worthless corporate stock which fact the payee knew and the transaction was carried through by her husband, the payee was charged with notice that false representations must have been made to the maker. Ditto v. Slaughter, 28 Ky. L. R. 1164, 92 S. W. 2. Answer held not to state facts showing fraud. Leedy v. Wood [Or.] 88 P. 585.

75. A maker has the burden to prove want of consideration. Crabtree v. Sisk [Ky.] 99 S. W. 268. Evidence insufficient to show partial failure of consideration in an action on a note given for government concessions. McGue v. Rommel, 148 Cal. 539, 83 P. 1000. Evidence insufficient to show fraud or want of consideration. Rogers v. Mercantile Adjuster Pub. Co., 118 Mo. App. 1, 93 S. W. 328. Evidence insufficient to show total failure of consideration for a note. Steven v. Henderson [Neb.] 110 N. W. 646. Defendant has the burden to prove payment. Walston v. Davis [Ala.] 40 So. 1017. Such fact need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Id. Where payment is relied on, the defendant has the burden to prove it. Dodrill's Ex'rs v. Gregory Adm'r [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 922. Evidence insufficient to show payment where one claiming to be a surety induced the payee to sue the holder alone and made a deposit in escrow to purchase a judgment against him if the maker did not pay. Capital Nat. Bank v. Robinson, 41 Wash. 454, 85 P. 1021. Evidence of accountings between the parties held admissible on the question of payment where the maker had died. Stone v. Stone, 191 Mass. 371, 77 N. E. 845. Evidence insufficient to show that a note had been paid. Stumm v. Goetz [Conn.] 64 A. 810. Where payments indorsed on a note exceed interest, it must be proven that they were made to so apply. Dunlap v. Kelly, 115 Mo. App. 610, 92 S. W. 140. Where payment was set up as a defense, it was competent to show that the maker had no notice that subsequent to the time of the alleged payment the holder had pledged the note as corroborating his testimony that he had forgotten that he had given the note. Foss v. Smith [Vt.] 65 A. 553.

76. See 6 C. L. 782.

77. A surety is released by an extension of the time of payment. Carter-Battle Grocer Co. v. Clarke [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 609, 91 S. W. 880.

78. Without the consent of the surety. Weaver v. Prebster [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 674. An indorser is released by an extension of time of payment made without his knowledge or consent. Browere v. Carpenter, 50 Misc. 525, 99 N. Y. S. 531.

79. To release a surety by reason of an extension of time, the extension should be for a definite period. Weaver v. Prebster [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 674.

80. Prepayment of interest before maturity may be a good consideration for an extension agreement. Welch v. Kukuk, 128 Wis. 419, 107 N. W. 301. Payment of a portion of a note before maturity is a sufficient consideration for an extension of time on the balance. Browere v. Carpenter, 50 Misc. 525, 99 N. Y. S. 531. Extension agreement is based on a sufficient consideration where given for the hypothecation of land and additional interest to accrue by reason of the extension. Carter-Battle Grocer Co. v. Clarke [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 609, 91 S. W. 880. Where a post-office inspector without authority extended the time of payment to sureties on a postmaster's bond, where the postmaster had defaulted, and took their note for the amount. United States v. Kauhoe [C. C. A.] 147 F. 185. Where a maker voluntarily prepaid interest before maturity of the note and the payee voluntarily consented to an extension without regard to the time interment of interest without alteration of the terms,[82] or renewal of a note, does not release collateral security.[83] One secondarily liable is discharged by a valid tender made by a prior party,[84] or by the intentional cancellation of his signature,[85] but not by a payment which is subsequently recovered because constituting an unlawful preference.[86] An indorser is not discharged by delay of the holder in suing the maker for a period short of that fixed by limitations where his liability has been fixed by demand, protest, and notice, though the maker becomes insolvent in the meantime,[87] nor is he released where he and the maker under an agreement give the notes to another in settlement of a debt of the maker, and providing that in case of default in payment of the notes, the entire debt should mature.[88] A surety is released where impairment of the security is permitted,[89] but not by failure to pursue the principal debtor at his request,[90] nor by a mere promise that he will not have to pay.[91] Failure to recover judgment against the maker in an action to which the guarantor is not a party will not preclude judgment against the guarantor.[92] Payments by a guarantor do not toll the statute of limitations as to the maker.[93] An anomolous indorser cannot be held on a contract written above his indorsement reciting an agreement to pay the note according to the terms of another note which added other terms.[94] An indorser may release himself by contract.[95] One who has agreed to become a cosurety cannot refuse so to do, pay the note, take est was paid, the surety was not discharged. Welch v. Kukuk, 128 Wis. 419, 107 N. W. 301. Payment of interest for a year on a note due one year from date a few days before maturity is not sufficient consideration. Weaver v. Prebster [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 674.

81. Where the maker paid interest for a year a few days before maturity, and it was understood that the note was to run for another year, there was no valid agreement. Weaver v. Prebster [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 674.

82. Payment of interest on a promissory note does not release the surety, it not appearing that the note was in any manner altered or changed in respect thereto. Bltler's Estate, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 84.

83. First Nat. Bank v. Gunbus [Iowa] 110 N. W. 611.

84. Under Negotiable Instruments Law. State Bank v. Kahn, 49 Misc. 500, 98 N. Y. S. 858.

85. Under the provision of Negotiable Instruments Law that one secondarily liable is discharged by the intentional cancellation of his signature by the holder, where the holder consents to the cancellation of the signature of an indorser, he is discharged, though there is no consideration for the cancellation. McCormick v. Shea, 50 Misc. 592, 99 N. Y. S. 467. The fact that the cancellation was made by the holder's representative in his presence is to be considered on the question whether the cancellation was intentional. Id. Under Negotiable Instruments Acts providing that the intentional cancellation of the signature of one secondarily liable releases him, one who alleges that the cancellation was not intentional, or was made by mistake or without authority, has the burden of proof. Id.

86. Payment by the maker within four months prior to being adjudged a bankrupt, which payment was recovered by the trustee as a preference, does not discharge sureties or indorsers. Hooker v. Blount [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 993, 97 S. W. 1083. Where a maker paid the note and within a few days thereafter went into bankruptcy and the payment was recovered as a preference, such payment was insufficient to discharge the indorser. Second Nat. Bank v. Prewett [Tenn.] 96 S. W. 334. Where holders of a note failed to file it as a claim in bankruptcy against the maker, parties secondarily liable were discharged as to so much as would have been paid had it been so presented. Id.

87. His remedy is to pay and recover from the maker. Rogers v. Detroit Sav. Bank [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 889, 110 N. W. 74. The holder is under no obligation to the indorser to take steps to enforce payment as soon as the instrument becomes due. Id.

88. Crilly v. Gallice, 148 F. 835.

89. A surety is discharged where the payee permits impairment of the security. Kempner v. Patrick [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 51.

90. Failure to pursue the principal debtor at the request of the surety does not release the surety. White v. Savage [Or.] 87 P. 1040. A surety is primarily liable under Revisal 1905, § 2342. Rouse v. Wooten, 140 N. C. 557, 53 S. E. 430.

91. The mere fact that a husband who is principal debtor promises his wife who is surety that she will never have to pay the note does not release her from liability. Hover v. Magley, 101 N. Y. S. 245.

92, 93. Thompson v. Brown [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 242.

94. Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. Purcell, 146 F. 85.

95. Where, in a suit upon a deed of trust note against an indorser for a deficit, it appears that an agreement was made between the defendant and the trustees that, if the former would find a purchaser for the property at a price sufficient to pay principal, interest, and costs, the note would be surrendered, which purchaser was procured, it is error to direct a verdict for plaintiffs. Ubhoff v. Brandenburg, 26 App. D. C. 3.

an assignment, and hold the sureties who have signed.[96] Where notes secured by a trust deed provide a fixed sum as compensation for the trustee, the sureties are bound thereby.[97]

§ 6. Negotiation and transfer generally.[98]—Indorsement by all payees is necessary to pass title.[99] A transfer of a secured instrument carries with it the collateral.[1] The assignee of an instrument takes it subject to all equities against it.[2] The assignor is liable for fraud inducing the transfer.[3] A note may be pledged without special indorsement.[4] The nature of the transfer, whether absolute or as security, may be a question of fact.[5] The character of the transaction is to be determined from the contract.[6] A check on a bank in a distant city indorsed and deposited in the home bank of the payee becomes the property of such bank.[7] Delivery is essential to pass title to notes secured by a trust deed.[8]

§ 7. Acceptance.[9]—A drawer of a bill is not liable thereon until acceptance,[10] but after acceptance he is a guarantor.[11] An accepted bill is an assignment to the payee to the extent of its face of any debt due from the debtor to the drawer.[12] As a general rule an acceptance in writing is necessary,[13] but an oral one [14] or a promise

96. Where one liable upon a note as surety agrees with the maker, payee, and a new surety to sign a renewal note, he cannot after the others have signed refuse to sign, pay the note, take an assignment thereof, and hold the new surety, especially where he signed upon the express condition that the note should not be delivered until the old surety signed. Smith v. Bales [Ky.] 99 S. W. 672. Where in an action against a surety by the assignee of a note, the defense is that plaintiff had agreed to become a cosurety thereon, an instruction that the finding should be for plaintiff unless plaintiff had agreed to sign as surety, and defendant had signed upon the express condition that he should sign, fairly presents the issue. Id.

97. Cannot contend that the trustee was entitled only to a reasonable sum. Bolton v. G. C. Gifford & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 210.

98. See 6 C. L. 783.

99. Negotiable Instruments Law expressly provides that endorsement of all the payees is necessary to pass good title. First Nat. Bank v. Gridley, 112 App. Div. 398, 98 N. Y. S. 445.

1. Clark v. Whitaker, 117 La. 298, 41 So. 580.

2. An assignee of a note in the hands of a pledgee who holds it as security for two claims takes it burdened with such claims and cannot assert that he is an innocent purchaser. Ladd v. Myers [Cal. App.] 87 P. 1110. Where one gave a check in payment of a mortgage note and received the note and mortgage bearing a memorandum that both had been discharged, and it was not intended to vest any title to the note in him, he could not repudiate the check on the ground that the note had not been regularly indorsed to the holder. National Bank v. Sayer, 73 N. H. 595, 64 A. 189.

3. The transferor of a note is primarily liable on his false representations that a note and lien securing it had not been paid. Harris v. Cain [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 327, 91 S. W. 866.

4. Clark v. Whitaker, 117 La. 298, 41 So. 580.

5. Whether a note was transferred absolutely or as security held question for the jury. Elledge v. Gray [Miss.] 41 So. 2. Transaction construed and held not a sale of certificates of deposit. Schultz v. Becker [Wis.] 110 N. W. 214. Evidence sufficient to show that a note had been deposited with a bank as collateral and not sold to it. First Nat. Bank v. Gunhus [Iowa] 110 N. W. 611.

6. Where one gives his note in exchange for the note of a third person held by the party to whom his note is given, the transaction is a purchase of the note received and not a sale of the note of the purchaser, so that the rule that, if the seller of his own note is insolvent and conceals such fact, the note may be avoided, does not apply. German Nat. Bank v. Princeton State Bank, 128 Wis. 60, 107 N. W. 454.

7. Where the payee of a check on a bank in a distant city indorses and deposits it in his home bank in the usual and ordinary manner, it becomes the property of the indorsee. Noble v. Doughten, 72 Kan. 336, 83 P. 1048. The fact that the indorsee has the right to charge it against the depositor's account in case of dishonor does not alter the character of the transaction. Id. Where a bank holding title to a check deposited by a depositor forwards it to a bank in the city where the drawee bank is located with a guaranty of the previous indorsement and forwards with it a deposit slip and it is accepted by such bank on the terms proposed by the indorsement, the title vests in the second indorsee. 10. Under Negotiable Instruments Law. Seattle Shoe Co. v. Packard [Wash.] 86 P. 845.

11. The drawee of a check by accepting it makes himself a guarantor. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Bank of Rutherford [Tenn.] 88 S. W. 939. See 4 Mich. L. R. 147.

12. Barnsdall v. Waltemeyer [C. C. A.] 142 F. 415.

13. Negotiable Instruments Law expressly provides that acceptance must be in writing. Seattle Shoe Co. v. Packard [Wash.] 86 P. 845.

14. Where one orally accepted certain orders, he was held liable thereon though he to accept may be sufficient.[15] Under the rule that a written acceptance is essential, failure of the drawee to return the bill does not constitute an acceptance.[16] An acceptance external from the instrument must unequivocally import an absolute promise to pay.[17] A qualified or conditional acceptance is binding upon performance of the conditions.[18] But such acceptance is ineffective when its conditions never have been and probably never will be fulfilled.[19] In some states one who refuses to accept a bill drawn on him is subject to a penalty.[20]

Certification of a check made at the instance of an indorsee discharges the drawee though at the time he had no funds on deposit.[21] Where an indorsee of a check procured the bank to certify it, the bank could not thereafter revoke its certification so as to render an indorser liable.[22] Certification at the instance of the drawee before delivery does not make the bank absolutely liable.[23] The drawee of a forged check is negligent where he passes it without examination in reliance on prior indorsements.[24]

§ 8. Indorsement.[25]—A contract of indorsement is one in writing and cannot be contradicted by parol.[26] The contract is entered into by writing one's name on had advanced other sums up to the amount due the drawer while the orders were outstanding. Eighth Ward Bank v. McLoughlin, 113 App. Div. 750, 99 N. Y. S. 362.

15. A promise to accept a bill not drawn, but subsequently drawn in favor of the promisee who takes it for a pre-existing debt, is a good acceptance. Barnsdall v. Waltemeyer [C. C. A.] 142 F. 415. A drawee who has promised to accept and has funds of the drawer in his hands must do so though there is a condition attached to his agreement to accept which has not been performed. McPhee v. Fowler [Colo.] 85 P. 421. One who refuses to honor a draft for a certain amount "with exchange" but says that he will honor one for a certain amount is liable on a draft for such amount with exchange, it not appearing that he refused to honor the first because exchange was included. State Bank v. American Hardwood Lumber Co. [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 786.

16. St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. v. James [Ark.] 95 S. W. 804. Under a statute providing if a drawee destroy a bill, or fail to return it to the holder within twenty-four hours, or refuse for that period to accept, he shall be deemed to have accepted, mere neglect or failure to return does not constitute acceptance. Id. Where a railroad company contracted to pay board orders of its employes, and it was its custom on receiving them to retain them if they were indebted to the drawers, or if the drawers were still in their employ, the fact that they failed to return certain orders within reasonable time does not prove acceptance. Id.

17. The drawee of a check cannot be held upon a claimed contract of acceptance external from the check unless the language unequivocally imports an absolute promise to pay. First Nat. Bank v. Commercial Sav. Bank [Kan.] 87 P. 746. Such promise is not made by returning to a telegraphic inquiry "Is A's check on you good for $350" the telegraphic response "A's check is good for the sum named." Id.

20. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 449, providing for a penalty in case of refusal to accept a draft drawn out of the state on a person within the state where protested, where a draft drawn in Iowa upon a corporation in Missouri, which had previously agreed to accept it, is protested, the corporation is liable for the statutory penalty. State Bank v. American Hardwood Lumber Co. [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 786.

21. First Nat. Bank v. Currie [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 965, 110 N. W. 499. Certification of a chcek by the bank procured by an indorsee discharges the drawer and indorsers. Id. Where an indorsee procured the certification of a check, the subsequent insolvency of the drawer did not render an indorser liable. Id.

22. First Nat. Bank v. Currie [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 965, 110 N. W. 499. Where an indorsee procured the drawer of a check to certify it and purchased goods on faith of it, as between them, an enforceable contract was created. Id.

23. Under the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Law, where the drawer of a check procured it to be certified before delivering it, and before presentation the bank failed, the bank was not liable on the check to the drawer who received from the payee after the failure. Schlesinger v. Kurzrok, 47 Misc. 634, 94 N. Y. S. 442. See 19 Harv. L. R. 212.

24. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Bank of Rutherford, 115 Tenn. 64, 88 S. W. 939. A drawee bank which pays a forged check which had been previously honored and indorsed by other banks, and holds it for more than thirty days, thereby admits it to be correct and is estopped to recover from indorsing banks. Id. To entitle the holder of a forged draft to retain the money obtained thereon from the drawee it must appear that the entire responsibility of determining the genuineness of the signature of the drawer devolved on the drawee, and that his negligence was not lessened by any disregard of duty on the part of the holder. Ford & Co. v. People's Bank, 74 S. C. 180, 54 S. E. 204.

25. See 6 C. L. 785.

26. A blank indorsement cannot be varied by parol. Torbert v. Montague [Colo.] 87 P. 1145. A contract of indorsement is one in writing and can not be contradicted by a contemporaneous written contract un-

the back of a negotiable instrument,[27] and is not altered by recitals which constitute mere surplusage.[28] Like any other contract it must be executed by one with power to execute,[29] and if made by an agent he must have been specifically authorized.[30] An indorsement for a special purpose is to be construed as any other contract.[31] An indorsement in blank may be amended at any time before trial.[32]

Indorser's liability.[33]—An indorser guaranties the genuineness of all prior indorsements[34] and warrants the title,[35] but does not warrant to the drawee the genuineness of the drawee's signature,[36] nor is it a warranty of an instrument which less the terms of the latter plainly indicate that the parties so intended. Crilly v. Gallice [C. C. A.] 148 F. 835.

27. Where a note was indorsed by a bank, presumably for collection, and after the collector recovered judgment, which the payee was unable to satisfy, he indorsed it back without recourse, and the bank reissued it without striking off its prior indorsement, it was liable thereon. Moore v. First Nat. Bank [Colo.] 88 P. 385.

28. "For value received the within note, together with collaterals securing the payment of the same is transferred to A" is an indorsement and does not destroy negotiability. Rowe v. Gohlman [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 40, 539, 98 S. W. 1077. Under the rule that an instrument payable to a person, his order, or assigns, is negotiable, a written assignment indorsed on a note by the payee is the equivalent of a blank indorsement. Leahy v. Haworth [C. C. A.] 141 F. 850. Where a payee in indorsing writes above his name: "I hereby acknowledge myself as principal," etc., such words were mere surplusage and could be stricken, and the contract was one of indorsement only. Kistner v. Peters, 223 Ill. 607, 79 N. E. 311. An indorsement followed by "transferred to" renders the indorser liable as such. Mayes Mercantile Co. v. Handley [Ind. T.] 98 S. W. 125. An indorsement without recourse will not be read from such term. Id. Under the Negotiable Instrument Act a written guaranty constitutes an indorsement with an enlarged liability, and transfers the paper free from equities existing between maker and payer. Leahy v. Haworth [C. C. A.] 141 F. 850.

29. A trading corporation has power to purchase and indorse bills and notes. Jamieson v. Heim [Wash.] 86 P. 165.

30. A corporation is not liable on notes indorsed by its resident manager who had no authority to indorse. Manhattan Liquor Co. v. Magnus & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 785, 94 S. W. 1117. A corporation is liable on notes given by its agent and indorsed by him with the corporate name for the purchase of goods he was authorized to purchase. Id. Where notes were given by a managing agent of a corporation and indorsed by him with the corporate name, evidence held insufficient to show that the goods for which they were given were purchased for the corporation. Id. Stamping a name on the back of an instrument by a person authorized to do so constitutes an indorsement if it was so intended. Mayers v. McRimmon, 140 N. C. 640, 53 S. E. 447. One whose name does not appear on an instrument cannot be charged as an indorser by parol evidence that the nominal payee in indorsing acted as his agent where the note does not suggest such agency. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Martindale [Kan.] 88 P. 569. Under Negotiable Instruments Law providing that a forged indorsement is inoperative, where an agent with authority to indorse checks payable to his principal and deposit them in a bank for collection indorses them to a broker for margins on a stock transaction, the indorsement is not a forgery, and a bank which takes them from the broker is not liable in conversion. Salen v. Bank of State of N. Y., 110 App. Div. 636, 97 N. Y. S. 361. The secretary of a corporation is not presumed to have authority to bind the corporation as accommodation indorser of his own notes. Wheeling Ice & Storage Co. v. Conner [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 982. An agent selling goods and authorized to collect therefor has no implied authority to indorse a check received for goods payable to his principal. Hamilton Nat. Bank v. Nye [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 295.

31. A payee of a note who assigns it with a guaranty of payment is not made agent for collection by an attached slip providing that payment by the payee, being made as guarntor only, it is desired that any bank through whose hands the instrument passes do not mark it "paid." Pace v. Gilbert School, 118 Mo. App. 369, 93 S. W. 1124. An indorsement on an over due note "extended on or before Oct. 1, 1902, at six per cent interest from Mch. 27, '02" makes six per cent the rate from that date until paid, and not merely until October 1, 1902. Moffatt v. Blake [C. C. A.] 145 F. 40.

32. An indorser in blank may, at any time before trial in an action on the note is terminated, amend the indorsement by writing over it "for value received I hereby assign the within note to." Kistner v. Peters, 223 Ill. 607, 79 N. E. 311.

33. See 6 C. L. 786.

34. An indorser warrants the genuineness of all prior indorsements. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Bank of America, 57 Misc. 103, 100 N. Y. S. 740. An unrestricted indorsement guarantees the genuineness of the signature of the maker. Ford & Co. v. People's Bank, 74 S. C. 180, 54 S. E. 204. Where a prior indorsement was a forgery, the indorser is liable. Oriental Bank v. Gallo, 112 App. Div. 360, 98 N. Y. S. 561. Evidence sufficient to show that a prior indorsement was a forgery. Id.

35. Where a draft is drawn in exchange for a forged check, the fact that the bank might by the exercise of ordinary diligence have discovered the forgery does not affect the liability of an indorser of the draft on his warranty of title. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Bank of America, 51 Misc. 103, 100 N. Y. S. 740.

36. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Bank of Rutherford, 115 Tenn. 64, 88 S. W. 939.

is materially altered subsequent to the indorsement.[37] His liability is contingent upon failure of the maker to pay at maturity,[38] due presentment and demand,[39] protest and notice.[40] The right to have due presentment made and notice of dishonor given is not changed by the fact that failure to do so did not damage him.[41] A holder when seeking to charge an indorser has the burden to prove timely presentment.[42] Indorsers are liable in the inverse order of their indorsement.[43]

§ 9. Presentment and demand.[44]—Demand paper must be presented within a reasonable time.[45] A note payable at a particular bank does not necessitate demand for payment there.[46] Where a note is payble on demand at a certain place, no demand is necessary as a condition to the holder's right to sue,[47] and a refusal to pay on a demand made at a place other than that specified constitutes a default in payment.[48] A person receiving a check must exercise reasonable diligence in making presentment thereof for payment if he wishes to avoid risk of loss by insolvency of the drawee.[49] The fact that there are no funds in the account against

38. An indorser of a check is liable thereon if it is not paid when seasonably presented and he is notified of the nonpayment. First Nat. Bank v. Currie [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 965, 110 N. W. 499. Where a note is payable to a bank, it is immaterial in an action against an indorser that the bank failed to appropriate funds on deposit by the maker to its payment, since it was optional with the bank to so apply it. Far Rockaway Bank v. Norton [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 709.

39. Presentment before maturity is insufficient to charge an indorser. Demelman v. Brazier [Mass.] 79 N. E. 812. To hold an indorser, presentment, demand and notice of dishonor to him is necessary. Galbraith v. Shepard [Wash.] 86 P. 1113. Delay of five days in presenting a check discharges an indorser. Travers v. Sinclair & Co., 122 Ill. App. 203.

40. Under Negotiable Instruments Law a holder who exercises the option to declare an instrument due for nonpayment of interest must, in order to hold an indorser, make presentment and give notice of dishonor. Galbraith v. Shepard [Wash.] 86 P. 1113.

41. First Nat. Bank v. Currie [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 965, 110 N. W. 499. An indorser is discharged from liability for failure to present a check within a reasonable time though he suffered no damage. Travers v. Sinclair & Co., 122 Ill. App. 203.

42. Hence, the indorser may avail himself of the defense of want of presentment though he does not plead it. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Zimmerman, 185 N. Y. 210, 77 N. E. 1020.

43. An indorsee may disregard all indorsements carrying the instrument forward from the payee. Cox v. Citizens' State Bank [Kan.] 85 P. 762. An accommodation indorser who is last indorser on the note and is not a judgment debtor in a judgment against other parties, which is satisfied by a surety on an appeal bond, is discharged. State Bank v. Kahn, 49 Misc. 500, 98 N. Y. S. 858. Indorsers are prima facie liable in the order in which they indorse. Under Negotiable Instruments Law. Id. Where one holding an instrument on which an intermediate indorsement had been filed was paid the face of it by the drawee, who on discovering the forgery sued to recover, the last holder could compromise the suit and recover from an indorser. Oriental Bank v. Gallo, 112 App. Div. 360, 98 N. Y. S. 561.

44. See 6 C. L. 786.

45. Under Negotiable Instrument Act relative to presentment of demand paper and providing that it must be presented within a reasonable time under the circumstances and usages where a check is forwarded to various banks for collection in accordance with the custom of bankers, sufficient diligence is shown though demand might have been made more promptly if extraordinary means had been resorted to. Plover Sav. Bank v. Moodie [Iowa] 110 N. W. 29. Evidence of the usage and customs of banks relative to presentation of checks is admissible. Id. Under Negotiable Instrument Act providing for presentment of demand paper within a reasonable time under the circumstances, three and one half years held unreasonable in this case though complaint had been made of nonpayment in the meantime. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Zimmerman, 185 N. Y. 210, 77 N. E. 1020.

49. Lewis, Hubbard & Co. v. Montgomery Supply Co., 59 W. Va. 75, 52 S. E. 1017. Under Rev. Laws, c. 73, § 209, providing that in determining what shall constitute a reasonable time within which to present a bill regard must be had to the nature of the instrument, the usage of trade or business, and the facts of each case, held that a check drawn in Boston, on a Boston Bank, and delivered to the payee who lived at Chelsea, on Saturday which was not presented until Thursday was untimely though it had been transferred three times. Gordon v. Levine [Mass.] 80 N. E. 505. An indorsee of a check undertakes that he will present it within the day after its receipt and give notice if it is not paid. First Nat. Bank v. Currie [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 965, 110 N. W. 499. An indorser who pays and sues the holder for damages for delay in presenting and demanding payment waives insufficiency of the presentment and demand. Rogers v. Detroit Sav. Bank [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 889, 110 N. W. 74. Failure to present a check within five days is sufficient to discharge the drawer where he has not waived presentation within a reasonable time. Burns v. Yocum [Ark.] 98 S. W. 956.

which it is drawn does not relieve the indorsee of the duty of presenting it.[50] Presentation the day after it is given is timely.[51] If the payee of a check and the drawee reside or have their places of business in the same city, presentment must be made within the business hours of the next day after it is received.[52] If in different cities it must be forwarded for presentment on the next day after receipt if reasonably and conveniently practicable.[53] If not so practicable, then by the next mail or similar means of conveyance.[54] It need not be forwarded by the only or last mail of the day after its receipt if such mail closes or departs so early as to render it inconvenient for the holder to avail himself of it.[55] What is an unreasonably early hour depends on the circumstances of the transaction and situation of the parties.[56] In the absence of agreement to the contrary or circumstances making it imprudent to do so, it may be indorsed to a bank for collection.[57] But this does not extend the time within which it must be forwarded for presentment.[58] Failure to present a check does not bar recovery from the drawer if the time intervening between delivery thereof and failure of the bank is not sufficient for presentment by the exercise of such diligence as the law requires.[59] Where the payee of a check accepts a deposit slip instead of demanding cash, he must stand the loss if the bank is thereafter unable to pay.[60] One secondarily liable may waive presentment, expressly or by implication,[61] and waiver of presentment dispenses with notice of dishonor.[62]

§ 10. Protest and notice thereof.[63]—The law merchant does not require formal protest.[64] It is generally required that foreign bills and notes be protested.[65]

57. Lewis, Hubbard & Co. v. Montgomery Supply Co., 59 W. Va. 75, 52 S. E. 1017. The parties to a check sent to a distant place to be forwarded for collection are deemed to have acted with knowledge of the usual diligent method of making such presentment through a bank at the place to which it is sent and to have agreed to suffer any reasonable delay incident to such mode of presentment. Id. In such case the drawer by allowing his funds to remain in the drawee bank and the drawee by accepting the check evinces belief in the solvency of th bank and the former takes the risk of solvency during the reasonable period necessary for presentment in the usual manner. Id. The drawer, by delivering a check to the agent of the payee, having no authority to indorse it, impliedly agrees to allow such additional time for presentment as may be necessary for transmission of the check to the principal. Id.

58. The bank is not required to forward it the next day after its receipt if there be no convenient means of doing so within banking hours of that day. Lewis, Hubbard & Co. v. Montgomery Supply Co., 59 W. Va. 75, 52 S. E. 1017.

59. Lewis, Hubbard & Co. v. Montgomery Supply Co., 59 W. Va. 75, 52 S. E. 1017. Where a check is not paid because the maker had stopped payment before demand, an indorser could not escape liability because of negligence of the holder in sending the check to the drawee bank for payment instead of selecting an independent agent to make demand. Plover Sav. Bank v. Moodie [Iowa] 110 N. W. 29.

61. Under the Negotiable Instrument Law (Acts 1897, c. 4524, p. 25), presentment may be expressly or impliedly waived by an indorser. Waiver may be implied from conduct. Baumeister v. Kuntz [Fla.] 42 So. 886. In an action against one indorsing in blank and before delivery notes payable one day after date, as an accommodation indorser, evidence of contemporary facts and circumstances is admissible to show waiver of presentment. Id. The fact that an accommodation indorser was a stockholder in and treasurer of the corporation maker of a note payable one day from date, together with other facts, held sufficient to show a waiver of presentment. Id.

Necessity of protest is regulated by statute in some states.[66] The indirect pecuniary interest of a notary in a note does not render him incompetent to protest it.[67] Damages may be recovered for wrongful and malicious protest of a check.[68]

Notice of nonpayment is not necessary in order to charge parties primarily liable,[69] but is necessary in order to charge an indorser [70] or drawer of a bill [71] unless waived.[72] Notice to the indorser must come from the holder of the note or some one who was a party to it,[73] and the fact that a note is payable at a bank of which an indorser is president does not dispense with the necessity of notice of protest to him.[74] Where an indorser denies that he has received notice of protest, the burden of proving that he has is on the holder.[75]

The certificate of protest[76] is prima facie evidence of the facts therein recited.[77]

§ 11. New promise after discharge and waiver of presentment and demand.[78] —Notice of presentment, dishonor and protest may be waived.[79] Such waiver may be made either before or after maturity of the paper.[80] Waiver may be made by eral laws on the same footing with foreign bills, violates no rights secured to national banks by acts of congress. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Ford [Ky.] 99 S. W. 260.

66. In a suit against an indorser on a note discounted by W. J. West & Co., evidence that such company "were in the money lending business, discounting notes," etc., but did not receive deposits, that they had out a sign "W. J. West & Co., Bankers," but had no charter, that the company was composed of W. J. West alone, does not show that the company was a bank within Civ. Code 1895, § 3688, so as to render protest necessary. Davis v. West & Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 403.

69. Protest and notice is not necessary to charge the maker. Preston v. Morsman [Neb.] 106 N. W. 320. A surety is not entitled to notice of dishonor under Revisal 1905, § 2239. Rouse v. Wooten, 140 N. C. 557, 53 S. E. 430. He is not an indorser within Revisal 1905, § 2213. Id. Want of demand, notice, and protest cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Love v. Export Storage Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 1.

70. Where a note is payable at a chartered bank, not only indorsers for value but all others whose indorsement is essential to due transmission of title are entitled to notice of nonpayment and protest. Ennis v. Reynolds [Ga.] 56 S. E. 104.

71. Failure to give notice of dishonor of a draft releases the maker and indorser from liability. Cook v. American Tubing & Webbing Co. [R. I.] 65 A. 641. A holder of a bill of exchange must give the drawer notice of nonpayment. Morehouse & Wells Co. v. Schwaber, 118 Ill. App. 44.

72. The fact that an indorser who was not served with notice of protest gave another note on the day the first became due for an amount equal to the unpaid balance is not evidence of waiver of notice of protest, in the absence of evidence that she knew it was a renewal note. Jenkinson Co. v. Eggers, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 151.

73. Mere knowledge of nonpayment on his part is not sufficient. Marshall v. Sonneman [Pa.] 64 A. 874. A notice of protest addressed to a third person and by him delivered to an indorser is insufficient to charge the indorser, though signed by a notary and personally delivered by him to the indorser. Evidence that the notaries who presented two notes protested the same and so certified, and charged for mailing notices thereof, together with evidence of the plaintiff that defendant admitted receiving notice, held to require the reversal of a finding that defendant received no notice though he so testified. Kupferberg v. Horowitz, 102 N. Y. S. 502. Evidence held to show that an indorser had received notice of protest. Fuller Buggy Co. v. Waldron, 112 App. Div. 814, 99 N. Y. S. 561. A notice addressed to an indorser at a place where he did not live and which was not his last known address is insufficient where the indorser did not receive the notice until three months after the protest. Albany Trust Co. v. Forthingham, 50 Misc. 593, 99 N. Y. S. 343. Testimony of a notary that she enclosed notice of protest in an envelope addressed to the indorser and put it in the regular place for outgoing mail, and that a certain person attended to the mailing each day, is insufficient to show that the notice was mailed. Goucher v. Carthage Novelty Co. [Mo. App.] 91 S. W. 447.

79. A new promise to pay when able is not void for indefiniteness. Kraus v. Torry [Ala.] 40 So. 956.

80. An indorser who indorses on the note a waiver of notice of protest eighteen months after maturity with knowledge that no demand for payment has been made or notice of dishonor given becomes liable on the note. Burgettstown Nat. Bank v. Nill, 213 Pa. 456, 63 A. 186.

Note: The indorser may waive protest after the date of maturity of the note with like effect as if done prior to that date. Barclay v. Weaver, 19 Pa. 396, 57 Am. Dec. 661; Hoadley v. acts and declarations calculated to mislead the holder or induce him to forbear taking steps necessary to charge the indorser,[81] but cannot be implied from an equivocal act not communicated to the holder.[82] An indorser who knowing the facts which releases him signs a waiver of demand and protest is not relieved of the consequences of the waiver though ignorant of its legal effect,[83] and, if he asserts that the waiver was procured by fraud, he must allege [84] and prove it.[85]

§ 12. Accommodation paper.[86]—An accommodation party is one who signs an instrument without consideration.[87] As a general rule a corporation has not power to issue accommodation paper.[88] An accommodation party is liable to a holder according to the terms of the instrument though such holder has notice of his status.[89] An accommodation indorser who is required to pay may recover from the parties for whose accommodation he indorsed.[90] An indorser who is sued may

Am. Dec. 661, the court says: "It seems, therefore, that the duty of demand and notice, in order to hold an indorser, is not a part of the contract, but a step in the legal remedy, that may be waived at any time. In some jurisdictions it is held that the waiver, when made after the maturity of the note, must be with full knowledge of the indorser's laches and that it requires a new consideration. But it is settled by numerous American authorities that a waiver of protest need not be supported by a new consideration. Neal v. Wood, 23 Ind. 523; Hughes v. Bowen, 15 Iowa, 446; Creshire v. Taylor, 29 Iowa, 492; Tebbetts v. Dowd, 23 Wend. [N. Y.] 379; Lane v. Steward, 20 Me. 98.—See Burgettstown Nat. Bank v. Nill, 213 Pa. 456, 63 A. 186.

81. Torbert v. Montague [Colo.] 87 P. 1145. An indorser's promise to pay a note after maturity with knowledge of the maker's default and that no notice of dishonor had been given, is waiver of such notice. Brittain v. Murphy, 118 Mo. App. 235, 94 S. W. 303.

82. Where an accommodation indorser indorsed another note for renewal and mailed it to the maker of the first note before maturity, held such indorsement did not amount to a waiver of notice of dishonor of the first note. First Nat. Bank v. Gridley, 112 App. Div. 398, 98 N. Y. S. 445

83. Toole v. Crafts [Mass.] 78 N. E. 775.

84. An indorser who sets up that he was induced to waive notice and protest by fraudulent representations must allege that he was induced to walve by such fraud. Burgettstown Nat. Bank v. Nill, 213 Pa. 456, 63 A. 186.

85. Where an indorser executes a waiver of demand and protest at the instance of the payee's attorney after time for demand had expired, testimony that he did not know that he had been relieved from liability at the time he signed is admissible on the question of fraud in inducing him to execute it. Toole v. Crafts [Mass.] 78 N. E. 775.

86. See 6 C. L. 738.

87. Where a corporation drew drafts upon a firm of which its president was the principal member payable to itself or order and indorsed the same to the firm or to its president to enable the indorsee to raise money by discounting them, held that the drafts were accommodation paper. Cook v. American Tubing & Webbing Co. [R. I.] 65 A. 641. An indorser who signs renewal notes in consideration of the cancellation of the original ones is not an accommodation indorser. Bank of Spartanburg v. Mahon [S. C.] 55 S. E. 529. Negotiable Instruments Law expressly provides that a person signing as maker, without receiving value therefor, for the purpose of giving credit to the payee is an accommodation party. National Bank v. Snyder Mfg. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 478. Where the cashier of a bank acting as agent for another loaned the principal's money and took a note payable to the bank, which the bank indorsed to the principal, such indorsement was accommodation and the principal could not recover from the bank thereon. First Nat. Bank v. Anderson [C. C. A.] 141 F. 926. That the maker of the note deposited the proceeds thereof in the bank did not constitute a consideration for the indorsement. Id. Where an indorsing corporation at the time of the indorsement owned all the stock of the corporation for which it indorsed, such indorsement is not accommodation, and ultra vires, but is a guaranty based on a valuable consideration. In re New York Car Wheel Works, 141 F. 430. In an action on an accommodation note, evidence held insufficient to show that it was specifically secured by a certain mortgage. Eighth Ward Bank v. Ehrlich, 112 App. Div. 883, 97 N. Y. S. 766.

88. A manufacturing corporation held to have no power to issue accommodation paper. Cook v. American Tubing & Webbing Co. [R. I.] 65 A. 641. The fact that accommodation paper is issued by a corporation with the approval of the holders of a majority of the stock does not render it valid against the corporation. Id. A manufacturing corporation cannot bind itself as accommodation party. National Bank v. Snyder Mfg. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 478.

89. He may recover from an accommodation indorser whether or not he knew the nature of this contract. Charleston Sav. Inst. v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 73 S. C. 545, 54 S. E. 216. B. & C. Comp. § 4431 expressly provides that a holder may recover from an accommodation party though he knows the nature of his contract. White v. Savage [Or.] 87 P. 1040.

not prove that the maker paid interest on a renewal in order to show that the holder regarded the maker as the real debtor.[91]

§ 13. The doctrine of bona fides. Who may be a holder.[92]—A bona fide holder is one who takes the paper when it is complete and regular upon its face,[93] before maturity,[94] in the usual course of business,[95] and without notice of any defense thereto between the original parties,[96] and for value.[97] All of these requirements must exist.[98] A receiver [99] or personal representative [1] are not bona fide holders unless the holder himself had such character.

Once bona fide holdership always bona fide holdership,[2] hence a bona fide holder may gratuitously [3] transfer all his rights to one with notice.[4] The right to do so is a vested one.[5]

Notice and knowledge.[6]—Notice in order to destroy one's character as a bona fide holder must be of facts sufficient to impute bad faith.[7] Mere surmise or sus-

6. See 6 C. L. 789.

7. Mere suspicious circumstances are not sufficient to charge a purchaser with notice of defects, but they must be such as impute bad faith. Hutchins v. Langley, 27 App. D. C. 234. Suspicions growing out of the unpopular business or even the ill reputation of the assignor are not sufficient. Id. It is proper to charge that if a holder had notice when he took the notes of facts which made his taking an act of bad faith he could not recover, held proper. Old Nat. Bank v. Marcy [Ark.] 95 S. W. 145. Bad faith is essential. Ward v. City Trust Co., 102 N. Y. S. 50. Evidence insufficient to show bad faith. Id. Bad faith or dishonesty in refraining from making inquiry must be shown. Hibbs v. Brown, 112 App. Div. 214, 98 N. Y. S. 353. He must have taken it under circumstances showing bad faith. Norwood v. Bank of Commerce [Neb.] 109 N. W. 152. Evidence insufficient to show bad faith or want of honesty. Id. It must be knowledge of such facts that his failure to make further inquiry is presumptive evidence of bad faith. First Nat. Bank v. Moore, 148 F. 953.

Not taken in bad faith: That the purchaser of negotiable certificates of a corporation has notice that they were given in payment of stock of another corporation does not charge him with notice that they were given in violation of an anti-trust law and such fact is not defense in the absence of proof of bad faith. National Salt Co. v Ingraham, 143 F. 805. Under Negotiable Instruments Law providing that it must be actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of picion [8] as a general rule,[9] or negligence, is not sufficient.[10] It must be knowledge of such facts as would impeach title between the antecedent parties.[11] Knowledge of such facts as ought to put an ordinarily prudent man on inquiry is insufficient.[12] An indorsee must take notice of facts appearing on the face of the instrument,[13] such facts that the taking amounts to bad faith, where a stockholder and director of a corporation transferred his stock to another knowing that such transfer gave him control of the company, and payment was made by check signed as treasurer of the corporation, he was not charged with notice that the treasurer was misappropriating corporate funds. Fillebrown v. Hayward, 190 Mass. 472, 77 N. E. 45. That the payee of a note executed by a corporation is a director of such corporation does not put an indorsee on inquiry as to whether its execution was authorized. Orr v. South Amboy Terra Cotta Co., 113 App. Div. 103, 98 N. Y. S. 1026. Where a blank form was signed by a stamp bearing a corporation's name, the fact that such stamped name was erased does not charge a taker with notice of such erasure. Nassau Trust Co. v. Matherson, 113 App. Div. 693, 100 N. Y. S. 55. In an action by the holder of certified checks, evidence of his knowledge of the business and affairs of the certifying bank held admissible on the question of his bona fides. Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 593, 108 N. W. 1092. A purchaser is not charged with notice that the note has been renewed and paid because the renewal and payment passed through the bank which purchased it. Spencer Nat. Bank v. Inman Mills, 74 S. C. 76, 53 S. E. 951. Evidence insufficient to show that an indorsee ought to have had notice of infirmities in an instrument. Jamieson v. Heim [Wash.] 86 P. 165.

Evidence insufficient to show bad faith. Clark v. Whitaker, 117 La. 298, 41 So. 580.

When notes were signed by three persons, the second signer being a firm which subsequently became bankrupt, the notes did not show on their face that the firm's contract as principal to pay the face of the notes was to the extent of two-thirds of the amount as surety. Union Nat. Bank v. Neill, 149 F. 711. When notes were signed by three persons, the second being a firm which subsequently became bankrupt, the firm's contract as principal to pay the entire debt is not changed by the fact that other signers made the same promise. Id. Where a note was signed on its face by three persons, the fact that the name of a trading partnership appeared as second signer does not charge a taker with notice that it signed as surety which it was without power to do. Id.

and the fact that a draft is being discounted by the party primarily liable thereon is notice that it is accommodation paper,[14] and notice to the agent is notice to the principal.[15, 16]

Taking in due course of business.[17]—One must acquire the paper in due course of business,[18] and the instrument must be regularly indorsed[19] and the indorsement proven.[20] One holding under a qualified indorsement may be a bona fide holder.[21]

Taking before maturity.[22]—To be a bona fide holder one must take before maturity.[23] One who purchases a note one day after date which is payable one day after date takes before maturity,[24] and one who takes a check five days after it is issued does not take demand paper an unreasonable time after issue under Negotiable Instruments Law providing that one who does so is not a bona fide holder;[25] but where a note provides that delinquency in payment of interest shall mature the entire note, one who takes it after such delinquency is not a bona fide holder.[26]

Parting with value.[27]—The instrument must be taken for value,[28] but full value need not be paid.[29] One who takes as collateral security for an antecedent debt[30]

14. Cook v. American Tubing & Webbing Co. [R. I.] 65 A. 641. Where a draft drawn by a corporation upon a firm of which its president and principal stockholder was the main member payable to its own order, and indorsed to the president, who discounted the same, knowledge of the general relation between the various parties to the draft and special notice that it was being discounted for the benefit of the acceptor held to give notice that the paper was accommodation paper. 28. Affidavit of defense stating that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder, but that the note was transferred to him solely for the purpose of having action brought in his name, and that the note was procured by fraud, states a defense. First Nat. Bank v. Gebbie & Co., 145 F. 448.

An indorsee for collection is not a bona fide holder. Bank of America v. Waydell [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 857.

29. One who purchases a $1500 note for $1000 is a bona fide holder. Lassas v. McCarty, 47 Or. 474, 84 P. 76.

30. Wilkins v. Usher, 29 Ky. L. R. 1232, 97 S. W. 37. Where an indorsee takes paper for security, and also holds other paper, the question whether there is a consideration for the indorsement is for the jury.

or in discharge of a pre-existing debt takes for value,[31] but such debt must be discharged.[32] A trustee in a deed of trust of all the property of a person holding negotiable paper is a bona fide holder under Negotiable Instruments Law.[33] A bank discounting paper for a depositor is not a bona fide holder so long as the deposit is not withdrawn,[34] but is thereafter, or if the depositor is indebted to the bank in an amount equal to the face of the note at the time it is discounted.[35]

Rights of a bona fide holder.[36]—A bona fide holder takes free from defenses available to the original parties,[37] but he cannot get a contract where none was made.[38] As to him, failure[39] or invalidity of consideration,[40] payment,[41] usury,[42]

Mercantile Guaranty Co. v. Hilton, 191 Mass. 141, 77 N. E. 312.

A pledgee is a bona fide holder so far as the instrument is essential to carry out the terms of the pledge. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Johnston, 117 La. 880, 42 So. 357.

31. Rowe v. Gohlman [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 40, 539, 98 S. W. 1077. Negotiable Instruments Law expressly provides that an antecedent debt constitutes value. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Summers [N. C.] 55 S. E. 522. One who takes a note in payment of a debt is a holder for value. Ward v. City Trust Co., 102 N. Y. S. 50.

32. Under the rule that an antecedent debt constitutes value where one took an instrument and gave his indorser credit therefor which credit was conditional on its being paid, he was not a taker for value. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Citizens' State Bank [Iowa] 109 N. W. 198.

33. Trustees of American Bank v. McComb, 105 Va. 473, 54 S. E. 14.

34. City Deposit Bank v. Green, 130 Iowa, 384, 106 N. W. 942. It is not taken for value when the amount of the consideration was placed to the credit of the indorser subject to his order. Hodge v. Smith [Wis.] 110 N. W. 192. A bank taking a check on deposit is not necessarily a bona fide holder since, if the check is dishonored, it may recover from the depositor. Fayette Nat. Bank v. Summers, 105 Va. 689, 54 S. E. 862.

35. City Deposit Bank v. Green, 130 Iowa, 384, 106 N. W. 942. Where a note is taken and the consideration placed to the credit of the indorser on the books of the indorsee subject to his order, the indorsee has the burden to show that such constituted payment. Hodge v. Smith [Wis.] 110 N. W. 192.

36. See 6 C. L. 791.

37. The transferee of commercial paper of a corporation acquires its title and right to transfer. Ward v. City Trust Co., 102 N. Y. S. 50. An agreement in writing made at the time of execution of the note that it should not draw interest is no defense against a bona fide holder. Hunter v. Johnson, 119 Mo. App. 487, 94 S. W. 311. That they were executed on Sunday is no defense. Myers v. Kessler [C. C. A.] 142 F. 730. A maker cannot avoid payment on the ground that the note was made on Sunday. Hale v. Harris, 28 Ky. L. R. 1172, 91 S. W. 660. That the indorsee of a note secured by a mortgage procured the purchaser of the mortgaged premises to buy the note for him is no defense to an action against the maker. The only defense in such case is payment by the maker or the purchase of the premises. Neely v. Black [Ark.] 96 S. W. 984. The title of the bona fide holder of coupon mortgage bonds issued by a corporation and payable to bearer, which are taken before maturity, is like title to commercial paper, good as against all secret equities claimed by the corporation or third parties. Lembeck v. Jarvis Terminal Cold Storage Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 126. One claimed that there was an agreement between her and a corporation that she should have seven bonds of a proposed issue of mortgage bonds. The bonds were never delivered or set apart for her but the entire issue came into the hands of bona fide holders. Held the title of the holders was complete. Id. That an acceptance was without consideration is no defense. Breyfogle v. Addison, 120 Ill. App. 520.

38. Max Simons & Co. v. McDowell, 125 Ga. 203, 53 S. E. 1031. As where the instrument is materially altered after execution. Where an instrument in the form of a promissory note is altered so as to make it a bill of exchange. Id. Under Negotiable Instruments Law an alteration by adding "Payable with interest" in a blank space does not show on its face that the instrument was altered, the extra phrase being in the same handwriting as the original instrument. It is complete and regular. Trustees of American Bank v. McComb, 105 Va. 473, 54 S. E. 14. Where an instrument is executed in blank and shows on its face that such blanks must be filled in, the filling in by the payee of such blank is not such an alteration as will invalidate it in the hands of a bona fide holder. Place of payment filled in Bowen v. Laird [Ind.] 77 N. E. 852.

39. Where a drawee pays the face of the draft to a holder in due course, he cannot recover when it appears that the goods for which the draft was drawn were never sent. Waddell v. Hanover Nat. Bank, 48 Misc. 578, 97 N. Y. S. 305. Failure of consideration is no defense. Empire Trust Co. v Magee, 102 N. Y. S. 9. Want of consideration is no defense. Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Roberts, 125 Ga. 41, 53 S. E. 808 Want or failure of consideration is no defense. Summerford v. Davenport, 126 Ga. 153, 54 S. E. 1025

40. That the consideration is a gambling debt is a defense under Negotiable Instruments Law, such notes having been declared void. Alexander & Co. v. Hazelrigg, 29 Ky. L. R. 1212, 97 S. W. 353. That the consideration was a gambling debt is no defense. Myers v. Kessler [C. C. A.] 142 F. 730. That the consideration is illegal and immoral is no defense in the absence of statute declaring such instruments to be void. Henry v. State Bank of Laurens [Iowa] 107 N. W. 1034.

41. Payment of note to original payee after assignment is no defense to an action by the assignee who received the note be-that the instrument was executed without power,[43] obtained by theft,[44] or fraud,[45] is no defense; but that one was induced to sign a negotiable instrument when he intended to sign something else,[46] or that the instrument is absolutely void,[47] or is a forgery,[48, 49] is a defense. Where one is not a bona fide holder, all equitable defenses may be set up.[50]

Burden of proof.[51]—The holding of one in possession of paper regularly indorsed is presumed to be bona fide,[52] and one who asserts that he is not has the burden of proof;[53] but where it is shown that the instrument is accommodation fore maturity. Gemkow v. Link [Ill.] 80 N. E. 47 While payment of a note secured by trust deed in good faith to the original payee and mortgagee after assignment generally releases the lien, it does not do so where the mortgagor expressly recognizes it thereafter by entering into extension agreements. Id. It is no defense against a bona fide holder that payments have been made on the note. Hunter v. Johnson, 119 Mo. App. 487, 94 S. W. 511. Payment by the maker to the payee after he had transferred the instrument is no defense. Staff v First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 1089.

42. The defense of usury is not available. Wood v. Babbitt, 149 F. 818 That it is usurious is no defense. Ferguson v. Bien, 101 N. Y. S. 100.

43. One who is a joint maker with a corporation which has not power to execute a note is liable to a bona fide holder though the corporation is not. Scott v. Bankers' Union [Kan.] 85 P. 604. A member of a trading partnership has no implied power to bind the firm by an accommodation indorsement, but the firm is liable on such indorsement in the hands of a bona fide holder. Union Nat. Bank v. Neill [C. C. A.]149 F. 711.

44. A bona fide holder of a note may recover thereon though it was obtained by theft from the maker. Arons v. Ziegfeld, 102 N. Y. S. 898.

45. A bona fide holder of a note procured from the maker by fraud may recover the face of the instrument and is not limited to what he paid for it. Lassas v. McCarty, 47 Or. 474, 84 P. 76. Though the payee of a draft induced its issue by impersonating another and forging such other's name to a draft given for it, a bona fide taker may recover. Jamieson & McFarland v. Heim [Wash.] 86 P. 165. Fraud is no defense Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Roberts, 125 Ga. 41, 53 S. E. 808. The drawer of a check cannot countermand it for fraud after it has passed into the hands of a bona fide holder. Loan & Sav. Bank v Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 74 S. C. 210, 54 S. E. 364.

46. Where one is induced to sign a negotiable instrument under the belief that he is signing something else, and is not negligent, such defense is avoidable against a bona fide holder. Hulett v. Marine Sav. Bank, 143 Mich. 219, 12 Det. Leg. N. 958, 106 N. W. 879.

47. Notes given for fertilizer not tagged as required by law are void even in the hands of a bona fide holder. Alabama Nat. Bank v. Parker & Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 987. Burden of proving that the bags were not tagged is on the defendant. Id. Where several notes are given for independent deliveries of fertilizer, a showing that one sack was not tagged would not defeat recovery on all the notes. Id. That the instrument was executed by a corporation which had no power to execute it is a defense. Scott v. Bankers' Union [Kan.] 85 P. 604.

48, 49. The drawee of a forged check who has paid the same may recover the amount from the party who received it, though he was a bona fide holder, if he was not misled by the drawee's failure to detect the forgery. First Nat. Bank v. Bank of Wyndmere [N. D.] 108 N W. 546.

50. That the note was given as the purchase price of a horse with a guaranty the breach of which was a defense. Carey v. Nissle [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 490, 108 N. W. 733. Plea alleging that a holder held it as security, that a bank which had agreed to collect was negligent in making presentment and setting up an equitable defense, is not demurrable. Hibernia Bank & Trust Co. v. Smith [Miss.] 42 So. 345.

51. See 6 C. L. 593.

52. An indorsee is presumed to be a bona fide holder Hodge v. Smith [Wis.] 110 N. W. 192. The holder of an instrument regularly indorsed is presumed a bona fide holder. Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Roberts, 125 Ga. 41, 53 S. E. 808. One who asserts that he is not has the burden of proving it. Evans v Freeman, 142 N. C. 61, 54 S. E. 847. The holder of a note payable to bearer and properly indorsed is prima facie entitled to recover and may introduce the note without proof of ownership. Hibernia Bank & Trust Co. v. Smith [Miss.] 42 So. 345. This is the rule under Negotiable Instruments Law where one takes as security for an antecedent debt a note wherein the maker was deceived as to the purpose for which it was given. Wilkins v. Usher, 29 Ky L. R. 1232, 97 S. W. 37. One holding a note indorsed in blank is presumed the owner. Myrick Bros. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 143. Possession of paper regularly indorsed is prima facie evidence of title. Adams v. Connelly, 118 Ill App. 441.

53. One attacking bona fide holdership has the burden of showing knowledge of facts concerning defects in the paper as to impute bad faith. Hutchins v. Langley, 27 App. D. C. 234. A statute imposing on defendant, in an action by a transferee where the defendant pleads that such transferee is not a bona fide holder, the burden of proving fraud, and notice of it is not unconstitutional. Johnson County Sav Bank v. Walker [Conn.] 65 A. 132. The maker has the burden to show that an indorsee had actual knowledge of the defense set up, or such knowledge that his taking amounted to bad faith. Old Nat. Bank v. Marcy [Ark.] 95 S. W. 145. Where a bank which discounted a note for a depositor sues thereon and the defense of fraud interposed by the maker is not submitted, the maker has the burden to paper which the accommodating party had not power to execute,[54] or that the instrument was procured by fraud,[55] is based upon an illegal consideration,[56] or it appears that the title of any one who negotiated the paper was defective,[57] or it is shown that the paper was taken as security,[58] the indorsee must prove the bona fides of his holding.[59]

§ 14. Remedies and procedure.[60]—Equity will enjoin the transfer of a negotiable instrument where the complainant maker has a good defense against the defendant payee which would not be available against a bona fide holder.[61] When notes were endorsed to one in settlement of an account, it was proper to bring an action against the transferror on his indorsement instead of upon the account.[62] An action may be maintained on the original obligation instead of on the instrument.[63] A payee may sue any time after maturity in the absence of an extension agreement,[64] but the action must be commenced within the limitation period.[65] A cause of action on a note against an administrator in his representative capacity cannot be joined with a suit in equity to enforce a claim against him individually on the theory of trust or estoppel.[66] Indorsement of payment of interest upon a show that the bank is not a bona fide holder. City Deposit Bank v. Green, 130 Iowa, 384, 106 N. W. 942. The defendant has the burden to prove that an indorsee in due course is not a bona fide holder. First Nat. Bank v. Moore [C. C. A.] 148 F 953.

54. National Bank v. Snyder Mfg. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 478

55. Stouffer v. Fletcher [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 790, 109 N. W 684. Under Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1898-1899, p. 234, c. 674), § 67, the prima facie validity of the holder's title to negotiable paper ceases when the fraudulent character is shown, and the burden is upon the holder to exonerate himself from complicity in the fraud. Cook v. American Tubing & Webbing Co. [R. I.] 65 A 641. The purchaser of a fraudulently certified check has the burden to show that he is a bona fide holder in an action against the receiver of a bank. Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 593, 108 N. W. 1092. In an action by an indorsee against the maker where fraud is set up as a defense, the plaintiff has the burden to show that he is a bona fide holder. Lahrman v. Bauman [Neb.] 107 N. W. 1008. Where fraud in the inception of an instrument is alleged and proved, the holder has the burden of proving the bona fides of his holding. Tamlyn v. Peterson [N. D.] 107 N W. 1081.

56. In an action upon a negotiable note, proof of an illegal consideration makes a prima facie case of notice to the holder, and the burden of proving bona fide holdership is on him. Union Collection Co. v. Buckman [Cal.] 88 P. 708.

57. Negotiable Instruments Law expressly provides that where it appears that title to any one who has negotiated the paper is defective, the holder has the burden to show that he is a bona fide holder. Singer Mfg. Co. v Summers [N. C.] 55 S. E. 522. If it appears that the title of any person who negotiated the instrument was defective, the holder has the burden of showing the bona fides of his holding. Hodge v. Smith [Wis.] 110 N. W. 192. Where it is shown that the title of an intermediate holder was defective, proof that full consideration was paid prima facie establishes that it was taken in due course. Id.

58. An indorsee for security has the burden to show that he is a holder for value. Mercantile Guaranty Co. v. Hilton, 191 Mass. 141, 77 N. E. 312.

59. Evidence insufficient to show that an indorsee in due course was not a bona fide holder. First Nat. Bank v. Moore [C. C. A.] 148 F. 953 Evidence sufficient to show one a bona fide holder. Bradwell v. Pryor, 221 Ill. 602, 77, N. E. 1115. In an action by a bona fide holder where the defense of fraud is set up, evidence of similar fraud by the agent of the payee about the same time is inadmissible. Hunt v. Van Burg [Neb.] 106 N. W. 329 Where it is shown that the instrument is without consideration, a holder must show the circumstance under which it came into his possession, and that he is a bona fide holder. Tischler v. Shurman, 49 Misc. 257, 97 N. Y. S. 360. Evidence insufficient to show one to be a bona fide holder. Id. Whether one was a bona fide holder held a question for the jury Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 593, 108 N. W. 1092.

63. Where a creditor took a renewal note which was not signed by the maker of the original, in an action on such note on the common counts, the creditor can recover on the original debt Councilman v. Towson Nat. Bank, 103 Md. 469, 64 A. 358.

64. Caskey v. Douglas [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W 562. Evidence insufficient to show an agreement for an extension for any definite period. Id.

65. Failure of the holder of a bank draft to present it to the drawee within five years bars an action by him against the drawer, Wrigley v. Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank [Neb.] 108 N. W. 132. The obligation of one who overdraws by check is one based upon an instrument in writing within the statute of limitations. Du Brutz v. Bank of Visalia [Cal App.] 87 P. 467.

66. Tyler v. Stitt, 127 Wis. 379, 106 N. W. 114.

promissory note by one having an interest therein,[67] if proved to have been made before the bar of limitations has attached,[68] is sufficient evidence of payment to toll the statute.[69]

Parties.[70]—As a general rule an action on an instrument may be brought by the real party in interest,[71] but a holder who has no beneficial interest may sue,[72] and a pledgee may sue in his own name and as owner.[73] Where sureties are independently liable for a specified portion all are proper but not necessary parties to a suit against one.[74] Under a statute providing that, where an instrument is not assigned in writing, the assignor shall be made a party to answer as to the assignment where a note was by mistake made payable to the wrong person who indorsed it without recourse, he was not an assignor within such statute.[75] A transferror who made false representations at the time of the transfer is properly made a party.[76]

Pleading. The complaint.[77]—The instrument may be pleaded according to its legal effect,[78] or by copy.[79] If pleaded according to its legal effect, execution must

70. See 6 C. L. 793.

71. Under the rule that an action may be maintained by the real party in interest, where by mistake a note is made payable to an officer of a bank, the bank may sue, though it is also provided that one in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another may sue without joining the beneficial party. Best v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank [Colo.] 85 P 1124. Where executors by written assignment transferred a note, the transferee could maintain action as the real party in interest, though the estate was still interested in the note. Huck v. Kraus, 50 Misc. 528, 99 N. Y. S. 490. An executor who takes a note payable to himself in his representative capacity may maintain action thereon in his individual capacity after he has settled with the distributees and devisees. Layne v. Power, 29 Ky. L. R 494, 92 S. W. 945. A transferee who has taken a note in the usual course of trade for value may sue the maker without proof of indorsement. First Nat. Bank v. Sprout [Neb.] 110 N. W 713. Where a draft was described in a complaint thereon as payable to a bank but showed on its face to be payable to "P. Cashier," the bank on showing that "P." was its cashier could sue thereon in its own name. State Bank v. American Hardwood Lumber Co. [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 786

72. Fay v. Hunt, 190 Mass. 378, 77 N. E. 502. The payee and holder of the legal title to a promissory note may sue thereon even though a third person may be entitled to the proceeds. Therefore evidence tending to show that a bank had an interest therein was properly excluded from the jury Stanley v. Penny [Kan.] 88 P. 875. A holder of a note who has no beneficial interest therein may sue thereon with the assent of the real owner to whom he is accountable for the proceeds. Jump v. Leon [Mass.] 78 N. E. 532.

73. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Johnston, 117 La. 880, 42 So. 357. Under Code Civ. Proc. 367, and Civ. Code 3006, a pledgor may maintain action, but the pledgee is a necessary party. Graham v. Light [Cal. App.] 88 P. 373. But not if he has retransferred the note before action brought. Id.

74. Where members of a corporation become sureties on a corporation note in the proportion that their individual stock bore to the whole, the undertaking of each was independent of the other, and in a suit against one, the others are proper but not necessary parties. Bolton v. Gifford & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 210.

75. Digan v. Mandel [Ind.] 79 N. E. 899.

76. One who transfers a note and falsely represents that it has not been paid is properly made a party in an action thereon. Harris v. Cain [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 327, 91 S. W. 866. The purchaser may sue the maker and one guilty of fraud in transferring it in the same action. Id.

77. See 6 C. L. 793.

78. Santa Rosa Bank v. Paxton [Cal.] 86 P. 193. A complaint alleging that the note was executed on a certain date and fell due on a certain date, a copy of which was attached and read "On September 20, we promise to pay," is good against demurrer though the year of maturity was left out. Helm & Son v. Briley [Okl.] 87 P 595. A complaint against Nancy S. as principal and Joseph S. as surety, not showing that the parties were married, is good when assailed for the first time on appeal on the ground that they are husband and wife, and that it did not appear that a married woman had power to make such contract. Scott v. Collier [Ind.] 78 N. E. 184.

79. Santa Rosa Bank v. Paxton [Cal.] 86 P. 193. Complaint setting out the instruments sued on held sufficient. Didato v. Coniglio, 50 Misc. 280, 100 N. Y. S. 466. Under Code Pub. Loc Laws. art. 3, § 18f, providing for judgment by default in an action on a note where the same is filed by plaintiff, filing a copy is not sufficient. Councilman v. Towson Nat. Bank, 103 Md. 469, 64 A. 358. Under Code Pub. Loc Laws art. 3, providing for a default judgment in an action on note where plaintiff files the note and defendant fails to file a sufficient plea, etc., when the note is filed, and also the declaration contains the common counts, and defendant appears, plaintiff may recover on any evidence admissible under the plead-be alleged,[80] and if executed by an agent, his authority must appear.[81] It need not be alleged that plaintiff was the owner at the commencement of the action.[82] The consideration need not be alleged,[83] but waiver of presentment, demand and notice must be,[84] though the pleadings may be amended to conform to proof in respect thereto.[85] Statutory requirements must be complied with.[86] A complaint against the drawee of a check must allege that he had funds of the drawee on deposit.[87] If attorney's fees are claimed, facts warranting the recovery thereof should be alleged.[88]

The answer.[89]—The grounds of defense should be plainly stated.[90] The defense that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder must be alleged[91] by pleading facts,[92] but need not be verified.[93] A general denial puts in issue only the allegations of ings and is not limited to recovery on the note. Id

80. Execution is sufficiently alleged by an allegation that defendants by their note promised to pay plaintiff. Scott v. Bales, 29 Ky. L. R. 776, 96 S. W. 528. A complaint alleging that one made, signed, and delivered a note, states a cause of action and authorizes evidence that he did so through an attorney in fact. Santa Rosa Bank v. Paxton [Cal.] 86 P. 193. An allegation that a note was "by indorsement transferred and assigned" imports delivery. Hibernia Bank & Trust Co. v. Smith [Miss.] 42 So. 345.

81. Complaint on a note executed by an attorney in fact setting out the power held sufficient. Santa Rosa Bank v. Paxton [Cal.] 86 P. 193.

82 That plaintiff was owner and holder of the note at the commencement of the action need not be alleged. Graham v. Light [Cal. App.] 88 P. 373.

83. A complaint on a note given in consideration of goods purchased need not allege the contract of sale and compliance with its conditions. McGue v. Rommel, 148 Cal. 539, 83 P. 1000.

84. Galbraith v. Shepard [Wash.] 86 P. 113.

85. A complaint in an action against the drawer of a check which fails to allege notice of dishonor may be amended to correspond to prove that the drawer stopped payment thereby excusing notice under Negotiable Instrument Law (Laws 1897, pp. 739, 742, c. 612, §§ 160, 185). Scanion v. Wallach, 102 N. Y. S 1090.

86. Under the rule that action must be brought on a note payable at bank in the name of the holder of the legal title, a complaint alleging that the note and the property of plaintiff is insufficient where it does not show that he has legal title to it. Young v Woodliff-Dunlap Furniture Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 656.

87. Hall v. First Nat. Bank, 120 Ill. App. 441.

88. Where in an action upon a note providing for ten per cent. attorney's fees, if the note is placed in the hands of an attorney for collection, the complaint must allege that the plaintiff has paid or contracted to pay such sum or that it is a reasonable sum for attorney's fees. Bolton v. Gifford & Co. [Tex Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 210. Where a note provides for attorney's fees in case it is placed in the hands of an attorney for collection, an allegation that it was so placed is essential to a recovery of such fees. Le Tulle Mercantile Co. v. Rugeley [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 276, 98 S. W. 438.

89. See 6 C. L. 794.

90. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 500, requiring an answer to state any new matter of defense in ordinary and concise language, and allegation that after maturity and payment, the note was delivered to plaintiff by his indorser for no value, is too vague as to payment. Ludlow v. Woodward, 102 N. Y. S. 647. Pleas setting up want of and failure of consideration, fraud, and set-off, held demurrable. Noble v. Anniston Nat. Bank [Ala.] 41 So. 136. Where owners of stock deposited by a corporation as security for a note paid the note and sued on it, an answer setting up that the payee had demanded additional security and that plaintiff had converted the stock does not state a defense where it does not appear that defendant had been damaged or that the stock had any value. Wills v. James Rowland & Co., 102 N. Y. S. 386. Affidavit of defense in an action on a note that part of the consideration was a claim against a third person which was to be assigned on request, but that it had not been assigned, and that the note was not to become due until it was assigned is insufficient. It should set out the value of the claim, and request for assignment. Bordentown Banking Co. v. Restein, 214 Pa. 331, 63 A. 751. Where it is sought to recover money paid to one on a check to which the name of the payee had been forged, delay in notifying defendant of the forgery is a matter of defense. United States v. National Bank of Republic, 141 F. 208.

91. One sued on a note must in order to avail himself of the defense that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder plead such fact. Koppel v. Hatch, 50 Misc. 626, 98 N. Y S. 619. The bringing of an action by an indorsee does not charge the maker with notice that the plaintiff is a bona fide holder so as to render demurrable an answer denying for lack of information allegations that he is. Alexander & Co. v. Hazelrigg, 29 Ky. L. R. 1212, 97 S. W. 353.

92. Under Code Civ. Proc § 500, requiring an answer to contain a statement of any new matter constituting a defense in ordinary and concise language, allegations that "plaintiff was not a bona fide holder" of the note and was "maintaining the action for the benefit of the original payee." are mere conclusive and insufficient. Ludlow v. Woodward, 102 N. Y. S. 647. An allegation that at the "time of receiving the bonds," the pledgees "had knowledge of facts from which they knew or should have known" that the pledgor was not the rightful owner held insufficient as being mere conclusions. Lawyers' Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Jones, 113 App. Div. 105, 98 N. Y. S. 871.

93. A maker who claims that an in-the complaint.[94] If execution is denied, the fact should be clearly alleged.[95] The plea of non est factum must be verified.[96] If a counterclaim or setoff is asserted,[97] facts warranting recovery thereof should be alleged.[98, 99]

Evidence. Presumptions and burden of proof.[1]—In an action on a negotiable instrument, the parol evidence rule applies.[2] The evidence introduced should not be at variance with the pleadings.[3] A note in the hands of the payee is presumptively a subsisting obligation,[4] but such presumption is not conclusive.[5] One who proves himself the owner and holder of notes proves due execution and delivery, and nonpayment establishes a prima facie case.[6] Where one sues on a note payable dorsee took the paper under such circumstances as charged him with equities in the endorser's behalf need not plead such matter under oath. Mayfield Grocer Co. v. Price & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 650, 95 S. W. 31.

94. Where it is not alleged that plaintiff was owner of the note at the commencement of the action, a general denial only puts in issue the allegation of non-payment. Graham v. Light [Cal. App.] 88 P. 373. Want or failure of consideration may be shown under a general denial. Clark v. Holway, 101 Me. 391, 64 A. 642.

95. An answer denying execution and non-payment for want of information and belief and setting up want of consideration is insufficient to raise the issue of execution and non-payment as an entirety. Greene v. Osceola Gold Mines Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 733.

96. In an action by an indorsee of a check against the drawer, an answer alleging that the holder held under an indorsement of an agent of the payer who had no authority to indorse, and that the amount of the check had been paid, is not a plea of non est factum and need not be verified. Hamilton Nat. Bank v. Nye [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 295.

97 Under a statute authorizing a defendant to set up as many defenses or counter-claims as he may have, he may set up a counterclaim for damages for fraud in which he was induced to execute the note. Clark Co. v. Rice, 127 Wis. 451, 106 N. W. 231. An answer alleging that defendant at the special instance of plaintiff, and for his exclusive use made himself liable for an attorney's fee, for plaintiff, sets up a counterclaim. Ruzeoski v. Wilrodt [Tex. Civ App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 783, 94 S. W. 142.

98, 99. Where defendant pleads a setoff but did not allege that the plaintiff agreed to allow the amount as a credit, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the face of the note with attorney's fees provided for. Ruzeoski v. Wilrodt [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 783, 94 S. W 142.

1. See 6 C. L. 794.

2. A joint and several note cannot be varied by parol evidence to show that it created a several liability only. City Deposit Bank v. Green, 130 Iowa, 384, 106 N. W. 942. The binding obligation of a note cannot be varied by parol evidence of an agreement that it need not be paid. Payne v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F 339. Where there is no verified plea impeaching the consideration, evidence that the note was given for a greater amount than was owed was inadmissible as proving failure of consideration. Walker v. Tomlinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 157, 98 S. W. 906. While, as a general rule, parol evidence is inadmissible to charge an undisclosed principal of a negotiable note signed by the agent personally, though the word "agent" is added to the signature (Burkhalter v. Perry [Ga.] 56 S. E. 631), it is admissible as between the immediate parties to show that it was intended to bind the principal (Id.). In an action by the payee upon a note signed by an agent personally with the word "agent" after his signature, a complaint alleging that he had authority to bind defendant, his principal, that the consideration was goods sold to defendant and that it was intended to bind defendant, states a cause of action against defendant. Burkhalter v. Perry & Brown [Ga.] 56 S. E 631.

3. Where the only defense to a suit on a promissory note is an unlawful alteration thereof, evidence relating to the sufficiency of consideration is inadmissible. Colonial Trust Co. v. Getz, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 619. Under a statute authorizing a plea of special matter to be annexed to the general issue an allegation of fraud as special matter does not authorize the court to consider representations not amounting to fraud as warranties. Crosby v. Emerson, 142 F 713. Specific title alleged must be proved as laid. Digan v. Mandel [Ind.] 79 N. E. 899. It is error to receive a note in evidence which varies materially with the note described in the complaint, execution of which is admitted by the answer. Viets v. Silver [N. D.] 106 N W. 35. Where it is alleged that a note was given for a certain consideration and the instrument recites such fact, no other can be proven. Ditto v. Slaughter, 28 Ky. L. R. 1164, 92 S. W. 2. It may be shown under an oral plea of nil debit in a justice court that the defendant did not owe the debt. Dawson v Owen [Ark.] 93 S. W. 567. Or that it had been paid by deeding land to plaintiff. Id.

4. Bush v. Brandecker [Mo. App.] 100 S. W 48. The introduction of a promissory note is prima facie evidence that the payor is indebted to the payee for the amount specified therein. Eldridge v. Kay, 124 Ill. App. 136. The introduction of a promissory note makes a prima facie case. Harter v. Morris, 124 Ill. App. 377.

5. Maker may show payment. Bush v. Brandecker [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 48.

6. Exchange Bank v. Veirs [Cal. App.] 84 P. 455. Where testimony showed that a lost note named plaintiff as payee, that it was delivered and remained in her possession until it was lost, and there was no evidence that she ever parted with it, it was proper to authorize the jury to find that it was her property at the time it was lost. Jenkins v. Emmons, 117 Mo. App. 1, 94 S. W. 812. It is proper to authorize the jury to find that a lost note bore the rate of interest to a third person, it is incumbent on him to allege and show his title or right to sue.[7] If want of consideration is alleged, the payee has the burden to prove it.[8] It is presumed that an instrument was delivered before maturity,[9] and that conditions precedent to liability have been performed.[10] There is no presumption that the laws of a sister state are similar to a statute of the state of the forum abolishing grace.[11] Negotiable Instruments Law expressly provides that, where an instrument or any signature thereto has been cancelled, the party alleging that the cancellation was unintentional or made by mistake or without authority has the burden to prove it.[12] On an issue as to how much interest had been paid, convincing evidence is essential to establish that a greater rate than was called for was paid.[13] Where execution is denied, it must be proved before the instrument can be introduced,[14] and, if admitted, constitutes no proof of the fact.[15] Otherwise, if it is not denied,[16] and where a negotiable instrument "clearly shows upon its face" that it has been altered in a material part, it is not admissible to establish the obligation in the absence of explanatory evidence,[17] but, where the matter of alteration is a matter of doubt, it may be admitted in evidence so that the jury may pass up such preliminary question.[18] which a witness who had read the note testified that it bore. Id. Where, in an action on a note given by husband and wife, the husband testified that his wife signed it and she testified that she did not, it was proper to show the circumstances under which the note was executed. Councilman v. Towson Nat Bank, 103 Md. 469, 64 A. 358. The introduction of the instrument establishes a prima facie case. Holmes v. Horn, 120 Ill. App. 359.

7. Digan v. Mandel [Ind.] 79 N. E. 899. Where a note is executed for services rendered, there can be no recovery for such services without production of the note or accounting for its non-production Dawdy v. Dawdy's Estate, 118 Mo. App. 336, 94 S. W. 767.

8. Where in an action by the payee it is disputed whether or not the instrument is accommodation paper, the payee has the burden of proving consideration. Best v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank [Colo.] 85 P. 1124 In an action on a note, where defendant sets up the defense that his signature was without consideration, being merely for the accommodation of plaintiff, the burden is on plaintiff to prove consideration. Lombard v. Bryne [Mass.] 80 N. E. 489.

9. It is presumed that a note signed by the maker was delivered before maturity. Exchange Bank v. Veirs [Cal. App.] 84 P. 455.

10. Under the rule that presentment for payment is not necessary to charge one primarily liable, but if payable at a specified place and the maker is able and willing to pay, such is equivalent to a tender, failure to present for payment at such place is a matter of defense and the plaintiff need not prove presentment before action brought. Florence Oil & Refining Co. v. First Nat. Bank [Colo.] 88 P. 182

11. The presumption is that the common law prevails. Demelman v. Brazier [Mass.] 79 N. E. 812. In an action against an indorser on a note made in another state, the laws of which are provable by parol under the Negotiable Instrument Act, and the plaintiff testified without objection that the note was presentable, and payable on the date of protest, whether presentment on such date was sufficient to bind the indorser was for the jury. Id.

13. Henderson v. Lightner, 29 Ky. L. R. 301, 92 S. W. 945.

14. Where a corporation pleaded non est factum to a suit on a note signed by its vice president, the note was not admissible in evidence without proof of the officer's authority to sign it. Dreeben v. First Nat. Bank [Tex.] 99 S. W. 850. Where execution of a note has been denied by the plea of non est factum, the note is not admissible until some extrinsic evidence of its execution has been submitted. Patton v. Bank of LaFayette, 124 Ga 965, 53 S. E. 664. Where an issue of negotiability and ownership was raised and the plea of non est factum interposed, the instrument is not admissible until execution and title is proven. Peevey v. Tapley [Ala.] 42 So. 561. A note not signed by the signature of the maker and not attested but which merely purports to be signed by his mark does not prove itself as against the plea of non est factum. Clark v. Clark, 28 Ky. L. R. 1069, 91 S. W 284. Where one sued the estate of a decedent on a note claimed to have been destroyed, evidence held insufficient to show that the note was ever executed. Haines v. Goodiander [Kan.] 84 P. 986. It was admissible in such action to show that the alleged payer was financially embarrassed at the time the alleged note was made, and that he could not have made the loan. Id.

15. Dreeben v. First Nat. Bank [Tex.] 99 S. W. 850.

16. The execution and acceptance of drafts is established under the statute of Texas when they are introduced in evidence, in the absence of a denial under oath. Ellis v. Marshall Car Wheel & Foundry Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 719, 95 S. W. 689. Under Code 1896, § 1801, the instrument is admissible unless execution is denied by verified plea. Gates v. Morton Hardware Co [Ala.] 40 So. 509.

17. Colonial Trust Co. v. Getz, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 619.

18. Colonial Trust Co. v. Getz, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 619. Jury should be instructed

Instructions should not submit issues not raised,[19] and should not assume controverted facts [20] nor be misleading.[21]

The judgment should conform to the prayer for relief,[22] but all relief demanded may be granted.[23] A judgment against one of several joint makers is not binding against others not made parties.[24] A judgment for interest against one of several joint and several makers is not a bar to an action on the note against all the makers.[25] The rule of Negotiable Instruments Law permitting the joinder of persons severally liable does not change the rule that a verdict erroneous as to one defendant is erroneous at to all.[26]

Indemnifying maker of lost instrument.[27]—Where the instrument sued upon is not produced, the court in rendering judgment thereon should protect the judgment debtor,[28] unless it appears that it was destroyed.[29]

NEWSPAPERS.

This topic treats only of the designation and compensation of official newspapers; the necessity and sufficiency of publication of process [30] and other legal notices [31] being excluded, as are advertising contracts [32] and liability for improper publication.[33]

The designation of an official newspaper is largely regulated by statute, and hence must be made by the proper person or board [34] in the prescribed manner,[35] that if they find that there was such an alteration, the instrument is void as against an indorser unless they further find that the alteration was made prior to the indorsement or with the indorser's consent if made thereafter. Id.

19. The question of the execution of the instrument should not be submitted where there is no plea of non est factum. Walker v. Tomlinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 157, 98 S. W. 906.

20. An instruction that, if the drawer of a check promised to pay if the bank failed to do so on presentation, he was liable where the bank was unable to pay the entire amount, assumes that he waived failure to present within a reasonable time. Burns v. Yocum [Ark.] 98 S. W. 956. Where, on presentation of a check, the payer accepted a deposit slip instead of demanding cash, it was error to assume that the check was not paid because the deposit slip was not placed to the credit of the payee Id.

21. In an action on a note alleged to be due and unpaid, it is not error to charge that if the defendant does not overcome the allegations of the petition, plaintiff would be entitled to recover instead of that plaintiff would be entitled to recover unless defendant proved his plea of payment. Scott v. Brown [Ga.] 56 S. E. 130.

22. In a suit on a note purporting to be secured by a mortgage where it is alleged that plaintiff reserves his mortgage rights but does not pray that they be reserved, a decree that they be reserved is not authorized by a prayer for general relief. Lichtenstein v. Lyons, 115 La. 1051, 40 So. 454. In an action against three persons as makers where a joint answer alleged that the instrument was a forgery, and it was found that the name of one of the three had been forged, a judgment could not be rendered against the other two though it was not specially alleged that the note was void as to each of the defendants. Beem v. Farrell [Iowa] 108 N. W. 1044.

23. Where a note provides for a collection fee in case resort to law is necessary, the full fee provided for may be recovered where action is brought and is not reduced by subsequent payments. Walker v. Tomlinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 157, 98 S. W. 906.

34. Under Wilson's Rev. and Ann. St. 1903, c. 75, § 101, providing that "All delinquent taxes shall, by the county treasurer, be advertised in some newspaper published in the county," the treasurer is authorized to make the selection. Logan Co. Comr's v. State Capital Co., 16 Okl. 625, 86 P. 518. The duty of designating the newspaper for the pub-and designate a legally qualified paper.[36] Where the body charged with the duty of making the designation fails to act,[37] the official specially interested in the premises is usually authorized to make the selection,[38] or the last designation is continued in force.[39] In New York a supervisor may withdraw his signature to a designation any time before it is filed with the county clerk,[40] or, if it has been filed, he may revoke the same by written notice unless the clerk has acted thereon.[41] Certiorari lies to review the designation of official newspapers contrary to statute.[42] Where the designating board acts in good faith in determining whether a newspaper has the qualifications required of law, a court will not interfere by injunction with the designation.[43]

lication of the election day notice, fixing the day and designating the offices to be filled, sent by the secretary of state to the county clerks within the City of New York, rests upon the board of alderman and not upon the board of elections of New York City. Standard Pub. Co. v. New York, 111, App. Div 260, 97 N. Y. S. 740. The city council of Troy and not the supervisors of Rensselaer County are authorized to designate the newspaper for the publication of notice of tax sales and redemptions therefrom of lands within the city, as Laws 1860, p. 390, c. 236, and Laws 1885, p. 801, c. 461, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 1041, c. 512, were repealed by implication by Laws 1898. p. 376, c. 182, § 29, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 581 p. 1268, and Laws 1896, c. 908, p. 796 In re Troy Press Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 1006, afg. Id., 100 N. Y. S. 516. Under the charter of the city of Rensselaer, Laws 1897, pp. 360, 402, 403, c. 359, §§ 62, 202, 204, authorizing the council to designate official newspapers for the publication of tax sale notices, notices of tax sales of land within the city must be published therein (In re Troy Press Co., 100 N. Y. S. 516), but not notices of tax sales of lands without the city (Id).

35. The common council of the city of Troy in determining the two papers of the opposite political faith having the largest circulation must require the oaths of the publishers and the business records of the papers for the three last preceding months in confirmation of the circulation, as Laws 1903, p. 435, c. 182, § 1, subsec. 29, amending Laws 1898, p. 371, c. 182, providing for the government of cities of the second class, is not inconsistent with and does not repeal Laws 1893, p 1310, c. 575, § 3, subsec. 9 (charter of the city of Troy), requiring such confirmation. People v. Common Council of Troy, 144 App. Div. 354, 99 N. Y. S. 1045. The designation of the two newspapers by the board of aldermen of New York City for the publication of the notice of the day of election and the officers to be voted for, shall be by the members representing the two great political parties, each designating one. Standard Pub. Co. v. New York, 111 App. Div. 260, 97 N. Y. S. 740.

36. Where there is no paper having the mechanical work of printing done in the city, but there is one having a general circulation therein which is devoted to local news and which has been designated as the official city newspaper, a notice of election published therein is sufficient though the statute requires it to be published in a paper "printed" and published in the city. Amos Brown's Estate v West Seattle [Wash.] 85 P. 854. An independent, nonpartisan newspaper is not qualified under a statute requiring the designated papers to be of opposite political faith. People v. Common Council of Troy, 114 App. Div. 354, 99 N. Y. S. 1045. Where the petition for certiorari to review the designation specifically alleges that one of the papers is independent, and the return does not reply thereto except by a general allegation upon information and belief that the two papers designated are of opposite faith, the independent character is admitted. Id.

37. Where two designations of a newspaper to publish the Session Laws were filed under County Law, Laws 1892, p. 1749, c. 686, § 19, each containing eight names, but of the names on one, one had been cancelled and another revoked, thus leaving one with a majority, there was no failure to designate. People v. Roberts, 102 N. Y. S. 1110.

38. In Nebraska the county treasurer may designate the newspaper for the publication of the notice of the pendency of a tax foreclosure suit where the commissioners have failed to act. Comp. St. 1905, c. 77, art. 9, § 7. Bee Pub. Co. v. Douglas County [Neb.] 110 N. W. 624. Where the commissioners have failed to act at the time of filing of the petition, the treasurer may make the designation without further delay. Id.

39. The last prior designation stands by operation of law, and the county clerk is not authorized to redesignate the paper. People v. Roberts, 102 N. Y. S. 1110.

40. Designation under County Law, Laws 1892, p. 1749, c. 686, § 19, of a newspaper for the publication of the Session Laws. People v. Roberts, 102 N. Y. S. 1110.

§ 5. Arrest of Judgment (1166).
A. Nature and Grounds (1166).
B. Motions and Proceedings Thereon (1167).
C. Effect (1167).

This topic is designed to treat only the grounds for which new trial will be granted or judgment arrested in the trial court. The grant of new trials by reviewing courts,[47] the modification and vacation of judgments without resort to a new trial,[48] the erroneous [49] or prejudicial [50] character of particular rulings, the necessity of objections and exceptions to save rulings for motion for new trial, and the necessity of motion for a new trial to save questions for the reviewing court,[51] are elsewhere treated.

§ 1. Nature of the remedy by new trial and right to it in general.[52]—The remedy by new trial is granted for the purpose of re-examining issues of fact.[53] It is not the appropriate remedy to raise objections to pleadings,[54] or to question the correctness of a dismissal,[55] or to correct an erroneous judgment,[56] and should not commissioner's report in columns and with leaders and two or more justifications is tabular work within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4366, and in the absence of a special contract the publisher is entitled to the price and a half rate therein prescribed. Knorr v. Darke County, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 35.

45. Evidence in an action to recover for county printing held to show that the action of the supervisor in fixing a lower rate for printing the delinquent tax list than for other public printing was not arbitrary but based upon good grounds. Dodge v. Kings County [Cal.] 88 P. 266.

53. On setting aside a verdict because of insufficiency of evidence to support it, a new trial should be granted and the case should not be dismissed. Drake v. Baker, 96 N. Y. S. 1057. Where the decision of the court as embodied in its findings is contrary to law and not sustained by sufficient evidence, the remedy of the aggrieved party is by application for new trial to the trial court. Migatz v. Stieglitz [Ind.] 77 N. E. 400. When a judgment is reversed on appeal, a cause should not be dismissed but a new trial should be directed where it appears that from evidence not considered a different conclusion might be reached. In re Fromment, 184 N. Y. 568, 77 N. E. 9. Where defendant asserts that the court erred in making a particular finding of fact, he may properly disregard the probative facts found and correct the error through motion for a new trial and statement of the case in which the evidence relevant to the issue is set out. Pacific Pav. Co. v. Diggins [Cal. App.] 87 P. 415.

54. Not available for the purpose of calling in question the pleadings of the plaintiff or amendments thereto. Henley v. Brockman, 124 Ga. 1059, 53 S. E. 672. An objection that a memorandum pleaded is insufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds cannot be raised for the first time on motion for new trial. Ewart v. Young, 119 Mo. App. 483, 96 S. W. 420. Refusal of the court to dismiss on the ground that the petition was defective cannot be assigned as ground for new trial. Taylor v. Globe Refining Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 292. The overruling of a demurrer to the complaint cannot properly be made ground. Lang v. Yearwood [Ga.] 56 S. E. 305.

55. It is not the appropriate remedy where in a will contest the case is dismissed because the contestant failed to appear and no trial of the issue was had. In re Dean's Estate [Cal.] 87 P. 13.

56. It is not the proper remedy to correct an erroneous judgment. Such error should be corrected by motion to modify it. Migatz v. Stieglitz [Ind.] 77 N. E. 400.

be granted if it will afford no relief.[57] The granting or denial of a new trial rests largely in the discretion of the trial court and his exercise of discretion will not be interfered with [58] unless it has been abused,[59] but the court has no discretion where it is demanded as a matter of right for errors of law prejudicial to the moving party.[60] A rule that no more than two trials shall be granted the same party on the same grounds does not apply to cases wherein material errors of law have intervened.[61] Provision for new trial is in many states made by law,[62] and, when a party is entitled to the remedy as a matter of right, it should be granted without terms or conditions.[63] If by affirmative act a party lulls the court into a lack of

57. Under the rule authorizing a default judgment against a garnishee on his failure to answer the granting of a garnishee's motion for a new trial, after default has been entered, would be ineffective unless the default is set aside as the new trial would result in the assessment of damages the same as before. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Kent Circ. Judge, 114 Mich. 687, 13 Det. Leg. N. 279, 108 N. W. 363.

58. Order will not be reversed on appeal unless abuse of discretion appears. Jones v. Campbell, 11 Idaho, 752, 84 P. 510. Discretion exercised relative to a motion based on the ground of newly-discovered evidence or insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict will not be disturbed unless abused. Case v. Kramer [Mont.] 85 P. 878. The granting of a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court and will not be interfered with unless abused. Martin v. Corscadden [Mont.] 86 P. 33. The finding of the trial court that misconduct of defendant had prevented plaintiff from having a fair trial is conclusive on appeal. Piercy v. Piercy [Cal.] 86 P. 507. The decision of the trial court based on conflicting evidence on a motion for new trial is conclusive on appeal. Id. Discretion of trial court in granting a new trial for insufficiency of evidence to sustain the verdict will not be interfered with unless it has been manifestly abused. Crocker v. Garland [Cal. App.] 87 P. 209. Where granted in a case where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the order will not be disturbed. Buckle v. McConaghy [Idaho] 88 P. 100. Ruling of the trial court on the motion will not be disturbed in the absence of abuse of discretion. Harden v. Card [Wyo.] 88 P. 217. The action of the trial court when the verdict is based on conflicting evidence is conclusive. Caverly v. Heaton, 124 Ga. 862, 53 S. E. 103; Murphey v. Moreland, 124 Ga. 853, 53 S. E. 103; Mott v. Douglas Hardware Co., 125 Ga. 382, 53 S. E. 959. It is not error of law to refuse a new trial if the verdict is supported by evidence. Newell v. Taylor, 74 S. C. 8, 54 S. E. 212. Whether a case will be reinstated after non-suit upon a motion made during the same term rests in the discretion of the trial court. City of Atlanta v. Miller, 125 Ga. 495, 54 S. E. 538. Setting aside a verdict is largely discretionary. Slocumb v. Philadelphia Const. Co., 142 N. C. 348, 55 S. E. 196. Discretion will not be interfered with unless it is apparent that it has been abused. Jarrett v. High Point Trunk & Bag Co., 142 N. C. 466, 55 S. E. 338. Discretion in overruling a motion on the ground of insufficiency of evidence will not be interfered with unless there is a palpable failure of evidence. Williamson Iron Co. v. McQueen, 144 Ala. 265, 40 So. 306. Discretion exercised on a motion on the ground of newly-discovered evidence is conclusive unless it appears not to have been exercised according to established rules of law. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Kahn [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 608, 91 S. W. 816. The trial judge may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, affirm or set aside a verdict. Especially where the evidence is against the verdict. Morris v. Kansas City, 117 Mo. App. 298, 92 S. W. 908. A motion on the ground of abuse of discretion in proceeding with the trial in the absence of a party and his counsel as addressed to the discretion of the court. Simeral v. Rosewater [Neb.] 110 N. W. 546. Where evidence is conflicting, the action of the trial court on a motion will not be disturbed in the absence of an abuse of discretion. Walsh v. Conrad [Mont.] 88 P. 655. Abuse must be clear and unmistakable. Ettien v. Drum [Mont.] 88 P. 659. Remarks of a judge in his decree denying the motion to the effect that while a judge has power to set aside a verdict he should never do so unless it clearly appears that it is the result of prejudice or abuse does not show an erroneous conception of his power. Ruddell v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 528.

59. A second new trial should not be granted where concurrent verdicts are rendered on the same state of facts, and the verdict is not manifestly wrong. Dethrage v. Rome, 125 Ga. 802, 54 S. E. 654.

60. Case v. Kramer [Mont.] 85 P. 878. Where the appellate court reverses the judgment on a question of law alone, a new trial should be directed and the cause should not be dismissed. Lembeck & Betz Eagle Brewing Co. v. Sexton, 184 N. Y. 185, 77 N. E. 38.

61. Osner v. Zadek, 120 Ill. App. 444.

62. The right under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 572, to move for new trial for causes discovered after the term obtains in a cause appealed. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vinyard [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 384.

63. Costs need not be imposed where granted for error in instructions, in excluding or admitting testimony, and because the verdict is perverse. Cooper v. Granger [Wis.] 108 N. W. 193. The payment of costs and disbursements cannot be imposed as a condition to granting a new trial where the court concludes that there has been a mistrial. Terriberry v. Mathot, 110 App. Div. 370, 97 N. Y. S. 20. When a justice of the supreme court has been designated, and actually begun, to sit in the appellate division, before he has settled and signed a decision, but after he has handed down his opinion, and directing judgment and refuses to settle and sign such decision, vigilance which results in error necessitating a new trial, he may not complain if reasonable terms are imposed as a condition.[64] When the granting order is largely discretionary, costs should be imposed as a condition.[65] A trial court may require a remittitur of damages deemed excessive as a condition to overruling a motion,[66] but it may not fix the amount when no verdict has been returned,[67] nor reduce a verdict to a nominal sum.[68] An application for a rehearing in equity is governed by the principles applicable to motions for a new trial at law.[69]

§ 2. Grounds. A. In general.[70]—The grounds upon which a new trial may be had are in many states prescribed by statute.[71] The remedy will not be granted for any cause which the moving party might have avoided by the exercise of ordinary diligence,[72] or to determine a question which might have been raised at the trial,[73] or where it appears that a new trial will not change the result,[74] or for non-for lack of power, the aggrieved party has an absolute right to a new trial, without terms or conditions. Williamson v. Randolph, 185 N. Y. 603, 78 N. E. 545.

64. Where a party was at fault in not amending his complaint and dismissing as to defendants against whom no cause of action was proved, and judgment was rendered on a verdict against all in an action against a firm alleged to consist of five members but in fact consisting of only two. Donnelly v. Gray Bros. [Cal. App.] 84 P. 451.

65. Hart v. Kaplan, 101 N. Y. S. 763. Where there is nothing tending to show that the verdict is perverse, a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence should be granted only upon terms. Godfrey v. Godfrey, 127 Wis. 47, 106 N. W. 814.

66. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Price [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 120.

67. Though it is discretionary with the court to grant a new trial in actions for personal injuries, because the verdict is contrary to the weight of evidence, it may not condition the validity of the order on the defendant's consenting to the entry of judgment for a certain amount. Shanahan v. Boston, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 751. On a motion on the ground of inadequacy of damages the court has no authority to condition the refusal of the motion, on the defendant's election to pay an increased sum fixed by the court. Lorf v. Detroit [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 502, 108 N. W. 661.

68. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 999, providing that the court may in its discretion award a new trial because the verdict is excessive, it may not reduce the verdict to nominal damages and direct judgment. Howard v. Bank of the Metropolis, 100 N. Y. S. 1003.

69. Feinberg v. Feinberg [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 562. The rule that the refusal or allowance of a new trial is discretionary does not apply where there is a clear abuse of discretion. May be interfered with on writ of error in case of abuse of discretion. James v. Evans [C. C. A.] 149 F. 136.

70. See 6 C. L. 797.

71. A motion on the ground that certain findings are not sustained and that certain findings are contrary to law is insufficient, not enumerated. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 568, subd. 6. Scott v. Collier [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 666. Under the rule that a new trial may be granted for fraud in obtaining the judgment, mere false swearing or perjury is not sufficient unless accompanied by fraud which justifies a conclusion that in the absence of it the result would have been different. Graves v. Graves [Iowa] 109 N. W. 707. An objection that the judgment is contrary to law is not a proper ground. Migatz v. Stieglitz [Ind.] 77 N. E. 400. Under the rule that it shall not be granted until it is adjudged that there is a valid defense or cause of action, the fact that after an assignee of corporate stock obtained judgment for its conversion he voted it could not have been shown at the first trial and is not ground. Dooley v. Gladiator Consol. Gold Mines & Milling Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 864. A new trial will not be granted in an action for alienation of affections because after the trial the husband did not procure a divorce on the ground of adultery. Lewis v. Roby [Vt.] 65 A. 524. A new trial will be granted in equity only on the ground of newly discovered evidence, surprise, fraud, or where a party was deprived of his means of defense by circumstances beyond his control. Bankers' Union v. Landis [Neb.] 106 N. W. 973.

72. Failure to use ordinary diligence in making a defense precludes asking a new trial. Bankers' Union v. Landis [Neb.] 106 N. W. 973. Will not be granted at the instance of a garnishee because the return and disclosure was $50 too much where such fact resulted from negligence of the garnishee. People's Loan & Trust Co. v. McMurray, 27 R. I. 516, 63 A. 803. Where attorneys know some days in advance that they will be absent from the court on the day cases are set for trial, it is not ground for new trial that his case was set for a day prior to his return. Roberts v. Fitzgerald [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 114, 93 S. W. 704. Failure of the court to appoint a reporter to take down the evidence is not ground where no request was made that the court appoint a reporter. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1470, requires the official reporter to take the evidence in shorthand only when so directed by the judge. Rudisell v. Jennings [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 959.

73. Newspaper article denouncing defendant a felon, and guilty of subornation of perjury, published during the trial but not shown to have been read by the jurors nor called to the court's attention until the close of the trial, did not entitle defendant to a new trial. Sheehan v. Hammond, 2 Cal. App. 371, 84 P. 340. Where a motion to exclude certain evidence stated no grounds and the fact it tended to prove was assumed, nonproof of such fact cannot be asserted as ground for new trial. Vicksburg prejudicial error.[75] Nor will it be granted where a mere trifling sum is involved [76] nor for perjury or false swearing.[77] But a new trial may be granted for an unwarranted dismissal,[78] or where the jury misconceived the issues submitted and their impartiality has been disturbed between their separation and reassembling.[79]

(§ 2) B. Misconduct of parties, counsel, or witnesses.[80]—The granting of a new trial for misconduct of counsel or party rests largely in the discretion of the trial court,[81] and improper remarks,[82] conduct,[83] or argument, are ground [84] only when prejudicial to the unsuccessful party,[85] and when steps have been taken to counteract it.[86]

(§ 2) C. Rulings and instructions at the trial.[87]—Error in rulings on the admissibility of evidence,[88] or in giving instructions,[89] or other error occurring at

R. & L. Co. v. Cameron [Miss.] 40 So. 822. The court having sustained an objection to evidence on the specific ground that no foundation had been laid for impeachment, the party offering it may not assert on an application for new trial that it was admissible as part of the res gestae. Korby v. Chesser [Minn.] 108 N. W. 520. Where evidence as to loss of profits was introduced by both parties, argued and submitted without objection, the question of the right to recover such profits as damages cannot be raised on the motion. Adams Top-Cutting Mach. Co. v. Wildman Mfg. Co., 145 F. 576.

74. Where an attorney for a defendant was absent and another attorney fraudulently filed an answer for his client, it is not ground for new trial where it does not appear that the result would have been different had such answer not been filed. Roberts v. Fitzgerald [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 114, 93 S. W. 704.

75. An order of the court entered after the jury had retired that the evidence given by a witness was false, and that he had been suborned by defendant, and committed defendant for subornation of perjury, but such order was not known to the jury until after verdict rendered, does not entitle defendant to a new trial. Sheehan v. Hammond, 2 Cal. App. 371, 84 P. 340.

76. Chany v. Hotchkiss [Conn.] 63 A. 947.

77. Dooley v. Gladiator Consol. Gold Mines & Milling Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 864. Newly-discovered evidence held not to show false swearing warranting a new trial. Id.

78. An appellate court will order a new trial where the action is prematurely dismissed on motion of the defendant before he has rested and upon grounds not in issue under the pleadings. Viet's v. Silver [N. D.] 106 N. W. 35.

79. Winslow v. Smith [N. H.] 65 A. 108.

80. See 6 C. L. 798.

81. Before a new trial should be granted for pleading allegations intending to prejudice the jury with no intention of proving them, the abuse should be flagrant and plainly prejudicial. Johnstone v. Seattle, etc., R. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 1125.

82. Statements made by a party in the presence of the jury not shown to have been made for an improper purpose or to have influenced the verdict are not ground. Third Nat. Bank v. Fults, 115 Mo. App. 42, 90 S. W. 755.

83. Not on the ground of misconduct of counsel unless circumstances show that such misconduct influenced the verdict. Easterly v. Gater [Okl.] 87 P. 853.

84. Misconduct of counsel in argument held not ground. Carey v. Switchmen's Union [Minn.] 107 N. W. 129. Improper remarks of counsel which were withdrawn and the jury instructed not to consider them are not. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Parks [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 510.

85. Held ground for new trial: That counsel during argument stated that "he had mighty little respect for experts because they were employed by their clients" and "mighty well paid for it" is ground. Winslow v. Smith [N. H.] 65 A. 108. Under the rule that a new trial may be granted for irregularity in proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party, whereby a fair trial is prevented, a new trial is properly granted in a suit to set aside a deed as procured by fraud where because of false representation of the defendant a full hearing was not had. Material evidence was not presented. Piercy v. Piercy [Cal.] 86 P. 507. Misconduct of counsel in a close case in suggesting in the presence of the jury that the case was being conducted by an accident insurance company is ground. Beaumont Traction Co. v. Dilworth [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 257, 94 S. W. 352.

86. Misconduct of counsel in the presence of the court is not ground unless objected to and a motion made to have the court take such action as will counteract it. Hasper v. Wietcamp [Ind.] 79 N. E. 191.

87. See 6 C. L. 798.

88. Error in admitting evidence over objection that it is secondary and no foundation laid is ground. Boynton v. Ashabraner [Ark.] 88 S. W. 1011. May be granted for erroneous exclusion of material testimony. Owen v. McDermott [Ala.] 41 So. 730. Where a claim for damages for tort was submitted on incompetent evidence and a verdict returned for less than the amount claimed, the only remedy is by new trial. Jayne v. Loder [C. C. A.] 149 F. 21. The rule that the admission of incompetent evidence is not ground for a new trial where the fact it tends to prove is established by other competent evidence applies only when the other evidence fairly construed conclusively establishes the fact. Bergenthal Co. v. Security State Bank [Minn.] 108 N. W. 301. Wrongful admission of evidence is. National City Bank v. Pacific Co., 101 N. Y. S. 1098.

89. Failure in instructing to give a party the benefit of a theory of defense sustained by the evidence. Susong v. McKenna, 126 Ga. 433, 55 S. E. 236. Failure of the court upon request to reduce instructions to writing as required by statute is ground. Sawyer v. Roanoke R. & Lumber Co., 142 N.

the trial,[90] is ground for a new trial if prejudice results to the unsuccessful party, but not if the error is harmless.[91]

(§ 2) D. Misconduct of or affecting jury.[92]—A new trial may be granted for misconduct of the jury if such misconduct results in prejudice to the defeated party.[93] Misconduct must be such as to raise a presumption of prejudice.[94] Nonprejudicial misconduct[95] or misconduct known of before verdict is rendered is not ground for a new trial,[96] and a party moving on this ground must allege and affirmatively show that both he and his counsel were ignorant of such misconduct until after the trial.[97]

(§ 2) E. Irregularities or defects in verdict or findings.[98]—A new trial may be granted where a verdict is reached in an irregular manner,[99] or where it fails to

C. 162, 55 S. E. 84. Error in instructions is ground though no exception was taken when the instructions were given. Nagle v. Laxton, 191 Mass. 402, 77 N. E. 719.

90. Omission of the court to find on all issues and that it erred in refusing to sign special findings tendered by the defeated party is not ground. Walters v. Walters [Ind.] 79 N. E. 1037. Where the court dismissed the action where there was evidence of negligence for the jury, a new trial will be awarded. Graham v. Williams, 101 N. Y. S. 77. Should not be granted solely because of admission of evidence of contradictory statements of a witness for the purpose of impeachment, without notice to the witness of the time, place, and person, where there was opportunity for the witness to explain the contradiction. Newell v. Taylor, 74 S. C. 8, 54 S. E. 212.

91. Improper admission of evidence is not ground where it was not prejudicial. Burch v. Americus Grocery Co., 125 Ga. 163, 53 S. E. 1008. Where a witness had testified that he knew of certain rules, the admission, over objection as not the best evidence, that the rules were printed in the rule book was not prejudicial and not ground. Rappaport v. New York City R. Co., 50 Misc. 658, 99 N. Y. S. 539. Omission to charge a particular rule is not ground where no specific request for such instruction was made. Southern R. Co. v. Holbrook, 124 Ga. 679, 53 S. E. 203. Where the substance of an instruction is proper, the fact that it was not technically a correct statement of the allegations of the pleadings, which error could not have misled the jury, is not ground. Armstrong v. Musser Lumber & Mfg. Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 944. Error in giving an instruction inapplicable where such error is cured by other instructions. Southern R. Co. v. Holbrook, 124 Ga. 679, 53 S. E. 203. Erroneous instructions which do not result in an unjust verdict is not ground. Lomax v. Southwest M. Elec. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 192, 95 S. W. 945. Mere lack of verbal precision which could not have misled the jury is not ground. Savannah Elec. Co. v. Mullikin, 126 Ga. 722, 55 S. E. 945. Instructions considered as a whole held not prejudicial though portions standing alone were erroneous. Indiana Fruit Co. v. Sandlin, 125 Ga. 222, 54 S. E. 65.

92. See 6 C. L. 799.

93. It is ground for new trial where the foreman of the jury accepted entertainment from the claim agent of a party one night during the trial and after the trial several of the jurors were treated and thanked by the claim agent. McGill Bros. v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 216. It is proper to grant a new trial where the jury disregard an instruction that plaintiff could recover only nominal damagee, though such instruction is erroneous. Fleming v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 683.

94. Proof of mere indiscretion in the conduct of a juror is not sufficient. Wessel v. Bishop [Neb.] 107 N. W. 220. An affidavit of a party to the effect that he heard the jurors discussing the case in the jury room and that they referred to a witness as having gone into bankruptcy, etc., without showing that his evidence was rejected, fails to show misconduct. Austin v. Smith [Iowa] 109 N. W. 289. That the jury embraced in their verdict a finding for interest when no instruction on such subject had been given is not such a showing of prejudice as requires the granting of a new trial. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Stewart, 125 Ga. 88, 54 S. E. 197. In a suit involving adverse possession it is not ground for new trial that a juror expressed his disapproval of one holding land by limitations. Webb v. Lyerla [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 199, 94 S. W. 1095. A statute providing that a new trial may be granted if a party during the term of court give any of the jurors who try the case any treat or gratuity is merely an affirmance of the common-law powers of the court and permissive only. Shepard v. Lewiston, etc., R. [Me.] 65 A. 20. Such rule does not apply to acts, innocent in themselves, which occurred months prior to the trial. Id.

95. Not on the ground of misconduct of jurors unless circumstances show that such misconduct probably influenced the verdict. Easterly v. Gates [Okl.] 87 P. 853. The statement of a juror in the jury room of a fact of his personal knowledge but not in dispute and not material to the issues is not misconduct requiring new trial. Douglas v. Smith [Neb.] 106 N. W. 173. The mere fact that the foreman of the jury had a pass on the defendant's railroad is not fatal to the verdict without proof allunde that the plaintiff was prejudiced. Shepard v. Lewiston, etc., R. Co. [Me.] 65 A. 20.

96. It is not error to refuse a new trial for misconduct of the jury known to the attorney of the defeated party prior to submission of the case and not raised until after verdict. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Gibson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 153, 93 S. W. 469.

97. Grantz v. Deadwood [S. D.] 107 N. W. 832.

98. See 6 C. L. 800.

99. Quotient verdict. Ward v. Marshalltown, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 108 N. W. 323. Evi-fully determine the issues submitted,[1] or shows on its face that it may be unjust,[2] but not for the mere fact that it is for an amount greater than is demanded.[3]

(§ 2) F. Verdict or findings contrary to law or evidence.[4]—That the verdict is contrary to the law and to the evidence [5] and is not sustained by the evidence [6] are grounds for a new trial. It is discretionary with the court to grant a new trial on these grounds.[7] If a verdict is based on conflicting evidence,[8] or if there is evidence to sustain it [9] or in support of it,[10] a new trial may be denied, and the mere fact that the court if sitting as a jury would have found differently will not justify him in granting a new trial,[11] but if the verdict is clearly contrary to the weight of the dence held insufficient to show that a verdict was reached by casting lots as to the amount of the return. Louisiana R. & Nav. Co. v. Kohn, 116 La. 159, 40 So. 602.

1. A new trial must be granted where a verdict is returned against one joint defendant and no verdict for or against the other. McMahon v. Hetch Hetchy, etc., R. Co., 2 Cal. App. 400, 84 P. 350.

2. A new trial will be granted where a complaint states two causes of action and there is no evidence to support one and a general verdict is rendered for the plaintiff. Barfield v. Coker & Co., 73 S. C. 181, 53 S. E. 170.

3. Where a verdict in conversion is returned for a greater amount than is demanded, the court properly reduced the amount instead of granting a new trial. Mossteller v. Holborn [S. D.] 108 N. W. 13.

4. See 6 C. L. 800.

5. A new trial is properly granted in an action on a street assessment where the court found that the reduction of intention to make the improvement had been duly passed, but the evidence in the statement on the motion showed that the board of supervisors had no authority to order the improvement and that the resolution was not duly passed. Pacific Pav. Co. v. Diggins [Cal. App.] 87 P. 415.

6. Is properly granted where the findings are either in direct conflict with the allegations or testimony and there is evidence opposed to the general finding. Crocker v. Garland [Cal. App.] 87 P. 209.

7. It is discretionary with the court to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is not sustained. Godfrey v. Godfrey, 127 Wis. 47, 106 N. W. 814. It is discretionary with the trial court to set aside a verdict on the ground of inadequacy. Ward v. Marshalltown L., P. & R. Co. [Iowa] 108 N. W. 323. Order granting a new trial will not be disturbed. Where the verdict is based on conflicting evidence, unless the evidence is palpably in favor of the verdict. Owen v. McDermott [Ala.] 41 So. 730. The court may not decide on motion for new trial on which side is the greater weight of evidence. Rice v. Lockhart Mills [S. C.] 55 S. E. 160.

8. A verdict based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed unless the jury were governed by passion or prejudice and disregarded evidence and instructions. Peltomaa v. Katahdin Pulp & Paper Co., 149 F. 282. Where there is direct and positive conflict in the evidence, the court is not required on the motion to consider the number and credibility of the witnesses. Burch v. Southern Pac. Co., 145 F. 443.

9. May be refused where there is evidence sufficient to sustain the verdict. Collier v. Whatley [Ga.] 56 S. E. 128. May be denied where there is evidence to authorize the verdict. Epps v. Miller [Ga.] 56 S. E. 123. Discretion is not abused in refusing a new trial where there is evidence authorizing the verdict. Lovelady v. Roberts [Ga.] 55 S. E. 915. Not unless plainly against the weight of evidence. Black's Adm'r v. Virginia Portland Cement Co. [Va.] 55 S. E. 587. Upon a motion on the ground that the decision was not justified, and for errors of law occurring at the trial, it is error to grant the motion when neither the order nor memorandum of the court indicates that it is granted on such grounds and the evidence reasonably tends to sustain the verdict. Hoatson v. McDonald, 97 Minn. 201, 106 N. W. 311; Hasseltine v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 142. Where evidence is susceptible of two inferences, it is not ground for new trial that the jury disregarded an instruction relative to one of such inferences. Will not be granted where the point urged is the finding of the jury as to whether a certain act is negligence. Klutt v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 145 F. 965.

10. Where there is some evidence to authorize a verdict a new trial may be refused. Conflicting evidence. Southern R. Co. v. Puryear [Ga.] 56 S. E. 73. Verdict held supported and new trial properly refused. Macon, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 125 Ga. 88, 54 S. E. 197. Evidence held not to preponderate so heavily against the verdict as to warrant a new trial. Reich v. Cochran, 114 App. Div. 141, 99 N. Y. S. 755. Not where the verdict is supported by evidence of a substantial nature. Libby v. Barry [N. D.] 107 N. W. 972.

11. Not where evidence is conflicting though the court would have found differently. Wertheim Coal & Coke Co. v. Harding, 145 F. 660. Not where the evidence is conflicting on material points though the court would have reached a different conclusion on the same testimony. Salzinger v. Interurban St. R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 804. Verdict based on uncorroborated but clear and explicit testimony of plaintiff will not be set aside. Vogel v. Werner, 101 N. Y. S. 21. It is not sufficient that the verdict is merely against the preponderance of the evidence or that the court sitting as a jury might have reached a different conclusion. Lewis v. Roby [Vt.] 65 A. 524. If a verdict is not so manifestly erroneous that justice requires it to be set aside, a new trial will not be granted though the court, if sitting as a jury, might have drawn a different inference or reached a different conclusion. Garland v. Hewes, 101 Me. 549, 64 A. 914.

evidence,[12] or is actuated by passion or prejudice,[13] or the court is satisfied that justice has not been done,[14] it is his duty to grant a new trial, though the evidence upon which the verdict is based was conflicting.[15] An excessive [16] or inadequate verdict is ground for a new trial [17] unless the court is satisfied that justice has been done.[18]

(§ 2) G. Surprise, accident, or mistake.[19]—Surprise, accident,[20] or excusable neglect [21] may be ground for a new trial, but to bring a case within this rule it must

12. Where in an action for tort the clear weight of the evidence is against the verdict upon any theory of the case, a new trial should be granted. Griffin v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 863. A new trial is the proper remedy where facts found by the court in a special finding are not sustained or are contrary to the evidence. Walters v. Walters [Ind.] 79 N. E. 1037. A verdict palpably against the weight of evidence is ground for new trial. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daniel, 28 Ky. L. R. 1146, 91 S. W. 691. In an action on a contract where the evidence authorized a finding that such contract had never been made where the verdict was for plaintiff, a new trial should be granted on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. Taylor v. Globe Refinery Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 292. The appellate division has authority to order a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, where the trial court fails to do so. Fish v. Utica Steam, etc., Cotton Mills, 109 App. Div. 326, 95 N. Y. S. 673. A new trial is properly granted where the trial judge determines that the findings of the jury are conflicting, that the verdict is against the weight of evidence, and the damages allowed are inadequate. Jarrett v. High Point Trunk & Bag Co., 142 N. C. 466, 55 S. E. 338. It is the duty of the trial court to grant a new trial where the verdict is manifestly against the weight of evidence. Rankin v. Cardillo [Colo.] 88 P. 170. Discretion not abused in awarding a new trial because the verdict was contrary to the evidence in an action for broker's commission. Pinney v. Wilson [Cal. App.] 87 P. 1111. Will be granted where the verdict is contrary to the evidence. Rossenbach v. Supreme Court, I. O. F., 101 N. Y. S. 890. Not abused in granting the motion on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. Nelson v. Mississippi & Rum River Boom Co. [Minn.] 109 N. W. 1118.

13. Rev. Civ. Code Proc. § 301 expressly provides that a new trial should be granted if the verdict is so excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice. Davis v. Holy Terror Min. Co. [S. D.] 107 N. W. 374. Where in an action against principal and agent for a joint tort a verdict is returned against the principal alone on evidence much stronger against the agent, prejudice warranting a new trial is not shown. Ruddell v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 528.

14. Where a verdict is the result of a comparison of signatures, which was the only evidence introduced, and the court is of the opinion that the verdict is contrary to the weight of evidence, a new trial should be granted. Castor v. Bernstein, 2 Cal. App. 703, 84 P. 244. May be granted where the verdict is not justified by the evidence. Dart v. Russell [Minn.] 109 N. W. 702.

15. A new trial should be granted where the verdict is contrary to the weight of conflicting evidence. County of Montmorency v. Putnam, 144 Mich. 135, 13 Det. Leg. N. 229, 107 N. W. 895. If a trial judge concludes that the verdict is contrary to evidence which is conflicting, he should grant a new trial. Jones v. Campbell, 11 Idaho, 752, 84 P. 510. The rule that a verdict based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal does not apply on application for a new trial. Id.

16. Must be granted where verdict is excessive. Von Au v. Magenheimer, 100 N. Y. S. 659. Discretion not abused in granting the motion on the ground of excessive damages. Nelson v. Mississippi & R. R. Boom Co. [Minn.] 109 N. W. 1118. Where a verdict is excessive and there is no definite basis for remitting part of it, a new trial must be granted. Hanson v. Henderson [S. D.] 107 N. W. 670. Excessive verdict in a case involving unliquidated damages. Id. Not on the ground of excessive damages unless so excessive as to indicate prejudice, partiality, or corruption. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Lightheiser [Ind.] 78 N. E. 1033.

17. Inadequate damages is ground. Ford v. Minneapolis St. R. Co. [Minn.] 107 N. W. 817. It is not prejudicial to base the refusal of a new trial on the defendant's payment of a certain amount of damages. Id. Verdict held inadequate. Buttner v. New York, 110 App. Div. 549, 97 N. Y. S. 303.

18. Inadequacy of verdict is not ground where the court is of the opinion that the verdict should have been for defendant. Blazosseck v. Remington & Sherman Co., 141 F. 1022. Where it did not appear that the verdict was a quotient one, but it was less than the evidence appeared to authorize, it was error to grant a new trial to the defeated party. Martin v. McLeod [Ala.] 42 So. 622. Not unless so excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice. Burch v. Southern Pac. Co., 145 F. 443.

19. See 6 C. L. 802.

20. Evidence held to show surprise warranting new trial. Coolidge v. Taylor [Vt.] 65 A. 582. Where one was surprised at the testimony of witnesses who claimed to have seen an accident, and on a motion for a new trial it was shown by several witnesses that the witnesses were not present at the scene of the accident, the new evidence was more than impeaching, and warranted a new trial. Louisville Belt & Iron Co. v. Hart, 29 Ky. L. R. 310, 92 S. W. 951. Where a complaint on a note showed on its face that the cause of action was barred by limitations in the absence of partial payments tolling the statute, and the court refused to require the complaint to be made more definite and certain as to payments, and at the trial defendant could not disprove certain alleged payments but could thereafter, a new trial should be granted. O'Neil v. Lindsey, 41 Wash. 649, 84 P. 603.

21. Discretion not abused in granting a new trial where the applicant was pre-appear that the moving party used due diligence to prepare and present his case and was prevented from doing so by circumstances over which he had no control.[22] A party who fails to ask for a continuance is not entitled to a new trial.[23] Surprise is not ground unless a different result is probable.[24]

(§ 2) H. Newly-discovered evidence.[25]—Newly discovered evidence which is material and important [26] and is likely to change the result [27] is ground for a new trial. It must have been discovered since the trial [28] and be of such nature that it could not have been produced at first trial by the exercise of ordinary diligence,[29] vented from being present at the first trial by the fact that he lived a long distance from the place of trial, that his attorney had promised to keep him informed but did not. Trainor v. Maturen [Minn.] 110 N. W. 370.

22. Discretion not abused in denying a new trial on the ground of plaintiff's surprise at the testimony of a witness called by the defendant. Village of Pillager v. Hewitt [Minn.] 107 N. W. 815. Surprise at certain testimony held not ground. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Wintersmith [Ky.] 98 S. W. 987. Where in an action for wrongful death plaintiff was granted leave to substitute the name of decedent's mother for that of his widow, and after postponement for some days defendant made no showing except his own statement that he had not time to meet the new issue, he was entitled to a new trial on the ground of surprise. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Block [Ark.] 95 S. W. 155. Where a party has full notice of all issues tendered by the pleadings, he may not assert surprise at evidence introduced in support of them, and assert right to a new trial on such ground. Harden v. Card [Wyo.] 88 P. 217.

23. A party who is surprised at the exclusion of testimony offered by him should apply for a continuance and if he fails to do so is not entitled to a new trial on the ground of surprise. Flynt v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 648, 91 S. W. 864. Where a party is surprised by evidence introduced and does not ask for a continuance or take a nonsuit, he cannot as a general rule have a new trial on such ground. Todd v. Banning, 118 Ill. App. 676.

24. In an action for enticing one's minor son from home the complaint alleged that after leaving home the son stayed at the home of a certain person, but the evidence showed that he stayed at another place, held such fact did not warrant a new trial on the ground of surprise. Soper v. Crutcher, 29 Ky. L. R. 1080, 96 S. W. 907.

25. See 6 C. L. 803.

26. Newly-discovered evidence held material and it was error to refuse a new trial. Douglas v. Walker [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 115, 92 S. W. 1026. In an action against a physician for malpractice in removing sutures from wounds newly-discovered evidence that defendant never removed any sutures held material. Binns v. Emery [Wash.] 88 P. 133. That new and material facts have been discovered since the trial which could not by reasonable diligence have been produced at the trial. Grigsby v. Wolven [S. D.] 108 N. W. 250. In an action for burning of a building by sparks from a locomotive, newly-discovered evidence that it was burning when the train was approaching half a mile distant is material. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vinyard [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 384.

27. New evidence directly in conflict with the testimony of the successful party and so material and conclusive that it will probably lead to a different result is ground. Village of Lerna v. Wood, 122 Ill. App. 542. Newly-discovered evidence which creates a strong probability of a different result on another trial authorizes a new trial. Evidence of payment of a note sued upon held to warrant a new trial. Foss v. Smith [Vt.] 65 A. 553. Where in an action on a note defendant claimed that he had paid it, a receipt signed by him showing nonpayment held not cumulative evidence. Id. Evidence cannot be regarded as merely cumulative because it tends to prove the same point controverted. Torian v. Terrell, 29 Ky. L. R. 306, 93 S. W. 10.

28. On an issue as to whether an absolute deed was a mortgage, where the grantor testified that a certain person was present during the negotiations, the party desiring his testimony should take steps to procure his attendance and cannot assert that it is newly-discovered. Johnson v. Scrimshire [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 949, 93 S. W. 712.

29. Not where it does not appear that due diligence was unavailing prior to the trial. Smith v. Birmingham R., L. & P. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 307; San Antonio Traction Co. v. Parks [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 510. A motion for leave to make motion for new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence will be denied unless it appears that the new evidence would change the result and that movent has used due diligence. Wardlaw v. Troy Oil Mill, 74 S. C. 368, 54 S. E. 658. It is the duty of a party to meet an issue tendered, and, where he fails to produce a witness whom he knows has knowledge relative to such issue, a new trial may be denied him. Harden v. Card [Wyo.] 88 P. 217. Evidence consisting merely of an additional certified copy of a document, a certified copy of which was introduced, is not ground for new trial where it is not shown that due diligence was not used in obtaining it at the first trial. In re McClellan's Estate [S. D.] 107 N. W. 681.

Diligence was not used in producing a witness at the trial where such witness lived only sixteen miles distant. Jones' Estate v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 392, 98 S. W. 417. Sufficient diligence in producing the witness who would testify to a material fact is not shown where he lived in the immediate vicinity, though it is stated that inquiry was made of several persons living in the vicinity as to the fact. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vinyard [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 384. Where a party fails to elicit testimony from a witness who is on the

and it must appear that due diligence was exercised.[30] It must also appear that the new evidence will be produced at the new trial.[31] The granting of a new trial on this ground is discretionary with the trial court,[32] and it will not be granted for evidence which is immaterial,[33] merely cumulative [34] or corroborative,[35] contradictory or impeaching,[36] or inadmissible,[37] and which would probably not produce a stand, he is guilty of lack of diligence precluding him from seeking a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence. McDonald v. People, 222 Ill. 325, 78 N. E. 609. Where it appeared that the attorney for the applicant had knowledge of the evidence before the first trial, lack of diligence is apparent. Grigsby v. Wolven [S. D.] 108 N. W. 250. Where a defect in a tax deed is pointed out by objection at the trail and the party offering it neglected to offer other evidence of his alleged right as a tax sale purchaser, he may not have a new trial to supply such proof. State Finance Co. v. Beck [N. D.] 109 N. W. 357. Where in an action to annul a marriage on the ground that it had been induced by false representations, and the jury found that they were false, defendant was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence that they were not relied upon. Di Lorenzo v. Di Lorenzo, 111 App. Div. 920, 97 N. Y. S. 644. Where the defense to an action for the price of steel bars was that they were not of the size ordered, and no surprise was expressed at such defense, newly-discovered evidence that they were of the size ordered held not ground because of lack of diligence. Iroment v. Mugler, 99 N. Y. S. 877. Not for the testimony of a witness whom applicant knew had knowledge of the transaction and who might have been called at the first trial. Bosler v. Coble, 14 Wyo. 423, 84 P. 895. The motion is properly denied in an action for malicious prosecution where the new evidence consisted of testimony of plaintiff's bad reputation in a populous community, and the affidavit stated that before the trial the movent had made inquiries of eight persons and that they were reluctant to testify, but that after the trial he was able to procure several witnesses. Martin v. Corscadden [Mont.] 86 P. 33. Not where it appears that the party knew of a witness who would give the testimony a month prior to the trial but made no effort to produce him, and no application for continuance was made. O'Neill v. State Sav. Bank [Mont.] 87 P. 970. Not where the alleged evidence is to be given by witnesses who live in the community and who were known of at the time of the trial and no reason is shown why they were not produced. Crigler v. Newman, 29 Ky. L. R. 27, 91 S. W. 706. Where newly-discovered evidence consists of testimony of people who live in the neighborhood and who might have been produced at the trial by the exercise of ordinary diligence, a new trial will be denied. Gay v. Steele's Adm'rs, 29 Ky. L. R. 248, 92 S. W. 590.

Due diligence used: Discretion not abused in granting a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence because diligence had not been shown where though the party had talked to the witnesses it did not appear that they had disclosed the facts constituting the new evidence. Woerdehoff v. Muekel [Iowa] 108 N. W. 533. Applicant held not negligent in failing to produce evidence at the trial. Douglas v. Walker [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 115, 92 S. W. 1026. Where newly-discovered evidence consisted of a written instrument diligent search for which had been made prior to the trial, and it was found among the public records after the trial, diligence was shown. Foss v. Smith [Vt.] 65 A. 553. In an action against a physician for malpractice, affidavits held to show no lack of diligence in discovering new evidence. Binns v. Emery [Wash.] 88 P. 133.

30. An application for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence must show that the applicant has been vigilant in the preparation of his case for trial. Grigsby v. Wolven [S. D.] 108 N. W. 250. There must be a clear showing that by the exercise of reasonable diligence it could not have been produced at the former trial. Cudahy Packing Co. v. Hays [Kan.] 85 P. 811.

31. Not where it does not appear that the movant knows where the witness who is to give the newly discovered evidence may be found or will likely appear. O'Neill v. State Sav. Bank [Mont.] 87 P. 970.

32. A motion on the ground of newly-discovered evidence is addressed to the discretion of the court upon a full consideration of all the evidence introduced and the legitimate effect which the new evidence taken in connection therewith ought, upon legal principles, to have toward producing a different result. Bunker v. United Order of Forestera, 97 Minn. 361, 107 N. W. 392.

33. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Parks [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 510; Kidder v. Maynard [Neb.] 106 N. W. 172. Newly-discovered evidence of fraud relative to a counterclaim set up in an action on a note held not material. Bosler v. Coble, 14 Wyo. 423, 84 P. 895. Where the defense to an action for the price of steel bars was that they were not of the size ordered, newly-discovered evidence that they were sold commercially as the size ordered was immaterial. Froment v. Mugler, 99 N. Y. S. 877.

34. Pratt v. Davis, 118 Ill. App. 161; Cain v. Corley [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 168; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Wintersmith [Ky.] 98 S. W. 987; San Antonio Traction Co. v. Parks [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 510; Smith v. Birmingham R., L. & P. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 307; City of Emporia v. White [Kan.] 86 P. 295; In re McClellan's Estate [S. D.] 107 N. W. 681; Hanousek v. Marshalltown, 130 Iowa, 550, 107 N. W. 603. Cumulative evidence is not ground, especially where it appears that there was lack of diligence in producing it at the trial. Hall v. Roberts, 29 Ky. L. R. 851, 96 S. W. 555.

35. Corroborative not. Cain v. Corley [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 168.

36. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Wintersmith [Ky.] 98 S. W. 987; Miller v. Thigpen, 125 Ga. 113, 54 S. E. 194; Jones' Estate v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 392, 98 S. W. 417; Flynt v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 648, 91 S. W. 864; Lang v. Yearwood different result;[38] but this rule is not to be applied if substantial justice will be thereby defeated.[39]

(§ 2) I. As a matter of right in ejectment.[40]—In many states it is provided by law that a new trial may be had as a matter of right where title or right to possession of real property is involved.[41] Such statutes do not apply to an action for partition between tenants in common,[42] nor to statutory proceedings to settle boundary disputes,[43] nor where two causes of action are joined in one of which a new trial is allowable as a matter of right and the other not.[44] Where a new trial as a matter of right is granted, it is the duty of the court to vacate the judgment of record.[45]

§ 3. Proceedings to procure new trial.[46]—The proceeding to obtain a new trial is analogous to a proceeding on writ of error and is in effect a new action brought to reverse the judgment, and if the proceeding abates the judgment, it remains in full force.[47] The proceeding is a subject of statutory regulation.[48] If a motion is necessary it must be made.[49] A motion for new trial will not be read

[Ga.] 56 S. E. 305; Seattle Lumber Co. v. Sweeney [Wash.] 85 P. 677; Northrup v. Hayward [Minn.] 109 N. W. 241; Libby v. Barry [N. D.] 107 N. W. 972. Not for impeaching evidence where ordinary diligence was not exercised to produce it at the trial. McBurnie v. Stelsly, 29 Ky. L. R. 1191, 97 S. W. 42. Will not be granted where the new evidence consists of testimony of defendant contradicting his deposition given at the original trial. Tillar v. Liebke [Ark.] 95 S. W. 769. Will not be granted to enable the applicant to impeach the credit of witnesses. Feinberg v. Feinberg [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 562.

37. Newly-discovered evidence in a will contest that after a witness had testified she was offered $1,000 if she would reverse her testimony is not ground where it does not appear that the offer came from the adverse party. Mueller v. Pew, 127 Wis. 288, 106 N. W. 840.

38. Pierson v. Peirce, 42 Wash. 164, 84 P. 731. Newly-discovered evidence must be such that had it been heard at the first trial it would probably have changed the result. Feinberg v. Feinberg [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 562. Newly-discovered evidence held insufficient in an action for alienation of affections. Lewis v. Roby [Vt.] 65 A. 524. Newly-discovered evidence relative to an issue which was not raised but should have been raised at the trial is not ground. Jones' Estate v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 392, 98 S. W. 417. Must be of a decisive and controlling character. Crigler v. Newman, 29 Ky. L. R. 27, 91 S. W. 706. In a proceeding under Ball. Ann. Codes and St. §§ 5667, 5669, to establish a lost boundary, on a motion on the ground of newly-discovered evidence that a government corner could be established other than where located by the commissioners, such evidence must be clear and convincing. Strunz v. Hood [Wash.] 87 P. 45. It is not enough that the new evidence be material. The court must consider its importance and determine whether in connection with evidence already introduced it is liable to affect the verdict on another trial. Bunker v. United Order of Foresters, 97 Minn. 361, 107 N. W. 392. Newly-discovered evidence in a will contest that after testator's death a witness saw proponent tear up a paper and heard her say to her daughter: "This is the last one. Now let them look if they want to," is not ground, there being nothing to show that such paper was a later will. Mueller v. Pew, 127 Wis. 288, 106 N. W. 840. Not for evidence on a point established in favor of movent. Kidder v. Maynard [Neb.] 106 N. W. 172. Not where newly-discovered evidence is of doubtful value and could have been obtained at the trial by due diligence. United States v. Twenty Thousand Five-hundred and Fifty Pounds of Unwashed Wool, 149 F. 795.

39. Cumulative evidence is ground if it is probable that it would have changed the result. St. Paul Harvester Co. v. Faulhaber [Neb.] 109 N. W. 762.

40. See 6 C. L. 805.

41. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1076, the fact that title to real estate is in controversy does not authorize a new trial as of right unless it comes in dispute in an action for possession or to quiet title. Bonham v. Doyle [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 858.

42. Bonham v. Doyle [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 858.

43. Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5518, providing for a new trial as of right in actions for the recovery of real estate, does not apply to the statutory proceeding to settle a boundary dispute. Strunz v. Hood [Wash.] 87 P. 45. Rev. Laws 1905, § 4430, providing for a new trial as of right in actions for the recovery of land, does not apply to the statutory action to settle a boundary dispute. Tierney v. Gondereau [Minn.] 109 N. W. 821.

44. Bonham v. Doyle [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 858.

45. Richardson v. Stephenson [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 256.

46. See 6 C. L. 805.

47. Fowden v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. [Cal.] 86 P. 178.

48. The change made by Laws 1905, p. 657, c. 174, in the procedure to obtain review of a judgment, does not change the rule relative to a motion for new trial. Carmack v. Erdenberger [Neb.] 110 N. W. 315.

The legislature has power to prescribe that orders granting a new trial shall specify of record the grounds upon which it is granted. Stoner v. Royar [Mo.] 98 S. W. 601.

49. The filing of a written motion coupled with the fact that the court noticed and took it under advisement is a sufficient presentation of the motion to preserve the points urged for review. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v.

from an order denying a motion never made.[50] A written motion specifying the points relied on need not be filed unless required by the court or action of the opposing party.[51] Grounds of the motion must be well assigned as a whole [52] and must be definite and specific,[53] and, if based on statutory grounds, a ground within the statute must be asserted.[54] The grounds should be stated in such terms as will clearly indicate the error relied on.[55] Grounds not specified in a motion, specifying grounds are waived,[56] but where a written motion is not required, no points are waived by failure to file it.[57] The motion need not ask that the verdict be set aside.[58] Where the motion is made on a statement and bill of exceptions, it is immaterial that the paper is misnamed,[59] and that the statement does not conform to rules of court is not fatal where such rules are not invoked.[60] The statement must conform to statutory requirements,[61] and be filed within the prescribed period.[62] The motion

Sparks, 122 Ill. App. 400. One who procures the overruling of his own motion for new trial may not predicate error thereon. Brecher v. Chicago Junction R. Co., 119 Ill. App. 554.

50. Where a party's present attorneys, supposing a motion for new trial had been made, caused entry of an order denying such motion, such entry could not be considered as the making of a motion. Koeppel v. Koeppel, 49 Misc. 218, 97 N. Y. S. 401.

51. Merritt v. Le Clair, 118 Ill. App. 328.

52. A ground assigned "in admitting in evidence exhibits one to nine inclusive, over the objection of defendants" is joint and must be good as to all, or it fails. Hendricks County Com'rs v. Eaton [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 958. A ground assigning error in giving several instructions is joint, and bad if all are not erroneous. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Hayes [Ind.] 79 N. E. 448. Where two defendants made separate answers and different defenses and a verdict was found in favor of one and against the other, a joint motion filed by plaintiff was properly overruled where the verdict was good as to one defendant. Fredrickson v. Schmittroth [Neb.] 110 N. W. 653.

53. Errors of law in the record, remarks of the court in the presence of the jury and error in giving and refusing instructions, is too general. William Cameron & Co. v. Peck [Ind. T.] 97 S. W. 1015. Assignments that the verdict is contrary to the preponderance of the evidence contrary to the charge are too general; should point out wherein it is so defective. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Norman [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 594.

54. A motion questioning the sufficiency of the evidence to support the decision is sufficient though it uses the word "findings" instead of "decision" as provided by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 568. Ellison v. Ganiard [Ind.] 79 N. E. 450. That certain enumerated findings are not sustained by sufficient evidence is not a proper assignment. Scott v. Collier [Ind.] 78 N. E. 184. A ground of motion that the verdict is contrary to a specified instruction is equivalent to a complaint that it is contrary to law. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Bradley, 125 Ga. 193, 54 S. E. 69.

55. Even if the ruling of the court rejecting an amendment to the pleadings may be reviewed on motion for new trial, a copy of the rejected amendment must appear in the motion. Cornwell v. Leverette [Ga.] 56 S. E. 300. A ground asserted that the judgment is contrary to the verdict and not supported by the same does not bring before the court the fact that in copying the judgment an answer of the jury to a question was copied "No" when it was answered "Yes." Moore v. Woodson [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 116. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1152, 1173, amended by Sess. Laws 1905, p. 185, notice of motion for new trial designating as grounds insufficiency of evidence to support the verdict need not state wherein it is insufficient. Ettien v. Drum [Mont.] 88 P. 659. A ground of motion based on admission of evidence should state what objection was made at the time it was offered and show that the objection was then urged. McFarland v. Darien & W. R. Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 74. The rule that error in refusing a change of venue must be stated as ground for new trial does not apply where a motion for new trial for cause has been ruled upon before motion for change of venue which is made pending motion for new trial as of right. Bonham v. Doyle [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 458. Where application is made for a rule to show cause why a new trial should not be granted by a party holding bills of exception, the mere granting of the rule operates as a waiver of all exceptions, except such as are expressly reserved in the rule to show cause Haden v. Bamford Bros. Silk Mfg. Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 7.

56. Landt v. McCullough, 121 Ill. App. 328

57. All points which might be specified can be relied upon. Merritt v. Le Clair, 118 Ill. App. 328.

58. Vanhoosier v. Dunlap, 117 Mo. App. 529, 93 S. W. 350.

59. Statement denominated by movent as "statement of case and bill of exceptions." Friel v. Kimberly-Montana Gold Min. Co. [Mont.] 85 P. 734.

60. A statement is not objectionable because the lines are not numbered as required by rule of court, where such rule was not invoked by court or counsel. Friel v. Kimberly-Montana Gold Min. Co. [Mont.] 85 P. 734. Where a rule of court requires that statement on motion shall be reduced to narative form, unless otherwise ordered, overruling of objections to a statement not in such form is equivalent to an order. Id.

61. The only difference between a bill of exceptions and statement of case under Code Civ. Proc. § 659, requiring one moving for new trial to serve notice of his intention designating the ground, and whether it will be made on affidavits, bill of exception, or statement, is that in a statement, in addition to setting forth in the body of

must be filed within the time prescribed,[63] usually within a certain number of days,[64] or during the term at which the judgment was rendered,[65] unless delay in filing is excused,[66] in which case it must be made in the manner prescribed.[67] A motion filed out of time is of no avail.[68] Where notice of intention to file a motion is required, the statutes must be complied with.[69] It must be filed before a court entitled to hear it,[70] and must be prosecuted with due diligence.[71] An application to dismiss the document the exceptions taken, the particular ones relied upon must be specified. If insufficiency of evidence is relied upon, the particulars in which it is insufficient must be specified in either document. Pease v. Fink [Cal. App.] 85 P. 657.

62. In granting or refusing extensions of time within which to settle statements of the case under Rev. Codes 1899, § 5477, the trial court is vested with wide discretionary powers. Peterson v. Hansen [N. D.] 107 N. W. 528.

63. Under a rule that a new trial may be granted by an appellate court for newly-discovered evidence, within one year, the fact that a party prosecuted a motion in the superior court on other grounds does not preclude relief being granted by the appellate court. Hughes v. Rhode Island Co., 27 R. I. 591, 65 A. 275. Under the rule that a new trial may be granted within one year where the judgment was obtained by fraud, where the fraud is not discovered within one year, equity has jurisdiction to grant a new trial thereafter. Graves v. Graves [Iowa] 109 N. W. 707.

64. Where a decree was not entered until November but recited that it was rendered prior to such date, the entry does not give it effect as of such prior date, and a motion filed within three days after the entry is in time. Eldridge & Higgins Co. v. Barrere, 74 Ohio St. 389, 78 N. E. 516. A holiday counts as one of the three days allowed for filing a motion for a new trial, unless the holiday is the last of the three days. Oberer v. State of Ohio, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 93. Where a case is tried to the court, and findings of fact and conclusions of law are filed, which include a determination of the general issue, a party aggrieved by rulings during the trial must file motion for new trial within three days from the time such findings and conclusions are made, irrespective of the time judgment is rendered. Brubaker v. Brubaker [Kan.] 86 P. 455. Motion must be made during the term at which verdict was rendered and within five days after it is rendered. Henry v. Lincoln Lucky & Lee Min. Co. [N. M.] 85 P. 1043.

65. The Nebraska statute requiring the motion to be filed at the same term at which judgment is rendered except for newly-discovered evidence is mandatory. Carmack v. Erdenberger [Neb.] 110 N. W. 315. Under a rule authorizing the motion to be filed during the term or on the first day of the succeeding term, if verdict is rendered on the last day of the term, where a judgment was rendered prior to the last day, a motion filed in vacation is too late. Richardson v. Stephenson [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 256. An order granting a new trial at the same term is in time. James v. Evans, 149 F. 136.

66. Civ. Code Prac. § 342, providing that motion must be made at the term at which decision is rendered, may be waived. Huffman v. Charles [Ky.] 97 S. W. 775. It is within the discretion of the court to grant or deny a motion not timely filed. Cato v. Scott [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 807, 96 S. W. 667. Properly denied for lack of diligence in not making it in time. Id. The time for filing the motion may be extended by the trial court, notwithstanding the statute requiring judgment to be entered immediately on return of the verdict. McAllister v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 68. Where the court reporter who took the testimony left the state before preparing a transcript thereof, a party desiring to move for a new trial was entitled to necessary extensions of time to enable them to secure a transcript. Twaddle v. Winters [Nev.] 85 P. 280. Order in chambers granting such extension held within the jurisdiction of the judge of another district who was attending to the duties of the trial judge who was absent. Id.

67. Where the motion is not made at the time before the trial justice as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 999, it must be made on a case and exceptions as required by § 997. Wilcox v. Fox, 112 App. Div. 560, 98 N. Y. S. 769.

68. For the purpose of review. Carmack v. Erdenberger [Neb.] 110 N. W. 315.

69. Under a statute providing that a party intending to move for new trial must within five days after verdict file and serve notice of intention, and a statute providing that the court may grant relief subsequent to such time if satisfactory reason is shown, it is essential that an application showing reason why the motion was not made under the former state be made before the notice under the latter section may be served. Felt v. Cook [Utah] 87 P. 1092. Under Comp. Laws, § 3292, requiring notice of intention to be given within five days after verdict or ten days after receiving notice of decision by a judge and file his statement within five days after giving such notice, when a suit for injunction is tried before a jury, a party has ten days from notice by the judge and may file his statement within five days after giving notice. State v. Murphy [Nev.] 88 P. 335. Such period is not curtailed by the fact that he applies at the time of rendition of verdict, without knowing that it had been approved, for an order allowing thirty days after receipt of the transcript in which to file his statement. Id. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, relief from default in service of notice of intention to move for a new trial must be made within six months from default. Steen v. Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 499.

70. Where a judge is called away after verdict rendered and is unable to return during the term, the motion may be heard and determined by a special judge subsequently selected. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Voliva [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 501, 91 S. W. 354. A justice of the supreme court may grant a rule to show cause why a verdict rendered in an issue out of this court tried a motion for lack of diligence in prosecuting it is addressed to the discretion of the court.[72] The hearing on the motion is governed by the rules applicable to other judicial proceedings,[73] and irregularities may be waived.[74] A movant may not shift to a different theory from that upon which his case was tried and insist thereon as a basis for his right to recover.[75] A court may not rule on a motion before it is presented,[76] and under the rule that it shall not be granted except on motion stating the grounds, it may not be granted on grounds not asserted.[77]

Affidavits[78] in support of the motion must be filed when required,[79] and must show facts warranting a new trial.[80]

Evidence in support of motion.[81]—The practice commonly recognized or fixed by rule of court of only receiving affidavits on the motion should not be departed from unless in exceptional cases and to avoid miscarriage of justice.[82] A party has at the circuit court should not be set aside, after the six days allowed by rule of the court, upon an allegation of misconduct of jurors or other cause not within the purpose of that rule. Rooney v. King [N. J. Law] 64 A. 955. A motion cannot be heard and determined by a justice of the city court sitting as a trial justice in the case but must be made at special term. Koeppel v. Koeppel, 49 Misc. 218, 97 N. Y. S. 401. Under Rev. St. § 953, amended by act June 7, 1900, c. 717, (31 Stat. 270), providing that where a judge becomes disabled to pass upon motion and allow and sign a bill of exceptions, his successor may do so, if stenographic notes have been taken or he is satisfied that he can pass on such motion, otherwise he may grant a new trial where a judge died and there was no record of the case, the only authority his successor has is to grant a new trial. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Ashe [C. C. A.] 145 F. 593.

Note: Where a judge who hears a case is called away and is unable to return during the term to hear the motion, a judge setting for him has authority to hear and determine the motion. Coles v. Thompson [Tex. Civ. App.] 29 S. W. 958; Malone v. Eastin, 2 Port. [Ala.] 182; Wilson v. R. Co. [Cal.] 29 P. 861, 17 L. R. A. 865; Jones v. Sanders [Cal.] 37 P. 649; Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Marseilles, 107 Ill. 313; People v. McConnell [Ill.] 40 N. E. 608; American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Neff [Kan.] 23 P. 606; State v. Gaslin [Neb.] 49 N. W. 353; Ott v. McHenry, 2 W. Va. 73. There are decisions holding a contrary doctrine but the weight of authority is as stated.—See Texas & P. R. Co. v. Voliva [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 501, 91 S. W. 354.

71. District court rule requiring motions to be heard two entire days before adjournment is not mandatory and where hearing was postponed at the suggestion of counsel of the successful party until the day before the last day of the term, it was an abuse of discretion for the court to dismiss it. Houston Saengerbund v. Dunn [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 699, 92 S. W. 429.

72. His action thereon is conclusive unless discretion is abused. Pacific Pav. Co. v. Diggins [Cal. App.] 87 P. 415. Mere lapse of time, four months, is insufficient to show an abuse of discretion where it is not shown that the motion could have been presented or heard at some time during the expired period. Id.

73. Where the hearing of the motion has been set for a future day in term time by an order requiring the movent to file a brief of the evidence on or before a specified date the court could not by ex parte order before the hearing and at a time when the court was not in session extend the time for filing the brief. But the court might refuse to dismiss because the brief was not filed within the time specified on the day set for hearing if the movent was not chargeable with laches. Broadway Nat. Bank v. Kendrick, 124 Ga. 1053, 53 S. E. 576. Where attorneys for the parties have signed a stipulation waiving notice of the time and place of hearing and passing on a motion for a new trial, the notice may be heard and passed upon without notice to the adverse party. Buckle v McConaghy [Idaho] 88 P. 100.

74. Where a motion was heard and determined on the merits without objection that the court was without authority to entertain it, the discontinuance of the motion resulting from failure of the record to show a continuance was waived. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Hinton [Ala.] 40 So. 988.

75. Fisk v. Chicago Water Chute Co., 119 Ill. App. 536.

76. A court has no authority to rule on a motion for a new trial which has not been filed and is not before it, in anticipation that such motion may be filed. Carmack v. Erdenberger [Neb.] 110 N. W. 315.

77. Under the rule that a new trial shall not be granted except on motion in writing, "stating the reasons relied upon in its support," the court in refusing a motion may not grant it on grounds not stated herein. Peirson v. Boston El. R. Co., 191 Mass. 223, 77 N. E. 769.

78. See 6 C. L. 809.

79. Code Civ. Proc. § 343, expressly provides that affidavits must be filed in support of a motion on the ground of newly-discovered evidence. Soper v. Crutcher, 29 Ky. L. R. 1080, 96 S. W. 907.

80. On an application for new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, the affidavits should explicitly state the new facts. Grigsby v. Wolven [S. D.] 108 N. W. 250. An affidavit on the ground of newly-discovered evidence must show that such evidence could not have been discovered at the former trial by the exercise of ordinary diligence. Wheeling Corrugating Co. v. Armstrong, 97 N. Y. S. 960.

81. See 6 C. L. 808.

82. Goodwin v. Blanchard, 73 N. H. 550, 64 A. 22.

no legal right to bring before the court for examination persons who have given affidavits in opposition to his motion.[83] A new trial will not be granted on affidavits of jurors impeaching their verdict,[84] nor will their affidavits be received to show that they misconceived one of the issues submitted.[85] Where it is claimed that the jury misconceived the issues, the court may call them together and inquire how they construed the question.[86]

Order granting or refusing new trial.[87]—An order granting a new trial operates to vacate the verdict and judgment.[88] Where a new trial is granted for error in sustaining a plea to the counterclaim which arose out of the same contract upon which the action was based, a new trial may be granted as to the entire action.[89] The order need not state the ground upon which the motion is granted.[90] An order, which does not designate on which of several grounds mentioned it was based, will not be disturbed if justified on any.[91] In overruling the motion, the court may state the effect of the testimony on his own mind.[92]

§ 4. Proceedings at new trial[93] are de nova.[94]

§ 5. Arrest of judgment. A. Nature and grounds.[95]—A motion in arrest lies only for errors apparent on the face of the record.[96] It will reach a jurisdictional error apparent from the pleadings,[97] or error which cannot be cured by amendment,[98] or where objection cannot be raised thereto by demurrer,[99] or a de-

83. The hearing on the motion is within the discretion of the judge. Goodwin v. Blanchard, 73 N. H. 550, 64 A. 22. The trial judge may in his discretion receive affidavits or other evidence to refresh his recollection of what occurred at the trial, but a party has no absolute right to file such affidavits, and they may be stricken out. Hasper v. Wietcamp [Ind.] 79 N. E. 191.

84. Jurors may not impeach their verdict. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Gentry [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 860, 98 S. W. 226. A juror may not directly or indirectly impeach the verdict. Cable Co. v. Walker [Ga.] 56 S. E. 108. Cannot be impeached by affidavits of misconduct by the jurors. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 671, 91 S. W. 375. This rule is changed by the act of April 24, 1905. Id. Affidavits of jurors will not be received to impeach their verdict. Flynt v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 648, 91 S. W. 864.

85. Winslow v. Smith [N. H.] 65 A. 108.

86. Winslow v. Smith [N. H.] 65 A. 108. On a motion based on the ground of misconduct of jurors whose affidavits in opposition to the motion were admitted without objection, it is discretionary with the court to allow the jurors to be examined relative to the statements made in their affidavits, and it is error to rule as a matter of law that a party has not such right. Goodwin v. Blanchard, 73 N. H. 550, 64 A. 22.

87. See 6 C. L. 810.

88. In an action against two for conspiracy where a verdict was returned in favor of one and against the other. James v. Evans [C. C. A.] 149 F. 136. Where a verdict is returned against one defendant and in favor of another, the granting of a new trial before judgment entered as to one operated to restore the status of the case as it existed prior to trial. Barfield v. Coker & Co., 73 S. C. 181, 53 S. E. 170. Where judgment is entered against joint tort feasors which by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1337 is but one judgment, the grant of a new trial as to one is necessarily the grant of a new trial as to the other (St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 171); but under the rule that a judgment in an action against tort feasors may be given against one and in favor of another, where a judgment is rendered against two or more, the granting of a new trial as to one does not vacate the judgment as to the other (Fowden v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. [Cal.] 86 P. 178).

90. Rev. St. 1899, § 801, requiring the court to state the grounds upon which a new trial is granted is not mandatory. Pierce v. Lee, 197 Mo. 480, 95 S. W. 426.

94. Where a retrial is necessary because of disqualification of the trial judge before signing the judgment, it must be an entire new trial and not on the evidence submitted at the former trial. Williamson v. Randolph, 111 App. Div. 539, 97 N. Y. S. 949. A mistrial does not result where a judge becomes disqualified to act on a motion for a new trial. Stern v. Wabash R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 181.

95. See 6 C. L. 811.

96. A motion in arrest is based upon the record proper. Danley v. Hibbard, 222 Ill. 88, 78 N. E. 39.

97. The question of want of jurisdiction in a divorce case because of failure of the petition to allege that plaintiff had resided in the state for the statutory period may be raised for the first time by motion in arrest. Stansbury v. Stansbury, 118 Mo. App. 427, 94 S. W. 566.

98. A motion in arrest goes only to such substantial defects in the pleadings as cannot be reached by demurrer. Enright v. Gibson, 119 Ill. App. 411. That the action is prematurely brought cannot be reached. Id. A judgment cannot be arrested for any defect in the pleadings or record which is fective verdict;[1] but where the complaint states a cause of action and the evidence tends to sustain it, a motion in arrest is properly denied.[2] A motion will not lie where an action is erroneously entitled case when it should have been entitled trespass, where the technical difference between the two forms of action has been abolished.[3] Under the rule that a party in default may appear at the time of assessment of damages and cross-examine witnesses against him, but for no other purpose, a party in default may not file a motion in arrest without firts having the default set aside.[4]

(§ 5) B. Motions and proceedings thereon.[5]—The motion must be filed within the period prescribed,[6] but may be amended at a subsequent term.[7] In considering the motion, the court does not look into the evidence.[8] On a motion based on insufficiency of the pleadings, every intendment is indulged in favor of the declaration.[9]

(§ 5) C. Effect.[10]

NON-NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

Non-negotiable paper.[11]—The term "non-negotiable paper" comprehends those contracts for the payment of money which possess the form and other essentials of bills and notes but lack the characteristic of negotiability.[12] Such instruments import a consideration [13] and may be entitled to grace.[14] A non-negotiable instrument aided by the verdict or amendable as matter of form. Reid v. Hearn [Ga.] 56 S. E. 129. Under a statute providing that where a complaint does not state facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to relief, it may be taken advantage of by motion in arrest, the insufficiency of a complaint in failing to allege that a claim for damages was presented within sixty days after accrual of the cause, as required by statute, may be raised. Free v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 143.

99. A judgment obtained after appearance in a short note case is in personam and nothing that could have been urged as ground for quashing the attachment can be availed of to arrest entry of judgment. Philbin v. Thurn, 103 Md. 342, 63 A. 571. Defects in pleadings which are of an amendable nature, and matters which might have been pleaded in abatement, cannot be urged in arrest of judgment authorized by the pleadings. Huger v. Cunningham, 126 Ga. 684, 56 S. E. 64.

1. Under a statute providing that, where an amount is found due a defendant on a counterclaim, the jury must state such amount in their verdict, failure to find either for or against defendant on a counterclaim is ground for motion in arrest. Winkelman v. Maddox, 119 Mo. App. 658, 95 S. W. 308. Failure to find affirmatively either for or against a certain defendant on a counterclaim is ground for motion in arrest by other defendants Id.

7. While a motion in arrest must be made at the term at which judgment is rendered, it may be amended at a subsequent term by adding new and distinct grounds of attack. To so amend is not to introduce a new cause of action but simply to amplify the pleadings by assigning additional reasons why the judgment should be arrested because not supported by the record. A. may be transferred by indorsement,[15] but the assignee takes it subject to all equitable defenses available between the parties.[16] Where execution of an instrument is denied, it is not admissible in evidence until such fact is established.[17] The fact that a note given in payment of a stock subscription is non-negotiable does not relieve the maker from liability as to creditors induced thereby to give credit to the corporation.[18] Where negotiable city bonds are void for want of power to execute them, recovery cannot be had thereon as non-negotiable instruments.[19]

NOTARIES AND COMMISSIONERS OF DEEDS.[20]

A county attorney in Texas is not disqualified from holding at the same time the office of notary public.[21] It will be presumed that a notary has a seal[22] and courts take judicial notice of the seals of notaries.[23]

The official acts of notaries are presumed to have been regular,[24] and the acts of a notary de facto are entitled to the recognition accorded those of a notary de jure.[25] The failure of a notary to certify when his term of office will expire, as required by statute, does not invalidate his certificate.[26] Interest may disqualify in certain cases,[27] but a notary's indirect pecuniary interest in a note does not disqualify him to protest it for nonpayment,[28] and the acknowledgment of a grantor may be taken by a notary in the employ of the grantee where he has no interest in the property.[29] The jurisdiction of a notary is confined to the limits designated in the commission of the governor.[30]

§ 1. Bona fide purchasers and the doctrine of notice.[37]—The doctrine of bona fide purchase without notice is that no title or lien is ever allowed to prevail against one who takes an incumbrance upon property, or an interest therein, or a conveyance thereof, in good faith without notice of the title or lien, and for a valuable consideration parted with before such notice.[38] This doctrine applies only in favor of

33. Barnard v. Schuler [Minn.] 110 N. W. 966. A notary who certifies to the acknowledgment of an instrument without personal knowledge as to the indentity of the party appearing before him and without a careful investigation as to such identity is guilty of negligence (Id.), and he and his sureties are liable for all damages proximately resulting therefrom (Id.). Evidence sufficient to sustain finding of negligence. Id.

Petition alleging that a certificate of acknowledgment was false, that defendant, a notary, made it, and that plaintiff parted with money on the faith of it, states a prima facie case of negligence (Blaes v. Commonwealth, 29 Ky. L. R. 308, 96 S. W. 802), to avoid which defendant must show that he acted in good faith and with due care in ascertaining the identity of the appearing party and that he was nevertheless deceived (Id.).

A mortgagee without notice of his mortgagor's fraudulent title is an innocent purchaser for value and his title is superior to that of creditors. Gilcreast v. Bartlett [N. H.] 64 A. 767. Interests or estates in lands descended to heirs from whom such interests or estates are acquired by innocent purchasers for value and before the commencement of a suit to charge them with the payment of claims against the ancestors, cannot be lawfully or equitably subject to such charges. Scoggin v. Hudgins [Ark.] 94 S. W. 684. Where a deed of trust included land which had been conveyed to another, and the deed was not accepted by the grantee until a reconveyance was made to the grantor, and the grantee had no notice actual or constructive of any reservation of right to the land in question in the person from whom the reconveyance had been compelled, the grantee in the deed of trust is an innocent holder for value against such person and the fact that the grantor had previously committed fraud with the third person from whom the reconveyance had been obtained was not enough to put the grantee on inquiry as to whether the reconveyance represented the true status of title. Smith v. Wofford [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 815, 97 S. W. 143. A secret equity cannot be asserted to defeat the title of an innocent purchaser at a judicial sale. Scarborough v. the purchaser of a legal title and not of a bare equity,[39] and in any event one who takes with notice of rights of third persons in the property takes subject to such rights.[40] One suing on an admitted legal title to quiet title against an equity is not within the rule that the doctrine of bona fide purchase can be used to protect but not to establish title.[41] A trustee in bankruptcy, while a purchaser, is in no sense an innocent purchaser, but takes only such title as the bankrupt had.[42] Judgment creditor who buys at execution sale may be a bona fide purchaser.[43]

Requisites of a bona fide purchaser.[44]—A person claiming exemption from prior claims or liens has the burden of showing that he was a bona fide purchaser for value.[45]

Valuable consideration.[46]—While the consideration need not be commensurate with the actual value of the property, it must be valuable,[47] it must be actually paid,[48] although not necessarily in money,[49] or the purchaser must be irrevocably bound for its payment.[50] There is a conflict of decisions as to whether an ante-

45. In an action to quiet title a party claiming protection as a bona fide purchaser must deny notice of the fraud, although notice thereof is not charged in the plaintiff's bill, and a failure of the complaint to allege notice does not make the complaint bad. Rozell v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co., 76 Ark. 525, 89 S. W. 469. To entitle one to protection as a bona fide purchaser of lands previously conveyed by his grantor, he must allege and prove not only want of notice but actual payment of the consideration independently of recitals in the deed as to such payment. Johnson v. Georgia Loan & Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 593. A claimant under a conveyance who has notice that the grantee in the conveyance was in a fiduciary relation toward the grantor is charged with showing that the contract of conveyance was fair. Jackson v. Grisson, 196 Mo. 624, 94 S. W. 263. A claimant under a junior title who is attempting to defeat the title of the holder of a prior unrecorded deed from the same grantor for the same land has the burden of showing by evidence outside the recitals in his conveyance that he purchased for valuable consideration and without notice of the previous conveyance. Kimball v. Houston Oil Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 41, 94 S. W. 423. If a party relies upon record to establish his title to realty and to relieve him of knowledge of secret liens known to his grantor, the record itself must show a chain of conveyances which discloses a perfect title in the grantor. Weatherington v. Smith [Neb.] 109 N. W. 381. Positive evidence of a grantee of land who bought after the levy of an attachment thereon, notice of which was not filed in the clerk's office, that she knew nothing of the attachment, and the evidence of a disinterested witness that he had investigated the title of the land in question and had found no liens recorded against it and had advised grantee to purchase outweighed the evidence of a witness who testified with some uncertainty that he had talked with grantee and she had asked him why he had attaced the land and he had replied, that he had not done it but the sureties on the note sued upon had done so. Boltz v. Boain, 28 Ky. L. R. 842, 90 S. W. 593.

47. Reed v. Munn [C. C. A.] 148 F. 737. Where the price paid was four-fifths the value asserted by complainants in their bill, it was not so inadequate as to put defendant purchaser on notice of an defect in the title. Goerz v. Barstow [C. C. A.] 148 F. 552.

48. The burden is on one claiming as a bona fide holder to prove such payment independently of the recitals in the deed as to such payment. Johnson v. Georgia Loan & Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 593. Revisal 1905, vol. 1, § 980, for lack of timely registration, postpones or subordinates only a deed which is older in date to creditors and purchasers for value. As against volunteers or donees, the older deed, though not registered, will as a rule prevail. Tyner v. Barnes, 142 N. C. 110, 54 S. E. 1008.

The attaching of property by a creditor does not put him in a position of a bona fide purchaser as against another who has a prior claim of which the attaching creditor knew nothing before the attachment was made. Tishomingo Sav. Inst. v. Johnson, Nesbitt & Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 503. Grantee in conveyance made from gratitude for past support not bona fide purchaser. Sunter v. Sunter, 190 Mass. 449, 77 N. E. 497. Assumption of incumbrance not payment. Wasserman v. Metzger, 105 Va. 744, 54 S. E. 893.

49. Definitely extending the time of payment of an existing debt extended in consideration of the debtor's giving a note and chattel mortgage makes the payee and mortgagee, where he has no notice of a prior lien, a bona fide purchaser and his title will be protected as against the claim of the prior lienor. Snellgrove v. Evans [Ala.] 40 So. 557.

cedent indebtedness is a valuable consideration.[51] A judgment creditor who purchases land under his own execution without paying money, but crediting the amount of the bid on his judgment, is not a purchaser for value.[52]

Good faith.[53]

Notice or knowledge.[54]—In order that one may, as a bona fide purchaser, claim priority over the equities of third persons, he must not, at the time of the purchase,[55] have had either actual or constructive notice of such equities.[56] However, a purchaser with notice from a bona fide purchaser takes free from equities.[57] Registration or record,[58] or notice or knowledge of facts which would have put an ordinarily

51. A bill of sale received in payment of an antecedent debt protects the vendee to the same extent as had there been a new consideration, if taken in good faith, and without an intention to defraud the other creditors of the vendor, the question of good faith being for the jury. Starr v. Dow [Neb.] 108 N. W. 1065. And one is a bona fide purchaser who, in addition to the discharge of an antecedent debt, releases the security of a trust agreement. Grand Rapids Nat. Bank v. Ford, 143 Mich. 402, 13 Det. Leg. N. 10, 107 N. W. 76.

52. Sturdivant v. Cook [Ark.] 98 S. W. 964.

53, 54. See 6 C. L. 815.

55. The rights of a bona fide purchaser are not affected by subsequent notice (Adams v. Brownell-Drews Lumber Co., 115 La. 179, 38 So. 957), even a record being notice only to subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers (New England Mortg. Sec. Co. v. Fry, 143 Ala. 637, 42 So. 57). Where notice of a trust agreement is not received until after judgment rendered, a sale under the execution and payment of the purchase money, the purchaser takes a good title although the sheriff's deed is not executed until after notice, the deed relating back to the time of the judgment. Reed v. Munn [C. C. A.] 148 F. 737. Murray v. Barnes [Ala.] 40 So. 348. Where two cotenants divided the property and each took possession of the share allotted to him, a purchaser who buys from one of the cotenants the share which belonged to the other, with notice of such other's claim acquires no rights against the latter. Seawell v. Young, 77 Ark. 309, 91 S. W. 544. A vendee with actual notice of an unrecorded deed acquires no title. Hunt v. Nance, 28 Ky. L. R. 1188, 92 S. W. 6. And a deed by a trustee in bankruptcy of one holding a deed, which in fact is but a mortgage, to one who has notice of the character of such holding passes no title superior to a mortgage previously executed by the bankrupt's grantor. Vallely v. First Nat. Bank [N. D.] 106 N. 127. The bona fide purchaser by unrecorded deed will be protected against the execution creditor who purchases at the execution sale, if the latter has notice of the older equity before the sale. Moore v. Faris, 29 Ky. L. R. 294, 92 S. W. 592. Purchasers from the grantee of an incompetent person cannot take the position of innocent purchasers for value when they had known for many years of the insanity of the incompetent and of the consequent defect in his grantee's title. Rush v. Handley [Ky.] 97 S. W. 726. A mortgagee of crops with actual notice of the existence of a farm contract by which the owner of the land was to receive one-third the crop is not a bona fide purchaser. Agne v. Skewis-Moen Co. [Minn.] 107 N. W. 415. A vendee who buys with knowledge of a prior valid agreement to sell to another may be compelled by such other to specifically perform. Smith v. Umstead [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 442. Any person who receives property knowing that it is subject to a trust, and that it has been transferred in violation of the duty or power of the trustee, takes it subject to the right, not only of the cestui que trust but also of the trustee, to reclaim possession of the property. Mansfield v. Wardlow [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 928, 91 S. W. 859. The equity of the beneficiary in property to which the legal title is in another is superior to the title of a grantee of such other who takes with actual notice of such equity. Latham v. Scribner [Wash.] 88 P. 203. A vendee who takes with notice that another has a valid equitable title under his vendor is held in equity as holding the legal title in trust for the benefit of the first purchaser and equity will require him to convey the legal title to the first purchaser. Reel v. Reel, 59 W. Va. 106, 52 S. E. 1023. Where a trustee holding under an express trust uses the trust property in the purchase and conveyance of land to another, in violation of the trust and with notice of it, it creates a constructive, not an express, trust in that third person, and laches will apply in favor of such person as a defense against the enforcement of such trust. Newman v. Newman [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 377. Statement to prospective purchaser that one would have had an interest in the land had a certain person done as he promised not sufficient to put on inquiry as to alleged equity. Pheby v. prudent man on inquiry,[59] or such as upon reasonable investigation would have revealed the claims of the other party,[60] is equivalent to actual knowledge. But while a purchaser must exercise due diligence to ascertain the status of his grantor,[61] notice will not be imputed unless the circumstances warrant the court in saying that knowledge ought to have been acquired but for the purchaser's gross negligence.[62] Visible user,[63] or possession,[64] unless such possession is consistent with the record

Where warehouse receipts gave defendants in an action for the conversion of mortgaged cotton notice that one J. had connection with the cotton and the registration of plaintiffs' mortgage gave notice of their claim on all cotton raised by J. or his tenants, defendants were charged with notice that the cotton in question was raised by J. D. P. Haynes & Bro. v. Gray & Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 615. Where M. J. J. joined with M. J. in a deed, this fact was sufficient to put the grantee on inquiry as to M. J. J. and such inquiry would have disclosed a recorded mortgage from M. J. J. to F., and notice of this would have led, on investigation, to discovering an unrecorded deed from M. J. to M. J. J., with knowledge of all which facts defendant was charged in an action in the nature of ejectment. Creel v. Keith [Ala.] 41 So. 780. Actual notice imports all the notice which the record could afford. Hence, where a mortgage was given on sheep to secure the payment of two notes and one of the mortgagees on discounting one of the notes informed the cashier of the bank that the payees had a mortgage on maker's sheep, this was sufficient notice of the second note although no mention was made of it. Williams v. First Nat. Bank [Or.] 87 P. 890. So one having notice of the existence of a mortgage is chargeable with notice that the rate of interest thereon or on the note which it is given to secure is liable to an increase upon the happening of certain contingencies. 61. Attebery v. O'Neil, 42 Wash. 487, 85 P. 270.

62. Reed v. Munn [C. C. A.] 148 F. 737. A covenant in a deed against loss from lawsuits and taxes, which was part of a printed form of deed commonly used in the locus in quo, was of no significance to an unprofessional woman. Goerz v. Barstow [C. C. A.] 148 F. 562. When the record showed title in a wife, and the state when it took title took the precaution to obtain affidavits from the wife and the husband that the wife owned the land in question, which was conveyed along with a large quantity of other land, the facts that the deed to the state was executed by both the husband and the wife, that the certificate of the state's agents to the controller reciting the purchase repeatedly referred to both the husband and the wife as the vendors of the property in question and requested payment out of the purchase price of certain lien which were debts of the husband and directed payment of the residue of the purchaseprice to both the husband and the wife, are not sufficient to show that the state had notice of any interest of the husband in the property in question, if it is not shown that the husband had no interest in the other property conveyed and if it appears that the husband had been the owner of the property in question and had conveyed it to a stranger several years before there had been any conveyance of the same to himself or to his wife, and it is not shown that the judgments against him were recovered subsequent to his said conveyance to the stranger. Trombly v. Turner, 101 N. Y. S. 27.

63. One who has actual and constructive notice of an easement in his grant stands in exactly the same position with reference to the easement as his grantor had stood previously to the grant. Rittenhouse v. Swango [Ky.] 97 S. W. 743. Where the grantee of land bought with knowledge that a railroad operated a line thereon connected by switch with its main line, this was such notice as would ordinarily suggest inquiry as to its rights and claims in the matter. Valentine v. Long Island R. Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 849. A grantee who takes with knowledge of a covenant of his grantor to open a street through the lands conveyed and knowing the position of defendant's pipes as laid through the premises acquires no greater rights than his grantor had to object to defendant's acts. Jayne v. Cortland Waterworks Co., 107 App. Div. 517, 95 N. Y. S. 227.

Exchange Bank, 126 Ga. 821, 56 S. E. 97. And it is immaterial that such holding is under an unrecorded instrument. Denton v. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1218, 96 S. W. 1112. Where a grantor of land continued in possession after she was induced to convey without understanding the nature and character of her act and without consideration, the continuance of her occupancy constituted notice to purchasers from her grantee of her equitable rights in the property. Shiff & Son v. Andress [Ala.] 40 So. 824. Possession by a third person under a lien at the time of the execution of a chattel mortgage is such notice to the mortgagee as to subordinate his lien to that of the person in possession.

title,[65] is notice to all the world of the title and rights of the person in possession and of all facts connecting therewith which reasonable inquiry would disclose.[66] There is a conflict as to whether one claiming under a quitclaim deed is a bona fide purchaser;[67] but the significance of such a deed as a circumstance to show bad faith is lost when the purchaser acts in good faith and without notice.[68] Notice may also be imputed to one from certain representative relations in which he may stand.[69]

Wood v. West Pratt Coal Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 959. Where the mortgagee of the grantee of an incompetent knew that the property was in possession of a third party, who claimed to hold it for the incompetent, such possession, which was the possession of the incompetent, was notice to the mortgagee of all rights the incompetent had in the premises and he was not a bona fide purchaser. Peck v. Bartelme, 220 Ill. 199, 77 N. E. 216. Where the grantee when he purchased land saw a partition fence and knew that a third person was in possession of the land or one side thereof, and that such person and his grantor cultivated the land up to the fence on their respective sides, these facts were sufficient notice to put him upon inquiry as to such third person's claim or right in the land on his side of the fence. Adams v. Betz [Ind.] 78 N. E. 649. A vendee of land in the possession of a tenant takes the title subject to the unexpired term. Stone v. Snell [Neb.] 109 N. W. 750. Possession of one of several tracts covered by an unrecorded deed is notice only as to the tract occupied. Brooks v. Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 718.

65. Where the grantee had the records examined and found a warranty deed, absolute in form, from the third party in possession to his grantor, and the party in possession explained that he was there as agent for such grantor, his possession was not notice to the grantee that the recorded deed was intended only as a mortgage. Causey v. Handley [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 578, 98 S. W. 431. So the occupation of land by minor children with their parents is entirely consistent with the full, legal, and equitable title in the parents, and is not of itself any notice of a claim on the part of the children. Attebery v. O'Neil, 42 Wash. 487, 85 P. 270. And where the record title is in a father, his son's occupancy with him is not notice to a vendee of the father of any claim of title or right in the son, the presumption being that the son was living with the father under the father's possession and not that the father was living with the son under the son's possession distinct from that of the father. Nagelspach v. Shaw [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 839, 109 N. W. 843. Possession by widow of mortgagor being consistent with mortgage is not notice of a claim of homestead. Weber v. McCleverty [Cal.] 86 P. 706.

66. Niles v. Cooper [Minn.] 107 N. W. 744.

67. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3346, a quit claim deed "is of itself notice to the purchaser that he is accepting a doubtful title, and is sufficient to put him upon inquiry regarding it." Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Stryker [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 245. A claimant under a quitclaim deed, which follows a trust deed which was foreclosed, is no such innocent purchaser for value as would entitle him to avoid the effect of outstanding equities, but is charged with the notice of the contents of the trust deed foreclosed, of the constitution and by-laws of the building and loan association which was the beneficiary set forth in the trust deed, and with all that is disclosed by his chain of title, as well as by statutes of the state read into the transaction. Cobe v. Lovan, 193 Mo. 235, 92 S. W. 93. One who purchases from a grantee in a quitclaim deed is not a bona fide purchaser, but is presumed to have knowledge of all outstanding equities as against his grantor. Schmidt v. Musson [S. D.] 107 N. W. 367. One claiming under either a quitclaim deed or a deed with covenant of special warranty may make the defense of bona fide purchaser. Dunfee v. Childs, 59 W. Va. 225, 53 S. E. 209. A memorandum in a private book of the existence of a quitclaim deed would not be admissible against the grantee of a fee owner unless it could be shown that he had seen the memorandum prior to his purchase even if it could be admissible under any circumstances. Grigsby v. Wolven [S. D.] 108 N. W. 250.

68. When a purchaser of real estate accepts a quitclaim deed from a vendee in possession under a recorded warranty deed, after examining the records, which did not indicate any equity in the grantor of his vendor, and after inquiring of the notary who took the acknowledgment of the deed and the witness to the signatures, both of whom informed him that the transaction, so far as they knew or could discover, was in good faith, and he has no information that would lead him to suppose that there is any equity remaining in such grantor, he takes the title free from any equity in the grantor of his vendor based on the claim that the title and possession of the property were obtained by fraud. Fountain v. Kenney, 71 Kan. 642, 81 P. 179.

69. One may be bound by the notice or knowledge of his attorney (Turner v. Kuehnle [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 478; Weinberg v. Schrank, 100 N. Y. S. 800), but is not chargeable with notice of frauds attempted or committed by the attorney before his employment as such (Goerz v. Barstow [C. C. A.] 148 F. 562). Notice to an agent is notice to his principal (In re Nassau, 140 F. 912), but such notice must be predicated on notice to the agent while engaged in the business of his agency (Reed v. Munn [C. C. A.] 148 F. 737). Hence a corporation is not chargeable with notice of facts coming to the knowledge of a stockholder or director prior to the organization of the corporation. Id. Knowledge acquired by officer of corporation in investigation of title but omitted from his report is imputed to the corporation. Armstrong v. Ashley, 27 S. Ct. 270, 51 Law. Ed. ——.

§ 2. Statutory records or filings as constructive notice. A. In general.[70]—An agreement giving the right of occupation to erect poles and wires need not be recorded to make the occupation rightful.[71]

(§ 2) B. Deed and mortgage records. Eligibility to record.[72]—Statutes relating to recording have reference to the legal registry of acknowledged or proven papers,[73] and the record of a paper without such acknowledgment or proof is a nullity.[74] The recording of a deed procured by fraud will be enjoined.[75]

Necessity, operation and effect of recording.[76]—While recording a deed is not essential to delivery,[77] it may take the place of actual manual delivery and formal acceptance.[78] Registration of a deed is not, however, conclusive evidence of its delivery.[79] The purpose of the recording laws is that the true state of the title may be represented,[80] and that purchasers may be protected from being undone by prior secret conveyances or encumbrances.[81] Hence, failure to record has the effect, in the absence of notice, of subordinating an unrecorded instrument to a recorded one,[82] although one with actual knowledge or constructive notice that others are acting to their detriment in reliance upon their conveyances is in no position to attack them.[83] There is, however, some conflict as to whether this is true as to the liens of creditors.[84] Of two recorded titles the older is the better.[85]

73. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4624, to entitle a deed to record the proof of a subscribing witness must show that the witness signed at the request of the grantor, but under the statute of 1846 this was not required. Williams v. Cessna [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 162, 95 S. W. 1106. Where a mortgage, executed and delivered to A, was acknowledged by the parties executing the same before B, a notary public, and there was nothing upon the face of the instrument which disclosed any interest therein in any third person, it was entitled to record notwithstanding the fact that both A and B were officers of a bank having an undisclosed interest therein. Kee v. Ewing [Okl.] 87 P. 297. Where a statute provides that persons holding unregistered deeds executed prior to a certain date could have the same registered by making affidavit that the grantor and witnesses were dead or could not be found and that such person could not make proof of their hand-writing, "provided that it shall also be made to appear by affidavit that affiant believes such deed to be a bona fide deed and executed by the grantor therein named," an affidavit by a person offering one of this class of deeds which affidavit says that "he claims title under a deed from," etc., does not conform to the provision in the statute and such deed is not entitled to registration. Allen v. Burch, 142 N. C. 524, 55 S. E. 354.

The act relating to the recording of assignments of mortgages (Laws 1899, p. 340, c. 168), does not restrict the methods by which a negotiable note and mortgage securing it may be transferred, nor prevent a transfer of the ownership of such paper by mere delivery. The statute was intended as a protection to mortgagors and the only penalty for not recording the assignment is that all payments made by the mortgagor to the mortgagee or to any one who appears to be the owner shall be credited to the mortgagor although never received by the assignee. Anthony v. Brennan [Kan.] 87 P. 1136.

In Louisiana the registration of an act of sale signed by the vendor alone will effect a registry of the sale. Lepine v. Marrero, 116 La. 941, 41 So. 216, overruling Hutchinson v. Rice, 109 La. 29, 33 So. 57.

82. Swanstrom v. Washington Trust Co., 41 Wash. 561, 83 P. 1112. If a purchaser in good faith acquires from the patentee or his heirs lands against which no adverse title is recorded, he cannot be affected by equities between his vendor and other persons of which the public records afford no information. Adams v. Brownell-Drews Lumber Co., 115 La. 179, 38 So. 957. The assignee of a mortgage who neglects to record the assignment cannot enforce the mortgage against one who buys the property and satisfies the mortgage by paying the amount thereof to the record mortgagee, who absconds, although the assignment is recorded ahead of the absconding record mortgagee's deed, or satisfaction. Marling v. Nommensen, 127 Wis. 363, 106 N. W. 844. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 496, a mortgagee who fails to record his mortgage is not entitled to priority over creditors of a bankrupt who have become such during the period of withholding. In re Doran, 148 F. 327.

83. Kessler & Co. v. Ensley Co., 141 F. 130.

84. Code, § 499, providing that a deed shall take effect against creditors without Sufficiency, operation and effect of record.[86]—While recording does not operate to cure jurisdictional defects in tax proceedings,[87] the lapse of time after recording may have practically that effect.[88] Where the statute provides that an instrument operates as a record from the date of delivery to the recording officer, a mistake in transcribing,[89] or the delay or neglect of the officer in actually recording said instrument, if it was promptly and properly indexed in the book required by law to be kept for that purpose,[90] does not affect the rights of the party interested in favor of a subsequent purchaser. Nor will he be prejudiced when, after recording, the records are destroyed by fire.[91] But where the statute places upon the person offering an instrument for record the burden of seeing that it is properly recorded, a record in a wrong book is not effective against a subsequent bona fide purchase.[92] The record is contructive notice to all subsequent purchasers,[93] of those matters which are stated in the record,[94] which may fairly and reasonably be implied there-notice only from the time of recording, a judgment creditor who files a bill to reach an equitable interest of his debtor has priority over an earlier grantee of such equitable interest who fails to record his deed until after bill filed and process served. Ohio Nat. Bank v. Berlin, 26 App. D. C. 218. An attachment made in good faith and without notice will take precedence over a prior unrecorded deed of the same property. Haines v. Connell [Or.] 87 P. 265. But Civ. Code 1895, § 2727, providing that an unrecorded mortgage is "postponed to all other liens created or obtained prior to the actual record of the mortgage," refers only to liens created or obtained during the lifetime of the mortgagor and a mere general judgment against the estate of a decedent can neither take precedence over, nor stand upon an equal footing with, an unrecorded mortgage executed by him. Hawes v. Glover, 126 Ga. 305, 55 S. E. 62.

85. Banton v. Herrick, 101 Me. 134, 63 A. 671. Kee v. Ewing [Okl.] 87 P. 297. Where two mortgages are executed and filed the same day, actual priority may be determined, the legal fiction of no fractions of a day being inapplicable. New England Mortg. Sec. Co. v. Fry, 143 Ala. 637, 42 So. 57. When two mortgages on the same land, executed by a mortgagor to two different mortgagees, are filed for record at the same time by the common agent of the mortgagees, and no instructions are given, the priority of the liens is determined presumptively by the order in which the instruments are numbered by the register. Wolf v. Edmonston [Minn.] 109 N. W. 233.

86, 87. See 6 C. L. 821.

88. Under Mills' Ann. St. 3904, which provides that no action for recovery of land sold for taxes shall lie unless the same be brought within five years after the execution and delivery of a deed therefor by the treasurer, the fact that a tax deed regular on its face was actually void for irregularites does not prevent the operation of the statute against an owner who did not begin action for recovery of the land for more than five years after the tax deed was recorded; for the tax deed constituted color of title. Williams v. Conroy [Colo.] 83 P. 959.

89. Chapman & Co. v. Johnson, 142 Ala. 632, 38 So. 797.

90. Sawyer v. Vermont Loan & Trust Co., 41 Wash. 524, 84 P. 8. Where a mortgage is indexed according to the requirements of the statute, the index is sufficient notice to send a purchaser of the property on which the mortgage is a lien to the record of the mortgage for information. Mohr v. Scherer, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 509. The requirements of the act of April 22, 1856 (P. L. 532), are not complied with by indexing the name of judgment defendant as he is commonly known, "but its requirements are met when the first or Christian name of a defendant is so indexed that a prospective purchaser examining the index ought to know from it of the existence of a lien against the property which he is about to purchase." Burns v. Ross [Pa.] 64 A. 526, holding that a purchaser from the heirs of Francis Ross is bound to look for judgment liens indexed against Frank Ross during the lifetime of Francis. The presumption is, after a lapse of time and nothing to the contrary appearing, that marginal entries of the satisfaction of trust deeds and releases of mortgages were made in compliance with the law. Metz v. Wright, 116 Mo. App. 131, 92 S. W. 1125.

91. Manwarring v. Missouri Lumber & Min. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 762.

92. The Michigan statute being construed so to place the burden and providing (Comp. Laws, § 8980) that deeds absolute in form and not intended as mortgages or securities shall be recorded in one book and mortgages and deeds intended as securities shall be recorded in another, a deed absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage which is recorded in the first book, is not effective. Grand Rapids Nat. Bank v. Ford, 143 Mich. 402, 13 Det. Leg. N. 10, 107 N. W. 76.

93. A purchaser of land without actual notice of a prior mortgage, who purchased after the execution of the mortgage, but before it was recorded, at an execution sale for a debt incurred before the execution of the mortgage, is not affected by subsequent recording of the mortgage. Williams v. Jones, 74 S. C. 268, 54 S. E. 558.

94. Mansfield v. Wardlow [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 928, 91 S. W. 859; Jamaica Sav. Bank v. Butler [Vt.] 65 A. 92. If the record of a deed shows the retention of a lien upon the land to secure a part of the purchase money, this alone is notice to anyone that the title was still in grantor in the deed, or it was at least sufficient to put anyone on inquiry to ascertain whether or not the purchase money had been paid. Staley v. Stone [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 827, 92 S. W. 1017.

from,[95] or which might have been discovered upon a reasonable investigation of the facts so disclosed or implied;[96] but the record of instruments not in their chain of title is no notice to purchasers,[97] and a party is not charged with constructive notice of anything that the record does not show.[98]

Recording officers and administration of the act.[99]

95. Gray v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, 2 Cal. App. 653, 84 P. 280. A recorded plat of land and recorded deeds of portions of land in said plat, showing that a portion of the land platted was intended to be dedicated to the public use, is sufficient notice of the dedication to a subsequent vendee of the land in question. Street v. Leete [Conn.] 65 A. 373. The record of an instrument creating a trust is constructive notice to a purchaser of the trust property and to all those who claim under him, not only of the existence of the instrument, "but of its contents, and of all estates, rights, titles, and interests, legal and equitable, created or conferred by it or arising from its provisions." Mansfield v. Wardlow [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 928, 91 S. W. 859. The record of a mortgage executed by a father and daughter is at most notice that the father was a widower at the time. It is no notice of any claim on the part of his children. Attebery v. O'Neil, 42 Wash. 487, 85 P. 270. The fact that a first mortgage remained unsatisfied of record challenged inquiry beyond the mere fact that it was paid to the mortgagee. Hence, one who bought under a junior mortgage was subject to the senior mortgage which had been redeemed by a junior encumbrancer. Malmberg v. Peterson [S. D.] 108 N. W. 339.

96. Feltenstein v. Ernst, 49 Misc. 262, 97 N. Y. S. 376; Hinricks v. Brady [S. D.] 108 N. W. 332. Where the grantee claimed through M. J. and M. J. J., the fact that M. J. J. joined in the deed to P. was sufficient to put the grantee upon inquiry as to M. J. J. and to furnish constructive notice of a duly recorded mortgage from M. J. J. to F., which in turn would have disclosed a recorded deed from M. J. to M. J. J. Creel v. Keith [Ala.] 41 So. 780. Where the recorded deed describes the property as in a certain lot and block according to a map recorded in a specified book and page, which map did not contain any such lot and block, the description gave constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser holding under the grantor in such deed, it appearing that there was such a lot and block on another page of the book described which was the only map of the town mentioned in the first deed. Rogers v. Mecartney [Cal. App.] 84 P. 215; Gray v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, 2 Cal. App. 653, 84 P. 280. Where a lease made by one as "party of the first part" to another as "party of the second part" contained a provision that the party of the first part should have the privilege of leasing for another year, this is not an obvious error as to put a purchaser on inquiry as to the tenant's right to renew and to ascertain his rights and equities. Where three mortgages executed by the same mortgagor to the same mortgagee contained the same description by metes and bounds and mentioned the same streets, but described the property as located in three different towns, a subsequent purchaser was charged with notice of the facts which could have been learned by slight inquiry. Kellogg v. Randolph [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 753. The record of a mortgage is sufficient notice to a subsequent judgment creditor of the mortgagor, who buys in the property at a sale to enforce his lien, when the mortgage correctly describes the property, except in reciting it as situate in a township of which it was once a part, when prior to recording the mortgage that part of the township in which the property was situated had been erected into a new township. Mohr v. Scherer, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 509. Where a person is well known in a community by the initials R. C. and by the initials W. A. before his cognomen, the record of the mortgage given by such person wherein his name is preceded by the initials R. C. is constructive notice to a subsequent mortgagee from the same person on the same property under the same cognomen preceded by initials W. A. Brayton v. Beall, 73 S. C. 308, 53 S. E. 641. But where the mortgage recorded recites that it is given to secure the payment of a bond in the sum of $800, conditioned for the payment of $400, but refers to the bond for fuller particulars and the bond is not recorded, the record is notice of nothing beyond an ordinary debt of $400. But where the land was conveyed to a grantee who continued making payments in exact accordance with the conditions of the bond, it is a fair inference that the grantee took with knowledge of the character of the debt represented by the bond. Equitable Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Corley, 72 S. C. 404, 52 S. E. 48. Recorded release of lien cannot be relied on where facts on record put one on inquiry as to its fraudulent character. Abraham Lincoln B. & H. Ass'n v. Zuelk, 124 Ill. App. 109.

97. The record of a deed from F to R of land owned by the state, the equitable title to which F afterward acquired so that it vested in R, was no notice to grantees of C who held by patent. Rozell v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co., 76 Ark. 525, 89 S. W. 469. Recording a deed of trust is not constructive notice that the grantor, then a stranger to the title, was grantee of the land from another under a prior unrecorded title. Crosby v. Ridout, 27 App. D. C. 481. Constructive notice, by recordation of deeds and other instruments, is operative only among parties claiming rights under the same title. Between claimants under distinct and hostile titles, notice is ordinarily immaterial and inoperative. Webb v. Ritter [W. Va.] 54 S. E. 484. But a purchaser of land from vendor in possession without legal, but with the equitable, title is bound to take notice of the record of the vendor's prior deed of the mineral rights to the land. He cannot escape the responsibility for his failure to find it by sheltering himself under the technical rule that it was outside the regular chain of title that he was investigating. Eversole v. Virginia Iron, etc., Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 151, 92 S. W. 593. Recitals in recorded deeds not part of chain of title are not notice. Mansfield v. Johnson [Fla.] 40 So. 196.

98. Attebery v. O'Neil, 42 Wash. 487, 85 P. 270.

(§ 2) C. Wills and their probate and administrative proceedings.[1]—The record of a will and its probate makes it constructive notice.[2]

(§ 2) D. Chattel mortgages, conditional sales and other liens.[3]—In most states chattel mortgages,[4] conditional sales,[5] and other liens, are void as against subsequent creditors in good faith,[6] unless filed, or recorded, or accompanied, by a visible and continuing change of possession.[7] Where the property is in more than one county, the instrument must be recorded in each,[8] and where it is removed from one county to another, the instrument must be recorded within a specified time in the county to which it is removed.[9] Neither the assignment of a chattel mortgage,[10] nor the note to secure the payment of which it is given,[11] need be recorded. Statutory provisions as to filing or recording must be strictly complied with by the mortgagee.[12] Registration of a chattel mortgage is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers.[13]

99, 1. See 6 C. L. 824.

2. Prior to Civ. Code 1895, § 2778, a recorded deed from an heir or devisee was inferior in dignity to an unrecorded deed of the ancestor, but since the passage of that act an unrecorded deed made by a testatrix is ordinarily to be regarded as inferior in dignity to a deed duly recorded subsequently made by her devisee to an innocent purchaser for value without notice of the prior conveyance. But this statute has no application to a case where the testatrix recognized in her will the title of her donee, and the purchaser from her devisee was thus put upon notice that the property conveyed to him formed no part of the estate of the testatrix, and could not be regarded as passing to the devisee under the residuary clause of the will. Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. Lewman, 124 Ga. 190, 52 S. E. 599. Persons dealing with the executor are bound by the will which gives the executor his powers and they cannot take the position of an innocent purchaser where such position contravenes the notice with which they are charged by the will. Mitchell v. Carrollton Nat. Bank, 29 Ky. L. R. 1228, 97 S. W. 45.

Duty of vendee to see to investment of funds: Where lands are devised to a woman under a will making the same her separate estate and providing that if they be sold "the purchaser must see to the reinvestment of the proceeds" in other real estate to be taken for her separate use, a grantee who failed to see to such reinvestment acquired no title to the property even against his grantors, such woman, and her husband. Bell v. Bair, 28 Ky. L. R. 614, 89 S. W. 732. See 4 Mich. L. R. 292.

3. See 6 C. L. 824.

4. A chattel mortgage is void as against creditors who have become such while the mortgage has been withheld from record. Rike v. Ryan [Ala.] 41 So. 959; American Book Co. v. Chapman, 119 Mo. App. 275, 95 S. W. 957. Under Laws 1897, c. 418, § 90, a failure for five years to record a chattel mortgage renders the same void even as against simple contract creditors whose claims accrued prior to filing, although they would not be entitled to attack the mortgage for fraud until their claims had been reduced to judgment. Skilton v. Codington, 185 N. Y. 80, 77 N. E. 790; Brockhurst v. Cox [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 182.

5. A contract for the sale and delivery of personal property upon condition that the title is to remain in the vendor until the purchase price is paid is invalid as against purchasers in good faith, judgment, and attaching creditors of the vendee, without notice, unless a copy of the contract is verified and filed in the manner pointed out in Comp. St. 1887, c. 32, § 26. Starr v. Dow [Neb.] 108 N. W. 1065.

6. Under B. & C. Comp. St. § 5630, the recording of an unacknowledged chattel mortgage imports no notice of its existence, but under § 5633 where a subsequent mortgage has actual notice of the existence of such a mortgage, the latter is valid. This rule is not changed by the recording of both mortgages, under § 5632, in a county to which the property is removed. Williams v. First Nat. Bank [Or.] 87 P. 890.

7. Neither an unrecorded mortgage with no attempt to take possession nor an unrecorded mortgage where there was an attempted delivery by going to a tannery, "locating the different piles of bark, having them scaled and attaching to each pile a wooden block about six inches square," each marked with a letter of the alphabet, and all being delivered to the tannery as custodian of the mortgagee, is valid as against the tannery's trustee in bankruptcy. In re Shaw, 146 F. 273.

8. Sess. Laws 1899, p. 157, c. 98. Merritt v. Russell & Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 70.

9. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4559. Merritt v. Russell & Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 70. This statute is not repealed by Sess. Laws 1899, p. 157, c. 98. Id.

10. To make it necessary that the assignment of a chattel mortgage be recorded, there must be a law providing for it, either in express terms or by necessary implication from the words used. No such implication arises from Kan. Gen. St. 1901, § 4251, par. 36, requiring satisfactions of chattel mortgages to be recorded or from the nonexistence of a statute prohibiting their recordation. National Live Stock Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 27 S. Ct. 79, 51 Law. Ed. —.

11. Where a bill of sale absolute in form is given and recorded to secure the payment of a note, it is not necessary to record the note. Greeson v. German Nat. Bank [Ark.] 95 S. W. 439.

12. Under B. & C. Comp. St. § 5630, the recording of an unacknowledged chattel mortgage imports no notice of its existence. Williams v. First Nat. Bank [Or.] 87 P. 890. Where the statute requires "immediate" recording, this means "as soon as may be by reasonable dispatch under the circumstances of the case." Brockhurst v. Cox [N. J. Eq.]

§ 3. Registration and certification of land titles under the Torrens system.[14]—Any person owning land, whether his title be of record or not, may maintain proceedings to register his title.[15] The proceeding is one in rem which operates directly to vest and establish title to the land [16] which is indefeasible, after the expiration of the statutory period, unless the registration was obtained by fraud.[17] Evidence establishing title good as against the world is, therefore, essential to warrant a decree awarding initial registration of a title; [18] but the court may grant relief as to such portion of a tract of land, less than the whole, as the evidence shows the applicant is entitled to in fee.[19] Where the applicant establishes a claim of title, one claiming under a tax deed has the burden of establishing the validity of such deed.[20] Unless otherwise provided or clearly inappropriate, all rules and principles of law applicable in equitable actions, and rules of practice with respect to the trial, evidence, findings and order of judgment, should be followed.[21] The matter of appeals is governed by statute.[22]

64 A. 182. Civ. Code 1902, § 950, provides that it shall be a sufficient record of any chattel mortgage, where the amount secured is not more than one hundred dollars, to enter upon an index book the names of mortgagor and mortgagee, the amount and character of the debt secured, a brief description of chattels pledged, the date of said mortgage and maturity of said debt and the date of presentation of said mortgage for record. Under this statute in the recording of a mortgage of less than $100, the entry in the index book under the heading "amount" $25 and the entry under the heading character of debt "L & M" are sufficient entries under those headings for a chattel mortgage in the amount of $25, although a clause in the mortgage set forth that the mortgage was for the purpose of securing also other indebtedness which might become due at a certain date. As long as the title remains registered in the name of the person guilty of the fraud, the decree and certificate of registration may be set aside in an action brought by the defrauded party within a reasonable time after notice of the fraud; and the mere fact that the statute does not in express words except fraud does not deprive a court of equity of the general jurisdiction to protect parties from the consequences of fraud. Id. Where the applicant knows the name of a claimant, such name should be stated in the application, for, as he is not an "unknown party," the concealment of his name is a fraud on the court, and a decree and certificate of registration issued thereunder may be vacated and set aside, unless an innocent purchaser for value has obtained rights on the faith of the record. Where the applicant in support of his title offered a deed describing the land as Lot 19 in a certain subdivision and no plat of any subdivision was offered and there was no evidence that any plat or subdivision was ever made, the deed alone furnished no means of locating the lot and the proof in this respect was insufficient. Glos v. Ehrhardt, 224 Ill. 532, 79 N. E. 605. Where the applicant in support of his title offered a deed to C, a mortgage from C to himself, and a decree for sale of the land and a master's deed to himself, but there was nothing connecting this deed with the deed of trust the evidence was sufficient as title was in C and vested in the applicant under the master's deed. Evidence relied on to establish title should be introduced upon notice to defendant and, in such form, that objection can be interposed, and the rights of defendant preserved for review in case of an adverse decision. NOVATION.

Definition and Elements (1170).
Novation Between the Same Parties (1179).
Novation by the Substitution of New Parties (1179).
Essentials (1180).
Pleading and Proof (1180).
Legal Effect of Novation (1180).

Definition and elements.[23]—Novation is the substitution of one debtor by mutual agreement for another, whereby the old debt is extinguished.[24] It is distinguishable from the obligation arising from the assumption of a mortgage debt as a part of the purchase price,[25] which is enforceable without an application of the doctrine of novation.[26]

Novation between the same parties [27] does not result from the acceptance of a note for a debt standing on open account,[28] nor is the debt of a commercial firm necessarily novated by the acceptance of the joint note of the partners "to represent the purchase price" of goods sold on a credit to the firm.[29]

Novation by the substitution of new parties.[30]—Novation may be by substitution of a new party.[31] A form of novation known to the civil law is called "delegatio" wherein the debtor remains the same as at the first but a new creditor is substituted for the old.[32] In this form of obligation the concurrence of all three parties is requisite, the original creditor, on being otherwise satisfied, discharging the debtor, the new, or indicated, creditor, accepting the debtor as his own, and the debtor, on being discharged from the original contract, entering into the new obligation.[33] foundation is laid for the introduction of secondary evidence. Id. Where an examiner's report as to title rests upon secondary evidence, he should report enough of the evidence introduced before him to show that a proper foundation was laid for the introduction of such secondary evidence. Id. The appellate court cannot consider an objection that the examiner erred in admitting certain secondary evidence under an exception to his report in that he erred in finding that plaintiff was seized in fee to the land in question. The exception should have been made specifically to the report and reserved in the trial court. Glos v. Hoban, 212 Ill. 222, 72 N. E. 1; Woodvine v. Dean [Mass.] 79 N. E. 882. Stat. 1905, p. 208, c. 288, providing that on appeal to the superior court the judge of the land court shall file a report of his decision and of the facts which shall be prima facie evidence as to matters contained therein, applies to a trial after the statute went into effect but commenced prior thereto. Id. Such a report finding that a testator's failure to provide for his children was intentional is sufficient although it does not set out the provisions of the will, the number of children left by testator, or the fact that respondent was one of them. The statute does not require that evidence shall be set out. Id. Where the applicant seeks to have the boundaries of a highway determined, the city has the right to appeal. First Nat. Bank v. Woburn [Mass.] 78 N. E. 307.

22. Originally there was no provision for the revision by the supreme court of questions of law arising in the land court, but questions of law arising upon trial in the superior court on appeal might be brought to the supreme court. Under Rev. Laws, c. 128, § 13, they may now be taken up direct. First Nat. Bank v. Woburn [Mass.] 78 N. E. 307.

31. Globe Ins. Co. v. Wayne [Ohio] 80 N. E. 13. An accepted order assigning on account of a pre-existing indebtedness whatever moneys might become due to the assignor as commissions or profits from a transaction managed by the acceptor has all the earmarks of a novation. Bank of Yolo v. Bank of Woodland [Cal. App.] 86 P. 820. Evidence held sufficient to show a substitution of a new party in place of one of the originals to an undertaking. Simmons v. Lima Oil Co. [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 258. Where a creditor surrenders the note of his debtor and accepts in lieu thereof the note of third persons in pursuance of a contract between the debtor and such third persons, the transaction operates as a payment and discharge of the note. Gannon v. Cooke, 122 Ill. App. 615.

32, 33. Loper v. Somers, 71 N. J. Law, 657, 61 A. 85

Essentials.[34]—To constitute a novation there must be assent of parties express on implied [35] on consideration,[36] and an extinguishment of the original obligation.[37]

Pleading and proof.[38]—Novation must be specially pleaded.[39] The proof of a novation must be definite.[40] When it is sought to show an intent to substitute one debtor or one security for another, the intent that novation shall occur should be the only reasonable inference from the facts relied on.[41] The creditor cannot create a novation by his subsequent statements that he looked to the new debtor and not to the original.[42] A novation is never presumed but must be established by the full discharge of the original debt by the express terms of the agreement or the acts of the parties, whose intention must be clear.[43]

Legal effect of novation.[44]—In every novation the old debtor is released or the original debt extinguished.[45]

35. Where liquor licenses were to be paid with funds furnished the applicants by a brewery, and the law required a return of the amount paid in case of refusal to issue a license, the brewery could not, as by novation, hold the county treasurer on his promise to return the fund to it, in the absence of a showing that applicants assented to the agreement. Hemrich Bros. Brewing Co. v. Kitsap County [Wash.] 88 P. 838. Where a purchaser of a building knew at the time of the purchase of a contract between his grantor and an adjoining landowner for the maintenance of an elevator at their joint expense, and after the purchase, with the knowledge and consent of the adjoining land-owner, proceeded to perform his part of the agreement, he thereupon became a party to the contract by novation. Globe Ins. Co. v. Wayne [Ohio] 80 N. E. 13.

36. Where a landlord on a sale of his tenants' stock inquired about his rent and the tenant replied that they had made arrangements for that and one of the purchasers stepped up and said "That is all provided for, I will see that you get your rent," and the landlord said: "All right, all I want is my rent," there was no discharge of the tenant or acceptance of the purchasers as the debtors in lieu of the tenant. Davis v. Dunn [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 226.

37. Merely becoming responsible for the debt of another by consent of the debtor and creditor does not establish novation. (Chenoweth v. National Bldg. Ass'n, 59 W. Va. 653, 53 S. E. 559), but the debtor must be released (Id.). Evidence held insufficient to show release of original debtor. Draggo v. West Bay City Sugar Co., 144 Mich. 195, 13 Det. Leg. N. 245, 107 N. W. 911; Fitzgerald v. Thompson Towing & Wrecking Ass'n 143 Mich. 171, 12 Det. Leg. N. 961, 106 N. W. 853; Wierman v. Bay City-Michigan Sugar Co., 142 Mich. 422, 12 Det. Leg. N. 833, 106 N. W. 75. Agreement between brewing company, the architect of its building, the contractor therefor, and the purchaser of its stock and bonds, held a novation of the brewing company's obligation to the architect. Wyss-Thalman v. Beaver Valley Brewing Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 811. Opening an account with substituted debtors after the substitution held insufficient to establish novation. Chenoweth v. National Building Ass'n, 59 W. Va. 653, 53 S. E. 559.

39. Fox v. Barksdale [La.] 42 So. 957.

40. A mere statement that a debtor understood that notes given were payment pro tanto on the debt is insufficient to overcome a finding treating them as collateral. Grimnett v. Owsley [Ark.] 94 S. W. 694. The mere taking of a note, without some evidence that it was taken in satisfaction of the debt, does not constitute a novation. Gimbell & Sons v. King [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 7.

41. Evidence held insufficient to establish an intent to substitute one obligation for another. Long v. Gump [C. C. A.] 144 F. 824.

42. Testimony of creditors that they looked to the new debtor and not to the original is incompetent on the issue of the existence of a novation. Wierman v. Bay City-Michigan Sugar Co., 142 Mich. 422, 12 Det. Leg. N. 833, 106 N. W. 75.

43. Chenoweth v. National Bldg. Ass'n, 59 W. Va. 653, 53 S. E. 559.

44. See 6 C. L. 824.

45. Where a debtor's attorneys gave his creditor a check against their individual account which was good for the amount of the check but at a time when they had not sufficient of the debtor's funds in their possession to meet the check, the debt was paid and though persons may, in time, become so accustomed thereto as not to be affected [49] and others similarly situated were not disturbed.[50] A nuisance cannot be predicated of the result of the operation of natural causes, in the absence of an intervention of human agency.[51] The time when the annoying conditions are manifested,[52] the frequency of their recurrence,[53] and the character of the neighborhood,[54] are to be considered. The discharge of heated or impure air or air charged with offensive smells,[55] noxious gases, smoke, and fumes,[56] vitriol and other deleterious material from electric batteries,[57] collection of explosive or inflammable substances,[58] noise [59] and vibration,[60] keeping a gaming house,[61] sale of intoxicating liquors,[62]

54. Hospital for contagious diseases. State v. Inhabitants of Trenton [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 897. Keeping and use of gasoline in and about frame garage adjacent to frame residences held a nuisance. O'Hara v. Nelson [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 836. The existence of two factories in a neighborhood does not bring it within the rule that those in an industrial or manufacturing neighborhood have no redress for annoying conditions necessarily incident to the operation of the industries or factories. United States v. Luce, 141 F. 385. While the character of the neighborhood may be considered in determining the kind and degree of annoyance which will be regarded as a nuisance, it will not relieve from liability the person who caused the annoyance when the existence of a nuisance is proved.

Alexander [Okl.] 87 P. 863. Whether reasonable care was exercised to prevent interference with the property or business of plaintiff by the obstruction of a street with building material held question of fact. Id.

Held not a nuisance: The operation of a railroad on a street is not, as to abutting owners, a nuisance per se. Brown v. Rea [Cal.] 88 P. 713. The discharge of fireworks in a city park is not a nuisance per se. De Agramonte v. Mount Vernon, 112 App. Div. 291, 98 N. Y. S. 454.

67. Unlicensed wharf obstructing the structure is not a nuisance, though its existence impairs the value of adjacent property.[69] Neither a hospital for contagious diseases [70] nor a cemetery [71] is a nuisance per se. A municipality with power merely to prevent and remove nuisances has not authority to declare that a nuisance which is not a nuisance per se.[72]

§ 3. Right to maintain; defenses.[73]—That the acts complained of necessarily result from the exercise of a franchise is generally held a defense,[74] but if the franchise be exercised negligently [75] or in a manner not contemplated in its issue,[76] or after condition broken,[77] it is no protection; and the better rule seems to be that the franchise only prevents injunctive relief and does not bar liability in damages.[78] Governmental authorization,[79] as by a valid license, relieves from liability [80] for acts authorized thereby [81] until it is revoked; [82] but license laws will not ordinarily be right of access and departure by water, of owner or tenant of land bordering on tidewater, is to the extent of such obstruction a nuisance abatable at the suit of the owner or tenant. Whitmore v. 78. The right of an adjoining owner to damages is not impaired by the fact that the injury necessarily results from the exercise of a franchise on land acquired by eminent domain. Smoke, cinders, etc., from electric power house. King v. Vicksburg R. & Light Co. [Miss.] 42 So. 204.

79. Where a bridge over a navigable stream is built in conformity to an act of congress reserving no right to amend, modify, or repeal the same, it cannot be abated by the courts as a nuisance in the absence of appropriate legislation and just compensation. United States v. Parkersburg Branch R. Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 224.

80. Operation of properly equipped bowling alley under license. Levin v. Goodwin, 191 Mass. 341, 77 N. E. 718. Nor can the court change the hours named in the license as to the time of operating the business (Id.), or interfere with respect to the nature of the place of operation of a licensed business (Id.).

construed as allowing the licensing of a nuisance, and municipalities have no power to permit by license or otherwise a private use of public ways in derogation of the public easement.[83] A statute giving municipalities power to establish cemeteries does not give an absolute discretion as to location or authorize the creation of a nuisance.[84] The possession of the power of eminent domain does not relieve one guilty of the maintenance of a nuisance from liability for injury caused thereby to real property of others prior to an exercise of the right.[85] In Massachusetts it is held that the right to maintain a public nuisance cannot be gained by prescription.[86] and in California the rule is statutory.[87] Where statutes in pari materia provide that limitations shall not apply to lands belonging to the public and that the state shall be barred the same as private individuals, a prescriptive right thereunder to obstruct a street cannot be claimed to defeat a suit by the state to abate the obstruction as a public nuisance.[88] Want of intent to injure or do a wrongful act is no defense for maintaining a nuisance.[89] One is not precluded from complaint of a nuisance affecting his property by the fact that he acquired the property with knowledge of its existence,[90] but contributory negligence bars an action to recover damages,[91] and one who impliedly licenses a structure cannot complain of the results of its proper use.[92]

The board of estimate and appraisement of New York City has been held to have no power to grant the right to private persons of using highway for the construction of a private railway for the use of a single individual. Hatfield v. Strauss, 102 N. Y. S. 934. Saginaw City held powerless to grant permit to erect stairway on sidewalk in view of its charter, tit. 17 p. 116, § 8, forbidding grant of exclusive privileges to use of streets or public grounds. McCormick v. Weaver, 144 Mich. 6, 107 N. W. 314. Cities of the fourth class in Missouri, though given control over their streets by the legislature, cannot lawfully license private individuals to take up any considerable portion of a street with an obstruction. State v. Vandalia, 119 Mo. App. 406, 94 S. W. 1009. Police jury has no power to license private use of street to exclusion of public. Kuhl v. 90. Where persons purchase property adjacent to a cemetery constituting a nuisance to their knowledge, they are not estopped to object to an enlarged danger by the establishment of an addition to the grounds. Payne v. Wayland [Iowa] 109 N. W. 203. One maintaining a nuisance injuriously affecting another's improvements cannot justify the nuisance on the ground that it existed when complainant's improvements were erected. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 47, 93 S. W. 177. The mere fact that one voluntarily "comes to" a nuisance will not preclude the granting of relief to him against the nuisance. United States v. Luce, 141 F. 385.

91. Where plaintiff who was an adjoining land owner on a railroad right of way was injured by stagnant water accumulated by insufficient drainage through the railroad's artificial embankment he could recover as for the maintenance of a nuisance without showing the railroad to be negligent. McFadden v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 952, 92 S. W. 989. Whether plaintiff in an action to recover for injuries sustained because of the maintenance of a nuisance in a city street was guilty of contributory negligence held a question for the jury. Wheeler v. Ft. Dodge [Iowa] 108 N. W. 1057. Spectator at illegal automobile race injured by machine swerving from its course held not entitled to recover damages therefor in absence of proof of negligence and want of contributory negligence. Johnson v. New York [N. Y.] 78 N. E. 715. A city is not liable for an injury caused by a negligent obstruction of its streets by a street carnival where the obstruction could slightly less conveniently have been avoided by driving through an unobstructed street. Bechtel v. Mahoney City Borough, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 135.

92. One who initiated industry complained of and sold the same to defendants with more land for enlargement held not entitled to equitable relief from increased annoyance even though complainant did not know that the increased capacity would increase the annoyance from soot, cinders and ashes. Woodard v. West Side Mill Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 579.

nicipality may, in the exercise of its police power,[94] abate a public nuisance,[95] and one injured by a private nuisance may lawfully abate the same when the person guilty of maintaining it refuses to abate it.[96] A town with power merely to prevent and remove nuisances has not authority to summarily abate as a nuisance that which it has declared to be such, but which is not a nuisance per se.[97] It is said the authority of a city to abate nuisances erected within its bounds by the county in which it is situate is undoubted.[98] In Missouri the equity practice permitting a county prosecuting attorney to proceed in equity for the abatement of a public nuisance is reinforced by statute.[99] A suit to abate a nuisance declared by a village board of health to exist is properly brought in the name of the village in New York.[1] The commissioners of the District of Columbia may maintain a bill in their own names and behalf to enjoin the obstruction of the streets of the District,[2] and the ownership of the fee of the streets is immaterial on the question.[3]

Injunction.[4]—The remedy by injunction rests in discretion,[5] and as in other cases, is granted only when there is no adequate remedy at law,[6] and where the right threatened thereby is clear and the fact is clearly established that the proposed structure will infringe such right.[7] It is only in extreme cases that equity will exercise its powers to compel the removal of existing structures on land though they may be a nuisance, but will leave the plaintiff to his remedy at law.[8] It must be promptly sought.[9] When civil property rights are not affected by the maintenance

94. The abatement of a public nuisance for the public safety on a conviction for maintaining the same comes under the police power of the state (Jeremy Imp. Co. v. Com. [Va.] 56 S. Plaintiff held entitled to injunction pendente lite against maintenance of village dump so as to constitute a nuisance. Shreck v. Coeur d'Alene [Idaho] 87 P. 1001.

6. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 47, 93 S. W. 177. Injury resulting from noisome or foul odors producing personal discomfort and annoyance is not susceptible of compensation in damages according to any approximately correct measure and from its recurrence would lead to a multiplicity of suits. United States v. Luce, 141 F. 385. Equity is not deprived of jurisdiction to grant injunctive relief merely because relief may be had by proceeding under a statute or ordinance. Herring v. Wilton [Va.] 55 S. E. 546. A permanent nuisance is one of such character, and which exists under such circumstances that it will be presumed to continue indefinitely. Bischof v. Merchants' Nat. 9. United States held not guilty of laches in seeking injunctive relief against a nuisance affecting a quarantine station. United States v. Luce, 141 F. 385. Mere lapse of time short of the prescriptive period cannot operate as a bar to equitable relief against a nuisance. Id. When complain-of a common nuisance, equity has no jurisdiction to grant injunctive relief,[10] nor does injunction lie to restrain the carrying on of a public nuisance indictable and punishable under the criminal law.[11] The acts of several persons may together constitute a nuisance which the courts will restrain, though the damage occasioned by the acts of any one, taken alone, would be inappreciable,[12] but acts which are but a remote cause of the injury will not be enjoined in a suit where the parties proximately causing it are not joined.[13] The relative effect upon the parties of granting or refusing injunctive relief from a nuisance is a consideration affecting the exercise of the court's discretion.[14] When the facts are clear, it is the duty of the court, on application for injunction, to determine the question whether a given state of facts constitutes a nuisance.[15] The government cannot be forced to acquire by purchase or condemnation all the territory within the sphere of operation of a nuisance objectionable to it.[16] A suit to enjoin the removal of a boom in a stream passing through plaintiff's land which is by cross complaint made a suit also to enjoin the obstructions of the stream is not terminated by the boom being carried out by high water before the trial.[17] The bill must set forth the facts rather than legal conclusions.[18] The decree should go no further than the necessities of the ants have been guilty of laches in seeking equitable relief, the court may decree damages payable in lieu thereof, subject to the enforcement of injunctive relief on failure to pay the damages found to be due. McCleery v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co., 140 F. 951. The absence of a property owner from the state is no excuse for failure to seek his equitable remedy for the maintenance of a nuisance injuriously affecting the property. Id. The larger financial interest to be affected by the granting of injunctive relief against the maintenance of a nuisance injurious to the real property of another is no impediment to the granting of relief in favor of persons of small means. Id. The right to equitable relief against a nuisance may be lost by laches. Ten years' delay in proceeding held fatal laches. Whitmore v. Brown [Me.] 65 A. 516. The lack of promptness and effectiveness of the civil and criminal remedies gives equity jurisdiction to abate the maintenance of a nuisance. Obstruction of highway. Letherman v. Hauser [Neb.] 110 N. W. 745. Where the building of a garage alleged to be a nuisance was commenced some time in the middle of October, the filing of a bill for injunctive relief against it on November 5th, did not show laches preventing injunctive relief (O'Hara v. Nelson [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 836), but to effect such result there must also be shown a change in the situation of the parties whereby the one has been put in a worse condition by the delay of the other (Bischof v. Merchants' Nat. Bank [Neb.] 106 N. W. 996). Delay of ten days after lodging protest held not to constitute laches forbidding maintenance of injunction proceedings. Id.

case require,[19] but may prohibit acts which the defendant disclaims any intention of committing.[20]

(§ 4) B. Criminal prosecution.[21]—The maintenance of a public nuisance was a crime at common law[22] and many specific nuisances are declared by statute or ordinance.[23] When a prosecution is had under an ordinance defining and punishing an act as constituting a nuisance, but before judgment of guilty is pronounced the ordinance is repealed by an ordinance containing no saving clause respecting violations of the prior law, but providing a new punishment for the same offense, the conviction is valid.[24] It is no defense that the nuisance complained of is contributed to by the acts of others over whom the defendant has no control, when there would be a nuisance without such contribution.[25] To sustain a conviction for the maintenance of a nuisance it is essential that the thing or act which is the ground of the prosecution be shown to be the direct and proximate cause of the nuisance.[26] An indictment for obstructing a highway should aver that the obstruction has been permitted to exist an unreasonable or unnecessary period of time.[27] The complaint[28] and judgment[29] are sufficient if they substantially state the elements of the offense. Conditions produced in adjacent premises may be shown.[30]

tially contribute to the creation of a public nuisance is sufficient to render the owner liable for injury caused thereby.[33] The rule that a purchaser of land is not liable for a nuisance created thereon by his grantor until after notice to abate it does not apply where the nuisance consists in violation of statute,[34] and the purchaser is liable without notice if he uses the structure.[35] A lessor is liable for a nuisance created by his lessee if such nuisance was the natural result of the execution of the purpose of the demise,[36] or if he fails to exercise a reserve power to terminate the lease if such purpose is so exercised as to create a nuisance.[37] Where a landowner leases his premises and surrenders his possession with a nuisance thereon which he has created or of which he has either actual or constructive notice he is liable therefor.[38] Injuries resulting from a permanent nuisance must be sued for in one action,[39] and every injury to person and property that plaintiff has sustained by reason of a nuisance may be recovered in one action.[40] Recovery in an action for a continuing nuisance is no bar to an action for damages caused thereby, subsequently accruing to the same property.[41] A city is liable in damages for maintaining a nuisance,[42] and a statute requiring a city to keep its streets free from nuisances renders it liable for injury from its officers allowing the maintenance of a nuisance therein even though they had no power to consent to the maintenance of the nuisance.[43] Limitations when available begin to run from the time the nuisance was established irrespective of the time when plaintiff ascertained the character of the injury.[44] The leasing of premises by defendant during the period covered by the existence of a nuisance maintained thereon raises a presumption of his ownership thereof.[45] Municipal permission to maintain the structure complained of must be specially pleaded.[46] If the proof of nuisance fails, the action cannot be sustained as one for negligence,[47] but an action for nuisance does not fail because a needless averment of negligence was not proved.[48] On proof of the existence of

After notice and refusal to abate, a city is liable in damage for the maintenance of a nuisance caused by allowing private persons to connect their sewers with its surface water gutters and emptying the filth on a vacant lot adjacent to plaintiff's residence. City of Vicksburg v. Richardson [Miss.] 42 So. 234. The liability of a city as for the maintenance of a private nuisance in the disposition of dirt in excavating for a sewer by a contractor is sustainable on the ground that its control over the public streets and the right of supervision charges it with the duty not to erect a private nuisance or permit the continuance of one by its contractor. a nuisance for which damages are claimed, nominal damages at least are recoverable.[49]

Damages.[50]—One suing for permanent injury to property by the maintenance of a nuisance elects to recover all damages sustained or thereafter to accrue because of the nuisance.[51] The measure of damages for the maintenance of a nuisance is the amount which will compensate the injured party for all detriment proximately caused thereby,[52] hence is entitled to recover for the diminution in its fair market value,[53] and the amount, as in other cases, rests largely in the discretion of the jury.[54] Under the rule obtaining in Mississippi where damage by physical invasion of deleterious agents produced by different persons or corporations is shown, in an action to recover therefor, it should be left to the jury to say from which and to what extent,[55] but with a continuing cause of damage, whereby the restoration of value, depreciated during the previous proprietorship, by such annoying conditions has been prevented, the fact of former damage is immaterial on the question of the liability of the successor in interest.[56] In the absence of a continuing cause of damage, after the acquisition of property, the successor in interest is not liable for damage accruing during a preceding proprietorship from annoying conditions.[57] Punitive or exemplary damages are recoverable in a second suit for a continuance of a private nuisance.[58] When specially pleaded and proved, special damages are recoverable in an action for maintenance of a nuisance.[59] Evidence of physical discomfort on the part of plaintiff and his family,[60] depreciation in the value of his property,[61] and nauseating sights [62] incident to the maintenance of the nuisance sued for, is admissible.

(§ 4) D. Rights of private persons in respect to public nuisances.[63]—In order that a private person may maintain an action for relief against a public nuisance, he must sustain a special injury therefrom different in kind from and in addition to that sustained by the general public [64] but this rule does not apply to nuisances Frick v. Kansas City, 117 Mo. App. 488, 93 S. W. 351. When a person injured by a private nuisance abates the same, the necessary expense so incurred is a part of the detriment proximately caused by the maintenance of the nuisance and recoverable as an element of his damages. Murray v. Butte [Mont.] 88 P. 789.

53. Central Consumers' Co. v. Pinkert, 29 Ky. L. R. 273, 92 S. W. 957. OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE.

"Due administration of justice" which it is a crime to obstruct means a full judicial investigation of all material facts with unhampered opportunity to the litigants to have it.[73] It is a crime if the act may obstruct justice whether or not it must have that effect.[74]

Suppressing evidence[75] will be criminal though the litigant may, when his trial is had, decide not to introduce such evidence.[76] It is no defense that the evidence suppressed is false in fact.[77] Such suppression of evidence in a civil case in the Federal courts is an "offense against the United States" on which criminal conspiracy may be predicated.[78] Knowledge that the person sought to be corrupted was or might be a witness is essential to an attempt to corrupt him,[79] and the indictment must charge it or facts from which it is conclusively presumed.[80] In a prosecution for corrupting it is error to receive evidence showing the suborning of the witness.[81] A witness in this sense means one who has knowledge enabling him to testify of a material fact or who is called for that purpose.[82]

The statutory crime of taking property from an officer who holds it under process is distinct from that of secreting it to prevent a levy,[83] and in New York the grand jury may indict for the former though the special sessions has in the first instance exclusive jurisdiction of the latter crime.[84] The owner may be guilty of thus taking his own property[85] and a levy and custody thereunder is a predicate for the offense.[86] Incompetent evidence before the grand jury as to what accused did with the goods does not vitiate the indictment.[87]

To charge resisting an officer[88] it is not necessary that the offense for which the arrest was made be described by technically pleading its elements or by stating its technical name,[89] and such offense need not be legally defined to the jury unless a proper request is made.[90] The indictment is not double merely because the acts done might tend to prove a rescue.[91] of taxation are not judicial officers.[5] Under the statute of New York providing that the term "judge" shall be construed to mean every judicial officer authorized alone or with others to hold or preside over a court of record, a police magistrate of the city of New York is not a judge.[6] With reference to their title to office, officers are either de jure officers, de facto officers, or usurpers.[7] Where one has qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties and is recognized under the appointment made by the authorities, and his salary paid for a considerable time without objection, and without any question being raised concerning the legality of his appointment, he becomes officer de jure and entitled to hold the office to which he has been appointed for the designated term unless lawfully ousted.[8] A de facto officer is one whose acts, though not those of a lawful officer, the law upon principles of policy and justice will hold valid so far as they involve the interest of the public and third persons where the duties of the office were exercised without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiesence as were calculated to induce people without inquiry to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be.[9] An officer elected under an unconstitutional statute is a de facto officer,[10] but there can be no de facto when there could be no de jure officer.[11] A deputy of one who, his term having expired, has been re-elected and has duly qualified, is a deputy de facto, if he is recognized as such by his principal and if he continues to perform his duties, though he has not been appointed in writing as required by law and has not given the required bond.[12] The failure of a tax assessor to take the statutory oath before he makes the assessment does not make the assessment void. Though he was not sworn his acts have all the force and effect of a de facto officer.[13] Where a complaint on a detinue bond alleges that the writ was issued by a certain named person a notary public, and ex officio justice of the peace, proof that he was a de facto justice is permissible.[14] A mere intruder or usurper is not ordinarily, but may become, an officer de facto; but when without color of authority he simply assumes to act, to exercise authority as an officer, and the public know, or reasonably ought to know that he is an usurper, his acts are absolutely void for all purposes.[15] To usurp an office is to seize it by force, actual or constructive, without any color of right or title. Usurpation is entirely different from holding an office originally rightfully possessed but to which the incumbent becomes ineligible by the happening of some extraneous fact or circumstance.[16]

5. It is the common practice in many of the states to vest such powers in executive officers. § 2. Creation and change of offices. Number of employes.[18]—Except as such matters are constitutionally fixed,[19] the legislature may abolish an appointive office and impose its duties on another officer.[20] An office created but without means of filling it remains in suspense.[21] The existence of an office created by ordinance must be proved [22] and will not be inferred from an appropriation to pay the officer.[23] There can be no employment to do that which the regular official duty includes.[24]

Construction of statutes: The preference of honorably discharged veteran, provided for by statute in Iowa is conferred only on such veterans as possess qualifications equal to those possessed by other candidates. McBride v. City Council [Iowa] 110 N. W. 157. In New York honorably discharged veterans are entitled to preference, without regard to their standing on the eligible list, in appointments to all competitive and non-competitive positions provided their qualifications and fitness shall have been ascertained. People v. Adam, 101 N. Y. S. 925. In Massachusetts a veteran has the right to continuous employment in preference to those laborers who are not veterans, so long as there is work to be done of the kind for which he was employed and as he is competent. Ransom v. Boston [Mass.] 78 N. E. 481. The New York constitutional provision for preference to veterans relates entirely to the matter of appointment to the public service and does not deal with the subject of suspension or removal. It does not provide or guarantee the continued retention of veterans in that service. Seeley v. Franchot, 102 N. Y. S. 220.

27. A requirement that candidates shall come from particular counties or districts held invalid. People v. Chicago Election Com'rs, 221 Ill. 9, 77 N. E. 321. 29. The Illinois Cities and Villages Act, as amended June 26, 1895, prescribing a residence qualification relates to eligibility to "offices" and does not apply to mere employment. Powell v. People, 121 Ill. App. 474. Where from the undisputed evidence it appears that a municipal officer resided in the city at the time of his election and that he had his domicile there, a writ of quo warranto questioning his right to office on the ground of non-residence is properly refused. Milligan v. Fortson, 126 Ga. 15, 54 S. E. 915.

convicted upon such charge.[31] The ineligibility of a person to office because of a defalcation in the past does not cease upon the amount of defalcation being made good by his sureties in satisfaction of their own obligation.[32] One holding an incompatible office is disqualified from holding another office.[33] An officer removed for misconduct is disqualified for re-election to the vacancy thus created.[34]

(§ 3) B. Civil Service.[35]—In many states civil service laws have been enacted under which appointments and promotions are made dependent upon the results of competitive examinations[36] resulting in a list of eligible candidates from which appointees must be chosen.[37] The legislature often empowers some officer or commission to include certain offices within the competitive class.[38] A civil service commission has power to establish rules and regulations not inconsistent with the constitutional and statutory provisions creating it.[39] Thus, it can regulate admission to examination for promotion,[40] but of its own power, it can not make violation of its rules a crime.[41] Whether or not the provisions of the civil service act are violative of any constitutional provisions is a question which cannot be raised by one who is not subject to the provisions of such act.[42]

37. Under the New York civil service law it is the duty of the civil service commissioners to determine the question of fitness and eligibility of applicants and their report is controlling upon the appointing power. In re Lazenby, 101 N. Y. S. 5. Whether or not an applicant has passed the examination which the law requires, where he has conformed to the requirements of the civil service commission and has been actually accepted and placed upon the list, it seems that this list is binding upon the commission. Id.

38. Judicial control of classification: The act of classification by the civil service commission is a legislative or executive and not a judicial act and it cannot be reviewed by the courts, and the only control the courts can exercise over such an act is a limited and qualified one to be exercised only by mandamus in cases where the act sought to be controlled is so palpably violative of the law as to present no fair nor reasonable ground for difference of opinion among able and conscientious officials. People v. McWilliams, 185 N. Y. 92, 77 N. E. 785; People v. McAdoo, 113 App. Div. 770, 99 N. Y. S. 324. 40. A regulation of a civil service commission that examinations shall be open to all persons who shall have served with fidelity for not less than six months in positions of the same group or general character in the grade next lower in the same department, office, or institution, is reasonable and proper. In re Ricketts, 111 App. Div. 669, 98 N. Y. S. 502.

41. Johnson v. U. S., 26 App. D. C. 128. A wilfully false answer under oath made by an applicant for examination by a civil service commission, is not a violation of one of the civil service regulations but is perjury, and the person making such false answer is indictable therefor. Id.

42. State v. Sparling [Wis.] 107 N. W. 1040.

In certifying persons to a list of eligibles, no more extensive inquiry or examination need be made than the reasonable construction of the law requires,[43] and the sufficiency of that made is presumed.[44] A statutory maximum and minimum of time within which the term of eligibility must be fixed does not require the commissioners to fix a precise time.[45] They may abrogate a list of eligibles which has continued for the minimum time and supersede it with a new list [46] on making a rule to that effect.[47] A territorial classification of eligibles will not operate retroactively to take away one's preference.[48] Promotive transfers from one competitive class to another are illegal if competitive examination is thereby evaded.[49] A law counting previous service in certain positions as part of a candidate's rating for promotion excludes service in positions not mentioned.[50] An advance in salary may be a promotion without any change in work,[51] and, where such promotion is allowable without examination because of something not ascertainable in that way, those facts should be shown.[52] Where there is a failure of the persons certified by a civil service commission to accept certain positions, and a subsequent failure of the list itself, persons not on the civil service list may be employed from day to day so as to permit their instant discharge in case men are obtained from eligible lists.[53] The appointing officer will not be compelled to appoint where the necessity of the office is in his discretion,[54] and the removal of police officers from attendance on courts will not be compelled in order to force other appointments, if they have any proper duties in that connection.[55] In New York a right of action is given for failure to appoint a veteran on the eligible list, and the officer intrusted with the appointive power is bound to accept the list as certified.[56]

§ 4. Choice or employment. A. How chosen or employed.[57]—The prescribing of laws for the election or appointment to an office is a legislative function, but that does not include the power of making the appointment itself, much less the nullification of an election held and prescribed by law.[58] Where the mode of selection is committed to a local charter convention, it may prescribe either election or

48. Eligibles in New York were classified to Manhattan and Brooklyn after a promotion was attempted. In re Dryer, 102 N. Y. S. 922.

49. Transfer among those in a competitive class without regard to grade, class of work, or compensation, providing only that the persons so transferred are upon the eligible list, violate the constitutional provision that all appointments and promotions shall be made according to merit and fitness to be ascertained by competitive examinations. A transfer of a bath attendant, seventh on the eligible list, to be assistant superintendent of baths and then superintendent, at a greatly increased salary, is such a transfer. Hale v. Worstell 185 N. Y. 247, 77 N. E. 1177.

50. Record of applicant: The New York municipal civil service commission is justified in excluding from the rating of a policeman any credit for service rendered upon his detail as a roundsman prior to the date when the greater New York Charter took effect, January 1, 1898. Moran v. Baker, 49 Misc. 327, 99 N. Y. S. 197. Civil service commissioners should not consider the probationary record of a police officer included by the police commissioner in the police record of such officer submitted to the civil service commission. appointment within its defined authority.[59] The body of a city charter so adopted, specifying the mode, controls a recital of the mode in a prefatory synopsis of the charter.[60]

Elections.[61]—The election of public officers by popular vote is treated elsewhere.[62] All other "elections" are regarded as elective appointments and are treated under appointment.[63] An election may be held for an office at the same time that a constitutional amendment creating such office is submitted to the voters.[64]

Appointment[65] of an office once made cannot be revoked by the appointing power unless permissible under the power of removal.[66] Unless it is otherwise provided by the constitution, the legislature may provide for the appointment of statutory officers.[67] An agreement made by one having the power of appointment to appoint a certain person to office will not be enforced.[68]

Right to appointment and enforcement of right.[69]

By whom appointed.[70]—The appointment of subordinate officers by superior officers or by public commissions or boards is frequently authorized.[71] Local officers can not be appointed by state authority where violative of the principle of home rule contained in the constitution.[72]

Manner of appointment.[73]—In the absence of constitutional limitations, the legislature may change the mode of appointment to a statutory office at pleasure,[74] but it must not thereby invade the appointive or elective power.[75] When the right

68. It is the duty of an officer, having the power of appointment, to make the best appointments in his power at the time the appointment is made, and it is against public policy that he should be deprived of the exercise of his best judgment by a contract previously made or an obligation previously assumed. Whatever may be the practice, appointments are in theory made for the public good. Schneider v. Local Union No. 60, 116 La. 270, 40 So. 700.

Hawkins, 105 Va. 242, 53 S. E. 401. Where the dispensary comsioners of a town elected a secretary and treasurer, and subsequently by an amendment to the act creating the dispensary the legislature named a secretary and treasurer therefor, this took effect as against the person who had been named by the commission, although the time for which they named him had not expired. Waters v. McDowell, 126 Ga. 807, 56 S. E. 95.

72. The principle of home rule as embodied in New York Const. art. 10, §§ 1 and 2 is not violated by the enactment of a statute which provides for the creation of a metropolitan election district for the election of state officers, and confers upon the governor the power to appoint the superintendent of such election district, instead of requiring his appointment by some local authority. Morgan v. Furey, 186 N. Y. 202, 78 N. E. 869.

73. See 6 C. L. 848.

74, 75. The mere fact that the legislature in order to make a change in the mode of filling an office thereby incidentally con-to appoint it is delegated to a board, it should be exercised at a regular or special meeting thereof.[76] A meeting by an appointing board to fill an office is valid though not called in the regular way, if fairly conducted and after an attempt in good faith to regularly call it.[77] When an appointment is vested in a legislative body with directions to make its choice by ballot, the appointment can be made only by ballot,[78] and, if the vote taken shows more votes than members, the body may poll its members or vote anew, or where the excess is in blank ballots may assume them to have been inadvertent.[79]

(§ 4) B. Filling vacancies and promotions.[80]—The power to fill a vacancy is purely statutory,[81] and a "vacancy" of the kind contemplated must exist.[82] In New York where a vacancy exists in the office of supervisor, the filling of the same is vested in the town board and such a vacancy exists where the candidate for such office who received the greatest number of votes at election is ineligible. The predecessor of such a supervisor holding over has no vote on the question of the appointment of his successor.[83]

Promotions in the civil service are sometimes made dependent upon the results of competitive examinations.[84] A writ of mandamus sought for the purpose of obtaining official promotion will be denied when the relator has been guilty of laches.[85]

Contracts of public employment.[86]—The general principles relating to public contracts are treated elsewhere.[87] Public officers and boards are frequently empowered to employ persons to perform services for the public benefit.[88] Where a new office is created but left in suspense, the governing body of a city or county may employ one to do necessary service appropriate to it.[89] A contract of employment may be invalid for lack of the prerequisite appropriation and certification of funds on hand.[90] A contract authorized and drawn between the city and its employe but requiring approval by the council is not yet binding.[91] A public school teacher cannot be legally employed by individual school directors. The employment must be made by the directors as a board at a regular or special meeting.[92] The board of aldermen of a city cannot make a contract for the employment of counsel binding for an unlimited time and irrevocable by their successors.[93]

§ 5. Right to office and remedies to enforce same. A. Indicia and evidence of right.[94]—A commission issued by one having the power of appointment to an office is prima facie title thereto.[95] Record matters cannot be proved by parol.[96] It is not necessary, however, in order to prove one to be a public officer, that his commission should be produced.[97] Proof that he acted as such, in connection with other circumstances may be sufficient.[98] When appointment and assumption of duties is proved, the burden of showing failure to take the oath is on the disputant.[99] Appointment of a deputy may be proved by a letter press copy upon proof of loss of the original.[1] It is competent for an officer himself to testify that he is such officer.[2] The mere fact that a policeman's name was carried upon the payrolls and that the civil service commissioners certified the payrolls upon which his name appeared is not evidence of the legal existence of his office as police patrolman.[3] An estoppel if any existed against relator to claim the office would not prevent an inquiry into respondent's right.[4]

(§ 5) B. What remedy.[5] The duty imposed upon the governor of a state of giving certificates of election to state officials is ministerial and not political or executive, and, therefore, mandamus will lie to compel him to perform such duty.[6] equity has no jurisdiction to determine title to public office.[7] While title will not be tried by injunction, a stipulation may warrant the treatment of such a bill as on hearing of quo warranto.[8] Quo warranto[9] and not certiorari,[10] mandamus,[11]

8. Hayes v. Sturges [Pa.] 64 A. 828. Where the parties have agreed upon the record to waive the question of jurisdiction and the court has considered the case as though it had been brought before it upon a writ of quo warranto, a decree awarding an injunction will be regarded as equivalent to a judgment of ouster in a quo warranto proceedings. or prohibition,[12] is the proper remedy to try title to public office. Injunction is proper to restrain intrusion though complainant is but a de facto officer.[13] One who by force takes an office room and some of the books and who has a certificate is not a de facto officer as against an incumbent also certified and claiming the office by re-election. The right of an incumbent to an office should not be determined in a mandamus proceeding when there is any dispute or doubt of his right.[15] By instituting proceedings in the nature of quo warranto, the claimant of an office conclusively admits that such office is in the possession of the party proceeded against.[16] One in partial possession claiming by re-election and who was certified as elected is a de facto incumbent as against a rival claimant also certified and who enters by force.[17] A bona fide claimant of an office is not justified in attempting to take possession thereof by violence when there is a de facto officer in possession.[18] Contempt will not try title to office but this does not apply to one who disobeys a judgment by ouster by resuming a forfeited office to which he has been unlawfully chosen at a vacancy election.[19] In some jurisdictions special statutory proceedings to obtain possession of an office wrongfully withheld,[20] or the records of a public office [21] are provided.

10. Bumsted v. Blair [N. J. Law] 64 A. 691. If it appears that the newly elected official has been inducted into office, a writ of certiorari should be dismissed, but when it does not appear whether this is so, and so it does not appear whether quo warranto would lie against him, the cause should be held to enable the prosecutor to bring in the newly-elected official, whose interests would be affected by such a judgment as the prosecutor of the writ of certiorari sought. therewith.[23] One suing under a special statutory remedy must plead his capacity so to sue.[24] When the state requires one who claims a public office to show by what right and authority he holds and exercises the functions of said office, the duty and burden of showing a lawful right to the office is put upon the defendant.[25] In Alabama it is unimportant that a suit brought to try the right to hold a public office is brought on the relation of a private person.[26] In such a suit an averment in the information as to the functions, powers, etc., exercised, is not required and it is sufficient to aver in general terms, designating the particular office, the usurpation, intrusion into, and unlawful holding of the same, nor is it necessary that the information be sworn to.[27] Statutory authority to join several claimants of the "same" office warrants a joint suit against claimants of the several incumbencies of a board which is a collective one.[28] The present incumbent of a position, appointed to fill the position from which another has been removed, is not a necessary party to a proceeding by mandamus to reinstate the latter.[29] Quo warranto cannot be used to contest an election by tendering issue who had the most votes and that the returns were false.[30] For disobedience of quo warranto contempt will lie [31] and advice of counsel is no excuse.[32] A judgment in a quo warranto proceeding is self executing, and a person refusing to obey an order of court ousting him from office is guilty of contempt under the Iowa statute.[33] In Colorado quo warranto to try right to office is reviewable by error since it does not involve a franchise or the controversial amount which warrants appeal.[34]

§ 6. Induction into office.[35]—It is generally required by statute that an officer before entering upon the duties of his office shall take an oath [36] and furnish security or bond [37] and give a bond.[38] Statutes which do not expressly declare a vacancy in case of a refusal or neglect to deposit or file an official oath are generally construed to be directory merely, and not mandatory.[38]

son's relation to the office is that of an occupant and a change of incumbency does not abate action against the officer.[41] The term of a public officer is generally fiexd by constitutional or statutory provisions.[42] Where the provisions contained in different sections of a statute regulating the terms of officers are irreconcilably conflicting, that provision will be declared operative which more nearly conforms to the obvious policy and intent of the legislature.[43] It is generally provided that an officer shall continue in office until his successor is elected or appointed and qualifies.[44] By such a provision a term of office is not prolonged beyond a reasonable time to enable the newly elected officer to qualify.[45] An officer does not hold over after his term expires where the legislative intent to the contrary is clearly manifested.[46] When there is no legislative provision fixing the time when an officer is to be elected, he holds his office from the time of his election, for the term prescribed by statute.[47] A state officer elected at a general election to fill a vacancy, such election being held at a time before his predecessors term would have expired.[39] holds only for the remainder of the unexpired term [48] and a vacancy appointee like wise.[49] In computing a probationary term of an appointee, all lawful suspensions are excluded.[50] A change in the constitutional term does not affect officers chosen at the same election when the constitution was amended.[51] Offices are frequently held at the pleasure of some superior officer or official board.[52] The general rule is that, in the absence of some statutory provision to the contrary, the commission or appointment of a deputy officer runs or continues only during the term of the officer making the appointment.[53] In changing the term of an office, an incidental continuance in office must not be unreasonable.[54] A constitutional provision prohibiting the extension of the term of office of a public officer after his election does not refer to a constitutional amendment for that purpose, but only to statutes passed by the legislature.[55] The legislature cannot extend the terms of incumbents of offices even though the office be not a constitutional one when such would be tantamount to an invasion of the appointive or elective power.[50] Legislative power to extend existing terms of office to effectuate a constitutional change in the term extends only to such as will not co-terminate without extension.[57] The Denver charter convention of the city and county had no power to alter the terms of officers whose functions were pertinent solely to the county.[58] A constitutional provision that the election of officers of certain cities shall be held in an odd numbered year and shall expire in an odd numbered year is mandatory.[59]

Vacancies have already been discussed with reference to the power of filling them.[60] The effect of a resignation or removal is treated hereafter.[61] Omission of a merely directory preliminary to taking office does not create a vacancy,[62] neither does a loss of residence [63] or a mere charge of felony.[64]

§ 8. Resignation, abandonment, removal and reinstatement. A. Resignation.[65]—Where the resignation of a public officer is absolute and unconditional and contains a request for immediate acceptance and has been accepted by one with authority to do so, he cannot afterwards withdraw his resignation though he attempt to do so at a time before the date fixed therein for the vacation of the office.[66] Resignation on the eve of ouster for misconduct does not thwart the proceeding [67] or avoid its disqualifying effect.[68]

(§ 8) B. Abandonment.—The acceptance of a second incompatible office by a public officer constitutes an abandonment of his first office.[70] The surrender of property furnished an officer for use in the performance of his duties, in the belief that he was properly discharged, does not show abandonment, when upon being advised that he was wrongfully discharged he brings proceedings for reinstatement.[71]

(§ 8) C. Removal. Who has the power.[72]—The power of removing or discharging employes and subordinate officials is commonly conferred by statute upon superior officers or official boards.[73] Where the charter of a city vests the authority in such a board to select, control, and discipline the police force of the city and no provision is made for disqualifying a member where he may be biased or prejudiced against the policeman on trial, an objection cannot be properly made to a member of the board participating in the trial on this ground.[74] A Massachusetts town can not remove its officers except when so empowered by statute.[75] Removals by abolishing the incumbent's office are valid if in good faith and not in evasion of his rights.[76] An employment to survey and sell public lands being paid out of sales has been held not one irrevocable because coupled with an interest.[77]

What constitutes a removal.[78]—If approval of a council or like body is required, an order of discharge by a mayor is inoperative till such approval.[79] The report of a civil service commission, which is empowered to investigate the conduct of certain officials, may reflect on the official whose conduct has been investigated, but can have no effect on his tenure of office.[80]

Grounds.[81]—A cause is something inimical to the discipline and efficiency of the service.[82] It means some dereliction or general neglect of duty, or some delinquency affecting the general character of the one sought to be removed, and his fitness for the office.[83] The cause must be one which specifically relates to and affects the administration of the office and must be restricted to something of a substantial nature directly affecting the rights and interest of the public.[84] Where an office or employe is to be removed only upon written charges, such charges must state as a cause for removal some substantial shortcoming which renders his continuance in office or employment in some way detrimental to the discipline or efficiency of the service.[85] A preference in appointing does not necessarily restrict the power of removal.[86] Charging or collecting illegal fees is a common ground for removal,[87] and one charged with official misconduct in this respect cannot show good faith on his part,[88] and the fact that one does not know that the charges he makes for his services are illegal is no excuse.[89] Under a statute providing for removals for charging illegal fees or refusing or neglecting to perform official duties, a failure to properly itemize a claim against a county or the allowance of such a claim without a proper voucher is not a cause for removal.[90] In the case of a policeman, inattention or want of diligence or active breach of discipline or misconduct is ground,[91] but long service and a good record should be considered as against ill proved charges of breach of discipline.[92] Failure on the part of a municipal employe to pay his debts may be made a ground for his discharge.[93] Under a statute providing that employes shall be citizens of the United States, one who obtained employment by means of a fraudulent certificate of naturalization is properly dismissed.[94] An officer or employe may be removed or discharged for acts done prior to his appointment [95] or for acts committed in a previous term of the same office or employment.[96] The legislature has the power, unless it is otherwise provided by the constitution, to provide that an officer indicted for misfeasance, malfeasance, or nonfeasance in office shall be suspended, and not allowed to discharge the duties of office during the pendency of the indictment.[97] And such malfeasance as conspiracy to defeat collection of taxes is good cause for removal.[98] Where the statute is silent as to what constitutes a ground for discharge by a civil service commission, the right to determine those questions is left to such commission.[99] Under a statute providing for the compulsory retirement of police officers because of unfitness for duty, fitness for duty means the ability to discharge with average efficiency the duties of the grade to which the officer belongs. It does not mean ability to perform full duty or every conceivable duty.[1] A contract made by an officer, which provides for his discharge at any time, without notice and with or without cause is void.[2]

90. Idaho Rev. St. 1887, § 7459, construed. Corker v. Pence [Idaho] 85 P. 388.

91. Failure by a policeman to report to the station house while on his beat and drunkenness constitute cause for his removal. People v. Lewis, 111 App. Div. 375, 97 N. Y. S. 1057. A few minutes absence from post while reporting an offense from the nearest telephone held not a violation of duty or breach of discipline. People v. McAdoo, 102 N. Y. S. 656. Mere failure to state when he was telephoning to an inspector that he was a patrolman held not a concealment of that fact by one who made disclosure to the police operator when calling the inspector. Id. Delay of a half hour or less to get food, after an entire day's service without any, held reasonable promptness in obeying an order to report at a distant place forthwith. Id. Failure to report absence from post "at the expiration of patrol duty" is excused by an order to report "forthwith" to a superior at an other place. Id. That his brother had an altercation with the same man does not tend to prove that a patrolman threatened the man. Id.

92. People v. McAdoo, 102 N. Y. S. 656.

93. A board of police commissioners having power under a city charter to appoint, promote, or dismiss, any member of the department and to prescribe rules and regulations for the government, discipline, etc., of the same, may make a rule that any member of the police department in neglecting to pay any debt owing by him shall, on complaint by one of his creditors, be punished by reprimand from the police department. 97. Sumpter v. State [Ark.] 98 S. W. 719.

98. Petition for removal of county judge for official misconduct in conspiring to defeat the collection of taxes held sufficient against general demurrer and also sufficiently definite within Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. art. 3543, providing that the grounds of removal shall be set forth in plain and intelligible words. Perry v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 180, 98 S. W. 411. Evidence of defendant's connection with the same conspiracy prior to his election was relevant. Id. No defense that lands were afterwards duly assessed and placed on tax list. Id. As explanatory of the fact defendant and the members of the commissioners' court subsequently approved the tax rolls, as required by law, it was competent to show that prior thereto suits had been instituted to enforce such action. Id. Competent to show that before defendant's election he was present and acted with commissioners alleged to have been in the conspiracy in passing a resolution that they would not place the school lands on the tax rolls. Id. Not error to admit evidence that commissioners' court over which defendant presided approved the tax rolls with taxes charged against lands in the name of unknown owners when the court and he knew to whom the lands belonged. Id.

99. Every ground for discharge need not be specified in the written rules of such commission. Kammann v. Chicago, 222 Ill. 63, 78 N. E. 16.

1. The certificate of disability required by Laws 1901, ch. 466, § 357, must be signed by at least a majority of the police surgeons making the examination. People v. McAdoo, 184 N. Y. 263, 77 N. E 17.

Mode of proceeding.[3]—Statutory proceedings are freequently provided,[4] and persons holding civil service positions are subject to removal by the civil service commission after due notice and upon sufficient charges.[5] Provisions for charges and a hearing do not apply to incumbents discharged before the office came into the civil service list.[6] Quo warranto lies wherever the statute declares a forfeiture [7] and is not excluded by the fact that the misconduct is a crime for which forfeiture is part of the punishment assessable on conviction.[8]

Nature of proceeding and procedure.[9]—The proceeding to oust an officer is civil and not criminal.[10] A public office, not being the property of the incumbent, is not within the meaning of constitutional provisions against depriving one of his property without due process of law or except by the law of the land.[11] Employes, who are not within the protection of the civil service laws, may generally be summarily removed.[12] A limitation in a statute as to the time within which a proceeding for removal shall be heard, being obviously intended to guarantee to the accused a speedy hearing, may be waived by competent parties.[13] In North Dakota an accusation for removal from office for malfeasance must be presented by a grand jury.[14] Where written charges are required,[15] they must state as a removal some substantial shortcoming which renders the continuance of the officer or employe in his office or employment in some way detrimental to the discipline or efficiency of the service.[16] Such charges need not be stated with the accuracy of an indictment,[17]

12. An employee who is engaged to fill a temporary position is not within the civil service provisions of the city charter, and he may be discharged without the filing of written charges and an opportunity to be heard. Rodrigue v. Rogers [Cal. App.] 87 P. 563. One appointed to a position without competitive examination is not within the provisions of the municipal civil service act as to removal. People v. McAdoo, 113 App. Div. 770, 99 N. Y. S. 324. Under the greater New York charter, the board of education may dispense with the services of a teacher or any of its clerical force if they are unnecessary without preferring charges against the person filling such position, or without passing a resolution formally abolishing the position. People v. Board of Education, 114 App. Div. 1, 99 N. Y. S. 737. An inspector of masonry in the department of parks of New York city does not hold an office to which a salary is attached as an incident, but is an employee who can be rightfully dismissed, whenever for lack of work his services become unnecessary. Dunne v. New York, 101 N. Y. S. 678. Under N. Y. Const., art. 5, § 3, an employee in the canal department may be discharged without a hearing on charges, even though he is an honorable veteran of the Civil War. Seeley v. Franchot, 102 N. Y. S. 220.

13. Where the defendant appeared on the day set for trial, and proceeded to trial without objection on account of delay, he will not be heard upon appeal to raise for the first time an objection to the jurisdiction of the court for that reason. Folsom v. Conklin [Cal. App.] 86 P. 724.

14. In a proceeding under N. Dak. Rev. Code 1905, § 9646, or Rev. Code 1899, § 7838, for the removal of public officials, it is proper to object to the accusation on any ground one might assign, by way of demurrer to a complaint. If objections to the accusation are overruled, an answer must be filed, and trial had in a summary manner. State v. Richardson [N. D.] 109 N. W. 1026. It is not necessary that an accusation under such statute should contain all the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged charge and collection of illegal fees by a public official. Id.

15. Under 22 U. S. St. at L. 406 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1222), and the execution order made in pursuance thereof, extending the departmental service classified under this act so as to include all executive officers and employes outside of the District of Columbia, whether compensated by a fixed salary or otherwise, who are serving in a clerical capacity and who perform duties wholly or partly clerical, an employe in the office of the United States surveyor general of the state of Idaho cannot be removed except upon written charges with an opportunity for defense. United States v. Wickersham, 201 U. S. 390, 50 Law. Ed. 798.

16. Joyce v. Chicago, 120 Ill. App. 398. The particular acts or omissions which constitute the alleged negligence or incompetency need not be specified. Heaney v. Chicago, 117 Ill. App. 405.

17. The object of such charges is simply to apprise the officer or employe accused, but it must not leave a substantial part of the cause to inference.[18] It is no objection that a charge averring two causes for removal deficiently sets out one of them.[19] Notice is requisite to a hearing on charges in Illinois,[20] but want of notice is cured by appearance.[21] The allegations of an information against an officer should be made positively when the facts are of record and are accessible or are within the personal knowledge of the informant, otherwise they may be made on information and belief.[22] Where notice of charges against an officer or employe is required, if the record fails to show such notice or waiver thereof, the trial body is without jurisdiction to determine such charges.[23] In Illinois the officer has no right to be present when the civil service commission considers the report and findings of the triers.[24] Under the Greater New York City Charter, which provides that persons holding certain municipal positions shall not be removed until they have been informed of the cause and allowed an opportunity to make an explanation,[25] such persons are not entitled to be sworn, or to introduce witnesses in their own behalf, nor are they entitled to a trial or judicial hearing of any kind.[26] In matters of evidence, the rules of criminal practice are sometimes applied,[27] but in New York the common-law rules of evidence do not apply in their strictness to police trials.[28] Hence, the inadvertent omission to administer the oath to a witness who testifies against a policeman in proceedings to remove him does not invalidate such proceedings.[29] A police commissioner has a right to examine the whole record of a member of the police force to determine what punishment to impose on him, and whether he does so during the trial or after retiring from the bench, or has it all in mind from personal experience or previous examination, does not matter.[30] Where charges against a city employe are admitted, there is no necessity for any further evidence, the only question being whether the excuse offered by him for his alleged omission of duty was sufficient to exonerate him.[31] with reasonable certainty, of the charges against him, that he may have a fair opportunity to defend himself. Joyce v. Chicago, 120 Ill. App. 398. Charges are stated with sufficient precision when the person proceeded against does not appear to have been surprised and appears to have been sufficiently informed to defend himself. State v. Whitaker, 116 La. 947, 41 So. 218.

25. To entitle one claiming to be the head of a bureau to relief, he must allege that the bureau of which he claims to be a member was one established by such charter, or by an officer authorized by such charter to create bureaus. People v. Ahearn, 111 App. Div. 741, 98 N. Y. S. 492. An assistant librarian in a public city library in Greater New York is within the protection of this statute. Craigie v. New York, 100 N. Y. S. 197.

26. All that they are entitled to is to be notified of the charge and afforded an opportunity to make an explanation. People v. Weedbury, 114 App. Div. 188, 99 N. Y. S. 573.

27. But in such a proceeding, the same rules governing the introduction of evidence must be followed as in criminal prosecution, and the guilt of the defendant must be established by the same degree of positive proof as is required in such prosecution. Skeen v. Craig [Utah] 86 P. 487. In New York where the charge is a felony, the same presumptions as on a criminal prosecution are indulged, and the evidence must be very clear. People v. Sturgis, 110 App. Div. 1, 96 N. Y. S. 1046. Evidence held insufficient to show perjury or the suppression of testimony. Id.

31. Ryan v. Handley [Wash.] 86 P. 398.

Order of removal.[32]—A judgment of removal need not state the grounds upon which it is based.[33] The result of a trial before a board as expressed in its findings like a verdict in an ordinary case is to have a reasonable intendment and a reasonable construction, and is not to be set aside, except for necessity.[34] A general finding guilty as charged will be sustained if any of several causes charged was proven.[35] Where no finding in writing was made by deputy police commissioner upon dismissing a member of the police force, no such finding can be returned as a part of the record.[36] The judgment of a civil service tribunal, discharging a civil service employe, will prevent the recovery of a salary by such employe after his discharge, though errors occurred in the trial.[37]

Appeal and review.[38]—Where removal proceedings are judicial in their character they may be reviewed by certiorari,[39] but when an officer or a departmental board in making a removal exercises a power incident to executive discretion rather than one of a judicial or quasi-judicial nature, no review can be had.[40] The courts may, however, as incidental to their power to determine and enforce an officer's right to his office, inquire whether or not the officer or board making the removal exceeded its lawful authority.[41] In New Jersey it has been held that a statute directing a justice of the supreme court to rehear in a summary manner the charges against a policeman, suspended or dismissed by a police board, is void.[42] In Louisiana when a police officer is removed by an inspector of police, he may appeal de novo to the board of police commissioners.[43] In Massachusetts under the statute providing for the removal of license commissioners by the mayor of a city, for cause, there can be no appeal from the decision of the superior court affirming the order of the mayor removing such a commissioner.[44] A review must be reasonably pur-

40. When a police commissioner who has the power of removal, upon giving his reasons and notifying the person removed, exercises this power, his action will not be set aside unless an essential formality has been omitted or unless, perhaps, he has so acted as to defeat the real purpose of the law. Appeal of Pierce, 78 Conn. 666, 63 A. 161. In Massachusetts the action of the mayor of a city in making removal or abolishing an office is final and not subject to review. Hill v. Fitzgerald [Mass.] 79 N. E. 825. Certiorari will not lie to review an order made by the street commissioner dismissing a member of the uniformed force from the street cleaning department of the city of New York. Such a proceeding is in no sense judicial and cannot be reviewed by certiorari. People v. Woodbury, 112 App. Div. 79, 98 N. Y. S. 142. Where a municipal charter provides that charges against firemen should be established to the satisfaction of the board of fire commissioners with the further provision that such board shall be responsible for the efficient working of the department, when charges have been regularly preferred, opportunity given to defend against such charges, and the board has exercised its discretion in passing upon such charges, their judgment in that respect is not subject to review. sued or it is lost.[45] Notice of application for certiorari is especially proper when the civil service commission is the respondent.[46] If the return is incomplete, the civil service commission may be compelled to supply it.[47] On a return laches will not be inferred against the removing power unless the time when it first knew the facts appears.[48] Whether the cause charged was legal ground may be reviewed.[49]

(§ 8) D. Reinstatement.[50]—Unless the office held by a public official has been lawfully abolished, or he has been guilty of unreasonable delay,[51] he is entitled to relief by mandamus, if illegally removed.[52] The writ should issue to those officers on whom is the legal duty to make reinstatement,[53] and it does not abate by resignation of the respondent,[54] but should be continued against his successor.[55] An officer may waive or abandon his right to reinstatement,[56] or this right may be barred by limitations[57] or lost by laches,[58] but one is not guilty of laches where the time allowed to elapse has been consumed in making attempts to procure redress from the proper authorities.[59] Where a policeman, who has been dismissed for absence from duty, seeks to be reinstated, the burden is on him to prove in a proper proceeding that his absence was not voluntary or intentional, and, therefore, could not be treated as a resignation.[60]

§ 9. Powers and duties[61] of officers and employes are generally prescribed by statute, or constitution, and where an office is constitutional, but its duties are statutory, the legislature may, within reasonable limits, change the duties of the office if the public welfare requires it to be done.[62] Unless restrained by the constitution, the legislature may impose upon public officers new and additional duties theretofore performed by other officers.[63] Persons elected to office take the office subject to such regulations, impositions, and restrictions as the legislature may impose, which are not forbidden by the constitution directly or by necessary implication.[64] A public officer has only such powers as are conferred upon him expressly or by necessary implication,[65] and all acts done in excess of such powers [66] or beyond his bailiwick,[67] or after his term has expired,[68] are invalid.

An office peculiarly of statutory origin carries such powers only as the statute gives.[69] A pro tempore officer has usually all the powers which pertain to the regular incumbent.[70] All persons who deal with public officials are charged with notice of the scope of the power of such officials.[71] Officers charged with ministerial duties like private persons, act at their peril on determining what their duties are under particular circumstances.[72] In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that public officials have properly discharged their duties.[73]

The unauthorized act of a state official may be confirmed and ratified by the legislature,[74] and of a city official by the electors [75] or governing body [76] of the city.

are personally interested in the allowance of a claim against the municipality, they are legally disqualified from voting to allow it.[78] A public official cannot contract with himself, on behalf of the public, as such a contract would be against public policy,[80] and even an assignment of a contract to his corporation is held invalid in Arkansas[81] though made in good faith.[82] So a contract with regard to public affairs in which a public officer is interested is void, although such contract is without fraud and without prejudice to the interests of taxpayers.[83]

Acts of a de facto officer[84] are valid as to the public and third persons,[85] but the acts of a mere usurper are absolutely void for all purposes.[86] The acts of the officers of a de facto municipal corporation are valid when they would be within the power of such officers if the corporation were one de jure.[87]

Employment of deputies and assistants.[88]—A defined power to employ assistants at public charge is exclusive of any greater authority.[89]

Hours of work.[90]—The number of hours per day which public employes shall work is sometimes fixed by statute.[91]

Office records, paraphernalia, and rooms.—A duly appointed and qualified officer is entitled to the official records of his office.[92] County officials having the custody thereof have the right to direct what rooms in the court house shall be occupied by certain officers,[93] and the right to change these assignments from time to time as the public interest requires;[94] but without statutory authority to do duties of the clerk with relation to the prosecution against the clerk. State v. Sheppard, 192 Mo. 497, 91 S. W. 477. Under Tex. Const. art. 5, § 11, and Tex. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1068, a district judge is disqualified to try a case in which he may be interested, but such a judge is not so interested as to be disqualified to try a case in which it is sought to restrain the collection of city taxes, though he is a taxpayer of that city. In Alabama the county board of revenue has this power and so long as it acts within the limits of its authority and in good faith, its action cannot be assailed, and no other tribunal can intervene to revise or control its action. White v. Hewlett, 143 Ala. 374, 42 So. 78.

94. White v. Hewlett, 143 Ala. 374, 42 So. 78. A county officer whose property has been removed from room occupied by him as an office during his absence and who is refused permission to re-enter by and otherwise they must proceed according to the forms of law to test the right of an officer, who is in possession, to hold the room occupied by him.[95]

Mode of official action.—Where a board is empowered to perform certain public duties, a quorum must be present or its acts will not be valid and binding.[96] Generally when a common council, or legislature, or congress is referred to especially in statutes, a single official body is meant, and when acts are required to be performed, they must be performed by the body and not by the separate volition of the different members composing such body.[97] A direction to do an official act under the official seal, there being none, may be upheld by regarding the direction to use the seal as surplusage.[98] A deputy authorized to issue writs should do so in his own name as deputy, not in his principal's name according to the rule in Georgia.[99]

Judicial control or review.[1]—Generally speaking, administrative or executive and legislative acts are not subject to judicial visitation unless in gross abuse or usurpation of right.[2] Thus, the action of a city council in disciplining a member is not reviewable.[3] Mandamus will lie to enforce the performance of ministerial duties,[4] where the relator establishes a clear legal right to their performance. But this writ will not issue to disturb or overrule the determination of questions of fact committed to the discretion of an officer or official body.[6] Officers may be enjoined from the commission of lawful acts,[7] but an injunction will not be granted at under order of the county commissioners, cannot maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer to recover possession of the room where he does not show an actual, exclusive, and peaceable possession. Watson v. Scarbrough [Ala.] 40 So. 672.

95. In Alabama the commissioners' court has the right to punish for contempt of court, but an officer claiming what he considers his legal right to hold possession of a room is not guilty of contempt of court, and if he were, putting him and the property of his office out of the room is not one of the punishments mentioned in the statute. Where appointments of municipal officers by a mayor are subject to be nullified by the filing of objections in writing by a majority of the common council, it is not necessary that the common council should meet as a body, and a majority thereof agree upon the objections, but each member of the council may file his objections separately. Mandamuus to compel a board of health to furnish and certify a property itemized statement of claims of persons employed by it. Sawyer v. Village of Manton, 145 Mich. 272, 13 Det. Leg. N. 470, 108 N. W. 644. Mandamus to compel board of health to issue permit to sell milk. People v. Department of Health of New York, 51 Misc. 190, 100 N. Y. S. 788. Mandamus will lie to compel a municipal superintendent of buildings to approve plans for a house which one desires to erect on a lot owned by him, though the owner knows the city intends to acquire the lot in the near future and he will thus be entitled to compensation for the value of such house. People v. Reville, 50 Misc. 474, 100 N. Y. S. 584. Mandamus does not issue as of course to a town officer, whenever an execution against the town remains unsatisfied. It issues only to compel such officer to do those acts which the law requires of him toward the payment of the judgment. Rose v. McKie [C. C. A.] 145 F. 584.

6. Mandamus will not issue to interfere with the discretion of an official body, having control of the police force of a municipality, in the management of that force. Gleistman v. West New York [N. J. Law] 64 A. 1084.

7. Trespassing upon the lands of a pri-

the instance of a taxpayer where the injury suffered by him does not differ in kind from that which is suffered by the public generally.[8] Acts threatened under color of laws averred to be invalid will not be enjoined when not an interference with complainant's rights.[9] Police officers will not be enjoined from the performance of their duty of suppressing crime and arresting criminals.[10] The federal courts are without jurisdiction to entertain a suit in equity to restrain public officers from initiating judicial proceedings in the state courts to enforce a statute which is alleged to be unconstitutional.[11] The officers of a municipal corporation engaged in the perpetration of ultra vires acts in behalf of the corporation are proper parties defendant to a suit to enjoin such acts or to correct them.[12] Certiorari will not lie to review the summary determination of an official board made without judicial proceedings, through its action may involve the exercise of judgment and discretion.[13]

§ 10. Liabilities of public officers. A. Civil liability.[14]—In doing what the lawful discharge of his duties requires, an officer does no wrong and is not liable;[15] but if he is negligent therein or if he exceeds his duty and performs an active wrong,[16] or invades property rights without due course of law,[17] he is personally liable, as he is if h enegligently omits a duty imposed for the protection of one injured.[18] Personal liability for an unauthorized act may be extinguished by sub-vate person under a claim that it is a public highway. Lawrence v. Kirby, 145 Mich. 432, 13 Det. Leg. N. 497, 108 N. W. 770.

10. An injunction will not be granted restraining the police from taking stations in front of or in the doorway leading to an alleged pool room and from warning persons not to enter therein. The owner if injured may invoke the criminal law or have an action for his damages. Stevens v. McAdoo, 112 App. Div. 458, 98 N. Y. S. 553.

11. Action to prevent officers from enforcing a statute prohibiting the use of trading stamps. Hutchinson v. Smith, 140 F. 982.

12. The fact that after a suit has been instituted complaining of ultra vires acts about to be done, the corporation and its officers discover their error and revoke the order under which the acts were directed to be done and abandon the illegal scheme, does not afford any cause for the dismissal of a suit properly instituted to prevent the acts complained of. Gillespis v. Gibbs [Ala.] 41 So. 868.

13. Refusal of board of health to allow one to sell milk in a city. People v. Department of Health of New York, 51 Misc. 190, 100 N. Y. S 788.

14. See 6 C. L. 864.

15. Health officers are not liable for injuries occasioned by establishing a quarantine, however erroneous or mistaken their action may be, provided there be no malice or wrong motive present (Beeks v. Dickinson County [Iowa] 108 N. W. 311), nor are they liable for a mistake made or negligence in locating a smallpox hospital (Id.). If health officers are personally negligent in the maintenance of such hospital and in consequence of such negligence the hospital becomes a nuisance, they are liable, provided their negligence is a misfeasance as distinguished from a nonfeasance. Barry v. Smith, 191 Mass. 78, 77 N. E. 1099.

16. Where one complains of indignities heaped upon him by officials who had him in charge while working upon the streets of a city as punishment for violating a city ordinance, he should bring his action against such officials and not the city. Bartlett v. Paducah, 28 Ky. L. R. 1174, 91 S. W. 264.

17. Health officers are liable for taking land for use in connection with a contagious hospital without the owner's consent or without proceeding according to law. Barry v. Smith, 191 Mass. 78, 77 N. E. 1099. In the prosecution of public works by or under authority of the state under the right of eminent domain or common-law necessity there is immunity from liability for entry upon private lands only to the extent that the entry or occupation is temporary or the infliction of damage is incidental and incipient or preliminary. A state engineer and his assistant, who make a slash through a forest preserve three and a half miles long and from five to twenty-five feet wide which it will take eighty years of timber growth to repair, are guilty of an unauthorized trespass and are personally liable. Litchfield v. Pond, 186 N. Y. 66, 78 N. E. 719.

18. Officers who let a contract for a public building without taking the bond required by statute for the protection of materialmen and laborers are individually liable for damages suffered by such persons. Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637, 12 Det. Leg. N. 860, 106 N. W. 547. Where it is provided that the laborer or person furnishing materials shall file an itemized statement of the amount owed within thirty days after the contract is completed, such notice is not a condition precedent to the liability of public officers to laborers or furnishers of material where such officers entered into a contract for public work without taking the required bond. Hardison v. Yeaman, 115 Tenn. 639, 91 S. W. 1111.

sequent legislation, ratifying the act as if originally authorized.[19] A public officer who is a member of a corporate body upon which a duty rests cannot be held liable for the neglect of duty of that body.[20] Under a statute providing that sheriffs shall be responsible for the official acts of their deputies, a sheriff is liable where his deputy shoots a person in order to effect his arrest.[21] Under the New York statute subjecting an officer to an action for damages for refusing to give preference to an honorably discharged veteran,[22] or for removing such a veteran for political purposes,[23] or for reducing the salary of such veteran with intent to bring about his resignation,[24] and also giving such veteran a remedy by mandamus for righting his wrong, he must first establish his right by mandamus[25] unless under the special circumstances of the case this cannot be done.[26] An action against an officer for omission of a duty is in Iowa not barred as one for mistake but as one for neglect of official duty.[27]

In contracts where the officers of a public or municipal corporation act officially and under an innocent mistake of law in which the other contracting party participated with equal opportunities for knowledge, neither party at the time looking to personal liability, the officers in such a case are not personally liable, nor is the corporation liable.[28] An officer is not personally liable for the compensation of subordinates appointed by him, unless he pledges his own credit in plain words.[29]

In Nebraska an officer who exacts illegal fees is liable to a statutory action for a penalty.[30]

Liability to the public on the bond is hereafter treated. The statute of limitations applicable to suits upon official bonds does not apply to an action to recover from an officer personally sums collected and illegally detained.[31] The rule that a public officer is not liable for the loss of public funds deposited by him in a bank of undoubted standing and reputation for solvency, which subsequently fails, is followed in Tennessee.[32] In Nebraska a citizen not specially interested cannot sue officers on behalf of a city for misappropriation of funds,[33] but in New York a taxpayer may bring an action against an official who has caused the loss of any public property, funds or assets or the waste or injury of the public funds.[34] The sureties of a bonded depository bank are not liable for a shortage of the depositing officer by reason of the depository's having discounted his note and credited the proceeds to the deposit fund.[35] If officers act in bad faith in making public contracts they are liable in damages where it is proved that pecuniary loss resulted from such conduct, or for the costs of any litigation occasioned by their corrupt action.[36]

Accounting.—Such disbursements should be credited as were made conformably to law for the public.[37] The official audit of an officer's accounts is conclusive of all matters audited [38] and re-audit is not permissible.[39] The form of an audit finding the state of the account is not material.[40] A compromise and release respecting funds misappropriated held not to cover claims held by the officer at the time which he had purchased below face value and of which the county had no knowledge.[41] Where a city agrees to repay an official, charged with a shortage, the amount of any overpayment made by him, and upon an investigation the evidence shows an overpayment, a decree for such repayment should be made as incidental to foreclosure of a lien securing the shortage.[42]

(§ 10) B. Criminal liability.[43]—Aside from crimes in which the official character of the crimiual does not inhere, public officers are criminally liable for malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance in office,[44] thus public officers who wilfully neglect to make arrests when voters are assaulted and obstructed are indictable.[45] Public officers are also made criminally liable for the commission of special statutory offenses, such as failing or refusing to deliver the records of the office to their successors,[46] falsifying the official records and accounts [47] or purchasing or receiving in payment evidence of the indebtedness of a city or a county or a demand against it for less than its face value, with accrued interest.[48] Previous demand is essential to make out a crime of failing to pay over moneys after demand.[49] Under an act of congress making it a criminal offense for a member of congress [50] or an officer or agent of the United States government[51] to receive or agree to receive any compensation for services rendered, or to be rendered in relation to any proceeding in which the United States is directly or indirectly interested, before any department or officer[52] a fraud order inquiry pending before the postoffice department[53] and the disposition of the public lands[54] are matters in which the United States is interested. Officers in the city of Washington are subject to the municipal regulations which all other citizens are required to obey.[55] In Iowa it is made unlawful by statute for a school director to act as agent for any school text books or school supplies during his term of office.[56] In Pennsylvania it is unlawful for the contracting officer to be interested in any contract for public supplies whether as an individual, firm member, member of corporation, or any agent or officer of one,[57] and a corrupt intent is not essential in such crime.[58] In New York it is made a misdemeanor for an official to reduce the compensation of an honorably discharged veteran with intent to bring about his resignation.[59]

50. U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) § 1782, is constitutional. Burton v. U. S., 202 U. S. 344, 50 Law. Ed. 1057. The authority of the

An indictment against a city official for unlawfully buying city warrants must contain the name of the state and county as well as the city.[60] An indictment charging an officer with misconduct in violation of a statute must allege that the misconduct was wilful, corrupt, or fraudulent.[61] Indictments for official misconduct in the performance of executive and ministerial duties do not usually, however, contain an averment that the misfeasance was corrupt.[62] An indictment against a police officer for nonfeasance in several instances charges but one crime.[63] An indictment for being interested in a contract for supplies made by accused for the public need not particularize the supplies furnished unless the statute does so.[64] Averment of different supplies to several places under one contract is not double,[65] and under the Iowa statute it may charge accused with acting as agent and dealer.[66] On the issue of fraud in public contracts it is irrevelant what other work cost not shown to have been similar,[67] and the officers contracting for such other work are not competent experts.[68] The bids which other contractors would make are also irrelevant to the issue of fraud in the one made.[69] On a prosecution for misappropriating moneys and falsifying books, conviction may be had of the latter while acquitting of the former.[70]

A writ of prohibition will not be issued to restrain the prosecution of public officers because the sole object of such prosecution is to hinder and obstruct them in the performance of their duty.[71]

§ 11. Liabilities of the public and of private persons for acts of public officers.[72]—The general rule is that in order to make a governmental body liable for the acts or contracts of its officers they must be done or made within the scope of official authority.[73] Official contracts must follow official authority[74] and conform in the making and subject-matter to regular lawful official procedure and be for a lawful public end.[75] To render municipal warrants valid and binding upon a municipality they must be signed by the officers prescribed by statute.[76] Where it is provided by statute that a town can not buy without the consent of a majority of its selectmen, to constitute such assent affirmative action by them as a board of public officers is required.[77] Where a proceeding is against an officer of a municipality for the enforcement of a right of a relator against the municipality, the proceeding does not abate by the resignation, removal, or expiration of the term of the officer[78] and where persons are sued in their official capacity the effect of any service and of any notice made upon them as such officials applies to and is binding upon their successors in office to the same extent as if they had continued in office.[79] While one may be liable for acts of a public officer performed at his instance,[80] one at whose store a special policeman has been posted by request is not liable for an arrest made by him unless it is shown that he was authorized by such person to make an arrest, or that in making an arrest he was acting under the authority of the storekeeper express or implied, or was acting otherwise than in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by his appointment as a special policeman.[81] The liability of particular public bodies is discussed under appropriate titles.[82]

§ 12. Official bonds and liabilities thereon.[83]—A bond must be signed by the principal unless the sureties signed and delivered the bond intending to be bound without it.[84]

A bond given for the faithful discharge of the duties of one legally entrusted with state and county funds is an official bond, and the statutory provisions relative thereto enter into, and become a part of, the contract.[85] The recital in a bond that the principal is a deputy officer in the service of a certain officer will estop the sureties on the bond to deny that he was in fact such deputy officer and that the bond was an official bond.[86] A condition in a bond limiting the liability of a surety company to such wrongs of a deputy officer as shall be discovered during the continuance of the bond or within six months thereafter cannot be enforced.[87] The sureties on an officer's bond are answerable only for the unfaithful performance of official duties and not derelictions outside of he limits thereof.[88] An officer and his bondsmen have no concern with acts done after his successor has taken charge of the office and evidence thereof is inadmissible.[89] Penal liabilities of the officer for misconduct are not enforceable against his sureties.[90] In the case of a special bond, the general bond is secondarily liable.[91] What constitutes a breach of particular bonds is decided in the cases in the note below.[92] A resolution of a city council to furnish the bond of a city officer, required by such council, amounts only

Where an officer performs an act in strict accordance with the directions of a valid writ and in the line of his official duty, neither he nor his sureties are responsible. If he willfully performs such act without any valid process and outside his official duty, he alone is responsible in damages. If he has in his possession a valid writ or order, and claiming and even believing he is acting within the scope of such writ or order, performs an illegal or unauthorized act as to the party against whom the writ or order runs, or as to a third party, then he is liable and also his sureties, to the extent of their bond. A public officer who disburses public funds otherwise than in accordance with law, renders himself and his sureties liable upon his official bond. United States v. Day, 27 App. D. C. 458; Annis v. McNulty, 51 Misc. 121, 100 N. Y. S. 951. There is no breach of a county treasurer's bond conditioned that he "shall well and truly and faithfully discharge all the duties enjoined upon him by law in behalf of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and shall make payment according to law of all moneys received by him for the use of said commonwealth" by reason of a failure to pay over license moneys to a municipality. Commonwealth v. Schadt, 214 Pa. 592, 64 A. 320. A postmaster and his sureties are not liable to the government on his bond for money paid out to a laborer for work to a vote of such council to pay the premium and does not affect the liability of the surety thereon.[93] Under a statute authorizing any person injured by the breach of an official bond to sue thereon to obtain a recovery, the relator must show an injury growing out of the act of the officer.[94] Under a statute making a county officer liable on his official bond to the party injured by his collection of illegal fees for five times the amount of such fees, neither the officer or his sureties are liable to the county for collecting illegal fees.[95] Where an official undertaking is in form joint and several, it is proper to bring an action against the sureties thereon without joining the public officer as a party.[96] In Kansas in case of the breach of the bond of a school district treasurer, if the school directors neglect or refuse to bring an action, any householder in the district may do so.[97] Error in suing in the name of the state on a bond which should have run to the state but ran to the county should be raised on the trial and may be cured by amendment after judgment.[98] A taxpayer who may sue only by leave of court must plead the giving of leave thereto.[99] Ordinarily in an action on an official bond for failure to account for public moneys the burden is on the plaintiff to show not only the amount of money received by the officer but also to show his disbursements, but under circumstances their burden shifts.[1] By act of Congress in an action on the bond of a United States public officer, a duly certified and authenticated copy of the records of the proper department is admissible in behalf of the government [2] and makes a prima facie case for the government.[3] Such a transcript is not conclusive of the claims of the government but items rejected by the accounting officers may be allowed by the court.[4] As a general rule an auditor's settlement of a tax collector's account is admissible in evidence both as against him and against his sureties for the year in question.[5]

§ 13. Compensation.[6]—The rule that the salary annexed to a public office is incident to the title of the office and does not depend upon its occupation and exercise [7] may be changed by the legislative power of the state which may provide that when no duty is actually performed no salary shall be allowed.[8] A public officer

8. Under Cal. Pol. Code, § 936, as amended by Act of 1891, the occupant of a public office to whom a certificate of election has been issued, and who performs the duties cannot recover any compensation for his services unless a compensation therefor has been fixed by law.[9] And the payment of a claim made by an official for a specific sum as his official salary does not establish a salary for the office nor oblige the payment of a similar claim afterwards made but only disposes of that particular claim.[10] However, salaries of officers is a current expense and not a "debt" which must be preceded by provision of a fund for its payment.[11] It is said that persons summoned as posse comitatus are not entitled to any compensation.[12]

A public officer is entitled for the performance of his official duties to such compensation only as is fixed by law for that office,[13] and even though additional duties are imposed upon him after his appointment he cannot claim extra compensation [14] unless it is provided for in the law imposing such additional duties.[15] He can recover, however, for other services which he may render outside of and in addition to his ordinary official duties which can be as well performed by any other person as by him.[16] Even where an eight-hour law applies to public service, com-

thereof, is entitled to the salary of such office until a contest against him is finally determined, and if the contestant is successful he is not entitled to any salary up to the time of such determination. Merkley v. Williams [Cal. App.] 84 P. 1015; and see Taut v. Blair [Cal. App.] 84 P. 671. This statute was not repealed by the provisions of the county government act, which contains no provision relating to the payment for services in cases where an action to determine the right to an office is pending. S. 951. A railway postal clerk is not entitled to his hotel bills and necessary traveling expenses in addition to his salary. Parshall v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 433. A statute providing that the compensation fixed shall be in full for all services excludes the idea that the legislature intended to allow extra compensation for traveling and like expenses. Placer County v. Freeman [Cal.] 87 P. 628. 97 Ohio Laws p. 296, § 719 provides for all the compensation to which a sheriff is entitled for conveying persons to the asylum at Athens, Ohio, upon the warrant of a probate judge. Though under Idaho Const. art. 18, § 7, a probate judge must account and turn into the county treasury all fees received by him for services rendered by virtue of his office over and above his actual and necessary expenses, and the salary paid to such officer under the law is in full compensation for all services rendered by him, yet any gratuity received by such probate judge over and above the statutory fee of five dollars for solemnizing a marriage may, under Idaho Rev. pensation above that fixed cannot be given or agreed,[17] and one on the regular staff working overtime is not an "extra clerk" during such overtime.[18]

It is frequently provided that an officer shall receive a salary, the exact amount of which is fixed by law,[19] while in other instances it is provided that he shall receive certain fees,[20] or commissions.[21] Where it is expressly provided that an official shall receive no other compensation than the salary fixed by the statute, he is not entitled to fees,[22] and where the law fixes fees as the only source of compensation, an officer must look to this source alone.[23] Also a provision that certain traveling and personal expenses be paid negatives the right to others,[24] especially when a sum is allowed as full compensation "for all services." Fees paid a public officer voluntarily without legal duress or compulsion and without notice of reservation of rights cannot be recovered back though they were collected under an erroneous construction of a statute.[25] In New Jersey municipal officers are to be compensated in accordance with the services rendered by them.[26]

An officer may lose his right to compensation by absence from duty;[27] but so long as an officer is not removed, he is entitled to the salary attached to his office

Such an acceptance is equivalent to a voluntary payment of commissions. Young v. Parish of East Baton Rouge, 116 La. 379, 40 So. 768. Moneys merely received into custody are not "collected" moneys on which commissions are to be paid and especially where another officer is by statute charged with their "collection". 27. An officer is entitled to his salary where no appointment is made during his absence and he upon return from his absence resumes the office and enters upon his functions without objection, there being no voluntary cessation on his part in the discharge of his duties, but it being shown that he was prevented from their discharge by being confined under a criminal charge. Bergerow v. Parker [Cal. App.] 87 P. 248. In determining whether a public officer has lost the right to claim his compensation because of absence from his post of duty, what constitutes such absence must in great measure be determined by the character of the office, the nature of the duties, and the circumstances and conditions under which they are to be performed. United States v. Day, 27 App. D. C. 458. And see infra this section, Vocation.

although he has not fully discharged his duties;[28] though one lawfully suspended pending trial of charges for removal for which he might have been immediately removed cannot recover compensation for the interval between them and final removal.[29]

Payment to a de facto public officer of the salary of the office made while he is in possession is a good defense to an action brought by the de jure officer to recover the same salary after he has acquired or regained possession;[30] but the latter may sue the former for the salary and fees received by him.[31] One who is not an officer de jure because his term of office has expired, nor an officer de facto because the duties of the office have been performed by another who has been appointed and duly qualified, is not entitled to the salary attached to such office.[32] A city should be allowed when sued by a de jure officer the amount paid out by it in good faith to deputies and assistants recognized by him as his own in the earning of fees.[33]

An employe who receives his pay, at a fixed rate, for a considerable time, without objection or dissent is estopped to claim additional compensation,[34] and the public is not bound by protest made to its mere disbursing agent;[35] but an employe who by ordinance is entitled to a certain salary is not estopped to claim that amount by receiving and receipting for a less amount where he demands the greater amount and has made no claim for less.[36] One who is a mere probationary policeman and as such a mere employe is bound by a receipt in full.[37] An ordinance fixing the salaries of municipal employes is not a contract between them and the municipality.[38]

Power to fix the compensation of subordinate officers and employes is frequently conferred upon certain officers and official boards.[39]

39. Under Kentucky Acts 1904, c. 36, p. 136, the fiscal court in fixing the salary of a health officer should fix it at a reasonable amount, that is, an amount commensurate with the services estimated from past experience and present conditions which he would be required to perform during the year. Butler County v. Gardner, 29 Ky. L. R. 922, 96 S. W. 582. While the Greater New York Charter does not require any particular or special method or manner of fixing salaries of the employes of the department of public works, the action of the commissioner in fixing such salaries, must be called to the attention of the common council for its action and concurrence. Middleton v. New York, 50 Misc. 587, 99 N. Y. S 440. Salary of county treasurer fixed by board of county commissioners and controllers under act April 15, 1834, § 41. Scranton v. Lackawanna County, 214 Pa. 509, 63 A. 968. Upon their failure to do so the exclusive remedy is by appeal to the court of common pleas under act April

A constitutional inhibition against the increase or diminution of the salary of an officer during his existing term of office [40] operates to prevent the repeal of an ordinance, passed prior to a municipal officer's entering upon the discharge of his duties, authorizing him to take a certain per cent of the interest on city deposits for his salary and expenses.[41] Even though an office be a constitutional one if its duties are statutory, the legislature may within reasonable limits change the duties and diminish the emoluments thereof, if the public welfare requires it.[42]

An officer or employe who has been wrongfully removed or suspended is upon restoration to office or employment entitled to the emoluments accruing during the period of his removal or suspension [43] if there was no other person who performed the duties of the office or position during such period,[44] and if he is found to have been able and willing to perform them.[45] If an official whose salary is payable monthly is wrongfully discharged, he may sue to recover the salary due at the expiration of each month or he may wait until the end of his term and sue for the whole amount due.[46] The rule that an officer suing for his salary must establish his right to the office to which the salary attaches [47] has no application in the case of a municipal laborer.[48] Ordinarily a prima facie case is made out by proof of appointment and qualification, of the amount of salary fixed, the term of office, and nonpayment.[49] An unpaid allowance for uniform cannot be recovered without proof of its value where the uniform and not money is allowable.[50]

Compensation of subordinates.[51]—Officers are not generally liable for the compensation of their subordinates.[52] In New York an honorably discharged veteran whose salary is reduced in order to cause his resignation may bring an action for damages against the officer making such reduction.[53]

Assignments and other contracts.[54]—Not only in the common-law states but also under the civil law as in Louisiana, an assignment of unearned salary by an officer is void.[55] If it be true that a municipal officer can bind the municipality by an assignment of his salary before a warrant therefor is issued,[56] unless notice is given to the municipality in the manner prescribed by statute, the assignment will not bind it.[57] A penal statute against selling or assigning "unearned" salary, wages

PARDONS AND PAROLES.

A board of pardons is a branch of the executive department and has no power to inflict punishment,[68] or right to question, examine into, or determine, the justice of a conviction or sentence.[69] Unless otherwise provided, it may impose any condition or restriction not immoral or illegal,[70] and upon acceptance of the pardon, it becomes binding upon the convict.[71] Where the power to pardon is vested in the governor "by and with the advice" of the council, such advice is required only for affirmative action.[72] The state authorities have power to parole a Federal prisoner.[72a] A violation of a conditional pardon renders the same null and void [73] and the convict liable to arrest and reimprisonment as provided by statute or the terms of the pardon[74] for the unserved portion of his term,[75] but it does not forfeit earned credits for good behavior.[76] However, unless otherwise provided,[77] he is entitled to a hearing before a court of general criminal jurisdiction,[78] but not to a jury trial except upon the issue of identity.[79] Where the sentence is referred to in a conditional pardon, it is to be taken in its legal and proper meaning.[80] Ordinarily a full pardon restores one to civil rights,[81] but is no defense to disbarment proceedings against an attorney.[82] The power of the warden to grant conditional freedom under the indeterminate sentence law of Michigan is not an unconstitutional interference with the judicial power of the courts.[83] The refusal of a state court to recognize a pardon is not a ground for removal into the Federal court.[84]

it must appear that he will probably fail in a substantial degree to discharge his duty towards his child.[93] It is held in Illinois that a father who provides a good home for his child is deprived of his custody without due process of law by the action of the juvenile court in committing him to a home for boys during minority for committing a criminal assault.[94]

In controversies over the possession of a child, three matters are to be considered: The rights of the parents; the rights and interests of the present custodian; and the welfare of the child.[95] The rights of the parents may be forfeited by misconduct or voluntary relinquishment.[96] The agreement to relinquish is, however,

Ex parte Reynolds, 73 S. C. 296, 53 S. E. 490. Where a father by intemperate habits had brought reproach upon himself and his children and had permitted others to provide for them, but had reformed and placed himself in a financial and moral condition suitable for the care of the children, he was entitled to their custody. Id. The mere fact that a father is a man of small means is not a sufficient ground for denying him the custody of his child. Cormack v. Marshall, 122 Ill. App. 208. Evidence that, at the time a child six months old was placed in the care of its aunt, it did not have shoes or a bonnet, held insufficient to warrant finding that father had failed to properly care for it. In re Galleher, 2 Cal. App. 364, 84 P. 352. Where the return of a petition for habeas corpus for the removal of a daughter from the custody of her father, based on the ground of his adultery with his housekeeper, denied the allegation of the petition, and the affidavit of the daughter averred that she was eighteen years of age, was properly cared for and was receiving a good education, and that she wanted to stay with her father, the proceedings should have been dismissed on the return and papers annexed thereto. People v. Bishop, 102 N. Y. S. 592.

94. Note: The validity of the present decision may be doubted on the simple ground that the fact that the child has committed a criminal assault shows that the father is not able to care for it properly. While the father might be able to control an ordinary boy, his failure to develop this boy into a law-abiding citizen is at least evidence of his incompetence. It is therefore questionable if the action of the juvenile court is so unreasonable as to authorize the court to declare it unconstitutional. But there is another objection to the case which seems to be conclusive. The reasoning of the court is premised upon the proposition that the father has a vested property right to the custody of his children. It is believed, however, that this parental right is merely a privilege granted to the parent by the state, which may consequently be withheld by the state if it sees fit. See Tiedeman, Limitations of Police Power, §§ 166 et seq. It has seen fit to allow the father the privilege of caring for his children, because the natural affection that exists between them ordinarily renders the father the best person to exercise this control. But if the state desired, it could transfer the custody of the children to whomsoever it chose. The decisions amply sustain this position. Thus, a statute enacting that the custody of children under seven years of age should belong to the mother in case the parents separated has been held constitutional (Bennet v. Bennet, 13 N. J. Eq. 114), and furthermore, in determining who shall care for a minor, courts of chancery or probate courts whenever a controversy arises, exercises a sound discretion, and frequently deprive the father of his custody if it seems wise, although he may be entirely competent to care for him (Jones v. Darnall, 103 Ind. 569, 53 Am. Rep. 545). For a careful review of the decisions see Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 461 et seq.

It was further argued by counsel that, as the child had been deprived of his liberty without a jury trial, the constitutional provisions guaranteeing jury trial had been violated. The proceeding is certainly not an infringement of the provisions, for this is not in any aspect a criminal proceeding. The judgment is that the child is delinquent and as such needs the care of the state. The whole purpose of the commitment is the reformation of the child and not his punishment. Furthermore, the child is not even being deprived of his "liberty", as that word is used in the constitutions. The state is exercising parental restraint, a restraint which is perhaps more severe than that usually exercised by a father, because of the peculiar viciousness of the child. The imposition of such restraint has always been legitimate. Were there any doubt of the validity of this reasoning, it is resolved by an examination of the cases, which fully support it. not absolute and irrevocable,[97] especially if resting only in parol;[98] but when a contention arises, much will depend upon the character of the parties, the length of time elapsed, and the circumstances of the particular case,[99] all, however, subordinate to the interests of the child.[1] Though the wishes of the child are not controlling, they should be consulted for the purpose of better preparing the court to wisely exercise its discretion.[2] Though a parol contract giving the custody of a child to another is not binding, it may estop a parent from afterwards claiming custody where a strong attachment is thus allowed to spring up between the child and its custodian.[3] Those who receive children under such circumstances are required, however, to prove a certain and definite agreement and estoppel by conduct or by evidence strong and convincing.[4] In Texas, the adoption of a child does not give the persons adopting it the right to its custody.[5] In North Carolina a surviving parent of an orphan child, who by its abandonment has forfeited all rights to its custody and services, 98. An oral agreement by which a father gives his minor child to another to raise is revocable at the father's election. In re Galleher, 2 Cal. App. 364, 84 Pa. 352. Cannot defeat parent's right to custody of child. Ex parte Reynolds, 73 S. C. 296, 53 S. E. 490. Is not binding. Cormack v. Marshall, 122 Ill. App. 208.

99. Robertson v. Bass [Fla.] 42 So. 243. The lower court having left with the foster parents two small children who when feeble and helpless were voluntarily relinquished to them by the mother, now a stranger to them, after a lapse of four years the status will not be disturbed by the appellate court because the mother has bettered her condition by a recent marriage, it not appearing that the interests of the children demand the change. Id. A father of good character earning $16 a week and having a good home is entitled to the custody of his child as against her grandparents with whom she has resided since the death of her mother, where they are poor and infirm. Titus v. McCloskey, 67 N. J. Eq. 709, 63 A 244. Where the father had shown indifference towards his child and permitted him to remain with its grandparents until he was ten years old contributing nothing to his support, held the best interests of the child required that he remain with his grandparents. Coulter v. Sypert [Ark.] 95 S. W. 457. Parents had practically abandoned a child to her grandparents for nearly twelve years and when she was fourteen sought to get possession of her. She expressed under oath her desire to remain with her grandparents who were not shown to be unfit and there was no special fitness of the parents to care for her. Held she should be allowed to remain with her grandparents. Workman v. Watts, 74 S. C. 546, 54 S. E. 775. Adoption proceedings examined and held to justify finding of trial court that the natural mother and her present husband were the proper persons to have the custody and control of a child. State v. Bryant, 99 Minn. 49, 108 N. W. 880.

1. Robertson v. Bass [Fla.] 42 So. 243. The best interests of the child is of primary importance. White v. Richeson [Tex. Civ. App.] 94 S. W. 202; State v. Poindexter [Wash.] 87 P. 1069; People v. Rubin, 98 N. Y. S. 787. In habeas corpus by a mother, evidence held to show that the welfare of the child would be best promoted by allowing an aunt to retain custody. People v. Rubin, 98 N. Y. S. 787. Where in habeas corpus a mother recovered the custody of her minor children from their adopted parents, the giving of a supersedas bond by such parents did not give them the right to the custody of the children pending appeal. State v. Poindexter [Wash.] 87 P. 1069. In proceedings by the father of a boy between two and three years old to secure his possession, he being in the custody of his maternal grandmother to whom custody was awarded by the will of the mother, the polestar of the inquiry is the interests of the child. Glidewell v. Morris [Miss.] 42 So. 537.

2. Ex parte Reynolds, 73 S. C. 296, 53 S. E. 490. On petition for removal of a daughter from the custody of her father on the ground of improper relations between the latter and his housekeeper, evidence held not to warrant relief especially in view of the desire of the daughter to stay with her father and the fact that she had married prior to the rendition of the order. People v. Bishop, 102 N. Y. S. 592.

3. Ex parte Reynolds, 73 S. C. 296, 53 S. E. 490.

4. Evidence insufficient to prove clear and definite parol agreement by father for unconditional surrender of his children or to prove estoppel by conduct. Ex parte Reynolds, 73 S. C. 296, 53 S. E. 490.

5. White v. Richeson [Tex. Civ. App.] 94 S. W. 202.

may be restored to such privileges when the child's welfare will not be materially prejudiced.[8]

There is no civil action by a child for corporal punishment inflicted upon it by one standing in loco parentis.[7]

Where the parents are unfit to care for a child, or have abandoned it,[8] the state may provide for its custody and care,[9] but such proceedings must be had in a court of competent jurisdiction after due notice to the parents.[10] Where a child is in the exclusive custody of a benevolent institution, the question of whether the parents should be allowed to visit it must necessarily be left to the sound discretion of the governing authorities of the institution.[11] Statutes often make provision for the return of the child to its parents after such a change of circumstances as will render them proper custodians.[12]

Where a child is in the custody of the father, the relative rights of the father and mother to his custody should be determined by the courts of the domicile of the father.[13] Habeas corpus is generally resorted to when it is sought to recover the

6. Revisal 1905, §§ 180, 181, are applicable in a habeas corpus proceeding by a father to recover the custody of his child alleged to have been abandoned by him and hence it was the duty of the court to find as to the controverted fact of abandonment and as to whether the welfare of the child would be materially prejudiced by its restoration to petitioner. Newsome v. Bunch, 142 N. C. 19, 54 S. E. 785.

7. Where a mother left her child with a person who was to support, educate, care for, and treat it as his own child, such person stood in loco parentis and hence could not be sued by the child for a whipping inflicted on it. Fortinberry v. Holmes [Miss.] 42 So. 799. It was immaterial that when the mother gave the child she stated that it was not to be whipped. Id.

8. That father living apart from his wife left his minor daughter with his mother who was caring for her while he went away to seek employment and remained away for five or six months did not constitute an abandonment. State v. Wheeler [Wash.] 86 P. 394.

9. If a child is abandoned or neglected, or if its home becomes unfit for it, the state may, and it is its duty to, take the child from its parents and provide for its proper care and custody. Right of parent primarily to bring up child is not exclusive or final. In re Vera Brown, 117 Ill. App. 332. The Federal constitution providing that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, and the state constitution art. 1, § 1, declaring that all men forming a social compact are entitled to equal rights, does not limit the power of the state to interfere with the parental control of minors. State v. Shorey [Or.] 86 P. 881. State could forbid employment of a child under sixteen years for more than ten hours a day. Id. See Infants, 8 C. L. 267. The father has no absolute vested right in his child's custody, but the state may step in when the child's interest requires it. Coulter v. Sypert [Ark.] 95 S. W. 457. Act. 1894, p. 80 (Civ. Code 1895, § 2372), providing for the placing of children in benevolent institutions of the character indicated thereby, is not unconstitutional as to title nor objectionable as special legislation. Kennedy v. Meara [Ga.] 56 S. E. 243. Does not authorize slavery because it permits the institution to bind out children to service. Id. Does not deprive parents of any rights without due process of law. Id. A judgment of commitment to an institution under this act is a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction and binding upon the parties until reversed and it was not error to reject impeaching evidence. Id.

10. Proceedings for placing a child with a charitable institution held void under act 1903, p. 60, c. 49, § 2, where on the mother's complaint charging the father with abandonment, but making no allegations whatever against herself, the court summarily ordered the child's commitment without any notice to the father. State v. Wheeler [Wash.] 86 P. 394. The mother's attempted surrender of the child to the institution as authorized by Laws 1903, p. 59, c. 49, § 1, being based upon the void adjudication that the father had abandoned it, was ineffective. Id. Since the custody of the institution was not legal, it could not give assent to adoption proceedings. Id.

11. Not error for court to refuse parent to visit child once a week. Kennedy v. Meara [Ga.] 56 S. E. 243.

12. When a child has been committed to a benevolent institution under the act of 1894 (Acts 1894, p. 80, Civ. Code 1895, § 2372), the parent may have its custody restored to him on habeas corpus by showing that the conditions have changed since the commitment and that the parent has become a fit person to have the custody of the child. The provision allowing the parent to apply to the institution for a return of the child is merely cumulative and does not oust the court's jurisdiction. Kennedy v. Meara [Ga.] 56 S. E. 243. Held error not to admit evidence tending to show a change of conditions and that the parent was a fit person to have the custody of the child. Id. Evidence that the grandmother was of good character and able to support and maintain the child held irrelevant. Id.

13. Where a child was in the lawful custody of his father who was domiciled in Louisiana, the relative rights of the father and mother to his custody should be determined by the Louisiana courts. Lanning v. Gregory [Tex.] 99 S. W. 542. Where a child was in the lawful custody of his father who custody of a child.[14] In such proceeding the burden of establishing that the interests of the child will be best conserved by awarding custody to petitioners is upon them.[15] A decree of divorce awarding the custody of a child to one of the parties is conclusive as between the parents,[16] but a divorce judgment alleged but not offered in evidence cannot be considered in determining the issue.[17] The court may receive evidence as to the laws of a sister state relative to the capacity of a married woman to contract concerning her child, though such laws may not have been strictly complied with by the party offering the evidence.[18] A decree granting to the mother for a number of years the custody of a child already in the custody of the father changes the domestic status of the child for the time being.[19] The discretion of a trial court in awarding the custody of a child will not be interfered with on appeal in the absence of abuse.[20]

§ 2. Support and necessaries.[21]—A parent is bound to maintain and care for his minor child,[22] and where public policy or the interest of the child demand that it be cared for in a hospital, the parent may be required to stand the expense.[23] A father's obligation to support his children is not impaired by a decree of divorce,[24] which, on account of his misconduct, deprives him of their care and custody;[25] and a judgment for alimony awarding the wife allowances not to exceed in the aggregate a certain sum for the custody and care of the children is not res adjudicata as to the husband's liability for the children's support.[26] To constitute abandonment of a child, it must be not only deserted but left in a destitute condition.[27] A was domiciled in Louisiana, the courts of Texas did not acquire jurisdiction of the child by reason of his temporary presence in that state so as to authorize them to adjudicate a change of the relation between the father and the child. Id.

14. Under Domestic Relations Law (Laws 1896, p. 222, c. 272, § 40), providing that a husband or wife living in a state of separation without being divorced, who have a minor child, may have the custody of the child determined on habeas corpus, such proceedings may be maintained by an Indian woman, a ward of the United States government living on an Indian reservation. People v. Rubin, 98 N. Y. S. 787.

15. Under the evidence considered in this case, held, child's best interests would be conserved by denying custody to petitioners. White v. Richeson [Tex. Civ. App.] 94 S. W. 202.

17. State v. Thompson, 117 La. 102, 41 So. 367.

18. Trial on habeas corpus being to the court. Robertson v. Bass [Fla.] 42 So. 243. Where a mother articled her children to a stranger in another state who maintained them properly, on a contest over their possession in this state, the court will not inquire whether the foreign statute governing apprenticeships has been strictly complied with, the maternal right only being involved. Id.

19. Where, upon the separation of the parents, a child was taken by the father on his agreement to return him to the mother at her request, and thereafter, on habeas corpus, a decree was entered granting the mother the custody of the child until he was twelve years old, after which time custody was given to the father, held the decree operated to take the child from the father and place him in the family and custody of the mother, and thereby changed his domestic status for the time being. Lanning v. Gregory [Tex.] 99 S. W. 542.

20. Willingham v. Mattox, 125 Ga. 106, 53 S. E. 607. No abuse of discretion in awarding three minor children to a wife as against the husband. Cooper v. Cooper [Ga.] 56 S. E. 116.

22. Guthrie County v. Conrad [Iowa] 110 N. W. 454.

23. Parent held liable for support of son in insane hospital under Code, § 2297, providing that public support of insane persons shall not release relatives. Guthrie County v. Conrad [Iowa] 110 N. W. 454.

24. A decree of divorce in another state, after a separation which continued for many years, does not bar recovery by the wife from him of money expended in the support of their children prior to the granting of the decree, nor can aggression on her part be inferred as a matter affecting the rights of children, where the decree assigns no cause for the divorce and makes no provision for alimony or for the children. Clark v. Clark, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 142.

25. Graham v. Graham [Colo.] 88 P. 852.

26. So as to bar suit by wife for continued allowances after such sum has been expended, since children's rights could not be precluded by the judgment, they not having been parties. Graham v. Graham [Colo.] 88 P. 852. The court in determining the amount to be allowed each child should take in consideration the amount of his earnings and allow only the amount required for his maintenance over his actual earnings. Id.

27. Under Pen. Code 1895, § 114, desertion is not sufficient if the wants of the child are provided for by others. Williams v. State, 126 Ga. 637, 55 S. E. 480. Since the evidence established desertion but not destitution, a new trial should have been granted. Id.

prosecution for nonsupport must be instituted in the county in which the offense is committed.[28] The pendency of bastardy proceedings against the father of an illegitimate child is not a bar to a criminal prosecution against him for nonsupport.[29]

To authorize a recovery against a parent for goods sold a minor child, it must be shown either that they were necessaries,[30] or that the child had authority to pledge the parent's credit;[31] and a parent is not liable even for necessaries furnished his child unless he has refused to furnish them himself.[32]

Except in special cases,[33] a parent cannot recover for the past support of his child,[34] or the child for the support of the parent[35] in the absence of express contract.[36] Such contract may be binding though the amount to be paid is not agreed to.[37] Though a father may be relieved from all legal obligation to support a child, subsequent assistance rendered the child by him is presumed to have been prompted by his moral obligation.[38] A mother who is already being supported by some of her children cannot maintain an action for support against another child.[39]

Under Pen. Code, § 287, punishing by imprisonment a parent or other person who deserts a child under fourteen years old at any place with intent to abandon it, the words "in any place" are important, and a father's leaving his children with their mother is not a crime thereunder. People v. Joyce, 112 App. Div. 717, 98 N. Y. S. 863.

28. Prosecution under § 7017-3, Rev. St. 1906, for nonsupport of parent must be instituted in the county in which defendant resides at the time he fails to furnish support. State v. Dangler, 74 Ohio St. 49, 77 N. E. 271. Verdict for defendant properly directed where prosecution was commenced in wrong county. Id.

29 Not a bar to, nor ground for the abatement of, a criminal prosecution against him by the state under § 3140-2, Rev. St. 1906, for nonsupport of the child. State v. Veres, 75 Ohio St. 138, 78 N. E. 1005.

30. Complaint against father for price of footwear sold his infant daughter, not alleging that they were necessaries or that daughter stood in need of them, held insufficient to authorize recovery on theory that they were necessaries. Cousins v. Boyer, 100 N. Y. S. 290.

31. Evidence held insufficient to show that daughter had authority to pledge credit of father for goods. Cousins v. Boyer, 100 N. Y. S. 290. See special article, Agency from Relation, 3 C. L. 101.

32. One who employs a child against the objection of his parent who has not refused to furnish the child with necessaries cannot, on being sued by the parent for the value of the services, deduct what he paid the child and which the child used for necessaries. Smith v. Gilbert [Ark.] 98 S. W. 115.

33. A special case warranting an exception to this rule is presented, where a mother who has furnished such support had little or no estate or an estate trifling in comparison with that of the minor, and the support was furnished to the minor for the benefit of the minor under conditions which were coercive upon the mother and compelled her to assume a burden which was not naturally and legally hers alone. Spink v. Spink, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 89.

34. It is the general rule of law that no allowance should be made to either father or mother out of the estate of a deceased minor child for past maintenance and support, except in special cases. Spink v. Spink, 7 Ohio C. C. (N S.) 89. A guardian, the mother of her ward, may not charge for the board of the latter whose services are worth as much as her support, there being no circumstances showing why it would be inequitable for the mother to furnish her child board without charge. Leake v. Goode, 29 Ky. L. R. 793, 96 S. W. 565.

35. Where a father furnished a house and dressmaking rooms for his daughter and the latter furnished him with board and nursing, the daughter could not recover on a quantum meruit for board furnished in the absence of any express agreement. Conway v. Cooney, 111 App. Div. 864, 98 N. Y. S. 171.

36. The presumption that services, boarding, and the like, are furnished gratuitously as between parent and child, may be overcome by evidence showing an express contract. Evidence sufficient to establish contract of father to pay son for boarding himself and a grandson. Shadle's Estate, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 151. Where a father and daughter lived together for several years, he furnishing the house and she furnishing board, etc., an express contract on his part to pay for the board must be proved by clear and convincing evidence. Conway v. Cooney, 111 App. Div. 864, 98 N. Y. S. 171. Evidence held insufficient to show an express contract by a father to pay his daughter for board. Id.

37. If amount to be paid is not agreed to, it will be implied to be the reasonable value. Shadle's Estate, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 151. Agreement between two sons that one of them will take their father into his family and the other will stand "his share" of the expense held a valid contract, though there were other children who might have been compelled to contribute to the father's support and though the amount to be paid was not fixed at any definite sum. Compton's Estate, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 605.

38. Where a divorce decree gave the child to the mother and the father afterwards, as executor, received a legacy for the child and then made payments to relieve the child's necessities, he could not have credit therefor on the legacy in a court of equity. Exchange Banking & Trust Co. v. Finley, 73 S. C. 423, 53 S. E. 649.

39. There being no threat of withdrawal of support, she could not maintain action under Civ. Code, § 206, making it the duty of

§ 3. Services, earnings, and injuries to child.[40]—Services rendered by parent to child or vice versa are presumed to be gratuitous [41] and contracts to pay for them must be clearly established.[42]

A parent may recover for loss of services resulting from the wrongful injury of his child by others,[43] in either enticing the child away,[44] or causing his death.[45] Unless a mother has the same right to the custody and services of a child as the father has,[46] the right of action is in the father, if he is then alive,[47] and accrues immediately upon the happening of the injury,[48] and if he dies before bringing action, the cause does not survive to the mother.[49] A parent who consents to the employment of a minor child to do certain work cannot recover against the employer for injuries to the child proximately resulting from its minority and lack of experience,[50] but consent of a parent to the employment of a son in a hazardous work is not a defense where injury results from defendant's negligence.[51] Contributory negligence on the part of the parent [52] or child [53] is fatal to recovery, the question of due care being ordinarily for the jury.[54] One who has not adopted a child and is not his guardian cannot recover for loss of his services, though he has kept him ever since he was very small.[55]

In re Milligan's Estate, 112 App. Div. 373, 98 N. Y. S. 480. In Louisiana children are not entitled to compensation for services rendered their mother who is also their natural tutrix. Gaspard v. Coco, 116 La. 1096, 41 So. 326. The services of illegitimate children living with and working for their father under the belief that they are legitimate are presumed gratuitous. Williams v. Halford, 73 S. C. 119, 53 S. E. 88.

42. Evidence insufficient to establish claim of son for having worked on father's farm. In re Milligan's Estate, 112 App. Div. 373. 98 N. Y. S. 480. Held sufficient to establish a claim of a daughter. Id.

43. A father may recover for loss of services of an adult daughter, who, though married, is a member of his family and lives apart from her husband. Where loss of service was result of illegal carnal assault. Palmer v. Baum, 123 Ill. App. 584.

44. In an action against several for acting in consert in enticing plaintiff's son from home, instructions considered and held not erroneous on theory that jury could not find against one or more of defendants without finding against all. Soper v. Crutcher, 29 Ky. L. R. 1080, 96 S. W. 907. The fact that the proof showed that the son stayed at the home of a person other than the one named in the petition held not ground for new trial for surprise. Id. Evidence considered and held to sustain verdict for defendants. Id.

45. In an action by a father for the death of his minor son who had left home against his parents' wishes, on the question of whether he intended to contribute his services or earnings to his parents, his letters and conversations expressing such intention were competent, and not objectionable as self-serving declarations. Dean v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 824. In action to recover a statutory forfeiture for the wrongful death of a son, it was no defense that decedent fraudulently represented himself to be of age in order to obtain employment. Matlock v. Williamsville, etc., R. Co., 198 Mo. 495, 95 S. W. 849.

46. A mother who has the same right to the custody and services of a child as the father has may sue in her own name for loss of services of the child through the negligence of another. Married woman deserted by husband and supporting child could sue under Act June 26, 1895 (P. L. 316), giving a mother who contributes to the support and education of her minor child the same right to its custody and services as is possessed by the father. O'Brien v. 53. Instruction erroneous as ignoring a son's contributory negligence in action against an employer. Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Blasengame [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 203, 93 S. W. 187.

54. Held question for the jury under the circumstances. Mattson v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co., 98 Minn. 296, 108 N. W. 517.

55. Kelly v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Ky.] 100 S. W. 239.

Future earnings of minor children are not assets of the father's estate reachable by creditors so as to prevent their relinquishment by the father, to the children, though the father is insolvent.[56]

Where an action is only for injury to the child, it must be brought in the name of the child.[57] A father individually cannot recover damages for a libel against the good name of his minor daughter,[58] nor can a parent recover damages for mental shock and distress caused by injury to minor children.[59]

Emancipation.[60]—Until a child is emancipated his earnings belong to his father,[61] and the creditors of the latter have a right to subject them and the property in which they are invested to the satisfaction of their claims.[62] Emancipation, either partial or complete,[63] may be effected either by the conduct of the parent,[64] such as allowing a son to hire out and retain his own wages,[65] or compelling him to leave home,[66] or by agreement.[67] The incarceration of a minor child in a state hospital for the insane without his father's consent is not an emancipation so as to relieve the father from liability for its care, he being otherwise liable.[68] Upon the complete emancipation of a child, he, and not his parents, is entitled to sue for injuries to himself;[69] but emancipation is no defense in an action by a father to recover a statutory forfeiture for the wrongful death of his son.[70] A complaint for labor done au-

Where in an action by an infant, by his father as next friend, for injuries, there was no proof that plaintiff had been emancipated, nor that the father had waived his rights to plaintiff's services until after verdict, it was error to permit a recovery for loss of plaintiff's services during minority. Farrar v. Wheeler [C. C. A.] 145 F. 482.

62. Harper v. Utsey [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 17, 97 S. W. 508. Where a son claimed a horse as against his father's creditors and the horse had been purchased with work done by the son for the seller, evidence held to require the giving of an instruction that the horse would be subject to execution as the property of the father unless prior to the purchase the son had been emancipated. 63. Where a minor son left his parents without their consent and enlisted in the army, if there was any manumission, it was effective only during the time of service. When he was discharged from the army, he became in law subservient to the authority of his parents who were entitled to his earnings. Dean v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 824.

64. That a father prosecuted an action for injuries for his son as next friend, and testified that he told defendant that he had no objection to his son's working for defendant, was insufficient to show emancipation or waiver of father's right to son's services during minority. Farrar v. Wheeler [C. C. A.] 145 F. 482. Where a lessee of hopyards surrendered his lease and thereafter his wife and minor son operated the yards under a new lease, and there was no question as to the son's emancipation, the minority of the son did not render the labor he performed, or the crops he helped to produce, liable to the claims of the creditors of the first lessee. Livesley v. Heise [Or.] 85 P. 509.

65. If a father permits his son to make his own contracts of hiring and to receive his own wages with the understanding that the son is to retain them as his own, the wages earned under such contract become the property of the son and not of the father. Merrill v. Hussey, 101 Me. 439, 64 A. 819.

66. Where a parent has compelled his child to leave home and seek employment elsewhere, it operates as an act of manumission and cannot be revoked by the parent so as to abrogate a contract for service fairly entered into between the child and his employer. Smith v. Gilbert [Ark.] 98 S. W. 115.

67. A separation agreement by which a father promises to return a child to the mother at her request does not emancipate the child from the father's control, nor change his domicile from that of the father. Lanning v. Gregory [Tex.] 99 S. W. 542. The offer of a parent to give his child a share of all his earnings while working for the parent is not an emancipation. Offer that he could have a share of the crop he might raise on his father's farm. Smith v. Gilbert [Ark.] 98 S. W. 115.

70. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, providing that wrongdoer "shall forfeit" $5,000. Matlock v. Williamsville, etc., R. Co., 198 Mo. 495, 95 S. W. 849.

thorizes a recovery for the labor of plaintiff's son.[71] In an action for loss of services due to injuries to a minor son, the defense of emancipation must be pleaded and proved by defendant.[72]

§ 4. Property rights and dealings between parent and child.[73]—Alleged agreements between parent and child for the transfer of property must be clearly established and shown to be supported by a sufficient consideration.[74] Mutual love and affection is sufficient to sustain a conveyance from a father to his child.[75] Where a father makes an advancement by deed to his children in consideration of love and affection,[76] the cestue que trustent are not required to show that the father knew that he reserved no rights or power of revocation, in the absence of suspicious circumstances.[77] In the absence of fraud or undue influence, a voluntary payment by a parent to his children will be presumed to be a gift,[78] and a voluntary conveyance for a recited consideration of love and affection is presumed to be an advancement and title passes to the child.[79] Parents may lawfully receive security from their son who is indebted to them, though they know that the result will be to delay or defeat his other creditors, no fraud being shown.[80] The power conferred upon the father by the Louisiana statute to administer, during marriage, the estate of his minor children is wholly distinct from tutorship and not controlled by provisions relating thereto.[81]

§ 5. Liability for child's torts.[82]—One is not liable for the tort of an infant upon the sole ground that he is his father.[83] To render a parent liable for such tort, it must appear that he might reasonably have anticipated injury as a consequence of permitting the infant to act as he did.[84] To establish the liability of a parent for the acts of his children while working for him, it must appear that the act complained of was within the scope of the employment.[85]

87. The Act of 1894 (P. L. 1894, p. 146), conferring power upon cities located on or vey to them tide lands so used,[89] are constitutional. Property may be condemned for park purposes upon due compensation being made as provided by statute.[92] Where a lot is sold with reference to a map and upon representation that a park shown thereon would be kept open, such representation is binding, though the map had never been so adopted by the grantor as to dedicate the park to the public.[90] A borough has no power in Pennsylvania to lease a public amusement park for the purpose of revenue by charging admission thereto.[91] Where a Spanish grant of land titles to colonists provided that a block should be set aside "for public buildings for the municipality," such reservation was in favor of the subdivision corresponding to the county and not the city in which it might be located.[92]

The public title.[93]—Whether a fee or an easement is acquired in land condemned for park purposes is determined by the statute under which it is taken.[94]

Rights of individuals in or to parks.[95]—An artificial drainage course existing at the time land is condemned cannot be closed to the injury of the remaining property unless it is inconsistent with park purposes,[96] and, if it becomes obstructed, the owner of adjoining lands may enter thereon and remove the obstruction.[97]

Adverse possession, abandonment, and diversion; actions.[98]—Title to a block reserved for public buildings of a city may be lost by estoppel [99] or adverse possession.[1] The vacation of parks and highways is a legislative power [2] which cannot be contracted away,[3] and a determination by the proper legislative body that a parkway should be vacated is conclusive upon the courts in the absence of fraud, except near the ocean to lay out parks on the beach, is not unconstitutional as special in that it does not include cities not on or near the ocean. Seaside Realty & Imp Co. v. Atlantic City [N. J. Law] 64 A. 1081.

88. Act 1903 (P. L. 1903, p. 387), providing that the state's land, within the limits of a park laid out under Act 1904, p. 146, may be granted by the riparian commissioners to the city, is not unconstitutional as to title (Seaside Realty & Imp. Co. v. Atlantic City [N. J. Law] 64 A. 1081), as special legislation regulating the internal affairs of cities (Id.), nor as depriving the free schools of lands appropriated to their use (Id.).

89. Under St. 1894, p. 286, c. 288, § 5, a person whose land is damaged by the taking of other land by the metropolitan park commissioners under St. 1894, p. 283, c. 288, and St. 1895, p. 504, c. 450, may recover such damages though no part of his land is taken. Whitney v. Com., 190 Mass. 531, 77 N. E. 516. Where at the time land of others was taken for park purposes, the only land of petitioners which might suffer special damages was a mill pond adjacent to the park, the court properly instructed in proceedings to assess damages, that in case the pond should be filled and divided into building lots in separate ownership between a certain boulevard and other parts of the pond, the owners would have a right of access to the boulevard. Whitney v. Com., 190 Mass. 531, 77 N. E. 516.

99. Where a city, without objection, permitted the county to take possession and erect costly buildings on a square within its limits, under a claim of ownership, it is estopped to assert title as against the county. City of Victoria v. Victoria County [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 873, 94 S. W. 368.

1. In an action by a city against a county to recover certain blocks, evidence held to sustain a finding that the county had so used the square for public building purposes as to acquire title by adverse possession. City of Victoria v. Victoria County [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 873, 94 S. W. 368.

2. To be exercised by the legislature or by a municipal board to which it is delegated. State v. Minneapolis Park Com'rs [Minn.] 110 N. W. 1121.

3. Neither the legislature nor a municipality has any power to enter into a contract curtailing its right to vacate a park if the public interest requires. State v. Minneapolis Park Com'rs [Minn.] 110 N. W. 1121.

when reviewed as provided by statute.[4] Where unrestricted power is conferred upon a park board to vacate parks, it is applicable to existing parks as well as to those thereafter created.[5] The New Jersey statute providing for the vacation of parks with the consent of the fee owners is constitutional,[6] and, in proceedings thereunder, the consent need not be expressed in any particular form,[7] and the council may impose such lawful[8] terms as they see fit. Lands dedicated to park purposes cannot be diverted to any use inconsistent therewith.[9]

Park bonds.[10]

Government, control, and officers of parks.[11]—Park officials have no powers except such as are expressly conferred by statute or by the constitution, or fairly inferred therefrom, or is essential to the performance of the duties of the office;[12] and by statute in New York, a tax payer may restrain the park commissioners from doing any illegal act in respect to the park.[13] The power conferred upon city councils in New Jersey to improve[14] public parks extends to newly-acquired parks as well as to existing ones.[15] Park officials may prescribe reasonable rules and regulations for the use of parks.[16] A municipal corporation has authority to abate a nuisance erected by the county on lands occupied by county buildings within the city limits.[17] Under the Kansas City charter, the park commissioners are authorized to recommend the improvement of boulevards within park districts,[18] and if

6. Act March 30, 1904 (P. L. 1904, p. 366), providing for the vacation of lands dedicated to public use, is not unconstitutional as being especial in that it applies only to such fee owners as consent to the vacation. Ocean City Land Co. v. Ocean City [N. J. Law] 63 A. 1112.

7. Where the fee owner presented the proposition to the council in the first instance, agreed to the modification of the proposed terms of vacation, and accepted the vacating ordinance, sufficient consent is given. Ocean City Land Co. v. Ocean City [N. J. Law] 63 A. 1112.

8. Terms infringing upon private rights are unauthorized, as where it provides for uses of the vacated lands different than that indicated when surrounding lot owners purchased their lots. Ocean City Land Co. v. Ocean City [N. J. Law] 63 A. 1112.

9. The erection of a public library on grounds dedicated by the city as a public park is not inconsistent with its enjoyment as a park (Spires v. Los Angeles [Cal.] 87 P. 1026), but the building must be used strictly for library purposes, and while rooms may be provided for the library board because of their connection with the library, they cannot be provided for the board of education (Id.).

Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, p. 213, c. 378, § 612, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 257, c. 466), imposing on the park commissioners the duty to maintain the beauty and utility of all parks and to execute measures necessary. And the fact that the fence is only temporary, or that the city receives a pecuniary consideration, is immaterial. Id.

13. Restrained from leasing a park fence for advertising purposes, and it is not necessary to show a waste of public moneys or injury to the property. Tompkins v. Pallas, 47 Misc. 309, 95 N. Y. S. 875.

14. Where a purposed building is capable of public uses, the courts will not assume that it is to be used for other purposes. Erection of a "casino" held a public improvement. Ross v. Long Branch [N. J. Law] 63 A. 609.

15. The power conferred upon city councils by the act of 1903 (P. L. 1903, p. 292), as amended by Act of 1904 (P. L. 1904, p. 346), to improve public parks, includes the power to erect in a newly-acquired park a building for public purposes. Ross v. Long Branch [N. J. Law] 63 A. 609.

16. Reasonableness is determined by conditions as they exist at the time of attack. Whitney v. Com., 190 Mass. 531, 77 N. E. 516. Whether rules established by a park commission are reasonable as applied to known facts is a question of law for the court, but where the facts are uncertain or in dispute, such question must be submitted to the jury under proper instructions. the city council adopt the recommendation, they need not obtain the approval of the board of public works.[19]

Injuries in parks.[20]—A municipality must keep its parkways in a reasonable safe condition for travel,[21] but it is not liable for injuries resulting from a display of fireworks in a park with its permission unless the same constituted a nuisance,[22] or the city either authorized it to be done in a dangerous manner [23] or acquiesced therein after notice. the benefit of a stranger to the consideration will not support an action by him still prevails in some states.[34] One having a special interest in property may maintain an action for the destruction thereof.[35]

Where a suit is prosecuted for the benefit of another, the usee's interest should be made to appear,[36] though, if the action is based upon a legal right of plaintiff, the defendant cannot contest the right of the usee therein.[37] With the consent of the holder of the legal title,[38] or without it upon indemnifying him against costs,[39] a beneficiary may institute suit in his name and prosecute the same free from interference.[40] The nominal plaintiff, however, has a right to be heard upon the fact of beneficial ownership.[41] In some states the beneficial owner may sue in his own right for injury to property held in trust.[42] Unless prohibited by statute, a suit may be prosecuted in the name of an assignor for the benefit of the assignee, especially if the assignment is made pendente lite;[43] but in Maine the name and residence of the latter, if known, must be indorsed on the process upon request of defendant.[44]

In the Code states, actions are usually[45] required to be prosecuted by the real party in interest,[46] though a trustee of an express trust is frequently authorized to sue in respect thereto,[47] if no dispute among the beneficiaries is involved.[48]

34. A creditor cannot sue upon a covenant by a third party made with the debtor notwithstanding Code 1904, § 2840, providing that certain actions cannot be maintained unless the contract is in writing and signed by the party to be charged thereby (McIlvane v. Big Stony Lumber Co., 105 Va. 613, 54 S. Restrictions upon the capacity of foreign corporations to sue are frequently imposed.[51] One suing under the authority of a judgment when jurisdictionally challenged must prove the same and all jurisdictional facts leading up to it.[52]

Joinder of parties plaintiff.[53]—Joint obligees [54] and persons seeking the same relief from a common injury upon similar grounds may join as co-plaintiffs,[55] though one having no right of action cannot join with one having such right.[56] A heir" of decedent states a mere conclusion, and hence is demurrable under Civ. Code Proc. § 18. Dailey v. O'Brien, 29 Ky. L. R. 811, 96 S. W. 521. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3, providing that actions "shall" be prosecuted by the real party in interest except as otherwise provided, a bank may sue on a note made payable to its president by mistake, notwithstanding § 5, providing that one in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another "may" sue without joining the one beneficially interested. Best v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank [Colo.] 85 P. 1124. Where goods sold are wrongfully levied upon before delivery, the vendor may sue therefor as the real party in interest. Hall v. Frith, 101 N. Y. S. 31. Citizens of a county may sue to enjoin the commissioner appointed by the governor to have surveys made for a new county from acting. Lamar v. Croft, 73 S. C. 407, 53 S. E. 540. Under Code, § 3459, providing that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as to contracts made for the benefit of another, an action cannot be maintained for the members of an unincorporated association not consenting to a breach of a contract with the association to enforce the same. Westbrook v. Griffin [Iowa] 109 N. W. 608. An agreement to give one-half of the amount recovered to the attorney as compensation does not give him such an interest as makes him a necessary party. El Paso Elec. R. Co. v. Telles [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 444; Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. v. Tucker [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 598, 98 S. W. 909. Where an action must be brought in the name of the real party in interest, defendant may introduce evidence to show that certain of the plaintiffs have assigned all their interest. Wilson v. Kent [Colo.] 88 P. 461.

47. Under Civ. Code Proc. § 21, one holding land as an agent may sue in respect thereto. Goff v. Boland, 29 Ky. L. R. 172, 92 S. W. 575. Where a foreign executor, pursuant to a written agreement with his coexecutor and the beneficiaries of the estate, takes title in his own name for the benefit of the state, he is a trustee of an express trust within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4825, and hence has capacity to sue. Doe v. Tenino Coal & Iron Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 938. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 541, where a trustee of an express trust who contracts in respect to the land sues thereon, it is no objection that he is not the real owner. Johnston v. O'Shea, 118 Mo. App. 287, 94 S. W. 783. Where a contract is made directly with a syndicate, the fact that only one member was designated by name, the others being referred to by the pronoun, does not make him a trustee of an express trust within Revisal 1905, § 404. Winders v. Hill, 141 N. C. 694, 54 S. E. 440.

48. Code Civ. Proc. § 369, does not apply where the beneficiaries are disputing among themselves as to their rights, and they are necessary parties. Mitau v. Roddan [Cal.] 84 P. 145.

49. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 24, authorizing any company or association of persons formed for the purpose of carrying on any trade or business, etc., to sue in its usual name, a petition must allege that plaintiff is a company or association formed for the purpose of carrying on a trade, etc. Meyer v. Omaha Furniture & Carpet Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 767.

50. An action by members of an unincorporated association brought for a large number of unnamed persons alleged to constitute the association, upon a contract made with the association is, in effect, an action for the association. Westbrook v. Griffin [Iowa] 109 N. W. 608.

51. Where a complaint shows that plaintiff is a foreign corporation but does not show that it is a stock company or is doing business in the state and the evidence does not show it to be a stock company, it cannot be nonsuited for failure to comply with Laws 1901, p. 1364, c. 558, § 15, providing that foreign stock companies doing business in the state shall not maintain any action until it has procured a certificate from the Secretary of State authorizing it to do business. Wright v. Faulkner, 101 N. Y. S. 807. See Foreign Corporations, 7 C. L. 1728.

52. Suit by a receiver. Swing v. St. Louis Refrigerator & Wooden Gutter Co. [Ark.] 93 S. W. 978.

53. See 6 C. L. 890.

54. Where several persons associated together for the purchase of a stallion which was warranted by the vendors, the warranty is a joint obligation to all the purchasers and they may jointly sue thereon, though as among themselves each took a specific interest. Daugherty v. Robert Burgess & Son, 118 Mo. App. 557, 94 S. W. 594.

55. Parties owning different lots in severalty joined as complainants to enjoin a municipality from taking up certain existing sidewalks. Nichols v. Sadorus, 120 Ill. App. 70.

56. Alexander v. Gloversville, 110 App. Div. 791, 97 N. Y. S. 198. One who has assigned her entire cause of action cannot join with her assignee. Id. Where the wife and the father of one killed join as plaintiffs in an action for death by wrongful act, and interpose an alternative prayer that if it be found that decedent's injuries were not the proximate cause of his death, judgment should be awarded to the wife for the injuries sustained, there was a misjoinder of parties as to the alternative prayer. Gal-statute providing that all persons having an interest in the subject-matter [57] "may" be joined does not require that all be made parties.[58] While a beneficiary is not a necessary party to an action by the holder of the legal title, he is a proper party thereto.[59] A plaintiff cannot appear in a double representative capacity in a suit affecting one only.[60] Where the parties seeking to enforce a common right are numerous and it is impracticable to bring all before the court, one or more interested parties [61] are authorized in many states to prosecute for the many.[62]

In Alabama the striking out of some of the parties jointly interested in the subject-matter does not entitle defendant to a verdict against the others.[63]

§ 3. Who may or must be sued.[64]—Generally speaking, all persons having an interest in the subject-matter are necessary parties,[65] thus, if title to specific property is involved, the real owner must be joined.[66] Likewise, where a charge is to be made against his estate,[67] but if his title or right can in no way be affected,[68]

veston, etc., R. Co. v. Heard [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 617, 91 S. W. 371.

57. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 446, providing that all persons having an interest in the subject-matter and in obtaining the judgment demanded, may be joined as plaintiffs, one joined must not only have an interest but must have a right to enforce an obligation or to recover property (Conley v. Walton, 49 Misc. 1, 96 N. Y. S. 400), hence heirs may not join with the administratrix of a legatee of a testator for the embezzlement of funds (Id.), nor does the fact that the funds after embezzlement have been invested in real estate alter the case (Id.).

58. Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 138. Lamar v. Croft, 73 S. C. 407, 53 S. E. 540.

59. A trustee of lands may join the beneficiary as party plaintiff to a suit to set aside a contract for the sale of such lands, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 446, 449. Cassidy v. Sauer, 114 App. Div. 673, 99 N. Y. S. 1026. Beneficiaries filed a bill for an accounting by their trustees and a receiver was appointed. Held, in a suit by the receiver, who held legal title under order of the court, against a holder of tax deeds to set such deeds aside, the beneficiaries and trustees were proper parties complainant. Glos v. Ambler, 218 Ill. 269, 75 N. E. 764. The testimony of one suing on a contract made in his name that his wife was interested therein not being contradicted, she is a proper though not a necessary party. Beekman Lumber Co. v. Kittrell [Ark.] 96 S. W. 988.

60. A trustee in bankruptcy for two bankrupts individually and as co-partners, appointed in the same proceeding has but one office and hence in prosecuting an action as "trustee in bankruptcy of Michael Sampter and Arnold Sampter, individually and as co-partners" to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by one of the individuals there is no misjoinder of parties plaintiff. Wright v. Simon, 102 N. Y. S. 1108.

61. Under Civ. Code Proc. § 25, the one suing must have an interest. Overton v. Overton, 29 Ky. L. R. 736, 96 S. W. 469.

62. A few members of an association maintaining a bill to compel a bank to pay over money belonging to all. Dornan v. Buckley, 119 Ill. App. 523. Hill's Ann. Code, § 12, requiring the court to make an order is directory and not jurisdictional, and the denial of a motion to strike the complaint on the ground that no order was made permitting a few to prosecute is equivalent to granting of the permit. Adams v. Clark [Colo.] 85 P. 642.

New York: Code Civ. Proc. § 448, providing for the bringing of an action by one for the benefit of all, where the question is of common or general interest, is not applicable to actions in the municipal court, § 3347, subds. 3, 4. Reed v. Wiley, Harker & Camp Co., 101 N. Y. S. 39.

63. Code 1896, §333. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Oden [Ala.] 41 So. 129.

64. See 6 C. L. 890.

65. In an action by a pledgor to recover upon a pledged note, the pledgee is a necessary party (Graham v. Light [Cal. App.] 88 P. 373), unless he has reassigned it (Id.).

66. Specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate. Action against his agent does not bind him. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Mann [Ark.] 94 S. W. 46. Where a decree of mortgage foreclosure is vacated and a subsequent purchaser is given the right to appear and defend his grantees are necessary parties. Gillett v. Romig [Okl.] 87 P. 325. In an action to quiet title, where the bill alleges that the deed under which defendant claims is void because made when plaintiff was in the adverse possession of the land, the defendant's grantor is a necessary party, for, if the defendant's deed is void, he has title. Davis v. Denham [Ala.] 40 So. 277. Where a corporation created by consolidation of others agreed to and did issue stock to the president of a constituent corporation for distribution among its stockholders in payment of its assets, the constituent corporation is a necessary party to an action by a stockholder against the president for an accounting (Knickerbocker v. Conger, 110 App. Div. 125, 97 N. Y. S. 127), as are the other stockholders (Id.). A decree foreclosing a mortgage is not void for failing to make a subsequent purchaser of the land a party thereto. Livingston v. New England Mortg. Sec. Co., 77 Ark. 379, 91 S. W. 752. Where a trustee brings a suit to set aside a contract for the sale of the trust property it is necessary that he personally be so connected with the suit as to be concluded by the judgment. Cassidy v. Sauer, 114 App. Div. 673, 99 N. Y. S. 1026.

67. In a proceeding by a curator and tutor ad hoc of a minor to have his fees in defending a suit allowed as costs, the minor is a necessary party since the costs are to or he is legally fully represented by other paries,[69] or if the proposed party no longer has any relation to the subject-matter,[70] he is not necessary. Parties claiming or having an interest in the subject-matter,[71] unless too remote,[72] are usually proper parties if not necessary ones. Parties necessary only to the granting of superfluously demanded relief need not be joined.[73] Only natural or artificial entities recognized in law can be sued,[74] and where one is made a party in a particular capacity, his rights in another cannot be litigated.[75]

Joinder of parties defendant.[76]—Joinder of parties as affecting the jurisdiction of Federal courts is elsewhere trated.[77] Unless otherwise provided by staute,[78]

be paid from his estate. Driscoll v. Pierce, 117 La. 264, 41 So. 568. Where, in an action against an administrator of the maker of certain notes, plaintiff alleges that debt was a community debt and seeks to reach community property, the widow was properly joined. Dashiell v. Moody [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 843.

68. Where, in an action to recover shares of stocks deposited by plaintiff with defendant to secure a debt owned by plaintiff to a third party, there is no dispute as to the payment of the debt but defendant asserts an interest in the shares, the creditor is not a necessary party. Leigh v. Laughlin, 222 Il. 265, 78 N. E. 563. An application by the attorney general for an order directing the election commissioners to exclude the returns from certain precincts in making up the final abstract on the ground of fraud does not involve the rights of the candidates for offices and they are not proper or necessary parties. People v. Tool [Colo.] 86 P. 229. An agent to whom a deed absolute in form was executed as security for a debt to the principal, is not a necessary party to an action to have the deed declared a mortgage and foreclosed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 367, providing that actions must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. Churchill v. Woodworth, 148 Cal. 669, 84 P. 155. Where one of three attorneys collected the entire fee, in an action by one for his portion thereof the third is not a necessary party, under Rev. St. 1899, § 543, requiring all who are necessary parties to a complete determination to be joined. State v. Bradley, 193 Mo. 33, 91 S. W. 483.

69. In a suit by a receiver in proceedings supplementary to execution to recover from a city an award made for the taking of the debtor's property, the debtor is not a necessary party. Fawcett v. New York, 112 App. Div. 155, 98 N. Y. S. 286. In a suit to have a devise to a trustee to sell for the benefit of a church, declared void, the church is not a necessary party, equity rule 49 authorizing suit against the trustee. Miller v. Ahrens, 150 F. 644.

70. Where a testamentary trustee has fully discharged his trust by selling the land he is not a necessary party to a suit to construe the will by declaring a certain devise void and complainant the owner of the devised land. Miller v. Ahrens, 150 F. 644.

71. A person entitled by contract with a member of a partnership to divide the profits is a proper party to a suit for the wrongful sequestration of partnership property. St. Geme v. Boimare, 117 La. 232, 41 So. 557. In an action by creditors to enforce unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of a dissolved Missouri corporation, on the refusal of the directors to sue, the directors, stockholders, and administrator of a deceased stockholder are properly joined as defendants. Lewisohn v. Stoddard, 78 Conn. 575, 63 A. 621. Under the Code, a plaintiff in partition proceedings may make defendants all persons claiming any interest in the lands sought to be partitioned. Lawrence v. Norton, 102 N. Y. S. 481. Where the subject-matter of a suit is the value of timber taken, it is proper to make any one claiming an interest therein a party defendant. Alford Bros. & Whiteside v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 778, 91 S. W. 636. In a proceeding to compel county commissioners to establish a ditch fund and make a special assessment to pay warrants issued in payment of work done in the construction of a ditch, the county is not a necessary but is a proper party, because of its indirect interest in the property and its possible direct interest in the costs. Espy Estate Co. v. Pacific County Com'rs, 40 Wash. 67, 82 P. 129.

72. Where a will provided for the sale of certain real estate for the payment of specified legacies, the trustees and legatees are not proper parties to an action by a purchaser of the executrix to determine the validity of the sale and for relief according to the determination of the question. Clark v. Carter [Mo.] 98 S. W. 594.

73. Where relief is asked against persons not parties to the action and whose presence is not necessary to a determination, the prayer may be deemed surplusage and the failure to join is not ground for demurrer. O'Connor v. Virginia Passenger & Power Co., 184 N. Y. 46, 76 N. E. 1082. A judgment defendant in condemnation was fraudulently induced to quit claim the lot to a third person through another and to execute an order directing the comptroller to pay the judgment to him. Held that in a suit to recover the judgment sum it was not necessary to cancel the deed or order and, hence, praying for such cancellation did not make the intermediary or comptroller necessary parties. Heath v. Schroer, 119 Mo. App. 93, 96 S. W. 313.

74. An unincorporated society cannot be made a party. Pickett v. Walsh [Mass.] 78 N. E. 753.

75. Where one is made a party to a partition suit as a co-owner, her rights as a judgment creditor of another co-owner cannot be passed upon. McCormick v. McCormick [Md.] 65 A. 54.

76. See 6 C. L. 892.

77. See Removal of Causes, 6 C. L. 1292.

78. Rev. Laws, c. 173, § 3, providing for joinder of persons severally liable on the contract sued on applies only to actions parties cannot be made codefendants unless they are jointly liable,[79] hence, parties liable on different causes of actions can not be joined, though the liability grows out of the same transaction.[80] In Texas, however, a vendee has been permitted to join two corporations of a similar name and controlled by the same persons where he was ignorant as to which received the goods.[81] Joint tort feasors may be sued jointly,[82] or severally,[83] and hence plaintiff may amend by striking one not served without affecting his right to proceed against the others.[84] Persons whose independent acts jointly produce a nuisance may be joined in abatement proceedings.[85] In Minnesota joint obligors may be severally sued [86] and in Massachusetts persons severally liable on a contract may be sued jointly.[87] By statute in many states, an action against numerous parties having a common interest where it is impracticable to bring all before the court may be prosecuted against one interested [88] who may defend for all.[89] A voluntary association with extensive membership may be proceeded against through its officers.[90] Where several causes of actions are joined, persons interested therein are properly made co-defendants.[91] One proceeding against defendants "as individuals or as partners" need not elect in a tort action between the capacities.[92] on written contracts. Foote v. Cotting [Mass.] 80 N. E. 600.

79. Where national associations of manufacturers of proprietary medicines, wholesale druggists, and retail druggists entered into a tripartite agreement to maintain prices in violation of the anti-trust law, and thereafter in furtherance of the same object the retail druggists adopted more drastic measures which were not adopted by the other associations but accepted by some of their members, held that a party to the first who had not become a party to the second could not be joined in an action for damages under the statute. Jayne v. Loder [C. C. A.] 149 F. 21.

80. Where two parties, acting independently, appropriate separate portions of plaintiff's pasture, they cannot be sued jointly. Millard v. Miller [Colo.] 88 P. 845. Mills' Ann. Code, § 13, providing that parties jointly or severally liable upon the same obligation may be included in the same action, is not applicable. Id. Parties liable on different causes of action cannot be joined as defendants though their liability grows out of the same transaction. An embezzling employe liable only in tort or on implied contract cannot be joined as defendant in a suit against an indemnifying insurance company under Code Iowa 1897, §§ 3462, 3545. Iowa Lilloo-Gold Min. Co. v. Bliss, 144 F. 446.

81. Alleging that one had ordered the goods and in the alternative that the other had. Braun & Ferguson Co. v. Paulson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 564, 95 S. W. 617.

82. Common carrier and its negligent agent made a joint defendant in an action for injuries. Knuth v. Butte Elec. R. Co., 148 F. 73.

83. Need not join all whose concurrent negligence caused the injury. Mangan v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 50 Misc. 388, 100 N. Y. S. 539. In an action against a municipality for injuries from defective streets, it is not error to refuse to join as party defendant, the person who caused the defect and is liable to the city on contract. McGowan v. Watertown [Wis.] 110 N. W. 402.

84. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Randolph, 126 Ga. 238, 55 S. E. 47. Though an unsuccessful motion to dismiss the action has been interposed.

85. Independently depositing refuse in a stream, polluting the water. Warren v. Parkhurst, 186 N. Y. 45, 78 N. E. 579.

86. Laws 1897, p. 563, c. 303. Hoatson v. McDonald, 97 Minn. 201, 106 N. W. 311.

87. Under Rev. Laws. c. 173, § 3, providing that all persons severally liable on contracts in writing may be joined in one action, the signers of a guaranty are properly joined in an action thereon, though their liability was several and equal and not joint. Tulane University v. O'Connor [Mass.] 78 N. E. 494.

88. A motion that certain parties defend for the heirs of a certain decedent will be denied where it is not shown that such parties are heirs of the decedent. Morris v. Martin, 29 Ky. L. R. 913, 96 S. W. 555.

89. Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 140, authorizes the interests of remote legatees when the class consists of many persons some of whom are without the jurisdiction of the court to be adjudicated in an action against one as representative of the class. Faber v. Faber [S. C.] 56 S. E. 677. While every member of an unincorporated association must be made a party (Pickett v. Walsh [Mass.] 78 N. E. 753), if they are numerous, this may be done by making a number of them parties as representing all (Id.).

90. Spaulding v. Evenson, 149 F. 913. Affirmed under equity rule 48, providing that where the parties are very numerous the court may dispense with making them all parties, and proceed, having sufficient to represent all diverse interest. Evenson v. Spaulding [C. C. A.] 150 F. 517.

91. Where all the parties defendant were concerned in the different causes of action, directly or remotely, they were properly joined, although final judgment as to one cause of action might go against some or all of them severally and in another against some of them jointly. Lewishon v. Stoddard, 78 Conn. 575, 63 A. 62.

92. Lewis v. Crane, 78 Vt. 216, 62 A. 60.

§ 4. Designating and describing parties.[93]—The allegations of the petition and the relief sought rather than the title determines the capacity in which the suit is prosecuted.[94] One suing under an assumed or business name is bound by a judgment rendered therein.[95] While the action must be against the proper party,[96] the omission of words from a corporate name,[97] or a misnomer,[98] is not fatal but may be corrected upon payment of costs,[99] and upon due notice to the true party if he is not before the court.[1] A misnomer is not a ground for quashing service where there could be no mistake as to identity.[2]

§ 5. Additional and substituted parties.[3]—Where a necessary party is omitted or a new one becomes proper under subsequent pleadings, he may be brought in[4] by supplemental summons and complaint,[5] if the call is timely made.[6] The Codes of the various states usually provide that the court shall bring in parties

93. See 6 C. L. 892.

94. Where a trustee brings an action to rescind a contract for sale, in which he alleges that he is a trustee merely and prays for such a finding, he is personally a party to the action notwithstanding he is described as trustee in the title. Cassidy v. Sauer, 114 App. Div. 673, 99 N. Y. S. 1026.

95. Estopped to deny the validity of the judgment. Clark Bros. v. Wyche, 126 Ga. 24, 54 S. E. 909. Where, one suing under a business name, becomes a judgment debtor under a recoupment, she cannot in garnishment proceedings to recover thereon, allege the invalidity of the judgment for want of proper party plaintiff. Id.

96. Levick v. Niagara Falls Home Tel. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 150. Naming a non-existing partnership instead of an individual trading as such is not a misnomer but is a failure to name the true plaintiff, and is fatal although not raised by a plea in abatement. Voigh Brewery Co. v. Pacifico, 139 Mich. 284, 102 N. W. 739. Where an action is commenced under the name of "Voigh Brewing Company, Limited," there being no such company, an individual trading as such cannot be substituted as a party. Id.

97. The designation of the "Home Brewing Company of Grafton" as the "Home Brewing Company" is not a fatal variance. Grafton Grocery Co. v. Home Brew. Co. [W. Va.] 54 S. E. 349.

98. Davis v. Jennings [Neb.] 111 N. W. 128. Where a New York corporation having the same name as a New Jersey corporation and being represented by the same local officers, is sued for an accident to one of its employes and appears to defend, the pleadings may be amended so as to make it the party defendant instead of the New Jersey corporation which had been mistakenly named. Bainum v. American Bridge Co. 141 F. 179. One intending to sue the "C. Mining Co. of Maine," designated it as the "C. Mining & Milling Co. of Maine," but levied upon its mine and mailed a copy of the summons to its residence. There was a "C. Mining & Milling Co. of New Jersey" doing business in the county. Held that the action was against the C. Milling Co., and that the misnomer could be corrected under Civ. Code § 357, and Civ. Code Proc. § 473. Nisbet v. Clio Min. Co., 2 Cal. App. 436, 83 P. 1077. Where one intending to sue "T. &. T. Company" designated it as the "T. & T. Construction Company" which no longer existed, but serves an officer of the former and the complaint clearly shows that the action was against it, the error in title and the fact that the officer served had been an officer of the latter company did not make it an action against it but merely a misnomer which may be corrected under Code Civ. Proc. § 723. Ward v. Terry & Tench Const. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1066.

99. Where defendant did not mislead plaintiff in suing in the name of another corporation, plaintiff should be permitted to correct the misnomer only upon payment of the costs of the motion and the statutory costs of the action to date. Ward v. Terry & Tench Const. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1066.

1. Where a plaintiff intending to sue the "Niagara County Home Telephone Company" named the "Niagara Falls Home Telephone Company" as defendant, and the attorney appeared solely for the latter the pleadings cannot be corrected without notice to the former. Levick v. Niagara Falls Home Tel. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 150,

2. Described as "Christ Jennings" by which name he was commonly known instead of "Christian Jennings." Davis v. Jennings [Neb.] 111 N. W. 128. In an action against Christ Jennings and wife a designation of the latter as "Mrs. Christ Jennings," is a misnomer only, and not a ground for quashing the writ. Id.

3. See 6 C. L. 893.

4. Where a defendant in replevin of lumber did not defend upon his equitable ownership of the land from which it was cut but asked for a specific performance of a contract to convey, he must bring in the parties necessary to such relief. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Mann [Ark.] 94 S. W. 46. Where in a suit against a maker of a note payment is pleaded in the answer, it is proper for plaintiff to bring in by supplemental pleading his transferror who had warranted the note. Harris v. Cain [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 327, 91 S. W. 866.

5. Farley v. Manhattan R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 330.

6. Where service upon the heirs of a decedent has been made within a year from the commencement of the action as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 581, a subsequently appointed administrator may be brought in as a party after the expiration of the year, the time having not expired in which action might have been brought against him. Churchill v. Woodworth, 148 Cal. 669, 84 P. 155.

necessary [7] to a complete determination of the controversy,[8] which provisions are mandatory, and failure to do so is not waived by non-action of the parties.[9] Such statutes do not authorize the bringing in of one not subject to a suit in the first instance in such forum.[10] Where one co-plaintiff seeks to bring in a party over the objection of another, he must indemnify the latter against costs.[11] While one primarily liable may usually be called in by the one secondarily liable so as to render the determination conclusive upon him,[12] it cannot be done over plaintiff's objection where a notice to defend is equally as effective.[13] The right to call in parties must usually be exercised during trial,[14] but in North Dakota the right continues after judgment.[15] Plaintiff's excuse for nonjoinder must be verified as required by statute.[16] A denied motion for leave to bring in cannot be renewed on the same papers or on additional facts existing at the time of the first motion without leave of court.[17]

Intervention.[18]—A person having a direct and immediate interest in the subject-matter of a litigation [19] is usually permitted to intervene upon timely application,[20] and although he possesses the rights of an original party,[21] he takes the case

7. Where copartners are severally liable in tort and suit is commenced against one only, the plaintiff cannot thereafter join the other, since Code Civ. Proc. § 723, authorizing the court to add the name of a party in certain case applies only where such person is a necessary party or is interested. Hinds v. Bonner, 102 N. Y. S. 484.

8. Under Code of Civ. Proc. §§ 452, 723, in an action for injunction to restrain a street railway from operating in front of complainant's property until damages have been paid for interference with her easements of light, air, and access, a lessee under contract made pending litigation should be brought in as defendant. Farley v. Manhattan R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 330. Where the pledgee has not been made a party to an action by the pledgor to recover upon the pledged note, the court should order him brought in under Code of Civ. Proc. § 389. Graham v. Light [Cal. App.] 88 P. 373. Code Civ. Proc. § 452, relates primarily to equitable actions and does not authorize the court to bring in additional parties in actions for money only. Horan v. Bruning, 101 N. Y. S. 986. Code Civ. Proc. § 723, authorizing the court to amend any pleading, process, or other proceeding, by adding or striking out the name of a person as a party, etc., held not to permit the court to allow plaintiff to bring in a joint tort feasor. Id.

9. Code Civ. Proc. § 389, is mandatory and the failure to bring in necessary parties is not waived by failure to raise the point by demurrer or answer notwithstanding § 434. Mitau v. Roddan [Cal.] 84 P. 145. Under Kirby's Dig. § 6011, the court must order parties without whom it is powerless to act in the premises brought in. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Mann [Ark.] 94 S. W. 46.

10. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1208, providing that before a case is called additional or necessary parties may be brought in upon such terms as the court may prescribe, does not authorize the court to compel parties to litigate in counties in which they are not residents. Mugg v. Texas & P. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 91 S. W. 876.

11. Weed v. First Nat. Bank, 101 N. Y. S. 1045.

12. In an action upon the official bond of a town treasurer for illegal expenditures, the sureties are entitled to an order under Rev. St. 1898, §§ 2675, 2656a and 2610 bringing in the parties who received the money. Town of Washburn v. Lee, 128 Wis. 312, 107 N. W. 649. One who has assumed the payment of a note cannot object to being brought in by his promisee upon being sued. Key v. Fouts [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 448.

13. Booth v. Manchester St. R. Co., 73 N. H. 527, 63 A. 577.

14. The right of a joint obligor to bring in his co-obligor must be exercised during trial, and the court cannot allow an amendment after decision and grant a new trial. Hoatson v. McDonald, 97 Minn. 201, 106 N. W. 311.

15. Right exists by statute and also as an inherent power of the court to control their own judgments (Dedrick v. Charrier [N. D.] 108 N. W. 38), for which purpose the judgment may be set aside upon motion of the successful party (Id.).

16. Verified by attorney without a showing that the affidavit of the plaintiff could not be obtained. Haskell v. Moran, 102 N. Y. S. 388.

17. Haskell v. Moran, 102 N. Y. S. 388. The fact that defendant had waived the defect of parties defendant by answering at the time of the former motion, but has since demurred to the amended complaint is not such new additional facts as entitle plaintiff to move without leave of court. Id.

18. See 6 C. L. 894.

19. Where a general writ of possession is awarded to the assignee of the purchasers at a judicial sale against the tenants of the property, a tenant claiming to have received a lease from the purchasers before the assignment may intervene. Aull v. Bowling Green Opera House Co. [Ky.] 92 S. W. 943.

20. Where an assignee of a cause of action contended through many years of litigation for certain damages, the assignor cannot intervene upon a holding that the cause is unassignable for the purpose of recovering enhanced damages for the benefit of plaintiff especially where a receiver has been appointed for defendant and the

as he finds it,[22] and cannot withdraw therefrom,[23] especially if the opposing party has made his intervening petition the basis of his action.[24] One consenting to an intervention cannot thereafter object thereto.[25] Parties to an action must take notice of an intervenor's petition.[26] A motion to intervene on a particular motion should be denied with such motion.[27]

Substitution.[28]—While substitution of parties lies largely within the court's discretion,[29] it is usually permitted if it does not affect the cause of action [30] and denied if it will change the same.[31] By statute in many states an assignee may be substituted for his assignor,[32] but if the suit may be continued by the latter, the defendant cannot force a substitution.[33] Where the capacity of a party to continue suit ceases, the proper party in interest may be substituted.[34] The application must be timely,[35] and both the summons and complaint must be amended to rights of other creditors would be unjustly interfered with. New York Bank Note Co. v. Kidder Press Mfg. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 463.

21. Seeking to call in an additional party as defendant. Weed v. First Nat. Bank, 101 N. Y. S. 1045.

22. Where a decree confirming a mortgage foreclosure provides for a bond to be given by the purchaser conditioned upon payment of claims which may be properly payable out of the proceeds, one intervening on a motion to cancel the bond and praying for its continuance cannot attack the validity of the mortgage. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 125 Ga. 463, 54 S. E. 138.

23. Where in condemnation proceedings a person claims to be the owner of certain lands and intervenes, he is not entitled to a dismissal upon a finding that he is not the owner. Fulton v. Methon Trading Co. [Wash.] 88 P. 117.

24. Where an action is commenced by attachment without making the present owners of the property defendants but who intervene by a petition, admitting the agency in caring for the property, which admission plaintiff takes advantage of by replication, as a basis for the action, the interveners cannot thereafter withdraw. Morrison v. New Haven & Wilkerson Min. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 611.

25. Consented in open court. Lee v. Hickson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 91, 91 S. W. 636.

26. Where defendant answers, he is bound to take notice of an intervenor's petition, and intervenor need not cite him to answer it. American Surety Co. v. San Antonio Loan & Trust Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 98 S. W. 387. Where in an action between a builder and a contractor, a subcontractor intervenes, establishes his claim, and prays for a judgment for its debt and the foreclosure of its lien, judgment may be rendered against the contractor, all parties being before the court. 29. A court may, in its discretion, permit heirs suing an administrator to so amend as to make the action by the plaintiffs on the relation of the state. Mann v. Baker, 142 N. C. 235, 55 S. E. 102. Held an abuse of discretion to refuse to allow a corporation to be substituted as plaintiff in a suit upon a cause in its favor erroneously instituted in the name of the stockholders where the application was timely made upon due notice and the action will be barred by limitation if abated. Hackett v. Van Frank, 119 Mo. App. 648, 96 S. W. 247.

30. Court has power to amend the proceedings so as to turn an action against defendants as trustees to one against them individually. Southack v. Gleason, 49 Misc. 445, 98 N. Y. S. 859. Where the beneficiary in a deed of trust institutes such in his own name, it is error to deny a motion to substitute the trustee as plaintiff. McCue v. Massey [Miss.] 43 So. 2.

31. In an action by a husband for the death of his wife it is not permissible to amend so as to allow him to sue as administrator. Walker v. Lansing & S. Traction Co., 144 Mich. 685, 13 Det. Leg. N. 317, 108 N. W. 90. The substitution of a corporation as plaintiff in an action on a cause in its favor which was erroneously commenced in the names of owners of the corporate stock is not objectionable as changing the cause of action, within Rev. St. 1899, § 657. Hackett v. Van Frank, 119 Mo. App. 648, 96 S. W. 247.

34. Substitution of wards upon coming of age and the discharge of the guardian. Shattuck v. Wolf, 72 Kan. 366, 83 P. 1093. Where, in an action to cancel a title bond defendant sought specific performance, it developed that one of the parties thereto had died and his interest in the land had descended to his heirs, it was error to refuse to bring in the heirs. East Jellico Coal Co. v. Carter [Ky.] 97 S. W. 768. Where a party dies pending suit and it is ordered that the suit be revived in the name of his administrator, such administrator became plaintiff in his representative capacity and not as an individual. Southern R. Co. v. Morris, 143 Ala. 628, 42 So. 17.

35. Where a suit was brought in the county court in the name of the payee for the use of the assignee thereof, and the assignee appeals in his own name to the superior court a motion to amend so as to leave the case to stand in the assignee's name made after a motion to dismiss, is timely (Swilley v. Hooker, 126 Ga. 353, 55 S. E. 31), and the fact that the court had orally announced that it would sustain the motion to dismiss, does not render it too effect a valid substitution.[36] Where, on motion of wards to be substituted for their discharged guardian, the title to the cause of action is summarily tried without objection, the guardian cannot thereafter complain of the summary procedure.[37]

§ 6. Objections to capacity and defects of parties.[38] Incapacity to sue, if apparent on the face of the complaint,[39] may be raised by special [40] demurrer,[41] and if not so raised, the objection is waived.[43] Disability to sue in Maryland must be raised by a plea in abatement.[44] Objection must be timely interposed.[45]

Nonjoinder.[46]—Except in Illinois [47] the objection, if apparent on the face of the complaint, must be raised by demurrer,[48] otherwise by special answer,[49] and if not so raised is waived,[50] if the court has power to act without such parties.[51] Hence, the objection cannot be raised after a plea in bar,[52] or a general denial.[53] Likewise, answering after overruling of a demurrer, waives the objection.[54] The demurrer must point out the necessary omitted party.[55]

Y. S. 495. Where the petition of one attempting to sue in a company name fails to allege facts sufficient to bring the case within Code Civ. Proc. § 24, the objection must be raised by demurrer. Meyer v. Omaha Furniture & Carpet Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 767. In an action by a foreign corporation, the objection that it has no capacity to sue, having failed to procure a receipt for license fee as required by § 181 of the tax law (Laws 1896, p. 856, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 1364, c. 558) must be raised by demurrer if the defect appear on the face of the complaint, otherwise by answer, motion for nonsuit being insufficient. Wright & Co. v. Faulkner, 101 N. Y. S. 807.

42. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 598, 599, 602, a general denial is insufficient. Baxter v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 1, 95 S. W. 856. Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4200, requiring a specific denial, a general denial is insufficient. Hughes v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 126 Wis. 525, 106 N. W. 526.

43. Under B. & C. Comp. § 72, failure to demur to the capacity of a next friend suing for one alleged to be mentally incompetent waives the objection. Owings v. Turner [Or.] 87 P. 160. Under Rev. St. 1898, §§ 2653, 2654, failure to deny an allegation in a suit by a guardian ad litem of due appointment waives the objection. Hughes v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 126 Wis. 525, 106 N. W. 526. Plaintiff need not prove his legal capacity to sue unless it is put in issue. Independent Trembowler Young Men's Benev. Ass'n v. Somach, 102 N. Y. S. 495.

44. Cannot be reached by a motion to quash. Albert v. Freas, 103 Md. 583, 64 A. 282.

45. Where an action has been pending for years without objection that it was brought by the heirs instead of by them on the relation of the state, the objection is waived. Mann v. Baker, 142 N. C. 235, 55 S. E. 102.

46. See 6 C. L. 895.

47. An objection to nonjoinder of plaintiff may be interposed under the general issue (Lasher v. Colton, 225 Ill. 234, 80 N. E. 122), but a defect of parties plaintiff in actions ex delicto can only be availed of under the general issue in so far as it affects the amount of recovery. Masonic Temple Safety Deposit Co. v. Nonjoinder of cotenant in common in an ejectment suit must be objected to by demurrer under Code § 3561, where the defect is apparent on the face of the complaint Anderson v. Acheson [Iowa] 110 N. W. 335.

49. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 498, 499. Wills v. Pennell, 101 N. Y. S. 1017. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 498, 499, 552, the objection must be taken by answer, and cannot be raised by a motion to require plaintiff to make the omitted persons defendants. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Oneonta, etc., R. Co., 111 App. Div. 812, 97 N. Y. S. 673.

50. Anderson v. Acheson [Iowa] 110 N. W. 335. Civ. Proc. §§ 488, 498. Fawcett v. New York, 112 App. Div. 155, 98 N. Y. S. 286. Code Civ. Proc. § 488. Wills v. Pennell, 101 N. Y. S. 1017.

51. The fact that no objection was made by demurrer to the non-joinder of parties does not waive the defect where the court is powerless to act without them. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Mann [Ark.] 94 S. W. 46.

52. Seymour v. Du Bois, 145 F. 1003; Swannell v. Byers, 123 Ill. App. 545.

54. Adams v. Clark [Colo.] 85 P. 642.

55. Federal Betterment Co. v. Blaes [Kan.] 88 P. 555.

Misjoinder.[56]—The manner of raising the objection is largely controlled by statute, but generally, if the misjoinder is apparent upon the face of the pleadings, it may be reached by demurrer[57] or special exception,[58] but not where it is dependent upon facts,[59] and failure to properly raise the objection,[60] or answering and proceeding to trial after an adverse ruling,[61] waives the objection. Where a misjoined party is reinstated after dismissal without objection, the misjoinder is waived.[62] In equity a defendant cannot object that a co-defendant is improperly joined.[63]

An objection for a defect of parties must be timely interposed.[64]

Amendments[65] striking the names of unnecessary parties[66] or usees[67] are freely allowed. A defect of parties is cured by striking out the name of a party misjoined.[68]

The right, and parties entitled.[74]—Parties seeking partition must have an interest in the property in suit,[75] ordinarily as joint tenants or tenants in common,[76] and must have either actual or constructive possession.[77] While there can be no partition or sale for partition among contingent remaindermen,[78] this fact does not prevent the life tenants from having a partition or a sale;[79] and since, as a general rule, every adult owner of undivided fee simple estate in real property is entitled to partition as a matter of right,[80] the fact that a cotenant holds an estate for life only will not defeat the action.[81] Under the doctrine of equitable reconversion, remaindermen capable of election may bring partition of real estate after the termination of a life estate, though the land was directed to be then sold and the proceeds divided among them.[82] The action may be maintained by a child born after the execution of the parent's will and entitled under the statute to a share of the estate,[83] notwithstanding there is also a summary remedy for contribution.[84] Under a statute giving an unrestricted right to compel partition, one may not be denied such right merely because it would not be for the best interest of a minor.[85] In Louisiana a partition suit may be brought against minors without the prior sanction of a family meeting authorizing them to stand in judgment[86] provided the minors are properly represented.[87] While a common possession is presumed from a common title,[88] where one tenant is ousted by another, there is no longer a common possession, and the latter's remedy is not partition but ejectment.[89] The right of a tenant in common to partition cannot be defeated by a conveyance by his cotenant of a particular part of the estate by metes and bounds,[90] nor can one tenant in common question the validity of the common title as against his cotenant who sues for partition.[91] A former partition having been made under mutual mistake as to the existence of a material portion of the land, equity may allow a second partition as to the land omitted.[92]

Statutory sale for partition.[93]—Under the Kentucky statute, an owner of an interest in indivisible property may be entitled to a sale though he is not in actual possession and the title is in dispute;[94] and one having a life estate in a portion of the property may have a sale as against the owners of the remaining interests.[95] A sale may also be had though the interest of a pretermitted heir has passed to her issue subject to her husband's curtesy.[96] One who by answer disclaims any interest in the land is thereafter estopped from setting up any claim as against the purchaser.[97]

What may be partitioned.[98]—The California act for the encouragement of oyster planting in the public waters of the state does not confer any estate of inheritance subject to partition under the partition statute.[99]

Partition of estates of decedents.[1]—A suit for the partition of a decedent's real estate may be maintained in many jurisdictions although the estate has not been settled,[2] and in Pennsylvania a petition is not premature, though filed in the orphan's court within one year from the death of the decedent.[3] In Louisiana, however, the succession must be closed [4] and the executor may oppose the partition and retain the property until his final account has been homologated.[5] As to real estate not subject to debts, the question of whether the debts of the estate have been paid is immaterial.[6] of the probate and chancery courts to partition property is concurrent,[8] the court first acquiring jurisdiction will exercise it exclusive of the other,[9] and where partition is sought in the probate court either in kind or by sale, the final decree is conclusive until reversed on appeal so as to exclude the jurisdiction of the chancery court in the absence of special ground for equitable interposition.[10] The probate court has jurisdiction to partition personal as well as real property.[11]

Service of process.[12]—The statute generally provides for service upon infants or nonresidents.[13] Proper service upon an infant defendant is a condition precedent to the valid appointment of a guardian ad litem.[14] In the case of an incompetent, his guardian must be served.[15] The papers and docket having been destroyed personal service of citation on resident heirs will be presumed on collateral attack.[16]

Venue.[17]

§ 3. Procedure to obtain partition. Limitations.[18]—While in Iowa the statute limiting the time within which an application for the admeasurement of dower may be made does not apply to an action in equity or for partition of a distributive share,[19] the general statute limiting the time for the recovery of real property does apply in such actions.[20] Where the bill shows that suit is commenced after the statutory period the fact that the suit is brought by next friend does not raise an inference of disability so as to render the bill good as against a demurrer.[21] In Louisiana where a partition is only provisional because of a minor having been interested and the forms of law not having been complied with, the action of the minor for a definitive partition is prescribed by either five or ten years from emancipation or majority.[22] A question of limitations will not be heard for the first time on appeal.[23]

Parties.[24]—In Alabama an executor or administrator alone may file a bill for partition in his own name in the chancery court as well as in the probate court.[25] Under the New York statute all persons having or claiming any interest in the land may be made parties.[26] A plaintiff's wife is properly made a party where she has an

Where an infant defendant was not properly served with process, the court was under the statute then in force without authority to appoint a guardian ad litem, the act of the guardian appointed did not bind the infant and as to him the judgment was void. inchoate dower right.[27] A trustee by will holding title to the land with power of sale is a necessary party.[28] Mere lien holders,[29] reversioners or remaindermen,[30] or life tenants and remaindermen whose interests are represented by trustees,[31] are not necessary parties. Though the statute may provide that incumbrancers may be made parties in a suit for the sale of land, the rights of one as judgment creditor cannot be determined in the suit where he is made a party only as co-owner.[32] Where a father conveys an entire tract of land owned by him and his children, the immediate and subsequent grantees are properly made parties to a suit by the children to set aside the deed as to them and for partition and sale of the premises.[33] A posthumous child who by statute inherits on the death of the father cannot be deprived of his rights by partition proceedings to which he in no way is made a party.[34]

Pleading and evidence.[35]—The complaint must disclose the right or title of the parties interested in quality and quantity.[36] A petition setting forth the conveyances from which the interests of the several parties appear is not demurrable for failing to allege in terms their respective interests.[37] A complaint alleges but one cause of action though it seeks a determination of other matters incidental to the relief demanded.[38] If incidental equitable relief is sought, facts must be set out on which equitable jurisdiction can be based.[39] Partition will be refused if it is not asked for in the bill and no cross bill is filed.[40] A cross complaint is sufficient if it shows defendant's right of possession at the time of its filing, though it does not

Where all the relief demanded outside of partition is merely incidental and necessary to be determined before the court can adjudicate the respective rights of the parties in the land, there is no misjoinder of independent causes though all the parties are not affected to the same extent or in the same manner. Id. That as to some defendants relief is sought which will not be granted, in such an action does not sustain contention that a separate cause of action is thereby alleged. Id. The fact that the complaint seeks to avoid an alleged fraudulent transfer of a mortgage does not constitute an improper joinder of causes where such relief is necessary to a full determination of the rights of the parties. show such right at the time of commencement of suit.[41] General averments in a cross complaint control specific ones not the foundation of the pleading.[42] An answer that a codefendant had received rents and profits without accounting for them and praying for an accounting is a sufficient foundation on which to base such relief.[43]

Jurisdictional averments must be proven.[44] The burden is upon complainants to prove an interest in themselves.[45] Thus, one who sues in partition, notwithstanding an apparent devise of the land, has the burden of establishing the invalidity of the devise.[45] Where land is conveyed to several persons, some of whom afterwards bring partition, defendants will be held to strict proof if they seek to show that the land in suit was not included in the common grant.[47] As in other cases, the proof must be directed to the issues,[48] but under an averment of ownership, proof may be made of either legal or equitable title.[49] Ex parte affidavits cannot be considered on the merits against objection in the absence of previous consent or waiver.[50]

Mode and time of trial.[51]

§ 4. Scope of relief in partition.[52]—Partition cannot be made a substitute for ejectment,[53] and so where an alleged legal title is set up by way of defense, the court will await a decision at law,[54] but relief may be had which is merely incidental to the main action and necessary to a complete adjudication of the rights of the parties;[55] for example, title may be decreed and quieted in one of the parties,

Roll v. Everett [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 732.

48. In an action by heirs for partition, the widow had executed a deed to part of the community land and defendants answered that she had paid community debts out of her separate means to the value of the land conveyed which plaintiffs denied. Held, plaintiffs could not show that at the death of the husband it was agreed that she should have the community property during life in consideration of paying the debts. Jennings v. Borton [Tex. 53. Where one defendant was in possession of a portion of the land claiming adversely to all the other parties. Chamberlain v. Waples, 193 Mo. 96, 91 S. W. 934. Pleading headed "petition for partition" and alleging that certain defendants were in possession and claimed some interest unknown to plaintiffs, held to state a cause of action in partition and not one under Rev. St. 1899, § 650, to determine adverse claims, though it prayed that the court determine the rights and title of the several parties, and hence the interest of one in possession claiming adversely could not be affected. Id.

54. Court would not determine validity of tax title asserted by defendant but would hold case to await decision of law court as to its validity. Roll v. Everett [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 732.

55. Complaint not demurrable for joinder of independent causes, though showing that complainants understood that there was a boundary dispute and that defendant had attempted to occupy a portion of the premises, torn down fences, etc. Lawrence v. Norton, 102 N. Y. S. 481. That complaint sought to avoid a fraudulent transfer of a mortgage held not to constitute an improper joinder. Dunn v. Dunn, 51 Misc. 302, 100 N. Y. S. 1061. Equity having acquired jurisdiction will retain it for a settlement the court having first found that the other has no interest.[56] The bare denial of complainant's title on information and belief, defendants not claiming adverse title in themselves, does not put title in issue so as to require a stay until title has been established at law.[57] In partition of the separate estate of a deceased father, claims of the heirs against the mother or against each other individually are foreign to the issue.[58] In a suit by a widow and administratrix for partition, where the heirs demand an accounting of rents and profits, it is proper to relegate the accounting to the settlement of plaintiff's account as administratrix.[59] The heirs of a lessor in a suit to partition his land cannot by rule bring the lessee into court for the purpose of litigating the right to possession or construing the lease under which he holds.[60] If pending partition a defendant threatens destruction or removal of the property, the court may grant an injunction or appoint a receiver.[61] Upon settlement of the suit and motion for discontinuance a receiver therein having also been appointed receiver in a previous action, the court can only vacate the order appointing the receiver in the second action and leave the parties to an application in the other action for an accounting for rents and profits.[62]

Costs and attorney's fees.[63]—Defendants should not be compelled to pay complainant's solicitor's fees where a substantial and successful defense is interposed,[64] or the services were rendered exclusively for plaintiffs,[65] and defendants rightfully employ their own attorney.[66] Such fees are properly allowed where contested issues are found against a defendant.[67] Under the Missouri statute, either a written or verbal prior agreement between plaintiff and his attorney that the court might allow a reasonable attorney's fee is a sufficient basis for the courts action in allowing such fee and ordering the same to be taxed as costs, though the amount thereof is not stipulated in the agreement.[68] Attorney's fees are not taxed in Iowa where there is a dispute as to the ownership of the subject of the suit and both parties are represented by counsel;[69] and in South Carolina there is no warrant for the allowance of all disputed questions in one and same suit. Where father conveyed his and his children's interest in land, children could maintain suit to set aside deed as to them and for partition and make the several grantees parties. Thames v. Mangum, 87 Miss. 675, 40 So. 327.

69. Properly allowed plaintiff, however, where there was no dispute as to the land she sought to have partitioned, but defend-of a fee to the attorneys for plaintiff out of the common fund arising from a sale of the land.[70] Costs should not be taxed to the interests of those improperly made parties.[71] In a suit for the partition and distribution of the estate of a decedent, it is the usual practice in Virginia to have the costs of the entire proceedings paid out of the assets of the estate;[72] and where a reference of the cause is made with only the usual and necessary inquiries, it is error to require complainants to pay the costs of the reference.[73] Where a lis pendens is filed, and as authorized by statute, the court upon confirmation of the partition decrees that defendants pay complainant a portion of the costs, the lien of the judgment takes priority over a mortgage by defendants on their share executed pending suit to secure the fees of their solicitor;[74] and the fact that the costs are awarded on appeal is immaterial.[75] Under a statute giving an attorney a lien upon the client's cause of action, the court may not impose a lien upon the interests of the other parties.[76] A commission due real esate agents should not be allowed out of the funds.[77] In New York the referee is entitled to a sale fee computed on the amount bid and to commission on the amount in his hands for distribution.[78]

Operation and effect of decree.[79]—A deed of partition either voluntary or pursuant to decree merely destroys the unity of possession and does not confer any new title or additional estate in the land.[80] Rights in reversion or remainder cannot be affected.[81] The construction of a particular decree necessarily depends upon its terms.[82] A person taking a lien on an undivided interest in land takes with knowledge that his lien will follow and remain on the particular interest wherever placed when the land is partitioned.[83] A judgment rendered when all the parties who at the time had any interest in the property were before the court is sufficient to give a purchaser a good title, though afterborn children might have an interest in a part of the estate held as executor and trustee by a party to the suit.[84] A provisional partition gives to the parties the right to the fruits of their respective allotments.[85] A recital in a decree of sale that all parties interested were made parties

83. Barry v. Baker, 29 Ky. L. R. 573, 93 S. W. 1061. An owner mortgaged his two-fifths interest and later purchased two-fifths subject to a vendor's lien. In partition a tract was set apart to the owner of the remaining one-fifth. Held, the mortgagee had a lien on one-half of the land allotted to the owner of the four-fifths interest, the vendors of the two-fifths had a lien on the other half, and the remaining fifth was free from liens. by proper process duly served is conclusive of the jurisdiction of the court.[86] Where the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, the fact that the court decrees to one party more than his share does not render the decree void and subject to collateral attack;[87] and on collateral attack, the fact that a decree of sale is rendered a considerable time after return day is not fatal.[88] The Texas statute relating to proceedings for the partition of the estates of decedents confers upon the probate court general jurisdiction over such subject,[89] and an order within the scope of such jurisdiction is not void because the procedure may not be strictly followed as to matters which the heirs may waive.[90] Where by reason of lack of proper service upon an infant defendant the court is without authority to appoint a guardian ad litem, such guardian cannot bind the infant and, as to the latter, the judgment is void;[91] and where a compromise between plaintiffs and the guardian of an infant defendant is void,[92] a decree entered in accordance therewith and directing the land to be sold is also void for want of jurisdiction.[93] A decree directing partition is interlocutory and may be modified or reversed by the court at any time before final decision of the cause;[94] and where a decree is taken against a party without a trial on the merits of a particular proposition in the case, the chancellor may in his discretion open the decree and permit a defense as to such question.[95] But a standing, final decree is conclusive as to all parties who had due notice,[96] and infants who appeared by guardians ad litem are barred from subsequently maintaining ejectment to recover the shares sold.[97]

§ 5. Commissioners or referees and their proceedings.[98]—To authorize commissioners to act, there must be a valid and timely appointment.[99] It is for the commissioners to determine upon the manner of division.[1] The time for filing exceptions is usually regulated by statute.[2] No exceptions being filed during the

1. Held error for court to direct commissioners to divide the land so as to give one of the parties a certain portion. Lawson v. Bonner [Miss.] 40 So. 488.

2. Where judgment in partition appointing commissioners is entered by consent of the parties and afterwards the commissioners' report is filed with the clerk and no exception is taken within twenty days, the re-

term, a party may be entitled to confirmation of the report as a matter of law.[3] Though parties who are dissatisfied with the valuation of commissioners in partition may bring the property to sale by securing a bid in material advance in price over such valuation, the return of the comissioners cannot be vacated by the unsecured bid of a stranger to the record.[4] The court will not set aside the valuation of the commissioners unless it is so grossly incorrect and unequal as to warrant an inference of unfair or improper motives.[5] Though the action of the probate court in approving and acting on the report of commissioners advising a sale may be erroneous, it is not subject to collateral attack.[6]

§ 6. Mode of partition and distribution of property or proceeds.[7]—A sale is generally not authorized unless the land cannot be equitably divided in kind,[8] or a sale will better promote the interests of the owners,[9] or is necessary to prevent serious loss to them.[10] In Alabama the power of the probate court to order partition by sale depends upon the impossibility of equitable division in kind either by the probate or the chancery court.[11] If the land can be equitably divided but the remedy in the probate court is insufficient, complainants should proceed in chancery;[12] but if it cannot be so divided, a proceeding may be maintained either in the probate or chancery court for a sale.[13] An allegation in a petition in the probate court for partition by sale that the property cannot be equitably divided in kind is jurisdictional and must be proven before the court can order a sale.[14] Where an actual division cannot be made without prejudice to persons interested, a sale may be made though the share of a tenant is for a less estate than a fee[15] and a sale may be proper in some cases notwithstanding the existence of a contingent estate in remainder.[16] Testamentary power to make partition of land includes power to sell port stands confirmed without formal decree. Code 1883, § 1896. Roberts v. Roberts [N. C.] 55 S. E. 721.

3. Commissioners were appointed to partition land under a consent decree in 1887 and filed their report that year with the clerk. No exceptions were ever filed or objections made, and in 1906 without notice to defendant plaintiff procured an order confirming the report. Held, if the proceeding be regarded as pending in the superior court under Acts 1887, p. 518, c. 276, defendant was bound to take notice of orders made in term time (Roberts v. Roberts [N. C.] 55 S. E. 721), and no exceptions being filed during the term following the filing of the report, plaintiff was entitled to confirmation as a matter of law (Id.). The order made in 1906 should be considered as entered nunc pro tunc (Id.).

Court held without authority to order a sale in absence of any finding that the lands were not susceptible of division, where complaint alleged that they could be divided and prayed that the proper shares be laid off. Rankin v. Schofield [Ark.] 98 S. W. 674. Where the property consisted of two city lots and another tract of land and one of the parties had a half interest and five others were entitled to one-tenth each, decree for sale on ground of impossibility of equal division was proper. Joerger v. Joerger, 193 Mo. 133, 91 S. W. 918. Actual partition could not be made and sale was properly directed. Dwight v. Lawrence, 111 App. Div. 616, 98 N. Y. S. 76.

9. A sale cannot be decreed unless it affirmatively appears in the record that partition cannot be conveniently made and that the interests of the parties will be promoted by a sale. Herold v. Craig, 59 W. Va. 353, 53 S. E. 466. Under Gen. St. 1902, § 1037, providing that the court may order a sale when in its opinion a sale will better promote the interests of the owners, held, in an action by a tenant in common, it is not necessary for the complaint to allege or the court to find that an actual division of the land is impossible or impracticable, the division being legally impracticable if the severance of joint ownership can only be accomplished consistently with the interests of the owners by a sale and division of the proceeds. Contaldi v. Errichetti [Conn.] 64 A. 219.

10. A sale should not be ordered unless it is necessary to protect the parties from serious pecuniary injury. In partition of timber lands, evidence held to show that it could not be partitioned without serious loss. Idema v. Comstock [Wis.] 110 N. W. 786.

16. Where land was so situated that it where the real estate is so situated that actual partition cannot be had,[17] and powers given executors in this regard devolve upon the court, if for any reason the executors are disqualified, unable, or refuse to act.[18] A statutory method of partition may supplement a testamentary one which is defective,[19] or be substituted for it where on account of delay circumstances and the value of the land have changed.[20]

Distribution.[21]—In Louisiana the drawing of lots is an essential formality in a judicial partition in which a minor is interested,[22] failure to observe which renders the partition merely provisional.[23]

Where there are life estates with a contingent remainder and a sale, the life estates may be valued, the value paid over to the life tenants,[24] and the remainder of the fund invested to await the contingency.[25] Life tenants who are compelled to expend money in order to obtain the surrender of outstanding leases should be allowed reimbursement out of the aggregate fund if the sale was advantageous and could not have been made if the leases had not been surrendered.[26] Reimbursement should be made also to parties who in good faith have expended money for valuable improvements or for other charges against the property,[27] but one who entered the premises under a lease from a prior life tenant, knowing of the latter's want to authority to demise, is not entitled to compensation for improvements made in a subsequent suit for partition brought by the remaindermen;[28] and the fact that the receiver in the partition suit accepts rent from the tenant in such case is not an assumption of the agreement made by the life tenant.[29] Where a widow sells improvements made with community funds and also her interest in the land, the vendee is entitled to remove the improvements and have partition of the land only as against the children of the vendor.[30] Claims for improvements made by the heirs and enhancing the value of the land should be appraised separately either before or immediately after the partition sale.[31]

A statute empowering the court to transfer a lien from land sold to the proceeds in all cases where a sale is ordered free from incumbrances does not deprive the court of power to order the proceeds of a sale in partition to be paid into court, though it was not directed that the land be sold free from incumbrances.[32] An

Where a defendant in good faith made valuable improvements believing he had title and it was probable that plaintiff entertained the same belief during the time the improvements were made, the court on decreeing that defendant had no title should give him the value of the improvements. Lyons Nat. Bank v. Shuler, 101 N. Y. S. 62. Where grantee of a sole devisee paid off mortgages, taxes, and assessments, and made improvements in ignorance of the rights of a child born after the execution of the will, the judgment should be without prejudice to a lien for those expenses. In such case the children were entitled to one-half of the land or its proceeds, the vendee to the other half or its proceeds and the improvements, and there were no equities to be adjusted between them and the vendee (Id.), except that the vendee should recover from the children their pro rata share of the taxes paid by him (Id.). omission in a decree of partition to require the proceeds of the sale to be paid into court for the adjustment of claims may be corrected by supplemental order, or by amendment of the decree if all the parties are before the court.[33] A defendant need not make payment in court for an interest which he claims in the premises, where he avers that he does not know what he owes but is ready and willing to pay it.[34]

Where a husband's land is sold in partition, his judgment creditors cannot hold the entire proceeds as against his wife who did not join in the conveyance and who was not a party to the proceedings.[35] Upon a partition sale of the interest of an heir, a junior judgment creditor who causes a levy to be made is entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds as against a senior judgment creditor of his ancestor who failed to make a levy.[36] Laches may defeat the right of a tenant to enforce an equitable lien against the interest of his cotenant for rents appropriated by the latter, as against the holder of an outstanding mortgage.[37]

Owelty.[38]

§ 7. Sale and subsequent proceedings.[39]—A sale in partition made under process of the court by its appointed officer and subject to confirmation is a judicial sale.[40]

Notice [41] of sale must be given as required by the decree.[42] The Texas statute does not require notice to the heirs of a proceeding to sell an estate because it is not capable of division.[43]

Terms of sale of minors' interests.[44]—In Louisiana, if the representative of minor defendants fails to have the terms of sale fixed as to them by a family meeting, the court may order the sale of the property, so far as their interest is concerned, to be made for cash.[45]

Conduct of sale.[46]—In Louisiana the individual interest of an interdict can be alienated at private sale only where the purpose is to effect a partition by a sale of the whole property.[47] The fact that a purchaser bids an amount materially less than the appraisal of the commissioners does not avoid the sale.[48] If bids are not Flach v. Zanderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 540, 91 S. W. 348. made good, the master may continue to offer the premises for sale.[49] Where as authorized by the decree purchasers and parties consent to a sale in parcels of a certain size, they cannot afterwards avoid the sale because the land is thus sold.[50] A tenant has no right to complain because half a crop is sold when the other half might rightfully have been sold also.[51] A partner may avoid a sale of partnership property to his copartner.[52] A party who receives a part of the purchase money at a sale confirmed by the court and moves in the cause to collect the remainder is bound by the terms of the sale as recited in the decree of confirmation.[53]

A misdescription.[54]

The omission of property.[55]

Confirmation of sale.[56]—The sale must be confirmed by the court before a purchaser can acquire title,[57] and confirmation must be shown by the record.[58] In a special case a telegram from a nonresident, giving the title of the case and objecting to the sale on specified grounds, may authorize the filing of subsequent formal exceptions.[59] In the exercise of its discretion, the court may refuse to confirm a sale where equitable circumstances exist and the price is inadequate.[60]

Rights and liabilities of purchasers or bidders.[61]—A rule to show cause may issue if the sheriff and adjudicatees neglect to consummate the sale;[62] and where a sale has been duly confirmed by the court and an order made directing the sheriff to execute a deed to the purchaser, but the sheriff fails to do so until his office expires, the purchaser is entitled to an order of court requiring the sheriff's successor to execute the deed.[63] The court cannot refuse to grant such order because objections are interposed which should have been raised in the partition proceedings.[64]

49. Where by reason of defendant's failure to make good her bid, a second sale was necessitated, the terms this time being $1,000 cash and defendant again bid for the property but failed to deposit the cash, she could not complain because the master again offered the premises for sale. Vaughn v. Newman, 221 Ill. 576, 77 N. E. 1106.

50. Where the judgment ordered the land to be divided into forty-acre lots "or less, if deemed proper by interested parties," and the attorneys of plaintiffs and defendants agreed that the lots should be less than forty acres, and sale was accordingly made, no one objecting, purchasers and parties could not thereafter successfully contend that the sale was void because some lots were less than forty acres in area. Decuir v. Decuir, 117 La. 249, 41 So. 563.

51. A tenant in common who planted crops after a decree of sale and a few days before sale could not complain because one-half of the crops were sold when the other half which could also have been sold was reserved for her. Vaughn v. Newman, 221 Ill. 576, 77 N. E. 1106.

Where in proceedings for partition of a decedent's estate the administrator sold the land by order of court and, on his reporting the sale, the court ordered that he distribute the proceeds, held the sale was confirmed giving purchaser title under the administrator's deed. Rye v. Guffey Petroleum Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 739, 95 S. W. 622.

58. Record showing that sheriff filed report and that cause was settled did not show confirmation. Clark v. Sires, 193 Mo. 502, 92 S. W. 224.

59. Where immediately upon learning of the sale defendants, who were nonresidents and who had not been represented by resident counsel, sent a telegram to the clerk of court signed by counsel, giving the title of the case and objecting to the sale on the ground of inadequacy of price. Compton v. McCaffree, 220 Ill. 137, 77 N. E. 129.

60. Where it was shown that the land sold would bring $2,225 more than it was sold for, and defendants who were nonresidents were misled by not learning of the terms and date of the sale, and the purchasers did not deposit the bid on the day of the sale, and two of complainants were minors, it was no abuse of discretion to refuse to confirm the sale and set it aside and order a resale. Compton v. McCaffree, 220 Ill. 137, 77 N. E. 129.

Where one plaintiff in partition proceeded by rule and the adjudicatee of one of the lots joined in the prayer, but in the other partition plaintiffs and adjudicatees contested the rule, an issue was joined and the case could not be considered as though plaintiff in rule and the acquiescing adjudicatee were the only parties. 64. Could not refuse order until deter-

A bill for partition, decree, report of sale, decree of confirmation, and process issued in the cause, show a title in the purchaser at such sale which cannot be collaterally attacked.[65] A purchaser may be relieved of his bid if the title is unmarketable,[66] but the burden is upon him to show that fact.[67] A sale may be made with the understanding that upon the happening of a certain contingency the purchase price shall be reduced.[68] A purchaser cannot be required to pay rent pending confirmation of the sale, he not being entitled to possession.[69] On partition between heirs, he does not acquire the right to water rents accrued prior to the death of the ancestor.[70] A cause of action for a continuing injury to the property passes to him.[71]

Land sold at a void sale.[72]—Minor heirs who by guardian join in procuring a sale of a homestead in partition will be estopped to deny the equitable title of the purchaser while retaining the benefits of the sale, though the court may have been without jurisdiction.[73]

§ 8. Appeal and review; vacation of sale.[74]—An appeal from a partition decree must be taken to a court having jurisdiction when a freehold is involved,[75] unless the errors assigned do not involve the freehold.[76] It is immaterial on appeal whether or not the interests of certain parties are properly defined in the decree where they do not appeal and where appellant is in no way affected by their interests.[77] After a sale has been set aside and a resale of the premises decreed and an appeal allowed, an offer on the part of appellant to pay to certain minors the difference between the rejected bid and the offer of the objectors in order to eliminate the question of the minor's interest in a resale comes too late if ever such offer could be of any force.[78] A decree in partition is entire in its nature and cannot mination of title in pending ejectment. Gallitzin Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Steigers, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 336.

65. Subsequent partition not warranted. Sweatman v. Dean, 86 Miss. 641, 38 So. 231.

66. Purchaser not relieved because it did not appear from the records that all the heirs of a deceased owner were included in title deeds forty years ago, there being no evidence that there are any persons in being who might assert title. Wanser v. De Nyse, 102 N. Y. S. 36. After a mortgage debt on land has been due for over twenty years, the presumption of payment is conclusive in the absence of proof of payment within the period, and such presumption may be invoked in a motion by a purchaser at partition sale to be relieved from her purchase because the title is not marketable. Ouvrier v. Mahon, 102 N. Y. S. 981. Title held unmarketable by reason of defective service as to two incompetents so as to relieve purchaser of bid. Sonn v. Kennedy, 51 Misc. 234, 100 N. Y. S. 885.

67. Evidence held not to show existence of any heirs who could make claim of any interest in land sold. Sonn v. Kennedy, 51 Misc. 234, 100 N. Y. S. 885.

68. In partition between H. and P., the land was sold to H. with the understanding that, if certain personalty thereon should be sold by a third person to pay his debts, its price should be deducted from the purchase price. H. was indorser on the third person's notes and the personalty was sold. Held, since H. on paying the notes was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors of the third person, H. was not required to pay the notes before she could have the value of the personalty credited on the purchase price of the land. Ex parte Pettinger, 142 N. C. 85, 54 S. E. 845. P. was responsible for only one-half of the actual cash value of the personalty at the date it was sold. Id.

69. A purchaser at a sale in partition is not entitled, under Rev. St. § 6600, to possession until the sale has been confirmed, and where the purchase is of a part of the title only, and confirmation is delayed, the purchaser cannot be compelled to pay rent to the holders of the remainder of the title during the intervening period. Schwartz v. Williamson, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 532.

Vacation of sale.[82]—On motion to set aside the confirmation, it is sufficient to allege the existence of irregularities which would have been sufficient to avoid the sale had they been considered at the time of confirmation.[83] The motion is not waived by later filing a motion to set aside interlocutory orders, but both motions may be considered at the same time.[84]

§ 9. Voluntary partition.[85]—Joint owners may make a voluntary division of land,[86] and such division may be established by any competent evidence.[87] A court of equity will not interfere with a testamentary power of executors to make partition of an estate in the absence of abuse or unreasonable delay on the part of the executors,[88] and the mere fear that designing persons might seek to establish false claims against the property will not authorize such interference.[89] Where land is divided for the support of a widow and children, the proceeds of a sale thereof to be divided among the children upon the death of the widow, the children may partition the land among themselves with the widow's consent,[90] and a child who thereafter conveys the portion so assigned her will be estopped to assert any further interest in the land.[91] Where cotenants orally divide the land among themselves, each taking possession of his allotted share, they are bound in equity by the division so made without the execution of deeds.[92] Since in Texas a parol partition of a community homestead by a husband fairly made with the consent of his wife is binding on the wife,[93] a partition deed of such property signed by her is effective

After the filing of a stipulation by the attorney's agreeing that an order of sale in partition and all proceedings thereunder be vacated, a confirmation of such sale without consideration of the stipulation is an irregularity within Cobbey's Ann. Butz, 224 Ill. 379, 79 N. E. 659. Would not decree partition on ground that it could not be known when bill was filed, whether the personalty could pay debts and legacies, and because it could not be known whether the lands were free from liabilities if partition was made by executors, there being no emergency requiring equity to determine in advance of filing claims in probate whether there were debts outstanding. for the purpose intended, though her name as grantor does not appear in the body of the deed.[94] Upon a voluntary partition in kind, of real estate, between heirs, each will take subject to any obvious, subsisting, and reasonably necessary easements, in the absence of a contrary intent shown,[95] and the one to whom a servient part is thus conveyed has no right to materially and permanently interfere with, or destroy, an easement, by an unwarranted change of the physical condition of his allotment.[96] Where an amicable division of a decedent's land is made between the widow and children, and thereupon each heir holds possession of the portion allotted to him, they owe no accounting to each other for fruits and revenues or for taxes and repairs.[97] A party to a contract of partition who for a long period of time recognizes the rights of all the parties thereunder may be estopped from thereafter claiming title to the portion set apart to eiher of the others.[98]

§ 1. What constitutes. Definition and kinds.[99]—A partnership may be defined as the relation existing between two or more persons who have agreed to carry on a business together and to share the profits thereof as joint owners of the business.[1] Unincorporated joint stock associations are in some respects deemed partnerships.[2]

95. Johnson v. Gould [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 798.

96. Supply of water could not be cut off or impaired. Johnson v. Gould [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 798.

97. Faure v. Faure, 117 La. 204, 41 So. 494.

98. Where parties took possession and defendant acquiesced for over thirty years, he could not claim title under a prior deed. Stover v. Stover [W. Va.] 54 S. E. 350.

99. See 6 C. L. 912.

1. Herman Kahn Co. v. Bowden & Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 126. Where two or more parties are engaged in a joint business enterprise, in which they contribute either capital, skill, or labor, upon an understanding, tacit or otherwise, that they will share in common the profits accruing therefrom, they are partners in fact and in law. Gaddie v. Mann, 147 F. 960. To constitute a partnership as to the partners themselves it is only necessary that each of them contribute either capital, labor, credit, or skill and care or two or more of these, and that all the contributions are put together into a common stock or common enterprise to be used for the purpose of carrying on business for the common benefit. Swonnell v. Byers, 123 Ill. App. 545. An agreement for the transaction of a lawful business, according to the terms of which there was to be a community of profit and loss between the contracting parties, each sharing in these mutually as associates in the undertaking is an agreement for the formation of a partnership. Dorough v. Harrington & Son [Ala.] 42 So. 557.

2. In the absence of statute, they possess no powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or corporations. Spotswood v. Morris [Idaho] 85 P. 1094. They cannot, however, from the very nature of their organization, be entirely controlled by the legal rules and principles that control ordinary partnerships. Id. Death of a member does not dissolve the association. Id. And one of the partners has not plenary power to sell or otherwise dispose of the association property or create indebtedness beyond that provided for in the articles of association. Id. But this limitation of the agency of the members is an incident resulting from the lack of the right of delectus personae, and not an incident of

Essential elements.[3]—The essential elements of every true partnership [4] are an agreement between the parties [5] to establish and carry on some lawful commerce or business,[6] in which they are to have a community of interest,[7] and the profits [8] and losses [9] of which they are to share, the obligation to share losses being implied in the absence of express agreement and of evidence to the contrary.[10] But while the corporation not possessed by a partnership. Id.

3. See 6 C. L. 912.

4. Partnerships as to third person by estoppel, see infra, this section.

5. The parties must assume the partnership relation. Norton v. Brink [Neb.] 110 N. W. 669 overruling [Neb.] 106 N. W. 668. There must be a voluntary contract (Bond v. May [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 260; Coons v. Coons [Va.] 56 S. E. 576), to which the consent of all parties thereto is necessary (Beasley v. Berry, 33 Mont. 477, 84 P. 791). Hence, where, by the terms of a deceased partner's will, his representative was to continue the business for a definite time, but with the consent of all the beneficiaries continued it for a year longer, the beneficiaries by such assent did not become partners. Manhattan Oil Co. v. Gill, 103 N. Y. S. 364.

6. Brotherton v. Gilchrist, 144 Mich. 274, 13 Det. Leg. N. 150, 107 N. W. 890. Ordinarily the profits are expected to arise from the purchase and sale of some form of property, but they may be produced by the skill and industry of the partners as in the case of professional firms or those for the organization or promotion of various enterprises. Morgart v. Smouse, 103 Md. 463, 63 A. 1070.

7. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018; Morgart v. Smouse, 103 Md. 463, 63 A. 1070; Estabrook v. Woods [Mass.] 78 N. E. 538; Brotherton v. Gilchrist, 144 Mich. 274, 13 Det. Leg. N. 150, 107 N. W. 890; Jackson v. Haynie's Adm'r [Va.] 56 S. E. 148. To constitute persons partners, in adition to the mere sharing of profits, if any, they must have associated themselves for the purpose of carrying on the business together; that is, the business must have been partnership business, the funds for investment partnership funds, the property purchased partnership property, and the profits, if any, partnership profits. Beasley v. Berry, 33 Mont. 477, 84 P. 791. An agreement merely "that said land should be purchased in partnership" does not constitute the purchasers partners, where the land was bought by one person with his own money and the other person did nothing, contributed nothing, risked nothing and there was no consideration for the contract. Norton v. Brink [Neb.] 110 N. W. 669, overruling [Neb.] 106 N. W. 668. Lease of line by one railroad to another held not to make them partners. Moorshead v. United R. Co. [Mo.] 100 S. W. 611.

The property employed in the business may be the separate property of the partners. Brooke v. Tucker [Ala.] 43 So. 141. An instruction that one could not "be a partner without having money in the business" was clearly incorrect, for one may engage in a business as a partner and furnish his services against the money furnished by his partner or he might furnish the use of the building in which the business was carried on against the capital of his partner. If he was wealthy, the other members of the firm might agree to give him a share of the profits to induce him to enter the firm and lend the credit of his name to the firm, without requiring him to put any money in the business. Herman Kahn Co. v. Bowden & Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 126. Of course, one partner may contribute funds and another labor; but, when the funds are set apart for the purpose, they become partnership funds. Beasley v. Berry, 33 Mont. 477, 84 P. 791.

8. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018; Bond v. May [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 260; Morgart v. Smouse, 103 Md. 463, 63 A. 1070; Norton v. Brink [Neb.] 110 N. W. 669, overruling [Neb.] 106 N. W. 668; Jackson v. Haynie's Adm'r [Va.] 56 S. E. 148. An agreement by two or more persons to buy a piece of property together does not amount to an agreement to form a partnership, where there is no agreement for a joint sale of ths property and a sharing of the profits. Harris v. Umsted [Ark.] 96 S. W. 146.

Community of profits means partnership in them as distinguished from the personal claim upon the other associate. In other words, a property right in them from the start. Breinig v. Sparrow [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 37. For one to share in the profits as profits, within the true meaning of the cases is to stand in such relations to the business that the profits, or a share of them, are in his ownership as they accrue. He must have a proprietary interest in each dollar of profits as it is earned, so that he then has a right of possession or control of it for the purpose of retaining his share. Estabrook v. Woods [Mass.] 78 N. E. 538.

9. Norton v. Brink [Neb.] 110 N. W. 669, overruling [Neb.] 106 N. W. 668; Jackson v. Haynie's Adm'r [Va.] 56 S. E. 148.

10. Baremore v. Selover, Bates & Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 66. Though there is no clause in the contract saying that either party was to bear the losses, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the law presumes that losses were to be borne by them in the same proportion in which they shared the profits. Ramsey v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018. The announcement by a participant in a joint adventure, after the business was ended, of his purpose of paying all outstanding accounts, when not accompanied by an admission of liability, did not enlarge his obligation, so as to require him to be treated as a partner. Brotherton v. Gilchrist, 144 Mich. 274, 13 Det. Leg. N. 150, 107 N. W. 890.

Illustrations: Where the owner of a newspaper contracted with another that the former should remain in control of the paper until the formation of a corporation and the latter advanced a sum of money to be applied on certain debts, both agreeing to work for the good of the paper and to divide the profits after devoting a certain portion to the liquidation of debts, a partnership was created. Brooke v. Tucker the sharing of profits is some evidence that a partnership exists,[11] and while the prevailing opinion now is said to be that any contract by which the parties are entitled to share in the profits or business as owners thereof is a copartnership, [Ala.] 43 So. 141. Where a physician contracted with the owner of a drug store to prescribe gratis for all patients who would have the prescriptions filled at the drug store, each party to take a certain monthly sum from the business, and they subsequently agreed to take out a certain monthly sum if the business justified, "all over" going to the payment of the stock, that a specific balance was due the druggist, and that in case of a rupture in the business each should receive a certain percentage of the stock, no partnership was created. Nobbs v. Stotts [Ark.] 94 S. W. 918. When M took an interest in a dry-goods stock owned by R to the extent of $5000 which was to be turned over to M as manager, the firm to be known as R & M, and M was to receive a monthly salary and in addition a proportion of the profits a partnership was created. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018. A contract, which provided for the buying and selling of tobacco on joint account, stipulated that the profits and losses should be equally divided, and termed the business a partnership, binding one of the parties to pay for the tobacco purchased by the other, constituted the parties partners. Bloom v. Farmers' Bank [Ky.] 97 S. W. 756. Where the firm A & B, was succeeded by the firm, A & C, and A & C gave their individual notes to a creditor of the firm of A & B, this was not a partnership transaction, although the firm of A & C, may have used a portion of the assets of the firm of A & B. Theus v. Armistead, 116 La. 795, 41 So. 95. A contract by which defendants agreed to convey by bill of sale a one-third interest in certain specified property in consideration of complainant's personal services in the conduct of a business whenever the business shall yield a fixed sum, reserving the right to defendant to sever the relation and in lieu of such conveyance pay complainant a fixed monthly salary is inconsistent with the idea of a partnership. Collier v. Dasher [Fla.] 41 So. 269. An agreement to purchase, develop and sell lands for joint acount and to share equally the profits and losses constitutes the parties co-partners quoad the undertaking covered by such agreement. Morgart v. Smouse, 103 Md. 463, 63 A. 1070. Where two partners enter into an arrangement with a third person for participation in the business with the understanding that the latter's liability is to be limited by his advances, and that the two former shall have no authority to make contracts which will bind the later, there is no partnership relation between them. Brotherton v. Gilchrist, 144 Mich. 274, 13 Det. Leg. N. 150, 107 N. W. 890. Where one person had an option on certain land and entered into an agreement with another that such other should purchase the land and both parties should then use their efforts to sell the same and share the profits equally, the agreement was in the nature of a partnership to purchase the lands covered by the option for the purpose of reselling them and sharing the profits. Baremore v. Selover, Bates & Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 66. Where one railroad company leased another for a term of years at a specific rent and the performance of certain duties in the nature of rent, the contract did not constitute the two companies partners. Moorshead v. United R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 541, 96 S. W. 261. An agreement to join in the purchase and sale of a carload of hogs, the profits or losses of the transaction to be shared equally, is an agreement for a partnership. McNealy v. Bartlett [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 767. Where three persons entered into an arrangement for opening an art gallery under which each was to receive $2000 per annum, to be charged as an expense, and they were to divide the profits by paying two-thirds to one and one-sixth to each of the others, they formed a partnership. Lefevre v. Silo, 112 App. Div. 464, 98 N. Y. S. 321. Where two persons contribute sums to put up a margin to buy cotton, the buying and selling on the market being in charge of the husband of one, with the agreement to share profits, the parties to the agreement are partners. Jones v. Walker, 101 N. Y. S. 22. Where, under the express language of the contract, and as a consideration of it, the plaintiff agreed to contribute to the common business, as an asset, connections in Europe which were valuable in the exporting of cotton for profit, which was the commercial enterprise undertaken; and he was to share in the net profits, the parties were partners. Price v. Middleton [S. C.] 55 S. E. 156. Where a company made no contracts for shipments, but furnished refrigerator cars to a railroad on order, sending a man to superintend the loading when the cars were delivered to the shipper, there being no joint management or joint agents, there was no partnership between the companies. American Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Chandler [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 243, 93 S. W. 243. Where a firm was unable to procure funds for financing a contract which it had and on which it estimated $53,000 profit and procured them from a third person under an arrangement by which it was agreed that the members of the firm should give their skill and time to the work, and that when all debts were settled, and certain interest had been paid to defendant for the money furnished, the net profits, if any, should be divided according to a scale varying with their amount, the parties were partners. Kelley Island Lime & Transport Co. v. Masterson [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 820, 93 S. W. 427. Receiving profits from the co-partnership, knowing the character of the company as a co-partnership, knowing that she had signed as guardian the co-partnership articles, with the express purpose of thereby, as guardian, becoming a co-partner, is quite enough to fix the liability as a partner, in the absence of a contract by which she was to have a share of the profits upon some other consideration, such as services, property, etc. In re Neasmith [C. C. A.] 147 F. 160.

11. Beasley v. Berry, 33 Mont. 477, 84 P. 791. Participation in the profits of a co-partnership is strong evidence of a part-rather than an employment,[12] a division of the profits of a business is not alone sufficient to constiute a partnership.[13] As between the parties,[14] the essential test is whether the parties asserted to be in partnership intended to establish that relation,[15] which is determined by ascertaining whether each has a share or interest in the profits as profits, or whether the interest of one is merely as a measure of his compensation for something that he does or furnishes.[16] A person who receives a share of the net profits of a business or compensation for services[17] or in lieu of rent for the use of property, real or personal,[18] is not thereby made a partner. Another characteristic feature of a partnership is that the parties are usually principals of and agents for each other,[19] but a valid contract of partnership may be made stipulating that one of the partners shall have the management of the business to the exclusion of all the others.[20] In the case of mining partnerships, the principle of delectus personæ does not apply.[21]

Intent as test.[22]—As between the parties,[23] partnership is a matter of intention to be proved by their express agreement or inferred from their acts and conduct.[24] The intention which controls, however, is the legal intention,[25] and if the parties intend to and do enter into such a contract as in the eye of the law constinership, and that it is sufficient, as to third persons, unless explained by circumstances showing a different relation, is well settled. In re Neasmith [C. C. A.] 147 F. 160.

A contract providing that a person should receive for his services a percentage of the net profits from which should be deducted at the end of the year a monthly advance of $40 and that the traveling expenses should be paid does not create a partnership. Van Duzer v. Zimmerman Lumber Co. [Miss.] 43 So. 177. An arrangement by which B employed M to buy and handle sheep, to rent ranches to winter them, to buy feed for them, and generally to have charge of the business under B's directions for a fixed monthly compensation and a share of the profits, if any, does not constitute them partners. Beasley v. Berry, 33 Mont. 477, 84 P. 791. A miller employed by the owner to take charge of a mill for a third of the profits is not a partner of the owner. Jackson v. Haynie's Adm'r [Va.] 56 S. E. 148. One is not a partner who is employed by a corporation as manager at $4 per day and half the net profits. Belch v. Big Store Co. [Wash.] 89 P. 174.

18. Bond v. May [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 260. Where a person loaned money to a partnership to enable it to purchase certain coal lands on which it had an option under an agreement that the purchase-money should be repaid with a share of the profits if the lands were sold within a year and that if not so sold he should have title to the land, the transaction was a loan and not a partnership. Duncan Coal Co. v. Duncan & Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1249, 97 S. W. 43. Where W was to furnish B capital to establish and carry on a risky investment and was to receive as compensation, not only a fixed percentage, but also, for a certain period, half of the net profits after allowing so much per week for B's time, and for a certain longer period one-quarter of the profits, and was also to have security by mortgage for his entire investment, the parties were not partners. Estabrook v. Woods [Mass.] 78 N. E. 538. An arrangement by which one person advanced money and indorsed paper to enable another to purchase lumber, the latter, in adition to repaying the money and satisfying the notes, agreeing to pay the former one-third of the net profits, did not constitute the two partners, the former taking no part in the management of the business. tutes a partnership they thereby become partners, whether they are designated as such or not,[26] and even though their purpose was to avoid the creation of such relation and they have carried their purpose to the extent of expressly stipulating that they are not to be partners.[27]

Who may become partners.[28]—A corporation has no power to enter into a contract of partnership unless the power is expressly conferred,[29] but this rule does not prevent the law from imposing upon the corporation the liability of a partner to third persons by reason of a contract made by it in furtherance of the object of its creation.[30]

Formalities of contract of partnership.[31]—The statute of frauds does not require partnership agreements to be in writing where they are to be performed within one year[32] or where they run for an indefinite time,[33] and even where an oral agreement for a partnership is not to be performed within the year, the statute will not apply after part performance by the parties.[34] Although there are divisions to the contrary,[35] the weight of authority is to the effect that the provision of the statute requiring contracts for an interest in real property to be in writing does not apply to contracts to form a partnership to deal in real estate.[36] But whatever may be the rule, where a partnership is found to deal in lands and lands are bought with partnership funds in pursuance of such agreement, a parol agreement by a buyer to admit another into partnership with him is void under the statute of frauds.[37]

Stockholders in illegal or defective corporations.[38]—Although there is some conflict of authority,[39] it is generally held that parties who assume a corporate name and pretend to be a corporation which has no de facto or de jure existence[40] are

A fortiori, where the instrument, which is complete in every respect, in express terms creates a partnership and no fraud or mistake is charged in the procurement of the contract, the only mistake being as to the legal effect of the instrument, the court is bound to declare the legal effect of the writing. 27. Breinig v. Sparrow [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 37. If two persons connected in business have such rights and interests as to make them in fact partners, no contract modifying or limiting the liability of either partner, or increasing the liability of the other as between themselves, would have any effect upon the rights of third persons to hold both upon proper contracts made by either in the partnership business. 29. Breinig v. Sparrow [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 37. Without considering the question whether or not a corporation can enter into a co-partnership with individuals for the operation of a business other than that named in its charter, a partnership could not be constituted by an act of the president without authority and without the knowledge of the board of directors. 39. That certain persons allowed their names to appear on the letter heads used by another as officers of a corporation which did not exist and that the name of the pseudo corporation appeared upon the door of the office occupied by said persons and upon motors stored in a warehouse used by all and that one of the persons had guaranteed in writing certain contracts made by the person using the letter heads does not raise an estoppel to deny the existence of a partnership as against creditors. The letter head implied not a co-partnership, but an incorporated company and the other matters fall far short of raising any presumption of the existence of partnership relations. Churchill v. Thompson Elec. Co., 119 Ill. App. 430.

40. Rev. St. 1899, § 1314, provides that when the secretary of state issues his certificate no one can question the corporate liable as partners.[41] The same is true of officers and stockholders of a foreign corporation, who knowingly and actively participate in the business, conducted in violation of, or without first complying with, the law of the forum.[42]

Evidence.[43]—It is the universal rule that where the question of partnership arises in a contest between partners and the interest of no third persons are involved, much stronger proof is required to establish it than when the question arises between the alleged partners and third persons.[44] The articles of copartnership are, of course, admissible on the issue of partnership,[45] which may, however, be proved by circumstantial as well as direct testimony.[46] Declarations or admissions of a partner are admissible to prove partnership against him[47] but are incompetent to prove that others were partners.[48] The authorities are in conflict on the question whether general reputation is admissible.[49] It is permissible to show an alteration of the firm name by parol evidence.[50] character except the state in a direct proceeding. Hence, where such certificate has been issued the incorporators are not rendered liable as partners by reason of the failure of some of them to acknowledge the articles, as required by § 1313, or to pay for the amount of stock named in the articles, even though the certificate of the secretary of state has been procured by fraud. First Nat. Bank v. Rockefeller, 195 Mo. 16, 93 S. W. 761. And the same is true where the articles of incorporation falsely state the amount subscribed and paid when there was an agreement that certain stockholders should not be required to pay and the secretary of state issues his certificate without knowledge of the falsity of the statements. Webb v. Rockefeller, 195 Mo. 67, 93 S. W. 772. But where the thing omitted was the filing of the papers with the secretary of state, who alone could issue a certificate constituting the persons a de facto corporation, they were held liable as partners. Sexton v. Snyder, 119 Mo. App. 668, 94 S. W. 562.

42. Where defendants were stockholders in a foriegn corporation, which by its charter had in authority to practice dentistry and to which the pratice of dentistry was positively forbidden by Pennsylvania law, and were actively and knowingly engaged in such practice, they were liable to plaintiff as partners for injuries received at their hands, plaintiff supposing that she was in the hands of licensed dentists. Mandeville v. Courtright [C. C. A.] 142 F. 97. Where officers and members of a mercantile corporation, created by the law of another state with a capacity to exist and do business only in certain named counties in that state, attempt to establish the corporation under another name in the state of Louisiana, the effect, so far at least as third persons are concerned, is the establishment of a mercantile partnership, composed of the parties to such attempt, and where it appears that such partnership, in its own name, has acquired property and contracted debts, such property will be devoted to the payment, by preference, to the debts so contracted. Campbell v. Campbell Co., 117 La. 402, 41 So. 696. But the directors and stockholders of a foreign corporation doing business in Pennsylvania without first complying with the provisions of the statute relative to granting permission to foreign corporations to do business within the state are not liable as co-partners for debts contracted within the state, in the absence of any showing that the said directors or stockholders were actually copartners or by their conduct held themselves out to be copartners doing business within the state. Where the issue was whether a partnership had existed between defendant and another in December of a certain year, plaintiff having the affirmative of the issue, drafts drawn on the firm during the year, the latest one being dated November 15th of such year, and which drafts were paid, were properly admitted on behalf of plaintiff. Lellman v. Mills [Wyo.] 87 P. 985. On trial against a partnership for goods sold and delivered upon the order of one of the firm, the letters of one of the firm received in the ordinary course of business as well as letters from the firm are admissible to show such partner's connection with the business, that he had charge of its financial concerns, and to prove agency. Barth v. Paul, 50 Misc. 600, 99 N. Y. S. 425.

47. Herman Kahn Co. v. Bowden [Ark.] 96 S. W. 126; Franklin v. Hoadley, 101 N. Y. S. 374. But a reference by a participant in a joint adventure to himself as a silent partner is not conclusive as to the existence of a partnership relation. Brotherton v. Gilchrist, 144 Mich. 274, 13 Det. Questions of fact.[51]—Whether a partnership existed or not is a question of fact to be determined on all the proof.[52]

Partnerships as to third persons.[53]—As between the parties and third persons, a partnership may exist without an agreement to that effect between the partners [54] if they have so held themselves out and dealt with the public as to estop the members to deny its existence.[55] This estoppel exists not only as to those whom the 52. Headley v. Rice, 29 Ky. L. R. 1102, 96 S. W. 903. Whether or not an alleged partner was a member of the firm against which an involuntary petition has been filed is not of itself a proper question to be submitted to a jury under § 19a of the Bankrupt act of 1898, although it may properly be submitted as part of the larger question whether or not such person was insolvent, where the answer depends upon the question of membership and formal application for a jury has been made. In re Neasmith [C. C. A.] 147 F. 160.

Evidence held sufficient to show relation: Evidence that W in the presence of H had ordered lumber, which was paid for; that W and H subsequently were refused credit for other lumber, and that thereupon H and F appeared and H introduced F "as the moneyed man of the concern" is sufficient to fix a partnership liability on H and F. Fay v. Walsh, 190 Mass. 374, 77 N. E. 44. Where in an action for negligence it appeared that the team which caused the injury was marked "Anthony, Swift & Co." as were bills rendered by the driver's employer, the premises occupied by them, and horse blankets on other teams, this was sufficient, coupled with the fact that defendants were of the name A & S, to sustain a finding that they were partners against evidence that this was a corporation, no charter or books or providings for the incorporation being produced. Norris v. Anthony [Mass.] 79 N. E. 258. Evidence that after defendant bought a tract of land he talked over the subject of a partnership with complainant who subsequently moved on the land and began improving it at joint expense and that a lease was subsequently made in their joint names and that they filed a bill in which they alleged that they were partners sufficiently shows the existence of a partnership. Chase v. Angell [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 616, 108 N. W. 1105.

Evidence held insufficient to show a partnership in a case where real property had stood in the name of an alleged partner for many years and subsequently for about ten years in the name of his wife without any claim being asserted by plaintiff. Budlong v. Budlong [Wash.] 86 P. 559. Where the firm of Burgess & Son advertised that it had opened a branch establishment with C. H. Dixon as manager and a delivery bond executed upon releasing a stallion from attachment recited that it was given by Robert Burgess and C. H. Dixon doing business as Burgess & Dixon, this evidence was insufficient to show a partnership consisting of Burgess & Son and Dixon. Daugherty v. Burgess, 118 Mo. App. 557, 94 S. W. 594. Evidence that holders of a second mortgage stationed representatives on the premises, advised with the builder and his architect, repeatedly complained of defects in the building, insisted that it be built according to specifications, and, after the builder's disappearance paid certain labor claims is insufficient to establish a partnership between the mortgagees and builder. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 50 Misc. 51, 100 N. Y. S. 299. The mere fact that judgment obtained against two persons jointly was a deficiency judgment on the foreclosure of premises formerly owned by a firm composed of such persons is not enough to show that the obligation was a partnership one. New York Institution v. Crockett, 102 N. Y. S. 412. The facts showing this an individual and not a partnership obligation were these. Defendant, Harding, and Burke and two other parties were partners engaged in developing mines. As between the partners one-fourth of the expense so incurred was to be borne by Harding and Burke, and one-fourth by Doyle. To pay the one-fourth against Harding and Burke, Doyle had borrowed money by giving his note, and with the money so obtained had paid off such indebtedness against Harding and Burke. Hansen loaned Doyle, Burke, and Harding the amount named in the contract sued on to repay Doyle the amount so paid out by him, giving a check payable to Doyle for the amount named in the contract, of which check Doyle availed himself. In consideration of the giving of this check the contract sued on was made. Doyle v. Nesting [Colo.] 88 P. 862.

55. Price v. Middleton [S. C.] 55 S. E. 156; Coons v. Coons [Va.] 56 S. E. 576. The doctrine of estoppel operates against one who knowingly suffers himself to be represented as a partner in a particular firm, and renders him liable to one who is thereby induced to give credit to the firm. Breinig v. Sparrow [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 37. Defendant did not render himself liable as a partner under the following circumstances. He was an undertaker, who at all times had some carriages in the hands of T & H, carriage repairers, whose shop he visited daily giving instructions as to the work on his own property. He loaned T & H money and reimbursed himself by collecting some of their accounts and was consulted as to extending credit to purchasers of certain tires for which he had loaned money. T & H having been closed by seizure, hs opened a shop taking his own work and subsequently completing the work which T & H had had on hand and some of T & H's property having been removed to his new shop without his knowledge. Buford Bros. v. Sontheimer, 116 representation was directly made,[56] but as to all others[57] who with knowledge[58] of such holding out and in reliance thereon[59] extended credit, provided they exercised due diligence in ascertaining the facts.[60]

§ 2. Firm name, trade mark, and good will.[61]—The firm name need not contain the full names of the parties.[62] It may be sold with the good will of a business and its use by a subsequent partnership enjoined at the suit of the purchaser.[63] So too the articles of partnership or of dissolution may provide that the firm name may be employed by one partner to the exclusion of the other,[64] but the right of a man to use his own name in connection with his own business is so fundamental that an intention to entirely divest himself of such right and transfer it to another will not readily be presumed, but must be clearly shown.[65] In the same way when the partnership business and good will are sold, the sellers may agree not to re-engage in the same business in the same city,[66] and the articles of partnrship or agreement for dissolution may provide that a retiring partner shall

58. The mere fact that a person held himself out as a partner would not estop him from showing that he was not in fact a partner, except as to those who knew of such holding out. Herman Kahn Co. v. Bowden [Ark.] 96 S. W. 126.

59. There can be no basis for the estoppel where the party seeking to raise it knew the truth from the beginning, and therefore, although the creditor knew that a certain person was represented as partner of the concern, no estoppel arises if the creditor knew that the person was not in fact a partner. Breinig v. Sparrow [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 37. But knowledge by the creditor that the real partners have agreed to indemnify the party lending his name to be held out as a member of the partnership does not prevent an estoppel against him; for by thus holding himself out as a partner he becomes primarily liable to the creditor and must seek his indemnity from those who promise it. Breinig v. Sparrow [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 37.

When one is actually a partner, he is liable as such to creditors without respect to whether the credit was extended on the faith of his liability. Price v. Middleton [S. C.] 55 S. E. 156.

Codes 1899, §§ 4410, 4412, requiring every firm doing business under such name or designation to file and publish a certificate showing the full names and residences of the members. Walker v. Stimmel [N. D.] 107 N. W. 1081.

Use of corporate name: A lease in which one of the parties is described as "Jay, Morris & Co., incorporated," but which is signed by each of the persons forming the copartnership of "Jay, Morris & Co.," no one being misled by the addition of the word "Incorporated," is valid. Julicher v. Connelly, 102 N. Y. S. 620.

63. Acker, Merrall & Condit Co. v. McGaw, 144 F. 864. But selling the firm name "George K. McGaw & Co." does not prevent the vendor from having his name appear as a member of the firm "Hopper, McGaw & Co." Id.

64. Where plaintiff based his rights to an injunction on the dissolution agreement, a separate defense alleging that the agreement was signed by defendant's attorney in fact, contrary to defendant's instructions, and was subsequently repudiated by defendant, was not demurrable; but a defense allegeing that the attorney in fact was induced by plaintiff to sign the agreement by means of a sum of money paid to him by plaintiff was immaterial and demurrable. Bastable v. Carroll, 101 N. Y. S. 637. Nor can defendant successfully defend or counterclaim on the ground that plaintiff directed the postmaster to deliver all mail directed to the firm to himself, and that plaintiff had thereby obtained large quantities of mail belonging to defendant. Id.

65. Blanchard Co. v. Simon, 104 Va. 209, 51 S. E. 222. Where the articles of partnership and subsequent dissolution agreement contained no reference to the good will of the business, such reference having been stricken from the articles on defendant's request, and one partner, H. K., after taking a new partner, continued business under the old name H. K. & Co., while the other continued under his own name as successor to H. K. & Co., the latter had no standing to enjoin the use of such firm name by the former, who was clearly entitled to use it. Lepow v. Kottler, 100 N. Y. S. 779. The sale by Simon of his interest in the business carried on as the Simon Auction Company to his partner did not entitle the latter to an injunction restraining Simon from again entering into business under the same name. 66. Such a contract is assignable. Bradford v. Montgomery Furniture Co., 115 Tenn. 610, 92 S. W. 1104. Upon breach of such a contract the buyer's measure of damages is the actual damages which they are able to show naturally and proximately resulted not compete with the continuing partner,[67] but the mere transfer by one member of a copartnership to his copartners of his interest in the good will of the business does not preclude him from entering into a similar business in the same town and prosecuting it in competition with the old firm of which he had been a member.[68]

§ 3. Firm capital and property. In general.[69]—Ordinarily property contributed to the partnership[70] or acquired with partnership funds or assets[71] is partnership property even though title is taken in the name of one partner alone,[72] but property employed in the partnership operations is not necessarily partnership property;[73] and property acquired with partnership assets may or may not become partnership property according to the intention of the parties.[74] A partnership may lawfully transfer all its property free from all liability for the partnership debt.[75]

How title is held.[76]—All effects of a partnership are held in trust,[77] and all assets acquired by the firm, whether real[78] or personal[79] are acquired subject to existing incumbrances. Where land is conveyed to a firm, the partners are tenants in common.[80]

72 Payne v. Martin [Colo.] 89 P. 46. When real estate is acquired in a partnership business so formed, and for partnership purposes, notwithstanding the provisions of the statute of frauds, it is partnership assets although the legal title be taken in the name of one of the partners. Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co., 98 Minn. 52, 107 N. W. 824.

73. Wilson v. Wilson, 74 S. C. 30, 54 S. E. 227. The fact that a life insurance policy payable to the estate of the insured was pledged by the partnership of which he was a member does not afford a scintilla of legal evidence that the title to the policy or the proceeds thereof was in the partnership. The legal presumption is that title is in the insured. In re Mertens [C. C. A.] 144 F. 818.

74. The intention is manifested by all the surrounding circumstances, and the use to be made of it, whether for partnership or individual purposes. Jenkins v. Jenkins [Ark.] 98 S. W. 685. While it is undisputed that the property was paid out of partnership funds, appellee testifies that he immediately caused the amount to be charged to himself on the books of the firm, and that appellant recognized it as a purchase for individual use by his agreement to pay rent. Under the circumstances, the amount of the purchase price being charged to appellee on the books of the firm at the time of the purchase, a presumption even does not arise that the purchase was for partnership uses. When prior to the formation of a partnership for improving a tract of land, which was then owned by one of the parties, such party had acquired a residence in the state, his wife had an inchoate right of dower as against the husband's partner. Chase v. Angell [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 616, 108 N. W. 1105.

79. Personal property encumbered with a mortgage, which becomes a part of the assets of a partnership formed after the execution and record of the mortgage, remains subject to seizure and sale as the property of the mortgagor, notwithstanding the formation of the partnership, unless the mortgagee induced its acquisition by a statement that it is unencumbered. 80. Anderson v. Goodwin, 125 Ga. 563, 54 S. E. 679; Chase v. Angell [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 616, 108 N. W. 1105.

Each partner has freehold interest: While it is true that for certain purposes partnership realty is treated, by a doctrine of equitable conversion, as personalty in the settlement of the affairs of the partnership,

Partner's interest.[81]—A partner's interest in firm property is only his proportion in the surplus after the payment of partnership debts, and the settlement of the partnership accounts, and until that occurs, it is impossible to determine the extent of his interest.[82] This interest, however, may be seized under execution or attachment,[83] may be reached by injunction at the suit of a creditor,[84] or may be mortgaged by the partner.[85]

§ 4. Rights and liabilities as to third persons. A. Power of partner to bind firm. In general; contracts.[86]—As a general rule[87] each member of a firm is its general agent in relation to all the business of the firm[88] and can bind the firm by what he does in transacting such business[89] or in any transaction within its apparent scope.[90] Thus it has been held that a partner may bind his firm by borrowing money,[91] that his acts and declarations may be admitted in evidence where there is prima facie proof of partnership,[92] and that, in the absence of statute he has full power to sell, pledge or otherwise dispose of all personal property belonging to the partnership.[93] There are, however, statutes which require a chattel mortgage to be executed and acknowledged by each and every member of the partnership in order that it may bind the copartnership property.[94] Such a statute is not confined to chattel mortgages executed in favor of one who has actual notice or is chargeable with notice of the ownership of the property,[95] and does not permit one partner to authorize a partnership chattel mortgage to be executed in the firm name, without the signature of all the partners, nor to ratify a mortgage so executed as to make it a valid lien upon firm property.[96] Even as against the other partners, an act of a partner for his own exclusive benefit may be binding on the firm, where there was nothing which ought to have put a reasonable person on his guard as to the true nature of the transaction.[97] The act of a partner, even if not within the scope of the partnership business, may be so ratified by the copartners as to bind the firm.[98]

Partnership bills and notes.[99]—Where the transaction is within the scope of the firm's business, a partner may bind his firm by making and endorsing bills of exchange and promissory notes in the name of the firm,[1] even when the partner exercising such power uses his trust for his own pecuniary advantage and to the injury of his firm, unless the other party to the contract is chargeable with notice of the facts.[2] In the case of a trading partnership, either partner has power and authority to execute notes even for the purpose of borrowing money,[3] and even in the case of a nontrading partnership it has been held that either partner would have the right to execute a note for supplies necessary for furtherance of the partnership objects.[4] Ratification is equivalent to previous authorization.[5] On a note signed by the firm name and by both partners individually each partner is individually liable as well as the firm.[6]

Webber v. Webber [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 703, 109 N. W. 50. In re Speer Bros., 144 F. 910.

Presumptions and burden of proof: Where the note sued on was executed by one of the partners, who signed the name of the firm and admitted in his evidence that it was his intention to bind the firm as payors of the note, prima facie he was authorized so to do, and the burden of showing to the contrary was upon the defendant Talbert. (§ 4) C. Application of assets to liabilities. Firm debts and assets.[28]—There is no equity between partners giving them the right to compel the application of firm assets to the payment of its debts,[29] but this may be terminated by agreement, or by good faith sale and transfer of the partnership property.[30] Proceeds arising from the sale of partnership real property constitute partnership assets and must be distributed in like manner as other partnership assets.[31]

§ 5. *Rights of partners inter se. (§ 6) *B. Against firm or partner. Effect of statute authorizing service on corporation or association officer: In view of the fact that Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4881, provides that, when summons is served on one of several defendants jointly liable, judgment may be entered against all defendants so far as it may be enforced against joint property and also against defendant served individually, it must be held that § 4875 authorizing service on a nonresident corporation, company, or association by serving its secretary, cashier, or managing agent, does not authorize such service in case of nonresident partnership. If it did it would make service upon a managing agent more potential than if made upon a member of the firm. Coughlin v. Pinkerton, 41 Wash. 500, 84 P. 14.

Effect of statute requiring registration: Where a partnership has not registered in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the Act of April 14, 1851 (P. L. 612), it cannot complain in a suit against it that the name of one of the members was omitted or that the names of persons not members were included as parties defendant. Daniel v. Lance, 29 Pa. In such an action a failure to allege that defendant was not served is not fatal after proof thereof without objection. An amendment to conform to the proof should be allowed. Hofferberth v. Nash, 102 N. Y. S. 317.

49. Where plaintiff dismisses the suit against one partner, he thereby abandons

No action can be maintained against a firm upon a several and individual contract of the partners.[51]

The complaint in an action against a partnership should show with reasonable certainty that the defendants are sued as partners;[52] but where a person is sought to be held as a partner by estoppel, a considerable latitude must be allowed in the setting forth of the facts and circumstances going to serve as a basis for the estoppel.[53] Under some statutes the fact of partnership must be put in issue by affidavit.[54]

Abatement.[55]—Where the statute authorizes suit against a partnership, where only one partner is sued, the death of such partner before trial does not abate the action.[56] Where it is not patent upon the record, as by plaintiff's declaration, that there is a nonjoinder of a party defendant as partner, it should be pleaded in abatement.[57]

Judgment and subsequent proceedings.[58]—Judgment against a partnership in the firm name is irregular but not void.[59]

A partner cannot recover in an action at law against his copartner for a share of profits of their joint adventure until there has been a settlement or account stated between them. Morgart v. Smouse, 103 Md. 463, 63 A. 1070; Jones v. Walker, 101 N. Y. S. 22.

Pleading: In an action by one partner against another, a petition alleging that they had dissolved partnership and settled their business is good as against an objection that it does not allege a settlement of partnership affairs. Burley v. Brown [Kan.] 85 P. 527.

Counterclaim: In an action by one partner upon the individual promissory note given by another partner, an unascertained balance alleged to be due from the plaintiff to the defendant upon the unsettled partnership account cannot be set up in an affidavit of defense as a set-off. The reason for this is that the damages which can be set off as an independent counterclaim must be such as a jury can find and liquidate in the ordinary way just as if the defendant were a plaintiff in debt, assumpsit or covenant; but where the right of the defendant is only to call the plaintiff to an account claim not arising out of a partnership transaction.[62] And while no action will lie against a partner for terminating a partnership at will,[63] an action will lie for the breach of an executory contract to form a copartnership,[64] or for the violation of the terms of an existing one,[65] the measure of damages being the same in both cases,[66] and the cause of action accruing as soon as a breach occurs.[67] Where, one, by false representations, induces another to become his partner,, the partnership agreement will be rescinded at the instance of the latter.[68] A bill seeking to restrain alleged partners from ousting complainant from participation in the alleged partnership business must disclose that a partnership existed.[69] Where a partnership settlement has been procured by the fraud of one of the partners, his copartner, upon discovery of the fraud, may, without rescinding the contract of settlement, sue him for any damages occasioned by the deceit.[70]

§ 7. Dissolution, settlement, and accounting. A. Dissolution by operation of law.[71]—While the partners may stipulate that death shall not dissolve the partnership,[72] in the absence of such provision or of a direction to the contrary in the deceased partner's will,[73] a partnership is terminated ipso facto by the death of one and this demand is such as must be settled in an action of account rendered, or bill in equity for accounting, it is not a proper setoff. Appleby v. Barrett, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 349.

Where but one matter growing out of the partnership business remains unadjusted, it is well settled that one partner may sue another in an action at law. McNealy v. Bartlett [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 767.

64. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018; Hobbs v. Ray, 29 Ky. L. R. 999, 96 S. W. 589. And, after defendant has refused to carry out the contract, it is not necessary for plaintiff to make formal tender as a condition precedent to maintaining the action. Hobbs v. Ray, 29 Ky. L. R. 999, 96 S. W. 589.

65. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018. Compare Price v. Middleton [S. C.] 55 S. E. 156, where the court said: "There are cases where a court of law may entertain an action brought by one partner against another for damages for breach of his contract to maintain the partnership where the items going to indicate profits which are to constitute the measure of damages are few and simple. But we have been able to find no case in which a court of law has undertaken to adjust partnership affairs, arising either before or after dissolution, where it was necessary for the jury to take a strict accounting covering a long period and many transactions."

66. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018.

One element, if not the sole measure, of which is the probable profits which plaintiff would have earned had not the defendant wrongfully prevented its performance. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018. Evidence as to past profits in the same business is competent upon this issue. So also, is evidence concerning the prosperity and growth of the community during the term of the partnership, and the ability and skill of the plaintiff. Id. In an action brought by one partner to recover damages for the other partner's withdrawal from the business, plaintiff's witness testified that since the withdrawal the profits had increased but explained that the increase was due to the natural increase in the business but that if the partner had not withdrawn they would have been greatly increased. This estimate was purely speculative and there could be no recovery, the measure of damages in such cases being loss of profits. Burdall v. Johnson [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 2.

67. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018.

68. And where by like representations he was induced to put his stock into the business at less than its value, he is not bound by such value. Caplen v. Cox [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 266, 92 S. W. 1048.

Measure of recovery: He may recover the value of what he put into the business, with interest, and the value of his services in attending to the business, deducting what he has drawn out of his business, with interest, from the time of the dissolution of the partnership to the judgment, on the amount he has drawn out in excess of what he was entitled to for his services. Caplen v. Cox [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 266, 92 S. W. 1048.

69. A bill in such case is demurrable where it fails to state any facts from which a court can adjudge whether this is true or not, and where a contract between the parties exhibited as part of such bill is in its terms inconsistent with the existence of a real partnership. But where the articles of partnership provided that upon the death of a partner his share of the capital should remain in the business for two years thereafter, the surviving partners paying a specified interest thereon, the death of a partner dissolves the partnership and the executor of the deceased partner is not authorized to continue the business. The interest of the deceased partner is merely of a loan to the firm. Williams v. Brookline [Mass.] 79 N. E. 779.

of the partners.[74] Insanity of one of the partners, however, does not, per se work a dissolution of the partnership.[75] Partnership also ends by the extinction of the thing, or the consummation of the business,[76] and by the expulsion of one member.[77]

(§ 7) B. Dissolution by act of partners.[78]—A partnership may be dissolved by mutual consent,[79] and where no definite time is fixed for the continuance of a partneship, it is one at will and either party may dissolve it at pleasure.[80] Indeed to effect a dissolution of a partnership at will, there must have been a mutual agreement to dissolve, or there must have been an election to dissolve.[81] As a general rule, where one partner transfers his entire interest in the firm to his copartner, a dissolution results ipso facto.[82] Abandonment may be a ground upon which one's copartners may elect to consider the partnership as dissolved.[83]

(§ 7) C. Dissolution by order of court.[84]—The basis of a bill for dissolution is the necessity for the due winding up of a partnership, and this equity alone, independently of any other consideration, will entitle a suitor to demand relief.[85] Insanity of one of the partners,[86] or failure to furnish his share of the expenses of the partnership having declared his inability so to do,[87] are good grounds for demanding a dissolution. A petition for dissolution is sufficient, although it does not distinctly pray for a full and final settlement, where, taking it as a whole, the purpose appears.[88] A suit for dissolution may, in a proper case, be brought in the Federal court.[89]

The partner electing to dissolve must give his copartners notice of his election to terminate the partnership, or his election must be manifested by unequivocal acts or circumstances brought to the knowledge of the other party which signify the will of the former that the partnership be dissolved. Id. The bringing of an action by one partner against his copartners for an accounting does not necessarily constitute an election on his part to dissolve the partnership. It does not, for example, where the complaint treats the partnership as existing. Id. But an answer that there is "no partnership now existing * * * and that all business relations * * * have terminated and cease to exist" between the parties amounts to an election on the part of defendants to dissolve the partnership. Id.

Where one partner proposed to sell his interest to his copartners and they accepted the proposition and thereafter he acted as clerk, he ceased to be a partner and was not entitled under the bankruptcy law to any personal property exemption in the firm's assets even though no formal agreement was entered into and the whole purchase price was never paid. In re Fowler & Co., 145 F. 270. Sale by one partner of his entire interest in the firm is an adjustment of all accounts between the partners, and the presumption is that all accounts between the partners were taken into consideration, including a salary item which was provided by the partnership articles, should "not be considered net profit but come out of the general expense account." (§7) D. Effect of dissolution. 1. In General.[90]—Except as to such acts as are necessary or proper for the winding up of the partnership affairs,[91] the dissolution of a partnership terminates the power of the respective partners to bind each other, provided notice has been given,[92] especially by a fraud practiced by one of the former members for his own benefit, where the others knew nothing of the fraud.[93] A member of a dissolved commercial firm, who has paid one of its obligations, has no right of action against his partner for reimbursement, save by suit for a settlement of the partnership.[94]

(§ 7D) 2. As to surviving partner and estate of deceased partner.[95]—A surviving partner takes the title to the partnership property,[96] only for the purpose, however, of winding up the business and settling the partnership affairs,[97] and has the exclusive control and management of such affairs and of partnership litigation.[98] It is the duty of the surviving partner to settle the affairs of the copartnership as speedily as the best interests of the business of the copartnership will permit,[99] but he may continue the business by and with the consent of the executor or administrator of the estate of the deceased and the approval of the probate court.[1] And while, as a general rule, he is not entitled to a salary or compensation for managing and settling up the partnership business,[2] he may be entitled to compensation when the business has been carried on for some time with beneficial results.[3] He is also entitled to reimbursement for necessary expenses incurred.[4] In settling the

In re Hendrick, 143 F. 647.

97. Loewenstein v. Loewenstein, 99 N. Y. S. 730. The surviving partner of a commercial partnership liquidating its affairs without authority to pay debts alleged to be due by the deceased individually out of the partnership funds, he is without authority to admit their correctness and pay them. An averment that the firm was composed of the estate of John Silvey, deceased, simply described the capacity in which the other parties sued, as the estate of a deceased member could not sue. Evans v. Silvey & Co., 144 Ala. 398, 42 So. 62.

Waiver of right: Whatever may be the rights of a surviving partner, it is clear that when, as in this case, he waives his right to administer on the partnership estate, and another administrator is in charge when the lands of the copartnership are sold to satisfy a lien created when all the partners are alive, the surplus over and above the secured debt is assets of the copartnership estate, and the administrator thereof is entitled to administer the same and apply it to the liquidation of the unpaid debts of the partnership. Barnes v. Stone, 198 Mo. 471, 95 S. W. 915.

partnership affairs, the surviving partner may act, within the limits of good faith, in any manner he deems best for the interests concerned.[5] and the only right of the deceased partner's personal representative is to call the surviving partner to account.[6] The burden is on the latter however, to show by satisfactory evidence that any transaction he has with the partnership estate is in all respects fair and free from any fraud or deception.[7]

Where a partnership is dissolved, its debts paid and its affairs wound up, partnership property remaining belongs to the individual members of the firm as joint tenants or tenants in common.[8] Whether real estate is to be treated as personalty for all purposes depends on the intent of the parties as disclosed by the terms of the partnership and the construction placed upon them by the partners.

(§ 7D) 3. As to continuing or liquidating partner. Retiring partner.[10]—An agreement upon the dissolution of a partnership, by which the retiring partner transfers his interest in the partnership property to the remaining partner, and the latter agrees to pay the partnership debts, creates as between them the relation of surety and principal.[11] By some authorities a creditor who knows of such agreement is bound thereby and by any act which would release an ordinary surety will release the retiring partner.[12] By other authorities it is held that a creditor, even with notice of such an agreement, is not bound thereby unless he has assented to it and that as to him their joint obligation as joint debtors continues.[13] The retiring member of a firm is entitled to interest on his share of the property of the old partnership all of which was taken over by the remaining members who formed a new firm.[14] Where the continuing partner has purchased the assets of the partnership, giving his note therefor, he is entitled to have deducted from such note one-half the amount of assets withdrawn by the retiring partner, but not appearing on the books, and one-half the amount of certain liabilities not included in the settlement and paid by him.[15] cannot properly complain of the outlay which produced the benefit. And, in general, complaints as to expenses incurred should be made at the time and not postponed until the liquidation is closed. In re Curlee & Co. [La.] 43 So. 165.

The preparation of the accounts of the surviving partner of a commercial firm liquidating its affairs is part of the duty of the attorney employed in the case. The liquidator is not authorized to employ a bookkeeper to make out the account, and have him paid out of the funds of the partnership as one of the expenses he is entitled to incur under Civ. (§ 7) E. Accounting. Right to.[16]—A partner's right to an accounting and settlement accrues upon the dissolution of the firm,[17] in connection with which each partner is entitled to an account of all the firm's transactions,[18] unless it be an exceptional case in which the findings of the court granting relief operate as an accounting or the parties have agreed upon a settlement.[19] Where, however, a settlement has been effected by the false representation of one partner to another, equity will grant the latter relief, especially where the perpetrator of the fraud has charge of the books of the firm, and by reason of his position has more intimate knowledge of the partnership affairs.[20] Such an action being really to surcharge a voluntary settlement made by the copartners, the burden of showing the errors or fraud is on the plaintiff.[21] Where the partnership is one at will and has no assets, one partner has no right to demand an accounting of profits earned by his copartners who continue the business after notifying him of their election to dissolve.[22] But, where, after one partner's death the surviving partner continues the business, children of the deceased partner are entitled to an accounting as of the date of his death and to demand the payment of the assets to which he would have been entitled at that time plus interest or in lieu of interest to an accounting of the profits.[23] It is no reason for refusing redress that, under the particular circumstances, it may be difficult to make a true accounting,[24] but laches will bar the right.[25]

16. See 6 C. L. 941.

17. Eddy v. Fogg [Mass.] 78 N. E. 549. The articles of a banking partnership provided for the continuance of the partnership for a time certain and that if any member of the firm should die within the stated period his share should remain in the business until the end of said period, and the representative of deceased should be paid interest on said share and participate in the earnings to some extent as the deceased partner, had he lived, would have participated; that business was to continue under surviving partner or partners. By a subsequent agreement a trust company was formed and the partnership assets were transferred to the corporation for stock therein, any of the parties in interest to be entitled, upon the issue and delivery of the stock, to require a distribution of it and a settlement of the affairs of the copartners for which purpose suits at law or in equity, if necessary to compel a settlement and distribution, could be maintained. Under these facts, a suit by representative of plaintiff's intestate deceased eight years, whose estate had never received anything in the way of profits, is not premature because certain assets of the copartnership which had been excepted from the operation of the agreement had not been realized upon, for the court has power to protect all interests in a final decree. Brew v. Cochran, 141 F. 459.

19. Reis v. Reis, 99 Minn. 446, 109 N. W. 997. Where, on dissolution and submission, an award was made covering all matters between the partners growing out of a certain line of business, as distinguished from loans, advances, and payments which one partner had made to and on behalf of his copartner, the right of the latter, if any, to recover from the former on account of losses sustained in such business, was conclusively disposed of. Eddy v. Fogg [Mass.] 78 N. E. 549. But when the business of a partnership was the cultivation of rice, and one of the partners died before the maturity of the crop, and after the crop was harvested, on demand of the executors of the deceased partner there was an equal division of the rice, but no undertaking to construe the contract or make a final settlement, such transaction did not amount to an accord and satisfaction which would estop the executors from denying that the survivor was entitled to one-half of the crop. Huger v. Cunningham, 126 Ga. 684, 56 S. E. 64.

20. Oliver v. House, 125 Ga. 637, 54 S. E. 732.

A rescission of such a contract of dissolution, and the return of the property received thereunder, is not a condition precedent to an action for further accounting brought by the injured party; nor will the retention of the assets turned over to such injured party, and the application of them by him to the indebtedness of the firm, which he assumed under the agreement of dissolution, be treated as a ratification by him of the terms of dissolution, when the other partner has been in no way injured thereby.

Pleading: An allegation in a petition to the effect that an item in a statement of a firm's indebtedness which the partner, who had charge of the firm's books and who drew the statement to be used as a basis of a settlement of dissolution, represented to be te amount due by the firm in addition to the liabilities more specifically set forth therein, will, as against a demurrer, be treated, not as a mere expression of opinion by such partner, but as a statement of fact. Parties.[29]

Procedure, pleading and proof.[30]—The bill must show that the plaintiff has such an interest in the partnership as entitles him to an accounting,[31] but where the action is plainly for the settlement of a partnership, and for a division of profits, a prayer for general relief will authorize a decree for any balance that may be found due the plaintiff on a settlement of accounts.[32] An allegation in a petition that, under the facts pleaded, the plaintiff is entitled to recover a certain amount is not an estoppel in judicio which precludes an amendment that under the same facts the plaintiff is entitled to a larger recovery.[33] Under certain circumstances, creditors may come in by petition in intervention.[34] General rules as to evidence [35] and instructions [36] apply.

partnership discovers, within a few weeks after the settlement is effected, that he has been defrauded by the other, and immediately calls upon such partner to rectify the wrong he has perpetrated, which the latter declined to do, the former is not guilty of such laches as will preclude a recovery by waiting seven months before filing his petition for further accounting. It must contain allegations with respect to the contributions of the parties to the partnership assets, and the proportions in which they were to sustain losses or share profits so that the court may determine whether it was an agreement of partnership on which an accounting may be decreed. Patterson v. Sadler [N. J.] 63 A. 1115. But where a partner failed to pay in the amount agreed upon for his admission to the partnership, and at the next accounting the full sum was deducted from his share of the profits, the partners will be deemed to have waived any defense to an action for dissolution and an accounting which they might have had by reason of his failure to pay. Brady v. Powers, 112 App. Div. 845, 98 N. Y. S. 237.

32 Stark v. Howcott [La.] 43 So. 61. Moreover, a partner has the right in equity to have the firm assets applied to the payment of the firm debts, and, although the bill does not in so many words pray for such application, the general frame of the bill is to that end and the prayer for general relief is sufficient therefor. Veneman v. Leo Ruckle, 120 Ill. App. 251.

33. Huger v. Cunningham, 126 Ga. 684, 56 S. E. 64. The petition may be amended to include partnership debts paid by petitioner since the commencement of the proceedings. Id.

34. Where a receiver was appointed who was ordered to sell the firm property and pay creditors but no sale was made and, by stipulation of the partners, a new basis of settlement was agreed on with the approval of the court and a new receiver substituted, a creditor whose claim has been duly listed with the first receiver, but no part thereof paid, may file a petition in intervention praying an order directing the payment of his claim. Johnson v. Johnson [Iowa] 107 N. W. 802.

35. Testimony that one partner, previously to signing written articles of partnership had made the same offer of partnership to a relative, who had declined it, is not relevant in construing the partnership agreement. A letter from one of the partners to his factor, authorizing his copartner to draw on his private account for funds in conducting the partnership enterprise, was properly excluded on the ground of irrelevancy. Huger v. Cunningham, 126 Ga. 684, 56 S. E. 64. Where one partner testified that another and different agreement from that contained in the partnership agreement had been entered into between him and his copartner in relation to certain transactions, which was denied by the latter, proof of custom and usage was permissible to give the jury a basis upon which to act in the event they found there was no definite agreement in relation to the commission to which the latter was entitled in such transactions. Morgan v. Barber [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 730.

Variance: Whether the statement, which was the basis of the settlement or calculation made when the $2,303 was paid, was on a separate paper, as the allegations of the original bill would seem to indicate it was, or was in one of the books of the partnership, as the amended and supplemental bill alleged, was not very material. The inquiry was whether or not the complainant had been induced to accept the $2,303 in full of his interest in the partnership profits or assets by reason of representations made by the defendant, Burrill, that the statement or account upon which they based their settlement or calculations was correct, when he knew it was not. Laskey v. Burrill, 105 Va. 480, 54 S E. 23.

36. Where, in a suit by a partner for an accounting, it was shown that the partnership agreement guaranteed that the plaintiff should receive a specified sum per month for

Receivers.[37]—After an accounting, a receiver may be appointed, if necessary, to carry the judgment into effect.[38] The remedy, however, is a stringent measure, not to be resorted to except remedially,[39] although when a bill seeking dissolution is filed and it satisfactorily appears that the complainant will be entitled to a decree, a receiver will be appointed of course.[40] Where complainant has paid money into the firm and defendant has converted the profits to his own use, it is no obstacle to the appointment of a receiver that defendant has the legal title to the partnership property.[41] Nor, where one of the defendant partners is charged with fraud, will he be allowed to retain possession of the partnership property upon giving bond to secure the complainant in any recovery he may obtain.[42] Objection that the appointment of a receiver was premature because made before answer filed is waived by the filing before the chancellor of defendant's answer to the bill as part of the proofs against the application of a receiver.[43]

Credits and charges.[44]—Upon an accounting each partner is held accountable according to the articles of partnership.[45] Unless pleaded, only partnership transactions can be considered,[46] but all the partnership debts must be taken into account, twelve months, that the firm continued after the twelve months and that plaintiff made no claim for such sum after the expiration of the year, and the court charged the jury as to the guaranty for the twelve months without charging as to the guaranty for any time thereafter, an instruction, that the evidence showed that the partners continued under the partnership agreement for a specified time after the twelve months was not erroneous. Morgan v. Barber [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 730.

38. Bond v. May [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 260.

39. See 6 C. L. 944. A receiver will not be appointed at the suit of one partner where no dissolution is sought, no disagreement among the partners is alleged, no fraud or wrong doing on the part of any of them is alleged, and it is not averred that the firm or any of its members are insolvent, and the only complaint is the alleged incompetency of a manager whose removal may be affected by discharge at any time. Campbell v. Rich Oil Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 716, 96 S. W. 442. Where the existence of the partnership is in doubt and there are no allegations of fraud, mismanagement, or dissipation of assets, a receiver will not be appointed before judgment. Bimberg v. Wagenhals, 102 N. Y. S. 925. A receiver pendente lite will not be appointed in an action between partners for an accounting where no claim is made that defendant is unable to respond to a judgment and no dissolution is asked. Greenwald v. Gotham-Attucks Music Co., 103 N. Y. S. 123. Partnership held so far solvent and prosperous that receiver should be denied. Meyer v. Meyer, 116 La. 456, 40 So. 794.

45. Under the articles of partnership in this case, where the partnership venture resulted in loss, the proceeds of the partnership business should be first deducted from the expense account, and two-thirds of the actual loss charged to plaintiffs' testator, and one-third to the defendant. Huger v. Cunningham, 126 Ga. 684, 56 S. E. 64. Where defendant, who was to furnish a building for the transaction of the business, transferred the sum to his wife after the date to which the partnership was extended, and she with full knowledge allowed the business to be continued, it was held that the business was conducted on the same terms after, as before, the expiration of the partnership agreement, and that plaintiff was not chargeable with rent. Pardue v. McCollum, 116 Mo. App. 603, 92 S. W. 757. J. & Co. and S. & Co. used to issue notes to one another for mutual accommodation. X., a member of J. & Co., issued one of these notes to S. & Co. against the protest of another member of J. & Co. There was no understanding or agreement that the note should be charged to X., although other members afterward claimed that it should be so charged. When the new firm was formed at the expiration of the old, the amount to the credit of X. was contributed by him as his capital to the new firm and that amount was fixed without charging X. with said note. All parties having thus acquiesced in his being credited in the new to the amount of his credit in the old firm, without deducting the note, he cannot be charged with the amount of this note upon the liquidation of the affairs of the second firm. Blun v. Mayer, 113 App. Div. 247, 99 N. Y. S. 25. Where one partner was to receive half the net profits, the other partner financing the business, and the latter paid out certain sums and held certain bonds, the former was not entitled to half the bonds upon payment of half the expenses. Under the partnership agreement all expenses were payable from the proceeds of the bonds before he was entitled to anything. Hebblethwaite v. Flint, 101 N. Y. S. 43.

If nothing was said about expenses, the law would infer an agreement that each was to bear one-half thereof. Wiggins v. Markham [Iowa] 108 N. W. 113; Stark v. Howcott [La.] 43 So. 61.

46. Payne v. Martin [Colo.] 89 P. 46. A discharge of the receiver does not preclude the surviving partner from asserting his claim against the widow, for the claim of the surviving partner against the widow and it is wholly indifferent to whom the debt is owing, if the obligation be just.[47] Each partner is entitled to credit for all sums advanced for the use of the firm,[48] and should be charged with all money drawn out on individual account;[49] but a partner is not entitled to deduct any expenditure made by him which he deemed necessary and proper, unless it can be shown that it related to the common undertaking and was in some way beneficial to the partnership.[50] Ordinarily a partner should not be charged with the depreciation of the partnership plant,[51] but he may be charged with losses resulting from his actual negligence or bad faith.[52]

Interest.[53]—In the discretion of the court, interest may be allowed from the time of filing the bill.[54] was not before the court at the time of the adjudication. Schnell v. Schnell [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 432.

47. Huger v. Cunningham, 126 Ga. 684, 56 S. E. 64. After dissolution each member of the firm is liable for his share of legal expenses for suits begun against the firm before its dissolution. Blun v. Mayer, 113 App. Div. 247, 99 N. Y. S. 25.

48. Wilson v. Wilson, 74 S. C. 30, 54 S. E. 227.

49. Wilson v. Wilson, 74 S. C. 30, 54 S. E. 227. Where upon the establishment of a partnership a seat in the stock exchange was purchased in the name of one partner and, in accordance with a rule of the exchange, the other partner executed a release for the benefit of other members and subsequently the member was charged with the price of his seat on the books of the firm, paid interest thereon and received credits as payments were made the debt was due the firm and was properly charged against the sitting member on an accounting after the death of the other partner, nor did such release affect such liability. Sterling v. Chapin, 185 N. Y. 395, 78 N. E. 158. Checks not shown to have been used in the partnership business are properly charged to a survivor's account, for while the propriety of a disbursement if made in the business could not be questioned, the burden is on the accounting partner to show that disbursements were made in the business. Clausen v. Puvogel, 114 App. Div. 455, 100 N. Y. S. 49. Where the master finds that a certain retainer received by one of the parties was not mentioned in the partnership agreement that it was subsequently treated by the partner as partnership property, and that it should be charged to the partner receiving it, this is a finding of fact and not a conclusion of law, nor are the findings inconsistent. Where a partner holds bonds which are not of par value, he should be charged only with their actual value. Hebblethwaite v. Flint, 101 N. Y. S. 43.

50. Van Tine v. Hilands, 142 F. 613.

51. But under the contract involved in this case and the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, the plaintiffs were entitled to an accounting for one-half of the net profits as of the date fixed in the contract for them to retire and receive such profits. McConnell v. Stubbs, 124 Ga. 1038, 53 S. E. 698.

52. One partner may, by way of recoupment, have a deduction made from the amount of the claim of the other in the profits, on account of neglect or refusal to discharge certain duties, whereby the interest of the firm suffered damage and extra expenses were incurred; but the deduction cannot go beyond the amount of damage proved. McConnell v. Stubbs, 124 Ga. 1038, 53 S. E. 698. But where there was no evidence that defendant said anything to plaintiff about his not having earned the salary stipulated for in the partnership agreement, although he pleaded that plaintiff had neglected the business and his testimony tended to support the plea, plaintiff was entitled to recover the salary called for in the partnership agreement. Morgan v. Barber [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 730. Where defendant claims a sum of money forfeited in a business not originally contemplated by the partners, it is for defendant to show that plaintiff either authorized or ratified this transaction before he can be held liable for any part of the loss. Wiggins v. Markham [Iowa] 108 N. W. 113. Where a note given to a firm was allowed by the survivor of a partnership to become barred by the statute of limitations under circumstances not creditable to the surviving partner or his representative, the amount of the note was a proper charge against the estate of the surviving person. Webber v. Webber [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 703, 109 N. W. 50. A partner of a wholesale firm which had a retail department, who acquired a one-half interest in a retail firm in the same line in the same city, is chargeable, upon an action for a dissolution of the wholesale firm and for an accounting, with the profits and interest thereon made in the retail firm, where it was shown that the wholesale firm did business at an actual loss with the retail concern. He should be credited each year with the interest on his capital in the retail concern, the total interest on capital deducted from amount charged against him as profits, and interest should be reckoned against him on that balance. Van Deusen v. Crispell, 99 N. Y. S. 874.

53. See 6 C. L. 947.

54. Young v. Winkley, 191 Mass. 570, 78 N. E. 377. Where a partner made a statement of a claim of an employee by executing a firm note in the amount due and paid interest on the note, but did not exact interest on the employee's overdraft on the partnership, which was in the bank's business, the partner was chargeable with interest on the overdraft. Webber v. Webber [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 703, 109 N. W. 50. In the ordinary case of a copartnership accounting, partners are not liable for interest upon moneys withdrawn, because until there is an accounting it cannot be said whether the partner owes the firm. So where the money withdrawn earned no profits, as pro-

Reference.[55]—The powers and duties of the referee are measured by the order of reference.[56]

Decree.[57]—The account should be determined and a finding made as to whether or not a balance exists in favor of one partner or the other.[58] After the relative credits and charges to which the parties are respectively entitled and liable have been adjusted, the assets will be distributed according to equitable principles.[59]

Apportionment of costs.[60]—In an equitable action for an accounting, the apportionment of costs rests in the sound discretion of the trial court.[61]

Opening or correcting settlement.[62]—Assumpsit cannot be used as a means of reviewing and revising a partnership settlement.[63]

(§ 7) F. Contribution and indemnity.[64]—Where, after dissolution, one partner pays a firm obligation, he can enforce contribution by his copartner or a deceased copartner's representatives.[65] And where, under statute, one partner alone is served in an action on a firm obligation and judgment is entered against him, he has a right, after payment of the judgment, to maintain an action to compel contribution by his copartner.[66]

§ 8. Limited partnerships.[67]—Failure to comply in any substantial particular with the statute relating to the formation of limited partnerships makes the partners generally liable.[68] A declaration against the members as general partners need not allege the reasons why they are generally liable.[69]

PARTY WALLS.[70]

Co-owners of a party wall in Iowa are owners in severalty, and hence neither can use the same beyond its center line.[71] The obligation of one to contribute to the cost of a wall erected by the other is measured by the agreement between them, if there is one,[72] but in the absence thereof, be becomes liable upon using the same.[73] Covenants respecting party walls are charges in the nature of an equitable lien upon fits by way of interest or otherwise are chargeable. Clausen v. Puvogel, 114 App. Div. 455, 100 N. Y. S. 49.

56. McElroy v. Whitney [Idaho] 88 P. 349. Where the court appoints a referee and authorizes and directs him to take an accounting of the business and transactions of the partnership, the parties are entitled to a statement from the referee of all the items of account between them and to have the same reported to the court, showing the items allowed and rejected in favor of and against each party. 59. Where the partnership assets amounted to the sum of $4,932.66, of which sum plaintiff contributed $4,232.66, and defendant contributed $700, the amount of money in the hands of the receiver and the amount to be collected by him must be paid to the parties in this proportion, after the payment of the costs and expenses of the action, the commissions of the receiver and the taxes which may be due. Wilson v. Wilson, 74 S. C. 30, 54 S. E. 227. Where a married partner held the legal title to land forming firm assets, which was subject to purchase-money and other mortgages, the right of his wife was in the equity of redemption only, and on a sale of the land, the proceeds must first be applied to the payment of the mortgages, then to the dower interest as ascertained, then to the payment of the debts of the firm, and then to a division of the balance between the members of the firm. 61. See 6 C. L. 948. Where on the dissolution of a partnership by the death of one partner, the surviving partner brings a friendly suit against the deceased partner's widow and heirs to wind up the partnership affairs, the defendants are entitled to their costs out of the estate and each party to the suit is entitled to a reasonable counsel fee to be paid out of the estate in addition to his taxable costs. 73. Where defendant constructed a party wall and plaintiff thereafter nailed the

the land [74] and run therewith, binding the successive owners,[75] especially if the agreement so provides.[76] Where, as a part of the purchase price, a vendee agrees to construct a party wall adjoining the vendor's remaining lot, a lien exists in Kentucky for the enforcement of the same,[77] and where he fails to erect the wall within the contract period, he is liable for resulting damages;[78] and, in an action to compel performance, the court may direct performance within a specified time and decree an alternative judgment for the cost of the same,[79] if the action is not barred by limitation.[80] In Iowa the statute does not commence to run against an action for contribution until the user denies his liability.[81] A co-owner cannot interfere with a legitimate use of a party wall by the other,[82] nor so use it himself as to injure the same [83] or his co-proprietor.[84] The unsuitableness of a party wall for a proposed new building is no ground for condemnation under the act of congress relating to unsafe walls.[85] manufactures, or compositions of matter, and that presumptively no two of these subjects are one invention. Inventions have been thus distinguished continuously since 1793, and the supreme court of the United States has frequently recognized the validity of this division.[87]

§ 2. Patentability. Subjects of an invention.[88]—The end or purpose sought to be acomplished by a device is not the subject of a patent;[89] a new and useful means for obtaining such end, or accomplishing such purpose, is.[90] While the patentability of a design does not depend on its aesthetic value,[91] still an article to be a proper subject for a design must be one which by artistic treatment in form and configuration may be given value from an aesthetic point of view.[92] In order to decide that a design is unpatentable, it is not necessary to find that it infringes an earlier one, for, to entitle an applicant to the benefit of the design, there must be an exercise of the inventive faculty.[93] Where the peculiarities of an applicant's design do not rise to the dignity of invention, the design is not patentable, although the peculiarities are such as to prevent the design from being regarded as a substitute for a design patented.[94] An improvement in a process and an improvement in a machine are entirely different things, and each may present subject-matter which is patentable.[95] If a process is old and well known, the product of such process must likewise be considered as old in the patentable sense, and is not patentable as a separate and distinct invention.[96]

In all patents invention as distinguishable from mechanical skill is essential.[97]

While the mere adjustability of parts does not constitute invention,[98] still the conversion of an abandoned machine, which was a failure, into one which is operative and successful, by the introduction of new and ingenious features, however simple, does constitute invention.[99] An increase in the size of an existing device to more completely fulfill its purpose does not constitute patentable invention.[1] It is not patentable invention merely to carry forward an invention shown in a prior machine by a change only in form, proportions, or degree, or the substitution of equivalents, doing substantially the same thing in the same way by substantially the same means, but with better results.[2] The mere adoption of well known methods of one act to another does not, as a general rule, involve invention;[3] nor is the discovery

3. The application of an old process or machine to a similar or analogous subject, with no change in the manner of applying it, and no result substantially distinct in its nature, will not sustain a patent, even if the new form of result has not before been contemplated. O'Rourke Engineering Const. Co. v. McMullen, 150 F. 338. Applying an old process to a new use is not invention. Baker v. Duncombe Mfg. Co. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 744. A patent for a material for making steam packing may involve invention, although a similar material had previously been used for other and wholly different purposes. Forsyth v. Garlock [C. C. A.] 142 F. 461. The

of a new and analogous function for an old machine patentable.[4] A patent will not fail because the principal advantages of the invention prove to be different from the one chiefly in the patentee's mind, if there be in the concept an actual advantage and the structure embodying it discloses patentable invention.[5] Where a patent discloses means by which a novel and successful result is secured, it is immaterial whether the patentee understands or correctly states the theory or philosophical principles of the mechanism which produces the new result.[6]

To constitute a combination, it is essential that there should be some joint operation performed by the elements, producing a result due to their joint and co-operating action, while in an aggregation there is a mere adding together of separate contributions, each operating independently of the other.[7] Unless the combination of well known elements accomplishes some new result, the mere multiplicity of elements does not make it patentable. So long as each element performs some old and well known function, the result is not patentable invention, but an aggregation of elements.[8] While a combination of old elements producing a new and useful result will be patentable, yet, where the combination is merely the assembling of old elements producing no new and useful result, invention is not shown.[9] Where the elements of a combination sought to be patented are well known, and, if not known in the combination described, are known in analogous combinations, the court is at liberty to determine whether there is any invention in using them in the exact combination claimed.[10] The substitution for an old element in a combination of an element performing a similar function, but constructed in a different way, does not render the combination itself patentable where there is no resultant change in the operation.[11] In such a case, although the substituted elements may be superior, the invention lies in the element and not in the combination.[12] A change in prior devices, in order to be patentable, must be made by transferring an old device to use in an entirely different and related act.[13] There being no change in the manner of applying it, and no result substantially distinct in its nature, the application of an old device or process to a similar or analogous subject is not patentable, even if the new form of result has not before been contemplated.[14] strengthening of iron castings by the insertion of wrought iron bars or rods in the process of making belongs in the casting or foundry art and not in the art in which the particular casting may be used, and the employment of the device in casting brake shoes, after its use for the same purpose in casting sleigh runners, annealing boxes, etc., is not an adoption of the process to a new art. 11. In re Hawley, 26 App. D. C. 324. It does not involve invention, so far as the combination is concerned, to use in a time-recording mechanism a record sheet having a removable service in combination with a stylus which removes a portion of said surface, although the record sheet itself may be novel. Id. Where in a rock crusher the combination of a crusher shaft, a core portion removably secured thereto, and a mantle portion removably secured to the core portion, is concededly unpatentable, the attachment of a pin and slot-fastening device of a former patent to retain the mantle on the case, is mere double use, and also an obvious substitution of substantial equivalents. 14. Millett v. Allen, 27 App. D. C. 70.

The form of contracts or proposals for contracts, devised or adopted as a method of transacting a particular class of insurance, is not patentable as an act.[15]

While utility [16] or commercial success [17] is not necessarily proof of invention, still, the question being otherwise doubtful,[18] it may help to determine the matter, increased efficiency being accepted as an important factor;[19] and it also is regarded as significant that there has been a recognized need of such an article as that of the patent, and that the facts of others to meet it have been without success which the patentee has attained only after continued experiment.[20] Invention may exist in substituting a new and different operating part in a machine, notwithstanding it does not constitute such an advance in the art as to lead the owner of the patent to discard old machines and use those of the patent. It may be enough that the substitution addresses itself to any considerable portion of the community and creates an opportunity for electing between different methods.[21]

Double patenting is not allowable.[22] The granting of a void patent for an improvement upon valid basic patents then pending on application cannot be held to impair the inventor's rights under the basic patents when granted.[23] Where an application for a basic patent is pending, the granting to the same inventor of a limited combination patent, of which the subject-matter of the basic patent is an essential element, is not an abandonment of the latter to the public.[24]

Novelty [25] is essential to all patents.[26] The novelty of a design is to be deter-

15. A form of proposed contract to be entered into with individuals desiring the benefit of burial insurance or guaranty, with blanks attached and readily separable therefrom, which, in addition to the ordinary draft for payment, show the several certificates required in order to provide, as far as practicable, against the perpetration of frauds upon the insurer or guarantor, is not of a patentable nature. Millett v. Allen, 27 App. D. C. 70. Semble, that a form of proposed contract to be entered into with individuals desiring the benefit of burial insurance or guaranty, with blanks attached and readily separable therefrom, which, in addition to the ordinary draft for payment, show the several certificates required in order to provide, as far as practicable, against the perpetration of frauds upon the insurer or guarantor, is unpatentable for want of novelty. The fact that a machine has met with instant favor and large sales may be sufficient to determine patentability in case of doubt thereof, but it cannot confer patentability on an unpatentable device. In re Thurston, 26 App. D. C. 315.

18. The utility, public acceptance, or magnitude of sales of a patented article can only be considered on the question of invention when such question is otherwise doubtful. Voightmann v. Weis & Ridge Cornice Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 848. Although the fact that a device has supplanted prior devices in the trade may turn the scale in favor of the existence of invention, where that question is in doubt, yet such fact has no weight where the want of patentable novelty is already reasonably clear. In re Garrett, 27 App. D. C. 19. The fact that a new device or construction may have displaced others by reason of its manifest superiority is material only when the question of patentable novelty is otherwise a matter of doubt. 35. Columbus Chain Co. v. Standard Chain Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 622. A patent will not be held void for anticipation by an unpatented machine on the oral testimony of witnesses, the accuracy of which depends upon their unaided recollection of events which for a successful machine is not void for anticipation, because a prior machine intended for a different purpose may possibly be capable of use as an inefficient substitute for the later machine.[36] A machine fully embodying a device subsequently patented by another does not lose its effects as an anticipation because its use was abandoned solely for the reason that the product in making which it was employed was not successful, where it is shown that the machine worked successfully and the maker did not abandon the invention embodied therein.[37] The fact that the alleged anticipating machines were not capable of successful practical working, because of objections as to minor matters of detail in construction, does not destroy their effect as anticipated.[38] A prior foreign patent will not invalidate a domestic patent if the invention is shown to have been made by the American patentee before the date of the foreign patent.[39] In determining the question of anticipation, an instrument known under the German law as a "Gebrauchsmuster," is not one, the filing of which charges any one with notice of its contents or which has the effect of a foreign [40] patent.

Prior public use [41] for two years before the filing of the application will defeat the right to the patent;[42] hence an inventor who has reduced his invention to practice is entitled to a period of two years in which to put the same in public use and on sale, without a forfeiture of his right to receive a patent.[43] It is not enough to defeat the patent that some one other than the patentee had conceived the invention before he did, or had not perfected it, so long as it had not been in public use, or described in some patent or publication, if the patentee was an original and independent inventor.[44] If the inventor uses his invention for profit, and not by way of experiment, it is a public use.[45] A patent is not invalidated because a machine like that of the patent was made and used by the patentee more than two years before the application was filed, where such use was for the purpose of experiment occurred twenty-five year previously, unless it is exceptionally clear and convincing. United Shirt & Collar Co. v. Beattie [C. C. A.] 149 F 736.

36. United Shirt & Collar Co. v. Beattie [C. C. A.] 149 F. 736. A patent is not anticipated by prior patents for devices which might by slight modifications have been made to perform the functions of that of the later patent, where it does not appear that the patentees had in mind their use or adoption to accomplish such result. 40. Steiner v. Schwarz, 148 F. 868.

41. NOTE: A "Gebrauchsmuster" is somewhat similar to a United States design patent, but it is not a patent. It protects a new construction without relation to its technical effect. In distinction from a United States design patent, a German Gebrauchsmuster protects not only the outer shape or appearance or artistic design of the model, but also the construction of the inner parts thereof. In examining a Gebrauchsmuster in the German Patent Office as to whether the same is to be registered or not, the title of the Gebrauchsmuster only is considered, since the latter only is made officially public by printing in the proper German publication.—From Steiner v. Schwartz, 148 F. 868.

only,[46] nor is such a public use which will defeat the patent because the product of the machine during the time was sold.[47] To defeat a patent, evidence of public use must be clear and convincing.[48]

Abandonment.[49]—Delay by an inventor in applying for a patent after he has reduced his invention to practice for the purpose of perfecting it, or testing its practical value, will not constitute an abandonment or laches which will defeat his right to a patent where, from some unknown cause, it was not successful in operation, although it subsequently develops that the trouble was due to external causes not affecting the utility or successful working of the invention;[50] but an inventor, having grasped an idea and put it in mechanical form, may not wait to secure a monopoly upon the broad thought until everything in the nature of a mere accessory improvement that makes it commercially better has been run out and perfected.[51] The mere omission of claims from an application will not operate as an abandonment.[52]

§ 3. Who may acquire patents.[53]—The patentee must be the true inventor.[54] Where two inventors are working contemporaneously, but independently, on the same invention, the one who first reduces his ideas to a definite form by means of a written description, model, or drawing, and obtains a patent therefor, is entitled to priority.[55] A patent for a machine is not invalid because of the fact that the patentee obtained the general conception of the machine from another, but without disclosure of any means for carrying the same into effect, which means the patentee himself devised and which constituted the only invention described and claimed in the patent;[56] and the fact that another than the patentee contributed to the mechanism necessary to make the invention operative does not affect the validity of any claims of the patent which do not cover the mechanism so supplied, either as a whole or in combination.[57] The right of one who conceives an invention to patent the same as the sole inventor is not lost because he lacks the mechanical skill to embody his invention in a machine, and employs another to construct such machine.[58]

§ 4. Mode of obtaining and claiming patents.[59]—If there is a serious doubt as to patentability, that doubt should be resolved in favor of the applicant, for, if his claim be denied, he has nothing with which he can go into court and attempt to enforce a lawful monopoly.[60] A process and an apparatus, when so dependent as to constitute a unitary invention, may be claimed in one and the same application, but otherwise when they constitute independent inventions.[61] Such inventions are presumptively independent inventions and the burden of proof is upon the applicant to prove that two statutory inventions constitute one unitary invention.[62]

Specification and description.[63]—The description must be so clear and exact as to enable one skilled in the art to which the alleged invention relates to make and use it without experiments of his own,[64] and if it be so vague and uncertain that no one can tell, except by independent experiments, how to construct the patented device, the patent is void.[65] Where the novelty consists in particular dimensions or material, the particular dimensions or material must be specified.[66] While a claim for a design patent, reciting, "substantially as shown," or "as shown and described," and accompanied by a drawing, is in a large class of cases sufficient, and is, in most cases, better in form than a detailed description, yet there are cases where such detailed description is not only permissible but necessary.[67] The claims must be for the invention described,[68] and where there are many devices on the market which closely resemble each other in appearance and structure, an applicant for a patent for a similar device must carefully limit and differentiate his claims in his application.[69] Although where two structures are not specifically the same, and the art does not warrant a generic claim, the language of the claims can be made precise and fittingly descriptive of each structure without the use of identical language, yet general terms may be used which apply equally to two structures which are not the same, as may be shown when those terms are read and construed in the light of the specifications behind them.[70] While the same language may be applied to two structures that are not the same, the employment of such identical language in two claims does not necessarily prove that there is an interference in fact.[71] In order to warrant the amendment of applications in respect of claims that there must be a basis for the amendment in the description and specifications of the original application,[72] and enlargements of an original specification are not permitted, which will interfere with other inventors who have entered the field in the meantime.[73] A new claim, within the invention described in the specification, may be inserted in an application by the applicant's attorney without the addition of a new oath,[74] or, where the specification of a pending application is broad enough to warrant the making of certain claims which are not made, the applicant instead of making such claims by amendment may at his election make them the subject of a new application, which in such case may fairly be considered a continuation of the first.[75]

The drawings are addressed to those skilled in the art, and must also be considered in connection with the claims and specifications and with each other; and a patent is not invalidated by a clerical mistake in a drawing, which, when so considered, would not mislead one skilled in the art to which it relates.[76] In an application for a design patent for a font of type, it is sufficient to furnish the conventional drawing accepted for years by the patent office, and it is not necessary, under the patent office rules relating to designs, to show or describe the type themselves.[77]

The cancellation of a claim while the application is pending does not affect the validity of a retained claim which is substantially the same,[78] although, if susceptible of two constructions, it will not be so construed as to cover the canceled claim.[79]

Abandonment of application.[80]—The statutory provision that the application shall be regarded as abandoned upon failure of the applicant to prosecute the same within two years after any action thereon does not apply, where two years have not elapsed after final action by the patent office on an original application, before the filing of a divisional application.[81]

Renewal of application.[82]

Interference.[83]—In interference proceedings the only question presented is which party was the first to invent or discover, conceding that there is a patentable invention.[84] This question is of course based upon the assumption that the invention claimed by each is similar.[85] The issues of an interference are to be construed in the light of the application of the party making the claims,[86] and an interference in fact depends chiefly upon the subject-matter disclosed.[87]

PATENTS—Cont'd.

The meaning given to the counts of an interference must be that intended by the party to the interference first making the claim.[88] The sworn preliminary statement required when an interference has been declared constitute the pleadings of the parties, and the parties should be held strictly to the dates given therein,[89] except in a few cases wherein the interest of the parties and the public will be best subserved by permitting dates earlier than those set forth in the preliminary statements to be proved, but in all cases this should be done under the supervision and with the approval of the patent office;[90] and it has been held to be a suspicious circumstance for a party, after seeing that his adversary's dates, set out in his preliminary statement, overcome his, to seek to prove earlier dates than those set out in his own preliminary statement.[91] The burden is upon the party questioning the correctness of the date given as the date of the oath to an application for a patent.[92] One is not entitled to inspect affidavits filed in connection with his rival's application where it appears that they do not relate to the claims in issue.[93] A motion to strike an application from the files for want of proper verification can only be sustained when supported by the clearest proof.[94] In an ex parte case, the decision of a primary examiner that a party has a right to make a claim is final, unless the commissioner, for good cause shown, under his supervisory powers, takes jurisdiction to review the question.[95] It is generally left to courts in a suit brought, after the issue of the patent, for infringement of a claim thus allowed, to determine whether the patentee ever had a right to make the claim.[96] If, however, an interference involving such claim be instituted, the rules of the patent office provide for an examination by the primary examiner of the question of the right of either party to make the claim.[97] If his decision be in the affirmative, the rules do not provide for an appeal to the

88. Podlesack v. McInnerney, 26 App. D. C. 399. Where the claims of the patent of the senior party to an interference are bodily incorporated into the junior party's application after the issue of the patent, for the purpose of provoking the interference, the counts of the issue thus formed are to be construed in the light of the specifications of the senior party's patent. Bourn v. Hill, 27 App. D. C. 291.

89. Parkes v. Lewis, 28 App. D. C. 1; Fowler v. Boyce, 27 App. D. C. 55. If the rule were otherwise, the rules which require the filing of statements before the records are opened for the inspection of the parties interested may as well be abrogated. Fowler v. Boyce, 27 App. D. C. 48. Where the patent office has refused to allow a party to an interference to file an amended preliminary statement, any attempt of such party to prove dates earlier than those set out in his preliminary statement is contrary to the rules of the patent office and to the general rules applicable to pleading in courts of law, and such testimony will be disregarded. Fowler v. McBerty, 27 App. D. C. 41. Where in his preliminary statement one of the parties to an interference claimed no earlier date than a date two months after the other party's constructive reduction to practice, and a motion to amend his preliminary statement by setting up dates of disclosure and actual reduction to practice earlier than those claimed by his adversary was denied, he is limited by his preliminary statement to a disclosure and reduction to practice at a date subsequent to his rival's record date, and failing to show that the latter is not entitled to that date, he is not entitled to an award of priority. Fowler v. Boyce, 27 App. D. C. 48.

examiners-in-chief.[98] The decision of a primary examiner that a party to an interference has the right to make a claim which is the same as a count of the issue of an interference will be reviewed by the court of appeals as an ancillary question to be considered in awarding priority of invention.[99] But where the examiners-in-chief and the commissioner have concurred in this decision, the court will not disturb their finding unless manifest error has been committed.[1] The first to conceive and make disclosure of an invention, being diligent in reducing it to practice, is entitled to priority over one who makes a prior reduction to practice.[2] Of course an inventor who is the first to conceive and disclose is under no obligation of diligence until just prior to the date when his rival enters the field.[3] There is no general rule as to what constitutes due diligence in reducing to practice, that being a question to be determined by all the facts and surrounding circumstances in the particular case.[4] The rules of law as to what constitutes a prior use, and what con-

2. A junior applicant in interference proceedings must, in order to overcome a decision against him, prove prior conception coupled with diligence, or prior conception and prior reduction to practice. Ball v. Flora, 26 App. D. C. 394; Bourn v. Hill, 27 App. D. C. 291. Where one of the parties to an interference stands on his record date, which antedates the date of the application of the other party, it is necessary, in order for the latter to prevail, to show an earlier conception, disclosure, and actual reduction to practice, or an earlier conception and disclosure, followed by diligence in the actual reduction to practice prior to his rival's record date. Fowler v. Boyce, 27 App. D. C. 48. The inventor who first reduces to practice is prior in right, unless the inventor who is the first to conceive was using reasonable diligence at the time of the second conception and the first reduction to practice. Parkes v. Lewis, 28 App. D. C. 1. The inventor who is first to conceive and disclose is entitled to priority, provided he has used reasonable diligence in adapting and perfecting his invention, even though his adversary is the first to reduce to practice actually or constructively. O'Connell v. Schmidt, 27 App. D. C. 77. An inventor, who, although the first to conceive, is the last to reduce to practice, and who is not exercising diligence when his opponents enter the field, is not entitled to priority. Laas v. Scott, 26 App. D. C. 354. The diligence required of an inventor is diligence rather in the reduction of his invention to practice, than in application to the patent office, or in manufacturing his device for public use. Rolfe v. Hoffman, 26 App. D. C. 336.

3. O'Connell v. Schmidt, 27 App. D. C. 77.

4. O'Connell v. Schmidt, 27 App. D. C. 77. By due diligence in reduction to practice is meant reasonable diligence and where a party to an interference has taken eleven months to accomplish a reduction to practice, he cannot be heard to say that his adversary who has taken only eight months is guilty of laches. Fowler v. McBerty, 27 App. D. C. 41. Where an inventor has conceived the idea and has embodied it in models, which, if tested, would amount to a reduction to practice, and has disclosed the invention to experts in the art, and, at the time his rival enters the field, is urging the acceptance of the invention in the trade, and where he files his application only six months later than his rival, he is exercising due diligence and is entitled to priority. O'Connell v. Schmidt, 27 App. D. C. 77. The fact that an inventor, who is the first to conceive, has made models which, if tested, would constitute a reduction to practice, and has shown these models to those skilled in the art, thus fully disclosing the invention and its practicability, should have considerable weight in determining the question of diligence. Id. Unexplained delay of a year held fatal. Anderson v. Wells, 27 App. D. C. 115. Unexplained delays of three years held fatal Parkes v. Lewis, 28 App. D. C. 1. An inventor of a complicated device, who attempts to construct a completed machine with his own hands during a period of over a year, and finally abandons the effort from lack of time and money, and immediately makes a model and drawings, is exercising due diligence. Davis v. Garrett, 28 App. D. C. 9. Where, in an interference case involving an improvement in buckles, it appeared that the junior party when testifying was unable to describe the invention in issue, that it was not clear from the testimony of the party to whom he claimed to have made disclosure and who made a buckle for him that the buckle so made embodied the invention or that it was anything more than an experimental model in the nature of an abandoned experiment, and that the only excuse of the junior party for a delay of three years between his alleged conception and the filing of his application was that another buckle for which he obtained patents at home and abroad was a better buckle, and he lacked the money to make an earlier application, it was held, affirming a decision of the commissioner, that the senior party was entitled to an award of priority. Gibbons v. Peller, 28 App. D. C. 530. The rule requiring diligence in reduction to practice is not satisfied by mere diligence in attempting to secure capital to manufacture and exploit the device invented. Laas v. Scott, 26 App. D. C. 354. If the expense of an experimental device is so great as to prevent an actual reduction to practice, it is the duty of the inventor to secure his right by a constructive reduction to practice by filing an application for a patent. Id. Where the testimony in an interference case shows that, during more than three years of inaction, one of the parties applied for six patents for other inventions, and that, while poor, he had available means to make an application for a patent for the invention in controversy, and it does not appear that he was working upon some closely related device, under conditions that stitutes a reduction to practice, are the same.[5] The same act or acts may or may not constitute a reduction to practice, modified, as they may be, by the special circumstances of the particular case.[6] To constitute a reduction to practice, the device constructed must be fashioned out of a material capable of actual use for the intended purpose;[7] but the size of the device does not affect the determination of the question of reduction to practice.[8] In the case of simple devices, it is not essential that actual tests of the invention be made in order to constitute a reduction to practice;[9] but except in the cases of simple inventions, the mere construction of a model does not constitute a reduction to practice, even if it is clearly sufficient to disclose the invention, and to enable those skilled in the art to understand it thoroughly.[10] Long delay in making use of an invention claimed to have been reduced to practice, or in applying for a patent, is a patent circumstance tending to show that the alleged reduction to practice was nothing more than an unsatisfactory or abandoned experiment; and this is especially the case where, in the meantime, the inventor has been engaged in the prosecution of similar inventions.[11] While the dismantling of an experimental machine after its trial does not necessarily prevent its construction and operation from having the effect of a reduction to practice, yet such a proceeding is sometimes an important and cogent circumstance in the determining of the fact whether the trial showed a successful reduction to practice, or amounted to nothing more than abandoned experiment,[12] and the same may be excused delay while it does appear that the real ground of delay as shown by his own evidence was that it was to his interest to hold his application until he could make an advantageous arrangement with some capitalist for the exploitation of the invention, he will be held to have lost the benefit of an earlier conception than that of his adversary, by his failure to exercise diligence in perfecting his invention at the time his rival entered the field. Turnhill v. Curtis, 27 App. D. C. 567.

5. Gilman v. Hinson, 26 App. D. C. 409.

6. Rolfe v. Hoffman, 26 App. D. C. 336; Andrews v. Nilson, 27 App. D. C. 451 In an interference case, where there were tests of the device embodying the invention by men of experience in the particular art to which the invention related, at a place equipped with everything necessary to enable continued and complete tests to be made, it was held that there had been a reduction to practice, in that the test showed the work of the invention to be complete, though the first device so made was not a commercial article. Id. A reduction to practice is not sufficiently shown by proof of various experiments in search of a particular process, and an approximation to that process. Bourn v. Hill, 27 App. D. C. 291. In order to reduce to practice a device for protecting low-tension telephone circuits from the injurious effects of unduly strong currents, it is sufficient to operate the device with currents such as would prevail in telephone circuits if the latter became crossed with wires carrying more current than is safe, and it is not necessary to actually operate it in a telephone circuit. Rolfe v. Hoffman, 26 App. D. C. 336.

7. Gilman v. Hinson, 26 App. D. C. 409.

8. If an experimental machine completely embodies the invention, and is capable of testing its efficiency to the full extent of its power, the mere fact that later manufactures to fill orders may be on a larger scale cannot impair its effect as constituting reduction to practice. Robinson v. Thresher, 28 App. D. C. 22. Where inventor and two expert witnesses testify fully as to construction and operation of device and that they had used it successfully several times, a reduction to practice is sufficiently proved and it is unnecessary that the facts upon which they base their conclusion as to the success of the device be of record. Seeberger v. Russell, 26 App. D. C. 344.

9. Rolfe v. Hoffman, 26 App. D. C. 336. A device for protecting low-tension electric circuits from injurious effects of unduly strong currents, is a simple device within the above rule. Id.

10. O'Connell v. Schmidt, 27 App. D. C. 77.

11. Gilman v. Hinson, 26 App. D. C. 409. A delay of two years and a half in filing an application for a patent is not sufficient to destroy the weight of proof of an actual reduction to practice, especially where it appears that drawings showing substantially the same construction as the original device were sent to the applicant's attorney more than a year before the filing of the application and before anyone else had entered the field. Seeberger v. Russell, 26 App. D. C. 344.

12. Robinson v. Thresher, 28 App. D. C. 22. The dismantling of an experimental machine by a large and prosperous company has more weight as showing the lack of success of the trial than it would if done by a poor inventor whose necessities compel him to utilize the parts for other purposes. Id. Although the fact that after an alleged successful operation of a device, the device was taken apart and one element never used again, is sufficient to warrant an inference that the test was not successful yet, when a reasonable and satisfactory explanation of such fact is given such an inference is unwarranted. Seeberger v. Russell, 26 App. D. C. 344.

said of certain failures to produce evidence.[13] A failure immediately to manufacture and put on the market a newly invented device does not afford any reasonable foundation for denying the date claimed at its inception, where the inventor is already engaged in disposing of a large stock of devices manufactured under former patents relating to the same subject-matter of which the new invention is an improvement.[14] The filing of an allowable application for a patent is equivalent to a reduction to practice,[15] and, for this purpose, a divisional application filed while the original application is pending in the patent office will be held to be continuation of the latter.[16]

The junior party to an interference has the burden of proving conception and disclosure of the invention in controversy earlier than his adversary's filing date, and either a reduction to practice prior to that date or due diligence in respect thereto at the date of the constructive reduction to practice by his adversary;[17] and this burden is substantially increased where a patent has been issued to his adversary,[18] prior to the filing of his application,[19] or where there are successive adverse decisions against him in the patent office.[20] It follows that no award of priority of invention can be made to a junior applicant in interference, unless he overcomes his rival's record date.[21] Where each of two parties to an interference claims a disclosure to the other, the presumption is in favor of the one who has a practical

13. In a case where the units of a machine are proved to be old and practical, severally considered, and where the only novelty is the relative mechanical construction of the heal of the casing of one machine and the usual parts of the other machine whereby the one shall be put inside of the other, it would be obvious from the mechanical construction shown in a drawing that each unit would, in that new arrangement, practically perform its usual functions; but, where a test of an experimental machine has been carefully made by a large manufacturing company, the failure to call as a witness the enigineer who had charge of such test has great weight as tending to show that the test was unsuccessful. The junior applicant where the question is one of originalty, and not priority, must sustain the burden of proof. Cleveland v. Wilkin, 27 App. D. C. 311. Reduction to practice prior to the filing date of his adversary, or a prior conception followed by due diligence in reducing to practice. Gibbons v. Peller, 28 App. D. C. 530. Where, in an interference case involving the invention of a display can with two openings, with removable plates, the real parties to which are a biscuit company, the assignee of the senior party, and a can company, the assignee of the junior party, it appears that the senior party, who was the advertising manager of the biscuit company, had drawings made, some of which showed such a can, which was a modification of a can then in use; which drawings were turned over to the can company, and the latter thereupon caused cans to be made for the biscuit company by its employe, the junior party, such cans having certain means of fastening not disclosed by the drawings; and that thereafter, the can company having failed to procure a long-term contract with the biscuit company for the manufacture of the new cans, the junior party applied for a patent, a heavy burden is on the junior party to show that what he did was his independent invention, and if the testimony fails to so show, the senior party is entitled to an award of priority. Larkin v. Richardson, 28 App. D. C. 471.

18. A junior applicant in interference proceedings, who has filed his application with knowledge of the issue of a patent to the senior party, has a heavy burden to sustain in order to prove his case. Bourn v. Hill, 27 App. D. C. 291. An applicant in interference who files his application after the granting of the patent has the burden of proving his prior right beyond a reasonable doubt. French v. Halcomb, 26 App. D. C. 307. Burden is not discharged by merely raising a doubt as to which party had the first conception of the invention. Id.

19. The burden of proof imposed upon a junior applicant in interference proceedings is not increased by the granting of a patent to his opponent while his application is pending. Laas v. Scott, 26 App. D. C. 354. The junior party to an interference is not required to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt, but need prove it only by a preponderance of the evidence, where his application was pending when a patent was granted to his adversary. knowledge of the art, and against the one who has not such knowledge.[22] A disclosure, in order to be effectual, must be shown to have been full and clear as to all the essential elements of the invention, and such as was sufficient in itself to enable the party to whom the disclosure was made to give the invention practical form and effect without the exercise of invention on his part.[23] In a contested case in the patent office, the court has no power to issue a subpoena duces tecum.[24] On the taking of depositions for use in a contested case before the patent office, only material, relevant testimony will be admitted.[25] There is no reasonable difference between a statement by a witness fixing a date by reference to an original paper in the possession of a person within the jurisdiction, or to a regular business entry in such person's books, and a statement fixing a date by something calculated to fix it in mind, claimed to have happened to the witness, or in the community, about the same time.[26] The proper method of proving the state of the weather at a given place at a given time is to produce official records of the variations of the thermometer near such place.[27] Uncorroborated testimony of the parties is insufficient.[28] The rule that the failure of a party to an interference to rebut the sworn statement of his adversary, that he had fully disclosed the invention to him furnishes strong evidence that the latter is not the prior inventor, does not apply where there is no evidence of a complete disclosure, and merely unsatisfactory evidence of a partial disclosure.[29] General rules as to admissions apply.[30] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence are shown in the notes.[31]

Id.

27. Ball v. Flora, 26 App. D C. 394.

28. The depositions of parties to an interference, unless corroborated by independent circumstances established by the evidence, are clearly insufficient to prove conception of the invention. Podlesak v. McInnerney, 26 App. D. C. 399. The practically uncorroborated evidence of the inventor himself cannot be accepted on an interference proceeding as proof of conception. French v. Halcomb, 26 App D. C. 307. The testimony of joint applicants who are parties to an interference is insufficient to support their case if uncorroborated. Taylor v. Lowrie, 27 App. D. C. 527. Where the testimony of a party to an interference as to the date of his conception is clearly corroborated by a witness whose intelligence and capacity to understand and explain a disclosure which was made to him are apparent, and who, although he is deeply interested in the result, is unimpeached, and where the surrounding circumstances tend to support the claim of such party to the date of conception alleged, and none are inconsistent with it, there is sufficient evidence to support his claim. Turnbull v. Curtis, 27 App. D. C. 567.

29. Podlesak v. McInnerney, 26 App. D. C. 399.

30. If there is any doubt that an invention involved in interference was disclosed by certain specifications to the perception of one of the applicants, who prepared a proposal to meet their requirements, such doubt is removed by the applicant's admission on the witness stand that they suggest the subject matter of the interference. Henry v. Doble, 27 App. D. C. 33. The fact that the senior party to an interference, who had assigned his rights to another for royalties, and who had sworn to the application in interference, but who refused to testify in the proceeding when requested by his assignee, had after his assignment and at a time when he was seeking higher royalties from his assignee intimated to the assignee that he was not the real inventor of the issue, will not, of itself, prevent an award of priority to the senior party. Gibbons v. Peller, 28 App. D. C. 530.

31. Where the junior party in interference proves that he was the first to conceive the invention, that he disclosed it to others, who fully understood it and could have reduced it to practice from his explanation, that he made accurate drawings, that his knowledge was imparted to the senior party's brother in-law, who got possession of the drawings, and that his delay in applying for a patent was caused by the fraud of the senior party, the latter's brother-in-law, and others, such junior party is entitled to priority. Shuman v. Beall, 27 App. D. C. 324. A memorandum in a notebook produced by an applicant in an interference proceeding and alleged to prove prior conception is insufficient that the entry was seen by no one, and there is no corroborative evidence on the point except the statement of a witness that he saw the applicant produce such a book. French v.

The doctrine of res judicata, or estoppel by former judgment, applies to adjudication made in the patent office, and this is especially true of interference cases.[32]

Appeal and review.[33]—Only the parties appealing can have a hearing in the appellate court.[34] One is entitled to all the time allowed by the rules for taking and perfecting his appeal regardless of consequences.[35] Rules of practice in interference cases are necessary and should not be disregarded; and the court of appeals does not sit to review the rulings of the commissioner of patents in discretionary matters,[36] or decisions of the examiner of interferences not lawfully appealed from.[37] It is only from the rejection of a claim that an appeal will lie.[38] An appeal from a decision of the primary examiner upon a motion to dissolve an interference, holding that the party had the right to make the interfering claims, may be prohibited by the rules of the patent office without infringing the right of appeal in interferences given by the Federal statutes, since the appeal therein provided for must be deemed limited to final decisions upon the question of priority of invention.[39] Although it is the better practice usually, in cases where the examiners-in-chief have erred in refusing to entertain an appeal, to require the commissioner of patents to direct them to entertain the appeal, yet, in cases of general public interest, and Halcomb, 26 App. D. C. 307. Obtaining a more attractive exterior, or securing a more salable article, does note prove originality of conception. In re Hoey, 28 App. D. C. 416. Where an issue in an interference case is specific, and has only been held patentable after such hesitation in the patent office, any oral testimony by one of the parties to show the invention to have been his must correspond in every detail with the requirements of the issue. 33. See 6 C. L. 966.

34. Where one of three parties to an interference fails to appeal from a decision of the examiners-in-chief of the patent office adverse to him, so that under rule 132 of the patent office his claims which were involved in the interference stand finally rejected, he can have no standing in this court on an appeal by one of the other parties from the commissioner's decision. Fowler v. Boyce, 27 App. D. C. 48.

35. An appeal will not be dismissed because the appellant has availed himself of all the time allowed by the rules for taking and perfecting his appeal, although by so doing he necessarily prevents the hearing of the appeal until after the summer recess of the court. Jones v. Starr, 26 App. D. C. 64.

36. Jones v. Starr, 26 App. D. C. 64. The granting or refusal by the commissioner of patents, of a motion by one of the parties to an interference for leave to retake testimony which had been suppressed for irregularities in taking it is within the discretion of the commissioner, and cannot be reviewed on appeal by the court of appeals. Id. As an interlocutory proceeding the court of appeals cannot review it and it is not one which should be reviewed as necessary or proper in connection with the final decision of priority. Id. Whether leave shall be given to amend a preliminary statement is not reviewable in this court, save possibly, in a case of palpable abuse of that discretion. Neth v. Ohmer, 27 App. D. C. 319. This court cannot control the action of the commissioner of patents as to the extent of oral argument to be permitted at a hearing of an interference. Sobey v. Holsclaw, 28 App. D. C. 65. The exercise of the discretion of the commissioner of patents should not be disturbed save where that discretion has palpably been abused. Davis v. Garrett, 28 App. D. C. 9.

37. Jones v. Starr, 26 App. D. C. 64.

38. There is no statute providing for an appeal to this court from the ruling of the commissioner of patents, or of any of the subordinate tribunals affirming the patentability of a claimed invention. It is only from the decision adverse to the patentability of a claim that an appeal will lie. Sobey v. Holsclaw, 28 App. D. C. 65. Neither the rules of the patent office, nor any section of the Revised Statutes, provide for or permit an appeal from a decision of a primary examiner holding that the claims which are the issue of an interference are patentable, and that the senior party had the right to make the claims, when such decision is rendered after the hearing of a motion to dissolve the interference. Id. Semble, that the decision of a primary examiner as to the patentability of an invention should not be reversed by the commissioner, unless the error is so gross that it would be a wrong to the public to permit the patent to issue. A mere difference of opinion is not enough. Id. A ruling by an examiner that an applicant for a design patent cannot have a certain claim, but must offer a claim suggested by the examiner, is, in effect, a rejection of the claim, and, if repeated, entitles the applicant to an appeal to the examiners-in-chief. In re Mygatt, 26 App. D. C. 366.

39. U. S. Rev. St. §§ 482, 483, 4904, 4909, construed. United States v. Allen, 27 S. Ct. 141, afg. 26 App. D. C. 8.

where the case if sent back would undoubtedly come up again, the court of appeals will entertain an appeal from a decision of the commissioners upholding the action of the examiners-in-chief.[40] Only matters necessarily involved in the decision appealed from,[41] and properly saved for review,[42] will be considered by the appellate court. In interference proceedings the questions of identity of invention,[43] operativeness of the device [44] and of patentability,[45] will not ordinarily be considered by the court of appeals. Though in extreme cases, where palpable error has been committed, a decision of the patent office holding identity of invention between the devices of the parties to an interference may be reversed.[46] But the court, although

41. The propriety of an interlocutory decision in the patent office, relating to practice therein, held not to be necessarily involved in the consideration of an appeal from the final decision on the merits. Davis v. Garrett, 28 App. D. C. 9. Where the patent office decides that an invention is patentable, and issues a patent therefor, uch decision is binding on this court, n an appeal by one of the parties to an interference subsequently declared from a decision of the commissioner awarding priority of invention to his adversary. Kreag v. Green, 28 App. D. C. 437. Where a party to an interference case is admittedly not entitled to an award of priority of invention, for the reason that in his preliminary statement he fails to allege conception prior to the filing date of his adversary, he will not be heard on an appeal from an adverse decision of the commissioner, to question the patentability of the invention of the issue. Potter v. McIntosh, 28 App. D. C. 510. Where, on appeal to the commissioner of patents from a decision of the examiners-in-chief rejecting an application for a patent, a new and additional claim is suggested by the applicant, but not acted upon by the commissioner, this court, on an appeal from his decision, is not at liberty to pass upon such claim. In re Garrett, 27 App. D. C. 19. Where, on appeal to the commissioner of patents from a decision of the examiners-in-chief rejecting an application for a patent, a new and additional claim is suggested; Semble, that the proper procedure is for the applicant to request that his application be remanded to the examiner with leave to amend by inserting such claim as an additional one, or as a substitute for others. Id. Where the junior party to an interference is limited by his preliminary statement to dates of disclosure and actual reduction to practice subsequent to the senior party's record date, and he fails to show any reason why the senior party is not entitled to his record date, testimony not admissible under the junior party's preliminary statement will not be reviewed on appeal. Fowler v. Boyce, 27 App. D. C. 55.

42. An assignment of errors on an appeal from a decision of the commissioner of patents, that the commissioner "erred in many material respects," will not be considered. In re Frasch, 27 App. D. C. 25. Where an appellant in an interference case, in his assignment of errors, does not challenge the decision of the commissioner of patents on the question of priority of invention, he will, to that extent, be presumed to have acquiesced in the decision against him. Bechman v. Southgate, 28 App. D. C. 405.

43. The question of identity of invention is in general one which should be settled by the experts of the patent office, and not by this court, and the rules of the patent office, established under legislative authority, provide how this is to be done. The proceeding for a dissolution of an interference for want of identity in the several devices of the parties is collateral to the interference itself, and independent thereof, and does not enter into the consideration of the question of priority of invention, when the latter question is brought to this court. Parkes v. Lewis, 28 App. D. C. 1. The decision of the expert tribunals of the patent office in respect of identity of invention will ordinarily be accepted as conclusive, where the question is whether the application of one of the parties in interference is broad enough, in the terms of its specifications and claims, to embrace the invention of the other, and especially where the invention is one of elaborate and complicated mechanism. Bechman v. Southgate, 28 App. D. C. 405.

44. Duryea v. Rice, 28 App. D. C. 423.

45. The question of patentability is not ordinarily regarded as open on appeal to this court in an interference case, but is to be regarded as conclusively established by the commissioner of patents. Orcutt v. McDonald, 27 App. D. C. 228. Although this court will, on an appeal from a decision of the commissioner awarding priority, refuse to affirm the decision if there clearly appears to be a lack of patentable invention, yet, where the primary examiner has held claims to be patentable, and the examiner of interferences and the examiners-in-chief have omitted or declined to call the attention of the commissioner of patents to the unpatentability of the issue of an interference, or where the commissioner has declined to review the decision of the primary examiner, after his attention has been called to the alleged unpatentability of the issues, the court will hold the question of patentability to be settled. Sobey v. Holsclaw, 28 App. D. C. 65. In an interference proceeding, wherein one of the parties, who was unsuccessful in a former interference, upon the case going back to the patent office made amended and broader claims and was successful there in another interference then declared, the patentability of the new claims cannot be considered by this court, even though they seem rather inconsistent with the views apparently controlling the earlier proceedings in the patent office and the position then assumed by such party. Blackford v. Wilder, 28 App. D. C. 535.

46. Podlesak v. McInnerney, 26 App. D. C. 399. Such a case is not presented where it appears that the assignee and employer of the opinion that error has been committed, may refuse to hold that there is no interference in fact, and may send the case back to the patent office for further consideration.[47] The question whether a description in a design case is a proper one is not reviewable in the court of appeals, except in an extraordinary case.[48] Where, on appeal from a decision of the commissioner awarding priority of invention, it is assigned as error that he made his decision without first deciding as to the question of patentability, it is sufficient to show that, in making his decision, he adopted the views of the subordinate tribunals of the patent office after the question of patentability had been repeatedly raised.[49] On an appeal from the decision of the commissioner rejecting a claim which has been added by amendment, the burden is on the applicant to show that the claim is within the description of his original application.[50] Unanimity in the patent office tribunals imposes upon the appellant here the burden of showing very clearly that the commissioner erred in the final decision appealed from.[51] A case must be a very clear one to justify an appellate court in affirming a decision on motion and in advance of the hearing upon the printed record.[52] The hearing on a motion on appeal to dismiss or affirm will not be postponed, unless the applicant's good faith and excuse for any delay be shown.[53] Records to appeal should not be encumbered with unnecessary recitals, and when it is made plain that such is the case, they will be stricken out.[54] On an appeal from a decision of the commissioner of patents awarding priority of invention in an interference case, decisions of the patent office upon motion for dissolution of the interference in favor of the appellant, who contested the motions, are improperly included in the transcript of the record in this court, as are, also, copies of patents unnecessary for the determination of the issues presented here, and copies of briefs filed by the parties in the patent office.[55] General expressions of opinion in affidavits in support of a motion for a rehearing before the commissioner of patents, after a rejection by him of an application for a patent, in respect to the patentability of the device for which a patent is sought, are entitled to no weight.[56] An appeal to the court of appeals in an interference case is not a proceeding in equity, and the statutory provisions providing for relief by a bill in equity where the patent has been finally refused do not apply. It is a proceeding at law, and hence a decision of the supreme court of the United States as to the statute referred to does not apply.[57] After an appeal from the decision of the examiners-in-chief, a motion to transmit an interference to the primary examiner will only be enter-of the junior and unsuccessful party, after the latter saw his rival's application and drawings, filed the junior party's application with specifications reading very much like those of the senior party. Bechman v. Southgate, 28 App. D. C. 405.

Decision affirmed on motion where it appeared that appellee was entitled to an award of priority upon the record dates of the parties as disclosed by the record, that the record contained no testimony, but showed that the appellant's testimony was suppressed for irregularities in taking it, and that the appellate court, from no possible viewpoint, would be justified in considering such testimony were it before the court. tained by the commissioner of patents, when it appears that a clear and unmistakable error has been committed in the prior decision.[58] One is entitled to pursue all the statutory remedies afforded.[59]

Suit in equity to secure patent.[60]—The statute creating the court of appeals for the District of Columbia does not, by implication, repeal the law giving a rejected applicant a right to obtain a patent by a bill in equity.[61] A suit by an unsuccessful applicant to compel the issuance of a patent to him is not an appeal from the proceedings in the patent office or the decision of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, but is one of original equity jurisdiction.[62] The decision of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia or an appeal from the commissioner of patents does not constitute an adjudication which precludes the maintenance of a suit in equity by one of the parties against the other to obtain a patent.[63]

§ 5. Letters patent.[64]—A patentee is not obliged to state all the objects of his invention, but he is protected in all the beneficial uses thereof within its scope.[65] Where a patent for a material to be used for a stated purpose involved invention, it is not necessarily rendered invalid by the fact that the patentee also suggests its use for a different purpose, for which alone it would not be patentable.[66] No general rule can be laid down by which to determine when a given invention or improvement shall be embraced in one, two, or more patents. The commissioner of patents is vested with a discretion in determining whether or not to require a division of claims for a process and an apparatus,[67] the inclination being to resolve all doubts as to whether more than one invention is embraced in one patent in favor of the patentee;[68] and, unless abused, the exercise of this discretion will not be reversed by the court of appeals.[69]

Construction and limitation of claims.[70]—Nothing is patented except what is specifically covered by the claims required by statute,[71] though it is possible this rule might be modified where by reason of matters not claimed the device has attained commercial success.[72] The presumption is that an inventor intends to protect his invention broadly, and consequently the scope of a claim should not be restricted beyond the ordinary meaning of the words, save for the purpose of saving it.[73] The claims must be read in the light of the specifications and drawings [74]

S. Rev. St. and, if there successful, could invoke relief under § 4918, of U. S. Rev. St. Jones v. Starr, 26 App. D. C. 64.

Where a patent has been granted as filed, no prior art being cited, and the element in controversy in the interference is narrowly claimed in some of the claims and broadly in others, and where the application upon which the patent was issued was pending with the application with which it becomes involved in interference, and where no motion is made to avoid the interference by calling the attention of the patent office to the claimed fact that element of the claim is limited to such element when made of a material having certain characteristics; and where the invention may be carried out by the use of the element with or without the limiting qualification, the issue should be construed as it reads, and free from nar-

and the other claims,[75] but being unambiguous, the court has no power to either change or enlarge them by reference to the specification.[76] The claims should be construed, where they reasonably may be, to cover the entire invention of the patentee; and, where a patent contains several claims, some of which are limited to details, the others are prima facie, not to be restricted by insisting that they contain as necessary elements the particulars which are specifically covered elsewhere.[77] Where a patent includes claims for a process and also for the product of such process, the latter are to be construed in connection with and are limited by the scope of the former.[78] Where the claims of a patent for a machine refer generally to "means" for accomplishing a specified result or movement, without claiming such means, they are not limited by a description of particular means in the specification given for the purpose of explaining the mode in which the patentee contemplates applying the principle of his invention.[79] The words "substantially as specified," at the end of a claim for a combination, refer to the whole claim, and import nothing into it not already there, either to narrow it so as to escape anticipation, or to broaden it so as to establish infringement.[80] The claims of a patent as allowed must be construed with reference to the action of the patent office thereon and the prior art;[81] they are not affected by a mere change in the wording at the instance of the patent office which leaves the substance unchanged, but, if narrowed in scope, and so accepted by the applicant, he is bound thereby.[82] Various constructions placed upon patents are stated in the notes.[83]

Pioneer invention.[84]—A primary invention is "one which performs a function never performed by any earlier invention."[85] A secondary invention is one row encumbrances and the senior party who has a patent may not be heard to ask that his claim be rewritten so that it may prevail in the interference. Id. In machine construction, the expression "mounted on" seems to have an ordinary meaning. The thing mounted upon another must be borne or supported by it. Mere riding in or over another in a slot for the purpose, although operating in connection therewith, is not equivalent to being mounted thereon. In re Duncan, 28 App. D. C. 457.

which performs a function previously performed, but in a substantially different way.[86] A pioneer invention is entitled to a generic claim, and may also include specific claims in the same patent, and in such case the broad claims are not prima facie to be restricted by reading into them the specific devices claimed in the narrower ones.[87] A patentee is entitled to the protection of the doctrine of equivalency in proportion to the nature of the advance which his invention indicates.[88] One who selects and combines elements from the inventions of others into a new structure, adapted to accomplish the old result, is entitled to a patent only for his own particular form of adaptation, and hence is not entitled to the doctrine of equivalents.[89] The word "equivalent" as applied to a chemical action, may mean a fluid which is "equally good" with that specified in the patent.[90]

§ 6. Duration of patent right. Surrender and reissues.[91]—By statute, there being substantial identity of the invention as covered by the claims,[92] an American patent expires with a previous foreign patent to the same invention.[93] A prior patent in a foreign country for a minor part of a broad or basic invention is not for the same invention as a subsequent United States patent covering both the minor parts and the broad main invention, and such foreign patenting of a part does not so affect the whole that the expiration of the foreign patent terminates the whole of the American patent.[94] The statutory provision, that a United States patent shall expire at the same time as a prior foreign patent for the same invention, has reference to the legal term of the foreign patent as appears on its face at the time of the issuance of the United States patent, and the latter is not further limited by the subsequent lapse or forfeiture of any portion of such legal term of the foreign patent by the failure to comply with a condition subsequent, such as the payment of additional fees at stated intervals.[95] The 1897 amendment to this statute did not affect patents previously issued either to their validity or length of term,[96]

nor did the amendment of 1903 affect the term of patents for inventions previously patented in a foreign country, but only their validity, and did not opreate to revive such a patent which had previously expired under the law as it originally stood before amendment.[97] On the expiration of a patent for a combination, the use of such combination becomes free to the public, notwithstanding the fact that it contains as one of its elements a device covered by another patent to the same patentees which has not expired.[98]

Where a reissue is sought upon the ground of defects in the original patent, the right must be exercised promptly upon discovering the error.[99] A reissue must be one in fact, and not an additional patent on something neither shown nor described in the original application;[1] and on an application for a reissue on the ground that, by mistake, the claim of such patent does not fully cover the actual invention, where it appears that the same invention is set forth in the specifications and claims of the original patent, that the applicant has exercised due diligence in discovering his mistake and returning to the patent office, that there are not intervening rights, and that there is no fraud, a reissue with a broader claim is permissible.[2] The consideration of a claim in an application for the reissue of a patent should be governed by the same rules as would be involved if the claim was presented by an amendment to the application as originally filed.[3] That the reissue was unauthorized or that some of the claims incorporated therein are invalid does not affect the invalidity of claims identical with those of the original.[4] The oath of an applicant, filed with this application for a reissue, should count for something, and cannot be entirely ignored but must be traversed by the patent office.[5]

§ 7. Disclaimer and abandonment.[6]—During the two year period, neither forfeiture nor abandonment can be presumed but must be proved.[7]

§ 8. Titles in patent rights and license, conveyance, or transfer thereof. In general.[8]—The constitution in the interests of invention grants to the patentee the absolute right to exclude or debar the world from making, using and selling his device, and congress cannot interfere with this right.[9] Having the absolute power of complete exclusion, the proprietor may exclude, conditionally or in part, by imposing limits as to time, place, price, or person.[10] He may deal arbitrarily, may sell or withhold for sale, vend to one at one price and to another at a different price, permit use in one state and not in another, give reasons or not, or deal fairly or unfairly, and in doing all or any of these, he is within his right, until the patent expires or is avoided, or the articles pass beyond the limits of his monopoly.[11] He may even bring nonpatented articles within his monopoly by providing that the patented article shall only be sold in connection therewith;[12] but he cannot be permitted by means of his royalties to create a fund for crushing lawful opposition, destroying legitimate and proper competition, and restraining trade and commerce, not only in the patented articles themselves but all others competing with them,[13] and this is especially true in districts where the patent has been declared to be invalid.[14]

Patent rights as between employer and employe.[15]—When one conceives the principle or plan of an invention, and employs another to perfect the details and realize his conception, although the latter may make valuable improvements therein, such improved results belong to the employer.[16] An express contract by an employe to assign to his employer, in consideration of the employment, all or part of any inventions discovered by him during the term of the contract, is not contrary to public policy,[17] and is valid,[18] and specifically enforceable in equity[19] if definite in its terms.[20] An agreement by an employe to give his employer "the full benefit and enjoyment" of any and all inventions which he might make pertaining to the employer's business imports an agreement for a shop right or license to use such inventions merely.[21]

Royalties.[22]—In order to render one liable for an accounting under a royalty contract, there must exist a contract relation between the parties;[23] hence a license being rescinded by mutual agreement, the licensee is relieved from further liability to acount for and pay royalties.[24] In the absence of some trust or fiduciary relation, mere failing to pay royalties under a contract does not give one the right to an accounting in equity.[25] A royalty contract is not in restraint of trade by which the licensee agrees that in the event of his terminating his obligation to pay royalties as therein provided, he will not, for the life of the patents covering the machine, which he is licensed to use, employ in his business any like machine.[26]

Transfer.[27]—The general rules of contract law apply to contracts transferring interests in patents.[28] An agreement to assign future inventions is enforceable against the inventor and an assignee who takes with knowledge of the assignment.[29] One who takes a promise of an assignment in a patent on conditions to be performed by him, and he fails to wholly perform such conditions and abandons the contract, he is estopped to claim an interest in the patent finally obtained,[30] though he may recover money paid under such conditions.[31] Within the meaning of assignments, a subsequent patent not infringing a former one, it is regarded as a new patent.[32] That the owners of a patent organize a corporation to which they assign all their interests does not terminate the liability of one of the owners under the contract by which he acquired an interest in the patent.[33] Under the statute an assignment of a patent is void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee without notice, unless it is recorded within three months from its date.[34] The acknowledgement of an assignment relates to the date of the assignment.[35] Breach of concurrent collateral undertaking does not bar termination of contract under the conditions thereof.[36] The constructions placed on various assignments are shown in the notes.[37]

Until congress legislates upon the subject, the states may make such reasonable regulations concerning the transfer of patent rights as is deemed necessary to protect its citizens from fraud.[38]

The jurisdiction of equity does not extend to a suit for false representations as to the validity of a patent owned by the plaintiff, nor as to his title thereto, which involves no breach of trust or contract.[39] An action cannot be maintained against an individual to restrain violation of a contract of assignment of patent rights, entered into between plaintiff and a corporation, though defendant is in control of the corporation.[40] The general rules of practice apply to actions on notes given for patent rights.[41]

Licenses.[42]—A license may be created by parol and be established by clear implication from proven facts and circumstances.[43] The seller of a machine intended to be used in connection with a device covered by a patent owned by him, and which is inoperative without such device, impliedly grants the right to the purchaser to use it and is estopped to maintain a suit to enjoin such use as an infringement of the patent.[44] The manufacture and sale by a corporation for use of an article in which there was a device covered by a patent owned by its president carries an implied license under such patent.[45] A license to use a patented invention that does not contain words importing assignability is a grant of a mere personal right to the licensee, which does not pass to the licensee's heirs or representatives, and which cannot be transferred to another without the express consent of the licensor.[46] A continuing assignable quality, however, may be given to a licensee to use a patented invention originally unassignable, by facts and circumstances and the conduct of the parties during the continuance of the license.[47] An exclusive license to

v. Cook, 107 Tenn. 499, 64 S. W. 720, 62 L. R. A. 174. The courts of some other states, having like questions before them, have held their statutes void. Hollida v. Hunt, 70 Ill. 109, 22 Am. Rep. 63; Crauson v. Smith, 37 Mich. 309, 26 Am. Rep. 514; Wilch v. Phelps, 14 Neb. 134, 15 N. W. 361; State v. Lockwood, 43 Wis. 405.

The circuit court of appeals of the eighth circuit, in Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank, 145 F. 344, has held a statute of Arkansas upon this same subject void because of its discrimination between articles of property of the same class or character, based only on the fact that the property discriminated against was protected by a patent granted by the United States. In the opinion in the case, authorities upon the subject are cited and commented upon. Among the cases cited are Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 Law. Ed. 1115, and Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 Law. Ed. 565. These cases are not in conflict with Allen v. Riley, 27 S. Ct. 95, nor do they cover the question before the court in the latter case. The cases of Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 Law. Ed. 1115, and Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 Law. Ed. 565, refer to tangible property which has been manufactured and came into existence under a patent and the case of Allen v. Riley, 27 S. Ct. 95, relates to provisions which are to accompany an assignment of intangible rights, growing out of a patent.

To uphold the kind of a statute considered in Allen v. Riley, 27 S. Ct. 95, is by no means to authorize any state to impose terms which, possibly, in the language of Mr. Justice Davies, in Ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss. 309, Fed. Cas. No. 11,932, "would result in a prohibition of the sale of this species of property within its borders, and in this way nullify the laws of congress which regulate its transfer, and destroy the power conferred upon congress by the constitution." Such a statute would not be a reasonable exercise of the powers of the state.—From Allen v. Riley, 27 S. Ct. 95, 97, 98.

Instructions: In an action on notes given for a patent right for a fuel-saving device in which defendant pleaded false representations and denied that the device was of any practical utility, the court, on request, should instruct that, unless it was established that the device was of no practical value with any kind of coal, they should find for plaintiff on the issue of utility. Clark Co. v. Rice, 127 Wis. 451, 106 N. W. 231. Where in an action on a note given for a patent right, the question of the utility of the patented device was in issue, an instruction that the jury must confine their inquiry as to utility to the purposes named in the patent and those only, without stating such purpose was misleading, although the jury were allowed to take the patent to their room and construe it for themselves. 54. Benbow-Brammer Mfg. Co. v. Heffron-Tanner Co., 144 F. 429.

55. The offer by defendant of a copy of an application for a patent which shows a device infringing a prior patent with a

the majority of the stock of a corporation, who controls its affairs and who transfers to it certain patents in violation of a trust under which they had been conveyed to him by the owners, is equally liable with the corporation for its infringement of the patents by the use of the patented devices.[56] The issuance of a patent raises a presumption of dissimilarity between it and prior patented devices.[57] Where the whole substance of the invention may be copied in a different form, it is the duty of the courts and juries to look through the form for the substance of the invention, for that which entitled the inventor to a patent, and which the patent was designed to secure and where there is identity in such particulars, there is infringement;[58] hence if two machines be substantially the same and operate in the same manner, though they may differ in form, proportion, and utility, they are the same in principle.[59] The use of mechanical equivalents will not avoid infringement.[60] Neither the joinder of two elements into an integral part accomplishing the purpose of both and no more, nor the separation of one integral part into two, together doing precisely or substantially what was done by the single element, will evade a charge of infringement.[61] Where in the alleged infringing machine the parts have merely been rearranged by transferring their different functions, while the principle of operation remains the same as in the patented machine, the recombination as a whole is the equivalent of the patent,[62] it follows that interchangability of parts in two machines is not a conclusive test of infringement.[63] Where a patent includes claims for a process and also for the product of such process, the latter are not infringed unless the process claims are also infringed.[64] Identity of detail in a machine combination is not necessary in order to constitute infringement, which cannot be avoided by changing the form and shape of the elements entering into the combination, so long as the essential features are appropriated and accomplish the same result in substantially the same way.[65] In all combinations of a mechanical patent, every element claimed is conclusively presumed material,[66] and a claim for a combination is not infringed if any one of the described or specified elements is omitted without the substitution of any equivalent therefor;[67] but the impairment of the function of a part of a patented structure by omitting a portion will not avoid infringement when the statement that defendant is manufacturing thereunder is insufficient to prove infringement of the prior patent where such device is absent from the article actually made by defendant. Morrill v. Hardware Jobbers Purchasing Co. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 756.

principle of operation is preserved and appropriated.[68] A patent for a combination of elements in a machine is not infringed by a machine in which the elements of the combination are merely aggregated operating successively and independtly of each other.[69] Where all the parts of a patented combination were old and the only invention is in their new arrangement, one who makes and sells the old parts is not chargeable with infringement, provided it was done with no purpose to contribute to plans of another intending an infringement by combining such parts in accordance with the patent.[70] A combination patent is not infringed by a device which is not only structurally different but does not perform by reason of its combination various functions which are inherent necessities of the patented combination and have been specifically pointed out in the specification.[71] Where a patent is for an improvement on a known machine by a mere change of form or a new combination of parts, the patentee cannot invoke the doctrine of equivalents to establish infringements by another, who has also improved the original machine by the use of a different form or combination performing the same functions.[72] Upon the question of infringement, the structure itself is to be looked to and not the results obtained, except as they may go to the question of identity [73] and infringement is not avoided because the patented device is not utilized to the full extent possible, nor because a feature is retained which might be dispensed with to advantage, and which it was one of the purposes of the patented device to render unnecessary.[74] A substantial equivalent of a patented device or means which performs the same function does not avoid infringement because it may perform an additional function.[75] The tests of lawful repairing is that the "identity of the machine" must be retained,[76] providing that in executing such repairs a separately patented part be not replaced by one not made under the authority of the patentee,[77] and the repair cannot extend to reconstruction.[78]

Contributory infringement.[79]—One who knowingly and directly aids, abets, and procures, a violation of a license restriction is guilty of contributory infringement,[80] and it is no defense that the patentee afforded the opportunity for the infringement.[81] One who manufacturers and sells certain elements of a patented combination with intent that they shall be used as a part of the full combination,

The replacing by a purchaser and user of a patented article of a part which is peculiarly subject to wear or destruction and which does not constitute a chief element of the patented invention is within his rights as a repair, and cannot be considered a reconstruction to subject him to liability as an infringer. as well as in other combinations, is chargeable with contributory infringements in so far as its sales are for use in the patented combination;[82] but a defendant cannot be charged with contributory infringement of a patent merely because of the sale to an infringing manufacturer of an article which constitutes an element in the patented product, but which is also a common article of commerce, used for other purposes without convincing proof that the article sold was used in the manufacture of the infringing product, and that the defendants sold it knowing, or having reasonable cause to know, that it was to be so used.[83] Advice of counsel is no defense to a suit for contributory infringement,[84] although, where it has been honestly relied upon, a heavy penalty will not usually be imposed, but only a sum sufficient to reimburse the moving party and act as a deterrent from future infringing actions.[85]

(§ 10) B. Defenses.[86]—Where a patented device is obviously operative and useful, the fact that it has never been manufactured by the owner of the patent does not affect his right to maintain a suit for infringement.[87] Using a patented article under either an actual or an implied license will protect the user against a charge of infringement.[88] Defenses which impugn the legality of a patent, issued with apparent regularity, must be supported at least by proofs which are satisfactory to the court and cannot be established by a mere preponderance of the evidence, and this to the extent of requiring the proof to be clear, unequivocal, and convincing, where fraud and criminal acts in the procurement of the patent are charged.[89] Alleged anticipating patents introduced by a defendant in a suit for infringement are entitled to little consideration unless there is an expert or other evidence to show their relation to the patent in suit.[90] Even though the point is not made in the proofs or pleadings, that the device does not disclose patentable invention, it is not to be disregarded when it is plain.[91] It is not open to an alleged infringer to collaterally attack a patent on the ground of fraud in its procurement.[92] Where a bill alleges infringement of patents by the violation of the conditions of a license contract thereunder, and seeks in effect the specific enforcement of the contract, its legality is involved directly and not collaterally, and must be established before equity

82. Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co. v. Union Elec. Mfg. Co., 147 F. 266. The sale by a defendant which has been enjoined from infringing a patent for a sound producing apparatus of a talking machine, of records which are capable of use with the other elements of the patented apparatus and which are intended to be and are so used by purchaser of such apparatus from complainant, constitutes a contributory infringement and a violation of the injunction. 83. Rumford Chem. Works v. Hygienic Chem. Co., 148 F. 862. The doctrine of contributory infringement should be limited to cases where the articles sold are either parts of a patented combination or device, or one produced for the sole purpose of being so used as to constitute infringement, and should not be extended to apply to ordinary and staple articles of commerce, used in connection with a patented machine, because the patentee sells or licenses such machine upon the condition that he alone shall furnish such articles. will grant relief.[93] An assignment of a patent by the patentee estops himself,[94] and all claiming or acquiring their knowledge of the patented article or process from him [95] to deny the validity of the patent, and in some [96] but not all [97] courts from involving the prior art as a limitation of its claims as made and allowed, and where he is deemed so estopped, in a suit against him for infringement by the assignee, extraneous evidence is inadmissable, if there is no ambiguity or uncertainty in the language of the description and claims; and if there is uncertainty, outside evidence is admissible only to make clear what the applicant meant to claim and the government to allow, and not for the purpose of showing even in the slightest degree, that the applicant had no right to claim, and that the government was improvident in allowing what was in fact claimed and allowed.[98]

(§ 10) C. Damages, profits and penalties.[99]—A complainant failing to show the amount of his loss is only entitled to recover nominal damages.[1] Where the devices covered by a patent are mere improvements in the line of simplicity of construction and consequent saving in cost of manufacture, and there is no satisfactory evidence that they rendered the machine as a whole more saleable, an infringer is only liable for profits realized from the use of the patented parts which were new and wrongfully appropriated by him,[2] and the complainant must furnish evidence from which the profits may be thus apportioned.[3] Where a patent for certain improvements in machines is found to be infringed by machines made and used but not sold, and it appears that the product of such infringing machines has no superiority which gives it an enhanced price over that of noninfringing machines, the only profits recoverable are the saving in the cost of construction and maintenance of the machines, or in the cost of the product due to the use of the infringing devices.[4]

(§ 10) D. Remedies and procedure.[5]—Laches will bar equitable relief.[6] The owner of a patent, who has obtained an interlocutory decree adjudging its validity and infringement, is not required to wait until it has become final before bringing suit against the defendant for infringement by the same device in another district;[7]

95. If an estopped assignor enters into business with others, who derive from him their knowledge of the patented process or machine, and, availing themselves of his knowledge and assistance, enter with him upon a manufacture infringing the patent which he has assigned, they are bound by his estoppel. Mellor v. Carroll, 141 F. 992. When individuals thus estopped establish a corporation to carry on a business which they would be restrained from carrying on as individuals, then the corporation, also, is deemed in privity of estoppel with them, even though it contain some stockholders more or less ignorant of the history of the patent and of the transactions leading up to the incorporation. Id. A corporation organized by a patentee, who had assigned his patents, and others having full knowledge of the facts, who are largely the owners of its stock, is estopped to deny the validity of the patents, or to limit their claims by the prior act, to the same extent as the patentee. nor is he precluded, by the fact that evidence has been taken in the second suit, from pleading therein the final decree when obtained in the first suit as an adjudication.[8] That the patented device was publicly used and exhibited in actual use for two years is sufficient to sustain a suit for infringement without a showing that it has been in constant use since that time.[9]

Jurisdiction.[10]—The Federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of a suit for infringement of patent, whether brought against the original patentee or any other party.[11] In determining the jurisdiction of particular Federal courts, the place of infringement is important.[12] Where a suit involves the question of infringement of patents, it is one arising under the patent laws, although it also involves the question of ownership of the patents or other contract rights.[13] The jurisdiction of a court of equity cannot be invoked if one has an adequate remedy at law;[14] hence, a bill in equity cannot be maintained for the mere recovery of profits, damages, or royalties,[15] even though the bill prays for the cancellation of patents not otherwise involved.[16] An action at law cannot be maintained for the sole purpose of recovering the profits which an infringer of a patent has made,[17] the proper remedy being to sue in equity while the infringement is in progress for an injunction and an accounting.[18]

Parties.[19]—Only one having a title to, or interest in, the patent can maintain a suit for its infringement.[20] The owner of a patent who has granted an exclusive license thereunder for certain territory cannot, suing alone, recover profits made by an infringer which, but for the infringement, would have inured to the sole benefit of the licensee.[21] In a suit to restrain infringement, a party who is alleged to be encouraging the manufacture and sale by the other defendants of the infringing device and who is closely connected with the transactions complained of is a proper party to the bill.[22] A corporation and an individual may be joined as defendants in a suit for infringement where it is alleged that the individual defendant owns practically all the stock of the corporation and personally directs its affairs and that they conspired together to commit the acts of infringement.[23] Where a bill for infringement alleges that a licensee has an interest in the patented inventions which is capable of being impaired by the asserted infringement of defendant, he may properly be joined as a complainant.[24]

Questions of law and fact.[25]—In an action at law for damages for infringement, the question of invention is ordinarily for the jury, subject to the direction of the court concerning the construction to be put on the letters patent.[26] If, however, the patent in suit appears to the court to be plainly invalid for want of invention, a verdict for the defendants should be ordered.[27] The presumption of validity which arises from the patent itself does not necessarily require the submission of the question of invention to the jury.[28] Where the question of infringement depends enirely upon the construction of a patent, either upon its face, or in connection with facts not to be reasonably disputed, the question is one of law for the court.[29]

Injunctions.[30]—A bill for infringement which charges past infringement only and contains no allegation of present or threatened infringement does not state a case within the jurisdiction of equity.[31] A single infringement by making and selling a single infringing machine will not justify the interposition of a court of equity for the purpose of restraining further infringement by the making and sale of other infringing machines, if it clearly appears that there is no reason to apprehend any further infringement.[32] The assertion of a right to make the devices complained of as an infringement in the absence of a very express denial of a purpose to exercise the right claimed, justifies the presumption that further infringement it to be apprehended, if the device shall prove to be an infringement.[33] It seems that an injunction may be obtained although the owner of the patent has never constructed a machine thereunder for practical use, and apparently does not intend to do so, but merely to hold the patent to prevent the use of the invention by competitors in business.[34] Where the complainant has made a prima facie case for injunction against infringement, the right is not to be denied on the ground that the injunction would be inconvenient to defendant or seriously interfere with the success of his business.[35] Equity will enjoin contributory infringement though no damages have resulted.[36] Infringement being doubtful, a preliminary injunction will be refused.[37] In determining the granting of a preliminary injunction, public acquiescence or a prior adjudication are of great weight[38] as

38. Where a patent has been sustained on a motion for a preliminary injunction, and the order affirmed on appeal, it comes before another court on a similar application as a sustained patent, and the ruling may properly be followed, in the absence of any contrary decision, unless there is some new question raised, and so far sustained as to make a prima facie defense against valid-is also the lack thereof,[39] though the fact that a patent is unadjudicated will not defeat the right to a preliminary injunction against its infringement, unless it also appears from common knowledge, or from the prior art shown, that there is reasonable ground for doubt as to its validity.[40] In the absence of such a showing the presumption arising from the issuance of the patent is sufficient to warrant injunctive relief against the infringer.[41] A preliminary injunction will not issue where the alleged infringement has ceased and the court is assured it will not be resumed.[42] An injunction against infringement of a patent should not be made so broad as to prevent the infringer from making and selling a device which it had added to that of the patent and designed to be used with it.[43] One violating an injunction against infringing may be fined for contempt.[44] That the violation was unintentional and due to carelessness is no defense to contempt proceedings therefor, but may be considered on the question of punishment;[45] and, such a proceeding being remedial, the penalty in such case may properly be measured by the damage resulting to complainants from the violation and the costs and legal expenses incurred in the proceeding.[46] On a motion for an attachment for contempt on account of the violation of an injunction issued to restrain the infringement of a patent, it must appear clearly and indisputably that the infringement continues.[47]

Pleading.[48]—A bill for infringement must allege the facts which are essential to the validity of the patent and negative the existence of those which would defeat it.[49] It must charge the infringement of a material part of the invention,[50] and the patent containing a number of claims must specifically enumerate the claims to be relied on, and where it does not the objection may be properly raised by demurrer on the ground that it is inequitable and unconscionable.[51] While a bill for infringe-

Where a patent has been sustained by a circuit court of appeals, the only question open on an application for a preliminary injunction in a subsequent suit in the same circuit is that of infringement, unless new evidence of invalidity of a conclusive character is produced. Id. A bill for infringement of a patent must specifically allege all the facts necessary to show the validity of the patent under the statutes, and a failure to allege that it was issued in the name of the United States, or under the seal of the patent office, or that it was signed by the commissioner of patents, renders it demurrable. ment of two separate patents must show that the inventions are capable of conjoint use, it is sufficiently shown where one patent shows on its face that it is for an improvement of the invention of the other.[52] The bill in a suit to enjoin infringement should set forth the judgments, public acquiesence, or equivalent rights, upon which the presumption of the complainant's right is based.[53] The bill must not be multifarious.[54] The question of the validity of a patent on its face may be raised by demurrer in an action at law for its infringement.[55] By profert of a patent in a suit for its infringement, it is carried into the bill, and, if it is plainly devoid of invention on its face, the bill is demurrable.[56] A demurrer for want of invention will be overruled except in a clear case.[57] The issues depending to some extent upon the construction and scope of the claims in view of the prior act, the question will not be determined on demurrer.[58] If a plea is to be allowed in a suit for the infringement of a patent in any case, and such practice is of doubtful propriety, it should reduce the issue to a single point, so that, conceding the fact to be as settled by the bill of complaint and plea, a full and final determination may be had.[59] The defense of noninfringement cannot bemade by plea, except under extraordinary or very special circumstances,[60] and while it may be within the discretion of the court to permit the defense of prior invention to be raised by plea, to justify such practice it should appear with reasonable certainty that the determination of the plea will end the case.[61] In an infringement suit use of the statutory provision denying the right to a patent in case of foreign patenting more than seven months prior to the application is a matter of defense to be pleaded by answer.[62] Laches is a defense which need not be pleaded, but may be raised upon the argument, or, when found to exist, the court itself may be passive and deny relief.[63] The general rules as to judgments on the pleadings apply.[64]

will take judicial cognizance of facts of general knowledge or devices in common use which may be similar to or identical in principle with that of the patent.[67] Certified copies of the patent office records of assignments are not prima facie proof of the execution or genuineness of such assignments,[68] nor are they made evidence by any United States statute, and, if competent at all, must conform to the rules relating to primary and secondary evidence.[69] Upon an issue of prior invention, witnesses testifying as to the use of such invention by others may properly refresh their memories as to the time of such use by reference to contemporaneous newspaper articles describing the invention and which they read at the time.[70] The burden of proving lack of invention is on party setting it up,[71] and every reasonable doubt should be resolved against him.[72] The burden is on defendant to prove a defense of discontinuance of infringement.[73] Burden of showing infringement is on complainant,[74] and in the case involving contributory infringement, he has the burden of showing knowledge on part of defendant.[75] In a suit against a nonresident, the burden of proof is upon the complainant to show an act of infringement within the district.[76] In a suit against a user, the defense being a license, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the article used was not covered by the patent.[77]

Prior decisions sustaining a patent are to be given effects under the rule of comity only as to matters which were before the court. With respect to defenses or evidence not before the court, the action of the court in a subsequent case is purely original.[78] The decision of a circuit court of appeals sustaining the validity of a patent, especially where such court has had the same or related patents before it in a number of cases, should be followed by a circuit court in another circuit where there are no conflicting decisions.[79]

A variance being immaterial it will be disregarded.[80]

Stay.—The pendency of a suit for infringement of a patent is not ground for staying a second suit in another circuit against a different defendant for infringement by a different machine.[81]

Accounting.[82]—In directing an accounting no more is decided, aside from the validity of the patent, than that infringement has been made out. The extent of it is in an after consideration;[83] consequently, except as concluded by the decree, the question of infringement is always open for consideration before the master.[84] Where on a reference for an accounting the master by his rulings limits the scope

A decree for infringment will not be reversed on appeal, because the proof shows that the infringing machine was sold by a concern doing business under a different name and style from that of the partnership of defendants as alleged in the bill, where it also fairly shows the defendants were the proprietors of such concern and the fact that they made the sale was not contested in the trial court. of the inquiry, the matter may properly be presented to the court for decision by a motion for instructions to the master.[85] On a reference for an accounting by defendant under a decree finding infringement of a patent, the defendant is the only "party accounting" within the meaning of equity rule 79.[86]

Saving questions for review.—Failure to formally mark exhibits is frequently deemed immaterial.[87]

Costs.[88]—The statutory provision that a complainant recovering judgment for infringement of a part of a patent shall not recover costs, where the claims of the patent were too broad and no disclaimer was entered before suit, does not apply to the costs in an appellate court, where the decree below dismissing the suit is found erroneous, and the complainant was compelled to appeal to obtain the relief to which he was entitled.[89] There is a conflict as to whether a disclaimer will be required where part of the claims are held valid and part invalid.[90]

Judgments or decrees.[91]—One taking an alleged infringing patent, by assignment or transfer, pending infringement litigation is bound by the judgment of the court,[92] and may be brought in by supplemental bill and subjected to the injunction granted thereby, and to liability for damages under the decree as to acts of infringement committed by him subsequent to his purchase.[93] The defeated party to an interference proceeding in the patent office, which involved only the issue of priority of invention, is not estopped by the decision to contest the validity of the patent granted to the successful party, when sued for its infringement, on the ground of lack of patentable novelty or invention.[94] A decree in a prior suit for the infringement of a patent is none the less conclusive between the parties on the issues of validity and infringement because it was merely interlocutory, when the second suit was commenced, where it is set up therein as an adjudication by a supplemental bill, after having ripened into a final decree.[95] The settlement by a licensee under a patent of a suit brought against it for infringement of another patent does not estop its licensor, who was not a party and did not participate in the settlement from subsequently contesting the validity of the patent sued on.[96]

having no kindred in the state liable for his support, or whose kindred within the state are of insufficient ability or fail or refuse to maintain him, is a person chargeable as a pauper under the Nebraska statute.[99]

Settlement and removal of paupers.[1]—In Pennsylvania prior to the act of 1901, the settlement of an illegitimate did not follow the mother when she changed her settlement.[2] Legal settlement in a town is extinguished by a year's residence elsewhere unless during such time the person to some degree supported as a pauper by the town.[3] A pauper sent by the poor officers beyond the limits of a municipality in which he is domiciled at the time of becoming a public charge, under a contract for subsistence, does not lose his domicile as affecting the liability of the municipality for his maintenance.[4] The facts necessary to support an order of removal under the pauper statutes must be proved according to the ordinary course of the common law,[5] as must the issue of one's pauper settlement.[6] Place of settlement when based on conflicting evidence as to residence is a question of fact.[7] When the purpose of the parties is merely to bring a question of law to final and conclusive adjudication without unnecessary delay and expense, the consent by an attorney representing a poor district for the removal of a pauper to his district does not preclude an appeal from the order by the district he represents.[8]

Liability of municipalities for support and aid[9] is wholly statutory.[10] A statute for the relief of blind paupers is not invalid as an unjust discrimination among classes,[11] nor is its validity affected because it makes some discrimination among the Sheboygan Falls [Wis.] 109 N. W. 1030), nor can it make any difference that such board be paid for in services instead of money, especially if the services are such as to enable some other member of the family to devote his time or labor to earning money for its support, thus rendering sufficient a less contribution from the public (Id.).

6. On the issues of one's pauper settlement his declarations, connected with a transaction in which he arranged for board, evincing a purpose to change his residence, are admissible. Town of Jericho v. Huntington [Vt.] 65 A. 87. In an action to recover for support of a pauper to which he was not a party and on the trial of which he was not a witness, his declaration that he left a certain employment which the defendant claimed he had taken permanently, thereby changing his settlement, because of a misunderstanding with the employer, was not admissible as part of the res gestae (Town of Jericho v. Huntington [Vt.] 65 A. 87), nor was it receivable under the rule relating to the admissions of parties (Id.), nor as impeaching evidence, assuming the alleged pauper to have been a witness, in the absence of proper foundation having been laid therefor (Id.); and an offer to show that a day or two before the alleged pauper took the employment in question witness called his attention to the fact that the employer in question "wanted a man to go onto his place to stay for a year to cut lumber or wood at the halves and draw it away and live with the old man and take care of him," was properly refused in the absence of evidence tending to show what the arrangement between them actually was (Id.). So, also, an offer to show by a witness what he saw the alleged pauper doing there, the plaintiff not disputing the fact that he was there working for about a week was properly refused (Id.).

11. Davies v. State, 6 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 417. It is within the legislative power of blind,[12] nor is it a use of public funds for a private purpose within the purview of any provisions of the Federal constitution.[13] The county court in Tennessee has no power to levy a special tax for the support of the poor.[14] The notice required by the Pennsylvania statute to render a county liable for aid rendered by a poor district to a pauper having no settlement in the state must be given before the expense is incurred,[15] and in that state the division of a poor district does not render the new district liable to contribution to the support of paupers having their settlement in the old district at the time of its division and continuing to have their settlement there during the time for which the contribution is claimed.[16] The rendition of quarterly bills for support of a pauper is a sufficient notice to a municipality of a claim against it therefor in the absence of objection by it to the furnishing of such support.[17] In Illinois it is held that the determination by the overseer of the poor that certain persons are entitled to relief is an official act which is binding on the county in favor of those who in good faith furnish medical attendance or supplies in reliance on his order,[18] and it is not necessary that the supervisor wait for the relatives of an indigent person to furnish the aid required,[19] nor is it material as to which township in a county the person requiring aid is in so long as the supervisor where he resides directs the furnishing of aid.[20] It is essential to show, in establishing the liability of a county for relief furnished to a pauper that the relief was furnished to a person chargeable as a pauper.[21] A contract of a municipal poor officer for furnishing subsistence to a pauper chargeable to it, beyond the limits of the municipality, is enforceable against the municipality,[22] and on refusal to recognize its liability to continue the aid, on the grounds of nonresidence of the pauper, its liability may be enforced on a quantum meruit for aid furnished the pauper by others.[23] The reasonableness of a rule of officers of the poor limiting the amount of fee for medical attendance on persons requiring county aid within their jurisdiction is a question for the court,[24] and such rule, limiting the fee for attendance when made within the limits of any incorporated city or village to $1 per visit, and medicine, is void for unreasonableness.[25] One claiming the right to recover from the county on a claim for medical attendance on sick persons without money or property, under the Illinois statute must show that the overseer had notice of the necessity for the attendance and that he refused or neglected to act,[26] or recognition of liability by the overseer or the board of supervisors, with full knowledge of the facts.[27] Authority from the supervisors to bury a pauper is essential to a claim against the county for expenses of such burial, under the Mississippi stat-the state to make provision for the aid of any legitimate class, recognized as such either by the constitution of the state, or by a sense of justice and the common reason of the people of the state. Id.

ute.[28] In Massachusetts the city in which an insane criminal pauper has his settlement at the time of commitment to the state asylum for insane criminals at Bridgewater is liable for his support other than during the term of his sentence.[29] In Maine expenses incurred by a town to protect its inhabitants or the public from danger of being hurt by paupers are not recoverable under the pauper statute,[30] nor is the Maine statute authorizing recovery of expense of preventing the spread of contagious diseases by paupers applicable to a case of insanity.[31] In Wisconsin the remedy, if any, for injury suffered from a nonresident becoming afflicted with smallpox in one's house, and required to be kept therein, is a claim against the particular municipality wherein the necessity arises.[32]

Liability of relatives.[33]—Under a statute penalizing the neglect or refusal of a child to support his parent, it is the act of the child in failing to furnish support, under the conditions named in the statute, that constitutes the offense;[34] hence, the other elements being present, the offense is committed in the county in which the child charged with the duty resides at the time of his neglect or refusal to furnish the same.[35]

Administration of poor laws; officers and districts.[37]—The directors of the poor and of the house of employment of the county of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, are not county officers.[38]

PAWNBROKERS AND SECONDHAND DEALERS.[39]

A pawnbroker is one who carries the business of receiving goods in pledge for loans at interest.[40] Regulation of the business is within the police power [41] for the protection of the public as well as for the protection of the needy and improvident,[42] and a violation of provisions of this character is fatal to the validity of the contract between a pawnbroker and his customer,[43] and invalidates the pawnbroker's lien.[44]

The state asylum for insane criminals at Bridgewater, is a part of the system adopted by the commonwealth for taking care of its insane rather than part of its system for taking care of its criminals (Id.); hence, the general provision in regard to the payment of the charges for the support of insane persons having known settlements in the commonwealth apply to those supported there (Id.). The provision that the expense of supporting a state prison convict who is committed to a state insane hospital shall be paid by the commonwealth refers to support furnished during the term of his sentence (Id.), and the provision that the expense of supporting a prisoner who is removed from a jail or house of correction to the state farm shall be paid by the county from which he is removed has no application to transfers to the state asylum for the criminal insane at Bridgewater (Id.); hence, neither is a defense to a claim by the commonwealth against a city for support at such asylum of a criminal pauper, having his legal settlement in the city at the time of commitment to that asylum when the claim does not include any part of the term of the pauper's sentence (Id.).

In some states the contract is expressly declared void by statute for violation of provisions regulating the business.[45] A regulatory statute is not void for inequality because made not to apply to the business of banking and loans when the amount exceeds $75.[46] The right granted to a city to define by ordinance the powers and privileges and to exercise such general superintendence of pawnbrokers as will insure fair dealing between pawnbrokers and their customers does not authorize the city to change the state's usury laws in favor of pawnbrokers.[47] Ordinances requiring a detailed report of pawnbroker's business and prohibiting redemption of pledges within twenty-four hours after the report is delivered to the police department are not an unreasonable exercise of the powers of a city authorized to license, tax, regulate, suppress, and prohibit, pawnbrokers.[48] The New York statute penalizing the reception or purchase by junk dealers of goods, wares, or merchandise, from children under sixteen years of age, applies irrespective of whether the property is stolen,[49] nor does this construction render it unconstitutional;[50] and since there is no presumption that a child selling goods to a junk dealer does so as the agent of the lawful owner,[51] the state on a prosecution under the statute need not prove the negative.[52] One who, in good faith, at the request of a husband with apparent authority, redeems from pawn the property of his wife, without paying more than the wife was legally bound to pay, is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the pawnbroker from whom redemption is had.[53] The unilaterality of the contract and indefiniteness thereof as to the time of redemption are not obstacles to a redemption when tender is made within a reasonable time.[54] A written receipt given to a pawnor is sufficient to take the contract between himself and the pawnbroker, not to be performed within a year, out of the statute of frauds.[55] Redemption of a pawn cannot be enforced in the courts in the absence of a tender of the amount due thereon having been made and kept good.[56] Deliberate violation of a regulatory municipal ordinance by a pawnbroker affords the mayor ground for the exercise of his discretionary power to revoke a pawnbroker's license and refusal to relicense him.[57] When a mayor has exercised a discretion vested in him to revoke a pawnbroker's license for conviction of violation of city ordinances, an appeal from the judgment of conviction does not suspend the judgment of conviction so as to entitle the pawnbroker to mandamus to compel the issuance to him of a new license,[58] especially in view of an ordinance expressly obviating such effect of an appeal,[59] nor does the good character of the applicant, under such circumstances, aid him.[60] Under an ordinance making it a penal offense for a pawnbroker to fail to report a transaction to the police department of the city, there can be no conviction of a mere clerk in a pawnbroker's office,[61] and this is true even though accused was present and participated in the transaction whereby the article not reported as required was taken possession of by the pawnbroker,[62] and though it was customary for accused as clerk to make such reports for his employer.[63]

PAYMENT AND TENDER.

§ 1. Mode and Sufficiency of Payment or Tender (1329). To and By Whom (1329). Place of Payment or Tender (1330). Sufficiency of Tender (1330). Medium; Checks, Notes, and Drafts (1330).

B. Evidence (1334).
C. Limitations (1336).
D. Questions of Law and Fact (1336).

Scope of article.—This does not include discharge by novation,[64] release,[65] or accord and satisfaction,[66] nor does it include payment into court,[67] nor matters peculiar to negotiable paper,[68] nor the recovery back of involuntary and mistaken payments.[69] Tender of payment only is included, tender of other performance being elsewhere treated.[70]

§ 1. Mode and sufficiency of payment or tender.[71] To and by whom.[72]—Payment [73] or tender [74] to an unauthorized person is ineffectual. Payment of an obligation to the drawer under and through the indorsement of the payee is equivalent to a payment to the payee himself.[75] Payment of taxes to the duly elected and qualified collector before they are due and before the tax rolls are delivered to him is no payment to the state.[76] A partner cannot bind his copartner to a liquidation of a personal obligation of a third person to the firm without the copartner's assent.[77] The power to receive the principal of an overdue mortgage is delegable by a guardian or trustee.[78] A tender by a stranger is not good.[79] Payment by a third person without the debtor's knowledge is effective as a discharge if an obligation given in ignorance of the payment,[80] but when an obligation is paid by a third person who is subrogated to the rights of the obligee, the obligation is not discharged.[81] A wife has the legal right to pay the debt of her husband.[82]

Place of payment or tender.—Tender must be made at the place where an obligation is payable,[83] unless waived by the holder.[84]

Sufficiency of tender.[85]—There must be a definite offer to pay on the one hand and refusal to accept on the other.[86] Ordinarily a tender to be effectual must be unconditional,[87] but a conditional tender is effective to stop the running of interest in California when the debtor is entitled to the performance of a condition precedent to or concurrent with performances on his part.[88] A tender is ineffective to preserve one's rights unless kept good by being paid into court for the use of the party to whom the tender was made,[89] but a tender may be kept good without a payment of the same into court in the absence of a statute requiring it,[90] though, in such case, the debtor must be ready, able, and willing at all times, to pay the debt,[91] and though the identical money need not be kept on hand,[92] yet, if by making use of the money, the debtor is not able to pay the debt in current money at any time when requested, the effect of the tender is destroyed.[93] One sued for partition of realty whose full rights are not recognized by the plaintiff need not bring into court a tender made by him in order to protect the rights claimed by him in the land.[94] In California a tender does not operate as an extinguishment of the debt unless followed by a deposit in bank as prescribed by statute.[95] A tender to save contractual rights must be made within the currency of the contract.[96] After notice from a creditor that a note will not be accepted by the creditor, tender of a note by a creditor adds nothing to his rights.[97] A tender by sureties after the suretyship obligation has matured must in addition to principal and interest, include any further sums provided in the instrument by way of penalty for failure to pay when due.[98]

Medium; checks, notes, and drafts.[99]—When one has an option to pay a debt in money or by the conveyance of property, and voluntarily deprives himself of the power to make conveyance, his obligation to pay cash becomes absolute,[1] and on refusal of a debtor to discharge a debt payable otherwise than in money, he becomes bound to discharge it by the payment of money.[2] Ordinarily a check or draft is not payment unless the parties intend otherwise,[3] but the acceptance of a check or draft, offered under such circumstances as amount to a condition that it is to be received in full payment of a demand, will satisfy the demand,[4] notwithstanding any protest the creditor may make to the contrary;[5] and if a debtor purchases a draft with his own money and forwards it to his creditor who cashes it and appropriates the proceeds to his own use, there is a payment to the amount of the draft.[6] Whether one obligation given in lieu of another is a payment of the original is, ordinarily, a question of fact, depending on the intention or conduct of the parties.[7] Payment of a forged note is ineffectual as a discharge of the debt.[8] When honored by the drawee, a check or draft is equivalent to a cash payment relating to the time of delivery thereof,[9] and this is true when delivery is to an agent in the absence of an express limitation on the agent's authority to receive anything else than cash.[10] The indorsement of a draft is not a payment, but only a mode of obtaining payment.[11] The negotiation of notes and the execution of renewals thereof for such balances as remain due does not constitute a taking of the originals as payment where the payee was at all times liable as indorser.[12] Credit extended to a taxpayer by an officer authorized only to accept cash does not amount to payment of taxes to the state.[13] An offer of payment is a prerequisite to the validity of a deposit in bank as a payment under the California statute.[14] When a creditor is induced by false representations to accept notes as payment, he may by rescission restore the original debt,[15] but to make out a case, there must be proof of having actually been misled by deceit in addition to proof of intent to defraud.[16]

§ 2. Application of payment.[17]—As a rule a creditor may make application of a general payment at any time before judgment or verdict,[18] irrespective of the adverse effect it may have on the rights of third persons;[19] but the rule does not apply when money is received by the debtor from a third person whose property would be liable for the debt in case the money was not applied on the third person's liability when paid to the creditor,[20] nor can a creditor apply a general payment to satisfy an illegal demand without the debtor's consent,[21] nor, when a creditor in procuring a settlement of a claim wrongfully obtains money of the debtor, can he

of his own volition apply it in extinguishment of a prior claim,[22] nor, when he permits the debtor to incur a further indebtedness with notice that the rights of third persons will be adversely affected, should he be permitted to make application of a general payment to such debt.[23] A debtor may, however, conclusively direct the application of remittance by him to the payment of any particular indebtedness so long as the superior rights of the creditor are not invaded.[24] The doctrine of election is applicable to the creditor's privilege of applying payments in the absence of direction by the payor,[25] and forbids a change when the election has once been made.[26] The doctrine is applicable also to the payor who gives directions as to the debt to which a payment is to be applied.[27] One may bind himself by contract to apply money to a particular purpose,[28] but an agreement to apply money to be received in the future to the payment of a particular debt is revocable by the parties;[29] and a different application made in good faith by the mutual agreement of the parties is binding on a third person whose reliance on the agreement is not brought to the knowledge of the creditor before the application has been made.[30] After a contractual right of imputation of payment has been exhausted, the conferee of the power cannot thereafter change the imputations already made to the detriment of the conferor.[31] One may also be bound by an acquiescence in the application of payments different from his express direction.[32] The Massachusetts rule requiring a partial payment on a note to be first applied to the payment of interest due is recognized in New Mexico rather than the Connecticut rule requiring it to be applied directly to a discharge of the principal.[33] In applying partial payments on an interest-bearing obligation, at the full legal rate, the sum originally loaned, it is held in Kentucky, should be taken as the principal and interest calculated thereon till the first renewal or payment,[34] then such payment should be applied to the discharge of interest accrued and any excess applied on the principal,[35] and when the obligation is renewed, accumulated interest unpaid is then to be added to the remaining principal, which sum constitutes a new principal on which interest is to be calculated and payments applied as before indicated,[36] nor is this rule objectionable as requiring a greater interest charge than that contemplated in the original contract.[37] A general payment on an account will be applied, in the absence of application by the parties, in payment of the oldest item.[38] A statute requiring the application of payments, in the absence of direction, on the obligation earliest in date of maturity, requires a ratable application of a payment on several obligations maturing at the same time, irrespective of the date incurred.[39] When neither the debtor nor creditor has made application of a payment, the court may do so,[40] and the court will credit a general payment according to its own view of the intrinsic justice and equity of the case so as to give the creditor the best security for the debt remaining unpaid.[41] Payment in property will be so applied in equity as to protect and preserve a homestead.[42] Where distinct sets of partners become sureties for a contractor and on his default agree to complete the work themselves as an independent partnership, payments made by the latter are applicable to discharge its debts to the constituent partners rather than to the discharge of the debts of the contractor to them for supplies not furnished at the request of all the members of the independent partnership.[43] When the principal of a mortgage debt has been paid to a person authorized to receive it for a guardian, the mortgagor is not bound to see to the application made by the guardian of the sum paid.[44] When a debtor remits a portion of his debt and incloses an assignment of the balance to himself for execution by the creditor which he requests to be signed and returned as a "receipt," the creditor is justified, notwithstanding the demand for assignment, in applying the remittance or the debt.[45] Mere irregularity of a transaction by a debtor with his creditor will not justify the creditor in refusing to make proper application of credits.[46]

has been kept good.[53] Payment as a defense must be pleaded,[54] and the facts must be set forth.[55] A claim asserted defensively as a payment but not so pleaded is allowable only as a set-off or counterclaim.[56]

(§ 4) B. Evidence.[57] Presumptions.[58]—There is a presumption that a note in the possession of the payee is a subsisting obligation,[59] but the presumption is not conclusive.[60] A judgment is presumed to be paid after the lapse of twenty years from the time the debt became due,[61] but from a lapse of time of less than twenty years, no such presumption arises.[62] In Massachusetts the rule of evidence is that where a debtor delivers to his creditor a negotiable note for the whole or a portion of the debt, the presumption arises that it was given and received in satisfaction of the debt,[63] such presumption being controllable, however, by evidence that by the acceptance, the creditor did not intend to extinguish the debt.[64] Nevertheless the rule is not applicable to a note accepted in a jurisdiction wherein it is not the law unless the contract is to be performed where the rule is recognized;[65] but the fact that notes become completed contracts only on their acceptance in another state is not conclusive as to the place of performance, when acceptance is according to their tenor, as against a place selected by the parties for performance, so as to take the case out of the rule.[66] In authorizing an agent to make collections, the the presumption, in the absence of instructions to the contrary, is that the authority is to be exercised in the manner usual and customary in the commercial world.[67] Payment is presumable from an extraordinary lapse of time in the assertion of a right by the persons entitled thereto.[68] The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is rebuttable.[69] Such presumption being by statute made repellable for particular causes is not repelled by other causes.[70] In Pennsylvania a presumption of payment of a charge on realty arises where no payment or demand has been made for twenty-one years,[71] and the execution of a mortgage by the grantee of land subject to a charge within the twenty-one years is not rebuttive of the presumption.[72] The presumption of payment of a mortgage debt is conclusive after twenty years in the absence of proof of payment within that period,[73] and this presumption is available to show the marketability of title of land sold on a partition sale on a motion of the purchaser to be relieved of the purchase.[74] Possession by an obligor of an obligation sued on raises a presumption of payment,[75] as does the fact that the obligation was found among the obligor's papers after his death.[76] There is no presumption that the value of land acquired by foreclosure is sufficient to pay notes evidencing the debt not due at the time of foreclosure.[77] A receipt for all moneys owing by the debtor up to date is prima facie evidence of payment of a note indebtedness due by him to the receiptor at the time.[78]

Burden of proof.[79]—The burden of proving payment is on the party pleading it,[80] while the burden of impeaching payments is on the litigant contesting their validity.[81] The burden is on defendant to show that payments not specifically alleged in the pleadings, but admitted in the testimony of the plaintiff as having been made, were made in part payment of the claim sued on, instead of on other items of indebtedness.[82] Where there has been a lapse of twenty years from the time a debt represented in a judgment became due, the burden is on one asserting the right to enforce it to show by a preponderance of the evidence that it is not paid,[83] but when twenty years have not elapsed, the burden is on one asserting payment to show by a like preponderance that it has been paid.[84] Where defendant pleads payment of an account sued on by paying to a third person on plaintiff's authority to so pay any sum found to be due, he assumes the burden of showing that plaintiff was indebted to the third person.[85]

Admissibility.[86]—The fact that a note sued on is found among the papers of the maker after his death is admissible to show payment.[87] A plea of payment and claim of ability to pay render admissible evidence as to the amount of incumbrance outstanding on the property of the litigant responsible for such plea and contention.[88] A check is competent evidence as tending to show payment.[89] When a plea of payment is interposed in an action by an administrator on notes given to one since deceased, a note given by the defendants to decedent while the notes in suit were still under the control of deceased and uncanceled is admissible in rebuttal of the plaintiff's case, as tending to show that the notes sued on had not been paid,[90] especially when the note was given within a short time after a check for an equal amount from defendants to decedent was given and which defendants had introduced in support of their plea of payment,[91] nor did the fact that the note offered in evidence by the administrator had been paid deprive it of its evidential character.[92] On an issue of payment, the admissibility of evidence of the financial standing and ability of the party, to make payment as bearing on the credibility of the claimant, is within the discretion of the trial court.[93] On such issue, the assessment records are admissible to show that the alleged debtor had property during a long period of time when the alleged demand was enforceable from which it could have been made,[94] but evidence as to his promptitude in paying his debts is inadmissible,[95] as is evidence as to his having owed other debts,[96] and evidence as to

E. 922), and this burden is not changed by the fact that the note sued on is found among the papers of the maker after his death (Id.). Where one sued on an obligation claims payment subsequent to its becoming due, the burden is on him to prove such payment by a preponderance of the probabilities. McKeen v. Cook, 73 N. his reputation for honesty and fair dealing.[97] Declarations during the period in which the alleged debt might have been enforced as to his financial condition are admissible,[98] as are his declarations as to what the debt was for,[99] and evidence as to whether he was a close collector of indebtedness due to him, where there has been a a long lapse of time and it is relied on to show payment.[1] On an issue of payment of a debt merged into a judgment, evidence as to knowledge, by a transferee, of the transfer of a portion of the judgment on the records in evidence before made is inadmissible.[2] On an issue of payment of notes given to a bank marked "paid" by the bank as between an officer of the bank and the drawer, the notes are admissible when produced by the officer in connection with his testimony that he paid them at the request of the drawer,[3] and a check given in payment of notes which is part of a like transaction is admissible on such issue.[4] But deposit slips claimed by defendant to have been made out by himself for funds deposited by him in the bank for plaintiff's benefit, were inadmissible,[5] even in connection with defendant's testimony that he took the slips from the bank files, in the absence of some showing that the plaintiff had received credit therefor on the bank books or in some other way become bound to pay the same,[6] nor was defendant's testimony admissible to show that a draft drawn on the bank by plaintiff was paid out of defendant's personal funds in the absence of the records of the bank as evidence.[7]

Sufficiency.[8]—A check without other evidence will not sustain a plea of payment.[9] Ordinarily, a receipt is not conclusive evidence of payment,[10] but a receipt in full is conclusive as payment in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake.[11] The marking of a note as "paid" by the payee on receipt of a draft therefor is not conclusive of the question whether the draft was payment.[12] The general rules for testing the sufficiency of evidence apply.[13] to mislead,[18] and whether they actually did influence the acceptor's conduct in the transaction, are also questions of fact.[19]

PAYMENT INTO COURT.[20]

The custody of deposits in court is a matter within the control of the legislature.[21] Deposit in court is a means of keeping a tender good,[22] though in the absence of statute, it is held that a tender may be kept good without payment of the same into court,[23] but when alleged as having followed tender, it must be proved as well as the tender.[24] When money is paid into court as a tender, the depositor thereupon parts with his property rights therein,[25] nor does a change of issues by amendment authorize a withdrawal of the fund by the party who has made the deposit,[26] even where the change is an entire denial of liability and an assertion of a demand on a counterclaim against the litigant for whose benefit the sum was deposited,[27] and even though a judgment is rendered against him for a less sum, he cannot withdraw a proportionate part of the deposit,[28] but a deposit made as a tender by an intervener unsuccessfully claiming a right against the litigants remains the property of the intervener.[29] When a tender has been excused by an act of the party to whom it is due, a deposit of the tender may be withdrawn without prejudice to the rights of the depositor,[30] and a refusal of one to accept a tender after it has been paid into court and an adverse judgment rendered warrants a withdrawal of the fund by the depositor.[31] When a deposit placed in the custody of an officer of the court has drawn interest, the person entitled to the find is also entitled to the accrued interest.[32] Waiver of proof of tender does not waive proof of a deposit of the tender in court.[33] When a tender is refused, it is proper procedure to pay it into the registry of the court.[34] A litigant, liable at all events for the full sum required to be paid into court, is not prejudiced by an order requiring payment into court before the persons to whom it belongs have been ascertained.[35] One sued for partition of realty whose full rights are not recognized by the plaintiff need not bring into court a tender made by him in order to protect the rights claimed by him in the land.[36] After a tender and payment into court thereof by defendant, the only question to be litigated is whether the plaintiff establishes a cause in action for more than the amount of the tender.[37]

PEDDLING.

§ 1. Definition (1338).
§ 2. Statutory or Municipal Regulation (1338).
§ 3. Who May Become Licensees (1339).
§ 4. Offenses and Prosecution (1339).

§ 1. Definition.[38]—One who acts for another in taking orders for goods or delivering for him goods, orders for which have been previously taken either by himself or by another, is not a peddler or hawker within the general meaning of these terms,[39] or within the meaning of a statute including in the term peddler all "transient merchants and itinerant vendors" selling by sample or by taking orders either for immediate or future delivery.[40] The carrying and selling of frames for portraits in connection with the business of delivering the portraits previously ordered is peddling.[41] The sale of coal oil from a wagon to a retail dealer is not a violation of the Kentucky statute requiring peddlers to take out licenses though some of the oil purchased is used for manufacturing purposes.[42]

§ 2. Statutory or municipal regulation.[43]—Municipalities may be given power to regulate the business of hawkers and peddlers and may provide that such terms shall include persons who go about soliciting by sample.[44] Statutes or ordinances of this character must be reasonable,[45] and like other laws are subject to constitutional restrictions,[46] including those relative to title,[47] interstate commerce,[48] and class legislation.[49]

38. See 6 C. L. 995.

39. Not peddlers or hawkers: An agent of a nonresident corporation who delivers and collects for goods which another agent of such corporation has previously contracted to furnish. Agent who delivered portraits made by photographic enlargement. Chicago Portrait Co. v. Macon, 147 F. 967. This was so though as incidental to delivery he also sold the customer a frame. Id. One who merely solicits orders and takes notes for goods to be shipped from another state and delivered by another person. Medicines. Act Feb. 26, 1902 (Laws 1902, pp. 1102, 1102). State v. Ivey, 73 S. C. 282, 53 S. E. 428.

40. One who takes orders for goods by sample for a corporation and delivers the goods for the company after its approval of the orders. Not within Act 30th Gen. Assem. p. 41, c. 48, assuming it to be constitutional. State v. Bristow [Iowa] 109 N. W. 199.

41. One who delivers portraits to fill orders previously taken under an agreement whereby it was made optional with the purchasers to take frames to be furnished with the portraits and, upon delivery of the portraits, also sells the frames, is a peddler within Rev. St. 1899, §§ 8861, 8862, 8868, defining a peddler as one who sells goods by going from place to place. State v. Looney [Mo.] 97 S. W. 934. Compare Chicago Portrait Co. v. Macon, 147 F. 967.

44. Ordinance held not violative of state law. Defendant who solicited orders for a corporation from door to door held properly convicted. City of Alma v. Clow [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 836, 109 N. W. 853. Case governed by City of Muskegon v. Zeeryp, 134 Mich. 181, 96 N. W. 502. City of New Orleans may regulate peddling on the streets and compel peddlers and hawkers to keep within bounds and refrain from boisterous or other conduct which will render their occupation a nuisance. City of New Orleans v. Fargot, 116 La. 369, 40 So. 735.

45. Ordinance prohibiting peddlers and hawkers from crying out for sale fruit, fish, etc., held reasonable, and not contrary to state law or in restraint of trade. City of New Orleans v. Fargot, 116 La. 369, 40 So. 735. Hucksters and peddlers may be required to move on and not to make unnecessary stops or loiter about in the streets. Ordinance not oppressive or unconstitutional. City of Shreveport v. Dantes [La.] 42 So. 716. An ordinance prohibiting the carrying on of any trade or business in any part of a public street without a permit is not inconsistent with law or oppressive when reasonably construed. State v. Barbelais, 101 Me. 512, 64 A. 881. Should be construed only to prohibit a person from offering articles for sale in a public manner either from a stand or from a cart which he drives or pushes along the street. Id.

46. A city ordinance merely imposing a license tax upon "peddlers of goods, wares, and merchandise", is not repugnant to the interstate law or to any feature of the state or Federal constitution. City of Selma v. Till [Ala.] 42 So. 405.

47. Act 30th, Gen. Assem, p. 41, c. 48, repealing and enacting a substitute for § 1347a of the supplement of the Code, and providing that the word "peddlers" shall include transient merchants and itinerant vendors selling by sample or by taking orders whether for immediate or future delivery, is unconstitutional because the subject is not expressed in the title, the original act imposing a tax on peddlers only. State v. Bristow [Iowa] 109 N. W. 199.

48. A corporation of one state there engaged in the manufacture of portraits and frames may send agents into another state to solicit orders and other agents to deliver and collect for the goods, and neither the state nor a municipality can impose license taxes on either class of such agents. Chicago Portrait Co. v. Macon, 147 F. 967. Delivery of portraits previously ordered held

§ 4. Offenses and prosecution.[51]—Where one takes orders and delivers goods for a corporation which for all the purposes of the case is a domestic corporation and also sells goods from stock on hand, the mere fact that the goods are shipped him from out of the state does not render his business interstate commerce.[52] The phrase "domestic machinery" as used in the statute of New Mexico excepting such machinery from the class of articles which may not be sold by itinerant vendors without a license does not include a buggy or wagon for use at the purchaser's home.[53] Where different penalties may be inflicted upon different classes of peddlers, the indictment must show the class to which the accused belongs.[54] A constitutional provision that no municipal ordinance shall fix a penalty for its violation, less than that imposed by statute for the same offense, does not apply to an ordinance providing a penalty for peddling without a license.[55] The remedy of one who is convicted, though he is not a peddler, or is within the protection of the interstate law, is by appeal and not habeas corpus.[56]

PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES.

§ 1. Definitions and Elements (1339).
§ 2. Rights and Liabilities to Penalties and Forfeitures, and the Policy of the Law (1340).
§ 3. Remedies and Procedure (1342).

§ 1. Definitions and elements.[57]—The question of whether a sum contracted to be paid for the breach of a covenant is liquidated damages or a penalty depends largely upon the terms of the particular contract,[58] except that unless the amount is unconscionable,[59] it will generally be held not to be a penalty, if the resultant damages are so uncertain as to be practically incapable of calculation.[60] A con-interstate commerce. State v. Looney [Mo.] 97 S. W. 934. Sale of frames not previously contracted for held not interstate commerce. Id. "Domestic machinery" as used in Sess. Laws 1903, c. 16, p. 27, imposing a license tax on itinerant vendors of certain articles and excepting domestic machinery, does not refer only to machinery made in New Mexico and the statute is not void for that reason. Territory v. Russell [N. M.] 86 P. 55.

49. Ordinance requiring hucksters and peddlers of small articles to move on and not to make unnecessary stops in the streets held not discriminative. City of Shreveport v. Dantes [La.] 42 So. 716. Sess. Laws 1903, c. 16, p. 27, imposing a license tax on itinerant vendors of certain articles is not violative of the Federal constitution as class legislation because it forbids sales to those who are not dealers. Territory v. Russell [N. M.] 86 P. 551. An ordinance requiring peddlers to pay a license fee but excepting persons selling vegetables, fish, meat, or farm produce, and bakers, is not invalid because of the exception. People v. A provision that after the completion of a first well "the second party shall drill two additional wells at intervals of ninety days, and upon failure to drill said wells or any one of them shall forfeit and pay to said first party the sum of one hundred dollars for each well not drilled" does not provide a penalty, but is a provision for stipulated damages. Crown Oil Co. v. Probert, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 489. A provision, that upon breach of a contract a certain sum shall be paid and if suit shall become necessary it may be for double such amount, stipulates for a penalty in so far as it refers to double damages. Carruthers v. Gay [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 169, 91 S. W. 593. See, also, Damages, 7 C. L. 1029.

59. Where there was nothing in the record by which it could be determined what plaintiff's actual damages were or would be on account of defendant's violation of his agreement not to engage in a competing butchering business, the court could not say that $2,000 was unconscionable. Canady v. Knox [Wash.] 86 P. 930.

60. Agreement not to engage in competing butcher business. Canady v. Knox [Wash.] 86 P. 930. Where actual damages from delay in completing a store building were in-tract for labor by which a certain portion of the price is held back by the employer to guaranty completion of the work" stipulates for a penalty and not for liquidated damages.[61]

§ 2. Rights and liabilities to penalties and forfeitures, and the policy of the law.[62]—Provisions for forfeitures are viewed with disfavor by the law and hence are strictly construed.[63] The terms of a contract will therefore not be extended by construction so as to include grounds for forfeiture not specified in it.[64] If a forfeiture is dependent upon the giving of a written notice, it must appear that such notice was given in compliance with the contract both as to time and contents.[65] A forfeiture may be waived by conduct inconsistent with an intention to enforce it.[66]

Statutory penalties.[67]—The rule of strict construction is particularly applicable to penal statutes;[68] hence, these apply only in cases falling squarely within their terms.[69] No one can have any vested right in an unenforced statutory penalty,[70] and hence, the legislature may repeal laws providing therefor so as to affect pending suits,[71] or may limit the amount of recovery in such actions.[72] The repeal of a Federal penal statute extinguishes no penalties or forfeitures previously incurred capable or extremely difficult of calculation, a provision for a certain sum for each day's delay was one for liquidated damages and not for a penalty. Neblett v. McGraw [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 496, 91 S. W. 309. Where a contract for the exchange of merchandise for land provided that either party should forfeit $500 as liquidated damages if he failed to carry out the agreement, such provision was not to be construed as a penalty. Howard v. Adkins [Ind.] 78 N. E. 665.

61. Railroad contract. Henderson-Boyd Lumber Co. v. Cook [Ala.] 42 So. 838.

62. See 6 C. L. 997.

63. Provision in a deed by executors and trustees that grantee should not erect certain buildings "under penalty of the forfeiture of the said lot to the parties of the first part or their assigns" while equivalent to a provision for re-entry (Richter v. Distelhurst, 101 N. Y. S. 634), could not be construed to authorize re-entry by heirs of the trustee and hence was unenforceable (Id.).

64. Where fraud and deceit was not named as one of the grounds in contract for purchase of land. Bennett v. Glaspell [N. D.] 107 N. W. 45.

65. Where it did not appear that certain land owners gave a written notice which would authorize them to take charge of a railroad upon default of the company for thirty days thereafter. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Haas [Ga.] 56 S. E. 313.

66. Where pending trial of a traverse of an inquisition in forcible detainer proceedings, the landlord accepted rent both in arrear and in advance and the traverse was dismissed, a forfeiture for the tenant's failure to pay rent was thereby waived. Marshall v. Davis, 28 Ky. L. R. 1327, 91 S. W. 714.

67. See 6 C. L. 998.

68. Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, providing a forfeiture of $5,000 for wrongful death is penal and must be strictly construed. Carey v St. Louis Transit Co., 116 Mo. App. 235, 91 S. W. 419. City ordinance imposing a penalty for hindering or delaying cars by using other vehicles on a switch track should be construed to relate only to an unreasonable hindrance or delay and not to a reasonable use of the street by adjacent owners. Dulaney v. United R. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 45. A. 45.

69. The Texas statute (Sayles Rev. Civ. St. §§ 4497-4499), penalizing carriers for failure to furnish cars on demand does not apply to applications for cars for through interstate shipments in part on other lines. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Loving [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 150, 98 S. W. 451. Where it appeared that the order only required the carrier to furnish the cars "as soon as possible" plaintiff could recover neither the penalty nor damages based only on failure to furnish the cars on such order within the time specified by statute. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Shipman [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 152, 98 S. W. 449. 24 St. at L. p. 1, imposing a penalty on a carrier for damage to freight does not require the claimant to demand interest; and where he sues for the actual amount of damage without interest, and recovers the amount claimed, he is entitled to the penalty. Abrahams v. Columbia, etc., R. Co., 73 S. C. 542, 53 S. E. 819. Statute constitutional. Id.

70. Penalty for failure of administrator to file inventory within twelve months before suit brought. Atwood v. Buckingham, 78 Conn. 423, 62 A. 616.

71. Atwood v. Buckingham, 78 Conn. 423, 62 A. 616. Gen. St. 1902, § 1, provides that the repeal of an act shall not affect pending suits for penalties or forfeitures incurred under the act repealed. Held, the repeal of § 324, providing a penalty for the unexcused failure of an administrator to file an inventory within twelve months before suit brought to recover the penalty, did not affect an action pending at the time to recover the penalty under such section (Id.), but it did prevent the institution of any new actions, for any such delinquencies, past or future. Id.

72. Act July 6, 1905 (Pub. Acts 1905, p. 413, c. 217), providing the amount recoverable in actions pending to recover a penalty against an administrator for failure to file an inventory as provided by Gen. St. 1902, § 324, was not unconstitutional because retroactive, such legislation not being prohibited by the constitution. Atwood v. Buckingham, 78 Conn. 423, 62 A. 616. Did not impair vested rights (Id.), or the oblithereunder unless there is an express extinguishing clause in the repealing act.[73] A statute imposing a penalty for a wrongful act, to be enforced by an action in the name of the state, does not deprive the injured party of his civil action for damages.[74]

Relief from forfeitures.[75]—A court of equity will relieve from a forfeiture resulting from fraud,[76] accident, or misake,[77] if the applicant is free from negligence,[78] and no injustice results to other parties;[79] but in the absence of any such equities, relief will not be granted from a forfeiture based on contract if the measure of compensation is uncertain.[80] The doctrine in regard to the power of equity to relieve from the forfeiture of a leasehold in certain cases regardless of fraud, accident, or mistake, presupposes justice to the lessor, and will not be so applied as to subject him to loss.[81] One who comes into equity for relief, from a default in not paying money must be willing to pay what he owes and cannot simply plead the statute of limitations.[82]

It is provided by statute in North Dakota that one who has incurred a forfeiture under a contract may be relieved therefrom by making compensation unless the breach is grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent.[83]

Cumulative penalties [84] are not allowed unless clearly provided for by the statute.[85] An ordinance may lawfully provide that a continuance of a breach thereof gation of contract (Id.), nor encroach upon the judiciary (Id.), or deny plaintiffs in pending suits the equal protection of the laws. Id. The act applied to pending actions. Id.

73. Rev. St. § 13 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 61), providing that the repeal of any statute shall not extinguish any penalty, forfeiture or liability incurred thereunder, unless the repealing act shall expressly so provide, was not an attempt to curtail the power of succeeding congresses, but merely a new rule of construction of statutes thereafter enacted to be followed only until abrogated by some later congress. United States v. Standard Oil Co., 148 F. 719. Section 10 of the rate law of June 29, 1906 (34 St. 595, c. 3591), repealing all laws in conflict therewith, but providing that it shall not affect "causes now pending," did not relieve offenders under the old law from subsequent prosecution while leaving those previously indicted subject to punishment, but merely prescribed the rule of procedure in pending causes. Id.

74. Code 1902, § 2166, penalizing a carrier for refusing to check baggage does not prevent a passenger from suing for damages suffered, especially since § 2208 provides that the chapter shall not be construed to affect such suits. Sullivan v. Southern R. Co., 74 S. C. 377, 54 S. E. 586.

75. See 6 C. L. 998.

76. Purchase of a tax title with view of procuring a lease held not such fraud on tenant in possession as would entitle him to relief from forfeiture for failure to pay taxes. Kann v. King, 27 S. Ct. 213. The act of a landlord in accepting as a new tenant the purchaser of an irredeemable tax title to the property is not such a fraud on the tenant in possession as entitles him to relief from a forfeiture of the lease for his failure to pay the taxes, especially where the tenant refused an offer of the landlord to condone the forfeiture if the tenant would commence proceedings to have the tax title declared invalid and would secure the landlord from loss. Id.

77. Lessee who had expended a large sum for improvements and established a valuable good will held entitled to injunction restraining lessor from taking possession for failure to serve notice of renewal where such failure was due to lessee's being delayed in a foreign country, and there was a delay of only nineteen days from which lessor suffered no injury. Doepfner v. Bowers, 102 N. Y. S. 920.

78. No relief from forfeiture of lease for failure to pay taxes where lessee was guilty of gross negligence. Kann v. King, 27 S. Ct. 213.

79. No relief from forfeiture of lease for tenant's failure to pay taxes where it would require landlord to engage in a contest as to validity of a tax deed. Kann v. King, 27 S. Ct. 213.

80. Breach of condition in respect of leasehold. Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. [C. C. A.] 140 F. 801.

81. The general power of equity to relieve from a forfeiture of a lease upon payment of full compensation by the defaulting party, even if conceded to apply to collateral covenants, cannot be so exercised as to compel an owner to risk the loss of his property by engaging in a contest involving the validity of an irredeemable tax title brought into existence by the tenant's failure to pay taxes. 83. Under Rev. Codes 1899, § 4970, plaintiff held entitled to relief from forfeiture in suit for specific performance. Bennett v. Glaspell [N. D.] 107 N. W. 45.

84. See 6 C. L. 999.

85. Code Civ. Proc. § 4814, authorizing a joinder of causes of action for penalties incurred "under the fisheries, game, and for-

for each day following notice shall constitute a distinct offense,[86] and cumulative penalties for the breach of such ordinance may be recovered in one action.[87] Where an offense is continuous, it is improper to cumulate a penalty imposed by statute on account thereof.[88]

§ 3. Remedies and procedure.[89]—Laches may defeat the right of a party to enforce a forfeiture.[90] An action in a Federal court against a common carrier for damages for discrimination in violation of the Federal interstate commerce act is governed by the Federal statute of limitations controlling suits or prosecutions for penalties or forfeitures accruing under the laws of the United States.[91] When a person is entitled to a part of any penalty or forfeiture when recovered, he may join with the state in an action to recover it.[92] An action may not be brought in the name of a city without its consent.[93]

Forfeitures being usually harsh and oppressive and ordinarily capable of being enforced at law, courts of equity generally refuse to aid in their enforcement;[94] but there is no insuperable objection to their enforcement in equity in cases otherwise cognizable there when that is more consonant with justice and morality than to withhold equitable relief,[95] and there is no adequate remedy at law.[96] The equity presented by such a suit must be strong enough to overcome the general indisposition of chancery courts toward granting such relief.[97] Equity will not enforce ests law," does not permit the joinder of causes for penalties for adulteration of milk in violation of the Agricultural Law (Laws 1893, c. 338). People v. Koster, 50 Misc. 46, 97 N. Y. S. 829. Under Laws 1902, p. 1135, c. 482, § 1, amending Laws 1896, p. 329, c. 376, § 29, prohibiting one from having in his possession milk cans belonging to a dealer without his consent, and imposing a penalty of $50 "for every such violation," one having in his possession more than one can is liable for only one penalty in view of the strict construction required to be given a penalty statute, notwithstanding previous legislation on the subject imposing a penalty for each can. United States Condensed Milk Co. v. Smith, 101 N. Y. S. 129. Under Acts 29th Leg. p. 324, c. 133, imposing a penalty of $100 for each week a railroad fails to erect waterclosets at stations, a railroad is liable for a penalty of $100 for each week it fails to comply with the statute at any station in the county, but not for each station at which it so fails. Would not restrain railway companies from using right of way claimed to have been forfeited. Id. Equity cannot be invoked merely to enforce a forfeiture, or to divest an estate for breach of a subsequent condition against a vendee in possession. Thornton v. Natchez [Miss.] 41 So. 498. 97. Suit, the primary and only purpose of which is to establish a forfeiture as a matter of record and cancel a lease, is a suit in aid of a forfeiture. Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. [C. C. A.] 140 F. 801. Bill to establish forfeiture of and cancel a mining lease for lack of diligence on part of lessee, held to call for relief not obtainable at law and to entitle lessor to the relief sought. Id. Where a corporation tenant failed to erect an expensive building on the premises and after notice of forfeiture in accordance with the lease, was adjudged a bankrupt, held, on petition of the lessor the bankruptcy court properly decreed the enforcement of the forfeiture and directed a surrender of the property as the only effective protection for the

against a vendee a technical forfeiture of an executory contract for the sale of land if defendant offers to do equity in consideration of being restored to her contractual rights.[98]

One seeking to recover under a penal statute must allege and prove facts bringing the case strictly within its terms,[99] and where a penalty is entirely unknown to the common law, the precise amount fixed by the statute must be demanded in the complaint.[1] A mere reference to a statute is not sufficient where it contains several provisions each reciting different facts upon which a penalty may be predicated.[2] A statute imposing a penalty to be recovered in the name of the state "in addition" to damages to any person injured does not require proof of any private injury as a condition to recovery of the penalty.[3] Ordinarily a judgment for a penalty does not bear interest.[4]

PENSIONS.[5]

Questions as to whether the statutory grounds for a pension exist,[6] who is entitled to the benefit of the pension,[7] and the amount thereof,[8] all depend upon the construction of the various statutes. It is competent for the legislature in providing for a pension fund from the revenues of the state to make the decision of the board of trustees placed in charge thereof final as to who is entitled to the benefit thereof.[9] Where the granting board acts in a quasi judicial capacity, its decision cannot, after the lapse of many years and in the absence of the petitioner, be set aside by another board as unsupported by the evidence.[10] Where the amount depends upon certain conditions and circumstances, it will be presumed prima facie that the officer charged with administering the fund considered such conditions and

The right of a policeman's widow to pension allowed her husband under city charter of San Francisco, art. 8, c. 10, § 11, subd. 9, depends upon the provisions of the first portion of section 6, and the concluding portion does not confer any rights but on the contrary creates a limitation upon rights which might otherwise exist. Burke v. San Francisco Police Relief & Pension Fund Trustees [Cal. App.] 87 P. 421. The amendment to the Illinois police pension act, providing for the continuance of the pension to the pensioner's widow, applies to the widow of one receiving a pension at the time the act was passed. Eddy v. People, 118 Ill. App. 138. Under a statute providing that where a position under the civil service is abolished the incumbent shall be entitled to re-employment if there is need for his services within a year, one dying within a year after the abolition of his position is considered as suspended and is entitled to pension. circumstances and that the amount allowed by him is covered.[11] An exemption of pension funds from seizure in legal proceedings exempts such funds from claims for support and maintenance in the past;[12] but where the support of an incompetent is a charge against his estate, pension funds should be applied to his present support.[13] The assignment of a cause of action for the conversion of a pension check and the proceeds thereof is not prohibited by the Federal statute relating to exemptions of pension funds from legal seizure.[14] Upon the death of a Federal pensioner's widow, an accrued pension goes to her children free from any claim for her debts.[15]

The remedy of one claiming error in fixing the amount of his pension is by mandamus,[16] but the writ will not issue against a respondent who has parted with the funds pursuant to law.[17] An averment that there is in the official custody of the defendant "more than sufficient money applicable to" the petitioner's claim is merely an amount of a legal conclusion and is limited by the facts upon which the claim is based,[18] and the law applicable thereto and an averment of contribution to a pension fund is not sustained by proof that the money was retained pursuant to statute act of a salary.[19] On demurrer to a petition for mandamus to compel the reinstatement of a pension, it will be presumed that the board that granted the pension kept a record as required by law,[20] and that such record shows a finding and adjudication in the petitioner's favor as alleged,[21] and averments entitling the petitioner to relief are not overcome by an informal notice, recited in the petition, of suspension of the pensioner for lack of evidence.[22] Mandamus is properly denied where it appears that a claim greater than the amount actually due has been audited and allowed and it does not appear that the petitioner has ever demanded the money on such claim so allowed and no reason is shown why he has not received it.[23]

statute.[39] It must allege the oath,[40] the occasion on which it was taken,[41] the authority of the officer administering it, unless such authority is judicially known from his office,[42] though it need not name him,[43] the substance of the alleged false testimony,[44] its willful [45] falsity,[46] and the facts from which its materiality will appear.[47] Where the alleged perjury was on trial of a criminal prosecution, the alleged crime must be so stated as to show that it was such,[48] but it is immaterial that defects in the indictment on which such trial was had are shown.[49] A number of false statements relating to the same matter may be alleged,[50] and proof upon one justifies conviction,[51] but each should be separately alleged and traversed.[52] Indictment for false denial that defendant did not see a certain crime committed need not state the county in which such crime was committed.[53]

Variance as in other cases is not fatal unless as to a material matter.[54]

39. Must conclude that accused, in manner aforesaid, "wilfully and corruptly did commit wilful and corrupt perjury." Commonwealth v. Nailor, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 275.

40. The oath administered need not be set out where it appears that it was administered in open court. Lamar v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 392, 95 S. W. 509. Averment that one was "undue manner sworn" sufficient in Oregon. State v. Jewett [Or.] 85 P. 994.

41. Averments held sufficient to show that alleged perjured testimony was given on the trial of a case. State v. McLain [Wash.] 86 P. 388. Averment that oath was taken in election contest proceedings then being conducted "under and in accordance with the law" sufficiently shows that the notice prerequisite to the taking of depositions in such a contest had been given Commonwealth v. Coakley, 29 Ky. L. R. 948, 96 S. W. 876. Alleged false affidavit set out held sufficiently connected with averments as to its making. State v. Jewett [Or.] 85 P. 994. Oregon state land board being a constitutional board its authority to act in a particular matter need not be alleged. Id.

42. The indictment need not allege the authority of the clerk of a court of record to administer the oath to witnesses therein. State v. Harter [Iowa] 108 N. W. 232.

43. An averment that the oath was administered by "the duly authorized clerk" of a certain court of record is sufficient. State v. Harter [Iowa] 108 N. W. 232.

44. In stating alleged false testimony the questions to which it was in answer need not be set out. Lamar v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 392, 95 S. W. 509. The false testimony on which perjury is assigned should be set out as nearly as possible in the words of the witness, and no testimony not deemed false and material should be set out. Higgins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 354, 97 S. W. 1054.

45. Must allege scienter. Adams v. Com., 29 Ky. L. R. 683, 94 S. W. 664. Averments of knowledge of falsity held sufficient. State v. Jewett [Or.] 85 P. 994.

46. "Whereas it was true as accused well knew that" stating the negative of the testimony alleged, is sufficient. Commonwealth v. Schwieters, 29 Ky. L. R. 417, 93 S. W. 592. Alleged testimony that accused did not see a certain game is falsified by an averment that he did see it. Lamar v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 392, 95 S. W. 509. Averments held sufficient to negative alleged false affidavit by applicant for public land that application was for his own benefit. Not necessary to set out terms of contract by applicant to sell. State v. Jewett [Or.] 85 P. 994.

47. Averment that it was material whether a third person knew certain facts and that accused falsely testified that he heard such person state that he did not know them is insufficient. Rosebud v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 98 S. W. 868. Averment that on prosecution against accused it became material whether he was at a certain place at a certain time is sufficient. State v. McLain [Wash.] 86 P. 388. Information charging perjury on inquiry whether accused "had seen" certain persons gambling is insufficient. Barton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 568, 95 S. W. 110; Gallegos v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 630, 95 S. W. 123. The substance of the issue must be alleged so that the materiality of the alleged false testimony is apparent. Averment merely that a certain fact was material held insufficient. State v. Argo [Tenn.] 100 S. W. 106.

48. Information for perjury on trial for gambling held insufficient for failure to sufficiently show that the alleged gambling was not at a private residence. Barton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 568, 95 S. W. 110. Information for perjury on trial for gaming held insufficient because not alleging any wager on card game. Gallegos v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 630, 95 S. W. 123.

49. Indictment is not vitiated by averment that perjured testimony was given on trial for two offenses which could not be properly joined. Gardner v. State [Ark.] 97 S. W. 48.

53. Sweat v. Com., 29 Ky. L. R. 1067, 96 S. W. 843.

54. Mistake as to given name of person suborned held not fatal. Henderson v. Com., 28 Ky. L. R. 1212, 91 S. W. 1141. Variance between indictment for perjury on trial for two offenses and proof that the trial was for one of them not fatal under statute that only objections to indictment affecting substantial rights shall avail. Gardner v. State [Ark.] 97 S. W. 48. Evidence held to substantially sustain averment of indictment as to alleged perjured testimony relating to commission of larceny by third persons.

Admissibility of evidence.[55]—The alleged false testimony may be proved by any person who heard it given.[56] Appointment of officer administering oath may be shown by secondary evidence if order of appointment is lost.[57] The rules applicable to other crimes apply in respect to evidence to prove the falsity of the testimony,[58] and defendant's knowledge thereof.[59] False testimony on another occasion actuated by the same motive cannot be shown,[60] nor can facts tending to show knowledge of facts distinct from those of which defendant is accused of falsely denying knowledge.[61] The indictment on trial of which the alleged perjury was committed is admissible,[62] and on trial for perjury before grand jury, the indictment found in the case then under consideration.[63] The mental and physical condition of accused as bearing on his powers of memory at the time of the alleged perjured testimony may be shown.[64]

Sufficiency of evidence.[65]—The prosecution must prove the taking of the oath [66] before the officer named,[67] and his authority,[68] and where perjury is alleged on trial for offense against an ordinance, the ordinance must be proved.[69] On indictment for false swearing, the proceedings in which the false oath was made need not be shown.[70] Sufficiency of the information on trial of which the alleged perjured testimony was given, ruled at such trial, cannot be again raised on the trial for perjury.[71] The evidence of the falsity of the testimony counted on must be direct,[72] and consist of proof by two witnesses or one witness with corroborating circumstances;[73] but the corroboration need not be equivalent to the direct testimony of another witness,[74] or sufficient of itself to sustain a conviction.[75] The rule requiring two witnesses does not apply to a prosecution for subornation.[76] As in other cases, corroboration of an accomplice is generally required.[77]

Instructions[78] as in other cases must confine the jury to the accusation[79] and submit all defenses of which there is evidence,[80] and must not assume matters in issue.[81] An instruction as to the necessity of two witnesses or their equivalent need not be given unless requested.[82]

PERPETUITIES AND ACCUMULATIONS.

§ 1. The Rule Against Perpetuities and Accumulations; Its Nature and Applications (1348).
§ 2. Computation of the Period and Remoteness of Particular Limitations (1350). Charitable Gifts (1352). Accumulations of Income (1352).
§ 3. Operation and Effect, Complete and Partial Invalidity (1352).

§ 1. The rule against perpetuities and accumulations; its nature and applications.[83]—Whenever a contract raises an equitable right in property which the obligee can enforce in chancery by a decree for specific performance, such right is subject to the rule against perpetuities.[84]

The suspension prohibited is such as arises from the terms of the instrument by which the estate is created, and not such as exists outside of it,[85] and the prohibition is directed toward the suspension of the power when exercised by those who hold or control the estate or some interest therein, and not to provisions limiting a naked power to sell given to one without any interest whatever, as an executor.[86] defendant's presence held insufficient in connection with conflicting statements by defendant to show falsity of denial that he saw it. Billingsley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 95 S. W. 520.

74. Stamper v. Com. [Ky.] 100 S. W. 286. Testimony of custodian of record and return of officer on execution held sufficient to disprove testimony as to recording of deed. Id.

75. The corroborating evidence need not be sufficient of itself to sustain a conviction but must tend to connect accused with the offense. Nance v. State, 126 Ga. 95, 54 S. E. 932.

76. Boren v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 801.

77. The officer is not an accomplice because he knew of the falsity of the affidavit. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 939, 93 S. W. 547. Evidence of falsity of testimony to support an alibi of a third person held insufficient to corroborate accomplice. People v. Smith [Cal. App.] 84 P. 452.

Option contract for purchase of land good for one year and providing for extending it for another year on payment of stipulated sum, and that optionee "may have this option and agreement so extended from year to year upon the payment of said sum annually as aforesaid," and extending its provisions to heirs, assigns, executors, and administrators of both parties, held void since it could be extended to period beyond that allowed. Id. Contract being illegal from its inception, held that it was given no vitality by payments made and received for annually extending it. Id. Similar contract providing that optionees "may have this option and agreement extended upon the payment of said sum annually as aforesaid," the words "from year to year" being omitted, held void. Starcher Bros. v. Duty [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 527.

85. Fact that some of interested parties were minors, incapable of executing valid conveyances except by intervention of court, held not to bring case within prohibition.

86. In re Campbell's Estate [Cal.] 87 P. 573. Provision giving executor mere naked power of sale with a direction to hold property for a specified price until testator's daughter reached age of twenty-one, or, if she died sooner, until she would have reached that age if she had lived, held not a violation of Code, §§ 715, 716, it not affecting the general power of alienation by executor under order of court, or by persons to whom property was given. Id.

The validity of any future estate depends upon the certainty of its vesting within the prescribed period,[87] which certainty must exist at the time of its creation.[88] An interest is not obnoxious to the rule if it begins within the prescribed period, although it may extend beyond that limit.[89] The mere fact that a contingent interest may be released by a person in being and that a good title may thus be made is not enough to take the case out of the rule.[90] Where the interests vest immediately, the rule is not violated by reason of the fact that enjoyment is postponed to a time beyond the period prescribed.[91] A trust to pay annuities does not operate as a suspension of the power of alienation,[92] except where such annuities are not assignable.[93] The fact that a will creating a trust for two lives also provides for the payment of a fixed annuity to a third person does not render it void, it not preventing the vesting of the estate.[94]

A suspension of the power of alienation as to realty and of absolute ownership as to personalty occurs only when there are no persons in being by whom an absolute estate in possession can be conveyed.[95]

Power held a mere naked one not coupled with any interest. Id.

87. Brown v. Columbia Finance & Trust Co. [Ky.] 97 S. W. 421. Is not sufficient that limitation be capable of taking effect within prescribed period, but must be so framed as to take effect ex necessitate within that period, if at all. Gray v. Whittemore [Mass.] 78 N. E. 422. Will gave property in trust to pay income to wife for life, and then to daughter for life, and upon death of latter to divide same between her issue, and provided that on her death without issue, or in case all such issue should die under age of twenty-one, property should go to others. Held that trust was void, there being a probability that it would be measured by more than two lives. In re Bruchaeser's Estate, 49 Misc. 194, 98 N. Y. S. 937. If contingency on which estate is to vest must certainly happen within period, it does not offend rule. Keeler v. Lauer [Kan.] 85 P. 541. Provision creating trust which was to terminate when youngest child arrived at age of twenty-one, when property was to pass to children, held valid under common-law rule in force in absence of statute, since contingency must happen within twenty-one years. Id.

88. Estate will be void when this certainty does not exist at time of its creation, though subsequent events so happen that it could vest after that period. Brown v. Columbia Finance & Trust Co. [Ky.] 97 S. W. 421. Testator devised realty in trust to use of daughter for life with remainder to such of her children as she might appoint, or in default of appointment to her heirs. Daughter appointed property to her six children for life with remainder over. Held that attempted limitation of their estate to life estate with remainder over was void under St. 1903, § 2360, regardless of fact that all of such children were living at time of original testator's death, since mother might have had children born after that time who would have survived her. Id. Where, by terms of an instrument creating an estate, there may be an unlawful suspension, limitation is void though it turns out by subsequent events that no actual suspension beyond the prescribed period would have taken place. People's Trust Co. v. Flynn, 113 App. Div. 683, 99 N. Y. S. 979. Fact that widow elected to take dower held not to authorize elimination of provision in will for her benefit in determining question of suspension of power of alienation by trust in which such provision was contained. 92. Trust to pay out of income of personalty annuities to seven annuitants during their respective lives held valid at common law. Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 185 N. Y. 485, 75 N. E. 359.

93. Trust to pay out of income of personalty annuities to seven annuitants during their respective lives held invalid under Laws 1897, p. 507, c. 417, § 2, as suspending absolute ownership for more than two lives in being, such an annuity being inalienable. Robb v. Washington and Jefferson College, 185 N. Y. 485, 78 N. E. 359. Fact that ultimate remainder was to charity held not to change rule. Id.

95. Real property law, § 32. In re Bray, 102 N. Y. S. 989. Gift to brother of use of property until last of testator's children should become of age, the property then to be sold and proceeds divided equally between children, held not to suspend power of alienation, remainder in children being vested and there being persons in being who could pass indefeasible title at any time with immediate possession. Id. Test of alienability is whether or not there are persons in being who can give perfect title, and rule has no application where there are living persons who have unitedly the entire power of disposition free and untrameled. Graham v. Graham, 49 Misc. 4, 97 N. Y. S. 779. Not where remaindermen and life tenants can together give good title if they desire to do so. Id. Gift of residue of personal estate in trust to pay certain specified annuities to three persons for their

An estate which cannot be created by direct devise without violating the rule cannot be created through the intervention of a power of appointment.[96]

The New York statute permits the creation of only two life estates in the same property.[97] Each undivided share of a tenant in common must, in such case, be treated as a separate entity, and under the statute is entitled to is own separate tenant for two lives.[98]

The validity of a trust is to be determined by the laws of the state where the trustee resides, the property is to be held, and the trust administered.[99] A trust in favor of a foreign corporation, valid under the laws of the state where the corporation is domiciled and of the state where the testator resided and the property is situated, will be upheld by the courts of the latter state under the doctrine of comity.[1]

§ 2. Computation of the period and remoteness of particular limitations.[2]—Limitations or conditions in wills suspending the power of alienation are deemed created at the death of the testator.[3] The period during which the absolute right of alienation may be suspended by an instrument in execution of a power must be computed not from the date of such instrument, but from the creation of the power.[4] Though the statute prohibits suspension for more than two lives, an entire lives, the trustee having power to use principal for that purpose if necessary, held not a trust to receive income and apply it to any person, and hence interests of annuitants were assignable under Laws 1897, p. 508, c. 417, § 3, and absolute ownership was not suspended. Wells v. Squires, 102 N. Y. S. 597. Where it distinctly appeared by terms of will itself that deed executed by life tenants and remaindermen would convey an absolute title in fee, held that there was no restraint upon alienation or violation of rule against perpetuities. Thieler v. Rayner, 100 N. Y. S. 993. Power of alienation is not suspended when there are persons in being by whom an absolute interest in possession can be conveyed. Civ. Code, § 716. In re Campbell's Estate [Cal.] 87 P. 573. Where no trust is created and legal effect is to vest present title to entire fee in persons ascertained and in being, though different interests or rights are given to each, interest of each can be conveyed immediately and collective transfers of all of them will convey absolute fee and there is no suspension. Id.

96. Effect of execution of power is to make such act in effect that of the original testator. Brown v. Columbia Finance & Trust Co. [Ky.] 97 S. W. 421.

97. Laws 1896, p. 565, c. 547, § 33. Graham v. Graham, 49 Misc. 4, 97 N. Y. S. 779. Where three sisters were given use and occupancy of premises during term "that they each or the survivors and survivor of them" remained unmarried, held that on death of one of them survivors took life estate in common in her share, which would continue until one of them died or married, when limit of statute as to that share would be reached, and fee would be released from life estate as to it. Id. Statute not violated by gift to husband for life, then in trust for benefit of two sons for life, with ultimate remainder to grandchildren, legal estate in trustees not being two life estates. 1. Testamentary trust in favor of a New York cemetery association for perpetual maintenance of cemetery lot, permitted by laws of that state, will be upheld by courts of District of Columbia, where testatrix was domiciled at time of her death and where property from which trust fund was created was situated, trusts for that purpose in favor of domestic corporations being authorized by Code D. C. § 669. Iglehart v. Iglehart, 27 S. Ct. 329, afg. 26 App. D. C. 209.

2. See 6 C. L. 1004.

3. Trust to continue during life of son and of all of his children living at time of testator's death, which could, under certain circumstances, end sooner but could not exist longer held not to violate Civ. Code, § 715, prohibiting suspension by any condition or limitation whatever for a longer period than continuation of lives in being at the creation of the limitation or condition. In re Lux's Estate [Cal.] 85 P. 147. Fact that by reason of provision requiring that, on termination of trust, property be divided between son's children then living, children born after testator's death and before termination of trust would be entitled to share, held immaterial. Id.

4. Laws 1896, p. 583, c. 547, § 158. Where will suspended power of alienation of realty during lives of testator's two daughters attempted exercise of power of appointment by survivor whereby she directed that property be held in trust for life of certain person with remainder to persons who could not be determined until death of latter, held invalid as suspending power of alienation for three lives. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Kip, 102 N. Y. S. 137. Statute is made applicable to suspension of absolute ownership of personalty by Laws 1897, p. 507, c. 417, § 2. In re Pillsbury's Will, 113 App. Div. 893, 99 N. Y. S. 62. Provisions of will attempting to execute power of appointment created by will must be tested by reading them into estate may be held in trust for one beneficiary for life, and on his death may then be divided into shares, each of which may be held in trust for a second separate life.[5] The construction of deeds[6] and wills[7] for the purpose of determining whether the language used therein attempts to create estates void under the rule is treated elsewhere. Applications of the rule to particular estates will be found in the note.[8] will creating power, and hence attempt to postpone absolute ownership of personalty by lives not in being at death of maker of will creating power is void. Id.

5. Not necessary that whole corpus be released at end of any two lives. In re Mount's Will, 185 N. Y. 162, 77 N. E. 999. Testatrix gave residue in trust to pay income to sister for life, and directed that on latter's death share should be set apart for each of the living children of nephew and for issue of each who had died leaving issue, income to be paid to each child for life with remainder to his issue, and principal of shares set apart for issue of deceased children to be paid to them on reaching age of twenty-five. Held that as to share of children living at death of testatrix, suspension was only for two lives, and validity of trust as to them would not be affected by invalidity of trust for benefit of afterborn children. Id. Will held to create valid separable trust estates for life of each of testator's children, with remainder over to their children, in absence of exercise of powers of appointment. Fischer v. Langlotz, 100 N. Y. S. 578. Will giving residue in trust to pay income to testator's three sons until youngest attained age of twenty-five, or would have attained it if living, with discretionary power in trustees to then pay over corpus, and in case of death of son without issue before receiving his share of corpus, his share to go to testator's brother, but in case he left issue, then to them, held valid, interests of sons being separable, and distinct, and will to be construed as though it had in terms created separate trusts for each son and his issue. Cushman v. Cushman, 102 N. Y. S. 258.

8. Provisions held valid: Testatrix devised land to S. for life, remainder to "my heirs in Switzerland," but only after payment by them to heirs of S. for any improvements made by him. Held that heirs referred to were heirs of testatrix living at her death, and, since payment was to be made by them in their lifetime, rule was not violated. Hill v. Gianelli, 221 Ill. 286, 77 N. E. 458. Since, under treaty with Switzerland, residents of that country acquiring land in U. S. by devise have only three years in which to dispose of it, held that gift could not create perpetuity. Id. Neglect of heirs to pay for improvements would not create perpetuity, but merely defeat their title. Id. Will provided that part of estate should be held by trustees after daughter's death during lives of her children, and that income should be paid to latter, and that at their death capital should be paid to their children as they respectively attained age of twenty-one, said grandchildren to take by right of representation and to receive income of their shares until reaching that age. Held that grandchildren were not to be treated as members of one class and considered together, so that whole provision would be invalid, but that share of each child of daughter was to be considered separately, so that remainders to children of children of daughter born during testator's lifetime, were valid though those to children of afterborn children were void. Minot v. Doggett, 190 Mass. 345, 77 N. E. 629. Where testator gave residue in trust to pay income to such of his children as should survive him, held that limitation over directly to issue of such of them as should die without leaving surviving husband or wife was valid. Gray v. Whittemore [Mass.] 78 N. E. 422. Contract whereby plaintiff was to dispose of property of defendant's testator, using his best judgment in the matter which was to be binding on testator, and providing that it should bind and be carried out by testator's executors, held not to violate rule, plaintiff not being entitled to delegate his authority or to make illegal contracts. Mills v. Smith [Mass.] 78 N. E. 765. Will held to create valid trust to continue until death of named beneficiary and his wife. Cole v. Lee, 143 Mich. 267, 12 Det. Leg. N. 975, 106 N. W. 855. Provision that upon death of testator's two children trust property should descend to their heirs held to control previous provision that it should be held in trust during lives of children and testator's wife, so that trust did not violate Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 797, limiting suspension to period of two lives in being. Foster v. Stevens [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 742, 109 N. W. 265. Testator gave residue in trust for certain beneficiaries for their respective lives, and, on death of any beneficiary, in trust for his children and issue of any deceased child living at time of his death, "his, her, or their executors, administrators, and assigns." Held that, on death of life tenant, corpus of his share vested absolutely in his issue, trust designated in will in favor of latter being mere dry or passive one, and hence gift was not void. Denison v. Denison, 185 N. Y. 438, 78 N. E. 162. Valid trust in favor of children with remainder in fee to their issue held not rendered invalid by provision of codicil directing executors not to turn over property to trustees until five years after testator's death, and making them trustees in meantime with all powers given trustees anywhere in will. Clark v. Goodridge, 51 Misc. 140, 100 N. Y. S. 824. Devise in trust to apply proceed to benefit of children until youngest reached age of twenty-five held valid, trust being measured by life, or less time of testator's youngest child, and would be terminated by death of such child before reaching such age. Burke v. O'Brien, 100 N. Y. S. 1048. Will giving husband legal life estate, and creating trust in remainder for benefit of two sons for their lives, with ultimate remainder to grandchildren of testatrix living at death of both sons, held

Charitable gifts.[9]—The rule does not ordinarily apply to charitable gifts.[10] Statutes in some states authorize trusts for the perpetual maintenance of cemetery lots, monuments, and the like.[11] In New York in the case of bequests to charitable uses, ownership and the power of alienation may be suspended during a period necessary to form a corporation, not exceeding two lives in being at the death of the testator, to take the bequest which in such circumstances is valid as an executory devise or bequest.[12]

Accumulations of income.[13]—By statute in New York the accumluation of income is limited to the period of minority,[14] but where there is a valid bequest to a charitable corporation to be formed after testator's death and no direction as to income accruing prior to its formation, it will take the same as an increment of the principal.[15]

§ 3. Operation and effect, complete and partial invalidity.[16]—A contract in violation of the rule is void from its inception, and everything done by either of the parties thereto designed to carry it into effect which is auxiliary thereto must be considered as unauthorized and inoperative.[17] Invalid provisions in a will may be rejected without in any manner affecting valid ones, where they are in fact inde-

not to unlawfully suspend power of alienation, since at death of sons all parts of absolute fee would vest somewhere whether husband survived them or not. In re Hurlbut's Estate, 51 Misc. 263, 100 N. Y. S. 1098. Provision in deed that grantee should not have power to alienate land until youngest child begotten of her by her then husband should reach age of twenty-one, if a son, or should marry, if a daughter, held valid, restraint being necessarily limited to life of grantee. Berry v. Spivey [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 11, 97 S. W. 511.

Provisions held void: Provision in will giving land to heirs of first taker that it "is never to be sold" held void under St. 1903, § 2360, though similar restriction on power of alienation by first taker was valid. Robison v. Gray, 29 Ky. L. R. 1296, 97 S. W. 347. Instrument whereby grantee of realty agreed to hold same in trust for use and benefit of the estate of G., and also for use and benefit of herself and two other persons, and for their respective heirs, executors, and administrators, held void under Laws 1896, c. 547, p. 565, § 32, if regarded as an active trust, it being intended to continue indefinitely. Gueutal v. Gueutal, 113 App. Div. 310, 98 N. Y. S. 1002. Will gave property in trust with directions to pay income to children for life, and, after the death of the last of them, and the lapse of ten years from the date when testatrix's youngest grandchild should come of age, to divide principal among grandchildren. Held that interest of grandchildren was contingent, and gift to them void. In re Kountz's Estate, 213 Pa. 390, 62 A. 1103.

10. Bequest in trust to manage estate until certain sum was accumulated, and then to use part of principal to erect school for boys, and income of balance for its maintenance, held not to offend rule because of perpetuity in first taker, or to be void for remoteness. Tincher v. Arnold [C. C. A.] 147 F. 665.

11. District of Columbia Code, § 669, is not nullified by § 1023, relating to perpetuites by reason of fact that latter section does not expressly exempt from its operation trusts authorized by former. Iglehart v. Iglehart, 27 S. Ct. 329, afg. 26 App. D. C. 209.

12. Gift held valid without regard to whether Laws 1893, p. 1748, c. 701, relating to gifts for charitable uses, was valid or not. St. John v. Andrewa Institute, 102 N. Y. S. 808.

St. [1st Ed.] p. 726, pt. 2, c. 1, tit. 2, §§ 37, 38. In re Hoyt, 101 N. Y. S. 557. Gift to remaindermen of surplus income which trustees might determine was not necessary for use of daughter held invalid Id. Provisions in will directing application of surplus income to payment of mortgages on testator's realty, and investment of surplus income in bond and mortgage until termination of two lives on which trust depended, held invalid. Kirk v. McCann, 101 N. Y. S. 1093. Decrees of surrogate on accounting, approving application of surplus income in accordance with provisions of will, held conclusive as to income previously so applied and included in accounts as against parties having notice of the proceedings, though provisions of will were invalid as directing unlawful accumulation, but not as to application of subsequent accumulations in regard to which they contained no directions. Id. Provision directing accumulation held void. Fischer v. Langlotz, 100 N. Y. S. 578. Provision in will held not a provision for accumulation of income of personalty, but merely testator's advice or suggestion as to management of fund previously given absolutely. Morgan v. Durand, 101 N. Y. S. 1002.

pendent and are not for the carrying out of a common or general purpose,[18] but where they are so connected together as to constitute a general scheme, the rule is ordinarily otherwise.[19]

By statute in New York where there is a suspension of the power of alienation of realty or of the absolute ownership of personalty in consequence of a valid limitation of an expectant estate during the continuation of which the rents or income are undisposed of, and no valid direction for their accumulation is given, they go to the persons presumptively entitled to the next eventual estate.[20] Where, however, a direction for an accumulation is void and there is some other and legal disposition of the rents and profits, the direction for accumulation should be eliminated from the will, the statute not applying to such a case.[21]

PETITORY ACTIONS.[22]

A petitory action is for the recovery of possession,[23] in which plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title,[24] though neither party can attack the title of a common author under whom they claim.[25] Only the possessory right to the property described can be litigated.[26] While plaintiff in a petitory action need not cumulate therewith a suit to annul a judicial proceeding which apparently divests his title, he cannot attack the same if it proves voidable only.[27] A general denial of defendant is not limited or controlled by a special answer of his warrantor.[28] Defendant may prove by parol [29] that the title pleaded to oust him is simulated.[30] While defendant may call in his warrantor and recover over,[31] such

Where remainder is limited to take effect upon the happening of either of two separate and distinct contingencies, either one of which, if it occurs, will exclude the existence of the other, the fact that remainder limited on one is void does not affect the validity of the other. Gray v. Whittemore [Mass.] 78 N. E. 422.

PIPE LINES AND SUBWAYS.[39]

Consent by municipality to the laying of electric cables and conduits in its streets is a grant of a franchise, and to be valid must be given by the proper municipal authorities.[40] It is within the police power of the state to modify the franchise of a subway company by requiring that plans of such subway be submitted to a municipal board within a limited time after the passage of the act,[41] and in the event of a failure to submit plans to authorize such board to devise a ground subway which all operators of underground electrical conductors should be bound to use.[42] Under a statute submitting the approval of subway routes to a court, it may make the approval conditional on construction of the line within a specified time so adjusted as to protect abutters,[43] but in a proceeding to approve the route only, conditions on the construction contract will not be imposed in the face of a provision for notice and public hearing before making such contract.[44] Injunction lies at suit of a township to restrain use of pipes laid in its highways without legislative authority,[45] but the owner of the fee whose property will be injured by the construction of a pipe line in the highway is not entitled to an injunction unless the injury is so great as to amount to the virtual taking of his property,[46] his remedy being an action at law for damages. Mandamus lies to compel subway company, which is required by its contract with the municipality to lease space to companies having "lawful power" to operate electrical conductors in the city, to grant a qualified applicant such space;[47] and a company operating under an assignment of a special franchise to operate electrical conductors, which assignment has been ratified by the acquiescence of the city, is a qualified applicant.[48] The construction of a pipe line in a public highway for the purpose of conveying natural gas does not impose an additional servitude upon the fee in the highway.[49] Subway companies while engaged in the work of construction in a public highway must use reasonable care to keep the highway safe for travel during the progress of the work,[50] and the fact that the work of construction is being carried on by an independent contractor does not relieve the company from liability for injuries caused by reason of its unsafe condition.[51] The conditions of a license to enter upon land for the purpose of constructing a pipe line must be complied with or such license will not constitute a defense to an action for trespass.[52] Under a law authorizing a city to collect a toll charge of one cent for each person passing through a subway, such charge may be collected from those who pass through only a part of such subway.[53] Tunnels located in public streets may be assessed and taxed, as real property.[54]

have abolished forms of action,[6] yet, since their substance remains unchanged, good pleading demands that all averments material to equitable rights of action be present and appropriately well pleaded. Conversely, matters of equity should be omitted from the pleadings in a purely equitable action,[7] and, so far as rights or procedure depend thereon under the codes, the parties will be held to the kind of action or defense they have pleaded.[8]

In code states the only proper pleadings are those designated by the code.[9] The allegations of the pleading and not the name by which it is called determine its character.[10] Pleadings must give the title of the case,[11] but the caption is no part of the pleading proper.[12]

A party may state his case in his own way, provided he conforms to the statutes and rules of court.[13] Where the court is of limited or special jurisdiction, facts bringing the cause within its jurisdiction must be alleged.[14] In local actions venue should be alleged.[15] One is not ordinarily bound to negative defenses,[16] except such as are apparent on the face of his pleading.[17] A party seeking to avail himself of a statutory action must by proper averments bring himself clearly within its provisions.[18] Foreign statutes must be pleaded if relied on.[19] In some states a pri-

6. See Equity, 7 C. L. 1323; Forms of Action, 7 C. L. 1769. Under Rev. St. 1887, § 4168, complaint is only required to contain title of the court and the cause, statement of facts constituting cause of action in ordinary and concise language, and demand for relief, and district court may grant such relief, whether in law or equity, as parties are entitled to under their allegations and proof. Coleman v. Jaggers [Idaho] 86 P. 894. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 539, it is sufficient if such facts appear as authorize judgment one way or another. Ackerman v. Green, 195 Mo. 124, 93 S. W. 255.

7. Code generally allows equitable defenses in actions at law. See § 3, post.

8. See 6 C. L. 1008, n. 92.

9. So called bill of particulars filed with complaint in action on special account for breach of contract, which did not refer to complaint and was not referred to therein, and which could not be said to be a particular description of that of which complaint contained sufficient general description as provided by rules of court, held a paper unknown to system of pleading and which could not be considered determining sufficiency of complaint. Puritan Mfg. Co. v. Bouteiller & Co. [Conn.] 64 A. 227. Is no such pleading as an "amended supplemental complaint." Horowitz v. Goodman, 112 App. Div. 13, 98 N. Y. S. 53. Order authorizing service of "amended and supplemental complaint" held irregular. Luckey v. Mockridge, 112 App. Div. 199, 98 N. Y. S. 335. Writing signed and acknowledged by one admitted to citizenship admitting that order admitting him and certificate of citizenship were obtained by fraud, and consenting to setting aside of order, filed in support of oral motion to that effect, held not a complaint within Code Civ. Proc. § 405, requiring civil actions to be commenced by filing a complaint and proceeding founded thereon could not be considered suit in equity. Tinn v. United States District Attorney, 148 Cal. 773, 84 P. 152.

10. Pleading called cross complaint treated as counterclaims. Reardon v. Higgins [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 208.

11. Pleas having no title held properly rejected. Walls v. Zufall [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 179.

12. No part of count proper. West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Schillinger, 117 Ill. App. 525.

13. Ginty v. New Haven Iron & Steel Co., 143 F. 699.

14. In action in municipal court against foreign corporation, failure to allege that defendant had office in city, which fact is essential to jurisdiction under Laws 1902, p. 1489, c. 580, held to render complaint defective. Epstein v. Weisberger Co., 102 N. Y. S. 488. Averments as to citizenship of corporation in action in Federal court held sufficient. Mathieson Alkali Works v. Mathieson [C. C. A.] 150 F. 241.

15. Petition held to sufficiently show that contract sued on was entered into in county where suit was brought, and hence to be good against demurrer raising question of venue. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Walton [Ga.] 56 S. E. 419.

16. Where plaintiff alleged that defendant was corporation and that contract was made by its duly authorized agent, held not necessary to allege character of business it was authorized to do so that it could be determined from pleadings whether contract was within its charter powers. San Antonio Machine & Supply Co. v. Josey [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 176, 91 S. W. 598. Plaintiff need not anticipate defense of discharge in bankruptcy by alleging new promise in original petition. Shumate v. Ryan [Ga.] 56 S. E. 103. Petition need not anticipate defense of limitations by alleging matter in avoidance of it, but may allege matter in avoidance thereof in reply if pleaded as a defense. Swinebroad v. Wood, 29 Ky. L. R. 1202, 97 S. W. 25.

17. When person more than twelve years after arriving at majority invokes equity jurisdiction for relief from acts occurring more than twenty-five yeas prior thereto, pleading should state some reasonable excuse for delay. Complaint held sufficient. Steinberg v. Saltzman [Wis.] 110 N. W. 198.

18. Employer's liability act. Sutherland v. Ammann, 112 App. Div. 332, 98 N. Y. S. 574. Complaint held insufficient to state

vate statute may be pleaded by designating it by year, chapter, and title.[20] A pleading is defective whenever evidence cannot be received in support of its allegations.[21]

Material facts should be shown by direct and issuable averment,[22] and not be left to inference or pleaded by way of recital.[23] Facts, not ignorance of facts, should be alleged,[24] and matters presumptively within a party's knowledge,[25] or in regard to which the truth is readily ascertainable, should not be alleged on information and belief.[26] Facts, not conclusions, must be pleaded.[27] Statutes in many cause of action under employer's liability act. Ft. Wayne Iron & Steel Co. v. Parsell [Ind.] 79 N. E. 439. Evidence that employe was injured through negligence of fellow-employe for which employer would be liable under employers' liability act held inadmissibe under complaint merely charging negligence on the part of the defendant company. Kelly v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Mont.] 88 P. 1009. One seeking to maintain an action for a statutory penalty must state every fact necessary to enable court to judge whether he has a cause of action under the statute, the pleadings being strictly construed in such case. People v. Koster, 50 Misc. 46. 97 N. Y. S. 829. A reference to the statute giving a penalty for its violation is sufficient only when there is a single substantive fact shown affirmatively, constituting a cause of action. Id. In action for penalties prescribed by Laws 1893, c. 338, for adulteration of milk, reference to §§ 20 and 22, of the act, with allegation that defendant was a dealer in milk, that on certain day he caused milk to be adulterated and sold same, held insufficient, there being many different provisions in said sections by which and for violation of which a penalty may be incurred. Id.

19. Law of another state. Lee v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 195 Mo. 400, 92 S. W. 614.

20. Code Civ. Proc. § 530, does not apply to action for penalties prescribed by Laws 1893, c. 338, for adulteration of milk. People v. Koster, 50 Misc. 46, 97 N. Y. S. 829.

21. Demurrer to counterclaim for failure to set forth in what manner or by what facts defendant had been damaged in amount claimed held properly sustained. Harron v. Wilson, Lyon & Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 512.

22. Averment of consideration in actions on contract must be direct and explicit, and not by way of inducement or preamble only. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Smith [Va.] 56 S. E. 567. Designation of defendants as "common carriers for hire and reward" and allegations that as such at their own risk and solicitation they "received" certain junk "to be so carried," held not a sufficient allegation of consideration to support promise to carry, etc. Id. In order to found cause of action on alleged shortcomings of another, particulars of alleged resulting damages should be so far set forth that court may be able to see that such damages are neither obscure, vague, nor shadowy, but might and probably would naturally result from acts complained of. McQuire v. Gerstley, 27 S. Ct. 332, afg. 26 App. D. C. 193. Pleas of set-off held insufficient. Id. In action on bound given to secure sales of merchandise on credit, pleas setting up breach of agreement respecting prices held insufficient, there being no allegation that agreement was in writing, and bound itself not showing existence of agreement, and nothing to show that securties would be injured by breach. Id.; Clark v. Gerstley, 27 S. Ct. 337.

23. Allegations that agreement to "take and pay for" machinery was in consideration of warranty, and that it was not suitable for purpose "for which it purchased it," held not to amount to averment that defendant agreed to take and pay for machinery, or that it ever purchased it. Harron v. Wilson, Lyon & Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 512. Should not be left to be supplied or gathered by remote implication or conjecture. Puritan Mfg. Co. v. Bonteiller & Co. [Conn.] 64 A. 227. Answer alleging that defendant did not cut certain tree, and that, if it was cut, it was done because it was reasonably necessary to do so in the construction of defendant's telephone system, held bad. Betz v. Kansas City Home Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 207. Allegations of duty and its breach in negligence case held insufficient. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stegall's Adm'x, 105 Va. 538, 54 S. E. 19.

24. Allegation that no one knew whether certain remaindemen had children, etc., held insufficient. Furr v. Burns, 124 Ga. 742, 53 S. E. 201.

25. Allegation in answer that certain statute was never law of certain state because not passed or signed in manner required by constitution held not a matter presumptively within plaintiff's knowledge so as to make denial in reply insufficient under Mills' Ann. Code, § 56. Adams v. Clark [Colo.] 85 P. 342.

26. See also, § 3, post. Matters relating to existence or nonexistence of public record. Steinberg v. Saltzman [Wis.] 110 N. W. 198.

27. Conclusion of law is not statement of fact upon which liability can be predicated, within Code Civ. Proc. § 481, requiring complaint to set up plain and concise statement of facts constituting each cause of action. Tate v. American Woolen Co., 114 App. Div. 106, 99 N. Y. S. 678; Ganesvoort Bank v. Empire State Surety Co., 112 App. Div. 500, 98 N. Y. S. 382. To avoid effect of res judicata on ground that judge making order removing administrator was personally disqualified, such disqualification must be shown by averments of facts, not by mere legal conclusions. Milton v. Hundley [Fla.] 42 So. 185. Answer states no defense when no facts are set forth as basis of conclusions pleaded. Answer held not to alleged facts on which failure of warranty of machine to do satisfactory work could be predicated. Houghton Imp. Co. v. Vavrousky [N. D.] 109 N. W. 1024.

Averments held to be conclusions: That defendant through its agent waived contract provision for notice of claim. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Heathcoat [Ala.] 43, So. 117. Facts sufficient to sustain conclusion of waiver of provisions of written contract must be alleged, allegation that defendant had knowledge of and fully assented to manner of performance being insufficient. Pope Mfg. Co. v. Rubber Goods Mfg. Co., 110 App. Div. 341, 97 N. Y. S. 73. As to irreparable injury to complainant, etc, which would result from allowing defendant to string wires on certain pole. Montgomery L. & W. P. Co. v. Citizens' L. H. & P. Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 981. That damages cannot be measured in action at law, that plaintiff has no plain, adequate, or complete remedy at law, and that injunction is necessary to avoid multiplicity of suits. General Elec. Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. 144 F. 458. As to fraud. Ingraham v. International Salt Co., 100 N. Y. S. 192. Mere general allegation of fraud in proceedings to set aside foreclosure of chattel mortgage. Kuhling v. Beidenhorn [Ky.] 99 S. W. 646. That plan of reorganization between two railway companies was fraudulently designed, without specifically charging that said companies participated therein, or specifying in what fraud consisted. Gella v. Brown [C. C. A.] 144 F. 742. Allegations of fraud in action against corporation and officers by stockholders. Schell v. Alston Mfg. Co., 149 F. 439. That fraud was practiced by successful party in obtaining judgment. Machen v. Bernheim, 29 Ky. L. R. 427, 93 S. W. 621. Where fraud is gist of action, facts themselves which constitute it must be alleged. Petition sufficient. Ennis v. Padgett [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 782. Allegation that one falsely and fraudulently made certain representations is insufficient to charge actual fraud in absence of allegation that representations were untrue. Bonham v. Doyle [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 859. That plaintiffs and other parties named are only heirs at law and next of kin. Moser v. Talmon, 100 N. Y. S. 231. That certain person is the sole heir at law of a decedent. Daley v. O'Brien, 29 Ky. L. R. 811, 96 S. W. 521. That certain sum was "due" plaintiff from defendant on appeal bond sued on. Moriarty v. Cochran [Neb.] 106 N. W. 1011. That "the money and cotton called for by the mortgage" was tendered by mortgagor. Wittmeier v. Tidwell [Ala.] 40 So. 963. That plaintiff's lot was damaged by the construction of a railroad embankment. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Oden [Ala.] 41 So. 129. That at the time of his qualification as trustee in bankruptcy of defendant, plaintiff succeeded to and became owner of interest in certain land previously owned by defendant, and has ever since been and now is owner thereof. Schoonover v. Birnbaum, 148 Cal. 548, 83 P. 999. That superintendent of streets did not make assessment in manner or form prescribed by law, in absence of setting forth particulars in which it was defective. Beckett v. Morse [Cal. App.] 87 P. 408. That an act has not been "duly" performed. Pacific Pav. Co. v. Diggins [Cal. App.] 87 P. 415. That there was in official custody and subject to official control of defendant more than sufficient money applicable to, and with which to pay, plaintiff's claim. Allegation limited by facts on which she based her claim and provisions of law applicable thereto. Burke v. San Francisco Police & Relief Pension Fund Trustees [Cal. App.] 87 P. 421. That stairway was "negligently" constructed, and in an "unsafe" condition, and was "imperfectly lighted", and without "any sufficient light", etc. Bell v. Central Nat. Bank, 28 App. D. C. 580. As to obligation and duty of defendants under a certain contract. Milligan v. Keyser [Fla.] 42 So. 367. As to defendant's knowledge of guardian's sale and his failure to object, and as to purchaser's good faith. Furr v. Burns, 124 Ga. 742, 53 S. E. 201. That at time of organization of corporation, it was tacitly understood that fair, reasonable, and adequate salaries for its officers would be fixed thereafter, to be paid out of its future earnings. Home Mixture Guano Co. v. Tillman, 125 Ga. 172, 53 S. E. 1019. That sums "paid" by plaintiff were part of purchase price of certain land, and that defendant received benefit of same in his purchase of land. Tye v. Gaissert, 124 Ga. 733, 52 S. E. 813. That city had authorized appointment of large number of policemen and that petitioner was duly appointed a policeman. Kenneally v. Chicago, 220 Ill. 485, 77 N. E. 165. That railroad company abandoned a route. Stannard v. Aurora, etc., R. Co., 220 Il. 469, 77 N. E. 254. That deed was never lawfully delivered. Blake v. Ogden, 223 Ill. 204, 79 N. E. 68. In suit to enforce vendor's lien, that vendee was responsible for certain rent as part of purchase money, and that certain other specified sums should also be considered as part of consideration money. Ross v. Clark, 225 Ill. 326, 80 N. E. 275. That under the demand, pressure, and compulsion on part of defendant plaintiff paid certain sum. Alton Light & T. Co. v. Rose, 117 Ill. App. 83. That filing fee was paid fraudulently. Stephens v. City Council of Marion [Iowa] 107 N. W. 614. That court of foreign state in which death occurred would, in such case, hold plaintiff entitled to recover, following allegations as to law of such state. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnson [Kan.] 86 P. 156. That proceedings in which judgment was obtained were against a person under disability. Machen v. Bernheim, 29 Ky. L. R. 427, 93 S. W. 621. That plaintiff was "invited" to use certain shop. Brown v. Thomas Blackwell Coal & Min. Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 299. That affairs of assigneeship under assignment annexed to bill had been so far completed that assignees had no just claim or right to retain certain books of account, etc. Lothrop Pub. Co. v. Williams, 191 Mass. 361, 77 N. E. 844. That one "had no proper and legal authority to make" a certain sale. Cox v. American Freehold & Land Mortg. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 739. That under his contract complainant was entitled at any time to receive transfer of stock. Simmons v. Lima Oil Co. [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 258. That defendant was foreign corporation and had not complied with laws regulating such corporations. Burrowes Co. v. Rapid Safety Filter Co., 97 N. Y. S. 1048. "That all conditions were fulfilled." there being no statement as to what the conditions were, "and all things happened," no things being set forth," and all times elapsed necessary to entitle" plaintiff to maintain action on bond, no dates or periods of time being set forth. Ganesvoort Bank v. Empire State Surety Co., 112 App. Div. 500, 98 N. Y. S. 382. Allegation of indebtedness for money had and received, in absence of allegation of promise to repay or facts from which it can be inferred. Tate v. American Woolen Co., 114 App. Div. 106, 99 N. Y. S. 678. That instrument not under seal and states allow matters to be alleged generally which it would otherwise be necessary to particularize,[28] but in such case the statutory form must be strictly followed.[29]

not negotiable was executed and delivered "for a valuable consideration." Fulton v. Varney, 102 N. Y. S. 608. That plaintiff "is maintaining this action for the benefit of said M. and is not the real party in interest." Ludlow v. Woodward, 102 N. Y. S. 647. That plaintiff "is not a bona fide owner and holder of said note." Id. That defendant has defense to claim. Conroy v. Equitable Acc. Co., 27 R. I. 467, 63 A. 356. That grant under which plaintiff claimed title to land was prior to that under which defendant claimed, that plantiff's title was superior, and that she was prepared to show such facts on a trial in trespass to try title. Gilbert v. Cooper [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 376, 95 S. W. 753. That it was defendant's duty to exhibit certain vouchers to taxpayers under certain circumstances. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146. That sheriff "returned said execution fully satisfied." Cambers v. First Nat. Bank, 144 F. 717. That draft of contract and letters constituted a binding contract. Nester v. Diamond Match Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 72. That plaintiff had no insurable interest in the life insured by certain policy does not aid pleading. American Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Mead [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 526. That fire insurance policy insured plaintiff as well as another. American Cereal Co. v. Western Assur. Co., 148 F. 77. Denial that proofs of death were furnished insurance company within thirty days as required by policy, language of policy not being set out. Continental Casualty Co. v. Waters [Ky.] 97 S. W. 1103. That interpleader is by her conduct estopped from claiming property. Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co. v. Sally, 198 Mo. 682, 96 S. W. 1030. Where estoppel is relied on, facts constituting it must be pleaded with particularity and precision, and must be alleged that party setting up estoppel relied on facts and will be prejudiced by allowing them to be disproved. Nothing can be supplied by inference or intendment. Haun v. Martin [Or.] 86 P. 371. That chattel mortgage did not give interpleader any right, title, or interest in, or to property, the same being null and void. Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co. v. Sally, 198 Mo. 682, 96 S. W. 1030. That decree confirming tax title was null and void and inoperative to cure defects, irregularities, and illegality in tax title. Flannigan v. Chapman & Dewey Land Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 371. That defendant, as justice of the peace, unlawfully or wrongfully issued warrant of arrest. Bufford v. Chambers [Ala.] 42 So. 597. That an act is unlawful. Schmidt v. Brennan, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 239. General allegations that defendant had no right to do what it did, and that it acted wrongfully, cannot avail plaintiff, where only acts alleged are those which upon other averments of bill seem to have been within its legal rights. Lothrop Pub. Co. v. Lothrop, etc., Co., 191 Mass. 353, 77 N. E. 841. Insufficient to allege that conduct is immoral, unless sets up that which constitutes the immorality. Molineux v. Hurlbut [Conn.] 64 A. 350. Words "even though he was conscious," held merely recital of a conclusion based on previous statements, and not the allegation of the fact. Anniston Elec. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45. Averment by plaintiff in action for death of servant, that, upon facts stated in declaration, it was defendant's duty to furnish deceased with safe place to work, held simply pleader's averment of legal efficacy of facts stated, and of no importance in determining on demurrer whether declaration showed cause of action. Long v. John Stephenson Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 910. Where complaint alleged that it was duty of city and contractor in digging up streets to furnish support to gas pipes laid therein by plaintiff "under competent and legal authority," held that conclusion as to character and sufficiency of such authority, being based upon undisclosed facts, did not sustain allegation of resulting duty, for negligent performance of which defendants were sought to be held liable. Millville Gaslight Co. v. Sweeten [N. J. Law] 64 A. 959. Petition alleging in general terms that illegal interest, etc., was charged against property sold for taxes, that deed was void because separate school taxes were assessed against property, and that special city tax, being part of taxes, etc., for which property was sold, was illegally levied against it, held not to state facts sufficient to raise such questions. Jones v. Carnes [Okl.] 87 P. 652. Not sufficient in action for negligence to allege that it is duty of defendant to do certain things, but facts must be stated from which law will raise duty. Declaration held insufficient to state cause of action. McAndrews v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 222 Ill. 232, 78 N. E. 603, afg. 124 Ill. App. 166. Averment that defendant shoved cars negligently held not supply want of averment of facts showing duty owing to plaintiff not to move cars without notice to him. Id.

Averments held not to be conclusions: That motorman negligently ran car upon railroad crossing without first knowing that track was clear. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Lewis [Ala.] 41 So. 736. That plaintiffs owned certain passway. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scomp [Ky.] 98 S. W. 1024. That plaintiffs were ousted and dispossessed of land in due course of law by certain bank. Hirshiser v. Ward [Nev.] 87 P. 171. As to loss by reason of defective abstract. Id. That at time of purchase of certain land by plaintiffs, a certain bank was owner in fee thereof. Id. As to duty of officer to keep streets in safe condition. City of Dallas v. McCullough [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 348, 95 S. W. 1121. As to fraud. Steinberg v. Saltzman [Wis.] 110 N. W. 198. In action against corporation for fraud as to agency and authority of person with whom transactions complained of occurred. Rogers v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 1.

28. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 533, in pleading performance of condition precedent in a contract, party may state generally that he, or person whom he represents has duly performed all the conditions on his part, and, if such allegation is controverted, he must establish performance on the trial. Sager v. Gonnermann, 50 Misc. 500, 100 N. Y. S. 406. General allegation of performance of all conditions held sufficient in action on fire insurance policy. Concordia Fire Ins. Co. v. Bowen, 121 Ill. App. 35.

29. In action on bond given to secure note, allegation that before commencement

Collateral writings need only be averred according to their substance and effect,[30] but the writing itself controls averments as to its character.[31]

Allegations should be definite and certain,[32] and direct rather than argumentaof action "every condition was fulfilled and all things happened, and all times elapsed necessary to entitle" plaintiff to maintain the action, held not an allegation of performance under Code Civ. Proc. § 533. Gansevoort Bank v. Empire State Surety Co., 102 N. Y. S. 544.

30. Where declaration refers to rules, orders, and requirements of railroad company, it is not necessary to set them out in tolidem verbis. Southern R. Co. v. Simmons, 105 Va. 651, 55 S. E. 459.

31. Where letter was not an option because lacking a consideration, loose reference to it in bill as an option held not to change its character. Comstock Bros. v. North [Miss.] 41 So. 374.

32. Pleading must contain statement of party's cause of action or defense with sufficient certainty to notify adverse party of the charge he is to meet. Withers v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 34. Is sufficient if allegations are sufficiently definite to inform opposite party what is relied on for recovery. Spaulding v. Edina [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 545. It is only when the allegation is so indefinite and uncertain that the precise meaning thereof is not apparent that court is authorized to require pleading to be made more definite and certain by amendment. Code Civ. Proc. § 546. Citizens' Central Nat. Bank v. Munn, 101 N. Y. S. 435, rvg. 49 Misc. 319, 99 N. Y. S. 191; Mullen v. Hall, 99 N. Y. S. 841. Declaration must state facts with sufficient certainty to be understood by defendant, jury, and court, and in actions for tort must state sufficient facts to enable court to say upon demurrer whether, if they were proved, plaintiff would be entitled to recover. Lane Bros. Co. v. Seakford [Va.] 55 S. E. 556. Allegations of bill in equity must be certain, clear, and positive. Simmons v. Lima Oil Co. [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 258. Though plaintiff is required to charge his cause of action in direct and certain terms, he need not go into an elaboration of details beyond what is reasonably necessary to fully and distinctly inform the defendant of what he is called upon to meet. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Simons [Ind.] 79 N. E. 911. In action for deceit, motion to make complaint more definite and certain by setting out matters immaterial to cause of action properly denied. Kabat v. Moore [Or.] 85 P. 506. In action for injuries due to being thrown from car by its being started suddenly while plaintiff was about to alight, motion to make complaint more definite and certain by stating whether car had been stopped still or was slowly moving held properly denied, negligence compained of not depending upon fact to which motion was addressed. Louisville & S. I. Traction Co. v. Leaf [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1066. Where complaint alleged that defendant agreed that if plaintiff would pay to him what money she should earn, he would keep it for her as trustee and return it on demand, that she paid him certain sum, and that he refused to return it on demand, motion to make more definite and certain by stating into what employment plaintiff agreed to enter held properly denied, there being no allegation that she obligated herself to earn any money. Goupille v. Chaput [Wash.] 86 P. 1058.

Allegations held sufficiently definite: Plea of set-off. Belote v. Wilcox [Ala.] 41 So. 673. Answer in mandamus at least as against general demurrer. People v. Board of Trade, 224 Ill. 370, 79 N. E. 611. Complaint in action on contract. Grau v. Grau [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 816. Counterclaim on alleged contract to give legal opinion as to saleability of mortgaged property. Pearce v. Weidemeyer, 102 N. Y. S. 505. As to negligence. Moss v. Mosley [Ala.] 41 So. 1012; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Simons [Ind.] 79 N. E. 917; Southern R. Co. v. Blanford's Adm'x, 105 Va. 373, 54 S. E. 1; Lane Bros. v. Seakford [Va.] 55 S. E. 556. As to injuries claimed to have been sustained by reason of defendant's negligence. City of Dallas v. McCullough [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 348, 95 S. W. 1121. As to location of defect in walk. Spaulding v. Edina [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 545. Allegations as to injuries to certain parts of body held sufficiently specific to admit proof of some injuries so that demurrers thereto were properly overruled. Southwesten Tel. & T. Co. v. Tucker [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 598, 98 S. W. 909. Complaint in action for damages for personal injuries, as to acts and omissions for which plaintiff intended to hold defendants accountable. Mullen v. Hall, 99 N. Y. S. 841. In action against carrier for wrongfully ejecting plaintiff from train, motion to require her to make petition more specific by naming persons who offered to pay her fare held properly overruled. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fowler, 29 Ky. L. R. 905, 96 S. W. 568. In action to recover money borrowed by defendant through another, held error to require plaintiff to make complaint more definite and certain by alleging extent of defendant's interest in, or liability for, alleged loan, in what capacity it was claimed such other represented defendant, and whether note or other writing was given for loan, and if so a description of it, and manner or grounds on which it was sought to charge defendant thereon. Citizens' Central Nat. Bank v. Munn, 101 N. Y. S. 435, rvg. 49 Misc. 319, 99 N. Y. S. 191. General allegation that certain claims were barred by limitations held sufficient to admit proof that they did not come within exceptions of statute. Smart v. Panther [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 448, 95 S. W. 679. In action to quiet title held not an abuse of discretion to deny motion to make complaint more definite and certain by setting forth nature and character of plaintiff's estate, character of their possession, abstract of their title, and nature and character of interest claimed by defendant, claims of both parties being based on written instruments and records and there being no pretense of surprise. Boyer v. Robinson [Wash.] 86 P. 385.

Allegations held not sufficiently definite: As to damages in action for libel. Wright v. Coules [Cal. App.] 87 P. 809. That named statute is unconstitutional and void. Parham v. Potts-Thompson Liquor Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 460. General allegation in petition that tive.[33] At law only the basic ultimate facts, as distinguished from matters of evidence, should be stated,[34] but this rule is not applied with the same degree of strictness in equity.[35] statute is unconstitutional and void, without in any way specifying particular constitutional provisions with which it is claimed to conflict. Moore v. Houston County, 124 Ga. 898, 53 S. E. 506. As to wrongful acts relied on as basis of recovery in action for libel. Merker v. Belleville Distillery Co., 122 Ill. App. 326. Allegation that "upon ascertaining these facts" defendant offered to return machinery to defendant held defective in failing to state time when it ascertained facts and made offer. Harron v. Wilson, Lyon & Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 512. Complaint in action on contract and exhibit held too indefinite and uncertain to advise court and defendant with reasonable degree of certainty of charge sought to be imposed on defendant. Puritan Mfg. Co. v. Bouteiller & Co. [Conn.] 64 A. 227. Items of account running through several years, attached to petition in suit by tenant against landlord for labor, materials, and improvements upon leased premises, bearing no date and otherwise defectively stated, held open to attack by special demurrer calling for more specific information, and, not having been cured by amendment, demurrer was properly sustained and items stricken. Busby v. Marshall, 125 Ga. 645, 54 S. E. 646. Amendment to certain paragraph of petition held not to cure duplicity, what abbreviation, "etc.," used therein was intended to include being left to conjecture, and it not clearly appearing whether amendment was to precede paragraph as it originally stood or to stand in lieu of it. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Walton [Ga.] 56 S. E. 419. Petition in action for breach of contract to maintain ditch so as to prevent overflow of lands held insufficient for failure to allege what lands were owned by plaintiffs' assignors that were covered by contract or what lands so owned by them were acquired by plaintiffs. Withers v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 34. Where defendant pleads contributory negligence in an action for damages for negligence, he may be required to make more definite and certain by setting out acts of negligence upon which he relies. Vanatta v. Baltimore & O. R. Co, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 542. In action against railroad company for personal injuries resulting from negligent use of engine, averments held too general in that they did not show that negligence was imputable to defendant, it not appearing what particular agents failed to perform duty owing to plaintiff and hence that negligence was not that of fellow-servants. Brown v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 142 F. 909.

33. Denials of making certain contract held argumentative. Borland v. Prindle, 144 F. 713. R. I. Court & Prac. Act. 1905, § 287, held not to authorize argumentative denial. Id.

34. Winders v. Hill, 141 N. C. 694, 54 S. E. 440. Allegations as to acts of plaintiff and defendant after assault sued for held properly stricken from petition. Torian v. Terrell, 29 Ky. L. R. 306, 93 S. W. 10. The pleading of facts is not open to objection in an action for negligence, where the pleader is thereby relieved from the necessity of pleading conclusions as to the concurrence of negligence or nonconcurrence of contributory negligence. Home Ins. Co. v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 373.

35. See, also, Equity, 7 C. L. 1323.

36. Denials of averments of bill as to complainant's residence on and possession of land in controversy held insufficient, they being literal and evasive only, and not traversing such allegations. Shiff v. Andress [Ala.] 40 So. 824. In ejectment defendant's denial of plaintiffs' title and right to possession held an admission of ouster of plaintiffs by them. Dondero v. O'Hara [Cal. App.] 86 P. 985. Answer in ejectment denying that defendants "without right or title" entered into possession held an admission of ouster. Id. Denial of complaint in haec verba held negative pregnant. Shepard v. Wood, 102 N. Y. S. 306. Doctrine of negatives pregnant held abolished by code provisions abolishing forms of pleading previously existing and relating to construction of pleadings, so that denial of allegation of complaint that certain team of horses was wild and ungovernable and was known to be so by defendant could not be taken as admission of those facts. O'Brien v. Seattle Ice Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 399.

37. The test of irrelevancy in an answer is whether statements claimed to be irrelevant tend to make or constitute a defense. Hanson Co. v. Collier, 101 N. Y. S. 690. Motion to strike parts of answer in action for libel granted. Id. Allegations in complaint in action for damages growing out of collision with street car to effect that search light such as was carried by car was not permitted in cities owing to fact that it made highways unsafe held properly expunged as irrelevant, where accident occurred in sparsely settled portion of country town. Garfield v. Hartford & S. St. R. Co. [Conn.] 65 A. 598. Amendment seeking to recover for services which plaintiff was not required to perform under contract sued on held properly stricken. Long v. Furnas, 130 Iowa, 504, 107 N. W. 432. Special exceptions to allegations in supplemental petition in regard to extraneous matters having no connection whatever with issues in case held properly sustained. Simpson v. Thompson [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 352, 95 S. W. 94. In action against tenant for rents, supplies, and advances, in which defendant claimed off-sets and asked damages for negligent handling of his rice and failure to furnish water for irrigation purposes, allegations of answer that defendant was experienced and practical rice farmer, etc., held immaterial, irrelevant, and a pleading of evidence tending to qualify him as expert, and they should have been stricken. McFaddin v. Sims [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 757, 97 S. W. 335. Motion to strike irrelevant and redundant matter is addressed to discretion of court and should be granted only when no doubt as to the irrelevancy of the part of the pleading in question exists. Hanson Co. v. Collier, 101 N. Y. S. 690. Mo-ous,[39] and scandalous allegations, should be avoided,[40] and frivolous pleadings should not be interposed.[41] Surplusage will be disregarded or stricken on motion.[42]

tions to strike parts of pleading as irrelevant and redundant are not favored, and will be denied where, under any possible circumstances, evidence of the facts therein pleaded has any bearing on the subject-matter of the litigation. Motion to strike parts of defenses in action for libel denied. Dalziel v. Press Pub. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 909. In action to recover money loaned one defendant through another, held that allegations as to purposes for which money was borrowed and manner in which it was applied would not be stricken as irrelevant, since they might possibly be relevant as tending to show the joint nature of the transaction. Citizens' Cent. Nat. Bank v. Munn, 49 Misc. 319, 99 N. Y. S. 191, rvd. on other grounds, 101 N. Y. S. 435. Where plaintiff only claimed to have single cause of action based on defendant's negligence, but specified several distinct propositions as to which defendant was alleged to have been negligent, some of which constituted actionable negligence at common law and some under employer's liability act, the defendant being equally liable in either event but only for single damages sustained, held that order striking allegations involved in common-law action, unless plaintiff served amended complaint separately stating his common-law action, and his action under the statute was not authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 545, authorizing striking of irrelevant or redundant matter. Acardo v. New York C. & T. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 7. In action for rent claim of defendant under covenant for quiet enjoyment, while setting up matter of law, and so unnecessary, held, under principles of practice act, neither irrelevant nor immaterial. Molineux v. Hurlbut [Conn.] 64 A. 350. Allegations of petition in action for conversion of personalty as to usable value, etc., held not redundant or irrelevant. Berry v. Geiser Mfg. Co., 15 Okl. 364, 85 P. 699.

38. Collins v. Chipman [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 411, 95 S. W. 666. Complaint in action for negligence alleging that defendant "carelessly and negligently and willfully and wantonly" did certain acts held not demurrable on ground that could not be all of them at same time. Kramm v. Stockton Elec. R. Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 903. Further answer and counterclaim held not inconsistent with itself. Conrey v. Nichols [Colo.] 84 P. 470. In action against telegraph company for statutory penalty for failure to transmit message, complaint held not bad as proceeding on inconsistent theories because it pleaded willful wrong doing and negligence in same paragraph, it being immaterial whether violation of statutory duty was due to willfulness or negligence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McClelland [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 672. Inconsistency between allegations that train left track because of spreading rails due to rotten ties, and allegation that leaving track was due to breaking of wheel held not to make complaint bad. Southern R. Co. v. Roach [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 606; Id., 78 N. E. 201. In action to collect franchise tax on deposits in savings bank, averments of plea setting up that defendant was not such a bank held not inconsistent, one being merely amplification of other. State v. German Sav. Bank, 103 Md. 196, 63 A. 481. In action against street railway company for killing pedestrian at crossing, allegations in same count that motorman failed to keep vigilant watch and failed to stop in shortest time and space held not objectionable as stating repugnant grounds of negligence. McQuade v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 552. Allegations of answer as to repayment of money held not contradictory. Devereux v. Peterson, 126 Wis. 558, 106 N. W. 249. In no contradiction between allegation of answer that consideration for release was $250 and recital in release made a part of answer that it was executed in consideration of $1 and other valuable considerations. Wallace v. Skinner [Wyo.] 88 P. 221. Plea in action on insurance contract attempting to set up nonpayment of premium note held contradictory and uncertain and bad on demurrer. Farmers & Threshers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Koons, 120 Ill. App. 303. Plea held bad in that it both denied argumentatively the making of an agreement and also set up that agreement was invalid. Borland v. Prindle, 144 F. 713.

39. In justice's court. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Georgia R. & Elec. Co., 125 Ga. 798, 54 S. E. 753.

40. Fact that relevant allegations reflect on character is no ground for expunging them. Hall v. Strong, 102 N. Y. S. 161. In action to compel accounting by surviving trustee and executors of deceased trustee, allegations of executor's answer, in which as remaindermen they asked for removal of surviving trustee, as to such trustee's incompetency, held relevant and hence not subject to be stricken as irrelevant and scandalous. Id.

41. Where demurrer was not so plainly bad as to require no argument to show that fact, and bare inspection did not indicate that it was made in bad faith, held that it could not be disposed of as frivolous. Hildreth v. Mercantile Trust Co., 112 App. Div. 916, 98 N. Y. S. 582. Amended answer filed within time allowed for amendments as of course held not so clearly invalid as to justify court in striking it out under Code Civ. Proc. § 542, as served for purposes of delay only. Beyer v. Henry Huber Co., 100 N. Y. S. 1029.

42. Conclusion as to agent's duty to send check to payee instead of indorsing and cashing it held surplusage. Hamilton Nat. Bank v. Nye [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 295. Allegation in complaint in supplementary proceedings. Hobbs v. Eaton [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 333. In action to cancel conveyance, held that allegations of petition in regard to damages were properly stricken, the granting of relief prayed for not involving any allowance of damages and no facts being alleged entitling plaintiff to damages if successful in securing cancellation, or by way of alternative relief if he was not. Hall v. Kary [Iowa] 110 N. W. 930. In action by trustee for convict appointed pursuant to statute to recover property belonging to convict, held that allegations with reference to convict's right to join as plaintiff would be treated as surplusage on demurrer. New v. Smith. [Kan.] 84 P. 1030. Since in suit

Facts judicially noticed,[43] or which the law presumes,[44] or which are true as a matter of law,[45] legal conclusions,[46] and matters of evidence,[47] need not be alleged. That which already appears sufficiently in the pleading of either party without formal allegation need not be expressly averred.[48] before justice formal pleadings are not required, redundancy and surplusage may be disregarded and complaint held good if there is enough in it to state cause of action and to bar second suit on same state of facts. McReynolds v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 115 Mo. App. 676, 91 S. W. 446. Case not being bottomed on negligence, but on statutory duty of railroad to maintain fences in repair, held that allegation of negligence would be treated as surplusage. Id. There being a good plea of damages without certain allegations, held that they were not vital, so that striking them out was harmless. Roth Tool Co. v. Champ Spring Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 827. Demand for relief against certain persons not made parties held to be regarded as mere surplusage where their presence was in no way necessary to determination of controversy between plaintiff and defendants, and hence demurrer for nonjoinder was bad. O'Connor v. Virginia Passenger & Power Co., 184 N. Y. 46, 76 N. E. 1082. If the material and essential facts necessary to give council authority to proceed with street improvement are stated in a petition involving action with reference thereto, recitals which are mere conclusions of law may be treated as surplusage and petition allowed to stand. State v. Mt. Vernon, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 317. Except as to allegations of essential description, it is only necessary to prove such allegations as are necessary to constitute a cause of action or a defense, whatever else is alleged being regarded as surplusage. Collins v. Chipman [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 411, 95 S. W. 666. Allegations as to knowledge of falsity of representations in suit to rescind contract for fraud held surplusage. Id. Certain words stricken because presence could not affect cause of action, and only use would be that they might excite passion and prejudice of jury. Ginty v. New Haven Iron & Steel Co., 143 F. 699.

43. Objection that counts failed to allege in what county injury took place held met by amended complaint alleging that it took place in certain city, since court would take judicial notice that it was in certain county. Anniston Elec. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45. Averment that injury was result of negligence in operating cars on streets of certain city held sufficient averment as to place, court taking judicial notice that streets of that city were all in county where suit was brought. Birmingham R., L. & P. Co. v. Moore [Ala.] 42 So. 1024.

44. Common-law rights and duties, such as duty of auditor to exhibit vouchers for bills to taxpayers and citizens. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146. Superfluous to claim damages which law implies from acts complained of. Malnati v. Thomas, 26 App. D. C. 277.

45. That certain vouchers were public records. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146.

46. That vouchers which law required auditor to keep were his in possession. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146. If facts alleged show fraud, either actual or constructive, no positive averments of fraud are necessary. Holliday v. Perry [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 877. Answer alleging facts showing right of one redeeming pledged property to be subrogated to lien of pawnbroker held sufficient without alleging legal conclusion as to rights thus acquired. Lesser v. Steinder, 110 App. Div. 262, 97 N. Y. S. 255. Where law conferred right of action on widow for death of her husband, held that it was not necessary for her to allege survival of cause of action in her favor through his death. Davis v. Arkansas Southern R. Co., 117 La. 320, 41 So. 587.

47. General averment that certain orders were negligently given by defendant's representative held sufficient, it not being necessary to allege in what particulars order was negligent. Reiter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. Hamlin, 144 Ala. 192, 40 So. 280. Complaint should allege the substantive or issuable facts, and it is unnecessary to set out evidence, or history of transactions leading up to such facts. Strange v. Bodcaw Lumber Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 152. In action for personal injuries resulting from collision of coach in funeral procession with street car, evidence of custom of cars to stop and allow funeral procession to pass without interruption held admissible though not pleaded. White v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 63 A. 931. In complaint on appeal from assessment of benefits and damages in proceedings to construct levee alleging that appellant's lands would be overflowed, held not necessary to allege how construction would cause overflow. Lewis Tp. Imp. Co. v. Royer [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 1068. Where elemental fact is dependent for its existence upon other facts, averment of it alone is sufficient. Kiernan v. Robertson, 116 Mo. App. 56, 92 S. W. 138. Allegation in plaintiff's denial of garnishee's answer that latter had in his possession and under his control a certain sum of money coming to and due the defendant held not a conclusion of law but a conclusion of fact, and proper. Id. Requiring complaint to be made more definite and certain by setting up evidentiary matters held error. Citizens' Central Nat. Bank v. Munn, 101 N. Y. S. 435, rvg. 49 Misc. 319, 99 N. Y. S. 191. Evidence of plaintiff's intoxication held admissible under allegation of contributory negligence, it being unnecessary to plead probative facts relied on to show such negligence. Sharpton v. Augusta & A. R. Co., 72 S. C. 162, 51 S. E. 553. In suit to have defendant declared to hold certain tidelands as trustee for plaintiff where complaint alleged that plaintiff was entitled to purchase such lands as owner of the upland, held not an abuse of discretion to require plaintiff to state what uplands he owned. Washington Dredging & Imp. Co v. Cannel Coal Co. [Wash.] 88 P. 836. Fraud and agency held alleged with sufficient particularity. Rogers v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 1.

48. Complaint for mandamus need not allege that relator has no other adequate remedy where fact is apparent from other alle-

As a general rule it is not permissible to plead in the alternative,[49] though in some states a party may state all the facts out of which the controversy arises and pray in the alternative for relief.[50]

Pleadings may ordinarily be signed, filed, and presented by an attorney.[51] Pleadings signed by two attorneys are properly allowed to stand though one of them is disqualified.[52]

Interpretation and construction in general.[53]—A pleading should be construed as a whole,[54] and, where reasonably possible, so as to give effect to all of its material allegations.[55] Specific averments control general ones.[56] Mere clerical errors will be disregarded.[57] That which is implied is of equal effect as if it had gations. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146.

49. Complaint in action for damages for personal injuries averring that act complained of was willfully or wantonly done held not demurrable, wantonness being legal equivalent of willfulness. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Ala.] 40 So. 763. Where complaint set up but a single cause of action in case predicated on simple negligence, held that it was not fatally defective because averments of negligence on part of defendant or its agent were in the disjunctive, same evidence and defenses being available in either case. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Sanders [Ala.] 40 So. 402. Alleged alternative averments held not such as to vitiate the complaint on demurrer, where in each instance they referred to same ultimate fact, each of them being pertinent to the single cause of action. Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co. v. Henderson [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 539. Allegation that defective condition of sidewalk was known to defendant or by the exercise of ordinary care might have been known to it, held not objectionable. Spaulding v. Edina [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 545. Pleading under oath, pursuant to Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. art. 2323, that account sued on was "not just or true, in whole or in part," held not objectionable. Milam v. Harrell Lumber Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 429, 97 S. W. 825.

50. An action may be maintained on the theory of alternative relief only where, on the facts stated, plaintiff would be entitled to the relief demanded against the same defendant or defendants, and he cannot join two defendants upon claim that he has right to relief against one or the other of them Cohn-Baer-Myers & Aronson Co. v. Realty Transfer Co., 102 N. Y. S. 122. Where two corporations had same name, but were organized under laws of different states, and were controlled by same parties, and had same officers who ordered fixtures from plaintiff without informing him for which corporation they were intended, and they were distributed between two as officers desired, held that it was permissible for plaintiff to allege in complaint in suit for purchase price that one of them had ordered all the fixtures and was liable for all of them and in the alternative that the other had done so, and jury could return verdict against each for amount it owed. Braun & Ferguson Co. v. Paulson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 564, 95 S. W. 617. Civ. Code Proc. § 113, subsec. 4, providing that party may allege alternatively the existence of one or another fact, if he states that one of them is true and that he does not know which of them is true, held not to limit number of facts which may be so stated to two, so that petition was not objectionable because alleging that death was caused by one or more of three negligent acts, and that plaintiff did not know which. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wyatt's Adm'r, 29 Ky. L. R. 437, 93 S. W. 601. Both of the alternative statements must present a cause of action or the pleading is bad. Hoffman v. Maysville, 29 Ky. L. R. 1245, 97 S. W. 360.

51. Answer in suit to set aside judgment for fraud. Lee v. Hickson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 91, 91 S. W. 636.

52. Where pleadings were signed by two attorneys one of whom was judge of court where case was pending, held that they were properly allowed to stand, though Rev. St. 1895, art. 271, prohibits judges from appearing and pleading as attorneys, since they were signed by one attorney who was allowed to sign them. McAllen v. Raphael [Tex. Civ. App.] 96 S. W. 760.

53. See 6 C. L. 1015.

54. Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co. v. Henderson [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 539. Failure of complaint to show fact that plaintiff himself was not the servant whose negligence caused accident complained of held not supplied by other allegation. Schreiner v. Grant Bros. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 912. On demurrer to certain paragraphs of answer held that their sufficiency could only be determined by considering them in connection with others which were traversed, all being proper parts of single plea of justification. Molineux v. Hurlbut [Conn.] 64 A. 350. Where plaintiff in ejectment pleads title and source of title of each of the parties in addition to statutory requirements, all the facts pleaded will be considered in determining sufficiency of petition on demurrer, and demurrer will be sustained if other allegations negative truth of those required. Jones v. Carnes [Okl.] 87 P. 652.

55. Complaint in action for damages due to negligent construction of windmill held to state cause of action ex delicto and not ex contractu, particularly as case was tried on that theory below. Flint & Walling Mfg. Co. v. Beckett [Ind.] 79 N. E. 503.

56. Averments as to negligence. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Kleespies [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 1015. In partition, general averments in cross complaint that ownership is that of tenants in common held to control specific averments in exhibit not properly apart thereof because not the foundation of the action. Shetterly v. Axt [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 865.

57. Inappropriate use of word "plaintiff" instead of "defendant" held obviously a been expressed.[58] An inference cannot be drawn from facts which themselves rest wholly or in part in inference, or which do not reasonably and fairly exclude every other hypothesis except the fact inferred,[59] though the contrary has been held in regard to an express trust.[60] An agreement alleged generally will ordinarily be presumed to be in writing if a writing is essential to its validity.[61]

It will be presumed that the pleader has stated is case as strongly in his favor as the facts warrant.[62] At common law on demurrer everything in a pleading was taken most strongly against the pleader, and this rule still prevails in some states.[63] Under the codes, however, pleadings are generally to be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties,[64] and every reasonable intendment clerical error. Burstein v. Levy, 49 Misc. 469, 98 N. Y. S. 853. Allegation that wagon ran into "plaintiff" instead of into "plaintiff's intestate" held a mere clerical error which did not render complaint demurrable, but was mendable at any time, under Code Civ. Proc. § 723, upon mere suggestion to court. King v. Mail & Express Co., 113 App. Div. 90, 98 N. Y. S. 891.

58. On demurrer. Moore v. East Tenn. Tel. Co. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 965.

59. Facts must be clearly and unequivocally alleged. Krank v. Continental Ins. Co., 50 Misc. 144, 100 N. Y. S. 399. In action on fire insurance policy, complaint held not to allege specifically or by fair intendment that insured property was destroyed or damaged by fire. Id.

60. Where statute requires it to be in writing, complaint in action to enforce such a trust must allege that it was in writing. Boulliam v. Doyle [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 859.

61. Petition is not demurrable because it fails to allege that contract declared upon was in writing, though contract is within statute of frauds. Mobley v. Lott [Ga.] 56 S. E. 637; Belt v. Lazenby, 126 Ga. 767, 56 S. E. 81; International Harvester Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 653, 96 S. W. 93. Demurrer is not well taken unless complaint shows affirmatively that contract sued on is oral. Alexander v. Cleland [N. M.] 86 P. 425. Where petition did not state whether contract sued on was written or oral, held that it would be presumed to be in writing as against argument that it was barred by statute of limitations relating to oral contracts. Van Meter v. Poole, 119 Mo. App. 296, 95 S. W. 960. Where written contract is indispensable to valid agreement, pleading of agreement that does not affirmatively show that it was not in writing is pleading of a written agreement. Barnsdall v. Waltemeyer [C. C. A.] 142 F. 415.

62. Schaadt v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 2 Cal. App. 715, 84 P. 249.

63. Johnson v. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 33; Bunting v. Dobson, 125 Ga. 447, 54 S. E. 102; Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Keown, 29 Ky. L. R. 110, 400, 93 S. W. 588; Fox v. Clemmons [Ky.] 99 S. W. 641; Cambers v. First Nat. Bank 144 F. 717. Allegations which are ambiguous or in alternative form. Bagnett v. Edwards, 126 Ga. 463, 55 S. E. 250. Where petition in suit to enjoin sale of land under power contained in instrument executed by plaintiff's intestate for purpose of securing a debt described such instrument as "a mortgage or security deed", held that it would be considered as deed conveying title, and power as one coupled with an interest and not revoked by maker's death. Id. Declaration in action for personal injuries to servant held not to state cause of action. Wright v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 119 Ill. App. 132. Claim of set-off in action on note held insufficient, it being presumed that plaintiff came into possession of note lawfully where it failed to state how she came into possession of it. Schnell v. Schnell [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 432. Petition in action for personal injuries held to mean that plaintiff had defendant's permission or consent to use shop, what pleader called invitation being a license. Brown v. Thomas Blackwell Coal & Min. Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 299. Where complaint alleged that dangerous condition arising from close proximity of pole to track was unknown to plaintiff, held that on demurrer it would be presumed that he knew it was there but did not appreciate danger, allegation containing an implication to that effect. Moore v. East Tennessee Tel. Co. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 965.

64. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Doughty, 77 Ark. 1, 91 S. W. 768. Rev. St. 1899, § 629. Ackerman v. Green, 195 Mo. 124, 93 S. W. 255. Code Civ. Proc. § 519. Howe v. Hagan, 110 App. Div. 392, 97 N. Y. S. 86; Thompson v. Wittkop, 184 N. Y. 117, 76 N. E. 1081. On general demurrer every reasonable intendment from allegations taken as a whole will be indulged. International Harvester Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 653, 96 S. W. 93. Petition in action for breach of contract of employment held sufficient Id. In absence of motion to make more definite and certain, petition should be liberally construed with view to promote justice, and demurrer overruled, if facts stated, when all are taken as true constitute cause of action, whether well pleaded or not. Bowersox v. Hall & Co. [Kan.] 84 P. 557; Upham v. Head [Kan.] 85 P. 1017. Under rule that pleadings should be liberally construed with view to substantial justice between parties, no pleading is to be condemned if allegations of fact claimed to have been stated can be read therefrom with reasonable certainty though its allegations be in form uncertain, incomplete, and defective. Modern Steel Structural Co. v. English Const. Co. [Wis.] 108 N. W. 70. Reply held to put in issue allegations of defendant's counterclaim for damages for breach of contract sued on. Id. Where facts are stated in complaint sufficient to constitute cause of action, whether legal or equitable, complaint is not demurrable for want of facts because both legal and equitable relief is demanded, when and presumption will be indulged in their favor,[65] though in some states this rule does not apply when they are attacked by special demurrer.[66] As a general rule both at common law and under the codes, pleadings will be liberally construed when first attacked at the trial,[67] or after verdict and judgment,[68] though there seems to be some conflict of authority in this regard.[69] plaintiff is entitled to but one. Doyle v. Delaney, 112 App. Div. 856, 98 N. Y. S. 468. Where complaint stated a legal cause of action, held that it was not demurrable because it demanded equitable relief where it also demanded a money judgment in the alternative. Id. Demand for money judgment in the alternative held the equivalent of a demand for a legal remedy, no set form of words being necessary if intent of pleader is made apparent. Id. Declaration in action on insurance policy held sufficient in view of Code 1887, § 3246, providing that no action shall abate for want of form where declaration sets forth sufficient matter of substance for court to proceed upon the merits, and § 3272, providing that on demurrer, defects and imperfections shall be disregarded unless there is omitted something so essential to action or defense that judgment according to law cannot be given. Cosmopolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Koegel, 104 Va. 619, 52 S. E. 166. Test of sufficiency of a declaration is whether it contains sufficient matter for plaintiff to state and prove his case under it, and to afford a defense to another suit for same cause of action. Id.

65. Pleader is entitled to benefit of all reasonable inferences which can be deduced from specific facts alleged. Bell v. Central Nat. Bank, 28 App. D. C. 580. Allegation of refusal to pay certain sum held to imply a demand, at least on general demurrer. Hirshiser v. Ward [Nev.] 87 P. 171. On demurrer for want of facts, all facts stated will be held to be true, and pleading will be held to state all facts that can be implied from its allegations by reasonable and fair intendment. Lesser v. Bradford Realty Co., 101 N. Y. S. 571; Town of Hadley v. Garner, 101 N. Y. S. 777. Demurrer cannot be sustained simply because facts are imperfectly or informally averred, or agumentatively stated, or lack definiteness and precision. Complaint in action by servant for breach of contract of employment held sufficient. Treffinger v. Groh's Sons' 112 App. Div. 250, 98 N. Y. S. 291. Complaint in action for fraud held sufficient. Motley v. Mercantile Trust Co., 51 Misc. 460, 100 N. Y. S. 281. In absence of special exception. Gorham v. Dallas, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 365, 95 S. W. 551. Where no objection is made to the form of allegations of a petition. Whaley v. Thomason [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 207, 93 S. W. 212. Statement of grounds of contest of local option election held sufficient as against general demurrer, though allegations were redundant, etc. Id. Allegation the defendant promulgated a rule" held equivalent to allegation that rule was in force at time of accident, in absence of special exception. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Avis [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 756, 93 S. W. 424. General demurrer. Allen v. Baxter, 42 Wash. 434, 85 P. 26. All facts presumed to exist which are reasonably inferable from those pleaded. Not laches. Steinberg v. Saltzman [Wis.] 110 N. W. 198. Where construction of pleading assailed by demurrer is doubtful after giving its language a reasonable intendment, doubt will be resolved against pleader. Stephens v. City Council [Iowa] 107 N. W. 614.

66. Where pleading is fairly susceptible of two intendments, on special demurrer, that will be adopted which is most unfavorable to the pleading. Gorham v. Dallas, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 365, 95 S. W. 551.

67. O'Brien v. Seattle Ice Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 399. More liberally construed than on demurrer. Carey v. Hays, 41 Wash. 580, 84 P. 581. Rule that pleading must be taken most strongly against the pleader, where the language used is ambiguous, has no application where the pleader confesses that the pleading is ambiguous and seeks to amend it. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Georgia R. & Elec. Co., 125 Ga. 798, 54 S. E. 753. Allegation of complaint that trustee in bankruptcy claimed right to take possession of attached property though defective, held after answer, to be entitled to all intendments in favor of its sufficiency, and to be tantamount to allegation that, when suit was commenced, he had not taken possession of it. Goodnough Mercantile Co. v. Galloway [Or.] 84 P. 1049. On plaintiff's motion for judgment on pleadings made at trial, answer will be liberally construed. Answer held sufficient. Roebuck v. Wick [Minn.] 107 N. W. 1054.

An objection to introduction of any evidence. Simonds v. Richards [Kan.] 86 P. 452. Though averments are indefinite and informal, objection will be overruled if, upon any fair construction, it can be held to state a cause of action. Burnette v. Elliott, 72 Kan. 624, 84 P. 374. Complaint held sufficient. Id. Will be more liberally construed than if demurrer had been interposed before trial. Heether v. Huntsville [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 239. Objection will be overruled if it is susceptible of a construction that will constitute a cause of action. Lee v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 195 Mo. 400, 92 S. W. 614. Where petition in action for wrongful death of citizen of another state relied on statute of latter, authorizing widow to recover such damages as deceased could have recovered if death had not ensued, but was defective in failing to allege that deceased could have maintained suit in that state had he survived, but did state facts which would have allowed him to do so under statutes of forum, held that, on objection to introduction of evidence, it would be presumed that laws of two states were same, defendant having by its answer joined issue on question of negligence. Id. Petition in action on bond held sufficient, notwithstanding difference in name of plaintiff and that of obligee, and lack of particularity of allegations of mistake in this regard. State v. Delaney [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 1. Court will determine only whether or not it states cause of action in equity, and if facts pleaded are sufficient and in their nature

Profert and oyer.[70]—The purpose of making profert is to enable the other party to demand oyer,[71] and of oyer to enable the party craving it to hear the instrument so that he may enter it upon the pleadings and take advantage of any part thereof not already pleaded by his adversary.[72] Profert cannot be made nor oyer demanded unless the declaration avers a sealed instrument.[73] Defendant in an action of jactitation is not entitled to oyer of plaintiff's title.[74]

Exhibits.[75]—By statute in some states when any pleading is founded on a written instrument, the original or a copy thereof must be filed with the pleading.[76]

cognizable by court of equitable jurisdiction, objection will ordinarily be overruled. Haffner v. Dobrinski [Okl.] 88 P. 1042. Complaint in action on contract held to state sufficient facts to constitute cause of acion. Schriner v. Dickinson [S. D.] 107 N. W. 536. Allegations liberally construed for purpose of sustaining them on appeal. First Nat. Bank v. Cochran [Okl.] 87 P. 855.

68. Clem v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 245, 96 S. W. 226; Hopkins v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 128 Wis. 403, 107 N. W. 330. On appeal. Crane Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 849; Frontier Supply Co. v. Loveland [Wyo.] 88 P. 651. Where pleading is attacked and defect therein sought to be availed of for first time on error, or at any time after verdict, all intendments and reasonable inferences stand to advantage of pleader, and all parts of pleading must be taken most strongly in his favor. Alton L. & T. Co. v. Oller, 119 Ill. App. 181. Where sufficiency of complaint is tested for first time by assignment of error on appeal it will be held sufficient if it contains facts enough to bar another action for same cause. Lewis Tp. Imp. Co. v. Royer [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 1068; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bockting [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 524. Any uncertainty held cured by evidence and verdict Negligence. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Kidd [Ind.] 79 N. E. 347. Complaint in action for personal injuries sufficient. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Smith [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1140. Complaint in action for damages for personal injuries to passenger on train held sufficient in absence of motion to make more specific. Southern R. Co. v. Roach [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 606, 78 N. E. 201. Complaint is good if upon facts stated plaintiff is entitled to any part of relief sought on theory of his case. Migatz v. Stieglitz [Ind.] 77 N. E. 400. Can be successfully so attacked only when total failure to allege some fact essential to recovery. Complaint in action for personal injuries held sufficient. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Smith [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1140. Uncertainty or inadequacy of averment will not render it bad. Id. In action for personal injuries due to negligence, if defendant fails to demur, appellate court will not reverse judgment on objection that complaint fails to state cause of action where it is shown by record that it does state that injury was direct result of negligent and careless construction and management of defendant's property, and calls attention to particular portion thereof that was badly constructed and managed and resulted in injury of plaintiff. Crowley v. Croesus Gold & Copper Min. Co. [Idaho] 86 P. 536. Where party fails to test sufficiency of petition by demurrer, but answers to merits and proceeds to trial on theory that it tenders certain issue, and such issue is litigated, pleadings will, on appeal, be construed to raise such issue if it is possible by any reasonable construction of language. Parkins v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 260. Objections to sufficiency of answer to support testimony and sustain judgment held too late. Nelson v. Modern Brotherhood of America [Neb.] 110 N. W. 1008. In passing on sufficiency of petition to support judgment on appeal, it is entitled to liberal construction, and any construction which will support judgment. Petition held sufficient. McDonald v. Cabiness [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. App. 578, 98 S. W. 943.

69 Answer construed most strongly against pleader. Fitzpatrick v. Vincent, 28 Ky. L. R. 121, 88 S. W. 1073. In an action on purchase money notes in which it is alleged that the vendor had made and the vendee had accepted a warranty deed, an answer denying, that the vendor had made a good title or that the vendee had accepted such deed or title merely denies that the vendor had made the vendee a good title and not that he had accepted a deed. 71. Sautter v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 994.

72. Sautter v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 994. Letters of administration having been made public records by statute, and defendant before plea being entitled to compel plaintiff to file any instrument upon which declaration is founded, fact that one suing as administrator failed to make profert of letters held not to require striking out of declaration, where issuance of letters and their date and officer by whom granted was alleged. Id. Where oyer of sealed instrument was in fact demanded and given, it became part of declaration and gave defendant right to plead thereon whether oyer was in fact demandable or not. Morrill's Adm'x v. Catholic Order of Foresters [Vt.] 65 A. 526.

73. Insufficency of notice of motion for judgment on note under Code 1899, c. 121, § 6, held not cured by reading of note on demand for oyer. Anderson v. Prince [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 656. Contract not under seal cannot be made a part of the declaration by oyer. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Sutherland, 105 Va. 545, 54 S. E. 465. Such a contract cannot be considered in consideration a demurrer to the declaration. Id.

76. Copies of notes and a written statement of balance due on open account filed with declaration in action on all of them held sufficient to appraise defendant of nature and extent of demand against him and

As a general rule exhibits cannot be looked to in aid of a pleading,[77] though they may be against it.[78] There seems to be a conflict of authority as to the effect in this regard of statutes requiring the filing of written instruments sued on.[79]

Bills of particulars.[80]—A bill of particulars may ordinarily be demanded in all actions where, by reason of the generality of the claim or charge, the adverse party is unable to know with reasonable certainty what he is required to meet.[81] Its purpose and effect is to amplify the pleading and to limit the issues.[82] It is not

hence a sufficient compliance with statute. Lord v. Dowling Co. [Fla.] 42 So. 585. Rights sought to be enforced by plaintiff held based on compromise agreement and not on will, so that it was not necessary to attach copy of will to petition or set out its substance therein. Bell v. Lazenby, 126 Ga. 767, 56 S. E. 81; Elwood Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Glaspy [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 956. Complaint seeking to restrain threatened breach of written contract to furnish gas held founded on contract, so that original or copy should have been filed or set out as required by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 565. Elwood Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Kullman [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 1056. Order given by contract to materialman on owner for balance due under contract held not an assignment of contract, and hence materialman was not bound to file contract in action to foreclose lien. Siegmund v. Kellogg-Mackay-Cameron Co. [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1096. Action by materialman to foreclose mechanic's lien held not founded on contract between owner and contractor. Id. In action to recover value of fence constructed along railroad right of way where it ran through plaintiff's land, itemized and verified statement of account required by statute to be furnished to company in such case is not foundation of action. Vandalia R. Co. v. Kanarr [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1135. Statement is not an account within meaning of statute, nor is action based on any contract. Vandalia R. Co. v. Stephens [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 1055. In action to contest probate of will and to probate in its stead an alleged subsequent one, latter will held foundation of cause of action so that it was part of complaint when copy was attached as exhibit. Heaston v. Kreig [Ind.] 77 N. E. 805. Contract not foundation of action to recover premiums paid on alleged void policy of life insurance. American Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Mead [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 526. Action by remaindermen under will to restrain commission of waste by grantees of life tenant, etc., held not founded on will. Cross v. Hendry [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 531. Will held basis of paragraph of answer claiming setoff to note sued on. Schnell v. Schnell [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 432. Foundation of cause of action in certain paragraph of complaint held issue of suretyship of married woman and not deed given to secure sureties which it was sought to have declared a mortgage and canceled. Warner v. Jennings [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 1013. Is not essential under Civ. Code Proc. § 120, that an exhibit like an open account be set out in the body of the pleading if it is made a part of it and filed with it as an exhibit, though rule is different as to writings that are evidences of indebtedness. Snowden v. Snowden, 29 Ky. L. R. 1112, 96 S. W. 922. Rev. St. 1899, § 643, held not to require filing of contrats executed by both parties. Withers v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 34.

77. Cannot be referred to for purpose of supplying omission of a material allegation or curing a fatal defect. McPherson v. Hattich [Ariz.] 85 P. 731. Cannot plead by exhibits at common law and contract cannot be made part of declaration at law by filing it therewith and referring to it as a part thereof. Chicago Portrait Co. v. Chicago Crayon Co., 118 Ill. App. 98. Bond filed with petition in action thereon held not part of it so that face of petition alone could be looked to to determine whether if stated cause of action. State v. Delaney [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 1. Exhibit not the foundation of a cross-complaint cannot be looked to to determine its sufficiency. Shetterly v. Axt [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 865. Where copy of will was made exhibit pursuant to order of court on motion of defendants, but was not a proper exhibit under Code, questions as to effect of such instrument held not raised by demurrer to complaint. Heaston v. Kreig [Ind.] 77 N. E. 805.

78. Where petition alleged that money sought to be recovered from partnership was received by certain person as a member of the firm, and not turned over to plaintiff to whom it belonged, but exhibits showed that transaction was between plaintiff and such person was between them alone, demurrer was properly sustained. Fox v. Clemmons [Ky.] 99 S. W. 641.

79. Florida: Rev. St. 1892, and circuit court rule 14, requiring contract sued on or a copy thereof to be filed with declaration, do not make contract so filed a part of the pleading, and hence copy of contract annexed to declaration as an exhibit cannot, on demurrer, be used to supply an essential allegation of fact omitted therefrom. Milligan v. Keyser [Fla.] 42 So. 367.

Indiana: Where allegations of complaint in regard to instrument sued on vary from provisions of instrument as shown by exhibit controls on demurrer and allegations will be disregarded. Huber Mfg. Co. v. Wagner [Ind.] 78 N. E. 329.

Oklahoma: Copy of instrument which is basis of action, attached to petition and made a part thereof, should be considered as part of petition when construing allegations thereof as against general demurrer. Mortgage in replevin by mortagagee. Whitacre v. Nichols [Okl.] 87 P. 865.

82. To inform the opposite party of the precise nature and extent of the claim which the plaintiff intends to rely upon under each and every count of the narr., and to confine his evidence to the claim thus stated. Cairnes v. Pelton, 103 Md. 40, 63 A. 105. To amplify the pleading and indicate with more a part of the pleading and cannot operate to change the cause of action therein alleged.[83]

Bills of particulars are generally obtained by motion and order of court.[84] The motion is sometimes required to be based on the affidavit of the party making it.[85] In some states a copy of an account sued on may be procured on mere notice or demand.[86]

Whether or not a party shall be ruled to furnish a bill in a particular case ordinarily rests in the sound legal discretion of the trial court, whose action will not be reviewed unless an abuse of discretion is clearly shown.[87] One whose pleading is bad is not entitled to compel the furnishing of a bill by his adversary.[88] A party should not be required to recite his evidence[89] or to disclose his witnesses,[90] or to set particularity than is ordinarily required in a formal plea, the nature of the claim made in order that the issues may be be more intelligently met. Chisolm v. Straus, 110 App. Div. 552, 97 N. Y. S. 258. Object is not only to enable a party to properly prepare his pleading for trial but also to limit the scope of the inquiry at the trial, and whenever facts are presented from which court can find that either is the object of the motion, bill will be ordered to extent required for such purpose. Rhodes v. Rice, 113 App. Div. 304, 98 N. Y. S. 913. When required and furnished, its effect is to limit the plaintiff on the trial to proof of the particular cause or causes therein mentioned. American Rolling Mill Corp. v. Ohio Iron & Metal Co., 120 Ill. App. 614. In action on common counts, filing of bill held to have operated to strike out of the complaint all the counts or paragraphs not appropriately applicable thereto. Gen. St. 1902, § 627. Dunn v. Foley, 78 Conn. 670, 63 A. 122. Declaration in action of assumpsit to recover money paid for option contained common money counts and special count alleging false representations. Held that bill alleging that action was to recover amount paid defendants and interest thereon did not purport to and did not limit plaintiff to common counts, measure of damages being same under special count and under common counts. Gubbins v. Ashley [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 844, 109 N. W. 841.

83. Dixon v. Bunnell, 102 N. Y. S. 775. Office is to amplify a pleading and limit the proof and not to change cause of action stated in complaint, or to state one other than one there stated. St. Albans Beef Co. v. Aldridge, 112 App. Div. 803, 99 N. Y. S. 398.

84. Party is not bound to furnish bill provided for by Rev. Codes 1899, § 5282, on demand, but court or judge must order to be furnished before delivery can be compelled or penalties for failure to deliver inflicted. Hanson v. Lindstrom [N. D.] 108 N. W. 798. In action to recover money paid to defendant by plaintiff and alleged to be held by him as trustee pursuant to contract, motion to make complaint more definite and certain by stating dates and amount of payments, etc., held to amount in effect to demand for bill of particulars which was properly denied because irregularly made. Gouplile v. Chaput [Wash.] 86 P. 1058.

85. Affidavit of attorney alone is insufficient unless some well stated reason exists for a departure from this rule. St. Regis Paper Co. v. Santa Clara Lumber Co., 112 App. Div. 775, 98 N. Y. S. 572. Rule is not changed by fact that defendant applying for bill is a corporation. Id. Fact that no officer of defendant was within county at date of verification held not a sufficient reason for verification by attorney. Id. Affidavit of attorney held insufficient in that he did not make it appear that he had personal knowledge of the essential facts, and because it appeared that his statement as to lack of knowledge of officers of defendant as to certain matters was based on their unsworn statements to him. Id.

86. Copy of order for delivery of threshing machine outfit accepted by seller for fixed price, on which certain payments have been made, is not a copy of an account within meaning of Rev. Codes 1899, § 5282. Hanson v. Lindstrom [N. D.] 108 N. W. 798.

87. American Rolling Mill Corp. v. Ohio Iron & Metal Co., 120 Ill. App. 614. In action on quantum meruit for work and materials done and furnished in repairing building, of defendant's counterclaim for loss of profits and rents paid because of delay in completing work. Geo. W. Smith & Co. v. Welsh, 114 App. Div. 899, 99 N. Y. S. 873. In action for breach of contract of employment, where answer alleged that plaintiff was rightfully discharged because he had persisted in course of conduct antagonistic to defendant's superintendent and destructive of discipline, held that plaintiff was entitled to bill specifying items of such course of conduct and acts and omissions whereby he antagonized or failed to co-operate with superintendent and which were destructive of dicipline. Burhans v. Hudson River Wood Pulp Mfg. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 271. In action to recover balance alleged to have been expended for benefit of defendant's intestate, held that plaintiff was entitled to particulars of defendant's counterclaim alleging deception, imposition, and wrongdealing by plaintiff and his deceased copartner for period of four years, while acting as attorney for defendant's intestate, where in his moving affidavit he denied all knowledge of the same, and there were no opposing affidavits of inability to furnish particulars. Washburn v. Graves, 101 N. Y. S. 1043.

Plaintiff held not entitled to bill: In action for alleged wrongful discharge of plaintiff from defendant's employ, held unnecessary to require defendant to state wherein plaintiff was careless and inattentive, etc., those matters having been stated with sufficient particularity in the answer (Reichardt v. Plaut, 98 N. Y. S. 195), nor should defendants be required to give names and addresses of persons improvidently employed by plaintiff while acting for them (Id.), nor where answer merely alleged that plaintiff was not diligent in seeking other employment to specify names of persons from whom they claimed plaintiff could have obtained employment and nature thereof, etc. (Id.). Where defendants claimed that goods manufactured were returned because of plaintiff's negligence and defendants furnished voluntary bill, held that order for further bill requiring them to furnish names and addresses of such customers other than those specified in previous bill should be modified by inserting words "if any", so that they would not be precluded from proving items in such former bill (Id.).

Defendant held entitled to bill: In action to recover value of articles claimed to have been unlawfuly removed from premises belonging to her by defendants upon vacating as tenants, and resultant damages to her freehold from such removal, specifying quantity, character, and value of articles removed, and character and nature of injuries to freehold. Chisolm v. Straus, 110 App. Div. 552, 97 N. Y. S. 258. In action for specific performance of contract of damages claimed to have been sustained in consequence of failure to perform, for which complainant asked judgment in case specific performance could not be decreed. Gross v. Conner, 114 App. Div. 32, 99 N. Y. S. 569. In action on contract to build and convey certain houses to plaintiff, where alleged breach consisted in failure to build according to plans and sample houses, specifying in what respect the houses were not completed as required. Breslauer Realty Co. v. Cohen, 100 N. Y. S. 775. In action by vendees for specific performance for contract for sale of realty, where complaint alleged that title tendered by defendants was "subject to a number of violations on file" in various city departments, and also to other incumbrances and charges, held that plaintiffs would be required to specify particular violations which they complained were not complied with and constituted an incumbrance at the time title was tendered and rejected. Gross v. Connor, 114 App. Div. 32, 99 N. Y. S. 569. In action to recover money deposited to bind contract for sale of realty on ground that defendant could not furnish marketable title because of incumbrances other than those mentioned in contract and to recover counsel fees paid for examining title, motion for bill as to incumbrances and defects in title and as to date of payment of counsel fees granted. Markowitz v. Teichman, 102 N. Y. S. 469, here defendant denied making of written contract sued on or any knowledge thereof, held that he was entitled to copy of contract on motion for bill. United States Paper Co. v. De Haven, 100 N. Y. S. 796. In action for breach of contract to furnish twisted wire in cut lengths, where plaintiff alleged as special damages its inability to perform contracts with third persons and to fill orders, held that defendant was entitled to bill giving names and addresses of persons with whom plaintiff made contracts and statement of items of damages sustained by being unable to fill orders. Id. In action for services in bringing about sale of defendant's property, plaintiff required to specify whether contract under which services were rendered was oral or written, if former, to state when and where and persons with whom it was made, and substance thereof, and if written to furnish copy thereof, and also to specify what services were rendered. Rhodes v. Rice, 113 App. Div. 304, 98 N. Y. S. 913. In action on life insurance policy, where answer set up false representations and warranties and reply alleged that at time of making application insured duly informed defendant of true condition of her health, etc., held that order directing plaintiff to specify name of person to whom information was given and time and place of each transaction upon which waiver was claimed should further provide that, if plaintiff should declare under oath that he was unable to give such name, he might instead give description of such person, or such other facts as woud tend to establish his identity. Schmitt v. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co., 97 N. Y. S. 294. Plaintiff in action for slander held properly required to file bill of places where and persons to whom words were spoken, and names of persons who would have dealt with plaintiff but for such words. American Rolling Mill Corp. v. Ohio Iron & Metal Co., 120 Ill. App. 614. In action against railroad for conversion of trunks, showing as far as possible the contents of trunks. Texas & P. R. Co., v. Weatherby [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 809, 92 S. W. 58. Error in failing to require plaintiff to furnish it held harmless where it appeared that defendant was in possession of trunks and knew their contents. Id. In action against street railway for assault by employe on passenger, plaintiff required to give place, time, direction car was going, number of car, line, badge number of motorman and conductor if he knew them, length of time plaintiff was confined to house and detained from work, amounts paid for doctor bills and medicines, and nature of his business and average earnings, or to state his lack of knowledge as to any such information he was unable to furnish, but not nature of injuries and effect of same, there being no allegation of permanent injuries. Ferris v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 463. Where complaint alleged permanent injuries in general, held that bill should have been ordered though defendant would not, as condition of granting motion, waive its right to physical examination of plaintiff, since particulars might in themselves furnish reason for such examination. Baker v. New York City R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 276.

A party failing to file a bill as required by statute [96] or order of court [97] is generally precluded from giving evidence as to matters which should have been in-

Defendant held not entitled to bill: In action to quiet title held not an abuse of discretion to refuse to require plaintiffs to furnish bill of their claim of title, abstract of title, particular statement of defendant's adverse claim, claims of both parties being evidenced by written instruments and records, and there being no pretense of surprise. Boyer v. Robison [Wash.] 86 P. 385. Refusal to grant motion for bill showing time of day when collision between plaintiff's team and defendant's automobile was alleged to have occurred held not an abuse of discretion. Shepard v. Wood, 102 N. Y. S. 305. In action for conversion of stock by defendants while in possession of it, where there was no allegation that plaintiff ever had possession of stock or that it was taken from her possession or control, held that plaintiff should not be required to furnish bill specifying dates when she parted with stock or when it was taken from her possession, and whether she delivered it or it was taken without her consent, where she filed affidavit that it was impossible for her to do so because stock was taken without her consent. Farwell v. Boody, 112 App. Div. 493, 98 N. Y. S. 385. In action for breach of contract defendants held not entitled to bill specifying damages which were alleged generally. Breshauer Realty Co. v. Cohen, 100 N. Y. S. 775. In action on a contract for services in securing contracts from government for purchase of boats where answer denied contract and rendition of services, held that defendant was not entitled to bill of particulars specifying particulars of services, whether contract was written or oral, etc., for purpose of preparing an amended answer, it not being necessary for that purpose. Sands v. Holland Torpedo Boat Co., 100 N. Y. S. 684. In actions for libel bill as to elements of damage should not be granted when no special damages are alleged. W. T. Hanson Co. v. Collier, 101 N. Y. S. 690. In action for injuries to business by publication in regard to certain medical compound, motion for bill specifying names and residences of customers induced to cease purchasing denied. Id. Where demand for damages was general and there was no plea of justification, or that compound was made up of ingredients mentioned in alleged libel, motion for bill specifying ingredients of compound at periods when transfers of ownership of compound and trademarks were made, prior to publication of libel, denied. Id.

95. On counterclaim to recover moneys alleged to have been disbursed for plaintiff, bill held sufficient in view of affidavit of defendant that no itemized account was ever kept and that under the circumstances he was unable to specify disbursements more particularly, and in view of fact that, if advances were made, plaintiff must have as much information in regard to them as defendant. Kindberg v. Chapman, 100 N. Y. S. 685.

96. Is no authority for precluding defendants in case of default from giving evidence of their defenses, provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 531, being that they may be precluded from giving evidence of part or parts of affirmative allegations of which the particulars have not been given. Reichardt v. Plaut, 98 N. Y. S. 195. Is within discretionary power of court, in order precluding giving of evidence for failure to furnish account on demand pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 531, to provide that order shall be effective unless copies are furnished within specified time. Smith v. Irvin, 101 N. Y. S. 904. Order requiring furnishing of copies within twenty days modified so as to preclude defendants from giving evidence of accounts unless copies were furnished within twenty days. Id. Where defendant failed to furnish bill after demand made in strict compliance with statute, held that he should not have been allowed to introduce any evidence. Code 1892, § 1652. W. C. Early & Co. v. Long [Miss.] 42 So. 348.

97. Where plaintiff's action was upon an account for labor performed and also for an cluded therein, though this rule has been held not to apply to interest to which a party is entitled by statute.[98] It has also been held that permitting him to give such evidence is tantamount to the allowance of an amendment, and hence not erroneous.[99] Disobedience of such an order may justify a dismissal.[1] The fact that a bill does not specify matters equally known to both parties and as to which there is no dispute is immaterial.[2] In case the bill furnished is defective or insufficient, the remedy is by motion for a further bill, or by returning the defective bill and leaving the question of its sufficiency to be determined by a motion to compel its acceptance.[3] The fact that a party makes different claims in the form of bills of particulars may be considered by the jury, but is not conclusive against him.[4]

§ 2. The declaration, count, complaint, or petition.[5] General rules.—The declaration, petition, or complaint, must aver all the facts necessary to show a cause of action against defendant,[6] including the performance or happening of all conditions precedent to the right to sue, or an excuse for nonperformance.[7] It is sometimes required to be divided into orderly and distinct paragraphs consecutively numbered.[8] Under the code it is not necessary to brand a cause of action, but it is accounting for moneys received by defendant to use of plaintiff, failure to deliver bill of items as to former held not to preclude him from giving evidence as to later. Flynn v. Seale, 2 Cal. App. 665, 84 P. 263.

98. May be recovered though not claimed in bill filed under rule of court. Meyer v. Johnson, 122 Ill. App. 87.

99. Permitting plaintiff to testify to loss and value of articles not set out. Hayes v. Brandt [Ark.] 98 S. W. 368.

1. American Rolling Mill Corp. v. Ohio Iron & Metal Co., 120 Ill. App. 614.

2. Failure to specify by whom time checks were issued where evidence showed that manner of issuing them was well understood between parties, only question being as to whose obligations they were. Yawger v. Backs, 119 Ill. App. 61.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 531, does not authorize order precluding evidence where party attempts to comply with order, and bill furnished is never returned and no attempt is made to secure a further one. Reader v. Haggin, 114 App. Div. 112, 99 N. Y. S. 681.

4. In action for balance due on account for labor, subjects of quantity and price being for jury. Snyder v. Patton & Gibson Co., 143 Mich. 350, 12 Det. Leg. N. 1041, 106 N. W. 1106.

5. See 6 C. L. 1022.

6. Must set forth cause of action plainly, fully, and distinctly. Petition in action of trover held sufficient whether looked at without regard to common-law forms of action or not. Phelan v. Vestner, 125 Ga. 825, 54 S. E. 697. In complaints or declarations for negligence it is competent, after showing the existence of a duty by appropriate allegations, to predicate negligence, charged in general terms, upon any act or omission whereby it is claimed that that duty was violated. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Slaughter [Ind.] 79 N. E. 186. Petition declaring on appeal bond, containing no allegations showing its breach, is demurrable. Moriarty v. Cochran [Neb.] 106 N. W. 1011. Mere statement of indebtedness is insufficient, but must be a statement of promise to pay, either express or implied. Haines v. Rogers [N. J. Law] 62 A. 272. Bill in equity must charge all facts essential to entitle him to relief. Simmons v. Lima Oil Co. [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 258. Complaint must state facts from which legal conclusion follows that plaintiff is entitled to some relief. Cohn-Baer-Myers & Aronson Co. v. Realty Transfer Co., 102 N. Y. S. 122. In actions of tort founded on defendant's negligence, declaration must allege directly and positively, and not merely by way of recital, what duty was owing by defendant to plaintiff, the failure to discharge which caused injury complained of, and its breach, or make such averments of facts as will show existence of duty and its breach. Declaration held insufficient. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stegall's Adm'r, 105 Va. 538, 54 S. E. 19. Must show existence of duty and its violation. Pullman Co. v. Woodfolk, 121 Ill. App. 321. Declaration held sufficient. Blue Ridge L. & P. Co. v. Tutwiler [Va.] 55 S. E. 539.

7. As to manner of alleging performance, see § 1, ante. In action on contract, should allege performance by plaintiff, or excuse for nonperformance. Milligan v. Keyser [Fla.] 42 So. 367. Declaration was that plaintiff, having been committed to jail as witness in criminal case, was not furnished by defendant, the sheriff, with separate accommodations as required by Laws 1898, p. 876, c. 237, § 30. Defendant pleaded that board had not provided for such accommodations. Held, upon demurrer to plea, that declaration was bad for failure to charge affirmative of allegation negatived by plea, that is in failing to state only condition under which, if at all, duty was cast on defendant. Watkins v. Kirby [N. J. Law] 64 A. 979. In action by foreign corporation to recover purchase price of goods sold in state, must allege compliance with statute regulating such corporations. Ward v. Ball, 100 N. Y. S. 119. Notice of claim for damages provided for in contract of affreightment held condition precedent, so that it was necessary to allege compliance therewith or waiver. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Phillips [Okl.] 87 P. 470. In action on fire insurance policy, must allege furnishing proofs of loss or their waiver. American Cereal Co. v. Western Assur. Co., 148 F. 77.

8. Whether it is so divided is a matter to be left largely to the discretion of the trial sufficient if the facts stated constitute one, and two or more are not improperly joined.[9] Ordinarily it is not essential to the statement of a good cause of action that the complaint set out or disclose the proper legal measure of damages,[10] but the contrary is true where the law does not necessarily imply that plaintiff sustained damage from the act complained of.[11]

The theory of a complaint is to be determined from the facts stated therein, and not from the admissions of the parties.[12] Whether the action is in tort or on contract,[13] or on an express or implied contract,[14] or at law or in equity,[15] and whether the complaint states one or more causes of action,[16] are questions of construction.

judge. Upholding petition held not an abuse of discretion. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Taylor, 125 Ga. 454, 54 S. E. 622.

9. Motion to require plaintiff to elect whether she would rely on alleged breach of contract or on tort held properly denied where complaint alleged that plaintiff leased property from defendant who violated his duty to keep her in peaceable possession and before expiration of lease attempted to tear down building, in consequence of which plaintiff's tenants were driven away and her business broken up, and she was compelled to terminate her tenancy. Gray v. Linton [Colo.] 88 P. 749.

10. See, also, post, this section, Prayer. Statement of the facts essential to a good cause of action is sufficient. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Jenkins [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 77, 89 S. W. 1106.

11. In such case resulting damage must be shown with particularity. Malnati v. Thomas, 26 App. D. C. 277. In order to render special damages recoverable, each item thereof must be specially and specifically pleaded. Blackwell v. Speer [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 511, 98 S. W. 903.

12. Where demurrer for want of facts was overruled on ground that complaint stated good cause of action at common law, subsequent statement of plaintiff that he elected to prosecute under employers' liability act held not to have made previous ruling erroneous, or complaint subject to attack on ground that more than one theory was attempted to be stated therein. Oolithic Stone Co. v. Ridge [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 441.

13. Complaint in action for damages due to negligent construction of windmill held to state cause of action ex delicto and not ex contractu, though it set out contract, particularly as case was tried on that theory. Flint & Walling Mfg. Co. v. Beckett [Ind.] 79 N. E. 503. In suing in tort, plaintiff may set out his contract as constituting an underlying fact, instead of charging defendant's undertaking in general terms, without thereby necessarily committing himself to theory that action is for breach of contract. Id. Special count in action against carrier for delivery of goods without surrender of bills of lading held one in tort, it being insufficient as a count in assumpsit for failure to allege consideration. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Smith [Va.] 56 S. E. 567. Petition against carrier for delay in transporting fruit held to state cause of action ex contractu. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Walton [Ga.] 56 S. E. 419. Petition held to state cause of action for recovery of alleged indebtedness to plaintiff's intestate and not one for conversion of certain notes. Ackerman v. Green, 195 Mo. 124, 93 S. W. 255. Complaint in action for damages against carrier for assault by employe held to state cause of action for breach of contract to safely carry plaintiff, and action was not one of tort. Busch v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. [N. Y.] 80 N. E. 197.

14. Petition held to state cause of action for money had and received and not for breach of express contract. Crigler v. Duncan [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 61.

15. Action held not one in equity to enforce a trust, but one at law to recover moneys alleged to have come into defendant's hands and which he refused to turn over on demand. Austin v. Wilcoxson [Cal.] 84 P. 417. Action held one at law for damages for breach of contract, so that prayer for equitable relief was properly stricken. Todd v. Bettingen [Minn.] 107 N. W. 1049. Petition held intended to state cause of action for cancellation of deed and not cause of action in ejectment. Ames v. Ames [Neb.] 106 N. W. 584.

16. Test for determining whether two claims constitute single cause of action is whether recovery on one would bar recovery on other. Carlson v. Albert, 102 N. Y. S. 944.

Complaint held to state two causes of action: One for amount due plaintiff on contract of employment at time of its breach by his discharge, and other for damages caused by breach, two claims not being one cause of action. Carlson v. Albert, 102 N. Y. S. 944. One for negligence in letting contract to break horse to an unskillful person, and other for negligence of defendant's servant. Mullich v. Brocker, 119 Mo. App. 332, 97 S. W. 549. Petition in action against carrier, one for starting car while plaintiff was attempting to get aboard, and other for negligence in failing to stop car after discovery of her peril, and plaintiff was entitled to recover on proof of either. Foland v. Southwest Mo. Elec. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 284, 95 S. W. 958. Complaint alleging assault and slander which together caused damage sought to be recovered, so that motion to separately state and number was properly granted. Paul v. Ford, 102 N Y. S. 359.

Complaint held to state one cause of action: Where property belonging to different persons is conveyed by deeds to secure single indebtedness, complaint by all of such owners setting up facts necessary to entitle them to have deeds declared mortgages and to entitle them to redeem. Wadleigh v. Phelps [Cal.] 87 P. 93. In action against carrier for ejecting plaintiff from train. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fowler, 29

In some states the court may during the trial permit plaintiff to file a special statement of any matter in confession and avoidance.[17] A notice of a motion for a judgment under the West Virginia statute must indicate with reasonable certainty that the demand or obligation which it is proposed to reduce to judgment is that of the defendant.[18]

Consolidation of suits.[19]—The court ordinarily has discretionary power to consolidate two or more pending actions brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant for causes of action which could be joined.[20]

Ky. L. R. 905, 96 S. W. 568. To have plaintiff adjudged owner of universal right in certain land, though it was stated in different ways, and a diversity of relief was sought, so that it was not error to overrule motion to require election. Eversole v. Virginia I... etc., Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 151, 92 S. W. 593. Against several signers of an entire contract for damages provided for therein in case of a breach. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Brown [Minn.] 109 N. W. 817. Single cause of action for specific performance and not cause of action for fraud, deceit, or failure to perform contract. Hopkins v. Baremore [Minn.] 109 N. W. 831. To set aside alleged fraudulent satisfaction of deed of trust given to secure note, reinstate lien of deed, and obtain judgment on note. Ennis v. Padgett [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 782. For setting aside of fraudulent conveyances. Zeiser v. Cohn, 113 App. Div. 9, 98 N. Y. S. 1078. Where plaintiff's cause of action against directors of insurance company was based solely on ground that she was a stockholder, though she also alleged that she was a policyholder. Young v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 49 Misc. 347, 99 N. Y. S. 446. Against two defendants jointly for wrongful publication of plaintiff's picture. Riddle v. MacFadden, 101 N. Y. S. 606. In action by husband against several defendants for alienation of wife's affections. De Ronde v. Bell, 101 N. Y. S. 497. In action to recover freight charges, since it simply stated facts relating to one transaction, and but one recovery could be had upon one or all of the grounds set forth. Union Transit Co. v. Erie R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 149. In action by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside as fraudulent certain conveyances made to different children and grandchildren at different times but pursuant to one fraudulent scheme. Wright v. Simon, 102 N. Y. S. 1108. Complaint held to allege but one cause of action for partition of realty, the determination of other matters alleged being merely incidental to relief demanded, and all claims between parties relating to their respective rights in property being properly to be determined in such action. Lawrence v. Norton, 102 N. Y. S. 481. Since object of code provisions relating to partition is to give to each cotenant a clear title in severalty to portion of premises set apart to him, court must consider and adjudicate different claimed rights of parties limited to portion of premises as well as those extending to the whole. Id. In action against employer for death of employe, motion for order directing service of amended complaint in which allegations of common-law and statutory liability claimed to exist should be separately stated and numbered, or set forth in separate counts, denied. Hamnstrown v. New York Contracting Co., 102 N. Y. S. 835. Complaint held to state but single cause of action on contract and not cause of action for breach of contract under which wheat was delivered and another for conversion of the wheat. Savage v. Salem Mills Co. [Or.] 85 P. 69. In action for services performed in different capacities. Nelsen v. Henrichsen [Utah] 87 P. 267. Complaint held based on fact that defendants as mortgagees under deed absolute in form had wrongfully conveyed and attempted to incumber mortgagor's property, and had wrongfully obtained possession thereof, and in effect to state but one cause whereby plaintiffs sought to be restored to rights as mortgagors. Gustin v. Crockett [Wash.] 87 P. 839. Where two steers were struck while on same track, by same locomotive, and within few seconds of same time, held that plaintiff had but one cause of action. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Ramsey [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 669. Complaint in action by lessee against railroad and construction companies for destruction of crops by building line without plaintiff's consent, held to charge defendants as joint tortfeasors for destruction of crops, and not to seek to recover damages against railroad company for taking right of way out of leasehold estate. Ft. Smith Suburban R. Co. v. Maledon [Ark.] 95 S. W. 472.

17. Statement authorized by Code 1899, c. 125, §§ 65, 66, is not a pleading, but in nature of notice of claim or defense, and permitting it to be filed does not give defendant a continuance as matter of right, but granting of continuance is discretionary with trial court. Levy v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 58 W. Va. 546, 52 S. E. 449.

18. Motion under Code 1899, c. 121, § 6 Code 1900, § 3786. Anderson v. Prince [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 656. Notice which failed to connect defendant with note on which judgment was sought held insufficient, so that motion to quash it should have been sustained. Id. Where person giving notice of motion for judgment on note under Code 1899, c. 121, § 6, correctly described himself therein as payee thereof, held that word "assignee" added to his signature to notice would be ignored as mere description of the person, and did not vitiate the notice nor preclude judgment in his favor in capacity accorded him in body of notice. Id.

19. See 6 C. L. 1024.

20. Where plaintiff commenced action to recover two instalments on agreement to purchase corporate stock which had become due when complaint was verified, and thereafter commenced second action to recover remaining instalments which became due before defendant was served in first action, held that it was error to deny motion to consolidate where defense was same in both actions except that in second defendant set

Joinder of causes of action.[21]—Joinder being a matter relating purely to the remedy, acts relating to it may be made applicable to pending actions in which judgment has not yet been rendered.[22] The question of misjoinder is to be determined by the law of the forum.[23]

The codes generally specify certain classes of causes of actions which may be joined.[24] Among the most common of these are causes of action upon claims arising out of the same transaction [25] or transactions connected with the same subject of action,[26] causes of action on contract,[27] for the recovery of the possession of realty and the rents and profits thereof,[28] for injury to property,[29] for separate torts up pendency of first. Wilson v. Locke, 101 N. Y. S. 831. Delay held not ground for denying motion made when cases were at issue but had not yet been reached for trial. Id.

21. See 6 C. L. 1024.

22. Act broadening right. Gibson v. Miller, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 96. Since appeal vacates judgment appealed from and cause stands in appellate court as a pending action without judgment, provision of Act April 25, 1904, § 3, relating to joinder in suits for sale of real estate for taxes, is applicable to suits pending at time of its enactment and brought up on appeal subsequently thereto. Id.

23. Is matter respecting remedy. Anglo-American Land Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Wood, 143 F. 683.

24. Rev. St. 1899, § 593, construed and held that no action coming within any of the other classes specified in such section can be joined with actions for recovery of specific personal property, they being specified alone in sixth class. Williams Cooperage Co. v. Bollinger [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 812. Actions to set aside judgment and to recover specific personalty taken under execution and levy pursuant thereto held improperly joined. Id. Since in action to set aside judgment on equitable grounds execution and levy thereunder fall with judgment if plaintiff is successful, and order to that effect will be granted for mere asking, count setting up latter cause was unnecessary. Id. Causes of action for assault and slander occurring at same time cannot be joined, both not being included within any one subdivision of Code Civ. Proc. § 484. Paul v. Ford, 102 N. Y. S. 359. Id., subd. 10, providing for joinder of causes of action for penalties incurred under the fisheries, game, and forest law, excludes joinder of causes of action for penalties imposed by Laws 1893, c. 338, for adulteration of milk. People v. Koster, 50 Misc. 46, 97 N. Y. S. 829. Complaint containing causes of action to quiet title, to remove cloud on title, and to recover money judgment, based on invalidity of tax deeds, held demurrable. Knight v. Boring [Colo.] 87 P. 1078.

25. When several acts of negligence concur in giving rise to single cause of action, they may be joined in same complaint under Rev. Laws 1905, § 4154, though defendants named may be affected in different degrees of responsibility. Mayberry v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 356. Causes of action against railroad and its servants for negligently causing death. Id. Causes of action for money held by defendant as trustee of resulting trust by virtue of guardianship de son tort, and as trustee of express trust by virtue of contract to hold and invest money of ward for her benefit after she became of age. Rev. St. 1899, § 593. Zeldeman v. Molasky, 118 Mo. App. 106, 94 S. W. 754. Where defendant, as part of one scheme to obtain property, wrongfully obtained a deed and a will from her father, either of which would give her the land in question, suits in equity brought after father's death to set aside both held properly joined and tried as one, and one action may be brought for that purpose. Irving v. Bruen, 110 App. Div. 558, 97 N. Y. S. 180. Causes of action for breach of warranty and for deceit may be joined when both arise out of same transaction. Smith v. Newberry, 140 N. C. 385, 53 S. E. 234. Cause of action to recover on note and to enforce vendor's lien securing it, and cause of action against person who transferred note to plaintiff with representations that it was secured by such a lien to recover amount paid for note on faith of such representations in case no such lien was found to exist. Harris v. Cain [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 327, 91 S. W. 866. Where a widow accepted a draft which was to be in settlement of her claim if paid, she may sue thereon and in the alternative ask for recovery on the original cause of action. Kirby Lumber Co. v. Chambers [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 913, 95 S. W. 607.

26. Causes of action to recover damages for false and fraudulent representations of agents of insurance company whereby plaintiff was at different times induced to take out fifteen policies of insurance on lives of herself and her children. by the same party,[30] and by or against a party in a fiduciary capacity arising by virtue of contract or operation of law.[31] In some states, with certain specified exceptions, any two causes of action of the same nature and on which the same judgment may be given may be united in the same suit.[32] In others any number of causes of action may be joined provided they all sound in contract or in tort.[33] In Louisiana the possessory and petitory actions cannot be joined.[34] In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, causes of action in tort and on contract cannot be joined,[35] nor can legal and equitable causes of action [36] except where authorized by the code.[37] Ordinarily only causes of action which are consistent [38] plaint in action by lessee of hotel against lessor alleging that latter in erecting building on adjoining lot tore down and rebuilt part of hotel whereby it was rendered useless as hotel property, and plaintiff's furniture was damaged, and he was obliged to move, and also that plaintiff was further damaged in specified sum by erection of building, held not demurrable. Id. Permanent and special damages from overflow of land due to negligent construction of railroad embankment held recoverable in same suit when alleged in separate counts of petition. International, etc., R. Co. v. Walker [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 268, 97 S. W. 1081. Under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 4942, complaint alleging that, by same act, defendants injured certain property, and destroyed and converted to their own use certain other property, was not demurrable for improper joinder. McClure v. Campbell, 42 Wash. 252, 84 P. 825.

30. Causes of action for wrongfully flooding plaintiff's land, and for both actual and exemplary damages for his wrongful arrest by defendant. Cody v. Lowry [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 788, 91 S. W. 1109.

31. Rev. St. 1899, § 593. Causes of action for money held by defendant as trustee of resulting trust as guardian de son tort, and as trustee of express trust under contract to hold and invest money of ward for her benefit after she became of age. Zeideman v. Molasky, 118 Mo. App. 106, 94 S. W. 754.

32. In action of trespass quare clausum fregit allegations of acts which are a component part of the outrage complained of may be included though amounting to trespass vi et armis, and same damages recovered as though separate action had been brought. Haines' Ex'rs v. Haines [Md.] 64 A. 1044.

33. Where petition contained two counts, each setting forth a separate and distinct cause of action in tort, held there was no error in refusing to require election. Southern R. Co. v. Chambers, 126 Ga. 404, 55 S. E. 37.

34. Where such a combination is attempted the possessory feature lapses and the petitory alone remains. Code Prac. art. 57 et seq. Lindner v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 116 La. 262, 40 So. 697. Parts of petition setting up action in trespass held to be treated as surplusage. Id.

35. Rev. St. 1899, § 593, does not permit joinder. Barnes v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 303, 95 S. W. 971. Count in tort cannot be joined with counts in assumpsit. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Smith [Va.] 56 S. E. 567. Declaration joining count in contract against one defendant with counts in tort against other defendants held bad on demurrer. Gallagher v. Sisters of the Poor [N. J. Law] 65 A. 833. First count held to claim damages for deceit in sale of oats, and second to state cause of action ex contractu for breach of warranty in sale, so that it was error to overrule demurrer for misjoinder. Brooks v. Romano [Ala.] 42 So. 819.

36. Complaint seeking to quiet title and to recover damages for maintaining nuisance held demurrable under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 343. City of Huntington v. Stemeh [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 407. Cause of action for damages for breach of contract under which conveyance was made and cause of action to compel reconveyance and accounting held improperly joined, so that order giving plaintiff option of filing declaration on law side of court or having legal cause of action stricken was proper. Chapman v. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 201.

37. Under Gen. St. 1902, § 613, causes both legal and equitable may be united when presented as grounds of recovery upon claims, whether in contract or tort, or both, arising out of the same transaction or transactions connected with same subject of action. Lewisohn v. Stoddard, 78 Conn. 575, 63 A. 621. In action against stockholders of extinct foreign corporation to recover indebtedness due from corporation, held that subject of action was relation between defendants and corporation, and any transactions growing out of such relation tending or contributing to establish duty of defendants to plaintiffs with respect to payment of latter's claim against corporation were transactions connected with same subject of action, and plaintiffs had right to state in complaint any number of transactions of that nature, that is, of acts or agreements having some connection with each other whereby their legal relations to defendants were altered. Id. Where cause of action for restitution of price of land sold is disclosed, demand for correction of error in description of property may be united with it. Bonvillain v. Bodenheimer, 117 La. 793, 42 So. 273. Since under Code Civ. Proc. § 484, legal and equitable causes of action may be joined if both arise out of same transaction, held there was not misjoinder because plaintiff sought injunction against further use of her picture for advertising purposes, and damages for such use in past. Riddle v. MacFadden, 101 N. Y. S. 606. Cause of action for specific performance of a contract may be joined with one for damages for its breach. Winders v. Hill, 141 N. C. 694, 54 S. E. 440.

38. Code Civ. Proc. § 484, subd. 9. Cause of action in tort on theory that title to certain automobile was in plaintiff, and that defendants wrongfully deprived him of it by converting same to their own use, held improperly joined with one in contract on theory that title was in defendants under an agreement, and seeking to recover payment therefor, though growing out of same transaction, they being inconsistent. Drexel v. Hollander, 112 App. Div. 25, 98 N. Y. S. 104. Causes of action for damages for breach of contract, and for damages for fraud inducing plaintiff to make it, being inconsistent, cannot be united under said section, which is the only authority for uniting cause of action on contract with one in tort. Edison Elec. I. Co. v. Franklin H. Kalb-Fleisch Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1039. Inconsistent causes of action cannot be joined in equity. Chapman v. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 201. Complaint alleging breach of contract to give plaintiff certain stock alleged to be of certain value for services rendered to defendant, and also the reasonable value of the services so as to enable him to recover on quantum meruit should evidence fail to establish express contract, held not demurrable as uniting inconsistent causes of action. Shaw v. Hotchkiss, 143 F. 680.

and which affect all the parties to the action [39] may be joined, the latter rule being subject to some statutory exceptions [40] and not being applicable in suits in equity.[41]

39. Demurrer to complaint in action against stockholders of extinct corporation to recover on indebtedness of corporation, and containing three causes of action, properly overruled. Gen. St. 1902, § 613. Lewisohn v. Stoddard, 78 Conn. 575, 63 A. 621. Two towns not being jointly liable for whole cost of bridging drainage ditch constructed on line between them, suit in debt against highway commissioners of both charging them with joint liability for whole amount cannot be maintained. Commissioners of Union Drainage Dist. No. 3 v. Com'rs of Highways of Virgil & Cortland, 220 Ill. 176, 77 N. E. 71. Where complaint against a corporation and an individual sought to recover on a quantum meruit for services rendered individual defendant in procuring an exclusive franchise for a corporation not shown to have then been in existence, and also for services rendered and money expended as manager of the corporation under contract of employment made by individual defendant who was its president, held that corporation should have been stricken as a party, and claims against it and claim against individual defendant for services rendered corporation should also have been stricken. Tishomingo Elec. L. & P. Co. v. Burton [Ind. T.] 98 S. W. 154. Causes of action to settle estate of decedent and to cancel deed given by him to one of the defendants held improperly joined where parties to former had no interest in latter. Civ. Code Prac. § 83. Danley v. O'Brien, 29 Ky. L. R. 811, 96 S. W. 521. Action against assignee for creditors of a decedent to surcharge his settlement with sums wrongfully paid out held improperly joined with one against same defendant as administrator of estate of assignor's mother, the latter involving the interests of parties not affected by former. Adamson v. Donaldson [Ky.] 98 S. W. 1009. Action for enticing plaintiff's minor son from home cannot be joined with one against different person for harboring him. Soper v. Crutcher, 29 Ky. L. R. 1080, 96 S. W. 907. Demurrer held properly sustained in action by several plaintiffs against bank for accounting on certificates of deposit, where it appeared from petition that assignments of fractional parts of separate demands had been made by each plaintiff to his coplaintiffs, that interest of each in total sum was equal to amount of certificate originally held by him, and that purpose of assignment was to enable them to join in single action. Strawn v. First Nat. Bank [Neb.] 109 N. W. 384. Where different persons convey their property in trust to secure same debt, is not misjoinder to unite them all as parties in single action for purpose of enforcing the conditions of the trust. Michigan Trust Co. v. Frymark [Neb.] 107 N. W. 760. Code Civ. Proc. § 484. Complaint held to state four different causes of action based on four independent contracts for legal services, and that demurrer was properly sustained. Myers v. Lederer, 101 N. Y. S. 1088. Complaint by stockholder held to state two causes of action, one in favor of corporation for failure to restore stock to it on abrogation of contract under which it was held, and another against a different defendant based on different transaction, and demurrer for misjoinder should have been sustained though second cause was insufficiently stated. O'Connor v. Virginia Passenger & Power Co., 184 N. Y. 46, 76 N. E. 1082. Persons through whose concurrent negligence death occurred may be sued jointly. Mangan v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 50 Misc. 388, 100 N. Y. S. 539. In an action for recovery of money lost in gambling, principal to whom money was lost, his assignee, and owner of property, may be properly joined. Pentz v. Burrows, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 349. One of the plaintiffs recovered judgment and pending appeal assigned same to other plaintiffs. Defendant gave cost bond and supersedeas bond, two being executed as one instrument. Held, that on affirmance of judgment, plaintiffs could not maintain joint action on bond to recover amount of judgment in lower court and judgment for costs in supreme court, contracts for payment of judgment and costs being separate contracts, and there being no joint interest of parties in two judgments. Jerome v. Rust [S. D.] 110 N. W. 780. Causes of action on account for goods sold by plaintiff to defendant, and on account for goods sold by another corporation, but of which plaintiff alleged it was now the owner, held improperly joined, open account not being assignable and vendor thereof being necessary party to action thereon. Jett v. Theo. Maxfield Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 143. Cause of action to recover value of timber cut from land by one defendant under contract held properly joined with one to recover possession of part of land from other defendant and to quiet title against her, her claim to timber, by reason of which other defendants refused to pay, growing out of her title to land, and plaintiffs therefore being compelled to show title as against her. Alford Bros. & Whiteside v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 778, 91 S. W. 636. Actions by son for dam-

There is no misjoinder where one of two causes attempted to be stated is bad for want of facts,[42] nor does the statement of facts in separately numbered paragraphs, or alleging them by mistake as separate causes of action, vitiate the pleading if but a single cause of action is in fact pleaded.[43]

Several aspects of the same cause of action may ordinarily be pleaded in different counts.[44] Separate causes of action should not be stated in a single count ages for personal injuries and by mother for loss of his earnings and expenses incurred in caring for him during his minority by reason of same injuries held distinct actions, and improperly joined. Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Lewis [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 577.

40. Rev. St. 1898, § 1199, relating to proceedings by holder of tax deeds to bar former owners of land, and providing that if plaintiff has more than one deed upon any parcel of land mentioned in complaint upon which he might bring such action he shall set forth copy of each such deed, but as separate cause of action, requires all deeds on tract of land to be included in same complaint and made separate causes of action, though several parcels of land owned by different defendants are included in one deed, and constitutes exception to § 2647. Corry v. Brown, 127 Wis. 140, 106 N. W. 393.

41. See also, Equity, 7 C. L. 1323. Action of partition being one in equity, held not necessary that alleged causes of action should affect all of the defendants to same extent and in same manner. Lawrence v. Norton, 102 N. Y. S. 481. Action by stockholder against directors of corporation to recover money lost through their misfeasance and nonfeasance being one in equity, fact that some of the defendants are charged with faults of commission and others with failure to perform duties held not to show misjoinder. Young v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 49 Misc. 347, 99 N. Y. S. 446.

42. Minneapolis, etc., Co. v. Brown [Minn.] 109 N. W. 817.

43. Schlieder v. Dexter, 114 App. Div. 417, 99 N. Y. S. 1000. In action on bond paragraph of the complaint setting out one of the items assigned as a breach, held not to be treated as the statement of a cause of action in itself though designated as a cause of action by the pleader, and hence it was to be taken in connection with the introductory averments of the complaint for the purpose of forming the isues to be tried. Paterson v. Watson [Colo.] 83 P. 958.

44. Though, as a general rule, pleading double statement of case so as to meet exigencies of the proof is not permitted under the Code, it is sometimes premissible to duplicate statements for same cause of action where there is reasonable cause to believe that plaintiff cannot safely go to trial upon a single statement, as where he cannot reasonably be expected to anticipate the evidence. Cripple Creek Min. Co. v. Brabant [Colo.] 87 P. 794. Complaint in action for damages for personal injuries resulting in death of plaintiff's husband held to come within exception, so that motion to require election was properly denied. Id. Though Code, § 94, requires complaint to contain a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language without unnecessary repetition, plaintiff may state cause of action, growing out of same transaction, in more than one count when it appears that such pleading may be necessary to meet the possible proofs which will, for first time, fully appear at trial. Vindicator Consol. Gold Min. Co. v. Firstbrook [Colo.] 86 P. 313. Count alleging that injury was due to defendant's negligence in failing to furnish safe place to work, and count on coemploye act alleging that it was caused by negligence of fellow-servant, held not inconsistent in legal sense, so that motion to require election was properly overruled. Id. One suing for damages for personal injuries may embrace in his petition two or more separate counts setting forth different accounts of manner in which he was injured, so as to meet any anticipated variance in proof adduced at trial, and judgment striking out one of such counts on ground that it states no cause of action is not bar to prosecution of suit on another. Gainesville & Dahlonega Elec. R. Co. v. Austin [Ga.] 56 S. E. 254. Where amendment contained no new cause of action, but merely particularized general allegations of negligence in original statement, held proper to make it the subject of a separate count. Peery v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 14. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 672, court may in its discretion permit same cause of action to be stated in different counts in order to meet exigencies of case as presented by the evidence. Written agreement for services in selling land and quantum meruit. Blankenship v. Decker [Mont.] 85 P. 1035. When plaintiff has two or more grounds upon which he may have a single cause of action, and there is some uncertainty as to which he will be able to establish at the trial, he may set forth his claim in different counts so as to include each and every ground he may have for recovery Oberndorfer v. Moyer, 30 Utah, 325 84 P. 1102. Motion to require plaintiff to elect as to whether he would rely on count on account stated or one on open account held properly denied. Id. Where cause of action exists, and plaintiff may be doubtful as to what its character will be shown by the evidence to be, and hence in one count of his petition sets up cause of acton of character he conceives it to be and asks judgment upon it, and in another count declares upon cause of action of different character and asks judgment upon it in the alternative, there is neither a joinder or misjoinder of actions. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Heard [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 617, 91 S. W. 371. Where, pending action for personal injuries, plaintiff died, and his father and wife made themselves parties plaintiff, and averred that injuries inflicted upon deceased by defendant were proximate cause of his death and prayed judgment for damages, and asked in separate prayer that if this was found not to be the case, judgment be rendered for wife for such damages as deceased would or paragraph,[45] and when this is done plaintiff may ordinarily be required to separately state and number them.[46] Each count or paragraph must be complete in itself,[47] though reference in subsequent ones to matter of inducement in the first is often held to be sufficient.[48] A claim for damages need not be inserted at the

45. May not write in one count several torts constituting distinct and separate causes of action. Counts for overflow of land held demurrable. Iron City Min. Co. v. Hughes, 144 Ala. 608, 42 So. 39. Agreement in note to pay attorney's fee being one additional to the regular obligation of the note, held that there was no objection to embodying in one count a claim for all the attorney's fees claimed in suit on such note as it was all one subject and no confusion could arise therefrom. Boyett v. Standard Chemical Oil Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 756 Paragraph of petition in action against carrier for damages to fruit during transit held bad for duplicity. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Walton [Ga.] 56 S. E. 419. Paragraphs of complaint by sheriff to determine his right to fees counting both on right to retain fees to which he was entitled and also on claim to fees to which he had no legal right held good. Daviess County Com'rs v. Fitzgerald [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 393. Count in which plaintiff sought to recover for failure to pay installments due under building contract, and also to recover damages for refusal of defendant to permit him to perform contract, held bad for duplicity. Milske v. Steiner Mantel Co., 103 Md. 235, 63 A. 471. Declaration in replevin cannot be combined in one count with one in assumpsit for balance due on promissory note. Knowles v. Cavanaugh, 144 Mich. 260, 13 Det. Leg. N. 238, 107 N. W. 1073. Should be separately stated. Foland v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 284, 95 S. W. 958. Rev. St. 1899, § 593. Cause of action for money for which defendant is liable under resulting trust with one for money held by him as trustee of express trust. Zeideman v. Molasky, 118 Mo. App. 106, 94 S. W. 754. Where petition stated cause of action based on common-law negligence, ordinance negligence, and willfulness, recklessness, or wantonness, in same count, denial of motion to require election held error. Clancey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 192 Mo. 615, 91 S. W. 509. Where petition stated causes of action based on common-law negligence, violation of two city ordinances, and wantonness, in same count, held that error in refusing to require election was not cured by striking allegation as to violation of one ordinance. Id. Action on contract and on quantum meruit may be put in one count where both are based on same transaction, since simply states two grounds of recovery but presents only single cause of action. Robinson v. American Linseed Co., 147 F. 885. In action for wrongful death, single count alleging failure to furnish safe platform on which to work, failure to properly construct same, and failure to employ competent foreman, held not bad for duplicity. Bishop Co. v. Shelhorse [C. C. A.] 141 F. 643.

46. Where petition sets up cause of action in ejectment and another for rents and profits. Gen. St. 1901, § 4522. New v. Smith [Kan.] 84 P. 1030. Where complaint alleged two causes of action, one for conversion and one for goods sold, held that defendant had right under Code Civ. Proc. § 483, before answering to move to have them separated and numbered, and that such motion was properly granted where plaintiff neglected to avail himself at that time of opportunity to elect to waive tort and proceed on the one cause of action. Christenson v. Pincus, 102 N. Y. S. 1041. Each publication of defamatory matter held to give rise to a separate cause of action, so that in action for libel, where two publications were relied on, plaintiff should have been required to separately state and number. Fisher v. New Yorker Staats-Zeitung, 100 N. Y. S. 185. Where court having determined that complaint set up two causes of action, entered order directing plaintiff to serve an amended complaint "separately stating and numbering the causes of action attempted to be pleaded in said complaint", held that plaintiff was not thereby required to serve an amended complaint stating two causes of action, but defendant could by motion be compelled to accept one stating but a single cause of action. O'Reilly v. Skelly, 102 N. Y. S. 884.

47. Schlieder v. Dexter, 114 App. Div. 417, 99 N. Y. S. 1000. Code Civ. Proc. § 481, subd. 2. Second and each succeeding cause of action to recover penalties for adulteration of milk held insufficient, since did not repeat or make any reference to essential facts set forth in first one. People v. Koster, 50 Misc. 46, 97 N. Y. S. 829. Words in second paragraph "reiterating each and all the averments of the first paragraph of the petition" held properly stricken. Daley v. O'Brien, 29 Ky. L. R. 811, 96 S. W. 521. Each cause of action must be complete in itself, and must contain all the material and issuable facts which constitute the cause of action embraced in it, and its defects cannot be supplied by mere reference to another cause of action. Lack of material allegations in second cause of action held not supplied by reference in first paragraph thereof to certain paragraphs of first cause of action. Murray v. Butte [Mont.] 88 P. 789.

48. Chesapeake & N. R. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368; Schlieder v. Dexter, 114 App. Div. 417, 99 N. Y. S. 1000. Allegations in other paragraphs of complaint held properly incorporated in second cause of action so that they would be construed in connection with allegations relating thereto. Marrietta v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 1027. Averments as to assignment of claim and cause of action incorporated in third cause of action held to refer to it alone, and not to other causes of action which were separately stated and numbered and referred to different maters. Id. Reference in second court to averments in regard to injuries in first count held permissible mode of pleading. Wolf v. Smith [Ala.] 42 So. 824. Manner of reference to other counts for facts held allowable. Anniston end of each count or paragraph, but it is sufficient to state the amount demanded at the end of the complaint.[49]

Election.[50]—An election is required whenever a pleader relies on two different, inconsistent conditions of fact.[51]

Splitting causes of action.[52]—One may not split his cause of action, but all damages arising from a single wrong or cause of action must be recovered in one suit.[53]

Elec. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45. Fact that demurrers had been sustained to certain counts of complaint referred to in other counts held not to cause them to cease to be parts of the record to which reference could be had. Id. Second count held to have adopted by reference contract as set out in first count, but not averments as to its assignment, and hence to be demurrable. Byrne Mill Co. v. Robertson [Ala.] 42 So. 1008.

49. Clause of declaration immediately following last count in which was set out the several items of loss sustained and amount of damages claimed, and distinctly connecting them with negligence alleged in each count, held not a part of last count so that it was not affected by striking out such count. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Whitehill [Md.] 64 A. 1033.

50. See 6 C. L. 1029.

51. Election required: Between count claiming price of property on theory that plaintiff has parted with title to it by sale, and that defendant owns it and hence is entitled to its possession, and count asking damages as in trover for conversion of same property on theory that plaintiff owns it and is entitled to its possession, two being inconsistent. Ehrsam & Sons Mfg. Co. v. Jackman [Kan.] 85 P. 559. Where action for death of servant due to misfeasance of superintendent was brought against superintendent and master jointly. French v. Central Const. Co., 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 425. In action for breach of warranty and false representations in sale of stallion, held that plaintiff should have been required to elect whether he would seek to recover actual damages or double damages allowed by statute in such cases, he not being entitled to both. Galbraith v. Carmode [Wash.] 86 P. 624.

Election not required: Where declaration in asumpsit for services contained three counts based on express contract and one on quantum meruit, plaintiff being entitled to recover on quantum meruit if contract was not performed precisely in accordance with its terms, or if it had been abrogated. Utter v. Buck, 120 Ill. App. 120. Where declaration contained two special counts, one against defendant as an indorser of note and other on its guaranty, held that plaintiffs could rely on either or both, as evidence might warrant, and was entitled to recover if evidence supported either. G. E. Lloyd & Co. v. Matthews, 119 Ill. App. 546. Where plaintiff in first count sought to recover reasonable compensation for finding purchaser for defendant's property at his request, in second, to recover agreed compensation, defendant having refused to complete sale, and, in third, compensation for services in procuring purchaser who was willing and able to take property. Tuffree v. Binford, 130 Iowa, 532, 107 N. W. 425. Where complaint in action by vendee of land to recover advance payments, alleged previous rescission by him for fraud, and amendment alleged previous rescission by vendor and also sought recovery on that theory. Pedley v. Freeman [Iowa] 109 N. W. 890. Where complaint in action against railroad for killing stock contained counts based on statute and on common-law negligence, evidence in support of two counts held not so intermingled as to render overruling of motion to require election, made at close of evidence, erroneous, particularly where jury in effect found for defendant on first. Wright v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 469, 95 S. W. 293. Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 186a, construed, and held that plaintiff would not be required before trial to elect whether he would rely on cause of action against carrier for negligence in failing to stop train at station to whch it had sold ticket, or cause of action for statutory penalty for failure to do so. Rountree v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 73 S. C. 268, 53 S. E. 424. Complaint in action in claim and delivery to recover flax seed, alleging right to same both under a farm lease and a chattel mortgage, held not to set up inconsistent causes of action, so that motion was properly denied, particularly as under terms of lease mortgage was valid. Lyon v. Phillips [S. D.] 108 N. W. 554.

52. See 6 C. L. 1029.

53. Where plaintiff took a note for part of an account due him from defendant, and note was not paid at maturity, and residue of account was not discharged when due, held that he had two separate and distinct causes of action, so that a recovery upon note was no bar to judgment for residue of claim. Ebersole v. Daniel [Ala.] 40 So. 614. Fees for legal services rendered same person, but accruing under separate and distinct contracts of employment, give rise to separate causes of action, and may be sued for separately though all are due when first action is brought. Wheless v. Serrano [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 108. Rule that all claims or causes of action arising out of same contract must be included in one suit, or all not so included will be deemed waived, does not apply to separate notes given for separate sales or contracts, but several notes are several distinct causes of action and suit will lie upon each, and satisfied judgment in suit upon one will not bar suit upon others. Paton v. Doyne [N. J. Law] 65 A. 843. Code 1899, c. 50, § 48, providing that where plaintiff has several demands on contract he must bring his action for all or be barred as to those not sued on, does not require him to include demands not due when suit is commenced. Adams v. International Supply Co. [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 607. The statement of each cause of action being practically a complaint in itself, and each being independent of the others, where

Prayer.[54]—Though the prayer may be considered in construing the complaint when the cause of action intended to be presented is doubtful,[55] it is no part of the cause of action,[56] and cannot refute a cause of action clearly stated,[57] nor control in determining whether more than one cause of action is alleged.[58] A demand not based upon a properly pleaded cause of action must be disregarded.[59]

§ 3. The plea or answer.[60]—Matters relating to set-off and counterclaim,[61] affidavits of defense,[62] and the necessity of pleading under oath,[63] are treated in separate articles.

General principles.[64]—The answer must be responsive to the allegations of the complaint.[65] A paragraph offered as a defense to an entire complaint is insufficient if it fails to meet all the material averments thereof.[66] If any one of several defendants, either in a joint or several answer, relies upon a defense going to the whole merits of the action, a judgment cannot be rendered in the action until such defense is disposed of, and if he succeeds in establishing the same, the action must be dismissed as to all the defendants.[67] In the absence of a statute to the contrary,[68] inconsistent defenses or pleas cannot be set up in the same answer.[69] There is a plaintiff split his cause of action and attempted to state a part of it in each count or cause of action, and recovered on first one on part of it, held that he could not maintain second cause of action for balance, judgment recovered on first cause being complete bar to recovery on second. Murray v. Butte [Mont.] 88 P. 789.

54. See 6 C. L. 1029.

55. Where petition in district court states facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to both legal and equitable relief, and prays relief only a part of which can be had at law, but all of which can be had in equity, it will be held to have thereby intended to invoke chancery and not common-law powers of court. Ames v. Ames [Neb.] 106 N. W. 584. May elect to proceed at law in such case, but must do so by some unequivocal act committing him to theory that he has abandoned claim to equitable relief. Id. Demand for jury to try issues of fact not sufficient to show election. Id.

56. Nature of action and nature and extent of relief is to be determined from facts alleged and not from prayer. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Brown [Minn.] 109 N. W. 817. Where relief prayed for is money judgment, mere failure to state amount for which plaintiff asks judgment does not render petition insufficient on demurrer for want of facts. Wilson St. § 4291, construed. Oklahoma Gas & Elec. Co. v. Lukert, 16 Okl. 397, 84 P. 1076.

57. Complaint in suit against employe and sureties on his bond alleging mistake therein, and misappropriation of funds, held to state cause of action in equity for an accounting, though prayer was for recovery of money only. North Side Loan & Bldg. Soc. v. Nakielski, 127 Wis. 539, 106 N. W. 1097. Action by a county against exposition company to recover land no longer used by it for giving fairs, and for rents and profits, held one for the recovery of real property under Rev. St. § 5781, notwithstanding allegations seeming to call for some form of equitable relief. Toledo Exposition Co. v. Kerr, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 369.

58. Fact that judgment demanded as to some of defendants in partition sought relief which would not be granted in such an action held not to sustain contention that separate cause of action was thereby alleged. Lawrence v. Norton, 102 N. Y. S. 481.

59. Erbes v. Smith [Mont.] 88 P. 568. Demand in answer, in action for waste, that defendant's title be quieted. Id. Where complaint set up action for damages for waste, and answer pleaded equitable title in defendant, held that decree quieting title in plaintiff was erroneous though demanded in reply, there being no pleading upon which to predicate prayer therefor. Id.

65. Defendant cannot avoid contract alleged in petition by answering that he made another and different contract with plaintiff. Tyler v. Coleman, 29 Ky. L. R. 1270, 97 S. W. 373. In action on promissory notes, matters set up in certain paragraphs of separate defense in answer held to have no relation to causes of action alleged in complaint and hence not to be available as a defense and to be demurrable, though they might have constituted a valid counterclaim if so pleaded. Prosser v. Maxon, 100 N. Y. S. 815.

66. Jonas v. Hirshburg [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1058.

67. In action for damages for trespass and injunction, where answer of intervening defendants denied that plaintiff was owner of land and alleged ownership in themselves, and that original defendant had done acts complained of by their license and prayed that their title be quieted, held that no judgment could be taken against original defendant, though he failed to file an answer, unless plaintiff made out his case. Le Moyne v. Anderson, 29 Ky. L. R. 1017, 96 S. W. 843.

68. Under Code 1899, c. 125, § 20, defendant may plead inconsistent defenses, except where he pleads non est factum, in which case he cannot do so without leave of court. Levy v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 58 W. Va. 546, 52 S. E. 449.

69. In action for false imprisonment, pleas denying arrest under authority of de-conflict of authority as to whether such a course is permissible under a statute authorizing defendant to set up as many defenses as he may have,[70] and as to whether such a statute authorizes the pleading of matter in abatement and in bar in the same answer.[71]

Under the code the defendant is generally given the right to set up as many defenses as he may have, whether legal or equitable.[72] Statutes in some states require him to set up as many consistent defenses as he has,[73] or to state each fact relied on in avoidance of the action.[74] Separate grounds of defense are sometimes required to be stated in separate paragraphs and numbered.[75] Whether matter is set up by way of defense or as a counterclaim is a question of construction.[76]

Pleas must commence and close in proper form.[77] Each separate defense or fendant and also seeking to justfy same held bad for inconsistency if intended as pleas of justification. Gambill v. Fuqua [Ala.] 42 So. 735. In action for cancellation of deed on ground that it was procured through fraudulent promise of defendant to hold land in trust and to reconvey same which he refused to do, answer denying such allegations and praying for dismissal and costs held not to set up inconsistent defenses because it also prayed for accounting and credit for sums paid by defendant for taxes, etc., in case court found that plaintiff had any interest in the premises. Bluett v. Wilce [Wash.] 86 P. 853.

70. Fact that further answer and counterclaim was inconsistent with original answer held not objectionable in vew of Mills' Ann. Code, § 59. Conrey v. NIchols [Colo.] 84 P. 470. Under Rev. St. 1898, § 2657, may set up defenses and counterclaims based on inconsistent theories unless so repugnant in fact that proof of one disproves the other. Clark Co. v. Rice, 127 Wis. 451, 106 N. W. 231. In action on notes may join defenses of fraud, failure of consideration, and that notes were contrary to public policy, with counterclaims for damages for fraud, and tendering back all rights under contract pursuant of which notes were given and seeking to rescind for such fraud. 71. Florida: Cannot at same time plead to jurisdiction of court over person and to merits without waiving former. Little Rock Co., 50 Fla. 251, 39 So. 193.

Missouri: Under Rev. St. 1899, § 605, may unite in same pleading a plea to jurisdiction of person or subject-matter and plea to merits without waiving former. Little Rock Trust Co. v. Southern Missouri & A. R. Co., 195 Mo. 669, 93 S. W. 944. Motion to set aside judgment held not to challenge merits of petition. Id.

72. Civ. Code Proc. § 113, held to do away with common-law rules of pleading confining actions to single issues and denying equitable defenses in actions at law. Davis v. Ferguson, 29 Ky. L. R. 214, 92 S. W. 968. Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 75, §§ 86, 88, where a defense relied on is available at law, it cannot be set up as an equitale plea. Estoppel in pais. Albert v. Freas, 103 Md. 583, 64 A. 282. Rev. St. c. 84, § 17 construed and held that equitable matter which may be so pleaded must be matter of defense to plaintiff's claim, not matter of set-off, nor matter constituting ground for relief in equity apart from and independent of the action at law. Martin v. Smith [Me.] 65 A. 257. Does not authorize court in action at law based on mortgage to reform mortgage so as to correct mistakes of scrivener, and such mistakes cannot under such statute be held a legal or equitable defense to that action, remedy being exclusively by separate suit in equity. Id. Fraud in procuring a release may be set up as against a plea of accord and satisfaction in an action at law. Memphis St. R. Co. v. Giardino [Tenn.] 92 S. W. 855. St. 4 Anne, c. 16, § 4, making it lawful for defendant to plead as many several matters in several district pleas as he should think necessary for his defense, is in force in Vermont as part of common-law. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146. Under Rev. St. 1898, § 2657, may set out facts which would have formerly entitled him to injunction against further prosecution of the action at law. Town of Washburn v. Lee, 128 Wis. 312, 107 N. W. 649.

73. Under Civ. Code Proc. § 113, subsecs. 2, 4, loses such as he fails to set up. Suit to enjoin issuance of patents to land to which plaintiff sought to establish title. Asher v. Uhl, 29 Ky. L. R. 396, 93 S. W. 29. For former opinion see 27 Ky. L. R. 938, 87 S W. 307.

74. Under Rev. Laws, c. 173, § 27, defense that contract sued on was void at its inception as in violation of anti-trust law must be specially pleaded if relied on. New York Bank Note Co. v. Kidder Press Mfg. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 463.

75. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 350, Unger v. Melinger [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 814. Answer containing denial limited to allegations not admitted and sought to be avoided by affirmative facts held intended to set forth single defense and to be construed as single paragraph. Id. Answer may in single paragraph confess certain allegations of complaint and avoid same by affirmative facts, and deny all others, and will be treated as containing but one ground of defense. Id. Answer containing denial limited to such allegations as were not admitted and sought to be avoided by affirmative facts held not bad as both admitting and denying same facts. Id.

76. In action for damages for waste, answer pleading equitable title in defendant held merely to set up new matter by way of defense and not to constitute counterclaim through demanding that his title be quieted. Erbes v. Smith [Mont.] 88 P. 568.

77. Commencement and closing of plea to jurisdiction held proper. Goldberg v. Harney, 122 Ill. App. 106.

plea must be complete in itself,[78] though allegations in other parts of the answer may be incorporated therein by references.[79] Matters properly the subject of traverse cannot be raised by special plea.[80] Pleas in abatement, being dilatory, are required to be technically exact, so as to preclude all presumptions or arguments against the pleader.[81]

Denials and traverses.[82]—Though no particular form of denial is prescribed, it should be so clear and specific as to at once appraise the parties and the court of the matter controverted.[83] Argumentative denials are insufficient.[84] Denials on information and belief are unknown to the common law,[85] but are generally permissible under the code,[86] except as to matters presumptively within defendant's

78. Must, either by direct allegations therein, or by proper reference to other portions of the answer, set forth facts sufficient to show such defense. Barnard v. Sloan, 2 Cal. App. 737, 84 P. 232. Sufficiency of each separate defense and of counterclaim is to be determined without reference to matters elsewhere set forth in the answer unless connected therewith by direct reference. Harron v. Wilson, Lyon & Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 512. Plea alleging that contract was obtained through fraud though admitting contract for purpose of special defense could not be taken advantage of to disprove issue of authority of alleged agents to make contract raised by other pleas not referred to therein. Fifer v. Clearfield & C. Coal & Coke Co., 103 Md. 1, 62 A. 1122. Where neither separate defense was sufficient upon its face without reference to other parts of answer, held that demurrer to answer should have been sustained. Empire Trust Co. v. Magee, 102 N. Y. S. 9.

79. Reference to paragraphs in other portions of answer has same effect as if latter had been repeated in each defense and sufficiency of each defense is to be measured as if so repeated. Barnard v. Sloan, 2 Cal. App. 737, 84 P. 232.

80. In action on contract for payment of money where plaintiff specially pleaded part of contract and alleged that by its terms money was payable in B. county where action was brought, held that a plea of privilege by defendant to be sued in D. county was demurrable, it amounting merely to a challenge of plaintiff's construction of the contract as to place of payment. Parr v. McGown [Tex. Civ. App.] 98 S. W. 950.

81. Not to be aided by intendment or inference. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Illy [Conn.] 65 A. 965. In trustee process plea in abatement for want of jurisdiction because of nonresidence of trustees held bad where it alleged nonresidence in present tense only, but did not allege residence at time when action was brought or negative residence at that time in county where action was brought. Hibbard v. Newman, 101 Me. 410, 64 A. 720. Plea in abatement alleging that previous identical action had been instituted by plaintiff against defendant and dismissed without costs being paid held not demurrable for failure to annex copy of dismissed action, where plea itself set forth enough to enable court to determine that two actions were identical. Dougherty v. Dougherty, 126 Ga. 33, 54 S. E. 811. Defense of another action pending is one in abatement, which must be pleaded with particularity and is waived if not pleaded. Fish Co. v. Young, 127 Wis. 149, 106 N. W. 795. Both at common law and under Code plea in abatement of another action pending must show that prior action is pending between same parties and for same cause. Tyler v. Standard Wine Co., 102 N. Y. S. 65. Plea in abatement held not well taken, two causes of action not being same. Id. Plea held insufficient for failure to allege that action was pending at the time of the commencement of the one in which it was interposed. Porter v. Fuld & H. Knitting Co., 114 App. Div. 292, 99 N. Y. S. 815. If it does not expressly aver that suits are for same subject-matter, must state facts which clearly indicate that they are. Van Houten v. Stevenson [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 1094.

82. See 6 C. L. 1031. See, also, § 14, post.

83. Thompson v. Wittkop, 184 N. Y. 117, 76 N. E. 1081. Denial of all the allegation contained in certain specified folios of complaint though not to be commended, held in view of other allegations not so indefinite and uncertain as to justify treating it as nuulity. Id. General denial which indicates with sufficient clearness the pleader's intention to put all the allegations of the complaint in issue is a compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 500, though carelessly and inartificially drawn. Bodine v. White, 98 N. Y. S. 232. Allegation that plaintiff was wholly ignorant of defect held to negative constructive or actual knowledge and repel idea of assumed obvious risk. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Hardsaw [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1062.

84. Clement v. Graham 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146. Argumentative general denial cannot be construed as admitting facts denied. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bockting [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 524.

85 Does not prevent allegations of complaint from being taken as admitted for failure to deny. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146.

86. Puts plaintiff to proof. Clark v. Apex Gold Min. Co. [N. M.] 85 P. 968. Allegation that defendants "are not advised" that lands were granted to state as swamp lands, and that defendants have no information that lands were patented to state as swamp lands, held not a denial of allegation of complaint that lands were duly granted to state by Federal government as swamp lands. Wade v. Goza [Ark.] 96 S. W. 388. Denial "on information and belief" of any knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to plaintiff's residence held bad. Ubart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1000.

knowledge,[87] or matters of public record to which he has access.[88] In some states a general denial cannot be qualified by unspecific exceptions.[89] In a special traverse the inducement should be in substance a sufficient answer to the declaration, though not a direct denial or confession and avoidance, and the traverse with which it concludes must go to a material point which will try the merits of the case.[90] By statute in some states a denial of plaintiff's representative capacity alleged in the complaint must state the facts relied on.[91]

Confession and avoidance.[92]—The codes generally require the answer to contain a statement of new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim in ordinary and concise language without repetition.[93] A defense cannot consist of facts provable under a denial.[94]

§ 4. Replication or reply and subsequent pleadings.[95]—The only way of answering a special traverse is by joining issue thereon.[96] In some states where a plea concludes to the country and the formal addition of the similiter is omitted, the parties may proceed to trial as though issue had been formally joined.[97] To constitute a good pleading, a replication must answer every material allegation of the plea.[98] In tort actions the replication de injuria is a sufficient traverse of allegations by way of confession and avoidance in special pleas.[99] The Illinois statute providing for a notice by defendant under a plea of the general issue in lieu of pleading special matters of fact does not apply to the reply, and such a notice cannot be made to take the place of a replication.[1] One good reply to a plea is sufficient.[2] Replications traversing material allegations of a plea properly conclude to the country.[3]

87. Such a denial as to whether coupons were ever signed by secretary of irrigation district issuing bonds held to raise no issue. Hewel v. Hogin [Cal. App.] 84 P. 1002. Such a denial as to demand and nonpayment of rent held insufficient, facts alleged importing personal knowledge thereof in defendant. Schwartz v. Ribaudo, 101 N. Y. S. 599.

88. Such a denial of allegation that by deed dated and recorded on certain day premises were conveyed to plaintiff by defendant's lessor, held insufficient since defendant was in position to obtain knowledge, and one cannot plead ignorance of public record to which he has access. Schwartz v. Ribaudo, 101 N. Y. S. 599.

89. "Defendants for their first amended answer to plaintiff's petition deny each and every allegation therein contained except so much thereof as is herein expressly admitted" held bad. Atterbury v. Hopkins [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 11.

90. Rogers v. Barth, 117 Ill. App. 233.

91. Under Code §§ 3627, 3628, held that in proceeding under statute by citizen contesting validity of consent to issuing of liquor licenses, where defendant did not controvert plaintiff's allegation of citizenship except by a denial, no issue was raised thereon and no proof required. Dye v. Augur [Iowa] 110 N. W. 323.

92. See 6 C. L. 1032.

93. New matter constituting either a complete or partial defense must be pleaded. Eviction and accord and satisfaction in action for rent. Schwartz v. Ribaudo, 101 N. Y. S. 599. Mere affirmative allegations of conclusions of law does not meet requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 500. Ludlow v. Woodward, 102 N. Y. S. 647. Vague and indefinite allegation that note was delivered to plaintiff by bank after maturity and payment for no value held not a compliance with requirement of ordinary and concise language. Id.

94. Must be new matter, that is facts outside the issues that are or may be raised by a denial, and can only be an affirmative. Code Civ. Proc. § 500. Frank v. Miller, 102 N. Y. S. 277. In action by landlord to remove tenant for nonpayment of rent, allegation that plaintiff's predecessor had leased premises to defendant for year held not a defense. Id.

96. Rogers v. Barth, 117 Ill. App. 323.

97. Code 1899, c. 125, § 25, c. 134, § 3. Plea of nonassumpsit. Hi Williamson & Co. v. Nigh, 58 W. Va. 629, 53 S. E. 124.

98. Replications leaving material averments without denial and without confession and averment of matter in avoidance held demurrable. Owenshoro Wagon Co. v. Hall [Ala.] 43 So. 71. Replication attempting to confess and avoid plea held bad in that it failed to do either. Sefton v. Mitchell, 120 Ill. App. 256.

99. In action of trespass de bonis asportraits where defendant sought to justify by plea that goods were taken under writ of replevin issued by justice of the peace, held not necessary for plaintiff to reply specially in order to question jurisdiction of justice. Rice v. Travis, 117 Ill. App. 644.

1. Rev. St. c. 110, § 29. Snow v. Greisheimer, 120 Ill. App. 516.

2. Where second reply to plea was confessed, it being neither traversed or avoided, held immaterial whether demurrer to surrejoinder to rejoinder to third replication to such plea was sustained or not. Dawdy v. Wright, 120 Ill. App. 279.

3. Blue Island Brewing Co. v. Fraatz, 123 Ill. App. 26.

Where the answer contains a counterclaim or any new matter, the codes generally require plaintiff to file a reply denying the same,[4] or setting up new matter tending to avoid it.[5] In some states new matter set up in the answer and not pleaded as a counterclaim is deemed controverted and no reply is necessary.[6] In others the right to order a reply is discretionary with the court.[7] No reply is necessary where the allegations of new matter are insufficient,[8] or where the affirmative averments of the answer amount to a mere denial.[9] The refusal to strike from the reply allegations provable under the issues raised by the other pleadings is harmless.[10] The reply must not be inconsistent with the allegations of the complaint,[11] and its allegations may not in any case aid the latter.[12]

4. Denial of new matter, without specifying what new matter is referred to, is insufficient. Betz v. Kansas City Home Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 207. Denial of each and every allegation of answer except such facts as are set forth in the complaint admitted by the answer held equivalent to denial of each and every allegation of the answer except as in the complaint alleged, and not to be a nullity so as to entitle defendant to judgment on pleadings for failure to put in issue affirmative allegations of answer. Seffert v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Or.] 88 P. 962.

5. Though reply is not necessary to plea of non est factum in action on note, it is proper, if not necessary, to set up by reply facts showing that defendant is estopped to make such plea against plaintiff. Bowen v. Laird [Ind.] 77 N. E. 852. In action by administrator to recover money alleged to belong to estate, reply held to be in nature of plea in confession and avoidance raising issue of good faith of one of defendants in making contract with deceased under which he claimed. Drefahl v. Security Sav. Bank [Iowa] 107 N. W. 179. In trespass quare clausum where defendant pleaded right of way and other easements by way of justification, held that replication by way of new assignment was proper method, under Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 75, § 24, subsecs. 78-80, for plaintiff to set up that acts complained of were in excess of rights set up by the plea Haines' Ex'rs v. Haines [Md.] 64 A. 1044. May plead new matter not inconsistent with petition and contradictory to or supplementary of facts pleaded as a defense in answer. Mellor v. McConnell [Neb.] 106 N. W. 1012. Partial defense to counterclaim held demurrable because not pleaded as such. Pope Mfg. Co. v. Rubber Goods Mfg. Co., 110 App. Div. 341, 97 N. Y. S. 73. Allegation of reply in effect a confession of defendant's counterclaim, a partial defense, and a plea in mitigation of damages, held demurrable because not pleaded as such. Id.

6. Code Civ. Proc. § 522. Allegation in answer of payment of judgment previously recovered against another joint tort-feasor, not pleaded as counterclaim, held new matter pleaded as a defense by way of avoidance to which no reply was necessary. Reno v. Thompson, 111 App. Div. 316, 97 N. Y. S. 744. For defendant to preclude plaintiff from contesting counterclaim because of failure to serve reply, counterclaim must be distinctly named as such in answer. American Guild of Richmond, Va. v. Damon [N. Y.] 78 N. E. 1081. Where answer in action on accident insurance policy alleged material mispresentations as a defense, held that, under Revisal, §§ 485, 503, no reply was necessary to raise issue as to whether defendant's agent when policy was issued knew truth in regard to matters alleged to have been misrepresented. Fishblate v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 140 N. C. 589, 53 S. E. 354. Allegation in answer as to promulgation and existence of rule prohibiting passengers from riding on engines held in issue without denal, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1193. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Avis [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 756, 93 S. W. 424. Rev. St. 1898, § 2667. Matters in abatement, as failure to join necessary parties, deemed controverted without reply. Payne v. Payne [Wis.] 109 N. W. 105.

7. Though under Rev. Lews, c. 173, § 31, plaintiff may file replication stating any facts in reply to new matter in answer yet under same section new matter in answer in avoidance of action is to be considered denied without replication, unless court requires reply on defendant's motion. Moore v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 488. In action against married woman for goods sold, where answer alleged that plaintiff had previously sued defendant's husband and had accepted from him certain sum in part payment therefor and confession of judgment for value of goods, held that court should have required reply. Seaton v. Garrison, 101 N. Y. S. 526.

8. Betz v. Kansas City Home Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 207. Where new matter does not constitute a defense. Hickey v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n [Colo.] 85 P. 838. Bad reply is good enough for bad answer. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bockting [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 524. Where plea is bad there is no necessity for considering replication to it. Broadwood v. Southern Exp. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 769. In action on an account held necessary to reply to defective pleas of payment and usury. Sanders v. Helfrich Lumber & Mfg. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 466, 93 S. W. 54.

9. In action of trespass where plaintiff alleged that he was owner of land, and defendant in his answer denied this and alleged that he himself was owner thereof, held that no reply was necessary, allegation as to defendant's ownership being but an affirmative denial. Wheeler v. Davis, 29 Ky. L. R. 730, 96 S. W. 451. Averments held to constitute merely a denial of fraud charged in complaint, so that no reply was required under B. & C. Comp. § 77 as amended, and motion to make reply more definite and certain was property denied. Kabat v. Moore [Or.] 85 P. 506.

10. Allegations of new matter already embraced in issues raised by petition and

Additional pleadings.[13]—Where the replication ignores certain facts in a plea, taking issue only upon certain other facts therein, and defendant files a general rejoinder to the replication, the facts so ignored cease to be issues in the cause.[14]

Under the codes allegations of new matter in the reply are generally deemed denied without further pleading.[15]

§ 5. Demurrer. General rules.[16]—A demurrer is directed against the pleading itself,[17] and reaches only such defects as are apparent on its faces.[18] A demurrer cannot go to the fragmentary part of a pleading, but must go to the whole of the count, plea, or defense to which it is addressed.[19] A demurrer for want of facts will be overruled if the complaint warrants the granting of any relief[20] evidence, and hence admissible in evidence without further pleading. Citizens' Bank v. Emley [Neb.] 107 N. W. 1014

11. Reply in action by receiver of corporation on stock note held not a departure, both it and complaint counting on right in creditors. Marion Trust Co. v. Blish [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 415. New matter in the reply which plaintiff is forced to plead in order to meet allegations of answer will not constitute departure if it does not contradict facts stated in petition, and is not adopted as a new basis for relief in place of cause of action presented in petition. Hunter Milling Co. v. Allen [Kan.] 88 P. 252. In action for conversion of wheat stored in elevator reply alleging that sale and settlement of accounts alleged in answer was induced by fraud held not a departure. Id. Where petition alleged cause of action for breach of contract for failure to deliver goods purchased on time, and answer set up counterclaim for balance due on purchase price held that counterclaim in reply for damages to goods in transit by reason of negligent packing was totally repugnant to petition and should have been stricken on motion under Civ. Code Proc. §§ 101, 113. Langan & T. Storage & Moving Co. v. Tennelly, 29 Ky. L. R. 367, 93 S. W. 1. Objection that new matter constituted amendment to original petition held not well taken where reply was directed to answer to amended petition. Walker v. Wabash R. Co., 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83.

12. Cannot be looked to to supply essential allegation. Thornton v. Kaufman [Mont.] 88 P. 796.

13. See 6 C. L. 1034.

14. By joining issue generally upon replication admitted that issuable averments of facts therein were sufficient, if proved, to entitle plaintiff to recover notwithstanding issues tendered by plea. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Mills [Fla.] 41 So. 603.

15. Since under Code the only pleading of facts on defendant's part is an answer, and cross bills or complaints are not recognized, and every allegation of new matter in reply is deemed denied, held that contention that defendant's pleading was a cross complaint and plaintiff's pleading, putting in issue its allegations and setting up new matter, was an answer requiring a reply on part of defendant, was untenable. Gilchrist v. Hore [Mont.] 87 P. 443.

16. See 6 C. L. 1034.

17. Defects apparent on face of complaint can be reached by demurrer, but defenses which must be sustained or may be rebutted by evidence must be presented by plea. Williams v. Finch [Ala.] 41 So. 834.

18. As to what defects and defenses may be reached by demurrer, see § 10, post. In suit to quiet title and for an accounting for oil and gas taken from land in controversy, pipe line company to which part of oil had been delivered demurred to bill on ground that since it was common carrier required to receive and transport all oil delivered to it, it was not liable to be held responsible for oil so delivered to it, and hence was improperly made party. Held that demurrer would be overruled since liability of company was to be determined from evidence as to contracts under which oil was received, of which court could not take judicial notice. Miller v. Ahrens, 150 F. 644. If defense of staleness can be interposed by demurrer, it is only when objection appears on face of bill. Marsh v. Marsh, 78 Vt. 399, 63 A. 159.

19. Demurrer attacking part of count held properly overruled. McCleskey v. Howell Cotton Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 67. Where petition contains but single paragraph, it must be held good or bad as an entirety though each ground of demurrer is directed to some particular allegation. Gordon v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 129 Iowa, 741, 106 N. W. 177. Demurrer held objectionable in from where each ground thereof was directed to particular allegations. Id. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 681, 682. Cannot be directed to particular lines or paragraphs claimed to contain immaterial allegations. Plymouth Gold Min. Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. [Mont.] 88 P. 565.

20 Bresler v Bloom [Ala.] 41 So. 1010; Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co. v. Henderson [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 539. Complaint held sufficient in absence of motion to make more specific Gilman v. Fultz [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 746. In action on contract complaint alleging facts entitling plaintiff to nominal damages is good as against demurrer for want of facts. Grau v. Grau [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 816. Exception of no cause of action cannot be sustained when judgment of some kind, however small, could be legally rendered by the allegations supported by evidence. Davis v. Arkansas So. R. Co., 117 La. 320, 41 So. 587. Complaint stating cause of action for damages for breach of contract not demurrable because specific performance asked for against one defendant cannot be had. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Brown [Minn.] 109 N. W. 817. Where defendant was sued both individually and as executor and court had jurisdiction of action against him in former capacity, held that complaint was good on demurrer though it had no jurisdiction against him in latter capacity. Burstein v. Levy, 49 Misc. 469, 98 N. Y. S.

or if it is good on any theory,[21] as will a demurrer addressed to a complaint,[22] answer,[23] or cross complaint [24] as a whole, if any of the counts or defenses set up therein are good. So too, a general demurrer to the whole of a count will be overruled though one of its averments is insufficient where it contains other good averments.[25, 26] The sustaining of a demurrer directed wholly to one cause of action dose not affect the others,[27] but entry of judgment for defendant is proper, notwithstanding a plea of the general issue remains undisposed of, where plaintiff stands upon his replication to a special plea constituting a complete defense after a demurrer to the replication has been sustained.[28] If there are two or more counts in a declaration, or a single count containing several breaches, some well and others ill assigned, or containing a demand of several matters, some of which are well and others ill claimed, a demurrer to the whole declaration and each count thereof, or to the several breaches assigned, must be sustained to the faulty counts or breaches and overruled as to the others.[29]

Form, requisites, and sufficiency.[30]—A frivolous demurrer is one which raises no serious question of law.[31] In some states a demurrer must be accompanied by a statement of counsel that it was not interposed for delay.[32] A speaking demurrer is bad.[33] Where the statute prescribes the grounds of demurrer, no others are available.[34] In some states the precise defect relied on must be pointed out,[35] and

853. Is error to sustain demurrer where langauge is sufficiently explicit to raise an issue of fact upon which the pleader would be entitled to recover in the case. Berry v. Geiser Mfg. Co., 15 Okl. 364, 85 P. 699.

21. If good on any theory. Holliday v. Perry [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 877. In action for injuries to employe, demurrer held properly overruled if it was good under employers' liability act or under common law. Oolitic Stone Co. v. Ridge [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 441.

22. If any of several counts is good. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stegall's Adm'x, 105 Va. 538, 54 S. E. 19; Brockmeyer v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 118 Ill. App. 49. Demurrer should not be sustained because, in addition to necessary and proper averments, it alleges other matter which does not constitute a cause of action or defense. Gordon v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 129 Iowa, 747, 106 N. W. 177.

23. Joinder of three claims of set-off in one paragraph of answer is no ground for demurrer, and, if facts alleged are sufficient to constitute valid set-off as to any one of such claims, paragraph is sufficient on demurrer. Schnell v. Schnell [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 432.

24. If one count is good. Burgl v. Rudgers [S. D.] 108 N. W. 253.

25, 26. Latham v. Staten Island R. Co., 150 F. 235.

27. Is error to render judgment in bar of action upon sustaining demurrer to one count of declaration, other good counts remaining upon which issue has been joined. Merker v. Belleville Distillery Co., 122 Ill. App. 326. Demurrer directed solely to plaintiff's second cause of action held not to affect first cause of action, and fact that it was sustained would not authorize dismissal of entire complaint. Pratt, Hurst & Co. v. Tailer, 100 N. Y. S. 16.

28. Lowenstein v. Franklin Life Ins. Co., 122 Ill. App. 632.

29. Norfolf & W. R. Co. v. Stegall's Adm'x, 105 Va. 538, 54 S. E. 19.

30. See 6 C. L. 1036.

31. Demurrer to complaint in action to set aside deed for fraud held frivolous. Morgan v. Harris [N. C.] 54 S. E. 381.

32. Where mere glance at demurrer will satisfy court that it was filed in best of faith, will not be stricken because not accompanied by statement which would be superfluous under such circumstances. Ballantine v. Yung Wing, 146 F. 621.

33. Where demurrer relies on new facts set up therein, will be overruled unless statement thereof can be disregarded as surplusage. McDevitt v. Connell [N. J. Eq.] 63 A. 504. In suit to set aside conveyance by judgment debtor as fraudulent, on demurrer on ground that judgment is void, sufficiency of bill must be determined upon facts set up therein as to judgment, and statements of demurrer as to other facts alleged to be foundation of judgment cannot be considered. Id.

34. Civil code does not authorize demurrer to reply on ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute defense to answer, so that demurrer on that ground was properly overruled. Scott v. Collier [Ind.] 78 N. E. 184. On demurrer to answer styled "a separate and distinct defense" and "by way of set-off and counterclaim," on ground that it was insufficient in law upon its face, held that sufficiency of demurrer was to be tested by determining whether facts pleaded alleged any one of the three. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 494, 495, 501, providing when plaintiff may demur to answer, construed. Isbell-Porter Co. v. Heineman, 113 App. Div. 74, 98 N. Y. S. 1018.

35. Defect of parties cannot be raised under demurrer alleging simply a want of facts sufficient to state cause of action. Helm & Son v. Briley [Okl.] 87 P. 395. Demurrer to complaint for failure to state cause of action held general demurrer or objection which could not be considered under Code 1896, § 3303. Town of Vernon v. Edgeworth [Ala.] 42 So. 749. In trespass to try title, special demurrer to that part of only the grounds so specified may be considered.[36] A joint demurrer cannot be sustained except on grounds that are good as to all of the parties interposing it.[37] The objection that there is a misjoinder of parties defendant cannot be raised by a joint demurrer of all the defendants.[38] When two or more parties desire to demur separately to the same pleading it is not necessary for each to file a separate paper, but all may act separately and yet unite in the same paper, provided it is clearly stated therein that they act severally and not jointly.[39]

Issues raised.[40]—A demurrer, whenever and by whomsoever interposed, reaches back through the whole record and condemns the first pleading defective in substance,[41] but will not be carried back to a pleading to which a demurrer has already been overruled.[42]

answer setting up claim for improvements "upon the ground that the same shows no facts constituting good faith" held sufficient, though not pointing out desired facts. Campbell v. McCaleb [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 129. So called special exceptions held nothing more than different reasons assigned why general demurrer should be sustained and not special exceptions. Nixon v. Malone [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 715, 95 S. W. 577. So called special exception to allegations of special damage in answer held in effect only a general exception. Gorham v. Dallas, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 365, 95 S. W. 551.

36. Broadwood v. Southern Exp. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 769. Objection that acts of contributory negligence were averred in the alternative held not available. Johnson v. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 33. Demurrer held only to raise objection that claim against decedent's estate was not presented in time, and not that nature and amount of claim were not sufficiently shown by presentation as alleged. Moss v. Mosley [Ala.] 41 So. 1012. Assignment of cause of demurrer that "defendant reinterposes all of the above demurrers to the fifth count of the complaint" held to refer only to seven causes previously appearing on same paper, and not to demurrers assigning three causes filed to original complaint several months before, so that latter were not reinterposed to fifth count added after they were filed. Fulenwider v. Ridgway [Ala.] 41 So. 846. In action for false imprisonment, demurrer to plea on ground that it did not deny or confess or avoid counts to which it was addressed held to sufficiently point out objection that it was inconsistent in attempting to justify arrest and at same time denying it. Gambill v. Fuqua [Ala.] 42 So. 735. Ground of demurrer that declaraton is too general in its nature, and fails to set forth specific acts of negligence relied on held so general as to only require court to determine whether or not there were such essential and vital defects as to show no cause of action against defendant. Jacksonville Elec. Co. v. Schmetzer [Fla.] 43 So. 85. A demurrer seeking to question constitutionality of statute on ground that it contains matter in body not referred to in title presents no question for determination, where it fails to point out wherein body contains matter not referred to. Pace v. Goodson [Ga.] 56 S. E. 363. Demurrer held not to set up statute of limitations, so that such defense could not be considered on appeal. Cox v. American Freehold & Land Mtg. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 739. Demurrer on ground that several causes of action have been improperly united in same petition held not to raise objection that several causes of action which may be properly joined have been improperly united in same count. Zeideman v. Molasky, 118 Mo. App. 106, 94 S. W. 754. Under P. L. 1903, p. 572, § 131, grounds not specified cannot of themselves alone be dealt with as reason for overthrowing pleading. People's Bank & Trust Co. v. Weidinger [N. J. Law] 64 A. 179. In action on contract absence of averments of performance or tender of performance on part of plaintiff or its assignor held to be considered in aid of grounds of demurrer assigned though not itself assigned as ground. Id. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 490, requiring demurrer to distinctly specify objections to complaint, and that objection that plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue must point out specifically the particular defect relied on, demurrer to complaint in action by town supervisor for want of capacity to sue in that statute requires action to be brought by county treasurer held not to raise objection that action should be brought by town. Palmer v. Roods, 101 N. Y. S. 186. In suit to set aside sale of decedent's realty exception to petiton to the effect that allegations that claims for payment of which sale was made were barred by limitations came too late, and that objection should have been made before order of sale, held merely to raise objection that petition was not filed in time and not that allegation that claims were barred was not sufficient. Smart v. Panther [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 448, 95 S. W. 679.

37. To bill. Phillips v. Jacobs [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 542, 108 N. W. 899.

38. People v. Stoddard, 34 Colo. 200, 86 P. 251.

40. See 6 C. L. 1037.

41. Demurrer to a replication to a plea, which replication confesses and undertakes to avoid the plea, reaches back to the declaration. State v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Fla.] 40 So. 885. Upon argument of demurrer in absence of plea of general issue whole record is open. Hedrick v. People, 221 Ill. 374, 77 N. E. 441. Bad answer is good enough for bad complaint. Bonham v. Doyle [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 859. Upon a demurrer to an answer, the sufficiency of the complaint as to matters of substance may be considered and judgment given against

A demurrer admits the truth of all material allegations of fact which are well pleaded [43] and all inferences which may be fairly drawn therefrom,[44] but does not admit conclusions of law,[45] nor facts which are contrary to law or legally impos-party whose pleading was first defective. Hanson v. Byrnes, 96 Minn. 50, 104 N. W. 762. See 6 Columbia L. R. 204. Whether rule applies where by answer complaint has become subject of an issue of fact, and demurrer is to counterclaim alleging separate and independent cause of action, not decided. Id. Reaches only such prior pleadings as are defective in substance and not those only technically so. Id. Complaint will not be construed with same strictness as if defendant had demurred to complaint instead of answering it, but will be held sufficient if by fair intendment it states facts constituting cause of action. Id. Declaration did not allege a state of facts under which any duty on part of defendant arose, but pleas supplied or assumed missing allegation and traversed it by stating opposite to be truth. Held that on demurrer to pleas judgment must be for defendant, since, if pleas were bad because negativing allegation not in declaration, declaration was bad because not containing such allegation, and if declaration was good on theory that it did contain such allegation, pleas were also good. Watkins v. Kirby [N. J.] 64 A. 979. Complaint held to state cause of action ex delicto for deceit and fraudulent representations of attorney. Id. Where plaintiff demurs to answer, defendant may attack complaint for want of facts, any answer being good if complaint does not state cause of action. Parker Co. v. New York, 97 N. Y. S. 200; Ganesvoort Bank v. Empire State Surety Co., 112 App. Div. 500, 98 N. Y. S. 382. Demurrer to answer held properly overruled where it was practically a denial of all the averments of the complaint, and if it did not state a defense it was because complaint did not state cause of action. Schell v. Walla Walla [Wash.] 86 P. 1114.

42. Demurrer to answer not carried back to plea. Carlson v. People, 118 Ill. App. 592.

43. Williams v. Routt County Com'rs [Colo.] 84 P. 1109; Hiles v. Hiles & Co., 120 Ill. App. 617; Eisendrath Co. v. Gebhardt, 124 Ill. App. 325; Continental Casualty Co. v. Waters [Ky.] 97 S. Co., 117 La. 320, 41 So. 587; Ramos Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Labarre, 116 La. 559, 40 So. 898. Admission by demurrer that defendant held possession of land as trustee for plaintiff, etc., held to dispose of plea of limitations. Beckman v. Waters [Cal. App.] 86 P. 997. Allegations of interpleading answer that defendant was not guilty of fraud. Nixon v. Malone [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 715, 95 S. W. 577. That certain land was unappropriated public domain when settled on. Haney v. Atwood [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 597, 93 S. W. 1093. Where plea in action on benefit certificate alleged that insured agreed to conform to by-laws thereafter adopted, and that by-law was subsequently adopted precluding recovery in case of suicide, held that demurrer thereto admitted that by-law was adopted regularly and in accordance with provisions of defendant's constitution. Plunkett v. Supreme Conclave, 105 Va. 643, 55 S. E. 9. Demurrer to plea that insured commited suicide and died from effects of pistol wound inflicted by himself with suicidal intent, held to admit that insured committed suicide while sane. Id. Where demurrers to answer are overruled and party interposing them elects to stand thereon, introduction of evidence to support allegations of answer is unnecessary. Commonwealth v. Hillis, 29 Ky. L. R. 1063, 96 S. W. 873. Where, instead of answering to rule to show cause, defendant demurred to bill, thereby admitting facts therein, and failed to ask leave to answer when demurrer was overruled, held that he could not on appeal object that demurrer was treated as answer to rule to show cause. Guerin v. Macfarland, 27 App. D. C. 478. Where plaintiff demurred to a separate defense, order sustaining demurrer was reversed on appeal and demurrer overruled and no leave to withdraw the demurrer was reserved to plaintiff by judgment and it did not appear that it was in fact withdrawn, held that defendant was entitled as matter of law to a final judgment dismissing the complaint. National Contracting Co. v. Hudson River Water Power Co., 110 App. Div. 133, 97 N. Y. S. 92. Only admits material matters. Riverside County v. Yawman & Erbe Mfg. Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 900. Demurrer to complaint alleging that stockholders of foreign corporation is under laws of foreign state personally and individually liable to creditor in double amount of his stock held not to admit that he was liable in action at law by single stockholder, complaint not specifically or plainly alleging liability in that form of action. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Iselin, 185 N. Y. 54, 77 N. E. 877.

Knights of Columbus [Conn.] 64 A. 223. Not allegations of foreign law. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Iselin, 185 N. Y. 54, 77

sible.[46] Special and statutory demurrers raise only such questions as are strictly within their scope.[47]

Hearing and decision on demurrer.[48]—A refusal to act on a demurrer must be treated as if it had been overruled.[49] If the declaration is good, the ignoring of a demurrer thereto is not error.[50] Whether judgment may be rendered without notice to counsel depends on the statutes and rules of court of the various states.[51]

A pleading to which a demurrer has been sustained is out of the record.[52] A judgment for defendant upon the sustaining of a demurrer to a petition is a final determination of the action, and until set aside no further proceedings can be had therein looking to a trial of the issues between the parties.[53] If a portion of a plea or answer is stricken upon a ruling made that it is without merit, this is res adjudicata, if an amendment setting up substantially the same defense is tendered at a later date.[54] But the striking of a part of a plea or answer on special demurrer on the ground that it is not sufficiently specific does not prevent the tendering of an amendment at a later date setting up the defense with sufficient specification.[55] Leave to plead over after demurrer overruled,[56] or to amend after demurrer sustained,[57] generally rests in discretion. In some states where a demurrer to the pe-

47. See, also, Form, Requisites and Sufficiency, ante, this section. Demurrer held to raise question whether contract provided for liquidated damages or penalty, fact that it pointed out failure to allege any particular items of damage being consistent with theory that it provided for penalty, and ruling thereon was ruling that it provided for penalty and not that specific items of damage must be shown to recover liquidated damages. Long v. Furnas, 130 Iowa, 504, 107 N. W. 432. Demurrer on ground that court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant raises only the question whether he is such a person as can be subjected to the process and jurisdiction of the court. Sanipoli v. Pleasant Valley Coal Co. [Utah] 86 P. 865. Does not raise question that defendant had right to have case tried in county where cause of action arose, but motion to transfer to proper county is proper remedy in such case. Id. Does not raise question that action should have been commenced in county where defendants reside and hence was wrongfully commenced in another county, that objection going to jurisdiction of subject-matter. E. 306. Trial judge before whom demurrer to petition has been argued at first term may render judgment upon the demurrer at that term in the absence, without leave of court, of plaintiff or his counsel, and without giving time to plaintiff to amend his petition. Lamar, Taylor & Riley Drug Co. v. First Nat. Bank [Ga.] 56 S. E. 486.

52. Held that defendant could not be required to look to replication for any purpose, and its allegations could not be looked to in aid of another replication. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Heathcoat [Ala.] 43 So. 117. Where no replication was filed to plea of limitations, court having sustained demurrer to plea and no leave being obtained to plead over, held there was no issue of fact involving limitations. Gillmore v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 490, 79 N. E. 596.

53. Martindale v. Battey [Kan.] 84 P. 527. Demurrer was filed to petition on several grounds including misjoinder and want of facts, and record was made showing that demurrer was sustained, but not on what ground. Judgment for defendant was rendered and sustained on error on ground of misjoinder of causes of action. At subsequent term of district court plaintiff asked that record be amended to show that demurrer was in fact sustained on sole ground of want of facts, and also that he be permitted to file separate petitions setting out his separate causes of action and to proceed without further service as authorized by Gen. St. 1901, § 4526, where demurrer is sustained upon ground of misjoinder. Held that, while he was entitled to have record amended, court could not permit filing of separate petitions. Id.

54, 55. Morrison-Trammell Brick Co. v. McWilliams [Ga.] 56 S. E. 306.

56. Where demurrer to petition is overruled, defendant should be given reasonable time in which to answer. Gerrein's Adm'r v. Berry [Ky.] 99 S. W. 944.

57. Held that demurrer should not have been sustained without leave to amend. Wright v. Coules [Cal. App.] 87 P. 809. Court may provide, in order sustaining special demurrer to petition, that plaintiff may have opportunity to amend so as to meet it, but is not bound to do so, particularly where no request has been made for time in which to amend. Lamar, T. & R. Drug Co. v. First Nat. Bank [Ga.] 56 S. E. 486. Where demurrer to complaint in action for libel was sustained on ground that publication was not libelous per se, innuendoes attempted to be alleged being insufficient, held tition is overruled, the defendant is entitled to answer over as a matter of right, if it appears that it was interposed in good faith,[58] but when the demurrer is frivolous, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment unless the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, permits the defendant to answer over.[59] A judgment sustaining a special demurrer to a paragraph of a petition with leave to amend within a specified time operates to eliminate such paragraph if no amendment is offered within that time.[60]

Error cannot be predicated on the sustaining of a demurrer to a plea or paragraph when the facts therein alleged may be proved under a general denial in the answer.[61] There can be no error in overruling a demurrer to an argumentative general denial.[62] A party who does not himself demur cannot complain of the overruling of a demurrer interposed by his coparty.[63]

§ 6. Cross complaints and answers.[64]—By statute in some states whenever a defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party affecting the property to which the action relates, he may, in addition to his answer, file a cross complaint at the same time, or, by permission of court, subsequently.[65] It must allege all facts necessary to show a cause of action against the person to whom it is addressed.[66] A cross complaint states a separate and independent cause of action, and, if it appears from its averments that the right sought to be enforced exists at the time of filing, it is sufficient.[67] The prayer is no part of the pleading, tenders no issue, and neither adds to nor takes from the evidence required from either party.[68] Matters involved in a cross bill cannot be submitted to the jury as against a defendant who has never appeared, answered, or paid any attention to it.[69] One setting up the same matters as a defense and set-off in one suit, and as ground of recovery in a cross action, is properly required to elect which remedy he will pursue.[70] Cross pleadings have been abolished in some states.[71] that plaintiff should have been allowed to amend on payment of costs. Rees v. New York Herald Co., 112 App. Div. 456, 98 N. Y. S. 548.

58. Revisal 1905, § 506. Morgan v. Harris [N. C.] 54 S. E. 381. Municipal Court Act, §§ 142, 249 (Laws 1902, c. 580, §§ 1562, 1536), construed and held that motion to dismiss complaint for want of facts is equivalent to demurrer, and leave to serve amended complaint must be granted when it is sustained. Carpenter v. Pirner, 102 N. Y. S. 461. Plaintiff should be allowed to amend. Rogers v. Fine, 49 Misc. 633, 97 N. Y. S. 1004.

59. Morgan v. Harris [N. C.] 54 S. E. 381.

62. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bockting [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 524.

63. Defendant who does not demur to a bill. Shiff v. Andress [Ala.] 40 So. 824.

64. See 6 C. L. 1039.

65. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 442, held that in action of ejectment defendant was entitled to file cross complaint setting up judgment in former action between plaintiff and defendant's grantor involving title and possession of same land, and alleging that action was contrary to equity and good conscience and intended to harass defendant by compelling him to relitigate questions determined in former action. Martin v. Molera [Cal. App.] 87 P. 1104. Cross complaint held to be regarded as on file by consent of court, though no formal permission to file it was granted, where plaintiff interposed no objection to its filing and court overruled demurrer thereto. Syvertson v. Butler [Cal. App.] 85 P. 164. In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 389, relating to bringing in of new parties, held not an abuse of discretion in action concerning realty to permit defendant to file cross complaint against persons not parties to original action, but claiming an interest in the property, plaintiff not objecting. Id.

66. Cross bill held to sufficiently describe crop in controversy by reference to description in petition. Gravity Canal Co. v. Sisk [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 984, 95 S. W. 724.

67. Cross complaint for partition is sufficient if it shows right to possession at time it is filed though not at commencement of suit. Shetterly v. Axt [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 865.

68. Denial of motion to strike part of it cannot prejudice plaintiff. Jordan v. Jackson [Neb.] 100 N. W. 999.

69. Johnston v. Fraser [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 80, 92 S. W. 49.

70. Hebert v. Dewey, 191 Mass. 403, 77 N. E. 822.

71. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3453, 662, 460, 690, the only pleading of facts on part of defendant is an answer, regardless of whether action is at law or in equity, and hence answer cannot be regarded as a cross complaint, no matter what form it assumes. Gilchrist v. Hore [Mont.] 87 P. 443.

§ 7. Amendments.[72]—Amendments are as a rule freely granted in furtherance of justice,[73] the matter being largely committed to the discretion of the trial court,[74] who may take into consideration the probable utility of the amendment[75]

72. See 6 C. L. 1039.

73. Statute allows any amendment which does not make an entire change of parties or an entirely new cause of action. Montgomery Traction Co. v. Fitzpatrick [Ala.] 43 So. 136.

Amendment allowed: Amendment to answer so as to properly allege facts, if they were either defectively or erroneously stated, and it did not appear that defect or error was incurable. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Hinz [Cal. App.] 88 P. 730. In action for negligent killing of plaintiff's husband, amendment of complaint at close of plaintiff's case by inserting allegations as to amount of wages deceased was receiving, and that defendant assured him that place where he received injuries was safe. Cripple Creek Min. Co. v. Brabant [Colo.] 87 P. 794. Where only negligence alleged in original petition was that machine was in dangerous and unsafe condition, held that plaintiff should have been allowed to amend at close of his testimony to conform to proof that negligence of plaintiff's superior in giving orders contributed to injury, amendment not substantially changing cause of action and being in furtherance of justice. Civ. Code Prac. § 134. Ford v. Providence Coal Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 609. To answer so as to ask for reformation of written contract sued on so as to show clearly the agreement contended, it being contended that plaintiffs sought to take advantage of phraseology adopted because of their representations to give different meaning than that intended. National Gum & Mica Co. v. Century Paint & Wall Paper Co., 102 N. Y. S. 327. Where plaintiffs were allowed to recover for coal delivered under contract made with firm of same name of which they were the successors, held error to refuse to allow defendant to amend so as to set up breach of such contract. Piper v. Seager, 111 App. Div. 113, 97 N. Y. S. 634. In action to recover money alleged to have been obtained through fraud, defendant allowed to amend for second time so as to amplify defense of waiver on payment of costs though guilty of laches, where case had not yet appeared upon calendar and it did not appear that plaintiff would be prejudiced. Herbert v. De Murias, 101 N. Y. S. 381. In action to recover damages suffered by reason of a temporary injunction subsequently dissolved, amendment to complaint, seeking to compel defendant to pay same amount of damages for wrongfully and improvidently obtaining injunction. Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 194. Batson v. Paris Mountain Water Co., 73 S. C. 368, 53 S. E. 500.

Amendment disallowed: Of answer so as to set up statute of limitations, which amounted to no more than a tardy demurrer. Hewel v. Hogin [Cal. App.] 84 P. 1002. Of answer during trial so as to deny allegations that one of the plaintiffs had been adjudged insane, and that public administrator had been authorized to take charge of his estate. Levels v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 196 Mo 606, 94 S. W. 275.

74. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams [Ind.] 79 N. E. 442; Edwards v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [S. D.] 110 N. W. 832. To demurrer. Phillips v. Jacobs [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 542, 108 N. W. 899. Amendment of alternative writ of mandamus under B. & C. Comp. § 612. State v. Richardson [Or.] 85 P. 225. Amendment after trial is begun. American Life Ins. Co. v. Melcher [Iowa] 109 N. W. 805. Amendment of answer made at time of motion for new trial. Roebuck v. Stephenson, 99 Minn. 521, 109 N. W. 1134.

Allowance held not abuse of discretion: Where real issue in action on note was whether it was given to prevent criminal prosecution of maker's sons, permitting defendant to amend answer at close of evidence by striking out denial of maturity of obligation so as to give her right to open and close. Beal-Doyle Dry Goods Co. v. Barton [Ark.] 97 S. W. 58. Allowing filing of amended reply immediately after striking out original as sham. Florence Oil & Ref. Co. v. Oil Well Supply Co. [Colo.] 87 P. 1077. Where plaintiff in original petition relied on a former contract no longer in force, amendment setting out real contract under which defendant was operating. Georgetown Water, Gas, Elec. & Power Co. v. Smith [Ky.] 97 S. W. 1119. Amendment to answer, which did not change substantially defense which could have been made under original. Robertson v. Lombard Liquidation Co. [Kan.] 85 P. 528. Allowance of amendment eliminating cause of action for damages for false representations, and adding other allegations of fact to cause of action to recover amount of notes given to defendant by plaintiff and sold by plaintiff to innocent purchasers in violation of agreement that they were to be paid out of profits of sale of machines under patent, in which plaintiff was induced to purchase interest by fraud, and which plaintiff was compelled to pay. Myrick v. Purcell [Minn.] 109 N. W. 995, even if nature and substance of action was changed thereby. In action to recover contract price for material furnished and services rendered, held proper to permit plaintiff to amend petition so as to seek to recover value of material furnished and work performed upon a quantum meruit, where he states of action. Limrick v. Lee [Okl.] 87 P. 859. Allowance of amendment to counterclaim after sustaining demurrer thereto, where it did not insert a new or different cause of action, but was designed to complete defectively stated cause of action. Leesville Mfg. Co. v. Morgan Wood & Iron Works [S. C.] 55 S. E. 768.

Refusal to allow held not abuse of discretion: Of complaint. Seager v. Armstrong [Minn.] 109 N. W. 1134. Of answer where defendant had already introduced without objection all the testimony bearing upon the issue sought to be raised thereby, and amendment was unnecessary, no possible prejudice resulting. White River R. Co. v. Batesville & Winerva Tel. Co. [Ark.]98 S. W. 721. In action by administrator of surety to recover from principal amount of debt paid by decedent, where answer alleged that decedent assumed indebtedness and became principal maker on note, and that defendant was surety as between himself and decedent, amendment alleging that decedent gave defendant money received on note, it being repugnant to rest of answer and impossible if other allegations were true. Townsend v. Sullivan [Cal. App.] 84 P. 435. Amended counterclaim after sustaining demurrer to original, where two were identical in their legal effect, it not appearing that defendants were harmed, since, if pleadings were good, they could have secured their rights by excepting to ruling on demurrer and standing on such ruling. Siebe v. Heilman Mach. Works [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 300. Amendment to answer during trial, after repeated delays. Spurrier v. Bullard [Iowa] 107 N. W. 1036. Where complaint in action on subscription to aid in building hotel alleged that plaintiff constructed hotel in reliance thereon, and answer alleged that subscription was obtained by fraud and was without consideration and that defendants had withdrawn before any expense had been incurred, denial of leave to amend complaint so as to allege that plaintiff had not been instrumental in securing subscription but had become party to it only after it had been made. American Life Ins. Co. v. Melcher [Iowa] 109 N. W. 805. In any event ruling was harmless in view of fact that paper was subject to same defenses in any case and in view of evidence and findings. Id. Amendment to answer during trial setting up a new and additional defense, where only reason given therefor was that court refused to admit certain evidence under general denial. Piper v. Choctaw Northern Townsite & Imp. Co., 16 Okl. 436, 85 P. 965.

75. Under Rev. Laws, c. 173, § 48, amendment of answer is matter entirely within discretion of trial court, and refusal of motion to amend was proper where court was satisfied that purpose of amendment was vexation and delay, and not the setting up of what was honestly thought to be a defense. Fay v. Hunt, 190 Mass. 378, 77 N. E. 502.

76. Court held to have properly permitted defendant to amend answer by setting up defense of which she had no knowledge when demurrer to original answer was sustained. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Hinz [Cal. App.] 88 P. 730. In denying motion for leave to file counterclaim after evidence was all in, held that court was acting within its discretion, and error would not be imputed to such action unless clear abuse was shown. Sidney Novelty Co. v. Hanlon [Conn.] 63 A. 727. Court held not to have erred in refusing to allow amendment of answer at trial so as to set up new mater of defense, notice of which was not given in original answer where defendant failed to swear, in affadavit attached to proposed amendment that new matter was not omitted from original answer for purposes of delay, as required by Civ. Code 1895, § 5057, as amended. Beacham v. Wrightsville & T. R. Co., 125 Ga. 362, 54 S. E. 157. Statute does not apply to suit in justice's court. Glessner v. Longley, 125 Ga. 676, 54 S. E. 753. Fact that presiding judge had announced orally that he would sustain motion to dismiss on ground that it appeared on face of complaint that plaintiff had no title to note in suit and no right to sue thereon, held not to have rendered proper amendment to complaint thus tendered too late, or authorize its rejection on that ground where he had not yet signed any judgment of dismissal. Swilley v. Hooker, 126 Ga. 353, 55 S. E. 31. Refusal to set aside order of submission and to allow amended reply to be filed more than a year after filing of answer held not an abuse of discretion, where no good excuse was offered for delay. Blanton v. Arnett, 29 Ky. L. R. 491, 93 S. W. 1043. Application to amend answer after decree for complainants on ground of newly-discovered evidence held made too late, it appearing that failure to discover evidence at outset was due to defendant's negligence. Woods v. Campbell, 87 Miss. 782, 40 So. 874. That facts set out in amendment existed at time original answer was filed is no objection to allowance. Jordan v. Jackson [Neb.] 106 N. W. 999. Ordinarily a party will not be permitted to amend for purpose of setting up facts of which he had full knowledge when original pleading was filed, unless he shows satisfactorily excusing his failure or negligence in not setting up originally. Jacobs v. Mexican Sugar Refining Co., 101 N. Y. S. 320. Amendment to answer eighteen months after filing of original held improperly allowed, excuse being insufficient. Id. Court held justified in refusing to entertain motion to amend answer at trial, where action had been at issue for some time, and counsel failed to make application at special term to stay proceedings pending determination of motion. Riesgo v. Clark, 101 N. Y. S. 832. Will devised property in trust to corporation to be organized. Objection to its probate was withdrawn pursuant to compromise agreement as to disposition of testator's property, and corporation was organized. In subsequent action by executors for construction of will and agreement held that corporation would be allowed to amend its answer so as to attack validity of agreement before trial, notwithstanding lapse of time, where nothing had occurred in meantime changing position of any party to the action. Muller v. Evans Museum & Institute Soc., 99 N. Y. S. 93, rvg. 49 Misc. 322, 99 N. Y. S. 194. Motion to amend answers by setting up statute of limitations and want of jurisdiction because of plaintiff's nonresidence held properly denied on ground of laches where not made until five years after issue joined. Treadwell v. Clark, 114 App. Div. 493, 100 N. Y. S. 1. In action on bond secured by mortgage to recover deficiency after sale under judgment of foreclosure, application to amend answer at trial so as to charge plaintiff with actual value of land at time of the sale several years before instead of amount realized held properly denied, plaintiff being entirely unprepared for such issue. Randrup v. McBeth, 101 N. Y. S. 604. Rule to show cause why amendment to bill in equity should not be allowed not having been disposed of before hearing to adjourn, held that amendment was properly refused as offered too late when it was brought up for disposition at final hearing and after defendant had closed relying on his objections, which were well taken. Muehlhof v. Boltz [Pa.] 64 A. 427. Where defendant had ample opportunity to ascertain whether plaintiffs had filed certificate of partnership as required by statute, but answered to merits and waited until cause was about to be reached for trial before asking leave to interpose amended answer for purpose of raising objection that it had not held that denial of application was not an abuse of discretion, the statute providing for filing of certificate at any time, and subject-matter of amendment being merely plea in abatement which had apparently been waived. Nerger v. Equitable Fire Ass'n [S. D.] 107 N. W. 531. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3588, party applying to amend during trial must show that amendatory facts were unknown to him prior to application, unless court in its discretion relieves him from so doing. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 87 P. 434. Amendment to answer so as to plead misjoinder of parties defendant held properly allowed at close of plaintiff's evidence, there being sufficient proof that amendatory facts were previously unknown to defendent and such facts constituting defense to case as made by evidence. Id. Provision of Rev. St. 1895, art. 1188, that amendments must be filed before parties announce ready for trial and not thereafter, held directory only, so that court may in exercise of sound discretion permit amendment after such announcement. Colorado Canal Co. v. McFarland [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 848, 94 S. W. 400. Permitting amendment setting up waiver of provisions of contract sued on held not an abuse of discretion. Id.

77. Allowance of amendment and denial of continuance because of absence of witness held not ground for reversal where former was not an abuse of discretion, and opposite party admitted that witness would testify as claimed. Florence Oil & Refining Co. v. Oil Well Supply Co. [Colo.] 87 P. 1077. Where, in trial to court without jury, application to amend answers to conform to proof was taken under advisement and, on final determination of case, order was entered allowing amendment and reciting that it would be considered as denied by plaintiffs, held that effect of order, was to allow amendment only on condition that statements therein should be taken as denied without formal pleading to that effect being filed, and motion for judgment on pleadings for failure to file reply to amended answers was properly denied since defendants could not have any benefit from amendment without recognizing condition. Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Herpolsheimer [Neb.] 109 N. W. 160. Question whether or not costs or terms shall be imposed as condition of amending complaint is necessarily involved in motion to amend, and second motion by defendant for costs is improper. Abrahams v. Finkelstein, 49 Misc. 448, 97 N. Y. S. 987. Held that court should have imposed proper and reasonable terms as a condition of granting leave to amend complaint, though plaintiff contended that amendment was unnecessary and moved to amend only because justice intimated his purpose to dismiss it otherwise. Id. Where answer set up that contract sued on was intended to relate to certain particular transactions and not all future transactions, held that, though case had appeared on day calendar, defendant would be allowed to serve amended answer setting up substantially the same matter as a counterclaim and demanding the reformation of the contract, on condition that he pay all taxable costs and disbursements after service of summons and complaint, and that action remain upon the day calendar, and amended answer be served within one day after entry of order. Sackett v. Milholland, 49 Misc. 439, 99 N. Y. S. 948. In action for negligence where at close of evidence, court allowed juror to be withdrawn, held that, as condition of allowing plaintiff to amend by setting up more particularly the defects complained of, he should be required to pay all taxable costs to date as well as costs of motion. Palazzo v. Degnon MacLean Contr. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 681; Mossein v. Empire State Surety Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1013. Provision by special term in allowing amendment to complaint that it should be without prejudice to position of case on general trial term calendar held within power of court. Where effect of granting application for leave to amend answer was to take case off the calendar and delay trial and to present new issue, held that it would only be granted upon payment of all costs to date. National Gum & Mica Co. v. Century Paint & Wall Paper Co., 102 N. Y. S. 327. On allowing amendment of complaint so as to rid it of parties held to have been improperly joined, held that plaintiffs would be required to pay costs of motion and all accrued taxable costs in the action which had been taxed against all the plaintiffs. Town of Palatine v. Canajoharie Water Supply Co., 101 N. Y. S. 810. Failure of order permitting amendment of complaint to provide that defendant might answer it held not error, where record did not show that defendant requested permission to answer. McDonald v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 543.

78. Where answer admitted making of contract for furnishing certain materials as alleged in complaint, but alleged that order for materials was countermanded before plaintiffs had incurred any expense, held that amended answer denying making of contract as alleged by alleging making of conditional contract under which materials were not to be shipped until ordered, and that they were not ordered, was properly allowed to be filed in view of Kirby's Dig. § 6098, authorizing defendant to set forth as many grounds of defense as he may have. Stainback, Crawford & Co. v. Henderson [Ark.] 95 S. W. 786. Denial of motion for leave to amend reply held error, new matter offered to be pleaded not being inconsistent with complaint, and tending to supplement and contradict defense pleaded in answer. Mellor v. McConnell [Neb.] 106 N. W. 1012. Order granting leave to amend complaint held irregular in that no copy of amended pleading was attached thereto. Luckey v. Mockridge, 112 App. Div. 199, 98 N. Y. S. 335. Fact that there had been two previous trials in which verdicts had been set aside held not at all controlling in exercise of trial court's discretion to allow amendments, application being still one made before trial. Pickett v. Southern R. Co., 74 S. C. 236, 54 S. E. 375.

79. Delay in filing amended petition after demurrer to former one had been sustained be made before trial, at the trial [80] under proper restrictions against surprise,[81] at held not, under the circumstances, so unreasonable as to authorize court to strike it from files and dismiss action for want of prosecution, in view of Civ. Code Prac. §§ 94, 132. Quinn v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 97 S. W. 379. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 542, providing that within twenty days after pleading has been served, or at any time before period for answering it expires, it may be once amended by the party as of course, held that where defendant served an amended answer to the orlginal complaint, and plaintiff thereafter filed an amended complaint which defendant answered, defendant could, within prescribed time, file an amended answer to amended complaint as of course. Brooks Bros. v. Tiffany, 102 N. Y. S. 626. Where plaintiff voluntarily and without order of court served amended complaint in order to overcome defendant's objections as set forth in a motion to require causes of action to be separately stated and numbered, held that he could not serve another as of course, particularly where first one was general amendment in form and effect so as to strengthen pleading against possible demurrer. Freyhan v. Wartheimer, 102 N. Y. S. 839. Under § 542 and § 798 which gives to party served with a pleading by mail double time in which to answer, reply, or demur to it, held that where defendant served answer by mail he could amend it as of course at any time within forty days. Schlesinger v. Borough Bank, 112 App. Div. 121, 98 N. Y. S. 136. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1188, held to confer right to file amended pleadings in vacation, and not to require pleading so filed without notice to opposite party to be treated as a nullity. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 484, 91 S. W. 312.

80. Denial of leave to file additional plea at trial held not improper where character of plea was not indicated, there was no showing of reasonable excuse for failure to file it sooner, and it did not appear that counsel was then ready to file it. Byerly v. Wilson, 123 Ill. App. 662. Allowance after announcement of ready for trial is within discretion of court and its refusal will not be reversible error unless abuse of discretion is shown. Walker v. Hernandez [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 456, 92 S. W. 1067. Refusal to allow amendment of answer so as to ask for affirmative relief held not an abuse. Id. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 723, 1018, referee on the trial has same power as court to amend pleadings to conform to proofs. Perkins v. Storrs, 114 App. Div. 322, 99 N. Y. S. 849. Party consenting that referee may pass upon application for amendment cannot afterwards contend that application could only have been granted at special term. Id.

Amendment held properly allowed: Of declaration. Bloomington & Normal R. Elec. & Heat. Co. v. Bloomington, 123 Ill. App. 639. Of complaint charging name of defendant's servant alleged to have been guilty of negligence complained of, in view of allegations as to duties being performed by such servant and time and place of accident, and defendant's probable knowledge as to who was performing such duties, etc. Smith v. Michigan Lumber Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 652. Of answer to meet new contention made material by amendment to complaint at trial. Devereux v. Peterson, 126 Wis. 558, 106 N. W. 249. Amendments to plea at trial term to meet objections thereto pointed out by special demurrer. Patton v. Bank of La Fayette, 124 Ga. 965, 53 S. E. 664. Where issue was made by pleadings and evidence and case was referred to auditor, allowance after filing of auditor's report of amendment which introduced no new issue, but simply adjusted prayer of petition more specifically to finding of auditor and evidence submitted to him is proper. McConnell v. Stubbs, 124 Ga. 1038, 53 S. E. 698. Unverified plea of non est factum filed at appearance term may be amended at trial term by allowing defendant to swear to its averments. Patton v. Bank of La Fayette, 124 Ga. 965, 53 S. E. 664. In replevin, where defectively drawn answer amounted to amplified general denial and had not been attacked by motion or demurrer, amendment setting up general denial coupled with specific allegations of fraud in alleged purchase of goods by plaintiff. Rusho v. Richardson [Neb.] 109 N. W. 394. Where contract was set out verbatim in declaration and recited that it was under seal, but in copying it into declaration nothing to represent seal was indicated, and when contract was introduced in evidence it was apparent that corporate seal had been affixed, held that amendment to make declaration conform to fact was authorized by Va. Code 1887, § 3384, and U. S. Rev. St. § 954. Mathieson Alkali Works v. Mathieson [C. C. A.] 150 F. 241.

81. In action against carrier for damages for loss of part of shipment of machinery where answer had been on file for over a year, held that denial of continuance on allowance of amendment thereto after evidence was closed and witnesses discharged, setting up for first time failure to comply with requirement of bill of lading as to notice of claim for damages, was reversible error. Hall & Brown Woodworking Mach. Co. v. Louisiana, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 95 S. W. 799. In action for negligence allowing amendment during trial setting out in further detail result of injuries held not an abuse of dicretion in view of terms offered. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Likes, 124 Ill. App. 459, afd. 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136. Defendant held not prejudiced by trial amendment and denial of motion for continuance, where original declaration permitted recovery for every ailment proved at trial and amendment added nothing to it. Shoninger Co. v. Mann. 121 Ill. App. 275. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 688, amendment does not entitle opposite party to continuance as matter of right, but court must be satisfied that in consequence thereof he cannot be ready for trial at time previously appointed. Keeton v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 281, 92 S. W. 512. Denial held not an abuse of discretion. Id. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 774, giving court discretionary power to allow amendments under such terms as it may deem just and proper, denial of continuance on ground of surprise held not ground for reversal in absence of affirmative showing of abuse of discretion. Dorais v. Doll, 33 Mont. 314, 83 P. 884. Refusal to allow continuance on filing amended the conclusion of the trial to conform the pleadings to the proof,[82] and in some answer held not abuse of discretion, original answer though defective being sufficient to inform plaintiff that defendant relied on general denial, under which facts alleged in amendment could have been proved. Rusho v. Richardson [Neb.] 109 N. W. 394. Amendment held not such a surprise as would authorize postponement or terms, where it was allowed after notice and nearly sixty days before trial. More v. Burger [N. D.] 107 N. W. 200. Where amendment is filed when case is called for trial in such a manner as not to operate as a surprise to opposite party and there is no objection to its filing, it is improper for court of its own motion to strike it from files merely because replication of opposite party operates as a surprise and a continuance of the case. Zollars v. Snyder [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 203, 94 S. W. 1096. Where, when case was called for trial, it was discovered that answer to merits had not been attached to exceptions and general denial, but it appeared that copy had been previously furnished to plaintiffs' counsel who then agreed that it might be so attached, and by consent of plaintiffs same was then attached, held error for court to strike same. Id.

82. Is proper after verdict or judgment to permit complaint to be amended so as to present issue as both parties have presented it in the evidence without objection. Kirby's Dig. § 6145. McNutt v. McNutt [Ark.] 95 S. W. 778. Is not error to refuse amendment offered after evidence of plaintiff has closed which is supported by no testimony. Huggins v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 856.

Amendments allowed: Amendment to complaint held supported by evidence and its denial was error. Huggins v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 856. Plaintiffs held properly allowed to amend pending motion in arrest of judgment, amended counts merely amplifying averments of original declaration, particularly where no question of variance was raised during trial. Wabash R. Co. v. Campbell, 117 Ill. App. 630. In action for damages for injuries to employe due to defect in shears, allowance of amendment of complaint so as to allege that nicks in lower blade of shears made rough places on lower surface of steel plate being sheared instead of on upper surface held not an abuse of discretion, particularly as, under findings, it could not have affected case one way or the other. New Castle Bridge Co. v. Doty [Ind.] 79 N. E. 485. Plaintiff's testimony held to have made case for jury so that court should have allowed amended petition to be filed. Hobbs v. Ray, 29 Ky. L. R. 999, 96 S. W. 589. Where in trespass quare clausum plaintiff did not prove the breaking and entering of the close, but an injury to his property after a lawful entry, held that he would be allowed after verdict to amend so as to set up cause of action in case, it appearing that merits of case had been fairly and fully tried without any surprise to defendant. Beers v. McGinnis, 191 Mass. 279, 77 N. E. 768. In action of torts in three counts, first and second being under statute and alleging negligence on part of defendant personally and on part of his agents and servants respectively, and third being at common law for conscious suffering after death, held that, where second and third counts were submitted to jury which assessed damages to plaintiff under each, it was within power of court under Rev. Laws c. 173, § 48, and court rules to allow plaintiff to amend after verdict by striking out third count, whether defendant was harmed by evidence as to third count being question for trial court. Manning v. Conway [Mass.] 78 N. E. 401. Where petition alleged that draft sued on was payable to plaintiff bank, but it showed on its face that it was payable to "P. cashier", and evidence showed that P. was plaintiff's cashier and that he was acting as its agent in taking draft, held that plaintiff was properly allowed to amend petition after cause was submitted. State Bank v. American Hardwood Lumber Co. [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 786. Under Laws 1902, p. 1542, c. 580, § 166, municipal court held to have authority to allow amendment to complaint at close of plaintiff's case, changing cause of action from use and occupation to trespass to conform to proof where facts upon which plaintiff claimed right to recover were the same. Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. S. 66. Trial court held to have authority to amend complaint at close of trial. Martin v. Flahive, 112 App. Div. 347, 98 N. Y. S. 577. Where complaint to recover on check against drawer thereof was defective in failing to allege giving of notice of dishonor required by negotiable instruments law, held that it could be amended to conform to proof that drawer had stopped payment, no notice of dishonor being required in such case. Scanlon v. Wallach, 102 N. Y. S. 1090. Allowance of amendment to petition held within court's discretion, where it could not have occasioned surprise. Northern Texas Traction Co. v. Mullins [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 433. In assumpsit by officer to recover purchase price of attached property sold under agreement that proceeds should be paid to plaintiff, where case and thereby cause of action was referred by parties, held immaterial whether or not general assumpsit would lie, declaration being adaptable by amendment to facts found without changing nature of action. Lamb v. Zundell, 78 Vt. 232, 62 A. 33. In action for breach of promise of marriage held an abuse of discretion to refuse to allow amendment to conform complaint to proof that promise was made after plaintiff's divorce, where court construed complaint as based on promise made during plaintiff's former marriage. Leaman v. Thompson [Wash.] 86 P. 926. Where at close of testimony in action at law it appears that cause is really one in equity for an accounting by defendant as a trustee, court should treat complaint as amended in particulars necessary to conform to proof and take case from jury. Goupille v. Chaput [Wash.] 86 P. 1058. Where complaint alleged that injuries were caused by jerking train after it had stopped and proof showed that it was stopped with a jerk, held that complaint could be amended if necessary, it appearing that all material questions were fully tried by parties. Hopkins v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 128 Wis. 403, 107 N. W. 330. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3588, amendments to conform pleadings to proof should be libercases in the appellate court,[83] or after remand therefrom.[84] If the averments are ally allowed when justice will be thereby promoted. Lellman v. Mills [Wyo.] 87 P. 985. In action by trustee in bankrutcy to set aside chattel mortgage, amendment of complaint after judgment for plaintiff held properly allowed, it not being subject to objection that it set up new cause of action, or that complaint did not state cause of action without it. Id. Where statement of claim submitted to jury by plaintiff without objection was in accordance with evidence, held that defendant could not after verdict object that it contained items not claimed in declaration, but plaintiff would be allowed to amend declaration so that it would cover them. Johnson v. Crawford, 144 F. 905.

Amendments disallowed: After both parties had concluded introduction of evidence and argument had been entered upon, held not error to disallow amendment setting up defense of limitations, no evidence having been introduced which would have authorized binding for defendant upon such plea. Hinkle v. Smith & Son [Ga.] 56 S. E. 464. Refusal to allow amendment of answer at close of evidence held not an abuse of discretion, no reason being suggested why it was not made earlier, and there being no sufficient evidence to support it. Kettering v. Eastlack, 130 Iowa, 498, 107 N. W. 177. Defendant having known facts when he filed original answer, held that he would not be permitted after judgment for plaintiff to file amended answer setting up title by adverse possession. Asher v. Uhl, 29 Ky. L. R. 396, 93 S. W. 29; for former opinion see 27 Ky. L. R. 938, 87 S. W. 307. In action against carrier for injuries to shipment of hogs, refusal of court to allow amendment of answer to show delivery to connecting carrier held not an abuse of discretion, where evidence did not show any notice to connecting carrier that hogs had been placed on receiving track for it, or when it in fact took charge of them. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Stevens, 29 Ky. L. R. 1079, 96 S. W. 888. Where one party to joint lease, when sued separately, pleaded general denial, and failed to object, held that he was not after decision, entitled to amend answer and set up fact that was joint, and order allowing such amendment was abuse of discretion. Hoatson v. McDonald, 97 Minn. 201, 106 N. W. 311. Where defendant had during trial been allowed to amend answer twice and plaintiffs to amend reply three times, held no abuse of discretion to refuse on motion for new trial to allow amendment of answer involving complete change of theory of defense, based on falsity of verified admissions of answer, and inconsistent with much of the testimony, because stockholder of defendant corporation at time of transaction was ignorant of the proceedings. Wasser v. Western Land Securities Co., 99 Minn. 460, 107 N. W. 160. Where plaintiff is permitted, without amendment asked or allowed and against seasonable objection by defendant, to recover on a wholly different cause of action than that alleged, the pleadings cannot be conformed to the proof, even though defendant was probably not misled. Hill v. Weidinger, 110 App. Div. 683, 97 N. Y. S. 473. Permitting amendment of complaint after cause was submitted so as to enlarge its scope held error, where evidence as to facts set up by amendment was received over objection and exception. Heywood Bros. & Wakefield Co. v. Doernbecher Mfg. Co. [Or.] 86 P. 357. In action before justice to recover on alleged contract to pay for milk average price paid by any three factories to be selected by plaintiff, held that amendment to conform pleading to proof, received over objection that he was to receive same price paid by plaintiff to others, was properly disallowed. Genger v. Westphal, 128 Wis. 426, 107 N. W. 330.

83. In action on due bill petition filed in district court on appeal held not a departure from that filed in county court. Rieck v. Griffen [Neb.] 103 N. W. 1061. In action on life insurance policy where defendant pleaded that insured had warranted that he had not in fifteen years been under care of any physician, and that warranty was false, and proof was of a warranty that last attendance by a physician was fifteen years before, held that plea was amendable and amendment could be made in appellate court if necessary, plaintiff not having been misled. Hanrahan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 72 N. J. Law, 504, 63 A. 280.

84. Amendments allowed: Opinion on appeal held not to have determined rights of either party, but merely that there should be new trial, so that, after mandate was entered in court below, defendants should have been allowed to file such additional pleading, if any, as might be necessary to properly present their case. Fugate v. Gill [Ky.] 99 S. W. 602. Where on appeal case was reversed and remanded for new trial, filing of amended pleading before mandate was filed in lower court as required by Civ. Code Prac. § 761, was premature and it was properly stricken. In suit to restrain trespass on oyster beds, where answer and cross bill alleged right to take oysters under certain contract between the parties, held that decision on appeal that contract conferred no such right did not preclude trial court from subsequently allowing defendants to amend so as to seek reformation of such contract on ground that it did not express true agreement. Barataria Can. Co. v. Ott [Miss.] 41 So. 378. Affidavit made by counsel stating facts and reciting that it is made by him rather than by plaintiff because facts are peculiarly within his knowledge held sufficient basis for allowance of amendment to complaint by trial court after remand so as to complete state of facts necessary to sustain judgment for plaintiff, when accompanied by verified amended complaint in which necessary allegations were made by plaintiff. Mossein v. Empire State Surety Co., 112 App. Div. 69, 98 N. Y. S. 144. Where judgment dismissing complaint was affirmed by court of appeals with leave to appellants to apply to supreme court for such relief as they might be advised, held that special term had power or authority to order amendment of summons and complaint so as to eliminate parties held to have been improperly joined, and to amend judgment so that complaint should not stand dismissed, but in force as amended. Town of Palatine v. Canajoharie Water Supply Co., 101 N. Y. S. 810. Where judgment in law action is reversed and cause remanded for new trial or further proceed-sufficient to give jurisdiction,[85] amendments either of substance or form are allowable.[86] Parties may be eliminated or new parties added,[87] but amendments chang-

ings, court below has power to allow reasonable amendments to pleadings, and its action in this respect will not be disturbed except for an abuse of discretion. State v. Richardson [Or.] 85 P. 225. Remand on affirmance of judgment sustaining demurrer to alternative writ of mandamus held not to preclude allowance of amendment. Id. Allowance of amendment held not an abuse of discretion. Id. Where it appeared that special count was intended as count in assumpsit rather than tort, but it was insufficient as former, held that, on reversal of judgment overruling demurrer for misjoinder, case would be remanded with directions to sustain demurrer unless plaintiff should apply for leave to amend, in which case leave should be granted. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Smith [Va.] 56 S. E. 567.

Amendments disallowed: Where it was determined on appeal that evidence to show estoppel was inadmissible without a plea, held that on a retrial leave to amend so as to set up estoppel was properly denied when application was not made until the close of the testimony. Craig v. Leschen & Sons Rope Co. [Colo.] 87 P. 1143. On appeal to district court from action of board of review, motion to dismiss on ground that it did not appear that it was based on any complaint before board was overruled and assessment was reduced. On appeal to supreme court, judgment was reversed on ground that transcript did not show any such complaint. Held that after redocketing in district court it was too late for defendant to amend so as to allege that on original trial in district court it was conceded that such complaint was made, question having been an issue in case from its inception. City Council v. National Loan & Inv. Co., 130 Iowa, 511, 107 N. W. 309. Where answer in suit to enjoin issuance of patents to land to defendant denied title of plaintiff and alleged that land was vacant and unoccupied, held that after judgment had been rendered for plaintiff defendant would not be permitted to file amended and supplemental answer and counterclaim alleging title under a prior patent, two pleas being inconsistent. Asher v. Uhl, 29 Ky. L. R. 396, 93 S. W. 29, for former opinion see 27 Ky. L. R. 938, 87 S. W. 307. Motion after remand to permit defendant to file amended and supplemental answer and counterclaim held properly denied, that not being proper method by which to obtain new trial. Id. Where judgment is reversed and case remanded with directions to render judgment for a party in accordance with the opinion, trial court has no authority to reframe pleadings as to any issue and retry it. Allowance of amendment held error. Halsey v. Waukesha Springs Sanitarium, 128 Wis. 438, 107 N. W. 1.

85. Refusal to allow amendment held not error, where there was not enough in the petition to amend by, and it would not have stated a cause of action had amendment been allowed. Tye v. Goissert, 124 Ga. 733, 57 S. E. 813. Petition, after eliminating paragraph held bad on demurrer, held to contain sufficient allegation of negligence on part of defendant to authorize amendment amplifying such allegation, there being no objection on ground that allegations were not orderly and distinct. Blackwell v. Ramsey-Brisben Stone Co., 126 Ga. 812, 55 S. E. 968. Petition in action against carrier for damages for failure to deliver car load of corn within a reasonable time held sufficient to amend by. Southern R. Co. v. Gardner [Ga.] 56 S. E. 454. Original petition in action against carrier for injuries to passenger held to have sufficiently alleged a cause of action to be amended by inserting an allegation that alleged culpable acts of defendant were negligently done. Keeton v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 281, 92 S. W. 512.

86. Petition not addressed to any court held amendable in that regard in view of prayer for process. Parish v. Davis, 126 Ga. 840, 55 S. E. 1032. Petition which is duplicitous in that plaintiffs, though asserting that they sue as heirs at law, seek to set up rights as legatees, is amendable, and may be rendered unobjectionable in this respect by introduction of allegations to effect that they pray for the relief sought solely in their capacity as legatees and devisees. Hodges v. Wheeler, 126 Ga. 848, 56 S. E. 76. Where second paragraph of petition erroneously described petitioner as administrator of P. instead of D., held that it was amendable in that regard. Parish v. Davis, 126 Ga. 840, 55 S. E. 1032. Failure of petition in eminent domain proceedings to allege fact necessary to maintenance of proceeding may be cured by amendment under express provisions of eminent domain act. Martin v. Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co., 220 Ill. 97, 77 N. E. 86. Failure of complaint in action for slander to allege innuendo held curable by amendment. Russell v. Barron, 111 App. Div. 382, 97 N. Y. S. 1061. Under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 194, court has power to allow amendment striking out allegations other than name of a party. Pickett v. Southern R. Co., 74 S. C. 236, 54 S. E. 375.

87. Evidence having discolsed no liability against one of the defendants on contract sued on, held not error to permit plaintiff to amend by striking out his name. Eagle Iron Co. v. Baugh [Ala.] 41 So. 663. Instruction to find verdict for defendant if jury believed that all plaintiffs, who originally filed suit for damages to lot resulting from construction of railroad embankment in street, owned joint interest in property, and that since filing of suit some of plaintiffs had been stricken from complaint, held erroneous in view of Code 1896, § 3331. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Oden [Ala.] 41 So. 129. Plaintiff held properly permitted to amend so as to make action one against the "C. Mining Company" instead of against the "C. Mining and Milling Company," the former company evidently not having been misled and having conferred jurisdiction by appearance. Nisbet v. Clio Min. Co., 2 Cal. App. 436, 83 P. 1077. In action for labor performed and goods sold, brought against defendants as copartners, held that allowance of amendment before trial striking allegation as to copartnership and making action one against defendants individually was not error. Haviland v. Mayfield [Colo.] 88 P. 148. In action on note by indorsee in name of payee and for use of indorsee, held error on appeal to superior court to refuse to allow amendment of declaration by striking out name of payee and words "for the use of," so as to leave case to stand in indorsee's own name as plaintiff. Swilley v. Hooker, 126 Ga. 353, 55 S. E. 31. Petition in action in tort brought against two defendants may be amended by striking therefrom one of them against whom service is not perfected, in which case, if language is not otherwise altered, allegations will be read and understood as if there had been only one defendant originally. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Randolph, 126 Ga. 238, 55 S. E. 47. Where plaintiff is by mistake described as a company in title of action and alleged in body of petition to be a corporation, petition may, under Code, § 139, be amended by striking out such descriptive words. American Bonding Co. v. Dickey [Kan.] 88 P. 66. Denial of motion to amend petition by substituting corporation as plaintiff in place of all its stockholders held an abuse of discretion under the circumstances. Hackett v. Van Frank, 119 Mo. App. 648, 96 S. W. 247. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 723, may permit amendment of summons and complaint so as to charge defendant individually instead of in his capacity as trustee. Boyd v. United States Mortgage & Trust Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 999. In action under statute for killing plaintiff's minor son, error in failing to join deceased's mother and in failure of statement to give names of parties entitled to damages recovered held cured by instruction at defendant's request to find full compensation and damages so far as affected both parents, and to so state in verdict, and verdict finding for both parents, on which judgment was entered and amendment made after verdict making mother party, was unnecessary and harmless error. Waltz v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 401. Under Code, § 194, court has power to allow amendment of complaint by striking out names of two of the parties for whose benefit action was instituted. McDaniel v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 543.

ing the cause of action or introducing new issues are ordinarily not allowable.[88]

88. Only limitation upon right of plaintiff in action at law to amend at any time before cause is submitted to jury is that form of action must not be changed. Must not be an entire change of parties, nor can there be the substitution or introduction of an entirely new cause of action. Huggins v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 856. Test is whether recovery had under original would bar one under amended, or if same evidence would support both, or if same measure of damages is applicable. Knight v. Boring [Colo.] 87 P. 1078. Test to determine whether amendment is permissible is whether cause of action set up by amendment would be bar to suit on other. More v. Burger [N. D.] 107 N. W. 200. Under Rev. Codes 1899, § 5297, in regard to amendments, amendment to complaint after cause is set for trial is not objectionable merely because it introduces new or different cause of action in technical sense of that term, where it does not substantially change plaintiff's claim, test being whether it should be allowed in furtherance of justice. Kerr v. Grand Forks [N. D.] 107 N. W. 197. In action for injuries received by falling on sidewalk, allowance of amendment held not error even if it changed cause of action from one for failure of city to enforce ordinance in regard to construction of sidewalks to one for negligence in permitting walk to remain in dangerous and defective condition, which it did not, same injury being alleged in both. Id. Amendment which does not substantially state different facts is permissible, though prayer of original complaint is one applicable to claim and delivery proceedings, and that of amended complaint pertains solely to demand for damages for conversion of property. More v. Burger [N. D.] 107 N. W. 200. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 723, court held to have power to direct amendment of complaint, though it changes cause of action and substitutes another of a different class, where result sought to be reached is same, and amendment does not change substantial purpose of the action. Rubin v. Maine S. S. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 30. In action for loss of goods on contract of carriage, amendment held properly allowed. Id. Amendment of complaint changing cause of action from one for breach of contract to one for moneys had and received held within power of municipal court. Devery v. Winton Motor Carriage Co., 49 Misc. 626, 97 N. Y. S. 392. A cause of action is the fact, or combination of facts, which gives rise to a right of action. Davidson v. Fraser [Colo.] 84 P. 695. Right of plaintiff to amend on appeal to district court is governed by substantially same rule as that relating to amendments in actions originally brought in that court, test being in both cases whether identity of cause of action is preserved. Myers v. Moore [Neb.] 110 N. W. 989. "Cause of action" means, not formal statement of facts set forth in petition, but subject-matter upon which plaintiff grounds his right of recovery. Id. Under Laws 1871-72, p. 342, § 23, identity of causes of action is to be determined by court as question of law by inspection and consideration of both declarations, without aid of extrinsic evidence. Heffron v. Rochester German Ins. Co. [Ill.] 77 N. E. 262, afg. 119 Ill. App. 566. Amended complaint contradicting allegations of original should not be permitted unless good cause therefor is shown. Hadevis v. Nutting [Wash.] 86 P. 197. Allowance of amendment held not an abuse of discretion. Id. Penalty of improperly attempting to ingraft separate and disconnected suit upon pending suit by supplemental petition is not the dismissal of the pending suit, but simply the rejection of the suit sought to be ingrafted. Williams' Heirs v. Zengel, 117 La. 599, 42 So. 153. In action ex delicto the wrongful act of which complaint is made is cause of action, and amendment should not be allowed which substitutes wrongful act different from that alleged in original petition, or injects it into case as an additional cause. Peery v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 14. Inherent differences between law and equlty cannot be ignored in allowing amendments of complaints, in view of limitation imposed by Rev. St. 1898, § 2830, that such amendments shall not substantially change the claim. North Side

Amendment held to set up new or different cause of action: Where complaint stated cause of action for personal injuries, held that after plaintiff's death and revival of action in name of his administrator, latter could not set up additional cause of action to recover damages for his death for benefit of his widow and children. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Hickey [Ark.] 99 S. W. 839. In action for injuries due to defective sidewalk, amendment stating that injury occurred at different place than that named in original declaration. Gilmore v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 490, 79 N. E. 596. Counts of amended declaration pleading specially contract of fire insurance, from count upon account stated in original declaration. Heffron v. Rochester German Ins. Co. [Ill.] 77 N. E. 262, afg. 119 Ill. App. 566. In action for personal injuries, additional counts setting up different duties and their breach by defendant. Libby, McNeill & Libby v. Kearney, 124 Ill. App. 339. Substitution of administrator for widow as plaintiff in action for death of a miner, right of action given administrator by Rev. St. c. 70, to recover damages for death due to negligence being in no manner related to or connected with right and cause of action given widow under Miner's Act, Rev. St. c. 93. Staunton Coal Co. v. Fischer, 119 Ill. App. 284. Suit in jactitation involving property held in severalty by one of the plaintiffs cannot be ingrafted by supplemental petition upon one involving property held in indivision by the several plaintiffs, though title to two properties has same origin. Williams' Heirs v. Zengel, 117 La. 599, 42 So. 153. In suit to redeem land sold under trust deed, amendment setting up that sale was invalid because person making it was not authorized in writing by trustee as required by bill, such ground not having been properly averred in original. Cox v. American Freehold & Land Mortg. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 739. Where original petition asked for equitable relief only, count in amended petition for damages for conversion held properly stricken. Red Diamond Clothing Co. v. Steideman, 120 Mo. App. 519, 97 S. W. 220. Cause of action accruing after filing of original petition cannot be added by amendment. Second count of amended petition held properly stricken. Id. Entirely new cause of action arising pendente lite cannot be brought in by amendment in action at law. Cause of action on instalment note given as part of purchase price of machine, maturing pending action on three other instalment notes due when action was commenced. Pape v. Carlton [Wis.] 109 N. W. 968.

Amendment held not to set up new or different cause of action: In suit to quiet title, amendment to bill seeking to estop defendant from showing that deed to complainant's grantor was never delivered. Gulf, Coal & Coke Co. v. Alabama Coal & Coke Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 397. Amendments to bill to enforce vendor's lien and to enjoin cutting of timber on land, seeking to make clear the lands intended to be conveyed. Reynolds v. Lawrence [Ala.] 40 So. 576. In suit for cancellation of note and mortgage on ground of undue influence and want of consideration, amendment to original bill held not inconsistent with it and not a departure in pleading. Phillips v. Bradford [Ala.] 41 So. 657. Where original complaint was on common counts, amendment setting up new claim based on contract which was foundation of action on common counts. Owensboro Wagon Co. v. Hall [Ala.] 43 So. 71. Amendment of complaint in ejectment so as to change action from one by plaintiff individually and as guardian of lunatic to one by her alone in her individual capacity. Henry v. Frohlichstein [Ala.] 43 So. 126. Where original complaint alleged that plaintiff was wrongfully ejected from car by company's agent, count added by amendment alleging negligence in giving plaintiff transfer, by reason of which he was ejected, held not such a departure as would authorize court to refuse to allow it or to strike it out. Montgomery Traction Co. v. Fitzpatrick [Ala.] 43 So. 136. In action for personal injuries, amended complaint alleging cause of injury substantially as stated in original, but containing additional specifications of damages. Little Rock Traction & Elec. Co. v. Miller [Ark.] 96 S. W. 993. In original complaint plaintiff sought to recover on implied assumpsit money paid by her as surety on note. Copy of note attached thereto was stamped paid. Held that amended complaint alleging that note was transferred to plaintiff and in which she sought to recover as owner thereof was not inconsistent with original, and its allowance was not abuse of discretion. Barling v. Weeks [Cal. App.] 88 P. 502. Amended complaint in action pursuant to adverse to application for patent to mining claim, the ultimate facts relied on in both cases being plaintiff's exclusion from his interest in premises, and his interest therein as cotenant, though, with respect to original, facts pleaded were somewhat different. Davidson v. Fraser [Colo.] 84 P. 695. Original complaint held to set up cause of action for quieting title so that amended complaint was not objectionable. Knight v. Boring [Colo.] 87 P. 1078. Amended complaint held not to shift burden of proof, though it may have changed order of proof. Id. Where defendant's answer showed that he relied solely on tax title, held that he could not complain even though original complaint was one to remove cloud caused by his tax deed and amended complaint was complaint to quiet title. Id. Where original declaration contained count in trover for conversion of horses and counts in case for damages for their detention, additional count claiming damages for negligence in care and custody of horses, injury complained of being same wrong. Beasley v. Baltimore & P. R. Co., 27 App. D. C. 595. Amendment to complaint in action for personal injuries resulting from being struck by pole while riding on street car held germane and material, so that its disallowance was error. Salmon v. City Elec. R. Co., 124 Ga. 1056, 53 S. E. 575. Amendment held merely to remove ambiguity as to what was the cause of action originally alleged. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Georgia R. & Elec. Co., 125 Ga. 798, 54 S. E. 753. Amendment amplifying allegations of negligence in paragraph of petition held germane to such paragraph and improperly disallowed. Blackwell v. Ramsey-Brisben Stone Co., 126 Ga. 812, 55 S. E. 968. Where defendant pleads discharge in bankruptcy in action on debt, plaintiff may amend by alleging new promise made after the adjudication in bankruptcy and before suit was brought. Shumate v. Ryan [Ga.] 56 S. E. 103. Where original petition sought to hold defendant liable for debts of bank as a stockholder, amendment merely identifying him as a subscribing stockholder, and hence as belonging to class who were liable under individual liability clause of its charter, which was foundation of cause of action. Reid v. Jones [Ga.] 56 S. E. 128. See, also, Reid v. Hearn [Ga.] 56 S. E. 129. Where amount due landlord is measured by value of specifics in which rent is payable, he may, after distress warrant has been converted into mesne process by filing of counter affidavit, amend pleadings by alleging that value of specifics was sum other and larger than that originally named in affidavit upon which warrant was based. Cornwell v. Leverette [Ga.] 56 S. E. 300. Where petition in action against carrier for damages resulting from delay in shipment alleged that defendant was last of connecting carriers, but not that delay occurred upon defendant's line, or that goods were received in good order, amendment supplying latter allegations. Southern R. Co. v. Gardner [Ga.] 56 S. E. 454. In action for death due to negligence, negligence charged in original count and that charged in additional count held same, though mode and manner in which it caused death were somewhat differently stated, and hence demurrer to plea of limitations to additional count was properly sustained. South Chicago City R. Co. v. Kinnare, 216 Ill. 451, 75 N. E. 179. Amendment at close of evidence in action for death by wrongful act giving Christian names of three of next of kin instead of referring to them as "Mrs." followed by their husbands' names, and giving correct Christian name of another erroneously stated in original declaration. Grace & Hyde Co. v. Strong, 224 Ill. 630, 79 N. E. 967. In action for injuries due to defective sidewalk amendment alleging that plaintiff stepped upon and broke through broken and decayed plank instead of that she tripped and stumbled upon and against it, wrong being same in both cases and only mode or manner in which it resulted in injury being stated differently. City of Evanston v. Richards, 224 Ill. 444, 79 N. E. 673. In suit to foreclose mechanic's lien merely changing date at which claim for lien was alleged to have been filed from Oct. 7 to July 19, of same year. Treloar v. Hamilton, 225 Ill. 102, 80 N. E. 75. In action for negligence amendment to declaration setting out in further detail result of injuries. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Likes, 124 Ill. App. 459, afd. 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136. Where praecipe and summons stated truly names of real defendants, amendment of declaration to correspond. Wabash R. Co. v. Barrett, 117 Ill. App. 315. Where original declaration alleged that plaintiff became passenger of defendant at its station in Chicago, additional count alleging that injuries were inflicted while she was in and about one of defendant's stations for purpose of becoming a passenger. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Young, 118 Ill. App. 226. Allowing plaintiff to amend so as to change cause of action from one to recover for labor to one for money had and received held authorized by statute and proper. De Moss v. Thomas, 116 Ill. App. 467. Amended declaration differing from original only in alleging that plaintiff's intestate was exercising due care at time of accident. Madl v. Chicago City R. Co., 121 Ill. App. 602. Amended bill in suit to foreclose mechanic's lien, though allegations as to contract under which work was done differed in few minor particulars. Eisendrath v. Gebhardt, 124 Ill. App. 325. More specific statement of facts proposed to be proved in support of charge of negligence originally made. Gordon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 129 Iowa, 47, 106 N. W. 177. Where original petition alleged that defendant G. received from defendant M stock of goods in satisfaction of claim against him, and on further consideration that it would pay his outstanding indebtedness and that it had failed to pay plaintiff's claim, amendment alleging that agreement was that G. should either pay M.'s creditors in full or should pay them their pro rata share of property received by it, and that it had paid all other creditors at certain rate which was an equitable pro rata share of amount received by it. Williams Shoe Co. v. Gotzian & Co., 130 Iowa, 710, 107 N. W. 807. In any event its allowance was not prejudicial where defendant introduced evidence as to entire transaction, and amendment was for purpose of conforming pleadings to proof. Id. Where complaint in action by vendee of land to recover advance payments alleged previous rescission by vendee for fraud amendment alleging previous rescission by defendant and seeking to recover payments by reason thereof. Pedley v. Ffeeman [Iowa] 109 N. W. 890. In statutory proceeding by citizen denying statement of consent to issuing of liquor licenses, amendment alleging citizenship of plaintiff which was not alleged in original denial. Dye v. Augur [Iowa] 110 N. W. 323. Amendment striking from title and body of petition words describing plaintiff as a corporation, when made after running of limitations, related back to filing of original petition. American Bonding Co. v. Dickey [Kan.] 88 P. 66. Where original petition sought to subject homestead lot to judgment against decedent, amended petition merely correcting mistaken description of such lot. No new summons necessary. Moore's Guardian v. Robinson, Norton & Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 43, 91 S. W. 659. Where petition in action by vendee of land to recover damages for destruction of building thereon by fire through the negligence of the vendor alleged lease of property by vendee to vendor, amendment correcting such allegation which was stated to have been made erroneously and setting out contract to convey under which vendee was entitled to possession and alleging that covenant for possession was erroneously omitted from deed. Kincheloe v. Smith, 28 Ky. L. R. 1329, 91 S. W. 1145. Both original and amended petitions held based on negligence of lessor in failing to keep cistern on leased premises in reasonably safe condition, so that amendment, merely setting out more specifically the facts relied on to show such negligence, did not set up new cause of action. Mills' Adm'r v. Cavanaugh, 29 Ky. L. R. 685, 94 S. W. 651. Amended petition in action against carrier for ejecting plaintiff from train held to merely set out more fully cause of action attempted to be set up in original, so that motion to strike it was properly overruled. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fowler, 29 Ky. L. R. 905, 96 S. W. 568. Amendment to petition in action on fire insurance policy alleging waiver of forfeiture for nonpayment of premium note. Home Ins. Co. v. Ballew, 29 Ky. L. R. 1059, 96 S. W. 878. In action against railroad for damages for killing plaintiff's minor son, amendment correcting deceased's Christian name, which was wrongly stated in original petition, deceased having been otherwise sufficiently identified in original. Walker v. Wabash R. Co., 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83. Where petition alleged that delay in transportation of livestock was due to defendant's negligence, amendment alleging that it was due to negligence of connecting carrier. Ingwersen v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 139, 92 S. W. 357. Amendment substituting corporation as plaintiff instead of owners of all its corporate stock should have been allowed. Hackett v. Van Frank, 119 Mo. App. 648, 96 S. W. 247. In action against railroad company for killing stock, amendment charging defendant with negligence in failing to keep gate closed held intended to assert such failure as a result of defective condition of gate and adjoining fence and not as a wrong done in failing to keep a lawful gate closed, and hence did not state a different cause of action from that alleged in original petition, viz., a failure to maintain a lawful fence. Perry v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 14. In action to rescind contract for sale of land and to recover part of purchase price paid, amendment to cross petition seeking to recover balance due on contract, identity of cause being clearly preserved and relief asked substantially the same. Jordan v. Jackson [Neb.] 106 N. W. 999. In action to recover damages resulting from fire alleged to have been caused by defendant's carelessness, where petition in county court and original petition in district court on appeal alleged that fire occurred on or about Sept. 22, 1902, amendment alleging that it occurred on or about Oct. 21, 1902, damages alleged being same and being caused by only one fire. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Murphy [Neb.] 107 N. W. 757. Where basis of both petitions was written contract, copies of which were attached thereto and incorporated therein additional allegation of petition filed in district court that plaintiff's name appearing at top of page of contract was placed there by him and intended as signature. Myers v. Moore [Neb.] 110 N. W. 989. In partition amendment of complaint which simply supplied an omission therein, to show how the parties received the interests it was claimed they had. Perkins v. Storrs, 114 App. Div. 322, 99 N. Y. S. 849. Where action on contract for benefit of third person was brought in name of one of the parties thereto, held proper to allow complaint to be amended so as to indicate that action was for use of such third person. Dilcher v. Nellany, 102 N. Y. S. 264. Correcting mistake as to year for which crop is claimed or was taken pertains only to one of the elements of cause of action for conversion, and complaint may be amended in that particular. More v. Burger [N. D.] 107 N. W. 200. Where in both amended and original petition object sought is recovery of damages for same personal injuries, variation being only as to precise manner in which they were inflicted. John Kauffman Brewing Co. v. Betz, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 64. Where material furnished and work performed and amount claimed were same, amendment seeking to recover on quantum meruit instead of on contract. Limerick v. Lee [Okl.] 87 P. 859. In action for wrongful death against several defendants jointly, amendment to complaint changing allegation that deceased was employed by defendants jointly to averment of his employment by one of them alone, allegation of employment being merely to show that he was rightfully at place where he was killed. Strauhal v. Asiatic S. S. Co. [Or.] 85 P. 230. In action for damages for overflowing land, amendment to statement of claim held merely a restatement of grounds upon which plaintiff sought to recover, and hence permissible. Taylor v. Canton Tp., 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 305. Amendment increasing demand for damages. Pickett v. Southern R., 74 S. C. 236, 54 S. E. 375. In action against carrier for injuries to passenger, amendment to complaint held to merely state new facts or issues appertaining to that already alleged, and its allowance was proper under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 194. Id. Where complaint alleged that infant walking on track was killed by negligence of railroad company's employes, amendment alleging failure to use ordinary and reasonable care to stop train after discovery of infant's peril. Edwards v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [S. D.] 110 N. W. 832. In action for agreed price of services, amendment alleging reasonable value of services. Casady v. Casady [Utah] 88 P. 32. In action against railroad for injuries to stock during transportation, amendment changing allegations as to destination of stock from point at end of defendant's line to point beyond it. Fell v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Utah] 88 P. 1003. Defendant held not prejudiced, where court confined recovery to injuries occurring on its line. Id. Original petition held to set up express contract, so that amendment was not a departure. Ragley v. Godley [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 153, 90 S. W. 66. In action for rent commenced in justice's court, held that on appeal to county court plaintiff should have been allowed to amend so as to demand recovery of rent which had accrued since commencing suit. Blackwell v. Speer [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 511, 98 S. W. 903. Correction of mistake in allegation of petition as to number of pounds of oats sold, the total amount charged therefor not being changed. Borden v. Le Tulle Mercantile Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 128. Where both original and amended petition sought to recover same property upon ground of title and conversion, though latter was much more elaborate. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Glover [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 592. In action to cancel deed where original complaint alleged that it was executed because parties believed it was necessary to enable grantee to look after property and sell it at advanced price, amended complaint alleging that it was procured through fraud. Hadevis v. Nutting [Wash.] 86 P. 197. Where complaint sets forth all the facts warranting equitable relief, prayer may be amended to demand other and further relief consistent with cause of action originally described in allegation of facts, within perior described in Rev. St. 1898, § 2685, and by authority of that section. North Side Loan & Bldg. Soc. v. Nakielski, 127 Wis. 539, 106 N. W. 1097. Original complaint in action on employe's bond alleging mistake, etc., held to state cause of action in equity for accounting, though prayer was for recovery of money only, so that amended complaint am-

Statutes in some states limit the number of amended pleadings which a party may file.[89]

Amendments which are insufficient in substance,[90] or which would result in a misjoinder of parties and causes of action,[91] or which set up unnecessary or immaterial matters,[92] or present questions previously decided,[93] or which do not differ substantially from allegations previously held insufficient,[94] are ordinarily not permissible, though it has been held that an amended pleading is entitled to consideration on its merits even if, in all essential particulars, the same as a previous one held bad on demurrer.[95] An order allowing an amendment setting up an additional plea is not conclusive as to the merits of the plea, where it expressly recites that the court does not undertake to pass upon the question whether or not it sets up a good defense.[96]

The filing of additional counts is not an abandonment of those originally filed,[97] but an amended pleading supersedes the original [98] and relates back to the time of plifying facts and praying reformation, accounting, and money judgment, did not state new cause of action. Id.

89. Rev. St. 1899, § 623, providing that if third petition, answer, or reply, be filed or adjudged insufficient on demurrer, or whole or some part thereof be stricken out, party filing it shall pay treble costs and no further one shall be filed, but judgment shall be rendered, construed, and held that where third amended petition stated cause of action after motion to strike parts of it had been sustained, he was entitled to go to trial on what was left, and case was improperly dismissed. Roth Tool Co. v. Champ Spring Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 827.

90. Amendment held properly rejected. Morrison-Trammell Brick Co. v. McWilliams [Ga.] 56 S. E. 306.

91. In action for enticing plaintiff's minor son from home, refusal to allow plaintiff to amend by adding an additional defendant and charging him with harboring the minor held proper. Soper v. Crutcher, 29 Ky. L. R. 1080, 96 S. W. 907.

92. In action of trover, where plaintiff sought to recover property itself and defendant's plea amounted to no more than the general issue, held error to allow amendments to petition offering to reimburse defendant for amount expended in repairing property, and amounting to offer to submit to conditional recovery, they being wholly unnecessary and irrelevant, and tending to help plaintiff before jury at defendant's expense, and also being in nature of offer to compromise. Malcolm v. Dobbs [Ga.] 56 S. E. 622.

93. In action under statute providing for protection of labels of trades unions, amendment of complaint held properly disallowed on ground that if facts stated therein were found true they would present no different question from that already decided on previous appeal. Lawlor v. Merritt [Conn.] 65 A. 295.

94. Denial of amendment is harmless, where it is but a repetition of what was in original complaint. Huggins v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 856. In action for negligence amendment held not a repetition or substitution of the original complaint, and its denial was error. Id. Refusal to permit filing of amended petition held proper, where it only set forth in more elaborate form matters of evidence pleaded in paragraph stricken from original. Torian v. Terrell, 29 Ky. L. R. 306, 93 S. W. 10. Amended bill filed after demurrer had been sustained to original held properly stricken as not avoiding defects for which demurrer had been sustained to original, purpose of bill being to set aside decree under which lands were sold for taxes, and it not being one for leave to file bill of review, or to open up decree for correction of errors, and complainant not bringing herself within statute relating to setting aside of tax sales and want of jurisdiction not being alleged. Carpenter v. Auditor General, 144 Mich. 251, 13 Det. Leg. N. 160, 107 N. W. 878. If, after leave is taken to file amended petition, another petition containing no new allegations of fact, and substantially same as former one, is filed, it is proper practice to strike it from files. Loghey v. Fillmore County [Neb.] 106 N. W. 170.

95. Motion to strike held improperly sustained where it stated cause of action. Hays v. Peavey [Wash.] 86 P. 170.

96. Order allowing plea of res adjudicata to be filed as part of defendant's pleading. Gainesville & Dahlonega Elec. R. Co. v. Austin [Ga.] 56 S. E. 254. So long as case was in limine and there was no estoppel, court had power of its own motion to order plea stricken as legally insufficient in matter of substance, or to order jury to disregard defense thereby sought to be interposed. Id. Where plea was without merit and plaintiff was not estopped to call its legal sufficiency in question, held that defendant could not complain that court ignored it in its instructions and thereby deprived him of that defense. Id.

97. Merker v. Belleville Distillery Co., 122 Ill. App. 326.

98. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 484, 91 S. W. 312. Demurrers to original pleas cannot be considered where it does not appear that they were afterwards interposed to the pleas as amended. Harrison v. Alabama Midland R. Co., 144 Ala. 246, 40 So. 394. Defendant held not entitled to complain of the overruling of a demurrer to the original complaint, where no demurrer was interposed to amended complaint, and demurrer to original was not refiled after amendment. Syson Timber Co. v. Dickens [Ala.] 40 So. 753.

filing the latter,[99] except in so far as it sets up new and distinct causes of action,[1] or brings in new parties.[2]

As a general rule after defendants have appeared and filed and served answers, no order amending the summons or complaint can be granted except on notice to them.[3] In some states a copy of an amended pleading must be served on the opposite party if it in any way changes or adds to the traversable allegations or aids the cause of acton or defense.[4] Amendments by leave of court must be filed within the time specified in the order granting such leave.[5]

Order sustaining the demurrer held to refer to amended one, and judgment dismissing action on failure to amend was not objectionable on ground that amended demurrer had not been disposed of. Estudillo v. Security Loan & Trust Co. [Cal.] 87 P. 19. After petition was amended by striking therefrom one of two defendants named therein, held that demurrer for misjoinder of parties defendant presented no question for consideration. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Randolph, 126 Ga. 238, 55 S. E. 47. Question of departure in reply to be determined by reference to amended petition only. Walker v. Wabash R. Co., 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83. Answer to unverified amended complaint need not be verified though original complaint was verified. Brooks Bros. v. Tiffany, 102 N. Y. S. 626. In action on policy of fire insurance, amended petition which fails to allege any consideration for contract is demurrable, though original petition supplied omission. Kehm v. Insurance Co., 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 486. Where second amended declaration did not refer to original and first amended ones to which demurrers had been sustained, and they were not made a part of it but it was complete in itself, held that upon demurrer its sufficiency was to be determined by its own averments. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Sutherland, 105 Va. 545, 54, S. E. 465.

99. As respects limitations, where it does not set up new cause of action. Curry v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 447; Gordon v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. 129 Iowa, 747, 106 N. W. 177; Walker v. Wabash R. Co., 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83. Amendment merely curtailing superfluous description of realty in declaration held to make no change requiring any new pleading on part of defendant, or to which plea on file was not as fully an answer as it was to original declaration so that it was not error to proceed to ex parte trial without order of specific notice to defendant of such amendment or a rule on her to plead further. Race v. Isaacson, 124 Ill. App. 196. Where amendment is allowed after cause is properly on trial calendar and has been set for trial on day certain, no new notice of trial or note of issue is necessary. Kerr v. Grand Forks [N. D.] 107 N. W. 197. Where an amended declaration is filed after an appearance by defendant, new process is not necessary. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Sutherland, 105 Va. 545, 54 S. E. 465.

1. If amendment introduces new cause of actlon, it is regarded as new suit commenced when amendment is made and limitations may be pleaded accordingly. Heffron v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 77 N. E. 262, afg. 119 Ill. App. 566. Failure of defendant to object and except to filing of amended declaration is not waiver of right to plead limitations, nor is order of court allowing amended declaration to be filed on adjudication that causes of action set up in original and amended declarations are same. Id. Where original declaration stated no cause of action and additional counts filed after running of limitations stated good cause of action held that it necessarily followed that latter stated "another and different cause of action" from that originally stated, and demurrer to pleas of limitation were properly overruled. McAndrews v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 222 Ill. 232, 78 N. E. 603, afg. 124 Ill. App. 166. Averments of pleas of limitations that additional counts state another and different cause of action held equivalent to statement that they contained a new and different cause of action. Id. Defendant is not required to take notice of a new substantive cause of action set up by amendment until a rule to plead thereto has been laid upon him. Gilbert v. American Trust & Sav. Bank, 118 Ill. App. 678. Setting aside default judgment and permitting plaintiff to file amended declaration setting up new and distinct substantive causes of action and entering new default judgment thereon, without notice to defendant or ruling him to plead, held error. Id. Wherever there is a cause of action set up in an amended bill wholly distinct from that set up in original and bar of statute of limitations has become complete in interim between filing of the two, no recovery can be had on new cause set up in the amended bill. Cox v. American Freehold & Land Mortg. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 739.

2. Amendment of summons and complaint so as to charge defendant individually instead of in his capacity as trustee held not to amount to the bringing in of a new party so as to entitle defendant to plead limitations. Boyd v. United States Mortg. & Trust Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 999, afg. 110 App. Div. 866, 95 N. Y. S. 1115.

3. Luckey v. Mockridge, 112 App. Div. 199, 98 N. Y. S. 335. Order which is irregular because made ex parte and because copy of amended pleading was not attached, cannot be affirmed and confirmed nunc pro tunc on motion. Id.

4. Order directing complaint to be amended "by suggestion upon the record" held erroneous. Abrahams v. Finkelstein, 49 Misc. 448, 97 N. Y. S. 987. Under B. & C. Comp. § 100, held error to enter judgment against a defendant on an amended complaint not served on him. Nodine v. Richmond [Or.] 87 P. 775. Providing in order allowing amendment of complaint that it should stand as said amendment, and that copy thereof should be served on defendant, instead of requiring service of copy of amended complaint, held not error. McDaniel v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 543.

5. Court held not to have abused discretion in setting aside default of plaintiff for

On appeal from a judgment dismissing a complaint, plaintiff is not aided by a request to amend made after the granting of the motion to dismiss,[6] nor is his right to take a nonsuit affected by the fact that defendant thereafter asks to amend so as to demand affirmative relief.[7] An amendment interlined in the petition after judgment cannot be looked to to supply deficiencies in the pleadings as they stood when the judgment was rendered.[8]

The party offering an amendment must abide by a ruling of the court refusing to allow it, his remedy being by exception to such ruling.[9]

§ 8. Supplemental pleadings.[10]—The codes generally provide that, upon the application of either party, the court may permit him to file a supplemental complaint, answer or reply alleging material facts which have occurred since the filing of his former pleading, or of which he was ignorant at that time.[11] A plaintiff has failure to file amended complaint after demurrer sustained within time specified, and granting leave to file amended complaint. Barling v. Weeks [Cal. App.] 88 P. 502. Where court passed order sustaining special demurrer to plea and allowing defendants additional time to file amendment thereto, and subsequently still further extended such time by verbal orders, held that it was not error at subsequent term to allow order to be taken nunc pro tunc, giving additional time allowed in such verbal orders over plaintiff's objection that defendants had had sufficient time and that it should not be extended. Lovelace v. Browne, 126 Ga. 802, 55 S. E. 1041. Subsequent order had effect of preventing judgment from becoming conclusive as against defendants until after expiration of time within which they were to amend under its terms. Id. Where defendant's failure to serve amended answer within the time specified in order granting leave to amend on striking out parts of original answer was excusable, held that plaintiff was properly required to accept answer thereafter, though defendant had failed to pay certain motion costs imposed on him in the mean time. Code Civ. Proc. § 723, providing for stay of proceedings on failure to pay motion costs not operating to deprive defendant of his right to present his defenses or to make a trial amendment for that purpose. Tracy v. Lichtenstadter, 113 App. Div. 754, 99 N. Y. S. 331.

6. Sutherland v. Ammann, 112 App. Div. 332, 98 N. Y. S. 574.

7. Right to nonsuit under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1301, is to be determined by fact that at time he asks for same there is no pleading of defendant asking for affirmative relief. Walker & Sons v. Hernandez [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 456, 92 S. W. 1067.

8. Amendment alleging execution of note by defendant individually instead of by a firm of which he was a member. King v. Monitor Drill Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 315, 92 S. W. 1046.

9. Cannot introduce evidence in support of its allegations. Cornwell v. Leverette [Ga.] 56 S. E. 300.

10. See 6 C. L. 1046.

11. In action to recover damages for injuries to land due to excavation of adjoining land, allowing filing of supplemental complaint alleging continuation of alleged wrongful acts of defendant after the filing of the complaint held not error. Schmoe v. Cotton [Ind.] 79 N. E. 184. Material facts occuring after the service of the complaint, or of which plaintiff was ignorant when it was served, may only be set up by supplemental complaint and not by amendment, and other facts existing before commencement of action can only be set up by amendment. Horowitz v. Goodman, 112 App. Div. 13, 98 N. Y. S. 53. Cannot in one complaint termed an "amended and supplemental complaint" set up facts occurring before and after the commencement of the action, and attempt thereby to sustain a new cause of action against the defendant. Id. Where original complaint was in equity and sought to enjoin defendant from making certain changes in premises leased by him to plaintiff, held that it was error to allow plaintiff to file a so called "amended and supplemental complaint," alleging facts set up in original complaint and other facts happening before commencement of action, and further alleging that subsequent to commencement of action defendant entered on premises and made such changes and seeking to recover damages therefor, there being no such pleading known to the Code, but plaintiff should have been allowed to file suuplemental complaint setting up acts act of defendant after service of former pleading. Id. In action for damages for personal injuries due to negligence where, after defendant answered and noticed case for trial and placed it on calendar, plaintiff settled his claim with defendant and executed release, held that, under Code Civ. Proc. § 544, release could only be interposed as a defense by leave of court and in form of supplemental answer, and not by amendment as of course. Galm v. Sullivan, 101 N. Y. S. 1060. Court has power to allow filing of supplemental complaint. Code Civ. Proc. subsecs. 87, 89. United States v. Rio Grande Dam & Irri. Co. [N. M.] 85 P. 393. Granting of leave is discretionary and court's action will be reviewed on appeal unless gross abuse is shown. Id. May allege such facts as will authorize granting of other and different relief than that sought by original complaint, provided entirely new and different cause of action, founded on facts wholly foreign to those alleged in original, is not set up. Id. Supplemental complaint in action to enjoin construction of irrigation system held not objectionable as setting up cause of action irreconcilable and inconsistent with amended complaint (Id.), or as setting up an entirely independent cause of action. Id. Code Civ. Proc. subsec. 104, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 11, no right by supplemental complaint to establish a cause of action where none existed when the suit was brought.[12]

§ 9. Motions upon the pleadings.[13]—Motions to strike out parts of a pleading are ordinarily addressed to the discretion of the trial court.[14] Improper pleadings may be stricken out by the court on its own motion.[15] In some states the court may strike out any pleading that is defective or irregular or so framed as to prejudice, embarrass, or delay a fair trial.[16] Misconduct of counsel is no ground for striking a pleading from the files where his client in no way instigates or participates in the same.[17] A motion to strike an amended pleading on the ground that it states the same facts as the original previously held bad on demurrer is equivalent to a demurrer to the amended pleading.[18] Striking an amended pleading on motion of one of several defendants, made in his own behalf, does not affect it as to defendants who have previously answered or been defaulted.[19]

Motions to strike must be made in apt time.[20] A motion to strike a count because there is no evidence to support it should be made when all the evidence on both sides is in.[21] A motion to quash auxiliary proceedings by sequestration may

p. 29, construed, and held that it was not error to permit filing of supplemental complaint during regular term without notice, it having been served on attorneys on same day it was filed. Id. Where filing of supplemental complaint was in no sense a new cause of action, issuing and serving of new process was not necessary. Id. New parties defendant may be brought in by supplemental petition when the necessity for bringing them in grows out of facts pleaded in the answer of the original defendant. Harris v. Cain [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 327, 91 S. W. 866. Under rule 5 of district and county courts authorizing plaintiff to allege new facts in a supplemental petition in reply to those alleged by defendant, where after reversal of judgment for plaintiff defendant filed plea in abatement alleging dissolution of plaintiff corporation, held that supplemental petition filed by another corporation alleging such dissolution, and that it had succeeded to all of plaintiff's rights, was sufficient to authorize it to prosecute suit. Standifer v. Bond Hardware Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 770, 94 S. W. 144.

12. South Shore Traction Co. v. Brookhaven, 102 N. Y. S. 1074. Where at time of commencing suit to enjoin municipal authorities from granting right to use streets to another street railway company, consents to plaintiff company had not become operative by reason of its failure to file required bond, and hence city had right to grant consent to another company held that plaintiff could not plead subsequent filing of bond by supplemental complaint. Id.

13. See 6 C. L. 1047.

14. Refusal to allow it is not an abuse of discretion. Reynolds v. Lawrence [Ala.] 40 So. 576. It is within the discretion of the court to strike out or retain allegations of evidential facts, which, in so far as they pertain to stating a cause of action are redundant and irrelevant. Sramek v. Sklenar [Kan.] 85 P. 566. In action for breach of contract of marriage refusal to strike out as redundant allegations as to matters proper to be considered in aggrevation of damages, though not in themselves constituting part of cause of action, held not error. Id. Motions to expunge and to require more particular statements of cause of action appeal to discretion, and will not be allowed to be used for purpose of so altering, emasculating, and revising complaint that it may thereafter be unable to withstand demurrer. Ginty v. New Haven Iron & Steel Co., 143 F. 699.

15. Mt. Pleasant Cemetery Co. v. Erie R. Co. [N. J. Law] 65 A. 192. Power is inherent in court, and fact that practice act indicates that they are to be stricken on notice does not limit power in this regard, unauthorized pleas in ejectment.

16. Prac. Act, § 110. In declaration by administration which avers granting of leters with their date and officer by whom granted, want to profert of letters held not a defect of sufficient importance to require court to strike out declaration, in view of Practice Act, § 127, declaring that no pleading shall be deemed insufficient for any defect which could formerly be objected to only by special demurrer. Sautter v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 994. Joinder of three counts, one containing common money counts in assumpsit, and other two being special counts setting up causes of action on life insurance policies, held not to tend to prejudice or embarrass fair trial. Id.

17. Striking of answer from files because counsel for defendant absented himself from court on day set for hearing demurrer thereto and took papers with him, and was also absent on day set for trial, held error. Chenault v. Norton [Ky.] 99 S. W. 899.

18. Order granting it is in effect the sustaining of a demurrer. Hays v. Peavey [Wash.] 86 P. 170.

19. Carpenter v. Auditor General, 144 Mich. 251, 13 Det. Leg. N. 160, 107 N. W. 878.

20. Where motion to strike reply as sham was not made until after cases had been appealed from county court to district court, and until day of trial, held that it might have been denied as not made in apt time. Florence Oil & Refining Co. v. Oil Well Supply Co. [Colo.] 87 P. 1077.

21. White v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 63 A. 931.

be filed and acted upon at any time before the case is disposed of.[22] Failure to serve a written notice of motion is waived where no objection on that ground is interposed.[23]

It is error to sustain a motion to strike portions of a pleading unless they are statements of matter foreign to the cause and raise no issue proper to be raised in the case, and unless the motion is made by a party prejudiced thereby.[24] Striking out parts of a pleading is harmless where evidence of the facts therein stated is admissible under the remaining allegations,[25] nor is it prejudicial to refuse to strike parts of a pleading containing matter which is proper evidence in the case and in no way imposes any additional burden on the opposite party.[26] On striking out parts of a pleading the court may order an amended pleading to be served on the opposite party.[27]

§ 10. Right to object, and mode of asserting defenses and objections; whether by demurrer, motion, etc. Want of jurisdiction[28] may be raised by demurrer if apparant on the face of the complaint,[29] but if not must be set up by answer.[30] After a motion to dismiss has been overruled, a plea to the jurisdiction on the same ground will not be entertained.[31] The fact that plaintiff sues in equity when his remedy is at law is no ground for dismissing the complaint, but the remedy is by a transfer to the proper court.[32]

Objections to process[33] or to the service thereof are to be taken by motion or plea in abatement, not by demurrer.[34]

Objection to parties[35] for want of capacity to sue may be raised by special demurrer if apparent on the face of the complaint,[36] or by plea or answer if not,[37]

22. Need not be filed or presented before pleas to the merits. Gravity Canal Co. v. Sisk [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 984, 95 S. W. 724.

23. Where written motion for judgment on pleadings made by defendant's counsel was denied, and, though present in court, he made no objection to oral motion by plaintiff for judgment on ground that no written notice of motion had been served, held that he waived service of such notice and could not, on appeal, predicate error on failure to give it. Hickey v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n [Colo.] 85 P. 838.

24. Portions of petition. Berry v. Geiser Mfg. Co., 15 Okl. 364, 85 P. 699.

25. State v. Richardson [Or.] 85 P. 225.

26. Though petition would have been sufficient without it. Monson v. Ray [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 475

27. Guess v. Southern R. Co., 73 S. C. 264, 53 S. E. 421.

28. See 6 C. L. 1048.

29. If want of jurisdiction of person of defendant appears on face of petition, must be taken advantage of by demurrer. Farmers' Bank v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 1, 95 S. W. 286. Objection that causes of action are not within jurisdiction should be raised by demurrer for want of jurisdiction. Smith v. Newberry, 140 N. C. 385, 53 S. E. 234.

30. Of person of defendant. Farmers' Bank v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 1, 95 S. W. 286. Where there is nothing on face of complaint in action in court of general to show whether or not court has jurisdiction, jurisdiction will be presumed, and question cannot be raised by demurrer but only by answer. Rudisell v. Jennings [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 959. In trustee process, trustee can only raise it by plea in abatement, or by motion to abate when essential facts of defect appear by inspection. Hibbard v. Newman, 101 Me. 410, 64 A. 720. Failure of complaint in action in municipal court to allege that defendant foreign corporation had an office in the city, which was essential to jurisdiction, a defect which could be taken advantage of by answer. Epstein v. Weisberger Co., 102 N. Y. S. 488. Want of jurisdiction because of nonresidence of the plaintiff corporation must be pleaded in answer, and is not raised by denial of allegation of residence. Ubart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1000.

31. Martin v. Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co., 220 Ill. 97, 77 N. E. 86.

32. Kirby's Dig. § 5991. Wood v. Stewart [Ark.] 98 S. W. 711.

33. See 6 C. L. 1048.

34. The privilege of a nonresident witness from service of mesne process by summons in a civil case cannot be pleaded in abatement. Wilkins v. Brock [Vt.] 64 A. 232.

35. See 6 C. L. 1048.

36. Objection to petition in which requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 24, authorizing unincorporated companies, etc., to sue by their usual names without pleading names of parties composing them, are not followed in alleging capacity to sue. Meyer v. Omaha Furniture & Carpet Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 767.

37. Must be set up by plea in abatement and not by motion to quash. Albert v. Freas, 103 Md. 583, 64 A. 282. Must be raised by answer where all that may be said is that capacity does not affirmatively appear, that not being ground for demurrer. Independent Trembowler Young Men's Benev.

but does not amount to a failure to state a cause of action,[38] and the same is ordinarily true of misjoinder or nonjoinder of parties.[39]

Misjoinder of causes of action [40] is ordinarily ground of demurrer,[41] but should be raised by answer if not apparent on the face of the complaint.[42] In some states a motion to strike [43] or to require an election is proper.[44] If the objection is to the manner of statement only, the remedy is ordinarily by motion to separate [45] or to require an election,[46] and not by demurrer [47] or motion in arrest of judgment,[48]

Ass'n v. Somach, 102 N. Y. S. 495. Want of due appointment of guardian ad litem must be taken advantage of by answer if not apparent on face of complaint. Rev. St. § 2649. Hughes v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. 126 Wis. 525, 106 N. W. 526.

38. Cannot be raised by demurrer for want of facts. Palmer v. Roods, 101 N. Y. S. 186. Objection that plaintiff, a foreign corporation, has not complied with statutes is not raised by demurrer for want of facts, Mills' Ann. Code, § 51, requiring grounds to be directly specified. Page Woven Wire Fence Co. v. Joslin [Colo.] 88 P. 142.

39. Misjoinder or nonjoinder of parties plaintiff is made ground for special demurrer by Code Civ. Proc. § 430. Conde v. Dreisam Gold Min. & Mill Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 825. Misjoinder is not ground for dismissal, but remedy is by demurrer. Mansf. Dig. §§ 5028, 5102, Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899 §§ 3233, 3307. Tishomingo Elec. Light & Power Co. v. Burton [Ind. T.] 98 S. W. 154. Objection of nonjoinder of necessary parties plaintiff should be raised by an exception of nonjoinder, and cannot be set up under an exception of no cause of action. Davis v. Arkansas Southern R. Co., 117 La. 320, 41 So. 587. When clearly appears from petition that there is misjoinder of parties and actions, it is proper to point it out by special exception. Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Lewis [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 577. Misjoinder not apparent on face of complaint must be taken advantage of by answer. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 87 P. 434.

40. See 6 C. L. 1049.

41. Code Civ. Proc. § 488, subd. 7. People v. Koster, 50 Misc. 46, 97 N. Y. S. 829. Where complaint containing four separate causes of action was demurrable because all of them did not affect all the defendants, held that, under Code Civ. Proc. § 497, it was proper to require plaintiff to divide his action into four separate actions without giving him leave to amend. Meyers v. Lederer, 101 N. Y. S. 1088. Adverse decision on motion to compel plaintiff to separately state and number his two causes of action, based on ground that only one cause was stated held not a bar to subsequent demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action. O'Connor v. Virginia Passenger & Power Co., 184 N. Y. 46, 76 N. E. 1082. Remedy is by demurrer. Ennis v. Padgett [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 782. Should be raised by demurrer for misjoinder. Smith v. Newberry, 140 N. C. 385, 53 S. E. 234. Can only be raised by demurrer. Allwein v. Brown, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 331. Since it is made distinct and special ground for demurrer by Ball. Ann. Code & St. § 4907, objection is not raised by general demurrer. Ames v. Kinnear, 42 Wash. 80, 84 P. 629.

42. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 87 P. 434.

43. Motion to strike out cause improperly joined or to compel election made before filing answer held proper practice under Kirby's Dig. § 6081. Jett v. Maxfield [Ark.] 96 S. W. 143. Is not ground for dismissal, but remedy is by motion to strike. Mansf. Dig. §§ 5016, 5102, Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, §§ 3221, 3307. Tishomingo Elec. Light & Power Co. v. Burton [Ind. T.] 98 S. W. 154.

44. Kirby's Dig. § 6081. Jett v. Maxfield [Ark.] 96 S. W. 143. Not by motion to strike. High v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 88 P. 961.

45. That causes of action properly united were not separately stated is not ground for demurrer. Beckman v. Waters [Cal. App.] 86 P. 997. Where complaint states two causes of action, remedy is by motion to require them to be separately stated if they could be properly joined, and not by motion to strike. High v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 88 P. 961. Where complaint in action for divorce stated three causes of action, fact that they were all stated in one paragraph or count in form of single cause of action, in violation of rule requiring separate statement, held not to authorize court to ignore all but one and determine case on sufficiency of evidence as to that, but plaintiff should have been required by order to conform complaint to rules on penalty of dismissal. Page v. Page [Wash.] 86 P. 582. If good cause of action is stated demurrer will not reach duplicity, but remedy is by motion to separate. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Lawrence [Ind.] 79 N. E. 363. Remedy is by motion to strike out or to separate into paragraphs. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McClelland [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 672.

46. Objection that two grounds of negligence alleged in one count of petition are repugnant can only be reached by demurrer to petition or motion to elect, and not by demurrer to evidence. McQuade v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 552. Remedy for improper joinder of causes of action in same count is by motion to require election. Clancy v. St. Louis Transit Co., 192 Mo. 615, 91 S. W. 509; Ennis v. Padgett [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 782. Not by demurrer. Zeideman v. Molasky, 118 Mo. App. 106, 94 S. W. 754.

47. Southern R. Co. v. Blanford's Adm'x, 105 Va. 373, 54 S. E. 1. Joinder of three claims of set-off in one paragraph of answer not ground for demurrer. Schnell v. Schnell [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 432. Under Virginia practice duplicity cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer, special demurrer having been abolished by Code 1887, § 3272. J. W. Bishop Co. v. Shelhorse [C. C. A.] 141 F. 643.

48. If original petition and amendment constituted but one count and allege two inconsistent causes of action or contracts, held that, if either was made out by evidence, motion in arrest of judgment for duplicity was unavailing. Code, §§ 3563, 3758. Robbins v. Bosserman Bros. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 587.

though a general [49] or special demurrer [50] is proper in some states. Where legal and equitable causes of action are improperly joined, a court of equity before which the case is pending may give plaintiff the option of filing a declaration on the law side, or having the legal cause of action dismissed.[51]

Irrelevant [52] and redundant or immaterial matter [53] is reached by motion to strike.

Formal defects [54] can ordinarily be reached only by motion to require their correction,[55] or to strike,[56] and are not ground for demurrer [57] except where special demurrers are authorized.[58]

49. Duplicity may be taken advantage of by general demurrer. Milske v. Steiner Mantel Co., 102 Md. 235, 63 A. 471.

50. Objection that count is bad for duplicity because containing two separate and distinct causes of action, one for negligence of defendant and other for that of its servants, being one to form of declaration, can only be availed of by special demurrer and not by general demurrer. Southern R. Co. v. Simmons, 105 Va. 651, 55 S. E. 459.

51. Chapman v. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 201.

52. See 6 C. L. 1049. In action for injuries to minor servant held that allegation in plea that defendant would not have placed him on duty except for his assurance that he understood the work, if improper, should have been reached by motion to strike rather than demurrer. King v. Woodstock Iron Co., 143 Ala. 632, 42 So. 27. Objection to allegations in complaint as to speculative damages held properly raised by motion to strike, though might also have been reached by objections to evidence or requested instructions. Byrne Mill Co. v. Robertson [Ala.] 42 So. 1008. In action by sheriff on indemnity bond in attachment, held that objection to item of expenditure set up in complaint and sought to be recovered could not be raised by demurrer, but remedy was by motion to strike. Whinnery v. Wiley [Colo.] 88 P. 171. Pleading may be purged of irrelevant and redundant matter only by motion to strike and not by demurrer. Code Civ. Proc. § 742. Plymouth Gold Min. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. [Mont.] 88 P. 565. Cannot contend on appeal that special demurrer directed to particular lines and paragraphs should be regarded as in effect a motion to strike, where did not submit it below on that theory. Id. Irrelevant, redundant, immaterial, or prolix allegations may be stricken on motion provided defect is plain. Ginty v. New Haven Iron & Steel Co., 143 F. 699. Invalid averment in count which contains other valid averments can be reached only by motion to strike. Latham v. Staten Island R. Co., 150 F. 235.

53. If when read as a whole petition contains enough to constitute a cause of action, demurrer to whole petition must be overruled without regard to redundant or immaterial matter therein. Gordon v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 129 Iowa, 747, 106 N. W. 177.

54. See 6 C. L. 1049.

55. Objection that widow has not filed title papers of her deceased husband with petition in action for allotment of dower, as required by Civ. Code Prac. § 499, is not ground for demurrer, but remedy is to have her ruled to file them if there be any accessible to her. Bartee v. Edmunds, 29 Ky. L. R. 872, 96 S. W. 535. Objection that defendant setting up counterclaim in action against him by committee of an incompetent had failed to comply with St. 1903, § 2154, requiring claims against estates of incompetents to be verified and proven, cannot be raised by demurrer, but remedy is by rule to show cause why counterclaim should not be dismissed. Sebree v. Johnson's Committee [Ky.] 99 S. W. 340. Failure to comply with statute as to docketing notice of motion for judgment under Code 1899, c. 121, § 6, not ground for quashing such notice. Anderson v. Prince [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 656.

56. Objection that demurrer lacks certificate of counsel that it is not interposed for delay. Ballantine v. Yung Wing, 146 F. 621.

57. Defendant having answered and gone to trial in county court, and appealed from judgment against him, held that objection on his part to going to trial in district court on graund that complaint failed to state cause of action was properly overruled, where there was not substantially complete failure to state cause of action, though subject to special demurrer or motion. Davie v. Lloyd [Colo.] 88 P. 446. Where the intendment of the declaration is clearly discernable from language used, mere clerical and grammatical errors do not render it obnoxious to general demurrer. Meyer v. Ross, 119 Ill. App. 485. Defects of form, of averment, or uncertainty cannot be considered on general demurrer, but remedy is by motion. Whitacre v. Nichols [Okl.] 87 P. 865. In action by state to collect franchise tax on deposits in savings bank, objections of ambiguity and inconsistency in plea that defendant was not a savings bank being defects of form and plea setting up a defense sufficient in substance, held that demurrer to plea was properly overruled under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, art. 75, §§ 6, 7, prohibiting special demurrers and providing that general demurrers shall not be allowed for mere informal statement of cause of action or defense. State v. German Sav. Bank, 103 Md. 196, 63 A. 481.

58. Defects which are of an amendable nature should be taken advantage of by demurrer, and cannot be reached by motion in arrest of judgment. Huger v. Cunningham, 126 Ga. 684, 56 S. E. 64. Where allegations and prayers of petition were sufficient for suit for damages for cutting timber, but there was not attached a sufficient abstract of title to comply with statute requiring attaching such abstracts in suits to enjoin cutting of timber in certain cases, held that defective parts might have been eliminated by special demurrer. James v. Saunders [Ga.] 56 S. E. 491. General demurrer does not reach matters of form must be special. Golderg v. Harney, 122 Ill. App. 106. Objec-

Uncertainty [59] is ground for a motion to make more definite and certain,[60] but not for objection to the introduction of any evidence [61] or for demurrers,[62] ex-tion that interpleading answer is not verified can only be raised by special demurrer or exception, and not by general demurrer. Nixon v. Malone [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 715, 95 S. W. 577.

59. See 6 C. L. 1049.

60. Nelson v. Cowling, 77 Ark. 351, 91 S. W. 773. If allegations of complaint were deemed insufficient for failure to show particular acts of particular agents constituting negligence of defendant, held that remedy was by motion to make more specific. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Doughty, 77 Ark. 1, 91 S. W. 768. Allegations of complaint in action for personal injuries in regard to duty to inspect cars held sufficient on appeal in absence of motion to make more definite and certain. Southern R. Co. v. Roach [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 201; Id. [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 606. In action by contractor to foreclose lien for street improvements, where it was uncertain from complaint whether action was based on bonds issued by city in anticipation of assessment for improvement, or on lien created by assessment of benefits against defendant's property, remedy was by motion to make more specific. Shirk v. Hupp [Ind.] 78 N. E. 242. Unless alternative averments are such as to vitiate complaint it will not be held bad on demurrer, remedy being as a rule, by motion to make more specific. Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co. v. Henderson [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 539. If account filed with petition in action on open account is not sufficiently specific, remedy is by motion to make more definite and certain under Civ. Code Prac. § 134. Snowden v. Snowden, 29 Ky L. R. 1112, 96 S. W. 922. In denial by reference to original folios of complaint is so indefinite and uncertain as to leave doubt as to allegations intended to be put in issue, remedy is by motion to make more definite and certain. Thompson v. Wittkop, 184 N. Y. 117, 76 N. E. 1081. In absence of motion to make more definite and certain, definiteness will not be regarded as essential to a good averment, for that will be deemed to be alleged which can by reasonable and fair intendment be implied from the allegation. Howe v. Hagan, 110 App. Div. 392, 97 N. Y. S. 86. In absence of motion to make more definite and certain, plaintiff held not entitled to claim that allegation of assignment of insurance policies precluded showing of any assignment other than an absolute one. Id. Where complaint stated facts according to their legal effect, and was vague and indefinite, held that remedy was by motion to make more definite and certain, or demand for bill of particulars, and not by demurrer. Fleck v. Friedman, 49 Misc. 220, 97 N. Y. S. 231. Where answer did not state date of execution and delivery of release relied on as a defense, remedy was by motion to make more definite and certain, and not by application for bill of particulars. Pigone v. Lauria, 100 N. Y. S. 976. Where complaint is not sufficiently specific, remedy is by motion to make more definite and certain. Town of Hadley v. Garner, 101 N. Y. S. 777. Remedy is by motion and not demurrer. Berry v. Geiser Mfg. Co., 15 Okl. 364, 85 P. 699. Objections that complaint in action by receiver did not allege that he was duly qualified and acting receiver when action was brought, that mere allegation that he was appointed and qualified was not sufficient, and that complaint fails to state in what case or court he was appointed, cannot be raised by demurrer, but remedy is by motion. Allen v. Baxter, 42 Wash. 434, 85 P. 26. If denial was indefinite or uncertain so as to raise doubt in plaintiff's mind as to what was meant thereby, held that his remedy was by motion under Pierce's Code, § 402, Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 4932. O'Brien v. Seattle Ice Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 399. Objections that amount of damages is not alleged, and that no facts are stated warranting recovery of more than nominal damages, should be raised by motion or demurrer, and not by motion for judgment on pleadings. Hubenthal v. Spokane & I. R. Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 955. When pleadings do not fully disclose ground of claim, fuller and more particular statements may be required on motion. Ginty v. New Haven Iron & Steel Co., 143 F. 699.

61. Where petition stated cause of action, held that objection that it alleged both injuries for which defendant was liable and injuries for which it was not liable in such a manner that it could not be determined what part of the damages claimed was referable to each could not be raised by objection to introduction of any evidence, the remedy being by motion to strike or special demurrer. Fisher v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 562, 95 S. W. 917. Objection to introduction of any evidence under petition is good only when is total failure to allege some matter essential to relief sought, and is not good when allegations are simply incomplete, indefinite, or statements of conclusions of law. First Nat. Bank v. Cochran [Okl.] 87 P. 855.

62. Dockstader v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n [Iowa] 109 N. W. 906. If a good cause of action is stated demurrer will not reach uncertainty, inconsistency, or repugnancy, but remedy is by motion to make more definite and certain. Complaint in action for death by wrongful act held sufficient as against demurrer. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Lawrence [Ind.] 79 N. E. 363. If pleading is not sufficiently specific remedy is by motion, and defect cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Slaughter [Ind.] 79 N. E. 186. But if it is so uncertain as not to state intelligibly a substantial good cause of action or defense, it is subject to demurrer as not stating a cause of action or defense. Complaint in action for negligent killing held good as against demurrer. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Lawrence [Ind.] 79 N. E. 363. Cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer nor by objection to introduction of evidence. Burnette v. Elliott, 72 Kan. 624, 84 P. 374. Allegation in action on contract that order for book had been accepted held sufficient on general demurrer, since if defendant desired to know what action had been taken to indicate acceptance, should have assailed petition by motion. Harris v. Paine [Neb.] 107 N. W. 748. Uncertainty cannot be considered on general demurrer, but remedy is by motion.

cept where special demurrers are authorized.[63] A motion or demand for a bill of particulars is the proper course to obtain a more specific statement of plaintiff's claim.[64]

Inconsistency or departures in pleading are ordinarily reached by motion.[65]

Failure to state a cause of action[66] may be reached by demurrer,[67] objection to the introduction of evidence,[68] motion to dismiss the complaint,[69] or for nonsuit,[70] or motion for a peremptory instruction,[71] but not by motion to strike the pleading from the files.[72]

Whitacre v. Nichols [Okl.] 87 P. 865. That defendant cannot on facts pleaded recover the damages which he demands in his counterclaim, or that the rule of damages is not such as he asserts it to be, is not good ground for demurrer if facts stated show a good cause of action. Isbell-Porter Co. v. Heineman, 113 App. Div. 79, 98 N. Y. S. 1018. Statement of claim held not demurrable though as to some items defendant might be entitled to ask for more precise details by demand for more specific statement or bill of particulars. De Galindez v. Ennis, 149 F. 911.

63. Can only be taken advantage of by demurrer. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Sanders [Ala.] 40 So. 402. Can only be taken by special and not by general demurrer. Hunt v. Jones [Cal.] 86 P. 686. Uncertainties appearing on face of pleadings must be raised by special demurrer rather than by general one. Gutshall v. Kornaley [Colo.] 88 P. 158. Objection that denials in answer in mandamus are too general should be taken by special demurrer. People v. Chicago Board of Trade, 224 Ill. 370, 79 N. E. 611. Vagueness and uncertainty must be reached by exceptions on that ground and do not warrant dismissal on an exception of no cause of action. Davis v. Arkansas Southern R. Co., 117 La. 320, 41 So. 587. Allegations held sufficient in absence of special demurrer on ground of indefiniteness and uncertainty. Murray v. Butte [Mont.] 88 P. 789. Objection that allegations of amendment attempting to set up waiver are not sufficiently specific should be taken by exceptions to pleading, and not by objection to evidence. Colorado Canal Co. v. McFarland [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 848, 94 S. W. 400.

64. Where complaint was sufficiently definite and certain to enable defendants to answer safely and intelligently, held that their remedy to obtain a more particular statement of plaintiff's claim, with a view of protecting themselves against surprise and limiting the issue at the trial, was by application for bill of particulars after issue joined, and not by motion to make more definite and certain. Mullen v. Hall, 99 N. Y. S. 841. Complaint in action for services performed in different capacities held not demurrable because different items were not more specifically stated, but if defendant desired more detailed statement his remedy was by a demand for bill of particulars as provided by Rev. St. 1898, § 2988. Nelson v. Henrichsen [Utah] 87 P. 267.

65. Demurrer will not raise question. Walters v. Chance [Kan.] 85 P. 779. Objection that amended counts constitute a departure from cause of action originally stated cannot be raised by demurrer. Curry v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 447.

66. See 6 C. L. 1050.

67. Objection that declaration in action for slander does not set out cause of action by reason of failure to state sufficient circumstances to show sense in which words were spoken can be taken advantage of only by demurrer. Ward v. Merriam [Mass.] 78 N. E. 745.

68. May be raised by objection to introduction of any evidence and motion for judgment on pleadings, where objection goes to the substance of the pleading rather than the form and the defect is not curable by amendment. Hubenthal v. Spokane, etc., R. Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 955. Is only when petition fails to state cause of action that such objection can be successfully interposed. Fisher v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 562, 95 S. W. 917. Where it appears from petition that contract sought to be specifically enforced is not one which should be so enforced and that complainant has adequate remedy at law, objection to introduction of evidence thereunder is properly sustained. Haffner v. Dobrinski [Okl.] 88 P. 1042.

69. Objection that complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute cause of action need not be presented by demurrer or answer, but, under Code Civ. Proc. § 499, may be raised by motion to dismiss complaint on that ground made at the trial. Kelly v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 186 N. Y. 16, 78 N. E. 584. Though Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, p. 1536, c. 580, § 145, subdv. 2), provides that where written complaint is served a written answer or demurrer must be filed, defendant may raise question of sufficiency of written complaint by motion to dismiss it for want of facts, which motion will be treated as a demurrer. Brown v. Reiter, 99 N. Y. S. 861. Though act does not expressly provide for dismissal of written complaint on ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute cause of action unless written demurrer has been interposed, power to so dismiss is inherent in the court. Rogers v. Fine, 49 Misc. 633, 97 N. Y. S. 1004.

70. Since, under Code Civ. Proc. § 499, objection is not waived by failure to raise question by demurrer or answer, it may be raised by motion for nonsuit after evidence has been taken at trial. Wood v. Ball, 100 N. Y. S. 119. Because of failure to allege that foreign corporation plaintiff had complied with statute relating to right of foreign corporations to do business in state. Id.

71. Is ground for an instruction to the jury to find for defendant. McPherson v. Hattich [Ariz.] 85 P. 731.

72. Proper mode of testing sufficiency of pleadings, when neither prolix, irrelevant, or frivolous, is by demurrer, and not by motion to strike. Owensboro Wagon Co. v.

Matters of defense[73] must ordinarily be raised by pleading[74] unless apparent on the face of the complaint.[75] Defenses not raised by answer or demurrer are deemed waived.[76]

Hall [Ala.] 43 So. 71. Objection to petition on ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute cause of action can only be raised by demurrer, or by objection to introduction of evidence at trial, and not by motion to strike it from files. First Nat. Bank v. Cochran [Okl.] 87 P. 855. Motion to strike is not proper method of testing sufficiency of pleading. Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. v. Troutman [Kan.] 84 P. 567. Motion to strike may be used to eliminate amended pleading which is mere repetition of one held defective on demurrer, but where amended petition, filed on leave, sets forth additional facts as well as fuller and more specific statement of facts in original, and is apparently a bona fide attempt to meet objections to original, and to state cause of action, motion to strike because of sameness will not lie. Id. Question as to whether pleading states cause of action or defense should be presented by demurrer or by motion at trial either at opening, or when evidence is offered, or at close of case, and not by motion to strike before trial, particularly where question arises as to items or measure of damages. Fox v. Chapman, 102 N. Y. S. 378. In action for damages for negligent killing of plaintiff's testator striking out allegations as to hospital and funeral expenses on motion before trial held error. Id.

73. See 6 C. L. 1051.

74. Improper claim of damages in complaint cannot be reached by demurrer. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Keyton [Ala.] 41 So. 918. Mere fact that declaration or a count thereof sets up elements that do not enter into measure of damages, or greater damages than case made entitles plaintiff to recover, does not make it demurrable, but such questions are properly raised by objections to evidence, or instructions, or may be ground for reforming declaration under Rev. St. 1892, § 1043, as calculated to embarrass a fair trial of the case. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Barlow [Fla.] 40 So. 491. Matters which may be pleaded in abatement are not ground for arresting a judgment authorized by the pleadings. Huger v. Cunningham, 126 Ga. 684, 56 S. E. 64. Objection that another suit is pending for same matter is in general taken by plea and not by motion. Van Houten v. Stevenson [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 1094. In action at law, defense of statute of limitations should be made by plea and not by demurrer. Curry v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 447. Defense of statute of limitations cannot be raised by demurrer, but must be pleaded. Jolly v. Miller [Ky.] 98 S. W. 326; Swinebroad v. Wood, 29 Ky. L. R. 1202, 97 S. W. 25. Plaintiff is not required to plead in complaint facts taking case out of statute of limitations either as part of his cause of action or in anticipation of setting up of statute as defense, but that defense must be set up by answer and cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer. Code Civ. Proc. § 413. Willis v. Wileman, 102 N. Y. S. 1004. Objection that court has no jurisdiction because limitations had run held to amount merely to an objection that defense of statute of limitations was disclosed by averments of the complaint, which could not be raised by demurrer though stated as jurisdictional question. Bergmann v. Leavitt, 113 App. Div. 899, 99 N. Y. S. 748. In action on contract, advantage of failure of consideration must be taken by answer. Harris v. Paine [Neb.] 107 N. W. 748. Failure to perform conditions precedent to right to sue on contract can only be taken advantage of by demurrer or special plea. Concordia Fire Ins. Co. v. Bowen, 121 Ill. App. 35. Failure to submit amount of loss to arbitration as required by fire insurance policy. Id.

75. See, also, § 5a, ante. Laches apparent on face of bill in equity may be taken advantage of by demurrer for want of facts. Wadleigh v. Phelps [Cal.] 87 P. 93. In suit to have deeds declared mortgages and to redeem, trial amendment alleging that one of the deeds was given to secure a different debt as well as further security for one originally alleged held in no way to detract from original claim that it was given to secure later debt. Id. Objection that action is prematurely brought can be reached by general demurrer only when declaration affirmatively shows that cause of action has not yet accrued. American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Seaverns, 121 Ill. App. 480. Question of contributory negligence may be determined on demurrer to complaint for want of facts. Mangan v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 50 Misc. 388, 100 N. Y. S. 539. Where petition shows on its face that contract sued on is void under statute of frauds, such defense may be interposed by general demurrer. Stovall v. Gardner [Tex. Civ. App.] 94 S. W. 217. In action to recover for services rendered as real estate broker, petition showing on its face that contract of agency was not in writing is subject to demurrer. Smith v. Aultz [Neb.] 110 N. W. 1015.

76. Defense of statute of limitations. Hewell v. Hogin [Cal. App.] 84 P. 1002; Cox v. American Freehold & Land Mortg. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 739. Unless specially pleaded. Connell v. Clifford [Colo.] 88 P. 850. Cannot be claimed on appeal that part of cause of action was barred by limitations where statute was not pleaded below. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Stites [Ark.] 95 S. W. 1004. Defendant held not entitled to raise question of effect of judgment sustaining demurrer to complaint as res judicata of plaintiff's cause of action where he did not present it in his answer to the amended complaint subsequently filed. Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 300, 55 S. E. 198. In action by town on contract, claims that vote of electors and resolution of town board were necessary preliminaries to bringing of suit held matter in abatement which was waived where it was not expressly pleaded. Town of Beloit v. Heineman, 128 Wis. 398, 107 N. W. 334. Defense of statute of frauds must be in some manner interposed in trial court or it is waived. International Harvester Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 653, 96 S. W. 93.

§ 11. Waiver of objections and cure of defects.[77]—Objections to pleadings must as a rule be made [78] and brought to hearing [79] at the earliest opportunity, and, while entire failure to state a cause of action may be availed of at any time,[80] other deficiencies are waived by pleading responsively,[81] failure to object by motion,[82] or

78. Objection that plea of statute of limitations was insufficient for failure to allege subdivision of statute referred to held waived by failure to urge it in trial court. Churchill v. Woodworth, 148 Cal. 669, 84 P. 155. Where plaintiff delivered bill of items to defendant several months before trial, latter could not object to its sufficiency for first time at trial by objection to introduction of evidence. Flynn v. Seale, 2 Cal. App. 665, 84 P. 263. Where in mandamus issues were made up as in chancery proceeding instead of adopting practice pointed out in statute, case will be so treated on appeal, though such course might have been ground for reversal if taken advantage of in apt time. City of Chicago v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 121 Ill. App. 197. Objection that supplemental answer was never notified to plaintiff held too late after judgment. Fluker v. De Grange, 117 La. 331, 41 So. 591. Under Rev. Codes 1899, § 5300, Rev. Codes 1905, § 6886, trivial defects should be disregarded where no objection is made before trial. Grammatical error in answer whereby denial of ownership was made in present tense. Ward v. Gradin [N. D.] 109 N. W. 57. Objection of misjoinder of parties and causes of action held waived where three terms of court intervened between filing of first answer and second amended answer in which such objection was first raised. Braun & Ferguson Co. v. Paulson [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 564, 95 S. W. 617.

79. Defect of petition in suit to cancel deed in failing to tender return of consideration held waived by filing answer and failure of defendants to have court act on demurrer on that ground filed after filing answer. May v. May, 29 Ky. L. R. 1033, 96 S. W. 840. Where motion to dismiss, made in circuit court on appeal from justice court, on ground that plaintiff had filed no paper of any kind on which to base cause of action, was never passed on, and defendant went to trial without calling court's attention thereto, held that he waived defects in plaintiff's statement. Warner v. Close, 120 Mo. App. 211, 96 S. W. 491. Failure to argue general demurrer held not a waiver of defense of statute of frauds where defendant's counsel were willing to argue demurrer if requested to do so by court, which request was not made. Stovall v. Gardner [Tex. Civ. App.] 94 S. W. 217. Where record does not show that demurrers and special exceptions to petition were called to attention of trial court and passed upon, will be deemed waived. Moore v. Woodson [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 116.

80. Arnold v. American Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 660, 84 P. 182. May be first raised on appeal. Dessart v. Bonynge [Ariz.] 85 P. 723. Under B. & C. Comp. § 72. Woolley v. Plaindealer Pub. Co., 47 Or. 619, 84 P. 473. May always be inquired into on appeal from judgment. Murray v. Butte [Mont.] 88 P. 789. Is not cured by decision and judgment, but question may be presented at any time during progress of case. Code Civ. Proc. § 685. On appeal. Thornton v. Kaufman [Mont.] 88 P. 796. Is not waived by failure to demur, and hence may be urged on appeal though demurrer on that ground is withdrawn. Santa Rosa Bank v. Paxton [Cal.] 86 P. 193. Where defendant withdrew his demurrer to complaint, for failure to state cause of action, and by his answer put in issue precise facts which he claimed were not well pleaded, and went to trial on merits, and virtually conceded correctness of decision against him by failure to preserve evidence in record by bill of exceptions or otherwise, held that he could not raise contention on appeal. Id. Objection to admission of any evidence on such ground may be taken at any time during trial, and is not waived by answer or failure to demur. Gordon v. Omaha [Neb.] 110 N. W. 313. Verdict does not cure defect where declaration omits to allege any substantial fact essential to right of action which is not implied in or inferable from findings of those which are alleged. McAndrews v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 222 Ill. 232, 78 N. E. 603, afg. 124 Ill. App. 166. In action for negligence omission to allege existence of duty on part of defendant to plaintiff not cured. Id. Failure of complaint, in action by servant for personal injuries, to allege breach of duty, or that person whose negligence was cause of injuries was not a fellow-servant, not cured. The Pullman Co. v. Woodfolk, 121 Ill. App. 321. Failure of complaint in action on fire insurance policies to allege that houses insured were occupied as dwelling houses, and furniture was in specified house, at time of fire, as required by policies in order to impose liability on defendant, held not cured by verdict, even in absence of obpection by demurrer or answer in lower court. Arnold v. American Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 660, 84 P. 182. Submission of questions of fact to jury by instructions offered by defendant held not a waiver of objection that declaration did not state cause of action raised by motion for peremptory instruction. The Pullman Co. v. Woodfolk, 121 Ill. App. 321.

81. Objection that amendment set up entirely separate and distinct cause of action which could not be joined with that stated in original complaint. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Hickey [Ark.] 99 S. W. 839. In view of caption and other allegations of complaint in action on contract, absence of positive allegation that defendants were partners held a mere irregularity which was waived by answering over, no demurrer having been interposed, and answer reciting that defendants made defense. Spears v. Pechstein [Colo.] 84 P. 979. Objection that suit is brought in firm name without naming partners waived by pleading general issue. West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Schillinger, 117 Ill. App. 525. Where partnership appeared and filed answer to cross petition without objection, held that they could not object for first time on appeal that Christian name of one of the partners was not given in such petition. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Ford [Ky.] 99 S. W. 260. Garnishee by re-demurrer or answer[83] going to trial on the merits,[84] the submission of the case

plying to merits of plaintiff's denial of his answer held to have waived all defects except those so fundamental in character that a verdict could not cure them. Kiernan v. Robertson, 116 Mo. App. 56, 92 S. W. 138. Where bill was not originally framed to include defendant by name, held defects of form were waived by appearance and joining issue by answer to merits. First Baptist Church v. Harper, 191 Mass. 196, 77 N. E. 778. Where allegations of negligence strongly stated by inference that defect and defendant's knowledge thereof both existed for time sufficient for defendant to have made place safe had it used ordinary care, held that defendant, by pleading to merits, waived right to take advantage of absence of direct averment to that effect. Dodge v. Manufacturers' Coal & Coke Co., 115 Mo. App. 501, 91 S. W. 1007. One who fails to test sufficiency of amendable complaint by demurrer, but answers on merits, cannot demand reversal on ground that general objection to introduction of evidence because complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute cause of action was overruled. Rev. Code Civ. Proc. 1903, § 136. Nerger v. Equitable Fire Ass'n [S. D.] 107 N. W. 531. Where court had jurisdiction by reason of diversity of citizenship and amount of plaintiff's personal claim, held that defendant could not, after plea in bar to statement, showing assignment, etc., object to nonjoinder of assignors of other claims on which plaintiff also sued, objection being to a mere matter of form curable by amendment. Seymour v. Du Bois, 145 F. 1003. Pleas in abatement held too late when filed along with other pleas going to the merits, and on same day that answer to bill was filed. Town of New Decatur v. Smith [Ala.] 41 So. 1028. Plea to the merits filed by defendant simultaneously with a plea to the jurisdiction over the person waives the latter plea irrespective of the order in which they are numbered. Putnam Lumber Co. v. Ellis-Young Co., 60 Fla. 251, 39 So. 193. Permitting matter to be proved under general issue without objection is implied waiver of special plea. Snellgrove v. Evans [Ala.] 40 So. 567.

82. Where complaint declared on guaranty as sealed instrument, but at close of trial plaintiff was permitted to add counts declaring on it as an unsealed instrument, held that defendants could not contend that plaintiff had lost any of its rights by election or ratification where they did not ask that he be required to elect on which counts he would rely but stated that they had no desire to go to jury under court's rulings and verdicts were thereupon returned against them, and plaintiff did not know of alleged alteration of instrument by placing seals thereon until after filing of answers setting it up. Tulane University v. O'Connor [Mass.] 78 N. E. 494.

83. Misjoinder or nonjoinder of parties plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430, 434. Conde v. Dreisam Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 825. Want of capacity to sue. Leonard v. American Steel & Wire Co. [Kan.] 84 P. 553. Want of jurisdiction of person af defendant. Farmers' Bank v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 1, 95 S. W. 286. Defect of parties plaintiff. Wilsons' Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 4293, 4295. Oklahoma Gas & Elec. Co. v. Lukert, 16 Okl. 397, 84 P. 1076. Objection that complaint is uncertain and ambiguous, unless taken advantage of by special demurrer. San Gabriel Valley Bank v. Lake View Town Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 727. Uncertainties appearing on face of pleadings being subject of special demurrer, where only demurrer was general one. Gutshall v. Kornaley [Colo.] 88 P. 158. Objection that court had no jurisdiction in equity of action to recover cost of bridge over stream forming boundary between two towns, when not raised by answer. Colby v. Mt. Morris, 100 N. Y. S. 362. Misjoinder of causes of action not apparent on face of complaint, unless taken advantage of by answer. Rev. St. 1899, § 3537. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 87 P. 434. Objection that answer was not made a counterclaim, and that its allegations were not sufficiently specific as to manner in which damage resulted from breach of warranty complained of, held waived when not raised by demurrer or motion before filing reply, and hence not available on appeal. Goodman v. Beard & Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 544, 93 S. W. 666. In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 96, providing that demurrer shall specify grounds of objection or it will be regarded solely as one for want of facts, objection that petition did not state a specific prayer for relief held waived where not specifically pointed out by demurrer or otherwise. Oklahoma Gas & Elec. Co. v. Lukert, 16 Okl. 397, 84 P. 1076. Right to object to sufficiency of petition because of defect of parties, by failure to specify that as ground of demurrer. Helm & Son v. Briley [Okl.] 87 P. 595. While averment that an act has not been duly performed is ordinarily but a legal conclusion, in absence of special demurrer or objection on that ground it will be held sufficient to authorize admission of evidence upon the issue. Pacific Pav. Co. v. Diggins [Cal. App.] 87 P. 415. If parties proceed to trial without such objection and introduce evidence on such issue, will not be permitted after decision thereon, to contend that it was not before court for decision, particularly where party making such averment supplements same with averment of probative facts on which he relies in support of averments that act was not duly performed. Id. Want of due appointment of guardian ad litem goes to his capacity to sue, and, under Rev. St. 1898, § 2649, 2653, when not apparent on face of complaint is waived unless objection is taken by answer. Hughes v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 126 Wis. 525, 106 N. W. 526. In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 389, requiring court to order bringing in of necessary parties, objection to nonjoinder of necessary parties is not waived because not raised by demurrer or answer. Mitau v. Roddan [Cal.] 84 P. 145.

84. Indefiniteness. Nelson v. Cowling, 77 Ark. 351, 91 S. W. 773. Action in name of state for violation of municipal ordinance relating to sale of intoxicants being civil action, objection that complaint failed to name parties to whom illegal sales were made, and that action was brought in name of people of state to use of municipality instead of in name of people of state. Creighton v. People [Colo.] 83 P. 1057. Failure of

complaint in action for negligence to allege that negligent act of defendant's agent was committed while acting within line of his duty or employment held matter to be reached by demurrer. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Sanders [Ala.] 40 So. 402. Where plaintiff, when amended answer was filed, made no motion to strike out that portion claimed by it to be new defense, but went to trial on issues thereby raised, held that it could not after judgment and on appeal object to allowance of amendment on ground that it set up new defense. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Hinz [Cal. App.] 88 P. 730. Where party appeared to cross complaint, filed demurrer and answer thereto, and afterwards went to trial without objection to propriety of cross complaint as a pleading in the action and in pursuance of stipulation to submit for decision a particular question arising out of its allegations, held that it was too late to object for first time on appeal that it was improperly filed and did not come within provisions of statute authorizing cross complaints. Riverside Heights Water Co. v. Riverside Trust Co., 148 Cal. 457, 83 P. 1003. Defect of complaint, in action by levying officer on receipt for attached property, in not stating time of demand as related to rendition of judgment in attachment action, held a defect of form and waived by failing to demur, denying allegation as made, and going to trial on merits. Dejon v. Street [Conn.] 65 A. 145. Overruling motions to strike separate divisions of amended answer and demurrers thereto cannot be assigned as error on appeal where plaintiff proceeded to trial on amended answer and did not subsequently present to court his objections to pleadings. Puritan Mfg. Co. v. The Emporium, 130 Iowa, 526, 107 N. W. 428. Where defendant answered and there was trial on merits, held immaterial that petition was not signed by attorney as provided by Civ. Code Prac. § 115 (Abernathy v. Meyerbridges Coffee & Spice Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 942), and that petition did not contain sufficient prayer for relief, and that prayer was at end of reply and not in petition. Civ. Code Prac. § 90 (Id.). Where defendant failed to demur and went to trial on issues raised by pleadings as they stood, could not on appeal raise point that certain counts of declaration in action for slander did not set out good cause of action by reason of failure to state sufficient circumstances to show sense in which words were spoken. Ward v. Merriam [Mass.] 78 N. E. 745. Where administrator elects to go to trial on merits on claim as filed against decedent's estate without moving to have it made more definite and certain, he thereby waives objection that its nature was insufficiently stated, and cannot raise it after verdict. Britian v. Fender, 116 Mo. App. 93, 92 S. W. 179. After answer to merits and trial it is too late to raise any objection to petition than failure to state cause of action or want of jurisdiction. Dakan v. Chase & Son Mercantile Co., 197 Mo. 238, 94 S. W. 944. Denial in reply held not a nullity, even if defective, so that defect could only be reached by motion or demurrer before trial, and not by motion for judgment on pleadings at close of evidence. Seffert v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Or.] 88 P. 962. Misjoinder of causes of action in contract and tort held waived by voluntary trial on merits and judgment. Allwein v. Brown, 29 Pa. Super Ct. 331. Where plea of nonassumpsit not accompanied by affidavit required by Code 1899, c. 125, § 46, is filed without objection, and case proceeds to trial, statutory requirement will be treated as having been waived. Hi Williamson & Co. v. Nigh, 58 W. Va. 629, 53 S. E. 124.

Joinder of issue waived: Judgment will not be reversed for failure to file reply where there was no objection in lower court and case was tried on merits. Fitzpatrick v. Vincent, 28 Ky. L. R. 121, 88 S. W. 1073. Where no reply is filed but cause is tried and submitted on theory that a material allegation of answer is in issue, claim that such allegation stands admitted is too late when first made after verdict. In re Cheney's Estate [Neb.] 110 N. W. 731. Where, after defendant's motion for judgment on counterclaim for want of a reply was denied, he did not rest on his exception, but offered proof of the facts, held that final judgment would not be directed on counterclaim on appeal. Flynn v. Smith, 111 App. Div. 870, 98 N. Y. S. 56. Formal reply to counterclaim held waived where trial proceeded from beginning to end upon theory on both sides that allegations thereof were in issue. My Laundry Co. v. Schmeling [Wis.] 109 N. W. 540. Trial of issues tendered by a pleading as though properly made, in absence of any plea, answer, or replication which raises them, estops parties from subsequently denying that such issues were duly made, and from taking any advantage of lack of such plea, answer, or replication. Plaintiffs held not entitled to insist on absence of answer to amended petition for first time on appeal. Bank of Havelock v. Western Union Tel. Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 522.

85. Weir v. Bagby, 72 Kan. 67, 82 P. 585.

86. Uncertainty as to whether there were one, two, or three plaintiffs held aided by default and judgment. Meyer v. Ross, 119 Ill. App. 485.

87. Defects held cured: In action for damages for death due to negligence, held that, if petition failed to state cause of action against one of the defendants, any defect therein by answer admitting its ownership of railroad where injury occurred, etc. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hollis' Adm'r, 28 Ky. L. R. 1102, 91 S. W. 258. Failure of petition to allege law of foreign state relied on, by answer tendering the issue of the law of such state, which plaintiffs accepted by a general denial. Lee v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 195 Mo. 400, 92 S. W. 614. Failure to allege that defendant received catt's for transportation as common carrier for hire, by answer to merits pleading entire contract of affreightment from which it appeared beyond question that such relation existed. Ficklin v. Wabash R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 211, 93 S. W. 861. Objection that bill of lading described in petition named plaintiff as consignee, while bill itself showed on its face that bank was consignee, held obviated by admission in answer that bill was issued for

car consigned and to be shipped to plaintiff. Starr-Hardnett & Edmiston Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 959. In action for libel petition defective in matter of charging publication of alleged defamatory matter, by answer admitting publication. Sheibley v. Huse [Neb.] 106 N. W. 1028. Failure of complaint in action for damages for breach of contract to deliver hops to aver that plaintiffs were ready and willing at time and place specified to perform on their part by paying purchase price, by allegations of answer that defendant had hops ready for delivery at time and place specified but that no one was present to receive and pay for them, on which issue was joined by denial in reply. Catlin v. Jones [Or.] 85 P. 615. In an action for recovery for death under a policy of accident insurance, containing provision that company insures against death resulting from injuries alone, judgment against the company will not be reversed for failure to allege in petition that death was caused solely by accident, where answer affirmatively alleged another cause, thereby presenting that issue. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Leibus, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 201. Whether allegations of bill to restrain infringement of patent were sufficient to give jurisdiction in equity held immaterial on appeal, in view of answer admitting validity of patent as covering composition of plaintiff and seeking to avoid its effect by allegation of differences between two compounds, and of fact that question was not raised below. Lane v. Levi, 21 App. D. C. 168. Failure of bill to restrain infringement of patent to sufficiently describe subject-matter of patent held not available on appeal, where defendant neither demurred or objected in any manner on preliminary hearing, but admitted existence of patent and denied that he was making and vending composition claimed thereunder by complainant. Id.

Defects not cured: Failure of complaint in action on fire insurance policies to allege that insured houses were occupied as dwelling houses, and that furniture was in specified house, at time of fire, as required by policies, by allegations of answer that greater portion of furniture had been removed from house at time of fire, except possibly as to furniture policy. Arnold v. American Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 660, 84 P. 182. In suit to enjoin county and its officers from carrying out contract employing one to search for omitted and unassessed personalty, failure of bill to allege that there was any such property, by allegations of answer that there was, such allegations not purporting to answer any specific allegations of the complaint but merely setting up a state of facts in justification of the contract, an answer in equity being evidence only when responsive to the bill and when its statements are not made on information and belief. County of Henry v. Stevens, 120 Ill. App. 344. Plaintiff cannot sustain a cause of action upon an allegation in the answer denied in the reply. Cohn-Baer-Myers & Aronson Co. v. Realty Transfer Co., 102 N. Y. S. 122.

88. Judgment will be set aside if pleadings are so defective that no legal judgment can be rendered. Civ. Code 1895, § 5364. Reid v. Hearn [Ga.] 56 S. E. 129. Judgment cannot be set aside or arrested for any defect in pleadings which is aided by verdict or amendable at matter of form. Civ. Code 1895, § 5365. Id. Whenever the complaint contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend a matter so essential and necessary to be proved that, had it not been given in evidence, jury could not have found the verdict, want of an express statement of such matter will be cured by verdict, since evidence of the fact would be the same whether allegation is complete or imperfect. Madden v. Welch [Or.] 86 P. 2. Defects or omissions in substance or from which would have been available on demurrer are cured by the verdict where the issues joined are such as necessarily require proof of the facts so defectively presented, and without which proof it is not to be presumed the court would have directed, or the jury would have given, the verdict. Grace & Hyde Co. v. Sanborn, 225 Ill. 138, 80 N. E. 88, afg. 124 Ill. App. 472.

Defects held cured by verdict: Obligation that answers of certain defendants should be disregarded because they have not complied with statute in making themselves parties. Burnett v. Doyle [Colo.] 83 P. 967. In action to enforce liability of stockholder in bank, failure of petition to allege that defendant was a subscribing stockholder, subscribing stockholders alone being liable under bank's charter. Reid v. Hearn [Ga.] 56 S. E. 129. Objection to complaint on ground of duplicity. Robbins v. Bosserman Bros. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 587. Failure of complaint in action for negligence to state in what way defendant was negligent. Grace & Hyde Co. v. Sanborn, 225 Ill. 138, 80 N. E. 88, afg. 124 Ill. App. 472. Defective statement of the cause of action in the declaration. Chicago, Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Laumyer, 123 Ill. App. 49. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 44, no judgment may be reversed for error in sustaining or overruling demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action. City of Huntington v. Stemeh [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 407. In action by coal miner for injuries sustained by falling of slate from roof, defect in petition in failing to allege that accident occurred before expiration of reasonable time after employer promised to furnish props for want of which slate fell, where case was tried as if omitted allegation was in petition, evidence was given to support it, and court made right to recover depend in part on existence of facts constituting it. Drakesboro Coal, Coke & Min. Co. v. Jernigan [Ky.] 99 S. W. 235. Declaration in action against railroad for injuries to servant held sufficient after verdict to show that negligence relied on was original defective construction of switch and not negligence of fellow-servant in adjusting it. Mississippi Cent. R. Co. v. Hardy [Miss.] 41 So. 505. In action against railroad under statute for double damages for killing of stock by reason of defective fences, failure of petition to sufficiently allege in what manner fences and cattle guards were defective. Clem v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 246, 96 S. W. 226. Misjoinder of causes of action. Barnes v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 303, 95 S. W. 971. Statement of two causes of action in one paragraph.

amending [90] after ruling on demurrer waives any error in the ruling, but this rule does not apply to a demurrer for want of jurisdiction [91] or for want of facts.[92] The Mullich v. Brocker, 119 Mo. App. 332, 97 S. W. 549. Case having been tried on theory that permission to plaintiff to walk on track arose from long public use, insufficient averment of that fact in petition. Frye v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 566. In action to recover for feed furnished horses and for care of same, failure of complaint to allege that feed or care had been furnished at defendant's request or that he had promised to pay for same, since issue joined necessarily required proof of one of such facts. Madden v. Welch [Or.] 86 P. 2. If evidence supports verdict, mere defects of averment. Preiss v. Zitt [C. C. A.] 148 F. 617. Where there was general verdict, motion in arrest of judgment on ground that there were two inconsistent counts in the declaration, and no evidence to support first one, held properly overruled. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Hensey, 27 App. D C. 210. Where plea of set-off was good in substance and only objection thereto was that it was not allowable in the particular case because it showed on its face that cause of action therein set forth arose after the institution of plaintiff's suit, but there was no objection to it on that ground, held that court did not err in submitting issue thereby raised to jury, and such objection could not be raised after verdict. Den Loach Mill Mfg. Co. v. Standard Sawmill Co., 125 Ga. 377, 54 S. E. 157. Declaration in action for negligence held sufficient after verdict though it failed to allege that defendant knew or ought to have known of injury. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Likes, 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136, afg. 124 Ill. App. 459. Sufficiency of answer cannot be questioned for first time on appeal. Unger v. Mellinger [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 814. Objection that widow did not file title papers of deceased husband with petition in action for allotment of dower, as required by Civ. Code Prac. § 499, cannot be first raised after trial and judgment. Bartee v. Edmunds, 29 Ky. L. R. 872, 96 S. W. 535. Where question of sufficiency of complaint was not raised below, and defect was curable by amendment, held that it was not available on appeal to reverse order granting a new trial. Russell v. Barron, 111 App. Div. 382, 97 N. Y. S. 1061. In action by broker to recover balance due on purchase and sale of cotton on cotton exchange, held that contention that complaint alleging purchase and sale of certain numbers of bales failed to state cause of action because it did not state number of pounds of cotton in bale or total number of pounds bought or sold, or price per bale, held too late after verdict, pleadings being framed and trial having proceeded on theory that bale contains five hundred pounds. Overbeck, Starr & Cooke Co. v. Roberts [Or.] 87 P. 158. defendant in action to enforce mechanic's lien held not entitled to object on appeal that complaint was fatally defective because allegations as to ownership were in alternative, where he neither demurred nor objected to introduction of evidence on that ground, and entered into written stipulation as to ownership, the defect, if any, being curable by amendment. Burgi v. Rudgers [S. D.] 108 N. W. 253. Where defect pointed out is one which might have been obviated by amendment below, it will be deemed amended on appeal. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 670. Richardson v. Stephenson [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 256. Supreme court will consider the complaint amended if need be to conform to proof. Collins v. Denny Clay Co., 41 Wash. 136, 82 P. 1012; Coolot Co. v. Kahner [C. C. A.] 140 F. 836. After verdict and judgment, in all formal and technical matters complaint will be treated as amended to conform to facts. Whether cross petition was properly amended held immaterial. Michigan Home Colony Co. v. Tabor [C. C. A.] 141 F. 332. In a suit involving the distribution of funds in court, irregularities in pleadings will not prevent the appellate tribunal from disposing of the case on its merits. Gilbert v. Endowment Ass'n, 21 App. D. C. 344.

89. Wade v. Goza [Ark.] 96 S. W. 388; Adams v. Clark [Colo.] 85 P. 642; Village of Palestine v. Siler, 225 Ill. 630, 80 N. E. 345; Carlson v. People, 118 Ill. App. 592; Walters v. Stacey, 122 Ill. App. 658; Glassey v. Sligo Furnace Co., 120 Mo. App. 24, 96 S. W. 310; Brannock v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 604. Uncertainty as to whether complaint sought damages for breach of executory contract or violation of terms of one consummated. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018. Where answer taken in connection with complaint tendered issue as to whether defendant negligently failed to furnish cars, and defendant, after its demurrer to complaint had been overruled, answered over and went to trial on merits of such issue upon proofs introduced without objection, which supplied any defects in complaint, error, if any, in court's ruling that complaint was sufficient was cured after verdict. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Wynne, Hoop & Cooperage Co. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 375. Where defendant answered over and accepted issue on only ground on which complaint was demurrable, if at all, held that it could not contend on appeal that order overruling demurrer was erroneous. Choctaw, A. & G. R. Co. v. Doughty, 77 Ark. 1, 91 S. W. 768. Where, after overruling of demurrer to complaint on ground of absence of allegation of demand, defendant answered, not only traversing allegations of complaint but set up independent defense showing that demand would have been unavailing, and hence was unnecessary, held that it could not raise question of necessity of demand on appeal. Eau Claire Nat. Bank v. Jackman, 27 S. Ct. 391. Where defendant excepted to ruling sustaining demurrer to amended answer and striking out portions thereof, held not to have abandoned defenses so stricken or to have lost right to question ruling on appeal by filing "second amended original answer" omitting such defenses. City of Paris v. Cabiness [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 549, 98 S. W. 925.

90. Sidney Novelty Co. v. Hanlon [Conn.] 63 A. 727; Long v. Furnas, 130 Iowa, 504, 107 N. W. 432; Wells v. Dane, 101 Me. 67, 63 A. 324; Helm v. Lynchburg Trust & Sav. Bank [Va.] 56 S. E. 598; Hays v. Peavey [Wash.] 86 P. 170.

91. Objection that court has no jurisdiction of subject-matter is not waived, by answering to merits after demurrer on that rule is ordinarily applicable to rulings on motions,[93] though there seems to be some conflict of authority in this regard;[94] but a party does not waive error in striking a part of a pleading and sustaining a demurrer thereto by going to trial on the pleading as thus modified.[95] Going to trial without objection and without asking leave to plead further or differently to an amended pleading is a waiver of the right to so plead.[96] The withdrawal or other express waiver of an objection [97] or the failure to procure a ruling thereon [98] precludes its being subsequently urged. Pleading to the merits ordinarily waives a previous demurrer.[99] A general appearance waives defective service of process.[1] The objection that no notice of motion for leave to amend was given,[2] that an amended pleading was not served on the opposite party,[3] and objections to the allowance of amendments,[4] cannot be first raised on appeal, nor can one object to the allowance of an amendment on the ground of surprise where he failed to ask for a continuance on that ground.[5] Misjoinder of causes of action may be cured by dismissal as to part of the defendants, and filing an amended complaint.[6] ground has been overruled. Goodnough Mercantile Co. v. Galloway [Or.] 84 P. 1049.

92. Though defendant waived demurrer to complaint and interposed answer, held that he could subsequently move to be dismissed from the action on ground that complaint did not state a cause of action against him, where complaint was amended after demurrer was interposed. Hemrich Bros. Brewing Co. v. Kitsap County [Wash.] 88 P. 838.

93. Answering to merits held waiver of exception to overruling of motion to make complaint more definite and certain. McMillen v. Columbia [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 953. Alleged error in overruling motions to strike, to make more definite and to elect. Dakan v. Chase & Son Mercantile Co., 197 Mo. 238, 94 S. W. 944. By answering over after overruling of motion to strike amended petition, defendant held to have waived departure. Walker v. Wabash R. Co., 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83. Refusal to strike parts of reply as departure held proper where defendant had waived departure by previously answering over after refusal to strike amended petition on that ground. Id.

94. In Federal courts where court erroneously struck out part of petition on motion and thereby deprived plaintiff of substantial part of his cause of action, error and exceptions thereto held not waived by filing amended petition omitting stricken allegations, pursuant to order permiting him to do so. Williamson v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 54. Missouri rule to contrary held not binding on Federal courts in that state. Id.

95. Answer. Federal Iron & Brass Bed Co. v. Hock, 42 Wash. 668, 85 P. 418.

96. Of right to object on ground of want of opportunity to do so. Race v. Isaacson, 124 Ill. App. 196.

97. Failure of bill to quiet title to allege that complainant was owner of interest to which title was sought to be quieted held mere irregularity, which was waived by abandonment of demurrer raising such objection. Kendrick v. Colyar, 143 Ala. 597, 42 So. 110. Consenting that a demurrer may be overruled is equivalent to its withdrawal. Santa Rosa Bank v. Paxton [Cal.] 86 P. 193. Where demurrer challenging sufficiency of complaint has been filed and waived, complaint will be considered sufficient, 2 Bal. Ann. Codes & St. § 4911, authorizing such objection at any time, being inapplicable to such a case. Crane Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 849. An objection to introduction of any evidence held that it was proper to refuse to consider sufficiency of complaint where a demurrer had been interposed on that ground and expressly waived. Crane Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 849. Waiver of demurrer does not waive right to question sufficiency of facts proved and if they are no broader than complaint, question may be raised by motion to dismiss or for nonsuit. Id.

98. Where no ruling is had on demurrer, but parties go to trial on merits without calling court's attention thereto. Dessart v. Bonynge [Ariz.] 85 P. 723.

99. Denial of entire complaint held waiver of demurrer to one paragraph thereof previously filed. Jackson v. Savage [Conn.] 64 A. 737.

1. See, also, Appearance, 7 C. L. 251; Process, 6 C. L. 1078. Written offer to confess judgment held general appearance giving court jurisdiction over person of defendant. Kannow v. Farmers' Co-op. Shipping Ass'n [Neb.] 107 N. W. 563.

2. Where it does not appear that such objection was interposed when motion was made and heard, in open court in presence of counsel, and during hearing upon motion for new trial. Lellman v. Mills [Wyo.] 87 P. 985. Situation not changed by fact that motion was put in formal shape and filed after hearing, it not appearing that objection was made at time that motion was not in writing. Id.

3. Where evidence as to property first described therein was received without objection. Musselman v. Musselman [Cal. App.] 84 P. 217.

4. Where record showed that there was no opposition to amendment of complaint so as to change cause of action, and no exception taken, and no application for adjournment made. Devery v. Winton Motor Carriage Co., 49 Misc. 626, 97 N. Y. S. 392.

5. DeMoss v. Thomas, 118 Ill. App. 467. Though objects to its allowance when offered. Smith v. Michigan Lumber Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 652.

6. Knight v. Boring [Colo.] 87 P. 1078.

Misjoinder of causes and parties may be cured on appeal by setting aside a judgment in favor of the party improperly joined, and dismissing his action.[7]

§ 12. Time and order of pleadings.[8]—Pleadings must ordinarily be filed within the time fixed by statute[9] or the rules of court,[10] though the court may in its discretion allow a pleading to be filed out of time[11] or extend the time for pleading,[12] and the parties may extend the time by stipulation.[13]

9. Motion to strike demurers to both original and amended complaint filed on day of filing later as having been filed too late, held properly overruled. Bufford v. Chambers [Ala.] 42 So. 597. Rev. St. 1892, § 1031, requiring replications to be filed at rule day next succeeding that upon which the plea shall have been filed unless term of court intervenes, in which event issues, must be made up by first day thereof, does not inhibit plaintiff from filing replication at any time after plea is filed, and it may be filed on same day plea is filed if plaintiff so elects. Flournoy v. Munson Bros. Co. [Fla.] 41 So. 398. Where defendant, after demurring to petition at appearance term, died during such term and before time allowed for demurring had expired, held that his executor, who was made a party defendant in his stead at next succeeding term, succeeded to his rights as they existed at time of his death and, as testator had further time in which to demur, executor was entitled to like time for that purpose, and, where he immediately offered to amend demurrers, it was not error to allo whim to do so. Belt v. Lazenby, 126 Ga. 767, 56 S. E. 81. Under Prac. Act. § 17, plaintiff held to have had right to file declaration ten days before second term of court. Dismissal for want of prosecution held error. Wells v. Knuth, 122 Ill. App. 93. Act does not peremptorily require a dismissal for failure to file declaration ten days before second term, but gives defendant right to nonsuit which he may waive by pleading to declaration not filed in time and hence declaration not filed in time must be considered a part of the files and record and considered in determining whether suit is for same cause of action as a subsequent one. Donnelly v. Chicago City R. Co., 124 Ill. App. 18. Cross petition in action on purchase money note for land and to foreclose vendor's lien held not an amendment which could only be filed by permission of court but a supplementary pleading in nature of an interpleader rendered necessary to enforce indorser's rights to subrogation which could be filed in vacation. Matney v. Williams, 28 Ky. L. R. 494, 89 S. W. 678. Time within which to demur to pleading served by mail begins to run from date to mailing and not from date of receipt. People v. West Side Brotherly Love Benefit Soc., 99 N. Y. S. 206. Where summons and complaint are personally served, even without the state, under an order for service by publication, the attorney for defendant so served has no right, on appearing, to demand another copy of the complaint, but time for answering runs from date of such service. Kinley v. American Hardware Mfg. Co., 49 Misc. 334, 99 N. Y. S. 199. Plaintiff held not entitled to have motion for default on ground that defendant had failed to plead within time allowed by law, sustained, where motion was not made until ten days after appearance of defendant by filing motion to make complaint more definite which was sustained. Washington Dredging & Imp. Co. v. Cannel Coal Co. [Wash.] 88 P. 836. In action requiring an inquiry of damages as in assumpsit upon an account, a plea may be filed at the first term after office judgment or at any later term before the inquiry of damages is executed. Walls v. Zufall & Co. [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 179.

10. Rule twelve of practice in circuit and inferior courts of common-law jurisdiction prohibiting plea of abatement to be received, if objected to, unless filed within time allowed for pleading, has no application to plea which is in substance amendatory of former pleas filed in time, to which demurrers have been sustained with leave to amend. Abraham Bros. v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 837.

11. Is discretionary to allow or reject additional pleas proposed to be filed after defendant has pleaded and time for pleading as prescribed by rules of practice has passed, and exercise of such discretion is not reviewable on appeal. Cahaba Southern Min. Co. v. Pratt [Ala.] 40 So. 943. Code 1896, § 3304, applies only to amendments to pleas to correct defects, and not to additional pleas. Id. Refusal to permit plaintiff, after issues were made up and case submitted to jury, to file demurrers to a plea held not reviewable. Owensboro Wagon Co. v. Hall [Ala.] 43 So. 71. Refusal to strike plea in abatement because not filed in time held not an abuse of discretion. Abraham Bros. v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 837. Where plaintiff introduced evidence tending to rebut allegations of defendant's counterclaim as if they were denied, though he had filed no reply, held that it was within court's discretion to permit him to thereafter file a formal reply. Beekman Lumber Co. v. Kittrell [Ark.] 96 S. W. 988. Though rule 12 (Code 1896, p. 1197) requires pleas in abatement to be filed within time allowed for pleadings, and ordinarily such a plea should not be entertained at a subsequent term, held that, where corporation was sued jointly with an individual in county where latter resided, and hence under Code 1896, §§ 4205, 3271, question of venue was not open to it as long as individual remained a party, it should have been permitted to plead to jurisdiction where during trial plaintiff was allowed to amend by striking name of individual. Eagle Iron Co. v. Baugh [Ala.] 41 So. 663. Where complaint was amended by striking out name of individual defendant, held that corporation defendant should have been allowed to file plea in abatement to jurisdiction. Eagle Iron Co. v. Malone [Ala.] 42 So. 734. Allowing defendants to file answer and cross petition after evidence

§ 13. Filing, service, and withdrawal.[14]—Statutes in some states provide that no pleading shall be considered filed in the cause or taken from the clerk's office until a memorandum of the date of filing is made in the appearance docket.[15] Failure to docket the notice of motion for judgment in proceedings under the West Virginia statute is a mere irregularity, which is waived by failure to ask for a continuance.[16] Where two attorneys representing different plaintiffs sign a complaint service of the answer on either is sufficient.[17] In Louisiana a supplemental answer need not be notified to plaintiff otherwise than by its filing.[18] Where the judgment may determine the ultimate rights of two or more defendants as between themselves, a defendant desiring such a determination is sometimes required to demand it in its answer, and to serve a copy of such answer on the attorney of each of the defendants to be affected thereby.[19]

had been taken and testimony closed held discretionary. Hall v. Kary [Iowa] 110 N. W. 930. Where no answer had been filed when case was reached for trial, held that court had discretionary power under Revisal 1905, § 512, to permit defendants to answer or demur instead of granting motion for judgment. Morgan v. Harris, 141 N. C. 358, 54 S. E. 381. Defendant held not entitled to judgment by default on his counterclaim, where formal denial was entered at next term by leave of court, allowance of such denial being discretionary under Revisal 1905, § 512. Tillinghast, Styles Co. v. Providence Cotton Mills [N. C.] 55 S. E. 621.

12. Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 6111, 6188, court is not required to render judgment by default against a defendant who fails to answer within time prescribed, but matter is discretionary, and it may grant further time upon just and reasonable terms. Ozark Ins. Co. v. Leatherwood [Ark.] 96 S. W. 374. Defendant filed demurrer and answer after expiration of time fixed by statute, and plaintiff moved to strike same from files on ground that they were filed too late and that action had been compromised. Court took evidence and ascertained that case had been settled for less sum than that claimed, and, upon defendant's refusal to pay that sum, struck its pleadings from files and rendered judgment against it for full amount claimed, with interest and costs. Held error, as court should have rendered judgment for plaintiff for amount of compromise on her remitting balance, or on her failure or refusal should have granted defendant privilege of pleading and maintaining its defenses. Id. Where defendant was given until next term to file answer, case was referred without objection on ground that no answer was filed, and plaintiff introduced his evidence before the referee, held that it was not reversible to admit defendant's evidence over objection, first made when it was offered, that no answer had been filed, it appearing that plaintiff knew nature of defenses which would be interposed, that he was furnished with list of credits claimed by defendants, and that no injustice resulted, etc. Bader v. Schult & Co., 118 Mo. App. 22, 94 S. W. 834. Where affidavit for extension of time to answer was defective in not complying with requirments of rule 24, held that provision extending defendants time to answer in order requiring nonresident plaintiff to furnish security for costs would be stricken out on motion. Kinley v. American Hardware Mfg. Co., 49 Misc. 334, 99 N. Y. S. 199.

13. Whether or not court had power by second extension to extend defendant's time to plead for more than thirty days, plaintiff was not entitled to have default entered on expiration of first extension, where extension granted by her written stipulation had not yet expired. Voorman v. Superior Ct. of San Francisco [Cal.] 86 P. 694. Effect of stipulation and whether defendants waived right to demur could not be considered on certiorari to review order denying motion to vacate second extension and giving defendants leave to demur forthwith. Id.

14. See 6 C. L. 1058.

15. Code § 291, mandatory, and court cannot consider pleading as filed in absence of such memorandum. Johnson v. Berdo [Iowa] 106 N. W. 609. Fact that cause was heard before referee is immaterial. Id.

16. Proceedings under Code 1899, c. 121, § 6. Anderson v. Prince [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 656.

17. Where three of the plaintiffs appeared by one attorney and fourth by another. Miller v. Philadelphia, 114 App. Div. 139, 99 N. Y. S. 618.

18. Fluker v. De Grange, 117 La. 331, 41 So. 591.

19. Code Civ. Proc. § 521. In suit to foreclose railroad mortgage, where one of the defendants did not serve copy of its answer on intervening defendants held that it was not entitled to determination of ownership of certain bonds as between itself and such intervenors. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Oneouta, etc., R. Co., 101 N .Y. S. 241. Service twenty days before trial actually comes on is in time, though case was previously set for earlier date and adjourned, and service was not made twenty days before it was placed on calendar. Muller v. Philadelphia, 114 App. Div. 139, 99 N. Y. S. 618.

20. Held proper exercise of discretion under Comp. Laws 1897, § 2685, subsec. 116. Lund v. Ozanne [N. M.] 84 P. 710.

21. Action of court in denying motion for continuance on ground that original pleadings had been lost, and had not been

A demurrer cannot be withdrawn without leave, whether leave shall be granted being within the discretion of the trial court.[22]

§ 14. Issues made, proof, and variance.[23]—No issue can be joined on an immaterial allegation in a pleading.[24] An issue made by the denial of irrelevant or redundant matter is immaterial.[25] A denial renders admissible only evidence of what the other party is bound to prove to sustain his allegations.[26] The denial of a conclusion of law raises no issue of fact.[27] Proof of a plea presenting an immaterial issue entitles defendant to the affirmative charge.[28]

The general issue and general denials.[29]—A general denial puts in issue all the allegations to which it is directed,[30] and renders admissible all evidence which directly tends to disprove any or all of them.[31] All dilatory defenses are waived by substituted, and in ordering that record might be used in all respects as original, held proper under Code 1890, §§ 2644, 2645. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Moore [Ala.] 42 So. 1024.

22. National Contr. Co. v. Hudson River Water Power Co., 110 App. Div. 133, 97 N. Y. S. 92

23. See 6 C. L. 1058.

24. Residence of plaintiff being material to the jurisdiction and not to the cause of action, denial of allegation that plaintiff was a resident of the state held to raise no issue. Ubart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1000.

25. If motion to strike irrelevant or redundant mater from complaint is denied, and such matter is controverted in answer (Brownell v. Salem Flouring Mills Co. [Or.] 87 P. 770), error committed in overruling motion to strike out irrelevant or redundant matter can be corrected by objecting and excepting to admission of evidence tending to establish issue raised by denial of such matter in answer, and also requesting instruction not to consider such evidence (Id.).

26. A mere denial of a claim based on written contract raises no issue under which evidence of custom or usage is admissible to show trade meaning of words used therein, but custom must be pleaded. Code, § 3615. Tubbs v. Mechanics' Ins. Co. [Iowa] 108 N. W. 324.

27. Schoonover v. Birnbaum, 148 Cal. 548, 83 P. 999.

28. But evidence must show without conflict the truth of the facts averred in the plea. Moss v. Mosley [Ala.] 41 So. 1012.

29. See 6 C. L. 1059. See, also, § 3, ante.

30. In action for negligence plea of not guilty puts in issue all material allegations of the complaint. Johnson v. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 33. Plea of general issue in detinue is equivalent to plea of non detinet at common law and puts in issue plaintiff's right of recovery. Ryall v. Pearson Bros. [Ala.] 41 So. 673.

31. Facts provable under general denial: Any fact which goes to destroy and not to avoid plaintiff's cause of action, and facts independent of those averred in complaint, of a nature affirmative, but which have a negative effect upon the issues. Cheney v. Unroe [Ind.] 77 N. E. 1041. Proof that contract sued on was illegal as in violation of statute held admissible both on this ground and because invalidity was disclosed by plaintiff in endeavoring to establish a contract which he had right to recover, which he was bound to do because of such denial. Id. In action for wrongful death where defendant alleged that deceased intentionally placed herself on railroad track for purpose of being run over, held that plaintiff could show that deceased was subject to attacks of pleurisy which at times rendered her helpless. Elec. R. Light & Ice Co. v. Brickell [Kan.] 85 P. 297. In action of assumpsit on promissory note, want or failure of consideration. Clark v. Holway, 101 Me. 391, 64 A. 642. In replevin action, fraud in purchase of goods by plaintiff. Rusho v. Richardson [Neb.] 109 N. W. 394. In action for negligence, intoxication as constituting contributory negligence. Sharpton v. Augusta & A. R. Co., 72 S. C. 162, 51 S. E. 553. Statute of frauds, but defendant is still obligated to make his defense good by objecting to parol evidence offered to prove contract. International Harvester Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 653, 96 S. W. 93. Defense of statute not interposed by request for peremptory instruction not stating for what reason it was asked. International Harvester Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 653, 96 S. W. 93. In action by stockholder for benefit of corporation to recover money appropriated by treasurer for salary under void resolution, where petition alleged that amount fixed by resolution was excessive and that services were not worth more than certain sum, held that defendant could show that such salary was reasonable, and also the reasonable value of his services. Greathouse v. Martin [Tex.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 89, 94 S. W. 322.

Evidence held admissible: In detinue, evidence negativing defendant's wrongful possession or plaintiff's right to immediate possession. Snellgrove v. Evans [Ala.] 40 So. 567. In action to subject certain lot to judgment on ground that it had been conveyed in fraud of creditors, that funds for purchase of lot and making improvements thereon were furnished by person in whose name it stood. Veerkamp v. Goodrich [Colo.] 86 P. 1017. In action of assumpsit evidence tending to show that plaintiff assented to abandonment and repudiation of contract sued on. McKinna v. McKinna, 118 Ill. App. 240. In action for damages for personal injuries, evidence as to plaintiff's belief in Christian Science offered for purpose of showing her insensibility to suffering. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Travis [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. . 1141.

Facts not provable under general denial: Justification, in action for false imprisonpleading the general issue.[32] A general denial raises no issue when followed by a special plea of confession and avoidance,[33] though there seems to be some conflict of authority in this regard.[34] Special pleas setting up matter provable under the general denial are properly stricken.[35] General denials place upon plaintiff the burden of proving all material allegations of the complaint by competent evidence.[36]

Special issues and special denials.[37]—As a general rule matters which lie in affirmative proof because of presumptions of law to the contrary, such as contributory negligence,[38] waiver,[39] estoppel,[40] payment,[41] fraud,[42] and the like, must be ment. Gambill v. Fuqua [Ala.] 42 So. 735. General settlement cannot be impeached for errors occuring through fraud or mistake, but those matters must be distinctly alleged. Johnson v. Berdo [Iowa] 106 N. W. 609. Where answer did not specify consideration for written contract pleaded as defense, law implied one, and issue of no consideration was not raised where defense was only controverted by general denial in reply. Avery Mfg. Co. v. Lambertson [Kan.] 86 P. 456. Issue as to fraud in giving chattel mortgage. Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co. v. Sally, 198 Mo. 682, 96 S. W. 1030. In action for injuries to pedestrian by failing over defendant's cellar door in street, defendant held not entitled to raise question of municipal permission. Blake v. Meyer, 110 App. Div. 645, 97 N. Y. S. 424. In action against street railway for injuries to bicycle rider due to spreading of slot in street, held that defendant could show that it was not responsible for spreading. Griffin v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 46 Misc. 328, 94 N. Y. S. 854. Contributory negligence. Goodloe v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 120 Mo. App. 194, 96 S. W. 482. Where answer in action for negligence was general denial only, held that plaintiff's contributory negligence was no defense unless his evidence so clearly showed it as to justify court in denying him a recovery. Fechley v. Springfield Traction Co., 119 Mo. App. 358, 96 S. W. 421. Under circuit court rule 71 providing that, in actions for torts, plea of not guilty shall operate as denial of breach of duty or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by defendant, and not of facts stated in the inducement, that no other defense than such denial is admissible under that plea, and that all other pleas in denial shall take issue on some particular matter of fact alleged in declaration, and rule 72 requiring matters in confession and avoidance to be pleaded specially contributory negligence must be specially pleaded. Jacksonville Elec. Co. v. Sloan [Fla.] 42 So. 516. Does not put in issue either the character in which plaintiff sues or the character or capacity in which defendant is sued. Pennsylvania Co. v. Chapman, 220 Ill. 428, 77 N. E. 248. In action against railroad for injuries to employe, defendant, by filing only general issue, held to have impliedly conceded that it was operating particular line of road mentioned in declaration, and that operators in charge of trains were its servants and employes. Id. Pleaded. Leonard v. American Steel & Wire Co. [Kan.] 84 P. 653. Defense that foreign corporation has not been granted authority to carry on business in state must be specially pleaded. Allegation that person by whom plaintiff prosecuted action had been appointed her next friend "by order of the court" held not put in issue, special denial being necessary as allegation meant that appointment was matter of record in court where case was pending. Wegenschiede v. St. Louis Transit Co., 118 Mo. App. 295, 94 S. W. 774. Does not put in issue those facts raised only by plea in abatement, such as capacity in which plaintiff sues. Levels v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 196 Mo. 606, 94 S. W. 275. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 598, 599, 602, where plaintiff assumes to sue in representative capacity, that capacity must be raised by special denial where facts to constitute capacity are sufficiently stated, or by special demurrer if they are not. Baxter v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 1, 95 S. W. 856.

Evidence held inadmissible: In suit for damages for breach of executory contract for sale of personalty, evidence of subsequent amendment of contract by mutual assent. Hager v. Donovan [Kan.] 88 P. 637. In action for rent, evidence of eviction or of an accord and satisfaction, plaintiffs not being called upon to prove contrary as part of their cause of action. Schwartz v. Ribaudo, 101 N. Y. S. 699.

32. All matters merely in suspension or abatement of the action, as a failure to submit amount of loss under fire insurance policy to arbitration. Concordia Fire Ins. Co. v. Bowen, 121 Ill. App. 35.

39. See Election and Waiver, 7 C. L. 1222; Contracts, 7 C. L. 761. Permitting plaintiff in action on insurance policy to prove waiver under an allegation of performance, though an exception to the general rule in actions on contracts, does not deprive defendant of its property without due process of law, or deny it the equal protection of the laws. Suess v. Imperial Life Ins. Co., 193 Mo. 564, 91 S. W. 1041. At common law waiver held not provable under special count on contract as written. Schaeffer Piano Mfg. Co. v. National Fire Exting. Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 159.

40. See Estoppel, 7 C. L. 1489. An estoppel in pais need not be pleaded. Fact that specially pleaded. In some states special pleas have been done away with, and the defendant is instead required to file a brief statement of special matters of defense where a special plea would otherwise be required,[43] in which the facts relied on and necessary for the defense must be set out with certainty to a common intent.[44]

Proof and variance.[45]—Since a party must recover, if at all, on the cause of action set up in his pleadings, his allegations and proofs must substantially correspond.[46] Where the deficiency of evidence is as to the entire scope of the pleading, plaintiff in action on fire insurance policy pleaded in terms a waiver instead of an estoppel held immaterial. Bernhard v. Rochester German Ins. Co. [Conn.] 65 A. 134.

41. See Payment and Tender, 6 C. L. 987.

42. See Fraud and Undue Influence, 7 C. L. 1813. Where defendant presented accord and satisfaction as a defense, held that plaintiff was properly allowed to show that fraud vitiated settlement though he had not pleaded it, since he could not be presumed to have known that a defense would be interposed. Whitehead v. Trussed Concrete Steel Co., 101 N. Y. S. 250.

43. Clark v. Holway, 101 Me. 391, 64 A. 642. In action of assumpsit upon promissory note, brief statement is not necessary in order to set up failure of consideration, since it may be taken advantage of under general issue. Id.

44. Clark v. Holway, 101 Me. 391, 64 A. 642. Statement held sufficient to give plaintiff notice of defense of failure of consideration as well as of facts relied on as constituting it, regardless of what defense may have been called therein. Id. If facts stated and admitted or found constituted failure of consideration, held that judgment was properly ordered for defendant on that ground, though defense was not set up by that name in brief statement or elsewhere. Id.

46. Mott v. Scott [Colo.] 83 P. 779. To support plea in equity, all its averments must be established as made. Shiff v. Andress [Ala.] 40 So. 824. Clear variance in material particular is ground for reversal when pointed out in apt time at close of plaintiff's evidence. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Rosenthal, 118 Ill. App. 278. Must recover on some definite theory shown by complaint, and cannot proceed upon one theory and recover upon a substantially different one. Cool v. McDill [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 679. In suit on promissory note or other chose in action, the specific title alleged must be proved as laid. Digan v. Mandel [Ind.] 79 N. E. 899. Proof offered should tend to support issues made by pleadings. Shacklett v. Henderson County Sav. Bank [Ky.] 100 S. W. 241. Cannot recover on cause of action not alleged, and destructive of his judicial allegations and evidence. Lazarus v. Friedrichs, 117 La. 711, 42 So. 230. Cannot plead one cause of action and recover upon another is seasonable objection is made and no amendment of the complaint is asked for or allowed. Stern v. Mayer, 113 App. Div. 181, 98 N. Y. S. 1028. Facts proven but not alleged cannot form the basis of a recovery. Smith v. First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 729, 95 S. W. 1111. Where there was a material variance between plaintiff's pleadings and proof, held improper to render judgment for plaintiff after properly denying leave to amend. Genger v. Westphal, 128 Wis. 426, 107 N. W. 330. Rule that, in action on special contract, plaintiff can recover only on contract pleaded does not prevent one, for whom money has been collected by an agent pursuant to some contract, from recovering same in action for money had and received merely because he misstates contract authorizing defendant to collect, particulars of contract not being of the essence of the case. Crigler v. Duncan [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 61.

No variance: Between allegation that trespass sued for was to a boom in a certain creek, and proof that boom was a cross end of a lake which was an inlet forming a part of said creek. Syson Timber Co. v. Dickens [Ala.] 40 So. 753. Affirmative charge based on ground that averment that car was wrecked was not proved held properly refused, where no negligence was alleged with respect to wreck, nor any of plaintiff's injuries attributed to it. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Moore [Ala.] 42 So. 1024. Between allegation of contract between plaintiff and defendant, and contract offered in evidence which was signed by them and also by a third person, where later was not a party thereto because he did not agree to do anything. Hlass v. Fulford, 77 Ark. 603, 92 S. W. 862. Between allegation that it was necessary for deceased miner to approach shaft in order to get on cage which was being lowered to raise him to surface, and proof that he approached shaft for purpose of leaning against guard rail while waiting for cage. Vindicator Consol. Gold Min. Co. v. Firstbrook [Colo.] 86 P. 313. Consideration as alleged held substantially same as that recited in contract sued on. McKenna v. McKenna, 118 Ill. App. 240. Writing admitted in evidence held not contract sued on or contract at all, and not to have been admitted as such, or as tending to prove a contract, but merely to prove performance of alleged contract, so that there was no basis for claim of variance. Hughes v. Ferriman, 119 Ill. App. 169. Between allegation that bones of plaintiff's body were broken and proof that it was bones of legs and arms. Elgin, Aurora & Southern Traction Co. v. Wilson, 120 Ill. App. 371. In action for libel, between allegations and proof as to libelous article. Ball v. The Tribune Co., 123 Ill. App. 235. Under averment of ownership in partition, either legal or equitable title may be proved. Shetterly v. Axt [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 865. Between allegations and proof as to manner in which accident occurred. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Cozatt [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 534. Contract between grantor and grantee of land for construction of building thereon held not foundation of cause of action for purchase price of material furnished by third person for such construction but merely evidence going to support it, so that discrepancies between said contract and allegations as to its terms in petition were immaterial. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. Pratt, 114 Mo. App. 643, 93 S. W. 300. Allegation of order given plaintiff to do a certain act held supported by proof that order was given to plaintiff and another without specifying which of them should do it, so that instruction on latter theory was not at variance with the petition. Cessna v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 118 Mo. App. 659, 95 S. W. 277. Partial failure of consideration may be shown under allegation of total failure. Rev. St. 1899, § 645, construed. National Tube Works Co. v. Ring Refrigerating & Ice Mach. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 620. Where petition charged that floor of car was rotten, worn, loose, and unfit for use, held that plaintiff was not confined to proof of rottenness, but could show that it was loose, etc. Jorden v. St. Louis & M. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 492. Between allegation that floor of car was unfit for use and proof that injury was caused by giving away a trap door therein, door being part of floor. Id. In an action for damages for injury to a passenger in a street car caused by a collision between the car and a wagon, an averment in the petition that the motorman negligently, carelessly, and unskillfully permitted his car to run into the wagon is sufficiently broad to render competent testimony to the effect that the motorman was intoxicated five hours before the accident occurred. Cincinnati Traction Co. v. Baron, 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 633. Both counts held to state causes of action against railroad for negligence under statute requiring whistle to be sounded and every possible means to be employed to stop when any object is seen on track, so that it was error to charge on common law exception so far as it was included in statute. Chesapeake & N. R. Co. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368. Where complaint alleged title to land in plaintiff's by regular claim from sovereignty, and also a limitation title, held that they could show either title or both. Alford Bros. & Whiteside v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 778, 91 S. W. 636. Between allegation that there was no time specified in contract within which work was to be completed, and proof that it was to be done as quickly as possible. Jefferson & N. W. R. Co. v. Dreeson [Tex. Civ. App.] 96 S. W. 63. In trespass to try title by a "railroad" company, held that evidence that a "railway" company, whose name was otherwise the same as plaintiff's, to whom certain defendants had given written acknowledgments of title which were in evidence, was the plaintiff, held admissible without specially pleading misnomer. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Haynes [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 422, 97 S. W. 849. Petition construed to allege that contract sued on was that of each of the defendants, and not of both jointly, so that it was sufficient to sustain judgment against one alone, particularly as case was tried on that theory. McDonald v. Cabiness [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 518, 98 S. W. 943. In action to rescind contract of sale and recover part payment, where plaintiff alleged and proved facts sufficient to entitle her to recover against one of the defendants, fact that she failed to prove allegations that he was agent of other defendant and made false representations on his behalf did not constitute variance. Freeman v. Gloyd [Wash.] 86 P. 1051. Where person giving notice of motion for judgment on note under Code 1899, c. 121, § 6, correctly describes himself therein as payee thereof, word "assignee" added to his signature to notice may be ignored as mere description of the person, not of the note, and will not sustain exception on ground of variance. Anderson v. Prince [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 656. In action for negligence liability held predicated in suddenly and violently starting train while plaintiff was alighting so that there was no variance between allegation that train was violently jerked after it had stopped and proof that it was violently jerked in stopping. Hopkins v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 128 Wis. 403, 107 N. W. 330.

Fatal variance: Between allegation describing judgment sued on, rendered on a certain date and proof of judgment rendered on different date. Fulenwider v. Ridgway [Ala.] 41 So. 846. In action for breach of marriage promise between allegation of promise to marry on request, and proof of promise to marry after death of plaintiff's mother which had not yet occurred. Bailey v. Brown [Cal. App.] 88 P. 518. Between answer and defendants' evidence in action to recover mining property. Larsh v. Boyle [Colo.] 86 P. 1000. Plea based on one statute of limitations will not admit the defense of another. Connell v. Clifford [Colo.] 88 P. 850. Where complaint in action for damages resulting from wrongfully turning cattle on land alleged that plaintiff owned the land, held that he could not recover on proof that his only right of action was based on assignment to him of claim of lessee of part of premises. Mott v. Scott [Colo.] 83 P. 779. Where petition alleged a cause of action for the recovery of value of house built by plaintiff on defendant's land while in possession under contract of sale which was subsequently breached by defendant, held that he could not recover on proof that he made improvements while in possession as a renter. Burdette v. Crawford, 125 Ga. 577, 54 S. E. 677. Between allegations of bill to set aside deed and for an accounting that defendant promised to purchase indebtedness secured by trust deed and permit plaintiff to pay him when he became able, and proof that defendant promised to bid in land at foreclosure sale and permit plaintiff to get it back when he got ready. Pankau v. Morrissey, 224 Ill. 177, 79 N. E. 643. Between allegation that deceased attempted to get on elevator when it was stopped, and proof that he attempted to get on when it was moving. Rothschild & Co. v. Levy, 118 Ill. App. 78. In action against trustees of church, allegations that contract sued on was executed by three persons appointed as a committee for that purpose by trustees held not supported by proof that contract was ratified by trustees after it was executed, there being no proof of prior authority and contract purporting to be individual undertaking of signers. Ashley v Henderson [Ind.] 76 N. E. 985. In action on benefit certificate between allegations in answer of a ruling of clerks of local camp refusing an assessment on certain grounds, and that no appeal was taken as provided by by-laws, and proof of decision or ruling by local camp refusing to receive assessments for different reasons. Taylor v. Modern Woodmen, 72 Kan. 443, 86 P. 1099. Between allegation that delay in transportation was due to negligence of defendant, the initial carrier and proof that it was due to negligence of connecting carrier. Ingwersen v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 139, 92 S. W. 357. In action against carrier for delay in transportation of livestock, where petition founded cause of action solely on defendant's negligence, held that he could not recover for breach of contract to furnish cars at specified time. Ficklin v. Wabash R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 211, 93 S. W. 861. In action on express contract alleged to have been performed by plaintiff, cannot be a recovery on quantum meruit. Wade v. Nelson, 119 Mo. App. 278, 95 S. W. 956. Where complaint in action against director of corporation to charge him with a debt of the corporation, under Laws 1892, p. 1832, c. 688, § 30, for failure to file annual report was framed upon theory that debt arose by reason of breach of contract, held that it was error to permit recovery, without amendment and over proper objection, on theory that debt was one in assumpsit arising on rescission of such contract. Hill v. Weidinger, 110 App. Div. 683, 97 N. Y. S. 473. Where complaint alleged sale and delivery of coal by plaintiffs, held that they were not entitled to recover on proof of delivery under contract made by a firm of same name of which they were the successors. Piper v. Seager, 111 App. Div. 113, 97 N. Y. S. 634. Trustee in bankruptcy suing to recover property transferred to a creditor by the bankrupt on theory that transfer was voidable preference under bankruptcy act held not entitled to recover on proof that creditor purchased property and later refused to pay for it but said that he would keep it and apply it on debt. Stern v. Mayer, 113 App. Div. 181, 98 N. Y. S. 1028. Where a plaintiff pleads right alleged to be vested in himself, and proof disclosed right vested jointly in himself and another who is not a party to the action, suit falls and should be dismissed. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Penn. 6 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 97. In action against railroad for killing stock, allegation of failure to fence held not supported by proof that gate in fence actually constructed was negligently left open. High v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 88 P. 961. Plaintiff having proved entirely different contract from that declared on held not entitled to recover without an amendment. Friedman v. Urmann, 28 Pa. Super Ct. 440. In action by broker to recover commissions between allegations that owner of land sold it to purchaser procured by plaintiffs and proof that he exchanged it for other land. Steere v. Gingery [S. D.] 110 N. W. 774. Is error to instruct jury to find for plaintiff upon issue not made by his pleadings, and thus error, though not assigned, is so fundamental as to require court to act on it. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Yost [Tex. Civ. App.] 13 Tex. Ct. Rep. 575, 88 S. W. 428. In a suit for damages to crops by water accumulated by defendant's road-bed plaintiff cannot show an assignment of the right of action in a third person to an undivided interest where he alleged that he was the owner of all. St. Louis Southerwestern R. Co. v. Jenkins [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 77, 89 S. W. 1106. Permitting parties who have based cross-action solely on verbal contract to recover on written contracts never declared on, but claimed throughout by pleadings to be absolutely void, is fatal to judgment. Colorado Canal Co. v. McFarland [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 848, 94 S. W. 400. Where only ground alleged for setting aside judgment claims against decedent's estate was that they were barred by limitations, held that judgment allowing claims for half their amount, on ground that claimant and decedent were cosureties on notes which had been paid in full by former, was erroneous. Swart v. Panther [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 448, 95 S. W. 679. Instruction held erroneous as authorizing recovery for injury occurring in different manner than that alleged. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Green [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 133, 95 S. W. 694. Where petition alleged that appeals had become damaged at arrival at destination, held that damages arising after that time could not be recovered. Cane Hill Cold Storage & Orchard Co. v. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 362, 95 S. W. 751. Where defendant denied that contract sued on was made at all, and did not allege that if made it was breached by failure to perform within time agreed upon, held that he could not take advantage of such breach, there being no issue as to whether work was to be performed within specified time. Jefferson & N. W. R. Co. v. Dreeson [Tex. Civ. App.] 96 S. W. 63. Allegations of answer that plaintiffs wrongfully, forcibly, and without defendant's consent, entered upon premises and took possession of crop and damaged same by reckless and careless manner in which they gathered it, held not to authorize recovery on evidence showing that they took possession of crop and undertook to gather it with defendant's consent, but, by negligent method of gathering it, defendant was damaged, cause of action alleged growing out of tort, and that proven from negligent performance of contract. McFaddin v. Sims [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 757, 97 S. W. 335. One sued as administrator in action at law on note for debt claimed to be due from estate cannot be held as an individual upon cause of action in equity, on ground of constructive trust or estoppel, since two causes of action could not be joined and hence one cannot be turned into the other. Tyler v. Stitt, 127 Wis. 379, 106 N. W. 114.

Action by or against several jointly: In action against several defendants as joint tort-feasors, failure to prove joint liability is failure to prove cause of action alleged. Livesay v. First Nat. Bank [Colo.] 86 P. 102. In action against two defendants jointly for attorney's fees, held that plaintiff could only recover on joint cause of action binding both. Dussoulas v. Thomas [Del.] 65 A. 590. Where joint action at law, not involving any equitable proceeding, is brought by several plaintiffs to recover land, and there is no prayer for a several recovery, it can only be sustained by proof showing a joint right of recovery in all of the plaintiffs. Glore v. Scroggins, 124 Ga. 922, 53 S. E. 690. Where petition alleged that note was executed by partnership and sought recovery thereon against firm, and plaintiff was allowed to discontinue as to one of the partners, held that judgment could not be rendered against other individually where no proof was offered except note purporting to be executed by firm. King v. Monitor Drill Co. [Tex.

and not merely to some particular part therof, there is a failure of proof.[47] The parties may enlarge the issues by mutually trying out issues of fact not involved in the pleadings.[48]

Matters laid under a videlicit need not be proved as alleged.[49] A failure to prove all that is charged does not preclude a recovery provided a cause of action is made out.[50] Immaterial allegations,[51] and allegations amounting to mere conclusions of law [52] need not be proved.

Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 315, 92 S. W. 1046. Where complaint in trespass charged several defendants jointly, held that fact that they filed joint answer did not prevent them from taking advantage of fact that joint liability was not established by evidence. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 87 P. 434.

Particular facts descriptive of transaction: Where plaintiff avers particular facts descriptive of the transaction upon which he bases his action, he must prove them as laid, even though it is not necessary for him to aver such particular description, and this rule prevails not only in actions ex contractu but also in actions ex delicto where gist of action is negligent performance of a contract. Faulkner v. Birch, 120 Ill. App. 281. When petition charges negligence specifically, the acts constituting it, or some of them, must be proven, or verdict for plaintiff cannot stand, even though petition is founded on relation of carrier and passenger. Van Horn v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 481, 95 S. W. 326. In action against railroad for damages from fire evidence held not to sustain only allegation of negligence. McCoy v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 142 N. C. 383, 55 S. E. 270. Where plaintiff in action for personal injuries undertakes to specify his injuries, he cannot recover for any not so specified. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. v. Tucker [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 598, 98 S. W. 909. Damages for delay and hinderance in completing building which plaintiff had contracted to complete within a specified time held part of general damage which law presumes from wrongful levying upon and carrying away of bricks being used by him in erection of such building, so that clause in declaration alleging such damage could be rejected as surplusage, and plaintiff's right of recovery was not confined thereto. Malnati v. Thomas, 26 App. D. C. 277. In action by passenger against railroad for assault and battery by one of its employes, where plaintiff, instead of alleging generally that at time of assault he was a passenger, particularly stated the termini of his journey, and evidence showed that neither terminus was correctly described, held that variance required a reversal, where it was pointed out in apt time and plaintiff failed to amend. Lake Street El. R. Co. v. Collins, 118 Ill. App. 270.

47. Variances held not such as to constitute a failure of proof under Code Civ. Proc. § 471, even though they actually misled defendant to her prejudice, so that full and adequate remedy could have been afforded by amendment of complaint on terms under § 469. Pollitz v. Wickersham [Cal.] 88 P. 911. Where complaint in trespass charged joint liability, held that plaintiff could not recover on proof of several separate and independent wrongs on the part of the several defendants. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 87 P. 434. When timely objection is made at trial, judgment cannot be sustained on appeal if cause of action alleged is improved in its entire scope and meaning. Code Civ. Proc. § 541. Rosenfeld v. Central Vermont R. Co., 111 App. Div. 371, 97 N. Y. S. 905. Where complaint in action against carrier for failure to deliver goods alleged express contract made by defendant as initial carrier, but evidence showed their receipt by defendant as connecting carrier only, held that there was failure of proof, and judgment based on its common-law liability in that capacity could not stand. Rosenfeld v. Central Vermont R. Co., 111 App. Div. 371, 97 N. Y. S. 905.

48. Nonsuit held proper though defense of assumption of risk was not properly pleaded, where case was tried upon that theory of the defense, and plaintiff's evidence showed that she had no case. Coulter v. Union Laundry Co. [Mont.] 87 P. 973. Where parties contest question of fact by examining and cross-examining witnesses with reference thereto without objection by either, neither can contend that finding with reference thereto is without the issues. Avery Mfg. Co. v. Lambertson [Kan.] 86 P. 456.

49. Date of injury. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Young, 118 Ill. App. 226.

50. In actions ex delicto it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove all the material allegations of his declaration, but he may recover if he proves enough of them to make out a cause of action. No variance in action for negligence. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Likes, 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136, afg. 124 Ill. App. 459. Is sufficient if testimony sustains all material allegations of statement of claim, and proof and allegations do not contradict each other or differ, fact that every detail of negligence alleged is not proven being immaterial. Williams v. Meadville & Cambridge Springs Street R. Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 580. Where complaint contains statement of facts constituting cause of action upon a contract which is sustained by proof, recovery is authorized though it also contains allegations of a tort not proved, latter being regarded as surplusage. Connor v. Philo, 102 N. Y. S. 427.

51. Strange v. Bodcaw Lumber Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 152. Whether there was any evidence to support allegations treated as surplusage is immaterial. Hobbs v. Eaton [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 333. Where evidence showed that defendant was guilty of negligence charged no matter to whom pole on which plaintiff was injured belonged, and without regard to whether negligence of another company contributed to injury, or whether such other company knew that it was stringing poles, allegations as to existence of such facts were not essential to plaintiff's cause of action against defendant and hence it was unnecessary to prove them and immaterial if evidence disproved them. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Likes, 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136, afg. 124 Ill. App. 459.

52. See, also, § 1, ante. In action for

Immaterial variances will be wholly disregarded.[53] By statute in some states no variance is to be deemed material unless it has actually misled the other party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits.[54]

The question of a variance between the praecipe, summons, and declaration, can only be raised by motion to dismiss or plea in abatement, and not by demurrer.[55] A variance is waived by failure to object on that ground at the trial[56] though the contrary has been held in regard to a so called fatal variance.[57] death by wrongful act in another state, plaintiff held not required to prove allegation of complaint that courts of such state would in such case hold plaintiff entitled to recover, following allegations as to law of such state. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson [Kan.] 86 P. 156.

53. Variance held immaterial: In action against railroad for injuries to mare, failure to prove exact date of injury laid in complaint. Southern R. Co. v. Taylor [Ala.] 42 So. 625. As to means whereby title was acquired, where ultimate fact in issue was title to certain stock. Oligarchy Ditch Co. v. Farm Inv. Co. [Colo.] 88 P. 443. Between allegation that plaintiff was indebted to defendant in certain sum, the balance due upon two notes, and proof that he was in fact so indebted upon one note, particularly where averments remained unchallenged through three trials. Mills v. Larrance, 120 Ill. App. 83. Between allegation that cause of injury was defective coupling on car which plaintiff was endeavoring to set out on stub track, and proof that defective coupling was on next car to it. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Snedaker, 122 Ill. App. 262. Between allegation that hand car which frightened horses was negligently left on crossing and proof that it was left on margin of way. Merely technical, and to be treated as though obviated by amendment. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Slaughter [Ind.] 79 N. E. 186. Between allegation that car had stopped and proof that it still had barely perceptible motion. Forrester v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 37, 91 S. W. 401. Allegation in action for personal injuries that car had stopped held matter of inducement only, negligence charged being in starting it, so that it was immaterial that proof showed that it still had barely perceptible motion. Forrester v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 37, 91 S. W. 401. Between allegation that draft was payable to plaintiff bank and proof that it was payable to "P. cashier," where evidence showed that P. was plaintiff's cashier and took draft as its agent. State Bank v. American Hardwood Lumber Co. [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 786. If material allegation of complaint is not established in the exact detail of the charge, but is as to the substance thereof. Hodge v. Smith [Wis.] 110 N. W. 192. Fact that defense as pleaded alleges six years' limitation, while statute relied on fixes it at three years. Ramsden v. Gately, 142 F. 912.

54. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 138, 139, 144, relative to variances and amendments are applicable to trials de novo in supreme court on appeal in suit in equity. Lichty v. Beale [Neb.] 106 N. W. 1018.

Variance held immaterial: Objection to sufficiency of complaint to entitle plaintiffs to recover certain damages held mere question of variance which court was authorized to disregard under Code Civ. Proc. § 469. Crocker v. Garland [Cal. App.] 87 P. 209. In suit to foreclose mechanic's lien, between allegation that value of materials furnished was $132 on which nothing had been paid, and proof that value was $212, of which $80 had been paid. Star Mill & Lumber Co. v. Porter [Cal. App.] 88 P. 497. Between allegation that injuries were due to defect in barge and proof that plaintiff was injured on a boat, in view of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 394. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Hardsaw [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1062. In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 770 and § 778, providing that errors, etc., not affecting substantial rights of parties shall be disregarded, between allegation that train killed bull and proof that it was fatally injured and was killed to end its suffering. Poindexter & Orr Live Stock Co. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 33 Mont. 338, 83 P. 886. Between allegations of complaint in action to recover commissions that defendant delivered five hundred bales of hops to plaintiff to sell and proof of delivery of a less number. Horst v. Lovdal, 113 App. Div. 277, 98 N. Y. S. 996. Rev. Codes 1899, § 5293. Between allegation that defendants guarantied actual value of certain stock, and finding, based on evidence received without objection, that they guarantied its value when estimated in particular way agreed upon, question as to what contract was having been fully litigated. Robertson v. Moses [N. D.] 108 N. W. 788.

55. Wabash R. Co. v. Barrett, 117 Ill. App. 315.

56. Objection must be made in trial court when evidence is offered, as supposed variance must be pointed out. City of Aurora v. Plummer, 122 Ill. App. 143; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Snedaker, 122 Ill. App. 262; Landt v. McCullough, 121 Ill. App. 328. Is waived otherwise. Preiss v. Zitt [C. C. A.] 148 F. 617; Buffalo Coal Creek Min. Co. v. Troendle [Ky.] 99 S. W. 622. Objection that evidence introduced by plaintiff in ejectment did not correspond to abstract of title furnished to defendant pursuant to Code 1896, § 1531. Henry v. Frohlichstein [Ala.] 43 So. 126. Where only objection to introduction of evidence was a general one, variance was waived, and court was not bound to entertain subsequent motion to strike evidence, the matter being discretionary. Faulkner v. Birch, 120 Ill. App. 281. Cannot be first raised on appeal. Ingwersen v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 139, 92 S. W. 357; Alton Light & Traction Co. v. Oller, 119 Ill. App. 181. Variance between allegation that plaintiff was employed to teach until May 1, and proof that he was employed until May 31, mistake being clearly a clerical one, case being treated by both parties and court as though latter date had been alleged, and there being no objection to evidence. Peacock v. Coltrane [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 107 Where evidence is admitted

Admissions in pleadings or by failure to plead.[58]—A party is bound by statements and admissions in his pleadings.[59] Allegations of a pleading which are ad-without objection, question cannot be raised upon an instruction. International Harvester Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 653, 96 S. W. 93. Waived where no objection was made to admissibility of evidence, and no motion to exclude it on account of supposed variance, in view of Code 1904, § 3384. Newport News & O. P. R. & Elec. Co. v. McCormick [Va.] 56 S. E. 281. Objection that waiver of provisions of contract as to delivery and consent to later delivery on which finding for plaintiff was based was not pleaded held not available after verdict and judgment in view of state and Federal statutes in regard to amendments and the disregarding of variances, etc. Schaeffer Piano Mfg. Co. v. National Fire Extinguisher Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 159. Rule that practice of questioning sufficiency of pleading by objecting to introduction of evidence is not to be encouraged does not arise where complaint states cause of action for primary negligence on part of defendant, and defendant objects to introduction of evidence as to negligence of his employe, since objection on ground of variance cannot be raised before trial. Kelly v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Mont.] 88 P. 1009. Variance in name of defendants between summons and declaration held waived by appearance and filing of demurrer by real defendants. Wabash R. Co. v. Barrett, 117 Ill. App. 315. Variance between praecipe, summons, and declaration, held waived when question not raised by motion or plea in abatement. Id. In action under statute to recover money lost at gaming, variance between allegation that it was lost at roulette and proof that it was lost at craps held waived, where there was no objection to evidence or to submission of case to jury on that ground, and cause proceeded as though means by which money was lost was immaterial. Clark v. Slaughter [Wis.] 109 N. W. 556. Being no objection to evidence as to other losses than those specified in bills of particulars, variance was waived and defendant could not contend that verdict for full amount proved was excessive. Id. Objection that evidence as to waiver was inadmissible because waiver was not pleaded held waived where evidence was not objected to. Burrowes Co. v. Rapid Safety Filter Co., 97 N. Y. S. 1048. There being no failure of proof, variance, whether material or immaterial, held waived where there was no objection to evidence, nor any claim upon trial that defendant was surprised or misled. Civ. Code Prac. §§ 129, 130, 131. Tyler v. Coleman, 29 Ky. L. R. 1270, 97 S. W. 373. If commingled in one statement are two causes of action, and evidence supports either, judgment or verdict cannot be set aside on ground of alleged variance which defendant has waived. Ramsay v. Meade [Colo.] 86 P. 1018.

57. Unless plaintiff obtains leave to amend complaint to conform to proof, defendant is entitled to nonsuit for fatal variance, though evidence was admitted without objection. Bailey v. Brown [Cal. App.] 88 P. 518.

58. See 6 C. L. 1063.

59. Where relation of principal and surety and defendant's liability for amount paid by administrator of one of his sureties followed as conclusions of law from facts admitted, held that denials and averments to contrary in answer raised no issues. Townsend v. Sullivan [Cal. App.] 84 P. 435. Held error to permit defendants to wholly disregard and repudiate defense alleged in verified answer and to give evidence which was fatal variance from, and contradictory of, it. Larsh v. Boyle [Colo.] 86 P. 1000. Allegations in answer that land was part of street held binding on defendants, where they did not ask to amend on ground that such admissions were improvidently or erroneously made. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 120 Ill. App. 306. Where petition for certiorari recognizes validity of statute and alleges that its provisions were not complied with, petitioner cannot atack it as invalid in the proceedings. Barnes v. Drainage Com'rs. 221 Ill. 627, 77 N. E. 1124. Averment in complaint that after execution sale execution creditor by its attorneys receipted to sheriff on execution for certain sum, held to affirm authority of attorneys to execute receipt. Fuller v. Exchange Bank [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 206. Allegation in action for negligence that employer did not provide means whereby entrance of steam and water into boiler could be securely excluded, held implied admission that some means were supplied. Ft. Wayne Iron & Steel Co. v. Parsell [Ind.] 79 N. E. 439. Admissions in pleadings are solemn judicial admissions, made for the purpose of the trial, and the party making them is absolutely concluded thereby. That plaintiff was in possession of property. Jonesboro, etc., R. Co. v. United Iron Works Co., 117 Mo. App. 153, 94 S. W. 726. Where petition, after alleging several pretermitted duties and acts of negligence, averred "all of which directly contributed to cause the injuries hereinafter complained of," held that defendant did not thereby plead his own contributory negligence and thereby state himself out of court. Deschner v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 737. Where answer to complaint against street railroad for injuries denies that defendant's car injured plaintiff, an admission therein that defendant operated "certain" cars on different thoroughfares, including that where the accident happened, is not an admission that it was defendant's car which caused the injury, and does not excuse plaintiff from showing that the car which injured him was owned, operated, or controlled by defendant. Gargano v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 94 N. Y. S. 544. In action by subcontractor to foreclose lien on funds in hands of city applicable to payment of repairs to school, where answer admitted contract between city and principal contractor, held that it could not thereafter contend that contract was with board of education. Bader v. New York, 101 N. Y. S. 351. Admissions by a party against his interest in his pleadings should be treated as admitted facts, and he will not be heard to question correctness thereof at any stage of the case in trial court, or on appeal when properly preserved in transcript or case made, so long as they remain a part of the record. Rogers v. Brown, 15 Okl. 524, 86 P. 443. If made by himself or his counsel under honest mistake or misapprehension of the facts, and he desires to be relieved from effects thereof, should apply to court for leave to withdraw such admissions or pleadings, and, if required to do so, make showing of good faith, in support of application which should be granted or refused in furtherance of justice. Id. Filing of amended answer held not to relieve defendant from effect of admissions in original. Id. Court, in passing on subsequent amended pleading filed by him, should take such admissions into consideration and treat them as admitted facts in the case. Page v. Geiser Mfg. Co. [Okl.] 87 P. 851. Allegation that, if plaintiff was injured, it was due to risk assumed by him in his contract of employment, held an admission that there was such a contract. McCabe & Steen Const. Co. v. Wilson [Okl.] 87 P. 320. Where complaint in action for breach of contract for sale of realty alleged demand for conveyance and refusal, and allegation was not traversed, and answer expressly admitted that defendant had not delivered conveyance and that plaintiffs had demanded it, held that defendant could not question sufficiency of demand at trial. Jennings v. Oregon Land Co. [Or.] 86 P. 367. Where answer admitted that defendant was indebted to plaintiffs in some amount, held not error for court to assume that fact. Trabue v. Wade [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 591, 95 S. W. 616.

60. Court is not bound to admit evidence supporting admissions in pleadings. Townsend v. Sullivan [Cal. App.] 84 P. 435. Held that there was no admission in pleadings which prevented judgment that certain hops received under contract covering successive years were to be applied on contract for a particular year. Mitau v. Roddan [Cal.] 84 P. 145. Denial that defendants mentioned in complaint, or any of them, took chattels held not to admit joint taking alleged in complaint in action for conversion. Livesay v. First Nat. Bank [Colo.] 86 P. 102. Admission in answer that allegations in certain paragraph of petition are true cannot be construed to apply to an amendment thereof containing additional and more specific allegations, which is offered after answer is filed. Watson v. Barnes, 125 Ga. 733, 54 S. E. 723. Allegations of bill held an admission that association was not organized under law relating to associations not for pecuniary profit, and hence to estop complainant from insisting to contrary. Cratty v. Peoria Law Library Ass'n, 120 Ill. App. 596. Argumentative general denial cannot be construed as confessing facts denied. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bockting [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 524. Admission that during his lifetime decedent had deposited certain sum with defendant held not an admission that it was still on deposit at time of his death in view of express denial of that fact and evidence of withdrawal. Harris v. State Bank, 49 Misc. 458, 97 N. Y. S. 1044. In action on life insurance policy, admission by defendant of allegation that insured had performed all things on his part to be fulfilled held to preclude it from objecting to introduction of policy on ground that it did not appear that insured had paid first premium while in good health, which was condition precedent to taking effect of policy. Fidelity Title & Trust Co. v. Illinois Life Ins. Co., 213 Pa. 415, 63 A. 51. Where answer in nature of bill of interpleader denied that defendant had been guilty of fraud, held that fraud was not admitted by subsequent allegation that claim of fraud was made. Nixon v. Malone [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 715, 95 S. W. 577. Answer held not to admit repayment of certain money. Devereux v. Peterson, 126 Wis. 558, 106 N. W. 249.

61. Not conclusions of law. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146.

62. Wade v. Goza [Ark.] 96 S. W. 388; Townsend v. Sullivan [Cal. App.] 84 P. 435; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scomp [Ky.] 98 S. W. 1024; Fidelity Title & Trust Co. v. Illinois Life Ins. Co., 213 Pa. 415, 63 A. 51; Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146. Corporate existence of a defendant. Simon v. Calfee [Ark.] 95 S. W. 1011. Where the issue was joined on replication denying all the issues of plea setting up new matter only, other matters alleged in declaration. Hartman v. Thompson [Md.] 65 A. 117. Rendition of judgment. Henry v. Henry [Neb.] 107 N. W. 789. In action for libel, publication of defamatory matter. Woolley v. Plaindealer Pub. Co., 47 Or. 619, 84 P. 473. Allegations of answer stating facts necessary to make defendants bona fide purchasers not denied by reply. Haines v. Connell [Or.] 87 P. 265. Fact that answer also denied allegations of notice in complaint held not to render denial of affirmative plea of bona fide purchaser in answer unnecessary, since such denial did not entitle plaintiff to make that defense. Id. Allegations of partnership and agency in petition were not denied under oath. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carter [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 657, 94 S. W. 205. There being no general denial, allegations of petition not specially denied. Mentz v. Haight [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 943, 97 S. W. 1076. Where allegations in complaint, in proceedings to compel payment of certain school orders, that orders were drawn in due form were not denied, held that proofs and findings in that regard were unnecessary. Escondido Lumber, Hay & Grain Co. v. Baldwin, 2 Cal. App. 606, 84 P. 284. In ejectment, answer putting in issue plaintiffs' title and right of possession, and cross complaint averring possession in defendants, which is not denied by plaintiffs, held sufficient proof of ouster. Dondero v. O'Hara [Cal. App.] 86 P. 985. Failure of defendant to answer amendment to petition, offered after answer to original was filed, held not to relieve plaintiff from supporting allegations thereof by evidence. Watson v. Louisville v. Hall, 28 Ky. L. R. 1064, 91 S. W. 1133. Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, art. 75, § 23, subsec. 108, allegation of execution of any written instrument filed in cause is to be taken as admitted for purpose of action unless denied in next succeeding pleading of opposite party. Fifer v. Clearfield & Cambria Coal & Coke Co., 103 Md. 1, 62 A. 122. Failure to specifically deny execution of contract set out verbatim in declaration held to have relieved plaintiff from proving it, but not to operate as admission that persons alleged to have executed it as defendant's agents were in fact their agents authorized to bind them as alleged. Id. Where allegation in petition that certain trust company was lawfully appointed and duly qualified curator of plaintiff was not specially denied in answer, it would be taken as admitted, issue not being raised by general denial. Baxter v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 1, 95 S. W. 856. Though plaintiff, in order to state cause of action in replevin, was not required to allege nature or source of his title, held that, where he did so, the allegation was material within meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 628, and stood admitted when not traversed in answer. Kansas City Wholesale Grocery Co. v. McDonald, 118 Mo. App. 471, 95 S. W. 279. Where answer alleged finding in previous action that plaintiff had entered into an agreement to remove frame building erected within fire limits within specified time, held that a failure to deny in the reply that such finding had been made precluded plaintiffs from showing fraud or duress in making of contract, question whether they made contract being concluded by the former adjudication. Wheeler v. Aberdeen [Wash.] 87 P. 1061. Allegation of due appointment of guardian ad litem of infant held admitted by failure to properly put it in issue, so that due appointment was adjudicated and settled and judgment binding upon defendant and infant plaintiff. 67. Where defendant filed unverified answer to verified complaint, held that plaintiff was entitled to judgment and was not required to resort to motion to strike. Stockton Lumber Co. v. Blodget [Cal. App.] 84 P. 441. Motion for judgment properly granted where no material issue of fact was made by answer. Schoonover v. Birnbaum, 148 Cal. 548, 83 P. 999. Where demurrer to replication was by consent treated as motion for judgment on pleadings, no evidence was heard or offered by either party, and first defense of answer was general denial of material averments of complaint, held that judgment of dismissal was proper. Combs v. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. [Colo.] 88 P. 396. Judgment held properly entered in favor of plaintiff, where defendant declined to plead further after demurrer to petition. Continental Casualty Co. v. Waters [Ky.] 97 S. W. 1103. Where objection to introduction of any evidence on ground that petition fails to state cause of action is sustained, and plaintiff elects to stand on petition, or does not take leave to amend, judgment should be entered for defendant. Gordon v. Omaha [Neb.] 110 N. W. 313. Fact that court directed verdict for defendant and entered judgment thereon instead of dismissing action held not reversible error. Id. Where plaintiff demurred to a separate defense, thereby admitting the facts therein alleged, order sustaining demurrer was reversed on appeal and demurrer overruled, and no leave to withdraw demurrer was reserved to plaintiff by the judgment, and it did not appear that demurrer was in fact withdrawn, held that defendant was entitled as a matter of law to a final judgment dismissing the complaint. National Cont. Co. v. Hudson River Water Power Co., 110 App. Div. 133, 97 N. Y. S. 92. In action on note, plaintiff's motion for judgment held properly sustained in view of admissions in original answer. Page v. Geiser Mfg. Co. [Okl.] 87 P. 851. Where pleadings in action against carrier for damages for injuries to livestock failed to allege compliance with provision of contract of affreightment, requiring notice of claim of loss as condition precedent to liability, or a waiver of such notice, held that defendant's motion for judgment should have been granted. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Phillips [Okl.] 87 P. 470. Motion by defendant for judgment is properly granted, where under all allegations of complaint and affirmative allegations of reply, taken as true, he was not entitled to recover, there being no necessity for proof in such case. Fishburne v. Merchants' Bank, 42 Wash. 473. 85 P. 38. Where petition for mandamus did not allege facts authorizing the granting of the relief prayed, held that it was error to grant writ on striking demurrer to petition from files and refusal of respondents to plead further. PLEDGES.

§ 1. Definition and Nature (1431).
§ 2. Right to Make (1433).
§ 3. Property Subject to be Pledged (1433).
§ 4. The Contract and Its Requisites (1433).
§ 5. Rights, Duties, and Liabilities Under the Pledge (1434).

§ 1. Definition and nature.[72]—A pledge is a bailment of personal property as security with implied power of sale on default.[73] Whether a transaction is a pledge,[74] an agreement to pledge,[75] or an absolute transfer, will depend on the intention of the parties as manifested in their acts and in all the instruments which are part of the transaction.[76] Where property is delivered and relied upon as secur-of right to purchase property because of failure to make payments as required by contract held sufficient to prevent judgment. Womble v. Wilbur [Cal. App.] 86 P. 916; Mills Novelty Co. v. Dunbar, 11 Idaho, 671, 83 P. 932. If the answer puts in issue the material allegations of the complaint, plaintiff's motion for judgment is properly denied. Pleadings in action in ejectment held to put in issue ownership of the land as one of the material facts to be determined before court could decide ultimate rights of parties, so that it was error, while such issue was undetermined, to render judgment for defendant. McCready v. Dennis [Kan.] 85 P. 531. In action for trespass where answer did not assert title or possession to any part of the land claimed by plaintiffs, but that land upon which trespass was committed was not embraced in boundary described in petition, held that defendants were not entitled to judgment on failure of plaintiffs to reply. Morgan v. Lewis, 29 Ky. L. R. 197, 92 S. W. 970. In action on life insurance policy where complaint showed that insured died more than a year before the action was brought, but did not set out the policy or refer to any limitation therein, held that an allegation of a one-year contract limitation in the answer could not be taken as admitted for the purpose of a motion to dismiss the complaint on the pleadings, and hence dismissal on ground that action was barred was error. Bannister v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 111 App. Div. 765, 97 N. Y. S. 843. Where complaint alleged contract of sale and a breach thereof by defendant, and defendant denied that sale was an absolute one, and alleged by way of counterclaim a consignment of goods for sale and demanded an account, held that complaint was a denial of counterclaim so that defendant was not entitled to judgment by default on his counterclaim before issues raised in reference to plaintiff's cause of action were determined. Tillinghast, Styles Co. v. Providence Cotton Mills [N. C.] 55 S. E. 621.

69. State v. Goffee, 192 Mo. 670, 91 S. W. 486. Plaintiff's motion admits for purposes of motion truth of all allegations of answer and falsity of his own allegations which are denied. Mills Novelty Co. v. Dunbar, 11 Idaho, 671, 83 P. 932. Defendant's motion admits all allegations of complaint and affirmative allegations of reply considered together. Fishburne v. Merchants' Bank, 42 Wash. 473, 85 P. 38. Where judgment is rendered on pleadings, allegations of petition must be taken as true on appeal. Miller v. Hart, 29 Ky. L. R. 73, 91 S. W. 698.

70. Plaintiff's motion for judgment does not admit allegation in answer, in nature of special plea in bar, that action is barred by statute of limitations, such plea being conclusion which, while law tolerates it in pleading for convenience, depends for its sufficiency on facts admitted or proven. Daniels v. Daniels [Cal. App.] 85 P. 134.

71. Bergerow v. Parker [Cal. App.] 87 P. 248. Rule is equally applicable where defect is failure to verify answer to verified complaint in mandamus proceedings. Id.

74. Evidence held to show that a note had been delivered by the cashier of a bank to another bank as collateral for the debt of the cashier, and not merely to be sold and the proceeds accounted for. First Nat. Bank v. Gunhus [Iowa] 110 N. W. 611.

75. The payee and pledgor of a note having purchased property under agreement to secure the price by his interest in the note, in company with the seller, requested the pledgeholder to hold the note as collateral for both claims against the payee and pay them out of the proceeds. Held an actual pledge to seller and not a mere agreement to pledge. Ladd v. Myers [Cal. App.] 87 P. 1110.

76. One loaned money, taking a note for the amount, also an absolute conveyance of a policy, and an assignment with a defeasance. Held a pledge and not a sale. Daly v. Spiller, 222 Ill. 421, 78 N. E. 782; Id., 119 Ill. App. 272. In an action by a surety to recover from his principal the amount paid on a note, evidence held to authorize submission to the jury of the question whether certain stock deposited with plaintiff was a pledge or a conditional sale. Smith v. Nixon, 145 Mich. 593, 13 Det. Leg. N. 569, 108 N. W. 971. Assignment of subcontractor's bond by contractor to owner held collateral only as shown by defendant's witness and the fact that another action was pending by con-ity, the transaction is not less a pledge because notes or mortgages are also taken by the creditor.[77] The relation existing between a stockbroker and his customer is generally held to be that of pledgor and pledgee,[78] and this, though the broker instead of requiring a margin of the customer advances the whole amount necessary for the purchase.[79] A deposit of securities with a stockbroker by a customer as margin and as security against losses in stock transactions under an agreement which does not contemplate a sale of the securities except in the event of losses also contractor against subcontractor. Wing & Bostwick Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 150 F. 672.

77. Defendant held a pawnbroker within laws regulating the business of such brokers. Levison v. Boas [Cal.] 88 P. 825.

78. A stockbroker who purchases and carries stock for a customer on margins furnished by the latter holds the stock as pledgee. Customer entitled to stock or proceeds in bankruptcy of broker. In re Bolling, 147 F. 786.

NOTE. The relation between broker and principal in margin transactions: It is customary for a broker purchasing stock on margin for a client by advancing upon interest the money required for the purchase in addition to the margin deposited, to have the shares registered in his own name, and, without attempting to keep separate the identical certificates purchased upon a particular client's order, to pledge them for his own debts. Dos Passos, Stockbrokers and Stock-Exchanges, 187, 251; Markham v. Jaudon, 41 N. Y. 235, 239. Although these customs are well established, the American decisions interpreting them are not harmonious. Most courts, following New York decisions, describe the relation between principal and broker as that of pledgor and pledgee. The broker, it is held, acts properly in taking title to the stock in his own name. Horton v. Morgan, 19 N. Y. 170, 75 Am. Dec. 311 n. Moreover, as shares of stock are fungible, he need not keep separate or retain those purchased for a particular customer; but he must under his control keep sufficient shares of a like kind to be able to make delivery at any time to all customers without being obliged to purchase in the market. See Douglas v. Carpenter [N. Y.] 17 App. Div. 329, 335. Accordingly, it has recently been held that if he sells stock purchased for a customer without retaining other stock of a like kind and amount, he is guilty of conversion. Content v. Banner, 34 N. Y. L. J. 1899; Stenton v. Jerome, 54 N. Y. 480; Gillett v. Whiting, 120 N. Y. 402.

Has the broker a right to repledge? At common law a pledgee has apart from special agreement no such right. Such an agreement, however, the courts generally imply in these cases by virtue of the general custom of repledging. Skiff v. Stoddard, 63 Conn. 198, 219. But the broker is liable in conversion if he pledges for an amount greater than the customer's indebtedness. Douglas v. Carpenter, 17 N. Y. App. Div. 329, 335. Dividends or assessments, though in the first instance received or paid by the broker as the record owner, are to be credited or charged to the client. See Chase v. Boston, 180 Mass. 458, 460.

The Massachusetts court, interpreting apparently identical customs, holds that the broker merely contracts to deliver stock to the customer in the future. The broker's duties under this view have not, however, been satisfactorily worked out. Obviously, though, unless restrained by special contract, he may pledge ad libitum stock purchased upon a customer's order. Rice v. Winslow, 180 Mass. 500, 503; Wood v. Hayes, 81 Mass. 375. It is said that the broker's contract requires him to purchase the stock and to procure delivery. Chase v. Boston, 180 Mass. 458, 460; Covell v. Loud, 135 Mass. 41, 43, 46 Am. Rep. 446. His contract, if it does not require such delivery, is illegal. Marks v. Metropolitan Stock Exchange, 181 Mass. 251; Rice v. Winslow, 180 Mass. 500, 503. It has been added, however, that though he must procure delivery, he need not retain under his control sufficient stock for all customers. In re Swift, 104 F. 493, 498; cf. Bentinck v. London Joint Stock Bank, (1893) 2 Ch. 120, 140. But it would seem that the customer contracts for a right to have stock actually held by the broker, and intends not to rely upon the financial ability of the broker to purchase it, for otherwise the contract would permit the broker to speculate at his client's expense. Even, however, if this be conceded, important practical differences would still exist between the New York and Massachusetts rules. Under the former rule the customer, upon a wrongful sale, can recover the value of the stock in conversion (Baker v. Drake, 53 N. Y. 211, 13 Am. Rep. 507; Id., 66 N. Y. 518, 23 Am. Rep. 80), or affirm the sale and recover the proceeds (Taussig v. Hart, 58 N. Y. 425, 429); under the latter rule his recovery is for breach of contract. Under only the former does the customer, if the broker becomes insolvent, possess rights higher than those of a general creditor. Skiff v. Stoddard, 63 Conn. 198, 219, 224.

The facts that the customer pays interest, bears the burden of assessments, and receives the benefit of dividends, and incurs the liability for depreciation, seem clearly to show an intention not to create merely a contract right to future delivery, but to vest in him the beneficial ownership of the stock, subject only to a security title in the broker. As the title to the stock is in the broker, it is more accurate to describe the transaction as a chattel mortgage than as a pledge. So to hold does not conflict with the conclusions reached by courts which regard the contract as one of pledge. The doctrine of fungible goods seem equally applicable to the relations of mortgage and pledge. If a mortgagee wrongfully disposes of chattels before or after tender of the amount due, the mortgagor may recover in conversion. Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500; Pierce v. Hasbrouck, 49 Ill. 23.—See 19 Harv. L. R. p. 529.

stitutes a pledge.[80] A bank issuing a commercial letter of credit by which goods obtained by merchants thereunder and the bills of lading therefor are held by it for advances acquires title to the goods and is not a mere pledgee.[81]

§ 2. Right to make.[82]—An officer of a corporation who may borrow money may pledge property of the company, especially if the course of dealing of the company shows that he has plenary authority to act on behalf of the company.[83] A person who takes property from a trustee on pledge is put upon inquiry to ascertain the authority of the trustee,[84] and may, in the absence of such authority, be compelled to reassign the property to the estate if the trustee embezzles the proceeds of the loan.[85] While a husband may pledge community property purchased by the wife,[86] he can not pledge her separate property without her consent.[87] The Louisiana Code expressly authorizes the making of a pledge for holding a surety harmless.[88]

§ 3. Property subject to be pledged.[89]

§ 4. The contract and its requisities.[90]—Possession by the pledgee is essential to the existence of a valid pledge,[91] but if the property is not capable of manual transfer, a constructive delivery is sufficient, as in the case of corporate stock,[92] or property represented by bills of lading.[93] In the case of a pledge of warehouse receipts, it is a sufficient change of possession of the property that it is placed in the exclusive and absolute control of the warehouseman.[94] Like other contracts, the agreement is subject to the statute of frauds,[95] the principles governing unilateral engagements,[96] and to public police regulations.[97] A negotiable promissory note

84. There is no presumption of the trustee's right to sell as there is in the case of an executor. Kenworthy v. Levi, 214 Pa. 235, 63 A. 690. Where deed of trust provided "that the principal of the estate shall not become impaired or encumbered," trustee could not pledge a mortgage belonging to the estate. Id.

95. In replevin for a diamond ring, a receipt given by a pawnbroker held a sufficient memorandum within statute of frauds. Andrews v. Uncle Joe Diamond Broker [Wash.] 87 P. 947.

96. Contract for pledge of diamond ring providing for payment of a certain amount, if payment was not made within one year, held not invalid as unilateral, since it gave pledgor the right to redeem within a reasonable time after one year. Andrews v. Uncle Joe Diamond Broker [Wash.] 87 P. 947.

97. A pledge made with a pawnbroker who had not procured a license and did not make the proper entries under the statute making such failures misdemeanors is void (Levison v. Boas [Cal.] 88 P. 825), and the

may be pledged without the special indorsement of the pledgor.[98] The fact that a warehouseman had not paid the statutory privilege tax will not invalidate a pledge of property held by him as against a bona fide pledgee.[99] An agreement that a pledge shall cover any future liability is sufficient to create a pledge to secure such liability when subsequently created.[1]

§ 5. Rights, duties, and liabilities under the pledge.[2]—A pledgee may repledge the property to secure a debt of his own.[3] If he holds securities he is entitled to all the remedies necessary to make them available in discharge of the debt,[4] and with the power to make the securities available necessarily goes the right to transfer the assignor's interest therein.[5] He is entitled to interest on money expended in furthering the undertaking secured by the pledge.[6] An absolute assignment of an insurance policy to a creditor having several claims may be shown to have been assigned to secure a particular debt only and will be valid to that extent alone,[7] but in such case the burden of proof is on the assignor.[8] The mere renewal of an obligation to pay money does not release or discharge securities deposited as collateral;[9] but a change in the contract between the debtor and the creditor may release any property which a surety has pledged.[10] One does not waive a pledge by signing a trust agreement which expressly recognizes his rights.[11]

Possession and custody.[12]—The lien continues only so long as possession is retained.[13] Where property is repledged subject to a prior pledge possession of the prior pledgee may be regarded as that of the second pledgee through the former's agency.[14] If several pledgors consent to a mingling of the property, they cannot thereafter rightfully complain of the result.[15]

Title to the property.[16]

Duty to realize on collaterals and prevent loss.[17]—The pledgee is not bound to sell collaterals where a sale is optional with him under the contract.[18]

Conversion by the pledgee.[19]—A wrongful sale is not essential to conversion, it being sufficient if the relation of pledgor and pledgee is renounced and the pledgee claims the property as his own.[20] Where a sale to the pledgee is merely voidable and thereafter the pledge is exchanged for other property, the pledgor's rights in the new property are the same as those he had in the old,[21] and failure of the pledgee, upon tender of the debt, to deliver to the pledgor the property originally pledged is not a conversion,[22] but in such case the pledgor should require redemption of the property substituted.[23] If the pledgee has so acted that he cannot return the property pledged, the pledgor need not tender the amount of the debt as a condition to a suit in conversion,[24] nor is a tender necessary if the value of the property exceeds the amount of the debt.[25] In an action for the conversion of bonds a judgment for their value at the date of conversion credited with the amount of the debt at that date is proper.[26]

Redemption and surrender.[27]—The obligation having been discharged, the pledgor is entitled to a return of the pledge,[28] and though he fails to pay the debt when due, all his right in the property is not thereby extinguished, the right of redemption still continuing until barred by proper procedure,[29] or by laches or waiver.[30] So also, if there be a seasonable and proper offer to pay the debt,[31] the right to redeem is not affected by the fact that subsequent offers are made.[32] All the claims secured must be paid or tendered,[33] and a tender must be kept good.[34] for other stock, but the stock received in exchange was issued to only one of the pledgors on three certificates, no one of which represented merely the shares due any pledgor, held the pledgors themselves assented to the mingling of the shares though the bank had originally agreed to keep the stock of each separate. 34. One who seeks to recover property pledged must show not only a tender of the amount of the debt but that the tender had been kept good at all times. Not shown that

Where the running of interest has been stopped by a proper tender, one is entitled to redeem by payment of the debt and interest to such date,[35] though by mistake of law the complaint claims exemption from interest only from a later date.[36] A judgment giving the right to redeem should specify the time within which payment should be made.[37]

Default, foreclosure, and sale.[38]—The pledgee is not always bound to sell.[39] The right of sale accrues upon default of the debtor, but if the pledgee by word or conduct waives this right and gives further time, he will not be permitted suddenly to repudiate such waiver and dispose of the property to the prejudice of the pledgor who is unprepared;[40] and if a wrongful sale is thus made, the pledgor is not bound after an offer to redeem to keep the tender alive by payment into court.[41] In the absence of contract stipulation, the sale must be a public one.[42] A public sale must be made at public auction in the manner and on the notice usual in respect to auction sales of similar property and must be for the highest price obtainable.[43] Notice is essential unless waived,[44] and a sale without notice constitutes a conversion.[45] The pledgor and pledgee may, however, agree for any means of disposing of the pledge to satisfy any claim upon it, which is not in contravention of a statute, against public policy or fraudulent.[46] Hence, a contract authorizing the pledgee to sell at public or private sale with or without notice,[47] and to himself become a purchaser, is valid.[48] "Private sale," though, means a sale conducted in the ordinary and usual manner, and not merely a taking over of the property by the pledgee to himself at such price as he may elect to consider an offer.[49] A sale of stocks will be found where they were transferred in the customary way by brokers.[50] Sales must be fair and prudently made.[51]

50. Evidence held to warrant finding of a sale of pledged stock sent by a bank to brokers for sale, though some of the stock had been transferred to the broker's clerks who had no interest in it and still remained in their names, where the evidence showed that it was customary to make sales in that way. Smith v. Becker [Wis.] 109 N. W. 131.

Identification of property sold: Where a bank which held shares of stock as collateral to a note owned some of the same stock and sent it all to a broker for sale, and a portion of the shares was sold by the broker and the proceeds credited on the note, there was, as between pledgor and pledgee, an identification of the shares sold as those of the pledgor. Smith v. Becker [Wis.] 109 N. W. 131.

51. Where the indebtedness was long past due and at least a fair market price

The rule that a pledgee cannot purchase at his own sale does not apply to a judicial sale made by an officer of the law.[52] Mere inadequacy of price is not, in itself, ground for setting aside the sale,[53] nor is a sale invalidated by a slight misdescription of the property where no prejudice results to the pledgor.[54] The pledgor may be estopped by acquiescence and conduct from contesting the validity of a sale,[55] or he may waive a sale altogether.[56] The pledgee will be required to account to the pledgor for any surplus remaining in his hands after he has been fully reimbursed.[57] In an action by an assignee to recover a surplus, it is immaterial what consideration the plaintiff paid the pledgor or that he gave none or whether he was an innocent purchaser.[58] In such action the issue should be confined to the indebtedness of the pledgor to the pledgee as it was at the date of notice of the assignment.[59] If the proceeds of the sale of two wrongful pledges become inseparably mixed, they will be divided ratably between the true owners.[60]

Where a mortgage is pledged and the pledgee acquires title to land by foreclosure, he holds the land in trust for the pledgor as security in lieu of the mortgage,[61] but if there is an agreement that the pledgee may acquire title absolutely in his own right and he does so, a duty then devolves upon him to account to the pledgor for the valuation at which he acquired the title.[62] A pledge in the nature of an equitable lien or charge must be enforced by an equitable action or counterclaim and cannot be asserted under an answer which merely sets up a statutory lien of a different character.[63] satisfactory to plaintiff pledgor was obtained, the fact that certain stock pledged was sold upon a rising market was immaterial. Smith v. Becker [Wis.] 109 N. W. 131. 54. Where, before certain six per cent. bonds were pledged, the interest was changed to five per cent., but they had never been so stamped, and in a notice of foreclosure they were described as six per cent. bonds, such misdescription was not fatal to the validity of the sale, it being shown that six per cent. bonds of the same issue were sold by the same auctioneers before and after the sale in question, for the same price as the five per cent. bonds. 63. Defendant in replevin, who merely pleaded a boardinghouse keeper's lien under Rev. St. 1898, § 3344, could not hold the property by showing that a wife had pledged it for a board debt due from her husband for the board of both, Chickering-Chase

Right of action on the debt.[64]—While it is a good defense that the pledgee refuses to surrender the property in any event,[65] a pledge does not alter the liability of the debtor on the principal obligation,[66] and so the creditor may prosecute his claim to judgment and still retain his lien.[67] The testimony of defendant that he understood that plaintiff had taken certain notes as payment is insufficient to overcome a finding that they were accepted merely as collateral.[68]

Effect of insolvency and bankruptcy.[69]—The fact that the pledgor has become bankrupt does not affect the right of the pledgee to have the contract of pledge reformed in a suit against the bankrupt and his trustee.[70] Under the present bankruptcy act, a pledgee is at liberty until the date of the adjudication to convert the security into money pursuant to his contract and thereafter prove the unsatisfied balance of his claim.[71] A pledge given to cover any liability thereafter contracted will entitle the pledgee to maintain his right to the property pledged for such future liability as against the pledgor's trustee in bankruptcy.[72] A creditor of a bankrupt partnership holding securities of an individual partner as pledge is entitled to have his claim against the partnership allowed without any deduction.[73]

Equities and defenses between one of the parties and third persons.[74]—The pledgee of a note may sue on it as owner,[75] though by such proceeding defendant will not be cut off from equities he might have pleaded had plaintiff sued as pledgee.[76] Plaintiff is entitled to the judgment for the full amount, with liability to account to the owner of the note for any surplus,[77] but this rule does not obtain where the pledgor is himself made a party to the action.[78] In a suit on pledged collateral, the immaturity or contingency of the principal obligation is immaterial.[79] The pledgor of a promissory note may sue thereon though the pledgee also has that right,[80] but in such case the pledgee is a necessary party unless the note is transferred back to the pledgor before trial.[81] A pledgee of the interest of the pledgor in a mortgage held by another pledgee with directions to turn such interest over to the second pledgee after satisfaction of the debt may maintain a bill in equity against the parties interested to compel the payment of such balance.[82] Where an owner of stock makes a fraudulent sale through an innocent pledgee, the latter may recover from the purchaser the amount of his interest as pledgee but cannot recover the full purchase price.[83] One who assigns a debt to another without transfering collaterals to which the latter thus becomes entitled will be required to exhaust the collaterals before proceeding against the assignee to recover the consideration.[84] A pledgee of an insolvent who sues exclusively for the purpose of establishing a preference as against other creditors is not entitled to charge the fund with counsel fees and expenses.[85]

Bona fide pledgees of negotiable paper will be protected,[86] but where a pledged note is saved from nullity only because taken by a pledgee in good faith before maturity, the judgment against the maker will not be absolute, but will be so framed as to be executory only in so far as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of the pledge.[87] Where one takes collateral under such circumstances as not to be an innocent holder,[88] a surety who pays the debt takes it also subject to equities.[89] An assignee of a note in the hands of a pledge holder as security for different claims takes it subject to such claims and cannot by failing to make inquiry occupy the position of an innocent purchaser.[90] If a pledgee receives other property in good faith from a person clothed with apparent ownership, he may hold the property against the real owner,[91] if the latter authorized or contributed to such ownership.[92] A pledgor of corporate stock who has not conferred upon the pledgee apparent ownership may follow the stock into the hands of third persons to whom it has been wrongfully sold[93] in the absence of some element of estoppel,[94] and his rights in this respect does not depend on reimbursement to the purchaser.[95] Where in such case the transferee refuses to surrender the stock on demand, the owner is entitled to either the stock itself or its value at the time of trial.[96] Where a new corporation is organized to take over the property of an old one whose stock is held in pledge, but before the new stock is issued the pledgor assigns a portion of it to one having notice, such assignee takes subject to the rights of the first pledgee.[97]

While in Texas a mere lienholder it not entitled to the remedy of the trial of the rights of property, such remedy is given to a pledgee if an officer in making a levy takes possession of the property to the exclusion of the pledgee.[98] The lien of a pledge will prevail over a prior mortgage of which the pledgee had no notice,[99] and a pledge of a bill of lading prevails over a subsequent attachment of the goods in the hands of the carrier.[1] Where a bank takes bills of lading as security for money expended on a shipment, it is entitled to hold the property until the debt is paid,[2] and its right to so hold it is not affected by the fact that the bills are exchanged for warehouse receipts,[3] even though the receipts are nonnegotiable.[4] The fact that the bank subsequently sells the property and takes the buyer's note will not impair its security if the warehouse receipts are still retained under agreement that they be held in pledge.[5]

The holder of collateral pledged as security for a debt, having undertaken in a court of equity to account to the other creditors of the pledgor, is bound to show that he has taken from the fund no greater sum than was secured by the pledge.[6]

A pledgee of national bank stock renders himself laible as stockholder where with the consent of the pledgor he credits the value of the stock on the debt and collects only the balance[7] and this notwithstanding the registered ownership is in another person who holds the stock for him.[8]

An indictment for prescribing morphine contrary to Acts 29th Leg. p. 45, § 2, which act contains a proviso that it shall not prevent any physician from prescribing, in good faith, for the use of any habitual user of narcotic drugs, such substances as he deems necessary, must allege that defendant did not deem the morphine prescribed necessary for the habit, an allegation of bad faith not being sufficient. POSSESSION, WRIT OF.[18]

The writ issues only for the possession of real property,[14] and, if personalty be seized thereunder, the owner's remedy is by common law action.[15] While equity will not enjoin the seizure of property not covered by the writ where there is an adequate remedy at law,[16] it will restrain execution at the suit of an occupant who was not a party to the action in which it was awarded and does not claim under any party thereto,[17] though if he be ousted it will not restore possession without a showing of injury.[18] A false return of service and delivery may be quashed and an alias writ issued upon due showing.[19]

POSSESSORY WARRANT.[20]

A possessory warrant does not lie to determine the right of possession where it was originally obtained under contract and without fraud.[21]

POSTAL LAW.

§ 1. The Federal Postal System and Its Administration (1441).
§ 2. Use of Mails, and Mail Matter (1442).
§ 3. Postal Crimes and Offenses (1443). Use of Mails to Defraud (1443). Embezzlement and Larceny From the Mails (1445).

§ 1. The Federal postal system and its administration.[22]—The constitutional power of congress over the postal system is not infringed by a state statute making the liability of a railroad to a mail clerk the same as that to an employe.[23] The postmaster general has no power to discontinue a post office at a county seat for the purpose of consolidation,[24] and if he does so, mandamus will lie to compel restoration [25] at the instance of the citizens.[26] A railway postal clerk is not entitled to reimbursement for expenses incurred on his regular run.[27] A letter carrier is entitled to pay during suspension unless the suspension is specified to be without pay

14. Personal property cannot be seized. Keystone Coal Co. v. Williams [Pa.] 65 A. 407.

15. Where reference is made to the personalty in the judgment, writ, and return, the defendant's remedy is by common-law action and not by rule to open judgment and vacate the writ. Keystone Coal Co. v. Williams [Pa.] 65 A. 407.

Brodgen, 67 Ga. 24; Wynn v. Harrison, 111 Ga. 816, 35 S. E. 643; and Sheriff v. Thompson, 116 Ga. 436, 42 S. E. 738, distinguished. Id. The power conferred by Civ. Code 1895, § 4807, upon the judge of the superior court upon a hearing of a certiorari from a magistrate in a possessory warrant case to render a final judgment therein has no application where the possessory warrant is not the appropriate remedy. 27. The appropriation for actual and necessary expenses of railway postal clerks, "while actually traveling on business of the department and away from their designated headquarters," applies only to special runs. Parshall v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 433; Hartman v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 133. Nor is such clerk an "office clerk or employe traveling under the order or direction of the postmaster general." Id.

or the restoration is specified to be with loss of pay.[28] Postmasters claiming additional compensation under a readjustment must show positively the readjustment[29] by record evidence unless proper foundation for parol is laid.[30] While a postmaster is liable on his bond for recommending and securing the appointment of an unnecessary employe in his office,[31] and for wages paid an appointee who does not render services therein, the mere fact that the employe does some of the work through a sub-employe creates no liability,[32] and a recital in his bookkeeper's statement of account that no services were rendered,[33] or the fact that the employe did not report to his successor for work,[34] are not admissible to disprove a bona fide employment. The proposal bond of a bidder for a contract to carry mail is liable, upon breach, for the full amount therein stated; irrespective of the injury sustained,[35] and a recovery of the actual damages from the contract surety is no defense to a suit thereon.[36] Courts cannot take judicial notice of the postal department regulations.[37]

§ 2. Use of mails, and mail matter.[38]—A determination by the postmaster general as to classification under the postal rate law will not be disturbed by the courts unless clearly erroneous.[39] A publication to be entitled to the second class rates as a "periodical" must not only have the feature of periodicity, but must be periodical in the ordinary sense.[40] The postmaster general may recover upon an undertaking given as a condition to a temporary injunction restraining the enforcement of a higher rate upon final determination in his favor.[41] A corporation is not entitled to have mail delivered to it in preference to another corporation of a similar name which rightfully used the same in the state.[42]

33. Rev. St. U. S. § 886 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 670), merely authorizes the admission in evidence, in a suit against an officer charged with the disbursment of public moneys, a certified copy of the bookkeeper's plain statement of account, and does not authorize the admission of a recital therein that no services were rendered in return for moneys paid to a certain laborer. Nagle v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 302.

35. Especially where it recites that it is given pursuant to and subject to the terms of Act June 23, 1874, c. 456, § 12, 18 Stat. 235 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2695), which provides that the amount of the bond is liquidated damages. United States v. Alcorn, 145 F. 995; United States v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 151 F. 534.

36. In an action on a proposal bond given by a bidder for a contract to carry mail under Act. June 23, 1874, c. 456, § 12, 18 Stat. 235 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2695), for a breach of the contract, it is no defense that the government has recovered the actual damages from the surety on the contract. United States v. Alcorn, 145 F. 995.

37. A Federal appellate court can not take judicial notice of regulations of the postal department, but when relied on they should be read and put into the record in the trial court. Nagle v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 302.

38. See 6 C. L. 1073.

39. United States v. Cortelyou, 28 App. D. C. 570. The publication "Wiener Chic," devoted to dressmaking, and consisting of colored plates showing costumes, etc., patterns of which are for sale by the publishers, is not so clearly a "periodical publication" as to justify the courts in reversing a determination of the postmaster general to the contrary. United States v. Cortelyou, 28 App. D. C. 570.

40. Although a publication must conform to § 14, Act of Congress of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. at L. 355, c. 180, U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2647), to be entitled to second class rates, it must also be a "periodical publication" within § 10, which means not only must it be published periodically, but must be a periodical in the ordinary sense of the term. United States v. Cortelyou, 28 App. D. C. 570.

41. Contention that the back rates can only be collected by the United States, and since it was not a party to the injunction suit, no liability on the undertaking exists, held without merit. Cortelyou v. Houghton, 27 App. D. C. 188; Cortelyou v. Bates & Guild Co., 27 App. D. C. 201.

42. Where a foreign corporation doing business in Illinois had not complied with regulatory statutes in respect thereto at the time of the incorporation of an Illinois corporation under a name practically identical, it cannot maintain a bill to have mail delivered to it in preference to the Illinois corporation where there is nothing to indicate to which it belongs. Central Trust Co. v. Central Trust Co., 149 F. 789.

a lottery,[43] or a fraudulent scheme,[44] which scheme need not be lacking in all the clements of a legitimate business,[45] nor is it material that a full equivalent is given for the money received.[46] Congressmen cannot appear for compensation in a fraud order inquiry before the postoffice department.[47]

§ 3. Postal crimes and offenses.[48]—Any one who knowingly[49] mails or causes to be mailed[50] any obscene matter,[51] or information as to where the same may be procured, is criminally liable. A count alleging two reasons why the circular was nonmailable under the statute is not objectionable as double.[52]

Use of mails to defraud.[53]—Any person who, having devised a fraudulent scheme or artifice[54] with intent to defraud[55] to be effected by the use of the

43. A scheme conducted by the issuance of "diamond leases" arranged in series and consecutively numbered, each purchaser to pay $110 in installments, to be applied in fixed proportions to the expenses of the company and the redemption of the oldest leases of the same and prior series by the purchase and delivery of certain diamonds, the company having no other funds, is a lottery within Rev. St. §§ 3920, 4041, as amended by Act Sept. 19, 1890, c. 908, §§ 2, 3, 26, Stat. 466 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 2686, 2749). Preferred Mercantile Co. v. Hibbard, 142 F. 877.

44. A promise to refund the purchase price if the goods were not satisfactory, and a return thereof in a few instances, is not conclusive against an intent to defraud. Harris v. Rosenberger [C. C. A.] 145 F. 449. While considerable latitude is allowed to trade puffing, it does not extend to misrepresentations of material facts made with the intent and adapted to deceive. Id.

45. Authority under Rev. St. §§ 3929, 4041 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 2686, 2749). Harris v. Rosenberger [C. C. A.] 145 F. 449.

46. Harris v. Rosenberger [C. C. A.] 145 F. 449.

47. A fraud order inquiry pending before the postoffice department is a proceeding in which the United States is "directly or indirectly interested" within U. S. Rev. St. § 1782, prohibiting a senator to appear in any such proceeding. Burton v. U. S., 26 S. Ct. 688.

48. See 6 C. L. 1074

49. An indictment charging the defendant with "willfully, unlawfully, wrongfully, and knowingly," mailing an obscene circular, the sufficiency of which is not questioned until after verdict, must be construed to mean that it was mailed with knowledge of its contents. Burton v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 57.

50. Where, in the execution of a joint enterprise, one partner deposits a nonmailable circular in the mails by the authorization of another or with his knowledge and acquiescense, the latter causes the circular to be deposited within Rev. St. § 3893 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658). Burton v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 57. A defendant knowingly causes the article to be deposited when he so acts that the same will naturally and probably go into the mails. Wrote an article for a newspaper which he knew was distributed through the mails. Demolli v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 363. Defendant need not be responsible for the mailing of the entire contents, as where one writes for a newspaper knowing it is distributed through the mail. Id.

51. The entire contents need not be objectionable. Demolli v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 363. Where the acts described and the ideas conveyed in a book are calculated to deprave the morals of the reader by exciting sexual desires and libidinous thoughts, the book is obscene within Rev. St. § 3893, (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658), notwithstanding the information is accurate and scientific and of value to mankind. Burton v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 57. In determining whether or not a book is obscene under Rev. St. § 3893 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658), the entire book need not be considered, but only the alleged obscene parts and so much of the context as is necessary to a proper understanding. Id. If the matter was in fact obscene and defendant knew its contents, it is immaterial that he did not regard it of obscene character. Id. Hence communications with the postal authorities as to its mailability are not admissible to show good faith. Id.

52. A count for mailing a single copy of a circular nonmailable under Rev. St. § 3893 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658), was not double because it alleged two reasons why it was nonmailable, viz., that it gave information where an obscene book could be obtained and was itself obscene. Burton v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 57.

53. See 6 C. L. 1074.

54. There must be a fraudulent scheme or artifice. Brown v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 60. The fraudulent scheme may consist of expressions of opinion or assurances of past, present, or future, conditions, provided they be designed and reasonably adapted to deceive. Brooks v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 223. Laudatory and extravagent advertisements held in themselves to constitute most convincing evidence of a fraudulent scheme. Id. A scheme to induce persons by letters to send money for life readings is one to defraud, if accused intended to and did return a stock letter purporting to be a special reading. United States v. White, 150 F. 379. A scheme to induce persons to purchase paper made in imitation of parchment represented to be pure and as having certain charms over the lives of persons using it is fraudulent if the accused knew the representations to be false. Id. Indictment held to sufficiently alleged a fraudulent scheme to obtain money under the guise of a brokage business. Brooks v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 223.

55. Where the alleged fraudulent scheme consisted of offers to impart information to persons sending money as to how they could acquire occult and supernatural power, the question is not whether defendant could per-

United States mail,[56] deposits or causes to be deposited[57] any matter in the mail in furtherance thereof,[58] is criminally liable under Rev. St. § 5480. While the indictment must allege all the essential elements,[59] the gravamen of the offense being the depositing of matter in the mail in furtherance of the fraudulent enterprise,[60] the scheme need not be pleaded with the same particularity as is required in respect to the mailing,[61] though it must be set out with sufficient certainty to show its existence and character and to fairly acquaint the accused with what he must meet.[62] The particular scheme charged must be proven[63] substantially as alleged.[64] Generally speaking, anything which tends to show the fraudulent character of the scheme[65] as correspondence of the accused[66] or his agent,[67] though not the particular letter pleaded and relied upon for conviction,[68] is admissible. While a single indictment cannot charge more than three offenses committed within the same six form such promises, but whether he in good faith intended and believed he could do so. United States v. White, 150 F. 379.

56. The scheme must contemplate the use of the mails. Brown v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 60; Brooks v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 223. Not necessary that the mails be the sole means of effecting the fraud. It is sufficient if it was simply used to induce the victim to call upon the accused. Brown v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 60. Evidence that defendant published advertisements soliciting persons who read the same to write to him, and that he had made arrangements to carry on a systematic correspondence upon receiving letters justifies a finding that the scheme was to be effected through the mails. United States v. White, 150 F. 379.

57. Evidence that defendant was the owner of the business and had charge of the correspondence, and that letters relating to the business were mailed, justifies the jury in drawing the inference that they were mailed by defendant or under his direction. Brooks v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 223.

58. While there must be a deposit in furtherance of the scheme (Brown v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 60), the letter need not contain any false representations (Rumble v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 772). Where the alleged scheme was to insert advertisements in newspapers, inviting correspondence in respect to a trade of merchandise, and "upon receiving inquiries" from such persons "as might read the advertisements", etc., a direct charge that the letter deposited was in furtherance of the scheme is sufficient without an allegation that it was directed to one who had read the advertisement and had answered. Brown v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 60.

59. An indictment which states the essential elements of the offense with such reasonable particularity of act, intent, time, place, and circumstances, as will apprise the defendant of the nature of the accusation and enable him to prepare his defense and plead his conviction or acquittal in bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense is sufficient. Brown v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 60.

60. An instruction that defendant cannot be convicted for devising a fraudulent scheme, but that the gravamen of the offense consisted of depositing mail in furtherance thereof, and that the jury must find that defendant placed or caused the letters to be placed in the mail as alleged held correct. Brooks v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 223.

61, 62. Brooks v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 223.

63. One charged with the use of the mails to effect a fraudulent scheme to sell "green paper as counterfeit money" cannot be convicted of a scheme to sell "counterfeit money." Beck v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 625.

64. Brown v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 219. A scheme alleged to consist of inserting an advertisement in a newspaper containing the words "How to speculate on Board of Trade, sent free by J. L. Brown & Co.", etc., to induce the public to send money for purchases on the board which defendant intended to convert, is not supported by proof that one sent $1,000, with instructions to buy options on pork, that defendant immediately returned a memorandum showing a sale by him to the sender, which was in accordance with bucket shop practice and satisfactory to the purchaser, and that the only difficulty arose upon settlement. Id.

65. Where it is shown that defendant participated in the procurement of a false and laudatory letter and affidavit used in advertising such advertisements and copies of the letter and affidavit are admissible. Brooks v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 223. Where a witness testified that he and his father were defrauded by defendant, and that he transacted the entire business because of the extreme age of the father he may testify that the father was induced by the false statements to purchase. Rumble v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 772. Where the fraudulent scheme consisted of inducing parties to enter into contracts impossible of performance, evidence relating to the possibility of performance is admissible. Klein v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 151 F. 420.

66. A letter written to defendant and not answered, but which is shown to be a part of a larger corespondence between the parties, and which in connection with such correspondence tends to show that the alleged representations made by defendant are false, is admissible. Rumble v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 772.

67. Especially where approved by the accused. Rumble v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 772. Where it is shown that a letter by an agent containing false representations was approved by defendant, it is immaterial how much of the information therein was acquired by a personal investigation by the agent. Id.

68. Prosecution is not limited to the letters pleaded. Brooks v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 223; Rumble v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 772

calendar months,[69] several indictments may be tried together to avoid delay and expense where the accused is not prejudiced thereby,[70] though they allege more than three offenses extending over more than six months.[71]

Embezzlement and larceny from the mails.[72]—While the strict rules of pleading applicable to larceny do not apply to the statutory crime of feloniously stealing mail,[73] the indictment must allege an unlawful or fraudulent taking.[74] An indictment for statutory embezzlement by a postal clerk must allege that the money came into his hands as such clerk.[75]

POWERS.

§ 1. Nature and Kinds (1445).
§ 2. Creation, Construction, Validity, and Effect (1445).
§ 3. Execution of Powers (1446).

§ 1. Nature and kinds.[76]—In the most common acceptation of the term, a power is an authority vested in one person to dispose of or limit an interest in lands belonging to another.[77] Mere powers of attorney to convey land are elsewhere treated.[78]

§ 2. Creation, construction, validity, and effect.[79]—Power to dispose of a fee may be given to a life tenant.[80] The kind of power created is largely a matter of construction.[81] A power to dispose of a fund "to and among" grandchildren in such shares and manner as the donee shall think proper is nonexclusive.[82] A mere naked collateral power repugnant to an absolute fee is void.[83] Where the title to land is conveyed to secure a debt and the instrument is not merely a mortgage, a power of sale is coupled with an interest and is not revoked by the death of the

69. The charging of offenses not committed within the same six calendar months, contrary to Rev. St. § 5480, as amended March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. 873, c. 393, § 1 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3696]), is no ground for quashing the indictment where a nolle prosequi is entered as to the objectionable counts. Rumble v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 772.

71. Rev. St. § 5480 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3696), limiting the number of offenses which may be charged in a single indictment to three committed within the same six calendar months, held not to prohibit such joint trial. Brown v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 60.

72. See 6 C. L. 1074.

73. Do not apply to offenses created by Rev. St. § 5469 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3692). Bowers v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 379. Sufficient if it charges that defendant unlawfully stole from a designated post office a letter, described sufficiently for identification, and it is unnecessary to aver that it contained anything of value, whose property it was, or that it was in the post office for transmission through the mails. Id.

74. In order to constitute an offense under Rev. St. 5469 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3692), the mail must be taken unlawfully or fraudulently and an indictment leaving it open to an inference that the mail might have been mistakenly delivered is demurrable though it follows the language of the statute. United States v. Meyers, 142 F. 907.

75. Indictment under Rev. St. § 4046, (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2752), held defective for failing to allege that defendant received the money as a clerk, though following the language of the statute. United States v. Allen, 150 F. 152.

81. A provision in a will that if the "use and improvement" of certain real estate should be insufficient for the support of a widow, she might sell so much as would be sufficient for that purpose, created a limited power of sale in case the "use and improvement" became insufficient. debtor.[84] A power to dispose of real estate by the joint act of the donee and another ceases to exist upon the death of the latter.[85] Land held by an equitable life tenant with a limited, contingent, power of appointment by will cannot be subjected to the claims of creditors of the donee after his death.[86]

§ 3. Execution of powers.[87]—The execution of a power of sale contained in a security deed is not a suit against the administrator of the debtor so as to require a delay before action can be taken.[88] A devisee of a life estate with a limited power of sale in case of necessity may exercise the power on the actual existence of the necessity without an order of court.[89] A power of revocation reserved to a grantor is personal to him and cannot be exercised by his heirs.[90] A power vested in several donees must be exercised by a majority,[91] but if exercised by a minority, the others may ratify.[92] A general residuary clause in the will of a donee will be treated as an appointment unless the will indicates a different intent.[93] The question of whether a deed was made in execution of a power is one of intention to be gathered from circumstances and the terms of the deed.[94] Where the deed is silent and the grantor had an interest which could pass without regard to the power, this tends strongly to show that there was no intention to execute the power,[95] but this common-law rule of construction does not apply where a contrary intent is shown.[96] A fee simple deed by a donee without any vested legal interest is construed as an execution of the power, though no reference is made thereto.[97] A general unrestricted power to dispose of land in fee simple includes power to mortgage it,[98] and where the mortgage contains limitations over of the surplus after satisfaction of the debt, it will operate as a complete execution of the power.[99] A power to devise real estate in equal or unequal shares to any or all persons of a certain class may be properly exercised by an appointment of the land to one person subject to a money charge in favor of the others.[1] A power to dispose of a specified sum of money to one class

1. Power to appoint to any or all children or grandchildren in such shares as a widow should elect justified her in imposing a charge on share devised to a grandchild for debts of grandchild's father and brother to

of appointees and the balance to another class is not validly executed by the appointment of a larger sum to the one class and selection of members of the two classes not mentioned in the alternative disposition of the donor in case of no appointment.[2] Where a power is nonexclusive, an appointment excluding any intended appointee is invalid.[3] Whether an appointment in excess of a special and restricted power is wholly void depends upon whether the excess is distinct and separable from the authorized portion of the appointment.[4] An appointment long asquiesced in may be held valid though it was not strictly regular.[5] In the case of an imperfect execution of a power, equity will interpose to carry out the intention of the donee in favor of persons peculiarly within its protective power,[6] but will not aid mere volunteers.[7] An imperative power coupled with a trust as distinguished from a mere naked or discretionary power [8] must be executed,[9] and if an execution attempted in good faith proves void, equity will protect innocent parties by subrogating them to the rights of the beneficiary.[10] A valid exercise of a power of appointment immediately vests title in the appointee.[11] Where a power reserved to a grantor gives to him the right to dispose of the land to others for his own benefit,[12] and the power is exercised by a subsequent conveyance to a third person, a reconveyance by such person is immaterial on the issue of the rights of the original grantee.[13] It has been held in New York that where an estate is devised to remaindermen subject to a power of appointment in the life tenant which is executed by the latter in such manner that the remaindermen take exactly the same estate as they would have taken in the absence of any appointment, the remaindermen may elect to take under the will of the donor and not under the power of appointment.[14] Upon the death of a grantor in a security deed with power of sale, the property should be sold as a part of his estate.[15]

§ 1. Nature and Classes (1448).
§ 2. Custody, Discipline, Government, and Employment of Inmates (1448). Credits for Good Behavior (1448).
§ 3. Administration and Fiscal Affairs (1449).

§ 1. Nature and classes.[16]

§ 2. Custody, discipline, government, and employment of inmates.[17]—The legality of a confinement in a particular place cannot be determined in habeas corpus proceedings in the Federal court for release on the ground of incarceration without due process of law.[18] In Kentucky a circuit court may, in its discretion, transfer a prisoner from one jail to another in the same county,[19] and the governor of Oklahoma may direct the return of an insane convict imprisoned in Kansas under contract to the county committing him.[20]

In Michigan a mechanical trade, or any part thereof,[21] cannot be taught to convicts either by theoretical teachings or by practical work.[22]

In Texas the defendant must be under sixteen years of age at the time of trial to entitle him to a reformatory sentence,[23] and under the Missouri statute the court and not the jury determines whether such a sentence shall be imposed.[24] A deputy warden in Michigan has power in the absence of the warden to issue a warrant for the return of a parolled prisoner who has violated the terms of his release.[25]

Credits for good behavior.[26]—A statute authorizing the commutation of a penal sentence for good behavior according to a specific schedule of credits[27] is valid and becomes a part of the sentence.[28] The Federal act in relation thereto is not applicable to sentences imposed before it took effect.[29] Before such act Federal prison-

Note: Since the devise of the remainder to the heirs at law of the children was made subject to the power of each child to devise it to his or her heirs at law or collateral relatives, it would seem that when this power was in fact exercised the devise of the grandfather to the remaindermen lapsed, and the fact that in this particular case the appointment attempted to carry only an estate identical with that devised by the grandfather should not affect the question.—Editor.

ers, being subject to the same discipline as state convicts in the same prison, were entitled to credits according to the state law,[30] and the state authorities have the power to parol such convicts.[31] Where one of several cumulative sentences is invalid, the deduction for good behavior must be computed upon the aggregate of the valid sentences only.[32] While earned credits are not forfeited by the breach of a subsequent conditional pardon,[33] it may be decreased for insubordination in some states.[34]

all original writs, summonses, and orders. A court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the rights of litigants without notice actual or constructive,[46] and knowledge on the part of a defendant will not supply the want of service.[47] Notices required to be given in judicial proceedings are ordinarily held sufficient if the object and intent of the law is substantially attained thereby.[48]

Designation of court and parties.[49] A plaintiff may designate a defendant in petition and summons by such name as he supposes he possesses if in verifying his petition he shall state that he could not discover the true name.[50] A mistake in the name of a plaintiff or defendant is no ground for quashing the writ or the service,[51] and the omission of a defendant's Christian name is not fatal if the right person was in fact served.[52] A statute providing a manner of service if defendant is a lunatic does not require the summons to be issued against him as a lunatic.[53] A warning order issued in a suit for divorce in Arkansas warning a nonresident to appear in the action is not a writ or judicial process within the statute of that state providing that writs or judicial process shall run in the name of the state.[54]

Signing and sealing.[55]—A process should be signed by the clerk himself or by some one in his presence,[56] but if signed by one authorized by the clerk in his absence, it will not be void but only irregular.[57] Surplus titles attached to the clerk's name will not invalidate a notice otherwise properly signed.[58] Failure to state in a summons the street number of plaintiff's attorney is not jurisdictional.[59] A summons without a seal is held void by some authorities,[60] while by others the omission is considered a mere irregularity.[61] In Louisiana the service of a citation though it has no seal will stop the running of limitations.[62]

Indorsement.[63]—A statute requiring the indorsement on a process of the name and place of residence of an assignee is mandatory and must be complied with.[64]

The apearance day.[69]—The notice of commencement of suit and copy of the bill will be considered together for the purpose of determining the term of court at which defendant is required to appear.[70]

Alias, counterpart, or supplemental process.[73]—An alias summons cannot issue without a previous return that the original summons cannot be served,[74] neither can it issue after a cause has been stricken,[75] unless the cause has been reinstated.[76] A second summons if not sufficient as an alias writ may be treated as a new summons for a new suit, if limitations has not run and the first suit failed for want of service.[77]

§ 2. Issuance.[78]—When process is issued out of a court of general jurisdiction, all the essential requisities of the statute must be substantially complied with.[79] If a statute requires proof of the existence of certain facts to be made before process can issue and there is an entire absence of proof as to any of the essential facts, the process is void;[80] but if there is proof having a legal tendency to establish every essential fact, the process is not void even if erroneously issued because the evidence adduced is legally insufficient.[81] To be valid process must be issued by an officer having authority,[82] and within the time prescribed by law,[83] and if a statute prohibits its issuance on a legal holiday, process issued and served on such a day is void.[84] If the cause of action remains substantially the same it is not necessary to issue a new summons on amended or supplemental petitions,[85] and where an original complaint discloses the character of the claims of cross complainants and fairly informs defendant that these claims will be adjudicated, it is not necessary that summons issue on the cross complaint as against parties in court on the original complaint.[86]

§ 3. Extraterritorial effect or validity.[87]—In the absence of express statute, a court has no power to order personal service of process on a defendant beyond its territorial jurisdiction.[88] A personal judgment is not authorized on such service.[89] The difference between jurisdiction in rem and in personam [90] and the extraterritorial effect of judgments [91] are discussed elsewhere.

§ 4. Actual service. A. Personal. In general.[92]—Personal service in lieu of publication is treated in a subsequent section.[93] In the absence of appearance or other waiver,[94] actual service is essential to the rendition of a binding judgment in personam.[95] Service must be made within the time [96] and in the manner prescribed by statute,[97] especially in the case of infants [98] or insane persons;[99] but if a

St. 1903, p. 227, c. 22 (Chancery Code) § 16, where suit was commenced to November term, and defendant was not served thirty days prior to the first day of such term, but default was not entered until December term and defendant was served thirty days before the first day of the latter term, a sufficient time intervened between date of service and date of default. Williams v. Williams, 221 Ill. 541, 77. N. E. 928.

97. Service on a creditor in receivership proceedings of an order to show cause why he should not repay a portion of the assets to cover expenses of the receivership, the order purporting to be issued in a case of the receiver against the creditor, is not such service of process as is necessary to institute defendant is actually served, mere defects or irregularities are not jurisdictional,[1] but can render the judgment in the case voidable only.[2] Where service is not had on defendant but on a total stranger to the suit, no jurisdiction is acquired thereby over the person or property of any one.[3] In cases of attachment where no personal judgment is sought, the levy takes the place of service.[4]

Upon nonresidents or their agents.[5]—The Vermont statute authorizing the service of a certified copy of the writ on a co-defendant on whom the original could not be served because of his absence from the state applies to nonresidents as well as to residents of the state.[6] In the absence of waiver a nonresident or a foreign corporation must be served personally within the state before jurisdiction in personam can be acquired.[7]

Upon municipal corporations.[8]

Upon domestic corporations.[9]—Though a statute providing a method of serving process does not mention corporations by name, they will be included if they fall within the general reason and design of the act,[10] and such service on a corporation defendant is authorized as is equivalent to personal service on an individual.[11] Statutes generally provide for service on an agent or managing agent.[12] By "managing agent" is meant any person holding some responsible representative relation to the corporation such as the term managing agent would ordinarily include.[13] A statute requiring the public record of an agent upon whom process "may" be served does not provide an exclusive method of acquiring jurisdiction.[14] An agent of a lessee railroad company is not the agent of the lessor corporation for the purpose of service upon the latter.[15] Where a statute provides for service on certain officials, if service cannot be had on other chief officials, an attempt must be made to serve the chief officials before the alternative service can be resorted to.[16] A service of summons on a corporation by leaving a certified copy at the usual place of residence of the president does not answer the statutory requirements, in Ohio.[17] Where a statute provides that suits against a corporation shall be brought in the county where some person resides upon whom process may be served, service in such county gives no jurisdiction where the action is brought in another county.[18]

Upon foreign corporations.[19]—Statutes regulating the service of process on foreign corporations are liberally construed,[20] and where several methods of procedure are provided neither one is exclusive.[21] When a foreign corporation does business within the state or district,[22] service may ordinarily be had on its president or other officer,[23] or on its agent or attorney,[24] managing agent,[25] or person conducting its business.[26] A statute authorizing service on an agent does not require that the agent be a general one, but is complied with though the agent has only limited authority.[27]

22. A foreign newspaper corporation which in addition to its ordinary business of publishing a newspaper at its domicile maintains a permanent office force in the District of Columbia charged with the duty of furnishing general press reports to other newspapers is "doing business" in the district within D. C. Code, § 1537 (31 St. 1419, c. 854). Ricketts v. Sun Printing & Pub. Ass'n, 27 App. D. C. 222.

23. Under Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, p. 1500, c. 580, § 31), authorizing service on the president, etc., of a corporation resident in the city, held, where the president of a foreign corporation was served, the court obtained jurisdiction, it not appearing that such officer was a nonresident of the city. A service of summons on a foreign corporation by delivering a copy thereof to a superintendent of such company, "he being in charge of the usual place of doing business of said company," but it not appearing that he is the "managing agent" of said company, is defective and will be quashed if it appears that the corporation as required by Rev. St. 148d, has designated another person as the one on whom process should be served. State v. King Bridge Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 537.

26. Under D. C. Code, § 1537, service may be had upon the person conducting its business regardless of whether he is technically the agent of the foreign corporation. Ricketts v. Sun Printing & Pub. Ass'n, 27 App. D. C. 222.

27. Could be made on attorney who had obtained judgment which it was sought to set aside. Sellers v. Home Fertilizer Chemical Works [S. C.] 56 S. E. 978.

A "managing agent" is one who is required to exercise his independent judgment in the exclusive control of some department of the business of the corporation.[28] Service on an officer of a foreign corporation only temporarily within the state does not confer jurisdiction where the corporation does no business in the state and has no agent or property therein,[29] and a statute authorizing a personal judgment against any foreign corporation upon service on the state auditor is unconstitutional.[30]

Statutes often require foreign corporations doing business within the state to designate in writing a person on whom process may be served,[31] and provide for service on some state officer if no designation is made,[32] or if for any reason the corporation shall cease to have a statutory agent.[33] Such statutes do not as a rule provide an exclusive method of service,[34] unless they are the only legislation on the subject.[35]

To authorize the service of process in a Federal court on an agent or officer of a foreign corporation temporarily within the state or district, the corporation must be actually and substantially engaged in business within the state or district,[36] its Olender v. Crystalline Min. Co. [Cal.] 86 P. 1082.

32. A statute requiring foreign corporations to designate an agent on whom process may be served and in default thereof that service will be made on the secretary of state is constitutional. Olender v. Crystalline Min. Co. [Cal.] 86 P. 1082. St. 1899, p. 111, c. 94, substitutes service on the secretary of state for service by publication prescribed by Code Civ. 33. An insurance company being a foreign corporation doing business in California may be served under § 411, Code Civ. Proc. if it has a "managing or business agent, cashier or secretary" within the state, or, if it has filed with the insurance commissioner the name of its agent, it may also be served under Pol. Code, § 616, but substituted service under this section may be had on the insurance commissioner only when the company has ceased to have the agent specified therein. Buckingham v. North German Fire Ins. Co., 149 F. 622. Substituted service on the secretary of state provided for by statute in case of the death or removal of the designated agent of a foreign corporation doing business within the state is not authorized after the corporation has ceased to do business therein. Not authorized under § 16 of general corporation law of New York (Laws 1892, p. 1806, c. 687), where corporation merely maintained an action in the state court relating to its previous business therein. 34. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 2818, requiring foreign insurance companies to appoint agents on whom process may be served is not exclusive, but service may be had on an agent merely authorized to solicit insurance as provided by 2 Ann. Ballinger's Codes & St. § 4875. Tatum v. Niagara Fire Ins Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 660. A foreign insurance company in California may be served under § 411, Code Civ. Proc. if it has a "managing or business agent, cashier or secretary" in the state, or under Pol. Code, § 616, if it has filed with insurance commissioner the name of an agent. Buckingham v. North German Fire Ins. Co., 149 F. 622.

35. Where a foreign corporation other than a railroad or stage company has complied with the provisions of art. 23, c. 18, Wilson's Ann. St. 1903, and appointed an agent in this territory for service of process with his office and place of business at an accessable point in the territory, service must be had on such agent and is irregular if made on any other person. Bes Line Const. Co. v. Schmidt, 16 Okl. 429, 85 P. 711. Wilson's St. §§ 4270, 4271, 4272, 4273, 4274, apply only to railroad or stage companies. Id. business must be transacted by some agent or manager representing the corporation,[37] and it must appear that the local statute provides for suit against such foreign corporation which has been permitted to transact business within the state.[38] While service of subpoena from a Federal court in equity on a nonresident corporation is not controlled by state statutes, yet, if there is no applicable provision in the Federal statute, the procedure of the state statute may be followed if deemed proper and reasonable,[39] as where the state statutes declares on what persons service may be had,[40] and the construction put upon such statute by the state courts will then be accepted as correct.[41]

Upon foreign unincorporated associations.[42]

(§ 4) B. Substituted.[43]—Provisions for substituted service must be strictly complied with.[44] The affidavit must show what efforts were made to obtain personal service,[45] and the order and papers on which it is based must be filed within the time prescribed by statute.[46] This kind of service is generally authorized where defendant has a residence or usual place of abode within the jurisdiction,[47] but after diligent efforts made cannot be personally served.[48] If defendant has a legal residence within the state, substituted service should be made by leaving a copy at his place of abode though he may be out of the state for an indefinite length of time.[49] In a suit on a foreign judgment which is attacked for want of legal service of process, one who holds a general power of attorney and transacts some business thereunder for defendant will be held to be an agent, managing clerk or representative, carrying on his business, within the meaning of a foreign statute authorizing service on such clerk or representative in case defendant is out of the territory.[50] In

Abbott, 101 Me. 343, 64 A. 615. Where in attachment proceedings plaintiff moved for an order of service on defendant on the ground that defendant had no last and usual place of abode within the officer's jurisdiction at the time when service should have been made, and defendant was described in the writ as a resident of the state, substituted service could be made upon him by leaving the summons at his last usual place of abode as expressly provided by Rev. St. § 17, in the case of resident defendants, and the case did not call for an order of notice to defendant as a nonresident. Id. That order provided that a "new summons issue and be served on defendant" did not require personal service by giving him the summons in hand. Id.

the District of Columbia, service of a subpoena may be had on the solicitor of a defendant in a cross bill [51] if the bill is properly framed and is in any substantial part defensive.[52]

(§ 4) C. The server, his qualifications, and protection.[53]—Service must be made by one who has authority.[54] Process directed to a sheriff who is a party to the suit or otherwise disqualified to serve it is defective,[55] and service thereof may be quashed if motion is made at the proper time.[56] An entry of service being signed by one as sheriff, it will be presumed that he acted as sheriff of the court from which the process issued.[57] In Arizona where the sheriff is a party, process may be served on him by any disinterested person.[58]

§ 5. Constructive service. Service of publication.[59] The legislature may provide that constructive service by publication and mail may be had on a resident defendant so as to authorize a personal judgment against him where actual service cannot be had in the county where the suit is properly brought.[60] A statute providing for service of process by publication in any court of record is sufficiently broad to include process issuing from an appellate court.[61] To constitute due process of law, constructive service must be of such character as will have a reasonable tendency to convey information to interested persons that an action is pending which affects their rights.[62] A statute is not necessarily unconstitutional because it provides for a notice to nonresidents which is not equal in time to that given to residents.[63] Statutes authorizing constructive service on persons outside the territorial jurisdiction of the court are strictly construed because in derogation of the common law,[64] and matters required to be made of record must be so shown, although as to

51. Where court directed service on the solicitors by name and the solicitors acted for defendant not only in the main suit in which he was complainant but in an action at law which he sought to enjoin, he could not object that since there had been no appearance to the cross-bill he had no solicitors which could be served. American Graphophone Co. v. Smith, 26 App. D. C. 563.

52. Need not be wholly defensive. Bill held to authorize service on solicitor. American Graphophone Co. v. Smith, 26 App. D. C. 563.

56. Objection too late. Hansford v. Tate [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 372. See post, § 7, subd. When Objections Made.

57. Where process issued from city court contention that it had been served by the sheriff of the county was untenable. Rucker v. Tabor, 126 Ga. 132, 54 S. E. 959.

58. Under the general provision of Rev. St. 1901, par. 1327, and paragraphs 1101, 1319, making it the duty of the coronor or constable to make service in such case, does not preclude such service. Lewis v. Cunningham [Ariz.] 85 P. 244.

59. See 6 C. L. 1090.

60. Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 110, par. 5, not unconstitutional as authorizing service which is not due process of law. Nelson v. Chicago R. Co., 225 Ill. 197, 80 N. E. 109, and authorities cited.

61. Publication of citation on appeal held authorized by Comp. Laws, § 2964. Baca v. Anaya [N. M.] 89 P. 314.

62. Publication of summons in actions to quiet title, though in the form prescribed by c. 5, p. 9, Laws 1901, is not "due process of law" where the land is not described nor the adverse claimants specifically named. Fenton v. Minnesota Title Ins. & Trust Co. [N. D.] 109 N. W. 363. Four weeks' notice by publication to nonresidents in proceedings to sell lands within the levee district created by Ark. act of Feb. 15, 1893, as provided by § 11, as amended in 1895, is sufficient to afford due process of law. Ballard v. Hunter, 27 S. Ct. 261. Personal notice not necessary. Id. Where the nonresident owners did not assert the existence of conditions which would entitle them to personal service under the act, they could not say that they were deprived of property without due process of law because the complaint in the suit failed to deny the existence of such conditions. Id.

63. Nonresident owners of lands are not denied the equal protection of the laws or the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, because § 11 of the Arkansas act of 1893, as amended in 1895, requires personal service upon resident owners or occupants at least twenty days before rendition of a decree of sale for unpaid levee taxes and provides for publication as to nonresidents for only four weeks. Ballard v. Hunter, 27 S. Ct. 261.

64. Cohen v. Portland Lodge No. 142, 144 F. 266. Where a defendant is sought to be brought into court by some statutory method other than personal service, which may or may not reach him and which is more or less unsatisfactory, the statute is strictly other matters the jurisdiction may be aided by presumption.[65] As a general rule, no personal jurisdiction is acquired by constructive service only.[66]

When proper.[67]—Constructive service is generally authorized when defendant is a nonresident,[68] and it is sought to affect some res within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.[69] Hence, it has been held proper in attachment,[70] suits for the construction of a will,[71] or for specific performance.[72] To enable a Federal court to obtain jurisdiction of nonresident defendants by substituted service, the suit must be one concerning the title to some specific property within the district.[73] Service by publication may be had on a railroad company in Illinois where no officer or agent is found in the county where the suit is properly brought.[74] If a defendant is dead, service by publication is ineffectual.[75] A negligent failure to bring in necessary nonresident parties by publication is ground for dismissal.[76]

Procedure to authorize.[77]—A statute providing that the court shall make an order of publication in certain cases does not require the court to examine the files and make orders of publication without the suggestion of counsel.[78] In North Carolina it is not necessary to issue a summons when a defendant is without the reach of process and cannot be personally served, an affidavit showing such facts being the first step in the proceeding.[79] One of several plaintiffs may make an affidavit show-construed and it is essential that all the required steps should be followed with substantial accuracy. Stull v. Masilonka [Neb.] 108 N. W. 166.

66. By publication and mailing. Lanning v. Twining [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 466. A personal judgment by default cannot be rendered against a nonresident on constructive service. Judgment void. Lutcher v. Allen [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 149, 95 S. W. 572.

67. See 6 C. L. 1090.

68. Service by publication ineffective where defendant was a resident of the state. Topliff v. Richardson [Neb.] 107 N. W. 114.

69. A check drawn by the treasurer of the United States in settlement of a claim against the government is "personal property" within D. C. Code, § 105 (31 St. 1206, c. 854), authorizing service by publication as to nonresidents in suits to enforce liens against real or personal property in the district. Jones v. Rutherford, 26 App. D. C. 114. Held property in the district. Id. Where a husband wrongfully leaves his wife and goes to another state, he does not carry the marriage relation with him so as to enable the court in that state to grant him a decree of divorce on constructive service on the wife which will be entitled to full faith and credit under the Federal constitution. Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 50 Law. Ed. 867.

70. A plaintiff in an attachment suit, upon a showing that summons cannot be served upon the defendant within the county, is entitled to obtain service by publication. Foote v. Central American Commercial Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 531.

71. Service by publication on a nonresident defendant is allowed in a suit for the construction of a will by Code, § 3534, permitting such service in suits relating to real property, for the establishment or setting aside of a will, etc. Dillavou v. Dillavou [Iowa] 106 N. W. 949.

72. Legislature may provide for service of nonresidents by publication in suits to determine title to real estate within its jurisdiction. Clem v. Given's Ex'r [Va.] 55 S. E. 567. Va. Code 1904, §§ 3230-3232, comprehend quasi proceedings in rem to reach and dispose of property in the state, and in an action for specific performance brought against a nonresident, executor, and the widow and children, it was proper to proceed against the executor by publication. 73. Substituted service not authorized under Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 8, 18 St. 472 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 513), where writ was merely one to wind up a partnership on ground of mismanagement, though the partnership owned some stock in certain railroads within the district. Jones v. Gould [C. C. A.] 149 F. 153.

74. May be had under Practice'Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 110, pars. 2, 5, and c. 22, §§ 12, 13), referred to therein, so as to authorize a personal judgment, though the principal office of defendant is in the state. Nelson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 225 Ill. 197, 80 N. E. 109. Not necessary to show that defendant has gone out of state or is concealed or cannot be found in state. Id.

75. Foreclosure. Topliff v. Richardson [Neb.] 107 N. W. 114.

77. See 6 C. L. 1090.

78. Not under Rev. St. 1899, § 577, providing that when sheriff makes return of non est, the court on being satisfied that process cannot be served shall order publication. Pitkin v. Flagg, 198 Mo. 646, 97 S. W. 162. Where plaintiff, after warning, negligently failed to take steps to bring in nonresidents, he could not avoid dismissal by contending that the court should have ordered publication on its own motion. Id.

79. Under Revisal 1905, §§ 429, 430, 442, requiring actions to be commenced by summons and that when it appears by affidavit that defendant cannot be found in the state, an order shall be made for publication. Peters Grocery Co. v. Colling Bag Co., 142 N. C. 174, 55 S. E. 90. McClure v. Fellows, 131 N. C. 509, 42 S. E. 951, overruled, and Best v.

ing that plaintiffs have no knowledge of the names and whereabouts of unknown heirs provided lack of knowledge on the part of each of the plaintiffs is sufficiently shown,[80] and where a complainant's agent swears positively that he knows that the names of certain defendants are unknown to complainant, it will be presumed that the facts are within affiant's knowledge.[81] In an affidavit for publication made for another, a recital of agency is sufficient to show authority.[82] A complaint and affidavit may be included in one instrument if it contains all the essentials of both.[83] The fact that a warning order is not properly indorsed on the complaint as required by the Arkansas statute as a preliminary to bringing in a nonresident defendant by publication does not invalidate the judgment.[84] The affidavit must set out all the essential statutory facts authorizing service by publication[85] such as diligence on plaintiff's part,[86] and that defendant cannot be found,[87] or that his residence is unknown.[88] Under a statute requiring the affidavit to set out a cause of action, the affidavit is sufficiently definite if it fairly notifies defendant of the particular nature of the cause.[89] Under the Missouri statute, a publication is not invalid because neither the affidavit nor the order therefor alleges that defendant cannot be served with process within the state.[90] The failure to file the affidavit and order for publication until one day after the filing of the summons and complaint does not invalidate the publication, the statute not requiring the affidavit or order to be filed when the complaint is filed.[91] To establish due diligence, it is not always necessary to show that the summons was actually placed in the hands of the sheriff for service.[92] The publication is authorized if it fairly appears that diligence was used,[93] and it is only where recitals in the affidavit are mere legal conclusions that a finding

85. An affidavit which is not merely informal but which entirely fails to state essential statutory facts will not authorize service by publication. Johnson v. Hunter [C. C. A.] 147 F. 133. Under Ark. Special Statute (Laws 1893, pp. 24, 119; Laws 1895, p. 88), relating to the enforcement of levee taxes in the chancery courts and providing that notice may be given by publication, "but actual service of the summons shall be had when defendant is in the county or if there is an occupant upon the land," and § 5679, Sand. & H. Dig., which the act makes applicable to such suits, on affidavit that defendant is a nonresident and is not in the county and that there is not an occupant upon the land is strictly jurisdictional. Id. Sections 3579, 4111, 4112, Rev. Laws 1905, made no substantial change in the law as to service of summons by publication in an action for divorce (Becklin v. Becklin, 99 Minn. 307, 109 N. W. 243), and an affidavit showing that personal service cannot well be made and containing the statements required by § 4111, with the return of the sheriff that defendant cannot be found, is sufficient to authorize the publication of the summons without any further affidavit after the order for publication has been made (Id.). Though affidavit was somewhat argumentative as to plaintiff's knowledge of defendant's residence, it was sufficient. Id.

86. Affidavit held to show due diligence so as to authorize publication of summons in foreclosure. Pillsbury v. Streeter, Jr., Co. [N. D.] 107 N. W. 40.

87. The fact that a defendant cannot be found in the state must be established by affidavit under Revisal 1905, § 442. Peters Grocery Co. v. Collins Bag Co., 142 N. C. 174, 55 S. E. 90.

88. Affidavit for publication of summons in foreclosure of tax lien stating that affiant was "unable to find either the residence or post office address of defendant" held to sufficiently state that place of residence was not known. Bardon v. Hughes [Wash.] 88 P. 1040.

89. Affidavit alleging that action arose upon a breach of warranty contained in a deed from defendant to plaintiff recorded in M. county held a sufficient reference to the deed, definite enough description of the land, and an implied allegation of eviction. Lemly v. Ellis [N. C.] 55 S. E. 629.

91. Foreclosure. Pillsbury v. Streeter, Jr., Co. [N. D.] 107 N. W. 40.

92. It is the fact that due diligence of some kind is shown that gives validity to order of publication. Pillsbury v. Streeter, Jr., Co. [N. D.] 107 N. W. 40.

93. A finding that the facts stated in the affidavit are true will not be disturbed if it fairly appears that such facts show due diligence. Pillsbury v. Streeter, Jr., Co. [N. D.] 107 N. W. 40.

of diligence will not be upheld.[94] An adjudication by the court that the facts are sufficient to justify service by publication is conclusive on collateral attack of the judgment rendered if the affidavit contained some competent evidence, though insufficient to withstand a direct appeal.[95] Where the statute is silent, no different or additional procedure is necessary in making service by publication because a defendant is a minor.[96]

How and when made.[97]—The publication must be made within the time limited after the filing of the complaint.[98] The fact that at the time an order of publication was made a supplemental writ had been ordered for the purpose of bringing in other parties does not affect the validity of the publication.[99] The notice is generally given by publication in a newspaper of general circulation [1] and mailing a copy of the process to defendant unless his address is unknown,[2] and sometimes by posting a copy of the order at the door of the court house.[3] A published notice reciting that the action arose upon a breach of warranty in a deed from defendant to plaintiff recorded in a specified county sufficiently states a cause of action.[4] While Christian names should be given in full, yet, in proceedings in rem or quasi in rem, a published summons or notice will be held sufficient, though it gives the initials only if the party was generally known by such name,[5] or if a defendant has himself used only his initials in connection with the subject-matter of the suit.[6]

Order of publication.[7]—The order must be made within reasonable time after the affidavit is made [8] and must fix the appearance day as prescribed by law.[9] A mistake in the order as to what is directed to be mailed will not nullify the proceeding if the proper paper is in fact mailed.[10] An order of publication as to unknown defendants is sufficient in Alabama though containing no reference to the subject-

98. Service of summons insufficient in foreclosure where first publication was more than ninety days after filing complaint. Fuhrman v. Power [Wash.] 86 P. 940.

99. Where defendant in foreclosure was given notice by publication and mailing of summons, it was immaterial that at the time of the order of publication as against her a supplemental and amended summons had been ordered for the purpose of bringing in tenants of the property. Mishkind-Feinberg Realty Co. v. Sidorsky, 111 App. Div. 578, 98 N. Y. S. 496.

1. On plea in abatement, evidence held to sustain finding that the paper in which was published notice to defendant, a nonresident, of the pendency of divorce proceedings, was a newspaper of general circulation as required by Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 1048. Ruth v. Ruth [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 523.

2. Mailing of process is dispensed with where it appears by affidavit that plaintiff or his attorney does not know defendant's address. In suit to foreclose a tax certificate, the fact that defendant's deed filed five years before contained defendant's address did not show that affiant knew what it was when the affidavit was made. Kahn v. Thorpe [Wash.] 86 P. 855.

3. In service by publication the certificate of the clerk should show the posting of a copy of the order at the door of the court house. Lafiin v. Gato [Fla.] 42 So. 387.

4. Where it did not appear that there were other deeds. Lemly v. Ellis [N. C.] 55 S. E. 629.

5. Foreclosure of tax certificate. Kahn v. Thorpe [Wash.] 86 P. 855.

9. Order for service by publication fixing appearance day fifty-two days from its date held void unler statute prescribing that the date shall not be less than thirty nor more than fifty days. Lafiin v. Gato [Fla.] 42 So. 387.

10. Where the order of publication in foreclosure required plaintiff to deposit in the post office a "notice of the object of the action" instead of the complaint as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 440, but both the notice and the complaint were in fact mailed and the order was subsequently amended nunc pro tunc, the irregularity was not such as to render a title based on the foreclosure matter of the suit and to the title and interests of such defendants therein.[11] The fact that an order is not signed and attested by the clerk will not invalidate it if the published order returned to his office is certified by him as a true copy of the order made in the cause.[12] Amendments may be made to show the truth before or after judgment.[13]

Personal service in lieu of publication.[14]—It is provided by statute in some jurisdictions that in certain cases personal service may be made on a defendant out of the state.[15] Service of this kind is governed by the laws of the forum,[16] and statutes authorizing it are generally construed strictly.[17] Where a citation addressed to a foreign country may be served by any disinterested person, failure to serve it in the county of defendant's residence does not render the service invalid in the absence of statute.[18]

§ 6. Return and proof of service. Official return.[19]—To authorize a judgment against a defendant who has not appeared or otherwise submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court, there must be not only a service of process upon him but also a legal return of such service.[20] To be legal the return must be made by the proper officer [21] within the statutory period,[22] and must show service by a qualified person [23] and in the proper manner.[24] An affidavit of service must also be sworn to

15. Personal service on a defendant out of the state is authorized in condemnation proceedings in Washington. Laws 1905, c. 55, § 5, providing that a summons shall be served as in civil actions. State v. Superior Ct. for Whatcom County, 42 Wash. 521, 85 P. 256. An action in partition under Code Proc. § 448, is commenced by a summons and complaint, while under the Revised Statutes it was commenced by petition and notice. The Code makes applicable the provisions of the Revised Statutes in partition suits brought thereunder, and the Revised Statutes provided that the "petition and notice" could be served on a minor outside the state. Held service of the "summons" on an infant and on the person with whom she resided outside the state was regular in an action under the Code. O'Donaghue v. Smith, 184 N. Y. 365, 77 N. E. 621.

16. Personal service outside the state on a day which was a legal holiday in Texas held void. Norvell v. Pye [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 666.

17. Under Federal judiciary act of 1813, § 8, authorizing court to make order requiring absent defendant to appear, plead, or demur, it is not sufficient for the court to merely order service of process on defendant. Jennings v. Johnson [C. C. A.] 148 F. 337.

Eversole v. Eastern Kentucky Asylum [Ky.] 100 S. W. 300.

22. Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 7, requiring dismissal of an action on failure of plaintiff to cause summons to be returned with proof of service within three years after commencement of suit, applies only to actions which are untried, and a judgment rendered against a defendant regularly served with process will not be set aside because there is on file no proof of service. Jones v. Gunn [Cal.] 87 P. 577. The West Virginia practice of taking judgment on a money contract after notice of a motion for judgment requires service only not return of the notice within the time fixed. Knox v. Horner, 58 W. Va. 136, 51 S. E. 979. If not returned before term, the right to docket it at that term is lost. Id.

23. See ante, § 4 C. Under a statute authorizing service by any person over twenty-one years of age, the proof of service must show that the server was over twenty-one when service was made. Recital that server "is" over twenty-one insufficient. French v. Ajax Oil & Development Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 359. Where return to summons failed to show that it was served by one who was qualified, a recital in the judgment that defendant was "personally served" did not show legal service on appeal from order denying motion to vacate and permit a defense, the attack being direct and the court not having certified due and legal service. Id.

24. See ante, §§ 4, 5. A return on substi-

before an officer authorized to administer oaths.[25] It is the service itself, however, that confers jurisdiction,[26] and so a failure to make proof is not necessarily fatal.[27] A sheriff's return on a process is evidence only to show how the process was executed.[28] A finding of notice in an order of court is conclusive proof thereof in probate proceedings in Montana.[29]

Return of service on corporations.[30]—To authorize a judgment by default against a corporation, the record must show that proof was made that the person on whom process was served was authorized by law to receive service on behalf of the corporation.[31] Where a statute authorizes service at a certain place, that place must be shown by the return.[32] If an alternative service is made, the statutory occasion must be set forth.[33]

Amendment of return.[34]—The court will generally allow the return to be amended[35] before or after judgment, as where there has been a failure to sign it[36] or to state where the process was left.[37] A refusal to amend the return will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting as to the truth of the statement sought to be inserted.[38] Where no amendment is actually made pursuant to leave granted, the tuted service must show that the process was left at "defendant's" place of abode. Return of summons in attachment stating that it was left at "the last and usual place of abode," etc., held defective. Abbott v. Abbott, 101 Me. 343, 64 A. 615.

25. Where affidavit of service of notice and copy of bill was sworn to before a justice of the peace of Virginia and clerk of circuit court of county where justice resided attached his certificate under seal to jurat of justice that latter was authorized to take acknowledgments and administer oaths, this was sufficient. 28. Not admissible in criminal case for purpose of discrediting affidavit for a continuance, there being no question as to execution of the process. State v. Rugero, 117 La. 1040, 42 So. 495.

29. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2796, requiring proof of notice on a hearing in probate proceedings, and that a finding in the order of court shall be conclusive, held, where on appeal from allowance of administrator's account the order finds that notice was given in the manner and for the time ordered by the court, this is conclusive. 33. Where substituted service on a foreign insurance company doing business in California is made on the insurance commissioner under Pol. Code, § 616, the return must show that by reason of resignation or otherwise the company is without the statutory agent provided for therein on whom service may be made. Buckingham v. St. 1903, §§ 4269-4271, or on the appointed agent, the return must show why it could not be so had and the official character of the person served. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Clark [Okl.] 87 P. 430.

35. Chapter 7, on Amendments and Jeofalls (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905), authorizing amendments to processes, returns, etc., after judgment, applies to a special proceeding by a drainage district to condemn land, and the return of service of notice to owners may be amended after the term at which damages were awarded where notice was in fact properly given and no rights of third persons intervened. Waite v. Green River Com'rs, 226 Ill. 207, 80 N. E. 725. Where the order allowed the amendment to be made by the special deputy sheriff who made the service and the amended return was signed by the sheriff by such deputy, it was proper. Id.

36. Upon sufficient showing being made, a court may allow the return on a summons to be properly signed by the sheriff after judgment. Where by inadvertence deputy omitted to sign sheriff's name by himself as deputy. Lies v. Klaner, 121 Ill. App. 332. Where it appeared that service of process was actually made on a defendant in foreclosure, held, court could allow the return to be signed some twelve years afterward when the judgment roll was offered in evidence in another suit. Jones v. Gunn [Cal.] 87 P. 577.

37. Where the return failed to state that a summons was left at "defendant's" usual place of abode and there was nothing to show whether or not this was a mere error, exceptions on appeal must be sustained (Abbott v. Abbott, 101 Me. 343, 64 A. 615), but the cause will be remanded to the lower court where the truth may be ascertained and the officer allowed to amend the return if necessary (Id.), and in such case the action will not be dismissed (Id.).

38. Where it was sought to amend return so as to show that officer explained to defendant's wife the purport of the writ. Park Land & Imp. Co. v. Lane [Va.] 55 S. E. 690.

document remains unaffected.[39] A sheriff cannot without notice file an amended return showing proper service.[40]

Impeachment and contradiction of return.[41]—At common law the officer's return is conclusive in the suit as between parties and privies and cannot be impeached except for fraud or mistake,[42] but this rule no longer obtains in many of the states provided the evidence is sufficient,[43] the statutes often making the return prima facie evidence only.[44] If a return of personal service on two defendants is ambiguous and open to the construction that but one copy was delivered to both, parol evidence is admissible to show that no service in fact was had on one of the defendants.[45] The return of an officer to the service of a summons in the original action may be impeached in a proceeding to revive the judgment,[46] and in some states, affidavits are admissible for such purpose.[47]

Waiver of irregularities [48] in the process or service as distinguished from irregularities in the return are treated in the succeeding section.[49]

Return on constructive service and proof of service by publication.[50]—The affidavit of publication must show the times and dates of publication,[51] and if the order required the mailing of process to several defendants, it must also show that a copy was mailed to each of them.[52] It is generally signed by the editor or publisher of the paper.[53] If there is a mistake in the affidavit, a proper publication may be shown by outside evidence unless the statute makes the affidavit conclusive.[54] A delay in making complete proof does not invalidate the proceeding if proper service was actually made.[55] If an order or notice is not jurisdictional the rendition of a decree without

42. If a return of service of summons commencing suit is sufficient on its face, such facts stated therein as it was the duty of the officer to set forth in it cannot be put in issue by either a plea in abatement or a motion to set aside a judgment by default. For reasons of public policy, contradiction of such returns is not permitted in any form except upon allegations of fraud or collusion. Talbott v. Southern Oil Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 1009.

43. See 6 C. L. 1096. A mere general statement in an affidavit of defendant, that the summons and complaint were not personally served on him, is not sufficient to overcome the proof of service afforded by an affidavit of service in regular form. Marin v. Potter [N. D.] 107 N. W. 970. Evidence insufficient to impeach certificate showing service of precept in dispossess proceeding, or to show that affidavit of process server of service of statutory demand for rent was false. Reich v. Cochran, 102 N. Y. S. 827.

44. Except where a sheriff's return of service is made conclusive by statute in the absence of fraud, the return may be shown to be false without showing that it was procured by the fraud of plaintiff. National Metal Co. v. Greene Consol. Copper Co. [Ariz.] 89 P. 535, and authorities referred to.

45. Jackson v. Tenney [Okl.] 87 P. 867. Where the evidence showed that a defendant was not served, a motion to set aside the judgment made at the term of rendition, being a direct proceeding, should have been sustained. Id.

52. Affidavit that "a copy of said summons attached to a copy of the complaint directed to" the defendants named was mailed, held not to show complete service. Harris v. Morris [Cal. App.] 84 P. 678.

53. That affiant signed himself "publisher" instead of "editor, proprietor, or manager," as required by the statute, did not render publication defective. Stewart v. Cole [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 748, 92 S. W. 1040.

54. That publication was made a sufficient length of time before the term of court. Harbert v. Durden, 116 Mo. App. 512, 92 S. W. 746. Where statute merely provided that affidavit of publisher should be "sufficient evidence," the affidavit was not the exclusive evidence. Id. Where evidence showed due publication, motion to quash execution was properly denied. Id.

55. Failure to file affidavit of mailing copy of summons and complaint to nonresident in divorce proceeding until after judgment not fatal where papers were actually proof that is was published is not a denial of due process of law.[56] That a decree recites publication in a certain newspaper when in fact it was made in another paper does not affect its validity.[57]

§ 7. Defects, objections, and amendments. In general.[58]—Defects in the return have already been considered.[59] Mere defects or irregularities in the service of process do not go to the jurisdiction of the court if defendant was in fact actually served.[60] The question of want of service on a defendant cannot be raised by a co-defendant who is in no way affected.[61] A judge who is doubtful of his jurisdiction to hear a case because of defects in the service of the summons should call the attention of counsel to the supposed defects in order that they may be corrected by amendment and should not arbitrarily refuse to try the cause.[62]

Alterations. Amendments.[63]—Amendments will usually be allowed at any stage of the proceeding providing the cause of action is not changed,[64] but after defendants have appeared and answered, the court cannot grant an order allowing an amendment of the summons and complaint without notice.[65] If a defendant objects to a mistake in his name, the court should require the process to be amended by inserting the true name.[66] Where an action is prosecuted against defendants as trustees but is changed to one against them individually, the summons should be amended as well as the complaint.[67] If a motion to amend nunc pro tunc is overruled and movant is given simply the right to amend but fails to do so, he will be deemed to have elected to stand on the original process [68] and cannot be heard to say that the amendment which was allowed would not have availed him as against a plea of limitations.[69]

When objections made.[70]—Where a process is merely irregular, objection thereto should be made promptly, otherwise it will be waived.[71] A defendant in

56. A decree for the sale of land for unpaid levee taxes based on constructive service cannot be deemed to deny due process of law because there was no sufficient proof of publication of a warning order or notice filed or produced in court, where under the local procedure the entry of a warning order, even if required, is not jurisdictional. 71. Where process was signed in clerk's absence by an assistant whom the clerk had given general authority, instead of by clerk himself. Rucker v. Tabor, 126 Ga. 132, 54 S. E. 959. When a defendant desires to take advantage of the omission of a seal from the summons and failure of the praecipe to state the nature of the cause of action, it should be done before default. It is too late to move to quash summons and service and in arrest of judgment after motion to set aside default on grounds recognizing the court's jurisdiction, especially where no complaint is made of service of summons properly returnable and hearing evidence of its official source and purpose and leave has been asked to appear and plead to declaration showing the nature of the action. Benedict v. W. T. Hadlow Co. [Fla.] 42 So. 239. Objection that process was served by sheriff who was a party. Hansford v. Tate [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 372.

equity may question the jurisdiction of the court for lack of proper service in limine before answer.[72] An order denying a motion to dismiss for want of process not being appealable, the motion may be renewed before another justice.[73]

How objections made.[74]—Where the question of intention is involved, a motion to set aside the service in a Federal court on the ground that defendant was not an inhabitant of the district will not be determined alone on the ex parte affidavit of defendant,[75] nor will it be passed for determination on plea or answer if defendant is under arrest;[78] but the issue will be referred to a master to take testimony subject to cross-examination.[77] If a defendant is designated by a wrong name, he may make objection thereto by motion in the nature of a plea in abatement.[78] In New York when a default judgment is based on an insufficient affidavit for substituted service, the remedy is by appeal and not by motion to set aside the order for substituted service.[79]

Waiver irregularities or lack of process.[80]—Service of process or defects therein is waived by general appearance [81] and asking relief on the merits,[82] or by otherwise treating a service as valid,[83] and general appearance after substituted service waives the want of personal jurisdiction; [84] but pleading to the merits or taking part in the proceeding is not a waiver after the overruling of a motion to quash to which exception has been duly taken.[85] A demand in recoupment, is, however, a submission to
