NOTE. Waiver by proceeding to merits after overruling of motion to quash service: The diversity of views held by the courts relative to the right of a defendant to plead generally, without waving the objection to the jurisdiction of the court over the person, after a motion to quash the writ for defects therein has been overruled, and exception to such ruling saved, is well illustrated in the majority and dissenting opinions in the recent case of Fisher, Sons & Co. v. Crowley, 57 W. Va. 312, 50 S. E. 422. It was there held that a defect in the summons commencing an action in a court of record is not waived by pleading to the merits after the overruling of a motion to quash, to which an exception has been taken and made a part of the record.

While this is, we believe, the better rule, the jurisdiction of the court, though exception has been taken.[86] If a judgment by default is entered without proper service, the objection is not waived by a special it is by no means uniformly so held by the courts. In Ry. Co. v. Wright, 50 W. Va. 653, which the court attempts to distinguish in principle from the principal case, the rule is state as follows: "When a defendant appears and objects to the jurisdiction and his objection is overruled, he must then elect either to stand upon his objection or go into the merits. Going into the merits waives his exceptions to the service of process. This latter rule is founded on justice and reason. For although the defendant may not be served with process, yet if he appears and contests the case and a fair trial is had why should he be permitted to invalidate the judgment thus obtained, because the process to bring him into court was not legally served upon him?" This view has been accorded the support of many of the courts, and the decisions sustained by a course of reasoning which is quite similar in all the opinions. A fair example is that of Sealy v. California Lumber Co., 19 Or. 94, wherein the court said, "A defendant cannot answer the complaint and make a full defense on the merits without making a general appearance in spite of his special appearance, and when he does so he invokes the judgment of the court and submits himself and his rights to its jurisdiction and cannot longer be heard to say that it had no jurisdiction. He cannot fight his battle on the merits under a special appearance. The law will not allow him to occupy an ambiguous position to avail himself of its jurisdiction when the judgment is in his favor and to repudiate it when the result in adverse to him. He ought to do one thing or the other, either fight it out on the line of special appearance, or if he appear and go to trial, accept its incidents and consequences. Garrett v. Herring Furn. Co., 69 S. C. 278, 48 S. E. 254; Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Hickson, 97 Ill. App. 387. But the objection to this argument lies in the fact that it would either make of every trial court a court of last resort, or require the defendant "to do what is impossible for other mortals, correctly forecast what will be the decision of the court of last resort upon the question."

As supporting the rule announced in this principal case, and contrary to that last expressed, we quote from the case of Chandler v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 149 Ind. 601, as follows: "The settled rule in this jurisdiction and in others also, is that a party to an action who under a special appearance, in due season, unsuccessfully denies the jurisdiction of the court over his person, does not waive the question of jurisdiction of his person by thereafter answering over, and going to trial upon the merits of the cause of action. The authorities assert that the defendant under such circumstances, having at the very threshold resisted the jurisdiction of the court in a legitimate manner to the full extent of his power, is not required to desert his case, and leave his adversary to take judgment against him by default." Having unsuccessfully contested the jurisdiction, it is his privilege and duty to make the best defense of which he is capable. Benedict v. Johnson, 4 S. D. 387; Am. Wire & Steel Bed Co. v. Goldman, 83 N. Y. S. 330; Mullen v. Canal Co., 114 N. C. 8. The defendant should appear specially, object to the jurisdiction, and if the objection is adversely ruled upon, save an exception for appeal. That this is the proper practice is indicated by the following cases: Perkins v. Hayward, 132 Ind. 95; Winfield Nat'l Bank v. McWilliams, 9 Okl. 493; Mullen v. Canal Co., 114 N. C. 8; Lilliard v. Brannin, 91 Ky. 511. The case assumes a different aspect when the defendant, although objection is made specially to the jurisdiction of the court over his person, files a counterclaim or asks affirmative relief. He thereby becomes an actor in the suit and institutes a proceeding which has for its basis the existence of an action to which he must be a party. He thereby submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court and no disclaimer which he may make on the record, that he does not intend to do so, will be effectual to defeat the consequence of his act. 2 Enc. Pleading and Practice, p. 626; Chandler v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 149 Ind. 601; Montague v. Marunda [Neb.] 99 N. W. 653; Lower v. Wilson, 9 S. D. 252; Grant v. Birrell, 72 N. Y. S. 366. But the court went further and held that it is not necessary for a defendant in appearing for the purpose of quashing the writ to cause the record to recite that his appearance is for that purpose only, but whether an appearance is general or special is to be determined by the record as it stands at the time the motion is made. In State v. Thaker Coal & Coke Co., 49 W. Va. 140, the record recited that the defendant appeared by attorney and moved to quash the summons and the return of the sheriff thereon endorsed which motion the court overruled, whereupon the defendant then and there excepted to the ruling of the court. The court held the appearance to be general and said, "An appearance for the purpose of taking advantage of defective execution or non-execution of process must be a special appearance for that purpose alone, and must be so stated at the time of making the appearance." Although attempting to "reconcile" the conflicting views as expressed in several previous opinions, the court apparently overlooked this case, which seems in point, and expresses, we think, the sounder view. It is true one may not make a general appearance special by denominating it such; but the tendency of the courts is to construe that a general appearance which is not designated, or is not clearly shown to be, a special appearance. It is certainly the more prudent course to specifically state in each special appearance pleading that "the defendant appears specially and for the purpose of this motion only," and this practice is amply supported by authority. Kinkade v. Myers, 17 Or. 470; Collier v. Faek, 66 223; Deshler v. Foster, 1 Morris [Ia.] 403.—3 Mich. L. R. 652.

appearance in which defendant moves to vacate the default and asks leave to file an answer to the merits.[87]

§ 8. Privilege and exemptions from service.[88]—Nonresidents are generally held exempt from service of civil process while in attendance on judicial proceedings [89] in the absence of waiver.[90] A resident of the state of Kansas is exempt from service of summons in an action brought in a county other than his residence while he is there in attendance upon court either as a party or as a material witness,[91] and this rule applies even though the attendance may be voluntary.[92] In the absence of fraud an extradited person is liable to service of civil process without an opportunity being given him to return to the state whence he was brought.[93] While in Vermont one who is privileged from arrest on mesne process in a civil case may plead such facts in abatement,[94] the privilege of a nonresident witness from service of mesne process by summons in a civil case cannot be so pleaded.[95]

§ 9. Abuse of process [96] is considered in another article.[97]

2. The action of a civil service commission in investigating charges, where it is without prove to remove the offender, is an administrative and not a judicial act. People v. Milliken, 185 N. Y. 35, 77 N. E. 872. The writ of prohibition will not lie to enjoin a commissioner's court from proceeding further with a contract already let for the construction of a bridge (Goodwin v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 122), nor to restrain the allowance of a claim for it and the issuance of a warrant, this being a purely ministerial act (Id.). The Missouri primary election law, providing that "judges, clerks, and challengers, who shall serve at said primary, shall be selected by the election commissioners from lists submitted by the managing committee of the party holding the same, does not confer judicial powers upon the election commissioners. Their action in making such selection is purely administrative and will not be restrained by prohibition. Kalbfell v. Wood, 193 Mo. 675, 92 S. W. 230. The general committee of a

The state board of health is a ministerial and not a judicial body and prohibition does not lie to restrain it from investigating charges preferred against a physician, although if such charges are found to be true it may revoke the license of such physician. The only question reached by an application for a writ of prohibition is the jurisdiction of the court in the matter complained of, and the propriety of his order cannot be considered. Dupayster v. Clarke, 28 Ky. L. R. 655, 90 S. W. 1. The jurisdiction of the court is the only question involved upon an application for a writ of prohibition. People v. District Ct. [Colo.] 86 P. 87. The writ will issue only when it appears that the judge or court sought to be restrained assumed to exercise and apply judicial powers not granted by law, or in a proceeding within its jurisdiction that the court assumes to apply judicial force in excess of its power and authority to do so. State v. Stobie, 194 Mo. 14, 92 S. W. 191.

Carter v. Bolster [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 105. A statute providing for the deportation of a nonresident insane person and making it the duty of the sheriff to convey such person to his home is void, and the court being without jurisdiction to decree such deportation, prohibition lies to restrain it from doing so. State v. Superior Ct. [Wash.] 88 P. 207. Where jurisdiction to issue high prerogative writs of the common-law is vested in supreme court alone, the action of an inferior court in issuing such writs for the purpose of supervising and controlling an election will be restrained by prohibition. People v. District Ct. [Colo.] 86 P. 87. Writ lies where information in a criminal proceeding is insufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the court. People v. Dunning, 113 App. Div. 35, 98 N. Y. S. 1067. The St. Louis court of appeals is without appellate jurisdiction where a constitutional question is involved and proceedings under a writ of prohibition granted by it in a matter where such question is involved will be restrained by a writ granted by the supreme court. State v. Nortoni [Mo.] 98 S. W. 554. The board of drainage commissioners of North Dakota acts judicially in assessing benefits to lands embraced within drainage districts, and in the absence of fraud their action is final, hence in such case a court is without jurisdiction to enjoin its acts and prohibition will issue to prevent it from doing so. State v. Fisk [N. D.] 107 N. W. 191.

Denied: Where a party appears by an attorney in an action, a dismissal signed by him without the consent of his attorney does not deprive the court of jurisdiction over such action, nor does a subsequent motion by his attorney in open court to dismiss, and a writ of prohibition to restrain the court from making order in the action except one of dismissal will be denied. Boca & L. R. Co. v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 88 P. 718. Prohibition to restrain a city council from proceeding with an election contest was refused where the law made that body judge of the election and qualifications of its members. State v. Craig [Minn.] 111 N. W. 3. An objection to the nonjoinder of parties in an election contest does not go to the jurisdiction of the court and prohibition will not lie to restrain action in such proceedings on that ground. State v. McElhinney [Mo.] 97 S. W. 159.

5. It runs against the exercise of unauthorized power in a proceeding of which the lower court has jurisdiction as well as when the proceeding itself is instituted without jurisdiction. People v. Wyatt, 186 N. Y. 383, 79 N. E. 330. Any order made by a court during the pendency of an action or in its inception which for any reason it is without power to make is in excess of its jurisdiction and will be restrained by prohibition although the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action and the parties. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co. v. Ritz [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 257. Court of general sessions is without power to grant a new trial in a criminal case after judgment except on ground of newly-discovered evidence, and prohibition lies in behalf of the people to prevent it from doing so. People v. Court of General Sessions, 185 N. Y. 504, 78 N. E. 149, afg. 12 App. Div. 424, 98 N. Y. S. 557 which rvd. People v. Goff, 49 Misc. 72, 98 N. Y. S. 66. The fact that criminal proceedings sought to be restrained by prohibition were instituted for the sole purpose of hindering and impeding other criminal prosecutions does not deprive the court in which they are pending of jurisdiction and forms no basis for the issuance of the writ. State v. Stobie, 194 Mo. 14, 92 S. W. 191. Trying a person on a criminal charge where he has already been placed in jeopardy for the same offense, though gross error, is not an act in excess of the court's jurisdiction, and prohibition will not lie to restrain such trial. State v. Williams, 177 Mo. App. 564, 92 S. W. 151. Prohibition lies to restrain a court from hearing and determining as a criminal charge matter which does not constitute an offense but which was well pleaded, had such matter constituted an offense. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co. v. Ritz [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 257. The granting of a preliminary mandatory injunction when the state of the case does not warrant it does not make the action of the court coram non judice and amounts to nothing more than mere judicial error to restrain which prohibition will not lie. Id. An injunction granted without notice or hearing requiring defendant to yield possession of his property which at the time the injunction was jurisdiction,[5] and where the proceeding is not wholly void on its face;[6] and it must also appear that wrong, damage, or injustice, are likely to follow from the threatened action, and that no other remedy will afford full relief;[7] but it has been held that a usurpation of power will be restrained by prohibition without regard to the nature or extent of the injury wrought by its exercise.[8] It is immaterial whether the rights disturbed by the usurpation of power be constitutional, statutory, or common.[9] Ordinarily the jurisdiction of the court below should be challenged as a prerequisite to the writ.[10] Prohibition from the court of last resort to an appellate court will lie where the lower court misuses the writ to control a case not reviewable by itself.[11] Prohibition is in effect an injunction against a court as distinguished from an injunction proper.[12] Its object is not the correction of errors or relief from action already taken.[13] It differs from mandamus in that it is a negative and not an affirmative remedy,[14] but in some states it is made the counterpart of mandamus by statute.[15] Prohibition is not a writ of right, but issues only in the exercise of sound judicial discretion.[16] It does not lie for the purpose of regulating the course of a trial, or obviating the effect of rulings made by a court engaged in trying issues over which it has jurisdiction.[17] Prohibition does not lie to prevent an anticipated action on the part of an inferior court,[18] nor to restrain an act which has been fully awarded was in his possession under a perfect title or a bona fide claim of title is void, and a contempt proceeding predicated upon a disobedience thereof will be restrained by prohibition. Id. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 2660, providing for the deportation of insane persons has no application to insane persons against whom criminal proceedings are pending and prohibition lies to restrain a court from ordering their deportation upon entering a decree adjudging them to be insane. State v. Superior Ct. [Wash.] 88 P. 207. Where before the trial of a person accused of a capital offense it is suggested by affidavit that she is insane, the court has inherent jurisdiction to appoint a commissioner to investigate as to her sanity and upon the report of such commission to decree her insane, and a writ to prevent the entry of such decree will be denied. Id. Where the law provided that the superior court of the county in which application for letters should be first made should have exclusive jurisdiction over the estate of the decedent, the action of the superior court of another county in assuming jurisdiction after application had been made to the court of another county is in excess of its jurisdiction and will be restrained by prohibition. Dungan v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 84 P. 767. The court having jurisdiction to enjoin the exhibition of an accused person's photograph in the "rogues gallery," its action in doing so will not be restrained by prohibition. Schulman v. 17. The writ was denied to prevent a court having jurisdiction from admitting evidence, the reception of which at most would constitute mere error. Johnston v. Superior Ct. [Cal. App.] 87 P. 211. Where the court has jurisdiction, the mere fact that the petition or complaint by which the action was inaugurated is defective is not ground for the issuance of the writ. State v. Stobie, 194 Mo. 14, 92 S. W. 191. Error in granting a preliminary injunction upon a defective bill cannot be relieved against by prohibition. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co. v. Ritz [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 257. Defects and irregularities in proceedings of inferior tribunal is not ground of the issuance of the writ as prohibition is a preventive, not a corrective remedy. State v. Craig [Minn.] 111 N. W. 3. Admission of erroneous evidence in an election contest proceeding. Turner v. Langan [Nev.] 88 P. 1088. Refusal of lunacy commission to allow prosecuting attorney to be present during portion of examination of an alleged lunatic against whom a criminal prosecution is pending cannot be reviewed. State v. Superior Ct. [Wash.] 88 P. 207. Writ does not lie for an injury apprehended on the theory that the court may decide erroneously, and when jurisdiction exists, it will not issue to prevent errors of law or procedure. People v. Wyatt, 113 App. Div. 111, 99 N. Y. S. 114.

18. Prohibition was refused where court prepared a decree granting an injunction but did not sign or enter it owing to the pendency of the prohibition proceedings. Zell v. Judges of Circuit Ct. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 86. Where a motion to dimiss is pending in lower court and operation of a preliminary injunction suspended, a writ of accomplished.[19] Prohibition will be denied where the object sought to be accomplished thereby has been effected by the parties themselves,[20] or where the matter involved has become a mere moot question.[21] On an application for prohibition to stay a criminal proceeding, the guilt of innocence of the relators forms no basis for the issuance of the writ.[22] The supervisory jurisdiction of the supreme court will not be exercised by means of prohibition so as to give the right of appeal where the law does not allow an appeal and there is no usurpation of power on the part of the court below,[23] nor will the writ lie to usurp the functions of appeals, writs of error, or certiorari.[24] The writ is justified only by extreme necessity when the grievance cannot be redressed by ordinary proceedings at law,[25] and the fact that the legal remedy may be indirect or inconvenient does not alter the rule;[26] but the mere fact that a remedy by appeal exists is not sufficient to warrant a denial of the writ, it must be speedy and adequate.[27] But the mere fact that there is no right of prohibition will be denied as it will not be assumed that lower court in determining the motion to dismiss will not give the petitioner all the relief to which he is entitled. Boca & L. R. Co. v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 88 P. 718.

19. An order of the court continuing an attachment pending an appeal from a judgment for defendant in the same action is not a fully accomplished judicial act, as the injury is recurring. Primm v. Superior Ct. [Cal. App.] 84 P. 786.

20. Relator was ordered to turn over all the property and effects of the office of sheriff to a rival claimant and upon his failure to do so was imprisoned for contempt but prior to the application for a permanent writ of prohibition, relator leased, there being nothing upon which the court could operate, it was denied. Where it was sought by prohibition to restrain the election commissioners from selecting election officers for a primary election at such a time that the primary was held before the return day of the provisional order and so late that a new primary could not be held before the election, only a moot question was involved and the writ was denied. Kalbfell v. Wood, 193 Mo. 675, 92 S. W. 230.

Where during the pendency of an action of assumpsit the plaintiff in such action commenced an action for an accounting against the same defendant and its appeal from an order overruling its plea to the jurisdiction was dismissed, and the plaintiff pursuant to an order elected to proceed in chancery, prohibition was denied, there being an adequate remedy in the same action. Port Huron Sav. Bk. v. Law [Mich.] 14 Det. Leg. N. 2, 111 N. W. 202. Where court of general sessions, which is without power to grant a new trial in a criminal case after judgment except on the ground of newly discovered evidence, grants such new trial, the people not having the right of appeal are entitled to the benefit of the writ. People v. Court of General Session, 185 N. Y. 504, 78 N. E. 149, afg. 112 App. Div. 424, 98 N. Y. S. 557, which rvd. People v. Goff, 49 Misc. 72, 98 N. Y. S. 66. 26. Where magistrate issuing subpoena was not only without jurisdiction but the subpoena void on its face the writ was refused on the ground that the relator had an adequate remedy by habeas corpus. People v. Wyatt, 186 N. Y. 383, 79 N. E. 330, afg. 113 App. Div. 111, 99 N. Y. S. 114.

27. Remedy held inadequate: Where court had no jurisdiction to enjoin state drainage commissioners from taking proceedings to establish a drain, the remedy by appeal was held to be inadequate. State v. Fisk [N. D.] 107 N. W. 191. An appeal from an order, continuing an attachment in force pending an appeal from a judgment for defendant in the action to which it is ancillary, is not sufficiently adequate to warrant a denial of the writ to prevent such continuance. Primm v. Superior Ct. [Cal. App.] 84 P. 786. Where a court of one county was without jurisdiction over the settlement of the estate of a decedent, the court of another county having first acquired exclusive jurisdiction, the remedy by appeal is not sufficiently adequate to preclude the issuance of the court. Dungan v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 74, 84 P. 767.

Held adequate: Where in election contest the nonjoinder of an unsuccessful candidate who obtained more votes than the contestant is objected to, the contestee has an adequate remedy by appeal and prohibition will be denied. State v. McElhinney [Mo.] 97 S. W. 159. Appeal coupled with right to supersede order held adequate. McAneny v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 87 P. 1020. Admission on petition for letters of administration of evidence that petitioner's intestate was not her husband held remediable by appeal. Johnson v. Superior Ct. [Cal. App.] 87 P. 211. In an action by one claiming to hold office in a county to restrain another claimant from performing the duties of such office, the remedy by appeal is ample and such injunction proceedings will not be enjoined by prohibition. State v. Superior Ct. [Wash.] 86 P. 632. In Alabama a writ of review is not of itself ground for the issuance of the writ,[28] nor is the mere fact that an appeal lies a bar to prohibition where it is the appropriate remedy.[29] The writ will not issue as ancillary to a contemplated writ of error or appeal.[30] The applicant for the writ must have some interest in the relief sought to be obtained.[31]

§ 2. Practice and procedure.[32]—Jurisdiction to issue the writ is not affected by any misstatement or concealment of fact in the petition but upon the facts disclosed by the record.[33] The United States circuit court of appeals is without jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition as an original or independent proceeding.[34] An application for a writ of prohibition impliedly admits the existence to the body to whom it is directed.[35] If the inadequacy of the legal remedy lies in the facts of the particular case which are denied, issue must be joined and such facts tried [36] and a submission on the return without so doing is fatal to the application.[37] Where it is contended that one of two courts has exclusive jurisdiction over a proceeding because of having first obtained it, the truth of the facts necessary to give such court jurisdiction cannot be questioned on an application for prohibition against the court attempting to acquire jurisdiction, such matters being for the court having jurisdiction to determine.[38] The return should be fairly construed.[39] If the return to an alternative writ of prohibition is incomplete, the relator should move for a further return, and not move for an absolute writ upon the papers as they are, as upon a motion for an absolute writ without a trial of the issues the return is conclusive as to all matters not traversed even though they constitute new matter.[40]

PROPERTY.[41]

Definition and nature.[42]—A right may be property if valuable though not capable of unrestricted transfer.[43] Part of the right of property is the right to re-prohibition to restrain a county commissioner from a general discharge of official duty in the future will not be as there is a plain and adequate remedy at law. Code 1896, p. 966, c. 94, § 3420. Goodwin v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 122. Where action complained of is the threatened admission of erroneous evidence in an action over which the court has jurisdiction, the remedy by appeal is adequate. Turner v. Langan [Nev.] 88 P. 1088. A defendant in a criminal action who has been placed in jeopardy has an adequate remedy by appeal and prohibition will be denied to restrain the court from placing him twice in jeopardy. State v. Williams, 117 Mo. App. 564, 92 S. W. 151.

31. A public administrator who has applied for letters of administration and the next of kin of the decedent have a sufficient beneficial interest to entitle them to apply for a writ to prevent the court of another state from wrongfully assuming jurisdiction. Dungan v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 84 P. 767. Where information in a criminal proceeding is insufficient to give the court jurisdiction, prohibition lies at the suit of a witness subpoenaed to testify in such proceeding to restrain further action in the matter. People v. Dunning, 113 App. Div. 35, 98 N. Y. S. 1067.

35. The court intimates that the constitutionality of a statute creating a state board cannot be questioned by a writ directed to the members of such board. Davenport v. Elrod [S. D.] 107 N. W. 833.

36, 37. Appeal alleged to be inadequate because of supersedeas in amount beyond appellant's ability to give. McAneny v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 87 P. 1020.

38. Under the law of California which provides that upon the death of a nonresident leaving property in more than one county, the court of that county in which application for letters is first made shall have exclusive jurisdiction, held that on an application for prohibition to prevent a court of one county from taking any proceedings in the settlement of a decedent's estate on the ground that application was first made in the court of another county, the question as to whether deceased left property in the latter county cannot be raised. Dungan v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 84 P. 767.

39. Averment that writ was issued on "information and belief of the affiant" shows that it was on oath. People v. Wyatt, 186 N. Y. 383, 79 N. E. 330.

40. People v. Wyatt, 186 N. Y. 383, 79 N. E. 330, afg. 113 App. Div. 111, 99 N. Y. S. 114.

fuse to sell it save to accredited buyers who agree to sell only at a fixed price.[44] The right of property in domesticated deer does not entitle the owner to violate regulations respecting all deer made to protect wild game.[45] A license to pursue an occupation partakes of the nature of property.[46]

Possession.[47]—Possession imports ownership,[48] but it is not conclusive.[49] There can be no constructive possession on a void claim of ownership.[50]

Realty or personalty.[51]—Oil in place is part of the freehold,[52] but on severance becomes personalty.[53] Trees are realty unless severed actually or constructively.[54]

Formulae, information, processes, literary and like mental productions.[55]—Market quotations are property [56] and a limited communication of them to exchange members and their customers does not amount to a free publication.[57] Such quotations until free publication will be protected from disclosure or publication by one not entitled and who gains knowledge of them by fraud.[58] The common-law right of literary property ends when copyright begins,[59] and resale of a copyrighted book cannot be restricted by mere notice not partaking of contract with the purchaser.[60] While every one may reproduce literary works that have become free, it may be unfair competition to do so in close imitation of the typography and binding designed by others.[61] Property rights in a secret process may be protected by contract limitations on a buyer's right of resale restricting it to approved persons and at fixed prices.[62] An employe impliedly agrees to keep such secrets [63] and this implication is not supplanted by an express agreement having relation to other secrets and for the benefit of other persons.[64] Neither should an express promise to keep secret all processes be so construed as to disentitle an employe to make known process learned by him independently.[65] The property rights in a secret trade process may be protected by injunction against disclosure [66] and in hearing such a bill, a disclosure of the process should not be required even in camera, if the fact of a secret process can be otherwise shown.[67] Disclosure will not be compelled merely to prove that the owner is a manufacturer and as such tax exempt,[68] but the formula of a proprietary medicine will not be protected by denying a commission to take testimony on behalf of state authorities who allege that such medicine is a liquor being sold without license.[69]

Creation and transfer.[70]—Transfer is usually by sale,[71] gift,[72] inheritance,[73] or will.[74]

Loss and abandonment.[75]—Abandonment will not be found from mere absence of the owner,[76] or from mere cessation of use,[77] or from mere failure to assert a claim.[78] The finder of property may hold it as against all others save the owner [79] but not against the owner unless the owner has abandoned it [80] and the owner need not demand it.[81]

S. 1903, c. 34, § 24, par. 3, given power to contract and do other acts in relation to the property and concerns of the county, and by § 25, c. 34, R. S., levy and collect taxes, has authority to contract with a person to search for omitted and unassessed personal property and moneys due the county from other sources. County of Henry v. Stevens, 120 Ill. App. 344.

87. Cleveland School Furniture Co. v. Greenville [Ala.] 41 So. 862. Powers to grade and pave any street, etc., and "all powers necessary and proper in the exercise of said powers" include the power to designate which streets shall be paved and what material shall be used. City of Baltimore v. Flack [Md.] 64 A. 702.

88. Where charter powers exist for ownership of certain public utilities, including the power "to construct and establish gas works and to regulate the establishment thereof" by others, such charter power include by implication at least power to purchase gas works. City of Indianapolis v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 640. A power to contract for the furnishings educational institutions cannot be implied as incident to the objects and purposes of municipal corporations, and therefore in the absence of express authority the municipality cannot be bound by such contract. Cleveland School Furniture Co. v. Greenville [Ala.] 41 So. 862.

89. Authority to expend a road fund "for work done on the roads of the county in such places" as the board shall determine does not authorize the expenditure of money from the fund to buy road machinery, especially where the township trustees have power to buy such machinery. Harrison County v. Ogden [Iowa] 110 N. W. 32. Where a contract to pave a street only is duly authorized, a contract to pave the street, set new curb stones, reset old curb stones, etc., is not authorized, and, if such contract is not a separable contract, it cannot be enforced or recovered upon in whole or in part. Rodgers v. New York, 51 Misc. 119, 100 N. Y. S. 745.

to a public contract from questioning the authority of the officer executing it,[90] or of the municipality.[91]

If the method of entering into a contract is prescribed by charter or statute, such method must be strictly complied with [92] and the doctrine of implied contract does not ordinarily apply,[93] persons dealing with municipal corporations being bound to take notice of the limitations of their powers; [94] but acceptance of benefits has been frequently held to raise an obligation to pay.[95] Where no method is prescribed, contracts which fall within the ordinary powers of a city may be entered into without resolution or ordinance, and, in the absence of any statute requiring it, without writing.[96] Public officers [97] and boards [98] have only such power to contract on be-

90. One receiving advance payments in consideration of a release of all damages growing out of a certain contract held estopped to question the authority of the secretary of the navy to make the agreement. Cramp & Son v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cl. 164.

91. One having used property leased from a municipality cannot assert lack of power to lease. Town of Beloit v. Heineman, 128 Wis. 398, 107 N. W. 334.

92. Where action by the mayor is necessary the council alone cannot make a valid contract (State v. Jones, 98 Minn. 6, 106 N. W. 963), but, where the mayor's action is merely ministerial, he can be forced by peremptory mandamus to sign a contract made by the council under authority given them (State v. Fisher [Del.] 64 A. 68). Purchase of a road machine being a legislative act, a majority of the supervisors must act on deliberation (Austin Mfg. Co. v. Ayr, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 356), but deliberation is presumed from the joint action (Id.). Where either of three officers was entitled to act, action by them jointly is valid. City of Fayette v. Rich [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 8. The same rule applies as to a city comptroller signing a contract. Detroit Reduction Co. v. Blades, 143 Mich. 591, 13 Det. Leg. N. 73, 107 N. W. 286.

93. Harrison County v. Ogden [Iowa] 110 N. W. 32; City of Springfield v. Schmook, 120 Mo. App. 41, 96 S. W. 257; Miland v. Bowrou, 113 App. Div. 661, 99 N. Y. S. 914. A contractor cannot recover for expenses incurred in preparing to perform an invalid contract which he is not permitted to carry out. Johnston v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cl. 76. Where one railroad agrees to transport troops over its own and connecting lines under contracts with the latter, there is no such privity of contract between the government and an intermediate line as to authorize a recovery against the former for a mistake in fixing its charges, though the government gets the benefit. Mobile & Ohio R. Co. v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 232.

94. Niland v. Bowron, 113 App. Div. 661, 99 N. Y. S. 914.

95. A promise of compensation will be implied where the government occupies realty without claiming title thereto. Philippine Sugar Estates Development Co. v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 33. Where private property is taken for the use of the army subsequent to the executive instructions directing payment, an implied contract arises to pay its reasonable value (Id.), and the rule applies to territory which has been the seat of war if it has been reduced to subjection (Id.). See, also, post, § 66, as to recovery by contractor on quantum meruit.

96. City of Decatur v. McKean [Ind.] 78 N. E. 982.

97. An officer having authority to certify the amount to be paid on work done under a statute, has no authority to certify a larger amount than that authorized by statute. State v. Young [Iowa] 110 N. W. 292. Under Highway Laws 1890, pp. 1193-1197, c. 568, art. 4, and sections 80 to 98 inclusive, providing for the laying out, altering and discontinuing highways, the proceedings, method of paying damages and costs, declaring the determination of commissioners appointed by court and all orders shall be filed in the town clerk's office and that such orders shall be carried out by the town commissioner of highways where the court commissioners report in favor of a highway and that the cost should be about $1,000, the town commissioner has no authority to make a contract for the construction of the highway which will cost $6,000. Niland v. Bowron, 113 App. Div. 661, 99 N. Y. S. 914. Under the Act, 13th July, 1892 (27 Stat. p. 145, § 6), the postmaster-general had no authority to contract for the use of patented pneumatic tubes for dispatching mail. Beach v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cl. 110. A public officer cannot contract with himself, see infra, § 4. Power to contract for publication of delinquent tax list being elsewhere, no such power is implied in general powers of county commissioners. Brown v. State [Kan.] 84 P. 549.

98. A county building commission created under Act March 22, 1900 (P. L. p. 190), to control on behalf of the county the purchase of land, the erection of buildings and the payment therefor, the county being bonded to raise the funds for payment, acts as agent for the county, and a contract made by it for the erection of a county courthouse is the contract of the county. Herman v. Essex County Chosen Freeholders [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 742. Except under St. 1884, p. 185, c. 226 (Rev. Laws, c. 50, § 11), the board of street commissioners cannot bind the city by an executory contract. Whitcomb v. Boston [Mass.] 78 N. E. 407. A board having authority to expend a special sum raised by taxation for a particular purpose may expend it by the issuance of warrants payable out of such fund, but cannot incur obligations expressly payable in the future out of such fund. It has authority to expend but not to contract indebtedness. Harrison County v. Ogden [Iowa] 110 N. W. 32. The armory board constituted by Military Code, § 134, Laws 1898, p. 563, c. 212, has no authority to bind the city to pay for architect's services until authorized to incur such indebtedness by the commissioners of the sinking fund. Horgan v. New half of the public as is conferred upon them by law, and one contracting with them is bound to know the scope of their authority.[99] The public powers devolved by law or charter upon the governing body of a municipality cannot be delegated to others,[1] but the council may select several materials out of which a specified officer shall select the one to be used,[2] or provide for purchase at a value fixed by appraisal.[3] As to matters within the business functions of municipalities, officers may bind the municipality beyond their terms of office [4] provided the obligations fixed on the municipality are so adjusted that the debt limit or the current appropriation is not exceeded.[5] They cannot by contract surrender any of its legislative or administrative York, 100 N. Y. S. 68. Under the Building Code enacted under Greater New York Charter, Laws 1901, c. 466, p. 2081, § 470, providing that in cases of danger arising from the threatened falling of buildings, etc., the department of buildings shall cause the necessary work to be done to make the same temporarily safe, that department has no authority to contract for the storage of materials taken from a collapsed building, or for the employment of watchmen to protect the same. People v. Metz, 100 N. Y. S. 913. Under Mans. Dig. § 832, providing that "where there is one or more districts in the city for the same general purpose * * * the boards of different districts may combine so as to form only one board for the whole territory to be thus improved so as to make the whole improvement uniform; but no money raised by assessment in one district shall be expended in another district," the boards of improvements of several districts may combine to provide waterworks for the districts, but the contracts, for the work in the several districts, must be made on separate estimates, and one district cannot be obliged to pay any of the expense incurred by another. Crescent Hotel Co. v. Bradley [Ark.] 98 S. W. 971.

99. Under section 91 of the city and village act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 308, c. 24), which provides that no expense shall be incurred by any of the officers or departments of the corporation, unless an appropriation shall have been previously made, the city is not bound by the city collector's promise to pay his clerks extra for extra work, no appropriation having been made therefor. May v. Chicago, 222 Ill. 595, 78 N. E. 912. Where architects draw plans for an armory under authority of a resolution, they are bound to know the limitation on the cost of the armory set by that resolution. Horgan v. New York, 100 N. Y. S. 68. Where the publication of a delinquent tax payer's list is made under an order limiting the amount to be paid therefore, the publisher is bound by that rate whether it is reasonable or not. Dodge v. Kings County [Cal.] 98 P. 266; Sanger v. U. S., 40 Ct.-Cl. 47. City collector attempted to contract with clerks for overtime, there being no appropriation for such purpose. May v. Chicago, 124 Ill. App. 527.

1. A contract between the board of education of a school district authorized by 3 Priv. Laws 1867, p. 321, and the state board of education whereby the former delegates to the latter certain discretionary powers to conduct and manage common schools, is void. Lindblad v. Board of Education, 221 Ill. 261, 77 N. E. 450. A public board or body can delegate mere ministerial work but cannot delegate work which involves judgment or discretion. A school board having authority to select a site for a school house, adopt plans and award the contract for building the same, cannot appoint a committee to exercise such power in its place. Kinney v. Howard [Iowa] 110 N. W. 282.

2. A council having power to select the material to be used in paving a street may designate several materials in the alternative, and may provide that the city engineer shall after the bids thereon have been opened choose which of the materials shall be used. City of Baltimore v. Gahan [Md.] 64 A. 716. The action of a council in designating in the alternative the kind of material to be used in improving a street, is not a surrender of any of the legislative power with which it is invested, and its agent, the board of public service, has the right under such a determining ordinance to make the selection from the materials named, and the material so selected becomes the material chosen by council. Scott v. Hamilton, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 1.

3. Under a contract for the purchase of a gas plant by a city if it exercise its option, a provision that the value shall be fixed by appraisement is not a delegation of municipal authority. City of Indianapolis v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 640.

4. May make twenty-five-year contract for water supply. Omaha Water Co. v. Omaha [C. C. A.] 147 F. 1. A board of aldermen cannot make a contract for the employment of legal services which will be binding for an unlimited time and irrevocable by their successors. City of Wilmington v. Bryan, 141 N. C. 666, 54 S. E. 543.

5. The fact that council limited the amount for which contracts would be let for the construction of a waterworks system to the sum then available for that purpose, whereas a much larger sum will eventually be needed to complete the system, does not indicate that council has no intention of making further appropriation at some future date, and the letting of a contract for a part of the system within the limitation is not an abuse of power. Yaryan v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 1. A charter restricting the amount payable any one year under a contract to the amount appropriated that year for that purpose does not prohibit a municipality from making contracts for a reasonable term of years for usual and necessary things and stipulating therein for annual payments which will be within the revenue and appropriations for the several years in which they are to be made, when it is for the best interests of the municipality that such contracts should be made, and their provisions are fair and reasonable. So under Bridgeport City Charter, as powers,[6] nor can a provision in a city charter be made unenforceable by contract,[7] but franchises excluding the city may be granted.[8] Exemptions from taxation are only sustained where a fair equivalent is received.[9] Power conferred to enter into a specific contract is exhausted by a single exercise thereof.[10]

A municipal corporation may ratify the unauthorized contracts of its agents if it had the power to make the contract in the first instance, but not otherwise,[11] as an amended in 1893, which provides for the appointment of a board of appropriation and taxation with power to make appropriations and lay taxes for city purposes, but without power to make appropriations in excess of the revenues of the city, a fair and reasonable contract for the removal of garbage for the term of ten years at an annual payment not exceeding the amount which had been appropriated for that purpose during that year, though the total sum payable under the contract is greater than the sum appropriated for any one year, is valid. Toomey v. Bridgeport [Conn.] 64 A. 215.

6. Contract giving up control of park. State v. Minneapolis Park Com'rs [Minn.] 110 N. W. 1121. A contract by a city by which the police power is attempted to be forever abdicated is ultra vires and void. State v. St. Paul, etc., Co., 98 Minn. 380, 108 N. W. 261. A contract with a municipality by which a railroad company is relieved from the obligation to construct and maintain in suitable repair safe crossings at streets and highways laid out over the road, and the municipality deprived of the right of enforcing such obligation as a police regulation, is ultra vires and void. State v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 98 Minn. 429, 108 N. W. 269.

7. Where a city charter provides that a regularly appointed policeman shall hold office for two years unless sooner discharged for cause, a contract made between a man and a city whereby the former in consideration of his appointment as a police officer agreed that either the city, its marshal, or its city council might discharge him without notice and with or without cause at any time, is against public policy and void. City of Paris v. Cabiness [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 549, 98 S. W. 925.

8. Under a power to provide for the erection and maintenance of a system of waterworks to supply the city with water, the city may make a contract for the supply of water for a period of years and may therein exclude all third parties and even itself from constructing and operating waterworks for the period of years covered by the contract. City of Vicksburg v. Vicksburg Waterworks Co., 202 U. S. 453, 50 Law. Ed. 1102. A contract which gives to a company the exclusive right and privilege for the period of thirty years from the time the ordinance takes effect, of erecting, maintaining and operating a system of waterworks to supply the city and its inhabitants for public and private use, excludes the city as well as everyone else from competing with the grantee company. Id.

9. A contract between a city and an electric light company by which the latter supplied the former with street lights without charge, and the former exempted from taxation all property of the latter and agreed if any tax was levied on the latter's property to pay such tax, is invalid as contravening sections 170 and 174, of the constitution which provide no property shall be exempt from taxation other than that named therein, and does not name property of an electric light company. Board of Councilmen of Frankfort v. Capital Gas & Elec. Light Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1114, 96 S. W. 870. See City of Nashville v. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 607, where a contract with a telephone company providing for a yearly payment to the city in lieu of all taxes was upheld as a special tax for occupation and as not giving immunity from a general tax.

10. A city having contracted with a railway company to pave a certain street has no power during the continuance of such contract to contract with others to pave the same street at the expense of the property owners. City of Chicago v. Newberry Library, 224 Ill. 330, 79 N. E. 666. Under an ordinance authorizing a contract for a term of ten years to provide receptacles for waste papers, etc., on the streets, there is no authority after a ten-year contract has been made, although terminated before the ten years have expired, to make another contract for the balance of the ten years. Buffalo Clean Street Co. v. Buffalo, 113 App. Div. 887, 98 N. Y. S. 784. Under a statute providing that where no bids for laying sidewalks are received, the city officials shall construct the walk in accordance with the plans filed, and shall keep an accurate account of the cost including all labor and material, the same to be charged as a special tax against the abutting property, the city officials have no authority to contract with any individual or firm to do the work for one sum. City of Elsberry v. Black, 120 Mo. App. 20, 96 S. W. 256. Vote of town meeting rejecting proposition to buy water plant, does not exhaust town's right to vote on the proposition again. Revere Water Co. v. Winthrop [Mass.] 78 N. E. 497. Permission to an abutter to pave the street in front of his land is not such an exercise of the power to pave as to preclude repaving by the city. City of Louisville v. Gast, 28 Ky. L. R. 1256, 91 S. W. 251.

11. Where cedar poles are sold and delivered to a city on an order given by the director of public works, who had no authority to give such order, the validity of the bill may be recognized by the councils and mayor and the same shall be enforceable against the city. Valentine Clark Co. v. Allegheny City, 143 F. 644. A claim for materials furnished a city under a contract made without the formalities provided for by the act of March 7, 1901, art. 15 (P. L. 20, 36), and of June 20, 1901 (P. L. 586, 592), may be legalized by a joint resolution passed by a two-thirds vote of the councils and the 1874 (P. L. 232), § 5. Id. A contract by unapproval of the mayor under act May 23, authorized city officers is ratified by suit thereon by the city. City of Worcester v.

ultra vires act is void and cannot be ratified.[12] Ratification may be implied from formal acceptance of the work and recognition of liability in judicial proecedings founded on the contract.[13] Where an appropriation is made for a certain purpose and the details of the work are left to a department, a contract is not void because it is insufficient to accomplish the desired object.[14]

§ 2. How initiated.[15]—If so required the specifications in the published notice must be so framed as to secure fair competition on equal terms to all bidders,[16] and requirement of patented materials or appliances invalidates the contract if it tends to give one person a monopoly [17] but not if it leaves room for competition,[18] and for like reason a requirement, that public printing bear a trades union label is invalid.[19] A contract to apply to work scientific knowledge and skill need not be let in competitive bidding.[20]

Worcester & H. Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 232.

12. Niland v. Bowron, 113 App. Div. 661, 99 N. Y. S. 914; Harrison County v. Ogden [Iowa] 110 N. W. 32.

13. Where a municipality having authority to contract for water for public and private purposes receives a supply without any express contract and collects payment therefor, there is sufficient evidence of a ratification, and, when coupled with the act of recognizing the liability to pay by a bill of interpleader, there is clearly a ratification. New Jersey Suburban Water Co. v. Harrison, 72 N. J. Law, 196, 62 A. 490. The acts of a committee are made the acts of the board of supervisors by their acceptance thereof and resolutions passed to the same effect as the acts of the committee, and it is immaterial whether such acceptance is made before or after an injunction against the committee has been asked for. Raymond v. McKenna [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 935, 110 N. W. 121.

14. Channel to be dredged so as to enable all classes of vessels to pass through while the one contracted for was insufficient. San Francisco Bridge Co. v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 139.

15. See 6 C. L. 1112.

16. Where a statute requires competition in the letting of contracts for the construction of public improvements or the doing of public works, any provision contained in an ordinance therefor which tends to prevent or restrict competition among persons who may desire to become bidders is in contravention of such statute and therefore illegal. Siegel v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 428, 79 N. E. 280. A provision for an indemnity bond and for the retention of ten per cent. of the price for a year is not invalid as limiting competition. Dillingham v. Spartanburg [S. C.] 56 S. E. 381.

17. Under § 580, c. 24, Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, providing that public improvement contracts to be paid for by special assessment shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder, and § 582, c. 24, supra, requiring notice by publication that bids will be received and contract awarded to lowest responsible bidder, an ordinance requiring the improvement to be made with a patented article which could be made by only one company, is illegal. Siegel v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 428, 79 N. E. 280. Where a city council enters into a contract for the paving of a certain street with a vitrified brick manufactured and sold by one company only, there being other available kinds of vitrified brick equally good for the purpose, the contract is void under Gen. St. 1901, § 747, requiring such contracts to be let to the lowest bidder, as it is against public policy and restricts or prevents free competition. National Surety Co. v. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. [Kan.] 84 P. 1034.

18. As where price at which all may obtain such material is known. Bye v. Atlantic City [N. J. Law] 64 A. 1056. Requirement of a patented material does not invalidate the contract. Dillingham v. Spartanburg [S. C.] 56 S. E. 381. Competitive bidding is not necessarily narrowed, but may be broadened, by admission to the competition of material which is monopolized by reason of patents, and, in the exercise of a sound discretion, it is competent for the proper city authorities, in advertising for bids for a street improvement, to call for material which is covered or the assembling of which is covered by patents. Holbrook v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 31.

Where a mayor and council are not required by statute or by charter to award street paving contracts to the lowest bidder, a contract for paving with a patented article or process is not illegal because of an ordinance requiring such contracts to be given out only after competitive bidding. Bunker v. Hutchinson [Kan.] 87 P. 884. A contract involving in its execution the use of a patented material or process is not invalid on that account, when the contract for performing the work and furnishing the materials is let to the lowest responsible bidder with the understanding that the patentee would allow the use of his patent and superintend its construction in consideration of a certain specified sum paid him by whoever secured the contract. City of Baltimore v. Flack [Md.] 64 A. 702. A provision that "none but citizens of the city of Wichita are to be employed on said work" added at the request of the contractor to the contract after the same had been awarded without any such clause in the specifications does not violate Gen. St. 1901, § 747, providing for competitive bidding, etc. American Bonding Co. v. Dickey [Kan.] 88 P. 66.

19. Where the county board are authorized to ask for bids for the public printing, a requirement that the printing shall have a certain trades council label, where half the printers of the county have no right to use that label, is unlawful as a restraint on competition. People v. Edgcomb, 112 App. Div. 604, 98 N. Y. S. 965.

20. Horgan v. New York, 100 N. Y. S. 68.

Statutory requirements as to advertising for bids,[21] as to entering specifications in a book,[22] as to getting an approval affixed to a contract,[23] or as to requiring an estimate of the cost to be made before the letting of a contract,[24] and other requirements, must be complied with,[25] although substantial compliance may be sufficient.[26] The advertisement for bids not being a legislative function may be delegated to a committee of the city council.[27] A valid contract cannot be awarded to bidders on specifications containing illegal provisions.[28]

The material to be used is sometimes required to be specified [29] and several materials, full specifications for each being made, may be specified, the material to be actually used to be selected after the bids have been opened.[30] Where the nature of

21. Agreement by which paving contractor whose work was unsatisfactory agreed to replace it with another pavement of different kind for the balance unpaid on first pavement is a new contract within the provision for advertisements. Cahn v. Metz, 101 N. Y. S. 392. A provision that municipal officers "may" advertise for bids is permissive (Dillingham v. Spartanburg [S. C.] 56 S. E. 381), and, having advertised, all bids may be rejected and the contract let without bidding (Id.).

22. Under Act of April 4, 1870 (P. L. 834), which relates to bridge contracts, and provides that the specifications of the work shall be written or printed in a book for at least four weeks before the time appointed for opening bids, and that no contract shall be awarded until approved by one of the judges of the court of common pleas, and makes it a misdemeanor to enter into any contract otherwise, a contract, the specifications of which were not put in a book, and to which no judge affixed his approval, is void. Venango County v. Penn Bridge Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 445.

23. Venango County v. Penn Bridge Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 445, as noted.

24. A contract for the disposal without cost to the city of garbage collected and delivered by the city to the contractor does not require the construction of any public works and therefore does not come within § 12 of the board of public works act which requires an estimate by the commissioner in cases of contracts for such constructions. Detroit Reduction Co. v. Blades, 143 Mich. 591, 13 Det. Leg. N. 73, 107 N. W. 286. Charter requirement that an estimate of cost shall be published with the advertisement and no bid accepted which exceeds the estimate is mandatory. Raising of estimate after bids are opened ineffectual. Murphy v. Plattsmouth [Neb.] 110 N. W. 749.

25. Under Laws 1899, p. 116, c. 83, § 2, giving the chairman of a town board authority to contract for the purchase of a road machine "on being petitioned by a majority of the tax payers * * * representing more than one-half of the taxable property * * * to be ascertained from the last preceding assessment roll," the sufficiency of the petition should be tested as of the time of the certification of the petition by the town clerk for presentation to the chairman and not as of the date of the signing of the petition. Pape v. Carlton [Wis.] 109 N. W. 968.

26. Under a statute requiring the common council to give notice of the letting of contracts, by publication, such statute is complied with where the notice is given by the clerk in conformity with the statute but stating the hour for the closing of the reception of bids to be different from the hour set by the council and directed by them to be published. Shirk v. Hupp [Ind.] 78 N. E. 242.

27. City of Fayette v. Rich [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 8.

28. Where the law requires the award of a sewer contract to the lowest responsible bidder, the insertion in the specifications of illegal or unauthorized conditions or obligations on the contractor, compliance with which on his part will necessarily and illegally increase the cost of the work, will render the contract illegal and void. A specification making the contractor liable to replace all watercourses and drains, pipes, poles, maintenance of travel over any railroad or street car line, which might be obstructed by reason of said work, and to repair any injury to the same, is such illegal obligation. Anderson v. Fuller [Fla.] 41 So. 684.

29. Gen. St. 1901, § 730, requiring a petition for paving a street to state a specific description of the material to be used, is fully complied with where the petition states "vitrified brick" and the quality desired. National Surety Co. v. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. [Kan.] 84 P. 1034.

30. A commission may prepare three sets of specifications for paving, each requiring a different paving material, may receive bids on all of the specifications, then select the material they think best and award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder on the specifications calling for that material, even though a bid on another material made by a responsible person was lower. City of Baltimore v. Flack [Md.] 64 A. 702; City of Baltimore v. Gahan [Md.] 64 A. 716.

A council may designate in the alternative the kind of material to be used. Scott v. Hamilton, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 1. Municipal Code, § 55, providing that an ordinance shall contain "a statement of the general nature of the improvement and character of the material thereof," is complied with by an ordinance providing the improvement shall be of "either sheet asphalt block or vitrified brick" as decided upon by the board of public service after the bids therefor were received. Scott v. Hamilton, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 493. Section 55 of the Municipal Code §§ 1536—215, Rev. St. 1906 [Bates' 5th ed.], providing that improvement ordinances shall contain a statement of the general nature of the improvement and the character of the materials thereof, is complied with by an ordinance for street improvement which provides that the paving material shall be "as-the work does not allow exact specifications, specifications which are approximate as to the quantity of work and material are sufficient.[31]

§ 3. How closed.[32]—An unqualified acceptance is essential [33] but may be implied.[34] An acceptance is not binding when qualified by a limitation of liability to a particular fund already chargeable with contracts of equal right exceeding the fund.[35] An official's mere offer to "mark off" the amount of such contract from the appropriation does not set it apart for the contract and supply the lacking mutuality.[36] Where bids are called for they must be responsive to the advertisement,[37] though a municipality is not bound to reject a bid which fails to comply with a provision wholly for the benefit of the municipality.[38]

Although under a rule requiring contracts to be let to the lowest responsible bidder there is no requirement that the contract shall be let to the lowest bidder unless he is a responsible bidder [39] and furnishes proof thereof,[40] the lowest bidder if responsible must be awarded the contract [41] although a mathematical computation as phalt brick or other material, as may hereafter be determined." Emmert v. Elyria, 74 Ohio St. 185, 78 N. E. 269.

31. Where bids for the construction of a dam are called for on specifications expressly stated to be based on the estimates of the commissioners' engineer, but which were stated to be merely approximate and the quantity of work or material might be more or less as might be required by developments as the work progressed, it being impossible to give more exact specifications until the excavations disclosed further the nature of the rock and soil under ground, such specifications are proper. Walter v. McClellan, 113 App. Div. 295, 99 N. Y. S. 78.

32. See 6 C. L. 1113.

33. A person bidding for a contract to clean the streets of one district "subject to a sufficient appropriation" is not bound thereby where the city appropriates for street cleaning of the whole city an amount less than the total of the bids for cleaning the several districts. Hinkle v. Philadelphia, 214 Pa. 126, 63 A. 590; Toomey v. Bridgeport [Conn.] 64 A. 215.

34. Adoption by municipality of order for laying out of street is acceptance of proposition by abutters to postpone payment of damages if such street be laid out at once. Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston [Mass.] 80 N. E. 598. The acceptance by council of the surveyor's report as to the work done under a paving contract together with the payment of the money due according to that report, without specific objection to the pavement, constitutes an acceptance thereof by the city so far as the quality of the work and its completion according to specifications was concerned. Central Bitulithic Pav. Co. v. Mt. Clemens, 143 Mich. 259, 12 Det. Leg. N. 996, 106 N. W. 888. Where the government made no reply to one offering his patented pneumatic mail transmitting device for a specific purpose, the acceptance and use of another device infringing thereon did not amount to an acceptance. Beach v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cl. 110.

35, 36. Hinkle v. Philadelphia, 214 Pa. 126, 63 A. 590.

37. City of Baltimore v. Flack [Md.] 64 A. 702. Specifications required the rolling of the various layers of paving to be done by a seven-ton roller, and the contract provides that the rolling should be done by a city roller to be specified by the city engineer. City of Boonville v. Stephens [Mo. App.] 95 S. W. 314. A contract entered into for paving a street which varies in its specifications from the advertised specifications or the ordinance authorizing the work is unenforceable. Id. A bid substantially variant from the advertisement cannot be received though the error was in a blank which the advertisement required to be used by bidders. City Council of Montgomery v. Barnett [Ala.] 43 So. 92. A contract let to the best bidder containing substantial provisions beneficial to him not included in the specifications upon which bids were made is void. City of Mankato v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 329. The attachment of a proviso in the contract to the liquidated per diem damage clause of the specifications that it should not apply if the delay resulted from unavoidable causes construed as merely a reasonable interpretation of the specifications, and not to avoid the contract. Id. Where the specifications provided for payment out of several funds while the contract limited it to one, the variance was detrimental to the contractor. Id. Held apparent that the clause in the specifications for replacement of the payment if it became defective within ten years was only to apply where the defect was due to a default of the contractor, and hence a contract so providing in terms did not reduce the contractor's obligations. Id.

38. Requirement that proof of responsibility accompany bid. Nathan v. O'Brien, 102 N. Y. S. 947.

39. Scott v. Hamilton, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 493.

40. Where the charter provides that contracts shall be let to the lowest bidder furnishing "satisfactory proof" of responsibility, the bidder must not only be able to perform but must satisfy the municipal authorities thereof. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Trenton [N. J. Law] 65 A. 873.

41. Under P. L. 1904, Sp. Sess. p. 21, requiring that a contract for the supply of coal to the schools shall be awarded the lowest responsible bidder, a contract awarded to one whose bid was higher than that of another responsible bidder is void. Jacobson v. Board of Education [N. J. Law] 64 A. 609. Where the charter of a city requires the award of contracts for sewers to be to who is the lowest responsible bidder is not necessary;[42] but where the determining body is allowed to use its discretion in awarding the contract, they do not have to award it to the lowest bidder[43] and, where their action is free from fraud, the exercise of their discretion cannot be controlled.[44] A determination against the responsibility of a bidder requires notice to him before his bid can be refused.[45] A contract awarded on a bid for the work and material together is not made invalid because of an ordinance requiring separate bids for work and materials where the separate bids received amounted to more in the aggregate than the bid accepted.[46]

§ 4. Essential provisions in, and conditions pertaining to, public contracts.[47]—The contract must be authorized by a valid law or ordinance[48] and must conform thereto.[49] All statutory conditions must be complied with[50] as to the mode of exercising the power to contract,[51] the making of an estimate before,[52] and as to making appropriations before entering into contracts where such appropriations are made made to the lowest bidder, a contract made with other than the lowest bidder is illegal and void. Anderson v. Fuller [Fla.] 41 So. 684.

42. The provision of section 143 of the Municipal Code that the board of public service shall make a contract with the lowest and best bidder, or may reject any and all bids, does not limit the board to a mathematical computation as to who is the lowest responsible bidder but permits the board to go beyond the price bid and the character of the bidder and to accept the best proposition offered, considering quality, feasibility and efficiency of the thing to be furnished, the qualifications and responsibility of the bidder, and the price proposed in view of all the other considerations. Yaryan v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 1.

43. Where commissioners are authorized to accept the bid "which will, in their judgment, best secure the efficient performance of the work," they are not bound to accept the lowest bid, but where time is of the essence of the contract, may accept a higher bid where they honestly believe such acceptance will be for the benefit of the public. Walter v. McClellan, 113 App. Div. 295, 99 N. Y. S. 78. The statute governing cities of the second class does not require contracts for paving streets to be awarded to the lowest bidder, but leaves the award to the discretion of the mayor and council. Bunker v. Hutchinson [Kan.] 87 P. 884.

44. The discretion of the board of public service is not to be interfered with in the matter of awarding the contract to another than the lowest bidder except for fraud or its legal equivalent. Yaryan v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 1.

45. Jacobson v. Board of Education [N. J. Law] 64 A. 609.

46. Yaryan v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 1.

47. See 6 C. L. 1115.

48. Where parts of an ordinance are void, and those parts are easily severable and made independent of the other valid parts, and there can be no doubt the city council would have passed the ordinance with the invalid parts omitted because they concerned the interest of the contractor and not the city, etc., inhabitants and taxpayers, the whole ordinance is not void. Lackey v. Fayetteville Water Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 622. A contract for paving improvement made under a valid ordinance authorizing the same, but not until after a delay of one year and six months after the passage of the ordinance, is valid, and when completed according to its terms the tax bills issued in payment thereof are enforceable. Jaicks v. Middlesex Inv. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 759. Under the Cities and Villages Act no department can bind a city for administrative expenses unless they were included in the annual appropriation ordinance. Sections 89, 90. City collector contracting to pay clerks for overtime. May v. Chicago, 124 Ill. App. 527.

49. Where a contract does not conform with the resolution authorizing it, it is immaterial that the bidders understood the matter of the change, that the alterations resulted in just as satisfactory results as the designations contained in the resolution. City of Boonville v. Stephens [Mo. App.] 95 S. W. 314. Where a city ordinance requires the several layers of street paving to be rolled with a seven-ton roller, no contractor, city engineer, or other officer, has power to change that provision. Id. That a contract between municipal officers and a street railroad as to certain improvements departs from requirements imposed on the company by the council held not to affect its validity. City of Worcester v. Worcester & H. Consol. St. R. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 232.

50. A contract made by a city for the construction of public improvements therein will not be held void, as in violation of section 747, Gen. St. 1901, providing for the publication for bids and awards to the lowest responsible bidder, unless it be shown that the contract was in some way the result of acts done which are prohibited by such statute. American Bonding Co. v. Dickey [Kan.] 88 P. 66. Tax bills issued for the payment of work and an affidavit of due publication of the notice constitute a prima facie case of publication according to statute. Ross v. Gates, 117 Mo. App. 237, 93 S. W. 856.

51. Siegel v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 428, 79 N. E. 280.

52. An estimate by a city engineer "that the work should be done at a cost not to exceed $1.47 per square yard" is not an estimate within the meaning of a statute requiring an estimate to be submitted by the engineer before any contract for work could be made. City of Boonville v. Stephens [Mo. App.] 95 S. W. 314.

a prerequisite to the making of the contract.[53] Any material departure from the terms on which bidding was had invalidates the contract.[54] It must, if so required, be in writing,[55] signed in the name of the city by the proper official.[56] Contracts must conform to the principles of public policy; hence, a public official cannot contract with himself,[57] or with a partnership of which he is a member,[58] or a corporation of which he is an officer.[59] The assignment of a contract calling for the payment of money by the United States is void,[60] and like provision is sometimes made

53. Under section 5, article 9, of the act of May 23, 1889 (P. L. 303), providing that "every contract involving an appropriation of money shall designate the item of appropriation on which it is founded and the estimated amount of the expenditure thereunder shall be chafged against such item and so certified by the comptroller on the contract before it shall take effect as a contract," etc., an appropriation made before the contract is a prerequisite to its valid existence. Mandamus denied. Commonwealth v. Foster [Pa.] 64 A. 367. Sections 45 and 45a of the Municipal Code (Rev. St. 1906 [Bate's 5th ed.] §§ 1536-205, 1536-205a), providing that no contract involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into unless the auditor shall first certify to council that the money required is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose, and that a contract entered into contrary to such provision shall be void, and that the money derived from lawfully authorized bonds or notes sold and in process of delivery shall be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund, do not apply to contracts for street improvements, when bonds have been authorized by the municipality to be issued to pay the entire estimated cost and expense of the improvement. Emmert v. Elyria, 74 Ohio St. 185, 78 N. E. 269. See, also, Hinkle v. Philadelphia, 214 Pa. 126, 63 A. 590. See, also, supra, § 3.

54. Murphy v. Plattsmouth [Neb.] 110 N. W. 749. Where bids are asked for on a basis of completing the work in ninety days, a contract awarded to one of the bidders but not setting the ninety-day limit for the completion of the work, is invalid as against the statute requiring advertisement for bids. Turner v. Springfield, 117 Mo. App. 418, 93 S. W. 867.

55. Need not be in writing unless so required by law. City of Decatur v. McKean [Ind.] 78 N. E. 982. A contract for professional services need not be written but may be made by official resolution. Horgan v. New York, 100 N. Y. S. 68. Resolution of school board instructing architect to prepare plans for school building, presentation of plans to board at later date, the record of the adoption of the same, and the approval and allowance of bills therefor, held sufficient compliance with statutes requiring public contracts involving amounts in excess of $200 to be in writing. School Dist. v. Davis [Neb.] 107 N. W. 842. Where a contract is on its face regular, and the requirements of the statutes in connection therewith have been complied with, the comptroller is bound at once to number the contract according to its date, charge it against the proper item of appropriation, and certify it accordingly. Commonwealth v. Larkin [Pa.] 64 A. 908. A reply letter of a quarter master accepting a proposal letter which does not show all the terms thereof is not a contract within Rev. St. 3744, requiring all such contracts to be reduced to writing and signed by the parties thereto. Johnston v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cl. 76. An oral direction by an officer to a contractor to prepare immediately tugs and lighters and to be ready to do the lighterage for vessels expected to arrive soon does not constitute a valid contract under Rev. St. § 3744, requiring all contracts entered through naval officer to be reduced to writing and signed by the parties. Id. A contract entered into through the war department does not become binding upon the government until a formal contract is executed. Act June 2, 1862 (12 Stat. 411, c. 93; Rev. St. §§ 512-515, 3744-3747). Hence where the accepted proposal was for the entire work but the formal contract severed it, the latter controls. Sanger v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 47.

56. A contract made between "W. S. Dehoney, mayor of the city of Frankfort, party of the first part, and W. F. Browner, party of the second part," and signed "City of Frankfort, by W. S. Dehoney, Mayor," is the contract of the city and valid, the mayor being given authority by section 3450, Ky. St. 1903, to enter into such contracts. Lindsey v. Brawner, 29 Ky. L. R. 1236, 97 S. W. 1. Where a city solicitor under Laws 1895, c. 182, p. 264, employs attorneys to collect unpaid taxes, the contract for the services of such attorneys is between them and the city solicitor and not with the city itself. City of Wilmington v. Bryan, 141 N. C. 666, 54 S. E. 543.

57. A person appointed by the board of road commissioners to superintend the construction of a road and see that it was made according to contract acts in a trust capacity on behalf of the tax payers and therefore is precluded from accepting work on the road from the contractor building the same, as this is expressly prohibited by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2136, and therefore any contract entered into by him with such contractor is void and unenforceable, regardless of whether or not there was fraud. Cheney v. Unroe [Ind.] 77 N. E. 1041.

58. Where a contractor enters into a contract with a city, and then a partnership including one of the city's councilmen is formed to take over the contractor's interest and perform the work, such second contract is a nullity by reason of the law prohibiting a public officer from being a party to a public contract, and the original contract is also a nullity in consequence. McManus v. Scheele, 116 La. 72, 40 So. 535.

59. Approval by board of which mayor is chairman of assignment of uncompleted contract to bank of which mayor is president is invalid where such board must inspect and approve work when completed. People's Sav. Bank v. Big Rock Stone & Const. Co. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 836.

as to contracts by municipalities.[61] A provision in the contract against assignment is valid and the assignee cannot recover on the contract.[62]

Bonds[63] with sureties[64] executed before the officer or board having charge of the subject-matter of the contract[65] and in an amount sufficient to secure its faithful execution[66] are usually required. The bond ordinarily required on contracts for public improvements to protect against claims of materialmen and subcontractors is elsewhere treated.[67]

§ 5. Interpretation and effect of public contracts; performance and discharge. A. Construction and interpretation.[68]—The written bid in connection with the advertisement and the acceptance thereof constitute the contract.[69]

A provision in a paving contract that the contractor shall keep up repairs for a specified time is a mere guaranty of good work[70] and does not amount to an abrogation of a governmental function,[71] nor amount to a contract for work to be done in the future.[72] One of several officers, jointly executing a contract cannot bind the municipality by statements as to its construction.[73]

(§ 5) B. Performance and discharge.[74]—A stipulation in a contract making an engineer, inspector, or other person the arbiter of the sufficiency of performance is valid,[75] and his action thereunder is final in the absence of fraud or such gross

61. Charter of the city of St. Paul, § 12, c. 15, does not prohibit the assignment of money due or to become due under a contract with the city. Dickson v. St. Paul [Minn.] 106 N. W. 1053. See Ege v. Phoenix Brick & Const. Co., 118 Mo. App. 630, 94 S. W. 999. A contract to grade a street which provides that it shall not be assigned, but if it is assigned gives the city a right to amend the contract, is not annulled by reason of an assignment acquiesced in by the city. Ege v. Phoenix Brick & Const. Co., 118 Mo. App. 630, 94 S. W. 999. See further Dickson v. St. Paul [Minn.] 106 N. W. 1053, to the effect that money due from the city may be assigned.

63. See 6 C. L. 1117.

64. The legislature may require that persons contracting with cities for the improvement of streets shall give bonds for faithful performance, executed by a surety company authorized to do business in the state. Parker-Washington Co. v. Kansas City [Kan.] 85 P. 781. Action on contractor's bond, see infra, § 6 D.

65. Under a statute requiring a publisher of textbooks adopted by the common schools to "execute before the ex officio members of the state board of education" the bond required, a bond signed by sureties in another county and sent by them to be delivered to the members of the state board is executed "before the ex officio members" within the statute, and is valid. Reid v. Com., 29 Ky. L. R. 672, 94 S. W. 641.

66. By an ordinance requiring a bond "in the amount of the contract price," a contract for five years at an annual payment necessitates a bond each year to the amount of that annual payment, each bond becoming due when the consideration becomes payable. Hallock v. Lebanon [Pa.] 64 A. 362.

69. Especially in determining whether the final contract conforms to the real contract in a proceeding to reform. Milliken Imprinting Co. v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 81. A provision in the preliminary agreement that the government would not increase the number of manufacturing contractors during the life of the manufacturing contract let, is a material part of the contract. Id.

70. A guaranty to keep in repair for ten years contained in a contract to pave with asphaltum a street where there are gas mains includes repairs made necessary by leakage of gas. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Louisville, 29 Ky. L. R. 1255, 97 S. W. 31. A contract to furnish paving bricks of such a kind and quality as to require no repairing for five years contains a guaranty of the quality of the brick rather than an agreement to maintain the pavement and keep it in repair for that period. City of New Haven v. Eastern Pav. Brick Co., 78 Conn. 689, 63 A. 517.

71. A contract to pave city streets whereby the contractor agrees to keep the same in repair is not invalid on the ground that it amounts to an abrogation by the contractor of a governmental function, or of the police power, or that it relieved the city of its duty to protect the lives and property of its citizens. Barber Asphalt Pac. Co. v. Louisville, 29 Ky. L. R. 1255, 97 S. W. 31.

75. A contract for a street improvement which provides that the work shall be done to the satisfaction of the civil engineer and a paving committee does not exhibit such a delegation of authority as to render the contract void. State v. Mt. Vernon, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 317.

mistakes as implies bad faith.[76] A provision for a certificate of completion in a building contract is waived where the owner completes the work under the contract.[77] A contract for the improvement of a street to make it conform to certain specifications made on a basis of a certain amount per foot of material used is performed by altering that part of the street only which did not conform with the specifications.[78] A Pennsylvania statute provides for an acceptance subject to deduction and an appeal by the contractor therefrom.[79]

A contract may be so forfeited by nonperformance [80] as to entitle the municipality to make a new contract for the improvement without a formal declaration of forfeiture.[81] A contract awarded to one of several bidders who have formed an illegal combination to prevent competitive bidding may be rescinded by the municipality.[82] Where work authorized by a single resolution is let in two contracts, one contractor having performed is entitled to recover though the other contract let to another was not performed.[83] There can be no acceptance of work before it can be known whether it meets a prescribed condition,[84] and use by the public does not waive failure to comply with specifications.[85] A variation in respect to materials may usually be authorized by the officers charged with inspection and approval.[86] Where under a government forage contract certain rights are vested in an officer superior to the receiving official, the contractor must on breach by the receiving officer so act as to enable him to protect the interests of the government.[87] There may be recovery for

Guild v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 137 F. 369. Where the secretary of state has authority to determine where certain book binding has been done according to law and properly, his determination in such matters is final in the absence of fraud. State v. Young [Iowa] 110 N. W. 292. Where an engineer is the arbiter under a contract and certifies that a drain and sewer have been put in as called for by the contract or in a satisfactory manner, when an ordinary man experienced in such matters could see that they had not, the engineer's certificate is not final and conclusive. Guild v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 137 F. 369.

79. Where under the act of June 13, 1836 (P. L. 551), inspectors have reported that a bridge was not built according to contract and a certain amount should be deducted from the contract price, and the contractor has elected to show cause against the report, the court of quarter sessions can only approve, modify, or disapprove, and set aside the report, it has no authority to enter judgment against the contractor. Mahoning Creek Bridge, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 576.

80. A contractor who fails to perform under a contract with a county on the theory that his contract is unenforceable cannot after the time for performance has expired obtain equitable relief compelling the county to abide by the contract, nor enjoining it from letting the work to another contractor under later proceedings. Brown & Co. v. Pottawattamie County Sup'rs, 129 Iowa, 553, 105 N. W. 1019.

81. A county may treat a contract for a public improvement on which there has been no performance whatever up to the expiration of the time for the completion of the contract as forfeited without a formal declaration and may institute new proceedings for the construction of the public improvement in an altered way. Brown & Co. v. Pottawattamie County Sup'rs, 129 Iowa, 533, 105 N. W. 1019.

82. Where several banks enter into an illegal combination to suppress bidding for county funds, whereby each bank is to receive a share of the funds received by the bank getting the deposit, such share being held subject only to county demands, the county may rescind the contract for deposit and may demand of each bank as principal the share of the funds deposited in it. Such shares do not become assets of the bank awarded the contract for deposits when that bank becomes bankrupt. In re Salmon, 145 F. 649.

85. Douglas v. Lowell [Mass.] 80 N. E. 510.

86. Under Ky. St. 1903, §§ 3451-3453, 3458, providing for the supervision of work by the mayor and engineer, the acceptance by the council, and that the defense that the work was not done according to contract shall not exempt the property from liability, but that the court trying the case shall render such judgment against the property as will do complete justice to the parties, a contract to pave a street with bricks may be changed so as to substitute macadam for brick between railway tracks, such change being an improvement and decreasing the expense of the work. Lindsey v. Brawner, 29 Ky. L. R. 1236, 97 S. W. 1.

87. Ketcham v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 220. Where the quarter-master at New York alone was authorized to cancel a forage con-extra work ordered by an authorized person [88] but the proof as to the amount thereof must be specific.[89]

Time.[90]—Where the only time limit is specified in the contract, it may be extended for any good cause shown,[91] and further extensions of time assigning no cause are presumed to be for the good cause assigned on the first.[92]

Payment.—A certificate of amount due on work done under contract, when the certificate is duly issued, is not invalid because after its issuance the court decided that the basis on which the amount was computed is incorrect and made the amount greater than what was proper, but said certificate is valid as to the lesser amount which would be due under the computation set down by the court.[93]

§ 6. Remedies and procedure. A. By taxpayer.[94]—A taxpayer may maintain a bill to restrain public officials from paying out public moneys upon a void contract,[95] and may maintain, in his own name,[96] injunction against entering into any illegal contract which may result in the creation of a public burden.[97] But a citizen or taxpayer cannot bring a bill to restrain payment on a legal contract which has not been performed in the manner contracted for until the proper authorities have been called upon and have refused to act.[98] A taxpayer may sue for an injunction only when performance of the contract will result in damage to him.[99] If he seeks enforcement of a legal right to have a contract made, his remedy is mandamus.[1] Certiorari will issue at the instance of a taxpayer to review award to one whose bid fails in material particulars to conform to the specifications.[2] An award of a contract though possibly irregular may be affirmed on certiorari where the quashing of it can result in no benefit to the public.[3] That the contractor was absent from the state and was not served does not impair jurisdiction to issue preliminary injunction against the contract.[4] The making of a contract by county commissioners is an administrative act and no appeal lies by a taxpayer therefrom to the circuit court.[5] A contract will not be restrained at the instance of a taxpayer where it appears that he sues not in the interest of taxpayers but of an unsuccessful bid-tract, it was the duty of the contractor upon the refusal of the receiving officer to accept to make a tender or serve notice on the New York official so as to afford an opportunity to accept or to cancel the order and failure to do so precludes recovery. Ketcham v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 220.

88. City surveyor held to have power to require work beyond what was covered by contract. Mott v. Utica, 100 N. Y. S. 150.

89. Evidence as to quantity of debris not within street cleaning contract which was removed by contractor held not sufficiently clear to entitle him to any compensation for extra work. Mott v. Utica, 100 N. Y. S. 150.

90. See 6 C. L. 1121

91. Failure to complete the contract within the specified time, due to the request of the commission to stop work until other work was completed, such request being made for the benefit of the city and in good faith, does not make the contract void. Hellar v. Tacoma [Wash.] 87 P. 130.

97. An owner of property may, under chapter 334, § 1, p. 550, of the Laws of 1905, maintain an action against the mayor and council to enjoin them from entering into any contract for the paving of a street, or the doing of any illegal act which may result in the creation of a public burden, or in the levy of an illegal tax, charge or assessment, although the amount to be charged against his property has not been ascertained. der desiring the contract at a higher price.[6] A contract on its face grossly unreasonable and oppressive may be set aside by the court.[7]

(§ 6) B. By bidder.[8]—Certiorari will not lie at the instance of a higher bidder.[9] Mandamus lies against a city controller to require him to execute a contract legally made by the common council,[10] and against a mayor to oblige him to sign a contract where the signing is a ministerial act merely.[11] Where specifications contain an illegal clause, a person bidding thereon and giving a bond for performance except as to the illegal clause may enforce his contract, unless such illegal clause is shown to have prevented fair competition or injured the public.[12]

(§ 6) C. On the contract proper[13] or on quantum meruit.—There can be no recovery on an unauthorized contract,[14] nor have materialmen and subcontractors any recourse against the public after a rescission.[15] Failure through inadvertance to file an auditor's certificate does not necessarily render the contract so void as to cut off all rights and liabilities,[16] but may be made to have that effect.[17] A contractor or subcontractor may recover from a city any balance due on the original contract after deducting the cost to the city of completing the work after the original contract was abandoned, there being a provision in the contract for such completion.[18] Where at the time of final settlement the contractor reserved specific claims, all others are waived.[19] In some jurisdictions a municipality having received the benefit of performance of an invalid contract is liable on a quantum meruit[20] but

A motion to strike will not lie as to an averment that the county commissioners combined and confederated with the defendant bridge company in making the contract and stipulating a price to be paid for the bridge which was grossly and unlawfully in excess of the true and reasonable value thereof as the county commissioners and the defendants well knew. 15. Under a contract with the United States containing a provision that the contract should not be assigned and that any assignment would cause the annulment of the contract as far as the United States was concerned, materialmen and subcontractors have no claim against the United States, but must look to the contractor or party to whom the material was supplied. Mosier v. Kurchhoff, 101 N. Y. S. 643.

16. But where the contract has been repudiated, and there is no fraud claimed, and effort is being made to place the parties as nearly as possible in statu quo, the effort should be forwarded by the courts. State v. Fronzier, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 216, afg. Id., 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 303.

17. Under Laws 1902, c. 4, p. 4, the presentation for audit of a claim for an unpaid salary is a prerequisite to maintaining an action to enforce the same. Lyons v. Syracuse, 101 N. Y. S. 247.

18. Under a contract for the erection of a school building, having a provision for completion by the city in case of abandonment by the contractor, after abandonment and completion by the city, the contractor or subcontractor may recover from the city the balance due under the contract after deducting the cost of completing the building. Bader v. New York, 101 N. Y. S. 351.

19. A reservation of claims for extra work and for damages caused by delays waives claims for losses due to a change of plans requiring less material. Sanger v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 47.

20. Where an electric light company furnished street light to a city in consideration of a void contract by the city to exempt the company's property from taxation or to pay any tax assessed thereon, such company is entitled to recover on a quantum meruit. Board of Councilmen of Frankfort v. Capital Gas & Elec. Light Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1114, 96 S. W. 870. A person may recover the value of crushed stone taken with his consent by the street commissioner under instruction of the street committee at a price agreed upon between the owner and the commissioner, without any official act of the council, but used on the city streets for repairs. This liability is imposed by the general law. Central Bitulithic Pav. Co. v. Mt. Clemens, 143 Mich. 259, 12 Det. Leg. N. 996, 106 N. W. 888. Where under a contract to deliver stone "as required," no stone was delivered according to contract, but the instalments, though delivered late, were received, accepted, and used, with knowledge on his part of vendor's breaches, the vendee may be held liable for the value of the benin other states it is otherwise held;[21] but payment having been made it cannot be recovered back,[22] at least without relinquishing the benefits received,[23] although, if a statute limits the amount to be paid for work done under it, any money in excess of that amount which is paid out upon certificate can be recovered.[24] Where a contractor cannot collect on a contract for street paving because the work was not completed within the time specified, he has no recovery on a quantum meruit.[25] Estoppel does not arise to prevent a city from refusing payment on a contract where the work was not completed according to contract, by reason of knowledge of the defect in the abuttors and their failure to complain.[26] An abutting property owner cannot ordinarily enforce the penalty provided for delay in a contract with the city to pave a street,[27] nor can the municipality enforce such a penalty if it has caused the delay.[28] The remedy of a contractor for failure of commissioners to issue bonds as required by a statute to provide a fund for payment is by mandamus and not by action,[29] and where bonds are legally issued by a township and afterward the township is abolished, mandamus lies to compel the county authorities through whom taxes are assessed and levied to levy a tax to pay a judgment on the township bonds.[30]

(§ 6) D. On the contractor's bond.[31]—Liability to materialmen and subcontractors on bonds given for their benefit is elsewhere treated.[32] Where, on failure of a contractor to perform, a county relets the contract at an increased cost necessitating an increased assessment on the abutting land, an action on the bond must be in the name of the state on relation of taxpayers assessed for the additional cost.[33]

(§ 6) E. Under lien laws.[34]

Where a contractor bids to build new bridges knowing that the officials with whom he acted had no authority to bind the town, and his bid is accepted, and before he has built any bridges the town board challenged the legality of the contract under section 10 of the Highway Law, such contractor has no right to recover damages from the town. People v. Voorhies, 99 N. Y. S. 918.

22. Where a village having power to contract for the building of a bridge, being justified by necessity in contracting for one, and contracting for one, but omitting to enter into the same according to the manner and form required by law, although such contract is void, the village, after the bridge was built according to specifications, accepted by it, and $500 and bonds for the balance given in payment therefor, cannot maintain an action to recover the money and bonds paid therefor. § 7. Regulations and Policing, and Offenses Pertaining to Public Lands (1504). Cutting Timber on Public Lands (1504). Crimes and Offenses Against Public Lands (1505). Fencing (1505).

This topic includes both state and Federal lands. The treatment of each is separate from the other within each section, but many principles common to both may be found.

§ 1. The public domain and property therein.[35]—Tide lands belong to the state within which they are situated.[36] Where land within the boundaries of a state had been patented by the United States prior to the admission of such state into the union, no title thereto passed to the state.[37] State lands are not subject to taxation.[38] During the time which elapses between the filing of an application for the location of scrip upon certain lands belonging to the United States and the approval of the application by the commissioner of the general land office, the land is not subject to taxation by the state.[39] A grant to a state of the 16th section in each township of the public lands gives the state no rights in Indian lands ceded to the United States but still occupied by the Indians under treaty pending assignment of a permanent reservation.[40] Where the legal title remains in the United States, the land is subject to taxation by the state only after full consideration has been paid and perfect equitable title vested in the purchaser.[41]

§ 2. Lands open for settlement and lands granted or reserved.[42]—The area of land opened for entry by a particular proclamation depends on the construction to be given such proclamation.[43] A public levee is not public land open to entry though the bed of the body of water on which it is constructed belongs to the estate.[44] In Michigan lands sold to the state for taxes which are "actually occupied" are not subject to disposition as homestead lands.[45] A plat of tide lands made by the local

37. Where an island in the Missouri River was patented by the United States before Missouri was admitted, no title thereto passed to the state of Missouri. Stoner v. Royar [Mo.] 98 S. W. 601. An island in the Missouri River surveyed by the United States prior to the admission of Missouri into the Union belonged to the United States and passed under a Federal patent. Bradshaw v. Edelen, 194 Mo. 640, 92 S. W. 691.

38. Lands granted to the state by Act Cong. July 4, 1836, and Act June 13, 1842, in lieu of sixteen sections, known as "Chickasaw School Lands," have never been subject to taxation. Edwards v. Butler [Miss.] 42 So. 381. Laws 1888, p. 40, c. 23, quieting title to certain lands in the Yayoo Delta, embraces no other lands and has no relation to Chickasaw school lands which had been illegally sold for taxes. Id.

41. State v. Itasca Lumber Co. [Minn.] 111 N. W. 276. The doctrine of estoppel applies only when necessary to protect the rights of parties who have acquired a right or claim to the title. Id. Where the holder of a patent issued by the state to land entered with internal improvement warrants consents to the cancellation of his entries and authorizes the delivery of the warrant to a third person by whose transferee they are used for the entry of other lands, the title to the lands first entered becomes vested again in the state and cannot thereafter be divested by sale of taxes. Slattery v. Glassell, 117 La. 550, 42 So. 135.

42. See 6 C. L. 1127.

43. The strip of land, referred to in the president's proclamation of August 19, 1893, "100 feet in width around and immediately within the outer boundaries of the entire tract of country to be opened for settlement," ran around and immediately within the outer boundaries of the tract opened and not around the outer boundaries of the entire tract specified in the cession and relinquishment of the Cherokee Indians. Saylor v. Frantz [Okl.] 86 P. 432.

44. An embankment built out in a lake, with earth from the bottom of the lake, to serve as a public levee, and still serving as such, is not subject to entry and sale as public land, though the bed of the lake belongs to the state. State v. Blanchard, 117 La. 91, 41 So. 363.

45. Under the statutes of Michigan where lands sold to the state for taxes were shown board of tide land appraisers and ratified by the legislature vacates a former plat made by the owners of adjoining upland.[46] Land which at the date of a grant has been withdrawn in view of a prior grant is not public land, and if not located under the first grant does not revert to the second but to the public domain.[47] Withdrawal of a body of land "about" twenty miles in width, as shown by a map attached, is sufficiently definite.[48]

§ 3. Mode of locating and acquiring title. A. Federal lands.[49]—An entry must be made by one qualified to enter,[50] with intent to make his home there and cultivate the land.[51] Where one is in actual possession of Federal lands, enclosed by a substantial fence, using it for agricultural purposes and claiming title, it is not subject to homestead entry and another can acquire no rights by filing on it, paying fees, obtaining a certificate, and taking peaceable possession.[52] An entry may be made on land selected by an agent,[53] and fraud may not be inferred from the fact that a large number of entries have been solicited and located by one person, if the entries are legal.[54] The proceeding by which title is sought to be acquired must be free from fraud,[55] and it must appear that the land is not sought for speculative purposes.[56] Title passes when the patent is issued and recorded[57] and not before,[58] though a title in fee may pass by a treaty without act of congress or patent,[59] and to be "actually occupied," they are not subject to disposition as homestead lands. Meagher v. Dumas, 143 Mich. 639, 13 Det. Leg. N. 108, 107 N. W. 701.

46. Henry v. Seattle, 42 Wash. 420, 85 P. 24. Laws 1897, p. 30, c. 27, directing the board of state land commissioners to cancel deeds covering tide land lots which were street projections, where such streets had been vacated, does not apply to street shown by a former plat which had been vacated prior to the sale of lots affected thereby. 50. One who was within the Ponca Indian reservation before the hour of 12 o'clock noon, September 16, 1893, and made the race from there to that part of the Cherokee outlet opened for settlement on that date, is not disqualified from making a homestead entry. Saylor v. Frantz [Okl.] 86 P. 432. Under Rev. St. U. S. § 452, providing that officers and employes of the general land office are prohibited from purchasing or becoming interested in any public land, a special timber agent appointed by the commissioner of the general land office is disqualified to make a timber culture entry. Prosser v. Finn, 41 Wash. 604, 84 P. 404. Act March 3, 1885, c. 319 (23 Stat. 340), relative to the sale of the Umatilla Indian reservation in Oregon, providing that each purchaser might purchase 160 acres, and Act July 1, 1902, c. 1380 (32 Stat. 730), authorizing a private sale of such of those lands as were not sold at the public sale, are to be construed together, and a purchaser of 160 acres under the first act was not entitled to purchase another 160 acres under the second act, though he was a settler on the tract he sought to purchase. Jones v. Hoover, 144 F. 217.

51. It is not a compliance with the homestead law for a man to file on a tract of land with no intention of making it his home, with no purpose to live there, with no intention of cultivating any part of it, and acquiring it for a place to reside in. United States v. Richards, 149 F. 443.

52. Gragg v. Cooper [Cal.] 89 P. 346.

53. A soldier of the United States may enter a homestead selected by an agent without ever viewing it. United States v. Richards, 149 F. 443.

54. United States v. Richards, 149 F. 443.

55. Allegations that pursuant to state law one applied for and obtained a quitclaim deed for land which the state claimed under the swamp land grant, and later used such deed as evidence to obtain a patent from the United States under a prior homestead entry, is insufficient to show fraud, though it is also alleged that the state had previously conveyed to another of which fact he knew and concealed it. Kerns v. Lee, 142 F. 985. Where title is acquired under the homestead laws after a contest before the land department, the adverse claimant cannot have the title adjudged a trust for his benefit on the ground of fraud, where the only fraud alleged is that the successful party procured a judgment on testimony which he avers is false, when a full hearing is shown to have been given. Greenameyer v. Coate [Okl.] 88 P. 1054.

56. Under Act Cong. June 3, 1878, c. 151 (20 Stat. 89), providing for the sale of timber lands, that the application must be for the sole benefit of the applicant and not for the purpose of speculation, held that the facts stated in the application that it is not made for the purpose of speculation must be true when made and also when the land is paid for and certificate of purchase issued. United States v. Brace, 149 F. 869.

such fee having passed, restraints on alienation in the patent subsequently issued are nugatory.[60] Delivery of a patent is not essential to pass title.[61] A patent by the Federal government is prima facie evidence that all prerequisites of the law have been complied with,[62] but a patent to lands previously reserved or otherwise appropriated is void.[63]

A conveyance of a townsite lot to one not entitled to it is void.[64] The procedure by which title to town site lots in Alaska may be acquired is regulated by statute,[65] and the action of land department officials is final in the absence of fraud.[66]

It is perjury for an applicant to swear falsely as to the good faith of his application.[67]

Fees taken by a county official in taking homestead proofs are received in his official capacity.[68]

60. Francis v. Francis, 27 S. Ct. 129.

61. A title from the United States to a state of swamp lands is competent evidence though the patent is not shown to have ever been received by the state. Warner Valley Stock Co. v. Morrow [Or.] 86 P. 369; United States v. Laam, 149 F. 581.

62. Bradshaw v. Edelen, 194 Mo. 640, 92 S. W. 691. The action of the Federal land department in accepting final proofs of a homestead entryman and issuing patent to him is conclusive that the land was not swamp land at the time of the swamp land grant, and one who claimed through such grant under the state is bound whether or not he contested such fact. Kerns v. Lee, 142 F. 985. A patent is prima facie valid and a purchaser from the patentee is not required to ascertain whether conditions precedent to its issue have been complied with. United States v. Laam, 149 F. 581.

63. The true owner may recover the land in an action at law if he has such title as will support ejectment. Eastern Oregon Land Co. v. Brosnan, 147 F. 807.

64. Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2387, providing for granting of public lands settled as a townsite to a probate judge in trust for occupants, a conveyance by such judge to one who never occupied the land is void. Roberts v. Ward [Cal. App.] 84 P. 430.

65. Under Act Cong. March 3, 1891, c. 561 (26 Stat. 1899), providing for the disposition of townsite lots in Alaska and authorizing the trial of conflicting claims before a trustee with an appeal to the general land office, the decision of the trustee is final in the absence of fraud or mistake with reference to questions of fact except on review before the general land office. Miller v. Margerie [C. C. A.] 149 F. 694.

66. The fact that the proceeding in which title was obtained was ex parte does not show fraud warranting a court of equity in inquiring into the truth or falsity of the evidence on which the trustee acted. It must appear that a complainant was prevented by fraud or accident from appearing before the trustee. Miller v. Margerie [C. C. A.] 149 F. 694. The bill must allege such facts. Id.

67. The register of a land office has power to administer an oath in examining an applicant for the purchase of public lands on his examination with reference to the good faith of the application, and an applicant who swears falsely in such examination is guilty of perjury. United States v. Brace, 149 F. 869. One who induces him to make the application and in furtherance thereof swears falsely is guilty of subornation of perjury. Id.

68. Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2294, amended by Act March 11, 1902, c. 182, the clerk of a district court who takes homestead proofs does so in his official capacity and all fees received by him must be accounted for to the county. Rhea v. Washington County Com'rs [Idaho] 88 P. 89.

69. See 6 C. L. 1128.

70. The Act of Congress July 26, 1886, granting to the Union Pacific a right of way 200 feet wide through the "Osage Ceded Lands," was an absolute grant in praesenti vesting title from the passage of the act. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Watson [Kan.] 87 P. 687. It is presumed that the president approved the definite location of the road. Id. The title of the United States is fully divested by a grant in praesenti of all lands within the place limits of the grant and not within exceptions thereto, and subsequent proceedings affecting the patent to such lands in the interior department do not suspend limitations in favor of one claiming under the grant. Wiese v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 108 N. W. 175.

71. The grant to the Union Pacific Railway Company of the odd numbered sections within a certain distance on either side of the tract became effective upon filing the map of definite location, and related back and vested an interest in the railway company as of the date of the grant of 1862. Walbridge v. Russell County Com'rs [Kan.] 86 P. 473. Acts Cong. July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 489), and of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 356), granting lands to the Union Pacific and Souix City & Pacific Railroads, transfer a present legal title when the terms of the grant are complied with and the lands are identified by the map of definite location. A patent when issued relates back to date of the grant. Wiese v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 108 N. W. 175.

72. Rev. St. U. S. § 2477, granting a right of way for public roads along the section lines of public lands, became effective in Kansas when the grant was accepted by Laws 1873, p. 55, c. 22. Walbridge v. Russell County Com'rs [Kan.] 86 P. 473. This grant never applied to the odd numbered ance of other conditions,[73] and cannot thereafter be divested.[74] Lands actually occupied are generally excepted,[75] or are construed as not within the terms of the grant.[76] Under such exception, no lands may be withdrawn from entry prior to definite location of the line.[77]

Swamp land grants.—The swamp land grant of September 28, 1850 (9 Stat. 519), did not attach to any particular land until it had been identified as swamp land by the secretary of the interior.[78] The mere selection and filing of lists by state agents did not operate to segregate such lands from the public domain nor prevent their passing under a subsequent railroad grant excepting "lands reserved for any purpose whatever."[79] A grant by the Federal government of land that had passed to the state under the swamp land grants may be ratified and confirmed by the state.[80] sections in Russell county which had previously been granted to the railroad company, but did apply to even numbered sections within the railroad limits provided they were public lands and no right of preemption or homestead had attached prior to the granting of Act of July 26, 1866. Id.

73. Legal title to a right of way sought by a railroad company under Act Cong. March 3, 1875, c. 152 (18 Stat. 482), vests upon approval of the secretary of the interior of the profile of the road and not before. Phoenix & E. R. Co. v. Arizona Eastern R. Co. [Ariz.] 84 P. 1097. The determination by the Federal supreme court that the grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company by Act of Cong. March 3, 1871, did not include lands within the limits of the grant to the Atlantic & Pacific Company by the act of 1866 refers only to lands within the 20 mile limit of the former falling within like limits of the latter, and not to indemnity lands to which title accrues only upon selection and which may be selected from any public lands within the indemnity limits. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Bovard [Cal. App.] 87 P. 203.

74. In the absence of forfeiture of its rights by any act of its own congress could not derogate therefrom after the filing of the map of definite location. Walbridge v. Russell County Com'rs [Kan.] 86 P. 473.

75. Under the proviso of Act Cong. February 8, 1887, all lands occupied by actual settlers, at the time of definite location of the road, etc., were excepted from the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, which was not concerned with the rights of settlers, quoad the government. Lisso v. Devillier [La.] 43 So. 163. A grant to the state for railroad purposes, excepting lands theretofore reserved or otherwise appropriated, excepts land occupied by a settler under a pre-emption or homestead claim duly filed, though the entry was subsequently canceled, but does not except land merely occupied by a settler who had made no filing thereon under the general land laws. Eastern Oregon Land Co. v. Brosnan, 147 F. 807. A railroad grant excepting lands "granted, sold, reserved, or occupied, by homestead settlers, pre-empted or otherwise disposed of," did not attach to lands homesteaded or pre-empted at the time the map of definite location became effective. Oregon & C. R. Co. v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 603. Act Cong. March 3, 1877, granting a railroad right of way through Hot Springs reservation conferred only a pre-emption right "to the land occupied," and did not pass the fee to streets on which the railroad tracks were laid which was reserved by the government. Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Greer, 77 Ark. 387, 96 S. W. 129.

76. The grant by Act Congress, July 25, 1866 (14 Stat. 239), to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad, was a grant in praesenti and did not pass land subject to a live homestead entry, though such entry was relinquished prior to filing the map of definite location. Such land was not "public land" within the meaning of the grant. United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 765.

77. Where in a grant to a railroad company there is expressly reserved all lands to which the right of homestead or pre-emption has attached when the line is definitely fixed, the land commissioner in the absence of direction by congress and prior to the definite location of the line may not withdraw from pre-emption or homestead settlement any of such lands. Brandon v. Ard [Kan.] 87 P. 366.

78. United States v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 148 F. 884. Under the Swamp Land Act Sept. 28, 1850 (9 Stat. 519), by which the secretary of the interior was required to make out a list of swamp lands within a state and transmit it to the governor and on his request cause patent to issue, the state had no duty to perform in selecting swamp lands, and a selection by its officers was not binding on the United States and gave the state no equitable title or vested right which it could convey, where the selection had not been ratified or confirmed by the secretary of the interior. Kerns v. Lee, 142 F. 985. While Swamp Land Act, Sept. 28, 1850 (9 Stat. 519), operated as a grant in praesenti, a state did not take equitable title or vested interest in any particular tract until it had been identified by a list made or approved by the secretary of the interior, and could not convey it as against the United States. Id. A state patent to land as swamp land does not prove per se that title passed to the state under Acts Cong. 1849, 1850, commonly known as the "swamp land grants." Moulierre v. Coco, 116 La. 845, 41 So. 113. Under Acts 1861, p. 12, providing for the sale of state swamp lands, the state had no authority to issue a patent until the land had been patented by the United States or certified by the state as belonging to it. Henry v. Brannan [Ala.] 42 So. 995.

79. United States v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 148 F. 884.

80. Under Swamp Land Grants of 1849

Cancellations and forfeitures.[81]—The United States may maintain a bill in equity to cancel a patent issued through inadvertence or mistake to land previously selected by the state as indemnity school land,[82] and need not tender purchase money received as a condition precedent.[83] One equitably entitled to land may maintain suit against a subsequent patentee regardless of fraud or mistake.[84] A judgment in an action to cancel a patent is not binding on one not made a party.[85] The United States may maintain suit on a money demand against a railroad company to which land was erroneously patented, where the company has disposed of the land.[86] A private citizen who asserts no interest may not assail a title on the ground of noncompliance with statutory conditions.[87] An entryman who did not himself pay for land cannot recover the payment on cancellation of the entry.[88]

Jurisdiction of land officers and courts.[89]—The Federal land department is the tribunal specially designated by law to determine rights growing out of settlements on public lands, and its judgment upon the weight of evidence produced is conclusive,[90] and its discretion cannot in the absence of fraud [91] be controlled by injuncand 1850. Railroad Lands Co. v. Shreveport, 117 La. 140, 41 So. 443. Where such subsequent grant is made to the state itself in aid of a railroad and the state accepts the grant and in turn grants to the railroad company, such action operates as a consent to the subsequent grant, a ratification of it. Id. Where owing to such subsequent grant the general land department has refused to confirm the land to the state under the swamp land grant, but the state has issued a patent therefor, as land belonging to it under the "swamp land grant" and such title came in opposition to the title under the subsequent grant, the latter will prevail. Id.

81. See 6 C. L. 1129.

82. The state is not in a position to maintain suit to protect its equitable title while the United States is under obligation to do so. United States v. Laam, 149 F. 581.

83. In a suit by the United States to cancel a patent so that it may convey the land to one equitably entitled to it, it need not tender the purchase money paid by the patentee. United States v. Laam, 149 F. 581.

84. One who acquired an equitable title or vested interest in land while title remained in the United States may maintain suit to determine his right to the legal title as against one to whom the land was subsequently patented through error of law on the part of the land department, regardless of the question of fraud or mistake in the transaction. Kerns v. Lee, 142 F. 985.

85. A judgment against the United States in an action to cancel a patent to a railroad company will not bar a homestead entryman from pleading his homestead settlement as a defense in ejectment against him by a grantee of the railroad company. Brandon v. Ard [Kan.] 87 P. 366. A decision by the commissioner of the general land office, in a former contest between an occupying claimant and a contestant, canceling the claimant's entry for alleged abandonment, which decision became final because not appealed from, is not conclusive that the defeated occupying claimant had no right to the land as against a subsequent homestead applicant, who was not a party to the first contest or in privity with the successful contestant. Martinson v. Marzolf [N. D.] 108 N. W. 801. It appearing that the decision canceling the claimant's entry for abandonment was erroneous, and that he had complied with the law and had not abandoned, and the successful contestant not having exercised his preference right, a stranger to that proceeding whose application to enter the land as a homestead had been accepted while the occupying claimant's entry appeared canceled of record, acquired no equitable right to the land. Id.

86. Acts March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 556), and Act March 2, 1896 (29 Stat. 42), authorizing the United States to sue a railroad on a money demand when land was erroneously patented to it and it has sold to a bona fide purchaser only after a determination by the land department that it has been so sold, authorizes a suit in equity though no claim has been made by a purchaser, but there is a basis for one. Oregon & C. R. Co. v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 832. The objection that such statutes are retroactive and void cannot be made where it appears that the sum sought to be recovered is less than was received by the company for the land. Id.

87. If the Federal government is willing that a claimant's heir retains title to land acquired without strict compliance with the law, a private citizen has no right to complain. Kennedy v. Dickie [Mont.] 85 P. 982.

88. Act June 16, 1880, providing for payment "to the person who made such entry" on cancellation, contemplates payment by the entryman. Stoiber v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cl. 269.

89. See 6 C. L. 1130.

90. Kennedy v. Dickie [Mont.] 85 P. 982. A court of equity will not interpose to determine as to the ultimate legal title to public lands while the same remains in the United States but will interpose to give or maintain possession where it is essential for completing purchase under the acts of congress, and to that end will review acts of the land department in its construction of the law applicable to prevailing conditions. Jones v. Hoover, 144 F. 217. A finding by the secretary of the interior that a subsequent contest is not a separate action, but merely a proceeding supplemental to the original case, will be adopted as true in a collateral action. Best v. Frazier, 16 Okl. 523, 85 P. 1119. Where it appears the order of the secretary of the interior finally disposing of a contest between the parties is dated prior to the service of notice, in an

tion,[92] or mandamus.[93] But after title passes from the government, state courts have jurisdiction to determine controversies between adverse claimants.[94] Fraud which will justify a court of equity in interfering with a finding of the land department in a contest must have been extrinsic to the matter tried.[95] The commissioner of the land department may review decisions of his predecessor if the proceeding in which they were rendered was irregular,[96] and decision on a contest does not prevent the land department from making further investigation at any time before patent is issued.[97] The land decisions of the department of the interior are not binding on the Federal courts, but where the construction of an obscure statute by the department has been uniform, the court will accept such interpretation.[98]

(§ 3) B. State lands.[99]—That lands were granted to a state to be disposed of as the legislature should direct does not relieve the legislature from the restraints of the state constitution in making such disposition.[1] The manner in which state lands may be disposed of is regulated by statute,[2] and statutory requirements must be conformed to.[3] The law in force at the date of the entry controls.[4] The grant action of forcible entry such notice is not premature although the fact of such decision is not known to the parties at the time of service thereof. Id.

91. If the officers of the land department err in the interpretation of law, or fraud is practiced by one rival claimant upon another or if the officers themselves are chargeable with fraud, their action may be reviewed and annulled by a court of equity. Kennedy v. Dickie [Mont.] 85 P. 982. The application by the secretary of the interior, of the law to a certain state of facts in a contest, will not be disturbed by the courts unless it already appears that there was a misapplication. Greenameyer v. Coate [Okl.] 88 P. 1054.

92. Courts have no jurisdiction to interfere with allotment and patenting while title is still in government. Suit by state to restrain patenting of alleged swamp lands. State of Oregon v. Hitchcock, 202 U. S. 60, 50 Law. Ed. 935. Suit against secretary of interior or commissioner of general land office to restrain allotment infringes immunity of United States from suit. Id.

93. The decision of the secretary of the interior in construing statutes as to the rights of a claimant of a certificate of entry cannot be controlled by mandamus. United States v. Hitchcock, 28 App. D. C. 338.

94. Wilcox v. Phillips [Mo.] 97 S. W. 886.

95. The fact that false testimony was given at a hearing of the contest will not justify interference by a court. Kennedy v. Dickie [Mont.] 85 P. 982. The validity of a finding of the land office in a contest for priority of claims cannot in a collateral proceeding be based on the fact that a contestant brought a distant witness and on inquiry as to how he would testify sent him away so the other party could not get him. Id. The fact that a party to a contest and his witnesses were intimate and testified at the criminal trial of certain persons, does not show that they conspired to convict the person charged and thus prevent him from testifying at the contest. Id. If a judgment of the land department might be overturned by a court of equity on the ground of false swearing at the hearing of a contest, the allegations and proof must be more than a rehearing on substantially the same case submitted at the hearing which resulted in the judgment. Id.

2. Laws 1901, p. 295, c. 125, § 5, providing that tracts lying partly within and partly without the absolute lease district shall be considered as wholly without, does not apply to a tract sixty miles long and of varying width embracing 150,000 acres, but to sections within such body. Raper v. Terrell [Tex.] 99 S. W. 93. Laws 1905, p. 161, c. 103, § 3, providing that the envelope in which a purchaser makes his bid shall be preserved by the commissioner and opened the day after the land comes on the market, held where such day was a legal holiday it could be opened the day following. Fessenden v. Terrell [Tex.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 326, 98 S. W. 640. Act No. 239, p. 239, of 1857, fixing at $1.25 per acre the minimum price at which school lands may be sold, is superseded by Rev. St. 1870, § 2960, prescribing the manner, terms and conditions of the sale of such lands, and says nothing of the minimum price, and the repealing clause of which repeals all laws on the same subject-matter. Board of Directors v. Lanier, 117 La. 307, 41 So. 583. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4218c, providing that on death of a purchaser of free school or asylum land his heirs may make payment, was not repealed by Acts 1905, p. 159, c. 103. Clark v. Terrell [Tex.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 325, 98 S. W. 642. Acts 1900, p. 34, § 9, requiring proof of occupancy with intention of acquiring the land as a homestead to be filed in the land office before January 1, 1902, as a prerequisite to issuance of patent, is not in excess of the powers of the legislature. Haney v. Atwood [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 597, 93 S. W. 1093.

3. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4218f, 4218g, and Laws 1905, p. 159, c. 103, after the land commissioner notifies the county clerk of the appraisement of school lands, which have never been leased, he is without power to fix a date for the receiving of bids on such land different from the date when the clerk was notified. Estes v. Terrell [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 443, 92 S. W. 407.

4. A grant by the state based upon prior entry and issued in accordance with such entry on payment of the purchase price is not affected by a law enacted between date must be made by the officers of the political subdivision authorized to dispose of the land.[5] In Kansas proceedings to sell leased lands may be instituted on the expiration of the lease [6] and not before.[7] A valid entry is not indispensable to the validity of a grant.[8] An application to purchase must conform to statutory requirements [9] and be made by one entitled to purchase [10] prior to the attaching of superior rights.[11] The affidavit of an applicant must set forth all the requirements of the statute and the facts stated must be true.[12] The application to purchase must be free from fraud,[13] and if tainted with fraud an assignee acquires no greater rights than his assignor.[14] In Texas an application made before school lands are placed on the market is not void.[15] An applicant must settle on the land within the period of entry and issuance of grant. Bealmear v. Hutchins [C. C. A.] 148 F. 545. Where an application to lease certain land under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4218t, requiring the applicant to try to procure water, was made prior to Laws 1905, p. 163, c. 103, giving a lessor or his assignee the right to purchase under leases made prior to the enactment of the law, but the lease was taken out after the law went into effect, it did not apply. Trezevant v. Terrell [Tex.] 99 S. W. 94.

5. Under Pub. Laws 1850-51, p. 97, cc. 38, and 39, creating Jackson county from a part of Macon and Haywood counties but providing that officers of the old counties should exercise jurisdiction over the territory cut off as before, Jackson county had no legal existence until Laws 1852, c. 44, p. 97, was enacted, and an entry on public lands until that date was properly made before the officers of the other counties. Bealmear v. Hutchins, 148 F. 603. It was competent for officers of Trego County on February 4, 1886, to sell school lands situated in the unorganized County of Gove which was then attached to Trego County for judicial purposes. Spencer v. Smith [Kan.] 85 P. 573.

6. Whenever a lease of school lands has expired, proceedings to sell such land to actual settlers is proper. Bushey v. Hardin [Kan.] 86 P. 146.

7. It is irregular and improper to inaugurate proceedings to sell school lands subject to an existing lease when the sale must occur after the lease has expired. Bushey v. Hardin [Kan.] 86 P. 146.

8. Under the statutes of Tennessee a valid entry is not essential to a valid grant. The older of two conflicting grants, each based on a void entry, passes the state's title. Reeve v. North Carolina Land & Timber Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 821.

9. Laws 1905, p. 159, § 3, providing for the indorsement on the envelope containing an application to purchase state lands, when such land is to come onto the market at a future date, of the description, name of the grantee, etc., applies only where land is to come onto the market at a future date and not where the land is on the market at the date the application is filed. Flores v. Terrell [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 123, 92 S. W. 32. A copy of an application for the purchase of state lands, certified by the surveyor general, purporting to be sworn to before a notary, with his seal attached, and indorsed showing the action taken in the office of the surveyor general, prima facie establishes execution of the instrument. Pardee v. Schanzlin [Cal. App.] 86 P. 812.

10. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4218f, 4218y, and Laws 1901, p. 296, c. 125, §§ 7, 8, a foreign corporation authorized to do business in the state may not purchase timber on school lands. Lufkin Land & Lumber Co. v. Terrell [Tex.] 100 S. W. 134.

11. Evidence sufficient to show that at the time an application to purchase was made another had acquired a superior right to the land. Winans v. McCabe [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 817. Where such superior right was shown, it was harmless error to exclude evidence of the other application. Id.

12. Miller v. Donovan [Cal. App.] 85 P. 159. One who seeks to purchase swamp lands must aver in his affidavit that he does not know of any claim to the lands other than his own as required by Acts March 28, 1868. Waters v. Pool [Cal.] 87 P. 617. Known claim to island held not to falsify affidavit for purchase of lands on "left bank of" river, though subsidary description by section might be construed as extending to such island, but if the certificate be issued on a second application and the affidavit be true at that time the certificate is valid. Id. Holder of occupant's right of prior claim had lost it by laches in meantime (Id.), though the original affidavit, false when made, is attached to the second application (Id.). Where after one affidavit to purchase is made it is found that the survey conflicted with another prior survey and a new survey was made to which the original affidavit was attached, held that the affidavit must be treated as a new application. Id.

13. Under the statutes of Oregon relative to the sale of school lands when prior to patent issued it is ascertained that the application to purchase was fraudulent, the board of land commissioners has power to institute a hearing on notice and on proof of fraud decline to issue a deed. De Laittre v. Board of Com'rs, 149 F. 800. Under Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 2198, providing that state land official may review its official acts relating to the sale of state lands until execution of the contract, and Laws 1903, p. 113, c. 79, declaring that a lease or sale may be declared void for fraud or mistake where affidavits alleging fraud are presented after execution of a deed but before delivery, the board of public land commissioners may suspend delivery thereof until it investigates the charges. State v. Ross [Wash.] 87 P. 262.

14. Where a certificate for the purchase of state school lands was obtained by fraud, an assignment of it to one ignorant of the fraud did not entitle him to a patent. He acquired only the rights of his assignor. De Laittre v. Board of Com'rs, 149 F. 800.

15. It may be made the basis of an award where no superior rights have been ac-prescribed after his application is accepted.[16] After a contest for the purchase of school lands has been referred to the court, the surveyor general has no power to receive an application from a third person for the purchase of the land involved.[17]

It is generally required that an applicant to purchase be a citizen of the United States [18] or shall have declared his intention to become such.[19] If land is suitable for cultivation it is generally provided that actual settlers only are entitled to purchase.[20] In Texas only an actual settler on a home section may purchase additional land.[21] In determining whether one is an actual settler on his home section, all facts and circumstances for a reasonable period before and after the date of his application may be considered.[22] An award of an additional section to one who was not an actual settler on his home section at the time of his application to purchase is ineffective.[23]

A preference right to purchase must be exercised within the period [24] and in the manner prescribed by law [25] by one entitled by law to exercise it.[26]

quired. Williams v. Barnes [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 127.

16. Under Laws 1905, p. 162, c. 103, § 4, providing that an applicant to purchase land must settle thereon within ninety days from the date his application is accepted and within thirty days thereafter file affidavit that he has settled, held that a settlement within one hundred and twenty days is insufficient. Suares v. Terrell [Tex.] 99 S. W. 541.

17. Darlington v. Butler [Cal. App.] 86 P. 194.

18. Under Pol. Code, § 3495, requiring an applicant for the purchase of school lands to make affidavit that he is a citizen of the United States or has declared his intention to become one, and section 3500, providing that a false statement in the affidavit defeats the right of the applicant, the fact that one averred that he was a citizen when he had only filed his application to become such is not such a defect as will defeat his rights. Pardee v. Schanzlin [Cal. App.] 86 P. 812.

19. Where an applicant to purchase state lands filed her intention to become a citizen on the same day she made her affidavit attached to her application to purchase land but the application was not filed for five days, the facts were sufficient to show that she had filed her intention to become a citizen. Pardee v. Schanzlin [Cal. App.] 86 P. 812.

20. Under Const. art. 17, § 3, providing that school land suitable for cultivation shall be granted only to actual settlers, it cannot be granted to others if any part of the subdivision in question is suitable for cultivation. Sanford v. Maxwell [Cal. App.] 84 P. 1000. Where in a contest the court found that plaintiff was an actual bona fide settler and also that he had never been in actual possession, such findings will be construed to mean that he had made an actual settlement without actual possession of more than his house and its environs. Id. Const. art. 17, § 3, provides that state lands suitable for cultivation shall be granted to actual settlers only, not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres to each, Pol. Code, § 3495, provides that the smallest legal subdivision shall be deemed suitable for cultivation if one-half its area will produce crops, held that such provision did not construe the constitutional provision further than to provide that every legal subdivision coming within the description should be deemed suitable for cultivation, nor provide that land not coming within the description should be suitable for cultivation. Id. "Suitable for cultivation" means a tract one-third of which is susceptible of ordinary cultivation the remainder to be used for pasture. Id. The question whether it was suitable for cultivation at the time application was made, and not purchasable by one not an actual settler, may be raised after the applicant has paid the purchase price and received a certificate of purchase. Boggs v. Ganeard, 148 Cal. 711, 84 P. 195. Const. art. 17, § 13, providing that lands "suitable for cultivation" shall be granted only to actual settlers, applies to land originally unfit for cultivation but which at the time of application had been made fit, without regard to how it had been reclaimed. Id. St. 1903, p. 67, c. 61, amending Pol. Code, § 3443, so as to provide an additional method for contesting the right to purchase state land on the ground that at the time of application it had been made fit for cultivation, is remedial, and, though retroactive, impairs no contract obligation. Id. Such statute is not special legislation. Id. Evidence sufficient to show actual settlement where an unmarried man went on the land with wagon and provisions and set up a tent with the intention of making the place his home. Smith v. Florence [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 846, 96 S. W. 1096.

21. Where it is asserted that one to whom additional land was awarded was not an actual settler, it is admissible to show the inhabitability of the only house on the premises and that the awardee lived at another place. Jones v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 971, 92 S. W. 1010.

22. Jones v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 971, 92 S. W. 1010.

23. Jones v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 971, 92 S. W. 1010. Where in trespass to try title it is asserted that one to whom an additional section was awarded was not an actual settler, the court may refuse to charge that the act of the land commissioner in awarding the land was prima facia evidence that all requisites of the law were complied with. Id.

24. Where lands were segregated in 1870 and it appeared that one had been in possession since 1863 and in 1871 it appeared that a survey had been made at the instance

Where an application for the purchase has been accepted by the commissioner and the land awarded, it is presumed that it has been properly classified and appraised.[27] The appointment of appraisers must be made as required by law,[28] but their appraisement may be disregarded if grossly inadequate.[29] On an issue as to the validity of a sale of school land where an award has been shown, a purchaser may show that he continued to pay interest and reside on the land as required by law.[30]

The land commissioner has no power to require a subsequent patentee to make affidavit that the land had not been occupied from the date of another application, as a condition to selling the land,[31] but record notice[32] or actual knowledge by a of another, held that the settler had lost his preference right to purchase by failing to make application within ninety days after filing his affidavits. Express provisions of St. 1869-70, p. 878, c. 575. Waters v. Pool [Cal.] 87 P. 617. A lessee of state land has a preference right to purchase provided his right is exercised prior to the expiration of the lease. Welhausen v. Terrell [Tex.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 922, 97 S. W. 79. Evidence held to show that a lessee lost his preference right to purchase by failing to do so prior to the expiration of his lease. Id. Under Laws 1905, Reg. Sess. Leg. p. 163, c. 103, § 5, relative to the preference rights of assignees of leases to purchase where one took an assignment the day the lease expired and immediately mailed notice of his purpose to purchase but the notice did not reach the land commissioner until the day after the lease expired, he acquired no preference right. Murphy v. Terrell [Tex.] 100 S. W. 130.

25. By the Act of 1875 (Laws 1875, p. 123), "an act authorizing parties living on school lands selected in lieu of sections sixteen and thirty-two to purchase the same when the state acquires title," persons who complied with the act had a preference right to purchase "indemnity school land" and had title to improvements made by them thereon. State v. McCright [Neb.] 108 N. W. 138. The fact that an occupant of indemnity school land has attempted to enter the same under the homestead laws of the United States and has in good faith contested the right of the state to the same does not estop him to assert his rights under act of 1875 relating to improvements by settlers on lands so obtained from the state. Id.

26. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4218j, providing that an owner of land forfeited for nonpayment of interest shall have a preference right to purchase for ninety days without the condition of settlement and occupancy where it has been occupied for three years, and art. 4218z, providing that surveys in counties organized before Jan. 1, 1875, which are detached from other public lands may be sold without actual settlement to any purchaser except a corporation, a corporation which has acquired rights of a purchaser is not entitled to the preference given by the first mentioned statute where the land is detached and located in a county organized prior to January 1, 1875. Mound Oil Co. v. Terrell [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 440, 92 S. W. 451.

27. Smithers v. Lowrance [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 953, 93 S. W. 1064. The commissioner of the land office has no express statutory authority to cancel an award of dry grazing land on the ground that it should have been classified as dry agricultural land, and, where it is sold to another under the latter classification, the second purchaser has the burden to show that the first award was void. Id. A certificate of the land commissioner that the records of his office showed that a certain section of land was classified as dry grazing land on the classification and appraisement in uses under the laws of 1895, and that the records in use prior to that time showed that it was classified as dry agricultural land, is admissible. Id. A copy of the classification and appraisement records certified as true by the land commissioner with a further statement that it was made under the act of 1895 is admissible. Id. The certificate of the commissioner to a county clerk of the classification and valuation of land in his county, made as required by Laws 1901, p. 292, is admissible on the question whether lands sold prior to making the certificate were classified as applied for. Id. Laws 1901, p. 292, c. 125, requiring the commissioner to notify the county clerks of the classification and value fixed on land in their county, authorizes him to include in such list lands unsold and also lands sold but to which the purchaser has not perfected his title. Id. Where a witness testifies that he made copies of the record of the general land office, pointed out to him as the appraisement and classification records, such copies are admissible. Id.

28. Under Comp. St. 1881, the county treasurer, county judge and county clerk are required, in appointing appraisers to value school lands for the purpose of sale, to act together. An appointment otherwise made is void. State v. Eaton [Neb.] 110 N. W. 709. Under Gen. St. 1905, § 6871, relating to the sale of school lands, it is the duty of the county commissioners to give their consent to the appointment of appraisers by the county superintendent in proper proceedings for the sale of the land, when such appraisers are duly qualified and satisfactory. Bushey v. Hardin [Kan.] 86 P. 146.

29. Where a lessee of school land exercises his option to purchase, the board of educational lands and funds may reject the appraisement if it appears to be so much less than the actual value of the land as to lead to the conclusion that it was the result of fraud or mistake. State v. Eaton [Neb.] 110 N. W. 709.

30. Smithers v. Lowrance [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 953, 93 S. W. 1064.

31. Haney v. Atwood [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 597, 93 S. W. 1093.

32. Where field notes of a survey made in subsequent locator of a prior location precludes him from deriving any advantage from the fact that there was no evidence in the surveyor's office at the date of the subsequent location.[33] Where one's right to purchase his home section was not contested, the land commissioner had no right to deny the incidental right to purchase additonal land.[34] Where the land commissioner has made a sale of school land, another cannot purchase the same land until it is shown that the former sale is void.[35] Where land was sold by the state land commissioner as swamp lands, the title of the purchaser cannot be affected by a showing that at the time the land was chiefly valuable for the timber thereon.[36] The survey and location of public land by virtue of a bounty warrant severs it from the public domain and vests title in the owner of the warrant for whom location and survey was made.[37] Where a bounty warrant issued by the state was not located at the time of a sale of it, it was personal property.[38] Title to state lands cannot be acquired by adverse possession.[39]

Grants and patents.[40]—A state grant regular on its face is prima facie valid.[41] It is presumed where a patent is issued by a state or by the United States that all prerequisites were complied with and the title is not open to collateral attack.[42] A patent is not void because it excludes prior grants without identifying them,[43] but 1840 were recorded but the patent was not issued until 1846 when the field notes were returned to the land office, such patent was superior to one issued in 1845 on a conflicting survey, as the record was notice to subsequent locators. Waterhouse v. Corbett [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 612, 96 S. W. 651. Where a survey was recorded in 1840, after Sayles' Early Laws, art. 838, requiring field notes to be returned to the land office within a year, but the field notes were not returned until 1846 when a patent was issued, another patent issued in 1845 on a prior survey cannot be declared superior because of delay in returning field notes of the original survey, in view of statutes extending the time for the return of the field notes. Id.

33. Waterhouse v. Corbett [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 612, 96 S. W. 651.

34. Murphy v. Terrell [Tex.] 100 S. W. 130. Under Acts 29th Leg. p. 35, c. 29, §§ 1, 2, one claiming no right in the home section of an original settler may not attack the validity of his claim thereto for the mere purpose of resisting his right to purchase additional land. Id.

35. Weyert v. Terrell [Tex.] 100 S. W. 133. Where more than a year elapsed after a sale of school land had been reinstated without suit being brought to reinstate the same as required by Laws 1905, c. 29, it could not thereafter be vacated on the ground that it was unlawfully reinstated. Id.

36. White & Street Townsite Co. v. Neils Lumber Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 371. Selection of land by state land commissioner for state institutions held valid under Gen. St. 1894, §§ 4028, 4038, the land being swamp land. Id.

37. Stubblefield v. Hanson [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 36, 94 S. W. 406. Rev. St. 1895, art. 5269, expressly provides that the survey of land by virtue of a bounty warrant gives sufficient title to maintain trespass to try title. Id. The effect of a survey of public lands by virtue of a bounty or land warrant is to sever such lands from the public domain. Id.

38. Stubblefield v. Hanson [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 36, 94 S. W. 406.

39. Green v. Pennington, 105 Va. 801, 54 S. E. 877.

40. See 6 C. L. 1133.

41. It is presumed that it conveys lands subject to entry. Bealmear v. Hutchins, 148 F. 545.

42. Warner Valley Stock Co. v. Morrow [Or.] 86 P. 369. Where a survey is actually made and the field notes recorded, it being the surveyor's duty to return the certificate and field notes to the land office, and it appearing that a patent was issued it is presumed that regular steps were taken. Waterhouse v. Corbett [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 612, 96 S. W. 651. Under Laws 1878, p. 42, § 4, authorizing sale of state lands, not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres to one person, but where it is possible for a patentee to have the certificates of others transferred to him, it cannot be said that a patent of five thousand acres to one person is void. Warner Valley Stock Co. v. Morrow [Or.] 86 P. 369. The recital in the body of a grant, as recorded, of the affixing of the seal of the state is sufficient evidence of its regularity and the grant is not rendered void by the fact that it does not appear of record that the seal was copied thereon. Broadwell v. Morgan, 142 N. C. 475, 55 S. E. 340. A patent to land as a homestead donation is not subject to collateral attack in an action by the patentee to recover certain other land. Carter v. Clifton [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 177, 98 S. W. 209. A warrant, the survey on which it is based, and a patent, are prima facie evidence that the provisions of a statute authorizing the issuance of a patent to state land have been complied with. Houseman v. International Nav. Co., 214 Pa. 552, 64 A. 379. Contests relating to public lands under Pol. Code, § 3414, are governed by Pol. Code, § 3514, amended by Code Amendments 1873-74, making the certificate of purchase prima facie evidence of title and not by Code Civ. Proc. § 1925, making it primary evidence of title. Miller v. Donovan [Cal. App.] 85 P. 159. Complaint in an action under Pol. Code, §§ 3414, 3415, to determine conflicting claims held sufficient. Id.

43. Kountze v. Hatfield [Ky.] 99 S. W. 262. A patent which is definite in its deis void as to lands included by mistake.[44] One who claims land to be within an exception in a patent has the burden of proving it.[45] The title of a patentee of swamp land from the states relates back on issuance of patent by the United States to the date of the grant to the state.[46] A patent is to be construed according to the plain import of its terms,[47] and doubt and ambiguity as to the location of a patent arising from the certificate of survey, plat and patent is to be construed most strongly against the patentee for whom the surveyor acted.[48] Grants of land by the state are to be strictly construed against the grantee.[49] Where one held under a senior state grant and had been in possession for several years, a junior grant held by one who had never been in possession is void.[50] A priority of state grants settled by the court of last resort of such state is binding on a federal court sitting in such state.[51] Registration of a grant is not essential to its validity as passing title.[52]

Rescissions, cancellations, forfeitures and reversions.[53]—In the absence of some prior right or equity, no one except the state may assail a patent upon the ground that title was procured by fraud.[54] A forfeiture may be declared for abandonment of the land by an applicant,[55] or for his failure to comply with statutory requirements,[56] or conditions of the grant.[57] A state cannot be precluded from declaring scription is not void because older patents included in it are not excepted, such portions being excluded by operation of law. Fox v. Cornett, 29 Ky. L. R. 246, 92 S. W. 959.

44. Where the governor pursuant to Laws 1901, p. 267, c. 193, conveyed certain lands to a railroad company, the deed was void as to lands included therein by mistake. White & Street Townsite Co. v. Neils Lumber Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 371.

47. A recital in a patent issued in 1863 to the heirs of A., by virtue of a certificate, that the certificate was conveyed in 1854 to A. deceased, shows that A. was dead at the date of the patent but not at the time of the conveyance of the certificate. Pfeuffer v. Bondies [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 6, 93 S. W. 221.

48. Description in a state patent construed and given effect so that the description and plat agreed, and the survey closed and embraced about the quantity of land called for. Mineral Development Co. v. Tuggle Land & Timber Co. [C. C. A.] 151 F. 450.

54. A private person whose claims had their inception after the patent was issued may not. Frontroy v. Atkinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 1023.

55. Laws 1901, p. 294, c. 125, expressly provides that one who abandons school land for which he has made application to purchase as a home tract and additional lands forfeits all rights acquired by the application. Edwards v. Terrell [Tex.] 93 S. W. 426. Acts 27 Leg. p. 294, § 3, providing that absence from the land by a settler on account of sickness, etc., shall not work a forfeiture, means temporary abandonment for no longer than is necessary under the circumstances. Jones v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 971, 92 S. W. 1010. One does not forfeit his purchase rights where he temporarily abandons the land from fear of death or great bodily injury. Evidence held to require submission to the jury of the question whether plaintiff had abandoned her town lot located on the public domain. Lindblom v. Rocks [C. C. A.] 146 F. 660.

56. Under Acts 1900, p. 34, § 9, requiring homestead claimants to make proof of occupancy and payment before January 1, 1902, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 4171, providing for forfeiture of the land where a homesteader fails to make proof of payment and occupancy, one who does not comply with the former statute forfeits his rights. Haney v. Atwood [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 597, 93 S. W. 1093. Gen. Laws 1905, p. 161, c. 103, § 4, expressly provides that a sale of school lands may be canceled if the purchaser fails to file proof of settlement within 120 days after the land was awarded to him. Jones v. Terrell [Tex.] 100 S. W. 136. On an issue as to the validity of the purchase of school lands, evidence that the commissioner canceled the awards and evidence that they had been marked "canceled" on the file wrappers is admissible. Smithers v. Lowrence [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 953, 93 S. W. 1064. Failure to make improvements as required by Laws 1901, p. 294, standing alone is not ground for forfeiture. Carter v. Clifton [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 177, 98 S. W. 209.

a forfeiture by a custom of land officials.[58] A statement by the commissioner of the land office that a purchaser was in good standing does not estop the state from declaring forfeiture for nonpayment of interest.[59] The right of a state to maintain a suit to cancel a patent of swamp lands given by it depends on its having some interest in the lands.[60] To effect a forfeiture of a purchase of school land, strict compliance with the requirements of the statute is necessary.[61] A forfeiture is based on the written notice of default issued by the county clerk and the return of the sheriff showing the time and manner of service on file in the county clerk's office.[62] A purchaser of school land who has failed to pay interest and taxes when due, but whose rights as a purchaser have not been forfeited, may maintain mandamus to compel the county treasurer to accept a tender of money to meet delinquencies of interest and taxes.[63] Only a person who has some proprietary interest or right of possession is entitled to initiate a contest before the surveyor general against a proposed sale on the ground that the land is suitable for cultivation.[64] One who institutes a contest involving title to public lands need not allege or prove previous knowledge on the part of an assignee of an applicant who intervenes of fraud in procuring to assignor's certificate.[65] One whose land is forfeited may be reinstated upon compliance with statutory conditions.[66]

Himmelberger-Luce Land & Lumber Co. v. Blackman [Mo.] 100 S. W. 1049.

58. Where no statute requires the land office to notify purchasers that their claims are subject to forfeiture for nonpayment of interest, failure to give notice does not estop the state from declaring forfeiture though it had been the custom of such office to give notice. Mound Oil Co. v. Terrell [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 440, 92 S. W. 451.

59. Inquiry was not made as to payment of interest. Mound Oil Co. v. Terrell [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 440, 92 S. W. 451.

60. State v. Warner Stock Co. [Or.] 86 P. 780. Complaint held to show that the state had no interest in the lands. Id. A state which has no interest in public lands may not maintain a suit praying that persons who settled on and claimed land under the Federal homestead, pre-emption, or timber culture laws, are entitled thereto as against patentees under the swamp land laws. Id. Complaint alleging that persons so settled does not show any interest in the state. Id.

61. Where the return of the sheriff upon a notice of default in the payment fails to show that it was served upon all persons in possession of the lands, it is fatally defective and forfeiture cannot be predicated thereon. Phares v. Gleason [Kan.] 85 P. 572.

62. Where these fail to show legal notices, there is no forfeiture, and oral proof is not admissible to show that the notice was in fact sufficient or to amend the return of service. Spencer v. Id.

65. The assignee has no greater rights than his assignor. Miller v. Donovan [Cal. App.] 85 P. 159. The state is not precluded by Pol. Code, §§ 3414, 3519, 3521, from entertaining a contest involving title to public lands, or from ordering a reference therein because of full payment for the land by one of the applicants. Id.

66. Under Sayle's Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4218f, providing that purchasers who have forfeited their rights for nonpayment of interest may be reinstated unless the rights of third persons have intervened, where an application was made after forfeiture, and the proper payment made, the fact that part of the payment was returned by mistake does not affect the validity of the application and the applicant whose rights had vested. Mound Oil Co. v. Terrell [Tex.] Tex. Ct. Rep. 440, 92 S. W. 451. Under this statute, if the applicant's application is not accompanied by an obligation for a sufficient amount, if the original purchaser applies for reinstatement before the necessary amount is paid, the reinstatement should be granted. 70. Act Cong. March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. 482), granting a right of way over public lands for the construction of railroads, confers no right to such easement in lands occupied by a homesteader whose possessory right attached before the railroad was constructed or the map of definite location approved, though the company was entitled to take and had determined by final survey the exact location of the road before the homesteader acquired any rights. Doughty v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. [N. D.] 107 N. W. 971.

71. The rights of a homestead entryman who filed before an irrigation company constructed its canal on government land are not subject to the rights of the irrigation under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2339, 2340, providing that patents of public lands shall be subject to vested water rights or ditch rights in connection therewith. Atkinson v. Washington Irr. Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 1123. The fact that the entryman made no objection to the construction of the ditch until after he obtained his patent did not estop him from asserting that it was not subject to the company's rights. Id.

78. Mott v. Hopper, 116 La. 629, 40 So. 921. Under Rev. St. U. S. 1899, § 3054, making an entry on public lands sufficient to support ejectment, the absence of patent does not vitiate title when all requirements of the law have been complied with. Metz v. Wright, 116 Mo. App. 631, 92 S. W. 1125.

79. Although title does not pass from the United States until patent has issued, a receiver's receipt issued to a homestead entryman constitutes ample title to enable him to maintain or defend a suit concerning the land. One in possession and claiming man divorced before patent takes no interest.[80] Federal decisions are controlling as to rights of an entryman and of his surviving spouse.[81]

A contract whereby one agrees to convey the legal title to a homestead after he has obtained it from the United States is void,[82] but it is not a violation of the law for a homestead entryman to agree prior to proving up, to give an option to purchase after he has proved up.[83] A mortgage is not an alienation within the meaning of the Federal homestead laws.[84] Sale of a homestead entry before patent though void may be treated by the land department as an abandonment of the entry.[85] An entryman may acquire a valid title under the homestead law though he enters with a view of disposing of the land after he proves up,[86] provided that before proving up he has not entered into an agreement that another should receive the benefit of his purchase.[87] The exemption of lands acquired under the homestead and timber culture laws from any "debt contracted" prior to their acquisition does not exempt from liability for the torts of entrymen previously perpetrated.[88]

Railroad land grants are usually on condition that the aided road transport government troops and supplies at rates to be fixed by congress.[89]

Area acquired and boundaries.[90]—Swampy lands subject to inundation, but reclaimable to some extent, lying between the government meander line and to channel of a river, do not pass to the grantee of adjoining land by virtue of riparian rights.[91] A condition not inconsistent with the conveyance of a fee will not be held to defeat such an estate.[92]

Adverse possession[93] does not run against lands granted to a railroad for right of way.[94] Limitations do not run against a homestead entryman until patent is issued.[95]

By § 2297, his rights may be forfeited by proof of nonresidence on the land or abandonment thereof for six months. (§ 4) B. State lands.[96]—As between conflicting grants, the prior grantee has the better title.[97] A claim of a preference right to purchase state tide lands may be assigned.[98] Such right will also descend to the claimant's heirs.[99] Where one purchased lands from the state and paid for them, he could recover for logs cut therefrom though patent did not issue until after action commenced to recover for the logs.[1] One who enters leased land which has been long abandoned may acquire rights of a settler,[2] and its sale as leased land may be enjoined at his instance.[3] Persons who settle on unsurveyed public lands, not swamp lands nor reserved as such nor otherwise reserved with intent to acquire title under the homestead laws, acquire no rights therein under the state swamp land laws.[4] Riparian rights do not necessarily attach to grant of state tide lands lying below tidal high water mark.[5] Bounty warrants are assignable.[6] After entry under a military bounty warrant, the holder is the equitable owner,[7] and the land may be taxed by the state.[8] In Texas a settler may not sell his land until after he has filed affidavit of actual settlement,[9] but he may mortgage the land before he has completed his three years occupancy.[10] Under the rule prohibiting alienation, a lease for 99 years is void.[11]

Adjudication of title by the courts.[15]—No affirmative action can be had against the state or officer thereof whereby it could be required to execute deeds or issue patents or perform any act requisite to perfect title. But the state board of land commissioners may be restrained from violating contractual relations between the state and the purchasers.[16] Mandamus to compel the commissioner of public lands and buildings to execute a contract for the sale of school lands will be denied unless it is clear that the law has been substantially complied with and the board has abused its discretion in rejecting his application.[17] A proceeding before the land department to determine a preference right to purchase state tide lands is not adversary in the sense that one of the parties seeks to recover the land from another, and the jurisdiction of the court to review the determination of the land office is wholly appellate.[18] The state of Louisiana has provided for the sale of state lands under certain conditions by the register of the land office, and has also provided for a review of the decisions of that officer rejecting the claim of an applicant, and where there is nothing left between the parties for him to decide, the appeal lies and carries all questions interlocutory or otherwise.[19]

§ 5. Leases of public lands and rights thereunder.[20]—State lands may be leased only where authorized by law.[21] Where the legislature authorizes leasing of state school lands, it has the right to fix the terms of the lease.[22] A lease of mineral lands on royalty is not a sale within a constitutional requirement that sale of state swamp and school lands shall be public.[23] The provision of the statute authorizing the leasing of state school lands, giving the lessee the right to sue for waste, is not inconsistent with the idea that a conveyance for ninety-nine years creates a leasehold estate only.[24] To ascertain the rights of a lessee for ninety-nine years the courts must, where the terms of the lease are plain, seek the definition of the word lease, and they cannot turn from that definition to the conditions of the country existing when the lease was made.[25] A lessee of school lands is conclusively presumed to have taken his lease for agricultural purposes only with such rights as go with such a lease, which do not include the right to cut and sell timber.[26] The state in leasing its lands does not act in its political character as a sovereign but as a private citizen and the lease is to be construed as if made between individuals.[27] A lease of submerged state lands may be canceled in equity for false representations of the lessee that he was owner of the shore front on which the lease was conditioned.[28] Leases may be forfeited [29] or canceled [30] only where statutory conditions are complied with,[31] and a lessee is entitled to redeem from forfeiture [32] or be reinstated upon compliance with such conditions.[33] Th recordation of assignments of leases is regulated by statute.[34] The fact that the commissioner of the land office did not consent to the transfer of a lease of state lands is no defense to a note given for the purchase price of such lease.[35] A lessee of homestead lands is not responsible for failure of the entryman to comply with the law relative to residence on the land.[36]

32. A lessee of school lands or his assignee under a lease executed pursuant to Law 1883, p. 302, c. 74, who is delinquent in payments reserved by the instrument, is entitled to redeem from a forfeiture incurred by such delinquency at any time before the lands are resold or released. Laws 1901, p. 98, c. 62, § 1, authorizing an appeal from orders or decisions of the board of state land commissioners, does not authorize appeal from an order of commissioner of public lands canceling a lease of tide lands and does not deprive the lessee of a right to maintain mandamus to compel reinstatement of the lease. State v. Ross, 42 Wash. 439, 85 P. 29.

34. An assignment of a lease of school lands that was executed prior to the passage of Laws 1885, p. 335, c. 85, is not affected by the provisions of that act requiring such assignments to be recorded in the office of the commissioner of public lands and buildings. grant defined the lands as swamp lands, it cannot be determined after one hundred years that they were not because at the present time they are arable.[41] Ancient Mexican grants are presumed to have passed title to all land within the boundaries of the grant [42] but no more.[43] Ancient Mexican grants are construed so as to effectuate the intention of the parties [44] and to vest title in the person entitled to it.[45] The unauthorized act of the governor of Tamaulipas in issuing a final title to lands after his power to do so had been terminated took away no existing right of the grantee in the land.[46] The Republic of Texas had power to confirm or ignore Spanish or Mexican grants to municipalities.[47] The commissioners for consideration of Florida land claims are prohibited from reporting for confirmation any claim which had been previously rejected for fraud by any commission or other public officer acting under the authority of congress, and a judge of the superior court of West Florida acting under congressional authority is such an officer,[48] likewise a rejection by him because of an alteration of the record of the grant so as to make it appear to antedate the treaty of cession is a rejection for fraud within the statute [49] and such judge has jurisdiction to reject for that reason though he had no power to inquire whether grants fell within exceptions in the treaty.[50]

Where a grant of sale was made by the governor of a state in Mexico to a Mexican officer to be located on the vacant lands of the department of Nacogdoches, a power of attorney and act of sale executed by the grantee to another who applied to the proper officers for a location and grant and obtained a grant, held that the instrument executed by the original grantee was an act of sale and not a mere power of attorney. Allen v. Parmalee [C. C. A.] 142 F. 354. Facts sufficient to justify the presumption of an ancient Mexican grant are sufficient to establish a right to the grant. Surghenor v. Taliaferro [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 411, 98 S. W. 648. Laws, § 1394, providing for punishment for willful trespass, the offense is complete though there is no intention to commit trespass. People v. Christian, 144 Mich. 247, 13 Det. Leg. N. 222, 107 N. W. 919.

53. Under Rev. St. § 1025, providing that an indictment shall not be deemed insufficient by any defect in matter of form which does not prejudice defendant, an indictment for cutting timber is not bad for duplicity in alleging that one cut timber with intent to unlawfully export and with intent to dispose of the same. Morgan v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 189. Rev. St. § 2461, prohibiting the cutting of timber and imposing a penalty of fine and imprisonment, was repealed by Act June 3, 1878, c. 151 (20 Stat. 89), Act August 1892, c. 375 (27 Stat. 348), and § 4 (20 Stat. 90). Id. Where in a prosecution for age for trespass on state lands does not violate constitutional rights of a citizen though the same act is punishable as a crime.[54] Equity will not restrain the cutting of timber on the public domain either to prevent multiplicity of suits,[55] or because ingenious concealment makes the remedy at law difficult,[56] or because a discovery is desirable, if the remedy by statutory examination of a party is adequate,[57] or because one of the defendants is executor of a wrongdoer.[58] Nor, because permits to cut on certain lands have been exceeded, are the licensees trustees ex maleficio as to the excess [59] or liable to accounting.[60]

Crimes and offenses against public lands.[61]—It is an offense against the United States to conspire to fraudulently obtain public lands.[62] The United States has a direct interest in the public lands within the rule prohibiting public officers from accepting compensation for services rendered in a proceeding in which the United States is interested.[63] The fact that a third person advanced money to a homesteader to prove up and make improvements is not unlawful, and can be considered only in determining whether there was a conspiracy to violate the homestead laws.[64] An indictment for conspiracy to defraud the United States of public lands must describe the proposed fraud with reasonable certainty.[65] Such an indictment need not allege particular land as the object of the conspiracy.[66]

Fencing.[67]—Federal statutes forbid the enclosure of public lands.[68] Under an indictment for inclosing public lands without claim or color of title, it is competent to show acts, conduct and statements of the defendants tending to show assertion of a right to exclude the general public.[69] cutting timber the sentence for fine and imprisonment was void because of repeal of the statute providing for it, the circuit court of appeals could not correct the sentence by eliminating the portion providing for imprisonment as it could not be said that the jury found defendant guilty of an intent to export and dispose of the timber, where they might have found that he cut it innocently. June 14, 1878, § 2 (20 Stat. 113, c. 191), providing that final certificate of a timber culture claim shall not issue until eight years after date of entry, and if five years after such time the planting and cultivation of the necessary number of trees shall be proved patent shall issue, held that where a timber culture entry did not become absolutely void because not forfeited for failure to make final proof within five years, it was merely suspended and was sufficient to sustain a prosecution for conspiracy to obtain title by false proofs. § 1. Definitions and scope of title.[70]—This article treats generally of public works and improvements, the powers and duties of municipalities with respect thereto, the procedure to be followed in the making thereof, and the manner of providing for the cost, including local assessments. The taking of property for public use,[71] the construction and operation of particular public works,[72] and matters peculiar to the powers and fiscal affairs of particular public bodies [73] are specifically treated elsewhere. While the manner of letting a contract for a public work, and the validity of provisions peculiar to contracts of this kind, are here treated, matters pertaining to the making and validity of public contracts in general are not included.[74] Liability for personal injuries resulting from negligence in constructing a work is also excluded.[75]

§ 2. Power, duty, and occasion to order or make improvements.[76]—The power of a state to construct public works and make public improvements within its boundaries is exclusive, except where it has been delegated to the Federal government under some provision of the constitution of the United States.[77] But every statute

77. The state has power to make surveys for public improvements and to mark the boundaries of its civil divisions, and the existence of the power necessarily implies the right to make it practical and effective. Litchfield v. Pond, 186 N. Y. 66, 78 N. E. 719. It is competent for a state acting through its counties to protect the ports, harbors, bays, and rivers therein if the control of the general government within its sphere is not thereby interfered with. providing for the construction of a public work or improvement must conform to the constitution of the state.[78] It must not violate a constitutional inhibition against local and special legislation [79] or a constitutional requirement that legislative boards shall be elected by the qualified voters.[80] The legislature acting reasonably may impose upon a municipality or collection of municipalities the duty, in part, of maintaining a bridge not located within its or their boundaries.[81] Where it cannot be said that the legislature would have passed any of the provisions of an act authorizing a municipality to construct a public work or improvement, independently of one provision which is unconstitutional, the entire act will fail.[82] The power to make local improvements is almost universally delegated to municipalities and other inferior political bodies. Such bodies can act only under the sanction of such delegated authority,[83] and in the construction of the improvement they must conform to the terms of the statute by which the authority is delegated. Many of the peculiar provisions of such statutes, and of municipal ordinances enacted under their authority, have been interpreted by the courts.[84] The power of a city to grade and improve its streets is an inherent corporate power, and is included in the general grant to the corporation to be a city.[85] In Illinois the municipal authorities are the sole judges of the necessity for a local improvement.[86] A city authorized by its char-

78. The Maryland statute, Act of 1904, c. 274, providing for the opening and improvement of streets situated exclusively in the annex portion of Baltimore city, is constitutional, and it was within the legislative power of the general assembly to enact it. City of Baltimore v. Flack [Md.] 64 A. 702.

79. A statute empowering cities of the first class to construct a sewerage system, and providing for the appointment of commissioners of sewerage does not violate such a constitutional inhibition merely because there is only one city of the first class in the state, although by inadvertance the statute, in one section, mentions that city. Miller v. Louisville [Ky.] 99 S. W. 284.

80. A statute providing for a municipal sewerage system and for the appointment of commissioners of sewerage, whose powers are to be purely ministerial, is not violative of section 160 of the constitution of Kentucky, providing that members of legislative boards must be elected by the qualified voters. Miller v. Louisville [Ky.] 99 S. W. 284.

81. Village of Bloomer v. Bloomer, 128 Wis. 297, 107 N. W. 974. The maintenance of a bridge across a large stream, requiring a larger expenditure than could be justly imposed upon a municipality in which it is located, is not a purely local affair of the town or village in which it is located. To require other municipalities to assist in maintaining it does not violate the principles of local self-government. Id. The maintenance of a bridge in one municipality in part at the expense of another under the supervision of the executive officers of the two and in pursuance of a duty imposed by law does not violate the constitutional inhibition as regards the state engaging in works of internal improvement. Id.

84. Street improvements: Under the Illinois Act of 1875 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 24, §§ 294-296c), no improvements can be made except sidewalks and their necessary parts. An ordinance under such statute providing for side-filling is void. People v. Patton, 223 Ill. 379, 79 N. E. 51. Municipal ordinance construed and held not to require the city engineer to pave the streets with vitrified brick by day labor, contrary to the provisions of the city charter. City of Baltimore v. Gahan [Md.] 64 A. 716.

Drains: Under the Illinois Drainage Act of May 29, 1879 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 42), a drainage district has the right to take in contiguous territory lying within an incorporated city organized under the city and village act of 1872 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 24), where the territory sought to be taken in has not been organized by the city as any part of a district for drainage purposes, and watercourses within such territory remain unimproved. City of Joliet v. Spring Creek Drainage Dist., 222 Ill. 441, 78 N. E. 836.

Dams and reservoirs: Under the various New York statutes relating to the power of the aqueduct commissioners, such commissioners had power after June 1, 1901, to contract for the construction of a new dam and reservoir. Walter v. McClellan, 113 App. Div. 295, 99 N. Y. S. 78. Under the New York statutes, Laws 1883, p. 666, c. 490, § 2, and § 36, p. 678, of the same act as amended by Laws 1887, p. 229, c. 196, the aqueduct commissioners had power to build a dam in the county of Westchester on a tributary of the Croton River. Id. The director of public works of a municipality having power to direct minor and incidental changes becoming necessary in the construction of a reservoir held authorized to order the performance of certain extra work which was clearly incidental to the general work. Clark & Sons Co. v. Pittsburg [Pa.] 66 A. 154.

86. Lingle v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 222 Ill. 384, 78 N. E. 794. Upon a consideration of the evidence it was held that no ter to construct sewers may, where the natural flow of water in alley is obstructed by a railroad, construct a sewer over the property of the railroad company, under an agreement that the latter shall pay the cost thereof.[87] In the construction of a public work or improvement, the laws of the state must be complied with.[88] Sometimes the authority delegated to municipalities is coupled with a condition, as that the improvement shall not be made without a certificate of authority from a state commission,[89] or a recommendation of the board of public works[90] or park board,[91] or requiring an ordinance providing for the improvement to be submitted to popular vote.[92] Where a municipality has by its charter authority to provide for the erection and maintenance of a system of waterworks to supply it with water, and to that end to contract with a party who shall build and operate waterworks, it may, in the exercise of this power, exclude itself for a period of years from constructing and operating waterworks.[93] The actual work of constructing a municipal improvement, or the performance of merely ministerial acts, may be delegated to a municipal officer or subordinate body.[94] But authority granted to a municipality to abuse of the discretion vested in the board of local improvements was shown in this case in deciding to make a street improvement, and that an ordinance based upon the recommendation of the board was a proper exercise of powers conferred. Howe v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 95, 79 N. E. 421.

87. City of Louisville v. Hess' Adm'x [Ky.] 99 S. W. 265.

88. The erection under statutory authority of an additional court house in a city other than the county seat of a county is not a change of the site or location of a county building within the meaning of the New York statute, Laws 1892, p. 1753, c. 686, §§ 31-33, prohibiting such change unless certain preliminary requirements have been performed. Lyon v. Steuben County Sup'rs, 100 N. Y. S. 676.

89. The New York Laws 1905, p. 2096, c. 737, § 11, prohibiting any municipality from building a lighting plant for other than municipal purposes without a certificate of authority from the gas and electricity commission, applies to a village whose only expenditure of money, before the passage of the act, having relation to a lighting plant, was for investigating the feasibility of constructing such a plant, and for the payment of an engineer to make plans and specifications therefor. Potsdam Elec. Light & Power Co. v. Potsdam, 112 App. Div. 810, 99 N. Y. S. 551.

90. The provision in the Kansas City charter, art. 9, § 2, that no resolution or ordinance for a street improvement shall be passed except upon the recommendation of the board of public works indorsed thereon, does not apply to roads, parkways and boulevards under control of the park board. Jaicks v. Merrill [Mo.] 98 S. W. 753. Section 36, art. 17, of the charter of Kansas City, requiring ordinances establishing or re-establishing the grade of streets to have endorsed upon them a certificate of the board of public works, does not render invalid an ordinance providing for the paving of a street the grade of which had already been established by an ordinance in conformity with art. 10, § 31, of the charter. Id.

91. Where under the charter of Kansas City the park board merely recommends the improvement of a boulevard and the common council adopts the recommendation and provides for the improvement by ordinance, the constitution of Missouri is not infringed. Jaicks v. Merrill [Mo.] 98 S. W. 753.

92. By the provisions of a New Jersey statute, § 46, of an act for the incorporation of cities, etc. (P. L. 1899, p. 302), an ordinance to erect a fire house on a city lot must be submitted to a vote of the citizens. Lockwood v. East Orange [N. J. Law] 64 A. 144. Section 71 of the Act of 1899 (P. L. p. 313), which provides that no certiorari shall be allowed to set aside any ordinance for any improvement after the contract therefor shall have been awarded, does not apply to an ordinance to build a fire house. Id.

93. City of Vicksburgh v. Vicksburgh Waterworks Co., 202 U. S. 453, 50 Law. Ed. 1102. The Mississippi Const. § 178, which provides that "the legislature shall have power to alter, amend, or repeal any charter of incorporation * * * whenever, in its opinion, it may be for the public interests to do so; provided, however, that no injustice shall be done to stockholders," does not authorize legislation giving a municipality authority to issue bonds and build its own waterworks, where such municipality has by ordinance, passed under legislative sanction, conferred upon a waterworks company the exclusive right to supply the municipality with water for a period of years. Id.

94. Where a municipality is authorized to construct an improvement at its own expense, the council may direct a committee to do the work. City of Fayette v. Rich [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 8. The preparation by the board of public service of plans, estimates, specifications, and profiles for a new municipal waterworks system, in accordance with a determining ordinance by council, is not an exercise of legislative power, and authority so to do is conferred upon such board and may be exercised by it, notwithstanding section 127 of the Municipal Code which provides that all power unless otherwise provided is to be exercised by council. Yaryan v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 1. A board of public service, where required by a street improvement ordinance to choose one of three materials after bids were received, performs only a ministerial act and as the agent of the city council executes its legislative command. Scott v.

grade and pave streets and sidewalks is legislative, and the amount of the improvement, its kind, and character, must first be ascertained by the legislative body of the municipality and cannot be so delegated.[95] Where, however, there has been such an unauthorized delegation of power, the acts done under it may by subsequent ratification be made the acts of such legislative body.[96] Where a municipal council or other body having authority is acting within the scope of the authority conferred, its discretion in any matter relating to the improvement cannot be controlled by the courts if its action is not fraudulent, unreasonable, or oppressive.[97] Where two municipal corporations are jointly charged with the maintenance of a bridge, and one unreasonably neglects or refuses to perform in that regard, the other may carry the entire burden for the time being and subsequently recover of the former, on an implied promise, its just share of the expense.[98]

§ 3. Funds for improvement and provision for cost.[99]—A statute conferring authority upon a county or municipal corporation in regard to the levying of taxes or use of funds for local improvements must conform to the constitution of the state.[1] But the fact that a municipal corporation is indebted up to the constitutional limit does not prevent it from levying taxes for public improvements within the limits fixed by the laws governing such corporations.[2] The power to issue bonds

City of Baltimore v. Gahan [Md.] 64 A. 716.

95. Harton v. Avondale [Ala.] 41 So. 934. A municipal ordinance providing that "the width of the sidewalk shall not be less than five feet, laid so that the center edge shall be as directed by the city engineer," is not in itself a delegation of legislative authority to a ministerial officer in derogation of the municipal charter. Ramsey v. Field, 115 Mo. App. 620, 92 S. W. 350. But where in such case the space between the property line and the curbing is eleven feet, and consequently the engineer is left to say where the walk shall be within that space, a power is delegated to him in derogation of the charter. Id. An ordinance providing that a street "be curbed according to the established grade" refers to a grade previously established, and does not leave any legislative function to be exercised by the city engineer. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 120 Mo. App. 215, 96 S. W. 701.

96. Harton v. Avondale [Ala.] 41 So. 934.

97. There is no statutory provision requiring that the discretion of the board of public service in the selection of material for the improvement of a street shall be controlled by the wish of the property owners, and, where the board exercises its discretion in good faith, its decisions cannot be interfered with by the courts. Scott v. Hamilton, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 493; Id., 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 1. In Illinois, in the case of a street improvement, the discretionary power of the city council, as to the limits of the district proposed to be improved, cannot be disturbed unless they have abused their discretion and exercised their power in an unreasonable manner. Gardner v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 254, 79 N. E. 624. Upon the evidence the ordinance in this case, providing for a new curb to replace an existing one, was held not to be unreasonable, unjust, or oppressive. Chicago Union Trac. Co. v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 37, 79 N. E. 67. In Louisiana the obligation to provide good and sufficient court houses for their respective parishes and of determining how the money of which they have the administration shall be expended is imposed by law upon the police juries, not upon the courts; and for the judiciary to meddle in such matters, where, as in this case, allegations of gross abuse of power, oppression, and fraud are wholly unsupported by proof, would be for it to invade the domain of other departments of the government in violation of the express prohibitions of the constitution. Murphy v. Police Jury [La.] 42 So. 979.

98. Village of Bloomer v. Bloomer, 128 Wis. 297, 107 N. W. 974. The proper remedy in such case is an action at law, not mandamus. Id. A municipality neglecting or refusing to contribute to the work of keeping up a joint bridge cannot escape its pro rata liability by objecting that it was not notified or consulted as to what should be done. Id.

1. Smith v. Haney [Kan.] 85 P. 550. A statute authorizing the use of a part of the general revenue of a county for the building of a court house is violation of a constitutional inhibition against a diversion of a tax from the object for which it is levied. Id.

2. People v. Chicago & T. R. Co., 223 Ill. 448, 79 N. E. 151. Tax levied by municipality for school building purposes not violative of constitution of Ill. art. 9, § 12. Id. A contract by a city which merely binds the city to levy and collect a special benefit assessment does not create a debt against the city within a statute fixing a debt limit. And an action for damages for failure of the city to levy such assessment is an action in tort and not one founded on a debt. City of Mankato v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 329. An injunction restraining a city from entering into any contract for the

in aid of internal improvements cannot be implied from any general grant of power to counties or other municipalities [3] and is limited to such works as pertain to the particular municipality,[4] but a specific power given is construed as covering all the objects embraced by it.[5] The necessary preliminary sanction by voters is essential in such a tax.[6] Whether a debt may be created to fund all works of a class or must be specifically devoted to particular works depends on the statute.[7] In some states authority is delegated to municipalities to decide whether the cost of local improvements shall be paid for out of the fund raised by general taxation or by assessment upon the property benefited by the improvement,[8] but this power must be exercised fairly as between taxpayers.[9] Many of the peculiar provisions of statutes authorizing municipalities and other inferior political bodies to raise and appropriate funds for local improvements, and prescribing the conditions under which they may be raised or appropriated,[10] and the formal requisites of bonds issued for pavement of a particular street whereby it will incur a financial obligation does not prevent it from executing a contract to pay by special benefit assessments. Especially where the restraining order was so drawn as to indicate that such contract was excluded. Id.

3. State v. King County [Wash.] 88 P. 935.

4. Under a statute authorizing counties to contract indebtedness and to issue bonds to procure money for strictly county purposes, a county cannot issue bonds to pay for the construction of a ship canal for the Federal government. Washington Laws 1889-90, p. 37, §§ 2, 3. State v. King County [Wash.] 88 P. 935. A river, harbor or bay of a port is a public highway useful to the people of the county in which it is situated and its protection from injury by being filled in is within the purposes for which county governments are established, and, under the laws of Florida, county funds may be appropriated for such a work. Board of Com'rs of Escambia County v. Pensacola Pilot Com'rs [Fla.] 42 So. 697.

5. But where a board of education is authorized to build a new school building and issue bonds therefor and levy a tax to supplement the bonds, it has authority to levy a tax to pay for a heating plant for the building. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. People, 224 Ill. 155, 79 N. E. 664.

6. In Illinois a levy of a tax by a school district for building purposes is illegal unless the building has first been authorized by a vote of the people. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. People, 224 Ill. 155, 79 N. E. 664.

7. In Ohio a city is not authorized to issue bonds to provide a fund from which to pay its part of the cost of improvements that may from time to time be made, but it may issue bonds to pay its part of the cost of specific improvements. Heffner v. Toledo, 75 Ohio St. 413, 80 N. E. 8.

8. Under the Kentucky statute, Ky. St. 1903, § 3706, the board of trustees of a town have power to decide whether the whole of a street improvement, including intersections and crossings or any part of it, shall be paid for by the town or by the abutting owners whether the improvement be made under the cash system or the ten-year bond plan. Morton v. Sullivan, 29 Ky. L. R. 943, 96 S. W. 807. Under the laws of Iowa a general municipal ordinance providing for assessment of the expense of paving street intersections and spaces in front of city and government property upon the property of private owners does not render void a subsequent provision for the payment of deficiencies in the amount raised by a special assessment from a fund raised by general taxation. Corey v. Ft. Dodge [Iowa] 111 N. W. 6.

9. But a municipal charter providing for the issuance of bonds whenever the council resolve that an extraordinary expenditure ought "for the benefit of the city" to be made does not authorize the issuance of bonds to relieve certain property owners from their legal burden of contributing to the expense of a sewer. Charter of Oneida § 59, subd. 25, as amended (Laws 1904, p. 563, c. 273). City of Oneida v. King, 101 N. Y. S. 239.

10. The bonds provided for by the California street improvement act, Act March 23, 1876 (St. 1875-76, p. 433, c. 326), were to be paid out of a special fund to be raised by means of a special tax upon the lands to be benefited by the improvement. The debt created by them did not become a general obligation of the city to be enforced by a personal judgment against it. Meyer v. San Francisco [Cal.] 88 P. 722. But the bondholders could maintain an action against the city to establish and perpetuate the bonds as a claim upon the funds to be raised, and to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations. Id. The bonds did not bear interest after maturity. Id. In Illinois where a petition by highway commissioners of a township to the board of supervisors of the county shows a compliance with section 19 of the act in regard to roads and bridges in counties under township organization, as amended by the act of June 17, 1891 (Laws 1891, p. 188), and the necessary facts are found to exist, it is the duty of the board to appropriate a sum sufficient to meet half the expenses of building the bridges to which the petition relates, and this duty will be enforced by mandamus. Board of Sup'rs of Phillips v. People, 222 Ill. 9, 78 N. E. 13. But if the acts enjoined by the statute cannot be performed in a particular case without a violation of the constitution, their performance will not be enforced. Id. A proper levy and extension of taxes for school building purposes under the Illinois statute. People v. Chicago & T. R. Co., 223 Ill. 448, 79 N. E. 151. Power of boards of supervisors of two counties under Iowa statute, Acts such improvements,[11] have received the interpretation of the courts. An ordinance providing for funds for a local improvement must conform to the requirements of a statute prescribing the formal requisites of municipal ordinances.[12] The courts are frequently called upon to interpret the peculiar provisions of ordinances appropriating money for public improvements.[13] Where both a city and a street railway company are interested in the paving of a street, the city may be bound by a contract between them by which the city agrees to do the work and the railway company agrees to pay therefor a stipulated price.[14] Where such a contract is entered into on behalf of the city by municipal officers, a suit brought thereon by the city amounts to a ratification thereof.[15] A special indebtedness for local improvements incurred by a void municipality cannot, after the legal creation of the corporation, be so ratified as to convert the liability from that of a special indebtedness to a general one enforceable against all the taxpayers.[16]

§ 4. Proceedings to authorize or validate making. A. In general.[17]—Statutes prescribing the proceedings essential to authorize public improvements must conform to the constitution of the state.[18] A public building partially completed under illegal proceedings may be utilized and completed subsequently under proceedings complying with the statute.[19]

30th General Assembly, pp. 69-71, c. 68, §§ 28, 30, 32, 33, 34, to determine how funds shall be raised, where drainage district extends into both counties. Wood v. Hall [Iowa] 110 N. W. 270. The proviso in section 3457, Ky. St. 1903, does not preclude a municipality from binding itself for street improvements although the ordinance and contract therefor do not specify how the work shall be paid for. Terrell v. Paducah, 28 Ky. L. R. 1237, 92 S. W. 310. Under the New York Laws 1892, p. 1759, c. 686, § 63, the power of the board of supervisors of a county to appropriate county funds to aid a town unreasonably burdened by expenses for the construction and repair of bridges extends to the appropriation of such funds, within the limits prescribed, for the payment of bonds issued by the town to pay for the construction of a bridge. Knowles v. Chemung County Sup'rs, 112 App. Div. 138, 97 N. Y. S. 1111. The bonds authorized by section 53 of the Ohio Municipal Code of 1902 cannot be provided for by resolution or ordinance until after the passage of an ordinance providing for the improvement. Heffner v. Toledo, 75 Ohio St. 413, 80 N. E. 8. But under Rev. St. § 2835, the municipal council may, by resolution or ordinance passed by the affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members, provide for the issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of a specific improvement before the passage of a resolution declaring the necessity for the improvement. Id. Under an Ohio statute a fund raised for the purpose of paying the city's share of contemplated improvements is a general fund from which the city may draw from time to time, as occasion arises, to pay its share of such improvements wherever they may be located within the boundaries of the city, and, in providing for this fund, it is not necessary to wait until legislation with respect to a particular improvement has gone forward to the point where an assessment has actually been levied. Heffner v. Toledo, 9 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 1.

11. The provisions of the Ohio statutes, Rev. St. 1906, §§ 1536—285, 1536—287, requiring bonds issued for street or sewer improvements to have the name of the street or district written or printed upon them, do not apply to bonds issued to pay the city's part of the cost of such improvements. Heffner v. Toledo, 75 Ohio St. 413, 80 N. E. 8. See, also, Municipal Bonds, 8 C. L. 1046.

12. Ordinance to provide for the issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of a number of street improvements held not in conflict with the statutory requirement that "no by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title." Heffner v. Toledo, 75 Ohio St. 413, 80 N. E. 8. Where a parish tax is levied on all property subject to parochial taxation, the allegation, unsupported by proof, that the property in a particular town is to be exempted constitutes no ground for an attack upon an ordinance providing for the building of a court house and dedicating part of the parish tax therefor. Murphy v. Police Jury [La.] 42 So. 979.

14. City of Worcester v. Worcester & H. Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 232. The fact that the construction provided for by such a contract was a departure from the order of the board of aldermen was held not to affect the validity of the contract. Id.

19. Where issue of bonds and construction of a court house had been restrained because the action of county commissioners was not according to statutory require-

(§ 4) B. By whom and how initiated.[20]—In many states the making of certain kinds of improvements [21] are required to be initiated by a petition of the persons whose property will be benefited by the improvement or is situated within the district to be improved.[22] The petition must conform to the requirements of the statute.[23] It is usually required to be signed by the majority of the landowners whose lands will be benefited by the improvement or lie within the district to be improved,[24] or by the majority of the owners in value of such lands,[25] or perhaps more frequently in the case of street improvements by the owners of a majority of the foot frontage of property in the improvement district.[26] In Indiana boards of county commissioners in counties having over 25,000 inhabitants are authorized to construct court houses only upon petition of 500 resident freeholders of the county.[27] An omission by a petitioner for a street improvement to note in the petition the date of his signature, as required by statute, will not render the proceedings wholly void.[28] In Arkansas none of the signers of the second petition for an improvement within an improvement district can withdraw their names therefrom after the appointment of the board of improvement.[29] In Kansas the action of the mayor and council of a ments, in a subsequent action to restrain the county commissioners from proceeding in the same matter according to law, the destruction and removal of the partially completed court house will not be required. State v. Newton County Com'rs [Ind. App.] 76 N. E. 308.

21. Facts not constituting a change in the "established" grade of a street within the meaning of a provision in a municipal charter declaring that the established grade of a street shall not be changed except upon petition of abutting owners. People v. Common council, 99 N. Y. S. 657.

22. In Nebraska it is not competent for a city of the metropolitan class to petition itself for improvements in a street improvement district within such city. Herman v. Omaha [Neb.] 106 N. W. 593.

23. Sufficiency of petition for construction of gravel road, under the Indiana statute, Acts 1903, p. 255, c. 145, § 2, to confer upon board of county commissioners jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Todd v. Crail [Ind.] 77 N. E. 402. Petition for the widening and improvement of a drain, and proceedings subsequent thereto held not to be so defective as to deprive the probate court of jurisdiction of the proceedings for the improvement under the Michigan statutes. Auditor General v. Bolt [Mich.] 111 N. W. 74. The provisions of the Kansas statute (Gen. St. 1901, § 730), requiring that the petition for street paving shall give a specific description of the material to be used, is fully complied with in cases where vitrified brick is to be used, by the use of the words "vitrified brick," followed by words describing the standard of quality desired. National Surety Co. v. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. [Kan.] 84 P. 1034. Petition for new sidewalk held sufficiently specific as to location. City of Fayette v. Rich [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 8. The petition for a sidewalk need not state the kind of walk, the material, nor the length or width of the same, where the statute does not require it to do so. Id.

24. In Ohio an improvement of a public road in a county is initiated by a petition to the county commissioners, by a majority of all the owners of real estate who are residents of the county and own lands lying within one mile of the road to be improved. Act of April 4, 1900, § 1 (94 Ohio Laws, p. 96). Alexander v. Baker, 74 Ohio St. 258, 78 N. E. 366. A petition not signed by a majority of such resident landowners does not confer jurisdiction upon the commissioners, and if they assume to act on it, they may be restrained by injunction. Id.

25. In Arkansas the names of the majority of the owners in value of the real estate in an improvement district must be signed to a petition for an improvement. Kirby's Dig. § 5667; Lenon v. Brodie [Ark.] 98 S. W. 979. In determining whether the names of such majority are signed to the petition, the value of church and college property in the district should not be included in the valuation, but the assessed value instead. Kirby's Dig. §§ 5717, 6987. Id. Nor ought the value of a street railway franchise in the district to be included in the valuation where the company owning it has no easement or freehold interest in the soil or exclusive control of the highway. Id.

26. Public parks belonging to a city of the metropolitan class are not taxable property within the meaning of the Nebraska statute, § 110 (111), c. 12a, Comp. St. 1903, and are properly excluded in determining whether a petition for a street improvement includes the record owners of a majority of the foot frontage of taxable property in the improvement district. Herman v. Omaha [Neb.] 106 N. W. 593. The Indiana Acts 1903, p. 255, c. 145, do not contemplate that a petition for the improvement of a highway shall be signed by more than one landholder for each abutting tract, and the one intended is the owner of the fee. Kemp v. Goodnight [Ind.] 80 N. E. 160. Upon the question whether a petition for the improvement of a highway was signed by the required number of abutting landowners, evidence held sufficient to show that certain land abutted on the highway. city of the first class in determining the sufficiency of a petition for a street improvement is a final determination and conclusive evidence as to the sufficiency of the petition.[30] Under the charter of Kansas City, the owners of a majority in front feet of the lands fronting on a street to be paved may by petition select the paving material.[31]

A municipal council does not lose jurisdiction over a petition for a street improvement by reason of a delay of two years in taking action thereon.[32] In some of the states before the enactment of an ordinance for a local improvement, it is required that there shall be a preliminary resolution by the mayor and council,[33] or the board of local improvements.[34] The resolution is generally required to describe the work to be done and the materials to be used.[35] The object of the Illinois local improvement act is attained if the resolution contain such a description of the improvement as to give property owners a general understanding of what is proposed to be done and the estimated cost.[36] An agreement with the proprietors of a cemetery to connect a branch sewer with the cemetery drainage will not invalidate the original resolution for the construction of the main sewer.[37] An ordinance to serve as the basis of construction of sidewalks at abutter's cost must do more than merely locate the sidewalks, it must create a duty to construct them,[38] and if theirs is the primary duty, a notice and reasonable time must precede a default.[39] It is sometimes required by statute that the resolution for a municipal improvement shall be published in a newspaper for a certain number of days.[40] It is essential to the

32. Whipple v. Toledo, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 520.

33. Under the Kansas statute (Gen. St. 1901, § 1068), relating to cities of the second class having a population of more than 10,000 inhabitants, a street improvement is inaugurated by a resolution of the mayor and council. Clarke v. Lawrence [Kan.] 88 P. 735. Under the Missouri statute, Rev. St. 1899, § 5860 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2967, § 5859), the passage and publication of a preliminary resolution is not essential to the validity of an ordinance for the construction of a sidewalk. City of Joplin v. Hollingshead [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 506.

34. In Illinois city councils are not authorized to originate any improvement to be paid for by special assessment or special taxation, but every scheme for such an improvement must have its origin with a board of local improvements. Ogden, Sheldon & Co. v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 294, 79 N. E. 699.

35. Under the Missouri Laws 1901, p. 65, § 5859, a resolution for paving a street specifying the material for the pavement and that the paving is to be done in accordance with plans and specifications to be furnished by the city engineer is sufficient, although the plans and specifications are not on file when the resolution is passed. Bridewell v. Cockerell [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 22. A resolution of intention to macadamize a street held to be defective in not describing the work to be done, as required by the California statute (St. 1891, p. 196, c. 147, § 3), the kind or quality of rock to be used not being specified. Lambert v. Cummings, 2 Cal. App. 642, 84 P. 266. The same resolution held equally defective as to gutters for the same reason. Id.

Chicago, 225 Ill. 218, 80 N. E. 127. Resolutions for the curbing, grading, and paving, with asphalt of a street are sufficient though they do not specify the width of the roadway, give the thickness of the asphalt wearing surface, or name the places where the grading is to be done. Ogden, Sheldon & Co. v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 294, 79 N. E. 699. A resolution for a street improvement is sufficient if it identifies the improvement in a general way by reference to a previous resolution, although it does not include in the description the adjustment of sewers and other things provided for in the first resolution. Id. Resolutions held sufficiently specific. Gage v. Chicago, 225 Ill. 218, 80 N. E. 127.

40. Under the Kansas statute (Gen. St. 1901, § 1068), a resolution of the mayor and council for a street improvement in a city of the second class must be published in the official daily paper for five consecutive days. Clarke v. Lawrence [Kan.] 88 P. 735. In the publication of such resolution, the unauthorized placing of a headline which states that the first publication was made on a date one day earlier than it actually occurred, will not, in the absence of proof that any one interested was misled to his prejudice thereby, vitiated such publication. Id.

validity of a municipal improvement that an ordinance providing for it should be adopted by the legislative body of the municipality, which is usually the council.[41] Such an ordinance must conform to the municipal charter or the statute delegating authority to make the improvement, and must comply with all other statutory requirements,[42] and in St. Louis must not conflict with general ordinances.[43] In Illinois if there is, in the case of a street improvement, a willful or susbtantial varience between the resolutions of the board of local improvements or the estimate of the engineer, and the ordinance authorizing the improvement, the ordinance will be invalid.[44] In that state an ordinance for a local improvement must prescribe the nature, character, locality, and description, of such improvement.[45] An ordinance for a street improvement must give such a description of the improvement that an intelligent and correct estimate of its cost can be made, and, in order to do this, the ordinance must, either upon its face or by reference to some other ordinance, map, profile, or specifications, indicate the grade of the street which it proposes to improve.[46] The ordinance must also describe the location [47] and dimensions [48] of the

Where in order to construct a municipal street improvement it is necessary to lengthen existing culverts, such work must be provided for by a regular ordinance adopted by the council. It cannot be by resolution or instruction. Lindblad v. Normal, 224 Ill. 362, 79 N. E. 675.

42. Under sections 1 and 2 of Ordinance A 1080, p. 83, Code and Charter of the city of Spokane, the municipal council may by a two-thirds vote initiate proceedings for a sewer improvement without a petition therefor. City of Spokane v. Preston [Wash.] 89 P. 406. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 3567, two-thirds of the members of the council of a city of the fourth class concurring may order a street improvement without a petition from a majority of the property owners, but where there is such a petition the improvement must be ordered at one meeting by a majority yea and nay vote. City of Latonia v. Hedger [Ky.] 100 S. W. 267. Under the statutes of Illinois, and ordinance for a municipal improvement can be passed only by the vote of the majority of the members of the city council; a majority of a quorum is not sufficient for this purpose. McLean v. East St. Louis, 222 Ill. 510, 78 N. E. 815. Proceedings of a municipal council authorizing a sewer improvement held to show a substantial compliance with the South Dakota statute (Rev. Pol. Code, § 1209), requiring a yea and nay vote to be taken and an entry made in the record. City of Milbank v. Western Surety Co. [S. D.] 111 N. W. 561.

43. Under the charter of St. Louis, a special ordinance for a street improvement whose provisions as to width of roadway and sidewalk are in conflict with a prior general ordinance is void. Asphalt & Granitoid Const. Co. v. Hauessler [Mo.] 100 S. W. 14.

But it is not every subtle distinction in words that ingenious counsel can detect that constitutes a willful and substantial variance. Howe v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 95, 79 N. E. 421. Material and substantial variance as to portion of street to be paved, invalidating ordinance. Gardner v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 254, 79 N. E. 624. Cicero. 222 Ill. 379, 78 N. E. 830. Variance as to extent of sidewalks to be laid not material. Gage v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 602, 79 N. E. 294.

45. Local Improvement Act of 1897 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1897, p. 356), Chicago Union Trac. Co. v. Chicago, 222 Ill. 144, 78 N. E. 54. A substantial compliance with the terms of this statutory requirement is all that is necessary. Id. It is not essential that the details and all the particulars of the work should be stated. Id. Where the descriptive terms used in the ordinance have a well-known and established meaning, any apparent defect or omission in the description will be removed. Id.

46. Lindblad v. Normal, 224 Ill. 362, 79 N. E. 675. An ordinance for the paving and grading of a street in a city where the streets are universally known to be upon a practically dead level is sufficient if it establishes the grade at points where streets intersect, though it does not specifically state what the grade shall be at other points. Ogden, Sheldon & Co. v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 294, 79 N. E. 699.

47. Ordinance for a street improvement held not to be void for uncertainty as to where curbstones are to be placed. Beers v. Chicago, 225 Ill. 376, 80 N. E. 288. Ordinance for construction of sidewalk sufficiently certain as to the incline of the walk and its location with reference to the property line. Gage v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 602, 79 N. E. 294. A sidewalk ordinance which contains nothing from which it can be inferred, whether the walk is to adjoin the curb line or property line, is void for un-improvement, the kind [49] and amount [50] of material to be used, and, where catch basins are required, the number of them.[51] An ordinance for the construction of a sewer must specify its dimensions and the materials to be used.[52] The objection that it contains no provisions for excavating and filling is not available where from its terms it can readily be ascertained what amount of excavating and filling will be necessary.[53] In Missouri the failure of an ordinance for a local improvement to fix the time for the completion of the work does not invalidate the ordinance.[54] Whether or not ordinances for a street improvement may divide the distance to be improved, and provide for the improvement of each division by a separate contract, is to be determined from the terms of the statute authorizing the improvement.[55] An invalid section of an ordinance for a street improvement cannot be rejected and the remainder of the ordinance stand, unless such remainder would be complete authority under the municipal charter to construct the work provided for.[56] Whether a statute requiring publication of ordinances applies to an ordinance for a local improvement is to be determined from an interpretation of its terms.[57] A presumption exists in favor of the validity of an ordinance for a local improvement if properly adopted by municipal authority.[58]

The courts cannot interfere with the discretion vested in the municipal council

A paving ordinance held to be sufficiently definite as to the height of the curb at alley intersections. Gage v. Chicago, 225 Ill. 135, 80 N. E. 86. An ordinance for a street improvement sufficiently specifying the dimensions of the foundation of cinders required to be placed under the combined curb and gutter and gutter flags. Uhlich's Estate v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 402, 79 N. E. 598.

49. Paving ordinance meeting requirements of Ohio statute, Municipal Code, § 55 (Rev. St. 1906, § 1536—215), that ordinance shall contain a statement of the general nature of the improvement and the character of the materials which may be bid upon therefor. Emmert v. Elyria, 74 Ohio St. 185, 78 N. E. 269. In a paving ordinance the term "asphaltic cement," as descriptive of one of the ingredients of the pavement, was held to be sufficiently certain under the Illinois statute, and evidence that such term had a well understood meaning among contractors and persons familiar with the construction of asphalt pavements was held competent to explain its meaning in such ordinance. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 37, 79 N. E. 67; Id., 222 Ill. 144, 78 N. E. 54.

50. Ordinance for street improvement sufficiently certain as to amount of granite and gravel to be used. Gardner v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 254, 79 N. E. 624.

51. Ordinance for street improvement ambiguous and uncertain as to the number of catch-basins to be used. Gardner v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 254, 79 N. E. 624.

52. Under Missouri statute, Rev. St. 1899, § 5848 (Am. St. 1906, p. 2956), requiring that sewers "shall be of such dimensions and materials as may have been prescribed by ordinance," an ordinance for the construction of a sewer held to be sufficiently specific as to dimensions and materials. City of Joplin v. Hollingshead [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 506. Ordinance for sewer improvement from which the thickness of the house slants to be used in the improvement sufficiently appears. Sheedy v. Chicago, 221 Ill. 111, 77 N. E. 539.

55. Such ordinances following the recommendations of the board of public works held valid under the provisions of a municipal charter. Geiwitz v. Landis [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 154.

56. Ramsey v. Field, 115 Mo. App. 620, 92 S. W. 350. A municipal ordinance authorizing the construction of a sewer is not rendered invalid by the fact that it attempts, without authority, to fix the amounts to be assessed on abutting property, if after eliminating such provision, it contains the essentials of a complete ordinance for the purpose for which it is enacted. In re Wheeler Ave. Sewer, 214 Pa. 504, 63 A. 894.

57. Section 3487, Ky. St. 1903, relating to the publication of ordinances does not apply to an ordinance for a street improvement passed, without petition, by a two-thirds majority of the council of a city of the fourth class. City of Latonia v. Hedger [Ky.] 100 S. W. 267.

58. City of Belleville v. Herzler, 225 Ill. 404, 80 N. E. 269. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed from an ordinance fixing a grade with reference to the town datum that such datum has theretofore been established by the municipality, and it is not essential in making out a prima facie case where it is necessary to show the grade of the street or improvement, and the ordinance fixing that grade refers to town datum to introduce the ordinace establishing the town datum. Chicago Consol. Trac. Co. v. Oak Park, 225 Ill. 9, 80 N. E. 4

unless the ordinance is so unreasonable and oppressive as to render it void.[59] Some of the peculiar provisions of ordinances relating to street improvements have received interpretation in the cases cited.[60]

In some states authority in relation to public improvements is conferred on public boards of commissioners,[61] and the qualifications of such commissioners, and the performance of certain conditions as a prerequisite to their right to act as such, prescribed.[62] In Arkansas the order of a county court forming a levee district regular on its face, and containing all the necessary jurisdictional recitals is prima facie sufficient to prove that the district was legally established.[63]

(§ 4) C. Notice and hearing.[64]—The statutes generally provide that notice shall be given of a contemplated local improvement. It is sometimes required in the case of a street improvement, to be posted along the line of the contemplated work.[65] Usually it is required to state the nature and location of the improvement and to inform landowners as to what premises will be affected by it.[66] Sometimes it is provided that it shall not be permissible to order the work done until after the expiration of a prescribed number of days after publication of notice,[67] and a

Unless it is shown that the municipal council acted in bad faith and not for the best interests of the public, an ordinance for a street improvement will be upheld although another grade than that established might have been better. City of Belleville v. Herzler, 225 Ill. 404, 80 N. E. 269. Evidence held not to warrant the court in holding an ordinance for a street improvement void for unreasonableness. City of Belleville v. Pfingsten, 225 Ill. 293, 80 N. E. 266; City of Belleville v. Herzler, 225 Ill. 404, 80 N. E. 269. An ordinance for the construction of a pumping station and system of sewers held to be void on the ground of unreasonableness. Snydacker v. West Hammond, 225 Ill. 154, 80 N. E. 93.

60. Terms of ordinance for street improvement construed and held not to provide for the construction of a curb on the west side of a certain street mentioned therein. Chicago Consol. Trac. Co. v. Oak Park, 225 Ill. 9, 80 N. E. 42. Under an ordinance for a street improvement which fixes the grade of the street at intersections, the grades at the intermediate points will be a line drawn from the grade fixed at one intersection to the grade fixed at another intersection; that is the grade is to be fixed on a line which is the shortest distance between the two points. Lindblad v. Normal, 224 Ill. 362, 79 N. E. 675. Language of an ordinance for a street improvement held to be too general to make a profile referred to in the prior resolution of the board of public improvements a part of the ordinance. Id.

61. Decision of board of commissioners that jurisdiction has attached to it of proceedings for the construction of a gravel road, under the Indiana statute, Acts 1903, p. 255, c. 145, conclusive. Todd v. Crail [Ind.] 77 N. E. 402. Where a board of public works has authority to open streets and to obtain the right of way for a sewer, the fact that it adopts a resolution for the building of a sewer in a proposed street not yet opened is a mere irregularity of which no property owner can complain, where the street is regularly opened before the final hearing. Edwards v. Cooper [Ind.] 79 N. E. 1047.

62. Under the Michigan statute (Comp. Laws, § 4317), a county road commissioner is not disqualified from acting as a special county drain commissioner. Auditor General v. Bolt [Mich.] 111 N. W. 74. Under the Michigan statutes, a special drain commissioner is not required to file an oath of office, but only a bond. Id.

65. The California Street Improvement Act (St. 1891, p. 196, c. 147, § 3), which provides that notices of a contemplated improvement shall be "posted along the line of said contemplated work or improvement at not more than one hundred feet in distance apart, requires notices not more than 100 feet longitudinally along the line of the improvement; but if the notices are not more than 100 feet apart, measuring the distance along the center of the improvement, the statute is complied with, it matters not upon which side of such center line the notices are actually posted. Pepper v. Neiman [Cal. App.] 87 P. 286.

66. Notice required to be given by the Illinois statute, Local Improvement Act, § 34 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 24, § 540), of the passage of an ordinance for local improvements, held sufficient to inform the owner or occupant of the nature of the improvement and of the premises affected by the ordinance. Gage v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 602, 79 N. E. 294. Petition and notice in proceedings for the construction of a ditch, sufficiently describing the proposed beginning and route of the ditch, to give the court jurisdiction and to put the landowners upon notice of the proceedings. Ritter v. Drainage Dist. [Ark.] 94 S. W. 711.

67. Under the California statute (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153), providing that at the expiration of twenty days after the expiration of the time of publication of notice of intention to have street improvement work done, a municipal council shall have jurisdiction to order the work done, an ordinance ordering the work done passed prior to the expiration of such twenty days is without reasonable time should be allowed property owners to do the work before doing it at their expense.[68] A public hearing of objections by interested landowners is often required. In Illinois the board of local improvements, in the resolution for a proposed improvement, are required to fix the time and place for such hearing.[69] Whether after such public hearing it is permissible to make changes in the improvement or additions thereto without a further hearing is to be determined from the particular statute involved.[70]

(§ 4) D. Protests and remonstrances.[71]—Protests and remonstrances against the proposed improvement are governed by the peculiar provisions of the statutes in the several states.[72]

(§ 4) E. Estimates of cost.[73]—It is perhaps a universal requirement that an estimate of the cost of the improvement shall be made by the municipal engineer or some other officer authorized to make it.[74] An estimate of the cost of a local improvement should be sufficiently itemized and so specific as to give the property owners a general idea of what it is estimated the substantial component elements of the improvement will cost.[75] In Illinois when an improvement consists of substantially different parts or elements, the estimate must state each part or element separately, with the cost of each in separate items.[76] jurisdiction and void, though it is not signed by the mayor and published until after the expiration of the twenty days. Mulberry v. O'Dea [Cal. App.] 88 P. 367.

68. Thirty days for sidewalk held too little. Angle v. Stroudsbury Borough, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 601.

69. It is essential that the requirement of the Illinois local improvement act, that the board of local improvements must, in the resolution for a proposed improvement, fix the time and place for a public hearing shall be complied with, notwithstanding the improvement might be inaugurated by the board in any event. Lyman v. Cicero, 222 Ill. 379, 78 N. E. 830. A resolution by the board of local improvements fixing a day for a public hearing for a proposed improvement, but not fixing the hour or place of hearing, is not a compliance with the Illinois local improvement act, and an attempt by the clerk in notices of such hearing to fix the time and place would be ineffectual to cure such defect. Id.

70. Under the Indiana statute (Acts 1901, p. 608, c. 262), relating to municipal improvements, it is lawful for the board of public works, after the general hearing on a resolution to construct a district sewer has been had, to modify the resolution by adding a branch of the proposed work, without giving a further hearing after the modification, on the character of the work proposed. Edwards v. Cooper [Ind.] 79 N. E. 1047.

72. In Kansas, in cities of the second class, after a resolution for a street improvement has been published, the mayor and council have power to cause the improvement to be made, unless a majority of the resident property owners liable to taxation for such improvement shall, within twenty days of the last publication, file with the city clerk their protest in writing against the improvement. Gen. St. 1901, § 1068. Clarke v. Lawrence [Kan.] 88 P. 735. Under the Missouri Laws 1901, p. 65, § 5859, it is sufficient if plans and specifications for a street improvement are prepared and accessible to the property owners in time for inspection and protest, although they are not marked "filed," and are not actually filed until after the publication of the resolution for the improvement. Bridewell v. Cockerell [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 22. In a proceeding under Indiana Acts 1903, p. 261, c. 145, for the improvement of a highway, the decision of the board of commissioners upon certain causes of remonstrance is final, and no appeal lies therefrom. Kemp v. Goodnight [Ind.] 80 N. E. 160.

73. See 6 C. L. 1152.

74. Under the Nebraska Laws 1879, p. 197, § 20, an estimate of the cost of a municipal improvement must be made and submitted to the city council by the city engineer before a contract for such improvement is let. The requirement of this statute is mandatory. Murphy v. Plattsmouth [Neb.] 110 N. W. 749. Where it is provided that estimates of the cost of an improvement may be made by the city engineer or other proper officer, such estimates may be made by any officer or officers the municipal council selects. City of Fayette v. Rich [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 8.

75. Doran v. Murphysboro, 225 Ill. 514, 80 N. E. 323. Estimate held fatally defective. Id. Estimate of cost of a local improvement, calling for a special assessment, held not to be open to the objection that it contained items of expense which were required to be paid by the city out of the general fund. Gage v. Chicago, 225 Ill. 218, 80 N. E. 127. The engineer's estimate of the cost of a street improvement stated that it included labor, material, "and all the other expenses attending the same, as provided by law." It was itemized, and among the items was not included the making and levying the assessment, the letting and executing the contract, the making and returning the assessment roll, or the advertising for bids. It was held that the estimate was unobjectionable. Id., 223 Ill. 602, 79 N. E. 294.

76. Lyman v. Cicero, 222 Ill. 379, 78 N. E. 830. Cost of improvement not properly itemized. Id.

(§ 4) F. Approval and acceptance of work.[77]—It is often provided by statute or contract how work shall be inspected, accepted and approved, before the public liability is mature,[78] and until it is done, bonds issued in payment should not be delivered.[79] An engineer whose decision is made final is not thereby inhibited from taking counsel thereto provided the decision made is his own.[80]

(§ 4) G. Curative legislation and ratification.[81]

§ 5. Proposals, contracts and bonds. Advertisements, bids, and awarding of contract.[82]—Most public improvement statutes contain the requirement that there shall be competitive bidding for the contract for the work. This requirement does not always extend to every item of the work.[83] A provision that the public officers "may" advertise does not require them to do so,[84] and, in rejecting all bids and negotiating new contracts privately at a lower figure, the taxpayers are not damnified.[85] The failure to advertise renders the contract void only when advertisement is a prerequisite to power to let the contract.[86] After the abandonment of a contract the municipality may complete the work without again advertising for bids.[87] Notice of the letting of the contract must be published in the manner prescribed by statute,[88] and the advertising must be done and the award made by the municipal council or other body or officer authorized.[89] In the absence of a statutory requirement to that effect a municipal council need not fix the time at which bids will be received or opened.[90] Generally as a prerequisite to the bidding it is required that plans and specifications of the improvement shall be made and filed.[91] The specifi-

88. Under the Iowa statute, Code, § 813, providing for two publications of notice of the letting of bids for contracts for street and sewer improvements, each publication must be at least ten days before the day fixed for opening the bids and awarding the contract. Comstock v. Eagle Grove City [Iowa] 111 N. W. 51. Notice of the letting of a contract for a street improvement held sufficient under the Indiana statute, Acts 1901, p. 534, c. 231, § 1, requiring the common council to give notice of the letting of such contracts by three weeks publication in a newspaper. Shirk v. Huff [Ind.] 78 N. E. 242.

89. The New Jersey statute, Act March 22, 1900 (P. L. p. 190), makes the county building commission created by it agents of the county to award a contract for the building of a county courthouse, and, therefore, a contract awarded by such commission is binding on the county. Herman v. Essex County Chosen Freeholders [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 742. Where authority is vested in a municipal council to advertise for bids and let a contract for a public improvement, the action of the council in directing a committee to advertise for bids is not a delegation of its powers, the act being in no sense legislative. City of Fayette v. Rich [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 8. But it cannot in such case delegate to the committee power to make the contract. Id. But this objection cannot be raised where no contract was made by the committee and the council subsequently directed the work to be done by the committee at the expense of the municipality. Id.

90. Under the California Street Improvement Act, § 5 (St. 1891, p. 199), the municipal council is not required to limit the time within which proposals for street improvements may be delivered to its clerk, or to fix the day or hour at which it will open or consider them; nor is it required to direct the clerk to designate in his notice inviting such proposals any day or hour at which they shall be delivered to him. Beckett v. Morse [Cal. App.] 87 P. 408.

91. In Ohio bridges cannot be contracted for and constructed without any plans and specifications being prepared therefor, and an averment in an action by the county that a contract was entered into without proposals being solicited for a structure in accordance with any plans whatever, and that no plans were kept on file with the county auditor, is therefore good against a motion to strike out. State v. Huston, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 423. The Missouri Laws 1901, p. 65, § 5859, does not require that plans and specifications for a street improvement shall be cations should be clear enough to enable bidders to bid intelligently.[92] It is not always essential that bids for the whole work be invited.[93]

It is a general rule that where a statute requires competition in the letting of contracts, any provision contained in an ordinance therefor which tends to prevent or destract competition among persons who may desire to become bidders is in contravention of the statute and therefore illegal.[94] Any provision included in the bids and carried into the contract which manifestly increases the amount of the bids and prevents fair and reasonable competition will render the contract void,[95] but adding conditions to safeguard and guarantee the work though tending to a higher contract price is not for that reason a burden on free and fair competition.[96] To secure fair competition and avoid extravagance the statutes usually provide that the contract shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder. In determining whether a letting is violative of such a provision the terms of the statute and the facts of the particular case must be considered.[97] Any material departure in the contract awarded from the terms and conditions upon which the bidding was had is in evasion of such a requirement.[98] In Ohio, South Carolina, and Iowa it has been held that it is not a on file any specified number of days before the making of the contract for the work. Bridewell v. Cockerell [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 22.

92. Where the work is of the character involved in the building of an extensive municipal waterworks plant, it is not necessary that the specifications to be submitted to the bidders should go into any greater detail than is required to make the matter intelligent to persons competent to do the work and furnish the materials. Yaryan v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 1. Specifications for contract held not to be too vague and indefinite in the description of the materials, manner, and extent of the work to admit of competitive bidding. Jaicks v. Merrill [Mo.] 98 S. W. 753.

93. It is proper for aqueduct commissioners charged with the construction of dams and reservoirs to ask for bids at unit prices for doing the work and furnishing the materials. Walter v. McClellan, 113 App. Div. 295, 99 N. Y. S. 78.

94. Siegel v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 428, 79 N. E. 280.

95. As there was no authority under the Iowa statute, Acts 30th, General Assembly, p. 61, c. 68, for the boards of supervisors of counties in letting contracts for drains to provide that the contractors should purchase bonds to provide for the preliminary expenses, and for the rights of way, and for the inclusion of this matter in the bids, such requirement, as it manifestly increased the amount of the bids and prevented fair and reasonable competition, was held to be sufficient ground, in the absence of other matters, to avoid the contract. Wood v. Hall [Iowa] 110 N. W. 270. But in a suit in equity by taxpayers to annul such contracts on this ground, it was held that under all the circumstances of the case an estoppel arose against plaintiffs. Id. When a contract for a public improvement is void for the reason that no opportunity is given therein for free competition in the purchase of materials used, the whole proceedings are void. National Surety Co. v. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. [Kan.] 84 P. 103.

96. Dillingham v. Spartanburg [S. C.] 56 S. E. 381. Provisions for indemnity bond and for withholding ten per cent. of the compensation for a year are not invalid as unduly limiting competition to those financially able to perform them. Id.

See, also, ante, Public Contracts, 8 C. L. 1473.

97. Where a municipal ordinance provides for the letting of a contract to the lowest and best bidder, the municipality is bound to follow that method although the statute does not in express terms make that method exclusive. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 120 Mo. App. 215, 96 S. W. 701. The provision of section 143 of the Municipal Code that the board of public service shall make a contract with the lowest and best bidder, or may reject any and all bids, does not limit the board to a mathematical computation as to who is the lowest responsible bidder, but permits the board to go beyond the price bid and the character of the bidder and to accept the best proposition offered, considering quality, feasibility, and efficiency of the thing to be furnished, the qualifications and responsibility of the bidder, and the price proposed in view of all the other considerations. Yaryan v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 1. A contract made by a city for the construction of public improvements therein will not be held void because in violation of the Kansas statute, Gen. St. 1901, § 747, requiring such contracts to be let to the lowest responsible bidder unless it be shown that the contract was in some way the result of acts done which are prohibited by the statute. American Bonding Co. v. Dickey [Kan.] 88 P. 66. The discretion of the board of public service is not to be interfered with in the matter of awarding the contract to another than the lowest bidder except for fraud or collusion. Scott v. Hamilton, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 1.

98. Murphy v. Plattsmouth [Neb.] 110 N. W. 749. Where a statute provides that an estimate by the city engineer of the cost of a municipal improvement shall be published with the advertisement for bids for making such improvement, and that no contract shall be let for a price exceeding such estimate, the inhibition against letting a contract at a price in excess of the estimate violation of such requirement to prescribe the use in the improvement of a patented material.[99] But in Illinois a contrary decision has been reached.[1] In Missouri and Kansas it has been held that such requirement is violated by prescribing the use of a brick manufactured by a certain company in the paving of streets.[2] But it is not a violation of such a requirement to insert in the contract for the improvement a provision for compensation for extra work, where such provision is known to all bidders.[3] The waiver by the lowest bidder of a provision in the bid for extra compensation being for the benefit of the property owners and not amounting to the making of a new contract without bids cannot be objected to on that ground.[4] Where officers charged with the construction of a public work are authorized to accept the bid therefor "which will in their judgment best secure the efficient performance of the work," they are not bound to let the contract to the lowest bidder.[5] Where in the award fraud or collusion are shown the contract is void.[6] Some statutes cannot be evaded by raising the estimate after the bids have been made and opened. Id. But putting several kinds of paving materials upon which bids had been made in competition with each other, and after bids were opened selecting one of the materials and awarding the contract to the lowest responsible bidder upon that kind of material, is not a violation of a municipal charter providing that all bids for work shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, even though a bid had been filed on some other material which was lower than the lowest responsible bid on the selected material. City of Baltimore v. Flack [Md.] 64 A. 702. Where the charter and an ordinance of a municipality require contracts for street improvements to be let on a bid, another charter provision authorizing the council to stop any local improvement and change the plans thereof does not confer the power to dispense with the formalities of a new contract after a plan has been changed. Auditor General v. Stoddard [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1062, 110 N. W. 944.

99. In the exercise of a sound discretion, it is competent for the proper city authorities, in advertising for bids for a street improvement, to call for material which is covered or the assembling of which is covered by patents. Holbrook v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 31. The Iowa statute, Code, § 813, requiring contracts for street improvements to be let to the lowest responsible bidder, is not violated where a contract is let to such bidder, though the resolution of the municipal council and the advertisement for bids require a patented material to be used in the improvement. Saunders v. Iowa City [Iowa] 111 N. W. 529. Use of patented article is not burden on competition. Dillingham v. Spartanburg [S. C.] 56 S. E. 381.

1. Under the Illinois Local Improvement Act, §§ 74, 76 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 24, §§ 580, 582), a patented material which can be obtained from but one person cannot be lawfully prescribed by an ordinance providing for the construction of an improvement by special assessment as the effect thereof would be to stifle competition. Siegel v. Chicago, 223 Ill. 428, 79 N. E. 280.

Evidence held to show that asphalt is not a patented article, and not under the exclusive control of any company or trust; and, while some of the machinery used by certain companies is patented, there is other machinery which is not patented, and asphalt material can be procured from other companies. Scott v. Hamilton, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 1.

2. Where a municipal charter requires contracts for municipal improvements to be let to the lowest and best bidder, an ordinance and provision of the board of public works requiring that in a street improvement vitrified brick manufactured by a certain company shall be used, such brick being a common article of manufacture and sale, and a contract for the improvement embodying such requirement, are void. Curtice v. Schmidt [Mo.] 101 S. W. 61. Where a contract for street paving provides that brick of a particular brand manufactured and sold by but one company shall be used, and other kinds of brick equally good for the purpose are made, and sold by other companies, the contract is void under the Kansas statute, Gen. St. 1901, § 747, requiring such contracts to be let to the lowest bidder, and contrary to public policy in restricting and preventing free competition. National Surety Co. v. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. [Kan.] 84 P. 1034.

3. So held where such provision was inserted in a contract for the construction of a reservoir. Clark & Sons Co. v. Pittsburg [Pa.] 66 A. 154.

4. Wood v. Hall [Iowa] 110 N. W. 270.

5. Walter v. McClellan, 113 App. Div. 295, 99 N. Y. S. 78. Where such authority is conferred upon aqueduct commissioners charged with the construction of reservoirs and dams, they may let the contract for constructing a dam to one whose bid is considerably higher than that of the lowest bidder where time of completion is essential to be considered and the engineers reported in favor of the contractors to whom the award is made, especially where their bid is not much higher than the average bid, is under the estimate of the chief engineer, and considerably less than the highest bid. Id.

6. Where a contract for street lighting is let to the lowest responsible bidder, the fact that there were only three bidders and that the company bidding highest was controlled by the same interests as the company to whom the contract was awarded does not show fraud and collusion rendering the contract void. Sawyer v. Pittsburg [Pa.] 66 A. 86.

require bidders to accompany their bids with an affidavit of noncollusion and a bond for faithful performance.[7]

Limitations on official power to contract are chargeable to all persons and a contract exceeding them though otherwise good is not binding.[8] Where a municipal council has limited the amount for which contracts for an improvement will be let to the sum immediately available for the purpose, though a much larger sum will eventually be needed to complete the improvement, the letting of a contract for part of the improvement within that limitation it not an abuse of power.[9] Under some of the statutes before a contract is made or expenditures incurred an appropriation must be made,[10] or a certificate of the auditor of the county or municipality,[11] or a resolution of the commissioners of the sinking fund,[12] is required; or it is provided that the contract shall be approved by the city attorney.[13] Where a statute which provides that before a contract is let certain requirements shall be performed is mandatory, a contract made without complying with such requirements is void.[14] Long delay in letting the contract does not necessarily affect the power to contract.[15] A contract will not be enjoined on the ground that it was imprudently let where no actual fraud is shown, and there is a conflict of evidence as to whether the price at 7. That part of § 4 of the Indiana Act of Feb. 27, 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 171, c. 110), which requires an affidavit of noncollusion and bond from bidders for the construction of "county work," is void because the subject thereof is not expressed in the title as required by the constitution of the state. State v. Dorsey [Ind.] 78 N. E. 843. A free gravel road is a county work within meaning of such a statute. Id. To satisfy a provision in a municipal charter requiring each bid for a public improvement to have thereon the affidavit of the bidder that such bid is genuine and not collusive or sham, in a case where a bid is made by several persons, there must be an affidavit by each of them. The affidavit in this case was held not to meet the requirement of the charter in this respect and to be otherwise defective. Flinn v. Strauss [Cal. App.] 87 P. 414.

9. Yaryan v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 1.

10. In Pennsylvania a prior appropriation by a city of the third class is essential to every contract entered into by it in which "the appropriation of money" is involved, and this rule applies to a contract for furnishing electric lights. Therefore the controller of such a city cannot be compelled by mandamus to certify such a contract and countersign warrants drawn for light furnished under it, in the absence of such prior appropriation. Commonwealth v. Foster [Pa.] 64 A. 368.

11. In an action brought by a prosecuting attorney, under Rev. St. § 1277, to recover back money paid out on an illegal county bridge contract, a motion to strike out will not lie as to an averment that there was no certificate of the county auditor as required by the Burns Law that the money required for payment for this bridge was in the bridge fund, or levied, or in process of collection. State v. Huston, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 423. Where the facts pleaded show good faith in all that was done, failure, through inadvertance, to file an auditor's certificate that the money needed to carry out the contract for a county bridge is in the treasury, as required by Rev. St. § 2834b, does not necessarily render the contract so void that no rights or liabilities can grow out of the transaction; but where the contract has been repudiated, and there is no fraud claimed, and effort is being made to place the parties as nearly as possible in statu quo, the effort should be forwarded by the courts. State v. Fronizer, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 216, afg. 3 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 303. Sections 45 and 45a of the Municipal Code of Ohio (Rev. St. 1906 [Bates' 5th Ed.] §§ 1536—205, 1536—205a), providing that no contract involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into unless the auditor of the corporation shall certify to the council certain facts, do not apply to contracts for street improvements when bonds have been authorized by the municipality to be issued to pay the entire estimated cost and expense of the improvement. Emmert v. Elyria, 74 Ohio St. 185, 78 N. E. 269.

12. The armory board of New York city, under Laws 1898, p. 563, c. 212, § 134, had no power to incur any indebtedness for architect's fees which the city would have been liable to pay until it had been authorized to do so by resolution of the commissioners of the sinking fund. Horgan v. New York, 100 N. Y. S. 68.

13. Where a statute providing that a contract for a municipal improvement shall be approved by the city attorney does not provide that the contract shall be void in case his approval is not indorsed thereon, the provision may be regarded as directory and not mandatory. City of Milbank v. Western Surety Co. [S. D.] 111 N. W. 561.

14. So held where the requirement was that an estimate of the cost of a municipal improvement should be made and submitted to the city council by the city engineer. Murphy v. Plattsmouth [Neb.] 110 N. W. 749.

15. Long delay in letting a contract for a street improvement, under the facts disclosed, held not to affect the power to contract or the right of the contractor to recover the amount due him on the completion of the contract. Jaicks v. Middlesex Inv. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 759.

which it was let was extravagant.[16] The commissioner of public works in Chicago can not alter a contract made with the city.[17]

By accepting a formal contract substantially departing from the preliminary bids, and acceptance, the contractor is bound.[18]

Form of contract.—It is not necessary that a contract let by an armory board in New York for the preparation of plans and specifications for the erection of a proposed armory should be in writing.[19]

Particular contract provisions.[20]—Where a contract for a municipal improvement is made on behalf of a city by an officer authorized to do so, it must show on its face that it is the contract of the city.[21] In determining whether a contract for a public improvement is valid, regard must be had to the terms of the statute and ordinance, under which it is made and to the facts of the particular case.[22] In the particulars that contracts for municipal improvements are out of harmony with the ordinances authorizing them, the contracts must yield.[23] Of course the contract must not violate any constitutional inhibition,[24] nor must its terms be violative of a restraining injunction.[25] A provision in a contract for the construction of a municipal improvement, imposing conditions on the contractor that will naturally tend to increase the cost of the work, will render the contract void.[26] Under some circumstances, as incident to the subject-matter of a contract, the work may be extended beyond what is expressly covered by its terms.[27] But ordinarily the express

21. A contract for a street improvement, between "W. S. Dehoney, mayor of the city of Frankfort, party of the first part, and W. F. Brawner, party of the second part." signed: "City of Frankfort, by W. S. Dehoney, Mayor," sufficiently shows that it is the contract of the city, and it is valid under the Kentucky statute, Ky. St. 1903, § 3450. Lindsey v. Brawner, 29 Ky. L. R. 1236, 97 S. W. 1.
22. Contracts for street improvements held to come within the requirements of the Iowa statute, Code, § 830, relating to the payment for such improvements from the city improvement fund. Corey v. Ft. Dodge [Iowa] 111 N. W. 6. A provision in a contract for a drainage improvement requiring the contractor to take drainage bonds of two counties in payment for his work will not avoid the contract where the proceedings of the boards of supervisors show that the bonds were to be issued in accordance with the provisions of the Iowa statute, Acts 30th General Assembly, p. 61, c. 68. Wood v. Hall [Iowa] 110 N. W. 270. A contract for a public improvement which provides that the vouchers to be issued in payment therefor shall bear interest, both principal and interest to be paid when collected by the city from the property owners, is not void, and its enforcement cannot be avoided on the ground that payment of interest on assessments cannot legally be required of property holders where such interest has been paid by them voluntarily under a mistake as to their legal rights. City of Chicago v. McGovern, 226 Ill. 403, 80 N. E. 895.
23. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 120 Mo. App. 215, 96 S. W. 701. But the failure to make special mention of manholes and lampholes in a sewer in the resolution of intent and the notice to bidders will not destroy the effectiveness of a contract for the construction of the sewer providing for such holes. Comstock v. Eagle Grove City [Iowa] 111 N. W. 51.
24. Contracts for street improvements made under a statute providing therefor, the cost of which is to be assessed against the abutting property and payment therefor made by delivery to the contractor the assessment certificates with a special provision specifying the manner in which probable deficiencies shall be raised, do not create a municipal indebtedness within the meaning of a constitutional provision limiting municipal indebtedness. Corey v. Ft. Dodge [Iowa] 111 N. W. 6.
25. A temporary injunction restraining a municipality from entering into any contract for street improvements involving the expenditure of any current funds of the municipality, except such as can be lawfully raised by special assessments upon property benefited by such improvements other than property belonging to the municipality, is not violated by a contract providing that the work shall be paid for out of money lawfully raised by special assessment upon real estate and property benefited by the improvement other than real estate belonging to the municipality. City of Mankato v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 329.
26. Mulberry v. O'Dea [Cal. App.] 88 P. 367. See, also, ante, this section. Such a provision is one imposing upon the contractor liability for all loss or damage arising from the nature of the work, or from any unforeseen obstruction or difficulties which may be encountered in the prosecution of the same, or from the action of the elements, or from any encumbrances on the lines of the work, or from any act or omission on the part of the contractor, or any person or agent employed by him, not authorized by the government. Id.
27. In this case the city surveyor had au-terms of the contract govern in determining what is covered by it, and compensation cannot be recovered under it for work not covered by such terms.[28] Where specifications are referred to in a contract for a street improvement between owners of frontage and a contractor, for a particular specified purpose, they must be treated as irrelevant for any other purpose.[29] Contract for street improvements usually contain a guaranty of the material and workmanship and sometimes the further guaranty that the street shall be kept in repair for a time specified. Under such a provision the contractor is only obligated for such repairs as are made necessary by the defectiveness of the work or materials,[30] and such provisions do not impose an unauthorized burden on the abutters.[31] It is held that such a provision is void if without sanction in the statutes or ordinances.[32] Where a contractor for a street improvement agrees to accept payment of deficiencies between the amount of a special assessment and the contract price out of a specified fund, it will be presumed that he has in mind a payment in the manner and upon the terms which the law authorizes.[33] Contracts for public improvements sometimes provide that the contractor may, under certain contingencies, be turned off the work before its completion.[34] Notices of the maturity of payments under a contract for a street improve-thority to so extend a street cleaning contract. Mott v. Utica, 100 N. Y. S. 150.

28. Reservation in a contract for a street improvement held not to extend the power to enlarge the contract so as to include additional work, although only a mathematical calculation was required to determine the cost of such additional work at the rate provided for in the contract. Auditor General v. Stoddard [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1062, 110 N. W. 944. Where a bid for the excavation of a borough sewer and the contract executed in conformity therewith and approved by the borough council contain no reference to rock excavation, the contractor cannot recover additional compensation for rock excavation, although he was induced to execute the contract by the assurances of the borough engineer that rock excavation would be paid for at the established and usual rate. Farrell v. Coatesville Borough, 214 Pa. 296, 63 A. 742.

29. Moreing v. Weber [Cal. App.] 84 P. 220.

30. Lindsey v. Brawner, 29 Ky. L. R. 1236, 97 S. W. 1. An agreement to furnish brick of such a quality that the pavement constructed of them will require no repairs on account of defective brick for a period of five years after its completion is a guarantee of the character and quality of the brick rather than an agreement to maintain the pavement and keep it in repair for a certain period. City of New Haven v. Eastern Pav. Brick Co., 78 Conn. 689, 63 A. 517. Provision in contract to furnish paving brick to a municipality that if within a certain period any portion of the pavements, because of any broken or worn bricks caused by the defective brick used, should in the opinion of the director of public works require repairs, that then the director should notify the contractor, construed. Id.

31. A contract for the improvement of a street requiring the contractor to keep the same in repair for a specified time is not invalid as imposing on abutting owners the costs of repair when the condition does not impose on the contractor any greater burden than using good material and doing the work in an honest and faithful manner. Morton v. Sullivan, 29 Ky. L. R. 943, 96 S. W. 807. Where a contract provides that the street improvements shall be of good workmanship and quality and imposes on the contractor the burden of keeping the pavement in repair for a specified time, the two clauses are to be considered as affording a remedy for the contractor's failure to construct as agreed and hence not imposing on the abutting owner cost of repairs. Lindsey v. Brawner, 29 Ky. L. R. 1236, 97 S. W. 1.

32. Where neither the statute nor the ordinance under which a street improvement is made authorizes any contract to be made for future maintenance, or any appropriation of the money to be raised by the sale of bonds to the payment of any such contract, an agreement for future maintenance cannot be incorporated in the contract for the improvement. City Council of Montgomery v. Barnett [Ala.] 43 So. 92.

33. Corey v. Ft. Dodge [Iowa] 111 N. W. 6. A contract providing for the payment of the amount due for a street improvement in excess of the amount raised by special assessment out of the "paving fund," and another contract providing for the payment of such excess out of the "general paving fund," refer to the fund specified in the Iowa Code, §§ 830, 894, the fund referred to in both sections of the code being the same. 34. Contract for the construction of a reservoir for a municipality conferring upon the director of public works the right under certain contingencies to notify the contractor to discontinue the work and giving the municipality the right to have the work completed by another in accordance with the terms of the contract. Clark & Sons Co. v. Pittsburgh, 146 F. 441. An arbitration clause in a contract for building a reservoir for a municipality held not applicable where the contractor was turned off the work and prevented from completing it by the municipality, under another clause in the contract reserving that right to the municipality, the election to act under the latter clause being a waiver by the municipality of its right to arbitration. Id. Provision in a contract for the construction of a reservoir for a municipality for a final estimate

ment between the owners of frontage and a contractor sent to the signers of the contract cannot affect the contract if the intention of the parties appears clearly and unmistakably from its terms.[35] Some of the peculiar provisions of contracts for public works and improvements have received the interpretation of the courts.[36]

Performance of contract.[37]—The completed work must conform to the initial resolution for the improvement [38] and to the contract therefor. Where the contractor fails in a substantial degree to comply with his contract, the municipality may reject the work and refuse to make payment therefor.[39] A contract exactitude in upon the completion of the work, and as to the mode and time of payment for the work, held not applicable where the contractor was turned off the work and prevented from completing it, under a right reserved to the municipality under another clause in the contract. Id. Where a contractor for a municipal work is turned off the work before its completion, under a right reserved to the municipality in the contract, it is not incumbent upon him to show what it cost the city to complete the work in order to fix any balance due him. In such case the evidence of increased cost, if there was any, is peculiarly within the knowledge of the municipality, and such increase is a matter of affirmative defense. Id.

35. Moreing v. Weber [Cal. App.] 84 P. 220.

36. Liability for cost of improvement: Under an ordinance for a street improvement and a contract executed in pursuance thereof, it was held that the municipality was liable for the cost of the improvement unless it had authority to bind and had bound the abutting property for the cost thereof. Terrell v. Paducah, 28 Ky. L. R. 1237, 92 S. W. 310. Where a municipality passes an ordinance for a street improvement, creates an assessment district, lets a contract in which it agrees to levy a special assessment, issues warrants on the special fund, and the abutting property owners pay the larger part of the assessments, no general liability will arise against the municipality compelling it to issue general fund warrants. State v. Moss [Wash.] 86 P. 1129.

Agreement to receive special assessment certificates in part payment: Rights of contractor for a street improvement who has contracted to receive special assessment certificates in part payment, under the terms of the contract, and the provisions of the municipal charter, and of the Wisconsin statute, Rev. St. 1898, § 1210d, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 432, c. 276. Dahlman v. Milwaukee [Wis.] 110 N. W. 483.

Width of driveway: Where an ordinance and contract for a street improvement provides that the driveway shall be fifty feet in width, it means fifty feet between the curbing and not fifty feet including the curbing. Otter v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1157, 96 S. W. 862.

Completion of contract by sureties of contractor, under authorization of county authorities, did not constitute a new contract within meaning of original contract cutting off rights of creditors of original contractor with respect to remainder of contract price unearned at time of abandonment of contract. Union Stone Co. v. Hudson County Chosen Freeholders [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 466.

Private contract between owners of frontage on a street and a contractor for the improvement of the street, held, under the express language of the contract, to bind the owners to the contractor by a joint and several liability. Moreing v. Weber [Cal. App.] 84 P. 220. Who may be joined in an action to recover what remains due on such contract under the California Code Civ. Proc. § 383, after the contractor has received a part of what was due from certain of the owners Id.

37. See 6 C. L. 1155.

38. Initial resolution of municipal council for street improvement satisfied if, when improvement is completed, every part of the street is in a condition strictly in accordance with the specifications for the improvement. Shirk v. Hupp [Ind.] 78 N. E. 242. In Illinois the board of local improvements must comply with the provisions of § 84 of the Local Improvement Act, as amended in 1903 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 24), by filing in the court where the assessment for a local improvement was confirmed the certificate provided for therein to be filed, and there must be a hearing upon such certificate, and the court must enter an order that the improvement, as completed, conforms in substance to the improvement ordinance, as a condition precedent to the right of the city to issue to the contractor the improvement bonds provided to be issued in payment of the improvement where the assessment is divided into installments, in cases where the contractor has agreed to accept such improvement bonds in payment of the work. Case v. Sullivan, 222 Ill. 56, 78 N. E. 37.

39. Wingert v. Snouffer [Iowa] 108 N. W. 1035. Evidence examined and held to show that in a substantial degree the work of improvement failed of compliance with the contract. Id. Architects employed to furnish plans and specifications for the erection of a proposed armory cannot recover the customary price therefor where it is stipulated that the plans and specifications shall be for a building not to cost over a specified amount, and the plans and specifications made are for a building substantially exceeding that sum. Horgan v. New York, 100 N. Y. S. 68. But in such case if the architects do a large amount of work in elaborating the ideas of the armory board with respect to the proposed armory, and finally by their labors demonstrate that the building cannot be erected within the sum provided, and as a result a larger appropriation is made and the armory erected at about the cost called for by the plans prepared, the architects should, it would seem, be entitled to recover upon a quantum meruit for the actual value of the services in fact performed. Id.

work may be required though the contract specifies tools which cannot produce such exactitude.[40] There must be an acceptance of the work by the municipal council, if so agreed,[41] or an approval thereof by the designated inspectors of work.[42] The stipulated mode of measurement controls.[43] Sometimes the contractor is required to secure certificates of completion before he shall become entitled to payment.[44] Under most contracts the work is to be completed within a prescribed time, and it must be so completed unless there is an excuse which the law recognizes as adequate for the delay.[45] Sometimes the contracts of subcontractors bind them under certain penalties to complete the work [46] or to a penalty for delay in completing the work, and, where the law imposes upon a municipality the duty of regulating the time within which an improvement shall be completed, it may relieve the contractor from liability for such penalty.[47]

Allowance of claims and recovery by contractor.—Contracts for public improvements may confer upon some public officer authority to pass upon claims for extra work.[48] When at settlement a specific claim is reserved, all others are waived and settled.[49] An engineer's estimate may be corrected [50] and such correction may be by new certificate made by a successor.[51] Delays due to the inaction of Congress form no basis of recovery against the Federal government.[52] Where a contract with a city for a public improvement expressly provides that it shall not be assigned, such provision is enforceable, and an assignee thereof cannot recover the money due thereunder or any part thereof.[53]

40. Sanger v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 47.

41. Where a majority of the municipal council vote for a motion to reconsider a resolution to accept a street improvement work, such work cannot be considered as accepted. Wingert v. Snouffer [Iowa] 108 N. W. 1035.

42. A contract for a street improvement which provides that the work shall be done to the satisfaction of the civil engineer and paving committee does not exhibit such a delegation of authority as to render the contract void. State v. Mt. Vernon, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 317.

43. Contract construed to exclude payment for earth excavated between vertical and slope lines. Bowers Hydraulic Dredging Co. v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cl. 214.

44. Where a contract for the repair of a public building provides that certificates of completion must be secured before the contractor shall become entitled to payment, such certificates are waived when the owner completes the work pursuant to the contract. Bader v. New York, 101 N. Y. S. 351.

45. Contract for a street improvement construed in connection with a general ordinance held to require the completion of the work in ninety days, unless completion is prevented by injunction suits or other unavoidable causes. City of Springfield v. Schmook, 120 Mo. App. 41, 96 S. W. 257. Whether the completion was unavoidably prevented is a question for the court. Id. Under a municipal charter and a contract made in pursuance thereof providing that the failure of a contractor to complete a public work within the time prescribed shall render the contract void, such a contract will not be invalidated by failure of the contractor to complete the work within the prescribed time where the work was stopped by direction of the municipal officer having control of it. Hellar v. Tacoma [Wash.] 87 P. 130. A contract for a street improvement provided that the work should be finished within a specified time, but that delays caused by acts or omissions of the municipality should be excluded in computing the time. Obstructions upon the line of work were required to be removed by the contractor. It was held that delays caused by obstructions which the contractor had no legal right to remove should be excluded in computing the time allowed for the completion of the contract. Smith Cont. Co. v. New York, 100 N. Y. S. 756.

46. Terms of subcontract for construction of a public improvement, relating to completion of the work, construed and held not to operate as an equitable mortgage on the personal property of the subcontractor used in the prosecution of the work. Lewman & Co. v. Ogden Bros., 143 Ala. 351, 42 So. 102. Prayer in bill to obtain possession of such property held equivalent to a prayer for specific performance. Id. The court refused to decree specific performance in such case, it not being alleged or proved that his property could not have been readily obtained elsewhere and the plaintiffs having an adequate remedy at law. Id.

48. Under the authority conferred by a clause in a contract for a public work, the finding of the director of public works as to the amount due the contractor for extra work held final, conclusive, and binding on both the municipality and the contractor in the absence of fraud, accident or mistake. Clark & Sons Co. v. Pittsburg [Pa.] 66 A. 154.

50, 51. West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Schillinger, 117 Ill. App. 525.

52. Sanger v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 47.

53. Murphy v. Plattsmouth [Neb.] 110 N. W. 749.

The remedies of public contractors are generally determined by the terms of the statutes.[54] One who has performed work for a municipality in accordance with his contract and has not been paid therefor has a right to a judgment at law for the contract price, and he cannot resort to mandamus to compel the levying of an assessment of tax to pay his judgment until it appears that it cannot be enforced by execution.[55] In Indiana a contractor under a contract for the construction of a public street may sue upon the assessment made therefor and rely upon his statutory lien, or he may sue upon the bonds issued by the city in anticipation of the assessment.[56] Also, in that state, an appeal from the allowance by the board of county commissioners of a claim for the preliminary plans for a court house calls in question all prior proceedings upon which the allowance was based.[57] If a municipal corporation receives and retains substantial benefits under a contract for a public improvement which it was authorized to make, but which was void because irregularly executed, it is liable in an action brought to recover the reasonable value of the benefits received.[58] Under some circumstances the contractor may recover the reasonable value of work done not within the terms of the contract. But he must prove with reasonable certainty the amount of such work.[59] Under authority of statute the court may sometimes correct mistakes in the contract.[60] On an issue as to the good faith of the municipaliy in making a settlement of a claim for which the contractor was liable over, a statement of the contractor to a municipal officer two years before the settlement is not admissible.[61] Certificates of engineers or superintendents are presumed to include none but proper items.[62] Where in an action by a contractor a disputed question of fact is presented as to the amount of overtime for which the contractor should be charged under such a contract, the question should be submitted to the jury.[63]

Enjoining performance of illegal contract.—Where a contract for the construction of a municipal improvement is illegal, its performance may be restrained by injunction at the suit of taxpayers.[64]

54. A contractor who has constructed a street improvement may, under the Indiana statute, Acts 1901, p. 537, c. 231, § 6, at his option, sue on the lien created by the assessment for benefits or on the bonds issued by the municipality in anticipation of the assessment. In Kentucky in an action by a contractor against a city of the third class to recover for the improvement of the extension of a street between high and low water mark in a navigable river, if the contract is invalid because it provides that the abutting owners shall be liable for the cost, the court may correct the mistake and enter judgment against the city for the contract price of the improvement. Bonds.[65]—The bonds of public improvement contractors must conform to the provisions of the statutes or municipal ordinances requiring them to be given.[66] The terms of the bond determine what persons are entitled to indemnity under it.[67] A municipal contractor's bond will protect the taxpayers against the increased cost of construction caused by the abandonment of the contract.[68] A surety on the contractor's bond is severally as well as jointly liable.[69] Where a bond is conditioned to perform "all the terms and conditions" of the contract, notice to the contractor of his failure to perform such terms and conditions is not an essential prerequisite to the right of recovery on the bond.[70] A surety cannot escape liability merely because of an extra allowance on account of a mistake in the bid.[71] Accord and satisfaction is not a good defense to an action on the bond unless it covers the claim is the basis of the action.[72] The surety on a municipal contractor's bond is estopped from denying that the municipality was proceeding regularly in advertising for bids for constructing the improvement.[73] The complaint in an action on the contractor's bond must show that the bond was at least in effect executed by the defendant,[74] and that there has been a breach of the contract resulting in damage to the plaintiff.[75] But, in an action against a surety, the complaint need not allege that the municipality took the preliminary steps required by statute to authorize the improvement.[76] Interest on the amount sought to be recovered need not be demanded in the complaint.[77]

The mere acceptance of a public improvement by a municipality and payment to the contractor of the balance due him is not an accord and satisfaction of all the differences between the parties and will not release the contractor and his bondsman from liability for the amount of a judgment recovered against the municipality for personal injuries caused by the neglect of the contractor to guard an excavation. City of Spokane v. Costello, 42 Wash. 182, 84 P. 652. And in such case the failure of the municipality to retain from the contractor a sufficient sum to satisfy any judgment that might be recovered for such negligence will not release the surety on the contractor's bond where the municipality was not required by the contract to withhold any fixed sum. In such action it was held that certain testimony of the plaintiff in the former action against the municipality, such plaintiff having since died, was not admissible, but that its admission was not prejudicial error. § 6. Security to subcontractors, laborers and materialmen.[78]—Statutes frequently require a bond or create a lien for this purpose.

A bond[79] should be taken by the proper officer,[80] and should conform to the statutes or ordinances prescribing the terms of the bond.[81] But such a bond, if voluntarily given, may be enforced according to its terms, although it exceeds the requirements of the ordinance,[82] though, if it be a common-law bond, remedies pertinent to the statutory bond do not apply.[83] In Minnesota and Michigan, a statutory liability is imposed upon a municipal or other public corporation to persons who furnish labor or material for a public improvement, when it neglects to take from the contractor the bond required by the statute.[84] The obligation of a surety on a municipal contractor's bond must always be strictly construed.[85] Whether the contractor's bond will cover the claims of laborers and materialmen depends on its terms.[86] A Federal contractor's bond is for the benefit of all persons furnishing such material or labor previous or subsequent to the giving of the bond, and the covenants in the bond are several and run to each such person,[87] and by Federal statute the assignment of the contract is void as against the United States, the surety, the laborers, and the materialmen;[88] and an agreement inter se by which one of several joint public contractors took over the contract does not affect the public or substitute new parties.[89] The words materialman and subcontractor have their ordinary meaning.[90] A bond to protect against liens is broken when a lien is attached, and the validity of such lien is not essential to the city's case.[91] The terms of the bond determine what claims are covered by it.[92] It may be liable for a debt for materials furnished to complete the work after the contract time.[93] The con-

91. But under the New York Laws 1882, p. 441, c. 410, as amended by Laws 1895, c. 605, a recovery could be had on a bond given by a municipal contractor to pay the amount found to be due on the claim of a subcontractor under which a lien was filed, without establishing the validity of the lien, or showing that anything was due and owing from the municipality to the contractor. 92. Where the bond is conditional to pay all sums of money which may be due for labor and materials furnished and supplied or furnished in and about the work, the liabilities of signers is limited to payment for materials or labor which the contract covers. struction and validity of a statutory bond exacted under state law is a question of general law wherein the Federal courts are not bound by local decisions.[94] If a bond is given to secure payment for materials and labor, recovery may be had thereon, though no lien exists and there is no statutory requirement that such a bond shall be taken.[95] The bond in Kansas is independent of the contract for the work and is not impaired by invalidities in such contract.[96] Notice of claim when required must be given or filed.[97]

Materialmen and subcontractors having knowledge of the facts making a contract illegal cannot recover in an action against the surety on the contractor's bond.[98] A contractor having performed a contract and received tax bills in payment therefor cannot deny the validity of the contract in a suit by the materialman.[99] One who subcontracts to finish a work for a compensation limited to the avails of the contract has no recourse on the bond after taking such avails.[1] In an action on a bond given by a contractor to a city to protect materialmen and subcontractors, the contractor may set off against the claim of a materialman or subcontractor expenses caused him by delay on the part of the suing materialman or subcontractor in furnishing material.[2] The jurisdiction and venue of an action on the bond is to be determined by the general rules of law relating to those subjects, or the particular provisions of a statute relating to suits on such bonds.[3] It has been held in Virginia that the Federal statutes requiring bond do not apply to any but public works of fixed location,[4] and, consequently, a bond taken on marine construction to the United States is not suable in the state court by a materialman.[5] A provision that no action shall be brought after a certain short time from completion of work is subject to the

97. Under the Washington statute (2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5927, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 172, c. 105), it is essential to the right of a materialman to maintain an action on the bond of a school contractor that he should have filed the notice required by the statute. [Kan.] 84 P. 1034. Or is void because no opportunity is given therein for free competition in the purchase of the materials used. Id. But a materialman was held not to be precluded from recovering on the contractor's bond by the fact that a clause in the contract for the improvement, which was required to be let to the lowest responsible bidder, provided that none but citizens of the municipality were to be employed on the work, where it did not appear that such clause constituted a part of the advertisement for bidders, or in any way affected the price for which the work was to be let, nor that the materialman knew when the materials were furnished of the existence of the clause. American Bonding Co. v. Dickey [Kan.] 88 P. 66.

99. Where work on a paving contract was completed, and tax bills in payment thereof issued and turned over to the contractor, all in accordance with the terms of the contract, the contractor when sued by a materialman cannot say that the contract and ordinance under which the work was done was illegal and void. But where such a suit was brought by the assignee of a subcontractor, in the name of the United States, and the residence of such assignee was in one state and the residences of the signers of the bond were in other states, and the amount in controversy exceeded $2,000, it was held that the Federal courts had jurisdiction on the ground of the diverse citizenship of the parties. Id. A bond given to relieve the county from liability to subcontractors as to the distribution of the money due to a contractor for the construction of a public building is within the provision of the Iowa Code, § 3098, and an action thereon by a subcontractor may be brought in the district court of the county where the property is situated. general statute excepting actions reasonably begun but reversed, or in which plaintiff shall fail otherwise than on the merits.[6]

Liens.[7]—In many jurisdictions the statutes give subcontractors and persons furnishing labor and materials a lien on the improvement, or on the moneys coming due to the contractor or applicable to the payment of the work.[8] A county building a court house is a "municipality" within the New Jersey statute allowing such a lien on moneys due under a contract for municipal work [9] and the later amendments do not deprive an assignment of his right.[10] Some statutes confer no lien but merely a claim or demand for labor or material furnished and used.[11] One who advances money to a public contractor to enable him to perform his contract and receives an assignment of money to become due thereon is not entitled to a lien under a statute providing for a lien for "labor" and "materials" furnished.[12] The amount recoverable in an action to foreclose the lien upon funds in the possession of a municipality may be affected by the terms of the contract between the municipality and the principal contractor.[13] It is essential to the creation of a lien under the New York statute that notice thereof be filed.[14] As between laborers, or labor lien creditors and other creditors of the contractor, the right to priority depends upon the terms of the statute,[15] and the time the liens are filed.[16] In New York a lien on moneys due by a municipality for the construction of a public improvement may be discharged by an

11. Under the Iowa statute (Code 1897, § 3102), a subcontractor furnishing labor or materials for a public building acquires no lien upon the building or upon the moneys which become due from the county to the contractor, but he may acquire a priority as to the distribution of such fund, by strictly following the statutory provisions in the nature of a lien. Thompson v. Stephens [Iowa] 107 N. W. 1095; Penn & Co. v. Northern Bldg. Co., 140 F. 973. The fact that the material used in the construction of a courthouse was furnished under a contract to supply all that was necessary for a lump sum and that consequently no account of the separate items had been kept will not relieve claimant from compliance with the statute requiring such a claim to be itemized. 15. Under the Federal Bankruptcy Act, Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, 30 Stat. 563 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447), wages due to laborers employed on a public improvement are entitled to priority over the claims of general creditors. In re Cramond, 145 F. 966. Where money has been advanced to a public contractor to enable him to perform his contract, and an assignment made to the person advancing it of moneys to come due on the contract, such assignee, after the performance of the contract and the acceptance of the work, has an equitable lien on the fund superior to the right to priority of payment given by the bankruptcy act to labor creditors having no other lien, and this, though some of the advances were made after the contractor became insolvent. Id. In New York liens of laborers and materialmen are superior to those of subcontractors. Falvello v. New York, 103 N. Y. S. 260.

16. Persons who have advanced money or furnished materials to a public contractor and have received an assignment of money to become due on the contract are, upon the contractor becoming insolvent, entitled to priority over labor lien creditors who filed their liens subsequent to such assignment, where the statute under which such liens were required made the filing thereof essential to their protection. In re Cramond, 145 F. 966.

undertaking executed by the contractor conditioned for the payment of any judgment which may be recovered in an action to enforce the lien,[17] and an assignee in whole or in part of the contract may procure such discharge,[18] but the condition as prescribed in the statute is essential to such a bond.[19] The right to set up a defense to an action by a subcontractor to enforce his lien may be lost by waiver or estoppel,[20] but until some action founded thereon, an assignee subject to claims cannot hold a city estopped to prefer such claims by a resolution since rescinded to pay the assignee.[21] In an action to foreclose a subcontractor's lien for work done under a municipal contract, a provision in such contract of attaching a forfeiture to the noncompletion of the work by a specified date cannot be urged as a defense, where the municipality incurred no damage by reason of the failure to complete it within the time specified.[22] A provision that the money withheld be paid over to a claimant if his sworn claim was substantiated on an investigation by the council does not arrogate the power of court.[23]

Unless provision is made by statute, a lien for labor and materials though given cannot be enforced against the state upon funds for construction of public works.[24] An action to enforce the lien of a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, must be brought in the court having jurisdiction thereof,[25] and all necessary parties must be brought into the suit.[26] The action must be commenced and notice of pendency filed within the time prescribed by statute.[27] After the lien is released by bond

Bader v. New York, 101 N. Y. S. 351. In an action to foreclose a subcontractor's lien for work done on a municipal school building, the objection cannot be urged that the contract between the principal contractor and the municipality prohibited the assigning or subletting of the contract, where the only penalty provided for such subletting was that the contract might be revoked at the option of the president of the board of education, and it appeared that the board of education was aware that the plaintiff was working under a subcontract and made no objection thereto, and did not assume to annul the contract on that ground. The New York Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 522, c. 418, art. 1, § 17), is self operative, and under it the lien of an employe of a municipal contractor is discharged without order or action, if an action to enforce it be not brought within ninety days after filing the lien, and if notice of pendency thereof be not filed within the same period with the financial officer of the municipal corporation with whom the notice of the lien was filed, provided, of course, that the lien has not been continued by order of the court. In re Rudiger, 102 N. Y. S. 1053. In New York municipal contractors may give notice to persons having a lien on money due them from the municipality, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3417, requiring the lienors to commence their action to enforce the lien within the time therein specified, and on their failure to do so the court is authorized to cancel the lien. Id. § 7. Hours and conditions of labor.—A statute making it a misdemeanor for any state or municipal officer or agent or any contractor to employ any mechanic or laborer in the prosecution of a public work for more than eight hours a day, cannot be sustained as a valid exercise of the police power.[29] But such a statute is valid on the ground that the state, in its proprietary capacity, may properly prescribe for itself and its auxiliary arms of government the terms and conditions on which work of a public nature may be done.[30] A contract for a local improvement is not invalidated by the incorporation in it of the provisions of an eight hour labor ordinance.[31] Under Federal statute the requiring of a laborer on government work to work more than eight hours per day is a crime of the director of such work [32] and is committed in the state whence the work is directed.[33] The date of such offense need not be proved as laid.[34] The burden of proving defensively that an "extraordinary emergency" existed which by law excused such acts is on defendant,[35] but an "extraordinary emergency" cannot be said to exist during the whole life of a contract.[36]

§ 8. Injury to property and compensation to owners. A. In general.[37]—Owners whose property is damaged in the prosecution of a public improvement are within the protection of the constitutional inhibition against damaging private property for public use without just compensation.[38] In the presentation of public works by or under the authority of the state, except under the right of eminent domain or common-law necessity, there is immunity from liability for entry upon private lands, only to the extent that the entry or occupation is temporary or the infliction of damages is incidental and incipient or preliminary.[39] If officers of the state assuming to act under its authority permanently occupy private lands or do substantial damage to them, they will be liable therefor to the landowner as private individuals.[40] Sometimes the state engineer and his assistants are authorized by statute to go upon private lands for the purpose of making surveys and performing the work provided of a contractor for municipal improvements, the question cannot be raised whether suit to foreclose the lien was barred by the statute of limitations. Such question must be presented by pleading the statute in connection with the facts. Id.

28. In New York where action is brought by a subcontractor to foreclose a municipal lien, and the lien is subsequently discharged, if the complaint demanded judgment establishing plaintiff's claim against the contractor for a specified sum, though it did not expressly demand judgment therefor, and the contractor had notice that a personal judgment was the only judgment that could be recovered against him, a personal judgment may be rendered in such action. Where a state constitution provides that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation therefor, and that no property nor right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation therefor shall be first made or secured to the owner, an owner of property abutting on a street, whose property is not taken, but only damaged incidentally by a municipal improvement, cannot maintain a bill to enjoin such improvement until the resulting damages to his property are ascertained and paid, but his remedy is by action at law for such damages. for by the statute, subject to liability for damages to the land.[41] In assessing damages to private property caused by a municipal improvement, special benefits resulting to the property from the improvement may be set off against the damages.[42] Sometimes landowners enter into an agreement to set off damages resulting to their property against betterments thereto.[43] In an action against a municipality for damages to property caused by the construction of a local improvement, no evidence is admissible that is not relevant and material.[44]

(§ 8) B. Establishment or change of grade of street.[45]—A municipality has the legal right to change the grade of a street without compensation to adjoining lot owners, if there be no injury done to their property.[46] The owner of a lot abutting on a public street holds it subject to the right of the state or any duly authorized governmental agency to improve the street, by altering the grade thereof;[47] and in the absence of legislation or a valid contract, the owner has no right of action against a city authorized by law to grade and improve the street for injury to the lot or for the impairment or destruction of the incidental right of ingress and egress and of light and air which the street affords,[48] provided there is no diversion of the street from its proper street purposes, and the injury to the lot or the impairment or destruction of the incidental rights is a mere consequence from the lawful use or improvement of the street as a highway, and there is no physical invasion of or trespass upon the lot and no malice, negligence or unskillfulness, to the injury of the lot owner.[49] But in some states there are constitutional or statutory enactments providing for compensation to landowners whose property is injured by a change in the grade of a street.[50] These enactments sometimes authorize the restraint of the

Where a bridge is constructed and the approach thereto graded by a railroad company under the direction, authority, and supervision of a municipality, and for the benefit of the latter as well as the railroad company, it is in effect the same as if the work was done by the municipality through a contractor exclusively for its own benefit, so far as the right to offset benefits to adjacent property against the damages thereto is concerned. Id. In an action to have assessed the amount of damages sustained by reason of the erection of a public improvement, it will be presumed upon appeal, where the case was tried by the court without a jury, that the court in determining the amount of benefits to be offset against the damages considered and weighed the evidence with reference to those benefits which under the law could be deemed special. Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston [Mass.] 80 N. E. 598. Under a contract between a city and landowners providing for the setting off of a claim for damages resulting from the improvement against betterments, it was held that until the city neglected to do its part under the contract within a reasonable time, and upon request of the landowners, it was not in default, and the landowners were not relieved from their obligation to set off the damages against betterments. 50. Such is the New York Statute, Laws 1890, p. 473, c. 255, § 9. In re Van Rensselaer & Roseville Sts. in Buffalo, 101 N. Y. S. 928. In Georgia since the adoption of the prosecution of the work until just compensation is paid for the injury.[51] Whether or not damages may be recovered in a particular case depends upon the evidence adduced.[52] The right to compensation may be lost by waiver or estoppel.[53] The measure of damages recoverable by an abutting owner for a change in the grade of a street is the resultant dimunition in the market value of his property.[54] Where the recovery of damages is regulated, by statute, the amount recoverable is to be determined from the terms of the statute and the facts of the particular case.[55] In New York the damage allowable is limited to that done to the building,[56] and since maps of the improvement when filed are binding on property owners, even though subject to change[57] damage to a building erected thereafter cannot be allowed.[58] In the assessment of damages it is not necessarily error not to assess damages to improvements in the same proportion as they are assessed in the case of the land itself.[59] Where the construction of a bridge and the grading and filling of a street are parts of one and the same plan of improvement, special benefits which accrue to property in the immediate vicinity by reason of the construction of the bridge may be offset against the damages caused to such property by the grading and filling of the street in front thereof.[60] A statutory remedy for the recovery of damages can be enforced only in the names provided in the statute.[61] A suit for damages must be brought within the time provided by the statute of limitations.[62] constitution of 1877, a municipal corporation is liable to a property owner for consequential damages resulting from raising the grade of a street in front of his premises, thereby impairing or destroying his means of ingress and egress. Town of New Decatur v. Scharfenberg [Ala.] 41 So. 1025. But an abutting owner who requests that a change be made in the grade of a street and thereby induces the municipality to incur expense in making such change cannot recover damages to his property resulting therefrom, or arrest the doing of the work upon the ground that compensation had not first been paid him. The factory was located partly on a lot abutting on the street and partly on a lot cut off from the street by a strip of land owned by the municipality, both belonging to the owner of the factory, and partly, with the consent and acquiescence of the municipality, upon the strip referred to. It was held that the owner of the factory was entitled to recover under the New York statute (Laws 1890, p. 473, c. 255, § 9), such an award as would compensate him for the damages done to the real estate owned by him and to the buildings and machinery erected thereon, and also for such damages as resulted to the buildings and machinery erected upon the property of the city. If it be assumed that two or more persons may upon compliance with the Massachusetts statute join in the same petition to recover damages for the alteration and repairing of a highway, yet the rights of husband and wife are several,

The declaration in such a suit must contain allegations fixing the responsibility of the defendant,[63] and showing that there has been such a change in the street as will warrant a recovery.[64]

§ 9. Local assessments. A. Power and duty to make.[65]—The legislature has authority to divest the whole or such part as it may prescribe of the expense of a public improvement to be assessed upon the owners of land benefitted thereby,[66] and it may tax particular districts for local benefits or improvements,[67] and this right being wholly statutory, it may suspend or repeal the law authorizing such assessments, except so far as contractual rights or obligations are involved.[68] An assessment may also be lawfully made under a statute passed after the work is done.[69] The several statutory steps required for the improvement of a street by pavement or sewer constitute a "proceeding" within a saving clause.[70] The improvement for which the assessment is made must be a public improvement; hence, assessment can be made against abutting property for the improvement of a street, if the street has not been dedicated to the public.[71] Power may be delegated to municipal corporations or designated county officers to order and levy special assessments,[72] but the statutory authority must be clear,[73] and the municipality may by contract placing the burden elsewhere disable itself to assess the abutters.[74] Under some statutes the duty to make the assessment is mandatory.[75] A valid assessment cannot be made under an invalid ordinance.[76] In Minnesota a municipal corporation has the power to order and levy a local assessment without a preliminary petition by property owners affected by the improvement.[77] A statute conferring power on a municipality to levy special assessments is to be strictly construed in favor of

and a compliance with the statutory requirements by one of them will not inure to the benefit of the other. Id.

the person against whom the assessment is levied.[78] The ordinary grant to a municipality of power to levy takes for municipal purposes does not include such power.[79] Some of the peculiar provisions of statutes conferring authority upon municipalities to levy assessments for local improvements have received the interpretation of the courts.[80]

(§ 9) B. Constitutional and statutory limitations.[81]—Statutes authorizing the levying of special assessments on private property to pay the cost of public improvements must not violate any constitutional provision or inhibition.[82] Local assessments are a tax and not subject to the limitations upon a taking of private property for public use.[83] A delegation of power being strictly construed, the power to assess benefits will not support an assessment for the cost of paying damages caused by the improvement.[84] In New Jersey it is held unconstitutional to assess the cost of water service pipes laid in the street on the lots abutting.[85] benefits, with mathematical exactness, and the courts have only required a measurable approximation to it. In determining whether a particular measure or scheme of assessment conforms to the rule, regard must be had to the nature of the improvement and its location with reference to the property assessed. Thus while it may frequently be proper to assess lands for a street improvement at a uniform rate according to frontage,[88] yet the circumstances and situation of lands on the different sides of a street may be such as to make the adoption of the foot-frontage rule improper,[89] and it has been held that the cost of a public main cannot be assessed by such rule.[90] Courts in several states have recently passed upon the validity of several other plans or schemes of assessment.[91] Under the rule that assessments shall be made upon the principle of benefits derived, no lands benefited should be omitted from the assessment, and no land can be assessed for benefits not accruing to it.[92] An assessment cannot be enforced against one property owner of a class, where all of the class originally liable to the assessment cannot be compelled to pay

88. An ordinance for a street improvement which provides that the cost of the "improvement shall be assessed per lineal foot against the property abutting" thereon, according to the provisions of certain statutes, does not attempt to prevent the assessment of abutting property according to the benefits. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Taber [Ind.] 77 N. E. 741. Where a provision in a municipal charter relating to assessments for street improvements declares that the assessor "shall make a just and equitable assessment" against the owners of the land deemed to be benefited, "assessing each parcel in proportion to the benefit which in his judgment has been derived from said improvement," if the assessor exercises his best judgment, and follows no erroneous principle in making the assessment, it should not be set aside simply because he has made it on the "foot-front" plan (People v. Kingston Common Council, 99 N. Y. S. 657), and this is so though the property of one owner is vacant and unimproved, while much of the other property is built upon (Id.).

90. The assessment upon land abutting on a public street of a certain sum per front foot to pay the cost of a public water main under such street can be sustained neither under the power of general taxation, nor the power to assess property benefited by a local improvement to the extent of, and not in excess of, benefits, nor under the police power. Doughten v. Camden, 72 N. J. Law, 451, 63 A. 170.

91. Sewer assessment on basis of square feet: An assessment for a sewer is not an equal assessment in proportion to benefits where the lots on both sides of a block were assessed on the basis of square feet alone, and the sewer was designed to furnish house drainage only for the lots on one side of the block, although it was intended to carry off surface drainage from the whole block. Auditor General v. O'Neill, 143 Mich. 343, 12 Det. Leg. N. 1013, 106 N. W. 895.

Lots assessed according to cost of improvement in front of each: Under a city charter which required the cost of sewer improvements to be assessed upon the real estate benefited in proportion to the benefits, the board of public works adopted an arbitrary and illegal principle in assessing the lots involved according to the cost of the improvement in front of them respectively, when according to the evidence all the lots were equally benefited. In re Davidson [Minn.] 107 N. W. 151.

In Washington it would seem that a statute is constitutional and valid which provides that the cost of a local improvement shall be apportioned according to benefits, or upon the property benefited according to value of property assessed, if the assessment be not in excess of benefits derived. Monk v. Ballard, 42 Wash. 35, 84 P. 397.

The whole cost of an improvement was assessed against the petitioners, who were less than a majority of the abutting owners both in numbers and feet front. Held inequitable and not in accordance with a fair construction of the petition. Whipple v. Toledo, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 520. In Nebraska all property in a sewer district in a city which is benefited by the improvement should have its fair proportion of the necessary expense of rebuilding and repairing the sewer or a part of the sewer in such district. The city council cannot determine in advance, and without a hearing, that a part only of the property in the district will be benefited, and for the purpose of making the improvement create a new sewer district embracing only such part of the property, and assessing the cost to the property benefited. Shannon v. Omaha [Neb.] 106 N. W. 592. The charter of the city of Asheville is open to criticism in that under it the mayor may arbitrarily impose upon such persons as he supposes affected the entire cost of a public improvement. City of Asheville v. Wachovia Loan & Trust Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 800. But in Missouri it has been held that the mere fact that all lands in a levee district that are benefited by a levee have not been assessed will not ipso facto render init because of the failure of the corporate authorities to perfect its assessments against all the properties before the adoption of a constitutional provision, inhibiting the making and levying of such assessments.[93] In the case of a street improvement, if the special benefits resulting therefrom all fall on one side of the street, that side alone is assessable.[94] An assessment omitting state lands and imposing the whole cost of the improvement on the other lands in the improvement district is valid, where there is no authority to assess state lands.[95] Whether different tracts of land in an improvement district have been equally benefited by the improvement is a question largely for legislative inquiry and determination, and such determination must be respected by the courts.[96]

Competitive bids.[97]—Under charter provisions giving to a city power to impose the cost of improvements on abutting property only upon competitive bids, the city can not contract for a street improvement which involves the use of a patented article, thus eliminating competition, and charge the cost of the improvement against the abutting owner.[98]

Due process of law.[99]—Statutes and ordinances providing for special assessments for public improvements must not violate the constitutional inhibition against depriving one of his property without due process of law.[1] Due notice of the assessment must be given to the owners of the property assessed, and it is necessary to the validity of every law prescribing a method for imposing a special assessment that it provide for such notice and afford the property owner an opportunity to be heard concerning the correctness of the assessment at some stage of the proceeding before the assessment becomes absolute or his property is taken to satisfy the lien of the same.[2]

98. Allen v. Milwaukee, 128 Wis. 678, 106 N. W. 1099. A modification of such charter provisions, authorizing the city to acquire the right to operate under a patent for a royalty, and then to let the actual work to the lowest bidder, and assess upon abutting owners the royalty in addition to the cost of the actual work performed, does not authorize the city to confer upon a patentee a contract for a large part of the improvement without the formality of bidding, and to assess the cost on abutting owners. 1. The Maryland statute, Acts 1906, p. 143, c. 113, § 22, authorizing a municipality to assess the costs of sidewalks upon abutting property, does not violate § 23 of the Bill of Rights, which provides that no man shall be deprived of property except by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land. City of Hyattsville v. Smith [Md.] 66 A. 44. A provision in a municipal charter, making the right to plead objections to the validity of special tax bills dependent upon the filing of such objections with the board of public works within a limited time after issuance, violates the constitutional inhibition against deprivation of property without due process of law. Curtice v. Schmidt [Mo.] 101 S. W. 61.

2. State v. Seattle, 42 Wash. 370, 85 P. 11. Ordinances which require the paving of streets not as a matter of ordinary repair but upon specified conditions only, and impose the burden thereof not upon the city treasury but upon a specified class of individuals are in their nature judicial, and, if passed without notice to those property owners who are affected by their provisions, are invalid. Sears v. Atlantic City [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 1062. The question whether the benefit received by such owners is less than the burden imposed has no bearing in determining whether such an ordinance is legislative or judicial in its character. The fact that it imposes a burden upon the abutting land is the only test. Id. The notice required to be given by the Arkansas statute, Kirby's Dig. §§ 1414-1450, relating to the establishment of drainage districts, of the establishment of the district and assessment of lands is not so unreasonable and insufficient as to make the assessment under the statute a taking of property without due process of law. Ritter v. Drainage Dist. No. 1 [Ark.] 94 S. W. 711. The Illinois local improvement act is not unconstitutional on the ground that it does not provide for notice of the assessment proceedings to the owners of the property assessed. Gage v. Chicago, 225 Ill. 136, 80

As a general rule to render the assessment valid even when made under a constitutional law it is essential that the notice be given at that stage of the proceedings the law directs that it be given, and if more than one is provided for more than one must be given.[3] The fact that an assessment is invalid as to part of a tract of land because made without notice to the owners will not invalidate it as to the remainder of the tract.[4]

(§ 9) C. Persons, property, and districts liable, and extent of liability.[5]—The whole idea of local assessments goes upon the theory of commensurate benefits received, either actual or conclusively presumed from the exercise of the authority,[6] and in some jurisdictions it is the established rule that the assessments shall not be in excess of the benefits conferred.[7] This rule, however, has not been universally adopted.[8] Property included in a city by annexation may be assessed for pending improvements where the law requires assessment to await completion of the work and ascertainment of the cost, and the fact of a previous assessment restricted to

Failure of council to determine in advance the manner in which an assessment shall be levied, or to give notice to property owners of an intention to levy an assessment, does not render the assessment invalid, where the petition for the improvement did not specify the manner in which it was desired the assessment should be levied or particularize in other ways as to the plan to be adopted in proceeding with the improvement. 7. Under the constitution of New Jersey an assessment for benefits cannot exceed the actual amount of special benefits conferred upon the properties to be assessed. Durrell v. Woodbury [N. J. Law] 65 A. 198. It is the established rule in this state that, in order to sustain an assessment for benefits conferred by a street improvement, it must affirmatively appear that the assessment is not in excess of the benefits conferred upon the land. Burnett v. Boonton [N. J. Law] 63 A. 995. In Alabama assessments upon property for public improvements in excess of the increased value of such property by reason of the special benefits derived from such improvements are expressly forbidden by the constitution. Const. of Ala. § 223. Harton v. Avondale [Ala.] 41 So. 934. This constitutional provision has nothing to do with the manner in which the assessment is apportioned whether by front foot or otherwise, but only fixes a limit beyond which it cannot go. Id. In conforming to the limitation in the case of a street improvement, the assessment must frequently not be uniform among the abutting owners, and an assessment separately against each owner, based alone on the cost of the work abutting his property, is not invalid. Id. Under this constitutional provision the property owner has the right in some form to contest the fact as to the benefits accruing and to produce evidence upon the subject, and, if this opportunity is not given him, the courts can inquire into and enforce his rights. Id. Provision in municipal charter held not to violate this constitutional limitation. Id. In apportioning the costs of widening an alley under the act of Congress of July 22, 1892, c. 230 (27 Stat. 255), as amended by the act of August 24, 1894, c. 328 (28 Stat. 501), the amount assessed must be limited to the benefits conferred. Martin v. District of Columbia, 27 S. Ct. 440.

8. In Kentucky the owner of abutting property may be compelled to pay his share of the cost of a street improvement although he receives no particular benefit because of the improvement. Otter v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1157, 96 S. W. 862. But if the cost of a street improvement equals the value of the property sought to be taxed, it amounts to a spoliation and will not be enforced by the courts. Id. If, however, the cost of the improvement does not equal the value of such property, the courts will uphold the assessment and enforce its collection. Id. The price which the property assessed brings at decretal sale is not the absolute test of its value. Id. The fact that the abutting owner has other property lying behind the property assessed with no other outlet save over the property assessed cannot enter into the question of the value of the latter property. Id. Evidence examined and held to show that the assessment was only about two-thirds of the value of the property assessed. Id. The Arkansas statute, Kirby's Dig. §§ 1414-1450, relating to the establishment of drainage districts, is not unconstitutional and void because it does not lots originally in the limits is no obstacle, it having been vacated [9] and the city having power to enlarge the assessed area [10] or to correct an erroneous assessment by reassessment. In such a case a purchaser is charged with notice of liability by the visible pendency of the improvement.[11] The rule of equality and uniformity, prescribed in cases of taxation for state and county purposes, does not require that all property of all persons in a county or district shall be taxed for local improvements.[12] The Pennsylvania rule that none but abutters on the improvement can be assessed has been applied to the rectification of a stream though it benefits a large watershed.[13] The method of ascertaining the amount of benefits to accrue from the improvement must not be arbitrary or unreasonable.[14] If by the improvement the value of the property assessed is increased for any use for which it is adapted, it is benefitted thereby.[15] Increased light and air resulting from a street improvement cannot be considered as a "benefit" arising from the improvement.[16] Lots cannot be assessed for the construction of a sewer where they are not connected and are not entitled to connection with such sewer.[17] But lots that have been assessed for a main sewer may subsequently be assessed for branch sewers to connect them therewith.[18] A drainage system may be a benefit to lands already tiled by the owners but which tiling being inefficacious is made so by the system.[19] A drainage system which accelerates the discharge of flood water before destruction of crops is a benefit though it does not prevent overflow.[20] If the location of property or the view therefrom enhances its value this is a circumstance entitled to be taken into consideration in determining what proportion of the costs of a street improvement the property shall bear.[21] Statutes authorizing assessments for local improvements generally contain specific provisions as to what property shall be liable to assessment. Some of those provisions have recently been interpreted by the courts.[22] The fact limit the assessment upon lands to the value of the benefits conferred by the improvement. Ritter v. Drainage Dist. No. 1 [Ark.] 94 S. W. 711.

Sewer assessment: Where land is "approximate" to a street in which a sewer is placed, within the meaning of a statute or ordinance providing that an assessment for the sewer shall be made on lands "contiguous or approximate" to the street in which the sewer is placed. Monk v. Ballard, 42 Wash. 35, 84 P. 397.

Street improvement assessments: Under that the property assessed has been benefited must be established by competent evidence.[23] In the case of a sidewalk the mere fact that the property abuts thereon may be taken as evidence of benefit.[24] In an action for the reduction of a street assessment on the ground of lack of benefits, testimony and estimates as to the value of abutting property before and after the improvement which leave the court in doubt will be resolved against the plaintiff.[25] It is proper to make the amount of the assessment sufficient to cover the cost of all work necessary in the construction of the improvement.[26] The extent of the improvement and what is included in it is to be determined from the terms of the ordinance authorizing it.[27] Generally abutting owners are not liable to assessment for repairs to a street or sidewalk but only for reconstruction or repaving,[28] and sometimes their liability is confined to an original improvement.[29] The question whether the assessment should include the cost of taking and collecting it is to be determined from the terms of the statute under which it is made.[30] Interest is properly included where an assessment was the California Street Improvement Act, subd. 7 (St. 1891, p. 202), where a subdivision street terminates in another street, the expenses of the work done on one-half of the width of the subdivision street must be assessed upon the lots fronting on such termination. Beckett v. Morse [Cal. App.] 87 P. 408. Where defendant owned land situated in the southwestern corner of a tract of land entirely surrounded by principal streets except on a part of the west side, the defendant owning the land on that side over which the street would run if extended, it was proper to treat the tract as a square for the purpose of assessing property owners for the improvement of an alley extending part way through the tract from the east side thereof to an alley running north and south, and therefore the quarter square system of assessment provided for by Ky. St. 1903, § 2833, was the only one applicable to the case, and so much of defendant's property as was situated in what would be the square if the street on the west was extended was liable to assessment, although it did not touch the alley. Holt v. Figg, 29 Ky. L. R. 613, 94 S. W. 34.

Grading assessments: Under the Kingston City Charter, New York Laws 1896, p. 972, c. 747, § 147, grading assessments are limited to the property fronting on the improvement. People v. Common Council of Kingston, 99 N. Y. S. 657.

Extension of street for wharf purposes: Under section 3457, Ky. St. 1903, the improvement of an extension of a street for wharf purposes between low and high water mark on the bank of a navigable river cannot be made at the expense of the abutting owners. Terrell v. Paducah, 28 Ky. L. R. 1237, 92 S. W. 310.

Where a drainage district, organized under the Illinois Drainage Act of May 29, 1879 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 42), takes in contiguous territory lying within an incorporated city, it cannot without the consent of the city make and enforce payment of assessments for street benefits resulting from the construction of the improvement. City of Joliet v. Spring Creek Drainage Dist., 222 Ill. 441, 78 N. E. 836.

23. In proceedings under the Arkansas statute, Kirby's Dig. §§ 1414-1450, for the construction of a ditch or drain, the report of the viewers is sufficient evidence to support the finding of the county court as to probable benefits to property in the drainage district. 27. The word "street" as used in an ordinance for a street improvement held to include the sidewalk, and that, therefore, abutting owners were assessable for the cost of the sidewalk. Morton v. Sullivan, 29 Ky. L. R. 943, 96 S. W. 807.

28. Walker v. Detroit, 143 Mich. 427, 106 N. W. 1123; Morton v. Sullivan, 29 Ky. L. R. 943, 96 S. W. 807. Under Detroit City Charter, §§ 57 and 193, an abutting property owner is chargeable with the cost of laying a new walk to replace one so out of repair that it cannot be repaired, since, though the city is liable for the costs of repairing, the property owner is liable for cost of construction. Walker v. Detroit, 143 Mich. 427, 106 N. W. 1123.

29. Where a city has from time to time repaired a street by macadamizing it but without special assessment against the abutting owners, an ordinance requiring the pavement of the street with brick calls for an original improvement and not a reconstruction, within the purview of the Kentucky statute, and hence the abutting property is subject to assessment. Lindsey v. Brawner, 29 Ky. L. R. 1236, 97 S. W. 1. In Pennsylvania macadamizing may be regarded as a permanent roadway so as to absolve abutters from assessment for later repaving. Chester City v. Evans, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 641. Under this rule a purpose to change the character of a street to that of a permanent artificial roadway may be inferred. Express declaration by ordinance is not essential proof. Id.

30. Under section 94 of the Illinois local improvement act, as amended in 1901 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 24), a special assessment cannot be levied to pay the costs and expenses of maintaining a board of local improvements or any expense except the cost of making and collecting the particular deferred and reassessment made and the law requires the entire cost to be met by assessment, the city having been meanwhile chargeable with interest.[31] When a part of one's land is taken for an improvement, the part so taken cannot be assessed for benefits.[32] but the part not taken may be.[33] In the absence of express statutory authority a city cannot subject state lands to a special assessment for local improvements.[34] In Indiana the right of way of a railroad company abutting upon a street is subject to assessment for the improvement of the street.[35] In Arkansas in assessing a railroad track for a local improvement it is proper to include in the property assessed ties, angle bars, and rails.[36] Some statutes in express terms limit the assessment to real property.[37] In determining whether lands of a certain character or in a certain location are liable to assessment, regard must always be had to the terms of the statute authorizing the assessment.[38] Under some of the statutes certain lands are exempted from assessment.[39] But a constitutional exemption from "taxation" does not exempt from special assessments for local improvements.[40] Some statutes preclude the assessment of lands abutting on a street improvement assessment. Chicago Consol. Trac. Co. v. Oak Park, 225 Ill. 9, 80 N. E. 42. Security Sav. Soc. [Wash.] 89 P. 466. In the absence of a statute expressly authorizing such a procedure, an assessment for a municipal improvement cannot be enforced against the interest of a lessee of state lands, where the assessment was made prior to the time the lease was bid for. Rabel v. Seattle [Wash.] 87 P. 520. Where an ordinance providing for improvements, for the payment of which an assessment was sought to be levied, was passed prior to the issuance of a lease of state lands and presumably to the bidding therefor, and the assessment purports to be made against the entire property instead of merely the leasehold, it cannot be enforced. 42. Baily v. Sioux City [Iowa] 110 N. W. 839. The Iowa Code of 1897, § 792a, provides that a special assessment for a public improvement shall be in proportion to the special benefits conferred and shall not exceed twenty-five per centum of the actual value of the land. Section 816 provides that "the lien of a special tax for street improvements in case of abutting property shall not cover to exceed one hundred and fifty feet in depth from the abutting line." Under these statutes in fixing the assessment on property which is more than one hundred and fifty feet in depth, the assessment is limited to twenty-five per cent of the value of a strip one hundred and fifty feet in depth. An assessment made pursuant to the provisions of such statute in excess of the per cent fixed by such general village act is unauthorized and void. Id.

45. City of Toledo v. Marlow, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 121. The adoption of the preliminary resolution declaring the necessity of a street improvement, such as a pavement or sewer, is, in the absence of a petition by property owners for the improvement, the beginning of a proceeding which is thereafter "pending" within the meaning of § 79, Rev. St. of Ohio, and unaffected, in respect to limitation of rate of assessment, by an amendatory act not expressly retroactive. Id.

47. The abutting owner by building a sidewalk in front of his property within forty days after the taking effect of the ordinance providing for the walk will relieve his property absolutely from any assessment for the cost of intersections or any other portion of the sidewalk. Local Improvement Act (Laws 1897, p. 101), as amended by Laws 1901, p. 105, § 34. City of Chicago v. Burkhardt, 223 Ill. 297, 79 N. E. 82. A notice to such an abutting owner that he will be allowed until a specified date to complete the sidewalk opposite his land and thereby relieve the same from assessment, except for his proportionate share of the cost of intersections, is not such a notice as the statute contemplates. Id.

48. In Massachusetts the board of street commissioners of a city cannot bind the city by contract to give up betterments assessable upon the laying out of a street, except under the Act of 1884, p. 185, c. 226 (Rev. Laws, c. 50, § 11). Whitcomb v. Boston [Mass.] 78 N. E. 407.

49. Agreement between municipality and proprietors of cemetery for construction of branch sewer for drainage of cemetery held to bring cemetery into assessment district and to charge the municipality with benefits which would have been chargeable to the cemetery had the property not been held as such. Edwards v. Cooper [Ind.] 79 N. E. 1047.

50. It would seem that a contract signed by property owners along the line of a proposed street which requires the postponement of the collection of betterments until the damages caused to the several signers shall be determined, and prescribing a set-off of the damages against the betterments, would be binding on the municipality if the authorities in laying out the street, and municipal council in including property in an improvement district is conclusive of the fact that it is adjoining the locality to be affected, except when attacked for fraud or demonstrable mistake.[51] And it is invested with the same discretion in excluding property from a district as it is in including it, and the same conclusiveness attends its action.[52]

(§ 9) D. Procedure for authorization, levy, and confirmation of assessments.[53] Statutes, ordinances and jurisdiction of proceedings.—The legislature must establish the district within which the improvement is to be made and the special benefits assessed, or assign the duty to do so.[54] It is not necessary that the boundaries of the district should be coterminous with any of the political divisions of the state.[55] A statute conferring upon a municipality power to levy special assessments is not invalid merely because it does not specifically prescribe the details of the procedure to be pursued in its exercise,[56] but a prescribed mode of procedure must be strictly followed[57] if applicable.[58] By a saving clause, powers contained in a former city charter may be preserved for the enforcement of assessments made thereunder.[59] Where power is delegated to a municipality, it must be exercised in a valid manner, and all the requirements of the statute must be complied with.[60] But the fact that one section of an ordinance providing for an assessment is invalid will not necessarily invalidate the whole ordinance.[61] The jurisdiction of assessment proceedings and the powers and duties of public officers in matters connected with such proceedings are generally regulated by statute. Powers that are purely ministerial may be delegated to clerks and other inferior officers or agents.[62] afterwards in constructing it, accepted the offer, though the contract was not signed by any one representing the municipality. Aspinwall v. Boston, 191 Mass. 441, 78 N. E. 103. But in such case there must be an acceptance of the offer by the city, by the performance of the entire agreement referred to in the writing, within a reasonable time. Id.

51. Lenon v. Brodie [Ark.] 98 S. W. 979. In Arkansas the findings of the county court in proceedings for the construction of a ditch or drain raise at least a prima facie presumption of benefit to the lands included in the drainage district, and such findings will not be set aside where there is evidence to support them, even though against the preponderance of the evidence. 59. The Omaha charter of 1897, saving the validity of taxes and assessments made previously to be collected or enforced in the manner provided or to be provided, does not repeal in regard to such tax the power to relevy a special assessment which was attempted to be levied under a former act, but failed because of irregularity in procedure. Mercer Co. v. Omaha [Neb.] 107 N. W. 565.

60. In the exercise of the power of levying special assessments conferred by its charter upon the city of Ashville, the board of aldermen must establish the limits of the district within which they are to be made. City of Ashville v. Wachovia Loan & Trust Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 800. Ordinance held to sufficiently provide for the making and filing of a special tax list, and for the issuing of a warrant to the village collector for the collection of the same, as provided by statute. Hurd v. People, 221 Ill. 398, 77 N. E. 443.

61. Where a section of an ordinance for a street improvement provides that a specific sum raised by special assessment shall be appropriated to the payment of certain costs, part of which it is not permissible to raise by special assessment, the other provisions of the ordinance are not affected by the illegality of such section. Chicago Consol. Trac. Co. v. Oak Park, 225 Ill. 9, 80 N. E. 42.

62. Not necessary to transfer proceedings to circuit court to warrant an assessment against a municipality on account of benefits to outlying cemetery property, as provided by the Indiana statute (Acts 1901, p. 616, c. 262, § 5). Edwards v. Cooper [Ind.] 79 N. E. 1047. Under the Missouri statute (Rev. St. 1899, § 8441), the determination of the question as to what lands in a levee district will be benefited by the levee, is left to the assessor. State v. Three States Lumber Co., 198 Mo. 430, 95 S. W. 333. Under the Illinois statute (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 24, § 547), the affidavit of the examination of the collector's books to ascertain the person paying the taxes on the property assessed, may be made by a person acting under the direction of the officer making the return, though he be not an employe of the Essential prerequisites to assessment.—In addition to the necessary preliminary ordinance or statute,[63] and a legally authorized improvement,[64] the assessment must be predicated on proceedings adequate to form a binding contract.[65] The assessment district should be defined before the assessment is made,[66] and before the final apportionment is made and judgment rendered, the cost of the improvement must be ascertained.[67] In the case of drainage works in Illinois where part of the land is to be taken for the improvement, the condemnation damages should first be ascertained.[68] If the jury determines that the land not taken is not damaged, it is then proper to assess the benefits.[69] If there is an option to make the improvement as an individual, proper notice must precede the assessment.[70]

Defective or excessive assessments.—Where the mode or time of making an assessment is prescribed by statute, the statute must be followed.[71] Defects in assessment proceedings that are jurisdictional will render the proceedings and assessments made under them void.[72] But a mere irregularity that is not jurisdictional will not invalidate the proceedings.[73] In Kentucky where an assessment is in excess of what the statute under which it is made permits, the circuit court may correct it.[74]

Assessment roll or report.[75]—The assessment roll or report should contain a correct description of the property assessed,[76] but if the description is the same as that by which the owner acquired title, it is sufficient as against him.[77] A viewer's report should not be a mere ratification of a preliminary engineer's estimate.[78] Prop-office. Lingle v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 222 Ill. 384, 78 N. E. 794. Under the charter of Kansas City, tax bills may be signed in the name of the president of the board of public works by a person by the board specially authorized by resolution in writing to do so. Jaicks v. Merrill [Mo.] 98 S. W. 753. The mere arithmetical work of the apportionment of the total cost of a street improvement to the several abutting lots by the clerks in the office of the city engineer is not a delegation of the authority of the board of public works and council to such clerks. 71. An assessment in a levee district made in accordance with the order of court held not open to the objection that it was not made at the first annual assessment after the district was organized as required by the Missouri statute (Rev. St. 1899, § 8441). State v. Three States Lumber Co., 198 Mo. 430, 95 S. W. 333. The fact that the board of trustees in making an assessment under the Indiana statute (Burn's Ann. St. §§ 4293, 4294), adopted the report of the engineer the night the committee reported the same, did not render its act invalid. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Taber [Ind.] 77 N. E. 74.

72. Where a resolution for the building of a sewer was modified by providing for a branch sewer, the omission of the board of public works to enter a finding concerning benefits, after the order for the construction of the branch, was a jurisdictional defect in the proceedings rendering them void, under the Indiana statute (Acts 1901, p. 608, c. 262). Edwards v. Cooper [Ind.] 79 N. E. 1047. Facts not showing that property owners assessed for the construction of the sewer were not prejudiced by such omission. Id. No descriptive list of railroad property subject to levee taxation having been filed by the board of inspectors of a levee district in accordance with the provisions of the Arkansas statutes, assessments upon such property were invalid. 73. Reference of assessment for municipal improvements to street and alley committee of council instead of to city commissioners as required by the Indiana statute (Burns' Ann. St. §§ 3623a-3623h), a mere irregularity not invalidating the proceedings. Boswell v. Marion [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1056.

76. Under the Illinois statute it is the duty of the superintendent of assessments to assess each lot, block, tract, or parcel of land, which he finds will be benefited by the improvement, by its legal description as one tract, without attempting to divide it into smaller tracts to correspond with some legal existing subdivision of other property that was included in the benefited district. 77. Wiemers v. People, 225 Ill. 82, 80 N. E. 68; People v. Wiemers, 225 Ill. 17, 80 N. E. 45.

78. Where a judicial discretion is vested in the viewers appointed to determine the benefits to accrue to property from a municipal improvement, their report adopting the estimate made by the municipal engineer erty that will not be benefited by the improvement should be omitted from the assessment report.[79] The presumption is that property omitted from the report will not be benefited, and this presumption is not overcome by the fact that the property abuts on the improvement.[80] The certificate of a city engineer annexed to the assessment roll, that he has apportioned the amounts assessed according to benefits, is subject to review, when it conclusively appears that the apportionment does not correspond to the actual benefits and was not designed to do so.[81] Where a municipality is not required by statute to give notice of the hearing of objections to a proposed assessment roll, notice actually given by it will not preclude the property holders not appearing from challenging the correctness of the roll after it has been approved and adopted.[82]

Confirmation of assessments.[83]—Due process of law does not necessarily require personal notice of confirmation proceedings to the property owners. A statute providing for constructive notice appropriate to the nature of the case, which will afford the property owner the opportunity to contest the validity of the assessment, is sufficient.[84] Statutory requirements as to notice must be complied with.[85] In confirmation proceedings in Illinois the property owners are entitled to a trial by jury.[86] Under an Illinois statute, if the proceedings are regular on their face, the court must confirm the assessments unless the objectors offer testimony.[87] An assessment will not be confirmed where the plans and specifications for the improvement are too indefinite to enable the property owners to tell whether or not it will take or damage their property.[88] Where an extension of culverts is essential to a street improvement, an assessment therefor cannot be confirmed until legal provision has been made for such extension.[89] It is no valid objection to the confirmation of an assessment that the land upon which the improvement is to be located was acquired by purchase and not by condemnation proceedings, where no one has questioned the legality of the purchase.[90] Confirmation cannot be defeated merely be-and included in the improvement ordinance is insufficient and should be set aside. So held in relation to a report of viewers in a proceeding under the Pennsylvania statute (Act May 16, 1891 [P. L. 75]), to ascertain benefits resulting from the construction of a sewer. In re Wheeler Ave. Sewer, 214 Pa. 504, 63 A. 894.

It is the duty of the officer to omit from his report a lot that will not be benefited by a proposed sewer, although the city council had provided for house slants in front of such lot on the supposition that the sewer would be a benefit to it. 90. This was an assessment for a pump-cause the engineer's certificate accompanying the estimate of cost uses the language, "all other expenses" instead of the "lawful expenses," as prescribed by statute.[91] The fact that the court causes a plat to be made of an imaginary subdivision of objector's land, merely for its convenience in considering objections, is not a valid objection to confirmation.[92] Nor can an assessment be defeated on the ground that a portion of the improvement was improperly included in the ordinance therefor, where the amount thereby added to the objector's assessment is trifling.[93] The objection cannot be raised that the right of way for constructing the improvement has not been obtained, unless the objector shows that some of his property has been taken or damaged.[94] Persons who petition for an improvement on the frontage plan cannot object that the assessments are invalid because the benefits are not equal.[95] Power is sometimes conferred upon the court to reduce the assessment.[96] Objections to confirmation must be specific and definite.[97] In Washington a filing fee of two dollars is required as a condition precedent to the filing of objections to an assessment for a street improvement.[98] The striking out of defendant's answer is not reversible error, where he is given an opportunity to introduce evidence at the hearing concerning all of the matters alleged in such answer.[99] In Illinois the court may, for good cause shown at any time before confirmation, allow additional objections to be filed, or make any order altering, changing, annulling, or modifying, the assessment, or continuing the hearing, as it may deem just and equitable.[1] The question of the necessity for the improvement is not for the jury, the municipal authorities being the sole judges of the necessity.[2] An instruction reciting that the assessment was levied by authority of the board of local improvements is not harmful error, if the jury is not required to determine whether the assessment was lawfully levied.[3] Evidence that certain terms used in the ordinance for the improvement, descriptive thereof, have a well-known meaning among public contractors, is

City of Belleville v. Herzler, 225 Ill. 404, 80 N. E. 269. Where in proceedings for the confirmation of a special assessment, counsel for an objector concedes that he has not read the legal objections filed, but thinks they "are copied right from the stereotype blanket form," and is unable to state any reason in support of the objections, the action of the trial court in overruling such objections will not be reviewed on appeal. competent.[4] Evidence of petitioner engineer and of a subsequent ordinance is admissible to show that a property owner would obtain the benefits of the improvement which he could not have obtained under the ordinance originating the improvement.[5] A certified copy of an ordinance for a street improvement is not rendered inadmissible in evidence in a confirmation proceeding by the fact that there are certain interlineations and erasions which were made before the ordinance was passed and approved.[6] If the evidence has no relation to the expense about to be entailed on the taxpayers,[7] or to the validity of the improvement or tax,[8] it is inadmissible. Plats offered must correctly show the material facts.[9] It is not error for the court to refuse to adjourn the proceedings where a sufficient reason for adjournment is not shown.[10] The court during the term at which a judgment is rendered confirming the assessment may amend or correct the record and make it conform to the rulings of the court.[11]

Snydacker v. West Hammond, 225 Ill. 154, 80 N. E. 93. In proceedings for the confirmation of an assessment for the widening of a street, it is not error to refuse to hear evidence as to damages to buildings caused by the improvement. In re Pike Street, 42 Wash. 551, 85 P. 45. Evidence that property that has not been assessed for the construction of sewers will be benefited by them is not admissible where there is no offer to prove that such property had or even would have any connection with the sewers or right to drain into them. Snydacker v. West Hammond, 225 Ill. 154, 80 N. E. 93.

In a proceeding for the confirmation of a sewer assessment, upon the question of the cost of the improvement, a plat showing the length of the main sewer, but not showing the location of other sewers with which it is to contract, is not admissible to prove the total length of the sewer. Sheedy v. Chicago, 221 Ill. 111, 77 N. E. 539.

Under the charter of the city of Flint, any special assessment, which is in the opinion of the council invalid by reason of irregularity or informality in the proceedings, may be validated by a new assessment for the same purpose for which the former assessment was made. Stewart Co. v. Flint [Mich.] 111 N. W. 352. Under the Washington statute (Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 1139), authorizing a city to make a reassessment for a street improvement, while the original assessment must, as a matter of law, be invalid to authorize a reassessment, no prior adjudication of such invalidity is necessary. City of Spokane v. Security Sav. Soc. [Wash.] 89 P. 466. Under the Indiana statute (Burn's Ann. St. 1901, §§ 4293, 4294), the power of the board of trustees to make an assessment for a street improvement continues until legally exercised, and if after an assessment, it is found, that the description of the property in the engineer's reports and subsequent proceedings is insufficient and it requires new or amended reports and takes the proper steps to make an assessment containing correct descriptions of the property, such assessment supersedes and vacates the first assessment and is valid. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Taber [Ind.] 77 N. E. 741. Under the Missouri statute (Rev. St. 1899, § 5950) giving a municipal council power to correct an assessment for a street improvement and to make a new levy and assessment, it may correct an ordinance directing a tax bill to be made out in favor of the municipality by a subsequent ordinance, amending the same to conform to the statute, by authorizing the levy of a special assessment in favor of the committee of the council in charge of the work. City of Fayette v. Rich [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 8. The Kansas Laws 1903, p. 207, c. 122, § 129, providing for the relevy of an assessment, void for want of jurisdiction to levy it, is a constitutional enactment, and applies to a levy sessment, the fact that it makes an invalid one will not preclude it from making a reassessment on the same property.[14] The question whether reassessment proceedings are controlled by a particular statute must be determined from the terms of the statute and the facts of the particular case.[15] Upon a reassessment of special taxes against a part only of the property benefited by the improvement, notice to the owners of the other property benefited, who had paid the taxes originally assessed, is not required.[16] Whether a reassessment will be declared invalid on the ground that the proceedings on which it is based are irregular or defective, or because statutory requirements have not been complied with, will depend on the terms of the statute and the facts of the particular case.[17] A reassessment will not be invalidated by a defect in proceedings preliminary to the improvement ordinance, where such defect did not invalidate the ordinance.[18] In a reassessment, as in the original assessment, there must be equality and no erroneous principle of law must be followed.[19] A reassessment may include property that became liable after the work was begun but before liability accrued.[20] Reassessment cannot be made when the assessment has been satisfied by a sale of the property.[21] A reassessment must be made within the time limited by statute.[22] In order to sustain a supplemental assessment to complete an improvement, the estimate and report on which it is based must be valid.[23] Where a contractor for a street improvement is to be paid in bonds redeemable out of a fund to be created by a special assessment, and the assessment which is void for want of a sufficient petition for the improvement. Kansas City v. Silver [Kan.] 85 P. 805. The Wisconsin statute (Laws 1903, p. 572, c. 354), providing that in an action at law to recover damages arising from failure to make a proper assessment for a street improvement or from failure to observe any provision of law, a reassessment of damages and benefits shall be made as well as in an action in equity to set aside the assessment and with like effect on the action, is constitutional and valid. 22. The Washington statute (Laws 1895, p. 270), limiting the time within which an action may be commenced to enforce an assessment after it has been levied, applies to the right to make a reassessment. Therefore, a reassessment cannot be compelled by mandamus more than ten years after the original assessment was declared void. Frye v. Mt. Vernon, 42 Wash. 268, 84 P. 864.

23. Where commissioners were appointed to estimate the amount necessary to be realized by a supplemental assessment to complete a street improvement, and after the death of one of them the other two reported that "we estimate the additional amount of moneys necessary to be realized * * * at $19,329.73," it was held that the report was fatally defective in not showing that the third commissioner acted with the two making the report. Town of Cicero v. Andren, 224 Ill. 617, 79 N. E. 962. Whether under such circumstances the surviving commissioners may report for all three, quaere. Id. Where under an ordinance for a third assessment for street improvements, commissioners were appointed to estimate the amount of money necessary to be realized by such supplemental assessment, their report that a specified sum "together with the amount of said first assessment" would be sufficient to cover the cost of the improvements, not mentioning the second assessment, was held invalid. is void because of failure to notify the property owners, mandamus to compel a new assessment is the proper remedy of the contractor.[24]

(§ 9) F. Maturity, obligation, and lien of assessments.[25]—A municipality can impose a valid municipal lien for street improvements only when the improvements are made in pursuance of law and the mode pointed out by the city ordinance is strictly followed.[26] In Connecticut an assessment for benefits puts the owner of the land in the position of a debtor.[27] Under some statutes interest may be recovered on special assessments or tax bills if not paid within a time prescribed,[28] and under others assessments are made payable in yearly instalments with interest.[29] An error in providing that a single instalment of an assessment shall draw interest does not defeat the whole assessment where the levy is explicit and there is nothing in the ordinance to show that there is any necessity for interest, such as would preclude disregarding the interest provision therein and sustaining the remainder.[30] An unqualified grant of power to impose an assessment lien carries with it power to impose a lien which shall continue as long as the occasion for it continues,[31] but in order to preserve the lien against third persons becoming interested in the land, the performance of certain conditions is sometimes imposed.[32] The terms of the statute or ordinance under which the lien arises generally determine the date at which it attaches,[33] and the interest that is bound by it;[34] and where lots subject

29. Under the New York Laws 1893, p. 1447, c. 644, making assessments for local improvements payable in yearly instalments with interest, the interest assessable with each instalment is the interest for one year on that particular instalment, and not the interest on the amount of the total instalments remaining unpaid. Hagemeyer v. Grout, 113 App. Div. 472, 99 N. Y. S. 369. Where taxes assessed for a street improvement under the Kentucky statute (Acts 1888, p. 255, c. 158), are due in ten yearly instalments with interest on the amount unpaid in any year, it is not proper to add the total amount of interest due for ten years to the principal sum and allow interest on the total. 32. The provision of a municipal charter requiring as an essential to the preservation of the lien of a tax bill issued against land for local improvements, that notice of suit on such bill shall be given within one year after the maturity of the last instalment, was intended for the benefit of third persons who may become interested in the land, and has no application in a contest between the holder of the bill and the landowners in a suit brought for the enforcement of the lien. Ross v. Gates, 117 Mo. App. 237, 93 S. W. 856. The provision in Pennsylvania that one who is registered as owner shall have notice of scire facias applies only to the scire facias which transforms the lien into a judgment and not to scire facia thereafter issued to revive such judgment. 34. Lien of borough for laying sidewalk in front of lot binds life estate only under to an assessment lien are sold, the lien may be enforced against the vendees.[35] When money has been paid into court to discharge a lien, the money stands as a substitute for the lien which is discharged,[36] and defendant may assert that the lien had never been perfected. The legislature may give such liens priority over antecedent mortgages and contract liens.[37] Tax bills issued against land for a local improvement are prima facie evidence of the validity of the liens under them.[38] If in such case tax bills have been issued prior to the condemnation proceedings and part of the damages found in such proceedings are deposited in court for the payment of the tax bills, and accepted as sufficient for that purpose by all parties interested, the land will become released from the liens of such bills, and thereafter the fund will stand for the res to which the liens attached.[39] Before the lien can be enforced, any statutory conditions made a prerequisite to enforcement must be performed.[40] The claim of lien in Pennsylvania must in substance state all facts necessary to sustain its validity.[41] In Pennsylvania the lien must be revived by scire facias.[42] The time allowed by scire facias to continue the lien is not tolled by a writ quashed because it was valid.[43] In Indiana a statute providing for a reasonable attorney's fee in a decree for the foreclosure of a lien for betterment assessments is not unconstitutional.[44]

(§ 9) G. Payment and discharge.[45]—Whether an assessment must be paid in full when made, or may be paid in installments, is to be determined from the statute or ordinance under which it is made.[46] If sheriff's sale of the land legally discharges the land, the misapplication of proceeds thereafter does not prevent it.[47] A receipt given for the amount of a tax bill, together with the fact that the bill is

35. When the lien of a street assessment is enforced against several lots, each owned by a different vendee of the person owning the lots when the assessment was made, the property should be compelled to satisfy the lien in proportion to the square feet contained in the respective lots. Moxley v. Lawler [Ky.] 97 S. W. 365. But if the vendor has a lien on any of the lots, such lots should be first subjected to the extent of such lien, and if the vendor has conveyed any of the lots by warranty deed, the vendees of such lots may upon cross petition be given judgment over against the vendor for the amount they are compelled to pay to relieve their property of the lien. Id. Where the owner of three lots subject to the lien of an assessment for a street improvement sold the lots to different persons, the fact that one of the vendees was not made a party to an action to enforce the lien until after the claim was barred by the statute of limitations was held not to preclude the enforcement of the lien against the other lots for the full amount of the assessment. marked "paid" on the record, as required by the municipal charter, is prima facie evidence, if not absolute proof of payment.[48] Where the liens of tax bills issued against separate lots for a street improvement are entirely separate and distinct from each other, and their individuality is preserved in a judgment rendered in an action to enforce them, one or more of them may be paid and released without effect upon the others.[49] The lien of a street assessment against property appropriated by the city for park purposes is merged in the higher title of the fee thereby acquired, and the city is entitled to retain the present value of assessments remaining unpaid from the amount assessed as compensation to the landowner.[50]

(§ 9) H. Enforcement and collection.[51] Mode of collection.[52]—Where the legislature specifically points out the mode by which assessments for benefits may be collected, a provision in the municipal council's order of assessment in conflict therewith is surplusage and without legal significance.[53]

Warrant and tax report.—A warrant issued by a county clerk to a city collector for the collection of a special assessment is not rendered invalid by the collector's placing upon it in red ink a memorandum showing that the property assessed had been sold for taxation after confirmation of the assessment, together with the name of the purchaser.[54] Where a statute requires a report of a special tax for local improvements to be made by the village clerk to the general officer of the county authorized to apply for judgment against and sell lands for taxation, the terms of the statute must be looked to, to determine what the report shall contain.[55]

Character of action and parties.—Statutory remedies must be confined to the particular liens or assessments to which they apply.[56] In Pennsylvania assumpsit will lie only when all statutory prerequisites are done to making the assessment a personal liability.[57] An ordinance in Pennsylvania requiring the owner of a sidewalk to lay a pavement thereon is a police regulation, and the amount expended in enforcing it may, in the absence of statutory remedy, be recovered in an action at common law.[58] But an assessment for the construction of a sewer or for paving the roadway of a street in front of a lot is a species of local taxation. The land itself is debtor and the assessment cannot be enforced by a suit at common law.[59] In determining the character of the action or proceedings for the enforcement of a delinquent assessment, by whom and in whose name it may be brought, and the necessary parties thereto, regard must be had to the terms of the statute or ordin-

56. A lien for the cost of removing a nuisance in Philadelphia is not enforced according to act of July 26, 1897, but by the unrepealed earlier acts. Philadelphia v. Sciple, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 64. The act of July 26, 1897, is strictly limited to the liens covered by it and repeals nothing outside that scope. Philadelphia v. Steward, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 72. Does not apply to lien for repairing sidewalk. Id. The act of June 4, 1901 (P. ance authorizing the assessment. The nature of the proceedings must be such as to comply with the due process of law clause of the Federal constitution.[60]

Service of summons and warning order.[61]—A statute requiring personal service of summons upon resident owners, in suits to enforce the payment of special assessments for at least twenty days before the rendition of the decree of sale, and providing for constructive service by publication upon nonresident owners of only four weeks, is not unconstitutional.[62] Where the suit is against nonresident owners, the fact that a warning order is not entered on the record or on the complaint will not make a decree of sale in such suit a violation of the constitutional inhibition against depriving of property without due process of law, where such entry is not, under the legal procedure, made jurisdictional.[63] In Pennsylvania where the proceeding is in rem against the land but notice is prescribed to all registered owners, a devisee pending scire facias is bound without notice if he fails to register.[64] A terre tenant who had no notice may open a default judgment on scire facias to show that the lien was already discharged.[65]

Pleading and proof.[66]—The general rule of pleading that every fact which it is necessary to prove to entitle the plaintiff to recover must be averred in the complaint applies to actions to enforce the payment of special assessments but with certain qualifications and limitations.[67] The complaint need not deny the existence of certain conditions where there is no pretense that such conditions exist.[68] What averments are necessary must in a large measure be determined by the terms of the statute under which the suit is brought.[69] Though an averment is but a legal conclusion, it is sufficient in the absence of a special demurrer or objection on that ground.[70] Where the complaint does not sufficiently show the nature of the

68. So held in an action under the Arkansas statute, Act of Feb. 15, 1893, as amended in 1895, to enforce the payment of levee taxes against nonresident owners where the defendants complained that the complaint was insufficient as an affidavit for service by publication. Ballard v. Hunter, 27 S. Ct. 261.

69. In an action under the Indiana statute, Acts 1901, p. 492, c. 218, it is sufficient, so far as the final assessment is concerned, to show in the complaint the amount and date thereof. Edwards v. City of Joplin v. Hollingshead [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 506.

70. The averment that a resolution ordering the improvement was duly passed is, in the absence of a special demurrer or objection on the ground that it is but a legal action, the remedy is by motion to make more specific.[71] A petition is good though it seeks to subject to the payment of the claim more land than is within the taxing district.[72] If the complaint substantially meets every requirement of the form authorized by statute, the mere fact that it goes further in setting out the performance of certain stautory requirements will not raise the presumption that other requirements as to which it is silent have not been performed.[73] An answer in an action to enforce the payment of an assessment or to foreclose an assessment lien must contain certain allegations of facts sufficient to support the defense set up by it.[74] Errors, defects, or irregularities in the improvement or assessment proceedings must be alleged in the answer.[75] An allegation in the complaint that the defendant's property is contiguous to the improvement, if not controverted by the answer, must be taken as true.[76] The allegation in the answer that the assessment was not made in the manner and form prescribed by law, not setting forth the particulars in which it was defective, is but the averment of a legal conclusion and not of a fact.[77] It is a presumption that the improvement and assessment proceedings were regular and valid,[78] and if in an action to enforce the payment of an assessment the defendant would rely upon any error, defect, or irregularity in the proceedings, the burden is upon him to show the same by affirmative evidence.[79] But such prima presumption may be overcome by affirmative evidence of defects or irregularities.[80] Under conclusion, sufficient to authorize the introduction of evidence on the issue. Pacific Pav. Co. v. Diggins [Cal. App.] 87 P. 415.

71. So held in a suit by a contractor under the Indiana statute, Acts 1901, p. 537, c. 231, § 6, where the complaint was so drawn as to make it uncertain whether the action was based on the lien created by the assessment for benefits or on bonds issued by the municipality in anticipation of the assessment. 79. So held in regard to proceedings subsequent to the ordering of the work. Beckett v. Morse [Cal. App.] 87 P. 408. Wiemers v. People, 225 Ill. 82, 80 N. E. 68; Hurd v. People, 221 Ill. 398, 77 N. E. 443.

80. Evidence of defect in proceedings held sufficient to overcome plaintiff's prima facie case. Flinn v. Strauss [Cal. App.] 87 P. 414. Where in an action to enforce the collection of tax bills issued against land for a local improvement the publisher's verified proof of the required publication of notice of the letting of the contract for the improvement is introduced in evidence, the burden of proof devolves upon the defendant to show any infirmity in the publication that will invalidate the liens of the tax bills. Copy of the newspaper in which the notice is alleged to be published, not containing the notice, is not sufficient for this purpose if it is not au-the provisions of some municipal charters, special tax bills issued in payment of municipal improvements are themselves prima facie evidence of all things essential to make out a case for the plaintiff in an action thereon.[81] A prima facie presumption exists that the benefits conferred by the improvement exceeded, or at least equaled, the assessment imposed, and that all property liable to be assessed was included in the assessment.[82] Under an Illinois statute secondary evidence of the location of lands is admissible on application for judgment of sale of such lands for delinquency in the payment of a special assessment.[83] Any defense set up must be sustained by evidence sufficient to support it and of such character as the law requires.[84] The evidence must be sufficient to support the findings of the court.[85]

Defenses.[86]—The owner of property assessed may contest the validity of an assessment whenever it is sought to be enforced.[87] It is a good defense to proceedings to enforce the payment of an assessment or special tax for a municipal improvement that the ordinance authorizing the improvement,[88] or the contract for its construction,[89] was void; or that the improvement as constructed was not a substantial compliance with the ordinance and contract therefor;[90] or that for some thenticated as being one of an edition put in circulation by the publisher. Ross v. Gates, 117 Mo. App. 237, 93 S. W. 856.

81. In an action by a contractor on special tax bills, when he has established the genuineness of the tax bills and the receipt therefor by him, he has established a prima facie case under the Kansas City charter. Jaicks v. Merrill [Mo.] 98 S. W. 753. Under the charter of Excelsior Springs, in an action to enforce special tax bills issued in payment of street improvements, the tax bills themselves are prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings for the special assessments of the validity of the bills of the doing of the work, of the furnishing of the materials charged, and of the liability of the property. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 120 Mo. App. 215, 96 S. W. 701. But such presumptions go no further than to cast the burden of proof on defendant to clearly show that the proceedings were not in substantial conformity to the requirements imposed by law. Id.

83. Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 30, § 35, and c. 109, § 2. People v. Wiemers, 225 Ill. 17, 80 N. E. 45.

84. Upon an application for judgment and order of sale of certain land to satisfy a delinquent sewer assessment, the defense was that the city at the time the assessment was levied had not acquired the land necessary to make the improvement, and proceedings to acquire the land had not been begun and prosecuted to judgment. It was held that a plan of the proposed improvement attached to and made part of the ordinance providing for the improvement, did not show facts sustaining such defense. Cline v. People, 224 Ill. 360, 79 N. E. 663. Proof by affidavit required by a city ordinance of the publication of a notice to nonresident property owners to construct sidewalks was not sufficient, but the fact of publication was sufficiently proven by other evidence. State v. Several Parcels of Land [Neb.] 107 N. W. 566. In proceedings for the sale of property to satisfy a delinquent special assessment, the defendant cannot avail himself of the defense that the county court was without jurisdiction to render the judgment confirming the assessment on account of the existence of facts set forth in a stipulation of the parties, where neither the judgment of confirmation nor the record of the confirmation proceedings is introduced in evidence. People v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 224 Ill. 191, 79 N. E. 628.

85. In an action to foreclose special assessments evidence held insufficient to support a finding that defendant was paid a consideration for signing a petition for the improvement. State v. Several Parcels of Land [Neb.] 110 N. W. 665.

86. See 6 C. L. 1171.

87. He is not deprived of this right by the provisions of the Greater New York Charter, precluding an action or special proceeding for affirmative relief. In re City of New York, 114 App. Div. 519, 100 N. Y. S. 140.

88. People v. Patton, 223 Ill. 379, 79 N. E. 51. But unless there is a total failure to include in an ordinance for a local improvement the necessary elements of a specification of the nature, character, locality, and description of the improvement required by statute, the mere fact that the specification is defective in some respect is not a defense to an application for judgment of sale of lands assessed. People v. Wiemers, 225 Ill. 17, 80 N. E. 45.

89. Where a contract for a local improvement is void because it tends to further monopoly and stifle competition, tax bills issued thereunder are void. Curtice v. Schmidt [Mo.] 101 S. W. 61. But a special tax bill is not void because the contract for the improvement required the contractor to observe an eight-hour labor ordinance. Id.; City of Boonville v. Stephens [Mo. App.] 95 S. W. 314. Under a general ordinance requiring all contracts for improvements to be completed within the time specified, tax bills cannot be collected to pay for work done under a contract entered into under an ordinance authorizing the same but setting no time limit for performance, where such work is not completed within the time specified in the contract itself. City of Springfield v. Schmook, 120 Mo. App. 41, 96 S. W. 257.

90. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 120 Mo. App. 215, 96 S. W. 701. The fact that full performance would be unduly burdensome or even impossible furnishes no excuse other reason the proceedings to levy the assessment were jurisdictionally defective.[91] But certain defects or irregularities in the proceedings to authorize the improvement or in the letting of the contract therefor have been held not to constitute a good defense to proceedings to enforce the payment of an assessment.[92] Under a in law for a failure to perform all of the conditions. Id. Facts under which it was held that there was no substantial difference between the improvements as authorized and as constructed. Id.; People v. Wiemers, 225 Ill. 17, 80 N. E. 45.

Modification of contract: Under Ky. St. 1903, §§ 3451-53-58, an abutting owner cannot defend against an assessment for paving on the ground that there has, with the consent of the city, been a modification of the contract, especially where the modification diminished the cost of the improvement and he has made no objection to the making of the improvement as modified. Lindsey v. Brawner, 29 Ky. L. R. 1236, 97 S. W. 1. A deviation from the true center of a street so that a minor portion of the roadway encroached on the sidewalk space was held not a defense, where the petition for paving conformed to the visible location of the graded way of the street and where no part of the roadway was outside the street lines. Montgomery's Estate v. Pittsburg, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 312.

91. Auditor General v. Stoddard [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1062, 110 N. W. 944.

Map of sewer changed after adoption by council: A property owner cannot be compelled to pay an assessment for benefits to his property arising from the construction of a sewer, where the map of the sewer and its connections were changed by the chief engineer after adoption by the council. In re Scranton Sewer, 213 Pa. 4, 62 A. 173.

A failure to publish notice inviting proposals for the construction of the improvement at the time required by statute will invalidate an assessment made for such improvement. Comstock v. Eagle Grove City [Iowa] 111 N. W. 51.

Failure to specify extent and dimensions of improvements: Under the charter of Excelsior Springs the failure of the city in advertising for bids and letting the contract for a street improvement to specify the extent and dimensions of the improvements was a failure to perform a condition prerequisite to the exercise of the right to levy an assessment, and, where it was not performed, the assessment cannot be enforced. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 120 Mo. App. 215, 96 S. W. 701.

Bid without affidavit: The failure of contractors for a public work to make with their bid an affidavit that the bid is genuine and not collusive or sham, as required by the charter of San Francisco, will render the contract and the assessment for the work done under it absolutely void. Flinn v. Strauss [Cal. App.] 87 P. 414.

Verbal contract without competitive bidding: Under the Missouri statute, Rev. St. 1899, §§ 5889, 5892, a verbal contract for a street improvement without competitive bidding and without an account kept of the items of cost was unauthorized, and a special assessment for the cost of the work cannot be enforced. City of Elsberry v. Black, 120 Mo. App. 20, 96 S. . 256.

Contract modified: Where after a contract for a sewer improvement was let it was modified by providing for a sewer of less depth, and the price was modified proportionately, it was held that the failure to advertise and let the contract as modified left the question of actual lawful cost of the sewer not susceptible of determination, and therefore that a decree could not be had against the owners assessed for the improvement, although a statute provided for a new assessment where the former one was invalidated by irregularity in the proceedings. Stewart Co. v. Flint [Mich.] 14 Det. Leg. N. 55, 111 N. W. 352.

Contractor given additional work without a bid: Assessment for a street improvement unauthorized and void where the charter and an ordinance of the municipality required contracts for such improvements to be let on a bid, and after the contract for the improvement was let on a bid, additional work was given out to the same contractor without a bid. Auditor General v. Stoddard [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1062, 110 N. W. 944. But the fact that a contract for a public improvement makes provision for work not included in the plans and specifications will not invalidate a special assessment where the contractor did not enlarge his bid on account of such additional work. Comstock v. Eagle Grove City [Iowa] 111 N. W. 51.

Noncompliance with statutory requirements as to bill of costs: Upon an application for a judgment and order of sale of a lot for failure to pay a special tax for a municipal improvement, the certificate of the bill of costs not being in compliance with the provisions of the Illinois statute, Laws 1875, p. 63, § 2 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 24, §§ 294-296c), the application was properly dismissed. People v. Patton, 223 Ill. 379, 79 N. E. 51.

Unauthorized delegation of power cured by subsequent ratification: An assessment for a street improvement is not void on account of an unauthorized delegation of authority to a street committee to determine the kind and character of the improvement where the proceedings of the committee were subsequent to the assessment ratified by acceptance of the improvement by the municipal council. Harton v. Avondale [Ala.] 41 So. 934.

92. The omission of a minor statutory requirement, in a petition for a street improvement, which is directory only, will not, ordinarily, defeat an assessment where objection to such omission was not seasonably taken. State v. Several Parcels of Land [Neb.] 110 N. W. 753. Thus an omission by a petitioner to note in the petition the date of his signature will not defeat an assessment after the improvement has been completed without objection by anybody. Id.

Delay in taking action on petition: Petitioners for a street improvement are not relieved from their obligation to pay an assessment therefor by reason of a delay of two years by the municipal council in taking action on the petition. Whipple v. Toledo, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 520.

Variance between resolution and ordinance: A variance between a resolution of Kentucky statute no error in proceedings of the general coucnil will exempt from payment of an assessment after the work has been done as required by either the ordinance or contract.[93] Certain provisions in contracts for public improvements which cannot affect the amount of assessments therefor have been held not to constitute a good defense to actions on the assessments.[94] An assessment is not affected by a void provision in the contract for the improvement at variance with the ordinance authorizing it.[95] A change in the law regulating the levying of assessments made while the petition for the improvement is pending before council does not necessarily have the effect of invalidating the assessment.[96] It is a good defense to an action on improvement certificates that such certificates were fraudulently issued.[97] In Louisiana a slight mistake in the amount of an assessment certificate issued to a municipal contractor, and recorded by him, will not preclude recovery on such certificate.[98] In Illinois a delay beyond the statutory period in filing the certificate of the date and amount of the first voucher will not prevent a delinquency intention to improve certain streets, and an ordinance passed in pursuance thereof as to the mode of payment for the improvement, will not invalidate assessments made therefor where the variance is a mere clerical error and cannot result in injury to any of the parties interested because all acted upon the theory that the ordinance did comply with the resolution, and such irregularity was corrected by a subsequent ordinance. Lister v. Tacoma [Wash.] 87 P. 126.

Change in ordinance establishing grade of street: An owner of property abutting on a street is not afforded such a grievance by a change in the ordinance establishing the grade of the street, made before he had incurred any expense in improving his property with reference to the grade first fixed, and before anything had, in fact, been done to change the surface of the street to conform to such grade, as will enable him to urge that an assessment against him is void because the change was not petitioned for as required by provision in the municipal charter. People v. Common Council, 99 N. Y. S. 657.

The report and schedules of the viewers in a proceeding under the Arkansas statute, Kirby's Dig. §§ 1414-1450, for the construction of a drain, held not so insufficient as to avoid the whole proceeding and render an assessment for the improvement invalid. Ritter v. Drainage Dist. No. 1 [Ark.] 94 S. W. 711.

Work let in one contract though authorized by separate ordinances: The fact that the entire work of improving a street and constructing a sewer was let in one contract for a single sum, though four separate ordinances were passed authorizing such work, did not invalidate the proceedings where the cost of each separate piece of work was ascertained and the assessments made separately for each. People v. Common Council, 99 N. Y. S. 657.

93. Ky. St. 1903, § 3100. Under this statute, after the work has been completed according to contract, it is no defense to an action to recover an assessment that the council left to the city engineer, the street committee, or the mayor any matter which it should have determined itself. Noland v. Mildenberger, 29 Ky. L. R. 1179, 97 S. W. 24.

94. The inclusion in a contract for a public improvement of an agreement on the part of the contractor to pay "the engineering expenses for laying out and superintending and issuing tax bills for the same" cannot affect the validity of assessments and tax bills for the improvement where the ordinance did not require the payment of such expenses by the contractor, and they were not included in the estimates filed by the engineer, and, therefore, could not have been taken into consideration in the bidding. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 120 Mo. App. 215, 96 S. W. 701. In an action to foreclose a street assessment lien, where the contract for the improvement was regularly let to the lowest bidder, the defendant cannot base a good defense on a provision in the contract for the improvement solely affecting the cost of the improvement to the contractor. So held where the contract contained a provision as to the pay and hours of labor of the employees of the contractor alleged to be unconstitutional. Flinn v. Peters [Cal. App.] 84 P. 995.

95. Where an ordinance for a municipal improvement requires the work to be completed within a certain number of days without condition or qualification and grants to the city engineer no authority to extend the time, a provision in a contract for the improvement authorizing such extension is void, and such variance cannot affect the validity of an assessment for the improvement and tax bills issued to pay for it. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 120 Mo. App. 215, 96 S. W. 701.

96. It was held not to have the effect where the petitioners did not abandon the effort to secure the improvement, and the validity of the assessment was based upon their agreement to pay it, and not upon any statute. Whipple v. Toledo, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 520.

97. The New Jereey statute, Act of April 8, 1903, does not preclude such defense. O'Nell v. Hoboken [N. J. Law] 63 A. 986.

98. Moody & Co. v. Sewerage & Water Board, 117 La. 360, 41 So. 649. A certificate issued in due form before the decision was rendered in Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Watt, 26 So. 70, 51 La. Ann. 1345, though for a larger amount than due under the rule of computation laid down in that decision, will hold good for the less amount actually due. Id.

arising if the proper proceedings are taken after it is filed.[99] An averment that a lot was not assessed for any one of the separate sums stated in the complaint is insufficient as a defense to an action for the aggregate of those sums, if such separate, sums could have been properly assessed against the lot for the proportion of the cost of the entire work.[1] One whose property is not taken for or damaged by an improvement cannot defeat an assessment for benefits accruing to his property from such improvement, on the sole ground that others, whose property has been taken or damaged, have waived their right to compensation in money and have accepted something else in lieu thereof.[2] In Illinois the fact that the county court for no authorized cause entered an order recalling a warrant which had been issued to the city collector for the collection of the amount due on a special assessment, and that no new warrant has been issued, is no defense to an application for judgment and order of sale against the property assessed.[3] The integrity of an assessment cannot be impeached by the unauthorized misrepresentation of a public officer concerning its amount.[4] The fact that a sewer is so built as to avoid creating a public nuisance will not prevent the levying of a tax for its construction upon a special assessment district.[5] When the particular ordinance which orders an improvement provides that it must be completed within a certain time and the prescribed time is exceeded, tax bills cannot be collected.[6] It is no defense to an action on tax bills for a paving improvement that the municipality neglected to enforce the obligation of a railway company to pave certain parts of the street.[7] Under a municipal ordinance imposing a perpetual lien for assessments the municipality has not the legal title to the property upon which the assessment is made, and the possession of the owner of such property, before foreclosure, can never be adverse to it.[8] No defense will avail unless the facts in evidence support it,[9] and whether a defense set up is a good one is sometimes to be determined from the circumstances of the particular case.[10] In New Jersey improvement certificates issued by a municipality are not

6. City of Springfield v. Schmook, 120 Mo. App. 41, 96 S. W. 257. The law seems to be the same way where the particular ordinance is silent regarding the time for completion, but there is a general ordinance relating to public improvements in force requiring the work to be performed within the agreed time. Id. But it is no defense to an action on special tax bills that the work was not completed within the time specified in the contract where the time for its completion was extended by the municipal council under a provision in the contract authorizing it to do so. Bridewell v. Cockerell [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 22. Paving contract construed and tax bills held not void on ground that work was not completed within time specified. Curtice v. Schmidt [Mo.] 101 S. 8. City of Hartford v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank [Conn.] 63 A. 658.

9. Work done in bad faith: That work on a street improvement was done in bad faith is not shown by the fact that after the contract was let and before the work was done the owner of property assessed served notice on the contractor and the city that the judgment of confirmation was erroneous, and that he would sue out a writ of error, the contractor having a right to proceed in reliance upon such judgment. City of Chicago v. Galt, 225 Ill. 368, 80 N. E. 285.

10. Allowance of rebates by contractors to property holders: The prohibition of the charter of New Orleans against the allowance or promise of allowance of rebates by paving contractors to property holders has no application to the remission of a trivial amount in a settlement made more than four years after the work had been completed and accepted, there being no evidence tending to show that such remission was made pursuant to any previous understanding or agreement between the parties. In re Ayers Asphalt Pav. Co. [La.] 43 So. 262.

Laches: Circumstances under which laches was not a good defense to an action to foreclose an assessment lien. City of Hartford v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank [Conn.] 63 A. 658.

barred by any statute of limitations.[11] Where a municipal ordinance enacted pursuant to a charter authorizing it imposes a perpetual lien for assessment, an action to foreclose such a lien will not be barred though an action on the assessment regarded as a debt would be barred by the statute of limitations.[12] A statute providing for the foreclosure of assessment liens in the manner in which tax liens are foreclosed does not impose the same limitations as to the time within which foreclosure proceedings must be brought.[13] Where a city charter provides for the enforcements of assessments by executions, the owner of property assessed cannot defeat the execution or delay the city in its collection by setting up a demand which he may have against it.[14]

Waiver of and estoppel to urge defenses.[16]—Irregularities in a special assessment for a public improvement may be waived [16] and in some states there are statutory provisions relating to such waiver.[17] One whose land has been assessed for a public improvement may by his conduct or acquiescence be estopped from objecting to the assessment on the ground of the invalidity of the original ordinance for the improvement,[18] or because there have been irregularities in the proceedings therefor,[19] or from contesting the discretionary power of the municipal authorities in deciding the propriety of substituting a new for an old pavement,[20] or from denying that a street had been dedicated to the public and on this ground defending against an assessment of land abutting thereon.[21] The signing by a property owner of a petition for the improvement of a street to a certain grade does not estop him from contesting the legality of an assessment for the improvement, where the original petition was referred back to the property owners with the direction to file a new petition for an improvement at a different grade, and the second petition was not signed by the contesting owner.[22] By failing to object at the proper time one may become estopped to attack a defect,[29] or by his failure to take an appeal there-

17. The provisions of the Iowa Code, § 824, relating to the waiver of objections to errors in the making of special assessments, "or in any of the prior proceedings or notices," are intended to cover errors and irregularities arising out of the exercise of a jurisdiction acquired, and have no relation to errors involving a want of jurisdiction. Comstock v. Eagle Grove City [Iowa] 111 N. W. 51.

18. Where a city has been permitted to go on and incur the expense of the improvement without objection as to the validity of the improvement ordinance, and it then proceeds to assess the benefits, it is too late for a party thus assessed to object to the assessment on the ground of the invalidity of the original ordinance. Durrell v. Woodbury [N. J. Law] 65 A. 198.

19. Property owners cannot lie by and see a local improvement progress to completion without any effort to stop it and then defeat the contractor in his suit upon the tax bills on the plea that there have been irregularities in the proceedings for the improvement. Jaicks v. Merrill [Mo.] 98 S. W. 753.

20. Under the charter of the city of Atlanta an abutting owner is estopped to contest by illegality such discretionary power after the new pavement has been laid, assessment made, and execution issued. Draper v. Atlanta, 126 Ga. 649, 55 S. E. 929.

22. Carlisle v. Cincinnati, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 46.

23. In Illinois objections that could have been raised in the proceedings for the making of the assessment, or at the hearing on the confirmation thereof, cannot be raised on application for judgment of sale of lands assessed unless they go to the jurisdiction of the court. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 406, § 66. Noonan v. People, 221 Ill. 667, 77 N. E. 930; People v. Wiemers, 225 Ill. 17, 80 N. E. 45. Thus an attempt to question the sufficiency of the estimate of the engineer is not available upon the application for judgment and order of sale. Noonan v. People, 221 Ill. 567, 77 N. E. 930. In Washington objections to mere irregularities in assessment proceedings must be made before the mu-from.[24] But where an omission in a public improvement proceeding is jurisdictional, and the landowner gives timely notice to the contractor that he will contest the assessment if the improvement is made, he will not be estopped to set up such omission as a defense to an action to enforce the assessment merely because he did enjoin the making of the improvement.[25]

The judgment.[26]—A judgment should describe the property and state the amount due,[27] but this may be done by reference to a schedule in the case,[28] and a reasonable construction is proper.[29] A finding by the court that the board of supervisors of a municipality did pass each and every resolution relating to the improvement mentioned in the complaint is to be regarded as the finding of a fact.[30] In an action upon a street assessment a finding by the court that a resolution ordering the improvement was "duly" passed is a determination that the municipal officers passing the resolution had jurisdiction to do so.[31] In Illinois it is essential that a copy of the published delinquent list be presented and filed as part of the record.[32] It is proper for the court to render a personal judgment against a railroad company in an action to recover an assessment of benefits for the improvement of a street under the Indiana statute.[33] Mistakes in ascribing the ownership of nicipal council, and one who has failed to thus raise them cannot raise them for the first time in an action to foreclose the assessment lien. City of Spokane v. Preston [Wash.] 89 P. 406. Property owners cannot defeat a contractor in his suit on the tax bills issued to pay for work done under a paving contract where the work has been been done according to the contract, the property owners have known of the work but have not notified the contractor that there was any defect in the proceedings authorizing the contract and have done nothing to stop the work, and where the ordinances have been substantially complied with. Jaicks v. Merrill [Mo.] 98 S. W. 753. To constitute an estoppel as to works of public improvement the owner must have known of the improvement, and of the infirmity or defect under which the proceedings were had which would render them invalid although not void, and that there is some special benefit to the owner's property distinct from that of the general public. Wood v. Hall [Iowa] 110 N. W. 270. Although generally speaking the doctrine of estoppel does not apply to public corporations such as counties, it does apply to the acts of private individuals who are attacking certain contracts made by public officers with private individuals. The doctrine does apply to cases involving works of public improvements. Id.

24. Under the laws of Arizona, Rev. St. pars. 478, 479, 483, property owners who fail to appeal to the district court within twenty days after the affirmation by the municipal council of the report of the assessment committee lose their remedy for correcting any errors in the assessment and cannot set up such errors as a defense in an action to collect the assessment. English v. Territory [Ariz.] 89 P. 501. If in an assessment under the California Street Improvement Act, subd. 7 (St. 1891, p. 202), a lot is assessed for more than its lawful proportion of the cost of the work, the error is waived by the failure of the lot owner to appeal to the city council. 30. Pacific Pav. Co. v. Diggins [Cal. App.] 87 P. 415. Where in an action upon a street improvement assessment the court finds that the resolution ordering the improvement had been duly passed by the board of supervisors, and from the evidence set forth in a statement of the case on a motion for a new trial it clearly appears that the board was without jurisdiction to order the improvement, a new trial should be granted. 32. On appeal from a judgment and order of sale entered against certain property for a special tax for a municipal improvement, it was held that the statutory requirement that the printed list of delinquent lands with the certificate of the publisher be presented when judgment is prayed and a copy thereof filed as part of the records of the court had not been complied with. Drennan v. People, 222 Ill. 592, 78 N. E. 937. Facts held not to aid defect. Id. lands in a decree of sale in a suit to enforce the payment of levee taxes, not increasing the taxation or casting that which should have been paid by one tract of land upon another tract, is not a deprivation of property without due process of law.[34] Nor is such constitutional inhibition violated by a decree, in such a suit, which erroneously includes costs not allowed by law.[35] The effect of a judgment of foreclosure, in an action to foreclose a lien for a street grade assessment, followed by a sale of the premises and a sheriff's deed to the purchaser, is to divest the title of the defendant.[36] Such a judgment is binding on one claiming under an unrecorded assignment of a certificate of purchase at a judicial sale, where his grantor was a party to the foreclosure action, and a lis pendens was duly filed therein.[37] A judgment in an action to enforce the collection of the first installment of a special assessment, when it has been reversed and the cause remanded is not res judicata in an action to enforce the collection of the second installment.[38] Where an asssessment judgment has been entered and has never been set aside, a second judgment for the same assessment is void, the court having no jurisdiction to award it.[39] It does not follow that an assessment is void because in another suit by a different party such a decision was allowed to become final.[40] Mere clerical miscalculations of the amount may be corrected.[41] The intentional act of a municipality in assessing property owners for the paving of a street which a railroad company is legally bound to pave, under a contract with the municipality, is a fraud against the property owners which will justify the court in vacating a judgment for such assessment at a subsequent term.[42] In Indiana in an action to collect assessments of benefits from a street improvement the amount found to be due by special finding is too large, the remedy is by motion for a new trial, assigning that as a cause, and not by motion to modify.[43]

A law allowing attorney's fees when suit is required is valid.[44]

The sale and redemption.[45]—Under some systems the sale for taxes merges all general and special taxes in one proceeeding.[46] Statutes for the summary sale of property for nonpayment of delinquent special assessments must be strictly pursued[47] and deed cannot pass till all conditions are met by the purchaser.[48] A sale which satisfies and cancels the assessment cannot be rectified if invalid by a reassessment authorized to correct invalidities in the assessment.[49]

Laws 1899, p. 234, c. 124), the purchaser being entitled only to be reimbursed what he paid with interest at ten per cent. Loeb v. Asberry [Wash.] 87 P. 510.

Settlement and compromise of suits involving the validity of local assessments may be entered into by city authorities, in Nebraska.[50]

(§ 9) I. Recovery back of assessments paid.—Unless in law the circumstances make the payment a voluntary one,[51] or the right to object has been waived,[52] over payments or payments compelled under a void assessment may be recovered.[53] In New York it is not necessary to first procure a vacation of the assessment.[54] In Illinois assumpsit lies for the abutter's share of surplus from an assessment fund after paying for the work done.[55] And the fact that the city has depleted such fund is no defense.[56] The pleadings should state the facts which make the assessment illegal.[57]

50. The provisions of § 4, art. 9, of the constitution of Nebraska, do not apply to special assessments to pay for local improvements levied upon the property benefited thereby; and municipal authorities have power to settle and compromise suits involving the validity of such special assessments, notwithstanding that section. Though a municipality has no authority to require the payment of interest on aseessments for a public improvement, if such interest is paid voluntarily under a mistake of law, it cannot be recovered back. City of Chicago v. McGovern, 226 Ill. 403, 80 N. E. 895. The provision of a local improvement act requiring the return to the property owners of the excess, where a larger sum has been collected than is needed for the construction of the improvement, has no application in such case. 53. Where the statute under which an assessment for municipal improvements is made is unconstitutional, and the assessment is paid under protest, it may be recovered back in an action of contract. Smith v. Boston [Mass.] 79 N. E. 786. The assessment may be recovered back in such case though a petition for a writ of certiorari to quash the assessment brought by another landowner affected thereby was dismissed, and though the benefit to petitioner's land from the improvement exceeded the amount of the assessment, and a person claiming under the plaintiff had made use of the improvement. In an action to recover back the amount of an assessment for street watering, an averment in the petition that the lot opposite the petitioner's estate is unoccupied, belongs to two owners, and is divided in the middle by a fence, is not equivalent to an averment that the petitioner's estate is not an occupied estate within the central portion of a large city. 59. The duly delegated county authorities in readjusting an assessment for benefits acts judicially and its act in designating a percentage of increase cannot be questioned collaterally. So held where a county board of equalization, acting under the Missouri statute (Rev. St. 1899, §§ 8449, 9131), increased an assessment for levee purposes. State v. Three States Lumber Co., 198 Mo. 430, 95 S. W. 333. Assessments for public improvements under the practice as it exists in Indiana are in the nature of judgments, and, in the absence of fraud, cannot be overthrown on collateral attack, except on the ground of a want of jurisdiction. Edwards v. Cooper [Ind.] 79 N. E. 1047. Under the Indiana statute (Acts 1901, p. 536, c. 231, § 4), relating to street improvements, when an assessment is once made by the common council, its validity cannot be questioned except by a direct appeal to the circuit court. Shirk v. Hupp [Ind.] 78 N. E. 242. Where no objections were made to the estimate of the cost of a street improvement and the apportionment of such cost to the abutting property according to frontage as made and returned by the engineer under section 4293, Burn's Ann. St. 1901, and the board of trustees approved the report, such assessment is valid and conclusive against collateral attack. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. Taber [Ind.] 77 N. E. 741. When it appears from the record that an inferior court of special and limited jurisdiction, before which proceedings for the construction of a public improvement are conducted, has once acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter and parties in the manner provided by statute, its orders, rulings, and judgments, are as invulnerable against collateral attack for error or irregularity in the proceedings, and are supported by the same presumptions of regularity, as if rendered by a court of general jurisdiction. Todd v. Crail [Ind.]

is informal and irregular;[60] but recitals of the doing of all prerequisities acts will not overcome a record showing of the contrary.[61] If jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the record of the court or judicial body before whom the proceedings were conducted, it may in Indiana be established by extrinsic evidence.[62] One failing to object because not party to the proceeding, may bring mandamus to compel reassessment on the ground of an invalid assessment.[63] One who procured the assessment to be made can not object that there was a preliminary defect of jurisdiction.[64]

The right to injunction may coexist with the right to a statutory stay of the assessment.[65] When a motion to vacate an assessment lies, mandamus is not the remedy.[66] Persons whose property is liable to be assessed for a local improvement may invoke the aid of a court of equity to restrain the execution of an unauthorized contract for such improvement[67] or any payment of money pursuant thereto.[68]

77 N. E. 402. Where a proceeding was commenced to construct a gravel road under the Indiana statute (Acts 1903, p. 265, c. 145), it was held that landowners whose lands were assessed for the improvement could not attack collaterally by injunction the proceedings before the board of county commissioners, in matters over which the board had jurisdiction. Id. Not reviewable in equity unless fraudulent. Johnson v. Pettit, 102 N. Y. S. 131. The city council of Omaha will not be restrained from passing an ordinance levying a special assessment, equalized by it when sitting as a board of equalization, in the absence of proof of fraud, gross injustice, or mistake in such equalization. Richardson v. Omaha [Neb.] 110 N. W. 648. Judgments in local assessment proceedings under the charter of the city of Mankato stand upon the same basis as judgments in ordinary tax proceedings and cannot be impeached in a collateral action by showing irregularities in the assessment proceedings. Willard v. Hodapp, 98 Minn. 269, 107 N. W. 954.

Admissibility of evidence: In an action by landowners to enjoin the levy of an assessment for the construction of a gravel road, it was not error to refuse to allow plaintiffs to introduce a part only of the viewers' report. Todd v. Crail [Ind.] 77 N. E. 402. In such an action evidence offered in support of averments of complaint charging fraud and irregularity in the viewer's report and other proceedings is not admissible. Id. In an action by landowners to enjoin the levy of an assessment for the construction of a gravel road, the introduction in evidence, several days after the evidence was closed, of the original petition for the road, etc., was within the sound discretion of the court. 60. Todd v. Crail [Ind.] 77 N. E. 402. Proceedings before commissioners for the construction of a road under the Indiana statute (Acts 1903, p. 255, c. 145), were sustained upon collateral attack by landowners whose lands were assessed for the improvement, although the final order did not state the kind, width, and extent, of the road as required by section 5 of the statute, where the intention to adopt the viewers' report, which described the road in detail, was manifest. Id.

61. The finding of a municipal council in the resolution ordering an assessment for a public improvement that all the previous steps required to be taken had been taken in conformity with law cannot prevail in a suit to restrain the collection of an assessment therefor over the undisputed facts appearing on the record showing affirmatively a want of jurisdiction. Comstock v. Eagle Grove City [Iowa] 111 N. W. 51.

62. So held in a collateral attack upon proceedings before board of commissioners for construction of gravel road under Indiana statute (Acts 1903, p. 255, c. 145). Todd v. Crail [Ind.] 77 N. E. 402.

63. Where a street improvement was made under the Washington statute (Laws 1899, p. 234, c. 124), and a contract made in pursuance thereof, it was held that the contractor was not a party to the assessment proceedings, in such a sense that his failure to raise objections thereto will estop him from questioning the validity of the assessment in a mandamus proceeding to compel a new assessment. 65. The Wisconsin statute (Rev. St. § 1210e, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 572, c. 364), does not prevent an action to enjoin the sale of land for nonpayment of a street improvement tax on the ground that the tax is illegal. Dahlman v. Milwaukee [Wis.] 110 N. W. 483.

66. Where in an assessment for local improvements in New York city under the New York Laws 1893, p. 1447, c. 644, making assessments for local improvements payable in yearly instalments, there is an error in determining the amount of interest due on an instalment, and the error is not the result of a mere clerical calculation, but is one of substance, made by the assessors in their determination of the procedure of assessment and impost, the method of review is by application to a justice of the supreme court to vacate the assessment and not by mandamus. Hagemeyer v. Grout, 113 App. Div. 472, 99 N. Y. S. 369.

67. City Council of Montgomery v. Barnett [Ala.] 43 So. 92. An injunction restraining a municipality from performing a contract as ultra vires, will not be granted where the bill fails to show that any acts have been done or any liability incurred under such contract. The fact that a court divides on the question whether property has been specially benefited in the amount of the assessment does not afford ground for disturbing the assessment in the absence of some of the grounds usually invoking equitable intervention.[69] Chancery can grant relief in assessment proceedings on the ground that the officers making the assessment were guilty of fraudulent conduct.[70] A suitor in equity for an injunction must offer equity by tendering what is concededly or justly due [71] and must be free from laches.[72] Injunction must be sought within the special limitation if any imposed on such action.[73] A limitation on "all proceedings" to vacate or reduce assessments has no application to mandamus proceedings to compel the proper officials to do the formal act of vacating on the books an assessment that has been adjudged void and vacated in a suit brought for that purpose.[74] If landowners have been put on inquiry as to the time and fact of the making and approval of an assessment roll, an action by them to annul such assessment made upon their lands must be commenced within a reasonable time.[75] In an injunction suit the assessments laid on the several plaintiffs may be aggregated to make up the

of a character likely to prejudice an abutting owner in a manner and degree not readily separable from the burdens which might lawfully be imposed upon him, the payment of any money or the issue of any special assessment certificates or improvement bonds to the contractor should be enjoined. 70. Hudlemyer v. Dickinson, 143 Mich. 250, 12 Det. Leg. N. 1000, 106 N. W. 885. Complainant held entitled to an injunction restraining officers charged with the duty of making an assessment of benefits for drains from including his land in the assessment district, and other relief, the proof showing fraudulent conduct on the part of such officers. 71. An objection to a special assessment which goes simply to its amount and not to its validity, and is accompanied by no offer to pay the amount conceded to be just, will not justify the interference of a court of equity. Corey v. Ft. Dodge [Iowa] 111 N. W. 6. One whose property has been benefited by the construction of a sewer, and who has neither paid nor offered to pay any part of the cost of the improvement, will be denied all relief in an action to enjoin the collection of a special tax levied to pay for the construction of the sewer. City of Paola v. Russell [Kan.] 89 P. 651.

72. A court of equity will not restrain the collection of a special assessment where the complainant has stood by and permitted a special improvement to be made, knowing that such improvement is to be compensated by a special assessment upon a district in which his property is located. Stewart Co. v. Flint [Mich.] 14 Det. Leg. N. 55, 111 N. W. 352. Where an abutting owner stands by until a municipal street improvement is completed, knowing his rights, and does not take those steps which are open to him, but suffers money to be expended by the contractor with the city, and his property is benefited thereby, he impliedly consents that an assessment may be made against his property for the improvement, and whether it is legal or not is estopped from enjoining its collection. Boswell v. Marion [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1056. Where an abutting owner appeared before the council and objected to the acceptance of a municipal street improvement on the ground that it had not been completed according to plans and specifications but made no other objection, he was held estopped from enjoining the collection of an assessment on his property on the ground that proper steps to authorize the assessment had not been taken. Id. The collection of a tax for a street improvement will not be restrained at the suit of taxpayers where the suit was not instituted, and no legal measures were taken, until the improvement had been fully completed, the cost and expense incurred, and the benefit therefrom realized and enjoyed. Shaw v. Ypsilanti [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 922, 110 N. W. 40. In an action by abutting owners to restrain a municipality from levying an improvement assessment and issuing certificates based thereon, on the ground of the failure of the contractor to perform his contract, the fact that the character of the work done was known to the plaintiff while it was in process of construction and no objection was made, and that in response to a notice published pursuant to a resolution of the city council, none of the plaintiffs appeared and filed objections to the work, will not estop them from insisting that the contractor had not complied with his contract. Wingert v. Snouffer [Iowa] 108 N. W. 1035.

73. In Kansas the validity of an assessment for special improvements authorized by the mayor and council of a city of the first class, when the proceedings upon their face are regular in form, cannot be attacked by an action to enjoin the collection and assessment, unless the action is brought within thirty days from the time the amount of the assessment is ascertained. Gen. St. 1901, § 766. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Kansas City [Kan.] 85 P. 603.

74. The statute construed in this case was the New York statute (Laws of 1903, p. 1106, c. 482, § 6), constituting part of the charter of a municipality. People v. Brush, 101 N. Y. S. 312.

jurisdictional amount in controversy.[76] Such an injunction does not tend to stop ordinary business of the corporation and the notice required by statute in suits so tending need not be given.[77] In Wisconsin the holder of the tax certificate must be brought in as a party.[78] In Iowa tax sale purchasers after suit begun need not be brought in.[79] The plaintiff has the burden of proving the vitiating facts.[80] Where a bill filed to restrain the collection of special assessments is silent upon the question of notice to the property owners of the assessment, it will be presumed that proper notice had been given.[81]

The injunction must not be so worded as to forbid the lawful exercise of power to correct the illegality.[82] An assessment for a street improvement may be enjoined in so far as it includes damages awarded to the property owners, or the costs of a suit to assess compensation therefor, or the cost of grading or lowering the street to the new grade.[83]

(§ 9) K. Appeal and other direct review.[84]—The general questions pertinent to Appeal and Review are treated in that topic.[85] The right of appeal is statutory[86] and must be taken within the time prescribed if any.[87] Presumptions favor the record of what was done,[88] but defects apparent on the record cannot be thus overcome.[89] Nonjudicial personal communications are not to be made the basis of review.[90] When the return to a writ or certiorari to review an assessment for a mu-

If an assessment under the California Street Improvement Act, subd. 7 (St. 1891, p. 202) is not made in accordance with the provisions of the statute, or is not authorized by it, the only remedy is an appeal to the city council. Beckett v. Morse [Cal. App.] 87 P. 408. An order sustaining objections in proceedings for the confirmation of a special assessment is a final and appealable order, for it defeats the entire proceedings, making it necessary to start them over again. Iroquois & Crescent Drainage Dist. v. Harroun, 222 Ill. 489, 78 N. E. 780.

87. Advertisement of assessment held not to be notice of a perfected assessment, and therefore not to start the running of the period of limitation, under the Connecticut statute (Sp. Laws 1893, p. 138, Act. No. 113, §§ 3, 4), conferring a right of appeal from appraisals to be exercised within ten days after notice. Velhage v. Stanley, 78 Conn. 520, 63 A. 347.

88. That the estimate of the cost of the improvement contains no improper items. McChesney v. Chicago, 226 Ill. 238, 80 N. E. 770. On an appeal from a judgment sustaining an assessment, claimed to have been invalid because based on a frontage greater than the actual frontage, it was held that the trial judge in finding the issues for the defendant may properly have regarded the finding of the committee appointed to try the issues as not amounting to a finding that the measurements testified to by plaintiff's engineer were correct. Newell v. Bristol, 78 Conn. 571, 63 A. 355.

89. Where the city in its pleadings claimed to have constructed the sewer under an ordinance that the court found to be invalid, the cancellation of the assessment was held proper. Cook v. Independence [Iowa] 110 N. W. 1029.

nicipal improvement is silent as to material allegations of facts contained in the petition, the presumption is that the officers making the return intended to admit such allegations.[91] The return should be supplied on certiorari with additional matters of record proper to be considered.[92] In the writ of review given by the Oregon statute, the practice in framing the petition for the writ [93] and on motion to quash [94] is similar to ordinary certiorari. The nature and scope of the review is determined by ordinary rules in respect to common-law remedies [95] and by the statute giving the remedy in others.[96]

Province of Court and Jury in General (1567). | Particular Facts or Issues (1569).

Scope of topic.—Only the general principles with a few illustrative applications are here treated. Whether particular facts or issues are questions of law or fact are treated in the topic to which they are germane.[97] The propriety of taking a case from the jury is also elsewhere treated,[98] as is the revisory power of appellate courts over decisions of questions of fact.[99] permissible for such officer to appear privately before the tribunal having jurisdiction to hear the appeal and discuss matters that are before it for determination. So held on an appeal from the drain commissioner to the board of review. Hudlemyer v. Dickinson, 143 Mich. 250, 12 Det. Leg. N. 1000, 106 N. W. 885.

91. People v. Desmond, 186 N. Y. 232, 78 N. E. 857. Upon certiorari to review a sewer assessment, a general allegation in the return that the sewer "as laid is a benefit to the property owners equally upon both sides of the street" does not controvert the specific averments of the petition that petitioner's property already had sufficient drainage by a pre-existing sewer, the cost of which had been paid by them and their grantors, and, therefore, the allegations of the petition will be deemed admitted. Id.

92. Upon a review by certiorari of an assessment for benefits conferred by a street improvement, it was held that before determining the cause a rule should be granted under the certiorari act (P. L. 1903, p. 346, § 12), requiring the board of assessments to make a certificate to the court concerning such essential matters as were omitted from their report to the council. Burnett v. Boonton [N. J. Law] 63 A. 995.

93. Upon a reassessment of property for street improvements, it is not proper under the Oregon statute (B. & C. Comp. § 596), to attach to a petition for a writ of review numerous exhibits which are copies of the record or proceedings to be reviewed. Gaston v. Portland [Or.] 84 P. 1040.

94. Upon a writ of review in a reassessment case, if a motion to quash the writ is necessary or permissible under the Oregon Code, the proper procedure is to file the same on the return day after the return of the writ. Gaston v. Portland [Or.] 84 P. 1040. Where in a reassessment case a petition is filed for a writ of review, under a motion to quash the writ, the allegations of the petition are taken as true, and it will only be necessary to ascertain whether the petition states facts sufficient to warrant the issuance of the writ. Id.

95. In New York questions relating to the justice and equality of assessments for street improvements not raised before the assessor on grievance day, cannot be reviewed on certiorari. People v. Common Council, 99 N. Y. S. 657. Where on appeal from the action of a municipal council in assessment proceedings the evidence as to the value of the lots assessed was conflicting, the supreme court will not disturb the findings of the trial court unless clearly against the weight of the evidence. Bally v. Sioux City [Iowa] 110 N. W. 839. Ordinarily the question whether property will be especially benefited by a street improvement is one of fact for the determination of a local board or officer making it, and, in the absence of fraud, mistake, or a transgression of authority, such determination will not be reviewed by the courts. State v. Several Parcels of Land [Neb.] 110 N. W. 753. Under the Illinois statute (Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 24, § 553), the rulings of the court in regard to the admission of testimony in reference to the distribution of the cost of a street improvement between the public and the property benefited in proceedings for the levying of an assessment cannot be reviewed on appeal. Chicago Consol. Trac. Co. v. Oak Park, 225 Ill. 9, 80 N. E. 42.

96. On a reassessment of property, the court cannot upon a writ of review under the Oregon statute (B. & C. Comp. § 603), dismiss the proceedings, they must be acted upon in accordance with the statute. Gaston v. Portland [Or.] 84 P. 1040.

Province of court and jury in general.[1]—It is the province of the jury to determine issues of fact [2] and of the court to decide questions of law.[3] Whether there is any legally sufficient evidence is for the court,[4] which question is presented at the close of the evidence in every case in the Federal courts;[5] but there being such evidence [6] its sufficiency to establish the issue is for the jury,[7] who are the sole [8] judges of the credibility of the witnesses [9] and of the weight to be given to the evidence,[10] hence it is error to direct a verdict in favor of the party having the burden where the evidence is parol.[11] It is error to submit to the jury an issue which is not in the case [12] or not supported by legally sufficient evidence.[13] While it is for

1. See 6 C. L. 1178.

2. Liability of defendant to be sued in a particular county as dependent upon the fact of participation in trespass and conversion of mortgaged property. American Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 569, 92 S. W. 439.

3. In an action for damages due to a street car striking a vehicle and knocking it against plaintiff's wagon, an instruction telling the jury that if the motorman negligently caused the car to strike the vehicle and throw it against plaintiff's wagon, thereby doing damage, he could recover, is not objectionable as submitting a question of law to the jury. Steinmann v. St. Louis Transit Co., 116 Mo. App. 673, 94 S. W. 799.

4. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Murray [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 144; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Ass'n, 73 N. H. 556, 64 A. 190.

5. Crookston Lumber Co. v. Boutin [C. C. A.] 149 F. 680. And in passing thereon, the evidence must be construed most favorable to plaintiff and all reasonable inferences allowed (Id.), and the undisputed evidence must be so conclusive that only one reasonable inference can be drawn therefrom and that the court would be obliged to set aside a verdict in opposition to it before a verdict can be directed (Id.).

6. Where the evidence was sufficient to create more than a suspicion of plaintiff's right to recover, it is proper to submit the issue to the jury. Clark v. Wilson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 770, 91 S. W. 627.

Evidence held sufficient for the jury: Violation of a speed ordinance and failure to give warning signals. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Murray [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 144. Identity of the point measured with the place where plaintiff was injured. Culver v. South Haven & E. R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 719, 109 N. W. 256. Evidence in support of adverse possession. Ball v. Loughridge [Ky.] 100 S. W. 275. Financial ability of a purchaser obtained by a broker to buy the property. Clark v. Wilson [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 770, 91 S. W. 627. Evidence that decedent was furnished an unsafe place to work by his employer. Meade v. Ashland Steel Co. [Ky.] 100 S. W. 821.

Evidence held insufficient: As to misrepresentations and concealment of the extension of a note. Collins v. Kelsey [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 955, 97 S. W. 122. That a contract to erect a house was a mere pretence and that the contractee was in fact a mere superintendent. Rheam v. Martin, 26 App. D. C. 181.

7. Meade v. Ashland Steel Co. [Ky.] 100 S. W. 821; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Murray [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 144; Continental Lumber Co. v. Munshaw & Co. [Neb.] 109 N. W. 760; Parmelee Co. v. Wheelock, 224 Ill. 194, 79 N. E. 652.

8. The weight of evidence being for the jury, an instruction that, in determining the amount of timber of a certain kind on a tract of land, the testimony of one who cut the timber should be given preference to expert estimates held erroneous. Coulter v. Thompson Lumber Co. [C. C. A.] 142 F. 706.

9. American Life Ins. Co. v. Melcher [Iowa] 109 N. W. 805; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Henry [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 636. It is error to direct a verdict in face of substantial evidence on the ground that the witness is not worthy of belief. Waters v. Davis [C. C. A.] 145 F. 912. The jury need not accept the testimony of a party as establishing the facts though he is unimpeached and there is no contradictory evidence. Burleson v. Tinnin [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 350. The mere fact that only the parties to an alleged contract testify does not necessarily entitle him to a verdict. Murphy v. Hiltibridle [Iowa] 109 N. W. 471.

10. Husenetter v. Little [Neb.] 110 N. W. 541; American Life Ins. Co. v. Melcher [Iowa] 109 N. W. 805; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Ass'n, 73 N. H. 556, 64 A. 190. Though the court is of the opinion that weight thereof favors defendant. Chicago Union Trac. Co. v. Lowenrosen, 222 Ill. 506, 78 N. E. 813. In an action for the death of one killed by a train, an instruction leaving it to the jury to determine whether a speed ordinance was being violated at the time, and, if so, then declaring defendant guilty of negligence, is not objectionable as on the weight of the evidence. Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Frugia [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 724, 95 S. W. 563.

11. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Henry [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 636.

12. Submission of issue not in issue. Walker v. Tomlinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 157, 98 S. W. 906. Issue admitted by the parties. Kampman v. McCormick [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 1147. The admission of evidence inadmissible under the pleadings without objection will not sustain a charge thereon. Moody & Co. v. Rowland [Tex.] 99 S. W. 1112.

13. Authority or ratification of a wrongful act of an agent. Gambill v. Fuqua [Ala.] 42 So. 735. Question of custom. Wilson v. Griswold [Conn.] 63 A. 659. Negligence. Hoffman v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 214 Pa. 87, 63 A. 409. Willful commission of acts endangering own life and those of others contrary to statute. Wilmington Star Min. Co. v. Fulton, 27 S. Ct. 412. Where the evidence shows without controversy that plaintiff was not a partner of one not joined as plaintiff and that defendant could not the jury to determine conflicting evidence [14] and to draw conclusions from established facts where reasonable minds might differ in respect thereto,[15] the court may decide an issue where the evidence is undisputed [16] and will permit of but one reasonable inference.[17] The competency of a witness is a preliminary question for the court.[18] suffer by the nonjoinder of such party, it is not error to refuse to submit the question of partnership to the jury. Lasher v. Colton, 225 Ill. 234, 80 N. E. 122.

14. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Henry [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 636; Osborne v. Boston Ice Co., 191 Mass. 596, 77 N. E. 1033; Sheker v. Machovec [Iowa] 110 N. W. 1055. Whether false representations were made. Cascade Foundry Co. v. Mueller Furnace Co., 140 F. 791. Whether plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's train. Chicago Union Trac. Co. v. Lowenrosen, 222 Ill. 506, 78 N. E. 813. Whether signals were given by the defendant's train which killed plaintiff's decedent. Detroit Southern R. Co. v. Lambert [C. C. A.] 150 F. 555. Whether buggies were tendered in the condition called for by the contract of settlement. Capital City Carriage Co. v. Moody [Iowa] 110 N. W. 903. Knowledge of and participation in a fraudulent scheme of a widow to appropriate moneys belonging to deceased husband's estate by the debtor. Paulus v. O'Neill [Wis.] 111 N. W. 333. Error for the court to hold a contract void and direct the return of a portion of the consideration retained where there was a conflict of evidence of an accord and satisfaction. Conte v. New York, 101 N. Y. S. 491. Where the evidence in regard to whether a promise was original or collateral is so conflicting that a verdict thereon for either party could not be set aside as without evidence to support it or as plainly against the weight and preponderance of the evidence, the question is one of fact for the jury. Johnson v. Bank [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 394. In trespass alleged to have been committed by one acting on behalf of defendant, an affirmative charge for defendant cannot be given where the evidence tends strongly to show that he was so acting, though susceptible of some doubt. Syson Timber Co. v. Dickens [Ala.] 40 So. 753.

15. Williams v. Sleepy Hollow Min. Co. [Colo.] 86 P. 337; Harrison Granite Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 145 Mich. 712, 13 Det. Leg. N. 631, 108 N. W. 1081; Cascade Foundry Co. v. Mueller Furnace Co., 140 F. 791; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Henry [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 636; Nolan v. Bridgeton & Millville Trac. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 992; Dederick v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Law] 65 A. 833; Mumma v. Easton & A. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 208; Merritt v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 925, 94 S. W. 372.

Held for jury: Blowing off of steam under a wagon bridge. Mumma v. Easton & A. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 208. Whether defendant mine owner was not negligent in not discovering the dangerous condition of his mine from the close proximity of a mine filled with water. Williams v. Sleepy Hollow Min. Co. [Colo.] 86 P. 337. Question whether in the incorporation of Del Rio more territory had been included than was intended to be used for strictly town purposes, contrary to Acts 24th Leg. (Laws 1895), p. 17, c. 16, § 1, and Acts 25th Leg. (Laws 1895), p. 193, c. 131, held under the facts for the jury. Merritt v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 925, 94 S. W. 372. Where a foreman negligently failed to take precautions to guard against the tipping of a girder while being raised, and it was tipped by the slipping of a lever, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the proximate cause of the resulting injury was the slipping of the lever rather than the failure to guard against such actions. Bokamp v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 689.

16. Negative evidence of persons not in a position to sense the fact in issue does not create a conflict. Hoffard v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 446. Testimony of three witnesses, half a mile from the scene and behind closed doors engaged in other affairs, that they did not hear train signals given does not create a conflict where six persons testify that they were given. Id. Where the evidence on one side of a controverted question of fact accords with what must necessarily have been the case under given undisputed circumstances, based on natural law, the determination is for the court and not the jury (Chybowski v. Bucyrus Co., 127 Wis. 332, 106 N. W. 833), as is the question whether such a situation exists (Id.). From the mechanism of a steam hammer held so contrary to natural laws that it should strike two blows where only one was desired, to make a question for the court, though there is testimony that it did so strike. Id.

17. Parker v. Fairbanks-Morse Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 409. Where a newly constructed scaffolding collapsed under the weight of an employe using it in the ordinary manner, the court should instruct as a matter of law that the employer had failed to provide a safe place to work. Id. Court held authorized under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4994, to direct a verdict, there being no conflict of testimony and no evidence to support the defense interposed. Sessions v. Warwick [Wash.] 89 P. 482. Where the removal was only for a few months and there was no evidence of any intention to abandon, an instruction that the continuity of adverse possession was not broken held proper. Roberson v. Downing Co., 126 Ga. 175, 54 S. E. 1020. Where the evidence clearly and undisputably established an extension of a note, the court should declare such fact and not submit it to the jury. Collins v. Kelsey [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 955, 97 S. W. 120. Where a tenant took possession under a lease from an adverse claimant and never thereafter surrendered possession so as to claim adversely, and testifies positively that she did not claim adversely, the court may declare that the continuity of the adverse claimant's possession was not broken, even though the tenant consulted a lawyer about setting up adverse title (Roberson v. Downing Co., 126 Ga. 175, 54 S. E. 1020), and though she paid taxes thereon, where she testifies that they were paid by her in consideration of her use of the premises (Id.).

18. Cleveland v. Rowe, 99 Minn. 444, 109 N. W. 817.

Particular facts or issues.[19]—It is the province of the court to determine the meaning, legal effect,[20] and nature,[21] unless affected by customs[22] of written instruments, but where they do not constitute an agreement, inferences to be drawn therefrom are for the jury,[23] as is also the construction of a foreign statute by the courts of such state where the evidence consists of parol testimony.[24]

Assumption of risk,[25] negligence,[26] and contributory negligence,[27] are essentially questions of fact for the jury to be taken from them only where the facts are undisputed and such that reasonable minds draw but one inference from them,[28] or where the act is per se negligent, as in violation of an ordinance, etc.[29]

19. See 6 C. L. 1180.

20. Error to submit it to the jury. Rheam v. Martin, 26 App. D. C. 181. Where a statement of claim contains a copy of the contract upon which the action is based and all the accounts between the parties and the affidavit of defense denies not material averment in the statement, the case is for the court (Ryon v. Starr, 214 Pa. 310, 63 A. 701), although the affidavit denies the inferences to be drawn therefrom (Id.).

21. Whether contract was a conditional sale. Staunton v. Smith [Del.] 65 A. 593.

22. Question whether telegrams under trade customs constitute a sale or merely authorized a sale as a broker held properly left to the jury. Morris & Co. v. Schaefers [Ky.] 100 S. W. 327.

23. Where letters between an insured and the insurer relative to an appraisement did not amount to a compact but would permit of a conclusion that neither was sincere in respect to the arbitration, the inference to be drawn therefrom was for the jury. Carp v. Queen Ins. Co., 116 Mo. App. 528, 92 S. W. 1137.

24. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Conrad [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 209.

25. While the question of assumption of risks is often for the court, it is for the jury where different inference may be drawn from the facts by reasonable minds. Meade v. Ashland Steel Co. [Ky.] 100 S. W. 821.

26. Davidson Steamship Co. v. U. S., 27 S. Ct. 480. Where the measure of duty is ordinary and reasonable care, negligence is always a question for the jury. Williams v. Sleepy Hollow Min. Co. [Colo.] 86 P. 337. Where the nature and attributes of the act relied upon to show negligence can only be correctly determined by considering all the surrounding circumstances and facts, it falls within the province of the jury to characterize it. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 64 A. 304.

Held for jury: Negligence of a hospital in not warning an apprentice nurse of the contagious character of the disease. Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Ass'n, 73 N. H. 556, 64 A. 190. Whether a master furnished enough men to do a piece of work in a safe manner. Bokamp v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 689. Failure to provide a safe place for servant to work. Martin v. South Covington & C. St. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 148, 92 S. W. 571. Negligence of a mine owner to guard and protect the men against known dangers from accumulated waters in an adjoining mine. Williams v. Sleepy Hollow Min. Co. [Colo.] 86 P. 337. Providing sufficient fastenings for gate at farm crossing. Roberts v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 372, 94 S. W. 838. Leaving of telephone wire down in a public street for twelve hours. Citizens' Tel. Co. v. Thomas [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 879. An instruction that where the negligence of two unite in causing an accident, it is no defense to one to show that the other was to blame, held not objectionable as assuming negligence on the part of two. Parmelee Co. v. Wheelock, 224 Ill. 194, 79 N. E. 652.

27. Powers v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 100 S. W. 655; Fetterman v. Rush Tp., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 77.

Held for the jury: Driving into a hole in a road. Nolan v. Bridgeton & Millville Trac. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 992. Using a scaffolding without examining it. Parker v. Fairbanks-Morse Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 409. Continuing to work in mine after being informed of reports of danger from water accumulated in an adjoining mine. Williams v. Sleepy Hollow Min. Co. [Colo.] 86 P. 337. Negligence of a motorman in running his car upon the track in front of an approaching train. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 64 A. 304. Whether a boy eleven and one-half years old was guilty of contributory negligence in crossing street car tracks immediately after a car had passed without looking to see if it was followed by another. Deschner v. St. Louis & M. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 737. Negligence of plaintiff after receiving a belated message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Salter [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 362, 95 S. W. 549.

28. Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Higgins [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 200; Mortimer v. Beaver Valley Trac. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 758; Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Frugia [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 724, 95 S. W. 563; Brown v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Wash.] 86 P. 1053; Deschner v. St. Louis & M. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 737; Parmelee Co. v. Wheelock, 224 Ill. 194, 79 N. E. 652. A plaintiff can be charged with contributory negligence as a matter of law only when, assuming all evidence in his favor true, and drawing all legitimate favorable inferences therefrom, the act is so decisively negligence that ordinary minds would not differ in so declaring. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 64 A. 304.

Held not negligent as a matter of law: For a switchman to go between the cars to uncouple them instead of going to the other side and using the coupling rod. Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Higgins [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 200. One intoxicated but not deprived of his faculties in attempting to cross a track in front of an approaching train. Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Frugia [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 724, 95 S. W. 563.

Negligent as a matter of law: Cleaning of a pulley of a log carriage to a saw mill by standing on the track in front of the saw with full knowledge that the carriage was liable to start. Crookston Lumber Co. v.

Questions of knowledge [30] or what a person should have known,[31] intention,[32] performance of contract,[33] damages,[34] identity of parties,[35] reasonableness of time within which to act,[36] and election,[37] are facts for the jury, but whether a particular device or character constitutes a seal,[38] what are proper costs and by whom payable,[39] in whom title vested upon final extension thereof by the governor,[40] and, the evidence being undisputed, the sufficiency of a deed to pass title,[41] the defense of limitations,[42] the existence of a contract,[43] and proximate cause,[44] are questions of law for the court. Legal domicile [45] and waiver of the right to declare a forfeiture of a contract under the terms thereof [46] are mixed questions of law and fact.

but if an instrument create a cloud it is immaterial to plaintiff's right to sue for its removal that he was not a party thereto.[49] A statute giving a right of action as to lands not in possession is not an infringement upon the exclusive jurisdiction of the common-law courts,[50] and the action is equitable in its nature notwithstanding the fact that by statute it may be commenced by one not in possession,[51] consequently the action does not lie where plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law,[52] but it has been held that the fact that complainant has a remedy by way of ejectment does not oust equity of jurisdiction where equity would have had jurisdiction prior to the extension of the legal remedy,[53] and the fact that complainant may have an adequate remedy at law in the state courts will not deprive the Federal courts of jurisdiction.[54] The action being equitable, plaintiff may be required to do equity as a condition to relief.[55] But where in an action to remove an outlawed pellate court is final. Harley v. Sanitary Dist., 226 Ill. 213, 80 N. E. 771.

48. The fact that a defendant claiming no interest in the land in controversy may avoid the burden and risk of defending by disclaiming does not affect the rule that in order to maintain the action the adverse claim made by defendant must be such as to constitute a cloud on complainant's title. Merritt v. Alabama Pyrites Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 1028. Plaintiff commenced an action against the heirs of a former owner of the property and against the holder of a tax deed who had agreed to convey to him; but asked no affirmative relief against the latter. Held, upon plaintiff purchasing the adverse title of the heirs, the action should be dismissed, there being no cloud to be removed from plaintiff's title. Sternberger v. Ladd [Colo.] 88 P. 872.

50. A statute providing that where lands are in the possession of no one they shall be presumed to be in the peaceable possession of one who claims same in fee under a recorded instrument and who shall have paid taxes thereon for five consecutive years, and authorizing such person to bring an action in equity to try title to same, is constitutional. It does not infringe upon the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of common law, as at common law the courts could not entertain such an action, the defendant not being in possession. McGrath v. Norcross [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 998.

52. The action does not lie where the complainant has an adequate remedy by way of specific performance or an equitable action for a rescission. Recorded contract of sale under which the vendee has defaulted. McClave v. McGregor [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 1066. Where a week before the bill was filed defendant plowed the land in question for a half day for the purpose of cultivation, which fact was known to complainant at the time the bill was filed, held it was incumbent upon complainant to exercise at least a reasonable effort to procure the necessary evidence upon which to base an action at law before applying for the statutory remedy to quiet title under the claim of a peaceable possession. Steelman v. Blackman [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 715. A grantor who has conveyed premises in consideration of an agreement to support has an adequate remedy at law by way of ejectment upon a breach of the condition and an action to cancel the deed as a cloud on her title does not lie. Mash v. Bloom [Wis.] 110 N. W. 203. The deed of a married woman given to secure the debt of the husband being void, not being in possession, she has an adequate remedy at law by ejectment and an action to quiet title does not lie. Patterson v. Simpson [Ala.] 41 So. 842. A defendant against whom judgment in an ejectment suit was entered and whom a sheriff threatens to oust under a writ of possession, which does not cover the lands in suit, has an adequate remedy at law and the action will not lie. Bolen v. Allen [Ala.] 43 So. 202. Remedy at law by ejectment held inadequate as necessitating a second action in equity to annul the legal title held by defendant. Coleman v. Jaggers [Idaho] 85 P. 894. A bill in equity to quiet title to land lies at the suit of one in possession as he is without a remedy at law. Wilmore Coal Co. v. Brown, 147 F. 931. Smith Oyster Co. v. Darbee & Immel Oyster & Land Co., 149 F. 555; North Carolina Min. Co. v. Westfeldt, 151 F. 290.

53. Under the West Virginia Code, ejectment lies at the suit of one in possession against one not in possession. Whitehouse v. Jones [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 730. A statute giving a remedy by ejectment does not deprive equity of jurisdiction over a bill to quiet title. Pennsylvania statutes, Acts May 25, 1893 (P. L. 131), and June 10, 1893 (P. L. 415), gives one in possession the right to require one not in possession but claiming title to bring ejectment. Hutchinson v. Dennis [Pa.] 66 A. 524.

54. The fact that a plaintiff in possession may have an adequate remedy at law in a state court is not a ground for the dismissal of an action in the Federal court. North Carolina Min. Co. v. Westfeldt, 151 F. 290.

55. Where portion of money loaned on a void mortgage was used to pay off a valid mortgage on the land, the plaintiff may be required to repay such portion as a condition precedent to the removal of such mortgage as a cloud on his title. Henry v. Henry [Neb.] 107 N. W. 789, modifying [Neb.] 103 N. W. 441, on rehearing. As a condition precedent to setting aside a void tax deed as a cloud on title, the court may require the plaintiff to pay the purchaser the amount of taxes paid him for his tax title. Fenton v. Minnesota Title Ins. & Trust Co. [N. D.] 109 N. W. 363. One standing in the shoes of the mortgagor may be required to pay an outlawed mortgage on the land as a condition mortgage as a cloud on the title the defendant by way of cross bill demands as affirmative relief the foreclosure of the mortgage, the court may declare such mortgage barred by limitation without requiring the plaintiff as a condition to relief to tender the amount due under same.[56] The rule that plaintiff must do equity will not be extended so as to cover an incumbrance which was never a lien on plaintiff's title,[57] nor where the defendant seeks relief from the result of his own fraudulent acts.[58] Plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title,[59] but where both parties rely on a common source of title, plaintiff need not go back of it in making his case, and irregularities prior thereto are immaterial,[60] and in such case, where plaintiff shows the better title from the common source, defendant cannot attack the title of the common source in order to defeat plaintiff's right to recover.[61] An action to quiet title presupposes complete title in the plaintiff as against the defendant,[62] and it is none the less an action to quiet title because the relief sought is the modification of a judgment enjoining plaintiff from entering upon the land of defendant.[63] The action under the Maine statute to require an adverse claimant to bring an action to try title must be brought while such person claims the title,[64] and a purchaser pendente lite is not bound by the judgment where the action was not commenced by his grantor at the time of the purchase.[65] The Massachusetts statute relative to undischarged mortgages which have been dormant for twenty years contemplates the absolute discharge of the mortgage upon a compliance with the statutory conditions.[66]

Heirs may be required to refund to commissioner purchase price of land purchased by him as such from the estate as a condition to quieting their title. Penn v. Rhoades [Ky.] 100 S. W. 288. The rule has no application in an action by the heirs at law of a mortgagor to have a void mortgage on a homestead canceled as against one claiming under such mortgage. Woods v. Campbell, 87 Miss. 782, 40 So. 874.

56. Peterson v. Ramsey [Neb.] 110 N. W. 728.

57. The court find that in 1854 one C. owned an interest in the land and at that time executed a mortgage to defendant; that in 1883 plaintiff deraigned title through mesne conveyances from the land commissioners and for eighteen years had been in possession adverse to all the world paying taxes thereon. Held that, there being no finding that plaintiff deraigned title through C. the mortgage was never a lien on plaintiff's title and he could not be required to do equity as a condition to relief. Marshutz v. Seltzor [Cal. App.] 89 P. 877.

58. Defendant held a mortgage on land purchased by plaintiff and with full knowledge of the facts evaded plaintiff's efforts to pay same and secured a deed from plaintiff's grantor recording it prior to the recording of plaintiff's deed, and at the same time releasing his mortgage, his acts being for the sole purpose of defrauding plaintiff. Held in an action to cancel the deed to defendant plaintiff could not be required as a condition precedent to relief to pay defendant the amount of his mortgage. Nugent v. Stofella [Ariz.] 84 P. 910.

59. Cook v. Ziff Colored Masonic Lodge [Ark.] 96 S. W. 618. In an action to quiet the title to wild and unoccupied land, the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title and not upon the weakness of his adversary's. Chapman & Dewey Land Co. v. Bigelow, 77 Ark. 338, 92 S. W. 534.

An abandoned wife who leaves the homestead temporarily to give the children educational adavantages still has sufficient possession to sustain an action to quiet title. Has actual possession within Code of Civ. Proc. § 589 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4787). Womble v. Pike [Okl.] 87 P. 427.

69. Cook v. Ziff Colored Masonic Lodge [Ark.] 96 S. W. 618. As against a stranger to the transaction a title fraudulently obtained by a conveyance not disaffirmed by the true owners is sufficient to sustain the action. The fact that such conveyance was voidable at the option of the persons defrauded is not a defense when raised by a stranger to the transaction whose conduct was not influenced thereby and who made no claim under or through the persons defrauded. Pence v. Long [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 961. Judgment in ejectment establishing plaintiff's title is conclusive of that fact in an action to quiet title. Whitehouse v. Jones [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 730. One claiming under a city assessment certificate but who is not entitled to a deed thereunder because of a failure to comply with conditions precedent to its issuance has not an interest sufficient to maintain the action. Coffman v. London & Northwest American Mortg. Co., 98 Minn. 416, 108 N. W. 840. The devisee of one in possession and claiming ownership of certain lands has a prima facie title sufficient to maintain the action. Plaintiff's devisor purchased certain lands which at the time were enclosed by a board fence and placed a sign thereon indicating that they were for sale by him. He also paid the taxes during six years and one special assessment. Held plaintiff's title was sufficient prima facie to sustain the action. Glos v. Ptacek, 226 Ill. 188, 80 N. E. 727. Where defendant relied upon a deed which did not cover the land in controversy and did not present a case entitling him to a reformation, a deed from the owner to plaintiff before the commencement of the action covering such land cures whatever infirmities may have existed in plaintiff's title. Adams v. Betz [Ind.] 78 N. E. 649. A possessory right to oyster beds on tide lands owned by the state may be the basis of an equitable action to quiet the title thereto. The laws of California provide that a person planting and marking such beds shall have the exclusive right to the occupation and use of the lands as against one not in possession but who claims some adverse right or interest in the land. Smith Oyster Co. v. Darbee & Immel Oyster & Land Co., 149 F. 555. Evidence held sufficient to show title in plaintiff. Collinsworth v. Enterprise Land, Mineral & Lumber Co. [Ky.] 99 S. 70. Where it appeared that a fence around certain lots had been permitted to decay and the boards used for other purposes, that at the time of the filing of the bill there was no fence around the property and that the public passed over it, and that the plaintiff never in any way used or occupied the property, it is properly regarded as unoccupied. 75. Where a deed conveying an estate for life to one remainder to plaintiff was destroyed and defendants denied the existence of the remainder, plaintiffs were not required to wait until the death of the life tenant before bringing the action, as lapse of time might deprive them of the evidence to prove their claims. Alley v. Alley, 28 Ky. L. R. 1073, 91 S. W. 291.

77. One who has sold land with a warranty of title may maintain an action to have the land declared free of the lien of a judgment, notwithstanding the fact that until the plaintiff has been compelled to pay the judgment his grantee could recover only nominal damages against him. Jackson Mill. Co. v. Scott [Wis.] 110 N. W. 184.

78. A deed of the premises to plaintiff was in every respect regular and sufficient continuance of the particular estate,[79] and the statute of limitations runs against him and his grantees from the time the adverse claim attaches,[80] and this is true although the remaindermen are infants where the adverse claim attached during the lifetime of the person through whom they derive title.[81] Where equity has jurisdiction because of fraud it may remove a cloud although the plaintiff is not in possession.[82] There is a distinction between the assertion of a hostile superior title and an effort to deprive one of title by converting it to the other party's use; in the latter case possession in complainant is unnecessary.[83] The Federal courts applying the common law require possession in complainant as a condition to the granting of relief,[84] but the Federal courts will enforce a statutory action to quiet title.[85] Statutes in many states have materially modified the common-law rule rendering possession,[86] and in some states legal title,[87] in complainant unnecessary. In such states it is no longer necessary that plaintiff should first establish his title in an action at law.[88] to convey the legal title except that it was missealed and therefore conveyed only an equitable title. During the pendency of an action to quiet title this defect was remedied. North Carolina Min. Co. v. Westfeldt, 151 F. 290.

83. Plaintiff was the owner of the mineral rights in certain land acquiring title through one in possession holding the equitable title. Defendants claimed title through owners of the record title. Held that defendants through their apparent title sought to deprive plaintiff of its property, and possession in plaintiff was unnecessary, the action not being one for the removal of a cloud. Eversole v. Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 151, 92 S. W. 593. Evidence held to show an attempt on the part of the plaintiff to deprive defendant of his property by converting it to its own use and that, therefore, defendant's title asserted in his counterclaim could be quieted, although it was not shown that he was in possession. Fox v. Cornett, 29 Ky. L. R. 246, 92 S. W. 959

84. An action to quiet title cannot be maintained in the Federal court unless the plaintiff is in possession. Miller v. Ahrens, 150 F. 644. His remedy otherwise is by an action of ejectment. Ashburn v. Graves [C. C. A.] 149 F. 968.

85. Under C. C. P. Cal. § 738, authorizing an action by any person against one claiming an estate or interest in real property adverse to him for the purpose of determining such adverse claim, the Federal courts have jurisdiction over an equitable action to quiet title to a possessory right to an oyster bed situated in that state. Smith Oyster Co. v. Darbee & Immel Oyster & Land Co., 149 F. 555. Where a local statute authorizes the action although the plaintiff is not in possession, relief will be granted in appropriate cases. Lord [Wash.] 86 P. 1060. Under the Texas statute, one holding the legal title to land may maintain an action to quiet title against a tax deed though not in possession. Until the passage of the act of 1897, § 650, Rev. St. 1899, the owner of wild and unoccupied lands could neither maintain ejectment or an action to quiet title against one holding a tax deed, neither having possession, and an action may be brought within five years after the passage of that act to quiet title though the sale took place twenty years previously. Burkham v. Manewal, 195 Mo. 500, 94 S. W. 520.

87. Idaho, § 4538, Rev. St. 1887, Coleman v. Jaggers [Idaho] 85 P. 894. Under the Wisconsin statute the owner or the holder of any lien or incumbrance on land may maintain the action to test the validity of any claim, lien, or incumbrance on same. Rev. St. 1898, § 3186. The grantee of a purchaser under an unconfirmed mortgage foreclosure sale has sufficient title. Coe v. Rockman, 126 Wis. 515, 106 N. W. 290. An equitable title is sufficient where the defendants hold the legal title as constructive trustees for the plaintiff. A conveyance under a power in a will conveying only the equitable title because not executed by a coexecutor, although given with his consent, is sufficient. Brown v. Doherty, 185 N. Y. 383, 78 N. E. 147. In North Carolina an equitable title will support the action. Deed conveying only equitable title because unsealed. North Carolina Min. Co. v. Westfeldt, 151 F. 290.

88. Under Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 738, providing that "an action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real property adverse to him for the purpose of determining such adverse claim, it is unnecessary that plaintiff should wait until his legal title is established at law before bringing the action. Smith Oyster Co. v. Darbee & Immel Oyster & Land Co., 149 F. 555. Under a statute authorizing an action to determine adverse claims by a person against one claiming any estate or interest in real property adverse to him, it is unnecessary that plaintiff should first establish his title in an ac-

In Alabama and New Jersey peaceable possession is required.[89] After plaintiff's superior title has been established by an action of ejectment, an action to quiet title lies to cancel title papers upon which defendant's continued to assert a claim of title.[90] Under the Alabama statute the court is not required to determine the strength or validity of complainant's title.[91] The legal title must prevail over an equitable title.[92]

Defenses.[93]—The action being equitable the right of action may be barred by laches, though the full statutory period of limitations has not run.[94] The action must be commenced within the period limited by statute,[95] but it is a real and not a personal action within the meaning of a statute applying a different period of limitation to each.[96] The pendency of an action at law in the nature of ejectment in a state court is not a bar to an action to quiet title in a Federal court,[97] nor is an action at law in another jurisdiction involving only a portion of the controversy and to which complainant is not a party a bar.[98] A conveyance of part of the land in controversy by the plaintiff pendente lite is not ground for abatement as to such portion, especially where the grantee retains a portion of the purchase money as security for the removal of a cloud.[99] The fact that in the event of the happening of a certain contingency defendant intended to commence an action to have certain conveyances to plaintiff set aside as a fraud on creditors is not a defense to an action to quiet title,[1] nor is it ground for abatement.[2] Defendant may set up any equitable claim he may have upon the land which if valid is enforceable and if spurious constitutes a cloud,[3] but he cannot by setting up an outlawed mortgage in his cross complaint obtain its foreclosure as affirmative relief.[4]

equitable title to land but which is in fact without foundation,[7] and, therefore an instrument void on its face does not constitute a cloud,[8] though a contrary rule has been adopted in West Virginia.[9] The claim of an easement is not a cloud upon the title to the fee.[10] A mere verbal assertion of ownership is not a cloud,[11] but under the Mississippi statute a cloud for the removal of which an action will lie may consist in a recorded instrument or a mere assertion of an unknown but hostile claim.[12] Since the bar of limitations is available by way of defense only and not by way of action, a cloud cannot be predicated on the sole fact that a mortgage on the land is barred;[13] though in exceptional cases the title to personal property may be quieted, a mere verbal claim cannot be made the basis of the action.[14]

§ 3. Procedure.[15]—The Federal courts will not entertain an action to quiet title against a claim under a treaty where defendant disclaims interest thereunder.[16] In Massachusetts, jurisdiction over an action to remove a cloud from title is not transferred from the superior court to the land court under a statute transferring other actions involving land to that court.[17] Where the complaint alleges possession in plaintiff, equity does not lose jurisdiction because defendant moves to transfer to law alleging possession in himself.[18]

Chapman & Dewey Land Co., 77 Ark. 527, 92 S. W. 792. A deed from a stranger to the title is not a cloud. Ashburn v. Graves [C. C. A.] 149 F. 968; McMullen v. Cooper, 125 Ga. 435, 54 S. E. 97.

7. Held to constitute a cloud: Execution sale on a judgment against the husband of property conveyed by him to his wife prior to the commencement of the action against him. Pettit v. Coachman [Fla.] 41 So. 401. A contract of sale unenforceable by the vendee because of his default. Whiteford v. Yellott [Md.] 64 A. 936. An abandoned mineral lease. Wilmore Coal Co. v. Brown, 147 F. 931. Void certificate of sale for local improvements. Ellis v. Witmer, 148 Cal. 528, 83 P. 800. Street assessment liens adjudged barred by limitations, even though defendant admits that they do not constitute a lien. Cushing v. Spokane [Wash.] 87 P. 1121. A sheriff's deed to property conveyed prior to the levy of an execution. Williams v. Hays, 29 Ky. L. R. 583, 93 S. W. 1063. Mortgages and other liens. Sebree v. Johnson's Committee [Ky.] 99 S. W. 340. An unrecorded mortgage. Robertson v. Sebastian [Ky.] 99 S. W. 933. Where a deed of a waterworks plant to a town was ineffective because of the invalidity of the proceedings on the part of the town relative to the purchase, the latter was held ehtitled to a cancellation of same as a cloud on the title which it might subsequently acquire under statutory proceedings for the purchase of the plant. Revere Water Co. v. Winthrop [Mass.] 78 N. E. 497.

8. An instrument conveying a portion of a lot so infinitesimal as to be absolutely imperceptible to the senses does not constitute a cloud. A tax deed conveying one vigintillionth part of a lot 25 feet wide attempts to convey something which can neither be found nor identified and is void on its face. Petty v. Beers, 224 Ill. 129, 79 N. E. 704. Where proceedings for the extension of the corporate limits of a municipality were unconstitutional, a certificate of sale for taxes by the city on land illegally included therein would recite the proceedings leading up to it and show the illegality of the sale on its face. City of Ensley v. McWilliams [Ala.] 41 So. 296. An unconstitutional statute. Devine v. Los Angeles, 202 U. S. 313, 50 Law. Ed. 1046.

9. A deed or other muniment of title void on its face constitutes a cloud against which equity will relieve; thus void decree allowing redemption from tax sale is a cloud. Whitehouse v. Jones [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 730.

10. Under § 47, c. 106, Rev. St., one claiming an adverse interest in real property, which claim constitutes a cloud upon the title thereto, may be summoned and required to show cause why he should bring an action to try his title to such property; but where the only claim made by the defendant is an easement of right of way, over the land, which easement has in no way been disturbed, the proceeding does not lie as there is no incompatibility between the ownership of the fee and the claim of an easement to pass over it. Process.[19]—Under the 14th Amendment the defendant has an absolute right to notice of the proceedings, and, while the legislature has the right to regulate the manner in which notice shall be given, a statute so inadequate in this respect as practically to authorize proceedings without notice is void.[20]

Parties.[21]—One whose interest in the land is such that no decree can be entered without affecting his rights is a necessary party,[22] and the converse is also true.[23] The action may be maintained by a trustee of an express trust,[24] by a husband without joining the wife,[25] by legatees under a will.[26] Under a statute authorizing the action against anyone claiming an estate in lands for a term of not less than ten years, it cannot be maintained against the assignee of a subtenant under a lease terminating in five years.[27] The title of one not a party to the action cannot be litigated,[28] and one not a party will not be bound by the judgment.[29] An action to determine adverse claims does not become an action against all persons unknown merely because defendants are sued by fictitious names it being alleged that their true names are unknown and not that the defendants themselves are unknown.[30]

Ch. 5, Laws 1901, providing for the publication of the summons in an action to quiet title rendering it unnecessary to name as defendants any one except those in possession or those whose adverse claims appear of record and dispensing with the necessity for publishing a description of the land in connection therewith is unconstitutional as depriving a person of his property without due process of law. Fenton v. Minnesota Title Ins. & Trust Co. [N. D.] 109 N. W. 363. The California statute providing for an action in rem by any person claiming title to real property in case of the destruction of public records by fire, flood, or earthquake, rendering it unnecessary to name the defendants and authorizing the publication of the summons as to all persons whose residence is unknown, is constitutional. Neither the board of commissioners nor the county auditor are necessary or proper parties to an action to quiet title to school lands, and a judgment quieting title as against them does not bind the state. State v. Wimer [Ind.] 77 N. E. 1078. A receiver of the estate of a decedent is not a proper party plaintiff in an action to remove a cloud from the land. He has no interest in the land, the title being in the heirs and devisees. Gibson v. Tuttle [Fla.] 43 So. 310.

24. One to whom property is conveyed without consideration in trust for the grantors, same to be conveyed as they may direct, is the trustee of an express trust within the meaning of Ballinger's Ann. 32. Must show the perfect fairness of the complainant's title and the invalidity of the defendant's claim. Complaint held not to state a cause of action for the removal of a cloud under § 500, Ann. Code 1892. Gambrell Lumber Co. v. Saratoga Lumber Co., 87 Miss. 773, 40 So. 485. A complaint asserting possession in defendant and demanding a recovery of the land does not state a cause of action to quiet title notwithstanding the fact that it contains allegations customary in such an action and prays as additional relief that the title be quieted. Such allegations make it a complaint in ejectment. Turner v. Johnson, 29 Ky. L. R. 543, 93 S. W. 1038. A complaint alleging possession in plaintiff setting up his title and asking to have same quieted, gives equity jurisdiction. Earle Imp. Co. v. Chatfield [Ark.] 99 S. W. 84. A complaint alleging that plaintiffs are owners in fee and lawfully seised and possessed of the premises in controversy as tenants in common, that defendant claims an estate or interest therein adverse to rights,[35] must be alleged, but the character of his title or the alleged title of the defendant need not be averred [36] unless the nature of defendant's claim is known to plaintiff,[37] in which case the facts demonstrating its invalidity must be alleged.[38] It is unnecessary that possession should be specifically alleged if the court can determine possession from the facts alleged,[39] and an allegation that the lands in suit are in the possession of defendant is not ground for dismissal, being ground for only a transfer to the law court.[40] A complaint seeking other relief primarily may state facts sufficient to sustain the action.[41] The allegation of an estate in fee includes a lesser title,[42] but it has been held that where plaintiff alleges fee simple he must prove it in order to recover.[43] Though the Alabama statute requires an allegation of ownership in the complaint, such an allegation is not jurisdictional and if alleged need not be proved by documentary evidence of title.[44] When the action is in equity the bill should show the inadequacy of the legal remedy.[45] Where the bill alleges that the land in controversy is located in the county in which the action is brought, the court has jurisdiction, although the residence of the parties is not averred,[46] and, where complainant is a resident and defendant appears unconditionally, the failure to allege the residence of either is immaterial.[47] In plaintiff which claim is without right, is sufficient. Boyer v. Robison [Wash.] 86 P. 385. Bill alleging ownership and peaceable possession in complainant and an unfounded claim made by defendant to test which no action is pending held sufficient. Southern R. Co. v. Hall [Ala.] 41 So. 135. One seeking to set aside a decree as a cloud on his title must allege that is was obtained by fraud under such circumstances as to give equity jurisdiction, or that his title is equitable, or that the lands are wild and uncultivated, or that he is in possession. Ropes v. Goldman [Fla.] 42 So. 322.

In such case he is entitled to discovery, and the duty of setting up the nature of his claim devolves upon the defendant. Parker v. Conrad [Kan.] 85 P. 810.

Alabama the bill must allege that no suit in pending to determine the title.[48] The plaintiff may rely upon as many sources of title as he puts in issue,[49] but he cannot by amendment change a cause of action to remove a cloud on title to one to quiet title.[50] Where defendant's sole claim of title is predicated upon a tax deed, error in permitting plaintiff to change by amendment an action to remove a cloud to one to quiet title does not prejudice him.[51]

Answer and other pleadings.[52]—Defendant may plead as many defenses as he desires but each must be complete of itself and must be tested by its own allegations.[53] Defendant need not allege his source of title,[54] but under a statute requiring the answer to contain a specific avowal of the extent, nature, and source of defendant's claim, a plea is improper.[55] Material averments not denied are deemed admitted.[56] All matters of defense may be proved under a general denial where such a pleading is authorized.[57] A cross complaint being an affirmative attack on complainant's title must show title in defendant.[58] One of two contending claimants claiming under the same grantor may in an action to quiet title commenced by the other set up his title as a counterclaim, both claims arising out of the same transaction.[59] And in such a case the recovery is not limited to the value of the improvements.[60] Where a cross complaint shows on its face that the relief demanded therein is barred by limitation, the objection may be raised by demurrer.[61] Although the filing of a cross complaint may be an improper form of procedure, a failure to object thereto by demurrer or a motion to strike out is a waiver of the right to object.[62] Where the legal title set up by plaintiff is admitted by the defendant who asserts an equitable title, plaintiff may set up that he is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice,[63] but facts which cannot be set up in the complaint as a basis for affirmative relief cannot be set up in the reply.[64]

64. To a complaint, alleging in general terms an unfounded claim made by defendant to the land in question, defendant answered setting up a mortgage. Held plaintiff could not in his reply allege that the mortgage was outlawed and pray its cancellation as a cloud on his title as he could not have demanded such relief in his complaint. Gibson v. Johnson [Kan.] 84 P. 982.

Evidence.[65]—Possession shown in complainant's grantor is presumed to continue under him and those claiming under him.[66] The burden is upon plaintiff to show title where the land in controversy is wild and unoccupied,[67] and to show that the instrument creating the cloud is without legal effect.[68] Under the Alabama statute proof of peaceable possession in complainant and that there was no suit pending at the time of the filing of the bill is sufficient to place the burden upon defendant to show good title.[69] To put the burden of proving title and possession on plaintiff, defendant must assert an adverse interest in himself, specifying its nature.[70] The burden is upon the defendant to establish a claim asserted in his answer.[71] Possession is evidence of title to the extent of requiring one seeking to oust it to show title in himself.[72] Evidence of acts and circumstances tending to show actual possession is admissible.[73] The payment of taxes on land is not evidence of actual possession,[74] but in connection with evidence of actual possession it is admissible to show the extent of such possession.[75] A deed which on it face shows that it does not refer to the land in controversy is inadmissible.[76] Evidence of a boundary established by the owner of land is admissible against those claiming under him.[77] A void tax deed is inadmissible to show color of title in complainant unless there is evidence that he actually entered into possession under it.[78] Plaintiff cannot allege ownersip in one person, and, after defendant has by his answer admitted such ownership, seek to prove that such person held the land in trust for another.[79] Where both parties set up a claim of title to the land, neither is bound to disprove the other's claim but may rest upon proof of his own.[80] Testimony by complainant that he is the owner and in peaceable possession of the land described in the bill is sufficient evidence of possession.[81]

where an action to quiet title is improperly joined with another action without objection on the part of either party, and issue was made thereon, the court has jurisdiction to grant relief in both actions.[94]

Trial.[85]—Where upon demurrer the court finds complainant's title fatally defective, the bill should be dismissed,[89] and after such dismissal it is improper to allow an amendment that the decree is without prejudice.[97] Where plaintiff answers a cross petition demanding an accounting and partition, the court may permit plaintiff to dismiss his petition without prejudice to defendant's right to equitable relief on his cross petition.[88] Under the Nebraska Code the court may order an accounting as a preliminary step to its conclusion.[89] Under the Pennsylvania statute where both the title and possession are disputed, the remedy is a rule for an issue to be framed by the court, but where the possession is unquestioned and the title only is disputed, a rule to bring ejectment should be granted [90] and a mere denial of possession in the pleadings is not of itself sufficient to warrant a rule for the framing of issues by the court.[91]

Jury trial.[92]—Where the action is purely an equitable one the parties are not entitled to a trial by jury,[93] but in New York [94] and Indiana [95] the action is triable by a jury as a matter of right.

Findings, decree, or judgment.[96]—All issues raised by the pleadings must be determined [97] and the judgment must identify the land with sufficient certainty, but it is sufficient if the land described in the judgment can be identified by extraneous evidence.[98] Under a complaint setting up ownership of an entire tract, plaintiff may be awarded judgment for an undivided half interest.[99] The relief awarded must conform to the pleadings [1] and the evidence [2] and should as far as

94. Code Civ. Proc. § 1642, provides that the proceedings, trial, and judgment shall be the same in an action to determine adverse claims as in ejectment. Section 968 provides that issues of fact in ejectment must be tired by a jury. Held defendant in an action under § 1642 was entitled to a trial by jury without making the application therefor required by § 970, which applies only to actions not enumerated in § 968. Ryan v. Murphy, 101 N. Y. S. 553.

97. Spencer v. Beiseker [N. D.] 107 N. W. 189. A finding that the allegations of the complaint are true is a sufficient finding of title where the complaint alleges ownership in plaintiff. An allegation of ownership is an allegation of ownership in fee. Meyer v. O'Rourke [Cal.] 88 P. 706. Where defendant sets up an outlawed mortgage demanding its foreclosure as affirmative relief, a finding that it is barred is in effect a removal of the cloud which it created. Marshutz v. Seltzor [Cal. App.] 89 P. 877. Failure of judgment to determine that plaintiff has a right, title, or interest in the lands in suit is harmless where the plaintiff's title is clear from the evidence and is fully set forth in the findings of fact. Coe v. Rockman, 126 Wis. 515, 106 N. W. 290.

98. A judgment describing land as "80 acres of land situated about a mile north of the Town of Redwater, Bowie County, Texas, a part of the H. headright survey and being the same land occupied as a home and cultivated as a farm by the plaintiffs" describes the land involved with sufficient certainty. Kelly v. Howard [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 103, 94 S. W. 379.

possible protect the defendant as against third persons.[3] The decree may permit defendant to redeem from a tax sale and require the complainant to quitclaim to him, although no affirmative relief is requested by the defendant.[4] In the proper case, when demanded,[5] the court in addition to quieting the title may grant as ancillary relief an injunction,[6] reformation,[7] or the rental value of the property during the time plaintiff was deprived of its enjoyment,[8] but it is held that the court has no power to decree an accounting.[9] Judgment on default may be entered without evidence to substantiate plaintiff's case.[10] The opening of default judgments where the defendant was constructively served is generally regulated by statute.[11] On a motion to set aside a judgment by default on the ground of mistake and inadvertence the defendant must show what he can prove in support of the right or title claimed in the answer.[12]

Costs.[13]—Costs are properly taxed against a defendant who appears in the action solely for the purpose of hindering and delaying same.[14]

11. In Arkansas a defendant who has been constructively served may have a judgment entered by default opened and appear and defend the action at any time within three years after the entry of judgment. Acts 1891, p. 132, and 1893, p. 204, gave a defendant constructively served one year to defend, but provdided that the title to the property covered by the decree should not be affected where it passed to a bona fide purchaser. Act. of 1899, p. 134, gave such a defendant three years to have the judgment opened upon showing a meritorious defense. Held the Act of 1899 repealed the acts of 1891 and 1893. Lawyer v. respondents to show by what right they assume to exercise powers and franchises which can only proceed from the sovereign,[16] or having had such powers why they should not be forfeited for some serious violation of the implied condition upon which such powers were granted.[17] It will not lie because of mere errors committed in the exercise of that power,[18] and it is not a writ of error to purge the records of public corporate bodies of mere mistakes and errors.[19] It lies to try title to a public[20] office averred to be exercised without right,[21] which office must have a legal existence,[22] and the person proceeded against must be a de facto or a de jure officer in possession of the office and the facts must be in dispute.[23] It cannot be converted by allegation into a statutory election contest,[24] and until all provisions of the election law for ascertaining and declaring the result of an election,[25] and all other matters preliminary to assumption of office,[26] are complied with, the successful candidate cannot invoke this remedy. It is the proper remedy to determine the validity of the organization of a village,[27] or to question the right of drainage commissioners to annex lands in their district,[28] or to question the legality of a dramshop license,[29] or to try title to corporate office,[30] and to oust a person claiming to be an officer of a corporation after he has been legally expelled by the board of directors,[31] and in such a proceeding the only question to be determined is the legality of the action of the board.[32] It may be predicated upon a nonuser as well as a

18. Under a law providing that the village clerk should be clerk of the drainage commissioners and should enter in a book the record of all of its proceedings, the fact that such proceedings were written out by the attorney for the commissioners from pencil notes taken during the hearing, and by the clerk signed and pasted in the record book instead of having been written out by the clerk himself in such book, is not a matter of substance which would in any way affect the legality of the proceedings. 22. Hedrick v. People, 221 Ill. 374, 77 N. E. 441.

23. It does not lie to compel an outgoing officer to turn over books and papers of the office to his successor. In re Smith, 101 N. Y. S. 992.

24. Where an attempt to do so is apparent from respondent's answer, the fact that he alleges that relator did not receive the highest number of votes and therefore was not elected instead of alleging that respondent did receive the highest number of votes and therefore was elected will not change the result. People v. Horan, 34 Colo. 304, 86 P. 252.

25. Under a law providing that after the ballots have been counted the proper officers shall canvass them and declare the result of the election and enter a statement thereof in their journal, quo warranto does not lie to oust an incumbent until such canvass has been made and the result declared. If the officers wrongfully neglect to perform their duty mandamus is the proper remedy. Carlson v. People, 118 Ill. App. 592.

26. Although a provision that the official oath be filed in the office of the village clerk may be directory only, it is essential to the maintenance of quo warranto that such oath be first filed. Carlson v. People, 118 Ill. App. 592.

27. Where unplatted agricultural lands lying a quarter of a mile from the platted portion were included within the corporate limits of a village without the consent of the owner and for the purpose of obtaining the number of residents necessary to incorporate, a judgment of ouster was entered. State v. Clark [Neb.] 106 N. W. 971.

Jankovic [Pa.] 65 A. 1099.

misuser of corporate franchises.[33] The right to the occupation of the streets of a city by a street railroad company is a franchise and quo warranto lies at the suit of the state to determine the legality of such occupation,[34] and the exercise of an expired franchise is without warrant of law and is a power "not conferred by law."[35] A corporation is a "person" within the meaning of a statute authorizing quo warranto against any person unlawfully holding or exercising a franchise.[36] The remedy by quo warranto will not be denied merely because the act of forfeiture has a criminal aspect exposing it to punishment,[37] or because it may be restrainable in equity;[38] but the function of quo warranto will not be performed by injunction.[39] The right of a person having a prima facie title to an office can be questioned by a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto only.[39a] Where the incorporation of an organization for a particular purpose is justified by express sanction of the legislature, and the sanction is not unconstitutional, the courts are not at liberty to dissolve the organization on the ground that its purpose is not beneficial to its members or to the public.[39b] Where a corporation of a mutual character is not subsidiary to or controlled by a corporation for profit, the fact that some of its officers, directors, and members are also officers, directors, and stockholders of a corporation for profit, does not constitute an offense against the law or call for a revocation of its charter.[39c] Trivial irregularities and omissions of statutory requirements, in an attempt made in good faith to organize a corporation not for profit, are not a sufficient basis for a judgment of ouster, but the corporation will be recognized as a de facto organization and its board of directors as a de facto board, and a decree will be granted requiring that a legal organization be effected.[39d] The fact that the writ was refused to other persons is not a bar,[40] and an estoppel on private persons to question incumbent's title may not bind the court.[41] Relators are not concluded by having appeared as

A corporation formed for the purpose of encouraging agriculture, to maintain a fair grounds and race track, and to give agricultural exhibitions and horse races, is guilty of a fatal nonuser by maintaining a race track only and that for the sole purpose of gambling. 36. State v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 867.

37. A corporation was formed for the purpose of encouraging agriculture, to maintain a fair grounds, a race track, etc., but the only use made of its franchise was to maintain a race track for the purpose of gambling. Held quo warranto could be maintained notwithstanding the corporate officers were charged with the commission of a criminal offense, neither proceeding being a bar to the other. State v. Delmar Jockey Club [Mo.] 92 S. W. 185. The trial and conviction of the offending officers is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of the action. Id.

38. The fact that a bill in equity would lie to restrain the violation of an anti-trust law by a foreign corporation is not a bar to an information in the nature of quo warranto to revoke its license to do business in the state in which the information is filed. 41. Relators and respondents were nominated for the office of aldermen of a certain ward and accepted the nomination without any objection on the part of relators. The aldermen from each ward were erroneously voted for by the citizens at large. Held on quo warranto that, although relators might be estopped, such estoppel would not prevent the court from determining respondents' right to the offices. Dunton v. People [Colo.] 87 P. 540.

objectors to the proceeding the result of which is attacked by quo warranto.[42] Where the attorney general may in his discretion commence an action of quo warranto to try title to a public office, the determination of a prior attorney general not to institute such proceedings does not constitute res adjudicata so as to preclude his successor from doing so.[43]

§ 2. Jurisdiction.—Where there is no statutory authority for the issuance of the writ the common law governs,[44] and where the common law relating to proceedings in the nature of quo warranto has not been adopted, the court is without jurisdiction to issue the writ.[45] The original jurisdiction of an appellate court is only such as is expressly conferred,[46] the only jurisdiction in all other cases being in the court of general original jurisdiction.[47] The appearance of the respondent in answer to the petition in quo warranto gives the court jurisdiction over the parties[48] In Ohio quo warranto proceedings brought by the attorney general against several corporations to oust them from their corporrate franchises on the ground that they have entered into an illegal agreement or conspiracy in restraint of trade and in viotion of the anti-trust laws of the state may be commenced in the circuit court of any county where one or more of the defendant corporations is situated or has a place of business, and process may issue thence to any other county where any other of the defendant corporations is situated.[49] Want of jurisdiction because of failure to obtain leave to file an information may be waived by the parties.[50] Under a statute providing that the courts shall at all times be open for proceedings in the nature of quo warranto, a judgment of ouster is not void or irregular because it was rendered at a time other than during the regular term of court.[51]

§ 3. Parties and right to prosecute.[52]—The circumstances under which a private relator may file an information in quo warranto is largely a matter of statutory regulation.[53] Quo warranto to try title to a public office will lie upon the Fact that relators appeared before the drainage commissioners on the hearing of objections to the classification of lands according to benefits does not estop them from questioning by quo warranto the right of the commissioner to annex lands owned by relators. 46. Supreme court has no original jurisdiction of quo warranto to try title to office of road overseer. State v. Sams [Ark.] 98 S. W. 955. In Michigan quo warranto to revoke the license of a foreign corporation for a violation of the anti-trust law may be brought by the attorney general in the first instance in the supreme court. Act No. 255, p. 409, Pub. Acts 1899, §§ 2, 3. Attorney General v. Booth & Co., 143 Mich. 89, 12 Det. Leg. N. 991, 106 N. W. 868.

49. For purposes of prosecution an illegal combination among corporations in restraint of trade exists in each and every county where its constituent members exist and act, hence the contention is erroneous that quo warranto proceedings based upon such illegal combination must be brought in a county where the combination does business as a separate entity. State v. King Bridge Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 557.

53. Under a statute authorizing a private person to bring the action against any one unlawfully holding a public office when the office usurped pertains to a county, town, city, village, or school district, one who is a citizen, tax payer, and property owner in a city and whose children attend the public schools thereof may maintain quo warranto against persons claiming to hold the office of directors of the school board of such city. State v. Lindemann [Wis.] 111 N. W. 214. Under a statute authorizing any one claiming an interest in the office, franchise, or corporation which is the subject of the information to file such information one not claiming such interest cannot institute quo waranto proceedings to have the charter of a corporation forfeited. State v. Point Roberts Reef Fish Co., 42 Wash. 409, 85 P. 42. Citizens holding property abutting on the street may bring quo warranto against a street railway company occupying such street after the expiration of its franchise under a statute authorizing any one interested to bring such an action upon the refusal of the county attorney to do so. State v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 867.

relation of a private individual where the relator himself claims the office,[54] otherwise the action must be brought by the attorney general.[55] The fact that relator is the de facto officer will not support a proceeding instituted on his relation.[56] The question of the interest of the relator in the prcoeedings becomes immaterial where before the joinder of issue the public attorney in behalf of the state appears in the action, files a new petition, and serves a new notice, and the respondent appears thereto.[57] By statute in Kansas the state is the proper party to institute quo warranto proceedings against a corporation for the purpose of forfeiting its charter.[58] The fact that the attorney general files an information on the relation of private parties to have the license of a foreign corporation revoked is immaterial; the proceeding being in the name of and for the benefit of the public [59] and a prosecution for private ends or for personal spite is not inferable from that fact alone [60] or from the fact that private counsel assisted the state's attorney. Although the relators in an information to question the right of the drainage commissioners to annex certain lands belonging to the relators may have a direct personal interest in the action different from that inuring to the general public, still the drainage district being a public corporation the public has a sufficient interest in the matter to warrant the granting of leave to file the information.[61] Especially is this true where the information is filed by the state's attorney and he denies that it is brought solely for the benefit of the relators and that he has instituted it in his official capacity for the benefit of the public.[62]

Leave to file an information is usually a prerequisite to the maintenance of quo warranto by an individual, but it is incumbent upon the respondent to show that leave had not been obtained.[63] An application for leave to file an information is a preliminary question addressed to the discretion of the court,[64] but that discretion must not be abused,[65] and once it is decided the discretion is exhausted.[66] Where a statute does not require notice to the defendant as a condition to the granting of leave to file an information, such notice is unnecessary,[67] and the failure of the statute to provide for notice does not render it unconstitutional as depriving a person of his property without due process of law or a denial of the equal protection of the law under the Federal Constitution.[68] An order granting leave to file an information determines nothing except the privilege of the relator to institute and

57. The Iowa Code (tit. 21, c. 9) authorizes the county attorney in his discretion to commence proceedings in the nature of quo warranto in certain cases and provides that upon his refusal to do so any person interested may commence such proceedings, first obtaining leave of the court. It was held that where the county attorney refused to commence such proceedings, and a private person obtained leave to and did do so, the subsequent appearance of the county attorney before the joinder of issue and the appearance of the respondent in answer to his amended petition rendered the relator's interest immaterial. 65. Refusal to allow filing of petition for a quo warranto held erroneous where it was sought to question the right of the drainage commissioners to annex lands in a certain district owned by relators. People v. Arcola Drainage Com'rs, 123 Ill. App. 604.

66. Where upon the refusal of the county attorney to proceed private relators obtain permission to file an information under a statute authorizing any person interested to commence such proceedings, first obtaining leave, upon the refusal of the county attorney to do so the court is without power to order a compulsory dismissal of the private relator's proceeding merely because the county attorney subsequently files an amended petition in the action and the defendant appears in answer thereto. State v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 867.

prosecute the suit, it adjudicates nothing against the defendants, nor does it dispense with the necessity of proving every fact essential to the relief demanded.[69] One not interested in a corporation but injured by its usurpation may under the Washington statute obtain an order to proceed upon the refusal of the public attorney to do so.[70]

Joinder of parties[71] as permitted by statute in Colorado, where several persons claim the "same" office in order that their title thereto may be determined in one action, included the case where different memberships in the same official body are claimed.[71a] Where one of two parties to an unlawful combination is amenable to the law, he cannot object to an information in the nature of quo warranto on the ground that such other party was not made a party to the proceeding.[72] Under the Alabama statute the petitioner must be joined with the state as a party plaintiff.[73]

§ 4. The information or complaint.[74]—The general rules of pleading are the same in quo warranto as in other forms of common-law actions.[75] The information in quo warranto to try title to a public office must show a prima facie right thereto in the relator,[76] and the doing of every act prerequisite to assumption of office,[77] and where it is an office created by a local law, the legal existence of the office must be affirmatively and distinctly, not inferentially, alleged.[78] In quo warranto to try title to public office, particularity of averment in the information as to the functions and powers exercised is unnecessary. It is sufficient to aver in general terms, designating the particular office, the usurpation, intrusion into, and unlawful holding of the same.[79] The words "upon the relation of" in an information in the nature of quo warranto are superfluous as the state is the party plaintiff in any event.[80] The information need not be sworn to in Alabama.[81]

§ 5. Answers and others pleadings, and motions to quash or dismiss.[82]—In quo warranto to have a dramshop license declared void a plea which shows a prima facie right to the license is sufficient and it need not anticipate objections,[83] but it

Held that the fact that there were several parties to the illegal combination could not be availed of by the holding company in an action against it alone. Attorney General v. 73. Code 1896, § 3426. A petition which recited "Your petitioner, and relator, the State of Alabama by the relation of H. respectfully represents" etc., held a sufficient compliance with the statute. State v. Kitchens [Ala.] 41 So. 871.

77. Must show filing of oath. Carlson v. People, 118 Ill. App. 592.

78. In quo warranto, to try title to the office of chief sanitary inspector of Chicago, an information alleging that the office to which relator was appointed was created under an ordinance authorizing the commissioner of health to appoint an assistant a "medical sanitary inspector" and "such other employes as may be necessary," but not expressly naming the office of "Chief sanitary inspector," does not sufficiently allege the legal existence of the office. Hedrick v. People, 221 Ill. 374, 77 N. E. 441.

79. A petition alleging that the respondent has usurped, intruded into, and unlawfully holds without warrant or authority of law a designated office and claims to be clothed with the powers, etc., of said office and is now exercising the powers of such office, is sufficient. Jackson v. State, 143 Ala. 145, 42 So. 61.

83. Where the pleas set forth the title rehas been held that an answer setting up a mere prima facie title is insufficient in proceedings to try title to a public office.[84] A plea setting up a bare conclusion of law is defective.[85] Error in striking plea from the files is harmless where even though frivolous and impertinent matter continued therein were eliminated it would still be defective, and where all of its material allegations are contained in other pleas.[86] The replication may set up matters in avoidance of a prima facie defense set up in the plea.[87] All material facts set out in the plea which are not specifically traversed by the replication are admitted.[88] A demurrer to an information admits every material allegation contained therein.[89] On a demurrer to the plea the court will consider only the matters set forth therein.[90] Where the attorney general is without authority to commence the proceeding, objection should be raised by a motion to set aside the service of the summons and not by a plea in bar.[91] An order granting leave to file an information cannot be reviewed or collaterally attacked upon a motion to set aside or dismiss.[92] A motion to set aside an order granting leave to file an information in quo warranto is addressed to the discretion of the court.[93]

§ 6. Trial and judgment.[94]—In Texas the constitutional right to a trial by jury as to disputed questions of fact applies to proceedings in the nature of quo warranto.[95] The burden is on respondent claiming a public office to show by what right he holds such office.[96] In quo warranto, to determine the validity of the organization of a drainage district, clerical errors in the record of the commissioners may be cured by amendment after the filing of the information so as to make the record conform to the facts and the amended record is admissible in evidence.[97]

lied upon, the ordinance, and the steps taken in compliance therewith, it is not necessary that the plea should anticipate the objection that the part of the city in which the dramshop is located is subject to a different license law where such fact does not appear from the pleadings. Heidelberg Garden Co. v. People, 124 Ill. App. 331.

87. An information asked that respondent show its authority under which it claimed to be a corporation and its authority to do business in the state in which the action was brought. The plea attempted to show such authority. The replication attacked the showing upon both points by claiming the invalidity of its incorporation because of a violation of the laws of the state under which it was incorporated and its right to do business in the state in which the action was commenced by reason of a violation of its laws. It was held that the matters set up in the replication were proper in avoidance of the plea and could not be said to raise an issue not germane to the information. Attorney General v. Booth & Co., 143 Mich. 89, 12 Det. Leg. N. 991, 106 N. W. 868.

90. In quo warranto to test the validity of a dramshop license the plea set up a prima facie title under the dramshop license law. The court held on demurrer that the fact that a different license law may have governed portion of the city in which respondent's dramshop was located should have been made to appear by the replication and could not be considered on demurrer. Heidelberg Garden Co. v. People, 124 Ill. App. 331.

91. A motion to set aside the service of the summons on the ground that a decision of the relator's predecessor not to commence the action was binding upon him held the proper method in which to raise the question of the attorney general's authority to institute the proceedings. Respondent held not injured by a ruling imposing the burden of proof upon the relator and giving him the right to open and close. Dunton v. People [Colo.] 87 P. 540.

Matters admitted or in issue.—By proceeding in quo warranto the relator conclusively admits that the office to try the title to which the information was filed, is in the possession of the respondent,[99] and by instituting such proceedings he abandons possession of the office sought.[1] By commencing quo warranto proceedings against a corporation in its corporate name, to forfeit its charter, the state does not thereby admit its legal corporate existence.[2]

Costs.[3]

§ 7. New trial and review.[4]—A motion for a new trial in quo warranto proceedings suspends the judgment and it does not become final for the purpose of an appeal until the motion has been disposed of.[5] The refusal to allow the filing of an information in the nature of quo warranto, although within the discretion of the court, is subject to review.[6] Under a statute allowing an appeal where the judgment appealed from amounts to $100 or over exclusive of costs or relates to a franchise or freehold, an appeal does not lie from an order dismissing a writ of quo warranto.[7] An order of the court refusing to compel the county attorney to commence quo warranto proceedings against a corporation usurping powers which it does not lawfully possess is appealable, and on such an appeal the sufficiency of the complaint of the person demanding such a proceeding will be reviewed.[8] On appeal from an order denying a motion to dismiss, the only question to be considered is whether the relator has made such a showing as, if made good by the evidence, affords a proper case for the application of the remedy.[9-13]

The rights and duties of railroads as common carriers,[18] their liability to employes,[19] and matters common to all corporations,[20] are elsewhere treated.

§ 1. Definition and general nature of railroads.[21]—Where the term "railroad" is used in statutes, steam railroad is meant, unless it clearly appears that some other meaning is intended.[22] The term "railroad" includes all side tracks necessary, or convenient for the transaction of the company's business.[23] A terminal company may be a railroad company,[24] but a manufacturing company operating a switch engine on its own private tracks is not.[25] A railroad does not lose its character as such because of the line of road being very short.[26] A railroad is a public highway,[27] and a charter granted for the purpose of constructing one is for a public purpose.[28]

§ 2. Franchises, licenses, permits, and the like.[29]—Statutes granting franchises involving rights of the public are to be construed liberally in favor of the public and strictly against the corporation.[30] The right to acquire land for the

22. An interurban railroad for the operation of electric cars is not within 97 Ohio Laws, p. 54, providing how railroad and highway crossings shall be constructed. Commissioners of Ross County v. Scioto Valley Trac. Co., 75 Ohio St. 548, 80 N. E. 176. The section of the statute giving railroad commissioners authority to determine an application by one company to cross the track of another does not apply where the line of an electric railroad is sought to be crossed. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs [Kan.] 84 P. 755. In defining "railway company" as used in railroad commissioner's law, to mean a company whose road is operated by steam, the statute forbids that such term be construed to include a road operated by electricity except where such intention is expressly manifested. Id. A railway operated wholly by electricity is not one operated by steam within the meaning of the railroad commissioners' law, though owned and managed by a corporation whose charter permits the use of steam as motive power. Id.

23. Roby v. State [Neb.] 107 N. W. 766. A side track constructed and used by the company, connecting with its main line, and occupying a portion of the public street under grant from the city, is presumed to be a part of the system of such company and a public highway within Const. art. 11, § 4, declaring such highways free to all persons for their transportation. Id. Evidence sufficient to show that it was such highway. Id. The constitutional declaration that all railroads are public highways and all railroad companies common carriers applies not only to main lines but also to subsidiary tracks used for the purposes of railroad traffic. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Louisiana W. R. Co., 116 La. 178, 40 So. 627.

24. A terminal company receiving cars coming from another state, and delivering them within its yards to the engineers of a railroad company, is engaged in interstate traffic within the Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, c. 196 (27 Stat. 531). United States v. Northern Pac. Terminal Co., 144 F. 861. If it were a question of real doubt as to what is the real character of a corporation, its name might be considered. But that the company is called a terminal company, will not change its character within the meaning of the law. Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 624.

25. A manufacturing company which maintains in its yards a number of tracks and a switch engine is not a railroad corporation operating a railroad within 93 Ohio Laws, p. 342, requiring such corporations to block their frogs. Taggart v. Republic Iron & Steel Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 910.

26. The fact that a railroad will be only about three miles in length and will for a considerable part of its course lie within the corporate limits of a city and that it will connect with other railroads at the outer terminus does not prevent it from falling within the purview of the general laws for incorporating railroads. Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 624.

27. Under the statutes of Pennsylvania, the owner of a coal mine adjacent to a right of way has a right to connect switch tracks built on his own land with the tracks of such road. Olanta Coal Min. Co. v. Beach Creek R. Co., 144 F. 150. Where a company was chartered to build a road, and after a part of it was completed the scheme failed for lack of funds, and a receiver sold certificates to complete it to a town and operated it for four years without being able to pay interest on the certificates or salary to himself, when it was sold to holders of the certificates, the franchise was forfeited for failure to incorporate and the receiver was permitted to dismantle and sell the rails and rolling stock. Held that though the state was not a party to such proceedings, the purchasers could not be compelled after several years to replace the rails so the road could be operated by others as a public highway. State of South Carolina v. Jack [C. C. A.] 145 F. 281; Wolfard v. Fisher [Or.] 87 P. 530. Where a railroad switch though used largely by one road is open to all persons for shipping purposes, it is a public trust and its presence in a street is not a nuisance per se. Id. Owners of mills and factories have a statutory right to connect their private sidings with railroads in the vicinity which they cannot be deprived of by agreement between the railroad company and a land owner that no other siding upon such owner's land shall be constructed in the vicinity. Reeser v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 376. A railroad company is accountable for the condition of its right of way and may be compelled to construct side tracks if necessary to the discharge of its duty to the public, and a person in possession of right of way cannot by denying the necessity of side tracks require the company to bring ejectment, but he may be enjoined from obstructing the right of way. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Olive, 142 N. C. 257, 55 S. E. 263.

28. A charter granted by the state for the purpose of constructing and operating a commercial railroad is for a public purpose. Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 624. It cannot be used for a private purpose nor can the company exercise the power of eminent domain for a private purpose. Id.

30. State v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 98 Minn.

construction of a road is statutory and statutes must be complied with.[31] The validity of a franchise will not be determined in the absence of a full hearing.[32]

§ 3. Route, location, termini, and stations.[33]—A railroad company has a right to select the route which it deems most advantageous and has power to secure land necessary for its use in constructing its road in such manner as to afford security to life and property,[34] but after its discretion in selecting its route has once been exercised, its power of choice is exhausted and it cannot change its location without legislative authority.[35] A substantial compliance with the route prescribed by the charter is sufficient.[36] The location can be made only by regular corporate acts.[37] A right to location is generally acquired by staking the route on the ground and filing a map of definite location.[38] As between rival companies claiming the same location, priority of location gives superiority of right,[39] and interference with such 380, 108 N. W. 261. A company organized as a steam railway changed its motive power to electricity and applied for a permit to operate on streets. Held that if the purpose of the application was to enable the company to do the business of a street surface railway the application was properly denied as it was not organized for that purpose, and had not procured the consent of owners and city authorities as required by Laws 1890, p. 1108, c. 565, § 91. In re Keeseville, etc., R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 237. Under the statutes of New York, railroad franchise held not invalid. New York, etc., R. Co. v. O'Brien, 50 Misc. 13, 100 N. Y. S. 316.

31. Under Laws 1892, p. 1395, c. 676, amended by Laws 1895, p. 317, c. 545, § 59, providing that construction shall not begin until railroad commissioners issue certificate of necessity and providing for an application to the court if such certificate is refused the application comes before the court as an original one to be determined on the record before the commissioners or upon such further evidence as the court deems essential. In re Rochester, C. E. Trac. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1112. In such case great weight is to be given the decision of the commissioners. Id. An application to construct a trolley road should not be denied though it will parallel steam roads and reduce their earnings. Id. Granting a certificate is called for though the line will parallel another where persons along the route testify that it will be a convenience, that trains on parallel roads are infrequent, and that some people had to travel long distances to reach such roads, etc. Id.

32. The validity of a franchise in which a large amount of capital is invested and great public interests are involved will not be determined on affidavits, and where a judgment against the corporation would prevent completion within the time set therefor, on which completion its franchise is conditioned, this question will not be determined in advance of the trial but a restraining order permitting continuance of the work under the franchise will be granted until trial of the case. New York, etc., R. Co. v. O'Brien, 50 Misc. 13, 100 N. Y. S. 316.

36. Where a charter fixed one termini at a station outside the city and described the road as running easterly to a point near the center of the city, but a line run due east would not enter the city at all, the corporation had a discretion to locate the other terminus at or near the center of the city and a line running from the initial termini in a general southeasterly direction was not a violation of the charter. Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 624.

37. Where a company was incorporated under the general law with power to construct a railroad from a point outside a populous city to a point within it, if the power to locate the line could be conferred by the directors upon the president, yet under the general power to manage the business subject to the approval of the directors, conferred by by-laws, he could not lawfully fix the route and terminus, and proceed with condemnation proceedings without such approval. Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 624. Where notice as to the commencement of condemnation proceedings was given by the president's direction without authority and the time had expired under its terms for the appointment of an assessor by the land owner, the directors could not by ratifying the act of the president cause such ratification to relate back and to give such notice the same effect which it would have if it had been legal when given. Id.

38. A company organized under the laws of New Mexico to construct a road within the territory acquires an interest in a location which in good faith it has surveyed, staked on the ground and adopted as its final location, sufficient to maintain action against a trespasser, and will not until after lapse of a reasonable time after final location for filing lose such interest by failure to file a map of location as required by statute. Arizona & C. R. Co. v. Denver, etc., R. Co. [N. M.] 84 P. 1018. An averment for acts of trespass on its location that it had "adopted" such location as final is good against demurrer without direct allegation that it was done by the board of directors, that being the method of adoption prescribed. Id. Rev. St. 1899, § 1056, requiring the filing of a map of the profile of the proposed route in the office of the county clerk, is not satisfied by the filing of a map showing a part of the route in the county. Kansas City Interurban R. Co. v. Davis, 197 Mo. 669, 95 S. W. 881. Under Kirby's Dig. § 6569, a railroad must file a map showing the profile of its line before it commences work of construction, and is liable in damages if it commences construction work before it does so. White River R. Co. v. Batesville & Winerva Tel. Co. [Ark.] 98 S. W. 721.

39. Where one company had notice of a prior survey at the time it attempted to right may be enjoined,[40] but a senior right to locate a right of way does not, until the line is located, give a right to enjoin the location of another line.[41] Where grants of two franchises are indefinite as to the exact route to be selected, the prior right will attach to the company first locating its line by marking its route and adopting it by corporate action.[42] A statutory right to cross or intersect with another line does not give a right to arbitrarily select a route through the terminals of such other company.[43] Federal grants of rights of way usually vest upon approval by the secretary of the interior of the profile of the line.[44] Where rival aspirants for the same right of way file profiles, a duty devolves upon the secretary of the interior to deetermine which company has the superior claim.[45] While such contest is pending before him, courts should not assume jurisdiction to determine the ultimate right of possession,[46] but pending determination of such contest the court ought, in the interest of the public as well as in the interest of the company showing the greater immediate equity upon application, by temporary orders protect it in the construction of the road.[47] There is no legislative provision prohibiting a railroad from building or causing to be built, a parallel line.[48]

Alterations and changes.[49]—Where a railroad has exercised its discretion in selecting its route, its power of choice is exhausted and it cannot subsequently change its location without express legislative authority.[50] Where one company make a survey over the same route, it was immaterial to the priority of the company making the first survey that it did not firet file for record its map of location as required by Ky. St. 1903, § 767. Cumberland R. Co. v. Pine Mountain R. Co., 28 Ky. L. R. 574, 96 S. W. 199. Where one company has actually located its route and is in good faith following up its location by buying or condemning land, another company cannot go to a point on the route which is neither the beginning nor ending of its proposed line and locate a right of way on the same line. Id.

40. A complaint which avers that one company is by repeated acts of trespass on the location of another, seeking to deprive the latter of its location without due process, threatens to continue such acts; that such location has been surveyed and staked at great expense; is the best possible location between the points, though not the only one; that multiplicity of suits and irreparable damage will result if such purpose is accomplished, states a cause of action for an injunction. Arizona & C. R. Co. v. Denver, etc., R. Co. [N. M.] 84 P. 1018. Allegations of acts of trespass however numerous or continuous is not an admission that the trespasser is in possession or that title is in dispute, where it is alleged that the company is in possession and that the trespasser is seeking to deprive it of its location. Id.

41. One who has a senior right to locate a right of way for a logging road may not enjoin another company from locating a right of way over such land until it has located its own right of way, but may enjoin the use of a certain class of locomotives in order to preserve timber from catching fire. Marion County Lumber Co. v. Tilghman Lumber Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 337.

42. Fayetteville St. R. Co. v. Aberdeen & R. R. Co., 142 N. C. 423, 55 S. E. 345. Where a company by directors' resolution adopted an abandoned roadbed as its route, staked it, engaged agents to procure options, and the directors ratified and readopted such route, held a prior location as against another company which subsequently surveyed, purchased, and condemned over the same roadbed. Id. Revisal 1905, § 2600, requiring map and profile of the route to be filed within a reasonable time with the corporation commission, does not require such filing as an essential of completed location as against another company. Id. Where a right of way is clearly defined and staked and the route so marked is adopted by the company, the entry of an engineer and a survey is not necessary to the location as against another company seeking the same location. Id.

43. Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 4335, providing for the right of one railroad to cross, connect, or intersect, with another, does not confer on the new locator of a line the arbitrary power to select a route through the terminals of an existing company in such manner as to seriously interfere with the usefuiness of the latter where a different location would reasonably serve the purposes of the new locator. State v. Superior Court of Whitman County [Wash.] 88 P. 201. Public interest held not to require such route. Id.

44. Legal title to a right of way sought under the grant of Act Cong. March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. 482), vests upon approval by the secretary of the interior of the profile of the road and not before. Phoenix & E. R. Co. v. Arizona Eastern R. Co. [Ariz.] 84 P. 1097.

50. Brown v. Atlantic & B. R. Co., 126 Ga. 248, 55 S. E. 24. Civ. Code 1895, § 2171, does not authorize a company which obtained its charter under the general railroad laws, after having located, constructed, and operated, its line for some time, to tear up and owned two lines which separated at an acute angle, it may not tear up a portion of one line from such point on the ground that it has leased another line which intersects with its road at a different point and over which it could furnish as good service to the public, where the terms of the lease do not appear.[51] In some states a change of route is authorized if it has not been finally located,[52] and it may follow as an incident to acts required by law of the company.[53] An inhibition against changing the rule does not apply where such change is required by law.[54] A railroad company which has obtained the approval of the secretary of the interior of a profile of its road may change a portion of its location if intervening rights are not thereby interfered with.[55] A rival company which was not misled by such change and has not acquired intervening rights may not complain.[56]

§ 4. Rights of way and other lands, and acquirement thereof.[57]—A railroad right of way as an easement and lies only in grant from the owner or from the state through the exercise of condemnation proceedings or by prescription.[58] Rights of relocate a section of it at its own volition, though the portion sought to be relocated is outside the limits of a town or city. Id.

Note: It is generally held that where a railroad company to which has been given the power to choose a particular route between designated termini has exercised its discretion in this regard, its power of choice is exhausted, and it cannot subsequently change its location without express legislative authority. Thus, a change cannot be made for reasons of convenience, expediency, or economy, merely. 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. [2d ed.] 690; Leverett v. Middle Georgia & A. R. Co., 96 Ga. 385, 24 S. 51. Brown v. Atlantic & B. R. Co., 126 Ga. 248, 55 S. E. 24. The fact that the company had commenced to tear up the track before injunction was applied for is not ground for refusing it, if it is wrongful and working special damage. Id. A mandatory injunction to require relaying a substantial portion of the track torn up and the operation of the road would not issue. Id.

52. Acts 1887, p. 112, c. 39, authorizing the board of directors of a railroad company which has not finally located its line to change its terminus, is not a special law violation of the constitution. Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Union R. Co. [Tenn.] 95 S. W. 1019. Acts 1887, p. 112, c. 39, authorizing a board of directors of a railroad which has not finally located its line to change a terminus, was not repealed by Acts 1889, p. 303, c. 158. Id. The charter of a railroad company authorized it to construct its road between two certain points. A part of the road was constructed but the remainder of the line was not located. Held the road was not finally located and the terminus could be changed. Id.

53. Under Revisal 1905, § 1097, empowering the corporation commission to require the construction of union depots in cities and towns and giving railroads subject to such requirement power to condemn lands, confers on the roads the incidental power to make such changes in their route as is necessary to make the depot available to the traveling public. Dewey v. Atlantic Coast Line, 142 N. C. 392, 55 S. E. 292. Where the erection of such depot and change of foute is authorized by law, it will not be restrained though causing injury to private interests. Id.

54. Revisal 1905, § 2573, prohibiting changes in routes in cities except where sanctioned by the city authorities, applies only where the change is made by the railroad of its own volition and not where it is required by the corporation commission. Dewey v. Atlantic Coast Line, 142 N. C. 392, 55 S. E. 292.

58. Clark v. Wabash R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 309. Where land was sold under execution after a railroad had appropriated a right of way through it, and was afterwards repurchased, the railroad could not escape paying for the land on ground that when the owner reacquired the property it was burdened with the easement of the railroad. Scovell v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., 117 La. 459, 41 So. 723. Where a railroad tortiously builds its road, buildings, etc., on land of another, and, such owner sells, his grantee may not recover damages for the tort as such right of action remains in the original owner. Bruce v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [Fla.] 41 So. 883. Where a railroad company encroached on an owner and constructed structures prior to an action for trespass and immediately on commencement of such action instituted condemnation proceedings, a mandatory injunction requiring removal of the structures would not issue. Colgate v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 650. Where no right to lay tracks on projected streets shown by a plat was acquired under a lease of a portion of the land, such right could be acquired only by condemnation or agreement with the own way are generally acquired by the exercise of the power of eminent domain delegated by the state to the company [58] and cannot be acquired by dedication.[60] An easement of a right of way will be protected by injunction regardless of the solvency of the persons who interfere with it.[61] But before injunction will issue the company must show that it has a right of way, its extent, and that the defendants are interfering or are threatening to obstruct it.[62] In some states an entry on private land for the purpose of making a preliminary survey is authorized.[63]

Grants in highways and streets.[64]—A railroad company receives its charter and franchise subject to the implied right of the state to establish and open such streets and highways over and across it as public convenience and necessity may require.[65] In the absence of statutory authority, a municipality has no power to grant to a railroad the exclusive use of the streets,[66] and in the absence of express power in its charter to grant a permanent easement, a license to lay tracks in the street cannot be regarded as a permanent easement.[67] Municipalities may grant to railroad companies the reasonable use of streets for the construction and operation of railroads,[68] but such grants are subject to prior rights of the public [69] and will not be permitted

Acts 1903, p. 320, § 9, authorize an entry on land for the purpose of making a preliminary survey, held an entry under such statute constituted "a legal cause and good excuse," within Code 1896, § 5606, providing a punishment for an entry on premises of another without legal cause, etc. State v. Simons [Ala.] 40 So. 662. Gen. Acts 1903, p. 320, § 9, authorizing an entry on land for the purpose of making a preliminary survey subject to liability for damages is not a taking of property without due process. Id.

65. That right on the part of the state attaches by implication of law to the franchise of the company and imposes on it the duty to construct and maintain suitable crossings at new highways and streets to the same extent as required by the common law at streets and highways in existence when the railroad was built. State v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 98 Minn. 380, 108 N. W. 261. A charter granting the right to run the track along, under, over, upon, and across, highways and streets, providing such way is left in such condition as not to interfere with its free and proper use, applies to highways laid out after construction of the railway. Id.

66. A municipal council is without power, under existing laws, to authorize a railroad company to occupy a street or public landing with an overhead structure, resting upon fixed permanent supports of the character shown in this case and necessarily involving the exclusive use of the grounds so occupied, and an ordinance granting the right to erect such a structure is void. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 497.

67. State v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 141 N. C. 736, 53 S. E. 290.

68. Use held not unreasonable or such as to impair public easement. City of Colorado Springs v. Colorado & Southern R. Co. [Colo.] 89 P. 820. Laws of New York relative to the laying of tracks in streets, tunneling, etc., construed and applied to articles of incorporation, and held that such articles were not void. New York & L. I. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 50 Misc. 13, 100 N. Y. S. 316. Under Civ. Code Ga. § 2167, authorizing a railroad company to lay its tracks along any street or highway with the consent of the municipal authorities, a lot owner cannot enjoin such laying along a street on which his lot abuts on the ground that it will result in incidental damages where the construction is consented to by the authorities. The rule is the same whether the municipality has the fee or an easement only, as damages arising are recoverable only in an action at law. Whitaker v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co., 143 F. 583. The California statutes expressly provide that railroads may be constructed along or across highways. Madera R. Co. v. Raymond Granite Co. [Cal. App.] 87 P. 27.

69. A grant by a city to a railroad of the right to maintain tracks on a street and to maintain permanent buildings is void as interfering with the rights of the public. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 222 Ill. 427, 78 N. E. 790. Such a grant with reference to a public landing is also void. Id. While from the purposes of its creation and dedication a public landing includes the free and unobstructed passage of travelers and vehicles, its function is much broader and more important than that of a mere street, and considerations which would forbid the occupation of a street by a railway structure are of commanding application in the case of such a landing. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 497. Mandamus will not lie to compel a municipality to grant a permit to lay an additional track on a right of way across a boulevard, though it is necessary to lessen danger in traffic and elevation of the track would cost an immense sum. People v. South Park Com'rs, 221 Ill. 522, 77 N. E. 925. Abutting owners to interfere with the rights of abutters unless they are compensated.[70] Where a railroad company granted a right of way along a street turned the same into a switching yard, causing irreparable injury to adjacent owners, such taking was for private use and became a nuisance which abutting owners could restrain.[71, 72] A railroad is not entitled to continue to use a street as a switch yard because of the fact that such nuisance was created before such owners constructed their buildings.[73] The right to construct tracks in a street can be acquired only by compliance with the law authorizing it,[74] but when acquired it carries with it incidental rights.[75] Where the right to use streets is upon condition and such condition is broken, the railroad company is without authority,[76] and where a contract constituted a mere license, the city is not precluded from thereafter exercising its public power by forbidding trains to stop in the street.[77] A statute authorizing change in location of a highway for the pupose of avoiding or improving a grade crossing does not authorize discontinuance of a highway,[78] and where a railroad is authorized to change the site of a public road, the new road must be constructed to the same width as the original one.[79] who sign frontage consents for the construction of a railroad in the street may withdraw them at any time before finally acted upon by the mayor. People v. Decatur, etc., R. Co., 120 Ill. App. 229.

70. A railroad company occupying a public street without clear legislative authority is a nuisance and may be enjoined at the suit of a private citizen specially injured. Edwards v. Pittsburg Junction R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 798.

71, 72. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 47, 93 S. W. 177. In such case there is no adequate remedy at law. Id. In such case evidence that owners were required to shovel cinders from their roofs that roofs had been rotted by water held by such cinders, and that smoke and noise prevented renting the buildings, and that the premises depreciated in value, shows special damage. Id. A railroad company may not object to a decree enjoining it from using a street in such manner as to create a nuisance because of the fact that the relief granted by the decree would be given without its aid when a new depot, in course of construction was completed. Id.

74. Under Laws 1890, p. 1087, c. 565, § 11, prohibiting construction of a railroad on a village street without an order of court on notice to the trustees of the village, a railroad company may not arbitrarily extend its road over streets and where it applied for such right and village authorities opposing it showed that it would run on some of the busiest streets and that public interests would not be promoted, it was properly denied. In re Keeseville, etc., R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 237. Where prior to constructing a tunnel in any street or public place the company as required by statute procured the consent of abutting owners, it need not procure such consent as to every street in its proposed route prior to constructing on any street. New York, etc., R. Co. v. O'Brien, 50 Misc. 13, 100 N. Y. S. 316.

75. A railroad company which has a statutory right to construct a tunnel under a street may use the surface temporarily in furtherance of its work where it does not interfere with public travel regardless of the city's right to the street which had not been used as such for twenty years, except by a trolley line. Hoboken & M. R. Co. v. Hoboken [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 641.

76. Edwards v. Pittsburg Junction R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 798. Under Act June 19, 1871 (P. L. 1630), authorizing a private citizen to challenge the right of a corporation where his property rights are being injured, he may enjoin a railroad company from blowing its whistle or using bituminous coal, where a municipality authorized the company to use the street on condition that its steam whistle should not be used nor coal used for fuel. Id.

77. State v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 141 N. C. 736, 53 S. E. 290.

78. Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 159, § 14, authorizing railroad commissioners to authorize a railroad to change the location of a highway for the purpose of avoiding or improving a grade crossing, does not authorize the discontinuance of a highway. Blake v. Concord & M. R. Co. [N. H.] 64 A. 202. While the question whether the discontinuance of a portion of a highway and laying out of a portion in another place is a change of location such as railroad commissioners had power to authorize, or is a discontinuance of one highway and the laying out of another, is a question of fact; and while the new portion need not start at the point of discontinuance, and rejoin at the end of the portion discontinued, the new route must, in order to be regarded as a mere change, serve substantially the same public purpose and accommodate the same travel. Id.

79. Under Act Feb. 19, 1849, § 13 (P. L. 85), providing that if a railroad finds it necessary to change the site of a public road it shall reconstruct the same at its own expense where it does so reconstruct it, must do so to the original width of the road though it was not opened to its full width, and, where it erects buildings within such width, it constitutes a nuisance which may be enjoined. Commonwealth v. Delaware, etc., R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 417.

Rights in public lands [80] are acquired by Federal grant and the extent of the right acquired rests in the terms of the grant.[81]

Right of eminent domain.[82]—Where the charter of a railroad company states that its purpose is to construct a road by a designated route, the purpose is limited to the route substantially as designated.[83] A charter provision authorizing construction of a road between two certain points does not authorize condemnation of land between the initial point and another on the chartered route where it appears that the purpose is to build only to such point.[84] A specific right granted by franchise to condemn abandoned rights of way does not authorize condemnation of an abandoned right of way on which there is a prior location by a street railway.[85] Proceeding to condemn land must be in strict compliance with the statute.[86]

Private grants.[87]—A warranty deed of a strip of land for a right of way conveys an interest limited by the use for which the land is acquired, and on abandonment of the road the land will revert to the adjoining owner.[88] A railroad on receiving a deed from the free owner has no right to enter until a tenant has been compensated.[89] An owner who conveys a strip of land for a right of way cannot recover for injuries to his land caused by blasting in the course of construction.[90] A grant of a right of way over so much as the railroad was authorized to condemn passes a right in the maximum area it was authorized to condemn.[91] A contract to convey Proc. § 1238, reciting the uses for which land may be condemned. Boca & L. R. Co. v. Sierra Valleys R. Co. [Cal. App.] 84 P. 298. A railroad corporation has no power to condemn a crossing fifteen miles beyond the terminal of its road as designated by its articles of incorporation. Id. A branch line not authorized by the articles of incorporation if not incident to the main line nor is it an adjunct such as is referred to in Civ. Code, § 465, providing that a railroad company may take voluntary grants to aid construction, and the company may not condemn a crossing on the branch road. Id. Where a railroad relying on its charter authorizing it to construct a road between two certain points seeks to condemn land between the initial point and another, it has the burden to show that such other point is on the chartered route. Kansas City Interurban R. Co. v. Davis, 197 Mo. 669, 95 S. W. 881. Where the enumerated powers of a corporation included only the construction of a main line and east branch, it could not claim the right to construct a west branch on the ground that it was necessary to the expressed objects of the corporation. 91. A railroad was incorporated under an act authorizing it to condemn land for a right of way. An owner granted to it a right of way to so much and no more than it was authorized to condemn. Held it took land for railroad purposes is to be given effect as other contracts[92] according to its terms.[93] Where a railroad has an option to purchase certain land for a right of way, its commencement of condemnation proceedings operates as an election not to take advantage of its option;[94] but the mere fact that a railroad company continued condemnation proceedings after obtaining from the owner of mortgaged premises an option to purchase is not a waiver of its rights under the option.[95] Where a railroad company builds its road upon land of another without other authority than parol license such license may be revoked at any time.[96] In North Carolina it is provided by statute that, in the absence of any contract, a railroad is presumed to have been granted its right of way, unless the owner within a specified time after location of the line applies for an assessment of damages.[97]

Conditions and reservations in private grants.[98]—A covenant to build right of way fences as a condition precedent runs with the land for failure to perform which the railroad is liable to a tenant of a subsequent grantee of adjoining land.[99] A reservation of a crossing reserves the right to cross only at a definite place to be selected, and when so selected precludes the right to cross at any other point.[1] Under a provision for reverter to the grantor on abandonment, the land reverts to the grantor though he has conveyed his remaining land, excepting the right of way.[2]

Contract by which an Indian sold certain land to a railroad for reservoir purposes, at a time when the company had no right to condemn such land and when the right of occupancy and not the fee could be acquired from the Indian, held sufficiently performed by the Indian to entitle him to recover the purchase price. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Bond [Ind. T.] 98 S. W. 335. Corporate successor of the purchaser held not entitled to defend an action for the purchase price of such land on the ground that it was ultra vires. Id. A contract with an owner in connection with a proceeding to condemn a right of way, reserving to the owner as a means of access from one part of his farm to another, and under grade crossing, and which was considered in awarding damages in condemnation proceedings, is binding on both parties. 99. Indianapolis Northern Trac. Co. v. Harbaugh [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 80. It is immaterial that such covenant was not carried forward into the deed to the railroad. Id. Where a contract for the sale of land for a right of way contained a covenant to fence as a condition precedent, and action for injuries to stock growing out of failure to fence held based on the contract and not on the subsequent deed which was not alleged to contain such covenant. Id.

1. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Richardson [Ky.] 98 S. W. 1042. Where the track is raised at a point where there is a private crossing so that such crossing cannot be used without extending the approaches beyond the right of way, an owner may recover diminution in the value of his land caused thereby. Id. One is not estopped to claim such damages though he renders it impossible to construct a crossing at such point. Id.

2. Where a right of way was conveyed by a deed providing that if the premises were not used for railroad purposes they should revert to the grantor, on abandonment of the premises by the railroad company, they reverted to the grantor though he had conveyed remaining land to another excepting the right of way. Spencer v. Wabash R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 453. This is so notwithstanding Code, § 2015, providing that on abandonment by the railway company for eight years, the right of way shall revert "to the owner of the land from which the right of way was taken." Id. Under the

A forfeiture will not be declared if the conditions of the deed are substantially complied with.[3] If upon a bill to compel specific performance of covenants to construct cattle guards, a shute for a quarry, and an outlet for a spring, it does not appear that any use of such structures would be made, relief will be denied and the plaintiff remitted to his action at law.[4]

Adverse possession by or against railroad companies.[5]—Where the right to land is acquired by prescription, all rights incident to ownership follow.[6] The term of occupancy essential is regulated by statute.[7] Only the area actually used can be acquired by adverse possession.[8] Land appurtenant to a railroad right of way is not ordinarily subject of adverse possession.[9]

Abandonment of right of way.[10]—A railroad company has no power to willfully abandon a part of its route,[11] and if it does so it forfeits its right to condemn for the part not abandoned.[12] Where a portion of land conveyed for railroad purposes is abandoned, the grantor may recover that portion.[13]

§ 5. Aids and bonuses.[14]—Public land grants to railroads[15] and municipal aid bonds[16] are treated elsewhere. An election for the purpose of voting a railroad aid tax must be held in the manner prescribed by law.[17] A town may not contest laws of New York where land was acquired on the condition that it should revert when the company ceased to exist, and the company consolidated with another, the land did not revert on expiration of the period for which the grantee was incorporated, but title vested in the consolidated corporation for use during its existence. Colgate v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 650.

3. Where one donated land "for railroad purposes only," he could not have the deed canceled on the ground that it was understood that the land was to be used in connection with the main line, but it was used only in connection with a branch. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Kamper [Miss.] 41 So. 513.

6. By entering on and occupying a right of way for two years, not only an easement to use such way is acquired but also the right to drain surface water therefrom, provided it does so without negligence and unnecessary injury to adjacent lands. Parks v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 701. Where a railroad is built along a street with consent of owners and maintained for twenty years, further maintenance will not be enjoined at the suit of such owners. Wolfard v. Fisher [Or.] 84 P. 850.

7. The two-year prescription applies only where there has been a judgment of expropriation and the corporation has entered into possession before payment of compensation awarded. Amet v. Texas & P. R. Co., 117 La. 454, 41 So. 721.

8. Where an original entry by a railroad company was without authority and it did not appropriate a way sixty feet wide which it was authorized to take under its charter, it may be enjoined from subsequently taking more land, as it acquired by occupation only the land actually used. Leidigh v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 539.

9. Reading Co. v. Seip, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 330. Under Revisal 1905, § 388, providing that a railroad shall not be barred of or presumed to have conveyed its right of way, possession thereof by individuals does not operate as a bar nor raise a presumption of abandonment. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Olive, 142 N. C. 257, 55 S. E. 263.

11. A railroad company has no power to willfully abandon a part of its route, notwithstanding Rev. St. 1899, § 1161, providing that if work is not commenced within two years and finished in ten years, the charter shall be forfeited, provided that if a portion of the road has been constructed it may be retained. 17. Under Const. 1879, art. 242, Act 1886, No. 35, p. 44, and Act 1894, No. 153, p. 191, the petition of taxpayers calling for an election upon the question of tax in aid of railroad construction need not specify the amount to be raised. The law mentioned is complied with when the rate is designated, the period fixed, and such rate receives the requisite votes at the election. State v. Knowles, 117 La. 129, 41 So. 439. Where, under Const. 1879, art. 242, Act 1886, No. 35, p. 44, and Act 1894, No. 153, p. 191, upon the petition of taxpayers and agreeably to the result of an election, a tax is levied for ten years in aid of railroad construction, such tax is to be collected each year during the term upon the basis of the assessment each year. Id. Under Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 5340, requiring a petition for a railroad aid appropriation to be signed by twenty-five freeholders, the fact that many signed their Christian names by initials only does not render the proceeding void. Good v. Burk [Ind.] 77 N. E. 1080. A tax voted in the following terms: "For a special tax of five mills on the dollar of all assessed property within the corporation limits of the town of Russell for ten years, in aid," etc., held to mean that such a tax should be levied and paid to the beneficiary each year for the

the regularity of an election held by itself for voting a railroad aid tax, especially after the tax has been earned by the construction of the road.[18] A compliance with the terms upon which the aid is voted entitled the railroad to it.[19] A petition for mandamus to enforce levy of a tax that has been voted in aid of railroad construction need not recite every detail of the proceedings by which the election was held.[20] The assignment by a railroad company to private individuals of the right to the avails of such a tax is not an abandonment of the tax where the right to assign was unconditionally granted to the company.[21] A private individual may be the beneficiary of such a tax where he becomes such by assignment.[22]

Subscriptions.[23]—A railroad company for the purpose of aiding in the construction of its road may accept and enforce an obligation payable to it on condition that it completes the line to a certain point within a specified time and establishes a depot there.[24] A substantial compliance with such contract is sufficient.[25] Whether there has been a sufficient compliance may be a question of fact.[26] A note payable to a director of a railroad company for his personal benefit on condition that the road is completed to a certain point by a certain time is void as contrary to public policy.[27]

19. A provision in a notice of election on the question of levying a tax that the tax shall be collected the first year after being voted, if the line is in operation between certain points and a depot constructed at a certain place, is complied with if the line is in operation and the depot constructed in a permanent manner, though off the main line on a spur track. Whitney v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 912. Where a railroad aid tax is voted to be paid when the line is in operation between certain points, such condition is complied with when the road is in operation between such points, regardless of the financial condition of the company to extend it further. Id. Where in constructing its road a company incumbers it for more than is allowed by Code, § 2088, but cancels the excess of the bonds before the hearing, there is no fraud to sustain an injunction against the collection of a railroad aid tax. Id. Under Ky. St. 1887-88, authorizing Estill county to subscribe for railroad stock and issue bond in payment of it and levy taxes to pay for them, the liability to levy the tax does not depend on the performance of the condition by the railroad to commence construction work within a year but upon the proper issue of the bonds. Estill County v. Embry [C. C. A.] 144 F. 913. See, also, Counties, 7 C. L. 976.

20. All that is necessary to allege is that on a certain day an election touching the imposition of the tax was held, that the result was favorable to the tax, that the railroad has been completed and the tax earned. Arkansas Southern R. Co. v. Wilson [La.] 42 So. 976.

24. Piper v. Choctaw Northern Townsite & Imp. Co., 16 Okl. 436, 85 P. 965. A contract was given to "A." Co. promising to pay it a certain amount if its line was completed to a certain point within a certain time. The name of the road was afterwards changed by a charter amendment and the line constructed. Held such latter road could recover. Id.

25. A railroad subscription contract requiring the road to be commenced near a certain point and extend by way of a certain place did not require that such place be on the main line. A branch line is sufficient. Hunt v. Upton [Wash.] 87 P. 56. A substantial performance with the terms of a subscription contract as distinguished from a strict compliance is all that is required. Id. Where a subscription contract required the construction of the road, the construction thereof by a corporation of which the person who obtained the subscription was a majority stockholder is a compliance with the contract. Id.

26. Where a railroad subscription contract provided that the work should be commenced at or near a certain place, and it was commenced a mile from such point, whether it was commenced "at or near" was held a question for the jury. Hunt v. Upton [Wash.] 87 P. 56.

29. Gen. Laws 1905, p. 336, c. 141, imposing a tax of one per cent of gross receipts, is an occupation tax, and not an interference with interstate commerce. State v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 909, 97 S. W. 71. Such statute imposes a tax on the gross receipts of a railroad derived from any source. Id.

30. In Georgia a municipal corporation is

§ 7. Public control and regulation.[31]—A penalty may be inflicted for refusal to redeem passenger tickets.[32] The state may, in the exercise of its police power, impose upon railroad companies, whose lines intersect public highways laid out after the construction of the road, the uncompensated duty of constructing and maintaining at such crossings all such safety devices as are reasonably necessary for the protection of the traveling public.[33] A contract with a municipality by which the company is relieved of such obligation and the municipality deprived of its right to enforce it as a police regulation is ultra vires and void.[34] Such requirement being referable to the police power is not a taking of private property for public use.[35] It is within the police power of the state to require interchange of cars at switching points where there is physical connection with other roads.[36] It is also a valid exercise of the police power to prohibit the use of steam whistles in close proximity to streets.[37]

Control by railroad commissions.[38]—Generally, railroad commissioners have only such powers as are expressly or impliedly conferred upon them by statute,[39] and a statute giving them supervision over steam railroads by implication denies them power over electric railroads.[40] An order of a commission requiring interstate trains to stop at a particular station is not a burden on interstate commerce,[41] nor is a statute which requires railroads to report to a state commission.[42] It is the duty of railroad companies to obey valid orders of the commission.[43] An appeal to

33. State v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 98 Minn. 380, 108 N. W. 261. A bridge over the tracks when necessary to make the crossing safe is a "safety device" within the meaning of that expression. 37. City ordinance prohibiting the use of steam whistles on locomotives, except as brake signals or to prevent accidents, and prohibiting the escape of steam from cylinder cocks when the engine is running in proximity to a street or crossing is a valid exercise of the police power. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Steckman, 224 Ill. 500, 79 N. E. 602.

39. In mandamus to enforce one of their orders, such order should appear on its face to be within their powers and authority. State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Fla.] 40 So. 875. If the order contains a material provision not within their power and compliance forthwith is commanded by the writ, it is demurrable since it must be enforced as a whole if at all. Id. Civ. Code 1892, § 2094, giving the railroad commission power to fix storage rates and the time when storage charges shall begin, does not give it power to fix the time when the relation of carrier ceases and that of warehouseman commences. Jones Bros. v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 666. Laws 1905, c. 18, construed, and held that the railroad commission had power to employ an expert to ascertain the cost of constructing railroads and fix his salary which could not be reviewed by the state auidtor under Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 134, in the absence of fraud. State v. Clausen [Wash.] 87 P. 498.

40. Kansas City O. B. & Elec. R. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs [Kan.] 84 P. 755. Has no jurisdiction to entertain an application by a railroad company for leave to cross its track with that of an electric railroad. Id.

41. See, also, Commerce, 7 C. L. 667. Where railroad commissioners have determined that accommodations furnished at a particular station are inadequate, its order requiring interstate mail trains to stop on flag is not a burden on interstate commerce. Railroad Com'rs v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 74 S. C. 80, 54 S. E. 224. Mandanus will issue to compel such action, the writ being so framed as to give the railroad company the privilege to provide, in the alternative, facilities substantially the same as would be afforded by the stopping of such trains. Id.

42. Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 114, requiring a report to the state, railroad and warehouse commission, substantially the same as the railroad is required to make to be interstate commerce commission; does not violate the commerce clause of the Federal constitution. People v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 223 Ill. 581, 79 N. E. 144. This statute applies to foreign corporations doing business in the state as well as the domestic ones. Id.

§ 8. Construction and maintenance.[45]—A company chartered to construct a road between two named termini must perform the duty imposed [46] or substantially perform it.[47] In some states it is provided by statute that a certain length of track must be completed each year.[48] The right to bridge streams is regulated by statute,[49] and the limitations therein prescribed must be observed.[50] Whether a railroad is required to bridge a stream may depend on statute.[51]

Establishment and maintenance of depots.—A railroad must exercise its powers to determine the location of depots with reasonable discretion, taking into account the convenience of the public and its own interests,[52] and statutory require-valid order for prevention of unjust discrimination and for the observance of rates, it is the duty of the railroad company to obey it, and such duty may be enforced by mandamus. State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Fla.] 40 So. 875.

44. Acts 1905, p. 88, c. 53, § 6, authorizing an appeal to the court from any "rate classification rule, charge or general regulation" of the railroad commission, no appeal lies from an order requiring installation of an interlocking device at a crossing. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Hunt [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 358. Under Burns' Ann. St. Supp. 1905, § 5405f, providing for an appeal to the appellate court from any "rate classification rule, charge or general regulation" of the railroad commission and for an appeal to the circuit court from an order as to the crossing of one railroad by another, held no appeal lies to the appellate court from an order in a proceeding under Burn's Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5158a, 5158h, authorizing a petition by one road to compel the use of an interlocking device at a crossing. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission [Ind.] 78 N. E. 981.

45. See 6 C. L. 1201.

46. A company chartered to construct a line between two certain points only built to a junction near one of them after a lease of the road, the charter was amended to release the company from its obligation to construct its line to such city provided it would construct a depot therein to which trains could be run over a connecting line. The lessee accepted such compromise and conformed to it for several years. Held that, though the original company had not financial ability to pay charges imposed by the connecting line or to construct a new line its lessee or practical owner was bound to do so. Winchester & S. R. Co. v. Com. [Va.] 55 S. E. 692. The fact that it would entail financial loss to build the new line or pay the charges of the connecting line would not excuse performance of the duty imposed by its charter running trains to the terminus. Id.

47. Where a company accepted a charter to build its road between certain terminl and an amendment was accepted releasing it from the obligation to build the road to one termini provided it would run its trains there over a connecting line, it could fulfill its duty either by constructing a road of its own or running its trains over the connecting line. Winchester & S. R. Co. v. Com. [Va.] 55 S. E. 692. In proceedings before the corporation commission it appeared that a company was released from a duty imposed by its charter to build its road to a certain point provided it should run its trains over another line. Held that such connecting line not made a party to the proceeding was not subject to any order of the commission as to the running of trains over its line. Id.

48. A road only about three miles long does not fall within the restriction contained in Civ. Code 1895, § 2176, providing for future of charter if a certain length of line is not completed within a certain period. Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 624. Civ. Code § 468, requiring railroads to complete every years five miles of the line or forfeit the right to extend beyond the point to which it is completed, does not limit the right to construct a road to one not less than five miles long. Madera R. Co. v. Raymond Granite Co. [Cal. App.] 87 P. 27.

49. A charter authorizing construction of a road across a river "above or near" a certain town authorizes construction of a bridge "above or near" such town but not necessarily above. Pedrick v. Raleigh, etc., R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 877. Where a company had full power to construct a draw bridge over a navigable stream, evidence held insufficient to show that such construction would constitute a nuisance justifying preliminary injunction. Id.

50. A railroad exercising the power conferred by Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 5153, authorizing it to construct its road across any stream, etc., in a manner to afford security for property, etc., can do so only subject to the limitation prescribed. Graham v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1055. Such statute does not apply merely to navigable streams. Id. A railroad company constructing its road without reference to the restriction imposed by this statute cannot confer to its grantee any greater right than it possessed nor relieve it from performance of its statutory duty. Id.

51. Where a dam was removed destroying a ferry, a railroad company was held not required under Act Feb. 27, 1879, and Act May 20, 1887, to furnish a bridge over the river to its railroad. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Com., 105 Va. 297, 54 S. E. 331.

52. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 222 Ill. 396, 78 N. E. 784. A location of a union depot at the foot of an important street, 210 feet from the corporate line, within 4 blocks of a former depot, and within the police jurisdiction of the city, as ordered by the ments.[53] A railroad company acting in good faith has the right as against the public to change the location of depots if it furnishes reasonably safe, accessible, and convenient depot accommodations,[54] and the fact that private interests will be prejudiced by the change is immaterial.[55] In some states the places where depots shall be established rests with the public authorities, which also have power to direct as to the accommodations to be furnished.[56] A statute requiring the construction of suitable buildings and conveniences at stations includes necessary side tracks.[57]

Private farm crossings.[58]—It is generally required by statute,[59] or charter provision,[60] that suitable private crossings shall be maintained where they are necessary,[61] and such duty, whether arising from statutory or contract obligation, may be enforced [62] after the right to the crossing has been fixed,[63] and damages may be corporation commission, will not be enjoined because beyond the city limits. Dewey v. Atlantic Coast Line, 142 N. C. 392, 55 S. E. 292.

53. Whether Ky. St. 1903, § 772, requiring railroads to provide suitable and convenient waiting rooms, has been complied with is for the jury. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Com. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 320.

54. Where uncontrolled by contracts or previous acts on its part. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 222 Ill. 396, 78 N. E. 784. Where it was sought to compel a railroad to continue a depot it was threatening to abandon, evidence held sufficient to show that the location of depots at other places furnished safe, accessible, and convenient accommodations to the public. Id. Where in mandamus to compel the continuance of a depot the railroad threatened to abandon, the court held that no judgment could be predicated on an allege contract, and no error was assigned, the court on appeal must hold that such contract was of no force and the only question is whether the railroad company abused its discretion in changing the location of its depots. Id.

55. That private citizens have constructed dwellings and business houses in expectation that a depot will be continued after having been maintained for many years is of no force in mandamus to compel its continuance and the stopping of trains there. (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 222 Ill. 396, 78 N. E. 784), nor can the fact that the depot is surrounded by saloons and other places of vice be considered (Id.).

56. Under U. S. § 3890, providing that railroads shall establish depots at such places as the supreme court shall deem necessary, and § 3989, as amended by Acts. 1902, No. 68, providing that railroad commissioners may order additions to or changes in station houses or the location thereof, or new stations or houses, the power to establish a station at a certain point is in the supreme court and the power of the commissioners is only with regard to buildings where stations are established. In re Board of Railroad Com'rs [Vt.] 65 A. 82. The mere occasional stopping of trains at a point where a railroad had discontinued a station does not create a station so as to give the commissioners power to order construction of station houses. Id.

57. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4492, 4493, 4519, requiring railroads to locate depot grounds before constructing their roads and forbidding any change therein and requiring them to erect suitable buildings, etc., held side tracks at stations are "an essential part of the road and the operation of cars thereon, in the absence of negligence, does not give an adjacent owner a cause of action for discomfort. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Shaw [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 129, 92 S. W. 30.

58. See 6 C. L. 1201.

59. Code § 2022, requiring railroads to construct private crossings when one person owns land on both sides of the track, applies and is not unreasonable where in the absence of such crossing an owner was compelled to go 160 rods to a highway. Mattice v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 130 Iowa, 749, 107 N. W. 949. A strip of land 100 feet wide along the right of way purchased to protect the track from snow is a part of the railroad within this statute, though Code § 1994, provides for the taking otherwise than by consent of the owner only 100 feet. Id. Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, requiring construction of farm crossings, requires such construction where after the construction of the road land is acquired by one person on both sides of the track. Quantock v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 197 Mo. 93, 94 S. W. 978.

60. Under a charter provision requiring farm crossing to be put in when necessary, when one crossing was put in and the land was subsequently divided, the company was required to put in a crossing for the portion of the land without one. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Emerson [Ky.] 100 S. W. 863.

61. Where a railroad company is required to furnish a reasonable crossing, it is improper to instruct that it was only necessary to furnish such crossing as made it possible for the owner to have ingress and egress. Kendall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 309, 95 S. W. 757. One who is a tenant of an adjoining farmer and frequently used a farm crossing maintained by the railroad company is not a bare licensee. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Slaughter [Ind.] 79 N. E. 186. A bare licensee assumes the risks arising from defects existing in the premises. Id.

62. Specific performance of covenants on the part of a railroad company to build, provide, and maintain crossings, cattle guards, etc., entered into as part of the consideration for the grant of a right of way, may be enforced by mandatory injunction. Johnson v. Ohio River R. Co. [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 200. Where a railroad company to which land was conveyed covenanted as part of the consideration to maintain a suitable crossing and it was agreed that the cross-recovered for failure to perform.[64] Contributory negligence of one injured at a private crossing bars recovery of damages by him.[65]

Public crossings.[66]—The discretionary power of public authorities to locate crossings will not be interfered with unless abused.[67] A charter provision requiring a railroad company to construct and maintain good and sufficient crossings imposes a contract duty [68] and may be enforced in the manner prescribed by statute.[69] Statutory authority to change the place or nature of a crossing, with the approval of public authorities, does not confer on such authorities power to grant any dispensation to the railroad.[70] If overhead crossings are not required by mandatory statute, it is optional with the railroad to grade or bridge.[71] Where it is reasonably practicable to build a bridge spanning an entire highway, a railroad company may be enjoined from erecting abutments in the highway,[72] unless the highway has not been ing should be an opening through the embankment, and a successor in title of the railroad closed the opening, equity has jurisdiction to compel its restoration. Acts Feb. 19, 1849, § 12 (P. L. 84), applies only where land was taken in condemnation proceedings. Id.

63. No right of action accrues on a covenant to construct crossings at such places as the covenantee may designate until such designations have been made and notice thereof given. Johnson v. Ohio River R. Co. [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 200.

64. Where in constructing a road the company neglected for a long time to put in a suitable crossing, as it promised to do, and it had notice that the land owner was desirous of getting out wood he had cut, it was liable for loss of profits resulting from inability to sell the wood. Kendall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 309, 95 S. W. 757. A railroad on receiving a conveyance agreed to maintain fences on each side of the track and provide the grantor with a crossing at the time of the conveyance. The land was farm land and the crossing connected portions of the farm. Fences with bars at the crossing were maintained for many years. Held a farm crossing only. Speer v. Erie R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 1024. Damages held excessive for destruction of such crossing. Measure of damages for breach of contract to build farm crossing is difference in value of farm with and without such crossing. Brown v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 131.

65. Where one is injured in passing over a bridge at a private crossing which he knows to be defective and dangerous, he is guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Evans [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 872, 92 S. W. 1077.

66. See 6 C. L. 1201.

67. A county court in Tennessee which is vested with discretionary power in the location of highways cannot be enjoined from locating a grade crossing, unless a taking of property essential to the operation of the road or other irreparable injury be shown, or that the proposed action is a violation of some law. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Morgan County [C. C. A.] 143 F. 793.

68. A railroad charter requiring it to construct and maintain good and sufficient crossings is a contract between the corporation and the state in the sense that it could not be altered or the franchise withdrawn in the absence of reservation in the charter, and its acceptance imposed such contractual duty on the railroad company. Borough of Metuchen v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 484.

69. P. L. 1903, p. 660, § 29, providing that where a railroad does not properly construct or maintain crossings the township or municipality may maintain specific performance to compel it to do so, is not unconstitutional as providing a compulsory remedy as distinguished from a preventitive remedy. Borough of Metuchen v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 484. The remedy provided by P. L. 1903, p. 660, § 29, authorizing a township to maintain specific performance to compel a railroad to maintain its crossing in proper repair, is available regardless of remedies by mandamus, ejectment, or indictment. Id. Where a railroad company refused to comply with a provision in its charter that the raising or lowering of highways must be done to the satisfaction of the town council, it was the duty of the town to make the alteration itself and recover from the railroad. Briden v. New York, etc., R. Co., 27 R. I. 569, 65 A. 315.

70. P. L. 1868, p. 1037, authorizing change of location of grade of a highway at a crossing provided no such change should be made without concurrence of highway surveyors, does not confer on surveyors authority to vacate any portion of a highway in the interests of a railway company. Borough of Metuchen v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 484. P. L. 1868, p. 1037, § 1, authorizing certain railroad companies to shorten and straighten their line to cause the same to pass above or below a public highway or street and if necessary change the location or grade so as to make the crossing more convenient, provided no such change should be made without concurrence of municipal authorities, does not authorize township officers to grant any dispensation to one of the railroad companies mentioned. Id.

71. Acts Ark. 1905, p. 116, requiring railway companies to grade crossings and streets and providing that crossings in cities and towns may be by bridge, is not mandatory with respect to bridges, and it is optional with the railroad company to grade or bridge a crossing. De Lucca v. North Little Rock Co., 142 F. 597.

72. Radnor Tp. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 214 Pa. 299, 63 A. 694.

opened to its full width.[73] The division of cost of construction of a crossing on a highway laid out after the railroad was built is sometimes regulated by statute.[74] Such method is also prescribed in case of change in the nature of the crossing.[75]

Railroad companies are required to keep their tracks and approaches thereto at public crossings in good repair,[76] whether such approach was constructed by them or not,[77] and are liable in damages for injuries resulting from failure to do so[78] if such injuries result from their negligence,[79] and not from the contributory negligence of the person injured,[80] especially where such duty is imposed by law.[81] But

73. Where because of peculiarities of the country a road 33 feet wide has only been opened 20 feet wide, a railroad company constructing an overhead crossing will not be restrained from constructing a bridge 20 feet wide. Radnor Tp. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 214 Pa. 299, 63 A. 694.

74. Under Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 6106, it is the duty of a railroad company to make and keep in repair crossings and approaches notwithstanding the railroad was constructed before the highway was laid out. Public authorities are required to build that part of the highway within the right of way which they would be required to make had the railway not been constructed. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Cass County [Neb.] 107 N. W. 773. Under this statute a railroad cannot recover damages from a county for the cost of putting in cattle guards, erecting sign posts, building wing fences, planking the track, and constructing approaches. Id. Compensatory damages should be allowed for the land taken from the right of way. Id. Where in making approaches it is necessary to grade nearly all the width of the right of way, the railroad should be allowed such sum as the county would have been compelled to expend in grading the road had the railroad never been built. Id.

75. St. 1900, p. 411, c. 439, § 6, requiring a railroad to pay a part of the cost of an overhead bridge at a crossing, held constitutional. In re Bristol County [Mass.] 79 N. E. 339. Under Heydecker's Gen. Laws, p. 3292, c. 39, §§ 62, 65, providing that when a change is made in a grade crossing, half the expense shall be borne by the railroad, one-fourth by the state, and one-fourth by the municipal corporation, and that no claim for damages to property shall be allowed unless notice be filed with the railroad commissioners, etc., filing such claim with the village is insufficient as it is under no duty to forward it to the commissioners. Mehlenbacker v. Salamanca, 101 N. Y. S. 1073.

76. A bridge which runs up to the cross ties at a crossing is such an approach as the railroad is required to keep in repair. Southern R. Co. v. Morris [Ala.] 42 So. 19. Under as well as independently of Code 1896, § 1164, providing that when a railroad crosses a public highway it must place the road in a condition satisfactory to county commissioners, the company must not only put but must keep the approaches in proper repair. Southern R. Co. v. Morris, 143 Ala. 628, 42 So. 17.

77. Since it is the duty of a railroad to keep approaches in repair, failure to prove that the company constructed an approach does not defeat recovery by one injured at a crossing. Southern R. Co. v. Taylor [Ala.] 42 So. 625. Failure to allege that the railroad company constructed the approach, is immaterial, it being its duty to keep it in repair regardless of who constructed it. Southern R. Co. v. Morris [Ala.] 42 So. 19. Failure to prove the date of the injury as alleged is not a fatal variance. Southern R. Co. v. Taylor [Ala.] 42 So. 625.

78. Whether a railroad company was negligent in maintaining a defective crossing where a horse fell and injured its rider held a question for the jury. Southern R. Co. v. Clark [Va.] 56 S. E. 274. Where one was injured because of a defective walk over a crossing, whether the hole or depression was such a defect as to render defendant railroad company guilty of negligence in permitting it to remain is a question for the jury. Durr v. New York, etc., R. Co., 184 N. Y. 320, 77 N. E. 397. That a railway company dug a hole on its premises close to a frequented park is some evidence of wanton disregard of those using the park. Ruddell v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 528. Whether one injured on a way across a railroad track had a right to be there, and whether the public used such way with the consent of the railroad company, held questions for the jury. Id.

79. The mere fact that a spike at a crossing became loose, worked up half an inch, and a mule caught its foot on it and was injured, does not show negligence, as a matter of law. Perdue v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Ark.] 100 S. W. 901. A railroad which constructs steps over its right of way fence impliedly invites people to use them and is liable where injuries result from failure to use ordinary care to keep the steps in repair. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v Dooley, 77 Ark. 561, 92 S. W. 789. Where the essence of a case for injury is that the railroad company removed the original walk at a crossing and replaced it so that it was five inches higher and that plaintiff fell and was injured, the allegation as to the removal of the original walk was immaterial and recovery might be had without proof thereof. Hopkins v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1067, 110 N. W. 1064. An answer in the affirmative to an interrogatory whether an accident at a crossing would have happened by reason of a defect therein except for the manner in which the plaintiff's wagon was loaded construed to mean that it would. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Gallion [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 547.

80. Where a traveler was injured at a crossing because of a defect therein of which he had no notice, the question of his negligence was held for the jury. Chicago etc., R. Co. v. Gallion [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 547. Where one was injured by being thrown from his wagon while going over a crossing, whether the condition of the crossing was sufficient warning of the danger was railroad companies are not required to keep in repair portions of a street which are not a part of an approach,[82] nor to repair the portion of a highway beneath its overhead crossing.[83] The duty of a railroad company to construct highway bridges over its tracks is a continuing one and it should be required to strengthen the bridge whenever for any reason it becomes insufficient for highway traffic.[84]

Damages for negligent construction.[85]—Where a railroad is constructed in a street, an abutting owner may recover for injuries incident thereto regardless of negligence,[86] and, where private rights are violated in course of construction, the railroad is liable.[87] If a track is so constructed as to be reasonably sufficient for the purpose intended, it is sufficient.[88] held for the jury. Lowenstein v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 371, 93 S. W. 871. Where one was injured while driving over a crossing, an instruction requiring him to not only use reasonable care to prevent being thrown from the wagon but also to "brace himself" was erroneous. Id. Where a traveler with a loaded wagon was injured by reason of his load tipping over because of a defect in a crossing, an instruction that if the wagon was so loaded that it was liable to tip on an uneven road, etc., there could be no recovery, held erroneous as eliminating what a reasonably prudent man would have done under the circumstances. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Gallion [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 547. In an action for injuries by reason of a defective crossing, an instruction that if the plaintiff's wagon was so loaded that the load was liable to tip while passing over uneven ground, etc., was erroneous as assuming that the acts hypothesized constituted contributory negligence as a matter of law. Id.

81. Where a duty is imposed by law on a railroad company to keep crossings in a safe condition or to provide temporary crossings where alterations are being made at the regular one, it may not escape liability for injury to a traveler because it intrusted such duty to an independent contractor. Choctaw, O & W. R. Co. v. Wilker, 16 Okl. 384, 84 P. 1086.

82. Evidence sufficient to show that filled portions of a street, made in constructing a viaduct over a railway constituted a mere raising of the street grade and was no part of the viaduct or its approaches, and that railroad was not required to keep it in repair. State v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 99 Minn. 280, 109 N. W. 238, 110 N. W. 975.

83. A railroad charter requiring the company to construct and keep in repair bridges or passages over or under the track at crossings does not require it to maintain the highway under its overhead crossing in repair. Borough of Metuchen v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 484.

84. From increased travel or greater weight of vehicles. Briden v. New York, etc., R. Co., 27 R. I. 569, 65 A. 315. Laws 1844, § 11, incorporating a railroad and providing that the road should be so constructed as not to impede travel or obstruct a highway, and if a highway was raised or lowered it should be done in a manner satisfactory to the town council, does not authorize a city to compel a railroad to strengthen a bridge over its tracks so that it will sustain street cars. The city was relieved of its statutory duty relative to the bridge which was imposed on the railroad company, and such duty was fulfilled if the bridge was made safe for travelers and teams. Id. The statute has no application to a proceeding by a city to compel the railroad company to strengthen the bridge so that it would bear street car traffic. Id.

85. See 6 C. L. 1202.

86. When a railroad is constructed in the street, abutting owners are entitled to recover for injuries sustained because of flooding, noise, smoke, and cinders, regardless of the question of negligence. Schier v. Cane Belt R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 360. When an abutting owner's property was injured by flooding, noise, smoke, and cinders, because of the construction of a railroad in the street, it was no defense that the road was skillfully constructed and the the trains carefully handled, as negligence therein was not alleged. Id.

87. Where damages were not claimed for negligence in construction, but negligence in tearing down a fence, diverting a stream, etc., was asserted, an instruction that the owner was estopped from asserting damage caused by negligent construction because he had released them by the contract granting the right of way was inapplicable. Kendall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 309, 95 S. W. 757. Where in the construction of a road a pasture fence is negligently tore down, no crossing furnished, and a stream diverted, an owner is not required to make reasonable expenditure to prevent damages resulting therefrom. Id. In an action for negligently tearing down a pasture fence, refusing to rebuild it, refusing to construct a crossing, and negligently diverting a stream, an answer that the company purchased the right of way for $2,500, which included full remuneration for all damages, was not open to exception. Id. Under the statutes of Arkansas, where a right of way was acquired by purchase over land upon which a telephone line had been constructed by consent, the railroad was held not entitled to remove the line and destroy its utility where it was not a nuisance, though it had repeatedly demanded that the telephone company remove it. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Batesville & Winerva Telephone Co. [Ark.] 97 S. W. 660. If dirt and rock from excavation be deposited on adjoining premises, owner may recover in trespass. Bigham v. Pittsburg Const. Co., 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 86.

88. The fact that a passing track at a station is not so constructed as to take a rapidly moving train is not proof of negligence where it is sufficient for the purposes

Abolition and prevention of grade crossings.[89]—In some states the establishment of future grade crossings is prohibited.[90] A change in a grade crossing should not be ordered if it would be useless.[91]

Crossings with other railroads, street railroads, and canals.[92]—A constitutional right of a railroad company to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, is not confined to main tracks but extends to spur and other tracks forming a part of the same system.[93] Though such right exists, a contract therefor may be based on a sufficient consideration.[94] In Wisconsin it is provided that if terms of crossing cannot be agreed upon they shall be fixed by a commission [95] when it is determined that such crossing is necessary,[96] and no appeal lies from a determination that it is necessary.[97] A railroad company has no right in the street at crossings except subject to the proper use of such premises for street purposes and may not enjoin a street railway company from crossing its road at grade where the latter has obtained a right to construct its road.[98]

Rights on tracks of other companies are provided for by statute,[99] and, where one railroad has a right to run its trains over the line of another and to have its road connected therewith, injunction will issue to compel the granting of such right.[1] for which it was intended and safe for passage of trains under control. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Bishard [C. C. A.] 147 F. 496.

89. See 6 C. L. 1202.

90. Act June 7, 1901 (P. L. 531), prohibiting grade crossings except where allowed by the court, does not apply to streets established by ordinance three years prior to the date of the act. Ligonier Valley R. Co. v. Latrobe Borough [Pa.] 65 A. 548.

91. It is improper for railroad commissioners to order a change of a crossing at grade to one under grade which would render the highway impassable for a great portion of the year because of overflow and the only relief afforded would be a proposed grade crossing maintained by the railroad company which it would permit the public to use at will. In re Delaware, etc., R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 9.

92. See 6 C. L. 1203.

93. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Louisiana W. R. Co., 116 La. 178, 40 So. 627.

94. Under Const. § 216, requiring one railroad to allow another to cross its tracks, a contract by which one allowed another to cross on condition that it should be liable for all damages by reason of collisions because of failure of its employes to stop trains is based on a consideration. Owensboro City R. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 596, 94 S. W. 22. Where one company desires to construct its tracks over those of another, they may agree as between themselves as to the terms of crossing, including compensation for the right to cross and the expense of constructing and maintaining an interlocking system as well as to who shall pay flagman and other operatives. Hydell v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 74 Ohio St. 138, 77 N. E. 1066.

95. Under Rev. St. 1898, § 1828, providing that when railroads cannot agree as to terms of a crossing the same shall be determined by commissioners appointed by the court, a railroad desiring to cross is not required to do any particular act in furtherance of an agreement, and there was no response by the other road to their proposition within a month, a finding that the parties could not agree was justified. In re Eastern Wisconsin R. & Light Co., 127 Wis. 641, 107 N. W. 496.

96. Under Rev. St. 1898, § 1828, relative to the right of one railroad to cross or intersect with another, the necessity of the crossing petitioned for is to be determined by the legislature and not by the court or commissioners appointed to determine the terms on which the crossing may be made. In re Eastern Wisconsin R. & Light Co., 127 Wis. 641, 107 N. W. 496. Where an electric railway could not enter a city over its proposed route without crossing the tracks of a street railway, the necessity of such crossing sufficiently appeared though the latter offered the use of certain portions of its tracks. Id.

97. Under Laws 1905, p. 912, c. 497, providing for an appeal to the court from an award of commissioners appointed to determine the terms on which one railroad may cross another, held that whether petitioner was entitled to a grade crossing was not reviewable on appeal from an order fixing the right to a crossing and providing for appointment of commissioners. In re Eastern Wisconsin R. & Light Co., 127 Wis. 641, 107 N. W. 496.

98. Pennsylvania Co. v. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co., 146 F. 446. This is the rule in Illinois. East St. Louis R. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 159. The plenary power given to city councils by Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, to regulate the use of streets, includes power to authorize the crossing of a railroad track over a street by a street railway. Such power is not taken away by Act July 1, 1889, p. 223, creating the State Railway and Warehouse Commission. Id.

99. Where a railroad charter (Acts 1870, p. 739, c. 412, § 10, and Acts 1872, p. 171, c. 119, §§ 4, 5), shows that the purposes of the existence of such road was its use by other railroads, and provides that "all railroad companies" shall have equal right to run trains over its tracks, held that such statutes impose on such road the duty to allow the use of its track to other railroads and also gives other roads the right to have connection made. Union R. Co. v. Canton R. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 409.

1. No adequate remedy at law. Union R. Co. v. Canton R. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 409.

Cattle guards, fences, and stock gaps.[2]—At common law, railroads are not quired to fence their right of way,[3] but in many states railroads are required by statute to construct fences and cattle guards,[4] especially where the road runs through cultivated fields,[5] and are required to construct and maintain stock gaps where it runs through pasture lands [6] or lands which are enclosed,[7] and failure to comply with such statute renders the company liable for damages done by trespassing stock [8] or for cattle lost.[9] But such statutes do not impose a liability for injuries not proximately resulting from failure to comply with the statute,[10] nor for injuries not falling within the terms of the statute.[11] In Indiana if a railroad company refuses to fence its right of way an adjacent owner may do so and recover the cost thereof [12] together with necessary attorney's fees.[13]

3. Mangold v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 606, 92 S. W. 753.

4. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5323, requiring railroads to maintain fences along their tracks sufficient to turn stock, is a valid exercise of the police power to provide against accidents to life or property in any business or employment. Chicago I. & L. R. Co. v. Irons [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 207. It is proper to charge that it is the duty of railroad companies to construct lawful fences and cattle guards, and, if damage is done by trespassing cattle because of their failure to do so, they are liable. Rosentingle v. Illinois Southern R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 788. Where in an action for damages caused by stock trespassing after crossing cattle guards the company alleged that the cattle guards used at such place were a certain standard kind used generally on all railroads, without alleging that they were reasonably sufficient to turn stock, was fatally defective. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Wright [Ala.] 41 So. 461.

5. See post, § 11, Injuries to Animals.

6. Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 6732, 6743, 6757, 6758, a foreign corporation leasing a railroad in the state is liable under the statute requiring it to erect stock gaps where the road passes through enclosed land. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hale [Ark.] 100 S. W. 1148; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Fitzhugh [Ark.] 100 S. W. 1149. Under Kirby's Dig. § 6045, providing that summons may be served on any station agent, and that a notice to the company may be served in the same manner, service of notice on such agent in an action to recover a penalty for failure to put in stock gaps is sufficient. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Hale [Ark.] 100 S. W. 1148. Under a statute requiring construction of stock gaps where the road passes through enclosed land, such gaps must be erected where land is surrounded by a good wire fence, though it is not a lawful fence under the statute. Id. The statute applies where the railroad owns the fee of the right of way by purchase from the owner. Id.

7. Code 1892, § 3561, requiring the construction of necessary stock gaps and cattle guards where the road passes through enclosed land, applies only where land is substantially enclosed. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Sallis [Miss.] 42 So. 202. Does not apply if the field is not enclosed or where the fence enclosing it is in such a delapidated condition that it will not turn stock. Id.

8. Complaint held to state a cause of action under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, making a railroad liable for injuries done by trespassing cattle because of failure to construct cattle guards and fences. Rosentingle v. Illinois Southern R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 788. An action for damages done by trespassing cattle because of failure to maintain fences is not governed by Rev. St. 1899, § 3339, providing that actions for injuries to animals shall be brought before a justice in the township where the injury occurred. Id.

9. A railroad failed to put cattle guards where the road entered a pasture. A third person cut the right of way fence and cattle escaped. Held failure to place the cattle guards and the cutting of the fence both operated to bring about the result of cattle escaping and being lost. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. v. Krause [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 431. The act of the third person in cutting the fence was the primary cause of the loss and a judgment against him in favor of the railroad was proper. Id. Where a railroad was run through a pasture, the right of way fenced and cattle guards placed at a crossing left for cattle, held failure to place cattle guards where the track entered the pasture was a violation of the statute relative to fencing. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. v. Krause [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 431. The purpose of the statute requiring cattle guards to be placed at the exit and entrance of a railroad into and from a pasture is to prevent escape of cattle as well as depredations on enclosed land. Id.

10. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, requiring railroads to fence their right of way where the road passes through fields or unenclosed lands or be liable for damages to crops by trespassing animals, imposes no liability on the theory that one was prevented from planting a crop because it would have been destroyed by cattle if he did. Mangold v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 606, 92 S. W. 753.

11. Under Code 1896, § 3480, requiring a railroad company to put in cattle guards wherever an owner demands and shows necessity therefor, one not an owner may not recover damages for failure to put in such guards nor for damages caused by hogs entering his land through a gap not on his land. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Sturgis [Ala.] 43 So. 96. A complaint under such statute alleging damages because of failure to repair guards, but not alleging that plaintiff is the owner of the land or that the company ever erected guards thereon, is demurrable. Id. Amended complaint under this statute held good as against demurrer. Id.

12. Under Burn's Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5323, 5325, requiring railroads to fence their

Drainage and disposal of surface water.[14]—Railroads must be so constructed as not to interfere with the escape of surface water,[15] and in Texas it is required that such drainage facilities be installed as the natural lay of the land requires.[16]

Obstruction of watercourses.[17]—If the flow of a stream is obstructed in violation of a statute, a railroad company is liable regardless of the question of negligence,[18] but in the absence of such statute a railroad is not liable if the injury would tracks and providing that if they fail to do so an adjacent owner may recover the cost, such owner may construct a woven wire fence, though it costs more than barbed wire, since the statute does not prescribe the kind of fence he is required to build. Terre Haute & L. Co. v. Salisbury [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1097. The erection of a fence between the right of way and land of an adjoining owner is a substantial compliance with Burn's Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5323, 5324, requiring the fence to be built on the margin as near as practicable to the line and entitled the owner to recover the cost thereof. Vandalia R. Co. v. Stephens [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 1055. A claim showing an itemized statement presented to the railroad company providing that if the company neglects for sixty days "to pay said account" suit may be maintained to recover the reasonable value of the fence, is not an account within Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 365, providing that when a pleading is founded on an account the original or a copy must be filed. Id. Under Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 5325, providing that where a railroad neglects to keep a fence in good repair a notice of probable cost of repair shall be served upon the agent, and § 5324 relative to the proceeding where a railroad neglects to construct a fence, but not providing for such notice, a notice of probable cost is not necessary where a fence has become so decayed that it will not turn cattle at any part of its course. Vandalia R. Co. v. Kanarr [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1135. A notice by a landowner of his intention to construct a fence addressed to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company, but served on the Terre Haute & Logansport Railroad Company, which owned the road in question, who forwarded the notice, is good notwithstanding the mistake in the name of the company. Id. Where a right of way fence after being repaired by the railroad company pursuant to notice was ineufficient to turn stock as required by Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 5323, the landowner was entitled to repair or rebuild and recover the cost and attorney's fee from the company. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Irons [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 207.

13. Burn's Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5323-5325, authorizing recovery of attorney's fees in an action by a landowner to recover cost of a fence built by him after failure of the railroad to build it, is valid. Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Salisbury [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1097. Record held sufficient to show that an attorney had been employed and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover attorney's fees. Id. Where an adjoining owner seeks to recover the cost of a fence, he may recover attorney's fees without proof that he employed an attorney. Vandalia R. Co. v. Stephens [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 1055.

14. See 6 C. L. 1204.

15. A railroad has no right to obstruct the flow of surface water by the construction of an embankment. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Prouty [Ala.] 43 So. 352. Where damages resulted from flooding caused by embankment, evidence as to negligence held for the jury. White v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Kan.] 88 P. 54. Damages are recoverable by a landowner for negligent maintenance of an insufficient culvert causing lands to be flooded, though damages may have been recovered for the location of the road, since damages there recoverable were estimated on the theory that the road would be constructed and maintained in a reasonably proper and skillful manner. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ely [Neb.] 110 N. W. 539. Where a railway company constructing an overhead crossing constructed abutments in the highway and failed to provide proper drainage facilities it was bound to displace the abutments and properly drain the cul de sac formed. Borough of Metuchen v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 484. Negligent construction of railroad bridge whereby lands were flooded held for jury. Miller v. Buffalo & S. R. Co., 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 515.

16. Under a statute requiring construction of necessary culverts as the natural lay of the land demands, a railroad company is liable for damages caused by overflow regardless of negligence in construction of its road and culverts. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Crow [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 839, 95 S. W. 743. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4436, requiring the construction of necessary culverts according to the lay of the land, applies not only to surface water but to water overflowing from a stream in times of ordinary flood. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Pearce [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 1133. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4436, requiring the construction of drainage facilities as the natural lay of the land requires, a company constructing an embankment and switch without providing such culverts is liable for injuries caused by flooding. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Barr [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 437. In an action for flooding caused by alleged failure to construct necessary culverts, etc., whether the flood was an unprecedented one was held for the jury. Baugh v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 958. Where a railroad fails to construct necessary sluices and culverts, it is liable for damages caused by flooding regardless of the care used in construction. Id.

17. See 6 C. L. 1204.

18. Where the flow of a stream is obstructed by embankment in violation of statute, the railroad company is liable for ensuing damages regardless of the question of negligence. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Dubose [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 714, 95 S. W. 588.

have occurred regardless of the obstruction.[19] The construction of an embankment across a watercourse is a continuing wrong.[20]

§ 9. Sales, leases, contracts, and consolidation. Leases.[21]—A railroad company may lease its property and franchises where it is authorized to do so by its charter.[22] The lease must be pursuant to regular corporate act.[23] The contract must be lawful.[24] The rights of the parties rest in the terms of the lease.[25] A lease is presumed to express the contract of the parties and to merge a prior contract pursuant to which it was executed, though it differs from the terms of such contract.[26] The terms of a lease may be specifically enforced if their is no adequate remedy at law.[27]

Duties and liabilities subsequent to sale or lease.[28]—A lessee of a railroad has such an interest in the property as entitles it to an injunction to prevent any illegal

19. In an action for injuries from flooding caused by construction of an embankment along, and bridges across, a stream, an instruction that the railroad would not be liable if the flood was unprecedented and would have occurred regardless of its embankment held improperly refused because not covered by other instructions. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Bell [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 198. Evidence of other injuries by the same flood to land similarly located held admissible on the question as to whether the flood was unprecedented. Id. Requested instruction was not erroneous as excluding an alleged ground of liability arising from narrowing the channel and otherwise obstructing the flow of water. Id.

20. Where a railroad embankment is constructed across a watercourse and lands are flooded, the negligent construction is a continuous wrong, and damages accruing six years prior to action brought may be recovered. Lawton v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 128.

21. See 6 C. L. 1205.

22. Acts 1848-49, p. 138, c. 82, incorporating the North Carolina Railroad Company and conferring on it the right to transport passengers and freight and to "farm out" the right of transportation, authorizes it to lease its property and franchises. Hill v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 854. Under Comp. Laws, § 6339, authorizing the leasing of a railroad to either domestic or foreign corporation and declaring that the lessee shall operate it subject to privileges and duties prescribed by the laws of the state, a lease to a nonresident company for ninety-nine years is valid and relieves the lessor from liability for acts done by the lessee in maintenance and repair of the road bed. Ackerman v. Cincinnati, S. & M. R. Co., 143 Mich. 58, 12 Det. Leg. N. 908, 106 N. W. 558.

23. Laws 1893, p. 907, c. 433, expressly provides that where two-thirds of the stock of a railroad corporation represented at a meeting called for purpose of leasing the road votes in favor of it, the authority is sufficient. Continental Ins. Co. v. New York & H. R. Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 1026.

24. A lease of a portion of the right of way for business purposes with a view to securing freight is not contrary to public policy. City of Detroit v. Little Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 803, 109 N. W. 671. If a provision in a lease was intended to restrict the right of the lessor to mortgage, its reversion is void as restraining alienation. Continental Ins. Co. v. New York & H. R. Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 1026.

25. Where a lease contained a covenant not to fix certain than a higher maximum freight rate but did not provide for forfeiture for breach of such covenant, an action for damages and not for forfeiture is the proper remedy. Hill v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 854. Where under a lease of a railroad it was determined that the lessor was entitled to the benefit of a reduced rate of interest on a certain issue of stock, it was held that an agreement apportioning such benefit between the parties sanctioned by the stockholders of both companies was binding on both and concluded stockholders. Continental Ins. Co. v. New York & H. R. Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 1026. Where a lease of a railroad provided that the lessee should pay interest on the lessor's bonds as part of the rental, a provision that the lessor should not issue additional bonds does not prevent it from issuing new bonds to pay old ones. Id. Where a lease of a railroad provided that the lessee should pay interest on the lessor's bonds as part of the annual rental, also that if the lessor should pay the principal the lessee would pay semi-annually the equivalent of the interest stopped, that if the lessor did not pay a certain issue at maturity the lessee should and the lessor would issue new bonds in lieu thereof, held that the lessor was entitled to pay of the issue and secure any advantage it could by a reduction of interest on a reissue. Id.

26. Grand Trunk W. R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 785. Series of leases and agreements between a terminal railroad and its constituent companies as tenants providing for the use by them of the tracks and terminal facilities of the lessor and the payment of rent on a wheelage basis held not to contain a covenant on the part of one of the lessees which could be enforced by others in their own right. Id. Such lease held not to contain a covenant binding the lessees to use the tracks and terminal facilities during the term but merely a grant of the right to do so to the extent desired. Id.

27. A contract of lease by which a lessee railroad company agrees to run its trains over the tracks and use the terminal facilities of the lessor and pay rental on a wheelage basis for nine hundred and ninety-nine years may be specifically enforced in equity. Grand Trunk W. R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 785.

28. See 6 C. L. 1206.

interference with its enjoyment of the leased property.[29] In the absence of statute a lessor is liable for a conversion committed by the lessee in the operation of the leased property and franchises,[30] and in some states it is liable for injuries to employes,[31] and a railroad company may not excuse itself from liability by any contract with its lessee where injury results from the lessee's negligence in conduct of the road.[32] In the absence of an assumption clause a grantee company is not liable for torts of its grantor committed prior to the transfer.[33]

Contracts.—Contracts between railroad companies are to be construed in the light of attending circumstances,[34] and the construction given by the parties and acted upon will be adopted by the courts.[35] Like other contracts they must be legal [36] and are to be enforced according to their terms.[37]

Consolidation.[38]—There is a distinct difference between consolidation and merger. In a consolidation both companies go out of existence and a new corporation is created which takes their place and property.[39] In case of merger one company absorbs the other and remains in existence and succeeds to the property of the

29. May maintain suit in a Federal court to enjoin an unauthorized crossing of its tracks by another company, a citizen of another state, though the lessor is a citizen of the same state as the defendant. Pennsylvania Co. v. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co., 146 F. 446.

30. If a lessee of the property and franchises, in the operation of its cars and the exercise of the franchise, commits a conversion of property, the lessor is liable therefor in the absence of legislative provision to the contrary. Proper pleading in such an action discussed. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Haas [Ga.] 56 S. E. 313. The lease in this case was no exception to the general rule. Id.

31. Smalley v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co., 73 S. C. 572, 53 S. E. 1000. Under Acts 1902, p. 1152, a lessor company is liable for injury to an employe of the lessee sustained in operation of the road. Reed v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 218. Where no issue was presented that a defendant was only a lessor company and that a lessee was operating the road, a contention that the presumption of negligence created by Kirby's Dig. § 6773, making railroads responsible for injuries caused by the operation of trains applied only against the corpus of the property and not against the company, was untenable. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Evans [Ark.] 96 S. W. 616.

32. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Lucas [Miss.] 42 So. 607.

33. Where because of failure to fence cattle destroyed crops from May to August and the road was conveyed in October by a deed under which the grantee did not assume liability for such damage, the grantee is not liable. Lawson v. Illinois Southern R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 690, 94 S. W. 807. Where one company purchases the franchise, assets, and line of another as authorized by Rev. St. 1899, § 1060, by a conveyance containing no assumption of liability for torts of the grantor, the grantee is not liable therefor. Porter v. Illinois Southern R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 526, 92 S. W. 744.

34. Where one company grants another the joint use of its line for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, at a stated annual sum to be increased by interest on sums expended for permanent improvements, the expense of maintenance including taxes to be divided, held the word "taxes" included special assessments. Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. Kansas City Northwestern R. Co. [Kan.] 88 P. 1085.

35. Where a contract relative to terminal facilities and division of cost of maintenance was construed by the companies and acted upon for several years, such construction will be adopted by the courts. Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 757. Series of contracts as to acquisition of additional property and cost of maintenance construed. Id. Where a series of contracts between two companies relative to the joint use of terminals, in fixing the division of cost of maintenance, used "wheelage" and "car and engine mileage" indiscriminately, but in the execution of the contracts based such division on wheelage from the first, that construction will be adopted by the courts. Id.

36. Contract by a railroad company by which the other party was to build up the business of transportation of milk construed and held not contrary to public policy, nor in violation of the anti-trust or interstate commerce acts. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Kutter [C. C. A.] 147 F. 51.

37. A contract by which a railway company agrees with a landowner that if he will develop his coal lands and construct a spur track thereto and give the company running rights over the same it would haul loaded cars out of and empties into such land free of charge, but not providing how long such contract is to run, may be terminated by the company at its election. Stonega Coke & Coal Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Va.] 55 S. E. 551. Under a contract by which a railroad company agreed to construct a spur track on its land to accommodate a shipper and providing that it might be removed whenever necessary for accommodation of its business without liability for damages, the decision to remove was final, and evidence that it was not necessary for accommodation of its business is not material, unless bad faith is shown. Whittemore v. New York, etc., R. Co., 191 Mass. 392, 77 N. E. 717.

38. See 6 C. L. 1205.

39. Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 150 F. 775.

other and issues its stock to stockholders of the company merged.[40] Consolidation may be effected where authorized by law.[41] Authority to consolidate upon conditions binds the consolidated company to perform such conditions.[42] The rights of the consolidated company do not depend on the chartered powers of the companies consolidated.[43] The Connecticut statute authorizing a railroad company owning three-fourths of the stock of any steamboat, bridge, wharf, or railroad corporation to condemn the balance, does not deny due process or impair the obligation of a contract.[44]

§ 10. Indebtedness, insolvency, liens, and securities. Mechanics' and materialmen's liens.[45]—A lien for materials can be had only where the materials furnished the materials fall within the terms of the statute,[46] and it attaches only to the property therein specified [47] and when statutory requirements have been complied

40. Agreement of consolidation and merger held to constitute a merger and not a consolidation. Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 150 F. 775.

41. Laws 1869, p. 2399, c. 917, § 1, authorizing consolidation when roads form a continuous line or by means of an intervening bridge, authorizes consolidation where a continuous line is formed by means of an intervening bridge owned by another company. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Yonkers, 103 N. Y. S. 252. Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 32, §§ 50-58, providing for changing of names, places of business, and objects for which a corporation was formed, and also for giving of notice whenever one railroad corporation desires to consolidate with another, applies to railroad companies. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Woodyard, 226 Ill. 331, 80 N. E. 882.

42. Authority from a railroad commission to consolidate with a narrow guage line upon the express condition that such line should be broadened and standardized and be made a part of the main line absolutely binds such company to perform its agreement. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. State [Miss.] 41 So. 259. Where in proceedings to enjoin a change in the course of the narrow gauge line no claim was made, its charter authorized such a change, the company was not entitled on a second appeal to claim the benefit of the charter provision. Id.

43. Under such statute the consolidated company may prescribe the period of corporate life of the consolidated company irrespective of the life of either of the companies consolidating. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Yonkers, 103 N. Y. S. 252. Where a road limited to three tracks consolidates with one not limited to any number, the consolidated company is not limited to three. Id. Where an original act incorporating a railroad company limited the number of tracks it could operate to three, but the company consolidated under the general consolidation act with a company not limited to the number of tracks, the consolidated company was not limited to three tracks. Colgate v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 650.

45. See 6 C. L. 1206.

46. A claim for furnishing coal, oil, and tools is not within Sayle's Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 3294, giving a lien for construction materials. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. U. S. & Mexican Trust Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 212. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4239, giving a lien for material furnished a railroad, a contractor who is furnished powder to quarry rock on his own land to be delivered to the railroad company at a certain station, but the purpose for which and the place where it was to be used by the railroad, if at all, is not given, has no lien. Indiana Powder Co. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 364, 92 S. W. 150. Under the railroad lien act of Arkansas, one who furnishes material to a subcontractor for railroad construction is entitled to a lien. Midland Valley R. Co. v. Moran Nut & Bolt Mfg. Co. [Ark.] 97 S. W. 679. Where materials for which one was entitled to a lien were sold to be used partly in one state where a lien could be had and partly in a state where it could not, the seller was entitled to a lien for only so much as was used in the state where the lien could be had. Id. Rev. St. 1906, § 3208, providing for a lien to one who furnishes materials for construction, includes only articles used in such construction and does not include hay and grain for teams employed on the work. Pennsylvania Co. v. Mehaffey, 75 Ohio St. 432, 80 N. E. 177. Section 3211, while in terms extending the provisions of section 3208 to persons who furnish hay and grain, does not enlarge the meaning of the word "materials," nor does it impose on the railroads liability for such articles if no lien be perfected. Id. Where a railroad company repairing its track posted notices that it would "protect all claims for materials, labor, and board," hay and grain for teams employed on such work is not within such notice and the company did not obligate itself to protect such claims. Pennsylvania Co. v. McLaffey, 75 Ohio St. 432, 80 N. E. 177. Under W. Va. Code 1899, c. 75, § 7, a corporation employed to supervise the construction of an electric railway is entitled to a lien for the services of its officers and servants. Wetzel & T. R. Co. v. Tennis Bros. Co., 145 F. 458. Where a railroad company had broken a construction contract and was in the hands of a receiver, it was estopped from objecting to the amount found due the contractor and to the priority of lien awarded him. Id.

47. Sayle's Rev. Civ. St. art. 3294, providing for a lien on a railroad for construction materials, does not give a lien on the road but only on the particular building or article made or repaired. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. U. S. & Mexican Trust Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 212.

with.[48] One entitled to a lien is not deprived of his right because the amount of his compensation is not definitely fixed,[49] nor because he had an option to take a part of his compensation in bonds.[50] Procedure by which a lien is to be established [51] or enforced [52] is regarded by statute. On foreclosure of a lien a sale of the property should be decreed.[53] Whether a lien takes priority to a mortgage, may depend upon the facts of the case.[54]

An execution sale of a portion of the property of a railroad company may be valid though it is required by statute that the entire property be sold.[55]

Bonds and mortgages and priority of claims.[56]—The question of priority of claims is sometimes regulated by statute.[57] Claims for operating expenses are prior to a mortgage.[58] In Missouri claims for damages to abutting property are prior to a mortgage.[59] To entitle a creditor of an insolvent railroad company for supplies to preference of a prior mortgagee, it must appear that credit was given upon faith of payment out of net earnings, and that there was a diversion of such income, to

48. Acts 1893, p. 32, c. 24, § 1, providing for laborers' and materialmen's liens and providing that the company shall require from the contractor a bond conditioned for the payment of laborers, etc., or shall be liable, does not make a company failing to take such bond liable in an action directly against it without notice of liens as required by statute, but excepts the company from liens where the bond is taken. Laidlaw v. Portland, etc., R. Co., 42 Wash. 292, 84 P. 855.

49. The fact that a construction provided that compensation should be measured by cost of construction, which was ascertainable instead of a specific sum, does not affect the right to a lien. Wetzel & T. R. Co. v. Tennis Bros. Co., 145 F. 458.

50. Where an option in a construction contract which entitled the contractor to take one-half his compensation in bonds was not availed of, but instead of tendering the bonds the railroad company canceled the contract and denied liability thereunder, such option did not deprive the contractor of his right to a lien given by state laws. Wetzel & T. R. Co. v. Tennis Bros. Co., 145 F. 458.

51. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4245, the owner of a railroad is a necessary party to a suit to establish a lien against the road. Little Rock Trust Co. v. Southern Missouri & A. R. Co., 195 Mo. 669, 93 S. W. 944. A railroad company which has acquired the road is a necessary party. Id. A suit to charge a railroad with a lien was brought against the company alleged to be the owner and summons served on another not alleged to be the owner and it was not alleged that it operated the road. Held not sufficient to authorize the court to establish a lien against the owner. Id. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4256, persons having liens may assign them and the assignee may maintain action thereon. Id.

52. A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to foreclose lien on several miles of track, a locomotive, and other property. Lewis v. Warren, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 890, 97 S. W. 104.

53. Where a contractor was entitled to a lien on the road for breach of a construction contract and the appointment of a receiver, it was proper for the court on foreclosure of such lien to decree a sale of such property. Wetzel & T. R. Co. v. Tennis Bros. Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 458.

54. Claims for construction material are inferior to a mortgage which was on the road when the materials were furnished and the lien given by Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. arts, 3294-3301, unless the materials were used for betterment of the road, whereby the security was improved. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. U. S. & Mexican Trust Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 212.

55. Under Sayle's Rev. Civ. St. art. 3313, providing that where a judgment for wages is rendered against a railroad company so much of the property shall be sold as is necessary to pay the judgment, an execution sale of part of the property is not illegal, notwithstanding Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. 4553, that the entire property shall be sold when a judgment is levied on the road bed, franchise, track, etc. Weddington v. Carver [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 786.

56. See 6 C. L. 1207.

57. Where claims against a railroad company in the hands of a receiver did not fall within the classes enumerated in Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. art. 1472, the court had authority to determine their priority in accordance with what it deemed equitable under the circumstances. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. U. S. & Mexican Trust So. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 212.

58. Debts incurred by commitee of bondholders of railroad while under their management for the benefit of bondholders held entitled to preference over mortgage of the road on foreclosure. Queen Anne's Ferry & Equipment Co. v. Queen Anne's R. Co., 148 F. 41. Debt for advertising contracted by mortgage trustee in operating the road under terms of the mortgage, or by committee of bondholders, held entitled to priority also. Id.

59. Under Const. Mo. art. 2, § 21, providing that private property may not be taken without just compensation, that the fee of lands taken for railroads without consent of the owner shall remain in such owner, claims for damages to an abutting owner resulting from construction of a road are on the same footing as those for property taken and are prior to a mortgage on the road, and is entitled to preference when the road is sold in foreclosure proceedings. Fordyce v. Kansas City & N. Connecting R. Co., 145 F. 566.

the benefit of the mortgagee.[60] The holder of an unsecured claim for damages arising from negligence of a mortgagor railroad company prior to appointment of receivers is not entitled to priority over mortgage creditors.[61]

Foreclosure of mortgages.[62]—The rule that a provision in a mortgage requiring a request to the trustee by the holders of the majority of the bonds secured, and tender of indemnity against liability for costs as a condition precedent to a suit to foreclose must be strictly complied with, does not apply where it appears from the bill of a bond holder to foreclose that such compliance is impossible, and that the trustee is antagonistic to foreclosure because of his interest in a second mortgage.[63] Where a mortgage authorized foreclosure by the trustee on default in payment of interest on the bonds and authorized a majority of the bond holders to require foreclosure, the truteee's right to foreclose in his discretion was not dependent on request of bondholders.[64] Where a decree foreclosing two mortgages required the purchaser to pay all claims filed within six months which should be adjudged prior to the mortgages, where the proceeds of the sale paid the first mortgage, the purchaser is liable for a claim filed within the time specified which is prior to the second mortgage.[65]

§ 11. Duties and liabilities incident to operation of the road. A. Obligation to operate and statutory regulations. Keeping stations open.[66] In many states it is required by statute that trains stop at certain stations[67] and that ticket offices be kept open a certain length of time prior to the departure of trains.[68]

Injuries to adjacent owners from smoke, noise, etc.—As a general rule there is no liability to an adjacent owner for personal inconvenience to him occasioned by

60. Fordyce v. Kansas City & N. Connecting R. Co., 145 F. 566. Where a railroad is in the bands of a receiver, though at the instance of a mortgagee, unless there has been an inequitable division of earnings from operation to the betterment of the road, the corpus of the property may not be diverted to the payment of claims for operating expenses prior to appointment of the receiver in the absence of statute giving such claims priority. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. U. S. & Mexican Trust Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 212. Claims for supplies which were on hand when the receiver took possession are not such as to entitle them to be classed as debts created by the receiver. Id.

61. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Osborn [C. C. A.] 148 F. 606. An interlocutory decree appointing receivers in a foreclosure suit directed them to pay out of the earnings of the road liabilities incurred in operating. The final decree and order of sale required the purchaser to pay in addition to the purchase price all claims prior to the mortgage upon the court adjudging them to be prior. Held a claimant who had not been paid by the receivers could compel payment from the purchasers only by establishing on principles of equity that his demand was prior to the mortgage on a hearing in conformity with the provisions of the interlocutory decree. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Osborn [C. C. A.] 148 F. 606.

64. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Oneonta, etc., R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 241. Hence an issue could not be raised as to the identity of such holders. Id. Where a trustee has a discretionary right to foreclose on default in payment of interest, an issue as to the ownership of the bonds is immaterial, though the mortgage provided that the trustee should not be bound to recognize any person as a bondholder unless his bonds were submitted and his title established if disputed. Id. Where in proceedings by a mortgage trustee to foreclose interveners have contested the ownership of some of the bonds, but defaulted a part of the judgment establishing ownership of the bonds and directing the referee to take, proof as to the balance should be stricken. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Oneonta, etc., R. Co., 188 N. Y. 38, 80 N. E. 568. Where in a suit to foreclose a railroad mortgage the property was sold and the purchaser gave bond for the payment of charges out of the proceeds, one praying to intervene held not entitled to. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 125 Ga. 463, 54 S. E. 138.

67. Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 1451, c. 114, § 25, requiring railroads to stop their trains at county seats, does not apply to a proceeding in mandamus to compel a railroad to stop its trains at one depot at a county seat where it maintains another depot there. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 222 Ill. 396, 78 N. E. 784.

68. Sayle's Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4542, requiring ticket offices to be kept open half an hour before the departure of each train, is not complied with where within the half hour the agent absented himself for a period sufficient to attend to two business matters and hold a conversation. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Dyer [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 632, 95 S. W. 12.

the regular operation of trains,[69] unless trains are so operated as to create a nuisance,[70] or in violation of statutory regulations [71] or private rights.[72]

Equipment of cars.[73]—The purpose of Congress in enacting the Safety Appliance Act was humanitarian, and it should be given effect whenever applicable.[74] If an interstate carrier receives and hauls a defectively equipped foreign car which it cannot be required to do, it violates the Safety Appliance Act.[75] A car received

69. Personal inconvenience and discomfort occasioned to an abutting owner by operation of a railroad in the street gives him no cause of action. Grossman v. Houston, etc., R. Co. [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 572, 92 S. W. 836. The use of side tracks for regular traffic and the storing of engines in a reasonable manner is not a nuisance for which the company is liable to an adjacent owner, though causing injury to his property by noise, smoke, and vibration incident to such use. Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 318, 55 S. E. 205. A railroad is not liable for damages for annoyance from noise, cinders, etc., occasioned by reasonable use of switch tracks. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Barr [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 437. In an action for injury to property because of the maintenance of a line of road, depot, and stock pens, and instruction that the benefits plaintiff received in common with the community generally should not be considered, held proper, because if the property was specially benefited such fact should be considered. Dallas, etc., R. Co. v. Langston [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 316, 98 S. W. 425. Where a railroad was required to operate its trains on temporary structures in a street during certain construction work being made by the public, the company was not liable to an abutting owner for acts of the public board while the railroad structure was in its possession for the purpose of construction. Foster v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 103 N. Y. S. 531.

70. Where trains are so operated that stock cars were left on tracks in a residence portion of the city, with accompanying noises, offensive odors, etc., at all times of the day and night, and whistles and bells were sounded, unnecessarily, such acts constituted a nuisance and could be enjoined. Colgate v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 650. Where a spur track was operated on land outside the right of way and adjacent owners were kept in constent dread of injury and because of smoke, soot, and cinders, the value of their property was depreciated, such facts show a nuisance. Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 300, 55 S. E. 198. In determining the amount of damages, injury to furniture caused by smoke and cinders is to be considered, also the depreciation in value of the property and discomfort of the owners. Id. A complaint that a railroad company has negligently maintained a nuisance consisting in the use of side tracks in such manner as to cause injury to adjacent owners from smoke, noise, and vibration, alleges a nuisance. Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 318, 55 S. E. 205. That a railroad company owning a short line has consolidated with other companies, and the use of a station is increased, to the increased annoyance of an adjacent owner, does not affect such owner's rights against the company. Id. Where an adjacent owner sues for injuries for the construction and maintenance of a spur track, the question was whether the railroad maintained a nuisance outside the right of way. Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 300, 55 S. E. 198. Where a railroad erected a spur track on a lot outside the right of way on a trestle ten feet high, close to a fence and dwelling of an adjacent owner, and several times pushed cars over such trestle so that the owner was in danger of being hurt, the operation of such track was a nuisance and the company was liable. Id.

71. Shifting of cars in making up a train in a street constituted violation of an ordinance prohibiting engines to stop in the street except at the foot of the same for the reception and delivery of freight. State v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 141 N. C. 736, 53 S. E. 290.

72. A railroad company which negligently permits its cars to run off a spur track and knock down a fence of an adjacent owner is liable for injuries to the fence. Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 300, 55 S. E. 198.

73. See 6 C. L. 1208. See, also, Master and Servant, 8 C. L. 840.

74. The Safety Appliance Act, Act Cong. March 2, 1893, requiring the use of automatic couplers, requires couplers that can be coupled as well as uncoupled without men going between the cars. Southern R. Co. v. Simmons, 105 Va. 651, 55 S. E. 459. A railroad company is subject to the penalty prescribed by the safety appliance act where it uses a car on which the coupling is so defective as not to be efficient to prevent men from going between the cars to make a coupling. United States v. Great Northern R. Co., 150 F. 229. Intent is not an essential element in a violation of the safety appliance act. Id. Where working parts of an automatic coupler are in perfect repair but a chain was not attached so that it could be operated, it is presumed that the apparatus had been only partially completed, and the statute was not complied with. Id. The amendment of 1903 to the safety appliance act was for the purpose of including vehicles omited from the former statute and to include cars "used" by an interstate carrier on any part of its line. United States v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 149 F. 486. A coupler must couple automatically by impact in order to comply with the statute. Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. Walters, 120 Ill. App. 152.

75. United States v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 149 F. 486. A coupler which couples by impact but cannot be uncoupled except by going between the cars is prohibited. Id. Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, amended by Act April 1, 1896, c. 87, and by Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, requiring carriers engaged in interstate commerce, to equip their cars with automatic couplers, applies to all cars when in use on such roads. United States v. Great Northern R. Co., 145 F. 438.

in defective state must be repaired at the earliest opportunity.[76] The act as penal in its nature, and mere failure of inspectors on first inspecting a car before delivering it to a connecting carrier to discover that it was out of repair, the same having been repaired on a subsequent inspection before delivery is not a violation of the act.[77] One furnishing cars for transportation over a railroad must use reasonable care to see that they are in a safe condition for those whose duty it is to handle them.[78] The special term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia is a "district court of the United States" within the statutes giving to such courts jurisdiction of actions for penalties for violation of the Safety Appliance Act.[79]

In some states it is required by statute that separate coaches be furnished for negro passengers.[80]

Speed regulations.[81]—In some states railroads are forbidden to operate trains in cities and towns at higher than a specified rate of speed.[82]

Obstructions at crossings.[83]—Where a railroad crosses a highway, traveler and railway company have an equal right to pass, but the traveler must yield the right to the railroad company in the ordinary course of the latter's business,[84] but if a crossing is unnecessarily and unlawfully blocked, the railroad is liable for injuries sustained as a result thereof.[85]

Stops at railroad crossings.[86]—In the absence of violation of statutory regulations, whether one road is liable to the servants of another for injuries sustained in a crossing collision depends on the question of negligence.[87]

76. Hauling a defective car three hundred and seventy-nine miles past three places where it could have been repaired, so as to repair it in larger and more commodious shops, violates the act. United States v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 149 F. 486.

77. United States v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 150 F. 442.

78. Is liable where the defect arises after construction as well as where it is in original construction. Leas v. Continental Fruit Exp. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 859. Complaint held to state a cause of action where a brakeman was injured because of a defective car furnished by a refrigerator car company for transportation over the line on which he was employed. Hand hold defective. Leas v. Continental Fruit Exp. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 859.

82. Restriction to a rate of six miles an hour in cities and villages is not unreasonable. State v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 128 Wis. 79, 107 N. W. 295. Rev. St. 1898, §§ 1809, 1809a, 1819, prescribing rate of speed in cities and towns, and providing a penalty, construed and held to prohibit a rate of speed exceeding six miles an hour in cities and villages, except where safety gates are maintained. Id. The penalty provided by Rev. St. 1898, § 1809a, for violation of statutory regulations to be recovered in an action in the name of the state, is recoverable without proof of private injury. Id.

85. A railroad is liable for obstructing the passway of an adjacent owner only where such obstruction is negligent, and not where it is necessary to the conduct of the business of the railroad. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scomp [Ky.] 98 S. W. 1024. Where a railroad unlawfully and unnecessarily blocks a street and as a direct consequence a driver of a runaway horse is required to make a short turn and is thrown from his vehicle and injured, the company is liable. Duffy v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 557. Where one was injured by being thrown from his vehicle because required to make a short turn because a railroad train blocked a crossing, he has the burden to show that such obstruction was unlawful and was the proximate cause of the injury. Id.

87. Where there is a conflict of evidence as to custom in the moving of trains, it cannot be said the jury found there existed a custom which exonerated the towerman of negligence where it was equally possible under the testimony to have found that it was his negligence in the giving of signals which caused the accident. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Burtscher, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 137. Whether or not, under the circumstances of this case, a towerman was negligent in giving the signal which he did give was a proper question for the jury. Id. The fact that the negligence of the engineer of the second engine in the collision contributed to the accident would not relieve the railway company from liability to the injured engineer of the first engine, where the primary cause of the accident was the negligence of the towerman. Id. Within a limited area the duties of a towerman are analagous to those of a train despatcher, and under the current of authority he stands in the posi-

Conveniences at depots.—Statutes requiring the maintenance of water closets at stations are to be reasonably construed.[88] The Texas statute relative to this requirement is void.[89]

(§ 11) B. General rules of neglience and contributory negligence.[90]—As to all persons who are rightfully on or about the tracks,[91] a railroad company owes the duty of observing all statutory regulations,[92] and, in addition, to take every precaution dictated by reasonable prudence.[93] What is reasonable care depends largely tion of superior of an engineer, and where the negligence charged by an injured engineer was in the signals given by the towerman, a verdict supporting that contention will not be disturbed on the ground that they were fellow-servants. Id. Instructions on the question of negligence, where one train collided with another at a junction crossing of the two lines, held proper. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Kleespies [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 252. Under an agreement by which one railroad company crossed the road of another, the company maintaining a signalman was held liable to a servant of the other company who was injured because of the negligence of the signalman. Hydell v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 74 Ohio St. 138, 77 N. E. 1066. Where an engineer approaching a junction with the tracks of another company found the signals turned against him and waited until he was signalled by the towerman of the other company, he was not negligent. Baker v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 149 F. 882. Where railroads cross it is the duty of each to see that the crossing is safe, and liability to a person injured cannot be avoided by contract between the railroads. Brecher v. Chicago Junction R. Co., 119 Ill. App. 554.

88. A statute requiring suitable water closets for the accommodation of travelers to be maintained "at all stations" does not require the maintenance at mere flag stations which are open platforms with no station or buildings in connection. State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 518.

89. Under Const. art. 3, § 39, providing that no law shall take effect until 90 days after adjournment of the legislature enacting it acts 29th Leg. p. 324, proscribing a penalty for failure to maintain water closets at passenger stations, violated the due process clause, as the railroad was not required to take notice of it until the expiration of the 90 days, and then it was too late to avoid the penalty. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. State [Tex.] 100 S. W. 766.

Decisions under statute before its invalidity was determined: Laws 1905, p. 324, c. 133, § 1, requiring to maintenance of water closets at pasenger stations, and imposing a penalty for violation thereof, applies to the lessee of a road. State v. Southern Kansas R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 167. Evidence sufficient to show that a company was operating a line within the contemplation of such statute. Id. Petition for a penalty held to sufficiently allege that the defendant was operating a railroad within the state. Id. A judgment for the penalty under such statute does not bear interest. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 25, 97 S. W. 724. Under Acts 29th Leg. p. 324, c. 133, providing a penalty for each week a railroad fails to maintain a water closet at passenger stations, the penalty may be recovered for each week, but not for each station where the statute is not complied with. Id. Acts 29th Leg. p. 324, c. 133, imposing a penalty for failure to maintain water closets at passenger stations, does not violate the due process clause of the constitution, nor does it deprive the railroad company of equal protection of the laws. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 21, 97 S. W. 720. Acts 29th Leg. p. 324, c. 133, imposing a penalty for failure to maintain water closets at passenger stations, is not void for indefinitness and uncertainty. Id. Such statute is not void as containing more than one subject not expressed in its title. Id.

92. Acts 1901, p. 213, requiring a constant lookout to be kept for persons on the track, applies to the operation of trains and engines in railroad yards, and requires a lookout to be kept for laborers. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Morris [Ark.] 98 S. W. 363. Failure to give statutory signals on approaching a crossing, if proximately resulting in injury to a traveler, is negligence per se. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 206. Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 200, requiring that a trusty brakeman shall be kept on the rear car of every freight train does not apply to a work train used to distribute ties and sand. Bacon v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 458. One injured by a work train while the engine and crew were putting work cars on a storage track preparatory to coupling onto freight cars and running on was not injured by a freight train within Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 200. Id. Lake City is authorized by its charter to pass an ordinance regulating the speed of trains within the city limits, not in conflict with § 2264, Rev. St. 1892, but under such section an ordinance cannot apply to a train running on a "traveled street" if in conflict therewith. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 43 So. 235.

93. Semaphore wire sagged down in the street. Logue v. Grand Trunk R. Co. [Me.] 65 A. 522. A railroad company is not liable where it interferes with the running of hose across its tracks by municipal firemen, unless it is actually notified of the conditions which make the use of its own property an interfering one. To render it liable such interference must be willful, or due to failure to exercise due care. American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 789. Not liable where one train with another running close behind ran between firemen and a fire, where after it was stopped it could not back up, and it did not appear that the train employes knew of the fire in time to avoid the interference. Id.

on the circumstances of each particular case.[94] In operating trains in a street, only such care is required for the safety of persons on the streets as would be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence under the circumstances,[95] and persons using streets upon which tracks are located must exercise the degree of care required of ordinarily prudent persons under the circumstances.[96] In the absence of statute or ordinance regulating the speed of trains on city streets, whether a given rate of speed is negligence is ordinarily a question of fact depending on the conditions,[97] but failure of a railroad running through the streets of a populous city to use ordinary care to regulate the speed of the train so as not to injure anyone is negligence at common law.[98] As a general rule contributory negligence is not a defense where a recov-

94. No statute requires the whistle to be blown merely because no train is rounding a curve. Vaundry v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 926. Private owners of cars by permission of the railroad company placed them on a siding. Held they were not liable for injuries to a brakeman from other cars on the switch being pushed off the siding onto the main line and colliding with a train on which he was employed. Keeney v. Campbell [Pa.] 64 A. 687. Where a train was derailed because an object had been pressed into a switch frog by a preceding train, which caused the switch to open, and ordinary care would not have ascertained the defect nor could the operators of the train discover it, the derailment was held to be an accident not due to negligence. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 122, 98 S. W. 440. Where the derailment of an oil train was not due to negligence, and the force of men was not sufficient to clear the wreck, put the track in repair, and also prevent the escape of oil. Held, ordinary care did not require delay in repairing the track in order to prevent the escape of oil which was damaging adjacent property. Id. Negligence in failing to stop the flow of oil under such circumstances held for the jury. Id. No rate of speed in rural districts, is of itself, negligence. Hoffard v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 446. Persons in charge of a train are under no duty to slacken speed on approaching a curve, though it is in a cut, as a precaution against injury to persons on the track but not known of nor seen. Id. It is not negligence to run cars rapidly in the open country, or to operate them on a dark night without sufficient headlight. Johnson v. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 33. Where it did not appear that servants in charge of a train which collided with a car in which a person was living either saw or knew that he was in the car and there was testimony that sometimes when a car was switched such servants would notify persons living in the car and at other times would not, evidence held insufficient to show willful negligence. Mobile, etc., Co. v. Smith [Ala.] 40 So. 763. Negligence in obstructing a street for an unreasonable length of time may be the proximate cause of an injury to one who attempted to climb over the train. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Pitts, 123 Ill. App. 607.

95. International, etc., R. Co. v. Hall [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 347, 92 S. W. 996. Where a plea in an action by one injured by a train on the street set up contributory negligence in walking on an unfinished track where his attention was absorbed in watching where to step, and that there was a good sidewalk on the street, there was some evidence in support of such plea. Held proper to instruct that he could not recover if a person of ordinary prudence would not have walked on the street in its then condition, and such action contributed to his injury. Id. An engine running on a street has no precedence over pedestrians and it is error to so instruct where one is injured. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Huber [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 154, 95 S. W. 568. Where it was pleaded and proved that at the time of the accident decedent was boarding a rapidly moving train, a request specifically submitting this form of negligence should have been given. Id. The fact that a public road is located on the right of way does not affect the reciprocal duties of the railroad and the traveling public. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 206.

96. Evidence insufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where one driving in the street was injured. Haley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 197 Mo. 15, 93 S. W. 1120. The fact that one knew that the street on which a track was laid was narrow and that he was liable to encounter a train there, and that he could not pass it with his wagon, did not make it negligence per se for him to drive there. Id. Where a person could have seen an engine approaching had he stopped and looked, and an ordinarily prudent person would have looked or listened, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Huber [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 154, 95 S. W. 568.

97. Haley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 197 Mo. 15, 93 S. W. 1120. Whether 20 miles per hour was negligence held a question for the jury. Id.

98. Haley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 197 Mo. 15, 93 S. W. 1120. Complaint for injuries to one driving in a narrow street held to allege negligence, though the speed ordinance alleged to have been violated had been repealed. Id. The fact that the grade of a track laid in the street of a populous city was such that trains could not ascend without momentum acquired by high speed did not justify such speed where people were liable to be injured, or where it rendered it impossible to stop the train in time to avoid injury to one in a perilous position. Id. Allegations charging negligence in the matter of speed and also in failing to stop the train after danger was apparent are not necessarily inconsistent. Id. While it is negligence to run a train into a place where ery is sought solely on the ground of discovered peril.[99] What constitutes contributory negligence depends on the particular circumstances,[1] but one who attempts to cross in front of an approaching train is negligent as a matter of law.[2] The duty of a railroad company with reference to its stations is less onerous and exacting than its duty with reference to its rolling stock and road bed.[3] A railroad company is liable to one who goes to a depot on business with the company and in the course of its transaction is insulted and humiliated by the conduct of the agent.[4]

(§ 11) C. Injuries to passengers and freight.[5]

(§ 11) D. Injuries to employes.[6]

(§ 11) E. Injuries to licensees and trespassers. General rules.[7]—In the operation of its trains a railroad company must exercise ordinary care for the safety of persons lawfully on its tracks or right of way,[8] and as to them, failure to danger of collision is to be expected at such speed that it cannot be stopped quickly, the railroad is not liable for failure to stop the train if it could not be stopped after the peril was discovered. Id.

99. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Gibson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 153, 93 S. W. 469.

1. Evidence insufficient to show freedom from contributory negligence where a licensee was killed at a point where approach of a train could be seen for 1000 feet, and there was no necessity for his being in the dangerous position he was, and he could have gotten to a place of safety easily. Keeler v. New York Cent. etc., R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 235.

2. Where one saw a train approaching and in attempting to cross ahead of it was struck, held he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, precluding recovery unless after his peril was discovered injury could have been avoided by the trainmen. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Willis' Adm'r, 29 Ky. L. R. 1187, 97 S. W. 21. Where one with full knowledge that a train is approaching goes upon the track directly in front of it, it is immaterial whether or not statutory signals were given. Id. Where one hears a train approaching and by the exercise of ordinary care can avoid being struck, the speed of the train is immaterial. Id. One who on a dark night at a place where there is no public crossing steps on the track within three feet of an aproaching engine, of which she had notice, is guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery where it appears that the operatives of the train were guilty of no negligence. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Barwick [Fla.] 41 So. 70.

3. Fitch v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Law] 64 A. 992 A railroad company is not negligent merely because there is ice on a station platform. Whether it is negligent depends on whethere is it allowed to remain there an unreasonable length of time. Id.

8. Held lawfully on the premises: A landowner charged with the duty of repairing fences along the right of way is not a trespasser where struck by a train while engaged in such duty. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. O'Donnell [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 505, 92 S. W. 409. A quarantine guard whose duty is to prevent unauthorized persons from passing of a "quarantine line" across the tracks, is not as a matter of law a trespasser upon the tracks a few feet from the line, the railroad company probably being aware of his presence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Goulding [Fla.] 42 So. 854.

Contractual right to use track: Where a railroad company granted a lumber company the privilege of running a logging train over its road, and the train was derailed and the conductor injured because of a defective bridge, the railroad was liable. Hamilton v. Louisana, etc., R. Co., 117 La. 243, 41 So. 560.

One walking on a street is not a trespasser, though it is also used by a railroad company as a track. Manion v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 166. A pedestrian on a street does not become a trespasser merely because a city has given a railroad company a right to temporarily lay its track in the streets for its own convenience. Keller v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 214 Pa. 82, 63 A. 413. Where the superintendent of a milling company was injured between cars and a spout through which grain was loaded into cars, the question of negligence in backing the cars onto the switch without giving warning was held for the jury. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Connolly [C. C. A.] 149 F. 398. One upon the premises occupied by an elevator company with its consent is not a trespasser as to the railroad company which owns the land upon which the elevator is located. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor [Kan.] 85 P. 528.

Extra brakeman while crossing tracks held not a trespasser. Best v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 957. An employe of a contractor repairing a depot, who went from his place of employment to the depot platform to get a tool belonging to the railroad company, was not a trespasser, though there was no agreement with the railroad company that the contractor could use such tool and another could have been easily procured. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Cozatt [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 534. One upon a railroad at a public crossing is not a trespasser. McGuire v. Chicago & Eastern Ill. R. Co., 120 Ill. App. 111. One who went onto the tracks in a depot yard to talk to persons loading cars, was held at most a mere licensee, to whom the railroad owed no greater duty than the exercise of ordinary care. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Willis' Adm'r, 29 Ky. L. R. 1187, 97 S. W. 21.

give statutory signals,[9] or signals required of them in the exercise of ordinary care, is negligence.[10] But as a general rule no duty is owed to trespassers [11] or licensees [12] except to refrain from willfully injuring them [13] after their presence is [14] or should

10. Where engineer and fireman and two others who stood near testify that the bell was rung constantly as the engine backed toward the place of the accident, held the testimony of witnesses who were not paying attention and were not in a position to have heard was insufficient to constitute a substantial conflict and warrant a finding of negligence in failing to ring the bell. Rich v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 79. Where a witness testifies that as he came up the track where an accident occurred he noticed that there was no light on the engine that struck a licensee, such evidence was sufficient to charge negligence in failing to carry a light to warn pedestrians. Id. A railroad company is not as a matter of law free from negligence in backing a long freight train at night, without headlight, or ringing of bells, or other warning, to a quarantine guard on the track, at his post of duty, whose presence there was acquiesced in by the company. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Goulding [Fla.] 42 So. 854.

11. Held trespassers: One walking along a path on the right of way. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Bryant [Ark.] 99 S. W. 693. A boy on the track at a switch within the exclusive possession of the railroad is a trespasser though persons frequently crossed the track near the place where he was injured. Elliott v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 233. Where an employe of lessees of a railroad company in repairing a building on the leased premises built a staging on other land of the railroad company, which staging was struck by a train and the employe injured, he was held a mere licensee to whom the railroad owed no duty except to refrain from willfully injuring him, though it was shown that such land was previously used in repairing the building, but the extent of such prior use or the company's notice thereof did not appear. Burke v. Boston, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 695. An officer of the watch who boards a train for the purposes of arresting persons whom he has no right to arrest without a warrant which he has not got is a bare licensee. Creeden v. Boston, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 344. One who walks upon the track not for any purpose of business with the company but merely for his own convenience is a trespasser. McGuire v. Chicago & Eastern Ill. R. Co., 120 Ill. App. 111. One who seeks to board a train at a place where there is no station and at which he has no right to be is a trespasser. Ahern v. Chicago & Erie R. Co., 124 Ill. App. 36. Whether one injured on the track was a mere licensee or on the tracks by invitation held a question for the jury. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Simons [Ind.] 79 N. E. 911. A railroad company does not, by carrying vendors of fruit, etc., for sale to passengers on its cars, invite the public to enter its trains at stations for the sole purpose of making purchases, and failure to object to persons frequently doing so does not create more than a permissive license. Peterson v. South & W. R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 618. Where one went aboard a train for the sole purpose of making a purchase from the news agent and was injured by being thrown from the train by the jerking of cars, the company was not liable, though no signal was given before the train started. Id. Where one having business with a circus company which leased cars from the railroad went upon the premises of the railroad without the knowledge of the railroad employes and was injured by negligence of the circus employes, she was a mere licensee to whom the railroad was not liable in the absence of willful injury. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Lucas [Miss.] 42 So. 607.

12. The license of a licensee is subject to the right of the company to operate trains and the railroad company owes him no duty except to refrain from recklessly injuring him. Rosenthal v. New York, etc., R. Co., 112 App. Div. 431, 98 N. Y. S. 476. Whether one walking on the track is thereby invitation or as a trespasser is material. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Denny's Adm'r [Va.] 56 S. E. 321. Where licensees are such by mere tolerance or have become such by repeated acts of trespass against the will of the railroad company, no duty is owed them. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Farrow's Adm'x [Va.] 55 S. E. 569. No duty is owed to a bare licensee on the track of employing competent servants to operate trains, or to run them in any particular manner or at a limited speed. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stegall's Adm'x, 105 Va. 538, 54 S. E. 19.

As against a trespasser walking on the track at night, failure to have the headlight burning is not negligence. Frye v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 566. The presumption of negligence arising from excessive speed is rebutted by proof that the person injured was a trespasser. McGuire v. Chicago & Eastern R. Co., 120 Ill. App. 111. Failure to keep a lookout or to give signals does not show willful negligence. Janowicz v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 124 Ill. App. 149; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Woolfork [Ky.] 99 S. W. 294; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Barbours' Adm'r, 29 Ky. L. R. 339, 93 S. W. 24; Thompson v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 123 Ill. App. 47. Where one was struck by a car against which a train had been backed, an instruction that if backing the train against the car was negligence there could be a recovery was erroneous for failure to require some dereliction of duty aside from backing the train. The rule of discovered peril does not make a railroad liable, notwithstanding contributory negligence, unless the peril was discovered in time to avoid the accident. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ploeger [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 474, 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 183, 93 S. W. 226. A railway is not liable for injuries to a trespasser on the theory that the motorman could have stopped the car in time to have avoided the injury in the absence of proof that the motorman had notice of the perilous position of the trespasser. Johnson v. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 33. Where a licensee was killed while walking along the track, the doctrine of last clear chance does not apply where it appears that he was not seen by the operatives of the train. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Farrow's Adm'x [Va.] 55 S. E. 569. A trespasser has the burden to show that he was unconscious of his peril and that the engineer should have discovered it in time to avoid injury to him. Burde v. Chicago R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 509.

Evidence insufficient to show whether a trespasser who was killed was lying or walking on the track or that he was seen in time to have avoided injury to him. Johnson v. Birminghan R. Light & Power Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 33. Where a boy, a trespasser, familiar with the conditions, was injured on the track, evidence insufficient to show the company liable where after the boy was seen signals were given and he would have cleared the track had he not fallen. Sanders v. Texas & P. R. Co. [La.] 42 So. 764. In an action for death of a trespasser a jury is not authorized to infer that she was seen in time to avoid injury to her from the mere fact that she might have been seen. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Barbour's Adm'r, 29 Ky. L. R. 339, 93 S. W. 24. When a trespasser was injured he is not prejudiced by the exclusion of evidence as to the distance within which a train could be stopped, where there is no evidence that he was seen by train operatives before he was struck. Beiser v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 249, 92 S. W. 928. Evidence held insufficient to go to the jury in the question of negligence based on failure to stop the train after discovery of a pedestrian in a place of danger. Sites v. Knott, 197 Mo. 684, 96 S. W. 206. Where a trespasser was injured by a truck car which got beyond the control of persons operating it, he could not complain because a freight train made so much noise that he could not hear the warning shouted to him. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Johnson [Ky.] 97 S. W. 745. Railroad company held not liable where a truck car on the track got beyond the control of employes and could not be stopped after discovery of the presence of a trespasser on the track. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Johnson [Ky.] 97 S. W. 745. Where one was struck by a train while caught in cattle guards, whether a proper effort was made to stop the train after his peril was discovered held for the jury. Thayer v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 135. Where a trespasser was killed, evidence held sufficient to show that no effort was made to stop the train after his peril was discovered. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Ramsey [Tex Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 745, 97 S. W. 1067.

15. A railroad is liable for injuries to a trespasser resulting from failure of an engineer to stop on signal though he did not know why he was signalled to stop. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Pritchard [Ind.] 79 N. E. 508. Evidence sufficient to show that a trespasser's peril should have been apparent to the engineer. Burde v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 509.

16. Reasonable diligence must be used to discover the presence of trespassers on the track. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ploeger [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 474, 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 183, 93 S. W. 226.

17. Southern R. Co. v. Chatman, 124 Ga. 1026, 53 S. E. 692. An engineer may presume that the track is clear except at places where people have a right to be. Burde v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 509. A railroad company is not required to anticipate the presence of trespassers upon its tracks, but after discovery of their presence reasonable care must be exercised to avoid injury to them, and if the danger be imminent such means as are available which are consistent with the higher duty to passengers must be exercised. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Farrow's Adm'x [Va.] 55 S. E. 569. Where the portion of a track where a trespasser was injured was not in the street or other public place, its frequent use by pedestrians did not create one upon it a licensee to whom the duty of ordinary care was owed. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Johnson [Ky.] 97 S. W. 745.

19. Southern R. Co. v. Chatman, 124 Ga. 1026, 53 S. E. 692. On an issue as to Employes of other roads and of independent contractors.[20]—A railroad company must exercise ordinary care for the protection of employes of other roads who are lawfully on the premises,[21] and for the safety of servants of railroad contractors,[22] and persons to whom cars are furnished,[23] and such persons must likewise whether the presence of persons on the track should be anticipated, the existence of parts by gaps, stiles, or gates, long continued use of such vicinity as a crossing, etc., may be considered. Eppstein v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 197 Mo. 720, 94 S. W. 967. Ordinary care must be exercised to prevent injury to a person on the track at a place where his presence is to be anticipated. Id. Whether operatives of a train had reason to anticipate the presence of persons on the track at a point where one was injured held a question for the jury. Id. As to licensees, where there is reason to expect their presence, it is the duty of persons in charge of trains to avoid injuring them after their presence is discovered or should have been discovered. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Denny's Adm'r [Va.] 56 S. E. 321. But the company is not required to provide additional force to keep proper lookout. Id.

21. Where a depot employe was injured on the track, evidence held insufficient to show that the injury was the result of negligence in operating a train at a dangerous rate of speed. Joyce v. Great Northern R. Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 975. Instruction in an action for injuries to an employe of a contractor repairing a depot held erroneous as omitting reference to negligence of the railroad company and restricting rights of the parties to immaterial facts. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Cozatt [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 534. Where an employe of a contractor, repairing a depot was injured by being caught between a car moved by employes of the railroad and a bumping post, and at the instant the car was started the railroad employe's knee gave way, held the proximate cause of the injury was the moving of the car, and not the giving way of the employe's knee. Id. Proof held not to vary from the allegations of a complaint in an action for injuries to an employe of an independent contractor who was repairing a depot. Id. A car inspector engaged in inspecting cars for one company on tracks used jointly with another, who knew that the yard master of the other company had seen him at work, may assume that the yard master would not cause cars to be run against those he was inspecting. El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 145, 93 S. W. 166. Where a rule of one company using tracks jointly with another requiring the car inspector to carry a flag would not have been regarded if obeyed, failure to observe it was held not the proximate cause of the injury. Id. Refusal to charge contributory negligence in not displaying the flag held not error under the circumstances of this case. Id. When a car inspector of one company was inspecting cars on tracks used jointly with another to the knowledge of such other company, instruction ignoring the fact of such notice properly refused. Id. Where a car inspector was injured by moving cars on tracks used jointly with another company, and there was no evidence that the cars he was inspecting should have been coupled to others, an instruction predicated on such fact was inapplicable to the issues. Id. A railroad company is liable where by its negligence it caused the death of a person on the track of another company. Seaboard Air Line R. v. Randolph, 126 Ga. 238, 55 S. E. 47. Where an engineer of one road was running a train over the track of another, instruction as to the duty of keeping the track in repair held not error in view of other instructions given. Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Sage [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 254, 94 S. W. 1074. Where in an action for injuries by an employe of one road while running a train over the track of another the negligence alleged was failure to keep the road bed in good condition, but the answer set up contributory negligence in running the train backwards at a dangerous speed, held not error to show that another engineer on a different engine had charge of the air and control of the train. Id. Where an employ of another road was inspecting cars switched from defendant road onto the transfer track, and while so engaged another car was switched onto such track against the cars he was inspecting and he was injured, a complaint was held demurrable as not showing that the defendant violated any duty it owed the plaintiff, it not appearing that there was any time when cars might not be switched onto such track and it not appearing that defendant's servants knew plaintff was a car inspector or even that he was about the premises Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Hennessey [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 670. Where a flagman in the employe of a contrator who was working for the railroad company, who had worked continuously for three days and nights, was sent down the track to flag train and where last seen was lying on the track but seemed drowsy, there was no direct evidence of the manner of the accident, but from the place he was last seen he could see 500 yards up the track. Held insufficient to show negligence on the part of the railroad. Parks v. Southern R. Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 276. Where an employe of another road was knocked off the platform of a coach just as he stepped onto it and there was no opportunity to do anything after his position was discovered, the last clear chance rule was held inapplicable. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Lee [Va.] 55 S. E. 1.

22. Where employes of a contractor for construction of a railroad were killed while walking on the track to their work, an instruction that they were on the track by invitation if so contemplated by the construction contract, or such use of the track was practically necessary, was erroneous in the absence of evidence of the terms of the contract, or that such use was necessary and was not justified by evidence that the track was only a convenient way to reach the work. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Denny's Adm'r [Va.] 56 S. E. 321.

23. A railway company which furnishes a defective car to the employer of another is not liable for injuries to the servant where the employer knew of the defect in time to exercise care commensurate with the perils of their situation.[24] In Pennsylvania it is provided by statute that under certain circumstances persons injured on railroad premises on trains have the same and no greater right of action as an employe,[25] and such statute is valid as applied to railway postal clerks.[26]

Persons at stations.[27]—A railroad company is liable for injuries sustained by one lawfully at a depot which result from the negligence of the company,[28] and if have repaired it or to have warnsd his servant thereof. McCallion v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Kan.] 88 P. 50. Evidence held to show contributory negligence where a Pullman employe was killed in the yards. Michigan C. R. Co. v. Cudahy, 119 Ill. App. 328.

24. Where an experienced track repairer working at a junction crossing of railroads knew that a train was coming but continued to work without looking up on the supposition that trains approaching from that direction would pass on another track, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Belt R. Co. v. Skszypczak, 225 Ill. 242, 80 N. E. 113. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where an employe of an independent contractor repairing a depot was injured by being caught between a car moved by employes of the railroad, and a bumping post. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Cozatt [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 534. Employe of a contractor repairing a depot held not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where he was injured while going in the most direct route to procure a tool to work with, though such route was dangerous. Id. Where the servant of a contractor widening a cut was killed by a train which was moving slowly and was seen by deceased, who could easily have avoided injury, evidence sufficient to show that the railroad company was not negligent and that the licensee was guilty of contributory negligence. Buckley v. New York, etc., R. Co., 148 F. 460.

25. Act April 4, 1868 (P. L. 58), § 1, providing that when any person not an employe is injured about the premises of a railroad company or on a train, or car, he shall have the same right of action as an employe, applies in two classes of cases: Where one not a passenger is injured while lawfully engaged on the premises of the railway company, and where a person is on or about a train or car engaged in railroad work. Hayman v. Philadephia & R. R. Co., 214 Pa. 436, 63 A. 967. A carpenter employed in locomotive works, and loading a locomotive belonging to defendant railway company on cars standing on its tracks, and such cars were moved while he was at work and he was injured while walking on the track, back to the works, is within the statute. Id. This statute does not apply to a stevedore's employe who was injured while standing near the track after the end of his day's work merely waiting to give in his time. He is not employed or engaged about the premises of the railroad company within the meaning of the statute. Hobbs v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 143 F. 180. Where two railroads have joint trackage rights over the same track and an employe of one is injured by the negligence of the other, the track, for the application of the statute, must be regarded as the property of each road while using it. Yarington v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 143 F. 565. If the place of the accident is clearly and for general purposes the premises of the defendant company, it is sufficient for the application of the act if the person injured is engaged in and about such premises and is not a passenger. Id. If the accident occurs in a place which is not exclusively and for general purposes the premises of the railroad company, the nature of the employment becomes material, and, if the work has no relation to railroad work as such but is only connected with it by circumstances of locality, the statute does not apply. Id. The Act of April 4, 1868 (P. L. 58), does not apply where a railway mail clerk engaged in the performance of his duties on one road is injured in a collision with a train on another road at a point where the two roads have joint trackage rights and the defendant road had failed to flag the train as it should. The place where the accident occurred not being by right the premises of the defendant company at the time, nor the plaintiff being engaged in work ordinarily performed by its employes. Id. The act does not apply where an employe of one railroad is injured by the negligence of another while rightfully using its tracks. Baker v. Philadephia & R. R. Co., 149 F. 882.

26. Martin v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 27 S. Ct. 100.

27. See 6 C. L. 1212.

28. Eivdence sufficient to show negligence where one was injured on the track at a depot. Perkins v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 660; 94 S. W. 636. Newsboy taking papers from train in station killed by passing locomotive which could not be stopped because of defect. Waltz v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 31 Pa. Super Ct. 286. Where a licensee was injured while in a station office by derailment of a train, evidence held sufficient to show that the train was being operated at a dangerous rate of speed in view of the defective condition of the track. Croft v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 108 N. W. 1053. Where the wife of a station agent who was in the habit of assisting him in the office was injured through the negligence of the railroad company, evidence that her conduct was known to the division superintendent was not objectionable on the ground that such person was not the superintendent where he acted as such. Id. A wife of a station agent who assists her husband in the office with the knowledge of the officers of the road is a licensee, and the company is liable where she is injured owing to derailment of a train while running over a defective track at a dangerous rate of speed. Id. The fact that there was a notice on the door leading to the office forbidding all persons to enter except employes did not of itself change her status as a licensee but was a question for the jury. Id. Where the wife of a station agent who injury results from the joint negligence of several companies, all are liable,[29] but it is not liable if the injury results from the contributing negligence of the person injured.[30]

Persons loading or unloading cars.[31]—Persons upon the right of way for the purpose of unloading cars are not trespassers[32] and are entitled to the exercise of reasonable care on the part of the railroad company,[33] both as to keeping the premwas in the habit of assisting him in the office was injured by the negligence of the company, an instruction held not erroneous as leading the jury to believe that the consent of her husband to her presence there imposed a duty on the railroad company. Id. Instruction in such case held not erroneous as eliminating the claim of a defective track. Id. Where a licensee was injured, evidence held sufficient to show negligence in the defective condition of the track and in the manner of operation of the train derailment of which caused the injury. Croft v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 723. The wife of a station agent who with knowledge of the company assists her husband at the office does not assume the risk of affirmative negligence of the company in permitting the track to be in a defective condition causing the derailment of a train which smashed into the depot and injured her, nor of the running of the train at an excessive speed. Id. Where a railroad company has knowledge that a station agent's wife assists him at the depot, it is bound to exercise reasonable care to prevent injury to her. Id. Where a railroad company permits a station agent to live in the depot building, giving over to him a portion of the building for residence purposes, and had notice that the agent was the head of a family, it was bound to know that the family included children and to exercise reasonable care to prevent injury to them. Id. Railroad company held liable for death of a child killed through its negligence. Id. Evidence sufficient to show that one who accompanied passengers to a train was a licensee. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Bates [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 319, 95 S. W. 738.

29. One who sues for injuries sustained at a union depot and shows negligence on the part of persons operating a train which was made up of cars belonging to one company, propelled by engines of another, by a crew paid by a third, and the depot was maintained for the common benefit of all, shows a joint liability without proving the contract relations between the parties. Brown v. Southern Pac. Co. [Utah] 88 P. 7.

30. Evidence insufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where one was injured while going across the tracks at a station to board a train, though he did not look, where it was customary for people to pass there to and from trains, etc. Perkins v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 660, 94 S. W. 636.

31. See 6 C. L. 1213.

32. One who goes upon a siding to help unload a car is not a trespasser. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Farris [Ky.] 100 S. W. 870. Where a consignee of ice at the invitation of the conductor of a freight train boarded the caboose for the purpose of unloading it, he was not a mere licensee, but was there by invitation and was entitled to be protected against negligence. Santa Fe, etc., R. Co. v. Ford [Ariz.] 85 P. 1072. The conductor having apparent authority to invite him to board the train, his actual authority is immaterial. Id. One loading a car who goes beyond the routine of his duties, when some one standing near by shouted an alarm to stop a train, to a point where he could see the train and render any assistance emergency might require, is not a trespasser. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Pritchard [Ind.] 79 N. E. 508. Where one loading a car left his duties when some one shouted an alarm to stop an approaching train and went to a point where he could see the train, the jury could presume in the absence of evidence that he went there through a sense of duty to render any assistance emergency might require. Id. Where one was struck while unloading bedding into stock cars, a statement by the station agent to his fellow workman that no train was coming is admissible as a declaration made in course of his duty and as evidence of permission to go upon the tracks. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Cox [C. C. A.] 145 F. 157. A consignee engaged in unloading a car on the unloading track is on the railroad premises by invitation, and is not required to watch out for unusual dangers, and employes switching cars onto such track must give him notice. Lovell v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 193. He is entitled to notice if the employes should have considered the likelihood of his presence in the car. Id.

33. Where one unloading cars on a siding is injured by the car being moved without warning, the company is liable though the moving of such car resulted from a latent defect in the coupling. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Farris [Ky.] 100 S. W. 870. Where a third person was killed while loading cars, it must be shown that the company was negligent or that its servants were grossly negligent or unfit, as provided by Rev. Laws, c. 111, p. 267, and c. 171, § 2. Pearlstein v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 1024. Evidence that a servant employed to assist such person started to jump, dance, and jerk a rope attached to a machine being loaded, for the purpose of steadying it, but immediately desisted when requested, does not show gross negligence. Id. Where one who boarded a caboose at the invitation of the conductor to unload goods consigned to him and was injured by a jar when a coupling was made, instructions as to negligence and contributory negligence held proper. Santa Fe, etc., R. Co. v. Ford [Ariz.] 85 P. 1072. Other instructions held erroneous as imposing too light a degree of care. Id. Where one was injured while unloading a car by the bumping of other cars against it, whether the giving of notice to a boy on the wagon was the exercise of ordinary care was for the jury when it was disputed that there was a boy on the wagon. Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Cross [Ark.] 93 S. W. 981. Where a consignee was in a car on the unloading ises safe [34] and on the part of railroad servants whose duty it is to assist them.[35] But they must exercise reasonable care for their own safety and may not recover for an injury which results from their contributory negligence.[36]

Children on or near tracks.[37]—If a child is a trespasser no higher duty is owed him than is owed any other trespasser [38] until his presence is discovered, and then, if he is of tender age, there is no presumption that he will act with the discretion of an adult.[39] But where a child is rightfully on railroad premises, ordinary care under the circumstances must be exercised for his protection.[40] Whether the degree track and was injured by other cars being switched onto such track during the noon hour, when it was supposed by railroad employes that no one was in the car and there was no signs of activity about evidence held insufficient to show negligence on the part of the railroad. Lovell v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 193.

34. Where a night watchman whose duty it was to look after the closing and sealing of cars knew that a car was being unloaded after business hours, the company owed such person the duty not to negligently injure him where he did not know he was violating any rule of the company and employes of the road having charge of unloading cars knew of his position. Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. McQueeney [Ark.] 92 S. W. 1120. A railroad company which choses to deliver freight from a car instead of from the freight house must keep the car safe for the use of the consignee. Ladd v. New York, etc., Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 742. By using a freight car of another company as a place for the delivery of freight, the company becomes liable for injuries resulting from defects in the car. Id. Where the servant of a railroad company which is using a car for the delivery of freight instead of using the freight house is notified of a defect in such car, the company is negligent where such defect was not repaired until after a servant of the consignee was injured while unloading. Id. The company was not relieved because of the fact that the consignee knew of the defect, he having notified the company of it. Id. Where one loading a car left his employment when an alarm to stop an approaching train was shouted, and went to where he could see the train and was thrown onto the track and killed by the train by the failing of poles caused by a defect in the car, the proximate cause of the accident was a question for the jury. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Pritchard [Ind.] 79 N. E. 508. If the defect was the result of negligence of the company and was the proximate cause of the injury, the company was liable though there was no priority of contract between it and the decedent. Id. Where one company controls others by stock ownership and operates all lines as a single system, though the general management of each road is retained by the corporation owning it, the dominant corporation bears the relation of principal with respect to traffic originating on lines of the former and is directly liable for an injury to one employed in unloading one of its own cars on the track of a subordinate company through negligence of employes of the latter. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Delachesa [C. C. A.] 145 F. 617.

35. Where one loading cars was under no contract relation with the railroad company, he did not assume the risk of negligence on the part of servants of the railroad company employed to assist him. Pearlstein v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 1024. Where one loading a machine into a car was injured, evidence that a servant of the railroad company who was assisting started to jump, dance, and whistle, and jerked a rope attached to the machine just prior to the accident, justifies a finding that such negligence was one of the causes of the accident. Id.

36. Where one unloading a car on a side track is warned to get off when the car was about to be moved, the railroad is not liable. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Farris [Ky.] 100 S. W. 870.

37. See 6 C. L. 1213.

38. A boy eight years old finding the crossing blocked went to the depot about fifty feet away and stepped onto a flat car which was moved by an engine and he was thrown under the car and killed. The train employes did not know of his presence. Held he was a trespasser to whom no other duty was owed than to refrain from willfully injuring him. Hasting v. Southern R. Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 260. Evidence held to require nonsuit where a boy trespassing on a retaining wall which a railroad company was erecting fell and was injured when the watchman approached. Weatherbee v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 214 Pa. 12, 63 A. 367.

39. As to a child of tender years on the track, no presumption arises that it will appreciate danger and act with the discretion of an adult in getting out of the way of an approaching train, and employes operating the train may not act on such presumption. Southern R. Co. v. Chatman, 124 Ga. 1026, 53 S. E. 692.

40. Where a child was fishing in a stream which ran through a lumber yard to which all persons were admitted and was killed by a car which was knocked over the end of a siding, the railroad was held liable though ties and rails had been thrown up at the end to prevent cars from going over. Black v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 863, 109 N. W. 1052. Where a boy standing by a locomotive at a station is killed by reason of a known defect in such locomotive, the railroad company is liable. Waltz v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 401. Where a child eight years old was injured by a train being backed down upon him while he was on the track by invitation, the company could not relieve itself on the theory that the child voluntarily encountered the danger where it is not shown that he appreciated the danger, since such appreciation would not be presumed in a child of that age. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Simons [Ind.] 79 N. E. 911. Complaint held sufficiently specific in an action where a child was injured on a crossing generally used by the

of care necessary has been exercised,[41] and whether the child was guilty of contributory negligence is generally a question of fact,[42] unless the circumstances show otherwise as a matter of law.[43]

Adults walking on tracks.[44]—People who walk on tracks must exercise vigilence commensurate with known risks.[45] In some states it is held to be contributory negligence as a matter of law to walk on a railroad track,[46] but if one is lawfully on the tracks [47] by virtue of custom or long continued use of the track at a certain public by getting his foot caught in an unblocked frog and being run over by a train running backwards. Id. Where a child was injured at a permission crossing by being run over by a train while his foot was caught in an unblocked frog, the admission of affirmative evidence on the question whether he could have crossed safely had his foot not caught held not reversible error. Id. Where a boy was injured while asleep on a platform, evidence that the track was out of repair at that point, causing passenger coaches to project over the edge of the platform, was admissible. Mann v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 566. Where a boy was struck while asleep on a platform, evidence that the engineer's view of the platform was unobstructed is admissible. Id. In such case evidence that the train was past due and running at thirty-five miles an hour was admissible. Id.

41. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where a licensee (child) was injured on the track. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Carr [Va.] 56 S. E. 276. Whether a railroad was negligent where a boy sleeping on a platform was struck, held for the jury. Mann v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 566.

42. Question of contributory negligence held for the jury where a boy seven years of age walking on the track was struck by a train. Edwards v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [S. D.] 110 N. W. 832. Whether a boy eight or nine years of age in walking along the track was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to keep a lookout up and down the track held for the jury. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Sparks [Ark.] 99 S. W. 73. Where a boy was killed at a permissive crossing and no one witnessed the accident, evidence held to sustain a judgment for the railroad company. Grant v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 463. Contributory negligence of boy nine years old killed while crossing track in city street held for jury. Metzler v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 180.

43. It is contributory negligence for a boy familiar with the locality and movement of trains to go to sleep in a position where he knew a passing train would strike him. Mann v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 566. A boy twelve years old with a knowledge of the method of operating trains and appreciates the danger of being on the track is guilty of contributory negligence where without necessity he stands or walks on track laid in the street. Coy v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Kan.] 86 P. 468. Evidence held sufficient to show contributory negligence where a boy of ordinary intelligence, thirteen years of age, attempted to pass in front of a moving engine. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Laughlin [Kan.] 87 P. 749. Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 1810, imposes liability on a railroad when it fails to fence its track only when injuries are the proximate result of such failure, and injuries result to a small boy who entered where a fence should have been by reason of a car standing on a grade being loosened by trespassers. Such failure was not the proximate cause of the injury. Paquin v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 99 Minn. 170, 108 N. W. 882.

44. See 6 C. L. 1214.

45. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 43 So. 235. A licensee walking on the track is charged with a duty to care for his own safety, with a knowledge of the frequent passing of trains and that the method of shifting cars at such place was by flying switches. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Farrow's Adm'x [Va.] 55 S. E. 569. If heedlessness or imprudence of a person was the sole and proximate cause of his injury, he cannot recover, however negligent the railroad company may have been. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 43 So. 235. A licensee must vigilantly look and listen for the approach of trains from the rear as well as from in front. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Denny's Adm'r [Va.] 56 S. E. 321.

46. One who stands or walks on a railroad track in a street when there is no necessity for doing so is guilty of contributory negligence. Coy v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Kan.] 86 P. 468. Though implied permission to walk on the track may relieve a person from the imputation of being a trespasser, yet, if he walks on the track when he could with equal convenience walk on a path beside it, he is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Mathews [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 957, 93 S. W. 1068. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, it is negligence per se to walk on a railroad track. Frye v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 566. In Georgia, under Civ. Code 1895, § 2322, if the injured party was guilty of contributory negligence to some extent, such fact is to be considered in fixing the measure of damages to be recovered. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Parker [Ga.] 56 S. E. 616.

47. Where a railroad company cut a car loose on a down grade where by its own momentum it crashed into cars in the yard of a mill company and killed an employe of such company, who was lawfully in the yard, and the railroad company had no one in a position to exercise control over or note where the detached car was going, it was negligent. Hudson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 198, 55 S. E. 103. A railroad company is liable where it injures a trespasser walking by the side of the track if he was in the exercise of ordinary care and the company knew of his presence or failed to exercise ordinary care to discover it when the circumstances were sufficient to put a person of average prudence on inquiry. Brown v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 73 N. H. 568, point by pedestrians, they can claim the rights of a licensee. Ordinary care must be exercised for their protection,[48] and trains must be operated with a view to their probable presence on the track.[49] The rule that ordinary care must be used where the presence of persons on the track is to be anticipated applies where the track has been used by them for a long time in cities and thickly populated communities and not in rural or sparsely settled communities.[50] So, also, if tracks are located on a street or public highway, due care must be taken for the protection of persons lawfully on the track,[51] and as to them statutory regulations must be observed.[52] A railroad is not required to observe unreasonable precautions in the operation of its 64 A. 194. Laws 1899, p. 316, c. 75, limiting the liability of railroads to injuries caused by gross negligence, does not limit liability to injuries occasioned by gross or willful negligence where one was struck by a train while walking along the side of the track in the absence of posted notice forbidding such use of the track. Id. Such act is not complied with by showing that notice was at some time posted without showing that at the time of the accident the notice was so maintained that the persons for whose benefit it was intended could see it by exercise of reasonable care. Id. A notice posted on a gate leading to a private crossing dated in 1895, purporting to conform to Pub. St. 1901, c. 266, requiring the gate to be closed and forbidding trespassing, is not notice under Laws 1899, p. 316, c. 75, limiting liability to gross negligence where notice has been posted. Id. Where a licensee was killed while walking on the track, allegations that the train was running at a dangerous rate of speed and that no signals were given as should have been given, in the exercise of ordinary care, shows common-law negligence though there is no statute regulating speed or requiring signals. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Snowden [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 865.

48. If the portion of the track where a pedestrian is injured is so frequently used by the public with the knowledge of the railroad company as to require it, in the operation of trains, to anticipate the presence of persons, it is a question of fact whether the operatives were negligent in operating a train in such manner that it was impossible to stop it after discovery of a person on the track in a perilous position. Shaw v. Georgia R. Co. [Ga.] 55 S. E. 960. Instructions disapproved. Id. Evidence that the place where an injury occurred was in a populous town, that the track was frequently used by pedestrians, was admissible to show necessity for increased vigilance where cars were backed over the track at that point. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Sparks [Ark.] 99 S. W. 73. The fact that a great many people trespass upon the track with the acquiescence of the company which does not openly complain does not confer on the public a legal right to do so. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Barbour's Adm'r, 29 Ky. L. R. 339, 93 S. W. 24.

49. A train running through a populous community where it is known that the track is often used by pedestrians must be operated with a view to the probable presence of persons on the track. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Murphy's Adm'r [Ky.] 97 S. W. 729. Lookout must be kept and train kept under control. Where one was injured on a portion of the track much used by pedestrians, it was not error to refuse to charge that no duty was owed him until his presence was discovered. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Parker [Ga.] 56 S. E. 616. Where one, though a trespasser in a certain sense, is on a part of the track so frequented by the public as to give operatives of trains notice to apprehend their presence, the company must exercise ordinary cars to discover and protect him. Id. Complaint held sufficient on this theory. Id.

50. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Kipp's Adm'x [Ky.] 100 S. W. 246.

51. Train operatives running along a street or way are bound to anticipate the presence of persons on the track and to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring them. Manion v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 166. A complaint for injuries to a traveler by a train run on a track in a street, alleging that the train was carelessly and negligently run at a high rate of speed, without pointing out in what manner it was so run and without alleging violation of ordinance, and not showing in what manner the company was negligent or what duty it violated, states no cause of action. Southern R. Co. v. Hansbrough's Adm'x, 105 Va. 527, 54 S. E. 17. Allegations in a complaint for injuries to a traveler by a train run on a track in the street, that the train was run at an excessive rate of speed, and that no signals were given without alleging statutory necessity therefor, and not showing failure to exercise due care to prevent injury after seeing him, shows no duty of the company violated and states no cause of action. Id.

52. Where a traveler was injured by a collision with a train run in a street, allegations of an ordinance prohibiting the running of trains at a higher rate of speed than five miles per hour, and requiring ringing of bell, and alleging violation of such ordinance as the proximate cause of the injury states a cause of action. Southern R. Co. v. Hansbrough's Adm'x, 105 Va. 527, 54 S. E. 17.

53. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 43 So. 235. Servants in charge of a train who see a person on the track may regard him as one in possession of his senses and no duty is imposed on them by the fact that he is deaf. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. O'Donnell [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 505, 92 S. W. 409. An engineer on seeing one on the track may presume that he would leave it in time to avoid injury and need not at once take steps to stop the train. Id. Where a particular point on the track had been used by pedestrians largely on Sundays and during the daytime, a railroad is not required to be on the lookout for persons on the track at midnight. Hoback's Adm'r v. Louisville, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 241.

trains.[53] Whether a railroad has been guilty of actionable negligence,[54] and whether a pedestrian has been guilty of contributory negligence, is generally a question of fact,[55] unless the circumstances show otherwise as a matter of law.[56] The doctrine of last clear chance does not apply where one walking on the track voluntarily placed himself in a place of danger from which he had present means of escape and remained there without exercising the precautions of an ordinarily prudent man.[57] One invoking this rule has the burden to prove facts making it applicable.[58]

54. Question of negligence where a person on the track was injured, held for the jury. Johnson v. Center [Cal. App.] 88 P. 727. Where a pedestrian on the track was injured, evidence as to the negligence of the operatives of the train held for the jury. Edwards v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [S. D.] 110 N. W. 832. Evidence sufficient to show that one injured on the track was free from contributory negligence. Best v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 957. Where one working on an elevated road containing four tracks was killed, evidence held to show that failure of the train to give warning of its approach was not the proximate cause of his injury. Grathwohl v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 667. Evidence sufficient to show negligence in failing to stop the train after the presence of a person on the track was discovered as well as in failing to give signals. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Murphy's Adm'r [Ky.] 97 S. W. 729. Where in an action against the railroad company and the engineer a verdict was returned against the company alone, evidence held sufficient to sustain it. Id. Whether the speed of a train in a populous community where it is known that the track is often used by pedestrians is so great as to amount to negligence as against a trespasser is for the jury. Id.

55. Where an employe of a mill went between cars and a bumping post in the mill yard, and while there was killed by cars being bumped into him by a car negligently cut loose on a down grade by a railroad company, he was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Hudson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 198, 55 S. E. 103. Evidence sufficient to show that a night watchman killed was guilty of contributory negligence. Hancock v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 128, 92 S. W. 456. Where one was killed on an elevated road containing four tracks, he was not shown to have been free from contributory negligence where his view was unobstructed and he had knowledge that trains were liable to run on any track at any time. Grathwohl v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 667. Where one hastening to catch a train was struck by a train passing on another track, evidence of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury. Hicks v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 798. Evidence of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where one was killed by a train while walking on a path along the edge of the track. Brown v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 73 N. H. 568, 64 A. 194. Evidence sufficient to show that a person injured on the tract was guilty of contributory negligence. Shepard v. Lewiston, etc., R. Co. [Me.] 65 A. 20. Evidence insufficient to show that one on the track was guilty of contributory negligence. Stegner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 97 Minn. 571, 107 N. W. 559. Evidence held to show that one injured while walking on the track was guilty of contributory negligence where, while walking a distance of forty feet along the side of the track, she was safe and stepped onto the track without looking, though she knew a train was approaching. Cranch v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 186 N. Y. 310, 78 N. E. 1078.

56. Where one with good sight and hearing walks on the track when he can with equal convenience walk on a path beside it, and knows that it is near train time, and is struck at a point where he has a view of the track for half a mile, he is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ploeger [Tex. Civ. App.] 96 S. W. 56. Where one knew a train was approaching and stepped onto the track immediately in front of it, she was guilty of contributory negligence. Hutchinson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 195 Mo. 547, 93 S. W. 931. A person thirty-four years old in full possession of his faculties who walks for half a mile on the track without once looking back or listening is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Jones [C. C. A.] 144 F. 47. Where a mere licensee was killed while walking on the track, evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law. Gibbons v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 99 Minn. 142, 108 N. W. 471. Where a person on the track heard the whistle of the engine and saw the headlight, failure to give statutory signals is immaterial. Hutchinson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 195 Mo. 547, 93 S. W. 931.

57. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Jones [C. C. A.] 144 F. 47. The fact that the wind was blowing in his face and that the sound of an approaching train was deadened by a waterfall in the vicinity did not excuse failure to look back but rendered use of his senses more imperative. Id.

58. Where it appeared that one struck by a train while walking on the track was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, he must show in order to recover that after the train operatives discovered his peril they failed to use all means at hand to stop the train. International, etc., R. Co. v. Ploeger [Tex. Civ. App.] 96 S. W. 56. If one struck by a train was negligent, the railroad is not liable unless he was in a perilous position and the servants saw him and realized that he could not or would not extricate himself. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. O'Donnell [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 505, 92 S. W. 409. If the peril of a person on the tracks should in the exercise of reasonable care have been discovered in time to prevent injury to him, the company is liable though he was not in fact discovered in

Persons standing, sitting, or lying on tracks[59] are negligent,[60] but such fact does not relieve the company from the duty to exercise ordinary care after their presence is discovered.[61]

Persons along or between tracks.[62]—Injury to persons near the track is not ordinarily to be anticipated in the operation of trains,[63] but in throwing articles therefrom care must be used not to injure such persons.[64] Likewise, persons standing so close to the track as to be struck by passing trains are usually deemed negligent,[65] but contributory negligence is for the jury when the injury is caused by articles thrown from the train,[66] or defective appliances unduly projecting,[67] or where the injured person is engaged in rescuing one in peril.[68]

Persons on bridges or trestles.[69]—As a general rule, one who goes upon a bridge time. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Modawell [C. C. A.] 151 F. 421.

59. See 6 C. L. 1215.

60. It is negligence for a person to stand on one track absorbed in watching a train on another. Eppstein v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 197 Mo. 720, 94 S. W. 967.

61. Where operatives of a train discovered a person lying on the track either drunk or asleep when three hundred and eighty yards from him, within which time the train could have been stopped, an issue of discovered peril was raised and the verdict of the jury holding the railroad liable was sufficiently sustained. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Brannon [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 844, 96 S. W. 1095. Where one was injured while standing on the track, an instruction that if operators of the train failed to exercise ordinary care, etc., he could recover, held not to ignore existence of concurrent negligence. Eppstein v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 197 Mo. 720, 94 S. W. 967. Where one was injured while standing on the track within city limits, where he could have been seen for three hundred yards, was standing with his back to the train, no signals were given as required by law, held operatives of the train failed to exercise ordinary care. Id.

62. See 6 C. L. 1214.

63. Where the circumstances were such as to authorize a finding that an engineer was bound in the exercise of ordinary care to anticipate the perilous position of one on the right of way with his team, it was proper to refuse to instruct that no duty was owed him until he was discovered. Southern R. Co. v. Hill, 125 Ga. 354, 54 S. E. 113. Where a licensee on the right of way was injured by a brake shoe flying from a passing train, the railroad company was guilty of no negligence. Carr v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 195 Mo. 214, 92 S. W. 874. Evidence insufficient to show negligence on the part of a railroad where a boy was injured while walking near the track of a railroad company temporarily laid in the street. Keller v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 214 Pa. 82, 63 A. 413.

64. Where it is the custom to throw a bundle of newspapers from a moving train, which fact is known to the railway company, it is liable where the track runs along the side of a highway and one on the opposite side of such way is struck by the bundle. Clifford v. New York Cent. etc., R. Co., 111 App. Div. 809, 97 N. Y. S. 954. Where a fireman knew of the presence of a person at a crossing, his act of recklessly and negligently throwing a shovel of burning cinders on her from the passing train renders the company liable irrespective of whether she stood at or near the crossing as alleged. Louisville N. R. Co. v. Eaden, 29 Ky. L. R. 365, 93 S. W. 7. A complaint that while a person was lawfully standing near a private crossing, a fireman on a passing train negligently and recklessly threw a shovefull of burning cinders, embers, and ashes, into her face, is good against general demurrer and a motion in arrest of judgment, where it is also alleged that the fireman knew of her presence at the crossing. Id.

65. Where one sitting on a platform beside the track was injured by being struck by a car, evidence held to show contributory negligence. Burde v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 509. One standing on the right of way near the track 30 feet above the crossing, who is struck by an engine moving backwards, cannot recover. Bradley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 818. Where one whose duty it was to stand near a switch was killed by a caboose running loose and colliding with an engine near the switch, and he had no notice of the approach of the caboose until too late to get out of the way, the question of contributory negligence was held for the jury. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Bovard, 223 Ill. 176, 79 N. E. 128.

66. A boy who is standing in the street where he is in no danger of being struck by a passing train is not guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery where he is struck by a piece of ice kicked off the caboose by a brakeman. Willis v. Maysville, etc., R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 178, 92 S. W. 604. Where a trespasser was struck by an article thrown from a passing train, the jury could not disregard testimony of persons who threw it that they did not see him. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Bryant [Ark.] 99 S. W. 693.

67. Licensee standing at what would ordinarily be safe distance from track held not guilty of contributory negligence in not observing that step of approaching car was so bent as to unduly project. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor [Kan.] 85 P. 528.

68. Where one was injured while attempting to rescue a passenger from a dangerous position near the track, question of negligence in failing to discover that the passenger was in danger, held for the jury. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Harrison [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 124.

69. See 6 C. L. 1215.

or trestle is a trespasser [70] to whom no look out duty is owed,[71] and where a sign warning against trespassing is kept at each end of a bridge, one who goes upon it is none the less a trespasser because others trespassed.[72]

Persons near crossings. Persons crossing tracks away from established crossings.[73]—A railroad owes a duty to give warning of approaching trains at a point where the public is accustomed to cross and the company has recognized the right to do so,[74] and to take other precautions for their safety if necessary in the exercise of reasonable care,[75] such persons not being deemed trespassers.[76] But if there is no open crossing and the company has not actually nor impliedly recognized the right of the public to cross, no such duty is owed.[77] One using a permissive crossing is bound to use due care under all the circumstances,[78] but negligence of a

70. One who goes upon a bridge in a switch yard, there being a warning against trespassers, is a trespasser, the yard not being within city limits and the bridge not being at a crossing. Prince v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 293. No rights are acquired by habitually walking on a railroad bridge not adapted to the use of pedestrians and which, though within city limits, is no part of nor near any street. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Woolfork [Ky.] 99 S. W. 294.

71. All the law requires is that after his peril is discovered reasonable diligence be used to prevent injury to him. Beiser v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 249, 92 S. W. 928. This is so, though the bridge is within city limits, where it is between 25 and 30 feet above street grade. Id.

72. Beiser v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 249, 92 S. W. 928.

73. See 6 C. L. 1215.

74. Where it had been customary to place cars so as to leave an opening, warning should be given before they were pushed together. Sites v. Knott, 197 Mo. 684, 96 S. W. 206. It is negligence for a railroad company to run trains at a rapid rate of speed, without headlight or other signal being given, over a part of the track much used for crossing and by pedestrians, and if failure to give such warning or use care is the proximate cause of an injury, the company is liable. Heavener v. North Carolina R. Co., 141 N. C. 245, 53 S. E. 513. A railroad must use ordinary care to protect persons who are crossing at a place where the general public has been long accustomed to cross with the tacit consent of the company. Frye v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 566. The right of the public to cross at a particular point and the assent of the company thereto may be established by circumstantial evidence. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Adams [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 58, 98 S. W. 222.

75. Whether a railroad company was negligent in failing to block a frog lying in a path used by the public generally held a question of fact. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Simons [Ind.] 79 N. E. 911. Where one was struck near a crossing, evidence that the view from the right of way to the highway was obstructed is not admissible because liable to lead the jury to believe that extra precautions on the part of the railroad company were required and that failure to observe them was negligence. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. O'Donnell [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 505, 92 S. W. 409. An engineer seeing a pedestrian approaching a recognized crossing may presume that he will stop before placing himself in a perilous position, where it does not appear that such pedestrian is unmindful of approaching danger, and until the engineer has reason to believe that he will not stop, he is not required to use means to prevent injury to him Sites v. Knott, 197 Mo. 684, 96 S. W. 206. Where one walking along the track at a place used by pedestrians was killed, evidence held insufficient to show that the railroad company was negligent. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Farrow's Adm'x [Va.] 55 S. E. 569.

76. One is on the track by invitation or license where the track is generally used by pedestrians with the knowledge, consent, or acquiescence of the company. International, etc., R. Co. v. Ploeger [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 474, 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 183, 93 S. W. 226. One crossing track at station platform designed primarily for passengers, but which the public was accustomed to use as a crossing, held not a trespasser. Metzler v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 180. One on a path on the track which has been commonly used by pedestrians for 10 years with the permission of the railroad company is not a trespasser. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Snowden [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 865. Mere acquiescence in persons crossing the tracks away from an established crossing does not confer upon them a right to do so, and the company is not bound to provide safeguards for their safety. McLain v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 121 Ill. App. 614.

77. Sites v. Knott, 197 Mo. 684, 96 S. W. 206. Evidence insufficient to show that the place where a pedestrian was struck was a regularly used crossing and that the company had recognized a right in the public to cross at such point. Id. Evidence sufficient to show that the railroad company had no notice that the general public were accustomed to cross the track at a particular point. Frye v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 566. Failure to give crossing signals is not negligence as to a trespasser injured near the crossing. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Nipp's Adm'x [Ky.] 100 S. W. 246. Where an accident occurred between two crossings in a city, but not closer than 250 yards from either, failure to comply with the law as to keeping trains under control and ringing the bell at public crossings, may be considered as a circumstance of negligence in connection with other facts in the case. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Parker [Ga.] 56 S. E. 616.

78. If from the evidence two views of the conduct may fairly be entertained, it is a question for the jury whether one struck by an engine on the track is guilty of con-pedestrian does not preclude recovery where operatives of the train could have seen his perilous position in time to have avoided injury by the exercise of ordinary care.[79]

Persons in switch yards.[80]—Where the general public have for a long period with the acquiescence of the company been using railroad yards as a thoroughfare, due care must be taken to avoid injury to persons whose presence there is to be anticipated,[81] and in some states a statutory duty is imposed.[82] The pedestrian is under a correlative duty of exercising due care for his own safety.[83]

Persons stealing rides.[84]—A person stealing a ride is a trespasser[85] and his status is not changed by an unauthorized invitation to ride[86] or a collusive agreement with the conductor,[87] and no duty is owed him except to refrain from willfully injurtributory negligence. Mackowik v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 196 Mo. 550, 94 S. W. 256. Where one was injured at a permissive crossing, evidence held to require a verdict for the railroad company. Hoffman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 331. One of mature judgment, of good sight and hearing, who knew of the frequent passage of trains, who steps onto the track in front of an engine which he sees but did not stop to ascertain whether it was standing or moving, was guilty of contributory negligence, barring recovery, though the engine was running at a prohibited speed and no signals were given. Mackowik v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 196 Mo. 550, 94 S. W. 256. There is no presumption that one relied on a speed ordinance when going upon the track, though he has a right to presume that it would be obeyed where he was present and testified at the trial, but did not testify that he relied on observance of the ordinance. Id. Where some witnesses testify positively that signals were given and others who were in a position to hear them if they had been given testify that they did not hear them, the question is for the jury. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Nipp's Adm'x [Ky.] 100 S. W. 246.

79. Sites v. Knott, 197 Mo. 684, 96 S. W. 206.

80. See 6 C. L. 1216.

81. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Campbell, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 569. It is negligence to back a train into a railroad yard where persons are lawfully moving about without warning and without any lookout on the rear of the train. Ray v. Aberdeen & R. R. Co., 141 N. C. 84, 53 S. E. 622. Backing a train at the rate of six miles an hour in a freight yard on a clear track is not negligence when a licensee was injured by striking a plank on the track before the train could be stopped. Dacey v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 191 Mass. 44, 77 N. E. 523. Where a licensee was injured in a railroad yard, evidence held to show that proper lookout was kept from the engine which caused the injury. Id. Where one was injured while standing between two cars in a railroad yard, the mere fact that one of the operatives of the train saw him crossing the tract and standing near the cars was insufficient to charge the company with notice that he was in a place of danger. Hocker v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 842, 96 S. W. 526. Where one lawfully on railroad premises was negligent in being so near the track as to be in a dangerous position, yet, if the railroad could by exercising proper care have discovered his peril in time to avoid injury to him but failed to do so, it is liable. Ray v. Aberdeen & R. Co., 141 N. C. 84, 53 S. E. 622.

82. Acts 1891, p. 213, requiring train operatives to keep a constant lookout for persons and property applies to trains running in yards. Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. McQueeney [Ark.] 92 S. W. 1120.

83. That a railway company permits the public to use its yards as a common passageway, and thereby obligates itself to use due care to avoid injuring them, does not relieve one so using the yard from the duty of exercising ordinary care for his own safety. Rich v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 79. Where a man 39 years old, in full possession of all his senses, undertook to cross a railroad yard where switching was constantly carried on, evidence held to conclusively show that he was guilty of contributory negligence. Id. A boy 17 years of age who in crossing a switch yard was injured by cars making a flying switch, held guilty of contributory negligence, where he went onto a track without looking, after seeing the train about to make the flying switch on another track. Cranbuck v. Delaware, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 1031. A boy 17 years of age who apprehends the danger in a railroad yard and recognizes his duty to safeguard himself in crossing it is guilty of contributory negligence if he fails to perform his duty. Id.

84. See 6 C. L. 1216.

85. One intending to take a train but who boarded it while in motion and was required to ride on the steps because the vestibule doors were locked is a trespasser. Graham v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 107 N. W. 595.

86. Where a 15 year old colored country boy ignorant of the manner of operating trains gets onto a freight train at the direction of a brakeman and without right, he is a trespasser. Folley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 16 Okl. 32, 84 P. 1090. One who on the invitation of a brakeman rides on a freight train in the yards is a trespasser and cannot recover where he is injured because of the sudden starting of the train. Skirvin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 100 S. W. 308.

87. Where a freight conductor collusively agrees to carry a person on the train without payment of fare, the company is not liable where the conductor forces him to leave the train while it is in motion. Graham v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 759, 93 S. W. 104. Where a person was permitted to ride on a freight train by paying a nominal sum to ing him,[88] but if he is willfully injured he may recover,[89] and the rule as to punitive damages applies.[90] The rules applicable to adults in this respect apply to children,[91] unless by reason of circumstances their presence on the train is to be anticipated.[92] the conductor for his one use, though he testified that he did not know of the rule of the company to the contrary, held to show that he knew that the conductor had no authority to permit him to ride as a passenger. Id.

88. Whether such duty was observed in expelling such person from a train is a question of fact when the material facts are disputed. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Gordon [C. C. A.] 143 F. 95. Where after operatives of a train ascertained the perilous position of a trespasser they did not use emergency brakes, which was dangerous to passengers, but took steps to admit him to the car, failure to use emergency brakes was not negligence. Graham v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 107 N. W. 595. Where a trespasser on a train was struck by a portion of a viaduct structure, evidence sufficient to show that operatives of the train had no notice of his perilous position. Id. Where a trespasser is injured while being ejected from a car, he has the burden to prove wilful negligence on the part of the railroad company. Miller v. Detroit United R., 144 Mich. 1, 13 Det. Leg. N. 140, 107 N. W. 714. The only duty owed a trespasser is to refrain from willfully injuring him, and where one attempted to board a train at the invitation of the brakeman, and where it was impossible to stop the train after his danger was discovered, the company was not liable. Skirvin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 100 S. W. 308. Where one not an employe is riding on an engine and jumps off immediately in front of a moving car, the railroad is not liable if the person in charge of the car discovered his peril too late to avoid injury to him. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Hunt [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 968. Where one riding on a freight train by invitation of the conductor was injured, and there was no proof of willful negligence or wanton injury, he could not recover. Vassor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 68, 54 S. E. 849. Where one riding on a locomotive jumped off without looking or listening and stepped upon another track immediately in front of a moving car, he was guilty of contributory negligence. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Hunt [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 968.

89. A railroad company is liable where a conductor willfully ejects a trespasser from a moving train in a dangerous place, or compelled him to jump from the train by threats or demonstrations of violence which would have been yielded to by a reasonable prudent man. Toledo, etc., R. Co., v. Gordon [C. C. A.] 143 F. 95. Where a person stealing a ride was injured and testified that he was kicked off the top of moving cars and the train crew testified that he was not kicked or pushed off and that they did not know he was on the train, the question was for the jury. Paruio v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 145 F. 664. It is willful and wanton negligence to expel a trespasser from a rapidly moving train by threats of violence and show of force. Foiley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 16 Okl. 32, 84 P. 1090. A railroad company is liable where the condutor of a freight train in removing a trespasser therefrom inflicts wiiiful or wanton injury upon him. Id. Where a trespasser was forcibly ejected from a rapidly moving train by a brakeman, and in falling struck a post and was thrown under the train, the wrongful act of the brakeman was the proximate cause of the injury. Hayes v. Southern R. Co., 141 N. C. 195, 53 S. E. 847. A freight brakeman has authority to eject trespassers from a train and the company is liable if he does so in a violent and unlawful manner. Id. A trespasser on a train attempting to perpetrate a fraud on the road by beating his way with connivance of a brakeman may recover for injuries sustained by violence of such brakeman in forcibly ejecting him. Id. In an action for injuries sustained by a trespasser while being ejected from a train, it was not error to submit the issues; was he injured by the negligence of the defendant, and was he injured negligently and wantonly as alleged. Id. Liable where brakeman ejects a trespasser from a moving train. Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Moran, 117 Ill. App. 42.

90. Punitive damages may be recovered where a trespasser is wantonly ejected from a rapidly moving train. Hayes v. Southern R. Co., 141 N. C. 195, 53 S. E. 847. Such damages may be recovered only where the act was accompanied by malice, recklessness, and wantonness. Id. The general law of punitive damages applies to a brakeman ejecting a trespasser as well as to the conductor. Id. A railroad company is not liable in punitive damages where a conductor wrongfully ejects a trespasser from a moving train in a dangerous place where it neither authorized nor ratified the act. The fact that the conductor was not discharged does not show ratification. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Gordon [C. C. A.] 143 F. 95.

91. Where a boy was injured, evidence that previous to the accident he had been in the habit of riding on cars was not admissible where it did not appear that he attempted to jump onto the train at the time he was injured. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Sparks [Ark.] 99 S. W. 73. Where a boy playing on a car was injured, evidence sufficient to show that his presence was not known to the engineer, though there was another boy playing nearby whom the engineer did see. Elliott v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 233. Where a boy was injured while alighting from an engine, evidence held to show that employes on the train had notice of his peril in time to avoid the injury. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Gibson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 153, 93 S. W. 469.

92. Where a child was in the habit of playing on cars, and was on when the train started and fell between cars, a wanton disregard for his safety is not shown by the fact that a brakeman who knew he was on did not take steps to have him get off before signalling the train to start. Anternoitz v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N.

Persons using hand cars or railroad tricycles [93] are entitled to the exercise of due care on the part of the railroad company.[94]

(§ 11) F. Accidents to trains.[95]

(§ 11) G. Accidents at crossings. 1. Care required on the part of the company. General rules.[96]—Travelers on the highway and railroads have reciprocal right at crossings [97] and failure of either to observe the rights of the other constitutes negligence [98] or contributory negligence.[99] Whether each has observed the required duties is often a question of fact [1] dependent on the circumstances

E. 789. Where for two or three years a small boy had been in the habit of playing in railroad yards and riding on trains there to the knowledge of the employes of the company it was their duty to use reasonable care to avoid injury, though they had attempted to stop the custom. Davis v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 825, 92 S. W. 831. Whether a boy between 8 and 9 years of age, fairly intelligent, was of sufficient discretion to appreciate the danger of riding on freight cars in a railroad yard and guilty of contributory negligence in jumping from a train, held for the jury. Id. Where a boy was injured while riding on a freight car in the yards, evidence as to the negligence of the company in failing to use ordinary care to prevent him from getting on the train and in failing to discover his position and avoid injuring him, held for the jury. Id.

93. See 6 C. L. 1216.

94. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where one riding a railroad velocipede was killed. Hurdle v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Kan.] 85 P. 287. Where an engineer testified that he could distinguish a man on a velocipede only at a distance of 750 yards, it was competent to show by experiments, that he could be seen at a distance of 1000 yards. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Ramsey [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 745, 97 S. W. 1067.

95, 96. See 6 C. L. 1217.

97. Instructions as to respective duties of train operatives and persons at a crossing approved. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Taylor, 125 Ga. 454, 54 S. E. 622. Where a railroad company for many years has permitted the public to cross its tracks at a certain point, not a public crossing, it owes the duty of reasonable care to those using such crossing. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Connolly [Neb.] 109 N. W. 368. Whether such care has been exercised is ordinarily a question of fact. Id. In order to recover for negligence in failing to give signals, it must have been the proximate cause of the injury. Elgin, etc., R. Co. v. Hoadley, 122 Ill. App. 165.

98. Evidence held to show negligence where a child was struck at a crossing and dragged fifteen feet before any attempt was made to stop the train, where the engineer was blind in one eye and the fireman deaf. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Nesbit [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 825. Where emergency brakes were not applied until a child struck at a crossing was dragged for 5 feet, such fact was admissible to show that she was not seen. Id. Evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff in an action for injuries at a crossing. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Evans [Ark.] 96 S. W. 616; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Taylor, 125 Ga. 454, 54 S. E. 622; Ritter v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 128 Wis. 276, 106 N. W. 1103 Evidence sufficient to sustain a judgment for a boy 12 years old who was injured at a crossing. Byron v. Central R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 328. The fact that an engineer was keeping a lookout on one side when an accident occurred was not sufficient to relieve the company from the charge of negligence where because of a curve a lookout should have been kept on the other side to protect persons passing over a crossing. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Tomlinson [Ark.] 94 S. W. 613. Where one who attempted at the permission of a brakeman on watch to pass between portions of a train cut in two at a crossing, and in an endeavor to escape when the train moved tripped on a stone and was injured, it was proper to refuse to charge that if such accident could not have been anticipated by the company there could be no recovery. Boyce v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 120 Mo. App. 118, 96 S. W. 670. In an action for injuries sustained in a collision between a train and a street car, it is admissible to show that the railroad employes violated rules for the management of trains at crossings. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Andrews [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 871. But it is not admissible to prove that after the accident the street car company adopted a rule requiring conductors to go to the crossing in advance of their car. Id.

99. See post, § 11 G. 1.

1. In an action for injuries at a crossing, evidence as to negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury. Williams v. Southern R. Co., 126 Ga. 710, 55 S. E. 948; Massey's Adm'x v. Southern R. Co. [Va.] 56 S. E. 275; Courtney v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 111 N. W. 399; Illinois Southern R. Co. v. Hamill, 226 Ill. 88, 80 N. E. 745. Where a crossing was at an acute angle and a driver approaching on a dark night had his wheel caught in the planking between the rails and while unloading so his team could pull out heard a train approaching and ran down the track and swung his lantern but the train struck his wagon and it was disputed whether the train stopped with reasonable promptness, the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were of fact. Hummer v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [N. J. Law] 65 A. 126. Whether running a locomotive at a given rate of speed across a street in a populous locality is negligence is a question for the jury under the evidence as to the circumstances surrounding the case, and so also the question of proper care in the matter of looking and listening on the part of one crossing a railway track at grade. Wheeling & Lake Erie Railway v. Parker, 9 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 29.

Question of negligence held for the jury in a crossing accident. Hartman v. Chicago, of the particular case.[2] But it is negligence as a matter of law to disregard statutory regulations,[3] nor does observance of such regulations absolve the company if reasonable care required more.[4] Contributory negligence of a traveler will not bar recovery by him if the injury could have been avoided by the railroad company after his perilous position was discovered.[5] Liability for negligence at etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 10 In an action for injuries at a crossing it was held for the jury whether the engineer saw the team on the crossing in time to have stopped the train or whether the team was standing near the crossing apparently under control and continued in that position until it was too late to stop the train. Baker v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 553. On conflicting evidence as to whether statutory signals were given and whether the headlight on the engine was burning, the question of negligence is for the jury. Line v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 143 Mich. 163, 12 Det. Leg. N. 929, 106 N. W. 719. The question of negligence on the part of a railroad company is for the jury where one was killed at a crossing and no one witnessed the accident. Kreamer v. Perkiomen R. Co., 214 Pa. 219, 63 A. 597. Question of negligence of the railroad held for the jury where one injured at a crossing stopped to look and listen 80 feet from the crossing where people usually stopped, and it appeared that the safety gates were raised. Messinger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 682. In the absence of a statute declaring it negligence to fail to keep a lookout for persons crossing or about to cross, the question whether failure to do so is negligence is for the jury. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Elledge [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 545, 93 S. W. 499. In an action for injuries at a crossing, whether the railroad was negligent and whether the negligence was the proximate cause of the injury were questions for the jury, and it was proper to refuse requests for instructions requiring proof of willful misconduct. Southern R. Co. v. Reynolds, 126 Ga. 657, 55 S. E. 1039. Where one was killed at a crossing, evidence held insufficient to show that the railroad company was negligent. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Clarkson [C. C. A.] 147 F. 397. Where one approached a crossing without paying any attention to his surroundings, and on seeing him the engineer blew three quick blasts of the whistle and then set the air brakes, when the traveler paid no heed to the whistle, held the engineer was not gulity of gross negligence. Rowe v. Southern California R. Co. [Cal. App.] 87 P. 220. Intestate's contributory negligence and not negligence of the engineer in failing to stop the train was the proximate cause of the injury. Id. Where one was killed at a crossing, evidence held insufficient to go to the jury on the question whether the train could have been stopped in time to avoid the accident after the peril of the traveler was discovered. Walker v. Wabash R. Co., 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83.

It is not negligence to construct a depot and other buildings where they obstruct a view of a crossing. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lucas' Adm'r [Ky.] 98 S. W. 308. Where trains were run at from 50 to 60 miles an hour over a crossing where 100 to 125 teams passed daily, and the whistle was sounded one-fourth of a mile off and the bell rung from that time until the train passed the crossing evidence held insufficient to show a willful injury on the part of the railroad company where a team was struck at such crossing. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Ferrell [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 988.

2. In running a train during a storm which obscures the view and deadens sound, the greatest caution must be observed and a higher degree of care taken than while running the train in ordinary weather. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ueltschi's Ex'rs, 29 Ky. L. R. 1136, 97 S. W. 14. If a railroad company knows that a crossing is unusually dangerous and that statutory signals were not sufficient to give warning, it is its duty to use such other means as are necessary to prevent accidents. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lucas' Adm'r [Ky.] 98 S. W. 308. It is incompetent to admit testimony that certain buildings should have been erected on the opposite side of the track so that they would not obstruct the company's view of a crossing. Id. That a crossing was in a dangerous condition was held insufficient to show negligence, in the absence of evidence that such dangerous condition contributed to the injury. Porter v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 880. Absence of a flagman may be a circumstance tending to show negligence, though not alleged. Aurora, Elgin & C. R. Co. v. Gary, 123 Ill. App. 163.

3. Civ. Code S. C. 1902, §§ 2132, 2139, prescribing the duties and liabilities of railroads at crossings, appiles only where an injury occurred at a crossing and by reason of a collision with a frain. Hasting v. Southern R. Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 260. Complaint in an action based on Shannon's Code, § 1574, requiring lookout to be kept for objects on the track and signals given and brakes shut down if danger of collision appeared, held to state a cause of action. Chesapeake & N. R. Co. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368. It is negligence to approach a street crossing in the daytime in a dense fog at a rapid rate of speed without giving signals. Wabash R. Co. v. Barrett, 117 Ill. App. 315. Rev. St. 1892, § 2264, requiring signboards at crossings, does not apply to streets of an incorporated city, nor does the speed limit therein provided apply to any streets except those traveled streets of a city upon or through which a track is located. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 43 So. 235.

4. The statutory requirement as to signals at a crossing is not exclusive, but failure to use ordinary care in the matter of warning signals renders the company liable, as does also failure on the part of the engineer and fireman to use ordinary care in keeping a lookout. Wheeling & Lake Erie Railway v. Parker, 9 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 29. Where a complaint for injuries at a crossing states a good cause of action in other respects, it is not demurrable because the speed ordinance alleged to have been violated is unconstitutional. Southern R. Co. v. Stockdon [Va.] 56 S. E. 713.

5. While one was negligent in attempt-a crossing cannot be avoided by one company turning over the operation of its trains to another.[6] No duty is owed a trespasser except to refrain from willfully injuring him.[7]

Duty to signal.[8]—As a general rule the exercise of ordinary care requires warning signals be given by an approaching train,[9] and, where signals are required by statute failure to give them[10] in the manner prescribed is negligence per se.[11]

ing to cross at a sharp curve without stopping to look or listen, the company is liable where it appears that the engineer saw him in time to have avoided the accident by blowing the whistle or applying the brakes. Ross v. Sibley, etc., R. Co., 116 La. 789, 41 So. 93. Held error to refuse an instruction as to the "last clear chance" in an action for injuries at a crossing when a team was seen by the engineer steanding near the track. Baker v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 553. Whether operatives of a train exercised proper care after discovery of the perilous position of one about to cross the track held for the jury. Griffie v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 750. Where train operatives saw one approaching a crossing, and gave signals and shut off steam, they could presume that he would not attempt to cross, and were not negligent in failing to stop the train. Porter v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 880. Negligence of one injured at a crossing will not preclude recovery if the operatives of the train failed to use all means at hand to avert the accident after the danger to him was discovered. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Murray [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 144.

6. Harbert v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co., 74 S. C. 13, 53 S. E. 1001.

7. Employes of a railroad company are required only to refrain from willifluly injuring trespassers, or mere licensees on a crossing. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. McCandish [Ind.] 79 N. E. 903.

8. See 6 C. L. 1217.

9. Though a railroad is under no statutory duty to sound its whistles at private crossings, yet a common-law duty requires it to take notice of the location of such crossing, and if safety of persons using the crossing requires the giving of danger signals, failure to do so is negligence. Hartman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 10. Whether failure to give signals and whether they were especially needful at a particular crossing, held for the jury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lucas' Adm'r [Ky.] 98 S. W. 308. Instruction that if the place where one injured attempted to crawl under the drawheads was not a crossing, where the presence of persons should have been anticipated, and the train was started without giving signals the railroad was liable, held erroneous as imposing a liability, even if there was no reason to anticipate the presence of persons. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Garrett [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 162. As Shannon's Code, § 1574, relative to the duty to keep lookout and give signals, is declaratory of the common law so far as it goes, a complaint framed under the statute but also alleging further common-law negligence will be treated as wholly under the common law. Chesapeake & N. R. Co. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368. It is negligence to run an engine over a public crossing without giving signals. Elgin, etc., R. Co. v. Hoadley, 122 Ill. App. 165.

10. Failure to give statutory signals is negligence. Southern R. Co. v. Reynolds, 126 Ga. 657, 55 S. E. 1039. That statutory signals were not given is sufficient evidence of negligence. Corbs v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 144 Mich. 73, 13 Det. Leg. N. 232, 107 N. W. 892. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1102, requiring signals to be given 80 rods from a crossing, it may be shown in rebuttal of evidence that proper signals were given, that the whistling post was 160 and not 80 rods from the crossing. Walker v. Wabash R. Co., 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83. A prima facie case is established by proof of injury and failure to prove statutory signals. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 509. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 786, requiring the giving of signals 50 rods from a crossing, it is proper to charge that it is negligence to fail to give notice of approach of a train, and it is not error to refuse to modify such charge by one that it is the duty of a traveler to stop, look, and listen. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Sander's Adm'r, 29 Ky. L. R. 212, 92 S. W. 937. Where a whistling post was outside city limits, failure to give statutory signals is not excused because the company was not required to give them within city limits, though the crossing was within such limits. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 509. Under U. S. 3987, and 3989, as amended by Acts 1902, p. 62, No. 68, providing for an investigation of the cause of a crossing accident by commissioners, and that they may order a change in the manner of operation where commissioners gave a railroad notice of an investigation but did not give notice that a change in the manner of operation would be ordered, an order thereafter made was without jurisdiction and void. In re Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 64 A. 233. Negligence for jury where train aproached crossing of city street at thirty miles per hour and gave no signal. Metzler v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 180. Shannon's Code, § 1574, requiring signals to be given intermittently from a point outside a city until a depot is reached, is not declaratory of the common law, and evidence of noncompliance is admissible in a complaint under the statue but not under one declaring on common-law liability. Chesapeake & N. R. Co. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368. Under Code 1902, § 2139, punitive damages may be awarded for willful or reckless failure to give crossing signals, if it is alleged that such failure was reckless. Cole v. Blue Ridge R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 126.

11. Evidence sufficient to show that statutory signals as required by Ky. St. 1903, § 786, were not given, and that a recovery was authorized in the absence of contributory negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ueltschi's Ex'rs, 29 Ky. L. R. 1136, 97 S. W. 14. Evidence sufficient to show that a pedes-

Statutes requiring signals apply to all public crossings [12] bu tnot to private ones,[13] and there is no absolute duty to signal as a train approaches an overhead crossing.[14] It is said to be doubtful whether a statute respecting the giving of audible signals applies to a train running backward.[15] If failure to give signals is the proximate cause of the injury, the railroad company is liable,[16] and the failure to give signals is not excused by taking other precautions.[17] On conflicting evidence as to whether or not the statute has been complied with, the question is for the jury.[18] All testimony tending to show whether or not signals were given is admissible.[19]

trian was struck by a train at a crossing. Id. Failure to give signal eighty rods from the crossing and to continue ringing the bell or blowing the whistle until the crossing is passed as required by statute is negligence. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Tomlinson [Ark.] 94 S. W. 613. Ky. St. 1903, § 786, requiring signals to be given continuously from a distance fifty rods from a crossing, applies at all times and under all circumstances, and compliance therewith exempts the company from liability for accidents at crossings, in the absence of circumstances requiring the application of the rule of discovered peril. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ueltschi's Ex'rs, 29 Ky. L. R. 1136, 97 S. W. 14. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 786, requiring signals fifty rods from the crossing and a continuous ringing of bell or blowing of the whistle until the crossing is reached, an instruction requiring notice to be given of the approach of a train by the blowing of a whistle or ringing of a bell did not require the degree of care imposed. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Higgins, 29 Ky. L. R. 89, 92 S. W. 549.

12. Where a railroad obstructs a public crossing and directs travel to a private one, the latter must be treated as a public crossing so far as the giving of statutory signals are concerned. Hartman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 10. Evidence sufficient to show that failure to give such signals was negligence where it had been in the habit of giving them. Id. A public road within the meaning of the blow post law is one which has its origin in prescription, dedication, legislative act, or order of court. Southern R. Co. v. Combs, 124 Ga. 1004, 53 S. E. 508. The words "established pursuant to law" in Civ. Code 1895, § 2220, following "public roads or private ways," limit only the words "private ways," Id. Where a crossing though not a public one had been used by from twenty-five to seventy-five persons daily for twenty-five years, the same care with regard to it should be taken as if it was a public crossing. Davis v. Louisville, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 97 S. W. 1122. Evidence sufficient to show that the crossing was within city limits. Mitchell v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 552. A statute requiring signals at any road or street crossing applies to a road which is not laid out and maintained by the county. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Tomlinson [Ark.] 94 S. W. 613. Statutes requiring signals to be given from a certain distance from a crossing apply to streets in an incorporated city. Elgin, etc., R. Co. v. Hoadley, 122 Ill. App. 165.

13. A railroad is not required to give signals on approaching a private crossing in a sparsely settled community in the country. Hoback's Adm'r v. Louisville, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 241. Where there is no obligation to give signals at private crossings, failure to give the usual signal upon approaching a station about one thousand seven hundred feet from a private crossing is not negligence, though it might have been heard. Annapolis, W. & B. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 65 A. 434.

14. Black v. Bessemer & L. E. R. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 405. Not where a traveler has a clear view of the track for one thousand five hundred feet while approaching. Id.

15. Goodwin v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 134.

16. Where a traveler looked and listened but saw no train but his horse became frightened by the approach of a train without giving signals and ran onto the track, failure to give signals was the proximate cause of the injury. Mitchell v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 552. Where one approaching a crossing was signaled by the watchman to proceed and while on the track was struck by a train approaching without signals at a high rate of speed, the crossing being a much frequented thoroughfare, the negligence of the train operatives was the proximate cause of the injury. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bethea [Miss.] 40 So. 813. When evidence shows that an accident resulted from blowing the whistle while on a crossing, it was error to submit failure to give statutory signals on approaching a crossing as a ground of negligence. Paris, etc., R. Co. v. Calvin [Tex. Civ. App.] 98 S. W. 222.

17. Though the lowering of crossing gates is notice that it is dangerous to cross, it does not excuse failure to give signals required by Civ. Code, §§ 2132, 2139, at least thirty seconds before the train is moved. Weaver v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 657.

18. On positive testimony that signals were given and also testimony by witnesses who were where they should have heard the signals if given that they did not hear them, the question is for the jury. Detroit Southern R. Co. v. Lambert [C. C. A.] 150 F. 555. On positive testimony that statutory signals were not given and like testimony that they were, the question should be submitted to the jury. Goodwin v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 134. Whether statutory signals were given held a question for the jury. Roedler v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 88. On conflicting evidence as to whether statutory signals were given, the question is for the jury. Fitzhugh v. Boston & M. R. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 792. Held a question for the jury whether a speed ordinance was violated, whether signals were given, and whether all means at hand were used to stop the train after the danger to one at a crossing was discovered. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Murray [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 144.

Evidence sufficient to show that proper signals were given on approaching a cross-

Speed.[20]—A city may regulate speed of trains within its sparsely settled limits where there are public crossings and no unreasonable extent of territory is included.[21] In the absence of statute or ordinance,[22] whether or not a given rate of speed is negligence depends on the circumstances of each particular case.[23] Violation of an ordinance regulating speed is not negligence per se but it is a circumstance to be considered.[24] The running of a train over a crossing at a rate of speed in excess of that allowed by ordinance is not wanton or willful misconduct unless persons in charge of the train were conscious that injury would probably exist.[25] Whether or not a speed ordinance has been violated is a question of fact on doubtful or conflicting evidence of speed.[26]

ing. Columbia & P. D. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 65 A. 625. Evidence insufficient to show that statutory signals were not given on approaching a crossing. Eissing v. Erie R. Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 856.

19. Testimony of persons who were in a position to hear signals if they had been given that they heard none is some evidence that they were not given. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 509. Where in an action for injuries at a crossing it was alleged that the electric warning bell was out of order and did not give warning and the railroad company introduced evidence showing that it was in order shortly prior to the accident and that it would be impossible for it to have failed to work, the plaintiff was entitled to show that its operation was intermittent, at times sounding for one train and not for the next. Metcalf v. Central Vermont R. Co., 78 Conn. 614, 63 A. 633. The mere fact that a person, who was a mile away from the place where a railroad company was required to commence to ring the locomotive bell, did not hear it at that point nor later while the train was moving away from him, does not show that the bell was not rung, in the absence of proof that it could be heard at such distance. Eissing v. Erie R. Co. [N. J. Law] 63 A. 856. Where a witness heard a bell ringing after the accident but not before, it was no evidence that the bell on the engine with which the collision occurred was not being rung prior to the accident. Id.

20. See 6 C. L. 1218.

21. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Dillard [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 393, 94 S. W. 426.

22. The violation of a speed ordinance is negligence per se whether the railroad company had accepted it or not. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 509. Where a crossing was provided with no wing fences, the track was unfenced within an ordinance limiting speed of trains on an unfenced track. Id. In his charge the court recognized that the statute regulating speed of trains at crossings would not apply to a train started at or near the crossing and submitted the issue of fact as to the distance from the starting point to the crossing. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Harper, 124 Ga. 836, 53 S. E. 391. An ordinance prohibiting trains to run at higher than a prescribed rate of speed, and at night without a headlight, applies, whether at public or permissive crossings, where people habitually pass with the acquiescence of the company. Texarkana, etc., R. Co. v. Frugia [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 724, 95 S. W. 563. The substance of a complaint that one was killed at a certain point in a city by a train running at a prohibited rate of speed is that he was killed at a point within city limits used by the public for crossing, and failure to show that he was killed at the point alleged is immaterial. Id. Evidence sufficient to show that violation of a speed ordinance was the proximate cause of an injury. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 509. A complaint stating a good cause of action is not demurrable because not alleging that the violation of a speed ordinance, if valid, was the proximate cause of the injury. Southern R. Co. v. Stockdon [Va.] 56 S. E. 713.

23. No rate of speed in the open country is negligence as to persons at a crossing, but it may become a factor when taken in connection with other circumstances in determining whether due care has been exercised. Hartman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 10. Where evidence in an action growing out of a crossing accident tended to show that the morning was dark, that statutory signals were not given, and that the train was going at an unusual rate of speed, a charge that the rate of speed was not of itself negligence, but was introduced simply on the question of contributory negligence, was proper. Line v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 143 Mich. 163, 12 Det. Leg. N. 929, 106 N. W. 719. Evidence as to speed of a train held admissible on the question as to whether one injured at a crossing did what a prudent man would do under the circumstances where testimony showed that the train suddenly appeared out of the darkness without giving statutory signals and that plaintiff had looked and listened when thirty feet from the crossing. Id. There is no rule of law that it is not negligence to run an engine over a crossing within a city at twenty miles per hour if warning is given and the engine is under control, and such diligence is exercised as is necessary to be observed under the ordinary necessities of the company's business. Negligence depends on the circumstances of the case. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 43 So. 235. It is a question of fact whether a given rate of speed is negligence under the circumstances of the case. Wabash R. Co. v. Barrett, 117 Ill. App. 315.

24. Erie R. Co. v. Farrell [C. C. A.] 147 F. 220.

25. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Muscat [Ala.] 41 So. 302. Error in instructing that it is willful misconduct is not cured by an instruction correctly stating the law. Id.

26. Where evidence tended to show excessive speed, the question was properly submitted to the jury. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Murray [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 144.

Gates.[27]—In some states railroads are required by statute or ordinance to erect and maintain crossing gates.[28] If an injury results from failure to properly operate the gates, the railroad is liable.[29] A railroad company is required only to exercise reasonable care in the construction and maintenance of crossing gates.[30]

Flagmen.[31]—The duty to maintain a flagman at a crossing cannot be inferred alone from the fact that trains are run over the crossing at a high rate of speed,[32] but depends on the circumstance of each case,[33] but whether or not a flagman is required by law if a railroad assumes to maintain one, it is bound to see that he performs his duty.[34] Where a railroad man killed at a crossing knew that switching was habitually carried on over the crossing and was going on at the time, and that no flagman was kept at that place, the company was not negligent in failing to have a flagman at the crossing to warn pedestrians.[35] If a watchman fails to properly tend gates or give warning, the railroad is liable.[36]

Switching and backing trains.[37]—It is negligence to kick cars over a much used crossing.[38] The mere fact that the approach of a freight train backward is accom-

Speed of train beyond city limits held admissible as bearing on violation of speed ordinance. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 509. Testimony as to the speed of a train between different stations near the place where the accident occurred is admissible as tending to show that it was greater at that place than the engineer testified it was. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Murray [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 144. Under a city charter providing that printed ordinances should be admissible held that ordinances requiring signals and limiting speed of trains were admissible, being read from a book entitled "Charter and Ordinances of the city of," etc. Texarkana, etc., R. Co. v. Frugia [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 724, 95 S. W. 563. Where a speed ordinance was alleged to have been violated, evidence that the city did not exercise jurisdiction over a gas plant near the place of accident was not admissible as tending to show that the place of the accident was not within the city. Id. In an action for injuries at a town crossing where it appears that the railroad company had notice of a speed ordinance, such ordinance was admissible, though only open for inspection to voters of the town. Southern R. Co. v. Stockdon [Va.] 56 S. E. 713.

27. See 6 C. L. 1219.

28. Where a railroad company recognized the validity of an ordinance requiring maintenance of crossing gates, by partially complying with it by operating gates during the daytime, it thereby waives notice to erect gates, after the enactment of the ordinance, under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 114, § 99. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Averill, 224 Ill. 516, 79 N. E. 654.

29. Where a passenger on a street car was injured by a collision at a crossing, the question whether failure to lower gates was negligence held for the jury, where the street car conductor gave an erroneous signal to the motorman after going forward to the crossing. Id. Where a street car was struck at a crossing and the motorman killed, and it appeared that at the time of the accident the safety gates were raised, the railroad company was entitled to an instruction calling attention to a rule of the street car company that the position of safety gates should not be relied upon. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 64 A. 304. Where a gateman closed the gate on one side of the track after a street car had passed through and started to lower the one on the other side, but before he could do so a street car going in the opposite direction passed through. The gateman saw a train approaching and raised the opposite gate so that the car could escape, but before it could do so was struck by the train. Held the railroad was not negligent in raising the gate. Renders v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 144 Mich. 387, 13 Det. Leg. N. 314, 108 N. W. 368.

30. Where negligence charged was that the gates were up and that there was no flagman, exclusion of evidence that because of severity of the weather ice had formed on the gates so that they could not be operated and that it was being removed at the time of the accident was reversible error. Recktenwald v. Erie R. Co., 99 N. Y. S. 1094.

31. See 6 C. L. 1219.

32. Latham v. Staten Island R. Co., 150 F. 235.

33. Where a street car passenger was injured at a crossing, an instruction held erroneous as withdrawing from the jury the duty to furnish a watchman at the crossing. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Knowles [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 867.

34. Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. Wright, 120 Ill. App. 218.

35. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Clarkson [C. C. A.] 147 F. 397.

36. The railroad is liable where a crossing watchman fails to tend the gates or give signals if the person injured was not guilty of contributory negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson [Ky.] 100 S. W. 302. It is the duty of a brakeman stationed at a crossing, where a train has been cut in two, to use reasonable care to prevent injury to persons who pass between the cars. Boyce v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 120 Mo. App. 168, 96 S. W. 670. Whether a watchman gave the proper signal was for the jury, though the preponderance of evidence was that he did. Southern R. Co. v. Stockdon [Va.] 56 S. E. 713. It is the duty of a crossing flagman to know of the approach of trains and to give timely warning. Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. Wright, 120 Ill. App. 218. Where a flagman is maintained at a crossing, his presence there and that he will perform his duty may be relied upon. Id.

panied by ringing the bell and sounding the whistle does not show that the company has discharged its full duty,[39] but whether in view of the time, place, and circumstances, further precautions are required, is ordinarily a question of fact.[40]

(§ 11 G) 2. Contributory negligence. General rules.[41]—One approaching a crossing must exercise such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like or similar circumstances,[42] but he may assume that the railroad company will also exercise the degree of care imposed upon it.[43] More caution is required of one crossing an electric railroad in the country than in the city.[44] The question whether a traveler exercised the degree of care required of him is usually one of fact,[45] unless the circumstances show negligence as a matter of law.[46] If the con-

142 N. C. 333, 55 S. E. 257. An instruction that negligence may be inferred from the fact that cars were kicked over a crossing without having a man on the end car, as required by ordinance, held proper. Id. A complaint alleging that a car was kicked over a crossing at a rate of speed of fifteen to twenty-five miles an hour, without warning or signals, where servants in charge of the train had notice that it was probable that people would be crossing, charges willful and wanton negligence. Southern R. Co. v. Haywood [Ala.] 41 So. 949. Where one attempted to cross in front of a flat car being pushed in front of an engine, and the night was so dark that he could not see the car, and a switchman if he had been stationed on the front end of the car could not have seen him, the switchman's failure to station himself with a lantern at the end of the car instead of in the middle of it was not negligence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Clarkson [C. C. A.] 147 F. 397.

39. An inference of negligence may arise in such case where the crossing is over a system of switches, in a populous district, and was used by a great many people at all hours, where there were no lights on the rear of the train, nor anyone there to give warning. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Connolly [Neb.] 109 N. W. 368. Evidence sufficient to show that the proximate cause of the injury was failure to give warning while backing a train over a crossing, and that one injured was not guilty of contributory negligence. Id.

40. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Connolly [Neb.] 109 N. W. 368. That a logging train is backed over a crossing at a high rate of speed without a lookout on the rear car to warn pedestrians is not gross negligence justifying recovery by one killed because of his own contributory negligence. Baker v. Tacoma Eastern R. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 826. Where one was struck by a train moving backward without a lookout and without giving signals, evidence as to whether the injury would have occurred if the signals had been given held for the jury, though the injured person was also negligent. Davis v. Louisville, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 97 S. W. 1122. It is competent to admit testimony that no man was stationed at the rear end of a train backing over a crossing, though such was not required by statute or ordinance. Mulderig v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 655, 94 S. W. 801.

Due care in a child of tender age is such care as its mental and physical capacity fits it to exercise under the circumstances of the case. Southern R. Co. v. Reynolds, 126 Ga. 657, 55 S. E. 1039. Whether a minor above seven years of age was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury. Wabash R. R. Co. v. Jones, 121 Ill. App. 390.

Evidence insufficient to show that one approaching a crossing exercised the degree of care required of him. Fisher v. Central Vt. R. Co., 103 N. Y. S. 513. Evidence held to show contributory negligence where one was killed at a crossing. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Ayers, 119 Ill. App. 108.

43. One approaching a crossing may assume that a speed ordinance will be obeyed whether or not he sees or hears the train, unless his senses inform him that it is not being obeyed. Southern R. Co. v. Stockdon [Va.] 56 S. E. 713.

44. Higher rate of speed is permissible in the country. Phillips v. Washington & R. R. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 422. It is contributory negligence for one to ride a horse across an electric railroad crossing where he could have seen an approaching care in time to avoid injury had he looked. Id.

45. Evidence of contributory negligence held for the jury where one was killed at a crossing. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Baskins [Ark.] 93 S. W. 757; Corbs v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 144 Mich. 73, 13 Det. Leg. N. 232, 107 N. W. 892; Mitchell v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 552; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Vaughn [Ky.] 97 S. W. 774; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lucas' Adm'r [Ky.] 98 S. W. 308; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Wyatt [Ark.] 96 S. W. 376. Questions of contributory negligence held for the jury in a crossing accident on conflicting evidence as to the giving of signals. Wilbur v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 145 Mich. 344, 13 Det. Leg. N. 522, 108 N. W. 713. Whether a pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to see a headlight, held for the jury. Roedler v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 88.

Where a child was killed at a crossing and he was of such age and capacity as to exercise care, whether he did or not was held for the jury. McLarty v. Southern R. Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 297. Whether a child eleven years of age was guilty of contributory negligence at a crossing, held for the jury. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Tomlinson [Ark.] 94 S. W. 613. Question of contributory negligence held for the jury where one went between two parts of a train which had been cut at a crossing. Boyce v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 120 Mo. App. 168, 96 S. W. 670. Where the issue of contributory negligence was for the jury, it was proper to refuse to instruct that if the train could have been seen for three hundred yards plaintiff was conclusively presumed to have seen or heard it. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Evans [Ark.] 96 S. W. 616. Where one driving a team of mules looked for trains at a point thirty feet from the track, and not seeing one, which had not rounded a curve, drove on and the mules came to a sudden stop on the track because of a shout of a brakeman riding on the rear of a train moving backwards and giving no signals. On being started they cleared the track but the tail end of the wagon was struck. Held a question of fact and not of law whether the driver was guilty of contributory negligence. Goodwin v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 134. Evidence of contributory negligence held for the jury where a street car was struck and the motorman killed. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 64 A. 304. A traveler is never wholly absolved from using his faculties to avoid danger, and, in an action growing out of an accident at a grade crossing, a charge to the jury is erroneous which makes the railroad company liable on account of the negligence of the watchman in failing to signal danger, independent of the fact that the decedent and her husband, who was riding with her, depended on the watchman more than on their own faculties to discover whether a train was coming. In such a case the extent to which the decedent and her husband used their senses to discover whether a train was approaching, or the degree of negligence, if any, of which they were guilty, are questions for the jury. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 353. Where the preponderance of evidence was that a watchman warned one approaching the crossing in time to avoid injury, but there was evidence that the warning was given too late and the evidence as to the care exercised by the traveler in approaching was also disputed, the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury. Southern R. Co. v. Stockdon [Va.] 56 S. E. 713. Evidence insufficient to show that one killed at a crossing was free from contributory negligence where there was no flagman at the crossing nor signals given, but another person walking in the opposite direction saw the approaching train. Wright v. Boston, etc., R. Co. [N. H.] 65 A. 687. It is within the power of a municipal corporation to require street car conductors to go forward to the crossing, and also forbidding the motorman to proceed until he is signaled. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Formes [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 872. A traveler approaching a crossing is presumed to have seen or heard what he should have seen or heard by looking and listening. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Wyatt [Ark.] 96 S. W. 376. Evidence sufficient to show that a pedestrian struck at a crossing was free from contributory negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ueltschi's Ex'rs, 29 Ky. L. R. 1136, 97 S. W. 14. Evidence sufficient to show that there was no contributory negligence. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Rosborough [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 869.

Evidence insufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where a pedestrian approaching a crossing looked and listened, saw cars at some distance but could not see that they were moving, and was struck by a train going at the rate of eighteen miles an hour, giving no signals; no crossing watchman. Garran v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 144 Mich. 26, 13 Det. Leg. N. 97, 107 N. W. 284. One is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law by standing close to the track, where he might have been looking out for possible danger and met his death because of unlawful and excessive speed. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 118 Ill. App. 335. Where one familiar with a crossing and the passage of trains was struck by a switch engine bearing a small light only, and there was evidence that no crossing signals were given and that the engine was running at a high rate of speed. Schremms v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 145 Mich. 190, 13 Det. Leg. N. 427, 108 N. W. 698. Where a traveler stopped twenty-five feet from the track, looked and listened, and no train was in sight from one direction for two hundred yards and he drove on watching carefully in the other direction from which he apprehended danger, and did not again look the other way, held he was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where the rear end of his wagon was struck by a train coming from the direction he least expected it. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dillard [Ark.] 94 S. W. 617. Where one was killed at a permissive crossing by a train running within city limits at a prohibited speed, and it appeared that a high wind was blowing, decedent could not be held guilty of contributory negligence as a mater of law, though intoxicated to some extent. Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Frugia [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 724, 95 S. W. 563. Failure to stop, look, and listen, but instead relying upon signals which it is the duty of the railroad to give, is not negligence per se. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Vaughn [Ky.] 97 S. W. 774. It is not contributory negligence to run a traction engine upon a crossing without having a watchman two hundred yards in advance as required by Shannon's Code, §§ 1609-1616. Chesapeake & N. R. Co. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368. Where an injury occurred because of failure to give signals and running of the train at an excessive rate of speed, it was proper to charge that, if the injured party was thrown into a sudden state of fear resulting from excessive speed, he was not guilty of contributory negligence if he adopted what he supposed the best means of escape but made an error of judgment. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. v. McCabe's Adm'x [Ky.] 100 S. W. 219. Evidence insufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law. Fitzhugh v. Boston, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 792. Where passengers riding in a public carriage are about to cross a railroad, it cannot be said as a matter of law that they are negligent if they are not as alert as the driver of the team over which they have no control in looking and listening. It is a question of fact whether they are exercising ordinary care. Wood v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 101 Me. 469, 64 A. 833.

46. Contributory negligence as a matter of law: Where at one hundred yards there was a view of the track for three hundred yards and no train was seen. At the crossing the view was entirely obstructed. Held tributory negligence of one approaching a crossing was the proximate cause of his injury, the railroad company is not liable,[47] unless it violated the "last clear chance" rule.[48]

Acts required of traveler.[49]—The law requires of one about to cross railroad tracks the vigilant exercise of his faculties of sight and hearing at such short distance as will be effectual for his protection.[50] In some states a traveler is required a traveler struck by a train going forty miles an hour when the statutory limit was six, and no statutory signals were given, was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Hopson v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 87 Miss. 789, 40 So. 872. Where one approached a crossing where he had a clear view of the track at twenty-five feet for from two hundred to four hundred and fifty feet, but did not stop and there was no evidence that he looked or listened, and one occupant of the wagon saw the train just as the horses reached the track, the driver was held contributorily negligent as a matter of law. Sanguinette v. Mississippi River, etc., R. Co., 196 Mo. 466. One who on approaching a crossing sees a train but urges his team onto the track in front of it is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Porter v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 880. One who sees an approaching train and attempts to cross ahead of it is guilty of negligence precluding recover. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 509. One who drives rapidly onto a crossing without looking or taking precautions for his safety is negligent, though the gates are open. Koch v. Southern California R. Co., 148 Cal. 677, 84 P. 176. In an action for injuries sustained at a crossing, it was error to exclude testimony to the effect that the team was driven up close to the track in order to get them used to trains, etc. Baker v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 553. Where one stopped one hundred feet from the crossing, where he had a view of the track for eight hundred feet, and just before coming onto the track he could see one thousand four hundred feet, and his horse was struck on the track, a nonsuit was required. Sellers v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 214 Pa. 298, 63 A. 606. Where a train partially blocks a street in such way as to indicate that it is liable to be moved at any minute, it is contributory negligence to attempt to cross back of it where a slight movement would necessarily result in an accident. Chicago Terminal Transfer Co. v. Helbreg, 124 Ill. App. 113. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence in a crossing accident. Recktenwald v. Erie R. Co., 99 N. Y. S. 1094; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Alfred, 123 Ill. App. 477. Evidence held to show contributory negligence at crossing. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Sparks, 122 Ill. App. 400. Where a railroad man of long experience was killed at a crossing over which he knew switching was habitually carried on, and at the time of the accident could have distinctly seen the headlight of the engine had he looked, he is legally charged with having seen it. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Clarkson, 147 F. 397. Where one was killed at a crossing, evidence held to show that he saw the approaching train and took the chance of crossing in front of it. Ellis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 803. Evidence held to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where one was injured at a crossing. Columbia, etc., R. Co. v. State [Md.] 65 A. 625. In an action for injuries at a crossing, evidence held to require a nonsuit. Mankewicz v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [Pa.] 63 A. 604.

47. Contributory negligence is a defense. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson [Ky.] 100 S. W. 302. Instruction as to contributory negligence held not erroneous as directing a finding for the plaintiff if it was determined that his negligence did not contribute to the occurrence. El Paso & N. E. R. Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 170. Contributory negligence in order to preclude recovery must proximately contribute to or cause the injury. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bethea [Miss.] 40 So. 813. Where one was struck at a crossing by a work train moving backward, held that after seeing the cars he was not justified in ignoring the probability that they would move backwards, yet, under the circumstances, the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Baskins [Ark.] 93 S. W. 757. Where one was injured while climbing between cars at a crossing, evidence that others crossed that way is admissible. Weaver v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 657. Negligence of a minor while driving his father's team in approaching a crossing cannot be imputed to a person riding with him as his guest. Baker v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 553. Where contributory negligence concurs with negligence of the trainmen, there can be no recovery. Sims v. St. Louis S. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 572, 92 S. W. 909.

48. The last clear chance rule does not apply where one deliberately drives upon a crossing in the daytime immediately in front of moving cars which he should have seen in the exercise of ordinary care, those in charge of the train being justified in supposing that he did see them and would stop. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Ackerman, 144 F. 959. Where evidence showed contributory negligence and there was no evidence of willful or wanton negligence on the part of the railroad company, a verdict should be directed for the company. Sims v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 572, 92 S. W. 909.

49. See 6 C. L. 1220.

50. If he neglects to take such precautions he may not recover, though the injury would not have occurred except for negligence of the railroad company. Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. Smith [C. C. A.] 141 F. 930. Where one approaching a crossing can by the use of his senses discover the approach of a train and thereby avoid danger, his failure to do so is contributory negligence precluding recovery, not withstanding negligence of the railroad in failing to give statutory signals. Martin v. Southern Pac. Co. [Cal.] 88 P. 701. Where it did not appear that a child five years old who was struck at a crossing looked or otherwise ex-

to "stop, look, and listen," [51] and this rule is not complied with by stopping where one cannot see.[52] Where this rule prevails a traveler must look and listen in both directions and continue to do so until danger has passed,[53] and failure to do so is not excused because of omission of duty on the part of the railroad;[54] but the rule of "stop, look, and listen" is not of invariable application,[55] and one who exercises ercised care on her approach, a nonsuit should be granted. Serano v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 99 N. Y. S. 1103. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where one failed to look before driving onto a crossing. Swanger v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 308. Persons driving herd of cattle over crossing held to have used due care in looking and listening. Salathe v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 1. Where one driving on a country road with an unobstructed view of the track waits for one train to pass and without looking or listening immediately drives onto the crossing and is struck by a train following the one he waited upon, he is guilty of contributory negligence, though the second train was not scheduled to pass, and he acted upon the supposition that one train would not immediately follow another. Jackson v. Mobile & O. R. Co. [Miss.] 42 So. 236. Where physical facts show that if one had looked he could have seen the approaching train, he is guilty of contributory negligence. Sims v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 572, 92 S. W. 909. One who walks on the track without looking or listening where he has a good view of the track is guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery, though statutory signals are not given. International, etc., R. Co. v. Edwards [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 681, 93 S. W. 106. A traveler approaching a crossing who does not see the flagman and is not misled by his inaction is charged with the duty to look and listen. Tiffin v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 93 S. W. 564. When contributory negligence in the act and manner of crossing is set up and there was evidence that the injured person walked onto the track without looking or listening, that he was walking fast and went immediately in front of the train, a charge that he was not guilty of contributory negligence if he exercised ordinary care in attempting to cross is erroneous as eliminating such negligence in the manner of crossing. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Sissom [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 271.

51. Mankewicz v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [Pa.] 63 A. 604. Drivers of fire engines and hose carts are not excepted from the "stop, look, and listen" rule. Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 323. A fireman riding on an engine who knew that no stop would be made at the railroad crossing assumed the risk. Id. A traveler who does not stop, look, and listen, held not entitled to recover under the circumstances of this case. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Jenkins [Kan.] 87 P. 702. One who goes upon a crossing without stopping to look or listen, where had he done so he could have noted the approach of a train, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Allen v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., 141 N. C. 340, 53 S. E. 866.

52. Where he cannot see any distance up the track from his vehicle, he must get out and walk to a place where he can see. Mankewicz v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [Pa.] 63 A. 604.

53. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dillard [Ark.] 94 S. W. 617. A traveler must not only look and listen before going upon the track but must continue to look and listen until he has passed the point of danger. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Baskins [Ark.] 93 S. W. 757. Where a boy sui juris, having good eyesight and hearing, approached a crossing where he had a good view of the track and looked and listened when fifty feet from the track but not thereafter, though he had been warned that it was about train time, held he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Walker v. Wabash R. Co., 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83. An instruction that it is the duty of a person approaching a crossing to look and listen is not erroneous because not stating the direction in which such person should look. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Connolly [Neb.] 109 N. W. 368. Where a pedestrian could see in both directions, and on looking in one direction saw part of a train. He looked in the other direction and attempted to cross without again looking where he had first looked. Held he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Griffie v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 750; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dillard [Ark.] 94 S. W. 617. One who looks when he is a block from the crossing and not again is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Portis [Ark.] 99 S. W. 66. Where a traveler familiar with a crossing looked when thirty-five feet from it, at which time he had a view for four hundred feet, but did not look again, though when twenty feet from the track he could see for one thousand feet, held he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wheelbarger [Kan.] 88 P. 531.

54. Failure to look both ways and listen is not excused by failure to give statutory signals. Porter v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 880. Where one attempted to go upon a crossing without looking or listening, the negligence of the company in backing the train without a brakeman on lookout on the back of the car was not the proximate cause of the injury. Baker v. Tacoma Eastern R. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 826. Where a traveler looked and listened at a point seventy-five feet from the track where his view was obstructed and did not look again, though at a distance of forty feet from the track he could have seen seven hundred feet down the track, he was guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery, though statutory signals were not given by the train. Southern R. Co. v. Jones [Va.] 56 S. E. 155.

55. Whether reasonable care requires it or whether he may rely on danger signals, or other circumstances, is for the jury except in cases free from doubt. Hartman v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 10.

reasonable prudence under all the circumstances in endeavoring to pass a crossing is not negligent merely because he fails to "stop, look, and listen." [56] That another person crossed in safety two minutes before does not excuse one from stopping and looking.[57] Where a person at a crossing apprehends more danger from one side than from the other, he may give more attention to that direction.[58]

Duty where view of track is obstructed.[59]—When the view of a traveler on approaching a crossing is obstructed, a higher degree of care is imposed on him and also upon the railroad company than if the obstruction did not exist,[60] but the fact that the view is obstructed does not require him to stop his horse and go forward on foot to a place where he can see, where he was in a position to hear warning signals and listened for them.[61]

Parallel tracks.[62]—It is contributory negligence to go upon a network of tracks without stopping to look and listen,[63] and no recovery can be had though the railroad was also negligent.[64] The question of negligence under such circumstances may be one of fact.[65]

Right to rely on crossing signals, gates, flagmen, etc.[66]—A traveler approaching a crossing where a flagman is kept who notes that the flagman is absent is put on his

It is not contributory negligence as a matter of law to fail to stop, look, and listen. Davis v. Louisville, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 930; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lucas' Adm'r [Ky.] 99 S. W. 959. Failure to look and listen is not conclusive of negligence where no warning signals were given. Davis v. Louisville, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 97 S. W. 1122. Failure to stop, look, and listen is not of itself negligence where no train was due at the time. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lucas' Adm'r [Ky.] 98 S. W. 308. Where injuries were sustained at a crossing where a watchman was kept, allegations that the injured person drove upon the track without looking or listening do not affirmatively show contributory negligence. Southern R. Co. v. Stockdon [Va.] 56 S. E. 713. Whether failure to look down the track was contributory negligence held a question for the jury. Martin v. Southern Pac. Co. [Cal.] 88 P. 701. Failure to look and listen is not negligence per se where a watchman is kept and the gates are up. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson [Ky.] 100 S. W. 302.

62. See 6 C. L. 1222.

63. A man of experience, forty-nine years of age, who steps onto a crossing where there are a network of tracks and trains are passing continually, without stopping to look or listen, is guilty of contributory negligence though the train which struck him is obscured by steam and smoke of other engines. Baker v. Tacoma & Eastern R. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 826.

64. Where one well acquainted with a crossing where there were six tracks, in the daytime drove onto such crossing without stopping to look and listen when there was a clear view of the track for four hundred feet and was struck by a string of cars being backed on the tracks, he was guilty of contributory negligence, though the railroad was also negligent with respect to speed of the cars and failure to give signals. No recovery. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Ackerman [C. C. A.] 144 F. 959.

65. Where one was killed at a crossing where there were several tracks by a train going at the rate of fifty miles an hour in violation of law, evidence held insufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law, there being a train at the crossing when he arrived and he heard the whistle of the train which struck him a mile off and attempted to pass in front of it. Welch v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1079, 110 N. W. 1069. Where one was killed by a work train while standing on a side track waiting for a train to pass on the main line, it was error to charge that it was negligence if he could have waited before going on the side track, because the fact of his going there had no relation to his injury. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Baskins [Ark.] 93 S. W. 757. Complaint in an action for injury to one who stopped on a side track on a crossing between cars to await the passing of a train on the main track and was killed by cars running on the side track, held insufficient to show that decedent was a traveler and in the ordinary use of the highway which entitled him to the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the employes of the railroad. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. McCandish [Ind.] 79 N. E. 903. Plaintiff saw train entering spur track which he had crossed and did not notice that several cars had been detached and kicked down the main track. Scott v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 95 S. W. 490.

guard and must look and listen and exercise ordinary care for his safety,[67] but he may rely on signals of the watchman.[68] The fact that safety gates are raised does not relieve a traveler from exercising due care.[69]

(§ 11) H. Injuries to persons on highways or private premises near tracks. Injuries from frightened horses.[70]—A railroad is not liable for injuries caused by a team taking fright at the ordinary operation of a train upon its road.[71] But operatives of trains must exercise ordinary care to prevent frightened horses on road in close proximity to the tracks,[72] especially where they are aware that a team is becoming frightened.[73] What constitutes negligence depends largely on the circumstances of each particular case.[74] Where operatives of a train have reason

67. Hodgin v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 413.

68. Where one approaching a crossing where a train had been cut in two was told by the brakeman on watch to pass, and as she attempted to do so the train started to close and in her fright she stepped on a stone and sprained her ankle, held negligence in moving the train and not stepping on the stone was the proximate cause of the injury. Boyce v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 120 Mo. App. 168, 96 S. W. 670. Where one was injured while attempting to pass between two parts of a train at a crossing, evidence held to show that a brakeman told her to pass. Id. Where one was injured at a crossing, it appeared that a flagman signaled him and the evidence was conflicting whether the signal was one to proceed or of warning. Held that it was not error to admit evidence of a rule of the company that in switching one of the crew must protect the crossing, the court having instructed that there could be no recovery if signals were misconstrued or ignored. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bethea [Miss.] 40 So. 813.

69. Such fact is to be considered by the jury in determining whether he did exercise due care. Messinger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 682.

70. See 6 C. L. 1223.

71. Clinebell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 110 N. W. 347. The running of a freight car by gravity on a track by the side of a street, with no unusual noise is not negligence and gives rise to no cause of action to one whose team became frightened and ran away while he was driving along such street. Everett v. Great Northern R. Co. [Minn.] 111 N. W. 281. Where one is injured at a crossing and there is no negligence on the part of the railroad company, there can be no recovery though the injured party was not guilty of contributory negligence. Black v. Bessemer, etc., R. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 405.

72. An answer to a complaint for frightening a team at a crossing held demurrable as not showing that it was the driver's duty to stop, look, and listen, that the running of the train was not the proximate cause of the accident, that the train was operated carefully and that the giving of signals was not required. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Reynolds [Ala.] 41 So. 1001. A complaint for frightening a team by runing a train over a crossing at a rapid rate of speed, etc., held good as against demurrer. Id. Evidence sufficient to authorize a verdict for plaintiff in an action for injuries caused by frightening a team. Southern R. Co. v. Hill, 125 Ga. 354, 54 S. E. 113.

73. Operatives of a train who discover that a person driving on a road parallel to the track is liable to be injured by his horse becoming frightened must do all in their power consistent with the safety of the train to avert the injury. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 206.

74. Where operatives of a locomotive without cars attached blow the whistle without reason under a highway bridge and a horse passing over the bridge is frightened and injures a traveler, a judgment of nonsuit should be reversed. Question of negligence should be submitted to the jury. Mumma v. Easton & A. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 208. Whether operatives in charge of an engine which was making an unusual noise in the street were negligent in failing to discover that the noise was frightening horses, held a question for the jury. Feeney v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 477. Whether a railroad company was negligent in failing to check or stop a train after it was discovered that a team was frightened and before they backed the wagon against the train, held a question for the jury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mertz, Ibach & Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 7. Where a train, approaching to where a conflagration was about extinguished, blew the whistle as a warning and at about the same instant run over and cut a chemical hose stretched across the track, which frightened horses and caused injury to one near the fire, evidence held insufficient to show negligence on the part of the railway company. Gendreau v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 99 Minn. 38, 108 N. W. 814. Except in cases of peril, the ordinances of the city of Minneapolis prohibit the blowing of whistles within the city limits. Case held within the exception where a train was approaching to where a conflagration was being extinguished. Id. Regulations of railroad commissioners limiting speed of trains are designated for the safety of trains and do not affect the duty of the company to one permitting a horse to stand near the track. Gerry v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 783. Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 120, requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks is for the protection of adjoining owners only and does not alter the company's liability for injuries to one who left his horse standing near the track. Id. The mere fact that a train was standing across a public street so that one driving a runaway horse was obliged to turn into an alley and in doing so his vehicle was overturned and he was injured is not negligence. Duffy v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 557.

to believe that the blowing of the whistle will cause a runaway, it is their duty to refrain from blowing it unless it is necessary to avoid some other danger which cannot be otherwise averted.[75] Whether train employes should keep a lookout on road parallel to the track may be a question of fact,[76] but due care requires a lookout to be maintained where tracks are in a street.[77] Persons driving on roads contiguous to the tracks have a right to rely on the giving of statutory signals,[78] though in some states, a contrary rule prevails.[78] But the giving of statutory signals is not of itself negligence.[80]

It is negligence to leave a handcar in such close proximity to a crossing that it frightens horses of ordinary gentleness,[81] or to operate a handcar in such manner as to cause a runaway.[82] So, also, any other obstacle of like character left near a crossing renders the company liable where teams are frightened.[83]

75. Puppovich v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 1143. Whether there was negligence in blowing the whistle in close proximity to a horse, held for the jury. Id.

76. Whether operatives of a train are required to keep a lookout for teams on a road which runs parallel to the track at a distance of twenty-five feet from it and avoid frightening them, is for the jury. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 206. Where a traveler on a highway running parallel to the track at a distance of twenty-five feet from it was injured by his horse becoming frightened at the approach of a train, it was necessary to charge that if it was the duty of the engineer to keep a lookout on such highway, and he failed to do so, and the injury was the proximate result of such failure, the railroad was liable unless the traveler was guilty of contributory negligence. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 206. It cannot be said as a matter of law that operatives of trains are under no duty to watch out for teams on a street parallel to and near the track and to avoid frightening them by excessive speed or blowing of whistles. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Sanders [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 460, 94 S. W. 149.

77. Where the track is in the street, engine operatives must be on the lookout when unusual noises are being made and stop the noise when it is apparent that horses are becoming frightened. Feeney v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 477. That horses were frightened by noise made by the blower in getting up steam is sufficiently shown by evidence that the team was well broken and used to engines. Id. And if they do not and a runaway is caused, the company is liable. Id.

78. One driving horses on a public highway contiguous to a railroad track has a right to rely on the giving of statutory signals on approaching a crossing. Louisville & A. R. Co. v. Davis, 29 Ky. L. R. 846, 96 S. W. 533.

79. A railroad company is not under legal duty to give the signal required by Gen. St. 1894, § 6337, for the benefit of a person driving on a street parallel to the track, but who does not intend to use the crossing. Everett v. Great Northern R. Co. [Minn.] 111 N. W. 281. Where the approach of a train frightens horses and causes a runaway, negligence cannot be predicated on failure to give crossing signals, in order that the driver might have warning in time to care for his team. Id. Assuming that it is question for the jury whether trains approaching a private subway crossing should give signals, omission to do so cannot be made the basis of a recovery where a team is frightened after it has passed through the subway and traveling on a road parallel to the track though but fifty feet from the crossing. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Morrison [Kan.] 85 P. 295. Nonliability is not affected by the fact that the place where the team was frightened was one of peculiar danger because the road was confined in a narrow lane by a barbed wire fence parallel to the track. Id.

80. A company is not chargeable with negligence in giving statutory signals which frighten a horse being driven along a parallel road where he was not seen by the trainmen, and they were under no duty to keep a lookout for him. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McCandless, 29 Ky. L. R. 563, 93 S. W. 1041.

81. A complaint in an action for injuries sustained by a team becoming frightened at a hand car left on a farm crossing held not demurrable because not alleging that the hand car and articles on it were calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Slaughter [Ind.] 79 N. E. 186. Whether the placing of a hand car within the limits of a farm crossing was so calculated to frighten teams as to be an act of negligence is a mixed question of law and fact which is presented by an allegation that the act was negligently done. Id. Where a team became frightened at a hand car left on a farm crossing, a complaint for injuries sustained alleging that the mule which was one of the team was well broken, etc., is not bad for failure to allege that it was an animal of ordinary gentleness. Id. On an allegation that a hand car at which a team became frightened was left on a farm crossing, proof that the car was not within the traveled way of the crossing is not a material variance. Id. Where a hand car was left just outside the traveled way of a crossing and a team became frightened at it and ran away, the fact that it was not within the traveled way of the crossing as alleged would not preclude recovery if it was negligently left in such a position that it was calculated to frighten teams of ordinary gentleness. Id.

82. A railroad may be liable where a section crew makes such noise with a hand

Contributory negligence of a driver of a team precludes recovery by him.[84] Whether a driver who was injured by his team becoming frightened at the whistle of a locomotive was negligent in being seated in such position that he could not brace himself so as to hold his team, was a question for the jury.[85]

In actions for injuries a causal connection must appear between the negligence alleged and the injury sustained,[86] and the negligence must appear to be that of the defendant company.[87] The evidence must tend to prove the negligence alleged.[88]

(§ 11) I. Injuries to animals on or near tracks. How far liability extends.[89] In many states it is provided by statute that the killing of animals by a train is prima facie proof of negligence,[90] and the introduction of such evidence casts on the railroad company the burden to prove its freedom from negligence,[91] if they were killed under certain circumstances.[92] Whether this presumption is overcome car while one lawfully using a private farm crossing is near whereby his team becomes frightened and runs away and injures him. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Beard [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 532.

83. Under a complaint alleging that one was injured because his horse became frightened at a locomotive standing on the highway, that such locomotive was of great size and unusual color and shape and naturally calculated to frighten gentle horses, the plaintiff has the burden to prove such facts as alleged. Butler v. Easton & A. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 65 A. 872. Where mail bags are dumped from a train and negligently allowed to lie in close proximity to a highway for an unreasonable length of time, they became a nuisance. Horr v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 776. Where a horse was frightened at mail sacks dumped from a train close to a highway, the question of negligence on the part of the railroad company was for the jury. Id.

84. It is not negligence as a matter of law to leave a team tied within 100 feet of the track where it is known that a train will soon pass in the absence of evidence that they were liable to be frightened. Gee v. St. Louis & C. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 506. Where a driver knows a train is approaching and that his team is likely to be frightened, it is his duty to watch them until the train has passed and if he does not and they become frightened and break loose and run onto the track, he cannot recover. Id. Where one saw an engine standing in the street and his team being well broken he drove them toward it, held he was not guilty of contributory negligence in doing so where the horses became frightened and ran away when the engine commenced to steam up. Feeney v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 477. One who without looking drove close to track and then could not control his team not entitled to recover. Salathe v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 1.

85. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Steckman, 224 Ill. 500, 79 N. E. 602.

86. See, also, post, § 11 K. A complaint alleging that a railroad violated an ordinance by blocking a street for more than five minutes and that a team near the crossing became frightened and ran away does not show causal connection between violation of the ordinance and the injury. Wilson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 941. Where an injury occurred because of horses becoming frightened, the fact that the view of the track at a crossing where the road started to run parallel to the track was obstructed by trees allowed to grow on the right of way was immaterial, as such obstruction was not a contributing cause. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 206.

87. Where a union station company owning the tracks therein ordered a train into a station twenty minutes ahead of time for departure and so located it that it extended into a street and frightened a team which ran into a pedestrian the railroad company was not liable as the location of the train was the wrongful act of the station company. Burns v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 101 N. Y. S. 225.

88. Proof that steam and hot water were thrown so near a horse as to frighten him is a departure from allegations that the engine sudenly discharge steam "at and upon" the horse. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Bruce [Ark.] 97 S. W. 297. Where injuries occurred because of a horse becoming frightened and there was evidence that it had been frightened shortly before by another train, testimony that the horse was afraid of trains was admissible in corroboration. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 206.

89. See 6 C. L. 1224.

90. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 2321, proof that animals were killed by a train establishes a prima facia case. Southern R. Co. v. Sheffield [Ga.] 56 S. E. 838. Negligence is presumed where a horse is killed on the track by being struck by a train. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Cash [Ark.] 96 S. W. 1062. Proof of killing of an animal is prima facie proof of negligence. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Sanders [Ark.] 99 S. W. 1109.

91. Where it is shown that a horse was killed by a train, the company has the burden to prove that it was not the result of its negligence. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Hutchison [Ark.] 96 S. W. 374. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 809, providing that injuring or killing cattle by locomotive or cars shall be prima facie negligence, the burden is on the railroad company to show that the injury could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary care. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Morrow [Ky.] 97 S. W. 389. Proof that stock is killed casts on the company the burden of providing itself free from negligence. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Wayt [Ark.] 97 S. W. 656.

92. Under Ann. Code 1892, § 1808, providing that the killing of an animal at night is a question for the jury,[93] unless the evidence introduced conclusively overcomes it;[94] but in the absence of such a statute, there is no such presumption,[95] and negligence must be alleged and proved.[96] No presumption of negligence arises from at a crossing by a train established a prima facie want of reasonable care, the railroad has the burden to show the contrary. Young v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 870. An instruction in an action for killing a cow that to cast on the railroad the burden to disprove negligence, the plaintiff must show that the defendant inflicted the injury and that it occurred at or near a crossing, station, etc., as declared by Code 1886, § 3443, was correct and it was error to refuse it. Western R. Co. v. McPherson [Ala.] 40 So. 934.

93. Whether the prima facie case established under Ann Code 1892, § 1808, by showing that an animal was killed at a crossing at night was overcome by proof that statutory signals were given, held under the facts of this case, a question for the jury. Young v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 870. whether the presumption of negligence raised by Ky. St. 1903, § 809, from the act of killing stock was overcome by the testimony of employes of the company, in view of the physical facts held for the jury. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Stanley, 29 Ky. L. R. 1054, 96 S. W. 846. The statutory presumption arising from the fact that animals were killed is not overcome by testimony of a fireman alone, who did not see the animals and could not say of his own knowledge whether the engineer took appropriate steps to avoid injury after he discovered them. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Andrews, 125 Ga. 85, 54 S. E. 76.

94. The uncontradicted testimony of employes in charge of the train overcomes the statutory presumption. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Morrow [Ky.] 97 S. W. 389. The presumption of negligence arising from the fact that animals are killed is overcome by proof that they were seen too late to stop the train and that the whistle was blown in an attempt to frighten them. Lane v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. [Ark.] 95 S. W. 460.

95. Negligence cannot be presumed from the fact that animals were on the track and were killed by a train. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Adcock [Colo.] 88 P. 180. In an action for cattle killed, evidence as to the killing without evidence of negligence will not authorize a recovery. Instructions to such effect disapproved. Id. Where there is no statutory presumption of negligence from the fact that an animal is killed on the track, negligence must be proven. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Lewis [Ark.] 97 S. W. 56.

96. A paragraph of the complaint based on the railroad's negligence, but failing to allege excuse for the horses being on the track, is insufficient. Campbell v. Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co. [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 223. A complaint alleging that an engineer failed to keep proper lookout, did not blow the whistle or ring the bell, and operated the engine so carelessly as to injure a cow at a point within the corporate limits of a certain town, held not demurrable for failure to alleged what the negligence consisted of, in what way the engine was negligently operated, or that the animal was killed by a negligent act of a servant within the scope of his employment, and as not showing where the injury occurred. Western R. Co. v. McPherson [Ala.] 40 So. 934. A complaint for killing mules by the negligent running of a train is not demurrable as assuming that the running of a train is negligence. Western R. Co. v. Mitchell [Ala.] 41 So. 427. A complaint that a train negligently operated between two certain stations killed mules held sufficiently specific as to the place of accident, sufficiently certain as to what servants were negligent, and to allege negligence with sufficient certainty. Id. A complaint that a railroad business was so negligently operated that a train was run into mules, killing them, was not demurrable because not showing what engine inflicted the injury, in failing to show by whom the engine was operated or in failing to show that the alleged negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Id. A complaint for killing a hog alleging negligence in permitting the right of way to be so grown up with brush, etc., which concealed the hog until it approached so near the track that the train could not be stopped in time to avoid injury to it, sufficiently alleges negligence as the proximate cause of the injury. Curry v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 447. A complaint alleging such facts states a cause of action. Id. It may be proved by circumstantial evidence that stock was killed by a train. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Stites [Ark.] 95 S. W. 1004. Testimony that witness saw blood and hair on the track and that the hair looked like that of plaintiff's horse was some evidence of plaintiff's ownership. Southern R. Co. v. Pogue [Ala.] 40 So. 565. Proof that the animal killed was a "mare" does not vary from a complaint for killing a "horse". Id. Instructions in an action for killing animals approved. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Hughes [Ga.] 56 S. E. 770. In an action for killing stock, it is erroneous to grant a third new trial from a verdict for the plaintiff. Berry Southern R. Co., 126 Ga. 426, 55 S. E. 239.

Evidence sufficient to show negligence where cattle were killed. Sands v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 110 N. W. 855. Evidence sufficient to show that no effort was made to stop a train and that such negligence was the proximate cause of injury to a horse on the track. Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Webb [Colo.] 85 P. 683. Where a horse which had escaped and was on the road was killed at a crossing, evidence held to show negligence of the trainmen. Kansas City, etc. R. Co. v. Rockwell [Kan.] 85 P. 802. Where evidence showed that stock recently broke from the pasture and was closely pursued by one who upon the approach of a train stood in the center of the track and waved his hands which if heeded by the engineer would have averted the injury, the evidence held sufficient to sustain the verdict of negligence by the jury. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. McKenzie, 124 Ga. 222, 53 S. E. 591. Evidence sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff in an action for animals killed. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Courtney, 77 Ark. 431, 92 S. W. 251. Evidence sufficient to au-

the fact that a dog is killed on the track.[97] In some states an engineer is required to keep a lookout.[98] Where cattle are negligently permitted to stray onto the track, the company is not liable unless it failed to use ordinary care to avoid injuring them after discovering their presence,[99] and in districts where a stock law is in force, gross negligence must be shown.[1] If an animal comes suddenly upon the track so Evidence sufficient to show negligence where a horse was killed on the track. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Cash [Ark.] 96 S. W. 1062. Evidence sufficient to show negligence where stock was killed. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Ingram [Ark.] 97 S. W. 55. A judgment for killing a hog is sustained where railroad employes testified that the hog came suddenly on the track from weeds growing on the right of way, but other evidence showed that there were no weeds there, but the place of injury was in a cut, that a hog could not come suddenly on the track at that point, and the there was a good view of such point from quite a distance. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Blair [Ark.] 97 S. W. 296. Evidence sufficient to support the verdict for animals killed. Southern R. Co. v. Sheffield [Ga.] 56 S. E. 838. Evidence sufficient to show that a railroad was liable for cattle killed where the accident occurred on a clear day and the track was straight for two miles. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Meyer [Neb.] 107 N. W. 793.

Evidence insufficient to show negligence where cattle were killed. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Morrow [Ky.] 97 S. W. 389; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Buckner [Ark.] 97 S. W. 439. Evidence insufficient to show negligence where a horse was killed. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Webb [Ind. T.] 97 S. W. 1010. Evidence held to show no negligence where a mule was killed at night by a train running slowly through a fog, whistling continuously, and the animal came onto the track directly in front of the engine. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Lewis [Ark.] 97 S. W. 56. Evidence that a horse was killed on a crossing at night and that a train passed without giving signals, without a showing that that particular train killed the horse, is insufficient to show negligence. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Baker [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 264, 93 S. W. 211. Negligence must be shown where cattle are killed at a point where no fence is required. Evidence insufficient to show negligence where stock was killed where the track was not required to be fenced. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Langham [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. 567, 95 S. W. 686.

97. Fowles v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 73 S. C. 306, 53 S. E. 534. Statutory crossing signals need not be given to warn a dog, but if one is seen on the track not in possession of his faculties, precautions must be taken to avoid injury to him. Id. Where it does not appear that negligence in running a train at a high rate of speed was the proximate cause of killing a dog, and it does not appear that the presence of the dog should have been anticipated or that injury to it could have been avolded after it was discovered, the company is not liable. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Blake [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 264, 95 S. W. 593.

98. It is eror to authorize a verdict for the company on a finding that a horse came suddenly upon the track so close in front of the engine that the accident could not be avoided, without a finding that a proper lookout was kept by the engineer, and though the train was properly equipped and the horse might have been sooner discovered in dangerous proximity to the track. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Brister [Ala.] 40 So. 512. If it proper in an action for killing a horse to refuse an instruction which does not hypothesize the fact that a proper lookout was kept, that the train was properly equipped, and that the horse could not have been discovered before it was. Southern R. Co. v. Pogue [Ala.] 40 So. 565. An instruction that if an ox killed came suddenly on the track so close to the train that the accident could not be averted, the railroad was not liable, was bad because not postulating the fact of a proper lookout being kept. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Simmons [Ala.] 40 So. 573. It is the duty of the engineer to exercise such lookout as is consistent with his other duties and if such precaution would have revealed the presence of stock on the track in time to have avoided injury, the company is liable, though they were not actually seen until too late to stop the train. Stading v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 111 N. W. 460. Evidence sufficient to show negligence. Id. Evidence sufficient to show that no lookout was kept. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Sanders [Ark.] 99 S. W. 1109. Kirby's Dig. § 6607, requiring locomotive engineers to keep a lookout for stock and use ordinary care to avoid injury to them, has never been made a part of the law of Indian Territory. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Ingram [Ark.] 97 S. W. 55.

99. Cumming v. G. N. R. Co. [N. D.] 108 N. W. 798. Evidence sufficient to disprove negligence on part of the railroad. Id. The only duty owed where cattle are unlawfully on the right of way is to use reasonable care after their presence is discovered. Leslie v. Wabash R. Co., 118 Ill. App. 606.

1. No liability results from killing an animal at a crossing in a district where the stock law is in force in the absence of gross negligence. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Scofield [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 319, 98 S. W. 435. Not where the train could not be stopped after the animal was discovered. Id. A railroad is not liable for killing stock negligently permitted to run at large in a precinct, where the stock law is in force, unless it is guilty of gross negligence. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Hudgens [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 44, 94 S. W. 378. Operatives of a train are not bound to exercise care to avoid injury to animals improperly on the right of way within a precinct where the stock law is in force, until a reasonably prudent man would have realized that they probably would not get off the track Id. No lookout need be kept for stock negligently permitted to run at close that it is impossible to stop the train, the railroad is not laible.[2] Negligence cannot be inferred from the fact that a train is run at a high rate of speed and cattle are killed,[3] unless it appears that such act is negligence as a matter of law.[4] It is negligence to run a train at night at such speed that it cannot be stopped within the glare of the headlight,[5] or to operate an engine with a defective headlight,[6] and it is also negligence to fail to give statutory signals,[7] or to take other precautions dictated by the principles of ordinary care.[8] Whether animals were killed as a result of negligence of the railroad is often a question of fact.[9] large in a precinct where the stock law is in force. Id. In this case where a horse was injured by a train the evidence was held to show that it was not running at large requiring proof of willful negligence on the part of the railroad company. Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Webb [Colo.] 85 P. 683. Acts 1905, p. 226, c. 117, relative to liability for killing stock where the stock law is in force, is not retroactive. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Scofield [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 319, 98 S. W. 435. Whether cattle were running at large within Code, § 2055, held a question for the jury, where after being driven across the track they entered a defective wing fence and were killed while being driven out. Morris v. Chicago, G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 154.

2. It is error to refuse to charge that if the engineer's view was obstructed until the cow suddenly emerged from beyond a trestle or culvert, and that from the time it so emerged until it was struck he did all he could to avoid the injury, the railroad was not liable. Western R. Co. v. McPherson [Ala.] 40 So. 934. Where it appeared that a horse was first seen about ten or fifteen yards from the track when the train was 150 yards off when the whistle was blown and brakes put on and when the train was fifty yards off the horse suddenly ran onto the track, it was error to refuse to instruct that if the train was properly equipped, a lookout kept, and that the horse came upon the track so suddenly that the injury could not be avoided there could be no recovery. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Brister [Ala.] 40 So. 512. A railroad is not liable where stock comes so suddenly upon the track at night that the train cannot be stopped in time to avoid injury to them. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Main, 143 Ala. 149, 42 So. 108. Where it appeared that an animal came so suddenly onto the track that it was impossible to stop the train in time an instruction hypothesizing that all appliances known to skillful engineers to stop the train were used was properly refused. Id.

3. Texas, etc., R. Co., v. Langham [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 567, 95 S. W. 686. Operatives of a special train are not negligent in runing at a high rate of speed past a station where there are only two or three houses and are not required to anticipate the presence of cattle at the depot. Id.

4. It is gross negligence for an engineer to drive his train at a rate of forty or fifty miles per hour, after seeing a fog bank some distance ahead, and where after entering such bank he could not see animals on the track in time to stop the train. Western R. Co. v. Mitchell [Ala.] 41 So. 427.

5. It is proper to charge that if a horse was killed because the train was running at such speed that it could not be stopped within the glare of the headlight, the railroad is liable. Southern R. Co. v. Pogue [Ala.] 40 So. 565. It is negligence to run a train at night at such rate of speed that it cannot be stopped where animals are seen on the track within the glare of the head light. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Main, 143 Ala. 149, 42 So. 108.

6. Where it is material as to what condition the locomotive headlight was in at the time of the collision, evidence as to its condition at a point four or five miles distant is relevant. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Hughes [Ga.] 56 S. E. 770. A railroad company is liable for killing animals, where, if the headlight had been in good condition, he could have seen them in time to have avoided the injury had he kept a lookout. Jonesboro, L. C. & E. R. Co. v. Guest [Ark.] 99 S. W. 71. Evidence sufficient to show that if the headlight had been in good condition and the engineer had been keeping a lookout, he could have seen the horses in time to have avoided the injury. Id. It is negligence to run a train in the night time with a headlight not having sufficient capacity to illuminate the track for a distance within which the train could be stopped. Western R. Co. v. Mitchell [Ala.] 41 So. 427.

7. Ann. Code 1892, § 3547, requiring signals on approaching a crossing, is for the protection of animals as well as persons. Young v. Illnois Cent. R. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 870.

8. Failure to stop a train is neglegence where the operatives can see that if they do not stop it a horse will attempt to go onto a trestle or culvert and be injured. Paragould S. E. R. Co. v. Crunk [Ark.] 98 S. W. 682. Where horses were seen on the track a quarter of a mile distant it was negligence not to stop or have attempted to stop the train. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Morrow [Ky.] 97 S. W. 389. In an action for killing a mule it is permissible to show that at the place where the accident occurred the country was level, the track straight, and the view unobstructed, and that an object as large as a mule could be seen for a quarter of a mile by the light thrown by the headlight. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Lewis [Ark.] 97 S. W. 56. Where operators of a train negligently fail to slacken speed after discovery of cattle on the track, the railroad is liable though the owner of the cattle was also negligent. Barnard v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 439.

9. Evidence held for the jury as to whether cattle should have been seen, 75 or 100 yards distant from the place where they were struck by the train. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Wayt [Ark.] 97 S. W. 656. Evidence of negligence on the part of the railroad where a horse was killed on the track held for the jury. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Smith [Md.] 64 A. 317. Where there was a dispute in the testimony as to the distance between cattle on the track and the point where they were discovered and the jury found that the train could have been stoped in time to avoid the injury their verdict will not be disturbed. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Strickland, 125 Ga. 352, 54 S. E. 168. In an action for killing stock the engineer should be permitted to testify as to what he did to prevent the injury, and leave to the jury whether the acts detailed constituted sufficient diligence. Macon, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 125 Ga. 88, 54 S. E. 197. In an action for killing stock, it is a question for the jury whether due diligence required operatives of the train to sound the cattle alarm, and whether such alarm, if given, would have averted the injury. Darien & N. W. R. Co. v. Thomas, 125 Ga. 801, 54 S. E. 692. Evidence of negligence held for the jury in an action for killing a horse. Southern R. Co. v. Pogue [Ala.] 40 So. 565. Question of engineer's negligence held for the jury where mules were killed. Hoye v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 425. Question of negligence when a horse was killed held for the jury. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Sanders [Ark.] 99 S. W. 1109. Question of negligence held for the jury where an animal was killed on the track. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Edwards [Ark.] 96 S. W. 1061. The question was so clearly one of fact that an appeal was frivolous, and taken for delay only, authorizing infliction of the statutory penalty for taking such an appeal. Id. When it appears that an animal came on the track not suddenly but 106 yards ahead of the train and no signals given or the speed slackened, a peremptory instruction for the railroad is properly refused. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Mains, 143 Ala. 149, 42 So. 108. Whether an engineer saw a mule on the track held under the evidence a question for the jury. Wright v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 469, 95 S. W. 293. Evidence of negligence held for the jury where ponies were killed on the track. Anson v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 398, 94 S. W. 94.

10. See, also, post, § 11 K.

11. Complaint alleging number of animals killed, sex, time and place of injury, and average value, is not demurrable on the ground that it does not sufficiently set forth the items of damage. Southern R. Co. v. Sheffield [Ga.] 56 S. E. 838. An allegation that a cow was killed within one-fourth of a mile of a public crossing, while material with respect to locating the place where the accident occurred, was not descriptive of the subject of the action and need not be strictly proved as alleged. Western R. Co. v. McPherson [Ala.] 40 So. 934.

12. Where there was no direct proof that defendant owned the road but there was evidence from which ownership could be inferred, and no evidence that it did not own the road, ownership was sufficiently proven. Moore v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 607. Opinion testimony as to the distance the horse killed could have been seen by the engineer is admissible. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Sanders [Ark.] 99 S. W. 1109. Where negligence relied on in an action for killing a horse was failure to make any effort to stop the train, evidence that the train was late and running at twenty-five miles per hour was admissible, the jury having been instructed that such facts were not proof of negligence. Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Webb [Colo.] 85 P. 683. Whether or not a train slackened speed at a given point where stock was injured and if so to what extent, being in conflict, evidence that it was behind time was admissible to show that there was reason or motive for not stopping or for making rapid speed. Southern R. Co. v. Puryear [Ga.] 56 S. E. 73. In an action for animals killed an engineer, who testified that he did not run the train at a high rate of speed and did not kill the animals, may be cross-examined to contradict such testimony, to show that the train was run at a high speed, and that under such conditions, circumstances on the way were sometimes not noticed. Anson v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 398, 94 S. W. 94. In an action for animals killed, testimony of the train dispatcher that the train was behind time, and that some time, but not universally, such trains were run faster than schedule time, was admissible to show that the train was run at high speed and to weaken testimony that the train was run at the usual rate of speed. Id. In an action for killing mules, evidence of their speed and agility is not admissible, if such inquiry would be proper, it should be limited to the time of the injury. Hoge v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 425. In an action for killing mulee, it is not permissible to show that horse was killed at the same time. Id. Where several acts of negligence in killing a cow are alleged in the conjunctive form, all acts averred must be proven. Western R. Co. v. McPherson [Ala.] 40 So. 934. Testimony of an engineer that he could have done no more than he did to stop the train is a mere conclusion. Macon, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 125 Ga. 88, 54 S. E. 197.

13. Where in an action for cattle killed there was evidence that the company converted the carcasses, held that a nonsuit should not be granted where no negligence was proven, but the question of conversion should have been submitted. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Adcock [Colo.] 88 P. 180. Where an answer alleged that an ox came suddenly on the track from under a trestle, an instruction that if the ox came suddenly upon the track, etc., but omitting "came from under the trestle," was bad for nonconformity to the plea. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Simmons [Ala.] 40 So. 573. An instruction that unless the jury believe that the engineer could have avoided striking the cow they should find for the railroad was erroneous as placing on plaintiff the burden to prove that the injury was not due to unavoidable accident. Western R. Co. v. McPherson [Ala.] 40 So. 934. Where a railroad tried a case on the theory that stock was killed at a crossing, it cannot complain on appeal that the case was submitted on the theory that it was its duty to give statutory signals. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Josey [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 585,

Place of entry on right of way.[14]—The place where an animal enters upon the right of way may be material on the question of the liability of the railroad, where fence laws are in force,[15] but such laws do not absolve the company from liability for its negligence.[16]

Duty to maintain fences.[17]—In many states railroads are required by statute to fence their tracks and are liable for killing animals if they do not,[18] except where stock laws are in force.[19] Such statutes apply to electric railways,[20] but negligence must appear,[21] and it must also be shown that failure to fence was the proximate cause of the injury,[22] and that the injury inflicted was one falling within the terms

95 S. W. 688. Instruction that if it was believed that animals were killed within switch limits of a town, then before a recovery could be had the defendant must have been negligent, held not to authorize recovery without submitting facts constituting negligence. Id. An instruction that it is gross negligence to fail to give signals on approaching a crossing is erroneous where it is for the jury to say whether such negligence existed. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Scofield [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 319, 98 S. W. 435. An instruction in an action for killing a horse which makes the question of negligence depend upon whether the train operatives "in good faith exercised the best judgment they could under the circumstances" is erroneous. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Sanders [Ark.] 99 S. W. 1109.

14. See 6 C. L. 1225.

15. Burn's Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5321, 5322, relative to private gates, etc., does not change the rule that if cattle come onto the track where it should be fenced but is not and wander upon the track to where it cannot lawfully be fenced and are injured, the company is liable, but if they go upon the track where it is fenced and are injured where it is not, the company is not liable. Chicago I. & L. R. Co. v. Ramsey [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1065. Evidence sufficient to show that the point at which a cow entered the right of way could have been fenced without obstructing a street, detriment to the public or danger to employes. Eaton v. Illinois Southern R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 640, 95 S. W. 271. Proof that cattle strayed upon the track where no fence had been maintained as required by statute and were killed after crossing a place where a cattle guard should have been maintained is not a variance from allegations that they were killed because of failure to construct a fence. Kirkpatrick v. Illinois Southern R. Co. [Mo. App.] 96 S. W. 1036. The place where stock comes upon the track does not determine the company's liability under the fencing act. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Delliplane, 119 Ill. App. 122.

16. Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 5322, does not absolve the railroad from liability for injuries to stock resulting from negligence though they entered through a private gate, and where an engineer could have seen the cattle eight hundred feet before they were struck and did see them four hundred feet off, it cannot be said that there was freedom from negligence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ramsey [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1065.

17. See 6 C. L. 1226.

18. Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10,020, making railroad companies liable for injuries to stock where they fail to maintain fences or cattle guards, was not intended to provide a penalty for such failure but merely to render the companies liable to the owner of the stock. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. King [Neb.] 107 N. W. 981. Comp. Laws 1897, § 6294, requiring tracks to be fenced, requires cattle guards and wing fences at the point where the fenced track leaves the unfenced station grounds. Stewart v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 948, 110 N. W. 126. 3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 3253, c. 114, § 68, requiring fences and maintenance of cattle guards at crossings, requires a railroad where it crosses another railroad to construct cattle guards and wing fences regardless of whether the other road does so or not. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Davidson, 225 Ill. 618, 80 N. E. 250. Failure to keep the right of way sufficiently fenced renders the railroad liable for cattle killed as a result of such failure. Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. Nevitt, 122 Ill. App. 505.

19. Where animals are killed in a precinct where owners are forbidden to permit stock to run at large, and there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the railroad company, it was error to charge Rev. St. 1895, § 4528, making railroad companies liable where the right of way is not fenced. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Hudgens [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 44, 94 S. W. 378. Sayle's Supp. St. 1897-1904, pp. 533-538 (Stock Law), making it unlawful for animals to run at large in counties where adopted, supersedes the fence law requiring railroads to fence their right of way, and no recovery can be had for animals killed in the absence of negligence on the part of the company. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Nussbaum [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 15, 94 S. W. 1101.

20. An electric railway which fails to fence its track as required by Burn's Ann. St. Supp. 1905, § 5479d, is liable for injuries to a horse straying upon the track where it was negligent though the injury was not wantonly inflicted. Campbell v. Indianapolis & N. W. Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 223.

21. Under Burn's Ann. St. Supp. 1905, § 5479d, requiring electric railways to fence their track, failure to do so is not alone sufficient to render it liable for injuries to a horse straying onto the track, negligence must be shown. Campbell v. Indianapolis & N. W. Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 223.

22. A petition for damages under such statute which contains no allegations tracing injury to failure to maintain such fences or guards, is fatally defective. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. King [Neb.] 107 N. W. 981. Petition held insufficient to state a cause of action. Id. A complaint alleging that an electric railway failed to fence its track and that servants operating a train negligently of the statute.[23] The intent of the statute requiring railroads to erect and maintain fences and cattle guards is to compel complete inclosure of the track, except in cities and towns so as to prevent access thereto at all points except at crossings and station grounds.[24] Failure to fence the track at an unincorporated town is excused only to the extent necessary to afford the public and the company opportunity for transacting business reasonably to be expected at such point.[25] Statutes requiring fences do not apply to yards,[26] nor to depot grounds,[27] nor highways,[28] but do apply chased a horse which strayed onto the track along it to a bridge not suitable for horses to cross on, and it was injured, states a cause of action. Campbell v. Indianapolis & N. W. Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 223. Where in an action for injuries to a horse negligence in failing to fence the track is alleged and also negligence of servants operating a train, it need not be alleged that the negligent acts of the servants were performed in line of their employment. Id. Where a railroad fails to fence its track, as required by Code, § 2057, it is liable for injuries to animals in the absence of willful negligence by the owner, but is not liable if cattle escape onto a track through a gate at a private crossing left open by the owner of the cattle. Claus v. Chicago, G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 111 N. W. 15. When cattle stray upon the track because of failure to fence as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, and are killed after crossing a place where a cattle guard should have been constructed, failure to construct the fence and not the cattle guard was the proximate cause of the injury. Kirkpatrick v. Illinois Southern R. Co. [Mo. App.] 96 S. W. 1036. An allegation of failure to fence the track is not supported by proof that a gate in the fence was negligently left open. High v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 88 P. 961. Evidence sufficient to show that horses entered upon the right of way through a defective fence. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Cassinoba [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 888. It is erroneous to require plaintiff to prove that his pasture gates were closed and that the horses injured entered through a defective right of way fence, it being sufficient to show that they entered through the defective fence independent of the gates. Id.

23. To recover for injuries to a horse under a statute requiring the right of way to be fenced, the injury must have been caused by the car actually striking the horse. Campbell v. Indianapolis & N. W. Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 223. Where one owner gave another permission to pass through his land, held such other was not entitled to turn stock onto such land and thereby become an adjoining proprietor within the statute requiring railroads to fence their track. Carpenter v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 204, 95 S. W. 985. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, requiring the track to be fenced where it passes through cultivated fields, the company is liable where an animal which is trespassing on land adjacent to the right of way escapes onto the track through a defective fence. Perry v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 14.

24. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sevcek [Neb.] 110 N. W. 639. See same case [Neb.] 101 N. W. 981. By fencing on each side of the main track at a certain point in the vicinity of a station, the company is regarded as having exercised its discretion to determine the boundaries of its grounds. Stewart v. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 948, 110 N. W. 126.

25. Rosenbery v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 110 N. W. 641. Whether or not the railroad company was excused for not fencing its track at the unincorporated station of Adelia, held a question for the jury. Id.

26. In an action for injuries to animals, evidence that at a certain place there are various switches leading to brickyards, factories, and ice houses, and that cars were stored and inspected there, held to require a finding that the premises was a "yard" and company was not required to fence. Bird v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 145 Mich. 706, 13 Det. Leg. N. 639, 108 N. W. 1100.

27. B. & C. Comp. § 5139, making railroads liable where animals are killed on an unfenced track does not extend to depot grounds which the company is not required to fence. Wilmot v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 87 P. 528. Whether a railroad is required under B. & C. Comp. § 5139, to fence depot grounds is a question of law, and on conflicting evidence as to whether the point where cattle strayed onto the track was depot grounds or not, the question is one of law. Id. Station grounds include the place where passengers get aboard and alight from trains, grounds necessary for tracks, switches and turnouts, and ground necessary for storing cars and making up trains and so much of the main line as is necessary for the handling of trains. Id. Where grounds have been surveyed and set apart for station purposes, such appropriation affords strong presumption that the boundaries include no more ground than is necessary. Id. Whether the point at which cattle strayed onto the track was within depot grounds where the railroad company was not required to fence held a question for the jury. High v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 88 P. 961. Where in an action for killing a mule one count was based on Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, requiring the company to fence their track, and another was based on common-law negligence where evidence showed that the mule got on the track at depot grounds and was run down by negligence of the engineer, and there was a finding for the railroad on the first count, it was not error to overrule a motion to require an election between counts. Wright v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 469, 95 S. W. 293.

28. Railroad companies are not required to fence their right of way where de facto highways cross them. Dow v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 555, 92 S. W. 744.

to shop yards [29] and flag stations.[30] Such fence must be sufficient to turn stock.[31] Statutes require that sufficient gates be maintained at private crossings,[32] and that the fence be kept in repair.[33] Statutes relative to fencing are enacted not only for the protection of animals but also for the protection of human life due to derailments caused by colliding with animals.[34] The Minnesota railroad fence statute was designed to prevent children as well as animals from entering on the tracks and applies to cattle guards constructed as part of the fence.[35] A covenant in a deed of land for a right of way binding the grantor to maintain fences along the right of way runs with the land, and precludes the recovery by a successor in title of the grantor for cattle injured because of failure to fence.[36]

Gates.[37]—Statutes requiring the track to be fenced require that sufficient gates be maintained at private crossings,[38] and that such gates be supplied with proper

29. Railroad shop yards come within the scope of the Minnesota statute requiring railroads to be fenced. Whether yards in question could be fenced including construction of cattle guards, without impairing the usefulness of the yards, held a question for the jury. Mattes v. Great Northern R. Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 98.

30. A station at which there is only a platform where trains stopped when flagged and where no agent was kept, but a spur track had been built on the right of way for a mill owner is not a station within the statute requiring the right of way to be fenced and the company is liable in double damages for stock killed there. Moore v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 756 [advance sheets only].

31. Whether a railroad negligently failed to construct proper fence and cattle guards held for the jury on conflicting evidence as to the sufficiency of such obstructions to turn cattle. Conrad v. Illinois Southern R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 517, 92 S. W. 752. In an action for injuries to cattle occasioned by failure to fence as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, it is proper to define a lawful fence as one sufficient "to resist" horses, cattle, swine, and like stock. "Resist" not being as strong as "prevent" used in the statute. Hax v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 693. In an action under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, where evidence showed that a horse escaped from one field into an adjacent field, thence onto the tract, it was error to fail to submit whether the fence between the two fields was a lawful one, because if it was the company owed plaintiff no duty to fence its track. Carpenter v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 204, 95 S. W. 985. It was not prejudicial error to submit whether the fence was a lawful one when constructed though there was no evidence showing that it was not, where it appeared that the fence was defective and that the defect was of long standing. Hax v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 693.

32. Code, § 2057, requiring the fencing of tracks, requires sufficient gates at private crossings. Claus v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 111 N. W. 15. A complaint alleged failure to maintain a lawful fence. Held an amendment that the company maintained a gate and negligently permitted it to remain open and out of repair, etc., was properly allowed as alleging failure to maintain a fence as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 1105. Peery v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 14. If a railroad in the exercise of ordinary care should have discovered and repaired an opening in the right of way fence made by a stranger and such failure was the proximate cause of cattle being injured, the railroad is liable. Id. Question of negligence in failing to discover and repair such opening held for the jury. Id.

33. Contributory negligence is no defense under Gen. St. 1901, § 5859, where stock is killed where the road is unfenced, or where the fence is so defective that stock can pass onto the right of way. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Paxton [Kan.] 88 P. 1082. Where the track runs through a pasture, the adoption of the stock law does not relieve the company from the duty of keeping its right of way fence in repair. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Coffin [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 291, 97 S. W. 1066. Where a right of way fence is taken down under orders from the company's engineer and cattle stray upon the track and are injured, the company is liable. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Armstrong [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 431. Whether a railroad was negligent in not discovering and repairing a defective wing fence within a month and whether such negligence was the proximate cause of injury to cattle, held questions for the jury. Morris v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 154. A railroad company is liable where employes in repairing a fence took off a gate at a farm crossing and merely set it across the opening at night and a colt went through it onto the track and was killed. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Zollman [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 40.

34. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Langham [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 567, 95 S. W. 686. The first duty of an engineer on discovering cattle on the track at a point where fence is not required is to look to the safety of passengers and if it is dangerous to them to attempt to stop the train, it is his duty not to do so. Id.

35. Mattes v. Great Northern R. Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 98.

36. Satterly v. Erie R. Co., 113 App. Div. 462, 99 N. Y. S. 309

37. See 6 C. L. 1227

38. Under Sayle's Rev. Civ. St. art. 4528, declaring railroads liable regardless of negligence where the track is not fenced, it is liable where it allows a gate to become defective and out of repair by reason of which cattle escape onto the track and are killed. Cole v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16Tex. Ct. Rep. 14, 94 S. W. 1128. Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 5321, providing that fastenings,[39] and be kept in proper repair;[40] but an owner may not recover if the injury is due to a defective fastening constructed by himself.[41]

Cattle guards[42] need not be maintained where they will interfere with the operation of the road.[43] It must appear that failure to maintain cattle guards was the cause of the injury.[44]

Contributory negligence of owner[45] of the stock injured or killed precludes recovery by him[46] if it is the proximate cause of the injury.[47] What constitutes contributory negligence depends on the circumstances of each particular case,[48] and is generally a question for the jury.[49] where an owner maintains a private crossing he shall keep gates locked, and section 5322 provides that the railroad shall not be liable for injuries to animals when they enter through such private gates. Held where cattle entered the right of way where there was no fence, and from there went across the lands of another and entered through a private gate, the railroad was liable. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ramsey [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 669. Where an animal escaped onto the track through a defective gate, the fact that it gained access to the gate by reason of an insufficient fence on the owner's land was no defense to the company since the owner was entitled to permit his stock to run on his own premises. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Dunnaway [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 347, 95 S. W. 760. Whether a defective gate in the right of way fence could have been repaired by the landowner practically without labor or expense, held for the jury where there was evidence that it could have been repaired at a cost of about one dollar. Id. In an action under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, for damages to stock for failure to maintain gates at farm crossings, evidence held to show that plaintiff owned the field from which the horse escaped. Carpenter v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 204, 95 S. W. 985.

39. Where in an action for killing animals which had passed through an open gate which did not comply with statutory requirements as to the manner of fastening but was so constructed that cattle could not open it and it did not appear that one who opened it would have been more apt to fasten it had it been a statutory gate, evidence held insufficient to show that improper construction of the gate was the proximate cause of the injury. Rowen v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 198 Mo. 654, 96 S. W. 1009. In an action for injuries to an animal at a farm crossing, whether the gate was provided with a sufficient fastening was held a question for the jury. Roberts v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 372, 94 S. W. 838. Where a horse escaped onto the track by reason of the insufficiency of a fastening on a gate at a farm crossing under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, and it appeared that the horse was lawfully on adjoining land and that the gate in question was at a necessary farm crossing, it was proper to submit these questions without instructions. Id.

40. Where a gate at a private crossing had been for a long time in a dilapidated condition and cattle passed through it onto the track and were injured the company was liable unless the injury was chargeable to willful negligence of the owner. Claus v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 111 N. W. 15. Whether they escaped onto the track through the willful negligence of the owner held a question for the jury where they had been placed in a pasture not bordering on the right of way at that point, and escaped from the pasture and passed through the defective gate. Id.

41. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, requiring railroads to instal gates at crossings and provide them with latches or hooks, an owner may not recover where an animal escaped through an open gate, the fastening of which he had himself constructed. Francis v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 118 Mo. App. 435, 93 S. W. 876.

42. See 6 C. L. 1227.

43. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1106, a railroad is not required to maintain cattle guards at a place where they would endanger employes. Gilpin v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 197 Mo. 319, 94 S. W. 869. In such case where cattle are killed the company has the burden to show that the presence of cattle guards at such place would endanger employes. Id. Where it appeared that the place where the cattle entered the track was at a point where there were three tracks, and the plaintiff testified that cattle guards there would endanger employes in switching, his own evidence showed excuse for not placing them there. Id.

44. Evidence that a mule which escaped through a defective cattle guard was found dead on the right of way with no marks upon it to show that it had been struck or evidence that a train had passed, except signs of blood and hair on the track, is insufficient to warrant a recovery. Texas & P. R. Co. v. King Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 1030.

45. See 6 C. L. 1227.

46. Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 23, § 287, making railroad companies liable for stock injured on the track unless they can prove freedom from negligence, does not change the common-law rule that contributory negligence on the part of the owner precludes recovery if it was the cause of the injury. Norfolk R. Co. v. Smith [Md.] 64 A. 317.

47. Negligence in permitting animals to escape from an inclosure is not the proximate cause of their being killed on the railroad track at some distance from the enclosure, over which track defendant had no control. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 17.

48. Turning hogs into a field adjoining a right of way not fenced as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, from which it was known that they could escape through such fence to another field, is not contributory negligence barring recovery for injuries done by trespassing. Kirpatrick v. Illinois Southern Ry. Co. [Mo. App.] 96 S. W. 1036.

(§ 11) J. Fires.[50]—Those who establish themselves in the neighborhood of railroads must know that trains are expected to run, and if there are risks arising from no want of care in the equipment or management of trains, they are incident to the situation;[51] and a railroad is not liable if without negligence on its part fire is communicated to adjacent property,[52] but if a railroad permits combustible material to accumulate and remain on its right of way and fire is communicated to such material by a passing locomotive and spreads to adjoining lands, the railroad is liable,[53] and the fact that due care is taken in other respects is immaterial.[54] So also, if there is negligence in the management or equipment of locomotives and fire is set,[55] or if fire is set through any other act of negligence on its part,[56] the com-

Where a cow was killed at a crossing, evidence that she was nervous because separated from her calf and had been placed in a pasture from which there was an inference that she had escaped did not show contributory negligence. France v. Salt Lake & O. R. Co. [Utah] 88 P. 1. The mere fact that a horse was on the railroad track does not show contributory negligence on the part of the owner, nor is it proof of negligence though the horse was allowed to run at large or was negligently cared for. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Smith [Md.] 64 A. 317. Where animals are injured on an unfenced track, the mere fact that the owner permitted them to unlawfully run at large does not constitute contributory negligence per se. Sarja v. Great Northern R. Co., 99 Minn. 332, 109 N. W. 600. It is not contributory negligence to permit a colt to follow its dam while being driven. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Delliplane, 119 Ill. App. 122.

49. Whether an owner was guilty of contributory negligence in turning horses out to graze on unenclosed land near the depot held a question for the jury. Wilmot v. Oregon R. Co. [Or.] 87 P. 528. Where animals were injured, whether the owner was guilty of contributory negligence in turning them into a clearing on his own land, knowing the fence adjoining the right of way was insufficient to hold them, held a question for the jury. Sarja v. Great Northern R. Co., 99 Minn. 332, 109 N. W. 600.

50. See 6 C. L. 1227.

51. In such case the railroad is only charged with a degree of care proportionate to the danger. Gracy v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Fla.] 42 So. 903. It is erroneous to charge that it is the duty of a railway company to keep its right of way clear of combustible materials and structures where buildings on the right of way with wooden roofs took fire from sparks and communicated to another's property. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Sprague [Kan.] 87 P. 733.

52. A railroad company, free from negligence is not liable for damages from fire kindled by sparks from a locomotive. Gracy v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Fla.] 42 So. 903. A railroad is not liable if fire catches off the right of way from sparks from an engine properly equipped and carefully operated, as there is no negligence. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 623, 53 S. E. 448.

53. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. O'Brien [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1131. Where fire catches in combustible material negligently permitted to accummulate on the right of way from an engine on which the spark appliances are in good condition, and it is being carefully operated, the company is liable. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 623, 53 S. E. 448. Evidence sufficient to show negligence in permitting fire to escape from a right of way when it appeared that combustible materials allowed to accumulate on the right of way had caught, and that a wind was blowing toward plaintiff's premises and the fire commenced to spread shortly after a train passed. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. O'Brien [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1131. The act of a railway company in permitting its right of way to be covered with inflammable material is negligence and sufficient in itself to authorize recovery where fire spread therefrom to adjoining land without intervening or independent cause. Knott v. Cape Fear & N. R. Co., 142 N. C. 238, 55 S. E. 150. Whether a railroad company permitted combustible material to accumulate on the right of way held a question for the jury. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 623, 53 S. E. 448.

54. Where combustible materials are permitted to accumulate on the right of way, the use of the best and most approved spark arresters will not excuse negligence in other respects. McMahon v. Hetch-Hetchy & Y. V. R. Co., 2 Cal. App. 400, 84 P. 350. The company is liable if fire orginates in combustible material permitted to accumulate on the right of way, though the engine may have been properly equipped and handled. North Fork Lumber Co. v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 781.

55. Evidence sufficient to show that a fire was set by a locomotive. Union Pac. R. Co., v. Murphy [Neb.] 107 N. W. 757. Whether a shed was set on fire by sparks from an engine held for the jury where the fire was discovered one-half to three-quarters of an hour after engines passed working hard and smoke blew over the premises and there had been no other fire on the premises within an hour before the trains passed. Colorado Midland R. Co. v. Snider [Colo.] 88 P. 453.

56. Where employes of the company set a fire close to a platform upon which cotton was placed for shipment, evidence sufficient to show that it was burned because of negligence of the company's employes. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Clements [Ark.] 99 S. W. 1106. A railroad company is liable for the burning of a building by a fire set by employes on the right of way. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Fithian [Kan.] 85 P. 594. A railway company owes to the owners of isolated buildings near its tracks no duty to diminish the customary speed of trains as they pass on dry and windy days in the abpany is liable. But it must appear that the fire was the result of negligence on the part of the company [57] and that damage was sustained.[58]

Duty as to equipment and operation of engines.[59]—If fire is set by a spark from a defective locomotive or one not having proper appliances or because carelessly operated, the company is liable whether the fire originates on or off the right of way,[60] but a railroad is not absolutely bound to use the safest and best spark appliances but only to use reasonable care to supply the safest and best.[61] A railroad sence of previous fires or other evidence of the danger of setting a fire. Woodward v. Chicago, etc., R. Co.[C. C. A.] 145 F. 577. Evidence sufficient to show that a fire was the result of negligence of the railroad company. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Hayes [Ind.] 79 N. E. 448. A railroad cannot contend that title to a crop burned was in a tenant where such tenant testified and made no claim thereto. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Farris, 117 Ill. App. 108. Liability for fire extends to those having charge of the engine as well as to the owner of the road. Chicago & Erie R. Co. v. Neilson, 118 Ill. App. 343.

Note: Negligence may be affirmatively proven by the emission of cinders unusual in quantity or size or carried to an unusual height or distance. Anderson v. Railway Co., 45 Or. 211, 77 P. 119; Jacksonville, etc., R. Co. v. Peninsular Land, Transp. & Mfg. Co., 27 Fla. 1, 157, 9 So. 661, 17 L. R. A. 33; Bedell v. Long Island R. Co., 44 N. Y. 367, 4. Am. Rep. 688. Although such circumstantial evidence is not of the most satisfactory character, the jury should weigh it. Johnson v. Railway Co., 31 Minn. 59, 16 N. W. 488; O'Neill v. Railway Co., 115 N. Y. 583, 22 N. E. 217; Henry v. Southern Pac. Ry. Co. 5 Cal. 176; Great Western R. Co. v. Haworth, 39 Ill. 346; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Quaintance, 58 Ill. 389; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Insurance Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1088; Glany v. Railway Co., 119 Iowa, 611, 93 N. W. 575; Huyitt v. Railway Co., 23 Pa. 273. Lowry, J., said: "When we find fires started by a locomotive at distances from 80 to 150 feet from the road how can we say that there is no evidence of negligence." That a fire was started at a distance of 60 feet (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. McCahill, 56 Ill. 29; of 63 feet Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Malone, 109 Ala. 509, 20 So. 33; of 65 feet L. E., etc., R. Co. v. Block, 54 Ill. App. 85), or of 100 feet (Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClellan, 42 Ill. 355), has been held substantive and independent evidence of negligence to be considered by the jury. And see Hull v. R. Co. 14 Cal. 388, 73 Am. Dec. 656; Anderson v. Railway Co., 45 Or. 211, 77 P. 119; Sibiirud v. Railway Co., 29 Min. 58, 11 N. W. 146. On the other hand in Smith v. N. P. R. Co., 3 N. D. 17, 53 N. W. 173, it is held that the mere fact that sparks set fire out at a distance of 118 feet from the track in a heavy wind is not affirmative evidence of negligence. That case has been severely criticised (2 Thompson, on Negligence, 796) and is not in harmony with the weight or better reason of the authorities.—See Continental Ins. Co. v. Chicago & N. R. Co. [Minn.] 107 N. W. 548.

57. Evidence that a fire which burned over a meadow apparently burned from the direction of a railroad is insufficient to show negligence. Funk v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 504. Evidence insufficient to show that a fire was started by sparks from a locomotive where it was not emitting sparks when it passed the building. Wind blowing in an opposite direction, engine not working hard and smoke stack and spark arrester in good condition. Cyle v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. [Colo.] 86 P. 1010. Evidence that a building near the right of way was discovered to be on fire a few minutes after an engine passed is sufficient in the absence of other explanation to justify a finding that it caught by sparks from the engine. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dawson, 77 Ark. 434, 92 S. W. 27. Whether fire was communicated from an engine held a question for the jury. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 623, 53 S. E. 448. Rebuttal evidence consisting largely of expert testimony held insufficient to take the case from the jury. Continental Ins. Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 97 Minn. 467, 107 N. W. 548.

58. Evidence insufficient to show that an owner sustained any damage where the fire burned grass and grass roots on land in possesion of a tenant who had been compensated for his loss. Meyn v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 1096.

59. See 6 C. L. 1228.

60. North Fork Lumber Co. v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 781. Where the jury found that the engine was defective, failure to submit the issue as to the condition of the right of way did not prejudice the railroad company. Id. Where fire escapes from a defective engine or defective spark arrester or from a good engine not carefully operated, or not by a skillful engineer, the railroad company is liable. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 623, 53 S. E. 448. Complaint alleging that a railroad company negligently failed to provide an engine with a proper spark arrester by reason of which fire was set to a certain storehouse from which it was communicated to the premises in question by spreading, held to sufficiently allege negligence. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Martin [Ala.] 42 So. 618. Evidence sufficient to show negligence where it apeared that locotives all equipped with the same kind of screens had the day before thrown out large cinders and set a house on fire. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Richardson [Ky.] 99 S. W. 642. Question of negligence in the management of an engine setting a fire when it appeared that the wheels slipped in starting and a volume of sparks were emitted held properly submitted. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bailey, 222 Ill. 480, 78 N. E. 833.

61. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dawson, 77 Ark. 434, 92 S. W. 27. Are required only to exercise reasonable care in providing appliances and keeping them in good condition so as to prevent fires. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Thompson-Hailey Co. [Ark.] 94 S. W. 707. Instruction held not objectionable as stating the duty of the company too strictly in re-may not escape liability for failure to make inspection of spark arresters by merely showing that it had employed a competent inspector, but must show that a reasonably careful inspection was made.[62]

Contractual exemptions from liability.[63]—A railway company being under no legal duty to grant a privilege to construct an elevator upon its right of way, may without violating any rule of public policy, grant such privilege on condition that it shall not be liable for damages for fire set by its engines.[64]

Contributory negligence[65] of the owner of the property destroyed bars a recovery by him.[66]

Pleading.[67]—The sufficiency of a complaint in alleging negligence is governed by the general rules of pleading.[68]

Evidence, burden of proof, and presumptions.[69]—In an action for damages caused by fire, the ground of recovery is negligence and one seeking to recover has the burden of proof,[70] and he must establish the negligence alleged.[71] He is entitled quiring it to have its engines equipped with the most approved spark appliance. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bailey, 222 Ill. 480, 78 N. E. 833. A railroad is not liable if locomotive is equipped with the best and most approved spark arrester, unless it is carelessly managed. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Richardson [Ky.] 99 S. W. 642.

62. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Hayes [Ind.] 79 N. E. 448. Instruction held erroneous for not including the element of reasonably careful inspection. Id.

63. See 6 C. L. 1228.

64. James Quirk Milling Co. v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 98 Minn. 22, 107 N. W. 742.

65. See 6 C. L. 1228.

66. Where one knew of fire on the right of way a day or two before his barn was burned and left the door of his barn facing the fire open, he was guilty of contributory negligence which precluded recovery, though not pleaded. Brown v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 41 Wash. 688, 84 P. 400. Where cotton was burned on a depot platform where it was placed preparatory to being delivered for shipment, the railroad company has the burden to prove that the owner was negligent in watching the cotton. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Clements [Ark.] 99 S. W. 1106.

67. See 6 C. L. 1228.

68. To constitute negligence in "allowing" a burning negligence must be alleged in the communication or other circumstance that would cast a duty upon the company to put out the fire. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Benedict Pineapple Co. [Fla.] 42 So. 529. In an action for fire, the fact that the railroad company had notice of holes in the spark arrester is covered by an allegation of negligence in maintaining such arrester and need not be specially set out. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Ford [Ind.] 78 N. E. 969. Allegations that fire was set to pasture and fences by sparks does not require proof that the fire was set directly to such objects. It is sufficient if proof shows that fire set by such sparks spread to the fences. Fleming v. Pullen [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 891, 97 S. W. 109. Where the first paragraph of a complaint alleged negligence in omitting to use a safe spark arrester and another paragraph alleged that the spark arrester was in the exclusive control of the railroad company and that plaintiff could not allege what mechanism should have been used, held the latter averment was immaterial and did not negative the prior allegation that defects alleged were the cause of the fire. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Ford [Ind.] 78 N. E. 969.

69. See 6 C. L. 1229.

70. The plaintiff to establish his cause of action must trace the fire from its place of origin and identify it as the cause of the injury. If the evidence shows several prairie fires of different origin, each originating several miles distant, it is not sufficient to show that it is more probable that the fire started by the railroad company was the one that caused the damage. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Fickenscher [Neb.] 110 N. W. 561; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Fosberg [Neb.] 110 N. W. 567; Union Pacific R. Co. v. Westlund [Neb.] 110 N. W. 567; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Fickenscher [Neb.] 110 N. W. 567. Hence an instruction that "the jury are not permitted to infer or presume for want of positive truths to the contrary that the fire was communicated by the operation of the railroad," is correct. Gracy v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Fla.] 42 So. 903. Where witnesses testified that an engine discharged sparks, and when it was started the wheels slipped and a volume of sparks was emitted and blown toward the building, and fire was first seen on the roof, a prima facie case was established. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bailey, 222 Ill. 480, 78 N. E. 833. Where negligent operation of the locomotive consisting in the use of too much steam is relied upon, the connection between such act and the escape of sparks must be shown. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vinyard [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 384. Evidence of other fires set by the locomotive does not show such connection. Id. Where it is alleged that a fire was set by a locomotive, it is not necesary, where evidence as to its origin is conflicting, that the evidence should exclude all possibility of a different origin, but it is sufficient if it warrants a conclusion that the fire did not originate from some other cause. Monte Ne R. Co. v. Phillips [Ark.] 96 S. W. 1060. Evidence sufficient to show negligence in equipping engine, though witnesses for the railroad company swore positively that the spark arrester was in good condition. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Falconer [Ky.] 97 S. W. 727. Where there is evidence that fire was set by sparks emitted from a locomotive which to the benefit of the rule of evidence as to what will constitute a prima facie case, though the fact that fire was communicated from an engine is controvertible.[72] Where a prima facie case is made by showing that fire was set by sparks from an engine, the company has the burden to rebut the presumption of negligence, but the burden of proof does not shift so as to require it to establish the rebuttal by a preponderance of evidence,[73] and where the railroad shows that it has done all that was required of it by law in the equipment and management of the engine, whether the prima facie case is overcome is a question of fact,[74] unless such presumption is overcome as a matter of fact.[75] At common law no presumption of negligence arises from the fact that fire is set out by a locomotive.[76] But in many states proof that fire was so set out is prima facie proof of negligence[77] and casts upon the railroad company the burden of proving its freedom from negligence.[78]

was not equipped with a proper spark arrester and was carelessly and negligently operated, it was error to direct a verdict for the railroad. Wilcox v. Evans [Ga.] 56 S. E. 635. Where it appeared that a fire was caused either by a locomotive or by a stove in plaintiff's house, it was proper to refuse to instruct that the verdict should be for the railroad if the jury failed to find the origin of the fire. Monte Ne R. Co. v. Phillips [Ark.] 96 S. W. 1060. Ownership and operation of trains prima facie established. Chicago & Erie R. Co. v. Neilson, 118 Ill. App. 343.

71. Where the only allegation of negligence was permitting the right of way to become foul with combustible matter and the plaintiff's only witness testified that the place where the fire caught was clean, that the season was dry, and that the fire caught off the right of way, the evidence failed to prove the negligence alleged. McCoy v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 142 N. C. 382, 55 S. E. 270.

72. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bailey, 222 Ill. 480, 78 N. E. 833. Instructions to what would consititute a prima facie case held proper. Id.

73. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hooser [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 27, 97 S. W. 708. Instruction requiring such rebuttal held erroneous. Id. Under Rev. St. Ohio 1906, § 3365-6, making the setting of fire by a locomotive prima facie evidence of negligence, the railroad company is required only to counterbalance and not overcome such presumption. The ground of recovery being, as at common law, negligence, the burden is on the plaintiff. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Star Flouring Mills Co. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 953. Where fire is communicated to premises outside the right of way by sparks, the company must show that it used ordinary care to have its engines equipped with the best spark applicances in general use, that ordinary care was used to keep them in repair, and ordinary care in operating the locomotives. St. Louis. S. R. Co. v. Connally [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 206. The burden to prove that the engine was equipped with a proper spark arrester is on the railroad company. North Fork Lumber Co. v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 781. Testimony that the most modern and approved spark arrester was used may be rebutted by evidence that ten fires were set the same day by the engine within two miles of the property burned and by testimony of experts that such fact would indicate that the spark arrester was out of order. Toledo, etc., R. v. Star Flouring Mills Co. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 953.

74. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bailey, 222 Ill. 480, 78 N. E. 833.

75. Where the prima facie case made by showing that fire originated in grass and stubble near the right of way is rebutted by proof that the engine was properly equipped and handled, testimony that a quarter of a mile from the place where the fire originated the engine emitted a great many sparks, and that several fires had been set by sparks during the past few years, is insufficient to go to the jury. Farley v. Mobile & O R. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 747. The prima facie case made by showing that fire was set out by sparks is not rebutted by proof that the engine was properly equipped. Chicago & Erie R. Co. v. Neilson, 118 Ill. App. 343.

76. No presumption of negligence arises from the fact of fire being communicated by an engine in use on the railroad. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. O'Brien [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1131.

77. Where fire was caused by violation of Ky. St. 1903, § 782, requiring railroads to keep appliances on their engines that will prevent escape of sparks "as far as possible," where fire is shown to have been set by sparks, the railroad has the burden to show that the engine was equipped as required by statute. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Falconer [Ky.] 97 S. W. 727. Evidence that a fire caught from sparks is sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dawson, 77 Ark. 434, 92 S. W. 27. Proof that fire was set out without fault on the part of the landowner raises a presumption of negligence in the equipment or management of the engine. Shipman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 110 N. W. 535. But in such case if the evidence is evenly balanced, it is error to instruct that the plaintiff should recover. Id.

78. In an action for damages by fire set by an engine, Gen. St. 1894, § 2700, throws the burden of proof on the railroad company to rebut the presumption of negligence arising from the fact that fire was set. Continental Ins. Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 97 Minn. 467, 107 N. W. 548. This presumption may be rebutted by proof of nonconnection as cause, or of such construction, equipment, and operation of the engine as was required under the circumstances. Such proof must conform in character and extent to the standard by which ordinary cases

Admissibility of evidence.[79]—The origin of the fire may be proven by circumstantial evidence.[80] The emission of sparks at other times may be shown,[81] but it is not admissible to show that other fires were set at other times[82] or that other engines emitted sparks,[83] unless it appears that all were similarly equipped[84] or that are measured. Id. The adequacy of such proof must also be determined in view of any other facts tending to show negligence, appearing in the testimony in addition to those sufficient to give rise to the statutory presumption which tend to show negligence. Id. Unless the rebutting evidence is conclusion as to both facts and inferences, the question is for the jury. Id. The presumption of negligence or of defects in machinery from scattering fire, raised by Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 2700, was created to change the burden of proof. When this has been done and the evidence introduced, it is functus officio, and cannot be used to raise an issue which the evidence does not present. Woodward v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 577. Where employes of a railroad company testify that there are no defects in a locomtive or that care has been used to avoid them and that a locomtive was operated with care, and the evidence is so conclusive that an opposite finding could not be sustained, the statutory presumption is overcome as a matter of law. Id.

NOTE. Rebuttal of the statutory presumption of negligence: Many courts hold that it is necessarily for the jury to weigh the statutory presumption of negligence in the balance against the evidence of the railroad company in rebuttal. Greenfield v. Railway Co., 83 Iowa, 270, 49 N. W. 95; West Side M. F. I. Co. v. Railway Co. [Iowa] 95 N. W. 193; G. N. R. Co. v. Coates, 53 [C. C. A.] 382, 115 F 452; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Bales, 16 Kan. 252; Atchison, etc, R. Co. v. Geiser, 68 Kan. 281, 75 P. 68; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Funk, 85 Ill. 460; Sappington v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 14 Mo. App. 86; Palmer v. Railway Co., 76 Mo. 217; Babcock v. Railway Co., 62 Iowa, 593, 13 N. W. 740; Hagan v. Railway Co. 86 Mich. 615, 49 N. W. 509; 2 Thompson, Commentaries on the Law of Negligence, p. 840, Railway companies argue against this rule that it amounts to judicial legislation inasmuch as it converts a rebuttable presumption into an unrebuttable one in effect. According to other authorities, rebuttal by proof that the engine was properly constructed. equipped, maintained, inspected, and operated, is as broad as the presumption of negligence, and justifies the trial court in directing a verdict for the railroad company. Daly v. Railway Co., 43 Minn. 319, 45 N. W. 611; Rosen v. Railway Co., 83 F. 300; Anderson v. Railway Co., 45 Or. 211, 77 P. 119; Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Craig, 14 Ill. App. 407; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Benson, 69 Tex. 407, 5 S. W. 822, 5 Am. St. Rep. 74; Menominee Co. v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 91 Wis. 447, 65 N. W. 176; Smith v. N. P. R. Co., 3 N. D. 17, 53 N. W. 173; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Marbury Lumber Co., 125 Ala. 237, 28 So. 438, 50 L. R. A. 620; 2 Thompson, Commentaries on the Law of Negligence, p. 796 N. 30.—See Continental Ins. Co. v. Chicago & N. R. Co. [Minn.] 107 N. 80. Kearney County v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 108 N. W. 131. Evidence sufficient to show the origin of the fire. Id. It may be proved by circumstantial evidence that fire was set by sparks. Direct evidence is not necessary. Fleming v. Pullen [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 891, 97 S. W. 109. Negligence in permitting fire to escape from the right of way may be established by circumstantial evidence. Baltimore, etc. R. Co. v. O'Brien [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1131. In an action for burning a barn and house where it was claimed that the barn was set by sparks from an engine and the fire communicated to the house from the barn, evidence as to how the sparks were carried from the burning barn is admissible as part of the occurrence tending to show the extent of the fire. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Hayes [Ind.] 79 N. E. 448.

81. Evidence of the emission of sparks from engines about the time of or a little before the fire is admissible. McMahon v. Hetch-Hetchy & Y. V. R. Co., 2 Cal. App. 400, 84 P. 350. Proof that the engine which set the fire was seen to emit sparks at other times is admissible. Fleming v. Pullen [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 891, 97 S. W. 109. Evidence that an engine emitted sparks the day after the fire was set is admissible. Johnson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 574, 53 S. E. 362. A question asked a witness as to the emission of sparks from an engine "a short while" prior to the time of the fire held not objectionable for indefiniteness as to time, since it could be ascertained with more definiteness by cross-examination. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Martin [Ala.] 42 So. 618. Where a fire was set on April fourth, testimony that the engine was seen to emit sparks between the preceding February and April which set fire on the right of way near where the fire in question was set is admissible. Knott v. Cape Fear & N. R. Co., 142 N. C. 238, 55 S. E. 150.

82. Proof of, fires at othe times near where the engine passed is not admissible. Fleming v. Pullen [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 891, 97 S. W. 109. Where in an action against a railroad company for damages from a fire caused by sparks emitted from a particular engine it is error to admit evidence that other engines at other times set fires. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Loos [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 948. In an action for fire set by sparks from an engine, testimony by one that he rode on what he thought was the same train the day following the fire, and a car of cotton seed hulls attached to the train caught fire, was not admissible where he did not state that the engine emitted sparks or set the fire. Johnson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 574, 53 S. E. 362.

83. Where evidence identified the engine from which sparks setting the fire were emitted, and there was no evidence that any other engine caused the fire, testimony that at another time sparks were emitted by another engine is not admissible Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bailey, 222 Ill. 480, 78 N. E. 833. Error in admitting such evidence is cured by directing the jury not to consider it. Id.

84. Where it appears that locomotives are all under one management and are all such testimony is introduced only for the purpose of impeachment.[85] It is also admissible to show the condition of the spark appliances.[86] Evidence of a custom of inspection by the railroad company is admissible.[87] An experienced engineer may testify as an expert as to the proper manner of handling an engine near combustible material.[88]

Instructions[89] must properly submit the issues made by the pleadings and evidence,[90] must not be misleading,[91] argumentative,[92] on the weight of evidence,[93] nor impose too high a degree of proof,[94] nor summarize the facts upon which recovery may be had without stating the exceptions.[95]

An alleged variance consisting of a finding that the fire started in a manure pile instead of in a barn as alleged cannot be raised on answers to interrogatories.[96] equipped with the same kind of spark appliances, it is admissible to show that cinders were thrown out by other engines or that fires were set by them. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Richardson [Ky.] 99 S. W. 642.

85. Where witnesses for the railroad company testified that all locomotives were properly equipped with spark arresters and plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the fire was set by sparks from a certain engine, it was held proper to ask plaintiff's witness whether engines operated on the road emitted sparks and whether they were of unusual size and quantity, as such testimony tended to contradict the defendant's witness. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Martin [Ala.] 42 So. 618.

86. Testimony of the condition of devices upon a locomotive for arresting sparks at various times within a month preceding a fire set is not too remote. Woodward v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 577. Where the cause of action generally alleged was permitting combustible material to accumulate on the right of way, but it is also alleged that the spark arrester on the engine was defective, testimony that fire box and and spark arrester was defective is harmless. Knott v. Cape Fear & N. R. Co., 142 N. C. 238, 55 S. E. 150.

87. Testimony that for a number of years the company had required the firemen of passenger trains, and that it had been their custom, to inspect dampers, ashpans, etc., before starting on their trips, and if anything was needed to report, is competent on an issue of negligence of the railroad company. Woodward v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 577. Evidence of a book of private rules regulating the conduct of the business of the railroad company held inadmissible. Continental Ins. Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 97 Minn. 467, 107 N. W. 548.

90. Where cotton was burned after being placed upon a depot platform preparatory to being delivered to the company for shipment, instructions held to cover the issue of contributory negligence. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Clements [Ark.] 99 S. W. 1106. Instructions in an action for a fire set out by sparks held not to narrow or vary from the issues. Gracy v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Fla.] 42 So. 903. An instruction in an action for fire set by sparks that, unless the fire was set by sparks, the jury should find for the railroad company, presented the defense that engines were equipped with spark arresters and carefully handled, only in a general way and a more specific charge should be given when requested. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Connally [Tex. Civ. App.] 983 S. W. 206.

91. An instruction that it is the duty of the railroad to use all "reasonable precaution" in operating trains and providing its engines with spark arresters, followed by an instruction stating the circumstances hypothetically that "a greater degree of care" was required than under ordinary conditions, held the latter instruction was misleading in requiring more than ordinary care under the circumstances hypothesized Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Ford [Ind.] 78 N. E. 969. Where the only issue was whether the fire was caused by negligent operation of a locomotive, it was not error to refuse to instruct that the law did not require the use of coal as fuel, and that the use of wood would not be negligent. Monte Ne R. Co. v. Phillips [Ark.] 96 S. W. 1060.

92. Instruction that the fact of fire being communicated to a building by an engine might be established by proof of circumstances giving rise to inferences, provided such circumstances constituted a preponderance of the evidence, held not argumentative. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bailey, 222 Ill. 480, 78 N. E. 833. Instructions that the mere fact that fire originated from sparks emitted was not sufficient to fasten liability upon the company, and that the mere fact that fire originated along the road does not show that it was set by the engine held argumentative. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Martin [Ala.] 42 So. 618.

93. An instruction that the railroad was not liable because the engine was properly equipped and carefully operated was properly refused as on the facts. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 623, 53 S. E. 448.

94. Instruction defining ordinary care in an action for fire set by sparks held not to impose too high a degree of care. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Connally [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 206.

95. An instruction authorizing recovery if combustible material was permitted to accumulate on the right of way, and fire caught and spread therefrom, held not erroneous as summarizing the facts upon which a recovery might be had without stating the exceptions. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Connally [Tex. Civ. App.] 93 S. W. 206.

Damages[97] recoverable are such as might reasonably be expected to follow.[98]

(§ 11) K. Actions for injuries.[99]—The venue of actions is governed by statute.[1] The law of the place where the injury occurred controls as to the duties of the train employes.[2]

Pleadings[3] must conform to statutory requirements,[4] and allegations of negligence should be specific.[5] A general allegation of negligence is sufficient.[6] A general allegation of wantonness and willfulness will authorize any proof on the subject.[7] If plaintiff claims to have been a licensee the complaint should so aver.[8]

Burden of proof.[9]—One injured at a crossing has the burden to prove negligence on the part of the railroad company and that he was free from contributory negligence,[10] in the absence of statutes making negligence presumptive.[11] After a

98. A complaint for damages to fruit by freezing because the covering was burned by sparks from a locomotive must show that the railroad knew that such result might reasonably be expected to follow from the burning. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Benedict Pineapple Co. [Fla.] 42 So. 529. Where wood is burned, the measure of damages is the value of the wood in the locality at the time, not its value standing plus cost of cutting. Hart v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 559.

99. See 6 C. L. 1230.

1. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 73, where one is killed while passing over a track, the venue of an action by his administrator is the residence of the intestate and not residence of the adminstrator. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Willis' Adm'r, 29 Ky. L. R. 1187, 97 S. W. 21. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 73, providing that actions for injuries must be brought where defendant resides, or where the injury occurred, or where plaintiff resides, he may sue where he resides if the company has a track in such county, though trains have never been operated upon it. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Sander's Adm'r, 29 Ky. L. R. 212, 92 S. W. 937. Kirby's Dig. § 6776, localizing the action for killing stock to the place of injury, does not prevent bringing an action in Arkansas for stock killed in Indian Territory, as such action does not grow out of the statute. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Ingram [Ark.] 97 S. W. 55.

2. In an action in Arkansas for killing stock in Indian Territory, the law of the latter place governs as to the duty of the engineer. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Ingram [Ark.] 97 S. W. 55. Under the law of that territory it was proper to instruct that it was the duty of the engineer to keep a lookout for stock after they had been discovered, or should have been discovered. Id.

3. See 6 C. L. 1230. Where two steers were struck within two hundred feet by the same train going at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour, and when the second was struck the first was being dragged by the locomotive, there was a single cause of action for killing both. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ramsey [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 669.

4. Code 1876, § 1711, requiring the time and place where the killing occurred to be alleged, has been repealed. Western R. Co. v. McPherson [Ala.] 40 So. 934.

5. A complaint based on Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2864, making railroads liable for negligence of any officer, agent, servant, or employe, while running a train, need not allege that the negligence was that of the agent, etc., but it is sufficient to allege that it was that of the company. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Cox [C. C. A.] 145 F. 157. In an action for death at a crossing, facts disclosing a legal duty owed and negligent performance or failure to perform such duty must be alleged. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. McCandish [Ind.] 79 N. E. 903. In an action for killing an animal, an allegation that the track runs through a certain township without alleging that it run anywhere else is insufficient without express allegation that the accident occurred in that township. Wright v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 469, 95 S. W. 293.

8. Where a complaint alleges the injured person to have been a licensee but the evidence shows he was a servant, the variance is fatal. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Burks [Ala.] 41 So. 638. A complaint by a trespasser which fails to show willful or intentional injury does not state a cause of action. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stegall's Adm'x, 105 Va. 538, 54 S. E. 19; Rosenthal v. New York, etc., R. Co., 112 App. Div. 436, 98 N. Y. S. 479. Amendment to a complaint for injuries to a trespasser held to sufficiently meet the objections urged by the demurrer. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. O'Neill [Ga.] 56 S. E. 986.

9. See 6 C. L. 1231.

10. Wright v. Boston, etc., R. Co. [N. H.] 65 A. 687. Where one was killed at a crossing, the absence of evidence of what he did at the time cannot be supplied by conjecture or by the theory that he did what an ordinarily prudent person would have done. Id. One injured at a crossing must prove the negligence alleged. Southern R. Co. v. Reynolds, 126 Ga. 657, 55 S. E. 1039. On a general allegation of negligence in running a train and particular negligence in failing to give statutory signals, proof that plaintiff was injured by a train makes out a prima facia case and shifts the burden of proof to the company. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Evans [Ark.] 96 S. W. 616. Where one was killed at a crossing his freedom from contributory negligence is not established by presenting no evidence, but relying on his instinct of self preservation as proof that he exercised due care. Wright v. Boston & M. R. R. Co. [N. H.] 65 A. 687.

11. Ann. Code 1892, § 1808, providing that proof of injury inflicted to persons or prop-plaintiff shows that he was injured, a presumption of negligence as alleged arises and the company has the burden to make out its defense.[12] Because of the natural instinct of self preservation, it is presumed in the absence of evidence that one approaching a railroad crossing exercises due care and caution.[13] But in the absence of testimony it is not presumed that his team became frightened and that he lost control of them.[14] This presumption is one of fact and is rebuttable and cannot exist where it is incompatible with the conduct of a person to whom it is sought to apply it.[15] Where a licensee is killed, the presumption based on instinct of self preservation that he exercised due care does not apply where surrounding circumstances conclusively show contributory negligence.[16] Whether the presumption that one killed at a crossing stopped, looked, and listened, is rebutted, is for the jury, unless evidence to the contrary is positive or a verdict against it would be erroneous as a matter of law.[17]

Evidence.[18]—The evidence should be confined to the issues made by the pleadings,[19] but all evidence relevant to such issues is admissible.[20] Rules of a defendant

erty by the running of trains is prima facia proof of negligence on the part of the railroad company, imposes a liability where one is killed by a train unless the company exonerates itself. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Landrum [Miss.] 42 So. 675. Evidence sufficient to show the company liable. Id.

12. This is so though it is alleged in different counts that the injury occurred in either one of two ways because of various acts of negligence alleged. Gainesville & Dahlonega Elec. R. Co. v. Austin [Ga.] 56 S. E. 254. Under Laws 1891, c. 4071, p. 113, when an action is brought against a railroad for personal injury, plaintiff has the burden of proving the injury and the railroad company its freedom from negligence. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 43 So. 235.

13. Wabash R. Co. v. De Tar [C. C. A.] 141 F. 932. Where one is killed at a crossing and there are no witnesses, it is presumed that he exercised ordinary care on approaching the crossing. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Baumgartner [Kan.] 85 P. 822. Where one was killed at a crossing and it did not appear that he did not look and listen, the company has the burden to show that he did not do so in order to prove contributory negligence. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Baskins [Ark.] 93 S. W. 757. Where one is killed it is presumed in the absence of any evidence that he exercised due care. Porter v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 880. Natural instincts of self-preservation are to be considered. Elgin, etc., R. Co. v. Hoadley, 122 Ill. App. 165.

14. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Baumgartner [Kan.] 85 P. 822. One presumption cannot be made the basis of another. Id.

15. Where inconsistent with testimony of eyewitnesses or by evidence of physical surroundings and other conditions. Wabash R. Co. v. De Tar [C. C. A.] 141 F. 932.

16. Rich v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 79. This presumption is inferior in probative force to credible evidence explanatory of the actual occurrence, and, in those courts where the presumption underlies the rule that the burden of proving contributory negligence is on the defendant and must be maintained by a fair preponderance of evidence, its force is so largely embodied in that rule that it has little independent application save as it rests on the general rule of human experience. Wabash R. Co. v. De Tar [C. C. A.] 141 F. 932. The presumption that one killed at a crossing exercised due care to avoid injury is destroyed where it appears that had he looked or listened he could have heard and seen the train approaching. Bressler v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Kan.] 86 P. 472. The presumption that one killed at a crossing exercised due care is overcome by evidence that if he had looked and listened he could have heard and seen the train approaching. Porter v. Missouri Pac. 19. Allegations of injury sustained in a crossing collision is not sustained by proof that he was injured while alighting from a train. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson [Ky.] 100 S. W. 302.

20. On conflicting evidence as to the rate of speed where a witness testified that the train was running at the "usual rate," evidence as to the usual rate is not error. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Goulding [Fla.] 42 So. 854. An allegation that plaintiff "had occasion to walk a short distance on the railroad track of the defendant" and was struck by an engine authorizes him to testify that at the time and place of the injury he was walking on the track. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 43 So. 235. In an action for damages on account of the striking of the decedent by a locomotive at a grade crossing, testimony is competent as to the presence of a side track with cars standing upon it, which to some degree obstructed the view of the decedent as he approached the crossing, and records of railroad company showing the presence of such cars is competent, although not produced by the party who made the records. Wheeling & Lake Erie R. Co. v. Parker, 9 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 28. Evidence that the decedent was familiar with the crossing is competent, but evidence tending to show that he was guilty of negligence at the same crossing on previous occasions is incompetent. Id.

Photographs of a crossing where an accident occurred taken three years after the accident are inadmissible where it is not shown that the locus in quo remained in the company are admissible upon the issue of negligence without being pleaded.[21] Plaintiff may show that accident occurred at time when there was usually the greatest amount of travel on the crossing.[22] The order of proof rests in the discretion of the court.[23] Any intelligent person who has observed the speed of trains and timed them is competent to give an opinion as to the speed of a particular train.[24] Whether an engineer took every precaution he could take to stop the train and avoid injury is not a proper subject for expert testimony,[25] nor is the question whether a crossing is dangerous.[26]

Instructions[27] should specifically[28] submit the issues made by the pleadings[29] and none other.[30] Questions of law should not be submitted.[31] The issues should same condition. Columbia, etc., R. Co. v. State [Md.] 65 A. 625. Statements by one immediately after he was run over at a crossing that the injury was the result of his own negligence are admissible as res gestae. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Clarkson [C. C. A.] 147 F. 397. It is competent to show that the street crossing where an injury occurred had been abandoned and was not commonly used as a crossing. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Garrett [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 162. Witnesses who saw the accident may testify that they could have heard signals if any had been given. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Knowles [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 867. Testimony of witnesses as to the distance within which they had seen similar trains stopped is not objectionable as an opinion as to the distance within which such a train could be stopped. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Brannon [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 844, 96 S. W. 1095. Rules of an electric company governing employes where they are at a crossing are competent on the question of their conduct. Chicago City R. Co. v. Lowitz, 119 Ill. App. 360.

It is not competent to show that a railroad was not prosecuted for obstructing a crossing, that it had been closed up and abandoned after the accident. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Garrett [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 162. Evidence that a number of persons had been killed at a crossing did not tend to show that it was dangerous. Tiffin v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 93 S. W. 564. Not error to exclude evidence that it was the habit and rule of the company to give warning whenever a train was moved. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Garrett [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 162.

An ordinance closing a street held not admissible as the city council had no authority to close it and give the railroad exclusive use of the place. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Garrett [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 162.

24. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 509. One familiar with trains and possessed of a knowledge of time and distance is competent to testify as to speed of a train. Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Webb [Colo.] 85 P. 683. Persons who live at the side of the track, who can tell when a train is going at a high rate of speed, and who have observed trains and their speed, are competent to testify as to the speed of a particular train. Garrau v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 144 Mich. 26, 13 Det. Leg. N. 97, 107 N. W. 284. One who has lived by the side of a track for four years and has observed the speed of trains and had timed trains between stations is competent to give an opinion as to the speed of a train when it collided with a team at a crossing. Line v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 143 Mich. 163, 12 Det. Leg. N. 929, 106 N. W. 719. One who has railroaded for from sixteen to twenty years is competent to give an opinion as to the speed of a train. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 43 So. 235.

28. Where mules were killed, an instruction referring to the negligences of the company should state what it consisted of. Johnston v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 308, 93 S. W. 866. Such instruction should also include the hypothesis whether the negligence was the proximate cause of the accident. Id.

29. Instruction in an action for frightening a team held erroneous for failure to require that the negligence hypohesized was the proximate cause of the injury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mertz, Ibach & Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 7. Instructions in an action for injuries at a crossing that if decedent by approaching cautiously could have seen or heard the train, and if he voluntarily placed himself in danger he could not recover, and that he was not excused from looking and listening by the fact that the train was running at high speed, was late, and passed at an unusual time, and that the train was entitled to the right of way, held to properly submit the questions of proximate cause and contributory negligence. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bethea [Miss.] 40 So. 813. An instruction that if the collision was the proximate result of the company's negligence, and the injured party was free from contributory negligence, fairly submitted the question of negligence in failing to ring the bell or blow the whistle. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Elledge [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 545, 93 S. W. 499.

30. Where a complaint alleges two statutory grounds of recovery and evidence is introduced in support of both, but there is no right of recovery as to one, it is error to refuse to withdraw it from the jury. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Cox [C. C. A.] 145 F. 157. It was proper to refuse an instruction as to whether a gate at a farm crossing was left be submitted fairly.[32] Instructions should not be on the weight of evidence.[33] Controverted facts should not be assumed.[34] Undue prominence should not be given to particular facts [35] and material facts should not be ignored.[36] Instructions should not conflict with each other [37] nor be misleading.[38] Requested instructions not open by third persons where there was no evidence that such was the fact. Roberts v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 372, 94 S. W. 838. Where a complaint charges a liability predicated on violation of a statute, it is error to charge anything on common-law liability except so far as the two were concurrent. Chesapeake & N. R. Co. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368. The better practice in such case is to charge the statute and not mention the common law. Id. Instructions in an action predicated on violation of a statutory duty held erroneous because inapplicable to the pleadings. Id. Where the condition of a crossing was not shown to have had anything to do with an accident, it was error to instruct relative to its dangerous condition. Porter v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 880.

31. An instruction submitting whether a horse was lawfully in a field held erroneous as submitting a question of law. Carpenter v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 204, 95 S. W. 985.

32. Instruction held erroneous as requiring a finding of freedom from contributory negligence in order to exonerate the railroad. Chesapeake & N. R. Co. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368. Where in an action for injuries at a crossing, whether the company was guilty of negligence was sharply contested. Held error to give a separate and distinct instruction postulating right to recover on freedom from contributory negligence. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Dillard [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 393, 94 S. W. 426. Where a complaint alleged negligence generally but evidence tended to show specific acts, an instruction as broad as the allegations is erroneous. Mulderig v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 655, 94 S. W. 801. Where one on the right of way contended that his injury was caused by the negligent and wanton acts of train operatives, it was proper to refuse an instruction designating the occurrence as an accident. Southern R. Co. v. Hill, 125 Ga. 354, 54 S. E. 113.

33. Instruction in an action for injuries at a crossing held not to constitute an opinion on the facts. Wilson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 142 N. C. 333, 55 S. E. 257. An instruction leaving to the jury whether a speed ordinance had been violated, and if so declaring it to be negligence and requiring the jury to find the proximate cause of the injury, held not on the weight of evidence. Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Frugia [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 724, 95 S. W. 563.

34. Where evidence showed that a licensee was not seen by operatives of the train, an instruction relative to the duty of such operatives, if the place of the accident was used as a crossing by a large number of people, held not to assume that he was seen. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Carr [Va.] 56 S. E. 276. Where evidence showed that operatives in charge of a train did not see a licensee, it was proper to refuse an instruction assuming that they did. Id. It is error to assume that one injured at a crossing knew a train was approaching where the evidence tended to show otherwise. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Murray [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 144. Instruction in an action for injuries at a crossing held to assume that the person injured was guilty of contributory negligence and that he did not look and listen. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State [Md.] 64 A. 304. It is error to refuse to charge on the hypothesis of sudden appearance on the crossing too late to stop the train, though testimony of train operatives on such point was controverted. Chesapeake & N. R. Co. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368.

35. An instruction that it is the duty of a pedestrian approaching a crossing to stop, look, and listen, gives undue prominence to facts constituting contributory negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ueltschi's Ex'rs, 29 Ky. L. R. 1136, 97 S. W. 14. Instructions as a whole held not to authorize a recovery in the absence of negligence. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Josey [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 585, 95 S. W. 688.

36. An instruction ignoring the fact that a watchman was kept at a crossing to warn travelers of approaching trains is properly refused. Southern R. Co. v. Stockdon [Va.] 56 S. E. 713. Instruction in an action for injuries at a crossing held erroneous as ignoring evidence of the company's duty to have a man on the rear of a train backing over a crossing. Mulderig v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 655, 94 S. W. 801. Instruction held not objectionable as lending color to plaintiff's theory that the injured person was walking along the track with his back to the train and did not see its approach. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Murray [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 144.

37. An instruction that the running of the train at a higher speed than was permitted by town ordinance was not negligence which would render the company liable is not contradicted by one to the effect that such fact, if it was a fact, could be considered. Southern R. Co. v. Stockdon [Va.] 56 S. E. 713. Instructions in an action for injuries sustained at a defective crossing held irreconcilably conflicting. Porter v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 880. Nor is it in conflict with one to the effect that a traveler approaching a crossing might assume that the speed ordinance would be obeyed, and the fact that it was not, if so, could be considered in determining the question of contributory negligence. Id.

38. In an action for injuries to property, instructions held not misleading as containing conflicting statements. Chesapeake & N. R. Co. v. Crews [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 368. Instructions in an action for injuries sustained because of a team becoming frightened at the approach of a train, held misleading. Johnson v. Texas & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 206. Where there was evidence that the engineer saw a traveler on the track in a place of danger and could have stopped the train in time to have avoided the injury, it was proper to refuse an instruction that there could be no recovery if there was mutual negligence, and substantially covered by other instructions should be given,[39] but if substantially covered they may be refused.[40] If instructions taken as a whole are correct, it is sufficient.[41]

Double damages and attorney's fees [42] are provided for by statute.[43]

§ 12. Railroad corporations.[44]—In organizing a railroad corporation statutory requirements must be complied with.[45] Failure of a railroad company to organize under an act authorizing its organization within the time prescribed does not prevent a valid organization thereafter, unless a forfeiture has been declared by the state.[46] Though a railroad corporation is quasi public in its nature, its property is private property and cannot be taken for private use.[47] A railroad corporation which succeeds to the property and rights of another on sale on foreclosure or other judicial sale is not liable for the general debts of such corporation.[48] In interstate operations railroads are subject to Federal control.[49] The fact that a railroad attempts each contributed to the injury. Johnson v. Center [Cal. App.] 88 P. 727. Failure to define negligence in an action for injuries to a horse held not error where no request was made. Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Webb [Colo.] 85 P. 683. An instruction that statutory signals need not be given within city limits was not erroneous for failure to define "city" so as to include the city where the accident occurred. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 509.

39. In an action for death of one killed at a crossing, an instruction that, if deceased stepped in front of the train when it was so near that it could not be stopped, he could not recover held not covered by other instructions as to the duties of the parties in the premises, and it was error to refuse it. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ploeger [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 474, 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 183, 93 S. W. 226.

40. Refusal of an instruction as to the duty of a railroad company to keep gates at a crossing held not error because it was covered by other instructions. Tiffin v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 93 S. W. 564. Instructions as to the duty of a traveler approaching a crossing held to fully cover the law on the issue of contributory negligence and that it was not error to refuse requests on that point. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dillard [Ark.] 94 S. W. 617.

41. Where it was charged that if the railroad was negligent in running its train and plaintiff was free from contributory negligence he could recover, such instructions were not objectionable for failure to confine the jury to the negligence alleged; correct instructions as to negligence having been given. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Evans [Ark.] 96 S. W. 616. In an action for injuries at a crossing where the main charge fairly submitted the question of contributory negligence, a requested instruction not strictly correct was properly refused. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Elledge [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 545, 93 S. W. 499. An instruction in an action for injuries at a crossing, designed to inform the jury as to the injured party's duty where he found himself in a perilous position because of failure to give statutory signals, was not erroneous for failure to include the element that failure to give such signals was the cause of the injury. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Hamill, 226 Ill. 88, 80 N. E. 745. A charge that if plaintiff's own negligence contributed to his injury, followed by another that if he showed by a preponderance of evidence that he was injured by reason of the company's negligence the burden was on the company to show contributory negligence, construed as a whole, held not to withdraw evidence of contributory negligence from the jury. Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. McQueeney [Ark.] 92 S. W. 1120. An instruction that there can be no recovery where each party is equally negligent held not erroneous though not a complete statement of the law where other instructions supplemented it. Johnson v. Center [Cal. App.] 88 P. 727. Where in an action for injuries to a horse at a farm crossing the submission of whether the gate was open because of absence of hook or latch was not error where "hook or latch" was defined in other instructions. Roberts v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 372, 94 S. W. 838.

42. See 6 C. L. 1235.

43. Where in an action under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, for killing stock, where the jury returns a verdict for damages and "all other and proper relief according to the statute," the court properly doubled the damages as provided. Carpenter v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 204, 95 S. W. 985.

44. See 6 C. L. 1235. See, also, Corporations, 7 C. L. 862.

45. Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 23, §§ 243, 245, providing that incorporators of a railroad company shall make a certificate specifying the names of the places of termini and the places through which it shall pass, and authorizing such company to construct a road between such points, etc., the termini need not be at or in any town, city, or village, and the certificate is sufficient if the places of termini are definitely designated or fixed. 47. 24 St. at L. p. 956, requiring railroad companies to build spur tracks connecting industries with the main line, costs to be paid by the industries and repaid from freight charges, is a taking of private property for private use. Mays v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 30.

48. Lincoln Tp. v. Kansas City & O. R. Co. [Neb.] 108 N. W. 140.

49. That the Hepburn Act prohibits a railroad from transporting from state to state a commodity mined or produced by it or in which it has an interest is not ground for forbidding a receiver of such road to

to prevent legislation by bribery does not render it liable on an obligation to be imposed by such legislation.[50] A railroad corporation may not be restrained from doing an unauthorized act at the suit of a private individual.[51] A state legislature has power to regulate the increase of capital stock of railway corporations.[52] In the exercise of this power the legislature may prescribe for what purpose and upon what terms, conditions and limitations an increase of capital stock may be made, and confer upon a commission the duty of supervising any proposed increase.[53] It may also delegate the duty of finding facts in each particular case and authorize and require it, if it finds the existence of facts which bring the case within the statute, to allow the proposed increase, otherwise to refuse it.[54] Any statute, however, which attempts to authorize the commission in its judgment to allow an increase for such purposes and on such terms as it may deem advisable, or in its discretion to refuse it, is void as an attempt to delegate legislative power.[55]

Powers of corporations and authority of officers [56] are defined by its articles and by-laws.[57] The power to offer a reward for the arrest and conviction of persons placing obstructions on the track is incident to the business and duties of the general manager of a railroad and within the scope of his agency.[58]

§ 13. Actions by and against railroad companies.[59]—The venue of actions against railroad companies is controlled by statute,[60] as is also the service of process.[61] Actions against receivers for violation of the interstate commerce act must issue certificates and expend money to open and develop new mines, it not appearing that all the coal could not be marketed in the state or the mines sold. Central Trust Co. v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 837.

50. Where the right of a state to recover from a railroad company net profits in excess of a certain per cent. on the cost of construction depended on prior legislative action which had not been taken, the fact that the railroad had attempted to prevent such legislation by bribery is insufficient to render it liable. State v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. [Ind.] 77 N. E. 1077.

51. Only the public and not a private owner can restrain the construction of an elevated side track from the main line to an industrial establishment regardless of whether such construction is authorized. Thornton v. Stevens Coal Co., 117 Ill. App. 376. An owner may not restrain a railroad company from constructing and operating tracks and freight sheds on its own property where it is separated from the property of the abutting owner by a sixty-foot street, notwithstanding injury may result to his property. Walther v. Chicago & Western I. R. Co., 117 Ill. App. 364.

55. Section 2872, Rev. Laws 1905, is void as delegating legislative power. State v. Great Northern R. Co. [Minn.] 111 N. W. 289.

56. See 6 C. L. 1236.

57. Under the by-laws of a company providing that the president should be chief executive officer and supervise all other officers and departments, one appointed consulting engineer by the board of directors could be directed by the president to perform such services in connection with a contemplated extension of the road. Bogart v. New York, etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1093. Railroad Laws, Laws 1895, p. 317, c. 545, § 59, providing that no railroad shall exercise its corporate powers until articles of association have been published and proof of publication filed, nor until the railroad commissioners shall certify that public convenience requires construction of the road, limits the authority of the board of commissioners to issue the certificate of necessity, and it has no power to grant the certificate if the route asked varies materially from that proposed in the articles. In re Directors of Ticonderoga Union Terminal R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 107.

58. Arkansas S. W. R. Co. v. Dickinson [Ark.] 95 S. W. 802. Where offers of such rewards had been posted for three years to the knowledge of the president, evidence held sufficient to show that he ratified the offer. Id. Acts of a general manager of a railroad are admissible to show the extent of his authority. Id.

60. An action of injunction to prevent closing of an under grade crossing operates in personam and is not one of those provided by Civ. Code, § 46, which must be brought in the county where the subject of the action is situated. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wynkoop [Kan.] 85 P. 595.

61. Evidence sufficient to show that persons on whom process was served were agents of the railroad company and that service was properly made on them. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Locke [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 356, 92 S. W. 258. Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 110, par. 2, providing for suing a railroad company, and service of process authorizes service by publication when no officer is found in the county where service is brought, though the principal officer of the company is in the state and the action is for a judgment in personam. Nelson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 225 Ill. 197, 80 N. E. 109. Such statute is not void as authorizing service which does not constitute due process. Id.

be brought within the limitation period.[62, 63] The penalty for violation of the safety appliance act may be recovered against any one or all of the companies joined.[64]

§ 14. Offenses relating to railroads.[65]—In many states statutes have been enacted declaring certain acts committed by a railroad company to be criminal, such as running freight trains on Sunday,[66] failure to give crossing signals,[67] failure to supply drinking water for passengers,[68] obstructing crossings [69] and the like. It has also been declared an offense to loiter around railroad premises [70] or to place obstructions on a railroad track.[71]

62, 63. An alleged liability of receivers of a railroad company for participating in a through freight rate which was in violation of the interstate commerce act not presented within time limited by decree of sale of railroad company's assets held unenforceable either against the receivers or the succeeding corporation. Western New York & P. R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 343. Where receivers of a railroad company had been finally discharged and released from all liability on their bonds more than four years before the bringing of an action to enforce an interstate commerce reparation order, for an alleged participation by the receivers in an illegal freight rate, and there was no evidence of any vacation of the orders of discharge or any application in that behalf, the receivers were not liable as such. Western New York & P. R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co. [C. C. A.] 137 F. 343.

64. In a joint action against more than one railroad to recover the penalty for violation of Safety Appliance Act, 27 Stat. 531, a recovery may be had against any one or all of the defendants as the proof warrants. United States v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 143 F. 353.

65. See 6 C. L. 1237.

66. Pen. Code 1895, § 420, which prohibits running of freight trains on Sunday, does not apply to a railroad which begins and ends in other states and runs only thirty miles in Georgia. Griggs v. State, 126 Ga. 442, 55 S. E. 179. A verdict of guilty under such state of facts is without support. Id. Pen. Code 1895, § 420, making it a misdemeanor to run a freight train on Sunday, is an internal police regulation and applies to interstate trains. Seale v. State, 126 Ga. 644, 55 S. E. 472.

67. Evidence sufficient to support a conviction for violation of Ky. St. 1903, § 786, requiring giving of crossing signals. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Com., 28 Ky. L. R. 1360, 92 S. W. 299.

68. It is within the general constitutional power of the general assembly to impose upon a railroad the duty to furnish pure drinking water for passengers and to make failure to do so punishable by fine. Southern R. Co. v. State, 125 Ga. 287, 54 S. E. 160. The provision for punishment other than by fine imposed by Pen. Code 1895, § 522, is inoperative because incapable of enforcement. Id.

69. Cr. Code 1896, § 5388, prohibiting obstruction of a highway "by fence, bar or other impediment," does not include a freight car pushed across the highway permitted to remain there for seven hours when it was voluntarily removed. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. State [Ala.] 40 So. 991. An indictment under such statute for running a freight car across the road need not allege want of consent by the county commissioners, such impediment not being a "gate." Id. A railroad unnecessarily placing cars across a highway may be prosecuted for maintaining a nuisance, though under Ky. St. 1903, § 4335, a penalty may be recovered in a civil action. Commonwealth v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 102, 92 S. W. 944.

70. Ordinance making it unlawful to trespass on or loiter around railroad yards or tracks held not unconstitutional as embracing offenses described in other statutes. Tuggles v. Com. [Ky.] 100 S. W. 235.

71. On prosecution of a boy fifteen years of age for putting obstacles weighing from one hundred and fifty to two hundred pounds on the track, where it appeared that he was below average intelligence, and there was little evidence aside from his confession, it was error to refuse to construct for an acquittal if it was found that other persons placed the obstructions on the track. Kirby v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 73, 93 S. W. 1030. On the prosecution of a boy fifteen years of age for obstructing a track, evidence that he was of weak mind and below average intelligence is insufficient to take the case to the jury on the question of insanity. Id. Where in an indictment for obstructing a track owner-essential,[74] it may be constructive as by fear induced by threats.[75] The carnal knowledge must be against the will of the woman,[76] a mere reluctance or passive attitude being insufficient;[77] and hence resistance, though not an element of the crime, becomes a material fact as bearing upon consent,[78] which is presumed unless she resists to the utmost [79] of which she is capable under the circumstances,[80] and continues the same until the consummation of the offense.[81] It is now a universal rule that any penetration, however slight, is sufficient.[82]

(§ 1) B. Female under age of consent.[83]—Carnal knowledge of females under a prescribed age constitutes rape under the statutes of most states regardless of consent,[84] though in Tennessee no conviction can be had for intercourse with a lewd [85] girl over twelve though under the age of consent. Nonconsent not being an element of statutory rape, resistance is immaterial.[86] A pupil after school hours is still under the care of her teacher within the Missouri statute making it a felony for one to have carnal knowledge of a girl under eighteen confided to his care.[87]

(§ 1) C. Attempts and assaults with intent to commit rape; and carnal abuse.[88]—Every element of rape is an ingredient of assault with intent to commit rape except the consummating element of penetration.[89] There must be an intent on the part of one having physical capacity to commit rape [90] to use such force as may be necessary to overcome all resistance and to accomplish sexual intercourse,[91] ship of the track is laid in a name which imports a corporation, a presumption arises that it is a corporation and it is not necessary, even against special demurrer, to allege the fact of incorporation. In determining the sufficiency of the force or the effect of the threat, where both are employed, it is proper to consider the cogency which the threats may have contributed to the force to intensify the influence which the force may have contributed to the threats. and an assault to effectuate such intent which assault must not be with the woman's consent, unless she is under the age of consent,[92] in which case resistance [93] is not essential.

Criminal or carnal abuse as defined by some statutes is the debauchery or injury of the sexual organs of a female and differs from rape in that penetration is not necessary.[94]

§ 2. Indictment and prosecution. A. Indictment or information.[95]—As in other cases, confusion of names in the charging part of the indictment renders it fatally defective,[96] though not the omission of the word "feloniously" or its equivalent in Wisconsin.[97] All the ingredients of the offense must be alleged, as force [98] and nonconsent,[99] or facts making the act statutory rape;[1] but the sex of the prosecutrix may be pleaded by implication,[2] and it is generally held unnecessary to allege that of accused.[3] Where the punishment only, and not the offense, is dependent upon the age of the female, her age need not be alleged.[4]

In statutory rape the information must aver that the female was under the age of consent at the time of carnal knowledge,[5] and where the punishment is affected by consent or nonconsent both may be alleged in separate counts.[6]

An indictment for assault with intent to rape may allege the assault generally without particularizing,[7] but must allege an intent to use all force necessary to carnally know the female against her consent.[8]

Joinder and election.—While the indictment must show under what statute it is drawn, if the facts alleged suggest more than one statutory crime,[9] if the mere fact that intercourse is not accomplished does not affect the crime. Bourland v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 61, 93 S. W. 115. Intent may be shown by the contemporaneous acts and declarations of the accused. Newman v. People, 223 Ill. 324, 79 N. E. 80. Instructions of the court in respect to intent to use force held sufficient. Bawcom v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 222, 94 S. W. 462.

92. Intent to use force is not necessary and hence indictment need not allege such intent. Gibbs v. People [Colo.] 85 P. 425.

93. State v. Johnson [Iowa] 110 N. W. 170.

94. The New Jersey statutory crimes of "carnal abuse" and rape are distinct, in that penetration is an element of the latter but not of the former. State v. Hummer [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 249. In a prosecution for carnally knowing or abusing a female under ten years of age, an instruction that if the jury believed that defendant attempted to have intercourse with prosecutrix and there was injury, however slight, to her sexual organs, though there was no penetration, defendant was guilty, held proper. Sims v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 413.

98. Hubert v. State [Neb.] 106 N. W. 774.

99. Where an indictment for rape alleged that defendant unlawfully, willfully, feloniously, forcibly ravished, etc., it is sufficient although it does not allege that the act was against the consent of the prosecutrix, where the objection is raised for the first time on appeal. Beard v. State [Ark.] 95 S. W. 995.

1. In the latter case the law will conclusively presume force and nonconsent. Hubert v. State [Neb.] 106 N. W. 774. An indictment for statutory rape need not allege that the act was with or without the consent of prosecutrix. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 73, 97 S. W. 94.

2. Where an indictment gives the Christian name of the person upon whom the crime was committed and uses the pronoun "her," it is not defective for failing to directly allege that she was a female. State v. Barrick [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 652.

3. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 73, 97 S. W. 94.

4. Where the indictment is silent as to the age of prosecutrix, it will be presumed that she was over twelve years of age. Webb v. Com. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 909; Jones v. Com. [Ky.] 97 S. W. 1118.

5. An information alleging that on a certain day the accused did then and there carnally know the prosecutrix," a female under the age of eighteen years," sufficiently alleges that she was under the age of eighteen at the time of carnal knowledge. State v. Falsetta [Wash.] 86 P. 168.

6. State v. Hensley, 75 Ohio St. 225, 79 N. E. 462.

7. Sufficient without setting forth the manner, means, or mode, of the assault. State v. Payne, 194 Mo. 442, 92 S. W. 461.

8. An indictment which charges that the defendant "unlawfully and feloniously made an assault in and upon the body of Jennie Tuttle there being, with intent her, the said Jennie Tuttle, then and there unlawfully, forcibly, and against her will, feloniously to ravish and to know," sufficiently charges intent. State v. Payne, 194 Mo. 442, 92 S. W. 461.

9. An indictment merely alleging the child was under fourteen years of age, and not showing whether she was over or under ten offense may be committed in different ways,[10] a single indictment may charge commission by all the statutory means. Conviction must be limited to the particular act charged.[11] Where a charge is double,[12] the state must elect upon which charge it will rely. Each act of intercourse with one under the age of consent is a distinct offense,[13] and where more than one is proven, the state must elect upon which it will rely,[14] unless the indictment contains several counts and defendant does not demand an election,[15] and the court should confine the jury to the one selected.[16] Where it appears that the prosecuting attorney knows at the commencement of the trial that several acts can be established, he must then elect;[17] but where the evidence is problematic, the election may be postponed until the close of the state's case.[18]

Conviction of included offenses.—Where the offense charged includes lesser offenses[19] which are sustained by the evidence,[20] defendant may be convicted thereof.[21] years of age, is insufficient for uncertainty as failing to show whether the prosecution is under Code 1896, § 5447, or § 5448. Sims v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 413. An indictment charging that defendant made an assault upon the body of the prosecuting witness and ravished and carnally knew her, she then and there being a female of such imbecility of mind as to prevent effectual resistance, held to charge rape upon an imbecile within Code, § 4758, and not objectionable as being uncertain as failing to show whether the offense charged was in violation of the section quoted or section 4756, defining statutory rape. State v. Crouch, 130 Iowa, 478, 107 N. W. 173.

10. Cr. Code, § 12, as amended by Laws 1895, p. 314, c. 74, construed to define but one crime which may be committed in various specified ways. Hubert v. State [Neb.] 106 N. W. 774.

11. It is not proper to prove more than one act, and when more are proven, the court should limit consideration to one specific act. Henderson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 76, 93 S. W. 550. An instruction that the acts charged might be proved by circumstances is erroneous where there is no circumstantial evidence as to the particular intercourse charged, but is as to prior like offenses as to which direct evidence was excluded. Kevern v. People, 224 Ill. 170, 79 N. E. 574.

12. In a prosecution under Code, § 4758, for rape upon a female of such imbecility of mind as to prevent effectual resistance, an allegation of assault is proper and the implied allegation of force may be treated as surplusage and, therefore, no charge of rape by force. State v. Crouch, 130 Iowa, 478, 107 N. W. 173.

13. State v. Palmberg [Mo.] 97 S. W. 566; Jamison v. State [Tenn.] 94 S. W. 675.

15. Where the indictment contains several counts, each alleging a separate and distinct rape and no steps are taken by defendant to secure an election, the court may submit the case without an election. Blackwell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 100 S. W. 774.

16. State v. Palmberg [Mo.] 97 S. W. 566.

18. State v. Palmberg [Mo.] 97 S. W. 566.

19. The offense of assault with intent to ravish, defined by Code 1896, § 4346, includes the lesser offenses of assault and battery and simple assault. Payne v. State [Ala.] 42 So. 988. Where the indictment charges assault with intent to rape and contains no allegations of battery, the court need not instruct as to assault and battery. State v. Johnson [Iowa] 110 N. W. 170.

20. Where under the evidence the conviction must be of rape or nothing, instructions respecting lower degrees need not be given as where prosecutrix testified to a complete act of intercourse which was denied in toto by defendant. Webb v. Com. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 909; State v. Stevens [Iowa] 110 N. W. 1037. Evidence held to raise an issue of aggravated assault and battery, requiring a charge in respect thereto. Taylor v. State Tex. Cr. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 73, 97 S. W. 94.

21. One charged with rape may be convicted of an assault with an intent to commit rape. People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524, 13 Det. Leg. N. 602, 108 N. W. 1009. Where there is evidence upon which a conviction for a lesser offense may be had, it is not error to refuse to direct an acquittal. Payne v. State [Ala.] 42 So. 988. A charge of statutory rape though containing no allegations of force includes the lesser offense of attempt to rape, and under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6955 the accused may be convicted of the latter. State v. Marselle [Wash.] 86 P. 586. In a prosecution for assault with intent to ravish, a requested instruction to find defendant not guilty, if the jury believed the evidence, is properly refused where the evidence was such that the jury could have convicted of a lesser crime. Pitman v. State [Ala.] 42 So. 993.

22. There is no variance between an indictment referring to prosecutrix by the name by which she was known and proof that she was married to a man bearing a different name. Perez v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 520, 94 S. W. 1036.

(§ 2) B. Evidence. 1. Admissibility.[23]—The general rules as to relevancy and materiality apply,[24] and, where evidence is otherwise admissible, it is not rendered inadmissible because it tends to prove another offense.[25] Prosecutrix may testify directly that the act was against her consent,[26] but not being a party to the prosecution, her statements are not admissible as admissions against interest,[27] nor as original evidence in her favor,[28] unless they are a part of the res gestae,[29] and the details of accusations made to the accused cannot be shown as preliminary to the admission of incriminating statements called forth by them.[30] The fact of complaint, if timely,[31] may be shown in corroboration of prosecutrix,[32] but not the particulars thereof,[33] and failure to make such complaint may be shown defensively in common law but not in statutory rape.[34] Prosecutrix's reputation for chastity as known before the offense [35] is admissible upon the issue of consent but not as affecting her credibility as a witness,[36] and where pregnancy is relied upon as corroboration, any fact impeaching her chastity may be shown,[37] but proof of intercourse with other men for this purpose should be limited to the period of conception [38] and not admitted generally to contradict her denials thereof,[39] nor to suggest a motive for the charge against defendant.[40] Evidence tending to corroborate the

23. See 6 C. L. 1241.

24. Where there is evidence that the street door leading to the room in which the rape is alleged to have occurred was locked, evidence of a witness that she had accompanied defendant to the room is inadmissible where it does not appear that they entered by such door or that the visit occurred during the time it was claimed to have been locked. Dalton v. People, 224 Ill. 333, 79 N. E. 669. Where prosecutrix testified that her husband had left her a few months previous, evidence as to how she supports herself is admissible as fixing her status as a witness. People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524, 13 Det. Leg. N. 602, 108 N. W. 1009. Subsequent marriage is no defense and hence a question put to prosecutrix whether she was at the time of the trial the wife of the accused is immaterial. State v. Falsetta [Wash.] 86 P. 168. Where evidence is introduced that the husband of prosecutrix wrote defendant a letter demanding that he convey all his property to him and leave the country, evidence that he was excited when he signed it was inadmissible to disprove blackmailing. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 100 S. W. 924. In a prosecution for carnally knowing or abusing a child under the age of ten years, it is not error to permit the mother to testify as to the time of the alleged assault, though she fixes a different date than that previously testified to by the child. Sims v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 413.

25. On a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, evidence that the house in which the assault occurred was closed is not inadmissible because it might suggest that defendant was also guilty of burglary. Turman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 409, 95 S. W. 533. The state may show that defendant is the father of prosecutrix as showing domination over her, notwithstanding it shows incest. 29. Statements made by prosecutrix on the following day to her physician that she made no resistance are not admissible as res gestae. Brown v. State, 127 Wis. 193, 106 N. W. 536. Statements made at county attorney's office while identifying defendant held inadmissible and not so closely connected with the offense as to be res gestae. State v. Hoover [Iowa] 111 N. W. 323. Evidence that prosecutrix fainted after breaking away from her assailant and running about two hundred yards is admissible as res gestae. Turman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 409, 95 S. commission of the offense,[41] or to identify the defendant as the perpetrator,[42] is admissible, but not the fact that others are suspected.[43] That accused is in loco parentis to prosecutrix may be proved to show domination [44] or opportunity.[45]

In statutory rape prosecutrix's moral character is admissible for impeachment,[46] and the birth of a child within the period of gestation after the alleged offense,[47] the child itself,[48] and evidence of lascivious conduct and acts of intercourse between the parties, both prior [49] and subsequent [50] if not too remote,[51] are generally held admissible on the fact of intercourse, although there is some conflict as to the latter,[52] as is also an attempt at abortion,[53] renewal of promise of marriage,[54] flight of defendant,[55] and the birth of a child of a subsequent intercourse,[56] but not evidence of defendant's abusive conduct toward prosecutrix [57] or another,[58] or of an attempt to bribe the latter to have intercourse.[59] Where a forcible ravishment is relied upon in a prosecution for statutory rape, any evidence competent in a prosecution for common-law rape is admissible.[60] Evidence tending to show prosecutrix's age is admissible,[61] and she may testify thereto although her knowledge is based upon hearsay.[62]

41. As prosecutrix's condition immediately after (Sims v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 413), and on the night following (Turman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 409, 95 S. W. 533). While prosecutrix's menstrual condition at the time of examination may be material, a general question in respect thereto is incompetent. Sanders v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 466.

42. In a prosecution for carnally knowing or abusing a female under 10 years, in which the place of the alleged crime is undisputed, evidence that the mud at such place was of the same character as that on defendant's trousers is admissible. Sims v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 413. In a prosecution for assault with intent to ravish, evidence that prosecutrix's father came into the room and fired a pistol, that defendant was subsequently seen going to his room, and that he failed to come to breakfast at the house of prosecutrix's father, held properly admitted. 45. In statutory rape it is competent to show that defendant is the step-father of prosecutrix as showing opportunity. Barra v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 171, 97 S. W. 94.

46 Her reputation for chastity is contemplated by Code, § 4614. State v. Blackburn [Iowa] 110 N. W. 275. Even if the bad character of the prosecutrix in statutory rape is admissible, testimony that she was seen on the streets drinking is not competent as showing bad character. Clark v. Com., 29 Ky. L. R. 154, 92 S. W. 573.

47. State v. Blackburn [Iowa] 110 N. W. 275. Testimony of physicians as to the period of gestation is admissible, it appearing that the child was born within the possible period. Id.

Similar acts are not admissible to prove the substantive offense but as bearing upon the probability thereof. Testimony of the prosecutrix that defendant had intercourse with her during August, 1904, is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that she testified on a former trial that it took place in April, 1904, however it may bear upon the weight of it. Alcorn v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 240, 94 S. W. 468.

51. In a prosecution for rape upon an imbecile, evidence of lascivious conduct toward the prosecutrix some two years before the alleged offense is not too remote where there is evidence tending to show that it was continued to the time of the alleged crime. State v. Crouch, 130 Iowa, 478, 107 N. W. 173.

52. Proof of subsequent acts are inadmissible. State v. Palmberg [Mo.] 97 S. W. 566.

53, 54. State v. Stone [Kan.] 85 P. 808.

55. State v. Stone [Kan.] 85 P. 808. While flight may be prima facie indictive of guilt, it raises no presumption. State v. Blackburn [Iowa] 110 N. W. 275.

56. State v. Stone [Kan.] 85 P. 808.

57. Father having intercourse with his daughter with her consent. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 100 S. W. 924.

58. Sims v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 413.

59. State v. Marselle [Wash.] 86 P. 586.

60. Jury may take into consideration facts disproving force, as failure to make outcry, timely complaint, injury to complainant's person and clothing. State v. Griffin [Wash.] 86 P. 951. Although force is not an element of statutory rape, evidence of the force employed is admissible as a part of the res gestae. State v. Falsetta [Wash.] 86 P. 168.

61. Where in statutory rape a witness testifies that prosecutrix was born during the year of a certain election, evidence is admissible to show when such election occurred. Curry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 566, 94 S. W. 1058. Where in statutory rape a witness has testified to prosecutrix's present age, it is not error to exclude his opinion as to her age, when she came to the United States. State v. Falsetta [Wash.] 86 P. 168.

In assault with intent to rape, evidence tending to characterize the intent, as statements [63] and prior attempts at intercourse with prosecutrix is admissible.[64]

(§ 2 B) 2. Weight and sufficiency.[65]—As in other criminal cases, all the essential elements, including fact of intercourse,[66] force,[67] or threats[68], nonconsent of prosecutrix,[69] penetration,[70] nonconsenting capacity of prosecutrix in statutory rape,[71] the specific intent of defendant in assault with intent to rape,[72] and the identity of defendant,[73] must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Where the only

62. As statements by her mother. Curry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 566, 94 S. W. 1058.

63. Declarations of defendant of an intent to have intercourse are admissible, though directed toward no one in particular. Bawcom v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 222, 94 S. W. 462. Evidence of a statement by accused two years before that he would get prosecutrix out in his boat and would take good care that she was alone held admissible as characterizing his conduct upon the boat, he denying that any assault took place. State v. Callahan [Minn.] 110 N. W. 342.

64. In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape on one under the age of consent, evidence of prior similar attempts is admissible as showing intent. State v. Johnson [Iowa] 110 N. W. 170.

65. See 6 C. L. 1244.

66. Evidence held sufficient: People v. Morris [Cal. App.] 84 P. 463; People v. Biglizen, 112 App. Div. 225, 98 N. Y. S. 361. Positive testimony of prosecutrix in a prosecution for statutory rape as to sexual intercourse held sufficient to sustain a conviction. State v. Mathews [Mo.] 100 S. W. 420. Coupled with defendant's suspicious conduct. State v. Conlin [Wash.] 88 P. 932. In a prosecution under Code, § 4758, for rape upon a female of such imbecility of mind as to prevent resistance, prosecutrix's pregnancy together with defendant's conduct toward her about the time conception must have taken place and his inconsistent statements and conduct when accused held to warrant a conviction. State v. Crouch, 130 Iowa, 478, 107 N. W. 173.

Evidence held insufficient: Testimony of prosecutrix held so inconsistent and improbable as not to warrant a conviction. Klawitter v. State [Mo.] 107 N. W. 121; Alcorn v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep 240, 94 S. W. 468; Livinghouse v. State [Neb.] 107 N. W. 854. Where both the prosecutrix and defendant deny positively that any intercourse occurred and the only affirmative evidence is suspicious circumstances. Skeen v. State [Tex Cr. App.] 100 S. W. 770. Evidence that appellant was seen sleeping on a pallet with prosecutrix and her mother but there was no testimony of intercourse and the state failed to call either the prosecutrix or her mother who were in the courtroom, evidence held insufficient to warrant holding the defandant to await the grand jury. Ex parte Patterson [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 710, 95 S. W. 1061.

67. Evidence of prosecutrix and defendant together with the fact that she made no complaint against the accused when she swore out a warrant shortly after the intercourse, charging certain others with rape held insufficient to show force. Rucker v People, 224 Ill. 131, 79 N. E. 606.

68. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction of rape by threats. Vanderford v. State, 126 Ga. 753, 55 S. E. 1025.

69. Evidence held sufficient to show nonconsent. Ryals v. State, 125 Ga. 266, 54 S. E. 168; State v. Bateman [Mo.] 94 S. W. 843.

Evidence held insufficient. Vaughn v. State [Neb.] 110 N. W. 992; Perez v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 520, 94 S. W. 1036. Failed to make outcries sufficient to awake a brother sleeping in the same room and also to make timely complaint. Elliott v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 247, 93 S. W. 742. Testimony inconsistent. State v. Cowing, 99 Minn. 123, 108 N. W. 851. Mere general statements of the prosecutrix that she did her utmost to resist without detailing acts of resistance. Brown v. State, 127 Wis. 193, 106 N. W. 536; State v. Cowing, 99 Minn. 123, 108 N. W. 851.

70. Evidence insufficient: Where the only evidence bearing on penetration as the conflicting testimony of prosecutrix a conviction is improper. State v. Forshee [Mo.] 97 S. W. 933.

Evidence sufficient: Positive testimony of a 11 year old child corroborated by her condition. Young v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 93 S. W. 743.

71. Evidence held sufficient to show that prosecutrix was under the age of consent: Testimony of prosecutrix and of her parents, although not very accurate as to details. Blackwell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 100 S. W. 774. Testimony of prosecutrix, her father and mother, together with an admission of defendant. Curry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 566, 94 S. W. 1058. Testimony of the mother as to the child's age, supported by record entries made in the family bible showing the date of her birth. Clark v. Com., 29 Ky. L. R. 154, 92 S. W. 573.

72. Evidence held sufficient. Horseford v. State, 124 Ga. 784, 53 S. E. 322; State v. Callahan [Minn.] 110 N. W. 342; State v. Platner, 196 Mo. 128, 93 S. W. 403; State v. Payne, 194 Mo. 442, 92 S. W. 461; Bourland v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 61, 93 S. W. 115. Held sufficient to go to the jury. State v. Marselle [Wash.] 86 P. 586; Payne v. State [Ala.] 42 So. 988.

Evidence held insufficient: Defendant's acts coupled with the fact that he desisted, saying "of course, I can do nothing against your will," as soon as prosecutrix threatened to call. Newman v. People, 223 Ill. 324, 79 N. E. 80. Evidence that appellant reached through a window and touched prosecutrix but ran away as soon as she screamed. Scott v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 100 S. W. 159.

73. Evidence held insufficient. State v. Hoover [Iowa] 111 N. W. 323; Thomas v. Com. [Va.] 56 S. E. 705 The corpus delicti being established, defendant's admissions held sufficient to sustain a conviction. People v. Darr [Cal. App.] 84 P. 457.

issue is consent, medical proof of intercourse is not necessary.[74] In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape against one presumed incapable of committing the graver offense,[75] the state must establish such capacity.[76] A consenting victim of statutory rape is not an accomplice,[77] but in many states,[78] though not in all,[79] the prosecutrix must be corroborated,[80] not, however, as to the fact of intercourse itself, but only as to material facts and circumstances tending to substantiate her story.[81] Corroboration is sometimes required in prosecutions for assault with intent to rape.[82] The question whether there is any corroborating evidence is for the court,[83] but its sufficiency is for the jury.[84]

(§ 2) C. Instructions.[85]—In giving instructions the court must refrain from prejudicial language.[86] Instructions not applicable to the evidence,[87] inherently

74. State v. Bateman [Mo.] 94 S. W. 843.

75. There is a presumption that a male under 14 years is not physically capable of consummating rape, and under § 8891, Rev. Codes 1905 (§ 7157, Rev. Codes 1899), no conviction can be had unless his physical ability to accomplish penetration is proved as an independent fact. State v. Fisk [N. D.] 108 N. W. 485.

76. A boy under 14 years of age is presumed to be incapable of committing rape, and ability to accomplish penetration must be shown by the state. State v. Fisk [N. D.] 108 N. W. 485.

Wisconsin: But the evidence must be most clear and convincing. Brown v. State, 127 Wis. 193, 106 N. W. 536.

Virginia: Identity may be established by the uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix Thomas v. Com. [Va.] 56 S. E. 705.

80. Held corroborative evidence: In a prosecution for statutory rape, evidence that accused paid special attention to prosecutrix and stopped in her room to converse with her late at night when passing through. State v. Waters [Iowa] 109 N. W. 1013. Private parts of prosecutrix were torn and bleeding. Sanders v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 466. In a prosecution for statutory rape, the commission of the crime being established, evidence tending to connect defendant therewith was corroborative evidence within the statute. State v. Waters [Iowa] 109 N. W. 1013. Testimony of physicians as to slight discoloration and a scratch about prosecutrix's neck and of the rupture of the hymen held of little corroborative value where the examination was not made until nearly a week after the alleged offense. State v. Cowling, 99 Minn. 123, 108 N. W. 851. In a prosecution for statutory rape the fact that accused was keeping company with the prosecutrix, was frequently alone with her, and therefore, had opportunity to commit the act, does not of itself corroborate the prosecutrix that he had intercourse. Fitzgerald v. State [Neb.] 110 N. W. 676.

Corroboration held sufficient: In a prosecution of statutory rape, admissions of defendant showing that he planned and procured an opportunity, together with admissions of familiarities evincing a mutual disposition to commit the act. Loar v. State [Neb.] 107 N. W. 229. Defendant's connection with the offense by circumstances rendering him the only possible guilty party. State v. Steven [Iowa] 110 N. W. 1037. In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape on one under the age of consent, evidence of defendant's conduct in seeking the child, in decoying her away, and in fastening the door when in the room with her. State v. Johnson [Iowa] 110 N. W. 170.

Held insufficient: Testimony of a physician who examined the prosecutrix nearly a month after the alleged offense that she had had intercourse with some one held not sufficiently corroborative of the charge against defendant to warrant a conviction. Klawitter v. State [Neb.] 107 N. W. 121.

81. Livinghouse v. State [Neb.] 107 N. W. 854; Klawitter v. State [Neb.] 107 N. W. 121.

83. State v. Crouch, 130 Iowa, 478, 107 N. W. 173.

84. State v. Crouch, 130 Iowa, 478, 107 N. W. 173; State v. Waters [Iowa] 109 N. W. 1013. Whether prosecutrix's testimony has or has not been corroborated is for the jury. Ryals v. State, 125 Ga. 266, 54 S. E. 168.

85. See 6 C. L. 1245.

86. In a prosecution for rape an instruction that the people should be protected against such outrages if they have been perpetrated, that every citizen should be protected against conviction for such crime if he has not committed it, and that it was the duty of the jury to determine where the truth lies, is not erroneous. People v. Lambert, 144 Mich. 678, 13 Det. Leg. N. 299, 108 N. W. 345.

87. Where prosecutrix testifies positively and directly to the facts of the alleged rape, a charge on circumstantial evidence is not required, even if she be regarded as an accomplice. Moore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 96 S. W. 327. Where the offense under the statute may be committed by different modes, it is not error to omit a particular mode from the instructions where the mode alleged and supported by the evidence is included. Webb v. Com. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 909. Where statutory rape was accomplished with the consent of the prosecutrix, failure to make timely complaint does not render the offense improbable and an instruction in respect thereto is inapplicable. State v. Palmberg [Mo.] 97 S. W. 566.

erroneous,[88] or already covered in substance,[89] need not be given. The general rule that instructions should not be misleading,[90] argumentative,[91] or on the weight of the evidence,[92] obtains. Requested instructions placing the burden of proof should be given,[93] as should instructions on all included offenses which the evidence tends to show[94] and every theory of defense supported by evidence.[95] Where the court is permitted to give his impression of the evidence, it is not error to state that the evidence seems to establish a particular element.[96] Unless the court is required of its own motion to give an instruction,[97] failure to give is not a reversable error in the absence of a request therefor.[98]

88. An instruction charging the jury that "a probability that some other person may have attempted to ravish" the prosecutrix, is sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt, held properly refused as both may have been guilty. Pitman v. State [Ala.] 42 So. 993.

89. Where the court instructed that the jury must find that prosecutrix resisted to the utmost, it is not error to refuse an instruction that in determining whether she offered such resistance to consider the relative size of the parties, there being no evidence in respect thereto. People v. Lambert, 144 Mich. 578, 13 Det. Leg. N. 299, 108 N. W. 345. An instruction that there could be no conviction unless prosecutrix's testimony was corroborated by other evidence connecting defendant with the crime and that whether defendant was the father of the child alleged to have resulted from the offense was immaterial, sufficiently charged that the birth of the child did not connect defendant with the crime. State v. Blackburn [Iowa] 110 N. W. 275.

90. Instruction held misleading in that the jury might have inferred that corroboration was not essential. McConnell v. State [Neb.] 110 N. W. 666. In a prosecution for assault with intent to ravish, an instruction charging the jury that they must "acquit" defendant of an assault with intent to ravish if they believe the evidence, held misleading in that the jury might have inferred that they could not convict of a lesser offense. Pitman v. State [Ala.] 42 So. 993. A charge "If you believe that at the time defendant had sexual intercourse with prosecutrix as alleged she was of the age of fifteen years or over, then you will find the defendant not guilty; or if you have a reasonable doubt of the fact that she was under the age of fifteen years, you will give defendant the benefit of such doubt and find him not guilty", does not place the burden on defendant to show that prosecutrix was over the age of consent. Curry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 566, 94 S. W. 1058.

91. In a prosecution for rape upon a negress, an instruction that the known character, proclivities, and habits as to chastity of females of the negro race in general, might be considered on the question of consent, held properly refused as argumentative and as not based on any evidence in the case. Sanders v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 466. An instruction held not argumentative and as stating that the testimony of prosecutrix was corroborated by the circumstances. Ryals v. State, 125 Ga. 266, 54 S. E. 168.

92. On a prosecution for statutory rape, the court charged that "If you believe that at the time defendant had sexual intercourse with prosecutrix as alleged she was of the age of fifteen years or over, then you will find the defendant not guilty; or, if you have a reasonable doubt of the fact that she was under the age of fifteen years, you will give the defendant the benefit of such doubt and find him not guilty", held not a charge on the weight of the evidence. Curry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 566, 94 S. W. 1058. An instruction that "the evidence of the prosecuting witness alone is sufficient to establish the commission of the offense charged," etc., construed as stating that she need not be corroborated and not that her evidence was sufficient in fact to establish such issue. State v. Blackburn [Iowa] 110 N. W. 275.

93. A requested instruction that if the jury believed that there might be some person who committed the crime and the name had not been disclosed, it was not required of defendant to show the name, should have been given. Jeffries v. State [Miss.] 42 So. 801.

94. Where, in a prosecution for statutory rape, the evidence tends to show that what was done was with prosecutrix's consent, but that no penetration was effected, a charge on assault with intent to rape is proper. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 73, 97 S. W. 94. An instruction that the injury might be either bodily pain, constraint, or sense of shame, or other disagreeable emotion, should be given only when there is evidence of aggravated assault (Henderson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 76, 93 S. W. 550), but in statutory rape, the fact that the evidence tends to show consent does not render it improper (Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 73, 97 S. W. 94).

95. That defendant was accused to shield another. State v. Griffin [Wash.] 86 P. 951. Where the evidence fixes the time of the act and defendant seeks to establish an alibi, the court should instruct the jury upon request that they must find that the act was committed about that time, especially where the charge was statutory rape and it appeared that the parties were living together. People v. Morris [Cal. App.] 84 P. 463.

96. Fact of abuse at some time. State v. Hummer [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 249.

97. Pen. Code, § 283, requiring corroboration of prosecutrix, simply states a rule of law and does not require the court of its own motion to give an instruction in respect thereto. People v. Biglizen, 112 App. Div. 225, 98 N. Y. S. 361.

98. As to necessity of corroboration. People v. Biglizen, 112 App. Div. 225, 98 N. Y.

(§ 2) D. Trial and punishment.[99]—Appearance in bastardy proceedings growing out of the same act does not necessarily disqualify the prosecuting attorney to prosecute for rape.[1] Imbecility destroying prosecutrix's consenting capacity does not necessarily render her incompetent as a witness.[2] While the ordinary rules respecting rebuttal testimony apply,[3] a wide latitude should be allowed in cross-examination as to prosecutrix's association with other men where pregnancy is relied upon for corroboration.[4] Because of prosecutrix's natural embarrassment in relating details, leading questions may be permitted.[5] Defendant is not entitled to have the jury examine his person to disprove physical capacity.[6] The fact that prosecutrix held the child alleged to be the fruit of the act while testifying is not reversible error.[7] Where the jury acquits as to the only possible offense established by the evidence, the defendant must be discharged.[8] Where different counts charge rape with and without consent for the purpose of fixing the punishment, the verdict must specify under which conviction is had.[9] While appellate court will not interfere with any sentence authorized in nature,[10] in Iowa power of review and reduction is given by statute.[11] definitions of "real property." Separate topics are devoted to most of the branches of real property law.[13]

Definitions and nature of real property.[14]—The ownership of whatever partakes of the immobility of land is real property, for example, trees.[15] Ownership of trees carries the right to have them grow on the soil.[16] The land includes all that is appurtenant to it, but a mere grant will not create appurtenances.[17] One estate cannot be an appurtenant to another of like nature.[18] A vested remainderman subject to a life estate is not a freeholder.[19]

The rule in Shelley's Case [20] applies when the word "heirs" is used as one of limitation,[21] and when the first taker has a freehold.[22] It does not apply when the first taker has an equitable and the other a legal estate.[23]

Restraints on alienation [24] consistent with the estate given may be imposed to the limited extent permitted by the rule against perpetuities;[25] but a provision in a lease that the lessor may not mortgage the reversion is void.[26]

Present and future estates.[27]—A future estate in derogation of the preceding one cannot be if defeasible by the first taker.[28] By statute estates in future may be created,[29] and in such a situation, a remainder may be supported on an estate for years.[30]

Rents and charges.[31]—An irredeemable lease containing provision for new leases by way of apportioning the rent is mutually extinguished by joining in new leases making a substantially different apportionment,[32] and when this is done subsequent to a law making all future long leases redeemable, the right to redeem attaches despite contrary provisions.[33] Rents payable by deed from a tenant in fee cannot be effectually reduced as to the future by mere promise to do so,[34] but when a subsequent grantee has come in and the rent was redeemable, the reserved rate of rent cannot be exacted after a custom of accepting less until notice is given.[35]

A provision that the net income from land is in any event to go to the cestui, with power to collect and without any discretionary control in the trustee, conveys to the cestui an equitable estate, which under the rule in Shelley's Case is an equitable fee with the power of appointment merged in the power of alienation. Entails.[37]—The statute De Donis is not recognized in Iowa, and when issue is born, the fee becomes alienable.[38] By statute in Missouri estates tail are converted into life estates with remainder over in fee.[39] Statutes converting them to fees simple do not apply where the words as of inheritance are not intended as such.[40]

Restrictive covenants are most frequently building restrictions.[41] A provision inhibiting a certain use of property is primarily a restrictive covenant and not a condition subsequent.[42] A restrictive covenant releasable only by deed is not barred by forbearance to forfeit the estate while known breaches of the covenant were being pursued in other ways.[43] In New York it is held that a change in the character of the locality such as to destroy the purpose of the covenant defeats it.[44]

Covenants running with the land [45] are those for the use or benefit of the land and connected therewith not being collateral merely,[46] and it is sometimes said they must be in respect to something in esse.[47] Such covenants created in a contract to sell need not be carried into subsequent conveyances of the land.[48] If the covenant is for the benefit of the land, the word "assigns" is not necessary in order that it should run with the land.[49] A covenant for water supply in a grant of a spring will not be construed as one to supply it from anywhere so as to make the covenant collateral.[50] A restriction applicable to all lots in a region and designed for the benefit of each may be enforced by the owner of any lot.[51] Even personal covenants may under circumstances of equity be enforced against the grantee of the covenantor.[52] The union of the burdened and the benefited estates will extinguish the covenant,[53] unless a contrary intention clearly appears.[54]

Possession.[55]—Constructive possession is accessory to the title.[56]

Merger[57] is the annihilation of a lesser estate by union with a greater in the same person or right.[58] A ground rent merges in the fee when the same is acquired by the owner of the rent,[59] and as to a bona fide purchaser therafter, an intervening estate which is a secret one does not prevent merger,[60] nor does the fact that the acquisition of the fee was by purchase at a sheriff's sale expressly made subject to the rents.[61] A legislative grant of public lands carrying a water power to a city or local public corporation with plenary power to sell or lease does not prevent a merger when the rights granted by the city unite in one holder.[62] Merger does not take place contrary to the intention of the grantee,[63] but the burden of proving an intent that merger should not result is on him who is entitled to and does deny such result.[64]

Abandonment[65] is a relinquishment without reference to any particular person or purpose.[66]

§ 1. Nature, grounds, and subjects of receivership.[71]—Proceedings for the appointment of a receiver are ancillary, and as a general rule the appointment will not be granted where that is the final and practically only relief sought,[72] hence, the appointment must be predicated upon some pleading praying affirmative relief.[73] The appointment of a receiver is not a matter of right,[74] but rests in the sound judicial discretion of the court.[75] The propriety of the appointment can only be considered on an appeal involving the order of appointment and not collaterally,[76] and an exercise of the power will not be disturbed unless it affirmatively appears to have been unwarranted.[77] The decree of appointment is conclusive of all prior matters involved therein.[78] Statutes authorizing the appointment of a receiver[79] must be

It is a matter of serious doubt whether a court has authority to appoint a receiver upon a bill whose sole purpose is to get a receivership and stave off lien holders. Gutterson v. Lebanon Iron & Steel Co., 151 F. 72. The appointment of a receiver adjusts and determines the right of no party to the proceedings and grants no relief directly or indirectly. Joslin v. Williams [Neb.] 107 N. W. 837.

73. A cross bill in a foreclosure suit seeking to reach through a receiver the rents, issues, and profits, of premises sold during the period of redemption, is filed in sufficient season, although not filed until after the final decree executed by sale of the premises. Ruprecht v. Muhlke, 225 Ill. 188, 80 N. E. 106. Cross bill seeking appointment of a receiver of rents and profits during the period of redemption was held sufficient, although it failed to allege that the property was improved and yielded rents. 75. Spies v. Butts, 59 W. Va. 385, 53 S. E. 897. It is for the court in every instance to determine whether it should take upon itself the trust. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Broecker [Ind.] 77 N. E. 1092. The power lies within the undoubted discretion of the court but should only be used with great caution. Anderson v. Hultberg, 117 Ill. App. 231; Spies v. Butts, 59 W. Va. 385, 53 S. E. 897. The use of the discretion was sustained where money had been fraudulently converted, the defendant was insolvent and had left the state, and the complainant's rights would have been prejudiced by an attempt to find and serve notice on defendant. Anderson v. Hultberg, 117 Ill. App. 231. On the pleadings and evidence, the refusal to appoint a receiver held not to be an abuse of discretion in Virginia-Carolina Chem. Co. v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 126 Ga. 50, 54 S. E. 929. When the equities of the bill are fully and fairly denied by the answer, unless the denial is overcome by the plaintiff by other testimony, the question is no longer addressed to the discretion of the court but it is error to appoint a receiver. Spies v. Butts, 59 W. Va. 385, 53 S. E. 897.

Scarborough [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 784, 92 S. W. 815. The appointment of a receiver cannot be collaterally attacked in a suit by the receiver to levy an assessment. If the decree of appointment is to be attacked, it must be done in the court where it was made. Backenstoe v. Kline, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 268. The complaint in the original proceeding who bids in the property at the receiver's sale cannot question the appointment of the receiver in action brought by the receiver for the purchase price. 79. Code Civ. Proc. § 2464, authorizing the appointment of receivers in proceedings supplemental to execution to hold the property of the judgment debtor, construed. Jones v. Arkenburgh, 112 App. Div. 483, 98 N. Y. S. 532. It was decided that the plaintiffs had not brought their case calling for the appointment of a receiver within the terms of acts 1898, pp. 312, 313, No. 159, § 1. Meyer v. Meyer Bros., 116 La. 456, 40 So. 794. Rev. St. 1899, § 1305, construed and held that a fraud order issued by the U. S. Post Office department is not a ground for applying for a receivership by the secretary of state. State v. People's U. S. Bank, 197 Mo. 605, 95 S. W. 867. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1465, authorizing the appointment of a receiver upon the application of one jointly owning or interested in any property or funds whose right is probable, construed and held that a mortgagee has such an interest as to bring him within the terms of the statute. Cotton v. Rand [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 624, 92 S. W. 266. Civ. Code Prac. § 299, providing for the appointment of a receiver of mortgaged property which is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured, or when the condition has not been performed and the property is probably insufficient to pay the debt, construed Murray v. Murray [Ky.]

strictly complied with.[80] There should be a reasonable probability that the party asking for the appointment will ultimately succeed in obtaining the general relief sought.[81] The remedy lies in the extraordinary power of chancery,[82] and the appointment will not be made unless it appears either that the plaintiff has a clear legal right in himself to the property in question,[83] or that he has some lien upon it,[84] or that it constitutes a special fund out of which he is entitled to satisfy his demand,[85] or that the possession of the defendant was obtained by fraud,[86] or that the property or income therefrom is in danger of loss from neglect, waste, misconduct, removal,[87] or that the defendant is insolvent.[88] A receiver will not be appointed at 99 S. W. 301. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 140, giving the court power to enforce payment of or security, for temporary alimony, court expenses, etc., during divorce proceedings, through a receiver the filing of an undertaking to stay proceedings pending an appeal deprives the court of power to enforce the order appealed from and the appointment of a receiver is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, since Code Civ. Prac. § 946, forbids further proceedings upon the matter appealed from. McAneny v. Superior Ct. [Cal.] 87 P. 1020.

80. Comp. Laws, §§ 436, 437, prescribing appointment of receivers in judgment creditors' bills construed, and where the bill framed in complanice with it is formally sufficient, a receiver may be appointed even in the face of denials by the debtor that there is any property reachable by the bill. Campau v. Detroit Driving Club, 144 Mich. 80, 13 Det. Leg. N. 200, 107 N. W. 1063. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2468, subd. 1, a receiver may not be appointed in supplemental proceedings until the judgment creditor has exhausted his remedy by execution. Damers v. Sternberger, 102 N. Y. S. 740.

Contra: In making an appointment the court does not consider the merits of the case and will not even regard an objection that the bill is multifarious or faulty for misjoinder of parties. Spies v. Butts, 59 W. Va. 385, 53 S. E. 897.

82. Ray v. Carlisle, 125 Ga. 316, 54 S. E. 119. The power is a chancery one. Daley v. Nelson, 119 Ill. App. 627; Virginia-Carolina Chem. Co. v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 126 Ga. 50, 54 S. E. 929. The appointment of a receiver is a remedy and it is part of the procedure of courts of chancery to conserve and enforce equitable rights. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Broecker [Ind.] 77 N. E. 1092. Generally a common cerditor by note or open account, with no judgment or lien, is not entitled to such relief. Virginia-Carolina Chem. Co. v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 126 Ga. 50, 54 S. E. 929. The remedy cannot be had in extreme cases. Hayes v. Jasper Land Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 909. "The power of appointing a receiver is a most delicate one and should be exercised by the court with extreme caution and only under special and peculiar circumstances requiring summary relief." Horner v. Bell [Md.] 66 A. 39. "The power to appoint a receiver and put him in possession of another's property is one of the most important prerogatives of equity, only to be exercised by the conscientious chancellor when it is clear there is no other adequate means of doing justice between the parties and preventing the accomplishment of a wrong." Rich v. Mulloney, 121 Ill. App. 503. An overissue of stock by a company alone is not sufficient to warrant the appointment of a receiver at the suit of one to whom stock has been pledged before the overissue. Virginia-Carolina Chem. 86. Thompson v. Adams [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 668. An appointment was sustained by bankruptcy court where insolvent partners made five distinct transfers of property available to general creditors, within one week, to father, brothers, sister-in-law, and sweetheart, of one or the other of them, as part of a "skin game." Horner-Gaylord Co. v. Miller, 147 F. 295. By virtue of Bankr. Act. July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 23, cl. b. 30 Stat. 552 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3431], as amended by act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, §§ 8, 13, 15, 32 Stat. 798, 799, 800 [U. S. Comp. St. 1905, pp. 686, 689, 690], which give jurisdiction to bankruptcy courts of suits by trustees for recovery of property conveyed by the bankrupt as a preference or in fraud of creditors and by virtue of cl. 3 of § 2 of act July 1, 1898, giving power to appoint receivers after the filing of the petition and until it is dismissed or the trustee qualified, a bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, after the filing of the petition and before adjudication, to receive property, conveyed by the bankrupt in fraud of his creditors within four months prior to the filing of the petition. Id. Appointment held improper in a suit to set aside a conveyance of stock and land on the ground of undue influence and fraud where there was no allegation of insolvency of the defendant or that he had not ample means to respond in damages, and his answer under oath, which fairly met the allegations in the bill, was adopted by a majority of those in interest. Horner v. Bell [Md.] 66 A. 39.

87. Thompson v. Adams [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 668. Appointment is proper where a defendant who was jointly interested in book accounts with the plaintiff was collecting them from persons whom the plaintiff did not know and had no means of knowing and made false representations about the collections and refused to account. Bauer v. Haggerty, 42 Wash. 313, 84 P. 871. Civ. Code of 1895, § 4904 construed, and the fact that a building on defendant's land was un-any stage of the proceedings if any other remedy will adequately protect the party applying,[89] and the imperative necessity for the appointment must appear, especially when the proceeding is opposed by those in interest.[90] A special receiver may be appointed to collect a claim which might have been collected by the original receiver.[91] In Ohio a creditor cannot ask for the appointment of a receiver until he has reduced his claim to judgment.[92] The general rule is that, to justify the ap-insured, and if destroyed by fire the land was not sufficient to protect the plaintiff, declared not to constitute such "a manifest danger of loss or destruction" of property to warrant the appointment of a receiver Ray v. Carlisle, 125 Ga. 316, 54 S. E. 119. Bill for the appointment of a receiver is sufficient in which it appears that, through failure to perform an executory contract to purchase standing timber, loss may result to the vendor because of the limited time in which the timber could be removed under other contract. Spies v. Butts, 59 W. Va. 385, 53 S. E. 897. Civ. Code Prac. § 298, providing for the appointment of a receiver on motion of one who has a lien on property or a fund which is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured, construed and held not to authorize such appointment where there was no danger of material injury, although the property may be insufficient to pay the debt. Murray v. Murray [Ky.] 99 S. W. 301. Under Code Civ. Prac. § 298, which provides for the appointment of a receiver at the instance of one who has or probably had a right to, lien upon, or an interest in, any property or fund the right to which is involved in action and which is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured, the appointment is proper upon the motion of a holder of eighteen promissory notes maturing annually, secured by mortgage which covered the property and its rents and profits where several of the notes had been defaulted, although the property might be sufficient security. Handman v. Volk [Ky.] 99 S. W. 660. Pending a proceeding for partition, a receiver may be appointed when the defendant threatens to destroy or remove the property. Thompson v. Silverthorne, 142 N. C. 12, 54 S. E. 782. If a defendant in divorce proceedings remains beyond the jurisdiction so that application for temporary alimony cannot be served on him personally, and his property in the state is in imminent danger of being lost, destroyed, depreciated by waste, or removed, so that if judgment for permanent alimony is obtained there will be nothing out of which it can be paid, the court probably may appoint a receiver to preserve and hold the property until a judgment can be obtained. Stallings v. Stallings [Ga.] 56 S. E. 469. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1465, providing for the appointment of a receiver on the application of one jointly owning or interested in any property or fund whose right to or interest in the property or fund or to the proceeds thereof is probable, held not to apply, and appointment refused when plaintiff had no interest or probable interest in a mill which had not become part of the realty and whose sole cause of action was damages for alleged breach of contract to cut lumber. Wotring & Son v. Indemnity Imp. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 358. There must be imminent danger of irreparable loss to the property the subject of the suit. Hayes v. Jasper Land Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 909. Appointment of a receiver upheld where a bankrupt, who prior to adjudication had given notes waiving homestead rights, nevertheless had them set off to him by his trustee in bankruptcy, the plaintiff not having proved his claim in bankruptcy and having no remedy at law. This case was decided on grounds set forth in Bell v. Dawson Grocery Co., 48 S. E. 150, 120 Ga. 628; Keller v. Bowen [Ga.] 56 S. E. 634.

88. Thompson v. Adams [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 668. The justification for the exercise of the power of appointment is the preservation of the subject of litigation or of the immediate rents and profits, and the averments of insolvency of the party in possession is most important in making out a strong and special case of imminent danger of loss. Horner v. Bell [Md.] 66 A. 39. Appointment upheld where bill alleged that a partner who had collected large sums due the partnership and appropriated them to his own use without entering them on the books was insolvent, and despite the fact that the defendant held the legal title, the plaintiff having paid money into the business. Brooke v. Tucker [Ala.] 43 So. 141. Civ. Code Prac. § 298, authorizing the appointment of a receiver during the pendency of the action to prevent loss, injury, or removal of property, or a fund, construed, and under it a receiver may not be appointed where there is no disagreement of partners alleged or any fraud or wrongdoing on the part of any of them or any that the firm is insolvent, but only the mismanagement of an employe. Campbell v. Rich Oil Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 716, 96 S. W. 442. Appointment of a receiver at the instance of a husband is proper where the wife, although enjoined, rented property whose ownership was in question, albeit the wife was solvent. Thompson v. Thompson, 125 Ga. 102, 53 S. E. 607. The mere insolvency of a corporation is not sufficient ground to warrant the appointment of a receiver. American Fruit & Steamship Co. v. Dox, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 155.

89. The fact that the directors and officers of a corporation are fraudulently misappropriating corporate assets will not, if they are solvent, constitute a ground for the appointment of a receiver. Remedy of accounting sufficient. Hayes v. Jasper Land Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 909.

90. Appointment is improper where property was taken from a solvent trustee, despite the protest of the owners of two-thirds of the property. Rich v. Mulloney, 121 Ill. App. 503.

91. Special receiver appointed to enforce a stockholder's liability for debts of insolvent bank in hands of a receiver appointed by same court. Covell v. Fowler, 144 F. 535.

92. American Fruit & Steamship Co. v. Dox, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 155. A contract creditor of a corporation will not be heard to ask for the appointment of a receiver to collect unpaid stock subscriptions until he pointment of a receiver pendente lite a mortgagee must show that the premises are insufficient to secure payment of the debt and that the mortgagor is insolvent.[93]

Liability for wrongful appointment.[94]—One who procures the appointment of a receiver is liable for the legitimate expenses of the receivership if the appointment is wrongful,[95] or if the fund sequestrated is inadequate therefor.[96] The legitimate expenses include counsel fees,[97] cost of the bond,[98] the personal expenses,[99] and the compensation of the receiver.[1] Where a receiver is wrongfully appointed at the instance of the state, the compensation is not payable out of the funds in the receiver's hands, although no judgment for costs could be rendered against the state.[2]

§ 2. Appointment, qualification, and tenure of receivers. A. Proceedings for appointment and qualifications.[3]—In a petition for a receiver of a mutual insurance company, the members thereof need not be made parties defendant as well as the company,[4] and the insurance commissioner if he has knowledge of and assents to the proceeding, need not be joined as a party.[5] Except in cases of emergency, notice of the application must be given,[6] nor will a receiver be appointed before answer except in case of necessity,[7] nor according to chancery practice will the appointment be made after answer under oath which fairly meets the averments of the bill and the case is heard on bill and answer.[8] When an ex parte application is made the usual mode of procedure is to set a time for the hearing of the application and meantime, if the necessities of the case are shown to require it, to appoint a temporary receiver.[9] In a federal court of equity it is improper to appoint a receiver where the complainant has failed to take exceptions or filed replications within the time limited or nunc pro tunc, to answers wholly denying the complainant's right.[10] An appointment has reduced his claim to judgment and execution has been returned unsatisfied, nor will jurisdiction of the cause be retained for the benefit of such cross petitioners. Id.

4. Service on the proper officers of the corporation made every policy holder a party and the answer of the company not before decree dissented from, will now, after decree unappealed from, be deemed as concurred in by the policy holder. International Sav. & Trust Co. v. Kleber, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 200.

5. International Savings & Trust Co. v. Kleber, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 200.

6. Emergencies such as necessity for immediate action to prevent present in jury or threatened, impending, irreparable loss, or the impossibility of allowing sufficient time for notice, or the fact of nonresidence of the trustee of the property, will justify an ex parte appointment. Cotton v. Rand [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 624, 92 S. W. 266. The appointment of a receiver without notice or an attempt to give notice is improper in the absence of any emergency requiring it. Dow Co. v. Deist, 123 Ill. App. 864. If a receiver to continue till the final trial and not merely temporarily till the application can be heard will be appointed at all without service or notice, it will only be under extraordinary circumstances. Stallings v. Stallings [Ga.] 56 S. E. 469. Where in divorce proceedings it appeared that service was not lawfully perfected on the defendant, it was error over his objection to receive an application for and appoint a receiver for his property and order payments for temporary alimony and suit expenses to be made by the receiver. Id. Rev. St. 1895, arts 1465 and 1493, the latter applying rules of equity to the appointment of receivers, construed and order appointing set aside. Haywood v. Scarborough [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 784, 92 S. W. 815. The facts showing the emergency calling for the ex parte appointment must appear in the petition. Id. Rev. St. c. 69, § 3, providing for notice, construed. Anderson v. Hultberg, 117 Ill. App. 231. Emergency not shown to exist for the appointment of a receiver without notice. Wotring & Son v. Indemnity Imp. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 358.

7. Fraud or some other strong ground to induce the court to act must be presented and clearly proved by affidavit. Daley v. Nelson, 119 Ill. App. 627. A strong and special case of imminent danger of loss is always required as essential to a departure from the old rule not to make such an appointment in any case under any circumstances before answer. Horner v. Bell [Md.] 66 A. 39.

8. Horner v. Bell [Md.] 66 A. 39.

9. Stallings v. Stallings [Ga.] 56 S. E. 469.

10. Equity rule 66 construed, and held invalid because ex parte may be validated by ratification by the court after a full hearing of the parties.[11]

A petition for a receiver must be verified [12] and if the motion is based upon the allegations of the bill, that pleading must be sworn to.[13] The court appointing a receiver has power to accept his resignation and appoint a successor [14] ex parte without notice,[15] and the fact that proper notice therefor was not served cannot be taken advantage of in a collateral proceeding.[16] A receivership may be extended to another suit filed later.[17] Where a court appoints a receiver upon a bill alleging insolvency and other causes, although the decree does not set forth the reasons and it was without power to appoint for insolvency alone, the excess of jurisdiction is of the kind remediable by appeal only and the proceedings are not void.[18]

Bonds.[19]—Where a receiver is appointed, the complainant should be required to file a bond.[20] The amount of the complainant's bond lies within the discretion of the court appointing,[21] and the remedy for a defective or insufficient bond is not by appeal but by application to said appointing court.[22] An order appointing a receiver and requiring the complainant to file a bond may be entered together and the appointment need not be deferred until the bond is actually executed and filed.[23]

(§ 2) B. Who may be appointed.[24]—A state statute forbidding the appointment of a nonresident receiver applies solely to the state courts and cannot control the Federal courts.[25]

(§ 2) C. Tenure of receiver.[26]

§ 3. Title and rights in and possession of the property. A. Title in general.[27]—The effect of the appointment of a receiver is not to oust any party of his right to the property but merely to retain it for the benefit of the party who may ultimately appear to be entitled to it,[28] nor does the appointment extinguish titles or that complainant should have been defaulted and dismissed. Harrington v. Union Oil Co., 144 F. 235.

16. Action by receiver of a mutual insurance company to collect an assessment from a member. Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424, 108 N. W. 704.

17. And this without formal order therefor, where the parties to the first suit were parties to the second and both they and the court treated the cases as consolidated in fact and the receivership as extended. Gila Bend Reservoir & Irr. Co. v. Gila Water Co., 202 U. S. 270, 50 Law. Ed. 1023. A receivership to collect and pay rents admeasured as dower will not be extended to a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the dower right. Dolan v. Conlon, 99 N. Y. S. 1090.

18. Bankruptcy statutes are practical and the fact that the court appointed a receiver either on the ground of insolvency alone or with other causes satisfies clause 4 of § 3, Act July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. 546, c. 541 [U. S. Comp. St. 901, p. 3422]), amended by Act of Feb. 5, 1903, p. 683 (32 Stat. 797, c. 487, § 2 [U. C. Comp. St. Supp. 1905]). Beatty v. Anderson Coal Min. Co. [C. C. A.] 150 F. 293.

20. Act of May 15, 1903, requiring this, construed. Anderson v. Hultberg, 117 Ill. App. 231. The complainant's bond is for damages resulting and attorney's fees rendered necessary by the appointment and acts of the receiver if the appointment is revoked or set aside. Id. Code of Civ. Proc. § 269, provides that every order appointing a receiver shall require the applicant to give a good and sufficient bond conditioned to pay all damages which the other parties to the suit or any of them may sustain by reason of such appointment in case it is decided to be wrongful. Joslin v. Williams [Neb.] 107 N. W. 837.

22. Bond claimed not to comply with statute. Anderson v. Hultberg, 117 Ill. App. 231.

23. The receiver is but an officer and arm of the court which appoints him and will not be allowed under such order to assume the duties of his office until the contemporaneous order concerning the bond is fulfilled. Anderson v. Hultberg, 117 Ill. App. 231.

28. In re Nelson & Bro. Co., 149 F. 590. It is a proper exercise of discretion for a court rights.[29] A receiver takes no title to the property,[30] and he has no power to take possession of property outside of district in which he is appointed.[31] An interlocutory order appointing a receiver confers no vested rights on any claimant which cannot be modified by later orders or the final decree.[32]

(§ 3) B. Rights as between receivers, claimants, or lienors.[33]—As before stated the appointment of a receiver in no way affects the title to the property,[34] all interests and valid liens thereon being preserved[35] as of the date of the appointment.[36] While the property is in the custody of the court by the receiver, a lien cannot be perfected without permission of the court,[37] and the proper procedure being to apply for an order for a sale and to have the lien transferred to the funds in lieu of the property.[38] A receiver of an insolvent corporation is not entitled to retain possession as against the trustee in bankruptcy.[39]

(§ 3) C. Possession and restitution.[40]—A receiver is an officer of the court appointing him,[41] his possession being deemed that of the court,[42] and an interference therewith is a contempt of court.[43] He is bound to keep assets within the jurisdiction where he was appointed.[44] Where property in the possession of a receiver is to retain a fund within its jurisdiction until it is finally determined to whom it belongs by enjoining the receiver from parting with the funds in his hands pending suit. American Can Co. v. Williams [C. C. A.] 149 F. 200. Where a junior mortgagee is illegally deprived of possession of property by the wrongful appointment of a receiver, he is entitled to the rents and profits collected by the receiver. Ruprecht v. Muhlke, 225 Ill. 188, 80 N. E. 106. Where an action to sell property to pay the debts of a decedent is dismissed without prejudice to the rights of certain defendants holding mortgages, and upon whose application a receiver has been appointed to collect rents for use in procuring insurance and redeeming the property from forfeiture for unpaid taxes, and the fund has not been so applied, the receiver does not hold the fund for the benefit of the successful party, but is bound to account therefor to the court appointing him. Eichert v. Eichert, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 526.

29. The appointment of a receiver does not divest the right of the owner of an equity of redemption of mortgaged property to the rents and profits pending redemption, less necessary expenditures for preserving the property. Standish v. Musgrove, 223 Ill. 500, 79 N. E. 161. See infra, subdivision C.

30. His sole title is derived from the order of court appointing him. Covell v. Fowler, 144 F. 535. Code of Civ. Proc. § 2468, construed and it was held that it did not apply to property held by a defendant in a representative capacity such as executor (Jones v. Arkanburgh, 112 App. Div. 483, 98 N. Y. S. 532), or to the real estate of the judgment debtor and that the receiver had no power to sell or convey it (Damers v. Sternberger, 102 N. Y. S. 740).

35. The court suggested that a lien for improvements on leased premises might be preserved. Perrin & Smith Printing Co. v. Cook Hotel & Excursion Co., 118 Mo. App. 44, 93 S. W. 337. The effect of a receivership is to suspend the ordinary remedies for the enforcement of liability and render a resort to the court having jurisdiction therein necessary. Hubbard v. Security Trust Co. [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 79. A receiver of an execution defendant who has obtained the release of property by a delivery bond holds the same position to the property released as the execution defendant did. Id. A receiver of an insolvent bank takes a sum of money held as trust fund subject to the rights of the beneficiary. National Life Ins. Co. v. Mather, 118 Ill. App. 491. Where a cashier of a bank, also county commissioner, wrongfully deposited taxes in the bank which went into a receiver's hands, a trust was declared and given preference. claimed by a third person, a petition should be made to the court appointing for an order for its restitution to the party to whom it belongs.[45] In the absence of statute, other courts will recognize and respect the custody of the court of appointment.[46]

§ 4. Administration and management of the property. A. Authority and powers in general.[47]—Primarily the receiver represents the court alone,[48] but under certain circumstances he also represents the insolvent[49] and the creditors.[50] A receiver is an officer or agent of the court appointing him[51] and has only such authority or powers as are conferred upon him by said court.[52] Persons dealing with a receiver are charged with knowledge of his functions and contract with him at their peril,[53] and he is liable on official contracts only to the extent of the property in their hands.[54] In the absence of any statute or order of court, a receiver is only bound to use such care in dealing with the property in his hands, as an ordinarily prudent person would use toward his own.[55] A receiver may not derive personal profit from his office.[56] A court will assume that its receiver continued to act as

48. Before a decree of dissolution of a partnership a receiver appointed pendente lite to conserve the property represents nobody but the court. Brockhurst v. Cox [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 182.

49. Where creditors relying upon subscriptions have extended credit to a corporation, a subscriber cannot rescind his subscription contract on the ground of fraud and in such case a receiver appointed for the corporation represents both it and the creditors and is not estopped by the fraud of the corporation. Marion Trust Co. v. Blish [Ind.] 79 N. E. 415. Is not agent for insolvent in such sense that can bind him by contract. Stannard v. Reid & Co., 103 N. Y. S. 521.

50. After a decree of dissolution of a partnership, the situation is entirely changed. The court directs that the property is to go first to pay the creditors and a receiver appointed then becomes the representative of the creditors and as such may by suit or defense avoid a void chattel mortgage given by partnership. Brockhurst v. Cox [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 182.

51. Anderson v. Hultberg, 117 Ill. App. 231; Foreman v. Defrees, 120 Ill. App. 486; Roller v. Paul [Va.] 55 S. E. 558; Hall v. Stulb, 126 Ga. 521, 55 S. E. 172. A receiver is not an agent of any party to the suit. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. Co. v. Parry [Colo.] 86 P. 113; Hall v. Stulh, 126 Ga. 521, 55 S. E. 172. An "assistant receiver" appointed in accordance with a stipulation entered into by the parties and approved by the court is not a mere agent of the parties but is a substituted receiver and is liable to account to the court which retained jurisdiction. Johnson v. Johnson [Iowa] 107 N. W. 802. Strictly speaking a receiver is not a public officer. Hall v. Stulb, 126 Ga. 521, 55 S. E. 172.

52. Campau v. Detroit Driving Club, 141 Mich. 80, 13 Det. Leg. N. 200, 107 N. W. 1063. A receiver appointed under 1 Mills' Ann. St. § 497, providing for the dissolution of mining companies and for receivers to effect this, who is ordered to take charge of the affairs and property of the company, has no power to work the mines. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. Co. v. Parry [Colo.] 86 P. 113. A description of the property to be held by receiver in the order of appointment as "the premises described in plaintiff's petition" is sufficient. Cotton v. Rand [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 624, 92 S. W. 266. Where a receiver to collect rents and profits was later appointed to collect the same rents in a suit for partition which was voluntarily discontinued, the court only had authority to vacate the order of appointment leaving the parties to their rights for an accounting of rents received in the former suit. Horn v. Horn, 100 N. Y. S. 790. Appointment to have care and possession of property "subject nevertheless to the orders of the court" carries no powers by implication beyond those merely incidental to the care and management of the property itself. Preston v. American Surety Co. [Md.] 64 A. 292. Under an order directing receiver to sell property at a given price, the receiver has no discretionary power and is not intended to take possession of the property. Wardlaw v. Herrington, 125 Ga. 828, 54 S. E. 699.

53. They are presumed to know the pleadings of the action in which he was appointed and are charged with knowledge of the order defining his powers. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. Co. v. Parry [Colo.] 86 P. 113. All orders of the court regulating the powers of a receiver must be regarded as notice to all persons dealing with the receiver, and it is the duty of merchants and others dealing with a receiver to examine the records and ascertain the extent of his authority. In re Erie Lumber Co., 150 F. 817.

54. Stannard v. Reid & Co., 103 N. Y. S. 521.

55. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1462, directing a court officer to seal up any money deposited in court and deposit it in some bank or vault accessible to the court, does not apply to funds in a receiver's hands. Groesbeck Cotton Oil Gin & Compress Co. v. Oliver [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 241, 97 S. W. 1092.

56. A receiver who bought up claims at less than face value may not credit himself such until the contrary is shown,[57] and a receiver cannot defend a disobedience of the court's orders on the ground that the party in interest is estopped, by assent to the acts, to complain.[58] A receiver may apply to the court for specific orders and directions before acting.[59] Receivers have a reasonable time in which to elect whether or not to accept a lease held by the debtor,[60] and if they do so accept they become tenants under it.[61] As regards liability for rent, a distinction lies between statutory receivers[62] who take title,[63] and chancery or court receivers[64] who have no title.[65] Being an officer of the court the receiver has no right to appeal from orders by it as to distribution of assets.[66] They may, however, appeal from orders relating to his compensation or account.[67] A discretionary order of court to a receiver cannot be reviewed in a collateral matter unless void.[68] The court and its receiver, in the mere administration of contract obligations in a representative capacity are bound by the law in respect thereto, in the same way in which the original possessor of the property was.[69] In New York a receiver of an insolvent corporation is not entitled as of right to change his attorney at his own volition.[70]

(§ 4) B. Payment of claims against receiver or property.[71]—A receiver has no discretion, generally speaking, as to the application of funds which are in his hands by virtue of the receivership. He holds them strictly subject to the order of the court to be disposed of as the court may direct.[72] on his account with the face value but this profit enures to benefit of the beneficiaries of the funds in his hands as well as interest and they need not elect which they will take. Roller v. Paul [Va.] 55 S. E. 558. Where a receiver sells lumber in his hands to a firm of which he was a member, he must produce clear and positive proof that the full market price was paid therefor. In re Receivership [La.] 42 So. 789. Comp. Laws, § 437, giving power to decree satisfaction of the amount remaining due on a judgment out of property belonging to the debtor discovered in a chancery proceeding, does not authorize a judgment creditor appointed receiver to use the proprty for his benefit to the exclusion of that of other creditors. Campau v. Detroit Driving Club, 144 Mich. 80, 13 Det. Leg. N. 200, 107 N. W. 1063.

57. Even then the court will not permit its officer to abandon his official character at his convenience or interest where that abandonment will work an injustice to the parties or either of them. Starrett v. Berkovec, 118 Ill. App. 683.

58. Receiver to collect rents not allowed to show that he collected as agent and not receiver with the assent of the defendant. Starrett v. Berkovec, 118 Ill. App. 683.

A lease of the whole premises by a receiver appointed in action to foreclose an undivided nine-tenths interest in the premises and who was authorized by the order to lease the premises may not be summarily canceled by the court, where the tenant had entered, made improvements, and gone to other expense. Witthaus v. Capstick, 102 N. Y. S. 166. A distinction is made between a receiver's entry of a leasehold and his electing to hold under a lease. Under the latter he is bound to pay the rent reserved during his occupancy. Perrin & Smith Printing Co. v. Cook Hotel & Excursion Co., 118 Mo. App. 44, 93 S. W. 337. Where a receiver of an insolvent lessee is appointed to collect rents of a sublessee, the lessor was entitled to receive the rent from the receiver and without first obtaining judgment against the lessee. Debts created by receiver and expenses of administration.[73]—As a general rule, allowances to a receiver for the expenses of the receivership should be made to the receiver himself,[74] but expenses incurred without the authority of the court will not be allowed [75] or charged against either party to the action.[76] Courts of equity have the power to appoint receivers and direct them to care for, protect, and preserve the property and decree the charges and expenses therefor as prior and preferred liens,[77] but, except in the case of a public service corporation, it has no authority to direct the receiver to carry on the business of the insolvent and charge the expenses of the business and operations as a prior or preferred lien over property over that of prior subsisting liens thereon.[78] To constitute debts of general creditors preferential over a mortgage, which covered not only the corpus of the property but also the net income after deducting the operating expenses, the debts must have been out by him at pleasure. Fields v. U. S., 27 App. D. C. 433. The order should direct the receiver to make proper distribution to the parties entitled thereto. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. Co. v. Parry [Colo.] 86 P. 113. Sayle's Rev. Civ. St. art. 1472, fixing manner of distribution of funds in receiver's hands and preferring certain classes of claims, construed, and held that, where claims did not fall within any class designated by the statute, the court might decide the question of priority in accordance with what seemed equitable and just under the circumstances. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. U. S. & Mex. Trust Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 212. Decree disallowing payments for water taxes and repairs upheld upon appeal. Stanmeyer v. Rosenwald, 121 Ill. App. 583. Where an "assistant receiver" was appointed to take over the property and distribute the assets in accordance with a stipulation approved by the court, a creditor whose claim was duly listed by the receiver and unchallenged and ignored by the assistant receiver was allowed to intervene and pray for payment of the claim Johnson v. Johnson [Iowa] 107 N. W. 802.

74. It is improper to render a judgment in favor of creditors who furnish supplies and labor to the receiver. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. Co. v. Parry [Colo.] 86 P. 113. A receiver improperly appointed as against a junior mortgagee lawfully in possession and entitled to rents and profits may be allowed from the expenses incurred by him to make the premises yield rent, which expenses the mortgagee would necessarily have incurred. Ruprecht v. Muhlke, 225 Ill. 188, 80 N. E. 106. An expert accountant employed by receiver under an order of court is an employe of the receiver and not of the court and subject to his orders and cannot recover for work done in excess of the receiver's orders. Grabbe v. Moffit [Iowa] 110 N. W. 142.

75. Expenses incurred by a receiver, who without authority worked a mine, disallowed. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. Co. v. Parry [Colo.] 86 P. 113. Where a fund is derived from the adventures of a receiver who discovered no property but continued to run the business, all disbursements connected with and necessary to the business should be allowed. Payments for interest and taxes which did not benefit the business not allowed. Campau v. Detroit Driving Club, 144 Mich. 80, 13 Det. Leg. N. 200, 107 N. W. 1063. The income of a railroad while in the hands of a receiver is subject to equitable charges of a different character from those to which the fund realized by sale of the corpus is subject. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Osborn [C. C. A.] 148 F. 606. Claims for supplies furnished a railroad prior to the receivership do not fall in the same class as debts created by the receiver. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. U. S. & Mex. Trust Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 212. An unliquidated claim for damages for an alleged breach of contract by receivers has little or not superior dignity to a claim of a general creditor. In re Erie Lumber Co., 150 F. 817. Creditors who furnish goods to receivers for an amount in excess of the indebtedness which the receivers are authorized by the court to incur cannot have their claims given priority as part of the operating expenses. 78. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. Co. v. Parry [Colo.] 86 P. 113. 1 Mills' Ann. St. § 497, providing for the dissolution of mining companies and the appointment of receivers for this purpose, construed, and held that an order giving to receiver all the powers usual in receivership cases and power to take charge of the affairs and property of the defendant company did not give power to run the mines. Id. A managing receivership of a private business corporation is never undertaken except with a view to winding up the affairs of the company and a sale of the property, the business being taken over and continued in order that the whole may be disposed of in the end as a going concern. contracted upon the faith of being paid from such current income,[79] and there must also have been a diversion of net income from the operation of the property for the benefit of the mortgagee.[80] Such diversion must have been made subsequent to the creation of the debts sought to be enforced as an equitable lien.[81] The court may by its decree and order of sale direct the manner of payment of priorities [82] and adjust set-offs.[83] A right of a creditor to priority may be waived by some act inconsistent with the continuance of such right.[84] Legitimate expenses of the receivership should be taxed as costs.[85] The complainant may be held liable for the costs and expenses of a receivership where the assets are insufficient therefor,[86] or where the appointment was wrongful.[87] An order for the disbursement of money paid to a receiver under order to the credit of a certain person may be made without notice to the receiver,[88] but such order should be addressed to him as receiver [89] and should not be personal unless he has through fault or misconduct lost the money,[90] but it

80. Fordyce v. Kansas City & N. Connecting R. Co., 145 F. 566. Where a railroad is in the hands of a receiver at the instance of holders of a mortgage, unless there has been an inequitable division of earnings from operation to the betterment of the mortgagee's postion, the court cannot appropriate the corpus of the property to the payment of operating expenses in preference to the prior mortgage debt in the absence of statute giving them a preference. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. U. S. & Mex. Trust Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 212. Where there is no proof of a diversion for the benefit of the mortgagee and there is a deficit in the net income arising from an operation of the road in a business like way, and the property brings less than the mortgage debts at the foreclosure sale, no equity exists in favor of such general creditors over the mortgagee entitling them to be paid out of the purchase money or from the corpus of the property Fordyce v. Omaha, K. C. & E. R. R., 145 F. 544.

81. The claimant has the burden of showing this. Fordyce v. Omaha K. C. & E. R. R., 145 F. 544. Rental paid by receiver on a lease made before the receivership and adopted by them is not a diversion of income but an operating expense. Id. Even if there is a diversion of income before a claimant can charge the corpus of the property, he has the burden of showing that but for the diversion there would have been a net surplus of earnings subject to equitable liens. 82. Decree providing for adjudication by it of priorities before their payment by the purchaser, construed. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Osborn [C. C. A.] 148 F. 606. The fact that the court in the order appointing the receiver may have directed that preferential claims for supplies and materials be paid from the proceeds of the sale or from the corpus of the property in the hands of the receiver does not prevent the purchaser from contesting the priority of such claims. Fordyce v. Omaha, K. C. & E. R. R., 145 F. 544. A decree ordering a receiver's sale of a railroad and providing that the purchasers should take subject to the payment of all claims against the receivers and pay any and all claims heretofore filed, or that may be filed hereafter within four months from the date of entry of the decree, but only when and as the court shall allow such claims, held not to include claims for damages pending or arising within the period limited and undetermined. Daniels v. Bay City Trac. & Elec. Co., 143 Mich. 493, 13 Det. Leg. N. 15, 107 N. W. 94. Where a mortgagor to a building association conveyed his interest to the receivers of the association, who bought up prior incumbrances and sold the estate but without agreement with the mortgagor as to the application of the proceeds, the court ordered the proceeds to be applied first in extinguishment of the prior incumbrances. Sengel v. Patrick [Ark.] 97 S. W. 448.

Court appointing receiver held not deprived of right to set off judgment previously recovered by company against an allowed claim of the judgment debtor by reason of fact that judgment debtor failed to file complaint in original action asking a set off in accordance with Gen. St. 1902, § 654. Betts v. Connecticut Life Ins. Co., 78 Conn. 442, 62 A. 345.

84. Where a mortgagee so far approves a receivership as to seek and secure benefits under it, he is precluded from claiming priority of his mortgage over operating expenses and other obligations incurred in carrying on the business which was intended to conserve his security. must be made to appear that he has received the money or has negligently failed to collect it.[91] Where property is turned over by a receiver to third parties as owners thereof, the court may order it back to pay the expenses of the receivership, if, when the final settlement is made, the assets in the receiver's hands are insufficient therefor,[92] and the order to pay back may be enforced by contempt proceedings, sequestration of assets, or appropriate equitable remedy.[93]

A receiver's certificate [94] does not acquire priority over all claims.[95] It is doubtful whether certificates may be issued in receiverships of private corporations.[96] Bankruptcy courts have the power to authorize the issuance of receiver's certificates.[97] Other lienholders have no right to complain of the priority of such certificates since their issuance and existence are matters of record,[98] and they are not negotiable.[99]

Counsel fees.[1]—Counsel fees should be allowed out of the general assets.[2] A receiver is not entitled to be allowed for counsel fees where no services inured to the benefit of the person entitled thereto.[3] A receiver is not a party to the cause by reason of his appointment and is not entitlel to a decree in his own name for his own and counsel fees and disbursements.[4] One who procures the wrongful appointment of a receiver is liable for the counsel fees.[5] A receiver's fee should be taxed as costs.[6]

(§ 4) C. Sales by receivers.[7]—Whenever a receiver by direction of the court appointing him makes a sale for assets, the parties concerned in the sale are bound to recognize him as an officer of said court, and consequently, said court not only has power summarily to enforce the completion of the contract of sale but the parties involved are deemed to have consented to such a proceeding.[8] The general employment of an attorney as counsel and attorney by a receiver does not authorize him to make a sale of the assets and take the proceeds thereof.[9] It is an accepted rule that considerable discretion is allowed the receiver as to whether he shall sell the property in his hands in bulk or in parcels.[10] In the absence of any statute, it is within the discretion of the court appointing to permit a sale to be made in a county other than that where the land is situated.[11] No other notice than that directed by the decree authorizing the sale need be given.[12] Even though the appointment of a receiver is later reversed on appeal, a sale made by him by order of a court having jurisdiction is not affected thereby.[13] The sale or the manner in which it was made can only be questioned in the court where the sale was ordered.[14] A purchaser at a receiver's sale is not bound to examine into all the proceedings in the suit for receiver.[15] In the absence of the receiver the court may appoint a special master or auctioneer to conduct the sale,[16] and such special master or auctioneer need not give a bond or take the oath.[17] An order of court confirming a receiver's sale need not contain the word "confirm."[18] In Pennsylvania a sale by a receiver under a decree of court is in effect under execution process.[19] Receiver's sale cannot be collaterally attacked if the court had jurisdiction of the receivership.[20] Where a suit to enforce a purchase money lien is brought after the goods have passed into the hands of a receiver, and such suit resulted in a judgment before the receiver's sale was perfected, the vendee at the receiver's sale took the goods subject to the lien of such judgment.[21]

(§ 4) D. Actions by and against receivers.[22]—The court which appoints a receiver holds and administers the estate through the receiver as its officer and must decide whether it will determine for itself all claims or allow them to be litigated in other courts.[23] Generally, where it is desired that a receiver shall bring suit, application is made to the court of his appointment setting out the grounds for suit, and upon proper showing the court passes an order giving direction to the receiver.[24] The authority of a receiver to bring suit may however be found in the order of appointment.[25] A receiver need not allege that he has obtained leave of court to bring an action.[26] When a receiver sues and jurisdiction to appoint him is denied, he

25. Where the order gave the receiver full power over "all and singular the property choses in action, franchises and rights" of the corporation, and vested him with full power to demand and receive and take into his possession the same, it was proper for him to sue in the name of the corporation for profits made by its trustee and not accounted for, although his powers were interlocutory and he was appointed assignee or trustee to wind up the corporation. must prove not only the appointment but also such procedure as will in law support jurisdiction.[27] Ordinarily the receiver of a corporation is the proper party to bring suit against offending officials.[28] In the absence of some conveyance or statute vesting the property of the debtor in the receiver, he cannot sue in courts of a foreign jurisdiction upon the order of the court which appointed him, to recover the property of the debtor.[29] A receiver may sue stockholders on their statutory liability in a forum other than that in which he was appointed, provided the corporation was a party to the receivership proceedings,[30] but an order in receivership proceedings will not bind stockholders not served with process or appearing, unless the corporation can be considered as representing them.[31] A receiver may bring a suit in his own name to collect assessments levied by the court.[32] The necessity for and the amount of an assessment on stockholders levied by the court after the appointment of a receiver cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding.[33] An order changing the venue cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding.[34] As a general rule a receiver cannot have a right of action not vested in the debtor whose assets and rights are placed in his hands by the order of the court.[35] Defenses available against the holder of a promissory note are available against a receiver appointed by the court to collect the note.[36] In New York a nonresident suing as receiver must give security for costs.[37] Where it is sought to bring an action against a receiver as such, permission of the court appointing must be obtained.[38] Such permission is a prerequisite to the right to sue such receiver,[39] either within the jurisdiction of his appointment,[40] or in any other forum.[41] The failure to obtain leave of the court appointing to sue a receiver is not fatal, however, since it may be waived by the receiver.[42] The power to grant leave that a receiver may be made a party defendant in the forum of his appointment or elsewhere carries with it the authority to revoke such leave.[43] An allegation of leave by the court to sue a receiver is immaterial and no issue can be raised on it.[44] The general rule as to continuance and postponement apply.[45] Criminal actions against receivers are governed by statute.[46] A receiver of a corporation cannot deny the de facto status of the corporation.[47]

§ 5. Accounting by receivers.[48]—The rendering of accounts or statements is regulated by statute in some states.[49] Due notice of the filing of accounts by receivers must be given.[50] Claims set out in a receiver's account if opposed, must be proved with legal certainty,[51] but a receiver has the burden of justifying and vouching his accounts so far, at least, as they are called in question by exceptions.[52] Even

41. An injunction made by a judge of one circuit in a cause pending in his circuit restraining and enjoining a receiver appointed by a judge of another circuit from applying to the judge whose receiver he was for possession of the property to which he had claims as such receiver is ill advised, irregular, and without authority. Ray v. Trice [Fla.] 42 So. 901.

42. Suit against directors, to which corporation was not a necessary party and no attempt was made to take any property or right of the corporation from the receivers, nor to prevent them from reaching any such property. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Bearse [Mass.] 80 N. E. 623.

43. Where after obtaining leave to sue a receiver out of the forum of his appointment a complainant obtained an injunction in the new forum restraining the receiver from applying to the court of appointment for possession of property, the court of appointment properly required the complainant to have the injunction dissolved on pain of revocation of the order allowing him to sue the receiver. Ray v. Trice [Fla.] 42 So. 901.

44. Action for goods alleged to have been sold receiver. Hutchinson v. Bien, 46 Misc. 302, 93 N. Y. S. 189.

45 The discretion of the court was not abused where a continuance in order to take depositions of absent witnesses was refused, when it did not appear that the presence of two could not have been obtained and where the effect of their testimony would have been merely to contradict a decree annuling a fraudulent sale and where the testimony of a third witness would not show a good defense. Fields v. U. S., 27 App. D. C. 433.

46. D. C. Code, § 841 (30 Stat. at L. 1326, p. 854), defining embezzlement by a receiver as fraudulent conversion and appropriation to his own use of property which "may come" into his possession, construed to include property which came into his hands prior to the passage of the act but embezzled thereafter. Fields v. U. S., 27 App. D. C. 433. Ownership by the debtor is sufficiently shown where it appears that the funds were proceeds of real estate of the debtor which passed into the possession of the receiver by virtue of his appointment. Where a motion for passing the accounts of a receiver in an action to dissolve a domestic corporation is made in a county other than that in which the action is pending, but due notice has been given to all interested parties and no objection to the motion is raised, it will not be vacated later, the court having had jurisdiction. People v. Anglo-American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 101 N. Y. S. 270.

in the absence of objections by an interested party, a court should closely scrutinize the accounts of a receiver before approving them.[53] An order for accounting and distribution by a receiver pendente lite is proper where the action has been finally determined between the plaintiff and the only parties in interest.[54] Where a receiver to collect rents pendente lite was also receiver for the same purpose in prior action, upon the voluntary discontinuance of the later action the court could only vacate the order appointing the receiver in that action and leave the parties to apply for an accounting and distribution by the receiver in the former action.[55] Upon a final accounting the receiver may be ordered to turn over the property to the person entitled to it subject to all contracts and liabilities then incumbent upon the receiver.[56] The court may in its discretion investigate and determine the correctness of all the accounts of a receiver when the final report is filed.[57]

§ 6. Compensation of receivers.[58]—A receiver's compensation and by whom it shall be paid are matters to be determined by the appointing court alone.[59] An order allowing compensation to a receiver requires notice to parties interested and a hearing at which they may be heard.[60] The compensation of a receiver should be taxed as part of the costs,[61] and as a general rule should be paid out of the funds in his hands.[62] A receiver may waive his right to compensation.[63] The question of forfeiture of commissions and charges of a receiver under a criminal statute is for the determination of the court appointing at the hearing on the final account.[64] If the receiver be improperly appointed the party procuring the appointment is liable for his compensation.[65] A final order allowing compensation to a receiver is appealable.[66] The owner of property may except to and appeal from a

59. A contract made by a receiver with the party who is also the purchaser at a sale by the receiver, under which the latter is liable for the payment of the receiver's compensation at a stated amount or at an amount to be later determined, is contrary to public policy and void unless authorized or approved by the court appointing the receiver. Hall v. Stulb, 126 Ga. 521, 55 S. E. 172. Compensation was refused where a receiver without authority so to do managed the debtor's property and accumulated a fund. Campau v. Detroit Driving Club, 144 Mich. 80, 13 Det. Leg. N. 200, 107 N. W. 1063.

60. "Nothing is better settled than that the allowance to a receiver by way of compensation for his services is not subject to the arbitrary determination of the court but should be made upon a hearing at which the parties interested have an opportunity to contest the claim." Fields v. U. S., 27 App. D. C. 433.

65. Harrington v. Union Oil Co., 144 F. 235.

66. "The test of the finality of a decree affecting either the conduct or the compensation of a receiver is not found in the mere fact as to whether the receivership was thereafter continued but in the nature and character of the order itself." Ruggles v. Patton [C. C. A.] 143 F. 312. An order which authorizes a receiver to pay himself a specific sum out of funds in his hands for past services withdraws that amount of money absolutely from the custody of the court and judgment awarding a retiring receiver a portion of the fund and directing his successor to pay the same,[67] and on such appeal the receiver's successor is a necessary party.[68] In New York, the people, represented by the attorney general and the receiver and his attorney, being the only parties to a reference fixing the compensation of the receiver, the special term cannot reduce the amount so fixed.[69]

§ 7. Liabilities and actions on receivership bonds.[70]—Receivers are trustees and not liable individually unless they are shown to have been in positive fault.[71] Where funds are lost by negligent failure to collect, a decree may be entered charging the receiver personally or leave may be given to sue on his bond.[72] Creditors who furnish goods to a receiver for an amount in excess of the indebtedness which the receiver was authorized to contract may bring actions on the receiver's bond.[73] Where liability upon a temporary receiver's bond is unmistakably conditioned upon a joint receivership, upon the retirement of one of the receivers neither he nor the surety is liable for the defaults of the other, who was appointed permanent receiver, after the joint receivership had ceased to exist.[74] A receiver of funds which he is ordered by the court to invest is liable for interest thereon.[75] A surety is not liable for acts of the receiver which were not and could not have been in the time of its execution.[76] Decree in court having jurisdiction of receivership ordering payment is conclusive on sureties.[77] The measure of damages on the bond is to be determined in an independent suit.[78] An order confirming a receiver's report and ordering the is a final order. Id. Unless the amount is so unquestionably inadequate or so manifestly excessive that it is clear that it was not the result of deliberative judgment, the compensation allowed a receiver will not be disturbed on appeal. Where a receiver acted as such for seven days and $1,000,000 passed through hands, an allowance of $2,500 for personal services, $500 for attorney's fees, and $150 for legal advice, is not so inadequate as to justify reversal. State v. Spittler [Conn.] 65 A. 949. RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

§ 1. Nature and Elements; Other Crimes Distinguished (1696).

§ 2. Indictment and Prosecution (1696). Evidence (1696). Instructions (1696). Verdict (1697).

§ 1. Nature and elements; other crimes distinguished.[81]—The offense at common law consisted in knowingly receiving stolen goods with felonious intent,[82] it being essential that the goods be actually stolen,[83] and that the receiver knows them to have been stolen,[84] but he need not know where.[85] Though one section of a statute deals with reception of a certain kind of property and omits one species thereof, the omitted species is not thereby excluded from another section relating to reception of stolen property generally.[86]

§ 2. Indictment and prosecution. Indictment.[87]—An indictment under a statute which denounces the offense by name must charge it in common-law form.[88] The indictment need not negative consent of the owner to the reception unless the statute makes want of such consent an element,[89] the words "unlawfully and feloniously" sufficiently charging the criminal intent.[90] Under the rule that when crimes are denounced disjunctively but charged conjunctively, the prosecution is not put to the proof of more than one of them, proof alone of aiding in concealing stolen property will support a conviction under an indictment charging buying and receiving also.[91] Evidence that the property belonged to an individual is fatally variant from an indictment laying property in a corporation.[92]

Evidence.[93]—The rule that the recent possession of stolen property casts on the defendant the onus of explaining his possession applies in prosecutions for receiving stolen property.[94] Evidence of the possession of like property by defendant at or near the same time is inadmissible unless it is also shown to have been stolen,[95] but it need not be shown that it was received by defendant with knowledge thereof,[96] nor that it was stolen by the same person.[97] The prosecution must prove all the elements of larceny in the original taking of the goods,[98] and any evidence admissible on a trial for larceny is competent to that end.[99]

Instructions.[1]—Pursuant to the general rule there is no error in refusing requested instructions which are covered in substance by the instructions given,[2] nor those which present immaterial matters.[3] and it may be a public record for this purpose even though there is no requirement that it be kept,[17] and though it is not made by an official person.[18] But the mere fact that records are authorized by law and are kept by public officers does not make them public records and as such open to inspection where they are kept for private purposes.[19] Minute memoranda of court proceedings will be considered as the record until they are extended on the record proper.[20]

§ 2. Keeping and custody.[21]—In some states it is proper practice for parties or counsel to prepare entries for the court to sign.[22]

A court has inherent power to amend its records in accordance with the facts,[23] and such amendment may be made at any time,[24] upon the court's own motion,[25] and without notice to the parties affected;[26] but where the record itself does not furnish the data necessary for the amendment, notice and an opportunity to be heard should be given to the parties.[27] Whether an amendment will be allowed is within the sound discretion of the court.[28]

§ 3. Publicity and access.[29]—The right to inspect public records is a common-law right,[30] sometimes recognized by statute,[31] and exists in favor of all who have a sufficient interest therein,[32] when it will not be detrimental to the interests of the state,[33] but mere inconvenience to the public officers is no reason for denying the right.[34] Even in the absence of statutory authority, therefore, anyone has a right to inspect and copy land title records free of charge, either for himself or as agent for another, so far as they relate to current transactions;[35] but he has no right to inspect and copy such records for the purpose of compiling books to be used in a business enterprise of furnishing abstracts and information to persons thereafter

Note: The decisions on the extent of the right to examine land title records and on similar questions rest largely on statutes not in unformity with each other and there is a lack of harmony in the decisions of the different states, and even in the same states. In Webber v. Townley, 43 Mich. 534, 5 N. W. 971, 38 Am. Rep. 213, it was held that there was no common-law right to make copies or abstracts for merely speculative purposes, and that no such right was conferred by Pub. Acts 1875, p. 51, No. 54, giving general right of examination of records to "all persons having occasion to examine them for any lawful purpose." This decision was overruled by the language of Burton v. Tuite, 78 Mich. 363, 44 N. W. 282, 7 L. R. A. 73, but the real holding in this case was only salesbooks kept by receiver of taxes and by him turned over to city treasurer were open to inspection by one employed by property owner to make examination as to tax sales with reference to particular property. In Day v. Button, 96 Mich. 600, 56 N. W. 3, it was held that Burton v. Tuite, 78 Mich. 363, 44 N. W. 282, 7 L. R. A. 73, established the right to examine records for purpose of making abstract books. In Burton v. Reynolds, 110 Mich. 354, 68 N. W. 217, mandamus was refused upon a petition by an abstracter seeking to examine file in action between private persons, where the petition negatived constructive notice of the action and did not assert actual notice nor state that the relief sought was necessary to the interest of his employer, though it did state that it was necessary to completion of petitioner's work. In Brown v. County Treasurer, 54 Mich. 132, 19 N. W. 778, 52 Am. Rep. 800, a citizen desiring to prosecute for infraction of liquor law, was refused inspection of liquor bonds filed with county treasurer. In Lurn v. McCarty, 39 N. J. Law, 287, a leading case cited to support Burton v. Tuite, 78 Mich. 363, 44 N. W. 282, 7 L. R. A. 73, the court overruled Flemming v. Clerk of Hudson County, 30 N. J. Law, 280, and held that county clerks were not entitled to fees for searches of land, title, records, not made by them, but no right of an abstracter for speculative purposes was involved. In Ferry v. Williams, 41 N. J. Law, 332, 32 Am. Rep. 219, it was held that every one has right to inspect public documents provided he has a proper interest therein, and the English cases were reviewed. In West Jersey Title & Guaranty Co. v. Barber, 49 N. J. Eq. 474, 24 A. 381, it was held that an abstract company has the same right as individuals to search records when employed to examine title of particular property, though it contemplates guaranteeing the title. In Barber v. West Jersey Title & Guaranty Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 158, 32 A. 222, it was decided that an abstract company had right to examine titles for purpose of guaranteeing them but not for purpose of setting up business in competition with that of the clerk. In Fidelity Trust Co. v. Clerk, 65 N. J. Law, 495, 47 A. 451, the court sustained the refusal of the clerk to permit an examination of certain indices of the supreme court relating to judgments which were a lien upon lands. In Newton v. Fisher, 98 N. C. 23, 3 S. E. 823, it was held that no one had the right to make copies and abstracts of records for speculative purposes. In Randolph v. State, 82 Ala. 527, 2 So. 714, 60 Am. Rep. 761, following Brewer v. Watson, 71 Ala. 299, 46 Am. Rep. 318, and Phelan v. State, 76 Ala. 49, it was held that Code 1876, § 698, providing that probate records shall be open to inspection "to all persons", etc., did not give the right to make copies for future use. In State v. King, 154 Ind. 621, 57 N. E. 535, it was held that a citizen and taxpayer had the right to examine county records in order to ascertain condition of fiscal condition of county affairs. In Buch v. Collins, 51 Ga. 393, 21 Am. Rep. 236, the right to make an abstract of public records for publication was denied under Code 1873, § 14, giving right of public inspection to "all persons", and § 3695 providing for clerk fees for making abstracts. In Clay v. Ballard, 87 Va. 787, 13 S. E. 262, the right of a citizen to take copies of registration books was upheld under Code 1897, § 84 (Code 1904, p. 51), providing that such books shall be open at all times to public inspection, the case turning upon the construction of the statute. In Cormack v. Wolcott, 37 Kan. 391, 15 P. 245, and Boylan v. Warren, 39 Kan. 304, 18 P. 174, 7 Am. St. Rep. 551, it was held that the right to copy county records for future use or speculative purposes was not conferred by a statute giving right of inspection of "all books and papers," etc., to any person, and a similar decision was made upon a similar statute in Bean v. People, 7 Colo. 200, 2 P. 709, and later this rule was changed by statute in Colorado. Stockman v. Brooks, 17 Colo, 248, 29 P. 746. Under Comp. St. Neb. 1903, c. 74, providing that all citizens and all others interested have right to examine public records free of charge, it was held that an attorney in fact of party to suit had right to examine entries relating to judgment of justice of peace and had such interest as to entitle him to a transcript. By statute in New York, abstract companies are entitled to free access to and to copy records. People v. Reilly, 38 Hun [N. Y.] 431; People v. Richards, 99 N. Y. 620, 1 N. E. 258. Under Wis. Rev. St. 700, providing that the register of deeds shall open to examination of "any person all books and papers," etc., "and permit any person so examining to take copies," etc., it was held that this right was not limited to lands in which such persons or his clients were pecuniarily interested and that any one might examine such books and make abstracts. Under Gen. St. Minn. 1878, c. 8, § 179, as amended by Laws 1885, p. 108, c. 116, abstract companies are held to have right to examine and copy records. State v. Rachac, 37 Minn. 373, 35 N. W. 7. In Vermont under a statute providing that books and records of justices of peace shall be open "at all times" to inspection of "any person interested," it was held that a citizen was not entitled to see complaint and warrant in a criminal case. Perkins v. Cummings, 66 Vt. 486, 29 A. 675. By statute in Connecticut coroner's records are open to inspection by accused and by any person interested. Daly v. Dimock, 55 Conn. 579, 12 A. 405. In State v. Hobiitzelle, 85 Mo. 624, inspect such records and to take memoranda and abstracts therefrom.[37] Private records, though kept by a public officer pursuant to law, are not open to public inspection either at common law[38] or under a statute authorizing inspection of "records."[39] Statutory provisions for official examination of public records are not necessarily exclusive of the common-law right.[40]

the question whether poll books were open to inspection by one actuated only by curiosity was queried, but right was upheld in favor of one claiming to have been elected to office. In Payne v. Staunton, 55 W. Va. 202, 46 S. E. 927, it was held that the person desiring inspection must have interest therein. In State v. Reed, 36 Wash. 638, 79 P. 306, it was held that a general demand by a citizen for inspection of "any and all books and public records" in county treasurer's office would not enforced by mandamus. In Marsh v. Sanders, 110 La. 726, 34 So. 752, general right to inspect and copy poll tax books was upheld. In Pennsylvania it has been held that in absence of statutory authority public records were open to inspection only to those having definite interest therein. Owens v. Woolridge, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 305. In Herbert v. Ashburner, 1 Wilson, 297, court said that the books of the sessions of Kendale were public and that everyone had right to see them, and in Rex v. Chapman, 1 Wilson, 305, that the books of the poor's rates were open to all parishioners, the rulings in these cases being evidently based on right of rights of members of body politic to see books of corporation. In King v. Shelley, 3 Term R. 142 and Talbot v. Villebeys, M. 23 Geo. 11, B. R. it was said that one man had no right to look into another's deeds where he has no interests therein. In King v. Babb, 3 Term R. 580, Lord Kenyon said an unlimited inspection of books of municipal corporation would not be granted to a stranger. Inspection of criminal records was refused in King v. Purnell and King v. Canelius, 1 Black, 27; 1 Wilson, 239. In Stoan Filter Co. v. El Paso Co., 117 F. 504, users of machine claimed to be an infringement of a patent were held to have the right to inspect court records in suit between other parties involving validity of the patent. In English law tenants of a manor could always inspect manor records in order to ascertain their titles. Rex v. Shelley, 3 Term R. 141. So also where authority of a mayor was in question, citizens could inspect records of borough to ascertain the facts. Rex v. Babb, 3 Term R. 579. Under Act Aug. 12, 1848, c. 166 (9 Stat. 292), giving right to inspect circuit and district court records to "any person * * * without any fee or charge therefor, and Act Aug. 1, 1888, c. 729, 25 Stat. 357, providing that indices and records of judgments" shall at all times be open to the inspection and examination of the public, it is held that all citizens have the right to examine such records free of charge, notwithstanding Act Feb. 26, 1853, c. 80 (10 Stat. 163,) allowing fees to clerk for searching records. It is also held that a title insurance company has right to examine such records free of charge in connection with current business. Title & Trust Co. v. Bell, 105 F. 548, afd. Commonwealth Title & Trust Co. v. Bell, 110 F. 828, afd. 189 U. S. 131, 47 Law. Ed. 741, 23 Sup. Ct. 569, though the act of 1888 did not retain the words "without any fees or charges therefor." Cases such as State v. Donovan, 10 N. D. 209, 86 N. W. 709; State v. Cummins, 76 Iowa, 136, 40 N. W. 124, and Johnson v. Wakulla Co., 28 Fla. 731, 9 So. 690, relating to records as evidence are not pertinent to question as to right of abstracting company to examine records for purpose of making abstracts, nor are cases, such as Park v. Lathrop, 142 Mass. 35, 6 N. E. 559 and Banks & Bros. v. West Pub. Co., 27 F. 50, upholding free inspection of legislative enactments, in print on such question. Records of courts concerning private affairs the publication of which would only satiate thirst for scandal constitute a class as to which there are often stronger reasons for denying inspection, than in case of land title records. Burton v. Reynolds, 110 Mich. 354, 68 N. W. 217; In re Caswell's Request, 18 R. I. 835, 29 A. 259, 27 L. R. A. 82, 49 Am. St. Rep. 814. See, also, Colman v. Ore, 71 Cal. 43, 11 P. 814. So also a member of a municipal corporation may have a general interest sufficient to entitle him to inspection of corporate records. People v. Cornell, 47 Barb. [N. Y.] 329, reversing 32 How. Prac. [N. J.] 149. Under statutes relating to clerk's fees and at common law, persons are generally allowed to inspect and copy records relating to their own holdings free of charge, except in Maryland. Belt. v. Abstract Co., 73 Md. 289, 20 A. 982, 10 L. R. A. 212. In England judgments were not a lien upon land, and the seller of realty was required to furnish an abstract which relieved the purchaser of the necessity of examining the records, while the reverse is true in this country. Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. [Mass.] 193; Espy v. Anderson, 14 Pa. 312; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 313, 27 P. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Dwight v. Cutler, 3 Mich. 566, 64 Am. Dec. 105. In this country the right of inspection is necessary in order to enable a purchaser of land to protect himself. Grellett v. Hellshorn, 4 Nev. 526; Wilson v. Wilson, 23 Nev. 273, 45 P. 1009; McCabe v. Gray, 20 Colo. 516. The result of the cases, therefore, is that persons having an interest, either for themselves or as agents for others, in the examination of land title records in connection with current transactions have the right to make such examination and to take copies, etc., at all reasonable hours, but that in the absence of clear and specific statutory authority such right does not exist when the object is to prepare a set of books or abstracts for future use or for speculative purposes—See State v. Grimes [Nev.] 84 P. 1061.

37. See Rev. St. c. 115, § 21, amending Act March 9, 1874. Davis v. Abstract Const. Co., 121 Ill. App. 121. Rev. St. c. 115, §§ 21, 25, authorizing public inspection of all records, indexes, abstracts and "other books", authorizes inspection of only such other books as are the same character as those enumrated. Id.

38. Land title records are only quasi public. Davis v. Abstract Const. Co., 121 Ill. App. 121; State v. Grimes [Nev.] 84 P. 1061.

39. Davis v. Abstract Const. Co., 121 Ill. App. 121.

Mandamus [41] is available to one asserting the right of inspection for the public benefit, though he has no personal pecuniary interest in the matter.[42] A bill to enforce the right of inspection need not allege how the defendant's duty to allow the inspection was created,[43] or that the records, required by law to be kept, exist,[44] or that they are public records.[45] It is doubtful whether a court has power to compel a party to a decree sustaining a patent to recall circulars sent out to customers stating the holding of the courts, or to further advise the recipients of the circulars that the decree has been appealed from and superseded by the adverse party, where the decision of the court does not appear to have been willfully perverted.[46] The question as to what are public records is treated elsewhere.[47]

§ 4. Proof of records and use in evidence.[48]—The court will take judicial notice of a law requiring certain records to be kept.[49] A public record may be proved by the record itself,[50] by certified copy,[51] or by examined and sworn copies.[51a] Where the certificate to a certified copy is ambiguous, it will be construed in such manner as to make the action of the recording officer in recording the original lawful.[52] A transcript properly certified at the time it is made and filed is not rendered inadmissible by a subsequent amendment to the statute relating to the certification of transcripts where the amendment expressly relates only to transcripts thereafter

40. Examination of state auditor's accounts provided for by U. S. 320, as amended by Laws 1904, p. 25, No. 21, held not exclusive of taxpayer's right to inspect claims and vouchers required to be filed by U. S. 305. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146.

41. See 4 C. L. 1256, note.

42. Mandamus by taxpayer to enforce right to inspect state auditor's accounts. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146.

Note: Applying this principle mandamus has been allowed at instance of citizens of city to compel compliance with railroad charter in matter of terminus of road. Union Pacific R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 Law. Ed. 428. At instance of voter to compel allowance of inspection of registration books. Clay v. Ballard, 87 Va. 787, 13 S. E. 262. At instance of citizens of county to compel allowance of inspection of returns of election relating to bonding of county. Payne v. Staunton, 55 W. Va. 202, 46 S. E. 927. At instances of parishioner to compel allowance of copies of borough rates or assessments. Kink v. Justices of Leicester, 4 B. & C. 891. At instance of parishioner to compel allowance of inspection and copying of parish accounts. Rex v. Guardians, etc., of Great Faringdon, 9 B. & C. 41. Inspection of registration lists and poll books by defeated candidate. State v. Hoblitzelle, 85 Mo. 620. Inspection of registration lists and poll books by party committee, prior to election. State v. Williams, 96 Mo. 13, 8 S. W. 771. Inspection of records relating to liquor license by citizens. Ferry v. Williams, 41 N. J. Law, 332, 32 Am. Rep. 219. Inspection of city accounts by citizens and taxpayers. State v. Williams, 110 Tenn. 549, 75 S. W. 64 L. R. A. 418. Inspection of county records in office of county auditor. State v. King, 154 Ind. 621, 57 N. E. 535—See Clement v. Graham [Vt.] 63 A. 146.

43. Bill by taxpayer against state auditor. Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 A. 146. An allegation that it is the defendant's duty to exhibit certain records upon request is an allegation of a mere conclusion and hence not traversable. Id.

50. Record of same court trying case may be proved by production of record itself, whether on interlocutory or final hearing of such case. Sellers v. Page [Ga.] 56 S. E. 1011.

51. See Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2306, 2308. Trimble v. Burroughs [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 753, 95 S. W. 614. A certificate to a transcript from the records of a court of ordinary signed by a certain person as ordinary of a certain county sufficiently authenticates the record when it appears affirmatively in the certificate that the ordinary had no clerk and was himself acting as clerk of his own court. See Civ. Code 1895, § 4250. Sellers v. Page [Ga.] 56 S. E. 1011.

51a. Sworn copy from Federal internal revenue records admissible to show that defendant charged with violation of prohibition law was engaged in liquor business where neither original nor certified copies of such records were obtainable. State v. Nippert [Kan.] 86 P. 478; State v. Schaeffer [Kan.] 86 P. 477.

52. Certificate reciting that the copy was a "true and correct copy of the original deed * * * ; that the same was presented for registration" on certain day, etc., held not to show that a copy of the deed was recorded and that the certified copy offered was a copy of a copy and hence inadmissible, since clerk would not have been authorized to register a copy. Williams v. Cessna [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 162, 95 S. W. 1106.

made.[53] Records which are merely copies of other records are not admissible unless they are properly certified.[54] The admissibility of a paper of a public character is not dependent entirely upon its strict regularity.[55] Records of the Federal internal revenue department are available to a litigant only upon such terms as are fixed by or under the authority of the Federal government.[56] A transcript from such records is sufficient to make a prima facie case in actions against officers accountable for public moneys,[57] and the burden is cast upon the defendant to prove any credits which have not been allowed to him,[58] but the transcript is not conclusive of the government's claims.[59] Such a transcript will not be excluded merely because it contains items of credit and debit in regard to which it is not admissable,[60] or because it contains matter explanatory of the rejection of credits claimed by the defendant;[61] but it is not admissible to prove receipt by an officer of moneys that did not come into his hands through the ordinary channels of the department.[62] Court records, even though they are meager and in the form of minute entries, cannot be enlarged or diminished by parol evidence,[63] and if incorrect, they can be corrected only by an amendment allowed by the court or magistrate of whose judicial action it purports to be a record.[64] The question as to what are public records is treated elsewhere.[65]

§ 5. Crimes relating to records.[66]—Falsification of a record is sometimes made a crime regardless of the motive.[67] The fact that a record is incomplete or open to technical criticism is no defense to a prosecution for stealing or destroying it.[68] The question as to what is a "record" is treated elsewhere.[69]

Reference to masters in chancery is elsewhere treated,[70] as is reference to arbitrators,[71] the topic including only reference of actions at law and under the codes.

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions, master and referee, referee and umpire or arbitrator.[72]

§ 2. Occasion for reference.[73]—A reference is proper in all cases where the stating of an account is required.[74] Compulsory references are generally governed by statute and are not authorized unless some statutory ground appears,[75] but they are generally granted where the trial would involve the examination of a long account,[76] and it is sufficient if it appears from the pleadings that such an examination is involved.[77] Under such statutes it is not necessary that the action should be strictly based upon the account or for an accounting, but it must be a matter forming substantially the basis of the claim [78] and when the account is to be examined for the purpose only of affording evidence upon which plaintiff relies to fix the amount of his recovery, he cannot be compelled to accept a reference.[79] How long the account must be in order to justify a reference is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court.[80] But it has been held that the court is without power to

75. In an action for an accounting on a contract for the payment of royalties and for a permanent injunction restraining defendant from making or selling the device on which the royality was to be paid, the court by an interlocutory judgment established defendant's liability but on its own motion ordered a reference to take proof as to the amount due plaintiff for royalties and damages and to report such proof with his opinion thereon to the court, reserving its opinion as to the awarding of the injunctive relief until the coming in of the referee's report, the reference was held unathorized under either §§ 827, 1013 or 1015, New York Code Civ. Proc., because not requiring an examination or inquiry (§ 827), nor the examination of a long account not involving the decision of difficult questions of law (§ 1013), and because not occurring after interclocutory or final judgment (§ 1015). Fowler v. Peck, 99 N. Y. S. 816.

78. Brillion Lumber Co. v. Barnard [Wis.] 111 N. W. 483. Where in an action for services in auditing books the defendant interposes as a counterclaim defalcations of its servants due to the negligence of plaintiffs, an examination of the books to ascertain such defalcations is only incidentally involved and does not justify a compulsory reference. grant a compulsory reference in an action at law even though the examination of a long account is involved, and that a statute authorizing reference in such cases applies only to equitable actions.[81] Reference is sometimes authorized in special proceedings[82] but ordinarily rests in discretion.[83] Where the cause of action set up in the complaint is not referable, it cannot be made referable by anything set up in the answer unless the allegations of the complaint are not denied.[84]

§ 3. Time and stage of proceedings.[85]

§ 4. Motion and order for reference, and stipulations or consents on voluntary reference.[86]—A statute providing that upon agreement of the parties the court may appoint a referee in any cause pending therein authorizes a reference only upon agreement of the parties.[87] An order erroneously made in the absence of parties will not be vacated after the absent parties have come in and asked that the order of reference be affirmed.[88] Irregularities in granting the reference are waived by failure to object or the subsequent conduct of the parties before the referee.[89]

§ 5. Selection and qualifications of the referee; his oath and induction into office. Removals and substitutions.[90]—A trial judge has no authority to act as referee in an action at law without the consent of the parties.[91] The court at all times has general authority over referees and upon the resignation of one may appoint another to fill the vacancy even after the term at which the order of reference was made.[92] A referee may be removed for unreasonably delaying a report.[93]

§ 6. General scope of reference and powers of referees or masters.[94]—The powers and duties of the referee are measured by the order of reference[95] and only the issues joined at the time thereof pass to the referee.[96]

§ 7. Appearance before referee, hearing and adjournments, trial and practice thereon.[97]—Under the New York statutes the referee has the same power to amend pleadings so as to make them conform to the proof as the court.[98] A referee who is ordered to report evidence taken before him to the court with his opinion is not bound to admit irrelevant evidence.[99] Where an auditor reports that a view is necessary, before the introduction of evidence, to the proper determination of the case, it is within the discretion of the court to allow such view.[1] If a referee unreasonably delays a report the court may direct him to speed the case and if he neglects to do so may force a report, or it may remove him and appoint another, but without the consent of the parties it cannot itself assume his duties.[2] All irregularities not going to the jurisdiction [3] are waived by consent thereto [4] or failure to object.[5]

§ 8. The report, its form, requisites and contents, and return and filing.[6]—The report of the auditor follows the case wherever it goes and if material and relevant is admissible in whatever court the trial takes place,[7] and this is true even though the matter be subsequently referred to a master on appeal [8] and it will be assumed that the auditor's report contained statements material to the inquiry.[9] The referee must pass on all matters submitted,[10] state the account if one is referred,[11] and make his findings separately [12] in his report.[13] Where a rule submitting the cause to the master does not call for a report of the evidence, such report is unnecessary.[14] The report is a nullity unless filed within the time prescribed by law [15] and during the

§ 9. Revision of report before the court. Objections and exceptions.[18]—A party objecting to the findings of a master should apply to the master to have them corrected and in the event of his failure to do so should have him certify along with his report the evidence upon which his contested conclusions of fact were based.[19] Upon the filing of exceptions to the referee's report the opposite party may move to strike them out as improper and to confirm the report, or he may treat them as presenting a case for the jury and proceed to trial.[20] Exceptions to auditor's report must be specific and definite [21] and must show in what respect alleged error was prejudicial,[22] but a general exception that the report is contrary to the evidence is sufficient where the report itself is general.[23] An exception classified as an exception of fact but which in reality raises a question of law should be stricken out.[24] The time within which exceptions to the auditor's report must be filed is generally limited by statute,[25] but under such a statute it has been held that the allowance of an amendment after the expiration of the time limited is in effect a judgment of the court that the exception is amendable at that time and, so long as it remains unreversed, the exception will be treated as having been duly filed.[26] Where plaintiff treats exceptions filed to the report by defendant as presenting an issue for the jury and proceeds to trial thereon, he cannot prevent defendant from introducing evidence in his own behalf.[27]

30. In re Paul Jones & Co., 102 N. Y. S. 983.

As a general rule the report of a referee is prima facie correct.[31] In California and some other states the finding of facts reported by a referee is equivalent to a special verdict or the findings of fact made by the court upon its trial of a cause and entitled to the same weight [32] and, where the evidence is conflicting and the credibility of witnesses involved, they will be set aside only when clearly and palpably wrong.[33] In some jurisdictions the order of judgment on the report is pro forma and the court will not review errors in the referee's report. If the error is manifest application should be made to the referee to correct it.[34] In those states in which the report of a referee is entitled to the same weight as the verdict of a jury, the court can set aside his findings, but only under the same circumstances in which it has authority to set aside the verdict of a jury.[35] In Missouri it is held that, where the reference is by consent in a matter in which the court could not grant a compulsory reference, the finding of the referee is in effect the same as the verdict of a jury and binding upon the court unless for good cause set aside; [36] but the referee's conclusions of law based on such findings are not binding upon the court and it may enter judgment under a different conclusion on the same findings of fact.[37] Referee's report will not be set aside because he gave more weight to certain evidence than the facts disclosed by entire record would warrant.[38] In the absence of exceptions before the master and in the absence of the evidence upon which his conclusions of fact are based, the court will review only such errors as are apparent on the face of the master's report.[39] The court may in its discretion recommit a matter to the referee to take additional evidence thereon,[40] but where there has been a fair hearing before the referee and there is no evidence of accident or surprise nor that upon a second hearing additional evidence will be adduced which may change result reached by referee, a motion to recommit will be denied.[41] Under certain circumstances it is within the court's discretion to order the issue to be submitted to a jury even after the coming in of the master's report.[42] The court may draw inferences of fact from specific findings by the auditor different from those found by him.[43] Where some issues are referred and others tried by the court, evidence as to an item not within the scope of the reference should not be excluded on the trial.[44] Insanity of the referee is ground for the vacation of a judgment directed by him, but not unless his insanity was such as to render him incapable of performing his duties,[45] and the mere fact that on the day he signed the decision he was adjudged insane is not conclusive.[46] Upon a motion to set aside a decision of the referee upon the ground of his insanity, the question as to his mental condition must be determined as of the date upon which he signed the decision and gave notice thereof to the party entitled thereto.[47] Upon the submission of the auditor's report, the court may amend the record as to make it conform to the facts.[48] The fact that no exception was taken to the report of the referee does not prevent court from modifying it.[49]

§ 11. Appellate review.[50]—Where it does not appear that the reference was by consent, the auditor's findings are not final so as to preclude a review on appeal.[51] Where findings of the auditor are concurred in by the court below, they will not be disturbed on appeal unless error is manifest.[52] The court on appeal will not consider a finding which is not incorporated in the report of the referee.[53] Where no prejudice results from an erroneous order refusing to allow an amendment of the referee's report, the order will be reversed without prejudice to proceedings taken subsequent to the filing of the report.[54] Error in refusing to vacate a reference on the ground of prejudice of the referee is harmless where the referee resigns and another is appointed in his stead.[55] The mere appointment of a master on appeal from confirmation does not supersede the report of the auditor in the same proceeding.[56]

§ 12. Compensation, fees, and costs.[57]—The amount to be awarded the referee as compensation for his services is to be determined by the circumstances of each particular case.[58] Under a statute requiring the commissioner to file a verified statement of the number of days he has acted as such before any allowance shall be made for his compensation, it is improper to allow any compensation until such statement is filed.[59]

E. 74; Pyne v. Knight, 130 Iowa, 113, 106 N. W. 505. Failure of a justice employed by grantor and grantee to effectuate the intention of the parties is a mutual mistake of the parties. Williamson v. Brown, 195 Mo. 313, 93 S. W. 791. A designation of the land to be sold to a member of a partnership in negotiations subsequently abandoned charges the partnership with notice so as to render a mistake in the description mutual, although the members purchasing believed he was buying the land actually described. Pyne v. Knight, 130 Iowa, 113, 106 N. W. 505. A contract in the form of a rent note will not be reformed so as to reserve the fruit growing on the premises to the lessor where the lessee did not so understand the contract. Quiggle v. Vining, 125 Ga. 98, 54 S. E. 74. A Federal contract will not be reformed in the absence of evidence showing that the government intended to enter into any contract other than the one sought to be reformed. United States v. Milliken Imprinting Co., 202 U. S. 168, 50 Law. Ed. 980.

70. Where the agent of an insurance company had authority to solicit applications only and not to issue policy, the mistake to be mutual must be a mistake of the company and of the insured. Floors v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 915. No evidence to show that the policy issued was not the one intended to be issued by the company. Id. A contract entered into by the directors of a corporation in the hands of receivers affecting interests in the hands of the latter cannot be reformed at the suit of stockholders on the ground of mistake after it has been ratified and signed by the receivers under order of court, made with full knowledge of the facts. North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Chicago Union Trac. Co., 150 F. 612.

71. Cox v. Beard [Kan.] 89 P. 671.

Reformation allowed where the grantor fraudulently led the grantee to believe that the description included all. Cox v. Beard [Kan.] 89 P. 671. Where the grantor, without the knowledge of the grantee, inserted restrictive covenants contrary to the sale agreement. Lloyd v. Hulick [N. J. Err. & App.] 63 A. 616. That a bill to reform a deed alleged that by mistake of the scrivener a husband was named therein as grantee instead of the wife, while the evidence shows that the husband directed him to do so, does not preclude a reformation. Siling v. Hendrickson, 193 Mo. 365, 92 S. W. 105.

Reformation denied: The mere fact that a vendee knew of an existing lease and requested the agent not to mention it in the deed, which was done, is not such fraud as to justify reformation where it does not appear that the land was to be sold subject to such lease, or that the vendee made any where it is a mixed one of law and fact,[72] as where it results from a mutual non-appreciation of the legal effect of words intentionally used.[73] Reformation will only be granted where it will serve a beneficial purpose.[74] but it is not material whether the instrument is executory or executed if relief can be afforded.[75] The remedy being an equitable one, the party seeking it must first do equity [76] and be free from fault.[77] The relief is most frequently invoked to correct mistakes of the scrivener in reducing the agreement to writing,[78] and to correct errors in deeds whereby land is mistakenly included.[79] Where an insurance agent negligently fails to attach a granted vacancy permit to a policy according to custom between the parties, the policy may be reformed.[80] representations as to the contents of the deed. Weinhard v. Summerville [Wash.] 89 P. 490.

72. Where it is the intention of all parties to execute a deed vesting a life estate in the grantee's husband with a remainder to the wife and her heirs, the mistake of the scrivener in drawing a deed ineffectual for such purpose is one of mixed law and fact, subject to reformation. Williamson v. Brown, 195 Mo. 313, 93 S. W. 791.

73. Barataria Canning Co. v. Ott [Miss.] 41 So. 378. Where a reservation was made in a deed of "all littoral and aquatic rights appurtenant" to the land, with the intention to reserve oyster rights, it may be reformed. Id.

74. Burner v. Higman & Skinner Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 580.

Reformation denied: Where duplicate copies of an agreement differ, since parol evidence is admissible in a suit on the erroneous copy to show which is the true agreement. Bowman v. Poppenberg, 103 N. Y. S. 245. Where a deed mistakenly describes a part of the land twice, an action for overpayment being sufficient. Willson v. Legro, 73 N. H. 515, 63 A. 399. Where a mortgage executed by an incompetent's guardian was void because not confirmed by the court a mistake therein will not be corrected. Montgomery v. Perryman & Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 838. A trustee's deed of the property described in a trust deed cannot be reformed so as to include a tract mistakenly omitted from the trust deed. Harper v. Combs [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 902. A contract for a lease, which "when executed" should be subject to the approval of the attorneys of the parties, will not be reformed so as to provide for approval before execution, since it will be given that effect by construction. Pittsburgh Amusement Co. v. Ferguson, 101 N. Y. S. 217. In an action for personal injuries, received in an elevator, brought against the landlord, the lease will not be reformed so as to omit the reservation to the landlord of the right to use the elevator, since the material fact of control may be proven or disproven without regard thereto. Burner v. Higman & Skinner Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 580.

Reformation granted: The running of the statute of limitations against a debt secured by a trust deed does not destroy the rights existing under the deed, and hence a reformation thereof will not be denied as futile. Travelli v. Bowman [Cal.] 89 P. 347. Where a lessor refuses to perform a contract of lease, the mere fact that the lessee may show by parol the misdescription in the lease, in an action for damages, is not such adequate remedy at law as to prevent reformation. Braithwaite v. Henneberry, 124 Ill. App. 407.

75. Williamson v. Brown, 195 Mo. 313, 93 S. W. 791.

76. Where a deed conveying a right of way to a railroad is ambiguous, the company is not entitled to a reformation making it convey a strip on either side of the road as constructed until they have fulfilled their undertaking to construct fences, gates, etc. Champion v. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co., 145 Mich. 676, 13 Det. Leg. N. 611, 108 N. W. 1078.

77. Pyne v. Knight, 130 Iowa, 113, 106 N. W. 505. Failure to read a deed held not such negligence as to prevent relief from a fraudulently inserted restrictive covenant. Lloyd v. Hulick [N. J. Err. & App.] 63 A. 616. Failure to compare a deed with the contract and to note that it did not except a certain strip not sold held not such gross negligence as to prevent reformation. Los Angeles R. R. Co. v. New Liverpool Salt Co. [Cal.] 87 P. 1029. Where a lot owner did not know the true boundary of her lot but pointed out to her agent what she wished sold, she was not guilty of such negligence in signing a deed including more than she intended to convey so as to prevent reformation. Pyne v. Knight, 130 Iowa, 113, 106 N. W. 505. Where an agent makes a mistake in drawing a contract, such mistake is not negligence of the principal, preventing reformation. McCain v. Columbia Finance & Trust Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1292, 97 S. W. 343. Failure to discover a mistake that would have been ascertained by the most ordinary care held such negligence as to defeat reformation. Grieve v. Grieve [Wyo.] 89 P. 569.

78. Thomas v. Robinson, 29 Ky. L. R. 769, 96 S. W. 459; Stinson v. Ray [Ark.] 96 S. W. 141.

79. Laufer v. Moppins [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 109. A vendor can maintain an action to reform a deed which through mutual mistake includes more than was intended. Stapleton v. Schaffer [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 792, 109 N. W. 665. Where a lease reserved from the "leased premises" that portion lying between the tracks of the L. Railroad, etc., and granted an option to the lessee to purchase the "leased premises." Held that the reserved portion was also excepted from the option and hence a deed made pursuant thereto and failing to except that portion through mistake may be reformed. Los Angeles & R. R. Co. v. New Liverpool Salt Co. [Cal.] 87 P. 1029.

80. Mississippi Fire Ass'n v. Stein [Miss.] 41 So. 66.

The right to reformation may be lost by a ratification of the mistake,[81] by laches,[82] or by estoppel,[83] or be barred by the statute of limitations.[84] An acceptance of partial performance in a particular not affected by reformation [85] or an adjudication of rights under the instrument as executed [86] is no bar to a reformation. A demand for correction is not usually a condition precedent.[87]

An instrument may be reformed as against the parties thereto,[88] their assignees,[89] and other parties standing in their place,[90] but not as against third parties without notice.[91] An heir has the same right to correct an erroneous deed as his ancestor.[92]

(§ 1) C. Instruments reformable.[93]—Equity will not reform a voluntary conveyance [94] or correct any deed in Wisconsin so as to include an omitted homestead during the life of the grantor or his widow.[95]

§ 2. Procedure. A. Jurisdiction and form of proceeding.[96]—Reformation, being an equitable remedy, cannot be granted in an action at law in the absence of statute,[97] but a stay should be allowed to enable the issue to be tried in equity.[98] Where, however, a court has both legal and equitable jurisdiction, a contract may be reformed and enforced in the same action.[99] The court of claims has jurisdiction of an action to reform and enforce a contract against the Federal government.[1]

81. No ratification where mistake was unknown until shortly before suit. Detweiler v. Swartley [Kan.] 86 P. 141.

82. Held not barred: Mistake was not discovered until the suit was commenced. Detweiler v. Swartley [Kan.] 86 P. 141. Mistake discovered about a month before suit and there being no circumstances to put plaintiff on inquiry. Travelli v. Bowman [Cal.] 89 P. 347. The fact that plaintiff's attorney, who did not know that the instrument was among his papers, did not examine it is not such laches as to prevent reformation. Id. Where the purchaser of a nursery stock notified the purchaser shortly after the agreement was made that the written contract did not conform to the real agreement and not to send the stock, to which the seller made no reply but four months later sent the consignment, when the purchaser promptly brought an action to reform. Goodrich v. Fogarty, 130 Iowa, 223, 106 N. W. 616.

83. There can be no estoppel preventing a reformation where the party against whom it is sought has not changed his position. Detweiler v. Swartley [Kan.] 86 P. 141.

84. Where reformation is asked by way of defense, the statute of limitations is not applicable. Defendant in ejectment filing crossbill praying for a reformation of a deed so as to perfect his title. Williamson v. Brown, 195 Mo. 313, 93 S. W. 791. Where it was the intention of a grantor to convey a life estate to his daughter with remainder to her children, a child who permits her mother to hold possession and make valuable improvements in the belief that the deed gave a life estate is estopped to plead the statute of limitations to reformation. Swinebroad v. Wood, 29 Ky. L. R. 1202, 97 S. W. 25.

86. An appellate decision. Barataria Canning Co. v. Ott [Miss.] 41 So. 378.

87. Braithwaite v. Henneberry, 124 Ill. App. 407. Where a pledgor has become bankrupt, a demand upon the bankrupt or the trustee is not a condition precedent to an action for reformation. First Nat. Bank v. Bacon, 113 App. Div. 612, 98 N. Y. S. 717.

88. Where a deed recites a consideration paid to the parties of the first part, husband and wife, and there is no allegation or evidence that the wife did not receive a part thereof, an objection that the deed should not be reformed so to include land for which she received no consideration is without merit. Scheuer v. Chloupek [Wis.] 109 N. W. 1035.

89. Massey v. Lindeni, 98 Minn. 133, 107 N. W. 146.

90. A pledge may be reformed as against a trustee in bankruptcy. First Nat. Bank v. Bacon, 113 App. Div. 612, 98 N. Y. S. 717.

91. Reformation of a lease reserving the right to the landlord to jointly use the elevator cannot be reformed as against one suing for personal injuries therein. Burner v. Higman & Skinner Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 580. A deed cannot be reformed so as to injure purchasers of the property without notice. Brown v. Gwin, 197 Mo. 499, 95 S. W. 208. Evidence held sufficient to show that defendant had no actual notice. Reid v. Rhodes [Va.] 56 S. E. 722. A description by boundaries in a deed controls a call for acreage, and hence the recordation thereof is not constructive notice that land not within the defined limits was intended to be included. (§ 2) B. Parties.[2]—All persons affected by the reformation are necessary parties.[3]

(§ 2) C. Pleading and evidence.[4]—Reformation may be sought by way of answer, asking affirmative relief to perfect a defense.[5] The contract sought to be reformed should be set out or attached as an exhibit,[6] and the petition must show the particular mistake, or the fraud and mistake, and how it occurred,[7] and, if reformation of a deed is sought as against a subsequent purchaser, it must allege notice.[8] A petition to reform a trust deed must allege nonpayment of the secured debt.[9] Complainant need not anticipate the plea of limitations and plead matters in avoidance thereof,[10] but as a general rule the statute must be pleaded as a defense.[11] Where suit is instituted long after the execution of the instrument, complainant must plead facts avoiding the defense of laches.[12]

Since reformation destroys that which the parties have deliberately created as the evidence of their agreement, a higher degree of proof is required than in ordinary civil actions,[13] and the party seeking relief has the burden [14] of establishing his case by full, clear, and satisfactory evidence; [14a] and where the relief is sought in a § 4. Defenses to, or Avoidance of, Releases (1715).

§ 5. Pleading, Proof and Practice (1717). The Burden of Proof (1717). Evidence (1717).

This topic includes only formal releases, excluding settlements and the effect of a release as an accord and satisfaction.[22] The rule of public policy respecting release of liability for future negligence is also excluded.[23]

§ 1. Nature, form, and requisites.[24]—Though acceptance of a payment made in full may operate as a compromise,[25] a formal release becomes effective only on its execution and not by acceptance of the payment tendered therewith.[26] At common law release must be by specialty the seal importing consideration,[27] but by statute in many states, the seal is dispensed with,[28] and in some the fact that the instrument is in writing is given the effect which at common law attached to a seal.[29] A seal affixed to the signature of one joint releasor is presumptively adopted by the other when sealing by both is recited.[30]

§ 2. Parties to release.[31]—A statute making a contract expressly for the benefit of a third person enforceable by him renders a release for the benefit of a third person available by him as a defense.[32]

§ 3. Interpretation, construction, and effect.[33]—A general release will be construed to apply only to the precedent particular transactions recited therein,[34] but general words are not necessarily restricted to a particular item thereafter mentioned.[35] A general release with an exception releases all not strictly within the ex-

26. But the mere receipt of a check and voucher showing it to be on account of damages and reciting that the indorsement of the voucher constitutes a full release of the account does not render the papers effective as a release. Indiana Union Trac. Co. v. McKinney [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 203.

27. Probate Court v. Enright [Vt.] 65 A. 530; Allen v. Ruland [Conn.] 65 A. 138. An unsealed release is merely a receipt effective or not according to the adequacy of the actual consideration (Farmers' & Mechanics' Life Ass'n v. Caine, 224 Ill. 599, 79 N. E. 956, afg. 123 Ill. App. 419), and hence is a discharge only of so much of the debt as is equal in amount to the sum received (Id.).

Consideration held sufficient: A promise to release, based on services already rendered of such character and performed under such circumstances as entitles the releasee not only to expect but to enforce compensation, is supported by a sufficient consideration. Rockefeller v. Wedge [C. C. A.] 149 F. 130. Adequacy not considered where release was of unliquidated claim. Allen v. Ruland [Conn.] 65 A. 138. When a release is executed by an employe jointly with his employer for injuries sustained by each through the negligence of the releasee, the fact that the employer received all the consideration paid does not necessarily affect the validity of the release given by the employe. Strode v. St. Louis Transit Co., 197 Mo. 616, 95 S. W. 851. Evidence held insufficient to show want of consideration in obtaining release. Narretti v. Scully [C. C. A.] 139 F. 118.

Insufficient: A release given by a discharged employe for no more than the amount of wages due him at the time is no consideration for a release of his claim for a wrongful discharge. Caffyn v. Peabody, 149 F. 294.

35. Release of August 15, 1903, covering from the beginning of the world to and including its date and especially on account of a certain accident which occurred on or about July 18, 1903, held to cover an accident occurring March 8, 1902. ception.[36] Release by an injured person bars an action for death resulting from the injury.[37] Construction of ambiguous terms is for the court.[38] In the absence of statute [39] the voluntary release of one joint debtor,[40] or joint tort feasor,[41] releases all. But this rule applies only to a formal release as distinguished from a mere payment,[42] or a covenant not to sue,[43] to one who is in fact a joint tort feasor with him who claims the benefit of the release,[44] and in the absence of an express limitation in the release,[45] the consideration of the release operating in such cases as payment pro tanto.[46]

40. Married woman held not joint debtor with husband on their joint note. Banking House v. Rose [Neb.] 111 N. W. 590. A succession in estate by one co-obligor to the obligation is not a "transfer" to him which would release all. Does not extinguish obligation. Enscoe v. Fletcher, 1 Cal. App. 659, 82 P. 1075.

41. A release of one of several joint trespassers for a valuable consideration is a release of all. Allen v. Ruland [Conn.] 65 A. 138. Where an agent is intrusted with the discount of the notes of a third person by his principal, the liability of the principal to the third person arising from the agent's conversion of the proceeds of the notes brings the case within rule that the release of one of the joint tort feasors releases all. Chicago Herald Co. v. Bryan, 195 Mo. 574, 92 S. W. 902. Hence, a release of the principal by such third person is conclusive of the right of the latter to proceed against the agent. Id. A release to a county by releasor through whose land the county's contractors were building a sewer of all damages by the contractors except from their negligence as to crops outside the right of way is an acquittance of the contractors of all trespasses, subject only to the express reservation. Murphy v. Black [Ala.] 41 So. 877.

42. Brennan v. Electrical Inst. Co., 120 Ill. App. 461.

43. A covenant not to sue one of several joint tort feasors is not equivalent to a release. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Averill, 224 Ill. 516, 79 N. E. 654.

44. Release to commonwealth for injuries to employe of contractor engaged in doing work for the commonwealth held not release of contractor. Pickwick v. McCauliff [Mass.] 78 N. E. 730. Street railway held not joint tort feasor with railroad. Pittsburgh Ry. Co. v. Chapman [C. C. A.] 145 F. 886, afg. 140 F. 784.

45. El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 145, 93 S. W. 166. When the ultimate owner of property has enforced his rights by following it into the hands of one who has obtained it unlawfully and given a release for less than the sum lost, reserving the right to proceed against another through whose fault the loss occurred, the latter cannot avail of the release as a defense to its liability, whether tortious or contractual. Morris v. North American Mercantile Agency Co., 103 N. Y. S. 761.

46. In the absence of a release or an accord and satisfaction, the receipt of compensation from a joint tort feasor is applicable merely pro tanto in satisfaction of a claim against another joint tort feasor. Brennan v. Electrical Inst. Co., 120 Ill. App. 461. When the language of a release shows that the release had in view even in part its protection against suit for the cause of action described in the release the consideration paid is applicable pro tanto on the liability of another liable for the same tort, notwithstanding parol evidence tending to show that it was paid as a mere gratuity. El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr [Tex Civ. App.] 15 Tex Ct. Rep. 145, 93 S. W. 166.

47. See 6 C. L. 1287.

48. A release given by one when, by reason of recent injury, he is shocked and dazed and not mentally in a condition to understand what he is doing, may be avoided by the releasor. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Craig [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 98 S. W. 907.

49. Release held void for false representations in its procurement. Galveston etc., R. Co. v. Cade [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 66, 93 S. W. 124, afg. [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 826, 94 S. W. 218. Mere concealment of the contents of a release from the releasor cannot operate as an inducement for him to sign so as to make it voidable for fraud. Instruction held erroneous. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Craig [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 547, 98 S. W. 907. A releasor is not bound by a release obtained from him by false representations of one sustaining a confidential relation toward him, though he have some doubt as to the absolute correctness thereof. Viallet v. Consolidated R. & Power Co., 30 Utah, 260, 84 P. 496. A release procured from an illiterate person which does not contain the benefits promised him in the prior negotiations is vitiated by the fraud. Hayes v. Atlanta & C. Air-Line R. R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 437. When a release is obtained for a less sum than is due in settlement of a liability about which there is no dispute on the false representation that nothing is due under circumstances calculated to affect the releasor's ability to insist on full payment or nothing, the fraud is such as may be interposed to impeach the release in an action at law.

chargeable,[50] or mistake,[51] and such invalidity may be urged by replication to the release in an action at law,[52] notwithstanding the pendency of a suit in equity to rescind.[53] A voidable release must be disaffirmed within a reasonable time,[54] which time may be less than that required to complete the bar of limitations against the cause of action,[55] but cannot extend beyond such bar.[56] The validity of a release does not depend on its having been read by the releasor when at the time of signing he believes it to be a release,[57] nor when he is able to read and is afforded opportunity to read it,[58] nor can one who negligently fails to read or have read a release executed by him be heard in an action at law to say that his signature thereto was obtained by fraud or artifice;[59] but a releasor induced by the false statements of the releasee or his authorized agent to sign the release without reading it is not bound thereby.[60] A release may be avoided for failure to pay the promised consideration.[61] As to whether return of the consideration received for a release is essential to successful maintenance of a suit on the cause of action described therein, the authorities conflict.[62] Tender back of the amount received as a consideration for a release may be waived.[63]

51. Mere ignorance of a releasor as to the contents of the release at the time of its execution is not ground for avoidance of it. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Craig [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 547, 98 S. W. 907.

56. A bill in equity to set aside a release will not lie when it is determinable therefrom that an action at law could not be maintained on the claim released even though the relief prayed was granted. Madison Coal Co. v. Caveglia, 122 Ill. App. 415.

62. Condition precedent: Tender back of consideration received is condition precedent to rescission of a release (Memphis St. R. Co. v. Giardino [Tenn.] 92 S. W. 855), and the tender must be made promptly (Id.). Delay of about two years held fatal. Id. The repayment or tender of the consideration received for a release is a condition precedent to its rescission when it is not within the power of the court to fully protect the interest of the adverse party in case of rescission. Price v. Connors [C. C. A.] 146 F. 503. Tender back of the amount received for a release obtained by fraud is a condition precedent to a suit at law on the cause of action described in the release. Heck v. Missouri Pac. R Co., 147 F. 775. Failure of plaintiff in an action ex delicto to return to the defendant the consideration received for a release thereof is fatal to the maintenance of the action (Lomax v. Southwest Missouri Elec. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 192, 95 S. W. 945), nor is such tender obviated by a statute permitting plaintiff, by reply to an answer setting up a release, to plead that it was procured by fraud and providing for trial of the issue by the jury along with the case (Id.).

Contra: Return of the consideration paid for an invalid release is not a condition precedent to suit on the cause of action described therein. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Sandidge [Ark.] 99 S. W. 68. Tender back of consideration received is not essential to meet the defense of release when want of consideration therefor is pleaded and proved. Vindicator Consol. Gold Min. Co. v. Firstbrook [Colo.] 86 P. 313. When the releasor is through the fraud of the releasee deceived by failure to put in the instrument the contract as agreed to, the return of the consideration received is not a condition precedent to a suit on the cause of action alleged to have been released thereby. Hayes v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 437. When a release obtained by fraud is pleaded as a defense, the plaintiff's rights are not lost by refusal to pay the consideration received into the registry of the court, but his rights are saved by expressing a tender or willingness in the pleadings to allow the same against any judgment rendered Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Cade [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep.

§ 5. Pleading, proof, and practice.[64]—Release as a defense must be pleaded,[65] and at common law must be pleaded as a specialty,[66] and a plea of an express release will not admit evidence of an estoppel in pais to assert the claim.[67] A replication in avoidance of a release must give color,[68] and must confess the release to be avoided.[69]

The burden of proof[70] is on one seeking to avoid a release for mistake, fraud,[71] or want of consideration.[72]

Evidence[73] of an offer of more than was paid for the release is admissible on an issue of fraud, but it must be restricted to such purpose.[74] Pursuant to the general rule it is held that extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to make releases anything but that which they appear on their face to be;[75] but when the scope of a release is in doubt parol evidence is admissible to show the surrounding circumstances to aid the court in its construction of the instrument,[76] and parol evidence as to the intention of the parties to a release is admissible to show the effect the instrument shall have with respect to others liable on the cause of action described therein.[77] As in other cases there must be clear and convincing proof to avoid a release for fraud,[78] duress,[79] or incapacity of the releasor,[80] but evidence thereof unless palpably insufficient presents a question for the jury,[81] and on conflicting evidence, factum[82] and consideration[83] are likewise jury questions. § 5. Property and Funds (1719).
§ 6. Jurisdiction of Courts (1721).
§ 7. Actions by or Against Society or Members (1721).

§ 1. Organization as a corporation, and status of society.[85]—The organization and maintenance of a communistic religious corporation is not obnoxious to public policy though not in accordance with prevailing American ideals [86] and though considerable property is held and controlled, if the property is so managed as not to injure the state,[87] and such society does not exercise the functions of a corporation for pecuniary gain in violation of its corporate powers, where the members receive no profits and it is indispensable to their religious faith that they own their property in common and live a communistic life.[88] A corporation created under a statute governing the incorporation of charitable and scientific societies and not under the laws for the incorporation of religious societies is not a religious corporation and cannot consolidate with a religious corporation under a law providing for the consolidation of religious corporations.[89] The refusal to grant a charter to an association on the ground that the name sought is so similar to that of another congregation as to lead to confusion is a matter within the sound discretion of the court.[90]

§ 2. Membership and meetings.[91]—An expulsion of members pursuant to a fraudulent scheme to obtain possession of the church property is void though the members on joining the society agree to expulsion without trial.[92] Where there are no by-laws or customs fixing the time for holding meetings, evidence of the date of a meeting of a faction of the congregation after its division is not admissible to prove a custom as to the holding of annual meetings before the division.[93] A resolution by the general conference of a society bidding God speed to any church or circuit which had decided to disaffiliate themselves, and praying for an enlargement of their opportunities for religious work under their new association, is not an authorization or approval of a withdrawal from the conference.[94]

§ 3. Ministers.[95]

§ 4. Powers and liabilities of society in general.[96]—Though the vestry of a church may have the right under a contract to reject plans for the construction of a church building if they are not satisfactory, yet if it choses to delegate the matter to the rector and president and the architects follow his directions, it cannot thereafter reject the plans on the ground that they are not satisfactory.[97] A formal resolution is not essential to clothe a rector, who is also president f he vesry, with authority to act as the agent of the vestry in the preparation and acceptance of plans.[98] An incorporated church will be bound by a construction contract executed by its rector and afterwards assented to by it.[99]

A religious corporation engaged in administering a charitable trust not created by the grantor of its property is liable for the torts of its agents to persons who are not beneficiaries of the trust fund.[1] The trustees of a religious corporation can bind the society only by their action as a board.[2]

§ 5. Property and funds.[3]—Under the form of government applicable to Baptist churches, it would seem that the control of the church property is lodged either in the congregation as a body or its trustees, and not in the deacons.[4] If the laws of a state forbid the incorporation of any religious association and its holding of property as a corporation, a foreign religious corporation cannot as such take property by devise,[5] but a trust created in its favor will be governed by the local laws regulating the right of unincorporated religious societies to take and hold property.[6] In Maryland every sale of land to any religious denomination without the sanction of the legislature is void except sales of not exceeding five acres for a house of worship, or parsonage, or for a burying ground,[7] but though a deed be void, if possession is taken thereunder and held for the statutory period, the association may acquire title by adverse possession.[8] In Massachusetts a voluntary religious society possesses all the qualifying attributes of a duly organized corporation for the purpose of taking, holding, and transmitting property.[9]

A conveyance of property to be held by officers and members of a church and their successors for religious worship creates a trust of the property to be held for the use and benefit of the congregation named in the deed.[10] Where the legal title

1. The principle that a corporation engaged in administering a charitable trust is not liable for torts of its agents is limited in its application to those who are beneficiaries of the trust fund (Bruce v. Central Methodist Episcopal Church [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1099, 100 N. W. 951), and hence, though a church fund is a charitable trust fund (Id.), a religious corporation incorporated under Pub. Acts 1899, Act 11, p. 10, providing for the incorporation of Methodist Episcopal churches, is liable for injuries to an employe of a contractor under contract for decorating its church property, through the negligence of its agents in furnishing a defective scaffolding (Id.). The principle enunciated in Downes v. Harper Hospital 101 Mich. 555, 60 N. W. 42, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 25 L. R. A. 602, held inapplicable and other cases considered and harmonized. Id.

First Baptist Church v. Harper, 191 Mass. 196, 77 N. E. 778.

to land is held by certain persons as trustees of an association, "their heirs and assigns," the mere subsequent appointment of new trustees does not show title in the latter.[11] A statute providing that where property is conveyed for church purposes it shall vest in the church or its trustees to be held in succession, according to the government of the church, does not apply where property is conveyed for an educational as well as a religious purpose.[12] If a consolidation of a charitable or scientific society with a religious corporation is unauthorized, the real estate of the former does not vest in the consolidated company.[13]

The use of property must be limited to the extent specified in a grant thereof.[14] Where trustees are authorized to appoint property for the use of some religious denomination for religious services and an appointment is accordingly made, such appointment necessarily implies a limitation of the use of the property to the furtherance of the doctrine and purposes of the denomination to which the appointee belongs,[15] especially where such are the requirements of the discipline and regulations of a superior organization.[16] And neither the officers nor a majority of the members of an incorporated society have the power to divert its property from the uses defined by a grant to it [17] or from the purposes of its organization as regards the particular religious belief it was organized to promote.[18] Where a deed authorizes trustees to appoint property to the use of a society for religious services on certain days in the week and to reappoint when services are withdrawn, the trustees have no power to revoke an appointment once made [19] but can reappoint only when the appointee withdraws its services.[20]

In New York a religious corporation may not sell or mortgage any of its real property without first obtaining leave of court [21] and such leave can be granted only when the interests of the corporation will be promoted by a sale.[22] If a sale is made without authority, the corporation may recover the property though the purchaser has paid the price and taken possession.[23] Leave of court need not be obtained, how-

Held, in a suit to recover the property brought by trustees of another church against new trustees, the intention of the grantor to convey the land to the grantees as trustees and not as individuals was immaterial there being nothing to show that the original grantees had parted with title. Lee v. Methodist Episcopal Church [Mass.] 78 N. E. 646.

12. Civ. Code 1895, § 2353, did not apply, and where property was conveyed in trust for the use of members of the Methodist Episcopal church and also for educational purposes with a provision that on a failure of trustees new ones should be appointed by the proper authority, and there was a vacancy, neither the trustees of the church nor the trustees of the academy were shown to be the successors of the original trustees legally appointed. ever, where the corporation merely takes the legal title as trustee for another to whom it is bound to convey it.[24] If a majority of the directors or trustees of a seminary are authorized to convey lands belonging to it, a power of attorney executed by the president and authorizing one to execute deeds is insufficient to show authority.[25] Where property is conveyed in trust to be used for maintaining a church of worship it is not a breach of such trust to lease a small portion of the land for commercial purposes, the rent to be applied to the use of the church.[26] And where a parish has no further use for a meeting house and the land on which it stands it is not ultra vires for it to lease the land to one who agrees to buy the meeting house, the parish agreeing to pay, on the termination of the lease, a reasonable sum for buildings and improvements put upon the land during the term.[27]

§ 6. Jurisdiction of courts.[28]—Civil courts will grant relief against a fraudulent diversion of church property to foreign purposes for selfish ends whether such diversion is attempted by expulsion of members or in any other fraudulent manner.[29] Though such courts will not enforce the judgments of ecclesiastical courts they will enforce an award of arbitration made by an ecclesiastical court as arbitrator providing it is shown that the parties agreed to submit the controversy to such court and abide by the judgment.[30]

§ 7. Actions by or against society or members.[31]—A bill in equity will lie to restrain the forcible trespass by strangers upon church property involving a disturbance of orderly worship,[32] and such bill does not invoke the interposition of a civil court in an ecclesiastical controversy.[33] Such bill will also lie to restrain persons claiming to be trustees of an incorporated association from refusing the congregation admission to the church building,[34] but not where this is only its ostensible object and the real aim is to have it determined which of two sets of trustees are legally elected.[35] A member of a church for the use of whose members property is conveyed in trust has a sufficient interest in the trust to enable him to file a bill in equity to enjoin an unauthorized sale and have trustees appointed.[36] The use of a disjunctive in the name of a church as it appears in a complaint does not render the pleading open to the objection that plaintiff trustees are attempting to act for two churches.[37] When one society claims the right to control the affairs and property

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

§ 1. Right to Remove From State to Federal Court (1722).
§ 2. What is a "Suit" or "Action" so Removable (1723).
§ 3. Nature of Controversy or Subject-Matter, and Existence of Federal Question (1723).
§ 4. Diversity of Citizenship and Alienage of Party (1724).
§ 5. Prejudice and Local Influence and Denial of Civil Rights (1726).
§ 6. Amount in Controversy (1726).
§ 7. Procedure to Obtain and Effect the Removal (1727).
§ 8. Transfer of Jurisdiction and Other Consequences of Removal (1729).
§ 9. Practice and Procedure After Removal; Remand or Dismissal (1730).
§ 10. Transfers Between Courts of the Same Jurisdiction (1732).

While the rule that a cause to be removable to a Federal court must be one within its jurisdiction is here treated, the nature and extent of that jurisdiction pertains to another topic.[41]

§ 1. Right to remove from state to Federal court.[42]—The right of removal is not dependent upon the consent of plaintiff.[43] In determining the removability of a cause, state courts are controlled by decisions of the Federal supreme court.[44] A landowner in condemnation proceedings is a defendant within the meaning of the removal statute.[45] New parties in ancillary proceedings are affected with the same disabilities as regards removal as rested upon the parties whom they supersede.[46] The joinder of a party against whom no cause of action is stated is no obstacle to a removal by one entitled thereto.[47]

38. Evidence held to show that a certain religious society had never become affiliated with another church so as to be subject to its ownership and control. Lee v. Methodist Episcopal Church [Mass.] 78 N. E. 646. Even if it had become affiliated with the other church the court could not say that its property would belong to that church by force of the "discipline" of the church there being nothing to show what that discipline was. Id.

39. Where an unincorporated society alleged in an action to quiet title that defendant's ancestor took title in his own name for plaintiff's benefit, entries made by the ancestor while acting as clerk, in one of the record books of the society, were relevant to show that he was acting in plaintiff's behalf in taking the title. First Baptist Church v. Harper, 191 Mass. 196, 77 N. E. 778. Not self-serving declarations in derogation of defendant's title. Id. Entries in hand writing of ancestor in his account book relating to expenditure of the money contributed by the members for the purchase of the land held binding on defendants. Id.

40. Malone v. La Croix, 144 Ala. 648, 41 So. 724. Where trustees were designated in a trust deed as trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, the fact that their successors afterwards appointed under the statute were designated as trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South was immaterial. Id. In action in ejectment held error to exclude evidence of plaintiffs' appointment. Id.

43. A suit by an alien against a nonresident corporation, if otherwise removable to the Federal courts in the state, is removable without plaintiff's consent. Iowa Lillooet Gold Min. Co. v. Bliss, 144 F. 446. But see Ex parte Wisner, 27 S. Ct. 150, and post, § 4.

45. Iowa Code 1897, § 2009, declaring that on appeal to district court from the award the landowner shall be plaintiff and the corporation defendant, does not fix status of parties under removal act. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. v. Boynton, 27 S. Ct. 321.

46. Where third persons were brought in because they claimed an interest in the property involved, and filed a regular complaint against defendants on substantially the same cause of action, they could not remove though they were nonresidents since the original plaintiffs could not. Nash v. McNamara, 145 F. 541.

47. Eastin v. Texas & P. R. Co. [Tex.] 45 Tex. Ct. Rep. 646, 92 S. W. 838.

§ 2. What is a "suit" or "action" so removable.[48]—The cause must be within the original jurisdiction of the Federal court.[49] A proceeding in garnishment after judgment under the Washington statute is a "civil suit" which may be removed by a nonresident garnishee on issue being joined as to his liability though the parties to the judgment are citizens of the same state.[50] A condemnation proceeding in Montana is also removable as a civil suit.[51]

§ 3. Nature of controversy or subject-matter, and existence of Federal question.[52]—In order that a defendant may be deprived of his right to remove a bill in equity on the ground of diversity of citizenship, complainant must show that he has no remedy in equity in the Federal court,[53] that he has a remedy in equity in the state court,[54] and that such remedy is based on a state statute and not on a view of the ordinary jurisdiction of a court of equity different from that entertained by the Federal court.[55] To authorize the removal of a cause solely on the ground that it arises under a law of the United States, a Federal question must exist as to all the defendants[56] even though they all join in the petition for removal.[57] It is for the court to determine on petition for removal whether an action is maintainable under a state or a Federal law, if at all,[58] and, if one construction of a Federal statute will sustain and another defeat a recovery, the action will be held to be one arising under a law of the United States.[59] The existence of a Federal question must appear from plaintiff's own statement of his case[60] and cannot be shown by the petition for removal.[61] A defendant who is sued by the receiver of a national bank may have the

A suit which by reason of the nonresidence of both parties could not have been brought in the circuit court in the first instance is not removable thereto over plaintiff's objection even if the consent of both parties would justify such removal. 56. Railway company could not remove though organized under act of congress where its resident servant as to whom no Federal question existed was also made defendant. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Huber [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 642, 92 S. W. 832; Eastin v. Texas & P. R. Co. [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 646, 92 S. W. 838. That servant was charged with negligence in the discharge of his duties did not make a case under the Federal laws as to him. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Huber [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 642, 92 S. W. 832.

57. That codefendant as to whom no Federal question existed joined in petition for removal presented by railroad company organized under act of congress did not avail. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Huber [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 642, 92 S. W. 832; Eastin v. Texas & P. R. Co. [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 646, 92 S. W. 838.

58. Hall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 149 F. 564. Conceding that plaintiff's petition implied reliance upon the act of congress requiring railroad cars to be equipped with automatic couplers (Act March 2, 1893, §§ 1, 2), held not error to refuse removal where it did not appear that defendant was engaged in interstate commerce, said act applying only to such railroads. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Elder [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 856.

59. Hall v. Chicago, etc., Co. 149 F. 564. "Employer's Liability Act" (Act June 11, 1906, c. 3073, 34 Stat. 232) did not apply to causes of action existing at time of its adoption hence this case did not arise under a Federal law and was therefor remanded. Id.

cause removed on the ground that the suit arises under the laws of the United States.[62]

§ 4. Diversity of citizenship and alienage of party.[63]—To authorize a removal on the ground of diversity of citizenship when there is no separable controversy, all the defendants must be nonresidents of the state in which the action is brought.[64] The authorities are conflicting as to the right of removal without plaintiff's consent where both parties are nonresidents.[65] That a defendant is an alien nonresident is not now a ground for removal.[66] For a determination of the existence of diversity of citizenship the parties will be arranged according to the real pecuniary interests in the controversy,[67] and parties improperly joined will be disregarded.[68] Thus, in a suit between citizens, a nonresident may intervene and have the cause removed if he is the real and only defendant in interest.[69] A foreign corporation may retain its status as such for the purpose of removing a cause against it though it is a domestic corporation for other purposes,[70] and the fact that a domestic corporation pursuant to legislative authority consolidates with a foreign one does not make it a foreign corporation for such purpose, especially where the statute provides that both shall be domestic corporations.[71]

62. Since receiver could have had cause removed if action had been against him. Johnson v. Rankin [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 477, 95 S. W. 665.

63. See 6 C. L. 1293.

64. Though plaintiff was a citizen of a state other than that of either of two defendants, and both joined in the petition, the cause was not removable under clause 2, § 2, Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 434 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 509), where only one defendant was a nonresident of the state where the action was instituted. Blackburn v. Blackburn, 142 F. 901. Moving party resident. McFadden v. McFadden, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 534.

Note: It is held in National Bank of Battle Creek v. Howard, 103 N. Y. S. 814, that when the controversy is wholly between citizens of different states and can be fully determined as between them and removal is sought under clause 3 of § 2 of the removal act, it is not essential that the removing defendant be a nonresident; but this is probably contrary to the weight of authority. See 4 Fed. Stat. Ann., p. 321.

65. Cause held removable: The requisite amount being involved, a suit between an alien and a nonresident corporation defendant is removable without plaintiff's consent. Iowa Lillooet Gold Min. Co. v. Bliss, 144 F. 446. Since such suit is removable under clause 2 of section 2 of the removal act, it is no objection that it is not a suit "between citizens of different states" and that therefore the suit is not removable under clause 3. Id. Though a plaintiff cannot sue in a Federal court in a district in which neither he nor defendant resides, yet, if he brings an action in a state court in such district, defendant may have it removed to the Federal court. Manufacturer's Commercial Co. v. Brown Alaska Co., 148 F. 308.

Held not removable: A suit which could not have been brought in the Federal court in the first instance, because of the nonresidence of both parties, is not removable thereto without plaintiff's consent. Ex parte Wisner, 27 S. Ct. 150.

66. U. S. Rev. St. § 639, subsec. 1 and 2 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 520) repealed by act of 1875 and the subsequent removal statutes. O'Conor v. Texas, 202 U. S. 501, 50 Law. Ed. 1120, and authorities cited.

67. On an issue of the liability of a garnishee to defendant in the main action, defendant and plaintiff should be arranged on the same side for removal purposes. Baker v. Duwanish Mill Co., 149 F. 612. Where one defendant was a mere stakeholder and two others had interests identical with complainants, remaining nonresident could remove. Johnston R. Frog & Swith Co. v. Buda Foundry & Mfg. Co., 148 F. 883.

68. Where resident principal was improperly joined in suit on a fidelity bond. Iowa Lillooet Gold Min. Co. v. Bliss, 144 F. 446. Where a bill in equity on its face states no ground of relief against two citizen defendant corporations, such defendants should be eliminated in determining the right of removal by a nonresident. Cella v. Brown [C. C. A.] 144 F. 742.

69. In a suit to compel a resident railroad to grant switch connections, a nonresident lessee company which had assumed all obligations could intervene and remove cause. Chase v. Beech Creek R. Co., 144 F. 571.

70. Where a foreign corporation became merged with another corporation under Code of Laws S. C. 1902, § 2050 et seq., the fact that thereafter it obtained a certificate or charter of consolidation from the state of South Carolina did not deprive it of its right to remove a cause as a foreign corporation. Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 150 F. 775.

71. Where a domestic railway corporation consolidates with a foreign corporation under Priv. Laws 1899, p. 212, c. 105, authorizing such consolidation but providing that the consolidation shall not oust the jurisdiction of the courts of the state, but that the corporations shall be domestic corporations, the consolidated corporation within the state is a domestic corporation and when served therein cannot have the cause removed for diversity of citizenship. Staton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 794. Where several corporations consolidate under the

A separable controversy [72] such as will justify a removal by a nonresident defendant notwithstanding the joinder of resident parties exists only when the whole subject-matter of the suit can be determined between the parties to the controversy without the presence of the other parties.[73] The fact that a plaintiff avails himself of a statutory permission to unite several parties in the same action does not of itself make the cause of action joint or joint and several.[74] In the absence of fraud the question whether a controversy is separable or not must be determined from the record in the state court as it stands when the petition for removal is filed [75] without regard to that petition.[76] Hence, where a complaint states a joint cause of action against both resident and nonresident defendants,[77] a Federal court acquires no jurisdiction by removal unless a fraudulent joinder for the purpose of preventing re-laws of different states, the stockholders of the old companies becoming stockholders of the new, the consolidated company is a corporation of each of the states under whose laws it was consolidated. Wasley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 147 F. 608.

72. See 6 C. L. 1296.

73. No separable controversy: In suit against two defendants for injuries to plaintiff's easement in streets by running trains thereon pursuant to agreement between defendants and for injunctive relief. Staton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 794. In suit to enjoin destruction of water privilege wherein those undertaking diversion were joined with their contractor. McMillan v. Noyes, 146 F. 926. In condemnation there is no separable controversy between plaintiff and a nonresident holder of the legal title where the equitable title is held by a resident. Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, 146 F. 310.

Controversy held separable: Where suit was brought against principal and surety on a fidelity bond in which the only obligation on part of principal was to hold surety harmless, and in the same action plaintiff sought to recover against the principal for the default. Cause removable without regard to citizenship of principal. Iowa Lillooet Gold Min. Co. v. Bliss, 144 F. 446. In a suit for specific performance against a nonresident, wherein plaintiff claims to be entitled to an aliquot proportion of certain bonds and securities controlled by the nonresident against whom a decree for such allotment would apparently afford complainants complete relief, another citizen defendant to whom the nonresident has made an allotment of like apportionment without complainant's consent is not such a necessary party as to prevent removal. Cella v. Brown [C. C. A.] 144 F. 742.

74. Liabilities of maker and indorsers of a note are each distinct, and controversy is severable though all are sued in one action under a statute. Manufacturers' Commercial Co. v. Brown Alaska Co., 148 F. 308.

75. Where pleadings did not show that one defendant in ejectment claimed only a distinct portion of the land. City of Cleveland v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 171. Courts are controlled absolutely by proponent's pleadings as shown on the face of his declaration at law or bill in equity, except so far as matters are alleged which are plainly contradictory, irrelevant, or immaterial, or unless the party seeking removal submits evidence of an improper joinder for the purpose of defeating Federal jurisdiction. McMillan v. Noyes, 146 F. 926. The case made in complaint determines right to remove. Joint suit against master and servant by coservant. Thomas v. Great Northern R. Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 83. Independently of the allegations of petition or of the affidavits of petitioner. Allegation in petition that a codefendant was not a party to the negligence charged could not be considered. Offner v. Chicago & E. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 201.

Contra: Except where a removal is sought on the ground that a Federal question is involved or where the case is otherwise provided for, the court may look into the record including the petition for removal in order to determine whether a separable controversy exists. Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, 146 F. 310.

77. A plaintiff in ejectment may join a lessee in possession having an equity, with the lessor, so as to conclude both by one judgment, and one of the defendants so joined cannot make the controversy separable. City of Cleveland v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 171.

Joint cause of action stated in tort: In suit against railroad and resident servants. Dudley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1029, 96 S. W. 835; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vincent [Tenn.] 95 S. W. 179; Eastin v. Texas & P. R. Co. [Tex.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 646, 92 S. W. 838. In suit for wrongful death against resident and nonresident corporations. White's Adm'r v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1062, 96 S. W. 911. Servant and master may be sued jointly for tort of servant, and master cannot contend that codefendant is a mere sham. Baker v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 540. An action for injury to a passenger is one ex delicto and plaintiff may join as defendants the railway company and the employe, where their joint negligence is alleged to have been the cause of the injury; and the cause is then not separable. Knuth v. Butte Elec. R. Co., 148 F. 73. In a suit against a corporation for injunctive relief, a cause of action may be stated against the officers and agents of the corporation joined in the suit, and the corporation cannot remove on the theory that its officers are not proper parties. Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co. [N. C.] 57 S. E. 5.

moval is both properly alleged [78] and proven [79] by the petitioning party. And it is immaterial in such case what plaintiff's motive was in suing jointly,[80] or that defendants could have been sued separately,[81] or that it may turn out that only one is liable,[82] or that a Federal court might hold the joinder improper,[83] or that negligence imputed to a nonresident arises solely from the doctrine of respondeat superior.[84] If on the trial a nonresident can establish a fraudulent joinder the cause may then be removed.[85] A joint cause of action being stated against two defendants against one of whom a judgment is entered by default, and plaintiff taking an appeal from a judgment in favor of the other, it is not determined until final disposition of the appeal that a separable controversy existed between plaintiff and the defaulting defendant.[86]

§ 5. Prejudice and local influence and denial of civil rights.[87]—Prejudice and local influence is not an independent ground for the removal of a cause [88] but only extends the time for removal,[89] and hence the requisite diversity of citizenship must also exist.[90]

§ 6. Amount in controversy.[91]—A suit is not removable unless it appears that the requisite jurisdictional amount is involved.[92] In a suit arising under the laws

78. Petition for removal on ground of fraudulent joinder held insufficient to authorize removal where complaint stated joint cause of action. White's Adm'r v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1062, 96 S. W. 911. A mere statement unaided by specific facts that plaintiff intends to pursue only one of two joint tort feasors and does not seek judgment against the resident defendant does not compel an inference of bad faith when the legal right to sue both clearly exists and when plaintiff denies it in apparent good faith. Shane v. Butte Elec. R. Co., 150 F. 801. Neither is an allegation that the resident defendant is financially irresponsible sufficient to overcome a joint cause properly stated against both. Id. Where the complaint states a joint cause of action in tort, allegations in the petition which are mere denials of allegations in the complaint are not sufficient to show a fraudulent joinder. Thresher v. Western Union Tel. Co., 148 F. 649.

79. Must be alleged and proven that joinder was for fraudulent purpose. Knuth v. Butte Elec. R. Co., 148 F. 73. A mere statement that a codefendant was fraudulently joined unsupported by proof insufficient. Offner v. Chicago & E. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 201. An allegation of fraudulent joinder will be disregarded in the absence of proof. Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co. [N. C.] 57 S. E. 5; Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. 81. Shane v. Butte Elec. R. Co., 150 F. 801. In an action for a joint tort, the fact that resident defendants are not necessary parties will not justify removal. Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co. [N. C.] 57 S. E. 5.

92. Where several counts each claimed $1,900 and the pleading also claimed certain injunctive relief but did not show the value of the matter involved in such relief, a removal was authorized in view of the fact that the petition for removal stated that the amount in controversy was $3,800. Southern Cash Register Co. v. National Cash Register Co., 143 F. 659. Petition of two counts each claiming $1,900, and which claims $1,900 damages to present and accrued sales and a like sum for damages to future business, held to claim a sufficient amount to authorize removal. Southern Cash Register Co. v. Montgomery, 143 F. 700. Complaint, in suit for death by wrongful act, containing several counts each for less of the United States and seeking relief by injunction, the amount in controversy may be shown by the petition for removal if it is not stated in the bill.[93] Two separate actions on separate contracts against the same defendant, each involving less than the jurisdictional amount, are not removable in the absence of fraud though the aggregate amount sued for exceeds such sum,[94] and the fact that on defendant's motion the two causes are consolidated for "taking proof and hearing" does not render the consolidated cause removable.[95] Where damages sued for are set out minutely in the declaration but do not reach the requisite amount, a concluding statement that plaintiff claims a certain sum is not controlling.[96] In actions sounding in damages the amount in controversy is determined from plaintiff's demand in his complaint regardless of whether he sets out a cause of action for greater damages,[97] and it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to allow an amendment of the complaint in such cases so as to conform to the demand even after the petition for removal has been filed.[98] If the sum claimed in good faith is sufficient in amount, the fact that a smaller sum is recovered does not affect the jurisdiction acquired by removal.[99]

§ 7. Procedure to obtain and effect the removal.[1]—The proper procedure under the act of 1888 is for defendant to file a petition and bond in the state court and enter a transcript of the state court record in the Federal court on the first day of its next session.[2] The right to remove may arise at any time in the progress of the case whenever by a change in the pleadings or proceedings the cause is rendered for the first time removable.[3] The holdings are not uniform on the right of parties to extend by stipulation the time for removal.[4] Averments in the petition should be clear and specific so that the court can see that it affirmatively presents a case which should be removed.[5] When it is sought to establish a fraudulent joinder, facts must be set out from which it may be inferred.[6] As to a cor-

96. Where statement of claim against a railroad company for over charges amounted to only $1,674, a statement that plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $2,500 by defendant's failure to pay the damages alleged did not justify removal. Agreement that no advantage should be taken of time that might elapse by virtue of a certain other agreement and that if it should not become effective defendant should have twenty days thereafter in which to make defense held to preclude plaintiff from asserting that removal was too late. Russell v. Harriman Land Co., 145 F. 745. Where plaintiff's counsel stipulated in writing that defendant might have until a certain date within which to plead or make such motion as he might be advised, plaintiff could not contend that the time for removal was not extended. Tevis v. Palatine Ins. Co., 149 F. 560. Attorney could not disavow his own authority. Id. Where defendant took no exception to an order allowing plaintiff ninety days in which to file complaint and granting defendant ninety days thereafter to answer, and after filing of complaint at a succeeding term defendant requested and was granted sixty days in which to answer, he was not entitled to remove cause though he could not know before complaint was filed that a sufficient amount was involved. 5. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Needham [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 889, 94 S. W. 1070.

6. Not sufficient to allege as mere conclusion that plaintiff made fraudulent joinder poration, an allegation that it is a citizen of a certain state is not sufficient; it must be stated that it was created by the laws of that state;[7] but where a petition alleges that a corporation was organized under the laws of a state other than that in which it is sued, an allegation that it is not a citizen of the latter state is not necessary.[8] Mere formal defects in the petition are waived by motion to remand on the ground that an alleged cause for removal does not exist.[9] Where the complaint alleges a joint tort against two nonresidents both must join in a petition for removal,[10] but the fact that necessary parties defendant join is to no purpose unless they are all entitled to remove.[11]

An undertaking to dissolve a foreign attachment under the law of Pennsylvania constitutes "special bail" within the requirement of the removal act that the removal bond shall be conditioned for the entry of special bail when originally requisite,[12] but since a defendant in a foreign attachment suit in that state is not bound to enter such an undertaking, the removal bond need not be so conditioned,[13] nor need it be so conditioned where such bail has already been filed in the state court.[14] When the seal of a corporation is attached to a bond it is not rendered invalid because the written authority of an attorney in fact to execute it does not appear,[15] and defects in the bond may be cured by amendment in the Federal court.[16]

An oral motion in the state court for the removal of a cause is a sufficient presentation of the petition and bond already on file with the clerk,[17] but if such motion is erroneously overruled and defendant takes no further action until the next term, he will be held to have temporarily withdrawn the motion[18] and the state court will retain jurisdiction until it is again presented.[19] The state court is without authority to inquire into the truth of facts alleged in the petition for removal but must order the cause removed and leave such questions to be determined in the Federal court.[20] If at the close of plaintiff's case no cause of action has been made out against a resident defendant, a motion to remove previously denied may be renewed and granted,[21] but an amendment to the complaint which leaves the existence of a Federal question no clearer than before will not authorize the renewal of a motion to remove.[22] Upon removal being had the entire record in the case should be brought to the Federal court.[23]

§ 8. Transfer of jurisdiction and other consequences of removal.[24]—Upon the timely filing of a proper petition and bond in the state court and of a certified copy of the record in the Federal court, the latter court acquires jurisdiction without an order of the state court transferring the cause;[25] and if the state court erroneously denies a motion to transfer, the Federal court may grant an ancillary injunction restraining the opposite party from taking further proceedings in the state court.[26] There are cases, however, which hold that the petition and bond must be actually presented to the state court for acceptance before its jurisdiction is divested and that merely filing them with the clerk is not sufficient.[27] After removal, and pending proceedings in the Federal court, the state court has no jurisdiction in the case,[28] and, if plaintiff brings a second suit on the same cause of action in a state court pending litigation in the Federal court, defendant may have such proceeding stayed,[29] and the right to a stay is not waived by appearance in the state court.[30] Where a removal is had, notwithstanding a denial of a motion to remove, and the resisting party after denial of a motion to remand appears in the Federal court and consents to a nonsuit, he cannot thereafter prosecute the same suit in the state court.[31] After removal of a cause to the Federal court and discontinuance on plaintiff's motion on payment of costs, plaintiff may bring a new action in the state court based on the same cause of action but for a sum too small for Federal cognizance.[32]

A removal does not render nugatory an attachment in the state court though there is no service, actual or constructive, in either court and no general appearance.[33] It does not deprive a state court of jurisdiction of an action by plaintiff's attorney to enforce an attorney's lien on the proceeds of a settlement made by the parties after removal,[34] or preclude a defendant from challenging the jurisdiction of either the state or the Federal court over his person.[35] It waives an objection that the suit is pending in the wrong district,[36] except where the state court was without jurisdiction and there is no general appearance in the Federal court.[37] Where a nonresident secures a removal on the ground that the controversy is severable, the Federal court obtains no jurisdiction over the other defendants or the causes of action against them.[38]

§ 9. Practice and procedure after removal; remand or dismissal.[39]—The petition for removal may be amended in the Federal court when there is no doubt as to the facts,[40] but cannot be so amended as to set forth grounds for removal not presented to the state court and inconsistent with previous allegations.[41] If service of summons is avoided on defendant's motion after removal, the Federal court may permit plaintiff to file an amended petition and may order summons to issue thereon.[42]

If a cause is improperly removed it should be remanded at any stage at the instance of any party or on the court's own motion whenever such fact appears;[43] but one who has wrongfully procured a removal from a local court in Porto Rico to the Federal district court of a cause within the original jurisdiction of the latter court conferred by the act of 1901 will not be heard after judgment against him to assert want of jurisdiction in the Federal court because of the irregularity of the removal.[44] A cause will not be remanded unless there is reason to believe that it involves a controversy not within the jurisdiction of the Federal court,[45] and hence, if it is properly removable, it will not be remanded for mere irregularities in the proceedings for removal or because defendant proceeded under the wrong statute.[46] When the jurisdiction of the Federal court is doubtful, while that of the state court is unquestionable, it is proper to remand the cause.[47] If a state court has jurisdiction in equity not possessed by a Federal court to which a bill has been removed for diversity of citizenship and adequate relief cannot be obtained at law in the Federal court, a complainant will not be compelled to sue at law therein but the cause will be remanded.[48] A cause to obtain both legal and equitable relief is not made two distinct actions by a removal because plaintiff is required to file separate pleadings;[49] and so, where it is decided that the proceeding at law was improperly removed and a decree on the equity side is subsequently reversed on appeal, the suit should be remanded to the state court.[50]

The right to remove a suit in equity must be determined from the bill as filed in the state court,[51] and neither the allegations of a bill of repleader filed in the Federal court after removal nor of the answer can be considered.[52] Allegations in the petition for removal, a consideration of which would involve a trial of the case on its merits, will not be regarded on a motion to remand.[53] No exact line can be drawn marking a distinction between a wrongful and a justifiable purpose in seeking one jurisdiction rather than the other, but the showing made in each case must guide the court.[54] Remand is properly refused where, for example, it appears that a resident defendant has been joined merely for the purpose of defeating a transfer;[55] but where plaintiff is following a legal right and states a joint cause of action in tort and there is nothing to impugn his good faith except an allegation that a resident defendant is financially irresponsible, and that on the merits the essential facts are different from those alleged,[56] then no real issue of fraud is proven so as to justify the removal.[57] On a motion to remand a cause commenced by a bill in a state court intended to invoke a special statutory jurisdiction which cannot be exercised by a Federal court of equity, the court will not retain jurisdiction merely because the application of the statute to the facts alleged is in doubt.[58] The proper remedy where a Federal court refuses to remand a cause of which it has no jurisdiction is mandamus rather than prohibition.[59]

Where a suit in equity is removed it must thereafter conform to the equity practice and rules in force in the Federal court regardless of the forms of practice in equitable proceedings in the state court.[60] The rule that a Federal court will not review acts done by the state court prior to the removal of a cause does not apply where the state court was without jurisdiction.[61] Where a cause is removed after entry of judgment in the state court, the Federal court cannot enter an order of nonsuit and dismissal and grant costs to defendant on the ground that plaintiff fails to proceed with the case,[62] but can only dismiss the proceedings and remand them to the state court.[63]

A plaintiff may not object on appeal that the Federal court should not have determined on affidavits the question of his good faith in joining a resident defendant, where he made no objection below and himself filed a counter affidavit.[64] The state court after remand cannot question the correctness of the order of remand but must proceed to exercise jurisdiction,[65] and its acceptance of jurisdiction does not deprive defendant of any of his constitutional rights.[66] An order of remand cannot be reviewed on appeal to the supreme court of the state.[67]

§ 10. Transfer between courts of the same jurisdiction.[68]—The constitutional provision with reference to the transfer of causes from the district court of appeal in California to the supreme court has no application to matters of habeas corpus.[69] Under that provision the petition must be filed within thirty days after the judgment becomes final in the district court.[70] The necessity of a speedy decision is no ground for transferring a case from the supreme court to a district court of appeal in that state.[71] In the municipal court of New York a defendant must demand a transfer of the cause to another district before issue is joined either in writing or in open court, and must in so doing specify the proper district.[72] In North Carolina, when a cause is instituted before the clerk of the superior court and thereafter transferred to term, the pleadings may be amended by alleging equitable matter though such matter was not cognizable by the clerk.[73] A case will be transferred to the supreme court in Indiana when the judges of the appellate court are equally divided.[74] Provision is generally made for the disposition of pending cases when a new county is organized[75] or a new judicial district established.[76] An objection that a transfer was irregular is too late after judgment.[77]

§ 1. Nature and form of action. Distinctions.[78]—Replevin is the appropriate action where one claims goods in the possession of another without regard to the manner in which possession was obtained.[79] The question of ownership and the right of possession are the only questions involved.[80] The right to corporate office is not involved in an action of replevin by a corporation against its secretary where an allegation that the defendant held such office was denied by the corporation and no evidence was introduced by either party relative to the issue thus raised.[81] The question as to whether a bill of sale from plaintiff to an intervener in a replevin action created a trust may be tried in that action.[82]

§ 2. Right of action and defenses.[83]—Present right to possession,[84] usually arising as an incident to title,[85] in plaintiff, and possession in defendant[86] at the County Armagh Ladies' Social & Benevolent Ass'n v. Lennon, 102 N. Y. S. 522. The right to possession in plaintiff at the time of the issuance of the writ is essential to the maintenance of the action. Staunton v. Smith [Del.] 65 A. 593. One not entitled to possession cannot recover even as against one wrongfully in possession. La Salle Pressed Brick Co. v. Coe, 126 Ill. App. 308. Under Rev. St. § 4965 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3414), relative to the infringement of copyrights and authorizing a recovery of one dollar for every sheet of the same found in the possession of the defendant, plaintiff having neither the title nor the right of possession of the material cannot seize same under replevin proceedings for the sole purpose of recovering the statutory penalty in an action of assumpsit. Hills & Co. v. Hoover, 142 F. 904. Purchaser under a contract of sale to whom title has not yet passed cannot maintain the action. Collins v. Beckley, 29 Ky. L. R. 813, 96 S. W. 479. Evidence held to establish plaintiff's right to possession as a matter of law. Barber v. Harper [N. M.] 86 P. 546.

85. A receiver cannot maintain the action where at the time of his appointment the legal title had passed to a third person. Gilroy v. Everson-Hickok Co., 103 N. Y. S. 620. A corporation may maintain an action in its own name for the recovery of its records and seal although the secretary is by law the custodian thereof, as the ownership is in the corporation. Stovell v. Alert Gold Min. Co. [Colo.] 87 P. 1071. The fact that a mortgage covered a painting by a certain artist and that a painting by that artist is in the possession of the heirs of the mortgagor is not sufficient evidence of title where the mortgagor always treated it as his own property and it had never been claimed by the mortgagee or its successors with the exception of plaintiff. Hoffman House v. Barkley, 111 App. Div. 564, 97 N. Y. S. 1095. In an action to recover timber plaintiff proved that he was the owner of the original title to the land, acquiring title after the timber had been cut, and that he owned the cut timber under a bill of sale, that a tax title under which defendant claimed was void, held to show title in plaintiff. Gustin v. Embury-Clark Lumber Co., 145 Mich. 101, 13 Det. Leg. N. 546, 108 N. W. 650. An officer levying an execution loses his special property in the chattels levied on where they are not reduced to possession within the required period, and at the expiration of that period he has not sufficient title to maintain the action. Field v. Fletcher, 191 Mass. 494, 78 N. E. 107. Evidence held to show title in plaintiff as a matter of law. Gunn v. Mumford [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 989. Evidence held sufficient to show title in intervener as assignee of an insolvent corporation. Alper v. Tormey [Cal. App.] 85 P. 661.

86. Hyde v. Elmer [N. M.] 88 P. 1132; Clark v. Sublette, 117 Mo. App. 519, 94 S. W. 733. A complaint which affirmatively shows that defendant has parted with possession is demurrable. Kierbow v. Young [S. D.] 107 N. W. 371. Where a replevin action is dismissed and a return to the sheriff ordered, and the sheriff accepts a tender and receipts for it in writing and upon demand refuses to turn it over, his time of the commencement of action, are essential; but in states where the codes have extended the action of replevin so as to cover the common-law action of detinue, the action lies against one who has parted with possession prior to the issuance of the writ.[87] Plaintiff's right to possession is shown by actual and undisputed possession at the time of a wrongful taking of the property by the defendant [88] and possession by plaintiff's agent is his possession,[89] but, where the replevied chattels are in the possession of the defendant, the plaintiff must prove ownership.[90] An officer taking property from a person arrested on a charge of theft, under statutory authority, is not as to third persons claiming the property a trespasser,[91] and as against him mere proof of prior possession is not sufficient.[92] Plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title and not upon the weakness of defendant's.[93]

Title coupled with the right of possession [94] or a special right of possession is a good defense,[95] and the fact that defendant acquired possession in an unlawful manner is immaterial if his detention is lawful.[96] A defendant cannot set up title in a third person unless he connects his right to possession with the title of such third person,[97] and, where property was taken from the actual and undisputed possession of plaintiff, defendant can defeat recovery only by proving a superior title in himself.[98] Property in custodia legis is not subject to replevin [99] notwithstanding the invalidity of the proceedings under which it was taken.[1]

The action lies by a tenant against a landlord distraining the goods of the former for rent.[2] Defendant's right to the property taken must be determined in the action in which it was taken and he cannot maintain replevin against the officer taking the goods under the writ to regain possession.[3] possession is sufficient to sustain an action against him although he did not have manual possession. Hyde v. Elmer [N. M.] 88 P. 1132. Evidence held sufficient to require the submission to the jury of the question of whether defendant was in possession at the time of the institution of the action. Barnes v. Plessner [Mo. App.] 97 S. 94. Evidence held insufficient to sustain a verdict that defendant was the owner of the property in controversy. Harrison Bank v. Porter [Okl.] 87 P. 585. Evidence held to establish title in defendant. Dutch v. Parker, 97 N. Y. S. 966.

95. An equitable lien. Reardon v. Higgins [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 208. A judgment for plaintiff is erroneous where at the time of the seizure under a writ of execution defendant was the holder of a prior outstanding lien on the goods. Kansas City Wholesale Grocery Co. v. McDonald, 118 Mo. App. 471, 95 S. W. 279. Evidence held to show that defendant had no lien for storage on the chattels in controversy. Alper v. Tormey [Cal. App.] 85 P. 661.

99. Replevin does not lie to regain possession of goods owned by plaintiff in possession of the sheriff under a writ of attachment against a third person. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Klaff & Co., 103 Md. 357, 63 A. 360.

1. Under the Kansas statute the writ does not lie where the property sought to be recovered was taken in execution on any order or judgment against the plaintiff, or any other mesne or final process issued against him, held the writ does not lie to recover goods seized by the marshal under a void ordinance. A demand is unnecessary as a condition precedent to suit where defendant's claim of title is independent of any contractual relation with plaintiff,[4] or where possession has been refused,[5] or the possession of goods has been wrongfully obtained.[6] A refusal of possession on one ground waives all other grounds.[7] An equitable defense when allowable at all must go to the question of possession.[8]

§ 3. Jurisdiction and venue.[9]

§ 4. The affidavit.[10]—The filing of an affidavit is essential and a writ issued without it will on application be quashed,[11] but the office of the affidavit ceases, if a petition is filed, when the property has been delivered thereunder and jurisdiction conferred.[12] An affidavit and process in a firm name is not so fatally defective as to oust the court of jurisdiction where the allegations of the affidavit referring to a mortgage under which the firm claimed title sufficiently identified the plaintiffs.[13] The facts set forth in the affidavit form no part of the issues in the case unless they are again set forth in the pleadings.[14]

§ 5. Plaintiff's bond.[15]—The court may permit plaintiff to file a new bond where the bond first filed, being a mere indemnity bond, was entirely insufficient.[16]

§ 6. The writ and its execution.[17]—The return must recite the township in which the defendant resides, or in which the goods are found, or a justice of the peace is without jurisdiction.[18] It must state that the property was taken from the possession of the defendant,[19] but it is not conclusive as to the possession of the defendant at the time the suit was instituted.[20]

§ 7. Custody and delivery of property.[21]—By the execution of the writ the property passes to the sheriff and it cannot be divested so as to relieve him of liability except in one of the ways which the law recognizes.[22] A provision that the complaint, held plaintiff should have interposed a defense in the first action and the second could not be maintained. Kierbow v. Young [S. D.] 107 N. W. 371.

4. Plaintiff upon finding certain goods turned it over to defendant in his individual capacity with the understanding that defendant should ascertain whether it belonged to an estate of which he was administrator and if not it should be returned, he thereupon charged himself with it as administrator, held defendant by charging himself as administrator attempted to terminate the bailment and in an action of replevin against him in his fiduciary capacity demand was unnecessary, the claim not being based upon a contractual relation. Kuykendall v. Fisher [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 48.

5. Demand is unnecessary where defendant informs plaintiff that he will not be allowed to remove the property nor to go upon the land where it is situated for that purpose. property may be left in the possession of the defendant, where the plaintiff does not demand its delivery to him and directions to that effect are given to the officer by the plaintiff or his attorney in writing, is not jurisdictional.[23]

Forthcoming bond.[24]—To warrant a judgment as of course against the sureties on a delivery bond, upon judgment being rendered for the plaintiff, the bond must be in the form provided by the statute authorizing such a proceeding.[25] Upon a judgment in favor of plaintiff, judgment cannot be entered against the sureties on defendant's retaining bond for the amount of the debt due plaintiff from defendant.[26] The costs contemplated by the statute relating to delivery bonds are those which are occasioned by the taking or detention of the property,[27] and the sureties on such a bond are not liable for a judgment for costs rendered against defendant on a motion for a continuance where defendant recovered judgment for the possession of the property.[28]

§ 8. The pleadings and parties to the action.[29]—The complaint must aver ownership and right to possession in the plaintiff at the time of the commencement of the action,[30] but an allegation of absolute or qualified property in plaintiff and the facts upon which his title is based is sufficient,[31] and it must identify the property sought to be recovered with reasonable certainty.[32] Plaintiff is not bound to state the nature and source of his title;[33] but where he does so he is bound by the source of title alleged, and a failure to deny it is an admission of a material fact.[34] The petition and the affidavit must substantially correspond.[35] A declaration in assumpsit for a balance due on a promissory note cannot be combined in one count with a declaration in replevin.[36] Where the petition sufficiently identifies the property, a description in the cross bill by reference to the petition is sufficient.[37] A

Action to recover portion of rice crop grown on land described in the petition as "about 200 acres out of the south side of the Lewis & Robertson survey out of the Silvey league of land in Matagorda county," held the description was sufficient. Gravity Canal Co. v. Sisk [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 984, 95 S. W. 724.

counterclaim setting up facts which entitle the defendant to possession is proper,[38] but, the action being possessory only, defendant cannot set up as a counterclaim the damages caused by the replevied cattle while trespassing upon his close.[39] Plaintiff's title and right of possession, the value of the property, and the damages for the taking or detention thereof are put in issue by a general denial.[40] Where the complaint alleges fraudulent concealment of the property in controversy as a basis for a body execution, fraudulent concealment must be proved,[41] and in such case it is immaterial that no order of arrest has been issued.[42]

Where plaintiff has taken the property under the writ, it is improper to allow a stranger to be substituted for the original plaintiff.[43] Under the Mississippi statute a stranger to the action cannot intervene,[44] the remedy of one claiming a joint interest in the property being in equity.[45] A third person claiming a lien on the property in controversy has a right to be made a party to the action under the New York Code providing for the bringing in of new parties where a complete determination cannot be had without their presence.[46]

§ 9. Evidence.[47]—Where possession in plaintiff at a particular time is shown, it is presumed to continue.[48] The burden is upon plaintiff to show his right to possession at the time of the commencement of the action[49] although defendant also claims title,[50] and the fact that plaintiff may at one time have been the owner of the property does not change the burden.[51] The burden of proving that the wrongful detention caused loss, and the amount of the damages sustained, is upon the party claiming it.[52] The fact that the complaint suggests the reason for de-

39. This is true although the statute gives him a lien on the cattle for the damages caused thereby where it does not authorize him to withhold possession from the owner. Linn v. Hagan's Adm'r, 28 Ky. L. R. 1292, 92 S. W. 11.

40. Jackson v. Morgan [Ind.] 78 N. E. 633. Under the Massachusetts Practice Act of 1852, the general denial is broader than the common-law plea of non cepit and under it defendant may prove any facts which tend to contradict the contention of plaintiff that the title and right of possession are in him. An officer holding goods under attachment may prove that the transfer from the attachment defendant to the plaintiff in the replevin suit was in fraud of creditors. Pan-American Amusement Co. v. Maguire [C. C. A.] 142 F. 126.

41. The complaint alleged that the property had been concealed and disposed of, so that it could not be found with intent to deprive the plaintiff thereof, but there was no evidence of such concealment, held a judgment for plaintiff was improper. 43. Plaintiff sued in a trade name. At the trial it was proved that there was no such concern doing business in the state and that the business was owned by one "A." Held error to allow "A" to be substituted for the original plaintiff. Meyer v. Omaha Furniture & Carpet Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 767.

44. Code 1892, § 714, providing that on the affidavit of the defendant before the plea that a third person has a claim to the property and that he is ready to pay or dispose of the same as the court may direct, the court may order such third person to be made a party to the action, is intended to protect an original defendant desiring to disclaim in behalf of a third person. 46. A machine was turned over to one "S" for the purpose of making repairs. "S" after partly repairing it turned it over to defendant to complete the work with instructions to deliver it to plaintiff upon the payment of the bill for all the repairs made. Held in an action of replevin against defendant alone, "S" should have been allowed to come in. Friedman v. Schreiber, 50 Misc. 617, 98 N. Y. S. 235.

The burden is upon plaintiff to show a special property in the chattels replevied on the date of the issuance of the writ. Field v. Fletcher, 191 Mass. 494, 78 N. E. 107. Where plaintiff claimed title through a person in her individual capacity and defendant through the same person in her capacity as administratrix, the burden was upon plaintiff to show that the property was owned by her individually and not as administratrix. Austin v. Terry [Colo.] 88 P. 189.

50. Frank v. Symons [Mont.] 88 P. 561.

51. An instruction that if the jury found that plaintiff had at any time been the owner of the property it would devolve upon the defendant to prove his title is erroneous. Woods v. Latta [Mont.] 88 P. 402.

52. Where defendant denied plaintiff's fendant's conduct in taking the goods does not change the order of proof.[53] Where defendant denies possession at the time of the commencement of the action and introduces evidence in support of his denial, the plaintiff must prove that he was in fact in possession.[54] The burden is upon plaintiff to show that the property replevied and delivered to him under the writ is his property,[55] but when the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case the burden is upon the defendant to prove liens set up in the plea.[56]

Evidence tending to establish [57] or to negative [58] a claim of ownership, or to show good faith when material,[59] is admissible; but evidence of title in a third person is inadmissible in behalf of the defendant where the property was taken from the exclusive and undisputed possession of plaintiff.[60] Where the legal title to the property had passed to a third person, the plaintiff cannot show the consideration for the transfer,[61] but, where defendant claims title through a third person, evidence that such person's ownership was fraudulent is admissible.[62]

Proof of ownership and the right to possession in plaintiff makes a prima facie case,[63] and an affidavit that the mortgagor is the owner of the chattels covered by the mortgage, if admitted without objection, is prima facie evidence of ownership in the mortgagor in behalf of one claiming under the mortgage.[64] The evidence must be sufficient to identify the property which is the basis of the action.[65] Evidence of a direction by plaintiff to send goods by a certain carrier is sufficient to sustain the direction of a verdict sustaining the carrier's lien for its unpaid charges.[66]

§ 10. Trial.[67]—Failure on the part of the plaintiff to bring the case on for trial [68] or to prove an element essential to recovery [69] is ground for nonsuit, but

57. In an issue as to the ownership of property in a corporation, evidence of its merger with a corporation in whom title appears is admissible. Churchill v. More [Cal. App.] 88 P. 290.

58. Where plaintiff claims title through a person in his individual capacity and defendant claims title through the same person in his official capacity as administrator, an inventory showing the property in controversy to be property of the estate is admissible. Austin v. Terry [Colo.] 88 P. 189. Evidence tending to overcome plaintiff's claim that goods were covered by a chattel mortgage is admissible. Spiegel v. Fehr, 101 N. Y. S. 651.

59. In an action of replevin to recover certain logs converted by defendant, evidence that it had purchased all the title there was of record is admissible, although such title was invalid, for the purpose of showing good faith, and not to defeat plaintiff's title. Gustin v. Embury-Clark Lumber Co., 145 Mich. 101, 13 Det. Leg. N. 546, 108 N. W. 650. Where defendant claims the right to possession as an officer having taken the property from one charged with theft, evidence that he thought the property stolen and that the justice of the peace and the county attorney told him to keep it is admissible. nonsuit is improper after plaintiff has made out a prima facie case.[70] Where plaintiff has title and the right to possession at the time of the issuance of the writ, he is deprived of neither by a subsequent levy upon the goods under an execution against him, and a nonsuit is improper.[71]

Instructions must be applicable to the pleadings and evidence [72] and must not exclude defendant from sources of title upon which, under the evidence he is entitled to rely,[73] nor ignore essentials to recovery.[74] An instruction as to the property, the title to which plaintiff must prove in order to recover, is sufficient if the jury can determine therefrom what property is referred to.[75]

Under the Missouri statute the value of defendant's special interest in the property must be submitted to the jury.[76] The parties may waive their right to a jury trial by injecting an equitable issue into their pleadings.[77] Where there is evidence to support defendant's contention that property owned by him was unlawfully taken under the writ, upon electing to take judgment for its value he is entitled to have the issue submitted to the jury.[78]

Verdict and findings.[79]—The verdict should directly decide the issues raised by the plea,[80] but a verdict that defendant is entitled to a portion of the property in plaintiff's possession under the writ is an inferential finding that plaintiff is entitled to the remainder and is sufficient [81] although there is no direct finding as to the amount to which plaintiff is entitled.[82] A finding that plaintiff is the owner actions of replevin and nonsuit is proper where plaintiff fails to bring the case on for trial pursuant to his own notice although a replication had not been filed and the cause was not at issue. Stein v. Goodenough [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 961.

73. An instruction limiting defendant's source of title to purchase or gift from the plaintiff is erroneous where as to all but one of the articles in controversy he claimed title through purchase from another. Woods v. Latta [Mont.] 88 P. 402.

74. An instruction that if plaintiff was shown to have owned the property at any time the burden would shift to defendant to show ownership ignores the question of which party was entitled to possession and is erroneous. Woods v. Latta [Mont.] 88 P. 402.

75. An instruction making plaintiff's right to recover depend upon whether the property taken by the marshal was covered by his mortgage is proper though there is no evidence as to what property was so taken where there is no claim that the marshal had not taken the property claimed by the plaintiff or that he had taken any not so claimed. National Bank v. Schufelt [C. C. A.] 145 F. 509. Where the holder of a chattel mortgage sued to recover 326 steers described as being located on a certain feed lot and of a certain age, and which afterward became intermingled with cattle covered by another mortgage it is immaterial whether an instruction describes them by reference to their age or their location at the date of the mortgage as in either event the jury would be able to determine which cattle were referred to. Id.

76. Where after verdict in his favor defendant disclaims all interest in the property except his charges as pound master, it is error for the court to assess such charges as damages on defendant's bare statement, the question should have been submitted to the jury. Watkins v. Green [Mo. App.] 92 S. W. 1131.

80. A verdict sustaining a defendant's lien is incorrect in form where it merely finds the defendant not guilty, assesses damages, and directs the return of the goods, as it does not directly find on the issue raised by the plea setting up the lien. Kebabian v. Adams Exp. Co., 27 R. I. 564, 65 A. 271.

81. Replevin to recover 1,708 sheep, verdict that defendant was entitled to 183 of them of the value of $551, with specified damages for detention held sufficient. Campbell v. First Nat. Bank [Idaho] 88 P. 639.

82. Where defendant claimed a portion of 1,708 sheep replevied by plaintiff and plaintiff admits that defendant is entitled to 183, and the case is tried upon the question of how many sheep defendant is entitled to have returned to him, while it would have been proper to find as to the number to which plaintiff as well as defendant is entitled, such finding is unnecessary where and entitled to the possession of the property in controversy is a finding of an ultimate fact [83] and controls a finding of probative facts.[84] A verdict will not be set aside as indefinite if in itself, or taken in connection with the pleadings, it so identifies the property that a judgment based on it could be enforced with reasonable certainty.[85]

§ 11. Judgment and award of damages.[86]—Where plaintiff is placed in possession under the writ, judgment for defendant may be for the return of the property, or its value if return cannot be had, and for damages for wrongful detention.[87] Under a statute authorizing an alternative judgment, defendant cannot complain of a judgment for the return of the property only.[88] Where the judgment recites that the property has been disposed of and cannot be returned, it is not necessary that it should find the value of each article [89] and, where it is sought to recover several articles, the judgment may be for the aggregate value of the articles.[90] Under the Michigan statute where each of two defendants claims a lien on the property, the liens of each may be determined in the action and the court may render such judgment as may be just between the parties.[91] Where the statute does not define the measure of damages in replevin, it is the same as in conversion.[92] Punitive damages cannot be recovered.[93] Where the complaint asks damages for the unlawful taking and detention of the property and not a return of the property and part of the property is returned, plaintiff is entitled to recover the value of the property not delivered and nominal damages for the unlawful taking and detention of the property delivered;[94] but where the plaintiff deliberately refrains from bringing a possessory action to recover property wrongfully seized until it has been greatly enhanced in value through process of manufacture, he is not entitled to a recovery of the property in specie but only to the value of the property at the time of the conversion with interest from that date.[95] The fact that the goods were left in the possession of the defendant under the writ does not deprive the plaintiff of the right to recover damages for their unlawful taking and detention.[96] Where the plaintiff recovers possession under the writ, the measure of damages is the damage proved to have been sustained by reason of the detention [97] and where no dam-

85. In an action to recover the furniture of a barber shop including four barber chairs "all of the value of $59.70," a verdict for "three barber chairs or $59.70" is not so indefinite as to constitute ground for setting the verdict aside. Phoenix Furniture Co. v. Jaudon [S. C.] 55 S. E. 308.

age is proved only nominal damages may be awarded.[98] The expense of caring for the property should be deducted from the value of its use during the period of detention.[99] Where plaintiff introduces evidence of damages, a failure to award damages in the judgment giving him possession is equivalent to a finding that none had been suffered.[1]

§ 12. Costs.[2]—The successful party in the action is entitled to costs.[3] Where defendant refuses to comply with a demand for possession and persists in his refusal, plaintiff is entitled to costs accruing both before and after the service of the writ.[4] A mere request to the constable to withhold any costs until the trial if possible is not such a disclaimer as will protect the defendant from a judgment for costs.[5]

§ 13. Review.[6]—A finding of fact that plaintiff is not entitled to damages will not be reviewed.[7] Where the evidence is before it, the court on appeal may reform a judgment in so far as it fails to state the value of each article separately.[8]

§ 14. Liability of plaintiff or his bond, and of receiptors, etc.[9]—Where the plaintiff in a replevin suit permits the action to be dismissed for want of prosecution, in an action on the bond he cannot contest the defendant's title to the goods taken under the writ[10] except to plead and prove his title in mitigation of damages;[11] the judgment in replevin being conclusive upon the parties or their privies as to all matters which were or might have been litigated under the issues.[12] The condition of a bond for the prosecution of the action is separate from the conditions for the return of the property and the payment of damages and may become effective independently of the other conditions.[13] The prosecution of the action contemplated by the condition of the bond is to the determination of the issues by a final judgment,[14] and a failure to prosecute the action to a valid,[15] final, judg-

12. Where the question of damages might have been litigated in the replevin action, the judgment therein is conclusive in an action on the bond. Jackson v. Morgan [Ind.] 78 N. E. 633. Under the Indiana statute whether the verdict and judgment be for the plaintiff or the defendant for the return of the property or the value thereof and all damages for its taking and detention, must be determined in the replevin action and defendant cannot afterward bring a separate action upon the bond to recover damages for the taking and detention. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 558, provides that in actions for the recovery of specific personal property the jury must assess the value of the property, as also the damages for the taking or detention, whenever by their verdict there will be a judgment for the recovery or return of the property, section 581 provides in an action to recover the possession of personal property judgment may be for the delivery of the property or the value thereof in case delivery cannot be had and damages for the detention, held where a judgment for the value of the property is satisfied a separate action on the bond for damages does not lie. 15. The fact that the judgment was void through the fault of the justice of the peace

ment operates as a breach of the condition.[16] In Georgia, upon a judgment for the defendant, judgment enters as of course against the plaintiff and the sureties on his bond for the amount mentioned therein.[17] In Texas a judgment against the sureties must allow them ten days within which to return all or a part of the goods taken under the writ, and allow credit for the value of the goods returned,[18] and the value of each article replevied must be stated separately,[19] and, where goods taken in sequestration proceedings and replevied by defendant are not delivered to the sheriff within ten days after the entry of judgment for the plaintiff in the sequestration action, judgment is properly entered against the replevin plaintiff's sureties.[20] Persons not parties to a replevin bond are improperly joined as defendants in an action upon the bond.[21] The value of the property stated in the writ and bond is at least prima facie evidence of its value in an action against the sureties [22] and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is conclusive [23] and general rules as to evidence of value obtain.[24] Where plaintiff fails to return the property after an alternative judgment has been entered, the measure of damages in an action against the sureties is the amount of the alternative judgment.[25] The sureties on a replevin bond are not liable for costs where the property was replevied from the plaintiff in a sequestrian action and the plaintiff in that action recovers judgment.[26] evidence;[30] and it is especially true as to a claimant sustaining a confidential relation towards a grantor under whose deed he claims as a lost or destroyed instrument that its execution and delivery must be so shown.[31]

§ 2. Proceedings in equity or otherwise to restore lost papers or instruments.[32]—Courts of record have inherent power to substitute lost records and files.[33] Lost records of judicial proceedings may be proved by parol,[34] but where the proceeding is statutory it must be shown that the petition by which it was instituted contained all jurisdictional averments.[35] An instrument void on its face cannot, of course, be restored.[36] Equity has jurisdiction to restore a destroyed deed of adoption for use as evidence in future litigation prior to the assertion of any property right thereunder.[37] The Alabama statute providing for appeal from an order substituting copies for lost papers in judicial proceedings applies only to orders in determined causes and not in pending ones.[38]

RIOT.[53]

A common intent[54] executed by an unlawful assemblage of threatening attitude with disorder and violence[55] is essential to riot. Rioters are "acting together" within the Oregon statute if they are actuated by a common interest and encourage, assist, or abet each other in the execution thereof,[56] and from such co-operation the existence of a common intent may be inferred.[57] And by a further provision of the same statute all participants are liable for a felony committed by one in the course of the riot.[58] While it is material whether the populace was terrified, a witness may not state his conclusion on the subject,[59] and declarations of a participant thirty minutes later is no part of the res gestae.[60] owners when the work is done under statutory authority and promise of perpetual rights,[63] and neither they nor their successors in title can be deprived of their rights except under the power of eminent domain.[64] Whether title to soil under navigable waters passes to the grantee of shore lands is determined by the law of the state in which the land is located,[65] but it is held in most jurisdictions that the title to the bed is in the state for the use of the public,[66] and as a corollary that the riparian proprietor owns only to high water mark or the limit of the bed,[67] nor does it affect the private owner's rights that the conveyance under which he holds calls for side lines of specific length,[68] though the grantee in such case must show that the high water line has moved from his front lateral line towards the stream to entitle him to establish his right to more land than called for by his deed.[69] The rule is merely one of intention [70] and when the intention is ascertainable from the record of a proceeding or the face of an instrument, other evidence is inadmissible.[71] Nevertheless, it is held in Kentcky that a call in a deed for a certain distance to a river passes title to an island in the channel toward the shore conveyed, though the call falls short of the channel.[72] Riparian owners on each side of a navigable fresh water stream, unaffected by the tides, own the old bed thereof to the former thread of the stream when the stream changes its course as the result of avulsion.[73] The public right in the land forming the bank of a navigable river, between high and low water mark, is paramount to the rights of the owner of the adjacent fee.[74] Prior to the inclusion of a navigable body of water in a state, the United States government has no absolute power of disposal of the shores thereof below ordinary high water mark, but holds the same for the benefit of the future commonwealth.[75] Hence, a state, on admission, becomes entitled to exercise sovereignty thereover [76] except in so far as it disclaims such right.[77] As a consequence of ownership by the state, title to the bed and banks of a navigable stream cannot be acquired by adverse possession,[78] nor can a patent by inference or implication pass title in the bed or shore of a navigable stream,[79] and any private interest acquired by a grant of such lands is subservient to the right of the public to use and the power of the government to control the waters thereof,[80] nor can the unauthorized grant thereof by a public official estop the government from asserting its rights.[81] The shifting water line and not the meander line is the boundary of a government survey abutting on navigable waters,[82] especially where there is evidence of the existence of the body of water substantially as shown on the government survey.[83] The location of the line of ordinary high tide as shown on a government survey of lands abutting on an ocean is presumed to be correct.[84] A meander line is not itself the shore line but is only a means of measuring correctly the shore line.[85] When a stream has definite banks they are the best evidence of the location of the high water line.[86] The title of each riparian owner on a nonnavigable stream extends to the thread of the stream,[87] and one owning and in possession of lands on both sides thereof is presumed to have title to an intervening island,[88] hence, a conveyance of land by such owner includes by implication an island between the shore thereof and the thread of the stream.[89] The rule that under a grant of lands bounded on nonnavigable water the grantee takes to the center of the water ratably with other riparian proprietors does not apply to give the grantee title to low, swampy, lands, checked by bayous, subject to inundation and reclaimable to some extent for agricultural purposes.[90] When a street on the shore line of a harbor is widened, the riparian rights of the city attendant thereon remain the same.[91]

§ 2. Rights attendant on change in bed of stream or in shore line.[92]—Title to reclamations of [93] and accretions to land on navigable waters goes with the fee,[94] and boundaries private as well as municipal [95] change to effect the result. When accretions form in front of the property of several riparian owners, each is entitled merely to his proportion,[95] nor can one be cut off from the water front merely because his side and lateral lines extended would form a perfect rectangle before reaching the water line,[97] but, to entitle him to a proportional part of the receded shore line it is essential for him to show the length of the new shore line and the length of the corresponding old shore line, so that the new line may be apportioned in parts corresponding to the parts of the old shore line belonging to the different owners.[98] The repeal by congress of an act declaring a stream navigable does not affect accretion rights of riparian owners as they exist at the time of the repeal.[99] A temporary disappearance of water from a lake meandered by a government survey gives riparian owners no rights by accretion or reliction.[1] Hence, their ownership

Milwaukee [Wis.] 111 N. W. 570), and the allotment made by connecting the points where division lines of coterminous owners intersect the original shore line and the corresponding points on the new shore line by straight lines, unless inequities result (Id.). Contention that apportionment restricted within government line as to both original and present water frontage would result in more equitable distribution of area and water line held untenable. Id. The use of a portion of the new shore line of an area subject to apportionment as accretion for a tunnel to take water for municipal purposes into a city claiming an interest in the accretion does not prevent such portion of the shore from being treated as the natural water and shore line in making the apportionment. continues to be limited by the high water mark.[2] Whether a particular formation constitutes accretion to other land is a question of fact.[3] A formation which begins by a deposit against the shore of the mainland is not deprived of its character as an accretion by the subsequent advent of a stream between the accretion and the mainland.[4] In California owners of lands abutting on the ocean have no title to extensions thereto by accretion.[5] The right to accretion does not become a vested right before it actually exists in the sense that it may not be divested by legislative action without compensation.[6] Where riparian land is subject to an easement, it attaches to accretion apportioned thereto,[7] and when lost by erosion and subsequently restored by accretion, the easement is also restored.[8] The government meander line and the shore line of a stream are not synonymous terms in determining the rights of riparian owners to accretion,[9] and a change in the shore line is essential to legitimate a claim of such character.[10] Though riparian owners are entitled to accretions to their land caused by artificial means or obstructions, they cannot by filling or consenting to others filling their property acquire the filled land by accretion.[11] When part of a body of land on a navigable stream has been submerged, one acquiring the upland from a grantor who also owns the low land takes no title to the low land by the conveyance,[12] but his title to the low land may be perfected by its becoming attached to the upland by accretion or reliction.[13] If the channel of a river separating mainland belonging to one proprietor and an island, restored land, or other formation, belonging to another proprietor, be deflected and filled up so that the two bodies of land join, each owner is entitled to the accretions to and relictions from his own shore,[14] but if the channel fill up from the bottom without accretion to or reliction from either side, the boundary is the center of the channel as it was before the water left it.[15] When a portion only of land subject to partition was partitioned on the mistaken assumption that the other had been lost to the proprietors by a submergence which had taken place, but it subsequently reappeared along with accretions, the restored land with accretions thereupon became partitionable between the same parties and privies, on the equitable ground of mistake as to the existence of a part of the subject-matter of the former suit.[16] The doctrine of accretions applies as well to islands as to the mainland.[17] The owner of an island in navigable water is the owner also of accretions to any part of it remaining after the government survey under which his patent thereto was issued.[18] A transfer by number of a meandered lot abutting on a lake according to the government survey, without words of restriction, conveys all the land which has become a part of the lot by recession of the lake.[18] On the reappearance of land submerged by avulsion in a navigable stream, it is subject to reclamation when its identity is established.[20] The right of reclamation is determined by the natural shore line unless the artificial conditions are definite, substantial, and permanent.[21] When avulsion changes the course of a navigable fresh water stream, unaffected by the tides, riparian owners on each side take title to the old bed to the former thread of the stream.[22]

§ 3. Rights incidental to riparian ownership.[23]—Proprietors of land abutting on an arm of the sea hold the same under the Massachusetts colonial ordinance, in fee to low water mark, subject, however, as to that portion between high and low water mark, to the easement of the public for the purposes of navigation and free fishing and fowling, and of passing freely over and through the water without any use of the land underneath wherever the tide ebbs and flows;[24] but while there is a right to swim or float in or on public waters as well as to sail upon them, it does not include the right to use for bathing purposes that part of the beach or shore above low water mark, where the distance to high water mark does not exceed 100 rods whether covered with water or not.[25] In the courts of American states, the measure of the right of the riparian owner to the use of land below high water mark of an arm of the ocean for the purpose of access to navigable water is not to be ascertained by reference to the common-law rule at the time of grants of the foreshore made by the British crown,[26] before the revolution, and this is true notwithstanding the state wherein the land is located has adopted such parts of the common law as were in force at the time of the grants and has passed no statute in derogation thereof,[27] hence, they cannot be deprived of a reasonable exercise of their right of access notwithstanding their holding under such grants.[28] Access as one of the rights of riparian owners on a navigable stream is not cut off by the Iowa statute defining the jurisdiction and right of control which the board of park commissioners is given over the banks of the Des Moines river in that state.[29] The assumption of jurisdiction and control over the bed and banks of a navigable river between high and low water mark, by the state or a board under its authority, is not inconsistent with the riparian owners' right of access.[30] A riparian owner on a navigable stream has the right to protect his soil against inroads of the water,[31] to secure accretions which form against his bank,[32] and to erect and maintain improvements necessary to promote commerce, navigation, fishing, and other uses of the stream as a navigable one,[33] but he has no right to deflect it into a new channel by obstructing the main current.[34] The right of a riparian owner is subject to such restrictions as may be imposed upon the municipality wherein the land is located under which the right is claimed,[35] or as such as may be imposed by law, including those imposed by law on the municipality's power to grant the permit, or inherent in the nature of its title.[36] A public landing is dedicated to the public use and is held in trust for the public the same as a street and cannot be devoted to any use inconsistent with the use of the public,[37] hence, a grant thereof for exclusive private purposes is void.[38] A statute requiring fences on lines between adjoining owners as affecting liability for damage by cattle running at large does not apply when the lands are separated by a stream of such character as makes a fencing thereof impossible.[39]

§ 4. Subjection to public easements.[40]—One exercising his right of floatage on a navigable stream is liable to a riparian owner for injury to his land only for negligence in the exercise of the right,[41] and whether he has been guilty of negligence is a question of fact.[42] One constructing a dam by authority of the state is not liable to riparian owners for damage necessarily resulting from such construction unless such liability is imposed by statute.[43] So long as the owners of irrigating rights in a navigable body of water make no use thereof which will cause it to rise above ordinary high water mark, nor to recede below ordinary low water mark, a riparian owner of the shores has no cause to complain of the use.[44] There is no reservation or recognition of bathing on the beach as a separate right of property in individuals or the public under the colonial ordinance of Massachusetts,[45] and there is no such right at common law.[46] A riparian owner cannot treat tracts separated by a navigable stream as contiguous in his claim for compensation arising from the exercise of the right of eminent domain as to one of them,[47] especially when they are held under conveyance recognizing the tracts as not contiguous.[48]

§ 5. Action for protection of riparian rights.[49]—One in possession of an oyster bed on tide lands owned by the state, may maintain a suit to quiet title thereto as against an adverse claimant.[50] Injunction lies at the suit of a riparian owner to prevent the threatened unlicensed use of his bank by one using the waters for frontage purposes.[51] A riparian owner is entitled to look to a principal operating through an undisclosed agent for an injury to his property from negligent use of the waters of a navigable stream on which his land abuts.[52] The rule followed in some states that a view of the premises by the court may be treated as independent evidence applies in respect to matters affecting riparian owners.[53] In a suit by one deraigning title to land to restrain trespass thereon, one asserting title thereto by avulsion as a defense has the affirmative of the issue and the burden of proof rests on him.[54]

56. Words "from the person" in statute given common-law interpretation including "in the presence." Larceny from safe ef-

force or violence,[58] or by putting him in fear by such threats as would intimidate a reasonably courageous man.[59] The Georgia statute defining robbery by sudden snatching does not create an independent and new offense,[60] nor abolish violence as the distinctive element which differentiates the crime of robbery from larceny.[61] Hence the crime is punishable under the statute prescribing the punishment for the offense of robbery by force.[62] In several states additional punishment is prescribed if accused be at the time of the robbery armed with a dangerous weapon with intent to use the same if resisted.[63]

§ 2. Indictment and prosecution. A. Indictment.[64]—An averment of the particular kind of money taken,[65] or that it was personal property,[66] is not required in addition to an averment that it was a specific sum in lawful money of the United States, and only a substantial correspondence of averment and proof in respect thereto is required.[67] The information need not aver that an assault was made,[68] nor the kind of fear produced.[69] An indictment for assault with intent is not bad because it alleges completed robbery.[70] By plea of guilty defendant waives a failure to aver ownership of the property in the victim.[71] An indictment alleging taking from the "person or possession" is bad.[72] Under the Kentucky statute to provide for increased punishment for bank robbery and safe blowing, an indictment for attempting to blow open a bank safe need not aver that the bank is a corporation.[73]

(§ 2) B. Evidence.[74]—When it is shown on a prosecution for robbery by one armed with a dangerous weapon that the weapon used was a gun or revolver and that it was pointed at the victim, it devolves on defendant to show that it was

An intent to permanently deprive the victim of his property is not an element of assault with intent to rob. State v. Bateman, 196 Mo. 35, 95 S. W. 413.

Force sufficient to require the victim to part with his property is all that is required to sustain a conviction. State v. Parsons [Wash.] 87 P. 349. Evidence that the owner of cotton intended or agreed to haul it to a certain place and there sell it to plaintiff, and an agreement on the part of the latter to accept the same and pay the highest cost price on the day of delivery, did not show a sale. Rea v. Schow [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 931, 93 S. W. 706.

89. Where property was sent one under an agreement that he could keep the property and account to plaintiff for their specified value if he was pleased with it, otherwise he should return them within a reasonable time, the agreement was not a contract of "sale or return" but was a mere option to purchase or return. Gottlieb v. Rinaldo [Ark.] 93 S. W. 750. See post, § 2, Contract Requisites of Sale.

90. The power to require the restoration of the subject of the agreement is generally held an indispensable incident of a contract of bailment (In re Columbus Buggy Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 859), though it has been held neither a stipulation for the return of the property nor a definite term is necessary to constitute a bailment such a contract (In re Angeny, 151 F. 959). Where goods were delivered under a written agreement expressly providing that the one to whom they were delivered was a bailee for hire and that if default in payment of any of the rents for the use and hire of the goods, wares, and merchandise by the bailee were made, the bailor was authorized to repossess himself of the property, held a bailment and not a conditional sale. Lease of sheep, same number to be returned and a certain amount of wool and certain number of lambs to be returned as rental, held a bailment. Rich v. Utah Commercial & Sav. Bk., 30 Utah, 334, 84 P. 1105. Shipment of goods to be paid for when sold, and in future letters the consignor referred to the goods as "dead stock," held a bailment not a sale. In re Smith & Nixon Piano Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 111. Where one delivers grain to another under an agreement that the identical grain or grain of a similar kind and quality from the common mass into which it was placed shall be returned, there is a bailment (Savage v. Salem Mills Co. [Or.] 85 P. 69), but when, either from the express agreement of the parties or from the general course of business, the party receiving the grain has a right to use it in his business and as a part of his consumable stock and is not obliged to return the identical grain nor grain of a similar grade and quality from the common mass, but may discharge his obligation to the storer by paying the market price when demanded or by returning other grain of the same kind and quality, there is a sale (Id.). A contract for the delivery of ore, for reduction, to defendant, the ore to be paid for on samples, and after samples were taken ore was mixed with other ore, defendant taking all risk of theft or failure of ore to come up to sample, held a sale and not a bailment. Chisholm v. Eagle Ore Sampling Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 670. Sale of specified number of cattle of a specified weight at a named price per pound, payment not to be made for some months, during which time the cattle were to be fed by the buyer and then resold to the seller at an increased price per pound, held a sale. Gills v. George, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 393. Where goods were billed at definite prices and on fixed terms of credit and discount, the consignee undertaking to settle or pay for them and to be responsible for the freight. He also agreed to give the consignor his exclusive trade and to render accounts for goods sold every six months. He was also required to hold separate and in trust all "goods unsold and all currency, open accounts, notes, liens, mortgages, or other values received for goods sold," and that, where goods were sold on credit, notes should be taken on blanks furnished by the consignor and payable to his order, the consignee indorsing and guarantying them. Held a sale and not a bailment. In re Heckathorn, 144 F. 499. See Bailment, 7 C. L. 353.

91. Evidence held to show a contract of agency, not a sale. Dowler v. Swift & Co., 113 App. Div. 260, 98 N. Y. S. 983. The fact that a contract provides that the receiver of goods is to account for those sold at fixed prices and to retain the difference for storage, insurance, commission, and expenses, does not make the contract an agreement of sale. In re Columbus Buggy Co. [C. C.

of articles in existence or such as the seller in the ordinary course of his business manufactures or procures for the general market, whether on hand at the time or not, is a contract for the sale of goods.[92] Neither breach of the contract nor a request for modification thereof affects its existence.[93] Sales are executed or executory,[94] absolute or conditional.[95] In determining the amount of damages for a breach, contracts of sale are again divided into manufacturing and other similar contracts.[96] When the question is presented in the Federal courts, the character of the contract is to be determined by the local law.[97]

1. Where an offer is made and accepted, the shipping of the goods is a sufficient consideration to sustain the contract. Zielms v. Parish [Kan.] 87 P. 685. Where an offer is made and accepted, the shipping of the goods is a sufficient consideration to sustain the contract and in an action on such contract it is not necessary for the seller to prove the value of the goods. 2. Contract to furnish a certain quantity of stone, the purchaser's engineer to be the sole arbitrator of any differences that might arise, held mutual. Quigley v. Spencer Stone Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 86. A contract for the sale of seven hundred and fifty tons of salt was not void for uncertainty or want of mutuality because it gave the buyer the right to order any one or all of the nine different grades specified in the contract. Mobius & Drescher Co. v. Mills [Cal.] 88 P. 917.

3. That the fraudulent misrepresentations were made during the negotiations does not affect their use as a defense. Ordinarily, in such a case, the evidence tending to establish such a defense, a party is entitled to trace the negotiations to their inception. So held where made two days before sale was consummated. Hauptman v. Pike [Neb.] 108 N. W. 163. Fraud may consist of any disposition or artifice used to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another. Roebuck v. Wick, 98 Minn. 130, 107 N. W. 1054. False representations of traveling salesman that he had made sales of similar articles to a competitor engaged in the same business in the same place as the vendee, in evidence of which he produced a fictitious contract of sale to such competitor, is an artifice used to deceive within the meaning of the rule. And in such a case the seller, relying upon the representations, may rescind, although there was at the time of the sale a bona fide intention to pay at some future time. Id. Allegations showing procurement of drunkenness of seller held sufficient to constitute fraud. Pritz v. Jones, 102 N. Y. S. 649. In an action to recover for goods sold under a contract set out, defendant alleged that though the fraud of plaintiff's agent who secured the order the contract was substituted for an order for the goods which defendant thought he was signing. Held to state a good defense. Price v. Huddieston [Ind.] 79 N. E. 496. Confidential agent and friend obtaining bonds from feeble old man held to have the burden of proving that he acquired them honestly and in good faith. Moseley v. Johnson [N. C.] 66 S. E. 922. Where a financial statement is given to be used for future credit, the seller to be notified of any changes, a change in the buyer's condition without notice being given warrants the rescission of a sale subsequently made. Atlas Shoe Co. v. Bechard [Me.] 66 A. 390. Where seller told purchaser's agent he did not know market value of property but relied on agent's statement of same, held agent's statement of market price was a statement of fact and not merely an expression of opinion. American Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Dent [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 814. Where in an action to replevin goods alleged to have been fraudulently procured on credit there was no proof that any representations were made by the purchaser as to its solvency or insolvency, or as to its knowledge of its condition, or as to the intention with which the goods were purchased, a verdict was properly directed for defendants. Goodyear India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Appel Clothing Co. [Colo.] 86 P.

party[5] and his knowledge of the business[6] are important. The minds of the parties must meet,[7] and hence all the terms of the contract must be agreed upon or be capable of ascertainment.[8] An offer to sell or buy is revocable at any time

National Bank of Commerce v. Chatfield, Woods & Co. [Tenn.] 101 S. W. 765. Evidence held insufficient to show that contract was obtained by fraud. Price v. Huddleston [Ind.] 79 N. E. 496. Sale of fertilizer, evidence held not to show fraud. Goodman v. Beard & Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 544, 93 S. W. 666.

4. Where buyer at seller's request checked over order, held he could not avoid payment of the price on the ground of mistake in its terms. Bevins v. Coates, 29 Ky. L. R. 978, 96 S. W. 585. Where a letter quoted flour for immediate acceptance "$5.10 jute or $6.00 bulk," it disclosed a mistake on its face as to flour in sacks so that plaintiff, an experienced flour buyer, could not create a binding contract of sale by accepting the offer for delivery of flour in jute sacks. Buckberg v. Washburn-Crosby Co., 115 Mo. App. 701, 92 S. W. 733. Where a buyer of materials at the tome he received the seller's estimates and a letter offering to furnish the materials for $700 knew that the correct aggregate charge was $801 and that the $700 offer was a mistake, the buyer was liable for such amount, unless at the time of the offer the seller knew of the mistake in the addition of the figures in the estimates and with such knowledge offered and intended to furnish the materials for the lesser sum. Adkins & Co. v. Campbell [Del.] 64 A. 628.

5. Where a purchaser verbally ordered a certain amount of goods of a salesman and he placed before her a written contract calling for a greater quantity of goods and she signed it, held she could not avoid the obligation of the written agreement. Paris Mfg. & Importing Co. v. Carle, 116 Mo. App. 581, 92 S. W. 748. In an action for the price of a restaurant business and personal property connected therewith, it is no defense that the sellers had misrepresented the quality of the property and the value of the business, since, by an inspection, the buyers could have determined the truth or falsity of the representations. Jones v. Reynolds [Wash.] 88 P. 577.

6. Where a buyer of a stock of jewelry was a grocer and unfamiliar with the jewelry business or quality or value of jewelry purchased, but relied expressly on the knowledge of the seller and on the seller's representations with reference thereto, the rule of caveat emptor does not apply. Lyon v. Lindblad, 145 Mich. 588, 13 Det. Leg. N. 574, 108 N. W. 969.

7. Evidence held to show that minds of parties never met. Barton-Parker Mfg. Co. v. Taylor [Ark.] 94 S. W. 713. An owner of a half-hide measuring machine advertised it for sale as an "S. measuring machine" and in correspondence with a prospective purchaser agreed to sell an S. measuring machine as described in the advertisement. The prospective purchaser, however, referred to it in his letter as an "S. whole-hide measuring machine," which he subsequently claimed was worth much more than the agreed price, and agreed to buy a whole-hide measuring machine. Held the minds of the parties did not meet on the article sold. Charles Holmes Mach. Co. v. Chalkley [N. C.] 55 S. E. 524.

8. To become a part of the contract terms must be communicated to the other party and accepted by him. Notice in book that it should not be resold prior to a certain date held not a part of the contract. Authors' & Newspapers' Ass'n v. O'Gorman Co., 147 F. 616. A contract for the sale of seven hundred and fifty tons of salt is not void for uncertainty because it gives the buyer the right to order any one or all of the nine different grades specified in the contract. Mebius & Drescher Co. v. Mills [Cal.] 88 P. 917. A clause requiring shipments to be made according to shipping instructions to be given from time to time by the buyers does not render the contract void for uncertainty or unenforceable except at the option of the buyers. Salmon v. Helena Box Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 408. A contract for the sale of lumber to be delivered at S. recited that the price to be paid should be a specified sum "as fast as loaded on cars at M., 60 days negotable bankable paper," held not indefinite. Byrne Mill Co. v. Robertson [Ala.] 42 So. 1008. Where defendant ordered from plaintiff jewelry from plaintiff's stock to a specified value, the order to be made up of the articles named in the order, but no definite quality, price, or number of any one or more of the articles was mentioned, and plaintiff selected goods to the value named and shipped them to defendant, there was no binding contract of sale owing to the indefiniteness of the order. Price v. Atkinson, 117 Mo. App. 52, 94 S. W. 816. Offer to buy about one thousand tons of coal a month for nine months, details to be arranged later, followed by a letter which recited that the addressee, in accordance with the previous conversation, might enter the writer's order for about one thousand tons of a specified kind of coal per month at a specified sum per ton and that for a few months the writer might not be able to take the full monthly quota, no reply being made to this letter, held no contract. Thedford v. Herbert, 102 N. Y. S. 1083. A contract for the sale of a certain proportion of the nut and slack produced from the operation of a coal mine is not mutually binding upon the parties and cannot be enforced, when by its terms it is left entirely optional with the sellers whether or not they will separate any or all of the nut and slack from the run of the mine. Artemus-Jellico Coal Co. v. Ulland, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 605. A telegram, "Ship hundred at once, eggs," and a letter in reply thereto stating that the addressee of the telegram was shipping "the hundred" and that they were good eggs, did not amount to a contract, the papers being silent on the subject of the quality, quantity, and price. Potomac Bottling Works v. Barber & Co., 103 Md. 509, 63 A. 1068.

before,[9] but not after,[10] acceptance in the manner provided in the contract, and the acceptance to create a valid contract of sale must be an unconditional acceptance of all the terms of the offer as stated;[11] but where the acceptance of an offer is otherwise sufficient, it is not rendered ineffective by the addition of words which do no more than state a condition which the law would imply in any event.[12] The acceptance must be made within the time specified, or, if no time is specified, within a reasonable time,[13] that is, within such time as is reasonably in contemplation between the parties at the time the offer was made and delivered,[14] though acceptance of a contingent offer[15] at any time before revocation makes a binding contract.[16] In the absence of evidence to the contrary,[17] the presumption is that an order taken by a commercial traveler is subject to approval by the house which he represents.[18] An offer being accepted in the manner stated a contract is formed.[19] All conditions precedent must be performed.[20] The acceptance being silent as to certain terms,

9. Written order signed by the buyer, sent the seller for acceptance, and revoked before such acceptance, does not constitute a contract. Northwest Thresher Co. v. Le Sueur [Kan.] 88 P. 541. Order given commercial traveler may be revoked at any time before acceptance by the latter's principal. Bauman v. McManus [Kan.] 89 P. 15.

10. Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Horstad [S. D.] 109 N. W. 509. Evidence held not to show conclusively that an attempt was made to withdraw the order before acceptance. Bauman v. McManus [Kan.] 89 P. 15.

11. Where acceptance of offer to sell added terms as to credit, held no contract. Babcock Bros. Lumber Co. v. Georgia, etc., R. Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 457. Offer of cases "to be shipped from factory," acceptance stated f. o. b. cars at place where factory was located, held a completed contract. Crystal Case Co. v. Arnett [Kan.] 85 P. 302. Where a telegram accepting an offer for the sale of cotton contained the words "ship promptly," such words cannot be construed as adding a new term to the seller's offer. McCleskey & Whitman v. Howell Cotton Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 67. Where goods shipped were inspected on Saturday after 5 P. M., and found not to conform to the contract and the buyer was notified and told that the goods would be accepted if bank was wired to reduce draft, "Answer quick" held offer not accepted by simply wiring bank and the latter notifying the buyer on Monday morning. Edgeworth v. Talerico [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 405, 95 S. W. 677. Where traveling man's principal had the right to accept or reject orders taken by him, held they were mere offers and if the goods were shipped on terms different from those stated in the order the purchaser was not bound to accept them. Baird v. Pratt [C. C. A.] 148 F. 825. Plaintiff wrote to defendant offering to take 100 or 150 cars of coal at a fixed price. Defendant replied that he would supply plaintiff with 100 cars at the price fixed if plaintiff could furnish cars. Plaintiff replied that he had taken the matter in hand as to the cars and that he would do what he could to improve the condition. Held insufficient to establish a contract, though plaintiff stated in his last letter that he understood defendant's letter to be an acceptance of the offer and though defendant made no reply thereto. Hudson v. Arnold, 29 Ky. L. R. 375, 93 S. W. 42.

12. Honest weights. Bennett v. Cummings [Kan.] 85 P. 755.

13. Paducah Packing Co. v. Polk Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 929. Option to sell. Hollis v. Libby, 10 Me. 302, 64 A. 621. One year and eight months held more than a reasonable time. Id.

14. Instruction in the language of the text held correct as against a claim that the words, "considering the nature of the case", should have been inserted in lieu thereof. Paducah Packing Co. v. Polk Co. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 929.

15. Abrohams v. Revillon Freres [Wis.] 107 N. W. 656. Memoradum stating kinds of furs and prices and reciting that the offerer would take up at his selection "only this section goods" from plaintiff at the specified prices "up to sales in January or on or about February, 1904," held a continuing offer to buy such goods and not a mere price list. Id.

16. Abrohams v. Revillon Freres [Wis.] 107 N. W. 656.

17. Evidence held to show that buyer had a right to assume that traveling salesman had full authority to make contract without submitting offer to his principal. Brennan v. Dansby [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 744, 95 S. W. 700.

18. Bowlin Liquor Co. v. Beaudoin [N. D.] 108 N. W. 545; Gould v. Cates Chair Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 675. Hence the proposed buyer has an unqualified right to withdraw such an order at any time before it is accepted. Bauman v. McManus [Kan.] 89 P. 15; Ziehme v. Parish [Kan.] 87 P. 685.

19. Written order to ship certain goods at specified prices constitutes a contract of purchase and sale when the order is accepted and the goods shipped. Solicitation of offer; offer made stating terms, answer in the form of a statement that offeree will on the exact terms stated in the offer, held a contract of sale. Bennett v. Cummings [Kan.] 85 P. 755. Where an order for goods is signed on the understanding that only a part of the goods specified are to be purchased, and the vendor approves the order for the less amount, contract held binding only for the less amount. Howell v. Maine & Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 771.

20. An order for goods containing stipulations intended to be binding on the purchase, but providing that it should be subject to approval by the person to whom it was addressed, held not binding until ap-they are deemed incorporated in the terms of the offer.[21] What constitutes an acceptance depends upon the facts of the case,[22] and it may be inferred from acts and conduct,[23] but not from mere silence alone.[24] Consequently, in the absence of affirmative conduct, notification of rejection may be made at any time.[25] An acceptance of an order is effectual from the moment the letter of acceptance, properly directed and stamped, is deposited in the post office, or, if by wire, the moment the telegram is paid for and delivered to the telegraph company for transmission,[26] but a revocation of an order does not take effect until the letter or telegram of revocation is received.[27] Hence, the mere production of a letter countermanding an order given is insufficient to show a revocation without proof that the letter was ever mailed to or received by the seller.[28] A mere quotation does not amount to an offer.[29] proved and accepted by the vendor. Howell v. Maine & Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 771.

21. Where solicitation of offer states one time for delivery and offer states another, and the final answer was silent on the subject, held to constitute an acquiescence by the seller of the time proposed by the buyer. Bennett v. Cummings [Kan.] 85 P. 755.

22. Where seller wrote letter acknowledging receipt of order for certain lumber and stated that he had sent order to mill with instructions to commence cutting at once, and that the lumber would be shipped via a certain railroad, unless plaintiff preferred a different delivery, held to constitute a valid contract of sale. Crane v. Barron, 100 N. Y. S. 937. Plaintiff orally offered to buy about 1000 tons of coal a month for nine months, and thereafter wrote a letter to defendant which recited that he might enter plaintiff's order for about 1000 tons of a specified kind of coal for nine months at a specified sum per ton. Defendant did not reply but on plaintiff telephoning for coal delivered a small quantity thereof. Held insufficient to show that any coal was delivered under a contract for the sale thereof. Thedford v. Herbert, 102 N. Y. S. 1083.

23. Where goods were shipped and buyer called on seller's agent to assist in unloading, held there was an acceptance of the order by the seller. Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Horstad [S. D.] 109 N. W. 509. Part performance may be evidence of the fact that the minds of the parties met. Crystal Case Co. v. Arnett [Kan.] 85 P. 302. Where there was an offer to sell railroad ties to be delivered "this year and the next," and the reply offered to take all ties delivered "within the next 12 months," held, after having received and paid for ties for a few months, there was a binding contract. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Coyle [Ky.] 97 S. W. 772. Petition for a new trial overruled. Id. [Ky.] 99 S. W. 237. Where traveling salesman made a contract and his firm on receipt of same wrote buyer thanking them for the order and only complaining of the time of shipment, held not a repudiation. Brennan v. Dansby [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 744, 95 S. W. 700. Where an order for goods is taken by a traveling salesman and transmitted to his employer, who thereupon writes to the proposed buyer acknowledging the receipt of the order, thanking him for it and saying that it will have prompt and careful attention, such communication either is in itself an absolute acceptance of the order or is such an expression as may, in connection with an otherwise unexplained omission for a long time to make any further response, be deemed some evidence from which an acceptance may be inferred if not conclusively an acceptance it may be given that effect if the subsequent conduct of the parties indicates that they have so treated it. Banman v. McManus [Kan.] 89 P. 15. Such a communication may be regarded as having been interpreted as an acceptance by both parties where it is followed by correspondence between them in which the buyer claims a right to change or cancel the order at any time in virtue of an asserted special agreement made with him by the agent who took it and the seller denies the existence of such right and the making of such agreement. Id.

24. Order taken by salesman, two months silence. Gould v. Cates Chair Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 675.

25. A letter written two months after receipt of offer declining to accept held sufficient rejection. Gould v. Cates Chair Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 675.

26. Price v. Atkinson, 117 Mo. App. 52, 94 S. W. 816. Where defendants directed plaintiff's agent to offer plaintiff certain cotton at a specified price the agent did so, whereupon plaintiff immediately telegraphed the agent an acceptance of such offer. The delivery of the telegram to the telegraph company before plaintiff was notified of the withdrawal of the offer constituted a sufficient acceptance to form a contract of sale. McCleskey v. Howell Cotton Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 67.

27. Price v. Atkinson, 117 Mo. App. 52, 94 S. W. 816.

28. Moneyweight Scale Co. v. Loewenstein, 103 N. Y. S. 80.

29. Buckberg v. Washburn-Crosby Co., 115 Mo. App. 701, 92 S. W. 733. Where plaintiff wrote defendant concerning the price of flour and defendant replied quoting certain flour at "$5.10 jute and $6.00 bulk," and stated that such quotation was for immediate acceptance, held an offer to sell and not a mere quotation. Id. A buyer, after having obtained from the seller quotations for specified goods, wired an order for a specified quantity which the seller by wire accepted. The seller wrote requesting the buyer to furnish satisfactory references or remit one-half of the price and give the seller the privilege of forwarding shipment with sight draft attached to bill of lading.

Where goods sold are received and are of any value, in the absence of a return or tender the seller may recover the amount of the value even if the goods were not of the value represented,[30] and the same rule applies where only part of the goods were received.[31] If part of an entire order of goods is accepted and retained after or with knowledge that the whole will not be furnished, an implied contract arises to pay pro rata subject in some courts to a counterclaim for damages for non-completion.[32]

Who are the parties to the sale largely depends upon the circumstances surrounding the making thereof,[33] and in this connection a duty rests on one to speak when by silence another acting in good faith may be misled.[34] So far as affects this question, the fact that the sale was made through an agent is immaterial.[35] The fact that goods are charged to a certain person and the bill therefor is made out to him is a fact to be considered in determining to whom the sale was made, but is not conclusive.[36] Notice to a commercial traveler of a change of ownership in the purchasing store is not binding on his principal.[37] The validity of the contract is governed by law of the state where made.[38] Ordinarily, a sale made with the knowledge and intention of both parties that the subject-matter thereof shall be used for an illegal purpose is illegal;[39] but where such use is not in the contemplation of the parties at the making of the sale, a subsequent use of the subject-matter for an unlawful purpose does not render the sale illegal.[40] The

Before the buyer received the letter it wired the seller to ship the goods at the earliest possible date. Thereafter the seller wrote that it had entered the order and expressed a hope to receive a reply to the former letter. Held not to establish a contract of sale. Scaife & Sons Co. v. Standard Ice Co. [Wash.] 89 P. 882.

30. Price v. Huddleston [Ind.] 79 N. E. 496. Defective goods being kept, the seller is entitled to recover upon a quantum meruit. Harris v. Gill, 102 N. Y. S. 665.

31. The purchaser receiving and retaining goods sold cannot refuse to pay therefor on the ground that a few articles are missing, but is liable for the contract price less the value of the missing articles. Bartlick v. Wortman [Pa.] 65 A. 622.

32. Benjamin on Sales [7th Ed.], Bennett's Notes, p. 80. United States v. Molloy [C. C. A.] 144 F. 321. Rule applied where plaintiff's delivery of stone to defendant was not in accordance with the terms of their contract, but defendant received, accepted, and used stone delivered by plaintiff under the contract with knowledge of plaintiff's breaches. Id.

Note: From a survey of the authorities it appears that the cases which deny any right of recovery for the value of a partial performance after acceptance proceed upon the theory either that under the terms of the contract entire performance was a condition precedent to any right of recovery, or that the acceptance is predicated upon the understanding that the performance is pro tanto in fulfillment of the contract and with the expectation that it will be substantially carried out, or upon the general ground that a contract cannot be implied where there is an existing contract. See review of authorities in United States v. Molloy [C. C. A.] 144 F. 321.

33. Where goods were sold, payments to be made to a certain bank, which expressly stated that its interest was solely that of a pledge, held not to constitute sale by the bank and it could not recover the purchase price without proving an existing indebtedness between it and the real seller. Thalmann v. Giles, 101 N. Y. S. 980. Where goods were ordered by third party, goods to be shipped to another, and they were sent to the latter and the invoice and letters sent him showed that the seller regarded the sale as made to him, held to justify a finding of acceptance without reference to the question as to who ordered it, though the buyer had told the carrier to deliver to another. Long Bell Lumber Co. v. Nyman, 145 Mich. 477, 13 Det. Leg. N. 577, 108 N. W. 1019.

34. Where one allows another to transact business in his name, he becomes liable for the indebtedness incurred. Sale of goods to purchaser of store continuing the business in the name of the seller. Mackay-Nisbet Co. v. Kuhlman, 119 Ill App. 144. Where goods were ordered to be sent to a third party and the seller so sent them and notified such party that it regarded the sale as being made to him and he did not repudiate the transaction until several months after, held in an action for the price to require an instruction as to the duty resting on a party to speak when by silence another acting in good faith is misled, and as to what amounts to ratification of an unauthorized act of another. Long Bell Lumber Co. v. Nyman, 145 Mich. 477, 13 Det. Leg. N. 577, 108 N. W. 1019.

35. Where order is signed by the buyer and directed to the seller and the latter accepts it, they are the parties to the sale even though it was made through an agent. Kohl v. Bradley Clark & Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 265.

contract must not be against public policy [41] nor in restraint of trade.[42] Wherever the law imposes a penalty for making a contract, it impliedly forbids parties from making such a contract, and, when a contract is prohibited, whether expressly or by implication, it is illegal and cannot be enforced.[43] In some states sale of secondhand clothing is prohibited.[44] An executory agreement for the sale of goods to be delivered at a future day is valid, though at the time it is made the seller has not the goods in his possession, has not contracted to purchase them, and has no expectation of acquiring them otherwise than by purchasing them at some time before the day of delivery.[45] Such a transaction is not invalid unless it is made to appear that neither of the parties contemplated an actual delivery of the goods, and it was the intention of both that there should be no actual delivery, but on the day fixed for the delivery there should be a settlement of the differences, based on the market value of the goods on that day.[46] A contract providing for the absolute delivery of a minimum amount is not void as an option contract though it likewise contains a provision for the delivery of a maximum amount at the option of the purchaser.[47]

§ 3. Modification, rescission and revival.[48]—While one of the parties cannot, without the consent of the other, modify or change the contract in any way,[49] still the parties may by mutual consent [50] change the contract in any way without additional consideration.[51] The contract providing that certain conditions be performed or the contract could be canceled, the right to cancel for the breach rests in the party for whose benefit the condition was made.[52] The modification of a written

41. As applied to copyrighted books a contract whereby the purchaser agrees not to resell within a year is not unreasonable nor against public policy. Authors' & Newspapers' Ass'n v. O'Gorman Co., 147 F. 616.

42. Provisions in a contract for the sale of a secret process restraining its use or its communication to others are not invalid as in restraint of trade because necessary to protect the property right in the subject-matter of the contract, but such considerations do not apply to contract for the sale of the article produced by such process which are subject to the same rules as contracts for the sale of any other article of manufacture. Hartman v. Park & Sons Co., 145 F. 358. A system of contracts made by the manufacturer of a proprietary medicine between him and wholesale dealers, to whom alone he sold his medicine, by which they were bound to sell only at a certain price and to retail dealers designated by him and between him and the retailers by which in consideration of being so designated, they agreed to sell to consumers only at a certain price, is not unlawful as in restraint of trade. 44. Pen. Code 1895, § 490, construed and held only applicable to sales of secondhand clothing imported into the state. Smith & Co. v. Evans, 125 Ga. 109, 53 S. E. 589. Answer failing to allege that clothing was imported into state held demurrable. Id.

49. Staunton v. Smith [Del.] 65 A. 593. Where after contract for sale of bottles to be manufactured was signed authorized agent of seller wrote on its face, "bottles to be made by union workmen, or contract to be canceled" held a modification. Earnshaw v. Whittemore [Mass.] 80 N. E. 520. Where the quality of cattle was to be passed on by the purchaser, evidence that about the time the purchaser commenced the inspection of the cattle the seller arranged with a third person to furnish certain cattle on the contract, if necessary, was incompetent, it not appearing that the purchaser was informed of the arrangement. Hanley Co. v. Combs [Or.] 87 P. 143. The fact that one requests a modification in the terms of the contract does not constitute a breach thereof, the request recognizing the binding effect of the contract. Floyd v. Mann [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 811, 109 N. W. 679.

50. Aaron & Co. v. Smith Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 347. Parties may modify sale before delivery so as to provide that the seller should retain title and possession until payment was made. Lamb v. Utley [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 904, 110 N. W. 50. Where there was a contract for the sale of corn to be grown, and the date of planting was changed with the consent of all parties, such change is no defense to an action for damages for failure to accept. Pancoast v. Vail [Del.] 65 A. 512. Buyer ordering shipment of goods purchased after letter from seller suggesting different terms held not a consent to the modification. Brennan & Son v. Dansby [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 700.

51. Elliott v. Howlson [Ala.] 40 So. 1018.

52. Where a contract for the manufacture and sale of bottles required that they be made by union workmen or that the contract be canceled, the provision for the cancellation was for the sole benefit of the buyer, whose right to abandon the contract did not arise until breach on the part of the contract may be by parol.[53] Except where the contract is rendered voidable by fraud, breach of warranty or other similar cause [54] it can only be rescinded or canceled by mutual consent.[55] Breach of any part of an entire contract warrants rescission.[56] Where the course of dealing under a continuing contract indicates no intention to insist upon a literal compliance with the terms thereof, one cannot rescind for failure to literally comply therewith without fair notice to the other party.[57] Where an order of reinstatement changes the terms of the original contract, it does not operate as a reinstatement of such contract.[58]

§ 4. General rules of interpretation and construction.[59]—The construction of a contract, whether committed to writing contained in correspondence or entirely verbal, is a matter of law, and the meaning of its terms, if precise and explicit, is a question for the court; [60] but if such meaning is doubtful or uncertain,[61] or in case the terms of a verbal contract are disputed, it may be submitted to the jury under proper instructions. The intention of the parties governs [62] and the contract being ambiguous, this intention may be ascertained from the customs and usages of the trade,[63] the terms of the contract,[64] the circumstances of the case,[65] and from the

62. Scotch Mfg. Co. v. Carr [Fla.] 43 So. 427; Ward Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Isbell & Co. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 845. It is a fundamental rule that the intention of the parties as gathered from the language of all parts of the agreement, considered in relation to each other and interpreted with reference to the situation of the parties, and the manifest object they had in view, must always be allowed to prevail, unless some substantial principal of law or sound public policy would thereby be violated. Bell v. Jordan [Me.] 65 A. 759. As to whether there was a present or future sale. Massey Bros. v. Dixon Bros. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 383.

63. Bell v. Jordan [Me.] 65 A. 759. No ambiguity, custom inadmissible. Shelby Iron Co. v. Dufree [Ala.] 41 So. 182. A contract by which the seller agrees to deliver coal "by wagons to their (defendant's) furnaces", and the purchaser agrees to pay a certain sum per bushel, "to be measured in the cahs" of the purchaser "at their furnaces", cannot be modified or explained by parol evidence of a custom of the purchaser and others; the purpose of such evidence being to show that the amount of coal should be determined by its bulk at the elevator or furnace proper. Id. In an action in which a buyer claimed damages for breach of a contract to sell five carloads of lumber, evidence of common usage was permissible to show what a carload of lumber consisted of. Floyd v. Mann [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 811, 109 N. W. 679.

64. The contract must be construed by reference to its terms for the purpose of giving it the meaning and construction the parties intended. Adkins & Co. v. Campbell [Del.] 64 A. 628.

65. The court or jury may consider all the evidence touching the relations and conduct of the parties having a tendency to show their intentions and their contract obligations, if any, implied thereby. Lawrie v. Lininger & Metcalf Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 259. A contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it practical construction of the contract by the parties,[66] though it should be remembered that a written contract is to be taken without qualification by any evidence as to the dealings, negotiations, or conversations, between them prior to or at the time of the making of said agreement.[67] In arriving at the meaning of a contract, the court should give effect to each word if possible, should take into consideration all its parts in ascertaining the meaning of each particular part, should construe written and printed portions together when they do not contradict each other,[68] and where one of the parties has a printed agreement and simply fills out the blanks, any ambiguity must be resolved against him.[69] The principle of technical nicety cannot be strictly applied to the construction of every day oral contracts made by plain business men in their course of trade and traffic, as to do so would frequently result in overthrowing the meaning and understanding of the parties.[70] In order for a custom or usage to be regarded as part of the contract, it must be a general custom or usage,[71] or it must have been known to the parties and they must have contracted with reference to it,[72] and it must be consistent with the contract,[73] and not unreasonable or illegal.[74] Evidence of prior or contemporaneous parol agreements is inadmissible to vary, alter, or add, to the terms of a complete written contract of sale,[75] though it may be admitted to explain ambiguous,[76] but not

was made and the matter to which it relates. Civ. Code, § 1647. Shafer v. Sloan [Cal. App.] 85 P. 162. Rule applied to show that sale of goods coupled with agreement not to enter into business in the same town was a contract for the sale of the business. Id.

66. Ehrsam & Sons Mfg. Co. v. Jackman [Kan.] 85 P. 559. In the case of an oral contract, where there is some conflict in the testimony as to just what language was used by the respective contracting parties, the construction placed upon the terms and conditions of the contract by the parties themselves may be shown and will govern. Scotch Mfg. Co. v. Carr [Fla.] 43 So. 427. Evidence tending to show a subsequent recognition of a contract for the sale of corporate stock, including a written calculation made by the seller as to the amount due by the purchaser under a contract of like effect made with another stockholder, is admissible to show upon what terms the parties understood the stock was to be sold. Hightower v. Ansley, 126 Ga. 8, 54 S. E. 939. Practical construction of f. o. b. contract held to require shipper to furnish cars. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Jones & Adams Co., 120 Ill. App. 139.

67. Staunton v. Smith [Del.] 65 A. 593.

68. Ehrsam & Sons Mfg. Co. v. Jackman [Kan.] 85 P. 559. Where a consigment receipt, and a deposit agreement for the sale of a ring on instalments were executed at the same time, between the same parties, and with reference to the same subject, they should be read together as one instrument. People v. Gluck, 188 N. Y. 167, 80 N. E. 1022.

69. People v. Gluck, 188 N. Y. 167, 80 N. E. 1022.

70. Scotch Mfg. Co. v. Carr [Fla.] 43 So. 427.

71. Where witness was asked whether there was any custom among lumbermen for settlement of count and inspection guarantied, and answered that the custom was for the millmen and shippers to settle according to reports as to count, inspection and freight received by the shippers from the consignee at the point of destination, held answer was insufficient to prove a general custom or a usage so generally recognized as to be binding. Byrd v. Beall [Ala.] 43 So. 749.

72. The seller, for the purpose of showing the meaning of the words "sixty-five cents on the dollar", in a contract of sale of a stock of merchandise to defendant at such price, cannot show a particular custom at the place of sale as to adding freight charges to the cost of merchandise, there being nothing to show that defendant was acquainted with the local custom or that he purchased with reference thereto. Moritz v. Herskovitz [Wash.] 89 P. 560.

73. A written contract for the sale of specified quantities of specified kinds of grapes for specified prices, to be delivered at the winery of the buyer, without limitation as to the amount of the daily deliveries, cannot be contradicted by proof of a custom relating to daily deliveries at the winery. Leonhart v. California Wine Ass'n [Cal. App.] 89 P. 847.

74. The rule pertaining to usages is limited to such usages as are not in opposition to well-settled principles of law and is not unreasonable. Ollenheimer v. Foley [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 688. A usage compelling the shipper of lumber under a contract guarantying count and inspection at destination to settle on the unsworn statement of consignee and orderer held illegal. Byrd v. Beall [Ala.] 43 So. 749.

75. Evidence of contemporaneous agreement of seller's agent to attach printed slip containing new terms held inadmissible. Biggers v. Equitable Mfg. Co., 124 Ga. 1045, 53 S. E. 674. Where a written order for the sales of certain vehicles contained a detailed description of each, parol evidence was not admissible to prove that, at the time the contract was executory, certain agreements were made which were not included in the contract. Buckeye Buggy Co. v. Montana Stables [Wash.] 85 P. 1077. A written contract complete in itself and providing that plain,[77] terms in the instrument, and to render it complete,[78] or to show that the contract was obtained by fraud.[79] Direct oral statements of intention in respect of the subject of a written dispositive[80] contract are admissible only when the language used is equivocal[81] and, even though the terms used be uncertain on their face, they must be shown by extrinsic evidence to be equivocal.[82] Parol evidence is admissible to show that the sale was in fact a mortgage[83] and to deny the execution of the contract set forth.[84] Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the law of the place of performance does not govern the construction of the contract.[85] An agreement not to recognize any conditions or agreements not contained in the original contract may operate as an estoppel.[86] The constructions placed upon particular contracts are stated in the notes.[87]

the sale was made "under inducements herein expressed and no others", may not be varied by parol evidence that at the time of the negotitations it was orally agreed that the seller would not sell a similar line to competing local merchants, and that he would furnish a catalogue for the purpose of facilitating exchange, authorized by the contract. Brennard Mfg. Co. v. Citronelle Mercantile Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 671. Code, § 4617, providing that when the terms of an agreement have been intended in a different sense by the parties to it, that sense is to prevail against either party in which he had reason to suppose the other parties understood it, applies to written agreements only when they are ambiguous, and does not authorize parol evidence that a seller was informed by the buyer, that if the machinery sold did certain specified work it would be satisfactory as affecting the construction of a written agreement that the machinery should be satisfactory to the buyer. Inman Mfg. Co v. American Cereal Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W 287.

76. Parol evidence is admissible to prove anything pertaining to the contract that is not included in or covered by the writings, or to explain any elements of the contract that are left ambiguous and uncertain. United R. & Elec. Co. Co. v. Wehr & Co., 103 Md. 323, 63 A. 475. Held admissible to show whether structural iron was included in sale of scrap iron. Id. In a sale of "Texas red rust-proof oats" held competent to show by parol that the term included only oats raised in the state of Texas. Brackett & Co. v. Americus Grocery Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 762.

77. Townsend v. Southern Product Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 436.

78. United R. & Elec Co. v. Wehr & Co., 103 Md. 323, 63 A. 475. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a paper signed by defendant did not in fact become his contract until plaintiff's salesman attached a slip containing a certain clause as agreed on between them. Barton-Parker Mfg. Co. v. Taylor [Ark.] 94 S. W. 713. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a writing which is, in form, a complete contract, of which there has been a manual tradition, was not to become a binding contract until the performance of some condition precedent resting in parol; but the rule is a narrow one. Gilroy v. Everson-Hickok Co., 103 N. Y. S. 620. Evidence of general conversations had at the time of the execution of a bill of sale, or of the circumstances under which it was executed, was not admissible to show that it was not to take effect as a transfer until certain conditions had been complied with. Id. Such evidence should be confined to what was said respecting any conditions as to its taking effect as an absolute transfer. Id.

79. Elgin Jewelry Co. v. Withoup & Co., 118 Mo. App. 126, 94 S. W. 572.

80. Contract signed by both parties and containing mutual promises held dispositive. Grout v. Moulton [Vt.] 64 A. 453.

81. Grout v. Moulton [Vt.] 64 A. 453.

82. Grout v. Moulton [Vt.] 64 A. 453. So held as to words "satisfactory demonstration" in written contract of sale of an automobile. Id.

83. Gibbons v. Joseph Consol. Min. & Mill. Co. [Colo.] 86 P. 94. See Chattel Mortgages, 7 C. L. 634.

84. Denying the execution of a written contract and setting up an oral one is not attempting to vary the terms of a written contract by parol. American Standard Jewelry Co. v. Goodman [Ga.] 56 S. E. 642. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a contract of sale was not the one executed by the buyer, but that it was so altered so as not to express the agreement between the parties. Price v. Stanbra [Wash.] 88 P. 115.

85. That the agent of the seller resided in New York, and the sale was negotiated and executed in Illinois under the laws of both of which states the construction of the contract was different from that of Iowa in which it was to be performed, does not entitle the seller to introduce parol evidence that its understanding of the contract was according to the laws of New York and Illinois. Inman Mfg. Co. v. American Cereal Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 287.

86. By agreeing in the written contract that "separate and verbal or written agreement with salesmen are not binding upon" the seller and that the sale was "made under inducements and representations herein expressed and no others", the purchaser bars himself from showing that he bought the goods on the oral agreement of the seller's salesman that the purchaser should have the exclusive sale of the goods in his city. Cannon v. Burrell [Mass.] 79 N. E. 780.

87. Under contract for the sale of fanning mills held seller was to do the reselling at the buyer's expense. Owens Co. v. Doughty [N. D.] 110 N. W. 78. Where in a contract for the sale of oil by an oil company it was provided that the contract should be voidable in case "of failure of oil wells", held the contract was voidable on failure of oil wells then sunk and in operation. San Jacinto Oil Co. v. Ft. Worth Light & Power Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 82, 93 S. W. 173. A substantial failure of oil wells, such as to cause a deficiency in supply and render the owner unable to fill his contracts, constitutes a "failure of oil wells" within the meaning of a contract to supply oil which was made voidable on a "failure of oil wells". Id. Where at the time of entering into such contract the seller's wells were "gushers", held a failure of the wells to flow by natural forces constituted a "failure of oil wells" within the meaning of the contract. Id. Where three persons enter into a written contract for the purchase of personal property, each signing his individual name, with a third party, in the absence of an allegation in the pleading or proof to the contrary, they will be deemed to be joint owners. Austin Mfg. Co. v. Hunter, 16 Okl. 86, 86 P. 293. In an action by the buyer for breach of a contract of sale of scrap iron at a certain price per ton "as the scrap lies" a ruling assuming that all the cost of preparation for delivery was to be paid by the buyer held properly refused. United R. & Elec. Co. v. Wehr & Co., 103 Md. 323, 63 A. 475. Where a building and construction contract calls for inspection at a certain place and the contractor in his contract of purchase of such articles expressly provides for inspection at another place, such provision governs though the contract of purchase refers to the building and construction contract. Western Const. Co. v. Romona Oolitic Stone Co. [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 856. Under a contract for the sale of coal from a designated mine, and that if there should be "a shortage of cars" the shipment should be divided in fair proportion with other orders, the term "shortage of cars" means that the car supply at the mine from which the coal is produced is short. Phillips v. Pilling [Pa.] 64 A. 396. The words "upon accepting this option" contained in an option contract for the sale of bonds held to refer not to an acceptance of the paper creating the contract but to defendant's election to purchase a block of bonds referred to in the first clause of the option contract. Martyn v. Hitchings [Mass.] 78 N. E. 380. Where the seller agreed to sell and the buyer to buy a certain quantity of goods at a certain rate, etc., held a printed specification that the purchaser should give to the seller specifications for goods covering shipments not less than ten days before time of shipment, only referred to the amount in excess of the weekly rate. Nicholls v. American Steel & Wire Co., 102 N. Y. S. 227. A sale of property in consideration of the organization of a corporation and the transfer to the seller of one-fourth of the stock thereof held to contemplate that the buyer would contribute something of value in consideration of three-fourths of the stock which should issue to it. Cranor Co. v. Miller [Ala.] 41 So. 673. Where a contract for the sale of certain property provided for payment in cash and for a second deferred payment in cash or by assumption of a chattel mortgage, the option could be exercised by the purchasers assuming the mortgage debt and it was no ground for a rescission that the mortgagee refused to release the seller under the mortgage. Morris v. Persing [Neb.] 107 N. W. 218. A contract whereby the first party agreed to manufacture and sell certain lumber to the second party recited that the price to be paid should be a certain sum per thousand feet, "as fast as loaded on cars at M., for all lumber, dressed or rough, and for all dry-kiln lumber shipped by the second party previous to the erection and operation of a planing mill by the second party. Held that a contention that the provision fixing the price to be paid rendered the contract incomplete, because it only fixed the price for such lumber as might be shipped previous to the erection of the mill, was intenable, as the words "previous to the erection and operation" were limited to the dry-kiln lumber shipped and not to all lumber dressed or rough. Byrne Mill Co. v. Robertson [Ala.] 42 So. 1008. A contract whereby defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff all the furniture manufactured by the former during a certain time, and which plaintiff stipulated to buy at regular factory prices less a certain discount, and further providing: "A schedule of said prices, based on the present list, to be made out, showing the net prices on each article of the entire line, such schedule to remain in force until such time as a new price list shall be issued, at which time a new price schedule is to be made out, the schedule referred to to be attached and made a part of this contract. The list prices to be low enough at all times to enable [plaintiff] to meet competition in the aforesaid territory", held not to guaranty to plaintiff any rate per cent of profit on the sale of the furniture. Heywood Bros. & Wakefield Co. v. Doernbecher Mfg. Co. [Or.] 86 P. 357. Defendant contracted to sell to plaintiff certain first-mortgage bonds of a corporation. At the time set for the delivery of the bonds, a prior mortgage had not been released, although all but a few of the bonds secured thereby had been paid and a fund set apart for payment of the remainder. Held that time was not of the essence of the contract so as to entitle plaintiff to rescind it because of defendant's failure to obtain a release of the first mortgage prior to the time set for the delivery of the bonds. Nes v. Union Trust Co. [Md.] 64 A. 310. A contract by which the seller guaranteed count and inspection of all lumber at destination should be construed merely to mean that the seller guarantied that the lumber, when it reached its destination, should come up to the count and inspection specified in the bills rendered to the buyer, and had no reference to the evidence necessary to prove what the real condition of the lumber was on arrival. Byrd v. Beall [Ala.] 43 So. 749. A contract for the sale and purchase of a large quantity of "New River" coal, be delivered at Chicago, which provided that it should be approved by the shippers, and which was approved and signed by the owners of certain mines in the New River district, bound the seller to furnish coal from such mines, and the purchaser was not bound to accept coal from others in such district, even though it may have been the same or equally good in quallty. Hesser v. Chicago & Welleston Coal Co. [C. C. A.] 151 F. 211.

on the divisibility of the subject,[88] the question being generally one of fact.[89] If several articles are sold for a single and entire consideration without any apportionment of the purchase price as between the several articles, the contract of sale is entire and cannot be severed, except by agreement of the parties,[90] On the other hand, if several articles are sold, and a separate price is agreed upon for each, although a single instrument of conveyance may be executed reciting a single consideration for the whole, yet for sufficient cause shown the contract may be rescinded as to a part and enforced as to the remainder,[91] and, the contract being silent in this regard, it is competent to prove by parol what the agreement was in that respect.[92]

§ 5. Property sold. Amount, kind, nonexistence, and failure of consideration.[93] The kind and quality,[94] the identity, the title, and the quantity [95] of property

88. McKeefry v. U. S. Radiator Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 263. The intention of the parties to the contract is paramount, and, even where the contract according to its language is entire in form, its entirety may be broken by the concurrent acts of both parties. Ward Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Isbell & Co. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 845; Sterling v. Gregory [Cal.] 85 P. 305; Henderson Elevator Co. v. North Georgia Mill. Co., 126 Ga. 279, 55 S. E. 50. A contract for the sale of 20,000 bushels No. 2 white corn, bulk, at 59 1-2 cents per bushel, 10,000 bushels to be shipped in February, and 10,000 bushels in March, is an entire contract. Id. Two orders held to constitute separate contracts. Lestershire Lumber & Box Co. v. Ritter Lumber Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 568. Provision for services held severable from contract of sale. Byrne Mill Co. v. Robertson [Ala.] 42 So. 1008. Sale of bombs, firing canes, and ammunition, and they were shipped in separate boxes, and the firing canes were not up to sample, held the buyer could reject the entire consignment. Keeler v. Paulus Mfg. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 842, 96 S. W. 1097. Where defendant agreed to buy all the oranges grown by plaintiff in a certain grove, in consideration of defendant's having the handling of the oranges grown in another grove, the contract was entire and the agreements not severable. Sterling v. Gregory [Cal.] 85 P. 305. A contract for potatoes in carload lots at an agreed price, per bushel for all that may be loaded during the week, under which the seller has loaded and shipped four carloads, is entire in the sense that either party had the right to a full performance. Peycke v. Shinn [Neb.] 107 N. W. 386. Where by writing a stock of goods was sold and by another instrument the building in which the business was carried on was leased to the buyer for a term of years, held an entire contract. Floyd v. Arky [Miss.] 42 So. 569. Where the defendant ordered one car of sash, with the privilege of three, at 78 per cent. off list, specifications for first car to be furnished within twenty days, and, if others are taken, all to be furnished by April 1st, etc., the order was severable, so that defendant could not escape liability for breach of the contract, growing out of the failure to furnish specifications on the first car within the time specified. Rock Island Sash & Door Works v. Moore & Handley Hardware Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 806. A manufacturer of lumber agreed to sell the output of a mill during a year. The contract provided that the lumber should be delivered to the buyer in his lumberyard, that immediately on the delivery of any lumber title should at once vest in the buyer, that all lumber cut should be graded and measured by the buyer as the same was sawed, that all lumber should be paid for by the buyer according to the schedule of prices every fifteen days, at which time all lumber delivered during the preceding fifteen days should be reported by the buyer's inspector to the buyer and paid for by check, held a severable contract. Strother v. McMullen Lumber Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 34. The several nature of the subject-matter may often assist in determining the intention, but will not overcome the intent to make an entire contract when that is shown, nor will the mode of measuring the price, as by the bushel, ton, or pound, change the effect of the agreement, even in entire contracts from agreeing to partial payments pending the full performance. McKeefry v. U. S. Radiator Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 263. Sale two hundred tons iron "at $21.00 per gross ton, Time of delivery, one car per week, July and August," entire contract. Id. Sale of an entire quantity of goods to be shipped in instalments is an entire contract. Moran v. Wagner, 28 App. D. C. 317.

89. Ward Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Isbell & Co. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 845.

90. Buckeye Buggy Co. v. Montana Stables [Wash.] 85 P. 1077.

91. Buckeye Buggy Co. v. Montana Stables [Wash.] 85 P. 1077. Where a written contract for the sale of two articles stated a single sum as the price of both, it was, nevertheless, competent to show by parol that a separate price was agreed upon for each of the articles so that the contract was severable. Id. A contract having several distinct items and founded upon a consideration apportioned to each is severable. Pratt & Co. v. Metzger [Ark.] 95 S. W. 451. Where hats in a shipment were separate in pattern and the price of one was in no way dependent upon the price of the other, held the contract was severable. Schiller v. Blythe & Fargo Co. [Wyo.] 88 P. 648.

92. Buckeye Buggy Co. v. Montana Stables [Wash.] 85 P. 1077.

93. See 6 C. L. 1331.

94. See 6 C. L. 1332. It would seem that the word "merchantable" in a sale of hay means hay salable in the market because of its fitness to feed stock. Eaton v. Blackburn [Or.] 88 P. 303. Contract for "No. 1 ground Angostura tonka beans," "the best article purchased depends upon the terms of the contract. The obvious intention of a contract for the sale of a business, coupled with an agreement by the seller not to engage in the business in the same town so long as the buyer continues in business, is to sell the good will of the business.[96] In the absence of fraud an agreement to sell certain goods of an estimated quantity is not one for the sale of a definite quantity but of the goods designated regardless of departures from estimates.[97] In the absence of an estoppel[98] the contract by merely providing for determining the and perfectly pure," requires the delivery of pure unadulterated ground tonka beans. Neal v. Taylor [Va.] 56 S. E. 590. That the buyer purchased a new machine but by fraud or mistake an old machine was delivered is a complete defense to an action for the purchase price. International Harvester Co. v. Smith, 105 Va. 683, 54 S. E. 859.

95. See 6 C. L. 1332. Finding of trial court, on conflicting evidence, of amount of brush sold under a parol contract, held sustained by the evidence. Anthes v. Erickson [Wash.] 86 P. 668. Sale of all the cattle bearing certain brands held to pass title to the cattle and the brands. Barber v. Harper [N. M.] 86 P. 546. Contract right to have certain property installed held to pass under sale of "all property, rights, and assets." Hogan v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 14 Det. Leg. N. 87, 111 N. W. 765. Where timber, sawmill and machinery were sold, held the term "sawmill" was limited to a machine constructed for the purpose of sawing logs and therefore did not include the shed covering the mill. Alexander v. Beekman Lumber Co. [Ark.] 95 S. W. 449. Clause that the buyers understood that the seller would be able to ship from forty to fifty cars per month in accordance with shipping directions held imposed in favor of the seller to safeguard it against excessive orders at any one time and did not impose on the buyer the obligation to order that amount monthly. Salmon v. Helena Box Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 408. Bill of sale given by lessee of a livery stable to the lessor, reciting that the former sells to the latter all his right, title, and interest in and to "the following described personal property," then after the words "to wit" enumerating the property sold, after which are the words "and all and every kind of property of every name and nature now used in conducting the dray and livery business," transfers only the personalty used in the business and not the lease. Johnson v. Levy [Cal. App.] 86 P. 810. Where plaintiff wrote that he had a lot of timber which might take him the rest of the year and the next, in a small way, to have made up in ties and get out, and ask defendant if it would take at a certain price all he could get out, not exceeding six thousand ties, and defendant answered that it would take all ties delivered within the next twelve months, and plaintiff assented by proceeding to deliver, there was a mutual contract to deliver and receive as many of the ties as plaintiff could get out by ordinary care and diligence in the time fixed. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Coyle [Ky.] 99 S. W. 237. A contract for the sale and delivery by a lumber company of its entire cut of lumber for a specified year, except what it shall require for its retail trade at its mill, and which further provides that it is agreed that the cut for the year shall not be less than 2,000,000 feet, cannot be construed to require the delivery of 2,000,000 feet. Demorest v. Dunton Lumber Co., 151 F. 508. Where seller agreed to make the purchaser its sole customer on condition that the latter take certain quantities of the product and if it did not do so the seller could sell to others. The contract also provided for payment for amounts "taken" by the purchaser, held that the contract did not bind the purchaser to accept or take the product in the amounts specified. Amalgamated Gum Co. v. Casein Co., 146 F. 900. Plaintiff was a jobber in steel and defendant gave him a written order to ship from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five tons of soft steel at $1.50 base, half extras f. o. b. mill for deliveries to July 1, 1906. Above the order was written the words "Our requirements approximately," held defendant was bound to take at least one hundred tons of steel. Taylor Co. v. Niagara Bedstead Co., 102 N. Y. S. 173. In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, either express or implied, the sale of the output of an oil well will be taken to mean the total output, and the seller cannot divert a certain proportion of the output for the remuneration of the furnisher of air pressure for bringing up the oil, it not appearing that such air pressure could not have been secured by means of money. Crusel v. Tierce [La.] 42 So. 940. Sale of "all my right, title, and interest in and to the goods, wares, and merchandise in my storeroom," etc., excepting certain articles specified, coupled with an agreement that the seller should not enter into or engage in the business or occupation of second-hand dealer in the same town so long as the buyer should continue in business, indicates upon its face the sale of a business. Shafer v. Sloan [Cal. App.] 85 P. 162.

96. Shafer v. Sloan [Cal. App.] 85 P. 162.

97. Sale of lumber on hand at mill and loading station; also "entire cut" of lumber during year 1903. Inman Bros. v. Dudley & Daniels Lumber Co. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 449. Where a sale is made of certain goods identified by reference to independent circumstances and the quantity is named with the qualification "about" or words of like import, the naming of the quantity is not deemed binding on either party, but the sale is of the specific amount. Sale of "season's output of linters * * * estimated at two hundred to two hundred and fifty bales" held a sale of the output regardless of the number of bales. Loeb v. Winnsboro Cotton Oil Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 913, 93 S. W. 515.

98. Where quantity was overestimated, held mere overpayment by the seller to his insolvent vendor did not bar the buyer's right to a correction, he not having knowledge of the original vendor's insolvency, possible loss to his seller, and not being negligent in making the count or in dis-quantity sold by counting or measuring at the place of delivery does not bar either party of the right to a correction on discovery of a mistake.[99] Hidden property of which neither the buyer nor the seller had knowledge does not pass.[1]

Failure of consideration [2] is a defense and partial failure of consideration is a defense pro tanto.[3] An agreement by the buyer not to plead failure of consideration until certain reasonable conditions are complied with is binding on the promisor.[4]

§ 6. Transition of title.[5]—The transition of title in order to determine the locus of a crime, as in the sale of inhibited articles, is largely treated elsewhere.[6]

Meaning and effect of contract.[7]—The time when title passes depends upon the intention of the parties,[8] and this intention is a question of fact for the jury.[9] An executed contract for the sale of a chattel vests the title at once, but an executory contract always leaves something to be done before the title to the property will vest in the purchaser.[10] Whether the contract is executed or executory is to be gathered from its terms and purposes, the nature, condition, and situation of the property, and the circumstances surrounding the parties.[11] Conditions precedent

1. Where at the time of the sale of a table neither the seller nor the buyer knew or had reason to believe that there was money or other thing of value therein, a pocketbook and contents hidden in the drawer thereof did not pass. Evans v. Barnett [Del.] 63 A. 770.

2. Where seller was to furnish advertising matter on buyer's request, held in the absence of such a request failure to send such advertising matter did not constitute a failure of consideration though the seller had voluntarily sent some booklets. Make-Man Tablet Co. v. Chapman, 119 Mo. App. 427, 95 S. W. 282.

3. There is a partial failure of consideration constituting a defense pro tanto where one purchases an interest in a business on the faith of an inventory which is incorrect, the resources being overstated and the liabilities underestimated. Steckbauer v. Leykom [Wis.] 110 N. W. 217. Where one purchased for $4,000 a quarter interest in a firm in reliance on the inventory, which showed resources of $18,500, his damages by reason of the overstatement of the resources to the amount of $1,050 is not one-quarter of $1,050 but one-quarter of thirty-two thirty-sevenths of the whole as the proportional loss due to such overstatement, but as to understated liabilities one-quarter thereof should be allowed. 8. Rea v. Schow & Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 931, 93 S. W. 706. The intention of the parties governs, and the mere fact that something remains to be done will not govern such intention. Massey Bros. v. Dixon Bros. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 383. Under an agreement between plaintiff and defendants, by which plaintiff was to buy cotton and turn it over to defendants to gin, after which defendants would buy the cotton from plaintiff, defendants, prior to the ginning and bailing of the cotton, acquired no title. O'Neal v. Richardson [Ark.] 92 S. W. 1117. Where plaintiff agreed to buy cotton for defendants, to be ginned, reserving a lien thereon and on the fund derived from the sale thereof for his advancements, the title to the cotton was in defendants, and a sale thereof to a bona fide purchaser for value passed title freed from plaintiff's lien. Id. Where goods are shipped subject to inspection and a draft with bill of lading attached was paid before the goods arrived, testimony of seller's bookkeeper that seller had made various shipments to the buyer, and sometimes would bill a car load for the actual amount, and at other times would draw and hold the goods in his warehouse, and that the purchaser always paid the drafts so drawn, held admissible as tending to show the intention of the parties as to the transfer of the title. Giffen v. Selvia Fruit Co. [Cal. App.] 89 P. 855. Where an instrument to secure an indebtedness provided that the title to certain described horses should be and remain in the creditors until the note should be paid in full, and on this was indorsed a transfer in the following terms: "For value received we hereby sell, assign and transfer the following terms to A. H. J., together with all our rights, titles, liens and interests thereto and therein, the within instrument, together with note attached thereto, without recourse," this operated to pass the legal title to the horses, and not merely the title and interest which the creditors had in the instrument. Joiner v. Stallings [Ga.] 56 S. E. 304.

9. Sale of hay to be balled by purchaser. Wheelock v. Starkweather [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 682, 108 N. W. 1085. Where it is not clear from a written contract as to whether the parties intended a present or future sale, the question is for the jury. Massey Bros. v. Dixon Bros. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 383.

10. No sale is complete so as to vest the buyer with an immediate right of property so long as anything remains to be done between the parties in relation to the goods. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Kittrell [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 103, 95 S. W. 703.

11. A memorandum reciting that plaintiff "had bought of" defendants seven hundred and fifty tons of salt held an executory con-imposed by the contract must be performed before title passes.[12] Title does not pass where property is sold subject to trial.[13] Where goods are sold upon a condition precedent, an election to treat the condition as fulfilled operates to pass title.[14] Where goods are sold by sample, title does not pass until they have been received and accepted, even though payment has been made previous thereto.[15] Where there is a sale upon trial with a time fixed by the parties, a failure to return the goods or give notice in accordance with the agreement makes the sale absolute.[16] That a sale by the true owner operates as a breach of contract does not affect the buyer's title.[17]

Separation and designation of goods.[18]—In the absence of evidence showing an intent to the contrary, title does not pass where there is no selection or identification out of a common mass,[19] though in a sale of a part of an entire mass of goods, tract in view of the circumstances surrounding it. Mebius & Drescher Co. v. Mills [Cal.] 88 P. 917. Where defendants wrote that they had booked plaintiff's order for a car load of corn, the corn to be loaded and sent to destination as promptly as railroad facilities would permit, the contract was an executory one. Atkins Bros. Co. v. Southern Grain Co., 119 Mo. App. 119, 95 S. W. 949. Correspondence held to show an absolute sale by plaintiff to defendant of all the property described on certain pages of a stock book referred to in the correspondence. Bierce v. Davies, 116 La. 1059, 41 So. 314. A sale of a specific lot of rice, at a fixed price, payable within ten days, to be shipped on order of buyer, is not a promise of sale but a completed sale by which the ownership passes to the buyer. Bloom's Son Co. v. Union Rice Mill. Co. [La.] 42 So. 947. On an issue whether title to hay passed when it was baled by the purchaser on the seller's farm, a stipulation that the seller should draw it to cars did not alone show that the contract was executory at the time of baling. Wheelock v. Starkweather [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 682, 108 N. W. 1085. A seller proposed to sell three hundred round pine pilings, ten inches at small end and forty feet long, at $4 each, f. o. b. cars, to be paid for as delivered. The buyer accepted the proposition, and stated that the pilings should be ten inches in diameter at small end and be practically straight, held an executory contract of sale. Elliott v. Harrison [Ala.] 40 So. 1018. A contract for the sale of a stock of millinery goods, under which nothing remained to be done to determine the quality, quantity, or value of the goods, and all that remained to be done was to check up the invoice furnished by the seller to ascertain what deduction should be made on account of goods sold out of the stock subsequent to the time the invoice was furnished, held an executed contract. Thomas v. Thomas [Ala.] 41 So. 141. A contract for the sale of timber bound the seller to let the buyer have all the timber controlled by the seller, and bound the seller to haul and load the same on board of cars within fifty miles of a designated town for a specified sum per one thousand feet, and bound the buyer to furnish a specified sum to the seller in advance. Held that the contract was a present sale of timber, with an agreement for future services concerning the same, and whenever logs were cut within fifty miles of the designated town by the seller they became the property of the buyer. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Wynne Hoop & Cooperage Co. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 375. Although the full consideration named in a contract of sale in restraint of trade has been paid, the contract does not thereby become an executed contract in the absence of an actual taking possession by the purchaser. Fisher v. Flickinger Wheel Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 533. A contract for the sale of twenty-two cattle of a specified aggregate weight and at a named price per pound, payment not to be made for some months, during which time the cattle were to be fed by the buyer and then resold to the seller at an increased price per pound, is an absolute sale and title passes. Gills v. George, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 393.

12. Payment of part of the price and execution of notes for the balance. Norris v. St. Joseph, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 159. Where one was given a half interest in the horses he could gather of a certain brand, held title did not pass until horses were gathered in by him. State v. Cotterel [Idaho] 86 P. 527. 17. Though one cut wood and put it on the railroad under a contract with a corporation, the contract being such that the wood did not become the property of the corporation until delivered at another place, a sale by the owner before shipment passed title to the purchaser. Smiley v. Hooper [Ala.] 41 So. 660.

18. See 6 C. L. 1334.

19. The goods sold must be ascertained, designated, and separated from the stock or quantity with which they are mixed before the property can pass. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Kittrell [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 103, 95 S. W. 703. Where by an entire contract a buggy and harness was sold, the seller to purchase a harness for the buyer, held until the designation of the harness

if the purchaser is allowed to take possession of the whole for the purpose of enabling him to separate the part sold, the title to that part passes to the purchaser.[20] If by the contract anything remains to be done by the seller, such as weighing for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the property or the amount of the purchase price to be paid, title does not pass.[21] A contract for the sale of specific specified chattels to be afterwards acquired transfers the beneficial interest in such chattels to the buyer as soon as they are acquired by the seller.[22]

Payment.[23]—Unless the sale is either expressly or presumptively for cash [24] or there are provisions to the contrary,[25] it is not necessary to the passage of title that the purchase price be paid [26] or even ascertained.[27] One may waive nonpayment as a condition precedent,[28] the question of waiver being one of fact,[29] but, in the absence of an intent so to do, delivery of possession does not act as such a waiver.[30] Where a sale is made on condition that a cash payment shall be made and a draft given for the cash payment is dishonored, the title does not pass.[31]

Delivery and acceptance.[32]—While delivery is often important as bearing on the question of intent, unless made a condition precedent to the contract, actual delivery is not essential to the passage of title [33] and symbolical delivery certainly suffices; [34] but it has been held that, delivery being a necessary incident of a sale, title to the property did not pass. Id. Where a contract to furnish water to irrigate rice fields provided that plaintiff should be entitled in return for water so furnished to one-fifth of the rice grown on the land after the same was threshed and sacked, plaintiff had no title to any portion of the rice until it was threshed and sacked, and plaintiff's portion designated and set apart to it. Where a sale is for cash, a delivery without payment through mistake does not pass title. Southern Pine Co. v. Savannah Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 141 F. 802. If the property be sold upon the express condition that it is to be paid for on delivery, and it is delivered upon the faith that the condition will be immediately performed, and performance is refused upon demand in a reasonable time, no title passes to the buyer. proof of a sale of personal property is evidence of the delivery thereof.[35] Title passes on delivery to the buyer, the seller having nothing more to do.[36] In the absence of any stipulation or agreement as to the place of delivery [37] or of conditions showing a contrary intent,[38] delivery to a common carrier for transportation to the buyer presumptively passes title to the latter,[39] and this is true though the bill of lading is not forwarded to the buyer, the goods being consigned directly to the latter.[40] The rule, however, is based upon the authority the carrier has or is deemed to have from the buyer,[41] and hence it is well settled that, in the absence of an agreement to the effect that the carrier shall and does have power to accept the goods as to quality, the right of inspection rests in the purchaser who may exercise such right when the goods reach their destination, and may accept or reject the goods according to their compliance as to quality with the conditions of the purchase.[42] A delivery through carriers and warehousemen to a drayman, to whom the one who ordered the goods has by written order directed the warehousemen to deliver all his freight, is a delivery to the purchaser though the latter never in fact receives the goods.[43] Where failure of carrier to deliver is caused by seller's not sending the package to the buyer's usual shipping point, held the seller could not recover on the theory that the carrier was the buyer's agent.[44] A bill of lading does not have the effect of passing the title where the evidence clearly shows a contrary intent.[45] Where goods are shipped with draft attached to the bill of lading, a presumption arises that the intention was that title should be retained in the seller after delivery to the carrier.[46] The purchase of a draft with bill of lading attached is not a purchase of the goods represented by the bill of lading.[47]

37. Where goods were bought f. o. b. at a certain place, the carrier became the seller's agent and there was no sale until delivery at the point of destination. Alabama Nat. Bk. v. Parker & Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 987. Where the seller himself undertakes to make delivery at a distant place and selects his own carrier, the carrier is not the buyer's agent but the agent of the seller, and delivery of the goods to the carrier is not delivery to the buyer (Tanssig v. Southern Mill & Land Co. [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 602), and this rule is not altered by a stipulation in the contract that the buyer should pay the freight and deduct it from the price of the goods (Id.). Hence, where defendant contracted to sell plaintiff lumber f. o. b. cars at S. under terms of two per cent. discount for cash, if remitted within ten days from the date of the invoice, plaintiff did not become liable for a shipment until delivery at S., and was entitled to a discount on payment within ten days of such delivery. order that it be admissible as evidence of a sale.[49] An invoice is not evidence of a sale; it is a mere detailed statement of the nature, quantity, and cost or price of the things invoiced, and is as appropriate to a bailment as to a sale.[50] A claimant in bankruptcy proceedings has the burden of showing that contract was not one of sale.[51]

Revesting of title.[52]—A breach does not operate to revest him with title to property delivered.[53] A sale being procured by fraud, the seller may on discovering the fraud avoid the sale and revest title in himself.[54]

Ad interim damages.—Though the prospective buyer has possession if the seller retains title he must suffer any loss or damage from any cause not resulting from the prospective buyer's negligence.[55]

Where goods are sold by an entire contract and are lost in transit, the seller cannot recover therefor without showing a shipment of all articles sold. Sutherland Medicine Co. v. Baltimore [Ark.] 98 S. W. 966. Sale of five thousand cases of sweet corn. Contract read: "In case of short crop, owing to circumstances beyond the control of the packer, seventy per cent. delivery to be guaranteed buyer, and ten per cent. of purchase price to be paid buyer by seller for any quantity delivered short of the seventy per cent. guaranteed by this contract." Held that it was not the intention of the parties that the sellers should be relieved of the obligation of their guaranty to deliver seventy per cent. by any other circumstances than that of a short crop, and in that event the intention disclosed by the contract is that the sellers were to deliver such part of the seventy per cent. as the condition of the crop would enable them to provide and to pay ten per cent. of the purchase price of the balance. Where seller agreed to deliver elevator fronts "with all diligence" and to have the fronts ready to put in "when the stains are put in," he was not obligated to deliver the fronts at an earlier date than when the stairs were ready to put in, if by the exer-

fied,[61] or delivery being required "promptly,"[62] a reasonable time is implied. What is a reasonable time is a question for the jury,[63] and in determining this question it may consider the declarations of the parties, whether oral or written and whether previous to the contract or not, and the conduct of the parties subsequent to the contract.[64] When no other place is specified in a contract for a tender, the law will presume that the tender should be made at the place of the contract [65] or where the goods are located when sold,[66] but an unconditional refusal to accept the tender at any place waives the necessity for a technical tender at the place of the contract.[67] Where a tender other than money is made, the tenderer must, if possible, keep the property in condition to make the tender good while an action for rescission is pending.[68] If, after making the tender, he exercises acts of ownership over the property tendered inconsistent with the theory that he is holding the property for delivery to the party to whom it was tendered, such conduct amounts to a withdrawal of the tender.[69] Where goods are to be shipped within a stated time on the buyer's orders, it is the buyer's duty to seasonably order the shipments so that the seller can secure the cars, prepare them for use, load them, and deliver them at the place of delivery within the contract time.[70] A seller of articles to be delivered daily as ordered is not bound to deliver on Sundays.[71] Payment and delivery being concurrent acts, the mere transportation of the property to the place of delivery at the time designated is not sufficient to constitute a delivery without the presence of the seller or his agent to make delivery and receive the purchase price.[72] Unless supplemented by language giving them a broader scope, the words "more or less" apply only to such accidental or immaterial variations in quantity as would naturally occur in connection with the transaction.[73] It would seem that the sufficiency of cumulative deliveries must be determined by regarding each delivery separately.[74]

cise of all diligence he could do so, but the agreement as to all diligence was limited by the other stipulation. Powell v. Champion Iron Co., 144 Mich. 540, 13 Det. Leg. N. 273, 108 N. W. 359. Where an order for pins and needles recited from forty to ninety days to get them from the factory and the buyer knew his advertisement had to be printed on the paper before the pins could be arranged thereon, he is not entitled to defend an action for the price on the ground that the goods were to be shipped at once and were not. Where the seller agrees to deliver within a specified time if cars can be had, the goods to be delivered as buyer orders, the seller is entitled to have an opportunity seasonably to try to secure cars, and it is the duty of the buyer, by giving orders for delivery seasonably, to afford the seller a reasonable opportunity to perform or to endeavor to perform his contract. 74. Where a contract provided for the

To justify a recovery upon a contract as substantially performed, the omission must be the result of mistake or inadvertance and not intentional.[75] In the absence of fraud or of provisions to the contrary, the determination of inspectors, appointed and acting under the terms of the contract, as to the quantity and quality delivered, is conclusive.[76] In the absence of provisions to the contrary, the seller performs his part of the contract by making delivery at the designated point.[77] In the absence of any stipulation or agreement as to the place of delivery, delivery to a common carrier for transportation to the buyer is delivery to the latter,[78] and it follows that under an option to purchase or return a delivery to a responsible public carrier constitutes a delivery to the offeror.[79] The phrase "f. o. b. cars" when used in a contract between a buyer and seller of commercial commodities, where the use of a common carrier is necessary, means that the seller will secure the cars, load them, and do whatever may be required to accomplish the shipment and consignment of the goods to the buyer free of expense to him.[80] Where goods are sold free on board and the carrier refuses to ship them unless freight is paid in advance, whereupon the seller pays it, he is entitled to recover the amount so paid from the buyer.[81]

(§ 7) B. Sufficiency of delivery; actual, symbolical.[82]—Delivery imports the passage of control over the property.[83]

(§ 7) C. Acceptance; necessity; time; what is.[84]—An acceptance to be good must be such as to conclude the agreement or contract between the parties, i. e., an acceptance to bind the parties must be unconditional and unqualified and intended as such where it modifies the terms of the original agreement.[85] The buyer has the right to inspect the goods before acceptance,[86] and this right must be exercised daily delivery of tin cans to a canning factory as ordered, and the seller knew that an excessive delivery on one day was nevertheless all used on that day, he was not excused by such excessive delivery from a failure to deliver the proper amount on the succeeding day. Where the property is to be delivered by the seller "f. o. b. transportation companies, either at the distributing point or at the factory point," a delivery by the seller at the factory point absolves him for liability for delay of the carrier in delivering the goods to the buyer. Templeton v. Equitable Mfg. Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 188. Where the contract provided that the goods should be billed to a certain railroad shipping point, the seller performed his whole duty when he shipped the goods to the buyer to that point and notified him of their arrival, after which the seller was entitled to leave the goods at the place of delivery as the property of the buyer and sue him for the price. within a reasonable time.[87] Failing to so do an acceptance will be presumed.[88] It follows that loss suffered by reason of the buyer's failure to have the goods unloaded and cared for within a reasonable time after their arrival must be borne by him.[89] The question of acceptance is generally for the jury,[90] and in determining such question it may look to the circumstances of the case.[91] The necessity for acceptance largely depends upon the terms of the contract,[92] and, the goods tendered not conforming to the contract, the buyer need not accept them,[93] but if the buyer has accepted a portion of a quantity of goods contracted for and they prove inferior to those stipulated for, he cannot for this reason refuse to accept the residue, but if this residue prove inferior he may refuse to accept it.[94] Where a seller is required by an entire contract to make successive deliveries of the articles sold and the first deliveries fail to comply with the terms of the agreement either in the quality or quantity of the goods or in the times or places of delivery, the vendee by prompt notice of his refusal to further perform upon the discovery of the failure may relieve himself from liability for subsequent deliveries.[95] This, however, is not his

Columbus Wagon Co. [Del.] 66 A. 366. Where plaintiff contracted to sell defendant lumber of certain grades and age, the specifications were not mere warranties but conditions precedent, which gave the purchaser the right, if the lumber was not according to contract, to reject the same or to accept and bring a cross action, or to use the breach by way of recoupment in an action by the seller for the price. only remedy. He has the option, upon the discovery of the seller's default, to refuse to receive and pay for future deliveries and thus to terminate the contract or to permit its performance to proceed and to rely upon his damages for the vendor's breach.[96] But he may not delay the exercise of this choice. Delay, vacillation, silence, or the absence of an immediate notice that he will not further perform, is an election by the vendee that the performance of the contract shall proceed and that he will rely upon his claim against the vendor for damages for the breach and upon that claim alone for his remedy.[97] The contract being severable and part of the goods conforming to the contract and part not, the buyer must accept those goods which are up to the contract.[98] A buyer may not reject a delivery of goods conformable to the contract when made in time merely because there has been a prior offer of goods not receivable and rejected upon that ground.[99] Where goods are not according to the contract and the latter provides that defective goods will be replaced, the buyer is merely bound to notify the seller that the goods will not be accepted.[1]

(§ 7) D. Excuses for and waiver of breach.[2]—A party must fulfill all conditions precedent.[3] Nothing short of a breach of contract or actual insolvency of the buyer will excuse the seller from fulfilling the contract on his part.[4] A distinct, unequivocal, and absolute refusal by one of the parties to perform constitutes a breach of contract excusing performance by the other party.[5] Failure to pay for goods shipped under a former contract is no defense for failure to ship goods required by a later contract.[6] Where a seller has agreed to deliver the goods in instalments and the buyer has agreed to pay the price in instalments, which were proportioned payable on delivery of each instalment, default by either party with reference to any one instalment will not ordinarily entitle the other to abrogate the contract.[7] Time of delivery being of the essence, failure to deliver within the contract time authorizes the buyer to repudiate the contract.[8] As to whether a "strike clause" constitutes an excuse depends upon the wording thereof and the facts of the case.[9] A seller,

9. Under a strike clause one is not liable for failure to deliver on days when his employes refuse to work. Californian Canneries Co. v. Pacific Sheet Metal Works, 144 F. 886. Where a contract for the sale of coal provided that deliveries should be subject to strikes "which might delay or prevent shipment," the seller was not excused from performance because of a strike at the mine or a buyer rejecting without cause a part of the goods delivered under the contract, may declare the same at an end and is not required to proceed further.[10] Where goods are bought and sold, the original buyer may terminate the contract with his buyer for breach by the latter without any act on the part of the original seller.[11] A breach of the contract may be waived,[12] the question being one of intent depending upon the facts of the case.[13] Acquiescence in breach bars recovery therefor.[14] The mere acceptance of a purchased article after the agreed time of delivery does not constitute a waiver of damages for failure to deliver in time, unless such acceptance is accompanied by other circumstances which manifest an intention on the part of the buyer to waive such damages.[15]

§ 8. Warranties and conditions. A. In general. Nature and distinctions. Descriptions and representations.[16]—A warranty is an agreement collateral to the contract [17] and must be supported by a consideration,[18] though it has been held that on the sale of personal property a warranty of its quality is not a separate and independent contract but is one of the terms of the contract of sale.[19] No particular words are necessary to create a warranty.[20] Every affirmation made by the seller, as a fact, at the time of a sale, and as an inducement to the sale, if relied upon by the buyer, amounts to a warranty.[21] The point of distinction being as to whether the representations during the treaty of sale are direct and positive affirmations of a question of fact, or whether they are the mere expressions of opinion, it which did not prevent or delay shipments of coal, but merely increased the cost of production and the cost to the seller, and its refusal to make deliveries for that reason was a breach of the contract. Cottrell & Son v. Smokeless Fuel Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 594.

There is no waiver of plaintiff's right to damages for defendant's wrongful rejection of a car of corn bought by it from the fact that plaintiff's agent, sent to resell the corn when it was rejected, resold it to defendant, its offer being the best made. Arkansas & Texas Grain Co. v. Young & Fresch Grain Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 142. One who sells a car of corn does not waive his right to damages for wrongful rejection by his giving the purchaser, after the arrival of the car, the right to inspect the corn, he having refused to accept unless this was granted. Where no objection was made by the purchaser of cattle to passing on the quality of the cattle offered because the entire number was not delivered at the time, he cannot claim that the seller did not comply with his contract because he did not offer for inspection the entire number of cattle he agreed to deliver. William Hanley Co. v. Combs [Or.] 87 P. 143. A contract bound defendant to furnish a specific kind of lumber within a reasonable time. Defendant failed to do so and wrote to plaintiff excusing his failure and advising plaintiff to look elsewhere for the lumber. Plaintiff replied by stating that he had been depending on defendant and would ask him to use every exertion possible to furnish the lumber at an early date. Held that plaintiff waived the breach. 21. Ellison v. Simmons [Del.] 65 A. 591. So held as to affirmation that horse was sound and all right. Id. A statement of a salesman of a seller of automobiles that the tires of the machine were as good as new held merely an expression of their condition and not a statement of a present existing fact necesary to constitute a warranty. Warren v. Walter Automobile Co., 50 Misc. 605, 99 N. Y. S. 396. There must be a positive affirmation, not made as a matter of belief or opinion, for the purpose of assuring the buyer of the truth of the fact affirmed and inducing him to make the purchase, and which is so received and relied upon by the purchaser. Forster, Waterbury Co. v. Peer, 120 Ill. App. 199.

is always, after all, a matter of contract between the parties, and the decisive question is the real intention as to whether the affirmation of fact was made for the purpose of inducing the purchase in the one instance and whether it was relied upon by the purrhaser in the other.[22] There is a conflict as to whether words of description constitute a warranty; the true rule would appear to be that the intention of the parties governs.[23] Where a written order excluding warranties is given and canceled and the sale then made orally, oral warranties made at such time are valid and binding.[24] An agreement to replace or repair is not a warranty.[25] Except where the existence of the warranty depends upon the terms of the contract,[26] the question is one for the jury.[27]

(§ 8) B. Express and implied warranties and fulfillment or breach thereof.[28] In the absence of express or implied warranties, the rule of caveat emptor applies.[29] In the absence of fraud or mistake, parol evidence is inadmissible to add a warranty to a complete written contract of sale,[30] or to add to an unambiguous writing facts which may aid the implication of a warranty.[31] And while a written contract supersedes prior oral negotiations,[32] still an oral warranty being made the fact that the buyer receives and retains from the seller a writing containing a different warranty does not show his assent thereto but the terms of the original warranty may be shown by parol.[33] A warranty is express where the seller makes some positive representations or affirmation with respect to an article to be sold pending the treaty of sale, upon which it is intended that the buyer shall rely in making his purchase.[34]

22. Childs v. Emerson, 117 Mo. App. 671, 93 S. W. 286. Where seller's agent stated that buyer could not be compelled to take goods ordered from others as the orders had not been legally approved, held mere matter of opinion. Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Horstad [S. D.] 109 N. W. 509. Where seller told purchaser's agent he did not know market value of property but relied on agent's statement of same, held agent's statement of market price was a statement of fact and not merely an expression of opinion. American Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Dent [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 814. Where a quantity of oil was sold and the seller agreed not to make any more contracts until this one was fulfilled, held a representation by the seller as to the amount of oil at the time of executing the contract was binding on the seller and, though not true, he was obliged to account for so much oil. Crusel v. Tierce [La.] 42 So. 940. A statement by the seller of fruit trees after having explained to the buyer that they had not been very well taken care of and were of the cheapest grade, that they were good trees if taken care of, amounted merely to an expression of an opinion and did not constitute a warranty of merchantableness. Brackett v. Martens [Cal. App.] 87 P. 410.

23. While words of description may amount to a warranty, before they should be so held, it must be made to appear clearly that they were so intended by the parties. Central Mercantile Co. v. North Georgia Milling Co., 126 Ga. 279, 55 S. E. 50. Mere words of description in an executory contract of sale do not amount to a warranty. Staiger v. Soht, 102 N. Y. S. 342. 34. Childs v. Emerson, 117 Mo. App. 671, 93 S. W. 286, quoting from Biddle on War-

An indorsement on a bill of sale by the buyer in reselling chattels guarantying their delivery is not a warranty of title.[35] A warranty by a duly authorized agent is binding on the principal,[36] but the warranty being so made, the buyer to enforce it must prove either that the agent had express authority to make it, or that such sales are usually attended with such a warranty.[37] In many states the rule is stated generally that an express warranty excludes implied warranties,[38] in others the rule is limited to implied warranties as to the same obligation,[39] and in others the rule is held to exclude all implied warranties except those of title.[40] An agreement to replace or repair is not a warranty [41] and does not prevent reliance by the buyer upon oral warranties and representations as to quality or particular description.[42] Warranties are sometimes implied by statute regardless of the fact that the contract provides for more.[43] Where several persons join in purchasing an article, it would seem as though there could be no warranty unless made to all,[44] and proof that an oral warranty was made to one of several buyers raises no presumption that it was made to the others.[45]

Except where implied warranties are prohibited by statute or the terms of the sale,[46] a manufacturer impliedly warrants that the article sold is merchantable,[47] free from latent defects arising from the manner in which the article was manufactured, and not discoverable upon ordinary examination,[48] and if ordered for a special purpose, that it is reasonably fit for such purpose,[49] unless the article is known, described, or defined,[50] though in this latter case there is an implied warranty that the article delivered or furnished complies with the description.[51] Within the rules just stated, a quarryman would seem to be a manufacturer.[52] There is a conflict as to whether or not there is an implied warranty of quality by a seller who is not the manufacturer.[53] In order to recover on an implied warranty one must have been justified in relying thereon.[54] An implied warranty does not arise merely because the seller or manufacturer is personally wiser, more learned, or more experienced, than the purchaser. It is entirely impersonal.[55] It assumes in the case of a manufactured article coming within the rule of implied warranty that the manufacturer has made it and sold it to do the work for which it was intended, in legal effect contracting that it will do such work.[56] This excludes all known experimental devices, all additions or annexations to another machine not manufactured or delivered by the seller, where the capacity to do the work intended must be the joint product of the new device and the old machine.[57] The buyer having equal knowledge with the seller who is not the manufacturer, no implied warranty of fitness arises.[58] One manufacturing special machinery under a warranty is in duty bound to avail himself of any and all knowledge he can reasonably obtain of the character of the buildings and the place where the machine is to be located and the purposes for which it is to be used, and to perform the work in accordance with such condition.[59] In a sale by sample there is a warranty that the goods will conform to the sample,[60] but not that they will be suitable for the buyer's use.[61] The exhibition of a sample to the purchaser at the time of the sale does not make a sale by sample, in the absence of a showing that the parties contracted solely with reference to the sample, or that they mutually understood that the bulk of the commodity should correspond with it.[62] Where the quality of the article is represented by description and specimen, the sale is not one by sample.[63] Where goods of a certain brand and quality are sold and the buyer afterwards orders another shipment of the same brand and quality, which order is accepted and the goods shipped thereon, the seller warrants the last shipment to be of equal quality with the first.[64] In the sale of a by-product it would seem that there is no implied warranty that the quality will continue to be the same as at the time of the sale.[65] A warranty of title and against incumbrances is implied.[66] No warranty of soundness or wholesomeness arises from a sale of food provisions to a dealer or middleman, who buys not for consumption but for sale to others,[67] and a purchase from the dealer cannot hold the original seller to a higher degree of duty than that cast upon him by the common law with respect to his own vendee,[68] but the rule is otherwise in a sale of articles of food for immediate use.[69] A retailer of illuminating oil must be held to contemplate that it will be used in the ordinary and usual lamps in the households of purchasers, and where the oil sold is not of the quality called for, but is unfit and dangerous for such purpose, the seller is liable for an injury resulting from such ordinary use to a member of the purchaser's family.[70] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of evidence to show a warranty are shown in the notes.[71]

A warranty will be limited to the matters [72] imported by its terms.[73] Where machinery is warranted to do certain work, the warranty is fulfilled when the machine

Where salesman of automobile represented to the buyer that the tires of the machine were fine tires of a particular make and as good as new and the buyer knew that the automobile had been used in a rock-climbing contest and had gone about 250 miles, held not to show a warranty of the tires. Warren v. Walter Automobile Co., 50 Misc. 605, 99 N. Y. S. 396. A written warranty that an engine will work satisfactorily and is put into condition to do the work for a reasonable time, without breaks due to accident, and until, in due course, the wear of the machinery would tell on its work.[74] An agreement to set a machine up and put it in good working order does not amount to a warranty that the machine when put in order will do the particular work for which the buyers require it.[75] In considering the assets of a corporation with a view to determining the value of the stock, the face or prima facie value of a promissory note at any point of time is the principal with the interest then accrued.[76] It does not include unearned interest, and this is true, even though the unearned interest has in form been added to the face of the note.[77]

(§ 8) C. Conditions and fulfillment or breach.[78]—Conditions must be substantially complied with.[79] Cases dealing with the existence [80] and construction [81] of con-

Warranty that heating apparatus would heat the rooms of a building to 70 degrees Fahr., but that the seller did "not guarantee the warming of the corridors to seventy degrees, providing the corridors are more than one story high," held to imply that the corridors were to be heated to some extent. American Foundry & Furnace Co. v. Board of Education [Wis.] 110 N. W. 403. Where a mare, on being put up for sale, was warranted sound, any disease or infirmity not visible or palpable at the time of the sale which impaired her value or usefulness, constituted a breach of the warranty whether the owner had knowledge thereof or not. Ellison v. Simmons [Del.] 65 A. 591. A bolter was guaranteed, in connection with other machinery in a mill, to produce fifty barrels of flour per twenty-four hours, and as good results as that of any other mill using an equivalent amount of machinery and milling like grade, quantity, and quality, of wheat. Held the guaranty contemplated, not only the quantity of flour the mill was capable of producing, but embraced all matters affecting the question of the profitableness of the work done by the mill. Sprout v. Hunter [Ky.] 98 S. W. 1006. In an action for damages by the overflow of a sprinkler system, the fact that certain sprinkler heads located under a skylight fused from the direct rays of the sun, held insufficient to establish that the work was not performed in a "workmanlike manner," the fusing being largely due to the closing of certain ventilators. 79. Where the seller agreed to deliver a bond to secure performance of his part of the business, a mailing of the bond to a banker at the buyer's place of business, but with no instructions as to delivery, held insufficient. Loveland v. Steenerson, 99 Minn. 14, 108 N. W. 831. Where a contract for the sale of jewelry required the sellers to give a bond to secure the faithful performance of their part of the contract, including a guaranty to the buyer of certain specified profits on the sale of the goods, held the provisions regarding the bond were a substantial part of the contract, a breach of which justified a return of the goods. Id. Where there was a contract for the sale of bottles and the seller notified the buyer that it was impossible for it to perform certain conditions, and the buyer insisted on performance and made a claim for damages, and the seller at the buyer's request delivered the molds to another manufacturer, held an inexcusable breach by the seller. Earnshaw v. Whittemore [Mass.] 80 N. E. 520.

80. Evidence held insufficient to show that cattle were sold subject to inspection. Bennett v. Thuett, 98 Minn. 497, 108 N. W. 1. Where buyers' agent telephoned buyer in the presence of the secretary of the seller, a corporation, that the seller could deliver promptly, and the buyer replied that in that case to buy, and the sale was therefore made, held that the evidence warranted a finding that the seller assented to the condition as to prompt deliveries. Pittsburgh & Ohio Min. Co. v. Scully, 145 Mich. 229, 13 Det. Leg. N. 476, 108 N. W. 503.

81. In a contract for the sale of rolled gold plate jewelry, providing that if the jewelry furnished thereunder did not "wear well" or "sell readily," the seller would exchange the same and replace the articles thus deficient by others, a provision that the purchaser waived the right to claim a failure of consideration without first exhausting the terms of the contract as to exchange, held to apply only to articles of jewelry not wearing well or not selling readily, and not to articles different in kind and quality from those ordered. Loveland v. Steenerson, 99 Minn. 14, 108 N. W. 831. A contract bound a manufacturer to sell goods to a buyer. It stipulated that the buyer should make specifications for all goods to be taken under the contract in time to allow for their manufacture and delivery prior to a specified time. Held that, as the stipulation was for the benefit of the manufacturer it was not required to manufac-

ditions are shown in the notes. Conditions precedent must be performed [82] and in order to take advantage of a protective condition, one must have fulfilled his part of the contract.[83] No time being fixed for the performance of a condition, a reasonable time is allowed.[84] Where an article is to be satisfactory to the buyer, the latter is, in general, the sole arbiter of a performance of the agreement and is entitled to relieve himself from liability by expressing dissatisfaction within a reasonable time,[85] and this is true though the article would be satisfactory to a reasonable or ordianry person.[86] In such cases, however, the purchaser must be dissatisfied in good faith and not pretend to be so on selfish or dishonest grounds.[87] Where the property is to be satisfactory to a designated party, the latter's action, in the absence of fraud or such gross mistake as would necessarily imply bad faith or a failure to exercise an honest judgment is conclusive upon the parties,[88] and this right is not lost by failure to make objections as the work progresses.[89] An agreement to return if unsatisfactory is satisfied when an offer to return is made and refused.[90] Where a contract requires notice before shipment, a notice timely sent through the mail in a postpaid wrapper, duly addressed to the buyer, constitutes a sufficient performance of the condition.[91] A condition providing for notice of defects or variance from "order" is held not applicable to a fraudulent shipment of low grade goods instead of high grade goods.[92] The fulfillment of the condition must be consistent with honesty.[93]

(§ 8). D. Conditions on a warranty.[94]—A contract of sale may fix conditions precedent to the existence of any rights under the warranty if they are reasonable,[95] and a failure by the buyer to comply with such conditions is fatal to his remedy for a breach of the warranty, whether he institutes an action himself or sets up the breach in defense of an action for the purchase money.[96] Where goods are bought for resale to a third person, an express warranty is not by implication conditional that ture the goods after the buyer's failure to specify the goods desired, but could treat the contract as breached by the buyer and sue therefor. Florence Wagon Works v. Kalamazoo Spring & Axle Co., 144 Ala. 598, 42 So. 77.

82. Where contract for the sale of mill machinery provides for a millrun test under certain conditions before the payment of the price, held such provision was not collateral and the prescribed test must be made or waived before an action for the price can be maintained. Ehrsam & Sons Mfg. Co. v. Jackman [Kan.] 85 P. 559. Where contract gave exchange privilege for goods not selling readily and provided that seller would, upon compliance by the purchaser of all the terms of the contract, repurchase goods unsold if the profits on those sold did not net a certain sum, held the purchaser's exercise with reasonable diligence of the right of exchange was a condition precedent to the right to enforce the repurchase agreement offer. Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Hutchinson [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 630.

83. A provision in a contract for sale of machinery that the seller should not be responsible for repairs or alterations unless made with its written consent or liable for damages on account of delays caused by such repairs or alterations is enforceable only where the seller has fulfilled his part of the contract. Held not enforceable, seller having failed to deliver machine of the kind ordered. Mine Supply Co. v. Columbia Min. Co. [Or.] 86 P. 789.

such third person will accept the goods.[97] The burden is on the buyer of showing a compliance with such conditions.[98] The warranty being broken and conditions precedent being complied with, the buyer has a cause of action for damages.[99] Where by the conditions of a warranty possession for a certain time is made conclusive evidence of the fulfillment of the warranty, the "possession" mentioned is held to mean a possession coupled with a possibility or opportunity of using or testing the property for the uses and purposes to which it is to be applied.[1] Where the contract provides for a test to show the fulfillment or breach of the warranty, a test made while the articles are in such condition that they can be fairly tested is sufficient.[2] The contract making a warranty to be determined by a test to be made by an expert named, but not specifying the kind of test, leaves that question to be determined by the expert in case more than one kind of test is known and used.[3] A warranty that a machine will work satisfactorily means that it will work satisfactorily to the purchaser.[4] Storing the goods and notifying the seller that they are subject to his order does not constitute a return.[5] Constructions placed on various conditions are shown in the notes.[6] time,[8] and this is true where the goods are delivered to a duly authorized agent but never in fact delivered by the purchaser himself.[9] For the purpose of inspection he has the right to receive the goods and do whatever is necessary to make a proper inspection, and such acts will not constitute an acceptance of the goods on his part, and if, on inspection, they turn out to be defective, the buyer has the right to reject them.[10] But the parties can make whatever contract they please regarding the inspection and acceptance of goods sold, and, when made, their contract will govern,[11] and such conditions are generally held to be of the essence of the contract,[12] and hence, becoming impossible of performance,[13] and not being waived or disregarded by the parties,[14] the contract falls, though in this connection one may become estopped to take advantage of the waiver or disregard of the condition.[15] An express warranty survives acceptance[16] unless the buyer at the time of acceptance has knowledge of the defects,[17] and, while the buyer must ascertain the defects and notify the seller thereof within a reasonable time,[18] he is not obliged to inspect the goods before acceptance,[19] nor is there any obligation on him to return the goods in order to enforce the warranty.[20] The warranties which the law implies or exceptions to the rule of "caveat emptor" do not survive acceptance where the defects are patent,[21] otherwise, if latent.[22] Owing to the question being largely one of fact,[23] there is considerable conflict as to whether acceptance [24] and payment [25] after inspection or an opportunity to inspect waives an implied warranty. Some of the cases holding that there is no waiver, lay particular stress upon whether or not the contract is executory.[26] Of course the seller rendering inspection unnecessary, there is no waiver.[27] Where goods are received and paid for before an opportunity for inspection is afforded, the buyer is entitled to recover the purchase price upon discovering that the goods do not conform to the contract,[28] and this is true where the purchase price has necessarily been paid a third person.[29] Though the goods are sold f. o. b. cars at the seller's place of business, the buyer has the right on tender of the goods at destination to examine the same and to reject them if not according to sample.[30] The right of inspection may, however, be waived.[31] Delay after discovery [32] or conduct inconsistent with reliance on the breach [33] may waive it. The defects being latent the buyer has a reasonable time to inspect the goods even though the contract places an unreasonable restriction on such rights,[34] but a reasonable restriction will be binding.[35] Mere use of breach does not necessarily constitute an acceptance.[36] Holding goods subject to the seller's order or reshipping them to him does not bar the buyer's rights.[37] Where articles of a particular description are agreed to be manufactured or sold, and the articles are not of the kind specifically described, a retention of part of the articles after the defect could with reasonable diligence have been discovered does not waive the right to reject future

32. Where goods were sold in November, 1904, and defects in quality were discovered on their receipt, and in January, 1905, notes were given for the purchase price, it is too late in an action on the notes to complain that the quality of the goods was not as represented. Rouse, Hempstone & Co. v. Sarrett, 74 S. C. 575, 54 S. E. 757.

33. Where the contract provided for notice of any alleged defects in the quality of the goods and an opportunity to remedy the same before the purchaser should be entitled to repudiate the contract and on delivery of the goods the buyer notified the seller, "goods just received and found all O. K.," and retained possession thereof for more than a year without complaint, held any breach of warranty of quality was waived. Main Co. v. Giffin-Bynum Co., 141 N. C. 43, 53 S. E. 727. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. v. City of Cleburne [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 1131.

34. Where goods sold are warranted to be like sample and the defects are latent and not readily discoverable, the buyer has a reasonable time in which to inspect the goods and notify the seller of any defects in them, notwithstanding the contract of sale specifies that the buyer waives all right to object to the goods by failure to notify the seller within two days from their receipt of defects in the same. Main Co. v. Fields [N. C.] 56 S. E. 943.

35. Where warranty provided that retention of machine for thirty days should be conclusive proof of fulfillment of warranty, held pleadings showing such a retention and answer setting up breach of warranty stated no defense. Berlin Mach. Works v. Marbury Lumber Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 951.

deliveries for such defects.[38] Breach of warranty being brought about by the buyer, the latter cannot recover therefor,[39] but the buyer having rightfully rescinded, he need not subsequently render the seller any assistance in attempting to remedy the defect.[40] The purchaser by rejecting the goods upon stated grounds is deemed to have waived all other objections.[41]

Where the conditions of a warranty provide that upon a breach written notice of the defects and an opportunity to amend should be given, the purpose of the notice is deemed to be to allow the seller to send its agent or employe to the property and remedy the defects, and where that purpose has once been secured and the agent or employe has actually gone and taken charge of the property and undertaken to put it in running order, the purpose of the notice is served and it becomes immaterial whether any notice has been given at all.[42] So also, notice being actually given, the fact that it was not given in the manner required by the contract is immaterial.[43] The conditions may themselves be waived [44] by an agent of the seller,[45] even though the contract apparently provides otherwise.[46] The burden is on the buyer to show a waiver of conditions of a warranty imposing duties upon him.[47] Fulfillment of conditions being rendered impossible by the other party, he cannot take advantage of their breach.[48] Cases dealing with the construction [49] and fulfillment [50] of condi-

Westbrook v. Reeves & Co. [Iowa] 111 N. W. 11. Where warranty provided for notification of defects by registered mail, a response to an unregistered notification of defects and an attempt, through the seller's agent, to remedy the defects, was a waiver of the requirement as to registration. Where the seller was a corporation, held full force could not be given to a stipulation that "no person has any authority to add to, abridge or change this warranty in any manner, and to do so will render it void and of no effect." Peter v. Plano Mfg. Co. [S. D.] 110 N. W. 783. A provision in a contract that "no promises whether of agent, employe, or of attorney, in respect to the payments, and security, or the working of the machine, will be considered binding unless made in writing, ratified by the home or branch office," does not prevent the company's agent waiving written notice by going to the place where the machinery is operated and taking charge of the machinery and working on it with a view to putting it in a condition so that it will comply with the warranty. Conditions.[53]—Failure to object or demand compliance with conditions may waive noncompliance.[54] Receipt of the property does not necessarily waive breach of a claim for failure to deliver as required.[55] Use by the purchaser of property sold under a contract providing for a test which the purchaser is under no obligation to bring about and which a seller can delay indefinitely does not constitute a waiver of the condition.[56] One cannot take advantage of his own default.[57] Generally a positive refusal to perform waives the performance of conditions precedent on the part of the other party.[58] Waiver is generally a question for the jury.[59]

(§ 8) F. Remedies[60] on the warranty and breach of condition have been reserved for other parts of the title[61] together with damages for breach[62] and rights of assignees and subsequent purchasers.[63]

§ 9. Payment, tender, and price, as terms of the contract.[64]—In the absence of proof of either contract or custom, payment is presumed concurrent with delivery,[65] and if not paid interest will run for that time.[66] An offer to sell being ac-

McCarthy v. Nixon Grocery Co., 126 Ga. 762, 56 S. E. 72. On an issue as to whether under a contract for the sale of goods to be delivered in instalments and fixing no time for payment it was agreed that a certain credit should be extended, findings that under a former similar contract payments

cepted the law implies a promise to receive and pay for the goods,[67] and one receiving and using goods is liable for the reasonable value thereof regardless of the existence or validity of the contract of sale.[68] Where part consideration for the purchase of property is other property to be delivered by the purchaser, which by the terms of the agreement is a fixed proportion of the purchase price, the purchaser may avail himself of the privilege of making payments by delivery of such property, but in case of his failure or refusal so to do the primary object of the promise will prevail, and the price agreed upon will become a money demand.[69] Whether the giving of the buyer's note to the seller constitutes a payment of the purchase price depends upon the agreement of the parties.[70] It is only after the seller has taken it up and regained possession of it before payment that he is remitted to his original rights under the contract of sale, if there was an agreement that the note should be taken in absolute payment.[71] If such note is negotiable and the seller and payee transfers it to a third party, so long as it remains in the third party's hands it operates as an absolute payment of the original consideration upon which it was taken.[72] So too, where upon the sale and delivery of goods the seller receives from the purchaser the note of a third person, the presumption is that the note was accepted in payment and satisfaction of the purchase price.[73] Where goods are sold to be delivered in instalments with payment on delivery, the seller is entitled at any time to require payment for instalments already delivered as a condition precedent to the delivery of future instalments,[74] but the buyer has no right to retain sums due for instalments delivered as security against an anticipated breach by defendant of the provisions of the contract as to future deliveries,[75] and the technical insolvency of the buyer does not affect their rights.[76] Though the seller state a separate value on each of several articles sold, yet, if he sells all in solido at a less aggregate price, he cannot against the will of the buyer retake one of the articles and recover the value stated of the rest as upon an agreement to pay that value,[77] but he can only recover their reasonable value less the damages suffered by the buyer by the retaking of the property.[78] Payment of the purchase price may be rendered conditional and if so it is not due until the conditions have been fulfilled.[79] Payment were made thirty days after delivery, that it was the custom of the trade under such contracts for payments to be made thirty days after delivery, and that it was understood and impliedly agreed that payments should be so made, were proper and material. Where the contract for a sale of a stallion provided that the vendee pay for him entirely from funds obtained as service fees, the death of the horse not due to the fault of the vendee relieves the latter for liability for further payments under the contract. Swaney v. Alstott [Iowa] 111 N. W. 406. Where plaintiff sells articles to be paid for in thirty days, performance of its agreement in the contract of sale to do a certain amount of advertising within a year is not a condition precedent to its right to sue for the price. Vio Chem. Co. v. Studholme, 103 N. Y. S. 463. Where a contract recited that the first party agreed to manufacture, sell, and deliver lumber to the second party from time to time, who was obligated to receive the lumber, and in conclusion the price to be paid per thousand feet was stated, the stipulation to deliver the lumber was an independent covenant and a condition precedent to the duty of payment as a condition precedent may be waived.[80] The construction placed on various terms concerning payment and price are shown in the notes.[81] A buyer cannot, in an action for the agreed price, show that the goods bought were not worth what he promised to pay for them,[82] and hence a petition alleging that the price for which the articles were sold was the reasonable value thereof, recovery of the reasonable value is rightfully denied.[83] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence to show payment are shown in the notes.[84]

§ 10. Remedies of the seller. A. Rescission and retaking of goods or action for conversion. Rescission.[85]—While it is generally stated that the seller may avoid the sale for the buyer's fraud[86] or undisclosed intention not to pay,[87] still it has

Even though payment is to precede delivery, still, if the seller admits that he does not intend to make a delivery according to the terms of the contract, the buyer is justified in refusing to pay the purchase price. Rownd v. Hollenbeck [Neb.] 108 N. W. 259. The right of a seller of goods to be delivered from time to time to terminate the contract, on the refusal of the purchaser to perform by payment for the goods already delivered, may be waived expressly or by conduct. Byrne Mill Co. v. Robertson [Ala.] 42 So. 1008. Where the contract provides for delivery in instalments, failure to pay cash where the first delivery is made is waived by the seller making a second delivery before the first is paid for. Both deliveries being paid for, seller cannot on such account refuse to deliver future instalments. Moers v. Dietz, 101 N. Y. S. 590. Where a seller stated to the buyer that he would not accept a note for the purchase price, it is immaterial whether the buyer actually tendered the note. Austin v. Smith [Iowa[109 N. W. 289. 81. A written contract whereby a seller transfers property for $25,000 and the further consideration that the buyer sell the property and pay forty per cent. of the proceeds above a certain sum to the seller is to be construed as a matter of law as requiring the payment of the forty per cent. in addition to the $25,000. Bosler v. Cobie, 14 Wyo. 423, 84 P. 895. Where a contract for the sale of hay provided that the buyer should bale the hay at once at his own expense and should pay the seller $8 a ton when the hay was delivered at the car at a certain station, the buyer could not maintain replevin for the hay without tendering the price, in the absence of a waiver thereof. Witt v. Dersham [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 660, 109 N. W. 25. A contract containing the following: "Terms: Cash Disc. 6 per cent. 10 days, 3 per cent. 20 days, net 30 days. Special time payments: 1-4 due in 4 months, 1-4 due in 6 months, 1-4 due in 8 months, 1-4 due in 10 months. Special time payments must be closed by note within 10 days," and the purchaser refuses after more than ten days has elapsed to execute notes in accordance with the conditions for the purchase price, the entire bill becomes due in thirty days. Ziehme v. Parish [Kan.] 87 P. 685. A contract for the sale of mill machinery and its installation in a mill, which provides that when the machinery is operated so as to meet the requirements of a milling guaranty under which it is sold the purchaser will accept and pay for it, which guaranties that the mill will perform according to the milling guaranty when operated by the seller, and which requires the purchaser to furnish wheat, labor, and power to operate the mill at its full capacity when the seller is ready to operate it, contemplates a mill-run demonstration of the guaranteed capacity of the mill as a condition precedent to the payment of the price. Ehrsam Mfg. Co. v. Jackman [Kan.] 85 P. 559. A manufacturer of lumber agreed to sell the output of a mill during a year. The contract provided that the lumber should be delivered to the buyer in his lumberyard; that immediately on the delivery of any lumber title should at once vest in the buyer; that all lumber cut should be graded and measured by the buyer as the same was sawed, that all lumber should be paid for by the buyer according to the schedule of prices every fifteen days, at which time all lumber delivered during the preceding fifteen days should be reported by the buyer's inspector to the buyer and paid for by check, held a sale for cash. been held that, to authorize the rescission of a sale on the ground of fraud on the part of the vendee so that a recovery may be had in detinue or trover against the first purchaser or a subpurchaser, the following conditions or facts must be combined: (1) The purchaser must at the time of the transaction have been insolvent or in failing circumstances;[88] (2) The first purchaser must have had either a preconceived design not to pay for the goods or no reasonable expectation of being able to pay for them;[89] (3) The purchaser must have intentionally concealed these facts or made a fraudulent representation in regard to them;[90] (4) The sale must have been induced by the fraudulent representation or concealment,[91] though if intentionally made and relied upon the fraudulent statements need not be the sole inducing cause of the contract but it is sufficient if they are a contributing cause,[92] and the burden of proof in the first instance rests upon the seller to reasonably satisfy the jury of each of the foregoing requirements.[93] If he fails to carry this burden in any of the four particulars, a recovery cannot be had either against the original vendee or another claiming under him, whether a bona fide or a mala fide purchaser or even a stranger.[94] If the evidence reasonably satisfies the jury of the existence of each of the essentials above stated, it is incumbent upon one claiming to be a subvendee to show that he is in fact a purchaser from the original vendee and that he paid value for the goods,[95] and whether he paid cash, in whole or in part, for the chattels or took them in payment of a debt, he would be a purchaser for value within the meaning of this rule,[96] and the fact that he paid greatly less than the value of the property will not take him out of it.[97] If the jury should believe from the evidence, including all the facts and circumstances, that what appeared in form to be a sale and conveyance to the subvendee was a secret trust for the original purchaser, then the same principles, and those only, would apply that arise in this class of cases against such original purchaser, since one holding goods under a pretended sale in secret trust for the original purchaser must stand in the shoes of such purchaser.[98] If the subpurchaser successfully carries the burden as above indicated, then the onus is shifted to the plaintiff to prove to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury that the subpurchaser had notice of the fraud when he purchased, or before he paid the purchase money or parted with the consideration, or had knowledge of facts putting him on inquiry which, if diligently prosecuted, would have brought to him knowledge of the seller's claim.[99] The mere fact that the purchase by the subpurchaser was made with intent to defraud the creditors of the buyer will not authorize the seller to rescind the sale and recover the goods.[1] It is essential that the fraud be in the particular sale in question.[2] The fact that the buyer is to his own knowledge insolvent at the time of the purchase is not of itself sufficient to show that he had no intention to pay for the property.[3] The right to rescind for fraud may be waived.[4] Failure to pay the purchase price as required will not warrant

4. In order to ratify a contract procured by fraud the buyer must have knowledge of the fraud. Plea held defective. Grayhill v. Drennen [Ala.] 43 So. 568. A seller, requesting a payment from the buyer, does not thereby waive his right to rescind the sale and recover the goods in the hands of a third person on the ground of the fraud of the buyer. Pelham v. Chattahoochee Grocery Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 12. Where a bankrupt has procured a sale of goods to himself through fraud and the seller, with rescission as to goods delivered,[5] but it may warrant the seller to rescind to the extent of refusing future deliveries.[6] Rescission abrogates the contract[7] and must be in toto,[8] hence, upon rescission, partial payments must be returned.[9]

Recovery of chattels. Replevin.[10]—Where conditions precedent are not performed and consequently title does not pass, trover will lie to recover the goods or their equivalent in money.[11] The contract of sale being void, neither the seller nor any one claiming under him with knowledge of the facts can recover the property or sue in conversion without returning to the buyer the purchase money paid.[12] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence are shown in the notes.[13]

(§ 10) B. Stoppage in transitu.[14]—In case of a sale of goods on credit the seller may resume possession of the goods while they are in the hands of a carrier, a middleman, or forwarding agent,[15] in transit to the buyer on his becoming insolvent.[16] This right continues until the delivery of the goods to the buyer or his agent is completed,[17] and cannot be impaired or extinguished during its existence by seizure under legal process on behalf of the buyer's creditors.[18] No particular form of exercising the right of stoppage in transitu is required. The material and important thing is to inform the carrier or person in possession of the goods before their delivery to the consignee that the seller directs the further transit of the goods to cease.[19] The reason or impulse which instigates the act is not important.[20] The knowledge of the facts, proves his claim and votes as a creditor in the bankruptcy proceedings, he is concluded thereby and cannot withdraw his claim and recover the goods. Standard Varnish Works v. Haydock [C. C. A.] 143 F. 318.

Failure to pay balance of purchase price due within stipulated time is not ground for cancellation in equity. Godwin v. Phifer [Fla.] 41 So. 597. Where a specific lot of rice is sold at a price payable in ten days, it is a completed sale, and the buyer's refusal to have a draft for the price after the ten days will not set the sale aside if it precludes the idea of an abandonment of the contract. Bloom's Son Co. v. Union Rice Mill. Co. [La.] 42 So. 947. Where contract authorized a deduction of two per cent. if purchase price was paid within a certain time, held a deduction after such time by the buyer was insufficient to authorize the seller to rescind, the breach being insignificant and the seller could have been compensated for it in damages. Taussig v. Southern Mill & Land Co. [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 602.

6. Where a buyer fails to pay for goods delivered and evinces a purpose either not to pay for future deliveries called for or not to abide by the terms of the agreement but to insist on different terms, whether in respect to price or to any other material stipulation, the seller may rescind and sue for the goods delivered. Peters Grocery Co. v. Collins Bag Co., 142 N. C. 174, 55 S. E. 90. A seller agreed to sell to a buyer a specified number of peanut bags at a price named and also a specified number of cotton sheets. The agreement was modified by a reduction of the price and an allowance of a credit of ten days. The cotton sheets were delivered according to contract but the buyer refused to pay for them and insisted on a credit of thirty days to pay for all the goods. Held that the seller was entitled to rescind and recover for the goods delivered. Id.

(§ 10) C. Lien.[22]

(§ 10) D. Resale.[23]—If the purchaser refuses to accept and pay for the goods the seller may sell the property, acting for this purpose as the agent of the buyer, and recover the difference between the contract price and the price at resale,[24] plus the reasonable expenses of the resale,[25] and this right of the seller to recover for the reasonable and necessary expense of resale does not depend on the contract of sale.[26] It is the duty of the seller to use ordinary care in the preservation of the goods between the date that the goods were to be accepted and the date of resale, and the seller cannot hold the buyer responsible for deterioration during such time in the value of the goods unless it appears that the failure to exercise due care resulted from the conduct of the buyer.[27] Except where the resale is made to the original purchaser, it is essential that notice of the intent to resell be given.[28] It is not necessary that the notice should contain information as to the time and place of sale, but there must be a notice of an intention to sell for the benefit of the buyer.[29] The sale must be made in good faith and within a reasonable time.[30] Changes in the market value, etc., control in determining what is a reasonable time.[31] When the buyer is notified by the seller of the intention to resell, and after such notice a sale is properly made, the original buyer is conclusively bound by the resale and the amount realized under it.[32]

(§ 10) E. Action for the price and quantum valebat. Right of action and conditions precedent.[33]—Before a seller can maintain an action on the contract for the agreed price of a chattel, there must be such a delivery, actual or constructive, as will pass the title and invest the ownership of the property in the purchaser;[34] and it has been held that if the possession and the title remains in the seller and the purchaser renounces his contract, the law requires the seller to treat the property as his own and to sue, if at all, for the damages he has sustained,[35] but this is not the general rule.[36] Where the buyer returns the goods the right of the seller to recover for forwarding at the time the buyer became insolvent, and he requested the seller to take back the goods and authorized him to demand a return from the warehouseman and he did so, it did not amount to a claim of possession by reason of a rescission of the contract of sale rather than under the right of stoppage in transitu. Where through the breach of the contract by buyers sellers are entitled to resell the goods and charge the buyers with loss and reasonable expense, the buyers cannot assert that the right was not reasonably exercised because of delay in making resale where there is no change in the market between the time the right to resell occurred and the time the resale was made. 36. A purchaser contracted to buy a telephone instrument in a house on premises sold and also some telephone stock. The seller after the purchaser took possession of the property offered to deliver the stock and demanded payment, the telephone instrument being in the house occupied by the purchaser. See post this section subdivision H. Choice and Election of Remedies.

the purchase price is determined by whether he accepts the return as a rescission or not.[37] The cause of action accrues when the price becomes due.[38] The seller must prove that all conditions precedent, as distinguished from collateral and independent conditions, on his part have been complied with or waived.[39] A seller may maintain a suit in equity to recover the price of the thing sold from a second purchaser who has assumed the obligation to pay such price, notwithstanding his retention of title as security or his taking a bond from the first purchaser where neither affords him an adequate remedy.[40]

Abandonment.[41]

Defenses and election between them.[42]—False representations merely depreciating but not destroying the value of the article sold constitute a defense merely to the extent that the value of the article is diminished.[43] The article sold failing to comply with the terms of the contract, the seller cannot recover the purchase price thereof,[44] nor can he in such case recover the value of the article delivered [45] unless he shows the value of such article as compared with that contracted for.[46] Except where the goods conform to the contract,[47] the delivery or tender of valueless goods is a complete defense to an action for the purchase price.[48] A partial or total failure of consideration may be shown against the original payee of a promissory note without alleging fraud.[49] Breach of a stipulated condition that no samples should be sold competitors of buyer bars recovery of the purchase price no matter how unsubstantial the violation may appear.[50] In an action upon a written contract of sale; defendant may deny the execution of such written contract and further plead an oral contract and that plaintiff had not fulfilled his part thereof.[51] Breach of warranty is a matter of defense [52] available in mitigation of damages.[53]

The complaint.[54]—The complaint must show a contract of sale,[55] compliance

55. A complaint alleging that plaintiff manufactured for defendants certain gowns at an agreed price to be used in a musical production owned by defendants, that the gowns were delivered to them, that afterwards plaintiff made alterations upon the gowns for defendants at an agreed price and that they were used in the production, contains sufficient averments of a request by the defendants for the manufacture of therewith,[56] including delivery and performance of conditions precedent,[57] and must show that all or part of the purchase price is due and unpaid.[58] Under the statutes of some states plaintiff may file a petition, as in an action on a book account, though the transaction has never actually been entered in an account book.[59] Counts for trover and the recovery of the purchase price are inconsistent.[60]

Answer, counterclaim, and reply.[61]—The allegations of the answer must be definite[62] statements of fact as distinguished from conclusions of the pleader[63] and must set forth the contract.[64] The answer should deny all material allegations of the complaint,[65] allege all new matter relied on by defendant, and not contain inconsistent defenses.[66] A general averment that a thing is wholly worthless is equivalent to a declaration that it is entirely destitute of value.[67] The answer setting up a counterclaim for fraud and false representations by the seller as to their quality, the defendant may rely on a breach of an implied warranty of the quality.[68] In an action for the price of goods, the defense that the seller failed to ship the same in time and that the goods came too late to be of ready sale is new matter and the burden of proving it is on the buyer.[69] Nonperformance of conditions precedent or concurrent must be taken advantage of by the answer or in the evidence,[70] and the buyer may set up a variance in the quality of the goods delivered from those ordered and an offer to return them without filing a counterclaim.[71] Pleas of nonconformity of goods delivered with contract and of rescission are not demurrable on the

the goods and of a promise to pay therefor. Osborn Co. v. Shubert, 101 N. Y. S. 761.

56. A declaration alleging a sale of "No. 2 mixed corn" and a shipment of "No. 2 yellow corn" is not sufficient on its face to show a compliance by the plaintiffs with their contract, in the absence of allegations that the corn ordered and shipped were the same, or that the defendant accepted the corn shipped. Heile & Sons v. South Georgia Grocery Co., 125 Ga. 562, 54 S. E. 540.

57. Biggers v. Equitable Mfg. Co., 124 Ga. 1045, 53 S. E. 674.

58. A petition in an action for the balance of the price of materials sold under a verbal contract, which alleges the date of the contract, and that certain materials were to be furnished for a specified purpose at a certain price, and the date when the contract was completed, and that the seller had performed its part of the contract and that the buyer had not paid according to the contract but had paid only a specified part thereof, sufficiently states that the balance was due and unpaid. Davis v. Big Horn Lumber Co., 14 Wyo. 517, 85 P. 980.

61. See 6 C. L. 1358.

62. Cross bill alleging that goods were for use under a certain contract, that valuable rights depended on such contract being fulfilled on a certain date, that the seller knew these facts when the sale was made, and that failure to deliver caused a breach of the contract and certain specified damages resulted, held sufficiently definite. Gorham v. Dallas, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 365, 95 S. W. 551.

63. In an action to recover the price of goods sold, a plea that the goods delivered were of a different kind from that which the person agreed to purchase and were of little value to wit, $10, is insufficient as being a mere conclusion of the pleader. McAllister-Coman Co. v. Matthews [Ala.] 43 So. 747. A notice of recoupment stating that the goods were not the goods "represented and warranted to be" but were of an inferior quality or grade is insufficient. Richardson & Co. v. Noble, 143 Mich. 545, 13 Det. Leg. N. 59, 107 N. W. 274.

64. In an action to recover the price of goods sold, a plea which does not set out the contract in words or by reference, but alleges that the plaintiff agreed to furnish a showcase and did not ship it with the goods, without alleging that it was not furnished or that the plaintiff had failed or refused to furnish it, is demurrable. McAllister-Coman Co. v. Matthews [Ala.] 43 So. 747.

65. A plea alleging that the goods delivered did not conform to the contract and that the goods pointed out by the seller for future delivery also failed to conform to the contract held not demurrable for failing to deny an allegation in the complaint that the seller was ready and willing to deliver the goods in accordance with the contract. Elliott v. Howison [Ala.] 40 So. 1018.

66. Plea alleging nonconformity of goods with contract, refusal to accept, subsequent contract to handle them on account of the seller, and offering to set off damages against amount plaintiff was entitled to, held not demurrable on the ground that it did not allege a rejection of the shipment and as containing the defense of rescission and breach of warranty. ground that they confessed that the buyer was indebted to the seller for goods sold.[72] Where it is uncertain, from the language of a declaration, whether it intends to allege delivery to the defendant at the point of shipment or at the point of destination or any delivery at all to the defendant, a special demurrer raising that point will be sustained.[73] That the defendant cannot on the facts pleaded recover the damages which he demanded, or that the rule of damages is not such as he asserts it to be, is not good ground for demurrer if the facts stated show a good cause of action or defense.[74] That a plea, termed one of recoupment, is not good as such does not render it demurrable, it being good as a set-off.[75] A claim for merely nominal damages will not generally be held to constitute a counterclaim or set-off.[76] The construction placed upon specific answers are shown in the notes.[77]

Variance.[78]—The proof must sustain the allegations of the pleadings.[79]

Presumptions and burden of proof.[80]—The burden is on the seller to prove all material allegations of the complaint not admitted by the answer,[81] including the performance of conditions precedent[82] and delivery,[83] but it has been held that the defense that the seller failed to ship the goods in time and that the goods came too late to be of ready sale is new matter and the burden of proving it is on the buyer.[84] Plaintiff showing a delivery in accordance with the contract, he need not show an acceptance[85] except where the article is to be satisfactory to the buyer.[86] A plea

75. In an action for the price of a stock of millinery goods, a plea termed by the defendant a "plea of recoupment," claiming a sum had and received by plaintiff, which the defendant offers as a set-off against the demands of the plaintiff and claims judgment for the excess, was not demurrable, being good as a set-off though not as a plea of recoupment. Thomas v. Thomas [Ala.] 41 So. 141.

76. In an action on a note given for the price of an interest in a corporation, failure of the seller to transfer certain land which he held as trustee for the corporation, but which the corporation continued to use and occupy and which the seller offered to convey at the trial, was at most grounds for nominal damages to the buyer and did not constitute a counterclaim or set-off. Bosler v. Coble, 14 Wyo. 423, 84 P. 895.

77. In an action for breach of contract to purchase hay, defendants alleged that plaintiff agreed to sell them good, No. 1, merchantable hay, and the reply denied that the hay delivered was not good or merchantable and controverted all other allegations of new matter in the answer. Held that this was equivalent to denying that plaintiff stipulated to sell No. 1 hay, and evidence that the hay delivered was merchantable was within the issues. Eaton v. Blackburn [Or.] 88 P. 303. Where an original complaint for the price of goods sold contained three counts for account, account stated, and merchandise sold, respectively, and a fourth count was added by amendment claiming for goods sold under a special agreement, a plea purporting to answer the entire complaint, referring to the claim as the "account sued on," is nevertheless an answer to the count based on the special contract where it clearly refers to the same transaction. McAllister-Coman Co. v. Matthews [Ala.] 43 So. 747.

78. See 6 C. L. 1359.

79. There is no legal identity between an alleged contract of sale, accompanied with delivery made on September 26, 1904, and a conditional agreement of sale made on July 26, 1904, and the variance is fatal. Davenport Locomotive Works v. Lemann Co. [La.] 42 So. 770. Where the answer alleges fraud, defendant cannot set up that the property has been fully paid for by notes not yet due and that freight charges only are acceptable. Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Horstad [S. D.] 109 N. W. 509. A statement of account filed in justice's court, which recites that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in a specified sum for "one telephone and telephone stock," is consistent with evidence of a contract of sale of a telephone instrument and telephone stock at a stipulated price. Riley v. Stevenson, 118 Mo. App. 187, 94 S. W. 781.

80. See 6 C. L. 1360.

81. Where defendant denied the allegations of the complaint and set up an affirmative defense and the jury was instructed that he must establish his defense by a preponderance of the evidence, held error to refuse to charge that plaintiff must prove the material allegations of the complaint by a preponderance of the evidence. Ainsfield Co. v. Rasmussen, 30 Utah, 453, 85 P. 1002.

83. Biggers v. Equitable Mfg. Co., 124 Ga. 1045, 53 S. E. 674. In an action for goods sold and delivered, it is necessary to show that the goods were in fact delivered. Dinsmore v. Butler, 98 N. Y. 7. 835. One suing for the purchase price of goods has the burden of proving a sale and delivery. Ashton v. Edward Thompson Co. [Colo.] 85 P. 697.

85. Cathcart v. Webb, 144 Ala. 559, 42 42 So. 25.

86. Where the article is to be satisfactory to the buyer, the burden is on the seller to of non est factum casts the burden of proving the contract on the plaintiff.[87] Breach of warranty being set up there is a conflict as to who has the burden of proof.[88] The burden of proving a defense rests on the defendant.[89] In an action to recover the price paid, where it is undisputed that the goods have been returned to the seller, it is no burden on the plaintiff to show that defendant is indebted to him.[90] In the absence of evidence to the contrary where a contract made to govern future orders is shown to be in force, as of a certain date, its existence will be presumed and its terms will govern a sale made a month after such date.[91] A showing that conditions had been fulfilled previous to the time for performance is insufficient to even raise a presumption of performance at such time.[92] A plea of total failure of consideration in a suit for the contract price of certain articles is not supported where the evidence fails to show that the articles are entirely worthless,[93] and in the absence of any data from which it can be ascertained how much less the goods are worth than the contract price, it is error for the court to direct a verdict for the defendant.[94]

Evidence; admissibility and sufficiency.[95]—As the familar rules of evidence[96] determine the questions of admissibility, relevancy, and competency, illustrations only are given.[97] Hearsay evidence[98] and evidence constituting merely the opinion show by proof of the acceptance of the machinery that the buyer's obligations to make payments had matured. Inman Mfg. Co. v. American Cereal Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 287. Casein Mfg. Co., 50 Misc. 345, 98 N. Y. S. 645. Must offer evidence of this fact. Id. Defendant setting up breach of warranty, he must prove it. Prizer-Painter Stove & Heater Co. v. Peaslee, 99 Minn. 275, 109 N. W. 232. The goods being accepted and damages for breach of warranty being set up as a counterclaim in an action for the price, the burden of proving breach of warranty is on defendant. Wyandotte Portland Cement Co. v. Bruner [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1042, 110 N. W. 949. 97. In an action by the seller's assignee to recover the price, it is proper to permit plaintiff to show delivery of the goods and the date thereof. Stark v. Burke [Iowa] 109 N. W. 206. In an action for the price of building material, testimony by one who personally knew nothing about the contract but who had figured the work for the seller "as to what was figured" was immaterial. Rikerd Lumber Co. v. Charles Hoertz & Son [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 809, 109 N. W. 664. A witness in an action to recover the price of jewelry sold, who was not shown to have any knowledge in regard to the character, quality, and value of the goods testified about, is incompetent to testify as to their quality or value, McAllister-Coman Co. v. Matthews [Ala.] 43 So. 747. Where plaintiff claimed a sale and defendant a contract of agency, a warehouse receipt for the property, though taken after the commencement of the suit, is admissible. Owensboro Wagon Co. v. Hall [Ala.] 43 So. 71.

Evidence that the public demanded fusible plugs in steam automobiles is admissible in assumpsit for the price of an automobile lacking such plug as bearing on its value. Grout v. Moulton [Vt.] 64 A. 453. In an action for the price of patterns, where the defendant pleaded a set-off for patterns returned to plaintiff, a written contract between the parties whereby the defendant agreed to retain the patterns sent him till a date later than that at which he actually returned them is admissible. Butterick Pub. Co. v. Crawford Mercantile Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 80. Evidence held admissible to show that account was a new one and that this was the reason deviation from plaintiff's regular terms had been made as defendant contended, and also that plaintiff had previously filled orders from defendant on the same of the witness [99] is inadmissible. Testimony of experienced men as to similar facts within their own experience is admissible.[1] In proper cases the court may limit the number of witnesses to any one point.[2] The only pleas being the general issue and set-off, evidence of breach of warranty and of fraud is inadmissible.[3]

The evidence must preponderate [4] to establish the sale between the parties,[5] its terms,[6] the performance or breach thereof,[7] and delivery where essential,[8] the cases terms. Central Texas Grocery Co. v. Globe Tobacco Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 1144. In an action for the price of beer, where the plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the defendant ordered it delivered at a certain place, which the defendant denied, evidence that he was not the owner or in possession or carrying on business at the place named, and that the parties were engaged in business there and ordered the beer, was admissible. Loewers Gambrinus Brewing Co. v. Kuku, 99 N. Y. S. 480. In a suit for the purchase price of certain coal, it being conclusively proven that a receipt had been given for every ton of coal delivered to defendant at any time with the exception of one ton delivered subsequent to April 20, 1903, it was not error to exclude such receipts offered merely to prove that the coal in question was not within purchases made prior to that date. McRavy v. Barto, 99 N. Y. S. 712. In assumpsit to recover for materials furnished to a government contractor, statements furnished by the latter to the government of his plant, labor, and materials employed in the work actually done by him for which he asked payment, were inadmissible to show that defendant was not delayed in his work by reason of plaintiff's default or that such contract did not actually need the materials which were required by him and which plaintiff failed to furnish. United States v. Molloy [C. C. A.] 144 F. 321. In an action on a note given for the purchase of a steam engine, where the issue was whether plaintiff agred to take back such engine and return the note if defendant would buy goods in which plaintiff was interested at a certain price, evidence that plaintiff was offered by another, after the sale to defendant, without knowledge thereof, the same price defendant had paid was relevant. Strickland v. Phillips [S. C.] 55 S. E. 453. In an action for the price of a shipment of hats, the buyer's manager could testify that the samples from which he ordered were designated by numbers and that plaintiff agreed to send hats made up exactly like the samples which were all in perfect condition as to plumage and make, though the manager never saw those shipped, his testimony being competent in connection with other testimony to show that the hats delivered did not conform to the order. Schiller v. Blyth & Fargo Co. [Wyo.] 88 P. 648. Where it was claimed that lumber sold did not come up to warranty, evidence of similar sales and no compiaint made is inadmissible. Hutchinson Lumber Co. v. Dickerson [Ga.] 56 S. E. 491. Where a contract was made for the sale of certain lumber, stated to be air-dried and of a specified character, evidence that it was stacked in piles "with sticks between it, so that air could go through and ventilate it," was admissible. But evidence that the mill superintendent was an old hand at stacking lumber and would have stacked each day's cutting the next day was not admissible. Id. Where in an action for the price of a raft of logs sold and delivered, which defendant refused to accept, the only issue was whether they were delivered in the condition required, and it appeared that they sank after delivery, it was error to admit the testimony of a witness as to his raising some of the logs after they had been sunk and selling them to defendant. Cathcart v. Webb 144 Ala. 559, 42 So. 25. Where, in an action for breach of a contract of sale, it was claimed that the seller did not file a bond as required by the contract within a reasonable time, and the evidence showed that letters passed between the buyer and seller, which were sent through the mail by which a bond not received was claimed to have been sent by the seller, evidence that it took three or four days for a letter to pass between the buyer and seller was admissible. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Howard [Ala.] 41 So. 628.

98. Conversation between seller and witness in the absence of the buyer held inadmissible as against the latter. Austin v. Smith [Iowa] 109 N. W. 289.

99. In a case where the place of sale is directly in issue, testimony of a witness that he bought the goods at a given place from the seller's traveling salesman, who agreed to deliver them at that place, but not showing what was said and done, is merely the opinion of the witness as to the legal effect of the transaction and has no probative force as against evidence which showed that the salesman had no authority to make a sale and that the transaction was in legal effect a sale in another place. In an action for breach of a contract to buy from plaintiff all the oranges grown in a certain grove, evidence held to warrant a finding that the agreement was in consideration of defendant having the handling of the oranges grown in another grove. Sterling v. Gregory [Cal.] 85 P. 305.

7. Evidence held sufficient to show that pumping plant fulfilled warranties and that buyers accepted it as in full compliance with the terms of the contract. Bixby v.

cited being illustrative of this rule and plaintiff's right to recover.[9] Retention of invoice and itemized account without objection is evidence of more or less weight, according to the circumstances and length of time retained, that all the goods invoiced and charged were received.[10] While a plea for total failure of consideration includes partial failure of consideration, there must be evidence introduced showing the extent to which the consideration has failed before a verdict can be rendered giving the defendant the benefit of a partial failure.[11] The mere presentation of a bill for merchandise is no proof of the sale and delivery thereof.[12]

Trial and instructions.[13]—The general principles of trials [14] and instructions [15] are treated elsewhere. Particular cases hereunder discuss the applicability of the instructions to the cases as defined by its issue,[16] and their sufficiency to fairly present such issues [17] without misleading the jury.[18] Instructions should not be on the

In an action for the price of building material, the dispute being over certain items claimed by the plaintiff, an instruction setting forth the contention and making plaintiff's right of recovery dependent upon a finding as to whether or not the items in dispute were included in the contract held proper. Rikerd Lumber Co. v. Hoertz & Son [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 809, 109 N. W. 664. In an action for the price of machinery sold under a warranty that it would work satisfactorily and was accepted in writing by defendants, held that an instruction authorizing a recovery if the machine proved satisfactory, even though the written acceptance was procured by fraud, did not authorize a recovery upon a different cause of action from that pleaded, the allegation of a written acceptance being immaterial. Leyner Engineering Works Co. v. Brass Ring Co., 117 Mo. App. 378, 93 S. W. 875. Where in a given case the only plea is a plea of total failure of consideration and the evidence for the plaintiff authorizes a finding for the full amount claimed, and the evidence for defendant authorizes a finding that the consideration has wholly failed as well as that the article sold was of some value, but there is no evidence as to value other than a full value, a new trial will not be granted on account of an instruction to the effect that the jury should find for the defendant in the event that the article was entirely worthless, nor because of an instruction that if they should find that the goods were reasonably suited for the purposes intended they should find for the plaintiff. Grier v. Enterprise Stone Co., 126 Ga. 17, 54 S. E. 806.

17. Action by seller to recover purchase price, held matters in issue were fairly submitted to the jury. Laurie v. Lininger & Metcalf Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 259. Where defense was that written contract was not in the terms orally agreed upon, held instruction erroneous, it not submitting an issue of fraud. Paris Mfg. & Importing Co. v. Carle, 116 Mo. App. 581, 92 S. W. 748.

18. An instruction correctly stating the law of implied warranties of an article to be manufactured held not ambiguous, nor misleading, nor upon the weight of the evidence. Brown & Ferguson Co. v. Paulson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 564, 95 S. W. 617. Sale of fertilizer. Evidence showed that fertilizer bought should contain as much available phosphoric acid as one thousand one hundred pounds of bone per ton. Held not misleading to charge that the jury should find for plaintiff if the fertilizer delivered contained one thousand one hundred pounds of bone to the ton or its equivalent in fertilizing properties. Goodman v. Beard & Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 544, 93 S. W. 666. Where the buyer denies the allegations of the complaint and pleaded as an affirmative deweight of the evidence.[19] The refusal to give a certain instruction may be cured by the giving of other instructions.[20]

Questions of fact are for the jury,[21] those of law for the court.[22]

In questioning witnesses the terms "merchantable" and "marketable" are deemd synonymous.[23]

The recovery awarded must be in accordance with the pleadings [24] and facts.[25]

(§ 10) F. Action for breach.[26]—A tender by the seller is generally a condition precedent to an action for failure to accept.[27] Subject to exceptions it is the general rule that where one party to an executory contract before performance is due expressly renounces the contract and gives notice that he will not perform it, his adversary, if he so elects, may treat the renunciation as a breach of the contract and at once sue for damages,[28] but the party desiring to so treat such renunciation must elect to do so within a reasonable time.[29] Where the seller declines to recognize a renunciation by the buyer before the time for performance, he must, in fense the failure of the seller to ship the goods in time, an instruction that if the evidence was equally balanced the verdict should be for the defendant held misleading because calculated to lead the jury to apply the instruction to the affirmative defense. Ainsfield Co. v. Rasmussen, 30 Utah, 453, 85 P. 1002.

19. In an action to recover the price paid for goods which were in fact returned and accepted by the sellers, where the only contested issues were whether the buyer got credit for the goods so returned, and whether the sellers were entitled to credit on counterclaims, an instruction that the goods did not correspond with those ordered and were returned is not erroneous as covering a point on which there is conflicting evidence. Bazelon v. Lyon, 128 Wis. 337, 107 N. W. 337. Where in an action for the price of shoes a witness for defendant testified that they were worth less than the contract price, but there was testimony to the contrary, an instruction that if one witness testified that the shoes were worth less than the contract price the damages on each shoe would be the difference between the contract price and the price at which the witness fixed it, was erroneous as unduly emphasizing the testimony of a witness. Richardson & Co. v. Noble, 143 Mich. 545, 13 Det. Leg. N. 59, 107 N. W. 274.

20. Refusal to give instruction as to implied warranty of merchantable quality of grapes held not cured by an instruction that in determining whether grapes were in merchantable condition when shipped certain facts might be considered. Truschel v. Dean, 77 Ark. 546, 92 S. W. 781.

21. Question as to whether there was a sale or a contract to sell on commission held for the jury. Morris & Co. v. Schaefers & Sons [Ky.] 100 S. W. 327. Fraud, question for jury. Moneyweight Scale Co. v. Loewenstein, 103 N. Y. S. 80. As to whether bananas were "cargo run" held for the jury. Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Le Seno [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 991, 110 N. W. 526. Where it is claimed that bond though mailed is not received, the question of receipt is one for the jury. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Howard [Ala.] 41 So. 628. Where seller agreed to furnish aid, etc., in helping resell the goods, held for the jury whether he had carried out his contract. Simpson v. Crane [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1071, 110 N. W. 1081. Evidence considered, and held that question whether the buyer was justified in refusing the goods on the ground that they were not the goods ordered was for the jury. Price v. Stanbra [Wash.] 88 P. 115. Whether railroad ties were delivered under a certain contract or not held for the jury. Juntilla v. Calumet & H. Min. Co., 145 Mich. 618, 13 Det. Leg. N. 592, 108 N. W. 1076.

22. Where in an action for breach of a contract of sale the seller had not filed a bond required by the contract within a reasonable time, an instruction that, if the bond was filed within such time as to afford the buyer all the protection he was entitled to under the contract, plaintiff was entitled to recover was properly refused as submitting a question of law to the jury. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Howard [Ala.] 41 So. 628.

23. Eaton v. Blackburn [Or.] 88 P. 303.

24. Where the sole question was the measure of damages, a verdict awarding ownership and damages held unsustainable even in part, the awarding of ownership not being a mere matter of surplusage. Richardson & Co. v. Noble, 143 Mich. 545, 13 Det. Leg. N. 59, 107 N. W. 274. A petition which alleges that defendant is indebted for horses sold to defendant and which demands judgment and is accompanied by an itemized bill showing that the sum claimed is the balance due from defendant on horses sold to him and for feed does not authorize a recovery of the difference in the contract price on a sale of horses to defendant and the price obtained on resale on his refusing to accept and pay for them. Campbell v. Myers [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 45.

25. Where goods were sold for cash, a judgment computing interest on the basis of a sale of goods on thirty days' time is erroneous as to the interest. McCarthy v. Nixon Grocery Co., 126 Ga. 762, 56 S. E. 72.

28. Alger-Fowler Co. v. Tracy, 98 Minn. 432, 107 N. W. 1124. The buyer repudiating the contract before the date of delivery, the seller is entitled to recover damages for breach of contract. McBath v. Jones Cotton Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 383.

29. Alger-Fowler Co. v. Tracy, 98 Minn. 423, 107 N. W. 1124.

order to recover for the failure of the buyer to accept the goods, perform all conditions on his part.[30] The complaint must allege performance by plaintiff of all conditions on his part[31] and must, by allegations of fact,[32] show the breach by the defendant.[33] An allegation that it was the duty of defendants under said contract to perform their part, without stating the facts imposing such duty, is not equivalent to an allegation that the plaintiffs had performed their part.[34] A plea showing a breach by the plaintiff states a good defense.[35] In an action for breach of the contract for the refusal on the part of the buyer to accept the goods tendered, the burden of proving that the goods tendered met the contract requirements is on the plaintiff.[36] Cases dealing with the admissibility,[37] competency,[38] and sufficiency[39] of the evidence, are shown in the notes. Questions of fact are for the jury.[40]

(§ 10) G. Action for damages for goods not accepted.[41]

(§ 10) H. Choice and election of remedies.[42]—If the buyer refuses to accept the subject-matter of the bargain when tendered by the seller in proper condition and at the proper time and place, the law allows the seller several modes of redress. If the contract has been so far performed by the seller that the property is ready for delivery before he has notice or knowledge of the buyer's intention to decline accept-

30. Must tender goods. Inman v. Elk Cotton Mills [Tenn.] 92 S. W. 760.

31. Complaint showing that selection of goods was to be made by the seller but failing to show that such selection had been made held defective on demurrer. Puritan Mfg. Co. v. Bouteiller & Co. [Conn.] 64 A. 227. In an action for the breach of a contract to buy and move lumber cut "in accordance with sizes and prices in said contract stated," in the absence of an allegation that the plaintiff cut the lumber "in accordance with the sizes and prices in said contract stated," and of a legal excuse for not doing so, and there is no general allegation of performance by the plaintiffs, the declaration is demurrable. Milligan v. Keyser [Fla.] 42 So. 367.

32. An allegation in a count of the declaration of duty and obligation of the defendants under the contract is a mere conclusion, and, where the count does not contain allegations of fact showing the duty and the obligation, it is demurrable. Milligan v. Keyser [Fla.] 42 So. 367.

33. A count in a declaration in an action for a breach of contract to buy and move lumber cut "upon terms and conditions agreed upon," which contains no allegations as to what were the terms and conditions and of facts showing a breach of the contract, is demurrable. Milligan v. Keyser [Fla.] 42 So. 367. In an action for breach of a contract to buy and move "all the lumber cut by plaintiff's mill, * * * in accordance with sizes and prices in said contract stated," an allegation that the defendants refused to move "lumber cut by plaintiffs for defendants under the said contract" is not the equivalent of an allegation of refusal to move lumber cut "in acordance with sizes and prices in said contract stated," and, when the count contains no other allegations sufficiently stating the breach, it is demurrable. Id.

34. Milligan v. Keyser [Fla.] 42 So. 367.

35. In an action by a seller for damages for refusal to receive goods sold, a plea setting up the unfulfilled promise of the selling agent of plaintiff that the goods would be delivered within ten days, and that if the promise had not been made defendant would not have signed the contract, held not demurrable. Green v. Lineville Drug Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 216. Plea that plaintiff failed to comply with the contract, in that he did not ship and deliver the goods as called for by the contract and that defendant was ready and willing to comply with the contract, held to merely amount to the general issue and was not demurrable. Id.

36. Parkins v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 260.

37. A letter written by the seller to the buyer after the latter had refused the goods, on a disagreement as to the meaning of certain words setting out the seller's version, is inadmissible, being but a self-serving declaration, constituting no part of the res gestae and immaterial as notice. Moritz v. Herskovitz [Wash.] 89 P. 560. In an action by a seller of grapes for breach of contract of sale by the buyer caused by his delay in accepting grapes at his winery as they matured, evidence that other sellers were delayed in the delivery of their grapes was admissible to show the congested condition and lack of facilities at the winery for accepting grapes. Leonhart v. California Wine Ass'n [Cal. App.] 89 P. 847.

38. In an action for breach of a contract whereby plaintiff's flouring mill sold to defendant "280 tons bulk of No. 2 screenings (more or less) * * * to be our output" during a certain time, it was competent for defendant, in order to show the character of the mill process producing the screenings, to introduce in evidence samples of the contents of the cars shipped him and to testify that the contents were not No. 2 bulk screenings. Listman Mill Co. v. Miller [Wis.] 111 N. W. 496.

39. Sale of coal to be mined. Evidence held to show breach by purchaser. Thistle Coal Co. v. Rex. Coal & Min. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 1094.

40. Sale of wheat screenings held question for the jury whether screenings contracted for were in fact shipped. Listman Mill Co. v. Miller [Wis.] 111 N. W. 496.

ance, he may treat the property as belonging to the buyer, hold it subject to the later's order, and recover the full agreed price;[43] or he may resell the property for the best price obtainable at the place of delivery, or, if there is no market for the goods there, in the most accessible market, charging the buyer with the reasonable expenses of the sale and of keeping the goods and recover the purchase price less the net amount realized for the goods at said sale;[44] or he may treat the sale as ended by the buyer's default and the property as his (the seller's), and recover the actual loss sustained,[45] which is ordinarily the difference between the agreed price and the market price,[46] and if he elects to keep the goods he cannot be charged with whatever amount he may realize from a sale of the goods in the future.[47] The buyer repudiating the contract before delivery, the seller cannot subsequently deliver the goods and recover the contract price.[48] In a sale for cash, if the seller delivers the goods and immediately demands payment, he may, upon payment being refused, retake the goods,[49] and for such purpose is entitled to sue in conversion.[50] Where a buyer retained the goods after notice from the seller that he could do so only on payment of a specified price and failed to return them as promised in consideration of the seller returning the buyer's check for a smaller sum sent in full payment, the seller could elect either to insist on an implied contract to pay the specified price and recover that sum, or he could sue on the breach of promise to return, in which event the damages might exceed the specified price under special circumstances, such as necessity of expenses and consequent loss of profit, if such could be proved to have been within the reasonable anticipation of the parties.[51] What constitutes an election of one of several remedies is largely a question of fact.[52] Where the contract provides that payment of the purchase price shall be secured by a trust deed on certain property, the seller, on the buyer's refusal to perform, is entitled to a lien on the property which was to have been included in the deed of trust.[53]

Sour Lake Townsite Co. v. Deutser Furniture Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 631, 94 S. W. 188. In an action for goods sold and delivered the seller may, upon tender of performance on his part and demand of payment and refusal of the purchaser to perform, treat the property as belonging to the purchaser and sue for a recovery of the price agreed to be paid. Horst v. Montauk Brewing Co., 103 N. Y. S. 381.

Where a seller sued for breach of contract for failure of the buyer to return the goods and claimed damages in excess of their alleged value, the buyer was entitled to show the reasonable value of the goods, for the seller, in seeking to enhance its recovery above the alleged price, opened the door to prove that its damages from a nonreturn was less than that price. and did rely and was injured, provided the buyer promptly disaffirms on discovery of the fraud and does not thereafter deal with the property acquired as his own.[55] A promise, a prophecy, an expressed opinion or belief concerning future events or conditions, furnishes no ground for the rescission of a contract of sale.[56] The subject of an actionable misrepresentation must be the existence or nonexistence of a fact at the time the statement is made,[57] and a misrepresentation which will induce a court of equity to avoid a contract of sale must be material, inducing,[58] and, except where the buyer is induced to accept an article different from that contracted for,[59] damaging.[60] This right to rescind does not apply to a sale within the rule of caveat emptor.[61] The right is not defeated by a provision that before one can claim failure of consideration or defect in quality he must take advantage of an exchange privilege.[62] In Texas the fact that the buyer was himself guilty of fraud will not preclude him from obtaining a rescission of the contract for the seller's fraud.[63] In some states failure of consideration authorizes rescission.[64] As to whether breach of warranty [65] or condition [66] authorizes rescission, there is a conflict, some courts mak-

58. Farwell v. Colonial Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 480. Sale of stock of bridge company with the misrepresentation that the company had a certain toll contract with a railroad held no ground for rescission, such contract being secured before the bridge was finished. Id. A purchaser of chattels may not rescind the contract for misrepresentations as to the place where the goods were manufactured, there having been no misrepresentation as to the manufacturer and the misrepresentations not being shown to be material. Brennard Mfg. Co. v. Citronelle Mercantile Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 671.

59. Where by the fraud of the seller the buyer is induced to accept an article different from that contracted for, he may rescind and recover money paid without a showing of damage. Jakway v. Proudfit [Neb.] 109 N. W. 388.

60. Where buyer loses his right to rescind on some false representation as to its quality, condition, or matter affecting its value. Jakway v. Proudfit [Neb.] 109 N. W. 388; Marquise v. Tri-State Land Co. [Neb.] 109 N. W. 397. Petition held obnoxious to a demurrer ore tenus. Id. A suit to rescind for fraud cannot be maintained unless it is shown that substantial injury will result unless relief by rescission is granted. Blair v. Baird [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 59, 94 S. W. 116. A contract of sale expressly providing for the protection of the purchaser against existing liens on the property, the purchaser could not rescind because the seller falsely represented that no such liens existed. 61. The rule sometimes applied that a party to a sale may be entitled to a rescission where he was misled to his injury by representations made by the other party which proved to be untrue, although they were made in good faith on the ground that it would be inequitable to permit him to retain the benefit of a contract so induced, cannot be applied to a sale within the rule of caveat emptor. 65. Where goods warranted to be of a certain quality were valueless, and the seller, on being notified of this refused to remedy the defects, the buyer may rescind the contract and lawfully refuse payment. Main Co. v. Field [N. C.] 56 S. E. 943. Breach of warranty warrants rescission. Kohl v. Bradley, Clark & Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 265. On an executed sale a mere breach of warranty does not give the buyer the right to rescind and return. Clark v. Wooster [Conn.] 64 A. 10. If a sale is executed a breach of warranty will not annul it or authorize the purchaser afterwards to return the property without the consent of the seller, but will give the purchaser a right to damages. Hutchinson Lumber Co. v. Dickerson [Ga.] 56 S. E. 491.

66. The failure of a seller of a machine to fulfill a promise to put it in good working order will not justify a rescission of the sale and recovery of the purchase price, but merely damages for failure to fulfill the contract. McSwegan v. Gattl-McQuade Co., 50 Misc. 338, 98 N. Y. S. 692.

ing the question depend upon fraud in making the warranty.[67] It is not every breach that will amount to such a repudiation or authorize the other party to rescind the contract and retain what has been paid or advanced thereon. The nature of each case must be considered and it is probably impossible to state a rule applicable to all the varying facts. "In general terms, the doctrine is that the breach to justify a rescission must be of a dependent covenant, or willful, or in a substantial part comprehending the root of the whole." [68] Substantial conformity with contract will bar rescission.[69] Where the contract calls for deliveries in instalments, the price of each instalment to be paid for on delivery, a refusal to pay on delivery warrants rescission.[70] The rule of caveat emptor applying, one cannot rescind on account of defects in the property, the seller not being guilty of fraud.[71] The terms of the contract sometimes give the right to rescind.[72]

A buyer seeking to rescind a contract of sale on the ground that the seller did not perform his undertaking must act within a reasonable time,[73] and, where the rescission is not by mutual consent, notice of the rescission must be brought to the opposite party and a reasonable time must be given after the notice to comply with the contract,[74] and the buyer must be able to put the seller in statu quo.[75] It follows that goods having been delivered, all of the goods [76] must be returned or a return

67. Where a vendor's warranty was both false and fraudulent, an action will lie for rescission of the contract of sale and recovery of the purchase price, but, if the warranty proves false but was not fraudulently made, the remedy of the vendee is in a suit for damages on account of the breach. Allen v. Hass, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 579. For breach of an express warranty against incumbrances, the remedy, in the absence of fraud or concealment of facts, is to sue for the amount of damages sustained by reason of such incumbrances and not by replevin. 68. Bishop, Contracts [En. Ed.], § 828. William Hanley Co. v. Combs [Or.] 87 P. 143. Where the purchaser of cattle was to pass on their quality before acceptance, the mere refusal to pass cattle which in fact complied with the contract, if done in good faith, will not justify the seller in rescinding the contract, though it may render the purchaser liable in damages for a breach thereof. 69. Defendant contracted to sell to plaintiff certain first mortgage bonds of a corporation. At the time set for the delivery of the bonds a prior mortgage had not been released, although all but a few of the bonds secured thereby had been paid and a fund set apart for payment of the remainder. Held such a substantial compliance as not to warrant rescission. Nes v. Union Trust Co. [Md.] 64 A. 310. Where defendant contracted to sell to plaintiff bonds to be secured by a first mortgage on certain property, the fact that part of this property was conveyed to the mortgagor by a deed having a defective acknowledgement, which, however, was cured by a confirmatory deed upon attention being called to the error, did not entitle plaintiff to rescind the contract. Election to rescind held exercised with reasonable promptness. Phares v. Jaynes Lumber Co., 118 Mo. App. 546, 94 S. W. 585.

74. Elliott v. Howison [Ala.] 40 So. 1018. Plea held demurrable for failing to show the allowance of such a reasonable time. Id. A plea in an action for breach of an agreement to purchase a specified number of pine pilings, which alleges that the seller agreed to deliver the piling within ten days from the making of the contract, that a part of the pilings delivered did not comply with the terms of the contract, that pilings cut by the seller for delivery did not comply with the contract and that the buyer notified the seller of his intention to rescind the contract, is not demurrable for failing to aver that the seller was given a reasonable time in which to perform his undertaking after the buyer's notice of rescission. Id.

75. Civ. Code 1895, § 3712. Henderson El. Co. v. North Georgia Mill. Co., 126 Ga. 279, 55 S. E. 50. Where there was a contract for the sale of corn and a portion was delivered, paid for, and used by the purchaser, he cannot rescind the contract upon the ground that the quantity received and accepted by him was inferior in quality to that stipulated in the contract. Id.

76. A contract of sale of personal property cannot generally be rescinded by a return or offer to return only that part of the property unsold. Owens Co. v. Doughty [N. D.] 110 N. W. 78. Where cow and calf were sold, the contract providing that they were to be treated as one animal and that on breach of warranty as to the cow being a tendered and refused or waived.[77] The law of sales has no such self-executing kind of attachment as holding for damages,[78] and if he holds them for the declared purpose of obtaining general damages, he becomes liable in an action by the seller on the contract for the price.[79] In short, rescission at law after delivery of goods sold consists of a return of the goods within a reasonable time upon sufficient ground and refusa to pay the stipulated price therefor.[80] Though it has been held that a buyer of goods purchased for resale electing to rescind the contract for fraud, the seller is entitled to recover the proceeds of the goods sold by the buyer.[81] Except where the parties, either expressly or impliedly, designate another place,[82] the place for redelivery is the place of delivery under the terms of the contract,[83] and, in order to take advantage of an offer to return, it is not necessary that the buyer bring the goods into court and there tender them to the seller.[84] On rescission the seller must return all purchase money paid.[85] Except in the case of a divisible contract, a party cannot rescind in part and affirm in part.[86] One who is entitled to rescind a part of a divisible contract connot therefore rescind the whole.[87] A buyer cannot rescind and recover damages for breach.[88] What constitutes a rescission is largely a question of fact.[89] Mere words of disaffirmance followed by positive acts

Where fraud is practiced on the buyer, his offer to return the goods followed by a tender of the same in court operates as a rescission of the contract. Lyon v. Lindblad, 145 Mich. 588, 13 Det. Leg. N. 574, 108 N. W. 969. Where in an action for the purchase price the defendant sets up breach of an express warranty as a defense but not as a counterclaim, he must show a rescission of the contract by showing the return or offer to return the goods. Roots Co v. N. Y. Foundry Co., 101 N. Y. S. 104.

Evidence held to show offer of return, goods not conforming to the contract. Avil Pub. Co. v. Bradford [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 238. If a buyer has the right to disaffirm a contract of sale and to decline to receive the goods because of delay in delivery, he must, in order to avail himself of this right, either return the goods or hold them subject to the seller's order. 80. Main v. Prockmow [Wis.] 111 N. W. 508. A buyer contracted in writing to buy jewelry, specifically described. The contract did not call for goods saleable in a particular place or low-priced goods or goods containing any portion of rings gentlemen's size. Held that a letter by the buyer that he had examined the goods delivered, and that they did not come up to expectations, were too high priced for him to handle, would not sell in the neighborhood, and contained no rings gentlemen's sizes, and that he held the goods subject to the order of the seller, was not a rescission of the contract. Id.

81. Lyon v. Lindblad, 145 Mich. 588, 13 Det. Leg. N. 574, 108 N. W. 969.

82. Where seller instructed the buyer to inspect property and the inspection necessitated the unloading of the goods and the hauling of them to the buyer's place of business where they could be cared for, held the seller's direction to inspect operated to change the place of delivery to the buyer's place of business and constituted a consent that the buyer on rescinding the sale might tender a return at such place. Phares v. Jaynes Lumber Co., 118 Mo. App. 546, 94 S. W. 585.

83. Avil Pub. Co. v. Bradford [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 238. Where plaintiff bought an engine of defendant through defendant's agent, defendant shipping it to his agent who delivered it, the return of the engine to the agent by plaintiff on rescinding the contract was sufficient. Kohl v. Bradley, Clark & Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 265.

87. Westbrook v. Reeves & Co. [Iowa] 111 N. W. 11.

88. Main v. Procknow [Wis.] 111 N. W. 508.

89. Where instead of defending an action to recover the purchase money paid the seller starts replevin to regain possession, held there was a rescission. Wagman v. Julius Kessler Co. [Neb.] 110 N. W. 545. Notifying seller that goods did not conform to the order and requesting draft for freight charges paid, and shortly afterwards again notifying the seller "to get car of lumber out of the way," held to show an election by the buyer to rescind. Phares v. Jaynes Lumber Co., 118 Mo. App. 546, 94 S. W. 585. A contract bound defendant to furnish a specific kind of lumber within a reasonable time. Defendant failed to do so and wrote to plaintiff excusing his failure and advising plaintiff to look elsewhere for the lumacquiescing in the contract will not effect a rescission of the same.[90] As a general rule equity has jurisdiction of a suit for rescission,[91] though in some cases equitable relief has been denied upon the theory that the right to rescind and resell constitutes an adequate remedy at law.[92]

(§ 11) B. Action to recover purchase money paid or to reduce price.[93]—If one of the parties to a contract wrongfully refuses to comply therewith, the other party, if not himself in fault, may elect to treat the contract as rescinded and recover back the consideration, or whatever else has been paid thereon.[94] And he is not obliged to allege or prove a tender or offer to perform the rescinded contract.[95] A party who has advanced money in part performance of a contract and then refused to proceed to its ultimate conclusion, the other party being ready and willing to perform on his part, will not be permitted to recover back what he has advanced,[96] but if the breach by a buyer be not of such a character as to amount to a repudiation of the contract or a refusal to proceed to its ultimate conclusion, and the seller, without a demand or offer to perform and without notice to the buyer, disposes of the subject of the contract, the latter may treat it as a wrongful rescission, and the law will give him a right of action to recover back the consideration paid in part performance.[97] Whether one intends to abandon the contract or to refuse to comply with it is generally a question for the jury.[98] An action to recover back money paid on a contract which has been wrongfully rescinded is in form assumpsit.[99] A surety of the buyer is not a necessary party to a suit by the buyer to recover the purchase price on rescission.[1] The general rules as to the admissibility of evidence apply.[2] The general rules governing instructions[3] and

ber. Plaintiff replied by stating that he had been depending on defendant and would ask him to use every possible exertion to furnish the lumber at an early date. Held that plaintiff did not rescind the contract. Crane v. Barron, 100 N. Y. S. 937.

90. Owens Co. v. Doughty [N. D.] 110 N. W. 78.

91. Sale of bonds by attorney to client. Hill v. Hall, 191 Mass. 253, 77 N. E. 831. An action at law against the vendor of the stock of a corporation for damages is not as adequate, nor is it as complete or efficient, as a suit in equity against the vendor and the corporation to rescind the sale, to recover the purchase price, and to relieve the complainant from liability to the corporation on account of the stock. Farwell v. Colonial Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 480.

92. Where a sale of a horse was effected by fraud and the buyers gave their note for the price, the fact that the horse is useless and that his care will be an expense to the buyers does not afford a ground for equitable relief, since, on the rescission of the contract, they can, after giving the owner opportunity to take him away, sell the horse for the best price obtainable, using the proceeds to reimburse their expenses and holding the balance for the use of the party entitled thereto. Johnson v. Swanke, 128 Wis. 68, 107 N. W. 481.

1. Kohl v. Bradley, Clark & Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 265.

2. In an action to recover the purchase price of a team sold under a contract that it would be taken back and the purchase money refunded if unsatisfactory, evidence as to the unsoundness of one of the horses was admissible as indicating the reasonable character of plaintiff's claim that the team was unsatisfactory. Sierra Land & Cattle Co. v. Bricker [Cal. App.] 85 P. 665. Where a warehouse receipt was admissible, held the seller should be permitted to show that the signature on the receipt was his together with other circumstances tending to identify the receipt. Julius Kessler & Co. v. Burckell [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 173. Where misrepresentation is alleged and it is denied, held competent to show by warehouse receipts that the goods sold were delivered to the buyer. Id. Where engine was warranted to do the work for which it was made and sold, telegram to the seller stating breach of warranty and failure of the seller to send an expert held admissible as showing notice. Kohl v. Bradley-Clark & Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 265. Where an order given by plaintiff to defendant for an engine contained the terms of sale and warranty, and the correspondence received, as special interrogatories [4] apply. Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence are shown in the notes.[5]

(§ 11) C. Actions for breach of contract.[6]—The buyer being ready and willing to perform,[7] and the seller refusing to perform, the buyer may recover damages [8] and is also excused from further performance on his part.[9] Payment and delivery being concurrent acts and the purchaser being ready to perform at the appointed time and place, his right of action is complete without tender or demand.[10] An order to sell being deemed to continue in force until it has been answered, its withdrawal before acceptance is a matter of defense.[11]

A complaint naming the parties, the thing sold, the amount sold, the price to be paid therefor, and the conditions and place of delivery, is sufficient.[12] The petition must set forth facts showing in what the damages consisted.[13] If it be conceded that an averment of a demand is necessary, a refusal, ex vi termini, imports that a demand was made.[14] An allegation that a written contract was "entered into" is sufficient to admit proof that a memorandum was delivered [15] and of a parol acceptance of a written offer to sell.[16] The sufficiency of particular allegations or denials of facts are shown in the notes.[17] Failure to allege certain facts may be cured by answer.[18] The reply must be consistent with the petition or complaint.[19] Cases well as the delivery of the engine on such order, showed an acceptance of the order, it is properly admitted in evidence in an action to recover the price paid after rescission for breach of warranty. Id.

3. Where misrepresentation is alleged and the seller denies making any representations, it is error to charge that if the seller represented the article to be as it actually was he could recover. Julius Kessler & Co. v. Burckell [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 173. Also in such a case it is error to refuse to charge that if the seller had not misrepresented the article he would be entitled to recover. Id. A request to charge that defendant was not bound to teach plaintiff how to start or operate the engine is properly refused, there being no evidence that defendant was bound to teach plaintiff how to operate it. Kohl v. Bradley-Clark & Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 265.

4. In an action to recover the price after rescission for breach of warranty, the defendant not having asked for a special verdict is not entitled to have the question: Was the engine, with proper use and management, capable of doing well the work for which it was made and sold? submitted. Kohl v. Bradley-Clark & Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 265.

5. In an action to recover back the price paid for cattle taken from the purchaser by the Federal authorities because they were smuggled into the country, held, under the evidence, that the question of the purchaser's knowledge of the smuggling was one of fact. Badger v. Cook, 101 N. Y. S. 1067. Evidence in an action for failure to deliver cotton alleged to have been sold by defendants to plaintiffs and to recover the purchase money paid, held to show that the purchase was made for plaintiffs by defendants as cotton buyers. Robert Beatty & Co. v. Martin & Co. [Miss.] 42 So. 130.

6. See 6 C. L. 1367.

7. Payment and delivery being concurrent acts, the purchaser cannot recover damages for a failure to deliver, unless he was ready and willing to perform, by accepting and paying at the time and place appointed. Catlin v. Jones [Or.] 85 P. 515.

8. Earnshaw v. Whittemore [Mass.] 80 N. E. 520. Where seller of bottles refused to perform, held direction of buyer to send molds to another manufacturer did not constitute a breach. Id. See, also, Ketcham v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cl. 220.

14. McCleskey v. Howell Cotton Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 67. Complaint alleging defendant's refusal to deliver and plaintiff's readiness and willingness to accept and pay for the goods is sufficient. Id.

15, 16. Bailey v. Leishman [Utah] 89 P. 78.

17. An averment in a petition that the plaintiff had purchased of the defendant a specified quantity of a given article at a stated price to be delivered at a stated time and place is a sufficient allegation that the plaintiff had agreed to receive the article at the time and place fixed and to pay for the same. Watson v. Hazlehurst [Ga.] 56 S. E. 459. Where in an action for failure to deliver the complaint alleges that plaintiff bought in for the account of defendant sixty-six bales of middling cotton at a certain price, and the answer "denies that plaintiff bought for the account of defendant sixty-six bales of cotton at any price," held a mere denial that the cotton was bought for the account of defendant, so that plaintiff's testimony that the sixty-six bales of cotton he bought was worth, in the market when he bought it, eleven and one-half cents a pound, will be treated as evidence that middling cotton was then worth that amount. Walnut Ridge Mercantile Co. v. Cohn [Ark.] 96 S. W. 413.

18. Payment and delivery being concurrent acts, failure of the buyer to allege his dealing with the admissibility [20] and sufficiency [21] of the evidence are shown in the notes. The burden is on the plaintiff to prove performance of conditions precedent.[22] Questions of fact are for the jury.[23] The general rules of instructions apply.[24] The making and breach of the contract being established without adverse inference, the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages.[25]

(§ 11) D. Action for breach of warranty.[26]—Within the meaning of statutes of limitation, the cause of action upon a breach of warranty accrues at the time of making the sale [27] and not subsequently when consequential damages arise or the breach is discovered.[28] Within the statute of limitations where an action is founded on a written instrument, the agreement alleged to be broken must appear by express terms in the instrument itself. [29] Action for breach of an express warranty may be maintained without a return of the goods.[30] Conditions precedent must have been performed.[31] Where several persons associate themselves together for the purchase willingness to perform in his complaint is cured by the answer alleging nonperformance by the plaintiff and the latter taking issue with such allegation. Catlin v. Jones [Or.] 85 P. 515.

19. Where complaint sought damages for nondelivery, a counterclaim in the reply for the purchase price should be stricken out. Langan & Taylor Storage & Moving Co. v. Tenneily, 29 Ky. L. R. 367, 93 S. W. 1.

20. Where the plaintiff sues for damages for breach of an executory contract for the sale of personal property, evidence of a subsequent annulment of the contract by mutual consent is not admissible under a general denial. Hager v. Donovan [Kan.] 88 P. 637. Proof of the consideration moving to the holder of corporate stock which induced him to agree to sell it at the stipulated price is admissible, though the evidence on this point should properly be so restricted as to eliminate all unnecessary details. Hightower v. Ansley, 126 Ga. 8, 54 S. E. 939. Letter forming part of the negiotations held admissible as part of the res gestae, though signed in a name other than that of the seller or its manager who conducted the negiotations. Walnut Ridge Mercantile Co. v. Cohn [Ark.] 96 S. W. 413. In an action for the breach of a contract for the sale of lumber on hand at mill and at loading station and also of "entire cut" of lumber during year 1903, evidence of quantity cut in 1903 is material on the question of damages. Inman Bros. v. Dudley & Daniels Lumber Co. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 449. A person whose business is such that he is familiar with the value of an article which is the common subject of sale is competent to testify to its market value, although he has no personal knowledge of any particular sales. Cleveland v. Rowe, 99 Minn. 444, 109 N. W. 817.

21. Evidence held insufficient to show that buyer's agent stated that specifications, orders, and directions as to shipments would be given. Nicholls v. American Steel & Wire Co., 102 N. Y. S. 227. Evidence held to show that failure to deliver was caused by railroad's failure to deliver cars. Langan & Taylor Storage & Moving Co. v. Tenneily, 29 Ky. L. R. 367, 93 S. W. 1.

22. Sagola Lumber Co. v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 121 Ill. App. 292.

23. Evidence held to require submission of question of making the contract to the jury. Jenkins & Reynolds Co. v. Alpena Portland Cement Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 641. Evidence being conflicting as to terms of contract question is for the jury. Epstein v. Shepard & Morse Lumber Co., 102 N. Y. S. 627.

24. Where it is claimed that the contract is partly written and partly oral, it is proper to refuse an instruction that, as a matter of law, the entire contract is not embodied in the writings submitted. United R. & Elec. Co. v. Wehr & Co., 103 Md. 323. 63 A. 475. Refusal of instruction stating facts warranting rescission by the seller and stating that if they were found the verdict should be for him held not cured by an instruction that there could be no judgment for the seller unless these facts were found. American Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Dent [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 814.

25. In such case affirmative charge held proper. McCleskey v. Howell Cotton Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 67.

27. Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1, considered. Brackett v. Martens [Cal. App.] 87 P. 410.

28. Statute of limitations commenced to run against a cause of action for breach of warranty of a machine when the machine was installed and not subsequently when consequential damages arose, and without regard to when he discovered the breach, and though the seller, after installing the machine, undertook to render it effective. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 705.

29. Where there was no express warranty of title, the fact that the sale of chatteis was evidenced in writing and that Civ. Code, § 2372, creates an implied warranty of title by the seller of personal property did not create a warranty in writing within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 512, limiting the bringing of an action on a written obligation to eight years. Pincus v. Muntzer [Mont.] 87 P. 612.

30. Duncan-Hobson Elec. Co. v. Coleman [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 1004.

31. When the quality of an article sold is guarantied by warranty, one of the conditions of which being that in case of a defect being discovered the seller shall be liable only on condition of the production or return of the defective article, such condition is a condition precedent and must be complied with or there can be no recovery. Wasatch Orchard Co. v. Morgan Canning Co. [Utah] 89 P. 1009.

of an article and give their joint notes for the price, they are entitled to join in an action for breach of warranty.[32]

The pleadings must allege facts showing actual pecuniary loss.[33] The sufficiency of particular pleadings and specific allegations are shown in the notes.[34]

The burden is on plaintiff to prove breach of warranty [35] and that all conditions precedent on the part have been fulfilled,[36] but it is sufficient to show that there was a breach of any material condition of the warranty.[37] The buyer must also offer some evidence of the value of the article sold.[38]

As a general rule evidence of similar transactions with third persons is inadmissible [39] except sometimes where the making of the warranty is in issue.[40] On the sale of a heating plant, no change being made therein after breach of warranty, evidence of efficiency of the apparatus after such time is admissible.[41] Inconsistent allegations in former pleadings in the cause may be shown.[42] Hearsay evidence is inadmissible.[43]

32. Dougherty v. Burgess & Son, 118 Mo. App. 557, 94 S. W. 594.

33. Harron v. Wilson, Lyon & Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 512. Allegations that machinery did not have the capacity warranted, or was useless to or unsuited for the buyer's business, are insufficient, there being allegations showing that the buyer still retains possession. Id.

34. A complaint alleging that a seller of a horse warranted it, that the buyer bought it, relying on the warranty, that the horse was not as warranted and that the seller knew it, counts on a breach of warranty and does not set forth an action for fraud. Clark v. Wooster [Conn.] 64 A. 10. Where the contract provided that all warranties should be void upon the failure of the buyer to settle according to agreement, a counterclaim to an action by the seller pleading the breach of the special warranty and denying a refusal to make settlement according to the agreement is good as against demurrer. Lindsay v. Fricke [Wis.] 109 N. W. 945. A complaint in an action for breach of warranty of variety of seed sold, which alleges that the seller warranted the wheat to be "White Australian," but that the wheat was of an inferior variety and produced a crop inferior to that which would have been grown had it been as represented, and that by reason thereof the buyer was damaged in a specified sum, shows a breach of contract of warranty entitling a recovery of at least nominal damages as against a general demurrer. Moody v. Peirano [Cal. App.] 88 P. 380. Where the defense is breach of an implied warranty assuming that an averment of reliance is necessary, an allegation that "relying on the presumed knowledge of the plaintiff of the required qualities of said cable from their exposing it for sale and selling the same, they purchased it as herein stated," held sufficient. Oil Well Supply Co. v. Watson [Ind.] 80 N. E. 157. In an action for the purchase price of a cable, the defense was a breach of warranty of fitness and the answer alleged that the cable was sold with the knowledge that it was to be used in drilling wells, that it was rotten and would not sustain the weight of the drill, and that it broke off before it had drilled fifty feet, and that as soon as defendants discovered the worthlessness of the cable they notified plaintiffs and returned the cable. Held that the allegations on demurrer were sufficient averments as to the character of the test and to show the unfitness of the property for the purpose contemplated and to warrant proof of the particular time at which or during which the test was made. Id.

35. By a preponderance of the evidence. Wilmington Candy Co. v. Remington Mach. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 74.

36. Where the contract provides that a test is to be made, the burden is on the plaintiff of showing that the required test was made. Arkwright Mills v. Aultman & Taylor Mach. Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 783.

37. Meyer v. Seely, 103 N. Y. S. 719.

38. Breach of warranty being alleged, the buyer must offer some evidence as to the value of the machine in order to have a basis for the award of damages. Heisig Rice Co. v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 959.

39. Where issue is breach of warranty of machine to do satisfactory work, evidence that other similar machines sold in the same locality had failed to do the work for which they were purchased is inadmissible. Leyner Engineering Works Co. v. Brass Ring Co., 117 Mo. App. 378, 93 S. W. 875.

40. Where in an action for breach of warranty of variety of seed wheat sold the seller denied the making of the warranty and the evidence showed that he had only a different variety of wheat for sale, evidence that he sold wheat during the same season to third persons and warranted it to be of the variety warranted to plaintiff was admissible as bearing on the fact in issue. Moody v. Peirono [Cal. App.] 88 P. 380.

41. American Foundry & Furnace Co. v. Berlin Board of Education [Wis.] 110 N. W. 403.

42. Where a buyer, suing for a breach of warranty in the sale of a horse, withdrew the allegations of the petition setting forth a written warranty and alleged an oral warranty, the allegations of the written warranty were admissible as evidence contradicting the claim that an oral warranty was made, but did not estop the buyer from relying on the oral warranty. Hollowell v. McLaughlin Bros. [Iowa] 111 N. W. 428.

43. In an action for breach of warranty of a machine for the manufacture of ice, slip showing the amount of ice used by

General rules as to the admissibility of evidence apply.[44] A buyer, in an action for breach of warranty, is entitled to prove the making of the warranty, the breach thereof, and the damages sustained thereby, but he cannot prove that he rescinded the sale and returned the property.[45] Where suit is on a general express warranty and there is only a special express warranty, a verdict will be directed for defendant.[46] Cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence are shown in the notes.[47] Questions of fact are for the jury.[48] General rules as to instructions[49] and findings[50] apply.

plaintiff held admissible over an objection that they were hearsay. Remington Mach. Co. v. Wilmington Candy Co. [Del.] 66 A. 465.

44. Action for breach of warranty, evidence of test made after fifteen months' use, and after changes had been made, held inadmissible. Wilmington Candy Co. v. Remington Mach. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 74. Where in an action for breach of warranty in the sale of an ice machine for use in plaintiff's candy factory it was shown that defendant made the contract knowing that plaintiff was a candy manufacturer, and defendant agreed to make the machine for the proper use of such establishment, plaintiff was entitled to show that it used a particular method and appliances for the manufacture of chocolate, and that such method and appliances were proper and such as were generally employed. Id. Action for breach of warranty. Complaint alleging making of warranty by two defendants personally and together, evidence of a warranty made by one defendant, acting for himself, and as the agent of the codefendant, is inadmissible. Clark v. Wooster [Conn.] 64 A. 10. In an action for breach of warranty of a machine for the manufacture of ice, the issue was one concerning the capacity of the machine. Slips were admitted in evidence to show the amount of ice actually made by the machine could be shown by the difference between the ice consumed and the ice bought. Held that the slips connected with the testimony promised to be introduced tended to show the amount of ice made by the machine and hence was conditionally relevant and admissible. Remington Mach. Co. v. Wilmington Candy Co. [Del.] 66 A. 465.

45. Clark v. Wooster [Conn.] 64 A. 10.

46. Creel v. Turner Bros., 125 Ga. 797, 54 S. E. 724.

47. Evidence held insufficient to show a breach of an agreement by the seller to guaranty delivery of the goods sold. Pincus v. Muntzer [Mont.] 87 P. 612. Evidence of condition of objects in the room held sufficient to support a finding that death was caused by the explosion of a lamp due to the dangerous character of the oil sold and used in it. Standard Oil Co. v. Parrish [C. C. A.] 145 F. 829. Where defendants contracted to deliver pure ground Angostura tonka beans, held evidence showed that all deliveries were adulterated but of an apparently pure article, and that defendants knew that the beans delivered were accepted under the belief that they were pure. Neal & Binford v. Taylor [Va.] 56 S. E. 590. In an action for breach of a contract to deliver a carload of merchantable corn, evidence that the corn was wet, soured, and rotten, on reaching a certain place, although the weather was good and the corn unexposed, showed that such corn was not in sound condition and of merchantable quality two days prior thereto on reaching a point fifty-six miles distant. Atkins Bros. Co. v. Southern Grain Co., 119 Mo. App. 119, 95 S. W. 949.

48. Held under the evidence a question for the jury whether a written warranty was superseded by a verbal warranty. Daugherty v. Burgess & Son, 118 Mo. App. 557, 94 S. W. 594. Whether test was made in accordance with terms of warranty and if it was accepted by the parties as a sufficient test under the contract held for the jury. Arkwright Mills v. Aultman & Taylor Mach. Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 783. Where breach of warranty in machinery for flooding rice fields is alleged, held question as to whether loss of crop was due to the insufficiency of the buyer's water supply was properly submitted to the jury. Heisig Rice Co. v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 959.

49. Error in failing to define an express warranty held cured by an instruction that the buyer should recover if the seller made the representations alleged. Haines v. Neece, 116 Mo. App. 499, 92 S. W. 919. Where breach of warranty in engine was set up, held proper to refuse an instruction authorizing a verdict for defendant without reference to whether the engine was properly operated by the buyer. Heisig Rice Co. v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 959. In an action for breach of warranty in the sale of a horse plaintiff claimed that a codefendant was interested in the horse, while the codefendant claimed that he had, prior to the sale, sold the horse to the other defendant. Prior to the action the codefendant had recovered from plaintiff a judgment for keeping the horse. Held that an instruction authorizing plaintiff to recover the money which plaintiff paid on the judgment, which was not reversed nor set aside, was erroneous as to the codefendant. Clark v. Wooster [Conn.] 64 A. 10.

50. Findings in an action for breach of warranty of variety of seed wheat sold, that the seller warranted the wheat to be "white Australian," and that the wheat was of an inferior variety and produced a crop inferior to that which would have grown had it been "white Australian" seed wheat, are sufficient to entitle a buyer to a judgment in his favor. (§ 11) G. Recoupment and counterclaim.[53]

(§ 11) H. Choice and election of remedies.[54]—Where the contract provides for the remedies of the parties on breach, such provisions govern.[55] Upon discovering that the goods delivered do not conform to the contract, the buyer may either stand by the contract, accept the property and sue at law for the recovery of such damages as he may have sustained by reason of the contract,[56] or he may rescind the sale, refuse to accept the property, and sue for the recovery of money paid or expense incurred on account of the contract,[57] or, in most states, he may retain the goods and recover damages for the breach,[58] though some courts regarding this last remedy as a partial rescission do not afford him the right.[59] This controverted remedy is, however, always allowed where the breach is one of warranty.[60] Where the buyer is given the option of exchange on breach of warranty, he is not required to exercise the option but on a breach may keep the article and recover his damages.[61] Equity will not enforce a contract for the sale of an article of commerce which can at all times be bought in the market, but the remedy for a breach thereof is at law.[62] If a seller by fraud sells and warrants an article, the buyer may have his remedy either upon the practiced deceit or upon the warranty as he chooses.[63] Where on breach of warranty the buyer has the right to rescind or to have the articles repaired, a request to repair waives the right to rescind.[64] Where seller agrees to repurchase at the contract price if requested, and upon request refuses to do so, the buyer can recover contract price,[65] and, the seller refusing to accept a return of the property, the property becomes the seller's, the purchaser holding it as a depository for hire.[66] Where the title to the chattel fails and the buyer's note for the purchase price has been transferred to a bona fide purchaser, the buyer can recover the purchase price and interest from the seller.[67] As to whether statutory remedies are cumulative depends upon the statute.[68]

§ 12. Damages for breach of sale and warranty. A. General rules.[69]—One party to an executory contract of sale has always the right, subject to the obligation to pay damages to the other, to stop the performance of the contract whenever for any reason he deems it to his interest to terminate it, and the other party is not at

Where the parties to a contract of sale have agreed on the warranties and the remedies that accrue on the breach of them, the remedies constitute the only relief afforded a party and he must look to the contract and be governed by its terms. Wisdom v. Nichols-Shepherd Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1128, 97 S. W. 18. Where warranty gave seller the right upon breach to replace the defective part or the entire machine, the buyer could not upon breach return the machine and rescind the contract without giving the seller a chance to exercise his option. liberty to proceed thereafter with the performance in order to enhance the damages to be paid.[70] The damages recoverable are the natural and necessary consequences of the breach, flowing directly therefrom and such as are within the contemplation of the parties.[71] Where it does not already appear that the penalty inserted in a contract of sale is intended as security for the payment of actual damages in case of breach of contract, the court will regard the amount as liquidated damages.[72] Damages being liquidated it is unnecessary to plead or prove the impracticability of fixing the damages.[73] The computation of damages must be based upon data furnished by the pleadings and the evidence, and, if they fail to furnish such data, no recovery can be had beyond nominal damages.[74] It follows that loss of profits cannot be recovered unless pleaded.[75]

(§ 12) B. Breach by seller.[76]—The seller is liable for all damages as resulting directly from such breach and which may be reasonably supposed to have been in contemplation of the parties, at the time of making the contract as likely to result therefrom.[77] In the absence of proof aliunde of knowledge by the defaulting party at the time an ordinary contract of sale is made of special circumstances which make other damage the natural and probable effect of its breach,[78] the difference between the value of the goods furnished and the value of the goods the vendor agreed to furnish constitutes the measure of damages which the vendee may recover for a failure to furnish articles of the agreed character.[79] The article being rejected and an acceptable substitute procured, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the price of the nearest substitute procurable,[80]

In an action to recover damages for failure of the seller to deliver machinery according to the terms of his contract, it is proper to allege that the machinery was intended to be used in a manufacturing plant in process of erection, and that the vendor was so informed, such facts making it appear that the loss of the use of the plant was, within the contemplation of the parties, an injury to result from a breach of the contract by the vendor, and therefore a proper element of recovery. 80. Rhind v. Freedley [N. J. Law] 64 A. 963. Where a seller knows that an article is bought for resale under a particular contract and delivers a defective article and the buyer procures the consent of his buyer to the substitution of another make of the article, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the together with any expenses necessarily caused by the seller's default. To recover damages the breach must be substantial.[81] Loss of profits if certain may be recovered.[82] A buyer electing to rescind, he cannot recover damages for the seller's breach of contract,[83] his pecuniary recovery being limited to money paid or expense incurred by him on account of the contract.[84]

On the seller's failure to deliver,[85] the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time and place of delivery [86] or if there be no market at the place of delivery, then the value in the nearest and most available market to which the buyer must resort in order to supply himself with the cost of transportation and compensation for the time, trouble, and expense, of making the repurchase added.[87] There would seem to be a conflict as to whether this rule applies when there has been a previous renunciation of the contract by the seller.[88] Where the sale is one at wholesale, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the increased wholesale price.[89] Where the seller knows that the goods are intended for resale at a particular place, the measure of damages for failure to deliver is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the place of resale.[90] Where no time for delivery is fixed, the measure of damages for refusal of the seller to deliver is the difference between the market price at the time of the refusal to deliver and the contract price.[91] Where the

Even loss of opportunity to make profits in a business is a proper subject for compensation in damages by the person producing such loss, and that proof of profits derived from such business covering a considerable period of operations furnishes a legitimate basis for determining the compensation recoverable for profits prevented through a discontinuance thereof produced by breach of contract. Forster, Waterbury & Co. v. MacKinonn Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 226. On breach of a contract by a seller to furnish a boiler of a certain kind, purchaser had the right to abandon his contract with a town to which he was to sell it and recover as damages the profit lost on such contract, or to perform the contract by furnishing a boiler of a different make which the town was willing to accept in compliance with the original contract. property has a rental value it is not permissible to prove the rental value or hire of the property per day, computing for a long period of time.[92] Special damages may be recovered [93] especially where the seller has knowledge of the special circumstances.[94] Loss of profits being certain and within the contemplation of the parties at the time of entering into the contract, the amount thereof may be recovered as damages.[95] Speculative damages cannot be recovered.[96] Freight advanced may be recovered.[97] Interest is of course to be added to the damages awarded.[98] Items expressly excluded by the terms of the contract cannot be recovered.[99] It is the buyer's duty to use all available means to avert or lessen the damages,[1] but it being impossible to purchase a similar article at the time of the breach, the buyer is not precluded from recovering damages after such time as he could have procured a similar article.[2]

In an action for breach of a contract to deliver cans to a cannery, plaintiff held entitled to recover profits on fruits sold, but not delivered, plus the cost of fruit thrown away, and the cost of labor not utilized. Cal. Civ. Code, § 3300, construed. Californian Canneries Co. v. Pacific Sheet Metal Works, 144 F. 886. Where defendant broke an agreement to ship pianos direct to plaintiffs at once for immediate resale by them, plaintiffs could not recover for loss of profits where they relied only upon defendant's failure to ship direct and not upon its failure to ship promptly, since the prospective purchasers might have refused to accept them because of the delay in delivery. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. v. Buford Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 1060.

96. Where a contract required defendant to sell and deliver to plaintiff certain described lumber that might be made by defendant while operating his mill on regular orders, in an action by plaintiff for damages because of defendant's refusal to deliver lumber, no damages could be recovered based on a prospective operation of the mill, as such damages would be entirely speculative. Wolf Co. v. Galbraith [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 207, 94 S. W. 1100.

99. Where contract expressly stated that seller should only be liable to make defects good and should not be liable for freight, etc., held on claim for defects in the machinery, the buyer could not recover for freight or hauling charges nor for loss involved in running the machinery. Barnard & Leas Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 77 Ark. 590, 92 S. W. 858.

1. In an action by the buyer for breach of a contract to deliver a certain kind of lumber, it was error to exclude testimony that all lumber of that kind came from a certain portion of the state, and that, upon defendant's refusal to deliver, plaintiff could have bought lumber and shipped it for less than he contracted to pay defendant, since it was plaintiff's duty if he had the means to avert or lessen the damages growing from defendant's breach. Taussig v. Southern Mill & Land Co. [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 602.

2. Where the seller of an ice machine failed to deliver it, and the purchaser did not have time, after learning of the breach by the seller, to purchase and install another plant in time for the ice season, which was then upon him, the purchaser was not precluded from recovering damages after such time as he could have procured and installed another machine. Wolf Co. v. Galbraith [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 207, 94 S. W. 1100.

purchase price, the measure of damages is the agreed price, with interest from the time of delivery, or, in the absence of an agreement as to the price, the reasonable value of the article sold with interest from the date of delivery.[4] Plaintiff admitting part payment of the amount claimed, his recovery must be limited to the balance.[5] The seller must use reasonable efforts to prevent accumulation of damages.[6]

For nonacceptance.[7]—In the case of an article of merchandise,[8] the measure of damages for the refusal to receive the goods is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time and place of delivery,[9] or has been stated at the time of refusal;[10] if no market value at such price, then the market value at the nearest available market where the articles could have been sold, less freight and other expenses attending the transportation to that market.[11] The amount brought at a resale fairly made after notice establishes the market value.[12] If no notice is given, the market value must be established by proper evidence, the amount realized at the resale generally being some evidence tending to prove that value.[13] If the sale is at wholesale, it is the wholesale price that governs.[14] Where a seller on refusal of buyer to complete the contract, sells the goods elsewhere at an advanced price, he is not entitled to anything.[15] Where articles are to be procured from third persons,[16] or are to be manufactured, or minerals are to be mined, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the cost of producing and delivering the article,[17] though it has been held that the measure of damages in such case is determinable by what the seller can procure the articles for from others.[18] Where goods ordered were to be manufactured and were sold but seller could have obtained more at the same price, the measure of damages for refusal to receive them is the difference between the contract and purchase prices,[19] and it makes no difference in principle whether the seller is himself the manufacturer, or procures others to manufacture, or can go into the open market and purchase for delivery the goods he, in turn, has agreed to sell to others.[20] Where there is a sale of goods to be manufactured and part are manufactured and shipped, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the cost of manufacture, including material, labor, etc., for the entire order, and in addition thereto the difference between the cost of manufacturing that part of the order which was filled and shipped less the value of the goods so manufactured and tendered at the date of their rejection by the buyer.[21] Where seller has ordered material but has not incurred any liability on the order and no part of the material has been manufactured or paid for,[22] the seller cannot recover the difference between the contract price and the cost of the material to him.[23] Interest is generally recoverable.[24]

(§ 12) D. Breach of warranty.[25]—In an action for a breach of warranty the buyer can generally recover all he can legally prove he has lost by the breach.[26] On retention of the property the measure of damages is the difference between the actual value of the chattel and its value as warranted[27] at the time and place of delivery,[28] and the question is not affected by the fact that the buyer has sold the property at an increased price,[29] though such fact may be useful in determining the value of the property at the time of delivery.[30] The warranty being made to cover a resale in a foreign country, the market values in such country at the time of delivery there governs.[31] But there may be special circumstances which will enhance the damages. In such case the buyer will be entitled to recover such damages as he may have sustained as the direct and proximate result of the breach,[32] also the buyer may recover for loss of profits if time is required to obtain other goods.[33] In an action for damages for breach of a warranty of title, the buyer can recover the damage sustained not exceeding the value of the article at the time of the sale,[34] but he has no right, at the expense of the seller, to incur costs which may exceed that sum.[35] These rules are, however, subject to the qualification that the buyer must use reasonable diligence to mitigate the damages caused by the breach, and in contracts of this kind should provide himself as he conveniently can from the most accessible sources.[36]

On a guaranteed warranty guarantors who have stipulated a sum as their liability will not be liable for any more.[37]

(§ 12) E. Evidence as to damages.[38]—In order to sustain an award of damages there must be evidence thereof.[39] The burden is on the one claiming damages to show the elements thereof.[40] The buyer refusing to accept and there being no market value, the reasonable value of the property at the time and place of delivery should be ascertained by any testimony tending to throw light on the subject, such as sales actually made, the frequency of sales, and the testimony of expert witnesses who are familiar with the trade in such articles and the value of such commodities, as to the value of those in question for any use of which they are susceptible.[41] The general rules as to the admissibility of evidence apply.[42] Cases dealing with sufficiency of the evidence [43] and inferences therefrom are shown in the notes.[44]

§ 13. Rights of bona fide purchasers and other third persons.[45]—As a general rule it may be said that the true owner of personalty may retake the same whenever found in the tortious possession of another,[46] and, in the absence of estoppel or other equitable considerations, one purchasing from one having no title does not acquire title as against the true owner even though the purchaser acted in good faith.[47] Generally, either a change of possession or a recordation of the bill of sale is necessary in order to be protected against innocent third persons.[48] Where the owner of property confers upon another an apparent title to or power of disposition over it, he is estopped from asserting his title as against an innocent third party, who has dealt with the apparent owner in reference thereto, without knowledge of the claims of the true owner.[49] Delivery of possession is necessary to the passing of title to personalty on a sale thereof as against everyone except the seller and a subsequent buyer taking the property with knowledge of the sale.[50] A sale of personalty by one claiming title to it is void as against one holding it adversely at the time.[51] The concurrent or joint possession of goods by a seller and buyer is not sufficient to constitute a delivery to the buyer.[52] It is essential to the character of an innocent purchaser that the latter have no knowledge of the defects in his seller's title.[53] The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to purchases in open market.[54] A bill of sale received in payment of an antecedent debt protects the buyer to the same extent as though there had been a new consideration, if taken in good faith and without an intention to defraud the other creditors of the seller.[55] In some states it is a crime to fraudulently dispose of goods bought on credit,[56] in others, a sale in bulk is deemed fraudulent unless attended with certain formalities.[57] The creditors of a vendor who has made an illegal sale of his property cannot seize the same unless they can show that such transfer was an invasion of and prejudicial to their rights.[58] Hence, in the absence of fraud, a sale is superior to the rights of a subsequent creditor of the former owner.[59] The sale being procured by fraud, the seller may recover the goods of the buyer's assignee.[60] A retailer of illuminating oil must be held to contemplate that it will be used in the ordinary and usual lamps in the households of purchasers, and, where the oil sold is not of the quality called for but is unfit and dangerous for such purpose, the seller is liable for an injury resulting from such ordinary use to a member of the purchaser's household.[61]

There being no contractual relation between a third party and the seller of goods, the former cannot sue the latter on the contract of sale.[62] In a suit to recover against a third party, it is not necessary to make the original purchaser a party.[63] The burden is on a subsequent purchaser to show that he is a bona fide purchaser.[64] General rules of evidence apply.[65]

§ 14. *Conditional sales. An instrument in the form of a note, but containing a recital that the note was given for a horse, the title to which was to remain in the payee until the note was paid, and containing further provisions that the maker thereby sold and transferred to the payee all his rights and title to the horse and authorized the payee to take possession of the same on nonpayment of the debt, sell it, and apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of the note, etc., held a con-

question being frequently deemed one for the jury.[69] Whether the parties to a transfer of personal property, the title to which does not pass until the purchase price is paid, intended to make a sale, in the absence of evidence of subsequent conduct of the parties must be ascertained from the terms of the instrument.[70] The negotiations leading up to the contract may be considered in determining its character.[71] Under some contracts one may be given the option to treat it as either of several kinds of contracts.[72] The character of a conditional sale is not destroyed by delivery of possession to the buyer nor by requiring additional security.[73] In Tennessee a conditional sale to a retail merchant of goods to be resold in and for the purposes of, and in prosecution of his business is illegal.[74] The buyer by giving a purchase-money mortgage on the property to the seller estops himself from subsequently claiming that the sale was a conditional one.[75]

Rights of parties to the contract.[76]—The buyer under a contract of conditional sale acquires no title,[77] but he has the right to the possession of the property for the purposes for which they are sold.[78] The title reserved, while affording a means of security, is not a lien.[79] Acceptance of the goods by the buyer does not render the condition inoperative.[80]

Upon default, the rights of third parties not having intervened, the seller has the option to demand a return of the goods [81] and to maintain replevin therefor [82] or sue for the unpaid purchase price,[83] but the latter proceeding affirms the sale and waives the reservation of title.[84] Also, the buyer refusing to accept and pay for the goods, the seller may exercise the right of resale.[85] The purchaser defaulting and the seller retaking the goods, the seller cannot recover the instalments due and unpaid.[86] What constitutes an election between the remedies depends upon the facts of the case.[87] Where default is made after part payment, the property should ordinarily be sold, the expenses and balance due the seller paid, and the surplus, if any, awarded the buyer.[88] Where upon breach the seller is refused possession, his damages are limited to the amount unpaid on the contract at the date of the conversion.[89] The seller wrongfully depriving the buyer of the possession and use of the property sold, he cannot enforce a forfeiture for failure to pay future instalments.[90] Performance by the seller of all conditions on his part and placing the buyer in statu quo is essential to a recovery of the chattels.[91] By statute in some states the seller must refund the amount paid less a reasonable compensation for the use of the property and for any damage done to it while in the possession of the buyer or his assigns,[92] and these statutes are generally held to apply to a mortgagee or purchaser from such original vendee.[93] In those states where such statutes exist, the property being taken in replevin by the seller without such tender, the defendant is entitled to have adjudged to him as damages the amount which should have been tendered by the seller.[94] By accepting payment the seller waives his right to forfeit the contract and retake the property because of breach of an implied warranty of quality in goods taken in exchange.[95] Where there is an express contract that the title be retained in the seller, it is not waived by him by implication because he takes the security of a trust deed.[96] Where the seller is forced to retake his property against his will and after refusing to do so, he may take the property and upon accounting for the reasonable value thereof recover the balance due.[97] The seller may seize the property under an attachment sued out for the purchase price without first filing and having a bill of sale to the buyer recorded;[98] and the mere fact that, before the rendition of judgment in favor of the plaintiff in attachment, the property is illegally brought to sale by the levying officer and is purchased by the plaintiff affords no reason for holding he is thereby estopped from prosecuting his suit on the theory that by becoming the purchaser at the illegal sale he elected to rescind the contract between himself and the buyer.[99] The taking of a renewal note operates as an extension of the time of payment.[1] The terms of the contract frequently limit the rights of the parties.[2] In some states statutes require a sale at public auction within a stated time after the retaking.[3] The commencement of a replevin suit by the seller in a conditional sale does not deprive him of interest on the purchase price in a subsequent action to recover the same.[4] Where the property is destroyed without the fault of either party after delivery to the buyer, the latter is liable for the purchase price.[5] It follows that the seller on default is entitled to recover the unpaid balance of the purchase price

2. Where a contract for the conditional sale of a cash register authorized the buyer to turn in an old register at a specified valuation, and he failed to pay that amount or turn in the old register, the seller was entitled to recover the new register, his remedy not being limited to the recovery of the old register or its value. National Cash Register Co. v. Petsas [Wash.] 86 P. 662. Where conditional seller agreed upon default to give buyer an article of the same general kind as that bought and of the value of the payments made instead of the article sold, held upon default the seller could not obtain the return of the article without tendering a similar article of the value of the payments made. Laws 1897, p. 541, c. 418, § 116, as amended by Laws 1900, p. 1624, c. 762, providing that if the seller retakes the goods he must sell at public auction within 60 days or repay the purchase money paid, apply to cases where the goods are retaken by replevin as well as where they are surrendered voluntarily. Roach v. Curtis, 101 N. Y. S. 333. Where seller had reacquired goods and there had been negotiations pending for an adjustment of the matter, held for the jury to determine whether buyer had waived his right to insist upon the seller complying with Laws 1897, p. 541, c. 418, § 116, as amended by Laws 1900, p. 1624, c. 762, requiring the seller upon retaking the goods to sell the same at public auction within 60 days or repay the purchase price paid. Id. Where in default of payment a seller replevied goods sold with a reservation of title in himself until they were paid for and the buyer made no appearance in the action, her attempt to open a default cannot be construed as an abandonment of her rights under Laws 1897, p. 541, c. 418, § 116, as amended by Laws 1900, p. 1624, c. 762, providing that where the seller retakes goods, he is liable to the buyer for the amount paid on them unless he sells them at public auction within 60 days from the retaking. Id. The seller having retaken the goods and failed for more than 60 days thereafter to sell them is liable, under Laws 1897, p. 541, c. 418, § 116, as amended by Laws 1900, p. 1624, c. 762, to the buyer for the amount paid on them, notwithstanding the buyer's failure to accept an offer of a return of the goods on the payment of the balance due. Id. Under Lien Laws 1897, p. 535, c. 418, § 83, providing that at any time before the property is sold to satisfy the lien the owner may redeem by paying the amount due, and upon making such payments the owner is entitled to possession of the property, the sale of the property subject to the lien transfers to the buyer the right to redeem. though the property sold has been destroyed without the fault of the purchaser.[6] Where there is a breach of a contract of conditional sale of household goods by failure to pay the instalments, the mere fact that the purchaser is suffering from some degree of ill health and needed the goods does not make a retaking under the contract wrongful;[7] but, to have such effect, the purchaser's need must be such that to deprive him of the furniture will expose him to increased sickness and suffering, and such fact must be known to the person demanding and removing the property.[8] Though the property may be attached to real estate, it remains personalty as between the contracting parties,[9] though as to bona fide purchasers it may become a fixture.[10] The purchaser claiming an accord and satisfaction, he must prove it.[11] Waiver of performance cannot be availed of unless pleaded.[12]

Rights of third persons. Notice, record, and filing.[13]—Except in those states where recordation is required,[14] the buyer not being a dealer and there being no evidence that he bought with the intention of reselling or that the seller had any reason to believe that the article would be resold, the seller may recover as against a subsequent purchaser.[15] The recording acts apply to contracts whereby an article is manufactured for and delivered to another, title to remain in the seller until payment in full.[16] The character of bona fide purchaser is not completed unless the whole amount of the purchase money is paid before the purchaser becomes chargeable with notice of the outstanding equity,[17] and this rule prevails under most of the conditional sale statutes,[18] and the subsequent purchaser learning of the outstanding equity before completing his payments, he may return the property, recover the money already paid, and any damages which may have resulted to him from his seller's defective title.[19] As a general rule the conditional seller's rights are superior to those of the vendor of real estate upon which the chattels are placed while the real estate is held by the purchaser of the chattels under a contract of sale,[20] and where such rule prevails the seller's rights are not affected by a provision in the contract for the sale of the realty that all improvements, repairs, or machinery placed upon the premises should become a part of the realty and should not be removed without the vendor's consent.[21] This priority may, however, be lost by delay.[22] The fact that the buyer by his conditional purchase has broken a contract with a third party does not affect the seller's rights.[23] By being silent while others rely upon the apparent title of the conditional buyer, the seller may lose his right to priority.[24] The buyer or his transferee being allowed to remain in possession after default, a demand is necessary before the seller can maintain conversion.[25] Property in possession of a bankrupt under an unrecorded conditional sale, the title to which remains in the seller under the state law, except as against attaching creditors or subsequent purchasers from the purchaser without notice, does not pass to the trustee in bankruptcy.[26] An unconditional assignment of a note given for the purchase of personalty, wherein the seller retains title to the property sold until the purchase money is paid, does not extinguish the security but carries it along, and the title retained by the seller becomes vested in the assignee until the purchase debt is paid.[27] Where seller is also protected by a trust deed on the buyer's property, suing to foreclose the trust deed does not waive his rights under the sale as against the buyer's creditors.[28] Generally an attaching creditor only acquires the rights of the buyer.[29]

In an action to enforce the seller's rights, the general rules as to the admissibility of evidence apply.[30]

53. Mills v. Smith [Mass.] 78 N. E. 765.

54. Where party objected to evidence offered to clear up ambiguity in written instrument and court's construction was as mission of evidence by the erroneous exclusion of other evidence, where the admission of the latter would not have cured the error in the admission of the former.[55] One cannot object to the exercise of jurisdiction which he himself invokes,[56] or where he is responsible for the objection thereto.[57] Nor can one complain of an order or judgment entered on his own motion,[58] nor of a nonsuit which he himself invites,[59] nor of litigation of rights by party whom he himself has impleaded,[60] nor of failure to grant relief not asked for.[61]

§ 2. Acquiescing in error.[62]—As a general rule there can be no error in the absence of an asserted right,[63] and only such questions as are raised in the appellate court will be considered on appeal.[64] Some of the questions to which this rule has been applied are: Qualification of the trial court or tribunal;[65] prematurity[66] or abandonment of the action;[67] pendency of another suit;[68] status of parties;[69] joinder and nonjoinder of parties;[70] sufficiency of pleadings;[71] allowance of amendments;[72] change of venue;[73] summoning,[74] swearing,[75] qualification,[76] and treat-much within meaning of instrument as that contended for by the party. Zerr v. Klug [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 822.

91. Entry of decree without filing of master's report or giving party opportunity to except thereto. Polk County Nat. Bank v. Darrah [Fla.] 42 So. 323. Rendered on next to last day of term instead of two

A party cannot complain of error which he could have avoided,[97] and he may be estopped by subsequent participation in the proceedings.[98] A fortiori is one estopped to predicate error upon matters to which he has expressly consented,[99] but mere clerical assistance does not constitute consent.[1] Exceptions to conclusions of law admit the correctness of the findings of fact,[2] and submission of the case upon agreed facts waives all objections to the form of the action and technical defects in the pleadings.[3] Errors may also be waived by an agreement for refiling of the case.[4]

Questions involving fundamental errors apparent on the fact of the record will be considered though not saved below.[5]

Change of theory.[6]—The case will be tried on appeal on the same theory on which it was tried below,[7] whether such theory relates to the pleadings,[8] the evidence,[9] the issues [10] of law [11] or of fact,[12] the relief sought,[13] grounds of recovery [14] given at instance of parties, the appellate court will presume that the findings are based on same theory adopted in the instructions. McGinnis v. Rigby Printing Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 4.

8. No contention made below that demurrer should be treated as motion to strike. Plymouth Gold Min. Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. [Mont.] 88 P. 565. Petition to vacate judgment treated as one in equity. Morrion v. Steenstra [Wash.] 88 P. 104. Case tried on theory that action was ex delicto. Flint & Walling Mfg. Co. v. Beckett [Ind.] 79 N. E. 503. Papers filed by several defendants treated as single demurrers. Lewisohn v. Stoddard, 78 Conn. 575, 63 A. 621. Amendment treated as filed. Foley v. Cedar Rapids [Iowa] 110 N. W. 158. Where defense was stricken on plaintiff's motion, he could not assert on appeal that such defense should have been pleaded and that evidence in regard thereto was therefore properly excluded. Grand Valley Irr. Co. v. Fruita Imp. Co. [Colo.] 86 P. 324. One who stands by and permits the court to render judgment against him under a mistake as to the condition of the pleadings cannot urge the error for the first time on appeal. Heilner v. Smith [Or.] 88 P. 299. Where in response to a rule to show cause appellant demurred to the complaint and failed to asked for leave to answer after it was overruled, it is too late to object on appeal that his demurrer was treated as an answer to the rule. Guerin v. Macfarland, 27 App. D. C. 478.

9. Assumption of burden of proof with consent of adversary. Kentucky Vermillion Min. & Concentrating Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 695. Fact that parties treat matter as being in issue does not authorize introduction of incompetent evidence. Craig v. A. Laschen & Sons Rope Co. [Colo.] 87 P. 1143. Admissibility of affidavits of good faith on motion to remand case to state court. Wecker v. National Enameling & Stamping Co., 27 S. Ct. 184. Affidavits and papers not presented to the court on motion to dissolve an injunction cannot be considered on appeal from order granting or denying the motion. Dougal v. Eby, 11 Idaho, 789, 85 P. 102.

10. Issues not raised below cannot be raised on appeal. Atterbury v. Hopkins [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 11; Ironside v. Vinita, [Ind. T.] 98 S. W. 167; Goehrend v. Pere Marquette R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. Case will be tried on issues considered below though not raised by pleadings. National Union Bank v. Hollingsworth [N. C.] 55 S. E. 809; Heffernan v. Ragsdale [Mo.] 97 S. W. 890; Lindstrom v. Hope Lumber Co. [Idaho] 88 P. 92; Avery Mfg. Co. v. Lambertson [Kan.] 86 P. 456; Nelson v. Campbell & Cameron Co., 128 Wis. 82, 107 N. W. 297; Rigsby v. Oil Well Supply Co., 115 Mo. App. 297, 91 S. W. 460. Where parties treated issues as regularly made up, appellate court will so regard them. Harrison v. People, 124 Ill. App. 519. Condemnation proceedings having proceeded as far as the order of condemnation without objection, it is presumed that issues were properly made and plaintiffs cannot object that defendants failed to answer. Yellowstone Park R. Co. v. Bridger Coal Co. [Mont.] 87 P. 963. Matters treated as in issue below will be so treated on appeal regardless of admissions of pleadings. Frick v. Kansas City, 117 Mo. App. 488, 93 S. W. 351. Sufficiency of answer to raise issue will not be considered where plaintiff attempted to meet such issue. Cook v. Bagnell Timber Co. [Ark.] 94 S. W. 695. Where appellant neither objected nor excepted to statement of court that issue was whether appellant was a shareholder or a creditor, appellant could not urge on appeal that jury should have been allowed to determine whether he sustained any relation to the company whatever. Richardson v. Devine [Mass.] 79 N. E. 771. Where defendant in objecting to testimony states that a particular issue is the only one in the case, the trial court may proceed on that theory. Murray v. Butte [Mont.] 88 P. 789. Where case was tried on theory that there were two issues before the jury. Foland v. Southwest Missouri Elec. R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 284, 95 S. W. 958. Where parties contested the question neither could say that court's findings were without the issues. Avery Mfg. Co. v. Lamberstson [Kan.] 86 P. 456. Parties cannot contend that judgment on the issues was not within pleadings. Florence Oil & Refining Co. v. McCumber [Colo.] 88 P. 265; Foster v. Balch [Conn.] 65 A. 574.

Issue of law or fact: Where a party treats a question as one of law, he cannot on appeal urge that it is one of fact. Dugan v. Blue Hill St. R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 748. When defendant moved to dismiss complaint and verdict was directed for plaintiff, defendant could not claim that case should have been submitted to jury. Sturmdorf v. Saunders, 102 N. Y. S. 1042. On other hand a party who treats a question as one of fact cannot on appeal urge that it be disposed of as one of law. Shipp v. Patton, 29 Ky. L. R. 480, 93 S. W. 1033; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Fisher [Ark.] 97 S. W. 279; Chicago City R. Co. v. Nelson, 116 Ill. App. 609; Illinois Third Vein Coal Co. v. Cioni, 215 Ill. 583, 74 N. E. 751; McDonald v. Ideal Mfg. Co., 143 Mich. 17, 12 Det. Leg. 25. Mode of objection in such case is by motion to make more specific or by demurrer. Hubenthal v. Spokane & I R. Co.

gations of damage and the formal ad damnum cannot be raised by motion in arrest of judgment after demurrer to the complaint has been overruled and answer made.[26] A motion for a new trial is not available to call into question pleadings or amendments thereto.[27] Disallowance of an amendment must be saved by an exception and not by offering evidence thereunder and complaining of its rejection.[28] Nonjoinder of parties must be objected to by plea in abatement if not patent on the face of the record.[29] Exceptions to arguments of counsel must be followed by a motion for the court to act thereon.[30] A pleading will be liberally construed when the question is raised by objection to evidence under it.[31] Objections to the report of an auditor, referee, or commissioner should be taken by exception, motion to recommit or objection to the acceptance of the report,[32] except when a question of law is pointed out by such auditor, referee, or commissioner, and referred to the court,[33] but the questions submitted should be pointed out with the same precision as in an exception.[34]

In certain cases improper evidence may be reached by a motion to strike it out.[35] When it is agreed that an auditor's findings are to be final, errors in the admission of evidence may be reached by a motion to recommit.[36] As a foundation for an objection the report of an official surveyor made after due notice to the parties, an exception must be made to the report.[37] Where the evidence is admitted without objection, the question of a variance cannot be raised by objections to instructions,[38] and an affidavit of surprise is required in some jurisdictions.[39] Where the objection to evidence offered does not appear until the close of all the party's evidence, it may be saved by a request for an instruction.[40] Certain objections to depositions must be made by a motion to suppress,[41] and objections on account of form are sometimes required to be in writing.[42] The question of the sufficiency of the evidence may be raised by a request for a peremptory instruction at the close of the plaintiff's case.[43] A demurrer to the evidence as a challenge of its sufficiency is unknown to the practice in Arkansas.[44]

Conclusions of law on special findings should be tested by exceptions to the conclusions.[45]

§ 4. Necessity of objection. In general.[46]—A timely [47] objection is essential to the preservation of questions for review, and only such questions as are thus saved will be considered by the reviewing court.[48]

To jurisdiction.[49]—An objection below is essential to the saving of certain questions as to jurisdiction,[50] but not questions relating to jurisdiction of the subject-matter.[51]

40. Parol evidence of contract which does not conclusively appear to be within statute of frauds until close of party's evidence. Schmidt v. Rozier [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 791.

41. Objection for lack of notice to take. Kelly v. Ning Yung Benev. Ass'n, 2 Cal. App. 460, 84 P. 321. Exceptions pending taking must be brought to notice of court by motion to suppress. Whitehouse v. Jones [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 730.
